Subsequently, Lead Counsel filed a supplemental brief regarding their request for attorneys' fees. (Docket No. 886). Therein, Lead Counsel retreats from its previous request of an award consisting of 16% of the maximized potential value of the fund or $25,000,000 [9] and, instead, requests an [*456] award of 33a% of the actual value of the Settlements. The Settlements are comprised of a cash portion totaling, $52,250,000, and the value of the base-rate freeze option actually selected by Class Members, $13,600,000. Thus, the actual total value of the Settlements is $65,850,000 and Lead Counsel requests a third of that sum, or $21,950,000. Lead Counsel also petitions the Court to grant $1,035,702.92 in expenses and $20,000 in incentive awards for each of the six named Class Representatives [23] (totaling $120,000).

V. Suárez, Inc., Central Produce El Jibarito, Inc. and Caribbean Produce Exchange, Inc., (Docket No. 906) along with Pan American Grain Co., Inc., Pan American Grain Manufacturing, Inc. and Pan American Grain Properties, Inc. ("Pan American" and collectively, the "Objectors") [10] (Docket No. 907) challenged Lead Counsel's request. Therein, several Class Members note that the requested 33a% of the common fund represents the upper limit of fees previously granted by this Circuit and others. They also note that the instant case was not as complex, lengthy in duration or labor intensive as cases in which such fees were awarded. Other Class Members [25] note that those who elected the cash fund option shall bear the burden of paying the requested attorneys' fees. [11] However, however, were allayed through scrutiny of the Notices sent to Putative Class Members and the case law cited by the INEOS Objectors. Additionally, in the Final Fairness Hearing, [22] the Court expressed doubts as to the explanation provided to the Court regarding the methodology utilized by Plaintiffs' expert; however, upon a subsequent review of the materials provided by the expert, the Court verified that all necessary information was included.

[8] The accompanying memorandum of law (Docket No. 839) is now deemed NOTED.

[9] Lead Counsel originally valued the total settlement at $157,250,000. The base rate freeze option was initially valued at $105 million by calculating all the Class Members that could potentially elect the base rate freeze option. Thus, Lead Counsel assumed that no Class Member would elect the cash settlement. By adding the cash settlement, $52,250,000, with the Lead Counsel's calculation of the base rate freeze option, $105,000,000, Lead Counsel valued the total settlement at $157,250,000. Lead Counsel's request for attorneys' fees in the amount of $25 million is approximately 16% of $157,250,000.

The Court cautioned Lead Counsel against this type of double counting. The Class Members can elect either to receive a portion of the cash settlement or the base rate freeze option thereby locking in lower shipping prices for two years. Class Members cannot elect both options. However, by assuming that all members would elect the base rate freeze option Lead Counsel significantly inflated the value of the base rate freeze option.

Moreover, the Court found it imprudent to rely upon a hypothetical and theoretical "maximized potential" value that the settlement fund may reach [24] at a future date, when Lead Counsel is requesting to withdraw a portion of the settlement fund for their compensation on this certain date. A court must be conservative in assessing the total value of the settlement fund and base those assessments on actual, tangible benefits that are able to be calculate in the present. See Petruzzi's, Inc. v. Darling Delaware Co., 983 F. Supp. 595, 608 (D. Pa. 1997) (finding that "awarding fees on the basis of a hypothetical 'common fund' in the percentage sought by class counsel would be a perverse result.").

[10] "Objectors" includes Pan American Grain Co., Inc., Pan American Grain Manufacturing, Inc. and Pan American Grain Properties, Inc. ("Pan American") as the Court granted leave for Pan American to join the Objectors on January 18, 2011 (Docket No. 892).

[11] As Putative Class Members were advised that attorneys' fees were to be taken from the Settlements in the documents sent to them, the Court finds this argument unmeritorious for the same reasons it found other Objectors' arguments regarding the on May 26, 2011 and on June 1, 2011, the Objectors moved to withdraw their opposition to Lead Counsel's requested attorneys' fees. (Docket Nos. 950 and 982).

Also on May 26, 2011, Objectors moved the Court to award the Objectors a percentage of the amount that Lead Counsel reduced its request [26] for attorneys' fee, which is three million and fifty thousand dollars ($3,050,000). (Docket No. 951). Objectors argue that because of their direct efforts opposing Lead Counsel's initial fees request, the Settlements were enlarged by approximately three million dollars. Objectors claim that they are entitled to a percentage of the amount in which their efforts benefitted the Class. [*457] Objectors seek 33a% of $3,050,000; or, in the alternative, Objectors request the same percentage that the Court awards Lead Counsel. Lead Counsel supports the Objectors' request for fees. (Docket No. 986).

The Court held a hearing on the applicability of the Class Action Fairness Act on September 9, 2011. (Docket No. 1018). At this hearing, the Court ascertained that the base-rate freeze option actually selected by Class Members, valued at $13,600,000, does not constitutes a coupon settlement within the meaning of the Class Action Fairness Act ("CAFA"). See 28 U.S.C. §1712. Accordingly, CAFA does not specify whether the Court must employ the Lodestar method or the percentage of the fund method in calculating attorneys' fees in the instant matter. [12]

II. Attorneys Fees

HN1[] The general "American Rule" is that each side bears its own litigation costs and that the prevailing party is not entitled to recover attorneys' fees or costs. Alyeska Pipeline Serv. Co. v. Wilderness Soc'y, 421 U.S. 240, 247, 95 S. Ct. 1612, 44 L. Ed. 2d 141 (1975). "[H]owever, the Supreme Court has recognized an equitable exception to this rule - known as the common fund or common benefit doctrine - that permits litigants or lawyers who recover a common fund for the benefit of [28] persons other than themselves to obtain reasonable attorney's fees out of the fund, thus spreading the cost of the litigation to its beneficiaries." In re Zyprexa Prods. Liab. Litig., 594 F.3d 113, 128 (2d Cir. 2010). "Class action lawsuits are the prototypical example of instances where the common fund doctrine can apply." Victor v. Argent Classic Convertible Arbitrage Fund L.P., 623 F.3d 82, 86 (2d Cir. 2010).

In assessing requests for attorneys' fees, the Court functions "as a quasi-fiduciary to safeguard the corpus of the [settlement] fund for the benefit of the plaintiff class." In re Fid./Micron Sec. Litig., 167 F.3d 735, 736 (1st Cir. 1999) (citations omitted). See Goldberger v. Integrated Res., 209 F.3d 43, 52 (2d Cir. 2000) ("[T]he court is to act as a fiduciary who must serve as a guardian of the rights of absent class members.") (citation and quotation marks omitted). Additionally, Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 23(h) provides, "[i]n a certified class action, the court may award reasonable attorney's fees and nontaxable costs that are authorized by law or by the parties' agreement." However, "a thorough judicial review of fee applications is required in all class action [29] settlements." In re Prudential Ins. Co. Am. Sales Practice Litig. Agent Actions, 148 F.3d 283, 333 (3d Cir. 1998) (internal quotations omitted).

sufficiency of the Notice lacking in merit. The Court has already found that Putative Class Members were informed and were granted ample information to make educated business decisions regarding whether to opt in or out of the Settlements and regarding their options if they indeed opted in.

[12] The Class Action Fairness Act also mandates that defendants [27] provide notice of a proposed class action settlement to specific federal and state officials. 28 U.S.C. §1715. Defendants, through the settlement administrator, provided the Attorney General of the United States, state officials in which each class member resides and the Attorney General for the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico with notice of the proposed Horizon Settlement on July 16th and 17th of 2009. (Docket No. 997). Defendants notified these same officials of the proposed Crowley and Sea Star Settlements on October 14, 2010. (Docket No. 997).

Prior to granting final approval of the proposed settlements, the Court notes that it has waited the statutorily required 90 days from the date of notification. See 28 U.S.C. §1715(d).

A. Percentage of the Fund

HN2[] Attorneys' fees are typically assessed through either the percentage of the fund method or through the lodestar method. In re AT&T Corp., 455 F.3d 160, 164 (3d Cir. 2006). The percentage of the fund [*458] method applies a certain percentage to the settlement fund whereas the lodestar method multiplies the number of hours class counsel worked on a case by a reasonable hourly billing rate for such services. Id. The Court confirms that it shall employ the percentage of the fund approach, as opposed to the lodestar method, to Lead Counsel's requested attorney fees as HN3[] that methodology is favored in this Circuit. See In re Thirteen Appeals Arising out of the San Juan DuPont Plaza Hotel Fire Litig., 56 F.3d 295, 307 (1st Cir. 1995); see also In re AT&T Corp, 455 F.3d at 164 ("[T]he percentage-of-recovery method is generally favored because it allows courts to award fees from the fund in a manner that rewards counsel for success and penalizes it for failure.")(internal quotations and citations omitted). Under the percentage of the [30] fund method, the Court has "extremely broad" latitude to determine an appropriate fee award. In re Thirteen Appeals, 56 F.3d at 309.

Although the First Circuit has not set forth a comprehensive list of factors to be considered when evaluating an attorneys' fees request pursuant to this approach, other District Courts within this Circuit have analyzed factors set forth by the Second and Third Circuits. See *In re Lupron Marketing and Sales Prac. Litig., MDL 1430, 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 17456, 2005 WL 2006833, at 3 (D. Mass. Aug. 17, 2005). This Court shall follow suit and analyze Lead Counsel's request utilizing the following relevant factors:

> (1) the size of the fund and the number of persons benefitted; (2) the skill, experience, and efficiency of the attorneys involved; (3) the complexity and duration of the litigation; (4) the risks of the litigation; (5) the amount of time devoted to the case by counsel; (6) awards in similar cases; and (7) public policy considerations, if any.

Id.; see also In re Relafen Antitrust Litig., 231 F.R.D. 52, 79 (D. Mass. 2005).

1. The Size of the Fund and the Number of Persons Benefited

HN4[] Analyzing the net dollars and cents results achieved by counsel for their clients is often the most [31] influential factor in assessing the reasonableness of any attorneys' fee award. See Hensley v. Eckerhart, 461 U.S. 424, 436, 103 S. Ct. 1933, 76 L. Ed. 2d 40 (1983) (stating that the "most critical factor is the degree of success obtained."). The Court also observes that "[g]enerally speaking, there is an inverse relationship between an increase in the size of the settlement fund and the percentage fee award." Larson v. Sprint Nextel Corp., 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 3270 (D.N.J. 2010). "The basis for this inverse relationship is the belief that in many instances the increase [in the recovery] is merely a factor of the size of the class and has no direct relationship to the efforts of counsel." In re Prudential, 148 F.3d at 339 (internal quotations omitted). See In re Union Carbide Corp. Consumer Products Business Sec. Litigation, 724 F. Supp. 160, 166 (S.D.N.Y. 1989) ("Obviously, it is not ten times as difficult to prepare, and try or settle a ten million dollar case as it is to try a one million dollar case, although the percentage contingent fee will return ten times as much."); In re NASDAQ Market-Makers Antitrust Litig., 187 F.R.D. 465, 486 (S.D.N.Y. 1998) ("In many instances the increase [32] [in the fund] is merely a factor of the size of the class and has no direct relationship to the efforts of counsel.").

The total actual value of the fund in the instant case is $65,850,000 [13] and the [*459] size of the class is potentially as high as 61,854. [14] Both of these numbers are substantial. The Settlements afford considerable benefits to a considerable number of Class Members. Accordingly, this factor weighs in favor of Lead Counsel's fees' request.

[13] For purposes of evaluating the size of the fund, Lead Counsel returns to its previous argument that the total value of the settlement is $157,250,000. (Footnote 8). Lead Counsel arrives at this figure by adding the cash portion of the Settlements, $52,250,000, with their estimate that the base rate freeze options could have a maximized potential value of $105 million over a two year period. A handful of Class Members objected in a footnote to Plaintiffs' expert's calculation of the actual value of the Settlements, but the Class Members provided no contrary expert's opinion.

2. The Skill, Experience & Efficiency of the Attorneys Involved

The Court has nothing but the highest respect for Lead Counsel: they represent [34] able and experienced attorneys from both the continental United States and Puerto Rico. Both Plaintiffs' counsel and opposing counsel are very experienced attorneys hailing from a variety of prominent law firms. Plaintiffs' counsel has proven themselves to be "honorable litigators devoted to the interests of their clients who [have] vigorously contested the case from its inception." See *In re Lupron, 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 17456, 2005 WL 2006833, at 4. Through counsel's skill and ingenuity, counsel has achieved a substantial recovery for the Class. Thus, counsel's caliber and experience weighs in favor of Lead Counsel's fee request.

3. The Complexity & Duration of the Litigation

HN6[] "The complexity of federal antitrust law is well known" and "antitrust class actions 'are notoriously complex, protracted, and bitterly fought.'" In re Visa Check/Mastermoney Antitrust Litig., 297 F. Supp. 2d 503, 510 (E.D.N.Y. 2003); Id. (citing Weseley v. Spear, Leeds & Kellogg, 711 F. Supp. 713, 719 (E.D.N.Y. 1989)). The instant case has proved to be no exception. The present matter was complex, involving sophisticated inquiries into the antitrust laws which underlie this action and requiring many days of hearings relating to the intricacies [35] of the Settlements.

However, the Court must note that, even after several years of litigation, the instant case has not yet proceeded to the discovery phase. While Lead Counsel is to be commended for achieving a significant settlement without the aid of discovery, and thus controlling litigation costs for both sides, the lack of discovery diminishes the complexity and duration of the litigation. See *In re Keyspan Corp. Sec. Litig., 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 29068, at *30 (E.D.N.Y. Aug. 25, [460] 2005) (awarding 22.5% of the common fund in attorneys' fees where informal discovery was limited to the review of public documents and "did not involve intricate disputes over privilege or other difficult legal issues nor did plaintiffs have to undertake special means to procure evidence that was hard to obtain."); In re Merrill Lynch Tyco Research Sec. Litig., 249 F.R.D. 124, 137 (S.D.N.Y. 2008)(also awarding 22.5% of the common fund in attorneys' fees where plaintiffs' counsel had "relative ease of discovery" as counsel was not "forced to fight for access to documents" or overcome claims of privilege). Accordingly, the third factor points against an especially generous fee request of 33a% in a case [36] that settled fully without necessitating any discovery.

4. The Risks of the Litigation

HN7[] "Antitrust litigation in general, and class action litigation in particular, is unpredictable....[T]he history of antitrust litigation is replete with cases in which antitrust plaintiffs succeeded at trial on liability, but recovered no damages, or only negligible damages, at trial, or on appeal." In re NASDAQ Market-Makers Antitrust Litig., 187 F.R.D. at 475-476. Further, whenever an attorney takes a case on a contingency basis, as Lead Counsel has done,

The Court finds that the actual total value of the Settlements is $65,850,000. The actual total value of the Settlements is comprised of two components: the cash portion [33] of the settlements, $52,250,000, and the value of the base-rate freeze option actually selected by Class Members, $13,600,000. HN5[] When Lead Counsel is requesting to withdraw a portion of the settlement fund today for their compensation, the Court finds it imprudent to rely upon a hypothetical and theoretical "maximized potential" value of what the settlement fund may reach on a future date. The Court should be conservative in assessing the total value of the settlement fund and base those assessments on actual, tangible benefits that are able to be calculated in the present. See Petruzzi's, Inc. v. Darling Delaware Co. Inc., 983 F. Supp. 595, 608 (M.D. Pa.. 1996) (finding that "awarding fees on the basis of a hypothetical 'common fund' in the percentage sought by class counsel would be a perverse result.").

[14] On September 15, 2010, Lead Counsel commenced mailing the Long-Form Notice and Claim Form to 61,854 potential class members. These members were identified from the transactional records provided by the Horizon, Crowley and Sea Star Defendants.

there is always the risk of non-payment. Certainly there are instances where diligent and experienced plaintiffs attorneys pour thousands of hours and dollars into their class action case only to recover little or nothing at trial or on appeal. See Robbins v. Koger Props. Inc., 116 F.3d 1441 (11th Cir. 1997)(In a securities class action suit, the Eleventh Circuit Court of Appeals reversed an $81 million jury verdict in favor of plaintiffs, finding that plaintiffs' had no proof of loss causation).

The Court finds that Lead Counsel did take a risk pursuing the instant litigation on a contingency basis as there is always a risk of not being compensated [37] for counsel's time and expenses. *In re Fidelity/Micron Sec. Litig., No. 95-12676, 1998 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 21698, 1998 WL 313735, at 3 (D. Mass. June 5, 1998)("The case involved some risk, but that is true of almost any litigation."). However, the Court determines that Plaintiffs' counsels' level of risk was minimal. Lead Counsel filed the instant suit on April 22, 2008, a mere five days after the DOJ announced that it had begun investigating cabotage trade, specifically the Puerto Rico trade route on April 17, 2008. (Docket No. 1). On that same date, April 17, 2008, the Federal Bureau of Investigation (the "FBI"), acting at the DOJ's behest, executed search warrants and served subpoenas on each of the Horizon Defendants, Sea Star Defendants and Crowley Defendants. In order to obtain a search warrant, the DOJ, by definition, had to have probable cause to believe that it would obtain evidence of an antitrust violation as a result of executing the search warrant. Such a belief must be grounded in reasonably trustworthy information. Several months after this raid, on October 20, 2008, five high ranking executives from Horizon Defendants and Sea Star Defendants pled guilty to violating the Sherman Antitrust Act and [38] provided details of the anti-competitive conspiracy.

Based upon the DOJ's raids of three large businesses, Lead Counsel had a probable basis to believe that there were antitrust violations at the time Lead Counsel filed this action. These suspicions would then have been confirmed a mere six months later when the five executives pled guilty. Although Plaintiffs' counsel undertook the instant action on a contingency fee basis, the investigation by the DOJ, which became public prior to the commencement of this litigation, mitigates counsels' risk. Lead Counsel had a strong [*461] basis to believe that at least some of the Defendants had colluded in violation of antitrust laws based upon the DOJ's conduct. Therefore, the Court finds that the risk of litigation factor weighs against granting attorneys' fees under the percentage of the fund methodology.

5. The Amount of Time Devoted to the Case by Counsel

Billing more than 30,000 hours, Lead Counsel and members of Plaintiffs' Steering Committee spent significant, but not excessive, time prosecuting the instant action. Throughout the pendency of this litigation, Lead Counsel has consistently advocated for Plaintiffs' rights and pursued settlement negotiations [39] and agreements to the benefit of the Class. Generally, Lead Counsel performed legal and factual research, worked with economic experts and class representatives, drafted countless briefs and reviewed countless more opposing briefs. More specifically, Lead Counsel drafted five class action complaints and had to defend, and prevail, against several well-written and prima facie, colorable, non-frivolous motions to dismiss. Even after reaching a settlement agreement, Lead Counsel still had to oversee the claims administration process, assist Class Members with their proofs of claim and other inquiries as well as handle any appeals to the Settlements. Although Lead Counsel never engaged in formal discovery, this factor points in favor of Lead Counsel's fee request.

6. Awards in Similar Cases

HN8[] The Court finds it useful to turn to objective academic studies in assessing awards in similar cases. Such studies provide "good indicators of what the market would pay for class counsel's services because the [data] show[s] what attorneys have been paid in similar cases, and thus what class counsel could have expected when they decided to invest their resources in this case." In re Lawnmower Engine Horsepower Mktg. & Sales Practices Litig., 733 F. Supp. 2d 997, 1014 (E.D. Wis. 2010); [40] Turner v. Murphy Oil USA, Inc., 472 F. Supp. 2d 830, 864 (E.D. La. 2007) (District Court looked to academic research "to determine an average percentage for cases of similar magnitude.").

A recent study analyzing eighteen years of available opinions involving settlements in class action litigation in state and federal courts found that the mean and median fees awarded in the First Circuit are 20%. Theodore Eisenberg and Geoffrey P. Miller, Attorneys' Fees & Expenses in Class Action Settlements: 1993-2008, 7 J. of Empirical Legal Stud. 248 (2010) (Table 4)("Eisenberg and Miller"). This same study also concluded that, in antitrust cases, the mean fee is 22% and that the median fee is 23%. Eisenberg and Miller, Table 5.

Eisenberg and Miller additionally list fee percentages in terms of the amount of the class' recovery in Table 7. The instant settlement fund's actual value is $65,850,000, placing it at the high end of Eisenberg and Miller's tranche of settlements between $38.3 million and $69.6 million. Eisenberg and Miller, Table 7. In this tier, the mean fee percentage for recoveries is 20.5% with a standard deviation of 10%. Thus, a fee in the range of 10.5% or 30.5% are reasonable when [41] viewed against fee awards in comparable cases. In re Lawnmower Engine, 733 F. Supp. 2d at 1014 (stating that Eisenberg and Miller suggest "that courts view fee requests falling within one standard deviation of the mean as generally reasonable unless reasons are shown to question the fee."); cf. In re Relafen, 231 F.R.D. at 80-81 (While welcoming that "these thorough and objective studies...provide but a starting place...the court concludes it would be [*462] inappropriate to use a mean — an average — categorized according to the size of the settlement fund as the be all and end all of analysis.")(emphasis in the original).

More specifically, the Court investigates fees awarded in other, similar, individual cases within the First Circuit. Lead Counsel has cited several cases where fee awards between 30 and 33a% of the available fund were granted. See In re Thirteen Appeals, 56 F.3d at 300; see also In re Relafen, 231 F.R.D. at 81. However, the Court finds those cases distinguishable. In re Thirteen Appeals spanned a significantly longer time than the instant case, and involved two hundred and seventy component cases, whereas the instant MDL matter encompasses only approximately forty component [42] cases. See In re Thirteen Appeals, 56 F.3d at 307. Similarly, the In re Relafen Court found that class counsel had put forth "exceptional efforts" in litigation that "required [an] all out effort" as Class Counsel succeeded, in part, in defeating a summary judgment motion. See In re Relafen, 231 F.R.D. at 80. Class counsel in In re Relafen also had a "a mass of discovery," including "hundreds of hours" consulting with experts, as well as the review of "hundreds of boxes of documents." Id. (emphasis added). The situation counsel faced in In re Relafen simply is not present in the instant litigation.

The Court has also located several cases within this Circuit on the lower end of the spectrum where the District Court awarded counsel 20% or less of the fund. See Turabao Med. Ctr. v. Beach, Nos. Civ. 96-2250, 96-8671, 96-2290, 96-8578, 96-2459, 96-8590, 96-8712 96-4010, 1997 WL 33810581, at *4-5 (D.P.R. Aug. 13, 1997) (awarding fees of 20% fees of the fund in a case where there was no formal discovery and no motion practice); *In re Fidelity/Micron Sec. Litig., No. 95-12676, 1998 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 21698, 1998 WL 313735, at 3, n.6 (D. Mass. June 5, 1998)(awarding fees totaling 17.5% of the fund in a case where no significant [43] discovery took place), remanded on other grounds, 167 F.3d 735; In re Tyco Int'l, Ltd., 535 F. Supp. 2d 249, 254 (D.N.H. 2007) (awarding fees amounting to 14.5% of the fund in a case where "[i]t would be difficult to overstate the volume of discovery in this case" and "there was "aggressive, skillfully argued, and unusually challenging motion practice."); Mazola v. May Dept. Stores Co., 1999 WL 1261312, at *3 (D. Mass. Jan. 27, 1999) (Gertner, J.) (unreported opinion), (awarding fees of 10% of the fund where plaintiffs' counsel opposed and fought defendants for merely a couple of months. [15]).

The Court finds that the award in In re Tyco is not an apt comparison to the present cabotage litigation because In re Tyco had a settlement fund more than three times as large as the fund presently at issue. *See In re Indep. Energy Holdings PLC, No. 00 Civ. 6689, 2003 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 17090, 2003 WL 22244676, at 6 (S.D.N.Y. Sept. 29, 2003) (HN9[] "[T]he percentage used in calculating any given fee award must follow a sliding-scale and must bear an inverse relationship to the [44] amount of the settlement. Otherwise, those law firms who obtain huge settlements, whether by happenstance or skill, will be over-compensated to the detriment of the class members they represent."). Excluding In re Tyco, the litigation in the cited cases, as with the matter at hand, did not proceed to a formal discovery phase. While Turabao, In re Fidelity, and Mazola are comparable on the lack of formal discovery, these cases [*463] are less challenging than the instant case in the sense that they were either of a shorter duration or contained fewer dispositive motions.

[15] The District Court additionally granted plaintiffs' counsel $1.75 million in attorneys' fees to be paid directly by defendant.

Lead Counsel conceded in their first brief requesting fees that "[c]ourts in this Circuit frequently have recognized that fee awards in common fund cases typically range from 20 to 30 percent." (Docket No. 836). Hence, the 33a% requested by Lead Counsel exceeds the ceiling on typical percentage of the fund awards in the First Circuit. Thus, reviewing similar fee awards advocates against granting Lead Counsel's requested award of 33a%, but dissuades the Court from approving an award of 20% or less.

7. Public Policy Considerations

The Court's final inquiry centers on the public policy considerations. HN10[] Class action plaintiffs' attorneys [45] provide an invaluable service by aggregating the seemingly insignificant harms endured by a large multitude into a distinct sum where the collective injury can then become apparent. Due to the expense, time and difficulty of pursuing complex litigation, it would likely not be economical for an individual Class Member to pursue such litigation on their own. See Alpine Pharma., Inc. v. Chas Pfizer & Co., Inc., 481 F.2d 1045, 1050 (2d Cir. 1973) ("In the absence of adequate attorneys' fee awards, many antitrust actions would not be commenced, since the claims of individual litigants, when taken separately, often hardly justify the expense of litigation."); In re Telectronics Pacing Sys. Inc., 137 F. Supp. 2d 1029, 1043 (S.D. Ohio 2001) ("Attorneys who take on class action matters serve a benefit to society and the judicial process by enabling such small claimants to pool their claims and resources.); Mazola, 1999 WL 1261312, at *4 ("The litigation is critical, because it gives voice to relatively small claimants who may not be aware of statutory violations or have an avenue to relief."). These considerations weight in favor of granting attorneys' fees under the percentage of the fund [46] methodology, as private civil class action litigation is an important tool in enforcement of antitrust laws. See Pillsbury Co. v. Conboy, 459 U.S. 248, 262-263, 103 S. Ct. 608, 74 L. Ed. 2d 430 (1983) (The Supreme Court has previously "emphasized the importance of the private action as a means of furthering the policy goals of certain federal regulatory statutes, including the federal antitrust laws.").

B. Percentage of the Fund Analysis

In weighing all of these factors, the Court cannot approve the 33a% award requested by Lead Counsel. On the one hand, the Court notes that counsel has billed tens of thousands of hours in a complex matter and that counsel has effectively represented the Class in achieving a favorable and sizable settlement. These considerations, in addition to the public policy objectives of preventing collusion in the market place, point towards granting Lead Counsel's fee request. On the other hand, however, the Court is more persuaded by the fact that the instant matter settled before formal discovery proceedings commenced as discovery is often the most time intensive aspect of any complex litigation. Additionally, the Court maintains that attorneys' fee awards reasonably close to 33a% should be reserved [47] for cases which actually proceed to trial or settle on the eve of trial. The instant case did not even reach the discovery phase much less approach a trial date. Furthermore, the Court observes that counsel took almost no risk in accepting the instant case. Lead Counsel filed this class action a mere five days after the DOJ's and the FBI's raid on several defendants' offices. As a result of these raids, Lead Counsel had reason to believe that there was a strong probability [*464] that there were antitrust violations. This probability was later increased by the various defendants' plea agreements, which accepted antitrust liability in either their personal or official capacity. [16]

An influential factor is fee awards granted previously in similar cases. When courts awarded fees of thirty percent or greater, the cases are generally longer in duration and more complex than the present case. When courts awarded fees of twenty percent or less, the amount of discovery was comparable, but the cases generally were shorter in duration and had fewer substantive motions than the present case. Thus, the Court determines that the correct percentage in this matter is between 20% and 30%. In further narrowing down this range, the Court found the Eisenberg and Miller study helpful in illuminating that the mean and median fee awards in this Circuit, and in antitrust cases in general, are in the low twenty percent range.

Upon careful review, the Court hereby DENIES Lead Counsel's fee request for 33a% and instead finds that an award of 23% of the of the total value of the Settlements, or more precisely, $15,145,500, is just. The Court concludes that 23% is appropriate particularly where a class action settles before undergoing [49] a substantially protracted and costly discovery process. The Court reiterates that HN11[] attorneys' fee awards of 33a% should be reserved for cases which proceed to trial or settle on the eve of trial.

C. Lodestar Cross-Check

HN12[] The First Circuit does not require a court to engage in calculating the lodestar method when awarding fees based upon the percentage of the fund method. In re Thirteen, 56 F.3d at 307. Nevertheless, the Court will perform the lodestar calculation as the Court finds that it is a pragmatic cross-check to ensure that the Court is not creating a windfall for Lead Counsel. See New England Carpenters Health Benefits Fund v. First DataBank, Inc., 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 97364, 7-8 (D. Mass. Oct. 20, 2009); Manual for Complex Litigation (Fourth) § 14.122 (2004) ("the lodestar is . . . useful as a cross-check on the percentage method . . . .); Mesko v. Cabletron Sys. (In re Cabletron Sys. Sec. Litig.), 239 F.R.D. 30, 37 (D.N.H. 2006) ("[I]t is now common practice to use the lodestar as a cross-check on the [percentage of the fund] award."); In re Diet Drugs Prods. Liab. Litig., 553 F. Supp. 2d 442, 485 (E.D. Pa. 2008); see also Vaughn R. Walker & Ben Horwich, The Ethical Imperatives [50] of a Lodestar Cross-Check: Judicial Misgivings About "Reasonable Percentage" Fees in Common Fund Cases, 18 Geo. J. Legal Ethics 1453, 1468, 1470 (2005) (advocating that courts have an ethical obligation to perform the Lodestar cross-check). The lodestar cross-check ensures that fees awarded under the percentage of the fund method are reasonable in light of the amount of work counsel actually performed. See Lipsett v. Blanco, 975 F.2d 934, 937 (1st Cir. 1992) ("[T]he lodestar [*465] represents "a presumptively reasonable fee.").

"The lodestar cross-check is performed by multiplying the hours reasonably expended on the matter by the reasonable hourly billing rate which then provides the court with the 'lodestar calculation.'" In re Diet Drugs, 553 F. Supp. 2d at 485-486. See Gay Officers Action League v. Puerto Rico, 247 F.3d 288, 293 (1st Cir. 2001) ("In implementing this lodestar approach, the judge first calculates the time counsel spent on the case, subtracts duplicative, unproductive, or excessive hours, and then applies prevailing rates in the community (taking into account the qualifications, experience, and specialized competence of the attorneys involved)"). The proposed fee award is [51] then divided by the lodestar calculation, resulting in a lodestar multiplier. The lodestar multiplier is compared to other multipliers employed in similar cases. If the multiplier is too great, the Court should consider reducing its award calculated under the percentage of the fund method. In re Rite Aid Corp. Sec. Litig., 396 F.3d 294, 306 (3d Cir. 2005).

In the instant matter, Lead Counsel arrived at a lodestar of $13,965,579.75 by multiplying the 30,000 hours plaintiffs' counsel expended by their hourly billing rates, [17] which are capped at $600 per hour. [18] Dividing the Court's proposed fee of 23% of the total fund, $15,145,500, by the lodestar yields a multiplier of 1.08. This low multiplier is certainly within the reasonable range. See In re Relafen, 231 F.R.D. at 82 ("A multiplier of 2.02 is appropriate."); In re Cendant Corp., 243 F.3d at 742 (holding that a lodestar multiplier of three would be reasonable and appropriate); See, e.g., In re TJX Cos. Retail Sec. Breach Litig., 584 F. Supp. 2d 395, 408 (D. Mass. 2008) (applying a lodestar multiplier of 1.97); In re Tyco, 535 F. Supp. 2d at 271 (applying a lodestar multiplier of 2.697); In re Visa Check, 297 F. Supp. 2d at 524 [52] (applying a lodestar multiplier of 3.5); see also In re Prudential, 148 F.3d at 341 (HN13[] "[M]ultiples ranging from one to four are frequently awarded in common fund cases when the lodestar method is applied.").

[17] By dividing the total lodestar by the 30,000 hours billed, the Court calculates that Lead Counsel's average hourly rate is approximately $465.

[18] Lead Counsel has not provided the Court with detailed billing records supporting its claim of working more than 30,000 hours (Docket No. 836). Nevertheless, to save the Court from engaging in mathematical precision or bean-counting when calculating the lodestar cross-check, the Court may rely on summaries of hours submitted by counsel and not review actual billing records. In re Rite Aid, 396 F.3d at 306-307. Based upon the Court's common sense, experience, and familiarity with this case, the Court finds that expending over 30,000 billable hours is reasonable in the instant matter. The Court also notes that no party has challenged counsels' hours.

The low multiplier of 1.08 indicates the relative closeness of the attorneys' fee calculated under the lodestar method and the percentage of the fund method. This lack of disparity confirms that [53] the Court's fee award under the percentage of the fund method is reasonable and that the fee closely approximates the fair market value for counsel's services. The Court finds that the modest enhancement of the lodestar amount of 8%, using the 1.08 multiplier, is fitting for the same reasons supporting the 23% percentage of the fund award: the lack of formal discovery in the litigation and Lead Counsel's lack of risk in undertaking the litigation. These factors mitigate against increasing the 23% fee [*466] awarded under the percentage of the fund method in order to thus increase the multiplier. The Court concludes that a multiplier of 1.08 is appropriate in this matter.

With the lodestar cross-check supporting the Court's award of 23% under the percentage of the fund method, the Court GRANTS IN PART AND DENIES IN PART Lead Counsel's request for attorneys' fees (Docket Nos. 839 & 886). The Court hereby awards Lead Counsel fees of 23% of the total value of the Settlements, or more precisely $15,145,500. This sum shall be paid from the three settlements with the Horizon, Crowley and Sea Star Defendants.

III. Attorneys' Fees for Objectors

HN14[] Generally in class action suits, once a settlement figure [54] has been reached, defendants have little interest in how the fund is ultimately appropriated, including what percentage of the fund that plaintiffs' counsel receives. At this stage of the litigation, Lead Counsel's interest begins to conflict with the Class Members'. Objectors thus aid the Court in assessing plaintiffs' counsels' request for attorneys' fees to ensure that the Class Members' interests are protected. See In re Prudential Ins. Co. Am. Sales Practice Litig. Actions, 278 F.3d 175, 202 (3d Cir. 2002) (J. Rosenn, dissenting with respect to the imposition of sanctions upon objector's counsel)("The objecting lawyer independently can monitor the proposed settlement, costs, and fees for Class Counsel and, thus, aid the court in arriving at a fair and just settlement for the members of the class who individually are largely unrepresented."); see also White v. Auerbach, 500 F.2d 822, 828 (2d Cir. 1974) ("[I]t is well settled that objectors have a valuable and important role to perform in preventing collusive or otherwise unfavorable settlements.").

The Federal Rules of Civil Procedure contemplate the possibility of fees to objectors:

> [Rule 23(h)] provides a format for all awards [55] of attorney fees and nontaxable costs in connection with a class action, [and] not only the award to class counsel. In some situations, there may be a basis for making an award to other counsel whose work produced a beneficial result for the class, such as...attorneys who represented objectors to a proposed settlement under Rule 23(e) or to the fee motion of class counsel.

Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(h), Advisory Committee Notes to the 2003 Amendments. "An objector whose arguments result in a reduction of attorney-fee and expense awards provides a benefit to the class" and are thus entitled to attorneys' fees. UFCW Local 880-Retail Food v. Newmont Mining Corp., 352 Fed. Appx. 232, 236 (10th Cir. 2009). Objectors who do not benefit the class, however, are not entitled to compensation. Id.; see In re Cendant, 404 F.3d at 197 ("Only those attorneys who confer an independent benefit upon the class will merit compensation."); Petrovic v. Amoco Oil Co., 200 F.3d 1140, 1156 (8th Cir. 1999) ("To recover fees from a common fund, attorneys must demonstrate that their services were of some benefit to the fund or enhanced the adversarial process.").

In the instant matter, Objectors request an award of 33a% [56] of the three million and fifty thousand dollars ($3,050,000) they claimed to have secured for the Class Members. (Docket No. 951). Alternatively, Objectors seek the same percentage of the approximately three million dollars that the Court awarded to Lead Counsel. In support of this request, Objectors filed motions and affidavits certifying that, collectively, they expended 865.5 hours opposing Lead Counsel's requested attorneys [*467] fees. [19] (Docket Nos. 992 and 993).

Objectors have played an instrumental role in reviewing Lead Counsel's fees request and creating a benefit of the Class. Objectors have also aided the Court in its inquiry into the fairness of the proposed [57] settlement. Most critically, Objectors opposed the method in which Lead Counsel had initially calculated the base rate freeze option. Lead Counsel originally valued the base rate freeze option at $105 million by calculating all the Class Members that could potentially elect that option. However, the Objectors persuasively argued that the value of the base rate freeze option should be calculated by including only the value of the base rate freeze option actually elected by Class Members (Docket Nos. 862 and 875). The Objectors further requested that the Court order Lead Counsel to produce the identities of the Class Members that had elected for the base rate freeze option and the volume of their cabotage purchases in order to provide a more accurate estimate of the value base rate freeze option (Docket No. 880).

In response to the Objectors' concerns, Lead Counsel recalculated the total value of the Settlements from $157,250,000 to $65,850,000. (Footnotes 8 and 12). With a lower settlement valuation, Lead Counsel lowered their fee request from 16% of $157,250,000, which is $25,000,000, to 33a% of $65,850,000, which is $21,950,000. Lead Counsel concedes that the lower fee request is "[b]ecause [58] of the objections previously raised by the Objectors and the Court's reluctance to compute the award of attorney's fees on [the] basis of benefits not actually claimed by Class members." (Docket No. 910).

The Court recognizes Objectors' valiant efforts in scrutinizing Lead Counsel's proposed attorneys' fee and for clarifying that the actual value of the settlement is $65,850,000 and not the $157,250,000 as originally claimed by Lead Counsel. The Court determines that the Objector's direct efforts benefitted the Class Members by increasing the settlement fund by more than three million dollars. Therefore, the Court finds that Objectors are entitled to attorneys' fees. Reynolds v. Beneficial Nat'l Bank, 288 F.3d 277, 288 (7th Cir. 2002) (HN15[] "[O]bjectors [must] produce an improvement in the settlement worth more than the fee they are seeking; otherwise they have rendered no benefit to the class."); see Vizcaino v. Microsoft Corp., 290 F.3d 1043, 1051 (9th Cir. 2002) ("Because objectors did not increase the fund or otherwise substantially benefit the class members, they were not entitled to fees.").

Although the Objectors' efforts benefitted the Class, Objectors' requested award of 33a%, or [59] alternatively a percentage award equal to Lead Counsel's award, 23%, is clearly excessive. The Court finds this request exorbitant for a variety of reasons. First, Objectors substantive participation in this litigation was for a much more limited scope and duration than Lead Counsel's. Objectors did not have the responsibility of organizing the Class or defending against motions to dismiss or a host of Lead Counsel's other obligations. [*468] Second, it was the Court, and not the Objectors, that originated the argument that Lead Counsel was engaged in double counting as Class Members were not able to select both the base rate freeze option and the cash settlement option. The Court appreciates Objectors further development of this argument; however, the Court notes that Objectors are merely expanding upon the Court's previously expressed skepticism. Third, Objectors request over a million dollars in fees for billing 865.5 hours (Docket Nos. 992 and 993) in opposing Lead Counsel's fee request. Were the Court to grant this request, Objectors would be compensated at more than $1100 per hour. [20] Accordingly, the Court finds that an [19] Specifically, Pan American states that their counsel expended 139.5 hours opposing Lead Counsel's request (Docket No. 992); V. Suarez assert that its counsel expended 272.5 hours (Docket No. 993-1); Carribean Produce's counsel alleges that it expended 247.5 hours (Docket No. 993-2); and Central Produce claims that its counsel expended 206 hours (Docket No. 993-3). Thus, in total, Objectors billed 865.5 hours for opposing Lead Counsel's fee request.

The Objectors' informative motions are hereby NOTED (Docket Nos. 992 and 993).

[20] More precisely, Objectors would receive $1,162.91 per hour. The Court additionally concludes that the Objectors were overzealous in spending 865.5 hours for developing their arguments. As the Objectors made identical arguments common to all parties and sought an identical remedy, the Objectors should have pooled their resources to craft a single, cogent filing as opposed to duplicating their efforts.

award of 10% is reasonable and appropriate to reflect Objectors' [60] time, effort, ingenuity and success in increasing the kitty for the benefit of the Class.

Thus, Objectors' request for attorneys' fees (Docket No. 951) is GRANTED IN PART AND DENIED IN PART. In recognition of the valuable service the Objectors provided by enlarging the settlement fund by more than three million dollars to the direct benefit of the Class Members, the Court hereby awards the Objectors 10% of the recovered amount, which is three hundred and five thousand dollars ($305,000). This sum shall be paid from the three settlements with the Horizon, Crowley and Sea Star Defendants. [21]

IV. Incentive Awards

HN16[] "Because a named plaintiff is an essential ingredient of any class action, an incentive award can be appropriate to encourage or induce an individual to participate in the suit." In re Compact Disc Minimum Advertised Price Antitrust Litig., 292 F. Supp. 2d 184, 189 (D. Me. 2003). *In re Lupron, 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 17456, 2005 WL 2006833, at 7 ("Incentive awards are recognized as serving an important function in promoting class action settlements."). Courts "routinely approve incentive awards to compensate named plaintiffs for the services they provided and the risks they incurred during the course of the class action litigation." In re Lorazepam & Clorazepate Antitrust Litig., 205 F.R.D. 369, 400 (D.D.C. 2002)(internal [62] citations and quotations omitted). Additionally, courts typically examine the following criteria when assessing incentive awards:

> 1) the risk to the class representative in commencing suit, both financial and otherwise; 2) the notoriety and personal difficulties encountered by the class representative; 3) the amount of time and effort spent by the class representative; 4) the duration of the litigation and; 5) the personal benefit (or lack thereof) [*469] enjoyed by the class representative as a result of the litigation.

Swack v. Credit Suisse First Boston, LLC, 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 75470, 11-12 (D. Mass. Oct. 4, 2006)(internal quotations omitted).

Lead Counsel requests that the Court approve incentive awards in the amount of $20,000 for each of the six Class Representatives, thereby totaling $120,000. Lead Counsel argues that Class Representatives played a vital role in gathering facts, reviewing the complaint and other filings and preparing critical affidavits. While the Court notes the named plaintiffs' involvement in advancing the present litigation, the Court finds that the amount of the incentive award requested is excessive and unreasonable. [22] The Class Representatives did not undertake [63] substantial risk or suffer notoriety or personal hardships by acting as a named plaintiff. There is "no indication that [the Class Representatives] assumed a risk or inconvenience not shared by the other class members which is of such magnitude to merit" an incentive award, and Plaintiffs "do not provide specific evidence of the purported risk's magnitude." *In re Laidlaw Sec. Litigation, 1992 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 13935, at 9 (E.D. Pa. Sept. 15, 1992); In re AOL Time Warner ERISA Litig., 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 79545 (S.D.N.Y. Oct. 26, 2007).

[21] The Objectors have reached an agreement amongst themselves to divide any fee award based upon the respective volume of cabotage purchased by the Objectors from Defendants during the relevant period [61] (Docket Nos. 989 and 990). Accordingly, the parties have agreed to that V. Suárez, Inc. will receive 57.41% of the award; Caribbean Produce Exchange, Inc. will receive 25.49%; Central Produce El Jibarito, Inc. will receive 11.37%; and Pan American will receive 5.36%. The Court will uphold this agreement and orders that the Objectors' award be distributed in accordance with these percentages. Accordingly, the Court GRANTS the Objector's request (Docket Nos. 989 and 990) and now finds as MOOT the Objector's prior request (Docket No. 988).

[22] The Court notes that Congress has expressed some skepticism about incentive awards. Congress made the following finding in the Class Action Fairness Act: "Class members often receive little or no benefit from class actions, and are sometimes harmed, such as where . . . (B) unjustified awards are made to certain plaintiffs at the expense of other class members." Pub. L. No. 109-2, § 2(a)(3), 119 Stat. 4. Additionally, the Private Securities Litigation Reform Act of 1995 (PSLRA) prohibits granting incentive awards to class representatives in securities class actions. See 15 U.S.C. § 78u-4(a)(2)(A)(vi).

Although the Class Representatives invested some [64] amount of time to the instant suit by suppling documents, reviewing Court filings and executing affidavits, the Class Representatives were not subjected to hundreds of interrogatories and countless depositions; in fact, no Class Representative was ever deposed as the instant litigation did not proceed to a discovery phase. See Weseley v. Spear, Leeds & Kellogg, 711 F. Supp. 713, 720 (E.D.N.Y. 1989)(denying incentive award to named plaintiff where plaintiff responded to document requests and was deposed, but did not otherwise "perform any extraordinary services to the class"); In re Residential Doors Antitrust Litig., 1998 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 4292 (D. Pa. 1998)(granting an incentive award of $ 10,000 to Class Representatives where Class Representatives cooperated in producing documents, answering interrogatories, and presenting representatives for depositions). Only the fifth factor, the lack of personal benefits obtained by the Class Representatives, support a higher incentive award for the Class Representatives.

Giving careful and deliberate consideration to all of these factors, the Class Representatives cannot be said to have been an active participant in the litigation to merit $20,000. [65] Instead, the Court opines that a $8,000 incentive award per Class Representative is much more reasonable considering the level of involvement, time, effort and risk the Class Representative expended. Accordingly, the Court DENIES the request for $120,000 in incentive awards and GRANTS $8,000 in incentive awards per Class Representative, thereby totally $48,000. This sum shall be paid from the three settlements with the Horizon, Crowley and Sea Star Defendants.

[*470] V. Costs & Expenses

Lead Counsel has filed itemized, detailed and voluminous supporting evidence relating to the costs allegedly incurred (Docket Nos. 960, 964-979, 985, and their supporting exhibits). The Court has carefully reviewed these filings as the Court has "quasi-fiduciary" duty to Class Members while at the same time exercising its "wide latitude in shaping the contours" of an award of expenses. See In re Fidelity/Micron Sec. Litig., 167 F.3d 735, 736 (1st Cir. 1999). Upon careful review, the Court finds that these costs are reasonable and justifiable in light of the scope and duration of the litigation. Therefore, the Court hereby GRANTS Lead Counsel's request for expenses and awards Lead Counsel $1,035,702.92 in expenses [66] (Docket Nos. 960 and 985). This sum shall be paid from the three settlements with the Horizon, Crowley and Sea Star Defendants. [23]

VI. FAIRNESS, REASONABLENESS & ADEQUACY OF THE SETTLEMENTS

HN17[] Pursuant to Rule 23 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, the Court "may approve a settlement...that would bind class members only after a hearing and on finding that the settlement...is fair, reasonable, and adequate." Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(e)(1)(C). [24] Although the Court outlined the contours of the Settlements above, out of an abundance of caution, the Court makes additional factual findings regarding the fairness, reasonableness, and adequacy of the Settlements.

In providing notice to the Class, Lead Counsel mailed 61,854 Long-Form Notices and Claim Forms to Class Members identified from Defendants' transactional records. Additionally, a press release was distributed to approximately 4,490 major press outlets in the United States and 250 journalists [67] in the maritime shipping industry. Summary notices were also published in newspapers and magazine in September of 2010. Lead Counsel further established a mailing address, a website, and a toll-free telephone number, staffed with both English and Spanish speaking operators, where Class Members could obtain further information regarding the proposed Settlements.

In crafting the Horizon Settlement Agreement, Lead Counsel received the Horizon Defendants' financial records and was thus able to assess their ability or inability to pay a large sum or judgment. Upon close review of these records, in consultation with a financial expert, Lead Counsel determined that Horizon Defendants' market capitalization had dropped almost 90% since 2007 and that Horizon Defendants' were highly leveraged, having almost no unencumbered assets. Horizon Defendants also had to obtain a costly amendment to an existing credit agreement in order to be able to commit the $20,000,000 cash portion of the Settlement. Moreover, at the request of the DOJ, the Court drastically lowered Horizon's criminal fine from $45,000,000 to $15,000,000 out of a concern for Horizon's continued viability and its ability to pay restitution [68] to the Class Members in the instant matter. [25]

[23] In accordance with the Class Notice, dated August 25, 2010 (Docket No. 874-1), the Crowley Settlement will not reimburse Lead Counsel for more than $250,000 in expenses.

[24] The Court held a Final Fairness Hearing on November 18, 2010 (Docket No. 876).

[*471] Similarly, Lead Counsel received confidential information from Crowley Defendants' concerning their market share. Lead Counsel engaged a financial expert to evaluate this information and assess Crowley Defendants' portion of any potential damages suffered by the Class. Furthermore, Lead Counsel and Crowley Defendants had two mediation sessions with an experienced mediator in [69] complex litigation and antitrust matters.

Lead Counsel also held arm's length negotiations with Sea Star Defendants where they vigorously challenged the Class' damages claim. Lead Counsel engaged a financial expert and a forensic financial expert to analyze Sea Star Defendants' publicly available information as well as confidential internal information provided by Sea Star Defendants. Like Horizon Defendants, Sea Star Defendants are highly leveraged, with virtually no unencumbered assets. Lead Counsel also conducted two mediation sessions with Sea Star Defendants where Sea Star Defendants indicated that there were significant limitations on their ability to a pay a substantial settlement amount. Further, Sea Star Defendants are subject to liability from multiple other lawsuits. Moreover, Lead Counsel considered the Court's skepticism of Plaintiffs' ability to maintain a claim against one of the Sea Star Defendants, Saltchuck Resources, Inc., due to lack of evidence against this particular Defendant.

Regarding Chisholm, a personal, non-corporate co-defendant, Lead Counsel has agreed to dismiss all claims against Chisholm under the Chisholm Settlement Agreement. In exchange, Chisholm has [70] agreed to fully cooperate in aiding Lead Counsel in this, and other related, cabotage litigation. Chisholm's participation significantly improved Plaintiffs' ability to prove the extent of the conspiracy. Lead Counsel reviewed Chisholm's financial records and based upon his assets and loss of income upon being incarcerated, Lead Counsel concluded that he did not have the ability to pay any monetary amount.

The Court echos its previous analysis from when it granted the Settlements preliminary approval on August 25, 2010. In re Puerto Rican Cabotage Antitrust Litig., 269 F.R.D. at 142 and (Docket Nos. 800 and 801). Therein, the Court concluded that the settlement agreements were negotiated at arm's length as the negotiations were "long and arduous, spanning a considerable time-period" and that a resolution was "reached after a great deal of dispute between the parties as to the terms of the agreements." (Docket No. 801). The Court also concluded that the parties were sufficiently informed by the informal discovery that occurred.

The Final Fairness Hearing assuaged all of the Court's concerns regarding the Settlements themselves (Docket No. 876). The Court found that the Long-Form Notices [71] sent to Class Members were sufficiently clear that Class Members had the option of selecting either the base rate freeze or the cash option when opting into the Settlements. The Court also determined that the Putative Class Members were provided with adequate information to make an educated decision whether or not to opt in or out of the Settlements [*472] within allotted the time period. The only remaining issue at the conclusion of the Final Fairness Hearing was Plaintiffs' counsel's utilization of a maximized potential value of the base-rate freeze option, in conjunction with the cash settlement, to determine the size of the fund from which the reasonable attorneys' fee amount could be calculated. (Footnotes 8 and 12).

[25] On March 22, 2011, Horizon pled guilty to one count of violating the Sherman Antitrust Act and the Court imposed a criminal fine of $45,000,000 to be paid in gradually increasing installments over four years. United States v. Horizon Lines, LLC, No. 3:11-CR-0071, Judgment (D.P.R., Mar. 22, 2011)(Docket No. 29). The following month, however, the Court reduced Horizon's fine, at the request of the United States, by two-thirds to $15,000,000. The $15,000,000 fine is similarly payable in gradual installments over four years, in an effort ensure sufficient cash flow to continue operations and to ensure that Horizon would be able to compensate the Class. United States v. Horizon Lines, LLC, No. 3:11-CR-0071, Second Amended Judgment (D.P.R., Apr. 28, 2011)(Docket No. 37).

A. Grinnell/Tyco Analysis

HN18[] The First Circuit has yet to espouse a set of determined factors for assessing the fairness, reasonableness, and adequacy of a proposed settlement. Thus, the Court will follow other courts within this Circuit that have utilized a modified version of the Grinnell factors set forth by the Second Circuit and adopted by the Third Circuit. See In re Tyco, 535 F.Supp.2d at 259-60. The modified Grinnell factors are:

> (1) risk, complexity, expense and duration [72] of the case; (2) comparison of the proposed settlement with the likely result of continued litigation; (3) reaction of the class to the settlement; (4) stage of the litigation and the amount of discovery completed; and (5) quality of counsel and conduct during litigation and settlement negotiations.

Id.

(1) Risk, Complexity, Expense and Duration of the Case

As the Court has already stated, the present case is a complex antitrust matter that has been pending for more than three years; however, the Court notes that the parties have been in settlement negotiations for two of those three years. While the present case involved relatively low risk due to the DOJ's investigation, the Defendants' credible "filed-rate" doctrine defense, which may potentially shield Defendants from civil liability, provides heightened risk for Lead Counsel. Additionally, the parties' expenses to date have been reasonable, but further litigation will result in an exponential rise in litigation costs as the litigants enter into discovery. Following discovery, if Plaintiffs survive motions for summary judgment, a trial may take as long as a month, which will likely be followed with a lengthy appellate review process. [73] This factor is somewhat mixed, but, on the whole, the furculum favors approval of the Settlements.

(2) Comparison of the Proposed Settlement with the Likely Result of Continued Litigation

The actual value of the fund, $65,850,000, accounts for approximately 1.583% [26] of the total affected Puerto Rican cabotage sales for the relevant period. Other courts have approved settlements with similar percentages. See In re Pressure Sensitive Labelstock Antitrust Litig., 584 F. Supp. 2d 697, 702 (M.D. Pa. 2008) (approving the settlement where the cash portion of the settlement was approximately 1.5% of total sales); In re Linerboard Antitrust Litig., 321 F. Supp. 2d at 627 (approving the settlement where the settlement represented 1.62% of total sales). However, the Court finds that the percentage of the settlement relative to the total sales is not a particularly prudent figure in assessing the adequacy of the proposed Settlements.

Other courts have [74] examined proposed settlements as a percentage of the alleged damages, which is a more reliable analysis. See In re Tyco, 535 F. Supp. 2d at 261 (finding that the proposed settlement represented [*473] approximately 27% of the alleged damages which constituted an "outstanding recovery for the class"). In the instant case, Lead Counsel did not estimate the Class' actual damages (Docket No. 540-25), thus, the Court cannot calculate what this percentage may be.

As a general rule, the Court is loathe to analyze hypothetical situations such as this one and finds predicting the likely result of continued litigation a Sisyphean task. Nevertheless, it is likely that the parties would vigorously litigate class certification, liability and damages as well as summary judgment motions in preparation for a complex trial. To the best of our knowledge, there are no glaring deficiencies, or smoking guns, in the Plaintiffs' arsenal that may substantially inflate or deflate a potential jury verdict. Beyond these broad characterization applicable to most multi-district litigation, the Court's crystal ball is murky and unable to forecast the outcome of summary judgment motions not presently before the Court nor [75] the precise result of a jury verdict for a trial that has not yet been conducted. Accordingly, this factor counsels slightly in favor of approving the Settlements as a means to ending what could be protracted and complex litigation with an uncertain result.

[26] Plaintiffs estimated that Defendants' total volume of commerce of Puerto Rican cabotage to be $4,159,800,000 during the relevant period (Docket No. 886-2). The actual value of the Settlements, $65,850,000, divided by this sum is approximately 1.583%.

(3) Reaction of the Class to the Settlement

The Class's reaction has been very positive. 61,854 notices were sent to the Class Members identified from the Defendants' transactional records and press releases were widely disseminated in both English and Spanish. There were only three objections to the Settlements and none of the objections challenged the adequacy of the proposed settlement amount itself. Two of the objections related to the proposed attorneys' fees and incentive awards, while the third objection from INEOS only sought more information in order to decide whether or not to participate in the Settlements or opt-out. [27] Three objections, with none of the three challenging the amount of the Settlements, out of a potential Class of 61,854, certainly weighs in favor of approval. See Wal-Mart Stores, Inc. v. Visa U.S.A. Inc., 396 F.3d 96, 118 (2d Cir. 2005) (HN19[]) "'If only a small number of objections are received, [76] that fact can be viewed as indicative of the adequacy of the settlement.'" (quoting 4 Alba Conte & Herbert B. Newberg, Newberg on Class Actions § 11.41, at 108 (4th ed. 2002)). However, we note that while "silence constitutes tacit consent to the [settlement] agreement," Bell Atlantic Corp. v. Bolger, 2 F.3d 1304, 1313 n.15 (3d Cir. 1993), courts have found that a lack of response from the class is typical. See In re Traffic Exec. Ass'n—E. R.Rs., 627 F.2d 631 (2d Cir. 1980) ("A substantial lack of response from absentee class members appears to be the norm rather than the exception."); see also Bolger, 2 F.3d at 1313 n.15 ("[P]otential objectors...have an insufficient incentive to contest an unpalatable settlement agreement because the cost of contesting exceeds the objector's pro rata benefit.").

(4) Stage of the Litigation & the Amount of Discovery Completed

This case has passed the motion to dismiss phase, but has not yet entered into a formal discovery phase. Lead Counsel has, nevertheless, conducted substantial [77] informal discovery which included scrutinizing the pleadings and filing in the DOJ's parallel criminal cases. Lead Counsel has also engaged an economic expert and a forensic financial analyst to ascertain potential [*474] damages. Additionally, Defendant Chisholm, a participant in the alleged conspiracy, cooperated with Lead Counsel and supplied valuable insider information. Although formal discovery did not occur, the Court can still conclude the parties had sufficient information to make a well informed decision about the Settlements. See In re Puerto Rican Cabotage Antitrust Litig., 269 F.R.D. at 141 (The Court previously found that the "parties were sufficiently informed by the limited discovery which has occurred in the instant case."). Thus, this factor favors approval of the Settlements.

(5) Quality of Counsel & Conduct During Litigation & Settlement Negotiations

The Court previously addressed this issue when granting preliminary approval to the Settlements. The Court stated that:

> The negotiations for settlement in the instant case were long and arduous, spanning a considerable time-period. Further, the settlement agreements were reached after a great deal of dispute between parties as [78] to the terms of the agreements. Accordingly, the Court finds that the negotiation of the settlement agreements indeed occurred at arm's length.

Id. at 141. Based upon the Court's prior finding, this factor also supports approving the Settlements.

[27] The Court notes that INEOS, and any other Class Member, retained the option to opt-out of the Class and separately litigate against, or settle with, with the Defendants.

The Court will also briefly address Defendants' ability to withstand a greater judgment. The evidence shows that Horizon and Sea Star Defendants are both experiencing serious financial hardships and are highly leveraged. As the Court mentioned previously, Horizon Defendants' had to obtain a costly amendment to an existing credit agreement in order to fund the proposed settlement. The Court also notes that as a result of the severity of Horizon's financial condition, the Court reduced Horizon's criminal fine, at the request of the United States, from $45,000,000 to $15,000,000. [28] These Defendants' precarious financial situation counsel in favor of resolving this matter quickly and thus approving the Settlements.

With all of the above factors supporting approval, the Court [79] concludes that the proposed Settlement Agreements are fair, reasonable, and adequate.

VII. CONCLUSION

The Court has determined awarding Lead Counsel 23% of the total value of the Settlements, $15,145,500, is reasonable and appropriate. The Lodestar cross-check supports the Court's fee award. The Objectors have performed a valuable service in assessing Lead Counsel's fee request resulting in compensation for each and every Class Member. The Court has thus found that the Objectors are entitled to a fee of 10% of the $3,050,000 they have helped recover for the benefit of the Class. The Court has also approved incentive awards of $8,000 per Class Representative, for a total of $48,000, and approved Lead Counsel's request for expenses in the amount of $1,035,702.92. Lastly, in compliance with Rule 23 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, the Court has concluded that the proposed Settlements are fair, reasonable, and adequate.

As the Court has determined that the attorneys' fees, costs and expenses are all reasonable for the reasons stated above, the Court is now satisfied that the Settlement Agreements are fair, reasonable, and adequate. Thus, the Court hereby [*475] GRANTS final approval (Docket [80] No. 840) to the pending Settlement Agreements for the reasons stated above.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Complaints > Requirements for Complaint

HN1[] Complaints, Requirements for Complaint

A court evaluates complaints in light of the plausibility pleading standard articulated in Twombly and reaffirmed in Iqbal. According to this standard, a plaintiff must provide allegations plausibly suggesting (not merely consistent with) the defendant's liability. However, this standard neither imposes a probability requirement nor requires ultra specific factual allegations. Rather, the factual allegations must be enough to raise a right to relief above the speculative level, or raise a reasonable expectation that discovery will reveal evidence of the defendant's liability.

HN2[] Complaints, Requirements for Complaint

Courts use a two-step process when evaluating the facial plausibility of a complaint. First, a court must dispose of those allegations not entitled to a presumption of truth, namely, threadbare recitals of the elements of a cause of action that are supported by mere conclusory statements. A plaintiff may not proceed to discovery on a complaint containing only conclusions about the defendant's liability. Even under this standard, however, legal conclusions still play a role, albeit a limited one. Specifically, legal conclusions can provide the framework of a complaint but must be supported by factual allegations, and cannot themselves be dressed up as factual allegations. Determining whether a legal conclusion "masquerades" as a factual allegation requires a court to consider whether there exists elsewhere in the complaint factual allegations supporting the allegation.

HN3[] Complaints, Requirements for Complaint

Courts use a two-step process when evaluating the facial plausibility of a complaint. Second, a court must examine those allegations, not swept aside as factually-unsupported legal conclusions, to gauge whether the remaining allegations, accepted as true, plausibly give rise to an entitlement to relief. A plausible claim is not merely "possible," or "conceivable," but rather permits a court to draw the reasonable inference that the defendant is liable for the misconduct alleged. A Section 1 claim supported only by allegations of parallel behavior does not permit such an inference to be drawn, for alleging parallel decisions to resist competition is not suggestive of a conspiracy.

HN4[] Complaints, Requirements for Complaint

Though the plausibility pleading standard is undoubtedly a departure from the "no-set-of-facts" standard that reigned for the half-century following the court's decision in Conley v. Gibson, this standard nonetheless operates within a notice pleading regime. A complaint need not contain "specific facts," but in all cases must provide the defendant "fair notice" of the alleged conduct that renders him liable to the plaintiff. For instance, an antitrust defendant is not provided sufficient notice of his role in an alleged conspiratorial agreement spanning a seven-year period in which no "who, where, or when" allegations are advanced. Likewise, attempting to implicate individual defendants in an alleged antitrust conspiracy by referring generally to "defendants" will not do if the complaint provides "no clue" as to the terms of the agreement, or what role each defendant played. Therefore, while specific facts, like the "who, where, or when" of a claim are not required, to the extent the absence of such allegations fails to provide the defendant fair notice of the claims the plaintiff asserts, a plaintiff does not fulfill his Fed. R. Civ. P. 8 obligation to provide a short and plain statement of the claim showing that the pleader is entitled to relief.

HN5[] Complaints, Requirements for Complaint

Discussing the conclusory/non-conclusory divide, Twombly and Iqbal define as conclusory "bare assertions" of liability, and "threadbare" legal statements as being denied a presumption of truth, but not allegations that contain factual support.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Complaints > Requirements for Complaint

HN6[] Regulated Practices, Private Actions

The plausibility pleading standard does not require a court to construct a mandatory checklist of the "who, what, where, when, and how" of an antitrust agreement for each defendant. Common sense prevails, and a complaint survives if it contains "enough factual matter (taken as true) to suggest that an agreement was made" among the defendants.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Complaints > Requirements for Complaint

HN7[] Regulated Practices, Private Actions

Watson Carpet has no application until the existence of an express conspiratorial agreement is determined. But because a complaint containing an express conspiratorial agreement does not announce itself, a court must examine the complaint as a whole and determine whether such an agreement has been established by direct allegations, or if only circumstantial evidence has been offered in which case the allegations must plausibly suggest, and not merely be consistent with, a conspiratorial agreement.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Complaints > Requirements for Complaint

HN8[] Regulated Practices, Private Actions

To the extent Watson Carpet articulates a different standard than cases like Twombly and In re Travel Agent, this standard only differs as to the consequences that flow from the route a plaintiff chooses to follow when pleading an antitrust conspiracy while, of course, leaving the plausibility pleading standard unchanged. Watson Carpet departs from Twombly and certain of its progeny because the existence of a well-pled conspiratorial agreement necessarily removes the need to determine whether sufficient circumstantial evidence tending to exclude the possibility of independent conduct had been presented. The Watson Carpet plaintiff pursued the path of direct allegations to establish its entitlement to relief instead of supplying solely inferential allegations, a well-established pleading dichotomy. This distinction mirrors the "crucial question" for making out an antitrust claim, whether defendant's conduct toward plaintiff stemmed from independent decision or from an agreement, tacit or express.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > General Overview

HN9[] Regulated Practices, Private Actions

An express conspiratorial agreement cannot be established through circumstantial evidence, or those allegations that can only be connected to a conclusion of fact by inference.

HN10[] Concerted Action, Civil Conspiracy

A fundamental tenant of conspiracy law holds one participating conspirator jointly liable for all his co-conspirators' prior acts.

Torts > Business Torts > Fraud & Misrepresentation > General Overview

HN11[] Business Torts, Fraud & Misrepresentation

In the Sixth Circuit, a plaintiff alleging fraudulent concealment must plead: 1) defendants concealed the conduct that constitutes the cause of action; 2) defendants' concealment prevented plaintiffs from discovering the cause of action within the limitations period; and 3) until discovery, plaintiffs exercised due diligence in trying to find out about the cause of action.

Torts > ... > Statute of Limitations > Tolling > Equitable Estoppel

HN12[] Tolling, Equitable Estoppel

When facts exist that should excite the suspicions of a reasonably diligent person, a plaintiff that fails to make proper inquiries to discover his cause of action will not see the limitations period tolled. By contrast, when no information, actual or constructive, exists hinting at the fact of plaintiff's injury, the "reasonable diligence" requirement seems limited to denying tolling for careless plaintiffs. At bottom, the "reasonable diligence" component of the fraudulent concealment doctrine requires the plaintiff to show that he neither knew nor, in the exercise of due diligence, could reasonably have known of the offense.

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Complaints > Requirements for Complaint

Torts > ... > Concerted Action > Civil Conspiracy > General Overview

HN13[] Complaints, Requirements for Complaint

A plaintiff must provide specific allegations of the conspiracy's concealment and eventual discovery so that a court may clearly see whether, by ordinary diligence, the discovery might not have been before made and relief sought sooner.

[*790] MEMORANDUM OPINION AND ORDER

Introduction

Before the Court are a series of Motions for Reconsideration (Doc. Nos. 202-203, 214) of this Court's July 19, 2011 Order (Doc. No. 191) ("Order") denying in part a series of Motions to Dismiss the Direct and Indirect Purchaser Plaintiffs' (collectively "Plaintiffs") Consolidated Amended Complaints (collectively "Complaints"). In the alternative, Defendants seek certification for an immediate appeal of the Order. In addition, one Motion requests a stay of this case until the U.S. Department [6] of Justice ("DOJ") concludes its parallel criminal grand jury investigation (Doc. No. 202).

For the reasons set forth below, the Motions for Reconsideration and Certification for Immediate Appeal are denied. The Motion for Stay is also denied. To the extent the Motions for Reconsideration raise arguments not addressed in a similar order denying Defendant Leggett & Platt's Motion for Reconsideration and Certification for Immediate Appeal (Doc. No. 200), additional clarifying remarks are offered.

Motions for Reconsideration

Defendants' Motions raise two categories of issues. [1] First, Defendants seek reversal of certain of the Order's rulings, including: the application of the Sixth Circuit's decision in Watson Carpet & Floor Covering, Inc v. Mohawk Indus., Inc. (Watson Carpet), 648 F.3d 452, 2011 U.S. App. LEXIS 12606, 2011 WL 2462833 (6th Cir. 2011) to the Complaints; and the finding that the Complaints sufficiently allege Defendant FXI Innovations' participation in the conspiracy.

Defendants also re-raise two arguments that, if accepted, would narrow the scope of the pleadings. First, Defendants argue the Complaints fail to properly allege fraudulent concealment with respect to the conspiracy. Second, Defendants claim the Indirect Purchaser Plaintiffs lack standing to assert state antitrust or consumer protection claims in jurisdictions not represented among the named Indirect Purchaser Plaintiffs. This Court declined to address the first issue, fraudulent concealment, in its Order. By contrast, at the July 1, 2011 hearing, this Court postponed standing analysis to a later time (TR 127:12-19). This Order supplies answers to both challenges.

Finally, Defendants seek a Stay of this litigation pending "resolution" of related government investigations or, in the alternative, staged discovery as to all Defendants (Doc. No. 202-1 at 10-11).

[1] As indicated in this Court's Order granting the Woodbridge Defendants' Motion for Joinder, a motion addressing common issues will be treated as if all Defendants joined in the motion's filing (Doc. No. 222). Therefore, this Memorandum [7] Opinion refers to "Defendants" generally when discussing common issues, distinguishing among individual Defendants only when necessary.

Overview of Twombly and Iqbal

Before proceeding, however, a word must be said about the keystone supporting much of the claimed inadequacies in the Complaints: Defendants contention that "at least [8] 90 of the 160-paragraph CAC are unquestionably conclusory" and that, aside from Complaint paragraphs describing the parties, only 20 paragraphs contain "bits and pieces of factual support," but not enough to support the claims asserted (Doc. No. 90 at 22). Defendants' dissection of the Complaint purports to be grounded in the plausibility pleading standard articulated in Bell Atl. [*791] Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007) and Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 129 S. Ct. 1937, 173 L. Ed. 2d 868 (2009). However, despite Defendants' characterization of the standard, this Court notes different trends in the manner in which Defendants apply that standard.

HN1[] This Court evaluates the Complaints in light of the plausibility pleading standard articulated in Twombly and reaffirmed in Iqbal. According to this standard, a plaintiff must provide "allegations plausibly suggesting (not merely consistent with)" the defendant's liability. Twombly, 550 U.S. at 557. However, this standard neither imposes a probability requirement nor requires ultra specific factual allegations. Id. at 555-56. Rather, the factual allegations "must be enough to raise a right to relief above the speculative level," id. at 555, or "raise a reasonable expectation [9] that discovery will reveal evidence" of the defendant's liability. Id. at 556.

HN2[] Courts use a two-step process when evaluating the facial plausibility of a complaint. First, a court must dispose of those allegations not entitled to a presumption of truth, namely, "[t]hreadbare recitals of the elements of a cause of action [that are] supported by mere conclusory statements." Iqbal, 129 S. Ct. at 1949. A plaintiff may not proceed to discovery on a complaint containing only conclusions about the defendant's liability.

Even under this standard, however, legal conclusions still play a role, albeit a limited one. Id. at 1950. Specifically, "legal conclusions can provide the framework of a complaint" but "must be supported by factual allegations," id. at 1950, and cannot themselves be dressed up as factual allegations. Twombly, 550 U.S. at 555, quoting Papasan v. Allain, 478 U.S. 265, 286, 106 S. Ct. 2932, 92 L. Ed. 2d 209 (1986). Determining whether a legal conclusion "masquerades" as a factual allegation requires a court to consider whether there exists elsewhere in the complaint factual allegations supporting the allegation. See id. at 564 (concluding that on a "fair reading" of the complaint as a whole, a few statements speaking [10] to "agreement" were mere legal conclusions resting on factual allegations of parallel conduct that did not plausibly suggest the existence of an antitrust conspiracy).

HN3[] Second, a court must examine those allegations, not swept aside as factually-unsupported legal conclusions, to gauge whether the remaining allegations, accepted as true, "plausibly give rise to an entitlement to relief." Iqbal, 129 S. Ct. at 1950. A plausible claim is not merely "possible," Twombly, 550 U.S. at 557, or "conceivable," id. at 570, but rather permits a court to "draw the reasonable inference that the defendant is liable for the misconduct alleged." Iqbal, 129 S. Ct. at 1949. A Section 1 claim supported only by allegations of parallel behavior does not permit such an inference to be drawn, for "alleging parallel decisions to resist competition" is not suggestive of a conspiracy. Twombly, 550 U.S. at 566.

HN4[] Though the plausibility pleading standard is undoubtedly a departure from the "no-set-of-facts" standard that reigned for the half-century following the Court's decision in Conley v. Gibson, 355 U.S. 41, 78 S. Ct. 99, 2 L. Ed. 2d 80 (1957), see Arthur R. Miller, From Conley to Twombly to Iqbal: A Double Play on the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, 60 [11] Duke L. J. 1 (2010), this standard nonetheless operates within a notice pleading regime. A complaint need not contain "specific facts," but in all cases must provide the defendant "fair notice" of the alleged conduct [*792] that renders him liable to the plaintiff. Erickson v. Pardus, 551 U.S. 89, 93, 127 S. Ct. 2197, 167 L. Ed. 2d 1081 (2007). For instance, an antitrust defendant is not provided sufficient notice of his role in an alleged conspiratorial agreement spanning a seven-year period in which no "who, where, or when" allegations are advanced. See Twombly, 550 U.S. at 565 n.10. Likewise, attempting to implicate individual defendants in an alleged antitrust conspiracy by referring generally to "defendants" will not do if the complaint provides "no clue" as to the terms of the agreement, or what role each defendant played. In re Travel Agent Comm'n Antitrust Litig, 583 F.3d 896, 905 (6th Cir. 2009) (quoting Twombly, 550 U.S. at 565 n.10). Therefore, while specific facts, like the "who, where, or when" of a claim are not required, to the extent the absence of such allegations fails to provide the defendant fair notice of the claims the plaintiff asserts, a plaintiff does not fulfill his Federal Civil Rule 8 obligation to [12] provide "a short and plain statement of the claim showing that the pleader is entitled to relief."

As they must, Defendants correctly describe the first prong of the plausibility pleading standard, the rejection of conclusory allegations (Doc. No. 90 at 14-20). However, in applying this standard to the Complaint, Defendants transform this standard in two important respects not supported by Twombly or its progeny.

Defendants' treatment of certain Complaint paragraphs is indicative of this approach. For instance, Defendants dismiss as conclusory an allegation that:

> In seeking conditional leniency with the DOJ and in connection with a pending Canadian government investigation of antitrust violations by manufacturers of flexible polyurethane foam, several current and former Vitafoam employees agreed to be interviewed regarding the flexible polyurethane foam price fixing conspiracy. These interviews revealed the mechanisms, participants, duration, and impact of the conspiracy. These employees described a cartel among Defendants, who are responsible for production of the majority of flexible polyurethane foam, and other co-conspirators.

(Doc. No. 46 at ¶ 62; Doc. No. 52 at ¶ 74). However, no [13] motion or supporting briefing material filed by any Defendant denies Vitafoam applied to, and was accepted by, the DOJ Corporate Leniency Program. Nor does any Defendant deny that Vitafoam employees were interviewed by DOJ personnel in connection with the Corporate Leniency Program application process, which required Vitafoam executives to admit their participation in an antitrust conspiracy. In short, no one denies these interviews actually occurred — yet Defendants still assert the paragraph is "conclusory."

Likewise, Defendants dismiss as conclusory the allegation that:

> The sworn affidavit from Pierre-Yves Guay also separately states that it is the result of an investigation of 'previous and ongoing conduct contrary to' the Competition Act of Canada by entities including Carpenter, Valle Foam, Domfoam, A to Z Foam, Vita Foam Group, Foamex, Flexible Foam, Future Foam, Mohawk, Scottdel, Broadway Foam, Woodbridge, Leggett & Platt, and Hickory Springs. The violations of law alleged in the affidavit concerned conduct both 'in Canada and in the United States.'

(Doc. No. 46 at ¶ 84; Doc. No. 52 at ¶ 96). Again, no Defendant denies Mr. Guay prepared the sworn affidavit referenced in this Complaint [14] paragraph. Indeed, two Defendants confirm its existence by attaching excerpts from a public version of [*793] the sworn affidavit to their individual Motions to Dismiss, and both excerpts contain the same enumeration of Defendants listed in the relevant Complaint paragraphs (Doc. No. 91-1; Doc. No. 100-2). Yet again, Defendants insist such a paragraph is conclusory.

The problem thus appears to be a shifting meaning of "conclusory." Is it the Defendants' contention that the fundamental content of Mr. Guay's personal statements in the affidavit are conclusory or that Plaintiffs' pleading of the existence and knowledge of the affidavit is conclusory? A fine distinction, to be sure, but this Court is guided by step two of the process above — Plaintiffs' pleading of the admitted existence of the affidavit, with its known content both implicates specific Defendants by name and provides fair notice of the alleged conduct. The two-step process does not push this Court to tread where Defendants seek to lead — namely to look "inside" the affidavit to determine whether an individual's sworn statements themselves may be conclusory. Such a determination is made at a later time by a factfinder to determine [15] the relative truth, credibility, and weight of such sworn statements.

The Consolidated Complaint

A thorough examination of the Complaint paragraphs Defendants label as conclusory and non-conclusory, respectively, reveals a similar clear trend in Defendants' dissection of the Complaint. First, with only four exceptions

[2] each and every Complaint paragraph that in some form references a "conspiracy," "conspiratorial conduct," "unlawful acts," "agreements," or like terms is automatically dismissed as conclusory. Defendants pay no regard to factual allegations supporting such descriptions that exist elsewhere in the Complaint, or, as is the case in two Complaint paragraphs excerpted above, in the very same Complaint paragraph. The allegations referring to the fact of the Vitafoam executive interviews fails because it references a "price-fixing conspiracy" as the interviews' subject. Similarly, the Complaint paragraphs describing Mr. Guay's sworn affidavit, the existence of which Defendants themselves confirm by submitting portions of the affidavit to this Court as part of certain Motions to Dismiss, allegedly fail because such paragraphs reference "violations of law."

Defendants' gloss on the plausibility pleading standard thus dooms any Complaint paragraph containing a term that, by itself, constitutes a legal conclusion, regardless of any factual support that may exist for that allegation anywhere in the Complaint. However, even in its most expansive reading, Twombly does not support such exacting dissection of a complaint. Instead, HN5[] discussing the conclusory/non-conclusory divide, Twombly and Iqbal define as conclusory "bare assertions" of liability, Twombly, 550 U.S. at 556, and "threadbare" legal statements as being denied a presumption of truth, Iqbal, 129 S. Ct. at 1949, but not allegations that contain factual support. By contrast, Defendants strike allegations containing any assertions of their antitrust liability, and thus strike [17] all legal conclusions regardless of whether such allegations serve as a framework for the Complaints as permitted by Iqbal, or are supported by factual allegations.

[*794] Second, Defendants restrict the presumption of truth to only those Complaint paragraphs that contain specific facts, like the inclusion of precise dates (e.g., Doc. No. 46 at ¶ 112(f); Doc. No. 52 at ¶ 123(f)) or transcriptions of telephone calls (e.g., Doc. No. 46 at ¶ 109; Doc. No. 52 at ¶ 120). These Complaint paragraphs, of course, should be entitled to a presumption of truth, but limiting the presumption of truth to only Complaint allegations containing such specific facts imposes the variety of heightened pleading standard rejected by Twombly. See Twombly, 550 U.S. at 570.

For example, Defendants dismiss as conclusory the allegation that "Vitafoam had a purported company policy of not having conversations with competitors, but this policy was merely window-dressing and was not followed in practice during the Class Period" (Doc. No. 46 at ¶ 69; Doc. No. 52 at ¶ 81). This Complaint paragraph contains no supposedly taboo labels like "unlawful," and therefore was presumably dismissed because, unlike those paragraphs Defendants [18] label as non-conclusory, this allegation does not contain enough factual specificity about the claimed "no communication" policy.

Nonetheless, this allegation, and others like it, is entitled to a presumption of truth. Factual allegations are readily distinguishable from solely legal conclusions. A factual allegation's veracity can be demonstrated on its own terms. A legal conclusion, by contrast, would require the analysis of underlying facts, if any, to determine whether the asserted legal determination is appropriate, i.e., whether a defendant negligently manufactured a product. The allegation that a "no communications" policy existed is clearly a factual allegation, which turns on whether company policy proscribed conversations with competitors and, if so, whether such conversations occurred.

After misapplying Twombly's "conclusory" classification, Defendants further err in describing the level of factual specificity necessary to plausibly suggest and agree to restrain trade. Specifically, Defendants argue Plaintiffs must advance specific factual allegations describing the "who, what, when, where, and how" of the alleged conspiracy, or some similar collection of interrogatories. [19] This line of argument extends from Twombly's observation that "[a]part from identifying a seven-year span in which the § 1 violations were supposed to have occurred . . . the pleadings mentioned no specific time, place, or person involved in the alleged conspiracies." Twombly, 550 U.S. at 565 n.10. Defendants argue that for this reason, i.e., the lack of "when, where, or who" allegations, the Twombly complaint "was not sufficient to state a claim" (Doc. No. 90 at 22).

[2] Specifically, Defendants [16] concede the non-conclusory nature of certain Complaint paragraphs even though these paragraphs reference "illegal antitrust activities" (Doc. No. 46 at ¶ 60; Doc. No. 52 at ¶ 72), "participation in a conspiracy" (Doc. No. 46 at ¶ 61; Doc. No. 52 at ¶ 73), and activities undertaken "in furtherance of the conspiracy" (Doc. No. 46 at ¶ 112; Doc. No. 52 at ¶ 123); (Doc. No. 46 at ¶ 112(g); Doc. No. 52 at ¶ 123(g)).

Twombly stands for no such proposition. Rather, this portion of the opinion speaks purely in terms of notice:

> If the complaint had not explained that the claim of agreement rested on the parallel conduct described, we doubt that the complaint's references to an agreement among the ILECs would have given the notice required by Rule 8. Apart from identifying a seven-year span in which the § 1 violations were supposed to have occured (i.e., "[b]eginning at least as early as February 6, 1996, and continuing to the present,") the pleadings mentioned no specific time, place, or person involved in the alleged conspiracies. This lack of notice contrasts sharply with the model form for pleading negligence, Form 9, which the dissent [20] says exemplifies the kind of "bare allegation" that survives a motion to dismiss. Whereas the model form alleges that the defendant struck the plaintiff with his car while plaintiff was crossing a particular highway at a specified [*795] date and time, the complaint here furnishes no clue as to which of the four ILECs (much less which of their employees) supposedly agreed, or when and where the illicit agreement took place. A defendant wishing to prepare an answer in the simple fact pattern laid out in Form 9 would know what to answer; a defendant seeking to respond to plaintiffs' conclusory allegations in the § 1 context would have little idea where to begin.

Twombly, 550 U.S. at 565 n.10 (emphasis added) (citations omitted); see also In re Packaged Ice Antitrust Litig. (Packaged Ice I), 723 F. Supp. 2d 987, 1005 (E.D. Mich. 2010) (Twombly complaint dismissed, not because of the absence of particularized "when, where, and who" factual allegations, but rather because the complaint, containing only a bare allegation of agreement and descriptions of parallel behavior, did not state a plausible claim for relief; Hinds County, Miss. v. Wachovia Bank N.A. (Hinds County II), 700 F. Supp. 2d 378, 394 (S.D.N.Y. 2010) [21] ("A § 1 complaint must adequately allege the plausible involvement of each defendant and put defendants on notice of the claims against them, but it need not be detailed with overt acts by each defendant."); In re Travel Agent Comm'n Antitrust Litig., 583 F.3d 896, 905-06 (6th Cir. 2009) (court did not require particularized "when, where, and who" factual allegations, only "further circumstance[s] [beyond a conclusory agreement/parallel conduct framework] pointing toward a meeting of the minds" and enough factual allegations to provide defendants adequate notice); Total Benefits Planning Agency v. Anthem Blue Cross & Blue Shield, 552 F.3d 430, 437 (6th Cir. 2008) (dismissing a complaint where "[p]laintiffs only offer bare allegations without any reference to the 'who, what, where, when, how or why'" and no allegations of horizontal agreement among conspirators) (emphasis added); In re Southeastern Milk Antitrust Litig., 555 F. Supp. 2d 934, 943 (E.D. Tenn. 2008) ("[W]hile not answering all specific questions about who, what, when, and where, . . . [the complaints put] defendants on notice concerning the basic nature of their complaints against the defendants and the grounds upon which [22] their claims exist.").

In short, HN6[] the plausibility pleading standard does not require a court to construct a mandatory checklist of the "who, what, where, when, and how" of an antitrust agreement for each defendant. Common sense prevails, and a complaint survives if it contains "enough factual matter (taken as true) to suggest that an agreement was made" among the defendants. Twombly, 550 U.S. at 556.

Watson Carpet

Defendants also argue Watson Carpet has no application here, "where the existence of an express agreement is denied, and the question is whether Plaintiffs have alleged sufficient facts to describe and support their claim of express agreement" (Doc. No. 202-1 at 7). This Court remains satisfied the Complaints provide sufficient direct allegations of a conspiratorial agreement necessary to trigger application of the Watson Carpet principle.

Defendants are correct in asserting that HN7[] Watson Carpet has no application until the existence of an express conspiratorial agreement is determined. But because a complaint containing an express conspiratorial agreement does not announce itself, a court must examine the complaint as a whole and determine whether such an agreement has been established [23] by direct allegations, or if only circumstantial evidence has been offered in which case the allegations must plausibly suggest, and not merely be consistent with, a conspiratorial [*796] agreement. Twombly, 550 U.S. at 557.

Through the use of Complaint subheadings, Plaintiffs provide a clear roadmap of alleged antitrust violations. Specifically, after chronicling Defendant Vitafoam's DOJ Corporate Leniency Program application and the content of interviews with Vitafoam executives detailing the scope and terms of the conspiratorial agreement by which Defendants allegedly fixed prices and allocated customers in the flexible polyurethane foam market, Plaintiffs supply specific facts illustrating individual episodes of conspiracy implementation and enforcement.

First, Plaintiffs define the conspiratorial agreement by expressly referencing information derived from Defendant Vitafoam during its successful application to the DOJ Corporate Leniency Program (Doc. No. 46 at ¶¶ 60-61; Doc. No. 52 at ¶¶ 72-73). As part of the application process, and in connection with a Canadian Bureau of Competition investigation into similar allegedly unlawful conduct, several current and former Vitafoam employees [24] agreed to be interviewed by government officials, disclosing the "mechanism, participants, duration, and impact of the conspiracy" — the same conspiracy in which all Defendants are alleged to have participated (Doc. No. 46 at ¶ 62; Doc. No. 52 at ¶ 74). These descriptions include biannual or triannual discussions of collusive pricing (Doc. No. 46 at ¶ 63; Doc. No. 52 at ¶ 75); the use of raw material cost increases as a pretext for adopting the agreed-upon collusive price increase that would have failed in the absence of conspiracy-wide coordination (Doc. No. 46 at ¶ 64; Doc. No. 52 at ¶ 76); the use of telephone conversations, price increase letter exchanges, and in-person meetings to coordinate the amount and timing of price increases (Doc. No. 46 at ¶ 65; Doc. No. 52 at ¶ 77); and understandings and agreements on price level increases the conspirators would set together before publication of pricing letters with the same, or almost the same, effective dates, and sharing of published letters to "police" the agreement (Doc. No. 46 at ¶ 66; Doc. No. 52 at ¶ 78).

The Complaint then chronicles the interviews of individual Vitafoam executives that corroborate the existence of the alleged [25] conspiratorial agreement. Plaintiffs first use materials from the Vitafoam interviews to describe the conduct of one of that company's former presidents. This officer directed subordinates to send copies of draft Vitafoam pricing letters to competitors in exchange for competitors' draft pricing letters (Doc. No. 46 at ¶ 70; Doc. No. 52 at ¶ 82). At least seven Vitafoam employees carried out the former Vitafoam president's instructions by engaging in such draft pricing letter exchanges, or otherwise having discussions about the amount and timing of price increases with competitors (Doc. No. 46 at ¶ 70; Doc. No. 52 at ¶ 82). These Vitafoam employees had such communications with at least eight employees of five other named Defendants (Doc. No. 46 at ¶ 72; Doc. No. 52 at ¶ 84).

Next, the Complaint introduces a former vice president of Vitafoam who, at an earlier point in his career, was employed by Defendant Woodbridge (Doc. No. 46 at ¶ 73; Doc. No. 52 at ¶ 85). This individual had conspiratorial discussions of the variety described above with employees of at least eight other Defendants (Doc. No. 46 at ¶ 74; Doc. No. 52 at ¶ 86), and joined Mark Kane of Defendant Carpenter in coordinating [26] price levels extended to a common customer (Doc. No. 46 at ¶ 75; Doc. No. 52 at ¶ 87). Robert Valle and Tony Valleoccia of Valle Foam shared communications with another Defendant consistent with the conspiracy (Doc. No. 46 at ¶ 76; Doc. No. 52 at ¶ 88). Vitafoam [*797] employees David Gurley and George Newton shared and received draft price increase letters and other pricing information, including competitor pricing lists (Doc. No. 46 at ¶¶ 77-78; Doc. No. 52 at ¶¶ 89-90), and Newton exchanged pricing information with other Defendants (Doc. No. 46 at ¶ 78; Doc. No. 52 at ¶ 90).

Direct allegations confirming the existence of a conspiratorial agreement continue with the admitted conduct of the current Vitafoam vice president of sales, who engaged in conspiratorial conduct with at least nine other Defendants (Doc. No. 46 at ¶¶ 80-82; Doc. No. 52 at ¶¶ 92-94), and provided the Canadian Commissioner of Competition a list of ten Defendant firms and twelve Defendant employees with whom he engaged in "discussions, exchanges of information and agreements regarding the price of foam" (Doc. No. 46 at ¶ 83; Doc. No. 52 at ¶ 95). He also admits that, while he was previously employed with Defendant Woodbridge, [27] he discussed with Bill Lucas, the current Vitafoam president, price increases for certain foam products (Doc. No. 46 at ¶ 85; Doc. No. 52 at ¶ 97), and had similar conversations with an employee of Defendant Foamex (Doc. No. 46 at ¶ 87; Doc. No. 52 at ¶ 99).

The current president of Vitafoam rounds out the group of employees interviewed by DOJ officials in connection with his company's application to the Corporate Leniency Program. He too was previously employed by Defendant Woodbridge in a position where he exercised pricing authority (Doc. No. 46 at ¶ 90; Doc. No. 52 at ¶ 102), and had conspiratorial discussions with at least eleven employees of seven Defendant firms (Doc. No. 46 at ¶ 92; Doc. No. 52 at ¶ 103).

By themselves, allegations describing the broader conspiratorial agreement, as in Twombly and In re Travel Agent, properly would be labeled conclusory (Doc. No. 46 at ¶¶ 63-66; Doc. No. 52 at ¶¶ 75-78). If supported only by general descriptions of telephone calls, email conversations, and parallel price increases, the Complaints would follow the "conclusory agreement/parallel conduct" archetype and fail at the pleadings stage. However, Plaintiffs have done far more. They have [28] provided direct evidence in the form of the Vitafoam executives' statements, which provides the factual support necessary to grant a presumption of truth to the otherwise conclusory paragraphs that describe the conspiratorial agreement.

The complaint in Watson Carpet similarly departed from the "conclusory agreement/parallel conduct" mold. There, like here, the plaintiff provided "detailed allegations of an agreement to restrain trade," *Watson Carpet, 2011 U.S. App. LEXIS 12606, 2011 WL 2462833 at 1,"clearly" establishing the existence of a conspiracy. *2011 U.S. App. LEXIS 12606, [WL] at 4. Specifically, the Watson Carpet plaintiff alleged:

> In the spring or early summer of 1998, Defendant Rick McCormick met with Defendant Mohawk's Vice President and Senior Manager, Brad Matthaidess, and Mohawk sales representative Fred Woods, and devised a plan to run Plaintiff out of business and eliminate Plaintiff from the Market. As part of the plan to run Plaintiff out of business, Mohawk would refuse to sell carpet to Plaintiff. By shutting off Plaintiff's carpet supply, Plaintiff would be unable to service its homebuilder customer who used Mohawk carpet. Defendant [sic] McCormick, Matthaidess, and Woods specifically discussed their intention to run [29] Plaintiff out of business by shutting off his supply of Mohawk Carpet. Other management employees at Mohawk, such as Larry Brookshire and Dale Byers, also approved, participated in, and made efforts to cover up the plan to run Plaintiff out of business in this manner.

[*798] (Doc. No. 202-1 at 4 n.2). Because "[u]nlike the plaintiffs in Twombly and In re Travel Agent, Watson Carpet clearly . . . alleged an express agreement to restrain trade," the court foreclosed the defendants' attempts to substitute lawful explanations that defendants' actions were taken pursuant to an express agreement. *Watson Carpet, 2011 U.S. App. LEXIS 12606, 2011 WL 2462833 at 1. The plaintiff was required to allege "the defendants' agreement plausibly explains [conduct allegedly undertaken pursuant to the agreement], not that the agreement is the probable or exclusive explanation." Id. (emphasis original).

Thus, HN8[] to the extent Watson Carpet articulates a different standard than cases like Twombly and In re Travel Agent, this standard only differs as to the consequences that flow from the route a plaintiff chooses to follow when pleading an antitrust conspiracy while, of course, leaving the plausibility pleading standard unchanged. Watson Carpet [30] departs from Twombly and certain of its progeny because the existence of a well-pled conspiratorial agreement necessarily removes the need to determine whether "sufficient circumstantial evidence tending to exclude the possibility of independent conduct" had been presented. In re Travel Agent, 583 F.3d at 907. The Watson Carpet plaintiff pursued the path of direct allegations to establish its entitlement to relief instead of supplying solely inferential allegations, a well-established pleading dichotomy. See Eidson v. State of Tenn. Dep't of Children's Serv., 510 F.3d 631, 634 (6th Cir. 2007); Mezibov v. Allen, 411 F.3d 712, 716 (6th Cir. 2005). This distinction mirrors the "crucial question" for making out an antitrust claim, "whether [Defendants'] conduct toward [Plaintiffs] stemmed from independent decision or from an agreement, tacit or express." Theatre Enter., Inc. v. Paramount Distrib. Corp., 346 U.S. 537, 540, 74 S. Ct. 257, 98 L. Ed. 273 (1954) (emphasis added).

Therefore, in denying the Motions to Dismiss, this Court did not, and could not, infer the existence of an express agreement to restrain trade from purely circumstantial evidence of a conspiratorial agreement. [3] HN9[] An express conspiratorial agreement [31] cannot be established through circumstantial evidence, or those allegations that can only be connected to a conclusion of fact by inference. Rather, when considering the Motions to Dismiss, this Court drew inferences according to the Watson Carpet standard only from Complaint allegations that could, by themselves, support alternative lawful and unlawful readings. The detailed admissions of the Vitafoam employees support no such dueling inferences — a confession to participation in an antitrust conspiracy allows for no lawful explanation.

[3] This Court's prior Order, when read as a whole, makes clear this Court only looked to Watson Carpet to supply the standard by which inferences are to be drawn from circumstantial allegations of conduct taken pursuant to a conspiratorial agreement established by direct allegations. In other words, when a complaint sufficiently alleges an express conspiratorial agreement, a plaintiff need not worry about the varying inferences that may be drawn from the complaint's subsequent allegations so long as one such inference plausibly suggests consistency with the unlawful agreement. Watson Carpet only assists when assessing circumstantial allegations of conspiratorial [32] conduct, not the presence or absence of the antecedent agreement.

Alone, the Complaint paragraphs describing the alleged implementation and enforcement of the conspiracy would be circumstantial evidence of an agreement to fix prices. But cast in the context of an agreement whose existence has been confirmed by confessions of alleged conspirators, what Defendants urge this Court to accept as the harmless "[g]athering of [*799] competitive intelligence" (Doc. No. 202-1 at 5) is also consistent with admitted communications taken to coordinate and enforce collusive pricing levels as Plaintiffs allege. Because the latter, unlawful explanation is a plausible one, Plaintiffs need not foreclose alternative, lawful explanations for such conduct. *Watson Carpet, 2011 U.S. App. LEXIS 12606, 2011 WL 2462833 at 1.

Hinds County

Defendants also attack the Vitafoam admissions as, among other things, "hearsay" and only "remotely factual" (Doc. No. 202-1 at 8). Defendants seek to dispose of these allegations through application of their flawed version of the plausibility pleading standard and by reference to Hinds County, Miss. v. Wachovia Bank N.A. (Hinds County I), 620 F. Supp. 2d 499 (S.D.N.Y. 2009). The court in Hinds County I was confronted [33] with complaint allegations identifying "twelve individuals employed by the Provider Defendants who allegedly engaged in [conspiratorial discussions]," but refused to accept these allegations as true because to do so would "require the Court to assume the existence of the conspiracy." Id. at 518. The court was driven to this conclusion in large part by the fear that an antitrust claim could be pled "simply by obtaining the names and positions of a defendant's relevant employees." Id.

This approach is suspect for a number of reasons. Because a plaintiff could, without further basis, provide a listing of relevant defendant employees to bolster their antitrust claim, this view resolves any doubts as to the evidentiary support for such allegations against the plaintiff. Regardless of whether such evident skepticism was warranted in Hinds County I, a similar concern is manifestly inappropriate in this case. Plaintiffs specifically allege the evidentiary support for the allegations identifying individual Defendant employees and the manner in which each is alleged to have participated in an antitrust conspiracy: the interviews with Vitafoam executives conducted as part of Vitafoam's successful [34] application to the DOJ Corporate Leniency Program. This is not a case of a plaintiff having mined a defendant's employee directory for names of relevant officials to bolster an otherwise unsupportable Section 1 claim.

Defendants further attempt to draw parallels to other cases in which motions to dismiss were granted because a court determined that certain non-conclusory allegations could not plausibly suggest the existence of a conspiratorial agreeement. Defendants again offer up Hinds County I, which also featured a defendant that, like Vitafoam, had participated in the DOJ's Corporate Leniency Program. In that case, however, the complaint contained "no other information about [Bank of America's] participation in the DOJ's leniency program" beyond the mere fact of that defendant's participation. Id. at 515. As a result, the court in Hinds County I rejected the plaintiff's attempt to establish an industry-wide conspiracy based on one defendant's undescribed participation in the leniency program. Id. at 514-15. Here, not only do we have knowledge of a Defendant's participation in the program, but specific statements made by the Defendant's employees as a condition of participating in [35] the program.

References to In re Iowa Ready-Mix Concrete Antitrust Litig. (Iowa Ready-Mix), 768 F. Supp. 2d 961 (N.D. Iowa 2011) are also inapposite. There, despite the fact that one defendant entered into plea agreements admitting to conspiratorial conduct with three other companies, the court in Iowa Ready-Mix sustained defendants' motion to dismiss the complaint when no "larger picture from which inferences of a wider conspiracy can be drawn from guilty pleas to separate bilateral conspiracies" [*800] was presented. Id. at 975. There, the complaint baldly alleged that defendants "did those things which they combined and conspired to do, including, among other things, discussing, forming and implementing agreements to raise and maintain at artificially high levels of prices for Ready-Mix Concrete," an allegation that without more was not only conclusory, but tautological as well. Id. at 974.

Again, unlike Hinds County I, Plaintiffs here advance allegations beyond the mere fact of Vitafoam's participation in the Corporate Leniency Program, summarizing interviews with Vitafoam executives that, when accepted as true, both confirm the existence of a conspiratorial agreement and provide the level [36] of factual specificity absent in Hinds County I. As set forth above, these same allegations provide the "larger picture" absent in Iowa Ready-Mix.

As this Court has stated twice before, it is not the mere existence of governmental investigations of Defendants' potential participation in a conspiracy to fix prices and allocate customers in the flexible polyurethane foam market that leads this Court to conclude the Complaints pass muster under Federal Civil Rule 8. This Court certainly recognizes the pending governmental investigations could, or could not, yield indictments or guilty pleas, and in no way employs a presumption of civil liability when evaluating the Complaints. Instead, this Court employs the Federal Civil Rule 8 presumption of truth, accepting at this stage for purposes of the Motions to Dismiss all non-conclusory, factually supported allegations, including the allegations that the Vitafoam employees, their named conspiratorial correspondents, and all Defendants directly alleged to be members of the conspiracy as confirmed by the Vitafoam admissions, have entered an agreement to fix prices and allocate customers. Whether Plaintiffs can prove the existence of this agreement [37] at later stages in this litigation is a different conversation for another day.

Defendant FXI

Defendant FXI Innovations ("FXI") argues a June 12, 2009 asset sale eliminated any antitrust liability the predecessor firm may have incurred. Plaintiffs, in reply, challenge the ability of Bankruptcy Code Section 363(f) to erase successor liability, or, more specifically, whether the June 2009 Asset Purchase Agreement had the effect of erasing Plaintiffs' antitrust claims. This Court need not reach those arguments.

The Complaints specifically recount the Vitafoam employee's disclosure that each foam product price increase from 1999 until at least early 2010 — when the Vitafoam employees were interviewed — was a product of the price-fixing conspiracy (Doc. No. 46 at ¶ 94; Doc. No. 52 at ¶ 105). Moreover, the Complaints identify Vincent Bonaddio and Don Phillips, senior FXI personnel, as among those employees with whom the current Vitafoam vice president engaged in conspiratorial discussions throughout the Class Period, both before and after the June 2009 asset sale (e.g., Doc. No. 46 at ¶ 83; Doc. No. 52 at ¶ 95). Because the Complaints allege FXI participated in the conspiracy after the asset [38] sale, HN10[] a fundamental tenant of conspiracy law that holds one participating conspirator jointly liable for all his co-conspirators' prior acts renders immaterial any alleviation of antitrust liability resulting from the asset sale. See Coon v. Froehlich, 573 F. Supp. 918, 922 (S.D. Ohio 1983). Of course, if Plaintiffs fail to produce evidence of FXI's participation in the conspiracy after the asset sale, this Court will consider the question of the 363(f) sale's significance as part of a potential summary judgment motion.

[*801] Certification of Immediate Appeal

Defendants' Motions for Certification of Immediate Appeal apply only to the extent Defendants seek review of rulings contained in the July 19 Order. Therefore, Defendants' fraudulent concealment and standing arguments are excluded from these Motions. The remaining Motions for Certification of Immediate Appeal are denied for the same reasons described in this Court's Order denying Mohawk and Leggett & Platt's similar motion (Doc. No. 200).

Fraudulent Concealment

Defendants challenge Plaintiffs' claims of fraudulent concealment, claiming the Complaints fail to allege fraudulent concealment with the specificity required by Sixth Circuit precedent [39] (Doc. Nos. 203, 232-1). In response, Plaintiffs direct the Court to a number of paragraphs in the Complaints which they claim sufficiently allege specific acts of concealment (Doc. No. 227).

HN11[] In the Sixth Circuit, a plaintiff alleging fraudulent concealment must plead: "1) defendants concealed the conduct that constitutes the cause of action; 2) defendants' concealment prevented plaintiffs from discovering the cause of action within the limitations period; and 3) until discovery, plaintiffs exercised due diligence in trying to find out about the cause of action." Egerer v. Woodland Realty, Inc., 556 F.3d 415, 422 (6th Cir. 2009) (citing Pinney Dock & Transport Co. v. Penn Cent. Corp., 838 F.2d 1445, 1465 (6th Cir. 1988)).

As a threshold matter, in light of this Court's previous discussion of Defendants' flawed interpretation of the plausibility pleading standard, this Court concludes Plaintiffs pled more than the insufficient recital contained in Hinds County I (Doc. No. 90 at 48) (quoting Hinds County, 620 F. Supp. 2d at 521-22). Specifically, this Court is satisfied the Complaints sufficiently allege Defendants' concealment of the conspiracy (see, e.g., Doc. No. 46 at ¶¶ 64, 114, 118, [40] 135; Doc. No. 52 at ¶¶ 76, 125, 129, 147), and that because of Defendants' deceptive conduct Plaintiffs remained ignorant of the conspiracy throughout the limitations period (see, e.g., Doc. No. 46 at ¶¶ 130, 132-33; Doc. No. 52 at ¶¶ 142, 144-45).

Plaintiffs are incorrect, however, in asserting Defendants challenge only the first of the three-prong fraudulent concealment test (Doc. No. 227 at 3). Because this Court did not address fraudulent concealment in the July 19 Order (Doc. No. 191), this Court considers arguments contained in both the briefing material submitted in support of the Motions to Dismiss (Doc. No. 90; Doc. No. 138), as well as the memorandum submitted in support of Defendants' Motion for Reconsideration (Doc. No. 203). In the former briefing materials, Defendants plainly argue Plaintiffs offer only conclusory allegations for each essential portion of the test (Doc. No. 90 at 48; Doc. No. 138 at 19-21). Additional briefing material Defendants submitted after Plaintiffs filed their opposition to the present Motions reaffirms the completeness of Defendants' challenge (Doc. No. 232 at 2).

There remains, then, the question of whether the Complaints satisfy Pinney's due [41] diligence requirement. To counter Defendants' arguments that Plaintiffs must plead specific acts of diligence, Plaintiffs argue fraudulent concealment does not require them to "have investigated whether their suppliers were criminals" (Doc. No. 172 at 7), particularly when law enforcement authorities were likewise unaware of Defendants' alleged price-fixing and customer allocation conspiracy until late in the Class Period. The correct test, according to Plaintiffs, sees the concealment requirement satisfied when "the [*802] plaintiff shows that he neither knew, nor in the exercise of due diligence, could reasonably have known of the offense" (id.).

This Court notes a tension between the first two components of the fraudulent concealment test — the plaintiff's ignorance of the cause of action occasioned by the defendant's concealment —and the apparent requirement that an admittedly ignorant plaintiff must at the same time exercise diligence in discovering a concealed conspiracy. HN12[] When facts exist that should excite the suspicions of a reasonably diligent person, a plaintiff that fails to make proper inquiries to discover his cause of action will not see the limitations period tolled. By contrast, [42] when no information, actual or constructive, exists hinting at the fact of plaintiff's injury, the "reasonable diligence" requirement seems limited to denying tolling for careless plaintiffs. See In re Rubber Chemicals Antitrust Litig., 504 F. Supp. 2d 777, 788 (N.D. Cal. 2007) ("The requirement of diligence is only meaningful . . . when facts exist that would excite the inquiry of a reasonable person.") (quoting Conmar Corp. v. Mitsui & Co., 858 F.2d 499, 504 (9th Cir. 1988).

At bottom, the "reasonable diligence" component of the fraudulent concealment doctrine requires the plaintiff to "show[] that he neither knew nor, in the exercise of due diligence, could reasonably have known of the offense." Klehr v. A.O. Smith Corp., 521 U.S. 179, 195, 117 S. Ct. 1984, 138 L. Ed. 2d 373 (1997) (citing Pinney, 838 F.2d at 1465 and Conmar, 858 F.2d at 502). Thus, two paths exist to this showing. Plaintiff, after receiving information that causes him to inquire into defendant's actions, remains ignorant of his injury despite exercising reasonable diligence; or the plaintiff receives no hint of his claim, sees no need to actively inquire as to whether the defendant has wronged him, and timely files a claim after facts emerge disclosing [43] his cause of action.

This is so in the Sixth Circuit despite Pinney's reference to the need to plead and prove that a plaintiff exercised reasonable diligence in attempting to learn of his claim. Pinney, 838 F.2d at 1465, which Defendants imply requires specific acts of diligence. In Campbell v. Upjohn Co., 676 F.2d 1122 (6th Cir. 1982), the Sixth Circuit rejected Campbell's attempt to exempt from the "reasonable diligence" requirement cases of active concealment. Campbell alleged he was orally promised by Upjohn officials that by signing a merger agreement he would be provided a "backend payment" that for six years would permit Upjohn to buy Campbell's interest in the successor corporation on terms favorable to Campbell, and that Upjohn would also provide Campbell an incentive employment plan. Immediately after being confronted by Upjohn officials angered by an alleged misrepresentation on Campbell's resume, Campbell, apparently in a distressed state, signed a merger agreement containing neither the backend payment nor the incentive employment plan. For the next six years, from 1969 to 1975, Campbell failed to read the copy of the merger agreement provided him at the 1969 signing. [44] Campbell claimed he only discovered that, contrary to Upjohn's oral assurances, he would not receive the backend payment or incentive employment plan when the former came due in 1975

Because an "avalanche of evidence that would put all but the most indiligent plaintiffs on notice" existed, the court declined to toll the limitations period. Campbell, 676 F.2d at 1128. The court then observed:

> A rule of diligence will work no injustice in cases of active concealment. Active concealment by the defendant will be considered in determining the reasonableness of the behavior of the plaintiff under the circumstances. Actions such as would deceive a reasonably diligent [*803] plaintiff will toll the statute; but those plaintiffs who delay unreasonably in investigating circumstances that should put them on notice will be foreclosed from filing, once the statute has run. Indeed, in those cases analyzed above which cite the [Seventh Circuit rule tolling the limitations period in cases of active concealment until actual discovery by the plaintiff], the actions of defendants were such that even reasonably diligent plaintiffs would not have been put on notice. The difference between the two rules may prove [45] to be more illusory than real.

Id. Campbell rejected a view that would create two tolling doctrines, including an iteration of the earlier equitable tolling rule that did not require a plaintiff to prove actual diligence when a defendant had concealed all sources of reasonable suspicion, because the court deemed separate rules unnecessary. According to the court, "[the equitable tolling doctrine's exception] is redundant under our test based on hypothetical diligence." Id. (quoting State of Ohio v. Peterson, Lowry, Rall, Barber, & Ross, 651 F.2d 687, 695 n.16 (10th Cir. 1981) (emphasis added). If a hypothetical reasonably diligent plaintiff would not have been put on inquiry notice, the limitations period is tolled. See id.

With one exception, the cases Defendants cite in support of a rule requiring a plaintiff to plead and prove acts of diligence contained facts that, like in Campbell, should have put the plaintiff on inquiry notice. See Egerer, 556 F.3d at 423-24 (plaintiff insufficiently diligent for not inquiring about the particulars of a business agreement describing only potential benefit for business referrals and "estimated" title insurance costs); Pinney, 838 F.2d at 1477-78 [46] (ignored intraoffice memoranda urging certain plaintiff employees to pursue Interstate Commerce Commission complaints and antitrust claims against defendant demonstrates lack of diligence); Dayco Corp. v. Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co., 523 F.2d 389, 394 (6th Cir. 1975) (congressional hearings and a Federal Trade Commission suit that occurred more than a decade before plaintiff brought suit should have triggered further investigation by plaintiff); Gumbus v. United Food & Comm. Workers Intern. Union, 1995 U.S. App. LEXIS 523, 1995 WL 5935 (6th Cir. 1995) (six-month limitations period not tolled when plaintiffs, members of the defendant union, could have learned of the union's alleged misrepresentations by monitoring progress of a similar suit filed by plaintiffs' coworkers within the limitations period). Other cases contained factual circumstances in which the plaintiff could, and did, exercise reasonable diligence. See Hinds County II, 700 F. Supp. 2d at 400 (requirement that bidders certify their proposals were neither courtesy bids nor determined in concert with another bidder deemed sufficient to toll the limitations period) [4]; Michigan ex rel. Kelley v. McDonald Dairy Co., 905 F. Supp. 447, 453 (W.D. Mich. 1995) [47] (use of sealed bid process followed by detailed review of contracts satisfied diligence requirement).

[4] The court's decision in Hinds County II to toll the limitations period after earlier determining that plaintiffs failed to sufficiently plead fraudulent concealment, see Hinds County I, 620 F. Supp. 2d at 521-22, demonstrates this case is consistent with the "hypothetical diligence" standard embraced in Campbell. Unlike here, where Plaintiffs plausibly allege no reasonable methods for discovering the alleged conspiracy existed before 2010, the plaintiffs in Hinds County II employed reasonable certification requirements, albeit unsuccessfully, in an effort to prevent bid collusion.

The exception, of course, is In re Refrigerant Compressors Antitrust Litig., 795 F. Supp. 2d 647, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 63297, 2011 WL 2433392 (E.D. Mich. 2011). Like here, the Refrigerant plaintiffs alleged defendants entered [*804] into a price-fixing conspiracy affecting prices of refrigerant compressor products. The court found allegations that plaintiffs "diligently sought to protect themselves from unlawful activity, but it was not until on or about February 18, 2009 that plaintiffs and the Class were able to, or could have been able to, detect the conspiracy" [48] insufficient to satisfy the Dayco/Pinney due diligence requirement. *2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 63297, [WL] at 16. While the court's opinion does not recount in detail the nature of the alleged conspiracy, no additional allegations are presented suggesting what steps, if any, plaintiffs could have taken to discover the conspiracy prior to an announcement by one defendant that U.S., Brazilian, and European antitrust authorities were investigating defendant's potential violations of antitrust law.

Rather, the same alleged picture presented here existed in Refrigerants: plaintiffs purchasing products at supra-competitive prices resulting from the concealed price-fixing conspiracy. If, in fact, the conspiracy alleged in Refrigerants, when accepted as true, contained no aspects that should have triggered the plaintiff's suspicions, it makes little sense to require a plaintiff to inquire of each of his vendors whether a refrigerant compressor's price was determined by market forces or a concealed, multi-year, multi-member antitrust conspiracy. Pinney requires reasonable diligence, not constant cynicism.

For these reasons, this Court declines to follow Refrigerants. Instead, the more well-reasoned approach is contained in In [49] re Packaged Ice I. There, plaintiffs alleged a price-fixing conspiracy similar to that in Refrigerants and the instant case. But rather than requiring plaintiffs to plead additional acts of diligence aimed at rooting out the successfully concealed conspiracy, the court in In re Packaged Ice I accepted as true the allegation that before the execution of a March 2008 DOJ search warrant, no events did, or should have, excited the plaintiffs' suspicions. In re Packaged Ice, 723 F. Supp. 2d at 1000. The court then reserved for the factfinder the question of whether this allegation was true in fact. Id. at 1019.

Thus, while a factfinder in this case eventually may be called on to determine whether Defendants did conceal all sources of reasonable suspicion, this Court is satisfied that, when accepted as true, the Complaints establish that no facts existed that did or should have excited Plaintiffs' suspicions about alleged price-fixing and customer allocation conspiracy until the 2010 government raids. Courts, like Pinney, impose a "reasonable diligence" requirement to "encourage those victims [of concealed injuries] diligently to investigate and thereby to uncover unlawful activity." Klehr, 521 U.S. at 195. [50] HN13[] A plaintiff must provide specific allegations of the conspiracy's concealment and eventual discovery "so that [a] court may clearly see whether, by ordinary diligence, the discovery might not have been before made" and relief sought sooner. Pinney, 838 F.2d at 1465. This Court is satisfied Plaintiffs plausibly allege they could not have discovered the alleged conspiracy at an earlier time. And because this decision is not contrary to Pinney's requirement that, when possible, plaintiffs make reasonable inquiries after facts arousing a suspicion of unlawful activity, the fraudulent concealment doctrine's incentive structure is retained. Therefore, Plaintiffs sufficiently plead fraudulent concealment.

Indirect Purchaser Claims in Other States

Defendants next argue the Indirect Purchaser Plaintiffs lack standing to pursue claims under the laws of jurisdictions in which a named Indirect Purchaser Plaintiff does not reside, or to which such a Plaintiff is not sufficiently connected. Specifically, [*805] Defendants contend the Indirect Purchaser Plaintiffs may only pursue state-law claims in Arizona, California, Florida, Kansas, Massachusetts, Michigan, North Carolina, Tennessee, and Wisconsin.

In [51] reply, the Indirect Purchaser Plaintiffs urge this Court to defer standing considerations until after class certification. Invoking Amchem Prods., Inc. v. Windsor, 521 U.S. 591, 117 S. Ct. 2231, 138 L. Ed. 2d 689 (1997), and Ortiz v. Fibreboard Corp., 527 U.S. 815, 119 S. Ct. 2295, 144 L. Ed. 2d 715 (1999), the Indirect Purchaser Plaintiffs argue class certification is "logically antecedent" to standing considerations because their supposed standing deficiencies would not exist "but for" their attempt to represent a class of "all persons or entities [residing in certain states] . . . who purchased products containing flexible polyurethane foam which were manufactured, produced or supplied by Defendants or their unnamed co-conspirators from January 1, 1999 to the present" (Doc. No. 52 at ¶ 153). According to the Indirect Purchaser Plaintiffs, the named Plaintiffs have not asserted individual injury in the jurisdictions in which they do not reside, or to which they are not connected. Rather, in seeking to represent a class of plaintiffs similarly harmed, the named Indirect Purchaser Plaintiffs argue their injuries are typical of the absent class members they propose to represent. Therefore, because the named Indirect Purchaser Plaintiffs have sufficiently [52] pled individual standing (Doc. No. 52 at ¶¶ 7-20), this Court should defer consideration of the Indirect Purchaser Plaintiffs' ability to assert claims in a jurisdiction in which they do not reside, or to which they are not connected, until class certification.

Courts have reached differing conclusions on the "logically antecedent" exception to standing analysis. Some courts, examining the issue of standing before class certification, stated that Amchem and Ortiz only address class certification before class member standing in the unique context of a mandatory global class settlement. Those courts also noted Amchem and Ortiz focused on the standing of absent class members, not the named plaintiffs. See Easter v. Am. West Financial, 381 F.3d 948, 962 (9th Cir. 2004). Further, such courts argue the "logically antecedent" exception is but one example of the Supreme Court's preference for addressing non-constitutional grounds for disposition, i.e., class certification, before reaching a simultaneously-presented constitutional question like standing. See In re Potash Antitrust Litig., 667 F. Supp. 2d 907, 922 (N.D. Ill. 2009). By contrast, other courts contend when a proposed class contains [53] absent class members who, if certification is granted, would undoubtedly have standing to pursue claims under the laws of states in which a named plaintiff does not reside, class certification is "logically antecedent," and should be addressed first. See *Jepson v. Ticor Title Insur. Co., 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 53480, 2007 WL 2060856, 1 (W.D. Wash. 2007).

The Sixth Circuit has not directly reached the question of whether class certification must be considered before standing for claims arising under the statute of a state in which a named plaintiff is not resident, and district courts have pursued divergent paths to resolving such standing challenges. Compare In re Packaged Ice Antitrust Litig. (Packaged Ice II), 779 F. Supp. 2d 642, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 26048, 2011 WL 8911699 (E.D. Mich. 2011) (addressing standing before class certification), with Hovering v. Transnation Title Insur. Co., 545 F. Supp. 2d 662, 667 (E.D. Mich. 2008) (postponing standing analysis until class certification). However, a related Sixth Circuit decision suggests that after concluding a named plaintiff possesses individual standing to seek redress for the alleged injury he suffered, a court should defer consideration of a putative class's [*806] standing to assert state-law based claims until [54] class certification.

In Fallick v. Nationwide Mut. Insur. Co., 162 F.3d 410 (6th Cir. 1998), a Nationwide employee claimed his employer improperly denied him health care benefits through the application of a coverage exclusion in a manner inconsistent with the terms of his health care plan in violation of the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974 ("ERISA"), 29 U.S.C. § 2601 et seq. The plaintiff sought to represent a class comprising all participants in, or beneficiaries of, health benefit plans administered or insured by Nationwide who were likewise denied plan benefits in violation of ERISA. The district court did not reach the plaintiff's motion for class certification. Instead, the case was dismissed for lack of standing because the plaintiff sought to represent participants in, or beneficiaries of, plans other than his own. Fallick, 162 F.3d at 412.

The Sixth Circuit reversed, finding that after correctly concluding the plaintiff had individual standing to seek relief for himself, "the district court's analysis went astray." Id. at 421. Specifically, the circuit court concluded that once the named plaintiff's individual standing was established, his capacity to seek relief [55] for the absent members of the proposed class should have been determined according to the requirements of Federal Civil Rule 23, not a motion to dismiss, when the named plaintiff and absent class members's alleged injury had the same source: Nationwide's uniform misapplication of the reasonable and customary coverage exclusion. Id. at 423.

This Court would similarly confuse Article III standing and Federal Civil Rule 23's requirements if it would, at this stage, dismiss all state-law claims but those of the jurisdictions in which the named Indirect Purchaser Plaintiffs reside, or to which they are connected. Both the named Indirect Purchaser Plaintiffs and the absent members of the putative class identify the same general cause for their injuries: the alleged price-fixing and customer allocation conspiracy. The named Indirect Purchaser Plaintiffs merely seek relief for themselves under the statutes of the jurisdictions in which they reside, and seek similar relief for absent class members under the antitrust and consumer protection statutes of each such class member's state. Properly understood, neither plaintiff grouping seeks relief for themselves under the laws of a foreign state [56] jurisdiction. The ICAC contains a mixture of state-law claims only because the Indirect Purchaser Plaintiffs bring this suit as a proposed class action.

Therefore, since the supposed standing deficiencies Defendants identify arise because the Indirect Purchaser Plaintiffs invoke state antitrust and consumer protection statutes for each state from which putative class members are drawn, this Court will determine whether the Indirect Purchaser Plaintiffs may, as class representatives, advance their state-law claims at class certification. If this Court grants class certification, the resulting class will contain individuals with standing to pursue claims under each of the state law claims. In the alternative, if this Court denies class certification, the Indirect Purchaser Plaintiffs will be limited to pursue claims under the state antitrust and consumer protection statutes of the jurisdiction in which they reside. In either case, the supposed standing deficiencies will be resolved.

Motion for Stay

Finally, Defendants request a Stay of these proceedings pending resolution of the ongoing government investigations of a potential price-fixing and customer allocation conspiracy. Aside from [57] disagreeing with this Court's determination that the [*807] Complaints sufficiently plead an antitrust conspiracy, Defendants provide no additional authorities or factors to support their Motion for Stay. The parties have entered into an agreement with DOJ permitting depositions in this case beginning in late October, and document discovery can continue in the meantime. Plaintiffs have satisfied their pleading burden, and discovery will proceed consistent with the DOJ agreement.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

HN1[] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

When deciding a motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6, a court must accept as true all well-pleaded facts alleged in the complaint and draw all reasonable inferences in a plaintiff's favor. A complaint must contain sufficient factual matter, accepted as true, to state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face. Where a plaintiff has not nudged its claims across the line from conceivable to plausible, its complaint must be dismissed. That pleading standard applies in all civil actions.

HN2[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

The Donnelly Act declares every contract, agreement, arrangement, or combination whereby competition in the conduct of any business, trade or commerce is or may be restrained to be against public policy, illegal and void. N.Y. Gen. Bus. Law § 340. Despite that broad language, the Donnelly Act has long been understood to prohibit only unreasonable restraints on trade. Courts generally construe the Donnelly Act in accordance with its federal analogue, the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 et seq., upon which it was modeled. Indeed, the New York Court of Appeals has stated that the Donnelly Act--often called a 'Little Sherman Act--should generally be construed in light of federal precedent and given a different interpretation only where state policy, differences in the statutory language or the legislative history justify such a result.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

HN3[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Cartels & Horizontal Restraints

To plead a violation of the Donnelly Act, a plaintiff must allege that a defendant's conduct is anticompetitive under either the rule of reason or the per se rule. The accepted standard for evaluating most Donnelly Act claims is the rule of reason. That legal standard requires a court to weigh all of the circumstances of a case in deciding whether a restrictive practice should be prohibited as imposing an unreasonable restraint on competition. When applying the rule of reason, appropriate factors to take into account include specific information about the relevant business, the restraint's history, nature, and effect, and whether the businesses involved have market power. In addition to the rule of reason, there is also a rule of per se illegality for certain agreements or practices which because of their pernicious effect on competition and lack of any redeeming virtue are conclusively presumed to be unreasonable. For example, horizontal agreements among competitors to fix prices or divide markets have been deemed per se unlawful.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Sherman Act

HN4[] Vertical Restraints, Resale Price Maintenance

Vertical resale price maintenance (RPM) agreements were generally defined as agreements between a manufacturer and its distributors to set the minimum price at which distributors can sell the manufacturer's goods. Like horizontal RPM agreements, vertical RPM agreements were long treated as per se violations of § 1 of the Sherman Act. Some New York courts have also treated vertical RPM agreements as per se Donnelly Act violations. However, in 2007, the Dr. Miles decision was overruled by the Leegin decision, in which the United States Supreme Court abandoned the per se rule for vertical RPM agreements and instead applied the rule of reason to such claims.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > Price Fixing

HN5[] Vertical Restraints, Price Fixing

N.Y. Gen. Bus. Law § 369-a is entitled Price Fixing Prohibited and provides, any contract provision that purports to restrain a vendee of a commodity from reselling such a commodity at less than the price stipulated by the vendor or producer shall not be enforceable or actionable at law.

In the absence of any authority construing N.Y. Gen. Bus. Law § 369-a as relevant, much less controlling, with respect to New York antitrust law, a federal district court will declines to adopt such a view. Pleading a violation of § 369-a does not provide a means to establish per se liability under the Donnelly Act. Section 369-a does not render vertical resale price maintenance agreements illegal in New York.

While the Donnelly Act makes unreasonable price restraints unlawful, N.Y. Gen. Bus. Law § 369-a has the distinct aim of preventing parties from seeking the assistance of the courts to enforce those restraints.

Like the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 et seq., the Donnelly Act proscribes only concerted action in the form of a contract, agreement, arrangement, or combination. N.Y. Gen. Bus. Law § 340. Indeed, a manufacturer's independent, unilateral actions are outside the scope of the Donnelly Act. A manufacturer's independent acts to set minimum resale prices, without seeking agreement from its retailers, do not amount to a contract.

HN15[] Deceptive & Unfair Trade Practices, State Regulation

Under N.Y. Gen. Bus. Law § 349, deceptive acts or practices in the conduct of any business, trade, or commerce or in the furnishing of any service in New York State are hereby declared unlawful. Although violations of the statute are prosecuted by the New York Attorney General, N.Y. Gen. Bus. Law § 349(b)-(g), the statute was amended in 1980 to provide a private right of action for citizens who wish to recover damages or to enjoin an unlawful act or practice. *N.Y. Gen. Bus. HN16[] Deceptive & Unfair Trade Practices, State Regulation

To state a claim under N.Y. Gen. Bus. Law § 349(h), a plaintiff must show that a defendant has engaged in consumer-oriented conduct that is materially misleading and that plaintiff suffered injury as a result of the deceptive act or practice. A plaintiff alleging an injury that is indirect or derivative, such that it arises solely as a result of injuries sustained by another party, lacks standing to pursue a § 349 claim. However, entities other than consumers, such as business competitors, have been held to have standing to bring a claim so long as harm to the public at large is at issue.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Consumer Protection > Deceptive & Unfair Trade Practices > State Regulation

HN17[] Deceptive & Unfair Trade Practices, State Regulation

N.Y. Gen. Bus. Law § 369-b provides that any attempt by a manufacturer to limit its warranty or guarantee of merchandise solely for the reason that such merchandise is sold by a particular dealer or dealers will be void.

HN19[] Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

Neither N.Y. Gen. Bus. Law § 369-a nor § 369-b expressly provides for a private right of action. Absent an express private right of action, New York courts will only conclude that a private right of action may be fairly implied where: (1) the plaintiff is one of the class for whose particular benefit the statute was enacted; (2) recognition of a private right of action would promote the legislative purpose; and (3) creation of such a right would be consistent with the legislative scheme.

The legislative scheme embodied in Article 24-A of the General Business Law, where N.Y. Gen. Bus. Law §§ 369-a and 369-b are found, only envisions enforcement by the New York Attorney General, and does not refer to enforcement by private citizens. N.Y. Gen. Bus. Law §§ 369-e, 369-ee, and 369-eee. The Attorney General is also empowered to take action under N.Y. Executive Law § 63(12) against any person who demonstrates persistent fraud or illegality in the carrying on, conducting or transaction of business. Implying a private right of action under § 369-a would be inconsistent with that legislative scheme. Similarly, private enforcement under § 369-b is inconsistent with the legislature's chosen scheme of enforcing Article 24-A through actions by the Attorney General.

MEMORANDUM AND ORDER

NAOMI REICE BUCHWALD

UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE

Plaintiff Worldhomecenter.com, Inc. ("Plaintiff") brought this action against defendant KWC America, Inc. ("KWC") alleging violations of New York's antitrust law, N.Y. Gen. Bus. Law § 340, and consumer protection law, N.Y. Gen. Bus. Law § 349. Plaintiff also seeks declaratory and injunctive relief for alleged violations of N.Y. Gen. Bus. Law § 369-a and § 369-b. Defendant now moves to dismiss the action for failure to state a claim, pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(b)(6). For the reasons discussed below, the motion is granted.

BACKGROUND

Plaintiff is a New York corporation that sells home improvement products through its web sites, Homecenter.com and Supplyhouse.com, and by telephone. (Compl. ¶¶ 4; 6.) Defendant is a Georgia corporation that manufactures and sells faucets, plumbing accessories, and kitchen accessories to its [*2] exclusive distributors for resale to the public. (Compl. ¶¶ 5; 7.) This action was originally filed in the Supreme Court of the State of New York, County of New York, and was removed to this Court based on diversity of citizenship, pursuant to 28 U.S.C. §§ 1332, 1441(a).

Plaintiff purchases KWC's products directly from KWC and other distributors and offers them for resale to customers online. (Compl. ¶ 8.) According to the complaint, due to the low overhead associated with an Internet business, plaintiff is able to offer KWC's products at lower prices than "traditional display room retailers." (Id.)

KWC has instituted a policy known as the Internet Advertising Policy ("IAP") which provides, in pertinent part:

> KWC America has unilaterally determined that it will sell its products only to those accounts that . . . [d]o not use the Internet . . . to advertise KWC America products to the general public at a price that is more than twenty percent (20%) for KWC branded products and twenty-five percent (25%) for HANSA branded products below the list price set forth in the effective KWC and HANSA Price Books.

(Haller Decl. Ex. E. [1]) According to the IAP, this provision "appl[ies] to all levels/pages [*3] on a website, other than pages associated with an intent to purchase. Actual prices charged customers [sic] may be provided by telephone, e-mail response, and product purchase confirmation webpages or communications." (Id.) The IAP also specifies that "[t]his policy applies only to advertised prices and does not apply to actual resale prices." (Id.) Furthermore, the IAP states that "KWC America will terminate its business relationship with any account that violates this Policy." (Id.)

According to the complaint, KWC has refused to ship and fill orders submitted by plaintiff unless and until plaintiff complies with the IAP. (Compl. ¶ 15.) The complaint also states that plaintiff has "refus[ed] to agree to sell KWC's products at a fixed price" but does not indicate whether plaintiff has refused to comply with the IAP. (Compl. ¶ 16.)

In addition to adopting the IAP, KWC has posted a disclaimer on its website, KWCAmerica.com, concerning consumers who purchase products [*4] from unauthorized dealers. The disclaimer provides:

> [w]e cannot assist with problems that may occur from purchases from unauthorized channels, this includes online auctions and online purchases from dealers other than those listed in our Where to Buy. We require proof of purchase when processing warranty claims. This means: No Internet Selling, No Mail Order Sales, No Mass Merchants.

(Compl. Ex. B.) The disclaimer also states: "[i]f you purchase KWC/HANSA products on the internet, be advised: WE WILL NOT HONOR ANY WARRANTY CLAIMS ON PRODUCTS PURCHASED FROM UNAUTHORIZED INTERNET SELLERS." (Id.) According to the complaint, KWC has indicated that it will not honor warranties on KWC products sold by the plaintiff. (Compl. ¶ 26.)

DISCUSSION

I. Legal Standard

HN1[] When deciding a motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim pursuant to Rule 12(b)(6) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, the Court must accept as true all well-pleaded facts alleged in the complaint and draw all reasonable inferences in plaintiffs' favor. Kassner v. 2nd Ave. Delicatessen, Inc., 496 F.3d 229, 237 (2d Cir. 2007). A complaint must contain "sufficient factual matter, accepted as true, to state a claim to relief that [*5] is plausible on its face." Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 129 S. Ct. 1937, 1949, 173 L. Ed. 2d 868 (citing Bell Atl. Corp. v.

Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 570, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007)). Where a plaintiff has not "nudged [its] claims across the line from conceivable to plausible, [its] complaint must be dismissed." Twombly, 550 U.S. at 570. This pleading standard applies in "all civil actions." Iqbal, __ U.S. __, 129 S. Ct. at 1953.

II. Claims Asserted Against KWC

Plaintiff asserts four causes of action against KWC. We address each in turn.

A. Donnelly Act Claim

In its first cause of action, plaintiff alleges that KWC's policies constitute vertical price fixing in violation of New York's antitrust statute, the Donnelly Act. N.Y. Gen. Bus. Law § 340 et seq.

1. Legal Standard

HN2[] The Donnelly Act declares "every contract, agreement, arrangement, or combination whereby . . . competition . . . in the conduct of any business, trade or commerce . . . is or may be restrained . . . to be against public policy, illegal and void." N.Y. Gen. Bus. Law § 340. Despite this broad language, the Donnelly Act has long been understood to prohibit only 'unreasonable' restraints on trade. Anheuser-Busch, Inc. v. Abrams, 71 N.Y.2d 327, 333, 520 N.E.2d 535, 525 N.Y.S.2d 816, 819 (1988) [*6] (citing N. Pac. Ry. Co. v. United States, 356 U.S. 1, 5, 78 S. Ct. 514, 2 L. Ed. 2d 545 (1958)). Courts generally construe the Donnelly Act in accordance with its federal analogue, the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1 et seq., upon which it was modeled. See People v. Rattenni, 81 N.Y.2d 166, 171, 613 N.E.2d 155, 597 N.Y.S.2d 280, 283 (1993). Indeed, the New York Court of Appeals has stated that "the Donnelly Act — often called a 'Little Sherman Act' — should generally be construed in light of federal precedent and given a different interpretation only where State policy, differences in the statutory language or the legislative history justify such a result." Anheuser-Busch, Inc. v. Abrams, 71 N.Y.2d 327, 335, 520 N.E.2d 535, 525 N.Y.S.2d 816, 820 (1988).

HN3[] To plead a violation of the Donnelly Act, a plaintiff must allege that the defendant's conduct is anticompetitive under either the rule of reason or the per se rule. The accepted standard for evaluating most Donnelly Act claims is the rule of reason. Rattenni, 81 N.Y.2d at 171, 597 N.Y.S.2d at 283. This legal standard requires the court to weigh "all of the circumstances of a case in deciding whether a restrictive practice should be prohibited as imposing an unreasonable restraint on competition." Leegin Creative Leather Prods. v. PSKS, Inc., 551 U.S. 877, 907, 127 S. Ct. 2705, 168 L. Ed. 2d 623 (2007). [*7] When applying the rule of reason, "[a]ppropriate factors to take into account include specific information about the relevant business, [] the restraint's history, nature, and effect, [and] whether the businesses involved have market power." Id. at 885-86 (internal citations and quotations omitted).

In addition to the rule of reason, there is also a rule of per se illegality for "certain agreements or practices which because of their pernicious effect on competition and lack of any redeeming virtue are conclusively presumed to be unreasonable." N. Pac. Ry. Co. v. United States, 356 U.S. 1, 5, 78 S. Ct. 514, 2 L. Ed. 2d 545 (1958); Rattenni, 81 N.Y.2d at 171-72, 597 N.Y.S.2d at 283. For example, horizontal agreements among competitors to fix prices or divide markets have been deemed per se unlawful. Leegin, 551 U.S. at 886.

2. Applicability of the Per Se Rule

In the present case, plaintiff contends that the per se rule applies to its Donnelly Act claim whereas KWC argues that the rule of reason standard applies. Plaintiff's position is that the KWC's IAP is vertical resale price maintenance ("RPM") agreement. HN4[] Vertical RPM agreements are generally defined as agreements between a manufacturer and its distributors to set [*8] the minimum price at which distributors can sell the manufacturer's goods. Like horizontal RPM agreements, vertical RPM agreements were long treated as per se violations of § 1 of the Sherman Act. See Dr. Miles Medical Co. v. John D. Park & Sons Co., 220 U.S. 373, 31 S. Ct. 376, 55 L. Ed. 502 (1911). Some New York courts have also treated vertical RPM agreements as per se Donnelly Act violations. See, e.g., George C. Miller Brick Co. v. Stark Ceramics, Inc., 2 A.D.3d 1341, 770 N.Y.S.2d 235 (4th Dep't 2003). However, in 2007, Dr. Miles was overruled by the Supreme Court's decision in Leegin Creative Leather Products v. PSKS, Inc., which abandoned the per se rule for vertical RPM agreements and instead applied the rule of reason to such claims. 551 U.S. 877, 907, 127 S. Ct. 2705, 168 L. Ed. 2d 623 (2007).

After Leegin, it is uncertain whether New York courts evaluating vertical RPM claims brought under the Donnelly Act will continue to apply the per se rule or will follow Leegin in adopting the rule of reason. Specifically, the New York Court of Appeals has not addressed whether Leegin changes the rule applicable to vertical RPM claims under the Donnelly Act. However, at least two courts in this district have addressed this issue and concluded that [*9] the rule of reason now applies to such claims. See WorldHomeCenter.com, Inc. v. PLC Lighting, Inc., No. 10 Civ. 4092 (RJS), 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 136731 (S.D.N.Y. July 5, 2011); WorldHomeCenter.com, Inc. v. Franke Consumer Prods., Inc., No. 10 Civ. 3205 (BSJ), 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 67798, 2011 WL 2565284 (S.D.N.Y. June 22, 2011). Notably, both Franke and PLC Lighting were brought by the present plaintiff against other home accessories manufacturers with similar policies to those at issue here.

Here, plaintiff contends that Leegin is inapplicable because New York has a state policy that justifies a departure from federal precedent. Specifically, in support of its argument that the per se rule applies to its Donnelly Act claim of vertical RPM, plaintiff argues that: section 369-a of New York's General Business Law evidences a state policy in New York against price fixing; [2] this statute and its legislative history justify a divergence in the way state and federal antitrust laws apply to vertical RPM agreements; and therefore courts must treat such agreements as per se violations of the Donnelly Act, notwithstanding the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in Leegin.

We recognize this argument has its adherents. See Jay L. Himes [3], New York's Prohibition of Vertical Price-Fixing, N.Y.L.J. Jan. 29, 2008; Robert L. Hubbard [4], Protecting Consumers Post-Leegin, 22 Antitrust 41, 43 (2007). However, plaintiff's position has not been endorsed by any court of which we are aware. See, e.g., *WorldHomeCenter.com, Inc. v. PLC Lighting, Inc., 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 136731, 15 (S.D.N.Y. July 5, 2011) (HN6[] "In the absence of any authority construing § 369-a as relevant, much less controlling, with respect to New York antitrust law, the Court declines to adopt such a view"); *WorldHomeCenter.com, Inc. v. Franke Consumer Prods., Inc., No. 10 Civ. 3205 (BSJ), 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 67798, 2011 WL 2565284, at 4 (S.D.N.Y. June 22, 2011) (rejecting the theory "that pleading a violation of § 369-a provides a means to establish per se liability under the Donnelly Act"); State v. Tempur-Pedic Int'l, Inc., 30 Misc. 3d 986, 991, 916 N.Y.S.2d 900, 905 (Sup. Ct. N.Y. Cnty. Jan. 14, 2011) (rejecting [*11] the argument that § 369-a of the General Business Law renders vertical RPM agreements illegal in New York).

While we see no reason to depart from the decisions in PLC Lighting, Franke, and Tempur-Pedic that HN7[] the rule of reason is the standard applicable to a vertical RPM claim under the Donnelly Act, we are reluctant to reach the question of what standard a New York court would apply before we are satisfied that the complaint states a plausible claim under either standard. Because we conclude that the complaint does not sufficiently allege a Donnelly Act claim, we do not reach the issue of whether New York law will diverge from federal law post-Leegin. See R.R. Comm'n of Tex. v. Pullman Co., 312 U.S. 496, 499-500, 61 S. Ct. 643, 85 L. Ed. 971 (1941) ("[N]o matter

3. Adequacy of the Allegations

Plaintiff alleges that [*12] the IAP is a vertical RPM agreement because it "restrains price competition by purporting to disallow communication of sales below the fixed price." (Pl.'s Mem. Opp. 10.) KWC offers two reasons why its IAP is not a vertical RPM agreement: first, because it disallows communication only of advertised prices, not of resale prices; and second, because it is a unilateral policy, not an agreement. Indeed, the language of the IAP is unmistakably clear on each of these points:

> This Policy applies only to advertised prices and does not apply to actual resale prices
> This Policy is a unilateral statement of KWC America's preferences concerning the type of account to which KWC America chooses to distribute the products that are subject to the Policy. It is not the intent or purpose of this Policy to restrict, coerce, force or reach agreement with a retailer to charge a particular price for any KWC America product.

(Haller Decl. Ex. E.) Nonetheless, plaintiff contends, first, that there is no distinction between advertised and resale prices on the Internet, and second, that agreements exist between KWC and other distributors whose businesses are threatened by the plaintiff's Internet sales. We [*13] reject both of plaintiff's arguments for the reasons set forth herein and discuss them in turn.

a. Distinction Between Advertised and Resale Prices

First, plaintiff contends that a there is no distinction between advertised prices and resale prices on the Internet. Plaintiff's theory turns on a comparison to traditional brick-and-mortar retailers. Whereas a traditional brick-and-mortar retailer advertises to potential customers by "paying to post [] product prices elsewhere" and also communicates resale prices directly to existing customers who are present at the store, an Internet retailer may accomplish both of these goals simultaneously by posting a single price on its website. [5] Plaintiff asserts that this feature of Internet retail collapses the distinction between the price at which a product is advertised and the price at which it is sold.

At least one district court, in a case brought by the present plaintiff and decided prior to the Leegin [*14] decision, appears to have been persuaded by this reasoning. See Worldhomecenter.com, Inc. v. L.D. Kichler Co., No. 05 Civ. 3297 (DRH), 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 22496, 2007 WL 963206 (E.D.N.Y. March 28, 2007) (denying motion to dismiss Sherman Act claim that an internet minimum advertised price policy constitutes vertical price fixing). We, however, are not persuaded.

It may be true that in certain circumstances any means of communicating prices can also be a form of advertising. But the advertised prices on a website are not the only means an Internet retailer has at its disposal to communicate resale prices. Indeed, as Judge Jones recently stated:

> [u]nlike the prior cases cited by Plaintiff where an advertising policy was held to restrain prices, the [] policy here provides internet retailers with more than one way to communicate lower prices to clients, either by allowing customers to call or email for a price quote or by offering a coupon to be applied at checkout.

*WorldHomeCenter.com, Inc. v. Franke Consumer Prods., Inc., No. 10 Civ. 3205 (BSJ), 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 67798, 2011 WL 2565284, at 5 (S.D.N.Y. June 22, 2011).

[5] In the year 2011, we assume general familiarity with the basic notion that search engines locate and index webpages in order to present users with appropriate results to search queries, including queries for the prices of goods offered for sale.

That reasoning is equally applicable here. Like the policy at issue in Franke, KWC's IAP states that "[a]ctual prices charged [*15] customers may be provided by telephone, e-mail response, and product purchase confirmation webpages or communications." (Haller Decl. Ex. E.) By permitting these means of communicating actual resale prices to customers, KWC did not prevent plaintiff from selling its products at whatever price plaintiff wished, but only set a floor on the discount prices that plaintiff could advertise. See Campbell v. Austin Air Sys., Ltd., 423 F. Supp. 2d 61, 69-70 n.6 (W.D.N.Y. 2005) (holding HN8[] policy that "restricts only the minimum price for which a dealer could advertise on the Internet" and "explicitly states that a dealer may sell [] for any price" not to be vertical RPM agreement); *Blind Doctor, Inc. v. Hunter Douglas, Inc., No. C-04-2678 (MHP), 2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 18480, 2004 WL 1976562, at 2 & n.5 (N.D. Cal. Sept. 7, 2004) (HN9[] "Courts have long recognized that such advertising restrictions do not rise to the level of an antitrust violation").

Therefore, we conclude that HN10[] the IAP cannot be the basis of a vertical RPM claim because it does not restrain resale prices, but merely restricts advertising. Accordingly, the per se rule is inapplicable to plaintiff's claim. [6]

b. A Unilateral Policy is Not Evidence of an Agreement or Conspiracy

We next turn to whether the IAP is nonetheless a non-price restraint of competition in violation of the Donnelly Act. HN12[] The rule of reason is the standard applicable to vertical non-price restrictions. See Continental T.V., Inc. v. GTE Sylvania, Inc., 433 U.S. 36, 59, 97 S. Ct. 2549, 53 L. Ed. 2d 568 (1977).

HN13[] Like the Sherman Act, the Donnelly Act proscribes only concerted action in the form of a contract, agreement, arrangement, or combination. N.Y. Gen. Bus. Law § 340. Indeed, a manufacturer's independent, unilateral actions are outside the scope of the Donnelly Act. See [*17] State v. Mobil Oil Corp., 38 N.Y.2d 460, 464, 344 N.E.2d 357, 381 N.Y.S.2d 426, 428 (1976); see also Tempur-Pedic Int'l, 30 Misc. 3d at 994 ("A manufacturer's independent acts to set minimum resale prices, without seeking agreement from its retailers, do not amount to a contract.").

Plaintiff alleges that KWC has obtained agreements from its other distributors to adhere to the IAP (Compl. ¶ 33(a)), and that these agreements supply the requisite element of concerted action necessary to plead a Donnelly Act violation. KWC replies that plaintiff has not alleged any specific facts indicating the other distributors it refers to, the dates or places of any alleged agreements, or any actions taken to enforce them. Further, the IAP itself declares that it is a unilateral policy and that it is not intended to be an agreement. (Haller Decl. Ex. E.)

Plaintiff has failed to allege "enough factual matter (taken as true) to suggest that an agreement was made." Twombly, 550 U.S. at 556. Plaintiff appears to argue that we may infer the existence of agreements between KWC and other distributors because, without such agreements, the IAP would not be in KWC's own best interests. Thus, plaintiff asserts that there is a [*18] quid pro quo in which the IAP protects KWC's other dealers from Internet competition, and in exchange, these dealers agree to continue distributing KWC's products. However, specific factual allegations of such an arrangement are absent from the complaint and therefore plaintiff fails to state a plausible claim under the Donnelly Act.

Plaintiff's argument is also a non sequitur. While KWC has not offered a detailed explanation of its reasons for imposing the IAP, and is not obligated to do so, it may have reasonable justifications for its actions. For example, KWC may wish to encourage traditional distributors to present KWC products in display rooms where customers can view and touch sample fixtures, see demonstrations, or personally interact with knowledgeable employees. Absent an incentive to do so, these distributors may not think it worth the trouble of providing these benefits to customers, if their customers can then easily locate the same products advertised at lower prices on the Internet. Thus, KWC may have adopted the IAP to provide an incentive for display room distributors to continue devoting energy, expense, and floor space to KWC products. See United States v. Colgate & Co., 250 U.S. 300, 306-07, 39 S. Ct. 465, 63 L. Ed. 992, 1919 Dec. Comm'r Pat. 460 (1919) [*19] (recognizing the HN14[] "right of [a] trader or manufacturer engaged in an entirely private business, freely to exercise his own independent discretion as to parties with whom he will deal . . . [and] announce in advance the circumstances under which he will refuse to sell.").

[6] We note that, even if plaintiff were correct that the policy [*16] at issue constituted a vertical RPM agreement, we see little merit in plaintiff's theory that N.Y. Gen. Bus. Law § 369-a, which renders such agreements unenforceable but not illegal, is a reason to treat them as per se violations of the Donnelly Act. To the contrary, HN11[] while the Donnelly Act makes unreasonable price restraints unlawful, section 369-a has the distinct aim of preventing parties from seeking the assistance of the courts to enforce these restraints. As there is no suggestion that KWC has ever sought to conscript the courts into enforcing the IAP, § 369-a is not relevant here.

It does not follow from any of the above that an agreement between KWC and these distributors has taken place, or that KWC's actions are contrary to its own interests. The mere observation that the IAP is mutually beneficial to KWC and its non-Internet distributors is not an adequate factual allegation of agreement or conspiracy. Nor does plaintiff allege additional facts from which an agreement could be inferred. Thus, plaintiff has failed to adequately allege a violation of the Donnelly Act. [7] Consequently, the Donnelly Act claim must be dismissed.

Finally, because we conclude that plaintiff's fails to state a claim under the Donnelly Act, we need not reach defendant's suggestion that the Sherman Act preempts the Donnelly Act.

B. Deceptive Practices Claim

In its second cause of action, plaintiff alleges that KWC's warranty disclaimer is a false and deceptive trade practice that violates New York's consumer protection law, N.Y. Gen. Bus. Law § 349.

HN15[] Under section 349, "deceptive acts or practices in the conduct of any business, trade, or commerce or in the furnishing of any service in this state are hereby declared unlawful." N.Y. Gen. Bus. Law § 349. Although violations of this statute are prosecuted by the New York Attorney General, see N.Y. Gen. Bus. Law § 349(b)-(g), the statute was amended in 1980 to provide a private right of action for citizens who wish to recover damages or to enjoin an unlawful act or practice. See N.Y. Gen. Bus. Law § 349(h).

HN16[] To state a claim under § 349(h), a plaintiff must show that the defendant has engaged in: (1) consumer-oriented conduct that is (2) materially [*21] misleading and that (3) plaintiff suffered injury as a result of the deceptive act or practice. City of New York v. Smokes-Spirits.com, Inc., 12 N.Y.3d 616, 621, 911 N.E.2d 834, 883 N.Y.S.2d 772, 776 (2009). A plaintiff alleging an injury that is indirect or derivative, such that it arises solely as a result of injuries sustained by another party, lacks standing to pursue a § 349 claim. Id. at 622. (citing Blue Cross & Blue Shield of N.J., Inc. v. Philip Morris USA, Inc., 3 N.Y.3d 200, 207, 818 N.E.2d 1140, 785 N.Y.S.2d 399, 404 (2004)). However, entities other than consumers, such as business competitors, have been held to have standing to bring a claim "so long as harm to the public at large is at issue." Securitron Magnalock Corp. v. Schnabolk, 65 F.3d 256, 264 (2d Cir. 1995).

Plaintiff alleges that KWC's stated policy of refusing to honor warranties for customers of Internet resellers is a deceptive practice. The allegation is not that plaintiff's customers are deceived if they purchase KWC products unaware that their warranties will not be honored; rather, it is that those customers who read KWC's warranty policy are deceived as to their rights under the law in New York, specificallyHN17[] § 369-b of the General Business [*22] Law, which provides that any attempt by a manufacturer to limit its warranty or guarantee of merchandise "solely for the reason that such merchandise is sold by a particular dealer or dealers" will be void. Plaintiff's theory

[7] Even assuming plaintiff had adequately alleged an agreement, there have been no factual allegations regarding the relevant market, the actual effects of the IAP on this market, or the market power of the parties, all of which would be necessary to support a rule of reason analysis. Thus, even if KWC had structured the IAP as an agreement with distributors, something it explicitly [*20] did not do, the factual allegations in the complaint would still be insufficient to state a Donnelly Act violation under the rule of reason standard.

appears to be that if KWC actually refused to honor the warranty of a New York consumer because that consumer purchased KWC products from plaintiff on the Internet, then KWC's refusal would be void under § 369-b, and therefore it is deceptive for KWC's policy to assert that KWC will take actions which are void under the law.

Plaintiff's effort to backdoor a HN18[] § 369-b claim for which there is no private right of action, see discussion infra, into a deceptive practices claim, while clever, is unavailing. Plaintiff has not identified any harm to itself or to the public at large which might afford it standing to assert competitive harms, see Securitron Magnalock, 65 F.3d at 264, and therefore has failed to satisfy the third element of a deceptive practices claim, sufferance of an injury. Specifically, plaintiff has not even alleged the existence of any consumer whose warranty claim has been denied by KWC as a result of having purchased a KWC product from plaintiff, an [*23] occurrence of which it would presumably be aware. Thus, any claim of "loss of profits, loss of established business dealings and prospective business opportunities, and damage to reputation" is purely speculative. (Compl. ¶ 41.) In fact, some consumers may care nothing at all about warranties and simply want to locate KWC products at the lowest possible resale price. Astute consumers might even infer that unauthorized sellers on the Internet have the best deals available since the cost of warranty coverage is not built into their prices, thereby benefitting plaintiff's business.

Nor is it clear that KWC's warranty policy would violate § 369-b. This is because KWC's blanket disclaimer of warranties for all products sold by "unauthorized Internet sellers" may be too general to fit within the statutory language of § 369-b, which voids warranty disclaimers for products "sold by a particular dealer or dealers." N.Y. Gen. Bus. Law § 369-b (emphasis added).

Therefore, for these several reasons, plaintiff's deceptive practices claim must be dismissed.

C. Declaratory and Injunctive Relief

In its third and fourth causes of action, plaintiff seeks declaratory and injunctive relief. Specifically, [*24] plaintiff seeks a declaratory judgment that KWC's IAP is "void and unenforceable" under section 369-a of the General Business Law and that KWC's warranty policy "constitutes a violation of" section 369-b of the General Business Law. (Compl. ¶ 45-46.) In addition, plaintiff asks the Court to enjoin KWC from taking any actions to enforce either policy.

As a threshold matter, HN19[] neither section 369-a nor section 369-b expressly provides for a private right of action. See N.Y. Gen. Bus. Law §§ 369-a, 369-b. Absent an express private right of action, New York courts will only conclude that "a private right of action may be fairly implied" where: (1) the plaintiff is one of the class for whose particular benefit the statute was enacted; (2) recognition of a private right of action would promote the legislative purpose; and (3) creation of such a right would be consistent with the legislative scheme. See Sheehy v. Big Flats Community Day, 73 N.Y.2d 629, 633, 541 N.E.2d 18, 543 N.Y.S.2d 18, 20 (1989).

Notably, plaintiff has failed to address the factors we must consider in order to find an implied private right of action. Nonetheless, it is apparent that plaintiff is not among the class for whose benefit § 369-a [*25] was enacted. HN20[] Section 369-a applies only to contract provisions which restrain resale prices, yet plaintiff was not a party to any contract regarding prices, but rather was merely subjected to a unilateral policy restricting advertising. In addition, HN21[] the legislative scheme embodied in Article 24-A of the General Business Law, where § 369-a and § 369-b are found, only envisions enforcement by the New York Attorney General, and does not refer to enforcement by private citizens. See, e.g., N.Y. Gen. Bus. Law § 369-e, § 369-ee, § 369-eee. The Attorney General is also empowered to take action under N.Y. Executive Law § 63(12) against any person who demonstrates "persistent fraud or illegality in the carrying on, conducting or transaction of business." We conclude that implying a private right of action would be inconsistent with this legislative scheme, and plaintiff may not pursue declaratory or injunctive relief under § 369-a.

Similarly, private enforcement under § 369-b is inconsistent with the legislature's chosen scheme of enforcing Article 24-A through actions by the Attorney General, and thus we conclude that no private right of action can be implied under § 369-b.

In addition, even [*26] if a private right of action were found to exist under § 369-b, the plaintiff has not demonstrated any injury caused by KWC's warranty policy. HN22[] A plaintiff seeking declaratory relief must suffer an 'injury in fact.' See Lujan v. Defenders of Wildlife, 504 U.S. 555, 560, 112 S. Ct. 2130, 119 L. Ed. 2d 351 (1992). To meet the requirement of injury in fact, a plaintiff must demonstrate "an invasion of a legally protected interest which is (a) concrete and particularized and (b) actual or imminent, not conjectural or hypothetical." Id. Plaintiff's memorandum of law fails to address this issue in any meaningful way. Nonetheless, the same failure to identify any injury from KWC's warranty policy, which required dismissal of plaintiff's deceptive practices claim under § 349(h), also demonstrates that plaintiff lacks standing to challenge the validity of the policy directly under § 369-b.

Finally, because we conclude that plaintiff has not alleged facts supporting irreparable harm or a likelihood of success on the merits, it is clear that plaintiff is not entitled to injunctive relief.

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, defendant's motion to dismiss the complaint is granted.

When deciding a Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss, the court accepts all well-pleaded facts as true, viewing them in the light most favorable to the plaintiff. To survive a Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6) motion, the plaintiff must plead enough facts to state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face. The plaintiff's obligation is to provide the grounds of his entitlement to relief and requires more than mere labels and conclusions. The allegations must be sufficient to raise a right to relief above the speculative level; the pleading must contain something more than a statement of facts that merely creates a suspicion of a legally cognizable right of action. If a plaintiff fails to allege facts sufficient to nudge his claims across the line from conceivable to plausible, his complaint must be dismissed.

Section 1 (15 U.S.C.S. § 1) of the Sherman Act provides that every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several states, or with foreign nations, is hereby declared to be illegal. 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 (1997). A claim of unreasonable restraint of trade under § 1, requires proof of three elements: (1) the defendants engaged in a conspiracy; (2) the conspiracy had the effect of restraining trade; and (3) trade was restrained in the relevant market. The plaintiff has the burden of proving each element of a § 1 violation.

HN3[] Sherman Act, Claims

The United States Supreme Court held that a parent company and its wholly owned subsidiary are legally incapable of conspiring in restraint of trade under § 1 (15 U.S.C.S. § 1) of the Sherman Act. That holding was based on the court's conclusion that a corporate parent and its wholly owned corporate subsidiary are mere instrumentalities of a single manufacturing-merchandizing unit which makes it impossible for them to have conspired in a manner forbidden by the Sherman Act. In essence, they must be viewed as a single enterprise. In so holding, the Court rejected the intra-enterprise conspiracy doctrine, which allowed recovery under the Sherman Act for the coordinated acts of a parent and its subsidiary. The Court expressed, as the basis for its decision, the unity of purpose shared by the parent and its subsidiary as follows: A parent and its wholly owned subsidiary have a complete unity of interest. Their objectives are common, not disparate; their general corporate actions are guided or determined not by two separate corporate consciousnesses, but one. With or without a formal agreement, the subsidiary acts for the benefit of the parent, its sole shareholder. If a parent and a wholly owned subsidiary do agree to a course of action, there is no sudden joining of economic resources that had previously served different interests, and there is no justification for § 1 scrutiny.

HN4[] Conspiracy to Monopolize, State Regulation

La. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 51:122 of the Louisiana Antitrust law deems every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce illegal. The Louisiana legislature has amended La. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 51:122 to include La. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 51:122(C) which provides that: For purposes of La. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 51:122, a parent corporation, limited liability company, partnership, or partnership-in-commendam is not capable of conspiring with any subsidiary that it controls, and each such controlled subsidiary is not capable of conspiring with any other wholly owned subsidiary controlled by the same common parent. Thus, as is the case under federal law, La. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 51:122(C) clearly precludes any cause of action based on an alleged conspiracy in restraint of trade or commerce between wholly owned subsidiaries of a single parent.

Civil Procedure > ... > In Rem & Personal Jurisdiction > In Personam Actions > Due Process

Civil Procedure > ... > In Rem & Personal Jurisdiction > In Personam Actions > Long Arm Jurisdiction

HN5[] In Personam Actions, Due Process

Where a defendant challenges personal jurisdiction, the party seeking to invoke the power of the court bears the burden of proving that jurisdiction exists. In addition to the pleadings, the court may consider affidavits and discovery materials. The court must resolve all undisputed facts submitted by the plaintiff, as well as all facts contested in the affidavits, in favor of jurisdiction. To exercise personal jurisdiction over a nonresident defendant, two requirements must be met. First, the nonresident defendant must be amenable to service of process under the forum state's jurisdictional long-arm statute. Second, the assertion of in personam jurisdiction must be consistent with the Fourteenth Amendment's Due Process Clause. Louisiana's long-arm statute was specifically amended to permit service of process to the extent permitted by the due process clause.

Civil Procedure > ... > Jurisdiction > In Rem & Personal Jurisdiction > Constitutional Limits

Civil Procedure > ... > In Rem & Personal Jurisdiction > In Personam Actions > Due Process

HN6[] In Rem & Personal Jurisdiction, Constitutional Limits

The Due Process Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment guarantees that no federal court may assert in personam jurisdiction of a non-resident defendant unless the defendant has meaningful contacts, ties, or relations with the forum state. Jurisdiction may be general or specific. Where a defendant has continuous and systematic general business contacts with the forum state, the court may exercise general jurisdiction over any action brought against that defendant. Where contacts are less pervasive, the court may still exercise specific jurisdiction in a suit arising out of or related to the defendant's contacts with the forum.

Civil Procedure > ... > Jurisdiction > In Rem & Personal Jurisdiction > Constitutional Limits

Civil Procedure > ... > In Rem & Personal Jurisdiction > In Personam Actions > Minimum Contacts

HN7[] In Rem & Personal Jurisdiction, Constitutional Limits

A federal court may satisfy the constitutional requirements for specific jurisdiction by a showing that the defendant has minimum contacts with the forum state such that imposing a judgment would not offend traditional notions of fair play and substantial justice. The United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit has consolidated the personal jurisdiction analysis into a three-step inquiry: (1) whether the defendant has minimum contacts with the forum state; (2) whether the plaintiff's cause of action arises out of or results from the defendant's forum-related contacts; and (3) whether the exercise of personal jurisdiction is fair and reasonable. To determine whether a foreign business has minimum contacts with the forum state, federal courts must identify some act whereby the business purposely availed itself of the privilege of conducting activities there, thus invoking the benefits and protections of its laws. The defendant's conduct must show that it reasonably anticipates being haled into court" in the forum state. Only after the plaintiff establishes minimum contacts, does the burden shift to the foreign defendant to show that the assertion of jurisdiction is unfair and unreasonable.

REPORT AND RECOMMENDATION

Pending before the undersigned for report and recommendation are the Motion to Dismiss for lack of personal jurisdiction and for failure to state a claim for relief which can be granted filed by defendant, ACTIV International, Inc. ("ACTIV") [rec. doc. 9] and the Motion to Dismiss for failure to state a claim for which relief can be granted filed by defendant Flavor and Food Ingredients, Inc. d/b/a Summit Hill Flavors ("Summit Hill"). [rec. doc. 10]. Plaintiff, PCI International Consultants, Inc. ("PCI") has filed no Opposition to either Motion, and the delays for opposition have run. For those reasons set out below, it is recommended that the Motions to Dismiss [rec. docs. 9 and 10] be GRANTED.

BACKGROUND

PCI, an international distributor of food [*2] products and food ingredient products, is a Louisiana corporation with its principal place of business in Louisiana. [rec. doc. 1, ¶ 6 and 4]. Summit Hill, a manufacturer of food products and food ingredients, is a New Jersey corporation with its principal place of business in New Jersey. [Id. at ¶ 8 and 5(a)]. ACTIV(a competitor of PCI), is an international distributor of food products and food ingredient products. ACTIV is a Washington corporation with its principal place of business in Washington. [Id. at ¶ 7 and 5(b)]. Plaintiff invokes this court's diversity jurisdiction. [Id. at ¶ 1].

PCI alleges that, pursuant to two Exclusive Distributorship Agreements, it contracted with Summit Hill to be the exclusive distributor of Summit Hill food flavoring products in Brazil and the territories of North, Central and South America, Europe and Asia. [Id. at 10, 13 and 1]. The Agreements provide that they are to be "construed and enforced in accordance with the Laws of the State of Louisiana venue Lafayette." [rec. doc. 1-2, pg. 8].

The Complaint and record before this court demonstrate that Summit Hill and ACTIV are wholly owned subsidiaries of a single parent company, Vamara Holdings, S.A. [*3] [rec. doc. 1, ¶, 7 and 25; rec. doc. 8].

In the instant action, PCI seeks damages from Summit Hill and ACTIV on four theories of recovery, each denominated as a separate "Count". Count I alleges that Summit Hill breached its contract with PCI that made PCI the exclusive distributor of Summit Hill food flavoring products. [Id. at ¶ 15-18]. Count II alleges a conspiracy between PCI and ACTIV in violation of federal and Louisiana state antitrust laws. [Id. at ¶ 19-20]. Count III alleges a violation of the Louisiana Unfair Trade Practices Act based on the allegations in Counts 1 and II. [Id. at ¶ 21-23] Count IV alleges a claim for intentional misrepresentation and detrimental reliance against Summit Hill, that is, that Summit Hill made intentional misrepresentations to PCI and that PCI relied on these misrepresentations to its detriment. [Id. at ¶ 24-26].

The record reveals that ACTIV was not a party to the Exclusive Distributorship Agreements at issue in this case. The record further reveals that ACTIV is not licensed to do business in Louisiana, has no office located in Louisiana, has no employees located in Louisiana, has no assets in Louisiana, does not manufacture, purchase or sell [*4] products or services in Louisiana, does not solicit customers in Louisiana, does not advertise in Louisiana, and has not contracted or performed any business in Louisiana. [rec. doc. 9-2].

LAW AND ANALYSIS

Motion to Dismiss Count II - Federal and Louisiana State Law Antitrust Claims

Both Summit Hill and ACTIV seek dismissal of Count II of the Complaint, the sole claim asserted under federal law, for failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted. Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6). Count II alleges a conspiracy between PCI and ACTIV to "replace PCI as a distributor of [Summit Hill] products", thereby constituting an unreasonable restraint of trade and competition in violation of the Sherman Act (15 U.S.C. § 1, et seq.) and Louisiana antitrust laws. (La. R.S. 51:122). The defendants argue that because Summit Hill and ACTIV are wholly owned subsidiaries of a single parent company, Vamara Holdings, S.A., that, as a matter of law, they are legally incapable of conspiring with one another. For the following reasons, the defendants' argument is well taken.

HN1[] When deciding a Rule 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss, "[t]he 'court accepts all well-pleaded facts as true, viewing them in the light most favorable [*5] to the plaintiff.' " In re Katrina Canal Breaches Litig., 495 F.3d 191, 205 (5th Cir. 2007) (internal quotations omitted) quoting Martin K. Eby Constr. Co. v. Dallas Area Rapid Transit, 369 F.3d 464, 467 (5th Cir. 2004).

To survive a Rule 12(b)(6) motion, the plaintiff must plead "enough facts to state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face." Bell Atlantic Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544,127 S.Ct. 1955, 1974, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007). [1] The plaintiff's obligation is "to provide the 'grounds' of his 'entitlement to relief' [and] requires more than mere labels and conclusions." Id. at 1964-1965 citing Papasan, 478 U.S. at 286. The allegations must be sufficient "to raise a right to relief above the speculative level"; "the pleading must contain something more . . . than . . . a statement of facts that merely creates a suspicion [of] a legally cognizable right of action." Id. at 1965 citing 5 C. Wright & A. Miller, Federal Practice and Procedure § 1216, pp. 235-236 (3d ed. 2004). If a plaintiff fails to allege facts sufficient to "nudge[] [his] claims across the line from conceivable to plausible, [his] complaint must be dismissed." Id. at 1974.

HN2[] Section 1 of the Sherman Act provides that "[e]very contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, is hereby declared to be illegal." 15 U.S.C. § 1 (1997).

A claim of unreasonable restraint of trade under Section 1, requires proof of three elements: (1) the defendants engaged in a conspiracy, (2) the conspiracy had the effect of restraining trade, and (3) trade was restrained in the relevant market. Apani Southwest, Inc. v. Coca-Cola Enterprises, Inc., 300 F.3d 620, 627 (5th Cir. 2002) citing Spectators' Comm. Network Inc. v. Colonial Country Club, 253 F.3d 215, 220 (5th Cir. 2001) and Johnson v. Hosp. Corp. of Am., 95 F.3d 383, 392 (5th Cir. 1996). The plaintiff has the burden of proving each element of a Section 1 [*7] violation. Id. citing Jefferson Parish Hosp. Dist. No. 2, v. Hyde, 466 U.S. 2, 29, 104 S.Ct. 1551, 80 L.Ed.2d 2 (1984).

PCI cannot satisfy the first element, that is, that the defendants, Summit Hill and ACTIV, engaged in a conspiracy. In Copperweld Corp. v. Independence Tube Corp., 467 U.S. 752, 104 S.Ct. 2731, 81 L.Ed.2d 628 (1984), HN3[] the United States Supreme Court held that a parent company and its wholly owned subsidiary are legally incapable of conspiring in restraint of trade under § 1 of the Sherman Act. This holding was based on the Court's conclusion that a corporate parent and its wholly owned corporate subsidiary are "mere instrumentalities of a single manufacturing-merchandizing unit [which] makes it impossible for them to have conspired in a manner forbidden by the Sherman Act." Id. at 2738. In essence, they must be viewed as a "single enterprise." Id. at 2741. In so holding, the Court rejected the "intra-enterprise conspiracy doctrine," which allowed recovery under the Sherman Act for the coordinated acts of a parent and its subsidiary.

The Court expressed, as the basis for its decision, the unity of purpose shared by the parent and its subsidiary as follows:

[1] The Twombly Court explicitly disavowed the oft-quoted [*6] generally accepted rule in Conley v. Gibson, 355 U.S. 41, 45-46, 78 S.Ct. 99, 2 L.Ed.2d 80(1957) that " a complaint should not be dismissed for failure to state a claim unless it appears beyond doubt that the plaintiff can prove no set of facts in support of his claim which would entitle him to relief." Twombly, 127 S.Ct. at 1968-69 quoting Conley, 355 U.S. at 45-46.

> A parent and [*8] its wholly owned subsidiary have a complete unity of interest. Their objectives are common, not disparate; their general corporate actions are guided or determined not by two separate corporate consciousnesses, but one. They are not unlike a multiple team of horses drawing a vehicle under the control of a single driver. With or without a formal "agreement," the subsidiary acts for the benefit of the parent, its sole shareholder. If a parent and a wholly owned subsidiary do "agree" to a course of action, there is no sudden joining of economic resources that had previously served different interests, and there is no justification for § 1 scrutiny.

Id. at 2741-2742 (internal citations and quotations omitted).

The Fifth Circuit has expanded the reasoning in Copperweld to preclude § 1 liability based on an alleged conspiracy "between a corporation wholly owned by another corporation, two corporations wholly owned by a third corporation or two corporations wholly owned by three persons who together manage all affairs of the two corporations." Century Oil Tool, Inc. v. Production Specialties, Inc., 737 F.2d 1316, 1317 (5th Cir. 1984). This holding recognizes that, despite the form or structure [*9] of the enterprise, for purposes of the Sherman Act, such entities always have "a unity of purpose or a common design." Id. Moreover, relying on Copperweld, the Fifth Circuit has expressly held that two wholly owned subsidiaries of a common parent corporation cannot conspire with one another to violate § 1 of the Sherman Act because they share a common purpose. Hood v. Tenneco Texas Life Insurance Co., 739 F.2d 1012, 1015 (5th Cir. 1984).

Accordingly, in light of Copperweld, Century Oil Tool and Hood, PCI cannot state a claim under § 1 of the Sherman Act against Summit Hill and ACTIV as they are legally incapable of conspiring with one another against PCI to violate the Act.

Likewise, PCI fails to state a claim for relief against Summit Hill and ACTIV under HN4[] § 51:122 of the Louisiana Antitrust law which deems "[e]very contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce" illegal. The Louisiana legislature has codified the holding of Copperweld, Century Oil Tool and Hood by amending § 122 to include the following subsection:

> C. For purposes of this Title, a parent corporation, limited liability company, partnership, or partnership-in-commendam [*10] is not capable of conspiring with any subsidiary that it controls, and each such controlled subsidiary is not capable of conspiring with any other wholly owned subsidiary controlled by the same common parent.

La. R.S. § 51:122 as amended by Acts 2003, No. 888, § 1. [2]

Thus, as is the case under federal law, sub-section C of section 122 clearly precludes any cause of action based on an alleged conspiracy in restraint of trade or commerce between wholly owned subsidiaries of a single parent. Accordingly, PCI's Louisiana state law antitrust claim against Summit Hill and ACTIV must be dismissed as they are legally incapable of conspiring with each [*11] other in violation of `§ 122.

ACTIV's Motion to Dismiss for Lack of Personal Jurisdiction

ACTIV also seeks dismissal of all of PCI's claims asserted against it for lack of personal jurisdiction. [3] Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(2).

[2] Prior to amendment, the Louisiana Supreme Court held that a parent company and its subsidiary were capable of conspiring in restraint of trade under § 122 of the Louisiana antitrust law, contrary to the United States Supreme Court's interpretation and in spite of virtually identical state and federal statutes. See Free v. Abbott Laboratories, Inc., 176 F.3d 298, 299 (5th Cir. 1999) citing Louisiana Power and Light Co. v. United Gas Pipe Line Co., 493 So.2d 1149, 1158-1160 (La.1986). However, the 2003 amendment legislatively overruled that holding.

HN5[] Where a defendant challenges personal jurisdiction, the party seeking to invoke the power of the court bears the burden of proving that jurisdiction exists. Luv n' care, Ltd. v. Insta-Mix, Inc., 438 F.3d 465, 469 (5th Cir. 2006) citing Wyatt v. Kaplan, 686 F.2d 276, 280 (5th Cir. 1982). In addition to the pleadings, the court may consider affidavits and discovery materials. Colwell v. Realty Investments, Inc. v. Triple T Inns of Arizona, Inc., 785 F.2d 1330, 1333 (5th Cir. 1986); Jobe v. ATR Marketing, Inc., 87 F.3d 751, 753 (5th Cir. 1996). This court must resolve all undisputed facts submitted by the plaintiff, as well as all facts contested in the affidavits, in favor of jurisdiction. Luv n' care, Ltd., 438 F.3d at 469.

To exercise personal jurisdiction over a nonresident defendant, two requirements must be met. Dickson Marine Incorporated v. Panalpina, Inc., 179 F.3d 331, 336 (5th Cir. 1999). First, the nonresident defendant must be amenable [*13] to service of process under the forum State's jurisdictional long-arm statute. Id. Second, the assertion of in personam jurisdiction must be consistent with the Fourteenth Amendment's Due Process Clause. Id. Louisiana's long-arm statute was specifically amended to permit service of process to the extent permitted by the due process clause. Id.; Dalton v. R & W Marine, Inc., 897 F.2d 1359, 1361 (5th Cir. 1990). The statutory and constitutional inquiries thus merge. Dalton, 897 F.2d at 1361.

HN6[] The Due Process Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment guarantees that no federal court may assert in personam jurisdiction of a non-resident defendant unless the defendant has meaningful "contacts, ties, or relations" with the forum state. Luv n' care, Ltd., 438 F.3d at 469 quoting Int'l Shoe Co. v. Washington, 326 U.S. 310, 319, 66 S.Ct. 154, 90 L.Ed. 95 (1945). Jurisdiction may be general or specific. Id. Where a defendant has "continuous and systematic general business contacts" with the forum state, the court may exercise "general" jurisdiction over any action brought against that defendant. Id. quoting Helicopteros Nacionales de Colombia, S.A. v. Hall, 466 U.S. 408, 414-415, 104 S.Ct. 1868, 80 L.Ed.2d 404 (1984). [*14] Where contacts are less pervasive, the court may still exercise "specific" jurisdiction "in a suit arising out of or related to the defendant's contacts with the forum." Id. quoting Helicopteros Nacionales, 466 U.S. at 414.

HN7[] A federal court may satisfy the constitutional requirements for specific jurisdiction by a showing that the defendant has "minimum contacts" with the forum state such that imposing a judgment would not "offend traditional notions of fair play and substantial justice." Id. quoting Int'l Shoe, 326 U.S. at 316. The Fifth Circuit has consolidated the personal jurisdiction analysis into a three-step inquiry: (1) whether the defendant has minimum contacts with the forum state; (2) whether the plaintiff's cause of action arises out of or results from the defendant's forum-related contacts; and (3) whether the exercise of personal jurisdiction is fair and reasonable. Id. citing Nuovo Pignone v. STORMAN ASIA M/V, 310 F.3d 374, 378 (5th Cir.2002) citing Burger King Corp. v. Rudzewicz, 471 U.S. 462, 474, 105 S.Ct. 2174, 85 L.Ed.2d 528 (1985).

To determine whether a foreign business has "minimum contacts" with the forum state, federal courts must identify some act whereby the [*15] business "purposely avail[ed] itself of the privilege of conducting activities [there], thus invoking the benefits and protections of its laws." Id. at 469-470 citing Hanson v. Denckla, 357 U.S. 235, 253, 78 S.Ct. 1228, 2 L.Ed.2d 1283 (1958). The defendant's conduct must show that it "reasonably anticipates being haled into court" in the forum state. Id. at 470 citing World Wide Volkswagen Corp. v. Woodson, 444 U.S. 286, 297, 100 S.Ct. 559, 62 L.Ed.2d 490 (1980).

[3] As set forth above, PCI has failed to state a claim under the Sherman Act, the sole federal claim asserted herein. Therefore, this action is properly before this court solely on the basis of diversity jurisdiction, the only jurisdictional basis asserted by the plaintiff. Accordingly, dismissal for lack of personal jurisdiction is appropriate.

However, even if this were not the case, ACTIV alternatively seeks dismissal for failure to state a claim under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6). As set forth above, Count II is subject to dismissal for failure to state a claim upon which relief may be granted. Moreover, as argued by ACTIV, plaintiff's remaining state law claims are subject to dismissal for failure to state claims for relief. ACTIV was not a party to the agreements which are the subject of the PCI's breach of contract claim asserted in Count I. With respect to Count III, plaintiff has failed to set forth an unfair trade practice claim against ACTIV based on the alleged [*12] breach of agreements to which it was not a signatory or the antitrust claims asserted in Count II. Moreover, with respect to Count IV, plaintiff fails to state any acts of misrepresentation by ACTIV upon which PCI may have relied to its detriment.

Only after the plaintiff establishes minimum contacts, does the burden shift to the foreign defendant to show that the assertion of jurisdiction is unfair and unreasonable. Nuovo Pignone, 310 F.3d at 382 citing Wien Air Alaska, Inc. v. Brandt, 195 F.3d 208, 215 (5th Cir.1999); see also Luv n' Care, Ltd., 438 F.3d at 473.

In this case, there are no allegations, nor has there been any showing by PCI, that ACTIV has engaged in "continuous and systematic general business contacts" with the State of Louisiana for the exercise of "general" personal jurisdiction over ACTIV. Luv n' care, Ltd., 438 F.3d at 469.

Moreover, there are no allegations, nor has there been any showing by PCI, that ACTIV has the requisite "minimum contacts" with [*16] the State of Louisiana for the exercise of "specific" personal jurisdiction over ACTIV. Id. Indeed, there are no allegations, and there has been no showing by PCI, of any act whereby ACTIV "purposely avail[ed] itself of the privilege of conducting activities [in Louisiana], thus invoking the benefits and protections of [Louisiana's] laws." Id. at 469-470. The allegations, pleadings and evidence presented by ACTIV to this court demonstrates the opposite — that ACTIV has no contacts whatsoever with this State. ACTIV could not therefore "reasonably anticipate[] being haled into court" in Louisiana. Id. at 470 citing World Wide Volkswagen Corp. v. Woodson, 444 U.S. 286, 297, 100 S.Ct. 559, 62 L.Ed.2d 490 (1980). To do so would "offend traditional notions of fair play and substantial justice." Id. quoting Int'l Shoe, 326 U.S. at 316.

In sum, in the absence of any allegations or evidence demonstrating the requisite contacts between ACTIV and the State of Louisiana, PCI has failed to satisfy its burden of proving that personal jurisdiction over ACTIV exists in this case.

For these reasons, ACTIV's Motion to Dismiss for lack of personal jurisdiction should be granted.

CONCLUSION

Based on the foregoing, [*17] it is recommended that the Motion to Dismiss for lack of personal jurisdiction and for failure to state a claim filed by defendant, ACTIV International, Inc. [rec. doc. 9] and the Motion to Dismiss for failure to state a claim filed by defendant Flavor and Food Ingredients, Inc. d/b/a Summit Hill Flavors [rec. doc. 10] be GRANTED. Accordingly, it is recommended that plaintiff's federal and state antitrust claims asserted in Count II of the Complaint be dismissed with prejudice, and that all of plaintiff's remaining claims against ACTIV be dismissed without prejudice.

Under the provisions of 28 U.S.C. § 636(b)(1)(C) and Fed. R. Civ. P. 72(b), parties aggrieved by this recommendation have fourteen (14) days from service of this report and recommendation to file specific, written objections with the clerk of court. A party may respond to another party's objections within fourteen (14) days after being served with a copy thereof.

Failure to file written objections to the proposed factual finding and/or the proposed legal conclusions reflected in this Report and Recommendation within fourteen (14) days following the date of its service, or within the time frame authorized by Fed. R. Civ. P. 6(b), [*18] shall bar an aggrieved party from attacking either the factual findings or the legal conclusions accepted by the District Court, except upon grounds of plain error. See Douglas v. United Services Automobile Association, 79 F.3d 1415 (5th Cir. 1996).

Counsel are directed to furnish a courtesy copy of any objections or responses to the District Judge at the time of filing.

Signed this 16th day of September, 2011, at Lafayette, Louisiana.

Patent Law > ... > Defenses > Inequitable Conduct > Elements

HN1[] Inequitable Conduct, Elements

To prevail on a claim of inequitable conduct, an accused infringer must prove that the patentee acted with the specific intent to deceive the Patent and Trademark Office (PTO). Where an inventor is accused of withholding known information, the accused infringer must demonstrate that the inventor knew of the reference, knew that it was material, and made a deliberate decision to withhold it. Courts should not infer specific intent based solely on the fact that a reference is deemed highly material: Proving that the applicant knew of a reference, should have known of its materiality, and decided not to submit it to the PTO does not prove specific intent to deceive.

Patent Law > ... > Defenses > Inequitable Conduct > Burdens of Proof

Patent Law > ... > Defenses > Inequitable Conduct > Elements

HN2[] Inequitable Conduct, Burdens of Proof

The materiality required to establish inequitable conduct is but-for materiality. When an applicant fails to disclose prior art to the Patent and Trademark Office (PTO), that prior art is but-for material if the PTO would not have allowed a claim had it been aware of the undisclosed prior art. If a claim is properly invalidated in district court based on the deliberately withheld reference, then that reference is necessarily material. However, an accused infringer might be able to demonstrate materiality even where it cannot establish invalidity. Because invalidity challenges involve patent claims that have received the imprimatur of the patent office, an accused infringer must establish that the claims at issue are invalid under a clear and convincing evidence standard. In contrast, the inequitable conduct doctrine implicates the patent prosecution process itself. Therefore, when analyzing materiality, courts must examine the prior art under the same standards that a patent officer would have relied upon in deciding whether to allow the claim; a withheld reference is material if it would make a claim unpatentable by a preponderance of the evidence when the claim language is given its broadest reasonable interpretation.

Patent Law > ... > Defenses > Inequitable Conduct > Elements

HN3[] Inequitable Conduct, Elements

There is an exception to the rule requiring but-for materiality where the accused infringer can show that the inventor engaged in affirmative egregious misconduct. Neither mere nondisclosure of prior art references to the Patent and Trademark Office nor failure to mention prior art references in an affidavit constitutes affirmative egregious misconduct.

Patent Law > ... > Defenses > Inequitable Conduct > Burdens of Proof

Patent Law > ... > Defenses > Inequitable Conduct > Elements

HN4[] Inequitable Conduct, Burdens of Proof

To meet the clear and convincing evidence standard for establishing inequitable conduct, the specific intent to deceive must be the single most reasonable inference able to be drawn from the evidence.

Patent Law > Originality > Joint & Sole Inventorship

HN5[] Originality, Joint & Sole Inventorship

In arriving at conception the inventor may consider and adopt ideas and materials derived from many sources such as a suggestion from an employee, or hired consultant, so long as he maintains intellectual domination of the work of making the invention down to the successful testing, selecting or rejecting as he goes, even if such suggestion or material proves to be the key that unlocks his problem. Manual Patent Examining P. § 21.37.01.

Patent Law > Originality > Joint & Sole Inventorship

HN6[] Originality, Joint & Sole Inventorship

A joint inventor must contribute in some significant manner to the conception or reduction to practice and make a contribution to the claimed invention that is not insignificant in quality, when that contribution is measured against the dimension of the full invention.

Patent Law > ... > Defenses > Inequitable Conduct > Elements

HN7[] Inequitable Conduct, Elements

The focus of the inequitable conduct inquiry is the inventor's conduct before the patent examiner; often this misconduct will persist during litigation before a court, but it is the affirmative conduct before the patent examiner that serves as the basis for the affirmative egregious misconduct exception to the "but for" materiality requirement. Because inequitable conduct renders an entire patent (or even a patent family) unenforceable, as a general rule, the doctrine should only be applied in instances where the patentee's misconduct resulted in the unfair benefit of receiving an unwarranted claim.

Patent Law > ... > Specifications > Description Requirement > General Overview

HN8[] Specifications, Description Requirement

A patent application is entitled to the benefit of the filing date of an earlier filed application only if the disclosure of the earlier application provides support for the claims of the later application, as required by 35 U.S.C.S. § 112. To satisfy the written description requirement the disclosure of the prior application must convey with reasonable clarity to those skilled in the art that, as of the filing date sought, the inventor was in possession of the invention. A disclosure in a parent application that merely renders the later-claimed invention obvious is not sufficient to meet the written description requirement; the disclosure must describe the claimed invention with all its limitations.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Intellectual Property > General Overview

HN9[] Regulated Practices, Intellectual Property

Generally patent protection provides an exception to the strictures of antitrust law. However, a patentee who brings an infringement suit may be subject to antitrust liability for the anticompetitive effects of that suit if the alleged infringer (the antitrust plaintiff) proves (1) that the asserted patent was obtained through knowing and willful fraud or (2) that the infringement suit was a mere sham to cover what is actually nothing more than an attempt to interfere directly with the business relationships of a competitor.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Bad Faith, Fraud & Nonuse > Fraud

HN10[] Bad Faith, Fraud & Nonuse, Fraud

Proof that a patentee obtained a patent by knowingly and willfully misrepresenting facts to the Patent Office is sufficient to strip a patentee of its protections from antitrust laws.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Bad Faith, Fraud & Nonuse > Fraud

Evidence > Burdens of Proof > Clear & Convincing Proof

HN11[] Bad Faith, Fraud & Nonuse, Fraud

The heightened standard of materiality in a Walker Process case requires that the patent would have issued but for the patent examiner's justifiable reliance on the patentee's misrepresentation or omission. Walker Process fraud is a variant of common law fraud and that the elements of common law fraud include: (1) a representation of a material fact, (2) the falsity of that representation, and (3) the intent to deceive or, at least, a state of mind so reckless as to the consequences that it is held to be the equivalent of intent. The intent to deceive must be established by clear and convincing evidence.

HN12[] Regulated Practices, Intellectual Property

The sham litigation theory allows accused infringers to bring antitrust claims where it can be shown that (1) the patent infringement lawsuit is objectively meritless such that no reasonable litigant could expect success on the merits and (2) the baseless lawsuit conceals an attempt to interfere directly with the business relationships of a competitor.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Intellectual Property > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > State Regulation > General Overview

HN13[] Regulated Practices, Intellectual Property

State law unfair competition claims are preempted to the extent that they are founded solely on misconduct before the Patent and Trademark Office.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Bad Faith, Fraud & Nonuse > Bad Faith

HN14[] Bad Faith, Fraud & Nonuse, Bad Faith

Bad faith enforcement of a patent, if alleged as a basis for state tort liability, may bring the state tort claim outside the ambit of federal preemption. The test for bad faith in this context is substantially the same as the test for determining whether bad faith enforcement supports a sham litigation theory of antitrust liability. The bad faith standard has objective and subjective components. The objective component requires a showing that the infringement allegations are objectively baseless. The subjective component relates to a showing that the patentee in enforcing the patent demonstrated subjective bad faith.

Patent Law > Infringement Actions > Summary Judgment > General Overview

HN15[] Infringement Actions, Summary Judgment

In order to allow summary judgment of non-infringement, the court must conclude that when all of the reasonable inferences are drawn in a patentee's favor, no reasonable fact-finder could find that the accused product either literally or through equivalents infringes the asserted claims of the patents.

HN16[] Elements, Equivalence

Under the doctrine of equivalents, an accused device or process infringes a patent if it contains elements equivalent to each claimed element of the patented invention. Infringement may be found under the doctrine of equivalents if every limitation of the asserted claim, or its equivalent, is found in the accused subject matter, where an equivalent differs from the claimed limitation only insubstantially. In addressing this question a fact-finder is not bound by any particular linguistic formulation of what makes any single element equivalent to another, but special vigilance must be paid to ensure against allowing the concept of equivalence to eliminate completely any such elements.

Patent Law > Infringement Actions > Doctrine of Equivalents > Equivalence Limits

Patent Law > Infringement Actions > Doctrine of Equivalents > Fact & Law Issues

HN17[] Doctrine of Equivalents, Equivalence Limits

The all-elements rule or the all-limitations rule is the judicial counterweight to the doctrine of equivalents. The all-elements rule forecloses resort to the doctrine of equivalents when on the facts or theories presented in a case, a limitation would be read completely out of the claim - i.e., the limitation would be effectively removed or vitiated. Each element contained in a patent claim is deemed material to defining the scope of the patented invention, and thus the doctrine of equivalents must be applied to individual elements of the claim, not to the invention as a whole. Whereas generally the question of equivalence is a question of fact, the application of the all-elements rule is a question of law for the court.

HN18[] Elements, Equivalence

The doctrine of equivalents does not require a one-to-one correspondence between components of the accused device and the claimed invention. An accused device may infringe under the doctrine of equivalents even though a combination of its components performs a function performed by a single element in the patented invention as long as it contains every limitation of its equivalent. Similarly, equivalency can also exist when separate claim limitations are combined into a single component of the accused device.

Patent Law > Infringement Actions > Claim Interpretation > Aids & Extrinsic Evidence

HN19[] Claim Interpretation, Aids & Extrinsic Evidence

Claim terms cannot be narrowed by reference to the written description or prosecution history unless the language of the claims invites reference to those sources.

Opinion

[*166] AMENDED FINDINGS OF FACT, CONCLUSIONS OF LAW, AND ORDER

Saris, U.S.D.J.

Introduction

The patents in-suit concern technology used to scan and create highly accurate digital models of three-dimensional physical objects. Metris U.S.A., INC., Metris N.V., Metris IPR N.V., and 3D Scanners Ltd.[1] ("Metris") hold U.S. Patents No. 6,611,617 (the "'617 patent") and 7,313,264 (the "'264 patent"). These patents protect inventions related to the use of an optical laser scanner attached to a six-jointed articulated arm that a user can manipulate around objects in order to image them from various perspectives. The development of the inventions is described in detail in my memorandum and order dated May 4, 2011, with which this Court assumes familiarity. See generally, Metris v. Faro Techs., 768 F. Supp. 2d 338 (D. Mass. 2011).

On May 4, 2011, after a five-day evidentiary [4] hearing, this Court found that the '617 patent was unenforceable due to inequitable conduct before the patent office. As to the '264 patent, the Court found that Faro had "failed to meet its steep burden in establishing by clear and convincing evidence" that the named inventor of the '264 patent, Stephen Crampton, intended to deceive the patent office by failing to disclose information that was material to that patent.

[1] Metris is now called Nikon Metrology N.V. The Court will continue to refer to the plaintiffs collectively as "Metris."

Since the issuance of that opinion, the Federal Circuit has caused a sea-change in the law of inequitable conduct. See Therasense, Inc. v. Becton, Dickinson & Co., Nos. 2008-1511, 2008-1512, 2008-1513, 2008-1514, 2008-1595, 649 F.3d 1276, 2011 U.S. App. LEXIS 10590, 2011 WL 2028255 (Fed. Cir. May 25, 2011). Here the Court reexamines its prior holdings in light of the change in law and new arguments related to the '264 patent. Because the Court finds that the challenge to both patents can no longer succeed under the more stringent standard for proving inequitable conduct, the Court vacates its prior finding that the '617 patent is invalid and addresses Faro's motions for summary judgment of noninfringement and Metris's motions for summary judgment on Faro's antitrust and state unfair competition claims.

I. Inequitable [5] Conduct

A. Therasense v. Becton Dickinson and Co.

In Therasense, the Federal Circuit signaled the dramatic constriction of the inequitable conduct doctrine, which it described as a "plagu[e] not only on the courts but also the entire patent system." *2011 U.S. App. LEXIS 10590, [WL] at 9. The court "tight[ened] the standards for finding both intent and materiality in order to redirect a doctrine that has been overused to the detriment of the public." Id.

With regard to intent, Therasense held that HN1[] "to prevail on a claim of inequitable conduct the accused infringer must prove that the patentee acted with the specific intent to deceive the PTO." Id. Specifically relevant to this case, where an inventor is accused of withholding known information, the accused infringer must demonstrate that the inventor "knew of the reference, knew that it was material, and made a deliberate decision to withhold it." Id. The court also warned that lower courts should not infer specific intent based solely on the fact that a reference is deemed highly material: "Proving that the applicant knew of a reference, should have known of its materiality, and decided not [*167] to submit it to the PTO does not prove specific intent to deceive." *2011 U.S. App. LEXIS 10590, [WL] at 10 [6] (emphasis added).

The court also raised the bar for showing that a reference is material. Under the new legal standard, HN2[] "the materiality required to establish inequitable conduct is but-for materiality. When an applicant fails to disclose prior art to the PTO, that prior art is but-for material if the PTO would not have allowed a claim had it been aware of the undisclosed prior art." *2011 U.S. App. LEXIS 10590, [WL] at 11.

The court recognized how the changed standard created overlap between the question of inequitable conduct and invalidity: "[I]f a claim is properly invalidated in district court based on the deliberately withheld reference, then that reference is necessarily material. . . ." Id. However, an accused infringer might be able to demonstrate materiality even where it cannot establish invalidity. Because invalidity challenges involve patent claims that have received the imprimatur of the patent office, an accused infringer must establish that the claims at issue are invalid under a clear and convincing evidence standard. Microsoft Corp. v. i4i Ltd. P'ship, 131 S.Ct. 2238, 2242, 180 L. Ed. 2d 131 (2011); but see id. at 2251 ("[N]ew evidence supporting an invalidity defense may 'carry more weight' in an infringement action [7] than evidence previously considered by the PTO."). In contrast, the inequitable conduct doctrine implicates the patent prosecution process itself. Therefore, when analyzing materiality, courts must examine the prior art under the same standards that a patent officer would have relied upon in deciding whether to allow the claim; a withheld reference is material if it would make a claim unpatentable by a preponderance of the evidence when the claim language is given its broadest reasonable interpretation. See *Therasense, 2011 U.S. App. LEXIS 10590, 2011 WL 2028255, at 11 (citing MPEP §§ 706 & 2111).

The court also allowed HN3[] an exception to the rule requiring but-for materiality where the accused infringer can show that the inventor engaged in "affirmative egregious misconduct." The court reiterated, however, that "neither mere nondisclosure of prior art references to the PTO nor failure to mention prior art references in an affidavit constitutes affirmative egregious misconduct." *2011 U.S. App. LEXIS 10590, [WL] at 12.

B. '617 patent

1. Sync and Trigger

With regard to the '617 patent, I found that the inventor Stephen Crampton intended to deceive the patent office by withholding information about Faro arms and their triggering abilities from the [8] patent examiner. Therasense does not affect that conclusion. See 2011 U.S. App. LEXIS 10590, [WL] at *10 (HN4[] "[T]o meet the clear and convincing evidence standard, the specific intent to deceive must be the single most reasonable inference able to be drawn from the evidence." (internal quotation marks and citation omitted)).

My findings of materiality, however, have been cast to dust. With regard to non-disclosed materials bearing on inventorship, I observed that "the inventorship issue here is not-clear cut. [There are] reasons why a patent examiner might not have concluded that Faro should have been among the named inventors of the '617 patent, namely the fact that, in theory, the sync and trigger technology could operate on arms that did not use the Caliper 3D software or the specific hardware in place on the Faro arm." Metris, 768 F. Supp. 2d at 359.

Upon consideration of the evidence in light of the new standard for finding inequitable conduct, I conclude that Faro has [*168] not established that the undisclosed information would have altered the patent examiner's finding of inventorship. It is true that at the time of the '617 patent application Faro had produced the only triggerable arm and software that allowed the [9] arm and its position calculator to record position data contemporaneously with the sending of a synchronization signal. See Metris, 768 F. Supp. 2d at 356-60. However, MPEP regulations, which a patent examiner would rely upon in issuing a patent, explain:

> HN5[] "'In arriving at ... conception [the inventor] may consider and adopt ideas and materials derived from many sources ... [such as] a suggestion from an employee, or hired consultant ... so long as he maintains intellectual domination of the work of making the invention down to the successful testing, selecting or rejecting as he goes...even if such suggestion [or material] proves to be the key that unlocks his problem.'"

MPEP § 21.37.01 (quoting Morse v. Porter, 155 USPQ 280, 283 (Bd. Pat. Inter. 1965)). Based on the evidence presented at trial, I conclude that Crampton maintained intellectual domination of the project throughout his communications with Faro. In fact, the evidence showed that in July 1996, Crampton sent a fax to Faro explicating that in order "to get the most accuracy from the Faro arm we need to trigger it exactly when our sensor records a stripe." (Def's Ex. 21.) He then went on to ask specific questions about how [10] to execute the trigger function on a Faro arm. (Id.) This document is perhaps more relevant to the core of the sync and trigger invention than any other evidence in the record and demonstrates that even after the initial creation of the Data Creator, Crampton maintained control over the pursuit of a solution to the timing problems created by the integration of a laser scanner and a manually operated movable arm.

The question of joint-inventorship is closer. Under the pre-Therasense standard, I found Faro's prolonged and substantial relationship to Crampton, which Crampton never disclosed to the patent office, to be information that a reasonable patent officer would consider important in making a determination about who should be named as inventors. But, under the post-Therasense standard, Faro has not met its burden of proving that the patent would not have been issued to Crampton alone if information about Faro's collaboration had been disclosed. See Metris, 768 F. Supp. 2d at 358. Importantly, even if Faro could show that it "perform[ed]. . . part of the task which produces the invention," through the triggerable arm and the Caliper 3D software, it never produced evidence that it, [11] or any of its employees, "ever ha[d] 'a firm and definite idea' of the claimed combination as a whole." Ethicon, Inc. v. U.S. Surgical Corp., 135 F.3d 1456, 1460 (Fed. Cir. 1998); see also Nartron Corp. v. Schukra U.S.A. Inc., 558 F.3d 1352, 1356 (Fed. Cir. 2009). In this case, the claim at issue included not only the ability to trigger the arm at a specific point in time in response to a transmission from outside of the arm hardware, but also the mechanism for synchronizing this transmission with the capturing of image data. Faro clearly had ideas about how to trigger its arms and also supplied the software to flag the most recently recorded position data, but there is little in the record to suggest that any Faro employee collaborated on or even considered the use of a single synchronization signal to cause the simultaneous recording of position and image data, the heart of the sync and trigger claim. See Pannu v. Iolab Corp., 155 F.3d 1344, 1351 (Fed. Cir. 1998) (HN6[] joint inventor must "contribute in some significant manner to the conception or reduction [*169] to practice. . . [and] make a contribution to the claimed invention that is not insignificant in quality, when that contribution [12] is measured against the dimension of the full invention.").

Faro has also failed to establish that a patent examiner would have found the claimed inventions obvious if Faro's arm and software had been disclosed during the prosecution. To be sure, a patent examiner may have determined that "even if the existence of the software and the arm hardware would not have dictated the use of a single synchronization signal to solve the problem synch and trigger aimed to resolve, it would seem that such a solution would be 'obvious to try.'" Metris, 768 F. Supp. 2d at 361. However, my findings on materiality were not grounded on a complete enough record to determine that a patent examiner would likely not have issued this patent as a result of obviousness. See id. ("The parties in this case have not fully briefed or argued the Graham factors, and, thus, a full-blown obviousness inquiry is not attainable, but neither is it required."). There is simply not enough of a record to support the more searching analysis called for by Therasense.

Faro argues, however, that it need not show "but for" materiality, because Crampton committed affirmative egregious misconduct in lying in this litigation about [13] his relationship with Faro. I found and continue to believe that Crampton's sworn testimony on this matter was purposefully evasive. In particular, I described his testimony that the Faro arm in his possession in 1994-1995 did not have a port for mounting a laser scanner to be "so beyond the scope of credibility" that it provided evidence of intent to deceive the PTO. Metris, 768 F. Supp. 2d at 363. Nonetheless, his testimony does not constitute affirmative egregious misconduct as described by the Federal Circuit. HN7[] The focus of the inequitable conduct inquiry is the inventor's conduct before the patent examiner; often this misconduct will persist during litigation before a court, but it is the affirmative conduct before the patent examiner that serves as the basis for the exception to the "but for" materiality requirement. See *Therasense, 2011 U.S. App. LEXIS 10590, 2011 WL 2028255, at 12 (in explaining why affirmative egregious misconduct presents an exception to but for materiality stating, "a patentee is unlikely to go to great lengths to deceive the PTO with a falsehood unless it believes that the falsehood will affect issuance of the patent."). As the Federal Circuit explained, "[b]ecause inequitable conduct [14] renders an entire patent (or even a patent family) unenforceable, as a general rule, this doctrine should only be applied in instances where the patentee's misconduct resulted in the unfair benefit of receiving an unwarranted claim." *2011 U.S. App. LEXIS 10590, [WL] at 12.[2] It would unduly stretch the inequitable conduct doctrine to hold the '617 patent unenforceable under the doctrine of inequitable conduct based on Crampton's misconduct in the litigation after the patent issued.

[*170] 2. Dual Mode

In my first [15] order, I never addressed inequitable conduct in the prosecution of the dual mode invention of the '617 patent because I found that patent unenforceable due to inequitable conduct in the prosecution of the sync and trigger claim. Metris, 768 F. Supp. 2d at 363. When I issued that order, I believed that the evidence supporting inequitable conduct with regard to the dual mode invention was not nearly as strong as the evidence related to the sync and trigger invention. I believe the same today.

The best evidence of the existence of dual mode in the prior art is that before Crampton applied for the British patent in 1995, another scanner company, called EOIS, created a laser scanner head that maintained "touch probe" capability. (Trial Tr. Day 4, 30:11-13.) Further, Faro's Caliper 3D software with which Crampton became familiar in his efforts to integrate a Faro arm with a 3D Scanners' laser scanner, included an _H command, which allowed a user to switch between laser scanner and touch probe data gathering techniques. (Id. at 28-30.)

[2] Therasense analogizes to the unclean hands doctrine in explicating the affirmative egregious misconduct exception. *2011 U.S. App. LEXIS 10590, [WL] at 12 (exception "incorporates elements" of the unclean hands doctrine"). But a critical difference remains between unclean hands and inequitable conduct, even when inequitable conduct is based on affirmative egregious misconduct: The unclean hands doctrine allows courts to dismiss suits brought by bad faith plaintiffs, whereas the inequitable conduct doctrine results in the unenforceability of the entire patent. *2011 U.S. App. LEXIS 10590, [WL] at 4. This remedy, which the Federal Circuit has described as the "atomic bomb" of patent law, *2011 U.S. App. LEXIS 10590, [WL] at 8, is appropriate only in cases where the patent itself is called into doubt.

Putting aside the question of whether these references were material, Faro cannot demonstrate that Crampton specifically intended to conceal them from the patent [16] office. Crampton's prolonged relationship with Faro included numerous communications regarding features related to the sync and trigger claim, but the same is not true of dual mode. Even if it can be assumed that Crampton was aware of the _H command, this demonstrates only that he knew some arms could switch between modes. There is no direct evidence that he knew of the EOIS scanner's touch probe capabilities or those of any other scanner, and I find circumstantial evidence insufficient. Therefore, on this issue, Faro has not met its burden of establishing specific intent.

C. '264 patent

At the initial trial, there was very little argument on inequitable conduct related to the '264 patent, which among other things, claims the use of a digital processor in the housing of the laser line scanner for processing the electrical image data and generating data of reduced quantity. Metris, 768 F. Supp. 2d at 341. On the basis of the sparsity of the record, I found that Faro had failed to meet its steep burden in establishing intent. Since trial, I have allowed the parties to file further briefing (but no new evidence) on this issue. After considering these arguments, I once again find that Faro [17] has failed to establish that Crampton intended to deceive the PTO with regard to this claim, particularly in light of Therasense's tightened standards.

The initial order focused on a patent held by Kreon, a French laser line scanner company. See U.S. Patent No. 5,424,835 ("'835 patent"). In May 1995, Kreon sued Crampton and 3D Scanners for infringement of the French version of the '835 patent. According to testimony at trial, I found that the '835 patent taught the use of a technique for finding the center of a laser line that is reflected off of an object, known as the center of gravity technique. See Metris, 768 F. Supp. 2d at 349. Although this technique may be material to the '264 patent, I found that Faro had failed to establish that Crampton knew of this feature of the patent and intentionally decided not to disclose it to the PTO. Id.

In the supplemental filings, Faro pointed to the following portions of the record as further illustrations of Crampton and 3D Scanners' familiarity with Kreon. In January or February of 1994, Naval Kapoor of Kreon brought Crampton and 3D [*171] Scanners a Kreon I Scanner for Crampton to examine. (Trial Tr. Day 3, 43:710.) Crampton was impressed with the [18] technology, noting that the Kreon I sensor was "well engineered – possible too sturdy even." (Def. Ex. 32.) Crampton and 3D Scanners then began working on technology for the Kreon I scanner to operate with 3D Scanners software. (Id. at 46:14-16.) Around this period, Crampton took a Kreon scanner apart to "its barest bits." (Id. at 46:18-22.) Beyond the Kreon I scanner, Crampton was reportedly also aware of the Kreon II scanner by the time he filed the British patent application in 1995. (Id. at 44-46.) Furthermore, Faro also pointed to further evidence that Crampton was aware of processor in the head in the prior art. Apparently, 3D Scanners possessed Kreon marketing materials that disclosed the sub-pixel calculation of the center of gravity. (Def's Ex. 38.)

Further, by December 1995, 3D Scanners was aware that Faro was attempting to integrate its arm with a Kreon scanner. (Def's Ex. 198.) Stuart Hamilton of 3D Scanners wrote, "I have not seen Kreon's results, my knowledge of their products makes me skeptical about what they may have achieved. To my knowledge they have merely attached an existing scanner to an arm." (Id.)

None of this evidence alters my conclusion that Faro failed to [19] establish intent to deceive the patent office in not disclosing references that he knew were material to the processor in the head claim. First, it is not clear that the Kreon I scanner included the same technology described in the '835 patent. But even if the Kreon scanner that Crampton took apart to its barest bits did include something like a processor in the head, there is no evidence that Crampton was aware of it or deliberately failed to disclose it, as is required under Therasense. Morever, as I explained in my initial order, there is no evidence that Crampton was made aware of this aspect of Kreon's technology through the French litigation or through any other means, including the marketing materials.

More likely, Crampton was focused on finding a way to improve the integration of scanner and arm technology. In fact, much of the thrust of Faro's argument at trial with regard to Crampton's familiarity with Kreon revolved around his understanding of the mechanism for "registering" the Kreon scanner onto a Faro arm. (See Trial Tr. Day 4, 30-34 (concerning the Kreon brochure used as an exhibit in the French Kreon litigation).) Registration is a process for calibrating a laser scanner [20] and movable arm so that the arm can calculate the position of the end-point of the scanner. As explained in my first order, the registration of a laser scanner to a multiplyjointed arm is not material to the '617 sync and trigger invention. Metris, 768 F. Supp. 2d at 354. It is certainly not material to the processor in the head claim, which does not even concern the integration of a scanner and arm.

The finding that Faro has failed to establish specific intent to deceive the PTO with respect to dual mode is further supported by the complexity of the processor in the head technology. It is not clear that even if Crampton had read the entire '835 patent (or its French precursor) or had fully examined every aspect of a Kreon scanner, he would have known that technology allowing for the determination of the center of gravity of the line was material to the claims of the '264 patent. With regard to the sync and trigger claim, circumstantial evidence of Crampton's knowledge of Faro's importance to the invention was present in his frequent communications with Faro about the precise issue [*172] that Faro alleges was material to the '617 patent. Here, although there may be evidence that Crampton was [21] familiar with Kreon and the Kreon scanner, inequitable conduct, particularly after Therasense, calls for a higher showing of specific intent.

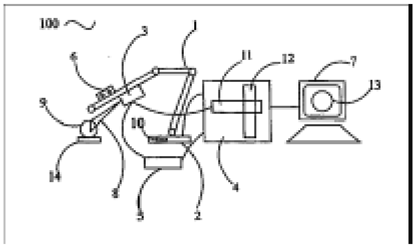
Faro also makes scattered references to the fact that Crampton added the phrase "a multiply-jointed arm having a plurality of arm segments and data communication link to transmit data" to certain claims in the '264 patent after the original patent application was filed and after Faro purportedly had published a patent application that used the phrase "arm segments." Of the asserted claims, the term "plurality of arm segments" now appears in claims 1-6, 11-13, 16, and 26-34 of the '264 patent. According to Faro, the added language is "new matter" not included in the parent '617 patent or in the 1995 British patent application. Faro further argues that "arm segment" refers to Faro's innovative improvements to the accuracy of its arms by using "modular bearing cartridges" in each of the arm joints. (See Def's Ex. 64 ("Kurfess Rep."), at ¶ 87.)

At trial, Faro pressed this argument in a perfunctory manner. In fact, the Faro patent application that allegedly included the "arm segment" language serving as the basis for Crampton's amendment was not even [22] introduced at trial.

But even if this argument had been more forcefully pursued, it would have been unavailing. Although Faro does not specify the legal import of its factual arguments, a finding that the '264 patent included impermissible new matter could theoretically produce at least two outcomes. First, I could find that Crampton's failure to disclose this fact to the patent office constituted inequitable conduct. Cf. Rainbow Rewards, USA, Inc. v. Source, Inc., 07-00239, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 94095, 2007 WL 4365669 (D. Colo. Dec. 10, 2007) (discussing claims of inequitable conduct alleging that patentee had styled certain patent applications as continuation applications even though they contained new matter). Alternatively, a finding of new matter would support a holding that the '264 patent cannot benefit from the priority date of the parent applications. See Tronzo v. Biomet, Inc., 156 F.3d 1154, 1158 (Fed. Cir. 1998).

But before arriving at either of these outcomes, I must find that the additions to the '264 patent are indeed new matter. The restriction on new matter originates in the "written description" requirement. "It is elementary patent law that HN8[] a patent application is entitled to the benefit of the [23] filing date of an earlier filed application only if the disclosure of the earlier application provides support for the claims of the later application, as required by 35 U.S.C. § 112." Poweroasis, Inc. v. T-Mobile USA, Inc., 522 F.3d 1299, 1306 (Fed. Cir. 2008) (quoting In re Chu, 66 F.3d 292, 297 (Fed. Cir. 1995)) (internal quotation marks omitted). "To satisfy the written description requirement the disclosure of the prior application must convey with reasonable clarity to those skilled in the art that, as of the filing date sought, the inventor was in possession of the invention." Id. (internal quotation marks, citations, and alterations omitted). "A disclosure in a parent application that merely renders the later-claimed invention obvious is not sufficient to meet the written description requirement; the disclosure must describe the claimed invention with all its limitations." Tronzo, 156 F.3d at 1158.

Here, a plain language reading of the '617 patent and its specification reveals that the patent discloses the use of a "plurality of arm segments." The term "segment" has a broad everyday definition as "one [24] of the parts into which something is divided; a division, portion, or section." [*173] Random House Webster's College Dictionary 1214 (1991). The '617 patent specification uses very similar language when describing that "[m]ultiply jointed arms commonly comprise multiple linkages and are available for scanning complex objects." '617 patent, col. 2, ll. 32-35. Moreover, the figures in the '617 and '264 patents illustrate segmented arms. Figure 1 is a prime example:



'617 patent, fig. 1. By lay eye, the arm depicted here fairly clearly includes segments.

In response, Faro argues that this illustration depicts a "stick figure," and suggests through its expert that the term "arm segment" should be defined with reference to Faro innovations, which have involved placing complicated bearings on each of the arm joints. (See Kurfess Rep., at ¶ 87.) It may be true that Faro's linkages were more sophisticated than the simple joints present in early arms and the '617 specification, but this does not mean that one with ordinary skill in the art would find that the term "arm segment" so evokes this new technology that the term is not disclosed by a patent that refers to simple arm linkages. Faro did not introduce [25] any evidence to suggest the contrary.

II. Antitrust and Unfair Competition Claims

Faro has asserted federal antitrust and state unfair competition counter-claims, and Metris has moved for summary judgment on these claims.

A. Antitrust Claims

HN9[] Generally patent protection provides an exception to the strictures of antitrust law. See Precision Instrument Mfg. Co. v. Auto. Maint. Mach. Co., 324 U.S. 806, 816, 65 S. Ct. 993, 89 L. Ed. 1381, 1945 Dec. Comm'r Pat. 582 (1945) (A patent "is an exception to the general rule against monopolies and to the right to access to a free and open market"). However, the Federal Circuit has instructed, "A patentee who brings an infringement suit may be subject to antitrust liability for the anticompetitive effects of that suit if the alleged infringer (the antitrust plaintiff) proves (1) that the asserted patent was obtained through knowing and willful fraud. . . or (2) that the infringement suit was a mere sham to cover what is actually nothing more than an attempt to interfere directly with the business relationships of a competitor." Nobelpharma AB v. Implant Innovations, Inc., 141 F.3d 1059, 1068 (Fed. Cir. 1998)(citations and internal quotation marks omitted).

The first prong of this test refers to the analysis [26] set out by the Supreme Court in Walker Proc. Equip. v. Food Mach. & Chem. Corp., 382 U.S. 172, 86 S. Ct. 347, 15 L. Ed. 2d 247 (1965). The second refers to the "sham litigation" theory of antitrust liability. Count VII of Faro's Answer asserts a counter claim of Walker Process fraud as a basis for antitrust liability. (Doc. 130.) Count VIII is based on a sham litigation theory. (Id. (citing Handgards, Inc. v. Ethicon, Inc., 743 F.2d 1282, 1288 (9th Cir. 1984).)

1. Walker Process

In Walker Process, the Supreme Court held that HN10[] proof that a patentee obtained a patent by "knowingly and willfully misrepresenting facts to the Patent Office" is sufficient to strip a patentee of its protections from antitrust laws. Walker Process, 382 U.S. at 177.

[*174] Since Walker Process, courts have had occasion to address the relationship between its holdings and the inequitable conduct doctrine. The Walker Process court cited many of the same early unclean hands cases that Therasense has described as the foundation of inequitable conduct law. See id. (citing Keystone Driller Co. v. Gen. Excavator Co., 290 U.S. 240, 54 S. Ct. 146, 78 L. Ed. 293, 1934 Dec. Comm'r Pat. 639 (1933), Hazel-Atlas Glass Co. v. Hartford-Empire Co., 322 U.S. 238, 64 S. Ct. 997, 88 L. Ed. 1250, 1944 Dec. Comm'r Pat. 675 (1944), Precision Instrument Mfg. Co. v. Auto. Maint. Mach., 324 U.S. 806, 65 S. Ct. 993, 89 L. Ed. 1381, 1945 Dec. Comm'r Pat. 582 (1945)). [27] However, as described above, between the development of the unclean hands doctrine and Therasense, the inequitable conduct doctrine progressively expanded to incorporate less serious forms of wrongdoing. On this basis, in the past, a finding of inequitable conduct did not necessarily dictate a finding of Walker Process liability. See Argus Chem. Corp. v. Fibre Glass-Evercoat Co., Inc., 812 F.2d 1381, 1384 (Fed. Cir. 1987). Conversely, because Walker Process liability was founded upon the same type of wrongdoing before the PTO as inequitable conduct, but required a higher showing of both materiality and intent, a finding of inequitable conduct was a prerequisite for a showing of Walker Process fraud. See Dippin' Dots, Inc., 476 F.3d 1337, 1346 (Fed. Cir. 2007) ("To demonstrate Walker Process fraud, a claimant must make higher showings of both materiality and intent than are required to show inequitable conduct."); FMC Corp. v. Manitowoc Co., Inc., 835 F.2d 1411, 1417 (Fed. Cir. 1987) ("[F]ailure to establish inequitable conduct precludes a determination that the [party making antitrust claims] had borne its greater burden of establishing the fraud required to support its Walker Process [28] claim.").

Since Therasense, no court has had an opportunity to fully examine the relationship between Walker Process liability and inequitable conduct. But see *TransWeb LLC v. 3M Innovative Props. Co., 10-4413, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 59095, 2011 WL 2181189, at 12 (D.N.J. June 1, 2011) ("Therasense. . .provided no indication that the elements of Walker Process fraud changed."). But it appears that Walker Process fraud is now largely coextensive with the new inequitable conduct doctrine. With regard to materiality, the Federal Circuit has explained that HN11[] "[t]he heightened standard of materiality in a Walker Process case requires that the patent would have issued but for the patent examiner's justifiable reliance on the patentee's misrepresentation or omission." Dippin' Dots, Inc., 476 F.3d at 1346-47.

As articulated by the Federal Circuit, the intent prong of the Walker Process fraud test is not as precisely congruent with Therasense. The Federal Circuit has explained that Walker Process fraud "is a variant of common law fraud and that the elements of common law fraud include: (1) a representation of a material fact, (2) the falsity of that representation, and (3) the intent to deceive or, at least, a state of mind [29] so reckless as to the consequences that it is held to be the equivalent of intent (scienter)." Hydril Co. LP v. Grant Prideco LP, 474 F.3d 1344, 1349 (Fed. Cir. 2007). Therasense does not fully explore whether a state of mind may be so reckless as to be the equivalent of specific intent. Nonetheless, there is no reason to distinguish between the standards on this account. The leap between recklessness and intent is a common one, even in criminal law. See, e.g., Willis v. United States, 87 F.3d 1004, 1007-08 (8th Cir. 1996). Furthermore, under both doctrines the intent to deceive must be established by "clear and convincing" evidence. See Unitherm Food Sys. Inc. v, Swift Eckrich, Inc., 375 F.3d 1341, 1360 (Fed. Cir. 2004), rev'd on [*175] other grounds 546 U.S. 394, 126 S. Ct. 980, 163 L. Ed. 2d 974 (2006).

The question here, then, is whether my finding of no inequitable conduct resolves the Walker Process issue. Federal Circuit case law could be read to suggest that a finding of no inequitable conduct necessarily precludes a finding that the patents at issue were obtained through fraud before the patent office. See FMC Corp., 835 F.2d at 1418 ("[T]hose seeking unenforceability [are] seen as raising a shield and those seeking [30] antitrust damages as unsheathing a sword. FMC broke its Walker Process sword when it failed to establish inequitable conduct."). Metris has assumed this proposition to be the case, and Faro has not urged a different analysis.

There may, however, be reason to doubt this principle now. If a judge's determination of no inequitable conduct precluded a jury from later finding Walker Process fraud as a matter of law, then a viable argument could be made that the doctrines would collide with the protections afforded Walker Process claimants by the Seventh Amendment. See Beacon Theatres, Inc. v. Westover, 359 U.S. 500, 510, 79 S. Ct. 948, 3 L. Ed. 2d 988 (1959); Shum v. Intel Corp., 499 F.3d 1272, 1279 (Fed. Cir. 2007); Cabinet Vision v. Cabnetware, 129 F.3d 595, 600 (Fed. Cir. 1997) (finding that a "Walker Process counterclaim and an affirmative defense of inequitable conduct share common factual elements" and thereby concluding that a district court had erred in overriding a jury's fact-finding on a Walker Process claim under the auspices of addressing an inequitable conduct claim). It appears, then, that the foundation of the proposition that a finding of no inequitable conduct forecloses Walker Process fraud claims was [31] the difference between the Walker Process fraud and inequitable conduct standards. Because it was more difficult to establish Walker Process fraud, a finding of no inequitable conduct, even if by a judge, would almost certainly mean that no jury could find that the facts at issue were sufficient to meet the higher standard of Walker Process fraud. See SanDisk Corp. v. STMicroelectronics, Inc., No. C. 04-4379, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 45931, 2009 WL 1404689, *2 (N.D. Cal. May 19, 2009) ("[J]ust as a finding of inequitable conduct may moot SanDisk's patent infringement claim, a finding that SanDisk did not engage in inequitable conduct may moot ST's Walker Process claim, as '[a] finding of Walker Process fraud requires higher threshold showings of both intent and materiality than does a finding of inequitable conduct.'" (quoting Nobelpharma AB, 141 F.3d at 1071)). Therasense may, therefore, provide reason to reexamine the general rule that a finding of no inequitable conduct precludes Walker Process liability.

In any event, even if this legal principle has been unsettled by the fact that test for inequitable conduct has been brought into line with the test for Walker Process fraud, Faro's claim fails. There is insufficient [32] evidence in the record, even taking into account all of the evidence presented at the inequitable conduct trial, for a reasonable fact-finder to conclude that a patent officer would not have issued the '617 patent to Crampton if she had access to information about Faro. Therefore, I allow Metris' motion for summary judgment on Faro's Walker Process fraud claim.

2. Sham Litigation

HN12[] The "sham litigation" theory allows accused infringers to bring antitrust claims where it can be shown that "(1) the lawsuit [is] objectively meritless such that 'no reasonable litigant could expect success on the merits' and (2) . . . that 'the baseless lawsuit conceals an attempt to interfere [*176] directly with the business relationships of a competitor." C.R. Bard, Inc. v. M3 Sys., Inc., 157 F.3d 1340, 1368 (Fed. Cir. 1998).

Given the other issues at stake in the litigation, Faro cannot demonstrate that the suit is objectively meritless. Although a fact-finder may ultimately determine that there was no infringement on the '264 patent or that this patent is invalid, Metris' claims have at least enough merit to withstand summary judgment. With regard to the '617 patent, for the reasons discussed below, the issue of infringement [33] is not so open-andshut that Metris' assertion of this patent is baseless. Because Faro cannot meet the second prong of the "sham litigation" test, the Court need not reach the question of whether Metris is attempting to use the litigation itself to interfere with Faro's business. See Nobelpharma, 141 F.3d at 1072 ("[I]f a suit is not objectively baseless an antitrust defendant's subjective motivation is immaterial.").

B) c. 93A claims

Faro's state unfair competition claims also fail. As a preliminary matter, the law is clear that HN13[] state law claims are preempted to the extent that they are founded solely on misconduct before the PTO. See Abbott Lab. v. Brennan, 952 F.2d 1346, 1355 (Fed. Cir. 1998). The facts that serve as the basis for the inequitable conduct claim can, therefore, not serve as the sole basis for a c. 93A claim.

Faro argues that this claim escapes preemption, however, because it is founded upon 3D Scanners and Crampton's continued unfair competition since the issuance of the patent. It points in particular to the March 2003 email and to a communication from February 18, 2004, in which Crampton stated that he intended to "put [Kreon] out of business. . . [and] get [its] customer [34] list. . . ." (Def's Ex. 69,) as evidence that Crampton's enforcement of the patent was in bad faith.

It is true that HN14[] bad faith enforcement of the patent, if alleged as a basis for state tort liability, may bring the state tort claim outside the ambit of federal preemption. See Zenith Elecs. Corp. v. Exzec, Inc., 182 F.3d 1340, 1353 (Fed.Cir.1999) ("[F]ederal patent law bars the imposition of liability [under federal or state law] for publicizing a patent in the marketplace unless the plaintiff can show that the patent holder acted in bad faith."). However, the test for bad faith in this context is substantially the same as the test for determining whether bad faith enforcement supports a sham litigation theory of antitrust liability. See 800 Adept, Inc. v. Murex Sec., Ltd., 539 F.3d 1354, 1370 (Fed. Cir. 2008) ("This bad faith standard has objective and subjective components. The objective component requires a showing that the infringement allegations are objectively baseless. The subjective component relates to a showing that the patentee in enforcing the patent demonstrated subjective bad faith."). Even if these emails suggest subjective bad faith, they do not change the analysis [35] that Faro cannot demonstrate that the enforcement of the patent is objectively baseless.

Nor can Faro point to any other evidence of unfair competition beyond enforcement of the patent. All Faro can show through the emails is that Crampton had bad intent. Therefore, at its heart, Faro's state unfair competition counterclaim is based upon Crampton's conduct before the PTO, and the resulting enforcement of a patent obtained through fraud; this alleged misconduct gives rise to federal claims only.

[*177] III. Non-Infringement

HN15[] In order to allow summary judgment of non-infringement, the Court must conclude that when all of the reasonable inferences are drawn in Metris' favor, no reasonable fact-finder could find that the accused product either literally or through equivalents infringes the asserted claims of Metris' patents. Abbott Laboratories v. Sandoz, Inc., 566 F.3d 1282, 1288 (Fed. Cir. 2009).

A. '617 patent

The crux of Faro's argument of non-infringement of the '617 patent concerns the purported absence of a "position calculator" in the accused Faro product. As explained in this Court's May 4 order, "For the purposes of creating a three-dimensional image of an object, the data an optical or laser [36] scanner captures is meaningless if the user cannot determine where the scanner was located relative to that object when it captured the image. This means that while a scanning device collects data on the object itself, it must also collect data on the position and orientation of the scanner." Metris, 768 F. Supp. 2d at 340. In Faro's prior products, including both the Bronze and Silver Faro arms, a serial box, otherwise known as a position calculator, served as an intermediary between the host computer and the manually operated multi-jointed arm. See U.S. Patent No. 5,402,582 (the "'582 patent"), fig. 1. In broad strokes, the purpose of the position calculator in these products was the "preprocessing [of] position data prior to transfer. . .said position data to a host computer." '582 patent, col. 15, ll. 19-21.

In the accused Faro arm, there is no separate position calculator serving as an intermediary between the arm and the host computer, where position and orientation data are combined with data collected by the laser scanner to generate three dimensional data relating to the scanned object. (See Kurfess Rep., at ¶ 94.) Instead, each of the arm's joints contains an encoder that [37] measures data related to the angle of that particular joint and relays this data to the host computer in response to a signal sent from the base of the arm. (See id., at 95.)

Claim 1 of the '617 patent claims:

> [A] Scanning apparatus for scanning an object to generate three-dimensional data, comprising:
> a scanner mounted on a multiply-jointed arm for movement by an operator to scan the object to capture data from a plurality of points on the surface of the object, the scanner comprising:
>> a light source operable to emit light onto the object surface; and > a light detector operable to detect light reflected from the object surface by recording reflected light at recording times defined by a synchronization signal;

> a position calculator for calculating the position of the multiply-jointed arm, and outputting position data defining the position in response to a trigger pulse;
> a trigger pulse generator for receiving the synchronization signal for the light detector defining the recording times thereof, and, in response thereto, generating and outputting trigger pulses to the position calculator to cause the position calculator to output position data for each of at least some of the recordings by [38] the light detector; and
> a three dimensional data generator for receiving recorded data output by the light detector and associated position data output from the position calculator, and for processing the data to generate [*178] three-dimensional data relating to the object.

'617 patent, col. 29, ll. 34-60 (emphasis added). Of critical importance here is the language emphasized regarding the "position calculator." At claim construction, this Court addressed the proper construction of many of the terms relevant to this particular dispute. However, the proper scope of some of these terms was ultimately agreed upon by the parties. (See Joint Statement of Agreed Upon Claim Terms, Nov. 11, 2009, Doc. 81.) Specifically the parties agreed that a position calculator should be understood as "A device with a program for calculating the position of the multiply-jointed arm, and outputting position data defining the position in response to a trigger pulse." (Id.) Although the claim 1 language regarding the position calculator is not used in every one of the asserted claims, all of the claims at issue use the term "position calculator," and thus incorporate the agreed upon definition of position calculator. [39] See '617 patent, col. 30, l. 7 (claim 2); col. 31, l. 7 (claim 4). The parties further agreed that the term "position data" refers to "data defining positions relating to a multiply-jointed arm." (Id.)

There is no dispute that the accused products do not include a separate device that acts as an intermediary between the arm's joints and the host computer, but Metris asserts that a reasonable fact-finder could find that the network of encoders, or Digital Signal Processors (DSPs), associated with each arm joint constitute a position calculator under the claim language of the '617 patent as agreed upon by the parties. Such a finding would require a fact-finder to arrive at a number of conclusions: 1) that a position calculator can be constituted by a network of devices existing within the arm; 2) that the DSPs are a device with a program for calculating the position of the arm; 3) that the DSPs receive trigger pulses; and 4) that in response to these trigger pulses the DSPs output position data. The Court finds that even if Metris can raise genuine issues of material fact with regard to some of these conclusions, no reasonable factfinder could find that the DSPs are a "device with a program [40] for calculating the position of the arm."

1. Literal Infringement.

Although the precise mechanism of the DSPs in the accused product is opaque, according to Dr. Hager, Metris's expert, the DSPs are signaled by software to "calculate (among other calculations) the rotation count [of a particular joint], which is a measure of the joint's rotation angle." (Pl.'s Ex. A. ("Hager Rep."), at ¶ 63.)) In general, this "calculation" occurs when a light source is projected through disks attached to a body that rotates around an axis. The disks are made up of some transparent and some opaque bands, and the rotation of the body can be determined by measuring the light as it projects through the disks. (Id.)

Faro briefly challenges that the DSPs are "a device with a program" but does not provide any evidence to refute Dr. Hager's account. (Reply Br., Doc. 233, at 9.) Furthermore, the fact that Faro describes the devices as "digital signal processors," belies this fleeting suggestion. Without anything more, the Court is unwilling to conclude that a reasonable fact-finder could not find that the DSPs include a "program."

But Metris must do more than establish that the position calculator is a device with [41] a program. It must also prove that the DSPs are, under the definition agreed to by the parties, "for calculating the position of the multiply-jointed arm." Based on the undisputed language, I find that the [*179] DSPs do not literally infringe this language.

The claim term "position of the arm" plainly refers to the end-point of the arm, where the scanner is attached. As discussed above, this is the only position on the arm that matters for the purpose of the invention. Cf. Minn. Min. & Mfg. Co. v. Johnson & Johnson Orthopaedics, Inc., 976 F.2d 1559, 1567 (Fed. Cir. 1992) (interpreting otherwise arguably indefinite term such that it was consistent with the purpose of the invention). Further, this construction is supported by the juxtaposition of the language "position of the arm" with "position data." In contrast to the pluralized term "position data," which the parties have construed broadly, the term "position of the arm" refers to a single piece of information; again, given the way that image and position data are paired, the single most important piece of information regarding the arm is the position of the end-point of the arm. If the purpose of the position calculator were merely the [42] calculation of various pieces of data related to the position of the arm, the claim language would have used the term "position data" in the first clause of the definition of position calculator just as it did in the second clause when describing what the position calculator outputs.

But the DSPs do not calculate the position of the arm. The DSPs transmit raw rotation counts that must be combined with other information, including the temperature of the arm, in order to determine the angle of the rotation of the joints. Although Faro disputes that this raw-count data can constitute "position data" under the second clause of the definition of position calculator, the Court need not reach this question because, even if the raw-count data is understood as angular data "related to the position of the arm," it does not amount to "the position of the arm," as the first clause of the definition requires. Therefore, the DSPs cannot serve as the position calculator in determining whether the accused product literally infringes the '617 patent.

Metris cannot avoid this conclusion by arguing that the position calculator is within the host computer, which in the accused product also serves as the [43] three-dimensional data generator. (See Hager Rep., at 78 ("The COG data. . . is combined in a buffer with the position data returned by the mid-DSPs. . .and is sent to the host computer for further processing. . . ."). First, though there is no language in the claims that requires that the position calculator be a separate device from the multiply-jointed arm, there is language that suggests that the position calculator must be a separate device from the three-dimensional data generator. Most importantly, the definition of position calculator states that the position calculator "output[s]" position data in response to a trigger pulse and the claim language specifies that the three-dimensional data generator "receiv[es] recorded data output by the light detector and associated position data output from the position calculator."

Second, the definition of position calculator requires that the position calculator output position data in response to a trigger pulse. Because there is no dispute that the host computer in the accused device does not receive a trigger pulse, the accused device cannot literally infringe the '617 patent. (See Hager Rep., at ¶¶ 60-61.)

2. Doctrine of Equivalents

HN16[] Under [44] the doctrine of equivalents, an accused device or process infringes a patent if it contains "elements. . . equivalent to each claimed element of the patented invention." Warner-Jenkinson Co., Inc. v. Hilton Davis Chem., 520 U.S. 17, 40, 117 S. Ct. 1040, 137 L. Ed. 2d 146 [*180] (1997). "Infringement may be found under the doctrine of equivalents if every limitation of the asserted claim, or its 'equivalent,' is found in the accused subject matter, where an 'equivalent' differs from the claimed limitation only insubstantially." Ethicon Endo-Surgery, Inc. v. U.S. Surgical Corp., 149 F.3d 1309, 1315 (Fed. Cir. 1998). In addressing this question a fact-finder is not bound by any particular linguistic formulation of what makes any single element equivalent to another, but "special vigilance [must be paid to ensure] against allowing the concept of equivalence to eliminate completely any such elements. . . ." Warner-Jenkinson, 520 U.S. at 40.

This final principle, known as HN17[] the all-elements rule or the all-limitations rule, is the judicial counterweight to the doctrine of equivalents. See Ethicon, 149 F.3d at 1317 (observing that the rule is better understood as applying to claim "limitation" as opposed to "elements" because it is the [45] "limitation of a claim that counts in determining both validity and infringement." (internal quotation marks and citation omitted)). "[T]he 'all elements' rule forecloses resort to the doctrine of equivalents [when] on the facts or theories presented in a case, a limitation would be read completely out of the claim - i.e., the limitation would be effectively removed or 'vitiated.'" Dupey Spine, Inc. v. Medtronic Sofamor Danek, Inc., 469 F.3d 1005, 1017 (Fed. Cir. 2006). Although there is considerable difficulty in applying the doctrine, the Supreme Court has provided the following guidance: "Each element contained in a patent claim is deemed material to defining the scope of the patented invention, and thus the doctrine of equivalents must be applied to individual elements of the claim, not to the invention as a whole." Warner-Jenkinson, 520 U.S. at 29. Whereas generally the question of equivalence is a question of fact, the application of the all-elements rule is a question of law for the court. See Cordis Corp. v. Boston Scientific Corp., 561 F.3d 1319, 1330 (Fed. Cir. 2009).

The Court concludes that application of the doctrine of equivalents as a basis for finding that the accused [46] device infringes the '617 patent would vitiate the limitation in the definition of position calculator that the calculation of position occur in the position calculator, separate from the three-dimensional data generator. As a corollary of this holding, I also find that no reasonable fact-finder could conclude that the difference between performing the position calculation in the position calculator versus performing it in the host computer, which also holds the three-dimensional image processor, is insubstantial. See Nystrom v. Trex. Co., Inc., 580 F.3d 1281, 1286-87 (Fed. Cir. 2009) (Rader, J. concurring) (noting that the "vitiation doctrine is really subsumed within the test for equivalents itself" in that "a finding of insubstantial difference. . .obviates any further vitiation analysis," whereas, "a finding of substantial difference renders vitiation unnecessary," and further observing that despite this overlap, the doctrines differ in that vitiation addressed by a judge whereas equivalence is addressed by a jury).

In Dolly, Inc. v. Spalding & Evenflo Co., Inc., 16 F.3d 394 (Fed. Cir. 1994), the Federal Circuit explained that HN18[] "the doctrine of equivalents does not require a one-to-one [47] correspondence between components of the accused device and the claimed invention." Id. at 398 (citing Intel Corp. v. Int'l Trade Comm'n, 946 F.2d 821, 832 (Fed. Cir. 1991)). "An accused device may infringe under the doctrine of equivalents even though a combination of its components performs a function performed [*181] by a single element in the patented invention. . . [as long as it] contain[s] every limitation of its equivalent." Id. Similarly, "[e]quivalency can also exist when separate claim limitations are combined into a single component of the accused device." Id.

At first blush, the accused product may appear to fall in the first category. Although the position calculator (or the DSPs) does not calculate the position of the arm, a reasonable fact-finder could conclude that this function is performed within the host computer, which also serves as the three-dimensional image processor.[3] Because the DSPs output position data in response to a trigger pulse coordinated with image collection, the three-dimensional image processor is still able to combine position information with correlating image data. The only difference is that in the accused device the conversion of position data into [48] the position of the arm occurs within the three-dimensional image processor, as opposed to the position calculator.

But, because of the explicit claim language, the doctrine of equivalents is inapplicable. The definition of the term "position calculator," by specifying that the position calculator outputs position data to the three-dimensional image calculator,[4] requires that the calculating of the position of the arm be performed in a separate component from the three-dimensional image processor. In short, the definition of position calculator includes not only a functional but also a structural limitation. See Dolly, 16 F.3d at 398 (finding that the fact that the accused product performed a function relying on components that the patent expressly stated could not perform the function prevented a finding of infringement by equivalents). As such, [49] Metris's reading would vitiate this claim limitation.

[3] It is not entirely clear whether the calculation of the position and orientation of the arm in the accused device is a discrete computational step, separate from the combination of position data and image data. Even assuming that the host computer actually "calculates" the position of the arm, however, Metris' infringement claim still fails.

[4] This requirement is expressed in the definition of "position calculator," which describes that the component is for "calculating the position of the multiply-jointed arm, and outputting position data defining the position in response to a trigger pulse" and the claim language specifying that the three-dimensional image generator is for "receiving. . . position data output from the position calculator." See, e.g., '617 patent, col. 29, ll. 58-59.

Metris at times also argues that the accused product may infringe by equivalents because, even if its position calculator does not calculate the position of the arm, it records data that can very easily be transformed into the position of the arm. This argument also fails to take into account the express limitations inherent in the definition of position calculator. The dictionary definition of the verb calculate is "to determine or ascertain by mathematical methods." Random House Webster's College Dictionary 193 (1992). Neither this definition, nor the common understanding of the term, requires that the calculation be difficult. In fact, the mathematical computation required to transform [50] angular data into position data is exactly the kind of problem that would normally be performed on a "calculator." Finding that the raw-count data is so easily transformable into the position of the arm that the accused product infringes by equivalents reads out the limitation that the position calculator must be the component that performs this calculation.

Moreover, the position calculator in the '617 patent performs a critical function in [*182] that it serves as an intermediary between the arm and the three-dimensional image processor and is for calculating the position of the arm. As Dr. Hager opines, this "calculation" may be easily performed based solely on angular measurements, but the calculation must also be performed in real-time as the arm is manipulated around an object. The position calculator, thus, performs an important function, and any device that does not rely on the position calculator to perform this function is substantially different from the protected invention.

B. '264 patent

Faro's argument that the accused product does not infringe the '264 patent revolves around the purported absence of a data processor within the housing of the scanner. Claim 1 of the '264 patent [51] reads as follows:

> A scanning apparatus, comprising:
> a multiply-jointed arm having a plurality of arm segments and a data communication link to transmit data; and > a scanner mounted on an arm segment of the multiply-jointed arm for movement therewith to capture data from a plurality of points on a surface of an object, the scanner having a housing enclosing:
>> (a) a light source operable to emit light onto the object surface;
>> (b) a light detector operable to detect light reflected from the object surface and to generate electrical image data signals in dependence upon the detected light; and
>> (c) a data processor operable to process the electrical image data signals to generate processed data of reduced quantity, the data processor being connected to the data communication link to transmit the processed data therealong.

Of importance to this dispute is the data processor within the scanner housing. The parties have agreed that "data processor operable to process the electrical image data signals to generate processed data of reduced quantity" should be construed as "a device with a program which performs computations to modify manipulate, or transform electrical image data signals to generate [52] processed data of reduced quantity."

Metris argues that a DSP within the scanner housing of the accused product falls within this element of the claim. This DSP uses special software algorithms to compute each frame of image data in order to determine the precise location of the measured object with sub-pixel accuracy. (MacFarlane Dep., at ¶ 29.) It performs this function through a method known as the center of gravity technique. This technique measures the "weighted average" of the laser stripe that is projected onto an object and reflected back to a scanner. (Kurfess Rep., 106.) The scanner head on the accused Faro device initially captures more pixels of data than the apparatus needs to determine the location of the object's surface. The DSP, through use of the center of gravity technique, is able to winnow this data down to what is necessary to determine the location of the object. It then transmits this data to the host computer where it is combined with data related to the position of the arm in order to produce a three-dimensional image of the scanned object. By reducing the data that the scanner head transmits, Faro is able to speed up the operations of the apparatus. (See MacFarlane [53] Dep., 101:14-18.)

Faro does not dispute that the DSP is within the scanner housing or that it reduces the quantity of the data that the scanner initially captures. Instead, Faro [*183] argues that because the data synthesized by the DSP is not three-dimensional image data, but rather, is one-dimensional pixel data, it is not "electrical image data" within the language of the claim. In the accused product, the synthesis of three-dimensional data occurs when the center of gravity is combined with arm position data within the three-dimensional data processor on the host computer. Because this function occurs outside of the scanner housing, Faro argues that the accused product does not have a data processor within the scanner housing, as the patent requires.

But the plain language of the claim does not specify that "electrical image data signals" refers only to three-dimensional image data. In fact, on one reading, claim one appears to presume that the three-dimensional data manipulation will occur outside of the scanner housing. Both parties agree that in order to render three-dimensional data, the apparatus must combine laser image data with information regarding the position of the arm. In claim [54] one of the '264 patent, however, there is no limitation that arm position data must be run into the scanner head. Instead, the "therealong" language indicates that image data will be passed via the data communication link outside of the scanner head and into the arm. Under this account, electrical image data cannot possibly refer only to three-dimensional image data, because the device will not generate three-dimensional image data until the initial data captured by the laser line scanner is combined with data regarding the position of the arm.

Faro's argument that the data manipulated by the DSP within the scanner housing is not "electrical image data" is based mainly on the '264 patent specification's reference to the possibility of moving the host computer into the scanner housing: "As computing power becomes faster and more compact, it will be possible to encapsulate the computer. . . in the probe. . . as well as having the display. . .mounted on the probe. The probe might have memory. . . which could be both dynamic memory and magnetic memory, such as a CD-ROM or digital video disk." '264 patent, col. 20, ll. 32-37. The quoted language indeed seems to envision the possibility of [55] performing the full three-dimensional image synthesis in the scanner head. However, the specification does not overwhelm the language of the claim, which, interpreted according to its ordinary meaning, refers to "electrical data image signals" processed by the processor in the head, a term which could include one- or two-dimensional data initially captured by the scanner head. See Johnson Worldwide Assocs., Inc. v. Zebco Corp., 175 F.3d 985, 989-90 (Fed. Cir. 1999) (HN19[] "[C]laim terms cannot be narrowed by reference to the written description or prosecution history unless the language of the claims invites reference to those sources.").

ORDER

The Court vacates its May 4, 2011 decision holding the '617 patent unenforceable for inequitable conduct (Doc. 309). It ALLOWS Metris' motion for summary judgment with regard to Faro's unfair competition and antitrust claims on the '264 patent and '617 patent (Doc. 246), and it DENIES Faro's motion for summary judgment of non-infringement on the '264 patent but ALLOWS the motion for summary judgment of non-infringement with regard to the '617 patent (Doc. 145).

[*980] ORDER

This matter comes before the Court on a Motion for Determination of a Law Point (ECF No. 60) filed [2] by Defendant/Counterclaim Plaintiff Employee Benefits Systems, Inc. (EBS). Plaintiff/Counterclaim Defendant EMC National Life Company (EMCNL)[1] does not resist the determination of the law point at issue in EBS's motion but argues for a contrary result. The Court held a hearing on the motion on August 2, 2011. Todd Strother represented EMCNL, and Arnold Anderson Vickery represented EBS. For the reasons stated below, the Court does not find the matter fully submitted and ready for ruling. However, to illustrate the remaining issue, the Court finds it appropriate to provide [*981] some discussion both of the factual background and the legal issues.

I. FACTUAL AND PROCEDURAL BACKGROUND

EBS works with insurance agents, providers, and underwriters to package various types of coverage to sell to union workers. Defendant William B. Loweth (Loweth) managed EBS full time and was paid a salary, bonus, and benefits. Beginning in 1999, Loweth entered into a series of agreements with EMCNL, purporting to outline and [3] govern the relationship between EMCNL, EBS, and Loweth. EBS adopted resolutions to enter into an agent contract with EMCNL and that Loweth, as President of EBS, was authorized to enter into contracts with EMCNL.

Loweth entered into an "Agent's Deferred Income Agreement" (the Deferred Income Agreement) that identified as EMCNL and EBS/Loweth as the contracting parties and identified Loweth as the beneficiary of the agreement and as an employee of EBS/Loweth. Under the Deferred Income Agreement, EMCNL made contributions to Loweth's retirement account. Between 2001 and 2007, under the Deferred Income Agreement, EMCNL yearly transferred money into an account for the personal benefit of Loweth, totaling $760,814.40. Loweth also entered into a "Supplemental Bonus Plan Agreement" (the Bonus Agreements) with EMCNL. Under the Bonus Agreements, in 2006 and 2007, EMCNL paid Loweth $52,241.20 in bonuses based on his sales.

In 2009, after meeting with EBS about the bonuses and retirement account funds, Loweth paid EMCNL $144,000.00 in cash and assigned EMCNL all of the monies in his retirement account. Pursuant to Loweth's assignment, EMCNL issued a check to EBS for $572,019.17.

EBS and EMCNL both [4] filed lawsuits in different U.S. District Courts. EBS's lawsuit included a claim against EMCNL and Loweth for violations of the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act (RICO), 18 U.S.C. §§ 1961-1968. After the lawsuits were consolidated before this Court, EMCNL moved to dismiss EBS's RICO claim.

On March 15, 2011, in response to EMCNL's motions to dismiss, the Court entered an order that addressed the issue of damages in its RICO standing discussion as follows:

[1] EMCNL is a successor entity to National Traveler's Life Insurance Company, which entered into some of the agreements at issue in this case. "EMCNL" refers to both entities without distinction.

> EMCNL next asserts that any damages to EBS have been remedied or mitigated, thus obviating any injury to EBS's business or property. EBS counters that it has only been partially reimbursed for the allegedly improper diversion of funds.
> The counterclaim states that EMCNL diverted $614,681.13 into a deferred compensation fund and additionally made $146,133.67 worth of matching contributions to that fund. The counterclaim also states that Loweth has paid EBS $144,000.00 and assigned EBS the monies held in the deferred compensation account, from which EMCNL has paid EBS $572,000.00. EMCNL asserts that the matching contributions should not be part of the damages calculation; consequently, the cash reimbursement amounts that [5] EBS has received (collectively, $716,000.00) are greater than the total amount of the claimed injury ($614,681.13, or $666,922.42 when including bonuses paid to Loweth), and therefore no injury remains. EBS contends that the matching contributions were part of the diverted funds and hence it has only received partial restitution.
> Because the counterclaim asserts that the payments were wrongfully diverted from EBS to Loweth's deferred compensation account, EBS suffered a loss. See Gallagher [v. Magner], 619 F.3d [823,] 841-42 [*982] [8th Cir. 2010]. However, it is difficult to determine from the counterclaim the amount of the actual loss to EBS since part of the diverted funds were matching contributions to a personal retirement account, and EBS has received some reimbursement from Loweth and EMCNL.
> [A]ccepting as true EBS's factual allegations that EMCNL knew that funds paid into Loweth's retirement account were really EBS funds, the diverted funds totaled $760,814.40 and EBS has only received $716,000.00 of those funds. See [Brown v. Medtronic, Inc., 628 F.3d 451, 461 (8th Cir. 2010)]. Thus, EBS has asserted facts showing that it has plausibly suffered a concrete financial loss sufficient [6] to confer statutory RICO standing on EBS at this point in the litigation. See Bowman, 985 F.2d at 384.

March 15, 2011, Order, 9-10, ECF No. 46. Central to the current matter, therefore, is the Court's prior determination only that EBS has stated a claim for relief that survives a motion to dismiss. The question remains unresolved whether EBS will be able to ultimately prove any amount of damages. The parties have not stipulated that there are damages in some amount. Thus, the Court is being asked to make a determination that may never be required.

In the instant motion for determination of a law point, EBS requests that before the parties commit significant resources and time to discovery, the Court rule on the following issue: "In calculating damages under RICO, would [EMCNL] get a credit for the monies that EBS recouped from [Loweth] and EMCNL before or after trebling?" EBS's Mot. for Determination of a Law Point ¶¶ 1, 3, ECF No. 60.

II. DISCUSSION

The Court is asked to decide whether, in this case, civil RICO treble damages would be calculated on the total amount of funds allegedly diverted by Loweth and EMCNL from EBS or on the amount of funds allegedly owed to EBS after accounting [7] for the monies Loweth and EMCNL paid before the filing of this lawsuit. HN1[] The interpretation of a statute is a question of law for the Court. See Kaufmann v. Siemens Med. Solutions USA, Inc., 638 F.3d 840, 846 (8th Cir. 2011). This is an issue of first impression in this Circuit. Even more importantly, as it addresses the Court's jurisdiction, it would seem to raise issues of ripeness and the specter of an advisory opinion that the Court would be required to reject. U.S. Const. art. III, § 2, cl. 1; and see, e.g., Pub. Water Supply Dist. No. 8 of Clay Cnty. v. City of Kearney, Mo., 401 F.3d 930, 932 (8th Cir. 2005).

HN2[] Title 18 United States Code Section 1964(c) of the RICO Act provides that "[a]ny person injured in his business or property by reason of a violation of section 1962 may sue therefore in any appropriate United States district court and shall recover threefold the damages he sustains . . . ." (emphasis added).

The question before the Court turns on the meaning and breadth of "the damages he sustains" in § 1964(c). HN3[] "As with any question of statutory interpretation, [the Court's] analysis begins with the plain language of the statute." United States v. Jeanpierre, 636 F.3d 416, 425 (8th Cir. 2011) [8] (quoting Jimenez v. Quarterman, 555 U.S. 113, 118, 129 S. Ct. 681, 172 L. Ed. 2d 475 (2009)). RICO does not define damages; however, damages is a commonly understood term of art meaning the monetary relief awarded in the judicial system. See Black's Law Dictionary 445 (9th ed. 2009) (defining damages as "[m]oney claimed by, or ordered to be paid to, a person as compensation for loss or injury"); Webster's Third New International [*983] Dictionary 571 (Unabridged 2002) (defining damages as "the estimated reparation in money for detriment or injury sustained: compensation or satisfaction imposed by law for a wrong or injury caused by a violation of a legal right"); cf. Morissette v. United States, 342 U.S. 246, 263, 72 S. Ct. 240, 96 L. Ed. 288 (1952) ("[W]here Congress borrows terms of art in which are accumulated the legal tradition and meaning of centuries of practice, it presumably knows and adopts the cluster of ideas that were attached to each borrowed word in the body of learning from which it was taken and the meaning its use will convey to the judicial mind unless otherwise instructed."); Cont'l Ins. Cos. v. Ne. Pharm. & Chem. Co., Inc., 842 F.2d 977, 985 (8th Cir. 1988) (en banc) (noting that outside the insurance context "damages" can include [9] both legal and equitable monetary relief). HN4[] In the first clause of § 1964(c), Congress extends to individuals injured due to a violation of the criminal RICO statute the ability to allege civil RICO violations in federal court. However, because "damages" is modified by "he sustains," Congress' authorization for treble damages is dependent on the establishment of a defendant's RICO liability first, and the trebling is based on the damages caused by the injury proven for liability. In other words, the statute authorizes courts to treble actual damages,[2] which are defined as "[a]n amount awarded to a complainant to compensate for a proven injury or loss; damages that repay actual losses."[3] Black's Law Dictionary 445 (9th ed. 2009).

HN5[] Determining actual damages for an injury caused by a RICO violation does take into consideration restitution and mitigation. See Bieter v. Blomquist, 987 F.2d 1319, 1329 (8th Cir. 1993) ("Other courts have recognized [10] that civil RICO is 'a statutory tort remedy-simply one with particularly drastic remedies.' It follows then, that limitations on damages suggested by tort law would also apply to civil RICO." (citing Brandenburg v. Seidel, 859 F.2d 1179, 1189 (4th Cir. 1988), overruled on other grounds by Quackenbush v. Allstate Ins. Co., 517 U.S. 706, 116 S. Ct. 1712, 135 L. Ed. 2d 1 (1996))). In Bieter, the court acknowledged that the plaintiff was injured and concluded that defendant's argument that the plaintiff had no cognizable injury under RICO should be made to a jury under the rubric that the plaintiff failed to mitigate its damages. Id. The court held that a jury would be expected to consider the plaintiff's failure to mitigate. Id. Likewise, here the Court has concluded that EBS has asserted facts sufficient to maintain its RICO claim to this point in the litigation. However, like in Bieter, at this point in the litigation the Court is unable to determine any amount of actual damages.

EBS argues, however, that the weight of authority coupled with the rationale and policy behind RICO militate in favor of a holding that restitution and mitigation are not factored into the amount used to calculate treble damages.

EBS relies mainly [11] on Commonwealth of Pennsylvania v. Cianfrani, 600 F. Supp. 1364, 1365 (E.D. Pa. 1985), in which a member of the state senate placed two people on the commonwealth's payroll, although they never did any work for the commonwealth. After the senator pled guilty to charges of mail fraud and RICO violations, [*984] the commonwealth received an assignment of the senator's retirement funds and recouped the total amount of payments made to the "ghost" employees. Id. at 1366. The commonwealth then filed a civil RICO action, seeking only RICO treble damages. Id. at 1365. The senator contended that the commonwealth was not entitled to RICO treble damages because it "had set off the amount by which it was damaged before it instituted this suit." Id. at 1367. The Cianfrani court rejected the senator's argument, stating the senator's "interpretation would enable any person guilty of violating § 1962 to avoid imposition of treble damages by the simple device of making restitution before the injured person brings suit." Id. "To adopt such a restrictive reading of § 1964(c) would contravene Congress' mandate that the RICO statute be construed liberally to effectuate its remedial purposes." Id. The court found [12] analogous precedent in antitrust law that would not allow courts to "deduct from the amount of an unlawful overcharge any part of the injury which the victim had recouped." Id. Thus, Cianfrani stands for the proposition that a person adjudged guilty of a RICO violation should not be able to avoid civil RICO treble damages even if the victim has recouped its losses. Cianfrani is distinguishable, however, in that the parties in this case seek to know if RICO treble damages are available when there has been no finding or admission of guilt.[4] Moreover, the holding in Cianfrani is contrary to the direction in Bieter that HN6[] recouped losses should be considered in RICO cases.

[2] See the Court's March 15, 2011, Order, ECF 46, at 8-9.

[3] Black's Law Dictionary 449 (9th ed. 2009) defines treble damages as "[d]amages that, by statute, are three times the amount of actual damages that the fact-finder determines is owed" (emphasis added).

EBS also relies on Flintkote Co. v. Lysfjord, 246 F.2d 368, 397-98 (9th Cir, 1957), in which the court held that an antitrust conspirator who had been found guilty could not deduct $20,000.00 in restitution paid by a co-conspirator from the jury's $150,000.00 actual damages award for purposes of calculating [13] treble damages. The Flintkote court's conclusion was based on "firmly rooted principles of joint liability and the manifest objectives of antitrust laws in general and the treble damage provision in particular." Id. at 397. Flintkote addresses a distinct situation from that at issue here because in this case there is as of yet no liability, no fixed jury award for actual damages, and no joint and several liability for joint tortfeasors. The Court must again revisit the statutory authorization that applies treble damages at the point liability and some amount of damages have been determined to be "by him sustained." 15 U.S.C. § 15.

Inherent in the cases on which EBS relies that considered joint tortfeasor settlements or setoffs is the existence of some amount of actual damages. In Morley v. Cohen, 888 F.2d 1006, 1012-13 (4th Cir. 1989), the court determined that treble damages should be calculated on the amount the jury found in damages. Id. at 1013 (citing In re Nat'l Mortg. Equity Corp. Mortg. Pool, 636 F. Supp. 1138, 1151-52 (C.D. Cal. 1986) (holding that settlement payments are credited against actual damages after trebling); Cianfrani, 600 F. Supp. at 1368). Likewise, in Liquid Air Corp. v. Rogers, 834 F.2d 1297, 1310 (7th Cir. 1987), [14] wherein a defendant tried to return propane cylinders after trial as a set-off, the court held that such a set-off should only be deducted from the jury's actual damages award after trebling.

III. CONCLUSION

The Court certainly recognizes the practical utility of the determination the parties seek at this stage in the litigation. [*985] That practical benefit seems to collide, however, with the Court's jurisdictional limitations. The Court has attempted to work through the issue but finds the process risks moving from a judicial role to an advocacy role, which the Court must avoid. The Court will not proceed to make the determination sought by the parties absent clear and convincing authority establishing that the Court has jurisdiction to answer the treble damages question before a RICO liability finding has been conceded or found by the Court. Accordingly, the Court directs the parties to file supplemental briefs solely on the issue of whether the current motion is ripe for consideration or would necessarily involve an advisory opinion of the Court. Simultaneous briefs shall be filed on October 24, 2011.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

Dated this 26th day of September, 2011.

A Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6) motion tests the sufficiency of a complaint. Fed. R. Civ. P. 8 requires only a short and plain statement of the claim showing that the pleader is entitled to relief, in order to give the defendant fair notice of what the claim is and the grounds upon which it rests. Nonetheless, a plaintiff must provide more than labels and conclusions, and a formulaic recitation of the elements of a cause of action will not do. Specifically, factual allegations must be enough to raise a right to relief above the speculative level. The question is not whether the claimant will ultimately prevail but whether the complaint is sufficient to cross the federal court's threshold.

HN2[] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

To survive a motion to dismiss, a civil complaint must allege factual content that allows the court to draw the reasonable inference that the defendant is liable for the misconduct alleged. In essence, this is equivalent to the math teacher's admonition to "show your work" to explain the proffered answer. The complaint need allege only enough facts to state a claim of relief that is plausible on its face so as to test whether plaintiffs have nudged their claims across the line from conceivable to plausible. In other words, there needs to be enough fact to raise a reasonable expectation that discovery will reveal evidence of illegality. Certainly, such an assessment of the sufficiency of a complaint is a context-dependent exercise because some claims require more factual explication than others to state a plausible claim for relief.

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

HN3[] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

The applicable pleading standard to survive a motion to dismiss requires adherence to certain well-recognized parameters. For one, the court must consider only those facts alleged in the complaint and accept all of the allegations as true. Concomitantly, the court must also accept as true all reasonable inferences that may be drawn from the allegations and view those facts and inferences in the light most favorable to the non-moving party. Nonetheless, the court need not accept as true unsupported conclusions and unwarranted inferences or the plaintiff's bald assertions or legal conclusions. Finally, in considering a pleading's sufficiency, a court must consider only the complaint, exhibits attached to the complaint, and matters of public record, as well as undisputedly authentic documents if the complainant's claims are based upon these documents.

HN4[] Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

Under § 1 of the Sherman Act, every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, is declared to be illegal. 15 U.S.C.S. § 1. In order to sufficiently plead a Sherman Act § 1 claim in the Third Circuit, two essential requirements must be satisfied. First, the plaintiff must show that the defendant was a party to a contract, combination or conspiracy, and second, that the conspiracy to which the defendant was party imposed an unreasonable restraint on trade. Ultimately, under the conventional Third Circuit case law, a plaintiff seeking to establish a § 1 claim must prove: (1) concerted action by the defendants; (2) that produced anticompetitive effects within the relevant product and geographic markets; (3) that the concerted actions were illegal; and (4) that it was injured as a proximate result of the concerted action.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > General Overview

HN5[] Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

Considerable focus at the pleadings stage in antitrust suits is directed to the crucial question of whether the challenged anticompetitive conduct stems from independent decision or from an agreement, tacit or express, because § 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, does not prohibit all unreasonable restraints of trade but only restraints effected by a contract, combination or conspiracy. The essence of a § 1 claim is the existence of an agreement. In Sherman Act litigation, an agreement is sometimes also referred to as a conspiracy or concerted action. To fend off a motion to dismiss, plaintiffs must plead enough factual matter (taken as true) to suggest than an agreement was made. If a plaintiff expects to rely exclusively on direct evidence of conspiracy, its complaint must plead enough fact to raise a reasonable expectation that discovery will reveal this direct evidence of illegality. If the plaintiff alternatively expects to rest on the circumstantial evidence of parallel behavior, the complaint's statement of facts must place the alleged behavior in a context that raises a suggestion of a preceding agreement, not merely parallel conduct that could just as well be independent action.

HN6[] Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

Allegations of merely parallel conduct and a bare assertion of conspiracy are insufficient under the requisite pleading standard for a Sherman Act § 1, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, complaint because without more, parallel conduct does not suggest conspiracy, and a conclusory allegation of agreement at some unidentified point does not supply facts adequate to show illegality. Twombly makes clear that a claim of conspiracy predicated on parallel conduct should be dismissed if common economic experience, or the facts alleged in the complaint itself, show that independent self-interest is an obvious alternative explanation for defendants' common behavior. However, when a pleading alleges circumstantial facts, the pleading standard does not require consideration of whether the circumstantial evidence is sufficient to compel an inference of conspiracy; instead, the test for whether to dismiss a case at the pleading stage turns on the complaint's plausibility.

HN7[] Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

The concept of agreement, implicit or explicit, is central to the inquiry of whether a complaint is sufficient with respect to an individual defendant in an antitrust conspiracy case. In order to address the meat of a motion to dismiss, the key question is whether the complaint sufficiently alleges that the moving defendant joined the alleged agreement, conspiracy, or concerted action.

HN8[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

To evaluate the articulated allegations as to an individual defendant in the context of a multi-defendant, multi-faceted conspiracy, the conspiracy must not be compartmentalized. The character and effect of the conspiracy are not to be judged by dismembering it and viewing its separate parts, but only by looking at it as a whole. This maxim has been applied in a variety of contexts, including in consideration of motions to dismiss.

HN9[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Antitrust conspiracy allegations need not be detailed on a defendant-by-defendant basis. Individual defendants must have reasonable, not exhaustive, notice of the allegations, and such notice is achieved when the plaintiff states a plausible claim for relief against those defendants.

HN10[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

To provide reasonable notice to a specific defendant of the antitrust conspiracy claims against it, a complaint must plausibly suggest that the individual defendant actually joined and participated in the conspiracy. The plaintiff must allege that each individual defendant joined the conspiracy and played some role in it. At the same time, plaintiff need not plead each defendant's involvement in the alleged conspiracy in elaborate detail. Likewise, antitrust law has never required identical motives among conspirators, and even reluctant participants have been held liable for conspiracy.

HN11[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

A plaintiff's pleading burden is to offer allegations that plausibly suggest that the defendant agreed to the conspiracy, which, in the antitrust context, is a conscious commitment to a common scheme designed to achieve an unlawful objective. The plaintiff must show that the defendant was a party to a contract, combination or conspiracy; in other words, a unity of purpose or a common design and understanding or a meeting of minds or a conscious commitment to a common scheme. In short, the issue is whether the pleading delineates to some sufficiently specific degree that a defendant purposefully joined and participated in the conspiracy.

HN12[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

The court properly looks for more than mere repetitive generic reference to defendants tacked on to a conclusory verb form to connect an individual defendant to an actual agreement in an antitrust conspiracy. Simply using the global term "defendants" to apply to numerous parties without any specific allegations that would tie each particular defendant to the conspiracy is not sufficient. Conclusory, collective language is too convenient, too undisciplined, and too unfocused in light of exposures to litigation expense and disruption (even without ultimate liability) that are so great in antitrust (and other) cases. Such exposure ought to be limited to those who have been made at least reasonably aware of what they have done or failed to do, lest the litigants be left to wander aimlessly through the wilds and wilderness of discovery to no ultimate destination.

HN13[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

It may be that if demand is inelastic at the current market price, collusion to raise the price will be particularly attractive. And it also may well be that allegations that a market is characterized by economic factors that courts and antitrust experts and economists have found are conducive to collusive behavior, support an inference of plausibility. Nonetheless, under the applicable legal standards, plaintiffs are not absolved from specifically pleading allegations that plausibly suggest each defendant's agreement to or participation in the alleged conspiracy.

HN14[] Sherman Act, Claims

Participation in a trade group association or attending trade group meetings, even those meetings where key facets of an antitrust conspiracy allegedly were adopted or advanced, are not enough on their own to give rise to the inference of agreement to the conspiracy. Moreover, a mere opportunity to conspire does not, standing alone, plausibly suggest an illegal agreement because the defendants' presence at such trade meetings is more likely explained by their lawful, free-market behavior.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Evidence > Inferences & Presumptions > Inferences

HN15[] Sherman Act, Claims

Given that mere membership in a trade group or attendance at a meeting cannot alone sufficiently plead agreement to a conspiracy, active participation, rather than merely passive presence, becomes key in inferring agreement to the conspiracy and potential liability.

HN16[] Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

Attendance at industry trade shows and events is presumed legitimate and is not a basis from which to infer a conspiracy, without more. Moreover, even where some competitors have admitted to meeting to fix prices at or near trade shows and conferences, it is not reasonable to infer that another competitor in attendance at the same meeting had done likewise.

HN17[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Whether defendants' actions were benign unilateral business decisions made by the individual defendants or whether they represent concerted effort in violation of the Sherman Act are issues of fact which the court cannot decide on the pleadings and which require discovery prior to resolution.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Evidence > Inferences & Presumptions > Inferences

HN18[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

While mere membership, even when coupled with knowledge of wrongful conduct of an association, is insufficient to establish knowing participation in a conspiracy in violation of the Sherman Act, once attendance is coupled with a consistent later act, an inference of knowing participation is permissible.

Generally, a district court ruling on a motion to dismiss may not consider matters extraneous to the pleadings. When defendant corporate entities are not plausibly alleged to be directly liable; that is, are not plausibly alleged to have themselves entered into unlawful agreements, there must be some other basis imputing Sherman Act § 1, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, liability to those entities. This is because as a matter of well-settled common law, a subsidiary is a distinct legal entity and is not liable for the actions of its parent or sister corporations simply by dint of the corporate relationship. Indeed, absent some basis for imputing liability, subsidiary entities cannot automatically sustain liability under § 1 for any agreements to which the parent is a party.

A claim for a Sherman Act § 1, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, violation cannot merely rest upon allegations of common resources and membership between incorporated trade groups, much the same as such allegations cannot sustain a § 1 claim against corporate entities that have common management. There is nothing inherently illegal or actionable for separately incorporated trade groups to share a mailing address, a president, common leadership, or staff. Likewise, no nefarious conclusions can be drawn necessarily from the fact that meetings are held at the same time in the same town.

HN35[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

A court cannot automatically impute the conduct of a trade organization's leadership or staff to the trade organization. Certainly, a trade organization can be liable for antitrust violations of its agents premised on a theory of apparent authority. A principal will be liable for an antitrust violation if an agent acting with apparent authority violates the antitrust laws by conspiring with another person. As a corollary, however, plaintiffs must allege facts sufficient to demonstrate the agents were acting with the apparent authority of the trade organization. Apparent authority is the power to affect the legal relations of another person by transactions with third persons, professedly as agent for the other, arising from and in accordance with the other's manifestations to such third persons.

I. Introduction

This multidistrict litigation concerns an alleged conspiracy by egg producers and trade groups to restrict the domestic supply of eggs in violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act. A half dozen motions to dismiss await resolution. [1] The movants seek to dismiss the claimed antitrust violation asserted against them individually in the

[1] The motions are: Motion to Dismiss Direct Purchaser Second Consolidated Amended Complaint as to Defendant Michael Foods, Inc. (Doc. No. 236) (hereinafter, "Michael Foods Mot."); Defendant Daybreak Foods, Inc.'s Motion to Dismiss Direct Purchasers' Second Consolidated Amended Class Action Complaint (Doc. No. 233) (hereinafter, "Daybreak Mot."); Motion to Dismiss the Direct Purchasers' Second Consolidated Amended Class Action Complaint on Behalf of Defendant Rose Acre direct purchaser plaintiffs' Second Consolidated Amended Class Action Complaint (hereinafter, the "SAC") for not meeting the grade. They argue that the SAC is like a curate's egg: although the pleading arguably may have alleged sufficient facts in support of the antitrust conspiracy claim as to some defendants, the [*713] pleading is deficient with respect to each of the movants by failing to allege facts that they specifically were parties to the conspiracy. Cracking each motion ad seriatim, the Court grants the motions of Hillandale [2] Gettysburg L.P., Hillandale Farms Inc., and Hillandale Farms East, Inc. (collectively, the "Hillandale Entities"), and United Egg Association, and denies the remainder of the motions addressed in this Memorandum. [2]

II. Background

The Plaintiffs are direct purchasers of domestic eggs, [3] who brought suit in a number of jurisdictions, charging that defendant egg producers and trade groups engaged in a conspiracy to manipulate the supply of, and thereby fix prices for, domestically-sold eggs. The Judicial Panel on Multidistrict Litigation centralized the actions for coordinated pretrial proceedings before this Court. At the present stage, the SAC is the operative pleading for the direct purchaser plaintiffs, replacing or superceding all of the previously-filed individual and consolidated complaints. The various named Defendants responded to the SAC by answers or motions to dismiss, or, in some specific respects, both. The six motions at bar have been fully briefed [4] and illuminated by oral argument [4] and the parties' submissions of supplemental authorities they wished to bring to the Court's attention. The Court commends all of the attorneys for their stimulating advocacy.

III. Factual Allegations

Given the complexity of, and level of nuanced detail provided in, the SAC concerning the Defendants' alleged conduct, the industry structure and practices, and market implications, the Court limits the discussion to the SAC's core allegations. [5]

Farms, Inc. (Doc. No. 234) (hereinafter, "Rose Acre Mot."); Defendant Ohio Fresh Eggs, LLC's Renewed Motion to Dismiss the Direct Purchaser Plaintiffs' Second Consolidated Amended Class Action Complaint (Doc. No. 238) (hereinafter, "Ohio Fresh Mot."); Motion to Dismiss the Direct Purchaser Plaintiffs' Second Consolidated Amended Class Action Complaint on Behalf of Defendants Hillandale-Gettysburg, L.P., Hillandale Farms, Inc., and Hillandale Farms East, Inc. (Doc. No. 240) (hereinafter, "Hillandale Entities Mot."); [3] and United Egg Association's Motion to Dismiss the Claims Against it in Direct Purchasers' Second Consolidated Amended Class Action Complaint (Doc. No. 232) (hereinafter, "UEA Mot.").

Plaintiffs' responded in opposition to these motions in a memorandum (Doc. No. 316) (hereinafter, "Pls.' Resp."). Defendants also filed reply briefs (hereinafter, "Reply").

[2] Other pending motions in this litigation will be addressed separately in other memoranda.

[3] The direct purchaser plaintiffs are comprised of two subclasses—one subclass consists of entities that directly purchased shell eggs from Defendants and the other subclass consists of entities that directly purchased egg products from Defendants. The SAC defines "shell eggs" as "both 'table eggs' (generally purchased by retail entities for re-sale [sic] to the consuming public) and 'breaking eggs' (generally purchased by food service entities for further processing)." SAC ¶ 2. "Egg products" are defined as "breaking eggs that have been removed from their shells and processed into dried, frozen or liquid forms." Id. Although Defendants filed a separate joint motion seeking to dismiss Plaintiffs' claim pertaining to "egg products" (Doc. Nos. 235 and 237), because that motion is still pending, for present purposes the SAC's definition for "eggs" will apply. The dispute over the definition is not germane to the resolution of the motions addressed in this Memorandum.

[4] The transcripts [5] of the oral argument on the motions to dismiss the SAC are contained in the record at Docket Nos. 490 and 424 (hereinafter, respectively, "Day 1 Tr." and "Day 2 Tr.").

[5] The SAC is certainly not vulnerable to any criticism for being too lean or brief. Indeed, in some respects a thorough consideration of these motions demanded something of a hunt through a pleading that could be described as repetitious or organizationally puzzling. However, the Court is not unaware of the good faith concern among the pleadings' drafters that brevity may expose the proponent to heightened risks of dismissal. In any case, the generous inclusion of verbiage added to the Court's concern for careful examination.

Plaintiffs articulate their legal theory as follows:

> Plaintiffs allege herein a conspiracy among Defendants and certain unnamed co-conspirators where they agreed to fix, raise, maintain and/or stabilize the prices at which shell eggs and [6] egg products (collectively, "eggs") were sold in the United States, including by controlling the aggregate supply of domestic [*714] eggs. Each Defendant knew that it could not do this by itself and that supply needed to be "restrained" by collective action. Thus, Defendants entered into an overarching agreement to manage the aggregate supply of eggs in the United States. During the Class Period [from January 1, 2000 to present], Defendants implemented this supply management conspiracy by agreeing to take several coordinated actions.

SAC ¶¶ 1, 481. [6]

Specifically, Plaintiffs list eight alleged "collective actions" undertaken by Defendants to advance the purported "overarching conspiracy" to manipulate the supply of eggs thereby affecting the price of eggs. See id. ¶¶ 11-18. Those eight actions allegedly enhanced the conspiracy by, in and of themselves, altering the supply and, hence, the price, of eggs.

Plaintiffs claim that the first collective action took place in 1999 and 2000 when Defendants established a "supply adjustment program." Through this program participants agreed to engage [8] in an immediate five-percent flock molt, a five-percent reduction of flock inventory in the ensuing six to twelve months, and the development of a hatch reduction program. Id. at ¶¶ 11, 187-89.

The second collective action allegedly involved the Defendants agreeing to a five-percent emergency flock reduction in 2001. Id. at ¶¶ 12, 195.

The third action occurred in 2002 when Defendants developed and undertook an early molt and hen disposal plan. Id. at ¶¶ 13, 198-200.

The fourth collective action involved Defendants agreeing to adopt guidelines on cage space densities for hens. These guidelines were part of an "animal husbandry" or "animal welfare" program that became known as the "United Egg Producers Certification Program" (hereinafter, the "UEP Certification Program" or the "Program"). Id. ¶ 14. By complying with the guidelines, producers could sell "UEP-certified eggs" and affix a logo on packages to reflect that the eggs were certified under the Program. Id. ¶¶ 82, 310. The Program figures prominently in the Plaintiffs' claims and is discussed in greater detail below.

The fifth alleged collective action involves the execution of an early molt and flock disposal plan in mid-2004. Id. [9] ¶ 15.

For the sixth collective action, Plaintiffs claim that Defendants held an "Egg Industry Economic Summit" to coordinate an immediate supply reduction scheme via a written commitment to reduce supply. See id. ¶¶ 16, 288-93. The SAC appears to quote without citation the purported language on this "commitment sheet": "Option [*715] #1 To dispose of hens that are currently scheduled for disposal between January 1 and April 30, 2005 four (4)

[6] A propos of the immediate preceeding footnote, subsequent paragraphs in the 520-paragraph SAC reiterate this theory. See, e.g., id. ¶ 10 ("During the Class Period, Defendants agreed to take many joint collective actions as part of the industry's overarching conspiracy that was designed to fix, raise, maintain, and/or stabilize the prices of shell eggs and egg products, including but not limited to significant efforts to manage and/or reduce supply."); id. ¶ 182 ("Defendants undertook a coordinated effort to restrict egg supply through various means that has artificially fixed, maintained and/or stabilized egg prices to supracompetitive levels [7] throughout 2000 to the present."); id. ¶ 517 (" . . . Defendants and their co-conspirators engaged in a continuing contract, combination and conspiracy in unreasonable restraint of interstate trade and commerce in violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act, which had the purpose and effect of fixing, raising, maintaining and/or stabilizing the prices of eggs at artificially high, non-competitive levels in the United States."). Plaintiffs also state in their brief opposing the motions: "the Complaint alleges one comprehensive conspiracy to reduce the supply of eggs implemented through a variety of separate but related components." Pls.' Resp. at 34.

weeks earlier than previously scheduled;" or "Option #2 To reduce their December 1, 2004 flock size by 5% between the dates of January 1 through April 30, 2005." Id. ¶ 290; see also id. ¶ 293.

As part of the seventh collective action, according to Plaintiffs, Defendants required through the UEP Certification Program "that a company must commit to implementing the welfare guidelines on 100% of all production facilities." Id. ¶ 17. Specifically, the requirement was "that 100% of a producer's egg houses . . . be maintained in accordance with the [UEP Certification Program] guidelines in order for a company to sell 'UEP Certified' eggs." Id. ¶ 222.

Finally, the alleged eighth action was an export program. Plaintiffs claim that Defendants allegedly agreed to [10] export eggs at a loss in order to lower supply in the United States, and they agreed to reimburse each other to cover those losses. Id. ¶¶ 18, 329, 333-34.

As described by Plaintiffs, the Defendants' trade groups, United Egg Producers ("UEP"), United Egg Association ("UEA"), and United States Egg Marketers ("USEM"), who are also named Defendants, were central to this conspiracy. Defendant egg producers' memberships and participation in those trade groups allegedly facilitated the Defendants' "collective actions" that advanced the conspiracy.

Under the Plaintiffs' theory, through their "collective actions" Defendants sought to raise the price of eggs by capitalizing on certain market conditions particular to the domestic egg market. In particular, Plaintiffs charge that Defendants' objective was to take advantage of consumers' relatively inelastic demand for eggs, as well as the fact that eggs are commodities and have no market substitutes. Id. at ¶¶ 6, 152-56, 158. Defendants' actions were supposedly prompted by a desire to stabilize the egg market's volatile prices and supply. Prior to Defendants' coordinated actions, supply allegedly was cyclical, depending on the increase or decrease [11] of prices in the egg market. Id. at ¶ 7. Recognizing the market volatility and its impact on the industry and producers, Defendants allegedly pursued the coordinated actions to increase egg prices.

According to Plaintiffs, the Defendants' conduct purportedly achieved the desired outcome by decreasing egg production, thereby decreasing the supply of eggs and leading to increased egg prices. Plaintiffs point to various increases in egg prices from 2003 to 2009 and attribute those increases to reduced supply, claiming such a result is the ill-gotten product of the Defendants' conspiratorial conduct. See, e.g., id. ¶¶ 162-63, 166-70, 367, 369, 375, 377. Defendants, who were both shell egg and egg products producers, supposedly benefited from the overall reduced supply of eggs. Id. ¶ 408. Those Defendants who were egg products producers allegedly benefited by being able to market their egg products at an artificially increased price, even though they purchased shell eggs at inflated prices. Id. ¶ 409.

The Defendants, of course, have an entirely different take on the events recounted in the SAC, so much so that many of the Defendants challenge the sufficiency of the allegations in the SAC [12] even while tacitly acquiescing in the continuation of the core of Plaintiffs' claim at least beyond the Rule 12(b)(6) stage.

IV. Legal Standards

A. Motion to Dismiss Standard

As is well acknowledged, HN1[] a Rule 12(b)(6) motion tests the sufficiency of a complaint. [*716] Conley v. Gibson, 355 U.S. 41, 45-46, 78 S. Ct. 99, 2 L. Ed. 2d 80 (1957). Rule 8 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure requires only "a short and plain statement of the claim showing that the pleader is entitled to relief," in order to "give the defendant fair notice of what the . . . claim is and the grounds upon which it rests." Bell Atlantic Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 555, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007) (alteration in original) (quoting Conley, 355 U.S. at 47). Nonetheless, a plaintiff must provide "more than labels and conclusions, and a formulaic recitation of the elements of a cause of action will not do." Id. (citation omitted). Specifically, "[f]actual allegations must be enough to raise a right to relief above the speculative level." Id. The question is not whether the claimant will ultimately prevail but whether the complaint is "sufficient to cross the federal court's threshold." Skinner v. Switzer, 131 S. Ct. 1289, 1296, 179 L. Ed. 2d 233 (2011) (citation omitted).

HN2[] To survive a motion [13] to dismiss, a civil complaint must allege "factual content that allows the court to draw the reasonable inference that the defendant is liable for the misconduct alleged." Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 129 S. Ct. 1937, 1949, 173 L. Ed. 2d 868 (2009); see also Matrixx Initiatives, Inc. v. Siracusano, 131 S. Ct. 1309, 1323, 179 L. Ed. 2d 398 (2011). In essence, this is equivalent to the math teacher's admonition to "show your work" to explain the proffered answer. The complaint need allege "only enough facts to state a claim of relief that is plausible on its face" so as to test whether "plaintiffs . . . have . . . nudged their claims across the line from conceivable to plausible." Twombly, 550 U.S. at 570. In other words, there needs to be "enough fact to raise a reasonable expectation that discovery will reveal evidence of illegal[ity]." In re Ins. Brokerage Antitrust Litig., 618 F.3d 300, 319 (3d Cir. 2010) (alteration in original) (quoting Arista Records, LLC v. Doe 3, 604 F.3d 110, 120 (2d Cir. 2010)). Certainly, such an assessment of the sufficiency of a complaint is "a context-dependent exercise" because "[s]ome claims require more factual explication than others to state a plausible claim for relief." W. Penn Allegheny Health Sys., Inc. v. UPMC, 627 F.3d 85, 98 (3d Cir. 2010) [14] (citations omitted).

HN3[] The applicable pleading standard also requires adherence to certain well-recognized parameters. For one, the Court "must consider only those facts alleged in the complaint and accept all of the allegations as true." ALA, Inc. v. CCAIR, Inc., 29 F.3d 855, 859 (3d Cir. 1994) (citing Hishon v. King & Spalding, 467 U.S. 69, 73, 104 S. Ct. 2229, 81 L. Ed. 2d 59 (1984)); see also Twombly, 550 U.S. at 589 (stating that courts must assume that "all the allegations in the complaint are true (even if doubtful in fact)"). Concomitantly, the Court must also accept as true all reasonable inferences that may be drawn from the allegations, and view those facts and inferences in the light most favorable to the non-moving party. Revell v. Port Auth. of N.Y. & N.J., 598 F.3d 128, 134 (3d Cir. 2010), cert. denied, 131 S. Ct. 995, 178 L. Ed. 2d 825 (2011); Rocks v. Philadelphia, 868 F.2d 644, 645 (3d Cir. 1989).

Nonetheless, the Court need not accept as true "unsupported conclusions and unwarranted inferences," Doug Grant, Inc. v. Greate Bay Casino Corp., 232 F.3d 173, 183-84 (3d Cir. 2000) (quoting City of Pittsburgh v. W. Penn Power Co., 147 F.3d 256, 263 n.13 (3d Cir. 1998)), or the plaintiff's "bald assertions" or "legal conclusions," [15] Morse v. Lower Merion Sch. Dist., 132 F.3d 902, 906 (3d Cir. 1997). Finally, in considering a pleading's sufficiency, "a court must consider only the complaint, exhibits attached to the complaint, matters [*717] of public record, as well as undisputedly authentic documents if the complainant's claims are based upon these documents." Mayer v. Belichick, 605 F.3d 223, 230 (3d Cir. 2010) (citing Pension Benefit Guar. Corp. v. White Consol. Indus., Inc., 998 F.2d 1192, 1196 (3d Cir. 1993)), cert. denied, 131 S. Ct. 1607, 179 L. Ed. 2d 501 (2011).

While the foregoing discussion is familiar enough legal terrain—especially for the accomplished advocates involved in this litigation—given what follows in this opinion, it bears recounting the standards against which the pending motions and the SAC must be judged.

B. Application of Pleading Standard to Sherman Act § 1 Claims

HN4[] Under § 1 of the Sherman Act, "[e]very contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, is declared to be illegal." 15 U.S.C. § 1. The Third Circuit Court of Appeals has held that in order to sufficiently plead a Sherman Act Section 1 claim "two [16] essential requirements" must be satisfied. Ins. Brokerage, 618 F.3d at 315. "First, the plaintiff must show that the defendant was a party to a 'contract, combination . . . or conspiracy,'" and second, "that the conspiracy to which the defendant was party imposed an unreasonable restraint on trade." Id. (citations omitted).

Ultimately, under the conventional Third Circuit case law, a plaintiff seeking to establish a Section 1 claim must prove: "(1) concerted action by the defendants; (2) that produced anticompetitive effects within the relevant product and geographic markets; (3) that the concerted actions were illegal; and (4) that it was injured as a proximate result of the concerted action." Gordon v. Lewistown Hosp., 423 F.3d 184, 207 (3d Cir. 2005) (citing Petruzzi's IGA Supermarkets, Inc. v. Darling-Delaware Co., 998 F.2d 1224, 1229 (3d Cir. 1993) and Big Apple BMW, Inc. v. BMW of North Am. Inc., 974 F.2d 1358, 1364 (3d Cir. 1992)); see also Ins. Brokerage, 618 F.3d at 315 n.9 (recognizing that in addition to the "two essential requirements" plaintiffs must also prove two other elements relating to antitrust injury).

HN5[] Considerable focus at the pleadings stage in antitrust suits—and [17] particularly the present suit, given the motions at bar—is directed to the "crucial question" of whether "the challenged anticompetitive conduct stem[s] from independent decision or from an agreement, tacit or express" because Section 1 "does not prohibit [all] unreasonable restraints of trade . . . but only restraints effected by a contract, combination or conspiracy." Twombly, 550 U.S. at 553 (alterations in original) (internal quotation marks omitted); see also Ins. Brokerage, 618 F.3d at 315 (stating that the "existence of an agreement is the hallmark of a Section 1 claim"); Gordon, 423 F.3d at 207 ("The essence of a Section 1 claim is the existence of an agreement." (citing Mathews v. Lancaster Gen. Hosp., 87 F.3d 624, 639 (3d Cir. 1996)). In Sherman Act litigation, an agreement is "sometimes also referred to as a 'conspiracy' or 'concerted action.'" W. Penn Allegheny, 627 F.3d at 99 (citing Twombly, 550 U.S. at 553; Gordon, 423 F.3d at 207 & n.16).

To fend off a motion to dismiss, plaintiffs must plead "enough factual matter (taken as true) to suggest than an agreement was made." Twombly, 550 U.S. at 556. "[I]f a plaintiff expects to rely exclusively on direct evidence of conspiracy, [18] its complaint must plead 'enough fact to raise a reasonable expectation that discovery will reveal' this direct evidence" of illegality. Ins. Brokerage, 618 F.3d at 324 (quoting Twombly, 550 U.S. at 556). "[I]f the plaintiff alternatively [*718] expects to rest on the circumstantial evidence of parallel behavior, the complaint's statement of facts must place the alleged behavior in 'a context that raises a suggestion of a preceeding agreement, not merely parallel conduct that could just as well be independent action.'" Id. (quoting Twombly, 550 U.S. at 557).

For example, HN6[] allegations of merely parallel conduct and a "bare assertion of conspiracy" would be insufficient under the requisite pleading standard, because "[w]ithout more, parallel conduct does not suggest conspiracy, and a conclusory allegation of agreement at some unidentified point does not supply facts adequate to show illegality." Twombly, 550 U.S. at 556-57. [7] "Twombly makes clear that a claim of conspiracy predicated on parallel conduct should be dismissed if 'common economic experience,' or the facts alleged in the complaint itself, show that independent self-interest is an 'obvious alternative explanation' for defendants' common [19] behavior." Ins. Brokerage, 618 F.3d at 326. However, when a pleading alleges circumstantial facts, the pleading standard does not require consideration of "whether the circumstantial evidence . . . is sufficient to compel an inference of conspiracy; . . . [instead,] the test for whether to dismiss a case at [the pleading] stage turns on the complaint's 'plausibility.'" Text Messaging, 630 F.3d at 629 (emphasis in original).

HN7[] The concept of agreement, implicit or explicit, is also central to the inquiry of whether a complaint is sufficient with respect to an individual defendant in an antitrust conspiracy case. Here, as is true in many of these cases, in order to address the meat of a motion to dismiss, the key question is whether [20] the SAC sufficiently alleges that the moving defendant joined the alleged agreement, conspiracy, or concerted action.

HN8[] To evaluate the articulated allegations as to an individual defendant in the context of a multi-defendant, multi-faceted conspiracy, the conspiracy must not be "compartmentalized." The "character and effect of [the] conspiracy are not to be judged by dismembering it and viewing its separate parts, but only by looking at it as a whole." Continental Ore Co. v. Union Carbide & Carbon Corp., 370 U.S. 690, 699, 82 S. Ct. 1404, 8 L. Ed. 2d 777 (1962); see also Jung v. Ass'n of American Med. Colls., 300 F. Supp. 2d 119, 160 (D.D.C. 2004) (recognizing the same and that this "maxim has been applied in a variety of contexts, including in consideration of motions to dismiss"); In re Pressure Sensitive Labelstock Antitrust Litig., 566 F. Supp. 2d 363, 373 (M.D. Pa. 2008) ("[A] district court must consider a complaint in its entirety without isolating each allegation for individualized review."); In re

[7] The Supreme Court has cited several examples of allegations of parallel conduct that might suggest collusion sufficient to allege a § 1 Sherman Act claim. Twombly, 550 U.S. at 556 n.4; see also In re Text Messaging Antitrust Litig., 630 F.3d 622, 628 (7th Cir. 2010), cert. denied, 131 S. Given the nature of the conspiracy alleged in the SAC and the substance of the parties' arguments, however, no further discussion of these examples is required.

Blood Reagents Antitrust Litig., 756 F. Supp. 2d 623, 630-31 (E.D. Pa. 2010) ("Defendants' briefing attempts to dismember plaintiffs' Complaint in order to show how each allegation, in isolation, fails to sufficiently [21] aver plausibility. However, . . . the allegations in the Complaint must be viewed as a whole. . . . Twombly emphasized context." (citations omitted)); cf. Petruzzi's, 998 F.2d at 1230 ("[A] court should not tightly compartmentalize the evidence put forward by the nonmovant, but instead should analyze it as a whole to see if together it supports an inference of concerted action." (citation [*719] omitted)). In this regard, the Court is mindful of the parable of the blind men and the elephant in which a group of blind men try to agree on a description of an elephant solely on the basis of their own, individual limited perception, leading one (having felt only the tail) to assert that an elephant is rope-like, another (having felt only an ear) to declare that an elephant is a living fan, another (having felt only a leg) to describe the beast like a tree, another (having felt only a tusk) declaring an elephant to be a smooth, hard cone and so forth.

Similarly, courts have held that HN9[] antitrust conspiracy allegations need not be detailed on a defendant-by-defendant basis. See, e.g., In re OSB Antitrust Litig., No. 06-826, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 56573, 2007 WL 2253419, at *5 (E.D. Pa. Aug. 3, 2007) ("Antitrust conspiracy allegations [22] need not be detailed defendant by defendant."); In re TFT-LCD (Flat Panel) Antitrust Litig., 586 F. Supp. 2d 1109, 1117 (N.D. Cal. 2008) (acknowledging that a "complaint need not contain detailed 'defendant by defendant' allegations"). Individual defendants must have reasonable, not exhaustive, notice of the allegations, and such notice is achieved when the plaintiff states a plausible claim for relief against those defendants. See, e.g., OSB, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 56573, 2007 WL 2253419, at *6 (citing In re Elec. Carbon Prods. Antitrust Litig., 333 F. Supp. 2d 303, 313-14 (D.N.J. 2004)); see generally Twombly, 550 U.S. at 555 (discussing fair notice of a claim to a defendant).

HN10[] To provide reasonable notice to a specific defendant of the claim(s) against it, a complaint must plausibly suggest that the individual defendant actually joined and participated in the conspiracy. See OSB, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 56573, 2007 WL 2253419, at *5 ("[T]he plaintiff must allege that each individual defendant joined the conspiracy and played some role in it."); Jung, 300 F. Supp. 2d at 161 (recognizing a plaintiff's "burden of adequately alleging that a conspiracy to restrain trade existed in the first instance and that each defendant knowingly joined or agreed [23] to participate in the conspiracy"); Flat Panel, 586 F. Supp. 2d at 1117 (acknowledging that "the complaint 'must allege that each individual defendant joined the conspiracy and played some role in it because, at the heart of an antitrust conspiracy is an agreement and a conscious decision by each defendant to join it.'" (quoting Elec. Carbon, 333 F. Supp. 2d at 311-12)); In re Static Random Access Memory (SRAM) Antitrust Litig., 580 F. Supp. 2d 896, 904 (N.D. Cal. 2008) ("[Plaintiffs] now [at the motion to dismiss stage] only need to make allegations that plausibly suggest that each Defendant participated in the alleged conspiracy.").

At the same time, plaintiffs need not "plead each defendant's involvement in the alleged conspiracy in elaborate detail." Flat Panel, 586 F. Supp. 2d at 1117. Likewise, "[a]ntitrust law has never required identical motives among conspirators, and even reluctant participants have been held liable for conspiracy." Spectators' Commc'n Network Inc. v. Colonial Country Club, 253 F.3d 215, 221 (5th Cir. 2001) (citing Fineman v. Armstrong World Indus., Inc., 980 F.2d 171, 212 (3d Cir.1992)); see also Petruzzi's, 998 F.2d at 1243 (recognizing that for an antitrust [24] conspiracy, "defendants need not share the same motive. Rather, all that is required is that they each have a motive to conspire").

Instead, HN11[] a plaintiff's pleading burden is to offer allegations that plausibly suggest that the defendant agreed to the conspiracy, which, in the antitrust context, is a conscious commitment to a common scheme designed to achieve an unlawful objective. See Ins. Brokerage, 618 F.3d at 315 ("[T]he plaintiff must show that the defendant was a party to a 'contract, combination . . . or conspiracy' . . . . in other words, a 'unity of purpose or a common [*720] design and understanding or a meeting of minds' or 'a conscious commitment to a common scheme.'" (citations omitted) (internal quotation marks omitted)); Jung, 300 F. Supp. 2d at 158 (recognizing that "plaintiffs must allege 'that the challenged restraint is not the result of independent actions by the defendants,' but rather that 'the defendants consciously committed to a common agreement of an unreasonable restraint on trade'" [25] (citations omitted)). In short, the issue is whether the pleading delineates to some sufficiently specific degree that a defendant purposefully joined and participated in the conspiracy.

HN12[] The Court properly looks for more than mere repetitive generic reference to "Defendants" tacked on to a conclusory verb form to connect an individual defendant to an actual agreement in an antitrust conspiracy. "Simply using the global term 'defendants' to apply to numerous parties without any specific allegations that would tie each particular defendant to the conspiracy is not sufficient." *Elec. (citing Invamed, Inc. v. Barr Labs., Inc., 22 F. Supp. 2d 210, 221 (S.D.N.Y. 1998)). Conclusory, collective language is too convenient, too undisciplined, and too unfocused in light of exposures to litigation expense and disruption (even without ultimate liability) that are so great in antitrust (and other) cases. Such exposure ought to be limited to those who have been made at least reasonably aware of what they have done or failed to do, lest the litigants be left to wander aimlessly through the wilds and wilderness of discovery to no ultimate destination. See Twombly, 550 U.S. at 565 n.10 (recognizing that "a defendant seeking to respond to . . . allegations in the [27] § 1 context would have little idea where to begin" when a complaint fails to give notice of the claims against it); *In re Fla. V. Legal Discussion[8]

[8] There are several issues that this opinion does not address. For example, the Court does not confront here, or necessarily accept, that the SAC's allegations lead to the legal conclusion of a conspiracy, contrary to Plaintiffs' assertion that they allege facts of direct evidence of an actual agreement and parallel conduct suggestive of an agreement. Pls.' Resp. at 26-27. However, although the specific factual allegations proposing the existence of an overarching conspiracy and the "collective actions" in furtherance of the conspiracy are accepted as true for purposes of these motions, there is no basis for the Court to decide this issue because no motion at bar requires such a decision. Indeed, no movant has objected substantively to the sufficiency of the allegations of the antitrust § 1 claim generally, and [28] their arguments actually presume on some level that the SAC pleads a conspiracy and its particular parameters.

Additionally, Plaintiffs make much ado about the fact that no Defendant moved to dismiss the claim of an overarching conspiracy, and the fact that nine Defendants have chosen to answer the SAC outright. Pls.' Resp. at 20-22. These circumstances are of no moment to the issues at hand. They may be anomalous in an antitrust case of this size and scope. Nevertheless, the Court recognizes that defendants often make strategic choices in defending litigation, and one of those choices includes the option, perhaps for reasons of time or expense, of answering a complaint regardless of whether it satisfies the pleading standard.

Additionally, several of the individual Defendants argue that out of the SAC's hundreds of paragraphs, only a handful of those paragraphs name them specifically. They urge the Court to examine only those few paragraphs and allegations in considering their motions. To do so, however, would contradict the legal principles discussed, supra, that [29] require consideration of the entire conspiracy as alleged throughout a complaint rather than compartmentalizing the allegations.

Finally, pervasive in their defense of the SAC is Plaintiffs' reliance on allegations that particular features of or conditions in the egg market favor collusion. For example, Plaintiffs place much in the figurative basket that consumer demand for eggs is inelastic. HN13[] It may be that "[i]f demand is inelastic at the current market price, collusion to raise the price will be particularly attractive." Richard A. Posner, Antitrust Law 71 (2d ed. 2001). And it also may well be that "[a]llegations that a market is characterized by economic factors that courts and antitrust experts and economists have found are conducive to collusive behavior, support an inference of plausibility." In re Packaged Ice Antitrust Litig., 723 F. Supp. 2d 987 (E.D. Mich. 2010)

For the present motions, because Plaintiffs assert a theory of, in their words, an [*721] "overarching conspiracy" to restrict the supply of eggs, the question that each motion raises is whether Plaintiffs adequately alleged particularized facts that each Defendant undertook certain acts, or engaged in certain conduct, when viewed in the context of the entire SAC, that plausibly suggest that particular Defendant's embrace of that overarching conspiracy. Thus, the extent to which Plaintiffs have met their burden under Rule 12(b)(6) as [31] to each movant is now addressed.

A. Michael Foods' Motion to Dismiss

Michael Foods, Inc. claims that the SAC's specific allegations are insufficient to plausibly support the claim against it. According to Michael Foods, the "only factual allegations made against it with any degree of specificity" are that the company was a member of two defendant trade groups, UEP and UEA; that Michael Foods attended UEP and UEA meetings; and that Michael Foods partook in only one of the eight "coordinated actions" alleged to have advanced the overarching conspiracy—namely, joining the UEP Certification Program. Michael Foods Mot. at 4. [9] These allegations, it contends, are insufficient [*722] to suggest that it actually joined the overarching conspiracy to restrict the supply of eggs.

Certainly, pertinent legal authority is clear that HN14[] participation in a trade group association and/or attending trade group meetings, even those meetings where [32] key facets of the conspiracy allegedly were adopted or advanced, are not enough on their own to give rise to the inference of agreement to the conspiracy. See Ins. Brokerage, 618 F.3d at 349 ("[N]either defendants' membership in the [trade association], nor their common adoption of the trade group's suggestions, plausibly suggest conspiracy. . . . While these allegations [of defendant-brokers' membership in a trade group and their common adoption of the trade group's suggestions], indicate that the brokers had an opportunity to conspire, they do not plausibly imply that each broker acted other than independently . . . ." (citations omitted)); see also Travel Agent, 583 F.3d at 910-11 ("The fact that [defendants] gathered at industry trade association meetings during the seven-year period when defendants reduced commission rates should not weigh heavily in favor of suspecting collusion. . . . Moreover, a mere opportunity to conspire does not, standing alone, plausibly suggest an illegal agreement because [the defendants'] presence at such trade meetings is more likely explained by their lawful, free-market behavior." (citation omitted)); LaFlamme v. Societe Air France, 702 F. Supp. 2d 136 (E.D.N.Y. 2010) [33] ("[M]embership and participation in a trade association alone does not give rise to a plausible inference of illegal agreement." (citing Twombly, 550 U.S. at 567 n.12 and *In re Elevator Antitrust Litig., No. 04-CV-1178, 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 34517, 2006 WL 1470994, at 30-31 (S.D.N.Y. May 30, 2006), aff'd, 502 F.3d 47 (2d Cir. 2007)); In re Graphics Processing Units Antitrust Litig., 527 F. Supp. 2d 1011, 1024 (N.D. Cal. 2007) (determining that because "Plaintiffs have not pleaded that defendants ever met and agreed to fix prices; they plead at most that defendants had the opportunity to do so because they attended many of the same meetings.").

Indeed, the SAC alleges that Michael Foods' employees served on UEP or UEA committees, such as UEP's Area #3, Government Relations Committee, Environmental Committee, Quality Assurance/Food Safety Committee, and UEP Producer Committee for Animal Welfare, and the Long Range Planning Committee. SAC ¶ 48. At times, these Supp. 2d 538, 576 (M.D. Pa. 2009)*, and *In re Aftermarket Filters Antitrust Litig., MDL Docket No. 1957, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 104114, 2009 WL 3754041, at 3 (N.D. Ill. Nov. 5, 2009). Nonetheless, under [30] the applicable legal standards, Plaintiffs are not absolved from specifically pleading allegations that plausibly suggest each defendant's agreement to or participation in the alleged conspiracy. While the Court certainly considers the alleged market conditions and their "ripeness" for collusion to be a notable factor in considering the totality of the allegations against each defendant and is cognizant of them in its analysis of the issues presented in the motions at bar, the Court does not find those allegations in and of themselves dispositive of whether an individual defendant joined or participated in the offending conspiracy.

[9] By a stipulation between Plaintiffs and Michael Foods, the SAC's reference in Paragraph 331 to Michael Foods as participating in the export program was removed from the SAC. See Stipulation (Doc. No. 432). Thus, that feature of the alleged conspiracy is not discussed here.

employees are alleged to have held leadership positions in the trade groups as a whole, such as when Toby Catherman of Michael Foods was elected chairman of UEA in 2004 or when certain Michael Foods' employees served as UEP Board members. Id. ¶¶ 437, 284, 298. [34] Plaintiffs also charge that Michael Foods, as represented by its employees, inter alia, was present at UEP Board meetings where Defendants purportedly "extolled the benefits of decreased supply on the price of eggs, discussing their own companies' participation in these collective schemes, and encouraging other companies to participate in industry supply restriction efforts," id. ¶ 191; attended UEP Animal Welfare Committee meetings where attendees articulated that the "'animal husbandry' program's express purpose was to reduce supply," id. ¶ 211; attended UEP Annual Board meetings where the "100% rule" was approved by a 19-to-1 vote and where the Board approved a schedule for early hen disposal or, alternatively, five-percent flock size reduction, id. ¶¶ 220-21, [*723] 284-85; and attended a meeting of UEP's Producer Committee for Animal Welfare where a motion that "no new licenses to market Animal Care Certified eggs will be issued or renewed to producers who are not ACC certified" was approved by a 19-to-8 vote and a 26-to-2 vote approved a motion to permit "a license to market ACC eggs [to] be issued to shell egg processors and further egg processors who do not own or operate egg production [35] facilities," id. ¶ 310.

HN15[] Given that mere membership in a trade group or attendance at a meeting cannot alone sufficiently plead agreement to a conspiracy, active participation, rather than merely passive presence, becomes key in inferring agreement to the conspiracy and potential liability. With respect to the SAC, the only action that is attributed to Michael Foods at a trade group meeting was during an August 12, 2008 earnings conference call. During the call a Michael Foods representative purportedly made comments that, "Another factor supporting high egg prices is a short-term contraction in supply due to broad adoption of animal well-being programs on bird density," id. ¶ 402, and that "'[s]upply has been pressured through the animal wellbeing efforts, I think by the industry' and that the UEP Certification Program was the contributor to these material supply restrictions over the last year." Id. ¶ 403. However, the SAC does not allege that Michael Foods engaged in any other conduct at the trade group meetings beyond attendance or making comments that can be consistent with mere observation or opinion. As such, the SAC's allegations as to Michael Foods' involvement at trade group [36] meetings are at best alleged facts of an opportunity to conspire, not of agreement to or participation in the alleged conspiracy. Cf. Graphics Processing, 527 F. Supp. 2d at 1023 (HN16[] "Attendance at industry trade shows and events is presumed legitimate and is not a basis from which to infer a conspiracy, without more. . . . Moreover, even where some competitors have admitted to meeting to fix prices at or near trade shows and conferences, it is not reasonable to infer that another competitor in attendance at the same meeting had done likewise." (citing In re Citric Acid Litig., 191 F.3d 1090, 1097-98 (9th Cir. 1999))).

However, although "participation in various trade organizations . . . . cannot alone support Plaintiffs' claims, . . . such participation demonstrates how and when Defendants had opportunities to exchange information or make agreements." SRAM, 580 F. Supp. 2d at 903; *see also In re Transpacific Passenger Air Transp. Antitrust Litig., No. C 07—05634, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 49853, 2011 WL 1753738, at 14 (N.D. Cal. May 9, 2011) (same). And a fair reading of the SAC demonstrates that, by alleging that Michael Foods was certified under the UEP Certification Program, Plaintiffs have alleged more than mere [37] opportunity to conspire on the part of Michael Foods to suggest plausibly that Michael Foods joined the conspiracy.

The gravamen of the Michael Foods motion thus concerns whether the allegations that Michael Foods joined the UEP Certification Program plausibly suggest, in conjunction with the allegations of Michael Foods' involvement in the trade group associations and meetings, that the company joined the conspiracy. The SAC charges that Michael Foods was listed as a certified company under the UEP Certification Program as of September 30, 2008, and that Michael Foods "adopt[ed] UEP certified guidelines to reduce chick hatch (certification no. 345 and license agreement 509)," SAC ¶¶ 49, 448, yet the SAC lacks any alleged facts concerning when Michael Foods joined the Program and the context of its decision to join or seek certification. Noting the absence of such facts, Michael Foods argues that the SAC fails to "allege any facts suggesting that Michael [*724] Foods' eventual decision to sell UEP Certified Eggs was indicative of an unlawful agreement." Michael Foods Mot. at 8. Instead, Michael Foods contends that the SAC itself suggests that Michael Foods had a pro-competitive justification [38] for participating in the Program because "major retailers" such as Kroger Co. and Wal-Mart Stores, Inc. announced that they would only purchase UEP-certified eggs. See id. ¶ 236. Michael Foods further argues that such a pro-competitive justification is consistent with the possibility of independent action and the concomitant suggestion that it merely engaged in parallel conduct, rather than committed to a common conspiratorial and actionable scheme.

However, the Court concludes that the facts as set forth plausibly suggest that Michael Foods' certification under the Program, coupled with Michael Foods' other alleged conduct, can be seen as consistent with anti-competitive behavior and tend to exclude the possibility of independent action. This is because, at this stage of the litigation, the UEP Certification Program has been alleged to embrace anti-competitive features that have no apparent alternative pro-competitive rationale. [10] As the SAC alleges, a producer must follow the Program's guidelines, including those that are or would be inconsistent with independent self-interest, in order to attain and maintain certification under the Program. See, e.g., id. ¶ 222 (recognizing that [39] in order for a producer to sell "UEP-Certified" eggs, all "egg houses must be maintained in accordance with the supply restriction guidelines").

Without any legitimate business reasons for certain features of the UEP Certification Program, independent self-interest absent agreement tends to be excluded as an explanation for a defendant's certification and the requisite conduct to obtain such status. Hence, agreement to the overarching conspiracy is plausibly suggested when a company, such as Michael Foods, that attended meetings where allegedly key decisions instrumental to the conspiracy were made or where effects of alleged coordinated actions were extolled, is alleged also to have been certified under and participated in the UEP Certification Program and concomitantly followed the Program's guidelines. See James Julian, Inc. v. Raytheon Co., 557 F. Supp. 1058, 1065 n.18 (D. Del. 1983) (HN18[] "While mere membership, even when coupled with knowledge of wrongful conduct of the association, is insufficient to establish knowing participation . . . , once attendance is coupled with a consistent later act, an inference of knowing [41] participation is permissible." (citing Hunt v. Mobil Oil Co., 465 F. Supp. 195, 231 (S.D.N.Y.1978), aff'd mem., 610 F.2d 806 (2d Cir.1979)).

[*725] Several conventional features of the UEP Certification Program lead the Court to this conclusion.

The Program, as a whole, purportedly implements animal welfare guidelines and reportedly was intended to increase cage space for hens, yet particular features of the Program as alleged in the SAC are methods of restricting egg supply without an apparent legitimate business reason. As a point of reference for this discussion, the Court recognizes at the outset that, given the SAC's factual allegations concerning egg production, cage space guidelines to promote space for egg-laying hens, in and of themselves and without measures for additional cages, necessarily decrease egg supply: fewer hens per cage equate to fewer eggs produced. In the absence of explanations that hens achieve greater egg yields with lower bird density, it is not difficult to accept the plausibility of Plaintiffs' theory of which came first, fewer hens or fewer eggs.

The Court recognizes that unrelated to commercial goals, such guidelines can have apparently legitimate explanations [42] relating to promoting animal welfare. However, other specific aspects of the Program ostensibly lack potentially pro-competitive justification. In particular, the SAC alleges that the Program relied on certified producers to reduce bird density by reducing chick hatch over a phased period of time and thereby achieve the cage space requirements. SAC ¶ 203 ("Defendants decided to implement . . . cage space recommendations as a long term chick hatch reduction program . . .[,] later known as the 'UEP Certified Program.'"); see also id. ¶ 253 (identifying chick hatch reduction as a feature of the Program); id. ¶ 206 (describing the desired cage space per [10] This is not to say Plaintiffs' characterization of the Program in the SAC is necessarily true or without legitimate explanation, but determinations of such inquiries are not appropriate at this time. See Standard Iron Works, 639 F. Supp. 2d at 895, 902 ("While more innocent inferences can be drawn from [Defendants' conduct] it is not Plaintiffs' burden to allege facts that cannot be squared with the possibility of unilateral action. . . . HN17[] Whether [Defendants' actions] were benign unilateral business decisions made by the individual Defendants or whether they represent concerted effort in violation of the Sherman Act are issues of fact which [this Court] cannot decide on the pleadings and which require discovery prior to resolution.'" (citations omitted)); *cf. Transpacific Passenger, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 49853, 2011 WL 1753738, at 14 ("The communications discussed herein, as well as numerous others, might well have legitimate explanations. But, at this stage in the litigation, they seem to show would-be competitors discussing the raising or matching of prices."). Moreover, [40] while it is possible that there are innocent explanations for certain features of the Program, it is not within the Court's purview to weave them out of whole cloth in the absence of a documented factual record.

hen); id. ¶ 464 (describing the Animal Welfare Committee's approval in 2006 of a policy that allows "any new company now making an 'Application for Certification' to come on to the program by meeting UEP's currently required hatch schedule for cage space rather than depopulating existing flocks"). Chick hatching is the means producers use to acquire their egg-layer stock. Id. ¶¶ 125-28. Thus, a producer's reduction in chick hatch would reduce the available stock of hens for egg production and, logically, the attendant output of eggs. Michael [43] Foods, like the other Defendants that have moved to dismiss, has not proffered any pro-competitive explanation (predicated upon the SAC or otherwise) for why the Program requires this particular vehicle to reduce bird density per cage. Based on the facts recounted in the SAC, such an alternative explanation is not discernable. Reducing the supply of egg-laying hens as a general practice, in the absence of agreement, would be contrary to an individual egg producer's business interests. This is particularly true because egg-layers have a short productive cycle—"the majority of hens are between 100 and 130 weeks of age when they reach the end of their egg production cycle," id. ¶ 134, and new, younger egg-layers would continually be needed for egg production. [11]

[726] Furthermore, the Program's requirement to reduce chick hatch, which, as alleged, has no apparent limitations as to hatching numbers or duration of the practice, negates Michael Foods' intimations that adherence to cage space limits would not prevent a producer from reallocating its hens by increasing its overall number of cages or barns, thereby producing more eggs, and demonstrating that its certification under the UEP Certification Program is not indicative of an unlawful agreement. Michael Foods Mot. at 8. A certified producer could not fill additional cages if it reduced its overall supply of egg-laying hens by engaging in chick hatch [45] reduction. Moreover, contrary to Michael Foods' argument on this score, Plaintiffs have alleged "[a]s part of these [UEP Certified] guidelines* . . . Defendants also agreed not to add capacity or make up for the lost hens that would result through reduced cage densities . . . ." SAC ¶ 208 (emphasis added). [12]

[11] Moreover, a rational individual producer would seek to maintain, if not increase, the number of hens in order to promote its egg supply consistent with economic theory applicable to a market where demand is inelastic. The SAC avers that the nature of demand for eggs is indeed inelastic. See id. ¶ 153 ("[D]emand for eggs is relatively inelastic — that is, consumers do not purchase fewer eggs when prices rise . . . ."); see also [44] id. ¶¶ 154-56. An individual profit-maximizing producer facing an inelastic demand curve has the incentive to maintain or increase its individual product supply in order to maintain or increase market share. See, e.g., [Blomkest Fertilizer, Inc. v. Potash Corp. of Saskatchewan, 203 F.3d 1028, 1039 (8th Cir. 2000)] (Gibson, J., dissenting) ("The effect of this inelastic demand is that low prices are bad for the producers because the low price does not result in greater sales, except insofar as one producer can take sales away from other producers.").

[12] Michael Foods argues that "conclusory assertions or accusations of an agreement not to add capacity like the [assertions] in [P]aragraph 208 which are unaccompanied by any factual allegations cannot state a claim against Michael Foods." Day 1 Tr. at 77:11-14. However, although that factual claim in Paragraph 208 uses the generic "Defendants," the allegation goes on to describe the parameters of the UEP Certified Program's guidelines generally, and by virtue of being a certified producer, Michael Foods allegedly is required to follow the Program's guidelines in order to be certified.

Additionally, Michael Foods' argument that it could still increase its overall number of hens by simply having more hen houses is also discredited by the allegations in the SAC in other ways. For one, the argument has no factual basis in the SAC because the pleading does not contain any allegation that [46] Michael Foods, or any other Defendant whose motion is pending, increased its hen numbers while participating in the UEP Certification Program.

Notably, the SAC also alleges that producers were discouraged from building new hen houses. See, e.g, id. ¶ 256 (describing a July 2003 UEP newsletter articled entitled, "Word of Caution" which purportedly stated: "As producers continue to reduce their layer house capacity to meet the UEP Animal Husbandry Guidelines, please don't make the mistake of building new facilities to replace the lost number of birds."). Plaintiffs additionally allege, albeit as to years prior to Michael Foods' alleged joining the Certification Program, that chick hatch reduction was credited for reducing overall hen numbers. See, e.g., id. ¶¶ 258-59 (describing an "August 2003 editorial by Gene Gregory of UEP entitled 'Reason Why Industry Could Have Period of Profitability'" articulating that "[s]ince th[e] beginning date [of the "hatch reduction to meet the animal husbandry guidelines" in April 2002] the hatch has been reduced by 14.7 million pullets in comparison to the same period year earlier"); id. ¶ 281 (noting that a July 16, 2004 UEP newsletter reported that "Two [47] sources, one of which is the animal welfare audits, have confirmed to UEP that animal care certified companies have in fact reduced their hen numbers in existing houses").

[*727] Another alleged feature of the Program involves guidelines that prohibit the practice of backfilling. Id. ¶ 429; see also id. ¶ 306 (describing the UEP Board of Directors' decision in 2004 to incorporate a prohibition on backfilling in the Program's guidelines). Backfilling is the practice of replacing hens lost from mortality or illness in [49] a flock with "pullets," which are "young female chickens that will become egg-laying hens when they are sexually mature." Id. ¶¶ 23 n.1, 126. Thus, backfilling prevents the attrition of egg-laying hens, and, as a corollary, the prohibition of the practice promotes attrition and the consequent reduction in egg production. This prohibition, as described in the SAC, also appears consistent with supply restriction and further appears contrary to economic self-interest in the absence of an anti-competitive agreement. [13] The Program allegedly places such an emphasis on prohibiting backfilling that the guidelines mandate a severe penalty for engaging in backfilling: producers "automatically fail[] their audit" if they backfill. Id. ¶ 429. [14]

Even assuming, arguendo, Michael Foods turned tail against the apparent trend of other certified producers' alleged reduction of chick hatch, and instead increased its overall hen population, the SAC's allegations still undermine Michael Foods' argument. The SAC suggests that there were philosophies prevalent in the egg industry that not every producer needed to engage in every activity geared to decrease supply in order for such a result to occur and that adding more hen housing would not be detrimental to achieving the alleged goal of decreasing supply. See, e.g., id. ¶ 193 (describing a document, dated August 2011, that Defendants allegedly distributed, which stated, "[T]here should be a core segment of the industry that is willing to reduce egg supply in order to achieve profitable egg prices" (emphasis added)); id. ¶ 305 (describing a November 15, 2004 Feedstuffs article that examined "problems of oversupply and backfilling" in the egg industry and noting that "[c]easing to backfill houses would fit [Gene] Gregory's [48] suggestion to the [UEP] marketing committee that 'you don't need a plan to reduce the hatch; you don't need a moratorium on new housing: You need to get rid of old hens.'" (alterations in original)). As such, in the world depicted by the SAC, the act of increasing hen numbers, even while UEP-certified, would not necessarily mean that Michael Foods had not consented to or participated in the alleged conspiracy. Nonetheless, when considering all aspects of the Program as alleged (which the Court continues to discuss, infra) and in light of the other allegations as to Michael Foods and the overall alleged conspiracy as pled, the Court determines that Michael Foods' participation in the UEP Certified Program—even if Michael Foods did increase its hen numbers—would still suggest that Michael Foods agreed to and participated in the alleged conspiracy.

[13] The facts alleged in the SAC provide no grounds for the Court to infer that a prohibition on backfilling could serve some possible legitimate business purpose, such as animal husbandry practices, animal welfare, or otherwise.

[14] Reporting and auditing practices are alleged components of the UEP Certification Program to ensure compliance with the Program's guidelines. Plaintiffs have alleged that such practices included certified producers self-reporting [50] their compliance in monthly compliance reports to UEP. Id. ¶¶ 232, 504. Passing an annual audit, which the SAC never directly describes, also appears to be a predicate to becoming and remaining certified under the Program. Id. ¶¶ 423, 428, 429.

In their arguments, Plaintiffs broadly assert that the audit process was not based upon an interest in promoting animal welfare, and they attempt to assign some significance to the fact that there is an apparent disparity in the Program's penalties in the auditing process, claiming that the audits did not go to penalizing animal welfare violations, but instead to "ensur[ing] only that producers were restricting supplies." Pls.' Resp. at 11. In support, Plaintiffs contrast the guidelines on certain animal husbandry practices that purportedly promote humane treatment with those that ostensibly appear to promote supply restriction methods. They note that "toxic ammonia concentrations, cruel killing methods and failure to remove dead birds from cages daily only cost producers a five (5) point deduction on their annual audit,"id. ¶ 428, whereas "a producer automatically fails their [sic] audit if they [sic] violate cage spacing formulas, engage in [51] a procedure known as 'backfilling.'" Id. ¶ 429.

However, the SAC appears to undermine this argument because an audit failure is also the penalty for using starvation induced molting, which would surely seem to be an inhumane practice. Id. Generally, molting is a process employed by producers in an effort to obtain a higher level of egg production from a given flock of hens. Id. ¶ 130. The impact of molting is a temporary cessation in egg production for approximately eight weeks. Id. Following this period, "[p]ost-molt egg production will increase such that peak egg production in the flock reaches about 80 percent" for a short duration. Id. ¶ 132. As alleged in the SAC, in addition to starvation induced molting, producers can induce molting by "reduc[ing] light simulation (artificial day length) and impos[ing] dietary feed restrictions (including limiting food and water or providing diets of low nutrient density)." Id. ¶ 131. Plaintiffs contend that molting is a supply restrictive practice because it "reduces the supply of eggs." Id. ¶ 130.

Accepting, arguendo, that the practice of molting restricts supply, it theoretically would be a desirable practice to promote generally in order to [52] advance the alleged conspiracy. However, given that Plaintiffs plead that one method of molting [*728] The Program also required as a condition of certification that all of a producer's egg houses be maintained in accordance with the Program, and, implicitly, with the guidelines requiring chick hatch reduction and prohibiting backfilling. Id. ¶ 222. The SAC describes this [53] 100% rule as requiring "a company [to] commit to implementing the welfare guidelines on 100% of all production facilities regardless of how or where eggs may be marketed." See id. ¶ 221 (emphasis added)); id. ¶ 17 (same). [15] It is unclear from the SAC's facts what the legitimate business purpose may be in requiring that all of a producer's facilities meet certification guidelines in order to obtain certification. Indeed, there is no apparent reason, and there are no allegations to suggest, why an independent, self-interested egg producer voluntarily would constrain all of its facilities, and thereby its entire production, without regard for consumer egg preferences, which could include desires for certified and non-certified eggs. See, infra (recognizing that the facts in the SAC do not allege that the entire universe of egg consumers demanded UEP-certified eggs and that some consumers purchased non-certified eggs). Plaintiffs have averred that the 100% rule "was implemented solely to ensure that flock sizes were further reduced in line with the goals of the conspiracy . . . ." Id. ¶ 223.

Also, the constructs of the UEP Certification Program and marketing licensing policies, as alleged, are such that there is no apparent legitimate business purpose for companies to elect to follow them absent agreement, and raise similar supply constraint issues as the 100% rule because they preclude a company from producing non-certified eggs and marketing certified eggs. According to an August 2006 UEP newsletter, "The use of the 'License Agreement' will allow Non-Certified companies to purchase eggs from 'UEP Certified' companies for the marketing of 'Certified' eggs." Id. ¶ 464. [55] The SAC alleges that Michael Foods possessed just such a marketing license under "license agreement 509." Id. ¶ 448. Allegedly, however, the Program would not allow a company that produced non-certified eggs to obtain a marketing license for certified eggs, id. ¶ 310, with the apparent exception being, as reported by the August 2006 UEP newsletter, that licenses could be given to "UEP/UEA egg production companies [that] hav[e] made a commitment to meet [*729] the 100% rule while in the process of implementing the cage space requirements of UEP's hatch schedule." Id. ¶ 464. In contrast, so long as a company did "not own or operate egg production facilities," that company could receive a marketing license for certified eggs. Id. ¶ 310. Similar to the 100% rule, it is seemingly inconsistent for rational companies that are both producers and marketers to restrict voluntarily their product offerings, in both production and marketing capacities, only to certified eggs in the absence of an agreement given the state of consumer demand for eggs. Furthermore, that the licensing agreement to market eggs was contingent on whether a company had production facilities and the added requirement that those [56] facilities comply with or be "committed to" the 100% rule equally appears to be without legitimate business explanation in the absence of an anti-competitive agreement. [16] triggers an automatic audit failure—notably, the method that, at least by virtue of comparison, appears to be inhumane since it relies on starving hens outright—the audit penalty system does not conform to the Plaintiffs' characterization that the audit penalties align uniformly with the goals of the alleged conspiracy. This particular line of argument thereby does little to support Plaintiffs' broader argument that the audit process was not based upon an interest in promoting animal welfare.

Of course, this is not to say that the auditing process might not have been used in some form to further the alleged conspiracy. After all, the auditing process imposes a severe penalty for backfilling, which, as the Court discussed above, has no apparent legitimate business purpose as pled and appears consistent with supply restriction.

[15] The Court recognizes that although Michael Foods participated in the UEP Certification Program, [54] 100% of its facilities may not have complied with the guidelines. Plaintiffs aver that an August 2006 UEP newsletter reported that the "Animal Welfare Committee approved the use of a Non-Certified License Agreement for . . . UEP/UEA egg production companies having made a commitment to meet the 100% rule while in the process of implementing the cage space requirements of UEP's hatch schedule." Id. ¶ 464. Because Michael Foods allegedly had a license agreement, specifically, license agreement 509 (as well as certification no. 345), id. ¶¶ 49, 448, it may have only made the "commitment to meet the 100% rule."

[16] The Court does not find that the SAC on its face alleges any alternative explanations for becoming certified in order to obtain or retain a marketing license. The Court recognizes that in 2005 the UEP's Producer Committee for Animal Welfare voted to approve a motion that instituted the policy "that no new licenses to market . . . Certified eggs will be issued or renewed to producers who are not . . . certified." Id. ¶ 310. According to the SAC, the language of the motion ostensibly articulated the purposes for doing so: specifically protecting the integrity of the Program and logo due to "the difficulty in preventing the commingling of" certified and non-certified eggs and "to treat all egg producers equally." Id. ("One motion stated, "In order to

Contrary to Michael Foods' contention that the SAC on its face provides a pro-competitive justification for joining the UEP Certification Program—namely, consumer demand—the pleading contains no allegations that would suggest that egg consumers so effectively clamored for UEP-certified eggs as to compel self-interested producers to choose to participate in the Program and thereby commit 100% of their facilities to the guidelines, particularly in the face of alternatives. The SAC does contain certain allegations that the Food Marketing Institute, a grocers' trade organization, "mandate[d] the UEP seal for all egg products used by organization members," id. ¶ 234, and that Kroger and Wal-Mart, who are "major retailers," announced that they would only purchase UEP-certified [58] eggs, id. ¶ 236. Additionally, Plaintiffs averred that there was an expectation, as published by the industry publication, Feedstuffs, in 2004, that other consumers would follow Kroger and Wal-Mart's suit in demanding only UEP-certified eggs. Id. ¶ 236.

Apart from these allegations, however, nothing else in the SAC suggests that UEP-certified eggs were in high demand by consumers. Instead, the SAC contains the allegation that by failing to become certified, an egg producer "may not be able to market their eggs or sell them through many major retail outlets." Id. ¶ 235 (emphasis added). Indeed, the SAC contains several allegations that suggest that consumers purchased non-certified eggs. For example, the Albertson's grocery chain allegedly purchased eggs from Sparboe that were not UEP-certified. Id. ¶¶ 241-42. The SAC also contains the allegation—arguably [*730] of dubious significance—that another producer, Kreider Farm Eggs, after it withdrew from the Program, sold non-certified eggs to an unnamed "loyal customer." Id. ¶ 244. Additionally, the SAC raises the inference that consumer preferences concerning UEP-certified eggs were malleable because Wal-Mart reportedly entertained the possibility [59] of purchasing eggs produced under an alternative animal husbandry program developed by Sparboe in 2009. See id. ¶ 249. [17] Furthermore, on a more global level, there certainly exists an inherent consumer interest in, if not outright demand for, non-certified eggs because—and this is a fundamental premise of this litigation—they are cheaper than UEP-certified eggs and generally indistinguishable (notwithstanding marketing and production practices), given that they are homogenous, commodity goods, id. ¶ 158. [18] Thus, despite Michael Foods' urging to consider its participation in the Program to be an independent action prompted by consumer demand, the Plaintiffs' pleading on its face does not provide an "obvious alternative explanation," Twombly, 550 U.S. at 568, and cannot support inexorably the required inference that the level and elasticity of such demand prompted Michael Foods to become certified.

In a similar vein, Michael Foods' pro-competitive argument is also undermined by the SAC's allegation that alternative animal welfare programs could accomplish the welfare goals through less restrictive means. Specifically, the SAC avers, "Sparboe had designed its own internal 'husbandry' program which was not focused on restricting supply, in order to provide specific eggs to some customers (such as Wal-Mart) that wanted these kinds of products." SAC ¶ 249. It follows that the UEP Certification Program was not an exclusive, or even a sensible or successive, means of advancing animal welfare. [61] The alleged existence of such an alternative to the UEP protect the integrity of the ACC program and logo and in view of the difficulty in preventing the commingling of certified eggs with non-certified eggs and to treat all egg producers equally it is hereby moved . . . .").

However, a fair reading of this allegation does not [57] suggest that these were the Committee members' actual reasons for voting for the motion. Nonetheless, these "purported" explanations for why the Committee approved the motion cannot be imputed as the rationale for why companies would choose to become or remain certified in order to have marketing licenses, and as such, the Court does not consider them alternative explanations for seeking to obtain a marketing license.

[17] Ostensibly, the SAC also could be read to suggest that Wal-Mart, despite previously announcing that it would only purchase UEP-certified eggs as of January 1, 2003, id. ¶ 236, was one of Sparboe's active customers in 2009, apparently purchasing eggs from Sparboe when it was no longer UEP-certified. [60] See id. ¶ 248 ("In 2009 . . . UEP contacted Sparboe customer, Wal-Mart, in an attempt to discourage the company from purchasing Sparboe's eggs that had not been certified by the UEP.").

[18] By recounting these SAC allegations, the Court is making no factual, legal or value judgments that would venture into the marketing or related fields or belief systems concerning "free-range," "cage free," "organic," or other concepts advanced in current day agricultural production, product advertising, marketing or consumption. See also id. ¶¶ 141, 483 (recognizing such "specialty" eggs are excluded from this suit).

Certification Program raises further inferences that the Program's design, as pled, is consistent with anti-competitive behavior.

Thus, despite Michael Foods' argument that there are pro-competitive reasons for joining the UEP Certification Program in the absence of an illegal agreement the Court cannot adopt them at this time, at least for definitive Rule 12(b)(6) purposes. The allegations as to the Program raise enough of a plausible inference that certification in the Program was inconsistent with independent self-interest, at least because no non-conspiring, self-interested company would have followed the Program guidelines concerning chick hatch reduction, prohibiting backfilling, applying the guidelines to 100% of its facilities, and so on. Upon careful consideration of the parties' arguments, and cognizant that this motion must be viewed through the lens of the conspiracy on the whole, the Court concludes that there are enough specific allegations in the SAC—those that explicitly [*731] name Michael Foods and its specific conduct, as well as those that cite specific facts and detailed circumstances concerning the nature and context [62] of the entire conspiracy, particularly those pertaining to the UEP Certification Program—to plausibly suggest that Michael Foods joined the alleged conspiracy. Accordingly, the Rule 12(b)(6) motion by Michael Foods must be denied.

B. Daybreak's Motion to Dismiss

Daybreak Foods, Inc. argues that it "is situated quite differently from most, if not all, of the other defendants in the case." Daybreak Mot. at 8. It contends that one reason for this is because the SAC fails to link Daybreak to any of the eight "collective actions" that allegedly advanced the overarching conspiracy. Instead, according to Daybreak, the SAC allegations that specifically identify it by name merely allege that Daybreak was a UEP member and held positions on the Board and certain committees, attended meetings, and expressed comments about the egg market and industry practices. These allegations alone, Daybreak maintains, do not suggest that it agreed to the conspiracy. Yet before the substance of Daybreak's arguments can be tested, an antecedent and dispositive issue requires resolution: whether the SAC specifically alleges Daybreak participated—at least to some degree—in the UEP Certified Program.

1. Whether Daybreak [63] Participated in the UEP Certified Program

Plaintiffs and Daybreak dispute whether the SAC has specifically alleged that Daybreak participated in the UEP Certification Program and, if so, the extent of any such participation. In particular, this issue focuses on the SAC's Paragraph 93:

> Daybreak has participated in and benefited from Defendants' and their co-conspirators' efforts to reduce supply and fix prices, as outlined herein. Daybreak has explicitly agreed to the conspiracy alleged herein by adopting UEP Certified guidelines to reduce chick hatch and has conspired to reduce its egg supply as a result. Daybreak participated in a UEP meeting which expanded a 2004 flock/disposal scheme.

SAC ¶ 93 (emphasis added).

Plaintiffs maintain that this Paragraph sufficiently alleges that "Daybreak participated in the [UEP Certification] program." Pls.' Resp. at 40. [19] Daybreak urges the Court to disregard this allegation on the grounds that it is rendered implausible by the SAC's other allegations and that it is a generalized, merely conclusory allegation. Daybreak Mot. at 10; Daybreak Reply at 7. Daybreak further notes that the SAC twice lists the names of certain Defendants that were certified [64] under the UEP Certification Program in 2003 and 2008, but that Daybreak's name is conspicuously and meaningfully absent from those lists. Daybreak also highlights that, unlike other Defendants who are alleged to have been certified under the Program and have a certification number attributed to them, the SAC does not provide any such certification number for Daybreak.

[19] In contrast, at oral argument, Plaintiffs pushed the pleading envelope and argued that they "alleged explicitly that Daybreak was in the UEP certification program . . . ." Day 2 Tr. at 34:15-18 (emphasis).

Given the familiar legal precepts governing pleading standards, the Court is constrained to accept the factual allegations quoted above from Paragraph 93 as true. Iqbal, 129 S. Ct. at 1950 (HN19[] "When there are well-pleaded factual allegations, a court should assume their veracity and then determine whether they plausibly give rise to [*732] an entitlement to relief."). The statement that Daybreak "adopt[ed] UEP Certified guidelines to reduce chick hatch" constitutes just such a factual allegation that the Court thus must accept as true without an artificial or surgical parsing of the language Plaintiffs used. Indeed, the allegation [65] is a factually specific statement that supports a legal conclusion, "Daybreak has explicitly agreed to the conspiracy . . . , by adopting UEP Certified guidelines to reduce chick hatch." SAC ¶ 93 (emphasis added); see Iqbal, 129 S. Ct. at 1950 (HN20[] "While legal conclusions can provide the framework of a complaint, they must be supported by factual allegations.").

As previously discussed with respect to Michael Foods, the SAC alleges specific factual details pertaining to chick hatch reduction, which further support this allegation's factual specificity. It is thus not merely a bald statement or a legal conclusion couched as a factual allegation that the Court is not bound to credit. See Papasan v. Allain, 478 U.S. 265, 286, 106 S. Ct. 2932, 92 L. Ed. 2d 209 (1986) (citing Briscoe v. LaHue, 663 F.2d 713, 723 (7th Cir. 1981), aff'd on other grounds, 460 U.S. 325, 103 S. Ct. 1108, 75 L. Ed. 2d 96, (1983); 2A J. Moore & J. Lucas, Moore's Federal Practice ¶ 12.07, at 12—64 & n.6 (1985)).

Furthermore, the allegation is not implausible, notwithstanding Daybreak's contention otherwise. Daybreak's name may be absent from the paragraphs listing certain producers that were known to have been certified under the UEP Certification Program as of different dates, but HN21[] Plaintiffs [66] are not obliged to have the same quality or quantity of allegations as to one defendant as unto another. Cf. Beltz Travel Serv., Inc. v. Int'l Air Transport Ass'n, 620 F.2d 1360, 1367 (9th Cir. 1980) ("Participation by each conspirator in every detail in the execution of the [antitrust] conspiracy is unnecessary to establish liability, for each conspirator may be performing different tasks to bring about the desired result." (citing Am. Tobacco Co. v. United States, 147 F.2d 93, 119 (6th Cir. 1945))). The SAC need not aver even similar allegations as to each applicable defendant in identical form or number. See In re Southeastern Milk Antitrust Litig., 555 F. Supp. 2d 934, 949 (E.D. Tenn. 2008) (recognizing that HN22[] so long as plaintiffs plead the requisite contours of a claim against an antitrust defendant, "[t]hat they require only a few paragraphs or sentences to do so is of no consequence").

Moreover, there is no inconsistency between the allegation that Daybreak adopted UEP Certified guidelines on chick hatch reduction and the SAC's other allegations. A careful parsing of the parties' dispute reveals an issue of semantics. The Plaintiffs' position appears to be that the act of merely [67] "adopting" certain UEP Certification guidelines constitutes "participation" in the UEP Certification Program. As such, while "adopting" guidelines may connote the most minute of actions, it can also reflect the most meaningful embrace of the object of an "adoption." In any event, even in the former interpretation, it is a least some "action" and not merely exclusively passive presence at a meeting where, for example, guidelines are only discussed. In contrast, Daybreak presumes that certification under the Program is an essential prerequisite to "participation" and that, because the SAC does not specifically allege that Daybreak obtained certification under the Program, Daybreak did not participate in it.

A fair reading of the SAC indicates that, while there is no specific factual allegation that Daybreak obtained UEP-certified status, Daybreak still could have "participated" in the Program consistent with Plaintiffs' definition and description of "participation" in the Program. As alleged, certification under the UEP Certification [*733] Program requires, inter alia, adherence to the Program's guidelines. However, no allegation in the SAC indicates that a producer is precluded from voluntarily [68] "adopting" or following all or some of the Program's guidelines, as if they were a form of standards, even if that producer did not formally become certified under the Program or sell "UEP-Certified" eggs. [20] Indeed, assuming, arguendo, that Daybreak never achieved certification under the Program, Daybreak still plausibly could have adopted the guidelines concerning chick hatch reduction. It follows [20] Notably, other producers who are alleged to have joined the certification program and have assigned certification numbers, such as Michael Foods, Rose Acre, and Ohio Fresh, were also alleged to have "adopted" the chick hatch reduction guidelines under the Program with the identical language of ". . . by adopting UEP Certified guidelines to reduce chick hatch." See, e.g., SAC ¶¶ 48, 67, 90. Thus, "adoption" of certain UEP guidelines does not necessarily equate to (or foreclose) the conclusion that a producer has certified-status.

that Daybreak's lack of a certification number and absence on any certified producer list would not be inconsistent with the allegation that it "adopt[ed] UEP Certified guidelines to reduce chick hatch." [21]

2. Whether Daybreak Joined the Conspiracy

The [70] SAC contains three categories of specific factual allegations with respect to Daybreak. The first category pertains to Daybreak's alleged involvement in UEP as a member by holding positions on the Board and continual presence at UEP meetings where certain actions alleged to advance the conspiracy were adopted or where comments were made urging attendees to participate in actions alleged to promote the conspiracy. The second category of allegations concerns Daybreak's alleged public and private comments about the egg market and industry practices. And the third category involves the allegation that Daybreak adopted UEP Certification guidelines on chick hatch reduction.

It is not apparent that the first two categories of factual allegations when considered together sufficiently allege Daybreak's agreement to the conspiracy. As previously discussed, allegations of mere membership and attendance at meetings are insufficient to suggest agreement to a conspiracy. Here, the SAC alleges that Daybreak employees served on UEP's Area #3, Government Relations Committee, Environmental Committee, and Quality Assurance/Food Safety Committee in 2008. SAC ¶ 92. The allegations also indicate that some [71] of these employees held leadership positions, including a UEP Board position. See, e.g., id. ¶ 284. Daybreak employees allegedly attended various UEP meetings. For example, a Daybreak representative attended UEP Animal Welfare Committee meetings where attendees articulated that the "'animal husbandry' program's express purpose was to reduce supply," id. ¶ 211. Another representative was present at a UEP Board of Directors Meeting held in May 2002 in Washington, D.C., during which the UEP Marketing Chairman purportedly "announced two ways of reducing egg supply, stating 'that we have a crisis and that a crisis management plan had been communicated to [*734] the members calling for early molt and early hen disposal. The current egg prices indicated that this plan was working.'" Id. ¶¶ 199-200. According to Plaintiffs, Daybreak representatives were present at UEP Annual Board meetings where the "100% rule" was approved by a 19-to-1 vote and where the Board approved a schedule for early hen disposal or, alternatively, five-percent flock size reduction, id. ¶¶ 220-21, 284-85, 93.

At another UEP Board of Directors meeting in Atlanta, Georgia in January 2005, Daybreak was allegedly present and the [72] "minutes reflect discussions about the price fixing proposal and other attempts to reduce supply." Id. ¶ 298. Daybreak employees also allegedly attended UEP Marketing Committee meetings in Washington, D.C., at which the committee chairman supposedly made comments that "the industry must do a better job managing the supply between Easter and Labor Day and that perhaps the industry lost focus this year because of high prices," id. ¶¶ 398, 404, [22] and a UEP Board of Directors Legislative meeting in May 2003 in Washington, D.C., at which the marketing committee chairman purportedly stated, "Need every producer to be a USEM member. Need more help pulling the wagon instead of riding," id. ¶¶ 336-37. As this summary reveals, none of these allegations suggest anything more than Daybreak's passive attendance at these meetings. [23]

[21] To buttress its argument, Daybreak has attempted to raise [69] doubt as to the truthfulness of the allegation that it adopted the UEP Certified guidelines on chick hatch reduction. In doing so, Daybreak asks the Court to look beyond the SAC at the UEP's Answer to the SAC, which states that Daybreak has never been certified under the UEP Certification Program. Daybreak Reply at 7. Suffice it to say, Daybreak may enlist the UEP pleading in a subsequent motion, but a co-defendant's Answer is unavailing in this Rule 12(b)(6) analysis of the SAC.

[22] The SAC alleges in separate paragraphs that the UEP Marketing Committee met in Washington, D.C., in May and October of 2008, where the committee chairman evidently made virtually identical comments. Despite alleging that identical company representatives were present and the chairman's comments at both were verbatim, Plaintiffs appear to consider these were indeed [73] two separate meetings. See Pls.' Resp. at 38.

[23] Plaintiffs challenge the defense view that Daybreak was only a passive attendee at UEP meetings by conjuring up the inference that Daybreak twice voted at UEP Board meetings for producers to coordinate and reduce flock sizes. However, the Similarly, although Plaintiffs suggest that Daybreak's alleged statements are indicative of a conspiratorial purpose or state of mind, the statements, in and of themselves, appear equally consistent with passive or reflective observations and opinions, even in light of Daybreak's membership or attendance at UEP meetings. One such allegation is that Daybreak's President made a comment to Egg Industry [*735] magazine in February 2007 that "I tend to think that [75] consumers will buy eggs whether the price per dozen is 70 cents or $1.70." Id. ¶ 154. On its face, of course, this comment could reflect only that he held the opinion that the demand for eggs is inelastic. Similarly, alleged statements that Daybreak personnel made during an earnings conference call on August 12, 2008 appear to manifest opinions of the market and industry practices: "Another factor supporting high egg prices is a short-term contraction in supply due to broad adoption of animal well-being programs on bird density," id. ¶ 402, and "[s]upply has been pressured through the animal wellbeing efforts, I think by the industry," id. ¶ 403 (alteration in original). Likewise, an alleged comment attributed in a March 2007 Egg Industry article to Daybreak's President can be viewed as observational rather than suggestive of agreement. In that article the president allegedly "credit[ed] high shell egg prices on the 'United Egg Producer's animal welfare program that most shell egg producers participate in.'" Id. ¶ 376.

The SAC also avers that Daybreak may have discussed the UEP Certified Program's supply-related implications with another egg producer's in-house counsel: "Mr. Mueller [76] discussed the UEP Animal Welfare Program and its intersection with supply and price with representatives from a number of industry participants, including . . . Bill Rehm of Daybreak Foods." Id. ¶ 231. Regardless of whether this allegation sufficiently supports Plaintiffs' characterization that "Sparboe, shared its concern with Daybreak that the program constituted price fixing and could cause trouble for the industry," Pls.' Resp. at 40 (citing SAC ¶ 231), the allegation may also describe more innocuous or observational conversations. Indeed, the allegations suggest no more than that Daybreak representatives were cognizant of certain characteristics of the egg industry and opined about certain practices both publicly and privately.

Even considering these two categories of allegations together, it would only be reasonable to infer that Daybreak was in a position to observe and be aware of what other Defendants were doing, knew the implications of restricted supply and increased prices, and even likely benefited from the increased market prices. This would not be enough to make the requisite factual leap to say that awareness and beneficiary status suggest that Daybreak outright agreed [77] to and participated in the conspiracy. However, those two categories of conduct must also be considered in light of Daybreak's alleged adoption of UEP Certified guidelines on chick hatch reduction.

As discussed above, the alleged guidelines specific to chick hatch reduction are inconsistent with the behavior of an independent, self-interested producer and do not have apparent pro-competitive benefits. In the state of the world described in the SAC, a producer following the guidelines as to chick hatch reduction would be reducing the supply of its egg-laying hens, and thereby limiting its egg production capabilities. In doing so, a producer would be unable to enlarge its operations, fill additional barns, and expand egg production. Even though Plaintiffs have not alleged that Daybreak adopted other elements of the UEP Certification Program, they have averred that it adopted a alleged facts do not support this argument by Plaintiffs. The SAC is devoid of facts alleging that Daybreak undertook any coordinated actions to reduce flock sizes, so Plaintiffs implicitly argue that Daybreak's vote to approve such actions demonstrates its agreement to the overarching conspiracy. See Pls.' Resp. at 40 ("While Mr. Rehm was a Board member, the UEP twice approved coordinated actions to reduce flock sizes in order to reduce supply and to raise prices . . . . At least one approval was without recorded dissent."). But such an argument is of no ultimate moment, because the SAC does not specifically allege, directly or by inference, that Daybreak cast an affirmative vote at any of these meetings. For example, at one such meeting there was a motion "to extend through Labor Day the current 'intentions program' for members' flocks to be disposed of 4 weeks earlier than previously scheduled and/or [74] flock size reduction by 5%" that was passed by the Board with "no recorded dissents." Id. ¶ 300. Even when considering all inferences favoring Plaintiffs, this allegation does not suggest Daybreak actually voted, particularly given that the UEP Board was "governed by . . . three to fifty directors who are elected annually." Id. ¶ 446. A lack of recorded dissent cannot indicate whether all Board members were able to vote on the given proposal or that any Board member may have abstained, temporarily left the meeting, or other "unrecorded" action. As such, Plaintiffs merely propose a very possibly false inference. Cf. Twombly, 550 U.S. at 554 (warning against "false inferences" in the context of allegations of parallel conduct without more).

particular element that is highly restrictive of egg supply and without an apparent self-interested business rationale in the absence of agreement to the offending conspiracy.

Given Daybreak's alleged adoption of the guidelines on chick hatch reduction, in conjunction with the allegations that Daybreak was a UEP [78] member and held positions on the UEP Board and certain committees, attended meetings, and expressed [*736] pointed comments about the egg market and industry practices, the SAC alleges minimally sufficient facts to plausibly suggest that Daybreak assented to the alleged conspiracy. It follows, again, given the governing case law, that Daybreak's motion to dismiss must be denied. [24]

C. Rose Acre's Motion to Dismiss

Challenging the sufficiency of the SAC, Rose Acre Farms, Inc. embraces the Third Circuit Court of Appeals' admonition that HN23[] "a claim of conspiracy predicated on parallel conduct should be dismissed if . . . the facts alleged in the complaint itself, show that independent self-interest is an 'obvious alternative explanation' for defendants' common behavior." Ins. Brokerage, 618 F. 3d at 326. Rose Acre recognizes that Plaintiffs specifically allege that it was a member of UEP, UEA, and USEM; that its representatives attended UEP Board meetings and committee meetings at which steps allegedly were undertaken to advance [80] the conspiracy; that some of its representatives held leadership positions on the Board and committees; and that it was certified under the UEP Certification Program. [25] The SAC also alleges that Rose Acre "consistently participated in the export program . . . and tried to encourage other egg producers to participate in the program." Id. ¶ 331. [26] These allegations, according to Rose Acre, do not plausibly suggest that it agreed to the overarching conspiracy because the allegations, as well as certain materials incorporated into the SAC by reference, alternatively suggest that Rose Acre acted in its independent self-interest in undertaking those alleged actions.

1. Rose Acre's Participation in the USEM Export Program

Neither Rose Acre nor Plaintiffs dedicate much attention to the export program [*737] and Rose Acre's alleged participation in it. See Rose Acre Mot. at 22, 23; Pls.' Resp. at 15-18. Indeed, there is arguably little purpose in [24] At oral argument, the Court raised the possibility that some of Daybreak's objections to the SAC might be resolved more appropriately through another avenues, such as, inter alia, attempting to resolve issues concerning accuracy directly with the Plaintiffs or later through summary judgment. See Day 2 Tr. at 30:7-36:8. The Court is confident that the practical professionals managing this case could address and resolve such disputes informally. Insofar that the parties are unable to resolve any of these specific issues on their own, summary judgment "as soon as sufficient evidence is developed to establish or negate a point" can "conserv[e] the resources of the parties and the courts." 2 Phillip E. Areeda & Herbert Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law ¶ 307, at 99 (3d ed. 2007). Likewise, an appropriate and closely tailored [79] discovery plan can aid in the efficient resolution of these issues. See *In re Polyurethane Foam Antitrust Litig., No. 10 MD 2196, 799 F. Supp. 2d 777, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 85032, 2011 WL 3204712, at 5 (N.D. Ohio July 19, 2011) (recognizing that certain defendants "differ[] in important respects from the majority of Defendants" and thus requiring that plaintiffs confer with those defendants "to develop a focused and phased discovery plan to determine whether these Defendants should remain in the case"), clarified on denial of reconsideration on other grounds, 799 F. Supp. 2d 777, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 104419, 2011 WL 4345926 (Sept. 15, 2011).

[25] Specifically, the allegations as to Rose Acre representatives' attendance at meetings, leadership positions held, and conversations with other Defendants are similar, if not identical to, allegations concerning other Defendants, discussed supra. See, e.g., SAC ¶¶ 66-67, 231, 252, 284-85, 298, 310, 336, 353, 380, 398, 404, 438. For the same reasons, the Court concludes that these charges as to Rose Acre are insufficient on their own to plausibly articulate Rose Acre's agreement to the alleged conspiracy.

[26] The SAC claims that [81] "Rose Acre was a member of USEM and/or participated in egg exports, sharing any associated financial losses with other members." Id. ¶ 67. Rose Acre allegedly began participating in the USEM export program in late 2006. Id. ¶ 350. The timing of Rose Acre's alleged participation in the export program coincides with the program's expansion in 2006, following a period of three years in which no exports were facilitated by the program. Id. ¶¶ 332, 348.

engaging in an extensive analysis of the export program as to Rose Acre, given that Rose Acre's alleged participation in it constitutes only one facet of the SAC's depiction of Rose Acre in relation to the overarching conspiracy, and the Court must consider Rose Acre's alleged participation in the program in the broader context of the SAC. See Pressure Sensitive, 566 F. Supp. 2d at 373 (HN24[] "[A] district court must consider a complaint in its entirety without isolating each [82] allegation for individualized review."). Notwithstanding this need to consider the allegations as to Rose Acre in toto, practicality requires that the Court address this alleged facet of the conspiracy before evaluating it with all allegations asserted against Rose Acre.

Plaintiffs charge that the USEM export program is one of the eight coordinated actions that advanced the alleged overarching conspiracy. The SAC alleges that USEM is a cooperative group that negotiates egg exports on behalf of its members. Id. ¶¶ 179, 176 n.39. The export program, according to Plaintiffs, is designed to export eggs at a loss—due to lower prices in egg markets abroad and high transportation costs in shipping perishable and breakable products?for the exclusive purpose of reducing the domestic supply of eggs. Id. ¶¶ 147, 329-30, 332. Plaintiffs allege that the export program sought to capitalize on the inverse relationship that exists between domestic egg prices and domestic supply. Id. ¶ 330. [27] Through the export program, certain USEM members allegedly exported eggs at a loss, while other members contributed some substitute or replenishing remuneration to the exporters for those losses. Id. ¶ 333.

This characterization of the program may ring of anti-competitive design and effect—particularly since the exports are allegedly sold at a loss and loss sharing purportedly occurs among USEM members—yet this characterization is not fully supported by the SAC's averments. For example, the specific facts contained in the SAC about the program do not plausibly suggest that all exports were sold at a loss and that concomitantly loss sharing occurred. Indeed, just before Rose Acre allegedly joined the export program at the end of 2006, id. ¶ 350, USEM shipped its first exports in three years, selling the exports "at a price considerably better than domestic breaking stock prices." Id. ¶ 348 (emphasis added). The SAC presumes that USEM exports were not necessarily always sold at a loss because the "program was designed to have USEM members export shell eggs even where the export prices were lower than domestic egg prices." Id. at ¶ 332.

Moreover, Plaintiffs [84] broadly allege that exported eggs were sold at a loss, in part because "foreign egg and egg product prices were lower than in the United States," id. ¶ 346, but Plaintiffs provide specific facts that do not inexorably support such a conclusion about prices. Indeed, the only specific comparative pricing data in the SAC between exports and domestic sales places domestic prices higher on average than exports: "the average price per dozen for all eggs increased 52% from 58.2 cents in 2006 to 88.5 cents in 2007," while in August 2007 an export expected to be delivered the week of August 20, had a "sale price of 60 cents per dozen, 10 cents higher than any previous export." Id. ¶¶ 358, 364. [28] On the surface, these [*738] allegations would seem to advance Plaintiffs' theories, but an "average" necessarily implies that some domestic egg prices were lower than the average domestic price (just as some could be higher). It follows that some domestic prices could well have been lower than the export price of 50 cents or less in the first half of 2007. Accordingly, such limited and vague facts as to pricing do not suggest the broad conclusion that foreign egg prices were less than domestic prices. Cf. In re Optical Disk Drive Antitrust Litig., No. 3:10-md-02143, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 101763, 2011 WL 3894376, at *9 (N.D. Cal. Aug. 3, 2011) [85] ("Pricing trends and economic data present a potentially fertile ground for inferences of price manipulation, but the information plaintiffs have presented at this juncture is ambiguous at best, and does not permit reliable conclusions to be drawn about the pricing of [the product at issue] in particular."). [29]

[27] At [83] times the SAC appears to misstate this phenomena, which the Court attributes to inadvertence rather than internal actual contradiction. See, e.g., id. ¶ 361 ("[T]he pace at which domestic U.S. prices dropped was proportional to supply . . . .").

[28] The SAC alleges other export-related price information, yet it does not provide any supporting comparative data. One such allegation is that the "average European Community price for eggs in 2003 was only 110.57 euros per hundred kilograms" and in 2005 the average per hundred kilograms was 86.08 euros. Id. at ¶ 148. There is no similar comparative data on domestic pricing in the SAC to meaningfully compare European and domestic prices in that time period.

Given that the SAC does not foreclose the possibility that export [86] pricing could have been higher than domestic prices at times of certain exports, it also does not exclude the possibility that Rose Acre's participation in the egg export program might have been for independent, legitimate business reasons. Plaintiffs charge that Rose Acre "participated in egg exports, sharing any associated financial losses with other members." SAC ¶ 67. But, again, not all exports necessarily involved losses (and thus loss sharing). Accordingly, at this juncture who can say—from the Plaintiffs' pleading—that Rose Acre's participation was not limited to exports that did not involve losses?

Furthermore, the SAC's allegations reflect that—unlike the UEP Certification Program, which as pled, mandated certain conduct—the nature and extent of a producer's participation in the export program was not mandated. The SAC claims only that providing eggs for export or loss sharing was encouraged, rather than required by virtue of membership in the program. Sparboe, for example, while a member of the export program merely received "pressure" to provide eggs for export, or in the alternative, "to provide money to make up for the loss that other UEP members experienced by participating [87] in the egg export program." Id. ¶ 341. Another SAC allegation suggests that members agreed to share in losses on an export-by-export basis, but were not required to do so. Id. ¶ 334 (quoting a March 20, 2003 memorandum sent to USEM members stating that an unnamed new member "agreed to share in the loss" from a "recent export" (emphasis added)). As phrased, the allegation that Rose Acre participated in the export program, "sharing any associated financial losses," leaves wide open the interpretation that there may not have been "any" losses for Rose Acre to share to the extent of its participation, or that Rose Acre did not actually make any such contributions when—and if—the opportunity was presented.

As a final point, the SAC alleges that exports of eggs occurred independently of the USEM export program. Prior to the existence of the USEM export program in 2000, "the United States was the second-largest exporter of eggs in 1998." Id. [*739] ¶ 145. In the three years prior to November 2006, according to the SAC, no eggs were exported through the program, and yet the SAC claims that 14 million dozen eggs were exported in January to April 2006. Id. ¶¶ 348, 354. The existence of such exports, [88] apparently occurring independently of the USEM export program, suggest that at least some U.S. egg producers had independent reasons to export eggs, unrelated to the alleged conspiracy to reduce egg supply. Thus, Plaintiffs' bald statement that "[t]here would have been no independent business reason for each Defendant on its own to undertake costly exports at the expense of more profitable domestic sales" is contradicted by the SAC's own other allegations. Id. ¶ 346.

In summary, the specific facts pled as to the export program to some degree support the Plaintiffs' conclusory assertions about the program's anti-competitive attributes, but also they could be equally suggestive of the possibility that Rose Acre had an independent, legitimate business justification for participating in the program. Nonetheless, although Rose Acre's participation in the USEM export program by itself could be equally consistent with the possibility of independent, legitimate business justification, the Court must proceed to consider the additional facts that Plaintiffs allege to suggest that Rose Acre agreed to the overarching conspiracy.

2. Whether Rose Acre Joined the Conspiracy

Rose Acre's main arguments [89] in support of its motion concentrate on its alleged participation in the UEP Certification program. Upon close consideration of those arguments, the Court cannot agree with Rose Acre, but instead finds that Plaintiffs have sufficiently alleged specific facts that plausibly suggest that Rose Acre joined the alleged conspiracy.

[29] In contrast, for example, Plaintiffs allege, without any American comparative data, that "egg and egg product prices [were] far lower in Europe than in the United States" at a time when egg consumption in various European countries was low. See id. ¶ 360.

Rose Acre's primary argument is that joining and becoming certified under the UEP Certification Program is consistent with rational self-interest as demonstrated by the facts that consumers demanded eggs raised pursuant to animal welfare standards, and specifically endorsed UEP-certified eggs, and that Rose Acre's business "expanded" while it participated in the Certification Program. This argument is akin to Michael Food's pro-competitive arguments, and for the reasons the Court discussed, supra, concerning the nature of the UEP Certification Program with respect to Michael Foods' motion, the Court likewise cannot agree with Rose Acre that the SAC contains allegations that suggest an "obvious alternative explanation" for an egg producer to join the UEP Certification Program.

Rose Acre's argument on this score, however, is, in part, distinguishable from Michael [90] Foods in that it relies on allegations derived from the Plaintiffs' First Amended Complaint and news articles incorporated in the SAC "by reference," but not attached to it as exhibits. For example, the SAC cites a February 2008 Egg Industry article entitled, "Infrastructure's role in keeping egg prices high," to support the allegation that Dolph Baker, president of Cal-Maine Foods, made a statement that "What we learned in 2007 is that we have control of our destiny if we work at it, and as an industry, 2008 could be another super year." Id. ¶ 392. Excerpting a different portion of the same article, Rose Acres argues that, contrary to the UEP Certification Program's apparent prohibition on expanding facilities, [30] Marcus [*740] Rust of Rose Acre made a statement that Rose Acre's business expanded. Rose Acre Mot. at 9.

Despite relying on this excerpt and [91] other materials that are not directly cited in the SAC, Rose Acre proffers no grounds or legal authority as to why the Court can or should consider these materials in connection with the motion to dismiss. Plaintiffs argue that the applicable pleading standard does not permit the consideration of these materials on the grounds that they are not part of the SAC but instead constitute "evidence" in support of an alternative explanation for Rose Acre's conduct, consideration of which would convert the motion to dismiss into a summary judgment motion. Day 2 Tr. at 98:1-4; 100:6-10.

HN25[] Generally, "a district court ruling on a motion to dismiss may not consider matters extraneous to the pleadings." In re Burlington Coat Factory Sec. Litig., 114 F.3d 1410, 1426 (3d Cir. 1997) (citation omitted). And as stated above, in evaluating the adequacy of a pleading, "a court must consider only the complaint, exhibits attached to the complaint, matters of public record, as well as undisputedly authentic documents if the complainant's claims are based upon these documents." Mayer, 605 F.3d at 230 (citation omitted). Here, the materials upon which Rose Acre relies to argue that an alternative legitimate [92] explanation for its alleged conduct exists are not properly before the Court on the pending motion to dismiss. The materials were not attached to the SAC as exhibits; it is unclear whether their authenticity is unchallenged; and although some of the materials indeed were quoted in the SAC, their "limited quotation does not constitute incorporation by reference." Goldman v. Belden, 754 F.2d 1059 (2d Cir. 1985). [31]

[30] Rose Acre does not identify the particular SAC paragraphs that allege this prohibition. As previously discussed, however, Plaintiffs averred that "[a]s part of these [UEP Certified] guidelines . . . Defendants also agreed not to add capacity or make up for the lost hens that would result through reduced cage densities . . . ." Id. ¶ 208.

[31] Twombly suggests that the Court might be able to take judicial notice pursuant to Fed. R. Evid. 201 of the "full contents of . . . published articles referenced in [a] complaint, from which . . . truncated quotations were drawn." Twombly, 550 U.S. at 568 n.13. This suggestion appears in that case in relation to a narrow factual context where a Chicago Tribune article reported on a defendant-speaker's thoughts on a matter that were only selectively excerpted in the complaint, and is inapplicable to the scenario at bar where Rose Acre appears to proffer them to the Court for purposes of examining the content of an article published in an unauthenticated industry periodical.

Furthermore, Rose Acre has not articulated any basis for the Court to consider these materials through [93] judicial notice or any other grounds. Rose Acre merely attached the materials to its motion and cited them to support the substance of its arguments. HN26[] Without an invocation of Fed. R. Evid. 201 and a basis for applying it here, "judicial notice remains discretionary with the trial judge," 21B Charles Alan Wright & Arthur R. Miller, Federal Practice and Procedure § 5107.1, and the Court adheres here to conventional Third Circuit case law in considering materials outside of a pleading.

Furthermore, Plaintiffs' antitrust claims are not based upon or integral to these documents, or vice versa. HN27[] In circumstances when courts do look beyond a pleading to entire documents that are merely cited in the complaint through isolated statements excerpted from such documents, only those documents that are central to the claim at issue, such as contracts for breach of contract claims or public offering documents containing alleged fraudulent statements in securities misrepresentation suits, are appropriate for that purpose. See, e.g., Burlington Coat Factory, 114 F.3d at 1426 (recognizing that a "document integral to or explicitly relied upon in the complaint" may be considered in a motion to dismiss [94] in relation to a securities fraud claim (citation omitted) (emphasis in original)); Angstadt ex rel. [*741] Angstadt v. Midd-West School Dist., 377 F.3d 338, 342-43 (3d Cir. 2004) (determining that consideration of certain school regulations not attached to the complaint is permissible because the claim challenged the reasonableness of those regulations). Here, Plaintiffs' antitrust claim against Rose Acre does not rely on the referenced publications—such materials that may well win the day eventually for Rose Acre or others—in such a way that the Court should consider them now at the motion to dismiss stage. [32] Thus, to the extent that Rose Acre is interjecting factual assertions external to the SAC, the Court declines to consider them. See Flat Panel, 586 F. Supp. 2d at 1117 ("[A]t this stage of the litigation the Court's review is limited to the pleadings, and the Court may not consider factual assertions about the nature of [a defendant]'s business.").

In support of its contention that an alternative legitimate explanation for its conduct exists, Rose Acre also stresses that it was not part of the "core group" of defendants who initiated the overarching conspiracy. Rose Acre argues that the pleading against it must allege that it "knowingly joined in any agreement with the common purpose of achieving an illicit restraint on competition" and the SAC fails to do so. Rose Acre Reply at 10. In other words, because Rose Acre is not alleged to be an original member of the flock, but rather a latecomer, its conduct alleged in the SAC and eventual certification under the UEP Certification Program do not plausibly suggest Rose Acre knowingly joined or agreed to participate in the overarching conspiracy to reduce the supply of eggs. [33] Notwithstanding this argument—which otherwise may prevail on the merits at a later stage of this suit—"latecomer status" is not enough to undercut the SAC's overall allegations as to Rose Acre which plausibly suggest that it agreed to the overarching conspiracy. As discussed above, certification under the [*742] UEP Certification Program, as alleged, is an act consistent with [96] agreement to the offending conspiracy. The SAC alleges that the companies who became certified under the UEP Certification Program were required to undertake, in order to obtain and maintain their certification, certain measures that have the effect of reducing that company's output of eggs and without apparent legitimate business rationale.

[32] By illustrative contrast, the UEP Certification guidelines are arguably integral to Plaintiffs' antitrust claim under this standard. But this example is purely academic because, inter alia, no Defendant has offered authenticated guidelines [95] in connection with a motion to dismiss.

[33] Plaintiffs appear to misconstrue this argument. In response to Rose Acre, Plaintiffs raise the unrelated issue of whether an antitrust conspirator needs to have participated in all aspects of the conspiracy in order to be vulnerable to liability, contending that "late entry into a conspiracy does not exonerate a defendant from liability for what previously occurred." Pls.' Resp. at 44. Given that Rose Acre argues that its alleged latecomer status is a factor that suggests that Rose Acre did not agree to the overarching conspiracy to reduce egg supply, Plaintiffs' argument as articulated is irrelevant to Rose Acre's Motion. It follows that the Court need not and shall not address here whether a latecomer can be liable for earlier alleged conspiratorial participation in a civil antitrust action, but observes that the Third Circuit Court of Appeals [97] may not have directly weighed in on this issue in all pertinent respects. See In re Lower Lake Erie Iron Ore Antitrust Litig., 710 F. Supp. 152, 153-54 (E.D. Pa. 1989) ("[T]he general rule seems to be that civil liability, too, is unaffected by the duration of one's participation in the conspiracy. Whether the Third Circuit Court of Appeals would apply this 'late joinder' rule is, however, not altogether clear."); Daniel Boone Area Sch. Dist. v. Lehman Bros., Inc., 187 F. Supp. 2d 400, 414 (W.D. Pa. 2002) ("[C]o-conspirators might be liable for acts committed prior to their joining the conspiracy." (citation omitted)). But see Tunis Bros. Co. v. Ford Motor Co., 763 F.2d 1482, 1491 & n.16 (3d Cir. 1985) ("Conspiracies under the Sherman Act are not dependent on any overt act other than the act of conspiring. . . . Those who, with knowledge of the conspiracy, aid or assist in carrying out the purposes of the conspiracy make themselves parties thereto and are equally liable to or guilty with the original conspirators." (citation omitted)), vacated, 475 U.S. 1105, 1105, 106 S. Ct. 1509, 89 L. Ed. 2d 909 (1986), remanded to 823 F.2d 49 (3d Cir. 1987).

Moreover, Rose Acre's certified status does not exist in a vacuum. The SAC [98] alleges that Rose Acre was represented at meetings at which decisions were made and actions taken that advanced the conspiracy and where conspirators openly acknowledged the virtues of various coordinated actions. Additionally, Rose Acre's representative allegedly made comments evincing awareness of certain features of the egg market that could be manipulated by actions that impacted supply. Moreover, Rose Acre's participation in the export program, while arguably consistent with legitimate, self-interested business conduct if viewed in a vacuum, also must viewed within the framework of Rose Acre's overall alleged conduct. Thus, the allegations as to Rose Acre's mere attendance at meetings and public and private comments, when coupled with the allegation of certification under the UEP Certification Program and participation in the export program, plausibly suggest, at least at this stage of the litigation, that Rose Acre knowingly agreed to join the alleged conspiracy. See Southeastern Milk, 555 F. Supp. 2d at 943-44 ("While viewing each of these factual allegations in isolation may lead one to the conclusion drawn by the defendants, i.e., that there is a legitimate business justification [99] for each of the acts, a view of the complaint as a whole, which this Court must take, and accepting all of the factual allegations as true, does support a plausible inference of a conspiracy or agreement made illegal under § 1 of the Sherman Act. . . . [T]he fact that multiple instances of parallel conduct are alleged makes it far less likely that a business justification exists for all of the acts taken in total.").

D. Ohio Fresh's Motion to Dismiss

Ohio Fresh Eggs, LLC, takes a "Sam-I-am" approach in opposing the SAC, raising numerous arguments in support of its one menu item, but even when considering the motion in a house, with a mouse, in a box, or with a fox, [34] the Court is unpersuaded to bite. First, Ohio Fresh emphasizes that the SAC does not allege that it engaged in a wide range of conduct that is purported to have advanced the offending conspiracy. Ohio Fresh Mot. at 4; Ohio Fresh Reply at 3. For example, Ohio Fresh emphasizes that there is no allegation that it served on a UEP Board or committee or that it participated in the USEM export program. Ohio Fresh also argues that there are no allegations that charge that it was part of the "core group" that devised or advanced [100] the alleged conspiracy. Ohio Fresh likewise points out that there is no averment that it participated in the coordinated actions alleged to have occurred in the early years of the conspiracy. As discussed above, however, there is no requirement that allegations pertaining to one defendant mirror those against other defendants in terms of specific conduct or "quantity" of alleged "bad acts." Indeed, a defendant need not be accused of having engaged in all activities alleged to have advanced the conspiracy. In this respect, the absence of certain allegations as to Ohio Fresh when compared to other named defendants does not represent a debilitating deficiency in the SAC. [35]

[*743] Second, Ohio Fresh urges the Court to categorize it separately because it operates pursuant to a federal court decree and a state consent order that apparently place restrictions on Ohio Fresh's hen population:

> In its initial motion to dismiss (Dkt. 152), [Ohio Fresh] noted that it was incorporated on April 21, 2003 and, since its inception, it has operated under a federal court decree and a state consent order which placed specific conditions and limits on the total number of birds which could be housed by [102] [Ohio Fresh] at its facilities.

[35] Additionally, the Court notes that Plaintiffs have argued that their theory as alleged does not require participation by all Defendants in all coordinated actions at all points throughout the time period at issue. They contend that Defendants agreed to manipulate supply and from there, "looked around at the industry and the economy," and determined the means to best achieve the alleged agreement, which resulted in Defendants engaging in "different means over the time to control [101] or manipulate supply." Day 1 Tr. at 94:5-15. It remains to be seen at a later stage in this litigation if this theory ultimately proves too much or too little, such as if the evidence eventually discloses so many different, differing, and distinct acts by the various remaining Defendants that no image of a defined "conspiracy" emerges.

Additionally, the Court also notes that while Ohio Fresh appears to raise a latecomer-esque argument in simple chronological terms, its claims in this regard do not have the same implications as Rose Acre's latecomer argument. The Court does not here credit Ohio Fresh with authentic latecomer status for purposes of trying to avoid potential liability.

> Nevertheless, in the [SAC], the Direct Purchaser Plaintiffs do not allege how [Ohio Fresh] participated in their alleged conspiracy given the federal and state operating restrictions of its facilities and its bird populations.

Ohio Fresh Mot. at 2 (emphasis in original). Although Ohio Fresh cross-references its prior motion to dismiss Plaintiffs' First Amended Consolidated Complaint, it does not explicitly request that the Court consider the substance of that prior motion. Likewise, it does not provide grounds or supporting legal authority as to why the Court can or should consider that mooted motion. See January 6, 2010 Order (Doc. No. 226). More to the point, the consent decrees are not made exhibits to the new motion, and Ohio Fresh neither asks, nor provides any basis for, the Court to consider these decrees in connection with its motion.

Even assuming, arguendo, that the consent orders are consistent with Ohio Fresh's advocacy here and, indeed, do limit the maximum number of birds that Ohio Fresh can house, it is unclear at this stage of litigation whether such a limitation would be at odds with the alleged conspiracy to reduce the supply of eggs [103] and Ohio Fresh's alleged conduct that supposedly exposes its agreement to join the conspiracy. [36] While Ohio Fresh may ultimately prevail upon an argument premised upon the consent orders, the argument is an affirmative defense, more appropriate for resolution on the merits than for testing the sufficiency of the SAC. Without full explication as to the consent orders, the Court declines to consider and interpret them in connection with Ohio Fresh's current motion to dismiss.

[*744] Third, Ohio Fresh attacks the SAC for failing [104] to allege that Ohio Fresh "acted independently or separately from the alleged activity of Hillandale Farms—Ohio Fresh's alleged involvement is only as an 'affiliate and supplier' of Defendant Hillandale Farms as an 'integrated enterprise.'" Ohio Fresh Mot. at 4; Ohio Fresh Reply at 3. Indeed, the allegations as to the relationship between companies with the "Hillandale" name and Ohio Fresh are rather ambiguous. The SAC alleges "[p]ursuant to agreements executed December 26, 2003, Hillandale PA purchases all eggs produced by Ohio Fresh" and that Ohio Fresh is an "affiliate and supplier" of Hillandale Farms. SAC ¶¶ 79, 89-90. As discussed, infra, with respect to the Hillandale Entities' motion to dismiss, the SAC alleges that "Hillandale Farms" is "a vertically integrated supplier . . . directly involved in every aspect of egg production and distribution." Id. ¶ 80.

Ohio Fresh may protest that there are no allegations that it acted "independently or separately" from "Hillandale Farms," but this characterization of the SAC does not bear out upon a fair reading of its allegations. The SAC is not ambiguous in pleading specific facts as to Ohio Fresh and its alleged conduct. In order for [105] the SAC to survive Ohio Fresh's motion, those specific facts need only plausibly suggest Ohio Fresh's agreement to the overarching conspiracy, notwithstanding its alleged relationship to "Hillandale Farms." Plaintiffs have satisfied this requirement. The SAC expressly avers that Ohio Fresh adopted the UEP Certification guidelines to reduce chick hatch and obtained a certification number. Ohio Fresh also allegedly was a UEP member and attended UEP meetings at which aspects of the conspiracy supposedly were outlined. See, e.g., id. ¶¶ 225, 291. As discussed above, these actions are enough to suggest plausibly Ohio Fresh's agreement to the conspiracy for initial pleadings' purposes.

Additionally, the SAC charges Ohio Fresh with other conduct that is consistent with the conspiracy. As averred at least, Ohio Fresh agreed to a plan similar to one that required producers to "molt flocks at 62 weeks and dispose of spent hens by 108 weeks and that this plan of action take place immediately and carry through until Aug. 1, 2004." Id. ¶¶ 279-80. Ohio Fresh also allegedly signed a written commitment agreeing to one of two options: either to dispose of hens four weeks earlier than scheduled during [106] the first quarter of 2005 or to reduce flock size by five percent during that same time period." Id. ¶¶ 290-91. Notably, these management mechanisms—molting, disposal, and flock reduction—all, at least facially, function to reduce hen numbers and ergo total egg supply (in the case of molting, hens cease egg output for about two months, id. ¶ 130). Through these agreements, it appears that producers consented to manage their flocks based upon fixed time periods or percentages because other producers agreed to do the same, rather than making flock management decisions based upon more typical factors—such as their own flocks' productivity—specific to an individual producer. See, e.g., id. ¶¶ 129-30 (describing that "post-peak egg production (after 30 to 32 weeks of age) continually decreases to approximately 50 percent around 60 to 70 weeks of age" and that "[w]hen the flock declines to around 50 percent production, producers may decide to molt the flock"). As alleged, the agreements seem to be mechanisms to cut egg supply deliberately and arbitrarily, without a legitimate, independent business explanation in the absence of agreement. Accordingly, the SAC presents facts as to Ohio Fresh [107] that establish sufficient grounds to infer at this stage of the litigation that Ohio Fresh agreed to the overarching conspiracy.

[*745] Fourth, Ohio Fresh argues that despite the SAC's allegations that it twice agreed to molt and dispose of hens in 2004, the SAC does not allege that Ohio Fresh actually reduced flock size after making such agreements or ever "during any other timeframe [sic] throughout the alleged ten-year conspiracy at the request of UEP or a competitor." Ohio Fresh Reply at 3. According to Ohio Fresh, even if the SAC had alleged that Ohio Fresh disposed of hens pursuant to such a commitment, doing so "does not mean that you're not filling with p[u]llets, hatcheries, and increasing your supply in the future." Day 2 Tr. at 134:8-11. In raising these points, it appears that Ohio Fresh is arguing that agreement to engage in at least early hen disposal does not necessarily imply agreement to the overarching conspiracy to reduce egg supply because a producer could indeed increase its overall supply of eggs through other means. As discussed above as to Michael Foods' and Rose Acre's motions, Ohio Fresh's argument that it could have increased its egg production while concurrently [108] participating in the UEP Certification Program and making commitments to molt or reduce its flock is not consistent with the egg-producing world alleged in the SAC.

Because Plaintiffs have alleged specific facts sufficient to suggest that Ohio Fresh joined the alleged conspiracy to reduce the supply of eggs, Ohio Fresh is "on notice concerning the basic nature of [the Plaintiffs'] complaints against [it] and the grounds upon which their claims exist." See Southeastern Milk, 555 F. Supp. 2d at 943. Accordingly, the Court denies Ohio Fresh's motion.

E. Hillandale Entities' Motion to Dismiss

Hillandale Gettysburg L.P., Hillandale Farms Inc., and Hillandale Farms East, Inc. (collectively, the "Hillandale Entities") assert that they are entitled to dismissal because the SAC lacks sufficient allegations specific to these Defendants to support any inference that they each were a party to the agreement to restrict the supply of eggs. They argue that Plaintiffs, by lumping the three entities together, have failed to allege specific facts that either connect each or any individual entity to the overarching conspiracy, or alternatively, satisfy the requirements for imputing another affiliated entity's [109] liability to the Hillandale Entities. They are, to the Court's satisfaction, correct.

The SAC alleges that although the three entities have separate legal forms and principal places of business located variously in Pennsylvania, id. ¶¶ 85-87, the Hillandale Entities have an affiliated relationship inter se. Plaintiffs aver that they share ownership or control in common through three individuals, Orland Bethel, Gary Bethel, and Don Hershey. Id. ¶ 80. Plaintiffs plead that Gary Bethel and Orland Bethel allegedly own Hillandale Farms East, and are, respectively, the company's president, and secretary and treasurer; Orland Bethel and Gary Bethel own Hillandale Farms, Inc. with Gary Bethel serving as the company's president; Orland Bethel and Don Hershey own Hillandale-Gettysburg with Mr. Hershey serving as president and general partner. Id. ¶¶ 85-87. The Hillandale Entities also together are purported to "function as an integrated enterprise producing and selling shell eggs" along with a fourth entity, Hillandale Farms of Pa., Inc. [37] Id. ¶ 79. [*746] The SAC refers to the four entities collectively as "Hillandale Farms." Id.

[37] Hillandale Farms of Pa., Inc., is also a named Defendant and chose [110] to answer the SAC. See Answer (Doc. No. 246).

The concept of "vertical integration" is central to the Plaintiffs' theory that the Hillandale Entities are involved in the overarching conspiracy, and the SAC describes vertical integration in one of two contexts. As alleged, a business that is "vertically integrated" is "integrated from the point of production through final marketing and sale." Id. ¶ 457; see also id. ¶ 408. As such, according to Plaintiffs, "vertically integrated firms mill their own feed, hatch chicks, rear pullets, confine hens, produce and/or purchase eggs, wash, candle, grade, store, market, transport and distribute their own eggs." Id. ¶ 457. Vertical integration is purportedly the predominant business model across the egg industry and "[m]ost of the large firms now either own egg production facilities or have production contracts with local egg producers." Id. ¶ 124. The SAC further pleads that "Hillandale Farms" is "a vertically integrated supplier . . . directly involved in every aspect of egg production and distribution," and that each of the Hillandale Entities "is part of the Hillandale Farms integrated enterprise." Id. ¶¶ 80, 85-87.

The SAC predominantly attributes [111] alleged conduct that ostensibly advanced the conspiracy to "Hillandale Farms." For example, Plaintiffs charge that "Hillandale Farms" "adopt[ed] UEP Certified guidelines to reduce chick hatch (certification nos. 182 and 328)", "signed a commitment sheet in late 2004 to either reduce flock size or dispose of hens", was a "member of USEM and/or participated in egg exports, sharing any associated financial losses with other members." Id. ¶ 90. As pled, "UEP newsletters also reported that Hillandale Farms completed animal care certified audits, was a certified company and licensed marketer, and displayed the animal care certified logo on its packages." Id. ¶ 82.

Although these factual allegations are rather specific in nature, more robust factual details explicitly link only Hillandale Farms of Pa., Inc. or "Hillandale Farms — PA" to these alleged activities. For example, the SAC alleges that "Hillandale Farms — PA" agreed to the UEP Certified Program as of 2003, maintains certification no. 182 under the program, and signed a written commitment sheet to either reduce flock size or dispose of hens earlier than scheduled. Id. ¶¶ 257, 291, 301, 448. The SAC also alleges that the Pittsburgh-Post [112] Gazette reported that Gary Bethel, as "a spokesman for Hillandale Farms of Pennsylvania," commented that, "We've been taking a proactive approach towards allowing caged chickens more space . . . . If we had a house that held 100,000 chickens five years ago, it would house 80,000 now, and that means quite a reduction in total egg numbers." Id. ¶ 369.

The remaining, more specific SAC allegations that use the arguably non-specific or, alternatively, "umbrella" term "Hillandale Farms" refer to "Gary Bethel (Hillandale Farms)" as a member of the UEP marketing committee on January 26, 2004 and May 10, 2004, and as a board member who attended a Board of Directors Legislative Meeting on May 12-15, 2003. Id. ¶¶ 264, 272, 336. "Hillandale Farms" allegedly maintains Certification No. 182 under the UEP certification program. Id. ¶ 448. The SAC also alleges that "Hillandale," a name or term that is undefined in the SAC, was a USEM member that received a March 20, 2003 memorandum from Gene Gregory addressed to all USEM members. Id. ¶ 334.

As this narrative of the SAC's allegations against the Hillandale Entities, "Hillandale Farms," and "Hillandale" demonstrates (and as Plaintiffs appear to concede), [113] Plaintiffs have not directly alleged [*747] that any of the Hillandale Entities individually agreed to or participated in the conspiracy to reduce the supply of eggs. There simply is an absence of specific factual allegations in the SAC to connect each (or any) of the Hillandale Entities directly to the conspiracy. See *Digital Music, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 77442, 2011 WL 2848195, at 20 (granting motion to dismiss as to three defendant corporations, in part, because the complaint does not allege their "direct involvement" in the alleged conspiracy"); *In re TFT-LCD (Flat Panel) Antitrust Litig., Nos. M 07-1827 SI, C 09-5609, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 64930, 2010 WL 2629728, at 7 (N.D. Cal. June 29, 2010) (granting PENAC's individual motion to dismiss, in part, because "[t]here is nothing in paragraph 53 [the only allegation that "mentions" PENAC] or elsewhere alleging how PENAC participated in the conspiracy"); see also Invamed, 22 F. Supp. 2d at 221, ("[Plaintiff] must allege some circumstances from which the existence of an anticompetitive agreement, express or implied, of which the Affiliates were a part can be inferred." (citation omitted)).

HN29[] When defendant corporate entities "are not plausibly alleged to be directly liable—that is, are not plausibly [114] alleged to have themselves entered into unlawful agreements," there must be some "other basis imputng § 1 liability to" those entities. Ins. Brokerage, 618 F.3d at 341 n.44; cf. *In re Cal. Title Ins. Antitrust Litig., No. C 08-01341, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 43323, 2009 WL 1458025, at 7 (N.D. Cal. May 21, 2009) ("[T]o state a claim against the Parent Corporations, Plaintiffs either must set forth facts establishing direct participation in the alleged conspiracy or set forth sufficient allegations showing that the Parent Corporations are vicariously liable for the acts of their subsidiary corporations."). This is because "[a]s a matter of well-settled common law, a subsidiary is a distinct legal entity and is not liable for the actions of its parent or sister corporations simply by dint of the corporate relationship." Ins. Brokerage, 618 F.3d at 341 n.44 (citing William Meade Fletcher, Cyclopedia of Law of Private Corporations § 33, at 89 (perm. ed. rev. vol. 2006)); Burks v. Lasker, 441 U.S. 471, 478, 99 S. Ct. 1831, 60 L. Ed. 2d 404 (1979)). Indeed, absent some basis for imputing liability, subsidiary entities cannot automatically sustain liability "under § 1 for any agreements to which the parent is a party." Id.

In an attempt to assert some "other [115] basis" for liability against the Hillandale Entities, Plaintiffs argue—without using the term—what is essentially a "single enterprise" theory for imputing liability. They claim that in the antitrust context separately incorporated legal entities may, as a practical matter, be treated as a single entity for purposes of illegal conduct and hence liability: "[T]he actions of the multiple Hillandale Defendants were really unilateral behavior flowing from decisions of a single enterprise." Pls.' Resp. at 52. It follows, they contend, that piercing the corporate veil or other established theories for imputing liability among corporate entities by permeating their borders are inapposite to the issue at hand. Indeed, Plaintiffs expressly do not raise these theories in support of the SAC. The issue, according to Plaintiffs, concerns whether the Hillandale Entities were "integrated," or in other words, operated together, with respect to alleged conduct that advanced the conspiracy. Plaintiffs submit that the pleading requirements of "integration" for antitrust liability purposes apply a less stringent standard than those of veil piercing. Their argument follows that they have sufficiently alleged [116] that the entities played a role in the conspiracy through a "single enterprise" theory by alleging that through vertical integration and overlapping owners and management each of the Hillandale Entities is a part of an integrated enterprise. Plaintiffs maintain [*748] that on the basis of their "single enterprise" theory the conduct alleged as to "Hillandale Farms" is thereby attributable to each of the Hillandale Entities. As such, Plaintiffs contend, it is unnecessary for the SAC to allege additional facts that directly connect each of the Hillandale Entities to the conspiracy.

This argument is unpersuasive for several reasons. As a predicate, Plaintiffs claim that the separately incorporated entities can constitute a single entity with respect to illegal antitrust conduct. But this is unsupported by the spare legal authority Plaintiffs present in their brief and oral argument materials. Notably, such legal authorities as Plaintiffs offer primarily entail excerpted case quotations, which when read in the context of the actual cases, do not carry the import of what Plaintiffs attempt to muster.

This is certainly true concerning Plaintiffs' reliance on Copperweld Corp. v. Independence Tube Corp., 467 U.S. 752, 104 S. Ct. 2731, 81 L. Ed. 2d 628. [117] Plaintiffs attempt to invoke the concept articulated in Copperweld that "the concerted activity of two entities [within a corporate family] . . . is really unilateral behavior flowing from decisions of a single enterprise," id. at 766-67, by asserting that a parent and its wholly owned subsidiaries "are not unlike a multiple team of horses drawing a vehicle under the control of a single driver," id. at 771. Plaintiffs' application of Copperweld in this manner is an attempt to unhitch the team from the harness. Indeed, the Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit recognized this when it confronted and rejected a virtually identical line of argument:

> Plaintiffs argue that subsidiary companies "act[ ] at the common direction of the parent[]," Plaintiffs' Comm. Reply Br. 12, and that "in reality a parent and a wholly owned subsidiary always have a unity of purpose or a common design," Plaintiffs' EB Reply Br. 35 (quoting Copperweld, 467 U.S. at 771) (internal quotation marks omitted). Emphasizing these features of the parent-subsidiary relationship, the Supreme Court held in Copperweld that HN30[] parents and subsidiaries could not conspire for purposes of § 1 of the Sherman Act. 467 U.S. at 776; [118] see Am. Needle, 130 S. Ct. at 2212, 176 L. Ed. 2d 947 (noting that an "agreement" is cognizable under § 1 only if it "joins together 'independent centers of decisionmaking' " (quoting Copperweld, 467 U.S. at 769)). Contrary to plaintiffs' suggestion, . . . it does not follow from Copperweld that subsidiary entities are automatically liable under § 1 for any agreements to which the parent is a party."

Ins. Brokerage, 618 F.3d at 341 n.44. Other courts have likewise rejected this attempt to draw a "single enterprise" theory from Copperweld. See Fla. Cement, 746 F. Supp. 2d at 1324 (". . . Plaintiffs do not explain why, if Copperweld eliminated antitrust liability for cooperation between parent corporations and subsidiaries . . . , [the parent] should be held liable for [the subsidiary]'s alleged participation in the concrete conspiracy in this case."

(relying on Mitchael v. Intracorp, Inc., 179 F.3d 847, 857 (10th Cir.1999)); cf. Sun Microsystems Inc. v. Hynix Semiconductor Inc., 608 F. Supp. 2d 1166, 1185-86 (N.D. Cal. 2009) ("While true that a single entity doctrine was announced in Copperweld, . . . [t]he doctrine . . . expressly deals with the question whether a parent and subsidiary corporation may [119] be charged with conspiring with each other, and not, as is the case here, with the question whether those two entities may collectively be treated as a single entity for purposes of jurisdictional antitrust standing.").

[*749] Furthermore, the allegations of "vertical integration" and overlapping ownership and control, as they are advanced, do not support the heavy load that Plaintiffs have lifted upon them. Vertical integration is a term that the SAC defines vaguely, [38] but in essence, it is alleged to be a business model, one that is structured around the egg supply chain. As used by Plaintiffs, the term alone certainly does not intimate that the Hillandale Entities, by allegedly being a part of a vertically integrated enterprise, are so linked that they effectively function as single entity with respect to alleged antitrust conduct.

This conclusion remains undisturbed even considering Plaintiffs' contention that the Hillandale Entities have common ownership and control. Plaintiffs have not alleged that the Hillandale Entities are a part of a conventional parent and wholly-owned-subsidiary corporate structure. Instead, the entities merely are alleged to have individuals in overlapping ownership or controlling roles, and it cannot be said these allegations plausibly suggest that the entities are under common ownership or control such that a single decision-making source exercises definitive control over each of them. See Fletcher, supra § 43 ("Common officers and management are not incompatible with separate entities [121] or conclusive of identity . . . ."); cf. In re Mushroom Direct Purchaser Antitrust Litig., 621 F. Supp. 2d 274, 290 (E.D. Pa. 2009), appeal denied, Nos. 09-2257, 09-2258, 655 F.3d 158, 2011 U.S. App. LEXIS 17530, 2011 WL 3672510 (3d Cir. Aug. 23, 2011) ("While some overlap existed in ownership between the affiliated distributors and the member growers, they were not under common control in the same sense as is a corporation and its wholly-owned subsidiary, a corporation and its divisions or as are two corporations owned in identical proportions by the same set of investors . . . . The affiliated distributors do not have 100% ownership or a de minimis deviation from complete ownership and there is no indication that the overlapping owners would have control independent of their co-owners." (citations omitted)). Moreover, HN31[] the mere "fact that two corporations have common shareholders, officers or directors, or that their names are similar," does not "impose liability on one for the torts of the other or its agents." Fletcher, supra § 4878. Without specific allegations that would support how or why overlapping, but non-identical, ownership and management combinations might intimate common ownership and control, Plaintiffs' contentions [122] of common ownership are entirely unsupported by the SAC.

Due to the absence of allegations in the SAC suggestive of either independent liability or a basis for imputing liability, Plaintiffs have not met their pleading obligations as to the "Hillandale Entities." Plaintiffs' proposed basis for imputing liability premised on a "single enterprise" theory is unsupported by legal authority and does not provide occasion to disregard the separate corporate forms of these entities and impose liability on them.

[*750] Additionally, the allegations in the SAC concerning vertical integration and the entities' ownership and control dynamics do not conform with the characterizations that Plaintiffs attempt to assign them. Given that their

[38] The Hillandale Entities argue that the vagueness of "vertical integration" is akin to that of "governing sponsor," used by the plaintiffs in Jung v. Association of American Medical Colleges, 300 F. Supp. 2d 119. Indeed, there are parallels between the terms. With respect to "governing sponsor" the Jung Court found:

> [The] meaning of the term "governing sponsor" [120] is far from self-evident, and plaintiffs do not make any assertions with respect to what role governing sponsors play for [other individual defendants]. The Court will not speculate as to the purpose or activities of a "governing sponsor" or infer from this vague term that [an alleged sponsor engaged in certain alleged conduct] . . . . While all inferences are to be drawn in favor of plaintiffs on a motion to dismiss, the Court will not draw inferences from such vague, unsupported allegations."

basis for imputing liability is not cognizable and that Plaintiffs raise no other theories for imputation of liability, general allegations as to "Hillandale Farms" or "Hillandale" are insufficient to give notice to the Hillandale Entities of the claims against them. See TFT-LCD, 586 F. Supp. 2d at 1117 ("[G]eneral allegations as to all defendants, to 'Japanese defendants,' to a single corporate entity such as 'Hitachi' is insufficient to put specific defendants on notice [123] of the claims against them."); cf. *Flat Panel, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 64930, 2010 WL 2629728, at 7 ("[A]llegations and assertions about [alleged related companies] are insufficient to state a claim against PENAC unless the complaint alleges a specific connection between PENAC and the alleged conspiracy."). The SAC's few specific allegations as to the Hillandale Entities in no way imply that the entities directly agreed to or participated in the conspiracy, and as such, fail to provide such notice so that any of the Hillandale Entities seeking to respond to the SAC "would have little idea where to begin." Twombly, 550 U.S. at 565 n.10. Accordingly, the Court concludes that the Hillandale Entities' motion should be granted in part but without prejudice for Plaintiffs to seek leave to amend the complaint to more specifically plead how these defendants allegedly joined the alleged conspiracy other than as a conveniently scrambled group. [39]

F. UEA's Motion to Dismiss

UEA argues that the SAC's allegations pertaining to it either are merely conclusory, or simply do not support the inference that UEA joined or participated in the alleged conspiracy. According to UEA, the SAC fails [125] to allege any freestanding conduct that could suggest participation—namely, any conduct by UEA relating to the eight coordinated actions alleged to have advanced the conspiracy—and there are insufficient alleged facts to perceive UEA's participation through any imputation of liability theories. The Court agrees.

Plaintiffs allege that UEA is a 501(c)(6) nonprofit corporation organized under the laws of the District of Columbia. SAC ¶¶ 108, 178. [40] Its principal place of business [*751] is located in Alpharetta, Georgia. Id. ¶ 108. The SAC twice mentions that UEA shares the same address with UEP and USEM. Id. ¶¶ 181, 441. UEA, as averred, "has three divisions: (I) Further Processors (egg breaking and further processing), (ii) Producers and Packers, and (iii) Allied Industries (products, services, and consulting)" and its IRS Form 990 allegedly states its "'primary exempt purpose' is to 'promote, educate [and] defend issues for [the] egg industry.'" Id. ¶ 178; see also id. ¶ 410. These three divisions are said to be part of "an 'alliance' of five separate organizations providing services to the egg industry" and "represent[ing] the interests of all sectors of the egg industry." Id. ¶¶ 176, 463. [126] The other two alleged members of the "United Egg 'Alliance,'" id. ¶ 463, are UEP and USEM, id. ¶ 176. The SAC further generally alleges that UEP "manages" and "oversees" the "United Egg 'Alliance'" and "manages" the UEA. Id. ¶¶ 177-78.

Plaintiffs repeat throughout the SAC the general claim that there was overlap in membership and leadership across UEA, UEP, and USEM. Id. ¶¶ 437, 450. For example, the SAC alleges that "Gene Gregory is president of all three entities (UEP, UEA, and USEM)." Id. ¶ 450; see also id. ¶ 443. Additionally, Mr. Gregory's son, Chad Gregory, is said to be a senior vice president for UEA and UEP. Id. ¶ 444. [41] According to the SAC, "[i]n 2004, Toby Catherman of Michael Foods was elected chairman of UEA and Dan Meagher of Moark was elected vice chairman. Michael Foods and Moark were also members of UEP and their employees held positions in the [127] UEP, as well." Id. ¶ 437. As another example, the SAC avers "in October 2005, Dan Meagher of Moark was elected chairman of UEA, and Greg Hinton of Rose Acre Farms was elected vice-chairman. Rose Acre Farms was a member of UEP and its employees held positions in the UEP." Id. ¶ 438. Plaintiffs also broadly and unprecisely charge that "UEP and UEA share staff." Id. ¶ 451.

[39] HN32[] "Leave to amend must generally be granted unless equitable considerations render it otherwise unjust." Arthur v. Maersk, Inc., 434 F.3d 196, 204 (3d Cir. 2006) (citing Foman v. Davis, 371 U.S. 178, 182, 83 S. Ct. 227, 9 L. Ed. 2d 222 (1962), and Lorenz v. CSX Corp., 1 F.3d 1406, 1414 (3d Cir. 1993)). The Hillandale [124] Entities urge the Court to dismiss the SAC with prejudice and without leave to amend the complaint, arguing that "[t]o allow Plaintiffs to amend their Complaint yet again, imposing still more expense and delay on the Moving Defendants for their own failures to plead, would not be fair to the Moving Defendants, to the other parties in this suit, or to the Court." Hillandale Entities Mot. at 11. At this juncture, while acknowledging that such arguments are not unexpected and are not without certain objective merit, the Court does not find that these arguments provide sufficient grounds to weigh against granting Plaintiffs leave to seek to amend the claims against the Hillandale Entities. Of course, the Court would expect any new effort by Plaintiffs to amend as to any of the Hillandale Entities would represent and entail a meaningfully more substantive claim as to the individual entities than was mounted against any one of—or all of—them in the SAC.

[40] There is a conflict in the SAC concerning the UEA's state of incorporation. In contrast to Paragraph 108, Paragraph 178 alleges that UEA is an "organization existing under the laws of Georgia." Id. ¶ 178. At oral argument, however, UEA's counsel noted that UEA was organized in the District of Columbia. Day 2 Tr. at 145:6-8.

Additionally, the SAC contains a hodgepodge of statements asserting that on occasions UEA members attended UEP Board and committee meetings, and that UEA and UEP held meetings at concurrent times and places. For example, one such allegation avers that a UEP April 2004 newsletter implies that UEA members had attended past UEP meetings and expresses UEP's "hope the [UEA] Allied members will continue to attend UEP's Spring Legislative meeting because this meeting is so critically important to our customers (egg producers)." Id. ¶ 434 (alteration in original). The UEP's May 2004 newsletter allegedly reported that UEA members attended the UEP's Spring Legislative Meeting [128] in Washington, D.C., and "participated in committee meetings [and] [the] board meeting." Id. ¶ 435 (first bracket in original).

Plaintiffs also plead that UEP and UEA scheduled their organizations' respective annual meetings to be held "in conjunction" with the others' "and members of both organizations attend joint meetings." Id. ¶ 433. For example, UEA apparently held its annual meeting "in conjunction" with the UEP annual meeting in 2007 in San Antonio. Id. ¶ 433 n.96. Another such occasion is mentioned as to when both annual meetings were held was on October 20-22, 2004 in New Orleans. Id. ¶¶ 284, 434. The SAC generally refers to these meetings as "UEP's and UEA's joint Annual Board Meeting in New Orleans," id. ¶ 284, but specifically pleads that the meetings were distinct: "[I]n its April 2004 newsletter, UEP noted: 'UEP's Annual [*752] Meeting will be held in New Orleans on October 20-22. UEA will schedule a time during the October dates to hold their [sic] annual membership meeting.'" Id. ¶ 434. Additionally, the SAC alleges that the UEA division for "Further Processors" invited the UEP Executive Committee to its meeting on April 27, 2004. Id. ¶ 436.

The SAC further alleges that "after [129] the filing of this action . . . UEP . . . prohibited UEA and non-egg producers from participating in . . . meetings. . . ." Id. ¶ 466. UEP's January 20, 2009 newsletter allegedly states:

> It should be noted that the Animal Welfare and Marketing Committees will be closed to UEP members only. Additionally, the Board of Directors meeting will include a time period at the close of the meeting, for UEP Board members only. UEP meetings have always been open to everyone and therefore we apologize that circumstances now warrant some meetings or portions of some meetings to be closed to selected members. We hope [UEA] allied members and others will be understanding.

Id. (emphasis and alteration in original).

The final category of allegations as to UEA concerns its purported "financial support for many of UEP's projects." Id. ¶ 451. Plaintiffs charge two such instances of UEA's alleged financial support. The first is recounted in an article reporting on what seems to be the New Orleans UEA annual meeting in the October 2004 UEP newsletter, which states:

> UEA-Allied members continue to be extremely supportive of UEP and of assistance to the egg industry. The members held their annual membership meeting [130] in New Orleans and voted to set aside $20,000.00 that may be used by UEP for animal welfare research projects. Additionally the organization approved a budget, which will provide $40,000.00 for UEP[']s management.

Id. ¶ 452. The other instance referenced in the SAC as to UEA's alleged financial support entails UEA allegedly "approv[ing] a budget which will provide approximately $70,000.00 [in] support for UEP programs and management," as described by UEP's October 2005 newsletter. Id. ¶ 453.

[41] There is a conflicting allegation in the SAC's Paragraph 331 that Chad Gregory was "Senior Vice President of the UEP and member of the UEA." Id. ¶ 331.

Based on these allegations, the Court concludes that Plaintiffs have failed to suggest plausibly that UEA joined the alleged conspiracy. The specific facts alleged simply do not support the SAC's bald contention that "UEP has conspired with UEA and its non-producer members and USEM to implement its unlawful supply control campaign at numerous industry meetings." Id. ¶ 465. The SAC's allegation that "UEA and its members were aware of, supported, and participated in the conspiracy . . . ." is similarly unsupported. Id. ¶ 411.

HN33[] A claim for a § 1 violation cannot merely rest upon allegations of common resources and membership between incorporated trade groups, much the same as such allegations cannot sustain [131] a § 1 claim against corporate entities that have common management. There is nothing inherently illegal or actionable for separately incorporated trade groups to share a mailing address, a president, common leadership, or staff. Likewise, no nefarious conclusions can be drawn necessarily from the fact that meetings are held at the same time in the same town. Indeed, Plaintiffs provide no support for such a contention despite arguing that these factual allegations demonstrate that the SAC "directly alleges UEA's role as a co-conspirator in implementing the supply restriction scheme." Pls.' Resp. at 65. At most, such circumstances suggest opportunities (and hardly exclusive opportunities as that) to conspire with arguably greater convenience.

[*753] HN34[] A trade association "can only be held liable for concerted action if it acted as an entity . . . . [and] concerted action does not exist every time a trade association member speaks or acts." Alvord-Polk, Inc. v. F. Schumacher & Co., 37 F.3d 996, 1007 (3d Cir. 1994) (citing Nanavati v. Burdette Tomlin Mem'l Hosp., 857 F.2d 96, 117-18 (3d Cir.1988)); see also Jung, 300 F. Supp. 2d at 165 (same). Therefore, "the Court will not impute the activities [132] of [an] organization's members to the organization itself absent allegations that the entity participated in the conspiracy." Jung, 300 F. Supp. 2d at 165. That UEA allegedly has overlapping members with UEP and USEM, and that UEA members may have attended UEP and USEM meetings, or vice versa, are not sufficient alone to plausibly suggest that UEA as an entity participated in the conspiracy. Moreover, the specific meetings that allegedly were attended jointly do not appear to be connected to approving or discussing conduct that allegedly advanced the conspiracy. The Court recognizes that a possible exception to this may be the New Orleans UEP meeting where the UEP Board in 2004 allegedly approved a flock disposal plan, SAC ¶¶ 284-85, and UEA members might have been in attendance. However, as stated above, mere attendance at a meeting is not enough to sustain liability for an individual corporate defendant, and certainly could not extend to UEA merely through its members' alleged attendance.

Similarly, HN35[] the Court cannot automatically impute the conduct of UEA leadership or staff to UEA. Certainly, a trade organization can be liable for antitrust violations of its agents premised on a [133] theory of apparent authority. See Alvord-Polk, Inc., 37 F.3d at 1009 ("[A] principal will be liable for an antitrust violation if an agent acting with apparent authority violates the antitrust laws . . . by conspiring with another person." (citation omitted)). As a corollary, however, Plaintiffs must allege facts sufficient to demonstrate the agents were acting with the apparent authority of UEA. Cf. Restatement (Second) of Agency § 8 (1958) ("Apparent authority is the power to affect the legal relations of another person by transactions with third persons, professedly as agent for the other, arising from and in accordance with the other's manifestations to such third persons.").

The allegations as to UEA's leadership's actions do not raise the specter that they were conducted with UEA's apparent authority. For example, the SAC alleges that Dolph Baker, Chad Gregory, and Joseph Fortin, who are each alleged to have held leadership positions in both UEA and UEP "were strong proponents and vocal advocates of exporting large amounts of eggs outside of the United States for the sole purpose of increasing domestic egg prices," SAC ¶ 331, however, there are no allegations that would suggest [134] that these individuals' alleged advocacy was undertaken with UEA's apparent authority. There also is no support for the notion that Mr. Gregory acted with UEA apparent authority when he purportedly wrote "numerous articles in 'United Voices' urging egg industry output restrictions." Id. ¶ 450. Indeed, "United Voices" is alleged to be solely a UEP bi-weekly publication. Id. ¶ 175.

To the extent that the SAC specifically pleads that Mr. Gregory attended "numerous meetings with UEP, UEA and USEM and other participants in the conspiracy," id. ¶ 450, there are no allegations that suggest that Mr. Gregory was acting in a dual capacity in his attendance at such meetings—i.e., that he might be acting as president to both UEA and UEP when attending a UEP meeting. Likewise, there is no allegation that Mr. Gregory acted in a dual capacity when he allegedly "directed, participated in, and authorized [*754] UEP's unlawful conduct as detailed" in the SAC. Id. ¶ 450. Nor do the facts alleged suggest, contrary to Plaintiffs' intimation at oral argument, that Mr. Gregory (when acting as UEA president) applied the knowledge that he might have acquired as president for UEP or USEM, and that such knowledge was [135] imputable to UEA. Day 2 Tr. at 166:7-21.

Rather, the SAC frequently is explicit in deliberately delineating Mr. Gregory's affiliation when alleging his actions, and throughout the SAC he is predominantly alleged to have acted under the auspices of the UEP. See, e.g., id. ¶ 210 (describing that at "UEP meetings around this time . . . Gene Gregory (UEP) publicly praised the economic benefits of decreased supply from [the UEP Certified] program."); id. ¶ 271 ("In a May 6th, 2004 email . . . , Gene Gregory of UEP wrote of his concerns with the current supply demand situation and asked the industry to participate in a new supply restriction scheme . . . ."); id. ¶ 286 ("On November 1, 2004, Feedstuffs also reported on the October meeting . . . . UEP's Gene Gregory was quoted . . . ."). On the few occasions when the SAC does not explicitly identify Mr. Gregory's affiliation, there are no allegations from which to infer reliably that he acted under UEA's apparent authority. See, e.g., id. ¶¶ 272-75 (describing Mr. Gregory's presentation, entitled "Market Analysis (Now & Future)," given at a UEP's Marketing Committee meeting on May 10, 2004 in Washington, D.C.); id. ¶ 334 ("[O]n March 20, 2003, [136] Gene Gregory sent a memo to all USEM members . . . ."); id. ¶ 353 ("On May 14, 2007, UEP hosted a Marketing Committee meeting in Washington, DC [sic]. . . . Minutes from this meeting reflect: Gene Gregory reported on the sales since UEP assumed management of USEM.").

The Plaintiffs' defense of the SAC also highlights the allegation of UEA's purported "alliance" with UEP and USEM, and that UEP "manages" this alliance. But it is unclear for what purpose or in support of what legal theory that Plaintiffs raise these allegations. Plaintiffs merely cite these factual allegations to support their broader claim that the SAC "alleges the conspiracy to reduce supply involved UEA and other non-producers." Pls.' Resp. at 64. In any case, the Court concludes that generic allegations of "alliance" and UEP's management of the "alliance" and UEA are too vague to buoy any inference that there was such a close nexus between UEA, UEP, and USEM that would suggest that UEA, by virtue of association, agreed to or participated in the conspiracy.

As stated above, UEA can only sustain § 1 liability when it acted as an entity. But even considering the few allegations of UEA's actual conduct as an entity in connection [137] with overall allegations against UEA and the entirety of the alleged conspiracy, the Court cannot agree that Plaintiffs have adequately stated a claim against UEA.

Indeed, very little can be divined from the allegation that UEA's "Further Processors" division invited the UEP Executive Committee to a meeting on April 27, 2004, particularly because the allegation stands virtually unadorned by any additional factual context. Plaintiffs do not allege any additional information about the meeting, such as whether it actually was held, whether the Executive Committee accepted the invitation, what was discussed at the meeting, and so forth.

Furthermore, UEA's alleged financial support of UEP similarly fails to provide indicia of agreement to or participation in the purported conspiracy. The vague allegations that UEA approved the provision of funds for UEP to apply to "animal welfare research projects," UEP's "management," and UEP's "programs and management" [*755] do not suggest that UEA has financially supported UEP projects relating to the alleged output restriction scheme. There are no allegations in the SAC from which to connect these broad terms of "management," "programs," and "animal welfare [138] research project" to the eight collective actions that allegedly advanced the conspiracy, and certainly, the use of these generic terms do not support the inference that UEA agreed to the conspiracy. In particular, the SAC does not rule out the possibility that UEP, while allegedly participating in the conspiracy, actually undertook at least some animal welfare research projects for a legitimate purpose. The SAC alleges that UEP did engage in animal welfare research. See, e.g., SAC ¶ 422 (describing a study involving "preference testing and use of space studies, [which] indicate that hens need and want more space than 72 sq. in.").

Accordingly, upon review of the SAC, the Court agrees that the pleading cannot survive UEA's motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim. The Court concludes that the UEA motion must be granted, but also without prejudice.

Plaintiffs may endeavor to amend their complaint to enhance their claims against UEA if, after considered evaluation, such a request seems substantively warranted.

VI. Conclusion

For the foregoing reasons, the Court concludes that Plaintiffs have adequately alleged that Michael Foods, Daybreak, Rose Acre, and Ohio Fresh joined in the alleged [139] conspiracy to reduce the supply of eggs. The Court thereby denies these Defendants' motions to dismiss. In doing so, the Court is certainly cognizant that "[i]n the end, it may be found that . . . certain . . . defendant[s] [were] not involved in the conspiracy, or had a lesser, or greater, role in the conspiracy. Clearly, the plaintiffs will be required to prove each particular defendant's culpability prior to obtaining relief from that defendant in this action." Elec. Carbon, 333 F. Supp. 2d at 313.

Because the SAC fails to suggest plausibly that the Hillandale Entities and UEA joined the conspiracy, the Court grants those Defendants' motions to dismiss, but without prejudice to Plaintiffs to seek the Court's leave to amend their complaint against them, provided Plaintiffs do so in a timely manner. An Order consistent with this Memorandum follows.

ORDER

AND NOW, this 26th day of September, 2011, upon consideration of the six motions to dismiss filed by Defendants Michael Foods, Inc., Daybreak Foods, Inc., Rose Acre Farms, Inc., Ohio Fresh Eggs, LLC, Hillandale-Gettysburg, L.P., Hillandale Farms, Inc., and Hillandale Farms East, Inc., and United Egg Association, and the Direct Purchaser Plaintiffs' response and the parties' supplemental filings thereto, and for the reasons stated in the accompanying Memorandum, it is hereby ORDERED as follows:

1. The Motion to Dismiss Direct Purchaser Second Consolidated Amended Complaint as to Defendant Michael Foods, Inc. (Doc. No. 236) is DENIED.
2. The Defendant Daybreak Foods, Inc.'s Motion to Dismiss Direct Purchasers' Second Consolidated Amended Class Action Complaint (Doc. No. 233) is DENIED.

3. The Motion to Dismiss the Direct Purchasers' Second Consolidated Amended Class Action Complaint on Behalf of Defendant Rose Acre Farms, Inc. (Doc. No. 234) [141] is DENIED.
4. The Defendant Ohio Fresh Eggs, LLC's Renewed Motion to Dismiss the Direct Purchaser Plaintiffs' Second Consolidated Amended Class Action Complaint (Doc. No. 238) is DENIED.
5. The Motion to Dismiss the Direct Purchaser Plaintiffs' Second Consolidated Amended Class Action Complaint on Behalf of Defendants Hillandale-Gettysburg, L.P., Hillandale Farms, Inc., and Hillandale Farms East, Inc. (Doc. No. 240) is GRANTED without prejudice. Plaintiffs may seek leave to file an amended complaint consistent with the terms of the Court's Memorandum.

[42] Given that the SAC spans hundreds of paragraphs, many of which are themselves quite lengthy, the Court advises Plaintiffs that if they elect to seek the Court's leave to amend their pleading and attach a proposed amended version, in order to facilitate a comparative review of any proposed version, they should also attach as an exhibit a "redline version" inline tracking any revisions [140] to the SAC and provide the Court with an electronically searchable version of the amended pleading, i.e., .pdf format.

6. The United Egg Association's Motion to Dismiss the Claims Against it in Direct Purchasers' Second Consolidated Amended Class Action Complaint (Doc. No. 232) is GRANTED without prejudice. Plaintiffs may seek leave to file an amended complaint consistent with the terms of the Court's Memorandum.

MEMORANDUM & ORDER

MATSUMOTO, UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE:

Certified public accountant Patrick R. Colabella ("Colabella") and his accounting practice, Colabella & Company, LLP ("Colabella & Company") (collectively, "plaintiffs"), commenced this action against defendants American Institute of Certified Public Accountants ("AICPA"), New York State Society of Certified Public Accountants ("NYSSCPA") and NYSSCPA officers Samuel M. Bronsky ("Bronsky") and Thomas W. Morris ("Morris") (collectively, "defendants"), seeking declaratory relief and damages, alleging, inter alia, under federal and state law that pursuant to 42 U.S.C. § 1983, defendants unlawfully deprived Colabella of his right to conduct peer reviews of fellow Certified Public Accountants ("CPAs") under the auspices [*2] of AICPA and NYSSCPA; unlawfully subjected him to loss of business profits; and violated certain sections of the Sherman and Clayton Acts by monopolizing the market for peer review of CPAs in New York State. Defendants move to dismiss the Amended Complaint (ECF No. 12, "Am. Compl.") for failure to state a claim pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure

12(b)(6) ("Rule 12(b)(6)").[1] For the reasons that follow, defendants' Rule 12(b)(6) motions are granted as to plaintiffs' federal claims. In addition, the court declines in its discretion to exercise supplemental jurisdiction over plaintiffs' state law claims because none of the federal claims survive this motion to dismiss. Therefore, the court also dismisses plaintiffs' state law claims, without prejudice to re-file such claims in state court.

BACKGROUND

I. Facts

The following facts are drawn from plaintiffs' Amended Complaint and are taken as true, except where noted, for purposes of this motion.

A. The Parties

Plaintiff Colabella is a CPA licensed to practice as a public accountant in New York State; he received his license in 1973, and has actively practiced in New York and elsewhere since that time. (Am. Compl. ¶ 111.) Plaintiff Colabella & Company is his accounting practice. (Id. ¶¶ 6, 200.) Colabella has never been suspended or disciplined by the New York State Education Department or the State Board of Accounting, the entities that govern admission to and regulation of the practice of accounting. (Id. ¶¶ 107, 111.) In addition, at all times relevant to the present action, he was a member in good standing of two national professional associations for CPAs: AICPA and NYSSCPA. (Id. ¶¶ 46, 60, 100.)

Defendant AICPA is a national professional organization that solicits membership among CPAs in each of the United States, the District of Columbia and elsewhere. (Id. ¶¶ 1, 100.) Defendant NYSSCPA, a professional organization for CPAs in the State of New York, [*4] acts on behalf of AICPA to administer certain functions. (Id. ¶¶ 63, 102.) Defendants Bronsky and Morris were, at all relevant times, officers of NYSSCPA. (Id. ¶¶ 3-4.)

B. Role of the AICPA In Certified Public Accountancy[2]

Although public accountants perform a broad range of accounting, auditing, tax and consulting activities for their clients, some functions--such as filing a report with the United States Securities and Exchange Commission ("SEC"), for instance --must be performed by a CPA. (Am. Compl. ¶¶ 11.A, G.) Authority to license CPAs resides within each state's Board of Accountancy. (Id. ¶ 11.H.) Passage of the Uniform CPA Examination, which is prepared and graded by AICPA, is required by the Boards of Accounting in all fifty states as a prerequisite to CPA licensure. (Id. ¶¶ 11.H-J., 110.) Membership in professional organizations such as AICPA [*5] and NYSSCPA is not required for one to remain in good standing as a licensed CPA, however. (Id. ¶¶ 101, 103.)

Standards issued by AICPA are often incorporated into frameworks and guidelines used for conducting audits of private, public and government entities. (Id. ¶¶ 12, 30, 32.) The Generally Accepted Auditing Standards ("GAAS"), which govern private-sector financial statement audits, are established largely by AICPA. (Id. ¶¶ 12.C-E.) In addition, AICPA contributes to Generally Accepted Accounting Principles ("GAAP"), which are conventions, rules

[1] The parties have submitted the following briefs in connection with defendants' motions to dismiss: ECF No. 18, Memorandum of Law in Support of Defendants' Motion to Dismiss the Amended Complaint ("Defs.' Mem."); ECF No. 22, Plaintiffs' Memorandum of Law in Opposition to Defendants' Motion to Dismiss the Amended Complaint ("Pls.' Opp'n"); and ECF No. 20, Reply Memorandum of Law In Support of [*3] Defendants' Motion to Dismiss the Amended Complaint ("Defs.' Reply").

[2] Because adjudication of defendants' motion to dismiss requires context regarding the accounting profession, peer review of CPAs and the role of the AICPA, sections B and C herein provide relevant background facts pleaded in the Amended Complaint, while sections D and E set forth the alleged facts immediately underlying plaintiffs' claims.

and procedures that define accepted financial accounting practices for public companies. (Id. ¶¶ 12.F-H, 13-16.) Moreover, various standards and criteria first established by AICPA are incorporated into the Generally Accepted Government Auditing Standards ("GAGAS"), which are used for audits of government entities and entities that receive government awards. (Id. ¶¶ 24-36.)

C. Peer Review of Certified Public Accountants

Through the peer-review process, CPAs independently assess each others' work to evaluate and maintain the quality of work within the profession. (Am. Compl. ¶¶ 48, 50.) Peer review is mandated by law for CPAs in forty-two states; [*6] notably, however, peer review is not yet compulsory for CPAs in New York State.[3] (Id. ¶¶ 52.F., 112.)

Even where the law does not necessarily mandate peer review, a CPA's clientele, or the nature of his or her work, may require it. Any CPA firm required to register with the Public Company Accounting Oversight Board ("PCAOB") must submit to periodic peer review by the PCAOB.[4] (Id. ¶¶ 52.G., 114-18.) In addition, regulations promulgated by various government agencies make peer review obligatory for CPAs who engage in specific types of work, including audits of: government entities; entities that receive government awards; FDIC-insured and Federally Insured Thrift institutions; publicly traded companies; and borrowers of the Rural Utility Service. (Id. ¶¶ 52.A-E.)

Separately, any CPA who seeks [*7] admission to or retention of membership in AICPA must be enrolled in a "practice-monitoring," or peer-review, program. (Id. ¶ 53.) AICPA maintains its own "Peer-Review Program" (the "PRP"), although AICPA itself does not perform peer reviews; rather, the peer reviews are conducted by entities approved by AICPA to perform such evaluations. (Id. ¶¶ 55, 57.) Firms and individuals who choose to enroll in the PRP must undergo triennial peer reviews conducted by independent evaluators known as "peer reviewer[s]," who are authorized by the AICPA to perform the peer reviews. (Id. ¶ 57.)

AICPA has promulgated standards for the administration, planning, performance, reporting and acceptance of peer reviews conducted by its peer reviewers for CPA firms and individuals enrolled in the PRP. (Id. ¶¶ 55, 67-95.) Under these standards, an entity that administers the PRP on behalf of AICPA may appoint a "peer review committee to oversee the administration, acceptance and completion of peer reviews." (Id. ¶ 77.) NYSSCPA, which administers the PRP on behalf of AICPA in the State of New York, is bound by all of the PRP standards promulgated by AICPA, and oversees peer reviews conducted as part of the PRP [*8] in New York, the firm or CPA being reviewed, and the peer reviewer. (Id. ¶¶ 64, 76.)

AICPA's Peer Review Board supervises NYSSCPA to ensure compliance with, and consistency in the implementation of, AICPA's standards for peer review. (Id. ¶ 64.) Those standards make clear that reviewed firms, peer reviewers and the administering entity (NYSSCPA, in New York) are expected to cooperate in the oversight process, and AICPA has issued procedures to be followed if a reviewer "fails to cooperate in a timely, professional manner." (Id. ¶¶ 64, 94.) In the event that NYSSCPA and either the peer reviewer or the reviewed firm cannot resolve a disagreement through good-faith efforts, NYSSCPA may request referral of the matter to AICPA's Peer Review Board. (Id. ¶¶ 69, 78.)

D. Section 1983 and Tort Claims

The facts, assumed to be true for purposes of this motion, are alleged in the Amended Complaint as follows. In May 1988, Colabella qualified to become a peer reviewer for the PRP, based on criteria established by AICPA. (Am.

[3] The State of New York recently enacted New York Education Law § 7410, which makes peer review mandatory for CPAs, but the law does not go into effect until January 1, 2012. (Am. Compl. ¶ 112.)

[4] The Sarbanes-Oxley Act of 2002 created the PCAOB, which is charged with the oversight, regulation, inspection, and discipline of American and foreign accounting firms that audit public companies. (Id. ¶ 21.)

Compl. ¶ 199.) Since then, Colabella (acting through Colabella & Company) has conducted peer reviews of CPA firms under the auspices of AICPA and NYSSCPA, and plaintiffs have derived [*9] material income from those peer-review engagements. (Id. ¶¶ 200, 202.)

This action arose out of Colabella's participation in the PRP as a peer reviewer of four companies and individuals who were members in good standing of NYSSCPA and AICPA. The first peer-review engagement at issue began on October 25, 2007, when Colabella commenced a peer review of FL&Z,[5] a public accounting company ("FL&Z Engagement"). (Id. ¶¶ 128-29.) He conducted the FL&Z Engagement in a timely, competent, and professional manner, and consulted with an NYSSCPA technical reviewer for assistance prior to submitting his proposed findings to NYSSCPA on April 23, 2008. (Id. ¶¶ 130-132.)

The second peer-review engagement at issue began on December 16, 2007, when Colabella commenced a peer review of DK&W, a public accounting company ("DK&W Engagement"). (Id. ¶¶ 142-43.) He conducted the DK&W Engagement in a timely, competent, and professional manner, and submitted his proposed findings to NYSSCPA on February 26, 2008. (Id. ¶¶ 144-45.)

The third peer-review engagement at issue began on January 17, 2008, [*10] when Colabella commenced a peer review of RMB, a public accountant ("RMB Engagement"). (Id. ¶¶ 138-39.) Colabella conducted the RMB Engagement in a timely, competent, and professional manner, and submitted his proposed findings to NYSSCPA on June 30, 2008. (Id. ¶¶ 140-41.)

The last peer-review engagement at issue began on April 30, 2008, when Colabella commenced a peer review of IK, a public accountant ("IK Engagement"). (Id. ¶¶ 133-34.) Colabella conducted the IK Engagement in a timely, competent, and professional manner, and submitted his proposed findings to NYSSCPA on June 30, 2008. (Id. ¶¶ 135-36.)

Upon review of Colabella's proposed findings in each of the above-mentioned Engagements, defendants Bronsky and Morris, both members of NYSSCPA's Peer Review Committee (Bronsky was Chairman of the Peer Review Committee), issued a series of notices to Colabella regarding his peer-review submissions for the FL&Z, DK&W, RMB, and IK Engagements. (Id. ¶¶ 146-48, 152, 162.) In each notice, Bronsky and Morris demanded that Colabella make certain changes to his proposed findings. (Id. ¶ 151.) Colabella did not make all of the changes demanded, however, because in plaintiff's opinion, they were [*11] stylistic rather than substantive, and unrelated to the accuracy, quality, and professionalism of his actual reports. (Id. ¶¶ 147, 151.) Consequently, in Colabella's estimation, the changes demanded were not "necessary" under the guidelines issued by AICPA and NYSSCPA, and did not warrant issuance of notices from Bronsky and Morris because Colabella was actually in compliance with all relevant guidelines. (Id. ¶ 151.) Bronsky and Morris persisted in issuing notices to plaintiff, however, because he did not make all of the changes they demanded. (Id. ¶ 147.) Colabella alleges that their notices overstated any actual unresolved issues between Colabella and his NYSSCPA technical reviewers; created the appearance of his non-compliance with AICPA's peer review standards and guidelines; and mischaracterized him as uncooperative, when in fact he was merely expressing an "independent, professional dispute" with the basis for and manner in which the Peer Review Committee reviewed his work product. (Id. ¶¶ 147-149.) The issuance of repeated notices from Bronsky and Morris resulted in Colabella's immediate suspension from the practice of conducting peer reviews on behalf of AICPA and NYSSCPA [*12] without the benefit of a prior hearing to determine the propriety of the issuance of such notices.[6] (Id. ¶¶ 156, 172, 195.)

[5] As noted in the Amended Complaint, the reviewed firms have been assigned fictitious names. (Id. ¶¶ 128, 133, 138, 142.)

[6] Plaintiffs allege that Colabella was suspended from engaging in "any further [p]eer [r]eviews" in the State of New York and elsewhere due to the issuance of notices from Bronsky and Morris. (Am. Compl. ¶¶ 156, 172.) Those allegations do not make sense in light of other facts pleaded in the Amended Complaint, namely, that firms registered with the PCAOB must undergo peer reviews routinely (id. ¶ 52.G), and that all CPAs for whom peer review is mandatory and who "are not registered and supervised by the PCAOB" must be peer-reviewed by AICPA through NYSSCPA (id. ¶¶ 114-18, 195) (emphasis added). The well-pleaded allegations indicate that peer reviews in New York State are conducted by at least two organizations: PCAOB and

In addition, on June 25, 2008, Bronsky ordered Colabella to produce proof of his compliance with the continuing professional education ("CPE") requirements mandated by AICPA and NYSSCPA. (Id. ¶ 162.) Colabella furnished proof of his total CPE credits on July 10, 2008, demonstrating that he had earned sufficient credits in specific subcategories in satisfaction of the CPE requirements of New York State, AICPA and NYSSCPA. (Id. ¶¶ 157-163; ECF No. 12, Ex. A, Summary of Continuing Professional Education Credits, dated August 5, 2005-November 15, 2009 ("CPE Credit Summary").)[7] [*14] Nevertheless, Bronsky rejected Colabella's proof and refused to credit him with sufficient compliance with GAGAS requirements, knowing that a finding of Colabella's non-compliance with CPE requirements would disqualify him from conducting further peer reviews until sufficient proof of compliance was submitted and accepted by NYSSCPA's Peer Review Committee. (Am. Compl. ¶¶ 164-65.)

In a January 8, 2009 letter addressed to Susan Coffey, Colabella complained to AICPA about NYSSCPA's Peer Review Committee, alleging that the NYSSCPA improperly noticed and suspended him on the basis of "repetitive, arbitrary and unfounded criticisms" of his work that were inconsistent with sound administration of the PRP. (Id. ¶¶ 174-75.) On July 8, 2009, PRP Director Gary Freundlich advised Colabella that an [*16] ad hoc committee of AICPA's Peer Review Board (the "Ad Hoc Committee") would hold a hearing to consider all outstanding issues, and its decision on the issues would be final. (Id. ¶¶ 175-76.) A body of materials to be used in the Ad Hoc Committee hearing--including peer-review documents, emails, and written correspondence--was served on Colabella and NYSSCPA in advance of the hearing. (Id. ¶¶ 177-78.) When the Ad Hoc Committee convened to consider the identified issues on August 31, 2009, it did not call for any testimony from Colabella or accept any argument from his counsel. (Id. ¶ 178.) Two days later, chairperson Susan Lieberum advised Colabella of the following findings and recommendations of the Ad Hoc Committee, inter alia: (1) that with respect to the DK&W Engagement, Colabella did not meet government-specific CPE requirements, and consequently, he was unqualified to perform the Engagement; (2) that with respect to the FL&Z and RMB Engagements (a) NYSSCPA's comments with respect to Colabella's work were valid, and he should have revised documents as requested on a timely basis, (b) Colabella should be given feedback for not doing so, and (c) "[i]n [*17] fairness to the reviewed firm," NYSSCPA should accept the peer-review documents submitted by Colabella and send each reviewed entity an acceptance letter notwithstanding NYSSCPA's valid comments regarding Colabella's work;[8] and (3) that with respect to the IK

NYSSCPA. Plaintiffs have not pled any relationship between PCAOB and AICPA or NYSSCPA, such that suspension under NYSSCPA's PRP would foreclose Colabella's ability to perform peer reviews for another organization such as PCAOB. "Allegations are not well pleaded if they are 'made indefinite or erroneous by other allegations in the same complaint.'" [*13] *Am. Centennial Ins. Co. v. Seguros La Republica, S.A., No. 91-CV-1235, 1996 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 7729, 1996 WL 304436, at 16 (S.D.N.Y. June 5, 1996) (quoting Trans World Airlines, Inc. v. Hughes, 308 F. Supp. 679, 683 (S.D.N.Y. 1969)). Therefore, "draw[ing] all reasonable inferences in favor of the non-moving party," Vietnam Ass'n for Victims of Agent Orange v. Dow Chem. Co., 517 F.3d 104, 115 (2d Cir. 2008), while disregarding allegations that are not well-pleaded, the court accepts as fact that Colabella was suspended only from engaging in any further peer reviews on behalf of AICPA and NYSSCPA as a result of the notices issued by Bronsky and Morris.

[7] Contrary to Colabella's assertion that the CPE Credit Summary reflects that he earned "in excess of 273 hours of total continuing education, in excess of 127 hours of which were in satisfaction of the 80 hour requirement . . . and 100 hours of which were in satisfaction of the 24 hour government auditing requirement," the CPE Credit Summary instead shows that as of July 10, 2008 (the date on which Colabella furnished the CPE Credit Summary to Bronsky), plaintiff had earned 208.5 hours of total continuing education; 82.5 hours in satisfaction of the "80-hour requirement"; and 80 hours in satisfaction of the "24-hour government auditing requirement." (CPE Credit Summary.) The CPE Credit Summary accounts for continuing education credits accrued between August 5, 2005, and November 15, 2009, but the court will [*15] consider only data on the CPE Credit Summary that reflects hours accrued as of July 10, 2008, because the court "need not feel constrained to accept as truth conflicting pleadings . . . that are contradicted either by statements in the complaint itself or by documents upon which its pleadings rely . . . ." In re Livent, Inc. Noteholders Secs. Litig., 151 F. Supp. 2d 371, 405-406 (S.D.N.Y. 2001); see also *Palm Beach Strategic Income, LP v. Salzman, No. 10-CV-261, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 46867, 2011 WL 1655575, at 8 (E.D.N.Y. May 2, 2011) (if documents deemed to be part of the complaint contradict the complaint's allegations, "the documents control" and the court need not accept the complaint's misstatements as true) (quoting Rapoport v. Asia Elecs. Holding Co., Inc., 88 F. Supp. 2d 179, 184 (S.D.N.Y. 2000)).

[8] Colabella alleges that by recommending that his peer-review reports be accepted, the Ad Hoc Committee implicitly acknowledged that his work product conformed to AICPA standards. (Am. Compl. ¶ 183.) A September 2, 2008 letter from

Engagement, (a) three of the outstanding issues presented to the Ad Hoc Committee were in fact sufficiently resolved by Colabella, (b) NYSSCPA's comments with respect to Colabella's work were valid as to one remaining item, and (c) "due to the lateness of [Colabella's] review and in fairness to the reviewed firm," NYSSCPA should accept the peer-review documents submitted by Colabella and send IK an acceptance letter notwithstanding the NYSSCPA's valid comments regarding his work. (Id. ¶¶ 179-182, 184; Lieberum Letter at 1-2.) The Ad Hoc Committee did not make any findings regarding the grievances Colabella communicated to AICPA through his January 8, 2009 letter to Coffey. (Am. Compl. ¶¶ 174, 187.)

Colabella contends that the Ad Hoc Committee's conclusions were contrary to overwhelming evidence--including his detailed and professional responses--that he had timely responded to each of NYSSCPA's requests for changes to his work product such that there were no outstanding matters to address, and that he had indeed met the mandatory CPE requirements. (Id. ¶¶ 181, 185, 188.) He also alleges that the Ad Hoc Committee's findings were designed to create an appearance of compliance with AICPA's PRP procedures, while preventing him from exercising independence in conducting peer reviews under the auspices of AICPA and NYSSCPA, and discouraging others like him who might object to the "pettiness and impracticality in the administration" of the PRP. (Id. ¶¶ 190-192.)

As a result of the Peer Review Committee's [*19] issuance of notices to Colabella, delivery of final peer-review reports to his clients was unreasonably delayed, and the cost of his compliance with the technical review of his peer-review engagements was unreasonably and unnecessarily increased. (Id. ¶¶ 206.B-C.) Furthermore, following his suspension from conducting peer reviews for the PRP, Colabella was deprived of fees that he would have derived from future peer-review engagements performed under the auspices of AICPA and NYSSCPA. (Id. ¶ 206.E.) In addition, Colabella alleges that through the suspension, AICPA and NYSSCPA summarily deprived him, without due process, of his right to conduct future peer reviews. (Id. ¶ 224.)

John A. Demetrius peer-reviewed Colabella for the period ending April 30, 2009--which encompassed the FL&Z, DK&W, RMB, and IK Engagements--and on April 29, 2010, Demetrius opined that Colabella was fully compliant with the continuing education requirements of the AICPA, New York State, and Government Auditing Standards for the relevant period. (Id. ¶ 168.) Susan M. Rowley, a Senior Technical Manager of the AICPA PRP who supervised Demetrius' peer review, likewise concluded that Colabella was in compliance with [*20] AICPA's continuing education requirements. (Id. ¶ 169.)

E. Antitrust Claims

Plaintiffs allege that the PRP constitutes a "virtual monopoly" in the market for peer review of CPAs in states such as New York where a "statutory peer review program" through which CPAs can undergo peer review is lacking. (Am. Compl. ¶ 195.) Regulations promulgated by various government agencies make peer review obligatory for CPAs who engage in specific types of work, including audits of: government entities and entities that receive government awards; FDIC-insured and Federally Insured Thrift institutions; publicly traded companies; and borrowers from the Rural Utility Service. Plaintiffs allege that all CPAs in New York State who perform such audits must be peer-reviewed through NYSSCPA under the AICPA's PRP (id. ¶¶ 52.A-E; 195), although the court notes that at least one other entity--the PCAOB--also conducts peer reviews of CPAs in this state.[9]

Susan [*18] Lieberum, writing on behalf of the AICPA PRP, makes clear, however, that AICPA directed NYSSCPA to accept Colabella's report--notwithstanding the errors therein--for the sake of the reviewed firm, and that he should be given feedback regarding the outstanding errors. (ECF No. 19, Affidavit of Virgil W. Webb ("Webb Aff."), Ex. 2, September 2, 2009 letter from Susan Lieberum ("Lieberum Letter").)

[9] Although plaintiffs allege that peer reviews of CPAs in the State of New York are administrated solely by AICPA through NYSSCPA (see Am. Compl. ¶ 113), the court does not accept this allegation as true for purposes of this motion because it is contradicted by other [*21] statements in the Amended Complaint, and as explained supra, the Court "need not feel constrained to accept as truth conflicting pleadings that make no sense . . . or that are contradicted either by statements in the complaint itself or by documents upon which its pleadings rely." In re Livent, 151 F. Supp. 2d at 405. The Amended Complaint also states

Plaintiffs allege that AICPA selectively and inconsistently applies its rules, thereby purging and excluding from its pool of approved peer reviewers those who truly seek to exercise independence and intellectual honesty, and restricting the performance of peer review to "those who accept the arbitrary and capricious administration of the Peer Review Program." (Id. ¶ 196.) Consequently, plaintiffs allege, AICPA and NYSSCPA restrain trade by restricting the class of peer reviewers for its PRP to those who are "favored" by personnel [*22] charged with administration of the PRP, and reducing competition among CPAs who want to be peer reviewers for AICPA and NYSSCPA. (Id. ¶¶ 196.D-E; 197.) Plaintiffs further allege that AICPA and NYSSCPA restrain trade among businesses required to engage CPAs by limiting the class of peer-reviewed CPAs available to conduct certain statutorily required audit services (e.g. auditing FDIC-insured institutions) to those who accept and abide by AICPA and NYSSCPA's inconsistent application of their own standards under the PRP. (Id. ¶ 198.A.)

II. Procedural History

Plaintiffs initially brought this action against defendants on May 19, 2010. (See ECF No. 1, Complaint.) After defendants notified the court of their intention to file a motion to dismiss under Rule 12(b)(6) for failure to state a claim (see ECF No. 7, Letter from AICPA Requesting Pre-Motion Conference), plaintiffs filed an Amended Complaint on October 20, 2010, asserting claims identical to those in the Complaint. Shortly thereafter, defendants filed the instant motion to dismiss all claims pursuant to Rule 12(b)(6). (See ECF No. [*23] 17, Defendants' Motion to Dismiss.) Defendants have not yet filed an answer and discovery has not yet commenced.

DISCUSSION

I. Standard of Review

A. Reviewing the Motion to Dismiss

A complaint may be dismissed under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(b)(6) if a plaintiff "fail[s] to state a claim upon which relief can be granted." Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6). Therefore, in order to survive a motion to dismiss under Rule 12(b)(6), a complaint must "contain sufficient factual matter, accepted as true, to state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face." Matson v. Bd. of Educ., 631 F.3d 57, 63 (2d Cir. 2011) (quoting Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 129 S.Ct. 1937, 1949, 173 L. Ed. 2d 868 (2009) (internal quotation marks omitted)). Assessing the plausibility of claims set forth in a complaint is "a context-specific task that requires the reviewing court to draw on its judicial experience and common sense." Ruston v. Town Bd., 610 F.3d 55, 58-59 (2d Cir. 2010) (quoting Iqbal, 129 S.Ct. at 1950). In conducting such an assessment, a court must draw all inferences in favor of the non-movant. Vietnam Ass'n, 517 F.3d at 115 (quoting Gorman v. Consol. Edison Corp., 488 F.3d 586, 591-92 (2d Cir. 2007)). However, allegations must [*24] consist of more than mere labels, legal conclusions, or a "formulaic recitation of the elements of a cause of action." Arar v. Ashcroft, 585 F.3d 559, 594 (2d Cir. 2009) (quoting Iqbal, 129 S.Ct. at 1949). Moreover, bare legal conclusions unsupported by factual allegations are "not entitled to the assumption of truth." Ruston, 610 F.3d at 59 (citing Hayden v. Paterson, 594 F.3d 150, 161 (2d Cir. 2010)).

B. Consideration of Documents Outside the Amended Complaint

Because both parties submitted materials outside the pleadings in their moving papers, the court must determine whether to treat the instant motion as a motion to dismiss or convert it to one for summary judgment. See Friedl v.

that CPAs in New York who are "not registered and supervised by the PCAOB" must submit to peer review conducted by AICPA through NYSSCPA. (Am. Compl. 114-18.) If CPAs in New York could only be peer-reviewed through the PRP administered by AICPA and NYSSCPA, the specific PCAOB-related allegations would be superfluous.

City of New York, 210 F.3d 79, 83 (2d Cir. 2000) ("[w]hen matters outside the pleadings are presented in response to a Rule 12(b)(6) motion, a district court must either exclude the additional material and decide the motion on the complaint alone or convert the motion to one for summary judgment under Fed. R. Civ. P. 56 and afford all parties the opportunity to present supporting material.") (internal quotations omitted). The district court has "complete discretion" to determine whether to convert the [*25] motion to dismiss into one for summary judgment. Hoy v. Inc. Village of Bayville, 765 F. Supp. 2d 158, 164 (E.D.N.Y. 2011) (citing Carione v. United States, 368 F. Supp. 2d 186, 191 (E.D.N.Y. 2005)). Furthermore, summary judgment is generally inappropriate before the parties have had the opportunity to engage in discovery. Kalin v. Xanboo, Inc., 526 F. Supp. 2d 392, 399 (S.D.N.Y. 2007); compare United States v. City of New York, 683 F. Supp. 2d 225, 245 (E.D.N.Y. 2005) (conversion to summary judgment deemed appropriate where there was a "highly developed record before the court" that contained years' worth of discovery materials because interrogatories and document requests had been exchanged, litigated, and answered; named defendants had been deposed; and experts on both sides had submitted reports and been deposed, such that neither side should be surprised by the court's decision to convert the motion), with Kalin, 526 F. Supp. 2d at 399 (declining to convert motion to dismiss where the issue raised--sufficiency of the pleadings--did not require discovery, and discovery was stayed pending motion to dismiss). The present case is still in its nascent stages; defendants have not yet [*26] filed an answer, and the parties have not engaged in discovery, which would significantly aid the court in rendering a decision on a summary judgment motion. The court therefore finds that conversion of defendants' motion to dismiss is inappropriate and will decide defendants' motion pursuant to Rule 12(b)(6).

In deciding defendants' motion to dismiss, the court may properly consider facts alleged in the complaint, any exhibits attached to the complaint, and documents incorporated by reference in the complaint. DiFolco v. MSNBC Cable L.L.C., 622 F.3d 104, 111 (2d Cir. 2010) (citing Chambers v. Time Warner, Inc., 282 F.3d 147, 153 (2d Cir. 2002)). Notably, "limited quotation" from a document does not render the document "incorporate[ed] by reference" into the complaint for purposes of a Rule 12(b)(6) motion. Goldman v. Belden, 754 F.2d 1059, 1066 (2d Cir. 1985). Even if a document is not incorporated by reference, however, the court may still consider it if the complaint "relies heavily upon its terms and effect," rendering the document "integral" to the complaint. Mangiafico v. Blumenthal, 471 F.3d 391, 398 (2d Cir. 2006) (quoting Chambers, 282 F.3d at 152-53). Contracts that underlie [*27] the claims brought in a suit are classic examples of documents that may be considered on a motion to dismiss even though the plaintiff does not physically attach them to the Amended Complaint. Ackerman v. Local Union 363, Int'l Bhd. of Elec. Workers, 423 F. Supp. 2d 125, 127 (S.D.N.Y. 2006).

In their moving brief, defendants attempt to introduce seven exhibits and an affidavit sworn to by the assistant general counsel of AICPA. (Defs.' Mem. at 1; Webb Aff. and attached Exhibits 1-7.) Likewise, in their opposition memorandum, plaintiffs attempt to introduce three exhibits and an affidavit sworn to by Colabella. (Pls.' Opp'n at 2; ECF No. 21-2, Affidavit of Patrick R. Colabella in Opposition ("Colabella Aff.") and attached Exhibits A-C.) Applying the standards set forth supra, the court will disregard all documents attached to the parties' motion papers except: (1) the Amended Complaint, attached as Exhibit 1 to the Webb Affidavit; and (2) the Lieberum Letter. The Lieberum Letter may be considered in deciding the present motion because plaintiffs referred to the letter and "relie[d] heavily on its terms and effect," Mangiafico, 471 F.3d at 398, in drafting their Amended Complaint. (See [*28] Am. Compl. ¶¶ 179-192) (discussing various aspects of the Lieberum Letter to support claim of defendants' unfair treatment of plaintiffs). Because the remaining documents submitted by the parties were not attached to the Amended Complaint, incorporated by reference, or so heavily relied upon as to render them integral to the Amended Complaint, the court excludes them from consideration for purposes of deciding the Rule 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim.

II. Sufficiency of the Pleadings as to Section 1983 Claim

A. Pleading Standard

In relevant part, 42 U.S.C. § 1983 ("Section 1983") provides that:

> Every person who, under color of any statute, ordinance, regulation, custom, or usage, of any State . . . subjects, or causes to be subjected, any citizen of the United States or other person within the jurisdiction thereof to the deprivation of any rights, privileges, or immunities secured by the Constitution and laws, shall be liable to the party injured in an action at law, suit in equity, or other proper proceeding for redress . . . .

Section 1983 itself does not create any substantive rights; rather, it provides a procedural mechanism for redressing the deprivation of [*29] rights created by the Constitution or laws of the United States. Sykes v. James, 13 F.3d 515, 519 (2d Cir. 1993) (citing City of Oklahoma City v. Tuttle, 471 U.S. 808, 816, 105 S. Ct. 2427, 85 L. Ed. 2d 791 (1985)). To state a cognizable claim under Section 1983, plaintiffs must allege that "(1) the challenged conduct was attributable at least in part to a person who was acting under color of state law and (2) the conduct deprived the plaintiff of a right guaranteed under the Constitution of the United States." Weiss v. Inc. Village of Sag Harbor, 762 F. Supp. 2d 560, 568 (E.D.N.Y. 2011) (quoting Snider v. Dylag, 188 F.3d 51, 53 (2d Cir. 1999)).

The Supreme Court, in Lugar v. Edmondson Oil Co., Inc., 457 U.S. 922, 937, 102 S. Ct. 2744, 73 L. Ed. 2d 482 (1982), established a two-prong test for determining when a private party's actions can be deemed to satisfy Section 1983's requirement that the challenged conduct was "under color of state law." Actions of a private party can be deemed "fairly attributable" to the state, and therefore treated as action taken "under color of state law," when (1) the deprivation is "caused by the exercise of some right or privilege created by the State or by a rule of conduct imposed by the State or by a person for whom [*30] the State is responsible," and (2) "the party charged with the deprivation [is] a person who may fairly be said to be a state actor." Hollander v. Copacabana Nightclub, 624 F.3d 30, 33 (2d Cir. 2010) (quoting Lugar, 457 U.S. at 937). A private party's actions may be attributable to the state under the second Lugar prong if it meets one of three tests: (1) "The 'compulsion test': the entity acts pursuant to the 'coercive power' of the state or is 'controlled' by the state"; (2) "The 'public function test': the entity 'has been delegated a public function by the [s]tate,'"; or (3) "The 'joint action test' or 'close nexus test': the state provides 'significant encouragement' to the entity, the entity is a 'willful participant in joint activity with the [s]tate,' or the entity's functions are 'entwined' with state policies." Hollander, 624 F.3d at 34 (quoting Sybalski v. Indep. Grp. Home Living Program, Inc., 546 F.3d 255, 257 (2d Cir. 2008)(internal citations omitted)).

In addition, to state a cognizable Section 1983 claim, plaintiff must identify a constitutionally protected liberty or property interest of which he was deprived without due process. See Narumanchi v. Bd. of Trs. of Conn. State Univ., 850 F.2d 70, 72 (2d Cir. 1988) [*31] ("whether the plaintiff has a property or liberty interest protected by the Constitution" is a threshold issue in analysis of Section 1983 claims).

B. Application

1. State Actor Requirement

To adequately plead a Section 1983 claim, plaintiffs must allege that defendants acted under color of state law when they suspended Colabella from the practice of conducting peer reviews for CPAs under the auspices of AICPA and NYSSCPA. As plaintiffs' allegations fail to meet either Lugar prong, they fail to plead the requisite state actor requirement.

a. First Lugar Prong

Applying the first Lugar prong, plaintiffs fail to plead that the deprivation Colabella suffered--namely, his "right to conduct future peer reviews" (see Am. Compl. ¶ 224)--resulted from the "exercise of a right or privilege having its source in state authority . . . ." LeBlanc-Sternberg v. Fletcher, 67 F.3d 412, 432-33 (2d Cir. 1995) (quoting Edmonson v. Leesville Concrete Co., Inc., 500 U.S. 614, 620, 111 S. Ct. 2077, 114 L. Ed. 2d 660 (1991)). In other words, plaintiffs must allege that AICPA and NYSSCPA acted with state-given authority when they revoked Colabella's approval to conduct peer reviews under their auspices. Plaintiffs purport to satisfy this prong by

[*32] alleging that the State of New York relies on AICPA and NYSSCPA as the sole administrators of CPA peer reviews and as the state's "surrogate[s]" to "implement[] [its] policy . . . [regarding] the Peer Review process for Certified Public Accountants within the State." (Am. Compl. ¶¶ 113, 123.)

Besides the fact that AICPA and NYSSCPA are not the "sole administrators" of CPA peer reviews in New York State,[10] plaintiffs' allegation of the state's reliance on AICPA and NYSSCPA conflicts with their simultaneous assertion that the state recently demonstrated its bona fide interest in regulating the peer review of public accountants by promulgating a statute providing for mandatory peer review of CPAs, beginning on January 1, 2012. (Id. ¶ 112.) The recency of the state's promulgation of this new law--one that has not yet even taken effect--to mandate and regulate, for the first time, the peer review of CPAs in New York, strongly implies that the state did not have a policy regarding the peer review of CPAs before.

Therefore, plaintiffs' allegations that AICPA and NYSSCPA were [*33] acting as "surrogates" of the state to "implement" a state policy that was heretofore nonexistent are conclusory and not well-pleaded, and therefore not accepted as true for purposes of deciding this motion. While a court deciding a motion to dismiss must interpret the Amended Complaint liberally and draw all reasonable inferences in the non-movant's favor, Chambers, 282 F.3d at 152, the court "need not feel constrained to accept as truth conflicting pleadings that make no sense . . . or that are contradicted either by statements in the complaint itself or by documents upon which its pleadings rely . . . ." In re Livent, 151 F. Supp. 2d at 405; *MMC Energy, Inc. v. Miller, No. 08-CV-4353, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 83777, 2009 WL 2981914, at 7 (S.D.N.Y. Sept. 14, 2009) (dismissing claim where necessary supporting allegation was specifically contradicted by other portions of the complaint).

Plaintiffs also argue that they "satisfy the first prong [of Lugar] by . . . showing that Colabella was sanctioned on four separate occasions, by being precluded from the conduct of peer reviews, because of the actions taken by Defendants, AICPA and NYSSCPA, as an exercise of their disciplinary authority--this despite Colabella's [*34] certification and good standing as a CPA in New York State . . . ." (Pls.' Opp'n at 13.) This argument does not support plaintiffs' position, however, because the mere fact of Colabella's sanction does not satisfy the first Lugar prong as it fails to demonstrate, or even assert, that New York State created AICPA and NYSSCPA's right to sanction Colabella, or that such sanctioning was a "rule of conduct imposed by the State or by a person for whom the State is responsible." Hollander, 624 F.3d at 33 (quoting Lugar, 457 U.S. at 937). Therefore, the court finds that plaintiffs' Amended Complaint fails to satisfy the first Lugar prong.

b. Second Lugar Prong

Even assuming that plaintiffs satisfied the first Lugar prong by adequately pleading that AICPA and NYSSCPA were acting with authority from New York State in administering the PRP, however, plaintiffs fail to allege facts that meet the second Lugar prong, as no well-pleaded facts in the Amended Complaint properly allege that defendants met the "compulsion," "public function," or "joint action/close nexus" tests outlined in Sybalski, 546 F.3d at 257.

i. Compulsion Test

Under the "compulsion test," a nominally private entity may be considered [*35] a state actor when the party acted pursuant to the coercive power of the state or was controlled by the state. Sybalski, 546 F.3d at 257 (quoting Brentwood Acad. v. Tenn. Secondary Sch. Athletic Ass'n, 531 U.S. 288, 296, 121 S. Ct. 924, 148 L. Ed. 2d 807 (2001)). The "coercion" inquiry focuses on whether the challenged activity was "compelled or even influenced" by state regulation. Husain v. Springer, 193 F. Supp. 2d 664, 672 (E.D.N.Y. 2002) (quoting Rendell-Baker v. Kohn, 457 U.S. 830, 841, 102 S. Ct. 2764, 73 L. Ed. 2d 418 (1982)). For example, in Brentwood, the Supreme Court noted that Amtrak, though nominally private, was considered a "state actor" for the purpose of determining if individual rights guaranteed by the Constitution were violated because Amtrak was created pursuant to a federal law to achieve governmental objectives, and the government retains authority to appoint the majority of Amtrak's directors; therefore, Amtrak could fairly be said to act under the compulsion of the state. Brentwood, 531 U.S. at 296 (citing Lebron v. Nat'l R.R. Passengers Corp., 513 U.S. 374, 400, 115 S. Ct. 961, 130 L. Ed. 2d 902 (1995)). In contrast, in Rendell-Baker, the Supreme Court found that terminations of employment effected by a private school that (1) received ninety to ninety-nine [*36] percent of its funding from the state; (2) was subject to state regulation; and (3) contracted with the state to perform certain services for students, did not constitute "state action." 457 U.S. at 832-33. The Second Circuit explained in Horvath v. Westport Library Ass'n that the "decisive factor" in the Supreme Court's Rendell-Baker decision was that "the school's personnel decisions were uninfluenced by public officials and that 'the decisions to discharge the petitioners were not compelled or even influenced by any state regulation.'" 362 F.3d 147, 152 (2d Cir. 2004) (quoting Rendell-Baker, 457 U.S. at 841).

In the instant case, plaintiffs failed to allege facts that, if established, would show that defendants' suspension of Colabella was action compelled by the State of New York. Plaintiffs do not allege that AICPA, NYSSCPA, or their leaders act under the coercion or influence of the state, or that the state influenced or compelled defendants to suspend Colabella as a peer reviewer for AICPA and NYSSCPA. Nor do plaintiffs allege that the state has any role in choosing or directing the leadership of AICPA and NYSSCPA. At most, plaintiffs contend that defendants acted as "surrogates" [*37] of the state (an assertion that would imply coercion), but the court does not accept that allegation for the reasons set forth supra.

ii. Public Function Test

The "public function" test centers upon an inquiry of whether the challenged activity is one that is "traditionally exclusively reserved to the State." Jackson v. Metro. Edison Co., 419 U.S. 345, 352, 95 S. Ct. 449, 42 L. Ed. 2d 477 (1974) (quoted in Rendell-Baker, 457 U.S. at 842). "While many functions have been traditionally performed by governments, very few have been 'exclusively reserved to the State.'" Flagg Bros., Inc. v. Brooks, 436 U.S. 149, 158, 98 S. Ct. 1729, 56 L. Ed. 2d 185 (1978). Activities that have met the "public function" test include those that are "traditionally associated with sovereignty, such as eminent domain . . . ." Jackson, 419 U.S. at 352; see also Terry v. Adams, 345 U.S. 461, 73 S. Ct. 809, 97 L. Ed. 1152 (1953) (election); Marsh v. Alabama, 326 U.S. 501, 66 S. Ct. 276, 90 L. Ed. 265 (1946) (company town); Evans v. Newton, 382 U.S. 296, 86 S. Ct. 486, 15 L. Ed. 2d 373 (1966) (municipal park); West v. Atkins, 487 U.S. 42, 54-57, 108 S. Ct. 2250, 101 L. Ed. 2d 40 (1988) (imprisonment of individuals as punishment for criminal activity); Flagg Bros., 436 U.S. at 163 (citing education, fire and police protection, and tax collection as examples of exclusive "municipal functions").

Plaintiffs have [*38] not alleged that defendants' administration of peer reviews conducted under the auspices of AICPA and NYSSCPA is an activity that is "traditionally exclusively reserved to the State." Plaintiffs do assert that New York State's Board of Accountancy uses the Uniform CPA Examination in determining which public accountancy candidates should be licensed as CPAs, and that AICPA prepares and grades the examination. (See Am. Compl. ¶¶ 11.H-J., 110.) Even if AICPA and NYSSCPA were serving a "public function" by developing and grading the Uniform CPA Examination for use by the state's Board of Accountancy, that alone would be insufficient to confer "state actor" status for purposes of this analysis because preparation of the Uniform CPA Examination is not the activity complained of in the present action and plaintiff's status as a CPA has not been affected by defendants' challenged activities. For a private entity to be considered a state actor, "the state must be involved not simply with some activity of the institution alleged to have inflicted injury upon a plaintiff but with the activity that caused the injury." Powe v. Miles, 407 F.2d 73, 81 (2d Cir. 1968). In other words, "the state action, [*39] not the private action, must be the subject of complaint." Id. Here, the subject of plaintiffs' Amended Complaint does not meet the "public function" test because defendants' administration of a peer-review program for CPAs--unlike elections, tax collection, and education--is not a function "traditionally exclusively reserved to the State."

iii. Joint Action/Close Nexus Test

The "joint action/close nexus" test is met when the relationship between a private entity and the government is so "overborne by the pervasive entwinement of public institutions and public officials in its composition and workings" that actions of the private entity must be viewed as actions of the state. Brentwood, 531 U.S. at 298. Put another way, "[a] nexus of 'state action' exists between a private entity and the state when the state . . . is entwined in the management or control of the private actor, or provides the private actor with significant encouragement, either overt or covert . . . or is entwined with governmental policies." Flagg v. Yonkers Savs. and Loan Ass'n, FA, 396 F.3d 178, 187 (2d Cir. 2005) (quoting Cranley v. Nat'l Life Ins. Co., 318 F.3d 105, 111 (2d Cir. 2003)).

Determination of whether specific [*40] conduct constitutes state action is a "'necessarily fact-bound inquiry.'" Cranley, 318 F.3d at 111-12 (quoting Brentwood, 531 U.S. at 298). Plaintiffs claim that a number of facts alleged in the Amended Complaint demonstrate the requisite entwinement between defendants and New York State, but the court is not persuaded that the proffered allegations satisfy the "joint action/close nexus" test. Plaintiffs claim, for instance, that AICPA's role in preparing and grading the Uniform CPA Examination, which is used by the State Board of Accounting (see Am. Compl. ¶¶ 11.H-J., 110), renders AICPA and NYSSCPA "entangle[d]" with the state. (Pls.' Opp'n at 15-16.) The state's use of professional assessments privately executed by a private entity does not automatically cloak the entity with the state's authority, however. In Rohan v. Am. Bar Ass'n, another court within this district determined that the American Bar Association ("ABA")--which, like AICPA and NYSSCPA, is a professional association--is not a state actor, even though admission to practice law in New York State requires graduation from an ABA-accredited law school, because "the State of New York has not explicitly delegated to the [*41] ABA its responsibility for setting the requirements that an individual must meet in order to be licensed as an attorney-at-law" and "any conferral of monopoly status on the ABA by New York State does not convert the ABA into a state actor." No. 93-CV-1338 (SJ), 1995 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 21944, 1995 WL 347035, at *5 (E.D.N.Y. May 31, 1995), aff'd on other grounds, 100 F.3d 945 (2d Cir. 1996); see also Anderson v. La. Dental Ass'n, 372 F. Supp. 837, 841-42 (M.D. La. 1974), aff'd, 502 F.2d 783 (5th Cir. 1974) (professional association not liable as a state actor for denying plaintiff membership because practice of dentistry in the state is not contingent upon membership in association and "none of these purely private associations have any control whatsoever over the practice of dentistry in the [state]"). Similarly, plaintiff's ability to practice as a CPA is not contingent upon membership in the private defendant associations.

Plaintiffs' allegation that AICPA's promulgation of many standards used in GAAS, GAAP, and GAGAS (see Am. Compl. ¶¶ 12-16, 24-36) is evidence of entwinement between the state and AICPA and NYSSCPA (see Pls.' Opp'n at 15) also fails in light of the Supreme Court's recognition that a state's adoption [*42] of rules and standards promulgated by a private entity does not convert the private entity into a "state actor." See Nat'l Collegiate Athletic Ass'n v. Tarkanian, 488 U.S. 179, 195, 109 S. Ct. 454, 102 L. Ed. 2d 469 (1988) (private athletic association not a state actor even though state university adopted association's standards to govern its athletic activities). Furthermore, the court disagrees with plaintiffs' contention that entwinement with the state is evident from the tax-exempt status of AICPA and NYSSCPA, through which both entities receive substantial assistance from the State of New York. (Am. Compl. ¶¶ 124-26; Pls.' Opp'n at 16.) In Blum v. Yaretsky, the Supreme Court concluded that a "close nexus" did not exist between a private mental facility and the government--even though the state subsidized the cost of the facility, paid the expenses of the patients, and licensed the facility--because the state had no role in the complained-of activity, the discharge and transfer of patients without a hearing. 457 U.S. 991, 1004, 102 S. Ct. 2777, 73 L. Ed. 2d 534 (1982). Here, plaintiffs do not allege the state's involvement or role in the events leading to Colabella's suspension as a peer reviewer for AICPA and NYSSCPA. Therefore, the mere fact that [*43] AICPA and NYSSCPA are tax-exempt, non-profit corporations is insufficient to demonstrate entwinement between defendants and the state.

Nor is the court persuaded by plaintiffs' claim that the state depends on AICPA for the peer review of CPAs who audit specific types of entities[11] because AICPA and NYSSCPA are--with the exception of PCAOB--the "sole source of accreditation" for CPAs who must fulfill a mandatory peer-review requirement. (Pls.' Opp'n at 14, 16; Am. Compl. ¶¶ 52, 114-18, 195.) Without more, plaintiffs' allegation fails to show a sufficiently close nexus between

[11] Government entities and entities that receive government awards; FDIC-insured and Federally Insured Thrift institutions; publicly traded companies; and borrowers from the Rural Utility Service. (Am. Compl. ¶¶ 52.A-E.)

NYSSCPA and the state. The purpose of the close nexus test is "to assure that constitutional standards are invoked only when it can be said that the state is responsible for the specific conduct of which the plaintiff complains." Blum, 457 U.S. at 1004 (emphasis in original).

In Brentwood, the Supreme Court found that a nominally private athletic association in Tennessee was a "state actor" for purposes [*44] of a Section 1983 action because the association was marked by "unmistakable" and "overwhelming" entwinement with the state: public school officials comprised the overwhelming majority of membership; those members elected representatives, all of whom were public officials at the time of the Court's decision; and the representatives promulgated the rules for which the association was challenged on constitutional grounds. 531 U.S. at 298-99, 302. In addition, the Court observed that the state had "provided for entwinement from top down," assigning state board members ex officio to serve as members of the association's board of control and legislative council, and treating the association's ministerial employees as state employees in terms of eligibility for membership in the state retirement system. Id. at 300.

Plaintiffs have alleged no facts that begin to approach the level of entwinement found in Brentwood. Rather, plaintiffs' allegations more closely resemble those in Flagg, in which the Second Circuit affirmed the district court's finding that a private savings and loan association did not engage in "state action" when it refused to pay interest on the plaintiffs' escrow account [*45] because the association did not have a "close nexus" with the state. 396 F.3d at 187. In so finding, the court noted that the association did not withhold interest due to a federal mandate or direction or advisement from a state agent; that the relevant government agency maintained a neutral position regarding the association's actions; and that the agency and association did not form a "joint enterprise." Id. In sum, the court observed, the association was a "private entity participating in a regulated field of activity," and no state action had occurred. Id.

Plaintiffs here have not alleged that the state encouraged or was responsible for AICPA and NYSSCPA's decision to suspend plaintiff from conducting peer reviews on behalf of those entities. Nor have plaintiffs alleged any facts to support a finding that the state was so entangled with AICPA and NYSSCPA such that any action taken by defendants should be considered state action. As such, the court finds that the allegations set forth in the Amended Complaint fail to satisfy the "joint action/close nexus" test.[12]

2. Deprivation Requirement

Plaintiffs' Section 1983 claim cannot survive a motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim because plaintiffs failed to allege facts sufficient to support a finding of state action. The court also finds that plaintiffs have not alleged a constitutionally protected property or liberty interest that would entitle them to due process protection. To meet the deprivation requirement of a Section 1983 claim, "[t]he threshold issue is always whether the plaintiff has a property or liberty interest protected by the Constitution." Narumanchi, 850 F.2d at 72. Only after that threshold is met must the court consider whether the deprivation was effected without due process. Id.

[12] The court notes that plaintiffs' reliance on a five-factor test articulated by the Second Circuit in Jackson v. Statler Found., 496 F.2d 623 (2d Cir. 1973), [*46] to support their claim that the Amended Complaint adequately alleges state action (see Pls.' Opp'n at 14) is misplaced. In Statler, the Second Circuit laid out "five factors which are particularly important to a determination of 'state action': (1) the degree to which the 'private' organization is dependent on governmental aid; (2) the extent and intrusiveness of the governmental regulatory scheme; (3) whether that scheme connotes government approval of the activity or whether the assistance is merely provided to all without such connotation; (4) the extent to which the organization serves a public function or acts as a surrogate for the State; (5) whether the organization has legitimate claims to recognition as a 'private' organization in associational or other constitutional terms." 496 F.2d at 629. The Supreme Court later "tightened the proof required for a showing of state action," rendering the Jackson analysis inapposite. Fulani v. League of Women Voters Educ. Fund, 684 F. Supp. 1185, 1191 (S.D.N.Y. 1988); see also Blum, 457 U.S. at 1011 (government may subsidize private entities without assuming constitutional responsibility for their actions); Rendell-Baker, 457 U.S. at 842 [*47] (private entity's performance of a function that serves the public does not make its acts governmental action); Jackson, 419 U.S. at 350 (extensive regulation by the government does not transform the actions of the regulated entity into those of the government)).

Colabella alleges that defendants deprived him of "his right . . . to practice his profession as a peer reviewer" and the "substantial fees" that he would have earned by conducting peer reviews during the period following the date of [*48] his suspension, until present. (Am. Compl. ¶¶ 219, 222, 224, 226-27.) The court notes that the Amended Complaint is unclear as to whether Colabella alleges deprivation of a property right or a liberty right, and the parties' briefs do not elucidate the matter: defendants frame the issue as one involving a liberty interest (see Defs.' Mem. at 17), while plaintiffs refer only to a "property right" (see Pls.' Opp'n at 11). Although the court will analyze the alleged deprivation under both standards, its conclusion is the same: Plaintiffs have not alleged deprivation of a constitutionally protected interest.

a. Deprivation of a Property Interest

"To have a property interest in a benefit, a person clearly must have more than an abstract need or desire for it" and "[h]e must have more than a unilateral expectation of it." Clarry v. U.S., 85 F.3d 1041, 1046 (2d Cir. 1996) (quoting Bd. of Regents v. Roth, 408 U.S. 564, 577, 92 S. Ct. 2701, 33 L. Ed. 2d 548 (1972)). "'[He] must, instead, have a legitimate claim of entitlement to it' under state or federal law in order to state a [Section] 1983 claim." *Seymour's Boatyard, Inc. v. Town of Huntington, No. 08-CV-3248, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 45450, 2009 WL 1514610, at 4 (June 1, 2009) (quoting Finley v. Giacobbe, 79 F.3d 1285, 1296 (2d Cir. 1996)). [*49] The Constitution does not create such entitlements; rather, entitlements are created and defined by "existing rules or understandings that stem from an independent source such as state law." Harrington v. County of Suffolk, 607 F.3d 31, 34 (2d Cir. 2010) (quoting Town of Castle Rock v. Gonzales, 545 U.S. 748, 756, 125 S. Ct. 2796, 162 L. Ed. 2d 658 (2005)). "When determining whether a plaintiff has a claim of entitlement, [the court] focus[es] on the applicable statute, contract or regulation that purports to establish the benefit." Martz v. Inc. Village of Valley Stream, 22 F.3d 26, 30 (2d Cir. 1994) (citing Kelly Kare, Ltd. v. O'Rourke, 930 F.2d 170, 175 (2d Cir. 1991), cert. denied, 502 U.S. 907, 112 S. Ct. 300, 116 L. Ed. 2d 244 (1991)).

In the Amended Complaint, Colabella claims a property interest primarily in "his right to practice his profession as a peer reviewer," and secondarily in the "substantial fees" he would have earned through such peer review. Plaintiffs do not cite to any "statute, contract, or regulation" that purportedly confers on Colabella the benefit at issue--the right to conduct peer reviews on behalf of AICPA and NYSSCPA. The court has also searched, without success, for any such statute or regulation that might have conferred [*50] upon Colabella a "legitimate claim of entitlement" to the right to conduct peer reviews. Accordingly, the court finds that Colabella's interest in practicing his profession as a peer reviewer for AICPA and NYSSCPA, and the fees he would have generated through that work, are outside the scope of constitutional protections that may underlie a Section 1983 claim.

b. Deprivation of a Liberty Interest

It is well-settled that a person's freedom "to engage in any of the common occupations of life" is a liberty interest protected by the Fourteenth Amendment. Cityspec, Inc. v. Smith, 617 F. Supp. 2d 161, 169 (E.D.N.Y. 2009) (quoting Roth, 408 U.S. at 572). Courts in the Second Circuit have consistently held, however, that "one must have no ability to practice one's profession at all in order to state a claim for deprivation of a liberty interest." Rodriguez v. Margotta, 71 F. Supp. 2d 289, 296 (S.D.N.Y. 1999) (citations omitted), aff'd, 225 F.3d 646 (2d Cir. 2000); Thomas v. Held, 941 F. Supp. 444, 450 (S.D.N.Y. 1996) (one's liberty interest in pursuing the occupation of his choosing is implicated only when action is "so damaging . . . that [it] would hinder seriously the employee from finding [*51] work in that field").

Plaintiffs do not claim that as a result of defendants' actions, Colabella has lost the ability to participate in the entire field of accounting, and they have not alleged that Colabella's suspension has had any effect on his ability to earn fees by performing work in the field of certified public accounting. Plaintiffs' well-pleaded allegations do not even state that Colabella has been hindered from pursuing work in the entire field of performing peer reviews for CPAs. As the Amended Complaint makes clear, PCAOB also conducts peer reviews (Am. Compl. ¶¶ 52.G., 114-18), and plaintiffs have not alleged that Colabella is unable to conduct peer reviews on behalf of PCAOB. Rather, plaintiffs allege only that Colabella is unable to perform further peer reviews on behalf of AICPA and NYSSCPA. Such pleadings fall short of demonstrating that defendants' actions implicated a cognizable liberty interest, and accordingly, the court grants defendants' motion to dismiss plaintiffs' Section 1983 claim for failure to state a claim.

III. Sufficiency of the Pleadings as to Antitrust Claims

A. Antitrust Standing

Plaintiffs assert two antitrust claims against defendants: a restraint-of-trade [*52] claim based on Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. §§ 1-2 ("Section 1" and "Section 2," respectively), and a price-discrimination claim based on Sections 2 and 4 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. §§ 13, 15. The court begins its analysis of these claims by addressing defendants' claim that plaintiffs lack antitrust standing (see Defs.' Mem. 18).

It is well-settled that Plaintiffs who bring antitrust claims must have "antitrust standing" in addition to Article III standing. In re DDAVP Direct Purchaser Antitrust Litig., 585 F.3d 677, 688 (2d Cir. 2009) (citing Paycom Billing Servs., Inc. v. Mastercard Int'l, Inc., 467 F.3d 283, 290 (2d Cir. 2006)). To establish antitrust standing, a plaintiff must first show that he has suffered an antitrust injury, an "injury of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent and that flows from that which makes defendants' acts unlawful." Id. (quoting Brunswick Corp. v. Pueblo Bowl-O-Mat, Inc., 429 U.S. 477, 489, 97 S. Ct. 690, 50 L. Ed. 2d 701 (1977)). In addition, a plaintiff must show that he is an "efficient enforcer" of the antitrust laws. Id. (citing Volvo N. Am. Corp. v. Men's Int'l Prof'l Tennis Council, 857 F.2d 55, 66 (2d Cir. 1988)). Determination of whether [*53] one is an "efficient enforcer" of the antitrust laws depends on the following factors:

> (1) the directness or indirectness of the asserted injury; (2) the existence of an identifiable class of persons whose self-interest would normally motivate them to vindicate the public interest in antitrust enforcement; (3) the speculativeness of the alleged injury; and (4) the difficulty of identifying damages and apportioning them among direct and indirect victims so as to avoid duplicative recoveries.

Volvo, 857 F.2d at 66 (citing Associated Gen. Contractors v. California State Council of Carpenters, 459 U.S. 519, 540-45, 103 S. Ct. 897, 74 L. Ed. 2d 723 (1983)).

Plaintiffs allege that AICPA and NYSSCPA "acted in combination and in conspiracy to administer the [PRP] in restraint of trade" by administering the PRP in a manner that contradicts its own published and advertised standards and guidelines, and by excluding from its ranks of peer reviewers those who, like Colabella, "place their independence and intellectual honesty above the dictates of . . . [defendants'] inconsistent application and enforcement" of the PRP standards and rules. (Am. Compl. ¶¶ 196.A-E, 198.A-B., 230.) Plaintiffs allege that AICPA and NYSSCPA so acted with [*54] the intent of restraining competition "between and among otherwise competent peer reviewers in the State of New York, and elsewhere, so as to limit the number of peer reviewers and control the number of firms actually conducting peer reviews." (Id. ¶ 243.)

Plaintiffs claim that three antitrust injuries have resulted from defendants' acts in violation of antitrust laws: (1) deprivation of fees that Colabella otherwise would have earned by conducting peer reviews but for defendants' suspension, which resulted from their "arbitrary and capricious" administration of the PRP; (2) deprivation of Colabella's right to compete for peer review engagements, a deprivation shared by other CPAs who may likewise be arbitrarily and capriciously suspended from AICPA's program; and (3) deprivation to members of the general public who might need services of peer-reviewed CPAs of their "right and ability to secure competent, independent, peer reviewed" CPAs. (Am. Compl. ¶¶ 232, 236-41.)

1. Antitrust Injury

As an initial step in alleging antitrust injury, a plaintiff must "identify[] the practice complained of and the reasons such a practice is or might be anticompetitive." Port Dock & Stone Corp. v. Oldcastle Northeast, Inc., 507 F.3d 117, 122 (2d Cir. 2007). [*55] To meet that requirement, the plaintiff must show "that the challenged action has had an actual adverse effect on competition as a whole in the relevant market . . . ." George Haug Co., Inc. v. Rolls Royce Motor Cars Inc., 148 F.3d 136, 139 (2d Cir. 1998) (quoting Capital Imaging v. Mohawk Valley Med. Assocs., 996 F.2d 537, 543 (2d Cir. 1993) (emphasis in original)).

Plaintiffs fail to allege an anticompetitive practice that affects "competition as a whole in the relevant market," however. George Haug Co., 148 F.3d at 139. The practice of which plaintiffs complain is defendants' administration of the PRP in a manner that removes from the pool of AICPA and NYSSCPA peer reviewers otherwise-competent peer reviewers who insist on exercising independence and resist bending to the arbitrary whims of the PRP administrators. (Am. Compl. ¶¶ 196.E, 197-98.) Plaintiffs allege that this practice harms competition in the overall market for peer review by "restrict[ing] the class of peer reviews to those who are 'favored' by those charged with the administration of the Peer Review Program . . . thereby reducing competition for no purpose other than to monopolize and control the administration of the [*56] Peer Review Program by those charged with [its] administration . . . ." (Am. Compl. ¶ 197.)

Apart from allegations that Colabella himself has suffered a loss by being suspended from conducting peer reviews for AICPA and NYSSCPA, the Amended Complaint is devoid of any other well-pleaded facts that support his contention that competition has been reduced. Without more, plaintiffs fail to demonstrate any antitrust injury, because "[a]lleging injury as an individual competitor within the market does not suffice to state a claim for an antitrust injury as antitrust statutes were enacted to protect competition and not individual competitors." Wolf Concept S.A.R.L. v. Eber Bros. Wine and Liquor Corp., 736 F. Supp. 2d 661, 669 (W.D.N.Y. 2010); see also Capital Imaging Assocs., P.C. v. Mohawk Valley Med. Assocs., Inc., 996 F.2d 537, 543 (2d Cir. 1993) ("Insisting on proof of harm to the whole market fulfills the broad purpose of the antitrust law that was enacted to ensure competition in general, not narrowly focused to protect individual competitors.")

Moreover, plaintiffs have failed to even allege injury to themselves as individual competitors in the market for peer review: as discussed supra, [*57] the Amended Complaint does not allege that because Colabella cannot conduct peer reviews on behalf of AICPA and NYSSCPA, he cannot conduct peer reviews on behalf of any entity. Plaintiffs have not alleged that Colabella's suspension from conducting peer review on behalf of AICPA and NYSSCPA has any bearing on his ability to conduct peer reviews on behalf of PCAOB, for example. For these reasons, the court finds that plaintiffs have not pleaded facts sufficient to show an antitrust injury. Plaintiffs therefore lack antitrust standing to bring their claims under the Sherman and Clayton Acts, and the court need not analyze the "efficient enforcer" factors. Even assuming that plaintiffs did have antitrust standing, however, as discussed infra, plaintiffs' claims under the Sherman and Clayton Acts would nevertheless fail under Rule 12(b)(6).

2. Pleading Standards for Sherman Act Claims

a. Section 1 Claim

Under Section 1 of the Sherman Act, every contract, combination, or conspiracy "in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States" is illegal. 15 U.S.C. § 1. This court recently recognized in LaFlamme v. Societe Air France, that "[b]ecause Section 1 of the Sherman Act does not prohibit [*58] all restraints of trade, but rather only agreements to restrain trade, '[t]he crucial question in a Section 1 case is therefore whether the challenged conduct stem[s] from independent decision or from an agreement, tacit or express.'" 702 F. Supp. 2d 136, 146 (E.D.N.Y. 2010) (Matsumoto, J.) (quoting Starr v. Sony BMG Music Entm't, 592 F.3d 314, 321 (2d Cir. 2010)). Allegations of parallel conduct or "specific allegations of actual agreement among defendants" may be sufficient to state such an agreement, LaFlamme, 702 F. Supp. 2d at 146 (citing Bell Atlantic Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. at 564-565 n.10 (2007)), but "'a few stray statements speak[ing] directly of agreement . . . are merely legal conclusions resting on . . . prior allegations,' and cannot be accepted as true." Allen v. Dairy Farmers of Am., Inc., 748 F. Supp. 2d 323, 333 (D.Vt. 2010) (quoting Twombly, 550 U.S. at 564)).

b. Section 2 Claim

Section 2 of the Sherman Act prohibits monopolization of "any part of the trade or commerce among the several States." 15 U.S.C. § 2. To state a monopolization claim under Section 2 of the Sherman Act, one must establish "(1) the possession of monopoly power in the relevant market and (2) the [*59] willful acquisition or maintenance of that power as distinguished from growth or development as a consequence of a superior product, business acumen, or historic accident." PepsiCo, Inc. v. Coca-Cola Co., 315 F.3d 101, 105 (2d Cir. 2002) (per curiam) (quoting United States v. Grinnell Corp., 384 U.S. 563, 570-71, 86 S. Ct. 1698, 16 L. Ed. 2d 778 (1966)).

3. Application

a. Section 1 Claim

An "agreement, tacit or express," is central to a Section 1 claim. Starr, 592 F.3d at 321 (quoting Theatre Enters. Inc. v. Paramount Film Distrib. Corp., 346 U.S. 537, 540, 74 S. Ct. 257, 98 L. Ed. 273 (1954)). Although plaintiffs assert that AICPA and NYSSCPA "acted in combination and in conspiracy to administer the Peer Review Program in restraint of trade" (Am. Compl. ¶ 230), they fail to state any specific facts to elevate the bald assertion to a "plausible claim for relief." See Iqbal, 129 S.Ct. at 1950.

Plaintiffs contend, for example, that NYSSCPA's Peer Review Committee unjustifiably issued notices to Colabella based on erroneous claims that his work in specific engagements did not conform to the PRP's standards, and that the issuance of multiple notices led to his suspension from the PRP. (Am. Compl. ¶¶ 147-56.) Plaintiffs further allege that when Colabella [*60] appealed to AICPA about his alleged mistreatment leading to NYSSCPA's suspension, AICPA's Ad Hoc Committee rubber-stamped NYSSCPA's decision to "create the appearance of propriety" of NYSSCPA's actions. (Am. Compl. ¶¶ 174-90.) Such facts, without more, do not give rise to a plausible inference of conspiracy. In RxUSA Wholesale, Inc. v. Alcon Labs., Inc., the district court dismissed plaintiff's Section 1 claim because the complaint contained nothing more than "the naked conclusion that the . . . Defendants have 'agreed with each other' not to deal with Plaintiff." 661 F. Supp. 2d 218, 231 (E.D.N.Y. 2009), aff'd, 391 Fed. App'x 59 (2d Cir. 2010). The court observed that the complaint offered no facts that would indicate the existence of an illegal agreement, such as "when the alleged conspiracy began, where it occurred, or what statements the . . . [d]efendants made to one another." Id. Similarly, in the instant case, plaintiffs have pleaded no more than a "[t]hreadbare recital[] of the elements" of a Section 1 claim. Iqbal, 129 S.Ct. at 1949-50 (citing Twombly, 550 U.S. at 555). Because "a conclusory allegation of agreement at some unidentified point does not supply facts adequate [*61] to show illegality [under Section 1]," Twombly, 550 U.S. at 557, defendants' motion to dismiss the Section 1 claim under Rule 12(b)(6) is granted.

b. Section 2 Claim

"Monopoly power, or 'the power to control prices or exclude competition,'" is a "central element" of a Section 2 claim. In re Payment Card Interchange Fee and Merch. Disc. Antitrust Litig., 562 F. Supp. 2d 392, 398 (E.D.N.Y. 2008) (quoting United States v. E.I. du Pont de Nemours & Co., 351 U.S. 377, 391, 76 S. Ct. 994, 100 L. Ed. 1264 (1956)). Plaintiffs allege that a wide swath of CPAs must be peer-reviewed because they conduct certain types of audits, and only one other entity (PCAOB) conducts peer reviews. (Am. Compl. ¶¶ 52.A-G., 114-18.) Apart from those assertions, however, plaintiffs provide no further allegations to support their conclusion that AICPA and NYSSCPA have "monopolized the market for Peer Review of Certified Public Accountants" in the United States and in New York State. (Am. Compl. ¶ 234.) Hence, plaintiffs' allegations fall far short of the required showings, either directly through "evidence of the control of prices or exclusion of competition" or indirectly, through evidence that "the defendant has a large percentage share of the [*62] relevant market." In re Payment Card, 562 F. Supp. 2d at 399 (quoting Heerwagen v. Clear Channel Commc'ns, 435 F.3d 219, 227 (2d Cir. 2006)). Furthermore, plaintiffs leave utterly unaddressed the second required showing for a Section 2 claim--that defendants willfully acquired or maintained their monopoly power, versus growing or developing it due to a superior product, business acumen, or historic accident. See PepsiCo, 315 F.3d at 105. Therefore, defendants' motion to dismiss the Section 2 claim under Rule 12(b)(6) is granted.

4. Pleading Standard for Robinson-Patman Claim

Plaintiffs bring a claim under Section 2 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 13 (as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act of 1936 and hereafter referred to as the "Robinson-Patman Act"), and its enforcement provision, 15 U.S.C. § 15, which provides for treble damages. The Robinson-Patman Act proscribes price discrimination "between different purchasers of commodities of like grade and quality" where, as a consequence of such discrimination, competition is substantially lessened, injured, destroyed, or prevented; or a monopoly is created. 15 U.S.C. § 13(a). It is well-settled that the Robinson-Patman Act applies only to [*63] transactions involving "commodities," a term that courts have "strictly construed" to denote only "tangible products of trade." Innomed Labs. v. ALZA Corp., 368 F.3d 148, 156 (2d Cir. 2004) (citing May Dep't Store v. Graphic Process Co., 637 F.2d 1211, 1214 (9th Cir. 1980) (internal quotation marks omitted)). Unlike commodities, "intangible goods and services" are not subject to the Robinson-Patman Act. Nat'l Comm'ns Ass'n v. Am. Tel. & Tel. Co., 808 F. Supp. 1131, 1136 (S.D.N.Y. 1992), rev'd on other grounds, 46 F.3d 220 (2d Cir. 1995); see also Innomed Labs., 368 F.3d at 156 ("The Robinson-Patman Act's prohibition on price discrimination extends only to transactions involving 'commodities,'" and not "intangible rights or services"); Gordon v. New York Stock Exch., Inc. 366 F. Supp. 1261, 1263 (S.D.N.Y. 1973) ("The authorities are clear that services and intangibles . . . are not 'commodities' within the meaning of the [Robinson-Patman] Act.") (citing Columbia Broad. Sys. v. Amana Refrigeration, 295 F.2d 375 (7th Cir. 1961)).

5. Application

Plaintiffs concede, and the court agrees, that the peer review of accounting practices constitutes a service and not a commodity. (Pls.' Opp'n at [*64] 22.) Therefore, peer review of accounting practices is not subject to the price discrimination provisions of the Robinson-Patman Act. Plaintiffs nevertheless attempt to analogize their peer-review engagements to the process of newspaper production, which the Eighth Circuit held was a "commodity" within the meaning of the Act in Morning Pioneer v. Bismarck Tribune Co. because, notwithstanding the extensive services involved in producing the paper, it is "predominantly a tangible good" that "takes on a tangible form and [] is bought and sold in the market place." (Pls.' Opp'n at 22 (citing Morning Pioneer, 493 F.2d 383, 389 n.11 (8th Cir. 1974)). Plaintiffs claim that the peer-review reports that they draft as a result of their peer-review engagements are, like the newspapers described in Morning Pioneer, bought and sold in the market for peer review, and therefore "commodities" governed by the Robinson-Patman Act. (Pls.' Opp'n at 22.)

The Second Circuit recognizes the "dominant nature" or "dominant purpose" test employed in Morning Pioneer as a means to determine whether subjects that combine both tangible goods and intangible services are "commodities" for purposes of the Robinson-Patman [*65] Act. See Innomed Labs., 368 F.3d at 156 (citing Tri-State Broad. Co., Inc. v. United Press Int'l, Inc., 369 F.2d 268, 270 (5th Cir. 1966)). Employing that test here, however, the court finds that the dominant purpose of peer review among CPAs is not the procurement of a report containing the peer review results; rather, the primary purpose is to be evaluated by others in the same field to maintain and enhance the quality of work performed in the field. (See Am. Compl. ¶ 48.) Although peer-reviews do result in a tangible report, they are not "bought and sold in the market place," Morning Pioneer, 493 F.2d at 389 n.11. Therefore, the facts as alleged in the Amended Complaint do not state a claim under the Robinson-Patman Act, and defendants' motion to dismiss plaintiffs' price-discrimination claim for failure to state a claim is granted.

IV. Remaining Claims: Declaratory Judgment and State Law Claims

A. Declaratory Judgment Claim

Plaintiffs request declaratory relief under the Declaratory Judgment Act, 28 U.S.C. §§ 2201 and 2202. The Declaratory Judgment Act, however, provides only a federal remedy, not a federal claim, so it can only be applied in cases in which there is an independent [*66] basis for the exercise of federal subject matter jurisdiction. See Goldberg v. Cablevision Sys. Corp., 281 F. Supp. 2d 595, 604 (E.D.N.Y. 2003) ("As all the federal claims must be dismissed, the Court lacks jurisdiction to grant relief pursuant to the Declaratory Judgment Act.") Here, all of Plaintiff's federal claims are dismissed for failure to state a claim, and no substantive federal claim remains upon which plaintiffs can base their request for declaratory relief.

In addition, the purpose of declaratory relief is "to . . . settle legal rights and remove uncertainty and insecurity from legal relationships without awaiting a violation of the rights or a disturbance of the relationships." Beacon Constr. Co., Inc. v. Matco Elec. Co., Inc., 521 F.2d 392, 397 (2d Cir. 1975) (quoting Aetna Casualty & Surety Co. v. Quarles, 92 F.2d 321, 325 (4th Cir. 1937)); see also 28 U.S.C. § 2201(a) (Declaratory Judgment Act provides that a federal court "may declare the rights and other legal relations of any interested party seeking such declaration . . . .") (emphasis added). Plaintiffs' request that this court declare, inter alia, that "[Colabella] is fit to be engaged to perform peer reviews in [*67] the State of New York and elsewhere," is not within the purview of the Declaratory Judgment Act, as an evaluation of Colabella's fitness to perform peer review for fellow CPAs does not involve an adjudication of legal rights or relations. Therefore, the declaratory judgment claim is dismissed.

B. State Law Claims

Finally, the court respectfully declines to exercise jurisdiction over plaintiffs' state law claims. Pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1367(c), a district court may decline to exercise supplemental jurisdiction over a claim if "the district court has dismissed all claims over which it has original jurisdiction." Because the court has dismissed plaintiff's federal claims, the court will decline to exercise jurisdiction over plaintiff's state law claims.

CONCLUSION

For the reasons explained above, the plaintiffs' claims are dismissed in their entirety with prejudice. Plaintiff has had two opportunities to assert sufficient allegations, most recently in the Amended Complaint with 281 paragraphs, some of which contain subparagraphs. Accordingly, the Clerk is respectfully requested to enter judgment in favor of defendants and close the case.

ORDER GRANTING IN PART DEFENDANTS' JOINT MOTION FOR PARTIAL SUMMARY JUDGMENT ON VARIOUS ISSUES OF STATE LAW

On September 22, 2011, the Court heard argument on defendants' joint motion for partial summary judgment on various issues of state law. Having considered the moving papers and the arguments of the parties, and for good cause appearing, the Court hereby GRANTS IN PART defendants' motion.

BACKGROUND

This antitrust class action stems from allegations of a global price-fixing conspiracy in the market for thin-film transistor liquid-crystal display ("TFT-LCD") panels. Plaintiffs, indirect purchasers of TFT-LCD panels, claim that "[d]efendants and their co-conspirators formed an international cartel illegally to restrict competition in the LCD panel market, specifically targeting and severely injuring [*18] indirect-purchaser consumers and affecting billions of dollars of commerce throughout the United States." Third Consolidated Amended Complaint ("TAC"), ¶2. Plaintiffs' TAC includes a claim under the Sherman Act, as well claims brought under the antitrust, unfair competition, and unjust enrichment laws of a number of states. TAC at ¶¶270-312.

On July 29, 2011, defendants filed a joint motion, seeking summary judgment on plaintiffs' state-law unfair competition and unjust enrichment claims.

LEGAL STANDARD

Summary judgment is proper if the pleadings, the discovery and disclosure materials on file, and any affidavits show that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the movant is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(a). The moving party bears the initial burden of demonstrating the absence of a genuine issue of material fact. Celotex Corp. v. Catrett, 477 U.S. 317, 323, 106 S. Ct. 2548, 91 L. Ed. 2d 265 (1986). The moving party, however, has no burden to disprove matters on which the non-moving party will have the burden of proof at trial. The moving party need only demonstrate to the Court that there is an absence of evidence to support the non-moving party's case. Id. at 325.

Once [*19] the moving party has met its burden, the burden shifts to the non-moving party to "set out 'specific facts showing a genuine issue for trial.'" Id. at 324 (quoting then Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(e)). To carry this burden, the non-moving party must "do more than simply show that there is some metaphysical doubt as to the material facts."

Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co., Ltd. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 586, 106 S. Ct. 1348, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538 (1986). "The mere existence of a scintilla of evidence ... will be insufficient; there must be evidence on which the jury could reasonably find for the [non-moving party]." Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc., 477 U.S. 242, 252, 106 S. Ct. 2505, 91 L. Ed. 2d 202 (1986).

In deciding a summary judgment motion, the Court must view the evidence in the light most favorable to the non-moving party and draw all justifiable inferences in its favor. Id. at 255. "Credibility determinations, the weighing of the evidence, and the drawing of legitimate inferences from the facts are jury functions, not those of a judge . . . ruling on a motion for summary judgment." Id. However, conclusory, speculative testimony in affidavits and moving papers is insufficient to raise genuine issues of fact and defeat summary judgment. Thornhill Publ'g Co., Inc. v. GTE Corp., 594 F.2d 730, 738 (9th Cir.1979). [*20] The evidence the parties present must be admissible. Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(c)).

DISCUSSION

Defendants seek summary judgment on two broad categories of state-law claims: (1) state-law consumer protection claims; and (2) state-law unjust enrichment claims.

I. Consumer Protection Claims

Defendants move for summary judgment on the consumer-protection claims plaintiffs have brought under the laws of New Mexico, New York, Vermont, Rhode Island, and Missouri.

A. New Mexico

Plaintiffs' TAC includes a claim under the New Mexico Unfair Practices Act ("NMUPA"). The NMUPA forbids "unconscionable trade practices," which it defines as "an act or practice in connection with the sale . . . of any goods or services . . . that to a person's detriment: (1) takes advantage of the lack of knowledge, ability, experience or capacity of a person to a grossly unfair degree; or (2) results in a gross disparity between the value received by a person and the price paid." N.M. Stat. §§ 57-12-2, 57-12-3. Plaintiffs' complaint invokes the second of these definitions. TAC at ¶308(b).

Defendants claim that plaintiffs cannot prove that a "gross disparity" existed between the price they paid for their LCD products and the value [*21] they received. They rely on a handful of cases in which courts found that price differences of up to 15% did not amount to gross disparities. See Taylor v. United Management, Inc., 51 F. Supp. 2d 1212, 1217 (D.N.M.1999) (finding $600 difference between $4,000 dealership gave as trade-in value for car and $4,600 dealership later sold car for did not amount to "gross disparity"); see also Wyatt v. Petrila, 752 S.W.2d 683, 686 (Tex. App. 1988) (finding $625,000 purchase price of house worth $575,000 did not amount to gross disparity); Holland Mortg. and Inv. Corp. v. Bone, 751 S.W.2d 515, 521 (Tex. App. 1987) (finding $6,000 difference "between the value received and the consideration paid" for a house was "not a 'gross disparity' as a matter of law because it constitute[d] less than 7% of the $86,900 consideration paid").

Defendants argue that plaintiffs' evidence shows that the conspiracy only inflated the price of LCD panels by an average of either 8.9% or 12.1%. See Declaration of Lee F. Berger in Support of Defendants' Joint Motion for Partial Summary Judgment Based on Various Issues of State Law ("Berger Decl."), Exh. A (8.9%); Declaration of Janet S. Netz, Ph.D. in Support of Indirect-Purchaser [*22] Plaintiffs' Opposition to Defendants' Joint Motion for Summary Judgment on Plaintiff Benjamin Larry Luber's Claims, Master Docket No. 3172-1, at 2 n.5 (July 22, 2011) (12.1%). They assert that this is insufficient as a matter of law to constitute a gross disparity.

The Court disagrees. None of the cases defendants rely on involved price-fixing or similar surreptitious activity. Rather, they involved ordinary, arms-length transactions and thus were premised on nothing more than the terms of the bargains the plaintiffs had agreed to. Here, in contrast, defendants secretly conspired to increase the prices of LCD panels to supra-competitive levels. In such circumstances, plaintiffs have raised a genuine issue of fact regarding whether the 8.9% to 12.1% overcharge amounts to a gross disparity. See In re Chocolate Confectionary Antitrust Litig., 602 F. Supp. 2d 538, 586 n.60 (M.D. Pa. 2009) (noting "compelling trend favorable to consumer protection claims in price-fixing actions"); In re New Motor Vehicles Canadian Export Antitrust Litig., 350 F. Supp. 2d 160, 171-72 (D. Me. 2004) (finding that allegations of a "gross disparity" were sufficient where plaintiff alleged vehicles were sold at [*23] prices "ten to thirty percent greater than prices for the same vehicles in Canada").

B. New York

Defendants also move for summary judgment on plaintiffs' claims under section 349 of New York's General Business Law. Section 349 prohibits "[d]eceptive acts or practices in the conduct of any business, trade or commerce." N.Y. Gen. Bus. L. § 349. In order to prevail under section 349, plaintiffs must establish "first, that the challenged act or practice was consumer-oriented; second, that it was misleading in a material way; and third, that the plaintiff suffered injury as a result of the deceptive act." In re TFT-LCD (Flat Panel) Antitrust Litigation, 586 F. Supp. 2d 1109, 1127 (N.D. Cal. 2008). Defendants argue that plaintiffs were not aware of any of defendants' deceptive acts, and that plaintiffs therefore could not have been deceived by those acts. See Berger Decl., Exh. B at 1 (admission of named-plaintiff DiMatteo that he was unaware of defendants' allegedly deceptive statements at the time he bought his monitor); Berger Decl., Exh. C at 2 (same for named-plaintiff Ferencsik).

This Court has already held that plaintiffs' allegations that defendants "took efforts to conceal their [price-fixing] [*24] agreements from the New York plaintiffs and the indirect class" were sufficient to state a claim under section 349. See Flat Panel, 586 F. Supp. 2d at 1127-28 ("Defendants move to dismiss plaintiffs' claim under New York's General Business Law § 349 because the complaint does not specifically allege that defendants made any misrepresentations to the indirect plaintiffs."). Although couched in slightly different terms, defendants' summary judgment motion largely seeks to revisit this ruling.

The Court adheres to its earlier decision that plaintiffs' section 349 claim is viable. Contrary to defendants' argument, plaintiffs need not have been aware of defendants' deceptive conduct to recover under section 349. This is because "reliance is not an element of a section 349 claim." Stutman v Chemical Bank, 95 N.Y.2d 24, 29, 731 N.E.2d 608, 709 N.Y.S.2d 892 (2000). All that plaintiffs must establish is that defendants committed "material deceptive acts" and "that the defendant[s'] 'material deceptive act' caused the[ir] injury." Id.

Courts have found that a defendant's affirmative steps to conceal its price-fixing activities can amount to material deceptive acts within the meaning of section 349. See In re Dynamic Random Access Memory (DRAM) Antitrust Litig., 536 F. Supp. 2d 1129, 1143-44 (N.D. Cal. 2008); [*25] In re Graphics Processing Units Antitrust Litig., 527 F. Supp. 2d 1011, 1030 (N.D. Cal. 2007); cf. Leider v. Ralfe, 387 F. Supp. 2d 283, 296 (S.D.N.Y. 2005) (rejecting section 349 claim because "De Beers' conduct, while certainly reprehensible, was not secretive"); New Motor Vehicles, 350 F. Supp. 2d at 197 (rejecting claim because price differential forming basis of section 349 claim was public knowledge). In this case, plaintiffs have introduced evidence that defendants took steps to ensure that their collusive activities remained hidden from consumers. See Clayton Decl., Exhs. 1-12 (examples of attempts to keep meetings secret). The Court agrees with plaintiffs that a reasonable jury could conclude that this conduct could deceive a consumer into believing that he was paying a competitive price for LCD products. Accordingly, the Court finds that a genuine issue of fact exists regarding whether defendants' secret, collusive activity violated section 349.

C. Vermont

Defendants also move for summary judgment on plaintiffs' claims under the Vermont Consumer Fraud Act ("VCFA"), which prohibits "[u]nfair methods of competition in commerce, and unfair or deceptive acts or practices in commerce [*26] . . . ." 9 V.S.A. § 2453(a). "To prevail on a [VCFA] claim, one must show that: (1) there was a representation, practice, or omission likely to mislead the consumer; (2) the consumer interpreted the message reasonably under the circumstances; and (3) the misleading effects were material, that is, likely to affect the consumers conduct or decision with regard to a product." Lang McLaughry Spera Real Estate, LLC v. Hinsdale, 35 A.3d 100, 2011 VT 29, 2011 WL 1347032, at *8 (Vt. 2011).

As above, defendants argue that they should be granted summary judgment on plaintiffs' VCFA claims because plaintiffs were not aware of any of defendants' allegedly deceptive acts. See Berger Decl., Exh. D at 2 (admission of named-plaintiff Watson that he was unaware of defendants' allegedly deceptive statements at the time he bought his laptop computer). VCFA violations, however, are evaluated under an objective standard. Lang McLaughry, 2011 VT 29, 35 A.3d 100, 2011 WL 1347032 at *8. Thus, the question is whether defendants' omissions would have been material to a reasonable consumer. 2011 VT 29, Id. at *9. The Court finds that plaintiffs have established that a genuine issue of fact exists concerning whether defendants' concealment of their [*27] price-fixing activities were "likely to affect the consumer's conduct or decision with regard to a product." See Elkins v. Microsoft Corp., 174 Vt. 328, 817 A.2d 9, 13 (Vt. 2002) ("The Legislature clearly intended the VCFA to have as broad a reach as possible in order to best protect consumers against unfair trade practices.").

D. Rhode Island

The Rhode Island Unfair Trade Practices and Consumer Protection Act ("UTPCPA") prohibits "[u]nfair methods of competition and unfair or deceptive acts or practices in the conduct of any trade or commerce." R.I. Gen. Laws § 6-13.1-2. This Court has already held that plaintiffs' complaint alleges a cognizable legal theory under the UTPCPA. Flat Panel, 586 F. Supp. 2d at 1129 (approving plaintiffs' theory that "consumers were misled or deceived to believe that they were paying a fair price for [LCD products] or the price increases for [LCD products] were for valid business reasons").

Defendants raise three arguments as to why summary judgment should be granted on this claim. First, defendants seek summary judgment on the ground that plaintiffs' claims are exempted from coverage under the UTPCPA. The UTPCPA contains an exclusionary provision that provides: "Nothing [*28] in this chapter shall apply to actions or transactions permitted under laws administered by the department of business regulation or other regulatory body or officer acting under statutory authority of this state or the United States." R.I. Gen. Laws § 6-13.1-4. The Rhode Island Supreme Court has held that this provision "exempt[s] from the Act all those activities and businesses which are subject to monitoring by state or federal regulatory bodies or officers." State v. Piedmont Funding Corp., 119 R.I. 695, 382 A.2d 819, 822 (R.I. 1978).

Defendants argue that plaintiffs' antitrust claims fall within this statutory exemption because antitrust claims are "subject to regulation [by] the United States Department of Justice, the Federal Trade Commission and the Rhode Island State Attorney General . . . ." Motion at 10. The Court disagrees with defendants' argument. The focus of the UTPCPA's exemption is not the defendants' wrongful acts, otherwise every illegal practice would be subject to the regulation of DOJ or the Rhode Island Attorney General and exempted from UTPCPA. Rather, the proper inquiry is whether the specific "transactions which constitute the basis of th[e] complaint" are subject to regulation. [*29] Piedmont Funding, 382 A.2d at 822; see also Lynch v. Conley, 853 A.2d 1212, 1214 (R.I. 2004) ("[S]tep one of the exemption analysis requires the party claiming the exemption to demonstrate that the general activities complained of are subject to monitoring or regulation by a state or federal government agency."); Chavers v. Fleet Bank (RI), N.A., 844 A.2d 666, 672 (R.I. 2004) ("Under the first prong of the analysis, the question is whether the 'general activity in question,' in this case credit-card solicitations, is subject to control and monitoring by governmental agencies.").

Thus, in Piedmont Funding, the plaintiff's lawsuit was precluded because he alleged deceptive acts in the sale of insurance and securities, areas regulated by "the office of the insurance commissioner and the SEC respectively." Piedmont Funding, 382 A.2d at 822. Other cases have similarly limited the UTPCPA's exemption to the transactions on which the plaintiff's complaint was based. See New Motor Vehicles, 350 F. Supp. 2d at 201 (holding that claims based on deceptive practices in sales of automobiles were not cognizable because "[m]otor vehicle manufacturers, distributors and dealers are regulated by the State [*30] of Rhode Island pursuant to a separate statute"); Lynch, 853 A.2d at 1214 (excluding claim based upon inadequate lead-paint disclosure because "[l]ead paint disclosure in connection with the sale of residential real estate, already is comprehensively regulated by the state and federal government"); Chavers, 844 A.2d at 672 (finding claims of deceptive advertising in credit card solicitations exempted because "credit card solicitations by a national bank . . . are subject to monitoring, supervision and regulation by federal agencies").

The Court concludes that the relevant "transactions which constitute the basis" of plaintiffs' complaint" are the sale and pricing of LCD products or consumer electronics. Defendants have identified no regulations governing such transactions. Accordingly, the Court rejects defendants' first basis for summary judgment.

Defendants' second argument is that their failure to disclose the alleged conspiracy was not material. Of the twenty separate definitions that the UTPCPA provides for "unfair methods of competition and unfair or deceptive acts or practices," one requires that the defendants "mislead or deceive members of the public in a material respect." R.I. Gen. Laws § 6-13.1-1 [*31] ("Using any other methods, acts or practices which mislead or deceive members of the public in a material respect."). As above, defendants argue that plaintiffs were not aware of any statements made by the defendants, and that any deceptive conduct therefore could not have been material to plaintiffs' purchasing decisions. Cf. Berger Decl., Exh. F at 2 (testimony of Rhode Island named-plaintiff Mastronardi that he purchased his laptop computer without reviewing "marketing materials or brochures").

"A material effect is one which is likely to influence a consumer's conduct or purchase decision." In re Int'l Harvester Co., 104 F.T.C. 949, 1042-43 (Dec. 21, 1984); see also R.I. Gen. Laws § 6-13.1-3 ("It is the intent of the legislature that in construing §§ 6-13.1-1 and 6-13.1-2 due consideration and great weight shall be given to the interpretations of the federal trade commission and the federal courts relating to § 5(a) of the Federal Trade Commission . . . ."). For the reasons stated above, the Court agrees with plaintiffs that the existence of a price-fixing conspiracy is "likely to influence" the average consumer. Chocolate Confectionary, 602 F. Supp. 2d at 587 (finding allegations [*32] sufficient where plaintiff alleged that "defendants conspired to raise prices in Rhode Island, that they issued misleading statements about the true reasons for these price increases, and that they caused Rhode Island consumers to believe that prices for chocolate candy were the result of fair competition in an open marketplace" (citations omitted)). Accordingly, the Court rejects defendants' second basis for summary judgment.

Finally, defendants seek summary judgment as to any plaintiff who did not purchase an LCD product "primarily for personal, family or household purposes." See R.I. Gen. Laws § 6-13.1-5.2(a). Although this Court has previously granted defendants' motion to dismiss plaintiffs' complaint to the extent it sought claims that did not meet this criteria, the class definitions do not contain any such limitation. Flat Panel, 586 F. Supp. 2d at 1130. Accordingly, the Court GRANTS defendants' motion for summary judgment as to any purchases that were not "primarily for personal, family or household purposes." The Court will enter an order altering the Rhode Island class definition at the time it rules on defendants' pending motion to amend the class definitions.

E. Missouri

Plaintiffs' [*33] TAC also includes a claim under the Missouri Merchandising Practices Act ("MMPA"). The MMPA limits private actions to "[a]ny person who purchases or leases merchandise primarily for personal, family, or household purposes." Mo. Rev. Stat. § 407.025.1. As above, defendants argue that the class definitions do not contain any "personal use" limitations. Plaintiffs do not contend that a plaintiff that purchased an LCD product for non-personal use may recover under the MMPA. Accordingly, the Court GRANTS defendants' motion to the extent plaintiffs seek to recover for purchases that were not personal. The Court will enter an order altering the Missouri class definition at the time it rules on defendants' pending motion to amend the class definitions.

II. Unjust Enrichment Claims

Plaintiffs' TAC includes common-law unjust enrichment claims under the laws of twenty-two states, including the District of Columbia. TAC at ¶278. Defendants now seek summary judgment on plaintiffs' claims under the laws of fourteen states: the District of Columbia, Hawaii, Iowa, Kansas, Maine, Mississippi, Missouri, New Mexico, New York, Rhode Island, South Dakota, Vermont, West Virginia, and Wisconsin.

Defendants [*34] advance three theories in support of their motion. First, they claim that in twelve states plaintiffs did not confer a "direct benefit " on the defendants. Second, they claim that the unjust enrichment claims under the laws of eight states must be dismissed because plaintiffs have an adequate remedy at law. Finally, they argue that unjust enrichment may not be used to circumvent the statutory limitations on antitrust actions in Rhode Island and Missouri.

A. Necessity of "Direct Benefit"

Defendants argue that twelve states require a plaintiff to prove that he conferred a "direct benefit" on the defendant to establish a claim for unjust enrichment. They argue that plaintiffs cannot meet this requirement because the named plaintiffs purchased LCD products from intermediaries - either retailers or manufacturers of televisions, computers, or other LCD products - and not directly from a defendant.

As a general matter, the Court is unconvinced by defendants' argument. The Court recognizes that unjust enrichment law varies from state to state. See *True v. Conagra Foods, Inc., 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 6770, 2011 WL 176037, at 9 (W.D. Mo., January 4, 2011) ("Courts have repeatedly recognized that the law of unjust enrichment [*35] varies materially from state to state." (internal quotation marks omitted)). In general, however, unjust enrichment requires a plaintiff to show "the receipt of a benefit whose retention without payment would result in the unjust enrichment of the defendant at the expense of the claimant." Restatement (Third), Restitution § 1, cmt. a (2011); see also, e.g., Platz Associates v. Finley, 2009 ME 55, 973 A.2d 743, 750 (Me. 2009) ("A claim for unjust enrichment requires the complaining party to show that: (1) it conferred a benefit on the other party; (2) the other party had appreciation or knowledge of the benefit; and (3) the acceptance or retention of the benefit was under such circumstances as to make it inequitable for it to retain the benefit without payment of its value.").

Unjust enrichment is an equitable remedy, and thus by its very nature is a flexible doctrine. Restatement (Third), Restitution, § 1, cmt. a (noting the "inherent flexibility of the concept of unjust enrichment"). As a cause of action based in equity, "the requirements of proof of unjust enrichment are neither technical nor complicated." Owens Corning v. R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Co., 868 So.2d 331, 342 (Miss. 2004). Id. ("[T]he [*36] plaintiff need only allege and show that the defendant holds money which in equity and good conscience belongs to the plaintiff . . . ."). Thus, by their very nature unjust enrichment claims are ill-suited for bright-line rules of the type defendants suggest.

In addition, defendants' focus on the lack of a "direct relation" between plaintiffs and defendants in misplaced. Rather than looking at the relationship between the parties, courts typically focus on the relation between the plaintiffs' injury and the defendants' conduct. Owens Corning, 868 So.2d at 339 (noting need for a "direct relation between the injury asserted and the injurious conduct alleged."). Thus, those cases in which courts have described unjust enrichment claims as too "indirect" to state claims for relief typically have involved tenuous connections between the plaintiff's injury and the defendant's gain. Frequently the defendant's benefit did not originate with the plaintiff. See Owens Corning, 868 So. 2d at 339; Hill v. Stowers, 224 W. Va. 51, 680 S.E.2d 66, 75 (W. Va. 2009). In other cases the plaintiff's loss was not responsible for the defendant's gain or the defendant received no gain at all. See Prudential Ins. Co. of America v. Couch, 180 W. Va. 210, 376 S.E.2d 104 (W. Va. 1988); [*37] Rivers v. Amato, 2001 WL 1736498 (Me. Super., June 22, 2001); Alessi v. Bowen Court Condo., 2010 R.I. Super. LEXIS 50 (R.I. Super., March 10, 2010). In still other cases, courts have found the relationship too "attenuated." See, e.g., Sperry v. Crompton Corp., 8 N.Y.3d 204, 209, 863 N.E.2d 1012, 831 N.Y.S.2d 760 (N.Y. 2007) (rejecting indirect purchaser claims based upon price-fixing activities in chemicals used in rubber because the relationship was too "attenuated").

Here, in contrast, there is a direct relationship between the plaintiffs' expenses and the defendants' benefit. Under the theory of the case that plaintiffs have advanced, there are no intervening events that disrupt the flow of money from plaintiffs to defendants. Although termed "indirect," plaintiffs have provided evidence supporting their theory that the money they paid was "passed through" directly to defendants. In the Court's view, this is sufficient to satisfy the general common-law definition of unjust enrichment. See, e.g., In re TFT-LCD (Flat Panel) Antitrust Litigation, 599 F. Supp. 2d 1179, 1189-90 (N.D. Cal. 2009) ("Whether or not the benefit is directly conferred on the defendant is not the critical inquiry; rather, the plaintiff must show that [*38] his detriment and the defendant's benefit are related and flow from the challenged conduct." (internal quotation marks omitted)). Unless a state court has explicitly held otherwise, the Court is inclined to allow plaintiffs' unjust enrichment claims to proceed.

1. Mississippi

In Mississippi, unjust enrichment "applies to situations where there is no legal contract but where the person sought to be charged is in possession of . . . property which in good conscience and justice he should not retain but should deliver to another . . . ." Joel v. Joel, 43 So. 3d 424, 432 (Miss. 2010). Defendants argue that Mississippi law requires a "direct relation between the injury asserted and the injurious conduct alleged." See Owens Corning, 868 So. 2d at 339 ("[O]ne notion traditionally included in the concept of proximate causation is the requirement that there be some direct relation between the injury asserted and the injurious conduct alleged." (internal quotation marks omitted)). Because the Mississippi class representative testified that she bought a personal computer, including an LCD monitor, from dell.com, defendants assert that summary judgment is appropriate on her unjust enrichment claim. [*39] See Berger Decl., Exh. G at 72.

Defendants' reliance on Owens Corning is misplaced. That case concerned proximate causation and did not establish a bar to all unjust enrichment claims where the plaintiff did not deal directly with the defendant. The plaintiff in Owens Corning was an asbestos manufacturer that settled a large number of cases with individuals suffering from lung disease. Owens Corning, 868 So. 2d at 335. After reaching these settlements, the plaintiff brought suit against a number of tobacco companies, claiming that they were also responsible for the lung disease. Id. at 335-337. Its lawsuit included an unjust enrichment claim, based on the theory that "by effectively shifting liability for smoking related disease to [plaintiff], Tobacco Defendants have been unjustly enriched at [plaintiff's] expense." Id. at 336-37. Based on a Mississippi law that "preclude[d] all tobacco cases based on products liability," the Court rejected plaintiff's unjust enrichment claim. Id. at 340. It held that plaintiff could not establish proximate cause for its injuries because it could not establish the tobacco companies' liability for the lung disease. Id. at 342 ("Owens Corning would have [*40] to prove that Tobacco Defendants were liable for injuries suffered by the asbestos claimants . . . .").

This case has no such problem with proximate causation. Plaintiffs allege that defendants wrongfully overcharged electronics manufacturers for LCD panels, and that those overcharges were passed through to them when they purchased LCD products. Although plaintiffs and defendants may not have interacted, this amounts to "a direct relation between the injury asserted and the injurious conduct alleged." Accordingly, the Court DENIES defendants' motion for summary judgment on the Mississippi unjust enrichment claim.

2. New York

Defendants also seek summary judgment on plaintiffs' New York unjust enrichment claim. Defendants argue that indirect purchasers may not recover under New York law, relying primarily on a 2007 case from the New York Court of Appeals, Sperry v. Crompton Corp., 8 N.Y.3d 204, 863 N.E.2d 1012, 831 N.Y.S.2d 760 (N.Y. 2007). Sperry concerned a purported antitrust class action lawsuit against producers of "rubber-processing chemicals that improve the durability, color control and heat resistance of rubber products, including tires, belts, hoses and footwear." Id. at 209. In addition to seeking treble damages, [*41] the lawsuit also included an unjust enrichment claim. Id. at 215. Acknowledging that "a plaintiff need not be in privity with the defendant to state a claim for unjust enrichment," the court rejected the claim, concluding that "the connection between the purchaser of tires and the producers of chemicals used in the rubber-making process is simply too attenuated to support such a claim." Id. at 215-16; see also New York v. Daicel Chemical Industries, Ltd., 42 A.D.3d 301, 840 N.Y.S.2d 8, 12 (N.Y. App. 2007) ("While privity is not required for an unjust enrichment claim, the end-users of the products, in whose interest plaintiff is acting, are too attenuated from the producers of the chemicals which are among the ingredients of those products.").

Although Sperry supports defendants' position, even after it was decided courts have continued to allow unjust enrichment claims to proceed on behalf of indirect-purchasers of price-fixed products. See Chocolate

Confectionary, 749 F. Supp. 2d at 241 (finding sufficient allegations that "[t]he IEU plaintiffs have averred that a monetary benefit was indirectly conferred on defendants by virtue of their collusive market behavior."); see also Burns v. Delaware Charter Guarantee & Trust Co., 805 F. Supp. 2d 12, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 61375, 2011 WL 2314835, at *2 (S.D.N.Y., June 8, 2011) [*42] ("Unjust enrichment does not require a direct relationship between the parties."); In re Canon Cameras Litig., 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 43223, 2006 WL 1751245, at *2 (S.D.N.Y., June 23, 2006) ("The cases on which defendant relies suggest, at most, only that some relationships may be too attenuated to support an unjust enrichment claim."); Cox v. Microsoft Corp., 8 A.D.3d 39, 778 N.Y.S.2d 147 (N.Y. App. 2004) (reversing district court's "holding that, as indirect purchasers of Microsoft's software products, plaintiffs only indirectly bestowed a benefit upon Microsoft.").

In light of these cases, the court agrees with plaintiffs that the New York Court of Appeals' decision was based upon the fact that rubber-processing chemicals did not represent a significant portion of the rubber products that the plaintiffs purchased. Here, in contrast, plaintiffs claim that LCD panels are "identifiable, discrete physical objects that do not change form or become an indistinguishable part of the TVs, computer monitors, laptops, or other products in which they are contained," and "[t]hus, LCD panels follow a traceable physical chain from the defendants to the OEMs to the purchasers of the finished products incorporating LCD panels." TAC at ¶¶199-200; [*43] see also Flat Panel, 586 F. Supp. 2d at 1123. Plaintiffs also allege that "LCD panels make up 60-70% of the cost of an LCD television or computer monitor." TAC at ¶182; Flat Panel, 586 F. Supp. 2d at 1124. In light of these allegations, which defendants have not challenged, the Court finds that the relationship between plaintiffs and defendants is not too attenuated to support plaintiffs' unjust enrichment claim. Accordingly, the Court DENIES defendants' motion as to the New York unjust enrichment claim.

3. Maine

Under Maine law, "[a] claim for unjust enrichment requires the complaining party to show that: (1) it conferred a benefit on the other party; (2) the other party had appreciation or knowledge of the benefit; and (3) the acceptance or retention of the benefit was under such circumstances as to make it inequitable for it to retain the benefit without payment of its value." Platz, 973 A.2d at 750. Defendants assert that Maine law precludes recovery by indirect purchasers and that summary judgment should therefore be granted on plaintiffs' Maine unjust enrichment claim. See Berger Decl., Exh. J at 29 (testimony of Maine class representative that she purchased television at Best [*44] Buy).

Defendants rely primarily on two cases in support of their argument: Platz Associates v. Finley, 2009 ME 55, 973 A.2d 743 (Me. 2009), and Rivers v. Amato, 2001 WL 1736498 (Me. Super., June 22, 2001). Neither of these cases, however, sets forth a general rule that an unjust enrichment plaintiff must directly interact with the defendant. Platz, for example, involved an unjust enrichment claim brought by an architecture firm that had created "conceptual architectural drawings for a development project." Platz, 973 A.2d at 746. When the project fell through, the firm sued, claiming that the owner had been unjustly enriched by his receipt of the architectural plans. Id. at 751. The Maine Supreme Court reversed a grant of summary judgment in favor of the plaintiff because the plaintiff had introduced no evidence that the defendant had actually received the plans. Id. at 751 ("[T]he statements of material facts fail to demonstrate that Finley actually received and retained the architectural plans, and thus fail to demonstrate the central element of unjust enrichment, a benefit conferred.").

Similarly, Rivers involved a plaintiff who had contracted to purchase a parcel of land sold by the defendants. [*45] Rivers, 2001 WL 1736498 at *1. After plaintiff consulted with a third-party developer, the developer approached the defendants, offering to purchase the land for more than plaintiff had contracted to purchase it for. Id. The defendants took developer's offer, repudiating their contract with the plaintiff. Id. The plaintiff sued the sellers for unjust enrichment, claiming that he had generated the developer's interest in the property, which resulted in defendants' receiving the benefit of a higher purchase price. Id. at *4. The court held that the plaintiff's benefit theory - that "through [plaintiff's] efforts, [the developer] conferred a benefit on [the seller]" - was too speculative to proceed. Id. at *4 ("No authority can be found for this "indirect benefit" theory, which is, in any case, based on speculation.").

Unlike either of these cases, plaintiffs have introduced evidence that defendants received a quantifiable benefit from plaintiffs' purchase of LCD products. Accordingly, defendant's motion is DENIED as to Maine law.

4. Rhode Island

Under Rhode Island law, to prove unjust enrichment a plaintiff must show "(1) that the plaintiff conferred a benefit upon the defendant, (2) that [*46] the defendant appreciated such benefit, and (3) that there was acceptance of such benefit in circumstances that it would be inequitable for a defendant to retain the benefit without paying the value thereof. Bouchard v. Price, 694 A.2d 670, 673 (R.I. 1997). [1] Again, defendants claim that plaintiffs' status as indirect purchasers is fatal to their unjust enrichment claim. See Berger Decl., Exh. F at 20, 22-23, 33.

Although defendants argue that a plaintiff [*47] must confer a "direct" benefit on a defendant, none of the cases defendants rely on establish that Rhode Island requires the benefit to be "direct." In Alessi v. Bowen Court Condo., 2010 R.I. Super. LEXIS 50 (R.I. Super., March 10, 2010), for example, the court dismissed the plaintiff's unjust enrichment claim because if found that no benefit had been conferred on the defendants. *Id. at *12-14 (holding that defendants were not unjustly enriched by plaintiff's purchase of a property because the property had been foreclosed upon and "[d]efendants did not hold a present interest in the property at the time of the Plaintiff's purchase"). Similarly, in R & B Elec. Co. v. Amco Constr. Co., 471 A.2d 1351 (R.I. 1984), the court also found that no benefit had been conferred on the defendants. Id. at 1356 ("Since they were unable to retain the benefit, we fail to see how defendants are unjustly enriched. And if defendants were enriched by R & B, they have not been enriched under circumstances that dictate that they ought equitably to be required to compensate plaintiff.").

Accordingly, defendant's motion is DENIED as to Rhode Island law.

5. District of Columbia

To state a general claim [*48] for unjust enrichment under District of Columbia law, "a plaintiff must show that (1) the plaintiff conferred a benefit on the defendant; (2) the defendant retains the benefit; and (3) under the circumstances, the defendant's retention of the benefit is unjust." Lozinsky v. Georgia Resources Management, LLC, 734 F. Supp. 2d 150, 155 (D.D.C. 2010).

None of the cases defendants rely on establish that indirect purchasers are prohibited from maintaining causes of action for unjust enrichment. Defendants' most compelling case is True v. Conagra Foods, Inc., 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 6770, 2011 WL 176037 (W.D. Mo., January 4, 2011), which involved an unjust enrichment claim brought by a purchaser of tainted pot pies. *2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 6770, [WL] at 1-2. The court rejected the unjust enrichment claim because the plaintiff was an indirect purchaser. *2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 6770, [WL] at 9 ("[T]here is no evidence that any Plaintiff purchased a pot pie directly from ConAgra; instead, the Plaintiffs indirectly conferred a benefit on ConAgra by purchasing the pot pies from a retailer."). The plaintiff in that case, however, had not contested this point. *2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 6770, [WL] at 9 ("ConAgra argues (without dispute from the Plaintiffs) that at least eleven states and the District of Columbia impose [*49] this "direct benefit" requirement.").

Minebea Co., Ltd. v. Papst, 444 F. Supp. 2d 68 (D.D.C. 2006), involved a patent dispute between two companies that had conducted a joint venture together. Id. at 77-78. The court concluded that the circumstances of the case did not make the defendant's retention of the patents at issue "unjust." Id. at 187 ("Under these circumstances, the Court cannot conclude that it would be unjust for Papst Licensing to retain the United States patents at issue.").

[1] Defendants also argue that "a plaintiff must show that he had a 'reasonable expectation of payment from the defendants' in return for the alleged benefit. " See Motion at 22 (quoting Scully Signal Co. v. Joyal, 881 F. Supp. 727, 745 (D.R.I. 1995)). This appears to be a misstatement of the law; the source cited by Scully Signal sets forth a different standard. See Commercial Associates v. Tilcon Gammino, Inc., 998 F.2d 1092, 1100-01 (1st Cir. 1993) ("To recover on a theory of unjust enrichment under Rhode Island law, the plaintiff must show that it conferred a benefit on the defendant 'in such circumstances that it would be inequitable for the defendant to retain the benefit without payment to the plaintiff for the value thereof.'").

Defendants cases do not establish that the District of Columbia requires a "direct relationship" between an unjust enrichment plaintiff and the defendant. Accordingly, defendant's motion is DENIED as to District of Columbia law.

6. Kansas

Under Kansas law, to recover for unjust enrichment a plaintiff must prove: "(1) a benefit which they conferred upon defendants; (2) defendants' appreciation or knowledge of the benefit; and (3) defendants' acceptance or retention of the benefit under circumstances which make it inequitable for defendants to retain the benefit without payment of its value."

Defendants rely on an unreported case from the Tenth Circuit to support their argument that Kansas law bars plaintiffs' [*50] unjust enrichment claim. See Spires v. Hospital Corp. of America, 289 Fed. Appx. 269, 273 (10th Cir. 2008) ("Plaintiffs have pointed to nothing in Kansas law that supports an indirect unjust enrichment claim against HCA for payments made to subsidiary hospitals."). The precise grounds for the holding in Spires, however, are unclear. See id. ("The district court dismissed the claim because Plaintiffs failed to allege that deceased family members had actually conferred a benefit on HCA, and that the unjust enrichment for acts constituting medical malpractice are displaced by Kansas's medical malpractice regime. We agree. "). Other courts, in contrast, have explicitly endorsed indirect-purchaser unjust enrichment claims under Kansas law. See Gonzalez v. Pepsico, Inc., 489 F. Supp. 2d 1233, 1249 (D. Kan. 2007) ("Defendants argue that plaintiffs do not state a claim for unjust enrichment because they do not allege that they made a purchase directly from defendants, and therefore do not allege that they conferred a benefit upon defendants. A claim for unjust enrichment under Kansas law, however, does not depend on privity.").

Accordingly, defendant's motion is DENIED as to Kansas law.

7. West [*51] Virginia

Under West Virginia law, "if benefits have been received and retained under such circumstance that it would be inequitable and unconscionable to permit the party receiving them to avoid payment therefor, the law requires the party receiving the benefits to pay their reasonable value." Realmark Devs., Inc. v. Ranson, 208 W. Va. 717, 542 S.E.2d 880, 884-85 (W. Va. 2000). Defendants assert that West Virginia does not recognize indirect-purchaser unjust enrichment claims. None of the cases defendants cite, however, stand for the proposition that an indirect purchaser may not recover under an unjust enrichment theory. In Johnson v. Ross, 419 Fed. Appx. 357 (4th Cir. 2011), for example, the court expressly declined to reach the question. Id. at 362 ("We decline Plaintiffs' invitation to settle this state-law question, not least because doing so is unnecessary to reach our disposition."). In Hill v. Stowers, 224 W. Va. 51, 680 S.E.2d 66, 75 (W. Va. 2009), the court rejected the plaintiff's unjust enrichment claim because the plaintiff had not conferred any benefit on the defendant. Id. at 75 ("Mr. Hill, however, was not the payor of the salary and benefits that Mr. Stowers received as circuit clerk."). Similarly, [*52] in Prudential Ins. Co. of America v. Couch, 180 W. Va. 210, 376 S.E.2d 104 (W. Va. 1988), the court held that the defendant was not the recipient of any benefit originating from the plaintiff. Id. at 109 ("[Defendant] was not the payee on any of the checks, as they were paid to the health care providers who had rendered services to his injured son.").

Accordingly, defendant's motion is DENIED as to West Virginia law.

8. Hawaii, Missouri, New Mexico, South Dakota, and Wisconsin

Defendants argue that the unjust enrichment claims under the laws of the above states should be dismissed because no case from any of these states has permitted an unjust enrichment claim to proceed based upon an indirect benefit. Motion at 18. Thus, defendants argue that "[i]n the absence of any supporting authority from state courts, the respective plaintiffs cannot expand their states' laws of unjust enrichment . . . ." As discussed above, however, the Court views the plaintiffs' theory of unjust enrichment as relatively straightforward: defendants' wrongful conduct led them to receive a benefit at plaintiffs' expense. In the absence of state law conclusively precluding such claims, the Court is inclined to let them proceed.

B. [*53] Adequate Remedies at Law

Defendants also move for summary judgment as to eight states - Hawaii, Kansas, Maine, New Mexico, Rhode Island, South Dakota, Vermont, and Iowa - claiming that "those states' common laws do not permit recovery in equity when an adequate remedy at law is available." Motion at 20. The Federal Rules of Civil Procedure typically allow a plaintiff to plead claims in the alternative. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 8(d)(2), (3). Defendants argue, however, that plaintiffs are prohibited from proceeding on their unjust enrichment claims once becomes clear that those claims are identical to plaintiffs' legal remedies. See, e.g., Fernandes v. Havkin, 731 F. Supp. 2d 103, 114 (D. Mass. 2010) (granting summary judgment for defendant on plaintiff's Massachusetts-law unjust enrichment claims because its legal remedies "preclude a claim for unjust enrichment. The disposition of those claims is irrelevant. Their mere availability is a bar to a claim of unjust enrichment."); Garcia v. Tyson Foods, Inc., 766 F. Supp. 2d 1167, 1188 n.17 (D. Kan. 2011) (granting summary judgment for defendant because "[t]he pertinent inquiry is whether an adequate remedy is available, not whether that remedy [*54] is ultimately obtained").

The Court will allow plaintiffs to proceed on their unjust enrichment claims. Although plaintiffs' claims are not explicitly pled in the alternative, all parties acknowledge that they are brought in the alternative to plaintiffs' antitrust and consumer protection claims. Further, there is no evidence before the Court concerning the degree to which the remedies available under plaintiffs' unjust enrichment claims are identical to the legal remedies plaintiffs seek. See New Motor Vehicles, 350 F. Supp. 2d at 212-13 (refusing to dismiss restitutionary relief as a means of remedying violations of state-law antitrust and consumer-protection statutes); TAC at 102 ¶G (requesting "restitution, including disgorgement of profits"). Plaintiffs, of course, may not recover under both theories.

Accordingly, the Court DENIES defendants' motion to dismiss plaintiffs' unjust enrichment claims under the laws of Hawaii, Kansas, Maine, New Mexico, Rhode Island, South Dakota, Vermont, and Iowa.

C. Missouri and Rhode Island - Bar to Indirect Purchaser Claims

Finally, defendants argue that plaintiffs' unjust enrichment claims under Missouri and Rhode Island law should not be allowed [*55] to proceed because they would constitute an "end run" around those states' limitations on indirect-purchaser antitrust actions. [2] One Missouri appellate court has held that indirect purchasers may not bring suit under the that state's antitrust laws. Duvall v. Silvers, Asher, Sher & McLaren, M.D.'s, 998 S.W.2d 821, 825 (Mo. App. 1999) ("If the harm to Duvall was only indirect, he does not have standing."). The Rhode Island Supreme Court has also limited antitrust standing to direct purchasers. See Siena v. Microsoft Corp., 796 A.2d 461, 465 (R.I. 2002) ("We are of the opinion that under federal law and the Antitrust Act, standing to litigate antitrust violations rests with the direct purchaser or the Attorney General as parens patriae."); see also New Motor Vehicles, 350 F. Supp. 2d at 211-212 ("For those states that have maintained the Illinois Brick prohibition on indirect purchaser recovery, I conclude that it would subvert the statutory scheme to allow these same indirect purchasers to secure, for the statutory violation, restitutionary relief at common law (or in equity).").

This Court has previously addressed this issue in the context of unjust enrichment claims brought under the laws of other states:

> [P]laintiffs have not cited any authority from Arkansas, Virginia, Montana or Puerto Rico holding that an indirect purchaser plaintiff may bring an unjust enrichment claim when that same claim would be barred under state antitrust law. In the absence of such authority, the Court declines to recognize such a claim because the Court agrees with defendants that permitting such claims would allow plaintiffs to circumvent limitations of state antitrust laws.

[2] Plaintiffs do not seek to recover under the antitrust laws of Missouri or Rhode Island. Rather, they assert [*56] unfair competition and unjust enrichment claims under the laws of those states.

In re TFT-LCD (Flat Panel) Antitrust Litig., 599 F. Supp. 2d 1179, 1192 (N.D. Cal. 2009). Defendants argue that the Court should follow its prior holding.

This Court's earlier decision, however, is distinguishable. Although indirect purchasers may not bring antitrust claims under Rhode Island or Missouri law, both states permit them to bring unfair competition claims. See Chocolate Confectionary, 602 F. Supp. 2d at 586-87 (finding that UTPCPA claims brought by indirect purchasers of chocolates stated a claim); Gibbons v. J. Nuckolls, Inc., 216 S.W.3d 667, (Mo. 2007) [*57] ("The [MMPA's] plain language does not contemplate a direct contractual relationship between plaintiff and defendant, and Missouri courts have not imposed such a requirement through statutory construction."). In light of the fact that plaintiffs may bring claims under these statutes for the same underlying conduct, the concerns at issue in this Court's prior order are inapplicable. Accordingly, the Court DENIES defendants' request for summary judgment on plaintiffs' Missouri and Rhode Island unjust enrichment claims.

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons and for good cause shown, the Court hereby GRANTS IN PART defendants' joint motion for partial summary judgment on various issues of state law. Docket No. 3205 in 07-1827.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

Opinion

MEMORANDUM

STENGEL, J.

Carpenter Technologies, Inc. ("Carpenter") [*2] and Allegheny Technologies, Inc. and ATI Properties, Inc. (collectively, "ATI") are business competitors in the manufacture and sale of speciality alloys and other materials for use in the energy and aerospace industries. Specifically, both make and sell nickel base 718 Alloy ingots. This opinion addresses Carpenter's antitrust claim. ATI moves for partial summary judgment on Count VII of Carpenter's Second Amended Complaint alleging violations of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 2. For the reasons set forth below, I will grant the motion.

I. BACKGROUND[1]

On July 9, 2002, the United States Patent and Trademark Office ("PTO") issued Patent Number '564 ("the '564 patent"), a "Method for Producing Large Diameter ingots of Nickel Base Alloys." ATI is the owner of the '564 patent. On April 13, 2004, the PTO issued Patent Number '858 patent ("the '858 patent") for "Large Diameter Ingots of Nickel Base Alloys." ATI is the assignee of the '858 patent.

On November 14, 2003, ATI sent a letter to Carpenter notifying it of ATI's rights under the '564 patent and attaching a copy of the patent. [2] On March 9, 2005, ATI [*3] sent a second letter to Carpenter restating its ownership of the '564 patent and notifying Carpenter of the issuance of the related '858 patent. This letter specifically articulated ATI's concern that Carpenter "may be manufacturing and selling large diameter triple-melted 718 nickel alloy ingots greater than 30 inches in diameter, including up to 36 inches in diameter." Letter dated Mar. 9, 2005, Ex. D. To Am. Compl. It also requested that Carpenter "review the subject patents and let [ATI] know in what ways the [Carpenter] process differs from our patented process." Id.

On June 23, 2008, Carpenter filed the instant action against ATI, [*4] seeking declaratory judgment that it has not infringed the '564 and '858 patents (Am. Compl. Counts I & II), declaratory judgment that the two patents are invalid (Counts III & IV), declaratory judgment that the two patents are unenforceable (Counts V and VI), and antitrust and Lanham Act unfair competition claims (Counts VII and VIII).

Following this Court's resolution of a motion to dismiss the original complaint, Carpenter amended its complaint twice and the same causes of action remain. ATI now moves for partial summary judgment in its favor on Carpenter's antitrust claim.

A. The Market for Large Diameter 718 Alloy Ingots

The demand for large-diameter alloy ingots comes to Carpenter and ATI from forgers such as Aubert et Duval Holdings, which forges the ingot into parts for electricity-generating turbines and sells the forged material directly to the General Electric Power Systems Division ("GE"). See Defs' Concise Statement of Material Facts in Supp. of Mot. For Partial Summ. J. #3 ("ATI SMF") at ¶ 7; Carpenter Resp. to Defs' Concise Statement of Material Facts in Supp. of Mot. For Partial Summ. J. #3 ("Carpenter SMF") ¶ 7. GE is the ultimate and only purchaser of the ingots produced [*5] by Carpenter and ATI. See id. In addition to making gas turbines using large-diameter (for the

[2] The letter states in part:

> It has come to our attention that companies involved in the manufacture of ingots, forgings, or gas turbines may be considering either the manufacture, use, or sale of product using large diameter triple-melted 718 nickel alloy ingots greater than 30 inches in diameter, including up to 36 inches in diameter.
> You should be aware that [ATI] owns [the '564 patent] and related pending patent applications covering the manufacture, use, and sale of such large diameter nickel-base ingots.

purposes of this motion, greater than 30 inches in diameter) Alloy 718 ingots, GE makes turbines using large-diameter Alloy 706 ingots, smaller-diameter (for the purposes of this motion, less than 30 inches in diameter) Alloy 718 ingots, and steel-based ingots. See ATI SMF ¶ 8; Carpenter SMF ¶ 8. The turbines made using Alloy 706 ingots, smaller-diameter Alloy 718 ingots, and steel-based ingots are of "lower efficiency" than gas turbines utilizing Alloy 718 ingots. Carpenter SMF ¶ 8.

Prior to 2006, and despite the existence of the patents, Carpenter supplied GE with large-diameter Alloy 718 ingots for use in land-based gas turbines. Carpenter SMF ¶ 9. It stopped doing so in 2006 due to the presence of ATI's patents and specifically in response to the letters ATI sent to Carpenter, GE, and forgers regarding ATI's patent rights. Id. at ¶ 10. After 2006, ATI became GE's sole supplier of Alloy 718 ingots. See id. at ¶ 10; ATI SMF at ¶ 10. Ingots made from Alloy 706 or smaller-diameter ingots made from Alloy 718 "are inadequate for the higher-efficiency land-based gas turbines produced by [GE], [*6] including the 9FB Turbine." Carpenter SMF ¶ 13 (citing S.V. Thamboo, et al, Large Diameter 718 Ingots for Land-Based Gas Turbines, SUPERALLOYS 718, 625, 706 AND VARIOUS DERIVATIVES at 58, 70 (2001) (Carpenter Ex. 7)). [3] Douglas Paul, GE's center of excellence leader for the purchasing of forgings and raw materials, testified that GE has attempted to identify alternative materials that could be used in place of 718 Alloy forgings in the turbines that use Alloy 718. See Paul Dep. 7:20-24; 35:4-22, Dec. 9, 2009 (ATI Ex. 46). GE has not yet identified a substitute product but continues the ongoing process of identifying one. Id. at 35:15-22.

Viewing the evidence in the light most favorable to Carpenter, the GE turbines utilizing 706 Alloy parts are both older and less efficient that those turbines using 718 Alloy parts. According to Carpenter's own assessment of the market for nickel based ingots in 1999, GE had been using Alloy 706 ingots in its turbines for the previous ten years. Carpenter Report, "Alloy 706 and 718 Large Diameter Ingot Products: Development Status and Production Capabilities and Issues," Oct. 12, 2000 (ATI Ex. 35). Carpenter's report concluded that GE's "next generation" of turbines would use 718 Alloy ingots, but it also predicted that GE would continue to produce turbines using 706 ingots. Id. The report grouped the development of 706 and 718 ingots largely together, commenting that the "the GE design is selling very well and the resulting demand for large Triple Melt ingots of 706 and 718 is apparently exceeding the capabilities of GE's present suppliers." Id. The report concluded that "the large ingot 706 / 718 business opens a significant new market to Carpenter." Id.

A 2008 email from Carpenter market specialist Gary DeWald to Carpenter employee [*8] Russell Reber contained a report of DeWald's trip to GE to discuss its future supply needs with Chris Giordano, GE's Senior Global Commodity Leader. See ATI Ex. 38. DeWald reported that GE's "biggest jump in demand for next year is expected in the 6FA units . . . and the 9FA (uses 36" 718 ingots)." Id. However, DeWald also reported that GE was shifting away from 7FA and 9FA units "to E class gas turbines" which use "steel parts for rotors, wheels and spacers and although they are not as efficient as the F series[,] the cost is much less." Id.

B. Carpenter's Antitrust Allegations

Carpenter states a claim under Section 2 of the Sherman Act, [4] alleging that ATI has violated the Act by "monopolizing or attempting to monopolize the market for cast and wrought 718 Alloy VAR ingots greater than 30

[3] Sam Thamboo is a GE employee. The 2001 Thamboo article explains that GE's "F class turbines," which were designed in the 1980's, utilized turbine wheels made of Alloy 706 ingots. See Thamboo, et al, at 58 It further states GE's "new FB and H machines now employ even higher firing temperatures than the F class machines to achieve even better turbine efficiency. These temperatures exceed the capacity of alloy 706; therefore, alloy 718 has been chosen for the turbine wheels." It stated in conclusion that "the latest turbine designs require larger disks [*7] and therefore, larger diameter ingots of alloy 718."

[4] The Sherman Act imposes liability on "[e]very person who shall monopolize, or attempt to monopolize, or combine or conspire with any other person or persons, to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations[.]" 15 U.S.C. § 2. The Supreme Court has recognized that enforcement of a patent obtained through fraud on the Patent inches in diameter . . . through the enforcement of the '564 and '858 Patents that were obtained by fraud or fraudulent means." SAC at ¶ 65. Carpenter defines the relevant product market as "cast and wrought 718 Alloy VAR ingots greater than 30 inches in diameter" and the relevant geographic market as "the United States and Europe." See id. at H 66-67. Carpenter further claims that ATI is the sole [*9] supplier of the relevant product in the defined market, and that potential entrants to the market face high barriers, namely high capital costs and technological obstacles. Id. at ¶ 68. Carpenter further alleges that due to the unique characteristics of 718 Alloy, "there is no cross-elasticity of demand between the Product and other products" and no "alternative product for use in high-efficiency, land-based gas turbines." Id. at ¶ 69. Finally, Carpenter asserts that ATI has used its monopoly power to restrain or otherwise adversely affect competition in the relevant market by requiring potential customers to incur the costs associated with challenging ATI's patents.

The basis of [*10] Carpenter's fraud allegation is that ATI has "engaged in exclusionary conduct through the enforcement, or threatened enforcement, of a patent they know was procured by fraud or fraudulent means on the U.S. Patent and Trademark Office." SAC at ¶ 77. Carpenter accuses ATI of making false representations of material fact and withholding material information from the PTO in connection with prosecution of the '564 and '858 Patents, and of engaging in inequitable conduct by intentionally omitting false information from, or submitting false and misleading information to, the PTO. SAC at ¶¶ 78, 79. [5]

C. McChesney Reports

In support of its antitrust claim, Carpenter relies on the reports of its expert, Dr. Fred McChesney. [6] Dr. McChesney' s initial report contains his opinion that the relevant product market is "cast and wrought 718 Alloy VAR ingots greater than 30 inches in diameter, with the 718 Alloy being a grade satisfactory for use in high-efficiency, land-based gas fired turbines and having properties that reduce [*11] segregation tendencies during solidification of the VAR ingot." McChesney Jan. 9, 2010 Report (ATI App. Ex. 36) at ¶ 18. For purposes of his antitrust analysis, he assumes that the ATI patents are invalid, that ATI is currently the sole supplier of the relevant product; that there are significant barriers to entry into the market, including high capital costs and technological obstacles; that the 718 Alloy is the only "technically and economically acceptable superalloy for use in [high efficiency land-based gas turbines] at higher firing temperatures; and that there is no cross-elasticity of demand between the product and other products. Id. at ¶¶ 15, 20(A),(D),(E),(F). He offers no opinions following this lengthy set of assumptions, simply stating in conclusion that "based on the foregoing assumptions I expect I will be able to offer calculations of antitrust damages, upon analysis of the information I have been provided." Id. at ¶ 21.

In his second report, Dr. McChesney provides further support for his definition of the relevant product market, explaining that greater-than 30-inch 718 Alloy ingots, as used in land-based gas turbines, are purchased solely by GE, which has not found an acceptable substitute for the product as defined. McChesney June 15, 2010 Supp. Report (ATI App. Ex. 32) at ¶¶ 7-18. He explains that 718 Alloy is metallurgically unique (for example, in its ability to withstand higher temperatures during long term exposures) and that large-diameter 718 Alloy ingots are functionally unique because they "allow performances in land-based gas turbines not possible with smaller diameter alloys." Id. at ¶¶ 7-18. He explains that 718 Alloy ingots of less than 30 inches in diameter cannot be used in GE's "advanced class of gas turbines." Id. at ¶ 11. He describes the relevant product market as one of "derived demand" — the demand for ingots from Carpenter and ATI comes from forgers, whose demands directly reflect GE's need for forgings to be used in the manufacture of turbines. See id. at ¶¶ 13-14. Citing deposition testimony of GE

Office can form the basis for a claim under the Sherman Act. Walker Process Equip., Inc. v. FoodMach. and Chem. Corp., 382 U.S. 172, 86 S. Ct. 347, 15 L. Ed. 2d 247 (1965).

[5] Carpenter's fraud allegations continue, but there is no reason to detail them here. ATI does not seek summary judgment on the fraud elements of Carpenter's Walker Process claim.

[6] Dr. McChesney is a Professor at Northwestern University Law School and at the Kellogg School of Management. He has a ID. and a Ph.D. in economics. ATI does not dispute that Dr. McChesney is qualified to render an expert opinion with respect to the antitrust [*12] issues in this case.

employees Art Kracke and Sam Thamboo, McChesney further [*13] opines that GE has determined that there are "no substitute products" for large-diameter 718 Alloy ingots, because no other product is acceptable for use once GE commits to making certain types of high-efficiency turbines. Id. at ¶¶ 15, 17-18. McChesney explains that the relevant geographic market is the United States and Europe, because GE only purchases relevant products from forgers in the United States and Europe. Id. at ¶¶ 19-23. McChesney further opines that ATI has market power in the relevant product market because it is the sole supplier of 36-inch 718 ingots (giving it 100 percent of market share) and because the highly technical nature of the field and financial costs to entry make any likelihood of a new entrant in the field "remote." Id. at ¶ 29.

Finally, McChesney provides his damages calculation. He explains that Carpenter profited from the production of large-diameter 718 Alloy ingots until it was forced to stop selling them in 2006, as a result of the increasing pressures it faced stemming from ATI's ownership of the relevant patents. Id. at ¶ 31-33. As he explains, Carpenter, the forgers, and GE all knew of ATI's patents. Carpenter was asked to enter into indemnification [*14] agreements with its customers, and in turn, attempted to secure indemnification from GE for the materials it sold to the forgers. Id. at ¶ 33. These pressures and "the fear of legal liability" "caused Carpenter to exit the market for large-diameter 718 alloy ingots by 2006. Id. at ¶ 35.

As the benchmark for his damages calculation, McChesney first examines the period from 1999 to 2004 in the market for Alloy 706 ingots. During this time period and in this market, McChesney explains, Carpenter and ATI were competing, and Carpenter held 46.1 percent of the market. Using this as a benchmark, he estimates that without ATI's anticompetitive conduct, Carpenter would have had the same market share in the market for 718 Alloy ingots from 2002 to 2009. During this time period, total production of Alloy 718 ingots was 5,445,737 pounds. [7] McChesney Aug. 15, 2010 Report at ¶ 14. Had this market been competitive, McChesney asserts, it is reasonable to assume that Carpenter would have had 46.1% market share (selling not the 838,000 pounds it actually sold but instead selling 2,510,485 pounds, which represents 46.1% market share). Id. at ¶ 41-42. Assuming Carpenter would have continued making the [*15] same profits on Alloy 718 ingots it made before exiting the market ($1.35 per pound), McChesney finds that "[a] conservative estimate of Carpenter's actual damages, based on its lost volume . . . and its previous profits . . . amounts to $2,257,855." Id. at ¶ 18. Treble damages, as mandated by section 4 of the Clayton Act, would therefore amount to $6,773,564. Id. at ¶ 19.

II. STANDARD OF REVIEW

A. Summary Judgment Standard

Summary judgment is proper "if the movant shows that there is no genuine dispute as to any material fact and the movant is entitled to judgment as a matter of law." Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(a)*. A factual dispute is "material" only if it might affect the outcome of the case. Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc., 477 U.S. 242, 248, 106 S. Ct. 2505, 91 L. Ed. 2d 202 (1986). For an issue to be "genuine," a reasonable fact-finder must be able to return a verdict in favor of the non-moving party. Id.

A party seeking summary judgment initially [*16] bears responsibility for informing the court of the basis for its motion and identifying those portions of the record that it believes demonstrate the absence of a genuine issue of material fact. Celotex Corp. v. Catrett, 477 U.S. 317, 322, 106 S. Ct. 2548, 91 L. Ed. 2d 265 (1986). A party asserting that a fact cannot be or is genuinely disputed must support the assertion by citing relevant portions of the record, including depositions, documents, affidavits, or declarations, or showing that the materials cited do not establish the absence or presence of a genuine dispute, or showing that an adverse party cannot produce admissible evidence to support the fact. Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(c). Summary judgment is therefore appropriate when the non-moving party fails to rebut the moving party's argument that there is no genuine issue of fact by pointing to evidence that is "sufficient to establish the existence of an element essential to that party's case, and on which that party will bear the burden of proof at trial." Celotex, 477 U.S. at 322; Harter v. GAF Corp., 967 F.2d 846, 852 (3d Cir.1992).

Despite their factually intensive nature, "the standard of [Rule 56] remains the same" in antitrust cases. Town Sound & Custom Tops v. Chrysler Motors Corp., 959 F.2d 468, 481 (3d Cir. 1992). [*17] "To survive a motion for summary judgment, an antitrust plaintiff must produce all economically plausible evidence supporting the elements of its claim." Harrison Aire, Inc. v. Aerostar Int'l, 423 F.3d 374, 380 (3d Cir. 2005) (citing Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 588, 106 S. Ct. 1348, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538 (1986)).

B. Elements of a Walker Process Antitrust Claim

It was in Walker Process Equip. that the Supreme Court recognized the validity of monopoly allegations linked to allegedly fraudulently procured patents. "The enforcement of a patent procured by fraud on the Patent Office may be violative of [Section] 2 of the Sherman Act provided the other elements necessary to a [Section] 2 case are present." Walker Process, 382 U.S. at 174. A Walker Process claim is supported with proof that a patent was obtained "by knowingly and willfully misrepresenting facts to the Patent Office[.]" Id. at 177. The elements of a Walker Process fraud claim are: (1) a false representation or deliberate omission of a fact material to patentability, (2) made with the intent to deceive the patent examiner, (3) on which the examiner justifiably relied in granting the patent, and (4) but for which the misrepresentation [*18] or deliberate omission the patent would not have been granted. In re Remeron Antitrust Litig., 335 F. Supp. 2d 522, 528 (D.N.J. 2004) (citing C.R. Bard., Inc. v. M3 Sys., Inc., 157 F.3d 1340, 1364 (Fed. Cir. 1998)). The question of whether there was fraud on the Patent Office is governed by Federal Circuit law. Again, ATI has not moved for summary judgment on the fraud elements of Carpenter's claim.

Once fraud on the Patent Office has been proven with sufficient evidence, a party alleging Walker Process fraud must also "show the basic elements of an antitrust violation defined by the regional circuit's law, including that the patentee's behavior was directed to a relevant product market." Dippin' Dots, Inc. v. Mosey, 476 F.3d 1337, 1348 (Fed. Cir. 2007). Liability under § 2 of the Sherman Act requires "(1) the possession of monopoly power in the relevant market and (2) the willful acquisition or maintenance of that power as distinguished from growth or development as a consequence of a superior product, business acumen, or historic accident." Broadcom Corp. v. Qualcomm Inc., 501 F.3d 297, 307 (3d Cir. 2007) (citing United States v. Grinnell Corp., 384 U.S. 563, 570, 86 S.Ct. 1698, 16 L. Ed. 2d 778 (1966)). [*19] The existence of monopoly power can be "proven through direct evidence of supracompetitive prices and restricted output." Id.

Monopoly power can also be "inferred from the structure and composition of the relevant market" by showing that one firm has a dominant share in a relevant market and that other firms are blocked by significant entry barriers. Id. Absent evidence of a dominant share of the relevant market, other factors must be considered. Id.; see also Harrison Aire, Inc. v. Aerostar Int'l, Inc., 423 F.3d 374, 382 (3d Cir. 2005). When proving monopoly power indirectly, the plaintiff has the burden of defining the relevant market. Queen City Pizza, Inc. v. Domino's Pizza, Inc., 124 F.3d 430, 436 (3d Cir. 1997) (citing Pastore v. Bell Tel. Co. of Penn., 24 F.3d 508, 512 (3d Cir. 1994)). A relevant market has two components — the product itself and the geographic area in which it is sold. "The outer boundaries of a product market are determined by the reasonable interchangeability of use or the cross-elasticity of demand between the product itself and substitutes for it." Queen City Pizza, 124 F.3d at 436 (internal citations omitted). "Interchangeability implies that one product [*20] is roughly equivalent to another for the use to which it is put[.]" Id. at 437. Cross-elasticity of demand is a measure of interchangeability, and occurs when "the rise in the price of a good within a relevant product market [tends] to create a greater demand for other like goods in that market." Id. at 438 & n. 6. It is a measure of "the substitutability of products from the point of view of buyers." Id. at n. 6. This reflects the more general rule that "[t]he test for a relevant market is not commodities reasonably interchangeable by a particular plaintiff, but 'commodities reasonably interchangeable by consumers for the same purposes.'" Id. at 438 (citing United States v. E.I. du Pont de Nemours & Co., 351 U.S. 377, 395, 76 S.Ct. 994, 100 L. Ed. 1264 (1956); Tunis Bros. Co., Inc. v. Ford Motor Co., 952 F.2d 715, 726 (3d Cir. 1991)). When assessing reasonable interchangeability, factors to be considered include "price, use, and qualities." Tunis Brothers, 952 F.2d at 722.

Stated differently,

> A product or group of products constitutes a market when its producers, if united by a hypothetical cartel, could maximize profits by charging significantly supracompetitive prices. The market thus includes . . [*21] . other products that buyers regard as such close substitutes that a slight relative price change in one will induce intolerable shifts of demand away from the other.

Phillip Areeda & Herbert Hovenkamp, ANTITRUST LAW § 562 (2nd Ed. 2002). The Third Circuit has stated that "where a plaintiff fails to define its proposed relevant market with reference to the rule of reasonable interchangeability and cross-elasticity of demand, or alleges a proposed relevant market that does not encompass all interchangeable substitute products. . . . the relevant market is legally insufficient." Queen City Pizza, 124 F.3d at 436.

III. DISCUSSION

ATI seeks summary judgment in its favor on Carpenter's antitrust claim, arguing (1) that Carpenter has failed to show that ATI has monopoly power within a relevant market, because its proposed definition of the relevant market is insufficient, and (2) that Carpenter has offered no admissible evidence of antitrust damages.

A. Carpenter Has Failed to Present Sufficient Indirect Evidence in Support of Its Proposed Relevant Market

ATI asserts that Carpenter has failed to define a relevant market because it simply argues, "in conclusory fashion[,] that there are no products [*22] reasonably interchangeable with alloy 718 ingots in diameters greater than 30 inches and thus that the relevant product market is coterminous with the scope of certain claims of the ATI patents." ATI Mem. in Supp. Of Mot. For Partial Summ. J. ("ATI Mem.") at 6. Specifically, ATI claims (1) that Carpenter failed to address whether other products were economically substitutable for Alloy 718 ingots; (2) that Carpenter's own expert, Dr. Fred McChesney, admitted that other ingots, specifically Alloy 706 ingots, are economic substitutes for Alloy 718 ingots and that Carpenter's internal documents reflect the same conclusion; and (3) that Carpenter's relevant market definition wrongly relies entirely on the fact that Alloy 718 ingots have no technological equivalent.

ATI claims that Carpenter has failed to show that that no reasonably interchangeable substitutes for large-diameter 718 Alloy ingots exist. ATI Mem. at 6. It further claims that Carpenter's Section 2 allegations are particularly untenable because Carpenter has defined its relevant market as "coterminous with certain claims in the ['564 and '858] patents." Id. at 7. In order to sustain an antitrust claim, an antitrust plaintiff [*23] must establish the relevant market for its product. [8] The plaintiff must establish both product and geographic dimensions for the market. Two factors are traditionally emphasized in determining the relevant product market: the extent to which the defendant's product is interchangeable in use with alleged alternative products, or substitutes, and whether there is a cross-elasticity of demand between the defendant's product and supposed substitutes. This is an initial, and necessary inquiry. See Columbia Metal Culvert Co., Inc. v. Kaiser Aluminum & Chem. Corp., 579 F.2d 20, 26 (3d Cir. 1978) (noting that as a prelude to examining the extent of a firm's power, courts must "look to the range of 'commodities reasonably interchangeable by consumers for the same purposes.'" (citing E.I. DuPont & Co., 351 U.S. at 391)). It involves, at a most basic level, "ascertain[ing] the flow of commercial interactions." Id.

[8] "Definition of the relevant market identifies that 'part' of commerce within which the defendant has allegedly achieved an illegal monopoly position[.] . .. [P]roof of the relevant market focuses attention upon that area of trade within which the defendant purportedly exercises a monopolist's [*24] control over prices and competition." William C. Holmes & Melissa Mangiaracina, ANTITRUST LAW HANDBOOK § 3:4 (2010-2011 Ed.).

Carpenter, through its expert Dr. McChesney, does not appear to dispute that the relevant market it alleges falls entirely within the scope of the patents, meaning that ingots of other materials and in other sizes are not economically interchangeable with large-diameter, Alloy 718 ingots. [9] This is a serious flaw in Carpenter's claim. By focusing entirely on the technological and functional uniqueness of large-diameter 718 ingots, Carpenter ignores entirely the key question of economic interchangeability. ATI has presented evidence that large-diameter 718 ingots are economically interchangeable with other ingots, including large-diameter Alloy 706 ingots.

In 1999, Carpenter had already experienced success in its sales [*25] of 706 ingots for use in land-based gas turbines. Its forecasting report recognized that 718 Alloy turbines represented the next generation of turbines, but did not reflect any belief that use of 718 ingots in certain turbines would result in any significant drop in demand for 706 ingot turbines. The report treats the market for both alloy types as one large market for nickel-based alloy ingots. ATI's evidence also suggests that turbines made of steel parts were or could become a competitor in the same market. GE, the only consumer of such ingots, reported in 2008 that its biggest jump in demand for turbines would be for 9FA turbines using 36-inch 718 Alloy ingots, but simultaneously referenced a shift away from those products to less-efficient turbines using steel parts. Carpenter's Rule 30(b)(6) witness, Russell Reber, testified that GE has a wide breadth of product offerings using various ingot types. See Reber Dep. 81-82, July 27, 2010 (ATI Ex. 34). In fact, during his deposition, Mr. Reber explained the market for turbines offered by GE as follows:

> GE appears to offer their customer base a choice of power plants, [including] ones that are relatively low cost but are nowhere near [*26] as efficient, and those are the ones that use [stainless steel], to the 706-bearing power plants, which seem to be extremely popular in the marketplace, to then these very, very high-end power plants that are very efficient and use 718.

Reber Dep. at 82:1-8. Carpenter has not alleged nor offered proof that the only way for GE to manufacture a turbine is using 718 Alloy ingots. This Court will not speculate about a changing market, which at one time cultivated a demand for large-diameter 718 ingots to the exclusion of all other products. In order to survive summary judgment, Carpenter has to present sufficient evidence that large-diameter 718 ingots (and the turbines that require them) do not compete with ingots made of other materials or in smaller sizes. Carpenter does not actually present such evidence, instead resting on its argument that "once [GE] has committed to manufacturing a high-efficiency land-based gas-fired turbine, [large-diameter 718 Alloy ingots] [are] required by [GE]." Carpenter SMF ¶ 11.

Carpenter's focus on the fact that one class of high-efficiency turbines requires the use of large-diameter 718 ingots is overly narrow. The level of efficiency of a product and its [*27] supposed attractiveness to consumers is but one factor courts must consider in determining the relevant market in an antitrust case. See Tunis Brothers, 952 F.2d at 722 (factors to be considered in assessing reasonable interchangeability include "price, use, and qualities."). Carpenter has presented no evidence on other important factors GE takes into account in determining what kind of turbines to manufacture (which accordingly determines the kind of ingots it requires). Carpenter's own 30(b)(6) witness testified that turbines using 706 alloys remain "extremely popular in the marketplace." Reber Dep. 82:1-8. Dr. McChesney, too, admitted that GE makes turbines using 706 ingots, 718 ingots, and other materials. See McChesny Dep. 62:22 - 63:1, Aug. 30, 2010 (ATI Ex. 37). Despite recognizing that GE is the only consumer of the ingots made by Carpenter and ATI, that GE uses those ingots to make turbines, and that GE has the option of making different kinds of turbines, Dr. McChesney refused to acknowledge the impact of this flow of commerce and admitted that he had done no investigation into factors affecting consumer behavior:

> Q: So these producers of turbine generated electricity can [*28] choose between GE turbines with 706, GE turbines with 718, and maybe some other turbine; is that correct?
> A: I believe that's correct.
> Q: And they can also choose between turbines that are made by GE and turbines that are made by someone else?
> A: I believe that's also correct.

[9] See Carpenter Resp. to Defs. Mot. For Summ. J. ("Carpenter Resp.") at 6-7 (arguing that large-diameter 718 Alloy ingots are functionally and technologically unique and further claiming that Carpenter, ATI's only viable competitor in the market for the product, was foreclosed from competing with solely due to ATI's threats of patent enforcement.)

Q: So they might choose to buy a turbine and insist on 718, but they also might buy a turbine and insist on 706?
A: I believe that's correct.
Q: Did you do any investigation into the factors that weigh into those choices?
A: No, there's no relevance to that. That makes no difference to what's going on in the ingot market. That's - -
Q: Well, if nobody's buying GE turbines with 718 and they're all buying 706, how can it make no difference with respect to what's going on in the ingot market?
A: But they are buying 718's.
Q: Are you aware, sir, that some purchasers of turbines were choosing between 706 ingots, 706-based turbines and turbines that use stainless steel instead of 718 ingots?
A: Yes.
Q: And doesn't that - - don't these decisions have some influence over what's going on in the ingot market?
A: It [affects] the level of demand for 718 ingots, sure.

Q: And do you think that the price of the 718 ingots might [affect] [*29] the level of demand for the turbines that use them?
A: If the price of 718 ingots increases, presumably the quantity purchased of 718 ingots will decline, if that's what your question is.
Q: Yeah, because the turbine buyers might choose to use 706 ones, correct?
A: At the margin they might, some might.
Q: Did you do any investigation into where that tradeoff was?
A: No. Once again, it's of no relevance.

McChesney Dep. 62:22 - 64:22. While it is conceivable that a distinct market for large-diameter 718 Alloy ingots exists due to the compositional uniqueness of such ingots, Carpenter has the burden of providing evidence in support of such a claim, including evidence that ingots of other sizes and materials are not feasible economic substitutes. [10] Both Dr. McChesney and Carpenter refuse to confront ATI's evidence that other ingots were reasonable substitutes since GE manufactured many kinds of turbines using ingots of various materials, in a marketplace where these other types of turbines continued to present alternatives to 718 turbines. Notably, when asked whether he was familiar with the phrase "economic substitutability," Dr. McChesney stated that he could only guess what it means, but [*30] was not "aware of it in the context of relevant product markets."

Carpenter's argument that large-diameter 718 Alloy ingots constitute the relevant product market because they alone are suitable "once GE has committed to making a high-efficiency land-based gas-fired turbine," is also lacking. Even assuming this fact is true, it is insufficient for antitrust purposes, since the uniqueness of a product is not sufficient to prove a relevant market. See CCPI Inc. v. American Premier, Inc., 967 F. Supp. 813, 817-18 (D.Del. 1997) (holding that cases in which a patented product constitutes a relevant market "will at best be a rarity"); *Sheet Metal Duct, Inc. v. Lindab, Inc., No. 99-6299, 2000 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 9928, 2000 WL 987865 at 4 (E.D.Pa. July 18, 2000) (dismissing Section 2 antitrust claim where the plaintiff alleged that "there are [*31] no products interchangeable with [the patented product] because various projects call out [the patented product] by name" and noting that "such circularity cannot be enough to delineate a relevant market for antitrust claims.").

This argument also seems to ignore the economic reality that, as admitted elsewhere by Carpenter, the demand for a particular type of ingot is "fueled entirely by the demand for turbines made from them." ATI Reply to PL's Resp. to Mot. For Partial Summ. J. at 8. To accept that GE must make an ingot with 718 Alloy once it determines that it is going to make its latest model, highest efficiency turbine does not compel the conclusion that GE previously had no choice in what kind of turbine to manufacture. Carpenter proffers almost no evidence into the factors that affect this initial, and relevant decision. Even assuming that high-efficiency turbines are those which customers would most prefer, Carpenter has presented no evidence that, if the price of 718 Alloy ingots, and therefore the price of those high-efficiency turbines, were to increase, customers would not demand, and GE would not manufacture, more of the lower efficiency, 706 ingot turbines. In fact, the [*32] evidence submitted by ATI supports the conclusion that both the 706 and the 718 ingot turbines have remained popular in the market and were viewed by Carpenter as competitors.

[10] There is a presumption in favor of multibrand markets that may be overcome, but only with evidence that "defendant's own products are so unique or so dominant in the market in which they compete that any action by the manufacturer to increase his control over his product virtually assures that competition in the market will be destroyed." Areeda & Hovenkamp, ANTITRUST LAW § 563d.

Carpenter clings to its argument that the relevant market in this case is the market for large-diameter 718 Alloy ingots, despite clear case law establishing that it must address the availability of economic substitutes for this product. Carpenter's expert refused to inquire into the impact of alternatives in the marketplace, insisting that there are none simply because the product is technologically unique. Carpenter has not met its burden on summary judgment. This Court is required to "ascertain the flow of commercial transactions" in order to determine whether Carpenter's product market, as proposed, is one recognized by antitrust laws. ATI has presented evidence that Carpenter itself viewed the market for 706 and 718 ingots as, at the least, related. It has presented evidence from both GE and Carpenter showing that GE manufactures turbines using both 706 and 718 ingots, as well as stainless steel. Carpenter's own expert admitted that purchasers of turbines can choose between 706, 718, and stainless steel, [*33] and that an increase in the price of 718 ingots would affect the demand for 706 ingots. He also admitted that he did not investigate the tradeoff between 706 and 718 turbines. Carpenter has responded with evidence that barriers to entry into the ingot market are high, and that 718 Alloy ingots are a unique, patented product. That evidence appears to be insufficient first because a unique, patented product that constitutes a market in itself is a "rarity," CCPI, Inc., 967 F.Supp. at 817, and second, because Carpenter has offered no evidence to rebut ATI's evidence showing that Alloy 718 ingots, Alloy 706 ingots, and possibly stainless steel, are reasonably interchangeable for use in turbines. In order to show that its relevant market definition is valid, Carpenter has to prove that there are no reasonable substitutes for Alloy 718 ingots. The record evidence undermines Carpenter's limited definition of the relevant market, and Carpenter has not proved a set of facts supporting its own definition.

B. Carpenter Has Failed to Present Sufficient Direct Evidence of Monopoly Power

Carpenter also argues that its antitrust claim should survive summary judgment because it has presented sufficient [*34] direct evidence of monopoly power in its proposed relevant market. See Carpenter Resp. at 20-24. As recognized by the Third Circuit in Broadcom, "[b]ecause market share and barriers to entry are merely surrogates for determining the existence of monopoly power . . . direct proof of monopoly power does not require definition of the relevant market." 501 F.3d at 307 n.3. The Third Circuit relied on numerous other circuit decisions in reaching this conclusion, none of which found that an antitrust plaintiff can prove monopoly power alone without reference to a relevant market. These cases instead stand for the proposition that there are two ways to show market power: through direct evidence of a defendant's ability to control prices or exclude competition, or through indirect evidence that, in an area of competition, defendants had a controlling market share. See e.g., PepsiCo, Inc. v. Coca Cola Co., 315 F.3d 101, 107-08 (2d Cir. 2002) (explaining the two ways of proving monopoly power but observing that "numerous cases state that defining a relevant market is generally a necessary component of analyzing a monopolization claim. Once a relevant market is determined, the defendant's share [*35] in that market can be used as a proxy for market power."); Conwood Co., L.P. v. U.S. Tobacco Co., 290 F.3d 768, 783 & 783 n.2 (6th Cir. 2002) (noting that monopoly power "may be proven directly by evidence of the control of prices or the exclusion of competition, or it may be inferred from one firm's large percentage share of the relevant market" but observing initially that defendant "does not challenge that it has monopoly power; nor is there an issue as to the relevant product [] and geographic markets[.]").

Therefore, Carpenter's antitrust claim remains lacking for its failure to proffer sufficient evidence in support of its relevant market definition. Nonetheless, I will briefly address why its direct evidence is insufficient even assuming the relevant market is limited to large-diameter 718 Alloy ingots. Carpenter claims that "ATI limited the output of competitors by threatening patent enforcement, refusing to grant licenses, and thus maintained artificially high prices." Carpenter Resp. at 21. Carpenter supports this argument by citing damages tables prepared by ATI's expert, Phillip Beutel, in support of ATI's patent infringement claims against Carpenter. Carpenter claims that [*36] a comparison of its own net profit per pound during those times it sold large-diameter 36 inch ingots, with ATI's net profit per pound after Carpenter exited the market in 2006, shows that ATI "is sustaining supracompetitive prices almost 50% higher than Carpenter's last price, with incremental profits nearly twice those Carpenter achieved, and net profit per pound increase three times that realized by Carpenter in 2004." Carpenter Resp. at 23.

The Second Circuit has directly confronted the question of what proof is necessary to show direct evidence of market power. In Geneva Pharms. Tech. Corp. v. Barr Labs, Inc., it ruled that, to support a claim that defendants set supra-competitive prices, antitrust plaintiffs must provide an analysis of the defendant's costs, and show that the defendant had an "abnormally high price-cost margin" and that they "restricted output." 386 F.3d 485, 500 (2d Cir. 2004); see also In re Remeron Direct Purchaser Antitrust Litig., 367 F. Supp. 2d 675, 681-82 (D.N.J. 2005) (granting motion for summary judgment in favor of defendant in a Section 2 case where plaintiff had proffered no evidence of excessive price-cost margins or restricted output); Areeda & [*37] Hovenkamp, ANTITRUST LAW § 501 ("[T]he substantial market power that concerns antitrust law arises when a defendant . . . can profitably set prices well above its costs[.]").

Carpenter has offered no evidence that ATI has achieved an abnormally high price-cost margin. As pointed out by ATI and acknowledged by Carpenter, the selling price for large-diameter 718 ingots is driven by the price of nickel. See Rebuttal Expert Report of Phillip Beutel at 19 & n. 56 [11] and Attach. 6a (showing that the price ATI charged for its 718 Alloy ingots generally tracked the price of nickel) (ATI Ex. 30); Reber Dep. 23 (explaining that nickel is 42% of the input of the relevant product and stating that its practice is to base ingot price on the price of nickel). As set forth by Dr. Beutel in the same tables on which Carpenter relies, ATI's annual profit margins ranged from 27.8% to 45.9%, with an average of 36.1%. See Supplemental Report of Phillip Beutel Attach. 3a (Carpenter Ex. 11). Carpenter's profits when it sold the same product ranged from 24.6% to 41.1%, with an average of 33.5%. See id. In other words, the profits Carpenter claims reflect supracompetitive prices were not drastically above its [*38] own profits for the same product. I need not even assume that the reasoning offered by ATI to explain its profit margins is correct. It is Carpenter's burden on summary judgment to offer evidence that ATI earned supracompetitive prices, and Carpenter has failed to offer any analysis of ATI's costs relative to its profits, thereby failing to meet this burden. [12] Neither can Carpenter turn to any analysis from its expert: when questioned whether he had calculated the competitive price level in the market for large-diameter 718 ingots, Dr. Chesney stated that he had not. See McChesney Dep. 37:2-19.

With respect to restricted output, Carpenter apparently concedes this argument, as it notes in its own brief that instead of restricting output following Carpenter's exit from the market in 2006, ATI's sales data reflect that "volume sales [of large-diameter 718 Alloy ingots] hit all time highs in 2007 and 2008." Carpenter Resp. at 23.

IV. CONCLUSION

Carpenter has failed to provide sufficient evidence in support of its proposed relevant market definition, and has therefore failed to show that ATI had market power. Thus, there is no need to address Carpenter's damages claims. I will grant ATI's motion for summary judgment and dismiss Count VII of Carpenter's complaint.

An appropriate Order follows.

[11] In support of this conclusion, Dr. Beutel cites ATI internal documents, a conversation with ATI employee Art Kracke, and deposition testimony of GE employee Douglas Paul, who confirmed that material costs affect the price for large diameter 718 ingots.

[12] Carpenter cites the testimony of its 30(b)(6) witness Russell Reber, who testified that GE (which is not a party to this case) has been injured because it is "paying a price for the product that would - - that is much higher than it otherwise would be if there was more efficient competition in the marketplace" and that the profits for ATI's [*39] 718 ingots were double the profits Carpenter earned for 706 ingots. Reber Dep. 12:25-13:3.; 14:17-20. This unsubstantiated opinion testimony is not sufficient to carry Carpenter's burden.

ORDER

AND NOW, this 29 day of September, 2011, upon careful consideration of the defendant's motion for partial summary judgment in its favor on Count VII of the Second Amended Complaint alleging antitrust violations of the Sherman Act (Doc. No. 77), plaintiff's response thereto, and defendant's reply, IT IS HEREBY [*40] ORDERED that the motion is GRANTED. Count VII of the Second Amended Complaint is DISMISSED.

A court reviews de novo all objections to legal conclusions recommended by a special master. Fed. R. Civ. P. 53(f)(4). A different standard of review applies to the special master's decisions regarding procedural matters. Those rulings may only be set aside for an abuse of discretion. Rule 53(f)(5).

HN2[] Entitlement as Matter of Law, Appropriateness

Summary judgment is appropriate when the pleadings, the discovery and disclosure materials on file, and any affidavits show that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that a movant is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(c). Genuine disputes are those in which the evidence is such that a reasonable jury could return a verdict for a non-movant. In making this assessment, a court must view the evidence in the light most favorable to the nonmoving party. But while that is the case, a court need not permit a case to go to a jury when the inferences that are drawn from the evidence, and upon which the non-movant relies, are implausible.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > Nonmovant Persuasion & Proof

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > Scintilla Rule

HN3[] Burdens of Proof, Nonmovant Persuasion & Proof

There is no genuine issue of material fact if a nonmoving party fails to make a showing sufficient to establish the existence of an element essential to that party's case and on which the party will bear the burden of proof at trial. Consequently, a court must view the evidence presented through the prism of a movant's substantive evidentiary burden. To respond, the non-moving party may not rely merely on allegations or denials in its own pleadings; rather, its response must set out specific facts showing a genuine issue for trial. If the opposing party does not so respond, summary judgment should, if appropriate, be entered against that party. Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(e)(2). Importantly, the mere existence of a scintilla of evidence in support of the plaintiff's position will be insufficient; there must be evidence on which the jury could reasonably find for the plaintiff.

HN4[] Antitrust & Trade Law

Summary judgment procedure is properly regarded not as a disfavored procedural shortcut, but rather as an integral part of the Federal Rules as a whole, which are designed to secure the just, speedy and inexpensive determination of every action. This is true even in antitrust cases, where motive and intent play leading roles, the proof is largely in the hands of the alleged conspirators, and hostile witnesses thicken the plot.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

HN5[] Sherman Act, Claims

To be sure, while the summary judgment standard of Fed. R. Civ. P. 56 to be applied in an antitrust suit is the same as that for any other action, the application of the rule to antitrust cases is somewhat unique: Antitrust law limits the range of permissible inferences from ambiguous evidence in a case under § 1 of the Sherman Act. Thus, in the antitrust context, conduct as consistent with permissible competition as with illegal conspiracy does not, standing alone, support an inference of antitrust conspiracy. Summary judgment may be especially appropriate in an antitrust case because of the chill antitrust litigation can have on legitimate price competition. Therefore, an antitrust plaintiff must present evidence that tends, when interpreted in a light most favorable to plaintiff, to exclude the possibility that defendant's conduct was consistent with permissible competition as with illegal conduct. Indeed, Matsushita stands for the proposition that summary judgment in the antitrust context is equally as valid as in other types of cases.

Evidence > Admissibility > Expert Witnesses > Daubert Standard

Evidence > Admissibility > Expert Witnesses > Helpfulness

HN6[] Expert Witnesses, Daubert Standard

Fed. R. Evid. 702 governs the admissibility of expert witness testimony and provides: If scientific, technical, or other specialized knowledge will assist the trier of fact to understand the evidence or to determine a fact in issue, a witness qualified as an expert by knowledge, skill, experience, training, or education, may testify thereto in the form of an opinion or otherwise, if (1) the testimony is based upon sufficient facts or data, (2) the testimony is the product of reliable principles and methods, and (3) the witness has applied the principles and methods reliably to the facts of the case. Rule 702. The United States Supreme Court has instructed that Rule 702 compels a district court to act as a gatekeeper in determining the admissibility of expert scientific evidence. This function inherently requires the trial court to conduct an exacting analysis of the foundations of expert opinions to ensure they meet the standards for admissibility under Rule 702.

Evidence > Admissibility > Expert Witnesses > Daubert Standard

Evidence > Admissibility > Expert Witnesses > Helpfulness

Evidence > ... > Testimony > Expert Witnesses > Qualifications

HN7[] Expert Witnesses, Daubert Standard

The Eleventh Circuit employs a rigorous three-part inquiry in assessing whether to admit expert testimony: (1) the expert must be qualified to testify competently regarding the matters he intends to address, (2) the methodology must be reliable under Daubert, and (3) the testimony must assist the trier of fact through the application of scientific, technical, or specialized expertise to understand the evidence or determine a fact in issue. The proponent of the expert testimony bears the burden of proving that the testimony satisfies each prong by a preponderance of the evidence.

Evidence > Admissibility > Expert Witnesses > Daubert Standard

HN8[] Expert Witnesses, Daubert Standard

In Daubert, the United States Supreme Court provided a list of relevant factors to consider in making a determination that an expert's methodology is reliable: (1) whether the theory or technique can be (and has been) tested, (2) whether the theory or technique has been subjected to peer review and publication, (3) in the case of a particular scientific technique, the known or potential rate of error, and (4) whether the theory or technique is generally accepted in the relevant scientific community. Even so, this list is non-exhaustive and district courts have substantial discretion in determining how to test an expert's reliability.

Evidence > Admissibility > Expert Witnesses > Daubert Standard

Evidence > Admissibility > Scientific Evidence > Standards for Admissibility

HN9[] Expert Witnesses, Daubert Standard

Unlike an ordinary witness, an expert is permitted wide latitude to offer opinions, including those that are not based on firsthand knowledge or observation. This relaxation of the usual requirement of firsthand knowledge is premised on an assumption that the expert's opinion will have a reliable basis in the knowledge and experience of his discipline. A trial court assessing the reliability of an expert's evidence must therefore perform a gatekeeping function by conducting a preliminary assessment of whether the reasoning or methodology underlying the testimony is scientifically valid and of whether that reasoning or methodology properly can be applied to the facts in issue. The United States Court of Appeals for the Eleventh Circuit has offered district courts the following general guidance in determining whether to admit scientific evidence under Daubert: Given time, information, and resources, courts may only admit the state of science as it is. Courts are cautioned not to admit speculation, conjecture, or inference that cannot be supported by sound scientific principles. The courtroom is not the place for scientific guesswork, even of the inspired sort. Law lags science; it does not lead it. This same analysis applies to expert testimony in the area of economics.

Civil Procedure > Judicial Officers > Masters > General Overview

Evidence > Admissibility > Expert Witnesses

HN10[] Judicial Officers, Masters

The admissibility of an expert witness' testimony is undoubtedly a procedural matter governed by federal rules. Fed. R. Civ. P. 53(f)(5) provides that unless the appointing order establishes a different standard of review, a court may set aside a master's ruling on a procedural matter only for an abuse of discretion. Further, the subordinate role of a special master means that a trial court's review for abuse of discretion may be more searching than the review that an appellate court makes of a trial court.

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Preclusion of Judgments > Law of the Case

HN11[] Preclusion of Judgments, Law of the Case

The law of the case doctrine operates to create efficiency, finality, and obedience within the judicial system. Under the doctrine, the findings of fact and conclusions of law by an appellate court are generally binding in all subsequent proceedings in the same case in the trial court or on a later appeal. The law of the case doctrine encompasses issues previously decided by necessary implication as well as those decided explicitly.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

HN12[] Sherman Act, Claims

Section 1 of the Sherman Act provides that every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States or with foreign nations, is declared to be illegal. 15 U.S.C.S. § 1. Thus, by its own terms, § 1 condemns every contract, combination, or conspiracy when these concerted actions are in restraint of trade or commerce. Despite the different terminology, there is no magic unique to each term. Courts use the words "contract," "combination," and "conspiracy" interchangeably, and sometimes simply refer instead to an "agreement." In virtually every case, it is not necessary to distinguish these terms from one another: The courts sometimes speak of "combination," sometimes of "conspiracy," or sometimes simply of the non-statutory term "agreement." They usually use these terms interchangeably, and the use of one term does not imply any distinction between them. When there is sufficient concert of action to implicate the purposes of the Sherman Act, the statute is applied without any need or attempt to classify that concerted action as a contract, a combination, or a conspiracy. This is the consistent course of the decisions, and generally it seems correct.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

HN13[] Sherman Act, Claims

The Sherman Act contains a basic distinction between concerted and independent action. The conduct of a single firm is governed by 15 U.S.C.S. § 2 alone and is unlawful only when it threatens actual monopolization. Section 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, in contrast, reaches unreasonable restraints of trade effected by a "contract, combination or conspiracy" between separate entities. It does not reach conduct that is wholly unilateral. Accordingly, while different courts have expressed the elements of a § 1 claim in different (but not necessarily inconsistent) ways, this much is clear: an essential element of any § 1 claim is a showing of concerted action. That is, § 1 applies only to agreements between two or more businesses or persons; it does not cover unilateral conduct.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

HN14[] Sherman Act, Claims

The United States Supreme Court has cautioned lower courts that § 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, does not declare every combination between two persons to be illegal, but only those thereby declared to be illegal. Thus, concerted action within the meaning of § 1 conspiracy cannot be understood as it might be in ordinary parlance, to reach any and all forms of joint activity by two or more persons, but must be construed in a refined manner and defined consonant with its role in the antitrust analysis. To determine whether a given joint activity is an antitrust conspiracy, the Supreme Court has directed courts to explain the logic underlying Congress' decision to exempt unilateral conduct from § 1 scrutiny, and to assess whether that logic similarly excludes the conduct challenged by a plaintiff.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

HN15[] Sherman Act, Claims

While concerted action must be shown, not every agreement that restrains competition will violate the Sherman Act. 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 prohibits only those agreements that unreasonably restrain competition. Therefore, the unreasonableness of the agreement is the second element of a § 1 claim.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

HN16[] Conspiracy to Monopolize, Sherman Act

The logic underlying the 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 ban on collusion between marketplace competitors is that such combinations deprive the marketplace of the independent centers of decisionmaking that competition assumes and demands. That is why § 1 treats concerted activity between multiple actors more strictly than 15 U.S.C.S. § 2 treats single-party conduct in any conspiracy, two or more entities that previously pursued their own interests separately are combining to act as one for their common benefit. This not only reduces the diverse directions in which economic power is aimed but suddenly increases the economic power moving in one particular direction. The danger is obvious. When parties combine (i.e., bring into concert) their resources, rights, or economic power in such a way as to counteract naturally competing interests that would otherwise set them at odds, they are able to avoid market choices that would set them at odds in the asserted market to the detriment of competition and consumers. The core concern of § 1 thus is when competitors cooperate to substitute common action for competition and thereby effect an anticompetitive restraint that could not otherwise be achieved.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Summary Judgment > Evidentiary Considerations

Evidence > Types of Evidence > Circumstantial Evidence

Evidence > Inferences & Presumptions > Inferences

HN17[] Sherman Act, Claims

The threshold requirement of every conspiracy claim, under 15 U.S.C.S. §§ 1 and 2 is an agreement to restrain trade. To prove that such an agreement exists between two or more persons, a plaintiff must demonstrate a unity of purpose or a common design and understanding, or a meeting of minds in an unlawful arrangement. It is only in rare cases that a plaintiff can establish the existence of a conspiracy by showing an explicit agreement; most conspiracies are inferred from the behavior of the alleged conspirators. Antitrust law, however, limits the range of inferences that may be drawn from circumstantial evidence to prove an unlawful conspiracy. To make out a conspiracy, and thus survive a motion for summary judgment, the circumstantial evidence must reasonably tend to exclude the possibility that the alleged conspirators acted independently. This means that conduct as consistent with permissible activity as with illegal conspiracy does not, standing alone, support an inference of antitrust conspiracy. For example, the mere opportunity to conspire among antitrust defendants does not, standing alone, permit the inference of conspiracy. Thus, when the defendant puts forth a plausible, procompetitive explanation for his actions, courts not be quick to infer, from circumstantial evidence, that a violation of the antitrust laws has occurred.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

HN18[] Sherman Act, Claims

A key inquiry in any case brought under 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 is whether the challenged conduct consists of concerted action or of the merely unilateral behavior of separate actors. For an agreement to constitute a violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act, a conscious commitment to a common scheme designed to achieve an unlawful objective must be established.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

HN19[] Sherman Act, Claims

15 U.S.C.S. § 1 only prohibits activity in which multiple parties join their resources, rights, or economic power together in order to achieve an outcome that, but for the concert, would naturally be frustrated by their competing interests by way of profit-maximizing choices.

HN21[] Conspiracy to Monopolize, Sherman Act

The United States Court of Appeals for the Eleventh Circuit made clear that analyzing concerted action is the starting point in assessing a claim under 15 U.S.C.S. § 1: The threshold requirement of every conspiracy claim, under both § 1 and 15 U.S.C.S. § 2, is an agreement to restrain trade. To prove that such an agreement exists between two or more persons, a plaintiff must demonstrate a unity of purpose or a common design and understanding, or a meeting of minds in an unlawful arrangement.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

HN22[] Sherman Act, Claims

Both Supreme Court and Eleventh Circuit case law require a plaintiff relying upon the consequential affects of a contract that does not restrain trade by its own terms to show that the contracting parties shared a common objective to restrain trade in order to establish a violation of 15 U.S.C.S. § 1.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

HN23[] Sherman Act, Claims

Federal antitrust law requires a plaintiff to introduce evidence that tends to exclude the possibility that the defendants acted independently or legitimately.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Elements

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > Monopolization Offenses

HN24[] Conspiracy to Monopolize, Elements

To establish a conspiracy under 15 U.S.C.S. § 2 to monopolize claim, a plaintiff must show: (1) concerted action deliberately entered into with the specific intent of achieving a monopoly; and (2) the commission of at least one overt act in furtherance of the conspiracy. A claim for conspiracy to monopolize does not require a showing of monopoly power.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Elements

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > Monopolization Offenses

HN25[] Conspiracy to Monopolize, Elements

Section 2 of the Sherman Act provides: Every person who shall monopolize, or attempt to monopolize, or combine or conspire with any other person or persons, to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, shall be deemed guilty of a felony. 15 U.S.C.S. § 2. Thus, § 2 makes it unlawful for a defendant to monopolize, to attempt to monopolize, or to conspire to monopolize any part of interstate or foreign trade. This statutory provision covers behavior by a single business entity as well as coordinated action taken by more than one business.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > Monopoly Power

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > Monopolization Offenses

HN26[] Attempts to Monopolize, Elements

A claim of attempted monopolization involves three distinct elements: (1) a defendant has engaged in predatory or anticompetitive conduct with (2) a specific intent to monopolize and (3) a dangerous probability of achieving monopoly power. To have a dangerous probability of successfully monopolizing a market the defendant must be close to achieving monopoly power. Monopoly power is the power to raise prices to supra-competitive levels or the power to exclude competition in the relevant market either by restricting entry of new competitors or by driving existing competitors out of the market. The offense of attempted monopolization requires specific intent on the defendant's part to bring about a monopoly and a dangerous probability of success. Furthermore, like the monopolization offense itself, the attempt must happen in a defined relevant market. The relevant market is defined by both a product and a geographic dimension.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > Monopolization Offenses

HN27[] Actual Monopolization, Claims

Specific intent to monopolize is a necessary element of an offense under 15 U.S.C.S. § 2 of actual monopolization. Monopoly power is a critical element of a § 2 offense of actual monopolization.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > Monopolization Offenses

HN28[] Actual Monopolization, Claims

The offense of actual monopoly under § 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 2, has two elements: (1) the possession of monopoly power in the relevant market and (2) the willful acquisition or maintenance of that power as distinguished from growth or development as a consequence of a superior product, business acumen, or historic accident.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > Monopolization Offenses

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > Monopoly Power

HN29[] Scope, Monopolization Offenses

The first element of the offense of actual monopoly under § 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 2, monopoly power, requires a showing that a defendant has the power to control prices in or to exclude competition from the relevant market. Monopoly power, defined as the power to control price or exclude competition, is measured with reference to a relevant market.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > Monopolization Offenses

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > Relevant Market

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > Monopoly Power

HN30[] Scope, Monopolization Offenses

For purposes of determining monopoly power under 15 U.S.C.S. § 2, in considering what is the relevant market for determining the control of price and competition, no more definite rule can be declared than that commodities reasonably interchangeable by consumers for the same purposes make up that part of the trade or commerce, monopolization of which may be illegal. Factors such as functional interchangeability, responsiveness of the sales of one product to the price changes of the other, and degree of competition from the potential substitute are all relevant to the market inquiry.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Actual Monopolization > Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > Monopolization Offenses

HN31[] Actual Monopolization, Claims

The second element of the offense of actual monopoly under § 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 2, requires evidence of predatory or exclusionary acts or practices that have the effect of preventing or excluding competition within the relevant market. A practice is exclusionary if it harms the competitive process and thereby harms consumers. Harm to one or more competitors will not suffice for a § 2 violation.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > Monopolization Offenses

HN32[] Scope, Monopolization Offenses

A plaintiff bringing a monopolization claim under § 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 2, must define and prove the relevant market.

Evidence > Admissibility > Expert Witnesses > Daubert Standard

HN33[] Expert Witnesses, Daubert Standard

The Daubert inquiry is a flexible one, but the primary focus should be on principles and methodology, not on the conclusions that they generate. A proponent of the testimony does not have the burden of proving that it is scientifically correct, but must establish by a preponderance of the evidence, it is reliable. A court's gatekeeping obligation requires that it evaluate a proposed expert's qualifications and methodology in light of what is necessary to explain a particular subject matter to the jury.

Evidence > Admissibility > Expert Witnesses > Daubert Standard

HN34[] Expert Witnesses, Daubert Standard

The Daubert inquiry requires that a proposed expert's testimony assist the trier of fact, through the application of scientific, technical, or specialized expertise, to understand the evidence or to determine a fact in issue. Thus, even if an expert's testimony were admissible under the first two prongs of the Daubert analysis, it may still be insufficient to create an issue of fact to overcome summary judgment.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > Elements

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > Monopolization Offenses

HN35[] Actual Monopolization, Claims

Where there is no market, there is no monopoly. The offense of monopolization under § 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 2, contains two elements: (1) the possession of monopoly power in the relevant market and (2) the willful acquisition or maintenance of that power as distinguished from growth or development as a consequence of a superior product, business acumen, or historic accident. The offense of attempted monopolization requires specific intent on the defendant's part to bring about a monopoly and a dangerous probability of success. Furthermore, like the monopolization offense itself, the attempt must happen in a defined relevant market. The relevant market is defined by both a product and a geographic dimension. Proof of a (1) relevant product market and (2) relevant geographic market are each essential elements to the attempted monopolization claim.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

Evidence > ... > Testimony > Expert Witnesses > General Overview

HN36[] Regulated Practices, Market Definition

Eleventh Circuit precedent requires an antitrust plaintiff to proffer expert testimony to establish a relevant product market and a relevant geographic market.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Market Definition > Relevant Market > Product Market Definition

HN37[] Relevant Market, Product Market Definition

The United States Court of Appeals for the Eleventh Circuit has noted that any economically meaningful relevant product market definition must take into account evidence of virtually complete supply substitution.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Market Definition > Relevant Market > Geographic Market Definition

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > Relevant Market

HN38[] Sherman Act, Claims

A geographic market is only relevant for monopoly purposes where the evidence shows that consumers within the geographic area cannot realistically turn to outside sellers should prices rise within the defined area. Plaintiff has the burden of showing that its proposed market definition is correct. To state a Sherman Act claim under either 15 U.S.C.S. §§ 1 or 2, the plaintiff bears the burden of proof on the alleged relevant market. A relevant market consists of both a product market and a geographic market.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Market Definition > Relevant Market > Geographic Market Definition

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > Monopoly Power

HN39[] Relevant Market, Geographic Market Definition

A geographic market is only relevant for monopoly purposes where these factors show that consumers within the geographic area cannot realistically turn to outside sellers should prices rise within the defined area. Indeed, some evidence supporting the inference that consumers within the proposed geographic market could not turn to sellers outside the geographic market is necessary to survive summary judgment.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > Elements

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Elements

HN40[] Attempts to Monopolize, Elements

For a plaintiff to establish either an attempted monopolization claim and a conspiracy to monopolize claim under 15 U.S.C.S. § 2, it must establish that there was a dangerous probability that a defendant might have succeeded in its attempt to achieve monopoly power. To have a dangerous probability of successfully monopolizing a market the defendant must be close to achieving monopoly power. Where the alleged monopolist's market share is less than 50% of the market at the time the alleged predation began and throughout the time when it was alleged to have continued, there was no dangerous probability of success as a matter of law. There can be no dangerous probability of success if the defendant was never able to maintain a majority position in the market.

[*1205] MEMORANDUM OPINION

This matter is presently before the court on the Third Report and Recommendation of the Special Master Regarding Summary Judgment on Counts I and III of Gulf States Reorganization Group's Amended Complaint [1] ("Third Report") (Doc. #249), and the Report and Recommendation of the Special Master Regarding the Admissibility of Expert Testimony and Nucor's Motion for Summary Judgment ("Fourth Report") [2] (Doc. #305).

I. Introduction

A. [3] Appointment of the Special Master

In light of the novelty of Plaintiff's theories in this case, [2] and with the full consent of the parties (see Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 53(a)(1)(A)), the court appointed James F. Rill, Esq. as Special Master and referred certain matters - including the motions addressed herein - to him for report and recommendation. (Doc. #181). The parties had jointly proposed Mr. Rill as the best qualified candidate for Special Master. (Doc. #180). Mr. Rill has served as Assistant Attorney General in charge of the U.S. Department of Justice's Antitrust Division and as the Chairman of the ABA's Antitrust Section. (Doc. #180). He is without question one of the leading antitrust lawyers in the United States. The court is indebted to him for his high quality service and excellent work in this case.

B. Procedural History

In 2002, Gulf States Reorganization Group, Inc. ("GSRG" or "Plaintiff") filed suit against Nucor Corporation ("Nucor"), Casey Equipment Corporation ("Casey"), [4] and Gadsden Industrial Park, LLC ("Park") alleging that

[1] The Special Master also issued two other reports: (1) a Report and Recommendation of the Special Master Regarding Summary Judgment on Counts I and III of GSRG's Amended Complaint ("First Report") (Doc. #188) in which he recommended that the court grant summary judgment to Defendants Casey Equipment Corporation and Gadsden Industrial Park, LLC ("Casey/Park"); and (2) a Report and Recommendation of the Special Master ("Second Report") in which he recommended that Plaintiff be permitted to supplement the Rule 56 record in this case but indicated that his recommendation in the First Report would not be changed after consideration of the new evidence. (Doc. #207). However, except to the extent that the recommendations in the Special Master's First and Second Reports affects the court's analysis of the claims against Nucor, those reports are moot. Plaintiff voluntarily dismissed its claims against Casey/Park, leaving Nucor the sole remaining Defendant. (Doc. #209). Accordingly, only those aspects of those Reports that dealt with Nucor's liability are at issue here. And that analysis has been re-adopted by the Special Master in his Third Report. (Doc. #249 at 3).

[2] Although the background and facts of this case are novel, as will be seen below, the elements Plaintiff must establish are well-established and analyzed both in the Special Master's Report and herein.

they conspired to restrain trade and assist Nucor to monopolize the hot rolled coil steel industry. (See Doc. #17). This court first dismissed this case upon Defendants' motion to dismiss; however, on appeal, the Eleventh Circuit found that Plaintiff had pled a cognizable antitrust injury and had standing to bring suit. Gulf States Reorganization Group, Inc. v. Nucor Corp., 466 F.3d 961, 966-68 (11th Cir. 2006).

Upon remand, the court permitted Plaintiff to amend its complaint. (See Doc. #115). GSRG's Amended Complaint alleges three counts. Count I alleges that Casey/Park and Nucor violated Section 1 of the Sherman Act by entering a contract or combination in restraint of trade. (Doc. #115 at ¶¶ 39-42). Count II alleges that Nucor violated Section 2 of the Sherman [*1206] Act by an "attempt to monopolize." (Doc. #115 at ¶¶ 43-45). Count III alleges that Nucor and Casey/Park violated Section 2 of the Sherman Act by a conspiracy to monopolize. (Doc. #115 at ¶¶ 46-48). The First Amended Complaint makes no claim of "actual monopolization" in violation of Section 2 of the Sherman Act. [3]

The Special Master reviewed the record and the briefs submitted by the parties, and entertained oral argument. Thereafter, the Special Master submitted his Reports and Recommendations. (Docs. #249, 305). After intense motions practice in this case, the court conducted a thorough review of the copious materials submitted in support of, and in opposition to, those motions.

The Special Master issued his First Report on Casey/Park's Motion for Summary Judgment recommending summary judgment in favor of Casey/Park. (Doc. #188). Thereafter, GSRG sought to have [8] the Special Master consider supplemental evidence in connection with Casey/Park's Motion. (Doc. #199). The Special Master then re-considered Casey/Park's motion in light of the supplemental evidence, and issued his Second Report and Recommendation affirming that summary judgment was still appropriate on Counts I and III even in light of the additional evidence. [*1207] (Doc. #207). Thereafter, GSRG and Casey/Park resolved all issues between them. (Doc. #208).

[3] This is the case despite GSRG's previous repeated assertions [5] - to this court, the Eleventh Circuit, and the Supreme Court - that Nucor is a monopolist. See, e.g., Opposition to Defendants' Motion for Summary Judgment at 4, Gulf States Reorganization Group, Inc. v. Nucor Corp., No. 02-2600 (N.D. Ala. 2005) ("propounding . . . well established principals [sic] of antitrust law which establish liability where a dominant firm protects its monopoly position (emphasis added)); id. (contending that "end users of hot rolled coil steel [] are being forced to pay a monopoly price" (emphasis added)); id. at 23 (discussing the "social cost[s]" of "protecting the marketplace from the negative effects of abuse of monopoly power" (emphasis added)); Appellant's Corrected Brief at 24, Gulf States Reorganization Group, Inc. v. Nucor Corp., 466 F.3d 961, 965 (11th Cir. 2006), (No. 05-15976) (contending "there is but one producer in the market"); see Respondents' Brief in Opposition to the Petition for Writ of Certiorari at 3, Nucor Corp. v. Gulf States Reorganization Group, Inc., 551 U.S. 1103, 127 S. Ct. 2920, 168 L. Ed. 2d 244 (2007) (No. 06-1383 (arguing that "this case is about suppression of potential competition by a monopolist" (internal quotation marks and brackets omitted) [6] (emphasis added)).

To the contrary, GSRG's original Complaint never asserted any unambiguous claim of actual monopolization under the Sherman Act, Section 2. Nevertheless, GSRG repeatedly argued an "actual monopolization" theory at each prior stage of this litigation. Indeed, the court of appeals, in reversing this court's order granting summary judgment to Defendants, appeared to understand (or perhaps misunderstand) that GSRG's case arose from actual monopolization under Section 2. See Gulf States Reorganization Group, Inc., 466 F.3d at 965 (understanding GSRG to have "alleged that . . . Nucor violated Section 2 of the Sherman Act, prohibiting monopolization"); id. (stating that GSRG "alleges that Nucor enjoys a monopoly in the relevant market"); id. at 969 (Cudahy, J., concurring in part and, perhaps, dissenting in part) (discussing GSRG's allegation that Nucor sought "to protect its 85 percent market share and hence its effective monopoly"). Moreover, the panel (or at least the concurring judge) appears to have based its conclusions about causation and antitrust standing on the premise that Nucor enjoyed a monopoly and therefore caused GSRG's antitrust injury by participating in [7] the court-supervised bankruptcy auction to protect that monopoly. See id. at 969 (Cudahy, J., concurring in part and, perhaps, dissenting in part) (describing the case as "about suppression of potential competition by a monopolist"); id. at 970 (stating that "Nucor and its co-conspirators allegedly took an action having the effect of excluding [GSRG] from the market and maintaining Nucor's monopoly, which injured [GSRG] and is the source of its damages"). In its First Amended Complaint, filed five years after this litigation began, GSRG has now unambiguously abandoned any claim of actual monopolization under the Sherman Act, Section 2.

Remaining to be decided, however, was Nucor's motion for summary judgment (or, rather, Nucor's joinder in Casey/Park's motion). (Docs. #124, 210). On September 29, 2009, the Special Master issued his Third Report and Recommendation recommending that Nucor be awarded summary judgment on Counts I and III, the Section 1 and Section 2 conspiracy claims. (Doc. #249).

The Special Master then considered the following motions: Nucor's motion to exclude the testimony of Robert Crandall (Doc. #261); Nucor's motion to exclude the testimony of Michael Locker (Doc. #172); Nucor's motion to exclude the testimony of John Correnti (Doc. #175); GSRG's motion to exclude the testimony of Andrew Dick (Doc. #235); GSRG's Motion to exclude the testimony of Dr. [9] Seth Kaplan (Doc. #237); and Nucor's motion for summary judgment on all claims (Doc. #269). In his Fourth Report, the Special Master recommended the following: Nucor's motion to exclude the testimony of Robert Crandall (Doc. #261) be denied; Nucor's motion to exclude the testimony of Michael Locker (Doc. #172) be granted; Nucor's motion to exclude the testimony of John Correnti (Doc. #175) be granted; GSRG's motion to exclude the testimony of Andrew Dick (Doc. #235) be granted; GSRG's Motion to exclude the testimony of Dr. Seth Kaplan (Doc. #237) be denied; and that Nucor's Motion for Summary Judgment (Doc. #269) be granted. (Doc. #305).

Having now carefully reviewed and considered de novo all of the materials in the court file, including the Third Report and the Fourth Report, the objections, responses, and replies thereto, and oral argument by the parties on the objections to the Third Report, [4] the court has made its own independent determination that the Third and Fourth Reports of the Special Master are due to be adopted and accepted. The court writes further to address some of Plaintiff's objections.

II. Standard of Review

This case is before the court on objections filed by GSRG as to the Reports filed by the Special Master. HN1[] The court reviews de novo all objections to legal conclusions recommended by the Special Master. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 53(f)(4). A different standard of review applies to the Special Master's decisions regarding procedural matters. Those rulings may only be set aside for an abuse of discretion. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 53(f)(5).

The principal legal issues presented here are the propriety of summary judgment and the admissibility and effect of certain expert witnesses proffered by GSRG.

A. Summary Judgment Standard

HN2[] Summary judgment is appropriate when "the pleadings, the discovery and disclosure materials on file, and any affidavits show that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the movant is entitled to judgment as a matter of law." Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(c). [5] "Genuine disputes are those in which the evidence is such that a reasonable jury could return a verdict [*1208] for the non-movant." Mize v. Jefferson City Bd. of Educ., 93 F.3d 739, 742 (11th Cir. 1996) [11] (quoting Hairston v. Gainesville Sun Publ'g Co., 9 F.3d 913, 918 (11th Cir. 1993)). In making this assessment, the court must view the evidence "in the light most favorable to the nonmoving party."

[4] GSRG also requested oral argument on its objections to the Special Master's Fourth [10] Report, but the court deems further argument unnecessary. Therefore, GSRG's Requests (Docs. #318, 319) are due to be denied.

[5] "As of December 1, 2010, Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 56(a) now contains the summary judgment standard. It reads, in pertinent part, '[t]he court shall grant summary judgment if the movant shows that there is no genuine dispute as to any material fact and the movant is entitled to judgment as a matter of law.'" *Gortemoller v. Int'l Furniture Mktg., Inc., 434 Fed. Appx. 861, 2011 U.S. App. LEXIS 14976, 2011 WL 2899338 at 2 n.2 (11th Cir. July 20, 2011). Because the motions for summary judgment were filed, and the Special Master's Reports and Recommendations were issued, prior [12] to December 2010, we apply the version of the rule effective during that time. *See Gortemoller, 2011 U.S. App. LEXIS 14976, 2011 WL 2899338, at 2 n.2; see also Siggers v. Campbell, 652 F.3d 681, 2011 WL 3134354 n.6 (6th Cir. 2011).

Thomas v. Cooper Lighting, Inc., 506 F.3d 1361, 1363 (11th Cir. 2007) (citing Damon v. Fleming Supermarkets of Fla., Inc., 196 F.3d 1354, 1357 (11th Cir. 1999)). But while that is the case, "[a] court need not permit a case to go to a jury . . . when the inferences that are drawn from the evidence, and upon which the non-movant relies, are 'implausible.'" Mize, 93 F.3d at 743 (quoting Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 592-94, 106 S. Ct. 1348, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538 (1986)).

Alternatively, HN3[] there is no genuine issue of material fact if "the nonmoving party fails to make a showing sufficient to establish the existence of an element essential to that party's case and on which the party will bear the burden of proof at trial." Jones v. Gerwens, 874 F.2d 1534, 1538 (11th Cir. 1989) (citing Celotex Corp. v. Catrett, 477 U.S. 317, 322-24, 106 S. Ct. 2548, 91 L. Ed. 2d 265 (1986)). Consequently, the court "must view the evidence presented through the prism of the [movant's] substantive evidentiary burden." Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc., 477 U.S. 242, 254, 106 S. Ct. 2505, 91 L. Ed. 2d 202 (1986).

To respond, the non-moving party "may not rely merely on allegations or denials in its own pleadings; rather, its response must . . . set out specific facts showing a genuine issue for trial. If the opposing party does not so respond, summary judgment should, if appropriate, be entered against that party." Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(e)(2). Importantly, "[t]he mere existence of a scintilla of evidence in support of the plaintiff's position will be insufficient; [13] there must be evidence on which the jury could reasonably find for the plaintiff." Anderson, 477 U.S. at 250.

Contrary to GSRG's suggestion, [6] Rule 56 is no longer a disfavored procedural shortcut. Celotex Corp., 477 U.S. at 327 (HN4[] "Summary judgment procedure is properly regarded not as a disfavored procedural shortcut, but rather as an integral part of the Federal Rules as a whole, which are designed 'to secure the just, speedy and inexpensive determination of every action.'") (quoting Fed. R. Civ. P. 1). This is true even in antitrust cases, "where motive and intent play leading roles, the proof is largely in the hands of the alleged conspirators, and hostile witnesses thicken the plot." Poller v. Columbia Broadcasting System, Inc., 368 U.S. 464, 473, 82 S. Ct. 486, 7 L. Ed. 2d 458 (1962). See Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co., Ltd. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 106 S. Ct. 1348, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538 (1986); Monsanto Co. v. Spray-Rite Serv. Corp., 465 U.S. 752, 104 S. Ct. 1464, 79 L. Ed. 2d 775 (1984).

The court candidly acknowledges that, historically, summary judgment was disfavored [*1209] in antitrust litigation. For example, in Poller, the Supreme Court concluded that "summary procedures should be used sparingly in complex antitrust litigation where motive and intent play leading roles, the proof is largely in the hands of the alleged conspirators, and hostile witnesses thicken the plot." Id. at 473. However, the cases which indicated that summary judgment is disfavored in antitrust cases have been disavowed.

In 1986, the Supreme Court reversed the denial of summary judgment in a major predatory pricing decision, Matsushita Electric Industrial Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 106 S. Ct. 1348, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538 (1986). "The Supreme Court's reversal was based on its conclusions: 1) that the predatory pricing conspiracy was so economically implausible that the defendants had no motive to engage in it; and 2) that the evidence [15] of an agreement to enter into this conspiracy was indirect and ambiguous." Instructional Systems Development Corp. v. Aetna Casualty & Surety Co., 817 F.2d 639, 646 (10th Cir. 1987). Although Matsushita upheld the traditional view that on summary judgment the inferences to be drawn from the underlying facts must be viewed in the light most favorable to the party opposing the motion, the opinion is important because it held that "antitrust law limits the range of permissible inferences from ambiguous evidence in a § 1 case." Matsushita, 475 U.S. at 588. Also it held that to survive a motion for summary judgment the plaintiff "must present evidence 'that tends to exclude the possibility' that the alleged conspirators acted independently." Id. (quoting Monsanto Co., 465 U.S. at 764).

[6] GSRG has flatly misstated the law in suggesting that antitrust conspiracy cases "are [still] particularly ill-suited to disposition on motions for summary judgment." (Doc. #251 at 28). The Supreme Court's subsequent decisions in Monsanto and Matsushita effectively disavowed the broad language [14] from its 1962 opinion in Poller v. Columbia Broad Sys., Inc., 368 U.S. 464, 82 S. Ct. 486, 7 L. Ed. 2d 458 (1962), on which GSRG relies. See e.g., Wallace v. SMC Pneumatics, Inc., 103 F.3d 1394, 1396 (7th Cir. 1997) ("In antitrust law . . . early decisions pronouncing it a field inapt for summary judgment were later repudiated.").

HN5[] To be sure, while the summary judgment standard of Rule 56 to be applied in an antitrust suit is the same as that for any other action, the application of the rule to antitrust cases is somewhat unique: "[A]ntitrust law limits the range of permissible inferences from ambiguous evidence in a § 1 case . . . conduct as consistent with permissible competition as with illegal conspiracy does not, standing alone, [16] support an inference of antitrust conspiracy." Matsushita, 475 U.S. at 587 (citing Monsanto Co., 465 U.S. at 764); see also Thompson Everett, Inc. v. National Cable Advertising, L.P., 57 F.3d 1317, 1323 (4th Cir. 1995) ("[I]nferences which may be drawn vary from one substantive area of the law to another. . . ."). Thus, in the antitrust context, "conduct as consistent with permissible competition as with illegal conspiracy does not, standing alone, support an inference of antitrust conspiracy." Matsushita, 475 U.S. at 588 (citing Monsanto, 465 U.S. at 764).

"[S]ummary judgment may be especially appropriate in an antitrust case because of the chill antitrust litigation can have on legitimate price competition." McGahee v. Northern Propane Gas Co., 858 F.2d 1487, 1493 (11th Cir. 1988), cert. denied, 490 U.S. 1084, 109 S. Ct. 2110, 104 L. Ed. 2d 670 (1989) (citing Matsushita, 475 U.S. at 595). Therefore, an antitrust plaintiff must present evidence that tends, when interpreted in a light most favorable to plaintiff, to exclude the possibility that defendant's conduct was consistent with permissible competition as with illegal conduct. Id. Indeed, Matsushita stands for the proposition that summary judgment in the antitrust [17] context is equally as valid as in other types of cases.

B. Admissibility of Expert Testimony Standard

HN6[] Federal Rule of Evidence 702 governs the admissibility of expert witness testimony and provides:

> If scientific, technical, or other specialized knowledge will assist the trier of fact to understand the evidence or to determine a fact in issue, a witness qualified [*1210] as an expert by knowledge, skill, experience, training, or education, may testify thereto in the form of an opinion or otherwise, if (1) the testimony is based upon sufficient facts or data, (2) the testimony is the product of reliable principles and methods, and (3) the witness has applied the principles and methods reliably to the facts of the case.

Fed. R. Evid. 702. The Supreme Court has instructed that Rule 702 compels the district court to act as a "gatekeeper" in determining the admissibility of expert scientific evidence. Daubert v. Merrell Dow Pharmaceuticals, Inc., 509 U.S. 579, 589 n.7, 597, 113 S. Ct. 2786, 125 L. Ed. 2d 469 (1993); United States v. Frazier, 387 F.3d 1244, 1260 (11th Cir. 2004) (en banc). "This function 'inherently require[s] the trial court to conduct an exacting analysis' of the foundations of expert opinions to ensure they meet the [18] standards for admissibility under Rule 702." Frazier, 387 F.3d at 1260 (quoting McCorvey v. Baxter Healthcare Corp., 298 F.3d 1253, 1257 (11th Cir. 2002)).

HN7[] The Eleventh Circuit employs a "rigorous three-part inquiry" in assessing whether to admit expert testimony: (1) the expert must be qualified to testify competently regarding the matters he intends to address, (2) the methodology must be reliable under Daubert, and (3) the testimony must assist the trier of fact through the application of scientific, technical, or specialized expertise to understand the evidence or determine a fact in issue. Hendrix ex rel. G.P. v. Evenflo Co., 609 F.3d 1183, 1194 (11th Cir. 2010); accord Frazier, 387 F.3d at 1260. The proponent of the expert testimony bears the burden of proving that the testimony satisfies each prong by a preponderance of the evidence. Hendrix, 609 F.3d at 1194; Frazier, 387 F.3d at 1274.

HN8[] In Daubert the Supreme Court provided a list of relevant factors to consider in making a determination that an expert's methodology was reliable: (1) whether the theory or technique "can be (and has been) tested," (2) "whether the theory or technique has been subjected to peer review and publication," [19] (3) "in the case of a particular scientific technique, . . . the known or potential rate of error," and (4) whether the theory or technique is generally accepted in the relevant scientific community. Daubert, 509 U.S. at 592-94; accord Frazier, 387 F.3d at

HN10[] The admissibility of an expert witness' testimony is undoubtedly a procedural [*1211] matter governed by federal rules. Heath v. Suzuki Motor Corp., 126 F.3d 1391, 1396 (11th Cir. 1997); Wood v. Morbark Indus., Inc., 70 F.3d 1201, 1207 (11th Cir. 1995). Rule 53(f)(5) provides that "[u]nless the appointing order establishes a different standard of review, the court may set aside a master's ruling on a procedural matter only for an abuse of discretion." Fed. R. Civ. P. 53(f)(5). United States v. Douglas, 489 F.3d 1117, 1124 (11th Cir. 2007) [21] (when reviewing a district court's ruling on the admissibility of expert testimony for an abuse of discretion and the circuit court will "defer to the district court's ruling unless it is manifestly erroneous."). Further, "[t]he subordinate role of the [special] master means that the trial court's review for abuse of discretion may be more searching than the review that an appellate court makes of a trial court." Fed. R. Civ. P. 53 Advisory Committee's Note, 2003 amendments; Me. People's Alliance v. Holtrachem Mfg. Co., LLC, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 53908, 2009 WL 1844990, at *2 (D. Me. June 25, 2009).

III. Background

Plaintiff's allegations in this case have previously been set forth by this court (Doc. #96) and summarized by the Eleventh Circuit. Gulf States Reorganization Group, Inc. v. Nucor Corp., 466 F.3d 961 (11th Cir. 2006). "This is a Sherman Act antitrust case, alleging a contract and combination in restraint of trade and an attempt and conspiracy to monopolize the market for hot-rolled coil steel in the Southeastern United States." (Doc. #115). Specifically, GSRG maintains the following claims against Defendant Nucor Corporation in this case: (1) a claim that Nucor violated Section 1 of the Sherman Act [22] by entering into a contract or combination in restraint of trade (Count I); (2) a conspiracy to monopolize claim under Section 2 of the Sherman Act (Count II); and (3) an attempted monopolization claim under Section 2 (Count III).

In his Third Report, the Special Master addressed Nucor's potential liability on Counts I and III, despite Casey/Park's dismissal from the case. (Doc. #249). In that Third Report, the Special Master recommended that summary judgment be granted in favor of Nucor on Counts I and III of the Complaint. (Doc. #249 at 3). The Special Master based this recommendation on his conclusion that the record was devoid of evidence that Casey/Park shared with Nucor a common objective to restrain trade, and that Casey/Park was neither aware of, nor acquiesced in, Nucor's alleged anticompetitive intent. (Doc. #249 at 12). [8]

[7] HN9[] "Unlike an ordinary witness . . . an expert is permitted wide latitude to offer opinions, including those that are not based on firsthand knowledge or observation." Daubert, 509 U.S. at 592. "[T]his relaxation of the usual requirement of firsthand knowledge . . . is premised on an assumption that the expert's opinion will have a reliable basis in the knowledge and experience of his discipline." Id. A trial court assessing the reliability of an expert's evidence must therefore perform a "gatekeeping" function by conducting "a preliminary assessment of whether the reasoning or methodology underlying the testimony is scientifically valid and of whether that reasoning or methodology properly can be applied to the facts in issue." Id. at 592-93. [20] The Eleventh Circuit has offered district courts the following general guidance in determining whether to admit scientific evidence under Daubert:

> Given time, information, and resources, courts may only admit the state of science as it is. Courts are cautioned not to admit speculation, conjecture, or inference that cannot be supported by sound scientific principles. "The courtroom is not the place for scientific guesswork, even of the inspired sort. Law lags science; it does not lead it."

Rider v. Sandoz Pharms. Corp., 295 F.3d 1194, 1202 (11th Cir. 2002) (quoting Rosen v. Ciba-Geigy Corp., 78 F.3d 316, 319 (7th Cir. 1996)). This same analysis applies to expert testimony in the area of economics.

[8] On June 1, 2010, GSRG moved for leave to submit a supplemental filing addressing a new Supreme Court antitrust case, American Needle, Inc. v. National Football League, 130 S.Ct. 2201, 176 L. Ed. 2d 947 (2010). GSRG asserts that American Needle is "directly relevant to the issues raised in the pending Motion for Summary Judgment filed by Nucor." (Doc. #297 at 2). Nucor responded [23] to GSRG's Supplemental Brief by stating that although it had no objection to American Needle being [*1212] In his Fourth Report, the Special Master considered various motions to exclude expert testimony and Nucor's Motion for Summary Judgment on all of Plaintiff's claims. (Doc. #305). The Special Master recommended: (1) that the testimony of Dr. Robert Crandall, GSRG's expert, be allowed; (2) that the testimony of John Correnti and Michael Locker, GSRG's experts, be excluded; (3) that the testimony of Andrew Dick, Nucor's expert, [25] be excluded; (4) testimony of Dr. Seth Kaplan, Nucor's expert should be allowed. (Doc. #305 at 29). Thereafter, considering only the expert testimony he believed properly admitted, including that of GSRG's primary expert, the Special Master recommended that summary judgment be granted in favor of Nucor on all claims. (Doc. #305 at 38-45). The reasons for this recommendation set forth in the Fourth Report are in addition to the grounds that he previously recommended granting summary judgment on Counts I and III in his Third Report. (Doc. #305 at 45).

IV. The Court's Review of the Special Master's Third Report

On December 12, 2007, Casey/Park moved for summary judgment on Counts I and III of GSRG's First Amended Complaint, the Section 1 and Section 2 Conspiracy Claims. (Doc. #118). Before considering the motion, the Special Master afforded the parties the opportunity to present any additional evidence and argument that they wished the Special Master to consider in issuing his report and recommendation. (Doc. #249 at 2). The parties presented oral argument to the Special Master on the motion on November 19, 2008. (Id.) The Special Master issued his First Report and Recommendation on Casey/Park's [26] motion on January 5, 2009 recommending summary judgment on Counts I and III. [9] (Doc. #188).

considered as supplemental authority, GSRG's supplemental brief "misrepresents the issue decided in American Needle." (Doc. #299 at 1). The court agrees with Nucor. The sole question addressed by American Needle was whether the defendants in that case were "capable of engaging in a 'contract, combination . . ., or conspiracy' as defined by Section 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1 . . . ." American Needle, 130 S.Ct. at 2208 (emphasis added). There is no question that Nucor and Casey/Park are separate entities which would be legally capable of conspiring under Section 1. Thus, the holding of American Needle really has no application here.

Nonetheless, some of the analysis employed by the Supreme Court in American Needle reiterates legal principles which support the Special Master's conclusions in this case. For example, "[n]ot every instance of cooperation between two people is a potential 'contract, combination . . ., or conspiracy, in restraint of trade'" and "therefore, an arrangement must embody concerted action in order to be a 'contract, combination . . . or conspiracy' under § 1." [24] Id. at 2208-09 (emphasizing the distinction between an agreement and whether it embodies concerted action). These principles are consistent with and, in fact, support the Special Master's conclusion that the "contract" between Nucor and Casey/Park does not, in and of itself, establish a "contract, combination . . ., or conspiracy, in restraint of trade" under Section 1. "[T]here is not necessarily concerted action simply because more than one legally distinct entity is involved." American Needle, 130 S.Ct. at 2209. As explained at the outset of the opinion in American Needle, "[t]he question [of] whether an arrangement is a contract, combination, or conspiracy is different from and antecedent to the question whether it unreasonably restrains trade." Id. at 2206.

[9] That is, even before he issued his Third Report, the Special Master considered Casey/Park's motion for summary judgment in this case. (Doc. #118). After affording the parties the opportunity to present additional evidence or arguments, and after conducting an in-person meeting (Doc. #188 at 2), the Special Master issued his Report and Recommendation. (Doc. #188). In his Report, the Special Master recommended that summary judgment be granted in favor of Casey/Park both as to GSRG's Section 1 claim (id. at 16-20) and Section 2 conspiracy claim (id. at 20-21). GSRG filed objections and also moved to supplement the Rule 56 record. (Doc. #199). The motion to supplement the record was referred to the Special Master (Doc. #205), and thereafter the Special Master filed another Report and Recommendation. In that Report, the Special Master recommended that GSRG be permitted to supplement the Rule 56 record with a contract between Casey and Zibo Wanji Section Co., Inc. of Shandog, China. (Doc. #207 at 2). Casey/Park objected to the supplementation, and also proffered a different contract, this one between [27] Casey and ACS International. (Id.). GSRG did not challenge that supplementation. (Id.). After permitting supplementation of the record, the Special Master concluded that such supplementation of the record did not alter his recommendation that Casey/Park be granted summary judgment. (Id. at 3-4) ("the Chinese contract does not show that Casey/Park joined with or surrendered its 'resources, rights, or economic power' to Nucor as required for Section 1 claims [Virginia Vermiculite, Ltd. v. Historic Green Springs, Inc., 307 F.3d 277 (4 th Cir. 2002)], nor does the Chinese contract demonstrate that Casey/Park and Nucor had formed 'a conscious commitment to a common scheme designed to achieve an unlawful objective.'" [Monsanto, 465 U.S. at 764.]. Although GSRG argues that the Chinese contract shows that Casey/Park

[*1213] After the Special Master's Second Report and Recommendation, GSRG and Casey/Park resolved all issues between them. (Doc. #208). Remaining to be decided however was Nucor's Motion for Summary Judgment (or, rather, Nucor's joinder in Casey/Park's motion). (Docs # 124 and 210). GSRG briefed the issue of Nucor's potential liability under Counts I and III despite Casey/Park's dismissal, and the parties were afforded the opportunity to argue the issue to the Special Master on July 30, 2009. (Doc. #249 at 3). GSRG argued that Nucor could be held liable under Counts I and III despite Casey/Park's dismissal. GSRG further presented a new theory of liability, i.e., that Nucor could be held liable for Section 1 conspiracy based upon agreements with parties other than Casey/Park. (Doc. #249 at 3). On September 29, 2009, the Special Master issued his Third Report and Recommendation recommending that Nucor be awarded summary judgment on Counts I and III, the Section 1 and Section 2 conspiracy claims.

A. GSRG's Argument That Summary Judgment is Precluded [29] by the Law of the Case Doctrine is Meritless

One of GSRG's objections to the Special Master's Reports on summary judgment is that his recommendations are foreclosed by the law of the case doctrine. In particular, GSRG argues that the Eleventh Circuit's opinion issued prior to remand, Gulf States Reorganization Group, Inc. v. Nucor Corp., 466 F.3d 961 (11th Cir. 2006), cert denied, 551 U.S. 1103, 127 S. Ct. 2920, 168 L. Ed. 2d 244 (2007), previously decided, on the merits, the issues which the Special Master addressed in his Reports. The argument is frivolous.

HN11[] The law of the case doctrine "operates to create efficiency, finality, and obedience within the judicial system." Allapattah Servs., Inc. v. Exxon Corp., 372 F. Supp. 2d 1344, 1363 (S.D. Fla. 2005) (quoting Litman v. Mass. Mut. Life Ins. Co., 825 F.2d 1506, 1511 (11th Cir. 1987)). Under the doctrine, "the findings of fact and conclusions of law by an appellate court are generally binding in all subsequent proceedings in the same case in the trial court or on a later appeal." This That & the Other Gift & Tobacco, Inc. v. Cobb County, 439 F.3d 1275, 1283 (11th Cir. 2006) (quoting Heathcoat v. Potts, 905 F.2d 367, 370 (11th Cir. 1990)).

The law of the case doctrine encompasses [30] issues previously "decided by necessary implication as well as those decided explicitly." Wheeler v. City of Pleasant, 746 F.2d 1437, 1440 (11th Cir. 1984) (quoting Dickinson v. Auto Center Mfg. Co., 733 F.2d 1092, 1098 (5th Cir. 1983)) [10]; [*1214] see also Schiavo v. Schiavo, 403 F.3d 1289, 1291 (11th Cir. 2005) ("The doctrine operates to preclude courts from revisiting issues that were decided explicitly or by necessary implication in a prior appeal.").

The issue addressed by the Eleventh Circuit panel prior to remand was whether GSRG had satisfied the requirement of demonstrating antitrust standing, Gulf States, 466 F.3d at 968, not whether Nucor and Casey/Park engaged in concerted activity that could violate Section 1, conspired to monopolize, or attempted to monopolize. Id. at 967-68. This court's decision, which was reversed by the Eleventh Circuit, concluded that: "(1) The Group lacked Article III standing because it did not show that [31] the defendants had caused its injury; (2) the Group lacked 'antitrust standing' because it failed to demonstrate 'antitrust injury,' that is to say injury of the sort that the antitrust laws are meant to redress; and (3) the defendants' actions could not constitute a violation of the antitrust laws because they increased competition in the bankruptcy auction." Id. at 965. What is abundantly clear, however, is that this court's decision, which was reversed by the Eleventh Circuit, was based on the fact that GSRG's injury was essentially self-inflicted. GSRG had the available cash to make a conforming cash bid to purchase the steel mill assets ("Assets") at issue and chose to make a non-conforming bid, despite knowledge that such a bid would be reaped "supranormal profits" on the deal [Doc. #199 at 3], the agreement cannot reasonably be read to prove that Casey/Park had a stake in whether Nucor would be successful in achieving or maintaining monopoly power in the hot rolled coil market."). [7 P. Areeda & H. Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law, ¶ 1474(a) (2007)]. The court fully agrees with both components of the Special Master's [28] recommendation: (1) it is appropriate to supplement the record, but (2) that supplemented Rule 56 evidence does not preclude summary judgment in this case.

[10] In Bonner v. City of Prichard, 661 F.2d 1206, 1209 (11th Cir. 1981) (en banc), the Eleventh Circuit Court of Appeals adopted as binding precedent all decisions of the former Fifth Circuit handed down prior to the close of business on September 30, 1981.

rejected. The bankruptcy trustee even gave GSRG additional time to make a conforming bid. This court's prior decision was issued at an early stage in the litigation after only limited discovery as to most of the factual issues that were eventually presented to the Special Master to consider.

The Eleventh Circuit panel considered only the issues of causality and antitrust injury. The issues addressed by the Special Master were not before the Eleventh [32] Circuit - directly or indirectly. Indeed, as the Eleventh Circuit opinion made absolutely clear: "Our intention is to express no opinion at all with respect to the merits . . . ." Id. at 969, n.7; id. at 967 ("We decline to address the merits"). Notably, the Eleventh Circuit states that its opinion is based on "assertions" made by GSRG that "if it can prove" might establish that the effect of its conduct lessened competition. Id. at 967. Specifically, the Eleventh Circuit's opinion [11] states as follows:

> The Group asserts the following: (1) Nucor is by far the dominant producer in the relevant market, enjoying a market share of 85%; (2) the Group wanted to and had the ability both to purchase the Assets and to compete with Nucor in the relevant market; (3) the Assets would constitute substantially all of the assets necessary for a potential entrant into the market to begin operations and compete; (4) Nucor was thus obliged not to bid against the Group, the preferred purchaser for the Assets; (5) Appellees violated the merger laws by having Nucor participate in the bidding by funding Park's bid; and (6) Appellees' conduct was a proximate cause of the Group's failure to purchase the assets [33] and its exclusion from the relevant market.
> The Group contends that, if it can prove these assertions, this would mean that Nucor maintained its purported near-monopoly and denied consumers in the relevant market the benefit of the pressure to lower prices that would likely come about if the Group became a viable competitor, thus substantially lessening [*1215] competition and violating the antitrust laws.
> We decline to address the merits; that is, we decline to address whether the foregoing contentions of the Group would in fact substantially lessen competition in the relevant market and violate the antitrust laws. However, we conclude that the district court erred in concluding that the Group had failed to show antitrust standing.

Id. at 967 (emphasis added and footnote omitted). [12]

And just to drive the point home, the Eleventh Circuit's opinion included footnote 4 which states:

> We decline to address the merits because the district court has not addressed this issue as it is properly framed, and because resolution of the issue will require further development of the record and further fact-finding with respect to whether the challenged acquisition had the effect of substantially lessening competition in the relevant market. Thus, we vacate the district court's holding on the merits.

Id. at 968, n. 4 (emphasis added). [13]

[11] Throughout its opinion, the panel referred to GSRG as "the Group."

[12] Legally and logically, the court of appeals did not - and could not - hold that an exclusion of GSRG, standing alone, was "in restraint of trade." As the Special Master pointed out in his First Report (Doc. #188 at 12), the exact same "exclusion" could have arisen if Casey/Park and anyone other than Nucor had purchased the assets, but such purchase [34] by anyone other than an alleged monopolist would not have caused the injury to competition necessary for an antitrust violation.

[13] As the panel also stated:

> Our intention is to express no opinion at all with respect to the merits-i.e., whether the actions of appellees substantially lessened competition in the relevant market and violated the antitrust laws. See note 4, supra. Thus, we express no opinion with respect to the remarks in Judge Cudahy's separate opinion, except to say that we agree with Judge Cudahy that if the Group proves on remand that "Nucor substantially lessened competition in the relevant market" for hot rolled coil, the Group will [35] have proved a violation of the antitrust laws. However, we express no opinion on that issue; we prefer for the district court to conduct the appropriate analysis in the first instance and on a more fully developed record. Nor do we GSRG's "law of the case" argument assumes that the Eleventh Circuit's decision implicitly decided issues which the Court of Appeals, specifically and by the very terms of its opinion, did not address. Therefore, GSRG's "law of the case" argument is off base.

B. Count I - GSRG's Sherman Act Section 1 Claim

1. Legal Standards

HN12[] Section 1 of the Sherman Act provides as follows:

> Every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States or with foreign nations, is declared to be illegal.

15 U.S.C. § 1. Thus, by its own terms, Section 1 condemns every contract, combination, or conspiracy when these concerted actions are "in [36] restraint of trade or commerce." GSRG frequently uses the words "contract" and "combination" instead of "conspiracy." However, as the Eleventh Circuit has noted that "[d]espite the different terminology, there is no magic unique to each term. Courts use the words 'contract,' 'combination,' and 'conspiracy' interchangeably, and sometimes simply refer instead to an 'agreement.'" Tidmore Oil Co. v. BP Oil Co./Gulf Products Div., 932 F.2d 1384, 1388 [*1216] (11th Cir. 1991) (citing 6P. Areeda, ANTITRUST LAW ¶ 1403 (1978)). Moreover, in his treatise, Professor Areeda notes that in virtually every case, it is not necessary to distinguish these terms from one another:

> The courts sometimes speak of "combination," sometimes of "conspiracy," or sometimes simply of the nontstatutory term "agreement." They [37] usually use these terms interchangeably, and the use of one term does not imply any distinction between them. When there is sufficient concert of action to implicate the purposes of the Sherman Act, the statute is applied without any need or attempt to classify that concerted action as a contract, a combination, or a conspiracy. This is the consistent course of the decisions, and generally it seems correct.

6 P Areeda & H. Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law, ("Areeda") ¶1403 at 20 (3d ed. 2010) (citing Bogosian v. Gulf Oil Corp., 561 F.2d 434, 445 (3d Cir. 1997), cert. emph typestyle="it">denied, 434 U.S. 1086, 98 S. Ct. 1280, 55 L. Ed. 2d 791 (1978) ("We perceive no distinction between the terms combination and conspiracy. . . .")).

To be sure, the Sherman Act distinguishes unilateral from concerted action. [14] HN13[] The Sherman Act contains a "basic distinction between concerted and independent action . . . The conduct of a single firm is governed by § 2 alone and is unlawful only when it threatens actual monopolization . . . Section 1 of the Sherman Act, in contrast, reaches unreasonable restraints of trade effected by a 'contract, combination . . . or conspiracy' between separate entities. It does not reach conduct that is 'wholly [38] unilateral.'" Copperweld Corp., 467 U.S. at 767-68 (citations and footnote omitted). Accordingly, while different courts have expressed the elements of a Section 1 claim in different (but not necessarily inconsistent) ways, [15] this much is clear: an essential element of any Section 1 claim > intend to express an opinion on or preempt the district court's discretion with respect to the nature of the appropriate course of action on remand, e.g., immediate trial or further summary judgment proceedings. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(d).

Id. at 969, n. 7 (emphasis added).

[14] 7 [40] Areeda at ¶ 1474 at 307. Unilateral action is "unlawful under the Sherman Act when anti competitive conduct is accompanied by monopoly power or its prospect." Id. at 307-08.

[15] For example, the Special Master defined the elements as follows:

> Thus, the elements of a Section 1 claim are widely recognized to be (i) the existence of a contract, combination, or conspiracy among two or more separate entities that (ii) unreasonably restrains trade and (iii) affects interstate or foreign commerce.

is a showing of concerted action. That is, Section 1 applies only to agreements between two or more businesses or persons; it does not cover unilateral conduct. Fisher v. City of Berkeley, 475 U.S. 260, 266, 106 S. Ct. 1045, 89 L. Ed. 2d 206 (1986) ("Even where a single firm's restraints directly affect prices and have the same economic effect as concerted action might have, there can be no liability under § 1 in the absence of agreement."). [16] See also Monsanto Co., 465 U.S. at 761 (noting that it is fundamental that a plaintiff establish an agreement between two or more persons to restrain trade; unilateral conduct is not prohibited by § 1); American Key Corp. v. Cole, 762 F.2d 1569, 1579 n. 8 (11th Cir. 1985) ("conspiracy is an essential element of all Section 1 violations"); Todorov v. DCH [*1217] Healthcare Authority, 921 F.2d 1438, 1455 (11th Cir. 1991) ("Liability will only attach to agreements designed unreasonably to restrain trade [39] in, or affecting, interstate commerce; thus, before analyzing the reasonableness of any alleged restraint on trade, courts must first ensure that an agreement to restrain trade exists."). To be sure, HN14[] the Supreme Court has cautioned lower courts that Section 1 "does not declare every combination between two 'persons' to be illegal," but only those "'hereby declared to be illegal.'" Copperweld Corp., 467 U.S. at 769 n.15. Thus, concerted action within the meaning of Section 1 conspiracy "cannot be understood as it might be in ordinary parlance, to reach any and all forms of joint activity by two or more persons," Virginia Vermiculite, Ltd. v. Historic Green Springs, 307 F.3d 277 (4th Cir. 2002), cert. denied, 538 U.S. 998, 123 S. Ct. 1900, 155 L. Ed. 2d 824 (2003), but "must be construed in a [] refined manner" and "defined consonant with its role in the antitrust analysis." Id. at 281-82. To determine whether a given joint activity is an antitrust conspiracy, the Supreme Court has directed courts to "explain the logic underlying Congress' decision to exempt unilateral conduct from [Section] 1 scrutiny, and to assess whether that logic similarly excludes the conduct" challenged by the plaintiff. Copperweld, 467 U.S. at 776.

HN16[] The "logic" underlying the Section 1 ban on collusion between marketplace competitors is that such combinations "deprive[] the marketplace of the independent centers of decisionmaking that competition assumes and demands." Id. at 768-69. That is why Section 1 treats concerted [41] activity between multiple actors "more strictly" than Section 2 treats single-party conduct - "[i]n any conspiracy, two or more entities that previously pursued their own interests separately are combining to act as one for their common benefit. This not only reduces the diverse directions in which economic power is aimed but suddenly increases the economic power moving in one particular direction." Id. at 768-69. The danger is obvious. When "parties combine (i.e., bring into concert) their resources, rights, or economic power in such a way as to counteract naturally competing interests that would otherwise set them at odds," Virginia Vermiculite, 307 F.3d at 282, they are able "to avoid . . . market choices that would set them at odds" in the asserted market, id. at 283 n.*, to the detriment of competition and consumers. The "core concern" of Section 1 thus is when "competitors cooperate to substitute common action for competition and thereby effect an anticompetitive restraint that could not otherwise be achieved." Areeda, ¶ 1402a3, at 10.

Thus, for example, in Virginia Vermiculite, a non-profit historic preservation entity, which was the donee of a gift deed of land containing valuable [42] vermiculite deposits, was the second party that allegedly "conspired" with another defendant that operated in the vermiculite market. 307 F.3d at 279-80. Judge Luttig, writing for the Fourth Circuit, held that such joint action did not satisfy the "concerted activity" requirement under Section 1, because, "[f]irst and foremost, [the donee's] receipt of the gift did not reflect a merging of the two defendants' rights, resources, or economic power." Id. at 283. The court concluded that the mere act of accepting the donation did not create the concerted action required to support a Section1 claim, because no evidence was presented that the organization - as opposed to the monopolist - had "exercised any form of right, resource, or economic power" of its own to implement the monopolist's allegedly anticompetitive scheme. In so holding, the court "reaffirm[ed] what was made clear by Copperweld, that concerted activity susceptible to sanction by section 1 is activity in which multiple parties join [*1218] their resources, rights, or economic power together in order to achieve an outcome that, but for the concert, would naturally be frustrated by their competing interests (by way of profit-maximizing [43] choices)."

(Doc. #188 at 3 (footnote omitted)).

[16] However, HN15[] while concerted action must be shown, not every agreement that restrains competition will violate the Sherman Act. The Supreme Court long ago determined that Section 1 prohibits only those agreements that unreasonably restrain competition, Standard Oil Co. v. United States, 221 U.S. 1, 58-64, 31 S. Ct. 502, 55 L. Ed. 619 (1911); therefore, the unreasonableness of the agreement is the second element of a Section 1 claim.

Id. at 282; see Copperweld, 467 U.S. at 769. In such circumstances there is no basis for antitrust conspiracy liability. Id.; see also Golden v. Kentile Floors, Inc., 475 F.2d 288, 290-91 (5th Cir. 1973) ("Supreme Court precedents make clear that participation in a combination is illegal only when, at the minimum, it manifestly results from the family of procompetitive or anticompetitive objectives related to the relevant market."). Here, just as in Virginia Vermiculite, Ltd., there is simply no showing that "the parties combine[d] (i.e., [brought] into concert) their resources, rights, or economic power in such a way as to counteract naturally competing interests that would otherwise set them at odds . . . ." Virginia Vermiculite, Ltd., 307 F. 3d at 282.

The clear prerequisites to avoiding summary judgment in antitrust conspiracy cases have been established by the Supreme Court and consistently applied by our circuit court. See Matsushita, 475 U.S. at 588 ("conduct as consistent with permissible competition as with illegal conspiracy does not, standing alone, support an inference of antitrust conspiracy"); Monsanto, 465 U.S. at 764 ("the antitrust plaintiff should present [44] direct or circumstantial evidence that reasonably tends to prove that [the alleged conspirators] 'had a conscious commitment to a common scheme designed to achieve an unlawful objective'") (quoting Edward J. Sweeney, 637 F.2d at 111).

These standards were summarized by the Eleventh Circuit in Seagood Trading Corp.:

> HN17[] The threshold requirement of every conspiracy claim, under both Section 1 and Section 2, is an agreement to restrain trade. To prove that such an agreement exists between two or more persons, a plaintiff must demonstrate "a unity of purpose or a common design and understanding, or a meeting of minds in an unlawful arrangement." American Tobacco Co. v. United States, 328 U.S. 781, 810, 66 S. Ct. 1125, 90 L. Ed. 1575 (1946). We recognize that it is only in rare cases that a plaintiff can establish the existence of a conspiracy by showing an explicit agreement; most conspiracies are inferred from the behavior of the alleged conspirators. DeLong Equip. Co. v. Washington Mills Abrasive Co., 887 F.2d 1499, 1515 (11th Cir. 1989), cert. denied, 494 U.S. 1081, 110 S. Ct. 1813, 108 L. Ed. 2d 943 (1990). Antitrust law, however, limits the range of inferences that may be drawn from circumstantial evidence to prove an unlawful conspiracy. Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 588, 106 S. Ct. 1348, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538 (1986). [45] To make out a conspiracy, and thus survive a motion for summary judgment, the circumstantial evidence must reasonably "tend[ ] to exclude the possibility" that the alleged conspirators acted independently. Monsanto Co. v. Spray-Rite Serv. Corp., 465 U.S. 752, 764, 104 S. Ct. 1464, 79 L. Ed. 2d 775 (1984). This means that "conduct as consistent with permissible [activity] as with illegal conspiracy does not, standing alone, support an inference of antitrust conspiracy." Matsushita, 475 U.S. at 588. For example, the mere opportunity to conspire among antitrust defendants does not, standing alone, permit the inference of conspiracy. Bolt v. Halifax Hosp. Medical Center, 891 F.2d 810, 827 (11th Cir. 1990), cert. denied, 495 U.S. 924, 110 S. Ct. 1960, 109 L. Ed. 2d 322 (1990). Thus, when the defendant puts forth a plausible, procompetitive [*1219] explanation for his actions, we will not be quick to infer, from circumstantial evidence, that a violation of the antitrust laws has occurred. Todorov v. DCH Healthcare Auth., 921 F.2d 1438, 1456 (11th Cir. 1991).

Seagood Trading Corp. v. Jerrico, Inc., 924 F.2d 1555, 1573-74 (11th Cir. 1991) (parallel citations omitted). See also U.S. Anchor, 7 F.3d at 1002 ("Federal antitrust law requires a plaintiff to introduce evidence [46] that tends to exclude the possibility that the defendants acted independently or legitimately."); Todorov, 921 F.2d at 1456 ("Thus, when the defendant puts forth a plausible, procompetitive explanation for his actions, we will not be quick to infer, from circumstantial evidence, that a violation of the antitrust laws has occurred; the plaintiff must produce more probative evidence that the law has been violated."); Bolt, 891 F. 2d at 819 ("When relying on circumstantial evidence to prove the existence of a conspiracy, a plaintiff must first show a non-legitimate motive for entering into such a conspiracy.") These are precisely the evidentiary standards applied by the Special Master here. (See Doc. #188 at 4-5, 16-19). Thus, the first element of a Section 1 claim is proof of an agreement to restrain trade, and significant probative evidence of a conspiracy is an essential element of all Section 1 violations. First National Bank v. Cities Service Co., 391 U.S. at 290.

2. Analysis of GSRG's Conspiracy Claim

As noted above, HN18[] "[a] key inquiry in any case brought under Section 1 is whether the challenged conduct consists of concerted action or of the merely unilateral behavior of separate actors [47] . . ." William C. Holmes, Antitrust Law Handbook § 2:2 (2008-2009 Edition). "For an agreement to constitute a violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act, a 'conscious commitment to a common scheme designed to achieve an unlawful objective' must be established." Toscano v. Professional Golfers Association, 258 F.3d 978, 983 (9th Cir. 2001) (quoting Monsanto, 465 U.S. at 764). As the Special Master aptly noted "[t]he facts of this case present the infrequent, but not unprecedented, question of whether a company's agent [here, Casey/Park] [17] should be held liable for Section 1 conspiracy where the agent had some role in facilitating the restraint." [18] (Doc. #188 at 5). The Areeda treatise draws a distinction between "pawns" and "principal actors" due to the pawn's "subordinate role in performing a discrete, designated task at the direction of [its] principal." 7 Areeda ¶ 1474 at 308. As is the case here with Casey/Park, "[t]he pawn is not a competitor whose rivalry is being coordinated. Nor is the pawn a marketplace actor whose . . . behavior is being constrained. Rather, the pawn is relevant [*1220] to antitrust policy only because it assists the principal actor's marketplace behavior." Id. The [48] Areeda treatise also explains why findings of pawn liability under Section 1 are rare.

> In our economy sales through brokers or other intermediaries are ubiquitous, and they are not complicity in vertical restraints simply because they were employed in a transaction later challenged as anticompetitive.

Id. at ¶ 1474(c), p. 317. [19]

Simply put, GSRG's claim that Casey/Park conspired with Nucor does not trigger the "core concern" addressed by Sherman Act Section 1. That is the case because Casey/Park and Nucor do not compete with each other and Casey/Park lacks any economic interest in the state of competition in the relevant market. The Special Master correctly determined that HN19[] Section 1 only prohibits "activity in which [50] multiple parties join their resources, rights, or economic power together in order to achieve an outcome that, but for the concert, would naturally be frustrated by their competing interests (by way of profit-maximizing choices)." [20] (Doc. #188 at 7, quoting Virginia Vermiculite Ltd., 307 F.3d at 282). GSRG has expressly admitted that neither Casey nor Park have ever had an economic interest in any market for the sale of hot rolled coil steel or in the state of competition in any

---

[17] Again, although Casey/Park have resolved their differences with GSRG, the question of whether they can be liable under Section 1 is still at the forefront. This is the case because Plaintiff's theory for holding Nucor liable under Section 1 is the claim that Nucor and Casey/Park conspired with one another.SE

[18] Contrary to GSRG's assertion, the Special Master's legal analysis is plainly not misdirected advocacy expounding on "why . . . 'pawns' are not liable for their conduct." (See Doc. #190 at 23-24). What GSRG misunderstands (or perhaps fails to acknowledge) is that the Special Master's "pawn liability" analysis is simply another way to analyze the courts' respective decisions in Copperweld and Virginia Vermiculite. (Doc. #188 at 5-6) (citing 7 P. Areeda, ANTITRUST LAW, ¶1474 (2007)). The key point is this - if GSRG's analysis is correct, Section 1 liability [49] would potentially attach to a broad range of ancillary service providers - bankers, lenders, lawyers, and accountants to mention a few - who lack the requisite competitive interest and stake in the relevant market and who do not have any conscious commitment to achieve the alleged restraint of trade in that market.

[19] To be clear, while Areeda considers that an essential element of proving pawn liability is a showing that the pawn intended to restrain trade, id. at ¶ 1474, p. 308, the Special Master recognized that this requirement is inconsistent with Eleventh Circuit precedent. (Doc. #188 at 6, n.31). If this court were writing on a clean slate, it would conclude Areeda has the better reasoned position. However, the Eleventh Circuit's case law is clear and the Special Master applied it faithfully.

[20] GSRG's [52] objections do not challenge the Special Master's determination that GSRG failed to provide substantial evidence that Nucor and Casey/Park ever "join[ed] their resources, rights, or economic power together in order to achieve an outcome that, but for the concert, would naturally be frustrated by their competing interests (by way of profit-maximizing choices)." (Doc. #249 at 12, quoting Virginia Vermiculite Ltd., 307 F.3d at 282). This requisite combination of rights, resources or economic power can only occur when the combination "diminshe[s] competing interests of the two entities." (Doc. #188 at 8, quoting Virginia Vermiculite Ltd., 307 F.3d at 283). The Special Master restated this principle somewhat differently: concerted activity is unlawful under Section 1 if it "deprives the marketplace of the independent centers of decision-making that competition assumes and demands." First Report at 6 (quoting Copperweld Corp., 467 U.S. at 769).

such market. [21] (Doc. #120 ¶¶ 3-15). And notwithstanding GSRG's strained arguments [22] that Casey contributed "resources" in the transaction with Nucor (Doc. #190 at 6, 16), there is no evidence that Casey or Park ever acted in a way that was inconsistent with their respective usual business activities or contributed resources that reflected any economic power or other interest in the purported relevant market. HN20[] "[T]he Sherman Act does not prohibit unreasonable [*1221] restraints of trade as such — but only restraints effected by a contract, combination, or conspiracy . . . ." Copperweld Corp., 467 U.S. at 775. The Special Master properly held that part of the proof of the "contract, combination, or conspiracy" requires [51] proof of a "conscious commitment to a common scheme designed to achieve an unlawful objective." Monsanto Co., 465 U.S. at 764. Under the circumstances of this case, the Special Master properly concluded that this required some showing of Casey/Park's objective, separate and apart from the fact of entering into the facially neutral contract with Nucor. Eleventh Circuit precedent is in agreement, despite GSRG's attempts to distinguish the relevant cases. See U.S. Anchor Mfg.,7 F.3d at 1002; Seagood Trading Corp., 924 F.2d at 1573-74. In both of these cases, evidence of written agreements between the alleged conspirators was insufficient to obviate the need for some proof of an objective to restrain trade on the part of the alleged pawn or subordinate. The same is true here as to Casey/Park's objective. As the Third Circuit explained in Fineman v. Armstrong World Industries, Inc., 980 F.2d 171, 212 (3d Cir. 1992), "the emphasis is upon the participant's 'commitment to [the] scheme [which is] designed to achieve an unlawful purpose' which is crucial." Thus, the Special Master properly recommended summary judgment based on the lack of proof of Casey/Park's "commitment to the scheme."

The court concludes that the Special Master applied the proper standards in assessing summary judgment, requirements that are firmly established by controlling Supreme Court and Eleventh Circuit precedent, and which call upon GSRG to present evidence (1) that tends to exclude the possibility that the alleged unlawful conduct of Casey and Park was the result of legitimate business activity rather than an unlawful conspiracy and (2) that demonstrates that those companies made a conscious commitment to a common scheme designed to achieve an unlawful objective. See, e.g., Matsushita, 475 U.S. at 588; [54] Seagood Trading, 924 F.2d at 1573-74.

Perhaps sensing the difficulty it would have in meeting the requirements of Monsanto and Matsushita, GSRG makes the astounding argument that the written contract between Nucor and Casey/Park is itself direct evidence of concerted conduct causing anticompetitive harm. [23] (See Doc. #255 at 4-5). The Special Master rejected that

[21] The claim that Nucor exploited its otherwise routine business arrangement with Casey/Park to effect an anticompetitive result - in a market in which Casey did not participate - simply does not transform that ordinary business arrangement into an antitrust [53] conspiracy.

[22] It is not surprising, therefore, that GSRG has not cited to a single case upholding a Section 1 claim based on an agreement between an agent (i.e., a pawn) who does not participate in or have any economic interest in the state of competition in the relevant market and a single principal that operates in that market. Extending Section 1 under circumstances like this to parties outside the relevant market would dramatically alter the scope of the antitrust laws by "presag[ing] liability for a host of servicing agents only fortuitously connected with Sherman Act defendants." Golden, 475 F.2d at 290.

[23] The former Fifth Circuit noted over thirty years ago the infrequency of an antitrust case with direct evidence:

> [A] major factual question in this case is whether there was a conspiracy. Even a successful antitrust plaintiff will seldom be able to offer a direct evidence of a conspiracy and such evidence is not a requirement. See, e.g., Norfolk Monument Co. v. Woodlawn Memorial Gardens, Inc., 394 U.S. 700, 703-04, 89 S. Ct. 1391, 22 L. Ed. 2d 658 (1969). However, to survive a motion for summary judgment the evidence must suggest reasonable inferences of conspiracy. First National Bank of Arizona v. Cities Service Co., 391 U.S. 253, 266-70, 88 S. Ct. 1575, 20 L. Ed. 2d 569 (1968); American Telephone & Telegraph Co. v. Delta Communications Corp., 590 F.2d 100, 102 (5th Cir. 1979), [55] cert. denied, 444 U.S. 926, 100 S. Ct. 265, 62 L. Ed. 2d 182 (1979). "Rarely, if ever, can a plaintiff point to a 'smoking gun' in (conspiracy) cases such as this. Yet, a plaintiff must convince the court that it is reasonable to infer the existence of the gun from the facts shown." Aladdin Oil Co. v. Texaco, Inc., 603 F.2d 1107, 1117 (5th Cir. 1979).

General Chemicals, Inc. v. Exxon Chemical, 625 F.2d 1231, 1233 (5th Cir. 1980).

argument and this court similarly finds that it is off the mark. [24] That is, the [*1222] court concludes that the contract at issue does not in itself restrain trade.

Again, in Seagood Trading, HN21[] the Eleventh Circuit made clear that analyzing concerted action is the starting point in assessing a Section 1 claim:

> The threshold requirement of every conspiracy claim, under both Section 1 and Section 2, is an agreement to restrain trade. To prove that such an agreement exists between two or more persons, a plaintiff must demonstrate "a unity of purpose or a common design and understanding, or a meeting of minds in an unlawful arrangement."

924 F.2d at 1573 (emphasis added) (quoting American Tobacco Co. v. United States, 328 U.S. 781, 810, 66 S. Ct. 1125, 90 L. Ed. 1575 (1946)).

As GSRG has indicated in its briefing, "[t]he primary legal issue in this case . . . concerns how the requirement [57] of proof of a common 'objective' should be applied" in the context of this case. [25] (Doc. #251 at 8). Plaintiff argues that the objective of the contract [26] between Nucor and Casey/Park was anticompetitive, i.e., to exclude GSRG from the hot rolled steel coil market. (Id. at 8, 9). More specifically, GSRG argues that "the apparent objective of the Nucor-Casey contract was dismantling and export [*1223] of the former Gulf States Steel plant. Where the objective of a contract is the elimination of nascent competition in the relevant market, Section 1 is properly invoked." (Id. at 10). And it is that passage from GSRG's written argument that demonstrates the critical flaw in its argument on this point. That is, GSRG has made a leap in logic that is simply not supported by the record because the contract's purpose is to purchase goods, not eliminate competition or restrain trade.

[24] Not only is the contract between Casey/Park not direct evidence of a Section 1 violation, for the reasons already explained, it does not provide "circumstantial" evidence of Casey's conscious commitment to monopolize the alleged relevant hot rolled coil steel market. GSRG's contention otherwise cannot withstand analysis under the well-established antitrust summary judgment standard that circumstantial evidence "must be strong in order to survive summary judgment, because 'antitrust law limits the range of permissible inferences from ambiguous evidence in a § 1 case,'" Tunica Web Advertising v. Tunica Casino Operators Ass'n, Inc., 496 F.3d 403, 409 (5th Cir. 2007) (quoting Matsushita, 475 U.S. at 588 (emphasis added)). The key point here is that "conduct as consistent [56] with permissible competition as with illegal conspiracy does not, standing alone, support an inference of antitrust conspiracy." Matsushita, 475 U.S. at 588 (citing Monsanto, 465 U.S. at 764). Imposing Section 1 liability on the basis of conduct that is "consistent with conspiracy, but just as much in line with a wide swath of rational and competitive business strategy," Bell Atlantic Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 554, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007), would "often [] deter procompetitive conduct," Matsushita, 475 U.S. at 593.

[25] Plaintiff argues that the context of this case involves an "anticompetitive acquisition which is accomplished by means of an express, written contract with a third party." (Doc. #251 at 8). Plaintiff's argument is off the mark. And not surprisingly, GSRG has offered no precedent or authority whatsoever to support its [58] position that Section 1 criminal and treble damages liability may be automatically imposed on ancillary service providers that have no knowledge, stake or interest regarding another party's alleged anticompetitive objective.

[26] GSRG's lengthy analysis (Doc. #251 at 11-13) of the Third Circuit's decision in Fineman v. Armstrong World Indus., Inc., 980 F.2d 171 (3d Cir. 1992), misstates both the holding and the facts of that case. As the Special Master correctly noted in his First Report, Fineman stands for the proposition that, in order to be liable under Section 1, "co-conspirators need not share the same motive for the restraint of trade so long as they both share the objective to restrain trade." (Doc. #188 at 14 (original emphasis); accord Doc. #249 at 9). Indeed, Fineman expressly confirms the Special Master's discussion of "objective" - as opposed to motive and intent. See Fineman, 980 F.2d at 212 (although motives may differ, a Section 1 claim requires proof that alleged conspirators must share a "conscious commitment to a common scheme designed to achieve an unlawful objective."). In this manner, the Special Master's analysis is wholly consistent with Eleventh Circuit law, and [59] contrary to GSRG's assertions, the Fineman opinion also confirms the Special Master's ruling that: "At a minimum, a determination of a common objective to restrain trade would require the Court to find that the subordinate party has knowledge of the principal party's anticompetitive goal and acquiesce in its realization." (Doc. #249 at 10 (emphasis added)).

In other words, the contract's purpose was to define the relationship between Nucor and Casey regarding the acquisition of the steel mill assets, and the terms under which that asset acquisition would take place. That was the objective of the contract - the purchase of the steel mill assets. Nucor may well have had an ulterior objective in entering the contract - to exclude GSRG from the market. But there is nothing in the contract, its terms, or the circumstances of its agreement that indicates (much less presents substantial evidence that) Casey's objective was anything other than the acquisition of steel assets for resale. [27]

Obviously there is no requirement that GSRG establish "an intent on the part of the co-conspirators to restrain trade or to build a monopoly" for a Section 1 conspiracy claim. Bolt, 891 F.2d at 819-20 (internal citation omitted). To avoid the swing of the summary judgment axe, however, GSRG is required to present "evidence that reasonably tends to prove" that Casey/Park and Nucor "had a conscious commitment to a common scheme designed to achieve an unlawful objective." Monsanto Co., 465 U.S. at 764. And while GSRG is certainly permitted to rely upon circumstantial evidence to support its Section 1 claim, Supreme Court precedent has limited the "range of inferences that may be drawn from circumstantial evidence to prove an unlawful conspiracy." Seagood, 924 F.2d at 1574.

It bears repeating that "[c]onduct as [61] consistent with permissible competition as with illegal conspiracy does not, standing alone, support an inference of antitrust conspiracy." Matsushita, 475 U.S. at 588. [28] Indeed, "the mere opportunity to conspire among antitrust defendants does not, standing alone, permit the inference of conspiracy." Seagood, 924 F.2d at 1574. As the Eleventh Circuit has also warned, "when the defendant puts forth a plausible, procompetitive explanation for his actions, we will not be quick to infer, from circumstantial evidence, that a violation of the antitrust laws has occurred." Id. GSRG has not presented the [*1224] required evidence that "tend[s] to exclude the possibility that the alleged conspirators acted independently." Id. (quoting Monsanto, 465 U.S. at 764).

The Special Master succinctly articulated the essence of (and the flaw in) Plaintiff's argument regarding the contract [29] between Nucor and Casey:

> Plaintiff incorrectly adumbrates that somehow "contract, combination, and conspiracy" and "restraint of trade" are independent elements such that once an agreement regarding the economic event is shown, all that is needed for liability is evidence of one party's illegal act affecting the economic event. The correct interpretation is that the joint meeting of the minds must incorporate the illegal restraint and, thus, those elements are inextricably intertwined.

(Doc. #188 at 4). In this case, the only joint action agreed to by Casey/Park on the one hand, and Nucor on the other was an ordinary commercial brokerage arrangement. GSRG's assertion that any "concerted activity" can be deemed a Section 1 violation without evidence of a conscious commitment to an unlawful objective is, quite simply, not just off the mark - it's [63] not the law. [30] One need look no further than the Eleventh Circuit's Seagood

[27] GSRG takes issue with the Special Master's statement that "[t]he written agreement between Casey/Park and Nucor . . . appears neutral on its face." (Doc. #190 at 20; see also id. at 12-14). Each provision [60] of that agreement questioned by GSRG, however, readily can be explained as part of an entirely reasonable and appropriate business deal, and accordingly provides no evidence that tends to exclude the possibility that the agreement derived from legitimate business conduct, which resulted in multi-million-dollar profits for Casey/Park upon resale of the key Gulf States Steel assets.

[28] Citing its earlier decision in First National Bank v. Cities Service Co., 391 U.S. 253, 288-89, 88 S. Ct. 1575, 20 L. Ed. 2d 569 (1968), the Court in Matsushita identified two separate inquiries that are relevant to this issue: (1) whether the defendant had "any rational motive" to join the alleged conspiracy, and (2) whether the defendant's conduct was consistent with the defendant's independent interest," Matsushita, 475 U.S. at 587, citing 391 U.S. 253, 88 S. Ct. 1575, 20 L. Ed. 2d 569 (1968), the Court [62] stated that "if [the defendants] had no rational motive to conspire, and if [their] conduct is consistent with other, equally plausible explanations, the conduct does not give rise to an inference of conspiracy." Id. at 596-97.

[29] Albrecht emphasized that Section 1 "covers combinations in addition to contracts and conspiracies." 390 U.S. at 149. But again, neither there nor anywhere else has the Court defined "contract" as a different concept. As the lower courts have consistently held, this statutory concept of contract, combination, or conspiracy is a unity rather than a trinity.

decision to understand this point. In Seagood, the alleged conspirators, Long John Silver's ("LJS") and Martin-Brower ("M-B"), had entered into contracts for M-B to provide services to LJS. 924 F.2d at 1558-60. Nevertheless, applying the standards established in Matsushita and Monsanto, the court of appeals affirmed the grant of summary judgment for M-B, concluding that there was no direct evidence of the alleged conspiratorial conduct and that the inferences drawn by the plaintiff from circumstantial evidence were not sufficient to implicate M-B in the alleged unlawful conspiracy. Id. at 1573-76.

In U.S. Anchor Mfg., Inc. v. Rule Industries, Inc., one of the cases cited by GSRG, [31] the Eleventh Circuit held that there was "insufficient evidence linking [the pawn] with Rule's scheme to [65] constitute a conspiracy under the substantive proof requirements of federal antitrust [*1225] law" despite the existence of a contract between which was related to the alleged restraint of trade. 7 F.3d 986, 1002 (11th Cir. 1993). Notwithstanding GCRG's citation to it, U.S. Anchor simply does not support its argument. In U.S. Anchor, the plaintiff alleged that the principal defendant, Rule, allegedly had conspired with one of its suppliers, Tie Down, to drive Rule's competitor out of the relevant market by predatory pricing. The focus of the conspiracy claim was a report from Tie Down to Rule regarding the plaintiff's costs of production, which allegedly was used by Rule to carry out its anticompetitive, below-costs pricing tactic. 7 F.3d at 989-90, 1002. Again, therefore, "joint action . . . was a given." The Eleventh Circuit, however, concluded that Tie Down was entitled to judgment as a matter of law, holding that there was insufficient evidence of the alleged conspiracy involving that company. Id. at 1001-02. As in Seagood, the court stated that "a section 1 claim and a section 2 conspiracy to monopolize claim require the same threshold showing - the existence of an agreement to restrain [66] trade." Id. at 1002 (quoting Seagood, 924 F.2d at 1576).

3. Analysis of the Contract

The contract at issue in this case does not, by its own terms, link the "pawn" with Nucor's alleged scheme in order to establish a conspiracy. Accordingly, as the Special Master correctly noted, it is incumbent upon GSRG to present evidence in addition to the contract that tends to link Casey/Park to Nucor's scheme to survive summary judgment. (Doc. #249 at 11). Proof that Nucor alone may have had an intent to monopolize or restrain trade is not enough to establish the contract, combination or conspiracy in unreasonable restraint of trade. U.S. Anchor Mfg., Inc. 7 F.3d at 1002 (although there was sufficient evidence to show an intent to achieve an unlawful objective on Rule's part, there was insufficient evidence linking the pawn to Rule's efforts to support a finding of conspiracy between them).

In U.S. Anchor, the Eleventh Circuit further stated that HN23[] "[f]ederal antitrust [67] law requires a plaintiff to introduce evidence that tends to exclude the possibility that the defendants acted independently or legitimately." U.S. Anchor Mfg., Inc., 7 F.3d at 1002 (citing Bolt v. Halifax Hosp. Medical Ctr., 891 F.2d 810, 820 (11th Cir. 1990), cert. denied, 495 U.S. 924, 110 S. Ct. 1960, 109 L. Ed. 2d 322 (1990), appeal after remand, 980 F.2d 1381 (11th Cir. 1993) and Monsanto Co. v. Spray-Rite Serv. Co., 465 U.S. 752, 764, 104 S. Ct. 1464, 79 L. Ed. 2d 775 (1984)) (emphasis added). There are a myriad of undisputed legitimate reasons for Casey/Park to enter into the agreement in question with Nucor. Don Casey has testified about his extensive involvement in evaluating the Gulf States Steel

[30] HN22[] Both Supreme Court and Eleventh Circuit case law require a plaintiff relying upon the consequential affects of a contract that does not restrain trade by its [64] own terms to show that the contracting parties "shared a common objective to restrain trade" in order to establish a Section 1 violation. Monsanto, 465 U.S. at 764 (Section 1 claim requires proof of a "conscious commitment to a common scheme designed to achieve an unlawful objective"), quoting Edward J. Sweeney & Sons, Inc. v. Texaco, Inc., 637 F.2d 105, 111 (3d Cir. 1980); Seagood Trading, 924 F.2d at 1573-74 (in order to establish an agreement to restrain trade, plaintiff must show a meeting of the minds to accomplish anticompetitive objective); U.S. Anchor, 7 F.3d at 1002 (no evidence that defendants shared a mutual objective to restrain trade in the relevant market). Indeed, in both Seagood and U.S. Anchor, there was evidence of a competitively neutral written agreement between the allegedly conspiring defendants, but that did not dispense with the requirement that the antitrust plaintiff establish a shared "common objective" to restrain trade in the relevant market. (See Doc. #249 at 7-8).

[31] GSRG cites U.S. Anchor Mfg. for the proposition that evidence of the contract between Nucor and Casey/Park eliminates the need to show a common objective to restrain trade. As will be explained below, that argument is far wide of the mark.

assets long before he had any contact with Nucor about those assets, and that he initially contacted Nucor about the possible purchase of those assets before he was later contacted by Nucor's Vice President, Mr. Rutkowski. Mr. Casey also described Casey's purchase of various assets from the Gulf States Steel plant and his company's efforts to be involved in some manner in the liquidation of those assets. (Doc. #12 at ¶¶ 23-30, 36-38, 40-41).

Moreover, the mere fact that Casey/Park entered into an agreement to perform its usual business, even if it was [68] at a higher profit than usual, does not show that it conspired to do anything other than make money. GSRG argues that the profit margin should have alerted it to the fact that Nucor had ulterior motives in hiring Casey/Park, but that is not enough and there is no evidence that Casey/Park entered into the agreement with a shared objective to achieve those alleged unlawful ends.

[*1226] Casey's business is buying and selling used steel manufacturing equipment. It not only had prior dealings with Nucor, but also did business with most steel manufacturers in the United States. Casey's business was in no way dependent on Nucor and, in fact, Casey had made its own independent efforts to be appointed by the Bankruptcy Judge and Bankruptcy Trustee to be the liquidator for the Gulf States equipment. Moreover, for approximately two years prior to the September 2002 bankruptcy auction, Casey had tried repeatedly to get a contract with Gulf States Steel and the Trustee to liquidate the Gulf States Steel property and equipment. (Doc. #96 at 11). Casey inspected the Gulf States Steel property and equipment on a number of occasions in 2000 and 2001 and was very familiar with those assets. Mr. Casey attended [69] the May 2001 auction on Casey's behalf, bid on several items at the auction, and successfully purchased some of the Gulf States Steel assets that were auctioned. Casey also purchased additional assets from the Gulf States Steel bankruptcy estate before the May 2001 auction. (Doc. #96). Here, there is no evidence at all (direct or otherwise) that Casey/Park knew of any objective of Nucor other than to participate in the purchase and resale of the Gulf States Steel assets in order to make a profit. And as GSRG admits, the two sides ultimately made a profit. [32]

Furthermore, Casey/Park had an independent reason for wishing to sell off Gulf States's assets: it would provide the financing to purchase the property and develop it into an industrial park, something that the record indicates Casey/Park is currently doing on a profitable basis. In light of these facts, GSRG simply has fallen short of the required showing that Casey/Park's reasons for entering into the agreement with Nucor were anything other than legitimate. Here, Casey/Park's "conduct [is] as consistent with permissible [activity] [71] as with illegal conspiracy [and therefore] does not, standing alone, permit the inference of conspiracy." Seagood Trading, 924 F.2d at 1574 (citations omitted). In its response to GSRG's objections to the Special Master's Third Report, Nucor outlines the reasons that Plaintiff's objections to the Rule 56 determinations made in the Report are without merit. (Doc. #253 at 14-17). Nucor's response is right on target. Moreover, in each instance, this is the critical failure in GSRG's objections: Whether they are taken individually or together, Casey/Park's acceptance of the contract provisions complained of by GSRG is explained just as much by its normal business practice as by GSRG's [*1227] assertions of anticompetitive objective. In this case, and in light of GSRG's shotgun arguments, the legal point cannot be overstated: Where the evidence supporting a conspiracy claim is this equivocal, the Supreme Court has determined that it is insufficient to avoid summary judgment. Matsushita, 475 U.S. at 588 (citing Monsanto and [32] Inexplicably, GSRG has questioned the Special Master's "factual finding" that "[t]here is also evidence within the record that there existed at least some opportunity to resell the assets in the international market for a profit." (Doc #190 at 18-19; see also id. at 10). The Special Master simply made a Rule 56 finding based upon undisputed facts. GSRG acknowledges, as it must, that this "finding" is supported by the "fact that (ultimately) Casey did in fact sell the assets for a profit." Id. at 19. See also Doc. #120 at ¶ 82) (assets were resold to customers in Asia for approximately three times the purchase price). GSRG's suggestion [70] that there supposedly are "contrary facts in the record" about the state of the Asian used equipment market in 2001 and 2002 not only is incorrect but also irrelevant. The key question is whether Casey recognized an opportunity to resell the Gulf States Steel assets in an overseas market, and the evidence is undisputed that Casey did. (See Doc. #120 at ¶¶ 36-37, 39-41). Moreover, given that there was a three-year window of time for resale of the assets under the Casey/Nucor agreement, the fact that the assets were resold at a substantial profit in about half that time (Doc. #120 at ¶¶ 81-82) certainly suggests that Casey's market perception was spot on.

holding that "conduct as consistent with permissible competition as with illegal conspiracy does not, standing alone, support an inference of antitrust conspiracy"). [33]

Finally, GSRG's repeated contention that Casey/Park "should have known" or "suspected" Nucor's "apparent" objective (e.g., Doc. #190 at 8, 11-12, 14-15, 20) is not only speculative [34] but also invokes a negligence standard that is simply foreign to any requirement under the antitrust laws. To survive a Rule 56 challenge, GSRG must present evidence that Casey knew of and "consciously committed" to Nucor's allegedly anticompetitive objective to monopolize a relevant antitrust market. There is simply no such evidence in the record.

C. To Whatever Extent It Has Attempted To Do So, GSRG May Not Assert a Brand New Theory of Section 1 Liability

The Special Master also recommended that the court find untimely any attempt [73] by GSRG to assert a new theory of liability - namely, that GSRG can avoid summary judgment here by asserting that Nucor conspired with other actors besides Casey/Park. [35] The court agrees with the Special Master that "[a]t this stage of the case, it would be manifestly un[fair] to entertain GSRG's argument that Section 1 conspiracies could be found to exist with other actors." (Doc. #249 at 4; Doc. #305 at 4) (footnotes omitted). GSRG did not put forward its new theory until July 30, 2009, almost seven years after it filed this case. (Compare Doc. #1, and Doc. #115, with Doc. #305, p. 4). There was never a single mention by GSRG of any additional conspirators or other contracts anywhere in the Complaint or Amended Complaint (see Docs. #1, 115), nor in any of the summary judgment papers (see e.g., Docs. #129, 216). Indeed, it was not until the July 30, 2009 oral argument before the Special Master that GSRG first advanced this contention. At that point GSRG was a day late and a dollar short; it is too late in the game for it to hatch a new theory of liability. [36]

[33] Certainly, [72] there is no evidence that Casey/Park's stated legitimate reasons for entering into the agreement were either fabricated or contrived. See Boczar v. Manatee Hosps. & Health Sys., Inc., 993 F.2d 1514, 1518-19 (11th Cir. 1993) (finding sufficient evidence to support conspiracy claim when defendant's supposed legitimate reasons for acting were shown to be fabricated and contrived).

[34] Evidence that is "speculative or ambiguous" does not require a trial. Matsushita 475 U.S. at 595.

[35] As the Special Maser noted, "GSRG has pled only one 'contract and combination' in restraint of trade. In order to protect [74] and extend its near-monopoly dominance in the relevant market, Nucor contracted and combined with Casey to cause the creation of Gadsden Industrial Park, LLC [. . .] [Doc. #115 at ¶ 35]. Nucor contracted and combined with Casey Equipment Corporation and Gadsden Industrial Park, LLC to purchase the Gulf States Steel Plant with the common intention and objective of blocking a perceived competitive threat to Nucor. [Doc. #115 at ¶ 40]." (Doc. #249 at 3). There is no mention of any additional conspirator in GSRG's pleadings, nor is there any reference to other contracts or combinations.

[36] Similarly, the court fully agrees with the Special Master's recommendation that, to the extent GSRG has attempted to assert a claim under Section 7 (or quasi-Section 7 claim), that assertion is untimely. As an initial matter, the court notes that in its objections to the Special Master's Third Report (Doc. #251), GSRG plainly states it is not asserting that Nucor is liable under that section. (Id. at 11). Nevertheless, for completeness of the analysis, the court will address the arguments. The Amended Complaint contained no such allegation even though GSRG was told in no uncertain terms that any claim [75] under Section 7 of the Clayton Act must be expressly asserted in the Amended Complaint:

> Unless a claim under Section 7 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 18, is expressly asserted in Plaintiff's amended complaint, discovery on matters unique to Section 7 shall not be permitted. This shall not preclude discovery on matters common to Section 7 and Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act.

(Doc. #109 at ¶ 3). To be clear, this language was inserted into the court's August 14, 2007 Case Management Order because, in its decision remanding this case, the Eleventh Circuit panel (somewhat curiously) opined that Plaintiff's claims under Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act "implicated" Section 7, Gulf States Reorganization Group, 466 F.3d at 966-67, despite the fact that no such claim was asserted in the pleadings. As with the multiple actors theory, any Section 7 claim is too late.

[*1228] For these reasons, the court agrees with the Special Master's conclusion that GSRG failed to meet its burden of establishing that Casey/Park shared Nucor's alleged objective to restrain trade. Therefore, GSRG's Section 1 claim fails as a matter of law.

D. Count III - Sherman Act Section 2 Conspiracy Claim

In Count III, GSRG alleges [76] a conspiracy to monopolize the market for hot rolled coil in the Southeast. HN24[] To establish a Section 2 conspiracy to monopolize claim, a plaintiff must show: "(1) concerted action deliberately entered into with the specific intent of achieving a monopoly; and (2) the commission of at least one overt act in furtherance of the conspiracy." Levine v. Central Florida Medical Affiliates, Inc., 72 F.3d 1538, 1556 (11th Cir. 1996) (citing Todorov v. DCH Healthcare Auth., 921 F.2d 1438,1460 n. 35 (11th Cir. 1991)). A claim for conspiracy to monopolize does not require a showing of monopoly power.

In Section IV of the Third Report, the Special Master reaffirmed his ruling in the First Report that "GSRG simply has not adduced sufficient evidence to enable a rational fact-finder to find in favor of GSRG on its Section 2 Conspiracy [Count III] claims." (Doc. # 249 at 15). Accordingly, the Special Master recommended that the court grant summary judgment on GSRG's conspiracy-to-monopolize claim under Section 2 of the Sherman Act. (Id.). That recommendation is due to be adopted for two reasons: (1) GSRG has not challenged the recommendation in its objections (Doc. # 251); and (2) the recommendation [77] is correct on the merits.

First, GSRG has not asserted any objection to Section IV of the Special Master's Third Report. Nor has GSRG even attempted to argue that the Special Master misstated the law or improperly analyzed the record evidence with regard to the "specific intent" element of its Section 2 conspiracy-to-monopolize claim in Count III of the Amended Complaint. Accordingly, any such objections have been waived - twice over. [37] Therefore, Section IV of the Third Report (Doc. # 249) is due to be summarily affirmed and adopted.

Second, to prevail on a Section 2 conspiracy claim, GSRG had to present some evidence that Casey/Park - or, for that matter, any other actor - had a "specific intent to help Nucor monopolize the hot rolled steel coil industry." (Doc. #188 at 20). (emphasis added). After [78] the Special Master issued his Third Report, GSRG [*1229] failed to present any new evidence or argument regarding "specific intent" in support of Count III. The record is devoid of any evidence that Casey/Park had any interest in whether Nucor monopolized the market for hot rolled coil in the Southeast. Casey/Park had its own legitimate reasons for entering into the agreement with Nucor. Therefore, even if GSRG's objections to the Special Master's Report related to its Section 2 claim was not waived (and to be clear, it was), the court agrees on the merits with the Special Master's conclusion that GSRG's Count III conspiracy claim fails - for essentially the same reasons that its Section 1 claim fails.

V. The Court's Review of the Special Master's Fourth Report

Following the issuance of the Special Master's Third Report and Recommendation recommending that Nucor be awarded summary judgment on Counts I and III, the Section 1 and Section 2 conspiracy claims, the court referred the following motions to the Special Master: Nucor's motion to exclude the testimony of Robert Crandall (Doc. #261); Nucor's motion to exclude the testimony of Michael Locker (Doc. #172); Nucor's motion to exclude the testimony [79] of John Correnti (Doc. #175); GSRG's motion to exclude the testimony of Andrew Dick (Doc. #235); GSRG's Motion to exclude the testimony of Dr. Seth Kaplan (Doc. #237); and Nucor's Motion for Summary Judgment on all claims (Doc. #269).

[37] See also Response of Casey Equipment Corporation and Gadsden Industrial Park, LLC, to Plaintiff's Objections to Report and Recommendation of Special Master (Doc. #191 at 24-25) (noting that none of GSRG's objections to the First Report challenged the Special Master's original recommendation that GSRG's conspiracy-to-monopolize claim under Sherman Act § 2 in Count III must be dismissed).

In his Fourth Report, the Special Master recommended the following: Nucor's motion to exclude the testimony of Robert Crandall (Doc. #261) be denied; Nucor's motion to exclude the testimony of Michael Locker (Doc. #172) be granted; Nucor's motion to exclude the testimony of John Correnti (Doc. #175) be granted; GSRG's motion to exclude the testimony of Andrew Dick (Doc. #235) be granted; GSRG's Motion to exclude the testimony of Dr. Seth Kaplan (Doc. #237) be denied; and that Nucor's Motion for Summary Judgment (Doc. #269) be granted. (Doc. #305). The Special Master recommended that Correnti and Locker's testimony be excluded because they would offer opinions for which they are not qualified. He recommended that Dick's testimony be precluded because he cannot testify as to any decisions made by the DOJ and the probative value of his testimony is outweighed by its unfair prejudice. The Special Master also recommended that Crandall's and Kaplan's testimony [80] be allowed despite certain omissions and/or problems associated with such.

In evaluating Nucor's motion for summary judgment, the Special Master evaluated all three of the claims in Plaintiff's Amended Complaint. The Special Master recommended that summary judgement be entered in favor of Nucor on Count II, which he had not previously addressed, as well as counts I and III. The grounds on which the Special Master recommended summary judgment on Counts I and III in his Fourth Report and Recommendation are in addition to the reasons he recommended summary judgment on those claims in his Third Report and Recommendation. (Doc. #305).

A. The Law of Attempted Monopolization

HN25[] Section 2 of the Sherman Act provides:

> Every person who shall monopolize, or attempt to monopolize, or combine or conspire with any other person or persons, to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, shall be deemed guilty of a felony. . . .

15 U.S.C. § 2. Thus, Section 2 makes it unlawful for a Defendant to monopolize, to attempt to monopolize, or to conspire to monopolize any part of interstate or foreign [*1230] trade. This statutory provision covers behavior by a single business [81] entity as well as coordinated action taken by more than one business.

HN26[] A claim of attempted monopolization involves three distinct elements: "(1) the defendant has engaged in predatory or anticompetitive conduct with (2) a specific intent to monopolize and (3) a dangerous probability of achieving monopoly power." Spanish Broadcasting System of Fla., Inc. v. Clear Channel, 376 F.3d 1065, (11th Cir. 2004) (quoting Spectrum Sports, 506 U.S. at 456).

> To have a dangerous probability of successfully monopolizing a market the defendant must be close to achieving monopoly power. Monopoly power is "the power to raise prices to supra-competitive levels or . . . the power to exclude competition in the relevant market either by restricting entry of new competitors or by driving existing competitors out of the market."

U.S. Anchor Mfg., Inc., 7 F.3d at 994, quoting American Key Corp. v. Cole Nat'l Corp., 762 F.2d 1569, 1581 (11th Cir. 1985).

The offense of attempted monopolization requires specific intent on the defendant's part to bring about a monopoly and a dangerous probability of success. [38] Quality Foods v. Latin Am. Agribusiness Dev. Corp., 711 F.2d 989, 996 (11th Cir. 1983). Furthermore, like [82] the monopolization offense itself, the attempt must happen in a defined relevant market. Id. The relevant market is defined by both a product and a geographic dimension. Spectrofuge Corp. v. Beckman Instruments, Inc., 575 F.2d 256, 276 (5th Cir. 1978), cert. denied, 440 U.S. 939, 99 S. Ct. 1289, 59 L. Ed. 2d 499 (1979); Heatransfer Corp. v. Volkswagenwerk, A.G., 553 F.2d 964, 980 (5th Cir. 1977).

[38] HN27[] Specific intent to monopolize is a necessary element of a Section 2 offense of actual monopolization. Von Kalinowski at § 9.01(1). Monopoly power is a critical element of a Section 2 offense of actual monopolization, Id. at § 8.02(1)

HN28[] "The offense of [actual] monopoly under § 2 of the Sherman Act has two elements: (1) the possession of monopoly power in the relevant market and (2) the willful acquisition or maintenance of that power as distinguished from growth or development as a consequence of a superior product, business acumen, or historic accident." United States v. Grinnell Corp., 384 U.S. 563, 570-71, 86 S. Ct. 1698, 16 L. Ed. 2d 778 (1966). [39]

HN29[] The first element, monopoly power, requires a showing that the Defendant has the power to control prices in or to exclude competition from the relevant market. [40] United States v. E.I. du Pont de Nemours & Co., 351 U.S. 377, 391, 76 S. Ct. 994, 100 L. Ed. 1264 (1956). Monopoly power, defined [*1231] as "the power to control price or exclude competition," is measured with reference to a relevant market.

HN31[] The [84] second element requires evidence of predatory or exclusionary acts or practices that have the effect of preventing or excluding competition within the relevant market. See United States v. Microsoft, 253 F.3d 34, 58, 346 U.S. App. D.C. 330 (D.C. Cir. 2001). A practice is exclusionary if it "harm[s] the competitive process and thereby harm[s] consumers." Id. "[H]arm to one or more competitors will not suffice" for a Section 2 violation. Id.; see also Consultants & Designers, Inc. v. Butler Serv. Group, Inc., 720 F.2d 1553, 1562 (11th Cir. 1983) ("The relevant inquiry is not whether [a company's] present attempt to exclude adversely impacts competition but rather whether its acquisition of the power to exclude competitors had a sufficiently adverse impact on competition to constitute a [Sherman Act] violation.").

HN32[] A plaintiff bringing a monopolization claim under Section 2 of the Sherman Act must define and prove the relevant market. See U.S. Anchor Mfg., Inc., 7 F.3d at 994 ("Defining the market is a necessary step in any analysis of market power and thus an indispensable element in the consideration of any monopolization or attempt case arising under section 2").

B. The [85] Special Master's Expert Witness Recommendation

1. GSRG's Expert Crandall

The Special Master correctly applied the appropriate legal standards relating to the admissibility of expert testimony under Federal Rule of Evidence 702 and Daubert v. Merrell Dow Pharmaceuticals, Inc., 509 U.S. 579, 113 S. Ct. 2786, 125 L. Ed. 2d 469 (1993). Specifically, the Special Master evaluated Crandall's proposed testimony under appropriate Eleventh Circuit analysis: "whether (i) an expert is qualified to testify regarding the matters he intends to address, (ii) the expert's methodology is sufficiently reliable under Daubert, and (iii) the expert's testimony assists the trier of fact to understand the evidence or to determine a fact in issue." (Doc. #305 at 3 (citing Quiet Tech. DC-8, Inc. v. Hurel-Dubois UK Ltd., 326 F.3d 1333, 1340-41 (11th Cir. 2003)). Under these standards, the Special Master correctly determined that, although Crandall's proposed testimony was subject to certain deficiencies, those issues went to the weight of his testimony, not its admissibility. (Doc. #305 at 24). Therefore, the Special Master correctly determined that Crandall's testimony should be admitted.

Ct. 2072, 119 L. Ed. 2d 265 (1992)*.

[40] In United States v. E. I. du Pont de Nemours & Co., the Supreme Court stated the classic test for determining the relevant market: HN30[] "In considering what is the relevant market for determining the control of price and competition, no more definite rule can be declared than that commodities reasonably interchangeable by consumers for the same purposes make up that 'part of the trade or commerce,' monopolization of which may be illegal." 351 U.S. at 395. Factors such as functional interchangeability, responsiveness of the sales of one product to the price changes of the other, and degree of competition from the potential substitute are all relevant to the market inquiry. See, e.g., Yoder Bros., Inc. v. California-Florida Plant Corp., 537 F.2d 1347 (5th Cir. 1976).

2. GSRG's Experts Correnti and Locker

To evaluate the admission [86] of expert testimony, courts engage in a three part inquiry to determine the admissibility of expert testimony under Federal Rule of Evidence 702. Specifically, courts consider whether:

> (1) [T]he expert is qualified to testify competently regarding the matters he intends to address; (2) the methodology by which the expert reaches his conclusions is sufficiently reliable as determined by the sort of inquiry mandated in Daubert; and (3) the testimony assists the trier of fact, through the application of scientific, technical, or specialized expertise, to understand the evidence or to determine a fact in issue.

City of Tuscaloosa v. Harcros Chems., Inc., 158 F.3d 548, 562 (11th Cir. 1998) (citing Daubert v. Merrell Dow Pharmaceuticals, Inc., 509 U.S. 579, 589, 113 S. Ct. 2786, 125 L. Ed. 2d 469 (1993)).

In his Fourth Report, the Special Master concluded that the testimony of GSRG's proposed experts, Locker and Correnti, should be excluded under Rule 702 and Daubert and its progeny. Specifically, [*1232] the Special Master found that although both proposed experts opine on how relevant antitrust markets should be defined and whether Nucor possessed market power, neither individual has any relevant training or experience in antitrust [87] economics. Thus, the Special Master concluded that neither individual is qualified under the first prong of the inquiry. Furthermore, the Special Master concluded that even if they had appropriate qualifications, neither person's testimony is based on reliable methodology and thus fails the second prong of the inquiry as well.

The Special Master applied the proper analysis under Rule 702 and Daubert in holding that these proposed experts are not qualified. Further, and in any event, even if one were to assume their status as industry experts qualified them to opine on relevant antitrust market issues, GSRG failed to establish that their opinions were based on reliable methodology. HN33[] The Daubert inquiry is "a flexible one," but the primary focus should be "on principles and methodology, not on the conclusions that they generate." Daubert, 509 U.S. at 594-95.

"[T]he proponent of the testimony does not have the burden of proving that it is scientifically correct," but must establish "by a preponderance of the evidence, it is reliable." Allison v. McGhan Medical Corp., 184 F.3d 1300, 1312 (11th Cir. 1999) (citing In re Paoli R.R. Yard PCB Litig., 35 F.3d 717, 744 (3d Cir. 1994)). The court's [88] gatekeeping obligation requires that it evaluate a proposed expert's qualifications and methodology in light of what is necessary to explain a particular subject matter to the jury. Interestingly, GSRG's objections to the Special Master's recommendation that the court exclude Correnti and Locker focus solely on the first prong of the inquiry, their alleged qualification to testify as to antitrust market matters based on their status as industry experts; GSRG does not even attempt to argue that Correnti and Locker applied proper and reliable methodologies in reaching their opinions. (See generally Doc. #313). Thus, even if the court were to conclude that the Special Master was incorrect in his conclusion that Correnti and Locker did not possess appropriate qualifications to opine on the relevant antitrust market, their proposed testimony is still due to be excluded due to GSRG's failure to establishing that their methodology is sufficiently reliable under Daubert. Daubert, 509 U.S. at 594-95; see also Quiet Tech. DC-8, Inc. v. Hurel-Dubois UK Ltd., 326 F.3d 1333, 1340-41 (11th Cir. 2003).

Furthermore, there is yet a third prong of the inquiry which these experts' proffered testimony [89] fails to satisfy. HN34[] The Daubert inquiry also requires that the proposed expert's testimony assist the trier of fact, through the application of scientific, technical, or specialized expertise, to understand the evidence or to determine a fact in issue. Daubert, 509 U.S. at 589. Thus, even if an expert's testimony were admissible under the first two prongs of the Daubert analysis, it may still be insufficient to create an issue of fact to overcome summary judgment. 11BAreeda at ¶ 309; see also Rebel Oil Co., Inc. v. Atlantic Richfield Co., 146 F.3d 1088, 1097 (9th Cir. 1998). In this case, the court finds that Correnti and Locker's proposed testimony not only fails the first two Daubert prongs, but also that it is too conclusory to satisfy the third prong, and even if considered, would be insufficient to create an issue of fact precluding summary judgment for Nucor.

3. Nucor's Expert Andrew Dick

Nucor proffered the testimony of Andrew Dick, who had previously served as a staff economist, and later Assistant Chief and Acting Chief of the United States [*1233] Department of Justice's Antitrust Division, Competition Policy Section. (Doc. #305 at 24). In particular, he oversaw the Steel Industry Task [90] Force established in 2001 to address consolidation in the steel industry. (Id.). Nucor sought to have Dick testify, based upon his experience with the DOJ, about a decision in which he had no involvement. The Special Master correctly concluded that Dick was neither qualified, nor in possession of sufficient data or facts, to offer an opinion on the basis for a particular decision in which he did not participate.

4. Nucor's Expert Kaplan

Kaplan's testimony was proffered by Nucor as an expert of antitrust economic issues and in rebuttal to GSRG's expert Crandall. GSRG's objection to Kaplan's testimony centers on its allegation that Nucor's counsel prepared Kaplan's report for him, rather than on the report's substance. However, the Special Master correctly determined that the communications at issue merely reflected appropriate communication and consultation between attorneys and their expert. Therefore, the Special Master correctly determined that Kaplan's testimony was admissible.

C. The Special Master's Summary Judgment Recommendation

After ruling on the various motions to exclude experts, the Special Master considered Nucor's Motion for Summary Judgment on all claims in GSRG's Amended [91] Complaint. (Doc. #305 at 30). The Special Master recommended that summary judgment be granted in favor of Nucor on all claims, for reasons in addition to those in his Third Report. (Doc. #305 at 45). The court has carefully reviewed the Special Master's Report regarding GSRG's Section 2 attempt to monopolize claim. Mr. Rill's analysis is right on target. Moreover, a review of Nucor's response to GSRG's objections (Docs. #314, 315) shows the flaws and shortcomings of GSRG's arguments. In light of these observations, the court need not devote much time to addressing the parties' arguments, but writes briefly to make a few points.

Nucor raised the following additional arguments in support of its motion for summary judgment: (1) GSRG failed to produce sufficient evidence to prove a relevant product market, an essential element of each of GSRG's claims; (2) GSRG cannot prove its alleged geographic market, also another essential element of each claim; and (3) GSRG cannot establish that Nucor possessed a dangerous probability of achieving monopoly power, an essential element of Counts II and III. (Doc. #305 at 30-31).

As the Eleventh Circuit stated so succinctly in T. Harris Young, HN35[] "Where there [92] is no Market, there is no Monopoly." 931 F.2d at 823. There, the Eleventh Circuit compared an attempt claim with an actual monopolization claim:

> The offense of monopolization under Section 2 of the Sherman Act contains two elements: "(1) the possession of monopoly power in the relevant market and (2) the willful acquisition or maintenance of that power as distinguished from growth or development as a consequence of a superior product, business acumen, or historic accident." United States v. Grinnell Corp., 384 U.S. 563, 86 S.Ct. 1698, 1704, 16 L.Ed.2d 778 (1966). The offense of attempted monopolization requires specific intent on the defendant's part to bring about a monopoly and a dangerous probability of success. Quality Foods v. Latin Am. Agribusiness Dev. Corp., 711 F.2d 989, 996 (11th Cir. 1983). Furthermore, like the monopolization offense itself, the attempt must happen in a defined relevant market. Id. The relevant market is defined by [*1234] both a product and a geographic dimension. Spectrofuge Corp. v. Beckman Instruments, Inc., 575 F.2d 256, 276 (5th Cir. 1978), cert. denied, 440 U.S. 939, 99 S. Ct. 1289, 59 L. Ed. 2d 499 (1979); [Heatransfer Corp. v. Volkswagenwerk, A.G., 553 F.2d 964, 980 (5th Cir. 1977)].

T. Harris Young & Assoc., 931 F.2d at 823 [93] (emphasis added). [41] Proof of a (1) relevant product market and (2) relevant geographic market are each essential elements to the "attempted monopolization" claim. Spectrum Sports, Inc. v. McQuillan, 506 U.S. 447, 459, 113 S. Ct. 884, 122 L. Ed. 2d 247 (1993) ("Demonstrating the dangerous probability of monopolization in an attempt case . . . requires inquiry into the relevant product and geographic market"); T. Harris Young, 931 F.2d at 823 (attempt to monopolize "must happen in a defined relevant market" that is "defined by both a product and a geographic dimension"); American Key, 762 F.2d 1569, 1579 ("proof of the relevant product and geographic market is absolutely essential" to plaintiff's attempt to monopolize claims under Sherman Act § 2); U.S. Anchor Mfg., 7 F.3d at 994 (defining the market is a "necessary step" in any "monopolization or attempt case arising under Section 2").

Moreover, HN36[] Eleventh Circuit precedent requires an antitrust plaintiff to proffer expert testimony to establish a relevant product market and a relevant geographic market. E.g., American Key, 762 F.2d at 1579 (construction of a relevant economic market cannot be based upon lay testimony); Colsa Corp. v. Martin Marietta Servs., Inc., 133 F.3d 853, 855 n. 4 (11th Cir. 1998); Bailey v. Allgas, 284 F.3d at 1237, 1246 (11th Cir. 2002).

If GSRG fails to proffer such testimony or if GSRG's proffered economic expert testimony is unreliable, legally unsound or unsupported by sufficient facts and data, summary judgment must be granted in Nucor's favor as matter of law under Sherman Act Sections 1 and 2. E.g., Levine, 72 F.3d at 1553; Gulfstream Park, 479 F.3d at 1313; Bailey v. Allgas, 284 F.3d at 1247, 1249 (affirming summary judgment where economic expert's evidence was insufficient to establish either relevant product market or [*1235] relevant geographic [96] market); American Key, 762 F.2d at 1581 (affirming summary judgment where plaintiff failed to establish relevant geographic market); T. Harris Young, 931 F.2d at 823-25 (affirming grant of JNOV because of plaintiff's failure to define either the geographic dimension or the product dimension of the relevant market). For the reasons explained by the Special Master (and as discussed briefly below), Plaintiff's failure to provide the necessary proof regarding either an appropriate product market or geographic market is fatal to its claims here.

1. The Relevant Product Market

The Special Master recommended that summary judgment be entered against GSRG because its expert, Dr. Crandall, failed to present sufficient evidence regarding the relevant product market. (Doc. #305 at 43-45). GSRG insists that the relevant product market is black hot rolled coil. Nucor contends that it is necessary to examine both the product at issue, black hot rolled coil, and all reasonable substitutes available to consumers. Specifically, Nucor contends that GSRG's evidence on the relevant product market was insufficient because it failed to consider pickled and oiled hot rolled coil as a substitute for hot rolled [97] coil. The Special Master agreed, as does the court. See Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, 325, 82 S. Ct. 1502, 8 L. Ed. 2d 510 (1962); T. Harris Young & Assoc., 931 F.2d at 824; Heatransfer, 553 F.2d at 980.

[41] Proof of these same elements - relevant product market and geographic market - is also required with respect to a Section 1 rule of reason claim such as that asserted by GSRG in Count I of the First Amended Complaint. E.g., Levine v. Central Florida Medical Affiliates, Inc., 72 F.3d 1538, 1551 (11th Cir. 1996) (in Sherman Section 1 case, [94] in order to prove that the alleged conspiracy or agreement had a "potential for genuine adverse effects on competition," the plaintiff must define the relevant market and establish that defendants possessed power in that market). Thus, while the Special Master previously recommended summary judgment dismissing GSRG's Section 1 claims based on GSRG's failure to provide significant probative evidence of a conspiracy/agreement to restrain trade, (Docs. #188, 207, 249; accord American Key Corp., 762 F.2d at 1579 n.8 ("significant probative evidence of a conspiracy is an essential element of all Section 1 violations and of a conspiracy to monopolize in violation of Section 2 ")), GSRG's failure to establish either relevant product market or relevant geographic market is a separate and independent alternative ground for dismissing its Section 1 claims. E.g., Levine, 72 F.3d at 1553; Gulfstream Park Racing Ass'n, 479 F.3d at 1313 (affirming summary judgment dismissing § 1 claim because expert testimony regarding relevant market was legally insufficient). That is because the relevant market is also an element of a Sherman Act Section 1 claim. See Kentucky Speedway, LLC v. National Ass'n of Stock Car Auto Racing, 588 F.3d 908, 919 (6th Cir. 2009) [95] (quoting Worldwide Basketball & Sport Tours, Inc. v. NCAA, 388 F.3d 955, 962 (6th Cir. 2005) (listing the requisite elements for a claim under Section 1 of the Sherman Act, the second being unreasonable restraint of trade "in the relevant market ")).

The factors governing definition of relevant product market are discussed in the Eleventh Circuit's opinions in U.S. Anchor and Bailey. HN37[] The Eleventh Circuit has noted that any economically meaningful relevant product market definition must take into account evidence of virtually complete "supply substitution." See U.S. Anchor Mfg., 7 F.3d at 995 ("cross-elasticity of production facilities may also be an important factor in defining a product market"); Bailey v. Allgas, Inc., 284 F.3d at 1247 (affirming failure of proof on relevant product market where plaintiff's expert failed to consider costs of switching); Rebel Oil v. Atlantic Richfield Co., 51 F.3d 1421,1436 (9th Cir. 1995) (citing Areeda treatise for proposition: "If producers of product X can readily shift their production facilities to produce product Y, then the sales of both should be included in the relevant market."). Whether the relevant product market in this case can be limited solely to "black" HRC, or whether it must also include pickled [98] and oiled HRC and other standard finishes, requires examination of a number of factors, including: (a) demand substitution; (b) supply substitution; (c) price sensitivity; (d) specialized distribution channels; and (e) industry recognition. See U.S. Anchor, 7 F.3d at 995; Bailey, 284 F.3d at 1246-47.

Dr. Crandall's evidence concerning relevant product market is purely conclusory, [42] not supported by actual data (or evidence) in the record, and does not take into account demand-side or supply-side substitution. For example, the Rule 56 evidence is undisputed that producers can readily increase their black HRC output by simply not pickling and oiling or performing other standard finishing processes. [43] Pickled [*1236] and oiled hot rolled coil is essentially hot rolled coil that is subjected to one additional process. When pickled and oiled HRC is sold, the price increase is small and based upon a fixed cost-based price differential (as compared to black HRC). Accordingly, if there were a black HRC price increase in the market, producers could (and would) immediately increase their black HRC output.

GSRG argues that because one cannot use both products as substitutes, the pickled and oiled should be ignored. However, this argument ignores the realities of the marketplace. Producers of pickled and oiled hot rolled coil already have the appropriate substitute product by simply foregoing the one additional process required to produce the pickled and oiled product. In light of GSRG's expert's failure to consider the cross-elasticity of supply between these two products, the report is fundamentally flawed and fails to consider the relevant product market. For this reason, GSRG failed to present evidence that Nucor would possess market power [100] in the relevant product market. The court agrees with the Special Master's conclusion that, GSRG's proposed product market definition fails as a matter of law and for this reason Nucor is entitled to summary judgment on all of GSRG claims.

2. The Relevant Geographic Market

Contrary to GSRG's assertions otherwise, the Special Master faithfully applied the controlling test for geographic market definition in the Eleventh Circuit: [44]

[42] For this reason the Special Master correctly determined that even if Dr. Crandall's assertions [99] regarding product market were to be considered, given the overwhelming and undisputed record evidence to the contrary, no reasonable trier of fact could find that the relevant product market in this case is limited solely to black HRC. (Doc. #305 at 44-45).

[43] As the Special Master found based upon the undisputed evidence, "producers of 'pickled and oiled' hot rolled coil need only refrain from running black hot rolled coil through the additional process to change production in response to a price increase for black hot rolled coil." (Doc. #305 at 44).

[44] In one of its objections, GSRG asserts that the Special Master "compounds his error" by applying the Elzinga-Hogarty [102] LIFO test rather than utilizing an applicable analysis. (Doc. #312 at 8). However, the Special Master referenced the Elzinga-Hogarty test, but only to illustrate a point. (Doc. #305 at 37). The Special Master applied and conducted his analysis under applicable Eleventh Circuit precedent pronounced in T. Harris Young, 931 F.2d at 823. (Doc. #305 at 33-36). GSRG is in error on one other point (albeit a moot one here). Courts, including the one cited by GSRG, have utilized the Elzinga-Hogarty as part of an appropriate analysis. See, e.g., California v. Sutter Health System, 130 F. Supp. 2d 1109, 1120-21 (N.D. Cal. 2001); see also U.S. v. Oracle Corp., 331 F. Supp. 2d 1098, 1161 (N.D. Cal. 2004).

> HN38[] A geographic market is only relevant for monopoly purposes where [the evidence] show[s] that consumers within the geographic area cannot realistically turn to outside sellers should prices rise within the defined area.

T. Harris Young, 931 F.2d at 823; (Doc. #305 at 34). GSRG has the burden of showing that its proposed market definition is correct. To state a Sherman Act claim under either section 1 or section 2, the plaintiff bears the burden of proof on the alleged relevant market. Ad-Vantage Tel. Dir. Consult. v. GTE Directories, 849 F.2d 1336, 1341 (11th Cir. 1987); see also Double D Spotting Serv., Inc. v. Supervalu, Inc., 136 F.3d 554, 560 (8th Cir. 1998). "A relevant market consists of both a product market and a geographic market." Little Rock Cardiology Clinic PA v. Baptist Health, 591 F.3d 591, 596 (8th Cir. 2009); [101] see also Ad-Vantage Tel. Dir. Consult., 849 F.2d at 1341; Community Hosp. of Andalusia, Inc. v. Tomberlin, 712 F. Supp. 170, 172 (M.D. Ala. 1989). The Special Master correctly applied the test formulated by our court of appeals. In doing so he found that there were at least four independent reasons that GSRG's proposed geographic market does not pass muster. GSRG proposes that the relevant geographic market in this case consists of 10 states in the Southeast (Alabama, Arkansas, Florida, Georgia, Louisiana, Mississippi, North Carolina, South Carolina, Tennessee and Texas), without consideration of any sources which could ship hot rolled coil into the Southeast Region. [*1237] (Doc. #305 at 33). However, GSRG's expert report indicates that several steel mills outside the Southeast shipped large quantities of hot rolled coil into the Southeast during the relevant time period. In fact, GSRG's expert has also indicated that at least some foreign-produced hot rolled coil enters these Southeast states. (Doc. #305 at 34-36). Therefore, GSRG's 10-state Southeast market is unrealistic.

The undisputed evidence of shipments hot rolled coil into the proposed market suggests that the mills that previously made these shipments, and others - including domestic and foreign suppliers - could expand production capacity and/or divert hot rolled coil into the Southeast region. As noted by the Special Master, HN39[] a "geographic market is only relevant for monopoly purposes where these factors show that consumers within the geographic area cannot realistically turn to outside sellers should prices [103] rise within the defined area." (Doc. #305 at 34) (quoting T. Harris Young & Assoc., 931 F.2d at 823). Indeed, some evidence supporting the inference that consumers within the proposed geographic market could not turn to sellers outside the geographic market is necessary to survive summary judgment. See T. Harris Young & Assoc., 931 F.2d at 824. GSRG provided no such evidence. To the contrary, the record is replete with evidence that sellers outside GSRG's proposed geographic market could, and did, ship significant quantities of hot rolled coil into GSRG's proposed geographic market. Applying the Eleventh Circuit's teaching in T. Harris Young here to the undisputed evidence, it is clear "that consumers within [GSRG's proposed] geographic area can[] realistically turn to outside sellers should prices rise within the defined area." 931 F.2d at 823. Therefore, the court agrees with the Special Master's conclusion that GSRG has failed to establish that the relevant geographic market should be limited to the region proposed by GSRG.

3. No Dangerous Probability of Achieving Monopoly Power

HN40[] For GSRG to establish Counts II and III, the Section 2 attempted monopolization claim and the conspiracy [104] to monopolize claim, GSRG must establish that there was a "dangerous probability that the defendant might have succeeded in its attempt to achieve monopoly power." U.S. Anchor Mfg., 7 F.3d at 993 (citing Spectrum Sports, Inc. v. McQuillan, 506 U.S. 447, 113 S. Ct. 884, 122 L. Ed. 2d 247 (1993)). "To have a dangerous probability of successfully monopolizing a market the defendant must be close to achieving monopoly power." U.S. Anchor Mfg., Inc., 7 F.3d at 994. Where the alleged monopolist's market share is "less than 50% of the market at the time the alleged predation began and throughout the time when it was alleged to have continued, there was no dangerous probability of success . . . as a matter of law." U.S. Anchor Mfg., Inc., 7 F.3d at 1001. There can be no "dangerous probability of success" if the defendant "was never able to maintain a majority position in the market." U.S. Anchor Mfg., 7 F.3d at 1001.

> [B]ecause [defendant] possessed less than 50% of the market at the time alleged predation began and throughout the time it was alleged to have continued, there was no dangerous probability of success. . . as a matter of law.

Id.; see Fourth Report at 41 & n. 196 (quoting U.S. Anchor).

Applying U.S. Anchor to the Rule 56 [105] facts in this case, the Special Master correctly found that:

> Like the plaintiffs in U.S. Anchor, GSRG cannot prove that Nucor's market share ever surpassed 50% during the relevant time period, even on the basis of current shipments into GSRG's postulated 10-State market. GSRG concedes that it cannot show Nucor's market [*1238] share at the inception of the alleged anticompetitive activity in 2002, or in 2003, and that Nucor's market share had only reached 42.7% by 2004 - two years after the alleged anticompetitive activity began [and was completed]. Thus, GSRG cannot demonstrate that Nucor ever held a majority position in the market and, like the plaintiff's claim in U.S. Anchor, its attempted monopolization claim fails as a matter of law.

Id. at 41 (footnote omitted) (emphasis added).

Second, the Special Master also held that GSRG could not establish a "dangerous probability" of successful monopolization in its proposed "10 Southeast state" hot rolled coil market because it failed to prove that firms located outside that area could not expand or divert capacity to serve the 10-state area in the event of a Nucor-instigated price increase. Id. at 42; see also Bailey, 284 F.3d at 1256; Rebel Oil Co., 51 F.3d at 1443. [106] For those reasons, the Special Master correctly concluded that GSRG has failed to show that Nucor ever surpassed the 50% threshold during the relevant time period following the alleged anticompetitive conduct. Therefore, the court agrees with the Special Master's recommendation that GSRG has failed as a matter of law to show that Nucor had a dangerous probability of achieving monopoly power.

VI. Conclusion

For all the foregoing reasons, the court finds no error in the Reports of the Special Master and each Report is due to be adopted and the recommendations accepted. A separate order in accordance with this memorandum opinion will be entered.

DONE and ORDERED this 29th day of September, 2011.

OPINION & ORDER

Wood, U.S.D.J.:

On April 13, 2010, Plaintiff Angela Tese-Milner ("Plaintiff"), as Chapter 7 Trustee of the Estate of W.B. David & Co., Inc. ("W.B. David"), filed a Second Amended Complaint ("SAC") in the above-captioned action, alleging, inter alia, violations of various federal and state antitrust laws. (Dkt. No. 262.) Defendant Diamond Trading Company, Ltd. ("Diamond Trading" [*4] or "Defendant") moves to dismiss the SAC for failure to state a claim pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(b)(6) ("Rule 12(b)(6)"). (Dkt. No. 276)

For the reasons stated below, the Court grants Defendant's motion to dismiss.

I. Factual and Procedural Background[1]

W.B. David was a corporation located in New York, New York. Diamond Trading is incorporated in the United Kingdom. (SAC ¶ 6.) Diamond Trading is a member of a group of companies affiliated with the De Beers Group ("De Beers" or "De Beers Group"). De Beers is a group of related companies involved in the production, purchase, and sale of rough diamonds, which are diamonds that have not been cut or polished. (SAC ¶¶ 7-10.) From 1969 to 2003, W.B. David was a De Beers' Sightholder—a company selected by De Beers to purchase and sell De Beers' rough diamonds. (SAC ¶ 3.)

A. Original Complaint

On July 1, 2004, W.B. David filed a 140-page Original Complaint ("OC") [*5] in this action, asserting 36 claims against over 100 defendants, including Diamond Trading. (Dkt. No. 1.) The OC alleged that De Beers controlled the world diamond market and was engaged in anticompetitive conduct affecting the United States markets for rough and polished diamonds. The OC's allegations focused on two categories of conduct.

First, the OC focused on the Supplier of Choice program, a program that De Beers introduced in 2003 to select its Sightholders. The OC stated that, on June 3, 2003, Diamond Trading had informed W.B. David by letter that it did not qualify as a Sightholder under Supplier of Choice, and that it would lose its Sightholder status after a transitional six-month period (i.e., after December 2003). The OC alleged that De Beers terminated W.B. David as a Sightholder after De Beers used the Supplier of Choice program to reduce the number of Sightholders, thereby restricting the supply of diamonds to the market and raising diamond prices. Second, the OC stated that De Beers had stolen from W.B. David a proprietary diamond marketing campaign titled "Leading Jewelers of the World" ("LJW"). The OC alleged that these two categories of conduct by De Beers—the Supplier [*6] of Choice Program and the LJW campaign—violated: (1) federal and state antitrust laws, including Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. §§ 1 & 2; (2) Racketeering Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act; and (3) state common law.

On January 25, 2006, unsecured creditors filed an involuntary Chapter 7 bankruptcy petition against W.B. David in the United States Bankruptcy Court for the Southern District of New York (the "Bankruptcy Court"). The Bankruptcy Court entered an order of relief on February 8, 2006, and appointed Angela Tese-Miner (Plaintiff) as Trustee of the W.B. David Estate. (SAC ¶¶ 4-5.)

B. Amended Complaint

On July 11, 2007, Plaintiff filed an 11-page Amended Complaint ("AC"), omitting all but seven of the original defendants. (Dkt. No. 151.) In the AC, Plaintiff brought claims against Diamond Trading and six other companies allegedly related to De Beers. Plaintiff abandoned all of the OC's specific allegations regarding the Supplier of Choice program and the LJW campaign. Instead, the AC alleged that De Beers is involved in "an amorphous, world-wide conspiracy with unnamed co-conspirators to control the global diamond market." See Tese-Milner v. Diamond Trading Co., No. 04 cv. 05203, at 27 (S.D.N.Y. Feb. 24, 2010) [*7] . The AC alleged that De Beers' monopolistic conduct has anticompetitive effects in the diamond market and violates Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act and Section 340 of the Donnelly Act. (Id.)

In September 2007, certain defendants filed a motion to dismiss the AC for failure to state a claim, pursuant to Rule 12(b)(6). Other defendants (the "Jurisdictional Defendants") moved to dismiss the AC for lack of personal jurisdiction, pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(b)(2), and for insufficient service of process pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(b)(5). (Dkt. Nos. 154 & 162.)

On January 23, 2009, this Court issued an order addressing the Jurisdictional Defendants' motion to dismiss. See Tese-Milner v. De Beers Centenary A.G., et al. ("Tese-Milner I"), 613 F. Supp. 2d 404 (S.D.N.Y. 2009). The Court found, inter alia, that Plaintiff had made a sufficient start toward a showing of jurisdiction, and allowed jurisdictional discovery.

On August 31, 2009, after the completion of jurisdictional discovery, Plaintiff moved for leave to file a Second Amended Complaint pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 15(a). (Dkt. [*8] No. 235.) Defendants opposed that motion and cross-moved to dismiss the AC pursuant to Rule 12(b)(6). The Jurisdictional Defendants also renewed their motion to dismiss. (Dkt. Nos. 238 & 240.)

On February 24, 2010, the Court issued an opinion and order, inter alia, (1) granting the Jurisdictional Defendants' motion to dismiss the AC; (2) denying Plaintiff's motion for leave to amend; and (3) granting defendants' motion to dismiss the AC pursuant to Rule 12(b)(6). See Tese-Milner v. Diamond Trading Co. (Tese-Milner II), No. 04 cv.

05203 (S.D.N.Y. Feb. 24, 2010); see also Dkt. Nos. 259 & 267.[2] The Court held that, because the AC omitted "almost all of the OC's factual allegations," and instead introduced a new set of operative facts, the AC did not relate back to the OC for statute of limitations purposes. Tese-Milner II at 27. The Court noted that there was "not a single reference in the AC to the Supplier [of] Choice Program or De Beers' U.S. marketing, advertising, or retail claims." Id. The Court thus found that the AC's claims were limited to conduct that occurred on or after February 8, 2002—which is four years prior to the filing of the AC and an additional two years from the order [*9] of relief in the bankruptcy proceeding, which was entered on February 8, 2006.[3] The Court also found that the Plaintiff had failed to: (1) identify specific conduct by Diamond Trading that violated antitrust laws; (2) allege an agreement between Diamond Trading and a non-De Beers Group organization; and (3) allege a relevant market in which the conduct had occurred. Finally, the Court held that Plaintiff could replead her claims against Diamond Trading. See Tese-Milner II at 36 ("If Plaintiff can make out more specific, factual allegations about the role of Diamond Trading in De Beers' alleged monopoly, however, then Plaintiff may be able to state a claim against the company.").

C. [*10] Second Amended Complaint

On April 13, 2010, Plaintiff filed the instant SAC, asserting the following: (1) combination and conspiracy to restrain trade in violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1; (2) monopolization in violation of Section 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 2; (3) attempt to monopolize in violation of Section 2 of the Sherman Act; (4) conspiracy to monopolize under Section 2 of the Sherman Act; (5) combination and conspiracy to restrain trade in violation of the Wilson Tariff Act, 15 U.S.C. § 8 et. seq. (the "Wilson Act"); and (6) combination and conspiracy to monopolize and restrain trade in violation of the Donnelly Antitrust Act, N.Y. Gen. Bus. Law § 340 (the "Donnelly Act"). (SAC ¶¶ 123-161.)

The SAC challenges four categories of alleged conduct by Defendant. First, Plaintiff asserts that Defendant horizontally restrained the supply in the U.S. rough diamond market, in violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act, when members of the De Beers Group entered into agreements with ALROSA, a Russian diamond mining company and a competitor of the De Beers Group. (SAC ¶¶ 35-47.) Second, Plaintiff asserts that Defendant vertically restrained trade, in violation [*11] of Section 1 of the Sherman Act, by entering into curtailment agreements with De Beers Consolidated Mines, Ltd. ("DBCM"), a member of the De Beers Group, and by entering into sales agreements with the Government of Botswana. (SAC ¶¶ 48-62.) Third, Plaintiff challenges various elements of Defendant's advertising and marketing campaigns, including its U.S. Carat Club, and its De Beers Limited Edition of Millennium Diamonds Campaign ("Millennium Campaign"), as violations of Section 2 of the Sherman Act. (SAC ¶¶ 68-94.) Finally, Plaintiff resurrects her claims related to Defendant's Supplier of Choice program that were included in the OC, but not in the AC. Plaintiff alleges that the program violated Section 2 of the Sherman Act. (SAC ¶¶ 95-122.)

On May 7, 2010, Defendant moved to dismiss the SAC pursuant to Rule 12(b)(6). (Dkt. No. 264.) Defendant asserts that the SAC fails to allege any specific, actionable conduct by Defendant. Defendant also asserts that the conduct alleged by Plaintiff as unlawful falls outside of the applicable limitations period. Specifically, Defendant contends that Plaintiff must allege wrongful conduct by Defendant that took place between February 8, 2002, the [*12] limitations period identified in the Court's February 24, 2010 opinion dismissing the AC, and December 2003, when W.B. David ceased to be a Sightholder. With respect to that latter date, Defendant contends that Plaintiff may assert only those claims that are based on purchases that it made as a Sightholder, because Plaintiff's non-Sightholder claims (all claims arising after 2003, when Plaintiff's Sightholder status was terminated) are covered by a class action settlement release in a related case, Sullivan v. DB Inv., No. 04 cv. 2819 (D.N.J. June 14, 2004) (the "Sullivan release").

[2] The original Opinion and Order was filed under seal on March 1, 2010. (Dkt. No. 259.) A redacted version of the Opinion and Order was filed publicly on May 14, 2010. (Dkt. No. 267.)

[3] The statute of limitations for Sherman Act claims is four years, accruing when the defendant commits an act that injures the plaintiff. 15 U.S.C. § 15b. When a plaintiff files for bankruptcy, the statute of limitations is tolled for two years from the date that the bankruptcy court files the order for relief. 11 U.S.C. § 108(a).

The Sullivan release covers two settlement classes: the Direct Purchaser Class and the Indirect Purchaser Class. The Direct Purchaser Class includes all persons who purchased a rough or polished diamond directly from a defendant, including any affiliate of a defendant, or a defendant's competitor. The Indirect Purchaser Class includes persons who purchased a rough or polished diamond from someone other than a defendant, an affiliate of a defendant, or a defendant's competitors.[4] Plaintiff admits to being a member of both settlement classes. See Letter for John A. Wait, August 12, 2010.

The Release contains an exception for direct purchaser claims of Sightholders. See Am. Settlement Agreement § V(A) ("Nothing in the Settlement is intended to release any direct purchaser claim of any Sightholder."). A "sightholder" is defined as "a customer . . . entitled to purchase Rough Diamonds from [*14] [De Beers Defendants] as a regularly scheduled Sight or Sights," and, "Sightholder status terminates when [this right] . . . terminates." Id. at §I(PP).

The parties agree that, should the Sullivan settlement remain in effect,[5] the Sullivan release covers all of Plaintiff's claims against Defendant except any claims arising out of W.B. David's purchases as a Sightholder. See John A. Wait Letter, Aug. 12, 2010; see also Tese-Milner I, 613 F. Supp. 2d at 409 ("The parties agree that the settlement limits Plaintiff's claims in the instant case to those based on W.B. David's purchases as a Sightholder . . . .").

On September 14, 2010, the Court issued an order denying Defendant's [*15] motion to dismiss the SAC without prejudice, on the basis that the parties had insufficiently briefed several issues. (Dkt. No. 275.) The Court granted Defendant leave to refile its motion and ordered that the parties submit supplemental briefing on the following three issues: (1) whether any specific factual allegations in the SAC relate back to the OC; (2) whether Plaintiff's Supplier of Choice claims are covered by the Sullivan release; and (3) whether Plaintiff's Supplier of Choice claims are barred by the statute of limitations or, alternatively, whether they relate back to the OC, notwithstanding the fact that they were dropped from the AC. (Id.)

On October 22, 2010, Defendant refiled its motion to dismiss. The parties have filed supplemental briefs responding to the Court's September 14, 2010 order. (Dkt. No. 276.)

II. Legal Standard: Motion to Dismiss

In order to survive a Rule 12(b)(6) motion, a plaintiff must have pleaded sufficient factual allegations "to state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face." Bell Atl. Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 570, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007). A claim is facially plausible "when the plaintiff pleads factual content that allows the court to draw the reasonable [*16] inference that the defendant is liable for the misconduct alleged." Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 129 S. Ct. 1937, 1949, 173 L. Ed. 2d 868 (2009). Where a plaintiff has not "nudged [his or her] claims

[4] The Sullivan release [*13] provides that:

> Upon the Effective Date, the Released Parties shall be released and forever discharged from any and all claims, causes of action, demands, rights, actions, suits and requests for equitable, legal and administrative relief of any kind or nature whatsoever . . . that any member of the Settlement Classes who has not timely excluded himself, herself or itself from the action, ever had, could have had, now has, or can, shall or may have in the future . . . concerning the exploration, mining, processing, treatment, sorting, distribution, marketing, advertising, sale or pricing of any Diamond Product, including but not limited to . . (iii) methods of distribution or distribution programs of any Diamond Product (including but not limited to the Supplier of Choice program) including all means of selling or distributing any Diamond Product. . . ."

Am. Settlement Agreement § V(A).

[5] On July 13, 2010, a three-judge panel from the Third Circuit Court of Appeals vacated the settlement approval on grounds relating to class certification. Sullivan v. DB Invs., 613 F.3d 134 (3d Cir. 2010). On August 27, 2010, the Third Circuit granted a petition by the class-action plaintiffs for a rehearing en banc, and vacated the Third Circuit's July 13, 2010 opinion. Sullivan v. DB Invs., 619 F.3d 287 (3d Cir. 2010). Oral argument was held on February 23, 2011, but the en banc court has not yet issued a decision.

across the line from conceivable to plausible, [the] complaint must be dismissed." Twombly, 550 U.S. at 570. The Court must accept as true all well-pleaded factual allegations in the complaint, and "draw[ ] all inferences in the plaintiff's favor." Allaire Corp. v. Okumus, 433 F.3d 248, 249-50 (2d Cir. 2006) (internal quotations omitted). However, "the tenet that a court must accept as true all of the allegations contained in a complaint is inapplicable to legal conclusions." Iqbal, 129 S. Ct. at 1949. "Threadbare recitals of the elements of a cause of action, supported by mere conclusory statements, do not suffice." Id.

There is no heightened pleading requirement in antitrust cases. See Twombly v. Bell Atl. Corp., 425 F.3d 99, 108-09 (2d Cir. 2005), rev'd on other grounds, 550 U.S. 544, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007) ("We have consistently rejected the argument . . . that antitrust complaints merit a more rigorous pleading standard.").

III. Legal Standard: Sherman Act Claims

Plaintiff brings claims under Sections 1 and 2 of the [*17] Sherman Act.

A. Section 1 of the Sherman Act

Section 1 of the Sherman Act makes it illegal to enter into a "contract, combination . . . or conspiracy" to restrain trade or commerce. 15 U.S.C. § 1. To properly plead a violation of Section 1, a plaintiff must allege that (1) defendants were involved in a contract, combination or conspiracy that (2) operated unreasonably to restrain interstate trade. *In re Elevator Antitrust Litig., No. 04 cv. 1178, 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 34517, 2006 WL 1470994, at 7 (S.D.N.Y. May 30, 2006) (Greisa, J.). The bare assertion of a conspiracy is not enough to survive a Rule 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss; the complaint must contain "enough factual matter (taken as true) to suggest that an agreement [to restrain trade] was made." Twombly, 550 U.S. at 556. A well-pleaded complaint should include specific, factual allegations as to "the identities of the co-conspirators, the nature of their conspiracy, how the participants attempted to accomplish their objectives, and what overt acts . . . they performed . . . ." Mathias v. Daily News, L.P., 152 F. Supp. 2d 465, 484 (S.D.N.Y. 2001) (Marrero, J.). "[U]nspecified contracts with unnamed other entities to achieve unidentified anticompetitive effects [*18] does not meet the minimum standards of pleading a conspiracy in violation of the Sherman Act." Garshman v. Universal Res. Holding Inc., 824 F.2d 223, 230 (3d Cir. 1987).

Section 1 does not cover wholly unilateral action. See Gordon v. Lewistown Hosp.., 423 F.3d 184, 207 (3d Cir. 2005) ("Unilateral action simply does not support liability; there must be a unity of purpose or a common design and understanding or a meeting of the minds in an unlawful arrangement.") (internal quotations and citations omitted). To state a claim pursuant to the section a plaintiff must allege concerted action by two or more "legally distinct economic entities." Primetime 24 Joint Venture v. Nat'l Broad. Co., 219 F.3d 92, 103 (2d Cir. 2000).

B. Section 2 of the Sherman Act

Section 2 of the Sherman Act makes it illegal for an individual to monopolize a market. 15 U.S.C. § 2. To state a claim of monopolization pursuant to Section 2, a plaintiff must allege that the defendant (1) possesses monopoly power in a relevant market; (2) willfully acquired or maintained that power; and (3) engaged in anti-competitive behavior. Invamed, Inc. v. Barr Labs., Inc., 22 F. Supp. 2d 210, 218 (S.D.N.Y. 1998) (Sweet, J.).

A relevant [*19] market is comprised of the product market and geographic market in which the defendant allegedly exercises monopoly power. Queen City Pizza, Inc. v. Domino's Pizza, Inc., 124 F.3d 430, 442 (3d Cir. 1997). A product market includes all products that are reasonably interchangeable, which requires consideration of the cross-elasticity of demand (that is, the extent to which a change in the price of one product will alter the demand for another product). Id. at 436. A geographic market is the geographic area in which competition occurs. Heerwagen v. Clear Channel Commc'ns, 435 F.3d 219, 227-31 (2d Cir. 2006). The allegation of a relevant market is a "prerequisite" to a Section 2 claim. *Polargrid LLC v. Videsh Sanchar Nigam, Ltd., No. 04 cv. 9578, 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 54434, 2006 WL 2266351, at 6 (S.D.N.Y. Aug. 7, 2006) (Greisa, J.). Determining a relevant market can be a fact-intensive inquiry, and thus courts often hesitate to dismiss a claim for failing to adequately plead a relevant market. Todd v. Exxon Corp., 275 F.3d 191, 199-200 (2d Cir. 2001). "There is, however, no absolute rule against [ ] dismissal" on such a ground. Id. at 200.

Section 2 also prohibits conspiracies between two or more persons to monopolize. [*20] To plead that a defendant was involved in a conspiracy to monopolize, a plaintiff must sufficiently allege (1) that the defendant entered into concerted action with the specific intent of achieving a monopoly, and (2) the commission of overt acts in furtherance of the conspiracy. See Int'l Distib. Ctrs., Inc. v. Walsh Trucking Co., 812 F.2d 786, 795-96 (2d Cir. 1987); Invamed, Inc., 22 F. Supp. 2d at 220. To survive a motion to dismiss, an antitrust plaintiff must allege facts "that reasonably tend[ ] to prove that the [defendant] . . . 'had a conscious commitment to a common scheme designed to achieve an unlawful objective.'" Monsanto Co. v. Spray-Rite Serv. Corp., 465 U.S. 752, 764, 104 S. Ct. 1464, 79 L. Ed. 2d 775 (1984) (citations omitted).

IV. Analysis

For the reasons that follow, the Court grants Defendant's motion to dismiss.

A. Claims Related to the Supplier of Choice Program

Plaintiff brings claims arising out of Defendant's Supplier of Choice program, through which W.B. David was terminated as a Sightholder. (SAC ¶¶ 95-122.) Plaintiff alleges that the program violated Section 2 of the Sherman Act because its purpose "was to increase market demand for diamonds in general and to increase market demand for De Beers' [*21] diamonds in particular." (Id. ¶ 96.)

The Court dismisses Plaintiff's claims that relate to the Supplier of Choice program, because those claims have been abandoned and fall outside the applicable statute of limitations for actions under the Sherman Act.

1. Legal Standard: Statute of Limitations for Sherman Act Claims

The statute of limitations for Sherman Act claims (as well as Donnelly Act and Wilson Act claims) is four years, accruing when the defendant commits an act that injures the plaintiff. 15 U.S.C. § 15b; see also N.Y. Gen. Bus. Law § 340(5). In the case of a continuing antitrust conspiracy, the statute of limitations restarts at the time of each overt act that is part of the violation and that injures the plaintiff. Klehr v. A.O. Smith Corp., 521 U.S. 179, 189, 117 S. Ct. 1984, 138 L. Ed. 2d 373 (1997). Although for some antitrust cases, a continuing course of conduct can give rise to continually accruing causes of action, there is no continuing violation when the initial refusal to deal is final. David Orgell, Inc. v. Geary's Stores, Inc., 640 F.2d 936, 938 (9th Cir. 1981) (statute of limitations starts to run at the initial refusal to sell); see also Phillip E. Areeda and Herbert Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law ¶ 320c3 [*22] (3d. ed. 2007) ("More than almost any other plaintiff, the victim of a direct refusal to deal knows immediately that it has occurred. . . .").

An amended complaint relates back to the filing of the original complaint for statute of limitations purposes where "the amendment asserts a claim or defense that arose out of the conduct, transaction, or occurrence set out — or attempted to be set out — in the original pleading." Fed. R. Civ. P. 15(c)(1)(B). To determine whether relation back is appropriate, courts consider whether the original complaint gave the defendant adequate notice of the matters raised in the amended pleading. Schiavone v. Fortune, 477 U.S. 21, 31, 106 S. Ct. 2379, 91 L. Ed. 2d 18 (1986). An amended complaint relates back if it renders previous allegations more definite and precise, but not if it introduces a new set of operative facts. Slayton v. Am. Express Co., 460 F.3d 215, 228 (2d Cir. 2006). Even where an amended complaint tracks the legal theory of the original complaint, claims based on an entirely distinct set of factual allegations do not relate back for purposes of Rule 15. *Bank of Brussels Lambert v. Chase Manhattan Bank, No. 93 Civ. 5298, 1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 13235, 1999 WL 672302, at 2 (S.D.N.Y. Aug. 27, 1999) (McKenna, [*23] J.) (stating that there is no relation back if the amendment sets forth a "separate set of operative facts").

When an amended pleading relates back to an earlier pleading, it will be deemed to have been filed on the date of the earlier pleading. When an amended pleading does not relate back to an original pleading, it will be deemed to be filed on its actual filing date. *In re Noah Educ. Holdings, Ltd. Sec. Litig., No. 08 Civ. 9203, 2010 WL 1372709, at 9-10 (S.D.N.Y. Mar. 31, 2010) (Sullivan, J.).

2. Analysis

The Court finds that Plaintiff, having abandoned her Supplier of Choice program claims in her AC, is not permitted to resurrect those claims by filing her SAC.

The OC, filed on July 1, 2004, asserted claims under the Sherman Act based on an alleged plot by the De Beers Group to increase its control over the U.S. diamond market through the Supplier of Choice program, resulting in W.B. David's termination as a Sightholder.

Over three years later, on July 11, 2007, Plaintiff filed her AC, in which she omitted the factual allegations involving the Supplier of Choice program, and instead asserted claims based an alleged broad-based conspiracy to control the diamond industry. Because there [*24] was not a single reference to the Supplier of Choice Program in the AC, the Court, in its opinion dismissing the AC, found that the AC introduced a new set of operative facts, and therefore, did not relate back to the OC. See Tese-Milner II at 27-28. The Court permitted Plaintiff to replead only the claims against Defendant Diamond Trading, in order to allege with greater particularity her conspiracy claim against Diamond Trading. See id. (identifying Plaintiff's fundamental flaws in her AC, including her failure to (1) identify specific conduct by Diamond Trading that violated antitrust law; (2) allege an agreement between Diamond Trading and a non-De Beers Group Entity; and (3) allege a relevant market).

Another three years later, on April 13, 2010, Plaintiff filed her SAC. In the SAC, Plaintiff did not allege with greater particularity the broad-based conspiracy claims that she had alleged in her AC. Rather, she resurrected her Supplier of Choice claims, claims that she had abandoned three years earlier, and claims with which Defendant had not been presented for nearly six years.

There is nothing in the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure that allows a plaintiff to resurrect once-abandoned [*25] claims by (1) filing another complaint; (2) including those abandoned claims in that new complaint; and (3) contending that the new complaint relates back to the original complaint. Plaintiff nevertheless asks the Court to find that she did not abandon her Supplier of Choice claims, because those claims contained in the SAC relate back to the OC, notwithstanding the fact that those claims were dropped entirely from the AC.[6] Here, Plaintiff alleged a set of facts in her original complaint, did not include those facts in an amended complaint filed three years later, and then, almost another three years later, attempted to resurrect the original set of facts in her second amended complaint. Plaintiff is thus asking the Court to find that the Supplier of Choice claims in the third complaint relate back to the first complaint, even though they were omitted from the second complaint.

The Court rejects this argument. Relation-back cannot be used as a mechanism to revive abandoned claims.[7] Cf. Vogel v. Am. Kiosk Mgmt., 371 F. Supp. 2d 122, 129-30 (D. Conn. 2005) ("In many instances the procedure for,

[6] Plaintiff does not dispute that, absent relation back, her Supplier of Choice claims are barred by the statute of limitations. In the SAC, Plaintiff states that, on or about July 12, 2000, the De Beers group launched the Supplier of Choice program, which altered the way in which its Sightholders were selected. [*26] (SAC ¶ 95.) On June 3, 2003, W.B. David was notified that it failed to qualify as a Sightholder under the Supplier of Choice program. (Id. ¶ 109). After a six-month transition period (i.e., after December 2003), W.B. David ceased being a Sightholder, and was no longer able to able to purchase rough diamonds from Defendant. (Id.) At that point, W.B. David's termination was final; Plaintiff does not allege any attempt by W.B. David to regain its Sightholder status. Thus, based on a straightforward application of the statute of limitations, Plaintiff should have brought claims related to the Supplier of Choice program within four years after W.B. David learned that it would no longer be a Sightholder, i.e., by June 2007, and certainly no later than four years after its actual termination as a Sightholder, i.e., by December 2007. The SAC was not filed until April 2010.

[7] If the Court were to take Plaintiff's argument to its extreme conclusion, a plaintiff would be permitted, for example, to file a complaint alleging a breach of contract claim based on one set of facts, file dozens of amended complaints alleging breach of contact claims based on entirely different sets of facts, and then, twenty-years later, file a complaint alleging a breach of contact claim based on the original set of facts, asserting that the newest complaint relates back to the original complaint, simply and effect of, an amendment will be the same as a voluntary dismissal under 41(a)(1) because of the similarities [*27] between the governing rules.");[8] *Hollenberg v. AT&T Corp., No. 95 Civ. 9515, 2001 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 19447, 2001 WL 1518271, at 2 (S.D.N.Y. Nov. 28, 2001) (McKenna, J.) ("[D]iscontinuance does not toll the statute of limitations.") (citations omitted).

Plaintiff asserts that she never expressly withdrew any claims, but rather, amended her pleadings. Plaintiff characterizes her amendments as changes "in legal theory." (Pl. Supp. Br. at 2, 5 n.1.) In the AC, however, Plaintiff did not simply change her legal theory. Rather, she pleaded an entirely different set of operative facts to support her claim for antitrust injury. The OC's allegations concerning the Supplier of Choice program focused on the harm suffered by W.B. David as a result of it being deprived of its Sightholder status. The OC sought damages for a period of time following W.B. David's termination as a Sightholder in 2003. The AC, in contrast, focused on an alleged conspiracy between the De Beers Group and unidentified coconspirators. The AC sought damages from a period of time prior to 2003, during which W.B. David was a Sightholder and was allegedly being forced to overpay for diamonds.

The Federal Rules of Civil Procedure allow for the relation back of claims only when the court is confident that the defendant has notice of those claims. See Bridgeway Corp. v. Citibank, N.A., 132 F. Supp. 2d 297, 301 (S.D.N.Y. 2001) [*29] (Chin, J.) ("Under Rule 15(c), the essential inquiry in determining whether the new allegations relate back is whether the defendant was given adequate notice that such claims might be made upon examining the facts alleged in the original pleading.") (quotations and citations omitted). Plaintiff contends that the OC put Defendant on notice of her Supplier of Choice claims. Plaintiff is correct that the Defendant was on notice of the Supplier of Choice claims while the OC was pending. However, by not including the Supplier of Choice claims in her AC, Defendant was no longer on notice of those claims. When Plaintiff chose not to include her Supplier of Choice claims in her AC, it was reasonable for Defendant to believe that Plaintiff no longer wished to pursue a cause of action for antitrust injury based on the operative facts surrounding the Supplier of Choice program. As a result, for nearly three years between the filing of the AC and the filing of the SAC, Defendant was likely preparing to defend against claims arising out of a different set of operative facts. (See Def. Supp. Reply Mem. at 10.) The intervening complaint—the AC—essentially resulted in there being a lack of notice [*30] to Defendant with respect to Plaintiff's Supplier of Choice claims. Accordingly, it would be highly prejudicial to allow Plaintiff to relate back those claims that she abandoned nearly three years earlier.[9]

In sum, Plaintiff could have pled in the alternative, or kept her Supplier of Choice claims alive in [*31] some other manner in her AC, but she did not do so. Rather, she abandoned those claims, letting them lie dormant until the statute of limitations had run. For these reasons, the Court finds that Plaintiff's claims arising out of the Supplier of Choice Program have been abandoned, and cannot relate back to the OC.

3. The Supplier of Choice Claims and the Sullivan Release because the original complaint contained those same facts. That result is clearly not envisaged by the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure.

[8] Vogel is distinguishable from the instant facts, because, in Vogel, the plaintiff expressed intent to withdraw certain claims in an opposition to a motion to dismiss, rather than amend her complaint. Nevertheless, the Vogel decision makes clear that when a plaintiff makes an affirmative decision to no longer pursue certain claims, [*28] that decision is akin to a voluntary dismissal of those claims.

[9] It is true that courts have found that a second amended complaint can relate back to an original complaint. See *Prescott v. Annetts, No. 09 Civ. 4435, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 75025, 2010 WL 3020023, at 6 (S.D.N.Y. July 22, 2010) (McMahon, J.) (finding that the Section 1983 claims in plaintiff's first and second amended complaints are not time-barred because they relate back to the original complaint); *DeLong v. Soufiane, No. 05 cv. 5529, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 2944, 2010 WL 234781, at 3 (E.D.N.Y. Jan. 14, 2010) ("[T]he Court finds that all but two causes of action alleged in the Second Amended Complaint are timely because they relate back to the filing of the original Complaint."). However, in those decisions, there was no suggestion that the plaintiff had abandoned any set of claims in an intervening complaint, or that the plaintiff's original complaint contained a different operative set of facts than the subsequent amended complaints.

In addition to dismissing Plaintiff's Supplier of Choice claims on the basis that they have been abandoned and fall outside the applicable statute of limitations period, the Court may not consider Plaintiff's Supplier of Choice claims because they are barred by the Sullivan release, should the settlement remain in effect.[10] The Sullivan release states that the "Released Parties shall be released and forever discharged from any and all claims . . . concerning . . . (iii) methods of distribution or distribution programs of any Diamond Product (including but not limited to the Supplier of Choice program) including all means of selling or distributing any Diamond Product. . . ." Am. Settlement Agreement § V(A) (emphasis added). Notwithstanding the Release's explicit reference to "distribution programs of any Diamond Product [*32] (including but not limited to the Supplier of Choice program)," Plaintiff contends that her Supplier of Choice claims fall within the exception to the Release for direct purchaser claims of Sightholders. See id. § V(A) ("Nothing in the Settlement is intended to release any direct purchaser claim of any Sightholder.").[11]

Plaintiff's own characterization of her Supplier of Choice claims makes clear that her claims do not fall within the exception for "any direct purchaser claims of any Sightholder." According to Plaintiff, the Supplier of Choice program "resulted in closing most of the U.S. Rough Diamond Market to plaintiff." (SAC ¶ 120.) Plaintiff's Supplier of Choice claims are thus not based on any injury that W.B. David suffered as a result of purchasing diamonds from Defendant as a Sightholder; rather, they are based on the injury W.B. David suffered as a result of no longer being able to make direct purchases from Defendant. Through her Supplier [*33] of Choice claims, therefore, Plaintiff is alleging antitrust injury based on the fact that she is no longer a Sightholder. Because those claims do not arise out of direct purchases made as a Sightholder, they are precluded by the Sullivan release.

4. Conclusion

The Court dismisses Plaintiff's Supplier of Choice claims, finding that they have been abandoned, fall outside the applicable limitations period, and are barred by the Sullivan release.[12]

B. Claims Related to Defendant's Advertising and Marketing

Plaintiff challenges Defendant's advertising and marketing activity in the United States, including Defendant's U.S. Carat Club and Defendant's Millennium Diamonds Campaign (hereinafter, collectively "advertising and marketing" [*34] claims or activity),[13] as violations of Section 2 of the Sherman Act. (SAC ¶¶ 68-94.) The Court dismisses those claims because they fall outside the applicable limitations period.

The parties dispute whether Plaintiff's advertising and marketing claims relate back to the OC.[14] Plaintiff asserts that relation back is permissible because the OC contained allegations regarding Defendant's advertising and marketing activity and Defendant therefore had adequate notice of those claims. Plaintiff cites several paragraphs throughout the OC referencing those activities.[15] Defendant contends that there was nothing in the OC to suggest [10] See supra note 4.

[11] As noted above, the parties agree that the Sullivan release covers all of Plaintiff's claims against Defendant except any claims arising out of W.B. David's status as a Sightholder. See Tese-Milner I, 613 F. Supp. 2d at 409.

[12] Defendant also argues that Plaintiff's Supplier of Choice claims must be dismissed because Plaintiff has (1) failed to allege monopoly power in a relevant market; and (2) failed to allege the willful acquisition or maintenance of monopoly power, both of which are prerequisites for a Section 2 Sherman Act claim. The Court need not address those agreements because it has dismissed Plaintiff's Supplier of Choice claims under Section 2 of the Sherman Act for other reasons.

[13] The De Beers Group used the U.S. Carat Club as a way to meet with U.S. Sightholders, as well as other large U.S. manufacturers and retailers. (SAC ¶ 69.) The De Beers Group launched the Millennium Campaign to sell limited edition diamonds inscribed with the De Beers name. (SAC ¶ 80.)

[14] Plaintiff [*35] appears to acknowledge that her advertising and marketing claims must relate back to an earlier complaint in order for them to be timely. Plaintiff filed her SAC on April 13, 2010. Four years prior to that date, Plaintiff was admittedly no longer a Sightholder, and so any claims accruing after that date would be barred by the Sullivan Release. Any claims accruing before that date would have had to have been brought earlier than April 13, 2010.

that W.B. David was challenging Defendant's advertising and marketing activity as a basis for an antitrust claim because the paragraphs cited by Plaintiff do not challenge that conduct, but rather, tout W.B. David's involvement in those advertising and marketing activities.

Even assuming that the SAC's allegations regarding Defendant's advertising and marketing activity arise from the same operative facts as allegations contained in the OC, Plaintiff's advertising and marketing claims do not relate back to the OC for the same reasons that Plaintiff's Supplier of Choice claims do not relate back to the OC: they were abandoned in the AC.

The AC contains no reference to any facts surrounding Defendant's marketing and advertising activities. Nor can allegations about an amorphous, world-wide conspiracy with unidentified entities be read to encompass Plaintiff's advertising and marketing claims. By not including these advertising and marketing claims in her AC, Plaintiff conveyed to [*36] Defendant that she had abandoned those claims and made an affirmative litigation decision to no longer pursue a cause of action for antitrust injury based on those operative facts. The intervening complaint (the AC) deprived Defendant of notice with respect to Plaintiff's advertising and marketing claims. The Court thus finds that these claims do not relate back to the OC, and dismisses them as falling outside the statute of limitations period.[16][17]

C. Claims Related to Agreements between Defendant and Others

Plaintiff asserts that Defendant horizontally restrained supply in the U.S. Rough Diamond Market, in violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act, by entering into agreements with ALROSA, a Russian diamond mining company and a competitor of the De Beers Group. (SAC ¶¶ 35-47.) Plaintiff also asserts that Defendant vertically restrained trade, in violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act, by (1) entering into curtailment agreements with DCBM, a member of the De Beers Group; and (2) entering into sales agreements with the Government of Botswana. (SAC ¶¶ 48-62.) For the reasons that follow, these claims are dismissed.

1. DBCM

Plaintiff's claims regarding a conspiracy between Defendant and DBCM—or any other member of the De Beers Group—fail as a matter of law. As the Court has held earlier, "[i]n order to state a claim pursuant to Section 1 [of the Sherman Act], the SAC must name [at] least one, specific, non-De Beers entity that is allegedly [*38] acting in concert with Diamond Trading . . . . The SAC's failure to do so means that it would not survive a Rule 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss." Tese-Milner II at 32. See also Copperweld Corp. v. Independence Tube Corp., 467 U.S. 752, 777, 104 S. Ct. 2731, 81 L. Ed. 2d 628 (1984) (holding that a parent company and subsidiary are incapable of conspiring for purposes of Section 1 Sherman Act claims); Gucci v. Gucci Shops, Inc., 651 F. Supp. 194, 196 (S.D.N.Y. 1986) (Conner, J.) (applying Copperweld to sister corporations); N. Atl. Utils., Inc. v. Keyspan Corp., 307 A.D. 2d 342, 343, 762 N.Y.S.2d 820 (App. Div. 2003) (applying Copperweld to Donnelly Act claims). Accordingly, Plaintiff's claims involving an alleged conspiracy between Defendant and one or more members of the De Beers Group are dismissed.

2. ALROSA

[15] See OC ¶¶ 165-70, 189, 318, & 331.

[16] Plaintiff does not cite specific dates with respect to her advertising and marketing claims. (See SAC ¶¶ 68-79; 92-94.) In the event that the Sullivan settlement is vacated, Plaintiff is granted leave to replead any claims surrounding Defendant's advertising and marketing activity that are timely as measured from the SAC (accounting for the fact that the Court has found that Plaintiff's advertising and marketing claims in the SAC do not relate back to the OC).

[17] Defendant also argues that Plaintiff's advertising and marketing claims must be dismissed because Plaintiff has (1) failed to allege monopoly power in a relevant market and (2) failed to allege the willful acquisition or maintenance of monopoly power, both of which are prerequisites [*37] for a Section 2 Sherman Act claim. The Court need not address those arguments because it has dismissed Plaintiff's advertising and marketing claims under Section 2 of the Sherman Act for other reasons.

In the SAC, Plaintiff alleges that a 2001 supply agreement between De Beers Centenary A.G. ("DBCAG") and ALROSA constitutes a horizontal restraint of trade in violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act. (SAC ¶ 38.) Plaintiff asserts that "Diamond Trading and other members of the De Beers Group conspired with DBCAG and ALROSA to fix prices and control the supply of rough diamonds in the U.S. Rough Diamond Market through the Alrosa agreement." [*39] (SAC ¶ 40.)

Although the ALROSA agreement was mentioned in the OC,[18] the AC did not contain a single reference to ALROSA or to any sales agreement with ALROSA. If it had, the Court, in its February 24, 2010 opinion, might have found that certain parts of the AC related back to the OC. However, like Plaintiff's Supplier of Choice claims and her advertising and marketing claims, the Court finds that the ALROSA claims were abandoned in the AC. The Defendant did not have notice of those claims in the three years between the AC and the SAC, and so relation back is not permissible.

Moreover, even assuming, arguendo, that the ALROSA claims were not abandoned in the AC, the SAC fails to identify Defendant as a party to the 2001 agreement with ALROSA. See SAC ¶ 38 (describing the December 17 2001 agreement as "entered into by DBCAG [De Beers Centenary AG] and Alrosa"). Rather, the SAC contains the broad assertion that, through the 2001 agreement between ALROSA and DBCAG, "Diamond Trading and other members of the De Beers Group conspired with DBCAG and Alrosa to control the [*40] supply of rough diamonds." (SAC ¶ 40.) Finally, the SAC suggests that the ALROSA agreement never went into effect, stating that it "was reviewed and ultimately rejected by the European Commission as anticompetitive." (SAC ¶ ¶ 38; 47; see also Def. Mem. at 9 n.5.)

3. Botswana

In the SAC, Plaintiff challenges sales agreements, dated 2001 and 2005, between various members of the De Beers Group and the Government of Botswana. Plaintiff states that, pursuant to those agreements, "the government of Botswana agreed to sell to De Beers all diamonds mined in Botswana by [] Debswana, the joint venture between the government of Botswana and [] Deliebs, a company registered in the British Virgin Island and owned by DBSA [De Beers S.A.]." (SAC ¶ 55.)

The 2005 agreement with Botswana post-dates W.B. David's time as a Sightholder. Accordingly, claims relating to that agreement are barred by the Sullivan Release. See Tese-Milner I, 613 F. Supp. 2d at 409 ("The parties agree that the settlement limits Plaintiff's claims in the instant case to those based on W.B. David's purchases as a Sightholder . . . .").[19]

With respect to the 2001 agreement, neither the OC nor the AC contains any mention of the Government of Botswana or Debswana. Plaintiff does not dispute this fact, but rather, asserts that the allegations regarding Botswana that are found in the SAC "arise out of the same type of conduct, the formation of sales agreements to maintain Defendant's dominance in the rough diamond market, as that which was alleged in the Original Complaint." (Pl. Supp. Br. at 6 n.2.) Although Plaintiff is seemingly alluding to the OC's reference to the ALROSA agreement, that reference would not have put Defendant on notice of an alleged conspiracy with an entirely different entity that was not mentioned in the OC or in the AC. For these reasons, the SAC's allegations concerning a 2001 agreement with the Government of Botswana do not relate back to the OC.

4. Conclusion

For the foregoing reasons, Plaintiff's claims regarding agreements between Defendant and DBCM, Defendant and ALROSA, and Defendant and the Government of Botswana are dismissed.[20]

---

[18] See OC ¶¶ 232-35 (Section titled "De Beers Agreement with ALROSA—De Beers Increases its Rough Diamond Market Control").

[19] In the event that the Sullivan settlement is vacated, Plaintiff is granted leave to replead [*41] any claims surrounding Defendant's 2005 agreement with the Government of Botswana.

D. Plaintiff's Remaining Claims

Plaintiff also brings claims for combination and conspiracy to restrain trade in violation of the Wilson Act, 15 U.S.C. § 8, and for combination and conspiracy to monopolize and restrain trade in violation of the Donnelly Act, N.Y. Gen. Bus. Law § 340. (SAC ¶¶ 151-161.)

Plaintiff's claim under the Wilson [*43] Act is dismissed on the same grounds as her Sherman Act claims. See Hunt v. Mobil Oil Corp., 550 F.2d 68, 75 n.8 (2d Cir. 1977) ("In so far as the substantive antitrust provisions of the Wilson Tariff Act are concerned, they follow the same pattern as the Sherman Act.") (citing United States v. Cooper Corp., 312 U.S. 600, 608, 61 S. Ct. 742, 85 L. Ed. 1071 (1941).)

Plaintiff's claim under the Donnelly Act is also dismissed. The Donnelly Act "was closely patterned after the Sherman Act and has been narrowly construed to encompass only those causes of action falling within the Sherman Act." *Gatt Commc'ns, Inc. v. PMC Assocs., L.L.C., No. 10 Civ. 8, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 29072, 2011 WL 1044898, at 4 (S.D.N.Y. Mar. 10, 2011) (Batts, J.) (citations omitted); see also Great Atl. & Pac. Tea Co., Inc. v. Town of East Hampton, 997 F. Supp. 340, 352 (E.D.N.Y. 1998) ("The Donnelly Act is patterned after the Sherman Anti-Trust Act . . . and is generally construed in light of federal precedent.").

V. Conclusion

For the reasons stated herein, Defendant's motion to dismiss Plaintiff's SAC is GRANTED.

When a court dismisses a complaint, a "court should freely given leave [to amend]when justice so requires." Fed. R. Civ. P. 15(a)(2). Yet, "it is well established [*44] that leave to amend a complaint need not be granted when amendment would be futile." *Richardson v. Dept. of Corrections of N.Y.S., No. 10 cv. 6137, 2011 WL 4091491, at 5 (S.D.N.Y Sept. 13, 2011) (Scheindlin, J.) (citations omitted). Here, because Plaintiff's claims have been dismissed, inter alia, on statute of limitations grounds, the Court finds that any amended complaint would be futile.

However, in the event that the Sullivan settlement is vacated, Plaintiff is granted leave to replead (1) any claims surrounding Defendant's advertising and marketing activity that are timely as measured from the SAC (accounting for the fact that Plaintiff's advertising and marketing claims in the SAC do not relate back to the OC), and (2) any claims related to Defendant's 2005 agreement with the Government of Botswana. In addition, in its February 24, 2010 opinion, the Court dismissed Plaintiff's action against defendant Diamdel N.V. "without prejudice to refile if the Sullivan class action settlement is not finalized."[21] Tese-Milner II, at 5 n.1.

The Clerk of Court is directed to close the docket in this matter.

The parties shall inform the Court within ninety days whether the Sullivan settlement agreement has been vacated.

SO ORDERED.

Dated: New York, New York

---

[20] Defendant also argues that Plaintiff's Section 1 Sherman Act claims related to the [*42] ALROSA and Botswana agreements are barred by the Act of State doctrine, which "precludes the courts in this country from inquiring into the validity of the public acts a recognized foreign sovereign power committed within its own territory." Banco Nacional de Cuba v. Sabbatino, 376 U.S. 398, 400, 84 S. Ct. 923, 11 L. Ed. 2d 804 (1964); O.N.E. Shipping LTD v. Flota Mercante Grancolombiana, S.A., 830 F.2d 449, 453-54 (2d Cir. 1987) (affirming dismissal of antitrust claims on Act of State grounds). Defendant further argues that Plaintiff's Sherman Act Section 1 claims must be dismissed because Plaintiff has failed to allege a plausible relevant market and has failed to show how Defendant restrained competition. The Court need not address Defendant's Act of State argument, or any of its additional arguments, because it has dismissed Plaintiff's Sherman Act Section 1 claims for other reasons.

[21] The Court noted however, "that Plaintiff [could] assert against Diamdel N.V. only claims that accrued on or after the date on which the Amended Complaint [*45] was filed." Tese-Milner II, at 5 n.1.

HN2[] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

In considering whether a complaint is sufficient to withstand a motion to dismiss under Ala. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6), a court must accept the allegations of the complaint as true. The appropriate standard of review under Rule 12(b)(6) is whether, when the allegations of the complaint are viewed most strongly in the pleader's favor, it appears that the pleader could prove any set of circumstances that would entitle it to relief. In determining whether this is true, a court considers only whether the plaintiff may possibly prevail, not whether the plaintiff will ultimately prevail. Put another way, a Rule 12(b)(6) dismissal is proper only when it appears beyond doubt that the plaintiff can prove no set of facts in support of the claim that would entitle the plaintiff to relief.

HN3[] State Sovereign Immunity, State Immunity

Ala. Const. art. I, § 14 provides generally that the State of Alabama shall never be made a defendant in any court of law or equity. The immunity afforded the State by § 14 applies to instrumentalities of the State and State officers sued in their official capacities when such an action is effectively an action against the State. Courts specifically extend the restriction on suits against the State found in § 14 to the State's institutions of higher learning and hold those institutions absolutely immune from suit as agencies of the State. This § 14 bar also prohibits actions against officers, trustees, and employees of State universities in their official capacities.

HN4[] State Sovereign Immunity, State Immunity

Certain causes of action are not barred by Ala. Const. art. I, § 14. There are four general categories of actions which do not come within the prohibition of § 14: (1) actions brought to compel State officials to perform their legal duties; (2) actions brought to enjoin State officials from enforcing an unconstitutional law; (3) actions to compel State officials to perform ministerial acts; and (4) actions brought under the Declaratory Judgments Act seeking construction of a statute and its application in a given situation. Other actions which are not prohibited by § 14 are: (5) valid inverse condemnation actions brought against State officials in their representative capacity; and (6) actions for injunction or damages brought against State officials in their representative capacity and individually where it was alleged that they had acted fraudulently, in bad faith, beyond their authority or in a mistaken interpretation of law. These actions are sometimes referred to as exceptions to § 14; however, in actuality these actions are simply not considered to be actions "against the State" for § 14 purposes. An action is one against the State when a favorable result for the plaintiff would directly affect a contract or property right of the State, or would result in the plaintiff's recovery of money from the State.

Nothing in the language of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 et. seq., or in its history suggests that its purpose was to restrain a State or its officers or agents from activities directed by its legislature. In a dual system of government in which, under the Constitution, the States are sovereign, save only as Congress may constitutionally subtract from their authority, an unexpressed purpose to nullify a State's control over its officers and agents is not lightly to be attributed to Congress.

HN10[] Exemptions & Immunities, Parker State Action Doctrine

The Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 et. seq., makes no mention of the State as such, and gives no hint that it was intended to restrain State action or official action directed by a State. The Act is applicable to persons, including corporations, 15 U.S.C.S. § 7, and it authorizes suits under it by persons and corporations. 15 U.S.C.S. § 15. A State may maintain a suit for damages under it, but the United States may not -- conclusions derived not from the literal meaning of the words "person" and "corporation" but from the purpose, the subject matter, the context and the legislative history of the statute. There is no suggestion of a purpose to restrain state action in the Act's legislative history. It prevents only business combinations. That its purpose is to suppress combinations to restrain competition and attempts to monopolize by individuals and corporations, abundantly appears from its legislative history.

Like the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 et. seq., there is nothing in the text of Ala. Code § 6-5-60 that would indicate that the Alabama Legislature intended to restrain State actors by way of § 6-5-60.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > Scope

HN14[] Exemptions & Immunities, Parker State Action Doctrine

In an antitrust action, the prerequisite of a clearly articulated policy does not mean that an alleged anti-competitive agreement must be specifically blessed by the legislature for the state-action immunity to apply. A clear articulation does not require the State to declare explicitly that it expects anticompetitive conduct to result from legislation; instead, a clear articulation merely requires that anticompetitive conduct is the foreseeable result of the legislation.

Ala. Code § 41-16-27(g) exempts certain contracts, including those for food services, negotiated on behalf of universities from the State's mandatory-bid requirements. However, § 41-16-27(g) does not grant universities the authority to execute contracts for food services; rather, by exempting those specific contracts from the mandatory-bid process, it implicitly recognizes that that authority exists.

HN18[] Exemptions & Immunities, Parker State Action Doctrine

Foreseeability is an intrinsically factual issue that a jury, not a trial court considering a motion to dismiss, should resolve. However, courts applying the state-action-immunity doctrine routinely resolve foreseeability concerns on motions to dismiss. Federal courts applying the state-action-immunity doctrine typically resolve these issues without resort to a jury.

It is the rare case involving the defense of discretionary immunity that would be properly disposed of by a dismissal pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6). The distinction between discretionary functions and ministerial functions is often cloudy and difficult to discern.

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Affirmative Defenses > Immunity

HN20[] Affirmative Defenses, Immunity

Immunity issues should be decided as early as possible once raised. One of the purposes of immunity, absolute or qualified, is to spare a defendant not only unwarranted liability, but unwarranted demands customarily imposed upon those defending a long drawn out lawsuit.

Ala. Const. art. IV, § 93 states in part that the State shall not be interested in any private or corporate enterprise. The restraints of § 93 concerning being interested in any private or corporate enterprise are construed to mean, with certain exceptions, that the State may not engage, alone or in concert with others, in the business of any type generally characterized as private enterprise. Section 93 does not apply to public corporations. A public corporation is a separate entity from the State and from any local political subdivision thereof.

HN23[] State Sovereign Immunity, State Immunity

The immunity that comes from Ala. Const. art. I, § 14 and that is associated with being part of the State, does not automatically attach to all public corporations; some public corporations are entitled to it while others are not. Whether a lawsuit against a body created by legislative enactment is a suit against the state depends on the character of power delegated to the body, the relation of the body to the State, and the nature of the function performed by the body. All factors in the relationship must be examined to determine whether the suit is against an arm of the State or merely against a franchisee licensed for some beneficial purpose.

Civil Procedure > ... > Federal & State Interrelationships > State Sovereign Immunity > State Immunity

HN24[] State Sovereign Immunity, State Immunity

State university boards of trustees may be considered the State for purposes of Ala. Const. art. I, § 14 state immunity, while nevertheless maintaining a status distinct from the State for Ala. Const. art. IV, § 93 purposes because they are organized as public corporations.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > Local Governments & Private Parties

HN25[] Parker State Action Doctrine, Local Governments & Private Parties

The Midcal test applied by courts when determining whether to extend state-action immunity to nonstate parties typically requires a showing that the alleged anticompetitive conduct is actively supervised by the State. However, this requirement is relaxed when the particular circumstances of the case make it unnecessary.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > Local Governments & Private Parties

HN26[] Parker State Action Doctrine, Local Governments & Private Parties

The mere potential for state supervision is not an adequate substitute for a decision by the State.

HN28[] Legislation, Statutory Remedies & Rights

A private right of action cannot be presumed; rather, one claiming a private right of action within a statutory scheme must show clear evidence of a legislative intent to impose civil liability for a violation of the statute.

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Standing > Personal Stake

Governments > Legislation > Statutory Remedies & Rights

HN29[] Standing, Personal Stake

The general rule is that when a statute imposes a duty for the benefit or protection of particular individuals or classes of individuals, a violation of that duty gives a right of action to any person for whose benefit or protection the statute was enacted. However, by its very terms, this rule grants a right of action only to those individuals for whose benefit the statute was enacted.

Education Law > Administration & Operation > Tuition > Student Fees

Governments > Legislation > Statutory Remedies & Rights

HN30[] Tuition, Student Fees

The plain language of Ala. Code § 16-1-32 indicates that it was enacted to open the market for university-issued debit cards to off-campus merchants and to prevent such merchants from being charged excessive transaction fees. Thus, § 16-1-32 was enacted for the benefit of merchants, not students. Although it is possible that excessive transaction fees, if allowed, would be passed on from merchants to students (and the public in general) in the form of higher across-the-board prices, there is no indication that the legislature intended to address that indirect possibility in § 16-1-32. Because § 16-1-32 was not enacted for the direct benefit of students, courts will not read into it the creation of a cause of action available to students.

Torts > Intentional Torts > Conversion > Elements

HN31[] Conversion, Elements

To establish conversion, one must present proof of a wrongful taking, an illegal assumption of ownership, an illegal use or misuse of another's property, or a wrongful detention or interference with another's property. Possession obtained through fraud, artifice, stealth, or trickery without the consent of the owner is wrongful and will support an action for conversion. In order to constitute conversion, nonconsent to the possession and the disposition of the property by defendant is indispensable.

[*329] STUART, Justice.

On August 11, 2010, students and former students (hereinafter referred to as "the students") of the University of Alabama ("UA"), Auburn University ("Auburn"), and the University of Alabama at Birmingham ("UAB") (hereinafter referred to collectively as "the universities") filed three separate class-action lawsuits in the Jefferson Circuit Court challenging the legality of so-called "dining-dollars" programs implemented by the universities and pursuant to which all undergraduate students are required to pay a mandatory dining fee each semester, which is then credited back to the students in the form of "dining dollars" that could be spent only at on-campus dining outlets controlled exclusively by the food-service vendors for the universities -- Aramark Educational Services, Inc., at UA; Compass Group, USA, Inc., d/b/a/ Chartwells at Auburn; and Sodexo, Inc., at UAB (hereinafter referred [2] to collectively as "the food-service vendors"). On December 29, 2010, the trial court dismissed the three actions, and the students now appeal. We have consolidated the three appeals for the purpose of writing one opinion. We affirm.

I.

In 1992, UA hired the Cornyn Fasano Group ("CFG"), a food-service-management consulting firm, to study the dining services available at UA and to make recommendations on how to better administer those services. CFG submitted its final report to UA in July 1995, and among the recommendations made in that report were the recommendations that UA implement a mandatory dining fee for all full-time undergraduate students and that UA contract with a third-party company to administer all food services on the UA Tuscaloosa campus.

Approximately a month after receiving the CFG report, UA issued a notice requesting proposals from vendors interested in operating its on-campus food services. Aramark submitted a proposal in October 1995 and, in June 1996, entered into a contract with UA to operate all food services on the UA Tuscaloosa campus, including vending machines, traditional dining halls for students living on campus, and other restaurant and café outlets. Pursuant [3] to the terms of the contract, Aramark made an initial payment to UA to help finance the renovation of campus dining facilities and also agreed to pay UA an annual commission on all on-campus food sales with a minimum annual guaranteed return. In turn, UA agreed to provide Aramark use of all on-campus dining facilities and to complete renovations of certain facilities. UA also agreed to impose a mandatory dining fee upon all fulltime undergraduate students in the amount of $200 per semester, which would be credited back to the students as dining dollars.[1] Students could then access the dining dollars in their accounts by swiping their student ID cards as payment at the Aramark outlets on campus.[2] At the conclusion of the academic year, students with [*330] unspent dining dollars could request a refund of those remaining funds.

In subsequent years, UAB and Auburn each decided to revamp their on-campus food services in a similar fashion. In June 2005, UAB entered into a contract with Sodexo [4] that was substantially similar to the contract UA had entered into with Aramark -- Sodexo provided funds for the renovation and/or construction of on-campus dining facilities and agreed to pay UAB a commission on all food sold by Sodexo while UAB granted Sodexo exclusive control of all food services at UAB. UAB also implemented a dining-dollars program pursuant to which each full-time undergraduate student was charged a mandatory dining fee of $225 each semester, then credited back an equal amount of dining dollars to be used exclusively at Sodexo outlets on campus.

Auburn thereafter implemented its own dining-dollars program beginning with the freshman class entering in the fall semester of 2008.[3] In July 2007, Auburn entered into a contract with Chartwells, pursuant to which Chartwells was made the exclusive provider of food services at Auburn in return for paying Auburn a commission on all food-service sales and helping to fund capital improvements to on-campus dining facilities. Auburn agreed to begin imposing a mandatory dining fee of $995 per semester upon all students living on campus and $300 per semester upon those students living off campus.[4] An amount equal to that fee was [5] then placed in a dining-dollars account linked to each student's ID card, and the student could then spend those funds at Chartwells food outlets on campus. Unlike students at UA, students at Auburn and UAB cannot apply for a refund of the unused dining dollars in their accounts at the end of the academic year, and the programs at Auburn and UAB have not been expanded to include any off-campus dining establishments.

On August 11, 2010, groups of students and former students at UA, UAB, and Auburn who had paid the mandatory dining fee at their respective universities filed three separate actions in the Jefferson Circuit Court. The students

[1] The fee was later raised to $300 per semester.

[2] The dining-dollars program at UA was eventually modified to allow students to spend their dining dollars at approximately four off-campus dining establishments.

[3] It appears that Auburn, unlike UA and UAB, may not officially use the term "dining dollars" in association with its mandatory dining fee; however, for convenience, and because of the similarities between the dining programs administered by the universities, that term is used in this opinion to refer to Auburn's dining program as well.

[4] Students enrolled in classes prior to the fall 2008 semester are exempt from paying the mandatory dining fee.

named as defendants in those actions the boards of trustees governing the universities and certain university [6] administrators, as well as the food-service vendors (hereinafter referred to collectively as "the defendants").[5] The students specifically alleged that the universities' exclusive contracts with their respective food-service vendors violated § 6-5-60, Ala. Code 1975, inasmuch as those contracts created "an unlawful trust, combine, or monopoly" and that those contracts were unconstitutional in that they violated the prohibition in Ala. Const. 1901, Art. IV, § 93, against the State's "be[ing] interested in any private or corporate enterprise." [*331] The students suing UA and Auburn -- but not the students suing UAB -- also alleged that UA and Auburn had violated § 16-1-32(d), Ala. Code 1975, because the student ID cards at those universities were effectively acting as university-issued debit cards and the transaction fees associated with their use were accordingly prohibited by law from exceeding five percent, yet, when the commissions due under the food-services contracts were included, those fees were more than three times that statutory limit. Finally, the students also alleged that the universities and food-service vendors had unlawfully converted their funds and transformed them from [7] lawful currency into dining dollars. The students sought class certification for their claims, a judgment declaring the universities' contracts with the food-service vendors to be illegal, and both injunctive relief and money damages.[6]

Along with the complaints, the students also served interrogatories, requests for [8] production, and requests for admissions upon the defendants. The defendants thereafter moved to stay discovery and for an extension of time in which to file motions to dismiss, and, on September 24, 2010, the trial court granted those motions, ordering that all motions to dismiss be filed by October 1, 2010. On that date, the defendants filed motions to dismiss the complaints for failure to state a claim upon which relief could be granted, pursuant to Rule 12(b)(6), Ala. R. Civ. P., and, on December 29, 2010, after conducting a consolidated hearing, the trial court granted the defendants' motions and dismissed all pending claims with prejudice. On February 9, 2011, the students filed these appeals.

II.

We explained the standard of review applicable to an appeal of a trial court's judgment dismissing a case pursuant to Rule 12(b)(6) as follows in Crosslin v. Health Care Authority of Huntsville, 5 So. 3d 1193, 1195 (Ala. 2008):

> HN2[] "In considering whether a complaint is sufficient to withstand a motion to dismiss under Rule 12(b)(6), Ala. R. Civ. P., a court 'must accept the allegations of the complaint as true.' Creola Land Dev., Inc. v. Bentbrooke Housing, L.L.C., 828 So. 2d 285, 288 (Ala. 2002) [9] (emphasis omitted). '"The appropriate standard of review under Rule 12(b)(6)[, Ala. R. Civ. P.,] is whether, when the allegations of the complaint are viewed most strongly in the pleader's favor, it appears that the pleader could prove any set of circumstances that would entitle [it] to relief."' Smith v. National Sec. Ins. Co., 860 So. 2d 343, 345 (Ala. 2003) (quoting Nance v. Matthews*, 622 So. 2d 297, 299 (Ala. 1993))*. In determining whether this is true, a court considers only whether the plaintiff may possibly prevail, not whether the plaintiff will ultimately prevail. Id. Put another way, '"a Rule 12(b)(6) dismissal is proper only when it appears beyond doubt that the plaintiff can prove no set of facts in support of the claim that would entitle the plaintiff to relief."' Id. (emphasis added)."

III.

The students argue that the trial court erred in dismissing: (1) their antitrust claims; (2) their § 93 unlawful-state-interest-in-a-private-enterprise constitutional [*332] claims; (3) their § 16-1-32(d) excessive-transaction-fee claims; and (4) their conversion claims. We will consider each group of claims in that order; however, inasmuch as the

[5] The universities are controlled by two boards of trustees. The board of trustees for the University of Alabama system controls both UA and UAB; Auburn has a separate board of trustees. The university administrators named as defendants by the students, all sued solely in their official capacities, were: (1) C. Ray Hayes, vice chancellor for financial affairs for the University of Alabama system; (2) Sarah B. Newton, then president pro tempore of the Auburn board of trustees; and (3) Dr. Donald L. Large, executive vice president and chief financial officer at Auburn.

[6] The students sought money damages only from the food-services vendors, presumably because this Court has held that HN1[] "to the extent that [an] action seeks money damages from the State, it is barred by the doctrine of sovereign immunity." Ex parte Murphy, [Ms. 1090699, May 13, 2011] __ So. 3d __, __, 72 So. 3d 1202, 2011 Ala. LEXIS 71 (Ala. 2011).

students have named certain public entities [10] and officials -- the boards of trustees and administrators of the universities -- as defendants, we first must consider the applicability of HN3[] Ala. Const. 1901, Art. I, § 14, which provides generally that "the State of Alabama shall never be made a defendant in any court of law or equity."

This Court has held that the immunity afforded the State by § 14 applies to instrumentalities of the State and State officers sued in their official capacities when such an action is effectively an action against the State. Lyons v. River Road Constr., Inc., 858 So. 2d 257, 261 (Ala. 2003). We have specifically "extended the restriction on suits against the State found in § 14 'to the state's institutions of higher learning' and ha[ve] held those institutions absolutely immune from suit as agencies of the State." Ex parte Troy Univ., 961 So. 2d 105, 109 (Ala. 2006) (quoting Taylor v. Troy State Univ., 437 So. 2d 472, 474 (Ala. 1983)). This § 14 bar also prohibits "actions against officers, trustees, and employees of state universities in their official capacities." Alabama Agric. & Mech. Univ. v. Jones, 895 So. 2d 867, 873 (Ala. 2004). We have, however, stated that HN4[] certain causes of action are not barred [11] by § 14:

> ""'There are four general categories of actions which in Aland v. Graham, 287 Ala. 226, 250 So. 2d 677 (1971), we stated do not come within the prohibition of § 14: (1) actions brought to compel State officials to perform their legal duties; (2) actions brought to enjoin State officials from enforcing an unconstitutional law; (3) actions to compel State officials to perform ministerial acts; and (4) actions brought under the Declaratory Judgments Act ... seeking construction of a statute and its application in a given situation. 287 Ala. at 229-230, 250 So.2d 677. Other actions which are not prohibited by § 14 are: (5) valid inverse condemnation actions brought against State officials in their representative capacity; and (6) actions for injunction or damages brought against State officials in their representative capacity and individually where it was alleged that they had acted fraudulently, in bad faith, beyond their authority or in a mistaken interpretation of law. Wallace v. Board of Education of Montgomery County, ... 280 Ala. [635] at 639, 197 So. 2d 428 [(1967)]; Unzicker v. State, 346 So. 2d 931, 933 (Ala. 1977); Engelhardt v. Jenkins, 273 Ala. 352, 141 So. 2d 193 (1962).'"
> "Drummond Co. v. Alabama Dep't of Transp., 937 So. 2d 56, 58 (Ala. 2006) [12] (quoting [Ex parte] Carter, 395 So.2d [65,] 68 [(Ala. 1980)]) (emphasis omitted). These actions are sometimes referred to as 'exceptions' to § 14; however, in actuality these actions are simply not considered to be actions '"against the State" for § 14 purposes.' Patterson v. Gladwin Corp., 835 So. 2d 137, 142 (Ala. 2002). This Court has qualified those 'exceptions,' noting that '"[a]n action is one against the [S]tate when a favorable result for the plaintiff would directly affect a contract or property right of the State, or would result in the plaintiff's recovery of money from the [S]tate."' Alabama Agric. & Mech. Univ. v. Jones, 895 So. 2d 867, 873 (Ala. 2004) (quoting Shoals Cmty. Coll. v. Colagross, 674 So. 2d 1311, 1314 (Ala. Civ. App. 1995)) (emphasis added in Jones)."

[*333] Alabama Dep't of Transp. v. Harbert Int'l, Inc., 990 So. 2d 831, 840 (Ala. 2008). As clarified in Harbert, HN5[] these "exceptions," including the exception for actions seeking a declaratory judgment under the Declaratory Judgments Act, apply only to actions against State officials, not actions against State agencies. Id. at 841. The defendant boards of trustees are corporate bodies governing the universities, and [13] there is no exception to the immunity afforded the State by § 14 that would permit the trial court to entertain an action against them, regardless of whether monetary, injunctive, or declaratory relief is being sought. Accordingly, the boards of trustees are due to be dismissed as parties with regard to all the claims alleged by the students, and we need only consider those claims as they relate to the university administrators and the food-service vendors.[7]

The students' first claim is that the dining-dollars programs violate § 6-5-60, which states, in relevant part:

[7] However, although the students may seek injunctive and declaratory relief against the university administrators, § 14 still immunizes those State officials from any claim for money damages. Harbert, 990 So. 2d at 839-41.

> HN6[] "(a) Any person, firm, or corporation injured or damaged by an unlawful trust, combine or monopoly, or its effect, direct or indirect, may, in each instance of such injury or damage, recover the sum of $500 and all actual damages from any person, firm, or corporation creating, operating, aiding, or abetting such trust, combine, or monopoly and may commence the action therefor against any one or more of [14] the parties to the trust, combine, or monopoly, or their attorneys, officers, or agents, who aid or abet such trust, combine, or monopoly."

The trial court granted the defendants' motions to dismiss the students' § 6-5-60 antitrust claims on the basis of HN7[] the state-action-immunity doctrine, a tenet of antitrust law that holds states and their instrumentalities immune from antitrust violations if their alleged anticompetitive behavior was in accordance with a clearly articulated and affirmatively expressed policy of the State. Mobile Cnty. Water, Sewer & Fire Prot. Auth., Inc. v. Mobile Area Water & Sewer Sys., Inc., 567 F. Supp. 2d 1342, 1349 (S.D. Ala. 2008). On appeal, the students argue (1) that the state-action-immunity doctrine is not applicable to their antitrust claims because those claims are made under state, not federal, law, and (2) that the application of the state-action-immunity doctrine is inappropriate in this case even if it does apply to state antitrust claims. For the reasons that follow, we reject both arguments.

It is well settled that HN8[] "[t]he federal law relating to monopolization governs Alabama antitrust actions." McCluney v. Zap Prof'l Photography, Inc., 663 So. 2d 922, 926 (Ala. 1995) [15] (citing Ex parte Rice, 259 Ala. 570, 67 So. 2d 825 (1953)). The state-action-immunity doctrine has been a part of that federal antitrust law since 1943 when it was first articulated by the Supreme Court of the United States in Parker v. Brown, 317 U.S. 341, 63 S. Ct. 307, 87 L. Ed. 315 (1943). The United States Supreme Court summarized Parker and the origin of the state-action-immunity doctrine as follows in Community Communications Co. v. City of Boulder, 455 U.S. 40, 48-49, 102 S. Ct. 835, 70 L. Ed. 2d 810 (1982):

> "[Parker] addressed the question whether the federal antitrust laws prohibited a State, in the exercise of its sovereign powers, from imposing certain anticompetitive restraints. These took the form of a 'marketing program' adopted by the State of California for [*334] the 1940 raisin crop; that program prevented appellee from freely marketing his crop in interstate commerce. Parker noted that California's program 'derived its authority ... from the legislative command of the state,' id., at 350, and went on to hold that the program was therefore exempt, by virtue of the Sherman Act's own limitations, from antitrust attack:
> > "'We find HN9[] nothing in the language of the Sherman Act or in its history which suggests that its purpose was to restrain [16] a state or its officers or agents from activities directed by its legislature. In a dual system of government in which, under the Constitution, the states are sovereign, save only as Congress may constitutionally subtract from their authority, an unexpressed purpose to nullify a state's control over its officers and agents is not lightly to be attributed to Congress.' Id., at 350-351."

Notwithstanding the fact that this Court has previously cited Parker and applied state-action-immunity principles to a state antitrust claim in Twine v. Liberty National Life Insurance Co., 294 Ala. 43, 47, 311 So. 2d 299, 302 (1975), the students argue that the state-action-immunity doctrine should not apply to state antitrust claims because, they say, the doctrine was formulated to address federalism and state-sovereignty concerns, and there can be no such concerns when it is alleged that only state, as opposed to federal, antitrust laws have been violated. Applying the state-action-immunity doctrine in such cases, the students argue, would be illogical, effectively "giving a state agency 'state immunity' from limitations directed specifically to the state." (Students' brief in case no. 1100557, p. [17] 38.)

However, this argument fails to recognize that the limitations implicit in § 6-5-60 are not directed specifically to the State; rather, they are directed to "any person, firm, or corporation creating, operating, aiding, or abetting such [a] trust, combine, or monopoly." (Emphasis added.) Indeed, while federalism and state-sovereignty principles may have been the primary impetus behind the formulation of the state-action-immunity doctrine, they are not the only basis for the doctrine. It is also evident from Parker that the doctrine was derived from the plain language of the Sherman Act:

> HN10[] "The Sherman Act makes no mention of the state as such, and gives no hint that it was intended to restrain state action or official action directed by a state. The Act is applicable to 'persons' including corporations, § 7, 15 U.S.C.A., and it authorizes suits under it by persons and corporations. § 15. A state may maintain a suit for damages under it, State of Georgia v. Evans, 316 U.S. 159, 62 S. Ct. 972, 86 L. Ed. 1346 [(1942)], but the United States may not, United States v. Cooper Corp., 312 U.S. 600, 61 S. Ct. 742, 85 L. Ed. 1071 [(1941)] -- conclusions derived not from the literal meaning of the words 'person' and 'corporation' but from the purpose, [18] the subject matter, the context and the legislative history of the statute.
> "There is no suggestion of a purpose to restrain state action in the Act's legislative history. The sponsor of the bill which was ultimately enacted as the Sherman Act declared that it prevented only 'business combinations'. 21 Cong. Rec. 2562, 2457; see also at 2459, 2461. That its purpose was to suppress combinations to restrain competition and attempts to monopolize by individuals and corporations, abundantly appears from its legislative history. See Apex Hosiery Co. v. Leader, 310 U.S. 469, 492, 493, 60 S. Ct. 982, 84 L. Ed. 1311 and note 15 [(1940)]; United States v. Addyston [*335] Pipe & Steel Co., 6 Cir., 85 F. 271 [(1898)], affirmed 175 U.S. 211, 20 S. Ct. 96, 44 L. Ed. 136 [(1899)]; Standard Oil Co. v. United States, 221 U.S. 1, 54-58, 31 S. Ct. 502, 55 L. Ed. 619 [(1911)]."

317 U.S. at 351. HN11[] Like the Sherman Act, there is nothing in the text of § 6-5-60 that would indicate that the Alabama Legislature intended to restrain state actors by way of § 6-5-60. Nor have the students identified anything in the relevant legislative history that would indicate as much. In fact, if anything, the language in § 6-5-60 allowing for recovery only from a "person, firm, or corporation" would seem to indicate the [19] contrary.

The state-action-immunity doctrine also has a logical basis that is as relevant to state antitrust claims as it is to federal antitrust claims. The United States District Court for the Western District of Louisiana summarized the logical basis for granting states and their instrumentalities immunity from liability for violating state antitrust laws as follows in Airline Car Rental, Inc. v. Shreveport Airport Authority, 667 F. Supp. 303, 308 (W.D. La. 1987):

> "The principles of federalism and state sovereignty on which the Supreme Court relied in Parker [v. Brown, 317 U.S. 341, 63 S. Ct. 307, 87 L. Ed. 315 (1943),] have no bearing on the question whether state antitrust laws should apply to municipalities acting pursuant to a clearly expressed state policy permitting anticompetitive conduct; however, it would be illogical to hold that a state legislature which had clearly articulated such a policy nevertheless intended that a municipality acting pursuant to that policy should be subject to liability under state antitrust laws. For this reason, the court will dismiss both [the appellant's] federal and state antitrust claims."

For all these reasons, we now reaffirm Twine, which applied the state-action-immunity [20] doctrine without clearly denominating it as such and explicitly hold that HN12[] the state-action-immunity doctrine may be raised as a defense to claims that state antitrust laws have been violated. The university administrators are accordingly entitled to immunity with regard to the students' § 6-5-60 antitrust claims. We further note that this is consistent with our long-standing caselaw applying federal antitrust principles to state-law antitrust claims. See Ex parte Rice, 259 Ala. 570, 575, 67 So. 2d 825, 829 (1953) (noting that "[w]e do not seem to have in Alabama a statute which defines an unlawful monopoly" and accordingly holding that the federal statutes "prescribe the terms of unlawful monopolies and restraints of trade as they should also be administered in Alabama"), and Parker, 317 U.S. at 350-51 ("We find nothing in the language of the Sherman Act or in its history which suggests that its purpose was to restrain a state or its officers or agents from activities directed by its legislature." (emphasis added)). However, further inquiry is necessary to determine if the food-service vendors may also claim the protections of the state-action-immunity doctrine.

In California Retail Liquor Dealers Ass'n v. Midcal Aluminum, Inc., 445 U.S. 97, 105, 100 S. Ct. 937, 63 L. Ed. 2d 233 (1980) [21] ("Midcal"), the Supreme Court of the United States unanimously held that HN13[] a private party acting in conjunction with the state might be entitled to state-action-immunity protection if the private party is acting pursuant to a clearly articulated and affirmatively expressed state policy. In discussing whether the defendants acted pursuant to a clearly articulated and affirmatively expressed state policy, the trial court, in its orders dismissing the cases challenging the dining-dollars programs at UA and UAB, stated:

[*336] "Applying such law here, the court begins with the legal basis for [UA's and UAB's] operations. Section 264 of the Alabama constitution declares that the University of Alabama system 'shall be under the management and control of a board of trustees.' [Section 16-47-2, Ala. Code 1975,] provides that the board of trustees 'shall have all the rights, powers and franchises necessary to or promotive of the end of its creation and shall be charged with all the corresponding duties, liabilities and responsibilities.' Further, from [§ 16-47-34, Ala. Code 1975], comes the additional power 'to organize the university by appointing a corps of instructors, who shall be styled the faculty [22] of the university, and such other officers as the interest of the university may require; to remove such instructors or officers, and to fix their salaries or compensation, and increase or reduce the same at their discretion; to institute, regulate, alter or modify the government of the university, as it may deem advisable; to prescribe courses of instruction, rates of tuition and price of board and regulate the necessary expenses of students; and to confer such degrees as are usually conferred by similar institutions.' (Emphasis added.)

"The board of trustees for the University of Alabama system has been given, both from the constitution and from the Alabama legislature, broad authority to operate and manage [its universities'] operations. It is foreseeable that, in the exercise of such authority, the board would contract food services to third-party entities possessing expertise in that area. That such is foreseeable is evidenced by [§ 41-16-27(g), Ala. Code 1975], which generally exempts from the mandatory bid process 'contractual services and purchases of personal property regarding the athletic department, food services, and transit services negotiated on behalf of two-year and [23] four-year colleges and universities ....'

"The court agrees with the defendants that HN14[] the prerequisite of a clearly articulated policy does not mean that the alleged anti-competitive agreement must be specifically blessed by the legislature for the state-action immunity to apply. The U.S. Supreme Court has before made clear that a clear articulation does not require the state to declare explicitly that it expects anticompetitive conduct to result from legislation; instead, a clear articulation merely requires that anticompetitive conduct is the foreseeable result of the legislation. See Town of Hallie [v. City of Eau Claire], 471 U.S. [34,] 41-43, 105 S.Ct. [1713,] 1718 (1985); see also F.T.C. v. Hospital Board of Directors of Lee County, 38 F.3d 1184, 1189-91 (11th Cir. 1994).

"It is certainly foreseeable that a university would require some form of a mandated meal plan for its students, and it is foreseeable that an exclusive management contract would govern the provision of meal service on campus. Given the broad authority of [the board of trustees for the University of Alabama system] to govern all aspects of campus life, including the terms, conditions and fees for board provided [24] to students, the clear articulation requirement for state-action immunity is met."[8]

[*337] The students challenge the trial court's conclusion that the requirement that there be a clear articulation of a state policy was met, arguing that it is too great a leap to conclude that it was foreseeable that the boards of trustees of the universities would enter into the exclusive contractual relationships with the food-service vendors merely because they were granted broad authority to operate and to manage the operations of the universities. We

[8] The order entered in the case dismissing the complaint challenging Auburn's dining-dollars program was virtually identical; however, the paragraph describing the legal basis for Auburn's operations read as follows:

"Applying such law here, the court begins with the legal basis for Auburn's operations. Section 266 of the Alabama constitution declares that 'Auburn University shall be under the management and control of a board of trustees.' [Section 16-48-2, Ala. Code 1975,] provides that the Auburn board of trustees 'shall have all the rights, privileges and franchises necessary to a promotion of the end of its creation and shall be charged with all corresponding duties, liabilities and responsibilities.' Further, from [§ 16-48-4, Ala. Code 1975,] comes the additional power 'to organize the institute by appointing a corps of instructors, who shall be styled the faculty of the university and such other instructors and officers as the interest of the university may require; and to remove any such instructors or other officers, and to fix their salaries or compensation, and increase or reduce the same at [25] its discretion, to regulate, alter, or modify the government of the university, as it may deem advisable; to prescribe courses of instruction, rates of tuition and fees; to confer such academic and honorary degrees as are usually conferred by institutions of similar character; and to do whatever else it may deem best for promoting the interest of the university.' (Emphasis added.)" disagree. As detailed in trial court's order, the legislature has granted to the boards of trustees broad authority to manage the operations of their universities, and that authority certainly encompasses the authority to enter into contracts. That the statutes do not explicitly state that the boards may enter into "exclusive" contracts is irrelevant -- as one [26] court has noted, HN15[] "an exclusive contract is merely a subset of the power to contract." Active Disposal, Inc. v. City of Darien, 635 F.3d 883, 886 (7th Cir. 2011). Moreover, HN16[] the legislature has also specifically empowered the boards of trustees governing UA, UAB, and Auburn to control the "expenses" and "fees" payable by students at those universities, §§ 16-47-34 and 16-48-4, Ala. Code 1975. Accordingly, we agree with the trial court's determination that it is "foreseeable that a university would require some form of a mandated meal plan for its students, and it is foreseeable that an exclusive management contract would govern the provision of meal service on campus."[9] We also hold that all other elements of the dining-dollars programs implemented by the universities are equally foreseeable in light of the broad authority granted the boards of trustees in these areas.[10]

The students also argue that it was inappropriate for the trial court to decide issues of foreseeability and immunity at this stage of the proceedings. Citing Thetford v. City of Clanton, 605 So. 2d 835, 841 (Ala. 1992) ("Foreseeability is an issue for the jury to resolve."), and Doe v. McRae's of Alabama, 703 So. 2d 348, 350 (Ala. Civ. App. 1996) ("Ordinarily, foreseeability is a question of fact for the jury."), the students argue that HN18[] foreseeability is an intrinsically [*338] factual issue that a jury, not a trial court considering a motion to dismiss, should resolve. The defendants, however, [28] argue that other courts applying the state-action-immunity doctrine routinely resolve foreseeability concerns on motions to dismiss. See, e.g., Town of Hallie v. City of Eau Claire, 471 U.S. 34, 38, 105 S. Ct. 1713, 85 L. Ed. 2d 24 (1985); Active Disposal, 635 F.3d at 889; Rectrix Aerodrome Ctrs. v. Barnstable Mun. Airport Comm'n, 610 F.3d 8, 16 (1st Cir. 2010); and Pennsylvania v. Susquehanna Area Reg'l Airport Auth., 423 F. Supp. 2d 472, 484 (M.D. Pa. 2006).

We agree with the defendants that the trial court properly decided this issue. Unlike both Thetford and McRae's, where the issue was whether a business should be held liable for the allegedly foreseeable criminal acts of a third party, the issue here is whether the universities' actions in implementing the dining-dollars programs were foreseeable based on the power vested in the boards of trustees by the Alabama constitution and Alabama statutes.[11] By necessity, this inquiry focused on the review and interpretation of the relevant constitutional provisions and statutes, a task traditionally reserved for the court. Federal courts applying the state-action-immunity doctrine typically resolve these issues without resort to a jury, and we find no error in the trial [29] court's doing the same in this case.

The students also argue that the trial court erred by deciding the immunity issue at this time, quoting Patton v. Black, 646 So. 2d 8, 10 (Ala. 1994): "[I]t is a rare case involving the defense of immunity that would be properly disposed of by dismissal pursuant to Rule 12(b)(6)" (as quoted in the students' brief in case no. 1100557, p. 49). However, this quotation omits the word "discretionary" from the language of the Patton Court's actual opinion, which reads "[t]hus, HN19[] it is the rare case involving the defense of discretionary immunity that would be properly disposed of by a dismissal pursuant to Rule 12(b)(6)." (Emphasis added.) The Court elsewhere in Patton discussed the difficulties associated with the application of the discretionary-immunity [30] defense, stating that "[t]he

9 We also note that the CFG report submitted to UA in 1995 indicates that "mandatory board plans" were required at earlier periods in UA's history and that on-campus dining services had been contractor-operated since 1965.

10 The students object to the trial court's use of HN17[] § 41-16-27(g), Ala. Code 1975 -- which exempts certain [27] contracts, including those for food services, negotiated on behalf of universities from the State's mandatory-bid requirements -- to bolster its finding of foreseeability because that statute was not enacted until 2000, 6 years after the implementation of the first dining-dollars program at UA and around 100 years after the enactment of the first incarnation of § 6-5-60. However, § 41-16-27(g) does not grant universities the authority to execute contracts for food services; rather, by exempting those specific contracts from the mandatory-bid process, it implicitly recognizes that that authority exists.

11 We also note that this Court overruled McRae's in Ex parte McRae's of Alabama, Inc., 703 So. 2d 351, 352 (Ala. 1997), effectively agreeing with the trial court's determination that the criminal acts of the third party were not foreseeable as a matter of law, stating: "[s]uffice it to say that there had never been a similar assault on the defendant's store premises, or any violent crimes of any nature on those premises."

distinction between discretionary functions and ministerial functions is often cloudy and difficult to discern." 646 So. 2d at 10. That difficulty eventually led this Court to restate the principle of discretionary immunity in Ex parte Cranman, 792 So. 2d 392 (Ala. 2000).[12] Discretionary immunity is not an issue in this case, and, because the defendants have properly raised and argued the state-action-immunity defense in their motions to dismiss, the trial court's consideration of that defense was consistent with the judicial policy that HN20[] immunity issues should be decided as early as possible once raised. See, e.g., Siegert v. Gilley, 500 U.S. 226, 232, 111 S. Ct. 1789, 114 L. Ed. 2d 277 (1991) ("One of the purposes of immunity, absolute or qualified, is to spare a defendant not only unwarranted liability, but unwarranted demands customarily [*339] imposed upon those defending a long drawn out lawsuit.").

The students' final argument with regard to whether the dining-dollars programs are the foreseeable result of a clearly articulated state policy is that they cannot be, if only because there is a more clearly articulated state policy that, they argue, forbids such programs. That policy, the students argue, is set forth in HN22[] § 93 of the Alabama Constitution of 1901, which states in relevant part that "[t]he state shall not ... be interested in any private or corporate enterprise." The students argue that the dining-dollars programs violate § 93 inasmuch as the contracts between the universities and the food-service vendors provide that the universities receive a percentage of each transaction in which dining dollars are used. Thus, the students argue, the universities are effectively business partners with the food-service vendors, in violation of the prohibition of such arrangements in § 93. See Knight v. West Alabama Envtl. Improvement Auth., 287 Ala. 15, 20, 246 So. 2d 903, 906 (1971) ("The restraints of said Section 93 concerning being interested in any private or corporate enterprise have [32] been construed to mean, with certain exceptions not here relevant, that the State may not engage, alone or in concert with others, in the business of any type generally characterized as private enterprise.").

The trial court rejected this argument on the basis of caselaw clearly indicating that § 93 does not apply to public corporations. See, e.g., Thomas v. Alabama Mun. Elec. Auth., 432 So. 2d 470, 481 (Ala. 1983) ("A public corporation is a separate entity from the State and from any local political subdivision thereof. The prohibitions of Sections 93 and 94 are directed to the State and not to public corporations."); and Knight, 287 Ala. at 19, 246 So. 2d at 905 ("It is well established by the decisions of this Court that a public corporation is a separate entity from the State and from any local political subdivision thereof, including a city or county, and that the prohibitions of Section 93 are directed to the State and not to public corporations."). The board of trustees governing UA and UAB was organized as a public corporation by § 16-47-1, Ala. Code 1975, and the board of trustees governing Auburn was similarly organized as a public corporation by § 16-48-1, Ala. Code 1975; [33] thus, Thomas and Knight would seem applicable. However, the students argue that it is inconsistent to consider the boards of trustees as the State for immunity purposes and then in the same case declare that they are not the State for § 93 purposes; if the boards are the "State" for one purpose, the students argue, they must be the "State" for other purposes. However, while it may seem inconsistent, the trial court correctly decided these issues, because that is the result our caselaw dictates.

As referenced above, our caselaw is unanimous in its treatment of § 93 and public corporations -- § 93 does not apply to them. See, e.g., Thomas and Knight, supra. HN23[] The immunity that comes from § 14 and that is associated with being part of the State, however, does not automatically attach to all public corporations; some public corporations are entitled to it while others are not. In Armory Commission of Alabama v. Staudt, 388 So. 2d 991, 993 (Ala. 1980), we explained what more is required before a public corporation may claim that immunity, stating:

> "Whether a lawsuit against a body created by legislative enactment is a suit against the state depends on the character of power delegated to the [34] body, the relation of the body to the state, and the nature of the > function performed by the body. All factors in the relationship [*340] must be examined to determine whether the suit is against an arm of the state or merely against a franchisee licensed for some beneficial purpose."

[12] "Since Cranman, HN21[] we analyze immunity issues in terms of 'State-agent' immunity, rather than 'under the dichotomy of ministerial versus discretionary functions.' Ex parte Hudson, 866 So. 2d 1115, 1117 (Ala. 2003)" Howard v. City of Atmore, 887 So. 2d 201, 203 (Ala. 2003). The analysis in Cranman, [31] a plurality opinion, was adopted by this Court in Ex parte Butts, 775 So. 2d 173 (Ala. 2000).

We have previously considered whether state universities, as public corporations, should be entitled to that state immunity and answered that inquiry in the affirmative. See, e.g., Rigby v. Auburn Univ., 448 So. 2d 345, 347 (Ala. 1984) ("[W]e conclude that because of the character of the power delegated to it by the state, its relation to the state as an institution of higher learning, and the nature of the function it performs as an institution of higher learning, Auburn University is an instrumentality of the state and therefore immune to suit by the terms of Section 14 of our state constitution."). For those same reasons, we conclude that HN24[] the boards of trustees may be considered the State for purposes of § 14 state immunity, while nevertheless maintaining a status distinct from the State for § 93 purposes because they are organized as public corporations. The trial court correctly held that the dining-dollars [35] programs are the foreseeable result of a clearly articulated state policy.

However, although the clear-articulation-of-a-state-policy test has been met, HN25[] the Midcal test applied by courts when determining whether to extend state-action immunity to nonstate parties also typically requires a showing that the alleged anticompetitive conduct is actively supervised by the state. 445 U.S. at 105. However, beginning with Town of Hallie, this requirement has been relaxed when the particular circumstances of the case make it unnecessary. 471 U.S. at 46-47 (holding that municipalities need not satisfy the second prong of the Midcal test). Relying on the rationale of Zimomra v. Alamo Rent-A-Car, Inc., 111 F.3d 1495 (10th Cir. 1997), the trial court found that these were such cases because the universities had the exclusive authority both to mandate the mandatory dining fees and to set the amount of those fees, and the food-service vendors merely acted to fullfill the terms of their contracts. See Zimomra, 111 F.3d at 1499-1500 (holding that active supervision by the state need not be shown in a case challenging the legality of mandatory fees attached to car rentals because the city and the county [36] -- not a private party -- had the ultimate responsibility of setting those mandatory fees). The students argue that the rationale of Zimomra should not apply because the food-service vendors played an active part in the negotiations that led to the implementation of the mandatory dining fees and the dining-dollars programs, and because the food-service vendors exercise substantial autonomy in the manner in which they provide food services under the contracts. We ultimately decline to address this issue, however, because, by any standard, it is clear that the universities actively supervised the challenged dining-dollars programs on their respective campuses.

Each of the universities' contracts with the respective food-service vendor contains detailed provisions setting forth guidelines governing nearly every facet of the food-service vendor's on-campus operation, including menu selection and food preparation. The universities also retain ultimate authority over food prices and the operating hours of the on-campus dining outlets. The contracts are sufficiently comprehensive that there can be no question that the universities are actively involved in and supervising the food-service operations [37] on their campuses. Moreover, lest there be any doubt that the contracts merely allow for the possibility of supervision as opposed to actual supervision, see FTC v. Ticor Title Ins. Co., 504 U.S. 621, 638, 112 S. Ct. 2169, 119 L. Ed. 2d 410 (1992) (HN26[] "The mere potential for state supervision is not [*341] an adequate substitute for a decision by the State."), we also note that the contracts require the food-service vendors to file regular reports with the universities detailing their operations. For example, UA's contract with Aramark requires Aramark to "[s]ubmit quarterly reports to the university addressing issues that affect the efficiency of the operations, security, services, food, sanitation, and any other relevant topics, and including back-up data and recommendations for improving the situation." UA's decision to raise the mandatory dining fee from its original $200 per semester to $300 per semester is further evidence that it is actively involved in and supervising its dining-dollars program, as opposed to merely deciding to implement such a program and then leaving the details of operation to Aramark.

The defendants have established that the food-service vendors were acting according to a clearly articulated state policy [38] and that their actions were actively supervised by the universities; accordingly, they are protected by the state-action-immunity doctrine with regard to the students' antitrust claims, and the trial court did not err by dismissing those claims. As explained supra, the students' § 93 claims are also without merit because § 93 does not apply to public corporations like the boards of trustees; the trial court therefore correctly dismissed those claims as well. We thus turn to the UA and Auburn students' argument that the trial court erred by dismissing their claims alleging a violation of § 16-1-32(d).

Section 16-1-32 provides, in relevant part, as follows:

> HN27[] "(a) The board of trustees or any other governing body of a public institution of higher education as defined in Section 16-5-1 may establish a program which provides students enrolled at the institution with debit cards issued by the institution. This specific authority shall exist in addition to any pre-existing authority to establish such a program conferred elsewhere by the Constitution of Alabama of 1901, or statute.
> "(b) A student issued a debit card under the program may use the card to purchase merchandise or services available [39] through the institution or at the institution through a person authorized to sell merchandise or services at the institution, or at any other location or through any other person as determined by the board of trustees or the governing body.
> "(c) Without limiting the generality of the foregoing subsection, the debit card program shall at a minimum allow a person who operates an off-campus college bookstore which sells merchandise or services of the same kind as the merchandise or services that a student may purchase at a bookstore operated on the campus of the institution under subsection (b), to participate in the program under the same or equivalent terms applicable to a person authorized to sell merchandise or services under subsection (b), and to accept a debit card payment from a student to whom a debit card has been issued under the program for purchase of that merchandise or service.
> "(d) A per transaction fee, not to exceed 3.25 percent of the total purchase price may be charged the off-campus bookstore by the institution administering the debit card program. Other merchants may participate in the program under the terms and conditions established by the institution. The transaction [40] fee for all other merchants or vendors, irrespective of type of business, shall not exceed five percent of the total purchase price."

[*342] In their complaints, the UA and Auburn students argue that UA and Auburn have been charging transaction fees in excess of the five-percent cap in subsection (d) because the commission charged on every dining-dollars transaction exceeds five percent even before other debit-card fees are considered. The defendants argue that there has been no violation of § 16-1-32 because the commission is not properly considered a "transaction fee" for purposes of the statute. The trial court ultimately declined to reach that issue, stating:

> "Finally, while the plaintiffs attempt to assert a claim under [§ 16-1-32], there is no indication that the Alabama legislature intended to create a private cause of action for any violation of that statute. HN28[] A private right of action cannot be presumed; rather, '[o]ne claiming a private right of action within a statutory scheme must show clear evidence of a legislative intent to impose civil liability for a violation of the statute.' Blockbuster, Inc. v. White, 819 So. 2d 43, 44 (Ala. 2001); American Auto. Ins. Co. v. McDonald, 812 So. 2d 309, 311 (Ala. 2001). [41] Accordingly, no claim can be based on [§ 16-1-32]."

Citing Corpus Juris Secundum, the students argue that the trial court erred because, they argue, HN29[] the general rule is that when a statute imposes a duty for the benefit or protection of particular individuals or classes of individuals, a violation of that duty gives a right of action to any person for whose benefit or protection the statute was enacted. 1A C.J.S. Actions § 57. However, by its very terms, this rule would grant a right of action only to those individuals for whose benefit the statute was enacted. HN30[] The plain language of § 16-1-32 indicates that it was enacted to open the market for university-issued debit cards to off-campus merchants and to prevent such merchants from being charged excessive transaction fees. Thus, § 16-1-32 was enacted for the benefit of merchants, not students. Although it is possible that excessive transaction fees, if allowed, would be passed on from merchants to students (and the public in general) in the form of higher across-the-board prices, there is no indication that the legislature intended to address that indirect possibility in § 16-1-32. Because § 16-1-32 was not enacted for the direct benefit [42] of students, we will not read into it the creation of a cause of action available to the students at UA and Auburn. The trial court's dismissal of the § 16-1-32 claims is accordingly affirmed.

The students' final argument is that the trial court erred by dismissing their conversion claims. The trial court does not specifically discuss these claims in its orders; however, they were implicitly included in the final paragraph of the orders, which stated: "[h]aving considered the defendants' contentions, and the plaintiffs' responses thereto, the court concludes that the plaintiffs may not maintain any of the causes of action asserted in their complaint." (Emphasis added.) The defendants argue that the reason the trial court did not address the students' conversion claims is because, the defendants argue, the students are asserting them for the first time on appeal. Upon review, however, each of the complaints filed by the students at the different universities does contain a broad allegation of conversion. See, e.g., brief of the students in case no. 1100557 ("This scheme also constitutes a conversion of the plaintiffs' funds by requiring the payment into the dining dollars account, then [43] transforming lawful currency into 'dining dollars' over which [the food-service vendor] exercises exclusive dominion and control."). Nevertheless, the trial court's dismissal of the students' conversions claims is due to be affirmed because, even when the allegations of the students' [*343] complaints are viewed most strongly in their favor, it is apparent that they cannot prevail on these claims.

HN31[] "To establish conversion, one must present proof of a wrongful taking, an illegal assumption of ownership, an illegal use or misuse of another's property, or a wrongful detention or interference with another's property." Crown Life Ins. Co. v. Smith, 657 So. 2d 821, 823 (Ala. 1994). The complaints do not support a finding that any party took or otherwise illegally assumed ownership of the students' funds. There is no allegation that any party wrongfully accessed deposit accounts belonging to the students and withdrew the money or that any party otherwise took the funds from the students without the students' consent. Nor is there an allegation that the funds were obtained through fraud, artifice, stealth, or trickery. See Brown v. Campbell, 536 So. 2d 920, 921 (Ala. 1988) (holding that possession [44] obtained through fraud, artifice, stealth, or trickery without the consent of the owner is wrongful and will support an action for conversion). Rather, the only conclusion that can be gleaned from the complaints is that the students were presented with a lawful mandatory charge associated with attendance at their chosen university and that they subsequently consented to pay that charge as a condition of attendance. Undoubtedly, some of the students did not like paying the mandatory dining fee and would have preferred to attend their respective university without paying it; however, the same is no doubt as true of any tuition payments. Such dissatisfaction, however, is not tantamount to a lack of consent. Because the students clearly consented to pay the mandatory dining fee, their conversion claims fail. See also Jones v. DCH Health Care Auth., 621 So. 2d 1322, 1324 (Ala. 1993) ("'In order to constitute conversion, nonconsent to the possession and the disposition of the property by defendant is indispensable.'" (quoting 89 C.J.S. Trover & Conversion § 5, p. 535 (1955))).

IV.

The students sued the boards of trustees governing the universities, the administrators of the universities, and [45] the food-service vendors, alleging that the dining-dollars programs operated by the universities violated: (1) state antitrust laws; (2) § 93 of the Alabama Constitution inasmuch as it forbids the State from having an interest in a private enterprise; (3) the rule in § 16-1-32(d) barring universities from charging excessive transaction fees to merchants that accept university-issued debit cards; and (4) the common-law prohibition on conversion. However, because the boards of trustees are entitled to state immunity pursuant to § 14 of the Alabama Constitution, all claims against them were properly dismissed. The university administrators and foodservice vendors are entitled to immunity on the asserted antitrust claims as well, albeit state-action immunity as opposed to state immunity; thus, the trial court's dismissal of the antitrust claims was also proper. Moreover, because the universities are public corporations not subject to § 93, because the students lack standing to pursue a cause of action for a violation of § 16-1-32(d), and because the students have not and cannot allege the necessary elements of a conversion claim, the trial court also properly dismissed the students' other [46] claims. Accordingly, the judgments of the trial court are hereby affirmed.

HN1[] Standards of Review, Abuse of Discretion

A demurrer tests the legal sufficiency of the complaint. Therefore, an appellate court reviews the complaint de novo to determine whether it contains sufficient facts to state a cause of action. The appellate court treats the demurrer as admitting all material facts properly pleaded, but not contentions, deductions or conclusions of fact or law. A trial court exercises its discretion in declining to grant leave to amend. If it is reasonably possible the pleading can be cured by amendment, the trial court abuses its discretion by not granting leave to amend. The plaintiff has the burden of proving the possibility of cure by amendment. Although a court must on demurrer accept as true properly pleaded facts, a demurrer does not admit contentions or conclusions of law or fact. Determining the meaning of a statutory standard requires the resolution of a question of law. The soundness of the resolution of such a question is examined de novo.

HN2[] Private Actions, State Regulation

Bus. & Prof. Code, § 16750, subd. (a), generally allows any person injured in her business or property by reason of anything forbidden or declared unlawful by this chapter to bring a private action for treble damages or injunctive relief. Bus. & Prof. Code, § 16720, subd. (a), defines the prohibited kinds of "trusts" (combinations of capital, skill or acts by two or more persons) as including those created for or carrying out unreasonable restrictions in trade or commerce. The elements of this California Cartwright Act, Bus. & Prof. Code, § 16700 et seq., claim are (1) the formation and operation of the conspiracy, (2) the wrongful act or acts done pursuant thereto, and (3) the damage resulting from such act or acts. An antitrust claim must plead the formation and operation of the conspiracy and the illegal acts done in furtherance of the conspiracy. California requires a high degree of particularity in the pleading of Cartwright Act violations, and therefore generalized allegations of antitrust violations are usually insufficient. The absence of factual allegations of specific conduct in furtherance of the conspiracy to eliminate or reduce competition makes the complaint legally insufficient.

HN3[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

California's Cartwright Act, Bus. & Prof. Code, § 16700 et seq., prohibits combinations in unreasonable restraint of trade. Certain restraints that lack redeeming virtue are conclusively presumed to be unreasonable and illegal, and constitute a per se illegal practice. For example, a horizontal combination (an anticompetitive agreement among competitors who are at the same level of distribution) is ordinarily illegal per se. Likewise, market division and certain types of group boycotts are unlawful per se. Elaborate market analysis and case-by-case evaluation are unnecessary in cases involving per se antitrust violations because the anticompetitive effects of the practice are presumed.

HN4[] Practices Governed by Per Se Rule, Boycotts

At the pleadings stage, mere conclusory allegations of manifestly anticompetitive conduct may be deemed insufficient as a matter of law, where there exists no tenable per se boycott theory.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > General Overview

HN5[] Practices Governed by Per Se Rule, Boycotts

A vertical boycott occurs when entities at different levels of distribution combine to deny a competitor at one level the benefits enjoyed by the members of the vertical combination. For such allegations, the rule of reason test applies to determine whether particular concerted conduct unreasonably restrains competition.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > State Regulation

HN6[] Private Actions, State Regulation

The antitrust laws were enacted for the protection of competition, not competitors. The laws do not require the courts to protect small businesses from the loss of profits due to continued competition, but only against the loss of profits from practices forbidden by the antitrust laws. Injury to a competitor is not equivalent to injury to competition; only the latter is the proper focus of antitrust laws.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > State Regulation

HN7[] Private Actions, State Regulation

A complaint must allege facts from which injury to market-wide competition can be inferred. An antitrust injury must be proved; that is, the type of injury the antitrust laws were intended to prevent, and which flows from the invidious conduct that renders defendants' acts unlawful.

HN8[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Vertical Restraints

Where an antitrust plaintiff alleges vertical restraints, facts must be pled showing some anticompetitive effect in the larger, interbrand market. The prevailing standard is the rule-of-reason, which measures whether the anticompetitive aspect of a vertical restraint outweighs its procompetitive effects. It is the plaintiff's burden to make the required showing of a substantially adverse effect on competition in the relevant market. Injury to an individual plaintiff is insufficient to establish standing to assert antitrust violations. In the medical field, sufficient, successful allegations of antitrust injury might include negative impacts upon overall prices, quantity or quality of medical services, resulting from the plaintiff's absence as an available provider at the facility.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > Relevant Market

HN9[] Market Definition, Relevant Market

Defining the market is not the aim of antitrust law; it merely aids the search for competitive injury. Once defined, the relevant market demarcates objective benchmarks for separating reasonable and unreasonable restraints. It requires the claimant to demonstrate harm to the economy beyond the claimant's own injury. In so doing, market definition furthers antitrust policy: the protection of competitive processes and not individual competitors.

HN10[] Per Se Rule Tests, Manifestly Anticompetitive Effects

There is nothing obviously anticompetitive about a hospital choosing one staffing pattern over another or in restricting the staffing to some rather than many, or all. A hospital has an unquestioned right to exercise some control over the identity and number to whom it accords staff privileges. Malpractice concerns, quality of care, market perceptions, cost, and administrative considerations may all impact those decisions. Generally, antitrust challenges to a staffing decision at a single hospital do not succeed, because such cases normally do not present any facts indicating special circumstances raising antitrust concerns. The reasons for such a lack of success in pursuing an antitrust claim may include a lack of antitrust injury, failure to show a detrimental effect on competition, or insufficient market power in the relevant market. When circumstantial evidence of conspiracy to prevent the physician-plaintiff from practicing at the subject hospital is presented by such an antitrust plaintiff, the defendant can rebut such allegations of conspiracy by showing a plausible and justifiable reason for its conduct that is consistent with proper business practice.

Healthcare Law > Business Administration & Organization > Hospital Privileges > Restrictions

HN11[] Healthcare Litigation, Antitrust Actions

The setting of privileging criteria by a hospital is consistent with providing quality patient care and keeping insurance costs manageable. The courts have drawn distinctions between the intentional actions of a hospital directed specifically toward the exclusion of a particular physician or groups of physicians, and the actions of a hospital that may, as a practical matter, result in the exclusion of individual practitioners but were undertaken for less personally directed reasons. Even where a structural staffing change may result in the exclusion of certain doctors from practice, if the justification is sufficient, the doctor's vested rights must give way to public and patient interest in improving the quality of medical services. Judicial deference is paid to managerial decisions concerning operation of a hospital, where the decisions appear to have been made rationally and in good faith by the hospital authorities. Hospitals have special expertise in promoting quality of care and in making workable administrative arrangements. Judges are untrained and courts ill-equipped for hospital administration, and it is neither possible nor desirable for the courts to act as supervening boards of directors for every hospital in the state.

HN12*[] Per Se Rule Tests, Manifestly Anticompetitive Effects

Even vertical restrictions may legitimately be allowed to reduce some forms of competition, if they also promote other forms of competition by allowing health care service providers to achieve certain efficiencies in the distribution of their products, under the rule of reason standard. Normally, a staffing decision does not itself constitute an antitrust injury. Unless the effect of the conduct of a single health care provider is to deny patients reasonable access to any health care, the marketplace is not significantly affected by such individualized conduct. If the law were otherwise, many a physician's workplace grievance with a hospital would be elevated to the status of an antitrust action. To keep the antitrust laws from becoming so trivialized, the reasonableness of a restraint is evaluated based on its impact on competition as a whole within the relevant market. It is not enough to allege as antitrust injury, in a hospital context, that the plaintiffs cannot now practice in the business form they prefer and the prices the hospital charges may be somewhat higher now than they were. Before a court will interfere with how one hospital staffs its physician needs, a strong showing would be required that the purpose and effect of the anticompetitive conduct, within the relevant market defined by the plaintiffs, was outside of reasonable professional standards.

Actions under the unfair competition law (UCL), Bus. & Prof. Code, § 17200 et seq., are not meant to be substitutes for tort or contract actions. Instead, the UCL provides an equitable means through which both public prosecutors and private individuals can bring suit to prevent unfair business practices and restore money or property to victims of these practices. The overarching legislative concern was to provide a streamlined procedure for the prevention of ongoing or threatened acts of unfair competition.

HN15[] Intentional Interference, Elements

The elements of the tort of intentional interference with prospective economic advantage are usually stated as follows (1) an economic relationship between the plaintiff and some third party, with the probability of future economic benefit to the plaintiff; (2) the defendant's knowledge of the relationship; (3) intentional acts on the part of the defendant designed to disrupt the relationship; (4) actual disruption of the relationship; and (5) economic harm to the plaintiff proximately caused by the acts of the defendant. The third element of the tort of interference with prospective economic advantage also requires a plaintiff to plead intentional wrongful acts on the part of the defendant designed to disrupt the relationship. Whether an act is independently wrongful depends on its unlawfulness (if it is proscribed by some constitutional, statutory, regulatory, common law, or other determinable legal standard).

Summary

CALIFORNIA OFFICIAL REPORTS SUMMARY

The trial court sustained demurrers filed by respondents, an anesthesiologist's former practice group and a hospital served by the practice group, to portions of the anesthesiologist's first amended complaint and her third amended complaint, allowing no further leave to amend. The anesthesiologist alleged respondents' acts were in violation of the Cartwright Act (Bus. & Prof. Code, § 16700 et seq.) and the unfair competition law (UCL) (Bus. & Prof. Code, § 17200 et seq.) and that respondents injured her by intentionally interfering with her prospective business advantage. (Superior Court of San Diego County, No. 37-2007-00082724-CU-BT-CTL, David B. Oberholtzer, Judge.)

The Court of Appeal affirmed the judgment as to the hospital but reversed the judgment as to the practice group with directions to the trial court to allow further proceedings to enable the anesthesiologist to file an amended complaint against the practice group only, if desired, to plead a theory of intentional interference with prospective economic advantage, and/or to reassert her voluntarily dismissed breach of contract claim. The court held that the anesthesiologist had not successfully alleged, on the operative facts and theories she had consistently pled, the statutory causes of action under the Cartwright Act or the UCL, nor had she demonstrated any realistic possibility of further amendments. The anesthesiologist did not allege, nor did her proposed amendments add, the kind of facts indicating special circumstances raising antitrust concerns, with respect to any detrimental effect on competition that caused injury, in excess of her own personal business concerns and [*481] circumstances. The implementation of the rules and policies of which she complained did not clearly create any adverse effect upon consumer choice in the relevant market. The court did not find adequate support for the anesthesiologist's pleaded claims of unfair business conduct, in the form of certain threatened incipient violations of antitrust laws, or their policy or spirit, or other acts significantly threatening or harming competition in the medical field as a whole. As against the practice group, the cause of action for intentional interference with prospective business advantage was not previously subjected to demurrers, and the record required that the anesthesiologist be allowed an opportunity to amend her pleading to assert the type of wrongful conduct that, under established legal measures, might be able to support a cognizable claim. (Opinion by Huffman, Acting P. J., with McDonald and O'Rourke, JJ., concurring.)

Interference § 6—Prospective Economic Advantage—Elements.

The elements of the tort of intentional interference with prospective economic advantage are usually stated as follows (1) an economic relationship between the plaintiff and some third party, with the probability of future economic benefit to the plaintiff; (2) the defendant's knowledge of the relationship; (3) intentional acts on the part of the defendant designed to disrupt the relationship; (4) actual disruption of the relationship; and (5) economic harm to the plaintiff proximately caused by the acts of the defendant. The third element of the tort of interference with prospective economic advantage also requires a plaintiff to plead intentional wrongful acts on the part of the defendant designed to disrupt the relationship. Whether an act is independently wrongful depends on its unlawfulness (if it is proscribed by some constitutional, statutory, regulatory, common law, or other determinable legal standard).

[665] HUFFMAN, Acting P. J.—Plaintiff and appellant M. Lou Marsh (Appellant) is a board certified anesthesiologist [666] licensed to practice medicine in California. She filed this action for damages and other relief against her former practice group, defendant and respondent Anesthesia Service Medical Group, Inc. (ASMG), a professional medical corporation that provides physician services to hospitals and other medical centers in [2] San Diego County. She also sued one of the facilities served by ASMG, Scripps Memorial Hospital La Jolla (Scripps), after she experienced interpersonal and professional difficulties in carrying on her medical practice at a Scripps facility, the Scripps XiMED Surgery Center (Ximed).

In several successive pleadings that were challenged by a series of demurrers by ASMG and Scripps (together, Respondents), Appellant pled several types of unlawful or unfair business practices and related tort theories, which allegedly caused her unfair exclusion from practice. She contends Respondents' acts were in violation of the Cartwright Act (Bus. & Prof. Code,[1] § 16700 et seq.), and/or the unfair competition law (the UCL; § 17200 et seq.). She also alleged that Respondents injured her by intentionally and/or negligently interfering with her prospective business advantage, and intentionally inflicted severe emotional distress (IIED) on her.

The trial court sustained demurrers to portions of the first amended complaint (FAC) and the third amended complaint (TAC), allowing no further leave to amend. In connection [3] with filing her notice of appeal, Appellant voluntarily dismissed, without prejudice, an additional cause of action for [*487] breach of contract against ASMG, based on its alleged violations of a nondisparagement clause in her 2004 separation agreement with ASMG.

[1] All further statutory references are to the Business and Professions Code unless noted.

Appellant contends on appeal that all of her causes of action are well pled, or could be successfully amended to add any essential allegations to state such causes of action. She argues her statutory claims seek legitimate remedies, including injunctive relief and restitution, and the tort claims for damages are necessary to redress her economic and personal injury.

Having reviewed the pleadings in light of well-established legal principles, we conclude Appellant has not successfully alleged, on the operative facts and theories she has consistently pled, the statutory causes of action under the Cartwright Act or the UCL, nor has she demonstrated any realistic possibility of further amendments. The trial court's analysis of the relevant legal and policy considerations, as applied to those pleaded facts, was correct as a matter of law. (Cel-Tech Communications, Inc. v. Los Angeles Cellular Telephone Co. (1999) 20 Cal.4th 163, 186–187 [83 Cal. Rptr. 2d 548, 973 P.2d 527] [4] (Cel-Tech); Freeman v. San Diego Assn. of Realtors (1999) 77 Cal.App.4th 171, 195–196 [91 Cal. Rptr. 2d 534] (Freeman).)

We reach similar conclusions on the demurrer rulings with respect to each of the tort causes of action asserted, with one exception. As against ASMG, the cause of action pled in the TAC for intentional interference with prospective business advantage was not previously subjected to demurrers, and this record requires that Appellant should be allowed an opportunity to amend her pleading to assert the type of wrongful conduct that, under established legal measures, may be able to support a cognizable claim. (Korea Supply Co. v. Lockheed Martin Corp. (2003) 29 Cal.4th 1134, 1158 [131 Cal. Rptr. 2d 29, 63 P.3d 937] (Korea Supply).) Even though, as stated by the Supreme Court in Korea Supply, the pleading and proof requirements [667] for pursuing a cause of action for damages for intentional interference with prospective economic advantage are more rigorous in some respects than those of the UCL, we cannot say on this record that Appellant clearly lacks any such recourse in damages against ASMG for the injuries she claims to have suffered as a result of its alleged wrongful acts controverting her economic interests. As to Scripps, however, [5] such claims are not well taken, for reasons to be explained.

Moreover, our examination of the record in light of the applicable pleading standards leads us to conclude that, as against either respondent, Appellant cannot demonstrate how she could state any viable theory of negligent interference with prospective business advantage, nor the “outrageous conduct” required to support a claim of IIED, in this overall factual context of a dispute among professionals in the business of health care. (See LiMandri v. [*488] Judkins (1997) 52 Cal.App.4th 326, 348–350 [60 Cal. Rptr. 2d 539]; Christensen v. Superior Court (1991) 54 Cal.3d 868, 903 [2 Cal. Rptr. 2d 79, 820 P.2d 181].)

The judgment dismissing the action against Scripps is accordingly affirmed. We reverse the judgment of dismissal as to ASMG, with directions to the trial court to conduct appropriate further proceedings to allow Appellant to file an amended pleading against ASMG solely on the claim of intentional interference with economic advantage, as well as allowing her to reassert, if so desired, her voluntarily dismissed breach of contract claim.

I

BACKGROUND: PARTICIPANTS AND FILING OF ACTION

For purposes of analyzing the demurrer rulings, we take the facts properly pleaded [6] to assess whether they may state their causes of action, as matters of law. (Blank v. Kirwan (1985) 39 Cal.3d 311, 318 [216 Cal. Rptr. 718, 703 P.2d 58].) In the original and all her amended complaints, Appellant alleges essentially the following transactional facts (to be expanded as needed in the discussion portion of this opinion). We mainly postpone our summary of the individual rulings on demurrer giving rise to this appeal until the discussion portion of this opinion.

Until 2004, Appellant was a longtime member of ASMG, and she had staff privileges to provide anesthesia services at several institutions, including Scripps and its outpatient facility, Ximed.[2] After overcoming health problems (breast cancer), and learning that the facility where she was currently working was closing, she decided to leave ASMG to pursue her own practice. Upon leaving ASMG in July 2004, Appellant negotiated a separation agreement to resolve their disputes over professional fees she was claiming were due to her, and the agreement included a nondisparagement clause.

[2] Ximed was originally named as a defendant, but was dismissed and is no longer a party.

After her separation from ASMG employment, Appellant alleges she appropriately communicated [7] to ASMG and Scripps/Ximed doctors and staff that she was not able to or interested in taking on scheduled call duties at Scripps for emergency and other services for nights and weekends, as the ASMG contractual arrangement provided for its affiliates to do. Appellant made it clear to ASMG and Scripps officials that she was unable or unqualified to take such call duty, due to her interest in preserving her health by avoiding such unexpected calls, and because she had not practiced in an [*489] emergency and trauma care setting for more than 15 years, but [668] instead had specialized in elective plastic surgery for that time.

Upon leaving ASMG in 2004, Appellant retained her privileges at Scripps, although she mainly continued to practice anesthesia in private outpatient surgery centers, working primarily with two plastic surgeons, Dr. Steven Cohen and Dr. Stewart Kincaid (the two surgeons). Appellant also provided anesthesia services to these two surgeons when they performed procedures at other outpatient surgery centers affiliated with other hospitals in the area (a Sharp Metro Hospital facility, and Mercy Outpatient Pavilion (MOPP), at Scripps Mercy Hospital, where she also obtained privileges).

In [8] 2006, the two surgeons with whom Appellant worked started performing procedures at Ximed, utilizing anesthesia services there from Appellant and from ASMG doctors. Ninety-nine percent of the anesthesiologists serving on staff at Scripps are employed by ASMG, and Appellant came to believe ASMG was unlawfully influencing the Scripps medical staff to cooperate in interfering with her efforts to practice there.

Specifically, Appellant alleges that when she decided in 2006 to resume practicing at Scripps, to take cases there with the two surgeons, ASMG and Scripps together allegedly took actions to limit her practice at Scripps/Ximed in several ways, all of which she claims amounted to unfair business practices or were otherwise wrongful. Appellant asserts that ASMG and/or Scripps allegedly made knowing misrepresentations to interested parties that her employment status was “retired,” that she did not carry her fair share of call duty, that this adversely affected hospital morale, and that she was disruptive, adversarial, and should be avoided. Scripps officials allegedly told surgeons using its facilities that, according to some unwritten rule or practice, they were not allowed to specifically [9] request her professional services, but instead had to use those anesthesiologists who took scheduled call duty pursuant to ASMG arrangements.

When Appellant obtained privileges at MOPP (with Scripps Mercy), ASMG officials allegedly threatened to withhold ASMG services previously provided there, unless Appellant's privileges were blocked. Also around that time, ASMG notified her that her health insurance policy on its plan had been canceled, although it later claimed this was a mistake, and the policy remained in effect. Appellant, as a cancer survivor, alleges she suffered serious emotional distress while unfairly placed under that misapprehension.

Appellant further alleges that ASMG and Scripps worked together, without justification, to enact new hospital staffing rules that imposed unfair burdens upon her in particular, such as adopting rules that required all staff, including [*490] her, to participate in regular night and weekend hospital call duty. Other such new utilization and staff rules required anesthesiologists practicing at Scripps to attend a minimum number of monthly meetings, and to participate in at least 20 surgical cases over a two-year period. Unilaterally, Scripps reclassified [10] Appellant as having “active” status, rather than “courtesy” privileges, which subjected her to additional administrative requirements for renewal of privileges at Scripps.[3] However, about 50 other similarly situated anesthesiologists [669] were allowed to retain their courtesy status.

In December of 2007, Appellant filed this action and amended her complaint (FAC) in January 2008. Originally, in addition to her unlawful business practices, antitrust and emotional distress claims, Appellant pursued separate causes of action for conspiracy and negligent infliction of emotional distress. Each respondent successfully brought demurrers to certain of these causes of action but not others,[4] and eventually each respondent filed an answer to the SAC.

[3] The record is not clear as to Appellant's current status as to hospital privileges at Scripps. According to her opening brief (filed in Dec. 2010), Appellant's privileges “technically” expired in March 2008 and February 2010, but she does not know whether her applications have been processed by Scripps.

By stipulation, Appellant filed her TAC, which retained the same four causes of action as in the SAC (except for correctly omitting Scripps from the IIED claim). As against ASMG, Appellant was allowed to add a breach of contract theory, based on alleged violation of the nondisparagement clause in her 2004 separation agreement from ASMG (defamatory remarks calling her “disruptive,” “unfair,” and “adversarial”). Respondents again demurred and sought judgment on the pleadings.

After extensive briefing and hearing, all demurrers were sustained without leave to amend and judgments of dismissal were entered. Appellant voluntarily dismissed her breach of contract claim against ASMG, without prejudice, to seek this immediate appellate review.

STANDARD OF REVIEW AND ISSUES PRESENTED

We apply well-established [12] rules of review. HN1[] “A demurrer tests the legal sufficiency of the complaint. [Citation.] Therefore, we review the complaint de novo to determine whether it contains sufficient facts to state a cause of action. [Citation.] ‘We treat the demurrer as admitting all material facts properly pleaded, but not contentions, deductions or conclusions of fact or law.’ [Citation.] The trial court exercises its discretion in declining to grant leave to amend. [Citation.] If it is reasonably possible the pleading can be cured by amendment, the trial court abuses its discretion by not granting leave to amend. [Citation.] The plaintiff has the burden of proving the possibility of cure by amendment.” (Grinzi v. San Diego Hospice Corp. (2004) 120 Cal.App.4th 72, 78 [14 Cal. Rptr. 3d 893]; see Blank v. Kirwan, supra, 39 Cal.3d 311, 318; Chicago Title Ins. Co. v. Great Western Financial Corp. (1968) 69 Cal.2d 305, 327 [70 Cal. Rptr. 849, 444 P.2d 481] (Chicago Title), distinguished on another point in Clayworth v. Pfizer, Inc. (2010) 49 Cal.4th 758, 781, fn. 18 [111 Cal. Rptr. 3d 666, 233 P.3d 1066].)

Although a court must on demurrer accept as true properly pleaded facts, a demurrer does not admit contentions or conclusions of law or fact. (Chicago Title, supra, 69 Cal.2d 305, 327.) Particularly [13] as to the Cartwright Act and UCL causes of action, in ruling on these demurrers, the superior court was required to apply statutory standards to the pleaded facts. Determining the meaning of a statutory standard requires the resolution of a question of law. (People ex rel. Lockyer v. Shamrock Foods [670] Co. (2000) 24 Cal.4th 415, 432 [101 Cal. Rptr. 2d 200, 11 P.3d 956].) “The soundness of the resolution of such a question is examined de novo.” (Ibid.) As will be explained, those statutory claims are not well stated on this record, as to either of the Respondents, and we will discuss the problems with Appellant's statutory arguments as to Respondents collectively.

However, a different approach is required as to Appellant's tort theories, in which she has more clearly pled she stands in a different relationship to ASMG than to the Scripps facilities served by ASMG. We address, separately, those interference with economic relations and emotional distress claims against Respondents.

III

[4] The trial court sustained the demurrers to the FAC without leave to amend as to Appellant's causes of action for violation of the Cartwright Act, [11] a separate claim of conspiracy, and negligent infliction of emotional distress. At the second amended complaint (SAC) stage, Scripps obtained an order sustaining its demurrer to the claim for IIED without leave to amend (although that claim remained pending as to ASMG). It was not until the TAC was filed that either respondent demurred to the claims for damages for interference with prospective economic advantage.

ALLEGED VIOLATIONS OF ANTITRUST LAW

A. FAC Hearing and Ruling

In this claim in the FAC, Appellant incorporated her general allegations, and added that Respondents effectively conspired against her in order to limit her services and to bar her from competing [14] with ASMG. She alleged she was targeted, exclusively, by the promulgation of the rules requiring call obligations and utilization requirements, and this was anticompetitive activity, since Scripps represented itself to be an "open staff" facility. She sought injunctive relief to prevent Respondents from enforcing those rules or regulations or from intimidating or interfering with her exercise of her professional skills.

To challenge the FAC's cause of action for violation of the Cartwright Act, the demurrers each argued that Appellant had failed to adequately identify a recognized form of a relevant market, in which their actions had allegedly interfered with business interests. In opposition, Appellant argued that she could add further allegations about how she, as a sole practitioner, and possibly other such persons, were being excluded from the San Diego County hospital market.

At the hearing before the trial court, Appellant represented she could possibly identify other non-ASMG anesthesiologists who could have been precluded from practicing at Scripps. She maintained that Respondents should not be able to require single practitioners to operate their practices in a different way. [15] In the briefs and in later filings regarding the related UCL claim, she argues she could add allegations about injuries occurring in the relevant marketplace, because she has a practice of charging less per patient than ASMG doctors do. This would arguably support her claim there is indirect injury to patients, who might be able to pay less for their elective, cash basis surgeries, if her practice were unrestrained.

After its hearing, the trial court determined that Appellant had only alleged individualized economic injury at a single outpatient surgery center, the claim could not be successfully amended as described, and the demurrers would be sustained without leave to amend.

B. Applicable Legal Principles

HN2[] CA(1)[] (1) Section 16750, subdivision (a) of the Cartwright Act generally allows any person injured in her business or property "by reason of anything forbidden or declared unlawful by this chapter" to bring a private action for [*493] treble damages or injunctive relief. Section 16720, subdivision (a), defines the prohibited kinds of "trusts" [16] (combinations of capital, skill or acts by two or more persons) as including those created for or carrying out unreasonable restrictions in trade or commerce.

The elements of this Cartwright Act claim are " ' "(1) the formation and [671] operation of the conspiracy, (2) the wrongful act or acts done pursuant thereto, and (3) the damage resulting from such act or acts. [Citations.]" ' " (Quelimane Co. v. Stewart Title Guaranty Co. (1998) 19 Cal.4th 26, 47 [77 Cal. Rptr. 2d 709, 960 P.2d 513]; see Chavez v. Whirlpool Corp. (2001) 93 Cal.App.4th 363, 373 [113 Cal. Rptr. 2d 175].) "An antitrust claim must plead the formation and operation of the conspiracy and the illegal acts done in furtherance of the conspiracy. [Citation.] California requires a 'high degree of particularity' in the pleading of Cartwright Act violations [citation], and therefore generalized allegations of antitrust violations are usually insufficient. [Citation.] … The absence of factual allegations of specific conduct in furtherance of the conspiracy to eliminate or reduce competition makes the complaint legally insufficient. [Citation.]" (Freeman, supra, 77 Cal.App.4th 171, 196, fn. omitted.)

Appellant believes she has adequately pled both horizontal and vertical types of illegal restraint of trade arrangements [17] between Respondents, under the tests applicable to those claims. We first examine these two types of alleged anticompetitive conduct, then turn to the requirements for identification of the marketplace in which competition is allegedly being unreasonably restrained. We can then analyze these allegations for sufficiency.

1. Distinctions: Horizontal Restraints and Vertical Restraints

HN3[] CA(2)[] (2) The Cartwright Act prohibits combinations in unreasonable restraint of trade. (Morrison v. Viacom, Inc. (1998) 66 Cal.App.4th 534, 540 [78 Cal. Rptr. 2d 133] (Morrison).) "Certain restraints which lack redeeming virtue are conclusively presumed to be unreasonable and illegal," and constitute a per se illegal practice. (Ibid.) For example, a horizontal combination (an anticompetitive agreement among competitors who are at the same level of distribution) is ordinarily illegal per se. (Exxon Corp. v. Superior Court (1997) 51 Cal.App.4th 1672, 1680–1681 [60 Cal. Rptr. 2d 195] (Exxon Corp.).) Likewise, "market division, and certain types of group boycotts are unlawful per se." (Big Bear Lodging Assn. v. Snow Summit, Inc. (9th Cir. 1999) 182 F.3d 1096, 1101 (Big Bear), italics added & omitted; see Oltz v. St. Peter's Community Hosp. (9th Cir. 1988) 861 F.2d 1440, 1445 [18] (Oltz).)

Appellant's theory is that she, as a sole practitioner, and possibly other such persons, were being excluded from practice at Scripps, through false [*494] statements made by ASMG and Scripps, and through their conspiracy to implement unjustifiable rules and regulations. She contends that those actions amounted to a "horizontal group boycott," in which "entities at the same level combin[e] to deny a competitor at their level the benefits enjoyed by the members of the group," jointly disadvantaging the competitor. (Freeman, supra, 77 Cal.App.4th 171, 196, fn. 26.) Since ASMG competes at the same level as Appellant, she would have us apply per se rules of illegality, because such conduct is "manifestly anticompetitive." (Oltz, supra, 861 F.2d at p. 1445.) Appellant thus argues she need not further define the local hospital marketplace in her pleadings, because she is alleging, inter alia, per se violations. "Elaborate market analysis and case-by-case evaluation are unnecessary in cases involving per se antitrust violations because the anticompetitive effects of the practice are presumed." (Big Bear, supra, 182 F.3d 1096, 1101–1102.)

HN4[] CA(3)[] (3) At the pleadings stage, mere conclusory allegations [19] of "manifestly anticompetitive" conduct may be deemed insufficient as a matter of law, "where there [672] exists 'no tenable per se boycott theory.' " (Bert G. Gianelli Distributing Co. v. Beck & Co. (1985) 172 Cal.App.3d 1020, 1044, 1049 [219 Cal. Rptr. 203] (Bert G. Gianelli), disapproved on another point in Dore v. Arnold Worldwide, Inc. (2006) 39 Cal.4th 384, 394 [46 Cal. Rptr. 3d 668, 139 P.3d 56].) Appellant only pleads legal conclusions that ASMG, by influencing the other Respondent, Scripps, with respect to enactment and application of rules and regulations and professional relations, achieved a substantially adverse effect on her own practice. This does not suffice to support any viable legal theory of a per se type of violation, in the form of "restraints which lack redeeming virtue." (Morrison, supra, 66 Cal.App.4th 534, 540.)

CA(4)[] (4) Scripps, where ASMG doctors work, is not in a horizontal competitive relationship with Appellant, but supplies facilities to practitioners. A HN5[] "vertical boycott" occurs when "entities at different levels of distribution combine to deny a competitor at one level the benefits enjoyed by the members of the vertical combination." (Freeman, supra, 77 Cal.App.4th 171, 196, fn. 26; see Exxon Corp., supra, 51 Cal.App.4th 1672, 1680–1681.)

For [20] such allegations against both Respondents, the rule of reason test applies, to determine " 'whether particular concerted conduct unreasonably restrains competition.' " (Big Bear, supra, 182 F.3d 1096, 1101; see Freeman, supra, 77 Cal.App.4th 171, 194.) To examine if Respondents' alleged anticompetitive actions had any basis in reason, we next consider the extent to which Appellant can adequately plead the existence of the relevant market, as [*495] a means of demonstrating how the alleged unlawful conduct had evident adverse effects upon competition within that market. (Big Bear, supra, at p. 1101.)

2. Vertical Restraint Test: Antitrust Market and Injury

CA(5)[] (5) It is well accepted that HN6[] "the ' "antitrust laws … were enacted for 'the protection of competition, not competitors.' " ' [Citation.] They 'do not require the courts to protect small businesses from the loss of profits due to continued competition, but only against the loss of profits from practices forbidden by the antitrust laws.' [Citation.] Injury to a competitor is not equivalent to injury to competition; only the latter is the proper focus of antitrust laws." (Cel-Tech, supra, 20 Cal.4th 163, 186, italics omitted.)

HN7[] CA(6)[] (6) A complaint must allege "facts from which injury [21] to market-wide competition can be inferred." (Korshin v. Benedictine Hosp. (N.D.N.Y. 1999) 34 F.Supp.2d 133, 138 (Korshin).) " 'An "antitrust injury" must be proved; that is, the type of injury the antitrust laws were intended to prevent, and which flows from the invidious conduct which renders defendants' acts unlawful. [Citations.]' " (Morrison, supra, 66 Cal.App.4th 534, 548, quoting Kolling v. Dow Jones & Co. (1982) 137 Cal.App.3d 709, 723 [187 Cal. Rptr. 797].)

CA(7)[] (7) In Exxon Corp., supra, 51 Cal.App.4th 1672, the court explained that HN8[] where an antitrust plaintiff alleges vertical restraints, facts must be pled showing "some anticompetitive effect in the larger, interbrand market." (Id. at p. 1681, citing Bert G. Gianelli, supra, 172 Cal.App.3d at pp. 1044, 1048.) "[T]he prevailing standard [is] the 'rule-of-reason' which measures whether the anticompetitive aspect of a vertical restraint outweighs its procompetitive effects. [Citation.] [673] And it is plaintiff's burden to make the required showing of a '"substantially adverse effect on competition in the relevant market." ' [Citation.]" (Exxon, supra, at p. 1681.)

Injury to an individual plaintiff is insufficient to establish standing to assert antitrust violations. [22] (Korshin, supra, 34 F.Supp.2d 133, 139–140.) In the medical field, sufficient, successful allegations of antitrust injury might include negative impacts upon overall prices, quantity or quality of medical services, resulting from the plaintiff's absence as an available provider at the facility. (Ibid.) On the face of the pleadings, the nature of this dispute, in the context of highly specialized and regulated medical practice, implicates such public policy concerns regarding prices, and the quantity or quality of medical services. We accordingly inquire into the precise harm allegedly caused by the actions complained of, and whether there is any business excuse for the alleged acts. (Bert G. Gianelli, supra, 172 Cal.App.3d at p. 1044.)

3. Relevant Public Policies

To support her claims of unfair competition, Appellant mainly relies on Oltz, in which the court used the rule of reason test and accepted the plaintiff's argument that a hospital's exclusive arrangement to utilize medical doctor anesthesiologists, rather than a nurse-anesthetist like the plaintiff, "potentially affected two different segments of the economy. One segment was the market in which anesthesia service providers compete [23] for staff privileges at hospitals; the other was the patient market for anesthesia services. Consideration of the impact of the exclusive contract on competition does not require acceptance of one segment as the relevant market and rejection of the other. Rather … a showing of injury to competition in either market suffices for the rule of reason." (Oltz, supra, 861 F.2d 1440, 1447.)

CA(8)[] (8) In Oltz, these guidelines for analyzing the relevant marketplace are set forth: HN9[] "Defining the market is not the aim of antitrust law; it merely aids the search for competitive injury. Once defined, the relevant market demarcates 'objective benchmarks' for separating reasonable and unreasonable restraints. [Citation.] It requires the claimant to demonstrate harm to the economy beyond the claimants' own injury. [Citation.] In so doing, market definition furthers antitrust policy: the protection of competitive processes and not individual competitors." (Oltz, supra, 861 F.2d 1440, 1448.)

In Oltz, supra, 861 F.2d 1440, 1447, the relevant market was two hospitals in the greater Helena, Montana area, where there were essentially no other opportunities for the plaintiff nurse-anesthetist to practice his profession. [24] On appeal, the court determined that the interests of the two sets of defendants (the hospitals and the medical doctors who had tried to keep the plaintiff from practicing there) were sufficiently independent so that their collaborated conduct was arguably harmful to competition, and was not protected by the rule of reason. (Ibid.)

CA(9)[] (9) In BCB Anesthesia Care, Ltd. v. Passavant Memorial Area Hosp. Assn. (7th Cir. 1994) 36 F.3d 664, 667 (BCB Anesthesia Care), the court analyzed antitrust claims involving "one hospital's decisions about staff privileges and staffing patterns," in light of other authorities challenging hospital decisions about medical staffing. There, the court stated: "Those cases invariably analyze those circumstances under the rule of reason—HN10[] there is nothing obviously anticompetitive about a hospital choosing one staffing pattern over another or in restricting the staffing to [674] some rather than many, or all. [Citation.] A hospital has an unquestioned right to exercise some control over the identity and number to whom it accords staff privileges. [Citation.] Malpractice concerns, quality of care, market perceptions, cost, and administrative considerations may all impact those [25] decisions." (Ibid.)

In its analysis, the court deciding BCB Anesthesia Care, supra, 36 F.3d 664, 668, took note that Oltz, supra, 861 F.2d 1440, stood alone as the only important antitrust medical staffing case in which the plaintiff had prevailed, to date. The court explained that in Oltz, "the court was apparently persuaded by the determination that the relevant market, while not one hospital, was only two hospitals." (BCB Anesthesia Care, supra, at p. 668.) Generally, however, antitrust challenges to a staffing decision at a single hospital do not succeed, because such cases normally do not present any "facts indicating special circumstances raising antitrust concerns." (Ibid.) The reasons for such a lack of success in pursuing an antitrust claim may include, as relevant here, a "lack of antitrust injury, failure to show a detrimental effect on competition, [or] insufficient market power in the relevant market." (Ibid.)

Oltz, supra, 861 F.2d 1440, is still good authority, on its own facts. It has not been extensively cited or followed. The Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals discussed and distinguished it on an evidentiary point in County of Tuolumne v. Sonora Community Hosp. (9th Cir. 2001) 236 F.3d 1148 [26] (County of Tuolumne). Specifically, Oltz was described there as an example of successful antitrust allegations by a health care provider-plaintiff, who had supplied direct evidence supporting his theory of a conspiracy to engage in anticompetitive conduct against him, carried out by a hospital and a group of anesthesiologists. (Id. at pp. 1155–1156.) In Oltz there was direct evidence about the ongoing feud between the plaintiff-nurse anesthesiologist, and a group of physician-anesthesiologists, and the defendant hospital governing board's meeting minutes directly showed knowledge that this feud might cause deterioration of the quality of care there, leading the board to take anticompetitive action to appease the group of physician-anesthesiologists. (Ibid.)

In County of Tuolumne, supra, 236 F.3d 1148, 1155–1156, the court did not find the required supporting direct evidence of conspiracy to prevent the physician-plaintiff from practicing at the subject hospital, as he alleged. We need not describe the distinguishable factual context of that dispute, but instead refer to its use of the legal test to be applied when circumstantial evidence of conspiracy is presented by such an antitrust [27] plaintiff. The defendant can rebut such allegations of conspiracy " 'by showing a plausible and justifiable reason for its conduct that is consistent with proper business practice.' " (Id. at p. 1156.)

CA(10)[] (10) In County of Tuolumne, supra, 236 F.3d at pages 1155 through 1156, the hospital that was accused of conspiring with other physicians to harm the plaintiff, through anticompetitive conduct, made an adequate showing of its "plausible and justifiable reason" for establishing certain criteria for allowing doctors to practice there, under the applicable public policies: HN11[] "The setting of [*498] privileging criteria by a hospital is consistent with providing quality patient care and keeping insurance costs manageable." (Ibid.) There, the physician-plaintiff who had objected to the application of those criteria had failed to carry the burden to show that the defendants' actions were outside the scope of " 'permissible competitive behavior,' " or to show they were conspiracy related. (Ibid.)

In applying the rule of reason in such cases, the courts have drawn distinctions [675] "'between the intentional actions of a hospital directed specifically toward the exclusion of a particular physician or groups of physicians, [28] and the actions of a hospital which may, as a practical matter, result in the exclusion of individual practitioners but were undertaken for less personally directed reasons.'" (Mateo-Woodburn v. Fresno Community Hospital & Medical Center (1990) 221 Cal.App.3d 1169, 1183–1184 [270 Cal. Rptr. 894] (Mateo-Woodburn), quoting Redding v. St. Francis Medical Center (1989) 208 Cal.App.3d 98, 104 [255 Cal. Rptr. 806] (Redding).) Even where a structural staffing change may result in the exclusion of certain doctors from practice, "[i]f the justification is sufficient, the doctor's vested rights must give way to public and patient interest in improving the quality of medical services." (Mateo-Woodburn, supra, at p. 1185.)

Such cases illustrate that judicial deference is paid to managerial decisions concerning operation of a hospital, where the decisions appear to have been made rationally and in good faith by the hospital authorities. Hospitals have special expertise in promoting quality of care and in making workable administrative arrangements. (Mateo-Woodburn, supra, 221 Cal.App.3d at p. 1185.) " ' "Judges are untrained and courts ill-equipped for hospital administration, and it is neither possible nor desirable for the courts to act as supervening [29] boards of directors for every … hospital … in the state." [Citations.]' " (Ibid.)

HN12[] CA(11)[] (11) Even vertical restrictions may legitimately be allowed to reduce some forms of competition, if they also promote other forms of competition by allowing service providers " 'to achieve certain efficiencies in the distribution of its products [citation],' " under the rule of reason standard. (Bert G. Gianelli, supra, 172 Cal.App.3d 1020, 1045, fn. 7.)

Normally, "[a] staffing decision does not itself constitute an antitrust injury." (BCB Anesthesia Care, supra, 36 F.3d 664, 669.) Unless the effect of the conduct of a single health care provider is to deny patients reasonable access to any health care, the marketplace is not significantly affected by such individualized conduct. "'If the law were otherwise, many a physician's workplace grievance with a hospital would be elevated to the status of an antitrust action. To keep the antitrust laws from becoming so trivialized, the [*499] reasonableness of a restraint is evaluated based on its impact on competition as a whole within the relevant market.' [Citation.]" (Ibid.)

It is not enough to allege as antitrust injury, in a hospital context, "that plaintiffs cannot [30] now practice in the business form they prefer and the prices the hospital charges may be somewhat higher now than they were." (BCB Anesthesia Care, supra, 36 F.3d 664, 668.) Before a court will interfere with how one hospital staffs its physician needs, a strong showing would be required that the purpose and effect of the anticompetitive conduct, within the relevant market defined by the plaintiffs, was outside of reasonable professional standards. (Id. at pp. 668–669.)

4. Analysis

On this set of allegations, the identification of the relevant market should be treated as a matter of law, and Appellant has not shown injury across the relevant market. (Exxon Corp., supra, 51 Cal.App.4th 1672, 1682.) Even though Appellant alleges different kinds of techniques were used to single her out and to impede her ability to carry on her profession, she still alleges that only [676] she or possibly other unnamed single practitioners were or might have been affected.

The case before us is more like County of Tuolumne, supra, 236 F.3d 1148, than it is like Oltz, supra, 861 F.2d 1440, because these Respondents have put forth some legitimate policy explanations for the alleged anticompetitive conduct, and the record [31] does not support Appellant's characterization of Respondents' only rationales for their actions (e.g., appeasement of other competitors). Instead, as in Korshin, supra, 34 F.Supp.2d 133, 139–140, the pleading fails to sufficiently allege damage to the relevant marketplace, such as: "any change in the price of anesthesiology services, a decrease in quality or efficiency of care, or that the consumers of anesthesiology services … have less of a market choice, other than their ability to select [the plaintiff], as a result of defendants' actions. [Citations.] … 'Without any allegation as to how market-wide competition will be affected, the complaint fails to allege a claim on which relief may be granted.' " (Ibid.)

Moreover, the circumstances described in the pleadings show that Appellant has been able to retain privileges to practice at other outpatient facilities, such as MOPP. Such allegations do not support her claim she has been wholly excluded from practice in the relevant market area (since it is undisputed that San Diego, unlike Helena, Montana in the Oltz case (Oltz, supra, 861 F.2d 1440), has a number of hospital facilities within the immediate area). (See also Korshin, supra, 34 F.Supp.2d 133, 140 [32] [antitrust injury not shown because the plaintiff was not precluded from practicing at [*500] other hospitals, and patients were not foreclosed from going to hospitals at which he could obtain privileges, etc.]; see BCB Anesthesia Care, supra, 36 F.3d 664, 668 ["Nothing in the complaint suggests that patients are foreclosed from going elsewhere in the unlikely event that they are involved in pricing decisions [and the plaintiff was not] disabled from practicing [elsewhere]."].)

CA(12)[] (12) Appellant did not allege, nor did her proposed amendments add, the kind of "facts indicating special circumstances raising antitrust concerns," with respect to any detrimental effect on competition that caused injury, in excess of her own personal business concerns and circumstances. (BCB Anesthesia Care, supra, 36 F.3d 664, 668.) The implementation of the rules and policies of which she complains did not clearly create any adverse effect upon consumer choice in the relevant market. For all of the above reasons, the trial court did not err or abuse its discretion in sustaining the demurrers to this cause of action without leave to amend.

UCL

A. Trial Court Ruling: TAC

With respect to the UCL claim, each respondent argued [33] on demurrer that such causes of action require an underlying or predicate "independently wrongful" act, but Appellant had failed to assert a cognizable claim in that respect. (§ 17000 et seq.; the Unfair Practices Act.) Rather, the allegations were the same as in the other previous versions of the complaint, and still reflected conduct arguably within the scope of administration of the respective professions, that should not be properly subject to injunctive relief or recovery of restitution, which were said to be inappropriate remedies against the alleged practices. (§ 17203.)

As proposed amendments, Appellant's opposition to the demurrers sought to add allegations that Respondents' acts caused competitive injury, because if Appellant were allowed to continue to provide services at Scripps, she would charge less [677] than ASMG doctors. The reason is that the procedures she would work on would be typically "cash" procedures that are not covered by insurance, in which the patients pay the surgeon directly. Those surgeons have to pay ASMG doctors more, thus costing the patient more.

In sustaining the demurrers to this claim in the TAC without leave to amend, the trial court first clarified [34] that Appellant was not alleging any unlawful or fraudulent business acts, but instead "unfair" business practices. [*501] The court relied on the definitions in Cel-Tech, supra, 20 Cal.4th 163, for determining when such a claim of unfairness to competitors under section 17200 is actionable: When it is "conduct that threatens an incipient violation of an antitrust law, or violates the policy or spirit of one of those laws because its effects are comparable to or the same as a violation of the law, or [it] otherwise significantly threatens or harms competition." (Cel-Tech, supra, at pp. 186–187.)

The trial court then concluded the TAC did not successfully allege unfairness, in the form of "facts which violate antitrust law, are tethered to some legislatively declared policy, or establish proof of some actual or threatened impact on competition. (Cel-Tech, supra, 20 Cal.4th at pp. 186–187.) Instead, Plaintiff alleges only individualized harm which does not support a claim for violation of the UCL. [Citation.] While Plaintiff concludes Defendants' conduct is anticompetitive activity which harms consumers, she fails to assert sufficient facts to support an 'unfair' business act."

B. Legal Principles [35] and Analysis

CA(13)[] (13) In support of her unfairness argument, Appellant refers to this cause of action as being founded in the Unfair Practices Act (§ 17000 et seq.), but the briefing substantively discusses the related enforcement provisions for that chapter, the UCL, section 17200. HN13[] "The purpose of the Unfair Practices Act is 'to safeguard the public against the creation or perpetuation of monopolies and to foster and encourage competition, by prohibiting unfair, dishonest, deceptive, destructive, fraudulent and discriminatory practices by which fair and honest competition is destroyed or prevented.' (§ 17001.) It prohibits specific 'practices which the legislature has determined constitute unfair trade practices.' [Citation.]" (Cel-Tech, supra, 20 Cal.4th 163, 179.)

Here, it is not disputed that Appellant seeks relief under the rubric of the UCL for anticompetitive actions that allegedly harmed her, including the Unfair Practices Act, the Cartwright Act theory, or tort theories, as the "borrowed" substantive law prohibiting unfair business practices. She does not specify which portions of the Unfair Practices Act were allegedly violated.

In Redding, supra, 208 Cal.App.3d 98, 107, the court found [36] allegations of unfair business practices were insufficient, regarding a hospital's decision to enter into an exclusive contract with one particular surgeon, because the plaintiffs could not establish such an arrangement was "undertaken for anti-competitive purposes," and moreover, the defendant hospital was not " 'in competition' " with the plaintiffs (other qualified surgeons). (Ibid.)

In analyzing Appellant's Cartwright Act claims above, we have not found adequate support for her pleaded claims of unfair business conduct, in the form of certain threatened incipient violations of antitrust laws, or their "policy or spirit," or other acts significantly threatening [678] or harming competition in the medical field as a whole. (Cel-Tech, supra, 20 Cal.4th at p. 187.) As already discussed, courts are traditionally reluctant to specify how hospital contracting and staffing policies may be applied to individual practitioners. (Mateo-Woodburn, supra, 221 Cal.App.3d 1169, 1184–1185.) Appellant's proposed amendments, claiming patients are ultimately harmed by anticompetitive conduct because her fees would be lower, appear to be speculative in nature and do not address specific " 'practices which the legislature [37] has determined constitute unfair trade practices.' " (Cel-Tech, supra, at p. 179.)

CA(14)[] (14) Nor do Appellant's alternative tort theories provide an underlying body of law to plead unfair "practices" in this context, where they affected her specifically. HN14[] Actions under the UCL are not meant to be substitutes for tort or contract actions. (Korea Supply, supra, 29 Cal.4th 1134, 1150.) "Instead, the act provides an equitable means through which both public prosecutors and private individuals can bring suit to prevent unfair business practices and restore money or property to victims of these practices. As we have said, the 'overarching legislative concern [was] to provide a streamlined procedure for the prevention of ongoing or threatened acts of unfair competition.' [Citation.]" (Ibid.)

Without more extensive or clear allegations of how these administrative decisions amounted to " 'anti-competitive business practices' " that injure consumers, Appellant cannot state a claim for necessary " 'preservation of fair business competition.' " (Cel-Tech, supra, 20 Cal.4th 163, 179–180.) The individualized relief she seeks, injunctions against the ongoing use of the hospital rules and policies of which she complains, [38] or restitution of lost income, are not appropriate recovery or civil penalties under the UCL. (§ 17206.) Such relief could undermine legitimate public policy concerns and would be inconsistent with judicial recognition of special expertise in the field of hospital administration. (Redding, supra, 208 Cal.App.3d at p. 107.)

In any case, as we next discuss, other relief in damages may conceivably be available. "While plaintiff may not recover monetary relief under the limited remedies provided by the UCL, plaintiff may pursue a cause of action under traditional tort law." (Korea Supply Co., supra, 29 Cal.4th 1134, 1152.) We next inquire into the viability of such claims.

V

INTENTIONAL INTERFERENCE WITH PROSPECTIVE BUSINESS ADVANTAGE (TAC)

A. Argument and Rulings

In demurring to the TAC, Respondents for the first time argued there were defects in the causes of action for intentional and negligent interference with prospective business advantage (i.e., lack of supporting allegations of underlying wrongful acts or duty). Appellant pointed out at the trial court hearing that until this set of demurrers, she had been unaware that Respondents would be attacking them, and she could add more allegations [39] to support her interference claims, about defamatory comments and misrepresentations.

At the hearing, the superior court discussed all the claims in detail, observing at one point that there might be a qualified privilege applicable under Civil Code section 47. However, that statutory analysis [679] does not appear in the written order, nor is it significantly relied on in the briefing, and it is not before us.

The main focus before the trial court was whether Appellant had successfully pleaded the type of underlying wrongful conduct by Respondents (either intentional or negligent), under some established legal measure, that would justify a finding that such interference went beyond normally tolerated business competition. Appellant asserted to the trial court that ASMG personnel had falsely told at least one prospective patient and a surgeon who inquired about her availability that she was retired. Appellant stated that ASMG had made defamatory and disparaging comments to the two surgeons that she wished to work with, and to others, that her conduct and character were bad, such that defamation was a separate wrongful, intentional act in support of this claim of interference with her economic [40] expectancies. At that time, she was still pursuing her breach of contract claim, that ASMG had breached the nondisparagement clause in their separation agreement.

In the rulings, the trial court found it was inadequate for Appellant to allege that Respondents' motives were improper: "[A]n act is not independently wrongful merely because defendant acted with an improper motive. [Citation.] An act is independently wrongful if it is unlawful, that is, if it is proscribed by some constitutional, statutory, regulatory, common law, or other determinable legal standard. [Citation.]"

Next, the court disagreed with Appellant that her allegations were sufficient, that "ASMG created and enforced an unwritten policy at Scripps that [*504] surgeons were prohibited from requesting a specific anesthesiologist. [Citation.] [Appellant] complains about the effect of this unwritten policy on her, but does not explain how it is wrongful or even that it is unwise. She complains about new departmental rules requiring attendance at meetings, minimum numbers of procedures, and taking on call duty. [Citation.] [She] prefers not take call, attend meetings, or obtain the necessary training to take call. These are all [41] personal choices, to apparently diminish the stress in her life, but this conduct does not inflate the policies, or other conduct alleged, to an independent wrongful act." The court ruled that her proposed additional allegations of defamation or disparagement did not sink to the level of independently wrongful conduct, apart from any unfair trade practices claims. The court found these tort claims were unfounded under her situation as described. The respective demurrers to the TAC were sustained without leave to amend (mooting the motions for judgment on the pleadings).

B. Governing Legal Principles

At this stage of the proceedings, we analyze Appellant's allegations only as they are pleaded in her complaints, and "express no view as to whether plaintiff's proof will be sufficient to establish these elements at trial." (Korea Supply, supra, 29 Cal.4th 1134, 1164, fn. 14.) It is not dispositive that Respondents did not bring demurrers to attack these particular claims earlier, since we are examining their legal validity as matters of law. However, we also must consider whether Appellant presented enough supporting allegations to the trial court to justify an exercise of its discretion in allowing [42] her leave to amend.

CA(15)[] (15) "We first articulated the elements of the tort of intentional interference with prospective economic advantage in Buckaloo v. Johnson (1975) 14 Cal.3d 815, 827 [122 Cal. Rptr. 745, 537 P.2d 865] (Buckaloo). HN15[] These elements are usually stated [680] as follows: ' "(1) an economic relationship between the plaintiff and some third party, with the probability of future economic benefit to the plaintiff; (2) the defendant's knowledge of the relationship; (3) intentional acts on the part of the defendant designed to disrupt the relationship; (4) actual disruption of the relationship; and (5) economic harm to the plaintiff proximately caused by the acts of the defendant." [Citations.]' " (Korea Supply, supra, 29 Cal.4th 1134, 1153.)

In Korea Supply, supra, 29 Cal.4th 1134, the court clarified that the third element of the tort of interference with prospective economic advantage "also requires a plaintiff to plead intentional wrongful acts on the part of the defendant designed to disrupt the relationship." (Id. at p. 1154, italics omitted.) Whether an act is independently wrongful depends on its unlawfulness (if it is "proscribed by some constitutional, statutory, regulatory, common law, or other determinable legal standard"). (Id. at p. 1159.)

In [43] Khoury v. Maly's of California, Inc. (1993) 14 Cal.App.4th 612, 618–619 [17 Cal. Rptr. 2d 708], the plaintiff retail businessman (beauty supply store) alleged that the defendant and respondent company had breached a contract to keep supplying certain products to him. It mainly supplied products to hair salons, not retailers. He additionally sought to plead the tort of intentional interference with prospective business advantage, but the court found those allegations were defective, because there was no factual basis for the assertion that the defendant company had tortiously interfered with the retailer's existing commercial contacts, for any improper purpose. Rather, the company had made a business supply decision, and its effect on customers and any damage to business "were simply consequences of breach of contract." (Id. at p. 618.) In finding the pleading of interference with prospective advantage to be defective, the court referred to "the cautious policy of the courts about extending tort remedies to ordinary commercial contracts." (Ibid.) The court found no abuse of discretion had occurred when leave to amend was denied, because the trial court had not incorrectly applied the standard for [44] determining " 'whether behind the words of the pleading anything of legal substance lies, whether on further revision the pleading can honestly state a cause of action.' " (Ibid.)

C. Analysis: ASMG

CA(16)[] (16) In analyzing this theory, we are mindful that the TAC also contained a cause of action for breach of contract against ASMG, alleging that it had disparaged and defamed Appellant, contrary to its previous promises not to do so in her agreement regarding separation from employment with them. We think it is appropriate to read the allegations of this contract cause of action (dismissed without prejudice pending appeal) together with the current claims of intentional interference with economic advantage, although they were pled separately. Those alleged acts of defamation or disparagement could legitimately be considered to meet, for pleadings purposes, the standards for establishing "independent wrongfulness" of interference, as enunciated in Korea Supply, supra, 29 Cal.4th 1134, 1159, if properly incorporated into the TAC cause of action. HN16[] Common law defamation claims are subject to "determinable legal standard[s]" for resolution, as required for such a tort claim. (Ibid.) Even though we have not [45] found the Cartwright Act and UCL causes [681] of action to be well pled, there are apparently other allegations of wrongful conduct by ASMG, potentially supporting the current cause of action to claim injury through ASMG's intentional interference with economic advantage.

As to ASMG, we conclude Appellant has sufficiently alleged the first of the required elements, existence of a previous economic relationship with the two surgeons, with probability of future economic benefit to her. Next, Appellant adequately alleged that ASMG had knowledge of this ongoing economic [*506] relationship with the two surgeons, and that the relationship would have probable future economic benefit to her, but ASMG nevertheless engaged in certain "intentional wrongful acts" designed to disrupt her professional relationships. (Korea Supply, supra, 29 Cal.4th at p. 1154, italics omitted.) For example, ASMG officials allegedly threatened to withhold ASMG services previously provided at MOPP, unless Appellant's privileges there were blocked. They are also said to have defamed or disparaged her character and ability to perform adequately, and they told their members to avoid her.

Alternatively, Appellant claims that if specific intent was [46] lacking, such ASMG acts were performed at least with knowledge that some adverse interference was certain or substantially certain to occur as a result. In some ways, Appellant is claiming that she has a right to carry on her practice in her own business model of a sole practitioner, different from the group practice of her competitor, ASMG. We can express no opinion about the validity of the respective business models, and only observe that the alleged anticompetitive measures had some probability of impeding Appellant's existing practice and business expectancies. ASMG demonstrated that there were some legitimate professional reasons for its own form of practice, and for the Scripps rules and regulations on practice. However, for pleadings purposes, we assume the truth of the allegations that these were imposed without adequate justification and specifically against her interests. As noted, issues of privilege under Civil Code section 47, discussed with the trial court, have not been fully briefed or litigated, and we express no opinion on them.

Accordingly, we cannot currently determine that Appellant will be unable to adequately allege proximate causation of economic harm to her [47] from wrongful acts of ASMG. The disruption in her practice that she attributes to its acts may well have been caused by other factors, but it is not yet before the courts whether there is a causal relationship between ASMG's allegedly wrongful acts and Appellant's harm. We therefore conclude she may be able to assert alleged facts that satisfy the proximate cause element of this tort. (Korea Supply, supra, 29 Cal.4th 1134, 1164–1166.)

Finally, Appellant represented to the trial court and states in her briefs that she can add more allegations about the type of wrongful conduct or malice that would further support her claims, such as misrepresentations of hospital rules, representations to prospective patients or other surgeons that she had retired, and disparaging comments about her character and abilities, as more fully alleged in the breach of contract claim. These may add to the viability of the current cause of action, and the trial court should have allowed Appellant an opportunity to file an amended pleading to state her best case on this theory, in addition to reasserting her breach of contract claim, if desired, and we will reverse the judgment of dismissal as to ASMG with directions [48] to that effect.

[682] D. Analysis: Scripps

In the ruling, the trial court did not materially distinguish between the conduct alleged against Scripps and ASMG. This was understandable, in light of the conspiracy allegations Appellant consistently made to tie them together. However, it is difficult to find among the allegations against Scripps, even considering such conspiracy language, the type of independently wrongful conduct that would support this claim.

Specifically, Appellant claims that Scripps engaged in intentionally wrongful acts designed to disrupt her economic relationship with the two surgeons with whom she had consistently worked. She claims Scripps falsely told at least one surgeon and one patient she had retired, and that Scripps officials imposed call, utilization, and meeting requirements in a way that operated to target her in a wrongful fashion. However, those allegations are undermined by her admissions that she previously held Scripps privileges, was in the process of renewing them, and had not yet been turned down. Although she claims that she was unilaterally reclassified from courtesy to active status, and had difficulty meeting those requirements, it is not clear how [49] those changes in her professional status would impede her efforts to continue to work with the two doctors, who also practiced at several other locations. She does not support her allegations that it was the Scripps officials who expressly sought to interfere with her existing professional relationships, or that Scripps knew or should have had knowledge that its actions would certainly or substantially certainly cause interference with her prospective advantage.

The gist of Appellant's allegations of interference with economic advantage is clearly directed toward the ASMG activities, and Scripps (not a direct competitor), appears as a more or less peripheral actor. The regulatory activities by Scripps, as alleged, seem to fall within the sphere of lawful administrative behavior, rather than any tortious interference or predatory economic behavior. (Korea Supply, supra, 29 Cal.4th 1134, 1159–1160.) There is no basis to reverse the judgment of dismissal as to Scripps as to this claim.

VI–VII[*] [50] [NOT CERTIFIED FOR PUBLICATION]

DISPOSITION

Judgment is affirmed as to Scripps.
[*508]

Judgment is reversed as to ASMG with directions to the trial court to allow further proceedings to enable Appellant to file an amended complaint versus ASMG only, if desired, to plead a theory of intentional interference with prospective economic advantage, and/or to reassert her breach of contract claim.

Scripps is to receive its costs on appeal. Appellant and ASMG shall both bear their own costs.

Plaintiff and appellant M. Lou Marsh (Appellant) is a board certified anesthesiologist licensed to practice medicine in California. She filed this action for damages and other relief against her former practice group, defendant and respondent Anesthesia Service Medical Group, Inc. (ASMG), a professional medical corporation that provides physician services to hospitals and other medical centers in San Diego County. She also sued one of the facilities served by ASMG, Scripps Memorial Hospital of La Jolla (Scripps), after she experienced interpersonal and professional difficulties in carrying on her medical practice at a Scripps facility, the Scripps XiMED Surgery Center (Ximed).

In several successive pleadings that were challenged by a series of demurrers by ASMG and Scripps (together, Respondents), Appellant pled several types of unlawful or unfair business practices and related tort theories, which allegedly caused her unfair exclusion from practice. [*2] She contends Respondents' acts were in violation of the Cartwright Act (Bus. & Prof. Code,[1] § 16700 et seq.), and/or the Unfair Competition Law (the UCL, § 17200 et seq.). She also alleged that Respondents injured her by intentionally and/or negligently interfering with her prospective business advantage, and intentionally inflicted severe emotional distress (IIED) on her.

The trial court sustained demurrers to portions of the first amended complaint (FAC) and the third amended complaint (TAC), allowing no further leave to amend. In connection with filing her notice of appeal, Appellant voluntarily dismissed, without prejudice, an additional cause of action for breach of contract against ASMG, based on its alleged violations of a nondisparagement clause in her 2004 separation agreement with it.

Appellant contends on appeal that all of her causes of action are well pled, or could be successfully amended to add any essential allegations to state such causes of action. She argues her statutory claims seek legitimate remedies, including injunctive relief and restitution, and the tort claims for damages [*3] are necessary to redress her economic and personal injury.

Having reviewed the pleadings in light of well established legal principles, we conclude Appellant has not successfully alleged, on the operative facts and theories she has consistently pled, the statutory causes of action under the Cartwright Act or the UCL, nor has she demonstrated any realistic possibility of further amendments. The trial court's analysis of the relevant legal and policy considerations, as applied to those pleaded facts, was correct as a matter of law. (Cel-Tech Communications, Inc. v. Los Angeles Cellular Telephone Co. (1999) 20 Cal.4th 163, 186-187 (Cel-Tech); Freeman v. San Diego Assn. of Realtors (1999) 77 Cal.App.4th 171, 195-196 (Freeman).)

We reach similar conclusions on the demurrer rulings with respect to each of the tort causes of action asserted, with one exception. As against ASMG, the cause of action pled in the TAC for intentional interference with prospective business advantage was not previously subjected to demurrers, and this record requires that Appellant should be allowed an opportunity to amend her pleading to assert the type of wrongful conduct that, under established legal measures, [*4] may be able to support a cognizable claim. (Korea Supply Co. v. Lockheed Martin Corp. (2003) 29 Cal.4th 1134, 1158 (Korea Supply).) Even though, as stated by the Supreme Court in Korea Supply, the pleading and proof requirements for pursuing a cause of action for damages for intentional interference with prospective economic advantage are more rigorous in some respects than those of the UCL, we cannot say on this record that Appellant clearly lacks any such recourse in damages against ASMG for the injuries she claims to have suffered as a result of its alleged wrongful acts controverting her economic interests. As to Scripps, however, such claims are not well taken, for reasons to be explained.

Moreover, our examination of the record in light of the applicable pleading standards leads us to conclude that, as against either Respondent, Appellant cannot demonstrate how she could state any viable theory of negligent interference with prospective business advantage, nor the "outrageous conduct" required to support a claim of IIED, in this overall factual context of a dispute among professionals in the business of health care. (See LiMandri v. Judkins (1997) 52 Cal.App.4th 326, 348-350 (LiMandri); [*5] Christensen v. Superior Court (1991) 54 Cal.3d 868, 903 (Christensen).)

The judgment dismissing the action against Scripps is accordingly affirmed. We reverse the judgment of dismissal as to ASMG, with directions to the trial court to conduct appropriate further proceedings to allow Appellant to file an amended pleading against ASMG solely on the claim of intentional interference with economic advantage, as well as allowing her to reassert, if so desired, her voluntarily dismissed breach of contract claim.

BACKGROUND: PARTICIPANTS AND FILING OF ACTION

For purposes of analyzing the demurrer rulings, we take the facts properly pleaded to assess whether they may state their causes of action, as matters of law. (Blank v. Kirwan (1985) 39 Cal.3d 311, 318.) In the original and all her amended complaints, Appellant alleges essentially the following transactional facts (to be expanded as needed in the discussion portion of this opinion). We mainly postpone our summary of the individual rulings on demurrer giving rise to this appeal until the discussion portion of this opinion.

Until 2004, Appellant was a longtime member of ASMG, and she had staff privileges to provide anesthesia services at several [*6] institutions, including Scripps and its outpatient facility, Ximed.[2] After overcoming health problems (breast cancer), and learning that the facility where she was currently working was closing, she decided to leave ASMG to pursue her own practice. Upon leaving ASMG in July 2004, Appellant negotiated a separation agreement to resolve their disputes over professional fees she was claiming were due to her, and the agreement included a nondisparagement clause.

After her separation from ASMG employment, Appellant alleges she appropriately communicated to ASMG and Scripps/Ximed doctors and staff that she was not able to or interested in taking on scheduled call duties at Scripps for emergency and other services for nights and weekends, as the ASMG contractual arrangement provided for its affiliates to do. Appellant made it clear to ASMG and Scripps officials that she was unable or unqualified to take such call duty, due to her interest in preserving her health by avoiding such unexpected calls, and because she had not practiced in an emergency and trauma care setting for more than 15 years, but instead [*7] had specialized in elective plastic surgery for that time.

Upon leaving ASMG in 2004, Appellant retained her privileges at Scripps, although she mainly continued to practice anesthesia in private outpatient surgery centers, working primarily with two plastic surgeons, Dr. Steven Cohen and Dr. Stewart Kincaid (the two surgeons). Appellant also provided anesthesia services to these two surgeons when they performed procedures at other outpatient surgery centers affiliated with other hospitals in the area (a Sharp Metro Hospital facility, and Mercy Outpatient Pavilion (MOPP), at Scripps Mercy Hospital, where she also obtained privileges).

In 2006, the two surgeons with whom Appellant worked started performing procedures at Ximed, utilizing anesthesia services there from Appellant and from ASMG doctors. Ninety-nine percent of the anesthesiologists serving on staff at Scripps are employed by ASMG, and Appellant came to believe ASMG was unlawfully influencing the Scripps medical staff to cooperate in interfering with her efforts to practice there.

Specifically, Appellant alleges that when she decided in 2006 to resume practicing at Scripps, to take cases there with the two surgeons, ASMG and [*8] Scripps together allegedly took actions to limit her practice at Scripps/Ximed in several ways, all of which she claims amounted to unfair business practices or were otherwise wrongful. Appellant asserts that ASMG and/or Scripps allegedly made knowing misrepresentations to interested parties that her employment status was "retired," that she did not carry her fair share of call, that this adversely affected hospital morale, and that she was disruptive, adversarial, and should be avoided. Scripps officials allegedly told surgeons using its facilities that, according to some unwritten rule or practice, they were not allowed to specifically request her professional services, but instead they must use those anesthesiologists who take scheduled call duty pursuant to ASMG arrangements.

When Appellant obtained privileges at MOPP (with Scripps Mercy), ASMG officials allegedly threatened to withhold ASMG services previously provided there, unless Appellant's privileges were blocked. Also around that time, ASMG notified her that her health insurance policy on its plan had been canceled, although it later claimed this was a mistake, and the policy remained in effect. Appellant, as a cancer survivor, [*9] alleges she suffered serious emotional distress while unfairly placed under that misapprehension.

Appellant further alleges that ASMG and Scripps worked together, without justification, to enact new hospital staffing rules that imposed unfair burdens upon her in particular, such as adopting rules that required all staff, including her, to participate in regular night and weekend hospital call duty. Other such new utilization and staff rules required anesthesiologists practicing at Scripps to attend a minimum number of monthly meetings, and to participate in at least 20 surgical cases over a two-year period. Unilaterally, Scripps reclassified Appellant as having "active" status, rather than "courtesy" privileges, which subjected her to additional administrative requirements for renewal of privileges at Scripps.[3] However, about 50 other similarly situated anesthesiologists were allowed to retain their courtesy status.

In December of 2007, Appellant filed this action and amended her complaint ("FAC") in January 2008. Originally, in addition to her unlawful business practices, antitrust and emotional distress claims, Appellant pursued separate causes of action for conspiracy and negligent infliction of emotional distress. Each Respondent successfully brought demurrers to certain of these causes of action but not others,[4] and eventually each Respondent filed an answer to the SAC.

By stipulation, Appellant filed her TAC, which retained the same four causes of action as in the SAC (except for correctly omitting Scripps from the IIED claim). As [*11] against ASMG, Appellant was allowed to add a breach of contract theory, based on alleged violation of the nondisparagement clause in her 2004 separation agreement from ASMG (defamatory remarks calling her "disruptive," "unfair," and "adversarial"). Respondents again demurred and sought judgment on the pleadings.

After extensive briefing and hearing, all demurrers were sustained without leave to amend and judgments of dismissal were entered. Appellant voluntarily dismissed her breach of contract claim against ASMG, without prejudice, to seek this immediate appellate review.

STANDARD OF REVIEW AND ISSUES PRESENTED

We apply well established rules of review. "A demurrer tests the legal sufficiency of the complaint. [Citation.] Therefore, we review the complaint de novo to determine whether it contains sufficient facts to state a cause of action. [Citation.] 'We treat the demurrer as admitting all material facts properly pleaded, but not contentions, deductions or conclusions of fact or law.' [Citation.] The trial court exercises its discretion in declining to grant leave to amend. [Citation.] If it is reasonably possible the pleading can be cured by amendment, the trial court abuses its [*12] discretion by not granting leave to amend. [Citation.] The plaintiff has the burden of proving the possibility of cure by amendment." (Grinzi v. San Diego Hospice Corp. (2004) 120 Cal.App.4th 72, 78 (Grinzi); Blank v. Kirwan, supra, 39 Cal.3d 311, 318; Chicago Title Ins. Co. v. Great Western Financial Corp. (1968) 69 Cal.2d 305, 327 (Chicago Title); distinguished in another point in Clayworth v. Pfizer, Inc. (2010) 49 Cal.4th 758, 781, fn. 18.)

Although a court must on demurrer accept as true properly pleaded facts, a demurrer does not admit contentions or conclusions of law or fact. (Chicago Title, supra, 69 Cal.2d 305, 327.) Particularly as to the Cartwright Act and UCL causes of action, in ruling on these demurrers, the superior court was required to apply statutory standards to the pleaded facts. Determining the meaning of a statutory standard requires the resolution of a question of law. (People ex rel Lockyer v. Shamrock Foods Co. (2000) 24 Cal.4th 415, 432.) "The soundness of the resolution of such a question is examined de novo." (Ibid.) As will be explained, those statutory claims are not well stated on this record, as to either of the Respondents, and we will discuss the problems [*13] with Appellant's statutory arguments as to Respondents collectively.

[3] The record is not clear as to Appellant's current status as to hospital privileges at Scripps. According to her opening brief (filed in December 2010), Appellant's privileges "technically" expired in March 2008 and February 2010, but she does not know whether her applications [*10] have been processed by Scripps.

[4] The trial court sustained the demurrers to the FAC without leave to amend as to Appellant's causes of action for violation of the Cartwright Act, a separate claim of conspiracy, and negligent infliction of emotional distress. At the SAC stage, Scripps obtained an order sustaining its demurrer to the claim for IIED without leave to amend (although that claim remained pending as to ASMG). It was not until the TAC was filed that either Respondent demurred to the claims for damages for interference with prospective economic advantage.

However, a different approach is required as to Appellant's tort theories, in which she has more clearly pled she stands in a different relationship to ASMG than to the Scripps facilities served by ASMG. We address, separately, those interference with economic relations and emotional distress claims against Respondents.

III

ALLEGED VIOLATIONS OF ANTITRUST LAW

A. FAC Hearing and Ruling

In this claim in the FAC, Appellant incorporated her general allegations, and added that Respondents effectively conspired against her in order to limit her services and to bar her from competing with ASMG. She alleged she was targeted, exclusively, by the promulgation of the rules requiring call obligations and utilization requirements, and this was anticompetitive activity, since Scripps represented itself to be an "open staff" facility. She sought injunctive relief to prevent Respondents from enforcing those rules or regulations or from intimidating or interfering with her exercise of her professional skills.

To challenge the FAC's cause of action for violation of the Cartwright Act, the demurrers each argued that Appellant had failed to [*14] adequately identify a recognized form of a relevant market, in which their actions had allegedly interfered with business interests. In opposition, Appellant argued that she could add further allegations about how she, as a sole practitioner, and possibly other such persons, were being excluded from the San Diego County hospital market.

At the hearing before the trial court, Appellant represented she could possibly identify other non-ASMG anesthesiologists who could have been precluded from practicing at Scripps. She maintained that Respondents should not be able to require single practitioners to operate their practices in a different way. In the briefs and in later filings regarding the related UCL claim, she argues she could add allegations about injuries occurring in the relevant marketplace, because she has a practice of charging less per patient than ASMG doctors do. This would arguably support her claim there is indirect injury to patients, who might be able to pay less for their elective, cash basis surgeries, if her practice were unrestrained.

After its hearing, the trial court determined that Appellant had only alleged individualized economic injury at a single outpatient surgery [*15] center, the claim could not be successfully amended as described, and the demurrers would be sustained without leave to amend.

B. Applicable Legal Principles

Section 16750, subdivision (a) of the Cartwright Act generally allows any person injured in her business or property "by reason of anything forbidden or declared unlawful by this chapter" to bring a private action for treble damages or injunctive relief. Section 16720, subdivision (a), defines the prohibited kinds of "trusts" (combinations of capital, skill or acts by two or more persons) as including those created for or carrying out unreasonable restrictions in trade or commerce.

The elements of this Cartwright Act claim are """(1) the formation and operation of the conspiracy, (2) the wrongful act or acts done pursuant thereto, and (3) the damage resulting from such act or acts. [Citation.]""" (Quelimane Co. v. Stewart Title Guaranty Co. (1998) 19 Cal.4th 26, 47; Chavez v. Whirlpool Corp. (2001) 93 Cal.App.4th 363, 373.) "An antitrust claim must plead the formation and operation of the conspiracy and the illegal acts done in furtherance of the conspiracy. [Citation.] California requires a 'high degree of particularity' in the [*16] pleading of Cartwright Act violations [citation] and therefore generalized allegations of antitrust violations are usually insufficient. [Citation.] . . . The absence of factual allegations of specific conduct in furtherance of the conspiracy to eliminate or reduce competition makes the complaint legally insufficient. [Citation.]" (Freeman, supra, 77 Cal.App.4th 171, 196.)

Appellant believes she has adequately pled both horizontal and vertical types of illegal restraint of trade arrangements between Respondents, under the tests applicable to those claims. We first examine these two types of alleged anticompetitive conduct, then turn to the requirements for identification of the marketplace in which competition is allegedly being unreasonably restrained. We can then analyze these allegations for sufficiency.

1. Distinctions: Horizontal Restraints and Vertical Restraints

The Cartwright Act prohibits combinations in unreasonable restraint of trade. (Morrison v. Viacom, Inc. (1998) 66 Cal.App.4th 534, 540 (Morrison).) "Certain restraints which lack redeeming virtue are conclusively presumed to be unreasonable and illegal," and constitute a per se illegal practice. (Ibid.) For example, a horizontal [*17] combination (an anticompetitive agreement among competitors who are at the same level of distribution) is ordinarily illegal per se. (Exxon Corp. v. Superior Court (1997) 51 Cal.App.4th 1672, 1680-1681 (Exxon Corp.).) Likewise, "market division, and certain types of group boycotts are unlawful per se." (Big Bear Lodging Ass'n v. Snow Summit, Inc. (9th Cir. 1999) 182 F.3d 1096, 1101 (Big Bear); italics added); Oltz v. St. Peter's Community Hosp. (9th Cir. 1988) 861 F.2d 1440, 1445 (Oltz).)

Appellant's theory is that she, as a sole practitioner, and possibly other such persons, were being excluded from practice at Scripps, through false statements made by ASMG and Scripps, and through their conspiracy to implement unjustifiable rules and regulations. She contends that those actions amounted to a "horizontal group boycott," in which "entities at the same level combin[e] to deny a competitor at their level the benefits enjoyed by the members of the group," jointly disadvantaging the competitor. (Freeman, supra, 77 Cal.App.4th 171, 196, fn. 26.) Since ASMG competes at the same level as Appellant, she would have us apply per se rules of illegality, because such conduct is "manifestly [*18] anticompetitive." (Oltz, supra, 861 F.2d at p. 1445.) Appellant thus argues she need not further define the local hospital marketplace in her pleadings, because she is alleging, inter alia, per se violations. "Elaborate market analysis and case-by-case evaluation are unnecessary in cases involving per se antitrust violations because the anticompetitive effects of the practice are presumed." (Big Bear, supra, 182 F.3d 1096, 1101-1102.)

At the pleadings stage, mere conclusory allegations of "manifestly anticompetitive" conduct may be deemed insufficient as a matter of law, "where there exists 'no tenable per se boycott theory.'" (Bert G. Gianelli Distributing Co. v. Beck & Co. (1985) 172 Cal.App.3d 1020, 1044, 1049 (Bert G. Gianelli); disapproved on another point in Dore v. Arnold Worldwide, Inc. (2006) 39 Cal.4th 384, 394.) Appellant only pleads legal conclusions that ASMG, by influencing the other Respondent, Scripps, with respect to enactment and application of rules and regulations and professional relations, achieved a substantially adverse effect on her own practice. This does not suffice to support any viable legal theory of a per se type of violation, in the form of "restraints [*19] which lack redeeming virtue." (Morrison, supra, 66 Cal.App.4th 534, 540.)

Scripps, where ASMG doctors work, is not in a horizontal competitive relationship with Appellant, but supplies facilities to practitioners. Regarding this "vertical boycott" allegation, it occurs when "entities at different levels of distribution combine to deny a competitor at one level the benefits enjoyed by the members of the vertical combination." (Freeman, supra, 77 Cal.App.4th 171, 196, fn. 26; Exxon Corp., supra, 51 Cal.App.4th 1672, 1680-1681.)

For such allegations against both Respondents, the rule of reason test applies, to determine "'whether particular concerted conduct unreasonably restrains competition.'" (Big Bear, supra, 182 F.3d 1096, 1101; Freeman, supra, 77 Cal.App.4th 171, 194.) To examine if Respondent's alleged anticompetitive actions had any basis in reason, we next consider the extent to which Appellant can adequately plead the existence of the relevant market, as a means of demonstrating how the alleged unlawful conduct had evident adverse effects upon competition within that market. (Big Bear, supra, at p. 1101.)

2. Vertical Restraint Test: Antitrust Market and Injury

It is well accepted [*20] that "the '"antitrust laws . . . were enacted for 'the protection of competition, not competitors.'"' [Citation.] They 'do not require the courts to protect small businesses from the loss of profits due to continued competition, but only against the loss of profits from practices forbidden by the antitrust laws.' [Citation.] Injury to a competitor is not equivalent to injury to competition; only the latter is the proper focus of antitrust laws." (Cel-Tech, supra, 20 Cal.4th 163, 186.)

A complaint must allege "facts from which injury to market-wide competition can be inferred." (Korshin v. Benedictine Hosp. (N.D.N.Y. 1999) 34 F.Supp.2d 133, 138 (Korshin).) "'An "antitrust injury" must be proved; that is, the type of injury the antitrust laws were intended to prevent, and which flows from the invidious conduct which renders defendants' acts unlawful. [Citations.]'" (Morrison, supra, 66 Cal.App.4th 534, 548, citing Kolling v. Dow Jones & Co. (1982) 137 Cal.App.3d 709, 723.)

In Exxon Corp., supra, 51 Cal.App.4th 1672, the court explained that where an antitrust plaintiff alleges vertical restraints, facts must be pled showing "some anticompetitive effect in the larger, interbrand market." [*21] (Id. at p. 1681, citing Bert G. Gianelli, supra, 172 Cal.App.3d at pp. 1044, 1048.) "[T]he prevailing standard [is] the 'rule-of-reason' which measures whether the anticompetitive aspect of a vertical restraint outweighs its procompetitive effects. [Citation.] And it is plaintiff's burden to make the required showing of a '"substantially adverse effect on competition in the relevant market."' [Citation.]" (Exxon, supra, at p. 1681.)

Injury to an individual plaintiff is insufficient to establish standing to assert antitrust violations. (Korshin, supra, 34 F.Supp.2d 133, 139-140.) In the medical field, sufficient, successful allegations of antitrust injury might include negative impacts upon overall prices, quantity or quality of medical services, resulting from the plaintiff's absence as an available provider at the facility. (Ibid.) On the face of the pleadings, the nature of this dispute, in the context of highly specialized and regulated medical practice, implicates such public policy concerns regarding prices, and the quantity or quality of medical services. We accordingly inquire into the precise harm allegedly caused by the actions complained of, and whether there is any business [*22] excuse for the alleged acts. (Bert G. Gianelli, supra, 172 Cal.App.3d at p. 1044.)

3. Relevant Public Policies

To support her claims of unfair competition, Appellant mainly relies on Oltz, in which the court used the rule of reason test and accepted the plaintiff's argument that a hospital's exclusive arrangement to utilize medical doctor anesthesiologists, rather than a nurse-anesthetist like the plaintiff, "potentially affected two different segments of the economy. One segment was the market in which anesthesia service providers compete for staff privileges at hospitals; the other was the patient market for anesthesia services. Consideration of the impact of the exclusive contract on competition does not require acceptance of one segment as the relevant market and rejection of the other. Rather . . . a showing of injury to competition in either market suffices for the rule of reason." (Oltz, supra, 861 F.2d 1440, 1447.)

In Oltz, these guidelines for analyzing the relevant marketplace are set forth: "Defining the market is not the aim of antitrust law; it merely aids the search for competitive injury. Once defined, the relevant market demarcates 'objective benchmarks' for separating [*23] reasonable and unreasonable restraints. [Citation.] It requires the claimant to demonstrate harm to the economy beyond the claimants' own injury. [Citations.] In so doing, market definition furthers antitrust policy: the protection of competitive processes and not individual competitors." (Oltz, supra, 861 F.2d 1440, 1448.)

In Oltz, supra, 861 F.2d 1440, 1447, the relevant market was two hospitals in the greater Helena, Montana area, where there were essentially no other opportunities for the plaintiff nurse-anesthetist to practice his profession. On appeal, the court determined that the interests of the two sets of defendants (the hospitals and the medical doctors who had tried to keep plaintiff from practicing there) were sufficiently independent so that their collaborated conduct was arguably harmful to competition, and was not protected by the rule of reason. (Ibid.)

In BCB Anesthesia Care, Ltd. v. Passavant Memorial Area Hosp. Ass'n (7th Cir. 1994) 36 F.3d 664, 667 (BCB Anesthesia Care), the court analyzed antitrust claims involving "one hospital's decisions about staff privileges and staffing patterns," in light of other authorities challenging hospital decisions about medical [*24] staffing. There, the court stated: "Those cases invariably analyze those circumstances under the rule of reason—there is nothing obviously anticompetitive about a hospital choosing one staffing pattern over another or in restricting the staffing to some rather than many, or all. [Citation.] A hospital has an unquestioned right to exercise some control over the identity and number to whom it accords staff privileges. [Citation.] Malpractice concerns, quality of care, market perceptions, cost, and administrative considerations may all impact those decisions." (Ibid.)

In its analysis, the court deciding BCB Anesthesia Care, supra, 36 F.3d 664, 668, took note that Oltz, supra, 861 F.2d 1440, stood alone as the only important antitrust medical staffing case in which the plaintiff had prevailed, to date. The court explained that in Oltz, "the court was apparently persuaded by the determination that the relevant market, while not one hospital, was only two hospitals." (BCB Anesthesia Care, supra, at p. 668.) Generally, however, antitrust challenges to a staffing decision at a single hospital do not succeed, because such cases normally do not present any "facts indicating special circumstances [*25] raising antitrust concerns." (Ibid.) The reasons for such a lack of success in pursuing an antitrust claim may include, as relevant here, a "lack of antitrust injury, failure to show a detrimental effect on competition, [or] insufficient market power in the relevant market." (Ibid.)

Oltz, supra, 861 F.2d 1440, is still good authority, on its own facts. It has not been extensively cited or followed. The Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals discussed and distinguished it on an evidentiary point in County of Tuolumne v. Sonora Community Hosp. (9th Cir. 2001) 236 F.3d 1148 (County of Tuolumne). Specifically, Oltz was described there as an example of successful antitrust allegations by a health care provider-plaintiff, who had supplied direct evidence supporting his theory of a conspiracy to engage in anticompetitive conduct against him, carried out by a hospital and a group of anesthesiologists. (Id. at pp. 1155-1156.) In Oltz there was direct evidence about the ongoing feud between the plaintiff-nurse anesthesiologist, and a group of physician-anesthesiologists, and the defendant hospital governing board's meeting minutes directly showed knowledge that this feud might cause deterioration of [*26] the quality of care there, leading the board to take anticompetitive action to appease the group of physician-anesthesiologists. (Ibid.)

In County of Tuolumne, supra, 236 F.3d 1148, 1155-1156, the court did not find the required supporting direct evidence of conspiracy to prevent the physician-plaintiff from practicing at the subject hospital, as he alleged. We need not describe the distinguishable factual context of that dispute, but instead refer to its use of the legal test to be applied when circumstantial evidence of conspiracy is presented by such an antitrust plaintiff. The defendant can rebut such allegations of conspiracy "by showing a plausible and justifiable reason for its conduct that is consistent with proper business practice." (Id. at p. 1156.)

In County of Tuolumne, supra, 236 F.3d at pages 1155 through 1156, the hospital that was accused of conspiring with other physicians to harm the plaintiff, through anti-competitive conduct, made an adequate showing of its "plausible and justifiable reason" for establishing certain criteria for allowing doctors to practice there, under the applicable public policies: "The setting of privileging criteria by a hospital is consistent [*27] with providing quality patient care and keeping insurance costs manageable." (Ibid.) There, the physician-plaintiff who had objected to the application of those criteria had failed to carry the burden to show that the defendants' actions were outside the scope of "permissible competitive behavior," or to show they were conspiracy related. (Ibid.)

In applying the rule of reason in such cases, the courts have drawn distinctions "'between the intentional actions of a hospital directed specifically toward the exclusion of a particular physician or groups of physicians, and the actions of a hospital which may, as a practical matter, result in the exclusion of individual practitioners but were undertaken for less personally directed reasons.'" (Mateo-Woodburn v. Fresno Community Hospital & Medical Center (1990) 221 Cal.App.3d 1169, 1183-1184 (Mateo-Woodburn); Redding v. St. Francis Medical Center (1989) 208 Cal.App.3d 98, 104 (Redding).) Even where a structural staffing change may result in the exclusion of certain doctors from practice, "[i]f [*28] the justification is sufficient, the doctor's vested rights must give way to public and patient interest in improving the quality of medical services." (Mateo-Woodburn, supra, at p. 1185.)

Such cases illustrate that judicial deference is paid to managerial decisions concerning operation of a hospital, where the decisions appear to have been made rationally and in good faith by the hospital authorities. Hospitals have special expertise in promoting quality of care and in making workable administrative arrangements. (Mateo-Woodburn, supra, 221 Cal.App.3d at p. 1185.) ""'Judges are untrained and courts ill-equipped for hospital administration, and it is neither possible nor desirable for the courts to act as supervening boards of directors for every . . . hospital . . . in the state." [Citations.]"' (Ibid.)

Even vertical restrictions may legitimately be allowed to reduce some forms of competition, if they also promote other forms of competition by allowing service providers "'to achieve certain efficiencies in the distribution of its products [citation],'" under the rule of reason standard. (See Bert G. Gianelli, supra, 172 Cal.App.3d 1020, 1045.)

Normally, "[a] staffing decision does not [*29] itself constitute an antitrust injury." (BCB Anesthesia Care, supra, 36 F.3d 664, 668.) Unless the effect of the conduct of a single health care provider is to deny patients reasonable access to any health care, the marketplace is not significantly affected by such individualized conduct. "'If the law were otherwise, many a physician's workplace grievance with a hospital would be elevated to the status of an antitrust action. To keep the antitrust laws from becoming so trivialized, the reasonableness of a restraint is evaluated based on its impact on competition as a whole within the relevant market.' [Citation.]" (Ibid.)

It is not enough to allege as antitrust injury, in a hospital context, "that plaintiffs cannot now practice in the business form they prefer and the prices the hospital charges may be somewhat higher now than they were." (BCB Anesthesia Care, supra, 36 F.3d 664, 668.) Before a court will interfere with how one hospital staffs its physician needs, a strong showing would be required that the purpose and effect of the anticompetitive conduct, within the relevant market defined by plaintiffs, was outside of reasonable professional standards. (Id. at pp. 668-669.)

4. [*30] Analysis

On this set of allegations, the identification of the relevant market should be treated as a matter of law, and Appellant has not shown injury across the relevant market. (Exxon Corp., supra, 51 Cal.App.4th 1672, 1682.) Even though Appellant alleges different kinds of techniques were used to single her out and to impede her ability to carry on her profession, she still alleges that only she or possibly other unnamed single practitioners were or might have been affected.

The case before us is more like County of Tuolumne, supra, 236 F.3d 1148, than it is like Oltz, supra, 861 F.2d 1440, because these Respondents have put forth some legitimate policy explanations for the alleged anticompetitive conduct, and the record does not support Appellant's characterization of Respondents' only rationales for their actions (e.g., appeasement of other competitors). Instead, as in Korshin, supra, 34 F.Supp.2d 133, 139-140, the pleading fails to sufficiently allege damage to the relevant marketplace, such as: "any change in the price of anesthesiology services, a decrease in quality or efficiency of care, or that the consumers of anesthesiology services . . . have less of a market choice, other [*31] than their ability to select [plaintiff], as a result of defendants' actions. [Citations.] . . . 'Without any allegation as to how market-wide competition will be affected, the complaint fails to allege a claim on which relief may be granted.'" (Ibid.)

Moreover, the circumstances described in the pleadings show that Appellant has been able to retain privileges to practice at other outpatient facilities, such as MOPP. Such allegations do not support her claim she has been wholly excluded from practice in the relevant market area (since it is undisputed that San Diego, unlike Helena, Montana in the Oltz case (861 F.2d 1440), has a number of hospital facilities within the immediate area). (Also see Korshin, supra, 34 F.Supp.2d 133, 140 [antitrust injury not shown because the plaintiff was not precluded from practicing at other hospitals, and patients were not foreclosed from going to hospitals at which he could obtain privileges, etc.;] see BCB Anesthesia Care, supra, 36 F.3d 664, 668 ["Nothing [*32] in the complaint suggests that patients are foreclosed from going elsewhere in the unlikely event that they are involved in pricing decisions [and plaintiff was not] disabled from practicing [elsewhere]"].)

Appellant did not allege, nor did her proposed amendments add, the kind of "facts indicating special circumstances raising antitrust concerns," with respect to any detrimental effect on competition that caused injury, in excess of her own personal business concerns and circumstances. (BCB Anesthesia Care, supra, 36 F.3d 664, 668.) The implementation of the rules and policies of which she complains did not clearly create any adverse effect upon consumer choice in the relevant market. For all of the above reasons, the trial court did not err or abuse its discretion in sustaining the demurrers to this cause of action without leave to amend.

IV

UCL

A. Trial Court Ruling: TAC

With respect to the UCL claim, each Respondent argued on demurrer that such causes of action require an underlying or predicate "independently wrongful" act, but Appellant had failed to assert a cognizable claim in that respect. (§ 17000 et seq., the Unfair Practices Act.) Rather, the allegations were the same as in [*33] the other previous versions of the complaint, and still reflected conduct arguably within the scope of administration of the respective professions, that should not be properly subject to injunctive relief or recovery of restitution, which were said to be inappropriate remedies against the alleged practices. (§ 17203.)

As proposed amendments, Appellant's opposition to the demurrers sought to add allegations that Respondents' acts caused competitive injury, because if Appellant were allowed to continue to provide services at Scripps, she would charge less than ASMG doctors. The reason is that the procedures she would work on would be typically "cash" procedures that are not covered by insurance, in which the patients pay the surgeon directly. Those surgeons have to pay ASMG doctors more, thus costing the patient more.

In sustaining the demurrers to this claim in the TAC without leave to amend, the trial court first clarified that Appellant was not alleging any unlawful or fraudulent business acts, but instead "unfair" business practices. The court relied on the definitions in Cel-Tech, supra, 20 Cal.4th 163, for determining when such a claim of unfairness to competitors under section [*34] 17200 is actionable: When it is "conduct that threatens an incipient violation of an antitrust law, or violates the policy or spirit of one of those laws because its effects are comparable to or the same as a violation of the law, or [it] otherwise significantly threatens or harms competition." (Cel-Tech, supra, at pp. 186-187.)

The trial court then concluded the TAC did not successfully allege unfairness, in the form of "facts which violate antitrust law, are tethered to some legislatively declared policy, or establish proof of some actual or threatened impact on competition. (Cel-Tech, supra, 20 Cal.4th at pp. 186-187.) Instead, Plaintiff alleges only individualized harm which does not support a claim for violation of the UCL. [Citation.] While Plaintiff concludes Defendants' conduct is anticompetitive activity which harms consumers, she fails to assert sufficient facts to support an 'unfair' business act."

B. Legal Principles and Analysis

In support of her unfairness argument, Appellant refers to this cause of action as being founded in the Unfair Practices Act (§ 17000 et seq.), but the briefing substantively discusses the related enforcement provisions for that chapter, the UCL, [*35] section 17200. "The purpose of the Unfair Practices Act is 'to safeguard the public against the creation or perpetuation of monopolies and to foster and encourage competition, by prohibiting unfair, dishonest, deceptive, destructive, fraudulent and discriminatory practices by which fair and honest competition is destroyed or prevented.' (§ 17001.) It prohibits specific 'practices which the legislature has determined constitute unfair trade practices.' [Citation.]" (Cel-Tech, supra, 20 Cal.4th 163, 179.)

Here, it is not disputed that Appellant seeks relief under the rubric of the UCL for anticompetitive actions that allegedly harmed her, including the Unfair Practices Act, the Cartwright Act theory, or tort theories, as the "borrowed" substantive law prohibiting unfair business practices. She does not specify which portions of the Unfair Practices Act were allegedly violated.

In Redding, supra, 208 Cal.App.3d 98, 107, the court found allegations of unfair business practices were insufficient, regarding a hospital's decision to enter into an exclusive contract with one particular surgeon, because the plaintiffs could not establish such an arrangement was "undertaken for anti-competitive [*36] purposes;" and moreover, the defendant hospital was not "'in competition'" with plaintiffs (other qualified surgeons). (Ibid.)

In analyzing Appellant's Cartwright Act claims above, we have not found adequate support for her pleaded claims of unfair business conduct, in the form of certain threatened incipient violations of antitrust laws, or their "policy or spirit," or other acts significantly threatening or harming competition in the medical field as a whole. (Cel-Tech, supra, 20 Cal.4th at p. 187.) As already discussed, courts are traditionally reluctant to specify how hospital contracting and staffing policies may be applied to individual practitioners. (Mateo-Woodburn, supra, 221 Cal.App.3d 1169, 1184-1185.) Appellant's proposed amendments, claiming patients are ultimately harmed by anticompetitive conduct because her fees would be lower, appear to be speculative in nature and do not address specific "'practices which the legislature has determined constitute unfair trade practices.'" (Cel-Tech, supra, at p. 179.)

Nor do Appellant's alternative tort theories provide an underlying body of law to plead unfair "practices" in this context, where they affected her specifically. Actions [*37] under the UCL are not meant to be substitutes for tort or contract actions. (Korea Supply, supra, 29 Cal.4th 1134, 1150.) "Instead, the act provides an equitable means through which both public prosecutors and private individuals can bring suit to prevent unfair business practices and restore money or property to victims of these practices. As we have said, the 'overarching legislative concern [was] to provide a streamlined procedure for the prevention of ongoing or threatened acts of unfair competition.' [Citation.]" (Ibid.)

Without more extensive or clear allegations of how these administrative decisions amounted to "'anti-competitive business practices'" that injure consumers, Appellant cannot state a claim for necessary "'preservation of fair business competition.'" (Cel-Tech, supra, 20 Cal.4th 163, 179-180.) The individualized relief she seeks, injunctions against the ongoing use of the hospital rules and policies of which she complains, or restitution of lost income, are not appropriate recovery or civil penalties under the UCL. (§ 17206.) Such relief could undermine legitimate public policy concerns and would be inconsistent with judicial recognition of special expertise in the [*38] field of hospital administration. (Redding, supra, 208 Cal.App.3d at p. 107.)

In any case, as we next discuss, other relief in damages may conceivably be available. "While plaintiff may not recover monetary relief under the limited remedies provided by the UCL, plaintiff may pursue a cause of action under traditional tort law." (Korea Supply Co., supra, 29 Cal.4th 1134, 1152.) We next inquire into the viability of such claims.

V

INTENTIONAL INTERFERENCE WITH PROSPECTIVE BUSINESS ADVANTAGE (TAC)

A. Argument and Rulings

In demurring to the TAC, Respondents for the first time argued there were defects in the causes of action for intentional and negligent interference with prospective business advantage (i.e., lack of supporting allegations of underlying wrongful acts or duty). Appellant pointed out at the trial court hearing that until this set of demurrers, she had been unaware that Respondents would be attacking them, and she could add more allegations to support her interference claims, about defamatory comments and misrepresentations.

At the hearing, the superior court discussed all the claims in detail, observing at one point that there might be a qualified privilege applicable under Civil Code section 47. [*39] However, that statutory analysis does not appear in the written order, nor is it significantly relied on in the briefing, and it is not before us.

The main focus before the trial court was whether Appellant had successfully pleaded the type of underlying wrongful conduct by Respondents (either intentional or negligent), under some established legal measure, that would justify a finding that such interference went beyond normally tolerated business competition. Appellant asserted to the trial court that ASMG personnel had falsely told at least one prospective patient and a surgeon who inquired about her availability that she was retired. Appellant stated that ASMG had made defamatory and disparaging comments to the two surgeons that she wished to work with, and to others, that her conduct and character were bad, such that defamation was a separate wrongful, intentional act in support of this claim of interference with her economic expectancies. At that time, she was still pursuing her breach of contract claim, that ASMG had breached the nondisparagement clause in their separation agreement.

In the rulings, the trial court found it was inadequate for Appellant to allege that Respondents' [*40] motives were improper: "[A]n act is not independently wrongful merely because defendant acted with an improper motive. [Citation.] An act is independently wrongful if it is unlawful, that is, if it is proscribed by some constitutional, statutory, regulatory, common law, or other determinable legal standard. [Citation.]"

Next, the court disagreed with Appellant that her allegations were sufficient, that "ASMG created and enforced an unwritten policy at Scripps that surgeons were prohibited from requesting a specific anesthesiologist. [Citation.] [Appellant] complains about the effect of this unwritten policy on her, but does not explain how it is wrongful or even that it is unwise. She complains about new departmental rules requiring attendance at meetings, minimum numbers of procedures, and taking on call duty. [Citation.] [She] prefers not take call, attend meetings, or obtain the necessary training to take call. These are all personal choices, to apparently diminish the stress in her life, but this conduct does not inflate the policies, or other conduct alleged, to an independent wrongful act." The court ruled that her proposed additional allegations of defamation or disparagement [*41] did not sink to the level of independently wrongful conduct, apart from any unfair trade practices claims. The court found these tort claims were unfounded under her situation as described. The respective demurrers to the TAC were sustained without leave to amend (mooting the motions for judgment on the pleadings).

B. Governing Legal Principles

At this stage of the proceedings, we analyze Appellant's allegations only as they are pleaded in her complaints, and "express no view as to whether plaintiff's proof will be sufficient to establish these elements at trial." (Korea Supply, supra, 29 Cal.4th 1134, 1164.) It is not dispositive that Respondents did not bring demurrers to attack these particular claims earlier, since we are examining their legal validity as matters of law. However, we also must consider whether Appellant presented enough supporting allegations to the trial court to justify an exercise of its discretion in allowing her leave to amend.

"We first articulated the elements of the tort of intentional interference with prospective economic advantage in Buckaloo v. Johnson (1975) 14 Cal.3d 815, 827 (Buckaloo). These elements are usually stated as follows: '"(1) an economic [*42] relationship between the plaintiff and some third party, with the probability of future economic benefit to the plaintiff; (2) the defendant's knowledge of the relationship; (3) intentional acts on the part of the defendant designed to disrupt the relationship; (4) actual disruption of the relationship; and (5) economic harm to the plaintiff proximately caused by the acts of the defendant."' [Citations.]" (Korea Supply, supra, 29 Cal.4th 1134, 1153.)

In Korea Supply, supra, 29 Cal.4th 1134, the court clarified that the third element of the tort of interference with prospective economic advantage "also requires a plaintiff to plead intentional wrongful acts on the part of the defendant designed to disrupt the relationship." (Id. at p. 1154.) Whether an act is independently wrongful depends on its unlawfulness (if it is "proscribed by some constitutional, statutory, regulatory, common law, or other determinable legal standard"). (Id. at p. 1159.)

In Khoury v. Maly's of California, Inc. (1993) 14 Cal.App.4th 612, 618-619, the plaintiff retail businessman (beauty supply store) alleged that the defendant and respondent company had breached a contract to keep supplying certain products to [*43] him. It mainly supplied products to hair salons, not retailers. He additionally sought to plead the tort of intentional interference with prospective business advantage, but the court found those allegations were defective, because there was no factual basis for the assertion that the defendant company had tortiously interfered with the retailer's existing commercial contacts, for any improper purpose. Rather, the company had made a business supply decision, and its effect on his customers and any damage to his business "were simply consequences of breach of contract." (Id. at p. 618.) In finding the pleading of interference with prospective advantage to be defective, the court referred to "the cautious policy of the courts about extending tort remedies to ordinary commercial contracts." (Ibid.) The court found no abuse of discretion had occurred when leave to amend was denied, because the trial court had not incorrectly applied the standard for determining "'whether behind the words of the pleading anything of legal substance lies, whether on further revision the pleading can honestly state a cause of action.'" (Ibid.)

C. Analysis: ASMG

In analyzing this theory, we are mindful that [*44] the TAC also contained a cause of action for breach of contract against ASMG, alleging that it had disparaged and defamed Appellant, contrary to its previous promises not to do so in her agreement regarding separation from employment with them. We think it is appropriate to read the allegations of this contract cause of action (dismissed without prejudice pending appeal) together with the current claims of intentional interference with economic advantage, although they were pled separately. Those alleged acts of defamation or disparagement could legitimately be considered to meet, for pleadings purposes, the standards for establishing "independent wrongfulness" of interference, as enunciated in Korea Supply, supra, 29 Cal.4th 1134, 1159, if properly incorporated into the TAC cause of action. Common law defamation claims are subject to "determinable legal standards" for resolution, as required for such a tort claim. (Ibid.) Even though we have not found the Cartwright Act and UCL causes of action to be well pled, there are apparently other allegations of wrongful conduct by ASMG, potentially supporting the current cause of action to claim injury through ASMG's intentional interference [*45] with economic advantage.

As to ASMG, we conclude Appellant has sufficiently alleged the first of the required elements, existence of a previous economic relationship with the two surgeons, with probability of future economic benefit to her. Next, Appellant adequately alleged that ASMG had knowledge of this ongoing economic relationship with the two surgeons, and that the relationship would have probable future economic benefit to her, but ASMG nevertheless engaged in certain "intentional wrongful acts" designed to disrupt her professional relationships. (Korea Supply, supra, 29 Cal.4th at p. 1154.) For example, ASMG officials allegedly threatened to withhold ASMG services previously provided at MOPP, unless Appellant's privileges there were blocked. They are also said to have defamed or disparaged her character and ability to perform adequately, and they told their members to avoid her.

Alternatively, Appellant claims that if specific intent was lacking, such ASMG acts were performed at least with knowledge that some adverse interference was certain or substantially certain to occur as a result. In some ways, Appellant is claiming that she has a right to carry on her practice in her [*46] own business model of a sole practitioner, different from the group practice of her competitor, ASMG. We can express no opinion about the validity of the respective business models, and only observe that the alleged anticompetitive measures had some probability of impeding Appellant's existing practice and business expectancies. ASMG demonstrated that there were some legitimate professional reasons for its own form of practice, and for the Scripps rules and regulations on practice. However, for pleadings purposes, we assume the truth of the allegations that these were imposed without adequate justification and specifically against her interests. As noted, issues of privilege under Civil Code section 47, discussed with the trial court, have not been fully briefed or litigated, and we express no opinion on them.

Accordingly, we cannot currently determine that Appellant will be unable to adequately allege proximate causation of economic harm to her from wrongful acts of ASMG. The disruption in her practice that she attributes to its acts may well have been caused by other factors, but it is not yet before the courts whether there is a causal relationship between ASMG's allegedly wrongful [*47] acts and Appellant's harm. We therefore conclude she may be able to assert alleged facts that satisfy the proximate cause element of this tort. (Korea Supply, supra, 29 Cal.4th 1134, 1164-1166.)

Finally, Appellant represented to the trial court and states in her briefs that she can add more allegations about the type of wrongful conduct or malice that would further support her claims, such as misrepresentations of hospital rules, representations to prospective patients or other surgeons that she had retired, and disparaging comments about her character and abilities, as more fully alleged in the breach of contract claim. These may add to the viability of the current cause of action, and the trial court should have allowed Appellant an opportunity to file an amended pleading to state her best case on this theory, in addition to reasserting her breach of contract claim, if desired, and we will reverse the judgment of dismissal as to ASMG with directions to that effect.

D. Analysis: Scripps

In the ruling, the trial court did not materially distinguish between the conduct alleged against Scripps and ASMG. This was understandable, in light of the conspiracy allegations Appellant consistently [*48] made to tie them together. However, it is difficult to find among the allegations against Scripps, even considering such conspiracy language, the type of independently wrongful conduct that would support this claim.

Specifically, Appellant claims that Scripps engaged in intentionally wrongful acts designed to disrupt her economic relationship with the two surgeons with whom she had consistently worked. She claims Scripps falsely told at least one surgeon and one patient she had retired, and that Scripps officials imposed call, utilization, and meeting requirements in a way that operated to target her in a wrongful fashion. However, those allegations are undermined by her admissions that she previously held Scripps privileges, was in the process of renewing them, and had not yet been turned down. Although she claims that she was unilaterally reclassified from courtesy to active status, and had difficulty meeting those requirements, it is not clear how those changes in her professional status would impede her efforts to continue to work with the two doctors, who also practiced at several other locations. She does not support her allegations that it was the Scripps officials who expressly [*49] sought to interfere with her existing professional relationships, or that Scripps knew or should have had knowledge that its actions would certainly or substantially certainly cause interference with her prospective advantage.

The gist of Appellant's allegations of interference with economic advantage is clearly directed toward the ASMG activities, and Scripps (not a direct competitor), appears as a more or less peripheral actor. The regulatory activities by Scripps, as alleged, seem to fall within the sphere of lawful administrative behavior, rather than any tortious interference or predatory economic behavior. (Korea Supply, supra, 29 Cal.4th 1134, 1159-1160.) There is no basis to reverse the judgment of dismissal as to Scripps as to this claim.

VI

NEGLIGENT INTERFERENCE WITH PROSPECTIVE ECONOMIC ADVANTAGE

A. TAC and Rulings

In this claim of negligent interference with prospective advantage, Appellant argued and pled that she had a special relationship with Scripps, where she held privileges to practice, such that both Scripps and ASMG (which controlled the anesthesia department there) owed her direct duties of care. She claimed economic damages from the breach of such duties. However, [*50] the court concluded this failed to allege sufficient facts to support the existence of a negligence-based duty owed by ASMG to Appellant. As to both Respondents, the ruling generally found Appellant had failed to plead any negligent acts of interference with economic relations that would be actionable, or independently wrongful.

B. Governing Legal Principles and Analysis

To state a claim for negligent interference with an economic relationship, the plaintiff must plead the defendant owes the plaintiff a duty of care. (LiMandri, supra, 52 Cal.App.4th 326, 348-349.) It is not enough for the complaint to allege a general duty to refrain from committing intentionally tortious conduct. (Ibid.) "Moreover, a plaintiff who is not a party to a contract between a defendant and a third party generally may not recover for loss of expected economic advantage resulting from the defendant's negligent performance of the contract unless there is a special relationship between the parties." (Id. at p. 349, citing J'Aire Corp. v. Gregory (1979) 24 Cal.3d 799, 804 (J'Aire) [acknowledging there is a cause of action for negligent interference with prospective economic advantage].)

In J'Aire, supra, 24 Cal.3d 799, [*51] the court identified the key component for determining whether a relationship between a plaintiff and a defendant, in a commercial setting, gives rise to a duty of care, as the foreseeability of the harm suffered by the plaintiff. (Id. at p. 806.) Foreseeability is normally measured by the closeness of the connection or nexus between the defendant's conduct and risk of injury to the plaintiff; "that is, whether the defendant had 'entered into any relationship or undertaken any activity where negligence on his part was reasonably likely to affect plaintiff adversely.'" (LiMandri, supra, 52 Cal.App.4th at p. 349.)

Where such a special relationship exists, "there exists 'a duty on the part of the defendant to use due care to avoid economic injury to the plaintiff.' [Citation.] Whether such a special relationship and duty of care exists presents a question of law for the court. [Citation.]" (Greystone Homes, Inc. v. Midtec, Inc. (2008) 168 Cal.App.4th 1194, 1228.)

Appellant would claim such a negligence-based, enforceable duty was owed to her by both Scripps and ASMG, stemming from her special relationship with Scripps (holding of privileges there, as did ASMG members). She claims it was [*52] foreseeable that if those duties were negligently breached, it would interfere with her prospective economic advantage (from those surgeons who wished to employ her). Such alleged breaches of duty included the creation and enforcement of "an unwritten policy" at Scripps that surgeons were prohibited "from requesting a specific anesthesiologist," along with the enactment of call duty rules and utilization rules. The trial court rejected this approach, noting that Appellant had not explained how these rules or policies are wrongful or unwise.

In the arena of hospital disputes over staffing matters, most courts have not accepted physicians' claims of possessing the type of vested property rights in hospital staff membership that could overcome or preclude "a hospital's ability to change its procedures" or to "manage and control its legitimate business." (Redding, supra, 208 Cal.App.3d 98, 105-106.) "It would be highly detrimental to patient care and other identifiable social interests to hold that a hospital could not make reasonable management decisions to change its format, presumably for the purposes of improving it, without exposing itself to the claim that it was interfering with [*53] the vested interests of staff physicians." (Ibid.)

To support her claim such duties of care existed specifically toward her, stemming from her privileges at Scripps, Appellant would have to show that there was no justification or rationale for making the challenged staffing or administrative decisions at that hospital, through its use of a group practice to which she chose not to belong. We again refer to the policies of judicial deference to normal hospital staffing decisions, as they have been applied in the antitrust context. (See Mateo-Woodburn, supra, 221 Cal.App.3d 1169, 1185.) Here too, the relevant rulemaking and administrative decisions took place in the context of highly regulated and specialized professions that serve the patient population. Respondents' decisions in this respect have not been pled to violate an existing duty owed to Appellant, or to be so unduly individualized or unjustified, as to negligently or wrongfully target her in particular.

We cannot agree with Appellant that even if this conduct allegedly interfering with her prospective economic advantage was negligent in nature, as opposed to intentional, there existed some nexus between the conduct and the risk [*54] of injury to Appellant as would support the imposition of a duty of care toward her, arising out of the grant of hospital privileges to her. We are reluctant to say on this set of allegations that the hospital or ASMG, when considering, requesting or enacting rules, regulations, or staffing policies, came under a duty to consider her particular economic interests, above those of other anesthesiologists who choose to practice differently. (See Redding, supra, 208 Cal.App.3d 98, 105-106.) The court did not err in sustaining the demurrers to the cause of action for negligent interference with prospective economic advantage, due to Appellant's insufficient allegations of an enforceable type of duty that was owed by Respondents to her in this respect.

VII

INTENTIONAL INFLICTION OF EMOTIONAL DISTRESS

A. Rulings; Legal Principles

The rulings on the IIED claims on appeal include the claim against Scripps (pled only in the SAC), and the claim against ASMG (pled only in the TAC). "In order to state a cause of action for intentional infliction of emotional distress a plaintiff must show: (1) outrageous conduct by the defendant; (2) the defendant's intention of causing or reckless disregard of the [*55] probability of causing emotional distress; (3) the plaintiff's suffering severe or extreme emotional distress; and (4) actual and proximate causation of the emotional distress by the defendant's outrageous conduct." (Trerice v. Blue Cross of California (1989) 209 Cal.App.3d 878, 883 (Trerice).)

"'The law limits claims of intentional infliction of emotional distress to egregious conduct toward plaintiff proximately caused by defendant.' [Citation.] The only exception to this rule is that recognized when the defendant is aware, but acts with reckless disregard, of the plaintiff and the probability that his or her conduct will cause severe emotional distress to that plaintiff." (Christensen, supra, 54 Cal.3d 868, 905-906.)

To define tortious behavior in this context, the plaintiff must plead such conduct by the defendant that is "outrageous," and "so extreme as to exceed all bounds of that usually tolerated in a civilized society. [Citation.] While the outrageousness of a defendant's conduct normally presents an issue of fact to be determined by the trier of fact [citation], the court may determine in the first instance, whether the defendant's conduct may reasonably be regarded as so extreme [*56] and outrageous as to permit recovery." (Trerice, supra, 209 Cal.App.3d 878, 883.)

IIED can be alleged and proven in the business context if a potential plaintiff is unfairly singled out for punishment or improperly penalized for personal activities. (Trerice, supra, 209 Cal.App.3d 878, 884-885.) However, where an employer or entity holding a special relationship to an employee is pursuing its own economic interests and is asserting its legal rights appropriately, an IIED claim based on those actions is not supported. (Ibid.)

B. FAC/SAC Rulings and Analysis: Scripps

With respect to the FAC's cause of action for IIED, the trial court determined Appellant had not alleged any behavior by Scripps personnel in the workplace that was properly characterized as "extreme and outrageous," so she had not stated facts sufficient to constitute that cause of action. Leave to amend was granted as to that claim.

Scripps again demurred to the SAC's IIED claim, arguing that it was based only on Scripps' adoption of medical staff regulations and manner of applying them to Appellant. The trial court heard argument and discussed with counsel the allegations of conspiracy to try to get rid of Appellant. One [*57] such allegation was that the ASMG members, who made up the Scripps anesthesiology department, had maneuvered to have her health insurance canceled, as part of the efforts to pressure her.

The court sustained Scripps' demurrer without leave to amend. This was proper. As a matter of law, the conduct alleged against Scripps in this case does not amount to "outrageous" conduct directed primarily at her, nor was it calculated to cause her severe emotional distress. The only allegations against the Scripps administrators were the making of staffing decisions, in cooperation with a provider, ASMG, and the implementation of rules and regulations about taking emergency calls, attending meetings, and complying with utilization requirements. Such Scripps activities were apparently designed toward pursuing its own institutional and economic interests and asserting its legal rights. These allegations do not support conclusions they were performed with substantial certainty that Appellant in particular would suffer severe emotional injury from them. (Christensen, supra, 54 Cal.3d 868, 905-906.)

C. FAC/TAC Rulings and Analysis: ASMG

ASMG argued on demurrer that the remaining IIED claim against it was [*58] supported only by allegations of a business dispute, which did not qualify as the kind of "outrageous conduct" not to be tolerated in civilized society. The trial court determined Appellant had not successfully amended to cure the defects identified in the previous pleadings. Rather, the alleged conduct (e.g., "conspiring" to interfere with her performance of anesthesiology services at Scripps, or mistakenly notifying Appellant that her insurance would be canceled, although it was not) did not support this claim. Specifically, the trial court ruled: "The fact Plaintiff's practice was called 'unfair' and she was called 'disruptive' and 'adversarial' which prevented her from working at Scripps and ruined her relationships with physicians and staff is not conduct which cannot be tolerated in a civilized community."

In evaluating whether these allegations met pleading standards, we are mindful that this dispute took place in a business and professional setting, in which the implementation of professional rules and standards unfortunately gave rise to significant difficulties and conflicts. Nevertheless, it is comparable to the kinds of personnel administrative activity by an employer (e.g., [*59] nondiscriminating instructions to an employee) that have been held to be insufficient to support a claim for IIED damages. (Garamendi v. Golden Eagle (2005) 128 Cal.App.4th 452, 480.)

To the extent that Appellant relies on ASMG's notification to her that her health insurance would be canceled, the undisputed fact that this did not occur and that it was claimed to be a mistake undermines her claims that she was specifically targeted by "egregious conduct." (Christensen, supra, 54 Cal.3d 868, 905-906.) Appellant's contentions that ASMG acted toward her with reckless disregard of the probability of causing her severe emotional distress are not supported, as a matter of law, under all the circumstances revealed by the pleadings.

DISPOSITION

Judgment is affirmed as to Scripps.

Judgment is reversed as to ASMG with directions to the trial court to allow further proceedings to enable Appellant to file an amended complaint versus ASMG only, if desired, to plead a theory of intentional interference with prospective economic advantage, and/or to reassert her breach of contract claim.

Scripps is to receive its costs on appeal. Appellant and ASMG shall both bear their own costs.

A complaint must be dismissed under *Fed. R. Civ. HN2[] Defenses, Demurrers & Objections, Motions to Dismiss

When considering a motion to dismiss pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(1), a court is not restricted to the face of the pleadings, but may review any evidence to resolve factual disputes concerning the existence of jurisdiction.

HN3[] Jurisdiction, Subject Matter Jurisdiction

A federal court is presumed to lack subject matter jurisdiction until a plaintiff establishes otherwise. Therefore, a plaintiff bears the burden of proving the existence of subject matter jurisdiction.

Governments > Native Americans > Tribal Sovereign Immunity

HN4[] Native Americans, Tribal Sovereign Immunity

As a matter of law, Indian tribes are not subject to suit unless a tribe waives its sovereign immunity or the United States Congress expressly authorizes the action. Tribes maintain sovereign immunity without distinction between governmental or commercial activity and without consideration of where the activity took place. Tribal sovereign immunity, as with other types of sovereign immunity, applies to officers acting within the scope of their authority. A waiver of immunity must be expressed unequivocally and cannot be implied.

HN5[] Native Americans, Tribal Sovereign Immunity

Tribal sovereign immunity is not waived by implication.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > General Overview

HN6[] Sherman Act, Scope

Activity by government entities, which would be prohibited if performed by private parties, is not regulated under the Sherman Act.

Antitrust & Trade Law > General Overview

Governments > Native Americans > Tribal Sovereign Immunity

HN7[] Antitrust & Trade Law

Sovereign entities are not intended to be regulated under federal antitrust laws. Federal antitrust law does not apply to Indian tribes.

Governments > Native Americans > Taxation

Governments > Native Americans > Tribal Sovereign Immunity

HN8[] Native Americans, Taxation

The power of taxation is an essential attribute of Indian sovereignty. Tribes have the power to tax non-tribal purchasers in transactions occurring on trust lands and significantly involving a tribe or its members. Where tribal officials carry out their duty of imposing and collecting a lawful tax, sovereign immunity shields them.

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Preclusion of Judgments > Res Judicata

HN9[] Preclusion of Judgments, Res Judicata

Res judicata is a legal doctrine incorporating claim and issue preclusion. Claim preclusion is a principle of law whereby a prior judgment forecloses successive litigation of the very same claim, whether or not relitigation of the claim raises the same issues as the earlier suit. Issue preclusion bars successive litigation of an issue of fact or law actually litigated and resolved in a valid court determination essential to the prior judgment, whether or not the issue arises on the same or a different claim.

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Preclusion of Judgments > Res Judicata

HN10[] Preclusion of Judgments, Res Judicata

There is a three-prong inquiry for the application of res judicata: first, whether the issues presented in the case at bar are substantially the same as those decided against the plaintiffs in the previous actions; second, whether controlling facts or legal principles have significantly altered since the prior judgments; and finally, whether special circumstances warrant an exception to the doctrine. An exception exists for cases concerning unmixed questions of law in successive actions where claims are substantially unrelated. The England Reservation provides an exception where a litigant invokes federal jurisdiction but is nonetheless forced to accept a state court's adjudication of the claims. There is one other exception where the proceedings in the other venue were unfair or inadequate and where the moving party did not have a full and fair opportunity to litigate the issues.

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Preclusion of Judgments > Res Judicata

HN11[] Preclusion of Judgments, Res Judicata

Unless an exception applies, a court will employ res judicata whenever there is (1) an identity of claims; (2) a final judgment on the merits; and (3) privity between parties.

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Preclusion of Judgments > Res Judicata

HN12[] Preclusion of Judgments, Res Judicata

For the purpose of res judicata, privity exists where substantial identity between parties supports a sufficient commonality of interest. Where interests of new parties to a suit were amply represented in prior actions, privity exists.

Governments > Native Americans > Tribal Sovereign Immunity

HN13[] Native Americans, Tribal Sovereign Immunity

Until a court resolves the question of tribal sovereign immunity, discovery should not proceed.

INTRODUCTION

THIS MATTER comes before the Court upon Defendants' Motion to Dismiss under Rule 12(b)(1) for lack of jurisdiction. The Court has reviewed the materials submitted in support of and in opposition to the motion. The Court GRANTS Defendants' Motion to Dismiss.

BACKGROUND

Defendant Puyallup Tribe of Indians is a federally recognized American Indian tribe. The Puyallup Tribe (the Tribe) was established by the Treaty of Medicine Creek in 1854 and is located within Pierce County, Washington. Defendant Chad Wright is the CEO of the Tribe's wholly-owned [*2] economic development corporation, responsible for paying and collecting from consumers the cigarette taxes at issue here. Defendant Herman Dillon, Sr. is the Chairman of the Puyallup Tribe of Indians.

The Tribe and the State of Washington entered into an agreement on April 20, 2005, whereby the Tribe agreed to collect and maintain a tax on cigarettes sold on tribal lands— purchased by tribal members and non-members alike. The agreement ensured that the tribal tax would increase at a concomitant rate with state cigarette taxes. In exchange for receipt of 30% of tribal cigarette tax revenue, the State waived its right to collect sales tax on cigarettes purchased on tribal lands. The agreement went into effect immediately. See Wash. Rev. Code § 43.06.465 (2005).

Under the agreement, the Tribe and the State shared enforcement jointly. The state enforced the agreement against non-tribal and non-member wholesalers, while the Tribe enforced against tribal member retailers.

Plaintiff Paul M. Matheson is an enrolled Puyallup Indian, licensed by the Tribe to sell tobacco products. He owns and operates a retail store on Puyallup tribal land that sells, among other things, commercially-packaged cigarettes. [*3] Plaintiff Daniel T. Miller is a non-member, non-Indian residing in Spokane Valley, Washington. Miller purchased cigarettes at Matheson's retail store. Plaintiff Amber Lanphere is a non-member, non-Indian residing in Tacoma, Washington, outside the boundaries of the Puyallup Indian Reservation. Lanphere also purchased cigarettes at Matheson's retail store.

On May 26, 2011, Plaintiffs filed the current suit against Defendants Wright, Dillon, and the Tribe. In their complaint, Plaintiffs allege price-fixing, antitrust, and unfair competition by Defendants in violation of the Sherman and Clayton Antirust Acts, 15 U.S.C. §§ 1 - 26, by imposing taxes on all purchases of cigarettes within the boundaries of the Puyallup Indian Reservation. Plaintiff seeks an injunction against Defendants to bar them from collecting taxes or any other additional fees on cigarette purchases by non-member, non-Indian buyers from Matheson's retail store. Plaintiff alleges that Defendant Wright, as Tax Enforcement Officer of the Tribe, acted beyond the scope of his authority by agreeing to "force Plaintiffs to charge and pay higher prices" at the same time he was CEO of Tahoma Market, a competitor of Matheson's [*4] store. Plaintiff alleges that Defendant Dillon, as Chairman of the Tribe, acted beyond the scope of his authority by knowingly violating federal antitrust and price control laws and by signing the Tribe-State tax agreement in 2005.

Plaintiff Matheson has previously filed suit in two other venues seeking relief from the imposition of tribal cigarette taxes. On May 10, 2005, Matheson filed a complaint in Thurston County Superior Court against state and tribal defendants for injunctive relief, declaratory judgment, and damages. The Tribe filed a motion to dismiss, joined by State defendants, arguing that tribal and state sovereign immunity barred the action against the Tribe, State, and their respective officials. The court dismissed the case against both the Tribe and the State on the basis of sovereign immunity. The Washington Court of Appeals upheld the Superior Court's dismissal. Matheson v. Gregoire, 139 Wash. App. 624, 633, 161 P.3d 486 (2007), rev. denied, 163 Wn.2d 1020, 180 P.3d 1292 (2008), cert. denied, 555 U.S. 881, 129 S. Ct. 197, 172 L. Ed. 2d 140 (2008).

On September 28, 2006, Matheson and Lanphere filed a second lawsuit in Puyallup Tribal Court against the Tribe and Defendant [*5] Chad Wright, seeking injunctive relief, declaratory judgment, and damages. On Defendants' motion, the Tribal Court dismissed the case on the grounds that sovereign immunity protected the Tribe and its officers from suit. The Puyallup Tribal Court of Appeals affirmed the dismissal.

This action ensued. Defendants filed their Motion to Dismiss, arguing that this Court lacks jurisdiction to hear the case based upon the Tribe's sovereign immunity and the res judicata effect of prior rulings of Washington courts and Puyallup Tribal Courts. Defendants argue that a combination of plaintiffs in the instant case have already fully litigated the issue of tribal sovereign immunity and lost. Defendants argue that new plaintiffs do not lift the res judicata effect as all plaintiffs are in privity with one another and thus bound by previous sovereign immunity rulings. Defendants also argue that the Tribe's sovereign immunity remains a bar to suit, because no waiver of or exception to immunity is alleged in Plaintiffs' complaint.

Plaintiffs, in their response to Defendants' motion argue that the Tribe waived sovereign immunity by dealing in wholesale or retail cigarette marketing and by ceding price-setting [*6] control of wholesale and minimum prices to the State.

DISCUSSION

HN1[] A complaint must be dismissed under Rule 12(b)(1) if, considering the factual allegations in the light most favorable to the plaintiff, the action: (1) does not arise under the Constitution, laws, or treaties of the United States, or does not fall within one of the other enumerated categories of Article III, Section 2, of the Constitution; (2) is not a case or controversy within the meaning of the Constitution; or (3) is not one described by any jurisdictional statute. Baker v. Carr, 369 U.S. 186, 198, 82 S. Ct. 691, 7 L. Ed. 2d 663 (1962); D.G. Rung Indus., Inc. v. Tinnerman, 626 F.Supp. 1062, 1063 (W.D. Wash. 1986); see 28 U.S.C. §§ 1331 (federal question jurisdiction) and 1346 (United States as a defendant). HN2[] When considering a motion to dismiss pursuant to Rule 12(b)(1), the court is not restricted to the face of the pleadings, but may review any evidence to resolve factual disputes concerning the existence of jurisdiction. McCarthy v. United States, 850 F.2d 558, 560 (9th Cir. 1988), cert. denied, 489 U.S. 1052, 109 S. Ct. 1312, 103 L. Ed. 2d 581 (1989); Biotics Research Corp. v. Heckler, 710 F.2d 1375, 1379 (9th Cir. 1983). HN3[] A federal court is presumed to lack subject matter jurisdiction [*7] until plaintiff establishes otherwise.

Kokkonen v. Guardian Life Ins. Co. of America, 511 U.S. 375, 114 S. Ct. 1673, 128 L. Ed. 2d 391 (1994); Stock West, Inc. v. Confederated Tribes, 873 F.2d 1221, 1225 (9th Cir. 1989). Therefore, plaintiff bears the burden of proving the existence of subject matter jurisdiction. Stock West, 873 F.2d at 1225; Thornhill Publishing Co., Inc. v. Gen'l Tel & Elect. Corp., 594 F.2d 730, 733 (9th Cir. 1979).

1. Sovereign Immunity

HN4[] As a matter of law, Indian tribes are not subject to suit unless a tribe waives its sovereign immunity or Congress expressly authorizes the action. Kiowa Tribe of Oklahoma v. Manuf. Technologies, Inc., 523 U.S. 751, 754, 118 S. Ct. 1700, 140 L. Ed. 2d 981 (1998). Tribes maintain sovereign immunity without distinction between governmental or commercial activity and without consideration of where the activity took place. Id. at 754 - 55. Tribal sovereign immunity, as with other types of sovereign immunity, applies to officers acting within the scope of their authority. Cook v. AVI Casino Enterprises, Inc., 548 F.3d 718, 728 (9th Cir. 2008). A waiver of immunity must be expressed unequivocally and cannot be implied. Santa Clara Pueblo v. Martinez, 436 U.S. 49, 58, 98 S. Ct. 1670, 56 L. Ed. 2d 106 (1978).

In this action, the Puyallup Tribe [*8] has not expressly waived its sovereign immunity, and thus it remains shielded from suit. In arguing that the Tribe has waived sovereign immunity, Plaintiffs ignore the clear requirement that such waiver be made expressly. Instead, Plaintiffs rely on innuendo as a basis for waiver of immunity. In their complaint, Plaintiffs allege that by "ceding" authority over price-setting to the State, the Tribe waived immunity. Plaintiffs insist the Tribe has no immunity defense against Miller's claims, because he has no "nexus" with the Tribe. Plaintiffs erroneously cite Jefferson County Pharmaceutical Ass'n v. Abbott Laboratories, 460 U.S. 150, 154, 103 S. Ct. 1011, 74 L. Ed. 2d 882 (1983), for the proposition that the Tribe's dealing in cigarette marketing constitutes a waiver of immunity. That case is inapplicable here. It dealt with a narrowly-tailored question of whether government activity in the marketplace was exempted from regulation under the Robinson-Patman Act. It has no bearing whatsoever on Indian sovereign immunity. Plaintiffs list of purported waivers of immunity runs on. However, it fails to show that the Tribe expressly waived its sovereign immunity. HN5[] Sovereign immunity is not waived by implication. Santa Clara Pueblo, 436 U.S. at 58. [*9] Plaintiff has, in this regard, failed its burden of showing that sovereign immunity has been waived and that this Court has jurisdiction to hear the matter.

Plaintiffs contend that federal antitrust laws apply to the Tribe and its officers as federal laws of general applicability. This argument is flawed because Congress expressed no intention to apply the antitrust acts to Tribes and did not expressly abrogate the Tribes' sovereign immunity. The Supreme Court has noted that the Sherman Act "makes no mention of the state as such, and gives no hint that it was intended to restrain state action or official action directed by a state." Parker v. Brown, 317 U.S. 341, 352, 63 S. Ct. 307, 87 L. Ed. 315 (1943). Defendants correctly point out that this principle applies equally to tribal sovereignty. The Court suggests that sovereign entities are immune from the Sherman Act. Town of Hallie v. City of Eau Claire, 471 U.S. 34, 39, 105 S. Ct. 1713, 85 L. Ed. 2d 24 (1985) (holding that municipalities are not immune from application of antitrust laws because they are not themselves sovereign). Furthermore, our case law clearly recognizes that HN6[] activity by government entities, which would be prohibited if performed by private parties, is not regulated under the [*10] Sherman Act. Parker, 317 U.S. at 352.

Plaintiffs argue that Donovan v. Coeur d'Alene Tribal Farm, 751 F.2d 1113 (9th Cir. 1985) makes the Sherman and Clayton Acts applicable to the Tribe. In Donovan, the Court of Appeals held that Indian tribes are subject to laws of general applicability, not "only to those laws of the United States expressly made applicable to them." 751 F.2d at 1116. However, the Donovan Court recognized an exception that applies here: proof that the law was intended not to apply to Indians on their tribal lands. Id. As noted above, the Supreme Court has held that the HN7[] sovereign entities were not intended to be regulated under federal antitrust laws. The Tribe, therefore benefits from the Donovan exception. Federal antitrust law does not apply to the Puyallup Tribe.

Plaintiffs allege Defendant tribal officials are not protected by sovereign immunity because they acted outside the scope of their authority by signing and/or enforcing the Tribe-State agreement to impose cigarette taxes. This challenge fails because the Tribe has legally-recognized authority to impose taxes. HN8[] The power of taxation "is an essential attribute of Indian sovereignty. . . ." Merrion v. Jicarilla Apache Tribe, 455 U.S. 130, 137, 102 S. Ct. 894, 71 L. Ed. 2d 21 (1982). [*11] Furthermore, tribes have the power to tax non-tribal purchasers in transactions occurring "on trust lands and significantly involving a tribe or its members." Washington v. Confed. Tribes of the Colville Indian Reservation, 447 U.S. 134, 152, 100 S. Ct. 2069, 65 L. Ed. 2d 10 (1980). Where, as here, tribal officials carried out their duty of imposing and collecting a lawful tax, sovereign immunity shields them. Cook, supra, 548 F.3d at 728. Plaintiffs' argument that tribal officials exceeded their authority in agreeing to and enforcing the cigarette tax is rejected.

Insofar as Plaintiffs assert tort claims against tribal officials, those claims do not lift sovereign immunity. Their tort claims have not raised a federal question and, therefore, this Court does not have jurisdiction to adjudicate them.

The Tribe and its officials retain sovereign immunity from suit.

2. Res Judicata

Two previous court actions have dealt with challenges to the Puyallup Tribe's cigarette tax regime by a combination of the Plaintiffs in this case. And two previous courts systems have determined that the Tribe and its officers are immune from such suit. Accordingly, we address the res judicata principle here.

HN9[] Res judicata is a legal doctrine incorporating [*12] claim and issue preclusion. Taylor v. Sturgell, 553 U.S. 880, 892 n.5, 128 S. Ct. 2161, 171 L. Ed. 2d 155 (2008). Claim preclusion is a principle of law whereby "a prior judgment [forecloses] successive litigation of the very same claim, whether or not relitigation of the claim raises the same issues as the earlier suit." New Hampshire v. Maine, 532 U.S. 742, 748, 121 S. Ct. 1808, 149 L. Ed. 2d 968 (2001). Issue preclusion bars "successive litigation of an issue of fact or law actually litigated and resolved in a valid court determination essential to the prior judgment, whether or not the issue arises on the same or a different claim." Id. HN10[] There is a three-prong inquiry for the application of res judicata: first, whether the issues presented in the case at bar are substantially the same as those decided against the Plaintiffs in the previous actions; second, whether controlling facts or legal principles have significantly altered since the prior judgments; and finally, whether special circumstances warrant an exception to the doctrine. Montana v. United States, 440 U.S. 147, 155, 99 S. Ct. 970, 59 L. Ed. 2d 210 (1979). An exception exists for cases concerning unmixed questions of law in successive actions where claims are substantially unrelated. Id. at 162 (quoting United States v. Moser, 266 U.S. 236, 242, 45 S. Ct. 66, 69 L. Ed. 262 (1924)). [*13] The England Reservation provides an exception where a litigant invokes federal jurisdiction but is nonetheless forced to accept a state court's adjudication of the claims. England v. Medical Examiners, 375 U.S. 411, 415, 84 S. Ct. 461, 11 L. Ed. 2d 440 (1964). The Court has illuminated one other exception where the proceedings in the other venue were unfair or inadequate and where the moving party did not have a "full and fair opportunity" to litigate the issues. Montana, 440 U.S. at 154. In short, HN11[] unless an exception applies, a court will employ res judicata "whenever there is (1) an identity of claims, (2) a final judgment on the merits, and (3) privity between parties." Stratosphere Litigation, L.L.C. v. Grand Casinos, Inc., 298 F.3d 1137, 1143 (9th Cir. 2002).

Plaintiffs' case meets the criteria to apply the res judicata principle to the question of whether the Defendants' are subject to suit. The issues presented here are substantially similar to Matheson v. Gregoire and Matheson v. Wright. Controlling facts and legal principles giving rise to dismissal on sovereign immunity grounds remain unchanged. None of the exceptions can be reasonably applied to this case. The claims remain substantially the same; the Plaintiffs [*14] chose to litigate in state and tribal courts prior to this action and were not forced into those venues; and Plaintiffs have had a full and fair opportunity to litigate these matters. Plaintiffs have twice received a final judgment. Furthermore, plaintiffs are in privity with one another. The parties are two purchasers and one seller, whose interests are aligned. HN12[] Privity exists where substantial identity between parties supports a sufficient "commonality of interest." Tahoe-Sierra Preservation Council v. Tahoe Regional Planning Agency, 322 F.3d 1064, 1081 (9th Cir. 2003). Where interests of new parties to the suit were amply represented in prior actions, privity exists. Pedrina v. Chun, 97 F.3d 1296, 1301 (9th Cir. 1996). The interests presented in this case are no different than those represented in the previous two actions. As they have in state and tribal courts, Plaintiffs here challenge the cigarette tax regime imposed by the Tribe pursuant to its agreement with the State. While they might raise novel arguments about violations of federal antitrust laws, those are claims that could have been raised at state court and are, therefore, not available in this action as a means to do [*15] an end-run around res judicata application of the prior courts' holdings.

On the question of whether or not the Tribe and its officers are protected from suit by the doctrine of sovereign immunity, this case is res judicata. Plaintiffs' action is barred.

3. Discovery

Plaintiffs seek discovery prior to judgment on this Motion to Dismiss. Discovery is inappropriate here. HN13[] Until a court resolves the question of sovereign immunity, discovery should not proceed. DiMartini v. Ferrin, 889 F.2d 922, 926 (9th Cir. 1989), cert. denied, 501 U.S. 1204, 111 S. Ct. 2796, 115 L. Ed. 2d 970 (1991) (citing Harlow v. Fitzgerald, 457 U.S. 800, 818, 102 S. Ct. 2727, 73 L. Ed. 2d 396, (1982)). Plaintiffs have not cited persuasive authority to justify granting a discovery period. Additionally, they have given no indication that they require further information in order to challenge the Tribe's defense of sovereign immunity. Discovery is unnecessary in ruling on Defendants' Motion to Dismiss.

CONCLUSION

The Puyallup Tribe of Indians and its officers retain sovereign immunity from suit. Application of res judicata principles affirms that judgment. Accordingly, Defendants' Motion to Dismiss is GRANTED.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

When reviewing a Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim upon which relief may be granted, the court must presume the truth of all well-pleaded facts in the complaint, but need not consider conclusory allegations. Conclusory allegations are allegations that do not allege the factual basis for the claim. The court is not bound by a complaint's legal conclusions, deductions and opinions couched as facts. And although all reasonable inferences must be drawn in the non-moving party's favor, a complaint will only survive a motion to dismiss if it contains enough facts to state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face. Stating a claim under Fed. R.

Civ. P. 8 demands more than an unadorned, the-defendant-unlawfully-harmed-me accusation. A pleading that offers labels and conclusions or a formulaic recitation of the elements of a cause of action will not do.

HN3[] Complaints, Requirements for Complaint

Under Utah law, the tort of interference with economic relations protects both existing contractual relationships and prospective relationships of economic advantage not yet reduced to a formal contract. A plaintiff must prove: (1) that the defendant intentionally interfered with the plaintiff's existing or potential economic relations; (2) for an improper purpose or by improper means; (3) causing injury to the plaintiff. In pleading a claim for interference with economic relations, a plaintiff cannot rest on conclusory allegations that it has existing or potential economic relations. Rather, a plaintiff must allege facts showing either an existing contract or business relationship with a third party, or a potential contract or business opportunity with a third party or identifiable class of persons.

Monopoly power requires proof of both power to control prices and power to exclude competition. This power may be inferred when a company has a predominant share of the market.

HN10[] Actual Monopolization, Claims

In the context of a monopolization claim, a plaintiff must specifically define the product market by reference to the reasonable interchangeability of use or the cross-elasticity of demand between the product in question and substitutes for it. And where the plaintiff fails to define its proposed relevant market with reference to the rule of reasonable interchangeability and cross-elasticity of demand, or alleges a proposed relevant market that clearly does not encompass all interchangeable substitute products even when all factual inferences are granted in plaintiff's favor, the relevant market is legally insufficient and a motion to dismiss may be granted.

HN11[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Tying Arrangements

In cases involving a tying arrangement, the plaintiff must prove that the defendant has market power in the tying product. In order to establish the existence of an illegal tying arrangement, plaintiffs must adequately plead the existence of: (1) two separate products; (2) a tie- or conditioning of the sale of one product on the purchase of another; (3) sufficient economic power in the tying market; and (4) a substantial volume of commerce affected in the tied product market. A "negative tie" can be the basis of a tying claim if the buyer agrees that he will not purchase the tied product from any other supplier. But even a negative tying claim requires the existence of two separate and distinct products.

ORDER AND MEMORANDUM DECISION

In2 Networks, Inc. (In2) brought suit against Defendants Honeywell International, Inc. (Honeywell) and ADI, alleging breach of contract, state law tort claims, and state and federal antitrust claims. On May 31, 2011, the court granted Defendants' motion to dismiss. In2 was given three weeks to file a motion to amend its complaint. In accordance with the court's order, In2 filed a motion to amend with a supporting memorandum and proposed amended complaint. Defendants oppose In2's motion and contend that the proposed amended complaint fails to state a claim upon which relief can be granted. For the reasons set forth below, In2's motion to amend (Dkt. No. 29) [*2] is GRANTED IN PART AND DENIED IN PART.

BACKGROUND[1]

In2 develops software and hardware products, technology and services for internet controllable home security and environmental control systems. Two such products are at issue in this case: In2's Vista ICM and Energy ICM systems. These products enable owners to control their security and environmental control systems through a web-based interface. Both of these systems are compatible with the Honeywell series of security and environmental control systems.

---

[1] The factual allegations are contained in In2's proposed amended complaint (Dkt. No. 30-1). The court will refer to specific factual allegations as necessary.

The two ICM products were the subject of several contracts between In2 and Honeywell, including the OEM Supply and License Agreement (OEM Agreement), the Bailment and Service Agreement (Bailment Agreement), and the Non-Disclosure Agreement. In2 alleges that the Defendants breached various provisions of the Bailment Agreement, the Non-Disclosure Agreement, and oral agreements made in connection with those agreements.

Further, In2 alleges that the Defendants interfered with In2's existing and prospective economic relationships; made [*3] false and disparaging statements about In2, its products and services; misappropriated In2's trade secrets; and engaged in various forms of anti-competitive behavior, in violation of federal and Utah antitrust law.

ANALYSIS

Standard of Review

HN1[] "Although Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 15(a) provides that leave to amend shall be given freely, the district court may deny leave to amend where amendment would be futile. A proposed amendment is futile if the complaint, as amended, would be subject to dismissal." Bradley v. Val-Mejias, 379 F.3d 892, 901 (10th Cir. 2004) (quoting Jefferson Cty. Sch. Dist. v. Moody's Investor's Servs., 175 F.3d 848, 859 (10th Cir. 1999)). Consequently, the court will analyze Defendants' objection to In2's proposed amended complaint as it would a motion to dismiss.

HN2[] When reviewing a Rule 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim upon which relief may be granted, the court must presume the truth of all well-pleaded facts in the complaint, but need not consider conclusory allegations. Tal v. Hogan, 453 F.3d 1244, 1252 (2006); Mitchell v. King, 537 F.2d 385, 386 (10th Cir. 1976). Conclusory allegations are allegations that "do [*4] not allege the factual basis" for the claim. Brown v. Zavaras, 63 F.3d 967, 972 (10th Cir. 1995). See also Hall v. Bellmon, 935 F.2d 1106, 1110 (10th Cir. 1991) ("conclusory allegations without supporting factual averments are insufficient to state a claim on which relief can be based" (emphasis added)). The court is not bound by a complaint's legal conclusions, deductions and opinions couched as facts. Bell Atlantic Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 555, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007). And although all reasonable inferences must be drawn in the non-moving party's favor, Tal, 453 F.3d at 1252, a complaint will only survive a motion to dismiss if it contains "enough facts to state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face," Ridge at Red Hawk, LLC v. Schneider, 493 F.3d 1174, 1177 (10th Cir. 2007) (quoting Twombly, 550 U.S. at 570). Stating a claim under Rule 8 "demands more than an unadorned, the-defendant-unlawfully-harmed-me accusation. A pleading that offers 'labels and conclusions' or 'a formulaic recitation of the elements of a cause of action will not do.'" Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 129 S. Ct. 1937, 1949, 173 L. Ed. 2d 868 (2009) (quoting Twombly, 550 U.S. at 555).

Tort Claims

Interference with Economic Relations (Cause of Action [*5] 1) and Interference with Prospective Economic Advantage (Cause of Action 2)

HN3[] Under Utah law, the tort of interference with economic relations "protects both existing contractual relationships and prospective relationships of economic advantage not yet reduced to a formal contract." St. Benedict's Dev. Co. v. St. Benedict's Hosp., 811 P.2d 194, 200 (Utah 1991). A plaintiff must prove: "(1) that the defendant intentionally interfered with the plaintiff's existing or potential economic relations (2) for an improper purpose or by improper means, (3) causing injury to the plaintiff." Langille v. Logan City, 9 Fed. App'x 892, 900 (10th Cir. 2001) (quoting St. Benedict's, 811 P.2d at 200).

In pleading a claim for interference with economic relations, "[a] plaintiff cannot rest on conclusory allegations that it has existing or potential economic relations. . . . [Rather, a plaintiff must] allege facts showing either an existing contract or business relationship with a third party, or a potential contract or business opportunity with a third party or identifiable class of persons." Purco Fleet Servs. v. Towers, 38 F. Supp. 2d 1320, 1325 (D. Utah 1999) (quoting Proctor & Gamble Co. v. Haugen, 947 F. Supp. 1551, 1556-57 (D. Utah 1996)). [*6] The court in Purco Fleet dismissed the plaintiff's claim for interference with contractual relationship because the plaintiff failed to allege the existence of a present contract or relationship. The plaintiff had merely alleged that there were "current and potential customers" who were affected. Purco Fleet, 38 F. Supp. 2d at 1325-26. This was insufficient even under the pre-Twombly/Iqbal pleading standards.

In its proposed amended complaint, In2 alleges that Honeywell intentionally interfered with "existing economic relations between In2 and In2's customers, distributors, and vendors" and "also threatened dealers and wholesalers, including Ridgeline Mechanical, who had been doing business with In2." (Compl. ¶ 44.) [2] Rather than merely alleging that In2 had "current and potential customers," In2 alleges that it was "actively engaged with outside sales rep firms including Ridgeline Mechanical and EDOS to assist In2 in marketing and selling the In2 branded Energy ICM." (Id. ¶ 30.) Further, In2 alleges that Honeywell interfered with its relationship with EDOS: "In April 2010, John Tyhacz told the owner of EDOS that Honeywell would terminate their representation agreement if they engaged [*7] with In2." (Id. ¶ 30.) Viewed in the light most favorable to In2, these allegations make it plausible that Defendants interfered with existing or potential relationships with Ridgeline Mechanical and EDOS.

Because In2 has sufficiently pled its interference with economic advantage claim, In2's motion to amend is GRANTED for causes of action 1 and 2. But these causes of actions are limited to In2's relationships with Ridgeline Mechanical and EDOS, as those are the only two parties that In2 identifies in its proposed amended complaint.

Business Disparagement [3] (Cause of Action 3)

HN4[] For a plaintiff to recover under a claim of business disparagement, it must prove (1) falsity of the statement made; (2) malice by the party making the statement; and (3) special damages. Farm Bureau Life Ins. Co. v. Am. Nat'l Ins. Co., 505 F. Supp. 2d 1178, 1191 (D. Utah 2007) [*8] (quoting Direct Imp. Buyers Ass'n v. KSL, Inc., 538 P.2d 1040, 1042 (Utah 1975)).

In2 alleges that the Defendants made two disparaging statements in a letter sent to dealers who purchased Vista ICM: (1) that Vista ICM was obsolete (Compl. ¶ 13) and (2) that Defendants had concerns regarding In2's ability to continue to provide long-term support for the product (id. ¶ 14). In2 also alleges that the statements were false; that the Vista ICM was fully functional and not obsolete (id. ¶ 13) and that Defendants did not actually have concerns about In2's ability to provide long term support (id. ¶ 14). Finally, In2 alleges that Defendants made these statements intentionally and with the purpose of injuring and extinguishing In2's business. (Id. ¶¶ 13, 14.)

Defendants contend that the statements made in the letter, when viewed in context, cannot be defamatory. This argument is based largely on Defendants' interpretation of the words and phrases used in the letter—interpretations that In2 disputes. At this stage, the court must view all allegations in the light most favorable to In2. In doing so, the court finds that In2 sufficiently states a claim for business disparagement. Accordingly, In2's [*9] motion to amend is GRANTED for cause of action 3.

Misappropriation of Trade Secrets (Cause of Action 8) and Violation of Uniform Trade Secret Act (Cause of Action 15)[4]

[2] "Compl.," as used throughout, refers to In2's proposed amended complaint (Dkt. No. 30-1).

[3] Business disparagement is merely a different name for the tort of injurious falsehood. Farm Bureau Life Ins. Co. v. Am. Nat'l Ins. Co., 505 F. Supp. 2d 1178, 1191 (D. Utah 2007) (quoting Bankwest v. Fid. & Deposit Co., 63 F.3d 974, 980 (10th Cir. 1995)).

HN5[] A claim for misappropriation of trade secrets requires (1) existence of a trade secret; (2) communication of the trade secret; and (3) that defendant's use of the trade secret injures the plaintiff. Farm Bureau, 505 F. Supp. 2d at 1184-85.

In its proposed amended complaint, In2 alleges, in a conclusory fashion, that "[a]ll or a portion of the documents and information comprising In2's confidential and proprietary business and trade secret information constitute 'trade secrets' under the Utah Uniform Trade Secrets Act." (Compl. ¶ 66.) In2 does not identify the information or even provide a general description of the information that it contends is a "trade secret."

Further, In2 does not allege how Honeywell used this trade secret information to In2's detriment. It appears that In2 believes that Gordon Hope, who works for Honeywell, used In2's trade secrets to copy their product. But In2 does not specify any information [*10] that Mr. Hope used to create a copy of In2's product. It also is unclear if In2 alleges that Defendants did misappropriate In2's trade secrets or only that they could misappropriate them. The proposed amended complaint alleges that Defendants "received all review information from the diligence team enabling Honeywell to misappropriate valuable In2 intellectual property and unfairly plot internal development strategies to work around currently filed and in process product patents." (Compl. ¶ 33 (emphasis added).) But In2 does not allege that Defendants actually took any actions.

Even viewed in a light most favorable to In2, these allegations fail to state a claim for misappropriation. Accordingly, In2's motion to amend is DENIED for causes of action 8 and 15.

Injunctive Relief (Cause of Action 16)

In2 seeks an injunction

> ordering Honeywell and ADI to immediately return all In2 Confidential Information, intellectual property and business and trade secret information . . . and restraining Honeywell and ADI acting in concert with them from using, copying, publishing, disclosing, transferring, and/or selling In2's confidential and proprietary business and trade secret information, and from [*11] obtaining any commercial advantage or unjust enrichment from their respective misappropriation of that information.

(Compl. ¶ 88.) Because In2's claim for injunctive relief is based on In2's eighth and fifteenth causes of action and the court has denied leave to amend those causes of action, In2's motion to amend is DENIED for cause of action 16.

Contract Claims

Breach of Contract (Cause of Action 10)

In2 alleges that "Honeywell breached the Bailment Agreement and Non-Disclosure Agreement by misappropriating In2 confidential information . . . , and by refusing to provide essential consideration . . . in the form of volume of sales and orders. Honeywell breached its promise to permit In2 to offer its products for sale through ADI and market In2 branded products." (Compl. ¶ 72.) These breaches are based in part on alleged oral agreements that In2 and Defendants had.

Defendants contend that the terms of the agreements themselves bar In2's claim. In2 disputes the meaning Defendants give to the terms of the contracts. At this stage in the proceedings, the court will not interpret the various contract provisions. Viewing the allegations in the light most favorable to In2, In2 sufficiently identifies

[4] The Utah Uniform Trade Secrets Act displaces the common law misappropriation claim. Utah Code Ann.§ 13-24-8(1).

[*12] the agreements and alleged oral agreements, and a breach of those agreements. Accordingly, In2's motion to amend is GRANTED for cause of action 10.

Breach of the Covenant of Good Faith and Fair Dealing (Cause of Action 11)

HN6[] Under both Utah and New York law, [5] "[a]n implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing inheres in every contract." Oman v. Davis Sch. Dist., 2008 UT 70, ¶ 47, 194 P.3d 956; see also Dalton v. Educ. Testing Serv., 87 N.Y.2d 384, 663 N.E.2d 289, 291, 639 N.Y.S.2d 977 (N.Y. 1995) ("Implicit in all contracts is a covenant of good faith and fair dealing in the course of contract performance."). This implied covenant ensures that neither party does anything that would have the effect of destroying or injuring the right of the other party to receive the fruits of the contract. Oman, 2008 UT 70, ¶ 47, 194 P.3d 956; Dalton, 663 N.E.2d at 291.

In2 alleges that "Honeywell failed to deal with In2 fairly and abused and exploited its dominant position in the security marketplace" and "acted with intent to deprive In2 of the value of its Agreements with Honeywell." (Comp. ¶ 75.) In addition, "Honeywell [*13] induced In2 to enter agreements and accept promises when Honeywell intended to ensure that the value of the agreements and the promises would not be realized." (Id. ¶ 75.) When considered as a whole, with the other allegations in the Complaint, In2 sufficiently alleges a cause of action for breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing. Accordingly, In2's motion to amend is GRANTED for cause of action 11.

Antitrust Claims

As an initial matter, Defendants contend that all of In2's antitrust claims fail in light of Christy Sports, LLC v. Deer Valley Resort Co., Ltd., 555 F.3d 1188 (10th Cir. 2009). Christy Sports involved an antitrust claim brought by Christy Sports, a ski rental business, against Deer Valley Resort Company (Deer Valley), the owner of a destination ski resort. Originally, Deer Valley owned all of the property at the resort's mid-mountain village, but over time, it sold parcels to third parties. One such parcel was sold to people who then built a commercial building that was leased to Christy Sports' predecessor. The parcel was subject to a restrictive covenant that prohibited the owners from renting skis on the property without Deer Valley's consent. At [*14] some point, Deer Valley allowed Christy Sports' predecessor to rent skis in return for fifteen percent of the rental revenue. Later, after Christy Sports began operating at Deer Valley's mid-mountain village, Christy Sports stopped paying the fifteen percent, with no objection from Deer Valley. But in 2005, Deer Valley opened its own mid-mountain ski rental business and notified Christy Sports that the following year the restrictive covenant would be enforced and Christy Sports could no longer rent skis. Christy Sports argued that Deer Valley's decision to begin enforcing the restrictive covenant violated § 2 of the Sherman Act by either actual or attempted monopolization.

The Tenth Circuit affirmed the district court's dismissal of Christy Sports' Sherman Act claim and held that "the creator of a resort has no obligation under the antitrust laws to allow competitive suppliers of ancillary services on its property." Id. at 1193. The court found that its conclusion could be reached one of two ways: by reference to the proper definition of a market or by reference to the absence of anticompetitive conduct. First, Christy Sports' definition of the product market as "rental skis" was too [*15] narrow. Deer Valley offered "a cluster of products that combine to create a destination ski experience; rental skis [were] only one small component." Id. at 1194. Alternatively, the court reasoned that Deer Valley's conduct was not anticompetitive. "Deer Valley [was] not required to invite competitors onto its property to rent skis to its patrons, even if a failure to do so would mean it [was] the sole supplier of rental skis at the ski area." Id. Under either line of reasoning, Christy Sports had failed to plead a plausible claim for monopolization under § 2 of the Sherman Act.

[5] The Bailment Agreement contains an applicable law provision that designates New York law as the applicable law. (Dkt. No. 6-2.)

Christy Sports might be determinative if In2 were to simply allege that the Defendants prevented In2 from selling Honeywell compatible products (requiring Honeywell intellectual property). But when the allegations in the proposed amended complaint are viewed in the light most favorable to In2, this is not all that In2 alleges. In2 alleges that "Honeywell's action and directions to third parties prevented In2 from entering the markets for security and environmental control systems, and in particular, the internet submarkets, and prevented In2 from developing a competing product." (Comp. ¶ 36.) From this and similar [*16] allegations, the court must draw the inference that In2 had either a competing product that did not require use of Honeywell's intellectual property or that it had the potential to create such a product. While the antitrust laws would not require Honeywell to allow In2 to use its property, like Deer Valley was not required to invite competitors onto its property to rent skis, they would prevent anticompetitive activity affecting In2's independent products. Accordingly, the court must evaluate each of In2's antitrust claims to determine if it has sufficiently plead those claims.

Sherman Act § 2 Monopolization (Cause of Action 4)

HN7[] To state a monopolization claim under Sherman Act § 2, the plaintiff must plead "(1) the possession of monopoly power in the relevant market and (2) the willful acquisition or maintenance of that power as distinguished from growth or development of a consequence of a superior product, business acumen, or historic accident." Full Draw Prods. v. Easton Sports, Inc., 182 F.3d 745, 756 (10th Cir. 1999). Monopoly power "requires proof of both power to control prices and power to exclude competition." Id. at 757. This power may be inferred when a company has a predominant [*17] share of the market. United States v. Grinnell Corp., 384 U.S. 563, 571, 86 S. Ct. 1698, 16 L. Ed. 2d 778 (1966).

In2 alleges that Honeywell "has monopoly power in the Home Systems market, manufacturing in excess of 50% of all such systems in the United States," "has monopoly power in the submarkets of home security systems as the manufacturer of more than 50% of such systems in the United States," "is believed to have control [sic] between 75% and 90% of the internet controllable systems," "has monopoly power in the home environmental systems submarket as the manufacturer of more than 50% of such systems in the United States," and "is believed to have control [sic] between 75% and 90% the internet capable systems." (Compl. ¶¶ 34-35.) From In2's allegation that Honeywell has a predominant share of the relevant markets (between 50 and 90%), the court can infer, for purposes of this motion, that Honeywell had monopoly power. [6]

But, even liberally reading the allegations, In2 has failed to properly plead that any such monopoly power was willfully acquired and is not the result of a superior product, business acumen, or historic accident. The only allegation pertaining to this second element states that "Honeywell has undertaken improper and illegal steps to obtain and maintain its monopoly power." (Compl. ¶ 70.) There are no factual allegations that support this conclusion. Because In2's proposed amended complaint does not contain "enough facts to state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face," Ridge at Red Hawk, 493 F.3d at 1177, In2's motion to amend is DENIED for cause of action 4.

Sherman Act § 1 Unfair Competition (Cause of Action 5)

HN8[] To state a claim for a Sherman Act § 1 violation, "the plaintiff must allege facts which show: the defendant entered a contract, combination or conspiracy that unreasonably restrains trade in the relevant market." Full Draw, 182 F.3d 745, 756 (10th Cir. 1999). A conspiracy involves "two or more entities that previously pursued their own interests separately . . [*19] . combining to act as one for their common benefit." Abraham v. Intermountain Health Care Inc., 461 F.3d 1249, 1256 (10th Cir. 2006).

---

[6] The court notes that "market share alone is insufficient to establish market power." Bright v. Moss Ambulance Serv., Inc., 824 F.2d 819, 824 (10th Cir. 1987). But at this stage in the proceedings and when the allegations are viewed in the light most favorable to In2, the allegations that Honeywell [*18] controlled between 50 and 90% of the relevant markets make it plausible that Honeywell had monopoly power.

Here, In2 only generally alleges that Honeywell: "directed wholesalers and retailers to refuse to sell . . . In2 products" (Compl. ¶ 36); "threaten[ed] potential customers and business partners of In2" (id. ¶ 73); and "force[d] or induce[d] third parties to terminate and/or refuse to do business with In2" (id.). Nowhere in its proposed amended complaint does In2 identify any specific person with whom Honeywell agreed. The closest it comes is the allegation that Honeywell directed its own (unspecified) wholesalers and retailers to refuse to sell In2 products. As in Twombly, In2's "complaint leaves no doubt that [In2] rest[s] [its] § 1 claim on descriptions of parallel conduct and not on any independent allegation of actual agreement." Twombly, 550 U.S. at 564. And, like in Twombly, In2 has not pled a "specific time, place, or person involved in the alleged conspiracies." Id. at 565 n.10. This does not meet the pleading requirement, and In2's cause of action fails for this reason. See *Compliance Mktg., Inc. v. Drugtest, Inc., 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 34315, 2010 WL 1416823, at 6 (D. Colo. April 7, 2010) [*20] (dismissing Sherman Act § 1 claim because the complaint did not "provide sufficient factual basis to demonstrate concerted action between each [company using the service] and [the company offering the service]").

Accordingly, In2's motion to amend is DENIED for cause of action 5.

Sherman Act § 2 Refusal to Deal by a Monopolist (Cause of Action 6)

This cause of action fails because In2 hasn't adequately pled that Honeywell willfully acquired and maintained monopoly power, as discussed above for cause of action 4 (the Sherman Act § 2 monopoly claim). Additionally, Honeywell's alleged refusal to deal with In2 cannot support a claim under the Sherman Act. "As a general rule, businesses are free to choose the parties with whom they will deal, as well as the prices, terms, and conditions of that dealing." Pac. Bell Tel. Co. v. Linkline Commc'ns, Inc., 555 U.S. 438, 129 S. Ct. 1109, 1118, 172 L. Ed. 2d 836 (2009); see also Verizon Commc'ns Inc. v. Law Offices of Curtis V. Trinko, 540 U.S. 398, 408, 124 S. Ct. 872, 157 L. Ed. 2d 823 (2004) (HN9[] the Sherman Act "does not restrict the long recognized right of [a] trader or manufacturer engaged in an entirely private business, freely to exercise his own independent discretion as to parties with whom he [*21] will deal"). And In2 has not added any facts or allegations that Honeywell's conduct falls outside of this "general rule."

Further, to the extent that In2 pleads an exclusive dealing arrangement, In2 must plead a relevant market, which includes both a relevant product market and a relevant geographic market. "[T]he United States" is a sufficient geographic market. See *Compliance Mktg., 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 34315, 2010 WL 1416823, at * 7* (finding geographic market of "the United States" sufficient"). HN10[] In2 must also "specifically define the product market by reference to the 'reasonable interchangeability of use or the cross-elasticity of demand between the product [in question] and substitutes for it.'" *Compliance Mktg., 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 34315, 2010 WL 1416823, at 7 (quoting Brown Shoe Co., Inc. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, 325, 82 S. Ct. 1502, 8 L. Ed. 2d 510 (1962)). And where the plaintiff "fails to define its proposed relevant market with reference to the rule of reasonable interchangeability and cross-elasticity of demand, or alleges a proposed relevant market that clearly does not encompass all interchangeable substitute products even when all factual inferences are granted in plaintiff's favor, the relevant market is legally insufficient and a motion to dismiss [*22] may be granted." Campfield v. State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co., 532 F.3d 1111, 1118 (10th Cir. 2008). In2 has not so defined its alleged relevant product market.

For these reasons, In2's motion to amend is DENIED for cause of action 6.

Sherman Act § 1 Concerted Refusal to Deal (Cause of Action 7)

This cause of action, like cause of action 5 discussed above, fails because In2 has not pled an agreement between Honeywell and another specified entity. Stating a claim under § 1 requires "a complaint with enough factual matter (taken as true) to suggest that an agreement was made." Twombly, 550 U.S. at 556. Accordingly, In2's motion to amend is DENIED for cause of action 7.

Sherman Act § 1 Illegal Tying (Cause of Action 9)

HN11[] "In cases involving a tying arrangement, the plaintiff must prove that the defendant has market power in the tying product." *Compliance Mktg., 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 34315, 2010 WL 1416823, at 9. Because In2 has failed to plead the relevant market adequately, as discussed above, any argument that Defendants' conduct constitutes an illegal tying arrangement necessarily fails under a rule of reason analysis.

In2, therefore, could only plead a per se illegal tying arrangement. In order to establish the existence [*23] of an illegal tying arrangement, "Plaintiffs must adequately plead the existence of: (1) two separate products; (2) a tie- or conditioning of the sale of one product on the purchase of another; (3) sufficient economic power in the tying market; and (4) a substantial volume of commerce affected in the tied product market." *2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 34315, [WL] at 10 (internal citations and quotations omitted).

Here, In2 does not allege that Honeywell conditioned the sale of its product on the purchase of another ("tied") product. Rather, In2 alleges that Honeywell conditioned the sale of its products on the third-party not buying In2 products. This type of "negative tie" can be the basis of a tying claim if the buyer "agrees that he will not purchase [the tied product] from any other supplier." Eastman Kodak Co. v. Image Technical Servs. Inc., 504 U.S. 451, 461, 112 S. Ct. 2072, 119 L. Ed. 2d 265 (1992). But even a negative tying claim requires the existence of two separate and distinct products. See id. at 462; *Compliance Mktg., 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 34315, 2010 WL 1416823, at 9.

In2 only generally alleges that Honeywell conditioned the sale of its product on the buyer not buying any In2 product. In2 has not made clear that there is a second product that buyers were prohibited from [*24] purchasing from In2. For a similar reason, In2 fails to allege that Honeywell has sufficient economic power in the tying market—it is unclear what the tying market would be other than the home security system market. And finally, In2 does not allege the existence of an agreement between Honeywell and any third-party (as discussed above) or that a substantial volume of commerce in the tied market was affected.

For all of these reasons, In2 fails in its proposed amended complaint to state a claim for tying. Accordingly, In2's motion to amend is DENIED for cause of action 9.

Utah Antitrust Statute - Utah Code § 76-10-914(a) (Causes of Action 12-14)

Both parties agree that the interpretation of Utah's Antitrust Statute is guided by federal case law interpreting the Sherman Act. Because In2's proposed amended complaint does not state a claim under the Sherman Act, In2's motion to amend is DENIED for causes of action 12, 13, and 14.

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, In2's motion to amend (Dkt. No. 29) is GRANTED IN PART AND DENIED IN PART:

- In2 may file its proposed amended complaint for causes of action 1, 2, 3, 10, and 11, as more fully discussed above;

- In2's motion to amend causes of [*25] action 4 through 9 and 12 through 16 is DENIED.

DATED this 11th day of October, 2011.

ORDER: (1) DISMISSING PLAINTIFFS' COMPLAINT WITHOUT PREJUDICE AS TO ALL DEFENDANTS; (2) DENYING AS MOOT DEFENDANTS' MOTION FOR SUMMARY JUDGMENT; AND (3) VACATING THE HEARING

Pursuant to Local Rule 7.2(d), the Court finds this matter suitable for disposition without a hearing. After reviewing the motions and the supporting and opposing memoranda, the Court DISMISSES WITHOUT PREJUDICE [*2] Plaintiffs' Complaint against all Defendants, DENIES AS MOOT Defendants' Motion for Summary Judgment (Doc. # 9), and VACATES the Hearing on this matter set for October 14, 2011.

BACKGROUND

On March 28, 2011, Plaintiffs Timothy J. Fitzgerald and Virginia Parsons (collectively "Plaintiffs") filed a Complaint in this Court against Defendants American Savings Bank, F.S.B., Merscorp, Inc., Mortgage Electronic Registration Systems ("MERS"), Marc Ioane, and Susan Tilden (collectively "Defendants"), alleging that Plaintiffs had been lured into a predatory mortgage loan. ("Compl.," Doc # 1.) Specifically, Plaintiffs' Complaint alleges the following Counts:

- Count I: Violations of the Sherman/Clayton Anti-Trust Acts. (FAC ¶¶ 173-98.)
- Count II: Violations of the Hawaii Anti-Trust/Anti-Monopoly Acts. (Id. ¶¶ 199-203.)
- Count III: Misrepresentation. (Id. ¶¶ 204-19.)
- Count IV: Unfair and Deceptive Acts or Practices. (Id. ¶¶ 220-35.)
- Count V: Breach of Fiduciary duty. (Id. ¶¶ 236-45.)
- Count VI: Unjust Enrichment. (Id. ¶¶ 246-50.)
- Count VII: Slander of Title (Id. ¶¶ 251-61.)
- Count VIII: Injunctive Relief. (Id. ¶¶ 262-67.)

Plaintiffs reside in the State of Hawaii. (Id. ¶ 5.) On or about July 2007, [*3] Plaintiffs began researching a lender to purchase a parcel of property located at 2276 W. Vineyard Street, Wailuku, Hawaii (the "Subject Property"). On December 17, 2007, Plaintiffs executed a promissory note agreeing to pay $800,775.00 to American Savings Bank, F.S.B. ("ASB") as Lender. (Id. ¶ 63.) The note states the interest rate is "six and one-quarter percent (6.625%)." (Id.; see also, "Note," Compl., Ex. 1, at 1). The note included funds for the construction of Plaintiffs' residence on the Subject Property. (Compl. ¶ 64.) On the same day Plaintiffs entered into a mortgage, which was recorded in the Bureau of Conveyances on December 26, 2007. (Id. ¶ 66; see also "Mortgage," Compl., Ex. 2.) ASB is listed on the mortgage as the originating lender and MERS is the mortgagee "acting solely as a nominee for Lender and Lender's successors and assigns." (Mortgage at 2.)

Sometime around 2009, Plaintiffs defaulted. (Doc. # 10-1 ¶ 12.) Defendants thereafter initiated a non-judicial foreclosure sale. (Compl., Ex. 7.) Plaintiffs received notice of the foreclosure sale and an auction was scheduled for December 15, 2009. (Doc. # 10-1 ¶ 13.)

The day before the scheduled auction, on December 14, [*4] 2009, Plaintiff Parsons filed for Chapter 11 Bankruptcy in the United States Bankruptcy Court for the District of Hawaii. ("DCSF," Doc. # 10, Ex. G.) On May 3, 2010, Defendant MERS was granted relief from the automatic stay in Plaintiff Parson's bankruptcy case. (DCSF, Exs. H, I.) On June 15, 2011, Plaintiff Fitzgerald filed for Chapter 13 bankruptcy. (DCSF, Ex. J.)

On November 8, 2010, Plaintiff Parsons's bankruptcy case was converted from Chapter 11 to Chapter 7, and Dane S. Field was appointed as the bankruptcy Trustee. (DCSF, Ex. K.) On February 8, 2011, a Discharge of Debtor was filed in Plaintiff Parsons's bankruptcy case. (DCSF, Ex. L.)

On January 13, 2011, Defendant ASB was granted relief from the automatic stay in Plaintiff Fitzgerald's bankruptcy case. (DCSF, Ex. M.) On March 3, 2011, Defendant ASB was granted relief from the codebtor stay in Plaintiff Fitzgerald's bankruptcy case. (DCSF, Ex. N.)

On March 11, 2011, by assignment of mortgage, MERS assigned its rights, title and interest in the mortgage to ASB. ("Assignment," DCSF, Ex. F.)

On March 23, 2011, Plaintiffs filed their Complaint. Plaintiffs allege that Defendant ASB "was not forthcoming about the economic collapse or [*5] the overall securities fraud that caused the nation's economic decline." (Id. ¶ 91.) Plaintiffs also contend that Defendant BAS "has failed to provide a valid assignment from MERS of the mortgage that they split away from the note in [a] securitization scheme." (Id. ¶ 126.) Plaintiffs also complain that "ASB did not hold the note and mortgage in June 2010 when MERS was granted the relief from stay in Parsons's bankruptcy." (Id. ¶ 128.) This "deception" allegedly resulted in Plaintiffs' inability to modify their loan. (Id. ¶ 130.) Finally, Plaintiffs contend that MERS, as an entity, "circumvents the state's recording statutes." (Id. ¶ 140.)

On June 1, 2011, Defendants filed a Motion for Summary Judgment. ("MSJ," Doc. # 9.) On August 8, 2011, Plaintiffs filed their Opposition. ("Opp'n," Doc. # 24.) On August 15, 2011, Defendants filed their Reply. ("Reply," Doc. # 26.)

STANDARD OF REVIEW

I. Motion for Summary Judgment

Rule 56 requires summary judgment to be granted when "the pleadings, the discovery and disclosure materials on file, and any affidavits show that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the movant is entitled to judgment as a matter of law." Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(c); [*6] see also Porter v. Cal. Dep't of Corr., 419 F.3d 885, 891 (9th Cir. 2005); Addisu v. Fred Meyer, Inc., 198 F.3d 1130, 1134 (9th Cir. 2000). A main purpose of summary judgment is to dispose of factually unsupported claims and defenses. Celotex Corp. v. Catrett, 477 U.S. 317, 323-24, 106 S. Ct. 2548, 91 L. Ed. 2d 265 (1986).

Summary judgment must be granted against a party that fails to demonstrate facts to establish what will be an essential element at trial. See id. at 323. A moving party without the ultimate burden of persuasion at trial—usually, but not always, the defendant—has both the initial burden of production and the ultimate burden of persuasion on a motion for summary judgment. Nissan Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Fritz Cos., 210 F.3d 1099, 1102 (9th Cir. 2000). The burden initially falls upon the moving party to identify for the court those "portions of the materials on file that it believes demonstrate the absence of any genuine issue of material fact." T.W. Elec. Serv., Inc. v. Pac. Elec. Contractors Ass'n, 809 F.2d 626, 630 (9th Cir. 1987) (citing Celotex Corp., 477 U.S. at 323).

Once the moving party has carried its burden under Rule 56, the nonmoving party "must set forth specific facts showing that there [*7] is a genuine issue for trial" and may not rely on the mere allegations in the pleadings. Porter, 419 F.3d at 891 (quoting Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc., 477 U.S. 242, 256, 106 S. Ct. 2505, 91 L. Ed. 2d 202 (1986)). In setting forth "specific facts," the nonmoving party may not meet its burden on a summary judgment motion by making general references to evidence without page or line numbers. S. Cal. Gas Co. v. City of Santa Ana, 336 F.3d 885, 889 (9th Cir. 2003); Local Rule 56.1(f) ("When resolving motions for summary judgment, the court shall have no independent duty to search and consider any part of the court record not otherwise referenced in the separate concise statements of the parties."). "[A]t least some 'significant probative evidence'" must be produced. T.W. Elec. Serv., 809 F.2d at 630 (quoting First Nat'l Bank of Ariz. v. Cities Serv. Co., 391 U.S. 253, 290, 88 S. Ct. 1575, 20 L. Ed. 2d 569 (1968)). "A scintilla of evidence or evidence that is merely colorable or not significantly probative does not present a genuine issue of material fact." Addisu, 198 F.3d at 1134. Further, the Ninth Circuit has "refused to find a 'genuine issue' where the only evidence presented is 'uncorroborated and self-serving' testimony." Villiarimo v. Aloha Island Air, Inc., 281 F.3d 1054, 1061 (9th Cir. 2002) [*8] (citing Kennedy v. Applause, Inc., 90 F.3d 1477, 1481 (9th Cir. 1996)). "Conclusory allegations unsupported by factual data cannot defeat summary judgment." Rivera v. Nat'l R.R. Passenger Corp., 331 F.3d 1074, 1078 (9th Cir. 2003).

When "direct evidence" produced by the moving party conflicts with "direct evidence" produced by the party opposing summary judgment, "the judge must assume the truth of the evidence set forth by the nonmoving party with respect to that fact." T.W. Elec. Serv., 809 F.2d at 631. In other words, evidence and inferences must be construed in the light most favorable to the nonmoving party. Porter, 419 F.3d at 891. The court does not make credibility determinations or weigh conflicting evidence at the summary judgment stage. Id.; see also Nelson v. City of Davis, 571 F.3d 924 (9th Cir. 2009) ("[C]redibility determinations, the weighing of the evidence, and the drawing of legitimate inferences from the facts are jury functions, not those of a judge.") (citations omitted). However, inferences may be drawn from underlying facts not in dispute, as well as from disputed facts that the judge is required to resolve in favor of the nonmoving party. T.W. Elec. Serv., 809 F.2d at 631.

II. [*9] Federal Rules of Civil Procedure 8 and 12

The court may dismiss a complaint pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure ("Rule") 12(b)(6) on its own motion. See Omar v. Sea-Land Serv., Inc., 813 F.2d 986, 991 (9th Cir. 1987) ("A trial court may dismiss a claim sua sponte under [Rule] 12(b)(6). Such a dismissal may be made without notice where the claimant cannot possibly win relief."); Ricotta v. California, 4 F. Supp. 2d 961, 968 n.7 (S.D. Cal. 1998) ("The Court can dismiss a claim sua sponte for a Defendant who has not filed a motion to dismiss under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6)."); see also Baker v. Dir., U.S. Parole Comm'n, 916 F.2d 725, 727, 286 U.S. App. D.C. 310 (D.C. Cir. 1990) (holding that district court may dismiss cases sua sponte pursuant to Rule 12(b)(6) without notice where plaintiff could not prevail on complaint as alleged). Additionally, a paid complaint that is "obviously frivolous" does not confer federal subject matter jurisdiction and may be dismissed sua sponte before service of process. Franklin v. Murphy, 745 F.2d 1221, 1227 n.6 (9th Cir. 1984); see also Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(h)(3); Grupo Dataflux v. Atlas Global Group, L.P., 541 U.S. 567, 593, 124 S. Ct. 1920, 158 L. Ed. 2d 866 (2004) ("[I]t is the obligation of both district [*10] court and counsel to be alert to jurisdictional requirements."); Branson v. Nott, 62 F.3d 287, 291 (9th Cir. 1995) ("[D]ismissal of Branson's complaint was required because the district court lacked subject matter jurisdiction . . . .").

The court may also sua sponte dismiss a complaint for failure to comply with Federal Rule of Civil Procedure ("Rule") 8. Rule 8 mandates that a complaint include a "short and plain statement of the claim," Fed. R. Civ. P. 8(a)(2), and that "each allegation must be simple, concise, and direct." Fed. R. Civ. P. 8(d)(1). A complaint that is so confusing that its "'true substance, if any, is well disguised'" may be dismissed sua sponte for failure to satisfy Rule 8. Hearns v. San Bernardino Police Dep't, 530 F.3d 1124, 1131 (9th Cir. 2008) (quoting Gillibeau v. City of Richmond, 417 F.2d 426, 431 (9th Cir. 1969); Simmons v. Abruzzo, 49 F.3d 83, 86 (2d Cir. 1995) (stating that a district court has the power to sua sponte dismiss a complaint for failure to comply with Rule 8 where the complaint is so confused, ambiguous, or unintelligible that its true substance is well disguised); see also McHenry v. Renne, 84 F.3d 1172, 1180 (9th Cir. 1996) ("Something [*11] labeled a complaint but written . . . , prolix in evidentiary detail, yet without simplicity, conciseness and clarity as to whom plaintiffs are suing for what wrongs, fails to perform the essential functions of a complaint."); Nevijel v. N. Coast Life Ins. Co., 651 F.2d 671, 673 (9th Cir. 1981) ("A complaint which fails to comply with [Rule 8] may be dismissed with prejudice[.]").

Put slightly differently, a district court may dismiss a complaint for failure to comply with Rule 8 where it fails to provide the defendants fair notice of the wrongs they have allegedly committed. See McHenry, 84 F.3d at 1178-80 (affirming dismissal of complaint where "one cannot determine from the complaint who is being sued, for what relief, and on what theory, with enough detail to guide discovery"); cf. Mendiondo v. Centinela Hosp. Med. Ctr., 521 F.3d 1097, 1105 n.4 (9th Cir. 2008) (finding dismissal under Rule 8 was in error where "the complaint provide[d] fair notice of the wrongs allegedly committed by defendants and [did] not qualify as overly verbose, confusing, or rambling"). Rule 8 requires more than "the-defendant-unlawfully-harmed-me accusation[s]" and "[a] pleading that offers labels and conclusions [*12] or a formulaic recitation of the elements of a cause of action will not do." Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 129 S. Ct. 1937, 1949, 173 L. Ed. 2d 868 (2009) (citations and quotations omitted). "The propriety of dismissal for failure to comply with Rule 8 does not depend on whether the complaint is wholly without merit." McHenry, 84 F.3d at 1179.

The court may "begin by identifying pleadings that, because they are no more than conclusions, are not entitled to the assumption of truth." Iqbal, 129 S. Ct. at 1950. Legal conclusions must be supported by factual allegations. Id. "When there are well-pleaded factual allegations, a court should assume their veracity and then determine whether they plausibly give rise to an entitlement to relief." Id.

DISCUSSION

For the reasons set forth below, the Court sua sponte concludes that the Complaint should be dismissed. The Court is cognizant that Defendants have filed a Motion for Summary Judgment, but finds that it is premature to rule on the merits of that Motion as Plaintiffs have not yet stated a claim upon which relief can be granted.

I. Counts I: Violation of the Sherman/Clayton Antitrust Acts

In Count I, Plaintiffs allege violations of Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Antitrust [*13] Act and seek relief for these violations pursuant to Section 4 of the Clayton Antitrust Act. (Compl. ¶¶ 194, 196.) Plaintiffs have failed to plead these counts with sufficient specificity.

Section 1 of the Sherman Act prohibits "[e]very contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations." 15 U.S.C. § 1. To state a claim under Section 1, "'claimants must plead not just ultimate facts (such as a conspiracy), but evidentiary facts which, if true, will prove: (1) a contract, combination or conspiracy among two or more persons or distinct business entities; (2) by which the persons or entities intended to harm or restrain trade or commerce . . . (3) which actually injures competition.'" William O. Gilley Enters., Inc. v. Atlantic Richfield Co., 588 F.3d 659, 669 (9th Cir. 2009) (per curiam) (quoting Kendall v. Visa U.S.A., Inc., 518 F.3d 1042, 1047 (9th Cir. 2008)); see also Coal. for ICANN Transparency, Inc. v. VeriSign, Inc., 611 F.3d 495, 501-02 (9th Cir. 2010) (same).

Section 2 of the Sherman Act makes it illegal to "monopolize, or attempt to monopolize, or combine or conspire with [*14] any other person or persons, to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations." 15 U.S.C. § 2. Monopolization and attempted monopolization are the two traditional claims asserted under Section 2. To state a claim for monopolization, the plaintiff must sufficiently allege: "'(1) the possession of monopoly power in the relevant market and (2) the willful acquisition or maintenance of that power as distinguished from growth or development as a consequence of a superior product, business acumen, or historic accident.'" John Doe 1 v. Abbott Labs., 571 F.3d 930, 933 n.3 (9th Cir. 2009) (quoting Eastman Kodak Co. v. Image Technical Servs., Inc., 504 U.S. 451, 481, 112 S. Ct. 2072, 119 L. Ed. 2d 265 (1992)); Alaska Airlines v. United Airlines, Inc., 948 F.2d 536, 540-41 (9th Cir. 1991) (same); see also MetroNet Servs. Corp. v. Qwest Corp., 383 F.3d 1124, 1130 (9th Cir. 2004) (listing the elements of a monopolization claim).

Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act thus "focus on different problems." See Alaska Airlines v. United Airlines, Inc., 948 F.2d 536, 540-41 (9th Cir. 1991). Whereas "concerted conduct is subject to sanction [under Section 1] if it merely restrains trade, unilateral [*15] conduct is subject to sanction [under Section 2] only if it either actually monopolizes or threatens monopolization." Id. at 541 (citing Copperweld Corp. v. Independence Tube Corp., 467 U.S. 752, 767-69, 104 S. Ct. 2731, 81 L. Ed. 2d 628 (1984)); see also Am. Needle, Inc. v. Nat'l Football League, 130 S. Ct. 2201, 2208-09, 176 L. Ed. 2d 947 (2010) (stating that although Section 1 applies only to concerted action that restrains trade, Section 2 covers both concerted and independent action, but only if that action monopolizes or threatens actual monopolization, a category which is narrower than restraint of trade).

Regardless of the provision purportedly violated, an antitrust plaintiff must demonstrate that the injury in question is "injury of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent." Brunswick, 429 U.S. at 489. Indeed, the antitrust laws "were enacted for 'the protection of competition, not competitors.'" Id. at 488 (quoting Brown, 370 U.S. at 320); see also Cascade Health Solutions, 515 F.3d at 901 (recognizing the Supreme Court's "long and consistent adherence to the principle that the antitrust laws protect the process of competition, and not the pursuits of any particular competitor").

A plaintiff seeking damages pursuant [*16] to Section 4 of the Clayton Act must show causal antitrust injury, and to obtain injunctive relief pursuant to Section 16 of the Clayton Act, a plaintiff must allege threatened antitrust injury. [1] Cargill, 479 U.S. at 109-13. The purpose of the antitrust injury requirement is to "ensure[] that the harm claimed by the plaintiff corresponds to the rationale for finding a violation of the antitrust laws in the first place, and it prevents losses that stem from competition from supporting suits by private plaintiffs for either damages or equitable relief." Atlantic Richfield Co. v. USA Petroleum, Inc., 495 U.S. 328, 342, 110 S. Ct. 1884, 109 L. Ed. 2d 333 (1990). As such, "[t]o show antitrust injury, a plaintiff must prove that his loss flows from an anticompetitive aspect or effect of the defendant's behavior [because] it is inimical to the antitrust laws to award damages for losses stemming from acts that do not hurt competition." Rebel Oil Co., Inc. v. Atlantic Richfield Co., 51 F.3d 1421, 1433 (9th Cir. 1995) (citing Atlantic Richfield, 495 U.S. at 334); see also Cascade Health Solutions, 515 F.3d at 902 ("'Plaintiffs must prove antitrust injury, which is to say injury of the type the antitrust laws were intended to [*17] prevent and that flows from that which makes defendants' acts unlawful. The injury should reflect the anticompetitive effect either of the violation or of anticompetitive acts made possible by the violation.'") (quoting Brunswick, 429 U.S. at 489).

Plaintiffs have failed to adequately allege causal antitrust injury and Count I therefore fails. The crux of Defendants' argument is that MERS and ASB, as well as other "large private banking institutions within the United States" agreed to establish a scheme "by which they would and did set up a private system of recording interests." (Compl. ¶ 175.) Subsequently, these banks "used their combined market power in the financial industry to take control of the market for private securitization of mortgages." (Id. ¶ [*18] 176.) Plaintiffs complain that "subsequent to the creation of MERS, the Big Banks and MERS used their control over the residential mortgage market by inflating the market for residential properties . . . ." (Id. ¶ 179.) Plaintiffs allege that "[b]ecause larger loans generated larger fees, the originators would steer customers toward larger loans with promises of real estate investment growth." (Id. ¶ 184.) Finally, Plaintiffs contend that establishing MERS as a "nominee" serves to "protect and insulate Defendant ASB from otherwise valid claims and defenses by mortgagors and borrowers. . . ." (Id. ¶ 193(a).) Plaintiffs contend that this conduct "violates the Sherman Anti-Trust Act." (Id. ¶ 194.)

The Complaint is utterly devoid of any factual allegations which support these contentions. For instance, there is no explanation or allegations to how these banks "used their combined market power in the financial industry to take control of the market." Nor do Plaintiffs explain how, exactly, "subsequent to the creation of MERS, the Big Banks and MERS used their control over the residential mortgage market by inflating the market for residential properties . . . ." Finally there simply is no [*19] allegation, beyond conclusory statements, that Defendants engaged in any sort of anticompetitive conduct. Without sufficiently alleging antitrust injury, this count of the Complaint cannot survive. Accordingly the Court DISMISSES Count I of the Complaint.

II. Count II: Violation of the Hawaii Antitrust and Anti-Monopoly Acts

Plaintiffs, relying on their factual allegations with respect to Count I, allege a violation the Hawaii Monopolization Act, Hawaii Revised Statutes § 480-9. (TAC ¶ 115.) The act provides that "[n]o person shall monopolize, or attempt to monopolize, or combine or conspire with any other person to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce in any commodity in any section of the State." Haw. Rev. Stat. § 480-9.

The close relationship between federal antitrust law and Hawaii antitrust law has long been established. See, e.g., Robert's Hawaii Sch. Bus v. Laupahoehoe Transp. Co., Inc., 91 Haw. 224, 982 P.2d 853, 881 n.29 (Haw. 1999) (noting the similarities between Section 2 of the Sherman Antitrust Act and Haw. Rev. Stat. § 480-9.) Indeed, the "[l]egislative history of Hawaii's antitrust law clearly indicates that the state laws are to be interpreted and construed in harmony with [*20] analogous federal antitrust laws." Island Tobacco Co., Ltd. v. R. J. Reynolds Indus., Inc., 513 F. Supp. 726, 738 (D. Haw. 1981). Similar to federal law, therefore, Hawaii courts require plaintiffs in antitrust proceedings to plead the "nature of the competition" to "ensure that the injury results from a competition-reducing aspect of the defendant's behavior." Davis v. Four Seasons Hotel Ltd., 122 Haw. 423, 228 P.3d 303, 325 (Haw. 2010) (citing and relying on federal law). Thus, Plaintiffs' failure to sufficiently allege any anticompetitive conduct as discussed with respect to Count I is applicable to Count II as well. Accordingly the Court DISMISSES Count II of the Complaint.

[1] Section 4 of the Clayton Act provides treble damages to "any person who shall be injured in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws." 15 U.S.C. § 15. Section 16 of the Clayton Act provides that "[a]ny person, firm, corporation, or association shall be entitled to sue for and have injunctive relief . . . against threatened loss or damage by a violation of the antitrust laws." 15 U.S.C. § 26.

III. Count III: Misrepresentation

The Third Count alleges that "Defendant ASB did not disclose to plaintiffs that MERS would be their mortgagee essentially separating the mortgage from the note and creating an inability to effectively communicate or negotiate." (Compl. ¶ 212.) Plaintiffs claim that "ASB intentionally misrepresented the actual mortgagee and mortgage by creating an ambiguous document." (Id. ¶ 213.) Plaintiffs contend that had they "known of Defendant ASB's true intention to arbitrarily deny them the opportunity [*21] to refinance or modify their loans . . . , Plaintiffs would not have entered into the loan transactions." (Id. ¶ 216.) As a result of these alleged fraudulent misrepresentation, Plaintiffs claim to be entitled to damages. (Id. ¶ 218.)

The Court finds that Plaintiffs' allegations are insufficient to satisfy the more rigorous pleading requirements of Rule 9 that apply to allegations of fraud or mistake. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 9(b) (requiring a party to state with particularity the circumstances constituting fraud or mistake). The claim must "be accompanied by the 'who, what, when, where, and how' of the misconduct charged." Kearns, 567 F.3d at 1120. A plaintiff "must state the time, place and specific content of the false representations as well as the identities of the parties to the misrepresentation." Alan Neuman Productions, Inc. v. Albright, 862 F.2d 1388, 1393 (9th Cir. 1988).

The allegations of misconduct related to this Count are over broad and general in nature. Specifically, Plaintiffs do not detail what specific conduct resulted in the fraudulent misrepresentation to survive Iqbal-Twombly. (See, e.g., FAC ¶¶ 125, 126.) For instance, Plaintiffs claim that ASB "intentionally misrepresented" [*22] the actual mortgagee and mortgage by creating an "ambiguous document." But there is no accompanying facts describing the "who, what, when, where, and how" of this allegation. Kearns, 567 F.3d at 1120. Further, it does not seem to the Court that Defendants engaged in any misrepresentation. The mortgage itself plainly states the role that MERS would play in Plaintiffs' home loan. Plaintiffs signed the mortgage. How this apparent disclosure somehow qualifies as a misrepresentation is unclear to the Court. See *Cervantes v. Countrywide Home Loans, Inc., 656 F.3d 1034, 2011 U.S. App. LEXIS 18569, 2011 WL 3911031, at 5. (9th Cir. Sept. 7, 2011) (concluding similarly).

Accordingly, the Court DISMISSES Plaintiffs' Complaint with respect to Count III.

IV. Count IV: Unfair and Deceptive Acts or Practices

Plaintiffs claim that Defendants engaged in unfair or deceptive acts and practices ("UDAP") in violation of HRS §§ 480-2(a) and 481A-3. (Compl. ¶¶ 220-35.)

Hawaii Revised Statute section 480-2(a) provides that "[u]nfair methods of competition and unfair or deceptive acts or practices in the conduct of any trade or commerce are unlawful." Haw. Rev. Stat. § 480-2(a). "Two distinct causes of action have emerged under [section] 480-2(a): [*23] (1) claims alleging unfair methods of competition; and (2) claims alleging unfair or deceptive acts or practices." [2] Haw. Med. Ass'n v. Haw. Med. Serv. Ass'n, Inc., 113 Haw. 77, 148 P.3d 1179, 1207 (Haw. 2006); see also Star Markets, Ltd. v. Texaco, Inc., 945 F. Supp. 1344, 1346 (D. Haw. 1996). HRS § 481A-3 similarly prohibits "deceptive trade practice[s]."

[2] Although "[a]ny person" may bring an action for unfair methods of competition in violation of section 480-2, only consumers, the attorney general, or the director of the office of consumer protection may bring an action for unfair or deceptive acts or practices in violation of section 480-2. Haw. Rev. Stat. § 480-2(d), (e); see also Davis v. Four Seasons Hotel, Ltd., 122 Haw. 423, 228 P.3d 303, 307 (Haw. 2010). A "consumer" is a "natural person who, primarily for personal, family, or household purposes, purchases, attempts to purchase, or is solicited to purchase goods or services or who commits money, property, or services in a personal investment." Haw. Rev. Stat. § 480-1.

Plaintiffs contend that Defendants violated these statutes by: (1) targeting financially unsophisticated and otherwise vulnerable consumers for inappropriate credit products; (2) offering [*24] a credit line as bait and then failing to address the promise after the loan was completed; (3) failing to adequately disclose the true costs and risks of the subject loan and its inappropriateness for Plaintiffs; (4) failing to protect the Plaintiffs' construction loan funds; (5) falsely representing MERS as a holder of the note in a position to foreclose; (6) falsely using Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac mortgage loan forms; (7) making false statements regarding the documents in the possession of MERS and/or ASB; (8) making a property loan at the time when the bank was experiencing high losses due to the sale of risky and deflated mortgage backed securities; and (9) continuing to use MERS to hold/hide the mortgage while the bank collected cash down payments and closing costs from the Plaintiffs. (Compl. ¶ 145.)

Plaintiffs have again failed to allege sufficiently this count of the Complaint. Plaintiffs have alleged no facts which suggest that any of the Defendants were targeting financially unsophisticated or otherwise vulnerable consumers. Nor have Plaintiffs proffered facts with respect to Defendants' failure to adequately disclose "the true nature of MERS." [3] There are no factual allegations [*25] which suggest that the lender failed to disclose that it approved loans based on certain documents.

Plaintiffs' allegation that Defendants falsely represented or failed to fully and completely disclose information to Plaintiffs is also insufficient. These are fraudulent allegations and Plaintiffs have failed to satisfy the "who, what, where, when, and how" requirement of Rule 9(b). Kearns, 567 F.3d at 1120.

In sum, there is simply no factual premise or basis alleged in the complaint that supports Plaintiffs' UDAP claim. Plaintiffs have utterly failed to allege facts that could give rise to this cause of action. See Iqbal, 129 S. Ct. at 1949 ("[A Complaint] demands more than an unadorned, the defendant-unlawfully-harmed-me accusation."); Twombly, 550 U.S. at 555 ("Factual allegations must be enough to raise a right to relief above the speculative level."). The Court therefore DISMISSES Plaintiffs' Complaint with respect to Count IV.

V. Count V: Breach of Fiduciary Duty

Plaintiffs allege that Defendants owed and breached to Plaintiffs a fiduciary duty in connection with their loan. [*26] (See Compl. ¶¶ 236-45.) Generally there exists no fiduciary duty between borrowers and lenders. Unless a special relationship exists between a borrower and lender that elevates the lender's responsibility, the standard "arms-length business relationship" applies. Giles v. General Motors Acceptance Corp., 494 F.3d 865, 883 (9th Cir. 2007); see also Pension Trust Fund for Operation Engineers v. Federal Ins. Co., 307 F.3d 944, 954 (9th Cir. 2002).

In the instant Complaint, Plaintiffs make no allegations suggesting that their relationship to Defendants is anything other than an ordinary, arms-length, lender-borrower relationship. Plaintiffs claim that ASB was a fiduciary because they provided a loan and loan services to them which would "allow them to satisfy their obligations without risk of losing their property." Plaintiffs here have effectively described a simple arms-length, lender-borrower relationship. Without more, the Court cannot conclude that Defendants owed Plaintiffs a fiduciary duty. The Court therefore DISMISSES Count V of the Complaint.

VI. Count VI: Unjust Enrichment

Plaintiffs next allege that they are entitled to unjust enrichment. Plaintiffs specifically claim that "Defendant [*27] ASB has been unjustly enriched at the expense of the Plaintiffs [] and maintenance of the enrichment would be contrary to the rules and principles of equity." (Compl. ¶ 250.)

To prevail on an unjust enrichment claim, a plaintiff must show that: 1) it has conferred a benefit upon the defendant, and 2) that the retention of the benefit was unjust. *Wadsworth v. KSL Grant Wailea Resort, Inc., __ F. Supp. 2d __, No. 08-00527, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 131205, 2010 WL 5146521, at 11 (D. Haw. December 10, 2010).

[3] Indeed, as discussed, Defendants seemingly completely disclosed the role MERS would play in their home loan.

As a general rule, "[a]n action for unjust enrichment cannot lie in the face of an express contract." Porter v. Hu, 116 Haw. 42, 169 P.3d 994 (Haw. App. 2007); see also Goodwin v. Executive Trustee Servs., LLC, 680 F. Supp. 2d 1244, 1255 (D. Nev. 2010) ("An action 'based on a theory of unjust enrichment is not available when there is an express, written contract, because no agreement can be implied when there is an express agreement.'" (quoting Leasepartners Corp. v. Robert L. Brooks Trust Dated November 12, 1975, 113 Nev. 747, 942 P.2d 182, 187 (Nev. 1997))); MacDonald v. Hayner, 43 Wn. App. 81, 715 P.2d 519, 522 (Wash. App. 1986) ("A party to a valid express contract is bound by the provisions of that contract, and may not disregard the same and bring an [*28] action on an implied contract relating to the same matter, in contravention of the express contract.") Here both the note and the mortgage were express agreements that Plaintiffs executed in connection with their loan which govern the parties rights and obligations. Plaintiffs cannot, therefore, pursue an unjust enrichment claim.

Accordingly the Court DISMISSES Count VI of the Complaint.

VII. Count VII: Slander of Title

Count VII of the complaint alleges Slander of Title. Specifically, Plaintiffs allege that "[t]he recording of the ambiguous mortgage document by MERS, as mortgagee and nominee for ASB directly impairs the vendibility of the property on the open market." (Compl. ¶ 256.) This alleged recording of an ambiguous mortgage was, according to Plaintiffs, motivated by "fraud and malice" because ASB and MERS "knew or should have known that bifurcation of the mortgage and the note invalidates the transaction [and] MERS has no written authority to assign any such documents . . . ." (Id. ¶ 261.)

Slander of title is "a tortious injury to property resulting from unprivileged, false, malicious publication of disparaging statements regarding the title to property owned by plaintiff, to plaintiff's [*29] damage." Southcott v. Pioneer Title Co., 203 Cal. App. 2d 673, 21 Cal. Rptr. 917, 919 (Cal. App. 1962) (citations omitted). "To establish slander of title at common law, a plaintiff must show falsity, malice, and special damages, i.e., that the defendant maliciously published false statements that disparaged a plaintiff's right in property, causing special damages." B & B Inv. Group v. Gitler, 229 Mich. App. 1, 581 N.W.2d 17, 20 (Mich. App. 1998); see also Manhattan Loft, LLC v. Mercury Liquors, Inc., 93 Cal. Rptr. 3d 457, 464, 173 Cal. App. 4th 1040 (Cal. App. 2009) (establishing elements as "(1) a publication, (2) which is without privilege or justification, (3) which is false, and (4) which causes direct and immediate pecuniary loss.").

Plaintiffs have once more run afoul of Twombly-Iqbal. There is no allegation as to why the assignment was false aside from conclusory allegations. Further the Court finds that Plaintiffs have insufficiently alleged that any false publication was done with malice. First, the Court notes again that, to the extent its malice claim is based on fraudulent conduct, Plaintiffs have failed to satisfy the heightened pleading standard of Rule 9. (See Compl. ¶ 261.) A claim based on fraudulent conduct must "be accompanied [*30] by the 'who, what, when, where, and how' of the misconduct charged." Kearns, 567 F.3d at 1124. Plaintiffs have made no such showing. In any event, having failed sufficiently to allege that the recording itself was false, it cannot be that Plaintiffs sufficiently alleged that BAC knew the assignment was false as suggested by the FAC.

The Court therefore DISMISSES Plaintiffs' Complaint with respect to Count VII.

VIII. Count VIII: Injunctive Relief

Count VIII of the Complaint asserts a claim for injunctive relief to prevent Defendants from foreclosing on the Subject Property. (Compl. ¶¶ 262-67.) Plaintiffs' request for injunctive relief appears to be a request for relief derivative of their other claims and not a standalone claim. Because the Court finds that all of Plaintiffs' claims should be dismissed, and because Plaintiffs fail to allege any facts showing that they are entitled to this equitable remedy, the Court finds that Plaintiffs' claim for injunctive relief should be dismissed as well.

Accordingly, the Court DISMISSES Count VIII of the Complaint.

IX. Cervantes v. Countrywide Home Loans, Inc.

In addition to failing to allege sufficiently the causes of actions as outlined supra, the [*31] Court has grave doubts about the validity of the factual predicate underlying most, if not all, of Plaintiffs' claims in light of Cervantes. There, plaintiffs argued that they could amend their complaint to illustrate that certain "aspects of the MERS system are fraudulent." *2011 U.S. App. LEXIS 18569, 2011 WL 3911031 at 1. The Ninth Circuit disagreed.

The Ninth Circuit first outlined how the MERS system functions. (*2011 U.S. App. LEXIS 18569, [WL] at 1-2.) The court next described plaintiffs' theory of the case as follows:

> One of the main premises of the plaintiffs' lawsuit here is that the MERS system impermissibly "splits" the note and deed by facilitating the transfer of the beneficial interest in the loan among lenders while maintaining MERS as the nominal holder of the deed.
> The plaintiffs' lawsuit is also premised on the fact that MERS does not have a financial interest in the loans, which, according to plaintiffs, renders MERS's status as a beneficiary a sham. MERS is not involved in originating the loan, does not have any right to payments on the loan, and does not service the loan. MERS relies on its members to have someone on their own staff become a MERS officer with the authority to sign documents on behalf of MERS . . . As a [*32] result, most of the actions taken in MERS's own name are carried out by staff at the companies that sell and buy the beneficial interest in the loans.

*2011 U.S. App. LEXIS 18569, [WL] at 2. Ultimately the Ninth Circuit rejected plaintiffs' arguments. The court first found that plaintiffs had "not identified any representations made to them about the MERS system and its role in their home loans that were false and material." *2011 U.S. App. LEXIS 18569, [WL] at 4. Nor did the plaintiffs allege with specificity that they "were misinformed about MERS's role as a beneficiary, or the possibility that their loans would be resold and tracked through the MERS system." Id. The plaintiffs also "failed to show that the designation of MERS as a beneficiary caused them any injury by, for example, affecting the terms of their loans, their ability to repay the loans, or their obligations as borrowers." Id.

Moreover, the Ninth Circuit also found that plaintiffs' claims were > undercut by the terms in [the] standard deed of trust, which describe MERS's role in the homeloan. For example the plaintiffs allege they were defrauded because MERS is a "sham" beneficiary without a financial interest in the loan, yet the disclosures in the deed indicate that MERS is acting [*33] "solely as nominee for Lender and Lender's successors and assigns" and holds "only legal title to the interest granted by Borrower in this Security Instrument." Further, while the plaintiffs indicate that MERS was used to hide who owned the loan, the deed states that the loan or a partial interest in it "can be sold one or more times without prior notice to Borrower," but that "[i]f there is a change in Loan Servicer, Borrower will be given written notice of the change" as required by consumer protection laws. Finally, the deed indicates that MERS has "the right to foreclose and sell the property." By signing the deeds of trust, the plaintiffs agreed to the terms and were on notice of the contents. . . . In light of the explicit terms of the standard deed signed by [plaintiffs] it does not appear that the plaintiffs were misinformed about MERS's role in their home loans.

*2011 U.S. App. LEXIS 18569, [WL] at 5.

The Ninth Circuit in Cervantes also considered and rejected the "splitting of the note" theory of liability:

> Even if we were to accept the plaintiffs' premises that MERS is a sham beneficiary and the note is split from the deed, we would reject the plaintiffs' conclusion that, as a necessary consequence, no [*34] party has the power to foreclose. The legality of MERS's role as a beneficiary may be at issue where MERS initiates a foreclosure in its own name, or where the plaintiffs allege a violation of state recording and foreclosure statutes based on the designation. . . .
> Further, the notes and deeds are not irreparably split: the split only renders the mortgage unenforceable if MERS or the trustee, as nominal holders of the deeds are not agents of the lenders.

*2011 U.S. App. LEXIS 18569, [WL] at 7.

The mortgage at issue in the instant case contains identical language to the mortgage at issue in Cervantes. Specifically, the mortgage put Plaintiffs on notice that MERS had "the right to foreclose and sell the Property." (Mortgage at 3.) The mortgage also provided that MERS was acting "solely as nominee for Lender and Lender's successors and assigns" (id. at 2) and holds "only legal title to the interest granted by Borrower in this Security Instrument" (id. at 3). Accordingly, per the mortgage, MERS was granted the right to foreclose on the property on behalf of the lenders in the event of Plaintiffs' default. Plaintiffs were aware of MERS's role as they signed the mortgage. See *Cervantes, 2011 U.S. App. LEXIS 18569, 2011 WL 3911031 at 5. Therefore, [*35] it seems that Plaintiffs' theories of liability are not tenable in light of Cervantes.

X. Dismissal without Prejudice

Pursuant to Rule 15(a)(2), courts should "freely give leave [to amend] when justice so requires." Further, "requests for leave should be granted with extreme liberality." Moss v. U.S. Secret Service, 572 F.3d 962, 972 (9th Cir. 2009). "Dismissal without leave to amend is improper unless it is clear . . . that the complaint could not be saved by an amendment." Id. "However, 'liberality in granting leave to amend is subject to several limitations.'" Cafasso, U.S. ex rel. v. Gen. Dynamics C4 Sys., 637 F.3d 1047, 1058 (9th Cir. 2011) (quoting Ascon Props., Inc. v. Mobil Oil Co., 866 F.2d 1149, 1160 (9th Cir. 1989)). "Those limitations include undue prejudice to the opposing party, bad faith by the movant, futility, and undue delay." Id. (citing Ascon Props, 866 F.2d at 1160). "Further, '[t]he district court's discretion to deny leave to amend is particularly broad where plaintiff has previously amended the complaint.'" Id. (quoting Ascon Props, 866 F.2d at 1160).

The Court recognizes that it may be possible for Plaintiffs to state a claim if provided the opportunity to amend [*36] their Complaint. The Complaint is therefore DISMISSED WITHOUT PREJUDICE as against all Defendants in this action with leave to amend no later than thirty (30) days from the filing of this Order. [4] Failure to do so and to cure the pleading deficiencies will result in dismissal of this action with prejudice. Plaintiffs are advised that the amended complaint must clearly state how each of the named defendants have injured them, and it must also clearly identify the statutory provisions under which Plaintiffs' claims are brought consistent with this Order. In granting leave to amend the Court does not here limit Plaintiffs' amended pleading only to the causes of action presently contained in the Complaint—Plaintiffs may allege new theories of liability if they so choose.

CONCLUSION

For these reasons the Court DISMISSES WITHOUT PREJUDICE Plaintiffs' Complaint against all Defendants, DENIES AS MOOT Defendants' Motion for Summary Judgment (Doc. # 9), and VACATES the Hearing on this matter set for October 14, 2011.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Complaints > Requirements for Complaint

HN1[] Complaints, Requirements for Complaint

Fed. R. Civ. P. 8(a)(2) requires that a complaint provide a short and plain statement of the claim showing that the pleader is entitled to relief, in order to give the defendant fair notice of what the claim is and the grounds upon which it rests.

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Complaints > Requirements for Complaint

HN2[] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

Although a complaint need not include detailed factual allegations, it must contain sufficient factual allegations, which, when taken as true, state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face. A claim has facial plausibility when the plaintiff pleads factual content that allows the court to draw the reasonable inference that the defendant is liable for the misconduct alleged. The plausibility standard is not akin to a probability requirement, but it asks for more than a sheer possibility that a defendant has acted unlawfully. Where the well-pleaded facts do not permit the court to infer more than the mere possibility of misconduct, the complaint has alleged -- but it has not "shown" -- that the pleader is entitled to relief. A well-pleaded complaint, however, may survive a motion to dismiss even if it appears that recovery is very remote and unlikely.

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

HN3[] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

While the court must accept all factual allegations as true in evaluating a motion to dismiss under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6), the tenet does not apply to legal conclusions. Similarly, a court may dismiss a complaint on a dispositive issue of law.

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

Civil Procedure > ... > Affirmative Defenses > Statute of Limitations > General Overview

HN4[] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

A statute of limitations bar is an affirmative defense, and plaintiffs are not required to negate an affirmative defense in their complaint. Thus, a motion to dismiss based on the statute of limitations is appropriate only if it is apparent from the face of the complaint that the claim is time-barred.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Defenses

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > Extensions & Revivals

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Elements

HN5[] Sherman Act, Defenses

An action for damages under federal antitrust law must be commenced within four years of accrual. 15 U.S.C.S. § 15b. An antitrust cause of action accrues, and the limitations period begins to run, when a defendant commits an act that causes injury to the plaintiff. In the context of a continuing conspiracy to violate the antitrust laws, each time a plaintiff is injured by an act of the defendants a cause of action accrues to him to recover the damages caused by that act and as to those damages, the statute of limitations runs from the date of commission of the act.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > Requirements

HN6[] Standing, Requirements

An antitrust claimant must do more than make allegations of consequential harm resulting from a violation of the antitrust laws, and that is true even when the complaint is buttressed by an allegation of intent to harm the claimant. Antitrust standing ensures that a plaintiff can recover only if the loss stems from a competition-reducing aspect or effect of the defendant's behavior.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > Requirements

HN7[] Standing, Requirements

Several factors are relevant to whether a plaintiff has standing to bring a federal antitrust claim including: (1) the nature of the plaintiffs alleged injury, that is, whether it was the type the antitrust laws were intended to forestall; (2) the directness of the injury; (3) the speculative measure of the harm; (4) the risk of duplicative recovery; and (5) the complexity in apportioning damages.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > Requirements

HN8[] Standing, Requirements

An antitrust claimant must show more than merely an injury causally linked to a competitive practice; it must prove antitrust injury, which is to say injury of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent and that flows from that which makes the defendants' acts unlawful. At a minimum, this requirement means that one competitor may not use the antitrust laws to sue a rival merely for vigorous or intensified competition.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Consumer Protection > Deceptive & Unfair Trade Practices > State Regulation

HN9[] Deceptive & Unfair Trade Practices, State Regulation

New Jersey courts have refused to extend the Consumer Fraud Act to indirect purchasers' claims based on antitrust violations.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Consumer Protection > Deceptive & Unfair Trade Practices > State Regulation

HN10[] Deceptive & Unfair Trade Practices, State Regulation

A deceptive act or practice is, in essence, a material representation, practice or omission likely to mislead reasonable consumers to their detriment. The Tennessee Consumer Protection Act does not apply to anticompetitive conduct.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Consumer Protection > Deceptive & Unfair Trade Practices > State Regulation

HN11[] Deceptive & Unfair Trade Practices, State Regulation

The Arkansas Deceptive Trade Practices Act makes illegal any trade practice which is unconscionable, with includes conduct violative of public policy or statute.

Torts > ... > Business Relationships > Intentional Interference > Elements

HN12[] Intentional Interference, Elements

To establish a claim for tortious interference with a prospective business relationship, a plaintiff must prove the defendant intentionally committed a wrongful act which improperly interfered with the prospective relationship. A plaintiff may properly bring a cause of action alleging tortious interference with present or prospective customers, but no cause of action exists for tortious interference with a business's relationship to the community at large. While a plaintiff need not identify by name a specific existing or prospective customer, the plaintiff must allege interference with a specific existing or prospective relationship.

Torts > ... > Business Relationships > Intentional Interference > Elements

HN13[] Intentional Interference, Elements

An action for tortious interference under Florida law requires a business relationship evidenced by an actual and identifiable understanding or agreement which in all probability would have been completed if the defendant had not interfered.

Torts > ... > Business Relationships > Intentional Interference > Elements

HN14[] Intentional Interference, Elements

The mere general loss of possible unspecified customers does not establish the tort of intentional interference with prospective economic relations under Minnesota law.

Opinion

ORDER

BEFORE THE COURT is Defendant Transitions Optical, Inc.'s Motion to Dismiss the Complaint of Insight Equity A.P. X, LP, d/b/a Vision-Ease Lens Worldwide, Inc. (Dkt. 73). For the reasons discussed below, the motion will be GRANTED in part and DENIED in part. Insight Equity A.P. X, LP, d/b/a Vision-Ease Lens Worldwide, Inc. ("Vision-Ease") will be granted leave to file an amended complaint within twenty (20) days from the date of this Order.

Applicable Standard

HN1[] Rule 8(a)(2) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure requires that a complaint provide "a short and plain statement of the claim showing that the pleader is entitled to relief," in order to "give the defendant fair notice of what the ... claim is and the grounds upon which it rests." Bell Atl. Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 555, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007) (quoting Conley v. Gibson, 355 U.S. 41, 47, 78 S. Ct. 99, 2 L. Ed. 2d 80 (1957)).

HN2[] Although a complaint need not include detailed factual [*12] allegations, it must contain sufficient factual allegations, which, when taken as true, "state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face." Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556U.S.662 , 129 S. Ct. 1937, 1949, 173 L. Ed. 2d 868 (2009). "A claim has facial plausibility when the plaintiff pleads factual content that allows the court to draw the reasonable inference that the defendant is liable for the misconduct alleged." Id. "The plausibility standard is not akin to a 'probability requirement,' but it asks for more than a sheer possibility that a defendant has acted unlawfully." Id. "[W]here the well-pleaded facts do not permit the court to infer more than the mere possibility of misconduct, the complaint as alleged-but it has not 'show[n] '-'that the pleader is entitled to relief.'" Id. at 1950 (quoting Fed. R. Civ. P. 8(a)(2)). A well-pleaded complaint, however, may survive a motion to dismiss even if it appears "that recovery is very remote and unlikely." Bell Atlantic Corp., 550 U.S. at 555 (quoting Scheuer v. Rhodes, 416 U.S. 232, 236, 94 S. Ct. 1683, 40 L. Ed. 2d 90 (1974)).

HN3[] While the Court must accept all factual allegations as true in evaluating a motion to dismiss under Rule 12(b)(6), the tenet does not apply to legal conclusions. Ashcroft, 129 S. Ct. at 1949 (2009). [*13] Similarly, a court may dismiss a complaint on a dispositive issue of law. Marshall County Bd. of Educ, v. Marshall County Gas Dist., 992 F.2d 1171, 1174 (11th Cir. 1993).

Discussion

The Complaint asserts claims against Transitions Optical, Inc. ("Transitions") for (1) monopolization under 15 U.S.C. § 2 [1] (Count I), (2) unlawful agreements in restraint of trade under 15 U.S.C. § 1 [2] (Count II), (3) exclusive dealing under 15 U.S.C. § 14 [3] (Count III), (4) violations of various state laws prohibiting unfair or unconscionable practices (Count IV), and (5) tortious interference under Florida and/or Minnesota law (Count V).

Transitions moves to dismiss the Complaint arguing, inter alia, that (1) the federal antitrust claims and certain state law claims are barred by the applicable statutes of limitation, (2) Vision-Ease lacks antitrust standing to pursue its federal antitrust claims, (3) Vision-Ease has failed to allege plausible antitrust claims based on tying or bundling discounts, and (4) certain of Vision-Ease's state law claims fail to state claims upon which relief may be granted.

Statute of Limitations [*14] (Counts I, II, III and IV)

Transitions argues that Vision-Ease's federal and state antitrust claims are barred by the applicable statutes of limitations. HN4[] "A statute of limitations bar is an affirmative defense, and plaintiffs are not required to negate an affirmative defense in their complaint." La Grasta v. First Union Securities, Inc., 358 F.3d 840, 845 (11th Cir. 2004) (internal citations and quotations omitted). Thus, a motion to dismiss based on the statute of limitations is appropriate only if it is "apparent from the face of the complaint" that the claim is time-barred. Omar v. Lindsey, 334 F.3d 1246, 1251 (11th Cir. 2003).

HN5[] An action for damages under federal antitrust law must be commenced within four years of accrual. 15 U.S.C. § 15b. An antitrust cause of action accrues, and the limitations period begins to run, when a defendant commits an act that causes injury to the plaintiff. See Zenith Radio Corp. v. Hazeltine Research, 401 U.S. 321, 338, 91 S. Ct. 795, 28 L. Ed. 2d 77 (1971). The Supreme Court has recognized that in the context of a continuing conspiracy to violate the antitrust laws, "each time a plaintiff is injured by an act of the defendants a cause of action accrues to him to recover the damages [*15] caused by that act and ... as to those damages, the statute of limitations runs from the date of commission of the act." Zenith, 401 U.S. at 338-39; Poster Exchange, Inc. v. National Screen Service Corp. 517 F.2d 117, 128 (5th Cir. 1975)(continuing antitrust conduct resulting in a continued invasion of a plaintiffs rights may give rise to continually accruing rights of action).

The Complaint alleges that Transitions engaged in a pattern of anticompetitive activity beginning in 1999 and continuing through at least 2010 when Transitions entered into a consent degree with the Federal Trade Commission. See Complaint, ¶¶ 24, 46; see also Complaint, ¶¶ 33 ("[i]n 2005 ... Transitions began an exclusionary agreement campaign to lock up the other key distribution channels for photochromic lenses"), 34 ("[a]fter terminating Vision-Ease... Transitions entered into exclusive contracts with over 50 retailers"), 51 ("Transitions ... maintains this monopoly power through its anticompetitive conduct"). That Transitions may have adopted an anticompetitive policy as early as 1999, does not preclude proof that Transitions engaged in anticompetitive conduct (e.g., new exclusive dealing agreements, tying [*16] arrangements, or bundled discounts) between 2006 and 2010. [4] As a result, and notwithstanding the absence of express allegations of similar conduct on the part of

[1] Section 2 of the Sherman Act.

[2] Section 1 of the Sherman Act.

[3] Section 3 of the Clayton Act.

[4] To the extent Vision-Ease's antitrust claim in Count I can be read to rely solely on Transitions' termination of its contract with Vision-Ease and its refusal to deal with Vision-Ease after June 2005, see, e.g., Complaint, ¶ 44 ("Vision-Ease lost all of the customers it had earned as of June 2005"), that claim, and any alleged damages flowing from theat conduct, is likely barred by the applicable federal and state statutes of limitations. See Klehr v. A.O. Smith Corp., 521 U.S. 179, 190, 117 S. Ct. 1984, 138 L.

Transitions within the limitation period, the expiration of the statute of limitations is not apparent on the face of the complaint. See Omar, 334 F.3d at 1252 (affirming district court's denial of motion to dismiss based on statute of limitations when resolution of the issue "would depend either on facts not yet in evidence or on construing factual ambiguities in the complaint in Defendants' favor"). [5]

Standing

Transitions argues that the Complaint lacks allegations sufficient to establish that Vision-Ease has standing to sue under federal antitrust law. HN6[] An antitrust claimant must do more than make "allegations of consequential harm resulting from a violation of the antitrust laws," and that is true even when the complaint is "buttressed by an allegation of intent to harm the [claimant]." Associated General Contractors of California, Inc. v. California State Council of Carpenters, 459 U.S. 519, 545, 103 S. Ct. 897, 74 L. Ed. 2d 723 (1983). [6] Antitrust standing "ensures that a plaintiff can recover only if the loss stems from a competition-reducing aspect or effect of the defendant's behavior." Atlanta Richfield Co. v. USA Petroleum Co., 495 U.S. 328, 344, 110 S. Ct. 1884, 109 L. Ed. 2d 333 (1990).

HN8[] An antitrust claimant must show more than merely an "injury causally linked" to a competitive practice; it "must prove antitrust injury, which is to say injury of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent and that flows from that which makes the defendants' acts unlawful." Brunswick Corp. v. Pueblo Bowl-O-Mat, Inc., 429 U.S. 477, 489, 97 S. Ct. 690, 50 L. Ed. 2d 701 (1977). "At a minimum, this requirement means that one competitor may not use the antitrust laws to sue a rival merely for vigorous or intensified competition." NicSand, Inc. v. 3M Company, 507 F.3d 442, 450 (6th Cir. 2007).

The [*20] Complaint alleges that Transitions engaged in anticompetitive conduct that "hindered or prevent[ed]" Vision-Ease from competing in the photochromic lens market. See, e.g., Complaint, ¶ 3; see also Complaint, ¶ 31, 34-39,45. In addition, the Complaint alleges that Transitions' conduct harmed consumers. See, e.g., Complaint, ¶¶ 3, 41-42. These allegations, together with supporting factual allegations elsewhere in the Complaint, are sufficient

Ed. 2d 373 (1997) (holding that a plaintiff cannot "use an independent, new predicate act as a bootstrap to recover for injuries caused by other earlier [*17] predicate acts that took place outside the limitations period"); Zenith, 401 U.S. at 340 ("We must now determine whether Zenith could have recovered [future] damages if it had brought suit for them in 1954, for if it could not, it would follow ... that it must be permitted to recover them now."); see also Imperial Point Colonnades Condominium, Inc., 549 F.2d 1029, 1035 (5th Cir. 1977) ("where a defendant commits an act injurious to plaintiff outside the limitations period, and damages continue to result from that act within the limitations period, no new cause of action accrues for damages occurring within the limitations period because no act committed by the defendant within that period caused harm"); Poster Exchange, Inc. v. National Screen Service Corp. 517 F.2d at 128 ("It remains clear nonetheless that a newly accruing claim for damages must be based on some injurious act actually occurring during the limitations period, not merely the abatable but unabated inertial consequences of some pre-limitations action.").

This issue, however, is not appropriate for resolution on a motion to dismiss. See Rite Aid Corp. v. American Express Travel Related Services Co., Inc., 708 F.Supp.2d 257, 266-67 (E.D.N.Y. 2010) [*18] (refusing to dismiss claims for damages flowing from anticompetitive agreements entered into outside limitations period, but only as to damages plaintiff suffered within the limitations period); see also Morton's Market, Inc. v. Gustafson's Dairy, Inc., 198 F. 3d 823, 828 (11th Cir. 1999) ("commencement of the statute of limitations is a question of fact");

[5] For the same reason, Transitions' motion to dismiss certain state law claims in Count IV based on state statutes of limitations also fails.

[6] In [*19] Associated General Contractors of California, Inc. v. California State Council of Carpenters, 459 U.S. 519, 103 S. Ct. 897, 74 L. Ed. 2d 723 (1983), the Supreme Court identified HN7[] several factors relevant to whether a plaintiff has standing to bring a federal antitrust claim including: (1) the nature of the plaintiffs alleged injury; that is, whether it was the type the antitrust laws were intended to forestall, (2) the directness of the injury, (3) the speculative measure of the harm, (4) the risk of duplicative recovery, and (5) the complexity in apportioning damages. Transitions focuses its argument in the motion to dismiss on the nature of the alleged injury suffered by Vision-Ease.

to establish an antitrust injury and that Vision-Ease is an efficient enforcer. See Palmyra Park Hosp. v. Phoebe Putney Memorial Hosp., 604 F.3d 1291, 1303 (11th Cir. 2010) (allegations that exclusivity arrangements forced insurers to deal with single competitor when they would otherwise prefer to deal with two or more competitors established antitrust injury); see also NicSand, Inc., 507 F.3d at 454 (recognizing that the law is clear that "exclusive agreements" that "create impermissible barriers for new entrants to market ... and permit a supplier to charge monopoly prices" may violate federal antitrust law) (citing Tampa Elec. Co. v. Nashville Coal Co., 365 U.S. 320, 327, 81 S. Ct. 623, 5 L. Ed. 2d 580 (1961)). [7]

Allegations Relating to Tying Arrangements and Bundled Discounts

Transitions argues that to the extent the Complaint purports to assert claims based on alleged tying agreements and bundled discounts, the Complaint lacks factual allegations to support those claims. [8] The Court agrees that the allegations in the Complaint do not state an independent claim for "tying" under federal antitrust law, and does not contain sufficient factual allegations supporting an independent claim based on bundled discounts. See Palmyra Park Hosp. Inc. v. Phoebe Putney Memorial Hosp., 604 F.3d 1291, 1296 n.4 (11th Cir. 2010). [9] Nonetheless, the related allegations are relevant to Vision-Ease's overarching antitrust claims. [10] When these allegations, together [*22] with the other allegations in the Complaint, are taken as true with reasonable inferences drawn in favor of Vision-Ease, the Complaint states antitrust claims that are plausible on their face as required to survive a motion to dismiss under Rule 12(b)(6). See *Blue Sky the Color of Imagination, LLC v. MeadWestvaco Corp., No. CV 10-02175 DDP, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 118946, 2010 WL 4366849, at 4 (C.D. Cal. Sept. 23, 2010) (refusing to apply Cascade Health in considering Rule 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss). [11]

Failure to State a Claim Under State Statutes (Count IV)

[7] Transitions' reliance on NicSand, Inc. and similar case law is [*21] misplaced given the allegations in the Complaint. For example, the Complaint does not indicate that the wholesalers or retailers of photochromic lenses mandated price discounts and exclusivity nor does this case involve a competitor seeking to recoup lost market share in a market it used to dominate. Id. at 454 ("NicSand has not sued 3M because it wants to share shelf space with its competitor; it sued 3M because it wants that shelf space all to itself...").

[8] The Complaint alleges the existence of exclusionary agreements, tying arrangements, and bundled discounts. See Complaint, ¶¶ 4, 36-37.

[9] Vision-Ease did not respond to Transitions' argument that a tying claim requires products from two different markets. In addition, contrary to Vision-Ease's representation in its opposition memorandum, the Complaint does not include an allegation that Transitions agreed to stop requiring customers to accept exclusive agreements conditioned on them purchasing the entire line of photochromic products.

[10] For example, these allegations may be relevant to Vision-Ease's monopolization claim under § 2 of the Sherman Act (Count I). See, e.g., LePage's Inc. v. 3M, 324 F.3d 141, 157 (3d Cir. 2003) [*23] (en banc) (holding that bundled rebates and exclusivity arrangements that may not, standing alone, give rise to claims under § 1 of the Sherman Act and § 3 of the Clayton Act, but may nonetheless be relevant to claims under § 2 of the Sherman Act); see also United States v. Dentsply Int'l, Inc., 399 F.3d 181, 197 (3d Cir. 2005) (holding that finding of no liability under stricter standards of § 3 of the Clayton Act did not preclude application of evidence of exclusive dealing to support claim under § 2 of the Sherman Act).

[11] Because the Complaint contains sufficient factual allegations to state antitrust claims regardless of the alleged "bundled discounts," the Court need not address under what circumstances a bundled discount or rebate standing alone would constitute an antitrust violation. Compare LePage's Inc. v. 3M, 324 F.3d 141, 157 (3d Cir. 2003) (en banc) (manufacturer's exclusionary conduct by bundling rebates could violate the Sherman Act's monopolization provisions) with Cascade Health Solutions v. PeaceHealth, 515 F.3d 883, 903 (9th Cir. 2008) (exclusionary conduct element of monopolization or attempted monopolization claim arising under the Sherman Act could not be satisfied [*24] by reference to bundled discounts unless they resulted in prices that were below appropriate measure of defendant's costs).

Transitions argues that the Complaint fails to state a claim under the unfair competition statutes of Arkansas, Maryland, New Jersey, Tennessee, and Utah. The Complaint alleges that "Transitions has engaged in unfair and unconscionable conduct by limiting and excluding competition in the photocrhomic ophthalmic lens market." Complaint, ¶ 65. The motion to dismiss will be granted as to Vision-Ease's claims under Maryland, [12] New Jersey, [13] Tennessee, [14] and Utah law, [15] but denied as to Vision-Ease's claim under Arkansas law. [16]

Tortious Interference (Count V)

Transitions argues that Vision-Ease has failed to state a claim for tortious interference under either Florida or Minnesota law, HN12[] To establish a claim for tortious interference with a prospective business relationship, a plaintiff must prove the defendant intentionally committed a wrongful act which improperly interfered with the prospective relationship. See Tamiami Trail Tours, Inc. v. Cotton, 463 So.2d 1126, 1127 (Fla. 1985); United Wild Rice, Inc. v. Nelson, 313 N.W.2d 628, 633 (Minn. 1982). "[A] plaintiff may properly bring a cause of action alleging tortious interference with present or prospective customers[, but] no cause of action exists for tortious interference with a business's relationship to the community at large." Southern Alliance Corp. v. Winter Haven, 505 So.2d 489, 496 (Fla. 2d DCA 1987). HN1[] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

A motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6) tests the legal sufficiency of a complaint. To withstand a motion to dismiss, a plaintiff must plead enough facts to state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face. On a motion to dismiss in an antitrust case, a court must determine whether an antitrust claim is "plausible" in light of basic economic principles. All allegations of material fact are taken as true and interpreted in a manner most favorable to the non-moving party. However, the court is not required to accept as true allegations that are merely conclusory, unwarranted deductions of fact, or unreasonable inferences. Leave to amend should be granted unless it is clear that the complaint's deficiencies cannot be cured by amendment. If amendment would be futile, a dismissal may be ordered with prejudice.

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Heightened Pleading Requirements > Fraud Claims

HN2[] Heightened Pleading Requirements, Fraud Claims

A complaint must state with particularity the circumstances constituting fraud. Fed. R. Civ. P. 9(b). Allegations of fraud must be stated with specificity including an account of the time, place, and specific content of the false representations as well as the identities of the parties to the misrepresentations. To survive a motion to dismiss, allegations of fraud must be specific enough to give defendants notice of the particular misconduct which is alleged to constitute the fraud charged so that they can defend against the charge and not just deny that they have done anything wrong.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > General Overview

HN3[] Sherman Act, Scope

In order to state a claim under the Sherman Act, the plaintiff must allege that: (1) the defendant possessed monopoly power in the relevant market, and (2) that the defendant achieved or is maintaining monopoly power through anticompetitive conduct.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Intellectual Property > General Overview

Patent Law > Infringement Actions > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > Monopolization Offenses

HN4[] Regulated Practices, Intellectual Property

Courts have recognized that fraudulent declarations of fair, reasonable, and non-discriminatory terms (FRAND) that are used to induce standard setting organizations (SSOs) to adopt standards essential patents can be monopoly conduct for the purposes of establishing a claim under § 2 of the Sherman Act. The U.S. Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit recognized that an SSO can be used to obtain monopoly power and create anticompetitive effects on the relevant markets when (1) in a consensus-oriented private standard-setting environment, (2) a patent holder's intentionally false promise to license essential proprietary technology on FRAND terms, (3) coupled with an standard setting organization's reliance on that promise when including the technology in a standard, and (4) the patent holder's subsequent breach of that promise, is actionable anticompetitive conduct. Thus, intentionally false promises to SSOs regarding licenses with FRAND terms can give rise to actionable claims under § 2 of the Sherman Act.

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Heightened Pleading Requirements > Fraud Claims

HN5[] Heightened Pleading Requirements, Fraud Claims

Where a plaintiff's allegations regarding the defendant's conduct sound in fraud, it is required to plead, with particularity, the circumstances constituting fraud or mistake. Fed. R. Civ. P. 9(b). Plaintiffs must plead facts specific enough to give defendants notice of the particular misconduct which is alleged to constitute the fraud so that they can defend against the charge.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Intellectual Property > General Overview

Patent Law > Infringement Actions > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > General Overview

HN6[] Regulated Practices, Intellectual Property

Courts have been more reluctant to find antitrust violations based on the theory that a failure to disclose intellectual property rights in a declared essential patent created monopoly power for a member of the standard setting organization (SSO). In order to establish anticompetitive conduct, the plaintiff must show that the patent holder's failure to disclose its intellectual property rights induced the SSO to set the standard incorporating the essential patent. In other words, the plaintiff must allege that there was an alternative technology that the SSO was considering during the standard setting process and that the SSO would have adopted an alternative standard had it known of the patent holder's intellectual property rights.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

HN7[] Sherman Act, Claims

In order for the plaintiff to properly plead that it has suffered an antitrust injury, it must allege injury to competition.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Intellectual Property > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN8[] Regulated Practices, Intellectual Property

Standards implemented by standard setting organizations, without the proper safeguards, are inherently anticompetitive. It follows that when an entity side-steps these safeguards in an effort to return the standard to its natural anti-competitive state, anti-competitive effects are inevitable.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > General Overview

HN9[] Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

Section 1 of the Sherman Act provides that every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, is declared to be illegal. 15 U.S.C.S. § 1. The U.S. Supreme Court has explained that the plaintiff in a § 1 action must show a unity of common purpose or a common design and understanding, or a meeting of minds in an unlawful arrangement. In other words: The correct standard is that there must be evidence that tends to exclude the possibility of independent action by the parties. That is, there must be direct or circumstantial evidence that reasonably tends to prove that the parties had a conscious commitment to a common scheme designed to achieve an unlawful objective. Unilateral activity by a defendant, no matter the motivation, cannot give rise to a § 1 violation.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > General Overview

HN10[] Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

A plaintiff cannot state a claim under § 1 of the Sherman Act absent an allegation that it acted in concert with another party; it is not sufficient to allege that it acted alone in a collaborative forum.

Torts > Business Torts > Unfair Business Practices > General Overview

HN11[] Business Torts, Unfair Business Practices

The California Supreme Court has explained that in order to establish a claim of unfair harm to competition, a plaintiff must show that the alleged conduct is tethered to some legislatively declared policy or proof of some actual or threatened impact on competition. The California Supreme Court went on to elaborate that when a plaintiff who claims to have suffered injury from a direct competitor's "unfair" act or practice invokes Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17200, the word "unfair" in that section means conduct that threatens an incipient violation of an antitrust law, or violates the policy or spirit of one of those laws because its effects are comparable to or the same as a violation of the law, or otherwise significantly threatens or harms competition.

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Strike > General Overview

HN12[] Defenses, Demurrers & Objections, Motions to Strike

The court may strike from a pleading an insufficient defense or any redundant, immaterial, impertinent, or scandalous matter. Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(f). On a motion to strike, the court must view the pleading under attack in the light most favorable to the pleader. Motions to strike are generally regarded with disfavor because of the limited importance of pleading in federal practice, and because they are often used as a delaying tactic.

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Strike > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Counterclaims > General Overview

HN13[] Defenses, Demurrers & Objections, Motions to Strike

Numerous courts have used that discretion to dismiss counterclaims under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(f) where they are either the "mirror image" of claims in the complaint or redundant of affirmative defenses. The court should focus on whether the counterclaims serve any useful purpose, and should dismiss or strike a redundant counterclaim only when it is clear that there is a complete identity of factual and legal issues between the complaint and the counterclaim. Ultimately, whether to grant a motion to strike lies within the sound discretion of the district court.

[1127] ORDER GRANTING IN PART, AND DENYING IN PART, MOTION TO DISMISS AND STRIKE

Before the Court is Defendants Samsung Electronics Co., Ltd., Samsung Electronics America, Inc., and Samsung Telecommunications America, LLC's (collectively "Samsung") Motion to Dismiss and Strike Plaintiff Apple, Inc.'s ("Apple") Counterclaims in Reply. See ECF No. 153. This case arises out of [*4] a dispute between Apple and Samsung regarding several utility and design patents related to both parties' mobile device technologies. Apple, in its complaint, alleges that Samsung's Galaxy cell phones and computer tablets infringe Apple's trade dress, trademarks, and utility and design patents. Complaint, April 15, 2011, ECF No. 1. Samsung brought counterclaims against Apple in response, alleging that Apple products infringe upon 12 of Samsung's own patents, including, among others, patents related to the Universal Mobile Telecommunications Standard ("UMTS"). See Answer and Counterclaims, ECF No. 80. In response to these counterclaims, Apple [1128] filed its Answer, Defenses and Counterclaims in Reply to Samsung's Counterclaims ("Counterclaims in Reply") on July 21, 2011. See ECF No. 124. In its Counterclaims in Reply, Apple alleges that Samsung has violated both federal and state antitrust laws, as well as the California Unfair Competition Law, by defrauding the standards setting organization that set the UMTS standards, inducing the organization to adopt Samsung's declared-essential patents, and later refusing to license its declared-essential patents on fair, reasonable, and non-discriminatory [*5] terms ("FRAND" terms).

Samsung seeks to dismiss counts twenty-seven (violation of Section 2 of the Sherman Antitrust Act), twenty-eight (violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Antitrust Act and California Business and Professions Code §§ 16720), and twenty-nine (California Unfair Competition Law). [1] Samsung seeks to strike counts thirty (Declaratory Judgment that Apple is Licensed to Samsung's Declared-Essential Patents), thirty-one (Declaratory Judgment of No Entitlement to Injunctive Relief), and thirty-two (Declaratory Judgment of Unenforceability). Counterclaims in Reply at ¶¶176-206. Pursuant to Local Civil Rule 7-1(b), the Court concludes that this motion is appropriate for determination without oral argument and vacates the October 20, 2011 motion hearing. [2] For the foregoing reasons, Samsung's Motion to Dismiss and Strike is GRANTED in part, and DENIED in part.

I. RELEVANT FACTS

Unless otherwise noted, the following allegations are taken from Apple's Counterclaims in Reply and are presumed to be true for purposes of ruling upon Samsung's motions to dismiss and strike. Standards setting organizations ("SSOs") play an important role in the wireless communications industry. Mobile wireless carriers provide consumers with access to networks, which allows consumers to place and receive calls, access e-mail, and the internet. Counterclaims in Reply ¶ 19. The development of technical standards across the industry, including among cell phone carriers, device manufacturers, handset, and chipset manufacturers, facilitates compatibility across products and networks. Counterclaims in Reply ¶¶ 21-22. Technical standards may have pro-competitive benefits. Manufacturing volumes can increase because product lines can be sold to multiple purchasers, thus decreasing per unit costs. Counterclaims in Reply ¶ 22. Likewise, industry standards can create increased price competition among suppliers. Counterclaims in Reply ¶ 22.

Alternatively, the creation of [*7] technical industry standards presents the potential for anti-competitive effects. Establishing industry technical standards can create a "lock-in" effect and the risk of "patent hold-up." Counterclaims in Reply ¶ 23. This is because a patent owner can, when the SSO created standard includes patented technology, require other designers to use patented technology. In that situation, a patent owner can demand exorbitant licensing fees or other terms from designers. Counterclaims in Reply ¶ 24. In order to avoid the risks associated with the "lock-in" effect, standard setting organizations often employ policies designed to compel disclosure of an entity's intellectual property rights ("IPR") prior to adoption of a standard by the SSO. Alternatively, an SSO may require that an entity seeking to have its IPR incorporated into the industry standard commit to licensing its patents on fair, reasonable, and non-discriminatory terms ("FRAND") before the SSO agrees to incorporate the proposal. Counterclaims in Reply ¶ 27.

Apple and Samsung are both members of the European Telecommunications Standards Institute ("ETSI"), a standard setting organization involved in setting the standards for mobile [*8] wireless carrier technology, including the UMTS standard. Counterclaims in Reply ¶¶ 35. The UMTS standard was designed to support increased speeds and bandwidth capacity on mobile devices. Counterclaims in Reply ¶ 37. ETSI, and several other organizations, were involved in developing the UMTS standard. Counterclaims in Reply ¶ 38.

The SSOs responsible for developing the UMTS standard incorporated Samsung's patented technology into the standard. Under the terms of the ETSI policy, Samsung had a duty [1129] to disclose its intellectual property rights [3] in the technology that was essential, or might be essential, for the standards it was proposing. Counterclaims in Reply ¶ 48. Apple alleges that Samsung failed to disclose its IPR during the standards-setting process and that the SSOs relied upon Samsung's failure to disclose in adopting the Samsung-proposed standards.

[1] Samsung has not challenged counterclaims twenty-five (breach of contract), or twenty-six (promissory estoppel). These claims arise out of the same alleged conduct giving rise to the antitrust and UCL claims discussed herein.

[2] The Court postponed the hearing on this motion from September 22, 2011 to October 20, 2011 at the [*6] parties' request. The Court denies the parties' request of October 18, 2011, to postpone the hearing further.

[3] Intellectual Property Rights under ETSI's policies is defined as "any intellectual property right conferred by statute law including applications therefore other than trademarks." Counterclaims in Reply ¶ 48.

Apple also alleges that Samsung made a commitment to license its declared-essential patents on FRAND terms. Apple argues [*9] that these false FRAND declarations violated ETSI policy which requires an owner of an essential IPR to undertake a commitment to license on FRAND terms. If an IPR owner fails to make a FRAND commitment, ETSI "may suspend work on relevant parts of the standard or redesign the standard to render the IPR non-essential." Counterclaims in Reply ¶ 50. Apple alleges that by falsely agreeing to license its declared essential patents on FRAND terms, Samsung induced ETSI to adopt Samsung's patents into its proposed standard. Apple also alleges that Samsung has subsequently refused to license its declared essential patents on FRAND terms and has otherwise attempted to use its declared essential patents as leverage in litigation. Counterclaims in Reply ¶¶ 65-75.

Apple argues that by (1) failing to disclose its IPR in the declared-essential patents, as it was required to do under the policy terms of the SSO, and (2) making affirmative misstatements regarding its intent to license its declared essential patents on FRAND terms, Samsung obtained monopoly power which it has subsequently used to inhibit competition. Apple claims that, absent Samsung's fraudulent behavior, ETSI would not have adopted [*10] the standard proposed by Samsung.

II. LEGAL STANDARDS AND ANALYSIS

A. Motion to Dismiss

HN1[] A motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim under Rule 12(b)(6) tests the legal sufficiency of a complaint. To withstand a motion to dismiss, a plaintiff must "plead enough facts to state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face." Bell Atlantic v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 555, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007). "On a motion to dismiss in an antitrust case, a court must determine whether an antitrust claim is 'plausible' in light of basic economic principles." Coalition for ICANN Transparency, Inc. v. VeriSign, Inc., 611 F.3d 495, 501 (9th Cir. 2010) (citing Twombly, 550 U.S. at 556). All allegations of material fact are taken as true and interpreted in a manner most favorable to the non-moving party. Simon v. Hartford Life and Accident Ins. Co., 546 F.3d 661, 664 (9th Cir. 2008). However, the court is not required to accept as true "allegations that are merely conclusory, unwarranted deductions of fact, or unreasonable inferences." In re Gilead Scis. Sec. Litig., 536 F.3d 1049, 1055 (9th Cir. 2008). Leave to amend should be granted unless it is clear that the complaint's deficiencies cannot be cured by amendment. Lucas v. Dep't of Corr., 66 F.3d 245, 248 (9th Cir. 1995). [*11] If amendment would be futile, a dismissal may be ordered with prejudice. Dumas v. Kipp, 90 F.3d 386, 393 (9th Cir. 1996).

HN2[] A complaint must "state with particularity the circumstances constituting fraud." Fed. R. Civ. P. 9(b). Allegations of fraud must be stated with "specificity including an account of the 'time, place, and specific content of the false representations as well as the identities of the parties to the misrepresentations.'" Swartz v. KPMG LLP, 476 F.3d 756, 764 (9th Cir. 2007) (quoting Edwards v. Marin Park, Inc., 356 F.3d 1058, 1066 (9th Cir. 2004)). To survive a motion to dismiss, "'allegations of fraud must be specific enough to give defendants notice of the particular misconduct which is alleged to constitute the fraud charged so that they can defend against the charge and not just deny that they have done anything wrong.'" Id. (quoting Bly-Magee v. California, 236 F.3d 1014, 1019 (9th Cir. 2001)).

1. Section 2 of the Sherman Act

a. Monopoly Conduct

Apple first claims that Samsung's failure to disclose its IPR in the patents essential to the UMTS standard, and alternatively its affirmative misrepresentations regarding Samsung's intent to license its UMTS patents on FRAND [*12] terms, and subsequent failure to do so, violates Section 2 of the Sherman Act. Counterclaims in Reply ¶ 178. HN3[] In order to state a [1130] claim under the Sherman Act, Apple must allege that: (1) Samsung possessed monopoly power in the relevant market, and (2) that Samsung achieved or is maintaining monopoly power through anticompetitive conduct. Verizon Communications, Inc. v. Law Offices of Curtis V. Trinko, LLP., 540 U.S. 398, 407, 124 S. Ct. 872, 157 L. Ed. 2d 823 (2004). Samsung first argues that Apple has failed to state a claim under Section

2 of the Sherman Act because it has failed to adequately allege monopoly conduct. Apple's theory regarding false FRAND declarations will be discussed first, followed by Apple's theory regarding Samsung's IPR disclosure.

False FRAND Declaration Theory

HN4[] Courts have recognized that fraudulent FRAND declarations that are used to induce SSOs to adopt standards essential patents can be monopoly conduct for the purposes of establishing a Section 2 claim. For example, in Broadcom Corp. v. Qualcomm Inc., 501 F.3d 297 (3d Cir. 2007), Broadcom asserted that it had been the victim of "patent hold up" because the standards essential patent holder had allegedly promised the SSO to license its essential [*13] patents on FRAND terms. The SSO adopted the standards and thereby locked participants in to the standard, allowing the patent holder to extract supra-competitive royalties from the industry participants. Id. at 310-311. The Third Circuit recognized that an SSO can be used to obtain monopoly power and create anticompetitive effects on the relevant markets when "(1) in a consensus-oriented private standard-setting environment, (2) a patent holder's intentionally false promise to license essential proprietary technology on FRAND terms, (3) coupled with an [standard setting organization's] reliance on that promise when including the technology in a standard, and (4) the patent holder's subsequent breach of that promise, is actionable anticompetitive conduct." 501 F.3d at 314. Thus, intentionally false promises to SSOs regarding licenses with FRAND terms can give rise to actionable claims under Section 2 of the Sherman Act. See also Research in Motion Ltd. v. Motorola, Inc., 644 F. Supp. 2d 788, 796-97 (N.D. Tex. 2008) (denying motion to dismiss based on similar theories of liability regarding FRAND term misrepresentations).

Samsung first argues that Apple has failed to allege sufficient [*14] facts to establish that Samsung has engaged in monopolistic conduct. [4] HN5[] Because Apple's allegations regarding Samsung's conduct sound in fraud, it is required to plead, with particularity, "the circumstances constituting fraud or mistake." [5] Fed. R. Civ. Pro. 9(b). Plaintiffs must plead facts "specific enough to give defendants notice of the particular misconduct which is alleged to constitute the fraud . . . so that they can defend against the charge." Semegen v. Weidner, 780 F.2d 727, 731 (9th Cir. 1985).

Although there does not appear to be anything legally defective about Apple's theory of monopoly conduct arising from false FRAND licensing terms, the Court finds that Apple's allegations, as pled, have failed to meet the heightened pleading standard. Apple has identified two paragraphs in its Counterclaims in Reply that support its claim that false FRAND declarations were made. These allegations simply state that "Samsung has submitted declarations to ETSI committing to irrevocably license the Declared-Essential Patents on FRAND terms pursuant to Clause 6.1 of ETSI's IPR policy." Counterclaims in Reply ¶ 56. Apple has not set forth facts establishing when these declarations were made and by whom, and for which patents these FRAND declarations were [*16] made. [6] Apple

[4] Samsung also appears to argue briefly in passing that Apple has not sufficiently alleged that Samsung possesses monopoly power in the relevant market. It appears, however, that Apple has sufficiently alleged monopoly power. See Counterclaims in Reply ¶¶ 81-86.

[5] Although it is theoretically an open question as to whether Rule 9(b) pleading standards are applicable in this situation, it appears that Apple should plead with particularity the allegations regarding the false FRAND declarations. First, the theory upon which the claim is based, is one that sounds in fraud, and Rule 9(b) itself requires a heightened pleading standard in these situations. Second, other fraud claims in the patent [*15] context, such as claims for inequitable conduct, must also be pled with particularity. See, e.g. Cent. Admixture Pharmacy Servs., Inc. v. Advanced Cardiac Solutions, 482 F.3d 1347, 1356 (Fed. Cir. 2007); see also In re Netflix Litig., 506 F. Supp. 2d 308, 315 (N.D. Cal. 2007) (applying Rule 9(b) to a fraud-based claim in another antitrust context). Moreover, Apple does not appear to contest that 9(b) is the proper standard to apply here.

[6] The requirement that Apple plead with particularity which patents FRAND declarations were made and when is important here because Apple also alleges that Samsung has declared essential many patents that are not, in fact, essential to practicing the UMTS standard. Counterclaims in Reply ¶ 58. If, as Apple alleges, some Samsung patents are not essential to the standard, it will likely be difficult for Apple to establish that Samsung's conduct has antitrust implications. If the patents at issue are non-argues that [1131] these documents are in Samsung's control, and therefore it has met its burden. Apple's allegations that Samsung submitted false FRAND declarations, however, are not sufficient to put Samsung on notice of the particular misconduct that creates the basis of the alleged fraud. Semegen v. Weidner, 780 F.2d 727, 731 (9th Cir. 1985). Therefore, Apple's claim that Samsung misrepresented its intent to license its declared essential patents on FRAND terms is DISMISSED with leave to amend.

Failure to Disclose IPR Theory

HN6[] Courts have been more reluctant to find antitrust violations based on the theory that a failure to disclose intellectual property rights in a declared essential patent created monopoly power for a member of the SSO. In Rambus Inc. v. FTC, 522 F.3d 456, 380 U.S. App. D.C. 431 (D.C. Cir. 2008), the D.C. Circuit overturned an FTC decision that Rambus violated the antitrust laws in failing to disclose its intellectual property rights to the standard setting organization. The Commission failed to show that but for Rambus's failure to disclose its intellectual property rights, the SSO would not have adopted the standard at issue. Id. at 466. The court held that in order to establish anticompetitive conduct, the plaintiff must show that the patent holder's failure to disclose its intellectual property rights induced the SSO to set the standard incorporating the essential patent. Id. In other words, Apple must allege that there was an alternative technology that the SSO was considering during the standard setting process and that the SSO would have adopted an alternative standard had it known of the patent holder's intellectual property rights.

Similarly, [*18] in Townshend v. Rockwell Intl. Corp., 2000 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 5070 (N.D. Cal. 2000), the plaintiff also failed to allege that but for the failure to disclose, the SSO would have adopted an alternative standard that did not include the essential patent at issue. Neither Townshend, nor Rambus, 522 F.3d 456, 380 U.S. App. D.C. 431 (discussed above), preclude Apple's claim based on failure to establish anticompetitive conduct. Rambus identified a failure of proof, not a failure of pleading, for a claim based on allegations that a patent holder had not disclosed intellectual property rights to a standard setting organization. Moreover, the court in Townshend granted plaintiff/counterdefendant's motion to dismiss, in part, because the plaintiff also failed to establish that but for the failure to disclose, the SSO would have adopted an alternative standard that did not include the essential patent at issue. At the pleading stage, Apple must allege that the standard setting organization would have adopted a different technology had the patent holder's rights been known at the time of the standard setting. The Court next turns to whether Apple has met the pleading requirements to establish monopoly conduct for its [*19] failure to disclose IPR theory.

The Court finds that Apple has pled with sufficient particularity facts supporting Samsung's alleged anticompetitive conduct with respect to non-disclosure of intellectual property rights, Apple has indicated which patents at issue were not disclosed to the SSO, when those patents were filed, and when Samsung allegedly gave presentations to the SSO regarding patents at issue. See, generally, Counterclaims in Reply ¶ 54. Apple has identified which provisions of the SSO policies Samsung's failure to disclose implicated. Counterclaims in Reply ¶ 48. Therefore under the heightened pleading standard of Rule 9(b), Apple has met its burden of pleading anticompetitive conduct for Samsung's failure to disclose IPR in the standards essential patents.

Apple, however, has failed to allege sufficient facts to support a plausible inference that had Samsung disclosed its intellectual property rights to the SSO, a viable alternative technology performing the same functionality would have been incorporated into the UMTS standard, or the relevant functionality would not have been incorporated into the standard at all. Counterclaims in Reply ¶¶ 55, 178. Apple's allegations [*20] are merely conclusory statements that "[h]ad Samsung properly disclosed the existence of its IPR, the relevant SSO would have selected a viable alternative technology or would have decided not to incorporate that proposal into the standard." Counterclaims in Reply ¶ 55. Without more, for example, factual allegations that there were other technologies considered by the SSO at [1132] the time of standard setting, Apple has not met its burden under the pleading standards set forth essential, then the "lock-in" effect of the standard setting does not exist. Thus, it is important to know which patents Apple is alleging are essential to the patent, and for which patents [*17] Samsung made FRAND declarations.

in Fed. R. Civ. P. 8. Therefore, Samsung's motion to dismiss Apple's Section 2 claim is GRANTED with leave to amend.

b. Antitrust Injury

Samsung also argues that Apple has not established a Section 2 claim because it fails to allege antitrust injury. Even though deficiencies in Apple's allegations of monopoly conduct have already been identified, the Court will address Samsung's alternative argument in the event that Apple chooses to amend its Counterclaims in Reply. HN7[] In order for Apple to properly plead that it has suffered an antitrust injury, it must allege injury to competition. Brunswick Corp. v. Pueblo Bowl-O-Mat, Inc., 429 U.S. 477, 489, 97 S. Ct. 690, 50 L. Ed. 2d 701 (1977). Samsung argues that Apple's allegations "describe harms to Apple as [*21] a competitor, and not harms to competition." Mot. to Dismiss and Strike Apple's Counterclaims at 9, August 15, 2011, ECF No. 153.

The Court disagrees. While Apple has alleged that it has suffered increased prices, and other effects, it has also clearly alleged harm to competition more broadly. Counterclaims in Reply ¶ 88. For example, Apple alleges that "Samsung's conduct more broadly has and continues to threaten unlawfully to exclude rivals from and increase royalties and other costs associated with the manufacture and sale of downstream wireless communications devices that implement the UMTS standard and chill competition to develop and sell innovative new UMTS-compliant products, resulting in increased prices and decreased quality and innovation in downstream product markets and complementary innovation markets." Counterclaims in Reply ¶ 88; see also Counterclaims in Reply ¶¶ 89-90. It is unclear what more Samsung believes Apple must allege to sufficiently plead harm to competition. At this stage in the litigation, Apple has alleged facts sufficient to support a plausible theory of anticompetitive harm. See Research in Motion v. Motorola, Inc., 644 F. Supp. 2d 788, 794 (N.D. Tex. 2008) [*22] (HN8[] "[S]tandards [implemented by standard setting organizations], without the proper safeguards, are inherently anticompetitive. It follows that when an entity side-steps these safeguards in an effort to return the standard to its natural anti-competitive state, anti-competitive effects are inevitable. Motorola's breach of the commitments to IEEE and ETSI, as a result, is harmful to competition.").

2. Section 1 of the Sherman Act

Samsung moves to dismiss Apple's twenty-eighth counterclaim in reply for violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act as well as California Business and Professions Code § 16720. [7] HN9[] Section 1 of the Sherman Act provides: "Every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, is declared to be illegal." 15 U.S.C. § 1. The Supreme Court has explained that the plaintiff in a Section 1 action must show "a unity of common purpose or a common design and understanding, or a meeting of minds in an unlawful arrangement." American Tobacco Co. v. United States, 328 U.S. 781, 810, 66 S. Ct. 1125, 90 L. Ed. 1575 (1946). In other words:

> The correct standard is that there must be evidence that tends to exclude [*23] the possibility of independent action by [the parties]. That is, there must be direct or circumstantial evidence that reasonably tends to prove that [the parties] had a conscious commitment to a common scheme designed to achieve an unlawful objective.

Monsanto Co. v. Spray-Rite Serv. Corp., 465 U.S. 752, 764, 104 S. Ct. 1464, 79 L. Ed. 2d 775 (1984). "Unilateral activity by a defendant, no matter the motivation, cannot give rise to a section 1 violation." See InterVest, Inc. v. Bloomberg, L.P., 340 F.3d 144, 159 (3d Cir. 2003)). Samsung argues that Apple's theory is incompatible with the requirements necessary to plead a cause of action pursuant to Section 1 of the Sherman Act because Apple's theory is predicated on a fraud on the SSO. Because Samsung allegedly defrauded the SSO, either by lying about offering FRAND licensing terms, or by failing to disclose its IPR in standard essential patents, Samsung acted unilaterally and thus there could not have been a common understanding or concerted action between the SSO and Samsung. [1133]

The Court agrees. An allegation that Samsung unilaterally subverted a collaborative standard-setting process in order to restrain trade is not the equivalent of an allegation that Samsung contracted with, combined with, or conspired with other members of the collaborative body to restrain trade. HN10[] A Plaintiff cannot state a claim under section 1 absent an allegation that it acted in concert with another party; it is not sufficient to allege that it acted alone in a collaborative forum. See Monsanto Co., 465 U.S. at 764. Under Apple's theory, the SSO did not intend to set a standard involving Samsung's undisclosed patents, or patents that it believed would be licensed on FRAND terms. Accordingly, Apple's theory necessarily fails to allege a concerted action between Samsung and the SSO necessary to state a claim under Section 1.

Apply relies principally on two cases to establish that the second party need not be a "willing" participant in the alleged conspiracy. See Helix Milling Co. v. Terminal Flour Mills Co., 523 F.2d 1317, 1322 (9th Cir. 1975); Spectators' Commun. Network Inc. v. Colonial Country Club, 253 F.3d 215, 222 (5th Cir. 2001). [*25] Both cases, however, are distinguishable from the allegations put forth by Apple here.

In Helix plaintiff's mill burned down in a fire, and plaintiff sought to buy a replacement. Id. at 1319. Building a new mill was considered too costly for the plaintiff, and the defendant sold the replacement mill to an existing competitor, effectively putting plaintiff out of business. Id. The District Court found that in order for there to be a combination to exclude plaintiff from the mill market, there must have been an agreement, explicit or implicit, between the other mill owners to not sell any mill to the plaintiff. Id. at 1321-22. The Ninth Circuit rejected this conclusion, instead holding that if a plaintiff's exclusion is a necessary consequence of a defendant's actions, then there exists a Section 1 combination. Id. at 1322. Thus, the Ninth Circuit confirmed that concerted action may have unintended anticompetitive effects, even if the parties to a contract, combination, or conspiracy do not intend those anticompetitive effects. This rule does not address the unique situation presented here in which the SSO was allegedly defrauded, and thus necessarily did not, or could not, have known [*26] it was engaging in the specific conduct alleged to harm competition.

Similarly, a party may be liable for a combination or conspiracy entered under coercion, even though the party did not intend the anticompetitive effects of its acts. See, e.g., Spectators' Commun. Network Inc., 253 F.3d at 222 (concluding that a competitor coerced into knowingly curtailing competition by another conspirator is liable under Section 1). Thus, "[c]onspirators who are not competitors of the victim may have no interest in curtailing competition in a market in which they do not compete; nevertheless, when they have been enticed or coerced to share in an anticompetitive scheme, there is still a combination within the meaning of the Sherman Act." Spectators' Commun. Network, Inc., 253 F.3d at 221. This rule, however, does not speak to whether the unilateral and fraudulent actions of an individual may be sufficient to establish a concerted action between two parties as is required for a Section 1 claim.

Based on Apple's allegations and theory of monopoly conduct, the Court finds that Apple has not sufficiently alleged a "unity of common design and understanding, or a meeting of minds in an unlawful arrangement" [*27] and thus Samsung's motion to dismiss counterclaim in reply twenty-eight is GRANTED with leave to amend.

3. California Unfair Competition Law

Samsung moves to dismiss counterclaim in reply twenty-nine, which includes allegations that Samsung has violated the California Unfair Competition Law. In order to state a claim under Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17200, Apple must allege that Samsung's conduct violates a predicate statute or law, is fraudulent, or unfairly harms competition. Samsung argues that Apple has failed to allege a violation of the UCL separate and apart from its antitrust allegations and that Apple has failed to allege harm to competition.

HN11[] The California Supreme Court has explained that in order to establish a claim of unfair harm to competition, a plaintiff must show that the alleged conduct is "tethered to some legislatively declared policy or proof of some actual or threatened impact on competition." The California Supreme Court went on to elaborate that "[w]hen a plaintiff who claims to have suffered injury from a direct competitor's 'unfair' act or practice invokes section 17200, the word 'unfair' in that section [1134] means conduct that threatens an incipient violation of an [*28] antitrust law, or violates the policy or spirit of one of those laws because its effects are comparable to or the same as a violation of the law, or otherwise significantly threatens or harms competition." Cel-Tech Communications, Inc. v. Los Angeles Cellular Telephone Co., 20 Cal. 4th 163, 186-187, 83 Cal. Rptr. 2d 548, 973 P.2d 527 (1999).

Based on the complaint, it is unclear how Apple's UCL claim is materially different than its claims for violations of the predicate antitrust laws discussed above. Therefore, Samsung's motion to dismiss counterclaim in reply number twenty-nine is GRANTED with leave to amend.

B. Motion to Strike

HN12[] "The court may strike from a pleading an insufficient defense or any redundant, immaterial, impertinent, or scandalous matter." Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(f). On a motion to strike, the court must view the pleading under attack in the light most favorable to the pleader. See *Equine Legal Solutions, Inc. v. Buntrock, C 07-04976 CRB, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 9182, 2008 WL 111237, at 2 (N.D. Cal. Jan. 9, 2008); State of Cal. v. United States, 512 F.Supp. 36, 39 (N.D. Cal. 1981). "Motions to strike are generally regarded with disfavor because of the limited importance of pleading in federal practice, and because they are often used as [*29] a delaying tactic." Greenwich Ins. Co. v. Rodgers, 729 F. Supp. 2d 1158, 1162 (C.D. Cal. 2010) (quoting Cal. Dep't of Toxic Substances Control v. Alco Pac., Inc., 217 F. Supp. 2d 1028, 1033 (C.D.Cal.2002)).

HN13[] "Numerous courts have used that discretion to dismiss counterclaims under Fed. Rule Civ. Pro. 12(f) where they are either the 'mirror image' of claims in the complaint or redundant of affirmative defenses." Stickrath v. Globalstar, Inc., No. 07-1941, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 95127, 2008 WL 2050990 (N.D. Cal. May 13, 2008). "The court should focus on whether the counterclaims serve any useful purpose, and should dismiss or strike a redundant counterclaim only when "it is clear that there is a complete identity of factual and legal issues between the complaint and the counterclaim." *2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 95127, [WL] at 4 (internal quotations and citations omitted). "Ultimately, whether to grant a motion to strike lies within the sound discretion of the district court." Alco Pac., 217 F. Supp. 2d at 1033 (citing Fantasy, Inc., 984 F.2d at 1528). Samsung moves to strike Counterclaims Thirty, Thirty-One, and Thirty-Two as being duplicative and unnecessary in light of the affirmative defenses and other counterclaims contained in Apple's Counterclaims [*30] in Reply.

The Thirtieth Counterclaim seeks a declaratory judgment that Apple is licensed to Samsung's declared-essential patents. Further, Apple alleges that "as a result of Samsung's refusal to make disclosures relating to FRAND or provide Apple with any information it would need to determine whether any purportedly FRAND license offer is in fact fair, reasonable, and non-discriminatory, Apple and Samsung have been unable to agree on FRAND terms for Samsung's Declared-Essential Patents, Apple is further entitled to a declaratory judgment setting forth the FRAND terms and conditions for a license to the Declared-Essential Patents, including the applicable royalty rate." Counterclaims in Rely ¶198. The Court agrees with Apple that at this stage of the proceedings, dismissing the Thirtieth Counterclaim is premature. In the Thirtieth Counterclaim Apple seeks a declaration of its rights, and a determination of the applicable royalty rate of the licenses, both of which may not necessarily be determined in the course of adjudicating other claims. As a result, Samsung's motion to strike the Thirtieth Counterclaim is DENIED.

Apple's Thirty-First and Thirty-Second Counterclaims in Reply appear [*31] to offer no useful purpose, separate and apart from the "mirror image" affirmative defenses already contained elsewhere in Apple's Counterclaims. For example, the Thirty-First Counterclaim seeks a declaratory judgment that Samsung is not entitled to injunctive relief if it prevails on any of its patent infringement claims. Counterclaims in Rely ¶ 200. This Counterclaim appears to mirror Apple's Sixth Affirmative Defense of no injunctive relief. The issue presented in the Thirty-First Counterclaim will necessarily be determined in the course of the litigation, and Apple has raised the issue sufficiently in its Affirmative Defense. Therefore, Samsung's motion to strike the Thirty-First Counterclaim in Reply is GRANTED.

Finally, Apple's Thirty-Second Counterclaim is also duplicative of its Affirmative Defense and does not appear to offer any additional relief. The Thirty-Second Counterclaim requests a declaration that Samsung's asserted patents are unenforceable "by virtue of estoppel, laches, waiver, unclean hands, patent exhaustion, [1135] implied license, and/or other equitable doctrines applicable to such misconduct." Counterclaims in Rely ¶ 206. The Thirty-Second Counterclaim appears to [*32] be entirely duplicative of Apple's Fifth Affirmative Defense. Although Apple argues against striking this Counterclaim, it is unclear what Apple hopes to gain from the declaratory judgment that it seeks. Ultimately, the Thirty-Second Counterclaim appears to be redundant, and therefore Samsung's motion to strike is GRANTED.

III. CONCLUSION

For the forgoing reasons, Samsung's motion to dismiss Apple's counterclaims in reply and Samsung's motion to strike Apple's counterclaims in reply is GRANTED, in part, and DENIED, in part. Apple may amend its pleadings to cure the deficiencies identified in this Order. To the extent it seeks to do so, Apple shall file an amended set of counterclaims in reply within 21 days of the date of this Order.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

HN1[] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

The standard of review applicable to requests for dismissal pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6), which permits a court to dismiss a complaint for failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted, is that the court must accept the factual allegations in the complaint as true and draw all reasonable inferences in favor of the plaintiff. The court's inquiry, however, is not whether plaintiffs will ultimately prevail in a trial on the merits but whether they should be afforded an opportunity to offer evidence in support of their claims.

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Complaints > Requirements for Complaint

HN2[] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

Factual allegations in a complaint must be enough to raise a right to relief above the speculative level. Thus, the assertions in the complaint must be enough to state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face, meaning that the facts alleged allow the court to draw the reasonable inference that the defendant is liable for the conduct alleged. In order to survive a motion to dismiss, the factual allegations in a complaint must raise a reasonable expectation that discovery will reveal evidence of the necessary elements, thereby justifying the advancement of the case beyond the pleadings to the next stage of litigation.

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

HN3[] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

When assessing the sufficiency of a complaint, the court must distinguish factual contentions, which allege behavior on the part of the defendant that, if true, would satisfy one or more elements of the claim asserted, from threadbare recitals of the elements of a cause of action supported by mere conclusory statements. Although for the purposes of a motion to dismiss the court must assume the veracity of the facts asserted in the complaint, it is not bound to accept as true a legal conclusion couched as a factual allegation. Thus, a court considering a motion to dismiss can choose to begin by identifying pleadings that, because they are no more than conclusions, are not entitled to the assumption of truth.

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

HN4[] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

When a claim is dismissed pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6), leave to amend and reassert that claim is ordinarily granted. A claim may be dismissed with prejudice, however, if amending the complaint would be futile. "Futile," as used in this context, means that the complaint could not be amended to state a legally-cognizable claim.

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Standing > General Overview

Constitutional Law > ... > Case or Controversy > Standing > Elements

HN5[] Justiciability, Standing

Standing is a jurisdictional prerequisite under Article III of the United States Constitution. Under Article III, the federal judiciary is vested with the "power" to resolve not questions and issues but "cases" or "controversies." To state a case or controversy under Article III, a plaintiff must establish standing. The elements of standing are as follows. First, the plaintiff must have suffered an "injury in fact" which is an invasion of a legally protected interest which is (a) concrete and particularized, and (b) actual or imminent rather than conjectural or hypothetical. Second, there must be a causal connection between the injury and the conduct complained of. The injury has to be fairly traceable to the challenged action of the defendant and not the result of the independent action of some third party not before the court. Third, it must be likely, as opposed to merely speculative, that the injury will be redressed by a favorable decision.

HN7[] Clayton Act, Claims

Standing to sue under § 4 of the Clayton Act is determined by a five-factor test: (1) the causal connection between the antitrust violation and the harm to the plaintiff; (2) whether the plaintiff's alleged injury is of the type that the antitrust laws were intended to redress; i.e., did the plaintiff suffer antitrust injuries; (3) the directness of the injury; (4) the existence of more direct victims of the violation; and (5) the potential for duplicative recovery or complex apportionment of damages.

HN9[] Clayton Act, Claims

In determining whether an injury was proximately caused by an antitrust violation for Article III standing purposes, courts should look (1) to the physical and economic nexus between the alleged violation and the harm to the plaintiff, and (2) more particularly, to the relationship of the injury alleged with those forms of injury about which Congress was likely to have been concerned in making defendant's conduct unlawful and in providing a private remedy. In doing so, they should consider whether the plaintiff's injury is inextricably intertwined with the injury that the conspirators sought to inflict, or, put another way, whether the injury alleged is so integral an aspect of the conspiracy alleged that there can be no question but that the loss was precisely the type of loss that the claimed violations would be likely to cause.

HN35[] Class Actions, Certification of Classes

In cases where a court is presented with class certification and Article III standing issues simultaneously and the class certification issues are dispositive in that they pertain to statutory standing; that is, whether a statute authorizes a given party to sue in the first place, the certification issues are logically antecedent to the standing issues and the court may therefore elect to address the certification issues first in the interest of judicial restraint. Under these circumstances, if a court finds that certification of a proposed class is improper, the issue of certain class members' standing would be moot.

HN36[] Clayton Act, Claims

A plaintiff must demonstrate standing for each claim he seeks to press. The standing inquiry requires careful judicial examination of a complaint's allegations to ascertain whether the particular plaintiff is entitled to an adjudication of the particular claims asserted. It is not enough that the conduct of which the plaintiff complains will injure someone. The complaining party must also show that he is within the class of persons who will be concretely affected. Nor does a plaintiff who has been subject to injurious conduct of one kind possess by virtue of that injury the necessary stake in litigating conduct of another kind, although similar, to which he has not been subject. Otherwise, a plaintiff would be able to bring a class action complaint under the laws of nearly every state in the Union without having to allege concrete, particularized injuries relating to those states, thereby dragging defendants into expensive nationwide class discovery, potentially without a good-faith basis. In other words, the plaintiff would have to do no more than name the preserve on which he intends to hunt.

The character and effect of a conspiracy are not to be judged by dismembering it and viewing its separate parts, but only by looking at it as a whole. A seriatim examination of claims against each conspiracy defendant as if they were separate lawsuits overlooks the conspiracy itself.

HN39[] Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

The statutory language of 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 imposes two essential requirements on an antitrust plaintiff. First, the plaintiff must show that the defendant was a party to a contract, combination or conspiracy. This requires the plaintiff to demonstrate some form of concerted action indicating a unity of purpose or a common design and understanding or a meeting of the minds or a conscious commitment to a common scheme. Second, the plaintiff must show that the conspiracy to which the defendant was a party imposed an unreasonable restraint on trade.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Sherman Act

HN40[] Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason, Sherman Act

The usual standard applied under 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 to determine whether a challenged practice unreasonably restrains trade is the so-called rule of reason. Under a rule-of-reason analysis, the plaintiff bears the initial burden of showing that the alleged agreement produced an adverse, anticompetitive effect within the relevant geographic market. Successful attempts to meet this burden typically include a demonstration of defendants' market power, as a judgment about market power is a means by which the effects of the challenged conduct on the marketplace can be assessed. If the plaintiff carries this burden, the court will need to decide whether the anticompetitive effects of the practice are justified by any countervailing pro-competitive benefits. However, judicial experience has shown that some classes of restraints almost never have redeeming competitive benefits, and therefore a court need not apply the rule of reason analysis. Instead, they are subject to a "per se" standard. Paradigmatic examples are horizontal agreements among competitors to fix prices or to divide markets. If a plaintiff's allegations fall into one of the recognized classes, an unreasonable restraint on trade is conclusively presumed and therefore plaintiffs are relieved of the obligation to define a market and prove market power.

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Complaints > Requirements for Complaint

HN41[] Cartels & Horizontal Restraints, Sherman Act

Twombly does not require detailed allegations regarding the specific nature of a price-fixing or market allocation agreement; rather, stating such a claim requires a complaint with enough factual matter (taken as true) to suggest that an agreement was made. Put another way, a complaint simply calls for enough fact to raise a reasonable expectation that discovery will reveal evidence of an illegal agreement. Requiring plaintiffs to set forth the full details of an antitrust conspiracy at this stage of the litigation would present an onerous burden because in antitrust cases, the proof is largely in the hands of the alleged conspirators.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Cartels & Horizontal Restraints > Sherman Act

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Complaints > Requirements for Complaint

HN42[] Cartels & Horizontal Restraints, Sherman Act

At the pleading stage of an action under 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, plaintiffs need only set forth allegations that create an inference of an unlawful agreement; they need not set forth allegations tending to rule out potential alternative explanations. This is to be distinguished from the requirement to plead plus factors to rule out independent action when a plaintiffs' claims of conspiracy rest on parallel conduct.

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

HN43[] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

A court deciding a motion to dismiss must not make any judgment about the probability of the plaintiff's success. The court must assume that all the allegations in the complaint are true (even if doubtful in fact).

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Complaints > Requirements for Complaint

HN44[] Sherman Act, Claims

Section 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, does not prohibit all unreasonable restraints of trade but only restraints effected by a contract, combination, or conspiracy. This is because seemingly anticompetitive conduct may be just as consistent with conspiracy as with a wide swath of rational and competitive business strategy unilaterally prompted by common perceptions of the market. Accordingly, the crucial question is whether the challenged anticompetitive conduct stems from independent decision or from an agreement, tacit or express. Hence, when allegations of parallel conduct are set out in order to make a § 1 claim, they must be placed in a context that raises a suggestion of a preceding agreement, not merely parallel conduct that could just as well be independent action. This is usually accomplished by pleading one or more "plus factors" that indicate the existence of an actionable agreement. While there is no finite set of such criteria, three such plus factors are: (1) evidence that the defendant had a motive to enter into a conspiracy; (2) evidence that the defendant acted contrary to its interests; and (3) evidence implying a traditional conspiracy.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

HN45[] Sherman Act, Claims

At the pleading stage, a 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 claim of conspiracy predicated on parallel conduct should be dismissed if common economic experience or the facts alleged in the complaint itself show that independent self-interest is an obvious alternative explanation for defendants' common behavior. Plaintiffs' allegations need not rule out all potential alternative explanations.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

HN46[] Sherman Act, Claims

No authority requires a purchaser plaintiff under 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 to specifically establish, at the pleading stage, that the parties to a horizontal agreement to allocate a given market were competitors or potential competitors in that market.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

HN47[] Sherman Act, Claims

Where an upstream supplier participates in a 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 conspiracy involving horizontal competitors, it is proper to analyze the entire restraint as one of horizontal price-fixing.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

HN48[] Sherman Act, Claims

Although plaintiffs must show that each defendant had knowledge of an agreement as to the overall conspiracy alleged under 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, they need not show (1) evidence of a formal agreement, or (2) knowledge, on behalf of the defendant, of every detail of the alleged conspiracy. That a particular defendant may or may not have joined in a specific overt act in furtherance of the conspiracy does not affect its status as a conspirator. On the other hand, knowledge alone of the conspiracy is not sufficient to hold it liable. A party progresses from mere knowledge of an endeavor to intent to join it when there is informed and interested cooperation, stimulation, or instigation. And there is also a stake in the venture which, even if it may not be essential, is not irrelevant to the question of conspiracy.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Purchasers > Direct Purchasers

HN49[] Purchasers, Direct Purchasers

The well-settled proposition that only direct purchasers may recover damages in federal antitrust suits by no means indicates that only a seller of the product in question may be found liable in a 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 conspiracy.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > Time Limitations

HN50[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Clayton Act

Actions brought under the Clayton Act are subject to a four-year statute of limitations. 15 U.S.C.S. § 15b. In an antitrust conspiracy that continues over a period of years, each overt act in furtherance thereof that injures the plaintiff, as, for example, the selling of a price-fixed product, starts the statute of limitations period running for that particular act. Generally, a cause of action accrues and the statute begins to run when a defendant commits an act that injures a plaintiff's business. However, the commission of a separate new overt act generally does not permit the plaintiff to recover for the injury caused by old overt acts outside the limitations period.

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > Tolling

HN51[] Statute of Limitations, Tolling

The equitable doctrine of fraudulent concealment applies to every federal statute of limitations. To toll a statute of limitations through fraudulent concealment, a plaintiff must show (1) an affirmative act of concealment; (2) which misleads or relaxes the plaintiff's inquiry, who (3) exercised due diligence in investigating his cause of action.

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Heightened Pleading Requirements > Fraud Claims

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > Tolling

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Complaints > Requirements for Complaint

HN52[] Heightened Pleading Requirements, Fraud Claims

Allegations of fraudulent concealment must be pled with particularity in accordance with Fed. R. Civ. P. 9(b). However, Rule 9(b) does not require plaintiffs to plead facts that, by the nature of the alleged fraud, are within the defendants' control. Indeed, courts must be sensitive to the fact that a rigid application of Rule 9(b) prior to discovery may permit sophisticated defrauders to successfully conceal the details of their fraud. Thus, courts have relaxed the rule when factual information is peculiarly within the defendant's knowledge or control. Accordingly, under the more flexible application of Rule 9(b), plaintiffs need not allege the specific information that is exclusively within defendants' knowledge or control. However, plaintiffs must allege facts suggesting fraudulent concealment and why additional information lies exclusively within the defendants' control.

HN78[] Tolling of Statute of Limitations, Fraudulent Concealment

Where fraudulent concealment of a federal antitrust claim has been shown, the four-year federal statute of limitations begins anew from the time the plaintiff knew or should have known of the existence of the federal claim.

HN79[] Tolling of Statute of Limitations, Fraudulent Concealment

Under certain circumstances, an antitrust conspiracy may depend on its own concealment to the point that any act in furtherance thereof can also be said to conceal it. The purpose of the fraudulent concealment doctrine is to prevent a defendant from concealing a fraud, or committing a fraud in a manner that it concealed itself until such time as the party committing the fraud could plead the statute of limitations to protect it. However, the court cannot find that conspiracies involving price-fixing are per se self-concealing, as such a finding would render them wholly exempt from the applicable statute of limitations.

HN80[] Tolling of Statute of Limitations, Fraudulent Concealment

Whether a particular price-fixing conspiracy or, more precisely, whether a particular announcement of a price increase necessarily conceals its true nature depends on the nature of the industry and the circumstances surrounding the announcement. In other words, a plaintiff must show circumstances indicating that a price increase carries with it a pretense of legitimacy or that it would necessarily be assumed that it was the result of legitimate market forces. To do so, a plaintiff may, for example, set forth allegations showing that price increases are not abnormal, that such increases are typically ascribed to market forces, that an openly collusive price increase would not be tolerated, and that there was nothing suspicious about the circumstances under which each of the pre-limitations period price announcements were made.

HN81[] Tolling of Statute of Limitations, Fraudulent Concealment

Implicit in the notion that a plaintiff's inquiry was misled or relaxed by an act of concealment is that the plaintiff relied on that act of concealment. That is, the plaintiff's inquiry would not have been misled or relaxed if it did not rely on the defendant's act of concealment.

HN82[] Tolling of Statute of Limitations, Fraudulent Concealment

The due diligence prong of fraudulent concealment is rooted in the notion of inquiry notice; that is, an injury accrues when a reasonable plaintiff under the circumstances would have discovered it. A federal antitrust injury accrues when an overt act is committed that injures the plaintiff, thereby triggering the four-year statute of limitations; however, one or more affirmative acts of concealment may toll the statute of limitations if they mislead a plaintiff into thinking that he does not have a cause of action. Thus, to establish the due diligence prong of fraudulent concealment, a plaintiff must affirmatively show that he was not on inquiry notice of the alleged antitrust conspiracy.

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > Equitable Estoppel

HN83[] Tolling of Statute of Limitations, Fraudulent Concealment

In the Third Circuit, inquiry notice that would defeat a fraudulent concealment contention is analyzed in two steps. First, the burden is on the defendants to show the existence of "storm warnings" or information or data that would alert a reasonable person of ordinary intelligence to potentially culpable conduct. Second, if the defendants establish the existence of storm warnings, the burden shifts to the plaintiffs to show that they exercised reasonable due diligence and yet were unable to discover their injuries. This requires plaintiffs to show that (1) they investigated the storm warnings and (2) in their investigation, they exercised the due diligence expected of a reasonable person of ordinary intelligence.

Alleging that they did not discover nor could have discovered through reasonable diligence that defendants and their co-conspirators were violating the antitrust laws until shortly before the litigation was commenced because defendants and their co-conspirators were using deceptive and secret methods to avoid detection and affirmatively conceal their violations is too vague to satisfy Fed. R. Civ. P. 9(b). To deem such an allegation sufficient would allow the allegations required to satisfy the first prong of fraudulent concealment to also satisfy the third prong.

DEBEVOISE, Senior District Judge

This matter arises out of the consolidation of five separate actions in this Court [1] alleging a conspiracy to fix prices in and allocate shares of the domestic Magnesium Oxide market from January 2002 to the present ("the Class Period"). On November 15, 2010, Direct Purchaser Plaintiffs ("DP Plaintiffs") Orangeburg Milling Company, Inc., Bar Ale, Inc., and Air Krete, Inc. filed a Class Action Complaint ("CAC") against Defendants Premier Chemicals, LLC ("Premier"), Sumitomo Corporation of America ("Sumitomo"), and YAS, Inc. ("YAS") pursuant to Sections 4 and 16 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. §§ 15, 26, alleging violations of Section 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1, and seeking class certification under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 23(b)(2) and (3), declaratory judgment, treble damages, costs and attorneys' fees, and an injunction. On December 30, 2010, DP Plaintiffs filed an Amended CAC to add additional factual allegations in support of their claims.

On October 7, 2010, Indirect Purchaser Plaintiffs ("IP Plaintiffs") Ronald Hayek, Daniel, Walker, Sue Walker, and John Bidart filed a CAC against Defendants under Section 16 of the Clayton Act, alleging violations of Section 1 of the Sherman Act, and under various state antitrust and consumer protection laws. IP Plaintiffs seek similar relief as DP Plaintiffs. [2] On December 31, 2010, IP Plaintiffs filed an Amended CAC to add similar factual allegations as those added by DP Plaintiffs in their Amended CAC.

On March 1, 2011, Defendants filed a Motion to Dismiss [3] all of Plaintiffs' claims pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(b)(6). For the reasons set forth below, Defendants' motion is granted. No Defendant is entitled to dismissal of Plaintiffs' federal and state antitrust claims on the merits because Plaintiffs sufficiently allege a meeting of the minds among all Defendants to fix prices in and allocate shares of the domestic [*4] Magnesium Oxide market. However, Defendants are entitled to dismissal of IP Plaintiffs' federal and state antitrust claims and the majority of their consumer protection claims for lack of standing. In addition, those consumer protection claims under which IP Plaintiffs have standing are dismissed to the extent they are based on allegations of fraud because those allegations do not comply with the requirements of Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 9(b). Finally, Plaintiffs' federal and state antitrust claims are dismissed because they are time-barred by their respective statutes of limitations.

I. BACKGROUND

Magnesium Oxide ("MgO") is a solid, white, naturally occurring mineral that is used in producing a wide variety of products, including refractory products, animal feeds, fertilizers, electrical insulation, and pharmaceuticals. It is formed by an ionic bond between one magnesium atom and one oxygen atom. MgO can be mined from magnesite or processed from seawater or subterranean [*5] brines containing magnesium chloride. This case concerns the two most common forms of MgO: Caustic-calcined magnesia ("CCM") and dead-burned magnesia ("DBM"). DBM and CCM are produced differently and have different commercial applications. [4]

In 2000, according to the CACs, domestic consumption of DBM and CCM came from two sources: the United States and China. Roughly 50% of CCM "and a lesser amount of" DBM consumed in the United States were produced domestically, while the rest was imported from China. (Direct Purchasers' Consolidated Amended Class Action Complaint ("Direct CAC") ¶ 27; (Indirect Purchasers' Consolidated Amended Class Action Complaint ("Indirect CAC") [*6] ¶ 33.) At that time, Premier allegedly maintained control over the majority of DBM and CCM consumed in the United States by (1) purchasing imported CCM and DBM for resale to its customers in the United States, and (2) sourcing magnesite from China for production into DBM to be sold domestically.

"Sumitomo similarly purchased Chinese MgO but only [DBM] for resale to its U.S. customers" and "sourced magnesite from China for manufacture into [DBM] for sale in the U.S." (Direct CAC ¶ 27; Indirect CAC ¶ 34.) To do so, it enlisted the help of YAS to (1) "facilitate[] [its] purchases of Chinese magnesite" (Direct CAC ¶ 27; Indirect CAC ¶ 35), and (2) purchase Chinese DBM for resale in the United States.

This arrangement proved successful because Hideo Sumikawa, the current president of YAS, previously worked for Sumitomo and has since maintained relationships with certain Chinese magnesite mines. "In particular, Sumitomo, through Coy Akiyama—head of Sumitomo's inorganic chemicals unit—purchases [DBM] from Chinese mines that Sumikawa (YAS) has facilitated, thereby allowing Sumitomo and YAS to participate together in the U.S. MgO market." (Direct CAC ¶ 33; Indirect CAC ¶ 41.)

According to Plaintiffs, [*7] sometime before the Class Period, Premier "saw its share of MgO markets shrink due to increased Chinese competition." (Direct CAC ¶ 28; Indirect CAC ¶ 36.) Specifically, "cheaper imports, mainly from China ha[d] replaced some of the U.S. domestic production, notably affecting Premier." (Direct CAC ¶ 29; Indirect CAC ¶ 37.) Thus, during the Class Period, Premier and Sumitomo allegedly bought nearly all of the Chinese DBM available for purchase and resold it to their customers in the United States.

In addition, Plaintiffs allege that, "[d]uring the Class Period, with some limited exceptions, the MgO markets were considered to be fairly saturated, with limited potential for growth." (Direct CAC ¶ 30; Indirect CAC ¶ 38.) However, "[i]nstead of competing, representatives from Premier, Sumitomo, and YAS began meeting regularly to discuss fixing U.S. MgO prices and allocating MgO markets." (Direct CAC ¶ 31; Indirect CAC ¶ 39.) Specifically, Plaintiffs allege a conspiracy among Premier, Sumitomo, and YAS to (1) fix prices in and allocate shares of the domestic DBM market and (2) allocate the domestic CCM market to Premier so that it could fix prices in that market, which resulted in Plaintiffs' [*8] purchasing DBM and CCM at artificially high prices.

i. The DBM and CCM Agreements

[4] CCM "is manufactured at lower temperatures than [DBM] and is used in products like animal feeds and fertilizers." (Direct CAC ¶ 25; Indirect CAC ¶ 31.) DBM, on the other hand, "is most often used in refractory applications." (Id.)

Plaintiffs allege that, during the Class Period, Cary W. Ahl, Sr. Premier's then-president, "regularly called" Mr. Sumikawa of YAS "to discuss fixing Premier's and Sumitomo's [DBM] prices and allocating their respective MgO accounts in the U.S." (Direct CAC ¶ 34; Indirect CAC ¶ 42.) These market allocation and price-fixing schemes were allegedly implemented by Mr. Ahl and his successors at Premier and Terry Wakisama at Sumitomo.

In the summer of 2004, Coy Akiyama of Sumitomo, Mr. Sumikawa of YAS, Gary Vannorsdel, an animal nutrition broker, and Mr. Vannorsdel's son, met at a Holiday Inn, in Tulsa, Oklahoma, to discuss plans for Sumitomo to enter the CCM market without upsetting Premier. Sumitomo had been shipping DBM to the United States on "partially empty barges and wanted to maximize efficiencies by filling these barges with [CCM] for sale to the western U.S." (Direct CAC ¶ 39; Indirect CAC ¶ 48.) Indeed, DBM shipments filled only half of Sumitomo's New Orleans barge capacity. Apparently, "Tulsa was the only port that could accommodate this barge, and Sumitomo had access to a very large storage facility [*9] in Tulsa." (Direct CAC ¶ 36; Indirect CAC ¶ 44.)

At the Tulsa meeting, "[i]n the course of discussing a strategy for Sumitomo to enter the U.S. [CCM] market, Akiyama (Sumitomo) recounted to Sumikawa (YAS) multiple discussions between him and Ahl where Ahl had called Akiyama to set [DBM] prices; to allocate [DBM] markets; and to ensure that Sumitomo was maintaining its agreement with Premier to fix [DBM] prices and allocate [DBM] markets." (Direct CAC ¶ 40; Indirect CAC ¶ 49.) At one point, Mr. Vannorsdel "expressed concern about compromising his relationship with Premier by helping facilitate Sumitomo and YAS's involvement" in the CCM market, to which Mr. Akiyama responded, "'Don't be concerned because we [Sumitomo] talk with Premier on a daily basis to set prices and to discuss what accounts they can have.'" (Direct CAC ¶ 41; Indirect CAC ¶ 50.)

Shortly after the Tulsa meeting, Mr. Ahl discovered Sumitomo's plan to enter the CCM market and retaliated by dropping DBM prices. [5] As a result, Sumitomo did not follow through with its plans to enter the CCM market. "Following the [CCM]-related message that Premier sent to Sumitomo and YAS via Premier's pre-market-entry retaliation, Sumitomo [*10] and YAS illegally agreed with Premier to remain out of the [CCM] market—a market Sumitomo, as a rational profit-seeking entity, was motivated to enter—thus allowing Premier to maintain its control over [CCM] pricing." (Direct CAC ¶ 43; Indirect CAC ¶ 52.)

ii. Fraudulent Concealment

Plaintiffs allege that the MgO conspiracy was "inherently self-concealing" and that Defendants took affirmative measures to conceal it. (Direct CAC ¶ 48-49; Indirect CAC ¶ 55-56.) Specifically, Plaintiffs allege that "[D]efendants met secretly and among themselves for the express purpose of fixing prices and allocating markets of domestically sold MgO." (Direct CAC ¶ 50; Indirect CAC ¶ 57.) In addition, Defendants allegedly explained increases in the price of MgO "by references to tight supply, thinning margins, and increased energy and freight costs." (Direct CAC ¶ 51; Indirect CAC ¶ 58.) As a result, Plaintiffs allege that "neither [P]laintiffs nor the class members had knowledge of any of the foregoing violations, and neither [P]laintiffs nor the class members, until recently, could have discovered through reasonable diligence that [D]efendants and their co-conspirators [*11] had engaged in the foregoing violations." (Direct CAC ¶ 49; Indirect CAC ¶ 56.)

iii. The Complaints

On November 15, 2010, DP Plaintiffs—i.e. those who purchased either DBM or CCM directly from one or more Defendants, their predecessors, subsidiaries, or co-conspirators during the Class Period—filed a CAC against Defendants under Sections 4 and 16 of the Clayton Act alleging violations of Section 1 of the Sherman Act, and seeking class certification under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 23(b)(2) and (3), declaratory judgment, treble damages, costs and attorneys' fees, and an injunction. On December 30, 2010, DP Plaintiffs filed an Amended CAC to add additional factual allegations in support of their claims.

[5] These prices were later restored.

On October 7, 2010, IP Plaintiffs—i.e. those who purchased products containing DBM or CCM that was manufactured, distributed or sold by one or more Defendants, their predecessors, subsidiaries, or co-conspirators during the Class Period—filed a CAC against Defendants under Section 16 of the Clayton Act, alleging violations of Section 1 of the Sherman Act, and under various state antitrust and consumer protection laws, and seeking similar relief as the DP Plaintiffs. On December 31, [*12] 2010, IP Plaintiffs filed an Amended CAC to add similar factual allegations as those added by DP Plaintiffs in their Amended CAC.

II. DISCUSSION

Defendants now move to dismiss both Amended CACs pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(b)(6). In doing so, Defendants argue that Plaintiffs (1) lack standing to assert their federal and state antitrust claims; (2) fail to allege a plausible antitrust conspiracy to fix DBM prices, allocate portions of the domestic DBM market, and allocate the domestic CCM market to Premier; and (3) fail to plead fraudulent concealment with particularity to equitably toll the applicable federal and state antitrust statutes of limitations. Defendants further argue that IP Plaintiffs' lack standing to assert their consumer protection and unfair competition claims, and that those claims are improperly pled.

A. Standard of Review

In assessing the parties' arguments, the Court must apply HN1[] the standard of review applicable to requests for dismissal pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(b)(6). That rule permits a court to dismiss a complaint for failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted. When considering a Rule 12(b)(6) motion, the Court [*13] must accept the factual allegations in the complaint as true and draw all reasonable inferences in favor of the plaintiff. Morse v. Lower Merion Sch. Dist., 132 F.3d 902, 906 (3d Cir. 1997). The Court's inquiry, however, "is not whether plaintiffs will ultimately prevail in a trial on the merits, but whether they should be afforded an opportunity to offer evidence in support of their claims." In re Rockefeller Ctr. Props., Inc., 311 F.3d 198, 215 (3d Cir. 2002).

The Supreme Court recently clarified the Rule 12(b)(6) standard in two cases: Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 129 S. Ct. 1937, 173 L. Ed. 2d 868 (2009), and Bell Atlantic Corporation v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007). The decisions in those cases abrogated the rule established in Conley v. Gibson, 355 U.S. 41, 45-46, 78 S. Ct. 99, 2 L. Ed. 2d 80 (1957), that "a complaint should not be dismissed for failure to state a claim unless it appears beyond doubt that the plaintiff can prove no set of facts in support of his claim, which would entitle him to relief." In contrast, Bell Atlantic, 550 U.S. at 545, held that HN2[] "[f]actual allegations must be enough to raise a right to relief above the speculative level." Thus, the assertions in the complaint must be enough to "state a claim to relief that [*14] is plausible on its face," id. at 570, meaning that the facts alleged "allow[] the court to draw the reasonable inference that the defendant is liable for the conduct alleged." Iqbal, 129 S. Ct. at 1949; see also, Phillips v. County of Allegheny, 515 F.3d 224, 234-35 (3d Cir. 2008) (In order to survive a motion to dismiss, the factual allegations in a complaint must "raise a reasonable expectation that discovery will reveal evidence of the necessary element," thereby justifying the advancement of "the case beyond the pleadings to the next stage of litigation.").

HN3[] When assessing the sufficiency of a complaint, the Court must distinguish factual contentions - which allege behavior on the part of the defendant that, if true, would satisfy one or more elements of the claim asserted - from "[t]hreadbare recitals of the elements of a cause of action, supported by mere conclusory statements." Iqbal, 129 S. Ct. at 1949. Although for the purposes of a motion to dismiss the Court must assume the veracity of the facts asserted in the complaint, it is "not bound to accept as true a legal conclusion couched as a factual allegation." Id. at 1950. Thus, "a court considering a motion to dismiss can [*15] choose to begin by identifying pleadings that, because they are no more than conclusions, are not entitled to the assumption of truth." Id.

HN4[] When a claim is dismissed pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(b)(6), leave to amend and reassert that claim is ordinarily granted. In re Burlington Coat Factory Litig., 114 F.3d 1410, 1434 (3d Cir. 1997). A claim may be dismissed with prejudice, however, if amending the complaint would be futile. Id. "Futile," as used in this context, means that the complaint could not be amended to state a legally-cognizable claim. Id. (citing Glassman v. Computervision Corp., 90 F.3d 617, 623 (1st Cir. 1996)).

B. Plaintiffs' Standing to Bring Antitrust Claims

HN5[] Standing is a jurisdictional prerequisite under Article III of the United States Constitution. "Under Article III, the Federal Judiciary is vested with the 'Power' to resolve not questions and issues but 'Cases' or 'Controversies.'" Arizona Christian Sch. Tuition Org. v. Winn, 131 S.Ct. 1436, 1441, 179 L. Ed. 2d 523 (2011). "To state a case or controversy under Article III, a plaintiff must establish standing." Id. at 1442 (citing Allen v. Wright, 468 U.S. 737, 751, 104 S. Ct. 3315, 82 L. Ed. 2d 556 (1984)). The Supreme Court explained the elements [*16] of standing in Lujan v. Defenders of Wildlife, 504 U.S. 555, 560-61, 112 S. Ct. 2130, 119 L. Ed. 2d 351 (1992):

> "First, the plaintiff must have suffered an 'injury in fact'—an invasion of a legally protected interest which is (a) concrete and particularized, and (b) 'actual or imminent, not "conjectural" or "hypothetical." ' Second, there must be a causal connection between the injury and the conduct complained of—the injury has to be 'fairly ... trace[able] to the challenged action of the defendant, and not ... th[e] result [of] the independent action of some third party not before the court.' Third, it must be 'likely,' as opposed to merely 'speculative,' that the injury will be 'redressed by a favorable decision.'"

Defendants argue that Plaintiffs lack antitrust standing because they do not identify whether they purchased DBM or CCM. Specifically, Defendants contend that the alleged agreements regarding DBM and CCM, respectively, amount to "two conspiracies [that] are allegedly directed at different purchasers and encompass different time frames[,] and [n]othing indicates that anticompetitive activity in one market would have an effect on prices in the other market." (YAS Br., 9.) "Under these circumstances," according [*17] to Defendants, "a purchaser of [DBM] would suffer no redressable injury from anticompetitive conduct in the [CCM] market, and would accordingly lack standing to maintain claims based on such conduct (and vice versa)." (Id.).

This argument is unavailing because, as discussed fully below, Plaintiffs allege a single conspiracy in the domestic MgO market comprised of two agreements: one to fix prices in and allocate shares of the domestic DBM market, and one to allocate the domestic CCM market to Premier. These agreements are interdependent in that Defendants entered into the CCM agreement in order to maintain the DBM agreement. As a result, price-fixing in the DBM market has an effect on prices in the CCM market, and vice versa, because the absence of one agreement would eliminate the consideration for the other.

HN6[] As a general matter, DP Plaintiffs' allegation that they were "injured by having paid more for MgO [6] than they otherwise would have paid absent [D]efendants' unlawful conduct" (Direct CAC ¶ 56) is sufficient to establish antitrust standing. HN7[] Standing to sue under Section 4 of the Clayton Act is determined by a five-factor test: [7] "(1) the causal connection between the antitrust [*18] violation and the harm to the plaintiff; (2) whether the plaintiff's alleged injury is of the type that the antitrust laws were intended to redress; i.e., did the plaintiff suffer antitrust injuries; (3) the directness of the injury; (4) the existence of more direct victims of the violation; and (5) the potential for duplicative recovery or complex apportionment of damages." In re Warfarin Sodium Antitrust Litig., 214 F.3d 395, 399 (3d Cir. 2000) (citing Associated General Contractors of California, Inc. v. California State Council of Carpenters, 459 U.S. 519, 538, 103 S. Ct. 897, 74 L. Ed. 2d 723 (1983). Here, there is little doubt that those who purchased DBM and/or CCM directly from Defendants at supracompetitive prices have standing to sue for damages under Section 4 and for injunctive relief under Section 16. See id. at 401 ("It is difficult to imagine a more formidable demonstration of antitrust injury" than supra-competitive pricing.); In re Mercedez Benz AntiTrust Litig., 157 F. Supp. 2d 355, 364 (D.N.J. 2001) ("Where, as here, it is alleged that consumers paid a price higher than the price that would have been offered had the dealers been competing, the purpose of the antitrust laws is obviously thwarted."). [*19] Thus, DP Plaintiffs have standing to pursue their antitrust claims.

[6] MgO collectively refers to DBM and/or CCM. (Direct CAC ¶ 1.)

[7] As discussed further below, standing to assert claims for injunctive relief under Section 16 of the Clayton Act are analyzed under a more relaxed standard. See In re Warfarin, 214 F.3d at 399.

IP HN8[] Plaintiffs, however, do not. While they seek solely injunctive relief under Section 16 of the Clayton Act—and therefore are not subject to the aforementioned five-factor test, see Note 7—they must still allege "(1) [a] threatened loss or injury cognizable in equity; (2) proximately resulting from the alleged antitrust injury." In re Warfin, 214 F.3d at 400. In analyzing whether an antitrust injury proximately caused an alleged loss to an indirect purchaser, this Circuit has been guided by the Supreme Court's decision in Shield of Virginia v. McCready, 457 U.S. 465, 102 S. Ct. 2540, 73 L. Ed. 2d 149 (1982). [8] McCready explained that "an antitrust violation may be expected to cause ripples of harm to flow through the Nation's economy; but . . . [i]t is reasonable to assume that Congress did not intend to allow every person tangentially affected by an antitrust violation to maintain an action." 457 U.S. at 476. [*20] Thus, HN9[] in determining whether an injury was proximately caused by an antitrust violation for Article III standing purposes, courts should "look (1) to the physical and economic nexus between the alleged violation and the harm to the plaintiff, and (2) more particularly, to the relationship of the injury alleged with those forms of injury about which Congress was likely to have been concerned in making defendant's conduct unlawful and in providing a private remedy." Id. at 478. In doing so, they should consider whether the plaintiff's injury is "inextricably intertwined with the injury that the conspirators sought to inflict," In re Warfarin, 214 F.3d at 400-01 (purchasers of prescription drug whose active ingredient was the subject of a price-fixing conspiracy maintained standing to sue as indirect purchasers because "the excess amount paid" for the drug was "inextricably intertwined with the injury [Defendant] aimed to inflict"), or, put another way, "whether the injury alleged is so integral an aspect of the conspiracy alleged, there can be no question but that the loss was precisely the type of loss that the claimed violations . . . would be likely to cause." McCready, 457 U.S. at 479 [*21] (quotations and citations omitted) (alleged conspiracy among psychiatrists and Blue Shield to take patients away from psychologists by refusing to reimburse Blue Shield subscribers for psychotherapeutic services resulted in "clearly foreseeable" harm to Blue Shield subscribers and "was a necessary step in effecting the ends of the alleged illegal conspiracy.").

Here, IP Plaintiffs allege that "as a direct and proximate result of Defendants' and their co-conspirators' unlawful contract, combination and conspiracy, Plaintiffs and the Class members were injured and financially damaged in their business and property by having paid more for MgO Products than they would have absent Defendants' and their coconspirators' unlawful conduct." (Indirect CAC ¶ 54.) However, they fail to specify which MgO products— i.e. products containing DBM or CCM—they purchased. The mere fact that a product [*22] contains DBM or CCM does not necessarily mean that an increase in the price of that product is "inextricably intertwined" with, or an "a necessary step in achieving the ends" of, the alleged conspiracy to fix prices in and allocate shares of the domestic DBM and CCM markets. Indeed, the price of DBM and CCM would have a minimal foreseeable effect on the price of products containing trace amounts of them, but a significant foreseeable effect on the price of products in which they are major ingredients. Thus, without knowing which specific products IP Plaintiffs purchased, it is impossible to determine whether an increase in their price is the type of injury that furthers the object of the alleged conspiracy to fix prices in and allocate shares of the domestic DBM and CCM markets. Accordingly, IP Plaintiffs' federal antitrust claims are dismissed for lack of standing. [9] However, IP Plaintiffs are granted leave to amend in order to allege (1) [8] Although that decision analyzed proximate causation in the context of a Section 4 claim for damages, the Court of Appeals has applied its analysis to Section 16 claims because proximate cause is an element of standing under both. See In re Warfin Sodium Antitrust Litig., 214 F.3d 395, 400-01 (3d Cir. 2000).

[9] IP Plaintiffs also lack [*23] standing to assert their HN10[] state antitrust claims because those claims are construed in accordance with federal antitrust principles. See In re Digital Music Antitrust Litig., 592 F. Supp. 2d 435, 448 n.21 (S.D.N.Y. 2008) (Arizona, California, District of Columbia, Iowa, Kansas, Maine, Michigan, Minnesota, North Carolina, South Dakota, Vermont, West Virginia, Wisconsin), rev'd on other grounds by, *Starr v. the specific purchased products containing DBM or CCM and (2) the nexus between an increase in the price of those products and the alleged conspiracy to fix prices in and allocate shares of the domestic DBM and CCM markets.

Defendants further argue that IP Plaintiffs lack standing to assert their state law antitrust claims, with the exception of Iowa and California, because they only allege purchasing MgO products in Iowa and California. Specifically, Defendants contend that IP Plaintiffs "have no standing to bring claims based on violations of states in which they neither reside nor purchased any MgO products." (Sumitomo Br. (IP Pl.), 4.) IP Plaintiffs counter that "Defendants improperly confuse 'standing' with class certification issues," which, at this point, are premature. (IP Pl's Br., 30.) Specifically, IP Plaintiffs maintain that they "are not bringing claims in their own name in other states; rather they are seeking to represent similarly situated persons in other states," and that "[t]his issue, improperly raised by Defendants on a motion to dismiss will be addressed at class certification under Rule 23." (Id. at 31) (emphasis in original).

It is well-settled that HN11[] a named plaintiff in a class action lawsuit is required to establish [*25] Article III standing. See Lewis v. Casey, 518 U.S. 343, 357, 116 S. Ct. 2174, 135 L. Ed. 2d 606 (1996) ("That a suit may be a class action . . . adds nothing to the question of standing, for even named plaintiffs who represent a class must allege and show that they personally have been injured, not that injury has been suffered by other, unidentified members of the class to which they belong and which they purport to represent." (quotations and citations omitted)); Warth v. Seldin, 422 U.S. 490, 501, 95 S. Ct. 2197, 45 L. Ed. 2d 343 (1975) ("[T]he plaintiff still must allege a distinct and palpable injury to himself, even if it is an injury shared by a large class of other possible litigants."); O'Shea v. Littleton, 414 U.S. 488, 494, 94 S. Ct. 669, 38 L. Ed. 2d 674 (1974) ("[I]f none of the named plaintiffs purporting to represent a class establishes the requisite of a case or controversy with the defendants, none may seek relief on behalf of himself or any other member of the class." (citations omitted)); Winer Family Trust v. Queen, 503 F.3d, 319, 326 (3d Cir. 2007) ("The initial inquiry in either case is whether the lead plaintiff individually has standing.").

Less well-settled is whether, pre-class certification, named plaintiffs are required to establish standing for each and every [*26] claim set forth in a class action complaint, or whether it is sufficient to establish standing for a single claim because a court will determine if the named plaintiffs have standing to represent the unnamed class members seeking redress under the balance of asserted claims during the class certification process pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 23. This issue typically arises in cases, such as this one, where named plaintiffs assert analogous causes of action under the laws of many states but cannot specifically tie their injuries to each state. Indeed, here, IP Plaintiffs, who allege that they purchased MgO products in Iowa and California, assert violations of twenty-five states' antitrust laws. [10]

[10] At this time, IP HN12[] Plaintiffs lack Article III standing to assert violations of the following state antitrust laws because they fail to allege a causal connection between their injuries and the conduct prohibited by the laws of those states, which require a showing that such conduct occurred, or whose effect was felt, in-state. See A.R.S. § 44-1402 (Arizona) ("A contract, combination or conspiracy between two or more persons in restraint of, or to monopolize, trade or commerce, [*27] any part of which is within this state, is unlawful"); HN13[] DC ST § 28-4502 (District of Columbia) (same); HN14[] HRS § 480-4 (Hawaii) (same); HN15[] 10 M.R.S.A. § 1101 (Maine) (same); HN16[] SDCL § 37-1-3.1 (South Dakota) (same); HN17[] K.S.A. § 50-101 (Kansas) ("A trust is a combination of capital, skill, or acts, by two or more persons," among other things, "[t]o fix any standard or figure, whereby such person's price to the public shall be, in any manner, controlled or established, any article or commodity of merchandise, produce or commerce intended for sale, use or consumption in this state"); HN18[] M.C.L.A. §§ 445.771, 445.772 (Michigan) ("A contract, combination, or conspiracy between 2 or more persons in restraint of, or to monopolize, trade or commerce in a relevant market is unlawful. . . . IP Plaintiffs' allegations that "[P]rices for MgO and MgO Products were raised, fixed, maintained, and stabilized [*30] at artificially high levels throughout the states," and "Defendants' illegal conduct had a substantial effect on commerce in the above states" (Indirect CAC ¶¶ 72, 73) are conclusory and fail to specifically tie their injuries to the alleged MgO conspiracy occurring or its effects in those states.

IP Plaintiffs lack statutory standing to sue under HN29[] Utah's antitrust laws because they have a citizenship/residency requirement. See U.C.A. §§ 1953 76-10-919 ("A person who is a citizen of this state or a resident of this state and who is injured or is threatened with injury in his business or property by a violation of the Utah Antitrust Act may bring an action for injunctive relief and damages, regardless of whether the person dealt directly or indirectly with the defendant."), and under HN30[] Illinois's antitrust laws because they do not allow a private right of action. See 740 ILCS 10/7 ("This State, counties, municipalities, townships and any political subdivision organized under the authority of this State, and the United States, are considered a person having standing to bring an action under this subsection.").

However, IP Plaintiffs apparently have standing to sue under HN31[] Mississippi, New Hampshire, [*31] Vermont, and Wisconsin antitrust laws, as they provide a private right of action and have no discernible requirement of in-state conduct or effect, or residency. See Miss. Code Ann. §§ 75-21-1, 9 (Mississippi); HN32[] N.H. Rev. Stat § 356:1 (New Hampshire); HN33[] 9 V.S.A. §§ 2453, 2465 (Vermont); HN34[] W.S.A. §§ 133.03, 133.18 (Wisconsin).

Mar. 11, 2011) ("[N]amed plaintiffs lack standing to assert claims under the laws of the states in which they do not reside or in which they suffered no injury.").

Two Supreme Court decisions, Amchem Prods. Inc. v. Windsor, 521 U.S. 591, 117 S. Ct. 2231, 138 L. Ed. 2d 689 (1997) and Ortiz v. Fibreboard Corp., 527 U.S. 815, 119 S. Ct. 2295, 144 L. Ed. 2d 715 (1999), are at the heart of this issue. In Amchem, the Supreme Court reviewed a challenge to certification of a global settlement class involving persons who were exposed to asbestos. See 521 U.S. at 591-92. In doing so, it analyzed the role of settlement in determining class certification under Rule 23, as well as arguments set [*34] forth by objectors that certain members of the settlement class lacked standing to sue because they had not sustained a cognizable injury or because their injury was not redressable. Id. at 612. The Court declined to reach the standing arguments because it found the class certification issues under Rule 23 to be dispositive. Id. Consequently, the Court held that because resolution of the class certification issues "here is logically antecedent to the existence of Article III issues, it is appropriate to reach them first." Id. (citation omitted).

The Court further explained that it was "follow[ing] the path taken by the [Third Circuit] Court of Appeals" in "declin[ing] to reach these issues because they 'would not exist but for the [class-action] certification.'" Id. (quoting Georgine v. Amchem Prods., Inc., 83 F.3d 610, 623 (3d Cir. 1996)). To be sure, in Georgine, the Court of Appeals, when faced with class certification and Article III issues simultaneously, decided the class certification issues first because they were dispositive. 83 F.3d at 623. In doing so, the Court found "it prudent not to decide issues unnecessary to the disposition of the case, especially when many of these [*35] issues implicate constitutional questions." Id. (citing Spector Motor Serv., Inc. v. McLaughlin, 323 U.S. 101, 105, 65 S. Ct. 152, 89 L. Ed. 101 (1944) (expressing the rule that courts will avoid constitutional questions when possible)). Thus, these rulings echo the "fundamental and longstanding principle of judicial restraint [] requir[ing] that courts avoid reaching constitutional questions in advance of the necessity of deciding them." Lyng v. Northwest Indian Cemetery Protective Ass'n, 485 U.S. 439, 445, 108 S. Ct. 1319, 99 L. Ed. 2d 534 (1988).

The Ortiz court also dealt with certification issues regarding a global settlement class for asbestos related injuries and arguments regarding the Article III standing of certain class members who petitioners alleged did not suffer an injury-in-fact. 527 U.S. at 821, 831. As in Amchem, the Court decided to address the class certification issues before the Article III questions. Id. at 831. In doing so, it explained:

> Ordinarily, of course, this or any other Article III court must be sure of its own jurisdiction before getting to the merits. Steel Co. v. Citizens for a Better Environment, 523 U.S. 83, 88-89, 118 S.Ct. 1003, 140 L.Ed.2d 210 (1998). But the class certification issues are, as they were in Amchem, [*36] "logically antecedent" to Article III concerns, 521 U.S., at 612, 117 S.Ct. 2231, and themselves pertain to statutory standing, which may properly be treated before Article III standing, see Steel Co., supra, at 92, 118 S.Ct. 1003. Thus the issue about Rule 23 certification should be treated first, "mindful that [the Rule's] requirements must be interpreted in keeping with Article III constraints. . . ." Amchem, supra, at 612-613, 117 S.Ct. 2231.

Id.

Thus, Amchem and Ortiz stand for the proposition that, HN35[] in cases where a court is presented with class certification and Article III standing issues simultaneously, and the class certification issues are dispositive in that they pertain to statutory standing—i.e. whether a statute authorizes a given party to sue in the first place, the certification issues are "logically antecedent" to the standing issues and the court may therefore elect to address the certification issues first in the interest of judicial restraint. Under these circumstances, if a court finds that "certification of [a] proposed class [is] improper, the issue of certain class members' standing would [be] moot." In re Welbutrin XL, 260 F.R.D. at 153.

Here, however, the Court [*37] is presented solely with the issue of whether the named IP Plaintiffs have standing to assert the causes of action in the Indirect CAC, a threshold issue that the Court must address. See Lewis 518 U.S. at 357. Contrary to Ramirez and In re Grand Theft Auto, the "[Supreme] Court's standing cases confirm that HN36[] a plaintiff must demonstrate standing for each claim he seeks to press." DaimlerChrysler Corp. v. Cuno, 547 U.S. 332, 335, 126 S. Ct. 1854, 164 L. Ed. 2d 589 (2006); see also Allen v. Wright, 468 U.S. 737, 752, 104 S. Ct. 3315, 82 L. Ed. 2d 556 (1984) ("[T]he standing inquiry requires careful judicial examination of a complaint's allegations to ascertain whether the particular plaintiff is entitled to an adjudication of the particular claims asserted."); Blum v. Yaretsky, 457 U.S. 991, 999, 102 S. Ct. 2777, 73 L. Ed. 2d 534 (1982) ("It is not enough that the conduct of which the plaintiff complains will injure someone. The complaining party must also show that he is within the class of persons who will be concretely affected. Nor does a plaintiff who has been subject to injurious conduct of one kind possess by virtue of that injury the necessary stake in litigating conduct of another kind, although similar, to which he has not been subject."). Otherwise, a plaintiff would be able to [*38] bring a class action complaint under the laws of nearly every state in the Union without having to allege concrete, particularized injuries relating to those states, thereby dragging defendants into expensive nationwide class discovery, potentially without a good-faith basis. In other words, the plaintiff would have to do "no more than name the preserve on which he intends to hunt." Johnson v. Ga. Highway Express, Inc., 417 F.2d 1122, (5th Cir. 1969), overruled on other grounds by Griffin v. Dugger, 823 F.2d 1476 (11th Cir. 1987). Accordingly, because the named IP Plaintiff lack standing to assert antitrust violations under the laws of Arizona, the District of Columbia, Hawaii, Illinois, Maine, Minnesota, Nebraska, Nevada, New Mexico, New York, North Carolina, North Dakota, Oregon, South Dakota, Tennessee, Utah, and West Virginia, see Note 10, IP Plaintiffs' claims under those laws are dismissed.

C. The Alleged MgO Conspiracy

i. One Conspiracy or Two

As an initial matter, Defendants maintain that Plaintiffs allegations are confusing to the point where it is impossible to determine whether the alleged conspiracy relates to DBM, CCM, or MgO in general. As a result, Defendants contend that [*39] Plaintiffs fail to allege a plausible antitrust conspiracy. This contention is unfounded. While Plaintiffs at times refer to anticompetitive conduct regarding MgO generally, it is clear from the surrounding allegations whether such conduct concerns DBM or CCM. [11] Indeed, as evidenced by their next contention, Defendants have no problem categorizing Plaintiffs' individual allegations as relevant to DBM or CCM.

On that note, Defendants contend that, to the extent that the Court finds that Plaintiffs allege distinct conspiracies regarding DBM and CCM, respectively, the Court should analyze the allegations relating to each conspiracy separately and require that those allegations independently meet the pleading requirements of Twombly and Iqbal. Plaintiffs counter that they allege a single MgO conspiracy comprised of intertwined and interdependent anticompetitive agreements.

As Plaintiffs point out, it is well-settled that HN37[] "[t]he character and effect of a conspiracy are not to be judged by dismembering it and viewing its separate parts, but only by looking [*40] at it as a whole." Continental Ore Co. v. Union Carbide & Carbon Corp., 370 U.S. 690, 699, 82 S. Ct. 1404, 8 L. Ed. 2d 777 (1962); see also In re Fine Paper Antitrust Litig., 685 F.2d 810, 822 (3d Cir. 1982) ("a seriatim examination of [] claims against each [] conspiracy defendant[] as if they were separate lawsuits . . . overlook[s] the conspiracy itself."). Defendants contend that the Supreme Court's ruling in Continental Ore is inapposite because that case concerned a monopolistic exclusion conspiracy, as opposed to a price-fixing conspiracy. This contention is remarkably unpersuasive. The very case that Continental Ore cites for the proposition that a court must look to an alleged conspiracy as a whole, United States v. Patten, 226 U.S. 525, 33 S. Ct. 141, 57 L. Ed. 333 (1913), concerned a conspiracy to artificially inflate the price of cotton. Furthermore, there is no indication that Continental Ore limited its ruling to conspiracies based on monopolistic exclusion. See 370 U.S. at 699 ("we do not believe that . . . liability under the antitrust laws can be measured by any rigid or mechanical formula . . ."). Finally, Defendants fail to present, nor does the Court see, a single reason why it would be any less logical or equitable to assess [*41] an alleged price-fixing or market allocation conspiracy as a whole than a monopolistic exclusion conspiracy.

Defendants' contention that the Court should analyze Plaintiffs' allegations separately with respect to DBM and CCM because Plaintiffs allege "two different courses of conduct as to the two different products at two different times" (Sumitomo Reply Br., 3) is also unavailing. While it is true that Defendants initially "agreed to fix prices and allocate markets for DBM," ("the DBM Agreement") and subsequently agreed to allocate the domestic CCM market to Premier ("the CCM Agreement"), (id.), those agreements are not mutually exclusive. To the contrary, the CCM Agreement is dependent on the DBM Agreement, and vice versa. See In re Vitamins Antitrust Litig., 320 F. Supp. 2d 1, 16 (D.D.C. 2004) (recognizing the potential "interdependency between various branches of a common conspiracy."). Specifically, Defendants entered into the CCM Agreement in order to restore and maintain the DBM Agreement after Premier broke that agreement due to Sumitomo and YAS's attempt to enter the domestic CCM market. Consequently, the absence of one eliminates the consideration for the other. Moreover, [*42] "[h]orizontal antitrust conspiracies commonly include sellers in more than one relevant market." *In re Vitamins Antitrust Litig., No. MISC 99-197, 2000 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 7397, 2000 WL 1475705, at 10 (D.D.C. May 9, 2000). Accordingly, the Court will treat Plaintiffs CACs as alleging a single conspiracy not to compete in the sale of two forms of MgO.

ii. The Necessity of Allegations Regarding the MgO Market

Defendants argue that Plaintiffs fail to allege an unlawful price-fixing and market allocation conspiracy because they do not set forth relevant market conditions and Sumitomo's, YAS's, and Premier's relative market power indicating that they plausibly could have fixed the price of DBM and allocated the domestic DBM and CCM markets. Plaintiffs argue that they are alleging per se violations of Section 1 of the Sherman Act and therefore "Defendants' arguments concerning market power and relevant markets are legally irrelevant." (DP Pl's. Br., 12.)

"Section 1 of the Sherman Act provides: HN38[] Every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, is declared to be illegal." In re Ins. Brokerage Antitrust Litig., 618 F.3d 300, 314 (3d Cir. 2010) [*43] (quoting 15 U.S.C. § 1). HN39[] "[T]his statutory language imposes two essential requirements on an antitrust plaintiff." Id. "First, the plaintiff must show that the defendant was a party to a contract, combination . . . or conspiracy." Id. at 315 (quotation and citation omitted). This requires the plaintiff to demonstrate "some form of concerted action" indicating a "unity of purpose or a common design and understanding or a meeting of the minds or a conscious commitment to a common scheme." Id. (quotations and citations omitted).

Second, "the plaintiff must show that the conspiracy to which the defendant was a party imposed an unreasonable restraint on trade." Id. (quotation and citation omitted). HN40[] "[T]he usual standard applied to determine whether a challenged practice unreasonably restrains trade is the so-called rule of reason." Id. (quotation and citation omitted). "[U]nder a rule-of-reason analysis, the plaintiff bears the initial burden of showing that the alleged [agreement] produced an adverse, anticompetitive effect within the relevant geographic market." Id. (quotation and citation omitted). "[S]uccessful attempts to meet this burden typically include a demonstration of defendants' [*44] market power, as a judgment about market power is [a] means by which the effects of the [challenged] conduct on the market place can be assessed." Id. at 315-16 (quotation and citations omitted).

"If the plaintiff carries this burden, the court will need to decide whether the anticompetitive effects of the practice are justified by any countervailing pro-competitive benefits." Id. However, "Judicial experience has shown that some classes of restraints" almost never have "redeeming competitive benefits," and therefore a court need not apply the rule of reason analysis. Id. Instead, they are "subject to a 'per se' standard." Id. "Paradigmatic examples are horizontal agreements among competitors to fix prices or to divide markets." Id. (quotation and citation omitted). If a plaintiff's allegations "fall into one of the recognized classes," an unreasonable restraint on trade is "conclusively presumed" and therefore "plaintiffs are relieved of the obligation to define a market and prove market power." Id. (citations omitted).

As discussed below, Plaintiffs sufficiently allege that Defendants entered into (1) a horizontal agreement to fix prices in and allocate shares of the domestic DBM market [*45] and (2) a horizontal agreement to allocate the domestic CCM market to Premier. Accordingly, Plaintiffs assert per se antitrust violations that do not require allegations regarding the nature of the domestic DBM and CCM markets or Defendants' power within those markets. [12]

iii. The DBM Agreement

Defendants argue that Plaintiffs' allegations of an agreement to fix prices in and allocate shares of the domestic DBM market are facially insufficient because (1) they fail to provide the substance of the agreement, (2) they fail to rule out potentially alternative, lawful explanations for such an agreement, and (3) their "factual narrative is inherently implausible." (Sumitomo (DP Pl's.) Br., 15.) Plaintiffs argue that their allegations of a price-fixing and market allocation agreement are sufficient because (1) they "explicitly state who was conferring with whom about MgO pricing, markets and customers" (DP Pl's. Br., [*46] 15.), and (2) Defendants' arguments regarding the inherent plausibility of the alleged conspiracy implicate factual questions that are not properly resolved on a motion to dismiss.

Defendants' contention that Plaintiffs' allegations are inadequate because they "fail to disclose the actual substance of the alleged conversations or agreements" (Sumitomo (DP Pl's.) Br., 14) is unavailing. HN41[] Twombly does not require detailed allegations regarding the specific nature of a price-fixing or market allocation agreement; rather, "stating such a claim requires a complaint with enough factual matter (taken as true) to suggest that an agreement was made." 550 U.S. at 556. Put another way, a complaint "simply calls for enough fact to raise a reasonable expectation that discovery will reveal evidence of an illegal agreement." Id. Requiring Plaintiffs to set forth the full details of an antitrust conspiracy at this stage of the litigation would present an onerous burden because "in antitrust cases, [] the proof is largely in the hands of the alleged conspirators." *In re Neurontin Antitrust Litig., No. 02-1390, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 77475, 2009 WL 2751029, at 7 (D.N.J. Aug. 28, 2009) (quoting Hosp. Building Co. Trustees of Rex Hosp., 425 U.S. 738, 96 S. Ct. 1848, 48 L. Ed. 2d 338 (1976)).

Here, [*47] Plaintiffs allege that (1) a significant portion of DBM consumed in the United States comes from China; (2) during the Class Period, Premier and Sumitomo bought nearly all Chinese DBM available for purchase and resold it to their customers in the United States; (3) Mr. Ahl of Premier "regularly called" Mr. Sumikawa of YAS "to discuss fixing Premier's and Sumitomo's [DBM] prices and allocating their respective MgO accounts in the U.S" (Direct CAC ¶ 34; Indirect CAC ¶ 42); (4) these market allocation and price-fixing schemes were implemented by Mr. Ahl and his successors at Premier and Mr. Wakisama of Sumitomo; (5) at the 2004 Tulsa meeting, Mr. Akiyama recounted to Mr. Sumikawa "multiple discussions" between him and Mr. Ahl to set DBM prices and allocate DBM markets "and ensure that Sumitomo was maintaining its agreement with Premier to fix [DBM] prices and allocate [DBM] markets," (Direct CAC ¶ 40; Indirect CAC ¶ 49); and (5) when Mr. Vannorsdel allegedly "expressed concern about compromising his relationship with Premier by helping facilitate Sumitomo and YAS's involvement" in the CCM market, Mr. Akiyama responded, "'Don't be concerned because we [Sumitomo] talk with Premier on a [*48] daily basis to set prices and to discuss what accounts they can have.'" (Direct CAC ¶ 41; Indirect CAC ¶ 50.)

[12] This also disposes of Sumitomo's contention that the Court should consider "certain relevant facts" noted in Animal Science Prods., Inc. v. China Nat'l Metals & Minerals, 596 F. Supp. 2d 842 (D.N.J. 2008) regarding the domestic DBM and CCM markets. (Sumitomo (DP Pl.'s) Br., 4.)

These allegations plausibly suggest that Defendants entered into an agreement to fix prices in and allocate shares of the domestic DBM market, the specifics of which can be reasonably expected to be revealed in discovery. Plaintiffs state (1) the subject of the alleged agreement, (2) the parties to the agreement and the specific individuals that discussed and implemented the agreement, and (3) the context in which the agreement arose. This is sufficient to withstand a motion to dismiss.

Defendants' contention that Plaintiffs fail to assert a plausible antitrust conspiracy because their allegations could, in fact, refer to a lawful vertical agreement between Sumitomo and Premier to fix prices for DBM whereby Sumitomo purchases DBM from Premier as a reseller, is irrelevant. HN42[] At the pleading stage, Plaintiffs need only set forth allegations that create an inference of an unlawful agreement, Twombly, 550 U.S. at 556, which, as previously discussed, they have done; they need not set forth allegations tending to rule out potential alternative explanations. [13]

Finally, Defendants' contention that the alleged DBM Agreement is "inherently implausible" in that, on the one hand, Sumitomo was allegedly worried about retaliatory action by Premier for attempting to enter the CCM market and, on the other hand, "could give credible assurances to the Vannorsdels that it could shield them from Premier['s] retaliation because of [Sumitomo's] 'daily' contact with Premier," (Sumitomo (DP Pl.'s) Br., 15) is similarly irrelevant because it asks the Court to improperly assess the merits of Plaintiffs' allegations. [14] See Aktieselskabet AF 21. November 2001 v. Fame Jeans Inc., 525 F.3d 8, 17, 381 U.S. App. D.C. 76 (D.C. Cir. 2008) ("Twombly was [*50] concerned with the plausibility of an inference of conspiracy, not with the plausibility of a claim. HN43[] A court deciding a motion to dismiss must not make any judgment about the probability of the plaintiff's success . . . the court must assume that all the allegations in the complaint as true (even if doubtful in fact)" (quotations and citations omitted)). Thus, Plaintiffs have sufficiently alleged an unlawful agreement among Defendants to fix prices in and allocate shares of the domestic DBM market.

iv. The CCM Agreement

Defendants contend that Plaintiffs fail to allege the existence of an unlawful agreement to allocate the domestic CCM market to Premier because [*51] (1) they merely allege parallel conduct that does not indicate concerted action, (2) there are obvious alternative explanations for Sumitomo's and YAS's decision not to enter the CCM market, and (3) they fail to establish that Defendants were competitors in the CCM market. Plaintiffs counter that they are not relying on parallel conduct but rather direct admissions of an agreement among Defendants to allocate the domestic CCM market to Premier, and therefore Defendants' proffered alternative explanations are irrelevant.

As previously discussed, HN44[] Section 1 of the Sherman Act "does not prohibit [all] unreasonable restraints of trade . . . but only restraints effected by a contract, combination, or conspiracy." Twombly, 550 U.S. at 553 (quotation and citation omitted). This is because seemingly anticompetitive conduct may be just as "consistent with conspiracy . . . [as] with a wide swath of rational and competitive business strategy unilaterally prompted by common perceptions of the market." Id. at 554 (citation omitted). Accordingly, "[t]he crucial question is whether the challenged anticompetitive conduct stem[s] from independent decision or from an agreement, tacit or express." Id.

[13] This is to be distinguished [*49] from the requirement to plead plus factors to rule out independent action "when a plaintiffs' claims of conspiracy rest on parallel conduct," In re Ins. Brokerage, 618 F.3d at 323, which is discussed below regarding the alleged CCM Agreement. Plaintiffs need not assert plus factors to establish the plausibility of the DBM Agreement because they set forth direct allegations of that agreement. See In re Ins. Brokerage, 618 F.3d at 323 ("Allegations of direct evidence of an agreement, if sufficiently detailed, are independently adequate.").

[14] Moreover, there is nothing "inherently implausible" about Sumitomo's attempt to assuage the Vannorsdels' concern about Premier's potential retaliation by stating that it speaks with Premier on a daily basis to set DBM prices and allocate shares of the DBM market. It is certainly plausible that Sumitomo was aware of the risk of retaliation by Premier but believed it could "enter the [CCM] market discreetly" (Direct CAC ¶ 39; Indirect CAC ¶ 48) because Premier's attention was focused on maintaining their agreement in the DBM market.

at 553 [*52] (quotation and citation omitted). "Hence, when allegations of parallel conduct are set out in order to make a § 1 claim, they must be placed in a context that raises a suggestion of a preceding agreement, not merely parallel conduct that could just as well be independent action." Id. at 557.

This is usually accomplished by pleading one or more "plus factors" that "indicate the existence of an actionable agreement." In re Ins. Brokerage, 618 F.3d at 321. While "[t]here is no finite set of such criteria," the Court of Appeals has identified "at least three such plus factors: (1) evidence that the defendant had a motive to enter into a [] conspiracy; (2) evidence that the defendant acted contrary to its interests; and (3) evidence implying a traditional conspiracy." Id. at 321-22 (quotations and citation omitted).

Here, Plaintiffs' allegations suggest an agreement among Defendants to allocate the CCM market to Premier. Plaintiffs allege that (1) representatives from Sumitomo and YAS met with others at a Tulsa hotel, in the summer of 2004, to discuss entering the domestic CCM market in order to fill Sumitomo's barge capacity; (2) Premier discovered their plan to enter the domestic CCM market [*53] and retaliated by lowering DBM prices; and (3) as a result, Sumitomo and YAS agreed with Premier to remain out of the CCM market.

To be sure, contrary to Plaintiffs' contentions, these allegations do not amount to a direct admission of an unlawful agreement to allocate the CCM market to Premier; taken in isolation, they merely amount to parallel conduct plus a conclusory allegation of an agreement. Placing these allegations in the context of the CACs as a whole, however, Plaintiffs successfully demonstrate the first plus factor—that Sumitomo and YAS had a motive to enter into an unlawful agreement with Premier to stay out of the domestic CCM market—and provide a plausible context for that agreement. As previously discussed, Sumitomo and YAS maintained an agreement with Premier to fix prices in and allocate shares of the domestic DBM market. As a result, as the CACs indicate, Sumitomo and YAS wanted to enter the CCM market undetected so that they could continue to maintain their agreement with Premier in the DBM market. When Premier discovered their plans and, in response, cut prices in the DBM market, Sumitomo and YAS agreed with Premier to stay out of the CCM market with the motive [*54] of restoring and maintaining their agreement in the DBM market.

In this context, Defendants' alternative explanations that a profit-maximizing entity could independently decide not to enter a market in which (1) it remained unfamiliar with the product and its customers and (2) the dominant player recently cut prices are by no means "obvious" or "more plausible" (Sumitomo (DP Pl's.) Br., 18) than an illegal agreement to stay out of the CCM market and therefore do not provide a basis for dismissal. HN45[] At the pleading stage, "a claim of conspiracy predicated on parallel conduct should be dismissed if common economic experience, or the facts alleged in the complaint itself, show that independent self-interest is an obvious alternative explanation for defendants' common behavior." In re Ins. Brokerage, 618 F.3d at 326. Plaintiffs' allegations need not rule out all potential alternative explanations. See Starr v. Sony BMG Music Entertainment, 592 F.3d 314, 325 (2d Cir. 2010) ("Although the Twombly court acknowledged that for purposes of summary judgment a plaintiff must present evidence that tends to exclude the possibility of independent action, it specifically held that, to survive a motion [*55] to dismiss, plaintiffs need only enough factual matter (taken as true) to suggest that an agreement was made" (quotations and citations omitted)).

Finally, Sumitomo's argument that Plaintiffs fail to allege a plausible agreement to allocate the CCM market to Premier because there is no indication that Defendants were actual or potential competitors in the CCM market is unavailing. Sumitomo specifically contends that Plaintiffs must establish that it had the intent and capability of entering the CCM market as a competitor in order to allege a plausible agreement among Defendants to allocate the CCM market to Premier. However, the authority cited by Sumitomo provides little support for this contention. See Palmer v. BRG of Georgia, Inc., 498 U.S. 46, 49-50, 111 S. Ct. 401, 112 L. Ed. 2d 349 (1990) (parties need not have competed in the same territorial market to unlawfully allocate that market); Andrx Pharms, Inc. v. Bioval Corp., Int'l, 256 F.3d 799, 806-07, 347 U.S. App. D.C. 178 (D.C. Cir. 2001) (potential competitor must show background and experience in new market, financial capability to enter market, and affirmative steps toward entry in order to establish injury-in-fact for standing to sue under Section 4 of the Clayton Act); Engine Specialities, Inc. v. Bombardier Ltd., 605 F.2d 1, 9 (1st Cir. 1979) [*56] (to sustain jury finding of unlawful horizontal market allocation agreement among potential competitors, there must have been sufficient support in the record to establish that potential competitors had the "necessary desire, intent, and capability to enter the market").

To be sure, the Court of Appeals has generally recognized that the existence of an unlawful horizontal agreement to allocate a given market must occur among competitors or potential competitors in that market:

> An agreement among persons who are not actual or potential competitors in a relevant market is for Sherman Act purposes brutum fulmen . . . To some extent, of course, a horizontal agreement tends to define the relevant market, for it tends to show that the parties to it are at least potential competitors. If they were not, there would be no point to such an agreement. Thus its very existence supports an inference that it would have an effect in a relevant market. Where, . . . however, the disputed issue is the existence or scope of the alleged horizontal agreement that is to be inferred from circumstantial evidence, the first inquiry must be whether or not each firm alleged to have been a party to it was an actual [*57] or potential competitor in that market.

United States v. Sargent Elec. Co., 785 F.2d 1123, 1127 (3d Cir. 1986) (reversing dismissal of indictment on double jeopardy grounds). However, Sumitomo fails to present, HN46[] nor is the Court aware of, any authority requiring a purchaser plaintiff to specifically establish, at the pleading stage, that the parties to a horizontal agreement to allocate a given market were competitors or potential competitors in that market. To require Plaintiffs, pre-discovery, to establish Sumitomo's background and experience in the CCM market, its financial capability to enter that market, and the specific steps taken by Sumitomo to enter it, would be overly onerous, as much of this information is likely to be exclusively in the hands of Sumitomo. [15] Thus, Plaintiffs have sufficiently alleged an unlawful agreement among Defendants to allocate the domestic CCM market to Premier.

v. YAS' Involvement in the Alleged Conspiracy

YAS separately argues that Plaintiffs fail to establish [*58] its participation in the alleged conspiracy because they fail to show that it came to a meeting of the minds with Sumitomo and Premier to (1) fix prices in and allocate shares of the domestic DBM market and (2) allocate the domestic CCM market to Premier. [16] Plaintiffs counter that (1) they have set forth direct allegations indicating YAS's knowledge and participation in the alleged conspiracy, and (2) YAS need not have played the same role in the conspiracy, maintain the same motives as Sumitomo or Premier for participating in it, or sell MgO to be held liable.

As previously discussed, to hold YAS or any other Defendant liable, Plaintiffs must set forth allegations suggesting that YAS maintained "unity of purpose or a common design and understanding or a meeting of minds or a conscious commitment [*60] to a common scheme" with Sumitomo and Premier to (1) fix prices in and allocate shares of the domestic DBM market, and (2) allocate the CCM market to Premier. In re Ins. Brokerage, 618 F.3d at 315 (quotations and citation omitted). This does not require a showing that YAS knew of or participated in every transaction in furtherance of or related to the alleged conspiracy. See TV Signal Co. of Aberdeen v. American Tel. & Tel. Co., 462 F.2d 1256, 1259 (8th Cir. 1972) ("Although knowledge is implicit in the requirement of unity of [15] In any event, Plaintiffs allege Sumitomo's motive for entering the CCM market (filling excess barge capacity), and certain steps taken to enter that market (meeting with the Vannorsdels in Tulsa).

[16] Citing to Toledo Mack Sales & Serv. v. Mack Trucks, Inc., 530 F.3d 204 (3d Cir. 2008), YAS further argues that Plaintiffs' failure to establish that YAS occupies the same level as Sumitomo and Premier on the MgO supply chain "precludes per se treatment of YAS' alleged antitrust violations." (YAS Br., 4 n. 5.) This argument misses the mark. While Toledo Mack noted that, "[i]n contrast to horizontal price-fixing agreements between entities at the same level of a product's distribution chain, the legality of a vertical agreement that imposes a restriction on the dealer's ability to sell the manufacturer's product is governed [*59] by the rule of reason," and that "[t]he rule of reason analysis applies even when . . . the plaintiff alleges that the purpose of the vertical agreement between a manufacturer and its dealers is to support illegal horizontal agreements between multiple dealers," 530 F.3d at 225 (citation omitted), Plaintiffs do not allege YAS' arrangement with Sumitomo to source Chinese magnesite and MgO constitutes an unlawful vertical agreement to support a horizontal conspiracy between Sumitomo and Premier. Rather, Plaintiffs allege that YAS participated directly with Sumitomo and Premier in the alleged horizontal conspiracy to fix prices in and allocate shares of the DBM market and allocate the CCM market to Premier. Moreover, "[t]he law is settled that HN47[] where an upstream supplier participates in a conspiracy involving horizontal competitors, it is proper to analyze the entire restraint as one of horizontal price-fixing." In re Mercedez-Benz, 157 F. Supp. 2d at 362.

purpose, no case of which we are aware requires that each party to a conspiracy knows of each transaction encompassed by the conspiracy in order to be held accountable therefore."); In re Vitamins Antitrust Litig., 320 F. Supp. 2d 1, 15 (D.D.C. 2004) (HN48[] "Although Plaintiffs must show that each Defendant had knowledge of an agreement as to the overall conspiracy, they need not show (1) evidence of a formal agreement, or (2) knowledge, on behalf of the Defendant, of every detail of the alleged conspiracy."); In re Mercedez-Benz, 157 F. Supp. 2d at 375 ("That a particular defendant may or may not have joined in a specific overt act in furtherance of the conspiracy [*61] . . . does not affect its status as a conspirator."). On the other hand, "knowledge alone [of the conspiracy] is not sufficient" to hold it liable. In re Vitamins, 320 F. Supp. 2d at 16. Plaintiffs must therefore set forth allegations suggesting that YAS (1) had knowledge of the conspiracy to fix prices in and allocate shares of the domestic DBM market, and allocate the CCM market to Premier, and (2) intended to join that conspiracy. Id. "[A] a party progresses form mere knowledge of an endeavor to intent to join it when there is 'informed and interested cooperation, stimulation, instigation. And there is also a stake in the venture which, even if it may not be essential, is not irrelevant to the question of conspiracy.'" Id. (quoting Direct Sales Co. v. United States, 319 U.S. 703, 713, 63 S. Ct. 1265, 87 L. Ed. 1674 (1943)).

1. The DBM Agreement

Plaintiffs allege that Mr. Sumikawa of YAS (1) facilitates Sumitomo's purchases of Chinese DBM for resale in the domestic DBM market, (2) received regular phone calls from Mr. Ahl of Premier "to discuss fixing Premier's and Sumitomo's [DBM] prices and allocating their respective [DBM] accounts in the U.S," (Direct CAC ¶ 34; Indirect CAC ¶ 42), and (3) attended the 2004 Tulsa [*62] meeting where (i) Mr. Akiyama of Sumitomo recounted to him "multiple discussions" between him and Mr. Ahl to set DBM prices and allocate DBM markets "and ensure that Sumitomo was maintaining its agreement with Premier to fix [DBM] prices and allocate [DBM] markets," (Direct CAC ¶ 40; Indirect CAC ¶) and (ii) it was revealed that Sumitomo communicates with Premier on a daily basis fix prices and allocate accounts. These allegations create a plausible inference that YAS had knowledge of an agreement to fix prices in and allocate shares of the domestic DBM market and the intent to join it. Accepting Plaintiff's allegations as true and making all reasonable inferences in their favor, YAS' facilitation of Sumitomo's DBM purchasing indicates a plausible stake in the DBM Agreement, while its receipt of phone calls to discuss the Agreement and attendance at a meeting at which it was revealed indicates that YAS had knowledge of the DBM Agreement and that it engaged in informed and interested cooperation.

Citing to In re Elevator Antitrust Litig., 502 F.3d 47, 50 (2d Cir. 2007) and Hinds County, Mississippi v. Wachovia Bank N.A., 620 F. Supp. 2d 499, 518 (S.D.N.Y. 2009), YAS argues that these [*63] allegations should be "discounted" because they amount to mere "averments of agreements made at some unidentified place and time." (YAS Br., 4.) In re Elevator Antitrust Litig. concerned a list of "basically every type of conspiratorial activity that one could imagine . . . in entirely general terms without any specification of any particular activities by any particular defendant." 502 F.3d at 50. Similarly, Hinds County dealt with conclusory allegations of "'per se illegal horizontal communications' in support of [an] alleged conspiracy." 620 F. Supp. 2d at 518. Here, in contrast, Plaintiffs allege (1) the way in which YAS participates with Sumitomo— a member of the conspiracy—in the domestic DBM market, (2) phone calls from Premier— another party to the conspiracy—to YAS to discuss fixing prices in and allocating shares of the domestic DBM market, and (3) YAS's attendance at a meeting where Sumitomo—its partner in the domestic DBM market—recounted to YAS discussions in which it set prices in and allocated shares of the domestic DBM market with Premier. These allegations, do not amount to a mere "list of theoretical possibilities," In re Elevator Antitrust Litig., 502 F.3d at 50, [*64] or "require the Court to assume the existence of the conspiracy." Hinds County, 620 F. Supp. 2d at 518. Rather, they make the alleged conspiracy more plausible.

YAS further argues that "it is wholly implausible that [it] (a minor player that was not itself a manufacturer, importer or seller [17]) would have discussed fixing Premier's and Sumitomo's [DBM] prices," particularly since Plaintiffs fail to

[17] Citing to Howard Hess Dental Laboratories Inc. v. Dentsply Intern, Inc., 424 F.3d 363 (3d Cir. 2005), YAS also argues that Plaintiffs' failure to allege that it sold DBM or CCM requires its dismissal from this case as a matter of law. While that case notes HN49[] the well-settled proposition that only direct purchasers may recover damages in federal antitrust suits, it by no means

"allege that YAS had any ability to influence (let alone) dictate Sumitomo's [DBM] prices, nor which customers Sumitomo dealt with." (YAS Br., 5.) As previously discussed, this line of argument is not only improper at the pleading stage—where the Court must accept Plaintiffs' allegations as true—it is also unpersuasive. There is nothing "wholly implausible" [*65] about YAS participating in discussions to fix prices in and allocate shares of the domestic DBM market. Sumitomo was only able to participate in the domestic DBM market in the first place due to YAS's relationship with Chinese mines from which Sumitomo could purchase DBM and magnesite. Consequently, it is certainly plausible that YAS could participate in discussions with co-conspirators to fix prices and allocate shares of the DBM market.

2. The CCM Agreement

Plaintiffs' allegations suggesting an agreement among Sumitomo and Premier to allocate the CCM market to Premier apply with equal [*66] force to YAS. As previously discussed, Plaintiffs allege that (1) Sumitomo and YAS met with others at a Tulsa hotel, in the summer of 2004, to discuss entering the domestic CCM market in order to fill Sumitomo's barge capacity; (2) Premier discovered their plan to enter the domestic CCM market and retaliated by lowering DBM prices to keep Sumitomo and YAS out of the CCM market; and (3) as a result, Sumitomo and YAS agreed with Premier to remain out of the CCM market.

YAS argues that these allegations are conclusory because they "provide[] no details whatsoever about YAS's participation in this alleged agreement, including what role it is alleged to have played." (YAS Br., 7.) At the pleading stage, however, Plaintiffs need not allege the specific nature of YAS's or any other Defendant's participation in the agreement to allocate the CCM market to Premier. See In re Static Random Access Memory (SRAM) Antitrust Litig., 580 F. Supp. 2d 896, 904 (N.D.Cal. 2008) ("Although Plaintiffs will need to provide evidence of each Defendants' participation [at summary judgment] . . . they now only need to make allegations that plausibly suggest that each Defendant participated in the alleged conspiracy."). [*67] As previously discussed, Plaintiffs must set forth allegations suggesting that YAS had knowledge of the agreement and the intent to join it. Plaintiffs' allegations that YAS, as Sumitomo's partner in the domestic MgO market, (1) attended a meeting to arrange for Sumitomo to enter the domestic CCM market and (2) subsequently agreed with Sumitomo and Premier to allocate that market to Premier in order to maintain their agreement to fix prices and allocate shares of the domestic DBM market, do just that.

Finally, like Sumitomo, YAS argues that it cannot be held liable for the alleged agreement to allocate the domestic CCM market to Premier because Plaintiffs fail to establish that YAS was an actual or potential competitor in that market. For the reasons discussed in Point IIC*iv*, at the pleading stage, Plaintiffs, as purchasers, need not establish that YAS was an actual or potential competitor in the CCM market in order to allege its participation in a horizontal conspiracy. Furthermore, YAS's (1) role in facilitating Sumitomo's purchase of Chinese DBM and (2) attendance at the 2004 Tulsa meeting where it, Sumitomo, and the Vannorsdels discussed entering into the CCM market, suggests that [*68] YAS intended to participate with Sumitomo in the CCM market in the same way as they had been participating in the DBM market. Thus, Plaintiffs have set forth allegations plausibly suggesting that YAS participated in an agreement to allocate the CCM market to Premier.

D. Statute of Limitations and Fraudulent Concealment

HN50[] Actions brought under the Clayton Act are subject to a four-year statute of limitations. 15 U.S.C. § 15b. In an antitrust conspiracy that continues over a period of years, each overt act in furtherance thereof that injures the plaintiff—for example, the selling of a price-fixed product—starts the statute of limitations period running for that particular act. Klehr v. A.O. Smith Corp., 521 U.S. 179, 189, 117 S. Ct. 1984, 138 L. Ed. 2d 373 (1997); see also Zenith Radio Corp. v. Hazeltine Research, Inc., 401 U.S. 321, 338, 91 S. Ct. 795, 28 L. Ed. 2d 77 ("Generally, a cause of action accrues and the statute begins to run when a defendant commits an act that injures a plaintiff's business" (citations omitted)). However, "the commission of a separate new overt act generally does not permit the plaintiff to recover for the injury caused by old overt acts outside the limitations period." Klehr, 521 U.S. at 190 (citations omitted).

Defendants argue [*69] that Plaintiffs' federal antitrust claims are barred by the applicable four-year statute of limitations. Specifically, Defendants contend that Plaintiffs (1) fail to allege overt acts in furtherance of the alleged conspiracy that occurred after 2004 and (2) fail to plead fraudulent concealment with particularity to otherwise toll the statute of limitations. Plaintiffs do not dispute that they fail to allege overt acts after 2004, but maintain that they plead fraudulent concealment with the requisite particularity to toll the statute of limitations.

HN51[] The equitable doctrine of fraudulent concealment applies to every federal statute of limitations. Holmberg v. Armbrecht, 327 U.S. 392, 397, 66 S. Ct. 582, 90 L. Ed. 743 (1946). To toll a statute of limitations through fraudulent concealment, a plaintiff must show "(1) an affirmative act of concealment; (2) which misleads or relaxes the plaintiff's inquiry, who (3) exercised due diligence in investigating his cause of action." In re Lower Lake Erie Iron Ore Antitrust Litig., 998 F.2d 1144, 1178-79 (3d Cir. 1993) (citation omitted). In addition, HN52[] allegations of fraudulent concealment must be pled with particularity in accordance with Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 9(b). [*70] In re Mercedes-Benz, 157 F. Supp. 2d at 368.

However, "Rule 9[(b)] does not require plaintiffs to plead facts that, by the nature of the alleged fraud, are within the defendants' control." Id. (citing In re Craftmatic Secs. Litig., 890 F.2d 628, 645 (3d Cir. 1989)). Indeed, "[c]ourts must be sensitive to the fact that [a rigid] application of Rule 9(b) prior to discovery may permit sophisticated defrauders to successfully conceal the details of their fraud." In re Craftmatic, 890 F.2d at 645 (quotation and citation omitted). "Thus, courts have relaxed the rule when factual information is peculiarly within the defendant's knowledge or control." Id. Accordingly, under the more flexible application of Rule 9(b), Plaintiffs need not allege the specific information that is exclusively within Defendants' knowledge or control. See id. at 646. However, Plaintiffs must allege facts suggesting fraudulent concealment and "why additional information lies exclusively within the defendants' control." Id.

As discussed fully below, Plaintiffs fail to satisfy each element of fraudulent concealment, thus requiring dismissal of their federal antitrust claims as time-barred. However, the Court will grant [*71] Plaintiffs leave to amend their allegations of fraudulent concealment to equitably toll the statute of limitations. [18]

[18] IP Plaintiffs' state antitrust law claims similarly require dismissal for failure to establish fraudulent concealment, as their HN53[] applicable statutes of limitations range from three to six years. However, to the extent that IP Plaintiffs sufficiently amend their allegations to establish fraudulent concealment of their federal antitrust claims, they will also have established fraudulent concealment of their state law antitrust claims. [*73] See Note 9.

i. Affirmative Acts of Concealment

Defendants argue that (1) Plaintiffs fail to sufficiently allege affirmative acts of concealment and (2) their allegations that the MgO conspiracy is self-concealing cannot satisfy the first element of fraudulent concealment. [19] Plaintiffs contend that they have alleged (1) a self-concealing conspiracy that satisfies the first element of fraudulent concealment, or, (2) in the alternative, affirmative acts of concealment committed by Defendants.

The Court of Appeals has yet to define what constitutes an affirmative act [*74] of concealment in antitrust cases. However, courts have generally taken two distinct views. In re Mercedez-Benz, 157 F. Supp. 2d at 368. The first requires a plaintiff to show one or more affirmative acts to conceal an antitrust conspiracy that are wholly extrinsic to the conspiracy itself. See, e.g., Colorado v. Western Paving Constr. Co., 630 F. Supp. 206, 210 (D.Colo. 1986), aff'd en banc by an equally divided court, 841 F.2d 1025 (10th Cir. 1988), cert. denied, 488 U.S. 870, 109 S. Ct. 179, 102 L. Ed. 2d 148 (1988). The second also requires a plaintiff to show one or more affirmative acts of concealment, but those acts may be part and parcel to, or in furtherance of, the conspiracy. Supermarket of Marlinton, Inc. v. Meadow Gold Dairies, Inc., 71 F.3d 119, 122 (4th Cir. 1995) (citing Texas v. Allen Constr. Co., 851 F.2d 1526, 1532 (5th Cir. 1988)). The Court finds the first view to be overly restrictive in this case. In a conspiracy involving price-fixing, "it [*75] is virtually impossible to distinguish between acts in furtherance of the conspiracy and acts designed to maintain the conspiracy's secrecy because the conspiracy's success is often contingent upon its ability to avoid detection by regulators and purchasers." *In re Aspartame Antitrust Litig., No. 06-1732, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 16995, 2007 WL 5215231, at 5 (E.D.Pa. Jan. 18, 2007); See also In re Mercedez-Benz, 157 F. Supp. 2d at 372 ("secrecy is [the] natural lair" of a price-fixing conspiracy).

Several courts, including those in this Circuit, have found that a plaintiff may avoid the affirmative act requirement altogether in cases where an antitrust conspiracy is "inherently self-concealing." See, e.g., *In re Aspartame, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 16995, 2007 WL 5215231, at 5; In re Nine West Shoes Antitrust Litig., 80 F. Supp. 2d 181, 192 (S.D.N.Y. 2000); In re Mercedez-Benz, 157 F. Supp. 2d at 371; Pennsylvania Milk Indus. Mgmt. Corp., 812 F. Supp. 500 (E.D.Pa. 1992); Bethlehem Steel Corp. v. Fischbach & Moore, Inc., 641 F. Supp. 271, 273-74 (E.D.Pa. 1986). However, the definition of a self-concealing antitrust conspiracy, particularly one that involves price-fixing, remains nebulous. The In re Mercedez-Benz court held that a self-concealing [*76] antitrust conspiracy is one where "concealment is so intertwined with the conspiracy as a whole that the equitable foundations of the fraudulent concealment doctrine require the limitations period to be tolled." 157 F. Supp. 2d at 371. Other courts maintain that all properly alleged price-fixing conspiracies are inherently self-concealing. See, e.g., *In re Issuer Plaintiff Initial Public Offering Antitrust Litig., No. 00-7804, 2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 3892, 2004 WL 487222, at 4 (S.D.N.Y. Mar. 12, 2004); Nine West, 80 F. Supp. 2d at 192.

The Court agrees that, HN79[] under certain circumstances, an antitrust conspiracy may depend on its own concealment to the point that any act in furtherance thereof can also be said to conceal it. As the Supreme Court explained long ago, the purpose of the fraudulent-concealment doctrine is to prevent a defendant from "concealing a fraud, or . . . committing a fraud in a manner that it concealed itself until such time as the party committing the fraud could plead the statute of limitations to protect it." Bailey v. Glover, 88 U.S. (21 Wall.) 342, 349, 22 L. Ed. 636 (1874). However, the Court cannot find that conspiracies involving price-fixing are per se self-concealing, as such a finding would render [*77] them wholly exempt from the applicable statute of limitations.

Although not binding, In re Publication Paper Antitrust Litig., No. 04-1631, 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 19896, 2005 WL 2175139 (D.Conn. Sept. 6, 2005) provides a helpful framework under which to determine whether a conspiracy involving price-fixing is self-concealing for the purposes of establishing fraudulent concealment. That case found that a price-fixing conspiracy may be self-concealing, depending on the nature of the industry in which the item is price-fixed:

[19] Defendants further argue that Sumitomo's alleged admission to the Vannorsdels of the DBM Agreement cuts against their fraudulent concealment allegations. This is unpersuasive because the admission in no way put Plaintiffs on notice of their claims during the limitations period. See Emerson Elec. Co. v. Le Carbone Lorraine, SA, 500 F. Supp. 2d 437, 448 (D.N.J. 2007) (HN78[] "Where fraudulent concealment of a federal antitrust claim has been shown, the four-year federal statute of limitations begins anew from the time the plaintiff knew or should have known of the existence of the federal claim." (quotations and citations omitted)).

> In a competitive, well-regulated industry it will often be the case that a price-fixing conspiracy, if not concealed, would immediately fail because of governmental or private legal action. In such circumstances, any announcement of a price increase will carry with it an implicit statement that the price increase is legitimate, i.e., the result of competitive forces, not collusion. Nevertheless, not every price-fixing conspiracy is self-concealing. For example, there may be industries in which the participants are aware of collusion but it is not stopped because of indifference, fear, or because the perpetrators are exempt from, or beyond the reach of, antitrust laws. In such circumstances, the [*78] defendants' announcement of a price increase will not carry with it any implied certification of legitimacy, and so, absent additional circumstances, will not be self-concealing.

*In re Publication Paper, 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 19896, 2005 WL 2175139, at 4. Accordingly, HN80[] "whether a particular price-fixing conspiracy or, more precisely, whether a particular announcement of a price increase necessarily conceals its true nature depends on the nature of the industry and the circumstances surrounding the announcement." Id. In other words, a plaintiff must show circumstances indicating that a price increase "carries with it a pretense of legitimacy" or "that it would necessarily be assumed that [it was] the result of legitimate market forces." Id. To do so, a plaintiff may, for example, set forth allegations showing "that price increases are not abnormal, that such increases are typically ascribed to market forces, that an openly collusive price increase would not be tolerated, and that there was nothing suspicious about the circumstances under which each of the pre-limitations period price announcements were made." Id.

Here, Plaintiffs fail to allege particular circumstances surrounding the MgO market indicating that the [*79] alleged conspiracy was self-concealing. Plaintiffs come close to pleading an affirmative act of concealment in alleging that "price increases for MgO were justified by references to tight supply, thinning margins, and increased energy and freight costs" (Direct CAC ¶ 51; Indirect CAC ¶ 58), however they fail to explain the particular circumstances surrounding Defendants' price increases and pretextual justifications for those increases— information which is in Plaintiffs' control—in accordance with Rule 9(b). [20] Thus, Plaintiffs have failed to meet the first element of fraudulent concealment to toll the statute of limitations. However, the Court will grant Plaintiffs leave to amend to adequately plead either (1) circumstances surrounding the MgO market during the Class Period indicating that the alleged conspiracy is self-concealing, or (2) particular circumstances surrounding Defendants' price increases and the allegedly pretextual justifications for those price increases. See In re Burlington Coat Factory Litig., 114 F.3d at 1434.

ii. Reliance

Defendants argue that Plaintiffs fail to meet the second element of fraudulent concealment because they have not alleged that that they relied on Defendants' alleged affirmative acts of concealment. Plaintiffs argue that there is no reliance requirement to establish fraudulent concealment.

While the aforementioned elements of fraudulent concealment do not specifically note a reliance requirement, the language of the second element strongly suggests one. As previously noted, the second element of fraudulent concealment requires a showing that the defendant's concealment misled or relaxed the plaintiff's potential inquiry into what otherwise would have been evidence of its cause of action. In re Lower Lake Erie, 998 F.2d at 1179; see also Forbes v. Eagleson, 228 F.3d 471, 487 (3d Cir. 2000) ("[T]he plaintiff must show that he actually was mis[led] . . . into thinking that he d[id] not have a cause of action" (quotation and citation omitted)). HN81[] Implicit in the notion that a plaintiff's inquiry was misled or relaxed by an act of concealment is that the plaintiff relied on that [*81] act of concealment. That is, the plaintiff's inquiry would not have been misled or relaxed if it did not rely on the defendant's act of concealment. Here, Plaintiffs make no allegations that they were misled by Defendants' concealment of the alleged conspiracy and therefore have failed to meet the second element of fraudulent concealment. However, the Court will grant Plaintiffs leave to amend to adequately plead that they relied on the self-concealing nature of Defendants' conspiracy and/or pretextual justifications for Defendants' price increases. See In re Burlington Coat Factory Litig., 114 F.3d at 1434.

iii. Due Diligence

Defendants argue that Plaintiffs fail to satisfy the due diligence element of fraudulent concealment because they do not allege any due diligence performed during the Class Period, particularly that which led to the discovery of the alleged conspiracy. Plaintiffs counter that, under the fraudulent concealment doctrine, they need only plead that they would not have discovered their claim, even in the exercise of reasonable due diligence. Plaintiffs further argue that determinations of due diligence are fact-intensive and therefore not properly addressed on a motion [*82] to dismiss.

The parties cite somewhat differently worded standards to support their respective positions on what the due diligence prong requires. Defendants cite In re Lower Lake Erie, in which the Court of Appeals held that a plaintiff must show that he "exercised due diligence in investigating his cause of action." 998 F.2d at 1178-79. Plaintiffs, on the other hand cite Matthews v. Kidder, Peabody & Co., Inc., where the Court of Appeals held that a plaintiff must show that his ignorance is not attributable to a lack of "reasonable due diligence in attempting to uncover the relevant facts." 260 F.3d 239, 256 (3d Cir. 2001).

While the wording of the due diligence prong has differed slightly among Third Circuit case law, its substance has remained consistent. HN82[] The due diligence prong is rooted in the notion of inquiry notice: that an injury accrues when a reasonable plaintiff under the circumstances would have discovered it. See Matthews, 260 F.3d at 251. As previously discussed, a federal antitrust injury accrues when an overt act is committed that injures the plaintiff, thereby triggering the four-year statute of limitations; however, one or more affirmative acts of concealment "may [*83] toll the statute of limitations [] if [they] mislead[] a plaintiff into thinking that he does not have a cause of action." Davis v. Grusemeyer, 996 F.2d 617, 624 (3d Cir. 1993), overruled on other grounds by Rolo v. City Investing Co. Liquidating Trust, 155 F.3d 644 (3d Cir. 1998). Thus, to establish the due diligence prong of fraudulent concealment, a plaintiff must affirmatively show that he was not on inquiry notice of the alleged antitrust conspiracy. See id. ("A key aspect of a plaintiff's case alleging fraudulent concealment is [] proof that the plaintiff was not previously on notice of the claim he now brings." (citations omitted)).

HN83[] In this Circuit, "inquiry notice [is] analyzed in two steps." [21] Matthews, 260 F.3d at 252. "First, the burden is on the defendant[s] to show the existence of 'storm warnings.'" Id. In this case, a storm warning would be information or data that would alert a reasonable MgO purchaser of ordinary intelligence to potentially culpable conduct. "Second, if the defendants establish the existence of storm warnings, the burden shifts to the plaintiffs to show that they exercised reasonable due diligence and yet were unable to discovery their injuries." Id. [*84] This requires Plaintiffs to show that (1) they investigated the storm warnings and (2) in their investigation, they exercised the due diligence expected of a reasonable DBM or CCM purchaser of ordinary intelligence. See id.

As Plaintiffs point out, this inquiry is necessarily bound up with the facts of the case because it "implicates factual questions as to when [a] plaintiff discovered or should have discovered the elements of the cause of action," id. at 250 (quotations and citation omitted); see also Mercedez-Benz, 157 F. Supp. 2d at 373 ("At a minimum, this issue will involve assessing the factual circumstances surrounding the accused purchasing transactions and whether those circumstances would have put a reasonably diligent plaintiff on notice of a price-fixing conspiracy"), and, as a result, at the pleading stage, this court has been hesitant to dismiss an [*85] otherwise fraudulently concealed antitrust claim for failure to sufficiently allege due diligence. See In re Electrical Carbon Prods., 333 F. Supp. 2d at 317-18; Mercedez-Benz, 157 F. Supp. 2d at 374.

Citing to In re Publication Paper and Hinds County, Defendants maintain that, at the pleading stage, the due diligence prong nonetheless requires that "Plaintiffs [] allege with particularity when the Named Plaintiffs or Class members became aware of the antitrust violations and what inquiries [they] made into the activities alleged in the complaint." (Sumitomo Reply Br., 18) (internal quotations omitted). In In re Publication Paper, the plaintiffs alleged that they were aware of certain suspicious activities two years before the end of the limitations period. See *2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 19896, 2005 WL 2175139, at 5. Accordingly, the court found that the plaintiffs were therefore required allege they steps they took to investigate those activities. See id. Here, however, Plaintiffs do not allege any suspicious activities or storm warnings within the limitations period.

Defendants' citation to Hinds County is more persuasive. In that case, the plaintiffs attempted to satisfy the due diligence prong by HN84[] alleging that they [*86] "did not discover, nor could have discovered through reasonable diligence, that [d]efendants and their co-conspirators were violating the antitrust laws until shortly before this litigation was commenced, because [d]efendants and their co-conspirators were using deceptive and secret methods to avoid detection and affirmatively conceal their violations." Hinds County, 620 F. Supp. 2d at 521-22. The court found that allegation too vague to satisfy Rule 9(b) and further explained that to deem such an allegation sufficient would "allow[] the allegations required to satisfy the first prong of fraudulent concealment to also satisfy the third prong." Id. at 521-22.

The Court finds this logic persuasive. Here, Plaintiffs allege that, due to the secretive nature of the alleged MgO conspiracy, "neither plaintiffs nor the class members had knowledge of any of the foregoing violations, and neither plaintiffs nor the class members, until recently, could have discovered through reasonable diligence that [D]efendants and their co-conspirators had engaged in the foregoing violations." (Direct CAC ¶ 49; Indirect CAC ¶ 56.) This allegation cannot satisfy the requirements of Rule 9(b), particularly when [*87] it fails to encompass when and how Plaintiffs ultimately discovered the alleged MgO conspiracy—information that is certainly with Plaintiffs' control. See In re Craftmatic, 890 F.2d at 645. Without some level of specificity regarding Plaintiffs' discovery of the alleged conspiracy, it is impossible to discern whether Plaintiffs could or should have discovered it within the limitations period. Thus, Plaintiffs have failed to meet the due diligence prong of fraudulent concealment. However, Plaintiffs will be granted leave to amend to adequately plead, in accordance with Rule 9(b), (1) when and how they discovered the alleged MgO conspiracy, and (2) that the self-concealing nature of the conspiracy and/or pretextual justifications for Defendants' price increases made it so that they were not alerted to any storm warnings that would otherwise trigger an obligation to perform due diligence. See In re Burlington Coat Factory Litig., 114 F.3d at 1434.

E. IP Plaintiffs' Claims for Violations of Various States' Consumer Protection Laws

IP Plaintiffs assert claims under California, Florida, Hawaii, Massachusetts, Montana, Nebraska, New Hampshire, New York, South Carolina, and Vermont consumer [*88] protection and unfair competition laws. As with IP Plaintiffs' antitrust claims under state law, Defendants argue that IP Plaintiffs lack standing to assert their consumer protection claims, except that under California law, because they "do not allege purchases in any of the 10 states other than California." (Sumitomo (IP Pl.'s) Br., 5). Defendants further argue that these claims should be dismissed because IP Plaintiffs do not plead them with particularity in accordance with Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 9(b).

i. Standing

IP Plaintiffs' standing to sue under a state's consumer protection law is analogous to their standing under a state's antitrust law. As discussed in Point B, IP Plaintiffs' failure to tie their injuries or Defendants' unlawful conduct to a number of states was fatal to their standing to sue because the antitrust laws of those states require a showing that part of Defendants' conduct occurred or had an effect in-state. On the other hand, IP Plaintiffs have standing to sue under the antitrust laws that have no such requirement.

Similarly, many of the HN85[] consumer protection and unfair competition laws asserted by IP Plaintiffs require that Defendants' unlawful conduct [*89] affect trade and commerce in the state under whose law they are suing, see MCA 30-14-103, 102 (Montana) ("Unfair methods of competition and unfair or deceptive acts or practices in the conduct of any trade or commerce are unlawful. . . . [T]rade or commerce [must] directly or indirectly affect[] the people of this state."); HN86[] MGLA §§ 93A 1, 2 (Massachusetts) (same); HN87[] S.C. Code 1976 §§ 39-5-10, 20 (South Carolina) (same); HN88[] Neb. Rev. St. §§ 59-1602, 1601 (Nebraska) ("Unfair methods of competition and unfair or deceptive acts or practices in the conduct of any trade or commerce shall be unlawful. . . . Trade and commerce shall mean the sale of assets or services and any commerce directly or indirectly affecting the people of the State of Nebraska."); HN89[] N.H. Rev. Stat. § 358-A:2 (New Hampshire) ("It shall be unlawful for any person to use any unfair method of competition or any unfair or deceptive act or practice in the conduct of any trade or commerce within this state."); HN90[] N.Y. Gen. Bus. Law § 349 (New York) ("Deceptive acts or practices in the conduct of any business, trade or commerce or in the furnishing of any service in this state are hereby declared unlawful."); *Sherman v. Ben & Jerry's Franchising, Inc., 08-CV-207, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 72663, 2009 WL 2462539, at 10 (D.Vt. Aug. 10, 2009) [*90] (HN91[] Out of state plaintiffs alleging out of state conduct do not have standing to sue under Vermont Consumer Fraud Protection Act), while others do not, see HN92[] F.S.A. 501.204, 501.211 (Florida); HN93[] HRS 480-2, 480-13 (Hawaii). [22]

IP Plaintiffs' allegations that "Defendants agreed to, and did in fact, act in restraint of trade or commerce in a market that includes the above states, by affecting, fixing, controlling, and/or maintaining, at artificial and noncompetitive levels, the prices at which MgO and MgO Products were sold, distributed, or obtained in those states;" "MgO price competition was restrained, suppressed, and eliminated throughout the states;" and "MgO prices were raised, fixed, maintained, and stabilized at artificially high levels throughout the states" (Indirect CAC ¶¶ 79, 81) are conclusory and do not tie their injuries to the alleged conspiracy's effect on trade and commerce in those specific states. Therefore, IP Plaintiffs' consumer protection claims under Montana, Massachusetts, Nebraska, New Hampshire, and New York law are dismissed for lack of standing.

*ii. [92] Pleading Requirements

HN94[] The consumer protection laws of Florida and Hawaii—under which IP Plaintiffs currently maintain standing to sue—require that they plead the circumstances of any alleged fraudulent conduct with particularity in accordance with Rule 9(b). See Jovine v. Abbott Laboratories, Inc., 11-CV-80111, 795 F. Supp. 2d 1331, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 39702, 2011 WL 1376029 (S.D.Fla. Apr. 12, 2011) (applying Rule 9(b) to allegations of unfair or deceptive acts or practices under the Florida Deceptive and Unfair Trade Practices Act); Cannon v. U.S. Bank, NA, Civ. No. 11-00079, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 46455, 2011 WL 1637415, (D. Hawai'i Apr. 29, 2011) (applying Rule 9(b) to allegations of fraudulent business practices under the Hawaii State Unfair and Deceptive Business Practices Act); Athena Feminine Techs., Inc. v. Wilkes, No. C 10-4868, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 103209, 2011 WL 4079927 (N.D.Cal. Sept. 13, 2011) ("[A] claim brought under the fraudulent prong of the [Unfair Competition Law] must be pled with particularity under Rule 9(b)").

[22] Thus, contrary to Defendants' contention, the fact that IP Plaintiffs fail to allege that they reside or purchased an MgO product in a given state does not automatically deprive them of standing to sue under the state's consumer protection or unfair competition law. To be sure, the case Defendants cite in support of this contention held that the named plaintiffs in that case lacked standing to assert consumer protection and unfair competition claims under the laws of states in which they neither resided nor suffered an injury. See In re Potash 667 F. Supp. 2d at 924. However, the Court cannot accept this holding as a bright line rule. Standing issues are intimately bound up with the elements of the particular claim asserted, as a plaintiff must establish that his injury is "fairly traceable to the challenged action of the defendant." Lujan, 504 U.S. at 560; see also Blum, 457 U.S. at 999 ("The [*91] complaining party must also show that he is within the class of persons who will be concretely affected."); Allen, 468 U.S. at 752 ("[T]he standing inquiry requires careful judicial examination of a complaint's allegations to ascertain whether the particular plaintiff is entitled to an adjudication of the particular claims asserted.").

IP Plaintiffs' allegations that "Defendants deliberately failed to disclose material facts to Plaintiff and the classes concerning Defendants' unlawful activities and artificially inflated prices for MgO and MgO Products," and "misrepresented to all consumers [*93] during the Class Period that Defendants' MgO prices were competitive and fair" (Indirect CAC ¶ 80); see also (Indirect CAC ¶ 83) (alleging "affirmative misrepresentations and omissions concerning the price of MgO") are not set forth with any measure of particularity. See In re Suprema Specialties, Inc. Sec. Litig., 438 F.3d 256, 270 (3d Cir. 2006) (HN95[] Under Rule 9(b), a plaintiff must allege fraud with particularity by pleading the following: "(1) a specific false representation [or omission] of material fact; (2) knowledge by the person who made it of its falsity; (3) ignorance of its falsity by the person to whom it was made; (4) the intention that it should be acted upon; and (5) that the plaintiff acted upon it to his [or her] damage." (quotations and citation omitted)). Accordingly, IP Plaintiffs' consumer protection and unfair competition claims under Florida and Hawaii law are dismissed to the extent they are premised on Defendants' fraudulent conduct. However, IP Plaintiffs are granted leave to amend their allegations to comply with the requirements of Rule 9(b). Additionally, at this time, those claims may move forward to the extent they are premised on allegations of Defendants' [*94] engaging in unfair competition, as there is no indication that Rule 9(b) applies to such allegations.

III. CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, Defendants' Motion to Dismiss is GRANTED to the following extent only. The Court rules as follows:

(1) IP Plaintiffs' federal and state antitrust claims are dismissed without prejudice for lack of standing. IP Plaintiffs have thirty (30) days to amend their allegations to set forth (1) the specific products purchased containing DBM or CCM and (2) the nexus between an increase in the price of those products and the alleged conspiracy to fix prices in and allocate shares of the domestic DBM and CCM markets.

(2) IP Plaintiffs' antitrust claims under Arizona, the District of Columbia, Hawaii, Illinois, Maine, Minnesota, Nebraska, Nevada, New Mexico, New York, North Carolina, North Dakota, Oregon, South Dakota, Tennessee, Utah, and West Virginia law are dismissed with prejudice for lack of standing.

(3) Plaintiffs' federal and state antitrust claims are dismissed without prejudice as time-barred under the applicable statutes of limitations. Plaintiffs have thirty (30) days to amend their allegations of fraudulent concealment to equitably toll those [*95] statutes of limitations.

(4) IP Plaintiffs' consumer protection and unfair competition claims under Montana, Massachusetts, Nebraska, New Hampshire, and New York are dismissed with prejudice for lack of standing.

(5) IP Plaintiffs' consumer protection and unfair competition claims under Florida and Hawaii law are dismissed without prejudice to the extent they are premised on allegations of Defendants' fraudulent conduct. IP Plaintiffs have thirty (30) days to amend those allegations to comply with Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 9(b).

The Court will enter an order implementing this opinion.

HN1[] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6) allows a court to dismiss a complaint for failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted. In considering a 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss, the court construes all allegations in the light most favorable to the non-moving party. The court must accept all well-pleaded facts as hue and draw all reasonable inferences in favor of the plaintiff. The Supreme Court addressed the proper pleading standard under Rule 12(b)(6) in Bell Atlantic Corp. v. Twombly, a case involving anti-trust claims. Twombly established the need to include facts sufficient in the pleadings to give proper notice of the claim and its basis: While a complaint attached by a Rule 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss does not need detailed factual allegations, a plaintiffs obligation to provide the grounds of his entitlement to relief requires more than labels and conclusions, and a formulaic recitation of the elements of a cause of action will not do.

HN2[] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

Since Twombly, the U.S. Supreme Court has clarified that the pleading standard announced therein is generally applicable to cases governed by the Rules, not only to those cases involving antitrust allegations. The Iqbal court explained that Twombly was guided by two specific principles. First, although the court must accept as true all facts asserted in a pleading, it need not accept as true any legal conclusion set forth in a pleading. Second, the complaint must set forth facts supporting a plausible claim for relief and not merely a possible claim for relief. The court instructed that determining whether a complaint states a plausible claim for relief will be a context-specific task that requires the reviewing court to draw on its judicial experience and common sense. While legal conclusions can provide the framework of a complaint, they must be supported by factual allegations. When there are well-pleaded factual allegations, a court should assume their veracity and then determine whether they plausibly give rise to an entitlement to relief.

HN3[] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

The U.S. Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit explained the Twombly-Iqbal standard in Moss v. U.S Secret Service. The Moss court reaffirmed the Iqbal holding that a claim has facial plausibility when the plaintiff pleads factual content that allows the court to draw the reasonable inference that the defendant is liable for the misconduct alleged. In sum, for a complaint to survive a motion to dismiss, the non-conclusory factual content, and reasonable inference from that content must be plausibly suggestive of a claim entitling the plaintiff to relief.

Section 1 of the Sherman Act provides that every contract, combination, in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, is declared to be illegal. 15 U.S.C.S. § 1. Though § 1 could be read to prohibit all contracts, courts do not take a literal approach to its language. Rather, § 1 is read to outlaw only unreasonable restraints.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Sherman Act

HN6[] Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason, Sherman Act

To state a claim under § 1 of the Sherman Act, a plaintiff must plead evidentiary facts showing (1) that there was a contract, combination, or conspiracy; (2) that the agreement unreasonably restrained trade under either a per se rule of illegality or a rule of reason analysis; and (3) that the restraint of trade affected interstate commerce. The per se rule of illegality is used when an agreement facially appears to be one that would always or almost always restrict competition and decrease output. Examples of agreements judged under the per se rule are agreements between competitors to fix prices or divide markets. Application of the per se rule is limited, however, and most courts analyze agreements under the rule of reason.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Sherman Act

HN7[] Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason, Sherman Act

Under the rule of reason analysis, a plaintiff must allege "antitrust injury", that is, that the agreement at issue actually caused injury to competition within a market, beyond its impact on the plaintiff. When analyzing whether an agreement violates the Sherman Act under the rule of reason, the focus is the direct result of anti competitive conduct on consumers. Congress designed the Sherman Act to protect consumers or purchasers of goods in a market. Accordingly, antitrust injury manifests as higher prices, lower output, or decreased quality in the products within a defined market.

If the plaintiff simply wants the transfer of benefits that a defendant is reaping in the market, without discernable benefits to consumers, it is likely that no antitrust injury exists.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > Monopolization Offenses

HN11[] Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

Though claims under § 1 and § 2 of the Sherman Act differ, both require allegations of anticompetitive activity to state a claim. Section 2 of the Sherman Act provides that every person who shall monopolize, or attempt to monopolize, or combine or conspire with any other person or persons, to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, shall be deemed guilty of a felony. 15 U.S.C.S. § 2. To state a claim for monopolization under § 2, a plaintiff must plead facts showing that the defendant (1) possesses monopoly power in the relevant market; (2) willfully acquired or maintained that power; and (3) causal antitrust injury. Because antitrust laws seek to promote competition, including lawful competition by monopolists, proof of anticompetitive conduct is vital for a § 2 claim.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > General Overview

HN12[] Sherman Act, Scope

A decline in one party's market share is not sufficient for a Sherman Act claim. reduction in competition does not invoke the Sherman Act until it harms consumer welfare. On the contrary, injuries to rivals are byproducts of vigorous competition of the kind and quality that antitrust laws seek to nurture.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > General Overview

HN13[] Sherman Act, Scope

Alleging the natural consequences of competition is insufficient to state a claim under § 2 of the Sherman Act.

The U.S. Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit has held that a number of factors may bear on whether to grant leave to amend, such as prejudice to the non-moving party, bad faith by the moving party, and whether the amendment would be futile.

Opinion

FINDINGS AND RECOMMENDATION

ACOSTA, Magistrate Judge:

Introduction

Plaintiff Expedite, Inc. ("Expedite") alleges claims for violation of the Sherman Antitrust Act and the Clayton Act, as well as claims for intentional interference with economic relations and fraud.[1] Defendant Plus, Bags, Cars & Serv, LLC ("Plus") move for dismissal of all claims, arguing that Expedite has failed to state facts sufficient to constitute a claim for relief. Accordingly, Plus moves the court to dismiss Expedite's claims with prejudice. For the reasons set forth below, the court recommends that Plus's Rule 12(b)(6) [*2] motion be GRANTED.

Background

The alleged facts are taken as true from the pleading in question. Since 2000, Expedite, an Oregon-based corporation, has operated a baggage claim and delivery service at Portland International Airport ("PDX"). Expedite takes lost baggage recovered by customer airlines and delivers the baggage to its respective owners in Oregon and Washington.

As of 2000, Expedite and other baggage delivery vendors obtained contracts with airlines by winning a sealed bid process. Baggage delivery vendors would submit sealed bids to an intermediary, the intermediary would deliver the bids to airlines, and the airlines would select their preferred vendors. In January 2009, Diversified Services International ("DSI"), a bid-sourcing agent, became the intermediary for several major airlines. Tracy Hoffman served as DSI's officer agent. Expedite used DSI to obtain contracts with customer airlines, including Alaska Airlines ("Alaska") and Delta Airlines ("Delta").

In June 2009, Plus, a Florida-based corporation, purchased DSI. Following the purchase, Home [*3] Serv, a subsidiary corporation of Plus, began serving as the intermediary between baggage-delivery vendors and airlines. At the same time, Bags, Inc., a different subsidiary corporation of Plus, began placing bids as a baggage delivery vendor. Expedite alleges that Bags, Inc., learned of the content of other baggage delivery vendors's bids from Home Serv and used that knowledge to outbid other baggage delivery vendors, including Expedite.

Expedite alleges that around June 2009, Plus and Alaska secretly agreed that Alaska would award its baggage delivery exclusively to Bags, Inc. In November 2010, Home Serv sent Expedite a letter stating that Alaska and Plus were now jointly selecting baggage-delivery vendors for Alaska. The letter was issued by Tracy Hoffman, the former DSI employee now employed by Plus. The letter stated that Plus and Alaska would be basing their selections off of "evaluation of cost, service levels, vendor history/track record as well as the vendor's local or regional presence," and that Plus and Alaska were replacing Expedite with an alternate baggage-delivery vendor. (First Amended Complaint ¶ 24.) At the end of November 2010, Alaska sent Expedite a letter confirming [*4] that Alaska had replaced Expedite's contract for a contract with Bags, Inc. Plus and Delta subsequently formed a similar exclusive baggage delivery contract.

Expedite alleges that other baggage delivery vendors have left and are leaving PDX as a result of Plus' actions, and that Expedite's own share of the baggage-delivery market has declined from eighty to approximately twenty percent.

Legal Standard

HN1[] Rule 12(b)(6) allows a court to dismiss a complaint for failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted. In considering a 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss, the court construes all allegations in the light most favorable to the non-moving party. Livid Holdings Ltd. v. Salomon Smith Barney, Inc., 416 F.3d 940, 946 (9th Cir. 2005). The court must accept all well-pleaded facts as hue and draw all reasonable inferences in favor of the plaintiff. Wyler Summit P 'ship v. Turner Broad. Sys., Inc., 135 F.3d 658, 661 (9th Cir. 1998).

The Supreme Court addressed the proper pleading standard under Rule 12(b)(6) in Bell Atlantic Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007), a case involving anti-trust claims. Twombly established the need to include facts sufficient in the pleadings to give proper notice [*5] of the claim and its basis:

> While a complaint attached by a Rule 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss does not need detailed factual allegations, a plaintiffs obligation to provide the grounds of his entitlement to relief requires more than labels and conclusions, and a formulaic recitation of the elements of a cause of action will not do.

Id. at 555 (brackets omitted).

HN2[] Since Twombly, the Supreme Court has clarified that the pleading standard announced therein is generally applicable to cases governed by the Rules, not only to those cases involving antitrust allegations. Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S.662, 129 S. Ct. 1937, 1949, 173 L. Ed. 2d 868 (2009). The Iqbal court explained that Twombly was guided by two specific principles. First, although the court must accept as true all facts asserted in a pleading, it need not accept as true any legal conclusion set forth in a pleading. Id. Second, the complaint must set forth facts supporting a plausible claim for relief and not merely a possible claim for relief. Id. The court instructed that "[d]etermining whether a complaint states a plausible claim for relief will ... be a context-specific task that requires the reviewing court to draw on its judicial experience and common [*6] sense." Iqbal, 129 S. Ct. at 1949-50 (citing Iqbal v. Hasty, 490 F.3d 143, 157-158 (2nd Cir. 2007)). The court concluded: "While legal conclusions can provide the framework of a complaint, they must be supported by factual allegations. When there are well-pleaded factual allegations, a court should assume their veracity and then determine whether they plausibly give rise to an entitlement to relief." Id. at 1950.

HN3[] The Ninth Circuit further explained the Twombly-Iqbal standard in "Moss v. U.S Secret Service, 572 F.3d 962 (9th Cir. 2009). The Moss court reaffirmed the Iqbal holding that a "claim has facial plausibility when the plaintiff pleads factual content that allows the court to draw the reasonable inference that the defendant is liable for the misconduct alleged." Moss, 572 F.3d at 969 (quoting Iqbal, 129 S. Ct. at 1949). The court in Moss concluded by stating: "In sum, for a complaint to survive a motion to dismiss, the non-conclusory factual content, and reasonable inference from that content must be plausibly suggestive of a claim entitling the plaintiff to relief." Moss, 572 F.3d at 969.

Discussion

I. Sherman Act

Expedite captions its first claim for relief "Statutory Violation [*7] of Sherman Antitrust Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1 et. seq." and alleges a claim for "restraint of trade or monopolization." (FAC ¶¶ 30-41.) HN4[] Section 1 of the Sherman Act provides a cause of action for contracts, combinations, or conspiracies in restraint of trade. 15 U.S.C. § 1. Section 2 of the Sherman Act provides a cause of action for monopolies and attempted monopolies in restraint of trade. 15 U.S.C. § 2. In moving to dismiss Expedite's Sherman Act claim, Plus exclusively addresses claims arising under Section 1. However, viewing Expedite's first claim in the light most favorable to Expedite, the court assumes it alleges a cause of action under both Section 1 for restraint of trade and Section 2 for monopolization.

I. Restraint of trade

Plus contends that Expedite's First Amended Complaint does not state a claim under the Sherman Act because it does not contain factual allegations that Plus's actions had an adverse effect on competition in the baggage delivery market at PDX.

HN5[] Section 1 of the Sherman Act provides: "Every contract, combination, in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, is declared to [*8] be illegal." 15 U.S.C. § 1. Though Section 1 could be read to prohibit all contracts, courts do not take a literal approach to its language. Texaco Inc. v. Dagher, 547 U.S. 1,5, 126 S. Ct. 1276, 164 L. Ed. 2d 1 (2006). Rather, Section 1 is read to "outlaw only unreasonable restraints." State Oil Co. v. Khan, 522 U.S. 3, 10, 118 S. Ct. 275, 139 L. Ed. 2d 199 (1997).

HN6[] To state a claim under Section 1 of the Sherman Act, a plaintiff must plead evidentiary facts showing "(1) that there was a contract, combination, or conspiracy; (2) that the agreement unreasonably restrained trade under either a per se rule of illegality or a rule of reason analysis; and (3) that the restraint of trade affected interstate commerce." Bhan v. NME Hospitals, Inc., 929 F.2d 1404, 1410 (9th Cir. 1991). The per se rule of illegality is used when an agreement facially appears to be one that would always or almost always restrict competition and decrease output. Hahn v. Oregon Physicians' Serv., 868 F.2d 1022, 1025 (9th Cir. 1988). Examples of agreements judged under the per se rule are agreements between competitors to fix prices or divide markets. Leegin Creative Leather Products, Inc. v. PSKS, Inc., 551 U.S. 877, 886, 127 S. Ct. 2705, 168 L. Ed. 2d 623 (2007). Application of the per se rule is limited, however, and [*9] most courts analyze agreements under the rule of reason. Hahn at 1022.

HN7[] Under the rule of reason analysis, a plaintiff must allege "antitrust injury", that is, that the agreement at issue actually caused injury to competition within a market, beyond its impact on the plaintiff. Metro Indus., Inc. v. Sammi Corp., 82 F.3d 839, 847 (9th Cir.1996) (citing Austin v. McNamara, 979 F.2d 728, 738 (9th Cir. 1992)). When analyzing whether an agreement violates the Sherman Act under the rule of reason, the focus is the direct result of anti competitive conduct on consumers. Brunswick Corp. v. Riegel Textile Corp., 752 F.2d 261, 266 (7th Cir. 1984). Congress designed the Sherman Act to protect consumers or purchasers of goods in a market. Reiter v. Sonotone Corp., 442 U.S. 330, 343, 99 S. Ct. 2326, 60 L. Ed. 2d 931 (1979). Accordingly, antitrust injury manifests as higher prices, lower output, or decreased quality in the products within a defined market. Stearns v. Select Comfort Retail Corp., 08-2746 JF, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 48367, 2009 WL 1635931, at *13 (N.D. Cal. June 5, 2009).

Antitrust complaints that do not focus on injury to consumers are usually unsuccessful. In Phillips Getschow Co. v. Green Bay Brown County Professional Football Stadium District, [*10] a contracting company that unsuccessfully bid on a renovations contract for a stadium sued the entities in charge of the bidding process, alleging bid-rigging in violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act. 270 F. Supp. 2d 1044, 1045 (E.D. Wis. 2003). The plaintiff alleged that the general contractor disclosed submitted bids to the favored bidder, improperly allowing the favored bidder to submit a new, lower bid and be awarded the contract. Id. The district court granted defendants' motion to dismiss, holding that the complaint did not allege facts that could cause antitrust injury. Id. at 1048. While the plaintiff was personally harmed because it did not receive the bid, the "consumer" of the bids--the general contractor--paid the same or a lower price than the plaintiff wanted. Id. Because HN8[] the focus of antitrust lawsuits is to protect consumers, not to protect producers or ensure that one firm gets a certain amount of business, the plaintiff did not have a claim under the Sherman Act. Id. at 1049. The court found the plaintiff's focus on injury to itself misplaced. It wrote: HN9[] "If the plaintiff simply wants the transfer of benefits that a defendant is reaping in the market, without discernable [*11] benefits to consumers, it is likely that no antitrust injury exists." Id

Expedite alleges two restraints in its First Amended Complaint: the agreement between Plus subsidiary Home Serv to provide closed bid information to fellow subsidiary Bags, Inc., allowing Bags, Inc., to underbid on baggage delivery contracts; and the exclusive dealing contract between Alaska and Bags, Inc. (FAC ¶ 13, 33.) Because neither restraint is of the type that always or almost always restricts competition, the restraints are judged under a rule of reason analysis.

Viewing the First Amended Complaint in the light most favorable to Expedite, Expedite does not allege sufficient facts from which the court can discern antitrust injury from either the collusion between Home Serv and Bags, Inc., or the exclusive contract between Plus and Alaska. Expedite does not plead that airlines pay higher prices for baggage delivery services, that airlines suffer from a shortage of baggage delivery services in general, that airlines' choice of baggage delivery vendors is limited to Bags, Inc., or that the quality of baggage delivery services has declined as a result of either restraint. Rather, the focus of Expedite's Complaint [*12] is on its own injuries, only passing reference to injury to other baggage delivery vendors.

HN10[] Antitrust laws are focused on protecting consumers, not vendors. In this instance, the ultimate consumers — the airlines at PDX — presumably benefitted from both restraints by paying less for baggage delivery services, and, in the cases of Alaska and Delta, by obtaining a preferred partner for baggage delivery services. These results are pro-competitive, not anticompetitive, and not actionable under anti-trust laws.

B. Monopolization

Expedite's claim for monopolization falters on similar grounds. HN11[] Though Section 1 and Section 2 claims differ, both require allegations of anticompetitive activity to state a claim. McGlinchy v. Shell Chem. Co., 845 F.2d 802, 811-12 (9th Cir. 1988). Section 2 of the Sherman Act provides: "Every person who shall monopolize, or attempt to monopolize, or combine or conspire with any other person or persons, to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, shall be deemed guilty of a felony." 15 U.S.C. § 2. To state a claim for monopolization under Section 2, a plaintiff must plead facts showing that the defendant (1) possesses [*13] monopoly power in the relevant market; (2) willfully acquired or maintained that power; and (3) causal antitrust injury. Rutman Wine Co. v. E. & J Gallo Winery, 829 F.2d 729, 736 (9th Cir. 1987). Because antitrust laws seek to promote competition, including lawful competition by monopolists, proof of anticompetitive conduct is vital for a Section 2 claim. *Arminak & Associates, Inc. v. Saint-Gobain Calmar, Inc., 789 F. Supp. 2d 1201, 2011 WL 2268066, at 3 (C.D. Cal. 2011).

While Expedite pleads that the contract between Plus and Alaska resulted in Expedite having a seventy percent share of the baggage delivery market at PDX, and that Expedite willfully acquired its share of power, Expedite again does not allege evidentiary facts supporting causal antitrust injury. Expedite essentially alleges that it had a monopoly on baggage delivery services at PDX and that its monopoly was replaced by Plus. HN12[] A decline in one party's market share is not sufficient for a Sherman Act claim. "[R]eduction in competition does not invoke the Sherman Act until it harms consumer welfare." Rebel Oil Co., Inc. v. Atl. Richfield Co., 51 F.3d 1421,1433 (9th Cir. 1995) (citing Products Liab. Ins. Agnecy, Inc. v. Crum & Forster Ins. Cos., 682 F.2d 660, 663 (7th Cir. 1982)). [*14] On the contrary, "'injuries to rivals are byproducts of vigorous competition' of the kind and quality that antitrust laws seek to nurture." *Arminak & Associates, 789 F. Supp. 2d 1201, 200 WL 2268066, at 2 (quoting Ball Memorial Hosp., Inc. v. Mutual Hosp. Ins., Inc., 784 F.2d 1325, 1338 (7th Cir. 1986)). Expedite does not allege that the airlines now suffer from a lack of baggage delivery services or that Plus's actions caused the price of baggage delivery services to increase. HN13[] Alleging the natural consequences of competition is insufficient to state a claim under Section 2 of the Sherman Act. Expedite's monopolization claim should be dismissed.

C. Intra-enterprise agreements

Of note, Plus argues in its Memorandum of Law in Support of Plus's Motion to Dismiss Amended Complaint that the agreement between Home Serv and Bags, Inc. to share bid information is an intra-enterprise agreement protected by Copperweld Corp. v. Independence Tube Corp., 467 U.S. 752,759-60, 104 S. Ct. 2731, 81 L. Ed. 2d 628 (1984). Though it does not impact this court's decision that Expedite's Sherman Act claims should be dismissed, the Copperweld doctrine does not apply to the case at hand. The reach of Copperweld is circuit-specific. Within the [*15] Ninth Circuit, Copperweld protection only applies to wholly-owned subsidiaries or subsidiaries where the same owner owns only a de minimis amount less than one hundred percent. Leaco Enterprises, Inc. v. General Elec. Co., 737 F. Supp. 605, 609 (D. Or. 1990), order clarified, 1990 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 16159, 990 WL 200085 (D. Or. 1990); Aspen Title & Escrow, Inc. v. Jeld-Wen, Inc., 677 F. Supp. 1477 (D. Or. 1987). Construing the First Amended Complaint in the light most favorable to Expedite, Home Serv and Bags, Inc. are not wholly-owned subsidiaries, rendering the Copperweld protection inapplicable.

II. Clayton Act

The second claim that Expedite alleges is a statutory violation of the Clayton Act. (FAC ¶¶ 42-48.) Expedite alleges claims under Section 2(c) of the Clayton Act for payment or acceptance of commission or brokerage and under Section 2(f) for knowingly inducing or receiving discriminatory pricing.

A. Payment or acceptance of commission or brokerage.

Plus moves to dismiss Expedite's claim for relief under Section 2(c) of the Clayton Act because the Clayton Act applies solely to the sale of goods, and not to services. HN14[] Section 2(c) of the Clayton Act, as amended by the Robinson-Patman Price Discrimination Act, [*16] prohibits commercial bribery in transactions involving the sale or purchase of goods that injures competition. Harris v. Duty Free Shoppers Ltd P'ship, 940 F.2d 1272, 1274 (9th Cir. 1991). Section 2(c) provides:

> HN15[] "It shall be unlawful for any person engaged in commerce, in the course of such commerce, to pay or grant, or to receive or accept, anything of value as a commission, brokerage, or other compensation, or any allowance or discount in lieu thereof, except for services rendered in connection with the sale or purchase of goods, wares, or merchandise, either to the other party to such transaction or to an agent, representative, or other intermediary therein ... "

15 U.S.C. § 13 (c).

HN16[] The Clayton Act applies exclusively to the sale of "goods, wares, or merchandise" and does not apply to contracts for services. May Dep't Store v. Graphic Process Co.., 637 F.2d 1211, 1213 (9th Cir. 1980). Courts use a "dominant nature" standard to determine whether a transaction is for goods or services. Id at 1215. Sometimes the dominant nature is clear, while in other instances courts look to factors such as the breakdown of costs and the supplying of ingredients. Id. The dominant nature of transportation [*17] or delivery contracts is clearly service. See Union City Barge Line, Inc. v. Union Carbide Corp., 823 F.2d 129, 140-141 (5th Cir. 1987)(holding that for Clayton Act purposes storage and delivery of fuel is a service, not a good).

The analysis on this claim is brief. Expedite cannot state a claim under Section 2(c) of the Clayton Act because Expedite provided a service, not a tangible product. It is undisputed that Expedite's sole business is as a baggage transportation service, not as a baggage vendor. Expedite does not own or sell the baggage it delivers, and key to the statute's applicability is a "sale or purchase" of a tangible item. Section 2(c) of the Clayton Act does not apply to the case at hand.

B. Knowingly inducing or receiving discriminatory pricing

Plus moves to dismiss Expedite's Section 2(f) Clayton Act claim because Plus provided a service, not a good, and the Complaint does not allege that Plus participated in discriminatory pricing. HN17[] Section 2(f) of the Clayton Act provides: "It shall be unlawful for any person engaged in commerce, in the course of such commerce, knowingly to induce or receive a discrimination in price which is prohibited by this section." 15 U.S.C. § 13 (f).

Expedite [*18] cannot state a claim under Section 2(f). Again, Plus provided a baggage delivery service, not baggage itself, rendering the Clayton Act inapplicable. Even if baggage delivery were considered a good, however, Section 2(f) still would not apply to the case at hand. Congress designed Section 2(f) to prevent large chain buyers from exerting their buying power to obtain preferential prices in the purchase of goods. Kapiolani Motors, Ltd v. Gen. Motors Corp., 337 F.Supp 102, 103 (D. Haw. 1972). Accordingly, Section 2(f) addresses the liability of buyers of goods. Id. In the case at hand, neither Plus nor Plus's subsidiaries are buyers of goods: Bags, Inc., sells baggage delivery services, and Home Serv sells bid-processing services. Because Plus and its subsidiaries are vendors, not purchasers, Section 2(f) cannot provide a cause of action for Expedite.

III. State Law Claims

A. Supplemental Jurisdiction

Expedite's third claim for intentional interference with economic relations and its fourth claim for fraud are state common law claims. HN18[] A district court has discretion on whether to exercise supplemental jurisdiction in a case arising from a common nucleus of operative fact where it has dismissed [*19] the original federal claims. 28 U.S.C. §1367(c)(3). When deciding whether to exercise supplemental jurisdiction, a court should consider factors such as "economy, convenience, fairness, and comity." Acri v. Varian Associates, Inc., 114 F.3d 999,1001 supplemented, 121 F.3d 714 (9th Cir. 1997).

HN19[] The right to exercise supplemental jurisdiction extends to antitrust cases. In nSight, Inc. v. PeopleSoft, Inc., the Ninth Circuit reviewed the district court's grant of summary judgment to the defendant on both state and federal antitrust claims. 296 F. App'x 555, 557 (9th Cir. 2008). On appeal, the plaintiff argued that the district court erred in exercising supplemental jurisdiction over the state law claims after it had dismissed the federal claims. Id at 559. The Ninth Circuit affirmed the district court's decision, holding that the district court advanced judicial economy and convenience to the parties by retaining jurisdiction over the state claims. Id. at 559.

For the same values of judicial economy and convenience, this court chooses to exercise jurisdiction over Expedite's state law claims. B. Intentional Interference with Economic Relations

Expedite's third claim is a state law claim [*20] for intentional interference with economic relations and prospective business advantage. (FAC ¶¶ 49-55.) Expedite alleges that Plus intentionally interfered with Expedite's business relationship with Delta and other airlines when Home Serv communicated other vendors' bids to Bags, Inc. and allowed Bags, Inc. to use that knowledge to outbid other vendors.

Expedite's intentional interference claim is cased on conduct it alleges violates antitrust law.HN20[] Under Oregon law, however, "conduct that is permitted under antitrust law may not be punished as tortious interference." Kovac v. Crooked River Ranch Club & Maint. Ass'n, 186 Ore. App. 545, 552, 63 P.3d 1197 (2003) (holding that dismissal of antitrust claim necessitates dismissal of interference with business relationship claim), see also Cascade HealthSolutions v. PeaceHealth, 515 F.3d 883 (9th Cir. 2008) (holding that dismissal of antitrust claims necessitates dismissal of intentional interference with prospective economic advantage claim). The court's finding on Expedite's third claim follows from its earlier analysis on the first and second claims. Because Expedite did not state a claim for violation of the Sherman Act or Clayton Act, Expedite cannot [*21] state a claim for intentional interference with economic relations.

C. Fraud

Expedite's fourth claim is a state law claim for fraud. (FAC ¶¶ 56-63.) HN21[] To state a claim for fraud under Oregon law, a plaintiff must prove the following elements:

> "(1) a representation; (2) its falsity; (3) its materiality; (4) the speaker's knowledge of its falsity or ignorance of its truth; (5) his intent that it should be acted on by the person and in the manner reasonably contemplated; (6) the hearer's ignorance of its falsity; (7) his reliance on its truth; (8) his right to rely thereon; (9) and his consequent and proximate injury."

Wieber v. FedEx Ground Package Sys., Inc., 231 Ore. App. 469, 480, 220 P.3d 68 (2009) (quoting Conselmann v. N.WP.&D. Prod. Co., 190 Or. 332, 350, 225 P.2d 757 (1950)). HN22[] In addition to proving the elements of fraud under Oregon law, Federal Rule of Civil Procedure ("Rule") 9(b) imposes the additional requirement that the circumstances of fraud be pled with particularity. Vess v. Ciba-Geigy Corp. USA, 317 F.3d 1097,1103 (9th Cir. 2003).

Drawing all reasonable inferences in favor of the plaintiff, Expedite does not state a claim for fraud. HN23[] Claims of fraud must be plausible; that is, fraud claims must contain [*22] facts that raise a reasonable expectation that discovery will reveal evidence of the misconduct alleged. Cafasso, U.S. ex rel. v. Gen. Dynamics C4 Sys., Inc., 637 F.3d 1047, 1055 (9th Cir. 2011). Expedite bases its fraud claim on the November 2010 letter from Plus to Expedite. In that letter, Plus informed Expedite that its contract with Alaska was terminated and that Plus and Alaska would be using the additional criteria of "evaluation of cost, service levels, vendor history/track record as well as the vendor's local or regional presence" to select vendors. (FAC ¶¶ 58-63.) Expedite alleges that these statements regarding the criteria for awarding baggage delivery contracts were false and that Expedite relied on these statements to its detriment. However, Expedite pleads that it began losing contracts as a result of Plus's conduct in June 2009, nearly a year and a half before the November 2010 letter. To successfully plead a fraud claim, the alleged damage must result from a fraudulent statement, not precede it. It is not plausible that Expedite relied on a November 2010 letter in June 2009.

Of note, Expedite's fraud claim in its FAC also mentions June 2009 "materially false statements [*23] to plaintiff regarding the criteria for being awarded bidding contracts." (FAC ¶ 62.) Expedite's opposition brief exclusively addresses the November 210 letter. Even if this court ignored the opposition brief and examined the FAC mention of June 2009 statements, Expedite would not state a claim for fraud. HN24[] The heightened pleading requirement of FRCP 9(b) requires that the parties state the time, place, and content of the fraudulent statement, in addition to what part of the statement is false or misleading, and why. Ebeid ex. rel. U.S. v. Lungwitz, 616 F.3d 993, 998 (9th Cir. 2010). Expedite does not clarify what statement in June 200 it is referencing, how the statement was made, or why the statement was false. Expedite's fraud claim is not pleaded with particularity, and should be dismissed.

Leave to Amend

HN25[] Amendments to pleadings are governed by Federal Rule of Civil Procedure ("Rule") 15(a), which provides: "A party may amend the party's pleading only by leave of court or by written consent of the adverse party; and leave shall be freely given when justice so requires." Fed.R. Civ.P. 15(a). The court recognizes that leave to amend should be granted with "extreme liberality." Eminence Capital, LLC. v. Aspeon, Inc., 316 F.3d 1048, 1051 (9th Cir.2003) [*24] . The Ninth Circuit has held that a number of factors may bear on whether to grant leave to amend, such as prejudice to the non-moving party, bad faith by the moving party, and whether the amendment would be futile. Bowles v. Reade, 198 F.3d 752, 757-58 (9th Cir.1999). Here, on the record Expedite has presented or otherwise not objected to, Expedite can plead no set of facts to maintain claims for violation of the Sherman Act, violation of the Clayton Act, or intentional interference with economic relations. Accordingly, leave to amend for these claims should not be granted. However, this court recommends granting leave to amend on Expedite's fraud claim alone to allow Expedite to plead its claim with specificity.

Conclusion

For the reasons stated above, Plus's Rule 12(b)(6) motion should be GRANTED.

Scheduling Order

The Findings and Recommendations will be referred to a district judge. Objections, if any, are due November 4, 2011. If no objections are filed, then the Findings and Recommendations will go under advisement on that date.

If objections are filed, then a response is due within fourteen days after being served with [*25] a copy of the objections. When the response is due or filed, whichever date is earlier, the Findings and Recommendations will go under advisement.

DATED this 21st day of October 2011.

Opinion

Plaintiffs Judy Williams and Russell Williams appeal from the judgment entered after the trial court sustained without leave to amend defendant Mission Viejo Emergency Medical Associates's demurrer to their second amended complaint for unjust enrichment and restitution, breach of contract and the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing, declaratory and injunctive relief, unfair business practices, and fraud. They contend they alleged sufficient facts to support each cause of action and the court abused its discretion in denying leave to amend. Finding no error, we affirm.

FACTS

In 2004, Mr. Williams was treated in the emergency room of Mission Viejo Medical Center, where defendant provided emergency room physicians. Although the medical center accepted his Blue Shield insurance, defendant did not. Because it was [*2] an "out-of-network" provider for Blue Shield insureds, defendant charged them a different rate than for in-network patients.

Plaintiffs sued defendant alleging they were unreasonably required to pay defendant "the $281.00 list price solely because they were deemed to be out of network for this treatment and thus, like the uninsured, are members of the sole class of patients compelled to pay [defendant's] unreasonable chargemaster or list price." They alleged this charge was "not the usual, customary or reasonable rate, and was . . . unauthorized by law."

The second amended (operative) complaint asserted five causes of action on behalf of plaintiffs and a putative class: (1) unjust enrichment and restitution; (2) breach of contract and the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing; (3) declaratory and injunctive relief; (4) unfair business practices; and (5) fraud. Each was based on the claim the rates charged to uninsured and out-of-network patients were unreasonable because they differed from rates charged to patients with private insurance (in-network patients) or those covered by government programs. The putative class included plaintiffs and "similarly-situated insured and [*3] uninsured individuals who were responsible for payment for treatment for emergency room and related professional services, who were, or will be, billed by [defendant] at its full list, chargemaster price, which is not the usual, customary or reasonable rate and is otherwise not the lawful rate."

Defendant demurred to the complaint on the ground it failed to state a cause of action. In connection with the demurrer, it requested the court take judicial notice of admissions made by plaintiffs in declarations filed in support of their opposition to defendant's motion for summary judgment. Although the motion had been taken off calendar when the court granted plaintiffs leave to file a first amended complaint, the documents remained part of the court record.

In their declarations, plaintiffs explained their claims arose from one visit to the emergency room by Mr. Williams where he received medical services from defendant. After plaintiffs requested Blue Shield pay defendant's $281 bill, Blue Shield sent them a check for $175.68, representing the full amount minus the $105.32 deductible remaining on their account.

The trial court granted defendant's request for judicial notice and sustained [*4] its demurrer without leave to amend. On the breach of contract cause of action, it cited plaintiffs' failure to allege the contract terms or whether the contract was written, oral, or implied. It also noted a contract mandating payment of a specific amount before emergency healthcare is rendered was likely unenforceable and, in any event, plaintiffs conceded they paid only their out-of-network deductible and not defendant's bill. As to the unfair business practices claim, it found insufficient facts to show defendant's acts were unlawful, unfair, or fraudulent, or that defendant's billing practices were unreasonable. Regarding the fraud cause of action, the court again observed plaintiffs did not suffer the alleged harm of being "fully balance-billed [defendant's] full list price or chargemaster rate" because they admitted they only paid their out-of-network deductible. Additionally, plaintiffs had failed to plead scienter or fraud with the necessary specificity. Because these claims failed, the court concluded plaintiffs did not have viable causes of action for unjust enrichment or injunctive and declaratory relief.

Plaintiffs filed a motion for reconsideration, to allow discovery [*5] to locate new class representatives, and to compel further responses to discovery. They reasoned the court's order sustaining defendant's demurrer without leave to amend may have been premised on their lack of standing and they were entitled to discovery to seek substitute class representatives. They also submitted a proposed third amended complaint. The court denied the motion and dismissed the action with prejudice.

DISCUSSION

1. Standard of Review

A demurrer tests the legal sufficiency of the complaint. We review the complaint de novo to determine whether it alleges facts sufficient to state a cause of action, considering judicially noticeable matters and accepting as true all material facts alleged in the complaint, but not contentions, deductions or conclusions of fact or law. (Blank v. Kirwan (1985) 39 Cal.3d 311, 318.) When a demurrer "is sustained without leave to amend, we decide whether there is a reasonable possibility that the defect can be cured by amendment: if it can be, the trial court has abused its discretion and we reverse; if not, there has been no abuse of discretion and we affirm. [Citations.]" (Ibid.) Plaintiffs have the burden to show a reasonable possibility the [*6] complaint can be amended to state a cause of action. (Ibid.)

2. Order Sustaining Demurrer Without Leave to Amend

a. Breach of Contract

The breach of contract cause of action alleged defendant "entered into contracts with plaintiffs, leaving the price term to be implied, then billed . . . plaintiffs at its full, undisclosed chargemaster or list prices, which plaintiffs are informed and believe are not the usual, customary or reasonable rate, not the lawful rate and far exceed those rates." But plaintiffs never alleged whether these purported contracts were written, oral, or implied, making their complaint susceptible to demurrer under Code of Civil Procedure section 430.10, subdivision (g) [failure to allege whether contract is oral, written or implied is grounds for demurrer to a breach of contract claim]; see also Holcomb v. Wells Fargo Bank, N.A. (2007) 155 Cal.App.4th 490, 501 [court properly sustained demurrer where complaint failed to state either "nature of the contract" or its specific terms the plaintiff claimed had been breached, and at most alleged a form of express contract with implied terms].

In their opening brief, plaintiffs contend they "alleged an implied in fact contract [*7] . . . that services were provided . . . ." Yet in the very same sentence they also allege "the Conditions of Admissions form, which left the price term out was written, so the contract could be deemed to be written . . . ." To this end, they attach to their reply brief a copy of the Conditions of Admission form they claim every patient or their representative must sign. But in addition to being unauthenticated, unsigned, and not part of the trial court record, the document shows on its face that it is between the patient and the hospital, not defendant.

As for their asserted implied in fact contract, plaintiffs failed to allege its material terms. In order for a contract to be enforceable the terms of the contract must be sufficiently certain so as to provide a basis for determining to what obligations the parties have agreed. (Weddington Productions., Inc. v. Flick (1998) 60 Cal.App.4th 793, 811.) Whether a proposed contract is sufficiently definite to form an enforceable contract is a question of law for the court. (Ladas v. California State Auto. Assn. (1993) 19 Cal.App.4th 761, 770, fn. 2; Ersa Grae Corp. v. Fluor Corp. (1991) 1 Cal.App.4th 613, 623.) The above quoted allegation [*8] does not satisfy the requirement of being sufficiently certain.

Plaintiffs argue they pleaded "their performance, . . . that they were deemed out-of-network, paid $281 and breach, that this was a balance bill and was not the usual, customary or reasonable rate." But none of this sets forth the terms of the contract. Because the second amended complaint does not identify the terms of the agreement sought to be enforced, the demurrer was properly sustained on this ground as well.

Plaintiffs maintain they should have been given leave to amend because they urged at the hearing on the demurrer that defendant provided health care services and "left the price term open and therefore to be implied and reasonable and that breach occurred by imposing an unagreed to sticker price which was more than the usual, customary and reasonable rate." They cite page 12 of the reporter's transcript but that page relates to a hearing on a motion by Mission Hospital Regional Medical Center, not defendant. It is not this court's obligation to search the record for evidence supporting plaintiffs' argument. (See ASP Properties Group, L.P. v. Fard, Inc. (2005) 133 Cal.App.4th 1257, 1270.)

Even if plaintiffs had [*9] referred us to the correct portion of the transcript, Carney v. Hayter (1944) 62 Cal.App.2d 792, on which they rely, does not support their claim the absence of a price term creates an enforceable contract whereby defendant agreed to charge only what plaintiffs deemed reasonable. Unlike this case, Carney involved an express contract. Moreover, it held that "'[w]here work is done under an express contract which does not specify the compensation to be paid, the law implies a promise to pay what the service is reasonably worth.' [Citations.]" (Carney v. Hayter, supra, 62 Cal.App.2d at p. 798.) Plaintiffs cite no authority for the proposition that their implied promise to pay the reasonable worth of services means defendant entered into a contract, the breach of which gives rise to a cause of action, to charge no more than an amount plaintiffs considered fair. Their claim under Civil Code section 1611 ["When a contract does not determine the amount of the consideration, nor the method by which it is to be ascertained, or when it leaves the amount thereof to the discretion of an interested party, the consideration must be so much money as the object of the contract is reasonably worth"] [*10] fails for this reason as well.

Plaintiffs have not shown a reasonable possibility the complaint can be amended to state a cause of action for breach of contract. In their proposed third amended complaint, they again fail to specify the terms of the purported contract or state whether it was written, oral or implied by conduct, leading to the conclusion the defect cannot be cured by amendment. The demurrer to the breach of contract claim, including the covenant of good faith and fair dealing, was properly sustained without leave to amend and we need not address the other bases for the court's ruling.

b. Unfair Business Practices

To establish a claim for unfair business practices under Business and Professions Code section 17200 (section 17200), plaintiffs had to plead and prove that the defendant engaged in a business practice that was "either unlawful (i.e., is forbidden by law), unfair (i.e., harm to victim outweighs any benefit) or fraudulent (i.e., is likely to deceive members of the public). [Citations.]" (Albillo v. Intermodal Container Services, Inc. (2003) 114 Cal.App.4th 190, 206.) The cause of action for unfair business practices alleges "defendant['s] conduct constitutes unfair [*11] practices . . . in that defendant[] unfairly, unlawfully, fraudulently and/or in a deceptive manner led [p]laintiffs . . . to believe that their emergency healthcare services would be billed in a reasonable manner and at a reasonable rate, when, instead, they allowed [them] . . . to be charged full undisclosed and unwarranted rates . . . that [p]laintiffs are informed and believe[d] are not the usual, customary and reasonable and lawful rate."

(1) Unlawful Prong

According to plaintiffs, defendant's alleged acts are unlawful because they violated Health and Safety Code section 1317, which prohibits the denial of emergency room services due to "ethnicity, citizenship, age, preexisting medical condition, insurance status, economic status, [or] ability to pay for medical services" (id., subd. (b)), and "the holdings and inferences to be drawn" from Bell v. Blue Cross [of California] (2005) 131 Cal.App.4th 211[and] Prospect Medical Group[, Ins.] v. Northridge Emergency Medical Group (2009) 45 Cal.4th 497 and unlawful breaches of contract . . . ." But plaintiffs concede defendant provided services, not denied them, and thus no violation of Health and Safety Code section 1317 occurred. And [*12] as the trial court found, Bell "is inapposite because it involved the reasonable amount of reimbursement by a health insurer to a[n] emergency physician under the Knox-Keene Health Care Service Plan Act of 1975," which is inapplicable "because neither [p]laintiff[s] nor [d]efendant [are] health care insurer[s] . . . ."

As for Prospect Medical Group, the Supreme Court addressed only the narrow issue of whether "emergency room doctors [can] directly bill the patient for the difference between the bill submitted and the payment received?i.e., engage in the practice called 'balance billing,'" answering that question in the negative. (Prospect Medical Group, Inc. v. Northridge Emergency Group, supra, 45 Cal.4th at p. 502.) But "Proposition 64 requires that a plaintiff's economic injury come 'as a result of' the unfair competition . . . ." (Kwikset Corp. v. Superior Court (2011) 51 Cal.4th 310, 326; Bus. & Prof. Code, § 17204.) Plaintiffs' judicially admissible and binding declarations show the $105.32 that they are out-of-pocket resulted from the deductible remaining on their Blue Shield account, not from defendant's alleged practice of balance billing. Thus Prospect Medical Group also does [*13] not support a section 17200 claim based on plaintiffs' allegation defendant's conduct was unlawful.

(2) Unfair Prong

Plaintiffs also alleged defendant's acts were unfair because instead of charging the "usual, customary and reasonable rate, [defendant] charged and charges a rate much higher than such a rate, based on the fact that its usual and customary rates are an amalgam of set and negotiated fees with government and private programs that are significantly less than its chargemaster or list rates." Noticeably missing are any facts to support the claim that these negotiated fees should be deemed the "usual" rate for out-of-network patients.

At the hearing on the demurrer, plaintiffs argued "[w]hat's unfair under the unfair prong is basically very close to the court's equitable powers [a]nd those powers are to find a breach of fundamental rules of honesty and fair dealing . . . ." Similarly in their opening brief, plaintiffs assert defendant's practice "appears to violate fair dealing . . . because to allow providers to impose on consumers its unilaterally chosen price without disclosure or negotiation . . . violates fundamental premises of our legal system . . . ." But the Supreme [*14] Court has rejected the notion that "[c]ourts may . . . simply impose their own notions of the day as to what is fair or unfair." (Cel-Tech Communications, Inc. v. Los Angeles Cellular Telephone Co. (1999) 20 Cal.4th 163, 182 (Cel-Tech).)

"'The proper definition for the term "unfair" in a consumer action is uncertain. . . . Cel-Tech . . . held that in the context of an unfair competition claim by a competitor, the term "unfair" in . . . section 17200 "means conduct that threatens an incipient violation of an antitrust law, or violates the policy or spirit of one of those laws because its effects are comparable to or the same as a violation of the law, or otherwise significantly threatens or harms competition." [Citation.]'" (Durell v. Sharp Healthcare (2010) 183 Cal.App.4th 1350, 1364.) Nevertheless it "'left open the question of whether its definition of "unfair" should also apply to consumer actions. [Citation.]'" (Id. at p. 1365.) "'[T]his has resulted in a split in the Courts of Appeal. [Citation.] One line of cases applies Cel-Tech's definition of "unfair" to consumer cases [citation], the other recognizes the new Cel-Tech definition, but applies the old definitions to consumer [*15] cases [citation.]' [Citation.]" (Buller v. Sutter Health (2008) 160 Cal.App.4th 981, 991, fn. omitted.) Plaintiffs fail to allege a claim under either test.

"The test applied in one line of cases is similar to the Cel-Tech test . . ., and requires 'that the public policy which is a predicate to a consumer unfair competition action under the "unfair" prong of the UCL must be tethered to specific constitutional, statutory, or regulatory provisions.' [Citations.]" (Drum v. San Fernando Valley Bar Assn. (2010) 182 Cal.App.4th 247, 256 (Drum).) The only such provision plaintiffs cite is Civil Code section 1611, which we already concluded does not support their theory of liability.

"The test applied in a second line of cases is whether the alleged business practice 'is immoral, unethical, oppressive, unscrupulous or substantially injurious to consumers and requires the court to weigh the utility of the defendant's conduct against the gravity of the harm to the alleged victim.' [Citations.]" (Drum, supra, 182 Cal.App.4th at p. 257.) Plaintiffs assert defendant's "conduct is against public policy, since it is clear that balance billing is unlawful as set forth by Prospect [Medical Group v. Northridge [*16] Emergency Group]." The contention lacks merit, as we have rejected plaintiffs' attempt to state a section 17200 claim based on that case.

Plaintiffs also argue defendant's conduct "appears to violate fair dealing . . . because to allow providers to impose on consumers its unilaterally chosen price without disclosure or negotiation—particularly where those rates far exceed what it normally charges—violates fundamental premises of our legal system, such as notions that obligations cannot be imposed absent agreement, consent and/or reasonableness." Their failure to cite any supporting legal authority forfeits this claim. (Badie v. Bank of America (1998) 67 Cal.App.4th 779, 784-785.)

"[A] third line of cases draws on the definition of 'unfair' in section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act (15 U.S.C. § 45, subd. (n)), and requires that '(1) the consumer injury must be substantial; (2) the injury must not be outweighed by any countervailing benefits to consumers or competition; and (3) it must be an injury that consumers themselves could not reasonably have avoided.' [Citations.]" (Drum, supra, 182 Cal.App.4th at p. 257.) According to plaintiffs, "it appears the balance favors a finding [*17] of unfairness: the rates are alleged to be substantially higher than the usual rate, are unavoidable by the consumer and serve no apparent purpose." This is nothing more than a conclusory restatement of the FTC elements without any supporting facts. Plaintiffs have not stated a section 17200 cause of action based on the unfair prong.

(3) Fraud Prong

Plaintiffs contend the trial court did not address their allegation defendant's conduct was deceptive and fraudulent because it did not disclose the fact it did not accept certain types of insurance. But they alleged no facts demonstrating defendant owed them a legal duty to make that disclosure. "'Absent a duty to disclose, the failure to do so does not support a claim under the fraudulent prong of the UCL.' [Citation.]" (Buller v. Sutter Health, supra, 160 Cal.App.4th at p. 987; see also Levine v. Blue Shield of California (2010) 189 Cal.App.4th 1117, 1136.)

(4) Leave to Amend

Plaintiffs do not suggest any manner in which the complaint can be amended to state a claim under section 17200. The court did not err in sustaining the demurrer to this cause of action without leave to amend.

c. Fraud

"In California, fraud must be pled specifically; [*18] general and conclusory allegations do not suffice. [Citations.]" (Lazar v. Superior Court (1996) 12 Cal.4th 631, 645.) "'The elements of fraud, which give rise to the tort action for deceit, are (a) misrepresentation (false representation, concealment, or nondisclosure); (b) knowledge of falsity (or "scienter"); (c) intent to defraud, i.e., to induce reliance; (d) justifiable reliance; and (e) resulting damage.' [Citations.]" (Id. at p. 638.)

The fraud cause of action alleged defendant falsely "represented in and by its bills for service to plaintiffs and members of the class that a sum much more than the usual, customary and reasonable rate was due and owing," plaintiffs reasonably relied on those representations, paid the bills and were damaged. These conclusory allegations fail to meet the specificity requirement.

In particular, the element of scienter is absent. Plaintiffs have not shown how billing more than the usual, customary and reasonable rate constitutes a knowingly false representation. It is simply the rate defendant charges out-of-network patients; there is no truth or falsity to the statement. We thus reject plaintiffs' claim the statement was false because "only the usual, [*19] customary and reasonable amount was due and owing, not a list price."

Moreover, plaintiffs' allegation of reliance is belied by their admissions in their declarations in support of their opposition to defendant's summary judgment of which the court took judicial notice. "[T]he mere assertion of 'reliance' is insufficient. The plaintiff must allege the specifics of his or her reliance on the misrepresentation to show a bona fide claim of actual reliance. [Citation.]" (Cadlo v. Owens-Illinois, Inc. (2004) 125 Cal.App.4th 513, 519.)

Plaintiffs contend they sufficiently alleged reliance because they paid defendant's bill and were overcharged. But in their declarations they concede they refused to make any payments for the services and that Blue Shield, not plaintiffs, ultimately paid the bill while plaintiffs paid only their deductible amount of $105.32. These judicially noticeable admissions render the conflicting allegations of the complaint meritless (Del E. Webb Corp. v. Structural Materials Co. (1981) 123 Cal.App.3d 593, 604-605), and distinguish this case from Vasquez v. Superior Court (1971) 4 Cal.3d 800, 814 [inference of reliance arises where no contrary evidence], Massachusetts Mutual Life Ins. Co v. Superior Court (2002) 97 Cal.App.4th 1282, 1292-1293, [*20] and National Solar Equipment Owners' Assn.

v. Grumman Corp (1991) 235 Cal.App.3d 1273, 1283, on which plaintiffs rely for their claim reliance may be inferred.

Plaintiffs assert the court abused its discretion in dismissing the fraud claim because "it certainly could be" properly alleged. But they do not explain how. Because they failed to show how the complaint can be amended to state a cause of action, we affirm the court's order sustaining the demurrer to the fraud claim without leave to amend.

d. Unjust Enrichment, Restitution, and Injunctive and Declaratory Relief

"'[T]here is no cause of action in California for unjust enrichment.' [Citations.] Unjust enrichment is synonymous with restitution. . . . [¶] . . . [¶] 'Under the law of restitution, "[a]n individual is required to make restitution if he or she is unjustly enriched at the expense of another. [Citations.] A person is enriched if the person receives a benefit at another's expense. [Citation.]" [Citation.] However, "[t]he fact that one person benefits another is not, by itself, sufficient to require restitution. The person receiving the benefit is required to make restitution only if the circumstances are such that, as between [*21] the two individuals, it is unjust for the person to retain it. [Citation.]"' [Citation.]" (Durell v. Sharp Healthcare, supra, 183 Cal.App.4th at p. 1370.)

Plaintiffs argue it is unjust for defendant to retain funds obtained "by balance billing, a practice which has been determined to be unlawful, and to which it, therefore, has no entitlement . . . ." But given our rejection of their claims for breach of contract and the covenant of good faith and fair dealing, unfair competition, and fraud, plaintiffs have not shown any basis under which they would be entitled to restitution. Moreover, no actual controversy exists and declaratory relief is unnecessary. (Gilbert v. State of California (1990) 218 Cal.App.3d 234, 248; Code Civ. Proc., § 1061.) The court properly sustained without leave to amend the demurrers to the first cause of action for "unjust enrichment/restitution/action in equity" (capitalization and emphasis omitted) and the third cause of action for declaratory relief.

3. Discovery to Seek Proper Class Representatives

Plaintiffs argue that upon determining they had no standing, the court should have allowed them discovery to seek alternative class representatives. But the court [*22] never ruled plaintiffs were not "suitable representatives." In addition to finding plaintiffs had not suffered their alleged harm, the court determined they had failed to state valid claims despite several opportunities to do so. We agree and affirm the judgment.

DISPOSITION

The judgment of dismissal is affirmed. Respondent shall recover its costs on appeal.

MEMORANDUM AND ORDER

JOHN GLEESON, United States District Judge:

BACKGROUND

In a complaint filed on October 5, 1996, the named plaintiffs "alleged that the defendants' practice of requiring merchants who accepted defendants' credit cards to also accept their debit products . . . was an illegal tying arrangement, in violation of section 1 [of the Sherman Act]." In re Visa Check/MasterMoney Antitrust Litig., 297 F. Supp. 2d 503, 507 (E.D.N.Y. 2003). They "further alleged that, through these tying arrangements and other anticompetitive conduct, the defendants attempted to monopolize the debit card market, in violation of section 2 [of the Sherman Act]." Id. On February 22, 2000, this Court granted the motion to certify a class of "approximately four million merchants who have accepted Visa or MasterCard credit cards and who therefore have been required to accept [*8] VisaCheck or MasterMoney [debit cards]." In re Visa Check/MasterMoney Antitrust Litig., 192 F.R.D. 68, 73-74 (E.D.N.Y. 2000); see also id. at 90 (certifying a class of "all persons and business entities who have accepted Visa and/or MasterCard credit cards and therefore have been required to accept VisaCheck and/or MasterMoney debit cards under the challenged tying arrangements during the fullest period permitted by the applicable statute of limitations"). The Second Circuit affirmed the class certification order on October 18, 2001. In re Visa Check/MasterMoney Antitrust Litig., 280 F.3d 124 (2d Cir. 2001).

After motion practice, and just before opening statements were to begin at trial, the plaintiffs entered into preliminary settlement agreements with each of the defendants. Visa Check/MasterMoney, 297 F. Supp. 2d at 508. These Settlement Agreements provided, among other things, for "the creation of a $3.05 billion settlement fund." Id. On December 19, 2003, this Court issued an Opinion and Order approving the Settlement Agreements. Id. at 526, aff'd, 396 F.3d 96 (2d Cir. 2005). The Amended Plan of Allocation provided that, "[w]hen distributions are otherwise complete, any monies remaining [*9] in the Net Settlement Fund . . . will be applied in a manner recommended by Lead Counsel and approved by the Court." (Amended Plan of Allocation § 12.7.)

On April 1, 2011, Constantine Cannon LLP ("Lead Counsel") asked the Court to approve a plan requiring class members to cash their settlement checks by June 15, 2011 so that Lead Counsel could conclude the case. (ECF No. 1601.) Lead Counsel estimated that, after the deduction of expenses and in light of the anticipated check cashing, there would be approximately $1.7 million remaining in the fund — "only a miniscule percentage (0.7%) of the roughly $2.6 billion distributed to date." (Id. at 4.) Consistent with the Amended Plan of Allocation, Lead Counsel proposed that "a cy pres donation of funds remaining in the settlement account" thereafter be made because "another distribution to the class would not be efficient or economically feasible." (Id. at 1.) Lead Counsel accordingly requested that this Court order "that any residual funds left in the settlement account as of that date be donated to a charity or cause related to the merchant community to be approved by the Court." (Id. at 4.) In support of its recommendation, Lead Counsel [*10] attached an affidavit of Neil Zola, President and Chief Operating Officer of The Garden City Group, Inc. ("GCG"), the Claims Administrator retained by Lead Counsel. (Neil Zola Aff., ECF No. 1601-2.) Mr. Zola is also of the view that a further distribution to class members would not be economically feasible:

> Given the small percentage of remaining funds, GCG does not believe that any further Class distributions would be economically feasible because the cost to effectuate a distribution of the estimated available balance could exceed 50% of that balance. By way of example, if the more than 500,000 Class members who previously cashed their 2010 Distribution checks were eligible to receive another residual payment from the $1.7 million estimated remaining balance we would, at best, be able to distribute $900,000 since the rest would be used for the cost of printing 500,000 checks, postage for those checks, and handling all follow up, including thousands of check reissues. Moreover, if we distributed $900,000 to those eligible Class members, over 450,000 Class members would receive a check of less than $1.00. Further, another 42,000 Class members would receive a check in an amount between [*11] $1.00 and $5.00. In fact only 1.4% of Class members (about 7,100 merchants) would receive a check greater than $5.00. Therefore, GCG agrees with Lead Counsel that donating the balance of the remaining funds to charity is appropriate.

By Order dated April 4, 2011, this Court set June 15, 2011, "as the final date by which all class members must cash their checks" and stated that "[a]ny residual funds left in the settlement account as of that date shall be donated to a charity to be approved by the Court."

By letter dated June 15, 2011, Lead Counsel estimated that, given the number of checks that had been cashed, and in light of the anticipated deduction of costs and expenses, there would ultimately be "between $1.5 million and $1.6 million remaining in the settlement account available for a cy pres donation." (ECF No. 1604.) "As such," according to Lead Counsel, "at the end of the day, well over 99% of the funds that were available for distribution, net of expenses, were returned to the class" — resulting in a cy pres donation amount of "roughly 0.057% to 0.061% of the total amount distributed to class members." (Id. at 1-2.) Lead Counsel asserted that this amount is "considerably [*12] lower than such distributions in similar cases." (Id. at 2 & n.1 (citing cases).)

In the same letter, Lead Counsel proposed that the settlement funds remaining after the final deadline for cashing settlement checks (net of remaining fees and disbursements) be given to the American Antitrust Institute ("AAI"), an organization that Lead Counsel's June 15, 2011 letter described as follows:

> The mission of the AAI, a non-profit organization dedicated to education, research, and advocacy concerning antitrust law, is closely aligned with the substance and rationale of the case, as well as the interests of the class. The AAI has been the leading voice in urging more aggressive enforcement of antitrust laws — through private cases, such as In re Visa Check/MasterMoney Antitrust Litigation or via government enforcement — to increase competition in the interests of consumers and businesses such as the merchant class. See American Antitrust Institute, About Us, available at http://www.antitrustinstitute.org/content/about-us, last visited June 12, 2011. In fact, through its advocacy the AAI attempts to create a substantive and procedural environment to enable more cases like In re Visa Check/MasterMoney [*13] Antitrust Litigation, which will benefit businesses such as the merchant class and consumers alike. We can think of no better way to conclude this case than to make this contribution to this worthy cause. *Cf. In re Publ'n Paper Antitrust Litig., 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 66654, 2009 WL 2351724, at 2 (D. Conn. July 30, 2009) (ordering that a cy pres award in an antitrust class action be distributed to the AAI, finding that "[b]ecause the plaintiffs' claims here are based on antitrust injury, the next best use for the settlement funds is to disburse those funds to charitable institutions designed to guard against antitrust injury and protection consumers.").

By letter dated June 22, 2011, Consumers Union, a nonprofit advocacy organization and publisher of Consumer Reports, applied for an award of the cy pres funds. (ECF No. 1607.) The letter explained that the organization, which "does not accept advertising revenue or commercial donations," does work "in the area of consumer financial protection," an area that, according to Consumers Union, is "closely related both to the underlying subject matter of this antitrust action (payment card practices) and to an essential goal of antitrust enforcement: combating [*14] the impact that anti-competitive conduct has on consumers." (Id. at 1.) The organization maintains that "[a] cy pres award could provide significant support as we expand our reach and impact to consumer constituencies that are particularly vulnerable to anti-competitive or predatory financial practices." (Id.) With respect to its financial services policy and advocacy work, Consumers Union stated as follows:

> While Consumers Union's policy and advocacy work focuses on several pocketbook and safety issues, we have a particularly deep level of expertise and long commitment to helping consumers on financial services matters. And we have a track record of success in this key area. For example, our financial services team works to help consumers make smart financial choices and avoid hidden fees on credit cards, debit cards, payroll cards, government-issued benefit cards, prepaid cards, mobile payments, checks and bank accounts. We seek to improve protections associated with existing payment methods, as well as emerging ones, through public education, consumer engagement, media outreach, policy reports, legislative and regulatory advocacy, social media outreach, and marketplace efforts.
> Consumers [*15] Union was a leader in helping to shape and pass the landmark 2009 credit card reform law, as well as last year's financial reform law establishing the Consumer Financial Protection Bureau. We are currently engaged in a Payments Project that focuses on newer ways to make payments that do not yet receive the same protections as credit cards. Our most recent research and policy white paper, entitled "Mobile Pay or Mobile Mess: Closing the Gap Between Mobile Payment Systems and Consumer Protections" . . . examines the complicated array of basic protections, and the troubling lack of protections on some of the newest > products that consumers face while making purchases via their cell phones, and suggests ways to improve the marketplace.

> The goal of this project is to understand existing and emerging payment methods facing consumers from various economic backgrounds, including lower-income consumers. We are evaluating the risks to consumers in new payment methods as they evolve, and working to improve products with substandard consumer protections before those methods spread widely. We reach out to media outlets and individual consumers to help us achieve marketplace change. A recent example [*16] is the Kardashian Kard, a debit card with particularly high fees, marketed to teenagers and young adults. Soon after the Kardashian Kard was launched, Consumers Union analyzed and reported on the card's exorbitant fees; that work in part encouraged prompt removal of this high-priced product. . . .
> We also continually bring to the attention of lawmakers, payment providers, the media and the public documented problems that consumers face when using existing payment methods. We do this through our Share Your Story database where we have collected thousands of personal financial experiences from individual consumers across the nation. (See www.defendyourdollars.org/share_your_story.html) These stories help us to develop a comprehensive understanding of the marketplace, inform consumers about emerging trends, fight for greater protections through marketplace engagement, and educate appropriate policymakers at the local, state and federal levels. In addition, we have nearly one million consumer activists who receive our online information and who use our network to make their opinions on financial services issues known to lawmakers and regulators.
> Finally, recognizing that Americans have the [*17] responsibility to change the way they handle credit, we have worked to educate the public on the best ways to avoid the pitfalls of debt through our online "Dangers of Debt" contest, social media, and educational campaign directed at young people and their parents.

(Id. at 2-3.) Consumers Union concluded as follows:

> We believe that Consumers Union would make an excellent cy pres award recipient, offering an important means by which the Court can expand the benefits and impact of this historic antitrust settlement to consumers. It is, after all, consumers who bear the ultimate brunt of anti-competitive practices, either directly through means such as exorbitant or hidden fees, or indirectly via costs passed down in the form of higher prices for consumer goods.

(Id. at 3.)

In a letter dated July 5, 2011, Lead Counsel (which was in receipt of the letter from Consumers Union) stated that it was "sympathetic to the idea of distributing a portion of the funds to organizations dedicated to consumers — in fact, we view the American Antitrust Institute as just such an organization given the consumer welfare backdrop of antitrust law." (ECF No. 1608.) It accordingly asked for three additional weeks [*18] to consider Consumers Union, as well as other consumer groups, as possible recipients of the cy pres donation. (Id.) This Court granted the request on July 7, 2011.

On July 27, 2011, Jewelers Vigilance Committee ("JVC") — "a not for profit trade association dedicated to preserving the ethics and integrity of the U.S. precious metal, gem and jewelry trade to protect consumer confidence" — wrote to request consideration as a recipient of the cy pres funds. (ECF No. 1610, at 1.) In support of its application, JVC stated as follows:

> Since 1917, the JVC has actively pursued education and outreach programs to foster and promote legal compliance with regulations and laws that govern our industry. We also actively work to protect consumers to ensure that their trust in our products (gold, silver, diamonds, color gemstones, etc.) is not violated. We have taken on the resolution of consumer complaints regarding trade practices, including advertising, product description, representations of quality, etc. Our work in the area of consumer protection is vital. Many consumer protection agencies (both not for profit and government agencies) refer such matters to us due to > their lack of resources and [*19] expertise to take on these often complicated investigations and enforcement action. Without the JVC's activity in this area, there would be little, if any, action taken to represent and protect consumers of jewelry in the U[.]S.

> The members of the JVC consist of all sectors of the jewelry trade — manufacturers, wholesalers, distributor [sic] and retailers, many of whom are also members of the class which is the subject of the above referenced litigation since they accept both MasterCard and Visa, as well as other credit cards and all forms of debit cards, for payment for these products at every level of the trade. . . . [W]e have the support of a wide array of jewelry companies for the consumer protection work that we do. . . .
> Since all of our members accept credit cards for payment, and because many of them fall victim to fraudulent practices associated with credit card use, JVC has undertaken an education program to help members of our trade to avoid losses due to credit card payments being reversed to their detriment. Our high value products are often targeted for purchase by money launderers, identity thieves or other criminals. The FTC recently issued regulations requiring [*20] businesses using credit cards to implement programs and policies to detect and prevent use of credit cards by identity thieves. In this regard, the JVC offers identification verification services which allow companies accepting credit cards to ensure that the card being proffered is not stolen and is in fact connected to the person offering it. We have also undertaken to educate our members about this law, as well as state and local requirements to protect the security of the data they gather from credit cards to ensure that data breaches do not occur and to mitigate any instances where identifying data has been made public.
> Our budget for these kinds of (both consumer and trade protection) programs is quite small, and we are the only trade association doing the work. We are funded by member dues, and[,] as previously mentioned, our membership base is reducing in size due to the state of the economy. We can do more consumer outreach and trade counseling for members of the class if we have sufficient financial support to do so.

By letter dated July 29, 2011, Lead Counsel supplemented its recommendation to the Court regarding the cy pres award. (ECF No. 1609.) Acknowledging [*21] that it has represented JVC in the past, Lead Counsel nevertheless "respectfully recommend[ed] that the Court deny [JVC's] request to participate in the distribution," because "the JVC members that were members of the class have already benefitted from the settlement and the distribution" and because Lead Counsel is "disinclined to endorse such a narrowly tailored interest['s] receiving a portion of the funds, particularly when its connection to the underlying case and the issues it concerned is so attenuated." (Id. at 3.) Lead Counsel instead reiterated its recommendation that the entire cy pres distribution be granted to AAI, but further stated that "to the extent the Court would like to include consumer organizations in the distribution we respectfully recommend that 2/3 of the award be given to the AAI, with the remaining 1/3 awarded to one or two worthy consumer organizations." (Id. at 2.) While "laud[ing] the work that Consumers Union does on behalf of consumers," Lead Counsel expressed the view that U.S. PIRG "would be an equally worthy recipient of the funds that the Court decides to allocate to consumer groups," (id. at 2-3), saying:

> PIRG is a network of state public interest [*22] groups working on behalf of the American public on issues such as product safety, public health and health care reform, higher education, political corruption and voting rights. See http://www.uspirg.org/about-us. PIRG has also been among the most active consumer groups on issues pertaining to the high, and hidden, costs of payment cards to consumers. PIRG, for example, submitted comments to the Federal Reserve with respect to its recent rulemakings on debit interchange that were indicative of the sophisticated approach it brings to bear on these issues. . . Accordingly, to the extent the Court chooses to include consumer organizations in the cy pres distribution, we respectfully recommend that 1/3 of the available funds be given to PIRG or split between PIRG and Consumers Union.

(Id. at 3 (exhibit citations omitted; italics added).)

Lead Counsel's July 29, 2011 letter also provided the following additional information about AAI:

> As noted earlier, the AAI is a non-profit organization dedicated to education, research and advocacy concerning antitrust law. It was the first public interest group to focus on promoting more aggressive antitrust policies and enforcement to maintain competition [*23] and protect consumers and small businesses. On virtually all complex antitrust issues, the AAI offers a unique voice in favor of vigorous private and public enforcement of the antitrust laws. It has advocated on behalf of consumers and small businesses in Congress, before agencies and courts, on the state level and internationally on a wide range of issues, from health care and pharmacology to retailer concerns. In that capacity the AAI conducts industry studies and joint programs with foreign antitrust enforcers, submits testimony and comments on agency policies and enforcement practices and files amicus briefs on important antitrust issues before the Supreme Court and the Appellate Courts. For example, in the past decade it has filed roughly 50 amicus briefs, including in American Needle, Inc. v. National Football League, 130 S. Ct. 2201, 176 L. Ed. 2d 947 (2010), in which the Supreme Court adopted the AAI's argument. In Pacific Bell Telephone Co. v. Linkline Communications, Inc., 555 U.S. 438, 129 S. Ct. 1109, 172 L. Ed. 2d 836 (2009), the Supreme Court invited the AAI to provide a 15-minute oral argument, believed to be a first for a non-governmental third party in an antitrust case. . . .
> Notably, the AAI's advocacy efforts have included [*24] a long-standing interest in the interchange issues central to In re Visa Check/MasterMoney Antitrust Litigation. It issued a report over a year ago calling for a policy change that would have Congress giving the Federal Reserve power to mandate lower interchange fees. After the Durbin Amendment granting such power was passed, the AAI continued the fight in the face of heavy opposition to implementation of the amendment, submitting a letter to Congress urging support of the new policy.
> Like its advocacy efforts, the AAI's efforts to educate the public about the importance of antitrust are also wide-spread and effective. These efforts include publishing over 100 articles and reports on pressing antitrust issues, producing an award-winning documentary on U.S. antitrust law that was shown on public television and developing an accompanying educational curriculum for high school classrooms (see www.fairfightfilm.org) and hosting several conferences and symposiums on antitrust issues. The AAI's website, which offers a vast array of resources to the public, including resources aimed specifically at aiding consumers, has been called "the best one-stop antitrust site out there" by Legal Times. [*25] The AAI has also contributed to antitrust scholarship in other ways. For example, in 2010, it published its third book, The International Handbook on Private Enforcement of Competition Law. It is currently preparing a book on private enforcement in the U.S. Under another cy pres grant, the AAI is also currently preparing a curriculum for the training of judges.
> The AAI is still a young organization, nearly fifteen years old. Its highly qualified five-person staff works from private homes around the U.S. AAI is about to enter the always-difficult transition to a second generation of leadership as its president and some board members approach retirement in the next two years. The AAI depends on cy pres grants and other unpredictable contributions, making long-term planning and long-term employment commitments particularly difficult. A full distribution to the AAI at this time would provide much of the financial base that will allow it to recruit the next generation of leadership and retain its excellent staff thereby guaranteeing the nation the continuing public interest services it provides. In sum, it is our hope that providing the full distribution to this worthy organization will [*26] endow it well into the future and we fear that, given the amount of the distribution, balkanizing the award between the AAI and other recipients will undermine that objective. For these reasons, we repeat our initial recommendation to the Court.

(Id. at 1-2 (exhibit citations omitted; italics added).)

By a letter also dated July 29, 2011, Consumers Union supplemented its prior application by providing the Court with a copy of an article to appear in the September 2011 edition of Consumer Reports, entitled "New ways to pay: At the checkout, should you use credit, debit or cell phone?" (ECF No. 1611.) Consumers Union's letter highlighted the following excerpts from the article:

> Most of the new electronic payment options are tied to credit and debit cards, so whatever costs you incur in using your plastic will transfer to the new methods. But some costs are completely hidden, so consumers are often unaware of the price of their payment-choice decisions. . . .

> For example, banks have long charged a fee of 1 to 4 percent of the purchase amount, depending on whether debit or credit was used. That fee is levied on retailers, so consumers don't see it up front, but they pay it in higher merchandise [*27] prices. "The average household pays $427 a year in transaction fees to card companies and banks that they don't know they're paying. . . ."

(Id. at 2.) The article advises consumers to "never pay a fee to pay by debit" and asserts that "[s]uch fees . . . aren't common, but some merchants impose them. Refuse, cancel the sale, and report the merchant to your debit-card issuer." (Id. at 2 (quoting article).) Consumers Union asserts that the article offers "a good example of our ongoing journalism, education and advocacy efforts on hidden costs." (Id.) The letter concludes:

> A cy pres award from this settlement would be timely indeed, potentially providing significant funding for our efforts to inform, protect, connect and empower consumers in the area of personal finance and payment card fees. It would, for example, assist us in expanding our reach to minority and younger consumer communities, such as those going off to college, using creative methods such as animated videos, contests and school/campus programs.

In a letter dated August 5, 2011, Lead Counsel informed the Court that Jeffrey Shinder and Doug Rosenthal of Constantine Cannon LLP (Lead Counsel), and George Sampson of [*28] Hagens Berman (a firm that also represents the class), are members of the AAI advisory board, and that Lloyd Constantine, also of Constantine Cannon LLP, is a former member of the advisory board. (ECF No. 1612.) Lead Counsel explained that advisory board members "receive no compensation or other potential benefit from their roles as advisory board members" and that they "recuse themselves . . . when conflicts of interest arise due to conflicting client matters or past governmental roles." (Id. at 1.) Lead Counsel noted that AAI's website lists its advisory board members. (Id. (citing http://www.antitrustinstitute.org/content/people).)

On September 14, 2011, after ordering the payment of various fees and expenses from the remaining funds, the Court directed Lead Counsel to remit what remained of the settlement fund to the Clerk of the Court on or before September 16, 2011. (See also Sept. 15, 2011 Order, ECF No. 1620 (directing Clerk of the Court to place remitted funds into an interest-bearing account).) On September 16, 2011, Lead Counsel sent the Clerk of the Court two checks in the amounts of $1,750,473.29 and $22,734.79. (ECF Nos. 1621, 1622.) On October 18, 2011, Special Master [*29] Robin Wilcox submitted her final bill in the amount of $24,702.15.

FINDINGS OF FACT AND CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

This Court has "broad supervisory powers with respect to the administration and allocation of settlement funds." In re Holocaust Victim Assets Litig., 424 F.3d 132, 146 (2d Cir. 2005) (internal quotation marks omitted); see also id. at 147 (noting that, in In re Airline Ticket Commission Antitrust Litigation, 268 F.3d 619, 626 (8th Cir. 2001), the Eighth Circuit concluded that a cy pres allocation is within the Court's discretion unless the Court "(1) fails to offer any indication of having carefully weighed all of the considerations relevant to the allocation; and (2) makes no findings in connection with its distribution of funds"). "A cy pres payment, as an adjunct to a payment by other means to some members of the class, is warranted where the amount to be distributed to the remaining class members is small relative to the administrative costs of a direct distribution." In re MetLife Demutualization Litig., 689 F. Supp. 2d 297, 343 (E.D.N.Y. 2010).

An additional distribution in this case would involve prohibitively high administrative costs. Checks that would be sent to class [*30] members in connection with such a distribution would be de minimis. Therefore, it is clear to me, and I hereby find, that a cy pres award is a more appropriate manner by which to dispose of the remaining settlement funds than would be an additional distribution. The question, then, is to which charitable organization or organizations this award should be made.

Each of the organizations that has applied for or has been mentioned as a potential recipient of an award from the remaining funds is a worthy cause. However, "the purpose of Cy Pres distribution is to put the unclaimed fund to its next best compensation use, e.g., for the aggregate, indirect, prospective benefit of the class." Masters v.

Wilhelmina Model Agency, Inc., 473 F.3d 423, 436 (2d Cir. 2007) (internal quotation marks and alterations omitted); see also id. ("Cy Pres means 'as near as possible' . . . ."). Based on this standard, I agree with Lead Counsel that JVC is not an appropriate recipient. The JVC members who were members of the class have already benefited from the settlement and distribution. I am, moreover, concerned that an award to a cause with such narrowly tailored interests would have the effect of inequitably [*31] concentrating its benefit on a subset of the class as opposed to the class as a whole.

Bearing in mind the interests of the entire class and all of its members, I believe that the award should be spread among the three remaining charities described above — AAI, Consumers Union and U.S. PIRG. AAI has made significant contributions to the development and enforcement of the antitrust laws and will no doubt make effective use of the funds it receives. Similarly, both Consumers Union and U.S. PIRG have devoted substantial resources to issues that are closely related to the interests of the members of this class — including, for example, issues pertaining to the high and hidden costs of payment cards.

To account for the fact that each of these organizations does work that benefits the class in different ways, I hereby order the distribution of the amount remaining after the payment of the Special Master's final bill as follows: 50% to AAI; 25% to Consumers Union; and 25% to U.S. PIRG.

CONCLUSION

For the reasons described above, I hereby direct the Clerk of the Court to make payment to the Special Master in the amount of $24,702.15. I further direct that the remaining funds be distributed as [*32] follows: 50% of the amount that remains after the payment of the Special Master's bill to the American Antitrust Institute, 25% to Consumers Union and 25% to U.S. PIRG.

So ordered.

73 Pa. Stat. Ann. § 201-2(2), a provision of the Unfair Trade Practices and Consumer Protection Law, 73 Pa. Stat. Ann. §§ 201-1 to 201-9.3, defines a "person" as follows: "Person" means natural persons, corporations, trusts, partnerships, incorporated or unincorporated associations, and any other legal entities. Clearly, no form of government unit or public authority is expressly included in the definition.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > State Regulation > Scope

See 73 Pa. Stat. Ann. § 201-9.2(a).

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

HN5[] Legislation, Interpretation

A statute is ambiguous where parties the offer conflicting, but plausible interpretations. As in all cases where a latent ambiguity in a statute exists, a court resorts to the canons of statutory construction to discover the Legislature's intent. When statutory language is not explicit, the intention of the General Assembly may be ascertained by considering the mischief to be remedied, the object to be attained, and the consequences of a particular interpretation. 1 Pa.C.S. § 1921(c) (3), (4), (6). Further, in ascertaining legislative intent, the Statutory Construction Act requires a presumption that the General Assembly did not intend a result that is absurd or unreasonable, as well as a presumption that the General Assembly intends to favor the public interest as against any private interest. 1 Pa.C.S. § 1922(1), (5).

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > State Regulation > Scope

HN6[] Trade Practices & Unfair Competition, State Regulation

The term "person" in 73 Pa. Stat. Ann. § 201-9.2, a provision of the Unfair Trade Practices and Consumer Protection Law (CPL), 73 Pa. Stat. Ann. §§ 201-1 to 201-9.3, is used not just to refer to a defendant, but also to refer to a plaintiff. This dual use of the term is consistent throughout the CPL. The General Assembly intended the term to have a uniform meaning.

HN10[] Trade Practices & Unfair Competition, State Regulation

The Unfair Trade Practices and Consumer Protection Law (CPL), 73 Pa. Stat. Ann. §§ 201-1 to 201-9.3, should be liberally construed. The purpose of CPL is to eliminate unfair or deceptive business practices.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > State Regulation > Scope

HN11[] Trade Practices & Unfair Competition, State Regulation

The Unfair Trade Practices and Consumer Protection Law (CPL), 73 Pa. Stat. Ann. §§ 201-1 to 201-9.3, contains express limitations on liability. First, a "person" is only liable if it is engaged in trade or commerce, as those terms are defined. 73 Pa. Stat. Ann. § 201-2(3). This status filter operates to protect defendant "persons," including local agencies, from broad liability. Second, 73 Pa. Stat. Ann. § 201-3 contains specific exclusions from liability. The exclusions cover those who, in good faith and without knowledge of falsity or deceptive character, are involved in the broadcast or publication of an advertisement which may violate the CPL. Tellingly, the exclusions do not more broadly shield local agencies from liability. Third, 73 Pa. Stat. Ann. § 201-9.2, addressing actions other than those brought in the public interest, limits liability on the basis of the purpose of the transaction. In particular, before a "person" can be liable as a defendant in such an action, the transaction must involve personal, family or household purposes. Through this additional transaction-purpose filter, the General Assembly endeavors to focus recovery on consumer-based practices and to protect defendant "persons," including local agencies, from expansive liability.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > State Regulation > Scope

HN12[] Trade Practices & Unfair Competition, State Regulation

Under the Unfair Trade Practices and Consumer Protection Law, 73 Pa. Stat. Ann. §§ 201-1 to 201-9.3, suits by the Attorney General or district attorney in the name of the Commonwealth must be based on a determination by an elected official that such a suit is in the public interest. This determination is a prerequisite to injunctive relief under 73 Pa. Stat. Ann. § 201-4 (prospective), restorative relief under 73 Pa. Stat. Ann. § 201-4.1 (retrospective), and civil penalties under 73 Pa. Stat. Ann. § 201-8(b). This additional public interest filter functions to protect all defendant persons, including local agencies, from inappropriate suit. Thus, the General Assembly's use of the phrase "any other legal entities" in its definition of "person," under 73 Pa. Stat. Ann. § 201-2(2), is expansive enough to embrace local agencies.

[*588] OPINION BY JUDGE SIMPSON

This first of two related interlocutory appeals by permission returns to us after our Supreme Court vacated our prior decision in Meyer v. Community College of Beaver County, 965 A.2d 406 (Pa. Cmwlth. 2009) (en banc) and remanded the case to us. In doing so, the Supreme Court determined that the part of the Judicial Code commonly known as the Political Subdivision Tort Claims Act (Tort Claims Act)[1] does not grant immunity to a local agency from all statutory causes of action. See Meyer v. Cmty. Coll. of Beaver County, 606 Pa. 539, 2 A.3d 499 (2010) [2] (Meyer II). The Court instructed us to consider: 1) whether the Community College is a "person" as defined in the Unfair Trade Practices and Consumer Protection Law (CPL)[2] and therefore subject to suit under that statute; and, 2) whether the Community College is immune under the Tort Claims Act because the CPL claims raised against it sound in tort.

[1] 42 Pa. C.S. §§8541-42.

Generally, the Community College appeals an interlocutory order of the Court of Common Pleas of Beaver County (trial court) denying its motion for partial summary judgment. A group of former students (Plaintiffs)[3] enrolled in the Community College's police technology program (the Academy) during the 2001-02 academic year, brought a civil action after the program lost its school certification under the Municipal Police Officers Education and Training Act (Training Act), 53 Pa. C.S. §§2161-70, informally known as "Act 120." In their complaints, Plaintiffs allege breach of contract and breach of warranty, and various unfair or deceptive acts as defined in the CPL.

I. Pleadings

In May 2002, before Plaintiffs completed the Academy's course of study, the Pennsylvania Municipal Police Officers' Education and Training Commission (Training Commission) suspended the Academy's Act 120 certification. The Training Commission based the suspension on numerous violations. The Training Commission officially revoked the Academy's Act 120 certification in August 2002.

Thereafter, Plaintiffs filed a complaint against the Community College that alleged as follows. In its 2000-01[4] course catalog, the College expressly represented the Academy to be a Training Commission certified course of study. These express [*589] representations were made to induce, and did induce, Plaintiffs to enroll in [4] the Academy. Plaintiffs paid tuition, attended the required courses and took examinations. Plaintiffs raised causes of action for breach of contract, breach of warranty, violations of the CPL, and violations of other statutes.

The Community College filed preliminary objections, only some of which are relevant now. In addition to issues regarding whether it is subject to liability under the CPL and whether it is immune from statutory-based claims, the Community College challenged the sufficiency of averments of fraud.

As pertinent to the current discussion, the trial court allowed CPL claims sounding in contract to proceed; however, the trial court sustained objections to all claims sounding in fraud, including CPL claims, because the averments did not establish scienter on the part of the Community College.

Plaintiffs filed an amended complaint. They repeated their previous claims for breach of [5] contract and breach of warranty. As to claims under the CPL, they removed averments of fraudulent conduct, but they retained averments that conduct was unfair and deceptive. This pleading will be discussed below. Plaintiffs alleged substantial economic losses as a result of the Community College's violations of the CPL. They also sought treble damages and an award of costs and attorney fees under Section 9.2 of the CPL.[5]

A second round of preliminary objections was filed. Relevant now, the Community College challenged Plaintiffs' pleading of misrepresentations, asserting the averments reintroduced CPL claims sounding in fraud, contrary to the trial court's ruling on the first set of preliminary objections. Accepting Plaintiffs' arguments that the language sought to bolster breach of contract and warranty claims and not to plead a cause of action in fraud, the trial court overruled the objections.[6]

Wigley, Dennis W. Woodley, Chris Mack and Tammy Muslo. This appeal was argued seriately with Barr v. Community College of Beaver County, __ A.3d. __, 2011 Pa. Commw. Unpub. LEXIS 886 (Pa. Cmwlth., No. 1142 C.D. 2008, filed October 27, 2011). The only significant difference between the two cases is Plaintiffs here completed one half of their course of study; the Barr plaintiffs completed virtually the entire course of study.

[4] Although Plaintiffs attended the Academy during the 2001-02 school year, the College provided them with 2000-01 catalogs. The College did not receive its 2001-02 catalogs until October 2001. See App. to the College's Br. in Supp. of Mot. for Summ. J., Tab 26 (Dep. of Harriet Ann Wallace at 3).

II. Partial Summary Judgment

After the close of pleadings and discovery, the Community College filed a motion for partial summary judgment. Relevant to this appeal, the Community College argued the CPL does not apply to community colleges and, as a local agency, a community college is immune from CPL claims under 42 Pa. C.S. §8541, part of the Tort Claims Act.

Ultimately, the trial court denied the Community College's motion for partial summary judgment. The trial court rejected the assertion the CPL does not apply to community colleges. It further rejected the immunity defense on the basis that some of Plaintiffs. CPL claims sound in contract, not in tort. In denying the motion for partial summary judgment, the trial court reasoned (with emphasis added):

> The party opposing a motion for summary judgment must provide an evidentiary foundation to demonstrate the existence of a genuine issue of material fact. In ruling on a motion for summary judgment, the court's function is not to decide issues of material fact, but rather [*590] to determine whether any such issues exist.
> Our courts have been reluctant to recognize claims [7] of educational malpractice in the academic environment but they have recognized that a contract exists between a student and a college. The courts have held that in general, the basic legal relationship between a student and a private university or college is contractual in nature. The catalogs, bulletins, circulars, and regulations of the institution made available to the matriculant become part of the contract. Questions of discipline, academic matters, and tuition and scholarship disputes have been addressed by courts and resolved on contract principles. At the same time, however, courts have been reluctant to apply strict contract concepts to the unique relationship that exists between students and universities or colleges.

Trial Ct. Slip Op., 5/12/08, at 5, Reproduced Record (R.R.) at 258.

In response to the denial of its motion, the Community College filed a motion to amend the order to certify for an interlocutory appeal of the following two issues: whether the Community College is a "person" as defined in Section 2(2) of the CPL, 73 P.S. §201-2(2); and, whether the Community College is immune to prosecution because the CPL sounds in tort and the Community College is immune to [8] tort actions under the Tort Claims Act. The trial court granted the Community College's motion. This Court allowed the appeal.

III. Meyer II

After argument, an en banc panel of this Court reversed the trial court, holding that regardless of whether the Community College was a "person" under the CPL, it was immune from claims for statutory damages under the Tort Claims Act. The Supreme Court, however, permitted a discretionary appeal. Ultimately, it reversed and remanded, with direction.

The majority opinion was authored by Mr. Justice Saylor. The majority concluded that our application of the Tort Claims Act to statutory damages was not sustainable. The majority emphasized the main policy considerations historically underlying tort law, centered on injury to a person or property. See Meyer II, 606 Pa. at 545, 2 A.3d at 502. This was contrasted with the central focus of contract law, the protection of bargained-for expectations. Id. The Torts Claims Act was intended to apply to the former, not the latter. Id. Consequently, the Supreme Court held that [6] Thereafter, the Community College filed an answer and new matter denying Plaintiffs' allegations. In its new matter, the Community College asserted various claims and defenses including [6] failure to state a cause of action, immunity, and statute of limitations.

HN1[] governmental immunity does not extend to all statutory causes of action, regardless of whether they sound in tort or contract. See id. at 546, 2 A.3d at 503 [9] .

In a lengthy note responding to the concurring opinion, the majority presumed the first order of business on remand would be for this Court to undertake the threshold determination of whether the Legislature intended for the government to be subject to private actions under Section 9.2 of the CPL. Id. at 546, 2 A.3d at 503 n.6. The majority highlighted the Plaintiffs. argument referencing Commonwealth Court opinions holding that the Legislature did not intend to include governmental entities within a listing of persons and entities which might technically encompass them where it did not include the governmental entity expressly. See, e.g., Huffman v. Borough of Millvale, 139 Pa. Commw. 349, 591 A.2d 1137 (Pa. Cmwlth. 1991); see also Matter of Leonard v. Masterson, 70 A.D.3d 697, 896 N.Y.S.2d 358 (N.Y. App. Div. 2010).

In her concurring opinion, Madame Justice Orie Melvin expressed her preference for directing this Court "to examine the pleadings on remand to determine whether [*591] the [Plaintiffs.] claims satisfy the [CPL]. If sufficient facts have been pled, the Commonwealth Court should then ascertain whether the claims sound in tort or in contract and dispose of the matter accordingly." 606 Pa. at 549, 2 A.3d at 505. [10] With these directives in mind, we analyze the issues.[7]

IV. Issues

A. "Person" Under CPL

1. Contentions

The Community College first asserts it is not included in the CPL's definition of a "person" and thus not subject to prosecution under Section 9.2 of the CPL. Section 2(2) of the CPL, HN3[] 73 P.S. §201-2(2), defines a "person" as follows (with emphasis added):

> 'Person' means natural persons, corporations, trusts, partnerships, incorporated or unincorporated associations, and any other legal entities.

Clearly, no form of government unit or public authority is expressly included in the definition. What is less clear is whether the phrase "any other legal entities" extends to public agencies.

Section 9.2(a) of the CPL, which deals with private actions for alleged violations of that statute, uses the defined term "person" as follows:

> HN4[] (a) Any person who purchases or leases goods [11] or services primarily for personal, family or household purposes and thereby suffers any ascertainable loss of money or property, real or personal, as a result of the use or employment by any person of a method, act or practice declared unlawful by section 3 of this act, may bring a private action to recover actual damages or one hundred dollars ($100), whichever is greater. The court may, in its discretion, award up to three times the actual damages sustained, but not less than one hundred dollars ($100), and may provide such additional relief as it deems necessary or proper. The court may award to the plaintiff, in addition to other relief provided in this section, costs and reasonable attorney fees.

[7] HN2[] Our scope of review of a trial court's order granting or denying summary judgment is plenary, and our standard of review is clear: the trial court's order will be reversed only where it is established that the court committed an error of law or abused its discretion. Kincel v. Dep't of Transp., 867 A.2d 758 (Pa. Cmwlth. 2005).

73 P.S. §201-9.2(a) (emphasis added). Notably, this provision uses the term "person" to describe both a plaintiff and a defendant in a private action under the CPL.

The Community College contends that public subdivisions and municipal corporations are recognized as unique statutory entities and are afforded defenses based on that status. One such defense is the well-established prohibition against a presumption that a public entity is subject to suit without having been specifically identified [12] within the statute.

The Community College relies on various Pennsylvania appellate court decisions for the proposition that unless specifically named, public entities are excluded from the reach of statutes even where "catch-all" language is present. E.g., In re Keifer, 430 Pa. 491, 243 A.2d 336 (1968) (an established principle of statutory construction: an act does not deprive the Commonwealth of any prerogative, right, or property unless the Commonwealth is specifically named or the intention to include it is necessarily implied); Hoffman v. City of Pittsburgh, 365 Pa. 386, 75 A.2d 649, 42 Mun. L Rep. 75 (1950) (applicability of statutes to public entities never presumed); Huffman (borough beyond reach of Wage and Payment [*592] Collection Law[8] notwithstanding broad definition of "employer"). It also relies on decisions from other states, including Leonard. The Community College asserts that based on this authority, we should apply the rule of statutory construction that the express mention of a specific matter in a general statute implies the exclusion of others not named. Thus, the absence of specific reference to public entities precludes the incorporation of the Community College into the definition of [13] "person."

Further, the Community College cites various Pennsylvania statutes as evidence that the General Assembly knew how to specifically include public entities within "catch-all" provisions.[9] Had it been the intention of the General Assembly to do so with the CPL, it could have followed known patterns. Finally, the Community College seeks to distinguish a case upon which Plaintiffs rely, TIG Specialty Insurance Co. v. Koken, 855 A.2d 900 (Pa. Cmwlth. 2004), because the special status of a public entity was not at issue.

In contrast, Plaintiffs assert that a "plain language" reading of the CPL definition of "person" leads to the conclusion that it includes the Community College, which is a legal entity. Citing TIG, they argue that statutory construction rules in general, and the rule of expressio unius est exclusio alterius in particular, should not be applied where the words of a statute are clear and unambiguous.

Plaintiffs also contend that there is no rule of construction that would require the General Assembly to name community colleges in a statute in order to evince its intent to apply the statute to those entities. Many of the cases referenced by the Community College are inapplicable because they deal with the sovereign, the Commonwealth, and not with a local agency. Also, those cases make clear that the rule of construction was applied to protect the Commonwealth's rights and prerogatives from diminution, as by the application of a statute of limitations. Because [15] application of the CPL to the Community College will not involve the Commonwealth as a party or the diminution of any right of the Commonwealth, the cases are inapposite. Plaintiffs also remind this Court of the reasoning which compelled the Supreme Court to abolish sovereign immunity.

Further, Plaintiffs contend there is no legislative intent to exclude community colleges from application of the CPL. Assuming that resort to rules of construction is appropriate, various rules support their position. Thus, although a court must assume that the General Assembly intends the entire statute to be effective, 1 Pa. C.S. §1922(2), the

[9] Section 102(b) of The Controlled Substance, Drug, Device and Cosmetic Act, Act of April 14, 1972, P.L. 233, as amended, 35 P.S. §780-102(b) (definition of "person" expressly includes "government or governmental subdivision or agency" in addition to "any other legal entity"); Section 911(h)(3) of the Crimes Code, 18 Pa. C.S. §911(h)(3) (definition of "enterprise" specifically includes "legitimate as well as illegitimate entities and governmental entities" in addition to "other legal entity" for purposes of corrupt organization sanctions); Section 103 of the Solid Waste Management Act, Act of July [14] 7, 1980, P.L. 380, as amended, 35 P.S. §6018.103 (definition of "person" specifically includes "municipal authority, Federal Government or agency, State institution and agency" as well as "any other legal entity whatsoever ....").

Community College approach would render the definitional phrase "any other legal entities" ineffective. Also, cases require that the CPL be liberally construed to effectuate the legislative goal of consumer protection. Commonwealth [*593] v. Percudani, 844 A.2d 35 (Pa. Cmwlth.), amended on reconsideration by, 851 A.2d 987 (Pa. Cmwlth. 2004). They assert it is unclear why, despite this rule, a community college which harmed consumers of educational services should obtain a judicially crafted exemption from the CPL.

Finally, Plaintiffs seek to distinguish Huffman, which [16] involved the definition of "employer" under the Wage and Payment Collection Law, and the other statutory definitions upon which the Community College relies.

2. Discussion

a. Statutory Construction

The parties here advance competing interpretations regarding the meaning of "person" as defined in the CPL. Because the parties offer conflicting interpretations of the relevant statutory provision, the term is ambiguous. See, e.g., Malt Beverage Distribs. Ass'n v. Pa. Liquor Control Bd., 601 Pa. 449, 974 A.2d 1144 (2009). (HN5[] statute is ambiguous where parties offered conflicting, but plausible interpretations). "As in all cases where a latent ambiguity in [a] statute exists, we resort to the canons of statutory construction to discover the Legislature's intent." Id. at 463, 974 A.2d at 1153.

When statutory language is not explicit, the intention of the General Assembly may be ascertained by considering the mischief to be remedied, the object to be attained, and the consequences of a particular interpretation. 1 Pa. C.S. §1921(c) (3), (4), (6). Further, in ascertaining legislative intent, the Statutory Construction Act requires a presumption that "the General Assembly did not intend a result that [17] is absurd or unreasonable" as well as a presumption that "the General Assembly intends to favor the public interest as against any private interest." 1 Pa. C.S. §1922(1), (5).

b. Dual Use of "Person"

The General Assembly's intent is revealed by a careful examination of the entire CPL. As noted above, HN6[] the term "person" in Section 9.2 is used not just to refer to a defendant, such as the Community College here, but also to refer to a plaintiff. This dual use of the term is consistent throughout the CPL. See, e.g., Section 4.1 of the CPL,[10] (where court issues permanent injunction under Section 4, court may direct that defendant to restore money or property "to any person in interest"); Section 9.1 of CPL,[11] (receiver may take into possession property of "person or persons for whom the receiver is appointed;" any "person" suffering damages may participate with general creditors).

Examining the context in which "person" is used throughout the CPL, we conclude that the General Assembly intended the term [18] to have a uniform meaning. Thus, there is nothing in the way the General Assembly used the term to indicate it meant something different depending on whether it referred to a plaintiff or a defendant. Also, there is nothing in the way the General Assembly used the term to indicate it meant something different in each section of the CPL.

c. "Person" as Plaintiff/ Actions in the Public Interest

[10] Section 4.1 of the CPL was added by the Act of November 23, 1976, P.L. 1166, 73 P.S. §201-4.1.

We first consider use of the term "person" to connote a plaintiff in an action based on violations of the CPL. Evaluating the consequences of a particular interpretation, [*594] we observe that a construction under which a local agency[12] is not a plaintiff "person" results in the inability of local agencies to recover restoration under Section 4.1, to participate with general creditors under Section 9.1, and to bring suit and recover damages, treble damages, costs and attorneys fees under Section 9.2. Thus, local agencies harmed by violations of the CPL would have significantly fewer remedies than other legal entity plaintiffs. Concomitantly, those violating the CPL have more limited liability if a local agency is a victim. How such a construction is in the public interest is unclear.

Moreover, the absurdity of such a construction is most evident with regard to Sections 4,[13] and 4.1,[14] and 8(b)[15] of the CPL, all of which deal with suits in the public interest. Section 4 authorizes the Attorney General or district attorney to bring an action in the name of the Commonwealth to restrain practices in violation of the CPL where proceedings would be in the public interest. Section 4.1 applies where such an injunction is entered, and it allows a court to also restore money or property "to any person in interest." Section 8(b) also applies to actions brought under Section 4 in the public interest, and it provides for recovery by the Commonwealth of civil penalties in certain circumstances. These provisions expressly authorize the Commonwealth to be a party plaintiff and to recover civil penalties in certain circumstances.

A construction under which a local agency is not a plaintiff "person" results in the inability of a local agency to recover past lost sums under Section 4.1. This is true even if suit brought in the public interest is successful and prospective injunctive relief is granted. In short, even where suit in the public interest is successful, a local agency would have no retrospective remedy, only a prospective remedy. Such a result is indefensible, clearly not in the public interest, and inconsistent with our [*595] charge to liberally construe the CPL to achieve its objectives. Meyer II, 606 Pa. at 548, 2 A.3d at 504 (Orie Melvin, J., concurring opinion); see also Percudani [22] (HN10[] CPL should be liberally construed; purpose of CPL is to eliminate unfair or deceptive business practices).

d. "Person" as Defendant/ Liberal Construction

[12] It is undisputed [19] that the Community College is a local agency for purposes of governmental immunity. Meyer II, 606 Pa. at 542 n. 2, 2 A.3d at 500 n. 2.

[13] Section 4 of the CPL, 73 P.S. §201-4, provides in pertinent part:

> HN7[] Whenever the Attorney General ... has reason to believe that any person is using or is about to use any method, act or practice declared by section 3 of this [20] act to be unlawful, and that proceedings would be in the public interest, he may bring an action in the name of the Commonwealth against such person to restrain by temporary or permanent injunction the use of such method, act or practice.

[14] Section 4.1 of the CPL, 73 P.S. §201-4.1, provides in pertinent part:

> HN8[] Whenever any court issues a permanent injunction to restrain and prevent violations of this act as authorized in section 4 above, the court may in its discretion direct that the defendant or defendants restore to any person in interest any moneys or property, real or personal, which may have been acquired by any means of any violation of this act, under terms and conditions to be established by the court.

[15] Section 8(b) of the CPL, 73 P.S. §201-8(b), provides in pertinent part:

> HN9[] (b) In any action brought under section 4 of this act, if the court finds that a person, firm or corporation is willfully using or has willfully used a method, act or practice declared unlawful by section 3 of this act, the Attorney General or the appropriate District Attorney, acting in the name of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, may recover, on behalf of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, a civil penalty [21] of not exceeding one thousand dollars ($1,000) per violation, which civil penalty shall be in addition to other relief which may be granted under sections 4 and 4.1 of this act. Where the victim ... is sixty years of age or older, the civil penalty shall not exceed three thousand dollars ($3,000) per violation, which penalty shall be in addition to other relief which may be granted under sections 2 and 4.1 of this act.

We now consider use of the term "person" to mean a defendant in a suit based on violations of the CPL. One way to protect the public fisc is to construe the CPL so that local agencies are not "persons" and therefore can never be defendants. As discussed above, however, such an overbroad prohibition absurdly limits the right of local agencies to recover as plaintiffs. Moreover, such a construction unnecessarily restricts the rights of ordinary consumers or other legal entities to recover against local agencies should agency practices be unfair or deceptive so as to violate the CPL. Such a construction is not consistent with our charge to liberally construe the CPL to achieve its objectives. Id.

A more targeted approach to protecting the public interest is to limit those circumstances in which a "person," can be liable. Indeed, HN11[] the CPL contains express limitations on liability.

First, a "person" is only liable if it is engaged in trade or commerce, as those terms are defined. See Section 2(3) of the CPL, 73 P.S. §201-2(3). This status [23] filter operates to protect defendant "persons," [*596] including local agencies, from broad liability.

Second, Section 3 of the CPL, 73 P.S. §201-3, contains specific exclusions from liability. The exclusions cover those who, in good faith and without knowledge of falsity or deceptive character, are involved in the broadcast or publication of an advertisement which may violate the CPL. Tellingly, the exclusions do not more broadly shield local agencies from liability.

Third, Section 9.2 of the CPL, addressing actions other than those brought in the public interest, limits liability on the basis of the purpose of the transaction. In particular, before a "person" can be liable as a defendant in such an action, the transaction must involve "personal, family or household purposes." See Valley Forge Towers S. Condo. v. Ron-Ike Foam Insulators, Inc., 393 Pa. Super. 339, 574 A.2d 641 (Pa. Super. 1990), aff'd, 605 A.2d 798, 529 Pa. 512 (1992). Through this additional transaction-purpose filter, the General Assembly endeavored to focus recovery on consumer-based practices and to protect defendant "persons," including local agencies, from expansive liability.

Fourth, HN12[] a careful review of Sections 4, 4.1, and 8(b) of the [24] CPL, relating to suits brought in the public interest, supports our analysis. Thus, suits by the Attorney General or district attorney in the name of the Commonwealth must be based on a determination by an elected official that such a suit is in the public interest. See Weinberg v. Sun Co., Inc., 565 Pa. 612, 777 A.2d 442 (2001). This determination is a prerequisite to injunctive relief under Section 4 (prospective), restorative relief under Section 4.1 (retrospective), and civil penalties under Section 8(b). We conclude that this additional "public interest" filter functions to protect all defendant "persons," including local agencies, from inappropriate suit.

In sum, considering the statute's dual use of the term "person" to mean both plaintiff and defendant, the provisions for suits in the public interest, the consequences of a construction in which the phrase "any other legal entities" does not include local agencies, and the existence of additional filters to protect all "persons," including local agencies, from overbroad liability, we conclude the General Assembly's use of the phrase "any other legal entities" in its definition of "person" is expansive enough to embrace local [25] agencies.[16]

e. Community College's Arguments

The Community College does not acknowledge the dual use issue, and it does not address use of the term "person" throughout the CPL. Also, the Community College does not address the import of provisions for suits in [16] We decline to adopt the approach embraced by Judge Brobson in his dissenting opinion. While he posits that many public agency activities may satisfy the "trade or commerce" requirement of the CPL, he does not address the "transaction-purpose" requirement for actions under Section 9.2. Also, he does not address the most fundamental limitation on liability: that trade or commerce conduct must be "unfair or deceptive." See Section 3 of the CPL, 73 P.S. §201-3. We see nothing in the language or structure of the CPL to suggest a legislative intent to insulate local agencies engaged in trade or commerce from responsibility for unfair or deceptive practices which cause a loss to Pennsylvania consumers.

the public interest. Because the Community College does not contemplate the full implications of the construction for which it advocates, its contentions are not persuasive.

Also, given our analysis based on the terms and structure of the [26] CPL, we specifically reject those arguments based on cases which do not involve this statute and those arguments based on unrelated statutes. In particular, we reject as inapplicable the argument based on Kiefer, Hoffman, and Huffman[17] that the applicability of statutes to public entities is never presumed, even where a broad statutory definition is involved. These cases and statutes do not involve the unique provisions of the CPL, especially those which permit suit in the public interest. Based on the provisions of the CPL and our charge to liberally construe the statute, we conclude that local agencies are included among "any other legal entities" by necessary implication.

Further, we distinguish Leonard, which was referenced by our Supreme [27] Court majority in Meyers I. Leonard involved a suit in mandamus seeking to compel a superintendent of highways to commence proceedings to declare a private road over land owned by a county. Thus, the petitioner sought a private taking of public land under the Highway Law. The Supreme Court, Appellate Division, determined:

> The Highway Law provisions at issue do not specifically or necessarily include governmental entities such as the County. Indeed, by providing for the payment of damages to a 'person or persons' through whose land the private road is to pass (Highway Law §307), the Legislature evinced an intention not to provide for the taking of land owned by a governmental entity. It has long been the law ... that the term 'person' generally does not include a governmental entity ... unless a statutory definition expressly includes that governmental entity within the meaning of the term.

70 A.D.3d at 698, 896 N.Y.S.2d at 360 (citations omitted).

[*597] Aside from the factual differences between Leonard and the current case, especially the obvious public interest at risk, there are such differences between the statutes as to call into question the application of that decision here. In particular, [28] there is no indication that the phrase "person or persons" in the Highway Law was used to mean both petitioners and respondents. Also, the court did not discuss how provisions for Highway Law actions in the public interest were impacted by the construction of the term "person." Nor did the court allude to any standing rule of liberal construction to achieve the objectives of the Highway Law. In short, due to the language and structure of the CPL, there is reason to conclude that the phrase "any other legal entities" includes local agencies by necessary implication, while the language and structure of the Highway Law do not lead to that conclusion.

For the reasons discussed, we conclude that the Community College is a "person" as defined in the CPL. Therefore, no trial court error is evident on this issue.

B. Immunity under Tort Claims Act

1. Contentions

The Community College next asserts that as a public entity it is immune from tort actions under the Tort Claims Act, except for certain exceptions not relevant here. For several reasons, it asserts the CPL sounds in tort; accordingly, an action for violation of the CPL is a tort action to which immunity under the Tort Claims Act applies.

[17] Although not controlling, we observe that the United States District Court for the Middle District of Pennsylvania declined to follow Huffman and the expressio unuis est exclusio alterius rule; rather, the court predicted the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania would hold that the Wage Payment and Collection Law applies to municipal corporations. See *Carstetter v. Adams County Transit Auth., 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 51874, 2008 WL 2704600 (M.D. Pa. 2008) at 31-32 (unpublished opinion).

As [29] to the standard by which to distinguish actions sounding in tort from actions sounding in contract, the Community College advocates several approaches. First, it suggests that for an action to sound in contract there must be an underlying enforceable contract. Where, as here, there is no underlying enforceable contract, the claim cannot sound in contract and must therefore sound in tort. Moreover, courts recognize that attempts to circumvent the Torts Claim Act by reclassifying an action as sounding in contract are not sufficient to avoid immunity.

Citing Matarazzo v. Millers Mutual Group, Inc., 927 A.2d 689 (Pa. Cmwlth. 2007) (application of Tort Claims Act to municipal authority despite attempts to raise contract claim; CPL not involved), the Community College suggests another approach to distinguishing between actions sounding in tort and actions sounding in contract. Under this approach, tort actions lie for breaches of duties imposed by law as a matter of social policy, while contract actions lie only for breaches of duties imposed by mutual agreements between the parties. Id. at 694. Because the CPL is intended to remedy a breach of social policy related to fraud and unfair and [30] deceptive trade practices, suit for violation of the CPL provisions in question here sounds in tort.

As a third approach, the Community College offers the misfeasance/nonfeasance dichotomy discussed in Yocca v. Pittsburgh Steelers Sports, Inc., 806 A.2d 936 (Pa. Cmwlth. 2002), rev'd on other grounds, 578 Pa. 479, 854 A.2d 425 (2004) (class action by season ticket holders under CPL; preliminary objections). Under this approach, where, as here, there is misfeasance, the "gist" of the action sounds in tort.

Further, the Community College reminds us that judicial and statutory limitations to damages available against a public entity would be reversed by a decision against it. The Community College specifically refers to treble damages available under Section 9.2 of the CPL.

Finally, the Community College seeks to distinguish cases relied upon by Plaintiffs, [*598] in particular Weinberg v. Sun Company Inc., 1999 PA Super 228, 740 A.2d 1152 (Pa. Super. 1999), aff'd in part, rev'd in part, 565 Pa. 612, 777 A.2d 442 (2001) (class certification under CPL), and Gabriel v. O'Hara, 368 Pa. Super. 383, 534 A.2d 488 (Pa. Super. 1987) (appropriate limitations of action under CPL provisions).

In response, Plaintiffs contend that the Tort Claims [31] Act does not apply to their claims. Claims under the CPL may sound in contract, warranty, tort, fraud and other common law forms of action. The trial court correctly determined that Plaintiffs' claims sound in contract or warranty. The claims are not based on general social obligations but on private agreements between the parties.

Plaintiffs also assail the Community College's argument that they attempt to plead contract claims as a way of avoiding immunity. In the process of disputing this argument, Plaintiffs seek to distinguish cases upon which the Community College relies, including Matarazzo and cases discussing the relationship between a student and a college.

Addressing the damages available under the CPL, Plaintiffs contend that statutory damages, including possible treble damages and attorneys' fees, do not transform contract claims into tort claims. The statutory damages are legislative remedies, not punitive damages.

Finally, Plaintiffs argue that the question of whether their claims sound in contract cannot be answered by reference to a social policy allegedly embodied in the CPL. In their discussion of this point, Plaintiffs reference the Supreme Court's decision in Weinberg, [32] which addressed a private plaintiff's burden of proof in the context of class certification.

2. Discussion

In her concurring opinion, Madame Justice Orie Melvin encouraged this Court "to examine the pleadings on remand to determine whether the [Plaintiffs'] claims satisfy the CPL. If sufficient facts have been pled, the Commonwealth Court should ascertain whether the claims sound in tort or in contract and dispose of the matter accordingly." Meyer II, 606 Pa. at 549, 2 A.3d at 505. As to ascertaining whether the claims sound in tort or in contract, Mr. Justice

Saylor, writing for the majority, reminded us that HN13[] the central focus of contract law is the protection of bargained-for expectations. Id. at 545, 2 A.3d at 502.

In their amended complaint, Plaintiffs alleged the Community College violated the CPL in the following manner:

> 56. In connection with the sale of its educational services and collection of tuition, fees and costs related thereto, the College committed various unfair and deceptive acts and practices in violation of the CPL, including, but not limited to:
> (a) Representing, warranting and guaranteeing in writing that the Academy was in compliance with Act 120 when in fact it [33] was not;
> (b) Representing that the Plaintiffs would be eligible for certification under Act 120 upon completion of the Academy, when they would not be eligible;
> (c) Misrepresenting the nature and qualifications of the Academy;
> (d) Making the material representations described in Paragraphs 3 through 51 of this Complaint; and > (e) Oppressing and abusing Plaintiffs by charging and collecting unauthorized and illegal fees, costs, expenses and tuition.
> 57. Each Plaintiff relied upon the various warranties and misrepresentations [*599] of the College in entering their agreements with the College and in continuing to make payments to the College.
> 58. The College's unfair and deceptive conduct (a) constituted untrue representations of the approval, characteristics, certifications, sponsorships, affiliations, uses and benefits of the College's educational services; (b) constituted untrue representations that the Academy was of a particular standard or quality; (c) caused confusion and misunderstanding as to the Academy's certification and approval; (d) constituted a failure to comply with the terms of a written guarantee or warranty; and (e) constituted deceptive conduct which created a likelihood of confusion [34] and misunderstanding—all within the meaning of [Section 3 of the CPL] and Sections 2(4)(ii), (iii), (v), (vii), (xiv) and (xxi) of the CPL].

Pls.' First Am. Compl. at 13, R.R. at 114. Thus, Plaintiffs allege conduct proscribed by the CPL as defined in Sections 2(4)(ii), (iii), (v), (vii), (xiv) and (xxi), 73 P.S. §201-2(4)(ii), (iii), (v), (vii), (xiv), (xxi).[18] After careful review, we conclude that Plaintiffs aver sufficient facts to satisfy the CPL.

[18] Section 2(4) of the CPL, 73 P.S. §201-2(4), provides in relevant part:

> HN14[] (4) "Unfair methods of competition" and "unfair or deceptive acts or practices" mean any one or more of the following:
>
> ....
> (ii) Causing likelihood of confusion or of misunderstanding as to the source, sponsorship, approval or certification of goods or services;
>
> (iii) Causing likelihood of confusion or of misunderstanding as to affiliation, connection or association with, or certification by, another;
>
> ....
>
> (v) Representing that goods or services have sponsorship, approval, characteristics, ingredients, uses, benefits, or quantities that they do not have or that a person has a sponsorship, approval, status, affiliation or connection that he does not have;
>
> ....
> (vii) Representing [35] that goods or services are of a particular standard, quality or grade, or that goods are of a particular style or model, if they are of another;
> ....

Moreover, we conclude that these averments sound in contract rather than tort. Clearly, the averments relate to the sale of educational services. Under these averments, the protection of bargained-for expectations is implicated.

Further, Plaintiffs brought an action under Section 9.2 of the CPL. As discussed elsewhere, such an action may be brought by a person "who purchases or leases goods or services primarily for personal, family or household purposes and thereby suffers any ascertainable loss ...." 73 P.S. §201-9.2. Thus, an action under Section 9.2 of the CPL must be transaction based. For this additional reason, we conclude Plaintiffs' action under the CPL sounds in contract.

Regarding the Community College's argument raising the specter [36] of treble damages, no ruling is necessary at this time, for several reasons. First and foremost, the trial court did not address this issue in denying the motion for partial summary judgment. Second, "[Plaintiffs] are not sure to recover [treble] damages ...." See Meyer II, 606 Pa. at 549, 2 A.3d at 505 (Orie Melvin, J., concurring opinion). The speculative nature of such recovery is highlighted by the trial court's decision on the first round of preliminary objections and the current pleadings. In particular, the trial court struck off claims for fraud [*600] because "the element of fraud necessary to demonstrate scienter is not present in the allegations set forth in the Complaint." Trial Ct. Slip. Op., 5/16/2003, at 8, R.R. at 92. Also, Plaintiffs' amended complaint does not contain averments of foreknowledge or intent on the part of the Community College. For these reasons, there is no need to decide an issue which may never arise.

As a consequence of these conclusions, we hold that immunity under the Tort Claims Act does not apply to Plaintiffs' CPL claims. Therefore, we discern no error in the trial court's ruling on this issue.

V. Conclusion

For all the foregoing reasons, we affirm the [37] decision of the trial court denying the Community College's motion for partial summary judgment. The case is returned to the trial court.

ROBERT SIMPSON, Judge

ORDER

AND NOW, this 27th day of October, 2011, the order of the Court of Common Pleas of Beaver County denying the Motion for Partial Summary Judgment is AFFIRMED.

CONCURRING OPINION BY JUDGE McCULLOUGH

I concur in the result reached by the Majority. I agree that the Community College of Beaver County (College), as a legal entity, falls within the definition of "person" set forth at section 2(2) of the Unfair Trade Practices and Consumer Protection Law (CPL)[1] and is subject to [*612] private actions brought under section 9.2 of the CPL.[2] I also agree with the Majority's conclusion that the claims set forth in the complaint sound in contract, rather than tort. However, I respectfully diverge from the focus of the Majority's analysis.

The instant action was filed by a group of students (Students) who were enrolled in the College's police [38] academy training program (Academy) and had completed a substantial portion of their training when the Academy lost its Act 120 certification.[3] As a consequence, the credits Students earned are likely of little use towards obtaining Act 120 certification necessary to obtain employment in the field of law enforcement. Students filed a two-count complaint against the College; relevant here, Students allege that the College committed numerous unfair and deceptive acts and practices in violation of the CPL.[4]

The threshold question raised in this appeal is whether the College is subject to private actions brought under section 9.2 of the CPL. In deciding this issue, I believe the Majority considers [39] questions neither raised nor necessary to decide for purposes of this appeal. In contrast to the Majority's approach, I would confine our analysis to the issues raised by the parties.

The College asserts that it is not subject to the CPL, based in part on the assertion that it is not a "person," which term is defined by section 2(2) of the CPL as "natural persons, corporations, trusts, partnerships, incorporated or unincorporated associations, and any other legal entities." 73. P.S. §201-2(2). Like the Majority, I disagree.

The College contends that, as a general principle, the word "person" does not include a government entity unless the same is expressly included in the statutory definition.[5] In support of this argument, the College relies on decisions in other jurisdictions, particularly, Leonard v. Masterson, 70 A.D.3d 697, 896 N.Y.S. 2d 358 (N.Y. App. Div. 2010). The petitioner in Leonard owned property surrounded by land owned by the county. The petitioner sought to establish a private road over part of the county's land pursuant to a state statute that essentially provides for a private condemnation proceeding. (Highway Law §§300 et seq.) The issue on appeal in Leonard was whether the legislature [40] intended to provide that land owned by a government entity may be the subject of such a proceeding. The court observed that the statutory language at issue referred to a "person or persons" through whose land the private road is to pass. The court relied on previous New York decisions to affirm the denial of the petition, observing "it has long been the law...that the term 'person' generally does not include a government entity unless a statutory definition expressly includes that governmental entity within the meaning of the term." Id. at 360.

[4] Students' complaint alleges "some fairly egregious failures on the part of the College," as our Supreme Court described them, including the failure of Academy instructors to be properly certified to teach various courses and the Academy's failure to accurately document student examination scores. Meyer v. Community College of Beaver County, 606 Pa. 539, 541, 2 A.3d 499, 500 (2010).

[5] A community college is a local governmental agency. Bucks County Community College v. Bucks County Board of Assessment Appeals, 147 Pa. Commw. 505, 608 A.2d 622 (Pa. Cmwlth. 1992); Community College of Allegheny County v. Seibert, 144 Pa. Commw. 616, 601 A.2d 1348 (Pa. Cmwlth. 1992).

I agree with the Majority that the holding in Leonard is inapplicable here; indeed, I believe that the statute, facts, and policy concerns in Leonard are so distinguishable as to render any reference to that case of no value.

More important, no Pennsylvania court has issued a similarly explicit holding. Relying on Huffman v. Borough of Millvale, 139 Pa. Commw. 349, 591 A.2d 1137 (Pa. Cmwlth. 1991), the College claims that [41] our courts have applied a substantially comparable principle in construing a statutory definition. However, I believe that the College's reliance on Huffman is misplaced. Huffman involved an injured borough police officer who filed a complaint alleging that the borough failed to compensate him for holiday, vacation and sick leave benefits. On appeal, this Court first addressed the trial court's determination that the police officer had no cause of action under the Wage Payment and Collection Law (Wage Law)[6] because the Wage Law does not apply to municipalities. At issue was the Wage Law's definition of "employer," which includes "every person, firm, partnership, association, corporation, receiver or other officer of a court of this Commonwealth and any agent or officer of any of the above-mentioned classes employing people in this Commonwealth."[7] We noted that [*613] "boroughs" are not included within the statutory definition of an "employer" under the Wage Law, and we relied on the legal maxim expressio unius est exclusio alterius to affirm the trial court's conclusion, reasoning as follows:

> Municipal corporations such as the Borough are not included within the definition of "employer," and [42] we, as an appellate court, cannot expand the definition of "employer" to include them. There is a clear distinction between municipal and private corporations and, if the legislature wished that municipal corporations be covered by the Law, it could have easily included them. We apply the legal maxim, expressio unius est exclusio alterius which directs that the mention of a specific matter in a statute implies the exclusion of others not mentioned. Samilo v. Pennsylvania Insurance Department, 98 Pa.Commonwealth Ct. 232, 510 A.2d 412 (1986).

Huffman, 591 A.2d at 1139 (footnote omitted). Subsequently, in Philipsburg-Osceloa Education Association v Philipsburg-Osceola Area School District, 159 Pa. Commw. 124, 633 A.2d 220, 223 (Pa. Cmwlth. 1993), we relied on our analysis in Huffman to hold that a school district was not an employer under the Wage Law. ("The legislature could have easily included municipal corporations or, for that matter, school districts under its definition of employer, but it did not. We therefore decline to extend the Wage Law to school district employers.")

These cases have been cited for the propositions that: (1) the Wage Law does not apply to municipal employees; and (2) the court will not supply a missing term in a statute. Neither case has been cited for the principle that a statute does not apply to a government entity unless the statute specifically so provides. Notably, neither is part of a "line of cases" holding that the legislature did not intend to include governmental entities within a listing of persons and entities which might technically encompass them where it did not expressly include the governmental entity in such listing.

The College cites In re Keifer, 430 Pa. 491, 243 A.2d 336 (1968), for the established principle of statutory construction that "an act does not deprive the Commonwealth of any prerogative, right or property, as would a statute of limitations, unless the Commonwealth is specifically named therein or unless an intention to include the Commonwealth is necessarily implied. When the act is an expression of "public policy," however, the general rule does not apply." Id. at 495, 243 A.2d at 339 (citations omitted). Keifer was an eminent domain proceeding that addressed whether a [44] statute of limitations barred the state from accepting a dedication of land. Concluding that the statute was not an expression of public policy, the court in Keifer held that it did not apply against the Commonwealth. The College also relies on the decision in Hoffman v. Pittsburgh, 365 Pa. 386, 398, 75 A.2d 649, 654, 42 Mun. L Rep. 75 (1950) ("It is axiomatic that a statute is never presumed to deprive the state of any prerogative, right, or property unless the intention to do so is clearly manifest, either by its express terms or necessary implication"). The court in Hoffman held that an ordinance adopted by the City of Pittsburgh pursuant to a statute did not authorize the City to acquire a fee simple title in property owned by the Commonwealth.

[7] Section 2.1 of the Wage Law, added by the Act of July 14, 1977, [43] P.L. 82, 43 P.S. §260.2a.

Both of these cases are factually distinguishable from the present matter in an important respect: they involved the status of the Commonwealth, rather than a local government agency. Moreover, the College cites no Pennsylvania case applying such a principle to other governmental entities. The distinction between sovereign and governmental entities is well recognized [*614] in Pennsylvania. For example, in affording protection from liability in actions sounding in [45] tort, the legislature has separately provided for sovereign immunity and governmental immunity. See 42 Pa. C.S. §§8521-22 (related to sovereign immunity) and 42 Pa. C.S. §§8541-42 (related to governmental immunity). With respect to more general legal principles, I note that in Northampton County Area Community College v. Dow Chemical, 389 Pa. Super. 11, 566 A.2d 591 (Pa. Super. 1989), the court held that a community college could not assert the doctrine of nullum tempus occurrit regi (time does not run against the king) because the community college was not a commonwealth agency.

Accordingly, I agree with the Majority that the College's arguments are without merit. I also would note Students. response to the College's argument that the failure to explicitly include a community college or governmental entity in the CPL's definition of "person" precludes the application of the statute to those entities: the CPL expressly identifies those entities that are not subject to its provisions.

Unlawful acts or practices; exclusions

> Unfair methods of competition and unfair or deceptive acts or practices in the conduct of any trade or commerce as defined by subclauses (i) through (xxi) of clause (4) of section 2 of [46] this act and regulations promulgated under section 3.1 of this act are hereby declared unlawful. The provisions of this act shall not apply to any owner, agent or employe of any radio or television station, or to any owner, publisher, printer, agent or employe of an Internet service provider or a newspaper or other publication, periodical or circular, who, in good faith and without knowledge of the falsity or deceptive character thereof, publishes, causes to be published or takes part in the publication of such advertisement.

73 P.S. §201-3. As Students point out, the legislature did not include community colleges or governmental entities of any kind in this provision.[8]

Finally, I agree that a review of the averments establishes that the protection of bargained-for expectations is implicated in this case. Accordingly, I join the Majority in concluding that the College is not immune from Students. claims under the CPL.

However, I believe that the Majority unnecessarily considers issues that are in no [47] way implicated in this appeal. To the extent that this part of the Majority's analysis is other than dicta, I am compelled to disagree.

Indeed, despite the "dual use" of the word "person" within the CPL, I believe it would be equally reasonable to conclude that the CPL's various provisions reflect a legislative intent to provide two distinct methods of ensuring that the purpose of the statute is met. Significantly, the purpose of the CPL is to protect the public from fraud and unfair or deceptive business practices. Burke v. Yingling, 446 Pa. Super. 16, 666 A.2d 288 (Pa. Super. 1995); see also Commonwealth ex rel Packel v. Ziomek, 145 Pa. Commw. 675, 352 A.2d 235, 238 (Pa. Cmwlth. 1976) ("The purpose of the General Assembly in passing the [CPL] was to protect citizens from unfair or deceptive practices, and the Legislature granted to the Attorney General the power to bring an action in the name of the Commonwealth for injunctive relief to protect the individual citizens...."). The CPL effectuates [*615] this purpose by permitting certain private and public actors to bring suit. Thus, section 9.2 of the CPL authorizes private actions to recover actual damages,[9] and section 4 of the CPL authorizes the Attorney General or District [48] Attorney to act in the

---

[8] This provision, identifying parties to whom the CPL does not apply, distinguishes the CPL from statutes that specifically include state and local entities in their definitions of "person."

[9] In relevant part, section 9.2(a) of the CPL, 73 P.S. §201-9.2(a) (emphasis added), states as follows:

> (a) Any person who purchases or leases goods or services primarily for personal, family or household purposes and thereby suffers any ascertainable loss of money or property, real or personal, as a result of the use or employment by any public interest by bringing actions to restrain unlawful practices.[10][11] 73 P.S. §§201-4; 201-9.2; see also Portis v. River House Associates, L.P., 498 F. Supp. 2d 746 (M.D. Pa. 2007) (observing that the fact that a public actor may bring suit ensures that the CPL's purpose can be realized even in those circumstances in which private actors can not file suit). Because the intent of the statute is to protect consumers, I question the Majority's analysis concerning the protection afforded to governmental agencies by a transaction-purpose filter set forth in section 9.2 of the CPL. (Majority op. at 17) Contrary to the Majority's view, I believe it would be reasonable to interpret this language as a restriction on parties who may bring a private action under the CPL.

Moreover, holding that all governmental entities are persons permitted to bring an action under section 9.2 of the CPL - which specifically authorizes "a private action" - overlooks the very meaning of the word "private," which is "[r]elating or belonging to an individual, as opposed to the public or the government." Black's Law Dictionary 1315 (9th ed. 2009).

Therefore, whereas the Majority sua sponte decides that all public entities are "persons" that can bring private actions and can be subject to suit under the CPL, I would simply hold that there is no legal basis to conclude that the College is not subject [51] to the action brought by Students under section 9.2 of the CPL.[12] person of a method, act or practice declared unlawful by section 3 [49] of this act, may bring a private action to recover actual damages or one hundred dollars ($100), whichever is greater.

[10] 10 Section 4 of the CPL, 73 P.S. §201-4, (emphasis added) provides in pertinent part:

> Whenever the Attorney General ... has reason to believe that any person is using or is about to use any method, act or practice declared by section 3 of this act to be unlawful, and that proceedings would be in the public interest, he may bring an action in the name of the Commonwealth against such person to restrain by temporary or permanent injunction the use of such method, act or practice.

[11] In Weinberg v. Sun Company, Inc., 565 Pa. 612, 777 A.2d 442 (2001), our Supreme Court recognized that there is a distinction between Commonwealth actions and private actions brought under the CPL. In Weinberg, purchasers of gasoline filed a consumer class action under the CPL, the consumer fraud laws of all other states, and common law, challenging the corporation's advertising of the gasoline and alleging that the corporation's advertisements induced consumers to purchase the gas when their vehicles did not need the high level of octane the gas contained. The trial court denied class certification [50] on the basis that requirements of numerosity and common questions were not met and individual questions of fact predominated. The Superior Court reversed as to two of the four CPL claims. On further appeal, the issue before the Supreme Court involved the interpretation of section 9.2 of the CPL, permitting a private right of action. The court reviewed section 4 of the CPL, applicable to the attorney general, and section 9.2, governing a private action, and concluded that "Commonwealth actions and private actions are readily distinguishable." Id., 565 Pa. at 617, 777 A.2d at 445.

[12] Thus, unlike the dissenting view expressed by Judge Leavitt, I would not address the question of whether the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, its agencies, political subdivisions or any other governmental entity engages in "trade" or "commerce" that is regulated by the CPL. However, were this issue raised by either party on appeal, I believe that a statement to the effect that no such entity is engaged in trade or commerce, (Dissent, pages 1, 5), is factually and legally incorrect. (See the Pennsylvania Liquor Control Board's website directing users to its "retail page.") Also, I am not persuaded that a breach of contract claim against the College is actionable under 42 U.S.C. §1983.

In addition, I do not believe that it is necessary to revisit our decision in Commonwealth v. TAP Pharmaceutical Products, Inc., 885 A.2d 1127, 1143-44, (Pa. Cmwlth. 2005), and consider again whether the Commonwealth has parens patriae standing to pursue damage claims of individuals under the CPL, where the issue in the present case is whether an action may be brought under the CPL against the College.

Finally, in answer to the query whether [52] accountability under the CPL is needed, (Dissent, page 15), I believe that the egregious conduct alleged here, see footnote 4, infra, suggests that such accountability is not redundant.

Moreover, in light of the specificity with which the phrase "unfair or deceptive acts or practices" is defined by section 2(4)(i)-(xxi) of the CPL, 73 P.S. §201-2(4)(i)-xxi), and particularly in light of the nature of the conduct described, e.g., passing off goods or services as those of another, I do not share the concerns expressed in Judge Brobson's dissent and do not expect that actions

[*616] Finally, I note that the College raises the issue of treble damages to argue that Students' claims actually sound in tort. According to the College: section 9.2 allows for an award of treble damages; treble damages have been described as having "a strong punitive dynamic;" and punitive damages are not available for a breach of contract claim; therefore, Students. averments under the CPL are, in fact, tort claims. [53] As previously indicated, I agree with the Majority that Students' averments sound in contract rather than tort. Having so concluded, I would dismiss outright the College's argument "raising the specter of" treble damages.

Dissent

[*600contd]

[EDITOR'S NOTE: The page numbers of this document may appear to be out of sequence; however, this pagination accurately reflects the pagination of the original published document.]

DISSENTING OPINION BY JUDGE PELLEGRINI

I respectfully dissent. Unlike the majority, I would hold that the Community College of Beaver County (Community College) is immune from suit because the action brought sounds in tort, not in contract. I also dissent because the majority holds that the Community College is engaged in "trade or commerce" as that term is used in the Unfair Trade Practices and Consumer Protection Law (CPL).[1] Because that issue was not raised and briefed, I would not address that issue. Because the majority did, I would hold that the CPL does not apply as a governmental agency does not engage in the business of "trade or commerce" because a governmental agency only engages in the "business" of government.

A group of former students (Students) filed a civil action against the Community College for [54] breach of contract and breach of warranty as well as various unfair or deceptive acts as defined in the CPL. In their complaint, the Students alleged that they had completed a substantial portion of the training when the Community College lost its certification under the governing statute as a result of decertification, the credits they earned could not be recognized elsewhere, and they incurred damages as a result. In Meyer v. Community College of Beaver County, 606 Pa. 539, 2 A.3d 499 (2010), reversing in part this Court, our Supreme Court held that governmental immunity created by the Political Subdivision Torts Claim Act[2] does not extend to all statutory causes of action, regardless of whether they sound in tort or contract. The Supreme Court then remanded the matter to us to address issues previously raised in the Community Colleges' partial motion for summary judgment but not addressed in our opinion.

While it raised many issues in its partial motion for summary judgment, the Community College only addressed two of those issues in its brief. First, the Community College argued that it was not subject to liability under the CPL because it is not a "person" [55] within the definition of Section 2.2 of the CPL so as to impose [*601] liability under Section 9.2(a).[3] I agree with that portion of the majority's opinion that the Community College is a "person" for the purpose of imposing liability under the CPL if it meets the other preconditions for liability under the CPL.

will regularly be brought against state or local agencies for the egregious conduct the CPL prohibits. More important, I would not characterize such acts by public entities as causing "purely private injury."

[2] 42 Pa. C.S. §§8541-8541.

[3] Added by the Act of November 24, 1976, P.L 1166.

The second issue the Community College raised in its brief is that the Students' claims sound in tort, not contract. It argues that a course catalog does not create a contract between the parties upon which to base a contract action. Second, representations made by the Community College staff members cannot create a contractual obligation. Based on an examination of the complaint, the majority finds that those allegations the Students have pled sound in contract, not tort. I disagree with the majority because I do not believe that the Students have made out a contractual claim and would dismiss the action.

Insofar as the Students claim that a contract action can be based on breach of representation contained in the student handbook because the handbook created a contract, we rejected that contention in Tran v. State System of Higher Education, 986 A.2d 179 (Pa. Cmwlth. 2009), [56] where we explicitly held that a student handbook of a public university does not create a contract between the public university and the student. See also Crabtree v. California University of Pennsylvania, 147 Pa. Commw. 1, 606 A.2d 1239, 1240 n. 3 (Pa. Cmwlth. 1990). Because community colleges are public colleges, a contract action cannot be maintained on an alleged breach of a student handbook or catalog.

As to whether representations by the Community College staff can create a contract between the parties, ignoring that contracts with bodies have to be entered in compliance with statutory formalities, representations made by staff members are not sufficient to bring a contract claim. In Matarazzo v. Millers Mutual Group, Inc., 927 A.2d 689 (Pa. Cmwlth. 2007), we addressed whether a contract claim could be brought based upon a governmental employee's representation on which a party relied causing them injury. While we agreed that an action could be maintained for private parties, it could not be used to turn negligent actions by governmental employees into contract actions to avoid governmental immunity. If we were to hold otherwise, any guidance counselor who foolishly and negligently promised to [57] a student that if he or she took a course and did well, he or she would get into Harvard, and then the student would take those courses and do well but did not get into Harvard, could bring an action in contract.

Finally, in footnote 16, the majority holds that it sees "nothing in the language or structure of the CPL to suggest a legislative intent to insulate local agencies engaged in trade or commerce from responsibility for unfair or deceptive practices which cause a loss to Pennsylvania Consumers." First, I disagree because this issue was never raised or briefed by any of the parties, and we should not address it sua sponte. Second, I disagree with the substance of the holding. The reason that I would hold that the CPL does not apply is not that the Community College is not a person but that is not engaged in the conduct of a "trade or commerce." "Trade or commerce" is mercantile activity in which the person engaged in that business is doing so for private profit which could motivate unfair or deceptive practices for private gain or, more accurately, private greed. All of the provisions of the CPL are aimed at private businesses. The Community College is not engaged in the [*602] conduct [58] of "trade or commerce" but is carrying out a public responsibility with tax dollars to provide students with an affordable education to citizens of the Commonwealth. In other words, when a governmental entity is carrying out a public duty, it is not engaged in the conduct of a trade or commerce, but in the conduct of government. If this issue was before us, I would hold that the CPL does not apply.

For the foregoing reasons, I dissent.

DAN PELLEGRINI, JUDGE

DISSENTING OPINION BY JUDGE LEAVITT

The majority holds that the Community College of Beaver County is a "person" that can be held liable for treble damages under the Unfair Trade Practices and Consumer Protection Law (Consumer Protection Law)[1] for engaging in unfair trade practices. I disagree that the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, its agencies, political subdivisions and state-created institutions of education are engaged in a type of "trade or commerce" that is regulated by the Consumer Protection Law. Accordingly, I must, respectfully, dissent.

Here, a group of students seek damages because they took police officer training courses based, in part, on the representations [59] of the Community College that its program was certified. The college lost its certification, and the students lost the benefit of their bargain. The students may be entitled to relief, but not under the Consumer Protection Law. To reach this conclusion, I look to the words of the Consumer Protection Law.

The students seek redress under Section 9.2(a) of the Consumer Protection Law, which states:

9.2 Private actions

> (a) Any person who purchases or leases goods or services primarily for personal, family or household purposes and thereby suffers any ascertainable loss of money or property, real or personal, as a result of the use or employment by any person of a method, act or practice declared unlawful by section 3 of this act, may bring a private action to recover actual damages or one hundred dollars ($100), whichever is greater. The court may, in its discretion, award up to three times the actual damages sustained, but not less than one hundred dollars ($100), and may provide such additional relief as it deems necessary or proper. The court may award to the plaintiff, in addition to other relief provided in this section, costs and reasonable attorney fees.

Section 9.2(a) of the Consumer [60] Protection Law, 73 P.S. §201-9.2(a), added by Act of November 26, 1976, P.L. 1166 (emphasis added). The students assert they are "persons" who purchased "services" for "personal purposes" and thereafter suffered a loss of money as a result of the unlawful act of another "person," i.e., the Community College. The Consumer Protection Law defines "person" as follows:

> "Person" means natural persons, corporations, trusts, partnerships, incorporated or unincorporated associations, and any other legal entities.

Section 2 of the Consumer Protection Law, 73 P.S. §201-2 (emphasis added). The question is whether the words "any other legal entities" meant to sweep up the Commonwealth, its agencies and Pennsylvania municipal corporations within the reach of "person." There are several reasons why I believe that it does not.

First, the General Assembly knows how to draft legislation to define "person" to designate a Commonwealth agency or political [*603] subdivision. For example, The Controlled Substance, Drug, Device and Cosmetic Act[2] defines "person" as follows:

> "Person" means individual, corporation, government or governmental subdivision or agency, business trust, estate, trust, partnership or association, [61] or any other legal entity.

Section 2 of the Controlled Substance, Drug, Device and Cosmetic Act, 35 P.S. §780-102(b) (emphasis added). Likewise, Section 103 of the Solid Waste Management Act,[3] defines a "person" as > [a]ny individual, partnership, corporation, association, institution, cooperative enterprise, municipal authority, Federal Government or agency, State institution and agency (including, but not limited to, the Department of General Services and the State Public School Buildings Authority), or any other legal entity whatsoever which is recognized by law as the subject of rights and duties.

35 P.S. §6018.103 (emphasis added).[4] If the General Assembly had intended to include Commonwealth agencies and community colleges within the ambit of the Consumer Protection Law, it would have so stated. It did not do so in Section 2 of the Consumer Protection Law.

[2] Act of April 14, 1972, P.L. 233, as amended, 35 P.S. §§780-101 - 780-144.

[4] There are many more examples. See, e.g., Section 4(a) of the Human Relations Act, Act of October 27, 1955, P.L. 744, as amended, 43 P.S. §954(a) (defining "person" to include "the Commonwealth [62] of Pennsylvania, and all political

Second, the statutory construction maxim ejusdem generis must inform our construction of "any other entity." This doctrine "mandates that general expressions used in a statute are restricted to things and persons similar to those specifically enumerated in the language preceding the general expressions." Petty v. Hospital Service Association of Northeastern Pennsylvania, Pa. , , 23 A.3d 1004, 1009 (2011) (citation omitted). In Section 2, the listed entities are private parties, i.e., "natural persons, corporations, trusts, partnerships [and] incorporated or unincorporated associations." 73 P.S. §201-2. A Commonwealth agency created by the legislature to administer and enforce a statute bears no similarity [63] to the private parties listed in Section 2. Any "other legal entity" might include, for example, a limited liability company, which is a type of legal entity formed to conduct business that is not named in Section 2; indeed, this type of legal entity did not exist at the time the Consumer Protection Law was enacted in 1976.[5]

It makes sense that the Commonwealth and its progeny were intentionally omitted from the definition of "person," because the Consumer Protection Law regulates "trade or commerce," which does not describe governmental activities, as noted by Judge Pellegrini in his dissent.[6] Section 3 states, in relevant part, as follows:

> [*604] Unfair methods of competition and unfair or deceptive acts or practices in the conduct of any trade or commerce as defined by subclauses (i) through (xxi) or clause (4) of section 2 of this act and regulations promulgated under section 3.1 of this act are hereby declared unlawful.

Section 3 of the Consumer Protection Law, 73 P.S. §201-3 (emphasis added). The Commonwealth, [64] its agencies and municipal corporations are not engaged in "trade or commerce." The Community College is a public institution, funded, in part, by the Commonwealth and was not created to "compete" with private educational institutions, whether non-profit or for-profit. Rather, the Community College was created to fill a need not filled by other institutions.

This Court has held that the Commonwealth is a "person" capable of bringing "a private action" to recover treble damages under Section 9.2 of the Consumer Protection Law. See Commonwealth v. TAP Pharmaceutical Products, Inc., 885 A.2d 1127, 1143 (Pa. Cmwlth. 2005) (Tap II). I agree with the majority that if the Commonwealth or a local agency is a person for purposes of being a plaintiff under the Consumer Protection Law, then it follows that either must also be a "person" for purposes of being a defendant. Stated otherwise, the word "person" must have one meaning for all purposes of the statute. However, I believe we erred in TAP [65] II in holding that the Commonwealth was a "person" for purposes of being a plaintiff in a Section 9.2 action. We should overrule this portion of the decision.

In TAP II, the Attorney General filed suit under Section 9.2 against a number of pharmaceutical companies, asserting that they had engaged in unfair and deceptive marketing practices for the purpose of overcharging consumers for their drug products. To bring a "private action" under Section 9.2, the plaintiff "person" must have purchased the drugs for "personal, family or household purposes." 73 P.S. §201-9.2. We glossed over that point, holding that the "Commonwealth" could bring a "private" action against the named pharmaceutical defendants, even though the Commonwealth did not purchase drugs for "personal, family or household purposes." 73 P.S. §201-9.2. We also overlooked the title of Section 9.2, which creates a "private action," and the fact that an action brought by the Attorney General in the name of the Commonwealth cannot be a "private action." Instead, we accepted the Attorney General's argument that because the Commonwealth acted in a representative, or parens subdivisions, authorities, boards and commissions thereof"...); Section 1 of the Clean Streams Law, Act of June 22, 1937, P.L. 1987, as amended, 35 P.S. §691.1 (defining "person" as "any agency, instrumentality or entity of Federal or State Government..."); and Section 3 of the Air Pollution Control Act, Act of January 8, 1960, P.L. (1959) 2119, 35 P.S. §4003 (defining "person" as an "agency of the Commonwealth or Federal Government...").

[5] The Limited Liability Company Law of 1994, Act of December 7, 1994, P.L. 703, as amended, 15 Pa. C.S. §§8901-8998, authorizes the formation of a limited liability company in Pennsylvania.

[6] State parks offer overnight campsites at state parks, and so do private campgrounds. This does not mean that the Commonwealth has undertaken "trade or commerce" in the creation of its state park system.

patriae capacity, the Commonwealth was a "person" capable [66] of bringing a "private action" under Section 9.2 to recover damages. There are several flaws to our holding in Tap II.

The central flaw is that the Attorney General does not have general parens patriae authority.[7] The powers of the Attorney General begin with the Pennsylvania Constitution, and it states, in relevant part, as follows:

> An Attorney General shall be chosen by the qualified electors of the Commonwealth...[.] [H]e shall be the chief law officer of the Commonwealth and shall exercise such powers and perform such duties as may be imposed by law.

PA. CONST. art. IV, §4.1 (emphasis added). The law that imposes those powers and duties is the Commonwealth Attorneys [*605] Act, Act of October 15, 1980, P.L. 950, as amended, 71 P.S. §§732-101 - 732-506. Further, that act is the exclusive source of the Attorney General's powers; stated otherwise, the Attorney General's powers and duties have no basis in the common law, which is the source of the parens patriae doctrine.[8]

This was not always the case. Article IV, section 4.1 was added to the Pennsylvania Constitution by amendment in 1978. Prior to that amendment, the Attorney General was appointed by the governor and served as a member of the governor's cabinet as head of the Department of Justice. Pre-1978, the Attorney General's powers and duties were enumerated in The Administrative [68] Code of 1929, Act of April 9, 1929, P.L. 177, as amended, 71 P.S. §§51 - 732, and they were thought to be augmented by common law powers. In a landmark case, Commonwealth ex. rel. Minerd v. Margiotti, 325 Pa. 17, 188 A. 524 (1936), our Supreme Court reviewed the historic antecedents of the Attorney General's common law power and held that Pennsylvania's Attorney General > is clothed with the powers and attributes which enveloped Attorneys General at common law, including the right ... to supersede and set aside the district attorney when in the Attorney General's judgment such action may be necessary.

Id. at 30-31, 188 A. at 530 (emphasis added).

The Attorney General's common law powers included the power to supersede a district attorney in a criminal matter and to intervene in charitable trust cases on behalf of the citizens of Pennsylvania. See, e.g., Commonwealth v. The Barnes Foundation, 398 Pa. 458, 467, 159 A.2d 500, 505 (1960) (holding that the Attorney General enjoys the common law power to participate in litigation involving charitable trusts).

In 1978, our Supreme Court overruled Minerd, finding "the reasoning in this line of decisions to be erroneous...." Commonwealth v. Schab, 477 Pa. 55, 60, 383 A.2d 819, 821 (1978). [69] Accordingly, the Supreme Court held that the Attorney General lacked the power to supersede a district attorney in a criminal law enforcement matter. That same year, after Schab was issued, the voters adopted Article IV, section 4.1 of the Pennsylvania Constitution, which instituted the election of our Attorney General, replacing the selection by gubernatorial appointment.

Thereafter, the newly elected Attorney General attempted to supersede a district attorney in a criminal case, arguing that the holding in Schab was no longer viable in light of the constitutional amendment. Specifically, the Attorney General argued that the [8] The origin of the parens patriae doctrine can be traced to medieval England. Conceptually, the [67] doctrine is derived from the king's royal prerogative to act as the guardian of an individual unable to protect his own interests. The attorney general, at common law, was the chief legal representative of the sovereign in the courts and was the only officer who could prosecute on behalf of the people in order to protect the interests of the crown. As in England, a colonial attorney general, acting as the chief legal officer of a British colony, enjoyed broad common law power to bring suit in parens patriae on behalf of colonial citizens. Jay L. Himes, State Parens Patriae Authority: The Evolution of the State Attorney General's Authority 1-2, 18-19 (The Institute for Law and Economic Policy Symposium paper, Apr. 23, 2004), available at http://www.abanet.org/antitrust/at-committees/at-state/pdf/publications/other-pubs/parens.pdf.

> Commonwealth Attorneys Act is but one source of the Attorney General's powers, and that, moreover, the language of Article 4, section 4.1, of our state constitution [*606] and that of the Act evidence an intent to retain the common law powers of the Attorney General.

Commonwealth v. Carsia, 512 Pa. 509, 512, 517 A.2d 956, 957-958 (1986) (emphasis added). Our Supreme Court rejected the argument that the Attorney General had any powers not specified in statutory law.

Explaining the meaning of Article IV, section 4.1 of the Pennsylvania Constitution, [70] the Supreme Court explained:

> In our view, the use of the language "as may be imposed" clearly shows an extension of power to the legislature to statutorily define and regulate the powers and duties of the Attorney General.
> The General Assembly utilized that grant of constitutional powers in 1980, and enacted the Commonwealth Attorneys Act. That Act made it clear that the powers of the state Attorney General are no longer an emanation from some bed of common law precepts, but are now strictly a matter of legislative designation and enumeration.

Id. at 513, 517 A.2d at 958 (emphasis added). In sum, under the Pennsylvania Constitution, the powers of the Attorney General are "strictly a matter of legislative designation and enumeration." Id.

In reaching this conclusion, the Supreme Court relied upon a report of the Joint State Government Commission that had been prepared on the legislation needed to establish the scope and powers of the new Office of Attorney General. The Commission's final report explained that > [l]egislation enacted by the General Assembly is the exclusive source of the powers and duties of the elected Attorney General pursuant to Article IV, Section 4.1....

JOINT STATE GOV'T [71] COMM'N, OFFICE OF ELECTED ATTORNEY GENERAL, FINAL REPORT 4 (1978). The legislation that was the subject of the Joint State Government Commission's report became the Commonwealth Attorneys Act.

The Commonwealth Attorneys Act has limited the Attorney General's parens patriae power, i.e., the power to initiate actions on behalf of citizens, to two circumstances. First, the Attorney General may intervene in charitable matters on behalf of citizens. 71 P.S. §732-204(c).[9] Second, the Attorney General may represent "the Commonwealth and its citizens in any action brought for violation of the antitrust laws of the United States and the Commonwealth." Id. (emphasis added).[10] That is it.

[9] It states, in relevant part:

> The Attorney General shall represent the Commonwealth and all Commonwealth agencies and upon request, the Departments of Auditor General and State Treasury and the Public Utility Commission in any action brought by or against the Commonwealth or its agencies, and may intervene in any other action, including those involving charitable bequests and trusts or the constitutionality of any statute. The Attorney General shall represent the Commonwealth and its citizens in any action brought [72] for violation of the antitrust laws of the United States and the Commonwealth.

71 P.S. §732-204(c) (emphasis added).

[10] At the time the Joint State Government Commission filed its report, the General Assembly was considering 1977 House Bill 845, intended to create intrastate antitrust enforcement authority for the Attorney General. JOINT STATE GOV'T COMM'N, OFFICE OF ELECTED ATTORNEY GENERAL, FINAL REPORT 11 (1978). The bill died in committee and never passed the House. Pennsylvania General Assembly, Bill Information, Regular Session 1977-1978, House Bill 845, available at http://www.legis.state.pa.us/cfdocs/billinfo/billinfo.cfm?syear=1977&sind=0&body=H&type=B&BN=0845.

The Commonwealth has not yet enacted a state antitrust statute. In the meantime, the Attorney General may enforce federal antitrust laws in a representative capacity.

[*607] In TAP II, this Court considered none of this antecedent history. Summarily, we relied upon the parens patriae analysis of Alfred L. Snapp & Son, Inc. v. Puerto Rico, 458 U.S. 592, 102 S. Ct. 3260, 73 L. Ed. 2d 995 (1982), in which the United States Supreme Court held that, generally, a state may not sue on behalf of its citizens without showing that a separate sovereign interest will also be [73] served. Id. at 607. Snapp limits a state's parens patriae powers, which are assumed to exist. Snapp does not, and cannot, invest a state with parens patriae authority or require it to be exercised. This question can only be determined by each state in accordance with its own constitution.

In Pennsylvania, our Constitution has limited the Attorney General's powers to those established by "legislative designation and enumeration." Carsia, 512 Pa. at 513, 517 A.2d at 958. The legislature has authorized the Attorney General to bring suit "on behalf of citizens," a parens patriae power, but only for violations of federal antitrust laws.[11] The Commonwealth Attorneys Act does not authorize the Attorney General to seek damages "on behalf of citizens" for violation of the Consumer Protection Law.

Further, the General Assembly has created a specific role for the Attorney General with respect to the Consumer Protection Law. Section 4 of the Consumer Protection Law authorizes the Attorney General to "bring an action in the name of the Commonwealth [74] against such person to restrain by temporary or permanent injunction the use of [an unlawful] method, act or practice." 73 P.S. §201-4.[12] That injunction may include an order of restitution. Section 4.1 of the Consumer Protection Law, 73 P.S. §201-4.1.[13] Finally, a "person" that violates the injunction may be ordered to pay civil penalties. Section 8 of the Consumer Protection Law, 73 P.S. §201-8.[14]

[11] Should Pennsylvania ever enact a state antitrust law, the Attorney General's power to bring suit on behalf of citizens will extend to that law as well.

[12] Section 4 of the Consumer Protection Law provides:

> Whenever the Attorney General or a District Attorney has reason to believe that any person is using or is about to use any method, act or practice declared by section 3 of this act to be unlawful, and that proceedings would be in the public interest, he may bring an action in the name of the Commonwealth against such person to restrain by temporary or permanent injunction the use of such method, act or practice.

73 P.S. §201-4.

[13] Section 4.1 of the Consumer Protection Law states:

> Whenever any court issues a permanent injunction to restrain and prevent violations of this act as authorized in section 4 above, the court may in its discretion direct that the defendant or defendants restore to any person in interest any moneys or property, real [75] or personal, which may have been acquired by means of any violation of this act, under terms and conditions to be established by the court.

73 P.S. §201-4.1. Section 4.1 was added by the Act of November 24, 1976, P.L. 1166.

[14] Section 8 of the Consumer Protection Law provides:

> (a) Any person who violates the terms of an injunction issued under section 4 of this act or any of the terms of an assurance of voluntary compliance duly filed in court under section 5 of this act shall forfeit and pay to the Commonwealth a civil penalty of not more than five thousand dollars ($5,000) for each violation. For the purposes of this section the court issuing an injunction or in which an assurance of voluntary compliance is filed shall retain jurisdiction, and the cause shall be continued; and, in such cases, the Attorney General, or the appropriate District Attorney, acting in the name of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, may petition for recovery of civil penalties and any other equitable relief deemed needed or proper.
> (b) In any action brought under section 4 of this act, if the court finds that a person, firm or corporation is wilfully using or has wilfully used a method, act or practice declared [76] unlawful by section 3 of this act, the Attorney General or the appropriate District Attorney, acting in the name of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, may recover, on behalf of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, a civil penalty of not exceeding one thousand dollars ($1,000) per violation, which civil

[*608] Notably absent from the Attorney General's enforcement authority is the power to recover damages on behalf of individual consumers. Absent this legislative "designation and enumeration," it must be concluded that the Attorney General lacks authority to bring a "private action" under Section 9.2 in the name of the Commonwealth on behalf of private citizens. That conclusion could not be clearer given our Supreme Court's holding in Carsia, 512 Pa. 509, 517 A.2d 956, [77] and we erred in otherwise holding in Tap II. In sum, a "person" is not the Commonwealth acting in a representative capacity.

The majority's construction of "person" has wide-reaching implications. It would allow the Attorney General to initiate a Section 4.1 injunction action against a "person" that is a Commonwealth agency such as, for example, the Liquor Control Board. This shows the absurdity of construing the statute's definition of "person" to mean a government agency or institution, as either a plaintiff or a defendant. The Consumer Protection Law devolves into a program of government feeding on itself.

There are cogent reasons why the Consumer Protection Law did not designate a Commonwealth agency or municipal corporation as a "person" in Section 2. Commonwealth agencies and municipal corporations do not need the protections of the Consumer Protection Law because they are not like private consumers. An individual procurement officer may fall sway to exaggerated claims featured in Superbowl advertisements, but his impressionability is irrelevant. State and local agencies are constrained in how they make purchases. The Commonwealth purchases goods or services through competitive [78] bidding procedures governed by the Commonwealth Procurement Code, 62 Pa. C.S. §§101-4604. Likewise, municipal corporations make purchases only in accordance with competitive bidding. See, e.g., Section 3102(a) of the Second Class Township Code, 53 P.S. §68102(a).[15]

Nor is there an obvious necessity to hold a Commonwealth agency or municipal corporation liable for its actions under the Consumer Protection Law. Persons acting under color of state law can be held accountable for their deceitful acts under 42 U.S.C. §1983.[16] [*609] A loss of property without due process violates the United States

> All contracts or purchases in excess of the required advertising amount of ten thousand dollars ($10,000), except those specifically excluded, shall not be made except with and from the lowest responsible bidder after due notice in one newspaper of general circulation in the township.

53 P.S. §68102(a).

Constitution and can result in monetary damages. [79] Commonwealth agencies and municipal corporations, unlike private actors, must conduct their "business" in an open and transparent manner. Unlike a private company, they must provide access to their records that relate to their activities. See Right-to-Know Law, Act of February 14, 2008, P.L. 6, 65 P.S. §§67.101-67.3104. Is accountability under the Consumer Protection Law also needed?[17]

In sum, "person" as defined in the Consumer Protection Law does not include a Commonwealth agency or state institution or municipal corporation of any type.[18] To stretch the Consumer Protection Law in that fashion will lead to mischief that is only as wild as the imagination. I defer to Judge Brobson's dissenting opinion for a more thorough discussion of the ramifications of the majority's interpretation of the Consumer Protection Law.

For these reasons, I would reverse the order of the trial court and grant the Community College's motion for partial summary judgment.

DISSENTING OPINION BY JUDGE BROBSON

I commend my colleagues who penned opinions in this matter for their thorough and thoughtful analyses of the issues before this Court. I write, however, to take a more holistic approach to addressing the general question before this Court—namely, whether governmental entities,[1] as a matter of law, are subject to suit under the Unfair Trade Practices and Consumer Protection Law (CPL).[2] In reviewing the [*610] statute as a whole, I conclude that they are not. Thus, I must respectfully disagree with the majority and concurring opinions.

If public agencies can be held liable under the CPL, as the majority reasons, the implications of the majority's holding are far reaching. Under the Liquor Code,[3] for example, the Pennsylvania Liquor Control Board (LCB) engages exclusively in the sale and distribution of alcohol in the Commonwealth. This activity falls within the definition of "trade" and "commerce" in the CPL.[4] Under the majority's analysis, a private citizen of the [17] Even if it were needed, it is for the General Assembly to fill that need.

[18] The Statutory Construction Act of 1972 defines "person" for the purpose of "any statute finally enacted after September 1, 1937, unless the context clearly indicates otherwise." 1 Pa. C.S. §1991. It defines "person" as follows:

> "Person." Includes a corporation, partnership, limited liability company, business trust, other association, government entity (other than the Commonwealth), estate, trust, foundation or natural person.

Id. In the Consumer Protection Law, the legislature chose not to follow the default definition of "person" set forth in the Statutory Construction [81] Act of 1972. Instead, it added "natural person," deleted "government entity" and did not add "Commonwealth." These must be presumed conscious decisions.

[1] In Community College of Allegheny County v. Seibert, 144 Pa. Commw. 616, 601 A.2d 1348 (Pa. Cmwlth. 1992), aff'd, 533 Pa. 314, 622 A.2d 285 (1992), this Court held that community colleges are local agencies for purposes of governmental immunity. Notwithstanding the majority's conspicuous references to local agencies throughout its opinion, [82] the majority's reasoning and result extend with equal force to Commonwealth agencies.

[3] Act of April 12, 1951, P.L. 90, as amended, 47 P.S. §§ 1-102 to 10-1001.

[4] Section 2(3) of the CPL, provides, inter alia:

> "Trade" and "commerce" means the advertising, offering for sale, sale or distribution of any services and any property, tangible or intangible, real, personal or mixed, and any other [83] article, commodity or thing of value wherever situate, and includes any trade or commerce directly or indirectly affecting the people of this Commonwealth.

73 P.S. § 201-2(3) (emphasis in original).

Commonwealth who purchases alcohol for personal, family, or household use could sue the LCB under Section 9.2(a) of the CPL, 73 P.S. § 201-9.2 (creating private right of action),[5] and seek the relief available under that section, which includes, inter alia, treble damages, costs, and attorneys' fees.

Under the Real Estate Tax Sale Law,[6] county tax claim bureaus are authorized to advertise and sell real property, an activity which falls within the CPL's definition of "trade" and "commerce." Under the majority's analysis, a private citizen of the Commonwealth who purchases real estate at a tax upset sale or judicial sale could bring suit against the county tax claim bureau that advertised and sold the real property under Section 9.2(a) of the CPL and seek treble damages, costs, and attorneys' fees.

There are many more instances where state and local agencies engage in "trade" and "commerce" as these terms are strictly defined in the CPL. Because our state and local governments are authorized to engage in such activities, I [84] am loathe to construe the CPL in such a way as to create a private right of action against government agencies in the absence of clear legislative intent to support such a construction. I do not believe the General Assembly's use of the phrase "any other legal entities," which follows a list of clearly private concerns, in the definition of "person" in the CPL[7] is a sufficient expression of legislative intent to subject public entities to private lawsuits, or any other legal action,[8] under the CPL. To the contrary, I believe the doctrine of ejusdem generis, most recently applied by our Supreme Court in Petty v. Hospital Association of Northeastern Pennsylvania, [*611] ___ Pa. ___, 23 A.3d 1004 (2011),[9] applies and restricts our interpretation of "any other legal entities" to any other private legal entities.[10]

Finally, construing "any other legal entity" in such a way as to authorize private litigants to bring suits under the CPL against public entities violates the rule of statutory construction that requires us to presume that the General Assembly does not intend to favor private interests over the public interest. 1 Pa. C.S. § 1922(5). The majority's decision in this case, which provides private citizens access to public coffers to remedy purely private injuries under the CPL, ignores this presumption.

For these reasons, I would reverse the trial court.

P. KEVIN BROBSON, Judge

---

[5] Of course, this private citizen would need to state a claim under the CPL as a matter of law. In light of footnote 16 to the majority's opinion, however, I find it necessary to state the obvious.

[6] Act of July 7, 1947, P.L. 1368, as amended, 72 P.S. §§ 5860.101 to .803.

[7] "Person" is defined in the CPL as "natural persons, corporations, trusts, partnerships, incorporated or unincorporated associations, and any other legal entities." Section 2(2) of the CPL, 73 P.S. § 201-2(2).

[8] If the majority's analysis stands, for example, the Attorney General could bring a suit to enjoin the LCB or a county tax claim bureau from engaging in acts or practices deemed [85] unlawful under the CPL. Section 4 of the CPL, 73 P.S. § 201-4. If the LCB or county tax claim bureau violates such an injunction, the Attorney General could petition a court for an order restraining the LCB and the county tax claim bureau from further doing business.

[9] See Summit House Condominium v. Commonwealth, 514 Pa. 221, 227, 523 A.2d 333, 336 (1987) ("The doctrine of ejusdem generis mandates that '[g]eneral expressions used in a statute are restricted to things and persons similar to those specifically enumerated in the language preceding the general expressions.'")).

[10] Indeed, if the phrase "any other legal entities" is so broad that it encompasses all legal entities (private and public), the majority opinion fails to explain the General Assembly's express inclusion of "corporations, trusts, partnerships, incorporated or unincorporated associations"—all of which are legal entities—between "natural persons" and "any other legal entities" in the definition of "person." The majority's construction of the definition of "person" in Section 2(2) of the CPL renders the language identifying specific private legal entities mere surplusage. Such a construction is to be avoided. 1 Pa. C.S. § 1922(2) [86] (presumption "[t]hat the General Assembly intends the entire statute to be effective and certain"); Walker v. Eleby, 577 Pa. 104, 123, 842 A.2d 389, 400 (2004) (holding that no provision of statute shall be "reduced to mere surplusage").

HN2[] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

In determining whether a complaint fails to state a claim, the court applies the same pleading standard used under Fed. R. Civ. P. 8(a). Under Rule 8(a), a complaint must contain a short and plain statement of the claim showing that the pleader is entitled to relief. Fed. R. Civ. P. 8(a)(2). The pleading standard Rule 8 announces does not require 'detailed factual allegations,' but it demands more than an unadorned, the-defendant-unlawfully-harmed-me accusation.

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

HN3[] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

A complaint must contain sufficient factual matter, accepted as true, to state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face. A complaint that pleads facts that are merely consistent with a defendant's liability stops short of the line between possibility and plausibility of entitlement to relief. Further, although a court must accept as true all factual allegations contained in a complaint, a court need not accept a plaintiff's legal conclusions as true. Threadbare recitals of the elements of a cause of action, supported by mere conclusory statements, do not suffice.

Such circumstances include the time, place, and specific content of the false representations as well as the identifies of the parties to the misrepresentations. In the context of a fraud suit involving multiple defendants, a plaintiff must, at a minimum identify the role of each defendant in the alleged fraudulent scheme.

Real Property Law > Financing > Foreclosures > Private Power of Sale Foreclosure

HN6[] Foreclosures, Private Power of Sale Foreclosure

A party may not without payment of the debt, enjoin a sale by trustee under a power conferred by a deed of trust, or have his title quieted against the purchaser at such a sale. A default borrower is required to allege tender of the amount of the lender's secured indebtedness in order to maintain any cause of action for irregularity in the sale procedure.

Real Property Law > Financing > Foreclosures > Equitable Foreclosures

Real Property Law > Financing > Foreclosures > Private Power of Sale Foreclosure

HN7[] Foreclosures, Equitable Foreclosures

An action to set aside a foreclosure sale, unaccompanied by an offer to redeem, does not state a cause of action which a court of equity recognizes. Moreover, an offer of performance is of no effect if the person making the offer is unable to perform. In other words, if the offeror is without the money necessary to make the offer good and knows it, the tender is without legal force or effect. It would be futile to set aside a foreclosure sale on the technical ground that notice was improper, if the party making the challenge did not first make full tender and thereby establish his ability to purchase the property. A cause of action implicitly integrated with the irregular sale fails unless the trustor can allege and establish a valid tender.

Real Property Law > Financing > Foreclosures > Private Power of Sale Foreclosure

HN8[] Foreclosures, Private Power of Sale Foreclosure

The Perata Mortgage Relief Act (Perata), Cal. Civ. Code § 2923.5, requires a lender to contact the borrower in good faith, in person or by telephone to assess the borrower's financial situation and explore options to avoid foreclosure, and Perata imposes a duty on the lender to attempt to negotiate with a borrower before recording a notice of sale. Cal. Civ. Code § 2923.5(a)(2), (c). These provisions apply to loans initiated between January 1, 2003, and December 31, 2007. Cal. Civ. Code § 2923.5(h)(3)(i).

Real Property Law > Financing > Foreclosures > Private Power of Sale Foreclosure

Real Property Law > Financing > Foreclosures > Private Power of Sale Foreclosure

HN10[] Foreclosures, Private Power of Sale Foreclosure

To state a claim under the Perata Mortgage Relief Act, Cal. Civ. Code § 2923.5, a plaintiff must allege that the lender both failed to explore options that could avoid foreclosure and failed to contact or attempt to contact the plaintiff.

Banking Law > Consumer Protection > Fair Debt Collection > General Overview

HN11[] Consumer Protection, Fair Debt Collection

The Fair Debt Collection Practices Act (FDCPA) seeks to remedy abusive, deceptive, and unfair debt collection practices by debt collectors against consumers. 15 U.S.C.S. § 1692(e). To plead an FDCPA claim, a plaintiff must allege facts that establish the following: (1) the plaintiff has been the object of collection activity arising from a consumer debt; (2) the defendant attempting to collect the debt qualifies as a debt collector under the FDCPA; and (3) the defendant has engaged in a prohibited act or has failed to perform a requirement imposed by the FDCPA.

Banking Law > Consumer Protection > Fair Debt Collection > General Overview

HN12[] Consumer Protection, Fair Debt Collection

The legislative history of 15 U.S.C.S. § 1692a(6) indicates conclusively that debt collector does not include a mortgage servicing company, or an assignee of a debt, as long as the debt was not in default at the time it was assigned. Additionally, several courts in the Ninth Circuit concluded that the Fair Debt Collection Practices Act does not apply to foreclosure activities.

Banking Law > Consumer Protection > Real Estate Settlement Procedures > Loan Servicing

HN13[] Real Estate Settlement Procedures, Loan Servicing

Under 12 U.S.C.S. § 2605 of the Real Estate Settlement Procedures Act, each person who makes a federally related mortgage loan shall disclose to each person who applies for the loan, at the time of application for the loan, whether the servicing of the loan may be assigned, sold, or transferred to any other person at any time while the loan is outstanding. 12 U.S.C.S. § 2605(a). Additionally, 12 U.S.C.S. § 2605(e)(1)(A) provides that a loan servicer is required to respond to a qualified written request from the borrower for information relating to the servicing of such loan within 20 days.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Breach > Breach of Contract Actions > Elements of Contract Claims

HN14[] Breach of Contract Actions, Elements of Contract Claims

In California, a cause of action for breach of contract has four elements: (1) allegations that a contract exists between the parties; (2) that plaintiff has performed all the contractual duties or was excused from nonperformance, (3) that defendant has breached the contractual duties, and (4) that plaintiff's damages were a result of the breach.

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

HN15[] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

A plaintiff must state claim that is plausible on its face; plausibility requires the plaintiff to plead facts that allow court to draw reasonable inference that the defendant is liable for the misconduct alleged.

Contracts Law > Statute of Frauds > Requirements > Writings

Real Property Law > Financing > Mortgages & Other Security Instruments > Mortgage Formalities

HN16[] Requirements, Writings

Any oral modification or oral agreement to forbear from exercising the right of foreclosure would be a modification to the deed of trust which comes within the statute of frauds. Thus, any modification to the deed of trust must be in writing.

Contracts Law > Contract Interpretation > Good Faith & Fair Dealing

HN17[] Contract Interpretation, Good Faith & Fair Dealing

A claim for breach of the covenant of good faith and fair dealing is predicated upon the existence of an underlying contract.

Torts > ... > Fraud & Misrepresentation > Actual Fraud > Elements

Torts > ... > Fraud & Misrepresentation > Negligent Misrepresentation > Elements

HN18[] Actual Fraud, Elements

The elements of a claim for fraud include: (1) misrepresentation by way of a false representation, concealment, or nondisclosure; (2) knowledge of falsity; (3) intent to defraud; (4) justifiable reliance; and (5) resulting damage. The same elements comprise a cause of action for negligent misrepresentation, except there is no requirement of intent to induce reliance. In both causes of action, the plaintiff must plead that he or she actually relied on the misrepresentation.

Torts > ... > Fraud & Misrepresentation > Negligent Misrepresentation > General Overview

Torts > ... > Fraud & Misrepresentation > Actual Fraud > General Overview

HN19[] Heightened Pleading Requirements, Fraud Claims

It is well established in the Ninth Circuit that both claims for fraud and negligent misrepresentation must meet Fed. R. Civ. P. 9(b)'s particularity requirement.

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Heightened Pleading Requirements > Fraud Claims

HN20[] Heightened Pleading Requirements, Fraud Claims

Under the requirements of Fed. R. Civ. P. 9(b), in alleging fraud or mistake, a party must state with particularity the circumstances constituting fraud or mistake. Rule 9(b) requires more specificity than Fed. R. Civ. P. 8, including an account of the time, place, and specific content of the false representations as well as the identities of the parties to the misrepresentations.

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Heightened Pleading Requirements > Fraud Claims

HN21[] Heightened Pleading Requirements, Fraud Claims

Fed. R. Civ. P. 9(b) demands that, when averments of fraud are made, the circumstances constituting the allegations of fraud be specific enough to give defendants notice of the particular misconduct so that they can defend against the charge and not just deny that they have done anything wrong.

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Heightened Pleading Requirements > Fraud Claims

HN22[] Heightened Pleading Requirements, Fraud Claims

Fed. R. Civ. P. 9(b) does not allow a complaint to merely lump multiple defendants together but requires plaintiffs to differentiate their allegations when suing more than one defendant and inform each defendant separately of the allegations surrounding his alleged participation in the fraud.

Real Property Law > Financing > Foreclosures > Equitable Foreclosures

HN23[] Foreclosures, Equitable Foreclosures

Under California law, the tender rule requires that as a precondition to challenging a foreclosure sale, or any cause of action implicitly integrated to the sale, the borrower must make a valid and viable tender of payment of the secured debt.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Contracts Law > Types of Contracts > Quasi Contracts

HN24[] Types of Contracts, Quasi Contracts

California courts are split as to whether a claim for unjust enrichment constitutes a standalone claim. However, the United States District Court for the Northern District of California in Robinson the court determined that even if a claim for unjust enrichment is characterized as a request for restitution, this too is a remedy, not a standalone cause of action. There is no cause of action for restitution, but there are various causes of action that give rise to restitution as a remedy.

ORDER DISMISSING PLAINTIFF'S COMPLAINT

(Docket No. 1)

I. INTRODUCTION

On July 27, 2011, Plaintiff filed a complaint against Defendants U.S. Bank, National Association, People's Choice Home Loans, Inc., NDEX West, LLC, and America's Servicing Company (collectively "Defendants") asserting the following: (1) a claim to set aside a trustee's sale; (2) violation of the Perata Mortgage Relief Act; (3) violation of the Fair Debt Collection Practices Act; (4) violation of the Real Estate Settlement Procedures Act; (5) breach of contract; (6) breach of the covenant of good faith and fair dealing; (7) claims for negligent misrepresentation and fraud (intentional misrepresentation/fraudulent concealment); (8) unjust enrichment; and (9) violation of the California Business and Professions Code § 17200.

For the reasons set forth below, the Court DISMISSES Plaintiff's complaint and GRANTS Plaintiff 30 days leave to amend.

II. BACKGROUND

Since April 2000, Plaintiff alleges that he resided at real property located in Madera, California. (Doc. 1, ¶ 12.) On October 1, 2004, Plaintiff obtained [*2] title to the property and executed a Deed of Trust, which was recorded in favor of Defendant People's Choice Home Loan, Inc. ("People's Choice"). (Doc. 8, ¶ 12.) In approximately January or February 2008, Plaintiff became delinquent in his payments to People's Choice due to a pay cut and was in default under the terms of the Deed of Trust. (Doc. 8, ¶ 13.)

Although the allegations are unclear, in March 2008, Plaintiff apparently attempted to reinstate his loan with People's Choice. (Doc. 1, ¶ 14.) However, Defendant America's Servicing Company ("ASC") was allegedly servicing loans for People's Choice, and it was ASC that returned Plaintiff's reinstatement check and offered Plaintiff a loan modification. (Doc. 1, ¶ 14.) Between July and October 2008, ASC and Plaintiff engaged in numerous correspondence regarding the loan modification. (Doc. 1, ¶¶ 15-16.) ASC sent Plaintiff a loan modification agreement in November 2008, but it was not compliant "with the spirit and intent of loan modification requirements embodied in Cal. Civil Code [§] 2923 and Perata Mortgage Relief Act." (Doc. 1, ¶ 15-16.) Thus, Plaintiff requested new loan modification documents that met with his approval, and "ASC [*3] allegedly stated that [it] would respond to Plaintiff's request for a compliant modification within 60 days, all to naught." (Doc. 1, ¶ 16.)

Before the 60 days passed, during which ASC was assertedly considering Plaintiff's request, Defendant NDEX, acting as the agent for U.S. Bank, conducted a trustee's sale of Plaintiff's property on February 11, 2009. (Doc. 1, ¶ 17.) For purposes of the trustee's sale, U.S. Bank "held itself out as the mortgage owner . . . instead of Plaintiff's mortgage owner - People's Choice . . . [and] appointed NDEX as the Successor Trustee . . . . " (Doc. 1, ¶ 18.) Plaintiff asserts that "U.S. Bank['s] claim to title of Plaintiff['s property] was never determined by evidence nor did People's [C]hoice notify Plaintiff of any assignment to U.S. Bank." [*4] (Doc. 1, ¶ 20.) Plaintiff contends that, under the original Deed of Trust, the original lender is People's Choice; there has been no valid assignment and the chain of title does not include U.S. Bank, N.A., ASC, NDEX, or any other entities. (Doc. 1, ¶ 20(b).) Plaintiff argues that he has the right to demand that Defendants provide proof of the chain of title from the original lender to Defendants. (Doc. 1, ¶ 20(c).)

III. DISCUSSION

A. Applicable Standards

1. Screening Standard

HN1[] In cases where the plaintiff is proceeding in forma pauperis, the Court is required to screen each case and shall dismiss the case at any time if the Court determines that the allegation of poverty is untrue, or the action or appeal is frivolous or malicious, fails to state a claim upon which relief may be granted, or seeks monetary relief against a defendant who is immune from such relief. 28 U.S.C. § 1915(e)(2). If the Court determines that the complaint fails to state a claim, leave to amend may be granted to the extent that the deficiencies of the complaint can be cured by amendment. Lopez v. Smith, 203 F.3d 1122, 1130 (9th Cir. 2000) (en banc).

2. Legal Standard

HN2[] In determining whether a complaint fails to state [*5] a claim, the Court applies the same pleading standard used under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 8(a). Under Rule 8(a), a complaint must contain a "short and plain statement of the claim showing that the pleader is entitled to relief." Fed. R. Civ. P. 8(a)(2). "[T]he pleading standard Rule 8 announces does not require 'detailed factual allegations,' but it demands more than an unadorned, the-defendant-unlawfully-harmed-me accusation." Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 129 S. Ct. 1937, 1949, 173 L. Ed. 2d 868 (2009) (quoting Bell Atl. Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 555, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007)). HN3[] "[A] complaint must contain sufficient factual matter, accepted as true, to 'state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face.'" Id. (quoting Twombly, 550 U.S. at 557). "[A] complaint [that] pleads facts that are 'merely consistent with' a defendant's liability . . . 'stops short of the line between possibility and plausibility of entitlement to relief.'" Id. (quoting Twombly, 550 U.S. at 557). Further, although a court must accept as true all factual allegations contained in a complaint, a court need not accept a plaintiff's legal conclusions as true. Id. "Threadbare recitals of the elements of a cause of action, supported [*6] by mere conclusory statements, do not suffice." Id. (quoting Twombly, 550 U.S. at 555).

HN4[] A court may also dismiss a complaint for failure to comply with Federal Rule 9(b). See Vess, v. Ciba-Geigy Corp, USA, 317 F.3d 1097, 1107 (9th Cir. 2003). Rule 9 provides that "[i]n alleging fraud or mistake, a party must state with particularity the circumstances constituting fraud or mistake. Malice, intent, knowledge, and other conditions of a person's mind may be alleged generally." Fed. R. Civ. P. 9(b). Such circumstances include the "time, place, and specific content of the false representations as well as the identifies of the parties to the misrepresentations." Swartz v. KPMG LLP, 476 F.3d 756, 764 (9th Cir. 2007) (quoting Edwards v. Marin Park, Inc., 356 F.3d 1058, 1066 (9th Cir. 2004)). "In the context of a fraud suit involving multiple defendants, a plaintiff must, at a minimum 'identif[y] the role of [each] defendant[] in the alleged fraudulent scheme.'" Id. at 765 (quoting Moore v. Kayport Package Express, 885 F.2d 531, 541 (9th Cir. 1989)). HN5[] Claims subject to Rule 9(b) pleading requirements must also satisfy the ordinary pleading requirements of Rule 8.

B. Plaintiff's Claims

1. Claim to [*7] Set Aside Trustee's Sale

Plaintiff's claim to set aside the trustee's sale centers on an allegation that he is not aware of any evidence that U.S. Bank was properly assigned the mortgage from People's Choice. (Doc. 1, ¶ 20 ("U.S. Bank['s] claim to title of Plaintiff was never determined by evidence nor did People's [C]hoice notify Plaintiff of any assignment to U.S. Bank.").)

HN6[] "A party may not without payment of the debt, enjoin a sale by trustee under a power conferred by a deed of trust, or have his title quieted against the purchaser at such a sale . . . . " Sipe v. McKenna, 88 Cal. App. 2d 1001, 1006, 200 P.2d 61 (1948). A default borrower is "required to allege tender of the amount of [the lender's] secured indebtedness in order to maintain any cause of action for irregularity in the sale procedure." Hamilton v. Bank of Blue Valley, 746 F. Supp. 2d 1160, 1169 (E.D. Cal. 2010); Abdallah v. United Sav. Bank, 43 Cal. App. 4th 1101, 1109, 51 Cal. Rptr. 2d 286 (1996), cert. denied, 519 U.S. 1081, 117 S. Ct. 746, 136 L. Ed. 2d 684 (1997).

HN7[] An action to set aside a foreclosure sale, unaccompanied by an offer to redeem, does not state a cause of action which a court of equity recognizes. Karlsen v. Am. Sav. & Loan Ass'n, 15 Cal. App. 3d 112, 117, 92 Cal. Rptr. 851 (1971). Moreover, [*8] an offer of performance is of no effect if the person making the offer is unable to perform. Id. at 118. In other words, if the offeror "is without the money necessary to make the offer good and knows it[,]" the tender is without legal force or effect. Id. "It would be futile to set aside a foreclosure sale on the technical ground that notice was improper, if the party making the challenge did not first make full tender and thereby establish his ability to purchase the property." U.S. Cold Storage v. Great W. Sav. & Loan Ass'n, 165 Cal. App. 3d 1214, 1224, 212 Cal. Rptr. 232 (1985). "A cause of action 'implicitly integrated' with the irregular sale fails unless the trustor can allege and establish a valid tender." Arnolds Mgmt. Corp. v. Eischen, 158 Cal. App. 3d 575, 579, 205 Cal. Rptr. 15 (1984); see also *Anaya v. Advisors Lending Grp., No. 09-cv-1191 LJO DLB, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 68373, 2009 WL 2424037, at 10 (E.D. Cal. Aug. 3, 2009) ("Plaintiff offers nothing to indicate that she is able to tender her debt to warrant disruption of non-judicial foreclosure."); *Alicea v. GE Money Bank, No. C 09-00091 SBA, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 60813, 2009 WL 2136969, at * 3 (N.D. Cal. July 16, 2009)* ("When a debtor is in default of a home mortgage loan, and a foreclosure is either pending or [*9] has taken place, the debtor must allege a credible tender of the amount of the secured debt to maintain any cause of action for foreclosure.").

There is no allegation in the complaint that Plaintiff has tendered the amount due on the loan or that he has a meaningful ability to do so. The record's silence on Plaintiff's tender or his ability to tender the outstanding amount implies an inability to do so. Further, the allegations do not indicate facts that the sale under the deed of trust could be considered void such that an exception to the tender rule might apply. See Nguyen v. Wells Fargo Bank, N.A., 749 F. Supp. 2d 1022, 1034-35 (N.D. Cal. 2010) (dismissing wrongful foreclosure claim noting that plaintiff cited no authority that would render tender rule inapplicable where assignment of deed of trust was invalid). Without a meaningful tender from Plaintiff, the remedy sought cannot be granted. Thus, Plaintiff's claims to set aside the trustee's sale pursuant to various sections of the California Civil Code are dismissed. To state a cognizable claim, Plaintiff must allege facts showing that an exception to the tender rule applies.

2. Claim Pursuant to Perata Mortgage Relief Act, California Civil Code § 2923.5

Plaintiff [*10] also sets forth allegations related to the Perata Mortgage Relief Act codified at Cal. Civ. Code § 2923.5 ("Perata"). Plaintiff asserts that "Defendant failed in its fiduciary duty by not complying at the minimum in good faith to the statutory guidance on modification. For arguendo, even if Defendant was a bonafide holder of Plaintiff's mortgage, standing, which is currently yet to be validated by evidence, Defendants' modification of Plaintiff's mortgage payment higher to $2900 per month ($600 more than Plaintiff's original mortgage payment of $2293) is woefully inadequate for compliance." (Doc. 1, ¶ 36.)

HN8[] Perata requires a lender to contact the borrower in good faith, in person or by telephone to assess the borrower's financial situation and explore options to avoid foreclosure, and Perata imposes a duty on the lender to attempt to negotiate with a borrower before recording a notice of sale. Cal. Civ. Code § 2923.5(a)(2), (c). These provisions apply to loans initiated between January 1, 2003, and December 31, 2007. Cal. Civ. Code § 2923.5(h)(3)(i).

Plaintiff's claim for relief under California Civil Code § 2923.5 fails for two reasons. First, HN9[] the only remedy available under Section 2923.5 [*11] is a postponement of the sale before it happens. Marbry v. Super. Ct., 185 Cal. App. 4th. 208, 221, 110 Cal. Rptr. 3d 201 (2010). Here, the trustee's sale has already taken place. Thus, there is no remedy available to Plaintiff under Section 2923.5. Second, even assuming there was a remedy beyond postponement of the trustee's sale, HN10[] "[t]o state a claim under Perata, Plaintiff must allege that the lender both failed to explore options that could avoid foreclosure and failed to contact or attempt to contact Plaintiff." *Taylor v. GMAC Mortg., LLC, No. 09-cv-1755 JAH (POR), 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 103925, 2010 WL 3894993, at 4 (S.D. Cal. Sept. 28, 2010) (citing Ortiz v. Accredited Home Lenders, Inc., 639 F. Supp. 2d 1159,1166 (S.D. Cal. 2009)). Here, Plaintiff's allegations indicate that he was contacted about options to avoid foreclosure. For these reasons, Plaintiff's claim for relief under Section 2923.5 is dismissed.

3. Claim Pursuant to the Fair Debt Collection Practices Act

HN11[] The Fair Debt Collection Practices Act ("FDCPA") seeks to remedy abusive, deceptive, and unfair debt collection practices by debt collectors against consumers. See 15 U.S.C. § 1692(e). To plead an FDCPA claim, a plaintiff must allege facts that establish the following: [*12] (1) the plaintiff has been the object of collection activity arising from a consumer debt; (2) the defendant attempting to collect the debt qualifies as a "debt collector" under the FDCPA; and (3) the defendant has engaged in a prohibited act or has failed to perform a requirement imposed by the FDCPA. Frazier v. Absolute Collection Serv., Inc., 767 F. Supp. 2d 1354, 1363 (N.D. Ga. 2011) (citing *Buckley v. Bayrock Mortg. Corp., No. 1:09-cv-1387-TWT, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 10636, 2010 WL 476673, at 6 (N.D. Ga. Feb. 5, 2010) (Thrash, J. adopting Vineyard, M.J.)); *Beadle v. Haughey, No. 04-272-SM, 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 2473, 2005 WL 300060, at 3 (D.N.H. Feb. 9, 2005); Russey v. Rankin, 911 F. Supp. 1449, 1453 (D.N.M. 1995)); see also McCorriston v. L.W.T., Inc., 536 F. Supp. 2d 1268, 1278 (M.D. Fla. 2008).

Although the complaint is unclear, Plaintiff states that "[u]nder the Fair Debt Collection[] Practices Act (15 [U.S.C. § 1692g]) Plaintiff is hereby disputing the following facts stated in the debt servicing transfer notice IF ANY AS CLAIMED BY THESE DEFENDANTS, the date and amounts of which this Plaintiff, can not currently authenticate nor validate, with legal authentications." (Doc. 1, ¶ 20(b).)

HN12[] "The legislative history of section 1692a(6) [*13] indicates conclusively that debt collector does not include . . . a mortgage servicing company, or an assignee of a debt, as long as the debt was not in default at the time it was assigned." Perry v. Stewart Title Co., 756 F.2d 1197, 1208 (5th Cir. 1985). Additionally, several courts in the Ninth Circuit have concluded that the FDCPA does not apply to foreclosure activities. See *Park v. Wachovia Mortg., FSB, No. 10-cv-1547 WQH (RBB), 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 113011, 2011 WL 4571874, at 5 (S.D. Cal. Sept. 30, 2011); Walker v. Equity 1 Lenders Grp., No. 09-cv-00325 WQH (AJB), 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 40991, 2009 WL

1364430, at *7 (S.D. Cal. May 14, 2009) ("The activity of foreclosing on [a] property pursuant to a deed of trust is not the collection of a debt within the meaning of the FDCPA . . .") (internal quotation marks omitted).

To the extent that Plaintiff is asserting a claim pursuant to the FDCPA, it is insufficient. Here, each Defendant is identified as a mortgage lender or servicer, and the activities Plaintiff asserts violate the FDCPA arise out of the foreclosure of Plaintiff's property under a deed of trust. As set forth above, the FDCPA does not apply to foreclosure activities. Thus, to the extent that Plaintiff is attempting to state [*14] a claim under the FDCPA, it is not viable.

4. Claim Pursuant to the Real Estate Settlement Procedures Act

HN13[] Under Section 2605 of the Real Estate Settlement Procedures Act ("RESPA"), "[e]ach person who makes a federally related mortgage loan shall disclose to each person who applies for the loan, at the time of application for the loan, whether the servicing of the loan may be assigned, sold, or transferred to any other person at any time while the loan is outstanding." 12 U.S.C. § 2605(a). Additionally, Section 2605(e)(1)(A) provides that a "loan servicer" is required to respond to a "qualified written request from the borrower . . . for information relating to the servicing of such loan . . . within 20 days . . . ." Plaintiff alleges the following in connection with RESPA:

> 1a. This Plaintiff herein demand[s] that: these defendants are to provide proof of the debt owed and full accounting of how this amount was calculated, as well as all documentation[] as required in A QUALIFIED WRITTEN REQUEST, IN THIS CASE AND AS REQUIRED IN THIS LAW COURT PURSUANT TO RESPA LAWS IN CALIFORNIA AND THE FEDERAL TRUTH IN LENDING ACT, TILA.

(Doc. 1, ¶ 20(b).)

To the extent that Plaintiff is attempting to state [*15] a claim under RESPA, it is insufficient. It is not clear whether Plaintiff intends his complaint to be a "qualified written request" under the statute - and, in any case, a judicial pleading is an inappropriate vehicle to make such a demand - or whether he is asserting that he was not notified of whether the servicing of the loan could be assigned, sold, or transferred. In any event, there is no cognizable RESPA claim pled.

5. Claim for Breach of Contract

HN14[] In California, a cause of action for breach of contract has four elements: (1) allegations that a contract exists between the parties; (2) that plaintiff has performed all the contractual duties or was excused from nonperformance, (3) that defendant has breached the contractual duties, and (4) that plaintiff's damages were a result of the breach. Reichert v. Gen. Ins. Co., 68 Cal. 2d 822, 830, 69 Cal. Rptr. 321, 442 P.2d 377 (1968).

Although unclear, it appears that Plaintiff is attempting to state a cause of action for breach of contract against U.S. Bank and ASC. The only contract Plaintiff asserts is the deed of trust, under which Plaintiff acknowledges he was in default. Plaintiff does not assert what contract ASC or U.S. Bank breached. Although Plaintiff asserts [*16] that he "entered into forbearance and modification agreement," Plaintiff contrarily alleges that ASC was in the process of completing a modification that Plaintiff would accept and ASC represented it would "get back to Plaintiff within 60 days." (Doc. 1, ¶ 34.) These allegations are inconsistent and essentially implausible. Specifically, it is not plausible that a modification agreement or forbearance of the trustee's sale was finalized such that a contract was created where Plaintiff alleges that he did not agree to what ASC offered with regard to a modification and was still waiting for ASC to make another modification offer when his property was foreclosed upon. In other words, Plaintiff asserts that a modification or forbearance agreement was in place even though Plaintiff had rejected the modification ASC offered. See Iqbal, 129 S. Ct. at 1949 (HN15[] plaintiff must state claim that is plausible on its face; plausibility requires plaintiff to plead facts that allow court to draw reasonable inference that defendant is liable for the misconduct alleged).

Moreover, HN16[] any oral modification or oral agreement to forbear from exercising the right of foreclosure would be a modification to the deed [*17] of trust which comes within the statute of frauds. Secrest v. Sec. Nat'l Mortg. Loan Trust 2002-2, 167 Cal. App. 4th 544, 547, 84 Cal. Rptr. 3d 275 (2008) (An "agreement by which a lender agreed to forbear from exercising the right of foreclosure under a deed of trust securing an interest in real property comes within the statute of frauds"). Thus, any modification to the deed of trust must be in writing. Id. The inconsistency and implausibility of the allegations as well as the application of the statute of frauds indicate no cognizable claim for breach of contract against ASC or against U.S. Bank.

6. Claim for Breach of the Covenant of Good Faith and Fair Dealing Plaintiff also sets forth a claim for breach of the covenant of good faith and fair dealing, apparently against all the defendants. The only two defendants mentioned in the allegations related to this claim, however, are U.S. Bank and ASC. (Doc.1, ¶ 34.) HN17[] A claim for breach of the covenant of good faith and fair dealing is predicated upon the existence of an underlying contract. See Racine & Laramie, Ltd. v. Dep't of Parks & Rec., 11 Cal. App. 4th 1026, 1031, 14 Cal. Rptr. 2d 335 (1992) ("The implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing rests upon the existence of [*18] some specific contractual obligation."). Plaintiff has not sufficiently alleged that he entered into a contract with ASC or that ASC owed him any contractual duties. Therefore, a claim for breach of the covenant of good faith and fair dealing is not viable with respect to ASC.

Although Plaintiff asserts that "U.S. Bank has a duty to act in good faith, deal fairly and act in ways that maximizes the net recovery to all parties concerned," there are no allegations as to how U.S. Bank actually breached this duty. Further, to the extent that a breach of the covenant of good faith and fair dealing is predicated on U.S. Bank's breach of the terms of the deed of trust, there are no facts indicating how U.S. Bank breached the terms of the contract. [1] Plaintiff makes general allegations that U.S. Bank did not provide evidence that it has a valid assignment of the note, but these are allegations that relate to Plaintiff's claims to set aside the trustee's sale and are not allegations of a breach of the terms of the deed of trust. For these reasons, the claim for breach of the covenant of good faith and fair dealing is insufficiently alleged.

7. Claim for Negligent Misrepresentation/Fraud (Intentional Misrepresentation/Fraudulent Concealment)

HN18[] The elements of a claim for fraud include: (1) misrepresentation by way of a false representation, concealment, or non-disclosure; (2) knowledge of falsity; (3) intent to defraud; (4) justifiable reliance; and (5) resulting damage. See Cadlo v. Owens-Illinois, Inc., 125 Cal. App. 4th 513, 519, 23 Cal. Rptr. 3d 1 (2004) (citing Small v. Fritz Cos., Inc., 30 Cal. 4th 167, 173, 132 Cal. Rptr. 2d 490, 65 P.3d 1255 (2003)). "The same elements comprise a cause of action for negligent misrepresentation, except there is no requirement of intent to induce reliance. In both causes of action, the plaintiff must plead that he or she actually relied on the misrepresentation." Id.

HN19[] "It is well established in the Ninth Circuit that both claims for fraud and negligent misrepresentation must meet Rule 9(b)'s particularity requirement." Neilson v. Union Bank of Cal., N.A., 290 F. Supp. 2d 1101, 1141 (C.D. Cal. 2003); see also Lorenz v. Sauer, 807 F.2d 1509, 1511-12 (9th Cir. 1987) ("Under California law, negligent misrepresentation is a species of actual fraud . . . "). HN20[] Under the requirements [*20] of Rule 9(b), "in alleging fraud or mistake, a party must state with particularity the circumstances constituting fraud or mistake." Fed. R. Civ. P. 9(b). Rule 9(b) "requires more specificity [than Rule 8], including an account of the time, place, and specific content of the false representations as well as the identities of the parties to the misrepresentations." Swartz, 476 F.3d at 764.

Plaintiff's "second cause of action" (intentional misrepresentation, fraudulent concealment, and violation of foreclosure trustee's duties obligation) asserts that "Defendant told Plaintiff he would be receiving loan modification papers within 60 days, which Plaintiff relied upon, to his own detriment." (Doc. 1, ¶ 23.) Plaintiff also asserts that "Ndex held itself out as a Successor trustee and acted as such in the foreclosure. Ndex was not a trustee of record when they began foreclosure on Plaintiff's property. If the substitution of the trustee is invalid or void, then everything that happened after that is void." (Doc. 1, ¶ 23.) In Plaintiff's "eighth cause of action" (fraudulent concealment), which appears to overlap the "second cause of action," he asserts the following:

[1] Moreover, Plaintiff asserts that U.S. Bank is not even [*19] a party to the deed of trust because no assignment was properly executed.

> Defendant had exclusive [*21] knowledge not accessible to Plaintiff of material facts pertaining to its mortgage activities as it foreclosed on and took possession of Plaintiff's property and primary home as [a] REO. The facts included that U.S. Bank is not the lender; Ndex is not the trustee of record as of the inception of the foreclosure. Without limiting the damages, Plaintiff's damages arising from the cause of action included loss of equity in the home, costs and expenses related to seeking redress and protecting Plaintiff's interest, reducing credit scores, unavailability of credit, increased costs of credit, reduced availability of goods and services tied to credit ratings, increased costs of those services, as well as fees and costs, including without limitation; attorney fees and other costs such as court filing fees.

(Doc. 1, ¶ 37.)

These allegations are not pled with the requisite amount of specificity under Rule 9(b). The complaint lacks specific allegations regarding the fraud. Rather, it refers generally to the invalidity of the assignment of the mortgage to a different lender and servicer. HN21[] "Rule 9(b) demands that, when averments of fraud are made, the circumstances constituting the allegations of [*22] fraud be specific enough to give defendants notice of the particular misconduct . . . so that they can defend against the charge and not just deny that they have done anything wrong." Vess, 317 F.3d at 1106 (internal citations and quotation marks omitted). Further, each Defendant's participation in the fraud is not alleged. HN22[] Federal Rule 9(b) "does not allow a complaint to merely lump multiple defendants together but 'require[s] plaintiffs to differentiate their allegations when suing more than one defendant . . . and inform each defendant separately of the allegations surrounding his alleged participation in the fraud.'" Swartz, 476 F.3d at 764-65. Thus, Plaintiff's claims sounding in fraud lack the requisite specificity required under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 9(b).

Moreover, Plaintiff's allegations appear to allege fraud with regard to the assignment of the deed of trust to Plaintiff's property and the trustee's sale of the property. To the extent that Plaintiff's claims sounding in fraud are implicitly integrated into the sale of the property, the tender rule applies barring the claims. Montoya v. Countrywide Bank, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 53920, 2009 WL 1813973 (N.D. Cal. June 25, 2009) (HN23[] "Under California [*23] law, the 'tender rule' requires that as a precondition to challenging a foreclosure sale, or any cause of action implicitly integrated to the sale, the borrower must make a valid and viable tender of payment of the secured debt.") (emphasis added). As Plaintiff is essentially asserting fraud in the sale of the property, relief on such claims cannot be granted without a proper tender of indebtedness pursuant to Plaintiff's deed of trust and note, which has not been proffered as explained above. As such, the claims sounding in fraud are dismissed.

8. Claim for Unjust Enrichment

HN24[] California courts are split as to whether a claim for unjust enrichment constitutes a standalone claim. *See In re TFT-LCD (Flat Panel) Antitrust Litigation, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 105151, 2011 WL 4345435, at 3 (N.D. Cal. Sept. 15, 2011) (discussing split in California courts as to whether unjust enrichment may constitute a stand-alone claim). However, in Robinson the court determined that even if a claim for unjust enrichment is characterized as a request for restitution, this too is a remedy, not a stand-alone cause of action. Robinson v. HSBC Bank, USA, 732 F. Supp. 2d 976, 987 (N.D. Cal. 2010) (citing McBride, 123 Cal. App. 4th 388). "There [*24] is no cause of action for restitution, but there are various causes of action that give rise to restitution as a remedy." Id. (citing McBride v. Boughton, 123 Cal. App. 4th 379, 388, 20 Cal. Rptr. 3d 115 (2004)).

HN25[] Without a cognizable claim under which restitution or unjust enrichment can be sought, restitution cannot be granted. See Levine v. Blue Shield of Cal., 189 Cal. App. 4th 1117, 1138, 117 Cal. Rptr. 3d 262 (2010) (affirming dismissal of unjust enrichment claim after dismissal of other causes of action because the plaintiffs "have not demonstrated any basis on which they would be entitled to restitution pursuant to a theory of unjust enrichment"). Thus, this claim is dismissed.

9. Claim Pursuant to Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code Section 17200

HN26[] The unfair competition law ("UCL") codified at California Business and Professions Code § 17200, et. seq., prohibits "any unlawful or fraudulent business act or practice." Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17200. Even business practices that are merely unfair, and not necessarily unlawful, may violate this section. Gregory v. Albertson's Inc., 104 Cal. App. 4th 845, 850, 128 Cal. Rptr. 2d 389 (2002); Cel-Tech Commc'ns, Inc. v. L.A. Cellular Tel. Co., 20 Cal. 4th 163, 180, 83 Cal. Rptr. 2d 548, 973 P.2d 527 (1999) . Pursuant to § 17200, an act is "unlawful" if [*25] it violates an underlying state or federal statute. Cel-Tech Commc'ns, Inc., 20 Cal. 4th at 180 ("[The UCL's] coverage is sweeping, embracing anything that can properly be called a business practice and that at the same time is forbidden by law.") (internal citations and quotation marks omitted). An Act is considered "unfair" if it "threatens an incipient violation of antitrust law, or violates the policy or spirit of one of those laws because its effects are comparable to or the same as a violation of the law." Id. at 187. Claims set forth pursuant to § 17200 must state with reasonable particularity the facts supporting the statutory elements of the violation. Khoury v. Maly's of Cal., Inc., 14 Cal. App. 4th 612, 619, 17 Cal. Rptr. 2d 708 (1993).

As there are no viable underlying claims that can serve as the basis for the UCL claim, this claim is dismissed.

C. Amendment of Pleadings

For the reasons set forth above the Court DISMISSES Plaintiff's complaint without prejudice and with leave to amend. Plaintiff's claims pursuant to the FDCPA and Perata, however, are not viable as a matter of law. To the extent that Plaintiff includes these claims in an amended complaint, they will be recommended for dismissal [*26] with prejudice and without leave to amend on the grounds set forth above.

Plaintiff is advised that HN27[] Local Rule 220 requires that an amended complaint be complete in itself without reference to any prior pleading. As a general rule, an amended complaint supersedes the original complaint. See Loux v. Rhay, 375 F.2d 55, 57 (9th Cir. 1967). Once Plaintiff files an amended complaint, the original pleading no longer serves any function in the case. Therefore, in an amended complaint, as in an original complaint, each claim and the involvement of each Defendant must be sufficiently alleged. If Plaintiff fails to file an amended complaint or fails to cure the deficiencies identified above, the Court will recommend that the complaint be dismissed with prejudice.

IV. CONCLUSION

Accordingly, IT IS HEREBY ORDERED that:

1. Plaintiff's complaint be DISMISSED without prejudice and with leave to amend; and

2. Plaintiff shall file an amended complaint within 30 days from the date of this order.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

HN2[] Standards of Review, De Novo Review

Since a summary judgment motion raises only questions of law regarding the construction and effect of the supporting and opposing papers, the appellate court independently reviews them on appeal, applying the same three-step analysis required of the trial court. First, the appellate court identifies the issues framed by the pleadings since it is these allegations to which the motion must respond by establishing a complete defense or otherwise showing there is no factual basis for relief on any theory reasonably contemplated by the opponent's pleading. Second, the appellate court determines whether the moving party's showing has established facts which negate the opponent's claim and justify a judgment in the movant's favor. When a summary judgment motion prima facie justifies a judgment, the third and final step is to determine whether the opposition demonstrates the existence of a triable, material factual issue.

The Cartwright Act, Bus. & Prof. Code, § 16700 et seq., prohibits every trust, defined as a combination of capital, skill or acts by two or more persons for specified anticompetitive purposes. Bus. & Prof. Code, § 16720. Section 16720 generally codifies the common law prohibition against restraint of trade. The federal Sherman Act prohibits every contract, combination or conspiracy, in restraint of trade. 15 U.S.C. § 1. The similar language of the two acts reflects their common objective to protect and promote competition. Since the Cartwright Act and the federal Sherman Act share similar language and objectives, California courts often look to federal precedents under the Sherman Act for guidance.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Per Se Rule Tests > Manifestly Anticompetitive Effects

HN4[] Per Se Rule Tests, Manifestly Anticompetitive Effects

Courts have limited the reach of the Cartwright Act, Bus. & Prof. Code, § 16700 et seq., to restraints of trade that are unreasonable. Generally, in determining whether conduct unreasonably restrains trade, a rule of reason analysis requires a determination of whether its anti-competitive effects outweigh its pro-competitive effects. However, certain restraints of trade which lack redeeming virtue are conclusively presumed to be unreasonable and therefore deemed illegal per se.

A patent grants its owner the lawful right to exclude others. A patentee can choose to exclude everyone from producing the patented article or can choose to be the sole supplier itself. Unlike some kinds of agreements that are per se illegal whether engaged in by patentees or anyone else, such as tying or price-fixing, the exclusion of infringing competition is the essence of the patent grant.

HN8[] Bad Faith, Fraud & Nonuse, Fraud

The only time the United States Supreme Court has addressed the circumstances under which the patent immunity from antitrust liability can be pierced, it held that the antitrust claimant must prove that the patentee enforced a patent with the knowledge that the patent was procured by fraud. Good faith procurement furnishes a complete defense to the antitrust claim.

HN9[] Intellectual Property, Ownership & Transfer of Rights

Both the rule-of-reason and per-se approach are ill-suited for an antitrust analysis of patent cases because they seek to determine whether the challenged conduct had an anticompetitive effect on the market. By their nature, patents create an environment of exclusion, and consequently, cripple competition. The anticompetitive effect is already present. What is required is an analysis of the extent to which antitrust liability might undermine the encouragement of innovation and disclosure, or the extent to which the patent laws prevent antitrust liability for such exclusionary effects. Therefore, the proper analysis of antitrust liability requires an examination of: (1) the scope of the exclusionary potential of the patent; (2) the extent to which the agreements exceed that scope; and (3) the resulting anticompetitive effects.

Although the exclusionary power of a patent may seem incongruous with the goals of antitrust law, a delicate balance must be drawn between the two regulatory schemes. Indeed, application of antitrust law to markets affected by the exclusionary statutes set forth in patent law cannot discount the rights of the patent holder. Therefore, a patent holder does not incur antitrust liability when it chooses to exclude others from producing its patented work. What patent law does not do, however, is extend the patentee's monopoly beyond its statutory right to exclude.

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Complaints > General Overview

HN23[] Removal, Postremoval Remands

In making its jurisdictional determination on a motion for remand, the federal district court looks no further than the complaint and the motion for removal. This limitation is one aspect of the well-pled complaint rule which holds a plaintiff is the master of his or her complaint and the plaintiff may craft his or her causes of action, if he or she so desires, to exclude federal jurisdiction. Under the rule, a federal question must appear from the complaint and not from any preemption defense which might be raised in state court and which might ultimately defeat the cause of action. However, an independent corollary to the well-pled complaint rule is the artful pleading rule or the doctrine of complete preemption. This doctrine states that while couched in state contract or tort terms, federal jurisdiction exists if the issues actually raise an essentially federal question. When a federal court grants a motion for remand in the present context, it does nothing more than determine the complaint fails, either directly or by operation of the artful pleading doctrine, to state a question arising under federal law. It does not determine whether a preemption defense can be successfully offered in state court when the entire case is considered.

HN24[] Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

Antitrust laws are designed to prohibit only unreasonable restraints of trade, meaning conduct that unreasonably impairs competition and harms consumers. If the same conduct is alleged to be both an antitrust violation and an "unfair" business act or practice for the same reason - because it unreasonably restrains competition and harms consumers - the determination that the conduct is not an unreasonable restraint of trade necessarily implies that the conduct is not "unfair" toward consumers. To permit a separate inquiry into essentially the same question under the unfair competition law would only invite conflict and uncertainty and could lead to the enjoining of procompetitive conduct.

Summary

CALIFORNIA OFFICIAL REPORTS SUMMARY

Plaintiffs sued defendants, a brand-name drug manufacturer and generic drug manufacturers, alleging violation of the Cartwright Act (Bus. & Prof. Code, § 16700 et seq.) and unfair competition law (UCL) (Bus. & Prof. Code, § 17200 et seq.) and common law monopolization. Plaintiffs' causes of action arose from an agreement settling litigation between the brand-name manufacturer and one of the generic manufacturers concerning the validity of the brand-named manufacturer's patent and related agreements involving the other defendants. The trial court granted summary judgment in favor of defendants. (Superior Court of San Diego County, JCCP Nos. 4154 and 4220, Richard E. L. Strauss, Judge.)

The Court of Appeal affirmed the judgment. The court concluded that the agreements did not violate the Cartwright Act because the agreements undisputedly did not restrain competition beyond the exclusionary scope of the patent. Because the agreements did not lack any redeeming virtue, they were not unlawful per se. The agreements also did not violate the Cartwright Act under a rule-of-reason analysis. Plaintiffs' contention that there was a triable issue of fact as to whether the brand-name manufacturer's infringement suit was objectively baseless due to inequitable conduct in procuring the patent was not a basis for reversal. To the extent a sham litigation claim was sufficiently pleaded, it arose from and was preempted by federal patent law. The court's conclusion that defendants were not liable under the Cartwright Act for entering into the agreements was also dispositive of plaintiffs' causes of action for violation of the UCL and common law monopolization. (Opinion by Nares, J., with Benke, Acting P. J., and Aaron, J., concurring.) [*443]

Monopolies and Restraints of Trade § 6—Cartwright Act—Settlement of Lawsuit—Enforcement of Patent—Exclusionary Scope of Patent—Fraudulent Procurement.

A settlement of a lawsuit to enforce a patent does not violate the Cartwright Act (Bus. & Prof. Code, § 16700 et seq.) if the settlement restrains competition only within the scope of the patent, unless the patent was procured by fraud or the suit for its enforcement was objectively baseless. Unfair Competition § 1—Antitrust Laws—Unreasonable Restraints of Trade.

Antitrust laws are designed to prohibit only unreasonable restraints of trade, meaning conduct that unreasonably impairs competition and harms consumers. If the same conduct is alleged to be both an antitrust violation and an “unfair” business act or practice for the same reason—because it unreasonably restrains competition and harms consumers—the determination that the conduct is not an unreasonable restraint of trade necessarily implies that the conduct is not “unfair” toward consumers. To permit a separate inquiry into essentially the same question under the unfair competition law would only invite conflict and uncertainty and could lead to the enjoining of procompetitive conduct.

Monopolies and Restraints of Trade § 6—Common Law Tort of Monopolication—Statutory Antitrust Law.

The common law tort of monopolization is not cognizable under California law. Conduct that has been determined not to unreasonably restrain competition under statutory antitrust law cannot logically be deemed to unreasonably restrain competition under a common law monopolization theory.

Appellate Review § 39—Preservation of Issues—Summary Judgment Motion—Evidentiary Objections.

When a trial court ruling on a summary judgment motion fails to rule expressly on specific evidentiary objections, it is presumed that the objections have been overruled, the trial court considered the evidence in ruling on the merits of the summary judgment motion, and the objections are preserved on appeal.

Opinion

[169] NARES, J.—The plaintiffs in this coordinated class action proceeding sued brand-name drug manufacturer Bayer AG and its subsidiary Bayer Corporation (collectively Bayer); generic drug manufacturers Barr Laboratories, Inc. (Barr), Hoechst Marion Roussel, Inc. (HMR), and HMR's former subsidiary The Rugby Group, Inc. (Rugby) (collectively the generic defendants); and Watson Pharmaceuticals, Inc. (Watson), which purchased Rugby from HMR. Bayer manufactures and markets Cipro, the brand name for ciprofloxacin hydrochloride (ciprofloxacin), an antibiotic prescribed for the treatment of infections. Bayer owned U.S. Patent No. 4,670,444 (the ’444 patent), which claimed the ciprofloxacin hydrochloride molecule, until the patent expired in December 2003. Plaintiffs asserted causes of action against all defendants for violation of the Cartwright Act (Bus. & Prof. Code, § 16720 et seq.); violation of the unfair competition law (UCL) (Bus. & Prof. Code, § 17200 et seq.); and common law monopolization, arising from an agreement settling litigation between Bayer and Barr concerning the validity of Bayer's ’444 patent and related agreements involving [3] the other defendants (collectively, the Cipro agreements or Cipro settlement). Plaintiffs appeal from a judgment [*449] entered in favor of defendants after the court granted summary judgment motions filed by Bayer, the generic defendants, and Watson.

Plaintiffs contend (1) the court erred by not ruling that the Cipro agreements are unlawful per se; (2) if the Cipro agreements are not unlawful per se, there is a triable issue of fact as to whether they violate the Cartwright Act under the “rule of reason applied in antitrust cases”; (3) the court followed incorrectly decided federal court decisions in ruling that the Cipro agreements were lawful because they did not restrict competition outside the exclusionary zone of the ’444 patent; (4) there is a triable issue of fact under the case law the court followed; (5) the court erred in ruling that it did not have jurisdiction to determine whether Bayer engaged in fraud or inequitable conduct in obtaining the ’444 patent because that determination involves substantial questions of patent law; (6) the court erred in granting Watson's motion for summary judgment; and (7) the court erred by not providing any explanation for overruling all of plaintiffs' [4] evidentiary objections.

CA(1)[] (1) We hold that HN1[] a settlement of a lawsuit to enforce a patent does not violate the Cartwright Act if the settlement restrains competition only within the scope of the patent, unless the patent was procured by fraud or the suit for its enforcement was objectively baseless. Because the Cipro agreements undisputedly did not restrain competition beyond the exclusionary scope of the ’444 patent, we conclude they do not violate the Cartwright Act. We further conclude that plaintiffs' claim that Bayer's infringement suit against Barr was objectively baseless due to Bayer's inequitable conduct before the U.S. Patent and Trademark Office (PTO) in procuring the patent is preempted by federal patent law because plaintiffs' right to relief on that claim necessarily depends on resolution of [170] a substantial question of federal patent law. Accordingly, we affirm the judgment.

FACTUAL AND PROCEDURAL BACKGROUND

A. The ’444 Patent

Bayer's ’444 patent covers or “claims” the ciprofloxacin hydrochloride molecule, which is the active ingredient in Cipro. The ’444 patent expired in December 2003, but the United States Food and Drug Administration (FDA) granted Cipro pediatric exclusivity until [5] June 9, 2004. Consequently, no generic ciprofloxacin product could be lawfully marketed before June 9, 2004, under federal law. (21 U.S.C. § 355a.)

B. Hatch-Waxman Act

In 1991 Barr sought FDA approval of a generic version of Cipro under the federal Drug Price Competition and Patent Term Restoration Act of 1984 (the [*450] Hatch-Waxman Act) (21 U.S.C. § 355). The Hatch-Waxman Act streamlined the process of obtaining approval of generic versions of branded drugs by allowing a generic manufacturer to file an abbreviated new drug application (ANDA) under 21 United States Code section 355(j). (Merck KGaA v. Integra Lifesciences I, Ltd. (2005) 545 U.S. 193, 196, fn. 1 [162 L. Ed. 2d 160, 125 S. Ct. 2372].) The generic manufacturer does not have to make an independent showing that the generic drug is safe and effective; it need only show that the drug contains the same active ingredients as, and is bioequivalent to, the branded drug. (Ibid., citing 21 U.S.C. §§ 355(j)(2)(A)(ii) & (iv), 355(j)(8)(B).)

Regarding any patents that claim the branded drug, the generic manufacturer's ANDA must certify one of the following: “(I) that such patent information has not been filed, [¶] (II) that such patent has expired, [¶] (III) … the date on [6] which such patent will expire, or [¶] (IV) that such patent is invalid or will not be infringed by the manufacture, use, or sale of the new drug for which the application is submitted.” (21 U.S.C. § 355(j)(2)(A)(vii).)

A generic manufacturer that files a paragraph IV certification (ANDA IV) must give notice of the certification to any affected patent owners. (21 U.S.C. § 355(j)(2)(B).) The service of the ANDA IV gives an affected patent owner 45 days to file a patent infringement lawsuit against the generic manufacturer. (21 U.S.C. § 355(j)(5)(B)(iii).) If the patent owner files an infringement suit within the 45-day period, FDA approval of the generic manufacturer's ANDA is stayed for 30 months or until a federal district court enters a decision that patent is invalid or not infringed. (21 U.S.C. § 355(j)(5)(B)(iii)(I); In re Ciprofloxacin Hydrochloride Antitrust Litigation (E.D.N.Y. 2003) 261 F.Supp.2d 188, 193 (Cipro I).)

As an incentive for generic manufacturers to file ANDA IV certifications and challenge patents on brand-name drugs, the first ANDA IV filer has the right to exclusively market its generic version of the branded drug for 180 days from the date it begins to commercially [7] market the drug or the date of a final court decision finding the branded drug's patent to be invalid or not infringed. (21 U.S.C. § 355(j)(5)(B)(iv); 21 C.F.R. § 314.107(c)(1) (2009); Cipro I, supra, 261 F.Supp.2d at p. 193.)

C. Barr's ANDA and the Ensuing Patent Litigation

In October 1991 Barr filed an ANDA for a generic version of Cipro with an ANDA IV certification asserting that Bayer's ’444 patent was invalid or would not be infringed by the manufacture, use or sale of [171] Barr's generic ciprofloxacin. After receiving notice of Barr's ANDA IV, Bayer filed a patent infringement suit against Barr in the United States District Court for the [*451] Southern District of New York. Barr filed affirmative defenses and counterclaims alleging that the ’444 patent was invalid and unenforceable due to Bayer's inequitable conduct before the PTO in procuring the patent.

In March 1996 Barr and Rugby entered into an agreement under which Rugby agreed to finance a portion of the cost of Barr's patent litigation and Barr agreed to provide Rugby half of the profits from its sale of generic ciprofloxacin. In December 1996 Barr, Rugby, and HMR executed an amendment to that agreement [8] providing that HMR succeeded to all of the rights and obligations of Rugby under the agreement.

D. The Cipro Agreements

In January 1997, after the district court in the patent litigation had denied cross-motions for partial summary judgment filed by Bayer and Barr and the case had been set for trial, Bayer settled the patent litigation with Barr and other generic drug manufacturers by entering into the Cipro agreements, which consisted of three separate settlement agreements—one with Barr, one with nonparties HMR and Rugby, and one with nonparties Bernard Sherman (Sherman) and Apotex, Inc. (Apotex)—and a "supply agreement" with Barr and HMR.

Under the settlement agreements, Barr, HMR, Rugby, Sherman, and Apotex acknowledged the validity of the '444 patent and related patents held by Bayer. In the settlement agreement between Bayer and Barr, Barr agreed to amend its ANDA to change its ANDA IV certification to an ANDA III certification, precluding Barr from obtaining FDA approval to market generic Cipro until the '444 patent expired. The agreement also provided for an immediate payment of $49.1 million from Bayer to a "Barr Escrow Account."

Under the supply agreement, Barr and HMR agreed [9] not to manufacture ciprofloxacin or have it manufactured in the United States. The supply agreement gave Bayer the option of either supplying ciprofloxacin that it manufactured to Barr and HMR for distribution in the United States or making quarterly payments to Barr from January 1998 until the '444 patent expired. Bayer chose to make the payments. By December 2003 when Bayer ceased making payments, its payments to Barr totaled approximately $398 million, including the initial payment of $49.1 million.

E. Reexamination of and Subsequent Challenges to the '444 Patent

After settling the patent litigation, Bayer filed a request for reexamination of the '444 patent with the PTO. The PTO issued a reexamination certificate confirming the patent's validity, including the validity of claim 12, which covered [*452] the ciprofloxacin hydrochloride molecule. (See In re Ciprofloxacin Hydrochloride Antitrust Litigation (E.D.N.Y. 2005) 363 F.Supp.2d 514, 519 (Cipro II).) Subsequently, four generic manufacturers—Ranbaxy Pharmaceuticals, Inc., and Ranbaxy Laboratories Limited (collectively Ranbaxy), Schein Pharmaceutical, Inc. (Schein), Mylan Pharmaceuticals, Inc., and Mylan Laboratories, Inc. (collectively [10] Mylan), and Carlsbad Technology, Inc.—filed ANDA's for ciprofloxacin with ANDA IV certifications and challenged the validity of the reexamined '444 patent in infringement actions that Bayer filed against them.

Ranbaxy withdrew its ANDA IV certification and stipulated with Bayer to the dismissal of the claims and counterclaims [172] in the patent action between them after entering into a licensing agreement with Bayer. Bayer successfully moved for summary judgment against Schein, Mylan and others on the validity of the '444 patent. (Bayer AG & Bayer Corp. v. Schein Pharmaceuticals (D.N.J. 2001) 129 F.Supp.2d 705, affd. (Fed.Cir. 2002) 301 F.3d 1306.) After a bench trial, a federal district court upheld the validity of the '444 patent and ruled in favor of Bayer in its infringement action against Carlsbad Technology, Inc.

F. Federal Cipro Litigation

In 2000 and 2001, direct and indirect purchasers of Cipro and advocacy groups filed a number of antitrust actions in federal courts challenging the Cipro agreements. The actions were consolidated as ?Multidistrict Litigation" (MDL) in the Eastern District of New York. Thereafter, the MDL plaintiffs filed a consolidated complaint against Bayer and the same [11] manufacturers that are generic defendants in the present case, alleging that the Cipro agreements constituted an illegal restraint of trade in violation of the Sherman Act (15 U.S.C. §§ 1–7 et seq.) and various state antitrust and consumer protection laws. (In re Ciprofloxacin Hydrochloride Antitrust Litigation (Fed.Cir. 2008) 544 F.3d 1323, 1329 (Cipro III).) After the district court denied the MDL plaintiffs' motion for partial summary judgment that the Cipro agreements were illegal per se under the Sherman Act and state antitrust laws, the plaintiffs amended their complaint to add a state law claim that Bayer violated state antitrust law through fraud on the PTO and sham litigation in bringing its patent infringement suit against Barr.[1] (Cipro III, supra, 544 F.3d at pp. 1329–1330.)

[*453]

The parties filed cross-motions for summary judgment and the district court denied the plaintiffs' motion and granted the defendants' motion. (Cipro II, supra, 363 F.Supp.2d 514.) In the district court's view, the "ultimate question" in the case was "not whether Bayer and Barr had the power to adversely affect competition for ciprofloxacin as a whole, but whether any adverse effects on competition stemming from the [Cipro agreements] were outside the exclusionary zone of the '444 [p]atent." (Id. at p. 523.) The court stated that "[u]nless and until the patent is shown to have been procured by fraud, or a suit for its enforcement is shown to be objectively baseless, there is no injury to the market cognizable under existing antitrust law, as long as competition is restrained only within the scope of the patent." (Id. at p. 535.) The court noted that because "[a]t least four generic companies filed ANDA IVs after Bayer and Barr entered the [Cipro agreements,] … it cannot be reasonably argued that [13] the [a]greements created a bottleneck to future generic challenges." (Id. at p. 540.)

The Cipro II court concluded that "in the absence of any evidence that the [Cipro agreements] created a bottleneck on challenges to the [*454] '444 [p]atent, or that they otherwise restrained competition beyond the scope of the claims of the '444 [p]atent, the [a]greements have not had any anti-competitive effects on the market [173] for ciprofloxacin beyond that which are permitted under the '444 [p]atent. The fact that Bayer paid what in absolute numbers is a handsome sum to Barr to settle its lawsuit does not necessarily reflect a lack of confidence in the '444 [p]atent, but rather the economic realities of what was at risk. There is simply no precedent for plaintiffs' argument that the parties to a settlement are required to preserve the public's interest in lower prices. Such a rule would only result in parties being less likely to reach settlements, aside from undermining well-settled principles of patent law. Finally, to even attempt to quantify the public's interest in a patent settlement between private parties would require devaluing patents across the board, a result that would contravene the presumption [14] of [patent] validity afforded by Congress and impact the very way patent licenses are handled in countless daily transactions." (Cipro II, supra, 363 F.Supp.2d at pp. 540–541.)

The Cipro II court also granted the defendants' motion to dismiss the indirect purchaser plaintiffs' state law Walker Process type claim on the ground it was preempted by federal patent law (28 U.S.C. § 1338(a)) because it depended entirely on a showing of misconduct before the PTO and rested entirely on patent law. (Cipro II, supra, 363 F.Supp.2d at pp. 542–546.) The court further found that "Bayer's success in its [patent infringement] litigations against Schein, Mylan and Carlsbad forecloses any argument that its lawsuits were shams." (Id. at p. 547.) The court rejected the plaintiffs' argument that Bayer's success in those actions was immaterial because the '444 patent had undergone reexamination, stating: "[R]eexamination does not cure inequitable conduct, and the defense was available to all of the generic challengers." (Ibid.)

The plaintiffs timely appealed to the Second Circuit Court of Appeals, which retained jurisdiction over the direct purchaser plaintiffs' appeal but transferred the indirect purchaser [15] and advocacy group plaintiffs' appeal to the federal circuit. (Arkansas Carpenters Health & Welfare Fund v. Bayer AG (2d Cir. 2010) 604 F.3d 98, 103 (Arkansas Carpenters); Cipro III, supra, 544 F.3d at p. 1327.) The federal circuit affirmed the dismissal of the indirect purchasers' state Walker Process type claims and the ?grant of summary judgment … that the [Cipro agreements] were not in violation of … the Sherman Act because any anti-competitive effects caused by the [a]greements were within the exclusionary zone of the ['444] patent." (Cipro III, supra, 544 F.3d at p. 1341.)

---

[1] The Cipro III court referred to the MDL plaintiffs' fraud-on-the-PTO claim as a "Walker Process type" state law claim. The court explained: "In Walker Process Equipment, Inc. v. Food Machinery & Chemical Corp. [(1965) 382 U.S. 172 [15 L. Ed. 2d 247, 86 S. Ct. 347]], the Supreme Court held that the enforcement of a patent procured by fraud on the patent office may be a violation of the Sherman Act provided that the other [12] elements necessary to a Sherman Act claim are present. [Citation.] Here, however, the plaintiffs alleged a violation of state antitrust laws." (Cipro III, supra, 544 F.3d at pp. 1329–1330, fn. 6.)

In the direct purchasers' appeal, the Second Circuit likewise affirmed the judgment, noting that most courts considering the issue, including the Second Circuit in In re Tamoxifen Citrate Antitrust Litigation (2d Cir. 2006) 466 F.3d 187 (Tamoxifen) “have held that the right to enter into reverse exclusionary payment[2] agreements fall[s] within the terms of the exclusionary grant conferred by the branded manufacturer's patent.” (Arkansas Carpenters, supra, 604 F.3d at p. 105.) The Arkansas Carpenters court noted that the Tamoxifen court ruled that a reverse payment agreement settling patent litigation between [16] a branded drug manufacturer and a generic drug manufacturer “did not exceed [174] the scope of the patent where (1) there was no restriction on marketing non-infringing products; (2) a generic version of the branded drug would necessarily infringe the branded firm's patent; and (3) the agreement did not bar other generic manufacturers from challenging the patent.” (Arkansas Carpenters, supra, 604 F.3d at p. 106, citing Tamoxifen, supra, 466 F.3d at pp. 213–215.) The Arkansas Carpenters court concluded that “as long as Tamoxifen is controlling law, plaintiffs' claims cannot survive.” (Arkansas Carpenters, supra, 604 F.3d at p. 110.) The court invited the plaintiffs to file a petition for rehearing en banc (ibid.) and the plaintiffs did so, but the petition was denied. (Arkansas Carpenters Health & Welfare Fund v. Bayer AG (2d Cir. 2010) 625 F.3d 779.)
[*455]

G. The Present Action

Plaintiffs' operative pleading in this action is a second amended complaint they filed after this and other state actions were removed to federal court and remanded back to state court in In re Ciprofloxacin Hydrochloride Antitrust Litigation (E.D.N.Y. 2001) 166 F.Supp.2d 740. As noted, the second amended complaint includes causes of action for violation of the Cartwright Act (Bus. & Prof. Code, § 16720 et seq.); violation of the UCL (Bus. & Prof. Code, § 17200 et seq.); and common law monopolization arising from the Cipro agreements. The trial court granted plaintiffs' motion for class certification and this court upheld a modified certification in In re Cipro Cases I & II (2004) 121 Cal.App.4th 402 [17 Cal. Rptr. 3d 1].[3]

In November 2004 the trial court vacated the trial date and continued the hearing date it had set for defendants' [18] motions for summary judgment pending the federal district court's decision on defense motions for summary judgment filed in the MDL. In March 2005 the district court granted the motions for summary judgment and dismissed the MDL case in the Cipro II decision. The parties in the present action then stipulated to stay the action pending the MDL plaintiffs' appeal of the summary judgment. After the federal circuit issued its decision in Cipro III affirming the summary judgment, the parties stipulated, and the court ordered, that the defendants would file new motions for summary judgment.

The court granted motions for summary judgment filed by Bayer, the generic defendants, and Watson, and entered judgment in favor of defendants. The court ruled that the Cipro agreements did not violate the Cartwright Act because “[t]he undisputed evidence establishes that no triable issue of material fact exists that the agreement did not fall outside the exclusionary scope of the [’444] patent; there is no evidence that the patent suit by Bayer against Barr was objectively baseless; and Plaintiff[s] cannot establish that the settlement was otherwise unlawful.” The court ruled the agreements were not illegal [19] per se and did not violate the Cartwright Act under the “rule of reason” applied in antitrust cases. The court found that as a matter of law, plaintiffs could not establish that the Cipro settlement unreasonably restrained trade because there was no triable issue of fact as to whether it had “anticompetitive effects on competition beyond the exclusionary scope of the [’444] patent itself.” The court stated that “[t]his finding also precludes Plaintiffs' [175] UCL claim and common law monopoly claim as they are based on the same factual allegations that support the Cartwright Act claim.”

[2] The Arkansas Carpenters court explained that the terms “reverse exclusionary payment” and “pay-for-delay” refer to a settlement in which “the patent holder (Bayer) agree[s] to pay the alleged infringer to settle the lawsuit, and in exchange, the alleged infringer agree[s] not to enter the market.” (Arkansas Carpenters, supra, 604 F.3d at p. 102.) [17] The Tamoxifen court referred to such payments as “reverse payments.” (Tamoxifen, supra, 466 F.3d at p. 205.)

[3] The modification was to exclude all Cipro purchasers who paid a flat copayment and would have paid the same copayment for generic ciprofloxacin under the terms of their health coverage. (In re Cipro Cases I & II, supra, 121 Cal.App.4th at p. 419.)

The court ruled that its summary judgment ruling as to Bayer and the generic defendants was dispositive as to Watson's summary judgment motion as well. The court additionally found there was no triable issue of fact as to whether Watson did anything to restrain trade as to ciprofloxacin. The court noted, among other facts, that Watson was not involved in the Cipro agreements and had no relationship to HMR or Rugby when those agreements were made.

DISCUSSION

HN2[] " ' "Since a summary judgment motion raises only questions of law regarding the construction and effect of the supporting and opposing papers, we independently [20] review them on appeal, applying the same three-step analysis required of the trial court. I. Legality of the Cipro Agreements

CA(2)[] (2) Plaintiffs first contend the court erred by not ruling that the Cipro agreements are illegal per se under the Cartwright Act. HN3[] The Cartwright Act (Bus. & Prof. Code,[4] § 16700 et seq.) "prohibits every trust, defined as 'a combination of capital, skill or acts by two or more persons' for specified anticompetitive purposes. (§ 16720.) [21] Section 16720 generally codifies the common law prohibition against restraint of trade. [Citation.][5] [¶] The federal Sherman Act prohibits every 'contract, combination … or conspiracy, in restraint of trade.' (15 U.S.C. § 1.) 'The similar language of the two acts reflects their common objective to protect and promote competition. [Citations.] Since the Cartwright Act and the federal Sherman Act share similar [*457] language and objectives, California courts often look to federal precedents under the Sherman Act for guidance.' " (Fisherman's Wharf Bay Cruise Corp. v. Superior Court (2003) 114 Cal.App.4th 309, 334 [7 Cal. Rptr. 3d 628].)

HN4[] CA(3)[] (3) Courts have limited the reach of the Cartwright Act to restraints of trade that are unreasonable. [22] (UAS Management, Inc. v. Mater Misericordiae Hospital (2008) 169 Cal.App.4th 357, 364 [87 Cal. Rptr. 3d 81].) "Generally, in determining whether conduct unreasonably restrains trade, '[a] rule of reason analysis requires a determination of whether … its anti-competitive effects outweigh its [176] pro-competitive effects.' " (Bert G. Gianelli Distributing Co. v. Beck & Co. (1985) 172 Cal.App.3d 1020, 1048 [219 Cal. Rptr. 203], disapproved on other grounds in Dore v. Arnold Worldwide, Inc. (2006) 39 Cal.4th 384, 389–390, 394, fn. 2 [46 Cal. Rptr. 3d 668, 139 P.3d 56].) However, " '[c]ertain restraints [of trade] which lack redeeming virtue are conclusively presumed to be unreasonable' " and therefore deemed illegal per se. (UAS Management, Inc. v. Mater Misericordiae Hospital, supra, 169 Cal.App.4th at p. 364; see Morrison v. Viacom, Inc. (1998) 66 Cal.App.4th 534, 540 [78 Cal. Rptr. 2d 133].)

Plaintiffs contend the Cipro agreements are illegal per se, and the trial court would have found them so if it had not followed Tamoxifen and other federal cases supporting the proposition that a reverse payment settlement between a patent holder and an alleged infringer in Hatch-Waxman litigation is legal as long as the settlement does not restrain competition beyond the exclusionary scope of the patent, and there [23] is no showing that the patent was procured by fraud or that the suit for its infringement was objectively baseless. Plaintiffs contend these cases were wrongly decided. We disagree.

CA(4)[] (4) In Tamoxifen, branded drug manufacturer and patent holder Zeneca, Inc., and related entities (collectively Zeneca) and generic drug manufacturer Barr entered into a reverse exclusionary payment settlement after a federal district court rendered a judgment declaring Zeneca's patent for the drug tamoxifen invalid, and while Zeneca's appeal of that judgment was pending. (Tamoxifen, supra, 466 F.3d at pp. 193–194.) The plaintiffs in Tamoxifen alleged the settlement violated antitrust laws. (Id. at pp. 196–197.) Considering the sufficiency of the plaintiffs' complaint, the Tamoxifen court declined to conclude, and noted that the plaintiffs did not ask it to conclude, "that reverse payments are per se violations of the Sherman Act such that an allegation of an agreement to make reverse payments suffices to assert an antitrust violation." (Id. at p. 206, original italics.) The Tamoxifen court adopted the holding in Cipro II that HN5[] " '[u]nless and until the patent is shown to have been procured by fraud, or a suit for [24] its enforcement is shown to be objectively baseless, there is no injury to the market cognizable under [*458] existing antitrust law, as long as competition is restrained only within the scope of the patent.' " (Tamoxifen, supra, 466 F.3d at p. 213, quoting Cipro II, supra, 363 F.Supp.2d at p. 535.) Affirming the district court's judgment dismissing the complaint and denying the plaintiffs leave to amend, the Tamoxifen court concluded that "in the absence of any plausible allegation that Zeneca's patent infringement lawsuit was baseless or that the Settlement Agreement otherwise restrained competition beyond the scope of the tamoxifen patent, [the plaintiffs'] complaint would fail to state a claim on which relief can be granted." (Tamoxifen, supra, 466 F.3d at p. 221.)

Before Tamoxifen was decided, the district court in Cipro I, addressing the Cipro settlement challenged here, noted that "per se analysis is reserved for a small number of cases involving agreements in restraint of trade that experience teaches have no redeeming value and a pernicious anticompetitive effect. This case involves the rights of a patent holder whose patent has been scrutinized on reexamination by the PTO and repeatedly [25] challenged in court, but has never been found invalid. This case also involves the Hatch-Waxman Amendments—a new statutory scheme creating a novel, low-cost method for challenging the validity of drug patents. Lastly, this case involves settlement agreements, the type of agreements, generally speaking, encouraged by the legal system [177] and entered into with great frequency. These circumstances pose significant obstacles to per se treatment of the challenged agreements." (Cipro I, supra, 261 F.Supp.2d at p. 233.)

CA(5)[] (5) The Cipro I court stated thatHN6[] "when patents are involved, case law directs that the exclusionary effect of the patent must be considered before making any determination as to whether the alleged restraint is per se illegal. Therefore, the proper analysis in this case is whether the plaintiffs have proven as a matter of law that the challenged agreements restrict competition beyond the exclusionary effects of the 444 Patent." (Cipro I, supra, 261 F.Supp.2d at p. 249.) The court observed that because the '444 patent covered the active ingredient in all Cipro products, until the patent "either is invalidated or expires, it lawfully precludes the manufacture and use of any generic [26] product containing the compound ciprofloxacin hydrochloride regardless of the form or method of delivery. Therefore, the restrictions in the Supply Agreement on manufacturing Cipro appear within the confines of Bayer's lawful patent monopoly." (Id. at p. 250.) The court concluded that the Cipro agreements, including the supply agreement, "do not restrict competition in areas other than those protected by Bayer's 444 Patent and, thus, are not per se illegal under the Sherman Act." (Ibid.)

Noting that the policies underlying patent law and the Sherman Act conflict to some extent, the Cipro I court reasoned that "[t]he flexibility necessary to balance these competing policies, particularly in the context of a new [*459] statutory scheme, suggests that a rule of reason rather than a per se analysis should be employed in this case." (Cipro I, supra, 261 F.Supp.2d at p. 255.) The court noted incentives created by the Hatch-Waxman Act "have led to generic investment in product development, patent review and product challenges through litigation. … To maximize these incentives, a generic company should be permitted to choose not only when to commence patent litigation, but also when to terminate [27] it. Otherwise, the incentives to mount an ANDA IV challenge could be reduced." (261 F.Supp.2d at p. 256.)

The Cipro I court also recognized that the public policy favoring the settlement of disputes was an important factor in its analysis, stating: "[T]he American legal process encourages the settlement of lawsuits where possible, and unless the law explicitly states otherwise, neither party is obligated to litigate to a final conclusion. Nothing in the legislative history supports a conclusion that Hatch-Waxman lawsuits cannot be settled. Moreover, a rule that makes it per se illegal to settle a Hatch-Waxman lawsuit, like the Bayer/Barr patent litigation, limits the options available to both generic and brand-name manufacturers. If brand-name manufacturers are unable to control or limit their risk by settling Hatch-Waxman litigation, they, like generic manufacturers, may be less inclined to invest the research and development ('R&D') costs associated with bringing new drugs to the market. The pharmaceutical industry depends greatly on R&D and the economic returns to intellectual property created when a successful new drug is brought to market. … A rule prohibiting settlements of Hatch-Waxman [28] patent litigation can have grave consequences for R&D and, in turn, severe consequences for consumers … ." (Cipro I, supra, 261 F.Supp.2d at p. 256, citation omitted.) "Although a policy in favor of settlement of litigation cannot save a per se violation from the [strictures] of the Sherman Act, a rule that too quickly condemns actions as per se illegal, potentially chilling efforts to research and develop new drugs and challenge the patents on brand-name [178] drugs, does competition—and thus, the Sherman Act—a disservice." (Ibid.)

CA(6)[] (6) In another decision predating Tamoxifen, the Eleventh Circuit Court of Appeals, considering a reverse payment settlement of a Hatch-Waxman infringement suit that the district court had found to be illegal per se, stated: "If this case merely involved one firm making monthly payments to potential competitors in return for their exiting or refraining from entering the market, we would readily affirm the district court's order [granting summary judgment]. This is not such a case, however, because one of the parties owned a patent." (Valley Drug Co. v. Geneva Pharmaceuticals, Inc. (11th Cir. 2003) 344 F.3d 1294, 1304 (Valley Drug).) The Valley Drug court noted that HN7[] "[a] patent grants its owner [29] the lawful right to exclude others" (ibid.) and that "a patentee can choose to exclude everyone from producing the patented article or can choose to be the sole supplier itself … ." (Id. at p. 1305.) "Unlike some kinds of agreements that are per se illegal whether engaged in by [*460] patentees or anyone else, such as tying or price-fixing, the exclusion of infringing competition is the essence of the patent grant. … '[W]hen patents are involved … the exclusionary effect of the patent must be considered before making any determination as to whether the alleged restraint is per se illegal.' " (Id. at p. 1306, quoting Cipro I, supra, 261 F.Supp.2d at p. 249.)

CA(7)[] (7) The Valley Drug court noted that HN8[] the only time the United States Supreme Court "has addressed the circumstances under which the patent immunity from antitrust liability can be pierced, it held that the antitrust claimant must prove that the patentee enforced a patent with the knowledge that the patent was procured by fraud on the Patent Office." (Valley Drug, supra, 344 F.3d at p. 1307, citing Walker Process, supra, 382 U.S. at p. 177.) "Good faith procurement furnishes a complete defense to the antitrust claim. [Citation.] Justice [30] Harlan's concurrence [in Walker Process] explained that the effect of antitrust liability on the incentives for innovation and disclosure created by the patent regime must be taken into account when a court considers whether a patentee is stripped of its immunity from the antitrust laws: 'It is well also to recognize the rationale underlying this decision, aimed of course at achieving a suitable accommodation in this area between the differing policies of the patent and antitrust laws. To hold, as we do, that private suits may be instituted under § 4 of the Clayton Act to recover damages for Sherman Act monopolization knowingly practiced under the guise of a patent procured by deliberate fraud, cannot well be thought to impinge upon the policy of the patent laws to encourage inventions and their disclosure. Hence, as to this class of improper patent monopolies, antitrust remedies should be allowed room for full play. On the other hand, to hold, as we do not, that private antitrust suits might also reach monopolies practiced under patents that for one reason or another may turn out to be voidable under one or more of the numerous technicalities attending the issuance of a patent, [31] might well chill the disclosure of inventions through the obtaining of a patent because of fear of the vexations or punitive consequences of treble-damage suits. Hence, this private antitrust remedy should not be deemed to reach § 2 monopolies carried on under a nonfraudulently procured patent.' " (Valley Drug, supra, 344 F.3d at p. 1307, quoting Walker Process, supra, 382 U.S. at pp. 179–180 (conc. opn. of Harlan, J.).)

Further addressing the need to balance the conflicting policies behind patent law and antitrust law, the Valley Drug court noted that although patent and antitrust [179] laws necessarily clash, " 'the two regimes seek the same object: the welfare of the public … [.] Antitrust law forbids certain agreements tending to restrict output and elevate prices and profits above the competitive level. Patent law also serves the interests of consumers by protecting invention against prompt imitation in order to encourage more innovation than would otherwise occur.' " (Valley Drug, supra, 344 F.3d at pp. 1307–1308.) The Valley Drug court concluded that the fact the district court found the [*461] patent at issue in that case to be invalid alone was "insufficient to render the patent's potential exclusionary [32] effects irrelevant to the antitrust analysis." (Id. at p. 1309.)

The plaintiffs in Valley Drug argued that patent rights do not include the right to pay infringers—an argument the Valley Drug court viewed as implying "that any exclusion resulting from payment rather than judicial enforcement is not protected from per se antitrust liability by the patent laws." (Valley Drug, supra, 344 F.3d at p. 1309.) The court rejected that argument based on the important role settlement plays in the enforcement of patent rights, stating: "Appellees have not explained why a monetary payment as part of a patent litigation settlement should be flatly prohibited as a per se violation, particularly where the alleged infringer has not yet caused the patentee any harm and the patentee does not have a damages claim to bargain with. [Citations.] [¶] We cannot conclude that the exclusionary effects of the Agreements not to enter the market were necessarily greater than the exclusionary effects of the '207 patent merely because Abbott paid Geneva and Zenith in return for their respective agreements. If Abbott had a lawful right to exclude competitors, it is not obvious that competition was limited more than [33] that lawful degree by paying potential competitors for their exit. The failure to produce the competing terazosin drug, rather than the payment of money, is the exclusionary effect, and litigation is a much more costly mechanism to achieve exclusion, both to the parties and to the public, than is settlement. [Citation.] To hold that an ostensibly reasonable settlement of patent litigation gives rise to per se antitrust liability if it involves any payment by the patentee would obviously chill such settlements, thereby increasing the cost of patent enforcement and decreasing the value of patent protection generally. We are not persuaded that such a per se rule would be an appropriate accommodation of the competing policies of the patent and antitrust laws." (Ibid.)

Although the Valley Drug court stated that the size of a reverse or "exit" payment may raise suspicion that the settling parties lacked faith in the validity of the patent in question, the court also noted that "[g]iven the asymmetries of risk and large profits at stake, even a patentee confident in the validity of its patent may pay a potential infringer a substantial sum in settlement." (Valley Drug, supra, 344 F.3d at p. 1310.) [34] As an example, the court noted the $398 million that Bayer paid Barr in the Cipro settlement even "though the ['444] patent was subsequently approved by the PTO on reexamination and unsuccessfully challenged in court three times." (Ibid., citing Cipro I, supra, 261 F.Supp.2d at p. 234.)

The Valley Drug court, in remanding the case to the district court, concluded that neither per se analysis nor the rule of reason was an [*462] appropriate approach for determining whether the settlement at issue violated antitrust law, stating: "Rule of reason and per se analysis are both aimed at assessing the anticompetitive effects of particular conduct; what is required here is an analysis of the extent to which antitrust liability might undermine the encouragement of innovation and disclosure, [180] or the extent to which the patent laws prevent antitrust liability for such exclusionary effects." (Valley Drug, supra, 344 F.3d at p. 1311, fn. 27.)

In Schering-Plough Corp. v. FTC (11th Cir. 2005) 402 F.3d 1056 (Schering), the Eleventh Circuit Court of Appeals vacated a decision by the Federal Trade Commission (FTC) finding that Hatch-Waxman settlements between branded drug manufacturer Schering-Plough Corporation [35] (Schering) and generic manufacturers Upsher-Smith Laboratories, Inc. (Upsher) and ESI Lederle, Inc. (ESI), violated the FTC Act (15 U.S.C. § 41 et seq.) and the Sherman Act. (402 F.3d at p. 1062.) Schering manufactured and marketed an extended release potassium chloride product called K-Dur 20, and owned a formulation patent on the extended-release coating that surrounds the potassium chloride on the product. [*463] (Schering, supra, 402 F.3d at p. 1058.) Upsher filed an ANDA IV seeking FDA approval of a generic version of K-Dur 20 and Schering filed a patent infringement suit against Upsher. (Id. at pp. 1058–1059.) Schering and Upsher entered into a settlement of the infringement suit that included Schering's agreeing to an early entry date for Upsher's generic version of K-Dur 20, and Upsher's granting Schering licenses to market five other Upsher products, including a time-release niacin product used to reduce cholesterol. (Id. at p. 1059.) The settlement involved a "three-part license deal, which called for Schering to pay [Upsher] (1) $60 million in initial royalty fees; (2) $10 million in milestone royalty payments; and (3) 10% or 15% royalties on sales." (Id. at p. 1060.)

ESI also sought FDA approval for a generic version [36] of K-Dur 20 and was sued by Schering for patent infringement. (Schering, supra, 402 F.3d at p. 1060.) Schering and ESI entered into a settlement agreement under which Schering allowed ESI to market its competing generic three years before Schering's patent expired (ibid.) and "agreed to pay ESI a $5 million noncontingent payment, representing legal fees, and an additional $10 million contingent on ESI's FDA approval. Schering and ESI also entered into a contemporaneous license agreement whereby ESI granted Schering the licenses to [two ESI drugs] in exchange for $15 million." (Id. at p. 1061, fn. 8.)

The FTC filed an administrative complaint challenging the legality of the settlements under the FTC Act and the Sherman Act, and the complaint was tried before an administrative law judge (ALJ) who rejected the FTC's theories that the settlement agreements at issue were anticompetitive. (Schering, supra, 402 F.3d at p. 1061.) Noting that the FTC's theories required either a presumption that Schering's patent in question was invalid or that Upsher's and ESI's generic products did not infringe it, the ALJ ruled that the presumptions had no basis in law or fact. (Ibid.) The ALJ found that [37] the fact the settlements included payments did not make them anticompetitive per se. "Rather, the strength of the patent itself and its exclusionary power needed to be assessed. The [ALJ's] decision highlighted the FTC's failure to prove that, absent a payment, either better settlement agreements or litigation results would have effected an earlier entry date for the generics. Finally, the ALJ found no proof that Schering maintained an illegal monopoly within the relevant … market." (Id. at pp. 1061–1062.)

On appeal of the ALJ's decision to the full commission (Commission), the Commission reversed the ALJ, ruling the settlements included agreements to defer generic entry dates that injured competition and consumers. (Schering, supra, 402 F.3d at p. 1062.) Regarding the settlement payments, "the [181] Commission determined that neither the $60 million to Upsher nor the $30 million to ESI represented legitimate consideration for the licenses granted by Upsher or ESI's ability to secure FDA approval of its generic. Consequently, the Commission prohibited settlements under which the generic receives anything of value and agrees to defer its own research, development, production or sales activities." (Id. at p. 1062, [38] fn. omitted.)

CA(8)[] (8) The Schering court noted that both the ALJ and the Commission applied the rule of reason in analyzing the Schering settlements, albeit under two different methodologies. (Schering, supra, 402 F.3d at p. 1064.) Following Valley Drug, the court stated: "We think that neither the rule of reason nor the per se analysis is appropriate in this context. We are bound by our decision in Valley Drug where we held HN9[] both approaches to be ill-suited for an antitrust analysis of patent cases because they seek to determine whether the challenged conduct had an anticompetitive effect on the market. [Citation.] By their nature, patents create an environment of exclusion, and consequently, cripple competition. The anticompetitive effect is already present. 'What is required here is an analysis of the extent to which antitrust liability might undermine the encouragement of innovation and disclosure, or the extent to which the patent laws prevent antitrust liability for such exclusionary effects.' [Citation.] Therefore, in line with Valley Drug, we think the proper analysis of antitrust liability requires an examination of: (1) the scope of the exclusionary potential of the patent; (2) the extent [39] to which the agreements exceed that scope; and (3) the resulting anticompetitive effects." (Schering, supra, 402 F.3d at pp. 1065–1066, fn. omitted.)

CA(9)[] (9) The Schering court noted that HN10[] "[a]lthough the exclusionary power of a patent may seem incongruous with the goals of antitrust law, a delicate [*464] balance must be drawn between the two regulatory schemes. Indeed, application of antitrust law to markets affected by the exclusionary statutes set forth in patent law cannot discount the rights of the patent holder. [Citation.] … Therefore, a patent holder does not incur antitrust liability when it chooses to exclude others from producing its patented work." (Schering, supra, 402 F.3d at p. 1067.) "What patent law does not do, however, is extend the patentee's monopoly beyond its statutory right to exclude." (Ibid.)

CA(10)[] (10) The Schering court also addressed the policy favoring settlement, stating: HN11[] "The general policy of the law is to favor the settlement of litigation, and the policy extends to the settlement of patent infringement suits. [Citations.] Patent owners should not be in a worse position, by virtue of the patent right, to negotiate and settle surrounding lawsuits. We find the terms of the settlement [40] to be within the patent's exclusionary power, and 'reflect a reasonable implementation' of the protections afforded by patent law." (Schering, supra, 402 F.3d at p. 1072.)

In considering whether the settlements at issue had anticompetitive effects—i.e., were an " 'unfair method of competition' " (Schering, supra, 402 F.3d at p. 1072)—the Schering court elaborated on the policy favoring settlement of litigation and the detriment that would result from a rule prohibiting reverse payment settlements in patent litigation. The court reiterated that "[t]he efficiency-enhancing objectives of a patent settlement are clear, and '[p]ublic policy strongly favors settlement of disputes without litigation.' " (Id. at pp. 1072–1073.) The court stated that "[t]he Commission's inflexible compromise-without-payment theory neglects to understand that '[r]everse payments are a natural by- [182] product of the Hatch-Waxman process.'[6] [Citation.] … A prohibition on reverse-payment settlements would 'reduce the incentive to challenge patents by reducing the challenger's [*465] settlement options should he be sued for infringement, and so might well be thought anticompetitive.' [Citation.] [¶] There is no question [41] that settlements provide a number of private and social benefits as opposed to the inveterate and costly effects of litigation. [Citation.] Patent litigation breeds a litany of direct and indirect costs, ranging from attorney and expert fees to the expenses associated with discovery compliance. Other costs accrue for a variety of reasons, be it the result of uncompromising legal positions, differing strategic objectives, heightened emotions, lawyer incompetence, or sheer moxie. [Citations.] [¶] Finally, the caustic environment of patent litigation may actually decrease product innovation by amplifying the period of uncertainty around the drug manufacturer's ability to research, develop, and market the patented product or allegedly infringing product." (Id. at pp. 1074–1075.)

The Schering court found that the settlement agreements at issue "fell well within the protections of the [subject] patent, and were therefore not illegal." (Schering, supra, 402 F.3d at p. 1076.) The court concluded: "Simply because a brand-name pharmaceutical company holding a patent paid its generic competitor money cannot be the sole basis for a violation of antitrust law. This alone underscores the need to evaluate the strength of the patent. Our conclusion, to a degree, and we hope that the FTC is mindful of this, reflects policy. Given the costs of lawsuits to the parties, the public problems associated with overcrowded court dockets, and the correlative public and private benefits of settlements, we fear and reject a rule of law that would automatically invalidate any agreement where a patent-holding pharmaceutical manufacturer [44] settles an infringement case by negotiating the generic's entry date, and, in an ancillary transaction, pays for other products licensed by the generic. Such a result does not represent the confluence of patent and antitrust law." (Ibid.)

[183] CA(11)[] (11) In the same month that Schering was decided, the district court in Cipro II granted defendant's motions for summary judgment and dismissal. As noted above, the Cipro II judgment was affirmed in Cipro III as to the indirect purchaser and advocacy group plaintiffs and Arkansas Carpenters as to the direct

[6] The Tamoxifen court explained that "reverse payments are particularly to be expected in the drug-patent context because the Hatch-Waxman Act created an environment that encourages them." (Tamoxifen, supra, 466 F.3d at p. 206.) The court noted that "under the Hatch-Waxman Act, the patent holder ordinarily brings suit shortly after the paragraph IV ANDA has been filed—before the filer has spent substantial sums [42] on the manufacturing, marketing, or distribution of the potentially infringing generic drug. The prospective generic manufacturer therefore has relatively little to lose in litigation precipitated by a paragraph IV certification beyond litigation costs and the opportunity for future profits from selling the generic drug. … [¶] Accordingly, a generic marketer has few disincentives to file an ANDA with a paragraph IV certification. The incentive [to file an ANDA IV], by contrast, may be immense: the profits it will likely garner in competing with the patent holder without having invested substantially in the development of the drug, and, in addition, possible entitlement to a 180-day period (to be triggered at its inclination) during which it would be the exclusive seller of the generic drug in the market." (Id. at pp. 206–207, fn. omitted.) On the other hand, "[t]he patent holder's risk if it loses the resulting patent suit is correspondingly large: It will be stripped of its patent monopoly. At the same time, it stands to gain little from winning other than the continued protection of its lawful monopoly over the manufacture and sale of the drug in question. [¶] 'Hatch-Waxman essentially [43] redistributes the relative risk assessments and explains the flow of settlement funds and their magnitude. Because of the Hatch-Waxman scheme, [the generic challengers] gain[] considerable leverage in patent litigation: the exposure to liability amount[s] to litigation costs, but pale[s] in comparison to the immense volume of generic sales and profits.' " (Id. at p. 207.)

purchaser plaintiffs. The Cipro III court stated: "[I]n cases such as this, HN12[] wherein all anticompetitive effects of the settlement agreement are within the exclusionary power of the patent, the outcome is the same whether the court begins its analysis under antitrust law by applying a rule of reason approach to evaluate the anti-competitive effects, or under patent law by analyzing the right to exclude afforded by the patent. The essence of the [*466] inquiry is whether the agreements restrict competition beyond the exclusionary zone of the patent. This analysis has been adopted by the Second and the Eleventh Circuits and by the district court below and we find [45] it to be completely consistent with Supreme Court precedent." (Cipro III, supra, 544 F.3d at p. 1336, citing Walker Process, supra, 382 U.S. at pp. 175–177 [although the Sherman Act may be violated when a patent is procured by fraud, a patent is an exception to the general rule against monopolies].)

CA(12)[] (12) The Cipro III court concluded: HN13[] "Pursuant to statute, a patent is presumed to be valid, [35 United States Code section 282], and patent law bestows the patent holder with 'the right to exclude others from profiting by the patented invention.' [Citation.] A settlement is not unlawful if it serves to protect that to which the patent holder is legally entitled—a monopoly over the manufacture and distribution of the patented invention. [Citation.] Thus, the district court correctly concluded that there is no legal basis for restricting the right of a patentee to choose its preferred means of enforcement and no support for the notion that the Hatch-Waxman Act was intended to thwart settlements. [Citation.] … [I]f 'there is nothing suspicious about the circumstances of a patent settlement, then to prevent a cloud from being cast over the settlement process a third party should not be permitted [46] to haul the parties to the settlement over the hot coals of antitrust litigation.' " (Cipro III, supra, 544 F.3d at p. 1337, quoting Asahi Glass Co. v. Pentech Pharmaceuticals, Inc. (N.D.Ill. 2003) 289 F.Supp.2d 986, 992.) Accordingly, the Cipro III court found "the analysis by the district court to be fully supported in law and to demonstrate that it was cognizant of the legal standards applied by the regional circuits and government agencies in addressing agreements involving exclusion payments in the context of the Hatch-Waxman Act." (Cipro III, supra, 544 F.3d at p. 1337.)

CA(13)[] (13) The Arkansas Carpenters court likewise affirmed the Cipro II judgment based on the holding in Tamoxifen and other courts that HN14[] "the right to enter into reverse exclusionary payment agreements fall[s] within the terms of the exclusionary grant conferred by the branded manufacturer's patent." (Arkansas Carpenters, supra, 604 F.3d at p. 105.) The Arkansas Carpenters court followed the Tamoxifen court's analysis that a reverse payment agreement settling patent litigation between a branded drug manufacturer and a generic drug manufacturer does "not exceed the scope of the patent where (1) there [is] no restriction on marketing [47] non-infringing products; (2) a generic version of the branded drug would necessarily infringe the branded firm's patent; and (3) the agreement [does] not bar other generic manufacturers from challenging the patent." (Arkansas Carpenters, supra, 604 F.3d at p. 106, citing Tamoxifen, supra, 466 F.3d at pp. 213–215.)

[184] CA(14)[] (14) We agree with the reasoning of these cases and conclude that it applies equally to antitrust claims under the Cartwright Act. HN15[] Under the [*467] Cartwright Act, as under the Sherman Act, the "illegal per se" designation is reserved for agreements or practices that have a pernicious effect on competition and lack any redeeming virtue. (Corwin v. Los Angeles Newspaper Service Bureau, Inc. (1971) 4 Cal.3d 842, 853 [94 Cal. Rptr. 785, 484 P.2d 953]; see Morrison v. Viacom, Inc. (1998) 66 Cal.App.4th 534, 540 [78 Cal. Rptr. 2d 133]; MacManus v. A. E. Realty Partners (1983) 146 Cal.App.3d 275, 285 [194 Cal. Rptr. 567].) Considering the important public policies underlying patent law (Valley Drug, supra, 344 F.3d at pp. 1307–1308) and favoring the settlement of patent litigation (Schering, supra, 402 F.3d at pp. 1074–1075) and the fact that the Cipro agreements did not restrain competition outside the exclusionary zone of the '444 patent, we cannot view the Cipro agreements [48] as lacking any redeeming virtue. Accordingly, we conclude they are not unlawful per se.

We further conclude that the Cipro agreements do not violate the Cartwright Act under rule-of-reason analysis or the analysis the Eleventh Circuit Court of Appeals held to be applicable to settlements of Hatch-Waxman litigation in Valley Drug and Schering, which requires "examination of: (1) the scope of the exclusionary potential of the patent; (2) the extent to which the agreements exceed that scope; and (3) the resulting anticompetitive effects." (Schering, supra, 402 F.3d at pp. 1065–1066, fn. omitted.) We find the reasoning of the federal cases discussed above regarding the legality of settlements of Hatch-Waxman patent litigation to be sound and applicable to plaintiffs' cause of action under the Cartwright Act. We agree with the Cipro III court that because a patent is presumed to be valid and gives the patent holder the right to exclude others from marketing the patented invention, a settlement of patent infringement litigation "is not unlawful if it serves to protect that to which the patent holder is legally entitled—a [49] monopoly over the manufacture and distribution of the patented invention." (Cipro III, supra, 544 F.3d at p. 1337.) Therefore, in accordance with Cipro II and Tamoxifen, we conclude that unless a patent was procured by fraud, or a suit for its enforcement was objectively baseless, a settlement of the enforcement suit does not violate the Cartwright Act if the settlement restrains competition only within the scope of the patent. (Tamoxifen, supra, 466 F.3d at p. 213; Cipro II, supra, 363 F.Supp.2d at p. 535.)

The principle that an agreement is not unlawful under California and federal antitrust law if it restrains competition only within the exclusionary scope of a patent is reflected in Fruit Machinery Co. v. F. M. Ball & Co. (1953) 118 Cal.App.2d 748 [258 P.2d 852] (Fruit Machinery). In Fruit Machinery, the plaintiff licensee of a patent holder successfully sued the defendant for breach of a contractual obligation to pay plaintiff royalties for use of a patented machine, and the defendant claimed it was absolved of that obligation because, among other reasons, the plaintiff had created a monopoly in violation of state and federal antitrust law. (Fruit Machinery, supra, 118 [*468] Cal.App.2d at pp. 750, 760.) In [50] rejecting that claim, the Fruit Machinery court noted that the licensing arrangement in question was not "beyond the scope of the patent rights and within the proscription of the antitrust laws … ." (Id. at p. 762.) The court noted it would not "be legally improper or incompetent for the patentee, his exclusive licensee, and the latter's sublicensees, by agreements such as these parties have made, to give themselves a commercial [185] advantage over others in industry. The very purpose of the patent law is to encourage inventive effort by according the inventor and his assigns control over the invention and protection in the exercise of the rights accorded him as patentee. Defendant has not shown that the parties, in executing and carrying out the sublicense agreement in suit, exercised rights or powers not accorded them by the patent law or abused any rights or powers accorded them by that law." (Ibid., italics added.) The Fruit Machinery court found various antitrust law decisions cited by the defendant to be inapplicable, noting that "[t]he greater number of them dealt with situations in which no patent rights were involved. In those in which the exercise of patent rights was involved, [51] it appeared that the patentee or his assignee went beyond that which was necessary or incidental to the scope of his patent and brought himself within the proscription of the antitrust laws." (Fruit Machinery, supra, 118 Cal.App.2d at pp. 762–763.)

Plaintiffs and amici curiae[7] focus on the reverse exclusionary payment or pay-for-delay aspect of the Cipro settlement in arguing that the settlement violates antitrust law. Plaintiffs argue that Hatch-Waxman litigation can and should be settled without reverse payments. However, we agree with the Valley Drug court's view that deeming an ostensibly reasonable settlement of patent litigation illegal per se under antitrust law if the settlement "involves any payment by the patentee would obviously chill such settlements, thereby increasing the cost of patent enforcement and decreasing the value of patent protection generally." (Valley Drug, supra, 344 F.3d at p. 1309.) As the Schering court noted, "the size of the payment, or the mere presence of a payment, should not dictate the availability of a settlement remedy. Due to the 'asymmetrics of risk and large profits at stake, even a patentee confident in the validity of its patent may pay a potential [52] infringer a substantial sum in settlement.' " (Schering, supra, 402 F.3d at p. 1075, quoting Valley Drug, supra, 344 F.3d at p. 1310.)

CA(15)[] (15) We agree with the Schering court's observation that reverse payment settlements are a natural byproduct of patent litigation under the Hatch-Waxman Act and that a rule prohibiting them could harm competition by reducing the incentive to challenge patents by reducing the challenger's [*469] settlement options in a suit for infringement. (Schering, supra, 402 F.3d at pp. 1074–1075.) Emphasizing the private and social benefits that the settlement of patent litigation provides, the Schering court appropriately concluded thatHN16[] "[s]imply because a brand-name pharmaceutical company holding a patent paid its generic competitor money cannot be the sole basis for a violation of antitrust law." (Id. at p. 1076.)

[7] A group of professors filed an amici curiae brief entitled: "Brief Amici Curiae of 78 Intellectual Property Law, Antitrust Law, Economics, and Business Professors in Support of Appellant."

Plaintiffs and amici curiae point to In re Cardizem CD Antitrust Litigation (6th Cir. 2003) 332 F.3d 896 (Cardizem) as showing a conflict in the federal circuits regarding the legality [53] of reverse payment settlements of Hatch-Waxman patent litigation. In that case the district court found that a reverse-payment settlement between branded drug manufacturer HMR and generic manufacturer Andrx Pharmaceuticals, Inc., was illegal per se and the Cardizem court affirmed. However, the Cardizem court noted that in condemning the HMR/Andrx agreement, the district court " 'emphasized that the [186] agreement … restrained Andrx from marketing other bioequivalent or generic versions of Cardizem that were not at issue in the pending litigation … . Thus, the court found that the agreement's restrictions extended to noninfringing and/or potentially noninfringing versions of generic Cardizem.' " (332 F.3d at p. 908, fn. 13, quoting Cipro I, supra, 261 F.Supp.2d at p. 242.)

In other words, the reverse payment settlement in Cardizem restrained competition beyond the exclusionary zone of the subject patent. As the Cipro III court noted, "although the Sixth Circuit found a per se violation of the antitrust laws in In re Cardizem, the facts of that case are distinguishable from this case and from the other circuit court decisions. In particular, the settlement in that case included, in addition [54] to a reverse payment, an agreement by the generic manufacturer to not relinquish its 180-day exclusivity period, thereby delaying the entry of other generic manufacturers. [Citation.] Furthermore, the agreement provided that the generic manufacturer would not market non-infringing versions of the generic drug. [Citation.] Thus, the agreement clearly had anticompetitive effects outside the exclusion zone of the patent." (Cipro III, supra, 544 F.3d at p. 1335, italics added.)[8] We further note that unlike the Valley Drug, Schering and Tamoxifen courts, and the trial and appellate courts in the federal Cipro litigation, the Cardizem court did not consider, much less attempt to balance, the competing policies underlying antitrust law and patent law or address the policy favoring settlement of litigation.

Contrary to amici curiae's assertion that "[t]he Second Circuit rule endorsed by the trial court is far outside the mainstream of judicial … analysis [*470] of exclusionary settlements," [55] every reported decision to date addressing the legality of a reverse payment settlement of Hatch-Waxman litigation that does not restrain competition beyond the exclusionary scope of the patent has concluded that the settlement does not violate antitrust law. We conclude that because the Cipro agreements undisputedly did not restrain competition beyond the exclusionary scope of the '444 patent, they do not violate the Cartwright Act.[9]

II. Sham Litigation Claim

CA(16)[] (16) Plaintiffs contend that even if the Cipro settlement does not violate California law unless the '444 patent is shown to have been procured [56] by fraud or a suit for its enforcement is shown to be objectively baseless, the court erred in granting summary judgment because there is a triable issue of fact as to whether Bayer's patent infringement action against Barr was an objectively baseless or "sham" lawsuit. HN17[] "To prove sham litigation, a plaintiff must show (1) 'the lawsuit [to] be objectively baseless in the sense that no reasonable litigant could realistically expect success on the merits,' and (2) that the litigant's 'subjective motivation' for bringing the action [187] was a sham seeking to conceal a knowing attempt to interfere with a competitor." (Cipro II, supra, 363 F.Supp.2d at p. 547, quoting Professional Real Estate Investors, Inc. v. Columbia Pictures Industries, Inc. (1993) 508 U.S. 49, 60–61 [123 L. Ed. 2d 611, 113 S. Ct. 1920].) Plaintiffs' position on appeal appears to be that they could show Bayer's patent infringement suit was objectively baseless based on evidence of Bayer's inequitable conduct in procuring the '444 patent—an issue they contend was not litigated in Bayer's suits against generic manufacturers for infringement of the '444 patent following the Cipro settlement.

[8] The Cipro III court added: "To the extent that the Sixth Circuit may have found a per se antitrust violation based solely on the reverse payments, we respectfully disagree." (Cipro III, supra, 544 F.3d at p. 1335.)

[9] We acknowledge that amici curiae, the FTC, and the Department of Justice have advocated various approaches under which reverse payment settlements of patent infringement litigation under the Hatch-Waxman Act could be deemed to violate antitrust law even when they do not restrain competition beyond the exclusionary scope of a patent. However, considering the necessity of maintaining a proper balance between the competing policies underlying patent law and antitrust law, we believe that any rule prohibiting such settlements of Hatch-Waxman litigation should be made by Congress rather than the courts.

Bayer argues, and the trial court ruled, that plaintiffs' sham litigation [57] claim was not a proper basis for opposing defendants' summary judgment motions because it was not pleaded in plaintiffs' second amended complaint. The trial court further ruled that "[e]ven if such allegations were included in the [second amended complaint], there is no evidence or legal support the suit was objectively baseless or was a sham." The trial court quoted the Cipro II court's finding that "Bayer's success in its [patent infringement] litigations against Schein, Mylan and Carlsbad forecloses any argument that its lawsuits were shams." (Cipro II, supra, 363 F.Supp.2d at p. 547.) [*471]

Regarding plaintiffs' inequitable conduct claim, the trial court ruled: "Plaintiffs cannot meet the objectively baseless standard by resorting to allegations of inequitable conduct since the [second amended complaint] does not allege inequitable conduct, much less that Bayer's infringement suit against Barr was objectively baseless or a sham. Even if there were such allegations, inequitable conduct is only an equitable defense to a patent infringement suit which, if proven, can render the entire patent unenforceable. [Citation.] As such, Bayer's alleged inequitable conduct in procuring the patent is [58] not relevant to the case at hand as it pertains to [p]laintiffs' antitrust claims." The trial court also decided that the "determination of … inequitable conduct would involve substantial questions of patent law, which this Court does not have jurisdiction to decide."

It is difficult to fault the trial court's ruling that "[p]laintiffs failed to allege that Bayer's infringement suit was objectively baseless, [or] was sham litigation … and [p]laintiffs cannot defeat the motion for summary judgment by doing so now." It is well settled that HN18[] "the pleadings set the boundaries of the issues to be resolved at summary judgment. [Citations.] A 'plaintiff cannot bring up new, unpleaded issues in his or her opposing papers. [Citation.]' [Citations.] A summary judgment or summary adjudication motion that is otherwise sufficient 'cannot be successfully resisted by counterdeclarations which create immaterial factual conflicts outside the scope of the pleadings; counterdeclarations are no substitute for amended pleadings.' [Citation.] Thus, a plaintiff wishing 'to rely upon unpleaded theories to defeat summary judgment' must move to amend the complaint before the hearing." (Oakland Raiders v. National Football League (2005) 131 Cal.App.4th 621, 648 [32 Cal. Rptr. 3d 266].)

It [59] is a stretch to interpret the second amended complaint as raising the issue of whether Bayer's patent infringement suit against Barr was objectively baseless due to inequitable conduct or for any other reason. The allegations of the second amended complaint reflect plaintiffs' theory that the Cipro agreements injure competition in violation of the Cartwright Act regardless of the validity of Bayer's '444 patent or the merits of its infringement suit against Barr, and merely suggest that the '444 patent might have been ruled [188] invalid but for the Cipro settlement. The second amended complaint alleges that the patent holder and ANDA IV filer "must be adversaries" and that "the former presumes the patent is valid, enforceable and infringed, while the latter must assert that the patent is invalid, unenforceable and/or not infringed." Thus, plaintiffs' allegations that Barr asserted the patent was invalid or unenforceable do not constitute an allegation by plaintiffs that Bayer's infringement suit was baseless; they merely reflect that Barr assumed the adversarial role it was required to assume in filing an ANDA IV. The closest the second amended complaint comes to expressly alleging that [60] Bayer's infringement suit lacked merit is the allegation that [*472] "[b]ut for the Cipro Agreements and other agreements between Bayer and Barr: … the finder-of-fact in the patent litigation could have found that the 444 patent was invalid, unenforceable or not infringed."[10] (Italics & underscoring added.) This allegation, which essentially avers that Bayer might have lost its infringement suit had it been litigated to completion, is not reasonably construed as an allegation that the suit was objectively baseless or a sham.

CA(17)[] (17) In any event, assuming the complaint sufficiently pleads the claim that Bayer's patent infringement suit was objectively baseless due to inequitable conduct, we agree with the trial court and the Cipro II court that "Bayer's success in its [patent infringement] litigations against Schein, Mylan and Carlsbad forecloses any argument that its lawsuits were shams."[11] (Cipro II, supra, 363 F.Supp.2d at p. 547.) As the Cipro II court noted:

[10] Plaintiffs also suggest that Bayer's infringement suit would not have been successful by alleging that "[b]ut for the Cipro Agreements, generic ciprofloxacin would have been on the United States market by January 1997."

HN19[] " 'A winning lawsuit [61] is by definition a reasonable effort at petitioning for redress and therefore not a sham.' " (Ibid., quoting Professional Real Estate Investors, Inc. v. Columbia Pictures Industries, Inc., supra, 508 U.S. at p. 61, fn. 5.)

Plaintiffs assert that none of the challenges to the '444 patent by generic manufacturers following the Cipro settlement and the patent's reexamination involved the issue of [*473] Bayer's inequitable conduct. However, as the Cipro II court noted, "reexamination does not cure inequitable conduct, and the defense was available to all of the generic challengers." (Cipro II, supra, 363 F.Supp.2d at p. 547.) It seems highly unlikely that a generic manufacturer motivated to challenge the '444 patent would overlook or forgo a meritorious defense to Bayer's infringement suit that would render the suit objectively baseless.[12]

[189] CA(18)[] (18) Further, even if there is evidence creating a triable issue of fact as to whether Bayer's patent infringement suit was objectively baseless due to Bayer's inequitable conduct in procuring the '444 patent, we conclude that plaintiffs' sham litigation claim is preempted by federal patent law. HN20[] "The district courts [of the United States] [63] shall have original jurisdiction of any civil action arising under any Act of Congress relating to patents … . Such jurisdiction shall be exclusive of the courts of the states in patent … cases." (28 U.S.C. § 1338(a).) HN21[] Federal jurisdiction over cases arising under patent law " 'extend[s] only to those cases in which a well-pleaded complaint establishes either that federal patent law creates the cause of action or that the plaintiff's right to relief necessarily depends on resolution of a substantial question of federal patent law, in that patent law is a necessary element of one of the well-pleaded claims.' " (Holiday Matinee, Inc. v. Rambus, Inc. (2004) 118 Cal.App.4th 1413, 1422 [13 Cal. Rptr. 3d 766], italics added, quoting Christianson v. Colt Industries Operating Corp. (1988) 486 U.S. 800, 808–809 [100 L. Ed. 2d 811, 108 S. Ct. 2166].)

CA(19)[] (19) Plaintiffs' right to relief under the Cartwright Act and UCL, under their sham litigation theory, depends on the resolution of whether Bayer engaged in inequi [190] table conduct in the procurement of its '444 patent that rendered its infringement suit against Barr objectively baseless. HN22[] When a state law claim involves a patent holder's conduct in obtaining its patent, the claim is preempted by federal patent [64] law unless the plaintiff pleads and proves that the patent holder engaged in fraud before the PTO.[13] (Hunter Douglas, Inc. v. Harmonic Design, Inc. (Fed.Cir. 1998) 153 F.3d 1318, 1336–1337, overruled on other grounds in Midwest Industries, Inc. v. Karavan Trailers, Inc. (Fed.Cir. 1999) 175 F.3d 1356, 1358–1359; see also Nobelpharma AB v. Implant Innovations, Inc. (Fed.Cir. 1998) 141 F.3d 1059, 1068 ["[W]hether conduct in procuring or enforcing a patent is sufficient to strip a patentee of its immunity from the antitrust laws is to be decided as a question of Federal Circuit law." (Fn. omitted.)].) More specifically, a determination of whether alleged inequitable conduct in the procurement of a patent constitutes unfair competition is within the exclusive jurisdiction of the Federal Circuit Court of Appeals. (Lockwood v. Sheppard, Mullin, Richter & Hampton (2009) 173 Cal.App.4th 675, 686 [93 Cal. Rptr. 3d 220], citing Pro-Mold & Tool Co. v. Great Lakes Plastics (Fed.Cir. 1996) 75 F.3d 1568, 1574.) Thus, plaintiffs' claim that Bayer's infringement suit against Barr was objectively baseless due to inequitable conduct is preempted by federal patent law because it necessarily depends on resolution of a substantial [65] question of federal patent law—i.e., whether Bayer engaged in inequitable conduct in the procurement of its patent.

[11] The Cipro II court was addressing Bayer's motion "for summary judgment that Bayer's suits against Barr and the subsequent '444 Patent challengers were not sham litigation as a matter of law." (Cipro II, supra, 363 F.Supp.2d at p. 547.)

[12] The Cipro II court addressed this point, stating: "At oral argument, plaintiffs asserted that the court should give little [62] weight to these subsequent failed attacks because none of them raised what plaintiffs believe to be the most forceful attack on the '444 Patent—namely, inequitable conduct. Plaintiffs argue that this defense required extensive discovery and would take a long period of time to prepare and try, and that this explains why none of the subsequent challengers raised this issue. [¶] But this argument is not very convincing in light of the fact that one of the challenges—Carlsbad's, on the ground of obviousness—also required extensive discovery and resulted in a nine-day bench trial. It is difficult to accept the notion that Carlsbad abandoned a stronger argument because it would have presumably required a greater effort, especially since Barr had already done most of the preparatory work on the inequitable conduct issue." (Cipro II, supra, 363 F.Supp.2d at p. 530.)

[13] Plaintiffs emphasize on appeal that they are not asserting a claim of fraud on the PTO.

Plaintiffs argue they are not seeking to hold Bayer liable for its conduct in procuring or enforcing the '444 patent, but rather are challenging the "collusive payment" that ended the patent suit. However, it is immaterial to [*474] the federal jurisdiction issue that plaintiffs' claims do not directly seek to hold Bayer liable for inequitable conduct in procuring the '444 patent; plaintiffs' antitrust and unfair competition claims are preempted by federal patent law because a necessary element of those claims is that Bayer's infringement suit against Barr was objectively baseless due to Bayer's inequitable conduct in the procurement of the patent and, accordingly, the '444 patent was invalid. In their reply brief, plaintiffs similarly contend their claims "are not premised on Bayer's conduct before the [PTO]; they are premised on Bayer's conduct in settling its own patent case with a payment not to compete." (Original boldface.) However, because the payment in question did not restrain [66] competition beyond the exclusionary scope of the '444 patent, it does not subject defendants to antitrust liability unless plaintiffs can prove their claim that Bayer's infringement suit was objectively baseless, which claim is premised on Bayer's conduct before the patent office.

Plaintiffs argue that state courts have jurisdiction to determine patent law issues such as patent validity when such determination is ancillary and necessary to the main action, citing, among other authority, Mattel, Inc. v. Luce, Forward, Hamilton & Scripps (2002) 99 Cal.App.4th 1179, 1186 [121 Cal. Rptr. 2d 794]. The Mattel court concluded that a state claim against the law firm for malicious prosecution was not preempted by federal copyright law even though the defendant asserted that the underlying trademark infringement action could have been brought only in federal court. The court relied in part on cases holding that " 'if the suit is to enforce or to revoke a patent licensing or other similar agreement, it "is not a suit under the patent laws of the United States, and cannot be maintained in a federal court as such." [Citations.] It follows … that in an action in a state court based upon such an agreement, the state [67] court can, where it becomes necessary for it to do so in order to decide the case before it, pass upon the meaning, the scope, the validity, or the infringement of the patent.' " (Id. at p. 1187.) However, the present action is not a contract action seeking to enforce or revoke a patent licensing agreement; it arises from a settlement of patent litigation, and plaintiffs' sham litigation claim requires adjudication of the validity of the patent in the context of the determination of whether Bayer's patent infringement suit against Barr was objectively baseless.

Plaintiffs also rely on ClearPlay, Inc. v. Abecassis (Fed.Cir. 2010) 602 F.3d 1364, which involved state law claims by ClearPlay, Inc. (ClearPlay), a manufacturer of DVD players against patent holder Nissim Corp. (Nissim) arising from a patent licensing agreement that the parties entered into in settlement of a patent infringement suit that Nissim brought against ClearPlay. Nissim claimed that ClearPlay breached the license agreement and filed a motion to enforce the parties' settlement. While that motion was pending, Nissim informed retailers selling ClearPlay's products that the products were not licensed and the retailer's [68] continuing to sell them could [*475] constitute patent infringement. (Id. at pp. 1364–1365.) ClearPlay responded by bringing a state law action against Nissim that included claims for tortious interference with contractual relationships, tortious interference with potentially advantageous business relationships, breach of the license agreement by interfering with ClearPlay's business operations, breach of the covenant of good faith and fair dealing, and violation of Florida's Deceptive and Unfair Trade Practices Act. (602 F.3d at pp. 1365, 1367–1368.) The ClearPlay court decided that although "questions of patent infringement are addressed at various points in the communications that are at issue in ClearPlay's complaint, and while it is possible that patent law issues could arise in the course of litigating any one of ClearPlay's claims, it is equally clear that none of those claims necessarily turns on an issue of patent law. That is, in the case of each [191] asserted claim, there is at least one theory of relief that would not require the resolution of a patent law issue." (Id. at p. 1368.) ClearPlay is inapposite. Because the Cipro settlement did not restrain competition beyond the exclusionary [69] scope of the '444 patent, plaintiffs' claims here, unlike the state law claims in ClearPlay, necessarily turn on the patent law issue of whether Bayer's infringement suit was objectively baseless due to inequitable conduct.

CA(20)[] (20) Plaintiffs argue it is error to revisit the federal jurisdiction issue decided by the district court in In re Ciprofloxacin Hydrochloride Antitrust Litigation, supra, 166 F.Supp.2d 740, when it remanded this action to state court. However, as this court explained in Moreau v. San Diego Transit Corp. (1989) 210 Cal.App.3d 614 [258 Cal. Rptr. 647] (Moreau):HN23[] "In making its jurisdictional determination on a motion for remand, the [federal] district court looks no further than the complaint and the motion for removal. This limitation is one aspect of the 'well-pled complaint' rule which holds a plaintiff is the 'master' of his complaint and he may craft his causes of action, if he so desires, to exclude federal jurisdiction. Under the rule a federal question must appear from the complaint and not from any preemption defense which might be raised in state court and which might ultimately defeat the cause of action. [Citation.] [¶] However, an independent corollary to the 'well-pled complaint' [70] rule is the 'artful pleading' rule or the 'doctrine of complete preemption.' This doctrine states that while couched in state contract or tort terms, federal jurisdiction exists if the issues actually raise an essentially federal question. … [¶] When a federal court grants a motion for remand in the present context, it does nothing more than determine the complaint fails, either directly or by operation of the 'artful pleading' doctrine, to state a question arising under federal law. It does not determine whether a preemption defense can be successfully offered in state court when the entire case is considered." (Id. at pp. 620–621, italics added; accord, Ruiz v. Sysco Food Services (2004) 122 Cal.App.4th 520, 531–532 [18 Cal. Rptr. 3d 700] ["[T]he trial court was not required or allowed to accord any [*476] collateral estoppel effect to the federal district court's remand order, which was not a final judgment but rather a procedural order concerning the appropriate forum."]; McCormick v. Travelers Ins. Co. (2001) 86 Cal.App.4th 404 [103 Cal. Rptr. 2d 258] [after removal of state tort claims to federal court and federal court's subsequent remand to state court, state court properly granted defendant's motion for judgment on the pleadings [71] on the ground of federal preemption]; AT&T Communications, Inc. v. Superior Court (1994) 21 Cal.App.4th 1673, 1680 [26 Cal. Rptr. 2d 802] [doctrine of law of the case applies only to appellate court decisions and a remand ruling is a jurisdictional ruling, not a final judgment on the merits of a preemption defense]; United Airlines, Inc. v. Superior Court (1991) 234 Cal.App.3d 1085, 1090 [286 Cal. Rptr. 159] ["The exercise of a federal district court's unreviewable power to remand claims to state court … is not necessarily the same as a determination of whether those claims on their merits—even though not removable to federal court—would nonetheless be preempted by federal law if asserted by way of defense in state court."]; Coker v. Purdue Pharma Co. (Tenn.Ct.App., Nov. 30, 2006, No. W2005-02525-COA-R3-CV) 2006 Tenn.App.Lexis 757 [after federal court remanded case to state court on the ground the complaint's allegations of misrepresentation to the PTO in the procurement of a patent could be proven without resorting to question of [192] federal law, state trial court properly determined federal preemption was a valid defense to the misrepresentation claims and granted judgment on the pleadings].)[14]

[*477]

Plaintiffs' contention that there is a triable issue of fact as to whether Bayer's infringement suit against Barr was objectively baseless due to inequitable conduct in procuring the '444 patent is not a basis to reverse the judgment.

---

[14] Although it is not essential [72] to our preemption analysis, we note that the theory of liability alleged in plaintiffs' second amended complaint that caused the federal district court to remand this case to state court in In re Ciprofloxacin Hydrochloride Antitrust Litigation, supra, 166 F.Supp.2d 740 lacks merit, as the district court later acknowledged. The court remanded the case based on its conclusion "that plaintiffs have asserted at least one theory by which they may establish state antitrust violations without resorting to a determination of patent law. Plaintiffs' complaints allege there would have been generic competition in the market for ciprofloxacin prior to the expiration of Bayer's patent if Bayer had not reached an unreasonably anti-competitive agreement with Barr, HMR, and Rugby. … [Plaintiffs] asserted that, as a matter of fact, Bayer would have authorized Barr to distribute ciprofloxacin by granting Barr a license, or by other means, had Barr not agreed to drop its challenge to the validity of the '444 patent in exchange for large cash payments." (Id. at p. 748, citations omitted.)

This theory of liability fails because any restraint on competition resulting from Bayer's decision to enter into the Cipro agreements [73] instead of some other licensing agreement was within the exclusionary zone of the '444 patent and thus is not a basis for imposing antitrust or unfair competition liability on defendants. As the Cipro II court explained: "[P]laintiffs' assertion that Bayer's payment to Barr is anti-competitive because, without it, Bayer and Barr would have agreed on an earlier entry date for Barr or would have otherwise fashioned a more pro-competitive agreement must also fail. This assertion ignores the fact that, if defendants were within their rights (more specifically, the patent right) in reaching the settlement they did, consumers have no right to second-guess whether some different agreement would have been more palatable." (Cipro II, supra, 363 F.Supp.2d at p. 536.) Regarding its basis for remanding the case, the district court stated that "[u]pon further reflection, I have concluded that patent law imposes no such restriction against cash payments by a patent holder, and, accordingly, antitrust law does not impose such a restriction." (Id. at p. 536, fn. 21.) In other words, Bayer was not restricted by patent or antitrust law to settlement options more favorable to competition than the settlement [74] it reached.

To the extent a sham litigation claim is sufficiently pleaded in plaintiffs' second amended complaint, it arises from and is preempted by federal patent law.[15]

III. Unfair Competition and Common Law Monopoly Claims

CA(21)[] (21) Our conclusion that defendants are not liable under the Cartwright Act for entering into the Cipro agreements is also dispositive of plaintiffs' causes of action for violation of the UCL and common law monopolization. “The purpose of federal and state antitrust laws is to protect and promote competition for the benefit of consumers. [Citations.] HN24[] Antitrust laws are designed to prohibit only unreasonable restraints of trade, meaning conduct that unreasonably [75] impairs competition and harms consumers. [Citations.] If the same conduct is alleged to be both an antitrust violation and an ‘unfair’ business act or practice for the same reason—because it unreasonably restrains competition and harms consumers—the determination that the conduct is not an unreasonable restraint of trade necessarily implies that the conduct is not [193] ‘unfair’ toward consumers. To permit a separate inquiry into essentially the same question under the unfair competition law would only invite conflict and uncertainty and could lead to the enjoining of procompetitive conduct.” (Chavez v. Whirlpool Corp. (2001) 93 Cal.App.4th 363, 375 [113 Cal. Rptr. 2d 175]; accord, Drum v. San Fernando Valley Bar Assn. (2010) 182 Cal.App.4th 247, 254 [106 Cal. Rptr. 3d 46] [conduct that is deemed reasonable and condoned under antitrust law does not violate the UCL].)

CA(22)[] (22) Regarding plaintiffs' cause of action for common law monopolization, it is questionable whether [*478] such a cause of action exists under California law. The federal district court in In re Intel Corp. Microprocessor Antitrust Litigation (D.Del. 2007) 496 F.Supp.2d 404 dismissed a common law monopolization claim on the ground that HN25[] “the common law tort of monopolization is not [76] cognizable under California law … .” (Id. at p. 420; accord, Lorenzo v. Qualcomm, Inc. (S.D.Cal. 2009) 603 F.Supp.2d 1291; Luxpro Corp. v. Apple, Inc. (W.D.Ark. 2009) 658 F.Supp.2d 921, 933.) To the extent such a cause of action is cognizable under California law, it fails for the same reason plaintiffs' UCL cause of action fails—i.e., because it is based on the same conduct alleged to be a violation of the Cartwright Act. Conduct that has been determined not to unreasonably restrain competition under statutory antitrust law cannot logically be deemed to unreasonably restrain competition under a common law monopolization theory.

The trial court properly granted summary judgment on plaintiffs' causes of action for violation of the UCL and common law monopolization as well as their cause of action for violation of the Cartwright Act. The court also properly ruled that its summary judgment ruling as to Bayer and the generic defendants was also dispositive as to Watson's summary judgment motion, since plaintiffs sought to hold Watson liable solely as a conspirator for the allegedly unlawful conduct of the other defendants.

IV. Evidentiary Objections

Plaintiffs contend the court erred by [77] not providing any explanation for overruling all of their evidentiary objections, relying on Nazir v. United Airlines, Inc. (2009) 178 Cal.App.4th 243, 254–257 [100 Cal. Rptr. 3d 296] in which the Court of Appeal held that the trial court abused its discretion by issuing a blanket ruling sustaining all but one of the defendants' 764 evidentiary objections in a summary judgment proceeding.

CA(23)[] (23) Here, the court did not sustain the evidentiary objections in question; it overruled them. In Reid v. Google, Inc. (2010) 50 Cal.4th 512, 534 [113 Cal. Rptr. 3d 327, 235 P.3d 988], the California Supreme Court held that HN26[] when a trial court ruling on a summary judgment motion “fails to rule expressly on specific evidentiary objections, it is presumed that the objections have been overruled, the trial court considered the evidence in ruling on the merits of the summary judgment motion, and the objections are preserved on appeal.” Thus, the trial court's blanket ruling overruling plaintiffs' evidentiary objections left plaintiffs in no worse a position than they would have been in if the court had failed to issue any ruling at all on the objections. The objections were preserved on appeal and plaintiffs were free to challenge the trial court's consideration of [78] specific items of objected-to evidence on appeal. Because plaintiffs have not argued that the admission of any specific evidence constituted prejudicial error, the court's ruling on plaintiffs' evidentiary objections provides [194] no basis to disturb the judgment.[16] [*479]

[15] We do not hold that the issue of whether a patent infringement suit is objectively baseless can never be decided by a state court; there may be cases where a suit can be shown to be objectively baseless without the necessity of resolving a substantial question of federal patent law.

DISPOSITION

The judgment is affirmed.

[16] We note that plaintiffs complain that the court improperly considered evidence concerning the litigation challenging the ’444 patent that occurred after the Cipro settlement and the reexamination of the patent. We do not find the admission of this evidence to be prejudicial, however, because the essential facts of those suits were established as undisputed by plaintiffs’ responses to Bayer's separate statement of undisputed facts in support of its motion for summary judgment (Nos. 29–33).

Opinion

[*766] POSNER, Circuit Judge. The plaintiff, Rose Acre, the nation's second-largest producer of eggs, has along with other egg producers been charged in a number of class action suits with conspiring to fix the price of eggs, in violation of section 1 of the Sherman Act. (It has been embroiled in antitrust litigation before, perhaps because it has been so successful. See A.A. Poultry Farms, Inc. v. Rose Acre Farms, Inc., 881 F.2d 1396 (7th Cir. 1989).) Other violations are charged as well in some of the class action suits, but they are similar to the Sherman Act violations and need not be discussed separately. The class actions [2] were consolidated and transferred for pretrial proceedings to the Eastern District of Pennsylvania, where they are pending. Rose Acre asked its liability insurers to defend it in the class action suits, arguing that the complaints sought damages for what Rose Acre's policies call "personal and advertising injury." As the policies are identical, differing only in the coverage period, to simplify this opinion we'll pretend there's only one insurer, one insurance policy, and, because the antitrust complaints do not differ from each other in any respect relevant to the appeal, one antitrust complaint.

The insurer (for remember we're pretending there's just one) refused to defend Rose Acre, on the ground that the antitrust complaint alleged nothing that could be regarded as "personal and advertising injury." This suit, a diversity suit governed by Indiana law, followed. The district court granted summary judgment in favor of the insurer.

The insurance policy defines "personal and advertising injury" as "injury . . . arising out of one or more of the following offenses," and a list of torts follows that includes "the use of another's advertising idea in your 'advertisement.'" We'll call this [3] coverage "advertising injury."

Rose Acre tries to connect its advertising to the antitrust suit in the following convoluted manner. The company belongs [*767] to United Egg Producers, Inc., the trade association of egg producers. The association publishes animal husbandry guidelines, see United Egg Producers, Animal Husbandry Guidelines for U.S. Egg Laying Flocks (2010 ed.), www.uepcertified.com/media/pdf/UEP-Animal-Welfare-Guidelines.pdf (visited Oct. 5, 2011), and permits producers who comply with its guidelines to market their eggs as "United Egg Producers Certified." Rose Acre does that, and it also advertises its compliance with the guidelines on its website, www.roseacre.com/ (visited Sept. 26, 2011), where it points out that it sells not only eggs produced by caged chickens, but also eggs produced by "free-roaming" chickens-chickens that are not caged (they have nests in their hen houses but are free to run around) and subsist on a vegetarian diet. (See the excerpt from the website at the end of this opinion.)

The website states (along with much else-including an answer to the question which came first, the chicken or the egg[*]) that "eggs from the 'Free-Roaming' farms cost much more [4] than regular eggs because the eggs must be gathered by hand from the individual hen's nest. All of our chickens are kept in a humane and friendly environment. Plenty of fresh water, fresh air, and fresh feed are available to each chicken at all times, with plenty of space for each chicken to move about and socialize with the other chickens." www.roseacre.com/eggfaq.html (visited Oct. 27, 2011). This statement could be thought intended to throw consumers suspicious of the high price of eggs laid by

[*] "Answers to 11 Frequently Asked Questions about Chickens," www.roseacre.com/eggfaq.html (visited Sept. 26, 2011): "11. Which came first, the chicken or the egg? Answer: According to the Bible, the chicken came first. 'And the evening and the morning were the fourth day. And God said, "Let the waters bring forth abundantly the moving creature that hath life, and [5] fowl that may fly above the earth in the open firmament of heaven.'" Genesis 1:19-20."

free-roaming chickens off the scent, and make them think the high price the result not of a conspiracy among egg producers but instead of the chickens' healthful and humane living conditions; those conditions increase labor costs (the eggs must be gathered by hand) and probably other costs as well, since the chickens have more space.

But that interpretation is not alleged in any of the 353 paragraphs of the antitrust complaint. The complaint doesn't mention Rose Acre's website, or any other advertising on defendants' websites; it doesn't quote the passage we quoted from the website about eggs from "free-roaming" chickens being more costly. It says that "Rose Acre has participated in and profited from UEP's and its [presumably the "its" is "Rose Acre's"] efforts to reduce supply and fix prices," that "Rose Acre has agreed to the conspiracy by selling UEP certified eggs," that "UEP Certified companies [such as Rose Acre] are permitted to display the UEP Certified logo on their packaging and to market their eggs as 'United Egg Producers Certified,'" and finally that "all UEP Certified eggs must also be marketed with the phrase 'Produced in Compliance with the United Egg Producers' Animal Husbandry Guidelines.'" But the antitrust complaint complains only about conspiring to fix the price of eggs from caged chickens, and nowhere does Rose Acre's website state that the cost of those eggs is increased by the measures taken to make the [6] chickens that lay them healthy and happy—though remember that it does say that all its chickens have a healthy and friendly environment, so perhaps there's a faint implication that all Rose Acre's eggs are more [*768] expensive than they would be if the company did not give more weight to its chickens' mobility and social opportunities than to the cost of their eggs.

But this suit would fail even if one could tease out of the antitrust complaint a charge that Rose Acre's advertising was in furtherance of the alleged antitrust conspiracy. Coverage of liability for an "offense" defined as "the use of another's advertising idea" in one's own advertising cannot extend to using another's advertising idea with that other's consent. Suppose Rose Acre published on its website the following ad, written by its director of marketing: "We are socialists, we abhor profits, and we sell all our eggs at cost." Although the ad might be thought in furtherance of the antitrust conspiracy, any antitrust liability that it created would not be "advertising injury" because the company's marketing director is not "another." What difference could it make if instead the ad had been written by Rose Acre's advertising [7] agency?

Antitrust liability, moreover, is a major business risk, especially for one of the largest companies in a major market. It is hardly likely that parties to an insurance contract would seek to cover such a serious risk indirectly through an "advertising injury" provision aimed at misappropriation and other intellectual-property torts.

It is a standard provision, as so many provisions in insurance policies are; it was drafted by ISO (Insurance Services Office, Inc.), a coalition of insurance companies that among other things drafts standardized insurance policies for its members and other insurance companies, see "Company Background," www.iso.com/About-ISO/ ISO-Services-for-Property-Casualty-Insurance/Company-Background.html (visited Oct. 27, 2011), including liability insurance policies. See Hartford Fire Ins. Co. v. California, 509 U.S. 764, 772, 113 S. Ct. 2891, 125 L. Ed. 2d 612 (1993). The provision, which has been approved by Indiana's insurance commissioner, replaces an earlier provision that defined advertising injury as "misappropriation of advertising ideas or style of doing business." 4 David A. Gauntlett, New Appleman on Insurance Law §§ 30.01(4)(a)(ii)(B)(3)-(C) (2011); State Farm Fire & Casualty Co. v. Steinberg, 393 F.3d 1226, 1231 n. 2 (11th Cir. 2004). [8] Rose Acre points out that "use" does not carry the pejorative connotation of "misappropriation." True; but the reason for the change of wording had nothing to do with Rose Acre's argument. The reason was that a conflict had developed in the courts over whether "misappropriation" was used in the policy in its common law sense, which does not include trademark infringement, or should be read in a broader, layperson's sense. Compare State Auto Property & Casualty Ins. Co. v. Travelers Indemnity Co., 343 F.3d 249, 255-57 (4th Cir. 2003) (North Carolina law), with Advance Watch Co., Ltd. v. Kemper National Ins. Co., 99 F.3d 795, 802-03 (6th Cir. 1996) (Michigan law); see also United States Golf Ass'n v. St. Andrews Systems, Data-Max, Inc., 749 F.2d 1028, 1034-35 (3d Cir. 1984); 2 J. Thomas McCarthy, McCarthy on Trademarks & Unfair Competition § 10:72, pp. 10-190 to 10-193. To resolve the conflict, ISO replaced "misappropriation" with "use" and, for good measure, added explicit coverage for trademark infringement. Gauntlett, supra, § (4)(a)(ii)(C).

This history makes clear that coverage is limited to liability to the "other" whose advertising idea is used by the insured without the "other's" [9] permission. That is what "misappropriation" is; and the question whether as used in an insurance policy it might embrace trademark infringement does not alter the understanding that using someone else's idea with that [*769] someone's consent is not misappropriation.

Furthermore, the policy does not apply to advertising injury that is "caused by or at the direction of the insured with the knowledge that the act [triggering liability] would violate the rights of another and would inflict 'personal and advertising injury'" or that "aris[es] out of a criminal act committed by or at the direction of any insured." HN1[] Participation in a conspiracy to violate federal antitrust law is both deliberate and criminal, and is thus excluded from coverage by both provisions. See Del Monte Fresh Produce, N.A., Inc. v. Transportation Ins. Co., 500 F.3d 640, 642-44 (7th Cir. 2007); Curtis-Universal, Inc. v. Sheboygan Emergency Medical Services, Inc., 43 F.3d 1119, 1123 (7th Cir. 1994); Trailer Marine Transport Corp. v. Chicago Ins. Co., 791 F. Supp. 809, 812 (N.D. Cal. 1992).

It is true as noted in the Curtis-Universal opinion that HN2[] if an insured asks its liability insurer to defend a suit that alleges conduct that [10] is potentially covered by the policy as well as conduct that is not, the insurer must defend the entire suit. 43 F.3d at 1122; see also Transamerica Ins. Services v. Kopko, 570 N.E.2d 1283, 1285 (Ind. 1991); Liberty Mutual Ins. Co. v. OSI Industries, Inc., 831 N.E.2d 192, 200 (Ind. App. 2005); Aearo Corp. v. American Int'l Specialty Lines Ins. Co., 676 F. Supp. 2d 738, 745 (S.D. Ind. 2009) (Indiana law). But the antitrust suit for which Rose Acre wants a defense makes no claim that the policy could be thought to cover.

We note finally that the Eleventh Circuit, in a case decided a week before the oral argument in this case, rejected an identical claim by a firm represented by Rose Acre's counsel in this case. Trailer Bridge, Inc. v. Illinois National Ins. Co., 657 F.3d 1135, 2011 U.S. App. LEXIS 19230, 2011 WL 4346579 (11th Cir. Sept. 19, 2011) (per curiam).

The judgment of the district court is

AFFIRMED.

MEMORANDUM OPINION AND ORDER

This case comes before the undersigned United States Magistrate Judge for review of Plaintiff's "Amended Complaint-Objection to Order of this Court" (Docket Entry 5), pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1915A(a) and (b). For the reasons that follow:

1) for each of the 33 "Counts" or "Claims" in the "Amended Complaint-Objection to Order of this Court" (see Docket Entry 5, ¶¶ 6-235) that Plaintiff wishes to pursue, he will be ordered to submit: A) a separate, new complaint; and B) either a $350.00 filing fee or an application to proceed as a pauper;

2) Plaintiff will be ordered to file a separate memorandum of not more than five pages with each new complaint as to "Count One" (id., ¶¶ 6-16), "Count Two" (id., ¶¶ 17-22), "Count Three" (id., ¶¶ 23-37), "Claim Four" (id., ¶¶ 38-45), "Claim Five" (id., ¶¶ 46-55), "Claim Seven" (id., ¶¶ 63-69), "Claim Eleven" (id., ¶¶ 86-93), "Claim Twelve" (id., ¶¶ 94-100), "Claim Thirteen" (id., ¶¶ 101-05), "Claim Twenty" (id., ¶¶ 142-47), "Claim Twenty One" (id., ¶¶ 148-52), or "Claim Twenty Five" (id., ¶¶ 169-77) of the "Amended [*2] Complaint-Objection to Order of this Court," and to show cause in each such memorandum why each such new complaint should not be transferred to another district via 28 U.S.C. § 1406(a);

3) Plaintiff will be ordered to file a separate memorandum of not more than five pages along with each new complaint as to "Claim Twenty Nine" (Docket Entry 5, ¶¶ 196-201), "Claim Thirty" (id., ¶¶ 202-07), or "Claim Thirty One" (id., ¶¶ 208-13) of the "Amended Complaint-Objection to Order of this Court," and to show cause in each such memorandum why each such new complaint should not be dismissed for want of subject matter jurisdiction due to Plaintiff's lack of standing;

4) Plaintiff will be ordered to file a separate memorandum of not more than five pages along with each new complaint as to "Claim Nine" (id., ¶¶ 79-82), "Claim Ten" (id., ¶¶ 83-85), "Claim Thirteen" (id., ¶¶ 101-05), "Claim Fourteen" (id., ¶¶ 106-10), "Claim Fifteen" (id., ¶¶ 111-20), "Claim Sixteen" (id., ¶¶ 121-25), "Claim Seventeen" (id., ¶¶ 126-32), "Claim Eighteen" (id., ¶¶ 133-36), "Claim Nineteen" (id., ¶¶ 137-41), "Claim Twenty" (id., ¶¶ 142-47), "Claim Twenty One" (id., ¶¶ 148-52), "Claim Twenty Two" (id., ¶¶ 153-57), "Claim [*3] Twenty Three" (id., ¶¶ 158-65), "Claim Twenty Five" (id., ¶¶ 169-77), "Claim Twenty Six" (id., ¶¶ 178-83), "Claim Twenty Nine" (id., ¶¶ 196-201), or "Claim Thirty Three" (id., ¶¶ 226-30) of the "Amended Complaint-Objection to Order of this Court," and to show cause in each such memorandum why each such new complaint should not be dismissed for want of subject matter jurisdiction due to the fact that each such "Claim" asserts only state law causes of action and lacks sufficient allegations to support the Court's exercise of diversity jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. § 1332(a);

5) Plaintiff will be ordered to include factual allegations as to the place(s) of occurrence of the events alleged in "Claim Six" (Docket Entry 5, ¶¶ 56-62), "Claim Eight" (id., ¶¶ 70-78), "Claim Nine" (id., ¶¶ 79-82), "Claim Ten" (id., ¶¶ 83-85), "Claim Fourteen" (id., ¶¶ 106-10), "Claim Fifteen" (id., ¶¶ 111-20), "Claim Sixteen" (id., ¶¶ 121-25), "Claim Seventeen" (id., ¶¶ 126-32), "Claim Eighteen" (id., ¶¶ 133-36), "Claim Nineteen" (id., ¶¶ 137-41), "Claim Twenty Two" (id., ¶¶ 153-57), "Claim Twenty Three" (id., ¶¶ 158-65), "Claim Twenty Four" (id., ¶¶ 166-68), "Claim Twenty Five" (id., ¶¶ 169-77), "Claim Twenty [*4] Six" (id., ¶¶ 178-83), "Claim Twenty Seven" (id., ¶¶ 184-87), "Claim Twenty Eight" (id., ¶¶ 188-95), "Claim Thirty Two" (id., ¶¶ 214-25), or "Claim Thirty Three" (id., ¶¶ 226-30) of the "Amended Complaint-Objection to Order of this Court," in each new complaint as to each such "Claim";

6) Plaintiff will be ordered to include factual allegations as to the time(s) of occurrence of events alleged in "Count Three" (id., ¶¶ 23-37), "Claim Four" (id., ¶¶ 38-45), "Claim Five" (id., ¶¶ 46-55), "Claim Six" (id., ¶¶ 56-62), "Claim Eight" (id., ¶¶ 70-78), "Claim Nine" (id., ¶¶ 79-82), "Claim Ten" (id., ¶¶ 83-85), "Claim Twelve" (id., ¶¶ 94-100), "Claim Thirteen" (id., ¶¶ 101-05), "Claim Fourteen" (id., ¶¶ 106-10), "Claim Fifteen" (id., ¶¶ 111-20), "Claim Sixteen" (id., ¶¶ 121-25), "Claim Seventeen" (id., ¶¶ 126-32), "Claim Eighteen" (id., ¶¶ 133-36), "Claim Nineteen" (id., ¶¶ 137-41), "Claim Twenty" (id., ¶¶ 142-47), "Claim Twenty One" (id., ¶¶ 148-52), "Claim Twenty Two" (id., ¶¶ 153-57), "Claim Twenty Three" (id., ¶¶ 158-65), "Claim Twenty Four" (id., ¶¶ 166-68), "Claim Twenty Six" (id., ¶¶ 178-83), "Claim Twenty Eight" (id., ¶¶ 188-95), "Claim Thirty Two" (id., ¶¶ 214-25), or "Claim Thirty [*5] Three" (id., ¶¶ 226-30) of the "Amended Complaint-Objection to Order of this Court," in each new complaint as to each such "Count" or "Claim"; and

7) the portion of the "Amended Complaint-Objection to Order of this Court" that falls under the heading "Objections to the Order of this Court" (id. at 46-47 (with paragraphs numbered one through seven))[1] will be disregarded as an untimely objection to a non-dispositive, pretrial ruling by a United States Magistrate Judge under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 72(a).

Plaintiff "is well-versed in the filing requirements of a variety of actions in the courts, having filed over thirty (30) actions in th[e] District [of South Carolina] alone." *2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 120519, [WL] at 2 n.4.

Those filings in the District of South Carolina included a case Plaintiff brought "under 42 U.S.C. § 1983 on April 4, 2002." *Burgess v. Taylor, No. C/A 8:02-1090-22, 2003 WL 22937930, at 1 (D.S.C. Mar. 18, 2003) (unpublished), aff'd, 67 Fed. Appx. 820 (4th Cir. 2003). In addition to his litigation in the District of South Carolina and his instant case, Plaintiff also has another pending case in this Court, Burgess v. Ebay, Inc., No. 1:11CV193 (M.D.N.C.) (complaint docketed on March 7, 2011, and notarized as signed on February 14, 2011), and recently had a case dismissed as frivolous and for failure to state a claim in the District of Massachusetts, see Burgess v. Ebay, Inc., Civil Action No. 11-10334-RGS, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 38470, 2011 WL 1344167 (D. Mass. Apr. 8, 2011) (unpublished) (incorporating reasoning from *Burgess v. The instant case began when Plaintiff paid a $350.00 filing fee (see Docket Entry dated May 25, 2011 (documenting receipt of payment on April 20, 2011)) and submitted a 14-page Complaint (docketed on April 21, 2011 (see Docket Entry 1 at 1) and notarized as signed on April 12, 2011 (see id. at 14)) which purported to name 43 Defendants in connection with claims of "breach of contract, negligence, violation of civil rights, fraud and misrepresentation" (id. at 1-3). After five paragraphs addressing (in conclusory fashion) the alleged basis for the Court's jurisdiction and venue, as well as the citizenship and/or residence of the putative parties (id. at 2-3), the Complaint sets forth 29 paragraphs of allegations (under the heading "Statement of the Facts") asserting (in conclusory fashion) that Defendants harmed Plaintiff in various ways (see id. at 3-12).

The Complaint identifies some of the putative Defendants as government officers or employees. (Id. at 5 (alleging that Defendant Asa McNeely "is the jail administrator at McDowell [*10] County"), 7 (referring to Defendants Steve Shortell and Don W. Farley as employees of "the Rockingham, VA., jail"), and 10 (describing Defendant A. Thompson as "a police officer").) Burgess, Nos. 93-5571, 93-7268, 21 F.3d 425 (table), [published in full-text format at 1994 U.S. App. LEXIS 7804] 1994 WL 137007, at *1 & n.1 (4th Cir. Apr. 18, 1994) (unpublished) (stating that Plaintiff "pled guilty to one count of knowingly making a false material declaration in an application to proceed in forma pauperis in violation of 18 U.S.C. § 1623 . . . The court sentenced [him] to 25 years imprisonment.").

[3] Said dismissal has become final because the docket for said case reflects that, following the court's denial of Plaintiff's motion for reconsideration on May 5, 2011, Plaintiff failed to file a notice of appeal within 30 days [*9] as required by Federal Rule of Appellate Procedure 4(a)(1)(A). See Docket, Burgess, Civil Action No. 11-10334-RGS (Docket Entries dated May 5, 2011, to present).

As previously noted, see supra, pp. 4-5, 7, at the time he filed the Complaint, Plaintiff was incarcerated as a result of a sentence imposed for a federal criminal conviction and thus qualified as a "prisoner" within the meaning of Section 1915A, see 28 U.S.C. § 1915A(c).

The Court therefore reviewed the Complaint under Section 1915A, which provides, in relevant part, that: "On review, the court shall identify cognizable claims or dismiss the complaint, or any portion of the complaint, if the complaint — (1) is frivolous, malicious, or fails to state a claim upon which relief may be granted; or (2) seeks monetary relief from a defendant who is immune from such relief." 28 U.S.C. § 1915A(b) (emphasis added). [*11] After completing that review, the Court entered a Screening Order on May 20, 2011, that states, in relevant part, as follows:

> Plaintiff's claims seem to lack any recognizable connection. He has raised claims related to, among other things, jail conditions, legal malpractice, bad business deals, disputes over insurance payments and car parts, landlord/tenant or real estate issues, banking problems, stolen property, and a disagreement over a deposit with an electric power company.

In filing the amended complaint, Plaintiff must set out specific facts as to each claim and defendant to establish that a viable claim for relief exists. He must make the cause of action clear as to each claim and defendant and state to the best of his ability when and where the alleged facts occurred.

In response to that Screening Order, Plaintiff filed the instant, 49-page "Amended Complaint-Objection to Order of this Court" which, in its caption and initial Defendant-identification paragraphs, purports to name as Defendants 42 of the 43 entities and individuals named as Defendants in the Complaint (i.e., all except Aramark Corp.), along with 12 additional individuals. (Compare Docket Entry 1 at 1-3, with Docket Entry 5, Caption and ¶¶ 3-5.)[4] The

---

[4] Despite the omission of Aramark Corp. from the Caption and opening designation [*14] of Defendants, the "Amended Complaint-Objection to Order of this Court" still contains a claim against Aramark Corp. (See Docket Entry 5, ¶¶ 169-77.) In addition, the body of the "Amended Complaint-Objection to Order of this Court" purports to assert claims against John Morgan

"Amended Complaint-Objection to Order of this Court" alleges in conclusory fashion that this Court has jurisdiction "under 28 U.S.C.A. §1331, and §1332," as well as venue "under 28 U.S.C.A. §1391." (Docket Entry 5, ¶ 1.) It states that Plaintiff "is a citizen and resident of Virginia" (id., ¶ 1), but its signature block lists an address in Florida for Plaintiff (id. at 48). Moreover, Plaintiff subsequently mailed the Clerk a letter stating "[m]y address is listed below" followed by an address in North Carolina. (Docket Entry 6 at 1.)

The "Amended Complaint-Objection to Order of this Court" identifies 21 of the putative individual Defendants as "citizens and residents of North Carolina" and alleges, without detail, that "[s]ome reside in the Middle District of North Carolina." (Docket Entry 5, ¶ 3.) It describes 12 additional putative individual Defendants as "citizens of other states [who] have made more than minimum contacts with the State of North Carolina . . . ." (Id., ¶ 5.) According to the "Amended Complaint-Objection to Order of this Court," 21 putative organizational Defendants are "licensed to do business in North Carolina or are doing business in North Carolina and . . . [*15] have all made minimum contacts with the State of North Carolina . . . ." (Id., ¶ 4.)

The bulk of the "Amended Complaint-Objection to Order of this Court" consists of 33 separate "Counts" or "Claims," each of which identifies between one and eight of the 54 (or 56) putative Defendants. (See id., ¶¶ 6-230.) The consecutively-numbered paragraphs of the "Amended Complaint-Objection to Order of this Court" concludes with sections labeled "Statement of Claims" and "Relief Demanded" that purport to summarize the federal statutes and other laws Defendants violated, as well as the damages and other relief to which Plaintiff claims entitlement. (See id., ¶¶ 231-44.) The "Amended Complaint-Objection to Order of this Court" then begins a new paragraph-numbering-sequence under the heading "Objections to the Order of the Court," wherein Plaintiff "objects to the application of 28 U.S.C. §1915A to his [C]omplaint . . . [and asks] that the application of 28 U.S.C.A. §1915 or 1915A be declared unconstitutional." (Docket Entry 5 at 46-47.) It ends with a signature page dated June 20, 2011 (id. at 48) and a "Verification" notarized as signed on June 17, 2011 (id. at 49).[5]

DISCUSSION

As an initial matter, the Court notes that the portion of the "Amended Complaint-Objection to Order of this Court" in which (under the heading "Objections to Order of this Court") Plaintiff "objects to the application of 28 U.S.C. §1915A to his [C]omplaint . . . [and] moves to this Court that the application of 28 U.S.C.A. §1915 or 1915A be declared unconstitutional" (id. at 46-47), is untimely under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 72(a). Said Rule states:

> When a pretrial matter not dispositive of a party's claim or defense is referred to a magistrate judge to hear and decide, the magistrate judge must promptly conduct the required proceedings and, when appropriate, issue a written order stating the [*17] decision. A party may serve and file objections to the order within 14 days after being served with a copy. A party may not assign as error a defect in the order not timely objected to. The district judge in the case must consider timely objections and modify or set aside any part of the order that is clearly erroneous or is contrary to law.

Fed. R. Civ. P. 72(a) (emphasis added).

The Screening Order did not dispose of any of Plaintiff's claims, but instead merely directed him to amend his Complaint within 30 days. (See Docket Entry 2 at 9.) Rule 72(a)'s 14-day time limit for objections therefore applied although neither its Caption nor its Defendant-identification paragraphs mention him. (Compare id., Caption and ¶¶ 3-5, with id., ¶¶ 6-16, 38-45.) The "Amended Complaint-Objection to Order of this Court" thus names a total of either 54 or 56 putative Defendants.

[5] The 30-day amendment period authorized [*16] by the Screening Order ended on Sunday, June 19, 2011, and thus, by operation of Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 6(a)(1)(C) and (d), Plaintiff had until June 23, 2011, to amend his Complaint. The Clerk docketed Plaintiff's "Amended Complaint-Objection to Order of this Court" on that date (see Docket Entry 5 at 1) and, therefore, Plaintiff complied with the Screening Order's deadline without considering the prison-mailbox rule, see generally Houston v. Lack, 487 U.S. 266, 108 S. Ct. 2379, 101 L. Ed. 2d 245 (1988).

to the Screening Order and commenced on May 20, 2011, when Plaintiff was served by mail with the Screening Order. (See Docket Entry dated May 20, 2011.) That 14-day period ended on June 3, 2011, but, due to the use of mail to effect service of the Screening Order, Plaintiff received an additional three days (until June 6, 2011) to file any objections, see Fed. R. Civ. P. 6(d). Even if the Court set the filing date of the "Amended Complaint-Objection to Order of this Court" at the earliest possible point, i.e., June 17, 2011 (the date, according to the notarization on the "Verification" [*18] page, on which Plaintiff signed said filing (see Docket Entry 5 at 49)), Plaintiff did not comply with Rule 72(a)'s time limitation. Accordingly, under the plain language of Rule 72(a), the Court need not consider the portion of Plaintiff's "Amended Complaint-Objection to Order of this Court" in which he objects to the Screening Order. See, e.g., Federal Election Comm'n v. Christian Coal., 178 F.R.D. 456, 459 n.3 (E.D. Va. 1998) ("Rule 72(a) additionally provides that failure to serve timely objections waives the right to do so in the future.").

Turning to the remainder of Plaintiff's "Amended Complaint-Objection to Order of this Court," the Court observes that, in amending his Complaint, Plaintiff added and maintained claims against government officials and employees. (See Docket Entry 5, ¶¶ 7 (describing newly-added Defendant Jack Pierce as a "guard" at the jail in Henderson County, North Carolina), 8 (identifying newly-added Defendant Ricky Davis as "Sheriff of Henderson County" and claiming that he adopted policies of denying medical treatment, "being unduly harsh and cruel to inmates[,] allowing daily beatings of inmates by the 'Beat Squad', and disallowing any books or magazines [*19] or legal materials into the jail"), 16 (listing claims against Defendant Davis, Defendant Pierce, and newly-added Defendant Pat Redden (who allegedly bore liability because "[h]er false imprisonment of the Plaintiff is the direct cause of th[e] treatment [Plaintiff experienced at the jail in Henderson County]"), including denial of medical care, as well as reading and legal materials, and subjection to cruel and unusual punishment), 17 (denominating newly-added Defendant Greg McCloud as official "responsible for the proper performance and running of the North Carolina Sex Offender Registry"), 18-19 (claiming that Defendant Redden submitted false information about Plaintiff to keep him on North Carolina's Sex Offender Registry thereby depriving Plaintiff of due process), 21 (labeling Defendant Redden as a "rogue cop"), 22 (alleging that Defendants McCloud and Redden "violat[ed] the Plaintiff's Constitutional Rights"), 40 (asserting that Defendant McNeely "is the person in charge of the McDowell County Jail"), 45 (contending that Defendant McNeely violated Plaintiff's rights to due process of law and freedom from cruel and unusual punishment), 63 (alleging that Defendants Shortell and [*20] Farley took custody of Plaintiff at the jail in Rockingham County, Virginia), 68 (positing that Defendants Shortell and Farley "violated the rights of the Plaintiff under 42 U.S.C.A. §1983"), 94 (describing Defendant Thompson as "a detective with the Brevard, N.C. Police Department" and Defendant Redden as a "rogue detective with Henderson County, N.C."), 99 (stating that Defendants Thompson and Redden denied Plaintiff "due process"), 208 (identifying newly-added Defendants K.B. Kernodle and Deputy Tilley as "police officers [who] cause[d] the [unlawful] arrest and confinement of [Joe L. Brady, who assigned said claim to Plaintiff]").

For reasons set forth above, see supra, pp. 7-8, the Court therefore must review Plaintiff's "Amended Complaint-Objection to Order of this Court" under 28 U.S.C. § 1915A. Having conducted that review, the Court concludes that this case cannot go forward for at least six reasons:

1) the "Amended Complaint-Objection to Order of this Court" joins claims against multiple defendants in contravention of Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 20(a)(2), requiring either the dropping of the vast majority of the putative Defendants (and thus the "Counts" or "Claims" against [*21] those Defendants) or severance under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 21;

2) the allegations as to 12 of the "Counts" and "Claims" in the "Amended Complaint-Objection to Order of this Court" appear to establish that this Court lacks venue over said "Counts" and "Claims," such that Plaintiff must show cause why, if severed into separate actions, each new action containing each such "Count" or "Claim" should not be transferred to another district under 28 U.S.C. § 1406(a);

3) the allegations as to three of the "Claims" in the "Amended Complaint-Objection to Order of this Court" appear to establish that Plaintiff lacks standing to assert said "Claims," such that Plaintiff must show cause why, if severed into separate actions, each new action containing each such "Claim" should not be dismissed for want of subject matter jurisdiction;

4) 17 of the "Claims" in the "Amended Complaint-Objection to Order of this Court" appear to assert only state law causes of action and to allege insufficient facts to support the Court's exercise of diversity jurisdiction, such that Plaintiff must show cause why, if severed into separate actions, each new action containing each such "Claim" should not be dismissed [*22] for want of subject matter jurisdiction;

5) 19 of the "Claims" in the "Amended Complaint-Objection to Order of this Court" lack sufficient factual allegations as to the place(s) of occurrence of the events alleged; and

6) 24 of the "Counts" and "Claims" in the "Amended Complaint-Objection to Order of this Court" lack sufficient factual allegations as to the time(s) of occurrence of the events alleged.

Improper Joinder

As set out in the Background section (see supra, pp. 9-11 & n.4), the "Amended Complaint-Objection to Order of this Court" purports to assert 33 separate "Counts" or "Claims" against entirely disparate groupings of between one and eight of the total number of 54 or 56 putative Defendants. "A party asserting a claim . . . may join, as independent or alternative claims, as many claims as it has against an opposing party." Fed. R. Civ. P. 18(a) (emphasis added). "Thus multiple claims against a single party are fine . . . ." George v. Smith, 507 F.3d 605, 607 (7th Cir. 2007).

However, where, as here, a plaintiff seeks to join not multiple claims against a single defendant, but multiple claims against multiple defendants, another provision of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure [*23] comes into play, i.e., the limitation that "[p]ersons . . . may be joined in one action as defendants if: (A) any right to relief is asserted against them jointly, severally, or in the alternative with respect to or arising out of the same transaction, occurrence, or series of transactions or occurrences; and (B) any question of law or fact common to all defendants will arise in the action." Fed. R. Civ. P. 20(a)(2) (emphasis added). In other words, "[u]nrelated claims against different defendants belong in different suits . . . ." George, 507 F.3d at 607.[6]

The "Counts" and "Claims" in Plaintiff's "Amended Complaint-Objection to Order of this Court" run too wide a temporal, geographic, and subject matter gamut to permit joinder under Rule 20(a)(2), as shown by this summary of said "Counts" and "Claims":

1) denial of medical care and imposition of other forms of cruel and unusual punishment in the jail in Henderson County, North Carolina, in June 2008 (Docket Entry 5, ¶¶ 6-16 ("Count One"));

2) unconstitutional submission and inclusion of false information in North Carolina's Sex Offender Registry at unidentified places from April 2008 to August 2010 (id., ¶¶ 17-22 ("Count Two"));

3) breach of contract, as well as denial of due process and equal protection, arising from the handling of property in a storage unit in Hendersonville, North Carolina, at unspecified times (id., ¶¶ 23-37 ("Count Three"));

4) denial of medical care and imposition of other forms of cruel and unusual punishment in the jail in McDowell County, North Carolina, on unidentified times (id., ¶¶ 38-45 ("Claim Four"));

[6] Many district courts outside the Seventh Circuit, including a number in the Fourth Circuit, expressly have followed George on this and related points. See, e.g., *Woods v. County of Wilson, No. 5:10CT3118BO, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 110991, 2011 WL 4460619, at 4 (E.D.N.C. Sept. 26, 2011) (unpublished); *Chandler v. James, 783 F. 5) violation of North Carolina's Unfair and Deceptive Trade Practices Act ("UDTPA"), federal antitrust law, and the constitutional right of access [*25] to courts by the company that runs the telephone system in the jail in Buncombe County, North Carolina, at unspecified times (id., ¶¶ 46-55 ("Claim Five"));

6) deprivation of due process and equal protection due to the unlawful accessing of North Carolina's and South Carolina's Sex Offender Registries at unidentified times and places (id., ¶¶ 56-62 ("Claim Six"));

7) cruel and unusual punishment in June 2008, in the form of denial of medicine, food, water, sleep, clothing, and recreation at the jail in Rockingham County, Virginia, as well as exposure to second-hand smoke and excessively-long confinement in restraints in transit to Hendersonville, North Carolina (id., ¶¶ 63-69 ("Claim Seven"));

8) violation of North Carolina stolen property laws and federal immigration laws related to the operation of a flea market at an unidentified place and time (id., ¶¶ 70-78 ("Claim Eight"));

9) breach of contract in connection with the sale of collectibles at an unspecified place and time (id., ¶¶ 79-82 ("Claim Nine"));

10) breach of contract as to electrical power service at an unidentified place and time (id., ¶¶ 83-85 ("Claim Ten"));

11) cruel and unusual punishment in the form of denial of medical [*26] care in the jail at Buncombe County, North Carolina, in November 2010 (id., ¶¶ 86-93 ("Claim Eleven"));

12) intentional and retaliatory institution of false charges in violation of due process in Transylvania County, North Carolina, on unspecified times (id., ¶¶ 94-100 ("Claim Twelve"));

13) common law fraud in connection with state civil litigation at unidentified places and times (id., ¶¶ 101-05 ("Claim Thirteen"));

14) usury in the provision of bail bonds at unspecified places and times (id., ¶¶ 106-10 ("Claim Fourteen"));

15) violation of North Carolina's UDTPA by the manufacturer of certain products utilized in jails and prisons at unidentified places and times (id., ¶¶ 111-20 ("Claim Fifteen"));

16) sale of a faulty automobile part and dealing in bad faith at unspecified places and times (id., ¶¶ 121-25 ("Claim Sixteen"));

17) fraud in the sale by auction of a coat at an unidentified place and time (id., ¶¶ 126-32 ("Claim Seventeen"));

18) fraud in connection with dealings related to storage units at unspecified places and times (id., ¶¶ 133-36 ("Claim Eighteen"));

19) breach of contract regarding monies owed at unidentified places and times (id., ¶¶ 137-41 ("Claim Nineteen"));

20) negligent [*27] misrepresentations by an expert witness at unspecified places and times (id., ¶¶ 142-47 ("Claim Twenty"));

21) defamation related to articles that appeared in the Charlotte Observer at unidentified times after Plaintiff's criminal trial in November 2009 (id., ¶¶ 148-52 ("Claim Twenty One"));

22) fraud in connection with the renting of an apartment at an unidentified place and time (id., ¶¶ 153-57 ("Claim Twenty Two"));

23) breach of contract, fraud, and related claims arising from litigation related to business dealings at unspecified places and times (id., ¶¶ 158-65 ("Claim Twenty Three"));

24) federal banking and privacy law violations regarding the removal of money from a checking account at unidentified places and times (id., ¶¶ 166-68 ("Claim Twenty Four"));

25) violation of North Carolina's UDTPA related to the provision of canteen services at the jail in McDowell County, North Carolina, at unspecified times (id., ¶¶ 169-77 ("Claim Twenty Five"));

26) breach of contract and professional malpractice in connection with a state collection action at unidentified places and times (id., ¶¶ 178-83 ("Claim Twenty Six"));

27) federal banking and privacy law violations arising from the release [*28] of financial records in the spring of 2008 at unspecified places (id., ¶¶ 184-87 ("Claim Twenty Seven"));

28) violation of state and federal banking laws related to the writing of certain checks at unidentified places and times (id., ¶¶ 188-95 ("Claim Twenty Eight"));

29) fraud in connection with a legal malpractice action originally filed in a state court in the Middle District of North Carolina in 2009 regarding a prior lawsuit in Granville County, North Carolina (id., ¶¶ 196-201 ("Claim Twenty Nine"));

30) unlawful debt collection under federal and state law at unspecified places and times (id., ¶¶ 202-07 ("Claim Thirty"));

31) unlawful arrest and detention at an unspecified place and time (id., ¶¶ 208-13 ("Claim Thirty One"));

32) criminal fraud and computer intrusion related to civil litigation at unidentified places and times (id., ¶¶ 214-25 ("Claim Thirty Two")); and

33) fraud and misrepresentation arising from a contract for internet research at unspecified places and times (id., ¶¶ 226-30 ("Claim Thirty Three")).

The Screening Order highlighted this misjoinder issue by noting that Plaintiff's "claims seem[ed] to lack any recognizable connection. He has raised claims related to, among [*29] other things, jail conditions, legal malpractice, bad business deals, disputes over insurance payments and car parts, landlord/tenant or real estate issues, banking problems, stolen property, and a disagreement over a deposit with an electric power company." (Docket Entry 2 at 3; see also id. at 6 ("Nor does it appear that many of the claims belong in the same lawsuit.").) Because Plaintiff's Complaint lacked sufficient factual content to state any claim, the Court did not need to address misjoinder further at that time; however, with the factual detail Plaintiff has added in his "Amended Complaint-Objection to Order of this Court," the unsustainability of his effort to join 33 distinct "Counts" and "Claims" against different (entirely non-overlapping) groupings of between one and eight of 54 or 56 putative Defendants has become so clear that the Court must now deal with the misjoinder issue. See George, 507 F.3d at 607 ("The district court did not question [the plaintiff's] decision to join 24 defendants, and approximately 50 distinct claims, in a single suit. It should have done so.").

As with the complaint in George, Plaintiff's "Amended Complaint-Objection to Order of this Court" [*30] does "not make any effort to show that the [54 or 56] defendants he named had participated in the same transaction or series of transactions or that a question of fact is common to all defendants." Id. (internal quotation marks omitted). The Court therefore must not allow Plaintiff to proceed on the "Amended Complaint-Objection to Order of this Court." See id. ("A buckshot complaint that would be rejected if filed by a free person - say, a suit complaining that A defrauded the plaintiff, B defamed him, C punched him, D failed to pay a debt, and E infringed his copyright, all in different transactions - should be rejected if filed by a prisoner.").

Courts must enforce Rule 20's joinder limitations in cases such as this one "not only to prevent the sort of morass that [results when a plaintiff puts dozens of claims against dozens of defendants into one complaint] but also to ensure that prisoners pay the required filing fees . . . ." Id. Plaintiff effectively has sought to commence 33 lawsuits for the price of one $350.00 filing fee. This Court, like others before, see, e.g., *Showalter v. Johnson, No. 7:08CV276, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 41155 at 10 (W.D. Va. May 12, 2009) [*31] (unpublished), declines to permit such fee-avoidance.

Moreover, by improperly joining unrelated claims against multiple defendants, Plaintiff perhaps "was trying not only to save money but also to dodge th[e] [Prison Litigation Reform Act ("PLRA")]." George, 507 F.3d at 607. "[T]he 'three strikes' provision of the . . . [PLRA] generally prohibits a prisoner from proceeding in forma pauperis ('IFP') if he has previously had three or more actions dismissed as frivolous, malicious, or for failing to state a claim." Tolbert v. Stevenson, 635 F.3d 646, 647 (4th Cir. 2011) (citing 28 U.S.C. § 1915(g)). By attempting to lump his 33 "Counts" or "Claims" together, Plaintiff may have "hoped that if even 1 of his [33] claims were deemed non-frivolous [or sufficient to state a claim], he would receive no 'strikes' at all, as opposed to the [32] that would result from making [32] frivolous [or legally insufficient] claims in a batch of [33] suits." George, 507 F.3d at 607. Indeed, Plaintiff has particular cause to attempt to avoid a decision that would constitute a "strike" under the PLRA because, as documented in the Background section (see supra, pp. 5-6 [*32] & nn.2, 3), he now has two such "strikes" (i.e., the dismissals in Burgess, 2003 WL 22937930, and Burgess, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 38470, 2011 WL 1344167) and thus a third "strike" would subject him to the PLRA's IFP ban. The Court (again, in line with the actions of other courts, see, e.g., *Showalter, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 41155, 2009 WL 1321694, at 4) will not allow Plaintiff to insulate himself from the PLRA through misjoinder.

Having determined that the case cannot move forward via the "Amended Complaint-Objection to Order of this Court," the Court must select the proper curative step. In this regard, the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure provide that "[m]isjoinder of parties is not a ground for dismissing an action. On motion or on its own, the court may at any time, on just terms, add or drop a party. The court may also sever any claim against a party." Fed. R. Civ. P. 21. "Where, as here, statute of limitations concerns arise, courts should sever rather than simply dismiss the misjoined claims [by dropping defendants]." *Robinson v. Johnson, No. 3:07CV449, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 25988, 2009 WL 874530, at 2 (E.D. Va. Mar. 26, 2009) (unpublished).

To accomplish the required severance, "Plaintiff must file new complaints for his severed claims. Any forthcoming new complaints [*33] must comport with Rules 8 and 20 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure . . . [and] must stand or fall of their own accord." Id. To the right of the caption of each such new complaint, Plaintiff must place the following words: "NEW COMPLAINT FOR SEVERED COUNT/CLAIM _____ IN 1:11CV316," with the corresponding number in the blank. See id. Because of the volume of severed claims involved, the Court will give Plaintiff until December 30, 2011, to file any new, successor complaints. "The failure to submit a proper new complaint for any ['Count' or 'Claim' in the "Amended Complaint-Objection to Order of this Court" by December 30, 2011] will result in the dismissal of that ['Count' or 'Claim']." Id.

"Plaintiff will be responsible for the full filing fee for each new complaint he submits." Id.; accord *Showalter, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 41155, 2009 WL 1321694, at 6 ("Each new lawsuit will obligate [the plaintiff] to pay the $350.00 district court filing fee pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1915(g)."). If Plaintiff takes the position that he lacks sufficient funds to pay the full $350.00 filing fee applicable to each new complaint for each severed "Count" or "Claim" in "Amended Complaint-Objection to Order of this Court" at [*34] the time of filing, he must file a proper application for IFP status with each new complaint as to which he does not pay the full filing fee. The Court will conduct appropriate screening under 28 U.S.C. § 1915(e)(2) as to any such new, successor complaint for which Plaintiff seeks IFP status and/or under 28 U.S.C. § 1915A(b) as to any such new, successor complaint in which Plaintiff seeks redress from a governmental official or employee.

Improper Venue

As detailed in the Background section, supra, p. 9, the Screening Order advised Plaintiff of the venue requirements and highlighted both the apparent lack of venue reflected by certain allegations in the Complaint and the absence of allegations necessary for a complete assessment of venue questions. Moreover, it directed Plaintiff to "be aware of the potential venue problems in drafting his amended complaint and [to] allege enough facts for the Court to make a venue determination if one becomes necessary or appropriate." (Docket Entry 2 at 8.) A review of the "Amended Complaint-Objection to Order of this Court" reveals that Plaintiff did not heed this instruction. To the contrary, as shown in the earlier summary of the "Amended Complaint-Objection [*35] to Order of this Court," supra, pp. 18-22, as to virtually all of the "Counts" and "Claims," venue either appears lacking (in that, based on the allegations, no Defendant therein appears to reside in the Middle District of North Carolina, a substantial part of the events described therein failed to occur in the Middle District of North Carolina, and another district exists where venue would lie, see 28 U.S.C. § 1391(a) and (b)) or Plaintiff has pled insufficient facts to permit any determination as to the propriety of venue.

If (consistent with the discussion in the preceding subsection, supra, pp. 25-26) Plaintiff files new complaints as to Counts One, Two, and Three and/or Claims Four, Five, Seven, Eleven, Twelve, Thirteen, Twenty, Twenty One, and Twenty Five of the "Amended Complaint-Objection to Order of this Court," the Court will have to consider transfer under 28 U.S.C. § 1406(a), in light of the lack of venue apparent on the face of Plaintiff's prior allegations as to each such "Count" or "Claim." See LaVay Corp. v. Dominion Fed. Sav. & Loan Ass'n, 830 F.2d 522, 526 (4th Cir. 1987) ("[If] venue [i]s improper . . ., transfer of [Plaintiff's] action [i]s required under 28 U.S.C. § 1406(a)."). [*36] "Although a motion by one of the parties is ordinarily required for transfer, the district court may consider the possibility of transfer sua sponte . . . [but generally must afford] an opportunity to be heard before a decision is rendered." Feller v. Brock, 802 F.2d 722, 729 n.7 (4th Cir. 1986); accord Caldwell v. Palmetto State Sav. Bank of S.C., 811 F.2d 916, 919 (5th Cir. 1987) ("Under the transfer statute, a district court may transfer a case upon a motion or sua sponte."). Accordingly, the Court will direct Plaintiff to file contemporaneously with any such new complaint a memorandum of up to five pages showing cause why the Court should not transfer that complaint to another district under Section 1406(a).

In addition, for reasons stated in a subsection to follow, see infra, pp. 31-32, the Court will order Plaintiff to include, in any new complaints as to other "Counts" and "Claims" in the "Amended Complaint-Objection to Order of this Court," additional allegations regarding the place(s) where the events at issue occurred. After reviewing those new complaints, the Court may require Plaintiff to show cause as to why it should not transfer those new complaints to another district [*37] under Section 1406(a), as well.

Lack of Standing

"It is well settled that under Article III of the United States Constitution a plaintiff must establish that a case or controversy exists between himself and the defendant and cannot rest his claim to relief on the legal rights or interests of third parties." Smith v. Frye, 488 F.3d 263, 272 (4th Cir. 2007) (describing "dismissal for lack of standing" as dismissal "for lack of jurisdiction") (internal quotation marks omitted). To satisfy the Constitution's "standing limitation," a plaintiff must allege "such a personal stake in the outcome of the controversy as to warrant his invocation of federal court jurisdiction and to justify exercise of the court's remedial powers on his behalf." White Tail Park, Inc. v. Stroube, 413 F.3d 451, 458 (4th Cir. 2005) (internal brackets and quotation marks omitted)).

As to "Claim Twenty Nine" (Docket Entry 5, ¶¶ 196-201), "Claim Thirty" (id., ¶¶ 202-07), and "Claim Thirty One" (id., ¶¶ 208-13) of the "Amended Complaint-Objection to Order of this Court," Plaintiff purports to proceed based "on assignment from Joe L. Brady." As reflected in the prior summary, see supra, pp. 21-22, Claims Twenty Nine, Thirty, [*38] and Thirty One set forth allegations of torts against persons under federal and/or North Carolina law. Both federal and North Carolina law generally prohibit the assignment of such tort claims. See Caldwell v. Ogden Sea Transp., Inc., 618 F.2d 1037, 1048 (4th Cir. 1980) (acknowledging "general rule of the non-assignability of personal injury claims" and describing its "main purposes . . . [as] prevent[ing] unscrupulous strangers to an occurrence from preying on the depraved circumstances of an injured person, and [] prohibit[ing] champerty"); see also id. at 1052 (Widener, J., concurring and dissenting) (quoting Comegys v. Vasse, 26 U.S. (1 Pet.) 193, 213, 7 L. Ed. 108 (1828), for proposition "'that mere personal torts, which die with the party, and which do not survive to his personal representative, are not capable of passing by assignment,'" and observing that "research ha[d] uncovered no case modifying this general rule under federal law"); Atlantic Coast Mech., Inc. v. Arcadis, Geraghty & Miller of N.C., Inc., 175 N.C. App. 339, 343, 623 S.E.2d 334, 338 (2006) ("It is well-established in this state that personal tort claims are not assignable because such assignments would be void against public [*39] policy because they promote champerty.") (citing, inter alia, Charlotte–Mecklenburg Hosp. Auth. v. First of Ga. Ins. Co., 340 N.C. 88, 91, 455 S.E.2d 655, 657 (1995)).

The Court thus will order that, if (consistent with the severance requirement discussed in a preceding subsection, supra, pp. 25-26) Plaintiff files new complaints as to Claims Twenty Nine, Thirty, and Thirty One, he also file contemporaneously with such new complaints a memorandum of up to five pages showing cause why each such new complaint should not be dismissed for want of subject matter jurisdiction due to Plaintiff's lack of standing.

Lack of Diversity Jurisdiction

Once Plaintiff files any new complaints to accomplish the required severance, see supra, pp. 25-26, each such new complaint must stand on its own, including as to the existence of subject matter jurisdiction. See generally *Robinson, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 25988, 2009 WL 874530, at 2 ("Any forthcoming new complaints [carrying out a required severance] . . . must stand or fall of their own accord."). "Claim Nine" (Docket Entry 5, ¶¶ 79-82), "Claim Ten" (id., ¶¶ 83-85), "Claim Thirteen" (id., ¶¶ 101-05), "Claim Fourteen" (id., ¶¶ 106-10), "Claim Fifteen" (id., ¶¶ 111-20), "Claim Sixteen" [*40] (id., ¶¶ 121-25), "Claim Seventeen" (id., ¶¶ 126-32), "Claim Eighteen" (id., ¶¶ 133-36), "Claim Nineteen" (id., ¶¶ 137-41), "Claim Twenty" (id., ¶¶ 142-47), "Claim Twenty One" (id., ¶¶ 148-52), "Claim Twenty Two" (id., ¶¶ 153-57), "Claim Twenty Three" (id., ¶¶ 158-65), "Claim Twenty Five" (id., ¶¶ 169-77), "Claim Twenty Six" (id., ¶¶ 178-83), "Claim Twenty Nine" (id., ¶¶ 196-201), and "Claim Thirty Three" (id., ¶¶ 226-30) of the "Amended Complaint-Objection to Order of this Court" assert only state law causes of action and fail to allege sufficient facts to support the Court's exercise of diversity jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. § 1332(a).

For any new complaint as to said "Claims," the Court therefore will order Plaintiff to contemporaneously file a memorandum of up to five pages showing cause why the Court should not dismiss any such new complaint(s) for want of subject matter jurisdiction.

Lack of Allegations as to Place

"An allegation of . . . place is material when testing the sufficiency of a pleading." Fed. R. Civ. P. 9(f). As documented in the prior summary of the "Counts" and "Claims" in the "Amended Complaint-Objection to Order of this Court," see supra, pp. 18-22, the allegations [*41] in Claims Six, Eight, Nine, Ten, Fourteen, Fifteen, Sixteen, Seventeen, Eighteen, Nineteen, Twenty Two, Twenty Three, Twenty Four, Twenty Five, Twenty Six, Twenty Seven, Twenty Eight, Thirty Two, and Thirty Three fail to provide sufficient information as to the place(s) where the events at issue occurred. Because of the materiality of allegations of "place" to the evaluation of the sufficiency of a complaint, the Court will order Plaintiff to allege where events relevant to the above-referenced claims took place in any new complaints he files as part of the severance required in this case, see supra, pp. 25-26.

Lack of Allegations as to Time

"An allegation of time . . . is material when testing the sufficiency of a pleading." Fed. R. Civ. P. 9(f). As documented in the prior summary of the "Counts" and "Claims" in the "Amended Complaint-Objection to Order of this Court," see supra, pp. 18-22, the allegations in Count Three and Claims Four, Five, Six, Eight, Nine, Ten, Twelve, Thirteen, Fourteen, Fifteen, Sixteen, Seventeen, Eighteen, Nineteen, Twenty, Twenty One, Twenty Two, Twenty Three, Twenty Four, Twenty Six, Twenty Eight, Thirty Two, and Thirty Three fail to provide sufficient information [*42] as to the time(s) when the events at issue occurred. Because of the materiality of allegations of "time" to the evaluation of the sufficiency of a complaint, the Court will order Plaintiff to allege when events relevant to the above-referenced claims took place in any new complaints he files as part of the severance required in this case, see supra, pp. 25-26.

CONCLUSION

Plaintiff has misjoined claims against multiple defendants in contravention of Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 20(a)(2), requiring severance pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 21. Because certain of Plaintiff's claims contain allegations showing lack of venue, standing, and/or diversity jurisdiction, he must show cause why the Court should not transfer or dismiss any post-severance, successor complaints Plaintiff files as to such claims. In filing new complaints to carry out the required severance, Plaintiff also must include sufficient allegations as to the material matters of place and time. Finally, Plaintiff's objections to the Screening Order were untimely.

IT IS THEREFORE ORDERED as follows:

1) on or before December 30, 2011, for each of the 33 "Counts" or "Claims" in the "Amended Complaint-Objection to [*43] Order of this Court" (see Docket Entry 5, ¶¶ 6-235) that Plaintiff wishes to pursue, Plaintiff shall submit: A) a separate, independent, and legally sufficient new complaint that states to the right of the caption, "NEW COMPLAINT FOR SEVERED COUNT/CLAIM _____ IN 1:11CV316," with the corresponding number in the blank; and B) either a $350.00 filing fee or a proper application to proceed as a pauper;

2) if Plaintiff files a new complaint as to "Count One" (id., ¶¶ 6-16), "Count Two" (id., ¶¶ 17-22), "Count Three" (id., ¶¶ 23-37), "Claim Four" (id., ¶¶ 38-45), "Claim Five" (id., ¶¶ 46-55), "Claim Seven" (id., ¶¶ 63-69), "Claim Eleven" (id., ¶¶ 86-93), "Claim Twelve" (id., ¶¶ 94-100), "Claim Thirteen" (id., ¶¶ 101-05), "Claim Twenty" (id., ¶¶ 142-47), "Claim Twenty One" (id., ¶¶ 148-52), or "Claim Twenty Five" (id., ¶¶ 169-77) of the "Amended Complaint-Objection to Order of this Court," he shall contemporaneously file a separate memorandum up to five pages in length with each such complaint showing cause in each such memorandum why each such new complaint should not be transferred to another district via 28 U.S.C. § 1406(a);

3) if Plaintiff files a new complaint as to "Claim Twenty [*44] Nine" (Docket Entry 5, ¶¶ 196-201), "Claim Thirty" (id., ¶¶ 202-07), or "Claim Thirty One" (id., ¶¶ 208-13) of the "Amended Complaint-Objection to Order of this Court," he shall contemporaneously file a separate memorandum up to five pages in length with each such complaint showing cause in each such memorandum why each such new complaint should not be dismissed for want of subject matter jurisdiction due to Plaintiff's lack of standing;

4) if Plaintiff files a new complaint as to "Claim Nine" (id., ¶¶ 79-82), "Claim Ten" (id., ¶¶ 83-85), "Claim Thirteen" (id., ¶¶ 101-05), "Claim Fourteen" (id., ¶¶ 106-10), "Claim Fifteen" (id., ¶¶ 111-20), "Claim Sixteen" (id., ¶¶ 121-25), "Claim Seventeen" (id., ¶¶ 126-32), "Claim Eighteen" (id., ¶¶ 133-36), "Claim Nineteen" (id., ¶¶ 137-41), "Claim Twenty" (id., ¶¶ 142-47), "Claim Twenty One" (id., ¶¶ 148-52), "Claim Twenty Two" (id., ¶¶ 153-57), "Claim Twenty Three" (id., ¶¶ 158-65), "Claim Twenty Five" (id., ¶¶ 169-77), "Claim Twenty Six" (id., ¶¶ 178-83), "Claim Twenty Nine" (id., ¶¶ 196-201), or "Claim Thirty Three" (id., ¶¶ 226-30) of the "Amended Complaint-Objection to Order of this Court," he shall contemporaneously file a separate memorandum [*45] up to five pages in length with each such complaint showing cause in each such memorandum why each such new complaint should not be dismissed for want of subject matter jurisdiction due to the fact that each such "Claim" asserts only state law causes of action and does not allege sufficient facts to support the Court's exercise of diversity jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. § 1332(a);

5) if Plaintiff files a new complaint as to "Claim Six" (Docket Entry 5, ¶¶ 56-62), "Claim Eight" (id., ¶¶ 70-78), "Claim Nine" (id., ¶¶ 79-82), "Claim Ten" (id., ¶¶ 83-85), "Claim Fourteen" (id., ¶¶ 106-10), "Claim Fifteen" (id., ¶¶ 111-20), "Claim Sixteen" (id., ¶¶ 121-25), "Claim Seventeen" (id., ¶¶ 126-32), "Claim Eighteen" (id., ¶¶ 133-36), "Claim Nineteen" (id., ¶¶ 137-41), "Claim Twenty Two" (id., ¶¶ 153-57), "Claim Twenty Three" (id., ¶¶ 158-65), "Claim Twenty Four" (id., ¶¶ 166-68), "Claim Twenty Five" (id., ¶¶ 169-77), "Claim Twenty Six" (id., ¶¶ 178-83), "Claim Twenty Seven" (id., ¶¶ 184-87), "Claim Twenty Eight" (id., ¶¶ 188-95), "Claim Thirty Two" (id., ¶¶ 214-25), or "Claim Thirty Three" (id., ¶¶ 226-30) of the "Amended Complaint-Objection to Order of this Court," Plaintiff shall include factual [*46] allegations as to the place(s) of occurrence of the events alleged as to each such "Claim";

6) if Plaintiff files a new complaint as to "Count Three" (id., ¶¶ 23-37), "Claim Four" (id., ¶¶ 38-45), "Claim Five" (id., ¶¶ 46-55), "Claim Six" (id., ¶¶ 56-62), "Claim Eight" (id., ¶¶ 70-78), "Claim Nine" (id., ¶¶ 79-82), "Claim Ten" (id., ¶¶ 83-85), "Claim Twelve" (id., ¶¶ 94-100), "Claim Thirteen" (id., ¶¶ 101-05), "Claim Fourteen" (id., ¶¶ 106-10), "Claim Fifteen" (id., ¶¶ 111-20), "Claim Sixteen" (id., ¶¶ 121-25), "Claim Seventeen" (id., ¶¶ 126-32), "Claim Eighteen" (id.,

¶¶ 133-36), "Claim Nineteen" (id., ¶¶ 137-41), "Claim Twenty" (id., ¶¶ 142-47), "Claim Twenty One" (id., ¶¶ 148-52), "Claim Twenty Two" (id., ¶¶ 153-57), "Claim Twenty Three" (id., ¶¶ 158-65), "Claim Twenty Four" (id., ¶¶ 166-68), "Claim Twenty Six" (id., ¶¶ 178-83), "Claim Twenty Eight" (id., ¶¶ 188-95), "Claim Thirty Two" (id., ¶¶ 214-25), or "Claim Thirty Three" (id., ¶¶ 226-30) of the "Amended Complaint-Objection to Order of this Court," Plaintiff shall include factual allegations as to the time(s) of occurrence of events alleged as to each such "Count" or "Claim"; and

7) the portion of the "Amended Complaint-Objection [*47] to Order of this Court" that falls under the heading "Objections to the Order of this Court" (id. at 46-47) will be disregarded as an untimely objection to a non-dispositive, pretrial ruling by a Magistrate Judge under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 72(a).

A FAILURE BY PLAINTIFF TO COMPLY WITH THIS ORDER IN A TIMELY MANNER WILL RESULT IN DISMISSAL WITHOUT PREJUDICE OF THIS ACTION WITHOUT FURTHER NOTICE TO PLAINTIFF. A FAILURE BY PLAINTIFF TO SUBMIT A PROPER NEW COMPLAINT FOR ANY "COUNT" OR "CLAIM" IN THE "AMENDED COMPLAINT-OBJECTION TO ORDER OF THIS COURT" BY DECEMBER 30, 2011, WILL RESULT IN THE DISMISSAL WITHOUT PREJUDICE OF THAT "COUNT" OR "CLAIM" WITHOUT FURTHER NOTICE TO PLAINTIFF.

HN1[] Clayton Act, Claims

Section 16 of the Clayton Act authorizes private parties to seek injunctive relief to protect against threatened loss or damage by a violation of the antitrust laws. 15 U.S.C.S. § 26. While the statute's text is broad, providing for suits by any person, firm, corporation, or association, courts limit its reach to those plaintiffs that allege a threat of antitrust injury. Antitrust injury is injury of the type the antitrust laws were designed to prevent and that flows from that which makes the defendants' acts unlawful. Accordingly, a private antitrust plaintiff must allege more than threatened loss or damage that is merely causally linked to the defendant's anticompetitive behavior. The plaintiff must additionally allege that its threatened injury reflects the anticompetitive effect either of the antitrust violation or of anticompetitive acts made possible by the violation. Thus, even if a threatened injury is causally related to an antitrust violation, it will not qualify as antitrust injury unless it is attributable to an anticompetitive aspect of the practice under scrutiny.

HN2[] Clayton Act, Claims

Determining whether a private party has standing to sue under § 16 of the Clayton Act requires a careful assessment of the connection between the threatened loss or damage, on the one hand, and the reason defendants' proposed conduct is allegedly illegal on the other. Conduct in violation of the antitrust laws may have three effects, often interwoven. In some respects the conduct may reduce competition, in other respects it may increase competition, and in still other respects effects may be neutral as to competition. The antitrust injury requirement ensures that a plaintiff can succeed only if the loss stems from a competition-reducing aspect or effect of the defendant's behavior.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > Requirements

HN3[] Standing, Clayton Act

Methodologically, assessing antitrust injury at the pleadings stage of a suit under § 16 of the Clayton Act requires two distinct inquiries. First, does the plaintiff's complaint allege a threatened injury-in-fact? Second, does the threatened injury result from an anticompetitive aspect of the defendant's proposed conduct, i.e., that which would make the transaction illegal under the antitrust laws? The plaintiff has sufficiently pleaded a claim to antitrust injury only if its complaint satisfies both inquiries under the conventional Fed. R. Civ. P. 8(a) pleading standards that govern in all civil actions.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > Clayton Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > Requirements

HN4[] Clayton Act, Claims

The extent to which factors other than antitrust injury apply when plaintiffs sue for injunctive relief depends on the circumstances of the case, and the weight to be given the various factors will also necessarily vary depending on the context. Courts assessing the viability of a plaintiff's claim to antitrust injury on the pleadings under § 16 of the Clayton Act have considered whether the plaintiff's allegations are too speculative to be allowed to proceed. Indeed, § 16's requirement of threatened injury, 15 U.S.C.S. § 26, dovetails with the U.S. Const. art. III requirement that in order to obtain forward-looking relief, the plaintiff must face a threat of injury that is both real and immediate, not conjectural or hypothetical. Thus, although § 16 of the Clayton Act protects against threatened loss or damage by a violation of the antitrust laws, § 26, and although § 7 of the Clayton Act was intended to arrest the anticompetitive effects of market power in their incipiency, the Clayton Act does not authorize suits by those whose allegations of threatened injury amount to little more than conjecture.

Antitrust & Trade Law > General Overview

HN5[] Antitrust & Trade Law

An economic arrangement between companies performing similar functions in the production or sale of comparable goods or services is characterized as horizontal.

HN6[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Clayton Act

Monopsony power is market power on the buy side of the market. As such, a monopsony is to the buy side of the market what a monopoly is to the sell side and is sometimes colloquially called a buyer's monopoly. In their pure form, monopoly and monopsony refer to markets where there is but one seller or one buyer, respectively.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > Requirements

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Complaints > Requirements for Complaint

HN7[] Standing, Requirements

To survive a motion to dismiss, the pleadings must suggest a plausible scenario that shows that the pleader is entitled to relief. Plaintiffs' antitrust complaints must therefore contain sufficient factual matter, accepted as true, to state a claim to antitrust standing that is plausible on its face. In particular, a naked assertion of antitrust injury is not enough; an antitrust claimant must put forth factual allegations plausibly suggesting (not merely consistent with) antitrust injury.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > Requirements

HN8[] Standing, Requirements

When allegedly anticompetitive behavior has the effect of either raising market price or limiting output and is therefore harmful to competition, it actually benefits competitors by making supra-competitive pricing more attractive. Put plainly, injury-in-fact is absent when a plaintiff complains only that its competitors' merger would be illegal because it would increase market concentration unduly.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > Clayton Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > Requirements

HN9[] Clayton Act, Claims

That the Clayton Act enlists the assistance of competitors as private attorney generals to serve the high purpose of enforcing the antitrust laws does not obviate the requirement that competitors allege injury-in-fact. A private plaintiff must do more than to bring a carefully timed lawsuit as a potential backup to government action.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > Requirements

HN10[] Standing, Requirements

Where a defendant, by means of anticompetitive conduct, restricts or forecloses a competitor plaintiff's access to a necessary input, the resulting loss is injury of the type that the antitrust laws were designed to prevent. Indeed, the plaintiff has stated a theory of competitor harm that is cognizable under the antitrust laws when it has alleged that its rival's anticompetitive acts will result in its paying more for necessary inputs.

[*312] MEMORANDUM OPINION

INTRODUCTION

These are antitrust [3] cases between competing mobile wireless carriers. Before the Court are motions to dismiss lawsuits which Sprint and Cellular South brought to enjoin AT&T's proposed acquisition of T-Mobile. AT&T and T-Mobile move for dismissal pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(b)(6), arguing that Sprint's and Cellular South's complaints fail to adequately allege that the merger would cause them "antitrust injury," and therefore that they lack the "antitrust standing" required to seek injunctive relief under § 16 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 26. [1]

Plaintiff Sprint Nextel Corporation ("Sprint") is the third largest national provider of mobile wireless services, with 50 million wireless customers. (Sprint Compl. ¶ 96.) In 2010, Sprint "accounted for 15 percent of all mobile wireless services revenues." (Id.) Plaintiffs Cellular South, Inc., and its wholly owned subsidiary Corr Wireless Communications, L.L.C. (collectively, "Cellular South" unless otherwise stated), are regional carriers operating a wireless network that "serves more than 887,000 customers located in Mississippi, Tennessee, Alabama Florida, and other surrounding states." (Cellular South Compl. ¶¶ 1, 21.)

Defendant AT&T Mobility, L.L.C. ("AT&T"), the wholly owned subsidiary of defendant AT&T, Inc., is the second largest national carrier, [2] with 95 million customers. (Sprint Compl. ¶¶ 15, 94.) In 2010, AT&T "accounted for 32 percent of all mobile wireless services revenues." (Id. ¶ 94.) Defendant T-Mobile USA, Inc. ("T-Mobile"), the wholly owned subsidiary of defendant Deutsche Telekom AG, is [5] the [*313] fourth largest national carrier, with 34 million customers. (Sprint Compl. ¶¶ 16, 97.) In 2010, T-Mobile "accounted for 12 percent of all mobile wireless services revenues." (Id. ¶ 97.)

On March 20, 2011, AT&T entered into a stock purchase agreement to acquire T-Mobile and to merge the two companies' mobile wireless services businesses. Five months later, the United States brought suit to enjoin the acquisition, alleging that its effect would "be substantially to lessen competition, or to tend to create a monopoly" in violation of § 7 of the Clayton Act. 15 U.S.C. § 18. [3] Sprint and Cellular South filed the present suits in the subsequent weeks, [4] and defendants moved to dismiss both. [5]

[1] Although properly treated as a threshold matter, antitrust standing is nonetheless an affirmative element of any antitrust suit brought by a private plaintiff and is assessed on a motion to dismiss according to the Rule 12(b)(6) standard, not that of Rule 12(b)(1) applicable to challenges to constitutional standing. See Palmyra Park Hosp. v. The Court heard argument on defendants' motions on October 24, 2011. Having considered the parties' positions and the relevant legal principles, the Court will grant the motions except as to plaintiffs' claims regarding mobile wireless devices, and Cellular South's roaming claim insofar as it relates to Corr Wireless.

ANALYSIS

I. GOVERNING LEGAL PRINCIPLES

HN1[] Section 16 of the Clayton Act authorizes private parties to seek injunctive relief to protect "against threatened loss or damage by a violation of the antitrust laws." 15 U.S.C. § 26. While [7] the statute's text is broad, providing for suits by "[a]ny person, firm, corporation, or association," id., courts have limited its reach to those plaintiffs that allege a threat of "antitrust injury." Cargill, Inc. v. Monfort of Colo., Inc., 479 U.S. 104, 113, 107 S. Ct. 484, 93 L. Ed. 2d 427 (1986).

Antitrust injury is injury "of the type the antitrust laws were designed to prevent and that flows from that which makes the defendants' acts unlawful." Brunswick Corp. v. Pueblo Bowl-O-Mat, Inc., 429 U.S. 477, 489, 97 S. Ct. 690, 50 L. Ed. 2d 701 (1977). Accordingly, a private antitrust plaintiff must allege more than threatened loss or damage that is merely "causally linked" to the defendant's anticompetitive behavior. Id. The plaintiff must additionally allege that its threatened injury "reflect[s] the anticompetitive effect either of the [antitrust] violation or of anticompetitive acts made possible by the violation." Id. Thus, even if a threatened injury is "causally related to an antitrust violation," it "will not qualify as 'antitrust injury' unless it is attributable to an anticompetitive aspect of the practice under scrutiny." Atl. Richfield Co. v. USA Petroleum Co., 495 U.S. 328, 334, 110 S. Ct. 1884, 109 L. Ed. 2d 333 (1990).

The antitrust injury requirement aligns antitrust suits [8] brought by private parties "'with the purposes of the antitrust laws, [*314] and prevents abuses of those laws' by claimants seeking to halt the strategic behavior of rivals that increases, rather than reduces competition." NicSand, 507 F.3d at 449-50 (quoting HyPoint Tech., Inc. v. Hewlett-Packard Co., 949 F.2d 874, 877 (6th Cir. 1991)). "It ensures that the harm claimed by the plaintiff corresponds to the rationale for finding a violation of the antitrust laws in the first place, and it prevents losses that stem from competition from supporting suits by private plaintiffs . . . ." Atl. Richfield Co., 495 U.S. at 342.

When the Supreme Court first articulated the requirement in Brunswick, for example, it held that plaintiffs seeking treble damages for alleged antitrust violations under § 4 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 15, had not established antitrust injury where they sought to recover for "profits they would have realized had competition been reduced" but for the defendant's pro- competitive activities. 429 U.S. at 488. The Court did not dispute that plaintiffs had suffered injury-in-fact. Emphasizing that the antitrust laws "were [9] enacted for 'the protection of competition not competitors,'" however, the Court held that it would be "inimical to the purposes of [those] laws to award damages" for injuries a competitor suffered from increased competition. Id. (quoting Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, 320, 82 S. Ct. 1502, 8 L. Ed. 2d 510 (1962)).

In Cargill, the Court applied the same principle in extending the antitrust injury requirement to suits for injunctive relief under § 16. See 479 U.S. at 109-13. Monfort of Colorado, then the country's fifth-largest beef packer, sued to enjoin the acquisition of Spencer Beef, the number three beef packer, by Excel Corporation, the number two beef packer. Id. at 106. In its complaint, Monfort "alleged that the acquisition would 'violat[e] [§] 7 of the Clayton Act because the effect of the proposed acquisition may be substantially to lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly.'" Id. at 107 (first alteration in the original). Monfort further alleged that the acquisition would "result in a concentration of economic power in the relevant markets" that would allow the merged entity to bid up the cost of inputs and cause a drop in market prices, such that Monfort was threatened with a profit [10] loss. Id. at 107 (internal quotation marks omitted).

Finding Monfort's complaint "of little assistance" in "determining what Monfort alleged the source of its injury to be," id. at 113, the Court nonetheless was able to discern two distinct theories of injury that Monfort alleged: first, conventional price competition, and second, predatory pricing. [6] The Court concluded that neither theory supported Monfort's claim to antitrust injury. Id. at 114-19.

As to the first theory, the Court reasoned:

> Brunswick holds that the antitrust laws do not require the courts to protect small businesses from the loss of profits due to continued competition, but only against the loss of profits from practices forbidden by the antitrust laws. The kind of competition that Monfort alleges here, competition for increased market share, is not activity forbidden by the antitrust laws. It is simply, as petitioners claim, vigorous competition. To hold that the antitrust laws [11] protect competitors [*315] from the loss of profits due to such price competition would, in effect, render illegal any decision by a firm to cut prices in order to increase market share. The antitrust laws require no such perverse result, for "[i]t is in the interest of competition to permit dominant firms to engage in vigorous competition, including price competition."

Id. at 116 (alteration in the original) (quoting Arthur S. Langenderfer, Inc. v. S.E. Johnson Co., 729 F.2d 1050, 1057 (6th Cir. 1984)). As in Brunswick, where the Court did not question that plaintiff suffered lost profits, the Cargill Court accepted plaintiff's allegations of threatened injury-in-fact as sufficient. Nonetheless, the Court concluded that "the threat of loss of profits due to possible price competition following a merger does not constitute a threat of antitrust injury." Id. at 116-17.

The Court then turned to Monfort's second claim of antitrust injury: the threat that Excel would engage in predatory pricing. Id. at 117. The Court stated that predatory pricing "is a practice that harms both competitors and competition" and recognized that, in theory at least, losses threatened by predatory pricing constitute [12] an injury of the type the antitrust laws were designed to prevent. Id. at 117-18 ("Predatory pricing is thus a practice 'inimical to the purposes of [the antitrust] laws,' Brunswick, [429 U.S. at 488], and one capable of inflicting antitrust injury.") (first alteration in the original). However, the Court concluded that Monfort had failed to properly press this claim before the district court, and that even if it had, it likely would not have succeeded given characteristics specific to the market it faced. Id. at 118-19 & n.15.

The Supreme Court's analysis in Cargill is instructive as to both the principles underlying the concept of antitrust injury and the method of inquiry it demands. HN2[] Determining whether a private party has standing to sue under § 16 of the Clayton Act requires a careful assessment of the connection between the threatened loss or damage, on the one hand, and the reason defendants' proposed conduct is allegedly illegal on the other. As the Court clarified in Atlantic Richfield:

> Conduct in violation of the antitrust laws may have three effects, often interwoven: In some respects the conduct may reduce competition, in other respects it may increase competition, and in [13] still other respects effects may be neutral as to competition. The antitrust injury requirement ensures that a plaintiff can [succeed] only if the loss stems from a competition-reducing aspect or effect of the defendant's behavior.

495 U.S. at 343-44.

HN3[] Methodologically, then, assessing antitrust injury at the pleadings stage of a § 16 suit requires two distinct inquiries. First, does plaintiff's complaint allege a threatened injury-in-fact? Second, does the threatened injury result from an anticompetitive aspect of defendant's proposed conduct, i.e., that which would make the transaction illegal under the antitrust laws? A plaintiff has sufficiently pleaded a claim to antitrust injury only if its complaint satisfies both inquiries [7] under the conventional Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 8(a) pleading standards that govern [*316] "'in all civil actions.'" Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 664, 129 S. Ct. 1937, 1953, 173 L. Ed. 2d 868 (2009) (quoting Fed. R. Civ. P. 1); see Bell Atl. Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 554-58, 570, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007). [8]

The Court's analysis, however, is not confined to the discrete question of whether Sprint and Cellular South have sufficiently alleged antitrust injuries. Antitrust injury is but one factor to be considered in assessing whether private plaintiffs have standing to sue under the antitrust laws. In Associated General Contractors of California, Inc. v. California State Council of Carpenters, 459 U.S. 519, 103 S. Ct. 897, 74 L. Ed. 2d 723 (1983), the Supreme Court described other factors relevant to determining whether a plaintiff seeking treble damages pursuant to § 4 of the Clayton Act has antitrust standing: "the directness [15] of the injury, whether the claim for damages is 'speculative,' the existence of more direct victims, the potential for duplicative recovery and the complexity of apportioning damages." Andrx PharmS., 256 F.3d at 806 (citing Associated Gen. Contractors, 459 U.S. at 542-45); accord Daniel v. Am. Bd. of Emergency Med., 428 F.3d 408, 443 (2d Cir. 2005).

To be sure, "many of these other factors are not relevant to the standing inquiry under § 16," Cargill, 479 U.S. at 110 n.5, and therefore have no application here. The antitrust standing inquiry under § 16 is "less demanding" than that under § 4 because § 16 "provides for injunctive relief, not treble damages," and therefore "the risk of duplicative recovery or the danger of complex apportionment that pervades the analysis of standing under [§] 4 is not relevant to the issue of standing under [§] 16." Palmyra Park Hosp., 604 F.3d at 1299-1300 (internal quotation marks omitted); accord Adams v. Pan Am. World Airways, Inc., 828 F.2d 24, 26, 264 U.S. App. D.C. 174 (D.C. Cir. 1987).

Ultimately, HN4[] "[t]he extent to which [factors other than antitrust injury] apply when plaintiffs sue for injunctive relief depends on the circumstances of the case," and "the weight to be [16] given the various factors will [also] necessarily vary" depending on the context. Daniel, 428 F.3d at 443. Of particular relevance here is the fact that courts assessing the viability of a § 16 plaintiff's claim to antitrust injury on the pleadings have considered whether the plaintiff's allegations are too speculative to be allowed to proceed. [9] Indeed, "Section 16's requirement of 'threatened injury,' 15 U.S.C. § 26, dovetails with Article III's requirement that in order to obtain forward-looking relief, a plaintiff must face a threat of injury that is both 'real and immediate, not conjectural or hypothetical.'" In re New Motor Vehicles [*317] Canadian Exp. Antitrust Litig., 522 F.3d 6, 14 (1st Cir. 2008) (some internal quotation marks omitted) (quoting O'Shea v. Littleton, 414 U.S. 488, 494, 94 S. Ct. 669, 38 L. Ed. 2d 674 (1974)). [10] Thus, Contractors, 459 U.S. at 535 n.31* (In § 4 suits, "the focus of the doctrine of 'antitrust standing' is somewhat different from that of standing as a constitutional doctrine. Harm to the antitrust plaintiff is sufficient to satisfy the constitutional standing requirement of injury in fact, but the court must make a further determination whether [18] the plaintiff although § 16 of the Clayton Act protects "against threatened loss or damage by a violation of the antitrust laws," 15 U.S.C. § 26 (emphasis added), and although § 7 "was intended to arrest the anticompetitive effects of market power in their incipiency," FTC v. Procter & Gamble Co., 386 U.S. 568, 577, 87 S. Ct. 1224, 18 L. Ed. 2d 303 (1967), the Act does not authorize suits by those whose allegations of threatened [17] injury amount to little more than conjecture.

With these principles in mind, the Court turns to Sprint's and Cellular South's claims to antitrust standing and, in particular, antitrust injury. For purposes of this inquiry only, the Court assumes that AT&T's proposed acquisition of T-Mobile would violate § 7 of the Clayton Act, and focuses instead on whether plaintiffs have sufficiently alleged a threatened loss or damage stemming from an aspect or effect of the proposed acquisition that would make it illegal. [11]

II. PLAINTIFFS' CLAIMS

Sprint and Cellular South allege threatened injuries that stem from both horizontal and vertical aspects of AT&T's proposed acquisition of T-Mobile. That is to say: as participants in a number of different markets, wireless carriers are related both horizontally and vertically. In certain markets, the carriers compete with each other to sell outputs, and in other markets, they compete to purchase inputs. Such relationships are deemed horizontal in that they pit carriers against carriers, acting in parallel as either sellers or buyers. [12] (Where the carriers compete as sellers, the proposed acquisition raises monopoly concerns. Where they compete as buyers of inputs, the anticompetitive form is monopsony. [13]) In yet other markets, [*318] the wireless carriers buy and sell services to and from each other, and are therefore vertically related. [14] In this complex and constantly evolving industry, [20] markets are interconnected and the carriers play multiple roles simultaneously. The Court will address plaintiffs' claims regarding the horizontal effects of the proposed acquisition before turning to their vertical claims, although it recognizes that this distinction is not always clear-cut.

Assuming the truth of the facts that the plaintiffs allege, the Court describes each relevant market and assesses the plaintiffs' claims of antitrust injury in it. HN7[] "To survive a motion to dismiss, the pleadings must suggest a plausible scenario that shows that the pleader is entitled to relief." Ross-Simmons Hardwood Lumber Co., Inc., 549 U.S. 312, 320, 127 S. Ct. 1069, 166 L. Ed. 2d 911 (2007) (citation omitted) (citing Roger D. Blair & Jeffrey L. App. D.C. 261 (D.C. Cir. 2011) (alterations and internal quotation marks omitted). Plaintiffs' complaints must therefore "contain sufficient factual matter, accepted as true, to state a claim" to antitrust standing "that is plausible on its face." Iqbal, 129 S.Ct. at 1949 (internal quotation marks omitted). In particular, "[a] 'naked assertion' of antitrust injury, the Supreme Court has made clear, is not enough; an antitrust claimant must put forth factual 'allegations plausibly suggesting (not merely consistent with)' antitrust injury." NicSand, 507 F.3d at 451 (quoting Twombly, 550 U.S. at 557).

A. Horizontal Effects

AT&T, T-Mobile, Sprint, [22] and Cellular South are primarily competing wireless carriers: they compete horizontally to sell wireless services and a broad array of wireless devices, including basic mobile phones, smartphones (e.g., Android phones, BlackBerry phones, the Apple iPhone), tablets (e.g., the Samsung Galaxy Tab, the BlackBerry PlayBook, the Apple iPad), and other products that access their voice and data networks. [15] In addition to competing horizontally in the output market, the carriers compete horizontally in the input market, as purchasers of wireless devices: they attempt to secure the most desirable devices for their respective networks so they can sell them to customers. The carriers also compete horizontally as purchasers in the market for wireless spectrum, as they acquire new frequency bands and as they work to develop and buy network equipment, chipsets, and device antennae that operate on them.

1. The Market for Wireless Services

Sprint and Cellular South compete with AT&T, T-Mobile, and other wireless carriers— most prominently, Verizon— to sell wireless services. In the market that is of primary concern here, that for postpaid [23] wireless services, [16] the "goods" in question consist of retail consumer plans and corporate and government plans that customers purchase so that they can use their wireless devices for voice calls, text [*319] messaging, and data delivery (e.g., email and the internet). The relevant market prices are the monthly fees that consumers pay for postpaid wireless services and the bulk fee corporate and government entities negotiate for the same. (See Sprint Compl. ¶¶ 64-66, 72-74.)

Sprint and Cellular South allege that AT&T's acquisition of T-Mobile would affect an illegal concentration of market power and lead to higher retail wireless rates. Sprint opens its complaint by declaring that, "[i]n one fell swoop," the proposed transaction "would eliminate one of four national competitors" in the mobile wireless market "and marginalize [24] a second (Sprint), pushing the market back toward a 1980s-style cell phone duopoly that would force consumers to endure higher prices and be denied the fruits of vigorous innovation." (Id. ¶ 1; see also id. ¶ 2 ("On its face, the horizontal combination of AT&T and T-Mobile is a classic violation of antitrust merger law, resulting in market concentration far in excess of the thresholds established by" law.); Cellular South Compl. ¶¶ 10-14.)

Standing alone, however, such allegations do not help to resolve the question of whether these competitor plaintiffs have pleaded antitrust injury. At issue here are Sprint's and Cellular South's allegations regarding the injuries that they will suffer if the merger is consummated. Alleging harm to consumers, while relevant to showing an antitrust violation, is not sufficient to demonstrate antitrust injury; harm to consumers by way of increased prices is the type of injury the antitrust laws were designed to prevent, but it is not an injury-in-fact that competitors suffer. [15] The parties refer to these devices collectively as "handsets."

[16] "Typically, postpaid services require two-year contracts and are available only to customers who satisfy a credit check. Prepaid services, on the other hand, do not include two-year contracts" and instead "allow the subscriber to pay up front for a month of service, or are pay-as-you-go plans where a subscriber purchases . . . minutes in advance." (Sprint Compl. ¶ 65.)

When allegedly anticompetitive behavior "[has] the effect of either raising market price or limiting output" and is therefore "harmful to competition," it "actually benefit[s] [25] competitors by making supracompetitive pricing more attractive." Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co., Ltd. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 583, 106 S. Ct. 1348, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538 (1986). Put plainly, "injury-in-fact . . . is absent when a plaintiff complains [only] that its competitors' merger [would be] illegal because it [would] increase[] market concentration unduly." IIA Areeda et al., supra, ¶ 335f, at 73; see id. ¶ 348b.

That remains the case even if, as Sprint and Cellular South allege, the proposed acquisition will incentivize Verizon, "AT&T's most significant competitor post-merger, . . . to coordinate with AT&T rather than compete." (Sprint Compl. ¶ 3; see id. ¶¶ 195-98; Cellular South Compl. ¶¶ 73-76.) In Matsushita Electrical Industrial Co., the Supreme Court addressed allegations by American television manufacturers that their Japanese rivals "had illegally conspired to drive American firms from the . . . market." 475 U.S. at 577-78. The Court began its analysis "by emphasizing what [plaintiffs'] claim is not:"

> [*320] Nor can [plaintiffs] recover damages for any conspiracy by [defendants] to charge higher than competitive prices in the American market. Such conduct would indeed violate the [antitrust laws], but it could not injure [plaintiffs]: as [defendants'] competitors, [plaintiffs] stand to gain from any conspiracy to raise the market price in [televisions].

Id. at 582-83 (citations omitted). The Court's logic is directly [27] applicable here. Whether the result of an increase in market concentration by itself, or "the oligopolistic price coordination" that "excessive concentration . . . portends," Brooke Group Ltd., 509 U.S. at 229-30, an increase in market prices alone does not harm competitors. To the contrary, "You want your competitors to charge high prices." JTC Petroleum Co. v. Piasa Motor Fuels, Inc., 190 F.3d 775, 778 (7th Cir. 1999) (Posner, J.). The possibility that a post-merger AT&T could raise market prices does not, without more, threaten injury-in-fact to Sprint and Cellular South. It therefore does not confer antitrust standing on them. [18]

2. The Market for Wireless Devices

Plaintiffs claim that wireless devices "are becoming the primary driver in selection of wireless service." (Cellular South Compl. ¶ 54.) "Device preference increasingly drives customer choice of wireless carriers." (Id.; see Sprint Compl. ¶ 79.) As such, wireless carriers compete with each other to secure the most desirable devices for their own networks, sometimes leveraging exclusivity deals with device manufacturers to aid their efforts. [19] Sprint and Cellular South allege that, together with Verizon, a post-merger AT&T would "foreclose their . . . access to the most innovative handsets and raise their costs," such that their "offers to [their] customers would be less attractive and [their] business would be injured." [20] (Id. ¶ 159-60; see id. ¶¶ 4, 7, 79, 84-87, 157, 159-69, 208; Cellular South Hazeltine Research, Inc., 395 U.S. 100, 130-31, 89 S. Ct. 1562, 23 L. Ed. 2d 129 (1969)), does not obviate the requirement that competitors allege injury-in-fact, id. at 113 (citing Brunswick, 429 U.S. at 489). The conclusion that the Eleventh Circuit reached in a different context applies here with equal force: "[A private] plaintiff must do more than to bring a carefully timed lawsuit as a potential back-up to government action." Royal Crown Cola Co. v. Coca-Cola Co., 887 F.2d 1480, 1493 (11th Cir. 1989) (denying attorney's fees to a competitor plaintiff where the plaintiff, because its [26] § 16 suit stalled while the FTC pursued similar objections in a parallel court proceeding, had not demonstrated its own role in provoking the defendant to pro-competitive behavior).

[18] Sprint and Cellular South correctly note that defendants have not contested whether their complaints state a claim "that the acquisition violates [§] 7 by increasing AT&T's market power in the relevant wireless markets" and that it would "further enhance[] AT&T's power to raise prices post-merger." (Joint Opp'n at 16.) But regardless of whether those "allegations state a plausible prima facie [§] 7 claim for harm to competition" (id. at 16-17), they do not state a plausible claim to antitrust injury because they do not allege that Sprint and Cellular [28] South would suffer injury-in-fact.

[19] Because the complaints [29] do not allege that wireless carriers ever buy devices from each other, and instead describe the carriers as competing with each other to buy them from manufacturers, the alleged effects of the acquisition on the market for devices are horizontal even though the devices themselves are akin to inputs.

Compl. ¶¶ 12, 26, 50-63.) The increased market concentration brought about by the proposed acquisition would, according to Sprint, "enable both AT&T and Verizon to coerce exclusionary handset deals . . . without AT&T having gained that advantage through competition on the merits." (Sprint Compl. ¶ 160.)

HN10[] Where a defendant, by means of anticompetitive conduct, restricts or forecloses a competitor plaintiff's access to a necessary input, courts have found that the resulting loss is injury of the type that the antitrust laws were designed to prevent. See Eastman Kodak Co. v. Image Technical [*321] Servs., Inc., 504 U.S. 451, 478, 112 S. Ct. 2072, 119 L. Ed. 2d 265 (1992); *Six West Retail Acquisition, Inc. v. Sony Theatre Mgmt. Corp., No. 97 CIV. 5499, 2000 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 2604, 2000 WL 264295, at 22 (S.D.N.Y. March 9, 2000); Bon-Ton Stores, Inc. v. May Dep't Stores Co., 881 F.Supp. 860, 878 (W.D.N.Y. 1994); [30] Tasty Baking Co. v. Ralston Purina, Inc., 653 F. Supp. 1250, 1276 (E.D.Pa. 1987). [21] Indeed, defendants concede that a plaintiff has stated a "theory of competitor harm" that is cognizable under the antitrust laws" when it has alleged that its rival's anticompetitive acts will result in its paying more for necessary inputs. (Reply at 2.) [22]

In Eastman Kodak, firms that serviced Kodak photocopiers (independent service organizations or "ISOs") alleged that Kodak acted anticompetitively when it "adopted policies to limit the availability of parts to [those firms] and to make it more difficult for [them] to compete with Kodak in servicing Kodak equipment." 504 U.S. at 455. Kodak machines required Kodak parts, and Kodak parts were only available from Kodak directly or by way of original-equipment manufacturers ("OEMs") that contracted with Kodak. Id. at 456-57. When Kodak limited direct sales of parts to "buyers of Kodak equipment who use[d] Kodak service or [who] repair[ed] their own machines," and additionally struck agreements with the OEMs preventing them from selling parts to anyone but Kodak, the ISOs "were unable to obtain parts from reliable sources . . . and many were forced out of business, while others lost substantial revenue." Id. at 458. The ISOs sued, alleging "that Kodak had unlawfully tied the sale of service for Kodak machines to the sale of parts, in violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act, and had unlawfully monopolized and attempted to monopolize the sale of service for Kodak [32] machines, in violation of § 2 of that Act." Id. at 459 (citing 15 U.S.C. §§ 1, 2). [23]

Neither the Supreme Court nor the lower courts questioned whether the ISOs had established antitrust injury, [24] notwithstanding that they were Kodak's competitors in the market for servicing Kodak photocopiers. Indeed, the Supreme Court was unequivocal in declaring that Kodak's "alleged conduct—higher service prices and market foreclosure—is facially anticompetitive and exactly the harm that antitrust laws aim to prevent." Id. at 478. This was so even though there existed some alternative sources of Kodak parts, id. at 458 & n.2, and even though Kodak did not have market [*322] power in the interbrand market for its equipment. Id. at 465.

What distinguishes the present case from Eastman [33] Kodak, however, is the alleged source of the defendants' power to impair plaintiffs' ability to compete in the input market. In Eastman Kodak, the defendant was both the plaintiffs' competitor and their supplier. Here, the wireless carriers—plaintiffs, defendants, Verizon, and all the rest, national and regional alike—compete against each other as fellow purchasers of wireless devices, which they procure from manufacturers in order to sell to consumers. [25] It would not be the alleged antitrust violation—AT&T's acquisition of T-Mobile—but rather the "anticompetitive acts made possible by the violation" that plaintiffs claim would injure them. Brunswick Corp., 429 U.S. at 489. Theirs is a threatened "injury of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent," id., but because their theory depends on the merged entity's monopsony power, and not its simple ability to refuse to sell to them, alleging a plausible threat of loss or damage is a more complex task for Sprint and Cellular South than it was for the Eastman Kodak plaintiffs.

Yet, other plaintiffs have succeeded on similar theories in the past. In Six West, an independent theater operator challenged the merger of its two major competitors, theater chains that were owned by vertically integrated movie distributors. *2000 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 2604, 2000 WL 264295, at 1-2, 21. The plaintiff alleged that, because the transaction would "effectuate[] intimate affiliations between exhibitors . . . and distributors," it would "'impede plaintiff's ability to obtain quality motion pictures.'" *Id. at 21 (quoting plaintiff's amended complaint). The Court concluded that plaintiff had alleged an antitrust injury because the merger would "effectively[] depriv[e] [p]laintiff of its ability to compete for first-run films." *Id. at 22.

In Bon-Ton Stores, the Bon-Ton department store chain sought [35] to enjoin the acquisition of McCurdy's, one of its local competitors, by May, one of its large national competitors. 881 F.Supp. at 862-63. With the acquisition, May would have acquired all of the available retail space for a department store in all of the main malls in Rochester, New York. Id. at 865. Bon-Ton argued that the merger would hinder its ability to enter the Rochester market because store space in malls was critical to the department store business. Id. at 876-77. The Court issued a preliminary injunction and denied defendants' motions to dismiss, concluding that Bon-Ton's threat of "effective exclusion from the Rochester market" constituted antitrust injury. Id. at 878 ("Courts have held in many cases that a business which has been prevented from entering (and thus competing in) a market have standing to sue under the antitrust laws." (collecting cases)).

Finally, in Tasty Baking, the manufacturer of Tastykake snack cakes sued to unravel the merger of the manufacturers of the Hostess and Drake snack cake brands. 653 F. Supp. at 1254. The plaintiff alleged that the transaction would "impair [its] ability to enter new markets and develop business, by facilitating [defendants'] [36] negotiations with retailers for better [*323] store shelf space and promotional time slots in markets where [plaintiff] does compete and by" enabling the merged entity to engage in predatory pricing. Id. at 1255. The Court concluded that the plaintiff had "alleged antitrust injury," and rejected defendants' argument that plaintiff's harm stemmed from defendants' "increased operating efficiencies" as stating "a factual dispute" but not "demonstrat[ing] any inadequacy" in the pleading. Id. Turning to the evidence adduced at the hearing on the preliminary injunction, the Court paid particular attention to the plaintiff's allegations of "threatened predatory non-pricing actions." Id. at 1276. The Court found support in the record for plaintiff's claims that defendants could "successfully pressure retailers" to stop carrying its products, to place them in less desirable locations in stores, and to allot them less promotional time. Id. at 1273. The Court concluded that because plaintiff's "entry into, expansion within, and preservation of share in relevant markets could be frustrated by defendants'" anticompetitive strategies, id., plaintiff had standing to sue. Id. at 1274.

[25] The national carriers sometimes work directly with manufacturers to develop new devices for their networks. (See Sprint Compl. ¶ 82.) Regional carriers [34] such as Cellular South have had far less success in this regard, allegedly because of their small subscriber base. (See Cellular South Compl. ¶¶ 53, 58; see also Sprint Compl. ¶ 84 ("Because" device manufacturers "commonly require volume commitments from carriers," those "with small subscriber bases are at a significant disadvantage in attracting OEMs to develop new devices or technology for their networks.").)

Mobile wireless devices, [37] and smartphones in particular, are Sprint's and Cellular South's first-run movies, mall locations suitable for department stores, and shelf space and promotional time, for they are necessary inputs for plaintiffs' businesses. (Cellular South Compl. ¶ 54; Sprint Compl. ¶ 79.) Like the plaintiffs in Six West, Bon-Ton Stores, and Tasty Baking, Sprint and Cellular South have alleged that the transaction in question threatens their continued access to these inputs. [26] As a general matter, plaintiffs' threatened injuries are those of the type the antitrust laws were designed to prevent, and courts have approved claims similar to those specifically raised here.

Nonetheless, the Court must still determine the sufficiency of plaintiffs' pleadings, and in particular the plausibility of their threat to injury-in-fact arising from the monopsony power AT&T would gain in the market for mobile wireless devices with the acquisition of T-Mobile. [*324] Defendants argue that, because plaintiffs' complaints do not describe the state of competition among device manufacturers, their claims must fail. The Court disagrees. HN11[] Where monopsony power is the concern, what matters is market concentration on the buying side of the market, not the selling side. Weyerhaeuser Co., 549 U.S. at 320 ("Monopsony power is market power on the buy side of the market."); see also Todd v. Exxon Corp., 275 F.3d 191, 202 (2d Cir. 2001) (Sotomayor, J.) (Because "the equation for measuring market power in monopsony is a mirror image of the relationships that create market power in a seller[,] . . . [a] greater availability [40] of substitute buyers indicates a smaller quantum of market power on the part of the buyers in question." (citation and internal quotation marks omitted)). [27] That there may be and, indeed, by all accounts is, healthy competition among firms that sell mobile wireless devices is irrelevant to understanding whether, by acquiring T-Mobile, AT&T could so increase its buying power as to dictate terms to device manufacturers and otherwise impair plaintiffs' access to these necessary inputs. [28] Judged against these standards, the Court concludes that plaintiffs' complaints contain sufficient facts, which must at this stage be accepted as true, to state a plausible claim to threatened loss or damage in the market for mobile wireless devices.

Sprint's and Cellular South's complaints provide factual support for the allegation that AT&T already possesses significant market power as a purchaser of mobile wireless devices, and that the acquisition of T-Mobile threatens them with harm. Sprint alleges that the proposed transaction would add T-Mobile's 34 million customers to AT&T's

[26] Contrary to defendants' assertions (see Reply at 12 n.9), plaintiffs' allegations in Six West, Bon-Ton Stores, and Tasty Baking resemble those made here by Sprint and Cellular South: both go to reduced access or increased costs even while employing "foreclosure" language at times. Compare *Six West, 2000 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 2604, 2000 WL 265296, at 22 ("Plaintiff alleges that the merger causes antitrust injury by restraining [its] access to quality motion pictures" and "limit[ing] [its] ability to obtain select movies." (emphasis added)) and Bon-Ton Stores, 881 F. Supp. at 876-77 [38] (Bon-Ton's chairman "testified that it is more economical to open a store in a mall as opposed to a standalone location or strip center," and the Court concluded that, while the merger would not make entry by a competitor "impossible," it was nonetheless "obvious that a significant and substantial barrier to entry would exist if May obtained all the present space in the four major regional shopping malls." (emphasis added)) and Tasty Baking Co., 653 F. Supp. at 1255 (Plaintiff "claim[s] that defendants' monopolization illegally will impair [plaintiff's] ability to enter new markets and develop business . . . ." (emphasis added)) with (Sprint Compl. ¶ 160 ("With reduced access to the latest handsets post-acquisition, Sprint's offers to its customers would be less attractive and its business would be injured." (emphasis added)) and id. ¶ 163 (alleging that the proposed acquisition "would result in Sprint, as well as smaller carriers, facing . . . increased costs" and "substantial delays" for "the latest phones and consumer devices") and Cellular South Compl. ¶ 26 ("Regional carriers will not be able to obtain the latest wireless devices in a timely fashion and at reasonable cost." (emphasis [39] added)) and id. ¶ 58 ("The proposed merger would reduce access to the latest devices . . . . (emphasis added))). Regardless, as an economic concept market foreclosure is measured in terms of costs: when costs are prohibitive, firms exit, or choose not to enter, markets.

[27] Indeed, the prototypical monopsonist is the factory in the company town. Because the factory is the sole employer—the sole purchaser of labor—it can dictate wages, benefits, and working conditions regardless of how large the town's population. See, e.g., M. Todd Henderson, The Nanny Corporation, 76 U. Chi. L. Rev. 1517, 1553 (2009) ("Company towns were isolated geographically, attracted specialized labor, and were therefore often monopsony buyers of labor [41] over large geographic and skill areas.").

[28] See Blair & Harrison, Monopsony in Law and Economics, supra, at 93 ("A monopsony issue in the area of horizontal mergers is raised when one buyer acquires a rival buyer and thereby increases the possibility that there will be an undesirable concentration of power on the buying side of the market." (emphasis deleted)).

95 million customers, leaving the merged entity with 129 million customers (a 37 percent increase) (Sprint Compl. ¶¶ 94, 97) and controlling "in excess of 40 percent of the national markets." (Id. ¶ 2; see id. ¶ 138; Cellular South Compl. ¶ 9 (alleging United States customer numbers for the national and regional carriers in the second quarter of 2011).).

Crucially, Sprint then alleges two links between a carrier's power as a seller in the output market and a carrier's power as a buyer in the input [42] market. The first regards volume commitments:

> Given the expense of developing new handsets, [manufacturers] commonly require volume commitments from carriers in order to spread R&D and production costs over a large volume of unit sales. Because of these volume commitments, carriers with smaller subscriber bases are at a significant disadvantage in attracting [manufacturers] to develop new devices or technology for their networks. For example, while regional carriers now offer some smartphones, [manufacturers] developing handsets with the latest technology tend to design them for the large national carriers because they have the ability to sell the [*325] most phones, thus spreading R&D costs over a larger number of units.

(Sprint Compl. ¶ 84.)

Sprint's second alleged connection between concentration in the selling and buying markets relates to "exclusivity arrangements or 'time-to-market' advantages" through which larger carriers secure exclusive access to certain devices—typically "cutting-edge smartphones"—for a specific period of time. (Id. ¶ 85; see Cellular South Compl. ¶¶ 58-59.) Sprint alleges that the Federal Communications Commission ("FCC") has found that while larger carriers can [43] negotiate handset exclusivity agreements, smaller carriers such as Sprint cannot. (Sprint Compl. ¶ 85.) Sprint cites Apple's iPhone as an example. AT&T was the exclusive provider of the "iconic" iPhone from 2007 until early 2011, when Apple "gave Verizon a time-to-market advantage . . . most likely because Verizon had the largest subscriber base in the United States." (Id. ¶ 86.) Accordingly, Sprint "had to compete without access to the iPhone for nearly five years." (Id.) [29] That AT&T and Verizon thus wielded their purchasing power in the past substantiates Sprint's claim to threatened injury-in-fact from the merger:

> As a result of the proposed transaction's illegal increase in market concentration, the size and scale differential between AT&T and Verizon on the one hand, and Sprint and the fringe carriers on the other hand, would increase dramatically. This would enable both AT&T and Verizon to coerce exclusionary handset deals . . . without AT&T having gained that advantage through competition on the merits. With reduced access to the latest handsets post-acquisition, Sprint's offers to its customers would be less attractive and its business would be injured.

(Id. ¶ 160; see id. ¶ [44] 162 (alleging that, in addition to endowing AT&T with the ability to secure more exclusive handset arrangements, the merger would allow AT&T to extract longer exclusivity periods).) [30]

[29] The Court can take judicial notice of the fact that Sprint gained the ability to sell the iPhone with the release of the iPhone 4S on October 14, 2011, and that Cellular South will also reportedly sell the iPhone. See Darren Murph, Sprint iPhone Officially Announced: iPhone 4 and 4S Both On the Way, engadget.com, October 4, 2011, available at http://www.engadget.com/2011/10/04/sprint-iphone-officially-announced-on-sale-october-14/; Roger Cheng, Apple iPhone 4S: Soon at C Spire, But Not T-Mobile, CNET.com, October 19, 2011, available at http://news.cnet.com/8301-1035_3-20122553-94/apple-iphone-4s-soon-at-c-spire-but-not-t-mobile/. Nonetheless, Sprint's allegation that even it, the nation's third-largest wireless carrier, lacked access to the iPhone for almost five years adds plausibility to its alleged threat of harm from the proposed acquisition.

[30] The Court does not imply that handset exclusivity arrangements are themselves improper under the antitrust laws. To the contrary, courts have concluded that [45] restraints of this type are not anticompetitive. See, e.g., Leegin Creative Leather Prods., Inc. v. PSKS, Inc., 551 U.S. 877, 890, 127 S. Ct. 2705, 168 L. Ed. 2d 623 (2007); Elecs. Commc'ns Corp. v. Toshiba Am. Consumer Prods., Inc., 129 F.3d 240, 245 (2d Cir. 1997). Rather, the Court merely credits Sprint's allegation that it will suffer harm from future exclusivity arrangements if AT&T acquires additional buying power in the market for devices.

Cellular South's claims to antitrust injury from the proposed transaction's effect on the market for wireless devices are, if anything, even more plausible. Cellular South adds narrative to the numbers and market logic alleged by Sprint:

> Cellular South and other carriers have often been refused access to current devices and given access only when the device is no longer the most current model. Cellular South and other carriers [*326] receive older phones at higher prices. The proposed merger will continue and exacerbate that conduct.

(Cellular South Compl. ¶ 53; see id. ¶¶ 60, 63, 87.)

Cellular South also focuses on the proposed acquisition's elimination of "T-Mobile as an independent source of demand for wireless devices," thus squarely stating a monopsony concern. (Cellular South Compl. [46] ¶ 12; see id. ¶ 26 ("AT&T's acquisition of T-Mobile would further consolidate an already concentrated wireless industry and remove one independent customer (T-Mobile) with millions of device customers from the already short list of those wireless carriers ordering devices from device manufacturers.").)

But Cellular South worries about more than the mere fact of the post-merger AT&T's enhanced buying power in the market for devices. It alleges that the proposed transaction would exacerbate its network interoperability woes. As will be discussed in more detail below, not all carriers' networks are compatible with each other: phones designed for one network cannot be used on many others. (See Section II(B)(1), infra.) Cellular South claims that AT&T and Verizon have exercised their purchasing power in the markets for devices and network equipment to propagate "their own separate 'ecosystems' of compatible infrastructure . . . that cannot be utilized by other competitors," and that the proposed acquisition would increase the big carriers' "incentive and power to exclude competitors from those ecosystems." (Cellular South Compl. ¶ 50.) Accordingly, "Without T-Mobile's independent demand [47] for devices, device manufacturers will be even less willing to design or build devices for any carrier, like Cellular South, which is operating outside of the ecosystem of one or the other of [Verizon and AT&T]." (Id. ¶ 52.) In other words, Cellular South alleges that the proposed acquisition threatens its access not only to handsets that are particularly desirable, but also, more fundamentally, to whole "ecosystems" of devices and network infrastructure—and customers. Based on these allegations, the Court concludes that Cellular South's complaint also satisfies Twombly as regards its claim of threatened injury-in-fact from an anticompetitive aspect of the proposed merger—AT&T's acquisition of monopsony power in the market for mobile wireless devices.

By contrast, certain of the plaintiffs' seemingly device-related claims do not plausibly allege threatened injury-in-fact. Sprint states that the post-merger AT&T would, with Verizon, compose a "Twin Bell duopoly" gatekeeper, controlling "access to the wireless bridge between upstream developers and the consumers they seek to connect with via wireless communications." (Sprint Compl. ¶ 9; see id. ¶¶ 187-88.) This may be a plausible allegation, [48] but it does not describe a threatened loss or damage to Sprint, as opposed to one faced by the upstream producers: merely claiming that "independent wireless carriers . . . would not have the features and content required to compete," (id. ¶ 188), does not suffice in the absence of facts about the market relationship between the carriers and those producers.

Sprint's claim to threatened injury arising from the potential loss of T-Mobile as a partner in ventures "to create substantial scale for the creation of new handsets and to compete with [AT&T and Verizon] for such handsets" also fails. (Id. ¶ 161.) Sprint frames this allegation in terms of "innovation in handsets," (id. ¶ 169; see, e.g., id. ¶¶ 4, 91; Joint Opp'n at 29), but in order to state a claim to antitrust injury it must do more—again, it must allege its own injury-in-fact stemming from defendants' allegedly anticompetitive behavior. [*327] Along these lines, Sprint describes its past collaboration with T-Mobile in the Open Handset Alliance ("OHA"), where the two carriers worked with "mobile device and component manufacturers, software developers, semiconductor manufacturers," and others to "develop[] the Android mobile phone device [49] platform." (Sprint Compl. ¶¶ 88-90.) Sprint argues that the proposed acquisition would "stifle collaborative efforts like the OHA in the future." (Joint Opp'n at 29; see Sprint Compl. ¶ 169 ("Absent the proposed acquisition by AT&T, T-Mobile would continue to have the incentive and ability to partner with Sprint and other carriers.").) And yet Sprint's chosen example, the OHA, included a number of firms engaged in various aspects of the wireless market. (Id. ¶ 89.) Even accepting that the merger would eliminate T-Mobile as a potential participant in such ventures, there are no facts alleged that plausibly suggest their demise.

Community Publishers, Inc. v. Donrey Corp., 892 F. Supp. 1146 (W.D. Ark. 1995), is of no help to Sprint here. There, in determining that the plaintiff newspaper, the Daily Record, had antitrust standing to challenge the acquisition of one of its local competitors (the Times) by another of its local competitors (the Morning News), the Court found it significant that the challenged acquisition would spell the likely end "of a news and advertising sharing agreement" that was then in effect between the Daily Record and the Times. Cmty. Publishers, Inc., 892 F. Supp. at 1166. [50] Because of the dynamics of the local newspaper market and the fact that the agreement was only between the Daily Record and the Times, the Court assumed that the "anticompetitive incentive to terminate" the agreement would inevitably lead to the agreement's end. Id. at 1167. Here, by contrast, Sprint acknowledges that the OHA consists of many players, from many different industries. (Sprint Compl. ¶ 89.) Even if T-Mobile was a "critical, pioneering member[]" of the OHA, (id.), Sprint's complaint fails to allege facts in support of the claim that the proposed acquisition would cause the OHA to fall apart or leave Sprint without alternative partners in its quest to develop new wireless devices.

As discussed, however, the plaintiffs' complaints do state plausible claims that the proposed acquisition threatens them with loss and damage in the market for handsets generally. Because their threatened injuries "flow[] from that which makes defendants' acts unlawful" in that they would result from the post-merger AT&T's increased monopsony power in a market for inputs that are necessary to their ability to compete, Sprint and Cellular South have adequately alleged a threatened antitrust injury [51] with regard to the proposed acquisition's effects on their access to mobile wireless devices. Brunswick Corp., 429 U.S. at 489.

3. The Market for Wireless Spectrum and Network Development

To assess Sprint's claims of potential injury in the market for wireless spectrum, it is first necessary to provide a brief explanation of contemporary mobile wireless technology and the government's role in regulating certain aspects of it.

Mobile wireless devices "convert voice, text, and data into radio signals, which are then transmitted to a cell site," consisting of an antenna or an array of antennas and "typically located on a tower or building." [31] (Sprint Compl. ¶ 24.) The FCC, "which is authorized under federal law to [*328] allocate the use of radio spectrum, established cellular telecommunications service" in 1981. (Id. ¶ 25.) The FCC "license[s] bands of spectrum in increments measured in hertz . . . to wireless providers." (Id. ¶ 34.) "The value of particular spectrum bands depends on many factors." (Id.)

One factor affecting a band's value is the "propagation [52] characteristics of the spectrum." (Id.) For example, "Lower frequency signals travel greater distances and penetrate buildings and other obstructions more effectively." (Cellular South Compl. ¶ 48; see Sprint Compl. ¶ 35.) "The FCC has licensed radio spectrum for commercial mobile wireless use primarily in bands between 700 MHz and 2500 MHz." (Id. ¶ 35.) Because the 700 MHz band (so-called "beachfront spectrum") is the "lowest frequency spectrum that the FCC has licensed for commercial mobile wireless communications," and therefore has "excellent propagation characteristics" such that "it can be built out with fewer cell sites and therefore less expensively than high frequency spectrum," (id. ¶ 37), licenses for it are highly desirable from the perspective of wireless carriers. (Cellular South Compl. ¶ 48). [32]

[31] For an explanation of how signals from the wireless networks connect to the traditional wireline network, see Section II(B)(2), infra.

[32] Sprint alleges that "AT&T and Verizon together control 92 percent of the paired 700 MHz spectrum suitable for commercial mobile broad band use in the top 54 most populous U.S. markets, and 100 percent of the paired 700 MHz spectrum suitable for commercial mobile broadband in the top 10 markets." (Sprint Compl. ¶ 38.) Cellular South alleges that, when the FCC "auctioned much [53] of the 700 MHz spectrum" in early 2008, "AT&T and Verizon were able to purchase most" of it, "winning 85% (by value) of the paired spectrum." (Cellular South Compl. ¶ 47.) Sprint and Cellular South do not describe their own holdings of beachfront spectrum, nor do they allege how much T-Mobile has (and therefore how much of it AT&T would stand to gain if the proposed merger were to be consummated).

Another factor affecting a spectrum band's value is "the extent to which an ecosystem of compatible infrastructure, equipment, and handsets exists for the bands" (Sprint Compl. ¶ 34) because, for example, the antenna on a mobile device and that at a cell site must be tuned to the same band in order for them to connect. [33] (Id. ¶ 57.) "Wireless carriers design and build their network infrastructure for specific spectrum bands." (Id. ¶ 40.) Bands that are "in use already have ecosystems of compatible infrastructure, equipment, and handsets," but developing a network on bands that have only recently been allocated by the FCC, such as the desirable beachfront spectrum on the 700 MHz band, requires "considerable investment." (Id.)

To the extent that Cellular South's claims regarding wireless spectrum relate to cutting-edge wireless devices, these allegations have been addressed above. (See Section II(A)(2), supra.) Sprint, on the other hand, focuses on the fact that the merger "would add T-Mobile's spectrum to AT&T's already substantial spectrum holdings." (Id. ¶ 170.) Sprint also claims that, "[a]bsent the acquisition of T-Mobile, all of the national wireless carriers, with the possible exception of Verizon, likely would seek spectrum in 'new' bands for which the research and development costs for new equipment have not yet been incurred." (Id. ¶ 171.) Thus, "[b]y acquiring developed spectrum through the T-Mobile acquisition, AT&T would effectively and improperly shift the costs of spectrum development to Sprint and other carriers" and "further weaken their ability to compete on the merits by increasing [*329] their costs and delaying their access to new equipment." (Id.)

What differentiates [55] this claim from plaintiffs' devices claims is that here, Sprint has not alleged that the proposed transaction would be a merger-to-monopsony. Sprint does not claim that the acquisition would enable AT&T to muscle other carriers out of FCC auctions for wireless spectrum, but rather, that the transaction would add to AT&T's inventory of spectrum and reduce its network development costs. To the extent Sprint challenges the mere fact that, if AT&T acquires T-Mobile, it will also acquire some additional amount of spectrum, Sprint does not allege injury-in-fact. Without additional guidance as to this claim, the Court is left to assume that AT&T's acquisition of T-Mobile's spectrum would threaten Sprint with injury-in-fact only if the acquisition would curtail Sprint's access to a supply of spectrum that it demonstrably needed. The parties differ significantly as to the sufficiency of AT&T's spectrum holdings, [34] but Sprint neither alleges facts about T-Mobile's holdings nor describes its own holdings. Without more, Sprint has not alleged facts sufficient to state a claim to antitrust injury arising from AT&T's acquisition of T-Mobile's unknown stock of spectrum.

Sprint also claims antitrust injury on the theory that "[b]y acquiring developed spectrum through the T-Mobile acquisition, AT&T would effectively and improperly shift the costs of spectrum development to Sprint and other carriers[,] . . . further weak[ening] their ability to compete on the merits by increasing their costs and delaying their access to new equipment." (Id.; see id. ¶ 174.) In that it describes the carriers as collaborating successfully on market development, [35] this assertion stands in sharp contrast to a complaint that is otherwise thick with allegations of cut-throat rivalry and predatory behavior in the market for mobile wireless services. Furthermore, even if the carriers' uncoordinated [57] actions in developing new spectrum bands have yielded positive externalities in the past, what would be anticompetitive about the proposed acquisition if it eliminated those externalities and the carriers had to pay their own costs or, as it seems that Sprint is alleging, if the acquisition caused the costs to be split three ways rather than four? This assertion lacks sufficient factual support.

[33] Another requirement for connection is that a mobile device and [54] a mobile network use the same transmission technology. (See Sprint Compl. ¶ 57; Cellular South Compl. ¶ 38.) Transmission technologies are addressed in the Court's discussion of the market for roaming. (See Section II(B)(1), infra.)

[34] (Compare Sprint Compl. ¶ [56] 36 ("AT&T holds a nationwide average of 40 MHz below 1 GHz— almost three times Sprint's holdings below 1 GHz, and slightly less than Verizon's average of 54 MHz below 1 GHz.") with Motion to Dismiss Sprint at 7 ("AT&T's acquisition of T-Mobile is driven by AT&T's need to alleviate a severe shortage of spectrum and network capacity constraints. . . . Sprint faces no spectrum constraints today, and it benefits so long as AT&T faces high costs and constraints on its ability to innovate.").)

[35] (See Sprint Compl. ¶ 41 ("When multiple carriers build their networks and develop handsets at the same time in a newly allocated spectrum band, they all benefit from the shared costs of development.").)

For these reasons, defendants' Motion to Dismiss Sprint is granted as to Sprint's claims regarding spectrum and network development costs.

B. Vertical Effects

AT&T, T-Mobile, Sprint, and Cellular South also buy and sell services and products among themselves, such that Sprint and Cellular South challenge two vertical effects of the proposed acquisition—effects that alter the dynamics of their relationship with AT&T as purchasers of services that AT&T sells or that are allegedly related to services that AT&T sells.

Plaintiffs' first allegation of a vertical effect regards the market for roaming. [58] "Roaming agreements between carriers [*330] can be used to add coverage for subscribers beyond the carrier's network, or supplement its capacity." (Sprint Compl. ¶ 33.) [36] Regional carriers such as Cellular South are particularly dependent on roaming agreements: because they do not have nationwide networks, they rely on their contracts with the national carriers to provide their subscribers with coast-to-coast access to wireless networks. (Cellular South Compl. ¶ 27.) Both Sprint and Cellular South allege that the proposed acquisition threatens them harm because it will result in their paying higher prices for roaming. (See Sprint Compl. ¶ 183; Cellular South Compl. ¶ 27.)

Sprint alone raises a second claim regarding the proposed acquisition's vertical effects, this with regard to the market for "backhaul." Backhaul is also a necessary input [59] in the market for mobile wireless services in that it connects cell sites to the traditional wireline networks where calls are routed. In addition to acting as wireless carriers themselves, AT&T and Verizon also supply the lion's share of backhaul to other wireless carriers, including Sprint and, at the present, T-Mobile. (Sprint Compl. ¶ 149.) Sprint alleges that by eliminating T-Mobile as an independent purchaser of backhaul, the proposed acquisition will enable AT&T and Verizon to charge Sprint and other carriers higher prices for the service. (Id. ¶¶ 7, 182.)

What plaintiffs' claims regarding roaming and backhaul share in common is the general allegation that AT&T's purchase of T-Mobile will result in plaintiffs paying more to procure necessary inputs. Accordingly, as it did with regard to plaintiffs' allegations about the proposed acquisition's effect on the market for wireless devices, the Court concludes that plaintiffs' alleged injuries are of the type that the antitrust laws were designed to prevent. See (Section II(A)(2), supra); Eastman Kodak Co., 504 U.S. at 478; Tasty Baking Co., 653 F. Supp. at 1273-76. The inquiry focuses instead on the other component of antitrust injury: [60] have plaintiffs alleged, with the requisite specificity, a threatened injury-in-fact?

At the outset, it is important to note one critical difference between plaintiffs' devices allegations addressed above, on the one hand, and their roaming and backhaul allegations on the other. In the market for devices, plaintiffs allege that AT&T's acquisition of T-Mobile would be a merger-to-monopsony. Their allegations of loss or damage stem from the post-merger AT&T's purchasing power in the market for devices?an input market for all carriers. Because plaintiffs have alleged facts about the proposed transaction's effects on the output market (the market for mobile wireless services), and because they posited links between AT&T's increased selling power in the output market and its increased purchasing power in the input market, they have stated a plausible claim to antitrust injury in the market for wireless devices.

In the markets for roaming and backhaul, however, plaintiffs do not raise monopsony claims. Rather, plaintiffs allege that they, along with T-Mobile, purchase roaming and backhaul from AT&T and Verizon in various configurations. Plaintiffs' roaming and backhaul claims relate not to [61] the merged entity's purchasing power, but rather to its selling power, for they allege the proposed acquisition will increase concentration among sellers of roaming and backhaul (and that they will [*331] be affected as purchasers in those markets). The economic [36] For example, if a subscriber of Carrier A is in a location that is not served by Carrier A but that is served by Carrier B and Carrier C, the subscriber will still be able to use her phone if and only if Carrier A has a roaming agreement with Carrier B or Carrier C, or both. In this example, Carriers B and C are in a position to sell roaming to Carrier A.

analysis does not differ and the antitrust laws are concerned with both monopsony and monopoly power. [37] But whereas factual allegations about the output market (for mobile wireless services), combined with descriptions of the links between the merged entity's power as a seller in the output market and its power as a buyer in the input market (for mobile wireless devices), sufficed to support plaintiffs' claims regarding devices, those allegations are less directly relevant to plaintiffs' claims regarding roaming and backhaul. In order to successfully allege that the proposed transaction threatens them with injuries-in-fact in the markets for roaming and backhaul, plaintiffs must describe those markets with greater specificity than they have done if Twombly is to be satisfied.

1. The Market for Roaming

Roaming allows one carrier's subscribers to access another carrier's network when they are outside of their own network's range, as long as the two carriers' networks are compatible and as long as the carriers have a roaming agreement. (Sprint Compl. ¶¶ 55, 57; Cellular South Compl. ¶ 27.)

While a number of factors determine whether two networks are compatible, the parties emphasize transmission technology. [38] (See Sprint Compl. ¶¶ 43-47; Cellular South Compl. ¶¶ 38, 40, 44.) A transmission technology is, as the name implies, a particular means of transmitting information—perhaps akin to a language. Two different transmission technologies predominate in the contemporary domestic market for mobile wireless services. Of the national carriers, AT&T and T-Mobile use the "Global System for Mobile Communications" ("GSM"), and Verizon and Sprint use "Code Division Multiple Access" ("CDMA"). (Sprint Compl. ¶ 44; Cellular [63] South Compl. ¶ 38.) Ninety-seven percent of Cellular South's customers use CDMA, whereas three percent—the customers of Corr Wireless, which Cellular South recently acquired—use GSM. (Cellular South Compl. ¶¶ 20-21, 67.) Because they do not share a language, an AT&T subscriber's phone is technologically incapable of connecting to the Verizon network but can connect to the T-Mobile and Corr Wireless networks, and a Sprint subscriber's phone cannot connect to AT&T's or T-Mobile's networks but can connect to Verizon's network, and so on.

Carriers have used various transmission technologies over time, but this basic divide between GSM and CDMA has persisted to the current, "third generation" networks ("3G"). [39] (Id. ¶ 38; Sprint Compl. ¶ 45.) Cellular South alleges that, with the move to "fourth generation" technology ("4G"), "all of the wireless industry is moving toward . . . 4G-LTE[,] . . . the 'gold standard' of wireless service." [40] (Cellular [*332] South Compl. ¶ 40.) For the present, [64] however, device and network incompatibility is a powerful dynamic in the market for mobile wireless services. This is especially true for regional carriers, such as Cellular South, which depend on their ability to buy roaming from the national carriers in order to provide their customers with nationwide access. (Id. ¶ 27, 65.)

Thus, carriers sign roaming agreements to supplement their networks' capacities and so their customers do not lose service when traveling outside their service areas. (Sprint Compl. ¶¶ 33, 55.) "Verizon and AT&T have large wireless network footprints in the United States," and "therefore have a higher percentage of on-network calls than other carriers" so "their subscribers have less need for roaming. AT&T and Verizon realize revenue from carriers who contract for roaming services over their networks." (Id. ¶ 56.) Implicit in the fact that Verizon [65] and AT&T

[37] See Weyerhaeuser Co., 549 U.S. at 322 ("'[M]onopoly and monopsony are symmetrical distortions of competition from an economic standpoint[.]' . . . The kinship [62] between monopoly and monopsony suggests that similar legal standards should apply to claims of monopolization and to claims of monopolization." (first alteration in the original) (quoting Vogel v. Am. Soc. of Appraisers, 744 F.2d 598, 601 (7th Cir. 1984))).

[38] In addition to using the same transmission technology, a phone must be tuned to the same spectrum band as a competing carriers' network in order to function. (See Sprint Compl. ¶ 57; Section II(A)(3), supra.)

[39] For example, "AT&T and T-Mobile use GSM-based High Speed Pack Access ('HSPA') technology" for their 3G mobile broadband service, and "Verizon and Sprint use[] CDMA-based Evolution Data Optimized ('EV-DO')." (Sprint Compl. ¶ 45.)

[40] For its current 4G network, however, Sprint "uses WiMax technology." (Sprint Compl. ¶ 46.)

have "less need" is the fact that they both buy and sell roaming, but Sprint's complaint says nothing more about their purchasing activities. [41] Nor does Sprint provide any description of its own roaming contracts.

Rather, Sprint merely alleges that "[t]he merger would raise [its] input costs for roaming." (Id. ¶ 183.) Because Sprint is a CDMA carrier and AT&T and T-Mobile are GSM carriers, however, Sprint cannot purchase roaming from defendants. In order to justify its allegation of threatened harm, Sprint posits the following sequence: After the merger, AT&T will increase its retail wireless rates.

> Increasing its retail wireless rates would give AT&T an incentive to increase its roaming prices, and increasing its roaming prices to its rivals would support higher retail prices. With AT&T setting higher prices, Verizon would have an incentive to increase its retail [66] prices and also to raise its roaming fees to CDMA carriers, including Sprint.

(Sprint Compl. ¶ 185.) Even accepting for the moment that the acquisition will prompt AT&T to raise its retail rates, there remain three assumptions that underlie this scenario for which Sprint alleges no factual basis: First, that AT&T's increased retail wireless rates would give it "an incentive to increase" the rates it charges its competitors for roaming; second, that Verizon would match AT&T's increase in retail rates rather than keep its prices low to attract new customers; and third, similar to the first, that Verizon's increased retail wireless rates would prompt it to raise its roaming fees to Sprint.

When counsel for Sprint was asked at oral argument to explain where the complaint alleged facts to support these assumptions, counsel did not cite facts and instead referenced a "basic economic principle" and an Antitrust Law Journal article upon which Sprint relied for its discussion of customer foreclosure. (10/24 Tr. 76 ("[T]his is a basic economic principle. It's cited in the leading economics article, . . . Riordan and Salop. . . . We cited it."); see Joint Opp'n at 39-40 (discussing the market for [67] backhaul, where Sprint is a customer of AT&T's (citing Michael H. Riordan & Steven C. Salop, Evaluating Vertical Merger: A Post-Chicago Approach, 63 Antitrust L.J. 513, 557 (1995) (addressing customer foreclosure))).) But the referenced "principle" is nowhere to be found in the materials cited, since they relate to customer foreclosure and Sprint is not a customer of either AT&T or T-Mobile in [*333] the market for roaming. Without more, Sprint's allegation amounts to mere speculation, not a plausible scenario wherein Sprint would suffer injury-in-fact from the merger. See Twombly, 550 U.S. at 570; Broadcom Corp., 501 F.3d at 321-22. Defendants' Motion to Dismiss Sprint is therefore granted as to Sprint's roaming claim.

Cellular South, on the other hand, presents more concrete claims to antitrust injury in the market for roaming when it alleges that, "[b]y reducing the number of potential roaming partners, the merger threatens" it with "pay[ing] higher roaming prices." (Cellular South Compl. ¶ 27.) The crucial difference is that Cellular South's Corr Wireless subsidiary, which uses the GSM transmission technology, has been a roaming customer of T-Mobile and is currently a roaming customer [68] of AT&T. (Id. ¶ 67.) As such, given that roaming is a necessary input for Cellular South, the fact that "the removal of T-Mobile from the marketplace would leave only AT&T as a potential GSM roaming partner," (id. ¶ 68), might be enough to demonstrate Cellular South's antitrust standing.

Defendants protest that only "a small fraction of Cellular South's customer base relies on roaming technology compatible with AT&T's and T-Mobile's networks." (Motion to Dismiss Cellular South at 8.) This is certainly true, and defendants are correct that "Cellular South's assertion that AT&T and T-Mobile's merger will nevertheless somehow result in Cellular South paying higher roaming rates for its CDMA technology to Verizon has no greater factual support than the parallel allegation in Sprint's complaint." (Id. at 9 (emphasis deleted).) Cellular South has not alleged facts that would plausibly suggest that any cost increase by the post-merger AT&T for GSM roaming would hop the technological divide to CDMA roaming. Accordingly, defendants' Motion to Dismiss Cellular South is granted as to Cellular South's CDMA roaming claims.

[41] In court, counsel for AT&T represented that "even AT&T needs roaming. In fact, we are [a] net buyer of roaming from Cellular South." (10/24/11 Tr. 50-51.) The Court does not consider this representation for its factual value, but rather highlights it as an example of the kind of information that the complaints omit.

Defendants' Motion is denied, however, as to Cellular South's GSM roaming [69] claims. Defendants have cited no case establishing a de minimis exception to antitrust injury. Even if Corr Wireless represents only a small part of Cellular South's business, Cellular South's allegations suggest that its threatened loss from the merger is plausible.

First, Cellular South alleges that regional carriers' ability to procure roaming at reasonable rates is crucial to their business model: "Reasonable and affordable roaming access has always been, and continues to be, a prerequisite for any wireless operator that does not own a nationwide network. . . . No wireless carrier can survive without access to a nationwide network for voice and data transmissions when the carrier's customers are outside the carrier's service area." (Cellular South Compl. ¶¶ 64-65.) Second, Cellular South alleges that Corr Wireless had significant difficulties securing roaming agreements in the past. (Id. ¶ 67 ("AT&T unreasonably and wrongfully refused a 3G roaming agreement with Corr Wireless until very recently, and even then, offered only unreasonable terms that amount to a constructive refusal to permit 3G roaming.").) Third, Cellular South claims that Corr Wireless's experience was not unique, [70] and that AT&T has a history of engaging in "exclusionary practices." (Id. ¶ 71.) For example, "Cellular South alleges, on information and believe, that AT&T has engaged in a pattern and practice of denying roaming agreements to smaller carriers, as part of its efforts to monopolize local markets and to injure competition." (Id.) Looking to the future, Cellular South worries in particular about whether it will be able to negotiate 4G-LTE roaming agreements with the national carriers. (Id. ¶¶ 66, 69-71.). [*334] Taken together, these allegations of threatened price increases and possible foreclosure suffice to show Cellular South's antitrust standing to the extent that it relies on T-Mobile and AT&T for a critical input.

Defendants' appeal to the fact of FCC regulation of roaming does not, at this stage, defeat Cellular South's showing. Defendants argue that FCC regulations require "all mobile wireless carriers to provide roaming for common carrier services to other carriers on a just, reasonable, and non-discriminatory basis." (Motion to Dismiss Cellular South at 9. [42]) Yet in its complaint, Cellular South has alleged facts suggesting that AT&T presently does not negotiate roaming agreements [71] in good faith (see Cellular South Compl. ¶ 71)—facts which the Court must accept as true for purposes of deciding defendants' motion, Twombly, 550 U.S. at 556, and facts which therefore must be heard to question the adequacy of the FCC's rules. [43]

2. The Market for Backhaul

Backhaul comprises the physical infrastructure—dedicated copper, microwave, or fiber optic circuits—that connects cell sites to the wireline network to which wireless calls are routed. [44] (Sprint Compl. ¶ 58.) "Wireless carriers,

In Trinko, the Supreme Court noted that, "in certain circumstances, 'regulation significantly diminishes the [72] likelihood of major antitrust harm.'" 540 U.S. at 412 (quoting Town of Concord v. Boston Edison Co., 915 F.2d 17, 25 (1st Cir. 1990)). But when considering a motion to dismiss, "likelihood" is not the issue: this Court is concerned with plausibility. "Asking for plausible grounds to infer" a threatened injury-in-fact "does not impose a probability requirement at the pleading stage." Twombly, 550 U.S. at 556. Furthermore, Trinko did not address antitrust standing, see 540 U.S. at 416 n.5, and instead considered whether the plaintiff had stated an antitrust claim on the merits. See id. at 417-18 (Stevens, J., dissenting) ("I would not decide the merits of the [antitrust] claim unless and until such a claim is advanced by" a plaintiff with antitrust standing.).

[44] Backhaul is one form of "special [73] access," and is regulated by the FCC's "special access rules." (Sprint Compl. ¶ 58; see id. ¶¶ 58-62 (criticizing the effectiveness of the FCC's regulatory regime).) At least according to counsel for Sprint, the FCC uses the terms "backhaul" and "special access" interchangeably. (10/24/11 Tr. 65.) This Court will do the same: especially including Sprint, depend on backhaul to connect their cell sites to their networks and to the public switched telephone network." (Id. ¶ 125.)

Imagine a call placed from a cellphone to a landline phone. Voice data travels wirelessly from the device to a cell site (on a given band of spectrum and via a particular transmission technology, as discussed). [*335] The data then travels via backhaul from the cell site to the wireline network (where the call is routed [45]). Once connected to the wireline network, the data finally makes its way to the recipient's phone, and the call is completed.

The contemporary market for backhaul reflects the recent history of the telecommunications industry. "For decades" prior to its breakup in 1984, "the Bell System controlled wireline monopolies across the country." (Id. ¶ 5.) Since then, Sprint alleges that "the 'Ma Bell' descendants, AT&T and Verizon, have largely reassembled the Bell monopolies under their joint control." (Id.) Therefore, AT&T and Verizon own wires—both the wireline networks, which they control as "[t]he two remaining [incumbent local exchange carriers ("ILECs")] of the old Bell System," and the backhaul that connects cell sites to those networks. (Id. ¶ 59.) Indeed, Sprint claims that AT&T and Verizon "are the predominant providers of [backhaul]," although, crucially, they compete with "some independent telecommunications firms" that also provide backhaul. (Id.) Specifically, Sprint alleges that "[o]ver 90 percent of all special access services in the United States, including backhaul, are provided by the ILECs, primarily AT&T and Verizon." (Id. ¶ 149.)

Because it reflects the initial inheritances from the Bell System and the subsequent mergers among [75] the Baby Bells, the market for backhaul is geographically bifurcated. AT&T and Verizon have distinct traditional service territories, such that they rarely compete with each other as backhaul providers. (Id. ¶¶ 134, 177; see also 10/24/11 Tr. 66 (Counsel for Sprint representing that "AT&T has [a historical legacy incumbent monopoly] in [its] half of the country.").) AT&T's ILEC territory comprises twenty-two states. (Sprint Compl. ¶ 181.) Sprint alleges that "AT&T has market or monopoly power for backhaul in a number of relevant geographic markets . . . in its traditional service territor[y]." (Id. ¶ 151.)

Like Sprint's claims to antitrust injury in the markets for mobile wireless devices and roaming, Sprint's claim to antitrust injury in the market for backhaul alleges that the proposed acquisition would increase Sprint's costs for a necessary input. (Id. ¶ 175.) Sprint purchases backhaul from AT&T. (Id. ¶ 176 ("Sprint pays about $1 billion per year for . . . backhaul, mostly to AT&T and Verizon.").) Where these claims differ, however, is with regard to T-Mobile's current role in the market. T-Mobile, while not a potential roaming partner for Sprint due to the incompatibility of their [76] networks, both buys and sells roaming. With regard to backhaul, by contrast, T-Mobile is only a fellow purchaser.

Sprint cannot allege, therefore, that the proposed transaction would be a merger-to-monopoly. By acquiring T-Mobile, AT&T will not gain any backhaul infrastructure, and the merger would not lead immediately to increased concentration among backhaul suppliers. Sprint gets there in a roundabout way, though, by alleging first that the acquisition will decrease the number of backhaul purchasers. Sprint quotes an industry association filing before the FCC stating that "'AT&T has indicated that it will move T-Mobile's backhaul traffic on to its own transport network wherever possible.'" (Id. ¶ 181.) The same filing states that T-Mobile currently sources backhaul "'for approximately 20 percent of its cell sites'" from independent providers, i.e., not AT&T and not Verizon. (Id. ¶ 181; see id. ¶ 178-79 (describing T-Mobile "as a purchaser of backhaul with a strong interest in obtaining services [*336] from alternative backhaul providers" and as a source of "business opportunities for competitive providers").) When the merger eliminates that demand, Sprint's theory goes, independent providers [77] will exit the market and the incentives for entry by new providers will be diminished. (Id. ¶¶ 152, 178-79.) At the end of this chain of events, the because the FCC's regulations do not factor into the Court's analysis, any distinction between backhaul and special access is not particularly relevant here. However, the fact that Sprint makes distinct assertions about backhaul and special access, (see, e.g., Sprint Compl. ¶¶ 149, 179-80), without defining the difference between them is illustrative of the complaint's vagueness with regard to this market.

[45] Calls between [74] cellphones are also typically routed through the wireline network.

market for backhaul is more concentrated and Sprint will suffer harm when AT&T and Verizon, no longer checked by rival suppliers, are able to raise their rates. (Id. ¶ 175.)

It bears repeating that, as has been established and as defendants concede (see Reply at 2), such an injury would be of the type that the antitrust laws are designed to prevent. [46] (See Section II(A)(2), supra.) Having satisfied the second component of antitrust injury, if Sprint stated a claim to threatened injury-in-fact in the backhaul market that was plausible on its face, Sprint would succeed.

As it stands, Sprint's claims fail. Sprint alleges no facts to support its theory that the elimination of T-Mobile as a purchaser of backhaul will increase concentration among backhaul sellers by putting the independent providers out of business. Sprint might have described the independent providers (by more than just name (see Sprint Compl. ¶ 149)) and the local markets where T-Mobile's presence as an independent purchaser ensures their survival. Crucially, Sprint might have provided even rough estimates of the percentage of the independent purchasers' business that T-Mobile represents. [47] Sprint's complaint, however, says nothing about the sell side of the market apart from its statements regarding AT&T's and Verizon's present market power and its claims about barriers to entry and expansion. (See id. ¶¶ 149-51, 177-79.) The Court therefore has no means by which to assess the plausibility of the scenario Sprint suggests. That the scenario is extreme—positing that the decrease in demand after T-Mobile's elimination as a purchaser will be so significant as to be lethal to the independent providers, leading to a price increase, whereas [79] demand decreases usually coincide with price decreases—only makes the Court's task more difficult. At the pleadings stage, Sprint need not supply "detailed factual allegations," and yet it must state facts sufficient to "raise a right to relief above the speculative level." Twombly, 550 U.S. at 555. Because its complaint leaves so much to conjecture, Sprint fails to adequately allege a threatened injury-in-fact in the backhaul market. Defendants' Motion to Dismiss Sprint is granted as to Sprint's backhaul claim.

CONCLUSION

Time and again, the Supreme Court has emphasized that "'a district court must retain the power to insist upon some specificity in pleading before allowing a potentially massive factual controversy to proceed.'" Id. at 558 (quoting Associated Gen. Contractors, 459 U.S. at 528 n.17). It is no accident [*337] that antitrust cases provoke these recitations.

While perhaps "elusive," [48] the antitrust injury requirement not only aligns private antitrust enforcement to the aims of the antitrust [80] laws; it also performs the more conventional function of only allowing plaintiffs to proceed on claims made facially plausible by the allegation of sufficient facts. Id. at 570; see NicSand, 507 F.3d at 451. It is unsurprising, therefore, that established precedent forecloses competitors' claims that challenge a proposed transaction's effect on competition without sufficiently alleging the threat of an injury-in-fact that they face and that is "'of the type the antitrust laws were designed to prevent.'" Cargill, 479 U.S. at 113 (quoting Brunswick Corp., 429 U.S. at 489). Such claims belong to the government. But where private plaintiffs have successfully pleaded antitrust injury, the fact that they are defendants' competitors is no bar. Cf. id. at 120-22 (rejecting the government's proposed per se rule denying competitors standing to challenge acquisitions on the basis of predatory pricing theories). [49]

[46] The parties' disputes as to the application of cases finding antitrust standing when a competitor raises its rivals' costs by means of an anticompetitive act are therefore beside the point. (See Joint Opp'n at 39-44 (citing, inter alia, Ford Motor Co. v. United States, 405 U.S. 562, 92 S. Ct. 1142, 31 L. Ed. 2d 492 (1972); AlliedSignal, Inc. v. B.F. Bridgestone/Firestone Inc., 140 F.3d 1228 (9th Cir. 1998)); Reply at 16-17 (disputing [78] plaintiffs' characterization of Ford Motor Co.).)

[47] That T-Mobile relies on independent providers for 20 percent of its backhaul needs, (Sprint Compl. ¶ 181), is irrelevant to how much the independent providers rely on T-Mobile as a customer.

Defendants' Motion to Dismiss Sprint and Motion to Dismiss Cellular South are both denied insofar as they challenge plaintiffs' claims to antitrust injury with regard to the proposed acquisition's effects on the market for mobile wireless devices. (See Section II(A)(2), supra.) Defendants' Motion to Dismiss Cellular South is denied insofar as it attacks Cellular South's antitrust standing to pursue claims regarding the role of Corr Wireless as a purchaser of GSM roaming. (See Section II(B)(1), supra.) Defendants' motions are granted as to plaintiffs' remaining claims.

ORDER DENYING DEFENDANTS' MOTION TO STRIKE AND MOTION TO DISMISS PLAINTIFF'S FIRST AMENDED COMPLAINT

(Docket Nos. 116, 117)

Plaintiff E-Pass Technologies, Inc. filed suit against its former attorneys, Defendants Moses & Singer, LLP, and Stephen N. Weiss, Esq., asserting claims for negligent misrepresentation, breach of fiduciary duty, and professional negligence. In its First Amended Complaint ("FAC"), Plaintiff also includes allegations touching [*2] directly on federal patent law, alleging that defendants misunderstood Plaintiff's '311 Patent and failed "to properly construe the validity, construction or effect of Federal patent law to the '311 Patent." FAC ¶ 9. An action is currently pending in state court between the same parties, with Plaintiff asserting only state law bases for its claims against Defendants.

Pending before the Court are Defendants' Motion to Strike portions of Plaintiff's FAC on the grounds of judicial estoppel and Full Faith and Credit, Docket No. 116, and their Motion to Dismiss Plaintiff's FAC on the grounds of lack of subject matter jurisdiction and the Colorado River doctrine, Docket No. 117. The Court held a hearing on this matter on October 24, 2011. After considering the parties' submissions and oral argument, and for the reasons set forth below, the Court hereby DENIES Defendants' motions to dismiss and strike Plaintiff's FAC.

I. FACTUAL & PROCEDURAL BACKGROUND

A. State Court Lawsuit

E-Pass initiated the state court litigation in January 2009. Docket No. 20 (Ord Decl., Ex. A) (docket sheet for state court litigation). In the state court action, the operative complaint is the second amended complaint, [*3] which Plaintiff filed August 3, 2009, alleging causes of action for negligent misrepresentation, breach of fiduciary duty and negligence based on defendants' representation of E-Pass in the federal patent litigation. E-Pass alleges in the state action that "Defendants pursued, and continued to pursue, a litigation that, in the exercise of reasonable care, they should not have advised E-Pass to pursue." Mot. for Leave to Amend at 3. More specifically, E-Pass alleges the following.

In February 2000, E-Pass obtained ownership of the '311 patent. At about the same time, E-Pass hired Moses & Singer, a law firm, to represent it in, e.g., seeking license and business opportunities with respect to the '311 patent. Mr. Weiss is a partner in the Moses law firm and was the primary attorney working on E-Pass's matters.

Defendants advised E-Pass to forego licensing and business opportunities with respect to the patent and instead recommended focusing on suing entities that Defendants believed were infringing on the patent. Defendants failed to disclose that, by engaging in this strategy, E-Pass would become saddled with a reputation in the patent community as a "patent troll."

Following Defendants' [*4] advice, E-Pass agreed to file a patent infringement lawsuit against 3Com in February 2000. Prior to filing the lawsuit, Defendants failed to conduct a proper investigation to determine whether the lawsuit had a legal and/or factual basis. In August 2002, the federal trial court in the 3Com case granted 3Com's motion for summary judgment. Subsequently, that decision was reversed by the Federal Circuit, and the case was remanded. This gave E-Pass the opportunity to conduct further investigation and discovery to support its case.

Instead of focusing on the 3Com case, however, Defendants recommended filing more patent infringement lawsuits, and, accordingly, an action was initiated against Visa in October 203 and another against PalmOne in February 2004. A lawsuit was also filed against Microsoft.

In March 2005, 3Com, Visa, and PalmOne filed motions for summary judgment. Defendants failed to obtain (whether through discovery or other informal avenues) any new evidence to oppose the motions. In March 2006, the federal trial court granted summary judgment to 3Com, Visa, and PalmOne. The court held, inter alia, that "E-Pass failed to adduce any evidence to support a finding that any defendant [*5] or its customers practiced all of the steps of the claimed '311 Patent method." Subsequently, the trial court granted 3Com, Visa, and PalmOne's motion for attorneys' fees, explaining, inter alia, that E-Pass had conducted a '"minimalist pre-filing investigation,"' that E-

Pass had failed to provide any evidence in support of its case, and that E-Pass had thereby engaged in vexatious or unjustified litigation. After the trial court's summary judgment decision was affirmed by the Federal Circuit in January 2007, the trial court awarded fees and costs to 3Com, Visa, and Palm in an amount exceeding $2.3 million. The fee decision was also affirmed by the Federal Circuit.

Thus, after seven years of litigation, E-Pass had paid Defendants millions of dollars in fees and costs, failed to obtain any benefit as a result of Defendants' work, had been saddled with the reputation of being a patent troll (and therefore had no ability to market the '311 patent), and forced to pay the fees and costs of 3Com, Visa, and PalmOne. E-Pass also failed to prevail in its lawsuit against Microsoft.

Thereafter, E-Pass brought the state suit against its former lawyers. In October 2009, the state trial court rejected [*6] Plaintiff's claim that there are no issues of patent law in the state action and granted Defendants' demurrer based on lack of subject matter jurisdiction. The state trial court concluded there was no subject matter jurisdiction because the claims required resolution of substantial questions of patent law, and as such raised questions within the exclusive jurisdiction of the federal court.

On appeal to the California Court of Appeal, Plaintiff argued that the trial court erred in concluding that its claims raised substantial issues of patent law, and represented that E-Pass will not challenge the claim construction theory in the state action. Mot. for Leave to Amend at 6. Specifically,

> At oral argument, counsel for E-Pass expressly disavowed any challenge to the claim construction proffered and argued by defendant attorneys in the federal litigation. Counsel confirmed that E-Pass does not allege any negligence with respect to the manner in which defendant attorneys defined the scope of the patent. Rather, E-Pass alleges that the defendant attorneys knew or should have known that they did not have sufficient evidence to support the claims being asserted.

E-Pass Technologies, Inc. v. Moses & Singer, LLP, 189 Cal. App. 4th 1140, 1148, 117 Cal. Rptr. 3d 516 (2010). [*7] On the basis of Plaintiff's representations, the Court of Appeal reversed the trial court's decision on November 5, 2010, and held that claims did not raise substantial issues of patent law and thus the state court had jurisdiction to hear Plaintiff's claims. Id. at 1142. The Court of Appeal noted that it "base[d] [its] decision upholding state court jurisdiction on the limited scope of E-Pass's allegations, as acknowledged in its briefs and at oral argument. On remand E-Pass will be bound by the narrow construction proffered in this court." Id. at 1148 n.4.

B. Federal Court Lawsuit

In December 2009, after the Superior Court's ruling but before the Court of Appeal decision, E-Pass initiated this federal lawsuit. E-Pass pled the same claims in the federal lawsuit as in the state lawsuit based on the same underlying facts. Based on these allegations, E-Pass asserts claims for (1) negligent misrepresentation, (2) breach of fiduciary duty, and (3) professional negligence (i.e., legal malpractice). With respect the first claim, E-Pass alleges, inter alia, that Defendants negligently misrepresented that "they could prove infringement of the '311 Patent, and that there was sufficient evidence [*8] to support E-Pass'[s] claims asserted in the Underlying Actions [against 3Com, Visa, PalmOne, and Microsoft]." Compl. ¶ 42; FAC ¶ 44. With respect to the second claim, E-Pass alleges, inter alia, that Defendants breached their fiduciary duty to E-Pass by "misle[ading] [it] into believing it had viable, valuable patent claims by misrepresenting to or concealing from E-Pass the true facts showing the opposite, and by assuring E-Pass positive outcomes in the Underlying Actions." Compl. ¶ 50(f); FAC ¶ 53(g). E-Pass seems to include, inter alia, the above allegations as part of its third claim for professional negligence (i.e., legal malpractice). The original complaint in this Court alleges jurisdiction based only on 28 U.S.C. § 1338. Compl. ¶ 7.

At a June 22, 2011 Case Management Conference ("CMC") following the California Court of Appeal's decision, Defendants argued that this Court may not have subject matter jurisdiction over this action in light of the California Court of Appeal opinion in the corollary state action. See E-Pass v. Moses & Singer, 189 Cal. App. 4th 1140, 117 Cal. Rptr. 3d 516 (2010). In response, Plaintiff asserted diversity as an alternative ground for jurisdiction. The Court gave Plaintiff [*9] an opportunity to file an FAC within twenty days. Docket No. 98. After the hearing, Plaintiff asserts that it discovered "minor modifications" it needed to make in order to properly allege original jurisdiction under § 1338. Mot. for Leave to Amend at 2. Specifically, Plaintiff asserts that, during discovery in the federal action, it discovered the basis for a federal theory of liability regarding the patent misconstruction. Mot. for Leave to Amend at 5-6. Plaintiff has also admitted that it views the state court decision upholding jurisdiction as unduly restrictive, and thus would now prefer to litigate in federal court. See Joint CMC, Docket No. 96, at 2-3.

Accordingly, Plaintiff's FAC now alleges harm arising, inter alia, from Defendants' "misunderstanding of the '311 Patent and Defendants' failure to properly construe the validity, construction, or effect of Federal patent law to the '311 Patent. See FAC ¶ 9. The federal action includes all theories of liability against Moses & Singer in the state action, plus these additional allegations that are not included in (indeed expressly excluded from) the state action. Mot. for Leave to Amend at 4. The FAC alleges federal jurisdiction [*10] based on both patent law and diversity. FAC ¶¶ 8-9. Plaintiff avers that it will dismiss the state action against Moses & Singer and Weiss once this Court rules that it has jurisdiction under either of its alternative theories. Mot. for Leave to Amend at 5. Plaintiff will then maintain the state action only against the Squire, Sanders & Dempsey defendants, who cannot be joined in the federal suit due to statute of limitations problems. Mot. for Leave to Amend at 6.

II. DISCUSSION

Defendants assert a number of theories for dismissing, staying, or striking Plaintiff's FAC. They argue that the Court should strike Plaintiff's new allegations in the FAC (those asserting Defendants misunderstood and misconstrued the patent) based on judicial estoppel and the Full Faith and Credit Act. See Docket No. 116. In addition, they argue that the Court should dismiss the FAC for lack of subject matter jurisdiction and dismiss or stay the action under the Colorado River doctrine. See Docket No. 117.

A. Legal Standard

Under Rule 12(f), a "court may strike from a pleading an insufficient defense or any redundant, immaterial, impertinent, or scandalous matter." Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(f). "Immaterial matter is [*11] that which has no essential or important relationship to the claim for relief or the defenses being pleaded." Fantasy, Inc. v. Fogerty, 984 F.2d 1524, 1527 (9th Cir. 1993) (internal quotation marks omitted), overruled on other grounds, 510 U.S. 517, 114 S. Ct. 1023, 127 L. Ed. 2d 455 (1994). "The function of a 12(f) motion to strike is to avoid the expenditure of time and money that must arise from litigating spurious issues by dispensing with those issues prior to trial." Id. (citation and internal quotation marks omitted). When ruling on a motion to strike, a court views the pleading under attack in the light most favorable to the nonmoving party. See RDF Media Ltd. v. Fox Broad Co., 372 F. Supp. 2d 556, 561 (C.D. Cal. 2005). Courts generally disfavor motions to strike because striking is such a drastic remedy. See Stanbury Law Firm v. IRS, 221 F.3d 1059, 1063 (8th Cir. 2000) (stating that "striking a party's pleadings is an extreme measure, and, as a result, we have previously held that 'motions to strike under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(f) are viewed with disfavor and are infrequently granted'").

A motion to dismiss pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(b)(6) tests the sufficiency of a complaint, facilitating dismissal [*12] to the extent the pleading fails to state a claim upon which relief can be granted. Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6). The pleading is construed in the light most favorable to the non-moving party and all material allegations in it are taken to be true. Sanders v. Kennedy, 794 F.2d 478, 481 (9th Cir.1986). However, even under the liberal pleading standard of Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 8(a)(2), "a plaintiff's obligation to provide the grounds of his entitlement to relief requires more than labels and conclusions, and a formulaic recitation of the elements of a cause of action will not do." Twombly, 550 U.S. at 555, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (citing Papasan v. Allain, 478 U.S. 265, 286, 106 S. Ct. 2932, 92 L. Ed. 2d 209 (1986) (internal brackets and quotation marks omitted)).

Hence, the Court need not assume unstated facts, nor will it draw unwarranted inferences. Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 129 S.Ct. 1937, 1950, 173 L. Ed. 2d 868 (2009) ("Determining whether a complaint states a plausible claim for relief . . . [is] a context-specific task that requires the reviewing court to draw on its judicial experience and common sense."); Cousins v. Lockyer, 568 F.3d 1063, 1067 (9th Cir. 2009); Sprewell v. Golden State Warriors, 266 F.3d 979, 988 (9th Cir. 2001) ("Nor is the court required [*13] to accept as true allegations that are merely conclusory, unwarranted deductions of fact, or unreasonable inferences.").

B. Judicial Estoppel

Defendants contend that Plaintiff expressly represented to the state court that it was not pursuing any federally-based claims against Defendants. As the Court of Appeal noted, "At oral argument, counsel for E-Pass expressly disavowed any challenge to the claim construction proffered and argued by defendant attorneys in the federal litigation. Counsel confirmed that E-Pass does not allege any negligence with respect to the manner in which defendant attorneys defined the scope of the patent." E-Pass Technologies, Inc. v. Moses & Singer, LLP, 189 Cal. App. 4th 1140, 1148, 117 Cal. Rptr. 3d 516 (2010). On the basis of these statements, the state Court of Appeal allowed Plaintiff to proceed in state court finding there was no exclusive federal jurisdiction over the claims as asserted and limited the lawsuit to what the state court concluded were narrow claims that raised no substantial issue of patent law. Id. at 1148 n.4 ("We base our decision upholding state court jurisdiction on the limited scope of E-Pass's allegations, as acknowledged in its briefs and at oral argument. [*14] On remand E-Pass will be bound by the narrow construction proffered in this court.").

In the aftermath of the state court's decision, Plaintiff represented at this Court's CMC on June 15, 2011 that it would remain in federal court because it viewed the state court decision as too restrictive. Hoffman Decl. ¶ 3. Plaintiff's FAC thus raises as substantive patent law allegations for the first time, claims that Defendants "misunderst[ood] [] the '311 Patent and [] fail[ed] to properly construe the validity, construction or effect of Federal patent law to the '311 Patent." FAC ¶¶ 9, 65(c).

Defendants argue that Plaintiff should be judicially estopped from making such assertions because it "had unequivocally and expressly stated to two state courts that its claims do not encompass substantial issues of federal patent law meriting federal question jurisdiction." Mot. to Strike at 4. Plaintiff argues in response that its current position is not "clearly inconsistent" with its position in state court. Plaintiff contends that it never argued in state court that Defendants understood the '311 patent or properly construed it; rather, it merely excluded those allegations from its state court claims. [*15] Opp. to Mot. to Strike at 5. Because Plaintiff has always included federal patent jurisdiction as its basis for jurisdiction in the federal action, Plaintiff argues that there can be no question that its state court statements were not inconsistent with its actions in this Court and do not bind it here. Opp. to Mot. to Strike at 2-3.

"Federal law governs the application of judicial estoppel in federal courts." Johnson v. Oregon, 141 F.3d 1361, 1364 (9th Cir. 1998). A district court has discretion in deciding whether judicial estoppel is applicable. See New Hampshire v. Maine, 532 U.S. 742, 750, 121 S. Ct. 1808, 149 L. Ed. 2d 968 (2001) ("[J]udicial estoppel is an equitable doctrine invoked by a court at its discretion") (quotations omitted); Estate of Shapiro v. United States, 634 F.3d 1055, 1057 (9th Cir. 2011) (noting that a district court's application of judicial estoppel is reviewed for abuse of discretion). Its general purpose is to protect the integrity of the judicial process and to "prevent[] a party from prevailing in one phase of a case on an argument and then relying on a contradictory argument to prevail in another phase." Pegram v. Herdrich, 530 U.S. 211, 228 n.8, 120 S. Ct. 2143, 147 L. Ed. 2d 164 (2000). Thus, the doctrine typically applies [*16] when a "party has succeeded in persuading a court to accept that party's earlier position, so that judicial acceptance of an inconsistent position in a later proceeding would create the perception that either the first or the second court was misled." New Hampshire, 532 U.S. at 750 (holding that judicial estoppel barred New Hampshire from asserting a position about a river boundary contrary to a position it had taken in an earlier litigation that had culminated in a consent decree). See also United Nat'l Ins. Co. v. Spectrum Worldwide, Inc., 555 F.3d 772, 780 (9th Cir. 2009) ("Accordingly, because Spectrum obtained a favorable decision in the district court as a result of its assertions that the alleged infringement first arose in 1999, we find that Spectrum is estopped from claiming before this court that the 2001 label formed the basis of Sunset's claim.").

Courts have used three criteria to determine when judicial estoppel is appropriate: (1) when a party's later position is clearly inconsistent with its original position; (2) when the party has successfully persuaded the court of the earlier position; and (3) when allowing the inconsistent position would allow the party to derive [*17] an unfair advantage or impose an unfair detriment on the opposing party. See United States v. Ibrahim, 522 F.3d 1003, 1009 (9th Cir. 2008); see also New Hampshire, 532 U.S. at 750-51 (2001); Reed Elsevier, Inc. v. Muchnick, 130 S. Ct. 1237, 1249, 176 L. Ed. 2d 18 (2010). These factors, however, are not "inflexible prerequisites" or "an exhaustive formula."

New Hampshire v. Maine, 532 U.S. 742, 751, 121 S. Ct. 1808, 149 L. Ed. 2d 968 (2001). "Additional considerations may inform the doctrine's application in specific factual contexts." Id.

1. Jurisdiction and Estoppel

In the instant case, the Court notes as a preliminary matter that it is unclear whether judicial estoppel should be applied to inconsistent statements that bear on a court's jurisdiction. Wright and Miller have noted that "[b]road interests of public policy may limit the reach of judicial estoppel." 18B C. Wright, A. Miller, & E. Cooper, Fed. Prac. & Proc. Juris. § 4477 (2d ed. 2011). These public policy interests include jurisdictional concerns. Id. In Int'l Union of Operating Engineers v. County of Plumas, 559 F.3d 1041 (9th Cir. 2009), for example, the Ninth Circuit allowed a party who had originally removed to federal court on the basis of federal subject matter jurisdiction [*18] to challenge that jurisdiction on appeal. The Court reasoned that even though the party had taken inconsistent positions, its concerns regarding jurisdiction trumped any equitable concerns. Id. at 1044. The Court concluded that the party "may be guilty of chutzpah, but we must consider the merits of its argument anyway." Id.

While it seems obvious that estoppel cannot create federal jurisdiction that otherwise does not exist, similar logic applies in the inverse situation, when a party that had earlier claimed no need for federal jurisdiction is now asserting a basis for such jurisdiction. "The interests of the courts in protecting themselves and opposing parties against inconsistency may yield to such interests as the desire to protect against deciding a case when federal subject-matter jurisdiction does not exist, [or] to exercise federal subject-matter jurisdiction when it does exist." Fed. Prac. & Proc. Juris. § 4477 (emphasis added). Courts have recognized the federal courts' general duty to exercise jurisdiction where it is present. See Colorado River Water Conservation Dist. v. United States, 424 U.S. 800, 817, 96 S. Ct. 1236, 47 L. Ed. 2d 483 (1967) (noting the "virtually unflagging obligation of the federal [*19] courts to exercise the jurisdiction given them"); see also Gray v. City of Valley Park, Mo., 567 F.3d 976, 981-982 (8th Cir. 2009) ("Even if the parties wasted judicial resources up to this point and misled the courts on this issue in the process, we may not forge ahead on blind principle without jurisdiction to do so."); Whiting v. Krassner, 391 F.3d 540, 543-544 (3d Cir. 2004) ("[C]ourts have generally refused to resort to principles of judicial estoppel to prevent a party from 'switching sides' on the issue of jurisdiction."), certiorari denied, 545 U.S. 1131, 125 S. Ct. 2938, 162 L. Ed. 2d 871; Creaciones Con Idea, S.A. de C.V. v. Mashreqbank PSC, 232 F.3d 79, 82 (2d Cir. 2000) ("'[P]rinciples of estoppel do not apply' to questions of subject matter jurisdiction.") (quoting Insurance Corp. of Ireland v. Compagnie des Bauxites de Guinee, 456 U.S. 694, 702, 102 S. Ct. 2099, 72 L. Ed. 2d 492 (1982)); In re Southwestern Bell Tel. Co., 535 F.2d 859, 861 (5th Cir. 1976) ("Whatever the scope of the [judicial estoppel] doctrine may be, so far as we have been able to discover it has never been employed to prevent a party from taking advantage of a federal forum when he otherwise meets the statutory requirements of federal jurisdiction. . . . Judicial estoppel [*20] principles cannot conclusively establish jurisdictional facts."), affirmed as modified by 542 F.2d 297 (en banc), reversed on other grounds, 430 U.S. 723, 97 S. Ct. 1439, 52 L. Ed. 2d 1 (1977); But see Lydon v. Boston Sand & Gravel Co., 175 F.3d 6, 14 (1st Cir. 1999) (indicating that judicial estoppel may be invoked to prevent claims of lack of jurisdiction); Gamblin v. Miss. Farm Bureau Mut. Ins. Co., No. 3:07CV698 HTW-LRA, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 42572 (S.D. Miss. Apr. 30, 2010) (applying judicial estoppel to bar plaintiffs sought from bringing suit in federal court under §§ 1981 and 1982 after their state court action was dismissed because previously, plaintiffs had successfully achieved remand of their state action by expressly disavowing any claims under federal law). This duty to exercise jurisdiction applies with particular force where, as here, federal jurisdiction is exclusive.

Similar to the case at bar, in Bonzel v. Pfizer, Inc., 439 F.3d 1358, 1363 (Fed. Cir. 2006), the plaintiff had previously successfully argued for remand of a breach of contract claim on the basis that there was no substantial issue of patent law. Id. at 1361 ("Dr. Bonzel moved to remand that federal action to the Minnesota state court, [*21] stating that he was not charging infringement or seeking a declaration of patent rights, but was solely seeking enforcement of a contract and remedy for its breach."). Then, when that state court action was dismissed on forum non conveniens grounds, Dr. Bonzel brought a subsequent suit in federal court claiming federal patent jurisdiction under § 1338 and asserting new support for such jurisdiction. Id. at 1361-62. The Federal Circuit declined to apply judicial estoppel to Dr. Bonzel's assertion of § 1338 jurisdiction, noting that it was questionable whether estoppel could even apply to jurisdictional questions. While the court went on to conclude that there were no substantial issues of patent law present in that case, it nonetheless did not apply estoppel to bar Dr. Bonzel from raising new justifications for patent jurisdiction notwithstanding his earlier inconsistent statements. Id. at 1363.

Similar to Dr. Bonzel, Plaintiff in this case first asserted that federal jurisdiction was not proper as its claims raised no substantial issue of patent law, convinced a court to adopt that reasoning, and later reversed itself to assert new, contradictory grounds for federal patent jurisdiction. [*22] Thus, Bonzel and the other cases described above cast doubt on whether the Court should exercise its discretion to preclude Plaintiff from asserting new justifications for federal jurisdiction, especially where exclusive federal jurisdiction is at issue.

2. Judicial Estoppel Factors

Even assuming that principles of judicial estoppel apply to the instant case, the Court finds that judicial estoppel does not bar Plaintiff's conduct in particular because the state court did not rely on Plaintiff's assertions in a way that would later "create the perception that either the first or the second court was misled." New Hampshire v. Maine, 532 U.S. 742, 750, 121 S. Ct. 1808, 149 L. Ed. 2d 968 (2001). Rather, the state court simply applied the facts and allegations before it to determine whether it had jurisdiction to hear Plaintiff's claims.

In the instant case, while the state court relied on Plaintiff's assertions that it was not contesting Defendants' understanding or construction of the patent in state court, E-Pass, 189 Cal. App. 4th at 1148 n.4, it could not have relied on any assertion (implied or express) that Plaintiff would not make such claim in federal court. As Defendants conceded at oral argument hearing, the California [*23] Court of Appeal made no reference to and apparently was not aware of the federal complaint. Indeed, had Plaintiff been more transparent and alerted the state court that it might allege broader claims in the federal action, its candor would not have changed the state court's analysis because the state court was deciding its jurisdiction based on the state court pleadings. In short, the state court did not rely on any statement contradicting Plaintiff's position in this Court. See *Sivak v. Hardison, 658 F.3d 898, 2011 U.S. App. LEXIS 18568, 2011 WL 3907111, at 25 n.2 (9th Cir. 2011) ("Absent the district court's reliance on Sivak's concession, Sivak is not bound by his prior assertions.") (citations omitted).

Furthermore, for the same reason, Plaintiff's arguments to this Court do not imply that the state court erred in its decision, a requirement for judicial estoppel. See Reed Elsevier, Inc. v. Muchnick, 130 S. Ct. 1237, 1249, 176 L. Ed. 2d 18 (2010) (declining to apply judicial estoppel in part because the somewhat inconsistent positions would not result in inconsistent court decisions); Cf. *Gamblin, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 42572 at 18 (applying judicial estoppel where plaintiffs included statement in their complaint [*24] that "these plaintiffs expressly waive and hereby disavow any claim for any relief whatsoever under any federal laws or any federal question concerning the allegations in this Complaint, whether said allegations are pled or not"); Matek v. Murat, 638 F. Supp. 775, 782-83 (C.D. Cal. 1986) (holding judicial estoppel would apply where "plaintiffs ha[d] on several occasions made it abundantly clear that they are not urging any claim under RICO" in that court); Wade v. Woodings-Verona Tool Works, Inc., 469 F. Supp. 465, 467 (W.D. Pa. 1979) (holding judicial estoppel would apply to a plaintiff's statement in motion for summary judgment of defendant's counterclaim for patent invalidity that there was no case or controversy regarding the patent's validity because it was not claiming, and never would claim, patent infringement).

This case is thus distinct from others in which courts have applied judicial estoppel. For example, in Patriot Cinemas, Inc. v. General Cinemas Corp., the parties had been engaged in protracted jurisdictional battles over whether plaintiff's state antitrust claim was merely a disguised federal claim. [1] 834 F.2d 208, 214 (1st Cir. 1987), cited with approval by Helfand, 105 F.3d at 535. [*25] After the federal district court had denied remand and dismissed the action, determining that the state court antitrust claim was no more than a disguised federal claim, [2]

[1] Antitrust claims, like patent claims, are subject to exclusive federal jurisdiction. See Marrese v. Am. Academy of Orthopaedic Surgeons, 470 U.S. 373, 375, 105 S. Ct. 1327, 84 L. Ed. 2d 274 (1985).

[2] The court dismissed the federal action for lack of subject matter jurisdiction rather than simply denying remand under the then-applicable doctrine of derivative jurisdiction. Patriot Cinemas, 834 F.2d at 209. "According to that doctrine, 'a federal district court does not have removal jurisdiction over a claim that the state court lacked subject matter jurisdiction to decide in the first place.'"

Plaintiff appealed the federal decision and also filed a complaint in state court. The state court complaint omitted the antitrust claim entirely. Defendant then requested that the state court stay the action until the First Circuit considered whether Plaintiff's antitrust claim was necessarily a federal claim. In response, Plaintiff "represented [to the state court] that it would not pursue a separate claim based on state antitrust law regardless of the outcome of its pending federal appeal." Id. at 211. Ostensibly relying on that statement, the state court denied the motion for a stay. Plaintiff then attempted to retreat from this position in the federal appeal, noting that it may want to pursue the antitrust claim in state court after all, should the court reverse the district court's decision. The First Circuit precluded Plaintiff from doing so, holding "that the doctrine of judicial estoppel bars Patriot from changing the position it previously took in the superior court that it does not intend to proceed on [*26] the state antitrust claim 'at all.'" Id. at 214.

Similarly, in Gamblin, on which Defendants heavily rely, the court barred the plaintiffs from asserting the very claims they had previously disavowed in the same court. *2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 42572 at 4. These plaintiffs had previously achieved federal court remand of their action by expressly disavowing any claims under federal law; they later sought to bring suit in federal court under §§ 1981 [*27] and 1982 (after their state court action was dismissed). Because the federal court had relied on plaintiff's disavowal of federal claims in remanding the action to state court in the first place, the court concluded that they were judicially estopped from bringing those claims in a new federal action. *Id. at 18-20.

In contrast to the case at bar, Patriot Cinemas and Gamblin involved situations in which the plaintiff attempted to retreat from an earlier position that it would not bring particular claim(s) in a certain court. In short, the first court relied on the earlier representation from which the plaintiff later retreated. As noted above, such reliance, an essential element of judicial estoppel (see Patriot Cinemas, 834 F.2d at 213-14; *Gamblin, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 42572 at 17-18), is lacking here.

Moreover, while the Court is sympathetic to Defendants' allegations of forum shopping, Defendants fail to explain in any detail how Plaintiff "would derive an unfair advantage or impose an unfair detriment on the opposing party if not estopped." New Hampshire, 532 U.S. at 743. Although they have expended time and resources litigating these issues in two fora, the litigation in both [*28] courts is still in the early stages. There is no substantial issue of prejudice to Defendants' ability to respond to Plaintiff's broader allegations in this Court. In addition, the "advantage" Plaintiff has acquired in being in federal court is no greater than what it would have achieved had it capitulated to Defendants' position from the outset that this case belonged in federal court. Indeed, Defendants now find themselves in the forum they initially requested. Thus, unlike some cases cited by Defendants, here the inconsistency itself has not unfairly benefitted Plaintiff. Cf. United Nat'l Ins. Co., 555 F.3d at 779-80 (applying judicial estoppel where insured had won previous case by asserting the infringement occurred in 1999 and sought to argue in new action that infringement did not occur until 2001).

Thus, the Court concludes that Plaintiff is not judicially estopped from asserting allegations based on federal patent law contained in the FAC in this action. The Court thus DENIES Defendants' motion to strike on the basis of judicial estoppel.

C. Full Faith & Credit

Defendants next argue that the Court should strike Plaintiff's new allegations in the FAC regarding Defendants' alleged [*29] misunderstanding or misconstruction of the patent based on the Full Faith and Credit Act, due to the state court's decision that Plaintiff's claims against Defendants do not raise any substantial issue of federal patent law. Mot. to Strike at 5; FAC ¶¶ 9, 47, 53(a), 65. The Full Faith and Credit Act, 28 U.S.C. § 1738, "directs all courts to treat a state court judgment with the same respect that it would receive in the courts of the rendering state." Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co., Ltd. v. Epstein, 516 U.S. 367, 373, 116 S. Ct. 873, 134 L. Ed. 2d 6 (1996).

Id. at 210 (quoting Pueblo International, Inc. v. Reichard De Cardona, 725 F.2d 823, 828 (1st Cir. 1984)). Thus, under the facts of the case, there was no federal antitrust action remaining.

The state court decision has no preclusive effect over Plaintiff's FAC. The Supreme Court has held that there is no per se rule barring federal claims based on the same set of facts as previous state law claims where the federal claims could not have been brought in state court. Marrese v. American Academy of Orthopaedic Surgeons, 470 U.S. 373, 105 S. Ct. 1327, 84 L. Ed. 2d 274 (1985). As the Ninth Circuit has concluded, "Under California preclusion law, in order for res judicata to apply to claims not raised in previous proceedings, the court rendering the prior judgment must have had jurisdiction to hear such claims." Eichman v. Fotomat Corp., 759 F.2d 1434, 1437 (9th Cir. 1985). Thus, a prior state [*30] court suit cannot preclude a subsequent action based on exclusive federal jurisdiction. Id. at 1436 ("Because California preclusion law includes the requirement of prior jurisdictional competency, . . . we find that Eichman is not precluded from bringing a federal action when the state court had no jurisdiction to hear Eichman's federal claims.") (internal citation omitted).

Furthermore, the state court did not adjudicate the substantive question whether Defendants committed negligence or malpractice in failing to construe the '311 patent properly. The state court merely held it had jurisdiction over the Plaintiff's claim as alleged in that court. That question is separate and distinct from the question whether this Court has federal jurisdiction based on the FAC herein.

Accordingly, the Court DENIES Defendants' motion to strike on the basis of Full Faith and Credit.

D. Subject Matter Jurisdiction

Defendants next argue that the Court should dismiss this action for lack of subject matter jurisdiction. However, in the instant case, Defendants have no valid argument for lack of jurisdiction, as they concede the existence of diversity jurisdiction. See Mot. to Dismiss Reply at 2 ("Defendants [*31] do not contest the existence of diversity jurisdiction among the parties in this matter."). In addition, because the Court has determined that neither judicial estoppel nor Full Faith and Credit prevents Plaintiff from asserting new allegations under federal patent law, the Court also has federal question jurisdiction due to Plaintiff's allegations in the FAC that Defendants misunderstood and misconstrued the '311 patent in the underlying federal actions. See Air Measurement Techs., Inc. v. Akin Gump Strauss Hauer & Feld, L.L.P., 504 F.3d 1262, 1268 (Fed. Cir. 2007). Moreover, Defendants do not contest that Plaintiff's new allegations (if permitted) would invoke exclusive federal jurisdiction. Thus, there is no basis for the Court to dismiss the action for lack of jurisdiction.

E. Colorado River

Finally, Defendants argue that the Court should dismiss or stay this action under the Colorado River doctrine. "The Colorado River doctrine allows a district court to stay or dismiss a federal suit 'due to the presence of a concurrent state proceeding for reasons of wise judicial administration.'" Minucci v. Agrama, 868 F.2d 1113, 1115 (9th Cir. 1989).

> Colorado River and subsequent cases lay out [*32] the following factors, that, although not exclusive, are relevant to whether it is appropriate to stay proceedings:
> (1) whether the state court first assumed jurisdiction over property;
> (2) inconvenience of the federal forum;
> (3) the desirability of avoiding piecemeal litigation;
> (4) the order in which jurisdiction was obtained by the concurrent forums;
> (5) whether federal law or state law provides the rule of decision on the merits;
> (6) whether the state court proceedings are inadequate to protect the federal litigant's rights;
> (7) whether exercising jurisdiction would promote forum shopping.
> The factors relevant to a given case are subjected to a flexible balancing test, in which one factor may be accorded substantially more weight than another depending on the circumstances of the case, and "with the balance heavily weighted in favor of the exercise of jurisdiction."

Holder v. Holder, 305 F.3d 854, 870-71 (9th Cir. 2002).

However, the doctrine applies only "to claims under the concurrent jurisdiction of the federal and state courts. '[A] district court has no discretion to stay proceedings as to claims within exclusive federal jurisdiction under the wise judicial administration exception.'" [*33] Minucci, 868 F.2d at 1115 (holding that, because plaintiff's "copyright claim is within the exclusive jurisdiction of the federal courts, the Colorado River doctrine is inapplicable"); see also Intel Corp. v. Advanced Micro Devices, 12 F.3d 908, 913 n.7 (9th Cir. 1993) (noting that, while "[t]he Supreme Court has yet to address the question of the applicability of the Colorado River doctrine to cases involving claims subject to exclusive federal jurisdiction . . . , . . . the circuit courts, and the Ninth Circuit in particular, have uniformly held that a district court may not grant a stay in this context"). In the instant case, because the Court has permitted Plaintiffs to maintain their new allegations asserting patent jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. § 1338(a), it has exclusive federal jurisdiction over the case at bar. Hence, the Colorado River doctrine would appear inapplicable.

In any event, E-Pass agrees if federal jurisdiction obtains over the FAC and the claims are otherwise not barred, it will dismiss the state claims against the Defendants herein. This would obviate any stay. Accordingly, the Court DENIES Defendants' motion to dismiss or stay the action based on that doctrine.

III. [*34] CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, the Court DENIES Defendants' motion to dismiss and motion to strike Plaintiffs FAC.

This order disposes of Docket Nos. 116 and 117.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

ORDER DENYING PLAINTIFFS' MOTION TO STRIKE, GRANTING IN PART AND DENYING IN PART DEFENDANTS' MOTION TO DISMISS COMPLAINT, AND GRANTING CROSS-DEFENDANTS' MOTION TO DISMISS CROSSCLAIM

PROCEDURAL BACKGROUND

On March 28, 2011, Malia Ana Lopeti and Paula Finau Lopeti ("Plaintiffs") filed a complaint ("Complaint") against defendants Alliance Bancorp[1] ("Alliance"), Acceptance Capital Mortgage Company ("ACMC"), Central Mortgage Company ("Central"), HSBC Bank USA, National Association ("HSBC"), Merscorp, Inc. ("Merscorp"), and Mortgage Electronic Registration System, Inc. ("MERS") (collectively "Defendants"). Doc. No. 1. The Complaint asserts federal and state law claims arising from a November 2006 mortgage [*3] transaction involving real property in Hilo, Hawaii.

On June 13, 2011, ACMC filed an answer to the Complaint. Doc. No. 9. ACMC's Answer was accompanied by a counterclaim against Plaintiffs ("ACMC's Counterclaim") and a crossclaim against all Defendants for reimbursement, contribution, equitable subrogation, and/or indemnity ("ACMC's Crossclaim").

On June 24, 2011, Defendants Central, MERS, and HSBC filed a motion to dismiss the Complaint ("Motion to Dismiss Complaint"). Doc. No. 20. The motion was accompanied by a memorandum in support ("Defs.' MTD Compl. Mem."). On August 9, 2011, and October 5, 2011, Defendants Merscorp and ACMC, respectively, filed motions to join the Motion to Dismiss Complaint. Doc. Nos. 32, 39.

On July 5, 2011, Plaintiffs filed an answer to ACMC's Counterclaim. Doc. No. 26.

On August 9, 2011, Cross-Defendants Central, HSBC, Merscorp, and MERS, filed a motion to dismiss ACMC's Crossclaim ("Motion to Dismiss Crossclaim"). Doc. No. 30. The motion was accompanied by a memorandum in support of the motion ("Defs.' MTD Crossclaim Mem."). On October 5, 2011, ACMC filed a memorandum in opposition to the Motion to Dismiss Crossclaim ("ACMC's Opp'n"). Doc. No. 40. On October [*4] 13, 2011, Central, HSBC, Merscorp, and MERS filed a reply memorandum in support of their Motion to Dismiss Crossclaim. Doc. No. 49.

On October 6, 2011, Plaintiffs filed a motion to strike the Motion to Dismiss Complaint as against all Defendants ("Pls.' Motion to Strike"), or in the alternative, a memorandum in opposition to Defendants' Motion to Dismiss Complaint ("Pls.' Opp'n"). Doc. No. 43. On October 13, 2011, Central, HSBC, and MERS filed a reply to Plaintiffs' Motion to Strike and Plaintiffs' Opposition ("Defs.' Reply"). Doc. No. 50.

The Court held a hearing on Defendants' Motion to Dismiss Complaint, Plaintiffs' Motion to Strike, and Defendant's Motion to Dismiss Crossclaim on October 27, 2011.

[1] Alliance, which is apparently a defunct entity, has not appeared in this action. At the hearing, Plaintiffs asserted that they are still pursuing their claims as against Alliance. Thus, Plaintiffs' claims as against Alliance are not dismissed.

FACTUAL BACKGROUND[2]

This action relates to an adjustable rate note ("the Note") that Plaintiffs executed on November 20, 2006, in the amount of $269,100.00 in favor of Defendant Alliance.[3] Defs.' MTD Compl. Ex. 1-1.[4] To secure payment on the Note, Plaintiffs on the same day executed a mortgage in favor of Alliance ("the Mortgage") encumbering Plaintiffs' real property located at 149 Wilder Rd., Hilo, Hawaii, 96720 ("the Property"). Id. Ex. 1-2.[5] The Mortgage was recorded on January 4, 2007, in [*5] the Bureau of Conveyances of the State of Hawaii ("the Bureau") as Document No. 2007-001680. Id.

According to Plaintiffs, Alliance, as the lender, and ACMC, as the mortgage broker, convinced Plaintiffs to refinance by presenting them with a "teaser rate," but failed to explain to Plaintiffs that the initial rate and payment would soon adjust, increasing their monthly obligation. Compl. ¶¶ 4, 21. Plaintiffs further claim that Alliance and ACMC relied on Plaintiffs' stated income, assets, and liabilities, and that Alliance and ACMC could not "make a reasonable determination of whether Plaintiffs could qualify for the home loan without further verification and scrutiny." Id. ¶ 24. Plaintiffs assert that the terms of the Note were such that they could never realistically repay the loan and Alliance and ACMC should have declined to give them the loan. Id. ¶¶ 24, 27.

The Mortgage provides that MERS is the mortgagee under the Note, acting solely as nominee for the lender (Alliance) and the lender's successors and assigns. Defs.' MTD Compl. Ex. 1-2. MERS subsequently assigned the Mortgage to Central by virtue of an Assignment of Mortgage ("the Assignment") dated June 9, 2009, and recorded in [*6] the Bureau on June 17, 2009, as document number 2009-093030. Id. Ex. 1-3. Plaintiffs contest the validity of this assignment. Compl. ¶ 89. Plaintiffs also assert that the Mortgage and Note were securitized, and that the securitization renders the Note unenforceable. Id. ¶¶ 94, 98.

According to Plaintiffs, in June 2008, Central informed Plaintiffs that Central did not have a renewal of Plaintiffs' hazard insurance covering the Property and thus had included the property under its group insurance policy. Id. ¶ 35. Plaintiffs claim that they later learned it was hurricane insurance that was required by Central and purchased it locally at a price much less than the group coverage provided by Central. Id. ¶ 40. Plaintiffs assert that "[h]opelessly behind with the mortgage payment primarily as a result of [the] forced insurance charge and the increasing monthly amount under the mortgage, the Plaintiffs sought assistance to modify their loan under a loan modification program offered by CENTRAL in April 2009." Id. ¶ 41. Plaintiffs assert that they were financially unable to accept a loan modification offered by Central. Id. ¶¶ 42-43.

On November 19, 2009, Central conducted a nonjudicial foreclosure [*7] and purchased the Property. Id. ¶ 45. Plaintiffs contend that "CENTRAL and HSBC do not own or hold the Note and have not claimed or demonstrated that the Defendants represent the actual owner of the Note," and thus Central and HSBC had no authority to conduct the foreclosure. Id. ¶¶ 100, 105-07.

Plaintiffs filed the instant Complaint on March 23, 2011, seeking, inter alia, a declaration that Central cannot legally enforce the terms of the Note and Mortgage, a declaration that the foreclosure sale is invalid, and damages. Id. Prayer for Relief.

[2] The facts as recited in this Order are for the purpose of disposing of the instant motions, and are not to be construed as findings of fact that the parties may rely on in future proceedings in this case.

[3] The Moving Defendants attached an Affidavit of Sale as exhibit 1 to the Motion to Dismiss Complaint. The Affidavit of Sale had several documents, including the Note, attached to it and labeled as Exhibits 1-9. For citation purposes, the Court will refer to the Affidavit of Sale as Exhibit 1, and the subsequent attachments as Exhibits 1-1, 1-2, 1-3, and so forth.

[4] Attached to the Note was a Prepayment Addendum to Note. Defs.' MTD Compl. Ex. 1-1.

[5] Attached to the Mortgage was an Adjustable Rate Rider. Defs.' MTD Compl. Ex. 1-2.

LEGAL STANDARD

Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(b)(6) ("Rule 12(b)(6)") permits dismissal of a complaint that fails "to state a claim upon which relief can be granted." Under Rule 12(b)(6), review is generally limited to the contents of the complaint. Sprewell v. Golden State Warriors, 266 F.3d 979, 988 (9th Cir. 2001); Campanelli v. Bockrath, 100 F.3d 1476, 1479 (9th Cir. 1996). Courts may also "consider certain materials—documents attached to the complaint, documents incorporated by reference in the complaint, or matters of judicial notice—without converting the motion to dismiss into a motion for summary judgment." United States v. Ritchie, 342 F.3d 903, 908 (9th Cir. 2003). Documents whose contents are alleged in a complaint and whose authenticity is not questioned by any party may also be considered in ruling on a Rule 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss. See Branch v. Tunnell, 14 F.3d 449, 453-54 (9th Cir. 1994), overruled on other grounds by Galbraith v. County of Santa Clara, 307 F.3d 1119 (9th Cir. 2002).

On a Rule 12(b)(6) motion to [*8] dismiss, all allegations of material fact are taken as true and construed in the light most favorable to the nonmoving party. Fed'n of African Am. Contractors v. City of Oakland, 96 F.3d 1204, 1207 (9th Cir. 1996). However, conclusory allegations of law, unwarranted deductions of fact, and unreasonable inferences are insufficient to defeat a motion to dismiss. See Sprewell, 266 F.3d at 988; Nat'l Assoc. for the Advancement of Psychoanalysis v. Cal. Bd. of Psychology, 228 F.3d 1043, 1049 (9th Cir. 2000); In re Syntex Corp. Sec. Litig., 95 F.3d 922, 926 (9th Cir. 1996). Moreover, the court need not accept as true allegations that contradict matters properly subject to judicial notice or allegations contradicting the exhibits attached to the complaint. Sprewell, 266 F.3d at 988.

In summary, to survive a Rule 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss, "[f]actual allegations must be enough to raise a right to relief above the speculative level . . . on the assumption that all the allegations in the complaint are true (even if doubtful in fact)." Bell Atl. Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 555, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007) (internal citations and quotations omitted). "While a complaint attacked by a Rule 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss does not need detailed factual allegations . . . a plaintiff's obligation to provide the 'grounds' of his 'entitlement to relief' requires more than labels and conclusions, and a formulaic recitation of the elements of a cause of action will not do." Id. (internal citations and quotations omitted). Dismissal is appropriate under Rule 12(b)(6) if the facts alleged do not state a claim that is "plausible [*9] on its face." Id. at 570. "Determining whether a complaint states a plausible claim for relief will . . . be a context-specific task that requires the reviewing court to draw on its judicial experience and common sense." Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 129 S. Ct. 1937, 1950, 173 L. Ed. 2d 868 (2009) (citation omitted). "[W]here the well-pleaded facts do not permit the court to infer more than the mere possibility of misconduct, the complaint has alleged—but it has not 'show[n]'—'that the pleader is entitled to relief.'" Id. (quoting Fed. R. Civ. P. 8(a)(2)).

"Dismissal without leave to amend is improper unless it is clear that the complaint could not be saved by any amendment." Harris v. Amgen, Inc., 573 F.3d 728, 737 (9th Cir. 2009) (internal quotation marks omitted). "But courts have discretion to deny leave to amend a complaint for futility, and futility includes the inevitability of a claim's defeat on summary judgment." Johnson v. Am. Airlines, Inc., 834 F.2d 721, 724 (9th Cir.1987) (citations and internal quotation marks omitted).

DISCUSSION

Plaintiffs' Complaint asserts the following claims: Counts I, II, and V — violations of the Hawaii Revised Statutes ("H.R.S.") Chapter 667; Count III — violation of the Clayton Antitrust Act, 15 U.S.C. § 12, et seq.; Count IV — violation of the Hawaii antitrust/antimonopoy acts, H.R.S. §§ 480-13 and 480-9; Count VI — breach of contract; Count VII — violation of the Truth in Lending Act ("TILA"), 15 U.S.C. § 1601, et seq.; Counts VIII and [*10] IX — unfair and deceptive acts or practices ("UDAP") in violation of H.R.S. § 480-2; Counts X and XI — breach of fiduciary duty; Counts XII and XIII — common law fraud; Count XIV — respondeat superior liability; Count XV — negligent misrepresentation; Count XVI — civil conspiracy; Count XVII — wrongful disclosure; Count XVIII — improper restrictions as a result of securitization; Count XIX — wrongful conversion of the Note; Count XX — the Mortgage and Note are unenforceable because of securitization; Count XXI — restrictions imposed upon the modification of the Mortgage are a clog upon the equity of redemption; Count XXII — quiet title; and Count XXIII — constructive trust or mortgage trust. Central, HSBC, and MERS filed a Motion to Dismiss Complaint, and ACMC and Merscorp have joined in the motion. The Court will address the counts in turn. Before doing so, the Court will address Plaintiffs' Motion to Strike Defendants' Motion to Dismiss Complaint and whether the Court can take judicial notice of documents submitted by the parties. After addressing the merits of the Motion to Dismiss Complaint, the Court will address Defendants Central, HSBC, Merscorp, and MERS's Motion to Dismiss ACMC's Crossclaim. [*11]

I. Plaintiffs' Motion to Strike

Plaintiffs assert that Defendants' Motion to Dismiss Complaint is untimely because the Defendants failed to file an answer or responsive pleading within the applicable time period provided by Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12.[6] At the hearing, Plaintiffs' attorney asserted that Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(f) provides authority for striking the Motion to Dismiss Complaint.

"[T]he Ninth Circuit 'allows a motion under Rule 12(b) any time before the responsive pleading is filed,' even if filed outside the time limits of Rule 12(a)(1)." *Ass'n of Irritated Residents v. Fred Schakel Dairy, Civ. No. F0540707AWISMS, 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 36769, 2005 WL 3299508, at 3 (E.D. Cal. Dec. 2, 2005) (quoting Aetna Life Ins. Co. v. Alla Med. Servs., Inc., 855 F.2d 1470, 1474 (9th Cir. 1988)). Because the Moving Defendants, with the exception of ACMC who timely filed an answer, have failed to file a responsive pleading in this case, the Motion to Dismiss Complaint is not untimely.

Even if untimely, however, the rules do not require striking the motion. Rule 12(f) provides that "[t]he court may strike from a pleading an insufficient defense or any redundant, immaterial, impertinent, or scandalous matter." Under Rule 12(f), a party may only move to strike material contained in a "pleading." A motion to dismiss is not a "pleading," which is defined by Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 7(a) as a complaint, an answer to a complaint, an answer to a counterclaim, an answer to a [*12] crossclaim, a third-party complaint, an answer to a third-party complaint, or a court-ordered reply to an answer. Consequently, a motion to dismiss may not be the subject of a Rule 12(f) motion. See MJ Harbor Hotel, LLC v. McCormick & Schmick Rest. Corp., 599 F. Supp. 2d 612, 623 (D. Md. 2009); Heise v. Olympus Optical Co., Ltd., 111 F.R.D. 1, 4 (N.D. Ind. 1986).

Moreover, Plaintiffs have not sought entry of default judgment against any Defendant.

For these reasons, the Court DENIES Plaintiffs' Motion to Strike.

II. Judicial Notice

Pursuant to Federal Rule of Evidence 201, a court may take judicial notice of facts that are "capable of accurate and ready determination by resort to sources whose accuracy cannot reasonably be questioned." Fed. R. Evid. 201(b). Defendants request that the Court take judicial notice of the Affidavit of Sale, which was recorded in the Bureau on November 30, 2009, as document number 2009-182298. Defs.' MTD Compl. Ex. 1. The Affiant, an [6] Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(a)(1)(A) provides that a defendant must serve an answer within twenty-one days after being served the summons and complaint, or if the defendant waives service, within sixty days after a request for a waiver was sent. The docket shows that MERS and Merscorp were served on April 18, 2011, and thus an answer was due by May 9, 2011. Doc. No. 7. Central was served on April 21, 2011, and thus an answer due by May 12, 2011. Doc. No. 6. HSBC filed a Waiver of Service of Summons on June 29, 2011, and stated therein that the waiver request was sent on April 22, 2011, rendering an answer due by June 21, 2011. Doc. No. 22. The Moving Defendants filed the Motion to Dismiss Complaint on June 24, 2011. Merscorp filed its Motion for Joinder on August 9, 2011. Doc. No. 32. ACMC was served on May 24, 2011, and timely filed its answer, counterclaim, and crossclaim on June 13, 2011. Doc. Nos. 9, 13.

attorney who represented Central in the nonjudicial foreclosure sale, attached and filed copies of relevant documents to the Affidavit. Id. The Affiant asserted that each copy was true and correct. Id. These documents include the Note, the Mortgage, the Assignment of the Mortgage to Central, and an affidavit of publication of notice in the Honolulu Star Bulletin ("Affidavit of Publication"). Defs.' MTD Compl. Exs. 1-1, 1-2, 1-3, and 1-9.

At the [*13] hearing, Plaintiffs conceded that the Court can consider the affidavit of sale, including the documents attached thereto, in deciding the Motion to Dismiss Complaint. Plaintiffs, however, continue to contest the authenticity of the Affidavit of Sale, asserting that it has no legal effect due to the absence of a notary stamp and because it is not based on the Affiant's personal knowledge.[7] Pls.' Opp'n at 17-18.

The Court rejects Plaintiffs' assertion that it cannot consider the Affidavit of Sale because it lacks a notary stamp. "An affidavit is a sworn document," and "[a] document's qualification as an affidavit is not determined by the presence or absence of 'the stamp or seal of a notary.'" De Mars v. O'Flynn, 287 F. Supp. 2d 230, 242 (W.D.N.Y. 2003) (quoting 11 Moore's Federal Practice § 56.14[1][b] (Matthew Bender 3d ed.)); see *Pedersen v. Greenpoint Mortg. Funding, Inc., Civ. No. S-11-0642 KJM EF, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 96397, 2011 WL 3818560, at 16 n.8 (E.D. Cal. Aug. 29, 2011) ("[N]otarization is an acknowledgment of the signer's identity and is not essential to a document's validity."). The Affiant asserted the Affidavit was made under sworn oath, and it is signed by the Affiant and a witness. The Court finds no basis to question the authenticity of the Affidavit, which is contained in the public records. [*14] [8]

The contents of the Note, Mortgage, Mortgage Assignment, Affidavit of Sale, and Affidavit of Publication can be readily determined through public records, the accuracy of which cannot reasonably be questioned. The Court therefore takes judicial notice of these documents. See Benak v. Alliance Capital Mgmt. L.P., 435 F.3d 396, 401 n.15 (3d Cir. 2006) (concluding it was proper to take judicial notice of newspaper articles "to indicate what was in the public realm at the time" for purposes of establishing inquiry notice); Caraang v. PNC Mortg., 795 F. Supp. 2d 1098, 2011 WL 2470637, at *12 (D. Haw. 2011) (taking judicial notice of, inter alia, a mortgage, a note, and an "Affidavit of Foreclosure Under Power of Sale"); *Doran v. Wells Fargo Bank, Civ. No. 11-00132 LEK-BMK, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 58436, 2011 WL 2160643, at 7 (D. Haw. May 31, 2011) (taking judicial notice of a first mortgage, second mortgage, and foreclosure affidavit).

III. Motion to Dismiss Complaint

A. Count I — Lack of Legal Right to Foreclose (Central and HSBC)

In Count I, Plaintiffs assert that Defendants Central and HSBC violated Hawaii Revised Statute ("H.R.S.") § 667-5 because they had no right to foreclose on the Property due to the defective assignment of the Mortgage, the securitization of the loan, and because "Central and HSBC are not the real party in interest." Compl. ¶¶ 102-07.

---

[7] Plaintiffs refused the Court's invitation to consider the Motion to Dismiss as a motion for summary judgment, which would have allowed the Court to consider the documents attached to Plaintiffs' Opposition. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(d)("If, on a motion under Rule 12(b)(6) or 12(c), matters outside the pleadings are presented to and not excluded by the court, the motion must be treated as one for summary judgment under Rule 56."). The Court will not take judicial notice of the documents attached to Plaintiffs' Opposition because the documents are either unreliable or not necessary in deciding the instant motion.

[8] The Court also concludes that Plaintiffs' assertion that the Affidavit is not based on the Affiant's personal knowledge because the Affiant attests "to actions that occurred almost exclusively outside of Honolulu, where the Affiant resides," and that "the affiant does not claim to have personally witnessed or took part in any of the actions she described," are without merit. Pls.' Opp'n at 14-15. The Affiant states that at all relevant times she was authorized to act on behalf of Central in the matters set forth in the Affidavit, and that the Affidavit was based on her personal knowledge and belief. Defs.' MTD Compl. Ex. 1. She further certified that either her or her representative handled the notifications attached to the Affidavit and conducted the public auction sale. Id. The Affiant's personal knowledge is therefore apparent from the face of the Affidavit.

H.R.S. § 667-5 provides requirements that a mortgagee, the mortgagee's successor in interest, [*15] or an entity acting on its behalf, must meet to conduct a nonjudicial foreclosure. "[A]n agreement created at a foreclosure sale conducted pursuant to HRS section 667-5 is void and unenforceable where the foreclosure sale is invalid under the statute." Lee v. HSBC Bank USA, 121 Haw. 287, 218 P.3d 775, 780 (Haw. 2009).

The Assignment of Mortgage, recorded in the Bureau, establishes that MERS, as nominee for Alliance, transferred to Central "all its right, title and interest in" the Mortgage. See id. In their opposition, Plaintiffs assert that Alliance's bankruptcy resulted in an invalid assignment. Contrary to Plaintiffs' assertion, MERS may assign a mortgage after the lender for which MERS was named as nominee has dissolved because MERS, as mortgagee, holds legal title to the interests in the mortgage. See Defs.' MTD Compl. Ex. 1-2 ("MERS is the mortgagee under this Security Instrument"; "MERS holds only legal title to the interests granted by Borrower in this Security Instrument"); see also, *Cooper v. Bank of N.Y. Mellon, Civ. No. 11-00241 LEK-RLP, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 94410, 2011 WL 3705058, at 13 (D. Haw. Aug. 23, 2011) (concluding that a lender's bankruptcy did not preclude MERS from validly assigning the lender's mortgage to another entity); *Long v. One West Bank, FSB, No. 11 C 703, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 94675, 2011 WL 3796887, at 3 (N.D. Ill. Aug. 24, 2011) (concluding that because the security deed stated that MERS is the grantee under the security instrument, [*16] MERS's assignment of a security deed after the lender for which it was acting as nominee had declared bankruptcy was valid); *Kiah v. Aurora Loan Servs., LLC, Civ. No. 10-40161-FDS, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 121252, 2011 WL 841282, at * 4 (D. Mass. Mar. 4, 2011)* (determining that because "MERS had the power to act as the agent of any valid note holder under the terms of the mortgage documents," the fact that MERS was acting as nominee for a dissolved entity did not prevent it from validly assigning the mortgage).

In their opposition, Plaintiffs' assert that the assignment is suspicious and improper because it is signed by Dorcas Tiller, in her capacity as Assistant Secretary of MERS, but that Tiller is actually an employee of Central. Pls.' Opp'n at 12-13. In support of their argument, Plaintiffs attach a print out dated September 27, 2011, from "LinkedIn," a social-networking website, which shows "Dorcas Tiller" is a "Cash Manager at Central Mortgage Company." Pls.' Opp'n Ex. C. The Court finds this is an unreliable source and not a proper subject of judicial notice, and in any event, the printout reveals nothing about the validity of an execution and assignment by MERS in June 2009. Moreover, in rejecting claims challenging foreclosure procedures for home loans maintained [*17] within the MERS system, the Ninth Circuit has explained that:

> MERS relies on its members to have someone on their own staff become a MERS officer with the authority to sign documents on behalf of MERS. As a result, most of the actions taken in MERS's own name are carried out by staff at the companies that sell and buy the beneficial interest in the loans.

*Cervantes v. Countrywide Home Loans, Inc., 656 F.3d 1034, 2011 WL 3911031, at 2 (9th Cir. Sept. 7, 2011) (internal citations omitted). There is thus no basis for Plaintiffs' allegation that Tiller was not authorized to act on behalf of MERS.

Plaintiffs' arguments with respect to securitization are also without merit. Securitization of a loan through the MERS system does not affect the right of the lender, or the lender's successor in interest, to initiate foreclosure after borrowers default on their loans. *656 F.3d 1034, Id. at 7.

At the hearing, Plaintiffs asserted that Central conducted the foreclosure without authority because it is not a holder of the Note. Plaintiffs further asserted that a letter was sent from Central to Plaintiffs stating that HSBC is the holder of the Note. Plaintiffs, however, did not refer to this letter in their Complaint and have not submitted it to the Court. The parties have not otherwise submitted any documentation related to who [*18] owns the Note. The Complaint also fails to assert what actions, if any, HSBC performed in the foreclosure sale. Plaintiffs' argument apparently is that a split between the Mortgage and Note occurred because Central does not own the Note, and such split renders Central without authority to foreclose on the Mortgage. The Court declines to consider this argument without coherent or detailed factual assertions in the Complaint or argument from the parties. The Court will allow Plaintiffs to amend Count I and makes the following observations.

In *Cervantes, 656 F.3d 1036, 2011 WL 3911031, at 7, the Ninth Circuit explained that a split between a note and deed "only renders the mortgage unenforceable if MERS or the trustee, as nominal holders of the deeds, are not agents of the lenders." In Cervantes, the Ninth Circuit cited Landmark National Bank v. Kesler, 289 Kan. 528, 216 P.3d 158 (Kan. 2009), a case in which the Kansas Supreme Court explains the theory behind this conclusion as follows:

> [I]n the event that a mortgage loan somehow separates interests of the note and the deed of trust, with the deed of trust lying with some independent entity, the mortgage may become unenforceable. The practical effect of splitting the deed of trust from the promissory note is to make it impossible for the holder of the note [*19] to foreclose, unless the holder of the deed of trust is the agent of the holder of the note. Without the agency relationship, the person holding only the note lacks the power to foreclose in the event of default. The person holding only the deed of trust will never experience default because only the holder of the note is entitled to payment of the underlying obligation. The mortgage loan becomes ineffectual when the note holder did not also hold the deed of trust.

Id. at 166-67.

The Mortgage explicitly states that MERS is acting as nominee for "Lender and Lender's successors and assigns." Defs.' MTD Compl. Ex. 1-2. "A nominee means one designated to act for another as his representative in a rather limited sense and is used sometimes to signify an agent or trustee. It is a common occurrence in public land records and has long been sanctioned as a legitimate practice." *James v. ReconTrust Co., No. CV-11-CV-324-ST, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 101139, 2011 WL 3841558, at 7 (D. Or. Aug. 26, 2011). In In re Tucker, 441 B.R. 638 (Bkrtcy. W.D. Mo. 2010), the court concluded that the language in the Deed of Trust at issue was "more than sufficient" to render MERS an agent of the Lender and its successors." Id. at 645. The court relied on language from the deed, similar to the language in the Plaintiffs' Mortgage, that granted MERS broad rights [*20] as nominee for Lender and Lender's successors and assigns to "'to exercise any or all' of the interests granted by the Borrower under the Deed of Trust, 'including but not limited to, the right to foreclose and sell the Property, and to take any action required of Lender.'" Id. If Central, as assignee of "all [MERS's] right, title and interest in" the Mortgage became an agent for Alliance's successors and assigns, Central might be entitled to foreclose by virtue of its status as mortgagee and an agent for the lender or the lender's successor or assign. See Defs.' MTD Compl Ex. 1-3; see In re Tucker, 441 B.R. at 646 (determining that naming MERS as nominee in a deed of trust was sufficient to create an agency relationship between MERS and the Lender's successors because the successors manifested assent that the agent will act on its behalf through their membership agreements with MERS).

The Mortgage also expressly gives MERS and its successors and assigns the authority to foreclose on the Property:

> TRANSFER OF RIGHTS IN THE PROPERTY
> This Security Instrument secures to Lender: (I) the repayment of the Loan, and all renewals, extensions and modifications of the Note; and (ii) the performance of Borrowers covenants and [*21] agreements under this Security Instrument and the Note. For this purpose, Borrower does hereby mortgage, grant and convey to MERS (solely as nominee for Lender and Lender's successors and assigns) and to the successors and assigns of MERS, with power of sale, the [Property]. . . . Borrower understands . . . if necessary to comply with law or customs, MERS (as nominee for Lender and Lender's successors and assigns) has the right: to exercise any or all of those interests, including, but not limited to, the right to foreclose and sell the property; and to take any action required of Lender including, but not limited to, releasing and cancelling this Security Instrument.

Id. Ex. 1-2 (emphasis added). Thus, if it was "necessary to comply with law or customs," Central might be entitled to foreclose on the Property regardless of the status of the holder of the Note.

Finally, under H.R.S. § 667-5, a mortgagee or entity acting on the mortgagee's behalf may conduct a nonjudicial foreclosure pursuant to a power of sale contained in a mortgage. The statute provides no requirements related to the Note.

Count I is DISMISSED WITH LEAVE TO AMEND.

B. Count II — Failure to Provide Public Announcement of Continued Date [*22] (Central and HSBC)

At the hearing, Plaintiffs' counsel stated that it is no longer pursuing a claim based on an alleged failure to provide notice of postponement of a continued date.

Count II is therefore DISMISSED WITHOUT PREJUDICE.

C. Count III — Violation of the Clayton Antitrust Act (All Defendants)

Plaintiffs allege that all Defendants violated the Clayton Anti-Trust Act, 15 U.S.C. § 12, et seq., by engaging in predatory or anti-competitive conduct by selling "over-leveraged, highly inflated loans to the Plaintiffs," selling "fraudulent securities to investors," and "participat[ing] in a ratings scheme to fraudulently rate these securities as safer than they truly were." Compl. ¶ 117. According to Plaintiffs, this scheme caused the collapse of the real estate market, which in turn created an economic collapse, "which resulted in Plaintiffs being unable to pay their mortgage payments." Id. ¶ 119.

Count III of the Complaint is identical to Count I of the plaintiff's complaint in Radford v. U.S. Bank Nat'l Ass'n, Civ. No. 10-00766 LEK-KSC, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 101774, 2011 WL 4054863 (D. Haw. Sept. 9, 2011), and Count I of the plaintiff's complaint in Radford v. Wells Fargo Bank, Civ. No. 10-00767 SOM-KSC, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 51935, 2011 WL 1833020 (D. Haw. May 13, 2011). In these cases, Judge Kobayashi and Chief Judge Mollway, respectively, dismissed the Counts, explaining: [*23]

> The Complaint includes no factual allegation suggesting that Defendants entered into an agreement to affect competition or committed acts violating federal antitrust laws. [Plaintiff] also fails to identify any particular provision of the Clayton Act that Defendants have allegedly violated. Overall, he fails to put forth any specific factual or legal allegations or to link those allegations to particular statutory violations. Instead, [Plaintiff] alleges that Defendants 'worked to create the collapse of the mortgage market, which in turn created an economic collapse unprecedented since the Great Depression.' Compl. ¶ 76. Such sweeping statements fail to apprise Defendants of their alleged wrongdoings. The court additionally notes that, as [Plaintiff] has failed to allege an adequate 'antitrust injury,' he could lack 'antitrust standing' to bring this claim.

*U.S. Bank, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 101774, 2011 WL 4054863, at 12 (quoting *Wells Fargo, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 51935, 2011 WL 1833020, at 3).

Plaintiffs have failed to give any reason that would distinguish their claims from the identical claims in U.S. Bank and Wells Fargo, and therefore the Court adopts the foregoing analysis as the Court's analysis with respect to Count III.

Count III is DISMISSED WITHOUT PREJUDICE.

D. Count IV — Violation of Hawaii Antitrust/Antimonopoly [*24] Laws (All Defendants)

Plaintiffs assert that all Defendants violated Hawaii Antitrust/Antimonopoly laws by monopolizing or attempting to monopolize the mortgage lending and servicing market. Compl. ¶¶ 123-24. Again, the Plaintiffs' allegations are identical to those made in Count II of U.S. Bank and Count II of Wells Fargo. In granting the defendants motions to dismiss in those cases, Judge Kobayashi and Chief Judge Mollway, respectively, found:

> In Count II, [Plaintiff] asserts violations of state antitrust laws. [Plaintiff] states generally that '[m]ortgage lending and servicing in Hawaii is an activity in or affecting interstate commerce[.]' Compl. ¶ 79. He then alleges that Defendants violated 'the Hawaii Anti-Trust Act, Hawaii Revised Statutes § 480-13, and the Hawaii Monopolization Act, Hawaii Revised Statutes § 480-9.' Compl. ¶ 80. Again, [Plaintiff] fails to make factual > allegations suggesting that Defendants made an agreement to diminish competition. Broad assertions of state antitrust law violations do not give Defendants an opportunity to properly defend themselves. Count II is dismissed with leave to amend as to all Defendants.

*U.S. Bank, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 101774, 2011 WL 4054863, at 13 (quoting *Wells Fargo, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 51935, 2011 WL 1833020, at 3 (third and fourth alterations in original)).

Plaintiffs have failed to give any reason that would distinguish [*25] their claims from the identical claims in U.S. Bank and Wells Fargo. This Court adopts the reasoning of these cases as its analysis with respect to Count IV.

Count IV is DISMISSED WITHOUT PREJUDICE.

E. Count V — Violation of H.R.S. §§ 667-5 - 667-10 (Central and HSBC)

In Count V, Plaintiffs seek a declaration that the foreclosure sale of their home is void due to Defendants Central and HSBC failing to follow the procedural and notice requirements for a nonjudicial foreclosure sale set forth in H.R.S. § 667-5 to -10. Compl. ¶¶ 125-28. Specifically, Plaintiffs allege that Defendants Central and HSBC failed to: (1) publicly announce the continued auction date; (2) publish the correct location of the auction; (3) appear at the auction site to conduct the sale; and (4) "deposit[] at most ten (10%) of the bid amount in advance of the auction as required under HRS § 667-5.7." Id. ¶ 126.

At the hearing, Plaintiffs' counsel stated that they are no longer asserting that Central and HSBC failed to publicly announce a continued auction date or deposit at must ten percent of the bid amount in advance of the auction.

To the extent Plaintiffs are still asserting that Central and HSBC failed to publish the correct location and failed to appear at the auction [*26] site, their claims fail. The Affidavit of Publication establishes that a notice of sale for the Property was published in the Honolulu Star-Bulletin three times, listing the sale date as November 19, 2009, and the location of the sale as the State Office Building in Hilo, Hawaii. Plaintiffs do not dispute that the nonjudicial foreclosure sale took place on November 19, 2009, and have not asserted that the sale did not occur at the State Office Building in Hilo, Hawaii. Compl. ¶ 45. Under Chapter 667, there is no requirement that the mortgagee itself appear at the auction site to conduct the sale. Plaintiffs have not asserted who conducted the sale and whether or not that party was authorized to act on behalf of Central. Plaintiffs' conclusory allegations, without any factual detail, are insufficient to survive a motion to dismiss.

Count V is hereby DISMISSED WITHOUT PREJUDICE.

F. Count VI — Breach of Contract (Central and HSBC)

Count VI, Plaintiffs breach of contract claim, is premised on their alleged status as third-party beneficiaries of a contract entered into between Central and the government as part of the Home Affordable Modification Program ("HAMP"). Compl. ¶¶ 130-35. The HAMP [*27] grew out of the Emergency Economic Stabilization Act of 2008, 12 U.S.C. §§ 5201, et seq. ("EESA"), which authorizes the Department of Treasury ("DOT") to purchase certain troubled assets. See *Phipps v. Wells Fargo Bank, N.A., Civ. No. 10-2025 LJO-SKO, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 10550, 2011 WL 302803, at 1 (E.D. Cal. Jan. 27, 2011). "To the extent DOT acquires mortgages, EESA directs DOT to maximize assistance of homeowners and to encourage mortgage servicers to take advantage of government programs to minimize foreclosures." Id.; see 12 U.S.C. § 5219. To further these goals, DOT, acting through Fannie Mae, entered into agreements with loan servicers. See *Phipps, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 10550, 2011 WL 302803, at 1. Plaintiffs assert that Fannie Mae entered into such an agreement with Central. Compl. ¶ 133.

HAMP does not recognize a private right of action against lenders or servicers. See *Phipps, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 10550, 2011 WL 302803, at 9. Consequently, Plaintiffs may only recover for a breach of the HAMP agreement if they are third party beneficiaries of the HAMP contract. For third parties to recover on a contract, they must be able to show that they are intended, rather than incidental, beneficiaries of the contract. *Hoffman v. Bank of Am., N.A., No. C 10-2171 SI, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 70455, 2010 WL 2635773, at 3 (N.D. Cal. June 30, 2010). Thus, the third party "must be able to show that the contract was made with the 'express or implied intention [*28] of the parties to the contract to benefit the third party.'" Id. (quoting Klamath v. Patterson, 204 F.3d 1206, 1210 (9th Cir. 1999)). When a government contract is at issue, the general presumption is that members of the public are incidental beneficiaries and "may not enforce the contract absent a clear intent to the contrary." Klamath, 204 F.3d at 1211.

The Supreme Court recently rejected a third-party beneficiary theory brought by health care facilities that had been overcharged by pharmaceutical companies in violation of a pricing agreement between the pharmaceutical companies and the federal government. See Astra USA, Inc. v. Santa Clara Cnty., 563 U.S. 110, 131 S. Ct. 1342, 179 L. Ed. 2d 457 (2011). The pricing agreement was created pursuant to the Public Health Services Act ("PHSA"), 42 U.S.C. § 256b, which did not provide for a private right of action. Id. at 1345. The Supreme Court explained that the pricing agreements, composed by HHS, enable drug manufacturers to opt into the statutory scheme, and that therefore a third-party suit to enforce the pricing agreements "is in essence a suit to enforce the statute itself." Id. at 1348. Consequently, the absence of a private cause of action to enforce statutory obligations "would be rendered meaningless" if a party could bring a third-party suit to enforce a government contract that merely confirms those statutory obligations. Id.

Similarly, [*29] the HAMP agreements are form contracts provided by Fannie Mae and allow lenders to opt into a statutory scheme.[9] See *Warner v. Wells Fargo Bank, N.A., No. SACV 11-00480 DOC (PLAx), 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 66551, 2011 WL 2470923, at 3 (C.D. Cal. June 21, 2011). As in Astra, allowing Plaintiffs to bring a third party contract claim would allow Plaintiffs to circumvent the absence of a private right of action to enforce HAMP contracts. Moreover, "it would be unreasonable for a qualified borrower seeking a loan modification to rely on the HAMP servicer's agreement as granting him enforceable rights since the agreement does not actually require that the servicer modify all eligible loans, nor does any of the other language of the contract demonstrate that the borrowers are intended beneficiaries." *Hoffman, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 70455, 2010 WL 2635773, at 4.

Accordingly, this Court agrees with the majority of the courts that borrowers are not third party beneficiaries and have no right to enforce a HAMP contract between a lender and Fannie Mae. See *Hunter v. CitiMortgage, Inc., No. CV 11-01549-PHX-FJM, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 115315, 2011 WL 4625973, at 2 (D. Ariz. Oct. 5, 2011); *Omega v. Wells Fargo & Co., No. C 11-02621 JSW, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 103928, 2011 WL 4345046, at 3-4 (N.D. Cal. Sept. 14, 2011); *Hoffman, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 70455, 2010 WL 2635773, at 3 (collecting cases); but see *Reyes v. Saxon Mortg. Servs., Inc., 09-cv-1366 DMS (WMC), 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 125235, 2009 WL 3738177, at 2 (S.D. Cal. Nov. 5, 2009) (determining the plaintiff's third-party breach of contract claim based on a HAMP agreement stated a plausible claim because "[a]rguably, one [*30] of the purposes of the contract is to assist homeowners, like Plaintiff, who are facing foreclosure").

Count VI is DISMISSED WITH PREJUDICE.

G. Count VII - Violation of TILA (Central)

Count VII alleges that Central violated TILA by failing to provide Plaintiffs with accurate material disclosures required under TILA, "including but not limited to the new charges for forced placed insurance that are added to the escrow account of the Plaintiffs." Compl. ¶ 142. Plaintiffs further allege that Central "arbitrarily charged and applied extremely high insurance charges, while neglecting to properly notify the plaintiffs and failing to disclose or explain the significance of the insurance" in "clear violation of the public policy of TILA." Id. ¶ 143. Defendants assert that Plaintiffs' TILA claims are time-barred, and also lack merit, because, inter alia, Central was not the original lender. Defs.' MTD Compl. Mem. at 3, 12-14; Defs.' Reply at 9.

---

[9] Plaintiffs did not submit a copy of the HAMP agreement between Central and Fannie Mae and has not asserted that the agreement was not the standard contract used by Fannie Mae.

The purpose of TILA is to assure a meaningful disclosure of credit terms so that consumers can understand more readily various available terms and avoid the uninformed use of credit. See 15 U.S.C. § 1601(a). TILA requires the lender to disclose to borrowers specific information, [*31] including providing the borrower of his or her right to rescind a transaction. See, e.g., 15 U.S.C. §§ 1635, 1638. Regulation Z, 12 C.F.R. Part 226, is issued by the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System to implement TILA. See 12 C.F.R. § 226.1(a). Four sections of Regulation Z deal with mortgage loan transactions: Sections 226.17 and 226.18 provide for general disclosures that must be made before consummation of a transaction; Section 226.19 deals with disclosures required in certain residential mortgage and variable-rate transactions; and Section 226.20 provides for post-consummation disclosures.

Under TILA, an assignee may be liable for violations that are "apparent on the face of the disclosure statement." See 15 U.S.C. § 1641. In Count VII, Plaintiffs, however, do not allege that Central is liable under TILA for any other entities alleged violations. Instead, Plaintiffs only make assertions regarding the insurance charges imposed by Central. See Compl. ¶¶ 140-49. Other courts have held that a creditor's actions in force-placing insurance on a borrower's account may have constituted a new transaction and triggered new disclosure requirements under § 226.18, which provides that, "[f]or each transaction, the creditor shall disclose . . . [t]he finance charge." See *Vician v. Wells Fargo Home Mortg., No. 2:05-CV-144, 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 26141, 2006 WL 694740, at 5 (N.D. Ind. Mar. 16, 2006); [*32] Travis v. Boulevard Bank N.A., 880 F. Supp. 1226, 1229-30 (N.D. Ill. 1995). This Court need not decide whether such a claim is viable here, however, because Plaintiffs claims are untimely.

TILA provides borrowers two remedies for disclosure violations: (1) rescission, 15 U.S.C. § 1635; and (2) damages, 15 U.S.C. § 1640. Plaintiffs seek both, which have different requirements, and the Court will address each remedy in turn. See Compl. ¶ 149.

1. Rescission

In credit transactions in which a security interest in a consumer's principal dwelling is retained, TILA gives a consumer three days in which to rescind the transaction. 15 U.S.C. § 1635(a). If a lender fails to provide material disclosures, the duration of the borrower's right to rescind extends for "three years after the date of consummation of the transaction or upon the sale of the property, whichever occurs first." 15 U.S.C. § 1635(f). "The statute of limitations applicable to TILA rescission is not subject to equitable tolling." *Wells Fargo, 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 26141, 2011 WL 1833020, at 6. Here, the Property was sold at a foreclosure sale on November 19, 2009. Compl. ¶¶ 82-85. Thus, Count II fails to state a claim upon which relief may be granted. See *Takushi v. BAC Home Loan Servicing, LP, 814 F. Supp. 2d 1073, 2011 WL 3861439, at 7 (D. Haw. Aug. 31, 2011) (dismissing Plaintiff's TILA claim for rescission because the subject property had been sold at a nonjudicial foreclosure auction before Plaintiff filed the lawsuit). [*33]

2. Damages

TILA requires that borrowers bring claims for damages "within one year from the date of the occurrence of the violation," unless the claim is asserted "as a matter of defense by recoupment or set-off." 15 U.S.C. § 1640(e). Courts, however, may extend the period if the one-year rule would be unjust or would frustrate TILA's purpose. King v. California, 784 F.2d 910, 915 (9th Cir. 1986). For example, if a borrower had no reason or opportunity to discover the fraud or nondisclosures that form the basis of his or her TILA claim, the court may toll the statute of limitations. Id.; but see Meyer v. Ameriquest Mortg. Co., 342 F.3d 899, 902-03 (9th Cir. 2003) (refusing to toll the statute of limitations on a TILA claim because the plaintiff was in full possession of all loan documents and did not allege any concealment of loan documents or any other action that would have prevented discovery of the TILA violations); *Blanco v. Am. Home Mortg. Serv., Inc., No. Civ. 2:09-578 WBS-DAD, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 119338, 2009 WL 4674904, at 2-3 (E.D. Cal. Dec. 4, 2009) (same). "Equitable tolling is generally applied in situations 'where the claimant has actively pursued his judicial remedies by filing a defective pleading during the statutory period, or where the complainant has been induced or tricked by his adversary's misconduct into allowing the filing deadline to pass.'" O'Donnell v. Vencor Inc., 466 F.3d 1104, 1112 (9th Cir. 2006) (citation omitted).

Plaintiffs' TILA claim [*34] is based on the alleged lack of required disclosures related to insurance charges by Central. If the insurance charges constitute a "new transaction," supporting a viable claim under 12 C.F.R. § 226.18, the limitations period would begin to run at the time of such transaction. See King, 784 F.2d at 915 ("the limitations period in [15 U.S.C. §] 1640(e) runs from the date of consummation of the transaction"). Plaintiffs allege that on or about June 2008, Central informed Plaintiffs that Central had included the Property in its group insurance policy, and that Central increased the mortgage payment to recover the costs of the added insurance coverage in July 2008. Compl. ¶¶ 35, 144. Thus, at the latest the limitations period began in July 2008, and Plaintiffs' claim is time-barred unless the statute of limitations is equitably tolled.

Plaintiffs assert that the limitations period was tolled due to Central's failure to effectively provide the required disclosures and notices. Id. ¶ 147. This assertion, "even if true . . . is insufficient to satisfy equitable tolling because it would establish no more than the TILA violation itself; this allegation does not suggest that any circumstances beyond [Plaintiffs'] control prevented [them] from [*35] learning of the TILA violation." *Menashe v. Bank of New York, Civ. No. 10-00306 JMS-BMK, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 111067, 2011 WL 4527384, at 4 (D. Haw. Sept. 27, 2011); see *Jacob v. Aurora Loan Servs., No. 10-1789 SC, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 65999, 2010 WL 2673128, at 3 (N.D. Cal. July 2, 2010) (determining that the plaintiff could not rely on the same factual allegations to show that the defendants violated TILA and toll the TILA limitations period, because "[o]therwise, equitable tolling would apply in every case where a plaintiff alleges violations of TILA . . . and the statute[] of limitations would be meaningless"). There are no factual allegations that support an inference that Plaintiffs did not have an opportunity to discover the alleged TILA violations, or that Defendants prevented them from filing a claim. Accordingly, there is no basis for equitable tolling.

Because no amendment can cure the defect of the portion of Count VII seeking rescission, it is DISMISSED WITH PREJUDICE. Because it is possible for Plaintiffs to allege facts that support equitable tolling, the portion of Count VII seeking damages is DISMISSED WITHOUT PREJUDICE.

H. Count VIII — Violation of UDAP (Alliance, ACMC, and Central)

In Count VIII, Plaintiffs allege that Defendants Alliance and ACMC engaged in "fraudulent, deceptive, unfair, and [*36] other wrongful conduct" in violation of H.R.S. §§ 480-2. Compl. ¶ 159. Plaintiffs assert that Alliance and ACMC engaged in "predatory lending." Id. ¶ 156. Specifically, Plaintiffs allege that ACMC and Alliance placed them in a loan knowing that Plaintiffs would be unable to repay it, failed to disclose the risks of the loan to Plaintiffs, and preyed on Plaintiffs through marketing practices and loan documentation that left Plaintiffs unable to understand the terms of the loan. Id. ¶¶ 153-54. Plaintiffs further allege that ACMC and Alliance "deceptively preyed upon Plaintiffs naive nature in the industry and difficulty with the English language." Id. ¶ 154. Plaintiffs allege that Central aided and abetted these violations by acquiring the loan that contained "flagrant" and "blatant" unfair and deceptive acts in the origination of the loan. Id. ¶ 155.

Defendants assert that "aiding and abetting" liability for an alleged violation of UDAP does not exist, and that Plaintiffs make no specific statements or allegations of fact as to how Central's conduct violated UDAP. Defendants therefore asks for Count VIII to be dismissed as against Central. Defs.' MTD Compl. Mem. at 18.

H.R.S. § 480-2 provides, in relevant part, that [*37] "[u]nfair methods of competition and unfair or deceptive acts or practices in the conduct of any trade or commerce are unlawful." UDAP provides for a civil cause of action against "[a]ny person, firm, company, association, or corporation violating any of the provisions of section 480-2." H.R.S. § 480-3.1. An assignee of a note and mortgage, such as Central, is not liable for damages under H.R.S. § 480-2 "for the unfair or deceptive acts and practices that may have occurred during the consummation of the loan." Rodenhurst v. Bank of Am., 773 F. Supp. 2d 886, 895-96 (D. Haw. 2011); see *Skaggs v. HSBC Bank USA, N.A., Civ. No. 10-00247 JMS-KSC, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 98057, 2011 WL 3861373, at 5 (D. Haw. Aug. 31, 2011) (explaining an assignee is not liable for damages under H.R.S. § 480-2 "merely because one is an assignee").

Thus, Plaintiffs' claim for damages against Central fails as a matter of law. Because Section 480-12 provides that contracts in violation of Chapter 480 are void, however, a claim for rescission based on a violation of Chapter 480 may stand against a subsequent assignee "if there are sufficient grounds for rendering the note and mortgage void." Skaggs, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 98057, 2011 WL 3861373, at *5 n.2; see Beazie v. Amerifund Fin., Inc., Civ. No. 09-00562 JMS-KSC, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 63918, 2011 WL 2457725, at *14 n.14 (D. Haw. June 16, 2011).

With regard to Plantiffs' claim as against ACMC and against Central for rescission, to the extent Plaintiffs' claim is based on "predatory lending," it fails as a matter of law because "lenders generally [*38] owe no duty to a borrower not to place borrowers in a loan even where there was a foreseeable risk borrowers would be unable to pay." Marzan v. Bank of Am., 779 F. Supp. 2d 1140, 1152 (D. Haw. 2011) (internal quotations omitted). Plaintiffs have not alleged any facts that suggest ACMC or Alliance "exceed[ed] the scope of [a] conventional role as a mere lender of money," which would allow them to fall outside the scope of this general rule. Id. (alterations in original). Thus, Plaintiffs' claim that Defendants marketing, omissions, and underwriting process violate UDAP fails. See id. (dismissing similar allegations because the plaintiff did not allege facts that defendants were anything other than "mere lender[s] of money").

To the extent Plaintiffs allege that Alliance and ACMC violated UDAP by preying on them in light of their naive nature in the industry and minimal English language skills, Plaintiffs' conclusory allegations are completely devoid of factual detail. These allegations, without supporting facts, fail to put Defendants on fair notice of the ground upon which the claim rests. For example, Plaintiffs' allege that "[t]he terms and concepts used in loan origination documents are already confusing without the added confusion of having [*39] them presented in another language" without identifying which "terms and concepts" Plaintiffs found confusing, Compl. ¶ 158, and state that the "loan documentation and marketing disguised the actual payment and schedule and loaned amount," without specifying what loan documentation and marketing they are referring to. Id. ¶ 154.

Count VIII is DISMISSED WITHOUT PREJUDICE.

I. Count IX — Violation of UDAP in Loss Mitigation (Central)

In Count IX, Plaintiffs allege that Central violated H.R.S. § 480-2 by providing "false and misleading statements concerning the loss mitigation process and failed to properly process Plaintiffs' documents and disclose facts relating to Plaintiffs' application for modification of their loan." Compl. ¶ 163. Plaintiffs' allege that Central "used various program changes to confuse Plaintiffs from effectively knowing and pursuing their rights to gain a meaningful review." Id. ¶ 164. Plaintiffs have failed to provide factual details supporting these conclusory allegations. Plaintiffs do not state what "various program changes" were confusing or how Central failed to "properly process" their loan modification request. Plaintiffs have therefore failed to set forth sufficient facts [*40] to survive a motion to dismiss. See Twombly, 550 U.S. at 555.

Count IX is DISMISSED WITHOUT PREJUDICE.

J. Counts X and XI — Breach of Fiduciary Duty (Alliance, ACMC, and Central)

In Count X, Plaintiffs allege that ACMC and Alliance breached a fiduciary duty owed to Plaintiffs by failing to disclose that Plaintiffs would likely default on their loan and placing them in a loan "in harms way," and that Central aided and abetted such breach by acquiring the loan. Compl. ¶¶ 170, 172. Plaintiffs further contend that Central breached a fiduciary duty to Plaintiffs by "charging excessive force-placed insurance premiums and finance charges to Plaintiffs' escrow account." Id. ¶¶ 177-78. In Count XI, Plaintiffs allege that Central breached its fiduciary duty to Plaintiffs by delaying and failing to properly process Plaintiffs' loan modification application. Compl. ¶¶ 182-85. Defendants argue that Central, as a lender, owed no fiduciary duty towards Plaintiffs. Defs.' MTD Compl. Mem. at 19. In opposition, Plaintiffs assert that Central is a servicer, not lender, and thus case law regarding lenders does not apply. Pls.' Opp'n at 28.

"Unless a special relationship exists between a borrower and lender that elevates the lender's [*41] responsibility, the standard 'arms-length business relationship' applies." *Hoilien v. Bank of Am., Civ. No. 10-00761 DAE-KSC, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 89155, 2011 WL 3494523, at 9 (D. Haw. Aug. 10, 2011) (quoting Giles v. Gen. Motors Acceptance Corp., 494 F.3d 865, 883 (9th Cir. 2007). This general rule also applies to lender's assignees and loan servicers. See *Phillips v. Bank of Am., Civ. No. 10-00551, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 6745, 2011 WL 240813, at 11 (D. Haw. Jan. 21, 2011) (determining the plaintiffs failed to state a claim for breach of fiduciary duty because "nothing in the Complaint alleges 'special circumstances' that might impose a fiduciary duty in this mortgage-lending situation, much less a fiduciary duty owed by loan servicers like MERS or assignees"). The Complaint contains no allegations that any special circumstances existed that elevated Plaintiffs' relationship with ACMC, Alliance, or Central beyond that of an ordinary borrower-lender relationship. Thus, Plaintiffs' allegations as stated fail as a matter of law.

Accordingly, Counts X and XI are DISMISSED WITHOUT PREJUDICE.

K. Counts XII, XIII, and XV — Common Law Fraud and Negligent Misrepresentation (ACMC and Alliance)

Counts XII, XIII, and XV allege claims against ACMC and Alliance for common law fraud — concealment, common law fraud — inducement, and negligent misrepresentation. Defendants Central, HSBC, and MERS move for the Court to dismiss these counts as against them because the counts [*42] do not state claims against Central, HSBC, and MERS. Defs.' MTD Compl. Mem. at 21. Because the Claims are not brought against Central, HSBC, and MERS, there is nothing to dismiss as against them. As to ACMC, who has joined the motion, Defendants have not argued the merits of these claims and thus the Court will decline to consider the motion to dismiss with respect to ACMC.

The Court DENIES the Motion to Dismiss Complaint as to Counts XII, XIII, and XV.

L. Count XIV — Respondeat Superior Liability (Alliance, Central, and HSBC)[10]

Plaintiffs allege that Alliance, Central, and HSBC, as successors in interest to ACMC, have respondeat superior liability as a result of ACMC's alleged wrongful actions. Compl. ¶ 209. Central and HSBC argue that because Plaintiffs' allegations do not show any agent/principal or employee/employer relationship between them and the originating lenders, and do not allege that any other Defendants were acting within the scope of any agency or authority with respect to Central and HSBC, Plaintiffs fail to state an actionable claim against them for respondeat superior liability. Defs.' MTD Compl. Mem. at 22, 25.

Respondeat superior is not an independent cause of action, [*43] but a theory of liability. A principal may be liable for the wrongful actions of its agent that occur while acting within the scope of the agency. State v. Hoshijo, 102 Haw. 307, 76 P.3d 550, 562-63 (Haw. 2003). "'Vicarious liability under the respondeat superior doctrine ordinarily requires some kind of employment relationship or other consensual arrangement under which one person agrees to act under another's control.'" Id. at 562 (quoting Dan B. Dobbs, The Law of Torts, § 335, at 910 (2000) (footnote omitted)). Plaintiffs have not asserted any facts indicating a "consensual arrangement" under which Alliance agreed to act under the control of Central or HSBC. It is not clear from the pleadings and memoranda whether Alliance and Central ever held an interest in the Note and/or Mortgage at the same time. If they did, Alliance might be a principal of Central per Central's role as nominee set forth in the Mortgage. See Part III.A. The Complaint, however, is insufficient to show that Alliance was an agent of Central (or HSBC). Likewise, there are no allegations in the Complaint that suggest Central and HSBC had an arrangement under which ACMC agreed to act under the control of Central or HSBC.

[10] In the title of Count XIV, Plaintiffs list the claim as against Alliance, Central, and HSBC. Plaintiffs, however, do not make any assertions with regard to HSBC in this Count.

Plaintiffs assert that their respondeat superior claims are "are an adjunct [*44] to the successor-in-interest claim," and consequently, Defendants liability arises not from an agency relationship, but "from the alleged fact that the Moving Defendants were successors in interest." Pls.' Opp'n at 30-31. An assignee can be liable for a predecessor's TILA violations in certain situations. See 15 U.S.C. § 1641. To the extent Plaintiffs are asserting liability for ACMC's TILA violations, however, as discussed in Section II.G, Plaintiffs' TILA claims are time-barred. With regard to ACMC's other alleged violations, even if a successor in interest can be held liable for a prior debt servicer's actions where the successor either impliedly or expressly assumes responsibility for the actions of the original lenders, see *Prince v. U.S. Bancorp Nat'l Ass'n, No. 2:09-CV-01095 KJD-PAL, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 30404, 2011 WL 1099124, at 3 (D. Nev. Mar. 21, 2011), Plaintiffs have not alleged any facts beyond a conclusory statement that suggests that Central assumed responsibility for the actions of ACMC or Alliance.

Count XIV is DISMISSED WITHOUT PREJUDICE.

M. Count XVI - Civil Conspiracy (All Defendants)

In Count XVI of the Complaint, Plaintiffs assert that Defendants engaged in a civil conspiracy "to originate mortgage loans through a pattern and practice of predatory lending to conceal [*45] this unlawful activity for purposes of unjustly enriching the joint venture of the conspirators." Compl. ¶ 219. Plaintiffs further allege that ACMC used "unfair and deceptive trade practices to solicit and obtain borrowers . . . and then to securitize the Plaintiffs' loan without permission." Id. ¶ 221.

A civil conspiracy is defined as "a combination of two or more persons or entities by concerted action to accomplish a criminal or unlawful purpose, or to accomplish some purpose not in itself criminal or unlawful by criminal or unlawful means." Robert's Haw. Sch. Bus, Inc. v. Laupahoehoe Transp. Co., 91 Haw. 224, 982 P.2d 853, 881 n. 28 (Haw. 1999) (internal quotation omitted). Under Hawaii law, "civil conspiracy" is not an independent cause of action, but rather, derivative of other wrongs. *Long v. Deutsche Bank Nat'l Trust Co., Civ. No. 10-00359 JMS-KSC, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 72147, 2011 WL 2650219, at 8 (D. Haw. July 5, 2011). Plaintiffs have not clearly identified an underlying claim on which their civil conspiracy claim is based. "Predatory lending" does not state a claim upon which relief can be granted. *Campollo v. Bank of Am., Civ. No. 11-00052 SOM-BMK, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 64074, 2011 WL 2457674, at 11 (D. Haw. June 16, 2011). To the extent Plaintiffs rely on their claims of "unfair and deceptive practices" and the securitization of their loan, the Court is dismissing Plaintiffs' claims against the moving Defendants with respect to these allegations. [*46] Thus, Plaintiffs civil conspiracy claim cannot survive the Motion to Dismiss Complaint.

Count XVI is DISMISSED WITHOUT PREJUDICE.

N. Count XVII — Wrongful Foreclosure (Central and HSBC)

In Count XVII, Plaintiffs seek punitive damages, alleging that they "were not in default of their loan" and thus "[t]he foreclosure was wrongful and without right." Compl. ¶ 225. Plaintiffs have failed to identify the legal basis for this claim. Courts in this district have recognized the potential of wrongful foreclosure claims that were brought pursuant to H.R.S. Chapter 667. See e.g., *Doran v. Wells Fargo Bank, Civ. No. 11-00132 LEK-BMK, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 126418, 2011 WL 2160643, at 13 (D. Haw. May 31, 2011); Rundgren v. Bank of N.Y. Mellon, 777 F. Supp. 2d 1224, 1234 (D. Haw. 2011). This Court has already considered Plaintiffs' claims brought under Chapter 667, and dismissed those claims without prejudice. Hawaii state courts have not yet recognized an independent substantive "wrongful foreclosure" cause of action. Although a federal court exercising jurisdiction over a state law claim is "at liberty to predict the future course of [a state's] law, plaintiffs choosing the federal forum ... [are] not entitled to trailblazing initiatives under [state law]." *Cervantes, 656 F.3d 1034, 2011 WL 3911031, at 6 (internal quotations omitted) (alteration in original) (affirming dismissal of a claim for wrongful foreclosure when such [*47] an action did not exist under state law); see Ed Peters Jewelry Co. v. C & J Jewelry Co., 124 F.3d 252, 262-63 (1st Cir. 1997) (declining to predict whether "Rhode Island courts would countenance the freewheeling 'wrongful foreclosure' claim [the plaintiff] advocates"). The Court declines to predict whether Hawaii courts will recognize a common law "wrongful foreclosure" claim.

Count XVII is DISMISSED WITHOUT PREJUDICE.

O. Count XVIII — Improper Restrictions as a Result of Securitization (All Defendants)

In Count XVIII, Plaintiffs allege that the Mortgage is a security agreement between creditor and debtor, the security agreement may not be modified or amended by one party without the prior written consent of the other, and that through the securitization of their loan, Defendants imposed "additional rules and restrictions upon the Mortgage and Note," which resulted in a unilateral modification of the security agreement. Compl. ¶¶ 228-30. Plaintiff asserts that "[f]ailure to abide by the rules and restrictions imposes liability upon the parties who organize, manage and control the securitization." Id. ¶ 234.

Courts in this district have repeatedly rejected the contention that securitization in general supports a cause of action. See e.g., Rodenhurst, 773 F. Supp. 2d at 898-99; *Long, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 94675, 2011 WL 2650219, at 9; *Velez, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 15481, 2011 WL 572523, at 9. These courts have recognized [*48] that plaintiffs making similar allegations to those made in Count XVIII appear to sound in contract.

In Long v. Deutsche Bank Nat'l Trust Co., Civ. No. 10-00359 JMS-KSC, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 72147, 2011 WL 2650219 (D. Haw. July 5, 2011), the plaintiff asserted a nearly identical claim. The Court held that it was unclear what the legal basis was for the plaintiff's claim, and "to the extent Plaintiff is attempting to assert that the parties agreed that the mortgage and/or note would not be securitized and Defendants breached this provision, Plaintiff has failed to allege even the basic elements of a breach of contract claim, much less factual allegations to support this claim." *2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 72147, [WL] at 9. Similarly, in Velez v. The Bank Of N.Y. Mellon, Civ. No. 10-00468 JMS-KSC, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 15481, 2011 WL 572523 (D. Haw. Feb. 15, 2011), the Court rejected the plaintiff's assertion that restrictions resulting from securitization left the mortgage and note at issue unenforceable. The Court concluded that to the extent the plaintiff was attempting to assert a breach of contract claim, the Complaint was insufficient because it "fail[ed] to identify (1) the contract at issue; (2) the parties to the contract; (3) whether Plaintiff performed under the contract; (4) the particular provision of the contract allegedly violated by [Defendant]; (5) when and how [Defendant] [*49] allegedly breached the contract; or (6) how Plaintiff was injured." *Id. at 3. The Court further noted that "given that the mortgage expressly states that the mortgage note 'can be sold one or more times without prior notice to Borrower,' it does not appear that securitization breached any particular provision of the mortgage." Id. (internal citation omitted).

In opposition, Plaintiffs argue that they have asserted a sufficient contract claim that meets the elements identified in Velez. Pls.' Opp'n at 37-38. Specifically, Plaintiffs assert that (1) the contract is the Mortgage; (2) "the parties are the Plaintiffs and [ACMC] with C[entral] and HSBC as alleged successors or assigns of the L[oan] or parts of it for [ACMC]"; (3) they performed under the contract because they were not in default; (4) "the provisions violated are set forth in detail in the Complaint"; (5) Alliance "breached the contract when they converted the Loan to a mortgage-backed security, unbundled its parts, and sold part of it to others who created new encumbrances on the loan," and (6) Plaintiffs were injured because they do not know who the real parties in interest are for repayment and foreclosure purposes, who their current [*50] lender is, which party has the authority to negotiate a modification of their loan, and whether or not it is possible to currently modify the loan. Id. at 38-39.

First, the Court declines Plaintiffs' invitation to piece together a breach of contract claim from various allegations strewn throughout the sixty-three page Complaint. Second, "[i]n breach of contract actions, [] the complaint must, at minimum, cite the contractual provision allegedly violated. Otani v. State Farm Fire & Cas. Co., 927 F. 927 F. Supp. 1330, 1336 (D. Haw. 1996). Plaintiffs appear to argue that the terms of the Pooling Agreement in which the Mortgage was placed results in a breach of Plaintiffs' contract with Defendants, but do not identify what provision of their Mortgage that they believe Defendants violated. See Compl. ¶ 232. Third, like in Velez, the Mortgage specifically states that the Note "can be sold one or more times without prior notice to Borrower." Defs.' MTD Compl. Ex. 1-2 at ¶ 20. Consequently, "securitization and/or transfer of the mortgage and note does not modify the terms of the agreement-the mortgage expressly provides that it can be sold without notice, and the transferee simply obtained the same rights that the transferor had under the mortgage." *Velez, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 15481, 2011 WL 572523, at 5. Plaintiffs have failed to plead [*51] a sufficient breach of contract claim.

Count XVIII is DISMISSED WITHOUT PREJUDICE.

P. Count XIX — Wrongful Conversion of Note (All Defendants)

In Count XIX, Plaintiffs allege that the conversion of the Mortgage to a mortgage backed security renders the Mortgage unenforceable. Compl. ¶ 238. Plaintiffs assert that: "Securitization improperly attempts to divide the Note from the Mortgage and to make the Note a separately enforceable interest. A Mortgage cannot be enforced as a separate interest in the property to be foreclosed apart from and independent of the Note." Id.

The Ninth Circuit has rejected the argument that the MERS system results in no party being in a position to foreclose because securitization splits the mortgage deed from the note. See *Cervantes, 656 F.3d 1034, 2011 WL 3911031, at 7. The Ninth Circuit explained that even if it accepted the assertions that MERS is a sham beneficiary and the note is split from the deed, it "would reject the plaintiffs' conclusion that, as a necessary consequence, no party has the power to foreclose." Id. As Plaintiffs rely on the "separation" of the Note from the Mortgage in claiming securitization rendered the Note unenforceable, they fail to state a viable claim. See *Long, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 72147, 2011 WL 2650219, at 10; *Velez, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 15481, 2011 WL 572523, at 4-5.

Count XIX is DISMISSED [*52] WITHOUT PREJUDICE.

Q. Count XX — Mortgagor Never Consented to Securitization (All Defendants)

Count XX asserts that Defendants securitized Plaintiffs' mortgage without obtaining Plaintiffs' required consent, rendering the mortgage unenforceable. Compl. ¶ 241. As explained in Long and Velez, in which the plaintiffs asserted he same claim, the Court is unable to discern the basis of this claim from Plaintiffs' conclusory allegations. See *Long, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 72147, 2011 WL 2650219, at 10; *Velez, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 15481, 2011 WL 572523, at 4-5. Furthermore, as discussed above, the Mortgage states that the Note can be sold one or more times without prior notice to Plaintiffs and contemplates that the Mortgage may pass to Lender's successors and assigns.

Count XX is DISMISSED WITHOUT PREJUDICE.

R. Count XXI — Restrictions Imposed Upon the Modification of the Mortgage are a Clog upon the Equity of Redemption (Defendants Claiming an Interest in the Property)

With respect to Count XXI, Plaintiffs assert that: "By restricting the ability to modify the mortgage, securitization interferes with [Plaintiffs'] right[] to redeem the subject property. For example, if the debtor could only afford to pay off 99% of the amount owed, the creditor is barred from accepting the one percent reduction in the payoff." [*53] Compl. ¶ 245.

"Equity of redemption is the right of the mortgagor to redeem his property after defaulting in the payment of the mortgage debt, by subsequently paying all costs and interest, in addition to the mortgage debt to the mortgagee." In re Ehring, 900 F.2d 184, 187 n.1 (9th Cir. 1990). Under Hawaii law, there is an equitable right of redemption before an order of foreclosure, and although in some states a statutory right of redemption exists for a period following the foreclosure sale, the H.R.S. does not contain any such authorization. See Fed. Home Loan Mortg. Corp. v. Transamerica Ins. Co., 89 Haw. 157, 969 P.2d 1275, 1282 (Haw. 1998).

A clog upon the equity of redemption is "[a]n agreement or condition that prevents a defaulting mortgagor from getting back the property free from encumbrance upon paying the debt or performing the obligation for which the security was given." Black's Law Dictionary (9th ed. 2009). Plaintiffs do not assert that any clause in the mortgage, or alleged modification, would have prevented them from paying off the mortgage in full and redeeming their property before the nonjudicial foreclosure sale. Thus, their claim fails.

Count XXI is DISMISSED WITHOUT PREJUDICE.

S. Count XXII — Quiet Title (Defendants claiming an interest in the property)

Plaintiffs assert that "[a]t the time of the purported [*54] foreclosure sale on November 19, 2009, the Plaintiffs had entered into an application process or other modification of relevant contracts and no sale should have been conducted or any deed issued." Compl. ¶ 248. Plaintiffs assert the purported foreclosure sale "could not have been conducted in conformance" with federal law, HAMP, Hawaii state law, the United States Constitution, and the Hawaii State Constitution. Compl. ¶ 249. Plaintiffs thus ask the court to void the foreclosure sale deed. Id. ¶ 253. Defendants assert that because Plaintiffs have not alleged that they have paid their mortgage loan, a prerequisite to an action to quiet title, the Court should dismiss Count XXII. Defs.' MTD Compl. Mem. at 36. Plaintiffs reply that under Hawaii law, they need only establish they have substantial interest in the property and title superior to that of the defendants, and thus they need not assert that their mortgage is paid in full. Pls.' Opp'n at 40.

Courts in this district have construed similar pleadings as attempting to state a claim pursuant to H.R.S. § 669-1(a), which provides that an "[a]ction may be brought by any person against another person who claims, or who may claim adversely to the plaintiff, [*55] an estate or interest in real property, for the purpose of determining the adverse claim." "[F]or a mortgagor to quiet title against the mortgagee, the mortgagor must establish that he is the rightful owners of the property and he has paid, or is able to pay, the outstanding debt on his property." *Enriquez v. Countrywide Home Loans, FSB, 814F. Supp. 2d ,1042, 2011 WL 3861402, at 22 (D. Haw. 2011). Plaintiffs have not alleged that they have paid or are able to pay the outstanding debts on the property and thus Count XXII fails to state a viable claim.[11] See Marzan, 779 F. Supp. 2d at 1156 (dismissing the plaintiffs quiet title action because they had "not indicated that they have paid their outstanding loan balance, much less that they are able to do so").

Count XXII is DISMISSED WITHOUT PREJUDICE.

T. Count XXIII — Declaration of Constructive Trust or Mortgage Trust (Defendants claiming any interest in the Property)

In Count XXIII, Plaintiffs seek the declaration of a constructive trust or mortgage trust against Defendants claiming any interest in the Property. Compl. ¶¶ 254-58.

A constructive trust is an equitable remedy that "will be imposed where the evidence is clear and convincing that one party will be unjustly enriched if allowed to retain the entire property." Maria v. Freitas, 832 P.2d 259, 274 (Haw. 1992); see Lee v. Wong, 57 Haw. 137, 552 P.2d 635, 638 (Haw. 1976) ("It is well established in this jurisdiction [*56] that a constructive trust will be imposed only when the evidence is clear and convincing."). The Court has dismissed the majority of Plaintiffs' substantive claims, and Plaintiffs have not otherwise alleged sufficient facts suggesting that Defendants will be unjustly enriched if they retain the property. Because a constructive trust is a remedy and the Court has dismissed Plaintiffs' substantive claims as against Defendants claiming an interest in the property, Count XXIII is not tenable.

[11] Although Plaintiffs claim they were not in default in Count XVII, Plaintiffs also assert that "[n]othing in this action denies the validity of the underlying debt," Compl. ¶ 255, that after the economic slowdown in March 2008, they "began to fall behind in their monthly payments," id. ¶ 34, and that "[h]opelessly behind with the mortgage payment . . . Plaintiffs sought assistance to modify their loan . . . in April 2009." Id. ¶ 41.

Count XXIII is DISMISSED WITHOUT PREJUDICE.

IV. Motion to Dismiss Cross-Claim

ACMC filed a crossclaim asserting claims for reimbursement, contribution, equitable subrogation and/or indemnity against all other Defendants. ACMC's Crossclaim ¶¶ 4-5. Defendants Central, HSBC, Merscorp, and MERS filed a Motion to Dismiss Defendant ACMC's Crossclaim. The pleading standard of Twombly applies to crossclaims. See *Reishus v. Almaraz, No. CV-10-0760-PHX-LOA, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 1442, 2011 WL 42679, at 3 (D. Ariz. Jan. 6, 2011); *Armer v. Openmarket, Inc., No. C08-1731 RSL, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 92270, 2009 WL 3177623, at 1 (W.D. Wash. Oct. 5, 2009). ACMC's allegations are conclusory and ACMC does not assert how or why the other Defendants were negligent or otherwise liable for the Plaintiffs' alleged injuries. As a [*57] result, ACMC's Crossclaim does not meet the pleading standard of Twombly. See Twombly, 550 U.S. at 555.

ACMC's Crossclaim is DISMISSED WITHOUT PREJUDICE.

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, the Court DENIES Plaintiffs' Motion to Strike, GRANTS in part and DENIES in part the Motion to Dismiss Complaint, and GRANTS Cross-Defendant's Motion to Dismiss Crossclaim.

Specifically:

Count I is DISMISSED WITH LEAVE TO AMEND; Counts II, III, IV, V, VIII, IX, X, XI, XIV, XVI, XVII, XVIII, XIX, XX, XXI, XXII, and XXIII are DISMISSED WITHOUT PREJUDICE except to the extent they state a claim against Alliance, who did not join the Motion to Dismiss Complaint; Counts VI, VII, and XVII, are DISMISSED WITH PREJUDICE except to the extent they state a claim against Alliance and to the extent Count VII seeks damages; the Motion to Dismiss Complaint is DENIED as to Counts XII, XIII, and XV; and the Crossclaim is DISMISSED WITHOUT PREJUDICE.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

Opinion

[*1313] PER CURIAM:

Plaintiff-Appellant CompuCredit Holdings Corporation ("CompuCredit") brought suit alleging antitrust violations against a number of hedge funds (Defendants-Appellees) that hold convertible senior notes issued by CompuCredit. CompuCredit claimed that Defendants acted collectively [2] to force CompuCredit to pay above-market prices to redeem its notes early, thus violating the Sherman Act.[1] The district court granted Defendants' motion for judgment on the pleadings; CompuCredit now appeals.

I. BACKGROUND[2]

CompuCredit is a provider of credit and related financial services products. Defendants are holders of long-term convertible [*1314] promissory notes issued by CompuCredit in 2005 in two series. The first series is due and payable in 2025; the second series is due and payable in 2035. These notes were originally issued in a private placement, but are now traded on the secondary market. As of December 2009, the twenty-one hedge fund Defendants collectively owned 70% of the notes issued in 2005.

In December 2009, CompuCredit announced that it was planning to issue a dividend of $25 million to stockholders and was considering spinning off its profitable microloan business. In response, Defendants filed suit under the Uniform Fraudulent Transfer Acts ("UFTA"), alleging that CompuCredit was insolvent on a pro forma basis and requesting [3] that the court enjoin the payment of the dividend and the spinoff to ensure that CompuCredit could pay back its debt obligations. At the time of the suit, CompuCredit had never missed an interest payment on the notes.

The court found that CompuCredit was not insolvent and denied the injunctions. CompuCredit then offered to repurchase up to $160 million of its notes outstanding at a price purportedly at or above market value. None of the Defendants participated in the tender offer, and CompuCredit alleges that they conspired in their refusal of the offer.

[1] 15 U.S.C. § 1.

[2] We recite the facts in the light most favorable to the nonmoving party. See Ortega v. Christian, 85 F.3d 1521, 1524 (11th Cir. 1996).

CompuCredit was able to repurchase about 11% of the outstanding 2025 notes at roughly 50% of face value and about 10% of its outstanding 2035 notes at approximately 35% of face value.

The Defendants continued to allege CompuCredit's insolvency. In January 2010, they wrote a letter to CompuCredit's auditor, expressing doubt about CompuCredit's financial health. In February 2010, they wrote the Securities and Exchange Commission, alleging that CompuCredit was insolvent. In March 2010, Defendants contacted the indenture trustee, claiming that CompuCredit had violated the terms of the indentures. Finally, on March 8, 2010, Defendants made [4] a collective demand that CompuCredit repurchase their notes at par value. CompuCredit estimates that the 2025 notes were trading at 53.5 percent of par and the 2035 notes were trading at 37 percent of par at the time of this demand.[3]

CompuCredit refused Defendants' request to repurchase the notes at par and brought this suit. CompuCredit alleges that Defendants conspired to boycott its tender offer in order to inflate the redemption price of their notes and thereby violated the Sherman Act. Defendants moved for a judgment on the pleadings, and the district court granted their motion on June 17, 2011. This appeal followed.

II. DISCUSSION

HN1[] We review de novo a ruling on a motion for judgment on the pleadings. Horsley v. Rivera, 292 F.3d 695, 700 (11th Cir. 2002). For the sake of our review, we will accept all well-pled factual allegations in the complaint as true. Douglas Asphalt Co. v. Qore, Inc., 541 F.3d 1269, 1273 (11th Cir. 2008). However, we are not obligated to accept alleged legal conclusions as true. See Green Leaf Nursery v. E.I. DuPont De Nemours & Co., 341 F.3d 1292, 1304 n.12 (11th Cir. 2003). [5] "If upon reviewing the pleadings it is clear that the plaintiff would not be entitled to relief under any set of facts that could be proved consistent with the allegations, the court should dismiss the complaint." Horsley, 292 F.3d at 700.

[*1315] Construing the facts most favorably to CompuCredit, we find that the behavior of Defendants alleged by CompuCredit does not constitute a violation of the Sherman Act. The cases that CompuCredit offers in support of its position are factually distinguishable from and thus irrelevant to the current dispute, and we find no other case law that would support the proposition that the actions alleged are illegal under the Sherman Act. Therefore, we affirm the district court.

CompuCredit first argues that the controlling case for this dispute is FTC v. Superior Court Trial Lawyers Ass'n, in which the Supreme Court held that it was a violation of the Sherman Act for trial lawyers to boycott taking on court-appointed criminal cases in order to gain leverage in pay negotiations with the District of Columbia Superior Court. 493 U.S. 411, 428, 110 S. Ct. 768, 778, 107 L. Ed. 2d 851 (1990). Despite CompuCredit's characterization of Defendants as "horizontal competitors" engaged in [6] a "boycott" of CompuCredit's tender offer, we disagree with CompuCredit's assertion that Superior Court Trial Lawyers Ass'n is an appropriate parallel. Defendants here are holders of CompuCredit's promissory notes. This relationship arose when CompuCredit willingly took on an obligation to repay the notes via a free-market transaction. Although these promissory notes are traded on a secondary market, they retain their essential character as debt instruments. The pre-existing debtor and creditor relationship differentiates this case from Superior Court Trial Lawyers Ass'n. CompuCredit was not in the same position as a normal buyer of goods or services; instead it wished to pay back the money it already owed (at a price below par value but at or above market value). Defendants' choice to reject this offer and seek full par value is not the same as a boycott intended to raise future sales prices.

CompuCredit also relies heavily on Catalano, Inc. v. Target Sales, Inc., 446 U.S. 643, 100 S. Ct. 1925, 64 L. Ed. 2d 580 (1980) (per curiam). Although Catalano actually involved debtors, the alleged antitrust violations concerned the terms of future transactions, not a pre-existing debt. Id. at 644-45, 100 S. Ct. at 1926. [7] The Supreme Court held that an agreement among beer wholesalers to begin denying short-term credit to retailers was "merely one form of price fixing" and thus illegal. Id. at 650, 100 S. Ct. at 1929. Here, the par value of the debt was already fixed by agreement of the parties. Negotiations about the repayment of a debt are factually dissimilar from a unilateral conspiracy to fix future prices in a market.

Furthermore, other circuits have held that HN2[] it is not a violation of the Sherman Act for debtors to act collaboratively to collect pre-existing debts. In United Airlines v. U.S. Bank, N.A., the Seventh Circuit held that collective action of a group of creditors to recover the full amount of debts arising from "competitively determined contracts" was not in violation of the antitrust laws. 406 F.3d 918, 921 (7th Cir. 2005). Similarly, in Sharon Steel Corp. v. Chase Manhattan Bank, N.A., the Second Circuit firmly rejected the appellant's claim that joint activity by its creditors to collect the debts owed by appellant violated antitrust law. 691 F.2d 1039, 1052-53 (2d Cir. 1982).

III. CONCLUSION

We do not find that the facts alleged constitute a violation of the Sherman Act. The order [8] of the district court granting Defendants' motion for judgment on the pleadings is affirmed.

AFFIRMED.

ORDER (1) GRANTING DEFENDANTS' MOTION TO DISMISS PLAINTIFF'S COMPLAINT; AND (2) DENYING AS MOOT DEFENDANTS' MOTION TO STRIKE PORTIONS OF PLAINTIFF'S COMPLAINT

(ECF No. 2)

Presently before the Court is Defendants' motion to dismiss Plaintiff's complaint and motion to strike portions of Plaintiff's complaint. (Mot. to Dismiss, ECF No. 2) Also before the Court is Plaintiff James D. Heald's ("Plaintiff") response in opposition, (Resp. in Opp'n, ECF No. 6),[1] and Defendants' reply in support, (Reply in Supp., ECF No.

---

[1] As Defendants point out in their reply brief, Plaintiff's opposition was untimely. (Reply in Supp. 2, ECF No. 7) This Court issued a briefing schedule in its May 13, 2011 Order setting [*2] May 23, 2011 as the date of filing for Plaintiff's response, and noting that the hearing date on the motion was set for June 24, 2011. (Order, May 13, 2011, ECF No. 3) Although the Court notes that Plaintiff's opposition was filed on June 3, 2011 and was therefore not in compliance with this Court's Order, because the opposition was nevertheless filed within the time for filing an opposition prescribed by Civil Local Rule 7.1.e.2, and because Defendants had adequate time and opportunity to file their reply, the Court will consider Plaintiff's opposition in deciding this motion. See Civil Local Rule 7.1.e.2 (noting that any response in opposition should be filed "not later than fourteen (14) calendar days prior to the noticed hearing"). Plaintiff is admonished, however, that any future failures to comply with this Court's orders may result in penalties.

7). Having considered the parties' arguments and the law, Defendants' motion to dismiss is GRANTED and Defendants' motion to strike is therefore DENIED AS MOOT.

BACKGROUND

1. Factual Background

In November 2007, Plaintiff obtained a loan from Defendants in the amount of $417,000.00 in connection with his purchase of a single family residence in San Diego County, California. (Compl. ¶¶ 13-15, ECF No. 1-1) Though Plaintiff was led to believe that he was merely executing loan documents, (id. ¶ 15), [*3] Plaintiff alleges that the documents he signed "contain[ed] small and hidden and/or disguised provisions which were not explained and do not show acknowledgment of understanding and acceptance from Plaintiff," (id. ¶ 21), and that in fact the Deed of Trust securing the loan acts as a cognovit note "to the sole detriment and subsequent depravation of Plaintiff and his rightful possession of property," (id.). At the time of entering into these agreements and throughout the entire life of the loan, Defendants allegedly made false and fraudulent representations to Plaintiff. (Id. ¶¶ 29-38)

Some time after these events, Plaintiff alleges that "a severance of the ownership and possession of the original Note and Deed of Trust . . . occurred," and therefore, because the true owner and holder are unknown, "defendants cannot legally foreclose." (Id. ¶ 24)

2. Procedural Background

Plaintiff filed this action on March 22, 2011 in the San Diego County Superior Court of the State of California. (Compl., ECF No. 1-1) Soon thereafter, Defendants removed the case to this Court pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1441(b) because (1) the parties are completely diverse and the amount in controversy exceeds $75,000.00, [*4] or, alternatively (2) Plaintiff's complaint alleges a violation of federal law and as such this Court has federal question jurisdiction. (Not. Removal 2, ECF No. 1)

On May 6, 2011, Defendants filed the instant motion to dismiss and motion to strike. (Mot. to Dismiss, ECF No. 2). Plaintiff responded on June 3, 2011, (Resp. in Opp'n, ECF No. 6), and Defendants replied on June 6, 2011, (Reply in Supp., ECF No. 7). The hearing set for the motion was thereafter vacated, and the matter was taken under submission on the papers. (Order, June 20, 2011, ECF No. 8)

LEGAL STANDARD

Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(b)(6) permits a party to raise by motion the defense that the complaint "fail[s] to state a claim upon which relief can be granted," generally referred to as a motion to dismiss. The Court evaluates whether a complaint states a cognizable legal theory and sufficient facts in light of Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 8(a), which requires a "short and plain statement of the claim showing that the pleader is entitled to relief." Although Rule 8 "does not require 'detailed factual allegations,' . . . it [does] demand[] more than an unadorned, the-defendant-unlawfully-harmed-me accusation." Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 US 662, 129 S. Ct. 1937, 1949, 173 L. Ed. 2d 868 (2009) [*5] (quoting Bell Atl. Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 555, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007)). In other words, "a plaintiff's obligation to provide the 'grounds' of his 'entitle[ment] to relief' requires more than labels and conclusions, and a formulaic recitation of the elements of a cause of action will not do." Twombly, 550 U.S. at 555 (citing Papasan v. Allain, 478 U.S. 265, 286, 106 S. Ct. 2932, 92 L. Ed. 2d 209 (1986)). "Nor does a complaint suffice if it tenders 'naked assertion[s]' devoid of 'further factual enhancement.'" Iqbal, 129 S. Ct. at 1949 (citing Twombly, 550 U.S. at 557).

"To survive a motion to dismiss, a complaint must contain sufficient factual matter, accepted as true, to 'state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face.'" Id. (quoting Twombly, 550 U.S. at 570); see also Fed. R. Civ. P.

12(b)(6). A claim is facially plausible when the facts pled "allow[] the court to draw the reasonable inference that the defendant is liable for the misconduct alleged." Id. (citing Twombly, 550 U.S. at 556). That is not to say that the claim must be probable, but there must be "more than a sheer possibility that a defendant has acted unlawfully." Id. Facts "'merely consistent with' a defendant's liability" fall short of a plausible entitlement [*6] to relief. Id. (quoting Twombly, 550 U.S. at 557). Further, the Court need not accept as true "legal conclusions" contained in the complaint. Id. This review requires context-specific analysis involving the Court's "judicial experience and common sense." Id. at 1950 (citation omitted). "[W]here the well-pleaded facts do not permit the court to infer more than the mere possibility of misconduct, the complaint has alleged—but it has not 'show[n]'—'that the pleader is entitled to relief.'" Id. Moreover, "for a complaint to be dismissed because the allegations give rise to an affirmative defense[,] the defense clearly must appear on the face of the pleading." McCalden v. Ca. Library Ass'n, 955 F.2d 1214, 1219 (9th Cir. 1990).

Where a motion to dismiss is granted, "leave to amend should be granted 'unless the court determines that the allegation of other facts consistent with the challenged pleading could not possibly cure the deficiency.'" DeSoto v. Yellow Freight Sys., Inc., 957 F.2d 655, 658 (9th Cir. 1992) (quoting Schreiber Distrib. Co. v. Serv-Well Furniture Co., 806 F.2d 1393, 1401 (9th Cir. 1986)). In other words, where leave to amend would be futile, the Court may deny leave to [*7] amend. See Desoto, 957 F.2d at 658; Schreiber, 806 F.2d at 1401.

ANALYSIS

Plaintiff alleges five claims in his complaint: (1) misrepresentation and fraud; (2) wrongful foreclosure; (3) quiet title; (4) unfair business practices under California Business and Professions Code § 17200, et seq.; and (5) RICO statute violations, 18 U.S.C. § 1961. (Compl., ECF No. 1-1) Defendants move to dismiss each of these claims for failure to allege sufficient facts to state a claim, and also challenge "Plaintiff's foundational argument that the subject deed of trust is a cognovit." (Mot. to Dismiss 4, ECF No. 2) Finally, Defendants move to strike Plaintiff's claim for punitive damages, (id. at 10-11), Plaintiff's request for a preliminary injunction, (id. at 12), and Plaintiff's claim for rescission, (id. at 12-13). The Court considers each of Defendants' arguments in turn.

1. Cognovit Note

Plaintiff alleges that the Deed of Trust contained hidden provisions that were neither explained by Defendants nor acknowledged by Plaintiff, and that in reality the Deed of Trust is a cognovit note. (Compl. ¶ 21, ECF No. 1-1) Defendants argue that the Court should reject Plaintiff's contention that the Deed of Trust [*8] is a cognovit because it "includes nothing more than a power of sale clause." (Mot. to Dismiss 4, ECF No. 2)

To begin,

> "The cognovit is the ancient legal device by which the debtor consents in advance to the holder's obtaining a judgment without notice or hearing, and possibly even with the appearance, on the debtor's behalf, of an attorney designated by the holder." . . .
> In the states which permit its use, the cognovit note "authorizes an attorney to confess judgment against the person or persons signing it. It is written authority of a debtor and a direction by him for the entry of a judgment against him if the obligation set forth in the note is not paid when due . . . It cuts off every defense which the maker of the note may otherwise have. It likewise cuts off all rights of appeal from any judgment taken on it."

FDIC v. Aaronian, 93 F.3d 636, 637 (9th Cir. 1996) (second alteration in original) (quoting D.H. Overmyer Co., Inc. of Ohio v. Frick, 405 U.S. 174, 176, 92 S. Ct. 775, 31 L. Ed. 2d 124 & n.2 (1972)).

Here, Plaintiff has neither attached the Deed of Trust as an exhibit to the complaint nor quoted or summarized the clause or clauses that he contends "operate" as a cognovit note.[2] Plaintiff's allegation of the [*9] existence of a cognovit is based on his ambiguous assertion that "[a]s a result" of the "hidden and/or disguised provisions," the "Deed of Trust operates as a Cognovit Note." (Compl. ¶ 21, ECF No. 1-1 (emphasis omitted)) However, a cognovit does not simply arise by virtue of a defendant's fraudulent conduct, but rather is a distinct legal device requiring both parties' consent. See D.H. Overmyer Co., 405 U.S. at 176 & n.2. Thus, Plaintiff has not alleged sufficient facts supporting the existence of a cognovit; to the extent that any of Plaintiff's claims of relief are based upon the existence of a cognovit, those claims must be dismissed.

Moreover, to the extent that, as Defendants posit, Plaintiff is contending that the power-of-sale clause in the Deed of Trust—which would allow Defendants to sell Plaintiff's property in the event that Plaintiff defaulted on his loan—constitutes a cognovit, Plaintiff is mistaken. Several [*10] district courts within the Ninth Circuit have previously held that a power of sale clause is not a cognovit, and this Court agrees. See, e.g., *Dotson v. Metrociti Mortgage, No. 10-3484, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 97754, at 13 (E.D. Cal. Aug. 30, 2011) (dismissing the case without leave to amend after concluding that the power-of-sale clause is not a cognovit); *Myers v. Bank of Am., N.A., No. 10-00003, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 50468, at 11 (C.D. Cal. Mar. 2, 2011) ("A non-judicial power-of-sale clause in a deed of trust is entirely distinct from cognovit note or a confession of judgment and does not raise federal due process concerns." (citing Cal. Civ. Proc. Code §§ 1132-1134, 2920, et seq.)); *Geist v. Onewest Bank, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 81077, No. 10-1879, at 12-14 (N.D. Cal. Aug. 9, 2010) ("In short, the power of sale clause is not a cognovit." (citation omitted)).

2. Misrepresentation and Fraud

Plaintiff's first claim for "misrepresentation and fraud" is subject to the heightened pleading requirements of Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 9(b). See Neilson v. Union Bank, N.A., 290 F. Supp. 2d 1101, 1141 (C.D. Cal. 2003). Under this rule, Plaintiff must "state with particularity the circumstances [*11] constituting fraud." Fed. R. Civ. P. 9(b). The allegations of fraud must "be 'specific' enough to give defendants notice of the particular misconduct . . . so that they can defend against the charge and not just deny that they have done anything wrong." Vess v. Ciba-Geigy Corp. USA, 317 F.3d 1097, 1106 (9th Cir. 2003) (quoting Bly-Magee v. California, 236 F.3d 1014, 1019 (9th Cir. 2001)). Namely, these allegations "must be accompanied by 'the who, what, when, where, and how' of the misconduct charged." Id. (quoting Cooper v. Pickett, 137 F.3d 616, 627 (9th Cir. 1997)). "'[A] plaintiff must set forth more than the neutral facts necessary to identify the transaction. The plaintiff must set forth what is false or misleading about a statement, and why it is false.'" Id. (quoting Decker v. GlenFed, Inc., 42 F.3d 1541, 1548 (9th Cir. 1994)).

To state a claim for misrepresentation or fraud under California law Plaintiff must plead "'(1) misrepresentation (false representation, concealment, or nondisclosure); (2) knowledge of falsity (scienter); (3) intent to defraud (i.e., to induce reliance); (4) justifiable reliance; and (5) resulting damage.'" Alliance Mortgage Co. v. Rothwell, 10 Cal. 4th 1226, 44 Cal. Rptr. 2d 352, 900 P.2d 601, 608 n.4 (Cal. 1995) [*12] (quoting Molko v. Holy Spirit Ass'n, 46 Cal. 3d 1092, 252 Cal. Rptr. 122, 762 P.2d 46, 53 (Cal. 1988)).

As to the element of misrepresentation, Plaintiff alleges that Defendants "knowingly and intentionally concealed material information," including > the final exact interest rate set forth in the Promissory Note; how and when any adjustments to that interest rate and the recurring monthly payment would occur; what index or basis would be used for calculating any such interest rate adjustments, nor what the effect of any negative amortization would be; the negative effect to his home equity in the event that the scheduled or option ARM monthly payments were not sufficient to pay all

[2] Plaintiff alleges that a copy of the document "is presently not available to Plaintiff, inasmuch as the at the time of his purported execution of said Promissory Note he was not provided a copy thereof, nor was one provided to him thereafter." (Compl. ¶ 15, ECF No. 1-1) accruing interest, resulting in an ever increasing balance owing on the loan and the eventual total dissipation of Plaintiff's home equity.

(Compl. ¶ 30, ECF No. 1-1) Although this level of specificity as to what information was allegedly concealed may be sufficient to satisfy Rule 9(b), Plaintiff fails to supplement these allegations with any indication of who was responsible for concealing this information or when, where, or how it occurred. See Vess, 317 F.3d at 1106. Without more information regarding the alleged concealment, however, Defendants [*13] cannot adequately defend against the allegation because all they can do is merely "deny that they have done anything wrong." Id. (quoting Bly-Magee, 236 F.3d at 1019). This is exactly the type of inadequacy that the specificity requirements of Rule 9(b) guard against.

Moreover, Plaintiff alleges that Defendants made false representations, but fails to identify what those false representations consisted of, instead merely stating that "[t]he true facts were that Plaintiff was deceived into unknowingly signing a cognovit note, waiving his equitable rights to ownership of his property, without warning and just compensation for waiving his said rights." (Compl. ¶ 31, ECF No. 1-1) Identifying the "true facts" without alleging any "false facts" represented by the Defendants is insufficient under either Rule 9(b) or 8(a).

Thus, because Plaintiff has failed to allege sufficient facts to state a claim for misrepresentation or fraud, the Court GRANTS Defendants' motion to dismiss this claim.[3] Plaintiff's claim for misrepresentation and fraud is DISMISSED WITHOUT PREJUDICE.

3. Wrongful Foreclosure

To the extent that Plaintiff's wrongful foreclosure claim is based on his claim that the Deed of Trust "proceed[s] as a cognovit note," (Compl. ¶ 41, ECF No. 1-1), it necessarily fails because the Court has already concluded that Plaintiff failed to allege sufficient facts of the existence of a cognovit, see supra at 5-6.

Alternatively, to the extent that Plaintiff's wrongful foreclosure claim is based on the fact that Defendants do not possess the "genuine original" [*15] promissory note, allonge, or deed of trust it necessarily fails as well. (See Compl. ¶¶ 45-53, ECF No. 1-1) California does not require possession of the original note before initiating a foreclosure. See Ngoc Nguyen v. Wells Fargo Bank, N.A., 749 F. Supp. 2d 1022, 1035 (N.D. Cal. 2010) ("California law does not require possession of the [original] note as a precondition to non-judicial foreclosure under a deed of trust." (internal quotation marks omitted)); *Quintero Family Trust v. OneWest Bank, FSB, No. 09-1561, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 6618, at 20-21 (S.D. Cal. Jan. 27, 2010) (rejecting a wrongful foreclosure claim because producing an original note is not a prerequisite to foreclosure in California).

Moreover, California's "tender rule" bars this claim. See Guerrero v. Greenpoint Mortg. Funding, Inc., 403 F. App'x 154, 157 (9th Cir. 2010) (holding that plaintiffs lacked standing to bring a wrongful foreclosure claim because they did not allege "actual, full, and unambiguous tender" of the debt owed on the mortgage); *Lofgren v. Nat'l City Mortg., Inc., No. 10-1644, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 3358, at 4-5 (S.D. Cal. Jan. 11, 2011) (granting defendant's motion to dismiss plaintiff's wrongful [*16] foreclosure claim for failure to allege tender). As discussed infra, Plaintiff has not alleged that he is able to tender the amount of his indebtedness. Thus, Plaintiff's wrongful foreclosure claim fails for this reason as well.

[3] Having found that Plaintiff has failed to allege sufficient facts to establish one of the essential elements of a claim for [*14] fraud—namely, misrepresentation—the Court will not consider whether the other elements have been sufficiently alleged, and makes no final judgment as to their presence or absence in the complaint.

In his opposition brief, Plaintiff does not address whether he has alleged sufficient facts of misrepresentation under Rule 9(b), instead focusing on his allegations regarding the element of justifiable reliance. (See Resp. in Opp'n 7-8, ECF No. 6) Plaintiff notes, however, that he is "in the process of assembling more evidence in support of all [his] claims, including the cause of action for fraud," urging the Court to consider granting leave to amend should it grant Defendants' motion to dismiss. (Id. at 8)

Finally, the Court notes that Plaintiff failed to provide any argument in his opposition regarding Defendants' motion to dismiss his claim for wrongful foreclosure.[4] Thus, for the reasons stated above and because Plaintiff does not oppose Defendants' motion to dismiss on this basis, the Court GRANTS Defendants' motion to dismiss Plaintiff's claim for wrongful foreclosure; the claim is DISMISSED WITHOUT PREJUDICE.

4. Quiet Title

Plaintiff's third claim seeks to quiet title to the property. (Compl. ¶¶ 61-66, ECF No. 1-1) Plaintiff asserts that "Defendants have no legal or equitable right, claim, or interest in [the] property," (id. ¶ 63), but that Defendants nevertheless "allege ownership, and claim an interest in the property adverse to Plaintiff," [*17] (id. ¶ 64). Thus, "Plaintiff seeks a declaration that the title to the Subject Property is vested in Plaintiff alone to quiet title against the other claimants." (Id. ¶ 65)

Quiet title claims may establish title against adverse claims to real property or any interest therein. Cal. Civ. Proc. Code § 760.020. A complaint alleging such a claim must be verified and include (1) a description of the property, (2) the basis for plaintiff's title, (3) the adverse claim or claims to title, (4) the date as of which the determination is sought, and (5) a prayer for determination of plaintiff's title against the adverse claims. Id. § 761.020.

The Court finds that this claim must be DISMISSED because Plaintiff has not alleged that he is able to tender the amount of his indebtedness. Under California's "tender rule," "a mortgagor cannot quiet title against the mortgagee without paying the debt secured." Shimpones v. Stickney, 219 Cal. 637, 28 P.2d 673, 678 (Cal. 1934); see also Mehta v. Wells Fargo Bank, 737 F. Supp. 2d 1185, 1206 (S.D. Cal. Aug. 26, 2010) (Sammartino, J.) (dismissing the quiet title claim because the plaintiff failed to allege tender); *Kozhayev v. Am.'s Wholsale Lender, No. 09-2841, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 77553, at 12-13 (E.D. Cal. Aug. 2, 2010) [*18] (same); Karlsen v. Am. Sav. & Loan Ass'n, 92 Cal. Rptr. 851, 854 (Cal. Ct. App. 1971). Here, Plaintiff does not allege that he has tendered the balance owing on the note, or that he is able to do so. Absent this key offer, the Court must DISMISS this claim WITHOUT PREJUDICE.

Plaintiff contends that he should be excused from the tender requirement. (Resp. in Opp'n 8, ECF No. 6) Though Plaintiff lists several exceptions to the tender rule, he does not indicate which one or ones should apply to the instant case. (See id.) The Court finds that none of Plaintiff's proposed exceptions apply: Plaintiff does not allege in his complaint and provides no supporting argument in his opposition brief that Defendants "lulled [Plaintiff] into not paying," (id. (citing McCue v. Bradbury, 149 Cal. 108, 84 P. 993, 994-95 (Cal. 1906)); that "payment could be construed as a waiver of the right to rescind," (id. (citing Stockton v. Newman, 148 Cal. App. 2d 558, 307 P.2d 56, 61 (Cal. Ct. App. 1957)); or that "nothing is due" on the loan, (id. (citing Hauger v. Gates, 42 Cal. 2d 752, 269 P.2d 609 (Cal. 1954)). Thus, even assuming that these exceptions are tenable, Plaintiff has failed to invoke any of them here.

5. Unfair Business Practices, Cal. Business and Professions Code § 17200,et seq.

Plaintiff's [*19] fourth claim for relief is for unfair business practices in violation of California Business and Professions Code § 17200, et seq. ("Unfair Competition Law" or "UCL"). California's UCL prohibits acts of unfair competition, which includes "any unlawful, unfair or fraudulent business act or practice." Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17200; see also In re Pomona Valley Medical Grp. Inc., 476 F.3d 665, 674 (9th Cir. 2007). "Because [the UCL] is written in the disjunctive, it establishes three varieties of unfair competition?acts or practices which are unlawful, or unfair, or fraudulent." Podolsky v. First Healthcare Corp., 50 Cal. App. 4th 632, 58 Cal. Rptr. 2d 89, 98 (Cal. Ct. App. 1996). In the instant case, Plaintiff's complaint identifies the following unlawful, unfair, or fraudulent business practices: "[I]nducing Plaintiff to enter into a purported agreement based on Defendants' fraudulent representations,

[4] The Court also notes that Plaintiff has excluded its wrongful foreclosure claim from its proposed amended complaint, which is attached as an exhibit to Plaintiff's Response in Opposition. (See Ex. 1 at 1, ECF No. 6)

slandering Plaintiff's title in the Subject Property, and deceiving Plaintiff through unlawful false advertising." (Compl. ¶ 68, ECF No. 1-1); (see also id. ¶¶ 69-70)

A. Unlawful Business Practice

"[A]n action based on [the UCL] to redress an unlawful business practice 'borrows' violations of other laws and [*20] treats these violations . . . as unlawful practices, independently actionable under section 17200, et seq. and subject to the distinct remedies provided thereunder." Farmers Ins. Exch. v. Super. Ct. of L.A. County, 2 Cal. 4th 377, 6 Cal. Rptr. 2d 487, 826 P.2d 730, 734 (Cal. 1992) (citation omitted); see also Chabner v. United Omaha Life Ins. Co., 225 F.3d 1042, 1048 (9th Cir. 2000). A business practice that violates almost any federal, state, or local law is an "unlawful practice" under section 17200 and thereby may serve as the basis for a UCL claim. See CRST Van Expedited, Inc. v. Werner Enters., Inc., 479 F.3d 1099, 1107 (9th Cir. 2007); Saunders v. Super. Ct. of L.A. County, 27 Cal. App. 4th 832, 33 Cal. Rptr. 2d 438, 441 (Cal. Ct. App. 1994).

In the instant case, Plaintiff can state a UCL claim if he can state a claim under a "borrowed" law. See Webb v. Smart Document Solutions, LLC, 499 F.3d 1078, 1082 (9th Cir. 2007) (finding that the alleged conduct "must violate a law . . . in order for Plaintiffs to state a claim for relief under Section 17200' s 'unlawful' prong"). Here, Plaintiff's complaint does not identify what "borrowed" law he purports to state a UCL claim under. In his opposition brief, however, Plaintiff claims that because [*21] he has stated a claim for misrepresentation and fraud, he has sufficiently pleaded an "unlawful practice" under the California UCL. (Resp. in Opp'n 9, ECF No. 6) However, the Court has already concluded that Plaintiff failed to allege sufficient facts of misrepresentation and fraud. See supra at 6-8. Thus, the Court finds that the complaint does not adequately state an "unlawful practice" under section 17200 to serve as the basis for a UCL claim.

B. Unfair Business Practice

Even if a practice is not "unlawful," it may still be "unfair." See Cel-Tech Commc'ns, Inc. v. L.A. Cellular Tel. Co., 20 Cal. 4th 163, 83 Cal. Rptr. 2d 548, 973 P.2d 527, 540 (Cal. 1999). In Cel-Tech, the California Supreme Court held that conduct is "unfair" between business competitors only if it is "tethered" to an underlying law. Id. at 544; see also In re Nat'l W. Life Ins. Deferred Annuities Litig., 268 F.R.D. 652, 667 (S.D. Cal. 2010). Specifically, in interpreting the unfairness prong, the California Supreme Court stated the following:

> [T]o guide the courts and the business community adequately and to promote consumer protection, we must require that any finding of unfairness to competitors under section 17200 be tethered to some legislatively [*22] declared policy or proof of some actual or threatened impact on competition. . . . [T]he word "unfair" in that section means conduct that threatens an incipient violation of an antitrust law, or violates the policy or spirit of one of those laws because its effects are comparable to or the same as a violation of the law, or otherwise significantly threatens or harms competition.

Cel-Tech, 973 P.2d at 544.

Here, Plaintiff has not alleged any act that would be an "incipient violation of an antitrust law." Though Plaintiff argues that "[i]t is clearly unethical and substantially injurious to consumers for a loan servicer to, among other things, charge a higher interest rate than represented and promised to Plaintiff, to omit and fail to disclose information about the loan, and to foreclose upon a home when the true owner of the Deed of Trust and Note are unknown," none of these acts threaten antitrust violations and thus are better suited to the UCL's fraudulent business practice prong. Accordingly, the Court finds that Plaintiff's complaint does not adequately state an "unfair practice" under section 17200 to serve as the basis for a UCL claim.

C. Fraudulent Business Practice

"Fraud is not [*23] an essential element of a claim under [the UCL]," but that does not mean that Rule 9(b)'s heightened pleading requirements never apply to such claims. Vess, 317 F.3d at 1103. With regard to the application of Rule 9(b) in claims pursuant to section 17200, the Ninth Circuit has stated the following:

> In cases where fraud is not a necessary element of a claim, a plaintiff may choose nonetheless to allege in the complaint that the defendant has engaged in fraudulent conduct. In some cases, the plaintiff may allege a unified course of fraudulent conduct and rely entirely on that course of conduct as the basis of a claim. In that event, the claim is said to be "grounded in fraud" or to "sound in fraud," and the pleading of that claim as a whole must satisfy the particularity requirement of Rule 9(b).

> In other cases, however, a plaintiff may choose not to allege a unified course of fraudulent conduct in support of a claim, but rather to allege some fraudulent and some non-fraudulent conduct. In such cases, only the allegations of fraud are subject to Rule 9(b)'s heightened pleading requirements.

Id. at 1103-04.

In addition to satisfying Rule 9(b), if applicable, all allegations under section 17200 [*24] must "state with reasonable particularity the facts supporting the statutory elements of the violation." Khoury v. Maly's of California, Inc., 14 Cal. App. 4th 612, 17 Cal. Rptr. 2d 708, 712 (1993). Under the "fraudulent practice" prong of section 17200, "[t]his merely requires allegations that the public is likely to be deceived and, to the extent injunctive relief is sought, that the complainant suffered actual injury." Patent Trust v. Microsoft Corp., 525 F. Supp. 2d 1200, 1218 (S.D. Cal. 2007).

Here, the Court finds that Plaintiff's complaint "sounds in fraud." Plaintiff alleges that Defendants' actions were "aimed at deceiving Plaintiff before and during the loan process," (Compl. ¶ 69, ECF No 1-1); that Defendants' "officers, employees, and agents" "failed to disclose that the interest rate actually charged on this loan was higher than the rate represented and promised to Plaintiff," and "concealed, omitted, and/or otherwise failed to disclose information," (id.); and that Defendants "failed to disclose the true variable nature of interest rates on adjustable rate mortgage loans and adjustable rate home equity loans" and "failed to properly disclose th[e] values of the property and their concerns of [*25] such an overinflated house price, (id.). Accordingly, the Court concludes that the heightened pleading requirements apply to Plaintiff's claims in their entirety. See Stickrath v. Globalstar, Inc., 527 F. Supp. 2d 992, 998 (N.D. Cal. 2007) (applying Rule 9(b) to the plaintiffs' claims pursuant to section 17200 where the court found that the allegations were based on a "unified course of fraudulent conduct").

As with Plaintiff's claim for misrepresentation and fraud, the Court finds that these allegations are insufficient to satisfy Rule 9(b)'s heightened pleading standards. Plaintiff does not identify which of Defendants' "officers, employees, and agents" were responsible for the allegedly deceptive actions, what the allegedly false representations were or what information was concealed, or when these actions occurred (other than the broad assertion that the deceptive practices occurred "before and during the loan process"). Thus, the Court finds that Plaintiff's allegations are insufficient to state a "fraudulent practice" under section 17200 to serve as the basis for a UCL claim.

Because the Court concludes that Plaintiff's complaint fails to state a claim for unlawful, unfair, or [*26] fraudulent business practices under section 17200, Defendants' motion to dismiss Plaintiff's fourth claim for relief is GRANTED.

6. RICO Statute Violations, 18 U.S.C. § 1961

Plaintiff raises his final cause of action under 18 U.S.C. §§ 1961, et seq., the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act ("RICO"). (Compl. ¶¶ 72-79, ECF No. 1-1) The RICO Act prohibits certain conduct involving a "pattern of racketeering activity," and makes a private right of action available to "[a]ny person injured in his business or property by reason of a violation" of RICO's substantive restrictions, provided that the alleged violation was the proximate cause of the injury. Holmes v. Sec. Investor Protection Corp., 503 U.S. 258, 268, 112 S. Ct. 1311, 117 L. Ed. 2d 532 (1992). Plaintiff's RICO claims are based on violations of § 1962(a) and § 1962(c). (See Compl. ¶¶ 74-75, ECF No. 1-1) Section 1962(a) prohibits investment of income derived "from a pattern of racketeering activity or through collection of an unlawful debt" in "any enterprise which is engaged in, or the activities of which affect, interstate or foreign commerce." Id. § 1962(a). Section 1962(c) states that no one "employed by or associated with any enterprise" may conduct [*27] the "enterprise's affairs through a pattern of racketeering activity or collection of unlawful debt." Id. § 1962(c).

To the extent that Plaintiff's fifth claim for RICO violations is predicated on fraudulent conduct in that Plaintiff alleges that Defendants "compromise a group of corporations associated in fact to defraud and profiteer from individual borrowers through the use of intentional nondisclosure, material misrepresentation, and creation of fraudulent loan documents," (Compl. ¶ 73, ECF No. 1-1), and asserts predicate acts including mail and wire fraud, among other deceptive practices, (id. ¶ 76), the Court finds that Rule 9(b)'s heightened pleading standards apply to Plaintiff's RICO allegations. See Edwards v. Marin Park, Inc., 356 F.3d 1058, 1066 (9th Cir. 2004) ("Rule 9(b)'s [heightened pleading requirement] . . . applies to civil RICO fraud claims.") (citing Alan Neuman Prods., Inc. v. Albright, 862 F.2d 1388, 1392 (9th Cir. 1988)). Applying Rule 9(b), the Court finds that Plaintiff's complaint is deficient.

First, the majority of Plaintiff's allegations are pleaded "on information and belief," and are not otherwise supported by any independent factual basis. (See Compl. [*28] ¶¶ 73-75, ECF No. 1-1) As such, the Court finds that Plaintiff's allegations are insufficient under Rule 9(b). See, e.g., Neubronner v. Milken, 6 F.3d 666, 672 (9th Cir. 1993) (holding, in the RICO context, that "a plaintiff who makes allegations on information and belief must state the factual basis for the belief" (citations omitted)); New England Data Servs., Inc. v. Becher, 829 F.2d 286 (1st Cir. 1987) (applying Rule 9(b) to a civil RICO claim and stating that allegations based on "information and belief" are insufficient to satisfy Rule 9(b)'s particularity requirement).

Second, as with Plaintiff's misrepresentation and fraud claim and UCL fraudulent practices claim, Plaintiff fails to identify with sufficient particularity "'the who, what, when, where, and how' of the misconduct charged." Vess, 317 F.3d at 1106 (quoting Cooper, 137 F.3d at 627)). In his allegations of mail fraud, for example, Plaintiff merely asserts that Defendants "us[ed] the mails for sending out materials among themselves and to investors," without any information as to who sent what mailings to whom and when. (Compl. ¶ 76, ECF No. 1-1) The other allegations are in accord. (See id.)

Third and finally, the Court [*29] notes that Plaintiff did not oppose Defendants' motion to dismiss the RICO violations claim, and in fact dropped this claim from his proposed amended complaint. (See Resp. in Opp'n, ECF No. 6); (Ex. 1 at 1, ECF No. 6) Thus, for the reasons stated above and because Plaintiff does not oppose Defendants' motion to dismiss on this basis, the Court GRANTS Defendants' motion to dismiss Plaintiff's claim for violations of the RICO Act; the claim is DISMISSED WITHOUT PREJUDICE.

CONCLUSION

For the reasons stated above, the Court GRANTS Defendants' motion to dismiss, and Plaintiff's complaint is DISMISSED WITHOUT PREJUDICE in its entirety.[5]

IT IS SO ORDERED.

DATED: November 10, 2011
