HN7 The most elementary prohibition of section 1 of the Sherman Act is that of conspiracies between competitors to fix prices, and the prohibition extends to conspiracies between dealers in the same brand, here AAMCO. A type of conspiracy that has effects almost identical to those of price-fixing and is treated the same by the law is a conspiracy between competitors to rotate or otherwise allocate customers among the conspirators, so that each customer faces a monopoly seller. The AAMCO dealers in Indianapolis are located in different parts of the city and each presumably has an advantage in competing for the customers nearest to it. Under conditions of unrestricted competition, customers on the borderline of these zones of advantage would be courted by two or more dealers. The allocation of these customers among the dealers by means of automatic call forwarding from phantom dealers supposedly located in the borderline [\[23\]](#) areas could eliminate competition for customers who, not being within the gravitational field of any dealer by reason of proximity, would, were it not for the allocation, have a real and not merely theoretical choice between dealers. Such HN8 an out-and-out scheme of customer allocation would be a per se violation of section 1. Palmer v. BRG of Georgia, Inc., 498 U.S. 46, 112 L. Ed. 2d 349, 111 S. Ct. 401 \(1990\) (per curiam). Of course we do not yet know whether this is the character of the call-forwarding scheme; maybe the only purpose or effect is to deceive customers into thinking that there are more, and more conveniently located, AAMCO dealers than there are. But these are not issues that can be resolved on the pleadings.

The defendants' next fall-back argument is that Cooksey has not alleged antitrust injury--injury caused by the kind of conduct that the antitrust laws seek to prevent. Brunswick Corp. v. Pueblo Bowl-O-Mat, Inc., 429 U.S. 477, 489, 50 L. Ed. 2d 701, 97 S. Ct. 690 \(1977\); Jack Walters & Sons Corp. v. Morton Building, Inc., 737 F.2d 698, 708 \(7th

Cir. 1984). [24] More precisely, since a complaint need not go into such detail, their argument is that the allegations that the complaint does make, however unnecessarily, show that the plaintiff is not claiming antitrust injury and therefore has failed to state a good claim. This would be yet another example of pleading oneself out of court, the occupational hazard of authors of prolix complaints.

If the complaint showed that Cooksey's only gripe was that it had been expelled from a cartel and thereby deprived of cartel profits, it could not recover those lost profits as antitrust damages. The antitrust laws seek to prevent rather than to protect cartel profits; it would be a strange perversion to make antitrust law the vehicle for the enforcement of illegal anticompetitive agreements. That Cooksey is seeking lost cartel [*783] profits is only one possible interpretation of the complaint, however, and any ambiguities must be left to further proceedings to resolve. Another interpretation is that Cooksey wanted to compete by underselling the other dealers, thus weakening or breaking the cartel, and that it was ejected from the advertising pool in order to prevent it from, or punish it for, doing this. [25]

HN9  Losses inflicted by a cartel in retaliation for an attempt by one member to compete with the others are certainly compensable under the antitrust laws, Consolidated Gold Fields PLC v. Minorco, S.A., 871 F.2d 252, 258 (2d Cir. 1989); Volvo North America Corp. v. Men's International Pro Tennis Council, 857 F.2d 55, 67-68 (2d Cir. 1988); cf. Perma Life Mufflers, Inc. v. International Parts Corp., 392 U.S. 134, 139-40, 20 L. Ed. 2d 982, 88 S. Ct. 1981 (1968), for otherwise an effective deterrent to successful cartelization would be eliminated; and it is premature to conclude that this is not the character of the loss that Cooksey seeks to recover.

The defendants also defend the dismissal on the ground that the franchise agreement required Cooksey to arbitrate any disputes arising out of it. If the agreement-- which required Cooksey to join the dealers' advertising pool--was itself an instrumentality of a cartel, then it might seem obvious that no part of it, including its arbitration clause, would be legally enforceable, even if we assume, following the Ninth Circuit's [26] recent decision in Nghiem v. NEC Electronic, Inc., 25 F.3d 1437 (9th Cir. 1994), that agreements to arbitrate domestic as well as international antitrust disputes are now enforceable. But analogy to Prima Paint Corp. v. Flood & Conklin Mfg. Co., 388 U.S. 395, 404-06, 18 L. Ed. 2d 1270, 87 S. Ct. 1801 (1967), which holds that an arbitration clause is enforceable even if the dispute is over whether the contract containing it was induced by fraud, suggests that an arbitration clause may be enforceable even if the dispute is over the validity under the antitrust laws of the contract containing the clause. Especially may it be enforceable where as in this case there is no suggestion that the party resisting invocation of the clause was coerced into accepting it or that the arbitrators are themselves a cat's paw of the cartel.

We need not resolve the issue of enforceability. Cooksey did demand arbitration. It was the defendants who refused, and, rather than referring to arbitration their dispute with Cooksey over the latter's refusal to contribute to the advertising pool, brought a suit in state [27] court to resolve it. The situation is a little more complicated, because the arbitration clause appears in the franchise agreement that Cooksey signed with ATI rather than in the advertisingpool agreement that it signed with the dealers. And ATI never sued Cooksey. But rather than seek to bring Cooksey to heel by demanding arbitration to determine the lawfulness of the advertising pool (which the franchise agreement required Cooksey to join), ATI authorized the dealers to sue Cooksey, and they refused Cooksey's request to arbitrate the dispute. We do not know what direct role ATI played in that refusal; but having deliberately forgone a chance to arbitrate the dispute, and thus put Cooksey to the expense of bringing this suit, the defendants have waived their right to insist on arbitration now. St. Mary's Medical Center, Inc. v. Disco Aluminum Products Co., 969 F.2d 585, 588-89 (7th Cir. 1992); Ohio-Sealy Mattress Mfg. Co. v. Kaplan, 712 F.2d 270, 273 (7th Cir. 1983).

The defendants' last argument is that Cooksey agreed that the venue of any suit arising out of the franchise arrangement would be Pennsylvania, not Indiana. [28] The provision concerning venue appears in the franchise agreement too, and so may or may not fall with that agreement. It does not matter. While requiring the franchisee to consent to venue in Pennsylvania if ATI sues it there, the provision does not purport to confine the franchisee's suits to Pennsylvania and should not be interpreted to do so. Paper Express, Ltd. v. Pfankuch Maschinen GmbH, 972 F.2d 753, 757 (7th Cir. 1992).

The complaint should not have been dismissed. The judgment is reversed and the case remanded for further proceedings consistent with this opinion. REVERSED AND REMANDED.

End of Document

County of Stanislaus v. Pacific Gas & Elec. Co.

United States District Court for the Eastern District of California

August 25, 1994, Decided ; August 25, 1994, FILED; September 22, 1994, Docketed

CV-F-93-5866-OWW

Reporter

1994 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 21032 *; 1994-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P70,782

COUNTY OF STANISLAUS, a public entity, and MARY GROGAN, an individual, on behalf of themselves, and all entities and persons similarly situated, Plaintiffs, v. PACIFIC GAS & ELECTRIC COMPANY, a California corporation, and PACIFIC GAS TRANSMISSION COMPANY, a wholly owned subsidiary of Pacific Gas & Electric Company, Defendants.

Core Terms

rates, natural gas, regulation, import, prices, customers, filed rate doctrine, plaintiffs', antitrust, costs, transportation, authorization, producers, suppliers, state action, defendants', purchasers, pipeline, Carriers, procurement, tariff, negotiated, displace, immunity, complaint alleges, motion to dismiss, anticompetitive, guidelines, contracts, shipper

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Energy & Utilities Law > Utility Companies > Buying & Selling of Power

Energy & Utilities Law > Regulators > US Federal Energy Regulatory Commission > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Natural Gas Industry > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Natural Gas Industry > Distribution & Sale

Energy & Utilities Law > Natural Gas Industry > Marketing & Transportation > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Natural Gas Industry > Natural Gas Act > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Natural Gas Industry > Natural Gas Act > Certificates of Need

Energy & Utilities Law > Pipelines & Transportation > Natural Gas Transportation

Energy & Utilities Law > Utility Companies > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Utility Companies > Rates > General Overview

HN1 [] Utility Companies, Buying & Selling of Power

Under 15 U.S.C.S. § 717c\(c\), \(d\), sellers of natural gas in interstate commerce are required to file their rates with the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission. Under 15 U.S.C.S. § 717c\(a\), the rates that a regulated gas company files with the Commission for sale and transportation of natural gas are lawful only if they are "just and reasonable."

Energy & Utilities Law > Natural Gas Industry > Exports & Imports

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Energy & Utilities > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Natural Gas Industry > Natural Gas Act > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Pipelines & Transportation > Pipelines > General Overview

HN2 Natural Gas Industry, Exports & Imports

The Economic Regulatory Administration (ERA) must approve the importation of natural gas, and will do so unless the proposed import will not be consistent with the public interest. 15 U.S.C.S. § 717b. The ERA considers: the competitiveness of the imported gas, the need for the gas, and the security of the supply. The authorization of a given volume of gas at up to a particular price is a decision by ERA that the particular import is in the public interest, and that no market failure has been shown that has or would interfere with the pipeline's acting in its own interest to acquire gas on the most favorable terms. This ERA process raises a rebuttable presumption that the terms are prudent if freely negotiated and flexible.

Energy & Utilities Law > Regulators > Public Utility Commissions > Authorities & Powers

Energy & Utilities Law > Regulators > Public Utility Commissions > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Utility Companies > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Utility Companies > Rates > General Overview

HN3 Public Utility Commissions, Authorities & Powers

The California Public Utility Commission (CPUC) has authority to regulate rates charged to the public by California utilities. A utility cannot change a rate unless the CPUC approves. Cal. Pub. Util. Code § 454\(a\). All rates and charges must be "just and reasonable." Cal. Pub. Util. Code § 451.

Evidence > Judicial Notice > Adjudicative Facts > Facts Generally Known

Evidence > Judicial Notice > General Overview

Evidence > Judicial Notice > Adjudicative Facts > Verifiable Facts

HN4 Adjudicative Facts, Facts Generally Known

Fed. R. Evid. Rule 201 provides in part that a judicially noticed fact must be one not subject to reasonable dispute in that it is either (1) generally known within the territorial jurisdiction of the trial court or (2) capable of accurate and ready determination by resort to sources whose accuracy cannot reasonably be questioned. A court shall take judicial notice if requested by a party and supplied with the necessary information.

Evidence > Judicial Notice > General Overview

HN5 Evidence, Judicial Notice

Federal courts may take notice of proceedings in other courts, both within and without the federal judicial system, if those proceedings have a direct relation to the matters at issue.

Civil Procedure > Parties > Joinder of Parties > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrs & Objections > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > Adequacy of Representation

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > Numerosity

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > Predominance

HN6 Parties, Joinder of Parties

To maintain an action under Fed. R. Civ., P. 23\(b\)\(3\), a plaintiff must show that: (1) the class is so numerous that joinder of all members is impracticable; (2) there are questions of law or fact common to the class; (3) the claims or defenses of the representative parties are typical of the claims or defenses in the class; (4) the representative parties will fairly and adequately represent the interests of the class; and (5) the questions of law or fact common to the members of the class predominate over any questions affecting only individual members, and that a class action is superior to other available methods for a fair and efficient adjudication of the controversy.

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > General Overview

HN7 Class Actions, Prerequisites for Class Action

Whether an administrative adjudication would provide a more advantageous procedure than a class action may depend on the type of remedy that could be awarded by the agency and the general attitude of the agency toward the issues and problems raised by the claimants.

Civil Procedure > Preliminary Considerations > Federal & State Interrelationships > Erie Doctrine

Civil Procedure > Parties > Capacity of Parties > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Capacity of Parties > Representative Capacity > Representatives

HN8 Federal & State Interrelationships, Erie Doctrine

Capacity to sue and be sued is to be determined by the law of the state in which the district court sits. Fed. R. Civ. P. 17\(b\).

Administrative Law > Separation of Powers > Primary Jurisdiction

Antitrust & Trade Law > Procedural Matters > Jurisdiction > Primary Jurisdiction

Energy & Utilities Law > Antitrust Issues > Administrative Considerations

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Filed Rate Doctrine > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Filed Rate Doctrine > Public Utilities & Telecommunications Carriers

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Energy & Utilities > Utility Companies

Antitrust & Trade Law > Procedural Matters > Jurisdiction > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Antitrust Issues > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Natural Gas Industry > General Overview

HN9 [↓] Separation of Powers, Primary Jurisdiction

Antitrust actions in pervasively-regulated areas, such as the natural gas industry, are circumscribed by the filed rate doctrine. The considerations underlying the doctrine are preservation of the agency's primary jurisdiction over reasonableness of rates and the need to insure that regulated companies charge only those rates of which the agency has been made cognizant. The filed rate doctrine is not limited to "rates" per se, but applies to any activity under the controlling agency's regulatory power.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Filed Rate Doctrine > General Overview

HN10 [↓] Exemptions & Immunities, Filed Rate Doctrine

The filed rate doctrine does not bar all antitrust claims against regulated entities.

Energy & Utilities Law > Natural Gas Industry > Exports & Imports

Energy & Utilities Law > Antitrust Issues > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Natural Gas Industry > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Natural Gas Industry > Natural Gas Act > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Pipelines & Transportation > Natural Gas Transportation

Energy & Utilities Law > Pipelines & Transportation > Pipelines > General Overview

HN11 [↓] Natural Gas Industry, Exports & Imports

The Natural Gas Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 715 et seq., is intended to protect interstate gas consumers from pipeline monopoly power. 15 U.S.C.S. § 717b requires the government to authorize an import of natural gas unless the proposed importation will not be consistent with the public interest. Congress did not define "public interest," thus giving broad discretion to the government agencies in establishing criteria that an importer must fail to meet for the government to deny an authorization to import.

Energy & Utilities Law > Natural Gas Industry > Distribution & Sale

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Energy & Utilities > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Energy & Utilities > US Federal Energy Regulatory Commission

Energy & Utilities Law > Regulators > US Federal Energy Regulatory Commission > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Federal Oil & Gas Leases > Competitive Leases

Energy & Utilities Law > Natural Gas Industry > Exports & Imports

Energy & Utilities Law > Natural Gas Industry > Natural Gas Policy Act > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Natural Gas Industry > Natural Gas Policy Act > Wellhead Price Regulation

HN12 [] Natural Gas Industry, Distribution & Sale

The Natural Gas Policy Act of 1978, 15 U.S.C.S. § 3301 et seq., was enacted to stimulate the interstate flow of gas by reducing wellhead price regulation by the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission.

Energy & Utilities Law > Natural Gas Industry > Natural Gas Act > General Overview

Communications Law > Regulators > US Federal Communications Commission > Jurisdiction

Energy & Utilities Law > Regulators > US Federal Energy Regulatory Commission > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Natural Gas Industry > Distribution & Sale

Energy & Utilities Law > Natural Gas Industry > Marketing & Transportation > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Pipelines & Transportation > Natural Gas Transportation

Energy & Utilities Law > Pipelines & Transportation > Pipelines > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Pipelines & Transportation > Pipelines > Rates

Energy & Utilities Law > Utility Companies > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Utility Companies > Buying & Selling of Power

Energy & Utilities Law > Utility Companies > Contracts for Service

Energy & Utilities Law > Utility Companies > Rates > General Overview

HN13 [] Natural Gas Industry, Natural Gas Act

The National Gas Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 715 et seq., requires the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission to ensure that all rates and charges made, demanded or received by any natural-gas company for or in connection with the transportation or sale of natural gas subject to the jurisdiction of the Commission shall be just and reasonable. 15 U.S.C.S. § 717c\(a\).

Energy & Utilities Law > Natural Gas Industry > Common Carriage Obligations

Energy & Utilities Law > Regulators > US Federal Energy Regulatory Commission > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Regulators > US Federal Energy Regulatory Commission > Authorities & Powers

Energy & Utilities Law > Pipelines & Transportation > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Pipelines & Transportation > Pipelines > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Pipelines & Transportation > Pipelines > Rates

Energy & Utilities Law > Utility Companies > Rates > General Overview

HN14 [] Natural Gas Industry, Common Carriage Obligations

The Federal Energy Regulatory Commission has no authority over how foreign producers or pipeline suppliers bill their costs through to importers. The Commission's first access for regulating imported gas rates is at the pipeline-to-customer stage.

Energy & Utilities Law > Utility Companies > Buying & Selling of Power

Energy & Utilities Law > Regulators > Public Utility Commissions > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Utility Companies > Rates > General Overview

HN15 [] Utility Companies, Buying & Selling of Power

In California, utilities must seek permission from the California Public Utility Commission (CPUC) to charge additional rates or change rates, and are subject to the CPUC's finding that such rates are "just and reasonable."

Cal. Pub. Util. Code §§ 451, 454(a), 701.

Administrative Law > Judicial Review > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Administrative Proceedings > General Overview

Environmental Law > Administrative Proceedings & Litigation > Judicial Review

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Filed Rate Doctrine > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Filed Rate Doctrine > Public Utilities & Telecommunications Carriers

HN16 [] Administrative Law, Judicial Review

The focus for determining whether the filed rate doctrine applies is the impact the court's decision will have on agency procedures and rate determinations. Judicial review of activities beyond the scope of the agencies' jurisdiction does not violate the filed rate doctrine.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Filed Rate Doctrine > General Overview

HN17 [blue document icon] Exemptions & Immunities, Filed Rate Doctrine

Under the filed rate doctrine, when there is a conflict between the filed rate and the contract rate, the filed rate controls. To permit parties to vary by private agreement the rates filed with the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission would undercut the clear purpose of the congressional scheme: granting the Commission an opportunity in every case to judge the reasonableness of the rate.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Filed Rate Doctrine > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Transportation Law > Carrier Duties & Liabilities > Rates & Tariffs

HN18 [blue document icon] Exemptions & Immunities, Filed Rate Doctrine

The filed rate cannot be varied or enlarged by either contract or tort of the regulated entity.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Filed Rate Doctrine > Public Utilities & Telecommunications Carriers

Civil Procedure > ... > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Jurisdiction Over Actions > Exclusive Jurisdiction

Energy & Utilities Law > Electric Power Industry > Electric Power Rates > Filed Rate Doctrine

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Filed Rate Doctrine > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Jurisdiction > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > ... > US Federal Energy Regulatory Commission > Civil Actions > Jurisdiction

HN19 [blue document icon] Filed Rate Doctrine, Public Utilities & Telecommunications Carriers

No meaningful distinction exists between conduct regulated by state, as distinguished from federal, entities; the filed rate doctrine applies whether the rate in question is approved by a federal or state agency.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Filed Rate Doctrine > Public Utilities & Telecommunications Carriers

Energy & Utilities Law > Electric Power Industry > Electric Power Rates > Filed Rate Doctrine

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Filed Rate Doctrine > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Electric Power Industry > Electric Power Rates > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Electric Power Industry > Electric Power Rates > Retail Rates

HN20 [blue document icon] Filed Rate Doctrine, Public Utilities & Telecommunications Carriers

The filed rate doctrine bars claims filed with state, as distinguished from federal, agencies.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Filed Rate Doctrine > General Overview

HN21 [+] Exemptions & Immunities, Filed Rate Doctrine

The filed rate doctrine contains one important caveat: The filed rate is not enforceable if the regulating agency finds the rate to be unreasonable.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Filed Rate Doctrine > Public Utilities & Telecommunications Carriers

Energy & Utilities Law > Electric Power Industry > Electric Power Rates > Filed Rate Doctrine

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Filed Rate Doctrine > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Utility Companies > Rates > General Overview

HN22 [+] Filed Rate Doctrine, Public Utilities & Telecommunications Carriers

The filed rate doctrine recognizes that where a legislature has established a scheme for utility rate-making, the rights of the rate-payer in regard to the rate paid are defined by that schedule.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Filed Rate Doctrine > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Transportation Law > Carrier Duties & Liabilities > Rates & Tariffs

Transportation Law > Interstate Commerce > Federal Preemption

HN23 [+] Exemptions & Immunities, Filed Rate Doctrine

The filed rate doctrine applies not only to federal court review, but as a matter of federal supremacy to state law causes of action that conflict with or interfere with federal authority over the same activity.

Civil Procedure > ... > Preclusion of Judgments > Estoppel > Judicial Estoppel

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Preclusion of Judgments > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Preclusion of Judgments > Estoppel > General Overview

HN24 [+] Estoppel, Judicial Estoppel

Judicial estoppel is intended to protect the integrity of the judicial process and prevent unfairness to an opponent.

Civil Procedure > ... > Preclusion of Judgments > Estoppel > Judicial Estoppel

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Preclusion of Judgments > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Preclusion of Judgments > Estoppel > General Overview

HN25 [blue icon] Estoppel, Judicial Estoppel

Under the majority view, judicial estoppel does not apply unless the assertion inconsistent with the claim made in the subsequent litigation was adopted in some manner by the court in the prior litigation. Under the minority view, judicial estoppel can apply even when a party was unsuccessful in asserting its position in the prior judicial proceeding, if the court determines that the allegedly offending party engaged in fast and loose behavior which undermined the integrity of the court.

Civil Procedure > ... > Preclusion of Judgments > Estoppel > Judicial Estoppel

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Preclusion of Judgments > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Preclusion of Judgments > Estoppel > General Overview

HN26 [blue icon] Estoppel, Judicial Estoppel

The doctrine of judicial estoppel is invoked by a court at its discretion.

Civil Procedure > ... > Preclusion of Judgments > Estoppel > Judicial Estoppel

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Preclusion of Judgments > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Preclusion of Judgments > Estoppel > General Overview

HN27 [blue icon] Estoppel, Judicial Estoppel

Judicial estoppel should not be invoked to freeze an opponent into a position on a pure issue of law.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Defenses

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > General Overview

HN28 [blue icon] Sherman Act, Defenses

Federal antitrust laws are subject to supersession by state regulatory programs.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > General Overview

HN29 [blue icon] Exemptions & Immunities, Parker State Action Doctrine

State action immunity is narrowly construed.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > General Overview

HN30 [blue icon] Exemptions & Immunities, Parker State Action Doctrine

Private entities may claim state action immunity.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Affirmative Defenses > Immunity

HN31 [+] Exemptions & Immunities, Parker State Action Doctrine

State action immunity is an affirmative defense.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > General Overview

HN32 [+] Exemptions & Immunities, Parker State Action Doctrine

The test for determining whether a state anticompetitive mechanism operates because of a deliberate and intended state policy, such that the federal antitrust laws are superseded, requires, first, that the challenged restraint must be clearly articulated and affirmatively expressed as state policy, and, second, that the policy must be actively supervised by the state itself.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > General Overview

Healthcare Law > Healthcare Litigation > Antitrust Actions > Facilities

Healthcare Law > Business Administration & Organization > Covenants not to Compete > General Overview

HN33 [+] Exemptions & Immunities, Parker State Action Doctrine

In order for the state action doctrine to bar claims, the courts must assure themselves that the subordinate acts in accord with the state's wishes when it contravenes federal antitrust laws.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > General Overview

HN34 [+] Exemptions & Immunities, Parker State Action Doctrine

The misuse of clearly granted regulatory power does not cause state action immunity to lapse, so long as the conduct was objectively foreseeable in the state scheme. A defendant's alleged malice or bad faith is not relevant to the state action inquiry.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > Scope

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > General Overview

HN35 [+] Exemptions & Immunities, Parker State Action Doctrine

Parker immunity is only available when the challenged activity is undertaken pursuant to the policy of the state itself as sovereign, through a state statute or opinion of a state supreme court.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Utility Companies > General Overview

HN36 [] Exemptions & Immunities, Parker State Action Doctrine

A private party acting pursuant to an anticompetitive regulatory program need not point to specific, detailed legislative authorization for its challenged conduct. If the legislature delegates supervision to a regulatory agency, state action immunity is available if: (1) the state as sovereign has delegated authority to the agency to regulate the challenged conduct, and (2) the agency articulates a policy, consistent with its delegated authority, to displace price competition with a regulatory structure.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Actual Monopolization > Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices > Predatory Hiring & Price Squeezes

HN37 [] Exemptions & Immunities, Parker State Action Doctrine

As long as an agency is under the mandate of a sovereign state to establish just and reasonable rates, and retains discretion as to how those rates will be determined, the method by which it establishes those rates is, and remains, regulation, even if one of the factors used in determining the just and reasonable rates is the effect of competition.

Energy & Utilities Law > Natural Gas Industry > Distribution & Sale

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Natural Gas Industry > Marketing & Transportation > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Pipelines & Transportation > Natural Gas Transportation

HN38 [] Natural Gas Industry, Distribution & Sale

Introduction of competition into a regulatory structure does not preclude application of state action immunity.

Energy & Utilities Law > Utility Companies > Buying & Selling of Power

Energy & Utilities Law > Regulators > Public Utility Commissions > General Overview

HN39 [] Utility Companies, Buying & Selling of Power

See Cal. Pub. Util. Code § 785.5.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Energy & Utilities > State Regulation

Energy & Utilities Law > Regulators > Public Utility Commissions > Authorities & Powers

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Energy & Utilities > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Energy & Utilities > Utility Companies

Energy & Utilities Law > Regulators > Public Utility Commissions > General Overview

HN40 [] Energy & Utilities, State Regulation

The California Public Utilities Commission's authority has been liberally construed.

Administrative Law > Separation of Powers > Legislative Controls > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Utility Companies > Buying & Selling of Power

Energy & Utilities Law > Utility Companies > General Overview

HN41 [] Separation of Powers, Legislative Controls

The California legislature delegated the details of regulatory oversight to the California Public Utilities Commission. Cal. Pub. Util. Code § 785.5. Agency delegation does not preclude application of state action immunity.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > General Overview

HN42 [] Exemptions & Immunities, Parker State Action Doctrine

To satisfy the active supervision requirement, state officials must have and exercise power to review particular anticompetitive acts of private parties and disapprove those that fail to accord with state policy. The purpose of this requirement is to determine whether the state has exercised sufficient independent judgment and control so that the details of rates or prices have been established as a product of deliberate state intervention, not simply by the agreement of private parties. Much as in causation inquiries, the analysis asks whether the state has played a substantial role in determining the specifics of the economic policy.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Energy & Utilities > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Antitrust Issues > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Purchasers > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Purchasers > Indirect Purchasers

Energy & Utilities Law > Utility Companies > Rates > Overcharging

HN43 [] Regulated Industries, Energy & Utilities

Where suppliers violate antitrust laws by overcharging a public utility, and the utility passes on the overcharges to the customer, only the utility has a cause of action because it alone has suffered an antitrust injury. The rationale for the indirect purchaser bar is that allowing suits by parties all along the distribution chain could impose duplicative liability on the antitrust violator, particularly since it is difficult to apportion damages between successive distribution levels.

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrs & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

Civil Procedure > Dismissal > Involuntary Dismissals > Failure to State Claims

HN44 [blue icon] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

A motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(6\) is viewed with disfavor and is rarely granted.

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrs & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

Civil Procedure > Dismissal > Involuntary Dismissals > Failure to State Claims

HN45 [blue icon] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

A complaint should not be dismissed for failure to state a claim unless it appears beyond a doubt that the plaintiff can prove no set of facts in support of his claim which would entitle him to relief.

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrs & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

HN46 [blue icon] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

In deciding a motion to dismiss, the court must accept as true all material allegations in the complaint and construe them in the light most favorable to the plaintiff. The court need not accept as true allegations that contradict facts which may be judicially noticed. The court may consider matters of public record including pleadings, orders, and other papers filed with the court or records of administrative bodies. The court need not accept conclusory allegations, nor unreasonable inferences or unwarranted deductions of fact. The court may disregard allegations in the complaint if contradicted by facts established by exhibits attached to the complaint.

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrs & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

HN47 [blue icon] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

Summary procedures should be used sparingly in complex antitrust litigation where motive and intent play leading roles, in part because proof of these elements is in the hands of the opponent.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

HN48 [blue icon] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

The Sherman Act provides that every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations is declared to be illegal. 15 U.S.C.S. § 1. This language cannot be read strictly, or else a vast array of competitive activities could be considered restraints of trade and therefore illegal.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

Healthcare Law > Healthcare Litigation > Antitrust Actions > Facilities

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Communications > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

HN49 [💡] Conspiracy to Monopolize, Sherman Act

To establish a claim under § 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, a plaintiff must show: (1) that there was a contract, combination or conspiracy; (2) that the agreement unreasonably restrained trade under either a per se rule or illegality or a rule of reason analysis; and (3) that the restraint affected interstate commerce. The pleader must allege more than a bare legal conclusion; if the facts do not outline or adumbrate a violation of the Sherman Act, the plaintiff will get nowhere by merely dressing them up in the language of antitrust.

Business & Corporate Law > ... > Duties & Liabilities > Authorized Acts of Agents > General Overview

HN50 [💡] Duties & Liabilities, Authorized Acts of Agents

An entity can incur antitrust liability for the acts of its employees or agents, when acting within the scope of their apparent authority, despite the agent's desire to benefit only him or herself.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Scope

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Types of Commercial Transactions > Sales of Goods > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

HN51 [💡] Antitrust & Trade Law, Clayton Act

Section 3 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 14, prohibits any person from making a sale or contract for sale of goods or other commodities on the condition, agreement or understanding that the purchaser shall not deal with other commodities or competitors of the seller, where the effect would substantially lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly in any line of commerce. Even if a contract is found to be an exclusive-dealing arrangement, it does not violate the section unless the court believes it is probable that performance of the contract will foreclose competition in a substantial share of the line of commerce affected.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Scope

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

HN52 [+] Antitrust & Trade Law, Clayton Act

Section 3 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 14, applies solely to sellers or lessors, not to purchasers. This conclusion follows from the fundamental antitrust concept that the alleged sins of the seller should not be visited on buyers because of the risk of chilling competition.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Business & Corporate Law > Foreign Corporations > General Overview

International Trade Law > International Commerce & Trade > Exports & Imports > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrs & Objections > Denial of Allegations

HN53 [+] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

The Wilson Tariff Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 8, prohibits every combination, conspiracy, trust, agreement or contract between two or more persons or corporations, either of whom is engaged in importing any article from any foreign country when the transaction is intended to operate in restraint of trade or competition, or to increase the market price of articles imported into the United States. Although analogous to § 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, the Wilson Tariff Act does not include monopolization or intent to monopolize. Where allegations state a claim under § 1 of the Sherman Act, dismissal of a Wilson Tariff Act claim is generally inappropriate.

Counsel: [*1] RON DEMIRDJIAN, plaintiff: Lawrence W Schonbrun, Law Offices of Lawrence W Schonbrun, Berkeley, CA.

PACIFIC GAS AND ELECTRIC COMPANY, a California Corporation, defendant: Donald Henry Glasrud, Dietrich Glasrud and Jones, Fresno, CA. Stephen V. Bomse, Heller Ehrman White and McAuliffe, San Francisco, CA.

ALBERTA AND SOUTHERN GAS CO. LTD, defendant: Marie L Fiala, Heller Ehrman White and McAuliffe, San Francisco, CA.

Judges: Oliver W. Wanger, UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE

Opinion by: OLIVER W. WANGER

Opinion

MEMORANDUM OPINION AND ORDERS RE:

1) PLAINTIFFS' MOTION FOR CLASS CERTIFICATION

2) DEFENDANTS' MOTIONS TO DISMISS

I.

INTRODUCTION

In this antitrust action brought under both state and federal law, plaintiffs are a putative class seeking certification under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 23\(b\)\(3\). Defendants Pacific Gas & Electric Co. ("PG&E") and Pacific Gas Transmission Company ("PGT"), have filed motions to dismiss plaintiffs' complaint under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12\(b\)\(6\).

II.

BACKGROUND

Regulatory Scheme

Plaintiffs challenge defendants' acquisition and sale of natural gas from Canada to the California market, alleging antitrust violations. The [*2] issues raised must be understood in the context of the regulatory controls under which the defendants operate.

During the 1950's, PG&E constructed the Alberta-California Pipeline to transport natural gas from Canadian suppliers to California users. During that time, PG&E also incorporated two wholly-owned subsidiaries: 1) Alberta and Southern Gas (A&S), which contracted to purchase gas from 190 Canadian suppliers, P 38 and Exhibit A (listing participants), organized transport of the Canadian gas to the Alberta border, where Alberta Natural Gas Co., Ltd. ("ANG") transports it to the Canadian border; and 2) PGT, which purchases gas from A&S and ships it through its facilities to the California border, where it is sold to PG&E under a service agreement and rate schedule. PP 23-25.

In Canada, natural gas rights are owned by the provinces for the benefit of the provinces' citizens, subject to the interest of any other owner. Canada Constitution Act, § 109 (1930). Alberta regulates gas sales through a removal permit process. Gas Resources Preservation Act, Chapter G-3.1. Before gas may be removed from Alberta, a permit must be approved by the Alberta Energy Resources Control Board ("ERCB"), [*3] and either the Alberta Minister of Energy or the Alberta Lieutenant Governor in Council. Id. §§ 2, 4-6, 11, 19.

Under Alberta's Natural Gas Marketing Act, a shipper may not remove gas from Alberta for resale unless, among other requirements, there is a finding of producer support by the Alberta Petroleum Marketing Commission. § 9(1). Purchasers can choose between two pricing formulas: 1) "Netback pricing," under which the actual price paid by the shipper is calculated with reference to a resale price; or 2) a price derived through arbitration. A&S uses the first method. The Alberta Petroleum Marketing Commission can find that producer support exists if producers representing at least 60% of the aggregate of the attributed contract quantities have voted to support the transaction.

After the gas is transported into the United States, the federal regulatory controls come into effect. HN1↑ Sections 4(c) and 4(d) of the Natural Gas Act ("NGA"), 52 Stat. 822-823, 15 U.S.C. §§ 717c\(c\) and \(d\) require sellers of natural gas in interstate commerce to file their rates with the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission ("FERC"). Under § 4(a) of the Act, 52 Stat. 822, 15 U.S.C. § 717c\(a\), the [*4] rates that a regulated gas company files with the FERC for sale and transportation of natural gas are lawful only if they are "just and reasonable."

Under section 3 of the NGA, HN2↑ the Economic Regulatory Administration ("ERA") must approve the importation of natural gas, and will do so unless the proposed import "will not be consistent with the public interest." 15 U.S.C. § 717b. The ERA considers: the competitiveness of the imported gas, the need for the gas, and the security of the supply. See, Transcanada Pipelines, Ltd. v. FERC, 278 U.S. App. D.C. 299, 878 F.2d 401, 407 \(D.C. Cir. 1989\). As stated in Transcanada Pipelines:

The authorization of a given volume of gas at up to a particular price is a decision by ERA that the particular import is in the public interest, and that no market failure has been shown that has or would interfere with the pipeline's acting in its own interest to acquire gas on the most favorable terms.

This ERA process raises a rebuttable presumption that the terms are prudent if freely negotiated and flexible. Id. at 407-08. Gas imported by PGT from Alberta is subject to regulation by the ERA. See, Pacific Gas Transmission Co., 1 E.R.A. P 70,591 [*5] (April 2, 1985).

At the state level, HN3¹ the CPUC has authority to regulate rates charged to the public by the California utilities. A utility cannot change a rate unless the CPUC approves. Cal. Pub. U. Code § 454\(a\). All rates and charges must be "just and reasonable." Cal. Pub. U. Code § 451.

In April, 1989, PG&E requested reasonableness review under its Energy Cost Adjustment Clause, for the 1988-90 period. An ALJ conducted hearings, and issued a preliminary decision on November 15, 1993. On March 22, 1994, the CPUC issued a final 249-page decision, discussing its findings regarding the reasonableness of PG&E's gas procurements from Canada, from February 1, 1988 through December 31, 1990. See, Supplemental Appendices in Support of Motion to Dismiss, No. 1. Because the proceedings were bifurcated, the CPUC will separately issue a ruling which considers remaining electric and gas department reasonableness issues.

Allegations of the Complaint

As a general matter, PG&E has two types of customers: core and non-core. P 29; see generally, Re Regulatory Framework for Gas Utilities, 22 CPUC 2d 491 (Dec. 3, 1986). Core customers are residential and commercial customers, [*6] whose individual gas usage is small. P 29. Non-core customers are larger industrial users who could, in theory, bargain for alternative sources of supply or price. P 29. The complaint alleges that PG&E used its exclusive control over the PGT pipeline to protect long-term gas contracts with the pool of Canadian gas producers who did business with A&S, by keeping the pipeline filled with A&S gas, such that it was incapable of transporting cheaper gas for non-core customers. P 29. Specifically, PG&E made a core election for 100% of the needs of its largest non-core customer, Utility Electric Generation Department ("UEG"), allegedly owned by PG&E.¹ P 29. This election put more high-priced A&S gas in the pipeline, making it impossible for non-core customers to obtain cheaper gas. P 29.

[*7] During the February, 1988, through October, 1993, time period, PG&E is alleged to have overpaid for Canadian gas, and shut out competition from third-party suppliers, in contravention of the California Public Utilities Commission ("CPUC") direction to provide transportation services for Canadian competitors, and in the wake of deregulation under the Natural Gas Policy Act ("NGPA"). PP 30, 32. PG&E neither purchased from the "spot gas" market,² nor used the "spot gas" market for bargaining leverage in negotiating with Canadian suppliers. As a result, A&S's suppliers purchased spot gas, and in turn resold it to PG&E at an inflated contract price. P at 75.

PG&E dictated the Canadian seller's price, [*8] a price which mirrored higher prices charged by other U.S. suppliers that had pipeline access to California. P 40. This practice is evidenced by the fact that all PG&E's contracts reflect an identical price per million BTUs. P 41. The price set by PG&E is the highest possible, subject to the condition that the core price charged be low enough to keep core election attractive for UEG. P 44. Other than this limitation, PG&E is "financially indifferent" to the prices charged, because those costs were passed on, penny for penny, to PG&E's ratepayers. PP 45, 46. These contracts also had "take or pay" provisions, which required PG&E to purchase unneeded gas or pre-pay for gas not yet needed. P 76. This conduct resulted in PG&E advancing hundreds of millions of dollars to Canadian gas producers for gas not yet taken, and keeping the pipeline full of unneeded, expensive gas. Id. PG&E could have replaced at least 50% of expensive A&S gas with lower-cost spot gas. P 78.

¹ Non-core customers can choose to become "elected core" customers and have the utility procure a specified quantity of gas for them as part of the core market. This ensures a steady supply, but reduces a non-core customer's flexibility in negotiating alternative sources of supply.

² "Spot gas" is supplied under short-term contracts, usually of less than thirty days duration. In comparison, "long-term gas" is gas supplied over an extended period of time, such as the twenty-five year A&S contracts. P 34. Spot gas is generally less expensive than gas purchased under long-term contracts. Id.

The purpose of the arrangement was to keep the A&S producer price high and to prevent cheaper independent suppliers from getting to PG&E's market. P 43. The arrangement permitted PG&E to hand out millions of dollars annually [*9] in windfalls to Canadian gas producers, give PGT higher profits, and provide PG&E with larger revenues which result in large incentive packages and bonuses for PG&E executives. P 46. A&S officers and directors, and officers and directors of A&S affiliates have board memberships and ownership interests in Canadian gas producers and transporters. P 48.

The complaint alleges the following claims for relief:

First Claim for Relief. Violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1, for conspiring to raise or stabilize prices for natural gas in California;

Second Claim for Relief. Violation of the Wilson Tariff Act, 15 U.S.C. § 8, for entering into a combination, conspiracy, trust, agreement or contract, in regard to the sale and transmission of natural gas from Canada to California, with intent to operate in restraint of trade;

Third Claim for Relief. Violation of section 3 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 14, for entering into a trust and contract to fix prices of natural gas in California, to lessen competition and create a monopoly;

Fourth Claim for Relief. Violation of California's Cartwright Act, for entering into a trust by the [*10] combination of capital, skill or acts to: 1) create restrictions in trade or commerce; 2) increase the price of natural gas in California; 3) prevent competition in the production, transportation, sale and purchase of natural gas in California; and/or 4) fix the price of gas at an artificially high rate, in violation of California Business and Professions Code section 16720. Further, defendants and the A&S pool entered into a trust by entering into agreements: 1) to fix the price of Canadian natural gas; 2) to establish or settle the price at an artificially high rate, which precluded competition; and/or 3) pool, combine, or directly or indirectly unite their interests in connection with the sale and transportation of natural gas from Canada to California, in violation of California Business and Professions Code section 16720\(e\).

Fifth Claim for Relief. Violation of California's Unfair Business Practices Act, Business and Professions Code section 17000 et. seq., for preventing or destroying competition, and colluding with the A&S pool to violate Business and Professions Code section 17048.

The complaint seeks monetary, declaratory, and injunctive relief.

[*11] Plaintiffs bring this action on behalf of themselves and all persons and entities (except for defendants and their affiliates) who paid for the purchase of natural gas from defendants from February, 1988, through October, 1993. P 16. There are two sub-classes alleged: 1) Public entities, such as the County of Stanislaus, who purchased gas from PG&E for unreasonably high prices; and 2) All other customers of PG&E, such as residential customer Mary Grogan. P 16. Plaintiffs estimate that PG&E has 3.3 to 3.5 million customers. P 18.

In February, 1994, PG&E filed suit against the County of Stanislaus and members of its Board of Supervisors in Stanislaus County Superior Court, No. 303786. The State Court action alleged that the County was ultra vires in filing this federal action, in violation of state law based on violations of the Brown Act, had improperly maintained the suit in the name of other counties without consent, and in so doing made an improper and illegal use of public monies. PG&E sought preliminary and permanent injunctive relief against the continued maintenance of the instant federal action. On May 3, 1994, the state court sustained the County's demurrer without leave [*12] to amend.

III.

PARTIES' REQUESTS FOR JUDICIAL NOTICE

Both parties have submitted requests for judicial notice in the form of foreign law, federal and state agency decisions, pleadings and unpublished state court decisions, and pleadings and testimony submitted in CPUC proceedings. Neither party has filed objections to the other parties' requests.

HN4 [↑] Federal Rule of Evidence Rule 201 provides in pertinent part "A judicially noticed fact must be one not subject to reasonable dispute in that it is either (1) generally known within the territorial jurisdiction of the trial court or (2) capable of accurate and ready determination by resort to sources whose accuracy cannot reasonably be questioned. A court shall take judicial notice if requested by a party and supplied with the necessary information."

HN5 [↑] Federal courts may "take notice of proceedings in other courts, both within and without the federal judicial system, if those proceedings have a direct relation to the matters at issue." U.S. ex rel Robinson Rancheria Citizens Council v. Borneo, 971 F.2d 244, 248 \(9th Cir. 1992\).

The parties' requests for judicial notice are granted, although the testimony and pleadings submitted [*13] will be considered for the fact that they exist as submitted, not for the truth of disputed assertions of fact or argument.

IV.

PLAINTIFFS' MOTION FOR CLASS CERTIFICATION

Legal Standard

HN6 [↑] To maintain an action under Federal Rule 23\(b\)\(3\), plaintiff must show: 1) the class is so numerous that joinder of all members is impracticable; 2) there are questions of law or fact common to the class; 3) the claims or defenses of the representative parties are typical of the claims or defenses in the class; 4) The representative parties will fairly and adequately represent the interests of the class; and 5) the questions of law or fact common to the members of the class predominate over any questions affecting only individual members, and that a class action is superior to other available methods for a fair and efficient adjudication of the controversy.

Discussion

The numerosity requirement is met, as the complaint alleges class sizes ranging from 3.3 to 3.5 million persons. Joinder of that number of persons, representing all PG&E customers in Northern and Central California, is not practicable. The commonality requirement is met, as the complaint alleges all class members [*14] were injured by defendants' conduct in the acquisition, transportation, and sale of natural gas during the class period. All plaintiffs assert the same five claims for relief. There are questions of law or fact common to the class. Defendants do not contend that either the numerosity or commonality requirements have not been met.

Defendants argue plaintiffs have failed to demonstrate that class action treatment is "superior to other available methods for the fair and efficient adjudication of the controversy." Fed. R. Civ. Pro. 23\(b\)\(3\). Defendants point out the CPUC has already adjudicated the same issues raised by plaintiffs, and has ordered a $ 100 million "refund" to class members. In assessing the "superiority" requirement, a court may consider whether administrative proceedings which embraced the issue before the court can adequately resolve the controversy. 7A Wright, Miller & Kane, Federal Practice and Procedure, § 1779 at 560-61; Pattillo v. Schlesinger, 625 F.2d 262, 265 \(9th Cir. 1980\).

HN7 [↑] "Whether an administrative adjudication would provide a more advantageous procedure than a class action may depend on the type of remedy that could be awarded by the agency and [*15] the general attitude of the agency toward the issues and problems raised by the claimants." 7A Federal Practice and Procedure, at 561.

Defendants point out that the CPUC has already expended considerable effort, in holding 54 days of hearings and examining thousands of pages of briefing and written submissions, and rendering its 250 pages of findings. Defendants argue that any decision by this court would, at minimum, duplicate and possibly negate the CPUC's efforts. Because court adjudication may undermine the CPUC's jurisdiction, court adjudication may disrupt that agency's ability to evaluate utilities according to its own policy goals. Defendants note that the relief sought by plaintiffs is calculated in a similar manner to that used by the CPUC, and that ratepayers will receive duplicative relief if this action proceeds. Defendants point out that they will incur double litigation expenses by proceeding here. Defendants acknowledge that the CPUC cannot award treble damages, but do not discuss whether injunctive relief is available from the CPUC. Defendants question that, if this action were to proceed to a jury trial, every juror would have a direct financial stake in the [*16] outcome, rendering this proceeding inferior to administrative adjudication. Plaintiffs assert that the CPUC considers, but does not adjudicate, antitrust principles. As stated by the California Supreme Court:

By considering antitrust issues, the [Public Utilities] Commission merely carries out its legislative mandate to determine whether the public convenience and necessity require a proposed development. That task does not impinge upon the jurisdiction of the federal courts in federal antitrust cases. . . . The Commission may approve projects even though they would otherwise violate the antitrust laws; it may also disapprove projects which do not violate such laws. Its consideration of antitrust problems is for purposes quite different from those of the courts; it does not usurp their function.

Northern California Power Agency v. Public Utilities Com., 5 Cal. 3d 370, 378, 96 Cal. Rptr. 18, 486 P.2d 1218 \(1971\).

Although judicial proceedings will require a considerable amount of time and judicial resources, those resources must be expended whether the case proceeds as a class action, or by the named plaintiffs. Much of the legal and factual complexity lies in the issues raised against defendants [*17] by any plaintiff, not because of the size of the class or variation of interests among class member plaintiffs. The CPUC has only a limited ability to issue injunctive relief--a remedy sought by plaintiffs--and no direct jurisdiction over defendant PGT. A finding cannot be made that adjudication before the CPUC is superior to a judicial proceeding.

Defendants challenge the County as an inadequate or atypical class representative, due to alleged lack of statutory authority under California law to represent public entities outside the county. HN8 Capacity to sue and be sued is to be determined by the law of the state in which the district court sits. Fed. R. Civ. P. 17\(b\). The issue raised by defendants turns on interpretation of a California statute. The Stanislaus Superior Court, in sustaining the County's demurrer without leave to amend, has rejected defendants' contention. Because the state court has ruled adversely to the defendants on the issue, defendants' contention need not be reconsidered here. The state court's decision on the matter of state substantive law concerning standing would be followed in any event. Erie Railroad v. Tompkins, 304 U.S. 64, 78, 82 L. Ed. 1188, 58 S. Ct. 817 \(1938\).

All prerequisites [*18] of Rule 23\(b\)\(3\) have been met, plaintiffs' motion for class certification is GRANTED.

V.

DEFENDANTS' MOTION TO DISMISS

Filed Rate Doctrine: Federal Claims

HN9 Antitrust actions in pervasively-regulated areas, such as the natural gas industry, are circumscribed by the "filed rate doctrine."³ See, Arkansas Louisiana Gas. Co. v. Hall, 453 U.S. 571, 577, 101 S. Ct. 2925, 2930, 69 L. Ed. 2d 856 \(1981\). "The considerations underlying the doctrine . . . are preservation of the agency's primary jurisdiction over reasonableness of rates and the need to insure that regulated companies charge only those rates of which the agency has been made cognizant." Arkansas Louisiana Gas, 453 U.S. at 578-79, 101 S. Ct. at 2930. Holding the filed rate doctrine barred a breach of contract claim, because it would require alteration of the filed rate. The Court noted that, in enacting the NGA,

Congress . . . has granted exclusive authority over rate regulation to the FERC. In so doing, Congress withheld authority to grant retroactive rate increases or to permit collection of a rate other than the one on file. It would surely be inconsistent with this congressional purpose to permit a state court [*19] to do through breach of contract action what the Commission itself may not do.

³The filed rate doctrine is distinguishable from antitrust immunity, a doctrine invoked by several cases cited by plaintiffs. Compare, Arkansas Louisiana Gas. Co. v. Hall, 453 U.S. 571, 577, 101 S. Ct. 2925, 2930, 69 L. Ed. 2d 856 \(1981\) (barring claims under filed rate doctrine to dispute involving seller of natural gas), with, Otter Tail Power Co. v. U.S., 410 U.S. 366, 35 L. Ed. 2d 359, 93 S. Ct. 1022 \(1973\) (no general antitrust immunity exists under National Gas Act).

Id. at 580, 101 S. Ct. at 2932. The filed rate doctrine is not limited to "rates" per se, but applies to any activity under the controlling agency's regulatory power. Nantahala Power and Light Co. v. Thornburg, 476 U.S. 953, 106 S. Ct. 2349, 2357, 90 L. Ed. 2d 943 (1986) (utility company could not obtain more FERC-regulated power than FERC permitted).

Although applied in earlier cases, the genesis of the filed rate doctrine is most often attributed to Keogh v. Chicago & Northwestern Railway Co., [*20] 260 U.S. 156, 67 L. Ed. 183, 43 S. Ct. 47 (1922). In Keogh, a shipper brought suit under section 7 of the Antitrust Act, against eight railroad companies and twelve individual defendants, who were officers and agents of transporters of freight. The shipper alleged that the defendants had entered into an agreement which set higher rates than if no agreement existed, and that the higher rates eliminated competition. The shipper's claims were, that, absent the conspiracy: 1) the rates charged would have been lower; and 2) the shipper's business would be increased. The Supreme Court held that the plaintiff could not challenge the rates, which had been approved by the Interstate Commerce Commission:

Section 7 of the Anti-Trust Act gives a right of action to one who has been "injured in his business or property." Injury implies violation of a legal right. The legal rights of shipper as against carrier in respect to a rate are measured by the published tariff. Unless and until suspended or set aside, this rate is made, for all purposes, the legal rate, as between carrier and shipper. The rights as defined by the tariff cannot be varied or enlarged by either contract or tort of the carrier. And they are [*21] not affected by the tort of a third party. This stringent rule prevails, because otherwise, the paramount purpose of Congress--prevention of unjust discrimination--might be defeated. (Emphasis added)

Keogh, 260 U.S. at 163 (citations omitted). The Court found two additional obstacles to the relief sought by the shipper. First, plaintiff could not show that the hypothetical lower rate sought would have conformed to ICC requirements, because "by no conceivable proceeding could the question whether a hypothetical lower rate would under conceivable conditions have been discriminatory, be submitted to the Commission for determination." Id. at 164. Second, the damages alleged were purely speculative, in that lowered rates might have been passed on to the shipper's customers or ultimate consumer. Id. at 165.

Under Keogh, allegations that a defendant charged rates other than those filed with the regulatory agency cannot give rise to an injury to business or property prerequisite to recovery under the antitrust laws. See also, Square D Co. v. Niagara Frontier Tariff Bureau, 476 U.S. 409, 106 S. Ct. 1922, 90 L. Ed. 2d 413 (1986) (reaffirming Keogh). A complainant "cannot [*22] litigate in a judicial forum its general right to a reasonable rate, ignoring that qualification that it shall be made specific only by exercise of the Commission's judgment, in which there is some considerable element of discretion." Montana-Dakota Utilities Co. v. Northwestern Public Service Co., 341 U.S. 246, 251-52, 71 S. Ct. 692, 695, 95 L. Ed. 912 (1951).

Although neither the Supreme Court nor the Ninth Circuit have addressed the issue, some courts have extended the filed rate doctrine to bar claims filed with state--as distinguished from federal--agencies. Taffet v. Southern Co., 967 F.2d 1483, 1494 (11th Cir.), cert. denied, 506 U.S. 1021, 113 S. Ct. 657, 121 L. Ed. 2d 583 (1992); E.J. Inc. v. Northwestern Bell Telephone Co., 954 F.2d 485 (8th Cir.), cert. denied, 504 U.S. 957, 112 S. Ct. 2306, 119 L. Ed. 2d 228 (1992) ("We see no reason to distinguish between rates promulgated between state and federal agencies,"); Sun City Taxpayers' Assoc. v. Citizens Utilities Co., 847 F. Supp. 281 (D.Conn. 1994).

HN10 [↑] The filed rate doctrine does not bar all antitrust claims against regulated entities. As stated by the Supreme Court:

. . . Keogh simply held that an award of treble damages is not an available remedy for a private shipper [*23] claiming that the rate submitted to, and approved by, the ICC was the product of an antitrust violation.

Square D, 476 U.S. at 421, 106 S. Ct. at 1929. For example, in Barnes v. Arden Mayfair, Inc., 759 F.2d 676, 679 (9th Cir. 1985), the Ninth Circuit held that a producer of sterilized milk could bring an action against an interstate shipper. The complaint alleged that competitor dairies conspired with the shipper to manipulate shipping tariffs to charge almost double for sterilized milk, compared with other milk products, and thereby kept the producer from entering the Alaskan market. The court held that plaintiff--a customer of defendant shipping company--was not barred by Keogh, although interstate shipping is subject to ICC regulation and rate-setting:

[Plaintiff] did not allege merely that illegal rates were set, but in addition that [the shipper] undertook further alleged anticompetitive acts by attempting to prevent a prospective distributor from entering into an agreement with [plaintiff]. Because such activities would be beyond the scope of ICC's jurisdiction, the antitrust action was not subject to dismissal. . . .

Barnes, [*24] 759 F.2d at 679 (emphasis added).

Pike County Light & Power Co. v. Pennsylvania Public Utility Commission, 77 Pa. Commw. 268, 465 A.2d 735 (Pa. Commw. Ct. 1983) permits state agency review of conduct outside of the federal regulating agency's jurisdiction. There, a state PUC was not barred by the filed rate doctrine from reviewing retail power rates, where only wholesale rates were subject to federal regulation:

In carrying out its regulatory function, the FERC examines the cost of service data of Orange & Rockland to determine that its wholesale rates provide a fair return to the utility's stockholders without being unfair to Orange & Rockland's purchasers. The FERC does not analyze Pike's cost of service data or purchased power alternatives in making its determination. The FERC focuses on Orange & Rockland to determine whether it is just and reasonable for that company to charge a particular rate, but makes no determination of whether it is just and reasonable for Pike to incur such a rate as an expense. The PUC, on the other hand, . . . focuses on Pike and its cost of service data to determine whether it is reasonable for Pike to incur such costs in light of available alternatives. [*25] . . . The regulatory functions of the FERC and the PUC thus do not overlap, and there is nothing in federal legislation which preempts the PUC's authority to determine the reasonableness of a utility company's claimed expenses.

Pike County, 465 A.2d at 738.⁴ In Kentucky West Virginia Gas v. Pennsylvania Public Utility Comm., 837 F.2d 600, 609 (3d Cir.), cert. denied, 488 U.S. 941, 102 L. Ed. 2d 355, 109 S. Ct. 365 (1988), the Third Circuit relied on Pike County to permit state agency review of natural gas rates. There, a utility was alleged to have purchased gas from an affiliate, despite availability of lower cost gas from other sources, and passed this added cost onto consumers. In finding that the PUC did not violate the supremacy clause in reviewing the reasonableness of the utility's actions, the court stated:

While it is true that NGA does not expressly preclude FERC from regulating the entire spectrum of a wholesale transaction, exclusive regulation is not the declared intent of the statute. Indeed, retail sales are expressly excluded from federal regulation by 15 U.S.C. § 717(b), and accordingly, companies engaging only in retail sales are also necessarily excluded from [*26] regional regulation. . . . Since the question here of whether the retailer acted with economic prudence in purchasing from one wholesaler rather than another is never before FERC, the PUC is not regulating the same activity.

⁴When PG&E presented the filed rate argument in the CPUC proceedings, the CPUC relied on the Pike County exception in rejecting PG&E's argument, stating: "PG&E applies the filed-rate doctrine too broadly. The doctrine does not preclude a state agency from reviewing whether a utility made reasonable purchasing decisions, even though it may not review the FERC-approved wholesale rate." Re Pacific Gas and Electric Co., 135 PUR 4th 424, 432 (CPUC July 22, 1992).

Id., 837 F.2d at 608-09. Nantahala, 476 U.S. at 972, 106 S. Ct. at 2360, acknowledges the Pike County exception in dicta, observing that a state agency could challenge whether "a particular quantity of power procured by a utility from a particular source could be deemed unreasonably excessive, if lower cost power is available elsewhere, even though the higher cost of power actually purchased is obtained at a FERC-approved, and therefore reasonable, price." (emphasis in original); accord, Mississippi Power & Light Co. v. Mississippi, 487 U.S. 354, 373, 108 S. Ct. 2428, 2440, 101 L. Ed. 2d 322 (1988) (dicta). Pike County has not been extended, beyond permitting state regulatory agency review, to authorize private enforcement actions by ratepayers in court.

[*27] Keogh does not bar claims of potential competitors. For example, in In re Lower Lake Erie Iron Ore Antitrust Litigation, 998 F.2d 1144 (3rd Cir.), cert. dismissed, 114 S. Ct. 625 (1993), the Third Circuit examined antitrust allegations surrounding shipping and transport of iron ore in the Lake Erie region. Plaintiffs alleged that a defendant railroad company had conspired with others to halt technical innovations which would have compromised the railroad's monopoly on iron ore transportation. The court found that plaintiff steel companies--who were customers of defendant railroad--were not barred by Keogh in asserting antitrust claims:

We recognize that the success of anticompetitive non-rate activity would coincidentally implicate rates promulgated under the jurisdiction of the ICC. It is fully consistent with Keogh, however, to accept these rates as lawful and nonetheless to conclude that through non-rate activities, particularly the restriction on the sale or lease of dock space and the refusal to deal with potential competitors, the railroads effectively retarded entry of lower cost competitors to the market. The instrument of damage to the steel companies [*28] was the absence of the lower-cost combination. In contrast, the Supreme Court in Keogh made it clear that "the instrument by which Keogh is alleged to have been damaged is rates approved by the Commission." 260 U.S. at 161, 43 S. Ct. at 49.

The Third Circuit found that potentially lower rates were only a "by-product" of the defendants' conduct:

Even strained to simplification, the railroads' anticompetitive behavior involved far more than the assessment of rates. The mere measure of damages, which begins with an ICC-approved rate, does not define the nature of the conspiracy.

Id., 998 F.2d at 1160; cf, Florida Municipal Power Agency v. Florida Power and Light Co., 839 F. Supp. 1563, 1570-71 (M.D.Fla. 1993) (antitrust damages not available where a reasonable rate was an "integral part" of remedy sought, because FERC has sole authority to determine reasonableness of rates).

Defendants contend that plaintiffs' action is barred under the filed rate doctrine, for the failure to allege any antitrust injury beyond the claimed harm resulting from gas purchases at the filed rate. Defendants argue the allegedly inflated prices were filed and approved [*29] at three separate domestic regulatory levels: 1) The ERA, which specifically reviews and approves the International Contract under which PGT imports natural gas from Canada, and which found its terms were "competitive in the market served;" 2) The FERC, which approved as "just and reasonable" the Service Agreement and tariff schedule submitted by PGT, establishing the price at which PG&E buys Canadian gas from PGT; and 3) The CPUC, which approves the retail rates at which plaintiffs, as customers, purchase gas from PG&E. At P 25, the complaint alleges:

PGT owns and ships the gas through its own facilities to the California border, where it is sold to PG&E under a service agreement and rate schedule. PG&E then sells the Canadian gas to its millions of customers, passing on to them the excessive amounts paid by A&S for the purchase of gas, as well as unreasonable gas expenses associated with the transmission of the gas which totals hundreds of millions of dollars over the class period.

Plaintiffs' complaint alleges, at P 45:

PG&E and PGT were guaranteed recovery in their resale rates of 100 percent of their respective gas purchase costs, and thus lacked any [*30] incentive to minimize those costs. These costs were passed on penny for penny to PG&E's ratepayers.

(emphasis added). Plaintiffs' complaint alleges, at P 78:

The damages for the class period arise from the difference between what PG&E paid the Alberta producers based on an anti-competitive system which was designed to keep the price artificially high, and a substitute price that could have been obtained by PG&E if it had not fixed prices. This price differential would be applied to the amount of spot gas that could be purchased from independent producers outside the cartel which could replace A&S gas during the class period including any such gas available from reserves. The reasonable price that PG&E could have negotiated for that independent gas was as low as the spot price for Alberta gas calculated in a manner that takes into account what the price would have been if PG&E made the PGT pipeline accessible, and if PG&E used its leverage to free up access to NOVA and ANG as well. . . . The damage to the class is at least as much as that price differential multiplied by the replacement volume of gas, and, depending on how the overcharges are allocated [*31] between particular users.

(emphasis added). At P 80, the complaint alleges:

By paying its Canadian suppliers in order to get out of the high-priced, long-term contracts, PG&E again victimized the class members who had the substantial costs associated with the buy out passed on to them.

Plaintiffs argue the challenged activity is outside the regulatory agencies' jurisdiction, and that there is consequently no filed rate because no federal agency reviews the purchase price under the A&S contracts.

To determine whether the disputed sales are subject to federal regulation, some insight into the review process is necessary. HN11[] The Natural Gas Act ("NGA"), 15 U.S.C. §§ 715 et. seq., was intended to protect interstate gas consumers from pipeline monopoly power. See, Sen. Doc. No. 92, part 84A, 70th Cong., 1st Sess. 588-91 (1935). Section 3 of the NGA requires the government to authorize an import of natural gas unless "the proposed importation will not be consistent with the public interest." 15 U.S.C. § 717b. Congress did not define "public interest," "thus giving broad discretion to the government [agencies] in establishing criteria that an importer [*32] must fail to meet for the government to deny an authorization to import." New Policy Guidelines and Delegation Orders from Secretary of Energy to Economic Regulatory Administration and Federal Energy Regulatory Commission Relating to the Regulation of Imported Natural Gas and Delegation Orders No. 0204-111 and No. 0204-122, 49 Federal Register, 6684, 6687 (1984) ("1984 DOE Guidelines") (Defendants Appendix Tab 14).

In 1973, the Canadian National Energy Board, after finding that gas exports were under-priced in relation to alternative fuels in the U.S., persuaded exporters to increase prices. In 1976, a uniform border price was established for all Canadian exports. These export prices were evaluated on a case-by-case basis, using the price of alternative fuels in the relevant geographic region as a basis for comparison.

HN12[] The Natural Gas Policy Act of 1978 ("NGPA"), 15 U.S.C. §§ 3301 et. seq., was enacted to stimulate the interstate flow of gas by reducing wellhead price regulation by the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission ("FERC"). Maryland People's Counsel v. F.E.R.C., 245 U.S. App. D.C. 377, 761 F.2d 780, 782 (D.C.Cir. 1985). Also about this time, federal agencies were questioning whether the [*33] method of evaluating natural gas import prices was competitive. A new system was developed, which measured natural gas imports against a composite of nationwide fuel oil prices. By 1983, various federal agencies concluded that more flexibility was needed, using direct buyer-seller negotiations, under a simplified regulatory review process.

ERA Rate Review

In 1984, the DOE promulgated policy guidelines, establishing new criteria for the public interest standard of evaluating import prices:

This policy approach presumes that buyers and sellers, if allowed to negotiate free of constraining governmental limits, will construct competitive import agreements that will be responsive to market forces over time. The specific commercial terms and conditions of a particular arrangement should be negotiated by the parties pursuant to the discrete requirements of the buyer's market and not directed by government regulators. The government's role in authorizing such agreements should be to evaluate whether the arrangement assures the competitiveness of the import throughout the contract period and to provide a review process whereby affected parties have sufficient opportunity [*34] to demonstrate that the import [price] is not consistent with the public interest.

1984 DOE Guidelines, at 6687. The 1984 Guidelines, "set forth certain rebuttable presumptions and contemplate flexible application of consideration to individual cases." Id.

The terms and conditions of the gas purchase contract, taken together, must provide a supply of gas that the importer can market competitively over the term of the contract. The contract arrangement must be sufficiently flexible to permit pricing and volume adjustments, as required by market conditions. Contract flexibility is a function of certain provisions which may include, but are not limited to: the volume of gas under the contract, base price, price review or adjustment mechanisms, take-or-pay obligations, make-up provisions, length of the contract, and other terms which may affect the marketability for gas. . . .

Import agreements that are negotiated between buyer and seller should result in contracts that provide a competitive energy source for the duration of the import.

Id. at 6688. Under these guidelines, "so long as flexibility as to price or volume allowed the buyer to [*35] respond to changing market forces, the gas would be presumed competitive in price. An opponent of the proposed import could, however, rebut the presumption." Panhandle Producers v. Economic Regulatory Administration, 262 U.S. App. D.C. 43, 822 F.2d 1105, 1107 (D.C.Cir. 1987). The need for natural gas in the proposed market, national energy requirements, and the security of supply are also relevant to the public interest inquiry. Altogether, the 1984 DOE Guidelines were "highly flexible, creating only rebuttable presumptions and leaving parties free to assert 'other factors.'" Panhandle Producers, 822 F.2d at 1113.

On November 1, 1984, the ERA conditionally authorized PGT to import from A&S a quantity of natural gas, through October 31, 1993, subject to a showing that the import arrangement would remain competitive in PG&E's market. DOE/ERA Opinion and Order No. 63. On April 2, 1985, the ERA completed the approval process of PGT's contract with A&S:

The substantial reduction in PGT's take-or-pay obligations, the elimination of its minimum physical take obligations, the reduction in the price of the Canadian gas imported by PGT, and the flexibility provided by the semi-annual review and [*36] redetermination provisions amply demonstrate that PGT's import arrangement is competitive and market-responsive, and can be expected to remain so over the term of the underlying contract. . . . The revised gas sales contract allows PGT to negotiate price changes, as was recently done to reduce the commodity rate, in order for the Canadian gas to remain competitive. It is not our intention to intervene in the negotiation of such contract adjustments so long as PGT is operating within the terms of its existing import arrangement.

Pacific Gas Transmission Company, DOE/ERA Opinion and Order No. 63A, at P 72,386 (Defendants Appendix Tab 15). Under this approval, PGT was required to file its import prices under the A&S international contract, specifically:

File with the ERA in the month following each calendar quarter, quarterly reports showing, by month, the quantities of gas imported, the average price paid through MMBtu for both the demand and commodity components, and the average delivered price at the Canadian border per MMBtu.

On September 12, 1989, PGT filed an unopposed application to extend the import authorization through October 31, 2005, under [*37] the existing gas sales contract with A&S, for delivery to PG&E for use in California. The Office of Fossil Energy⁵ ("FE") granted the extension, stating:

The guidelines direct DOE to look for, as indicia of competitiveness, flexible contract arrangements which permit the parties to respond to changing market conditions over the life of the import. The PGT/Alberta and Southern gas purchase contract provides such flexibility in the form of semi-annual price review and redetermination provisions. Previously, in issuing Order 63-A, DOE concluded that PGT's import arrangement based on this same gas purchase contract was competitive and would remain so over the term of the contract arrangement. There is no information in the record of this proceeding on which to base a different conclusion for the proposed extended term of the import arrangement.

⁵ In 1989, the Department of Energy transferred authority over the natural gas import and authorization program from the ERA to the Office of Fossil Energy ("FE"). Delegation Order 0204-127, 54 Fed. Reg. 11436 (1989) (Defendants Appendix, Tab 13).

Pacific Gas Transmission Company, DOE/FE Opinion and Order No. 387, 1 FEP 70,371, 71,422 (March 6, 1990).

[*38] FERC Rate Review

Once Canadian gas enters the PGT pipeline at the United States border, jurisdiction over its transportation and sale passes to the FERC. Section 4 of HN13 [↑] the NGA requires the FERC to ensure that "all rates and charges made, demanded or received by any natural-gas company for or in connection with the transportation or sale of natural gas subject to the jurisdiction of the Commission . . . shall be just and reasonable." 15 U.S.C. § 717c\(a\). PGT must:

File with the Commission . . . schedules showing all rates and charges for any transportation or sale subject to the jurisdiction of the Commission, and the classifications, practices, and regulations affecting such rates and charges together with all contracts which in any manner affect or relate to such rates, charges, classifications, and services.

15 U.S.C. § 717c\(c\). The 1984 DOE Guidelines restrict the scope of FERC review of imported gas arrangements:

In regulatory decisions on a gas supply authorized for importation, the Commission will adopt the terms and conditions attached by the ERA Administrator to the import authorization, thus acting consistently with the determinations [*39] made by the Administrator and the policy considerations reflected in the authorization.

The FERC can reclassify costs to the extent reclassification is consistent with ERA import authorizations. Transcanada Pipelines Ltd. v. F.E.R.C., 278 U.S. App. D.C. 299, 878 F.2d 401, 409 \(D.C.Cir. 1989\). For example, the FERC can exclude production and gathering costs for both domestic and Canadian natural gas, because the FERC has jurisdiction to ensure that Canadian suppliers are treated no differently than domestic suppliers. Natural Gas Pipeline Company of America, 39 FERC P 61,218 (Opinion No. 256-A May 27, 1987) (Defendants Supplemental Appendix, Tab 14); Transcanada Pipelines, 878 F.2d at 411 (upholding FERC actions taken "to avoid a regulatory distortion that would have resulted in Canadian gas enjoying a competitive disadvantage over domestic gas, in accordance with ERA's policy that domestic and imported gas should be treated the same"). The FERC has also determined whether costs of reforming, restructuring or terminating existing supply contracts between A&S and its suppliers, the costs of settling related claims by Canadian gas suppliers, and the costs of reforming or terminating the [*40] existing International Contract between A&S and PGT were recoverable costs. Pacific Gas Transmission Company, Order on Compliance with Restructuring Rule and Related Offer of Settlement, 64 FERC P 61,051 (July 12, 1993) (ruling such costs were recoverable in settlement). But the FERC was not delegated jurisdiction to "second guess" the ERA's reasonableness determination:

The authorization of a given volume of gas at up to a particular price is a decision by the ERA that the particular import is in the public interest, and that no market failure has been shown that has or would interfere with the pipeline's acting in its own interest to acquire gas on the most favorable terms. For FERC to take a second look at the arrangement between pipeline and exporter and decide whether the pipeline did in fact arrange reasonably prudent terms would be to say that the Commission may reevaluate either ERA's factual determinations or its policy. This, however, is what FERC is specifically prohibited from doing. See 1984 Guidelines, 49 Fed. Reg. at 6689.

Transcanada Pipelines, 878 F.2d at 407. HN14 [↑] "FERC has no authority over how foreign producers or pipeline suppliers bill [*41] their costs through to importers. FERC's first access for regulating imported gas rates is at the pipeline-to-customer stage." Transcanada Pipelines, 878 F.2d at 411. As the FERC noted in Pacific Gas Transmission Company, 64 FERC P 61,052, at 61,484:

The Commission has no jurisdiction to bar the passthrough of any portion of PGT's gas costs or to modify its gas import and purchase agreements. The Commission's authority in this regard is with respect to such matters as the classification of costs in the pipeline's rates and even then only if such classification is consistent with DOE/FE's import authorizations. The Commission's mandate under its authority delegated to it from DOE/FE is "to ensure that the costs of Canadian and domestic gas are treated the same so that there be no preference for either source of supply." Permitting PGT to resell Canadian gas at the Canadian border at market-based rates is consistent with that mandate in that pipeline wellhead or field resales of domestically-produced gas, is similarly regulated on a light-handed market based pricing basis.

(footnote omitted).

CPUC Rate Review

HN15 In California, utilities must seek [*42] permission from the CPUC to charge additional rates or change rates, and are subject to the CPUC's finding that such rates are "just and reasonable." Cal. Pub. Util. Code §§ 451, 454\(a\), 701. The CPUC conducts annual reasonableness reviews of PG&E's gas purchases to serve core procurement needs. Cal. Pub. Util. Code § 728 ("the commission shall determine and fix, by order, the just, reasonable, or sufficient rates."); see also Re New Regulatory Framework for Gas Utilities, 22 C.P.U.C. 2d 491, 530 (December 3, 1986) (Defendants Appendices, Tab 21). The CPUC's Division of Ratepayer Advocates ("DRA"), created pursuant to authority granted in the California Public Utilities Code section 309.5, participates in the reviews, representing ratepayer interests.

The CPUC has completed a reasonableness review for 1988-90. Pacific Gas and Electric Company, Decision 94-03-050 (March 16, 1994). According to defendants, corresponding reasonableness reviews for 1991, 1992 and 1993 are in progress. Defendants' Memorandum of Points and Authorities, at p.17:12-14. In the 1988-90 reasonableness review, the CPUC noted its jurisdiction to consider PG&E's conduct in negotiating contracts with Canadian [*43] suppliers:

To the extent PG&E's actions as a price negotiator may have increased the ultimate costs ultimately charged to PG&E's retail customers, we may properly scrutinize such actions and compare them against other strategies which PG&E might have pursued. The focus of our review is upon PG&E's actions.

The CPUC examined PG&E rates based on the alternatives available outside the A&S pool:

A key part of our price analysis is to define the market in which PG&E could have procured Canadian gas based on supply alternatives to the A&S pool. Given the range of prices within which gas was sold during the recent periods, we assess a bargaining range within which a fair price could be negotiated between PG&E and the Alberta producers. Accordingly, we compute an overall savings assuming PG&E had replaced a portion of its gas from the A&S pool with other Alberta gas.

The CPUC reviewed PG&E's negotiating conduct in thorough detail, ultimately issuing an over-200 page opinion, discussing its assessment of PG&E's use of the voter pool and failure to use one-on-one negotiation.

HN16 "The focus for determining whether the filed rate doctrine applies is the impact [*44] the court's decision will have on agency procedures and rate determinations." K.J. Inc., 954 F.2d at 489. Judicial review of activities beyond the scope of the agencies' jurisdiction do not violate the filed rate doctrine. Barnes, 759 F.2d at 679. The focus of plaintiffs' complaint is on the method of contract formation between A&S and the Canadian suppliers, and defendants' alleged failure to permit market entry by more competitive sources of natural gas supply. ERA/FE review does not examine A&S's contractual relationship with Canadian suppliers. ERA/FE opinions scrutinize PGT's contractual relationship with A&S, not A&S's relationship with the producers. According to the facts alleged in the complaint, however, the prices paid in Canada are passed through "penny for penny" to PG&E customers. Complaint, at P 45. According to that allegation, although the ERA/FE did review the conduct at issue in the complaint, the ERA/FE reviewed the price of gas paid by A&S as a component of the A&S-PGT international contract when the gas enters the U.S. Plaintiffs do not dispute that ERA review of import prices for natural gas is to ensure such prices are competitive with domestic market [*45] conditions over time. Plaintiffs' complaint alleges injury in the form of higher utility rates, passed on "penny for penny" to plaintiff ratepayers:

PG&E then sells the Canadian gas to its millions of customers, passing on to them the excessive amounts paid by A&S for the purchase of gas, as well as unreasonable gas expenses associated with the transmission of the gas which totals hundreds of millions of dollars over the class period.

Complaint, at P 25. To succeed in showing injury for an antitrust violation, plaintiffs cannot presume federal agencies would have approved lower rates:

The burden resting on plaintiff would not be satisfied by provision that some carrier would, but for the illegal conspiracy, have maintained a lower rate than that published. It would be necessary for the plaintiff to prove, also, that the hypothetical rate would have conformed to the requirements of the Act. . . . But by no conceivable proceeding could the question whether a hypothetical lower rate would under conceivable conditions have been discriminatory, be submitted to the Commission for determination. And that hypothetical question is one with which plaintiff would [*46] necessarily be confronted at trial.

Keogh, 260 U.S. at 163-64.

In Arkansas Louisiana Gas, 453 U.S. at 582-83, 101 S. Ct. at 2932, vacating the judgment of the Louisiana Supreme Court which awarded damages for breach of contract to a natural gas supplier, the Supreme Court emphasized:

In the case before us, the Louisiana Supreme Court's award of damages to respondents was necessarily supported by an assumption that the higher rate respondents might have filed with the [Federal Energy Regulatory] Commission was reasonable. Otherwise, there would have been no basis for that court's conclusion that the Commission would have approved the rate. But under the filed rate doctrine, the Commission alone is empowered to make that judgment, and until it has done so, no rate other than the one on file may be charged.

The Court rejected the argument that breach of contract damages could be premised on a rate differential:

HN17[] Under the filed rate doctrine, when there is a conflict between the filed rate and the contract rate, the filed rate controls. This rule is undeniably strict, and it obviously may work hardship in some cases, but it embodies the [*47] policy which has been adopted by Congress. Moreover, to permit parties to vary by private agreement the rates filed with the Commission would undercut the clear purpose of the congressional scheme: granting the Commission an opportunity in every case to judge the reasonableness of the rate.

Id. at 582, 101 S. Ct. at 2933. HN18[] The filed rate "cannot be varied or enlarged by either contract or tort" of the regulated entity. Square D, 476 U.S. at 416-17, 106 S. Ct. at 1922 (quoting Keogh, 260 U.S. at 163, 43 S. Ct. at 49); Milne Truck Lines, Inc. v. Makita U.S.A., Inc., 970 F.2d 564, 572 (9th Cir. 1992).

According to the complaint, the challenged purchases were made by A&S, PG&E's wholly-owned subsidiary, and the alleged unavailability of the PGT pipeline to carry lower cost gas was purportedly caused by PGT's excessive purchases of higher priced gas. A&S is not regulated by federal or state authorities. PGT is not regulated by the CPUC. Re Pacific Gas and Electric Co., 137 PUR 4th 346, 348-49 (Oct. 21, 1992); but see, Application of Pacific Gas and Electric Co., CPUC Decision 86-03-012 (March 5, 1986) (Defendants Supplemental Appendix, Tab 26) ("This commission [*48] regards the operation of PGT, a major interstate pipeline shortly to be 100% owned by PG&E, as coming within the purview of our reasonableness reviews; and PGT's transportation policy or lack thereof would naturally be a subject of any such review"). Nonetheless, the Supreme Court has acknowledged the weight of authority applies the filed rate doctrine to conduct engaged in by closely related entities. Nantahala Power and Light, 476 U.S. at 965, 106 S. Ct. at 2356 (citing cases) noting "these decisions are properly driven by the need to enforce the exclusive jurisdiction vested by Congress in FERC over the regulation of interstate wholesale utility rates"). As the courts noted in Taffet, 967 F.2d at 1494 and E.J. Inc., 954 F.2d at 494, HN19[] no meaningful distinction exists between conduct regulated by state--as distinguished from federal--entities; "the filed rate doctrine applies whether the rate in question is approved by a federal or state agency."

The FERC has expressly disclaimed any jurisdiction "to modify PGT's gas import and purchase agreements," but does ensure that costs are classified similarly for all sources of supply. As stated in Pacific Gas Transmission Company, I^{*49} 64 FERC P 61,052, at 61,484: "The Commission's mandate under its authority delegated to it from DOE/FE is 'to ensure that the costs of Canadian and domestic gas are treated the same so that there be no preference for either source of supply.'" The FERC ruled that PGT's costs of reforming, restructuring or terminating existing A&S supply contracts with Canadian producers, PGT's costs of settling related claims by Canadian gas suppliers, and the costs of reforming or terminating the existing International Contract between A&S and PGT are recoverable costs. Pacific Gas Transmission Company, Order on Compliance with Restructuring Rule and Related Offer of Settlement, 64 FERC P 61,051 (July 12, 1993). According to facts alleged in the complaint such costs paid for Canadian gas are necessary components of rates filed with the FERC.

Defendants point out the CPUC exercised its jurisdiction to examine PG&E's role in setting the terms of A&S contracts with Canadian suppliers. In conducting its reasonableness reviews, the CPUC examines the rates negotiated in Canada. See Pacific Gas and Electric, Decision 94-03-050 (March 22, 1994). Courts considering the issue have concluded that [*50] HN20[↑] the filed rate doctrine bars claims filed with state--as distinguished from federal-agencies. Taffet, 967 F.2d at 1494; E.J. Inc., 954 F.2d at 494. Arguably, the CPUC regulation displaces the court's jurisdiction under the filed rate doctrine. HN21[↑] The filed rate doctrine "contains one important caveat: The filed rate is not enforceable if the [regulating agency] finds the rate to be unreasonable." Maislin Industries v. Primary Steel, Inc., 497 U.S. 116, 110 S. Ct. 2759, 2767, 111 L. Ed. 2d 94 \(1990\); City of Groton v. Connecticut Light & Power Co., 662 F.2d 921, 930-31 \(2d Cir. 1981\). Here, the CPUC disapproved of some of PG&E's purchasing strategy. But this does not permit court adjudication of plaintiffs' claims, as the Supreme Court has noted that:

None of our cases involving a determination by the [regulating agency] that the carrier engaged in an unreasonable practice have required departure from the filed tariff schedule altogether; instead, they have required merely the application of a different filed tariff.

Maislin Industries, 497 U.S. at 130 n.11, 110 S. Ct. at 2767 n.11. The CPUC has completed its reasonableness review for 1988-90, and filed rates have [*51] been fixed to bar plaintiffs' claims for that time period. The class period extends from February, 1988, through October, 1993. The pendency of administrative proceedings bars court adjudication until that process is complete. Reiter v. Cooper, 507 U.S. 258, 113 S. Ct. 1213, 1220, 122 L. Ed. 2d 604 \(1993\).

The complaint, at P 78, seeks damages "arising from the difference between what PG&E paid the Alberta producers based on the anticompetitive system which was designed to keep the price artificially high and a substitute price that could have been obtained by PG&E if it had not fixed prices." Unlike the theory presented in Lower Lake Erie, 998 F.2d at 1160, plaintiffs do not allege that, absent anti-competitive conduct, ratepayers would have access to alternative sources of fuel and "no longer be captive customers of" PG&E. See also, Barnes, 759 F.2d at 679. Nor do plaintiffs allege injury based on an inability to compete as a non-core customer. Lower Lake Erie, 998 F.2d at 1161 ("competitors are not the intended beneficiaries of public utility regulation"); Pinney Dock and Transport Co. v. Penn Central Corp., 838 F.2d 1445 (6th Cir.), cert. denied, 488 U.S. 880, 102 L. Ed. 2d 166, 109 S. Ct. 196 (1988); see generally [*52] Martin V. Kirkwood, Distributor Bypass in the Deregulated Gas Industry, 39 Cath. U.L. Rev. 1157 \(1990\) (noting non-core industrial customer's ability to compete with traditional natural gas distributing companies). At oral argument, plaintiffs referred to an injury suffered by non-core customers, forced by PG&E's conduct to take the core election. But the present complaint does not specify relief is sought for non-core customers. See Complaint P 16 (defining class members as "purchasers"). The complaint seeks recovery only for "excess prices paid to the cartel members [which] were passed on to the class members and consumers." As in Keogh, no antitrust injury beyond the filed rate has been alleged.

Plaintiffs argue the filed rate doctrine does not bar their claims, because the relevant federal and state entities do not adjudicate antitrust concerns, nor do they have the ability to award treble damages. Such concerns are not relevant to whether the filed rate doctrine applies. Montana-Dakota Utilities Co. v. Northwestern Public Service Co., 341 U.S. 246, 71 S. Ct. 692, 95 L. Ed. 912 \(1951\); Arkansas Louisiana Gas, 453 U.S. at 582, 101 S. Ct. at 2933. HN22[↑] "The filed rate doctrine [*53] recognizes that where a legislature has established a scheme for utility rate-making, the rights of the rate-payer in regard to the rate [paid] are defined by that schedule." Taffet, 967 F.2d at 1490. Plaintiffs have identified no legal right to pay any other rate than that established by the ERA/FE, the FERC, and CPUC. Plaintiffs have not alleged legally cognizable injury.

Defendants' motion to dismiss plaintiffs' antitrust treble damage claim is GRANTED. Plaintiffs have sought leave to amend if the motion is granted. They shall have ten (10) days to amend. This determination does not address plaintiffs' claim for injunctive relief, which was not a subject of defendants' motion. See also Georgia v. Pennsylvania Railroad Co., 324 U.S. 439, 65 S. Ct. 716, 89 L. Ed. 1051 \(1945\).

Filed Rate Doctrine: State Law Claims

In Nantahala, the Supreme Court held that HN23[[↑]] the filed rate doctrine applies not only to federal court review, but as a matter of federal supremacy to state law causes of action that conflict with or interfere with federal authority over the same activity. Id., 476 U.S. at 964, 106 S. Ct. at 2355-56; see also Chicago and Northwestern Transportation Co. v. Kalo [*54] Brick & Tile Co., 450 U.S. 311, 101 S. Ct. 1124, 67 L. Ed. 2d 258 (1981) (state law cause of action barred by Supremacy Clause, due to conflict with federal regulation by Interstate Commerce Commission); Arkansas Louisiana Gas, 453 U.S. at 582, 101 S. Ct. at 2933 (same, for FERC-filed rates for the sale of natural gas).

Plaintiffs cite Cellular Plus v. Superior Court, 14 Cal. App. 4th 1224, 1243, 18 Cal. Rptr. 2d 308, 319 (1993), which held:

We decline to follow the Keogh and Square D decisions insofar as they would preclude Cellular Plus from bringing a cause of action for price-fixing under the Cartwright Act. We conclude the strong public policy of the Cartwright Act encouraging free and open competition and competitively established prices applies even to companies regulated by the PUC. If we were to deny Cellular Plus a cause of action merely because the PUC had approved the prices as "reasonable" while ignorant of the alleged price fixing agreement, we would be implicitly encouraging regulated companies to engage in anticompetitive price fixing activities by reason of denying plaintiffs the major private enforcement threat of treble damages under the Cartwright Act.

[*55]

Cellular Plus distinguished Keogh and Square D on the grounds that the action was not a challenge to the filed rates:

Cellular Plus includes not only individual customers, but also corporate sales agents who do not claim they paid higher prices but only that they lost sales as a result of the alleged price fixing conspiracy.

Cellular Plus, 14 Cal. App. 4th at 1242, 18 Cal. Rptr. 2d at 318. This aspect of Cellular Plus is consistent with federal authority. See Lower Lake Erie, 998 F.2d at 1161; Pinney Dock and Transport Co. v. Penn Central Corp., 838 F.2d 1445 (6th Cir. 1988) (filed rate doctrine does not bar competitor's claims). The Cellular Plus decision by an intermediate state appellate court declined to apply the filed rate doctrine to a Cartwright Act price fixing conspiracy in the cellular phone industry, primarily for the reasons that the reach of the Cartwright Act "is broader in range and deeper than the Sherman Act . . . (" Cianci v. Superior Court (1985) 40 Cal. 3d 903, 920, 221 Cal. Rptr. 575, 710 P.2d 375). It distinguished Keogh's policy of uniform rates under the ICC, which did not apply in the cellular phone industry, [*56] because the PUC had expressed a policy of relying "on competitive forces to set prices for cellular phone service."

The present case is distinguishable on its facts. Plaintiffs are not competitors as was the claimant in Cellular Plus. Although the natural gas industry is in a period of deregulation, federal authorities have not relied on competitive forces alone to set reasonable rates. Moreover, Cellular Plus did not reach the issue presented here: whether the filed rate doctrine can bar plaintiffs' state law claims where the rates have been filed with federal regulatory authorities.

Plaintiffs argue that Cellular Plus is consistent with a long line of California authority which rejects the filed rate doctrine as to all state law claims, citing California Adjustment Co. v. Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railway Co., 179 Cal. 140, 149, 175 P. 682 \(1918\). But California Adjustment rejected the filed rate doctrine on the grounds that the commission's rates contravened its constitutional authority to fix rates, a holding consistent with federal law. Cf. Security Services, Inc. v. Kmart Corp., 511 U.S. 431, 114 S. Ct. 1702, 128 L. Ed. 2d 433 \(1994\) (filed rate doctrine does not apply to filed, but void, [*57] rates).

Plaintiff also cites Empire West v. Southern California Gas Co., 12 Cal. 3d 805, 810, 117 Cal. Rptr. 423, 528 P.2d 31 \(1974\), for the position that "a carrier will be held accountable for misrepresentations regarding a fact not contained in the published tariff, and thus not subject to verification by the shipper." But Empire West is not a filed rate case. There, Southern California Gas Company was alleged to have volunteered to prepare an analysis of the cost of a central heating and cooling system, to be used by plaintiff in constructing an apartment complex. When the actual operating cost greatly exceed SoCal's estimate, plaintiff sued for violation of California Public Utilities Code § 532, which prevented public utilities from charging rates other than those specified in schedules on file. The Supreme Court of California distinguished filed rate cases:

The instant case does not involve a dispute over the rate which plaintiff must pay defendant for gas service. Plaintiff has not asserted that defendant misrepresented the legal rate set forth in the published tariff, nor does plaintiff seek a reduced rate, rebate or refund. Instead, plaintiff contends that defendant misrepresented the [*58] quantity of gas which the proposed building project would consume, resulting in a substantial understatement of plaintiff's total cost for gas service. Plaintiff seeks to recover the actual damages incurred by reason of defendant's fraud.

Empire West, 12 Cal. 3d at 810 (emphasis added). Unlike Empire West, here, plaintiffs challenge over-charges which were produced by rates filed with federal and state authorities, not a fraudulent over-charge for the quantity of gas consumed. The industry and regulatory framework governing the importation of Canadian natural gas to Canada to California presents a different case for analysis under state antitrust law.

Defendants' motion to dismiss plaintiffs' state law antitrust claims is GRANTED, with ten (10) days to amend.

State Action

Judicial Estoppel

Plaintiffs argue that defendants are judicially estopped to claim that the CPUC actually has the authority to review defendants' gas procurement practices, because defendants argued forcefully in the CPUC proceedings that the CPUC had no jurisdiction to do so. The CPUC, although "not a judicial tribunal in the strict sense," conducts quasi-judicial proceedings [*59] which resemble court proceedings. Consumers Lobby Against Monopolies v. Public Utilities Commission, 25 Cal. 3d 891, 906-08, 160 Cal. Rptr. 124, 133-34, 603 P.2d 41 \(1979\). Because of this resemblance, plaintiffs contend any argument to the contrary presented by defendants should be barred by estoppel.

HN24[] Judicial estoppel is intended to protect the integrity of the judicial process and prevent unfairness to an opponent. Yanez v. United States, 989 F.2d 323, 326 \(9th Cir. 1993\). In Britton v. Co-Op Banking Group, 4 F.3d 742, 744 \(9th Cir. 1993\), the Ninth Circuit explained:

HN25[] Under the majority view, judicial estoppel does not apply unless the assertion inconsistent with the claim made in the subsequent litigation was adopted in some manner by the court in the prior litigation. Under the minority view, judicial estoppel can apply even when a party was unsuccessful in asserting its position in the prior judicial proceeding, if the court determines that the allegedly offending party engaged in "fast and loose" behavior which undermined the integrity of the court.

Although the Ninth Circuit has adopted the doctrine of judicial estoppel generally, it has declined to choose [*60] between the majority and minority views. Id. HN26[↑] The doctrine is invoked by a court at its discretion. Yanez, 989 F.2d at 326, quoting Morris v. California, 966 F.2d 448, 453 \(9th Cir. 1991\), cert. denied, 506 U.S. 831, 113 S. Ct. 96, 121 L. Ed. 2d 57 (1992).

Under the majority view, plaintiffs' argument fails because the CPUC rejected defendants' position. Under the minority view, a litigant plays "fast and loose" by asserting one position and then contradicting it in another proceeding. Britton, 4 F.3d at 744. "This characterization is reserved for more egregious conduct than just 'threshold' inconsistency," and requires a showing of prejudice. Id., Arizona v. Shamrock Foods, 729 F.2d 1208, 1215 (9th Cir.), cert. denied, 469 U.S. 1197, 83 L. Ed. 2d 982, 105 S. Ct. 980 (1984). Plaintiffs have shown no prejudice.

HN27[↑] Judicial estoppel should not be invoked to freeze an opponent into a position on a pure issue of law. See Shamrock Foods, 729 F.2d at 1215 (party may assert different position after change in law). Defendants have taken facially inconsistent positions on an issue of law but have consistently maintained a position that, as entities subject to pervasive regulation, they are insulated from further scrutiny for [*61] the challenged conduct under the filed rate and state action immunity doctrines. This legal position is a "threshold" inconsistency, for which invocation of judicial estoppel is unjustified. Britton, 4 F.3d at 744. It is neither unfair nor prejudicial to plaintiffs that defendants, once found subject to the CPUC jurisdiction, claim the benefit of that finding.

State Action Immunity

Defendants argue the state action defense bars plaintiffs' antitrust claims, citing the CPUC's broad oversight of PG&E's activities. HN28[↑] Federal antitrust laws are subject to supersession by state regulatory programs. Parker v. Brown, 317 U.S. 341, 63 S. Ct. 307, 87 L. Ed. 315 \(1943\) ("Nothing in the language of the Sherman Act or its history . . . suggests its purpose was to restrain a state or its officer and agents from activities directed by its legislature"). The rule is grounded in principles of federalism and state sovereignty. Federal Trade Commission v. Ticor Title Insurance, 504 U.S. 621, 112 S. Ct. 2169, 2176, 119 L. Ed. 2d 410 \(1992\). Nevertheless, federalism does not justify a broad interpretation of state sovereignty. Id., 112 S. Ct. at 2178. HN29[↑] State action immunity is narrowly construed. Id.

HN30[↑] Private [*62] entities may claim state action immunity. Patrick v. Burget, 486 U.S. 94, 100 L. Ed. 2d 83, 108 S. Ct. 1658 \(1988\). When applying the state action doctrine, courts and commentators have not distinguished between antitrust actions based on the Sherman Act and those based on other antitrust statutes. Yeager's Fuel v. Pennsylvania Power & Light, 22 F.3d 1260, 1265 n.7 \(3rd Cir. 1994\). HN31[↑] State action immunity is an affirmative defense. Id. at 1266, citing Ticor Title, 112 S. Ct. at 2172.

In California Retail Liquor Dealers Ass'n v. Midcal Alum., Inc., 445 U.S. 97, 105, 100 S. Ct. 937, 943, 63 L. Ed. 2d 233 \(1980\), the Supreme Court set forth HN32[↑] the test for determining whether a state anticompetitive mechanism operates because of a deliberate and intended state policy, such that the federal antitrust laws are superseded. First, "the challenged restraint must be clearly articulated and affirmatively expressed as state policy." Midcal, 445 U.S. at 105. Second, "the policy must be actively supervised by the State itself." Id.

Clearly Articulated State Policy

In the Ninth Circuit, the "clearly articulated" requirement is met where: 1) the State legislature authorizes the challenged action; and, if so, 2) the legislature [*63] articulates an intent to displace competition with regulation. Traweek v. City and County of San Francisco, 920 F.2d 589, 591-92 \(9th Cir. 1990\). A delegating statute need not explicitly permit the displacement of competition, so long as "suppression of competition is the 'foreseeable result' of what the statute authorizes." City of Columbia v. Omni Outdoor Advertising, 499 U.S. 365, 111 S. Ct. 1344, 113 L. Ed. 2d 382 \(1991\). The state authorization under which the defendant has acted must clearly contemplate that the defendant may engage in the anticompetitive conduct alleged. Traweek, 920 F.2d at 592. HN33 In order for the state action doctrine to bar claims, "the courts must assure themselves that the subordinate acts in accord with the state's wishes when it contravenes federal antitrust laws." Lancaster Community Hospital v. Antelope Valley Hospital District, 940 F.2d 397, 400 \(9th Cir. 1991\), cert. denied, 502 U.S. 1094, 112 S. Ct. 1168, 117 L. Ed. 2d 414 (1992). At the same time, HN34 misuse of clearly granted regulatory power does not cause state action immunity to lapse, so long as the conduct was objectively foreseeable in the state scheme. Id. at 402 & n.10. A defendants' alleged malice or bad faith is not relevant [*64] to the state action inquiry. Traweek, 920 F.2d at 592.

The availability of [state action] immunity does not depend on the subjective motivations of the individual actors, but rather on the satisfaction of the objective standards set forth in Parker and the authorities which interpreted it.

Llewellyn v. Crothers, 765 F.2d 769, 774 \(9th Cir. 1985\).

HN35 Parker immunity is only available when the challenged activity is undertaken pursuant to the policy of the State itself as sovereign, through a state statute or opinion of a state supreme court. Southern Motor Carriers Rate Conference v. United States, 471 U.S. 48, 63, 105 S. Ct. 1721, 1730, 85 L. Ed. 2d 36 \(1985\). HN36 "[A] private party acting pursuant to an anticompetitive regulatory program need not point to specific, detailed legislative authorization for its challenged conduct." ⁶ Id. at 64, 105 S. Ct. 1730-31. If the legislature delegates supervision to a regulatory agency, state action immunity is available if: 1) The state as sovereign has delegated authority to the agency to regulate the challenged conduct, and 2) the agency articulates a policy, consistent with its delegated authority, to displace price [*65] competition with a regulatory structure. Id. at 65, 105 S. Ct. at 1731. For example, in Southern Motor Carriers, the Court found that a state commission, which had authority to proscribe "just and reasonable" rates, satisfied the clear articulation prong where the PUC actively encouraged the challenged conduct, there, collective ratemaking. Id. at 64, 105 S. Ct. at 1730.

Where a state's intention is solely to foster competition, rather [*66] that displace it, the "clear articulation" requirement is not met. McCaw Personal Communications, Inc. v. Pacific Telesis Group, 645 F. Supp. 1166, 1172 \(N.D.Cal. 1986\). But state support of some level of competition does not render state action immunity unavailable under all circumstances:

So long as the state as sovereign has exercised the power to regulate, has established the method by which it will execute its policy to regulate, and retains the power to alter that method, it does not forfeit that power by introducing competition into the regulation.

Metro Mobile CTS, Inc. v. Newvector Communications, Inc., 661 F. Supp. 1504, 1516 \(D.Ariz. 1987\), aff'd on other grounds, 892 F.2d 62 \(9th Cir. 1989\). The Ninth Circuit has recognized the continued viability of state action immunity where competition is introduced into state policy:

⁶ Southern Motor Carriers stated:

If more detail than a clear intent to displace competition were required of the legislature, States would find it difficult to implement through regulatory agencies their anticompetitive policies. Agencies are created because they are able to deal with problems unforeseeable to, or outside the competence of, the legislature. Requiring express authorization for every action that an agency might find necessary to effectuate state policy would diminish, if not destroy, its usefulness.

Id. at 64, 105 S. Ct. at 1730-31.

When there are abundant indications that a state's policy is to support competition, a subordinate entity must do more than merely produce an authorization to "do business" to show that the state's policy is to displace competition.

Lancaster Community Hospital, 940 F.2d at 403. However, "it should [*67] not ordinarily take a great many such specific authorizations to show that the state's policy is to displace competition with regulation." Id. at 404 n.13.

Courts have interpreted Southern Motor Carriers as permitting "clear articulation" to exist in after-the-fact agency reasonableness reviews. In Metro Mobile, 661 F. Supp. 1504, the court stated:

The factual circumstances of this case are different from those in most state action immunity cases. The [regulatory agency] did not mandate the anticompetitive conduct. Nor did it permit it in the sense that the regulations at issue in Southern Motor Carriers expressly permitted collective ratemaking. Neither the Arizona legislature nor the [regulatory agency] made an express determination that an anticompetitive price squeeze would further the economic policy of the state. At issue in this case is not the overarching regulation of wholesale service, but a detail in the implementation of the regulatory scheme. As the Supreme Court held in Southern Motor Carriers, the state as sovereign may leave the details of regulation to an administrative agency. *The distinction between an agency establishing an encompassing [68] policy of price fixing, as in Southern Motor Carriers, and an agency expressly determining that a specific tariff is just and reasonable even in light of complaints that the tariff will lead to an anticompetitive price squeeze, is a distinction without substance for purposes of state action immunity.

Metro Mobile accepted, without discussion, that conduct could be both "reasonably foreseeable" to the state, and yet not considered until an after-the-fact reasonableness review. Metro Mobile, 661 F. Supp. at 1515-16, further held, HN37[] "As long as an agency is under the mandate of a sovereign state to establish just and reasonable rates, and retains discretion as to how those rates will be determined, the method by which it establishes those rates is, and remains, regulation, even if one of the factors used in determining the just and reasonable rates is the effect of competition." Metro Mobile noted the regulating agency had "considered and rejected the very price squeeze issue alleged in this antitrust action," and the agency approved defendant's conduct despite plaintiff's antitrust concerns. Id. at 1512.

Defendants also cite *Lease Lights, Inc. v. Public 69 Service Co. of Oklahoma, 849 F.2d 1330, 1333-34 (10th Cir. 1988), cert. denied, 488 U.S. 1019, 102 L. Ed. 2d 807, 109 S. Ct. 817 (1989), in which the Tenth Circuit found the "clear articulation" requirement satisfied by a state statute, which delegated authority to a regulatory agency to determine just and reasonable rates, coupled with periodic agency rate investigations. Plaintiffs argued that defendant charged a low rate for outdoor lighting, monopolizing the market. The Lease Lights court noted that plaintiffs' injury had been caused by the agency's determination in 1975 that defendant charged less for certain services, "an independent decision of the Commission that [defendant] could not disobey." Id. at 1334. Unlike Metro Mobile, the Commission's determination pre-dated the defendant's conduct.⁷

⁷ Defendants also cite DFW Metro Line v. Southwestern Bell, 988 F.2d 601 (5th Cir. 1993), cert. denied, 510 U.S. 864, 114 S. Ct. 183, 126 L. Ed. 2d 142 (1993), for the proposition that a legislative delegation to fix just and reasonable rates is sufficient to meet the clear articulation prong. But the state delegating statute at issue in DFW Metro expressly stated:

[*70] Plaintiffs argue that the CPUC's current policy of encouraging competition indicates no intent to displace competition with regulation:

All economic regulation does not necessarily suppress competition. On the contrary, public utility regulation typically assumes that the private firm is a natural monopoly and that public controls are necessary to protect the consumer from exploitation. There is no logical inconsistency between requiring such a firm to meet regulatory criteria insofar as it is exercising its natural monopoly powers and also comply with antitrust standards to the extent that it engages in competitive areas of the economy.

Cantor v. Detroit Edison Co., 428 U.S. 579, 596, 96 S. Ct. 3110, 3120, 49 L. Ed. 2d 1141 (1976). However, Cantor speaks to "competitive areas of the economy," which are outside the ambit of PUC regulation. In Re Pacific Gas and Electric Co., 32 CPUC 100 (May 26, 1989), the CPUC noted it had developed a procedure for annual cost allocations during its effort "to reconsider our regulation of the gas utilities in order to make them competitive and to promote efficient market transactions." See also Re Refinements to the Regulatory [*71] Framework for Gas Utilities, 37 CPUC 2d 87, 102 (July 18, 1990) ("We believe the best interests of consumers are served by competitive gas markets rather than markets in which a single utility and its affiliates dominate buying and selling."). Plaintiffs argue the challenged conduct occurred at the wellhead, an area in which the CPUC intends to foster, not displace competition. As stated in Re Transportation of Customer-owned Gas, 20 CPUC 2d 628, 631 (March 19, 1986) (Plaintiffs' Appendix, Tab 29):

The deregulation of gas at the wellhead has changed fundamentally the nature of buying and selling natural gas. What was once a highly regulated procedure is emerging as a viably competitive network. With gas becoming a competitive enterprise, the portion of the gas industry which remains a natural monopoly is transportation, where the word "transportation" refers generally to the movement of gas through transmission and distribution pipelines. In this changed world, it now makes sense to restructure our regulation with a new emphasis on transportation as a foundation, as perhaps the essential business, of the gas companies we regulate.

See also Re Pacific Gas [*72] and Electric Co., 137 PUR 4th 346 (Oct. 21, 1992) ("We are not attempting to regulate the importation of natural gas. . . . The sole area of our inquiry is the retail sales of PG&E").

HN38 [↑] Introduction of competition into a regulatory structure does not preclude application of state action immunity. Metro Mobile, 661 F. Supp. at 1515-16. Because the CPUC has supported competition in the buying and selling of natural gas at the wellhead and placed its regulatory emphasis on transportation of natural gas, PG&E "must do more than merely produce an authorization to 'do business' to show that the state's policy is to displace competition." Lancaster Community Hospital, 940 F.2d at 403.

Defendants contend the clear articulation requirement is met through the legislature's comprehensive grant of power to the CPUC to independently fix rates under the "just and reasonable" standard, and the CPUC's assertion of jurisdiction over PG&E's gas acquisition practices and costs. California Public Utilities Code § 728 states:

Whenever the commission, after a hearing, finds that the rates or classifications, demanded, observed, charged, or collected by any public utility for [*73] or in connection with any service, product, or commodity, or the rules, practices or contracts affecting such rates or classifications are insufficient, unlawful, unjust, unreasonable, discriminatory or preferential, the commission shall determine and fix, by order, the just,

The legislature finds that public utilities are by definition monopolies in the area they serve; that therefore normal forces of competition which operate to regulate prices in the free enterprise society do not operate; and therefore utility rates, operations, and services are regulated by public agencies with the objective that such regulation shall operate as a substitute for competition.

reasonable or sufficient rates, classifications, rules, practices or contracts to be thereafter observed and in force.

See also Cal. Pub. U. Code §§ 311, 451, 701, 729. All rate changes and new rates must be approved by the CPUC, which must find the rate justified before PG&E is authorized to recover the amount from ratepayers. Cal. Pub. U. Code § 454\(a\). Under Public Utilities Code § 785.5:

HN39[] (a) The commission shall require every gas corporation to adopt and pursue purchasing and procurement practices which assure its customers the lowest rates consistent with security of supply and with Section 785 [encouraging production of gas in California].

(b) Pursuant to subdivision (a), the commission may establish and periodically revise for each gas corporation guidelines for priorities among suppliers and sources of supply of gas to gas corporations, taking into considerations [*74] the requirements of Section 785. The establishment of these guidelines does not relieve a gas corporation of any requirement to make reasonable and prudent purchases of gas or diminish the authority of the commission to review the reasonableness of any purchase or procurement decision of the corporation.

Section 785.5 (emphasis added). HN40[] The CPUC's authority has been liberally construed. Consumers Lobby Against Monopolies v. Public Utilities Commission, 25 Cal. 3d 891, 905, 160 Cal. Rptr. 124, 132, 603 P.2d 41 (1979). In 1986, the CPUC revised its gas procurement requirements to permit greater competition at the wellhead, but, because market response to this order was speculative, the CPUC retained authority to regulate the terms of procurement through annual reasonableness reviews. Re New Regulatory Framework for Gas Utilities, 22 CPUC 2d 491, 530-31 (Dec. 3, 1986). Additionally, the CPUC requires PG&E to procure for their core procurement customers a supply portfolio which reasonably results in certainty of supply availability to serve core peak requirements, price security greater than can be achieved by relying totally on spot or other market sensitive supply sources, [*75] and which attains these objectives at the lowest possible cost.

Re New Regulatory Framework for Gas Utilities, 79 PUR 4th 1, 22 CPUC 2d 491, 530-31 (Dec. 3, 1986). In the March 22, 1994 decision on the 1988-90 reasonableness review, the CPUC acknowledged that its grant of authority to PG&E was not defined, but subject to after-the-fact oversight:

While various CPUC decisions and rulemaking provided broad guidelines and goals regarding PG&E's operations under new restructuring rules, no official CPUC pronouncement dictated the specific manner in which PG&E was to manage its procurement of natural gas.

Decision, at 247.

HN41[] The California legislature delegated the details of regulatory oversight to the CPUC. See Cal. Pub. Util. Code § 785.5 (CPUC has authority to require gas utilities "to adopt and pursue purchasing and procurement practices"). Under Southern Motor Carriers, agency delegation does not preclude application of state action immunity. The CPUC, in turn, authorized PG&E to undertake procurement for its core customers, subject to CPUC oversight. Re New Regulatory Framework, 22 CPUC 2d at 527 ("Until such time in the evolution of [*76] the gas industry that core customers, or some other agent acting on their behalf, can reasonably provide for their own procurement needs . . . , the local distribution utility subject to our oversight must assume this role."). This authorization contemplates that PG&E will develop a procurement policy, consistent with the CPUC's goals and in anticipation of reasonableness review. Cf. Nugget Hydroelectric v. Pacific Gas and Electric, 981 F.2d 429 (9th Cir.), cert. denied, 508 U.S. 908, 113 S. Ct. 2336, 124 L. Ed. 2d 247 (1992).

The CPUC guidelines cited by defendants do not require, or even discuss, voter pools, uniform rate-setting, or a method of computing wellhead prices. See Re New Regulatory Framework, 22 CPUC 2d at 527. However, as part of CPUC oversight of purchasing and procurement practices, these matters are considered in after-the-fact review. Such oversight has been considered regulation. Metro Mobile, 661 F. Supp. at 1516.

Southern Motor Carriers provides, "As long as the State as sovereign clearly intends to displace competition in a particular field with a regulatory structure, the first prong of the Midcal test is satisfied." Id., 471 U.S. at 64, 105 S. Ct. at 1730. Defendant [*77] PG&E has shown more than "an authorization to 'do business' to show that the state's policy is to displace competition." Lancaster Community Hospital, 940 F.2d at 403. The CPUC has promulgated guidelines that require consideration of more than free-market principles, and subject PG&E's natural gas purchase and sale decisions to detailed oversight through rate reasonableness reviews. In the final analysis, PG&E's 1988-90 natural gas rates were not set by market forces, but rather by the CPUC under a statutory regulatory scheme intended in large part to displace competition. By setting reasonable rates for collection, the CPUC has displaced competition with regulation. The first MidCal prong is met.

Active Supervision

HN42 To satisfy the "active supervision" requirement, "state officials [must] have and exercise power to review particular anticompetitive acts of private parties and disapprove those that fail to accord with state policy." Patrick v. Burget, 486 U.S. 94, 101, 108 S. Ct. 1658, 1663, 100 L. Ed. 2d 83 \(1988\). The purpose of this requirement is to determine whether the State has exercised sufficient independent judgment and control so that the details of rates or prices [*78] have been established as a product of deliberate state intervention, not simply by the agreement of private parties. Much as in causation inquiries, the analysis asks whether the State has played a substantial role in determining the specifics of the economic policy.

Ticor Title, 112 S. Ct. at 2177.

The CPUC requires PG&E to participate in annual reasonableness reviews of its gas purchases to serve core procurement needs. Re New Regulatory Framework for Gas Utilities, 22 CPUC 2d 491, 520 (Dec. 3, 1986) (Defendants' Appendix, Tab. 21); see generally Application of Pacific Gas and Electric Co., Application No. 91-04-003 (Mar. 22, 1994). Defendants argue the CPUC's reasonableness reviews meet the second MidCal prong.

Plaintiffs argue that the CPUC does not review the specific conduct at issue here, but only evaluates the rates charged to consumers. See Ticor Title, 112 S. Ct. at 2176 (State may displace competition if "displacement is both intended by the State and implemented in its specific details.") (emphasis added). But as to PG&E, the review undertaken by the CPUC is searching and thorough. See generally Application of Pacific Gas and Electric [*79] Co., Application No. 91-04-003 (Mar. 22, 1994). This includes CPUC application of criteria to consider competitive concerns in PG&E's upstream conduct. Although the CPUC does not affirmatively dictate the method by which PG&E operates, the Supreme Court has made clear that state action need not be compulsory to invoke the state action doctrine, so long as active state review is present. Southern Motor Carriers, 471 U.S. at 66, 105 S. Ct. at 1731, Ticor Title, 112 S. Ct. at 2179-80.

As plaintiffs point out, however, the same cannot be said of defendant, PGT, which is not directly regulated by the CPUC. See Re Pacific Gas and Electric Co., 137 PUR 4th 346, 348-49 (Oct. 21, 1992). As stated in Decision 94-03-050, at 18 (March 22, 1994):

The focus of our review is upon PG&E's actions. To the extent we make reference to the actions of its affiliates, PGT or A&S, it is only to provide a context in which to review PG&E's actions and how it could have influenced outcomes differently.

The CPUC cannot "actively supervise" an entity outside its jurisdiction.

The statutory authority provided by defendants, in addition to the CPUC's own oversight and analysis [*80] of the issue are sufficient to support the conclusion, in the absence of a contrary ruling from the California Supreme Court, that the CPUC has jurisdiction to review PG&E's conduct. See Cal. Pub. U. Code §§ 311, 451, 454(a), 701, 785.5, 728, 729; Re Pacific Gas and Electric Co., 137 PUR 4th 346 (Oct. 21, 1992). The active supervision prong has been met with respect to defendant PG&E, only.

The state action bar against plaintiffs' claims is limited. It is inapplicable to claims against PGT. Moreover, the CPUC's subject matter jurisdiction to regulate the disputed conduct has been challenged by PG&E and is currently under review by the California Supreme Court. See generally Columbia, 111 S. Ct. at 1349-51 (although errors in agency decision need not be examined in Parker analysis, complete lack of subject matter jurisdiction is relevant). Defendants motion to dismiss the federal antitrust claims, based on state action immunity, is GRANTED as to defendant PG&E, with ten (10) days leave to amend, and DENIED as to defendant PGT.

Illinois Brick

Defendants argue that plaintiffs are indirect purchasers from antitrust violators, and therefore barred from suit [*81] by Illinois Brick Co. v. Illinois, 431 U.S. 720, 97 S. Ct. 2061, 52 L. Ed. 2d 707 \(1977\). For example, in Kansas v. Utilicorp United Inc., 497 U.S. 199, 110 S. Ct. 2807, 111 L. Ed. 2d 169 \(1990\), the Supreme Court held that, HN43[] where suppliers violate antitrust laws by overcharging a public utility, and the utility passes on the overcharges to the customer, only the utility has a cause of action under § 4 of the Clayton Act, because it alone has suffered an antitrust injury.

Like the State of Illinois in Illinois Brick, the consumers in this case have the status of indirect purchasers. In the distribution chain, they are not the immediate buyers from the alleged antitrust violators. They bought their gas from the utilities, not from the suppliers said to have conspired to fix the price of gas.

Utilicorp, 497 U.S. at 206. The rationale for the indirect purchaser bar is that allowing suits by parties all along the distribution chain could impose duplicative liability on the antitrust violator, particularly since it is difficult to apportion damages between successive distribution levels. Illinois v. Panhandle Eastern Pipe Company, 935 F.2d 1469 \(7th Cir. 1991\).

Unlike Utilicorp, [*82] plaintiffs allege that PG&E was a primary antitrust violator. The complaint states, at P 40:

The price of natural gas from Alberta to California was set by PG&E and the cartel at the highest marketing clearing price at which the natural gas could be resold at the California border and within California. Indeed, PG&E would tell the cartel what price it should set, so that the Alberta natural gas would be sold to PG&E out of the pipeline at a price which mirrored the higher price to PG&E of natural gas within the United States and which had pipeline access to California.

Plaintiffs, in their own and representative capacities, are direct purchasers from PG&E. Complaint, at P 17. Illinois Brick does not apply. Defendants motion to dismiss plaintiffs' claims under Illinois Brick is DENIED.

Failure to State a Claim

Legal Standard

HN44[] A motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim under F.R.C.P. 12\(b\)\(6\) "is viewed with disfavor and is rarely granted." Hall v. City of Santa Barbara, 833 F.2d 1270, 1274 \(9th Cir. 1986\), cert. denied, 485 U.S. 940, 99 L. Ed. 2d 281, 108 S. Ct. 1120 (1988) (quoting 5 C. Wright & A. Miller, Federal Practice & Procedure, Civil § 1357, [*83] at 598 (1969)). HN45[] "[A] complaint should not be dismissed for failure to state a claim unless it appears beyond a doubt that the Plaintiff can prove no set of facts in support of his claim which would entitle him to relief." Conley v. Gibson, 355 U.S. 41, 45-46, 2 L. Ed. 2d 80, 78 S. Ct. 99, (1957).

HN46[] In deciding a motion to dismiss, the court "must accept as true all material allegations in the complaint and construe them in the light most favorable to" the plaintiff. NL Industries, Inc. v. Kaplan, 792 F.2d 896, 898 \(9th Cir. 1986\). Yet, the court need not accept as true allegations that contradict facts which may be judicially noticed. Mullis v. United States Bankruptcy Ct., 828 F.2d 1385, 1388 \(9th Cir. 1987\), cert. denied, 486 U.S. 1040, 100 L. Ed.

2d 616, 108 S. Ct. 2031 (1988). For example, the court may consider matters of public record including pleadings, orders, and other papers filed with the court or records of administrative bodies. Mack v. South Bay Beer Distributors, Inc., 798 F.2d 1279, 1282 (9th Cir. 1986). The court need not accept conclusory allegations, nor unreasonable inferences or unwarranted deductions of fact. Western Mining Council v. Watt, 643 F.2d 618, 624 (9th Cir. 1981), cert. denied, 454 U.S. 1031, 70 L. Ed. 2d 474, 102 S. Ct. 567 (1981). The court may disregard allegations in the complaint if contradicted by facts established by exhibits attached to the complaint. Durning v. First Boston Corp., 815 F.2d 1265, 1267 (9th Cir. 1987). The Supreme Court has stated that HN47 "summary procedures should be used sparingly in complex antitrust litigation where motive and intent play leading roles," in part because proof of these elements is in the hands of the opponent. Poller v. Columbia Broadcasting Sys., 368 U.S. 464, 473, 7 L. Ed. 2d 458, 82 S. Ct. 486 (1962).

Section 1 of the Sherman Act/Cartwright Act

Section 1 of HN48 the Sherman Act provides that "every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations is declared to be illegal." 15 U.S.C. § 1. This language cannot be read strictly, or else a vast array of competitive activities could be considered "restraints of trade" and therefore illegal. U.S. v. Topco Associates, 405 U.S. 596, 606, 31 L. Ed. 2d 515, 92 S. Ct. 1126 (1972).

HN49 To establish a claim under section 1 of the Sherman Act, a plaintiff must show: 1) that there was a contract, combination or conspiracy; 2) that *85 the agreement unreasonably restrained trade under either a per se rule or illegality or a rule of reason analysis; and 3) that the restraint affected interstate commerce. Bhan v. NME Hospitals, Inc., 929 F.2d 1404 (9th Cir. 1991). Matsushita Electric Industrial Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 597, 106 S. Ct. 1348, 1361 n.21, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538 (1986). The pleader must allege more than a bare legal conclusion; "if the facts do not outline or adumbrate a violation of the Sherman Act, the plaintiff will get nowhere by merely dressing them up in the language of antitrust." Rutman Wine Co. v. E. & J. Gallo Winery, 829 F.2d 729 (9th Cir. 1987). Although the Cartwright Act varies in some respects from § 1 of the Sherman Act, the parties do not address either claim differently for purposes of the 12(b)(6) motion.

Defendants argue that plaintiffs have failed to allege any economically coherent theory from which a conspiracy can be inferred. Specifically, defendants argue plaintiffs pleaded no facts from which it can be inferred that PG&E, as a buyer of gas, conspired with a group of sellers it controls, to itself pay higher prices. Because PG&E was subject only to a potential downward adjustment *86 by regulatory authorities, defendants argue no incentive existed to over-pay for gas. Defendants further contend that paying higher than market prices, through PG&E's subsidiaries to Canadian producers, makes no economic sense; because PG&E cannot benefit from higher costs, which it passes on to customers in a business context where PG&E's rate of return is limited by regulation. Plaintiffs respond that PG&E executives so acted in their own economic self interest in obtaining bonuses or other remuneration from increased revenues to PG&E and from alleged financial interests in members of the "cartel." Plaintiffs maintain that PG&E sought to "corner the market" in high priced gas to force core elections by non core customers and to keep these same customers from obtaining purportedly lower priced gas in Canada.

Defendants cite Car Carriers, Inc. v. Ford Motor Co., 745 F.2d 1101 (7th Cir. 1984), cert. denied, 470 U.S. 1054, 84 L. Ed. 2d 821, 105 S. Ct. 1758 (1985), which held that an inherently improbable theory failed to state a claim, for violation of the antitrust laws under the rule of reasonableness test. Car Carriers considered whether a complaint stated a claim against Ford Motor Co., based on allegations *87 that Ford requested increased transport services from a carrier, on the promise that increased tariffs would pay for expansion. Ford later withdrew rate increases necessary for profitable operations and subsequently obtained the carrier's business at a distress-sale price. Plaintiff also alleged Ford awarded its next contract to Nu-Car, on the basis of the latter's "sham and knowingly predatory bid." The court found this last allegation insufficient to state a claim for conspiracy, stating:

If we assume that there actually was concerted activity between Ford and Nu-Car, the "predatory" bid becomes utterly implausible. In considering a motion to dismiss, the court is not required to don blinders and ignore commercial reality. If Ford absolutely controls the rates charged by its suppliers, it is preposterous to assume that Ford would conspire with Nu-Car to eliminate Car Carriers by accepting Nu-Car's "predatory" bid so that the latter could later charge noncompetitive, monopoly prices. The complaint characterizes Ford as a buyer that was highly concerned about the prices it paid, it would be unusual indeed for Ford now to conspire with Nu-Car to accept a "predatory" bid with [*88] Ford to become the victim.

Id., 745 F.2d at 1110. Car Carriers found implausible that Ford could act as both the dictator and victim of a pricing scheme. See generally Matsushita Elec. Indust. Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 597 n.21, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538, 106 S. Ct. 1348 (1986) ("Conduct that is more consistent with permissible competition as with illegal conspiracy does not, without more, support even an inference of conspiracy."); but see In re Petroleum Products Antitrust Litigation, 906 F.2d 432 (9th Cir. 1990) (limiting broad language in Matsushita).

Plaintiffs' complaint alleges PG&E controlled a pricing scheme for itself and its wholly-owned subsidiaries, through correspondence and a "town meeting" style of negotiating, to set prices among Canadian producers either directly or through its wholly-owned subsidiary, A&S. Complaint, at P 61. The complaint alleges, at P 46:

At best, [the regulatory scheme] left PG&E financially indifferent to the terms on which A&S purchased Canadian natural gas. Executives of PG&E and its affiliates were not indifferent, however, because the arrangement put them in a position to hand out hundreds of millions of dollars annually in [*89] windfalls to Canadian gas producers, gave PGT higher profits, and provided PG&E larger revenues, which resulted in larger annual bonuses and incentive packages for certain PG&E executives, who participated in the scheme alleged herein.

The complaint alleges, at P 48:

Despite purported policies to the contrary, and in furtherance of PG&E's efforts to keep their monopolistic grasp on the Canadian gas market, PG&E condoned known conflicts of interest. It is alleged that between 1988 to the present, several directors, officers, and/or employees of A&S and their affiliates had board memberships, and in certain cases, ownership interests in the very Canadian gas producers and transporters with whom PG&E was supposedly negotiating purchase prices.

The complaint alleges, at P 63:

PG&E executives recognized that keeping higher priced gas in the PGT pipeline protected profitability which supported performance incentives and bonuses, and was a motivation in resisting open access.

The complaint alleges, at P 64:

PG&E, through its then wholly owned subsidiary A&S, created and manipulated the cartel of Canadian gas producers with which [*90] it set a single price for all gas purchasers in Alberta. One material unlawful purpose of this cartel was that PG&E raised the price of Canadian gas above competitive levels so as to extract from the California consumer the highest possible profit for the cartel and benefits accruing to senior PG&E employees. A further unlawful purpose of the cartel was to fix the price at which Canadian gas was sold in downstream markets at a level which enabled PG&E to monopolize those markets.

The complaint alleges, at P 68:

PG&E's gas department actively sought to continue this pricing because of the closeness of senior officials in that division with gas producer members of the cartel; which said producers lavished favors and perks on those very officials who were responsible for the pricing formulas which supported the long-term contracts.

No individuals are named as defendants. Nor is any derivative liability sought against defendants. However, HN50[
↑] an entity can incur antitrust liability for the acts of its employees or agents, when acting within the scope of their apparent authority, despite the agent's desire to benefit only him or herself. American Society of Mechanical [*91] Engineers v. Hydrolevel Corp., 456 U.S. 556, 72 L. Ed. 2d 330, 102 S. Ct. 1935 (1982); City of Vernon v. Southern California Edison Co., 955 F.2d 1361, 1369-70 (9th Cir. 1992) (citing cases). The facts cited above support the inference that defendants' agents, acting within the scope of their apparent authority, engaged in anticompetitive conduct with the Canadian suppliers to their own and the alleged economic benefit of PG&E. It is inherently improbable that PG&E sought to pay too much for natural gas. However, the evidentiary merit of whether unlawful economic benefit resulted from collusion with "cartel" members by compelling core elections and restricting access to lower cost Canadian gas, cannot be decided on this 12(b)(6) motion. Plaintiffs' assert there was alternative lower cost gas available outside the "cartel," assuming without identifying a means of its transportation to central

California. Complaint, at P 35. Such allegations do not render the allegations of the conspiracy inherently improbable within the meaning of Car Carriers.

Defendants' 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss plaintiffs first and fourth claims for relief for failure to state a claim as inherently economically improbable is DENIED, [*92] subject to the preclusive effect of the filed rate and state action doctrines.

Section 3 of the Clayton Act

HN51[] Section 3 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 14, prohibits any person from making a sale or contract for sale of goods or other commodities on the condition, agreement or understanding that the purchaser shall not deal with other commodities or competitors of the seller, where the effect would substantially lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly in any line of commerce. Even if a contract is found to be an exclusive-dealing arrangement, it does not violate the section unless the court believes it is probable that performance of the contract will foreclose competition in a substantial share of the line of commerce affected. Tampa Electric Co. v. Nashville Coal Co., 365 U.S. 320, 327, 81 S. Ct. 623, 628, 5 L. Ed. 2d 580 \(1961\).

Two courts have held that HN52[] section 3 of the Clayton Act applies solely to sellers or lessors, not to purchasers. McGuire v. Columbia Broadcasting System, Inc., 399 F.2d 902, 906 \(9th Cir. 1968\); Genetic Systems Inc. v. Abbott Laboratories, 691 F. Supp. 407, 414-415 \(D.D.C. 1988\). This conclusion follows from the "fundamental antitrust concept" [*93] that the alleged sins of the seller should not be visited on buyers because of the risk of chilling competition." Coastal Transfer Co. v. Toyota Motor Sales, U.S.A., 833 F.2d 208, 211 \(9th Cir. 1987\). Because plaintiffs allege that PG&E was a purchaser, rather than seller, in the transactions at issue, this precedent bars this claim for relief. The motion to dismiss the third claim for relief is GRANTED as to PG&E. The motion to dismiss the third claim for relief is DENIED as to PGT, subject to the effect of the filed rate doctrine.

Wilson Tariff Act

Defendants argue that plaintiffs' Wilson Tariff Act claim must be dismissed, because it adds nothing of substance to the Sherman Act claims and fails for the same reasons.

HN53[] The Wilson Tariff Act, 15 U.S.C. § 8, prohibits "Every combination, conspiracy, trust, agreement or contract" between two or more persons or corporations, either of whom is engaged in importing any article from any foreign country when the transaction is intended to operate in restraint of trade or competition, or to increase the market price of articles imported into the United States. Although analogous to § 1 of the Sherman Act, the Wilson Tariff Act [*94] does not include monopolization or intent to monopolize. Western Concrete Structures Co. v. Mitsui & Co., 760 F.2d 1013, 1019 \(9th Cir.\), cert. denied, 474 U.S. 903, 88 L. Ed. 2d 229, 106 S. Ct. 230 \(1985\). Where allegations state a claim under § 1 of the Sherman Act, dismissal of a Wilson Tariff Act claim is generally inappropriate. Id.

Because plaintiffs have stated a claim under § 1 of the Sherman Act, defendants motion to dismiss plaintiffs' second claim for relief under the Wilson Tariff Act for failure to state a claim is DENIED, subject to the preclusive effect of the filed rate and state action doctrines.

California Unfair Practices Act

Defendants argue that plaintiffs' fifth claim for relief fails to plead a violation of any specific provision of California's Unfair Practices Act, California Business and Professions Code § 17000 et. seq. Defendants also contend that the claim is barred by California Business and Professions Code section 17024\(1\).

Plaintiffs concede that it was their intent to plead a claim under the California Unfair Business Practices Act. Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17200 et. seq.. Plaintiffs offer to amend their complaint accordingly.

Because plaintiffs [*95] concede the Unfair Practices Act claim should be dismissed, defendants motion is GRANTED. Plaintiff shall have ten (10) days leave to amend.

CONCLUSION

For the reasons stated herein, IT IS ORDERED:

- 1) Plaintiffs' motion for class certification is GRANTED;
- 2) Defendants motion to dismiss the federal and state antitrust claims based on the filed rate doctrine is GRANTED with ten (10) days leave to amend;
- 3) Defendants' motion to dismiss the federal antitrust claims based on state action immunity is GRANTED with ten (10) days leave to amend as to defendant PG&E, and DENIED as to defendant PGT;
- 4) Defendants' motion to dismiss based on Illinois Brick is DENIED;
- 5) Defendants' motions to dismiss the first and fourth claims for failure to state a claim on account of economic improbability are DENIED, subject to the preclusive effect of the filed rate and state action doctrines.
- 6) Defendants' motion to dismiss the third claim for relief under the Clayton Act claim is GRANTED as to PG&E, and DENIED as to PGT, subject to the effect of the filed rate doctrine.
- 7) Defendants' motion to dismiss the claim under California's Unfair Practices Act, [California Business and Professions \[*96\] Code § 17000 et. seq.](#), is GRANTED with ten (10) days leave to amend;
- 8) Defendants shall prepare and lodge with the Court, an order consistent with the views expressed in this opinion, within five (5) days from the date of service of this order.

DATED: August 25, 1994.

Oliver W. Wanger

UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE

End of Document

Picker Int'l v. Leavitt

United States District Court for the District of Massachusetts

August 26, 1994, Decided

C.A. No. 87-2828 & C.A. No. 87-2597 CONSOLIDATED

Reporter

865 F. Supp. 951 *; 1994 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 13776 ; 1995-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P70,946

PICKER INTERNATIONAL, INC., Plaintiff, v. BRUCE LEAVITT and IMAGING EQUIPMENT SERVICES, INC. and THOMAS J. QUINN, Defendants.

Core Terms

Picker, Imaging, Scanners, manufacturers, tube, exclusionary, customers, specifications, monopolization, summary judgment motion, summary judgment, no evidence, Sherman Act, purchasers, pricing, relevant market, monopoly power, counterclaims, service contract, contracts, end-users, alleges, costs, competitor, consumers, documents, sabotage, exclusive agreement, discovery, contends

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Motions for Summary Judgment > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Opposing Materials > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Appropriateness

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Genuine Disputes

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Legal Entitlement

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Materiality of Facts

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Supporting Materials > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Supporting Materials > Discovery Materials

HN1[] Summary Judgment, Entitlement as Matter of Law

In considering a motion for summary judgment, a court is governed by Fed. R. Civ. P. 56, which provides in pertinent part that summary judgment may be granted only if the pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories, and admissions on file, together with the affidavits, if any, show that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law under Fed. R. Civ. P. 56\(c\). In making this inquiry, the court must look at the record in the light most favorable to the party opposing the motion and must indulge all inferences favorable to that party.

865 F. Supp. 951, *951A 1994 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 13776, 13776

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Motions for Summary Judgment > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Genuine Disputes

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Materiality of Facts

HN2 Summary Judgment, Motions for Summary Judgment

In weighing the merits of a motion for summary judgment, the court must address two questions: (1) whether the factual disputes are genuine, and (2) whether a fact genuinely in dispute is material. As to materiality, the substantive law will identify which facts are material. Only disputes over facts that might affect the outcome of the suit under the governing law properly preclude the entry of summary judgment. In order to determine if a dispute about a material fact is "genuine," the court must decide whether the evidence is such that a reasonable fact-finder could return a verdict for the nonmoving party.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Monopolies & Monopolization > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > Monopolization Offenses

HN3 Monopolies & Monopolization, Actual Monopolization

The Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 2, makes it illegal to monopolize, or attempt to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce among the several States.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > Relevant Market

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

865 F. Supp. 951, *951A 1994 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 13776, 13776

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN4 [down] Monopolies & Monopolization, Attempts to Monopolize

In analyzing a § 2 claim, the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 2, it is essential to: (1) define the relevant market; (2) determine whether the party charged has attempted to obtain, or obtained, monopoly power in that market; and, if so, (3) determine whether such power was sought or acquired by "exclusionary conduct." More specifically, to prove actual monopolization, a party must establish that the other party has monopoly power in the relevant market and the willful acquisition or maintenance of that power as distinguished from growth or development as a consequence of a superior product, business acumen, or historic accident.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > Elements

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN5 [down] Sherman Act, Claims

As for attempted monopolization, to succeed in an attempted monopolization claim under § 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 2, a plaintiff must prove that a defendant had the specific intent to monopolize the relevant market, and a dangerous probability of success. A specific intent to monopolize or restrain competition can often be inferred from a finding of bad faith. A showing of exclusionary conduct is required for an attempted monopolization claim.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

HN6 [down] Regulated Practices, Market Definition

To define a market, one must decide the geographic dimension, the product dimension, and the production dimension.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

HN7 [down] Regulated Practices, Market Definition

Market definition must focus on the product dimension; that is, the commodities reasonably interchangeable by consumers for the same purposes. This focus is appropriate because the ultimate question concerning market definition is whether a hypothetical cartel could raise prices significantly above the competitive level.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN8 [blue download icon] Regulated Practices, Market Definition

The extent to which one market prevents exploitation of another market depends on the extent to which consumers will change their consumption of one product in response to a price change in another, i.e., the cross elasticity of demand. This is a question of fact.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN9 [blue download icon] Regulated Practices, Market Definition

If the service market price is to have an impact on equipment demand, consumers must inform themselves of the total cost of the "package" -- equipment, service, and parts -- at the time of purchase; that is, consumers must engage in accurate life cycle pricing. This is an information intensive analysis. It is, for example, a question of fact whether a party or its competition makes available the information necessary for life cycle pricing. Moreover, defining the relevant market also requires consideration of whether there are costs of switching to another product which lock-in a purchaser and make it vulnerable to supracompetitive price increases for service because it cannot, cost-effectively in view of its investment, switch to a competing brand if service becomes more expensive.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Discrimination > Competitive Injuries > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > General Overview

HN10 [blue download icon] Price Discrimination, Competitive Injuries

The willful acquisition or maintenance of monopoly power is characterized as "exclusionary conduct." It has given content to the term by defining it as conduct, other than competition on the merits or restraints reasonably "necessary" to competition on the merits, that reasonably appears capable of making a significant contribution to creating or maintaining monopoly power. A practice is "anticompetitive" if it harms the competitive process, not if it merely harms competitors. This process is harmed when the conduct at issue obstructs the achievement of competition's basic goals -- lower prices, better products, and more efficient production methods.

Evidence > ... > Exceptions > Public Records > General Overview

HN11 [blue download icon] Exceptions, Public Records

Fed. R. Evid. 803(8)(C) provides for the introduction of reports of a public agency containing factual findings resulting from an investigation made pursuant to law.

Evidence > ... > Exceptions > Public Records > General Overview

Evidence > ... > Hearsay > Exemptions > General Overview

Evidence > ... > Exemptions > Statements by Party Opponents > General Overview

HN12 [L] Exceptions, Public Records

Out-of-court statements contained in public records require a separate hearsay exception before they can be admitted.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > General Overview

HN13 [L] Exemptions & Immunities, Parker State Action Doctrine

Efforts to influence government officials acting under statutes requiring competitive bidding are within the scope of the antitrust laws. It is, however, not improper for a producer to engage in an honest effort to persuade a government agency that specifications favoring it are appropriate. However, efforts of any industry leader to impose his product specifications by guile, falsity, or threats are contrary to the anti-trust laws. Although the fact of influence or inducement cannot itself be wrongful, its manner can be improper.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

Torts > Intentional Torts > Defamation > Libel

HN14 [L] Private Actions, Standing

Many buyers recognize disparagement of a rival as non-objective and highly biased. Although hardly a justification for falsehood, buyer distrust of a seller's disparaging comments about a rival seller should caution one against attaching much weight to isolated examples of disparagement. Essential, therefore, is a serious de minimis test. Such claims should be presumptively ignored.

Torts > Intentional Torts > Defamation > Libel

Torts > Intentional Torts > Defamation > General Overview

HN15 [L] Defamation, Libel

A communication is defamatory if it discredits the plaintiff in the minds of any considerable and respectable segment in the community. Generally, where the discussion involves a rival's services or product, it is not considered libelous unless it imputes to the corporation fraud, deceit, dishonesty, or reprehensible conduct.

Torts > Business Torts > Trade Libel > Defenses

Torts > Business Torts > General Overview

865 F. Supp. 951, *951A 1994 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 13776, 13776

Torts > Business Torts > Trade Libel > General Overview

Torts > Business Torts > Trade Libel > Elements

Torts > Intentional Torts > Defamation > General Overview

Torts > Intentional Torts > Defamation > Libel

Torts > Intentional Torts > Defamation > Slander

HN16 [] Trade Libel, Defenses

Commercial disparagement is defined as a false statement intended to bring into question the quality of a rival's goods or services in order to inflict pecuniary harm. Statements constituting commercial disparagement are generally regarded as conditionally privileged. This is because many buyers recognize disparagement of a rival as non-objective and highly biased.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Discrimination > Competitive Injuries > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN17 [] Price Discrimination, Competitive Injuries

A monopolist may not refuse to make an "essential facility" available to a competitor. Nor may a monopolist reverse a well-established practice of dealing with a competitor if the change in policy injures competition, and there is no legitimate business reason for the change.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > General Overview

Torts > ... > Commercial Interference > Contracts > General Overview

HN18 [] Regulated Practices, Trade Practices & Unfair Competition

In the antitrust context, litigation may constitute, or contribute to a finding of, illegal conduct if: (1) the lawsuit is objectively baseless in the sense that no reasonable litigant could realistically expect success on the merits; and (2) the motive for the baseless lawsuit was an attempt to interfere directly with the business relationships of a competitor.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Actual Monopolization > Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices > General Overview

HN19 [] Actual Monopolization, Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices

Predatory pricing is the pricing of a product below its average total cost.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

HN20 [blue icon] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

The Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. §. 1 has been interpreted to apply only to "unreasonable" restraints of trade.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Sherman Act

HN21 [blue icon] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Vertical Restraints

The "rule of reason" test, states that the true test of legality is whether the restraint imposed is such as merely regulates and perhaps thereby promotes competition or whether it is such as may suppress or even destroy competition. To determine that question the court must ordinarily consider the facts peculiar to the business to which the restraint is applied; its condition before and after the restraint was imposed; the nature of the restraint and its effect, actual or probable. The history of the restraint, the evil believed to exist, the reason for adopting the particular remedy, the purpose or end sought to be attained, are all relevant facts. This is not because a good intention will save an otherwise objectionable regulation or the reverse; but because knowledge of intent may help the court to interpret facts and to predict consequences.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Vertical Acquisitions

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

HN22 [blue icon] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Vertical Restraints

In applying the rule of reason test, the factfinder weighs all of the circumstances of a case in deciding whether a restrictive practice should be prohibited as imposing an unreasonable restraint on competition. Thus, a vertical combination without a legitimate business justification which operates to the detriment of competition violates this standard.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > General Overview

HN23 [blue icon] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

It has generally been recognized that vertical agreements designed to prevent free-riding do not violate the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. §. 1, because free-riding discourages capital investment and product innovation.

Torts > ... > Contracts > Intentional Interference > Elements

Torts > ... > Commercial Interference > Contracts > General Overview

HN24 [+] Intentional Interference, Elements

In order to sustain a claim of interference with contractual relations, the plaintiff must prove that: (1) he had a contract with a third party; (2) the defendant knowingly induced the third party to break that contract; and (3) the plaintiff was harmed by the defendant's actions.

Torts > ... > Commercial Interference > Prospective Advantage > General Overview

Torts > Business Torts > General Overview

HN25 [+] Commercial Interference, Prospective Advantage

The elements of the business tort of interference with advantageous relationships are that: (1) plaintiff had a business relationship or contemplated contract of economic benefit; (2) defendant knew of this relationship; (3) defendant intentionally and improperly interfered with it; and (4) plaintiff's injurious loss of advantage was a direct result of the defendant's conduct.

Torts > Business Torts > Unfair Business Practices > General Overview

HN26 [+] Business Torts, Unfair Business Practices

Unfair competition which, in Massachusetts, is addressed by Mass. Gen. Laws ch. 93A. To maintain a claim that Mass. Gen. Laws ch. 93A has been violated, the events allegedly constituting unfair competition must have occurred "primarily and substantially" in Massachusetts.

Judges: [1] Wolf

Opinion by: MARK L. WOLF

Opinion

[*954] MEMORANDUM AND ORDER

WOLF, D.J.

August 26, 1994

Plaintiff Picker International, Inc.'s ("Picker") motion for partial summary judgment addresses federal antitrust and pendent state business tort counterclaims alleged by Defendant Imaging Equipment Services, Inc. ("Imaging"). For the reasons explained below, Picker's motion for summary judgment must be allowed on all counts of Imaging's counterclaims.

I. Facts

Unless otherwise noted, all of the following facts are uncontested and presented in the light most favorable to Imaging.

Picker International, Inc. is a New York corporation with a principal place of business in Highland Heights, Ohio. Picker designs, manufactures, sells, and services medical diagnostic equipment such as computed tomography scanners ("CT Scanners"), magnetic resonance imaging, nuclear imaging, and x-ray equipment. Affidavit of William J. Webb ("Webb Aff."), Picker's Appendix of Evidentiary Materials in Support of its Motion for Partial Summary Judgment ("Picker Evid. App."), Ex. 13, PP 10-12.

Imaging Equipment Services, Inc. is a Pennsylvania corporation with a principal place of business in Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania. Imaging is an independent [2] service organization ("ISO"), which provides maintenance and repair services to end-users of a variety of medical diagnostic equipment. Affidavit of Robert S. Pindyck ("Pindyck Aff."), Picker Evid. App., Ex. 6, P 11; Webb. Aff., Ex. 13, P 11. Imaging competes with Picker to service Picker brand CT Scanners.

On April 9, 1991, Imaging filed a voluntary petition, under Chapter 11 of the Bankruptcy Code, in the United States Bankruptcy Court for the Western District of Pennsylvania. On March 2, 1992, Imaging's amended plan of reorganization was approved. Answer of Imaging P 4; Picker Evid. App., Ex. 27; Ex. 30.

On July 6, 1994, after a hearing on Picker's motion for summary judgment, and after this case was scheduled for trial, Imaging again filed a voluntary petition for bankruptcy in Pennsylvania. Picker subsequently obtained limited relief from the automatic stay of civil litigation against Imaging in order to permit this case to proceed.

Thomas J. Quinn ("Quinn"), a resident of Mars, Pennsylvania, is President of Imaging. Deposition of Thomas J. Quinn ("Quinn Dep."), Picker Evid. App., Ex. 19 at I-4 to I-5.

Bruce Leavitt ("Leavitt") is a former Picker service engineer, who until recently [3] was employed by Imaging. Id. at I-38 to I-39.

Picker sells its CT Scanners to hospitals and other medical facilities in competition with other manufacturers, including General Electric, Siemens, Philips, Toshiba, Elscint, and Shimadzu. Picker Evid. App., Pindyck Aff., Ex. 6, PP 10, 31; Webb. Aff., Ex. 13, P 5. [*955] Picker's largest competitor is General Electric, whose sales since 1986 have constituted about 40% of the United States market. Id. Picker's share of the United States market has ranged from between 15% to 19%, making it at various times the nation's third or second largest manufacturer of CT Scanners. Id.

Since 1985, the purchase price of a CT Scanner has ranged from $ 400,000 to over $ 1,000,000. Picker Evid. App., Pindyck Aff., Ex. 6, P 9; Webb. Aff., Ex. 13, P 6. CT Scanners are used by hospitals and other medical facilities to conduct various diagnostic procedures. These end-users are sophisticated consumers. Picker Evid. App., Pindyck Aff., Ex. 6, PP 12-14; Webb. Aff., Ex. 13, PP 7-8, 16-18. They seek to maximize the use of, and economic return on, their CT Scanners by minimizing the time during which the CT Scanner is not working ("down time"). Id.

CT [4] Scanners typically have a useful life of eight to ten years. Picker Evid. App., Pindyck Aff., Ex. 6, P 9. As delicate, precision machines, they require substantial servicing. Id., Pindyck Aff., Ex. 6, P 17; Webb. Aff., Ex. 13, P 20. Picker claims that the cost of servicing often equals or exceeds the original purchase price of the unit. Id. Generally, CT Scanners require preventative maintenance on a bi-weekly basis, consisting of several hours of diagnostic routines and trouble-shooting. Id., Ex. 13, P 18. In addition, component parts of a CT Scanner require frequent replacement as part of the servicing schedule. Id., Ex. 6, P 15; Ex. 13, P 18.

Imaging disputes Picker's claim that the cost of servicing a CT Scanner often exceeds its purchase price, particularly if the CT Scanner tubes, which are consumable items designed to be replaced, are not included in service costs. Imaging's Memorandum of Law in Opposition to Picker's Motion for Partial Summary Judgment ("Mem. Opp'n") at 5-6. In addition, Imaging states that Picker's life cycle costs are calculated on the basis of sales and service by a manufacturer of CT Scanners, suggesting that the cost is lower where service [5] is provided by an ISO. Id. at 6 n.1.

Manufacturers like Picker service only the CT Scanners they manufacture, offer a warranty on their service and parts, and often also offer extended warranties at the time of sale. Picker Evid. App., Pindyck Aff., Ex. 6, PP 11; Webb. Aff., Ex. 13, PP 13-14. Upon the expiration of the warranty, manufacturers typically offer service under flat-fee contracts for a fixed period of time, or on a time and materials basis. Id.

Although most CT Scanners are serviced by the manufacturer, maintenance alternatives exist. Id. Specifically, there are ISOs like Imaging which provide service under flat fee contracts or on a time and materials basis. Id., Webb. Aff., Ex. 13, P 15. In addition, some CT Scanner owners establish in-house service departments. Id.

Because of the substantial cost of servicing a CT Scanner, Picker contends that customers weigh this factor when choosing among the products of competing manufacturers, both in terms of the reliability of the unit and the quality and cost of service. Picker Evid. App., Pindyck Aff., Ex. 6, PP 18-24; Webb. Aff., Ex. 13, P 20. Institutions that purchase CT Scanners often have professional [6] purchasing officers to assist in purchase decisions, hire outside consultants, or confer with colleagues at other medical institutions prior to choosing a Scanner. Id. Ex. 6, P 13; Ex. 13, P 8. Picker claims that manufacturers, in turn, value the expected return from servicing when establishing the sales cost of their equipment, seeking to maximize their profits on both sales and service within a competitive market. Id. Picker Evid. App., Ex. 6, PP 21-23; Ex. 13, PP 23-25. As explained infra, Imaging denies that purchasers can or do analyze life cycle costs before buying a CT Scanner. See, e.g., Mem. Opp'n at 26; Affidavit of Dr. William Witt ("Witt Aff."), Imaging's Appendix of Exhibits ("Imaging App."), Ex. 2; Affidavit of Dr. Joseph Morasco ("Morasco Aff."), Imaging App. Ex. 3.

On April 11, 1983, Leavitt began his employment as a service engineer with Picker. In this capacity, he serviced Picker CT Scanners and ultrasound equipment in Massachusetts and throughout New England. As a result of his training and work experience, Leavitt acquired confidential technical information [*956] relating to the installation, maintenance, and repair of Picker's equipment. Picker's Amended [7] Complaint ("Am. Compl.") PP 9-10, 16-18. In connection with his employment, Leavitt entered into an Employee Invention and Confidential Information Agreement with Picker, agreeing not to disclose, during or after his employment, any secret or confidential Picker business information. Id. PP 10-11. In addition, Leavitt agreed that he would not, for a period of one year following the termination of his employment, service Picker equipment at any location which he had serviced while working for Picker. Id. PP 11-13.

In November 1986 Leavitt, while still a Picker employee, was solicited by Quinn to join Imaging. Id. P 19. Imaging was aware of Leavitt's contracts with Picker. Id. P 20. On April 3, 1987, Leavitt resigned his employment with Picker and began working for Imaging as a CT Scanner service engineer. Id. P 21.

Picker contends that prior to his departure from Picker, and at the request of Imaging, Leavitt took confidential business information, including service training manuals, customer information, pricing information, and diagnostic software from Picker. Id. P 22. Picker also charges that Leavitt and Imaging have since used this information to bid on [8] service contracts for CT Scanners in direct competition with Picker. Id. In addition, Picker alleges that Leavitt, on behalf of Imaging, violated his agreement not to service, for a year after his departure, Picker equipment on which he had previously worked. Id. PP 25-26. Picker also asserts that Imaging has engaged in a scheme of wrongful conduct, including improperly obtaining confidential and copyrighted Picker service and repair documentation, from Picker employees and from Picker's client hospitals. Id. PP 29-33.

On November 19, 1987, Picker filed suit against Imaging and Leavitt based on Leavitt's alleged breach of his covenant not to compete and on his purported misappropriation of Picker's confidential business information. Pursuant to a stipulation of the parties, the court issued a Partial Final Injunction prohibiting Imaging from using certain documents Leavitt retained after he left Picker, without prejudice to the defendants' right to continue to contend that those documents did not contain Picker trade secrets. February 13, 1989 Partial Final Injunction.

In the course of discovery, Picker uncovered information suggesting to it that Imaging had unlawfully [9] acquired, and was unlawfully using, Picker's proprietary service documents and diagnostic software. Consequently, in September 1988, Picker moved to amend its complaint to add claims based on the alleged misappropriation of intellectual property. That motion was allowed on August 1, 1989.

In September, 1989, almost two years after the commencement of this suit, Imaging filed the counterclaims which are the subject of this decision. Imaging alleges that Picker adopted a plan to destroy competition without any business justification, and that Picker obtained monopoly power in the relevant market. Imaging's Answer to Amended Complaint and Counterclaim ("Countercl.") PP 9-11. More specifically, Imaging counterclaimed against Picker, alleging that: (1) Picker is a monopolist under the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 2, in a purported market consisting of the servicing of Picker CT Scanners; (2) Picker has attempted to monopolize that market in violation of 15 U.S.C. § 2; (3) Picker violated 15 U.S.C. § 1 by making agreements in restraint of trade with manufacturers of component parts; (4) Picker [\[10\]](#) interfered with Imaging's contractual relations; (5) Picker interfered with Imaging's advantageous relations with customers in the market; (6) Picker disparaged and defamed Imaging to customers and potential customers in the market; and (7) Picker engaged in unfair or deceptive acts or practices in violation of Mass. Gen. L. ch. 93A.¹ Countercl. PP 21-34, 43-58. Picker seeks summary judgment on each of these claims.

Imaging also requests a declaratory judgment that it has not violated Picker's copyrights [\[*957\]](#) or misappropriated its trade secrets. Id. at PP 35-42. Because these declaratory judgment counterclaims merely mirror the claims Picker asserts against Imaging in its Amended Complaint, Picker agrees that their resolution must await the impending [\[11\]](#) trial of its claims.

In responding to Picker's motion for summary judgment, Imaging attempted for the first time to assert a claim of illegal tying in violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1. At the October 14, 1993 hearing on this motion, the court informed the parties that it agreed with Picker's contention that it would be inappropriate to permit Imaging to, in effect, amend its counterclaims to assert this claim at this late date.

More specifically, Imaging raised its claim of illegal tying six years after it knew of the events at issue; four years after its original counterclaim, itself filed two years after the inception of this case; three years after the close of discovery; and in a transparent effort to evade the consequences of Picker's formidable motion for summary judgment. In these circumstances, it was clear that Picker would be unfairly prejudiced by the belated introduction of yet another claim, which would require additional discovery, and which could and should have been asserted earlier. Thus, the court informed the parties that to the extent Imaging was implicitly seeking to amend its Counterclaim to assert an [\[12\]](#) illegal tying claim, the request was denied. See October 14, 1993, Tr. at 7-8; Kennedy v. Josephthal, Inc., 814 F.2d 798, 806 \(1st Cir. 1987\) (upholding district court's denial of leave to amend where summary judgment was under advisement and allowing amendment would have required, among other things, reopening discovery); Quaker State Oil Refining Corp. v. Garrity, 884 F.2d 1510, 1517 \(1st Cir. 1989\) (affirming denial of motion to amend filed two months prior to end of discovery and three weeks prior to deadline for summary judgment motion); Serrano Medina v. United States, 709 F.2d 104, 106 \(1st Cir. 1983\) (trial court did not abuse discretion in denying leave to amend where there was no justification for delay in asserting new claims, and their acceptance would require additional research and discovery); Tiernan v. Blyth Eastman Dillon & Co., 719 F.2d 1, 4 \(1st Cir. 1983\) (two year delay in filing motion to amend shifts burden to movant to show "valid reason for neglect and delay").

Accordingly, the court will not consider any claim of Imaging alleging [\[13\]](#) tying in violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act.

Additional relevant facts are discussed in the following analysis of Picker's meritorious motion for summary judgment.

II. Analysis

A. The Summary Judgment Standard.

¹ At the October 14, 1993 hearing on this motion for summary judgment, Imaging withdrew its Robinson-Patman Act claim of discriminatory pricing, Picker v. Leavitt, No. 87-2828, Summary Judgment Hearing, Transcript at 10 (Oct. 14, 1993) ("October 14, 1993 Tr.").

HN1[] In considering a motion for summary judgment, the court is governed by Rule 56 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, which provides in pertinent part that summary judgment may be granted only "if the pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories, and admissions on file, together with the affidavits, if any, show that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law." Fed. R. Civ. P. 56\(c\). In making this inquiry, "the court must look at the record in the light most favorable to the party opposing the motion and must indulge all inferences favorable to that party." Stepanischen v. Merchants Despatch Trans. Corp., 722 F.2d 922, 928 (1st Cir. 1983); United States v. One Parcel of Real Property, 960 F.2d 200, 204 (1st Cir. 1992); Attallah v. United States, 955 F.2d 776, 779 (1st Cir. 1992); Medina-Munoz v. R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Co., 896 F.2d 5, 8 (1st Cir. 1990). [14]

HN2[] In weighing the merits of a motion for summary judgment, the court must address two questions: (1) whether the factual disputes are genuine, and (2) whether a fact genuinely in dispute is material. Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, 477 U.S. 242, 247-48, 91 L. Ed. 2d 202, 106 S. Ct. 2505 (1986). "As to materiality, the substantive law will identify which facts are material. Only disputes over facts that might affect the outcome of the suit under the governing law properly preclude the entry of summary judgment." Id. In order to determine if a dispute about a material fact is "genuine," the court must decide whether "the evidence [*958] is such that a reasonable [factfinder] could return a verdict for the nonmoving party." Id.; Medina-Munoz, 896 F.2d at 8; Oliver v. Digital Equipment Corp., 846 F.2d 103, 105 (1st Cir. 1988).

B. The Sherman Act Claims

As set forth below, on the basis of the record, a reasonable factfinder could conclude that a single product market existed for the service of Picker CT Scanners. However, a reasonable factfinder could not determine from [15] the evidence presented that Picker engaged in any exclusionary conduct. Accordingly, summary judgment must be allowed on Imaging's Sherman Act § 2 monopolization and attempted monopolization claims.

With respect to the Sherman Act § 1 counterclaims, Picker is entitled to summary judgment because a factfinder could not properly conclude that the alleged restraints of trade were unreasonable.

1. Monopolization and Attempted Monopolization under the Sherman Act § 2

a. The legal standard

Imaging alleges that through various acts of exclusionary conduct, Picker attempted to monopolize, and did monopolize, the service market for Picker CT Scanners, in violation of § 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 2.²

HN4[] In analyzing a Section 2 claim, it is essential to: (1) define the relevant market; (2) determine whether the party [16] charged has attempted to obtain, or obtained, monopoly power in that market; and, if so, (3) determine whether such power was sought or acquired by "exclusionary conduct." Eastman Kodak Co. v. Image Technical Service, Inc., 119 L. Ed. 2d 265, 112 S. Ct. 2072, 2089 (1992); United States v. Grinnell Corp., 384 U.S. 563, 570-71, 16 L. Ed. 2d 778, 86 S. Ct. 1698 (1966); Town of Concord v. Boston Edison Co., 915 F.2d 17, 21 (1st Cir. 1990), cert. denied, 499 U.S. 931, 113 L. Ed. 2d 268, 111 S. Ct. 1337 and reh'g denied, 500 U.S. 930, 114 L. Ed. 2d 131, 111 S. Ct. 2047 (1991).

More specifically, to prove actual monopolization, Imaging must establish that Picker has monopoly power in the relevant market and "the willful acquisition or maintenance of that power as distinguished from growth or development as a consequence of a superior product, business acumen, or historic accident." Grinnell, 384 U.S. at 570-71. [17]

² HN3[] Section 2 of the Sherman Act makes it illegal to "monopolize, or attempt to monopolize . . . any part of the trade or commerce among the several States. . . ."

HN5 As for attempted monopolization, the Court of Appeals for the First Circuit has stated that:

To succeed in an attempted monopolization claim under Section 2 of the Sherman Act, the plaintiff must prove that the defendant had the specific intent to monopolize the relevant market, and a dangerous probability of success. As other courts have noted, a specific intent to monopolize or restrain competition can often be inferred from a finding of bad faith.

CVD, Inc. v. Raytheon Co., 769 F.2d 842 \(1st Cir. 1985\), cert. denied, 475 U.S. 1016, 89 L. Ed. 2d 312, 106 S. Ct. 1198 (1986); see also H.L. Hayden Co. of N.Y. v. Siemens Medical Systems, 879 F.2d 1005 \(2d Cir. 1989\) (setting forth identical elements). A showing of exclusionary conduct is required for an attempted monopolization claim. Spectrum Sports, Inc. v. McQuillan, 122 L. Ed. 2d 247, 113 S. Ct. 884, 890-91 \(1993\) (it is "generally required that to demonstrate attempted monopolization" plaintiff must prove that defendant "engaged in predatory or anticompetitive [18] conduct"); Clamp-All Corp. v. Cast Iron Soil Pipe Institute, 851 F.2d 478, 491 \(1st Cir. 1988\), cert. denied, 488 U.S. 1007, 102 L. Ed. 2d 780, 109 S. Ct. 789 (1989).

b. There is a genuine dispute concerning the relevant market

Imaging contends that the relevant market is service for Picker CT Scanners, and that Picker has sought and achieved monopoly power in that market. In contrast, Picker asserts that the relevant market should be defined as the sale and service of all brands of CT Scanners, and that it has not attempted [*959] to achieve or acquired monopoly power in that highly competitive market. The evidence places the question of the proper definition of the relevant market in genuine dispute. This is, therefore, an issue which would have to be tried if it were material to the determination of Imaging's Section § 2 counterclaims.

HN6 "To define a market, one must decide the geographic dimension, the product dimension . . . and the production dimension . . ." 2 Philip Areeda and Donald Turner, Antitrust Law § 517 (1978). In this case, it is undisputed that the relevant geographic market [19] is the United States, Countercl. P 7, and the production dimension is not implicated. Thus, HN7 market definition must focus on the product dimension; that is, the "commodities reasonably interchangeable by consumers for the same purposes." United States v. E. I. du Pont de Nemours, & Co., 351 U.S. 377, 395, 400, 100 L. Ed. 1264, 76 S. Ct. 994 \(1955\). This focus is appropriate because the ultimate question concerning market definition is whether a hypothetical cartel could raise prices significantly above the competitive level. Areeda & Turner, supra, § 518.1b (1993 Supp.).

Picker contends that the ability of consumers to purchase its competitors' CT Scanners if Picker charges too much to service its own product makes it improper to limit the relevant market solely to the servicing of its CT Scanners. With regard to an argument of this nature, the Supreme Court has explained that: HN8 "The extent to which one market prevents exploitation of another market depends on the extent to which consumers will change their consumption of one product in response to a price change in another, i.e., the cross elasticity of demand." Kodak, 112 S. Ct. at 2038. This [20] is a question of fact Lee v. Life Insurance of North America, 23 F.3d 14, 16 \(1st Cir. 1994\).

Picker relies on the affidavit of its expert, Professor Robert S. Pindyck, for its claim that, as sophisticated consumers who want to minimize the "downtime" of their equipment, purchasers of CT Scanners consider the cost and quality of service in deciding which brand to buy. See Pindyck Aff., Picker Evid. App. Ex. 6, PP 13-14, 18-19. Pindyck bases his opinion primarily on discussions with Picker, interviews with hospital administrators, and a telephone survey of end-users. Id. P 20-24. He believes interbrand competition acts as a restraint on the price of servicing as well as on the purchase price of CT Scanners. Id. at P 30. In Professor Pindyk's view, the relevant market includes all producers who sell and service CT Scanners. Id. at 31. As Picker has never had more than 19% of this market, he asserts it lacks the monopoly power necessary to be found to have violated Section 2 of the Sherman Act.

HN9 If, as Professor Pindyck opines, the service market price is to have [21] an impact on equipment demand, "consumers must inform themselves of the total cost of the 'package' -- equipment, service, and parts -- at the time of purchase; that is, consumers must engage in accurate life cycle pricing." Kodak, 112 S. Ct. at 2085

(footnote omitted). This is an information intensive analysis. It is, for example, a question of fact whether Picker or its competition makes available the information necessary for life cycle pricing. Id. at 2086. Moreover, defining the relevant market also requires consideration of whether there are costs of switching to another product which lock-in a purchaser and make it vulnerable to suprareactive price increases for service because it cannot, cost-effectively in view of its investment, switch to a competing brand if service becomes more expensive. Id. at 2087.

Imaging offers the affidavits of Dr. William Witt to put the foregoing issues in dispute. Dr. Witt states that he participated in purchasing more than fifty Picker CT Scanners for the Veterans Administration Medical Center in Nashville, Tennessee. Witt Aff., Imaging App., Ex. 3, P 2. Neither he nor anyone at the Veterans [22] Administration engaged in life-cycle pricing in connection with those acquisitions. Id. No representation was made to him by Picker or any other vendor concerning life-cycle costs or comparative CT Scanner costs. Id. PP 2, 8. In Dr. Witt's opinion, it would be difficult for anyone to engage in an accurate life-cycle cost [960] analysis of CT Scanners because there are too many imponderables. Id. P 3.

Similarly, Dr. Morasco asserts that as Chairman of Diagnostic Radiology at St. Francis General Hospital in Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania he has received market presentations from many producers of CT scanners over fifteen years, and has purchased Picker CT Scanners. Morasco Aff., Imaging App., Ex. 3, P 5. He claims he has never heard the term "life-cycle costs" used by a CT Scanner manufacturer. Id. at P 6. More significantly, he agrees with Dr. Witt that, because service requirements are uncertain, there is no way to project life-cycle service costs reliably at the time a CT Scanner is purchased. Id. P 7. In addition, Imaging argues that Picker's survey is flawed in focusing exclusively on hospitals, which represent only a segment of consumers. See Mem. Opp'n at 35-36; October [23] 14, 1993 Tr. at 24-25; Pindyck Aff., Picker Evid. App. Ex. 6, P 12 ("The buyers of CT Scanners are largely hospitals and medical clinics.") (emphasis added).

Picker challenges the evidence of Drs. Witt and Morasco. It claims that they are biased. Witt has sued Picker previously, Picker's Supplemental Appendix of Evidentiary Materials ("Supp. App."), Ex. 4 P 2, and Morasco is a shareholder of Imaging. Supp. App. Ex. 3 at 16-17. Picker also attacks the credibility of their contentions in other ways. Supp. App., Ex. 4, P 2; Ex. 3 at 35-36.

At this point, however, the court must look at the record in the light most favorable to Imaging. Accepting Imaging's experts evidence as credible for present purposes, it is sufficient to create a disputed fact concerning whether purchasers of CT Scanners can and do engage in life-cycle pricing. This is particularly true in view of the fact that Picker's main evidence on this point, Professor Pindyck's report, focuses exclusively on the class of purchasers best able to gather and process information, and ignores smaller or individual purchasers. A jury could reasonably infer on this record that smaller purchasers are [24] less able or likely than large, institutional purchasers such as hospitals to engage in life-cycle pricing analysis. There is, therefore, a genuine dispute concerning whether the market should be defined as the sale and service of all CT Scanners, or the service of Picker's product alone.

It is undisputed that if the relevant market is the service of Picker's products, Picker's share is 70 to 80%. This is within a range which would permit a reasonable factfinder to conclude that Picker had monopoly power in that market. See Kodak, 112 S. Ct. at 2090 (80-95% of service market with no readily available substitute is sufficient showing); Grinnell, 384 U.S. at 571 (87% of market constitutes monopoly).

Accordingly, the issue of market definition would have to be tried if it were material to the outcome of this case. However, as there is inadequate evidence that Picker engaged in exclusionary conduct, the question of market definition is not material to the disposition of Picker's motion for summary judgment.³

³ The court notes that claims similar to those alleged by Imaging were made against Picker by another ISO in Electronics in Medicine, Inc. v. Picker Int'l, Inc., C.A. No. H-88-1400 (S.D. Tex. Nov. 8, 1991). On a motion for summary judgment by Picker, the court found that a jury could reasonably find a single brand market with respect to the service of Picker CT Scanners, and that Picker had used its unique position as manufacturer in order to eliminate competition at the service market level. Picker's Appendix of Authorities, ("Auth. App."), Ex. 3 at 7. Therefore, the court denied the motion for summary judgment. Id. at 7-8. The jury, however, ultimately found that no single brand market for the service of Picker CT Scanners existed. Imaging's Appendix of

[25] c. There is inadequate evidence for a factfinder to conclude Picker engaged in exclusionary conduct

Picker is entitled to summary judgment on the Sherman Act § 2 claims because Imaging has not offered sufficient evidence to prove that any monopoly power Picker may possess arose as a result of "the willful acquisition or maintenance of [monopoly] power as distinguished from growth or development as a consequence of a superior product, [*961] business acumen, or historic accident." Grinnell, 384 U.S. at 570-71; see also Kodak, 112 S. Ct. at 2089. The Court of Appeals for the First Circuit has characterized HN10[↑] the willful acquisition or maintenance of monopoly power as "exclusionary conduct." Barry Wright Corp. v. ITT Grinnell Corp., 724 F.2d 227, 230 \(1st Cir. 1983\); see also Town of Concord, 915 F.2d at 21. It has given content to the term by defining it as "'conduct, other than competition on the merits or restraints reasonably 'necessary' to competition on the merits, that reasonably appears capable of making a significant [*26] contribution to creating or maintaining monopoly power.'" Barry Wright, 724 F.2d at 230 (quoting 3 Areeda and Turner, supra, P 626 at 83). A practice is "anticompetitive" if it harms the competitive process, not if it merely harms competitors. Town of Concord, 915 F.2d at 21; R.W. International Corp. v. Welch Food, Inc., 13 F.3d 478, 487 \(1st Cir. 1994\). This process is harmed when the conduct at issue "obstructs the achievement of competition's basic goals -- lower prices, better products, and more efficient production methods." 915 F.2d at 22.

Thus, the question is whether Picker's "conduct [was] reasonable in light of its business needs or did it unreasonably restrict competition?" Barry Wright, 734 F.2d at 230; see also Town of Concord, 915 F.2d at 21 (in making exclusionary conduct analysis, court compares challenged practice's likely anticompetitive effects with its potentially legitimate business justifications).

Imaging asserts in its counterclaim that Picker has engaged in seven types of exclusionary [*27] conduct: lockout specifications in Veterans Administration Hospital contracts for the service of Picker CT Scanners; defamation; unlawful refusals to deal; sham litigation; unauthorized removal of documents from customer sites; predatory pricing; and sabotage. As explained below, the evidence on these claims, individually and cumulatively, is insufficient to create a litigable issue concerning exclusionary conduct. Thus, Imaging is not entitled to a trial on its monopolization or attempted monopolization claims.

1. The Veterans Administration's "Lockout Specifications"

Imaging's strongest evidence of alleged exclusionary conduct relates to certain Veterans Administration ("VA") specifications for the servicing of Picker CT Scanners which the Department of Veterans Affairs subsequently found improperly restricted the ability of ISO's to compete for Veterans Administration service contracts. Department of Veterans Affairs, Office of the Inspector General, Special Review of VA's Service Contracts for the Picker CT Scanner, September 30, 1991, Ex. A to Ex. 1 of Imaging App. ("the Report"). The Department of Veterans Affairs, however, did not look for or find any irregular contracting [*28] practices on the part of Picker. Department of Veterans Affairs, Office of the Inspector General, Special Review of VA's Service Contracts for the Picker CT Scanner (Amended), September 30, 1991, Supp. App. Ex. 1 at i ("the Amended Report"). Rather, the Department of Veterans Affairs specifically noted that, "Picker's contracting practices are the subject of ongoing litigation between Picker and certain independent service organizations," id., and implicitly left open for determination in this case the question whether Picker improperly caused the Veterans Administration to adopt the restrictive specifications.

Examination of the evidence indicates that a reasonable factfinder could conclude that Picker improperly caused the Veteran's Administration to adopt only one restrictive specification, regarding one contract. Such conduct is insufficient, both alone and in the context of all the other relevant evidence, to create a triable issue of whether Picker used exclusionary conduct to seek or acquire any monopoly power it might be found at trial to have concerning the servicing of all of its CT Scanners.

More specifically, the Department of Veterans Affairs issued, then amended, [29] reports addressing allegations that the Veterans Administration had unnecessarily included in its specifications for the servicing of Picker CT Scanners requirements which only Picker could meet, thus "locking out" its competitors. Those reports would be admissible at trial pursuant to HN11⁴ Fed. R. Evid. 803\(8\)\(C\), [*962] which provides for the introduction of reports of a public agency containing factual findings resulting from an investigation made pursuant to law. See Beech Aircraft Corp. v. Rainey, 488 U.S. 153, 109 S. Ct. 439, 102 L. Ed. 2d 445 (1988); Sabel v. Mead Johnson and Co., 737 F. Supp. 135 (D. Mass. 1990). The statements in those reports attributed to Picker would also be admissible because, as statements by a representative of Picker, they would not, pursuant to Fed. R. Evid. 801\(d\)\(2\)\(c\), be hearsay. See United States v. De Peri, 778 F.2d 963, 977 (3rd Cir. 1985), cert. denied sub nom., Murphy v. United States, 475 U.S. 1110 (1986) (out-of-court HN12⁵) statements contained in public records require a separate hearsay exception before [30] they can be admitted). The Report and Amended Report found that the Veterans Administration specifications in twenty-one of thirty-six contacts for the servicing of Picker CT Scanners improperly favored Picker in at least one of three ways. First, nine contracts required the use of the Mega H or Mega HD x-ray tubes produced by Picker's Dunlee division (the "Dunlee tube"). Report at 4. As described infra, Picker would not sell the Dunlee tube to ISOs. ISOs, however, could buy the EIMAC tube, produced by Varian Corporation, which the Report found to be an acceptable substitute for the Dunlee tube. Id. The Report cited direct evidence that, in one instance, Picker sought to influence the Veterans Administration to adopt the restrictive requirement concerning the Dunlee tube by writing, "in a letter dated November 12, 1986, to VAMC Indianapolis, indicating only Dunlee tubes are safe because the EIMAC tube introduced the potential for damage to the scanner and possible injury to the patient." Id. The Report found that in over half of the thirty-six contracts, including some which did not expressly require use of the Dunlee tube, ISOs were eliminated from receiving the award [31] because they did not have access to the Dunlee tube. *Id.*⁴

The Report also found that ten Veterans Administration service contracts required that service technicians be trained by Picker. Id. at 5. Once again, only Picker could meet this requirement. The Report found, however, that the Veterans Administration could adequately train its in-house technicians to service Picker CT Scanners. Id. Therefore, it concluded that this specification, which excluded ISOs from receiving awards, was overly restrictive.⁵ Id. There is no evidence, however, that Picker made any misrepresentation which resulted in the Veterans Administration [32] adopting this requirement.

The Report also found that thirteen contracts unnecessarily required that the servicing organization use Picker diagnostic and operational software. Id. As Picker did not license its software to ISOs, this specification eliminated ISOs from consideration for certain awards. Once again, however, there is no evidence that Picker improperly influenced the Veterans Administration to adopt this requirement.

In 1991, the Report recommended that the Veterans Administration develop unrestrictive specifications for all service contracts for Picker CT Scanners. There is no evidence suggesting that this has not been done.

The court has carefully considered the evidence concerning Picker's conduct with regard to the Veteran's [33] Administration and concludes that it is not sufficient, alone or in conjunction with Imaging's other evidence, to create a litigable issue concerning whether Picker engaged in exclusionary conduct in the market for servicing all of its CT Scanners.

The Veterans Administration is only one customer for the Picker CT Scanner. It comprises some unspecified fraction of the [*963] total market of Picker CT Scanners which must be serviced.

⁴ There is no direct evidence that Imaging lost a VA award because it lacked access to the Dunlee tube. This fact, however, relates only to Imaging's potential damages and not to whether Picker violated Section 2 -- a question which focuses on injury to competition rather than to a specific competitor. See, e.g., Town of Concord, 915 F.2d at 21.

⁵ Imaging lost a Veterans Administration contract in Los Angeles, California because its representatives were not trained by Picker. VA Memorandum on Technical Evaluation of Imaging Equipment Services, Imaging App., Ex. B to Ex. 1; Quinn Aff.; Imaging App., Ex. 1, PP 13-14.

HN13 [↑] "Efforts to influence government officials acting under statutes requiring competitive bidding are within the scope of the antitrust laws." Whitten v. Paddock Pool Builders, Inc., 424 F.2d 25, 34 (1st Cir.), cert. denied, 400 U.S. 850, 27 L. Ed. 2d 88, 91 S. Ct. 54 (1970) and 421 U.S. 1004 (1975). It is, however, not improper for a producer to engage in an honest effort to persuade a government agency that specifications favoring it are appropriate. However, "efforts of any industry leader to impose his product specifications by guile, falsity, or threats are contrary to [the anti-trust] laws." Id. at 31; see also 3 Areeda and Turner, [34] supra, § 738b at 280 ("Although the fact of influence or inducement cannot itself be wrongful, its manner can be improper.").

In this case, Picker was dealing with sophisticated purchasers, the many different procuring offices of the Veterans Administration. There is no evidence that Picker bribed or otherwise corrupted any Veterans Administration official. Nor is there any evidence of threats. The essence of Imaging's allegations is that Picker misled the purchasers.

After many years of discovery, except for the letter quoted in the Report concerning the EIMAC tube, there is no direct evidence regarding what Picker communicated to the various Veterans Administration procurement offices prior to their adopting what the Report found to be unnecessarily restrictive specifications. Although circumstantial evidence may be considered, it is axiomatic that in the absence of admissible evidence a jury would not be permitted to speculate or guess what Picker might have communicated to the Veterans Administration prior to the issuance of those specifications.

Picker's 1986 letter relating to one proposed contract, and stating that the EIMAC tube was not a suitable substitute for its Dunlee [35] tube, was false. Indeed, as discussed infra, Picker now relies on the suitability of the EIMAC tube to defend against another form of alleged exclusionary conduct, its purportedly unlawful refusal to sell the Dunlee tube to ISOs. As Professor Areeda and Turner have written, however:

HN14 [↑] Many buyers . . . recognize disparagement [of a rival] as non-objective and highly biased. Although hardly a justification for falsehood, buyer distrust of a seller's disparaging comments about a rival seller should caution us against attaching much weight to isolated examples of disparagement. Essential, therefore, is a serious de minimis test. We would go further and suggest such claims should be presumptively ignored.

3 Areeda and Turner, supra, § 738c at 281.

In this case, the evidence depicts only a single instance of a false statement made to a sophisticated and presumably skeptical, independent purchaser. There is no evidence that Imaging and other ISOs did not have the opportunity to neutralize Picker's misstatement before the specification was issued. In any event, the Report recommending abandonment of the restrictive specifications was evidently a response to communications from [36] ISOs to the Department of Veterans Affairs.

In these circumstances, the evidence is insufficient for a reasonable factfinder to conclude that Picker's conduct concerning the Veterans Administration "made a significant contribution to creating or maintaining monopoly power," Barry Wright, 724 F.2d at 230, in the market for servicing all Picker CT Scanners, of which those purchased by the Veterans Administration were only a fraction. See 3 Areeda and Turner, supra, § 738a at 278-79; National Association of Pharmaceutical Manufacturers v. Ayerst Laboratories, 850 F.2d 904, 916-17 (2d Cir. 1988) (citing Areeda and Turner in reversing the grant of motion to dismiss on basis that discovery to date was insufficient for evaluation of relevant factors under de minimis test); Berkey Photo, Inc. v. Eastman Kodak Co., 603 F.2d 263, 288 n.41 (2d Cir. 1979), cert. denied, 444 U.S. 1093, 62 L. Ed. 2d 783, 100 S. Ct. 1061 (1980) ("Before we would allow misrepresentations to buyers to be the basis of a competitor's treble damages action [37] under § 2, we would at least require the plaintiff to overcome a presumption that the effect [964] on competition of such a practice was de minimis.") (citing Areeda and Turner); Data General Corp. v. Grumman Systems Support Corp., 761 F. Supp. 185, 189-90 (D. Mass. 1991).

(b) Defamatory Statements

Imaging alleges that Picker made defamatory statements to five customers which constituted, or contributed to, exclusionary conduct. There is, however, admissible evidence of one only negative statement to a customer; it was not defamatory; and it was so innocuous that it is insufficient to constitute, or contribute to a finding of, exclusionary conduct by Picker.

Contrary to Imaging's contention, there is no evidence that Picker made negative statements about Imaging to potential customers Marie Gaborko, Rudolph Buck, or Ronald Heffner. Indeed, Buck and Gaborko deny ever having communications with Picker concerning Imaging. Picker Evid. App., Affidavit of Rudolph Buck, Ex. 1, PP 3-5; Affidavit of Marie Gaborko, Ex. 4, PP 4-6.

With regard to Jacqui Scymanski, Imaging offers only hearsay evidence from Quinn that Scymanski said a Picker employee told her that [\[38\]](#) Quinn and his partner had split, and Imaging did not back its warranties. Quinn Dep., Picker Evid. App., Ex. 19 at 6-69 to 6-76. Scymanski, however, denies that Picker ever said anything to her about Imaging. Affidavit of Jacqui Scymanski, Picker Evid. App., Ex. 11, PP 3-5. Scymanski's assertion is not genuinely in dispute because Quinn's inadmissible hearsay may not be considered in deciding this motion for summary judgment. See Schwimmer v. Sony Corporation of America, 637 F.2d 41, 45 n.9 \(2d Cir. 1980\); Wiley v. United States, 20 F.3d 222, 225 \(6th Cir. 1994\).

One customer, A.V. Papa, Jr., did testify that Picker employees made comments that: Imaging "wouldn't do a good job;" Imaging didn't have the commercial "expertise to keep the equipment up and running without downtime;" and Imaging would not be at the "beck and call" of Papa. Deposition of A.V. Papa, Jr. ("Papa Dep."), Imaging's Evid. App., Ex. 27, at 75, 78, and 82. These comments are not, however, defamatory or libelous. HN15[↑] A communication is defamatory if it "discredits the plaintiff 'in the minds of any considerable and respectable segment in the community.'" Draghetti v. Chmielewski, 416 Mass. 808, 811, 812 n.4, 626 N.E.2d 862 \(1994\) [\[39\]](#) (quoting Tropeano v. Atlantic Monthly Co., 379 Mass. 745, 751, 400 N.E.2d 847 \(1980\)). Generally, where the discussion involves a rival's services or product, it is not considered libelous unless it "imputes to the corporation fraud, deceit, dishonesty, or reprehensible conduct . . ." U.S. Healthcare, Inc. v. Blue Cross of Greater Philadelphia, 898 F.2d 914, 924 \(3rd Cir.\), cert. denied sub nom., Independence Blue Cross v. U.S. Healthcare, Inc., 498 U.S. 816, 112 L. Ed. 2d 33, 111 S. Ct. 58 \(1990\). The statements reportedly made to Papa do not meet either of these standards.

Looking at the record in the light most favorable to Imaging, the comments which Papa attributes to Picker constitute at most commercial disparagement. HN16[↑] Commercial disparagement is defined by the Restatement \(Second\) of Torts, § 623A (1979), as a false statement intended to bring into question the quality of a rival's goods or services in order to inflict pecuniary harm. See also DeCosta v. Viacom International, Inc., 981 F.2d 602, 610 \(1st Cir. 1992\), [\[40\]](#) cert. denied, 125 L. Ed. 2d 725, 113 S. Ct. 3039 (1993). Statements constituting commercial disparagement are generally regarded as conditionally privileged. See Restatement \(Second\) of Torts § 649 (1979). This is because, as described earlier, many buyers . . . recognize disparagement [of a rival] as non-objective and highly biased." 3 Areeda and Turner, supra, § 738c at 281; see also R.W. Sims v. Mack Truck Corp., 488 F. Supp. 592, 605 \(E.D. Pa. 1980\), cert. denied, 445 U.S. 930, 63 L. Ed. 2d 764, 100 S. Ct. 1319 (1980). Indeed, in this case, Papa testified that none of Picker's statements caused him to change his mind about using Imaging. Papa Dep., Imaging's Evid. App., Ex. 27 at 79.

In these circumstances, Imaging's claim of defamation does not have sufficient substance to constitute, or contribute to a finding of, exclusionary conduct. See [Data General Corp. v. Grumman Systems Support Corp., 761 F. Supp. 185, 189 \(D. Mass. 1991\); \[965\] Falstaff Brewing Co. v. Stroh Brewery Co., 628 F. Supp. 822, 831 \(N.D. Cal. 1986\)](#). [\[41\]](#)

(c) Unlawful Refusal to Deal

Imaging contends that Picker's refusal to sell ISOs the Dunlee tube used in its CT Scanner constitutes exclusionary conduct. However, because the EIMAC tube is a suitable and available substitute for the Dunlee tube, Picker's consistent refusal to sell it to ISOs was permissible, rather than exclusionary, conduct. HN17[↑] A monopolist may not refuse to make an "essential facility" available to a competitor. Otter Tail Power Co. v. United States, 410 U.S. 366, 377-78, 35 L. Ed. 2d 359, 93 S. Ct. 1022 \(1973\); MCI Communications Corp. v. American Tel. & Tel. Co., 708 F.2d 1081, 1132 \(7th Cir.\), cert. denied, 464 U.S. 891, 78 L. Ed. 2d 226, 104 S. Ct. 234 \(1983\). Nor may a monopolist reverse a well-established practice of dealing with a competitor if the change in policy injures competition, and there is no legitimate business reason for the change. Aspen Skiing Co. v. Aspen Highlands Skiing Corporation, 472 U.S. 585, 605-08, 86 L. Ed. 2d 467, 105 S. Ct. 2847 (1985). [42]

The Dunlee tube is a key component of Picker CT Scanners. Picker Evid. App., Ex. 13, P 30. Picker sold the Dunlee tube to end-users, regardless of whether they contracted with Picker for servicing. Id. at P 32(a). Claiming that it did not want to be blamed if faulty installation caused a problem, however, Picker would not sell the Dunlee tube to ISOs. Id. at 56. ISOs, however, had ready access to the EIMAC tube which, as described earlier, the Department of Veterans Affairs found is a fully acceptable substitute for the Dunlee tube. Id. at P 34. The parties do not dispute this fact.

Accordingly, the Dunlee tube was not an "essential facility" for the servicing of Picker CT Scanners. There is evidence that Picker may have inadvertently sold one Dunlee tube to Imaging. Id. at P 33; Ex. 19 at 5-26 to 5-27. This does not, however, place in genuine dispute the fact that Picker had a consistent policy and practice of not selling the Dunlee tube to ISOs. In these circumstances, Picker's conduct concerning its Dunlee tube could not be found to be an unlawful refusal to deal.

(d) Sham Litigation

Imaging alleges Picker initiated unfounded litigation to injure competition [43] for the servicing of its CT Scanners. This allegation is unsupported.

HN18[] In the antitrust context, litigation may constitute, or contribute to a finding of, illegal conduct if: (1) "the lawsuit is objectively baseless in the sense that no reasonable litigant could realistically expect success on the merits;" and (2) the motive for the baseless lawsuit was "an attempt to interfere directly with the business relationships of a competitor." Professional Real Estate Investors, Inc. v. Columbia Pictures, Inc., 123 L. Ed. 2d 611, 113 S. Ct. 1920, 1928 (1993) (quoting Eastern Railroad Presidents Conference v. Noerr Motor Freight, Inc., 365 U.S. 127, 144, 5 L. Ed. 2d 464, 81 S. Ct. 523 (1961)). With regard to the second prong of this test, Imaging does not place in genuine dispute Picker's assertion that it has initiated all litigation in good faith. Picker Statement of Undisputed Facts P 39. In support of its claim of sham litigation, Imaging merely refers the court to certain exhibits, without focused citations, explanation, or argument. Imaging App., Ex. 2, Witt Aff. P 2; Imaging App., [44] Ex. 23, ETEK Verdict; Imaging App., Ex. 27, Papa Dep. at 51-52. Having examined these materials, the court finds that they fail to place in dispute Picker's good faith in instituting any suit or alleging claims in this or any case on which Imaging relies.

Nor is the evidence adequate to place in genuine dispute whether Picker's claims in various cases had an objectively reasonable basis. There was plainly an objectively reasonable basis for Picker to institute the instant case. Imaging consented to a Partial Final Injunction restricting it from possessing items of Picker documents retained by Leavitt when he left Picker, although without prejudice to Imaging's right to contend that those documents did not contain trade secrets. See February 13, 1989 Partial Final Injunction. More significantly, Imaging has not sought summary judgment on Picker's claims because there are clearly material [*966] facts genuinely placed in dispute by the evidence Picker has offered.

The information furnished to the court indicates that Picker settled two other cases on a basis Picker regards as favorable. Picker International, Inc. v. Robert Fiorino, C.A. No. 144682 (C.P. Cuyahoga County Ohio) and [45] Picker International, Inc. v. R-Squared, Inc., C.A. No. C518629 (L.A. Super. Ct. Cal.). Picker prevailed at trial in a third case on which Imaging relies and which Picker did not even initiate. See Picker Auth. App., Ex. 7, Witt v. Picker International, Inc., No. 3-88-0836 (D. Tenn. Feb. 14, 1989).

Picker did lose one case it initiated in which it was found that a covenant not to compete executed by a former employee of Picker was unenforceable. See Picker Auth. App., Ex. 4., Picker Int'l, Inc. v. Radiological Imaging Services of Pa, Inc., C.A. No. 87-01282, slip op. at 1-2 (C.P. Lebanon County Pa. September 29, 1987). There is no evidence to prove, however, that it was objectively unreasonable for Picker to have instituted that action.

Accordingly, the evidence is insufficient to prove Imaging's claim that Picker initiated "sham" litigation as a form or exclusionary conduct.

(e) Unauthorized Removal of Documents

Imaging has also introduced no evidence to support its claim that Picker improperly removed its service documentation from customer sites in order to unlawfully frustrate competition. Picker contends that it retrieved its service documentation and materials [46] from customer sites in order to prevent third parties, including customers, from using them and "free-riding" on the capital investment made by Picker. Picker Evid. App., Ex. 13, P 29. In the instances of claimed misconduct alleged by Imaging, Picker responds that it had received permission to remove its service materials from Leonard Morse Hospital, Universal Medical Scanners, and Lewiston Hospital. Picker Evid. App., Ex. 7, PP 6-7; Ex. 15 at I-65 to I-66; Ex. 26. As Imaging concedes, Picker merely unsuccessfully attempted to remove service materials from Physicians Medical Imaging and South County Hospital. Picker Evid. App., Ex. 21 at 4-5. In these circumstances, Picker's removal of materials from customer sites does not provide a basis for a finding of exclusionary conduct.

(f) Predatory Pricing

Imaging vaguely alleges Picker engaged in "predatory pricing." HN19[] Predatory pricing is the pricing of a product below its average total cost. See Barry Wright, 724 F.2d at 231. In connection with the motion for summary judgment, however, Imaging has not disputed Picker's assertion that it priced its service contracts for CT Scanners above total cost. Statement [47] of Material Facts P 48. Nor has Imaging argued the merits of this claim in its submissions. Thus, the allegation of predatory pricing is also unsupported.

(g) Sabotage

Imaging also alleges that Picker engaged in "sabotage." Picker, however, denies having sabotaged any of its CT Scanners which are serviced by ISOs. Statement of Material Facts P 28. There is no evidence of sabotage, no first-hand witness accounts of the alleged sabotage, and no complaints of sabotage by customers to either Picker or law enforcement officials. Picker Evid. App., Ex. 13, P 36. In addition, each of the Picker employees alleged to have participated in the purported sabotage deny having done so. Picker Evid. App., Ex. 3, PP 4-5; Ex. 8, PP 4-5; Ex. 9, PP 4-7. Imaging's submissions do not address Picker's denial of sabotage, let alone provide evidence to place this claim of sabotage genuinely in dispute. This claim, therefore, contributes nothing to Imaging's evidence concerning exclusionary conduct.

* * *

In view of the foregoing, Imaging has failed to offer evidence which, individually or cumulatively, is sufficient to put in genuine dispute its claim that Picker engaged in exclusionary conduct. Therefore, [48] Picker's motion for summary judgment on Imaging's attempted monopolization and monopolization claims must be allowed.

[\[*967\]](#) 3. Agreements in Restraint of Trade in Violation of Sherman Act § 1

Imaging also contends that Picker's agreements requiring that some, but not all, manufacturers of components of its CT Scanners sell them exclusively to Picker violates § 1 of the Sherman Act, which prohibits contracts "in restraint of trade or commerce." As set forth below, however, § 1 HN20[] has been interpreted to apply only to "unreasonable" restraints of trade. The evidence does not place in genuine dispute Picker's assertion that there are valid reasons for the contracts at issue. Thus, there is not a triable issue concerning Imaging's Sherman Act § 1 charges.

Picker is alleged to have agreements with seventeen suppliers of components for its CT Scanners. In eight instances, those manufacturers are permitted to sell Picker CT Scanner components to end-users and ISOs, including Imaging, either directly or through distributors, or no longer produce parts for Picker. Picker Evid. App., Ex. 5, PP 3-4; Ex. 14 at I-130 to I-133, I-172 to I-174, I-184 to I-185 and I-200; Ex. 19 at 5-177 to 5-179.

Picker [49] has agreements with nine other manufacturers, which require them to sell the Picker CT Scanner components they produce only to picker.⁶ There is no allegation that those manufacturers are restricted in their ability to produce parts for Picker's competitors. Picker will sell the components to end-users and ISO's, including Imaging. Picker Evid., App. Ex. 5, P 5.

Imaging asserts, however, that Picker keeps an inadequate inventory of such components, so that ISOs cannot meet customers' needs in a timely manner. Mem. Opp'n at 11-12. Imaging also claims that Picker informed Quinn it would take twenty-six weeks to deliver one component he tried to buy. Quinn Aff., Ex. 1, at P 12. In one instance, Imaging claims it lost to Picker a contract to service a new Picker CT Scanner being purchased by one of Imaging's existing customers, the St. [50] Francis Medical Center in Pittsburgh, because of Imaging's inability to minimize downtime by delivering essential parts promptly. Imaging App., Ex. 24, Ex. 4 thereto. It is undisputed, however, that ISOs such as Imaging could maintain an inventory of critical component parts if they were willing to make the necessary investment. Imaging, in effect, contends that Picker must make that investment instead.

Picker's exclusive agreements with nine manufacturers of its CT Scanner components are vertical restraints of trade. They are illegal under § 1 of the Sherman Act, however, only if they are unreasonable. Justice Louis Brandeis articulated the classic formulation of HN21[] the "rule of reason" test, stating:

The true test of legality is whether the restraint imposed is such as merely regulates and perhaps thereby promotes competition or whether it is such as may suppress or even destroy competition. To determine that question the court must ordinarily consider the facts peculiar to the business to which the restraint is applied; its condition before and after the restraint was imposed; the nature of the restraint and its effect, actual or probable. The history of the restraint, the evil [51] believed to exist, the reason for adopting the particular remedy, the purpose or end sought to be attained, are all relevant facts. This is not because a good intention will save an otherwise objectionable regulation or the reverse; but because knowledge of intent may help the court to interpret facts and to predict consequences.

Chicago Board of Trade v. United States, 246 U.S. 231, 238, 62 L. Ed. 683, 38 S. Ct. 242 (1918). HN22[] In applying this test, "the factfinder weighs all of the circumstances of a case in deciding whether a restrictive practice should be prohibited as imposing an unreasonable restraint on competition." Continental T.V., Inc. v. GTE Sylvania, Inc., 433 U.S. 36, 49, 53 L. Ed. 2d 568, 97 S. Ct. 2549 (1977). Thus, a vertical combination without a legitimate business justification which operates to the detriment of competition violates this standard. Business Electronics v. Sharp Electronics, 485 U.S. 717, 723, 99 L. Ed. 2d 808, 108 S. Ct. 1515 (1988), cert. denied, 486 U.S. 1005, [*968] 108 S. Ct. 1727, 100 L. Ed. 2d 192 (1988). [52]

For the reasons stated earlier, the court assumes for the purposes of deciding this motion for summary judgment that the relevant market is the servicing of Picker CT Scanners. There is not, however, sufficient evidence for a factfinder to conclude that Picker's exclusive agreements lacked a legitimate business justification or that they unreasonably injured competition.

Picker has invested considerable resources, ranging from $ 100,000 to $ 1,000,000 each, to develop the component parts for Picker CT Scanners which are manufactured by the nine suppliers with which it has exclusive agreements. Affidavit of Dr. Robert A. Cecil ("Cecil Aff."), Picker Evid. App., Ex. 2, P 3. Picker's expenditures in developing these component parts include its labor costs for research, development, and design, and the amounts Picker paid to some component part manufacturers for research, development and retooling. Id. Picker states that it made these arrangements with suppliers, rather than manufacturing the components itself, because it was more cost-effective to do so. Id. P 4. There is no evidence to place this contention in dispute.

Picker describes legitimate reasons for its exclusive arrangements. [53] Essentially, Picker asserts that if these nine manufacturers were permitted to sell Picker CT Scanner components to ISOs and end-users, they could "free-ride" on Picker's substantial investment in research and development, and unfairly undercut the price Picker charges end-users and ISOs. See e.g., Richard Posner, Antitrust Law: An Economic Perspective 148-150 (1976).

⁶ Picker, for purposes of this motion for summary judgment, has accepted as true Imaging's claim that it entered into the alleged exclusive agreements. Picker's Mem. of Law at 46 n.33.

HN23 [↑] It has generally been recognized that vertical agreements designed to prevent free-riding do not violate § 1 of the Sherman Act because free-riding discourages capital investment and product innovation. See Monsanto Co. v. Spray-Rite, 465 U.S. 752, 762-63, 79 L. Ed. 2d 775, 104 S. Ct. 1464 (1984); Continental T.V., 433 U.S. at 55. Imaging, however, argues that the Supreme Court in Kodak rejected "free-riding" as a legitimate justification for a restraint of trade. Kodak, however, is distinguishable from the present case. In Kodak, the defendant refused to sell to ISOs certain parts for its product which were not available from any other source. 112 S. Ct. at 2077. [54] The ISOs alleged that Kodak's conduct constituted an actionable refusal to deal under § 2 of the Sherman Act. Id. at 2078. Kodak claimed, among other things, that its policy was justified by its need to prevent ISOs from free-riding on its investment in the design and development of its replacement parts. Id. at 2079. In reversing a grant of summary judgment for Kodak, the Court held that there was a triable issue of whether prevention of free-riding in that instance justified Kodak's refusal to deal. Id. at 2092.

In the instant case there is no analogous § 2 claim because Picker will sell the components at issue to end-users and ISOs, including Imaging. Picker Evid. App., Ex. 5, P 5. Instead, Imaging contends that Picker's exclusive agreements with its suppliers violates § 1 by preventing ISOs from purchasing replacement parts directly from the suppliers. However, Kodak does not hold that a manufacturer can never enter into exclusive agreements with suppliers for whom it has provided customized specifications, developed by it at substantial cost. If this were the law, it appears that Picker would be forced to choose between manufacturing certain components itself [55] at a higher cost and passing those additional costs on to consumers, or allowing suppliers to benefit unfairly from Picker's investment in developing the components by allowing them to sell these components at a lower cost than Picker.

In Kodak, the decision that the free-riding rationale did not entitle Kodak to summary judgment was based significantly on the concern that because Kodak would not sell parts to ISOs or allow its suppliers to do so, the ISOs would be compelled to enter the parts production market. 112 S. Ct. at 2091. Thus, the vertical restraint in Kodak presented "one of the evils proscribed by the antitrust laws . . . the creation of entry barriers to potential competitors by requiring them to enter two markets simultaneously." [*969] Id. In contrast, in the present case, the evidence does not place in dispute the fact that Picker has a policy and practice of selling the components at issue to end-users and ISOs. Thus, Picker's exclusive agreements could not be found to create a barrier to entry in violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act.

If the evidence were sufficient to permit a reasonable factfinder to conclude that Picker [56] did not really make the components at issue available to ISOs in a timely manner despite its stated policies, there might be a triable issue concerning whether Picker's conduct violates § 1. However, after discovery, Imaging cites only one instance in which it was told by Picker there would be a twenty-six week delay in getting a requested part, and one customer, St. Francis Medical Center, that Imaging claims to have lost to Picker because Imaging was too slow in acquiring needed components.⁷ In view of the fact that Imaging and other ISOs could maintain an inventory of key components if they were willing to make the necessary investment, the isolated instances cited by Imaging are insufficient to put the existence or legitimacy of Picker's policy of selling to end-users and ISOs genuinely in dispute. See Abcor Corp. v. AM International, Inc., 916 F.2d 924, 929-30 (4th Cir. 1990) (parts sales policy which requires ISO to bear inventory costs is not anticompetitive under antitrust law).

[57] Nor is there adequate evidence to support Imaging's additional claims that Picker's exclusive agreements with the manufacturers of its CT Scanner components have other anticompetitive effects. Those manufacturers are not restricted in their ability to produce components for CT Scanners which compete with Picker's. Nor is the evidence sufficient to prove that Picker charges ISOs a price for the components which is excessive in view of Picker's investment in the research and development which resulted in their design and manufacture. The exclusive agreements therefore, could not be found to be unreasonable. See Roland Machinery Co. v. Dresser, 749 F.2d 380, 394 \(7th Cir. 1984\); Tri-State Rubbish, Inc. v. Waste Management, Inc., 998 F.2d 1073, 1080 \(1st Cir. 1983\). Accordingly, the evidence concerning these vertical restraints is inadequate to create a litigable issue on Imaging's Sherman Act § 1 claim. Indeed, to the extent that the exclusive agreements permit Picker to acquire components for less than it would cost Picker to manufacture them and pass that savings on to its customers, those agreements have a favorable competitive [58] effect.

⁷ As described, infra, there is inadequate evidence to prove that misconduct by Picker caused Imaging to lose the St. Francis Medical Center contract.

In view of the foregoing, Picker's motion for summary judgment on Imaging's Sherman Act § 1 claim must be allowed.

C. State Law Claims

Imaging alleges several state law claims, to which it devoted little attention in opposing Picker's Motion for Summary Judgment. There is not sufficient evidence to create a litigable issue on any of those claims.

1. Interference with contractual relations

HN24 [↑] In order to sustain a claim of interference with contractual relations, the plaintiff "must prove that: (1) he had a contract with a third party; (2) the defendant knowingly induced the third party to break that contract; and (3) the plaintiff was harmed by the defendant's actions." United Truck Leasing Corp. v. Geltman, 406 Mass. 811, 812, 551 N.E.2d 20, 21 \(1990\).

Imaging, however, has not offered evidence of any existing contract which was breached as a result of Picker's conduct. Therefore, summary judgment must be entered for Picker on this claim.

2. Interference with advantageous relationships

Imaging has also provided no evidence that improper conduct by Picker proximately caused its loss of any identifiable service contract [59] which Imaging had a reasonable probability of successfully obtaining. Therefore, Imaging's claim of tortious interference with advantageous relationships may not be maintained.

[*970] HN25 [↑] The elements of this business tort are that: (1) plaintiff had a business relationship or contemplated contract of economic benefit; (2) defendant knew of this relationship; (3) defendant intentionally and improperly interfered with it; and (4) plaintiff's injurious loss of advantage was a direct result of the defendant's conduct. American Private Line Services, Inc. v. Eastern Microwave, Inc., 980 F.2d 33, 36 \(1st Cir. 1992\); Geltman, 406 Mass. at 815.

In support of this claim, Imaging has produced a letter concerning a possible contract to service a Picker CT Scanner, with the St. Francis Medical Center, which Imaging lost to Picker. Deposition of Robert C. Clark, Imaging App., Ex. 24, Ex. 4 thereto. There is no evidence, however, that Picker won that contract improperly. The letter indicates that Imaging had a service contract for one Picker CT Scanner owned by the St. Francis Medical Center. Id. Picker offered to accept slightly [60] less than Imaging to service the new Picker CT Scanner the St. Francis Medical Center was acquiring. Id. The committee established to recommend who should receive the award recognized the potential difficulty of having service contracts with different vendors for the two Picker CT Scanners at the same site. Id. Nevertheless, the committee reported that:

The CT contract should be awarded to Picker. The Committee felt that the quality of service offered by Picker would be superior to that offered by Mr. Quinn and his company. For example, the problems regarding "down time" due to unavailability of parts, and the recent experience of substandard parts being delivered to Mr. Quinn, would be alleviated using the manufacturer as the repair agent.

Id. As discussed earlier, there is no evidence that Picker improperly caused any problems Imaging had in obtaining parts for the St. Francis Medical Center.⁸ Similarly, there is no evidence to prove that Picker was the source of any substandard parts delivered to Imaging. Thus, the St. Francis Medical Center matter does not present a litigable case of interference with advantageous relations.

⁸ The instance in which Quinn states he was told by Picker that he would have to wait 26 weeks for a replacement part involved a Picker CT Scanner at Computer Design Associates. Quinn Aff., Imaging App., Ex. 1, P 2.

[61] Although Imaging does not make the claim expressly, the court has also considered whether the previously described loss by Imaging of the Los Angeles Veterans Administration contract as a result of the restrictive specifications that required training of service personnel by Picker provides a basis for such a claim. It does not because, as discussed earlier, there is no evidence that Picker improperly caused the restrictive specification to be adopted by the Veterans Administration.

There is, therefore, no litigable claim of interference with advantageous relations presented by the evidence in this case.

3. Defamation.

For the reasons described earlier in connection with Imaging's claims of exclusionary conduct, the evidence is also insufficient to permit a reasonable factfinder to conclude that Picker defamed Imaging. Accordingly, it is not necessary to decide Picker's contention that the defamation claim is barred by the statute of limitations.

4. Mass. Gen. L. ch. 93A and Unfair Competition.

Imaging alleges HN26 [↑] unfair competition which, in Massachusetts, is addressed by Mass. Gen. L. ch. 93A. See, e.g., Smartfoods, Inc. v. Northbrook Property and Casualty Co., 35 Mass. App. Ct. 239, 244-45, 618 N.E.2d 1365 \(Mass. App. Ct. 1993\) [62] (analyzing common law unfair competition claim under the standards of Mass. Gen. L. ch. 93A). To maintain a claim that Mass. Gen. L. ch. 93A has been violated, the events allegedly constituting unfair competition must have occurred "primarily and substantially" in Massachusetts. Clinton Hospital Assoc. v. Corson Group, Inc., 907 F.2d 1260, 1265-66 \(1st Cir. 1990\); Bushkin Associates, Inc. v. Raytheon Co., 393 Mass. 622, 473 N.E.2d 662, 671-72 \(Mass. 1985\); see also [Maruho Co., Ltd. v. Miles, Inc., 1993 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 3321, 1993 WL 81453, *5 \(D. Mass. Mar. 8, 1993\), aff'd, 13 F.3d 6 \[\[*971\]\(#\)\] \(1st Cir. 1993\)](#); Val Leasing, Inc. v. Hutson, 674 F. Supp. 53, 56-57 \(D. Mass. 1987\).

In this case, the evidence demonstrates that virtually all of Picker's purported misconduct, and any harm to Imaging, occurred outside of Massachusetts. Thus, Imaging has failed to present a claim under Mass. Gen. L. ch. 93A which can survive this motion for summary judgment.

III. ORDER.

For the foregoing reasons, Picker's motion for summary judgment on Imaging's counterclaims is hereby ALLOWED.

Mark [63] L. Wolf

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT

Willman v. Heartland Hosp. E.

United States Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit

June 13, 1994, Submitted ; August 29, 1994, Filed

No. 93-3803

Reporter

34 F.3d 605 *; 1994 U.S. App. LEXIS 23507 ; 1994-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P70,698

Charles R. Willman, M.D., Appellant, v. Heartland Hospital East; Heartland Hospital West; Heartland Health System, Inc.; Richard Craig, M.D.; Ernest Weinand, M.D.; Edward Beheler, M.D.; Edward Andres, M.D.; James McMillen, M.D.; Robert Stuber, M.D.; Orlyn Lockard, Jr., M.D.; Charles Mullican, M.D.; Wallace McDonald, M.D.; Steven C. Krueger, M.D., Appellees.

Subsequent History: [\[1\]](#) Certiorari Denied March 20, 1995, Reported at: 1995 U.S. LEXIS 2040.

Prior History: Appeal from the United States District Court for the Western District of Missouri. District No. 89-CV-785. Honorable D. Brooke Bartlett, District Judge.

Disposition: Affirmed.

Core Terms

medical staff, privileges, cases, competitors, staff privileges, antitrust, conspire, motive, peer, Sherman Act, voted, district court, patient care, facilities, alleges, recommended, reviewers, substandard care, summary judgment, board-certified, state-law, terminate, patient, staff, pendent jurisdiction, peer review process, general surgeon, peer review, counterclaim, unanimously

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > De Novo Review

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Appellate Review > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Appellate Review > Standards of Review

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

HN1 Standards of Review, De Novo Review

A court reviews a grant of summary judgment de novo.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Genuine Disputes

34 F.3d 605, *605LÁ994 U.S. App. LEXIS 23507, 1

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Materiality of Facts

HN2 Entitlement as Matter of Law, Genuine Disputes

On a motion for summary judgment, the court must decide whether the record, when viewed in the light most favorable to the nonmoving party, shows that there is no genuine issue of material fact and that the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Horizontal Refusals to Deal > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN3 Sherman Act, Claims

To prove a violation of section one of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, a plaintiff must show an agreement in the form of a contract, combination, or conspiracy that imposes an unreasonable restraint on trade.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Evidence > Inferences & Presumptions > General Overview

HN4 Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Unilateral actions of a single entity do not give rise to antitrust liability under section one of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. §1. Section one of the Act applies only to concerted action. Proof of concerted action requires evidence of a relationship between two or more legally distinct persons or entities.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Evidence > Inferences & Presumptions > General Overview

Healthcare Law > Healthcare Litigation > Antitrust Actions > Physicians

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN5 Sherman Act, Claims

An essential element of a section one Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. §1 violation is proof of an unlawful objective.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

34 F.3d 605, *605LÁ994 U.S. App. LEXIS 23507, 1

Healthcare Law > Business Administration & Organization > Peer Review > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

Healthcare Law > Healthcare Litigation > Antitrust Actions > Physicians

HN6 Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Corrective action against a physician does not violate the antitrust laws if the physician's peer reviewers had legitimate medical reasons to believe that the physician provided substandard care. A factfinder may infer the existence of an illegitimate motive if the peer group's conclusions are so baseless that no reasonable medical practitioner could have reached those conclusions after reviewing the same set of facts.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Horizontal Refusals to Deal > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN7 Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Horizontal Refusals to Deal

Antitrust law limits the range of permissible inferences from ambiguous evidence in a § 1 Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 case. Conduct that is as consistent with a lawful motive as with an unlawful motive, standing alone, does not support the inference of an antitrust conspiracy.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Healthcare Law > Business Administration & Organization > Peer Review > General Overview

HN8 Summary Judgment, Entitlement as Matter of Law

Summary judgment is proper when physician merely alleges that his peer reviewers acted in bad faith and malice.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Horizontal Refusals to Deal > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN9 Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Horizontal Refusals to Deal

The essential facilities doctrine requires those in possession of facilities which cannot practically be duplicated to share those facilities with their competitors.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Horizontal Refusals to Deal > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN10 [down] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Horizontal Refusals to Deal

To prevail under the essential facilities doctrine, the plaintiff must establish (1) control of an essential facility by a monopolist; (2) the inability to practically or economically duplicate the facility; and (3) the unreasonable denial of the use of the facility to a competitor when such use is economically and technically feasible.

Healthcare Law > ... > Actions Against Facilities > Standards of Care > General Overview

Healthcare Law > Business Administration & Organization > Hospital Privileges > General Overview

Healthcare Law > Business Administration & Organization > Hospital Privileges > Restrictions

HN11 [down] Actions Against Facilities, Standards of Care

Terminating the staff privileges of a physician who may be rendering substandard care does not constitute an unreasonable denial of the use of the hospitals' facilities.

Civil Procedure > ... > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Supplemental Jurisdiction > General Overview

HN12 [down] Subject Matter Jurisdiction, Supplemental Jurisdiction

The decision to exercise pendent jurisdiction over state law claims is a matter of discretion for the district court.

Civil Procedure > ... > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Supplemental Jurisdiction > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > Preliminary Proceedings > Pretrial Motions & Procedures > General Overview

HN13 [down] Subject Matter Jurisdiction, Supplemental Jurisdiction

If federal claims are dismissed before trial, even though not insubstantial in a jurisdictional sense, the state claims should be dismissed as well.

Counsel: Counsel who presented argument on behalf of the appellant was David Harlan of St. Louis, MO and Julian Von Kalinowski of Culver City, CA. David Streubel of St. Louis appeared on the brief.

Counsel who presented argument on behalf of the appellee was George E. Leonard of Kansas City, MO. William Quirk and Lisa Eckold of Kansas City, MO appeared on the brief. R. Dan Boulware, and Mark Woodbury of St. Joseph, MO appeared on the brief.

Judges: Before RICHARD S. ARNOLD, Chief Judge, WOLLMAN, Circuit Judge, and WELLFORD, * Senior Circuit Judge.

Opinion by: WOLLMAN

Opinion

* The HONORABLE HARRY W. WELLFORD, Senior United States Circuit Judge for the Sixth Circuit, sitting by designation.

[*607] WOLLMAN, Circuit Judge.

Charles R. Willman, M.D. appeals from the district court's ¹ grant of summary judgment in favor of the defendants, Heartland Hospital East, Heartland Hospital West, and various physicians ² in an antitrust action arising from Willman's loss of medical staff privileges. We affirm.

[2] I.

Willman, a board-certified general surgeon, had medical staff privileges at Methodist Medical Center and St. Joseph Hospital, [*608] the two acute care hospitals in St. Joseph, Missouri. In 1983, the two hospitals affiliated under common ownership. In 1985, Methodist Medical Center became Heartland Hospital West and St. Joseph Hospital became Heartland Hospital East. In 1990, the two hospitals merged.

The events that eventually led to the revocation of Willman's privileges began on February 19, 1982, when Willman treated nineteen-year-old Bobby Fanning, who had been admitted to Methodist Medical Center for treatment of a gunshot wound to the chest. The head nurse of the Critical Care Unit as well as another nurse who had assisted in the treatment of Willman expressed concern to Drs. Stuber and Andres about Willman's treatment of Fanning. Because of the nurses' complaint, Methodist's administrator, Dr. Andres, and Dr. Beheler, a board-certified thoracic surgeon and Chairman of the Intensive Care Subcommittee of the Methodist Critical Care Committee, met to discuss Willman's treatment of Fanning. Dr. Andres decided to contact Dr. Stuber, the Chairman of the Critical Care Committee. [3] Dr. Stuber convened a special meeting of the committee, which concluded that Willman had mismanaged Fanning's treatment. After numerous hearings before various medical staff committees, the Board of Trustees of Methodist Medical Center voted unanimously by secret ballot in favor of a motion stating in part that the finding of the Medical Executive Committee, that Dr. Charles Willman's clinical care of Bobby J. Fanning . . . was clearly different from that of his peers and potentially harmful, was supported by substantial evidence; it is further resolved that the action of the Medical Executive Committee in requiring that Dr. Charles Willman be required to obtain immediate consultation from a Board Certified general surgeon and/or thoracic surgeon on all cases of chest trauma requiring hospitalization and conducting a retrospective review of the Doctor's hospitalization cases for the year 1981 was warranted, appropriate and necessary.

After reviewing Willman's 1981 hospital admissions, the Quality Assurance Committee referred to the Medical Executive Committee eight of the fifty-three cases reviewed. Although the Medical Executive Committee concluded that four cases "did not [4] reflect reasonable clinical judgment about serious clinical data" and cited five cases as examples of Willman's "consistent pattern of deficiency in completion of discharge summaries, history and physical, surgical reports, and progress notes," the committee voted to defer any action pending review of Willman's 1982 cases. The Quality Assurance Committee reviewed Willman's 1982 cases and determined that thirteen of the forty-one cases contained deficiencies. After considering the Quality Assurance Committee's report on the 1982 cases, the Medical Executive Committee adopted a proposal to reprimand Willman, discuss the findings of the Quality Assurance Committee with him, and conduct prospective periodic reviews of his hospital admissions. Willman, however, refused to discuss the proposal with the president of the medical staff. The Medical Executive Committee, therefore, unanimously voted, "based on medical evidence and in the interest of quality patient care," to suspend Willman's privileges. The Methodist Board of Trustees unanimously voted by secret ballot to affirm the committee's suspension of Willman's privileges. Pursuant to the board's instructions, the Medical Executive Committee [5] re-reviewed with Willman the cases that the Quality Assurance Committee had forwarded to it. After this hearing, at which Willman was permitted to present evidence and call witnesses, the Medical Executive Committee determined that in eight of the seventeen reviewed cases Willman had provided substandard care. The committee therefore recommended, and the board agreed, that Willman's privileges should remain suspended.

¹ The Honorable D. Brook Bartlett, United States District Judge for the Western District of Missouri.

² Willman named as defendants ten physicians who had staff privileges at one or both of the defendant hospitals. The defendant physicians are Andres, Beheler, Craig, and Weinand (general surgeons), Krueger, McDonald, McMillen, Mullican, and Stuber (internists), and Lockard (gastroenterologist).

In late 1983, Willman applied to have his medical staff privileges reinstated. Various committees of the medical staff considered the application and recommended denial because Willman had not submitted any evidence indicating that the deficiencies that led to the suspension of his privileges had been corrected. Article II, section three of Methodist's medical staff bylaws in effect in 1983 provided that "the applicant shall provide adequate information for a proper evaluation of his application. If there is any doubt as to [*609] the competence, morals or ethics of the applicant, the burden shall be on him to resolve same." Willman requested and received a hearing before the Medical Executive Committee as well as before the Board of Trustees, following which both bodies voted [6] to deny Willman's application for reinstatement. After a similar review process, Willman's June 1985 application for appointment to the medical staff of Methodist Medical Center (by then known as Heartland Hospital West) was also denied.

Because of Willman's treatment of Fanning, St. Joseph Hospital also reviewed Willman's staff privileges. In August 1982, the Executive Committee of the St. Joseph Board of Directors directed the medical staff to consider the chest trauma consultation requirement that had been placed on Willman at Methodist to determine if a similar requirement would be prudent at St. Joseph. After a series of committee meetings and hearings, the Executive Committee of the medical staff recommended that Willman be required "to obtain immediate consultation from a board-certified general surgeon and/or thoracic surgeon on all cases of chest trauma requiring hospitalization." The Board of Directors voted to adopt this recommendation.

In September 1982, the Chairman of the St. Joseph Board of Directors directed the medical staff to review Willman's cases to determine the appropriateness of his staff privileges. Dr. Weinand, the Chief of Staff and Chairman of the Medical [7] Executive Committee, appointed a special subcommittee to review Willman's 1981 and 1982 cases. The subcommittee forwarded seventeen of the 1981 and 1982 cases to the Medical Executive Committee, which held hearings on May 31 and June 7, 1983. During the hearings, Willman indicated that he would not be willing to take steps to improve his surgical and medical knowledge. The committee then voted to revoke Willman's privileges at St. Joseph Hospital.

Willman then requested an ad hoc hearing. The ad hoc committee members voted to uphold the Medical Executive Committee's decision. Willman appealed to the Board of Directors, and the board appointed an Appellate Review Committee to review the decision. The committee, which consisted of one physician and two laypersons, found that the previous committees had been fair and impartial and that it would be in the best interests of patient care to affirm their decisions. The Board of Directors then voted unanimously by secret ballot to revoke Willman's medical staff privileges at St. Joseph Hospital.

In December 1983, the Circuit Court of Buchanan County, Missouri, ordered that Willman's privileges at St. Joseph Hospital be reinstated. Fourteen [8] months later, however, the Missouri Court of Appeals reversed the Circuit Court's order, and Willman's privileges at St. Joseph were once again revoked. State ex rel. Willman v. St. Joseph Hosp., 684 S.W.2d 408 (Mo. Ct. App. 1984). In June 1985, Willman applied for staff privileges at St. Joseph Hospital (by then known as Heartland Hospital East). Various committees reviewed the application and held hearings, but, as with his applications submitted at Methodist Medical Center, Willman failed to provide evidence of his current qualifications. On November 27, 1985, the Board of Directors upheld the recommendations of the reviewing committees and unanimously voted to deny Willman's application.

Willman then filed this action, which alleged that the defendants had violated sections one and two of the Sherman Act and had interfered without justification in his existing and prospective economic relationships with his patients in violation of state law. The defendant hospitals filed a counterclaim for abuse of process. The district court granted the defendants' motion for summary judgment on the Sherman Act claims and, declining to exercise pendent jurisdiction, [9] dismissed without prejudice Willman's state-law claim and the counterclaim. Willman v. Heartland Hosp. East, 836 F. Supp. 1522 (W.D. Mo. 1993).

II.

HN1 [↑] We review a grant of summary judgment de novo. Grand Island Express v. Timpte Indus., Inc., 28 F.3d 73, 1994 U.S. App. LEXIS 16285, *3 (8th Cir. 1994). HN2 [↑] We must decide whether the record, [*610] when viewed in the light most favorable to the nonmoving party, shows that there is no genuine issue of material fact and that the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. Id.

A. Section One Allegations

HN3 [↑] To prove a violation of section one of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1, a plaintiff must show an agreement in the form of a contract, combination, or conspiracy that imposes an unreasonable restraint on trade.

HN4 [↑] Unilateral actions of a single entity do not give rise to antitrust liability under section one of the Sherman Act. Copperweld Corp. v. Independence Tube Corp., 467 U.S. 752, 769, 81 L. Ed. 2d 628, 104 S. Ct. 2731 (1984). Section one of the Act applies only to concerted action. Fisher v. City of Berkeley, 475 U.S. 260, 266, 89 L. Ed. 2d 206, 106 S. Ct. 1045 (1986); [\[10\] Monsanto Co. v. Spray-Rite Serv. Corp.](#), 465 U.S. 752, 761, 79 L. Ed. 2d 775, 104 S. Ct. 1464 (1984). Proof of concerted action requires evidence of a relationship between two or more legally distinct persons or entities. Copperweld Corp., 467 U.S. at 769. The defendants argue that for purposes of section one a hospital and its medical staff are not separate entities when a medical staff recommends denial or revocation of a physician's staff privileges.

We have not decided whether a hospital has the capacity to conspire with its medical staff. Flegel v. Christian Hosp., Northeast-Northwest, 4 F.3d 682, 685 n.3 (8th Cir. 1993). There is a split among the circuits that have considered the issue. Some courts hold that a hospital and its medical staff are not separate entities for purposes of section one because the medical staff acts as an agent of the hospital during the peer review process. See, e.g., Oksanen v. Page Memorial Hosp., 945 F.2d 696, 703 (4th Cir. 1991) (en banc), cert. denied, 117 L. Ed. 2d 137, 112 S. Ct. 973 (1992); [\[11\] Weiss v. York Hosp.](#), 745 F.2d 786, 817 (3d Cir. 1984), cert. denied, 470 U.S. 1060, 84 L. Ed. 2d 836, 105 S. Ct. 1777 (1985). The Eleventh Circuit, on the other hand, has held that a hospital and the members of its medical staff are legally separate entities capable of conspiring with one another under the Sherman Act. Bolt v. Halifax Hosp. Medical Ctr., 851 F.2d 1273, 1280 (11th Cir. 1988) (subsequent history omitted); cf. Oltz v. St. Peter's Community Hosp., 861 F.2d 1440, 1450 (9th Cir. 1988) (holding that a hospital has the capacity to conspire with members of its medical staff, although not considering the issue in the context of peer review proceedings).

We need not decide whether a hospital can conspire with its medical staff, for even if we assume that the defendant hospitals had the capacity to conspire with their medical staffs, we conclude that Willman's section one claim fails. "Although revocation of a doctor's privileges may, perforce, eliminate competition by decreasing the number of doctors in a given specialty, [\[12\]](#) this alone will not give rise to an antitrust violation." Johnson v. Nyack Hosp., 964 F.2d 116, 121 (2d Cir. 1992). HN5 [↑] An essential element of a section one violation is proof of an unlawful objective. Monsanto Co., 465 U.S. at 768 (requiring proof of a "conscious commitment to a common scheme designed to achieve an unlawful objective"); American Tobacco Co. v. United States, 328 U.S. 781, 810, 90 L. Ed. 1575, 66 S. Ct. 1125 (1946) (stating that "a unity of purpose or a common design and understanding, or a meeting of minds in an unlawful arrangement" is sufficient). Monitoring the competence of physicians through peer review is clearly in the public interest, Lie v. St. Joseph Hosp., 964 F.2d 567, 570 (6th Cir. 1992), and revocation of a physician's privileges because of legitimate concerns about the quality of patient care that he rendered is obviously a lawful objective. Willman contends, however, that the peer review proceedings were a "sham" and that his privileges were terminated to prevent him from [\[13\]](#) competing with the defendants rather than because of concerns about substandard patient care.

We first consider Willman's argument that there is a genuine issue of fact concerning whether the peer review process was a sham. Specifically, Willman contends that the evidence "creates a genuine issue as to whether the peer reviewers reached the wrong result, and, as a consequence, removed a qualified physician." Based upon the record, we agree [*611] with Willman that whether he is a competent physician is in dispute. We do not agree, however, that this factual issue precludes summary judgment. An antitrust action is not the proper forum in which to evaluate a physician's competence. Oksanen, 945 F.2d at 711 ("the antitrust laws were not intended to inhibit hospitals from promoting quality patient care through peer review nor were the laws intended as a vehicle for converting business tort claims into antitrust causes of action.").³ Accordingly, whether Willman actually provided substandard care is not the proper question. Rather, we must decide whether Willman's peer reviewers could have reasonably concluded that he provided substandard care.

[14] Although the record contains evidence from physicians to the effect that in their opinion Willman had provided acceptable care, we nevertheless conclude that it would not have been unreasonable for Willman's peer reviewers to have doubts about the quality of Willman's patient care. Physicians who were not affiliated with the hospital defendants and who did not practice in St. Joseph and therefore did not compete with Willman agreed that in some cases Willman had rendered care that was below the acceptable standard. For example, Dr. Ben McCallister, a board-certified internist and cardiologist, reviewed the charts of nine of Willman's patients and found that three of these patients had received substandard care. Dr. Paul Koontz, a board-certified general surgeon, reviewed eight of Willman's charts and found that Willman's care was deficient in four cases. Dr. Alfred Gervin, who is board certified in general surgery, critical care medicine, and emergency room medicine, concluded that in twenty-three of the thirty-four charts that he had reviewed, Willman had either violated the acceptable standard of care or had rendered "terrible care." Dr. Kenneth Mattox, a board-certified general [15] surgeon and thoracic surgeon, reviewed only the Fanning case and concluded that Willman's "lack of understanding of the potential ramifications to the patient, coupled with his actual mismanagement and mistreatment of the patient, demonstrate a careless and reckless disregard for the patient." Indeed, one of Willman's medical experts concluded that "some of the cases, you know, represent outer edges of what we perceive as standard of care."

HN6 [↑] Corrective action against a physician does not violate the antitrust laws if the physician's peer reviewers had legitimate medical reasons to believe that the physician provided substandard care. Johnson, 964 F.2d at 121. On the other hand, a factfinder may infer the existence of an illegitimate motive if the peer group's conclusions are so baseless that no reasonable medical practitioner could have reached those conclusions after reviewing the same set of facts. Bolt, 891 F.2d 810, 821. HN7 [↑] "Antitrust law" limits the range of permissible inferences from ambiguous evidence in a § 1 case." Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 588, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538, 106 S. Ct. 1348 \(1986\). [16] Conduct that is as consistent with a lawful motive as with an unlawful motive, standing alone, does not support the inference of an antitrust conspiracy. Id.; see also Lovett v. General Motors Corp., 998 F.2d 575, 579 \(8th Cir. 1993\). Although Willman submitted affidavits to the contrary, we conclude that the opinions of Drs. McCallister, Koontz, Gervin, and Mattox established that the peer group's conclusions were not so baseless as to permit the inference of improper motive. Accordingly, we conclude that the limitation and eventual termination of Willman's staff privileges, in light of the conflicting medical opinions regarding the acceptability of Willman's care, is as consistent with the lawful motive of promoting quality patient care as with an anticompetitive motive and therefore, without more, does not give rise to an inference of an antitrust conspiracy.

[*612] Willman contends, however, that the record contains additional evidence of an unlawful motive. He first argues that the participation of his competitors in the peer review process is evidence of such a motive. Although physicians whom Willman alleges were his competitors participated at [17] every stage of the review process,⁴ there is no evidence that the competitors acted in concert to pursue an unlawful motive. The record does indicate that Beheler, one of Willman's competitors, may have been biased against Willman. This evidence does not establish an anticompetitive motive among all of Willman's peer reviewers, however. Willman presented no evidence that any other competitors shared Beheler's sentiments, and Beheler submitted an affidavit stating that he never voted or participated in any deliberations concerning Willman's privileges to practice medicine at either Methodist or St. Joseph or their successors. Furthermore, Willman presented no evidence that Beheler or any other competitors attempted to unduly influence noncompetitor peer reviewers.

³ Recognizing that the possibility of antitrust liability may impede effective peer review, Congress enacted the Health Care Quality Improvement Act of 1986. 42 U.S.C. §§ 11101-11152. The Act immunizes medical peer review from antitrust liability if the challenged action is taken "in the reasonable belief that [it] was in the furtherance of quality health care." Id. § 11112(a). We need not consider the impact of the Act on Willman's claims, for the Act was enacted after the events at issue in this case and is not retroactive.

⁴ Approximately sixty-five physicians participated in the review and evaluation of Willman. Willman claims that forty-three of the reviewers were his competitors because they practiced in one or more of the areas in which Willman practiced: general surgery,

[18] That the hospital boards and not the physicians whom Willman alleges were his competitors had authority to make the final decision concerning Willman's staff privileges further undermines Willman's theory of antitrust liability. Missouri law required that the hospital boards make the final decision. Mo. Code Regs. tit. 13, § 50-20.021(2)(A)15. Each surviving board member who participated in the decisions regarding Willman's staff privileges submitted an affidavit confirming that the boards had made the final decisions concerning Willman's staff privileges and that no physicians had attempted to pressure, coerce, or lobby the board members to terminate Willman's privileges. The affidavits further stated that no physicians had threatened to boycott or retaliate against the hospitals if the boards did not accept the medical staffs' recommendation to terminate Willman's privileges. Willman submitted no evidence to dispute the affidavits.

In addition to arguing that the medical staffs conspired with the defendant hospitals, Willman contends that the members of the medical staffs conspired among themselves to eliminate him as a competitor. Regardless of whether a hospital has the capacity [19] to conspire with members of its medical staff, the staff physicians can conspire among themselves, giving rise to section one liability. See, e.g., Oksanen, 945 F.2d at 706; Bolt, 891 F.2d at 819; Weiss, 745 F.2d at 814. That the members of the medical staff can conspire among themselves, standing alone, however, does not permit a reasonable jury to conclude that the physicians acted in concert in pursuit of an unlawful objective. As we have previously discussed, the physicians' actions during the peer review process are as consistent with the lawful purpose of promoting quality patient care as with the unlawful purpose of eliminating potential competitors. Willman's bare, unsupported allegations that his competitors acted in concert to insulate themselves from competition are not adequate responses to the defendants' summary judgment motion and supporting evidence. See Everett v. St. Ansgar Hosp., 974 F.2d 77, 80 \(8th Cir. 1992\) (holding that HN8 [↑] summary judgment is proper when physician merely alleges that his peer reviewers acted in bad faith and malice).

[20] Accordingly, we conclude that the grant of summary judgment on Willman's section one claims was proper. See Nurse Midwifery Assocs. v. Hibbett, 918 F.2d 605, 617 \(6th Cir. 1990\), cert. denied, 116 L. Ed. 2d 355, 112 S. Ct. 406 (1991).

B. Section Two Allegations

In addition to his section one claim, Willman raised two claims alleging a violation of section two of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 2. Willman alleges that in terminating his staff privileges, the defendants denied him access to the hospitals' facilities, which are essential for him to compete. HN9 [↑] The essential facilities doctrine requires those in possession of facilities which cannot practically [*613] be duplicated to share those facilities with their competitors. City of Malden, Mo. v. Union Elec. Co., 887 F.2d 157, 160 \(8th Cir. 1989\). HN10 [↑] To prevail under the essential facilities doctrine, the plaintiff must establish "(1) control of an essential facility by a monopolist; (2) the inability to practically or economically duplicate the facility; and (3) the unreasonable denial of the use of [21] the facility to a competitor when such use is economically and technically feasible." Id.

The defendants argue that the essential facilities doctrine does not apply to a hospital's facilities in a staff privilege revocation case. We need not decide this question, however, for, as we have discussed above, the defendants' concerns about the care provided by Willman were legitimate. HN11 [↑] Terminating the staff privileges of a physician who may be rendering substandard care does not constitute an unreasonable denial of the use of the hospitals' facilities.

Willman also asserts a section two claim for monopoly leveraging. The elements of a monopoly-leveraging claim are (1) monopoly power in one market, (2) the use of that power, however lawfully acquired, to foreclose competition, to gain a competitive advantage, or to destroy a competitor in another distinct market, and (3) injury caused by the challenged conduct. Carleton v. Vermont Dairy Herd Improvement Ass'n, 782 F. Supp. 926 \(D. Vt. 1991\). The defendants contend that the doctrine is not applicable in the present case and, alternatively, that monopoly leveraging is not an independent basis for liability [22] under section two of the Sherman Act. Assuming that monopoly leveraging is a cognizable section two claim, we agree that Willman has failed to show that the doctrine is applicable. As we have already discussed, Willman did not present sufficient evidence to support his allegations that the defendants acted with an anticompetitive motive. Accordingly, he cannot satisfy the second element.

C. Pendent Jurisdiction

Having disposed of all of the federal claims, the district court declined to exercise jurisdiction over the remaining state-law claim and the counterclaim. Willman argues that the district court should not have declined to exercise supplemental jurisdiction. The proper question, however, is whether the district court should have exercised pendent jurisdiction over the state-law claim and the counterclaim. The Judicial Improvements Act of 1990 codified the former common law doctrines of pendent and ancillary jurisdiction under the new rubric of supplemental jurisdiction. See 28 U.S.C. § 1367. See also McLaurin v. Prater, 30 F.3d 982, 1994 U.S. App. LEXIS 18619, *6 (8th Cir. 1994). The Act applies to actions commenced on or [23] after December 1, 1990. This action was commenced in 1989, so we review the district court's ruling on this issue under pre-Act case law.

HN12 [↑] "The decision to exercise pendent jurisdiction over state law claims is a matter of discretion for the district court." Hassett v. Lemay Bank & Trust Co., 851 F.2d 1127, 1130 \(8th Cir. 1988\). In United Mine Workers v. Gibbs, the Supreme Court recognized that HN13 [↑] "if the federal claims are dismissed before trial, even though not insubstantial in a jurisdictional sense, the state claims should be dismissed as well." 383 U.S. 715, 726 \(1966\). Willman nevertheless contends that because the parties had completed a lengthy and complex discovery process and because the district court granted the defendants' motion for summary judgment less than two weeks before trial, the district court should have exercised jurisdiction over the state-law claims. Recognizing the district court's broad discretion in deciding whether to exercise pendent jurisdiction, we have upheld the refusal to exercise jurisdiction over a state-law claim even though the federal claims were disposed of late in the proceedings and [24] the court had already devoted significant judicial resources to the state claim. Marshall v. Green Giant Co., 942 F.2d 539, 549 \(8th Cir. 1991\). So also in this case, we hold that the district court did not abuse its discretion by declining to exercise jurisdiction over the state-law claim and counterclaim in this case, a decision that we note would have fallen within one of the exceptions to the exercise of supplemental jurisdiction contained in the [*614] 1990 Act. See 28 U.S.C. § 1367\(c\)\(3\); McLaurin, slip op. at 6.

The judgment is affirmed.

Concur by: HARRY W. WELLFORD

Concur

WELLFORD, Senior Circuit Judge, concurring.

I join in Judge Wollman's comprehensive opinion, except that I would join the Fourth Circuit (en banc) and the Third Circuit in concluding that for Sherman Act purposes, absent special circumstances not present in this case, "the peer review process does not represent the sudden joining of independent economic forces that section one [of the Sherman Act] is designed to deter and to penalize." Oksanen v. Page Memorial Hospital, 945 F.2d 696, 703 \(4th Cir. 1991\) (en banc), cert. denied, 117 L. Ed. 2d 137, 112 S. Ct. 973 (1992). [25] See also Weiss v. York Hospital, 745 F.2d 786, 814 \(3d Cir. 1984\), cert. denied, 470 U.S. 1060, 84 L. Ed. 2d 836, 105 S. Ct. 1777 (1985).

Accordingly, I would conclude that the medical staffs and review committees of the defendant hospitals, as a matter of law, cannot be held to conspire with the hospitals in conducting a good faith peer review of a staff member whose medical conduct is under investigation.

End of Document

S-2 Yachts v. WMJB Marine

United States District Court for the Western District of Michigan

August 30, 1994, Decided ; August 31, 1994, Filed

File No. 1:93:CV:535

Reporter

1994 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 14725 *

S-2 YACHTS, INC., a Michigan corporation, Plaintiff, v. WMJB MARINE, INC., a Florida corporation d/b/a Palm Beach Yacht Center, Defendant.

Core Terms

arbitration, antitrust claim, parties, termination, antitrust, arbitration clause, disputes, Dealer, anti trust law, nonarbitrable, Manufacturer, contends, state court, summary judgment motion, statutory claim, Counts

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Motions for Summary Judgment > General Overview

HN1[

In reviewing a motion for summary judgment pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 56\(c\), the court should only consider the narrow questions of whether there are genuine issues as to any material fact and whether the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. On a Rule 56 motion, the court cannot resolve issues of fact, but is empowered to determine only whether there are issues in dispute to be decided in a trial on the merits. The crux of the motion is whether the evidence presents a sufficient disagreement to require submission to a jury or whether it is so one-sided that one party must prevail as a matter of law.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Opposing Materials > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

HN2[

A motion for summary judgment requires the court to view inferences to be drawn from the underlying facts in the light most favorable to the party opposing the motion. On the other hand, the opponent has the burden to show that a rational trier of fact could find for the non-moving party or that there is a genuine issue for trial.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

HN3[] Summary Judgment, Entitlement as Matter of Law

Recent United States Supreme Court decisions encourage the granting of summary judgments where there are no material facts in dispute.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

HN4[] Summary Judgment, Entitlement as Matter of Law

The summary judgment motion may be an appropriate avenue for the just, speedy and inexpensive determination' of a matter. Consistent with the concern for judicial economy, the mere existence of a scintilla of evidence in support of the non-moving party's positions will be insufficient. Mere allegations do not suffice. The party with the burden of proof at trial is obligated to provide concrete evidence supporting its claims and establishing the existence of a genuine issue of fact.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Contracts Law > Contract Conditions & Provisions > Arbitration Clauses

Civil Procedure > ... > Arbitration > Federal Arbitration Act > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Pretrial Matters > Alternative Dispute Resolution > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Alternative Dispute Resolution > Arbitration > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Pretrial Matters > Alternative Dispute Resolution > Mandatory ADR

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Pretrial Matters > Alternative Dispute Resolution > Validity of ADR Methods

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Contracts Law > Breach > Nonperformance

International Trade Law > Dispute Resolution > International Commercial Arbitration > Arbitration

HN5[] Contract Conditions & Provisions, Arbitration Clauses

The Federal Arbitration Act, 9 U.S.C.S. §§ 1-16, provides that a party aggrieved by the alleged failure neglect, or refusal of another to arbitrate under a written agreement for arbitration may petition any United States district court which, save for such agreement, would have jurisdiction under Title 28, in a civil action of the subject matter of a suit arising out of the controversy between the parties, for an order directing that such arbitration proceed in the manner provided for in such agreement. The court shall hear the parties, and upon being satisfied that the making of the agreement for arbitration or the failure to comply therewith is not in issue, the court shall make an order directing the parties to proceed to arbitration in accordance with the terms of the agreement. The hearing and proceedings under such agreement shall be within the district in which the petition for an order directing such arbitration is filed. If the making of the arbitration agreement or the failure, neglect, or refusal to perform the same is in issue, the court shall proceed summarily to the trial thereof. 9 U.S.C.S. § 4.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Contracts Law > Contract Conditions & Provisions > Arbitration Clauses

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Pretrial Matters > Alternative Dispute Resolution > Mandatory ADR

HN6 [down arrow] Contract Conditions & Provisions, Arbitration Clauses

Although it is created by contract, the duty to arbitrate does not necessarily end when the contract is terminated.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Alternative Dispute Resolution > Arbitration > Arbitrability

Civil Procedure > ... > Alternative Dispute Resolution > Arbitration > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Arbitration > Federal Arbitration Act > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Arbitration > Federal Arbitration Act > Arbitration Agreements

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Arbitration > Federal Arbitration Act > Scope

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Pretrial Matters > Alternative Dispute Resolution > Mandatory ADR

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Contracts Law > Contract Conditions & Provisions > Arbitration Clauses

International Trade Law > Dispute Resolution > International Commercial Arbitration > Arbitration

HN7 [down arrow] Arbitration, Arbitrability

The arbitrability determination is to be made by applying the federal substantive law of arbitrability, applicable to any arbitration agreement within the coverage of the Federal Arbitration Act, 9 U.S.C.S. §§ 1-16. Any doubts concerning the scope of arbitrable issues should be resolved in favor of arbitration. The parties' intentions control, but those intentions are generously construed as to issues of arbitrability.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Contracts Law > Contract Conditions & Provisions > Arbitration Clauses

Civil Procedure > ... > Alternative Dispute Resolution > Arbitration > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Statutory Remedies & Rights

Civil Procedure > Pretrial Matters > Alternative Dispute Resolution > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Arbitration > Federal Arbitration Act > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Arbitration > Federal Arbitration Act > Arbitration Agreements

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Pretrial Matters > Alternative Dispute Resolution > Mandatory ADR

International Trade Law > Dispute Resolution > International Commercial Arbitration > Arbitration

HN8 [down arrow] Contract Conditions & Provisions, Arbitration Clauses

Although arbitration clauses in contracts are most often contemplated for resolving disputes of contract interpretation and possible breaches, the Federal Arbitration Act itself provides no basis for disfavoring agreements to arbitrate statutory claims by skewing the otherwise hospitable inquiry into arbitration. 9 U.S.C.S. §§ 1-16. The federal policy favoring arbitration is not diminished when a party bound by an agreement raises a claim founded on statutory rights. On the other hand, not all controversies implicating statutory rights are suitable for arbitration. The court must conduct a two-step inquiry, first determining whether the parties' agreement to arbitrate reached the statutory issues, and then upon finding it did, considering whether legal constraints external to the parties' agreement foreclosed the arbitration of those claims.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Pretrial Matters > Alternative Dispute Resolution > Mandatory ADR

HN9 Regulated Practices, Private Actions

Domestic antitrust claims are arbitrable.

Judges: [*1] ENSLEN

Opinion by: RICHARD A. ENSLEN

Opinion

OPINION

This matter is before the Court on petitioner's motion for summary judgment to decide petition to compel arbitration. Also, respondent has moved to dismiss the petition. This matter relates to the complaint filed by respondent in the Palm Beach County, Florida Circuit Court, case no. CA 92-9937 AH, against petitioner and two other corporations.

FACTS

Petitioner is a manufacturer of boats and yachts under the trade name "Tiara Yachts." In June 1991, it entered into an exclusive Dealer Agreement with respondent. Respondent's territory initially covered Palm Beach County and later was expanded to include Martin County. The Agreement was terminated in November 1991. Petitioner contends that the termination was by mutual agreement. Respondent contends that petitioner unilaterally and unlawfully terminated the contract after effectively shifting respondent's territory to one of two corporations who were also Tiara dealers in Southeast Florida. These two corporations were also named as defendants in the state court suit.

In its suit in the Florida court, respondent contends that petitioner breached the contract by wrongfully terminating it. Also, respondent [*2] contends that petitioner combined or conspired with the two other defendants to procure termination of the Dealer Agreement and allow either or both of these other defendants to have a monopoly on the Tiara Yacht market in Southeast Florida. The amended complaint contends that these actions constitute restraints of trade in violation of the state's antitrust laws, Fla. Stat. ch. 542.18 and 542.19. There is no allegation of a violation of federal antitrust laws.

Counts II and III of the state suit are directed solely at the other two defendants, alleging that they tortiously interfered with a contractual and advantageous business relationship between petitioner and respondent.

The Dealer Agreement between petitioner and respondent includes an arbitration clause, in paragraph 16, entitled "Dispute Resolution" which provides as follows:

In the event a dispute arises between the parties with respect to the interpretation, performance or breach of this Agreement, or any legal obligation between the parties arising out of their relationship as described herein, or with respect to a decision by Manufacturer not to renew this Agreement, that cannot be resolved between Dealer and Manufacturer's [*3] representative who is the regular contact responsible for Dealer, Manufacturer agrees not to terminate this Agreement, or implement its decision not to renew, until Manufacturer has first given Dealer an opportunity to discuss the matter directly with Manufacturer's Vice President of Sales. Any dispute that is not resolved pursuant to the foregoing procedure shall be resolved exclusively by arbitration under the Rules for Commercial Arbitration promulgated by the American Arbitration Association. The arbitration shall be conducted in Grand Rapids, Michigan, and the award shall be final and binding on the parties, enforceable in any court of competent jurisdiction. The arbitration award shall designate which party is the prevailing party, and that party shall be reimbursed its reasonable attorney fees by other party.

Also, the Agreement, in paragraph 19, contains an integration clause entitled "Entire Agreement that provides: "this agreement contains the entire Agreement between parties with respect to its subject matter, and this Agreement may be amended or modified only by written instrument signed by both parties."

Standard for Summary Judgment

HN1[] In reviewing a motion for summary [*4] judgment pursuant to Rule 56, this Court should only consider the narrow questions of whether there are "genuine issues as to any material fact and [whether] the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law." Fed. R. Civ. P. 56\(c\). On a Rule 56 motion, the Court cannot resolve issues of fact, but is empowered to determine only whether there are issues in dispute to be decided in a trial on the merits. Gutierrez v. Lynch, 826 F.2d 1534, 1536 (6th Cir. 1987); In re Atlas Concrete Pipe, Inc., 668 F.2d 905, 908 (6th Cir. 1982).

The crux of the motion is "whether the evidence presents a sufficient disagreement to require submission to a jury or whether it is so one-sided that one party must prevail as a matter of law." Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc., 477 U.S. 242, 251-52, 91 L. Ed. 2d 202, 106 S. Ct. 2505 (1986); Booker v. Brown & Williamson Tobacco Co., Inc., 879 F.2d 1304, 1310 (6th Cir. 1989).

HN2[] A motion for summary judgment requires this Court to view "inferences to be drawn from the underlying facts . . . in the light [*5] most favorable to the party opposing the motion." Matsushita Electric Ind. Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 587, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538, 106 S. Ct. 1348 (1986) (quoting United States v. Diebold, Inc., 369 U.S. 654, 655, 8 L. Ed. 2d 176, 82 S. Ct. 993 (1962)), quoted in Historic Preservation Guild v. Burnley, 896 F.2d 985, 993 (6th Cir. 1989). On the other hand, the opponent has the burden to show that a "rational trier of fact [could] find for the non-moving party [or] that there is a 'genuine issue for trial.'" Historic Preservation, 896 F.2d at 993 (quoting Matsushita, 475 U.S. at 587).

As the Sixth Circuit has recognized and consistently emphasized, HN3[] recent Supreme Court decisions encourage the granting of summary judgments where there are no material facts in dispute. Historic Preservation, 896 F.2d at 993 (citing Celotex Corp. v. Catrett, 477 U.S. 317, 91 L. Ed. 2d 265, 106 S. Ct. 2548 (1986); [*6] Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc., 477 U.S. 242, 91 L. Ed. 2d 202, 106 S. Ct. 2505 (1986)).

The courts have noted that HN4[] the summary judgment motion may be an "appropriate avenue for the 'just, speedy and inexpensive determination' of a matter." Cloverdale Equipment Co. v. Simon Aerials, Inc., 869 F.2d 934, 937 (6th Cir. 1989) (quoting Celotex, 477 U.S. at 327). Consistent with the concern for judicial economy, "the mere existence of a scintilla of evidence in support of the [non-moving party's] positions will be insufficient." Anderson, 477 U.S. at 252. "Mere allegations do not suffice." Cloverdale, 869 F.2d at 937. "The party with the burden of proof at trial is obligated to provide concrete evidence supporting its claims and establishing the existence of a genuine issue of fact." Id.

DISCUSSION

The facts relevant to the determination of whether to compel arbitration do not appear to be in dispute.¹ As set forth above, the contract clearly [*7] has a broadly worded arbitration clause and an integration clause. The lawsuit in the Florida court, as it is directed at petitioner, clearly concerns a breach of contract claim and two counts alleging antitrust violations related to the allegedly wrongful termination of the contract and the transference of the Palm Beach and Martin County market territories to other dealers. Finally, petitioner agrees that Magistrate Judge Rowland was correct in holding that the claims asserted against the other dealers, Counts II and III, are not subject to the arbitration agreement between petitioner and respondent.

As an initial matter, the Court must determine whether the arbitration clause is valid and enforceable. If so, then the Court must decide whether the breach of contract claim [*8] and the state-based antitrust claims must be arbitrated in Grand Rapids. The antitrust issue involves determining whether such claims are arbitrable and whether the existence of codefendants who are not subject to arbitration has any effect on whether the claims, as between petitioner and respondent, must be arbitrated.

Federal Arbitration Act

Petitioner seeks to compel arbitration under the Federal Arbitration Act, 9 U.S.C. §§ 1-16. HN5↑ The Act provides as follows:

A party aggrieved by the alleged failure neglect, or refusal of another to arbitrate under a written agreement for arbitration may petition any United States district court which, save for such agreement, would have jurisdiction under Title 28, in a civil action . . . of the subject matter of a suit arising out of the controversy between the parties, for an order directing that such arbitration proceed in the manner provided for in such agreement. . . . The court shall hear the parties, and upon being satisfied that the making of the agreement for arbitration or the failure to comply therewith is not in issue, the court shall make an order directing the parties to proceed to arbitration [*9] in accordance with the terms of the agreement. The hearing and proceedings, under such agreement, shall be within the district in which the petition for an order directing such arbitration is filed. If the making of the arbitration agreement or the failure, neglect, or refusal to perform the same be in issue, the court shall proceed summarily to the trial thereof.

9 U.S.C. § 4.

Respondent contends that no valid agreement to arbitrate exists because of the alleged unilateral repudiation of the Agreement by petitioner. It asserts that by terminating the contract, petitioner invalidated the Agreement, including the arbitration provision, by acting inconsistent with the terms of the Agreement.

It is notable that respondent, in its motion to dismiss, stated that petitioner's actions terminating the Agreement were unilateral and that petitioner cited "none of the enumerated conditions for termination" that are set out in the Agreement.

I agree with petitioner that respondent's position on this particular issue is untenable. The arbitration provision sets forth a mechanism for deciding disputes concerning whether provisions of the contract have been violated. [*10] Here, respondent has filed suit alleging that petitioner wrongfully terminated the contract by not citing any of the enumerated reasons in the contract which would permit such a termination and because the termination was done for illegal purposes.

As the Sixth Circuit has stated: HN6↑ "although it is created by contract, the duty to arbitrate does not necessarily end when the contract is terminated." Aspero v. Shearson American Express, 768 F.2d 106, 108 (6th Cir.), cert. denied, 474 U.S. 1026, 88 L. Ed. 2d 564, 106 S. Ct. 582 (1985). By its terms, the arbitration clause applies to disputes concerning the "interpretation, performance or breach" of the Agreement, as well as "any legal obligation between the parties arising out of their relationship." Clearly, the arbitration clause is not rendered invalid as a result of a termination that is allegedly contrary to the terms of the Agreement.

¹ Clearly, the parties do not agree on the facts as they relate to the underlying claims in the state case. However, these disagreements do not appear to be material to the determination of whether the claims against petitioner must be arbitrated.

Respondent contends that petitioner is attempting to use the contract as both a "sword" and a "shield" by invoking terms that are beneficial while repudiating the remaining terms. It claims that enforcing the [*11] arbitration clause would be inequitable.

Notably, respondent does not argue that the arbitration clause was included in the contract over its objections, such as might be the result of unequal bargaining power. Apparently, the clause was bargained for as a mutually agreed upon means of resolving possible future disputes related to the business relationship of the two parties. It certainly has not been shown that compelling the use of the arbitration mechanism agreed upon by respondent would be inequitable. I find that the arbitration clause remains fully enforceable.

Arbitrability of claims

The next issue is whether the contract claim or the state-based antitrust claims are within the scope of the arbitration provision and are, in fact, arbitrable. This Court must determine whether the "parties agreed to arbitrate [the disputes]." Mitsubishi Motors Corp. v. Soler Chrysler-Plymouth, Inc., 473 U.S. 614, 626, 87 L. Ed. 2d 444, 105 S. Ct. 3346 \(1985\).

HN7 [↑] The arbitrability determination is to be made by "applying the 'federal substantive law of arbitrability, applicable to any arbitration agreement within the coverage of the Act.'" [*12] Id. (quoting Moses H. Cone Memorial Hospital v. Mercury Construction Corp., 460 U.S. 1, 24, 74 L. Ed. 2d 765, 103 S. Ct. 927 \(1983\)). "Any doubts concerning the scope of arbitrable issues should be resolved in favor of arbitration . . ." Id. (quoting Moses, 460 U.S. at 24-25). "The parties intentions control, but those intentions are generously construed as to issues of arbitrability." Id.

Wrongful Termination of Contract

Respondent's state court suit, in Count I, alleges that petitioner terminated the contract in violation of the provisions of the Agreement. Clearly, this dispute is squarely within the scope of the arbitration provision discussed above. Therefore, pursuant to the Federal Arbitration Act, the dispute in Count I of the state case must be arbitrated pursuant to the terms of the Agreement.

State Antitrust Issues

Respondent, in Counts IV and V of the amended complaint, alleges that petitioner and the two other defendants combined or conspired to terminate the contract with respondent and to create a monopoly over the Tiara Yacht [*13] market in Southeast Florida for one or both of the defendants who were dealers. These actions were alleged to violate Florida's antitrust statutes, Fla. Stat. ch. 542.18 and 542.19, not federal statutes.

HN8 [↑] Although arbitration clauses in contracts are most often contemplated for resolving disputes of contract interpretation and possible breaches, the Federal Arbitration Act "itself provides no basis for disfavoring agreements to arbitrate statutory claims by skewing the otherwise hospitable inquiry into arbitration." Mitsubishi, 473 U.S. at 627. The "federal policy favoring arbitration . . . is not diminished when a party bound by an agreement raises a claim founded on statutory rights." Nghiem v. NEC Electronic, Inc. 25 F.3d 1437, 1442 \(9th Cir. 1994\) (quoting Shearson/American Express v. McMahon, 482 U.S. 220, 226, 96 L. Ed. 2d 185, 107 S. Ct. 2332 \(1987\)).

On the other hand, "not all controversies implicating statutory rights are suitable for arbitration." Mitsubishi, 473 U.S. at 627. [*14] The Court must conduct a "two-step inquiry, first determining whether the parties' agreement to arbitrate reached the statutory issues, and then upon finding it did, considering whether legal constraints external to the parties' agreement foreclosed the arbitration of those claims." Id. at 628.

In Mitsubishi, the Court stated that "insofar as the allegations underlying the statutory claims touch matters covered by the enumerated articles, the Court of Appeals properly resolved any doubts in favor of arbitrability." Id. at 625 n. 13.

Respondent provides no argument that the broadly worded arbitration clause would not cover statutory claims. Paragraph 16 provides that arbitration would apply to "any dispute" concerning interpretation, performance, obligations, or non-renewal by the manufacturer would be subject to arbitration that had not been resolved by the less formal methods earlier specified in that paragraph. I believe that the clause can fairly be considered to include disputes as to whether actions and inactions by petitioner constitute violations of state [*15] antitrust laws. In any case, the paragraph is so broadly worded that it cannot be said that the parties intended to exclude antitrust claims from being resolved through the arbitration procedure.

Respondent cites two state court cases for the proposition that a Florida antitrust claim is not arbitrable. See Sabates v. International Medical Centers, Inc., 450 So.2d 514 \(Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 1984\) and Montgomery Distributors, Inc. v. G. Heileman Brewing Co., Inc., 505 So.2d 443 \(Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 1986\).

Petitioner asserts that Mitsubishi foreclosed states from having the power to require a judicial forum for antitrust claims by holding that "any contention that the local anti-trust claims are non-arbitrable would be foreclosed by this court's decision in Southland Corp. v. Keating . . . where we held that the Federal Arbitration Act 'withdrew the power of the states to require a judicial forum for the resolution of claims which the contracting parties agreed to resolve by arbitration.'" Mitsubishi, 473 U.S. at 623 n. 10 (quoting Southland, 465 U.S. 1, 10 \(1984\)). [*16]

I agree with petitioner that, pursuant to Mitsubishi and the Supremacy Clause, the Florida court decisions do not bind this Court to find the state antitrust statutory claims nonarbitrable. However, I also do not find that Mitsubishi affirmatively held that state antitrust claims were always arbitrable. In fact, the Court specifically held that it found it "unnecessary to assess the legitimacy of the American Safety Equipment Corp. v. J. P. Maguire & Co., 391 F.2d 821 (2nd Cir. 1968)" doctrine as applied to agreements to arbitrate arising from domestic transactions." Id. at 629.

Mitsubishi reasoned that respect for foreign tribunals and sensitivity to the need of the international commercial system for predictability in the resolution of disputes, combined with skepticism concerning the reasoning relied upon in American Safety in finding federal antitrust claims to be nonarbitrable, led to the conclusion that the agreement to submit disputes to arbitration should be enforced. Id. at 629, 632-33. Here, there are no concerns about respect for international commercial systems or tribunals. Therefore, I find that the arbitrability [*17] of the state antitrust statutory claims remains an open issue. However, I also find that many of the statements in Mitsubishi are instructive on this issue.²

[*18] Respondent cites some state court decisions which indicated that Florida antitrust statutes are based on the federal statutes. See, e.g., Sabates, 450 So.2d at 516-17. In Sabates, the court found the state antitrust laws to be non-arbitrable by relying on federal authority holding that federal antitrust laws were not arbitrable. Id. Florida courts have reaffirmed this holding since Mitsubishi. Montgomery, 505 So.2d at 445 (holding that Mitsubishi recognized the continued viability of American Safety concerning the nonarbitrability of domestic antitrust claims); and Noe v. Dean, Witter, Reynolds, Inc., 599 So.2d 786 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 1986).

² Because the parties had not, in their original briefs, discussed substantive reasons concerning whether antitrust claims should or should not be considered arbitrable, this Court, on July 7, 1994, ordered the parties to brief the issue. Although the parties filed supplemental briefs, respondent's brief provides absolutely no reasons to this Court for finding antitrust claims non-arbitrable, contrary to the Order. Instead, respondent merely rehashes the argument in its original brief that Mitsubishi did not expressly overrule American Safety. Perhaps counsel for respondent agrees with the holding in Nghiem and the criticisms of American Safety included in Mitsubishi. The brief provides no counter-argument, presumably relying on the arguments in American Safety itself as sufficient rebuttal. Perhaps, respondent is also relying also on the dissent in Mitsubishi, although it never refers to the legislative history and policy arguments raised by the dissent in opposing the arbitrability of federal antitrust claims.

Respondent appears to argue that because the state antitrust claims are of the same nature as federal antitrust claims, the resolution of the issue of arbitrability of a state claim should mirror the resolution of similar federal claims. Respondent also asserts that forum shopping problems would arise should this Court accept petitioner's invitation to find state antitrust claims arbitrable when federal antitrust claims are not arbitrable.

[*19] Certainly, petitioner is correct that Mitsubishi makes clear that state law is preempted should it seek to require a judicial forum for resolving antitrust claims, while federal law remains free to require a judicial forum. However, as noted above, this does not resolve the issue of whether antitrust claims are appropriate for resolution by arbitration.

I agree with respondent that if an antitrust claim based upon federal law which is similar to the state antitrust claims actually brought by respondent would not be arbitrable, then, in the absence of international concerns present in Mitsubishi, the resolution of the arbitrability issue should be the same with respect to the state-based claims. However, in light of Mitsubishi's criticisms of the reasoning in American Safety, and the very recent opinion from the Ninth Circuit in Nghiem, I am not convinced that a similar claim based on federal antitrust law would be nonarbitrable.

The issue of the arbitrability of federal antitrust claims is not before this Court. However, I note that neither party nor this Court's own research has found any binding precedent on that issue. Rather, American Safety, a Second Circuit [*20] case from 1968, is relied upon by respondent for the proposition that federal antitrust claims are nonarbitrable. Other subsequent cases cited in the briefs relied upon American Safety as the basis for also finding nonarbitrability.

In Mitsubishi, the Supreme Court, in weighing the international concerns against possible non-arbitrability, considered what it found to be the four ingredients to the American Safety holding that antitrust claims were not arbitrable: 1) private parties play a pivotal role in aiding enforcement of antitrust laws by private actions for treble damages; 2) the strong possibility that contracts which generate antitrust disputes may be contracts of adhesion militates against automatic forum determination by contract; 3) antitrust issues, prone to complication, require sophisticated legal and economic analysis and are ill-adapted to strengths of the arbitral process -- such as simplicity, expedition, minimal need for written rationale, resort to basic common sense, and simple equity; and 4) decisions as to antitrust regulation of business are too important to be lodged in arbitrators chosen from the business community. Id. at 632; see also, Nghiem, 25 F.3d at 1442. [*21]

The Supreme Court stated that the second of these concerns was unjustified as the party seeking to resist enforcement of an arbitration clause "may attack directly the validity of the agreement to arbitrate" or attack the location of the selected forum as being "so gravely . . . inconvenient" that it would deprive it of its day in court. Id. As to the issue of complexity, the Court noted that the subject matter may be taken into account when arbitrators are selected and that experts typically may be employed or appointed under arbitral rules. Id. at 633. The Court determined that complexity alone was not enough to persuade it that an arbitral tribunal could not properly handle an antitrust matter. Id.

The Mitsubishi Court also rejected the proposition that an "arbitration panel will pose too great a danger of innate hostility to the constraints on business conduct that antitrust law imposes." Id. at 634. Finding that arbitrators were "frequently drawn from the legal as well as the business community," and so declined "to indulge the presumption that the parties and arbitral body conducting a proceeding [would] be unable or unwilling to retain competent, conscientious, [*22] and impartial arbitrators." Id.

Finally, with regard to the importance of the private right of action in the enforcement of antitrust laws, Mitsubishi found that such importance did "not compel the conclusion that it may not be sought outside an American court." Id. at 635. The Court noted that there was "no reason to assume at the outset of the dispute that . . . arbitration [would] not provide an adequate mechanism." Id. at 636. It noted that the arbitral body "should be bound to decide the dispute in accord with the . . . law giving rise to the claim." Id. "So long as the prospective litigant effectively may vindicate its statutory cause of action in the arbitral forum, the statute will continue to serve both its remedial and deterrent function." Id.

The dissent in Mitsubishi noted that as of 1985, the six circuits to consider the arbitrability issue had all ruled that federal antitrust claims were not subject to arbitration. Id. at 656 (Stevens, J., dissenting). Justice Stevens stated that the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1, provided for a special statutory enforcement scheme, and such special remedies have repeatedly been [*23] held to render private agreements to arbitrate violations of the act unenforceable. Id. at 650.

Justice Stevens noted that the mandatory treble damages provision was intended to encourage private enforcement of the Sherman Act, as well as to deter potential violators. Id. at 653. He also noted that the Sherman Act provides that such a treble-damages case can only be brought in the federal district courts, not the state courts. He reasons that because jurisdiction was denied to the state courts, then it should be clear that private arbitrators should not be able to assume such jurisdiction.

I must disagree with Justice Stevens. I find no reason why the purposes of the antitrust acts would be undermined by parties agreeing to submit their disputes to an impartial arbitration panel, rather than the courts. As the majority opinion in Mitsubishi noted, private parties in a suit in federal court need "no executive or judicial approval before settling . . ." Id. at 636. If parties choose, in advance, to submit disputes to a procedure intended to streamline disposition and to minimize costs which would be incurred, I perceive no harm to the public interest. The antitrust claim [*24] has not been foreclosed; just the forum has been changed, as agreed by the parties.

The court in Nghiem found that Mitsubishi effectively overruled American Safety and its progeny, including a previously-decided Ninth Circuit case that held against arbitrability of antitrust claims. 25 F.3d at 1441-42 (referring to Lake Communications, Inc. v. ICC Corp., 738 F.2d 1473 \(9th Cir. 1984\)). It found that arbitrators are not precluded from entertaining federal antitrust claims, overruling Lake Communications. Id. at 1442. Recently, a district court within the Second Circuit found that in light of Mitsubishi, the Second Circuit, which authored American Safety, would now probably hold that domestic antitrust claims are arbitrable. Syscomm International Corp. v. SynOptics Communications, Inc., 856 F. Supp. 135 No. CV 94-2025, 1994 WL 288484 at *4 (E.D. N.Y. June 28, 1994). I agree with Nghiem and Syscomm that HN9 domestic antitrust claims are arbitrable. As noted above, I believe that there is no reason to treat state antitrust claims differently from federally-based claims [*25] concerning the determination of arbitrability.

Finally, I note that the existence of third parties in the Florida suit does not alter the arbitrability determination as the Florida case can be stayed pending arbitration. See Sibley v. Tandy Corp., 543 F.2d 540, 542-44 \(5th Cir. 1976\), cert. denied, 434 U.S. 824, 54 L. Ed. 2d 82, 98 S. Ct. 71 (1977).

Consequently, I find that the state antitrust claims, as well as the contract claim, are arbitrable. The parties agreed to arbitrate such claims in Grand Rapids, Michigan. Pursuant to the Federal Arbitration Act, these claims should be arbitrated as agreed in the contract. Therefore, petitioner's motion to compel arbitration is granted, and respondent's motion to dismiss the petition is denied.

DATED in Kalamazoo, MI:

August 30, 1994

RICHARD A. ENSLEN

U.S. District Judge

JUDGMENT - August 31, 1994, Filed

In accordance with the Opinion entered this date;

IT IS HEREBY ORDERED that petitioner's motion for summary judgment, filed March 31, 1994 (dkt. # 16), is GRANTED;

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that respondent's motion to dismiss the petition, filed [*26] August 16, 1993 (dkt. # 4), is DENIED;

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that the petition for an order compelling arbitration, filed July 7, 1993 (dkt. # 1), is GRANTED;

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that Counts I, IV, and V of respondent's complaint against petitioner that is being tried in the Florida Circuit Court, case no. CA 92-9937 AH, shall be submitted to arbitration in accordance with the contract provisions and the Federal Arbitration Act.

DATED in Kalamazoo, MI:

August 31, 1994

RICHARD A. ENSLEN

U.S. District Judge

End of Document

Serfecz v. Jewel Food Stores

United States District Court for the Northern District of Illinois, Eastern Division

August 30, 1994, Decided ; August 31, 1994, Docketed

No. 92 C 4171

Reporter

1994 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 12239 *; 1994 WL 478576

JOSEPH SERFECZ and FIRST CHICAGO TRUST COMPANY, Trustee of Trust No. 684, Plaintiffs, v. JEWEL FOOD STORES, INC., et. al., Defendants.

Core Terms

Mall, lease, antitrust, conspiracy, grocery, grocery store, plaintiffs', antitrust violation, premises, consumer, sentence, injuries, retail, summary judgment, space, breach of lease, defendants', competitor, anti trust law, damages, tenants, retail shopping, Lessee, leased premises, listing service, relevant market, probable cause, anchor tenant, Sherman Act, monopolize

Judges: [*1] Grady

Opinion by: JOHN F. GRADY

Opinion

MEMORANDUM OPINION

This case comes before the court on the motion of defendants Jewel Food Stores, Inc., and American Stores Properties, Inc., for summary judgment. For the reasons discussed below, we grant the motion for summary judgment on the antitrust and malicious prosecution claims in Counts I, II, and III. Summary judgment on the breach of lease claim in Count IV is granted in part and denied in part.

BACKGROUND

Plaintiff First Chicago Trust Company of Illinois, as trustee, is the title holder of the Grove Mall Shopping Center ("Grove Mall") in Elk Grove Village. Plaintiff Joseph Serfecz is the beneficial owner of this trust. In 1963 defendant Jewel Food Stores, Inc. ("Jewel") entered into a lease with plaintiffs' predecessor-in-interest for retail space in the Grove Mall in which to operate a grocery store. When Serfecz purchased the Grove Mall in 1977, he assumed all existing leases, including the Jewel lease. Jewel's original lease ran until 1986 and provided Jewel three five-year options to renew. Jewel has exercised two of those options. Thus, its current lease runs until 1996, and it has one remaining option to renew until 2001. Defendant [*2] American Stores Properties, Inc. ("American Stores") is the real estate management and development arm of American Stores Company and its subsidiaries, of which Jewel is one, and is engaged in managing properties owned or rented by Jewel.

Up until October 1987, Jewel owned and operated a grocery store in its leased space in the Grove Mall and was the mall's anchor tenant. In October of 1987, Jewel vacated the premises and moved its grocery operation to a building in the newly constructed Elk Crossing Mall, directly across the street from the Grove Mall. Since that time, the space formerly occupied by Jewel at the Grove Mall has remained vacant, and Jewel has refused to give up its leasehold interest in the premises, thereby preventing Serfecz from securing another grocery store as an anchor tenant. Since vacating its space, Jewel has continued to pay rent and has exercised its second option to renew the lease. Jewel proposed to sublet the space to defendant United Skates of America ("United Skates"), for use as a roller rink and games arcade. Serfecz objected to the proposed sublease because he considered United Skates to be an "obnoxious" tenant and because he was concerned that [*3] occupancy by United Skates would result in higher insurance rates. In February 1990, Jewel filed suit seeking a declaratory judgment regarding its right to sublet to United Skates. The trial court ruled against Jewel, and the appellate court affirmed.

Plaintiffs bring suit against Jewel, American Stores, and United Skates, and against the developers, owners and operators of the Elk Crossing Mall (collectively referred to herein as the "Elk Crossing defendants"), alleging that the defendants conspired to keep the Jewel space at the Grove Mall vacant, to prevent a major anchor tenant from taking over the space, to prevent Serfecz from re-developing the mall, to coerce Serfecz's other tenants to leave the Grove Mall and move across the street to the Elk Crossing Mall, and to otherwise devalue and destroy the Grove Mall. Plaintiffs maintain that this conspiracy is part of an overall marketing strategy of restricting the use of property in order to keep out competitors. In support of this claim, plaintiffs offer evidence of other similar restrictive lease arrangements throughout Illinois involving Jewel.

In Counts I and II of their complaint, plaintiffs maintain that defendants have violated [*4] Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Antitrust Act, 15 U.S.C. §§ 1, 2, by conspiring to restrain trade by eliminating competition in the grocery store and retail shopping center markets, and attempting to monopolize the grocery store business, the sale and development of commercial real estate, and the business of operating a retail shopping center within the relevant geographic market. Plaintiffs also bring state law claims in Count III for malicious prosecution based on the February 1990 declaratory judgment suit brought by Jewel,¹ and in Count IV for breach of lease. Before the court is the motion for summary judgment of defendants Jewel and American Stores.²

[*5] DISCUSSION

I. Antitrust Standing

Defendants move for summary judgment on Counts I and II, claiming that plaintiffs lack standing to bring antitrust claims against Jewel. Private civil actions to enforce the Sherman Act are allowed under Section 4 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 15\(a\), which provides that "any person who shall be injured in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws may sue there for . . . and shall recover threefold the damages by him sustained" However, despite this seemingly broad grant of authority to sue, the Supreme Court has emphasized that "Congress did not intend the antitrust laws to provide a remedy in damages for all injuries that might conceivably be traced to an antitrust violation." Associated General Contractors of California v. California State Counsel of Carpenters, 459 U.S. 519, 534, 74 L. Ed. 2d 723, 103 S. Ct. 897 (1983) (internal quotation marks and citation omitted). Thus, even though a plaintiff might suffer sufficient harm to satisfy the constitutional standing requirement of injury [*6] in fact, "the court must make the further determination whether the plaintiff is a proper party to bring a private antitrust action." Id. at 535 n. 31. Even when an antitrust violation under the Sherman Act has clearly occurred, Section 4 of the Clayton Act allows only certain private parties to bring suit on the basis of that violation.³ The Supreme Court recognized that given "the infinite variety of claims" that might arise under Section 4, it would be "virtually impossible to announce a black-letter rule that will dictate the result in every case." Id. at 536. Thus, the Court rejected rigid, one-dimensional tests for standing such as the "target area," "zone of interests," or "directness of injury" tests. Southaven Land Co. v. Malone & Hyde, 715 F.2d 1079, 1085 (6th Cir. 1983) (citing Associated General Contractors, 459 U.S. at 536 n.33). The Court instead identified various factors that should guide a case-by-case inquiry into whether a particular party has standing [*7] to seek an antitrust remedy. Id. (citing Associated General Contractors, 459 U.S. at 537). It is important to note at the outset that no single factor is decisive; rather, the court must balance all of the factors. R.C. Dick Geothermal v. Thermogenics, 890 F.2d 139, 146 (9th Cir. 1989). See also, Los Angeles Memorial Coliseum v. N.F.L., 791 F.2d 1356, 1363 (9th Cir. 1986), cert. denied, 484 U.S. 826 (1987) ("Most cases will find some factors tending in favor of standing . . . and some against . . . and a court may find standing if the balance of factors so instructs.").

¹ Defendants correctly point out that in our previous opinion of March 26, 1993, we ruled that no other litigation could serve as a basis for plaintiffs' charge of malicious prosecution. Thus, we consider the malicious prosecution claim only insofar as it is based on the February 1990 declaratory judgment action.

² Also pending is the motion of the Elk Crossing defendants for summary judgment. However, due to repeated extensions in the briefing schedule, that motion is not yet fully briefed and thus is not considered by the court at this time.

³ As the Seventh Circuit explained in Indiana Grocery v. Super Valu Stores, 864 F.2d 1409 (7th Cir. 1989), "While sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act focus on competitive conditions in the marketplace as a whole, . . . section 4 of the Clayton Act focuses on the type of injury claimed by a particular plaintiff and demands that it be an 'antitrust injury.'" Id. at 1419 (emphasis in

[*8] The antitrust standing factors outlined by the Supreme Court in Associated General Contractors have been described and interpreted in various ways by the different circuit courts. However, as our colleague noted in American Agriculture Movement v. Board of Trade, 848 F. Supp. 814, 823 (N.D. Ill. 1994) (Marovich, J.), "the differences between the expressions of the Associated General Contractors factors are ones of form rather than substance." Thus we refer to cases from several different circuits in our effort to better understand and apply the guidelines established in Associated General Contractors.

The first Associated General Contractors factor to be considered is whether there is a causal connection between the antitrust violation and the harm to the plaintiff, and whether the defendant intended to cause that harm. 459 U.S. at 537. Without elaborating in any detail, we believe that plaintiffs in the present case have presented enough evidence for the trier of fact to find a causal connection between the absence of a grocery store anchor tenant and the slow demise of the Grove [*9] Mall. There is also evidence that Jewel acted deliberately to prevent a competitor from occupying the space in the mall.

Another factor considered important by the Supreme Court in Associated General Contractors is the nature of the plaintiff's injury. The Court considered whether the injury was "of a type that Congress sought to redress in providing a private remedy for violations of Antitrust laws," Associated General Contractors, 459 U.S. at 537 (citing Blue Shield of Virginia v. McCready, 457 U.S. 465, 483, 73 L. Ed. 2d 149, 102 S. Ct. 2540 (1982), bearing in mind the central policy underlying the Sherman Act of "assuring customers the benefits of price competition," and "protecting the economic freedom of participants in the relevant market." Associated General Contractors, 459 U.S. at 538 (emphasis added).

In Southaven Land Co. v. Malone & Hyde, 715 F.2d 1079 (6th Cir. 1983), a case strikingly similar to the one now before us, the Sixth Circuit considered [*10] the nature of the injury when evaluating the standing of a lessor of retail commercial space to challenge the alleged antitrust behavior of an owner and operator of retail grocery stores. Defendant leased premises from plaintiff Southaven for the purpose of operating a retail grocery business. Defendant then executed a series of subleases with successive third parties to operate grocery stores at the Southaven location. At the time defendant entered into its lease with plaintiff and thereafter, defendant also owned and operated other retail grocery outlets in the same geographical area. The last of defendant's successive subtenants went bankrupt, and defendant did not arrange for a replacement grocery store. Following the business demise of the last sublessor, plaintiff sought to negotiate a cancellation of defendant's lease so that plaintiff could replace defendant with a viable grocery operator, but defendant refused to execute the proposed cancellation agreement or otherwise surrender the premises, and removed its equipment, thereby rendering the premises unfit for use as a grocery. Like plaintiff Serfecz in the present case, Southaven claimed that defendant intended to destroy [*11] the site as a location for the operation of a retail grocery outlet and to monopolize the grocery store market in the area. Id. at 1081.

original). The Seventh Circuit elaborated further on this important distinction: "It is tempting when performing an antitrust injury analysis to look first at the substantive antitrust provision the defendant allegedly has violated, to note next the harmful effects on competition the substantive provision is designed to prevent, to note further that some of those harmful effects might fall on parties such as the plaintiff, and to conclude, therefore, that the plaintiff should have standing to vindicate the substantive antitrust provision." Such an approach, according to the Seventh Circuit, "stand[s] the antitrust injury inquiry on its head." Id. at 1419 n. 6.

Following the Supreme Court's guidance in Associated General Contractors, the Sixth Circuit in Southaven analyzed the nature of the plaintiff's injury by examining the status of the plaintiff in relationship to the relevant market. Id. at 1085-86. The court defined the relevant market as the retail grocery industry in the geographical area of the Southaven property, id. at 1086, and found that Southaven, as a lessor of retail commercial premises to grocery stores, did not qualify as a "competitor, purchaser, consumer or other economic actor in the grocery industry," even though its former and prospective grocery store tenants did compete in that market. Id. at 1081, 1086.

The Sixth Circuit noted, however, that under Blue Shield of Virginia v. McCready, 457 U.S. 465, 73 L. Ed. 2d 149, 102 S. Ct. 2540 (1982), a plaintiff who is not, himself, a direct "participant" [*12] in the market, still may have standing if his injury is "'inextricably intertwined' with the injury sought to be inflicted upon the relevant market or participants therein." Southaven, 715 F.2d at 1086 (citing McCready, 457 U.S. at 483). In McCready, plaintiff, a psychotherapy patient, challenged her health insurance provider's practice of covering only the costs of seeing a psychiatrist, not the expenses of a psychologist. The Supreme Court found that plaintiff's injury as a consumer of psychotherapeutic services was "inextricably intertwined" with the injury sought to be inflicted on the suppliers of psychological services, and thus, granted plaintiff standing to complain that Blue Shield violated the antitrust laws by acting to restrain competition in the market for psychotherapeutic services. McCready, 457 U.S. at 483-84.

The Sixth Circuit applied the analysis of McCready to the facts in Southaven, in order to determine whether the plaintiff lessor's injury was "inextricably intertwined" with the injury to the grocery [*13] market. The court noted that the primary class of persons injured by an antitrust violation are those adversely affected as a result of controlled prices or an exclusion of competition. Southaven, 715 F.2d at 1087 n. 10. Because Southaven was not alleged to be a "member of a class of 'consumers' of grocery products or a class otherwise manipulated or utilized by (defendant) as a fulcrum, conduit or market force to injure competitors or participants in the relevant product and geographical markets," the Sixth Circuit concluded that the injuries suffered by the plaintiff as an owner and lessor of retail space were not sufficiently intertwined with the injuries to the grocery market to give plaintiff standing under the rule of McCready. Id. at 1086. The Sixth Circuit further explained: "Although Southaven's injury may be a tangential [sic] by-product of [defendant's] averred monopolistic conduct, such injury is not inextricably intertwined to any injury inflicted upon the relevant market. . . . Its injury is not sufficiently linked to the pro-competitive policy of the antitrust laws." Id. at 1086-87 [*14] (emphasis in original).

In another case of warring grocery stores, the Southern District of New York applied the rules of Associated General Contractors, McCready, and Southaven, to evaluate the standing of the owner and developer of a shopping mall to complain that the defendant supermarkets conspired to prevent a grocery store from opening in its mall by filing state court lawsuits and attending local planning commission hearings to prevent the issuance of necessary permits. Rosenberg v. Cleary, Gottlieb, 598 F. Supp. 642 (S.D.N.Y. 1984). The court dismissed the antitrust counts because the alleged violation related to "the retail grocery business," and plaintiff, as a mall developer and owner, was not a direct participant in that market. Id. at 645. Rather, plaintiff's injuries related to its role as a participant in the construction and real estate market, and as such, were only tangentially related to the alleged antitrust violations and resulting lack of competition in the grocery market. Id. Thus, the court found plaintiff to be an "inappropriate" antitrust complainant. Id.

We turn now to examine the [*15] case law in our own circuit regarding the nature of the injury aspect of the standing analysis. A leading Seventh Circuit case on the issue is Southwest Suburban Bd. of Realtors v. Beverly Area Planning Assoc., 830 F.2d 1374 (7th Cir. 1987). In Southwest Suburban, the Seventh Circuit evaluated the standing of a trade association that provided listing services to real estate brokerage firms to challenge the defendant neighborhood planning association and defendant brokers' purported antitrust violations. The complaint alleged that the defendants conspired to boycott the plaintiff's listing service, and encouraged consumers to boycott the listing service as well. Id. at 1379. As a result of the Conspiracy, the plaintiff was no longer able to provide a comprehensive listing of properties to its subscribers.

Like the Sixth Circuit in Southaven, the Seventh Circuit's inquiry into the nature of the plaintiff's injury in Southwest Suburban focused on plaintiff's status in relationship to the relevant market. The Southwest Suburban court concluded that the plaintiff trade association lacked standing to sue for antitrust [*16] violations because it was neither a supplier nor a purchaser in the market for real estate brokerage services. Id. at 1379. Rather, the plaintiff acted as a supplier of a product, its list, to brokers. Noting the general rule in the Seventh Circuit that "suppliers of an injured customer may not seek recovery under the antitrust laws because their injuries are too 'indirect, secondary, or remote,'" id. (citing In re Industrial Gas Litigation, 681 F.2d 514, 519-20 (7th Cir. 1982), cert. denied, 460 U.S. 1016 (1983)), the court held that "any injury which [plaintiff] sustained by virtue of defendants' alleged boycott of the [listing service] was only indirectly related and incidental to the anticompetitive scheme, the intent and effect of which was . . . to gain control of the real estate brokerage services market." Id.

The paramount status of the consumer in antitrust law is made clear by other cases in the Seventh Circuit applying and interpreting the nature of the injury factor. The court closely scrutinizes whether the interests of the plaintiff are in line with the interests of consumers: [*17] "'When the plaintiff is a poor champion of consumers, a court must be especially careful not to grant relief that may undercut the proper functions of antitrust.'" Nelson v. Monroe Regional Medical Center, 925 F.2d 1555, 1564 (7th Cir. 1991) (citation omitted). As the Seventh Circuit explained in Ball Memorial Hosp. v. Mutual Hosp. Ins., 784 F.2d 1325, 1338 (7th Cir. 1986), even a competitor in the market does not necessarily share the consumer's interest (and the antitrust laws' interest) in the protection and promotion of competition: "Action that injures rivals may ultimately injure consumers, but it is also perfectly consistent with competition." Id. at 1338 (emphasis in original). After all, the antitrust laws were designed to protect competition, not individual competitors. Id. (citing Brunswick v. Pueblo Bowl-O-Mat, 429 U.S. 477, 488, 50 L. Ed. 2d 701, 97 S. Ct. 690 (1977)).

In Garot Anderson Marketing v. Blue Cross, 772 F. Supp. 1054, 1062 (N.D. Ill. 1990), a colleague in this district [*18] applied the antitrust standing rules established in McCready and Southwest Suburban to determine whether the plaintiff insurance agents and agencies who sold the insurance products of one of the defendant insurance companies had standing to challenge the actions of the defendants in allegedly conspiring not to compete with each other for a particular business. Plaintiffs alleged that they were injured by the loss of sales commissions resulting from the termination of a certain insurance product. The court concluded that the rule of Southwest Suburban did not bar the plaintiffs' suit. The court explained that "the plaintiff need not be the target of the alleged conduct. . . . It is sufficient that the plaintiff participated in some relevant way in the part of the market endangered by the alleged antitrust violation." Id. at 1062. Apparently, the court found that the plaintiffs' status as sellers of insurance qualified them as "participants" in the same market as the defendant suppliers of insurance.

Underlying the courts' efforts in Associated General Contractors, McCready, and their progeny, to limit antitrust standing to marketplace [*19] participants is the awareness that without such limits, the courts would be overwhelmed with duplicative antitrust litigation, and the knowledge that Congress did not intend the antitrust laws to provide a catch-all remedy for every injury remotely linked to an antitrust violation. The Supreme Court in Associated General Contractors noted the "strong interest . . . in keeping the scope of complex antitrust trials within judicially manageable limits." 459 U.S. at 543. As the Court explained in McCready, an antitrust violation may be expected to cause ripples of harm to flow through the Nation's economy; but despite the broad wording of § 4 [the Clayton Act] there is a point beyond which the wrongdoer should not be held liable. . . . It is reasonable to assume that Congress did not intend to allow every person tangentially affected by an antitrust violation to maintain an action to recover threefold damages for [his] injury.

457 U.S. at 476-77 (internal quotation marks and citation omitted).⁴

⁴ Fear of opening the floodgates was obviously a motivating factor behind the Sixth Circuit's denial of standing in Southaven. The Sixth Circuit worried that if it were to permit the shopping center landlord to sue the vacating grocery store for damages predicated upon diminished lease revenue resulting from reduced consumer activity at his shopping center, it would also have to grant standing to the other lessees as well, predicated upon their diminished sales. Southaven, 715 F.2d at 1088 n.12. In Alpha Shoe Service v. Fleming Companies, 849 F.2d 352 (8th Cir. 1988), cert. denied, 488 U.S. 942 (1988), the Eighth Circuit rejected just such a suit brought by shopping center tenants against a grocery store anchor tenant who vacated its space and left it empty for an extended period of time. The court declined to adopt plaintiffs' broad characterization of the relevant market as "the attraction of consumers," and found that the tenants lacked standing because they "were not competitors, participants, or [*20] We turn now to the arguments in this case regarding the nature of Serfecz's injury as reflected by his status in relationship to the relevant marketplace, and the connection between his injury and the injury to that market. Defining the relevant market as the retail grocery industry, we, like the Sixth Circuit in Southhaven, find that Serfecz, as a lessor of retail premises, does not qualify as a competitor or consumer in this industry, even though his former and prospective future tenants compete in that market. The case law in our own circuit supports this conclusion. In Southwest Suburban, 830 F.2d 1374 (7th Cir. 1987), the Seventh Circuit concluded that the plaintiff trade association, which supplied a real estate listing service to brokers, could not sue certain brokers for antitrust violations in the brokerage market because it was neither a direct supplier nor a purchaser in the relevant market. Similarly, Serfecz is neither a direct supplier nor purchaser in the grocery market. Rather, Serfecz, like the listing service, can be thought of as a supplier to the grocery stores which do directly compete in the market: he supplies retail space. [*21] Under the general rule stated in Southwest Suburban, the injuries of suppliers such as Serfecz are too indirect to support standing.

Serfecz argues that under McCready he has standing to sue because even though he is not a direct market participant, his injury is "inextricably intertwined" with the injury to the grocery market. Serfecz offers a creative argument regarding the close business tie that exists between a shopping mall developer and a grocery store anchor tenant; however, according to the case law, this does not qualify him as inextricably intertwined with the grocery market under the rule of McCready. As we explained above, the plaintiff in McCready, while not herself a competitor in the market for psychotherapeutic services, was actually a consumer of such services.

Plaintiffs also argue that Serfecz has standing because Jewel's actions were "aimed squarely at Serfecz and the Grove Mall, and not directly at a competitor." They cite Hoopes v. Union Oil Co., 374 F.2d 480 (9th Cir. 1967), as a source for their reasoning. Plaintiffs' Memorandum in Support of its Response to the Motion for Summary Judgment ("Plaintiffs' [*22] Response") at 5-6. However, the "target area" test for standing employed by the Ninth Circuit in Hoopes was rejected by the Supreme Court in Associated General Contractors, 459 U.S. at 536 n.33.⁵

[*23] In its desire to keep antitrust litigation within judicially manageable bounds and avoid duplicative suits, without forcing antitrust violations to go unchallenged altogether, the Supreme Court in Associated General Contractors also considered whether a party more directly injured by the violations might file suit as another factor relevant to the standing inquiry. "The existence of an identifiable class of persons whose self-interest would normally motivate them to vindicate the public interest in antitrust enforcement diminishes the justification for allowing a more remote party . . . to perform the office of a private attorney general." 459 U.S. at 542. If more direct victims exist, denial of standing to those only tangentially injured "is not likely to leave a significant antitrust violation undetected or unremedied." Id. Applying a similar rationale in a case which foreshadowed the Supreme Court's reasoning in Associated General Contractors, the Seventh Circuit emphasized the importance of limiting antitrust standing to those plaintiffs able to most efficiently vindicate the antitrust laws. In re Industrial Gas Litigation, 681 F.2d 514, 516 & 520 (7th Cir. 1982). [*24] Thus, the standing inquiry focuses "not only on whether there has been an 'antitrust injury,' but also on whether the particular plaintiff is the appropriate antitrust enforcer." Id. at 520. Like the Supreme Court in Associated General Contractors, the Seventh Circuit strove to strike a balance between the interest in "deterrence through private antitrust enforcement and redress for injury," on the one hand, and "the avoidance of excessive treble damages litigation," on the other hand. Id. The court concluded that the proper compromise could best be achieved by granting standing "only to those who, as consumers or competitors, suffer immediate injuries . . . while excluding person whose injuries were more indirectly caused by the antitrust conduct."

consumers in the relevant market." Id. at 534. The court rejected plaintiffs' broad definition of the market for fear of "expanding the scope of the private antitrust action far beyond its intended bounds." Id.

⁵ Responding to the emphasis in the case law and defendants' memorandum in support of their motion for summary judgment on the market status of an antitrust plaintiff, Serfecz also resorts to the argument that he is in fact a consumer in the market because he shops for groceries in Elk Grove Village, and that, in order to sustain his shopping center, he is "willing" to become a competitor in the market by opening his own grocery store in the Grove Mall. Plaintiffs' Response at 7. However, the antitrust allegations in the complaint frame this case as a suit to remedy the injuries suffered by Serfecz as the owner of a competing shopping mall, not the injuries he may have suffered as a grocery consumer or prospective grocery store competitor. Thus, we reject Serfecz's last ditch efforts to obtain standing by re-casting his case in a manner unsupported by the complaint.

Id. The court believed that "this select class of plaintiffs" would be able to "impose the deterrent sting of treble damages at the smallest cost of enforcement." Id. The Seventh Circuit thus reduced this aspect of the inquiry to a basic costs/benefits analysis.

Under the rationale articulated in Associated General Contractors and Industrial Gas, the courts search for the most directly [*25] injured -- and thus, presumably, the best -- plaintiff. Accordingly, the Seventh Circuit in Southwest Suburban concluded that brokers who subscribed to plaintiff's listing service and whom might have been hurt by the boycott of the listing service would serve as more appropriate plaintiffs than the listing service itself, because their injuries were more direct. 830 F.2d at 1379-80. The Ninth Circuit in R.C. Dick Geothermal Corp. v. Thermogenics, 890 F.2d 139 \(9th Cir. 1989), considered the standing of the landlord of one of the defendants to complain that the defendants' conspiracy to restrain trade by slowing production injured the landlord by reducing the royalties it received under the lease. The Ninth Circuit denied standing because the landlord, although injured by his decreased royalties revenue, was not the most directly injured potential plaintiff; rather, the court concluded that other sellers in the market would be "in a far better position to champion the public interest in vigorous antitrust law enforcement." Id. at 148. Likewise, in Rosenberg, the Southern District of New [*26] York observed that both supermarket consumers and the plaintiff shopping mall developer's prospective grocery store tenant would be more suitable complainants regarding the defendant supermarket's alleged actions in restraint of trade in the grocery store market. And, finally, in Southaven, the Sixth Circuit briefly noted that consumers and other market participants would be more direct victims, and thus, by implication, better plaintiffs.

We now consider whether a similar rationale can be applied to the present case: Is there an identifiable class of potential plaintiffs who might be better suited than Serfecz by virtue of their more direct injuries to bring suit and whose self-interest would motivate them to do so? In the case most directly on point, Southaven, the Sixth Circuit rather summarily concluded that consumers or other market participants would be more appropriate plaintiffs to seek a remedy for restraint of trade or monopolization in the grocery market. While, in theory, we agree with the Sixth Circuit, we lack that court's confidence that either of these two groups of potential plaintiffs would be sufficiently motivated to actually bring suit. We suspect that [*27] Serfecz might be correct that a competing grocery store not yet operating in the area, such as Dominicks, would be more likely to forgo a location than to incur the high start-up costs of litigation. Indeed, according to plaintiffs, the fact is that no Competitor has filed an antitrust lawsuit against Jewel although there is evidence that Jewel has been restricting locations throughout Illinois for the last ten years. As regards a consumer suit, the degree of harm suffered by an individual consumer as a result of reduced competition in the grocery market in Elk Grove Village would probably not be sufficiently great to give him incentive to sue. Thus, we fear that there is a high risk that a significant antitrust violation will go unremedied if we do not grant plaintiffs standing to sue in this case. However, the case law in the various circuits, including our own, makes it clear that the mere existence of competitors or consumers in the relevant market who could sue is considered a factor in favor of denying standing. Where a more directly injured class of potential plaintiffs exists, we are left with very little leeway to address the likelihood of whether any members of that [*28] class would actually bring suit. While the result may be somewhat frustrating in this particular case, it does provide a straightforward rule of law and eliminates the need for us to consider evidence on the speculative question of whether and when a more appropriate plaintiff might sue.

The Supreme Court in Associated General Contractors examined the directness of the plaintiff's injury as a factor in the standing analysis not only to prevent excessive and duplicative litigation, but also to avoid highly complicated damage determinations. 459 U.S. at 542-544. As the Sixth Circuit explained in Southaven, "indirect injuries may render damages highly speculative or create situations of complexity that would foreclose an equitable determination and apportionment of damages." 715 F.2d at 1087. The Sixth Circuit reviewed the damages sustained by the plaintiff shopping center lessor in Southaven, and noted that there had been no breach or failure to perform under the lease; in fact, the defendant grocery store operator had continued to tender rental payments when due even though it was no longer [*29] operating at the Southaven location. Rather, the plaintiff complained of its inability to command premium rent from its other lessees (or perhaps to even attract lessees at all) due to the reduced consumer traffic at a shopping center without an operating grocery store. The Sixth Circuit believed that "ascertainment of damages to compensate such injury would necessitate wide ranging speculation, particularly since diminished consumer activity at any given shopping area could result from myriad independent reasons unrelated to the alleged antitrust violation." Southaven, 715 F.2d at 1087. Thus, at the heart of the Sixth Circuit's preference for antitrust plaintiffs with direct injuries, is the difficulty inherent in establishing causation of an indirect injury, which in turn creates difficulty in determining damages. Thus, the existence of a causal connection between the antitrust violation and the harm to the plaintiff is not only an independent factor in the Associated General Contractors analysis, supra p. 6-7, but also underlies the examination, under Associated General Contractors, of the directness of the plaintiff's injury.

In Greater Rockford Energy & Technology v. Shell Oil Co., 998 F.2d 391 (7th Cir. 1993), [*30] cert. denied, 127 L. Ed. 2d 375, 114 S. Ct. 1054 (1994), the Seventh Circuit, too, acknowledged the difficulty of proving that the harm suffered by a plaintiff resulted from the alleged antitrust activity. "An antitrust violation need not be the sole cause of the alleged injuries, but the plaintiff must establish, with a fair degree of certainty, that the violation was a material element of, and substantial factor in producing, the injury." Id. at 401. Where there was not just one, but numerous intervening economic and market factors which could offer an alternative explanation for plaintiff's injuries, the Seventh Circuit observed that it would be difficult for the plaintiff to prove that the antitrust violations were the cause of the injuries. Id. at 402-404.

We turn now to the present case, and consider the difficulties facing Serfecz in attempting to prove that the injuries he suffered resulted from Jewel's alleged antitrust violations. Defendants argue that numerous factors might explain Serfecz's inability to attract either tenants or developers to the Grove Mall, including [*31] its aging, dilapidated condition, its poor design, and the presence of a new, more attractive competing mall across the street. Defendants are correct that in light of these possible independent reasons for the decline of the Grove Mall, it may be difficult for Serfecz to prove that his injuries were caused by antitrust violations. However, as we mentioned when discussing causation as an independent factor in the Associated General Contractors analysis, we believe that plaintiffs have cited enough evidence to raise a material issue of fact regarding causation. For example, in a sworn declaration, plaintiffs' retail shopping center expert explained that because of Jewel's actions in continuing to claim a leasehold interest in the premises, commencing various litigation against Serfecz, and attempting to sublet to a roller rink with arcade games, prospective tenants and redevelopers would have no interest in the Grove Mall. Plaintiffs' Exhibits to Plaintiffs' Response, Declaration of Kenneth Leonard. However, there is still room for the kind of concern raised in both Southaven and Greater Rockford Energy & Technology regarding the difficulties of allocating the damages amongst [*32] the "myriad" possible causes.

In summary, applying the factors established by the Supreme Court in Associated General Contractors, we find that plaintiffs lack standing to challenge Jewel's antitrust activity in the retail grocery market. We believe that Serfecz has raised a dispute of material fact regarding whether Jewel's alleged antitrust conduct caused his harm. However, we are ultimately persuaded by the Sixth Circuit's reasoning in Southaven, as well as that of the Southern District of New York in Rosenberg, that plaintiffs' injuries were too indirect to be considered inextricably intertwined with the injury to the relevant marketplace, the retail grocery business, and thus the plaintiffs are not the proper plaintiffs to challenge antitrust activity in that market. The emphasis in our own circuit on the interests of the consumer and the status of a plaintiff in relation to the marketplace persuades us that the approach to the shopping center/grocery store battle taken by the Sixth Circuit in Southaven and the Southern District of New York in Rosenberg would be good law here in the Seventh Circuit. Thus, we grant Jewel's motion for summary judgment and dismiss [*33] for lack of standing plaintiffs' antitrust claims against both Jewel and American Stores in Counts I and II of the complaint insofar as they pertain to Jewel's alleged antitrust activities in the retail grocery market.⁶

However, plaintiffs' antitrust claims against Jewel are not limited to the grocery business. Plaintiffs also have clearly alleged that Jewel participated in a Conspiracy with the Elk Crossing [*34] defendants and United Skates to restrain trade and monopolize sales and development in the business of operating a retail shopping center and leasing commercial premises to retail tenants. See, e.g., Complaint at PP 25, 40, 85, 86. Defendants have offered no dispute regarding the direct injuries suffered by plaintiffs as participants in that market,⁷ and thus, we conclude that plaintiffs have standing to challenge Jewel's actions in relation to the market for operation of retail shopping centers. However, our determination that plaintiffs have standing to assert limited antitrust claims against Jewel does not end our review of the motion for summary judgment. The motion raises substantive challenges to the antitrust claims which go beyond the question of standing. These challenges will be discussed infra in Part II of this opinion.

⁶ In arguing the motion for summary judgment brought by Jewel and American Stores, the parties have made no attempt to distinguish the situation of Jewel from that of its property manager and sister company, American Stores. Apparently, the parties view the role of these two defendants as identical. Therefore, even though very little information has been provided to the court regarding American Stores, as distinguished from Jewel, we assume that its responsibility for the alleged antitrust activities is the same of that of Jewel, and we treat it identically for purposes of this motion for summary judgment.

[*35] II. The Merits of Plaintiffs' Claims of Antitrust Violations

Summary judgment "shall be rendered forthwith if the pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories, and admissions on file, together with the affidavits, if any, show that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the moving party is entitled to a judgment as a matter of law." Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(c); Celotex Corp. v. Catrett, 477 U.S. 317, 322, 91 L. Ed. 2d 265, 106 S. Ct. 2548, (1986). A "genuine issue of material fact exists only where 'there is sufficient evidence favoring the nonmoving party for a jury to return a verdict for that party.'" Dribeck Importers, Inc. v. G. Heileman Brewing Co., 883 F.2d 569, 573 (7th Cir. 1989) (quoting Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc., 477 U.S. 242, 249, 91 L. Ed. 2d 202, 106 S. Ct. 2505 (1986)). In considering such a motion, the court must view all inferences in the light most favorable to the nonmoving party. See Regner v. City of Chicago, 789 F.2d 534, 536 (7th Cir. 1986). [*36] Summary judgement will be granted "against a party who fails to make a showing sufficient to establish the existence of an element essential to that party's case, and on which that party will bear the burden of proof at trial." Celotex, 477 U.S. at 322.

Defendants argue that even if plaintiffs have standing to bring antitrust claims against Jewel, plaintiffs have failed to make a factual showing sufficient to establish the essential elements of those claims. In order to establish a violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act, plaintiffs must establish the existence of a contract, combination or conspiracy intended to restrain competition. Greater Rockford Energy & Technology, 998 F.2d at 396. Plaintiffs claim that Jewel and American Stores participated in a conspiracy to restrain trade in the retail shopping center market in violation of Section 1 by helping to destroy the viability of the Grove Mall. In furtherance of that conspiracy, Jewel ceased operations at Grove Mall, vacated the premises and moved across the street to the newer Elk Crossing Mall, yet continued to renew its lease at the [*37] Grove Mall, thereby tying up the anchor tenant space and preventing another grocery store from moving in. Subsequently, Jewel attempted to sublet to United Skates for the "obnoxious" use of operating a roller rink with arcade games.

The plaintiff bears the ultimate burden of proving that there was in fact such a conspiracy. Market Force v. Wauwatosa Realty, 906 F.2d 1167, 1170 (7th Cir. 1990) (citing Monsanto v. Spray-Rite Serv., 465 U.S. 752, 763, 79 L. Ed. 2d 775, 104 S. Ct. 1464 (1984)). However, a conspiracy to engage in anti-competitive conduct "need not, and generally will not, be established by direct evidence." Contractor Utility Sales v. Certain-teed Products, 638 F.2d 1061, 1074 (7th Cir. 1981). Rather, "the requisite concerted action may be inferred from . . . circumstantial evidence." Id. Following the holdings of the Supreme Court in Matsushita Elec. Indus v. Zenith Radio, 475 U.S. 574, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538, 106 S. Ct. 1348 (1986), and Monsanto regarding the sufficiency of the standard [*38] of proof in a Section 1 claim, the Seventh Circuit has adopted a three-step inquiry. The court first reviews the plaintiff's evidence of a conspiracy. The court then considers whether the plaintiff's evidence of conspiracy is ambiguous; that is, is it as consistent with the defendants' permissible, legitimate independent business interests as with an illegal conspiracy? If the defendants can show a plausible and justifiable reason for their conduct that is consistent with proper business practice, the burden then shifts to the plaintiff to come forward with direct or circumstantial evidence that tends to exclude the possibility that defendants were pursuing these independent interests. Market

⁷ Indeed, defendants, themselves, at one point acknowledge that Jewel might be found liable for antitrust violations in the market for retail shopping centers on a conspiracy theory. See Defendants' Memorandum in Support of Motion for Summary Judgment ("Defendants' Memorandum") at 12 n.1. ("Because Jewel does not compete in the market for retail shopping centers . . . Jewel cannot be found to have monopolized . . . this market. . . . Jewel can only be found liable on a monopolization theory in this market by virtue of a conspiracy.")

Force, 906 F.2d at 1170-71. If the plaintiff cannot do so, a grant of summary judgment for the defendant is appropriate. Id.

In Monsanto, a price-fixing case, the Supreme Court applied this standard, and concluded that there was a triable issue of fact regarding the existence of a conspiracy. The evidence in that case included direct evidence of agreements to maintain prices, such as testimony from a district manager that defendant Monsanto approached price-cutting [*39] distributors and warned them that if they did not maintain the suggested resale price, they would not receive adequate supplies of a certain product. When one of the distributors did not agree, Monsanto complained to the distributor's parent company, and the parent company instructed its subsidiary to comply; the distributor then informed Monsanto that it would charge the suggested price. The Court found this evidence "plainly . . . persuasive as to a meeting of minds." Monsanto, 465 U.S. at 765. In Market Force by contrast, the Seventh Circuit noted that evidence of informal communications and meetings among defendants, and of similarity in policies, for example, would not be considered unambiguous support for a inference of conspiracy. Market Force, 906 F.2d at 1172-73.

We apply the analytical framework of Monsanto and Matsushita, as set forth in Market Force, to the facts of the present case. Plaintiffs' prima facie evidence of Jewel's involvement in the averred conspiracy is the fact that Jewel benefitted greatly from the slow but steady demise of the Grove Mall and the [*40] resulting increase in consumer traffic at the Elk Crossing Mall. Therefore, plaintiffs argue, Jewel had a compelling motive to participate in a conspiracy. When considering whether a genuine issue for trial exists on a claim of antitrust conspiracy, the Supreme Court views evidence of motive to conspire, or lack thereof, as "highly relevant." Matsushita, 475 U.S. at 595-97. "Lack of motive bears on the range of permissible conclusions that might be drawn from ambiguous evidence: if petitioners had no rational economic motive to conspire, and if their conduct is consistent with other, equally plausible explanations, the conduct does not give rise to an inference of conspiracy." Id. at 596-97.

Defendants argue that Jewel's purported actions in furtherance of the alleged conspiracy were entirely consistent with Jewel's permissible independent business interests. Jewel maintains that it moved to the Elk Crossing Mall in order to take advantage of the newer, larger, and overall more attractive facilities and open a companion Osco drugstore (which was prohibited under [*41] its lease at the Grove Mall). Jewel further maintains that it attempted to sublet to United Skates simply to fulfill its legitimate business interest in earning some rent on the property. Similarly, Jewel's departure from the Grove Mall to serve as the anchor tenant at Elk Crossing also served the legitimate business interests of Jewel's alleged co-conspirators, the Elk Crossing defendants. However, what Jewel has failed to satisfactorily explain to the court is its legitimate interest in continuing to pay rent on a vacant store and its refusal to cancel the lease or accept Serfecz's offer to pay the rent Jewel would have received from United Skates. Certainly, the rational trier of fact might conclude that Jewel's motive in refusing was purely anticompetitive.

However, plaintiffs are not yet over the hurdle in terms of meeting their burden of proof of conspiracy under Section 1 of the Sherman Act. A "fundamental prerequisite" of a Section 1 violation "is unlawful conduct by two or more parties pursuant to an agreement, explicit or implied." Contractor Utility Sales, 638 F.2d at 1074. Thus, evidence that two defendants each benefitted from anticompetitive [*42] practices does not itself establish an unlawful conspiracy; evidence of an agreement is critical. Id. at 1075. "Solely unilateral conduct, regardless of its anticompetitive effects, is not prohibited by Section 1. Rather . . . there must be evidence that two or more parties have knowingly participated in a common scheme or design to accomplish an anti-competitive purpose." Id. at 1074.

It is on this issue that plaintiffs' response to the defendants' summary judgment motion is notably silent. Certainly, there is evidence that both Jewel and the Elk Crossing defendants reaped the benefits of the demise of the Grove Mall. But on the issue of Conspiracy, plaintiffs offer only speculation, hunch, and theory.⁸ For example, as evidence of the Elk Crossing defendants' participation in the purported anticompetitive scheme, plaintiff emphasizes that the Elk Crossing defendants planned from the start to duplicate the tenant mix of the Grove Mall. Plaintiffs maintain that "no rational real estate developer would duplicate the tenant mix of a mall directly across the street unless he knew the existing mall was going to be devalued [*43] and prohibited from competing and obtaining new tenants," Plaintiffs' Response at 16, and ask us to infer from the duplication a conspiracy to devalue the Grove Mall. In support of their theory, plaintiffs cite the opinion of their shopping center expert that "the way the center was planned clearly showed a 'very strong, very confident pattern of activity that showed [defendants] had no fear of competition coming from the old center.'" Plaintiff's Response at 16 (citing Leonard Deposition at 114). The persuasiveness of this opinion is doubtful, given the commonplace appearance of look-alike strip-malls on opposite corners of busy intersections throughout the suburbs. Be that as it may, the fact that the Elk Crossing defendants may have been fairly confident that they would be able to successfully compete with the dilapidated mall across the street is not itself sufficient evidence of a conspiracy between Jewel and American Stores and these defendants. Plaintiffs emphasize also the close business tie between a grocery anchor tenant and the shopping center location it occupies, characterizing Jewel as a "partner in interest" with the owners and developers of the Elk Crossing Mall. While [*44] it is true that the business interests of the anchor tenant and the interests of the landlord shopping mall may be aligned, this "confluence of interest," to quote plaintiffs, is not, alone, sufficient evidence to support an inference of participation in an illegal antitrust conspiracy.

⁸ We note also that what few arguments plaintiffs do advance regarding the existence of a conspiracy concern only Jewel and the Elk Crossing defendants and United Skates; no attempt has been made by plaintiffs to suggest that their claim of a Section 1 violation might be based on a conspiracy between Jewel and its sister company, American Stores. In fact, as discussed earlier,

In the absence of evidence of an agreement between Jewel and American Stores and their co-defendants to destroy competition, we must grant the motion for [*45] summary judgment as to plaintiffs' claims of Sherman Act Section 1 violations in Count I.⁹

[*46] For similar reasons, we must also grant defendants' motion for summary judgment on plaintiffs' claims in Count II of monopolization in violation of Section 2 of the Sherman Antitrust Act. Section 2 of the Sherman Act, unlike Section 1, does not require proof of a conspiracy between two or more parties; rather, the focus of this section is on the actions of a single firm to control a market. 15 U.S.C. § 2; Okansen v. Page Memorial Hosp., 945 F.2d 696, 710 \(4th Cir. 1991\), cert. denied, 117 L. Ed. 2d 137, 112 S. Ct. 973 (1992). However, because of our findings in Part I of this opinion, supra pp. 22-24, regarding standing, evidence of a conspiracy between defendants Jewel and American Stores and the Elk Crossing defendants would be required. We found that plaintiffs had standing to challenge Jewel's actions only in relation to the retail shopping center market, not the grocery market. Obviously, Jewel and American Stores could not, by themselves, illegally monopolize the market for retail shopping centers. They could, however, be found liable for Section 2 violations by [*47] virtue of a conspiracy between themselves and players in the retail shopping center market, the Elk Crossing defendants. Because the plaintiffs have not presented sufficient evidence to raise a genuine issue of concerted action between the two sets of defendants, we must grant summary judgment for Jewel and American on Count II as well.

III. The Breach of Lease Claim

In Count IV of their complaint, plaintiffs claim that Jewel's actions in keeping its space at the Grove Mall dark and vacant in furtherance of its alleged antitrust goals constitutes a breach of requirements in its lease that the premises be used only to operate a grocery store and only for lawful purposes.

⁹ supra note 6, very little at all has been said by either party about American Stores. Thus, we do not address whether evidence of such a conspiracy would constitute a proper basis for a Section 1 claim.

⁹ Plaintiffs complain repeatedly of delays in production of various discovery materials and their inability to take the deposition of defendant Patrick F. Daly, real estate developer and president of the beneficial owner of the Elk Crossing Mall. Yet, it was upon plaintiffs' own motion that the court agreed to consider this motion on an expedited basis. See order of June 29, 1994. Thus, it would be difficult for plaintiffs now to argue that the matter was not yet ripe for summary judgment due to incomplete discovery. However, we can make no definitive assessment regarding the status of discovery because on October 20, 1993, we referred all discovery disputes to the designated Magistrate-Judge. If, after additional discovery, plaintiffs are able to present evidence in support of their conspiracy claim, and can demonstrate why this evidence was not available earlier, we would be willing to entertain a motion to reconsider.

A. Unlawful Use

The first sentence of Paragraph 1 of Jewel's lease ("sentence 1") provides:

Lessee shall not use the demised premises for any unlawful purpose nor shall it commit waste. and the second sentence ("sentence 2") provides:

It shall comply with all lawful requirements of the local Board of Health, Police and Fire Departments, and state and federal authorities, respecting the manner in which it uses the leased premises.

Defendants' Memorandum, Exhibit 4 ("Lease"). Plaintiffs [*48] maintain that Jewel's use of the premises to restrain trade and to monopolize the grocery store business violates Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act, and thus constitutes an unlawful use of the premises in violation of sentence 1 of paragraph 1 of the lease. Because we have found in Part II of this opinion that plaintiffs have not met their burden of proof of conspiracy and, thus, have not established a Section 1 violation, Section 1 cannot serve as a basis for plaintiffs' breach of lease claim. As regards the alleged Section 2 violation, we found that plaintiff had standing to challenge Jewel only in relation to the retail shopping center market, not the grocery market, and that Jewel could be found liable for monopolistic conduct in this market only on a theory of conspiracy. Again, because there was insufficient evidence of a conspiracy, we granted summary judgment as to Section 2 as well. However, Section 2, unlike Section 1, does not itself require proof of a conspiracy. Thus, plaintiffs' lack of standing under the Clayton Act to sue Jewel for monopolizing the grocery market does not mean that a violation of Section 2 of the Sherman Act has not occurred; it means only that plaintiffs [*49] are not the appropriate parties to bring a civil action for antitrust remedies on the basis of such a violation. Nor does plaintiffs' lack of antitrust standing mean that they lack standing as parties to the lease to sue for breach of a lease provision relating to violations of the law, arguably including violations of Sherman Antitrust Act Section 2.¹⁰ But because of their position that plaintiffs lack standing to bring an antitrust suit on this basis, defendants have not even addressed the question of whether there is sufficient evidence that Jewel illegally monopolized the grocery market in violation of Section 2. For purposes of considering defendants' motion regarding the breach of lease claim, and in the absence of contrary arguments by defendants, we assume that there is sufficient evidence of monopolistic conduct in the grocery market by Jewel in violation of Section 2.

[*50] We must next consider whether this type of illegal act was the type of act contemplated by the language of the lease prohibiting the use of the premises for unlawful purposes. Neither party has offered much case law to guide our interpretation of this language. The only relevant case cited is Deutsch v. Phillips Petroleum Co., 56 Cal. App. 3d 586, 128 Cal. Rptr. 497, 498 \(Cal. App. 2d Dist. 1976\). In Deutsch, the Court of Appeals of California interpreted a lease provision somewhat similar to sentence 2 of paragraph 1 of the Jewel lease, and concluded that the alleged antitrust violations did not constitute a breach of the lease. However, the California court's analysis rested primarily on language which is not present in the provision of the Jewel lease regarding unlawful use. The Deutsch lease stated that the lessee "shall conduct its business on the said demised premises in conformity with all State or Federal Statutes and Municipal Ordinances applicable thereto . . ." Id. at 499. The California court made much of the concluding words "applicable thereto," which it found to modify the word "premises." Based on this wording, [*51] the Deutsch court concluded that a breach of this provision of the lease could result only from a violation of a statute directly "applicable to the premises," and that the antitrust violation in question did not meet this requirement because it had no significant relation to the premises. Id. at 500-501. The court further noted that the purpose of such a provision was to "ensure[] that the lessee will harm neither the physical attributes nor the reputation of the property." Id. at 501.

¹⁰ Defendants might argue that because plaintiffs lack standing to sue for the underlying antitrust violations, plaintiffs also lack standing to sue for breach of the unlawful use covenant based on these antitrust violations. However, plaintiffs' standing as lessors to sue on the lease is independent of the question of standing to sue on the underlying violations. For example, even though a lessor lacks standing to prosecute his tenant for operation of a drug dealership or gambling ring on the leased premises under the criminal code, he could sue for breach of an unlawful use covenant in the lease. Indeed, defendants appear to concede that plaintiffs have standing to bring exactly this type of suit. Defendants' Memorandum at 23. Applying similar reasoning, we believe plaintiffs have standing to sue for breach of the lease based on their tenant's alleged illegal antitrust behavior.

The Jewel lease, unlike the lease described in Deutsch, has two separate sentences dealing with use of the premises, the first restricting unlawful use and the second dealing with compliance with various laws relating to the premises. It is sentence 2 which corresponds to the lease provision at issue in Deutsch. However, plaintiffs' claim of breach of lease is based primarily on sentence 1's prohibition of unlawful use, and not sentence 2's requirement of compliance with the requirements of various governmental authorities. Thus, the Deutsch holding is on point here only insofar as sentence 1 of the Jewel lease is similar in language and purpose to sentence 2 and the analogous [*52] Deutsch provision. There is no reason to believe that sentence 1 of the Jewel lease is merely an introduction to or duplication of sentence 2; more likely, it has a separate and somewhat different focus from sentence 2. Otherwise, its presence in paragraph 1 would be redundant and somewhat meaningless. Moreover, by contrast to the disputed provision in the Deutsch lease, sentence 1 of the Jewel lease is a general provision prohibiting the use of the premises "for any unlawful purpose." Sentence 1 of the Jewel lease has no clause restricting its application to laws "applicable to the premises," and thus, we believe that breaches of this provision, unlike the Deutsch provision, need not necessarily involve violations of laws directly related to the premises. We find that sentence 1 is not analogous to the provision at issue in the Deutsch lease, and accordingly, we decline to follow the ruling in Deutsch.

In a further attempt to escape the application of sentence 1, defendants argue that this provision relates to the use of the premises only for such activities as prostitution, drug-dealing, or gambling. While it is true that these activities might be more traditionally [*53] and typically characterized as "criminal" or "illegal," as compared to antitrust conduct, defendants have offered no evidence to support their narrow interpretation of "unlawful purpose."

In light of the unambiguous,¹¹ broad and non-restrictive wording of sentence 1, we conclude that use of the leased premises in furtherance of a Section 2 antitrust violation could indeed constitute a breach of the lease. Thus, we deny the motion for summary judgment on the claim of breach of lease in Count IV insofar as it is based on the illegal use provision of the lease.

B. Continuous Operation

Plaintiffs also argue that by acting to keep the premises vacant, Jewel has breached paragraph 28 of the lease, which provides that "Lessee shall use the leased premises only for the operation [*54] of a grocery supermarket." Plaintiffs contend that the requirement in paragraph 28 that the premises be used "only for the operation of a grocery" implies that the premises must be occupied and used, as opposed to left dark and vacant. In other words, plaintiffs infer into paragraph 28 a continuous use requirement although one is not expressly provided.

However, not only does paragraph 28 not expressly require continuous use, but elsewhere, the lease actually anticipates a situation of extended vacancy and contains express provisions to address just these circumstances. In paragraph 17, the lease provides that in addition to a minimum base rental, "lessee covenants to pay as percentage rental an amount equal to one percent (1%) of all sales in excess of four million four hundred forty thousand and no/100 Dollars . . . made in or from the leased premises per lease per year." Paragraph 17 further states that "the obligation to pay percentage rental shall not be deemed to require Lessee to conduct business on the leased premises nor to operate its business so as to produce percentage rental."

Also directly relevant is paragraph 30, which provides that "in the event that the Lessee [*55] allows the leased premises to remain vacant or fails to open for business for a period of sixty (60) consecutive days or more during the term, Lessee shall for the purpose of calculating the percentage rental be deemed during each week that it is not open for business . . . to have made sales in an amount equal to the amount of the average sales per week made during the three (3) years prior to such time."

¹¹ If there were any ambiguity, we would follow the general rule of contract interpretation which requires courts to construe an ambiguity against the drafter. However, there is no evidence as to which party drafted the lease at issue in this case.

Because paragraphs 17 and 30 explicitly and specifically address the situation of extended vacancy and inoperation, these two paragraphs override any suggestion that a continuous use requirement might be inferred from the "use for operation as a grocery" provision in paragraph 28. Thus, it is clear from the express language of the lease that Jewel's behavior regarding its leased premises at the Grove Mall is well within its rights under the lease.

Plaintiffs cannot avoid this harsh result by resort to the covenant of good faith and fair dealing. A covenant to deal fairly and in good faith is implied in every contract in Illinois, Beraha v. Baxter Health Care Corp., 956 F.2d 1436, 1443 (7th Cir. 1992) (citing Martindell v. Lake Shore Nat'l Bank, 15 Ill. 2d 272, 154 N.E.2d 683 (1958)), [*56] including property leases. See, e.g., Abbott v. Amoco Oil, 249 Ill. App. 3d 774, 619 N.E.2d 789, 798, 189 Ill. Dec. 88 (Ill. App. 2nd Dist. 1993), appeal denied, 624 N.E.2d 804 (1993); P.M.C. v. Ekstein, No. 91 C 3709, 1992 U.S. Dist. Lexis 7306, *6 (N.D. Ill. May 13, 1992). However, the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing is not an independent source of duties for either party to a contract. Beraha, 956 F.2d at 1443. Rather, it is an interpretive rule of construction, which "comes into play in defining and modifying duties which grow out of specific contract terms and obligations." Id. (citing Gordon v. Matthew Bender & Co., 562 F. Supp. 1286, 1289 (N.D. Ill. 1983)). The covenant, then, is merely "an estimate of 'what parties would agree to if they dickered about the subject explicitly.'" Continental Bank, N.A. v. Everett, 964 F.2d 701, 705 (7th Cir. 1992) (quoting Jordan v. Duff & Phelps, 815 F.2d 429, 435-36 (7th Cir. 1987)), [*57] cert. denied, 113 S. Ct. 816 (1992). The covenant is thus used to fill contractual gaps. Where the disputed issue in a contract is governed by express terms, however, there is no gap to be filled, and the parties' behavior is assessed according to the express provisions, without resort to an implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing. Continental, 964 F.2d at 705. Unfortunately for plaintiffs, this is just such a situation. The express language of paragraphs 17 and 30 leaves no room for the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing to step in. Serfecz has inherited a highly unfavorable lease, and we cannot rewrite the contract now.

Defendants' motion for summary judgment on the claim of breach of lease in Count IV must be granted insofar as it is based on Jewel's failure to continue operating or release its space at the Grove Mall.

IV. The Malicious Prosecution Claim

In February 1990, Serfecz learned that Jewel was in the process of negotiating a sublease with United Skates. To prevent the proposed sublease, Serfecz changed the locks to the facility. Jewel then brought a declaratory judgment action [*58] against Serfecz in state court regarding its right to sublease its premises to United Skates. Plaintiffs maintain that the lawsuit was devised solely for the purpose of harassing and intimidating Serfecz and his attorneys, and otherwise interfering with Serfecz's efforts to redevelop the Grove Mall. Accordingly, in Count III of their complaint, plaintiffs charge Jewel with malicious prosecution.

"Actions for malicious prosecution of a civil proceeding are not favored in Illinois on the ground that courts should be open to litigants for resolution of their rights without fear of prosecution for calling upon the courts to determine their rights." Keefe v. Aluminum Co. of America, 166 Ill. App. 3d 316, 519 N.E.2d 955, 956, 116 Ill. Dec. 740 (Ill. App. 1st Dist. 1988), appeal denied, 526 N.E.2d 831 (1988). A malicious prosecution claimant must prove the following five elements:

(1) Institution and prosecution of judicial proceedings by the defendant;

(2) Lack of probable cause for those proceedings;

(3) Malice in instituting the proceedings;

(4) Termination of the prior cause in plaintiff's [*59] favor; and

(5) Suffering by plaintiff of some special injury, beyond the anxiety, loss of time, attorney fees and necessity for defending one's reputation which are the common incidents of most lawsuits.

There is no question in the present case as to proof of elements (1) and (4), regarding institution and prosecution of judicial proceedings and termination of the suit in plaintiffs' favor. Additionally, we find that plaintiffs have sufficient evidence to create a factual dispute as to the third element, malicious intent, especially given the requirement that on summary judgment the court must view all inferences in the light most favorable to the nonmoving party. See Regner v. City of Chicago, 789 F.2d at 536. In support of their interpretation of events, plaintiffs point to Jewel's misconduct during discovery in the state court suit, implying that Jewel's dilatory discovery tactics were intended primarily to exacerbate the harassment suffered by plaintiffs as a result of the litigation. Plaintiffs also note that prior to trial in the state court action, Jewel rejected Serfecz's offer to pay Jewel the same rent it would have received from [*60] United Skates, a decision by Jewel which further implies that Jewel's true goal in bringing suit was not to sublet to United Skates and earn rental income but to harass Serfecz. Paragraph 31 of the Jewel lease states that "no sublease shall be made . . . which increases the insurance rates with respect to the leased premises without Lessor's written consent." A major focus of the lawsuit concerned the impact that the subtenancy of a roller rink and games arcade would have had on the Grove Mall's property insurance rates. Plaintiffs point to evidence that despite the importance of the insurance issue, Jewel's primary witness had no idea what the effect on insurance rates would be. This ignorance on Jewel's part suggests a lack of preparation and investigation. Plaintiffs also note that Jewel waived its right to use an insurance expert. This evidence further supports plaintiffs' position that the lawsuit was merely a "sham" brought primarily for purposes of harassment and intimidation.

Probable cause in the context of a malicious prosecution claim means the existence of facts "that would lead a person of ordinary caution and prudence to believe that he had a justifiable claim." Keefe, 519 N.E.2d at 956. [*61] We find that plaintiffs have sufficient evidence to support a finding of lack of probable cause, the second element of malicious prosecution. At trial, the state court directed a finding for Serfecz, concluding that Jewel had presented no evidence to support its case. Plaintiffs' Response, Exhibits (Jewel v. Serfecz, No. 90 CH 7124, (Circuit Court of Cook County 7/13/90)). The appellate court affirmed the trial court, noting that Jewel had presented "no competent testimony" regarding the insurance rates. Plaintiffs' Response, Exhibit 5 (Jewel v. Serfecz, No. 1-90-2576, (Ill. App. 1st Dist. May 31, 1991)). We agree with plaintiff that the fact that Jewel did not thoroughly research or present evidence on the insurance question supports an inference that it lacked probable cause to believe that it would win the case.

Defendants note that Jewel succeeded in its quest for a temporary restraining order ("TRO") against plaintiffs, and argue that as a matter of law, this preliminary success conclusively establishes probable cause. In Keefe, the court held that a civil judgment entered by the circuit court would constitute conclusive evidence of probable [*62] cause, even though that judgment was subsequently reversed on appeal. 519 N.E.2d at 956. The Illinois Appellate Court said nothing, however, about the evidentiary impact of the issuance of a TRO. While obviously a grant of a TRO would be some evidence of probable cause, we do not believe it to have the same per se conclusive weight as a final judgment by the trial court, presumably reached after a period of more careful and thorough consideration of all the issues than is typical at the TRO stage of litigation. Moreover, defendants have not presented much information regarding the nature of the TRO that was issued. We know only that Serfecz attempted to oust Jewel from the premises by changing the locks, and that as a result of the TRO, Jewel regained control of the property it leased in the Grove Mall. The mere fact that the trial court concluded that Jewel was entitled to access to its leased property does not conclusively establish that Jewel had probable cause to believe that it was entitled to a declaratory judgment regarding its right to sublet to United Skates. Thus, we conclude that there remains a material factual [*63] dispute on the issue of probable cause.

Finally, we consider the element of special injury. Defendants argue that plaintiffs have failed to present evidence of some unique injury, such as seizure of property or personal arrest, that differs from the usual stresses and demands inherent in defending a law suit. The Illinois Appellate Court explained in Equity Assoc. v. Village of Northbrook, 171 Ill. App. 3d 115, 524 N.E.2d 1119, 121 Ill. Dec. 71 \(Ill. App. 1st Dist. 1988\), appeal denied, 530 N.E.2d 243 (1988), that special injury involves interference with property so great as to "suspend" the victim's "right to the free use of his own property during the pendency" of the prosecution. Id. at 1123 (citing Lasswell v. Ehrlich, 92 Ill. App. 3d 935, 416 N.E.2d 423, 48 Ill. Dec. 392 \(1981\) (citing Norin v. Scheldt Manufacturing, 297 Ill. 521, 130 N.E. 791 \(1921\))). The result is either an actual seizure or an effective or constructive seizure of the property, far beyond mere "interference." [*64] Equity Assoc., 524 N.E.2d at 1123. Unless a plaintiff can prove such special injury, "the institution of an ordinary civil action or proceeding, no matter how unfounded, vexatious or malicious it may be, does not give rise to an action for malicious prosecution." Bank of Lyons v. Schultz, 78 Ill. 2d 235, 399 N.E.2d 1286, 1288, 35 Ill. Dec. 758 (1980) (internal quotation marks and citation omitted). Plaintiffs' argument regarding injury focuses on the harm Serfecz suffered in his efforts to redevelop the Grove Mall as a result of the litigation. However severe this injury may have been, it is simply not the type of "special injury" envisioned by the Illinois courts.¹²

[*65] Thus, we must grant defendants' motion for summary judgment on the claim of malicious prosecution in Count III for failure to prove special injury.

CONCLUSION

For the reasons discussed above, the motion of defendants Jewel and American Stores for summary judgment on the antitrust and malicious prosecution claims in Counts I, II, and III is granted. Summary judgment is also granted on Count IV insofar as the breach of lease claim is based on Jewel's failure to continue operating a grocery store at the Grove Mall, and denied insofar as it is based on the unlawful use provision in the lease. The only claim remaining against Jewel and American Stores, then, is the state law claim in Count IV for breach of lease based on Jewel's alleged use of the premises in furtherance of a monopolistic scheme in violation of Sherman Antitrust Act § 2. We have supplemental jurisdiction over this claim pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1337(a). Timm v. Mead Corp., Slip Op. No. 93-3629 at 7 (7th Cir. Aug. 9, 1994).¹³

[*66] DATED: August 30, 1994

ENTER:

John F. Grady, United States District Judge

End of Document

¹² We note that a preliminary injunction which prevents a plaintiff from using his property would constitute a special injury under Illinois law. Bank of Lyons, 399 N.E.2d at 1288-89. However, the temporary restraining order issued in this case does not constitute such an injury. While the state court ultimately concluded that Jewel was not entitled to sublet to United Skates, there is no indication that plaintiffs were injured by the TRO which, apparently, merely gave their legal tenant, Jewel, access to and control of its leased premises.

¹³ Even were we to dismiss all the federal claims against the other defendants, we would decline to exercise our discretion under § 1337(c) to dismiss the remaining pendent state law claims, but rather, weighing concerns of judicial economy, fairness and comity, we would continue to exercise supplemental jurisdiction. This case is well over a year old, and, like the court in Timm, we see "no need to delay the resolution of this matter (and add to the burdens of the Illinois court system) by having the parties litigate the . . . state law issues anew in state court," id. at 8-9, especially given the fact that the remaining state law breach of lease claim involves a claim of violations of federal antitrust law.

G.E.E.N. Corp. v. Southeast Toyota Distrib.

United States District Court for the Middle District of Florida, Orlando Division

August 31, 1994, Decided ; August 31, 1994, Filed

CASE NUMBER: 93-632-CIV-ORL-19

Reporter

1994 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 21553 *; 1994 WL 695364

G.E.E.N. CORPORATION, f/d/b/a ENGLANDER TOYOTA; TRAIL TOYOTA, INC.; and EDWARD W. ENGLANDER, Plaintiffs, v. SOUTHEAST TOYOTA DISTRIBUTORS, INC.; J.M. FAMILY ENTERPRISES, INC.; TENDER LOVING CARE CORP. k/n/a Fidelity Warranty Services, Inc.; WORLD OMNI LEASING, INC., k/n/a World Omni Financial Corp.; JOYSERV CO., LTD; JOHN MCNALLY as trustee of the dissolved corporation CARNETT-PARTSNETT SYSTEMS, INC.; JIM MORAN & ASSOCIATES, f/k/a JIM MORAN INSURANCE COMPANY; JAMES M. MORAN; TOYOTA MOTOR SALES U.S.A., INC. and TOYOTA MOTOR CREDIT CORPORATION, Defendants.

Disposition: [*1] Defendants' Motion for Summary Judgment (Doc. No. 62) GRANTED. Judgment entered on behalf of the Defendants, Southeast Toyota Distributors, Inc., J.M. Family Enterprises, Inc., Tender Loving Care Corp k/n/a Fidelity Warranty Services, Inc., World Omni Leasing, Inc., k/n/a World Omni Financial Corp., Joyserv Co., Ltd; John McNally as trustee of the dissolved corporation Carnett-Partsnett Systems, Inc., Jim Moran & Associates, f/k/a Jim Moran Insurance Company, James M. Moran, Toyota Motor Sales U.S.A., Inc., and Toyota Motor Credit Corporation and against plaintiffs, G.E.E.N. Corporation, f/d/b/a Englander Toyota; Trail Toyota, Inc.; and Edward W. Englander.

Core Terms

instant case, antitrust, duress, parties, floor plan, summary judgment, terminate, Plaintiffs', conspiracy, settlement, floorplan, revision, invalid, lease, counterclaim, financing, theaters, pull, settlement agreement, general release, part and parcel, misrepresentation, allegations, Renewed

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Opposing Materials > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Discovery > Methods of Discovery > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > Movant Persuasion & Proof

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Genuine Disputes

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Supporting Materials > General Overview

HN1 [down arrow] Summary Judgment, Opposing Materials

Summary judgment is authorized if the pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories, and admissions on file, together with the affidavits, if any, show that there is no genuine issue of material facts and that the moving party is entitled to a judgment as a matter of law. Fed. R. Civ. P. 56\(c\). The moving party bears the burden of proving that no genuine issue of material fact exists. In determining whether the moving party has satisfied the burden, the court considers all inferences drawn from the underlying facts in a light most favorable to the party opposing the motion, and resolves all reasonable doubts against the moving party.

Contracts Law > ... > Affirmative Defenses > Fraud & Misrepresentation > General Overview

Torts > Business Torts > Fraud & Misrepresentation > General Overview

HN2 [down arrow] Affirmative Defenses, Fraud & Misrepresentation

A plaintiff must prove four elements to establish a cause of fraudulent misrepresentation. Plaintiff must show that the defendant (1) made a false representation of fact; (2) that the defendant knew the representation was false when it was made; (3) that the representation was made for the purpose of inducing the plaintiff to act in reliance of it; and (4) that the plaintiffs' justifiable reliance on the representation resulted in injury.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Contracts Law > Types of Contracts > Settlement Agreements

Civil Procedure > ... > Federal & State Interrelationships > Choice of Law > General Overview

Contracts Law > ... > Affirmative Defenses > Coercion & Duress > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Settlements > Settlement Agreements > General Overview

HN3 [down arrow] Types of Contracts, Settlement Agreements

The United States Court of Appeals for the 11th Circuit treats settlement agreements as contracts and decides questions regarding settlements by looking to state law applicable to contracts in general.

Contracts Law > ... > Affirmative Defenses > Fraud & Misrepresentation > General Overview

Torts > Business Torts > Fraud & Misrepresentation > General Overview

HN4 [down arrow] Affirmative Defenses, Fraud & Misrepresentation

Reasonable reliance cannot be established where the relationship between the parties has been plagued with distrust.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Settlements > Releases From Liability > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Settlements > Settlement Agreements > General Overview

HN5 Regulated Practices, Private Actions

An adequately drawn and validly executed release will bar antitrust claims. However, a release which was secured as part of an anticompetitive attempt to drive the other party out of business can be voided on the ground that it is "part and parcel" of an antitrust conspiracy.

Business & Corporate Law > Distributorships & Franchises > Causes of Action > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Complaints > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > Time Limitations

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > General Overview

HN6 Distributorships & Franchises, Causes of Action

Section 1223 of the Federal Automobile Dealer Day in Court Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1221 et seq., provides that any action brought shall be forever barred unless commenced within three years after the cause of action shall have accrued.

Contracts Law > ... > Affirmative Defenses > Coercion & Duress > General Overview

HN7 Affirmative Defenses, Coercion & Duress

To prove duress under Florida law it must be shown (1) that the act sought to be set aside was effected involuntarily and thus not as an exercise of free choice or will and (2) that this condition of mind was caused by some improper and coercive conduct of the opposite side. However, it is not improper and therefore not duress to threaten what one has a legal right to do.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Contracts Law > Types of Contracts > Express Contracts

Contracts Law > Contract Modifications > General Overview

HN8 Types of Contracts, Express Contracts

Florida law provides that parties to contracts can modify express provisions in those contracts by a course of dealing. A course of dealing may modify express contract terms, but when the express terms of a contract and the course of dealing cannot be reasonably reconciled, the express terms of the contract control.

Business & Corporate Law > Distributorships & Franchises > Assignments & Transfers

HN9 Distributorships & Franchises, Assignments & Transfers

Fla. Stat. ch. 320.643 (1989) provides in pertinent part: Notwithstanding the terms of any franchise agreement, a licensee shall not, by contract or otherwise, fail to give effect to, prevent, prohibit, or attempt to penalize, any motor vehicle dealer from selling, assigning, transferring, alienating, or otherwise disposing of, in whole or in part, the equity interest unless the licensee proves at a hearing pursuant to this section that such sale, transfer, alienation, or other disposition is to a person who is not of good moral character.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Contracts Law > Types of Contracts > Releases

Contracts Law > ... > Affirmative Defenses > Coercion & Duress > General Overview

Contracts Law > Remedies > Ratification

HN10 [L] Types of Contracts, Releases

A contract or release which is induced by duress is voidable, not void, and the person claiming duress must act promptly to repudiate the contract or release, or he will be deemed to have waived his right to do so.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Contracts Law > Types of Contracts > Releases

Contracts Law > Remedies > Ratification

HN11 [L] Types of Contracts, Releases

A party who retains the benefits of a contract cannot escape the obligations imposed by the contract. If a releasor retains the consideration after learning that the release is voidable, the continued retention of the benefits constitutes a ratification of the release.

Counsel: For G.E.E.N. CORPORATION, TRAIL TOYOTA, INC., EDWARD W. ENGLANDER, plaintiffs: Robert Cintron, Jr., Bruce Culpepper, Pennington, Moore, Wilkinson, Bell & Dunbar, P.A., Tallahassee, FL USA.

For G.E.E.N. CORPORATION, TRAIL TOYOTA, INC., EDWARD W. ENGLANDER, plaintiffs: R. Stuart Huff, Law Office of R. Stuart Huff, P.A., Coral Gables, FL.

For G.E.E.N. CORPORATION, TRAIL TOYOTA, INC., EDWARD W. ENGLANDER, plaintiffs: Mark L. Ornstein, Killgore, Pearlman, Stamp, Ornstein & Squires, Usher L. Brown, Brown, Ward, Salzman & [*2] Weiss, P.A., Orlando, FL.

For EDWARD W. ENGLANDER, plaintiff: Peter N. Hill, Wolff, Hill, McFarlin & Herron, P.A., Orlando, FL.

For SOUTHEAST TOYOTA DISTRIBUTORS, INC., J.M. FAMILY ENTERPRISES, INC., TENDER LOVING CARE CORP., WORLD OMNI LEASING, JOYSERV CO., LTD., JOHN MCNALLY, JIM MORAN & ASSOCIATES, JAMES M. MORAN, defendants: Douglas B. Brown, Rumberger, Kirk & Caldwell, P.A., Orlando, FL USA.

For SOUTHEAST TOYOTA DISTRIBUTORS, INC., J.M. FAMILY ENTERPRISES, INC., TENDER LOVING CARE CORP., WORLD OMNI LEASING, JOYSERV CO., LTD., JOHN MCNALLY, JIM MORAN & ASSOCIATES, JAMES M. MORAN, defendants: Raymond W. Bergan, Daniel F. Katz, Timothy S. Driscoll, Williams & Connolly, Washington, DC.

For TOYOTA MOTOR CREDIT CORPORATION, TOYOTA MOTOR SALES U.S.A., INC., defendants: Francis Edmund Pierce, III, Gurney & Handley, P.A., Orlando, FL USA.

For TOYOTA MOTOR CREDIT CORPORATION, TOYOTA MOTOR SALES U.S.A., INC., defendants: Stephen G. Morrison, Nina Nelson Smith, S. Keith Hutto, Steven A. McKelvey, Jr., Carey T. Kilton, Nelson, Mullins, Riley & Scarborough, Columbia, SC.

For TALON ACCEPTANCE CORPORATION, garnishee: Lawrence Howard Katz, Law Office of Lawrence H. [*3] Katz, Maitland, FL.

For SUNSHINE COMPANIES, INC., garnishee: Ross B. Ward, Jr., The Ward Law Group, PA, Clearwater, FL.

For ROBERT B. BURANDT, garnishee: Robert Barry Burandt, Roosa, Sutton, Burandt & Adamski, Cape Coral, FL USA.

For WOLFF, HILL, MCFARLIN & HERRON, P.A., garnishee: Peter N. Hill, Wolff, Hill, McFarlin & Herron, P.A., Orlando, FL.

For SOUTHEAST TOYOTA DISTRIBUTORS, INC., J.M. FAMILY ENTERPRISES, INC., TENDER LOVING CARE CORP., WORLD OMNI, LEASING, JOYSERV CO., LTD., JOHN MCNALLY, JIM MORAN & ASSOCIATES, JAMES M. MORAN, counter-claimants: Douglas B. Brown, Rumberger, Kirk & Caldwell, P.A., Orlando, FL USA.

For SOUTHEAST TOYOTA DISTRIBUTORS, INC., J.M. FAMILY ENTERPRISES, INC., TENDER LOVING CARE CORP., WORLD OMNI LEASING, JOYSERV CO., LTD., JOHN MCNALLY, JIM MORAN & ASSOCIATES, JAMES M. MORAN, counter-claimants: Raymond W. Bergan, Daniel F. Katz, Timothy S. Driscoll, Williams & Connolly, Washington, DC.

For G.E.E.N. CORPORATION, TRAIL TOYOTA, INC., EDWARD W. ENGLANDER, counter-defendants: Usher L. Brown, Brown, Ward, Salzman & Weiss, P.A., Orlando, FL.

Judges: PATRICIA C. FAWSETT, UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE.

Opinion by: PATRICIA C. FAWSETT

Opinion

[*4] ORDER

This case comes before the Court upon the following matters:

(1) Defendants the JM FAMILY, et. al.'s Motion for Summary Judgment and Supporting Memorandum (Doc. Nos. 62 and 63, filed February 11, 1994); Plaintiffs G.E.E.N. CORPORATION, et. al.'s Memorandum in Opposition to the JM Family Defendants' Renewed Motion for Summary Judgment (Doc. No. 83, filed March 15, 1994); The JM FAMILY Defendants' Reply to Plaintiffs' Opposition to the JM Family Defendants' Motion for Summary Judgment (Doc. No. 82, filed March 14, 1994).¹

BACKGROUND

Plaintiffs in this case are two former Toyota dealerships, Englander Toyota and [*5] Trail Toyota ("TRAIL"), and Ed Englander ("ENGLANDER"). Englander owned Englander Toyota and 90 per cent of Trail Toyota. The JM Family Defendants distributed Toyotas and provided related services to both dealerships.

On February 22, 1990, Southeast Toyota Distributors, Inc. ("SET") filed a lawsuit against Englander Toyota and Englander in the Circuit Court of the Ninth Judicial Circuit in and for Orange County, Florida. On May 23, 1990, Englander Toyota and Englander filed a counterclaim and third-party claim against SET, J.M. Family Enterprises, Inc. ("JMFE"), World Omni Leasing, Inc., James M. Moran, and John Joseph McNally. The counterclaim alleged: (1) breach of contract; (2) fraud; (3) violation of Florida antitrust law; and (4) tortious interference with business and contractual relationships.

¹ Defendants filed an earlier motion for summary judgment with memorandum in support thereof on August 27, 1993 (Doc. Nos. 20 and 21), and a supplemental memorandum in support of the motion for summary judgment on October 13, 1993 (Doc. No. 41). Those motions are incorporated by reference herein, as is Plaintiffs' response which was filed on October 15, 1993 (Doc. No. 42).

On or about June 7, 1990, the parties began negotiating a settlement of the SET lawsuit and Englander counterclaims. The parties ultimately signed a Settlement Agreement which required each side to execute a General Release of any and all claims which the parties had against each other. The parties signed the General Release on July 17, 1990. Following the execution of the Settlement [*6] Agreement, the parties submitted to the Circuit Court a Joint Stipulation for Voluntary Dismissal with Prejudice. Pursuant to the Joint Stipulation, Circuit Court Judge Muszinski ordered that the action be dismissed with prejudice.

On August 2, 1993, Plaintiffs filed the instant action. Defendants have moved for summary judgment on the ground that the instant case is barred by the General Release which concluded the original state court litigation. Plaintiffs argue that the release does not bar Plaintiffs' claims in the instant action because the release is invalid.

As the factual basis for their claim that the release is invalid, Plaintiffs contend the following:

As early as April of 1989, Trail Toyota began experiencing difficulties with the JM Family companies. Trail's new and used car inventory was financed under a wholesale floor plan financing arrangement with World Omni Financing Corporation ("WOFCO"), a subsidiary of JM Family Enterprises, Inc. In early 1989, WOFCO began criticizing Trail's financial performance as reflected in the monthly financial statements submitted by Trail to SET and WOFCO. Appendix A To Plaintiff's Memorandum in Opposition to the JM Family Defendants' [*7] Renewed Motion for Summary Judgment Exhibits (3) through (11). WOFCO's primary concern was deficiencies in Trail's net working capital. WOFCO repeatedly threatened to pull Trail's floorplan if Trail Toyota did not increase its net working capital. Id. at Plaintiff's App. A (3)(5)(7)(10). Between April 4, 1989 and August 9, 1989, Englander injected approximately $ 900,000.00 into Trail.

In December, 1989, G.E.E.N. Corporation d/b/a "Englander Toyota" entered into a contract to sell all of its assets. At the time, Englander was the majority owner of Englander Toyota and its chief operating officer. The closing of the sale of Englander Toyota took place in January 1990. At the closing, representatives of the JM Family companies attempted to obtain a general release from Englander, but Englander refused.

In February of 1990 SET filed suit against Englander Toyota and Englander in state court. The suit sought damages from Englander Toyota for violating terms of the Toyota Rental Car Program and for failure to pay for goods and services ordered from SET. Englander and Englander Toyota filed a counterclaim which alleged virtually the same facts and causes of action on behalf of Englander [*8] Toyota as are alleged in the instant case. Trail did not join the counterclaim.

Trail's problems with the JM Family companies continued in 1990. In April of 1990, WOFCO conducted an audit of Trail's books and found that Trail's net working capital was approximately $ 512,600.00 short. Id. at Plaintiff's App. A (12).

In June, 1990, the parties began settlement negotiations. Englander offered to settle his counterclaim for $ 3 million, which SET refused. On June 19, 1990, WOFCO once again threatened to cut off Trail's floorplan, citing a bounced check and the failure to comply with contractual obligations as reasons. On the same day, Englander made a new offer to settle the state court action.² On July 3, 1990, WOFCO again wrote to Trail informing it that WOFCO was terminating Trail's floorplan on July 9, 1990. A week later, Englander and officials of WOFCO reached their global settlement. The parties signed the General Release on July 17, 1990. All parties were represented by counsel. Shortly thereafter, Englander sold Trail.

[*9] Plaintiffs assert several grounds for rescission of the release including: (1) that the release was the result of fraudulent misrepresentation; (2) that the release was "part and parcel" of an antitrust conspiracy; (3) that the release was procured by "threats and coercion" in violation of 15 U.S.C. § 1221 and § 320.641, Florida Statutes, (1989); and (4) that the release was procured by duress.

² Plaintiffs' memorandum alleges that WOFCO made the threat to cut off Trail's floorplan a day before Englander made his second settlement offer on June 19. However, the letter from WOFCO attached as Plaintiffs' App. A(15) is dated June 19.

CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

HN1 Summary judgment is authorized if "the pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories, and admissions on file, together with the affidavits, if any, show that there is no genuine issue of material facts and that the moving party is entitled to a judgment as a matter of law." Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(c); accord Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc., 477 U.S. 242, 250, 91 L. Ed. 2d 202, 106 S. Ct. 2505 (1986). The moving party bears the burden of proving that no genuine issue of material fact exists. Celotex Corp. v. Catrett, 477 U.S. 317, 323, 91 L. Ed. 2d 265, 106 S. Ct. 2548 (1986). In determining whether the moving party has satisfied the burden, the court considers all inferences drawn from the underlying facts [*10] in a light most favorable to the party opposing the motion, and resolves all reasonable doubts against the moving party. Anderson, 477 U.S. at 255.

Fraudulent Misrepresentation

In the instant case, Plaintiffs contend that Defendants knew they had no legal right to terminate Trail's floor plan, but they told Englander that they had the right. This misrepresentation induced him to sign the release in order to keep Trail going until he could find a buyer for it.

Florida law requires that HN2 a plaintiff prove four elements to establish a cause of fraudulent misrepresentation.³ Plaintiff must show that the defendant (1) made a false representation of fact; (2) that the defendant knew the representation was false when it was made; (3) that the representation was made for the purpose of inducing the plaintiff to act in reliance of it; and (4) that the plaintiffs' justifiable reliance on the representation resulted in injury. Uvanile v. Denoff, 495 So. 2d 1177 (Fla. 4th DCA 1986); See also Johnson v. Davis, 480 So. 2d 625 (Fla. 1985).

[*11] In the instant case, Plaintiffs cannot meet the fourth requirement.⁴ Several Florida and Eleventh Circuit cases have held that HN4 reasonable reliance cannot be established where the relationship between the parties has been "plagued with distrust." Bakker Mgmt., Inc. v. First Fed. Sav. & Loan, 541 So. 2d 1334, 1335 (Fla. 3d DCA 1989); Uvanile v. Denoff, 495 So. 2d 1177 (Fla. 4th DCA 1986); Zelman v. Cook, 616 F. Supp. 1121 (S.D. Fla. 1985)(applying Florida law); Pettinelli v. Danzig, 722 F.2d 706 (11th Cir. 1984)(applying Florida law). The relationship between Plaintiffs and Defendants in the instant case was nothing if not distrustful. At the time the settlement agreement was signed, Englander and Englander Toyota were involved in a bitter lawsuit with Defendants in which they accused Defendants of fraud, breach of contract, tortious interference with business relationships, and antitrust violations. Both sides were represented by separate counsel. Englander and Englander Toyota made many of the same factual allegations regarding Defendants' illegal and unethical conduct in the original case as they now make in the [*12] instant case. Under those circumstances it defies logic and the case law for Plaintiffs to assert that they reasonably relied on Defendants' assertions about WOFCO's right to terminate Trail's floorplan.

Release Part of Antitrust Conspiracy

Plaintiffs allege that the release in the instant case was obtained as "part and parcel" of an antitrust conspiracy and therefore may be avoided. As evidence, Plaintiffs essentially repeat the allegations they made to support their claim of fraudulent misrepresentation. They again allege that Defendants had no legal ability to terminate Trail's financing plan but that they nevertheless threatened to terminate the financing unless Englander signed the release. Plaintiffs allege that this illegal threat to pull Trail's financing was part [*13] of a larger antitrust conspiracy to derive illegal profits and drive Plaintiffs out of business.

³ HN3 The Eleventh Circuit treats settlement agreements as contracts and decides questions regarding settlements by looking to state law applicable to contracts in general. Blum v. Morgan Guaranty Trust Company of New York, 709 F.2d 1463 (11th Cir. 1983). Consequently, Plaintiffs' challenge of the instant settlement agreement on grounds of fraudulent misrepresentation and duress are governed by Florida law.

⁴ As explained below, since the floor plan agreement had a provision allowing WOFCO to terminate the floor plan, it is doubtful whether Plaintiffs could meet the first three requirements of a claim for fraudulent misrepresentation.

Federal courts have supported a policy which encourages the amicable settlement and release of antitrust claims. See Redel's Inc. v. General Electric Company, 498 F.2d 95, 99 \(5th Cir. 1974\). The Courts have repeatedly held that HN5 an adequately drawn and validly executed release will bar antitrust claims. E. g. Ingram Corp. v. J. Ray McDermott & Company, Inc., 698 F.2d 1295 \(5th Cir. 1983\); Richard's Lumber & Supply Co. v. United States Gypsum Co., 545 F.2d 18 \(7th Cir. 1976\), cert. denied, 430 U.S. 915, 51 L. Ed. 2d 593, 97 S. Ct. 1326 (1977); Oskey Gasoline and Oil Co., Inc. v. Continental Oil Co., 534 F.2d 1281 \(8th Cir. 1976\); Three Rivers Motors Co. v. Ford Motor Co., 522 F.2d 885 \(3d Cir. 1975\); Schott Enterprises, Inc. v. Pepsico, Inc., 520 F.2d 1298 \(6th Cir. 1975\); Virginia Impression Products Co. v. SCM Corp., 448 F.2d 262 \(4th Cir. 1971\), cert. denied, 405 U.S. 936, 30 L. Ed. 2d 811, 92 S. Ct. 945 (1972). However, the Courts have [*14] articulated the principle that a release which was secured as part of an anticompetitive attempt to drive the other party out of business can be voided on the ground that it is "part and parcel" of an antitrust conspiracy.

In Carter v. Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation, 127 F. Supp. 675 \(W.D. MI 1955\), a federal court invalidated a release clause contained in a lease on the ground that it was part and parcel of an antitrust conspiracy. The plaintiff in Carter had leased two movie theaters to Fox. When the leases expired, plaintiff refused to renew them at a lower rental rate and tried to operate the theaters on her own. Fox would not give her any first-run films, and plaintiff was eventually forced to close her theaters and to sign an option to lease them to Fox at a lower rate. The contract provided that if plaintiff chose to sell the theaters to a third party, the theaters could not be used for any moving picture, theater, or amusement purpose during the term of the lease. Also included in the contract was a release by plaintiff of all claims against Fox. Plaintiff complained of economic coercion and duress at the time of entering the contract. The judge [*15] ruled that because the release was an integral part of the contract which, on its face, created an unreasonable restraint of trade, the release was invalid.

Carter is the only case the Court has been able to find in which a release has been invalidated for being "part and parcel" of an antitrust conspiracy, and it is obviously distinguishable from the instant case. In Carter, the release was one clause of a contract which itself was the very restraint of trade complained of by the plaintiff. Plaintiffs in the instant case have not shown a similar nexus between the release Englander signed and their antitrust allegations. They make sweeping allegations that the release was part of a pattern of illegal activities designed to force Plaintiffs out of business, but, in fact, the release allowed Plaintiffs to remain in business. There is no evidence to show that the release was anything other than a bargained for settlement of the parties' claims, entered into knowingly and voluntarily.

Federal Automobile Dealer Day in Court Act

Plaintiffs suggest that the release is invalid because it was procured by threats and wrongful demands in violation of the Federal Automobile [*16] Dealer Day in Court Act ("the ACT"), 15 U.S.C. 1221 et. seq. It appears to the Court that any claims Plaintiffs might bring under the Act are barred by the applicable statute of limitations. HN6 Section 1223 of the Act provides that any action brought pursuant to this chapter shall be forever barred unless commenced within three years after the cause of action shall have accrued. In the instant case, all the actions Plaintiffs complain of took place before July 17, 1990, the date on which the release was signed. The instant action was filed on August 2, 1993. Since the alleged acts of coercion and intimidation occurred more than three years prior to the commencement of this action, the action is barred.

Duress

The heart of Plaintiffs' attempt to invalidate the release is contained in their allegation that the release was procured by economic duress.

HN7 To prove duress under Florida law it must be shown (1) that the act sought to be set aside was effected involuntarily and thus not as an exercise of free choice or will and (2) that this condition of mind was caused by some improper and coercive conduct of the opposite side. City of Miami v. Kory, 394 So. 2d 494, 497 (Fla. 3d DCA 1981) [*17] (citing Herald v. Hardin, 95 Fla. 889, 116 So. 863 (1928)). However, it is not improper and therefore not duress to threaten what one has a legal right to do. Id.; Spillers v. Five Points Guaranty Bank, 335 So. 2d 851 (Fla. 1st DCA 1976) and cases cited therein.

Although Plaintiffs have made voluminous filings regarding their claim of duress, their claim rests on two essential allegations of misconduct: (1) that WOFCO's threat to terminate Trail's floor plan was illegal and coercive conduct which forced Englander to sign the release against his will; and (2) that SET'S alleged threats to kill the sale of Trail unless Englander agreed to the release violated § 320.641 Florida Statutes (1989).

Plaintiffs repeatedly assert that WOFCO had no legal right to pull Trail's floor plan. However, the floor plan document states that in the event that WOFCO deems itself insecure, it may terminate the floor plan "without demand or further notice and without legal process." Appendix B to Plaintiffs' Memorandum in Opposition to the JM Family Defendants' Renewed Motion for Summary Judgment Exhibit 4A. In their Memorandum in Opposition to the JM Family Defendants' [*18] Renewed Motion for Summary Judgment (Doc. No. 83) Plaintiffs state: "It is true that the WOFCO's floorplan documents purport to be demand instruments and therefor the floor plan purports to be terminable at will." Plaintiffs only explanation for how WOFCO's threat to exercise its right to pull Trail's floor plan "at will" could be illegal is to assert that the contract had been changed through course of dealing. Plaintiffs point out that beginning in 1989 and continuing into 1990, WOFCO threatened to pull Trail's floor plan, but that each time the threats were not carried out. Plaintiffs suggest that these repeated threats which were not enforced modified the contract so that WOFCO no longer had the right to terminate Trail's floor plan.

HN8 Florida law does provide that parties to contracts can modify express provisions in those contracts by a course of dealing. Flagship National Bank v. Gray Distribution Systems, Inc., 485 So. 2d 1336 (Fla. 3d DCA 1986) rev. denied 497 So. 2d 1217 (Fla. 1986). In Flagship, a family business had borrowed money from the bank and signed a note which containing a demand provision. For a four month period the bank extended [*19] credit beyond the loan limit, but when the borrower began experiencing financial difficulty, the bank refused to continue extending credit and demanded payment. The trial court held that the bank's conduct during the period in which it extended credit beyond the loan limit constituted a course of dealing which modified the existing agreement and bound the bank to continue extending credit. The appellate court disagreed. It acknowledged that a course of dealing may modify express contract terms, but it held that when the express terms of a contract and the course of dealing cannot be reasonably reconciled, the express terms of the contract control. The Court found that the express terms of the loan agreement providing for payment on demand overrode any inconsistent interpretation of the agreement which might have been inferred from the parties' dealings.

Similarly, in the instant case, the terms of the floorplan agreement are clear. The fact that WOFCO agreed to forebear from exercising its rights to pull Trail's floorplan on several occasions does not override the express contract provisions. The timing of WOFCO's decision to finally exercise its rights may have placed Englander under [*20] great financial strain, but Plaintiffs have not presented sufficient evidence to show that it was illegal conduct which forced Englander to sign the release against his will.

Plaintiffs final argument is that SET threatened, through its subsidiary WOFCO, to withhold approval of the sale of Trail unless Englander agreed to the settlement. Plaintiffs allege that this interference with Englander's efforts to sell Trail was a violation of Florida law.

HN9 Section 320.643 Florida Statutes (1989) provides in pertinent part:

Notwithstanding the terms of any franchise agreement, a licensee shall not, by contract or otherwise, fail to give effect to, prevent prohibit, or attempt to penalize, any motor vehicle dealer...from selling, assigning, transferring, alienating, or otherwise disposing of, in whole or in part, the equity interest...unless the licensee proves at a hearing pursuant to this section that such sale, transfer, alienation, or other disposition is to a person who is not...of good moral character.

Plaintiffs allege that SET was aware by June and July 1990, that Englander had decided to sell Trail. SET had to approve any sale of Trail. Plaintiffs allege that SET threatened [*21] to withhold its approval unless Englander signed the release. As evidence, Plaintiffs cite the following deposition testimony from Bruce Wohlleb, a high-level official of WOFCO:

Our relationship, at that point, was certainly not a good relationship...and in order for us to try to accommodate him in his request to continue to operate and try to sell the dealership, we felt that we needed to -- we needed to get a -- release from him with regard to the lawsuit that he had filed against our companies.

[England] had a request to continue to do business, and we -- we wanted a release in order for us to continue to try to get to the point, the ending point, where he would -- he would try to sell the dealership.

Wohlleb pp. 32-36.

[England] had sued our companies and we were going to require a release from him in an attempt to assist him to get to Point B, which is what he was trying to do, to get to a sale.

Wohlleb p. 48.

Plaintiffs point out that the state court action to which Wohlleb refers did not name WOFCO as a defendant, nor was Trail a party to that action. Therefore, Plaintiffs contend that when Wohlleb said "we were going to require a release [*22] ...to assist him...to get a sale," he was speaking for SET.

If SET did demand a release of Englander's state court claims as a condition for approving the sale of Trail, it could be a violation of § 320.643 Florida Statutes (1989). If SET extracted the release from Englander by violating Florida law, the release could be voided. While Wohlleb's deposition statements do not expressly state that SET would not approve a sale of Trail without a release from Englander, the Court finds that they raise a genuine issue of material fact as to whether SET violated § 320.643 Florida Statutes (1989).

There is another aspect of Plaintiffs' claim of duress which must be addressed, however. HN10 A contract or release which is induced by duress is voidable, not void, and the person claiming duress must act promptly to repudiate the contract or release, or he will be deemed to have waived his right to do so. DiRose v. PK Management Corp., 691 F.2d 628, 633 \(2d Cir. 1982\) cert. denied 461 U.S. 915, 77 L. Ed. 2d 285, 103 S. Ct. 1896 (1983). Both federal and Florida courts have rejected claims for revision where parties waited too long to assert their rights. See e. g. Grillet v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., 927 F.2d 217, 221 \(5th Cir. 1991\) (Two and one half year delay in seeking revision too long); Henkin v. General Electric Credit Corp., 925 F.2d 231, 233 \(7th Cir. 1991\) (Two and one half year delay in repudiating release unreasonable); In re Boston Shipyard Corp., 886 F.2d 451 \(1st Cir. 1989\) (One and one half years too long to delay bringing duress challenge); Baker v. Penn Mutual Life Insurance Co., 788 F.2d 650, 662 \(10th Cir. 1986\) (Claim for revision brought eight years after contract was effective untimely); Mariner Water Renaturalizer v. Aqua Purification Systems, 214 U.S. App. D.C. 248, 665 F.2d 1066 \(D.C. Cir. 1981\) (Time lapse of 5-8 weeks between buyer's discovery of grounds for revision of contract and buyer's notification of seller was not reasonable for purposes of election to rescind); Steinberg v. Bay Terrace Apartment Hotel, Inc., 375 So. 2d 1089 \(Fla. 3d DCA 1979\) (Remedy of revision disfavored when complaining party fails to promptly deny the contract as binding on him and fails to follow a course of conduct manifesting disavowal of it) (citing Rood Company, Inc. v. Board of Public Instruction of Dade County, 102 So. 2d 139, 141-42 \(Fla. 1958\)).

Additionally, HN11 a party who retains the benefits of a contract cannot escape the obligations imposed by the contract. Grillet v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., 927 F.2d 217 at 220. If a releasor retains the consideration after learning that the release is voidable, the continued retention of the benefits constitutes a ratification of the release. Id.; See In re Boston Shipyard Corp., 886 F.2d 451 at 455; [*23] Morta v. Korea Ins. Corp., 840 F.2d 1452 \(9th Cir. 1988\); Steinberg v. Bay Terrace Apartment Hotel, Inc., 375 So. 2d 1089 at 1092.

In the instant case, Englander signed the release on June 17, 1990. He sold Trail Toyota shortly thereafter. Plaintiffs filed the instant suit on August 2, 1993. There is no evidence that Englander promptly denied the release's effect and followed a course of conduct manifesting a disavowal of it. To the contrary, it appears that Englander remained silent while retaining the benefits of the release for three years.

The Court has not found an instance where a party's claim for revision of a release or contract was upheld after a delay of three years. In the instant case, Plaintiffs' allegations of duress are simply too little, too late. To allow Plaintiffs to rescind this settlement agreement would undermine the well-established policy favoring settlement of disputes and would inject an element of uncertainty into all settlement agreements.

Accordingly, Defendants' Motion for Summary Judgment (Doc. No. 62) is GRANTED.⁵ The Clerk shall enter judgment in favor of Defendants and against Plaintiffs on their claims.

[*24] DONE AND ORDERED at Orlando, Florida, this 31st day August, 1994.

PATRICIA C. FAWSETT

UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE

JUDGMENT IN A CIVIL CASE

. Decision by Court. This action came before the Court. The issues have been heard and a decision has been rendered.

IT IS ORDERED AND ADJUDGED That judgment is entered on behalf of the Defendants, Southeast Toyota Distributors, Inc., J.M. Family Enterprises, Inc., Tender Loving Care Corp k/n/a Fidelity Warranty Services, Inc., World Omni Leasing, Inc., k/n/a World Omni Financial Corp., Joyserv Co., Ltd; John McNally as trustee of the dissolved corporation Carnett-Partsnett Systems, Inc., Jim Moran & Associates, f/k/a Jim Moran Insurance Company, James M. Moran, Toyota Motor Sales U.S.A., Inc., and Toyota Motor Credit Corporation and against plaintiffs, G.E.E.N. Corporation, f/d/b/a Englander Toyota; Trail Toyota, Inc.; and Edward W. Englander.

August 31, 1994

Date

End of Document

⁵ Any issues not addressed in this Order were not deemed necessary to the opinion due to the Court's ruling herein.

TCA Bldg. Co. v. Northwestern Resources Co.

United States District Court for the Southern District of Texas, Galveston Division

August 31, 1994, Decided ; September 1, 1994, Entered

CIVIL ACTION NO. G-93-265

Reporter

861 F. Supp. 1366 *; 1994 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 12644 ; 1995-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P70,864

TCA BUILDING COMPANY, v. NORTHWESTERN RESOURCES CO., et al.

Core Terms

lignite, tracts, Defendants', leases, Sherman Act, monopoly, antitrust, interstate commerce, conspiracy, mining, competitor, options, parties, damages, coal, sham, ratifications, seller, summary judgment, cause of action, price-fixing, alleges, collateral estoppel, anti trust law, state court, monopolize, generating plant, conspired, motions, alleged conspiracy

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Appropriateness

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Genuine Disputes

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Materiality of Facts

HN1 [] Entitlement as Matter of Law, Appropriateness

Summary judgment is appropriate if no genuine issue of material fact exists and the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. Fed. R. Civ. P. 56. A genuine issue of material fact exists if there is a genuine issue for trial that must be decided by the trier of fact. In other words, summary judgment should not be granted if the evidence indicates that a reasonable fact-finder could find in favor of the nonmoving party.

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Summary Judgment > Evidentiary Considerations

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > Movant Persuasion & Proof

861 F. Supp. 1366, *1366L^A 1994 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 12644, 12644

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > Nonmovant Persuasion & Proof

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Supporting Materials > General Overview

HN2 [down arrow] Summary Judgment, Evidentiary Considerations

In ruling on a motion for summary judgment, the court must accept the evidence of the nonmoving party and draw all justifiable inferences in his favor. Credibility determinations, the weighing of the evidence, and the drawing of reasonable inferences are left to the trier of fact. Under Fed. R. Civ. P. 56\(c\), the moving party bears the initial burden of informing the district court of the basis for its motion, and identifying those portions of, the record which it believes demonstrate the absence of a genuine issue of material fact. Once this burden is met, the burden shifts to the nonmoving party to establish the existence of a genuine issue for trial.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Genuine Disputes

HN3 [down arrow] Summary Judgment, Burdens of Proof

Where the moving party has met its Fed. R. Civ. P. 56\(c\) burden, the nonmovant must do more than simply show that there is some metaphysical doubt as to the material facts. The nonmoving party must come forward with specific facts showing that there is a genuine issue for trial. Where the record taken as a whole could not lead a rational trier of fact to find for the nonmoving party, there is no genuine issue for trial.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Complaints > Requirements for Complaint

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrs & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrs & Objections > Motions to Dismiss

Civil Procedure > Pleading & Practice > Pleadings > Rule Application & Interpretation

Civil Procedure > Dismissal > Involuntary Dismissals > Failure to State Claims

HN4 [down arrow] Sherman Act, Claims

Fed. R. Civ. P. 12 provides for the dismissal of claims upon which relief cannot be granted. Under the notice pleading requirements of the Federal Rules, however, a complaint need only set forth a short and plain statement of the claim, Fed. R. Civ. P. 8\(a\), \(e\)\(1\), and \(f\). Each averment of a pleading shall be simple, concise, and direct. No technical forms of pleadings or motions are required. All pleadings shall be so construed as to do substantial justice. Accordingly, motions to dismiss for failure to state a claim are disfavored in this circuit, and such a motion may not be granted unless it appears to a certainty that the plaintiff would not be entitled to recover under any state of facts which could be proved in support of his claim. This rule applies with no less force to a Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 et seq., claim.

861 F. Supp. 1366, *1366L^A1994 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 12644, 12644

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrsers & Objections > Denial of Allegations

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrsers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

HN5 Defenses, Demurrsers & Objections, Denial of Allegations

A general denial, does not pass to plaintiff the burden of proving its entire case on summary judgment, especially when, the parties have not completed discovery.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

HN6 Monopolies & Monopolization, Actual Monopolization

It is not necessary that monopoly power obtained should be exercised. Its existence is sufficient.

Civil Procedure > ... > Preclusion of Judgments > Estoppel > Collateral Estoppel

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrsers & Objections > Affirmative Defenses > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Preclusion of Judgments > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Preclusion of Judgments > Estoppel > General Overview

HN7 Estoppel, Collateral Estoppel

The doctrine of collateral estoppel precludes the relitigation of any ultimate issue of fact which was actually litigated and essential to the judgment in a prior suit, as long as the party against whom the doctrine is asserted had a full and fair opportunity to litigate the issue in the prior suit. In both Texas and federal courts, the doctrine applies even if the prior judgment is under appeal, except in those circumstances, where appeal consists of a trial de novo.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Preclusion of Judgments > Estoppel > Collateral Estoppel

Civil Procedure > ... > Preclusion of Judgments > Estoppel > General Overview

HN8 Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

It is, of course, possible to violate the antitrust laws through activities which, in the absence of anti-competitive intent, are entirely valid and legal.

861 F. Supp. 1366, *1366L^A1994 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 12644, 12644

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Governments > State & Territorial Governments > Claims By & Against

HN9 [down] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

A party is generally immune from antitrust liability based on its having petitioned a court for redress. To pierce this immunity, plaintiff must first show that, as a matter of law, defendant's claims were objectively baseless, in the sense that no reasonable litigant could conclude that the suit is reasonably calculated to elicit a favorable outcome.

Governments > Fiduciaries

Labor & Employment Law > Employment Relationships > Fiduciary Responsibilities

Labor & Employment Law > ... > Conditions & Terms > Trade Secrets & Unfair Competition > Trade Secrets

HN10 [down] Governments, Fiduciaries

It is well established in Texas that at least some employees owe their employers a duty not to disclose certain secrets.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Remedies > Damages

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > Time Limitations

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > Prioritizing Resources & Organization for Intellectual Property Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > Clayton Act

HN11 [down] Remedies, Damages

Section 4B of the Clayton Act bars any private cause of action for treble damages under the antitrust laws which is not commenced within four years after the cause of action accrued, 15 U.S.C.S. § 15b.

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > Extensions & Revivals

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > General Overview

861 F. Supp. 1366, *1366L^A994 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 12644, 12644

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > Time Limitations

HN12 [blue icon] Conspiracy, Elements

The "continuing violation" or "continuing conspiracy" exception to the four-year antitrust statute of limitations permits a cause of action to accrue whenever the defendant commits an overt act in furtherance of an antitrust conspiracy or, in the absence of an antitrust conspiracy, commits an act that by its very nature is a continuing antitrust violation.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > Time Limitations

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

HN13 [blue icon] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

A party does not continually violate the antitrust laws simply by virtue of its mere passive receipt of royalties from a monopoly which purchased its previously competing interests.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > Time Limitations

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

HN14 [blue icon] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Continuing antitrust conduct resulting in a continued invasion of a plaintiff's rights may give rise to continually accruing rights of action. It remains clear nonetheless that a newly accruing claim for damages must be based on some injurious act actually occurring during the limitations period, not merely the abatable but unabated inertial consequences of some pre-limitations action.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > Time Limitations

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

HN15 [blue icon] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Antitrust action based on sham litigation accrues when prior lawsuit was filed, and continued prosecution of that action within the limitations period does not create a new action.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Cartels & Horizontal Restraints > General Overview

861 F. Supp. 1366, *1366L^A1994 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 12644, 12644

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Cartels & Horizontal Restraints > Price Fixing

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Cartels & Horizontal Restraints > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > Price Fixing

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN16 [] Sherman Act, Scope

Horizontal price-fixing agreements are per se illegal under the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Electric Power Industry > State Regulation > Rate Setting & Tariffs

Energy & Utilities Law > Antitrust Issues > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Electric Power Industry > Electric Power Rates > Retail Rates

Energy & Utilities Law > Electric Power Industry > State Regulation > General Overview

HN17 [] State Regulation, Rate Setting & Tariffs

As a matter of law that masochism on the part of a vertically-integrated consumer is not, by itself, a violation of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 et seq.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Remedies > Damages

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Remedies > General Overview

HN18 [] Remedies, Damages

To maintain an action for damages arising from violations of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 et seq., a plaintiff must show that he suffered an antitrust injury; that is, an injury which is of the type that the antitrust laws were intended to prevent, and that flows from that which makes defendants' acts unlawful.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

861 F. Supp. 1366, *1366L^A1994 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 12644, 12644

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN19 [blue icon] Private Actions, Remedies

In the context of a price-fixing conspiracy among sellers in a given market, this means that competitors may not complain of conspiracies that set maximum prices above market levels, or that set minimum prices at any level because, absent predatory pricing, such conspiracies would either leave the competitor in the same position as would market forces or would actually benefit respondents by raising market prices.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Discrimination > Defenses > General Overview

Governments > State & Territorial Governments > Claims By & Against

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN20 [blue icon] Price Discrimination, Defenses

Under the state action doctrine, restraints on trade are immune from antitrust liability if they have been clearly articulated and affirmatively expressed as state policy, and if this policy is actively supervised by the state itself.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Jurisdiction

Evidence > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN21 [blue icon] Sherman Act, Jurisdiction

In Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 et seq., cases plaintiff need not allege, or prove, an actual effect on interstate commerce to support federal jurisdiction. A conspiracy would be covered by the Sherman Act, even though any actual impact on interstate commerce would be indirect or fortuitous.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Healthcare Law > Business Administration & Organization > Peer Review > Organizations

Healthcare Law > Business Administration & Organization > Peer Review > General Overview

HN22 [blue icon] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

If it is interstate commerce that feels the pinch, it does not matter how local the operation which applies the squeeze.

Counsel: [1] For TCA BUILDING COMPANY, Plaintiff: John V Singleton, Jr, Attorney at Law, Houston, TX. G Allen Price, Attorney at Law, Houston, TX.

For NORTHWESTERN RESOURCES COMPANY, A MONTANA CORPORATION, Defendant: David J Beck, Ronald D Secrest, Beck Redden & Secrest, Houston, TX. Don Henry Magee, McGinnis Lochridge & Kilgore, Austin, TX. For HOUSTON LIGHTING & POWER COMPANY, Defendant: Lee L Kaplan, Baker & Botts, Houston, TX.

Judges: KENT

Opinion by: SAMUEL B. KENT

Opinion

[*1371] ORDER ON MOTION FOR SUMMARY JUDGMENT

Plaintiff TCA Building Company ("TCA") brings this action against Defendants Northwestern Resources Company ("Northwestern"), Texas Utilities Electric Company ("TUE"), and Houston Lighting & Power Company ("HL&P"),¹ alleging that the Defendants conspired to keep it from mining lignite from its property, in violation of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. §§ 1 & 2. This property, consisting of two contiguous tracts of land, is located within the area covered by the Jewett Mine, a near-surface lignite strip-mining operation run by Northwestern in Freestone and Leon Counties, Texas. Before the Court is the Defendant's consolidated motion for summary judgment or dismissal. For the reasons [2] stated below, the motion is GRANTED IN PART and DENIED IN PART.

Background

The Jewett Mine

In 1972, the tracts now owned by TCA were purchased by W. Laird Lahrmann and his father, W. Lee Lahrmann, from the Texas Veteran's Land Board ("VBL"), under contracts for deed. These tracts, constituting approximately 107 acres, hold an estimated 2.8 million tons of recoverable lignite. The elder Lahrmann assigned the tracts to his son in 1976. In 1978, the son leased his mineral interests in the tracts to Defendant TUE, for a ten-year primary term.² Since the VBL still held an interest in the property, at that time this was the longest primary term permitted by statute. Simultaneously, however, W. Laird also [3] executed documents purporting to grant TUE the option to lease the tracts for an additional 35 years. W. Laird died shortly thereafter, and his interest in the tracts passed back to his father.

In 1982, W. Lee Lahrmann and others sued TUE in the District Court of Freestone County, claiming that the 35-year options were void under the Texas statutes pertaining to mineral leases of VBL land. The state court dismissed the lawsuit in 1985 for want of prosecution.

Meanwhile, HL&P and Northwestern had also been acquiring lignite leases in this area.³ In 1979, HL&P and Northwestern entered a "Lignite Supply Agreement." This agreement established a lignite "Reserve Area" covering a large contiguous area in Limestone, Leon, and Freestone Counties, including the Lahrmann tracts. Under the agreement, HL&P sub-leased all of its lignite properties within the Reserve Area to Northwestern, agreed to build a lignite-burning generating [4] plant in Limestone County, and agreed to purchase all of this plant's fuel requirements from Northwestern. In return, Northwestern agreed to attempt to acquire enough further reserves in the Reserve Area to supply the plant's expected 240,000,000 ton lignite requirements over its 30-year lifespan; to dedicate all of this reserve to HL&P; and to mine and deliver the lignite to the plant. Additionally, through this and subsequent agreements, HL&P agreed to purchase all of the permanent facilities necessary to mine the reserves, then lease this equipment to Northwestern for a nominal fee. This operation would become known as the Jewett Mine.

¹ The Plaintiff actually sued Utility Fuels, Inc., a sister company of HL&P. Since that time, however, Utility Fuels completely merged into HL&P, and HL&P was substituted as a Defendant herein. For the sake of simplicity, this opinion will refer to all activities of Utility Fuels as having been those of HL&P.

² TUE is an electric utility which operates several lignite-fueled generating stations in Texas.

³ HL&P is an electric utility, and Northwestern is a mining company.

In 1986, TUE sold Northwestern a block of leases in the Reserve Area covering approximately 1300 acres, including the leases and options covering the Lahrman tracts, in exchange for an overriding royalty. Concerned about the possible invalidity of the options on Lahrman's land, Northwestern sent one of its landmen, [5] Don McLaughlin, to obtain a ratification of these options. By this time, Lahrman owned the property in fee simple, and it was no longer under VLB [*1372] restrictions. Lahrman executed the ratifications in 1987.

Don McLaughlin left Northwestern in April, 1991, knowing that Northwestern planned to prepare Lahrman's land for mining that year. In September 1991, Lahrman sold his tracts, plus all claims and causes of action related to them, to Plaintiff TCA Building Company. TCA is owned by a trust created by Don McLaughlin's brother, Houston attorney Michael McLaughlin.

The Litigation

Two months after purchasing the tracts, TCA sued Northwestern in the District Court of Freestone County for a declaration that the leases were void,⁴ later adding TUE and HL&P as defendants. TCA claimed that the initial options were void under VLB regulations, and that the subsequent ratifications were void because they were procured through fraud. Northwestern maintained that its leases were valid, and continued preparing the TCA tracts for mining by stripping off the overburden and dewatering the subsurface. In November 1992, TCA informed Northwestern that it would seek more than $ 50 million in damages [6] if Northwestern mined the tracts under the disputed leases.

Northwestern responded in February 1993 that it would simply bypass the TCA tracts, and not mine the land at all, if TCA did not recognize its right to do so without reservation. Northwestern also informed TCA that:

In the progression of lignite production, once the production has passed the Lahrman tract, it will not be economically feasible to move back and produce lignite from the Lahrman tract. It is estimated that by May 1, 1993, the mining and reclamation operations will have bypassed the Lahrman tract to the point that it is not economically feasible to produce lignite from the Lahrman tract.

TCA balked, and Northwestern did, in fact, mine around the TCA [7] tracts.

Despite its extant demand in the state court suit that Northwestern vacate its land, TCA then amended its petition to include the bypass decision as part of its allegation of fraud. TCA also filed this action, alleging that the actions of the Defendants violated federal antitrust laws.

In December 1993, Northwestern unilaterally released its interest in these tracts to TCA.

Trial on the state court action commenced on January 31, 1994. At trial, TCA complained that the release was inadequate; Northwestern then filed a supplemental release to meet these complaints. After three weeks of evidence, the jury returned a verdict against TCA. Although the court had previously ruled that the initial 35-year options had been void when executed, the jury found that Northwestern had not obtained the ratifications by fraud.

⁴ Typical of the character of the pleadings bandied about by both sides of this lawsuit, Mike McLaughlin contends that he did not learn of the questionable validity of the leases until after he purchased the land. Given the circumstances, this assertion strains the credulity of the Court.

The jury also found that TCA was estopped to assert its claims, and that Northwestern's decision to mine around the TCA Tracts did not diminish the value of the lignite on TCA's land. Accordingly, the state court entered a take-nothing judgment against TCA on March 11, 1994.

TCA's Antitrust Claims

In its recently amended Complaint, TCA asserts that the Defendants [\[8\]](#) have violated §§ 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act by a variety of means. First, TCA claims that the agreement of TUE to assign its lignite rights to Northwestern, and the supply agreements between Northwestern and HL&P, constituted a conspiracy to acquire monopoly power over the production and sale of lignite coal from the Jewett Mine. TCA also alleges that these agreements comprised an effort to fix the price of lignite in "the Jewett Mine market," and to monopolize the market for lignite to supply HL&P's Limestone County generating plant.

Next, TCA continues to assert that Northwestern fraudulently obtained the ratifications of the options on the TCA Tracts, "in furtherance of the conspiracy." TCA then vaguely asserts that the Defendants have "refused to deal" with the Plaintiff in the [\[*1373\]](#) sale of its lignite interest, and have "set out on a course of conduct that has and will hinder Plaintiff's ability to efficiently exploit its lignite interest." Plaintiff supports the refusal to deal claim with evidence that HL&P has refused to purchase TCA's lignite on reasonable terms, and that Northwestern has refused to allow TCA access to the "essential" equipment which it leases from HL&P. TCA also [\[9\]](#) alleges that the Defendants have filed false statements with the Texas Railroad Commission in order to renew their license to mine the Jewett Mine, have slandered Plaintiff's title, and have engaged in "sham litigation" against the Plaintiff. TCA supports this latter allegation by pointing to the counterclaims and third-party claims filed against it and the McLaughlins in the prior state court action.

Standard of Review

General

HN1 [\[↑\]](#) Summary judgment is appropriate if no genuine issue of material fact exists and the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. Fed. R. Civ. P. 56. A genuine issue of material fact exists if there is a genuine issue for trial that must be decided by the trier of fact. Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, 477 U.S. 242, 248, 91 L. Ed. 2d 202, 106 S. Ct. 2505 \(1986\). In other words, summary judgment should not be granted if the evidence indicates that a reasonable fact-finder could find in favor of the nonmoving party. Id. See also Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co. v. Zenith Radio, 475 U.S. 574, 587, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538, 106 S. Ct. 1348 \(1986\).

HN2 [\[↑\]](#) In ruling on a Motion for Summary Judgment, the Court must accept the evidence of the nonmoving party and draw all justifiable [\[10\]](#) inferences in his favor. Credibility determinations, the weighing of the evidence, and the drawing of reasonable inferences are left to the trier of fact. Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, 477 U.S. at 255.

Under Fed. R. Civ. P. 56\(c\), the moving party bears the initial burden of "informing the district court of the basis for its motion, and identifying those portions of [the record] which it believes demonstrate the absence of a genuine issue of material fact." Celotex Corp. v. Catrett, 477 U.S. 317, 323, 91 L. Ed. 2d 265, 106 S. Ct. 2548 \(1986\). Once this burden is met, the burden shifts to the nonmoving party to establish the existence of a genuine issue for trial. Matsushita, supra, 475 U.S. at 585-87; Leonard v. Dixie Well Serv. & Supply, Inc., 828 F.2d 291, 294 \(5th Cir. 1987\).

HN3 [\[↑\]](#) Where the moving party has met its Rule 56\(c\) burden, the nonmovant "must do more than simply show that there is some metaphysical doubt as to the material facts. . . . The nonmoving party must come forward with 'specific facts showing that there is a genuine issue for trial.' Where the record taken as a whole could not lead [\[11\]](#) a rational trier of fact to find for the nonmoving party, there is no genuine issue for trial." Matsushita, supra, 475 U.S. at 586-87 (quoting Fed. R. Civ. P. 56\(e\)).

Dismissal

HN4 Rule 12 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure provides for the dismissal of claims upon which relief cannot be granted. Under the notice pleading requirements of the Federal Rules, however, a complaint need only set forth "a short and plain statement of the claim." Fed. R. Civ. P. 8\(a\); see also Fed. R. Civ. P. 8\(e\)\(1\) ("Each averment of a pleading shall be simple, concise, and direct. No technical forms of pleadings or motions are required."), & 8(f) ("All pleadings shall be so construed as to do substantial justice."). Accordingly, motions to dismiss for failure to state a claim are disfavored in this circuit, and such a motion may not be granted unless "it appears to a certainty that the plaintiff would not be entitled to recover under any state of facts which could be proved in support of his claim." Cook & Nichol, Inc. v. Plimsoll Club, 451 F.2d 505, 506 \(5th Cir. 1971\); Conley v. Gibson, 355 U.S. 41, 45-46, 2 L. Ed. 2d 80, 78 S. Ct. 99 \(1957\); 12 see McLain v. Real Estate Bd. of New Orleans, 444 U.S. 232, 246, 62 L. Ed. 2d 441, 100 S. Ct. 502 \(1980\) ("This rule applies with no less force to a Sherman Act claim").

[\[*1374\]](#) The Defendants' Motion

At several points in their brief, the Defendants raise issues in such broad terms that they cannot be reasonably read to meet their initial summary judgment burden of "informing the district court of the basis for [their] motion, and identifying those portions of [the record] which [they] believe[] demonstrate the absence of a genuine issue." For example, the brief introduces its section on the monopoly allegations by stating the elements of the claim and baldly asserting, without further support, that "TCA cannot establish either element." HN5 A general denial, however, does not pass to Plaintiff the burden of proving its entire case on summary judgment, especially when, as here, the parties have not completed discovery.⁵ Accordingly, any arguments for summary judgment which the Defendants may have believed they raised and which are not addressed herein are summarily denied for lack of specificity.

13 Similarly, the Defendants' attack on TCA's complaint itself ignores the basic concept of the liberal notice pleading requirements in federal court, asking instead for a heightened pleading standard akin to that in civil rights cases. Moreover, the basis of the Defendants' criticism requires an assumption of illiteracy. For example, the Defendants deny that the complaint identifies the relevant product, geographic market, and parties, although these items are easily discerned from even a cursory review of the pleadings: the product is lignite, the geographic market is the Jewett Mine area, and the conspiring parties are the Defendants. Finally, the Court can only imagine that these alleged faults in the pleading form the basis of the Defendants' "motion to dismiss," presumably under Rule 12\(b\)\(6\), because their brief never actually specifies the relief requested from these phantom defects. Accordingly, except for the limited dismissal granted below, the Defendants' motion to dismiss is denied.

Analysis

State Law Claims

TCA's Amended Complaint makes vague references to causes of action arising under state law, such as a suit to quiet title, a request for an injunction against 14 "sham litigation" in state court, and a request for judgment for "common law torts." In response to the Defendants' motion, Plaintiff conceded that the quiet title action is moot in light of Northwestern's release of all claims. As to any other claims TCA attempts to assert under state law relating to its dispute with the Defendants over its lignite rights, through due diligence TCA should have litigated these in the prior state court action. Accordingly, they are barred by res judicata. See Barr v. Resolution Trust Corp., 837 S.W.2d 627, 628 \(Tex. 1992\).

⁵ The Defendants also complain, in their reply to Plaintiff's response, that TCA cannot show that they exercised monopoly power by setting either monopolistic or monopsonistic prices. TCA is not, of course, ever required to make such a showing. See American Tobacco Co. v. United States, 328 U.S. 781, 811, 90 L. Ed. 1575, 66 S. Ct. 1125 \(1946\) (HN6) It is not necessary that the power thus obtained should be exercised. Its existence is sufficient."); United States v. American Airlines, Inc., 743 F.2d 1114, 1118 \(5th Cir. 1984\) (quoting same), cert. dism'd, 474 U.S. 1001, 106 S. Ct. 420, 88 L. Ed. 2d 370 \(1985\).

TCA also claims that the Defendants' alleged "sham litigation" was an act in furtherance of their alleged conspiracy to monopolize. In this context, the sham litigation claim will be discussed infra.

Collateral Estoppel

HN7 [↑] The doctrine of collateral estoppel precludes the relitigation of any ultimate issue of fact which was actually litigated and essential to the judgment in a prior suit, as long as the party against whom the doctrine is asserted had a full and fair opportunity to litigate the issue in the prior suit. Tarter v. Metropolitan Sav. & Loan Ass'n, 744 S.W.2d 926, 927 \(Tex. 1988\). [15] In both Texas and federal courts, the doctrine applies even if the prior judgment is under appeal, except in those circumstances (not relevant here) where appeal consists of a trial de novo. Scurlock Oil Co. v. Smithwick, 724 S.W.2d 1, 6 \(Tex. 1986\); Prager v. El Paso Nat'l Bank, 417 F.2d 1111, 1112 \(5th Cir. 1969\).

In TCA's prior state court action against these Defendants, the primary issue [*1375] was whether the Defendants had obtained the 1987 Lahrmann ratifications of the options on the TCA tracts through fraud. The jury found that they had not, and the court entered a judgment on those findings declaring the leases to be valid and enforceable. Hence, whether or not the options were initially valid,⁶ the state court judgment establishes that TCA's predecessor-in-interest had granted Northwestern a valid right to mine the tracts long before TCA purchased them. Accordingly, TCA is collaterally estopped from denying in this forum that Northwestern's leases on the TCA Tracts were valid and enforceable after the 1987 ratifications, and any antitrust claims based on the Defendants' conduct in obtaining those ratifications are [16] dismissed.

Likewise, TCA may not base any claim in this Court on a theory that actions of the Defendants which were permitted by these valid and enforceable leases were, in fact, pursuant to invalid leases. For example, the leases permitted Northwestern to dispossess TCA and Lahrmann of the surface estate, and to prepare the land for mining. These acts were not illegal, and cannot themselves form the basis of an antitrust claim. Moreover, TCA may not assert any "refusal to deal" claim arising from conduct occurring before December, 1993, because before that date TCA had no interest in lignite with which it could have dealt.

For a similar reason, Northwestern's decision to "mine around" the TCA Tracts cannot form the basis of any liability in this Court. Although far from clear, TCA's theory appears to be that this action furthered [17] the conspiracy to monopolize the Jewett Mine and fix prices therein because "Northwestern, acting for all the monopolists, will either lease reserves at the price it sets, or will mine around lignite owners." As a general proposition, this statement is a truism: if a lignite owner refuses to lease to Northwestern at the price Northwestern is willing to pay, Northwestern will obviously have to mine around that deposit. With respect to TCA, however, the proposition is entirely irrelevant. As established in the state court action, when Northwestern mined around the TCA Tracts in 1993 it already owned the right to mine those tracts, and TCA owned no right to the lignite therein. The Court does suspect that under state law Northwestern actually owed TCA, as a royalty-owner, the commonlaw duty to mine those tracts when it mined the surrounding properties. TCA, however, denied Northwestern's right to do this, and threatened to claim as damages any profits which Northwestern might make on mining the tracts. Under these circumstances, no reasonable fact-finder could conclude that Northwestern should have mined the property anyway. Therefore, TCA cannot claim that Northwestern's decision to [18] mine around its property was improper.

On the other hand, the Defendants incorrectly argue that collateral estoppel precludes entirely the issue of damages. In one of many blatant misrepresentations to the Court, the Defendants baldly claim that the state court findings "established that there was no diminution in value of TCA's surface and lignite estate." In fact, the jury only found that Northwestern's decision to mine around the TCA Tracts did not diminish the value of the lignite therein. Moreover, even this finding does not enjoy the benefits of collateral estoppel, as the Defendants have not suggested -- and the Court has not culled from the record before it -- any reason that this finding was essential to the judgment entered by the state court. See Tarter, 744 S.W.2d at 927 (collateral estoppel applies only to finding essential to judgment in prior suit).

⁶ Both parties also attempt to re-litigate here the question of the options' initial validity. The parties' attempt to reveal the relevance of this inquiry, however, has been unavailing.

Also, contrary to the implications of the Defendants' motion, collateral estoppel does not govern every liability issue raised by TCA's Amended Complaint. HN8[↑] It is, of course, possible to violate the antitrust laws through activities which, in the absence of anti-competitive intent, are entirely 19 valid and legal. See, e.g., Aspen Skiing Co. v. Aspen Highlands Skiing Corp., 472 U.S. 585, 86 L. Ed. 2d 467, 105 S. Ct. 2847 (1985) (holding that circumstances justified finding that defendant's *1376 refusal to continue joint ticket arrangement with smaller competitor violates Sherman Act). The question here, then, is whether TCA can show that the ostensibly valid actions of the Defendants had the effect or purpose of unlawfully suppressing competition.

Sham Litigation

TCA claims, among other things, that the Defendants interfered with its efforts to compete by pursuing "sham litigation" against it and the McLaughlins through their counter-and third-party claims in the state court suit. In that action, Defendant Northwestern claimed that TCA and the McLaughlins conspired to violate Don McLaughlin's alleged duty not to reveal Northwestern's concerns about the validity of the initial coal options on the TCA tracts. The Defendants move for summary judgment on this allegation, which the Court grants.

First, TCA's global claim of sham litigation is clearly meritless as to HL&P and TUE because these Defendants never joined the allegedly sham claims of Northwestern in the state court action. 20 TCA's refusal to acknowledge this could only be for the purpose of harassment, in violation of its duty to this Court.

Second, HN9[↑] a party is generally immune from antitrust liability based on its having petitioned a court for redress. California Motor Trans. Co. v. Trucking Unlimited, 404 U.S. 508, 30 L. Ed. 2d 642, 92 S. Ct. 609 (1972); Eastern R. Presidents Conference v. Noerr Motor Freight, Inc., 365 U.S. 127, 5 L. Ed. 2d 464, 81 S. Ct. 523 (1961). To pierce this immunity, TCA must first show that, as a matter of law, Northwestern's claims were "objectively baseless, in the sense that no reasonable litigant could conclude that the suit is reasonably calculated to elicit a favorable outcome." professional Real Estate Inv. v. Columbia Pictures Indus., 123 L. Ed. 2d 611, 624, 113 S. Ct. 1920 (1993). Even if the claims were objectively baseless, however, TCA must further show that Northwestern subjectively intended the prosecution of the claims to interfere directly with the business relationships of a competitor, through the use of the governmental process as opposed to the outcome of that process. Id.

TCA offers neither argument nor evidence supporting either prong of 21 this test. Furthermore, on an independent analysis, the Court finds that Northwestern's claims were not objectively baseless. HN10[↑] It is well established in Texas that at least some employees owe their employers a duty not to disclose certain secrets. See, e.g., Hunter v. Shell Oil Co., 198 F.2d 485, 487 (5th Cir. 1952) (geologist owes fiduciary duty to oil company employer with regard to company's confidential information about oil deposits). Northwestern's theory that this obligation included a duty by Don McLaughlin to not disclose the legal vulnerability of certain of his employer's contracts was, objectively, at least a good faith argument for the extension of existing law.⁷ 123 L. Ed. 2d at 627 (incorporating standard of Fed. R. Civ. P. 11). Even if not, however, TCA has failed to show even the possibility of subjective anticompetitive intent. Northwestern's "sham litigation" was a counterclaim to a suit brought by TCA. The jury, in turn, found TCA's suit to be lacking in proof. TCA has not shown how the efficient prosecution of Northwestern's "baseless" claims at the same time as TCA's pursuit of its "baseless" primary action could remotely interfere 22 with any of its "business relationships." Nor has TCA even identified any business relationships which existed at the time of filing and with which the litigation could have interfered. In fact, TCA has not even offered a description of Northwestern's actions from which this Court could determine that the process of defending against these claims burdened TCA at all. Accordingly, the claim must fail.

⁷ Northwestern further argues that the fact that those claims were not baseless is established by the state court's refusal to direct a verdict on them." Of course, the state court's refusal to direct a verdict is probative of nothing, and this statement could not be sincerely made by anyone with even a passing familiarity with the mechanics of trial.

[*1377] Limitations

HN11[¹⁵] Section 4B of the Clayton Act bars any private cause of action for treble damages under the antitrust laws which is not commenced within four years after the cause of action accrued. 15 U.S.C. § 15b. TUE argues that, [*23] since it has not done anything in relation to the Jewett Mine or to any interest therein owned by TCA since 1986, and this action was not filed until 1993, any antitrust cause of action by TCA against TUE is clearly time-barred. HL&P and Northwestern also claim the benefit of the limitations statute, on the theory that they completed the alleged conspiracy and monopoly when they obtained the ratifications of the Lahrmann options in 1987.

In response, TCA simply makes the conclusory statement that it has pled "continuing antitrust violations," for which the limitations period is continuously renewed, citing Hanover Shoe v. United Shoe Mach. Corp., 392 U.S. 481, 502 n. 15, 20 L. Ed. 2d 1231, 88 S. Ct. 2224 \(1968\). Even assuming the truth of this conclusion, however, Defendant TUE's involvement with this "continuing violation" cannot be discerned.

HN12[¹⁶] The "continuing violation" or "continuing conspiracy" exception to the four-year antitrust statute of limitations "permits a cause of action to accrue whenever the defendant commits an overt act in furtherance of an antitrust conspiracy or, in the absence of an antitrust conspiracy, commits an act that by its very nature is a continuing antitrust [*24] violation." Kaiser Aluminum & Chem. Sales, Inc. v. Avondale Shipyards Inc., 677 F.2d 1045, 1051 \(5th Cir. 1982\), cert. denied, 459 U.S. 1105, 74 L. Ed. 2d 953, 103 S. Ct. 729 (1983).⁸ The only act which the Plaintiff accuses TUE of which could be classified "by its very nature" as a "continuing antitrust violation" is TUE's alleged participation in a monopoly. However, TCA neither alleges nor presents evidence of anything TUE has done in relationship to the Jewett Mine since assigning its lignite leases to Northwestern in 1986, other than receive royalties from those leases. The undisputed evidence on file establishes that TUE retained no ownership interests in the Jewett Mine, the Limestone County generating plant, or the TCA Tracts, after 1986. Furthermore, TUE played no role in any decisions concerning the mining of the Jewett Mine or the operations of the generating plant.

[*25] This Court holds as a matter of law that HN13[¹⁷] a party does not continually violate the antitrust laws simply by virtue of its mere passive receipt of royalties from a monopoly which purchased its previously competing interests. Cf. Greene County Mem. Park v. Behm Funeral Homes, 797 F. Supp. 1276, 1292 \(W.D. Pa. 1992\)(mere existence of partnership or shareholder interest in a conspiring firm does not give rise to personal liability under the Sherman Act), aff'd 993 F.2d 876 (3rd Cir.), cert. denied, 126 L. Ed. 2d 146, 114 S. Ct. 187 (1993). Otherwise, the passive participant would be perpetually liable for the existence of a violation which it is powerless to end. Therefore, since there is no suggestion in the record that TUE has retained the ability to alter any unlawful monopoly in Jewett Mine area lignite since 1986, the existence of any such monopoly is not a "continuing violation" on the part of TUE.

The Plaintiff's remaining allegations against TUE -- that TUE conspired with the other Defendants to monopolize the Jewett Mine and fix the price of the lignite therein -- fail for the lack of any overt act in [*26] furtherance of the conspiracy since 1986. As the Fifth Circuit has explained, in the context of conspiracy claims:

HN14[¹⁸] Continuing antitrust conduct resulting in a continued invasion of a plaintiff's rights may give rise to continually accruing rights of action. It remains clear nonetheless that a newly accruing claim for damages must be based on some injurious act actually occurring during the limitations period, not merely the abatable but unabated inertial consequences of some pre-limitations action.

⁸ TCA does not claim the benefit of the speculative damages exception described in Zenith Radio Corp. v. Hazeltine Research, Inc., 401 U.S. 321, 28 L. Ed. 2d 77, 91 S. Ct. 795 \(1971\).

[*1378] Poster Exchange, Inc. v. National Screen Service Corp., 517 F.2d 117, 128 (5th Cir. 1975)(footnote omitted), cert. denied, 423 U.S. 1054, 46 L. Ed. 2d 643, 96 S. Ct. 784 (1976). TCA points to no "injurious act" done by TUE, or any active participation by TUE in any alleged conspiracy, within four years of this suit. Since any damages which TUE may have caused TCA have occurred solely because of the inertial consequences of TUE's pre-limitations actions, TCA's claims against TUE are barred. Compare AI George, Inc. v. Envirotech Corp., 939 F.2d 1271, 1275 (5th Cir. 1991)(antitrust HN15¹ action based on sham litigation accrues when [27] prior lawsuit was filed, and continued prosecution of that action within the limitations period does not create a new action), and Kaiser Aluminum, 677 F.2d at 1052-55 (conspiring defendants' continuing receipt of benefits from illegal contract does not create new causes of action), with Poster Exchange, 517 F.2d at 129 (cause of action for refusal to deal is renewed with every specific act or word of refusal).

HL&P and Northwestern also assert the benefit of the limitations statute, on the theory that they had completed their exclusive dealing arrangement and monopoly of the Jewett Mine well before 1989. They are correct, of course, only to the extent that TCA claims damages specifically arising from pre-1989 events. Otherwise, the maintenance of monopolies and agreements in restraint of trade are the classic examples of "continuing violations" of the antitrust laws. See Hanover Shoe v. United Shoe Mach. Corp., 377 F.2d 776, 794-95 (3d Cir. 1967)(cause of action renewed each time defendant enforced and renewed monopoly-creating leases), aff'd in relevant part, 392 U.S. 481, 88 S. Ct. 2224, 20 L. Ed. 2d 1231 (1968); [28] Poster Exchange, supra. Therefore, if these Defendants' more recent refusals to deal with TCA were in furtherance of an unlawful agreement or monopoly, TCA's damages flowing therefrom are clearly not barred by limitations.

Price-Fixing: Failure of Claim and Lack of Standing

TCA claims that the lignite supply agreements between Northwestern and HL&P constitute a price-fixing conspiracy. Furthermore, TCA describes the conspiracy as horizontal as well as vertical; that is, TCA claims that the agreement is not simply an agreement between HL&P and Northwestern as buyer and seller, but is also an agreement between sellers of Jewett Mine lignite because HL&P owns Jewett Mine lignite leases which it has subleased to Northwestern.

Of course, as between an individual buyer and an individual seller a vertical "price-fixing agreement" is not only lawful, but expected. If buyer and seller could not fix a price, nothing would ever get sold. This explains TCA's creative attempt to classify both Defendants as sellers, since HN16¹ horizontal price-fixing agreements are per se illegal under § 1 of the Sherman Act. United States v. Trenton Potteries Co., 273 U.S. 392, 71 L. Ed. 700, 47 S. Ct. 377 (1927). [29]

In this posture, however, the claim must be dismissed for failure to make sense. Price-fixing agreements are illegal because they restrain competition based on consumers' preferences, such as the price, service, or quality associated with a given product. Albrecht v. The Herald Co., 390 U.S. 145, 152-54, 19 L. Ed. 2d 998, 88 S. Ct. 869 (1968). The party most directly harmed by such agreements is the consumer of the subject product. Cf. ARCO v. USA Petroleum, 495 U.S. 328, 336, 109 L. Ed. 2d 333, 110 S. Ct. 1884 (1990). Yet TCA asserts that HL&P, as one of two dominant owners of Jewett Mine lignite, conspired with the other owner to fix the price of said lignite, even though the party most obviously injured by such a conspiracy would be the sole consumer of this ore: HL&P. Given the lack of reason to this theory, the Court holds HN17¹ as a matter of law that masochism on the part of a vertically-integrated consumer is not, by itself, a violation of the Sherman Act.⁹

⁹ In theory, the Court could imagine one reason that HL&P would actually agree to pay inflated prices for its own coal: given that HL&P is a state-regulated utility holding monopolies in various markets for electricity, the payments to Northwestern would appear as legitimate third-party expenses in HL&P's rate applications. Therefore, the regulating agency might set rates for HL&P which appear to be reasonable but which would, in fact, allow HL&P to gain monopoly profits through the monopoly prices it pays to itself for coal supplies.

TCA, however, has neither pled nor argued such a motive. Rather, Plaintiff states in its Amended Complaint that HL&P's motive for entering the lignite supply agreements was perfectly legitimate:

[30] [*1379] Put simply, TCA's complaint describes only a situation in which one coal-owning party -- HL&P -- agreed to purchase a package of mining services and additional coal from another -- Northwestern. Northwestern and HL&P could not have been competing for the sale of HL&P's coal to HL&P, because HL&P already owned it. Likewise, Northwestern did not compete with HL&P for the provision of mining services, because HL&P has no such operations. Therefore, the complaint describes no agreement between competitors and hence no horizontal price fixing agreement.

Moreover, even if Northwestern and the "coal-owning" branch of HL&P could be said to have fixed lignite prices in violation of § 1, TCA would not have standing to complain. As a potential seller of lignite, TCA is a competitor of these alleged conspirators. HN18¹⁰ To maintain an action for damages arising from violations of the Sherman Act, a plaintiff must show that he suffered an "antitrust injury"; that is, an injury which is "of the type that the antitrust laws were intended to prevent, and that flows from that which makes defendants' acts unlawful." Brunswick Corp. v. Pueblo Bowl-O-Mat, Inc., 429 U.S. 477, 489, 50 L. Ed. 2d 701, 97 S. Ct. 690 (1977). [31] HN19¹¹ In the context of a price-fixing conspiracy among sellers in a given market, this means that competitors "may not complain of conspiracies that . . . set maximum prices above market levels, or that set minimum prices at any level" because, absent predatory pricing, such conspiracies "would either leave [the competitor] in the same position as would market forces or would actually benefit respondents by raising market prices." Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 584 n.8, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538, 106 S. Ct. 1348 (1986). As a potential competitor of the Defendants in the market for Jewett Mine lignite, therefore, TCA has no cause of action based on the Defendants' alleged conspiracy to fix the price of that commodity.

TCA's inability to allege such an antitrust injury is further established by the TCA's claimed damages. TCA does not allege that the supposedly "fixed" price has harmed it; in fact, it claims a willingness to sell its coal at a substantially lower price than that paid to Northwestern.¹⁰ Instead, TCA simply claims that the harm it has suffered is an inability to sell its lignite at all. While that may be the result of antitrust violations, it has [32] nothing to do with "price-fixing." Accordingly, any claims for "price-fixing" are dismissed.

Therefore, at this point the only remaining viable claims of TCA are:

- 1) That Northwestern and HL&P have, through otherwise legitimate means, unlawfully monopolized or attempted to monopolize the market for lignite in the Jewett Mine area, in violation of § 2 of the Sherman Act; and
- 2) That the requirements/exclusive dealing contract between Northwestern and HL&P constitutes an unlawful agreement in restraint of trade, in violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act.

The only cognizable antitrust injury TCA alleges is that, in furtherance of these two [*1380] violations, HL&P has effectively refused to purchase TCA's coal, and Northwestern has refused to provide TCA access to its "essential facilities" for marketing that coal to HL&P.¹¹

In order to operate efficiently, and profitably, that is to say to benefit both ratepayers and investors, electric utilities relying on fossil fuels as an energy source must have secure fuel supplies and supply sources to insure continuous production capacity. The more efficient a production unit (such as Limestone County Nos. 1 and 2) is, the more profitable the power company can be because efficient production insures sales of over-capacity to less efficient producers on the power grid. . . . The more secure the fossil fuel supply -- the more efficient the generating station.

Plaintiff's Amended Complaint P 10. Furthermore, this admission by TCA goes far to negate the theory that the Defendants' requirements contract unlawfully restrains trade. The Defendants, however, have not argued this admission as a basis for summary judgment.

¹⁰ Hence the "predatory pricing" exception of Matsushita is inapplicable.

¹¹ The Defendants argue for summary judgment on the grounds that they have not, in fact, refused to deal with TCA. To this end, HL&P claims to have accepted TCA's offer of sale, and Northwestern claims to have "discussed with TCA the possibility of contract mining." TCA's evidence, however, strongly indicates that these statements are not true and that, in fact, the

[33] Other Standing Issues

The Defendants also claim that TCA lacks antitrust standing for these remaining claims. The argument is largely a collection of indecipherable, jumbling, and unconnected pieces of antitrust headnotes, with no description of their relevance to the case at hand or their discernible relationship to the question of standing. The Defendants do cite the seminal case on the issue, Associated Gen. Contractors v. California State Council of Carpenters, 459 U.S. 519, 74 L. Ed. 2d 723, 103 S. Ct. 897 \(1983\). They do so in an utterly conclusory manner, however, with no mention whatsoever of the detailed list of factors the Supreme Court offered therein for the proper analysis of the issue. The thrust of the Defendant's argument, to the extent one can be discovered, appears to be encapsulated in the heading of that section: TCA lacks standing because it is "neither a damaged consumer nor a competitor" of the Defendants. Without more, however, this major premise is derived from an overly broad and simplistic reading of controlling antitrust jurisprudence. See, e.g., Blue Shield v. McCready, 457 U.S. 465, 73 L. Ed. 2d 149, 102 S. Ct. 2540 \(1982\)(patient of psychologist has [34] standing to complain of conspiracy by insurance companies and psychiatrists against psychologists).

Furthermore, Northwestern's premise that TCA is not its competitor is unsupported factually. Since December 1993, when the Defendants unilaterally released their rights to mine the TCA tracts, TCA has been an owner of lignite in the Jewett Mine market. TCA has entered negotiations with companies interested in mining these tracts for TCA, and has attempted to negotiate a the sale of its lignite to HL&P. Nonetheless, the Defendants argue that TCA is not a viable competitor in this market because it has no mining permit, mining equipment, or experienced mining personnel. Reason, however, does not support the notion that a seller of minerals does not "compete" in the market for those minerals simply because it intends to contract the operation of its mine to others.

As a competitor for sales of lignite in a market which the Defendants have allegedly monopolized, which has allegedly lost sales due to the Defendants' allegedly unlawful agreement to exclude competitors, no party is in a better position to vindicate the purposes of the antitrust laws than TCA. Cf. R.C. Dick Geothermal Corp. v. Thermogenics, Inc., 890 F.2d 139, 158 \(9th Cir. 1989\) [35] (Norris, J., dissenting)(noting that a utility, as a regulated monopoly which can pass most of its costs on to consumers, has little motivation to sue its fuel suppliers for antitrust violations).¹² Accordingly, based on the extant pleadings and evidence in the record, and the lack of reasoned argument to the contrary, the Court finds that TCA is the proper party to bring this suit.

[36] Market Allegations

The Defendants assert that TCA's complaint should be dismissed for failure to [*1381] allege a "legally relevant market," claiming that "to the extent that TCA is claiming that the Jewett Mine area is a legally relevant market, it is wrong as a matter of law." In support of this proposition, they cite a case in which a plaintiff defined the relevant market as the market for disseminating one particular trademarked health education program called "Growing Healthy." Re-Alco Indus., Inc. v. National Center for Health Educ., Inc., 812 F. Supp. 387 \(S.D. N.Y. 1993\). There, the court properly held that a single copyrighted or trademarked brand of a seller cannot comprise its own "market" for the purposes of antitrust law. Id. at 391. This conclusion should be obvious; the trademark laws grant the seller Defendants have only "discussed" dealing with TCA on the basis of clearly onerous terms. For example, HL&P has "agreed" to purchase TCA's lignite at the bargain price offered, but only if TCA meets conditions such as posting a $ 6.75 million bond against unspecified possible losses. Such a dichotomy of possible fact findings is a textbook example of a "genuine issue" for trial.

¹² The Defendants cite Thermogenics for the bald proposition that "[a] disgruntled landlord or lessor lacks standing to bring a Section 2 case because a lessor's injuries are not the kind of injuries to competition that the antitrust laws are meant to prevent." This statement calls for two comments. First, the breadth of this proposition is facially preposterous and, of course, unsupported by the cited authority. Second, to the extent that the case otherwise supports the Defendants' motion, the Court would note that, for the most part, the dissenting opinion to that 6-5 en banc decision demonstrates a much more learned appreciation of the current state of antitrust law.

of a trademarked brand a monopoly in that brand of a product, and the relevant market for antitrust purposes consists of that brand's reasonable substitutes. Id.

Amazingly, however, the Defendants then simply state: "So it is here." To support this conclusion, they first add "or product" in their version [37] of the Re-Alco holding, without mentioning the qualifying language "copyrighted or trademarked." Defendant's brief at P 28. Then they argue that the coal mined by Northwestern is Northwestern's own "product," in which it has a natural monopoly. The Court can assure the Defendants, however, that no other erstwhile rational being would dare to credit this assertion with any appellation more generous than ludicrous, or downright silly. The plaintiff has not complained of a monopoly in "Northwestern lignite;" it complained of the Defendants' monopoly in lignite from the Jewett Mine area. This lignite is "naturally" capable of being produced by any party who purchases the right to do so from the various landowners in that area. Northwestern did not create this product, and in fact the rights to the product used to be leased by at least three separate and distinct entities. The prevention of monopolies and restraints on trade in such a "product" with cross-elasticity of demand between various potential sources is, of course, the very essence of the Sherman Act. If the Defendants consolidated significant market power over this product through anticompetitive means, clearly they have created [38] an unlawful monopoly, and their argument to the contrary is disingenuity approaching the obscene.

As if to underscore the frivolity of this argument and the inability to follow the conclusion with any reason, the Defendants again in this section digress to utterly irrelevant statements made, apparently, for the sole purpose of filling paper. After stating that as a matter of law the Jewett Mine market is a natural monopoly, they (in the same paragraph) segue into the statement that their monopoly is not illegal because it was gained by conduct that was honestly industrial. While this may certainly be true, and might vindicate the Defendants if proven, it has nothing whatsoever to do with the question of whether the allegation of a monopoly in Jewett Mine area lignite gained through unindustrial and anticompetitive conduct states a claim for which relief may be granted. Since the answer to that question is clearly that it does, the Defendants' motion to dismiss on this basis defies sense.

State Action Doctrine

The Defendants' journey through Wonderland continues with a claim that the "state action doctrine" precludes TCA's complaint. HN20  Under this doctrine, restraints on trade [39] are immune from antitrust liability if they have been clearly articulated and affirmatively expressed as state policy, and if this policy is actively supervised by the state itself. FTC v. Ticor Title Ins. Co., 112 S. Ct. 2169, 2176, 119 L. Ed. 2d 410, 422 (1992). The Defendants' sole argument based on this doctrine is that, since the State of Texas regulates strip mining from cradle to grave and has licensed only Northwestern to mine the Jewett Mine, the Ticor test is satisfied.

Again, the Defendants provide absolutely no support for this conclusion. They point to no policy wherein the State of Texas even suggests a preference for having only one company mine a given area of lignite deposits, much less clearly articulates such. They do not argue that TCA or its contractors could not obtain a permit to mine in the Jewett Mine area. They enlighten the Court of no state policy favoring exclusive dealing arrangements between mining companies [*1382] and utilities. In short, they present no state policy which necessarily conflicts with federal requirements that they compete for mineral reserves in the Jewett Mine area in accordance with [40] the Sherman Act.

Instead, the Defendants offer only this statutory language:

The State of Texas wishes to assume exclusive jurisdiction over the regulation of surface coal mining and reclamation operations with the State. . . . It is therefore declared to be the purpose of this Act: to prevent the adverse effects to society and the environment resulting from unregulated surface coal mining operations as defined by this Act. Tex. Rev. Civ. Stat. Ann. art. 5920-11, §2, P 5(a) (Vernon's Supp. 1994).

This statement is, of course, utterly devoid of probative value under the Ticor test. Compare Cantor v. Detroit Edison Co., 428 U.S. 579, 49 L. Ed. 2d 1141, 96 S. Ct. 3110 (1976)(state approval of illegal tying arrangement by public utility does not give rise to immunity, because approval does not express adoption or supervision of policy).

Like a mine with its reserves depleted and its framework removed, the Defendants' argument once more is wholly without value or support.

Interstate Commerce

Finally, in an argument not given serious consideration since the Lochner era,¹³ the Defendants propose that this Court lacks jurisdiction over TCA's claims because their activities [41] do not affect interstate commerce, pointing to the Sherman Act's proscription only of those monopolies in, and those restraints of, trade or commerce "among the several states." 15 U.S.C. §§ 1 & 2. In the absence of any basic education on the issue, the argument might be persuasive: the Jewett Mine is located entirely within Texas, the entire output of the mine feeds a Texas generating plant, and the entire electrical output of that plant is sold within Texas. Consideration of the facts of this case in light of the broad and well-established judicial interpretations of the Act's interstate commerce requirement, however, cannot lead to the Defendants' conclusion without a wholesale misrepresentation or concealment of that jurisprudence. As before, unfortunately, deception is the Defendants' battle cry. For example, they cite a 1980 Tenth Circuit opinion -- Crane v. Intermountain Health Care, Inc., 637 F.2d 715 \(10th Cir. 1980\) -- for the propositions that "for jurisdictional purposes, plaintiff must point to relevant channels of interstate commerce logically affected by defendants' allegedly unlawful conduct," and that [42] "it is insufficient that defendants' overall business may impact interstate commerce if the challenged activity is . . . unrelated to interstate commerce." Both suggestions, however, have since been plainly rejected by the Supreme Court. Rather, HN21[] in Sherman Act cases "[plaintiff] need not allege, or prove, an actual effect on interstate commerce to support federal jurisdiction." Summit Health, Ltd. v. Pinhas, 500 U.S. 322, 114 L. Ed. 2d 366, 376, 111 S. Ct. 1842 \(1991\). "A conspiracy . . . would be covered by the Sherman Act, even though any actual impact on interstate commerce would be indirect or fortuitous." Id. at 375.

[43] Indeed, Crane is cited by the dissent in Summit Health as being contrary to the holding of the Court. 114 L. Ed. 2d at 379 (Scalia, J., dissenting). The majority opinion observed that it is "well established" that the Sherman Act reaches all activities which Congress has the constitutional power to regulate under the Commerce Clause. Id. at 374 n.10; Chatham Condominium Ass'n v. Century Village, Inc., 597 F.2d 1002, 1006 \(5th Cir. 1979\). Congress, in turn, enjoys the constitutional power under the Commerce Clause to regulate any activity which may be rationally found to affect interstate commerce. [*Heart of Atlanta Motel, \[1383\] Inc. v. United States, 379 U.S. 241, 258, 13 L. Ed. 2d 258, 85 S. Ct. 348 \(1964\)](#). The question, then, is clearly not whether Jewett Mine lignite or HL&P electricity is in interstate commerce, but simply whether it would be rational to conclude that restraints on trade in lignite from the Jewett Mine area could affect interstate commerce. The only serious answer to this inquiry is "yes."

Defendant Northwestern is a Montana corporation; HL&P, a Texas company. The engineers and managers employed at the Jewett Mine [44] undoubtably hail from across the country. The mine necessarily requires the use of numerous pieces of heavy equipment, many of which are manufactured in other states. Electricity is generated at the Limestone County plant by generators built out-of-state, and it is used in the furtherance of interstate commerce passing through highways, airports, and shipping ports. HL&P expects Northwestern to supply its Limestone County generating plant with 240,000,000 tons of lignite over the plant's 30-year lifespan, displacing HL&P's reliance on other fuel supplies which might be purchased in interstate commerce. Clearly, therefore, the conclusion that the Defendants' operation of the Jewett Mine affects interstate commerce is not only rationally permitted, but rationally commanded. Compare Hodel v. Virginia Surface Mining & Reclam. Ass'n, 452 U.S. 264, 281-83, 69 L. Ed. 2d 1, 101 S. Ct. 2352 \(1981\)(the commerce clause permits Congress to regulate wholly local surface mining operations done by wholly local companies, where Congress rationally found that these operations generally could affect the environment in other states).

¹³ This is only a slight exaggeration; the argument may have had some merit in this Circuit twenty years ago. See Rosemount Sand & Gravel Co. v. Lambert Sand & Gravel Co., 469 F.2d 416 (5th Cir. 1972)(finding no Sherman Act jurisdiction in dispute between local gravel companies where defendant's products were mined and sold only intrastate, despite out-of-state character of plaintiff, its potential purchaser, and defendant's suppliers, and defendant's use of Mississippi River and interstate highways).

Moreover, even under the Defendants' test requiring a logical connection [45] between the effects of the challenged activity and interstate commerce, the Sherman Act plainly reaches the allegations of TCA's complaint and the evidence in support thereof. TCA's complaint alleges that two parties from different states have unlawfully monopolized the production of lignite in the Jewett Mine area, and have unlawfully agreed to restrain trade in that lignite. The evidence supports a finding that, in the absence of such restraints, mining companies located in other states would attempt to compete for the right to produce lignite from that area. These companies might obtain financing from interstate loans or shareholders. Therefore, if the violations alleged are true, the Defendants' conduct has clearly poses a threat to interstate commerce. "HN22[¹⁴] If it is interstate commerce that feels the pinch, it does not matter how local the operation which applies the squeeze." United States v. Women's Sportswear Ass'n, 336 U.S. 460, 464, 93 L. Ed. 805, 69 S. Ct. 714 \(1948\). The Defendants' argument to the contrary is, once more, wholly without foundation in law or fact. Compare Summit Health, supra (local doctor's allegations of conspiracy by local [46] peer review committee at local hospital satisfies Sherman Act jurisdictional requirements, where hospital's overall activities affect interstate commerce); Hospital Bldg. Co. v. Rex Hosp. Trustees, 425 U.S. 738, 48 L. Ed. 2d 338, 96 S. Ct. 1848 \(1976\)(local hospital may bring Sherman Act suit against another local hospital and its local officials for conspiracy to restrain plaintiff hospital's expansion, where failure to expand would restrict interstate medicine sales and financing); Goldfarb v. Virginia State Bar, 421 U.S. 773, 783-85, 44 L. Ed. 2d 572, 95 S. Ct. 2004 \(1975\)(local conspiracy to set fees of local attorneys performing local residential title services is within purview of Sherman Act, where many home purchases are financed with interstate and federal loans); Park v. El Paso Bd. of Realtors, 764 F.2d 1053, 1063 \(5th Cir. 1985\)(El Paso real estate broker's complaint of boycott by other El Paso brokers implicated Sherman Act, where actions of brokers generally affect demand for interstate financing, title insurance, and advertising), cert. denied, 474 U.S. 1102, 88 L. Ed. 2d 919, 106 S. Ct. 884 \(1986\).

Conclusion

From the 40 pages of dross argued [47] by the Defendants, the Court has found very few jewels, and most of these are only semiprecious. Based on these, it is ORDERED that (1) all state law claims are DISMISSED as barred by res judicata; (2) under the doctrine of collateral estoppel, the 1987 ratifications of the options on the Lahrmann [*1384] tracts are DEEMED VALID AND ENFORCEABLE; (3) all sham litigation claims are DISMISSED; (4) all claims against Defendant TUE are DISMISSED as time-barred; and (5) all price-fixing claims are DISMISSED for failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted.

Otherwise, all other requests for relief claimed by the Defendants are DENIED. The rest of the Defendants' motion is characterized by misrepresentation of both law and fact, and argument too illogical and disingenuous to even warrant the distinction of chicanery.¹⁴ The Court is both alarmed and disturbed to note that the motion was presented over the names of some of the most distinguished attorneys in the state. Clearly, the ethical level of advocacy presented therein is far below the standards normally associated with either those individuals or their respective law firms. The Court assumes that this aberration arose [48] simply from a temporary inability to dedicate appropriate resources to this case at the time they were needed. The Court knows, however, that through this motion the Defendants have stolen countless hours of the Court's time, and hence deprived countless other litigants of a more timely resolution of their needs.

This will not happen again in this case. Further pleadings of this character will not be considered by the Court prior to trial. Moreover, the parties will be given only one more opportunity to file dispositive motions. To this end, the pretrial Order of March 2, 1994, is AMENDED to allow the filing of one dispositive motion by each party on or before October 28, 1994. The responses to these motions, if any, will be due November 18, 1994, and no such motions will be considered before that date. [49] Replies to responses will be neither required nor permitted.

Given the February trial setting of this case, the docket of this Court, and the holidays intervening between these deadlines and trial, the Court strongly suggests that the issues raised by any such motions be limited in number and based on clearly established grounds. To this end, the parties are advised that, if the Court is unable to carefully consider the motions before trial, it will simply require their re-briefing afterwards in the form of post-trial motions.

¹⁴ This critique is not intended as praise by omission for the Plaintiff's advocacy. Against a well-reasoned and factually-supported motion, TCA's cursory and conclusory responses would have been woefully insufficient.

Although the Court is loathe to research the law for its litigants, it is also loathe to grant trials on meritless cases. Therefore, the Court suggests that the parties direct at least part of their further attention to Tampa Electric Co. v. Nashville Coal Co., 365 U.S. 320, 5 L. Ed. 2d 580, 81 S. Ct. 623 (1961). If the original agreement by Northwestern and HL&P to excluded dealings with other parties was permissible, it is immaterial that these Defendants are now refusing to deal with TCA, whether pursuant to that contract or otherwise. This, in turn, was the exact issue considered by the Supreme Court in Tampa Electric: the antitrust legality of a public [50] utility's contract with a local mining concern for all of its coal requirements at a local generating plant. Like the Court suspects will be a principle issue in the case at bar, the Tampa Electric court considered the proper standards to be applied in determining the size of the geographic market in which a contract allegedly restrains trade. Although the Supreme Court decided that case under § 3 of the Clayton Act, if the Defendants' arrangement passes muster by that standard it is necessarily valid under the narrower strictures of the Sherman Act. Id. at 335.

Finally, the parties are further ORDERED to file no further pleadings on any of the issues finally disposed of by this Order in this Court, including motions to reconsider and the like, with one exception. If the parties can present to the Court compelling and relevant new evidence or legal authority affecting an issue, which they could not through the exercise of due diligence have presented on original submission of this motion, the parties are invited to bring these to the Court's attention at the time designated above. Otherwise, the parties are instructed to seek any further relief to [51] which they feel themselves entitled in the United States [*1385] Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit, as may be appropriate in due course.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

Done this 31st day of August, 1994, at Galveston, Texas.

SAMUEL B. KENT

UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE

End of Document

Aa All Star Enters.

United States Bankruptcy Court for the Northern District of Ohio, Western Division

September 7, 1994, Decided ; September 7, 1994, Filed

Case No. 94-3136 (Related Case: 94-31962)

Reporter

173 B.R. 343 *; 1994 Bankr. LEXIS 1446 **

In Re: AA All Star Enterprises, Inc., Debtor; AA All Star Enterprises, Inc., Plaintiff v. Ameritech Publishing, Inc., Defendant

Core Terms

advertisement, preliminary injunction, antitrust, monopoly, yellow pages, injunction, appliance, lawsuit, repair, publish

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Injunctions > Preliminary & Temporary Injunctions

Civil Procedure > ... > Injunctions > Grounds for Injunctions > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Injunctions > Grounds for Injunctions > Public Interest

HN1[] Injunctions, Preliminary & Temporary Injunctions

As stated by the United States Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit, there are four factors particularly important in determining whether a preliminary injunction is proper: (1) the likelihood of success on the merits; (2) whether injunction will save the plaintiff from irreparable injury; (3) whether the injunction would harm others; and (4) whether the public interest would be served by the injunction.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Monopolies & Monopolization > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > Monopolization Offenses

HN2[] Monopolies & Monopolization, Attempts to Monopolize

Illegal monopolization under § 2 of the Sherman Act has two distinct elements: (1) possession of monopoly power in the relevant market; and (2) the willful acquisition or maintenance of that power as distinguished from growth or development as a consequence of a superior product, business acumen, or historical accident.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Horizontal Refusals to Deal > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Monopolies & Monopolization > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN3 Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Horizontal Refusals to Deal

For purposes of the "refusal to deal" area of antitrust law under § 2 of the Sherman Act, there exist two conceptually similar lines of cases which impose a duty to deal upon a monopolist. The first is a straightforward "intent" test, which states that a business is free to deal with whomever it pleases so long as it has no purpose to create or maintain a monopoly. There also exists a second, related line of cases which has been styled as promulgating the "bottleneck" theory of antitrust law. Under this approach, a business or group of businesses which controls a scarce facility has an obligation to give competitors reasonable access to it. In theory, the distinction between the intent theory and the bottleneck theory is that the former focuses on the monopolist's state of mind while the latter examines the detrimental effect on competitors.

Judges: [1] Speer

Opinion by: RICHARD L. SPEER

Opinion

[*343] MEMORANDUM OPINION AND DECISION

This cause comes before the Court upon Plaintiffs Verified Complaint For Temporary And Permanent Mandatory Injunction, Motion For Preliminary (Affirmative) Injunction, Motion For Emergency Hearing, Supplemental Brief In Support of Plaintiffs Motion For Preliminary Injunction, and Reply Brief; and Defendant's Memorandum in Opposition to Plaintiffs Motion for Preliminary Injunction, Supplemental Memorandum, and Second Supplemental Memorandum. At the Hearing, the parties were afforded the opportunity to present evidence and arguments they wished the Court to consider in reaching its decision. This Court has reviewed the arguments of counsel, exhibits presented as well as the entire record in the case. Based upon that review, and for the following reasons, the Court finds that the Plaintiffs Motion for Preliminary Injunction should be Denied.

FACTS

Plaintiff/Debtor AA All Star Enterprises, Inc. (hereafter "All Star") is an Ohio corporation engaged in the business of, among other things, appliance repair. On August 10, 1994, Plaintiff filed a voluntary Chapter 11 petition with this Court. On August 18, 1994, Plaintiff filed a [2] Verified Complaint For Temporary and Permanent Injunction, initiating the present case. On that same day, Plaintiff filed a Motion For Emergency [*344] Hearing, along with a Motion For Preliminary Injunction, asking this Court to direct Defendant Ameritech Publishing Inc. (hereafter "Ameritech") to publish All Star's advertisement in its commercial telephone advertising directory, commonly known as the "Yellow Pages". The basis for Plaintiffs claim is that Ameritech's refusal to publish its advertisement will cause irreparable harm to All Star, which obtains almost all of its business from yellow pages advertising, according to the affidavit of Patrick Mayberry, the President of All Star.

An Emergency Hearing was held on August 19, 1994. At that Hearing it was revealed by Ameritech that the basis for its refusal to publish All Star's advertisement is that All Star has not paid approximately One Hundred Seventy-seven Thousand Nine Hundred Thirty-three Dollars ($ 177,933.00) for previous Yellow Page advertisements. Of this amount, approximately Eighty-three Thousand Four Hundred Sixty-seven Dollars ($ 83,467.00) related to advertisements displayed in the 1992-93 Yellow Pages editions for Toledo, [3] Akron, and Indianapolis. The amounts relating to the 1992-93 can be broken down further, into approximately Forty-nine Thousand Three Hundred Ninety-two Dollars ($ 49,392.00) for the Toledo advertisement, Eighteen Thousand Five Hundred Eighty-five Dollars ($ 18,585.00) for Akron, and Fifteen Thousand Four Hundred Ninety Dollars ($ 15,490.00) for Indianapolis. The 1993-94 unpaid advertisements which were run in Toledo and Indianapolis only, totaled approximately Ninety-four Thousand Four Hundred Sixty-six Dollars ($ 94,466.00). These figures were not disputed by All Star.

All Star's justification for not paying these claims relates back to two lawsuits presently pending in state court between itself and Ameritech. The first action appears to be for breach of contract. It appears that All Star expected Ameritech to display its ad first in the 1992-93 Toledo Yellow Pages titled listing. Instead they were placed second. This was the only advertisement alleged to be misplaced. All Star's only explanation for not paying for any of the other ads is that they expect a judgment against Ameritech from these lawsuits, and the moneys owed could simply be subtracted from the judgments.

The second [4] action is an antitrust lawsuit against Ameritech under Section 2 of the Sherman Act for Ameritech's refusal to publish any further advertisements without payment on the previous ones. In that action, All Star alleges that the operation of the Yellow Pages was in effect a monopoly for Ameritech, and as such Ameritech must provide equal access to services for all. It is on the basis of this suit that All Star seeks a Preliminary Injunction.

DISCUSSION

The issue presented in this case is whether this Court should grant a Preliminary Injunction as requested by All Star on the basis of All Star's pending Antitrust action. For the reasons discussed below, the Court will deny All Star's request for Preliminary Injunction.

HN1 As stated by the 6th Circuit Court of Appeals, there are four factors particularly important in determining whether a preliminary injunction is proper:

- (1) the likelihood of success on the merits,
- (2) whether injunction will save the plaintiff from irreparable injury,
- (3) whether the injunction would harm others; and
- (4) whether the public interest would be served by the injunction.

In re: De Lorean Motor Company, 755 F.2d 1223 \(1985\). [5]

For the reasons discussed below, this Court finds that All Star has failed to show a likelihood of success on the merits, and will thus deny its Motion. The other factors listed above need not be discussed in detail. However, it should be noted that Plaintiff has also made no showing that the injunction would harm others or society, other than the bare allegation that All Star may be forced out of business, and the result would harm competition in the appliance repair market. There has been no showing that this market would be non-competitive without the presence of All Star, or that any type of monopoly would result.

[*345] The law in the area of antitrust under Sherman Act has been summarized by the United States Supreme Court in United States v. Grinnell Corp. 384 U.S. 563, 570, 86 S. Ct. 1698, 1704, 16 L. Ed. 2d 778 \(1966\). In that case the Supreme Court noted that HN2 illegal monopolization under Section 2 of the Sherman Act has two distinct elements: 1) possession of monopoly power in the relevant market and 2) "the willful acquisition or maintenance of that power as distinguished from growth or development as a consequence of [6] a superior product, business acumen, or historical accident." 384 U.S. at 570-71.

In the case at bar, All Star must make a reasonable showing that Ameritech's control of the Yellow Pages is a monopoly in the "relevant market" in order to prevail in its antitrust action. Though this Court does not hereby hold that All Star has made this showing, there are several cases wherein the Yellow Pages has been inferred to possess monopoly power in certain instances. See Directory Sales Management v. Ohio Bell Telephone Company, 833 F.2d 606 \(1987\); v. GTE Directories Corporation Ad-Vantage Telephone Directory Consultants, Inc., 849 F.2d 1336 \(1987\); Yellow Pages Consultants Inc. v. GTE Directories Corporation, 951 F.2d 1158 \(1991\). The Court will assume, arguendo, that monopoly power exists as a basis for the analysis of the value of All Star's claim.

HN3 The "refusal to deal" area of antitrust law under Section 2 of the Sherman Act, has been succinctly stated by the 6th Circuit in Byars v. Bluff City News Company, 609 F.2d 843 \(1979\). [7] In Byers, the Court explained:

There exist two conceptually similar lines of cases which impose a duty to deal upon a monopolist. The first is a straightforward 'intent' test which originated from Dicta in United States v. Colgate & Co., supra, 250 U.S. at 307, 39 S.Ct. at 468 where the Court stated that a business is free to deal with whomever it pleases so long as it has no purpose to create or maintain a monopoly'.

There also exists a second, related line of cases which has been styled as promulgating the 'bottleneck theory of antitrust law.' Under this approach, a business or group of businesses which controls a scarce facility has an obligation to give competitors reasonable access to it.

In theory, the distinction between the 'intent' theory and the 'bottleneck' theory is that the former focuses on the monopolist's state of mind while the latter examines the detrimental effect on competitors. Id. at 855-856.

In the case at bar, neither the "intent" theory nor the "bottleneck theory" apply to Ameritech's refusal to deal. For the intent theory to apply, All Star would need to show Ameritech's intent was to capture or maintain [8] a monopoly. All Star only alleges that the actions of Ameritech would harm competition in the appliance repair market because they will be forced out of business. Ameritech does not compete, nor to this Court's knowledge seek to compete, in the Appliance repair market. Thus, their goal, or "intent", is not to monopolize. Rather, they appear only to wish to refrain from doing business with a client who has not paid its bills. This constitutes a valid business justification.

All Star also claims that Ameritech's purposes for their refusal to deal are improper. All Star argues that Ameritech is simply refusing to deal with a client that has instituted a lawsuit against them, and who has not paid them on the basis of the disputed claim. While this argument could have merit to the extent of the disputed claim of the first lawsuit concerning the amount owed for an allegedly misplaced ad in Toledo in 1992-93, it does not have merit concerning the other late payments. The disputed claim amounts to only Forty-nine Thousand Three Hundred Ninety-two Dollars ($ 49,392.00) of the total One Hundred Seventy-seven Thousand Nine Hundred Thirty-three Dollars ($ 177,933.00) which is currently due. Further, [9] Ameritech has not flatly refused to deal. They have offered to publish All Star's add if One Hundred Thousand Dollars ($ 100,000.00) of the total past due amount were paid, and the current advertisement were paid for in advance. [*346] All Star's only counter argument is that it intends to offset any balances due from the judgment it will receive from its two lawsuits. From these facts, this Court determines that All Star has not demonstrated that Ameritech could have an intent to monopolize.

A similar result is reached under the "bottleneck" theory, where the emphasis is upon the detrimental effect on competition. Again, there is no basis to believe that the appliance repair market will in any way suffer absent All Star. Further, because Ameritech has not been shown to engage in the appliance repair market, or stand to gain in any other way from All Star's failing, there is no basis to show any abuse of monopoly power. Thus, All Star has failed to show that it has a significant likelihood of success on the merits of its antitrust claim against Ameritech.

A similar holding was reached by the court in Langenderfer, et al. v. S.E. Johnson Co., et al., 917 F.2d 1413 (1990). [10] Of the many issues presented in that case, one dealt with a small paving and excavating business that claimed the defendants, who were large road construction companies, violated antitrust laws for refusing to sell them stone, sand and asphalt which they depended upon in certain locations. Id. at 1423. The plaintiffs claimed that the reason they were cut off was for assisting another party in another antitrust action against the defendant. Id. at 1424. This is similar to the case herein, where the Plaintiff claims that Ameritech's refusal to deal is motivated by other litigation. Also similar to the case at bar, the plaintiff in Langenderfer was "consistently overdue" in payments, and had shown credit difficulties. Id. at 1425. The court held, "Essentially, it seems clear that defendants and [plaintiff] were engaged in a series of commercial disputes . . . The claim for refusal to deal is inextricably bound with the commercial and contract disputes between the parties, and was not proven to be a practice related to antitrust conduct." Id. at 1426.

For the reasons [11] stated above, this Court likewise holds that All Star's antitrust claim is inextricably bound with commercial disputes and does not have sufficient likelihood of success to enable or persuade this Court to grant its preliminary injunction and force Ameritech to deal with a client that has consistently not paid for the services it was rendered. Such a holding would allow clients of monopolies the right to subvert their payments by simply bringing tenuous claims against the monopoly, and demanding injunctions to force the continuation of services pending lengthy litigation. Such a holding would be contrary to public policy and belie common sense.

For all the foregoing reasons the Court decides to deny the All Star's Motion for Preliminary Injunction. In reaching the conclusion found herein, the Court has considered all of the evidence, exhibits and arguments of counsel, regardless of whether or not they are specifically referred to in this opinion.

Accordingly, it is ORDERED that the Plaintiffs Motion for Preliminary Injunction be, and is hereby, DENIED.

Dated: September 7, 1994

Richard L. Speer, United States Bankruptcy Judge

Armbruster Prods. v. Wilson

United States Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit

June 6, 1994, Argued ; September 12, 1994, Decided

No. 93-2427, No. 93-2428, No. 93-2429

Reporter

1994 U.S. App. LEXIS 24796 *; 1994-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P70,721

ARMBRUSTER PRODUCTS, INCORPORATED, Plaintiff-Appellant, and JOSEPH M. ARMBRUSTER; JOSEPH G. KUMP, Plaintiffs, v. DAVID G. WILSON, Defendant-Appellee. JOSEPH M. ARMBRUSTER, Plaintiff-Appellant, and ARMBRUSTER PRODUCTS, INCORPORATED; JOSEPH G. KUMP, Plaintiffs, v. DAVID G. WILSON, Defendant-Appellee. JOSEPH G. KUMP, Plaintiff-Appellant, and ARMBRUSTER PRODUCTS, INCORPORATED; JOSEPH M. ARMBRUSTER, Plaintiffs, v. DAVID G. WILSON, Defendant-Appellee.

Notice: [*1] RULES OF THE FOURTH CIRCUIT COURT OF APPEALS MAY LIMIT CITATION TO UNPUBLISHED OPINIONS. PLEASE REFER TO THE RULES OF THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THIS CIRCUIT.

Subsequent History: Reported in Table Case Format at: 35 F.3d 555, 1994 U.S. App. LEXIS 32195.

Prior History: Appeals from the United States District Court for the Eastern District of North Carolina, at Raleigh. W. Earl Britt, District Judge. (CA-92-743-5-BR).

Disposition: AFFIRMED

Core Terms

pleadings, district court, estoppel, election, cases, servant, notice, affirmative defense, unfair, tortious interference, motion for judgment

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Evidence > Judicial Notice > Adjudicative Facts > Judicial Records

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Pretrial Judgments > Judgment on Pleadings

Evidence > Judicial Notice > General Overview

Evidence > Judicial Notice > Adjudicative Facts > General Overview

Evidence > Judicial Notice > Adjudicative Facts > Public Records

Evidence > Judicial Notice > Adjudicative Facts > Verifiable Facts

HN1 [down arrow] Adjudicative Facts, Judicial Records

When ruling on a motion for judgment on the pleadings, the district court is not limited to the pleadings themselves, but may take judicial notice of additional facts where appropriate. The judicially noticed fact, pursuant to Fed. R. Evid. 201, must be (1) not subject to reasonable dispute and (2) capable of accurate and ready determination by resort to sources whose accuracy cannot reasonably be questioned. The court may take judicial notice of matters of public record, including notice of other state court pleadings. The consideration of judicially noticed facts does not transform a motion for judgment on the pleadings into a motion for summary judgment.

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Pretrial Judgments > Judgment on Pleadings

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Pretrial Judgments > General Overview

HN2 [down arrow] Pretrial Judgments, Judgment on Pleadings

To sustain a grant of judgment on the pleadings, the non-moving party must not be able to plead any facts that would support her claim.

Evidence > Authentication > General Overview

Evidence > Judicial Notice > General Overview

Evidence > Judicial Notice > Adjudicative Facts > General Overview

Evidence > Judicial Notice > Adjudicative Facts > Public Records

HN3 [down arrow] Evidence, Authentication

The district court is permitted to take judicial notice of the pleadings in another state's action, a matter of public record. Although the complaint was not a certified copy of the original document, that technical failure of authentication is not fatal.

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrs & Objections > Affirmative Defenses > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrs & Objections > Waiver & Preservation of Defenses

HN4 [down arrow] Defenses, Demurrs & Objections, Affirmative Defenses

Fed. R. Civ. P. 8\(c\) requires affirmative defenses to be raised in the pleadings; a failure to comply generally results in waiver. Where the matter is raised in the trial court in a manner that does not result in unfair surprise, however, technical failure to comply precisely with Rule 8\(c\) is not fatal. Waiver does not automatically follow from the failure of a defendant to raise an affirmative defense in the answer. The requirement of pleading an affirmative defense may be waived if evidence of the defense is admitted into the record without objection.

Civil Procedure > ... > Preclusion of Judgments > Estoppel > Collateral Estoppel

Torts > Vicarious Liability > Employers

HN5 [down] Estoppel, Collateral Estoppel

Florida has an established rule that a claimant having elected to sue the master and having obtained a collectible judgment against it cannot subsequently sue the servant for the same conduct. Since the master was only vicariously liable for the servant's conduct under the doctrine of respondeat superior, the plaintiff could not sue the servant after having elected to sue and having obtained a collectible judgment against the master. Florida courts have made clear that under this "election of actions theory" "the plaintiff may elect to treat the employee's act as that of the employer, or that of the employee himself, but not both.

Civil Procedure > ... > Preclusion of Judgments > Estoppel > Collateral Estoppel

HN6 [down] Estoppel, Collateral Estoppel

Satisfaction of the prior judgment is not a requirement for estoppel under Florida law.

Civil Procedure > ... > Preclusion of Judgments > Estoppel > Collateral Estoppel

HN7 [down] Estoppel, Collateral Estoppel

A litigant cannot revisit the same transaction or occurrence, already adjudicated between the same parties, by resort to a new legal theory in a separate lawsuit. To do so is an impermissible splitting of causes of action.

Civil Procedure > ... > Preclusion of Judgments > Estoppel > Collateral Estoppel

HN8 [down] Estoppel, Collateral Estoppel

When the plaintiffs initially sued those defendants, it was incumbent upon them then to raise all available claims or demands for relief arising out of the alleged breach. Their failure to do so precludes subjecting those defendants to another successive action based on the same conduct.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > Federal Trade Commission Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Federal Trade Commission Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Federal Trade Commission Act > Scope

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > US Federal Trade Commission Actions > General Overview

HN9 [down] Trade Practices & Unfair Competition, Federal Trade Commission Act

It is an accepted tenet of basic antitrust law that § 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 45(a)(1), sweeps within its prohibitory scope conduct also condemned by § 1 of the Sherman Act. Proof of conduct violative of the Sherman Act is proof sufficient to establish a violation of the North Carolina Unfair Trade Practices Act.

Counsel: Argued: Roy Wilson Day, Jr., DAY & WHITE, P.A., Raleigh, North Carolina, for Appellants.

Argued: David A. Harlow, MOORE & VAN ALLEN, Durham, North Carolina, for Appellee.

On Brief: Joseph H. Nanney, Jr., MOORE & VAN ALLEN, Durham, North Carolina; Anthony M. Lorusso, Philip X. Murray, LORUSSO & LOUD, Boston, Massachusetts, for Appellee.

Judges: Before ERVIN, Chief Judge, WIDENER, Circuit Judge, and JACKSON, United States District Judge for the Eastern District of Virginia, sitting by designation. Judge Ervin wrote the opinion, in which Judge Widener and Judge Jackson joined.

Opinion by: ERVIN

Opinion

OPINION

ERVIN, Chief Judge:

Armbruster Products, Inc., Joseph M. Armbruster, and Joseph G. Kump (collectively, "Armbruster") brought this action in diversity against David G. Wilson in the United States District Court for the Eastern District of North Carolina on November 8, 1992, alleging [*2] tortious interference with contract, tortious interference with business relationship, wrongful interference with prospective advantage, and unfair trade practices under N.C.G.S. §§ 75-1.1 et seq. Wilson filed his Answer on January 4, 1993. Wilson later filed a Motion for Judgment on the Pleadings on August 20, 1993, seeking dismissal of the suit. District Judge Earl Britt granted Wilson's motion on October 4, 1993.

The district court found that a prior suit brought in Florida state court by Armbruster against Wilson and Wilson's employer, Fasco Industries, Inc., precluded the present suit. In the Florida suit, Wilson was dismissed for lack of personal jurisdiction. A final judgment was entered against Fasco in the amount of $ 1.3 million in favor of Armbruster Products, Inc. and in the amount of $ 200,000 in favor of Joseph M. Armbruster. That judgment is currently on appeal in the Florida courts. Armbruster appeals the district court's grant to Wilson of judgment on the pleadings. For the reasons set forth below, we affirm the district court's decision.

I.

Armbruster Products, Inc. is a Florida corporation. In 1980, Armbruster entered a license agreement with Fasco, a Delaware corporation [*3] with its principal place of business in North Carolina, permitting Fasco to manufacture and sell a power blower known as the "Power Cat" on which Armbruster held a patent. Wilson is president of Fasco's Consumer Products Division.

In 1990, Armbruster developed a portable air circulation device known as the "Blue Blower." Armbruster entered into a contract with Black & Decker in early 1991 whereby Black & Decker would manufacture, market, and sell the device. Under the terms of the contract, Armbruster would receive $ 1.3 million initially and up to $ 10 million in royalties.

In March 1991, Wilson told representatives of Black & Decker that Armbruster had no right to sell a license for the Blue Blower because the device was covered by the agreement between Armbruster and Fasco regarding the Power Cat. Wilson made further representations that Armbruster and its agents were untrustworthy. As a result of these events, Black & Decker terminated its arrangement with Armbruster for the manufacture and sale of the Blue Blower.

Armbruster alleges that Wilson made these representations knowing that they were false with the intent to interfere with the business relationship between Armbruster [*4] and Black & Decker. It filed suit in Florida state court against Fasco and Wilson in the spring of 1991, alleging tortious interference with contract, intentional interference with business relationship, libel and slander, and antitrust violations. The basis of Fasco's liability was alleged to be "that the acts of the division president of the Defendant corporation are such that they are imputed to the corporation and are, in fact, acts of the corporation" J.A. 14. Wilson was dismissed from the Florida suit for lack of personal jurisdiction. Armbruster obtained a judgment against Fasco for over $ 1.3 million dollars. Fasco has posted a bond with the Florida court for $ 2,108,558.75, which will be used to satisfy any judgment against it following appeal.

Armbruster then brought the instant action against Wilson in the Eastern District of North Carolina alleging tortious interference with contract, tortious interference with business relationship, wrongful interference with prospective advantage, and unfair trade practices. Upon motion by Wilson, the district court found that the Florida action precluded this suit.

II.

Armbruster alleges that the district court improperly considered [*5] facts outside the pleadings when ruling on Wilson's motion for judgment on the pleadings; by doing so, the court impermissibly transformed the motion into one for summary judgment without giving the parties notice and an opportunity to respond. Armbruster further argues that because the motion was in fact treated as a motion for summary judgment, the Florida complaint upon which the court relied was not appropriately authenticated and therefore should not have been considered.

HN1[] When ruling on a motion for judgment on the pleadings, the district court is not limited to the pleadings themselves, but may take judicial notice of additional facts where appropriate. Southmark Prime Plus, L.P. v. Falzone, 776 F. Supp. 888, 892 (D. Del. 1991); J.M. Blythe Motor Lines Corp. v. Blalock, 310 F.2d 77, 78-9 (5th Cir. 1962). The judicially noticed fact, pursuant to Fed. R. Evid. 201, must be (1) not subject to reasonable dispute and (2) capable of accurate and ready determination by resort to sources whose accuracy cannot reasonably be questioned. Falzone, 776 F. Supp. at 892. The court may take judicial [*6] notice of matters of public record, United States v. Wood, 925 F.2d 1580 (7th Cir. 1991), including notice of other state court pleadings, In re Phillips, 593 F.2d 356, 357 (8th Cir. 1979). The consideration of judicially noticed facts does not transform a motion for judgment on the pleadings into a motion for summary judgment. Falzone, 776 F. Supp. at 892. HN2[] To sustain a grant of judgment on the pleadings, the non-moving party must not be able to plead any facts that would support her claim. Wood, 925 F.2d at 1581; Blalock, 310 F.2d at 78-79; Falzone, 776 F. Supp. at 891.

The district court below granted judgment on the pleadings on the basis of the pleadings themselves, the briefs submitted by counsel relating to the motion, and a copy of the Complaint filed in the Florida action that was attached to Wilson's motion. Armbruster complains that the court should not have considered the Complaint. We find that HN3[] the district court was permitted to take judicial notice of the pleadings in the Florida action, [*7] a matter of public record. Wilson's motion was not thereby transformed into a motion for summary judgment. Although the Complaint was not a certified copy of the original document, that technical failure of authentication is not fatal. Hal Roach Studios, Inc. v. Richard Feiner & Co., 896 F.2d 1542, 1551 (9th Cir. 1989). Armbruster does not challenge its accuracy. The district court considered no improper evidence in ruling on Wilson's motion.

III.

Armbruster claims that because Wilson did not raise the affirmative defense of estoppel by election in his Answer, he waived the defense.

Florida law contains some authority for the position that if the affirmative defense of estoppel by election is not raised in the pleadings, it is waived. Law Offices of Harold Silver, P.A. v. Farmers Bank & Trust Co., 498 So. 2d 984, 986 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 1st Dist. 1986). See also, Aufseher v. Aufseher, 217 So. 2d 868, 869 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 3d Dist. 1969). However, "although state law defines the nature of defenses, . . . the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure provide the manner and time in which defenses [*8] are raised and when waiver occurs." Lucas v. United States, 807 F.2d 414, 417 (5th Cir. 1986).

HN4 [↑] Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 8\(c\) requires affirmative defenses to be raised in the pleadings; a failure to comply generally results in waiver. Id. "Where the matter is raised in the trial court in a manner that does not result in unfair surprise, however, technical failure to comply precisely with Rule 8\(c\) is not fatal." Id. "It is well established that waiver does not automatically follow from the failure of a defendant to raise an affirmative defense in the answer." Wilkinson v. United States, No. 91-1795, 1992 WL 188144, at * 3 (4th Cir. Aug. 7, 1992) (unpublished opinion). This court has found that the requirement of pleading an affirmative defense may be waived if evidence of the defense is admitted into the record without objection. Caterpillar Overseas, S.A. v. Marine Transport Inc., 900 F.2d 714, 725 (4th Cir. 1990).

Here, Wilson raised the issue of estoppel by election in his motion for judgment on the pleadings. The motion urged "dismissing this action on the grounds that this action was previously tried [*9] by Plaintiffs in an action brought in Florida state court against Defendant's employer and, under Florida law, the previous action bars Plaintiffs from bringing this action." J.A. 102. The Florida complaint filed by Armbruster was attached to the motion. Wilson submitted a brief in support of that motion and Armbruster submitted a reply. Neither the brief nor the reply are part of the record before this court. Wilson contends, and Armbruster does not deny, that Armbruster responded to the motion on the merits without objecting to the submission of the complaint.

Under these circumstances, Armbruster cannot reasonably contend that it was unfairly surprised by the estoppel issue. Because there was no unfair surprise and because evidence of the defense was introduced without objection from Armbruster, Wilson did not waive the affirmative defense of estoppel by election.

IV.

Armbruster argues that the district court misapplied Florida law in determining that the prior suit precluded this action. Two theories Armbruster sets forth are (1)that the prior suit has no preclusive effect because the judgment has not been satisfied, and (2)that a recent Florida court of appeals case requires [*10] the abandonment of traditional Florida law on this issue.

HN5 [↑] Florida has an established rule that a claimant having elected to sue the master and having obtained a collectible judgment against it cannot subsequently sue the servant for the same conduct. Phillips v. Hall, 297 So. 2d 136, 139 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 1st Dist. 1974). As a subsequent opinion explained, "since the master was only vicariously liable for the servant's [conduct] under the doctrine of respondeat superior, the plaintiff could not sue the servant after having elected to sue and having obtained a collectible judgment against the master." Hinton v. Iowa Nat'l Mut. Ins. Co., 317 So. 2d 832, 836 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 2d Dist. 1975), cert. denied, 328 So. 2d 842 (Fla. 1976). After reviewing approaches by other states to the issue, the Hinton court concluded that "the weight of authority is on the side of barring a plaintiff from relitigating his claim against the servant when a judgment has been entered in a prior suit brought against the master involving the same issues." Id. at 837. Florida courts [*11] have made clear that under this "election of actions theory" "the plaintiff may elect to treat the employee's act as that of the employer, or that of the employee himself, but not both." Atlantic Cylinder Corp. v. Hetner, 438 So. 2d 922, 923 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 1st Dist. 1983), review denied, 447 So. 2d 885 (Fla. 1984).

A.

Armbruster claims that because in Phillips, Hinton, and Hetner the judgment against the master had been satisfied or tendered, that satisfaction is a requirement before estoppel will apply. Armbruster finds further support for his position in Mitchell v. Edge, 598 So. 2d 125 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 2d Dist. 1992). In that case, the court found that the Phillips line of cases did not apply because the master had refused to satisfy the judgment, which finding Armbruster interprets to indicate that satisfaction is required before estoppel applies.

In fact, the cases require only that a "collectible" judgment be entered against the master. Phillips, 297 So. 2d at 139; Hinton, 317 So. 2d at 836. The [*12] Phillips court clearly stated that the true foundation for the nonliability of the present defendant is not found in the doctrine of estoppel by judgment, nor in that of satisfaction obtained by the plaintiff from some other party. The plaintiff is debarred from maintaining the present suit because he had and has exercised an election. There was a single wrongful act, and it was the plaintiff's privilege to treat it as that of the actor or as that of the master.

297 So. 2d at 138 (quoting McNamara v. Chapman, 81 N.H. 169, 123 A. 229, 31 A.L.R. 188 (1923)). As the Hinton court clarified, "if the first judgment were not collectible, the plaintiff could sue the [servant] for a sum not to exceed the amount of the first judgment." 317 So. 2d at 838 n.2 (emphasis added). HN6[ Satisfaction of the prior judgment is not a requirement for estoppel under Florida law.

Here, there has been no contention that the judgment against Fasco is uncollectible. In fact, Fasco has posted bond in the amount of $ 2,108,558.75 with the Florida court, and if Armbruster prevails on [*13] appeal in the Florida action, the bond will be used to satisfy the judgment. The district court correctly found that estoppel is appropriate under these circumstances.

B.

Armbruster next argues that the recent Mitchell case requires the abandonment of the Phillips line of cases. Mitchell does cast doubt on the traditional master-servant estoppel cases. The Florida appellate court, however, stopped short of deciding that those cases were no longer good law.

In Mitchell, the master refused to satisfy the judgment against it. The judgment was uncollectible. Therefore, under the Phillips cases, plaintiff was not estopped from pursuing the servant. The Mitchell court noted that had the judgment been satisfied, the servant "perhaps would have a viable defense based on the cases" in the Phillips line. Mitchell, 598 So. 2d at 127. The court went on however, to state that the more modern version of the Restatement (Second) of Judgments § 49 (1982) provides that where a person suffers injury as a result of acts of two or more persons, he has a claim against each of them. Id. at 128. The court indicated [*14] that the new provisions in the revised Restatement may make the traditional rules obsolete. The court concluded, however, that because Hinton is support for our holding under the circumstances of this case, we are not now required to decide whether the more modern version of the rule as stated in the Restatement (Second) of Judgments is now the "weight of authority" and should cause us to recede from the other holdings in Hinton that appear contrary to the Restatement rule.

Id. Mitchell did not decline to follow the Phillips cases. Furthermore, Mitchell is not a decision from the Florida Supreme Court. The Florida Supreme Court denied review of both Hinton and Hetner. There is no indication that it would choose this case to overrule the well established Florida rule. Because Phillips is controlling, the district court correctly determined that Armbruster is estopped from bringing suit against Wilson.

V.

Armbruster's final argument is that even if estoppel prevents relitigation of the claims brought in the Florida suit, Armbruster should be permitted to try its claim under the North Carolina Unfair Trade Practices Act because that claim was not [*15] brought in the Florida action. HN7[ A litigant, however, "cannot revisit the same transaction or occurrence, already adjudicated between the same parties, by resort to a new legal theory in a separate lawsuit. To do so is an impermissible splitting of causes of action." Florida Patient's Compensation Fund v. St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co., 535 So. 2d 335, 338 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 4th Dist. 1988).

HN8[ When the plaintiffs initially sued those defendants, it was incumbent upon them then to raise all available claims or demands for relief arising out of the alleged breach. Their failure to do so precludes subjecting those defendants to another successive action based on the same conduct.

Greenstein v. Greenbrook, Ltd., 443 So. 2d 296, 297 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 3d Dist. 1983). Because Armbruster's claim under the North Carolina statute arises from the same conduct charged in Armbruster's first suit, Armbruster cannot now relitigate the same occurrence under a new legal theory.

Claims under the North Carolina statute sound in antitrust. In fact, provisions of the North Carolina act are reproduced verbatim from § 5 of the Federal [¶16] Trade Commission Act, 15 U.S.C. § 45\(a\)\(1\), and . . . HN9[↑] it is an accepted tenet of basic antitrust law that § 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act sweeps within its prohibitory scope conduct also condemned by § 1 of the Sherman Act. . . . We thus hold that proof of conduct violative of the Sherman Act is proof sufficient to establish a violation of the North Carolina Unfair Trade Practices Act.

Itco Corp. v. Michelin Tire Corp., Com. Div., 722 F.2d 42, 48 (4th Cir. 1983). Armbruster's North Carolina claim is clearly one for anti-trust violations, similar to those brought in the Florida action. Armbruster could have brought the North Carolina claim in the Florida suit, but did not do so. The North Carolina statute does not provide Armbruster a new forum to litigate the same events. The decision of the district court is affirmed.

AFFIRMED

End of Document

Stelwagon Mfg. Co. v. Tarmac Roofing Sys.

United States District Court for the Eastern District of Pennsylvania

September 12, 1994, Decided ; September 12, 1994, Filed; September 13, 1994, Entered

CIVIL ACTION No. 92-1073

Reporter

862 F. Supp. 1361 *; 1994 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 12812 ; 1994-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P70,715

STELWAGON MANUFACTURING COMPANY, Plaintiff, v. TARMAC ROOFING SYSTEMS, INC., Defendant.

Core Terms

sales, damages, new trial, distributorship, roofing, matter of law, remittitur, witnesses, argues, statute of frauds, terms, price discrimination, defense motion, good faith, calculated, antitrust, parties, custom

Counsel: [1] For STELWAGON MANUFACTURING COMPANY, Plaintiff: DAVID A. GRADWOHL, PELINO & LENTZ, PHILA, PA. PATRICK J. DORAN, PELINO & LENTZ, PHILA, PA.

For TARMAC ROOFING SYSTEMS, INC., Defendant: SCOTT R. SHEPHERD, DILWORTH, PAXSON, KALISH & KAUFFMAN, PHILA, PA.

Judges: ROBRENO

Opinion by: EDUARDO C. ROBRENO

Opinion

[*1363] MEMORANDUM

EDUARDO C. ROBRENO, J.

SEPTEMBER 12, 1994

This antitrust and breach of contract action was tried to a jury, which rendered a verdict in plaintiff's favor. Post-trial motions were subsequently filed, with defendant claiming various points of legal and trial error. For the reasons herein stated, the defendant's motion for judgment as a matter of law and for a new trial will be denied, but its motion for remittitur will be granted. ¹

I. BACKGROUND

Stelwagon Manufacturing Company ("Stelwagon") is a wholesale distributor of roofing and related materials.² In early 1988, Stelwagon entered [2] into an oral, semi-exclusive distributorship agreement with Tarmac Roofing

¹ Given the remittitur, the Court will continue its consideration of Stelwagon's motion for attorney's fees pending final resolution of this matter.

² Notwithstanding the company's name, Stelwagon is not a manufacturer. See Tr. of 12/14/93, at 52 (testimony of John R. Keenan).

Systems, Inc. ("Tarmac"), for the distribution of Tarmac's modified asphalt products ("MAPs") in the Philadelphia area. MAPs are rolled roofing products used to cover flat roofs, and are sold to roofing contractors. See Tr. of 12/14/93, at 56-57 (Keenan). Stelwagon sold Tarmac-brand MAPs in 1988 and 1989 without incident in the relationship and with steadily improving results. In early 1989, Stelwagon became aware of sales made to its competitors in violation of the agreement. Some of these sales were also made at preferential prices. Stelwagon complained to Tarmac, and eventually brought the instant action, alleging breach of contract as well as price discrimination in violation of federal antitrust law. See 15 U.S.C. §§ 13\(a\), 15.

[*1364] Defendant moved at the close of plaintiff's [3] case, and again at the close of all the evidence, for judgment as a matter of law pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 50\(a\)\(1\)³ [4] on all counts of plaintiff's complaint. Both of these motions were denied and the case was submitted to the jury, which rendered a verdict in plaintiff's favor on the breach of contract and price discrimination claims, awarding plaintiff $ 1,500,000 and $ 772,000 respectively. The Court trebled the antitrust damages, see 15 U.S.C. § 15, and entered judgment in plaintiff's favor in the amount of $ 3,816,000. Defendant now renews its motion, and, in the alternative, requests a new trial or remittitur. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 50\(b\), 59\(a\).⁴

II. DISCUSSION

A. Legal Standards

The discarding of a jury verdict and entry of judgment as a matter of law in favor of the party who failed to prevail at trial is not lightly done. The evidence in the case must be viewed in the light most favorable to the successful party, and every reasonable inference therefrom must be drawn in that [5] party's favor. See Fineman v. Armstrong World Indus., Inc., 980 F.2d 171, 190 (3d Cir. 1992), cert. denied, 122 L. Ed. 2d 677, U.S. , 113 S. Ct. 1285 (1993); Fireman's Fund Ins. Co. v. Videofreeze Corp., 540 F.2d 1171, 1178 (3d Cir. 1976) ("The trial judge, in his review of the evidence, . . . must expose the evidence to the strongest light favorable to the party against whom the motion is made and give him the advantage of every fair and reasonable inference."), cert. denied, 429 U.S. 1053, 50 L. Ed. 2d 770, 97 S. Ct. 767 (1977). It is impermissible to question the credibility of witnesses, or to weigh conflicting evidence as would a fact-finder. See Parkway Garage, Inc. v. City of Philadelphia, 5 F.3d 685, 691 (3d Cir. 1993). Applying these precepts, a jury verdict can be displaced by judgment as a matter of law only if "the record is 'critically deficient of that minimum quantum of evidence from which the jury might reasonably afford relief.'" Dawson v. Chrysler Corp., 630 F.2d 950, 959 (3d Cir. 1980) [6] (quoting Denneny v. Siegel, 407 F.2d 433, 439 (3d Cir. 1969)), cert. denied, 450 U.S. 959 (1981).

Similar concerns restrict the Court's discretion in ordering a new trial pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 59. "Such an action effects a denigration of the jury system and to the extent that new trials are granted the judge

³ Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 50\(a\)\(1\) provides that:

If during a trial by jury a party has been fully heard on an issue and there is no legally sufficient evidentiary basis for a reasonable jury to find for that party on that issue, the court may determine the issue against that party and may grant a motion for judgment as a matter of law against that party with respect to a claim or defense that cannot under the controlling law be maintained or defeated without a favorable finding on that issue.

⁴ Rule 50\(b\) reads, in relevant part, as follows:

Whenever a motion for a judgment as a matter of law made at the close of all the evidence is denied or for any reason is not granted, the court is deemed to have submitted the action to the jury subject to a later determination of the legal questions raised by the motion. Such a motion may be renewed by service and filing not later than 10 days after entry of judgment. . . .

Rule 59\(a\) reads, in relevant part, as follows:

A new trial may be granted to all or any of the parties and on all or part of the issues (1) in an action in which there has been a trial by jury, for any of the reasons for which new trials have heretofore been granted in actions at law in the courts of the United States takes over, if he does not usurp, the prime function of the jury as the trier of the facts." Lind v. Schenley Indus., Inc., 278 F.2d 79, 90 (3d Cir.) (in banc), cert. denied, 364 U.S. 835, 5 L. Ed. 2d 60, 81 S. Ct. 58 (1960). A new trial on the basis that the verdict is against the weight of the evidence can be granted "only where a miscarriage of justice would result if the verdict were to stand." Klein v. Hollings, 992 F.2d 1285, 1290 \(3d Cir. 1993\). Where the proffered basis is trial error, "the court's inquiry . . . is twofold. It must first determine whether an error was made in the course of the trial, and then must determine whether that error was so prejudicial that [7] refusal to grant a new trial would be inconsistent with substantial justice." Farra v. Stanley-Bostitch, Inc., 838 F. Supp. 1021, 1026 \(E.D. Pa. 1993\) (quotation [*1365] marks omitted), aff'd without op., 992 F.2d 1285, 1290 (3d Cir. July 22, 1994); see Fed. R. Civ. P. 61. An error in jury instructions must be so substantial that, viewed in light of the evidence in the case and the charge as a whole, "the instruction was capable of confusing and thereby misleading the jury." Link v. Mercedes-Benz of N. Am., Inc., 788 F.2d 918, 922 \(3d Cir. 1986\) (quoting United States v. Fischbach & Moore, Inc., 750 F.2d 1183, 1195 \(3d Cir. 1984\)).

862 F. Supp. 1361, *1364 (U.S. Dist. LEXIS 12812, 6

B. Breach of Contract Claim

1. Failure to establish the terms of the contract by clear and precise evidence

The parties agree that, under Pennsylvania law,⁵ the terms of an oral contract must be established by clear and precise evidence in order to be enforceable.⁶ [10] Richardson v. John F. Kennedy Memorial Hosp., 838 F. Supp. 979, 987-88 \(E.D. Pa. 1993\); Gorwara v. AEL Indus., Inc., 784 F. Supp. 239, 242 \(E.D. Pa. 1992\). [8] The clear and precise standard, however, does not require that there be undisputed evidence in the record. Rather, "once it is determined that the parties intended to form a binding agreement, certainty of terms is important only as a 'basis for determining the existence of a breach and for giving an appropriate remedy.'" Browne v. Maxfield, 663 F. Supp. 1193, 1198 \(E.D. Pa. 1987\) (quoting Restatement (Second) of Contracts § 33). "Exact precision" is not required. Richardson, 838 F. Supp. at 988. The jury is to determine the terms and the parties' understanding thereof, viewed in light of all the surrounding circumstances. See Lucacher v. Kerson, 355 Pa. 79, 48 A.2d 857, 857-58 \(Pa. 1946\); McCormack v. Jermyn, 351 Pa. 161, 40 A.2d 477, 479-80 \(Pa. 1945\); Kirk v. Brentwood Manor Homes, Inc., 191 Pa. Super. 488, 159 A.2d 48, 51 \(Pa. Super. 1960\). At trial, testimony concerning the distributorship agreement was offered by numerous witnesses, including John Keenan, plaintiff's vice-president [9] and general manager, and Gordon Amhaus, former vice-president of sales and marketing at Tarmac.⁷ That there were conflicts or

⁵ In resolving Stelwagon's breach of contract claim, state law applies. See Erie R.R. v. Tompkins, 304 U.S. 64, 82 L. Ed. 1188, 58 S. Ct. 817 \(1938\). Neither party contests that Pennsylvania law applies.

⁶ Although plaintiff has agreed that this is the evidentiary standard it must meet, the Court's review of the case law does not support this conclusion. Although a number of cases decided by the federal courts sitting in Pennsylvania have adopted this characterization of Pennsylvania law, see, e.g., Richardson v. John F. Kennedy Memorial Hosp., 838 F. Supp. 979, 987-88 \(E.D. Pa. 1993\); Kassab v. Ragnar Benson, Inc., 254 F. Supp. 830, 832 \(W.D. Pa. 1966\), it appears that the case upon which this line of precedent is based, Miller v. Wise, 33 Pa. Super. 589, 593 \(1907\), dealt not with a garden-variety oral contract, but with an oral contract that allegedly modified a written agreement. See Pellegrine v. Luther, 403 Pa. 212, 169 A.2d 298, 299 \(Pa. 1961\) ("The law is well settled that a written agreement can be modified by a subsequent oral agreement provided the latter is based upon a valid consideration and is proved by evidence which is clear, precise and convincing."). The clear and precise standard has also been applied when fraud is claimed in the formation of a contract, see Krause v. Great Lakes Holdings, Inc., 387 Pa. Super. 56, 563 A.2d 1182, 1187 \(Pa. Super. 1989\), appeal denied, 574 A.2d 70 \(Pa. 1990\), or when an oral contract creating or modifying a will is sought to be enforced, see Kelly v. Sheehan, 378 Pa. 33, 105 A.2d 706, 707 \(Pa. 1954\); Hatbob v. Brown, 394 Pa. Super. 234, 575 A.2d 607, 612 \(Pa. Super. 1990\). Also significant is the omission of this standard in the Pennsylvania Suggested Standard Civil Jury Instructions, which highlight that oral contracts are just as enforceable as written ones, see Pa. SSJI (Civil) § 15.01, but fail to mention the clear and precise standard. Thus, the heightened standard of clear and precise evidence would appear to be applicable to situations where a party seeks to modify a written document with a subsequent oral contract, not for generally establishing an oral contract.

Since both parties have argued that the clear and precise standard applies, and since plaintiff's proof was sufficient to go to the jury based on the higher standard, the Court will apply the clear and precise standard in this case.

contradictions in the testimony is of no moment, since resolution of such inconsistencies is peculiarly the province of the jury. The testimony offered supports Stelwagon's version of the contract between the parties: an exclusive distributorship within Philadelphia, with the exception of Roofer's Mart, a pre-existing distributor. [*1366] There is no basis for entry of judgment as a matter of law in favor of defendant.

2. Failure to establish damages

Tarmac argues that Stelwagon also failed to introduce evidence of damages resulting from the breach of contract. Stelwagon argues that it introduced sufficient evidence to allow the jury to calculate its lost profits due to the breach of the distributorship agreement. Stelwagon may recover lost profits "if there is (1) evidence to establish the damages with reasonable certainty; (2) they were the proximate consequence of the wrong; [and] (3) they were reasonably foreseeable." Advent Sys. Ltd. v. Unisys Corp., 925 F.2d 670, 680 \(3d Cir. 1991\) (citing Delahanty v. First Pennsylvania Bank, N.A., 318 Pa. Super. 90, 464 A.2d 1243, 1258 \(Pa. Super. 1983\)). Stelwagon offered at trial the expert testimony of Dr. Martin Perry, who opined on Tarmac's sales of MAPs to one [*11] of Stelwagon's competitors, Allied Roofing, as well as on Stelwagon's average profit margin. See Tr. of 12/16/93, at 77-79 (testimony of Dr. Martin Perry). Sales within Philadelphia in violation of the distributorship agreement represented lost volume to Stelwagon. This was sufficient evidence from which the jury could conclude that, to the extent Allied sold Tarmac-brand MAPs in Philadelphia, Stelwagon suffered a loss of profits.⁸

3. Contract was barred by the Statute of Frauds

Neither party contests [*12] the applicability of Article Two of the Uniform Commercial Code, governing the sale of goods, to the distributorship agreement. See 13 Pa. Cons. Stat. Ann. §§ 2101-2725 (1984 & Supp. 1994); Weilersbacher v. Pittsburgh Brewing Co., 421 Pa. 118, 218 A.2d 806, 807-08 \(Pa. 1966\). Tarmac argues that the distributorship agreement alleged by Stelwagon violates the statute of frauds because there is no writing and the contract does not come within any of the statute's exceptions. See 13 Pa. Cons. Stat. Ann. § 2201. Specifically, Tarmac argues that judgment as a matter of law must be entered because waiver of the statute cannot be established by custom in the industry, there was no evidence of a prior course of dealing between the parties, and there was insufficient evidence of part performance. These contentions are without merit. As the Pennsylvania Superior Court held in H.B. Alexander & Son, Inc. v. Miracle Recreation Equipment Co., 314 Pa. Super. 1, 460 A.2d 343 \(Pa. Super. 1983\), custom and usage of trade can indicate that there has been a waiver of the statute of frauds' protection, [*13] see id. at 345. See also Atlantic Paper Box Co. v. Whitman's Chocolates, 844 F. Supp. 1038, 1044-45 \(E.D. Pa. 1994\). That there was no prior course of dealing between Stelwagon and Tarmac is irrelevant, since there was evidence in the record to support a conclusion that Tarmac waived the statute of frauds in line with the established industry course of dealing. See Tr. of 12/14/93, at 77-78 (Keenan); Tr. of 12/15/93, at 116-21 (Amhaus).

Likewise, the jury was correctly instructed on the performance exception to the statute of frauds. See 13 Pa. Cons. Stat. Ann. § 2201\(c\)\(3\). Amhaus acknowledged that, as a Tarmac vice-president, he enforced the exclusivity provisions of the distributorship agreement. See Tr. of 12/15/93, at 124 (Amhaus); Tr. of 12/14/93, at 84-86 (Keenan). The argument that the performance exception only excepts the contract to the extent of actual performance is not apposite in the context of a distributorship agreement, where the parties are pledging to use their best efforts. Unlike the sale of discrete goods, upon which Article Two is originally grounded, a distributorship agreement cannot be readily segmented. Tarmac's [14] conduct indicated the existence of an agreement, and it cannot claim inequity in being held to the full terms of the agreement it entered into. As Justice Musmanno penned in describing the role of the statute of frauds:

⁷ At the time of the trial, Mr. Amhaus was employed by GS Roofing Products, Inc., a company that had purchased Tarmac's assets while the litigation was pending. See Tr. of 12/15/1993, at 97-98 (testimony of Gordon Amhaus).

⁸ In the alternative, Tarmac requests a new trial because Dr. Perry's opinion was improperly admitted and because the verdict was against the weight of the evidence. The former issue is taken up infra. As to the weight of the evidence argument, the liability verdict in Stelwagon's favor does not constitute "a miscarriage of justice." See Klein, 992 F.2d at 1290. The amount of damages, however, is suspect, and forms the basis for the Court's remittitur, also discussed infra.

[*1367] The laudable purpose of this guardian of truth is to prevent frauds and perjuries. Occasionally, however, an embattled property owner or prospective purchaser of land, summons the statute to enforce a condition which does not seem to coincide with principles of honesty and fair dealing. In such cases the Courts should study the situation involved to make certain that the statute is not being used to perpetrate fraud and perjuries rather than prevent them.

Simplex Precast Indus., Inc. v. Biehl, 395 Pa. 105, 149 A.2d 121, 123 (Pa. 1959). Tarmac's motion for judgment as a matter of law on the statute of frauds issue must be denied.⁹

[15]

4. Improper instruction on breach of duty of good faith

Tarmac argues that the jury was incorrectly instructed that it could award Stelwagon damages if it found that Tarmac breached the duties of good faith and fair dealing and Stelwagon suffered damages therefrom, citing to Creeger Brick & Building Supply Inc. v. Mid-State Bank & Trust Co., 385 Pa. Super. 30, 560 A.2d 151, 154 (Pa. Super. 1989). Tarmac claims that the Court's charge allowed the jury to award damages without finding that an express term of the contract was breached. This argument is unavailing for two reasons. First, given the Court's lowering, via remittitur, of the breach of contract damages to the specific amount of MAPs sold by Allied in violation of the express terms of the distribution agreement, i.e., in Philadelphia, no damages will be awarded for breach of the duties of good faith and fair dealing. Second, while the actual holding of Creeger Brick is that, with a few exceptions, Pennsylvania law does not recognize a duty of good faith in general contract law, see id. at 153-54, in this case, Article Two of the UCC expressly imposes such a duty on [16] every contract for the sale of goods, see 13 Pa. Cons. Stat. Ann. §§ 1203, 2103, and thus this duty informs the performance of the instant contract's terms. See Seal v. Riverside Fed. Sav. Bank, 825 F. Supp. 686, 699 (E.D. Pa. 1993) ("The chief purpose of the good faith obligation is 'to enable enforcement of the contract terms in a manner consistent with the parties' reasonable expectations.'") (quoting Coxfam, Inc. v. AAMCO Transmissions, 1990 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 11838, Civ. A. No. 88-6105, 1990 WL 131064, at * 5 (E.D. Pa. Sept. 6, 1990)). In this case, Stelwagon introduced evidence of Tarmac's skirting the geographic limits of the distributorship agreement by selling to distributors that, while situated just outside of Philadelphia, sold their goods into Philadelphia. See Tr. of 12/14/93, at 113-14 (Keenan). Whether this conduct was consistent with the parties' reasonable expectations of performance was an issue for the jury to decide.¹⁰

[17] C. Robinson-Patman Act Claim

Stelwagon argued that it suffered a second-line Robinson-Patman Act violation. A second-line injury "is characterized by price discrimination by a seller in sales to competing buyers." J.F. Feeser, Inc. v. Serv-A-Portion, Inc., 909 F.2d 1524, 1526 (3d Cir. 1990), cert. denied, 499 U.S. 921, 113 L. Ed. 2d 246, 111 S. Ct. 1313 (1991); see FTC v. Fred Meyer, Inc., 390 U.S. 341, 348-49, 19 L. Ed. 2d 1222, 88 S. Ct. 904 (1968). Tarmac challenges Stelwagon's verdict on the Robinson-Patman claim, asking for judgment as a matter of law, or, in the alternative, a new trial. Because none of the arguments have merit, the motions will be denied.

⁹ Tarmac argues in the alternative that the failure to show a clear and unequivocal waiver and the Court's incorrect instruction on the performance exception demand a new trial. Tarmac also claims that the jury's verdict on the performance issue was against the weight of the evidence. The Court finds these arguments to be without merit.

¹⁰ Whether there was sufficient evidence to support the damages awarded is a different matter, one taken up below in the discussion of the motion for remittitur.

1. Failure to show harm to competition

"In order to establish a prima facie violation of section 2(a) of the [Robinson-Patman] Act, a plaintiff must demonstrate a reasonable possibility that a price difference may harm competition." J.F. Feeser, 909 F.2d at 1531 (citing Falls City Indus., Inc. v. Vanco Beverage, Inc., 460 U.S. 428, 435, 75 L. Ed. 2d 174, 103 S. Ct. 1282 (1983)). [18] Tarmac argues that Stelwagon failed to present, as a matter of law, any evidence establishing harm to competition, either by showing a substantial price discrimination between competitors over time or by evidence of actual lost sales or profits. See 909 F.2d at 1535; see also FTC v. Morton Salt Co., 334 U.S. 37, 46-47, 92 L. Ed. 1196, 68 S. Ct. 822 (1948).

The record, however, contains evidence that would support a jury finding of harm to competition under either method. The testimony of Keenan, Amhaus, and two of Stelwagon's territorial managers supported a finding that Stelwagon was competing with Standard Roofing, which was receiving more favorable pricing than Stelwagon. See Tr. of 12/14/93, at 63-65 (Keenan); Tr. of 12/15/93, at 51-52 (Bannon); id. at 79-80 (Quinn); id. at 116-18 (Amhaus). Additionally, there was evidence that Celotex competed with Stelwagon, and that Celotex, which was characterized as a manufacturer, was in economic reality acting on the same distribution level as Stelwagon. [19] See Texaco, Inc. v. Hasbrouck, 496 U.S. 543, 552-55, 110 L. Ed. 2d 492, 110 S. Ct. 2535 (1990); Tr. of 12/15/93, at 4-11 (Keenan) (testifying that Celotex had sold MAPs directly to a roofing contractor to which Stelwagon also sells); Tr. of 12/16/93, at 129-32 (testimony of Marlene E. Granitz) (testifying that Tarmac sometimes shipped Celotex-brand MAPs directly to distributors). Stelwagon also introduced the testimony of Dr. Perry and the anecdotal evidence of its customer's statements, admitted under the state of mind hearsay exception, see Fed. R. Evid. 803(3); J.F. Feeser, 909 F.2d at 1535 n.11; Kraft General Foods, Inc. v. BC-USA, Inc., 840 F. Supp. 344, 348 (E.D. Pa. 1993), to establish that it actually lost sales to Celotex and Standard. On this basis, Tarmac's claim that Stelwagon failed to introduce sufficient competent evidence to support a finding of harm to competition must fail.

2. Failure to show antitrust injury

In addition to establishing a prima facie Robinson-Patman Act violation, a plaintiff must also show actual damages before [20] it can recover treble damages under the Clayton Act. See Texaco, Inc., 110 S. Ct. at 2551 & n.31; J. Truett Payne Co. v. Chrysler Motors Corp., 451 U.S. 557, 561-62, 68 L. Ed. 2d 442, 101 S. Ct. 1923 (1981). Tarmac argues that Stelwagon has failed to establish this antitrust injury that is essential to the verdict entered by the jury. This argument is without merit. Stelwagon presented testimonial witnesses who established that sales were lost to Standard and Celotex due to the lower prices they were able to offer due to the price discrimination, as well as the actual decline in sales Stelwagon suffered during the relevant time period and the expert testimony of Dr. Perry.¹¹

¹¹ Tarmac's repeated attempts to exclude the testimony of Dr. Perry rest largely on the basis that Dr. Perry's methodology is flawed. The Court found Dr. Perry to be qualified, without objection, as an expert in economics and price discrimination analysis. See Tr. of 12/16/93, at 51-52. Review of Dr. Perry's methodology indicates application of standard economic principles. Cf. Daubert v. Merrell Dow Pharmaceuticals, Inc., 125 L. Ed. 2d 469, U.S. , 113 S. Ct. 2786, 2795-97 (1993) (discussing the application of the Rules of Evidence to proffered scientific expert testimony). Tarmac's complaints are essentially disagreements with Dr. Perry's conclusions as well as the thoroughness of his factual basis. The Court finds that there were sufficient facts upon which to base the opinion and that any flaws in the process are not so substantial to deprive Dr. Perry of "good grounds" for his . . . conclusions." In re Paoli R.R. Yard PCB Litig., 35 F.3d 717, slip op. at 49 (3d Cir. 1994). Tarmac's objections are more properly directed at attacking the weight that should be accorded the opinion, not the opinion's admissibility. See Breidor v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., 722 F.2d 1134, 1139-41 (3d Cir. 1983); see also United States v. L.E. Cooke Co., 991 F.2d 336, 342 (6th Cir. 1993); Singer Co. v. E.I. du Pont de Nemours & Co., 579 F.2d 433, 443 (8th Cir. 1978) (holding that "it is . . . for the jury,

[21] D. Other Trial Errors

1. No missing witness instruction

Tarmac requested at the close of the evidence that the Court give a missing witness instruction, arguing that Stelwagon's [*1369] witnesses had referred to the statements of customers who were not previously identified. Such an instruction is proper where a witness is peculiarly within the power of one party and would presumably testify in that party's favor, but is not called to testify. See Graves v. United States, 150 U.S. 118, 121, 37 L. Ed. 1021, 14 S. Ct. 40 \(1893\); United States v. Nahoom, 791 F.2d 841, 846 \(11th Cir. 1986\); Chicago College of Osteopathic Medicine v. George A. Fuller Co., 719 F.2d 1335, 1353 \(7th Cir. 1983\). Where witnesses are equally available to both sides, the instruction is not appropriate. See United States v. Vastola, 899 F.2d 211, 235 (3d Cir.), vacated on other grounds, 497 U.S. 1001 (1990). Tarmac's request was denied, as will be its post-trial motion, because it failed to show that the alleged missing witnesses [22] were in the peculiar control of Stelwagon. Indeed, Tarmac did not call any of the customers that it admits Stelwagon's witnesses previously identified, witnesses that presumably could have been called by either side. Tarmac's motion for a new trial on this basis is denied.

2. Exclusion of Dr. Kursh's report and testimony

Tarmac also alleges that the expert report prepared by Dr. Samuel J. Kursh on behalf of Stelwagon for use in a separate, unrelated state court action should have been admitted for purposes of impeaching the testimony of Stelwagon's witnesses concerning the reason for the drop in Stelwagon's MAP sales, or that Dr. Kursh should have been allowed to testify to the same. The Court denied the request on the grounds that the probative value of the material offered was substantially outweighed by the prejudicial nature of the report and the eleventh-hour manner by which it was introduced by Tarmac. See Fed. R. Evid. 403. The Court declines the invitation to revisit this determination, and the motion for a new trial is therefore denied.

E. Remittitur

Tarmac argues in the alternative that the Court should grant a remittitur in this case due to the excessiveness [23] of the damages awarded. Remittitur is appropriate if the Court "finds that a decision of the jury is clearly unsupported and/or excessive." Spence v. Board of Educ. of Christina Sch. Dist., 806 F.2d 1198, 1201 \(3d Cir. 1986\); see 11 Charles A. Wright & Arthur R. Miller, Federal Practice and Procedure: Civil § 2815 (1973). If remittitur is granted, the party against whom it is entered can accept it or can proceed to a new trial on the issue of damages.

In the instant case, the Court is left with the inescapable impression that the damages awarded by the jury in this case are unsupported by the evidence and are grossly excessive. The jury awarded Stelwagon $ 1,500,000 in damages for the breach of the distributorship agreement. See Tr. of 12/21/93, at 62. Yet, plaintiff's expert was only able to testify as to the damages occasioned by Tarmac's sales to Allied, an amount that he estimated was $ 42,424. See Pl.'s Ex. 27. Additional damages testimony was offered by Keenan, who testified that the cost of the MAPs was only 40% of the sale in a "new roof" job, with the other 60% composed of the sale of related products with similar profit margins. [24] See Tr. of 12/14/93, at 59-61. In sales for "re-roof" jobs, the MAPs made up two-thirds of the sale, with the related products making up one third. Keenan also testified that new roofs were about 25% of sales, and re-roofs 75%. Applying these percentages, as well as Dr. Perry's calculation of lost MAP sales and Stelwagon's profit margin, arrives at a figure of $ 72,242: [*1370]

	Ratio between Related		Total Related Product Sales $ 15,909
	MAP Sales	Product Sales and MAP
		Sales
New Roof	$ 10,606	1.5

with the assistance of vigorous cross-examination, to measure the worth of the opinion"). The objections based on the improper admission of Dr. Perry's report are therefore without merit.

		Ratio between Related	Total
	MAP Sales	Product Sales and MAP	Related
		Sales	Product Sales
	$(42,424 \times .25)$	(.60/.40)
Re-roof	$$ 31,818$.5	$$ 15,909$
	$(42,424 \times .75)$	(.33/.66)
			$$ 31,818$
		MAP Sales	$$ 42,424$
			TOTAL SALES

Though damages do not have to be calculated or estimated with mathematical certainty, there must be some basis in the record for a jury's award. See Advent Sys., 925 F.2d at 681. There was no evidence presented in this case supporting a figure on the breach of contract claim in excess of $ 72,242.

Likewise, the figure calculated by Dr. Perry in support of the Robinson-Patman claim is only $ 257,362. See Pl.'s Ex. 23. Even using the percentages attested to by Keenan, as described supra, the amount of damages increases only to $ 450,383.50, a good deal removed from the $ 772,000 verdict entered by the jury and subsequently trebled by the Court:

		Ratio between	Total
	MAP Sales	Related Product	Related
		Sales and MAP Sales	Product Sales
New Roof	$$ 64,340.5$	1.5	$$ 96,510.75$
	$(257,362 \times .25)$	(.60/.40)
Re-roof	$$ 193,021.50$.5	$$ 96,510.75$
	$(257,362 \times .75)$	(.33/.66)
			$$ 193,021.50$
		MAP Sales	$$ 257,362$
			TOTAL SALES
			$$ 450,383.50$

Based on the figures just calculated, the Court determines that Stelwagon's [25] total damages in this case, after trebling of the Robinson-Patman damages, should be in the amount of $ 1,423,392.50.¹² The Court having previously entered judgment in the amount of $ 3,816,000, Stelwagon will be ordered to remit $ 2,392,607.50, within twenty days, or, if remittitur is refused, to submit to a new trial on damages.¹³

An appropriate order shall be entered.

ORDER

¹² $ 74,242 + ($ 450,383.50 x 3) = $ 1,423,392.50.

¹³ Given the disposition of defendant's post-trial motion, plaintiff's petition for attorney's fees will be denied without prejudice, pending the final resolution of this litigation.

AND NOW, this 12th day of September, 1994, upon consideration of defendant's motion for judgment as a matter of law, new trial, and/or remittitur (Doc. No. 63), and plaintiff's motion for attorney's fees (Doc. No. 64), for the reasons stated in the Memorandum accompanying this Order, it is hereby ORDERED as follows:

1. Defendant's motion for judgment as a matter of law is DENIED;
2. Defendant's [26] motion for a new trial is DENIED;
3. Defendant's motion for remittitur is GRANTED. Plaintiff shall remit $ 2,392,607.50 within twenty (20) days of this Order, or, if remittitur is refused, shall submit to a new trial on damages; and
- [*1371] 4. Plaintiff's motion for attorney's fees is DENIED WITHOUT PREJUDICE.

AND IT IS SO ORDERED.

EDUARDO C. ROBRENO, J.

End of Document

Data Gen. Corp. v. Grumman Sys. Support Corp.

United States Court of Appeals for the First Circuit

September 14, 1994, Decided

No. 93-1637

Reporter

36 F.3d 1147 *; 1994 U.S. App. LEXIS 25459 ; 32 U.S.P.Q.2D (BNA) 1385 ; Copy. L. Rep. (CCH) P27,319; 1994-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P70,716

DATA GENERAL CORPORATION, ET AL., Plaintiffs, Appellees, v. GRUMMAN SYSTEMS SUPPORT CORPORATION, Defendant, Appellant.

Prior History: [1] APPEAL FROM THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT FOR THE DISTRICT OF MASSACHUSETTS. Hon. Walter Jay Skinner, Senior U.S. District Judge.

Core Terms

license, customers, infringement, deposit, profits, district court, patent, equipment owner, exclusionary, consumers, settlement agreement, apportionment, monopolist's, unilateral, Skiing, copies, diagnostics, Copyright Act, damages, trade secret, registration, antitrust, misuse, summary judgment, support services, source code, software, proprietary information, repair, actual damage

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Copyright Law > ... > Damages > Types of Damages > Compensatory Damages

Copyright Law > ... > Remedies > Damages > General Overview

Copyright Law > ... > Remedies > Damages > Measurement of Damages

Copyright Law > ... > Damages > Types of Damages > Infringement Profits

HN1 [▼] Types of Damages, Compensatory Damages

"Nonduplicative profits" are those profits earned by defendant that would not have been available to plaintiff in the absence of defendant's wrongful conduct.

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > De Novo Review

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

Civil Procedure > ... > Jury Trials > Jury Instructions > General Overview

HN2 Standards of Review, De Novo Review

Although the reasoning of the court below may provide a useful starting point for analysis, the district court's view of the law is not binding on the court of appeals. Thus, the court exercises independent judgment in evaluating the legal correctness of the district court's jury instructions. Likewise, the court must reach its own conclusion as to a statute's correct construction.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Opposing Materials > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Appellate Review > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Appellate Review > Standards of Review

HN3 Summary Judgment, Opposing Materials

In reviewing a district court's entry of summary judgment, the court determines anew whether the moving party has shown that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that it is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. In this context, "genuine" means that the evidence about the fact is such that a reasonable jury could resolve the point in favor of the nonmoving party and "material" means that the fact is one that might affect the outcome of the suit under the governing law. Although the court reads the record and indulge all inferences in a light most favorable to the non-moving party the adverse party cannot defeat a well-supported motion by resting upon the mere allegations or denials of its leading.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Evidence > Burdens of Proof > Ultimate Burden of Persuasion

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

HN4 Summary Judgment, Entitlement as Matter of Law

If the nonmovant bears the ultimate burden of persuasion with respect to its claim or defense, it may avert summary judgment only if it identifies issues genuinely in dispute and advances convincing theories as to their materiality. Of course, it may be difficult for a trial court to forecast the reaction of a reasonable jury to an intricate array of complex theories. Nonetheless, Fed. R. Civ. P. 56 applies equally to simple cases as well as cases involving complicated legal principles and theories of recovery. In complex antitrust cases, no different or heightened standard for the grant of summary judgment applies.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Appellate Review > Standards of Review

HN5 Appellate Review, Standards of Review

The court is at liberty to affirm a district court's grant of summary judgment on any ground supported in the record even if the issue was not pleaded, tried or otherwise referred to in the proceedings below.

Copyright Law > Copyright Infringement Actions > Civil Infringement Actions > General Overview

Copyright Law > ... > Civil Infringement Actions > Elements > Copying by Defendants

Copyright Law > ... > Civil Infringement Actions > Presumptions > General Overview

Copyright Law > ... > Civil Infringement Actions > Presumptions > Validity of Copyright

Copyright Law > ... > Civil Infringement Actions > Presumptions > Validity of Facts

Copyright Law > Copyright Infringement Actions > Civil Infringement Actions > Registration Requirement

Copyright Law > ... > Damages > Types of Damages > Costs & Attorney Fees

Copyright Law > Scope of Copyright Protection > Formalities > General Overview

Copyright Law > ... > Formalities > Deposit & Registration Requirements > General Overview

Copyright Law > ... > Deposit & Registration Requirements > Deposits > General Overview

Copyright Law > ... > Deposit & Registration Requirements > Registration > General Overview

Copyright Law > ... > Deposit & Registration Requirements > Registration > Application Requirements

Copyright Law > ... > Deposit & Registration Requirements > Registration > Registration Certificates

Copyright Law > Scope of Copyright Protection > Subject Matter > General Overview

Copyright Law > ... > Subject Matter > Statutory Copyright & Fixation > General Overview

Copyright Law > ... > Statutory Copyright & Fixation > Fixation Requirement > General Overview

Copyright Law > ... > Subject Matter > Statutory Copyright & Fixation > Original Works of Authorship

Copyright Law > ... > Subject Matter > Statutory Copyright & Fixation > Scope of Protection

Copyright Infringement Actions, Civil Infringement Actions

Registration of a work with the Copyright Office provides several benefits to a plaintiff in an infringement action. First, although copyright protection attaches the day original expression is fixed in a tangible medium, and thus an infringer may be liable for infringement from that day forward, (providing that registration is not a condition of copyright protection), registration of the copyright is a prerequisite to suit under the Copyright Act, 17 U.S.C.S. § 411\(a\). Second, upon accepting the registrant's application, fee, and deposit of a representative copy of the work, the Copyright Office issues a certificate of registration, which is admissible in an infringement action as prima facie evidence of the validity of the copyright and of the facts stated in the certificate.

Computer & Internet Law > ... > Formalities & Ownership Interests > Formalities > Deposit

Copyright Law > Copyright Infringement Actions > Civil Infringement Actions > General Overview

Computer & Internet Law > ... > Copyright Protection > Civil Infringement > Publication

Computer & Internet Law > ... > Copyright Protection > Formalities & Ownership Interests > General Overview

Computer & Internet Law > ... > Formalities & Ownership Interests > Formalities > General Overview

Computer & Internet Law > ... > Formalities & Ownership Interests > Ownership Interests > General Overview

36 F.3d 1147, 1147 1994 U.S. App. LEXIS 25459, 1 32 U.S.P.Q.2D (BNA) 1385, 1385

Copyright Law > ... > Civil Infringement Actions > Presumptions > General Overview

Copyright Law > ... > Civil Infringement Actions > Presumptions > Deposit

Copyright Law > Copyright Infringement Actions > Civil Infringement Actions > Registration Requirement

Copyright Law > Scope of Copyright Protection > Formalities > General Overview

Copyright Law > ... > Formalities > Deposit & Registration Requirements > General Overview

Copyright Law > Scope of Copyright Protection > Publication > General Overview

Copyright Law > ... > Protected Subject Matter > Literary Works > General Overview

HN7 Formalities, Deposit

In the case of computer programs which are either unpublished or published only in machine-readable form, the copyright owner must deposit identifying portions of the program, generally the first and last 25 pages of the human-readable source code 37 C.F.R. § 202.20\(c\)\(2\)\(vii\). By questioning plaintiff's compliance with the registration requirements, defendant is effectively claiming that (1) plaintiff may not claim infringement of the copyrights for which plaintiff tendered a defective deposit; and (2) even if plaintiff is free to bring such claims, it is not entitled to a presumption as to the validity of the copyrights at issue.

Copyright Law > ... > Civil Infringement Actions > Elements > Copying by Defendants

Evidence > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

Copyright Law > Copyright Infringement Actions > Civil Infringement Actions > General Overview

Copyright Law > ... > Civil Infringement Actions > Presumptions > General Overview

HN8 Elements, Copying by Defendants

To demonstrate copyright infringement, plaintiff has the burden of demonstrating (1) that it owns a valid copyright in the versions of alleged to have been copied, and (2) that defendant copied constituent, original elements of plaintiff's work.

Copyright Law > ... > Formalities > Deposit & Registration Requirements > General Overview

HN9 Formalities, Deposit & Registration Requirements

Where the program contains trade secret material, the copyright regulations permit some portions of the deposit to be blocked out, and allow a portion of the deposit to be in machine-readable "object code" (lines of zeroes and ones). If the deposit includes no blocked-out portions and consists entirely of source code, the first and last ten pages of the program will suffice.

Copyright Law > ... > Deposit & Registration Requirements > Registration > Application Requirements

Copyright Law > Copyright Infringement Actions > Civil Infringement Actions > Registration Requirement

Copyright Law > Scope of Copyright Protection > Formalities > General Overview

Copyright Law > ... > Formalities > Deposit & Registration Requirements > General Overview

Copyright Law > ... > Deposit & Registration Requirements > Registration > General Overview

Copyright Law > ... > Deposit & Registration Requirements > Registration > Error & Misstatement Correction

Copyright Law > ... > Deposit & Registration Requirements > Registration > Registration Certificates

HN10[] Registration, Application Requirements

It is well established that immaterial, inadvertent errors in an application for copyright registration do not jeopardize the validity of the registration. A misstatement or clerical error in the registration application if unaccompanied by fraud will not invalidate the copyright nor render the registration certificate incapable of supporting an infringement action. In general, an error is immaterial if its discovery is not likely to have led the Copyright Office to refuse the application.

Copyright Law > ... > Deposit & Registration Requirements > Registration > Application Requirements

Copyright Law > Copyright Infringement Actions > Civil Infringement Actions > General Overview

Copyright Law > Copyright Infringement Actions > Civil Infringement Actions > Burdens of Proof

Copyright Law > Copyright Infringement Actions > Civil Infringement Actions > Registration Requirement

Copyright Law > Scope of Copyright Protection > Formalities > General Overview

Copyright Law > ... > Formalities > Deposit & Registration Requirements > General Overview

Copyright Law > ... > Deposit & Registration Requirements > Registration > General Overview

Copyright Law > ... > Deposit & Registration Requirements > Registration > Error & Misstatement Correction

HN11[] Registration, Application Requirements

Some courts have suggested that a defendant must show that it is prejudiced by a fraudulent misstatement or omission in a registration application. Absent intent to defraud and prejudice, inaccuracies in copyright registrations do not bar actions for infringement. Whereas other courts merely require proof that an intentional error, if discovered by the Copyright Office, would have been material to the registration decision.

Copyright Law > ... > Deposit & Registration Requirements > Registration > Application Requirements

Copyright Law > ... > Formalities > Deposit & Registration Requirements > General Overview

Copyright Law > ... > Deposit & Registration Requirements > Deposits > General Overview

Copyright Law > ... > Deposit & Registration Requirements > Deposits > Mandatory Deposits

HN12[] Registration, Application Requirements

In the first place, the registration application described in 17 U.S.C.S. § 409, as well as the deposit described in 17 U.S.C.S. § 408\(b\), are both equally mandatory components of the registration process outlined in 17 U.S.C.S. § 408\(a\). Likewise, just as 17 U.S.C.S. § 409 sets forth what an application "shall include," 17 U.S.C.S. § 408\(b\) uses the same phrase to prescribe the contents of the deposit.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Formalities & Ownership Interests > Formalities > Registration

Computer & Internet Law > ... > Formalities & Ownership Interests > Formalities > Deposit

Trade Secrets Law > Federal Versus State Law > General Overview

Computer & Internet Law > Intellectual Property Protection > Copyright Protection > General Overview

Computer & Internet Law > ... > Copyright Protection > Formalities & Ownership Interests > General Overview

Computer & Internet Law > ... > Formalities & Ownership Interests > Formalities > General Overview

Copyright Law > Scope of Copyright Protection > Formalities > General Overview

Copyright Law > ... > Formalities > Deposit & Registration Requirements > General Overview

Copyright Law > ... > Deposit & Registration Requirements > Registration > General Overview

Copyright Law > ... > Deposit & Registration Requirements > Registration > Registration Certificates

Copyright Law > Scope of Copyright Protection > Subject Matter > General Overview

Copyright Law > ... > Protected Subject Matter > Literary Works > General Overview

Trade Secrets Law > Protected Information > Computer Software

HN13 Copyright Protection, Registration

Pursuant to the Copyright Act, 17 U.S.C.S. § 410\(a\), the Register of Copyrights must register a copyright claim and issue a registration certificate when, after examination, the register determines that the material deposited constitutes copyrightable subject matter. Some provisions of the copyright regulations seek to preserve the same opportunity for examination in relation to the deposit of a relatively small subset of a computer program. In registering all copyright claims, the Copyright Office examines the deposit to determine the existence of copyrightable authorship. In order to allow the office to continue this practice, the new regulations provide that when the applicant's deposit contains portions of the source code of an unpublished computer program with blocked-out trade secrets the deposit must still reveal an appreciable amount of original computer code.

Computer & Internet Law > ... > Formalities & Ownership Interests > Formalities > Deposit

Copyright Law > ... > Deposit & Registration Requirements > Deposits > General Overview

Computer & Internet Law > Intellectual Property Protection > Copyright Protection > General Overview

Computer & Internet Law > ... > Copyright Protection > Formalities & Ownership Interests > General Overview

Computer & Internet Law > ... > Formalities & Ownership Interests > Formalities > General Overview

36 F.3d 1147, 1147 1994 U.S. App. LEXIS 25459, 1 U.S.P.Q.2D (BNA) 1385, 1385

Copyright Law > Scope of Copyright Protection > Formalities > General Overview

Copyright Law > ... > Formalities > Deposit & Registration Requirements > General Overview

Copyright Law > ... > Protected Subject Matter > Literary Works > General Overview

Copyright Law > ... > Subject Matter > Statutory Copyright & Fixation > Original Works of Authorship

HN14 [blue icon] Formalities, Deposit

Where there are no blocked-out portions in the deposited portions of a computer program, regulations do not specifically require that the deposit contain an appreciable amount of original computer code. In other words, the Copyright Office seems to assume that in such cases the deposited pages are likely to contain sufficient elements of original expression to determine the copyrightability of the work at issue.

Copyright Law > ... > Deposit & Registration Requirements > Registration > Registration Certificates

Copyright Law > Copyright Infringement Actions > Civil Infringement Actions > Registration Requirement

Copyright Law > Scope of Copyright Protection > Formalities > General Overview

Copyright Law > ... > Formalities > Deposit & Registration Requirements > General Overview

HN15 [blue icon] Registration, Registration Certificates

Discretion resides in the Copyright Office, not the applicant, for 17 U.S.C.S. § 410\(a\) suggests that an applicant must always give the Copyright Office an opportunity to undertake an appropriate examination.

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

Trademark Law > ... > Similarity of Marks > Appearance, Meaning & Sound > General Overview

HN16 [blue icon] Legislation, Interpretation

It is generally presumed that Congress acts intentionally and purposely when it includes particular language in one section of a statute but omits it in another.

Copyright Law > ... > Deposit & Registration Requirements > Registration > Application Requirements

Copyright Law > Scope of Copyright Protection > Collective & Derivative Works > General Overview

Copyright Law > Scope of Copyright Protection > Collective & Derivative Works > Collective Works

Copyright Law > Scope of Copyright Protection > Collective & Derivative Works > Derivative Works

Copyright Law > Scope of Copyright Protection > Formalities > General Overview

Copyright Law > ... > Formalities > Deposit & Registration Requirements > General Overview

Copyright Law > ... > Deposit & Registration Requirements > Registration > General Overview

Copyright Law > Scope of Copyright Protection > Ownership Interests > Governmental Works

HN17 [blue icon] Registration, Application Requirements

One important function of a registration application is to identify the work in which the applicant claims a copyright. Furthermore, like the deposit, the application also provides some evidence of copyrightability, because it must identify any preexisting work from which the author borrowed in creating a compilation or derivative work. Indeed, the Copyright Office may often be in a better position to assess the originality of the work being registered by reviewing a list of preexisting works than by conducting a cursory inspection of the deposited material. And yet, an inadvertent failure to identify preexisting works on an application is treated no differently from any other application error.

Copyright Law > Scope of Copyright Protection > Formalities > General Overview

Copyright Law > ... > Civil Infringement Actions > Presumptions > Validity of Copyright

Copyright Law > ... > Civil Infringement Actions > Presumptions > Validity of Facts

Copyright Law > ... > Formalities > Deposit & Registration Requirements > General Overview

Copyright Law > ... > Deposit & Registration Requirements > Registration > Registration Certificates

HN18 [blue icon] Scope of Copyright Protection, Formalities

The law is not quite as settled as to the effect of an application error that is inadvertent but nonetheless material. No court has suggested that a registration premised in part on an unintentional material error would fail to satisfy the jurisdictional requirement of 17 U.S.C.S. § 411\(a\). At the same time, at least one court has suggested that in such instances the proper approach might be to prevent the plaintiff from exploiting the presumption of validity that ordinarily attaches to a registered copyright under 17 U.S.C.S. § 410\(c\). The court assumes for argument's sake that a material error in a copyright deposit, even if unintentional, may destroy the presumption of validity.

Copyright Law > Scope of Copyright Protection > Collective & Derivative Works > Derivative Works

Copyright Law > Copyright Infringement Actions > Civil Infringement Actions > General Overview

Copyright Law > Constitutional Copyright Protections > Federal & State Law Interrelationships > General Overview

Copyright Law > Constitutional Copyright Protections > Federal & State Law Interrelationships > Federal Preemption

Copyright Law > Scope of Copyright Protection > Subject Matter > Common Law Copyrights

Copyright Law > ... > Subject Matter > Patent & Utility Considerations > General Overview

HN19 [blue icon] Collective & Derivative Works, Derivative Works

17 U.S.C.S. § 301\(a\) precludes enforcement of any state cause of action which is equivalent in substance to a federal copyright infringement claim. Courts have developed a functional test to assess the question of equivalence. If a state cause of action requires an extra element, beyond mere copying, preparation of derivative works, performance, distribution or display, then the state cause of action is qualitatively different from, and not subsumed within, a copyright infringement claim and federal law will not preempt the state action.

36 F.3d 1147, 1147 1994 U.S. App. LEXIS 25459, 1 U.S.P.Q.2D (BNA) 1385, 1385

Copyright Law > Scope of Copyright Protection > Subject Matter > Common Law Copyrights

Copyright Law > Constitutional Copyright Protections > Federal & State Law Interrelationships > General Overview

Copyright Law > Scope of Copyright Protection > Ownership Rights > General Overview

HN20 [blue] Subject Matter, Common Law Copyrights

All legal or equitable rights that are equivalent to any of the exclusive rights within the general scope of copyright are governed exclusively by this 17 U.S.C.S. § 301. No person is entitled to any such right or equivalent right in any such work under the common law or statutes of any state.

Copyright Law > Copyright Infringement Actions > Civil Infringement Actions > General Overview

Torts > ... > Contracts > Intentional Interference > Elements

Copyright Law > Constitutional Copyright Protections > Federal & State Law Interrelationships > General Overview

Copyright Law > ... > Assignments & Transfers > Licenses > General Overview

Copyright Law > Scope of Copyright Protection > Subject Matter > Common Law Copyrights

Torts > ... > Commercial Interference > Contracts > General Overview

HN21 [blue] Copyright Infringement Actions, Civil Infringement Actions

Not every "extra element" of a state claim will establish a qualitative variance between the rights protected by federal copyright law and those protected by state law. For example, a state claim of tortious interference with contractual relations may require elements of awareness and intentional interference not necessary for proof of copyright infringement. And yet, such an action is equivalent in substance to a copyright infringement claim where the additional elements merely concern the extent to which authors and their licensees can prohibit unauthorized copying by third parties.

Copyright Law > Copyright Infringement Actions > Civil Infringement Actions > Burdens of Proof

Trade Secrets Law > Trade Secret Determination Factors > Business Use

Copyright Law > Copyright Infringement Actions > Civil Infringement Actions > General Overview

Copyright Law > ... > Civil Infringement Actions > Elements > Copying by Defendants

Copyright Law > Constitutional Copyright Protections > Federal & State Law Interrelationships > General Overview

Copyright Law > Constitutional Copyright Protections > Federal & State Law Interrelationships > Federal Preemption

Copyright Law > Scope of Copyright Protection > Subject Matter > Common Law Copyrights

Trade Secrets Law > Federal Versus State Law > General Overview

HN22 [blue document icon] Civil Infringement Actions, Burdens of Proof

A state law misappropriation claim will not escape preemption under 17 U.S.C.S. § 301\(a\) simply because a plaintiff must prove that copying was not only unauthorized but also "commercially immoral" a mere label attached to the same odious business conduct. Nonetheless, a trade secrets claim that requires proof of a breach of a duty of confidentiality stands on a different footing. Such claims are not preempted because participation in the breach of a duty of confidentiality -- an element that forms no part of a copyright infringement claim -- represents unfair competitive conduct qualitatively different from mere unauthorized copying.

Civil Procedure > ... > Jury Trials > Jury Instructions > General Overview

Trade Secrets Law > Civil Actions > Burdens of Proof

Labor & Employment Law > ... > Conditions & Terms > Trade Secrets & Unfair Competition > Trade Secrets

Torts > Business Torts > Unfair Business Practices > General Overview

Trade Secrets Law > Breach of Confidence > Confidential Relationships

Trade Secrets Law > Trade Secret Determination Factors > General Overview

Trade Secrets Law > Misappropriation Actions > General Overview

Trade Secrets Law > Misappropriation Actions > Elements of Misappropriation > General Overview

Trade Secrets Law > Misappropriation Actions > Elements of Misappropriation > Acquisition

Trade Secrets Law > Protection of Secrecy > Reasonable Measures > General Overview

HN23 [blue document icon] Jury Trials, Jury Instructions

To demonstrate misappropriation of trade secrets under Massachusetts law, plaintiff must prove that (1) the work at issue is a trade secret; (2) plaintiff took reasonable steps to preserve the secrecy of the work and (3) defendant used improper means, in breach of a confidential relationship, to acquire and use the trade secret.

Contracts Law > Defenses > Ambiguities & Mistakes > General Overview

Contracts Law > Contract Interpretation > General Overview

HN24 [blue document icon] Defenses, Ambiguities & Mistakes

Maryland courts do not follow the subjective theory of contracts, which aims to discover the actual intent of the parties even at the expense of unambiguous language to the contrary. Instead, Maryland subscribes to the objective approach. Under that approach, a court may consider extrinsic evidence only in determining whether contract language is ambiguous. However, as long as the result is objectively reasonable, a court may not use extrinsic evidence to interpret facially explicit contractual terms.

Contracts Law > Contract Interpretation > Ambiguities & Contra Proferentem > General Overview

Contracts Law > Contract Interpretation > Parol Evidence > General Overview

Contracts Law > Defenses > General Overview

Contracts Law > Defenses > Ambiguities & Mistakes > General Overview

Contracts Law > Contract Formation > Mistake > General Overview

HN25 [+] Contract Interpretation, Ambiguities & Contra Proferentem

Where contract terms are ambiguous, a court may look to extrinsic evidence in order to ascertain the intention of the parties and, if successful, interpret the contract as a matter of law. If, after such examination, the meaning of the ambiguous terms remains in genuine dispute, and the dispute is material to the outcome of the claim or defense at issue, the ambiguity must be resolved by the trier of fact. Only when there is a bona fide ambiguity in the contract's language or legitimate doubt as to its application under the circumstances is the contract submitted to the trier of the fact for interpretation.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Contracts Law > Types of Contracts > Settlement Agreements

Civil Procedure > Settlements > Settlement Agreements > General Overview

Contracts Law > Contract Interpretation > General Overview

HN26 [+] Types of Contracts, Settlement Agreements

Because a settlement agreement is the product of negotiations by sophisticated parties represented by counsel, the secondary rule of construction perhaps should have but slight force.

Copyright Law > ... > Assignments & Transfers > Transfer Termination > General Overview

Copyright Law > Scope of Copyright Protection > Assignments & Transfers > General Overview

HN27 [+] Assignments & Transfers, Transfer Termination

A license is permission to use the property of another. A license can be general, with few or no restrictions, or quite limited. The use of the word "license" in a contract is clearly evidence of an intent to permit use, but the absence of the word is not dispositive, as long as other contract language grants some permission to use. A nonexclusive license may be granted orally, or may even be implied from conduct.

Contracts Law > Defenses > Illegal Bargains

Labor & Employment Law > ... > Conditions & Terms > Trade Secrets & Unfair Competition > Trade Secrets

HN28 [blue icon] Defenses, Illegal Bargains

A mere agreement to agree to an unspecified future license would be unenforceable as a matter of contract law.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Defenses > Inequitable Conduct > Anticompetitive Conduct

Copyright Law > ... > Subject Matter > Patent & Utility Considerations > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Intellectual Property > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Misuse of Rights > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Misuse of Rights > Copyright & Trademark Misuse Defenses

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Misuse of Rights > Patent Misuse Defense

Copyright Law > ... > Civil Infringement Actions > Defenses > General Overview

Copyright Law > ... > Civil Infringement Actions > Defenses > Copyright Misuse

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Infringement Actions > Defenses > Misuse

HN29 [blue icon] Inequitable Conduct, Anticompetitive Conduct

A "copyright misuse" defense is not without legal support. In a carefully reasoned opinion, the Fourth Circuit recently approves such a defense after noting that it has long been recognized in the analogous context of patent infringement. Since copyright and patent law serve parallel public interests, a "misuse" defense should apply to infringement actions brought to vindicate either right.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Misuse of Rights > Copyright & Trademark Misuse Defenses

Copyright Law > ... > Civil Infringement Actions > Defenses > Copyright Misuse

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Intellectual Property > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Misuse of Rights > General Overview

Copyright Law > ... > Civil Infringement Actions > Defenses > General Overview

HN30 [blue icon] Misuse of Rights, Copyright & Trademark Misuse Defenses

A copyright misuse defense does not require proof of an antitrust violation, only proof that the copyright is being used in a manner violative of the public policy embodied in the grant of a copyright.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Misuse of Rights > Copyright & Trademark Misuse Defenses

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Infringement Actions > Defenses > Misuse

36 F.3d 1147, 1147 1994 U.S. App. LEXIS 25459, 1 32 U.S.P.Q.2D (BNA) 1385, 1385

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Intellectual Property > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Misuse of Rights > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Misuse of Rights > Patent Misuse Defense

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrsers & Objections > Affirmative Defenses > Unclean Hands

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Counterclaims > General Overview

Copyright Law > ... > Civil Infringement Actions > Defenses > General Overview

Copyright Law > ... > Civil Infringement Actions > Defenses > Copyright Misuse

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Defenses > Inequitable Conduct > Anticompetitive Conduct

HN31 [💡] Misuse of Rights, Copyright & Trademark Misuse Defenses

A copyright misuse and its ancestor, patent misuse, are equitable defenses. If copyright misuse is an equitable defense, a defendant that has itself acted inequitably may not be entitled to raise such a defense. The court notes the possible propriety of denying a defense of unclean hands when the defendant has been guilty of conduct more unconscionable and unworthy than the plaintiff's. Mere infringement may not be inequitable in this context because a misuse defense would appear to sanction at least some infringement as a necessary measure of self-help. But violation of a valid injunction against further infringement issued pursuant to a court's equitable powers would constitute blatantly inequitable behavior.

Copyright Law > ... > Damages > Types of Damages > Compensatory Damages

Copyright Law > ... > Civil Infringement Actions > Remedies > General Overview

Copyright Law > ... > Remedies > Damages > General Overview

Copyright Law > ... > Remedies > Damages > Measurement of Damages

Copyright Law > ... > Damages > Types of Damages > Infringement Profits

HN32 [💡] Types of Damages, Compensatory Damages

A successful plaintiff in an infringement action is entitled to actual damages suffered by it as result of the infringement. Actual damages are generally calculated with reference to the loss in the fair market value of the copyright, often measured by the profits lost as a result of the infringement.

Copyright Law > ... > Remedies > Damages > General Overview

Evidence > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

HN33 [💡] Remedies, Damages

The plaintiff bears the burden of proving that the infringement was the cause of its loss of revenue. In defining that burden, it is useful to borrow familiar tort law principles of causation and damages.

Copyright Law > ... > Remedies > Damages > General Overview

Patent Law > ... > Defenses > Inequitable Conduct > General Overview

Copyright Law > ... > Civil Infringement Actions > Remedies > General Overview

Patent Law > Infringement Actions > General Overview

Torts > ... > Types of Damages > Compensatory Damages > Measurements

Torts > ... > Elements > Causation > General Overview

HN34 [+] Remedies, Damages

The plaintiff should first establish that the infringement was the cause-in-fact of its loss by showing with reasonable probability that, but for the defendant's infringement, the plaintiff would not have suffered the loss. In rebuttal defendant may show that this damage would have occurred anyway had there been no taking of copyrighted expression. Damages in patent infringement case are based on what the patent holder's condition would have been if the infringement had not occurred. The plaintiff must also prove that the infringement was a proximate cause of its loss by demonstrating that the existence and amount of the loss was a natural and probable consequence of the infringement.

Copyright Law > ... > Damages > Types of Damages > Compensatory Damages

Copyright Law > ... > Remedies > Damages > General Overview

HN35 [+] Types of Damages, Compensatory Damages

Damages may be recovered only if there is a necessary, immediate and direct causal connection between the wrongdoing and the damages. A plaintiff may seek compensation for both direct and "indirect" losses, as long as the losses claimed are not unduly speculative. Courts recognize the possibility of recovery for loss of "enhanced good will" and "market recognition." Courts also recognize the possibility of recovery for lost sales of noninfringed items. At the same time, the plaintiff need not prove its loss of revenue with mathematical precision. In establishing lost sales due to sales of an infringing product, courts must necessarily engage in some degree of speculation.

Civil Procedure > ... > Relief From Judgments > Additur & Remittitur > General Overview

Copyright Law > ... > Remedies > Damages > General Overview

HN36 [+] Relief From Judgments, Additur & Remittitur

Upsetting a jury's damage award is a daunting task for any appellant, for the court must draw all reasonable inferences in favor of the verdict, upholding the award if it derives from any rational appraisal or estimate of the damages that could be based on the evidence before the jury. The likelihood of a victorious appeal is especially remote in the absence of rigorous argumentation. When challenging the sufficiency of the evidence, a defendant-appellant must make a serious effort to analyze the evidence taking it in the light most favorable to the plaintiff and resolving credibility issues in the plaintiff's favor. Moreover, the calculation of lost profits will always involve "some degree of speculation." As a result, the court relies on the appellant to specify with some precision the manner in which unduly speculative reasoning is likely to have infected the jury's verdict.

36 F.3d 1147, 1147 1994 U.S. App. LEXIS 25459, 1 U.S.P.Q.2D (BNA) 1385, 1385

Copyright Law > ... > Damages > Types of Damages > Compensatory Damages

Copyright Law > Copyright Infringement Actions > Civil Infringement Actions > Burdens of Proof

Copyright Law > ... > Civil Infringement Actions > Remedies > General Overview

Copyright Law > ... > Remedies > Damages > General Overview

Copyright Law > ... > Remedies > Damages > Measurement of Damages

Copyright Law > ... > Damages > Types of Damages > Infringement Profits

HN37 [+] Types of Damages, Compensatory Damages

In addition to actual damages, a copyright plaintiff may also recover the infringer's nonduplicative profits, i.e., any profits of the infringer that are attributable to the infringement and are not taken into account in computing the actual damages. In the context of infringer's profits, the plaintiff must meet only a minimal burden of proof in order to trigger a rebuttable presumption that the defendant's revenues are entirely attributable to the infringement; the burden then shifts to the defendant to demonstrate what portion of its revenues represent profits, and what portion of its profits are not traceable to the infringement.

Copyright Law > Copyright Infringement Actions > Civil Infringement Actions > Burdens of Proof

Copyright Law > ... > Remedies > Damages > General Overview

Copyright Law > ... > Damages > Types of Damages > Infringement Profits

HN38 [+] Civil Infringement Actions, Burdens of Proof

In establishing the infringer's profits, the copyright owner is required to present proof only of the infringer's gross revenue, and the infringer is required to prove his or her deductible expenses and the elements of profit attributable to factors other than the copyrighted work.

Copyright Law > ... > Damages > Types of Damages > Compensatory Damages

Copyright Law > ... > Remedies > Damages > General Overview

Copyright Law > ... > Remedies > Damages > Measurement of Damages

Copyright Law > ... > Damages > Types of Damages > Infringement Profits

Trade Secrets Law > Civil Actions > Burdens of Proof

Trade Secrets Law > Trade Secret Determination Factors > General Overview

HN39 [+] Types of Damages, Compensatory Damages

A defendant in a Massachusetts trade secrets action appears to have the same right to ask for apportionment along with the same burden of proof. Citing 17 U.S.C.S. § 504\(b\) as persuasive authority, the Massachusetts Supreme Judicial Court sets forth the following rule for apportionment in trade secrets cases: Once a plaintiff demonstrates that a defendant made a profit from the sale of products produced by improper use of a trade secret, the burden shifts to the defendant to demonstrate those costs properly to be offset against its profit and the portion of its profit attributable to factors other than the trade secret.

Civil Procedure > ... > Jury Trials > Jury Instructions > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Jury Instructions > Particular Instructions > Allen Charges

HN40 [blue icon] Jury Trials, Jury Instructions

The court may overlook its failure to overlook defendant's jury instruction only if there is no basis in law or fact for the application of defendant's theory.

Copyright Law > ... > Damages > Types of Damages > Compensatory Damages

Copyright Law > ... > Remedies > Damages > General Overview

Copyright Law > ... > Remedies > Damages > Measurement of Damages

Copyright Law > ... > Damages > Types of Damages > Infringement Profits

Evidence > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

HN41 [blue icon] Types of Damages, Compensatory Damages

The defendant's burden under the apportionment provision of 17 U.S.C.S. § 504\(b\) is primarily to demonstrate the absence of a causal link between the infringement and all or part of the profits claimed by the plaintiff. Because the rebuttable presumption of causation represents a presumption as to both cause-in-fact and proximate cause, there are two avenues of attack available to a copyright defendant. First, the defendant can attempt to show that consumers would have purchased its product even without the infringing element. Alternatively, the defendant may show that the existence and amount of its profits are not the natural and probable consequences of the infringement alone, but are also the result of other factors which either add intrinsic value to the product or have independent promotional value.

Copyright Law > ... > Damages > Types of Damages > Compensatory Damages

Evidence > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

Copyright Law > ... > Remedies > Damages > General Overview

Copyright Law > ... > Damages > Types of Damages > Statutory Damages

HN42 [blue icon] Types of Damages, Compensatory Damages

If a plaintiff cannot prove actual damages and the defendant shows that none of its gain is attributable to the infringement, the plaintiff would still be entitled to elect statutory damages. 17 U.S.C.S. § 504\(c\).

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Reviewability of Lower Court Decisions > Preservation for Review

HN43 [blue document icon] Reviewability of Lower Court Decisions, Preservation for Review

It is usually imprudent for a court of appeals to pass on an issue not presented to the district court in the first instance, and the court declines to do so in these circumstances. The court repeatedly warns that it will not entertain arguments made for the first time on appeal. A litigant has an obligation to spell out its arguments squarely and distinctly, or else forever hold its peace.

Copyright Law > ... > Remedies > Damages > General Overview

HN44 [blue document icon] Remedies, Damages

Moreover, although apportionment primarily depends on questions of causation, it is ultimately a delicate exercise informed by considerations of fairness and public policy, as well as fact. The doctrine of apportionment is established upon equitable principles in the analogous context of patent infringement. And, in adopting the principle of apportionment for copyright cases, the court observes that equity is concerned with making a fair apportionment so that neither party will have what justly belongs to the other.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Types of Commercial Transactions > Sales of Goods > General Overview

Copyright Law > ... > Damages > Types of Damages > Infringement Profits

Copyright Law > ... > Remedies > Damages > General Overview

HN45 [blue document icon] Contracts, Sales of Goods

The burden-shifting rule is itself an equitable response to an infringer who has frustrated the task of apportionment by co-mingling profits. Defendant, being responsible for the blending of the lawful with the unlawful, has to abide the consequences where one has wrongfully produced a confusion of goods. Equitable factors may also affect the substance of the apportionment analysis. Where the plaintiff cannot prove actual damages and the defendant's profits are only from the sale of a noninfringing product, the only way to prevent unjust enrichment may be to place more weight on the profit-generating effect of an infringing sales tool used to promote that product. Defendant may not be entitled to retain any of the profits from sale of advertising space where it is plausible that all profits were a direct result of infringing marketing information distributed to potential advertisers.

Copyright Law > Copyright Infringement Actions > Civil Infringement Actions > General Overview

Copyright Law > ... > Civil Infringement Actions > Elements > Copying by Defendants

Copyright Law > ... > Civil Infringement Actions > Remedies > General Overview

Copyright Law > ... > Damages > Types of Damages > Costs & Attorney Fees

Copyright Law > ... > Remedies > Damages > General Overview

Copyright Law > ... > Damages > Types of Damages > Compensatory Damages

Copyright Law > ... > Damages > Types of Damages > Infringement Profits

36 F.3d 1147, 1147 1994 U.S. App. LEXIS 25459, 1 32 U.S.P.Q.2D (BNA) 1385, 1385

Copyright Law > Scope of Copyright Protection > Collective & Derivative Works > General Overview

Copyright Law > Scope of Copyright Protection > Collective & Derivative Works > Derivative Works

Copyright Law > ... > Assignments & Transfers > Licenses > General Overview

Copyright Law > Scope of Copyright Protection > Ownership Rights > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Ownership Rights > Adaptations > Infringement

Copyright Law > ... > Subject Matter > Statutory Copyright & Fixation > Original Works of Authorship

HN46 [blue icon] Copyright Infringement Actions, Civil Infringement Actions

Apportionment is available in the context of infringing derivative works, perhaps in part because original expression added by infringer is entitled to copyright protection. Where plaintiff is seeking to vindicate its right to exclude others rather than its right to collect a licensing fee, it may be more appropriate to view the infringement as an "overriding" cause of the defendant's profits. Rigid isolation of the value of the infringement to the defendant effectively condones a license plaintiff never wishes to grant. An unjust enrichment theory aims to strip the defendant of its ill-gotten gains encourage compliance with the Copyright Act, 17 U.S.C.S. § 411, and perhaps "compensate" a plaintiff unable to prove actual damages. Apportionment of infringer's profits may be particularly appropriate where a concurrent award of actual damages significantly serves all three purposes.

Civil Procedure > ... > Jury Trials > Jury Instructions > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Relief From Judgments > Additur & Remittitur > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Relief From Judgments > Additur & Remittitur > Remittiturs

HN47 [blue icon] Jury Trials, Jury Instructions

The effect of an erroneous instruction can be reasonably approximated to a definite portion of the amount of the verdict, the appellate court may condition its affirmance on the plaintiff remitting that amount of the verdict which is apparently traceable to the error below.

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Damages > Compensatory Damages

Copyright Law > ... > Remedies > Damages > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Judgment Interest > General Overview

HN48 [blue icon] Damages, Compensatory Damages

A plaintiff is not required to forsake nonduplicative elements of the various federal and state law remedies. As long as the damages are segregated into federal and state components, plaintiff need not choose one body of law under which all damages will be paid. Plaintiff may not receive award based on federal and state law so as to receive double recovery for same element of relief.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > Clayton Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > General Overview

HN49 [] Tying Arrangements, Clayton Act

The Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, prohibits a seller from "tying" the sale of one product to the purchase of a second product if the seller thereby avoids competition on the merits of the "tied" product. Every contract in restraint of trade or commerce is declared to be illegal. In addition to outlawing "positive" ties likely to restrain competition, Section 1 also forbids "negative" ties -- arrangements conditioning the sale of one product on an agreement not to purchase a second product from competing suppliers.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > Per Se Rule

HN50 [] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

There are essentially four elements of a per se tying claim: (1) the tying and tied products are actually two distinct products; (2) there is an agreement or condition, express or implied, that establishes a tie; (3) the entity accused of tying has sufficient economic power in the market for the tying product to distort consumers' choices with respect to the tied product; and (4) the tie forecloses a substantial amount of commerce in the market for the tied product.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

HN51 [] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

To establish the existence of two separate products, defendant must identify the products at issue in each tie and demonstrate that there is sufficient demand for the purchase of the tied product separate from the tying product to identify a distinct product market in which it is efficient to offer the tied product separately from the tying product. When the economic advantages of joint packaging are substantial the package is not appropriately viewed as two products, and that should be the end of the tying inquiry. There must be evidence of sufficient consumer demand for each individual product, and not merely as part of an integrated product "package."

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Evidence > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

HN52 [] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Proof of a tying arrangement generally requires evidence that the supplier's sale of the tying product is conditioned upon the unwilling purchase of the tied product from the supplier or an unwilling promise not to purchase the tied product from any other supplier. The essential characteristic of an invalid tying arrangement lies in the seller's exploitation of its control over the tying product to force the buyer into the purchase of a tied product that the buyer either did not want at all, or might have preferred to purchase elsewhere on different terms.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

HN53 [] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Tying arrangements involve the use of leverage over the market for one product to coerce purchases of a second product. In the absence of an explicit tying agreement, conditioning may be inferred from evidence indicating that the supplier has actually coerced the purchase or non-purchase of another product. In the absence of an explicit agreement requiring the purchase as a condition of the sale, courts will accept proof suggesting any kind of coercion by the seller or unwillingness to take the second product by the buyer.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

HN54 [] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

It is well established that coercion may be established by showing that the facts and circumstances surrounding the transaction as a practical matter forced the buyer into purchasing the tied product. In essence, whether the conditioning is explicit or implicit, we will not consider the anti-competitive effects of a tie to be unreasonable per se unless there is evidence that the supplier of the tying product has actually used its market power to impose the condition.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Genuine Disputes

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Monopolies & Monopolization > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > Monopolization Offenses

HN55 [] Monopolies & Monopolization, Attempts to Monopolize

The Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 2, prohibits the monopolization of any part of the trade or commerce among the several States.

Copyright Law > ... > Civil Infringement Actions > Defenses > Copyright Misuse

Copyright Law > ... > Civil Infringement Actions > Defenses > General Overview

HN56 [] Defenses, Copyright Misuse

"Exclusionary conduct" is defined as conduct, other than competition on the merits or restraints reasonably "necessary" to competition on the merits, that reasonably appears capable of making a significant contribution to creating or maintaining monopoly power. The court labels as improper that conduct which harms the competitive process and not conduct which simply harms competitors. That process is harmed when conduct obstructs the achievement of competition's basic goals -- lower prices, better products, and more efficient production methods. There is shift in the emphasis of antitrust policy from the protection of competition as a process of rivalry to the protection of competition as a means of promoting economic efficiency.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Monopolies & Monopolization > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Penalties

HN57 [] Regulated Practices, Monopolies & Monopolization

Exclusionary conduct does not include behavior which poses no unreasonable threat to consumer welfare but is merely a manifestation of healthy competition, an absence of competition, or a natural monopoly. 15 U.S.C.S. § 2 punishes only willful acquisition or maintenance of monopoly power as distinguished from growth or development as a consequence of a superior product, business acumen, or historic accident.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Ownership & Transfer of Rights > Licenses

Copyright Law > ... > Civil Infringement Actions > Defenses > Copyright Misuse

Copyright Law > ... > Civil Infringement Actions > Defenses > General Overview

Copyright Law > ... > Assignments & Transfers > Licenses > General Overview

HN58 [] Ownership & Transfer of Rights, Licenses

The court holds that the desire of an author to be the exclusive user of its original work is a presumptively legitimate business justification for the author's refusal to license to competitors.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Monopolies & Monopolization > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Elements

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Defenses

HN59 Sherman Act, Claims

Because a monopolization claim does not require proof of concerted activity, even the unilateral actions of a monopolist can constitute exclusionary conduct. Thus, a monopolist's unilateral refusal to deal with its competitors may constitute prima facie evidence of exclusionary conduct in the context of a 15 U.S.C.S. § 2 claim. A monopolist may nevertheless rebut such evidence by establishing a valid business justification for its conduct (monopolist may rebut an inference of exclusionary conduct by establishing legitimate competitive reasons for the refusal.) Further sufficient evidence of harm to consumers and competitors triggers further inquiry as to whether the monopolist has persuaded the jury that its harmful conduct was justified by a normal business purpose.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Monopolies & Monopolization > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN60 Regulated Practices, Monopolies & Monopolization

In general, a business justification is valid if it relates directly or indirectly to the enhancement of consumer welfare. Thus, pursuit of efficiency and quality control might be legitimate competitive reasons for an otherwise exclusionary refusal to deal, while the desire to maintain a monopoly market share or thwart the entry of competitors would not. In essence, a unilateral refusal to deal is prima facie exclusionary if there is evidence of harm to the competitive process; a valid business justification requires proof of countervailing benefits to the competitive process.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN61 Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Despite the theoretical possibility, there have been relatively few cases in which a unilateral refusal to deal has formed the basis of a successful 15 U.S.C.S. § 2 claim. Several of the cases commonly cited for a supposed duty to deal were actually cases of joint conduct in which some competitors joined to frustrate others.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Monopolies & Monopolization > General Overview

Copyright Law > ... > Assignments & Transfers > Licenses > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Ownership & Transfer of Rights > Licenses

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

Copyright Law > Scope of Copyright Protection > Assignments & Transfers > General Overview

HN62 Regulated Practices, Monopolies & Monopolization

Antitrust law generally seeks to punish and prevent harm to consumers in particular markets, with a focus on relatively specific time periods. Any inquiry into the validity of a tying arrangement must focus on the market or markets in which the two products are sold. That is where anticompetitive forcing has impact. In determining whether conduct is exclusionary in the context of a monopolization claim, the ordinary focus on harm to the competitive process in the relevant market and time period. Confining the competitive process assists courts in deciding particular disputes based primarily on case-specific adjudicative facts rather than generally applicable

"legislative" facts or assumptions. The use and protection of copyrights also affects the "competitive process," but it may not be appropriate to judge the effect of the use of a copyright by looking at one market or one time.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Ownership & Transfer of Rights > Licenses

Copyright Law > ... > Assignments & Transfers > Licenses > General Overview

Copyright Law > ... > Civil Infringement Actions > Defenses > General Overview

Copyright Law > ... > Civil Infringement Actions > Defenses > Copyright Misuse

Copyright Law > ... > Deposit & Registration Requirements > Registration > Registration Certificates

HN63 [blue icon] Ownership & Transfer of Rights, Licenses

It is not the superiority of a work that allows the author to exclude others, however, but rather the limited monopoly granted by copyright law. Moreover, one reason why the Copyright Act, 17 U.S.C.S. § 410\(a\), fosters investment and innovation is that it may allow the author to earn monopoly profits by licensing the copyright to others or reserving the copyright for the author's exclusive use. The limited copyright monopoly is intended to motivate the creative activity of authors and inventors by the provision of a special reward. Thus, at least in a particular market and for a particular period of time, the Copyright Act tolerates behavior that may harm both consumers and competitors. The primary purpose of the antitrust laws -- to preserve competition -- can be frustrated, albeit temporarily, by a holder's exercise of the patent's inherent exclusionary power during its term.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > General Overview

Copyright Law > ... > Civil Infringement Actions > Defenses > Copyright Misuse

Copyright Law > ... > Civil Infringement Actions > Defenses > General Overview

HN64 [blue icon] Antitrust & Trade Law, Exemptions & Immunities

Antitrust law is somewhat instructive. Although creation and protection of original works of authorship may be a national pastime, the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. §1 does not explicitly exempt such activity from antitrust scrutiny and courts should be wary of creating implied exemptions.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Per Se Violations

Copyright Law > ... > Assignments & Transfers > Licenses > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Sports > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Sports > Baseball

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Communications > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Ownership & Transfer of Rights > Licenses

36 F.3d 1147, 1147 1994 U.S. App. LEXIS 25459, 1 32 U.S.P.Q.2D (BNA) 1385, 1385

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > Exemptions

Copyright Law > ... > Civil Infringement Actions > Defenses > General Overview

Copyright Law > ... > Civil Infringement Actions > Defenses > Copyright Misuse

Copyright Law > Scope of Copyright Protection > Assignments & Transfers > General Overview

HN65 [blue icon] Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason, Per Se Violations

The Supreme Court suggests that an otherwise reasonable yet anti-competitive use of a copyright should not be deemed a per se violation of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, but a monopolistic refusal to license might still violate the rule of reason.

Copyright Law > ... > Civil Infringement Actions > Defenses > Copyright Misuse

Copyright Law > ... > Civil Infringement Actions > Defenses > General Overview

HN66 [blue icon] Defenses, Copyright Misuse

It is in any event well settled that concerted and contractual behavior that threatens competition is not immune from antitrust inquiry simply because it involves the exercise of copyright privileges. The court holds that power gained through some natural and legal advantage such as a patent, copyright, or business acumen can give rise to liability if a seller exploits his dominant position in one market to expand his empire into the next.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Ownership & Transfer of Rights > Licenses

Patent Law > ... > Defenses > Inequitable Conduct > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Ownership > Conveyances > Licenses

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN67 [blue icon] Ownership & Transfer of Rights, Licenses

A patent holder who lawfully acquires a patent cannot be held liable under the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 2, for maintaining the monopoly power he lawfully acquires by refusing to license the patent to others.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Defenses > Inequitable Conduct > Anticompetitive Conduct

Patent Law > Infringement Actions > Defenses > General Overview

HN68 [blue icon] Inequitable Conduct, Anticompetitive Conduct

Where a patent has been lawfully acquired, subsequent conduct permissible under the patent laws cannot trigger any liability under the antitrust laws. The patent is itself a government grant of monopoly and is therefore an exception to usual antitrust rules. This exception is inoperable if the patent is unlawfully "acquired."

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Ownership & Transfer of Rights > Assignments

Patent Law > Infringement Actions > Exclusive Rights > Manufacture, Sale & Use

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Ownership > Conveyances > Licenses

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Ownership & Transfer of Rights > Licenses

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Defenses > Inequitable Conduct > Anticompetitive Conduct

Patent Law > Infringement Actions > Defenses > General Overview

HN69 [blue icon] Ownership & Transfer of Rights, Assignments

The "patent exception" is largely a means of resolving conflicting rights and responsibilities, i.e., a policy presumption. There is no adverse effect on competition since, as a patent monopolist, the patent holder has the exclusive right to manufacture, use, and sell his invention. At the same time, the exception is grounded in an empirical assumption that exposing patent activity to wider antitrust scrutiny would weaken the incentives underlying the patent system, thereby depriving consumers of beneficial products. Courts state that imposition of antitrust liability for an arguably unreasonable refusal to license a lawfully acquired patent would severely trample upon the incentives provided by patent laws and thus undermine the entire patent system.

Contracts Law > Types of Contracts > Lease Agreements > General Overview

Copyright Law > ... > Assignments & Transfers > Licenses > General Overview

Evidence > ... > Demonstrative Evidence > Photographs > Visual Formats

Copyright Law > ... > Civil Infringement Actions > Defenses > General Overview

Copyright Law > ... > Civil Infringement Actions > Defenses > Copyright Misuse

Copyright Law > ... > Damages > Types of Damages > Costs & Attorney Fees

Copyright Law > Scope of Copyright Protection > Assignments & Transfers > General Overview

Copyright Law > Scope of Copyright Protection > Ownership Rights > General Overview

Copyright Law > ... > Ownership Rights > Distribution > General Overview

Copyright Law > ... > Protected Subject Matter > Audiovisual Works & Motion Pictures > General Overview

HN70 [blue icon] Types of Contracts, Lease Agreements

The Copyright Act, 17 U.S.C.S. § 106 expressly grants to a copyright owner the exclusive right to distribute the protected work by transfer of ownership, or by rental, lease, or lending. Consequently, the owner of the copyright, if it pleases, may refrain from vending or licensing and content itself with simply exercising the right to exclude others from using its property. The court may also venture to infer that, Congress itself made an empirical assumption that allowing copyright holders to collect license fees and exclude others from using their works creates a system of incentives that promotes consumer welfare in the long term by encouraging investment in the creation of desirable artistic and functional works of expression.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

Copyright Law > ... > Assignments & Transfers > Licenses > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Ownership & Transfer of Rights > Licenses

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Copyright Law > ... > Civil Infringement Actions > Defenses > General Overview

Copyright Law > ... > Civil Infringement Actions > Defenses > Copyright Misuse

Copyright Law > Scope of Copyright Protection > Assignments & Transfers > General Overview

Copyright Law > Scope of Copyright Protection > Ownership Rights > General Overview

Copyright Law > Scope of Copyright Protection > Ownership Interests > Governmental Works

HN71 [blue icon] Monopolies & Monopolization, Attempts to Monopolize

The court cannot require antitrust defendants to prove and reprove the merits of this legislative assumption in every case where a refusal to license a copyrighted work comes under attack. Nevertheless, although nothing in the copyright statutes would prevent an author from hoarding all of his works during the term of the copyright, the Copyright Act, 17 U.S.C.S. § 106 does not explicitly purport to limit the scope of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1. If the Copyright Act is silent on the subject generally, the silence is particularly acute in cases where a monopolist harms consumers in the monopolized market by refusing to license a copyrighted work to competitors.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Defenses > Inequitable Conduct > Anticompetitive Conduct

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Intellectual Property > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Misuse of Rights > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Misuse of Rights > Patent Misuse Defense

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Ownership & Transfer of Rights > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Ownership & Transfer of Rights > Licenses

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Infringement Actions > Defenses > Misuse

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Ownership > Conveyances > Licenses

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Infringement Actions > Defenses > Bad Faith Enforcement

HN72 [blue icon] Inequitable Conduct, Anticompetitive Conduct

See 35 U.S.C.S. § 271\(d\).

36 F.3d 1147, 1147 1994 U.S. App. LEXIS 25459, 1 32 U.S.P.Q.2D (BNA) 1385, 1385

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Defenses > Inequitable Conduct > Anticompetitive Conduct

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Counterclaims > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Intellectual Property > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Misuse of Rights > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Misuse of Rights > Patent Misuse Defense

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Ownership & Transfer of Rights > Licenses

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Infringement Actions > Defenses > Misuse

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Ownership > Conveyances > Licenses

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Infringement Actions > Defenses > Bad Faith Enforcement

HN73 [+] Inequitable Conduct, Anticompetitive Conduct

35 U.S.C.S. § 271(d) clearly prevents an infringer from using a patent misuse defense when the patent owner has unilaterally refused a license, and may even herald the prohibition of all antitrust claims and counterclaims premised on a refusal to license a patent. Nevertheless, while 35 U.S.C.S. § 271(d) is indicative of Congressional "policy" on the need for antitrust law to accommodate intellectual property law, Congress did not similarly amend the Copyright Act, 17 U.S.C.S. § 411.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Ownership & Transfer of Rights > Licenses

Copyright Law > ... > Assignments & Transfers > Licenses > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Expiration, Repeal & Suspension

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Defenses

Copyright Law > ... > Civil Infringement Actions > Defenses > General Overview

Copyright Law > ... > Civil Infringement Actions > Defenses > Copyright Misuse

Copyright Law > Scope of Copyright Protection > Assignments & Transfers > General Overview

Copyright Law > Scope of Copyright Protection > Ownership Interests > Governmental Works

HN74 [+] Ownership & Transfer of Rights, Licenses

Since neither the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. §1, nor the Copyright Act, 17 U.S.C.S. § 411, works a partial repeal of the other, and since implied repeals are disfavored, the court must harmonize the two, mindful of the legislative and judicial approaches to similar conflicts created by the patent laws. The court must not lose sight of the need to preserve the economic incentives fueled by the Copyright Act, but neither may the court ignore the tension between the two very different policies embodied in the Copyright Act and the Sherman Act, both designed ultimately to improve the welfare of consumers in our free market system. The court holds that while exclusionary conduct can include a monopolist's unilateral refusal to license a copyright, an author's desire to exclude others from use of its copyrighted work is a presumptively valid business justification for any immediate harm to consumers.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Defenses

Copyright Law > ... > Civil Infringement Actions > Defenses > Copyright Misuse

Copyright Law > ... > Civil Infringement Actions > Defenses > General Overview

HN75 [blue icon] Sherman Act, Defenses

There may be rare cases in which imposing antitrust liability is unlikely to frustrate the objectives of the Copyright Act, 17 U.S.C.S. § 411.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Monopolies & Monopolization > General Overview

HN76 [blue icon] Regulated Practices, Monopolies & Monopolization

A monopolist may normally keep its innovations secret from its rivals as long as it wishes.

Counsel: Charles A. Gilman, with whom Cahill, Gordon & Reindel, Robert A. Alessi, Marshall Cox, Allen S. Joslyn, Immanuel Kohn, William T. Lifland, Gerard M. Meistrell, Roy L. Regozin, Dean Ringel, Laurence T. Sorkin, Goodwin, Procter & Hoar, and Coudert Brothers, were on brief for appellant.

Robert S. Frank, Jr., with whom Robert M. Buchanan, Jr., Brian A. Davis, Choate, Hall & Stewart, Jacob Frank, and Morris G. Nicholson, were on brief for appellees.

Judges: Before Torruella, Cyr and Stahl, Circuit Judges.

Opinion by: STAHL

Opinion

[1386] [*1152] STAHL, Circuit Judge.

Grumman Systems Support Corporation ("Grumman") assigns error to the district court's handling of litigation arising from Grumman's acquisition, duplication, and use of MV/Advanced Diagnostic Executive System ("ADEX"), a sophisticated computer program developed by Data General Corporation ("DG") to diagnose problems in DG's MV computers. DG claimed that Grumman had infringed DG's ADEX copyrights and misappropriated trade secrets embodied in ADEX. A jury [2] agreed, awarding DG $ 27,417,000 in damages (excluding prejudgment interest and attorney's fees). Grumman contends that the district court prematurely dismissed its affirmative defenses and counterclaims and committed several errors during and after the trial.

While this case raises numerous issues touching on copyright law, Grumman's most intriguing argument -- presented below as both a defense and a counterclaim -- is that DG illegally maintained its monopoly in the market for service of DG computers by unilaterally refusing to license ADEX to Grumman and other competitors. The antitrust claims are intriguing because they present a curious conflict, namely, whether (and to what extent) the antitrust laws, in the absence of any statutory exemption, must tolerate short-term harm to the competitive process when such harm is caused by the otherwise lawful exercise of an economically potent "monopoly" in a copyrighted work.

After a careful analysis, we affirm on all but one relatively minor issue concerning the calculation of damages.

I.

BACKGROUND¹

[3] DG and Grumman are competitors in the market for service of computers manufactured by DG, and the present litigation stems from the evolving nature of their competitive relationship. DG not only designs and manufactures computers, but also offers a line of products and services for the maintenance and repair of DG computers. Although DG has no more than a 5% share of the highly competitive "primary market" for mini-computers, DG occupies approximately 90% of the "aftermarket" for service of DG computers. As a group, various "third party maintainers" ("TPMs") earn roughly 7% of the service revenues; Grumman is the leading TPM with approximately 3% of the available service business. The remaining equipment owners (typically large companies in the high technology industry) generally maintain their own computers and peripherals, although [*1153] they occasionally need outside service on a "time and materials" basis.

A. Computer Service: Outputs and Inputs

Support service for DG computers entails a variety of activities and a corresponding array of goods and services. The principal activities are maintenance and repair of computer equipment. Maintenance includes care of parts subject [4] to failure as well as replacement [1387] of hardware components to bring equipment up to date. Repair involves the diagnosis and correction of hardware failure. Service technicians remedy equipment problems either by actually mending a malfunctioning part (e.g., reformatting a "broken" disk drive) or replacing the part.

Each of these support service "outputs" benefit from a range of "inputs." For example, engineering change orders, along with certain documentation and parts, allow service technicians to make technological updates to computer hardware. In order to identify the existence and location of a malfunctioning part, a service technician may use diagnostics (now increasingly sophisticated software), schematics (maps of the location and function of hardware elements), and various types of documentation, together with the technician's own experience acquired by diagnosing equipment problems. In order to actually mend a malfunctioning part, a technician might fix the part on the spot with routine tools or sophisticated software (e.g., a software diagnostic that can reformat a disk drive), or send the part to a repair depot run either by the technician's employer or another service organization. [5] The repair of a malfunctioning part often requires very detailed information about the part (such as the information provided by schematics and other documentation), and may in turn require smaller replacement parts. Finally, replacement of parts naturally requires the availability of spares. At the core of this litigation is a dispute about Grumman's access to software diagnostics and other service "tools" produced by DG for use in the repair, upgrading, and maintenance of DG equipment.

B. TPM Access to Service Inputs

DG's policies concerning TPM access to DG's service tools have developed over time. As described below, DG's policies have evolved through three stages.

1. Initial Suspicion

TPMs made their debut in the 1970s while DG was still relatively new to the computer manufacturing market. DG was suspicious of the ability of TPMs, often run and staffed by former DG technicians, to service DG computers without running afoul of DG's intellectual property rights or confidentiality agreements binding on former DG employees.

¹ Because the bulk of the fact-related issues on appeal concern the district court's analysis of the record on summary judgment, we generally present the evidence in a light most favorable to Grumman. See, e.g., Levy v. FDIC, 7 F.3d 1054, 1056 (1st Cir. 1993). Naturally, where the story touches on matters necessarily decided by the jury, we present the evidence in a manner most favorable to DG. See, e.g., Toucet v. Maritime Overseas Corp., 991 F.2d 5, 11 (1st Cir. 1993) (review of jury's damage award).

In 1975, DG converted its suspicions into legal claims, filing suit against Lloyd Root and Robert Montgomery, two of its former employees, as [*^{6}] well as Computer Systems Support Corporation ("CSSC"), the TPM that Root and Montgomery had founded after leaving DG.² DG's principal allegations were that Root and Montgomery had breached their employment agreements by taking DG information with them when they left DG, and that CSSC personnel had been making unauthorized use of DG proprietary information. It was unclear, however, whether the proprietary items that CSSC was using were items sold or licensed to equipment owners (pursuant to agreements which arguably permitted some use by TPMs),³ or items taken directly from DG by Root and Montgomery.

Lacking promising proof to support its claims, DG proposed a settlement whereby CSSC would [^{7}] agree to return any proprietary information that Root and Montgomery unlawfully took from DG, and DG would expressly authorize CSSC (and its successors) to use DG proprietary information in the [^{1154}] maintenance and repair of DG computers.⁴ CSSC accepted, and the parties signed a settlement agreement in 1976 ("the Settlement Agreement").⁵

2. Peaceful Coexistence

From 1976 until some point in the mid-1980s, DG affirmatively encouraged the growth of TPMs with relatively liberal policies concerning TPM access to service tools. DG sold or licensed diagnostics directly to TPMs, and allowed TPMs to use diagnostics sold or licensed to DG equipment owners. DG did not restrict [^{8}] access by TPMs to spare parts manufactured by DG or other manufacturers. DG allowed (or at least tolerated) requests by TPMs for DG's repair depot to fix malfunctioning circuit boards, the heart of a computer's central processing unit [^{1388}] ("CPU"). DG sold at least some schematics and other documentation to TPMs. DG also sold TPMs engineering change order kits. And finally, DG training classes were open to TPM field engineers. Grumman suggests that DG's liberal policies were beneficial to DG because increased capacity (and perhaps competition) in the service aftermarket would be a selling point for DG equipment.⁶

3. Increased Restrictions

In the mid-1980s, DG altered its strategy. With the goal of maximizing revenues from its service business, DG began to refuse to provide many service tools directly to TPMs. DG would not allow TPMs to use the DG repair depot, nor would it permit TPMs [*^{9}] to purchase schematics, documentation, "change order" kits, or certain spare parts. DG no longer allowed TPM technicians to attend DG training classes. Finally, DG developed and severely restricted the licensing of ADEX, a new software diagnostic for its MV computers. The MV series was at once DG's most advanced computer hardware and an increasingly important source of sales and service revenue for DG.

A number of items unavailable to TPMs directly from DG were either available to all equipment owners (even customers of TPMs) from DG, or were available to TPMs from sources other than DG. For example, DG depot service, change order kits, and at least some documentation were available to all equipment owners. There is also evidence that Grumman had its own repair depot and that Grumman could make use of repair depots run by other service organizations (sometimes called "fourth party maintainers"). Likewise, there is evidence that TPMs could purchase at least some spare parts from sources other than DG.

² For the sake of simplicity, we will refer to all three of the 1975 defendants as "CSSC."

³ There is some evidence that during the 1970s DG sold or licensed proprietary information to equipment owners under agreements which permitted owners to allow third parties to use that information to service the owners' computers.

⁴ DG and Grumman (which acquired CSSC in 1984) vigorously dispute the precise scope of this authorization. See infra Sections II.C.1.a and III.A.3.

⁵ Another provision of the Settlement Agreement prohibited CSSC from using DG proprietary information in the design or manufacture of computer equipment. That provision is not at issue in this case.

⁶ Grumman acquired CSSC in 1984, thereby becoming a successor in interest to CSSC's rights under the 1976 Settlement Agreement.

The situation was different with respect to ADEX. DG service technicians would use ADEX in performing service for DG equipment owners. DG would also license ADEX for the exclusive use [10] of the in-house technicians of equipment owners who perform most of their own service.⁷ However, DG would not license ADEX to its own service customers or to the customers of TPMs. Nor was ADEX available to TPMs from sources other than DG. At least two other diagnostics designed to service DG's MV computers may have become available as early as 1989, but no fully functional substitute was available when this case was tried in 1992.

Grumman found various ways to skirt DG's ADEX restrictions. Some former DG employees, in violation of their employment agreements, brought copies of ADEX when they joined Grumman. In addition, DG field engineers often stored copies of ADEX at the work sites of their service customers, who were bound to preserve the confidentiality of any DG proprietary information in their possession. Although DG service customers had an obligation to return copies of [*1155] ADEX to DG should they cancel their service agreement [11] and switch to a TPM, few customers did so. It is essentially undisputed that Grumman technicians used and duplicated copies of ADEX left behind by DG field engineers. There is also uncontested evidence that Grumman actually acquired copies of ADEX in this manner in order to maintain libraries of diagnostics so that Grumman technicians could freely duplicate and use any copy of ADEX to service any of Grumman's customers with DG's MV computers.

C. The Present Litigation

In 1988, DG filed suit against Grumman in the United States District Court for the District of Massachusetts.⁸ [13] DG patterned its suit after a similar action it brought against Service & Training, Inc. ("STI") in the United States District Court for the District of Maryland. See Service & Training, Inc. v. Data General Corp., 737 F. Supp. 334 \(D. Md. 1990\), aff'd on other grounds, 963 F.2d 680 \(4th Cir. 1992\) ("STI"). STI was another TPM in the DG aftermarket and a successor to Montgomery's interest in the 1976 Settlement Agreement. In one count, DG alleged that Grumman's use and duplication of ADEX infringed DG's ADEX copyrights, and [12] requested injunctive relief, 17 U.S.C. § 502 \(1988\), as well as actual damages and profits, 17 U.S.C. § 504\(b\) \(1988\). In another count, DG alleged that Grumman had violated [1389] Massachusetts trade secrets law by misappropriating copies of ADEX in violation of confidentiality agreements binding on former DG employees and DG service customers. On December 29, 1988, the district court issued a preliminary injunction prohibiting Grumman from using ADEX. See Data General Corp. v. Grumman Sys. Support Corp., No. 88-0033-S, 1988 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 16427 (D. Mass. Dec. 29, 1988) ("Grumman I").⁹ The parties then prepared for trial.¹⁰

[14] 1. Pre-Trial Issues

⁷ This latter group is comprised of Cooperative Maintenance Organizations ("CMOs").

⁸ Grumman subsequently filed an action in the United States District Court for the Northern District of California alleging that DG had violated California's antitrust laws. See Grumman Sys. Support Corp. v. Data General Corp., 125 F.R.D. 160 \(N.D. Cal. 1988\). That court later dismissed Grumman's action on the grounds that the claim was a compulsory counterclaim to DG's copyright infringement action pending in the District of Massachusetts. Id.

⁹ The jury subsequently found that Grumman continued to use ADEX in violation of the injunction. That finding is unchallenged on appeal.

¹⁰ In the course of the pre- and post-trial litigation, the district court issued a series of published and unpublished opinions which contain additional background material. See, e.g., Data General Corp. v. Grumman Sys. Support Corp., 761 F. Supp. 185 \(D. Mass. 1991\) ("Grumman II"); Data General Corp. v. Grumman Sys. Support Corp., No. 88-0033-S \(D. Mass. May 2, 1991\) ("Grumman III"); Data General Corp. v. Grumman Sys. Support Corp., 795 F. Supp. 501 \(D. Mass. 1992\) ("Grumman IV"); Data General Corp. v. Grumman Sys. Support Corp., 834 F. Supp. 477 \(D. Mass. 1992\) ("Grumman V"); Data General Corp. v. Grumman Sys. Support Corp., 825 F. Supp. 340 \(D. Mass. 1993\) ("Grumman VI"); Data General Corp. v. Grumman Sys. Support Corp., 825 F. Supp. 361 \(D. Mass. 1993\) ("Grumman VII").

Grumman raised a host of affirmative defenses and counterclaims, all eventually rejected by the district court in response to DG's motions for partial summary judgment. Three of these issues play a pivotal role in Grumman's appeal.

a. 1976 Settlement Agreement

Grumman alleged that the 1976 Settlement Agreement authorized it (as a successor to CSSC) to "acquire, possess, copy and use" all DG diagnostics, including ADEX. Liberally construed, Grumman's allegation of a right to "copy and use" ADEX fairly includes an allegation that Grumman has a right to copy and use DG diagnostic software in the possession of DG equipment owners. Judge Skinner rejected the Settlement Agreement defense by adopting the reasoning of the STI courts, which had rebuffed the same arguments on a nearly identical record. See Grumman V, 834 F. Supp. at 482-83. In the district court decision in STI, Judge Motz analyzed the language of the Settlement Agreement, testimony from the lawyers who negotiated it, and evidence of the parties' subsequent conduct. 737 F. Supp. at 339-41. On the basis of this evidence, Judge Motz [15] concluded that the Settlement Agreement did not require DG to license any proprietary information to CSSC or its customers, nor [*1156] did the Settlement Agreement prevent DG from prohibiting CSSC from copying and using proprietary information in the custody of DG service customers. *Id.*¹¹

b. Antitrust Defenses

Grumman also claimed that DG could not maintain its infringement action because DG had used its ADEX copyrights to violate Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Antitrust Act, 15 U.S.C. §§ 1 and 2 (1988 & Supp. IV 1992).¹² Specifically, Grumman charged that DG misused its copyrights by (1) tying the availability of ADEX to a consumer's agreement either to purchase DG support services (a "positive tie") or not to purchase support services from TPMs (a "negative tie"), [16] and (2) willfully maintaining its monopoly in the support services aftermarket by imposing the alleged tie-in and refusing to deal with TPMs.

Concerning the tying claim, the district court again adopted the reasoning of the Fourth Circuit in STI, this time for the proposition that there was insufficient proof of a tying agreement to withstand summary judgment. Grumman V, 834 F. Supp. at 484-85. The Fourth Circuit held that there was no positive tie for two independent reasons. First, the court noted that DG did not actually license ADEX to its service customers. STI, 963 F.2d at 686-87. Second, the court held that there was not enough evidence to prove that any license to use ADEX was conditioned on the purchase of DG support services. Id. at 687. The court noted that there was no explicit tying condition in any written agreement. Id. The [17] court also noted that there was insufficient evidence of unwilling purchases of DG support service so as to justify an inference of an implicit condition; customers may simply prefer service supported by ADEX diagnostics over service that is not. Id. at 687-88. The court further [1390] held that there was insufficient evidence of a negative tie because, on the record before the court, "the fact that CMOs do not purchase repair services . . . is at least as consistent with the legitimate and independent business decision not to purchase unneeded services as it is with an agreement not to purchase such services." Id. at 686.

Judge Skinner conducted his own exhaustive analysis of the monopolization claim, concluding that Grumman failed to "assert[] any facts that would indicate that DG has engaged in any unlawful exclusionary conduct." Grumman II, 761 F. Supp. at 192. The court essentially narrowed the question to whether DG's restrictive policies with respect to TPMs constitute unlawful unilateral refusals to deal, reasoning that DG's actions do not rise to the level of unlawful exclusionary conduct [18] for several reasons. The court agreed with Grumman that this case, like Aspen Skiing Co. v. Aspen Highlands Skiing Corp., 472 U.S. 585, 86 L. Ed. 2d 467, 105 S. Ct. 2847 (1985), raises "the issue of prior promotion of competition in a market that is later halted," Grumman II, 761 F. Supp. at 190. The district court nonetheless concluded that Grumman had failed to demonstrate that DG's restrictive policies have unreasonably harmed the competitive process. In particular, the court noted that DG's policies with respect to most service

¹¹ Although the reasoning of the Fourth Circuit's affirmance differed from that of Judge Motz on other issues, the two courts appear to have been in total agreement with respect to the Settlement Agreement issue.

¹² Grumman presented the antitrust claims as independent counterclaims as well.

products do not prevent TPMs from competing in the service market because "DG will sell its service products, except [ADEX and schematics], to any ultimate consumer regardless of whether [the consumer] now or later uses a TPM." Id. at 191. The court also observed that "TPMs have demonstrated the ability to develop diagnostics [without schematics], even if they are not as efficient as MV/ADEX." Id. Lastly, the court suggested that the Sherman Act would not compel DG to disclose its schematics, in part because such compulsory [19] disclosure would undermine the incentives of copyright and patent laws. *Id. at 192.*¹³

[*1157] In rejecting Grumman's motion for reconsideration of the grant of summary judgment on the monopolization claim, the district court also directly addressed Grumman's contention that DG's refusal to license ADEX to TPMs constitutes exclusionary conduct. The court stated that DG's refusal to license ADEX to TPMs was not exclusionary because "DG offers to the public a license to use MV/ADEX on any computer owned by the customer," and therefore DG "'did not withhold from one member of the public a service offered to the rest[.]'" Grumman III, slip op. at 5 (citing Olympia Equip. Leasing Co. v. Western Union Tel. Co., 797 F.2d 370, 377 (7th Cir. 1986), [20] cert. denied, 480 U.S. 934, 94 L. Ed. 2d 765, 107 S. Ct. 1574 (1987)).

c. Federal Preemption of State Trade Secrets Claim

Grumman unsuccessfully sought to convince the district court that Section 301 of the Copyright Act of 1976, 17 U.S.C. § 301 (1988 & Supp. IV 1992), preempts DG's state law action for misappropriation of trade secrets. The district court held that DG's trade secrets claim was not preempted because DG did not simply allege conduct equivalent to the copying and use which form the basis of an infringement claim; instead, DG's trade secrets claim was based on Grumman's acquisition of ADEX in violation of confidentiality agreements binding on former DG employees and service customers. Grumman IV, 795 F. Supp. at 507.

2. Trial Issues

Stripped of its affirmative defenses, Grumman proceeded to trial. Grumman focused its defensive energies in two areas. Grumman attacked DG's proof of the prima facie elements of copyright infringement and misappropriation of trade secrets, and attempted to undermine DG's broad-gauged request for compensation [21] for lost profits and disgorgement of Grumman's MV-related profits.

a. Validity of Copyright Registration

During the trial, it became evident that DG had made several errors in registering its ADEX copyrights. After Edward Gove, a DG official, testified that DG had deposited with the Copyright Office the correct excerpts of human-readable "source code," ¹⁴ [22] [1391] Grumman introduced evidence that there were some errors in the deposits for the first three versions of ADEX. In rebuttal testimony, Gove confirmed that there were a number of minor, inadvertent errors in the deposits that would not affect the operation of the programs.¹⁵

Grumman argued to the district court that any error in a copyright deposit renders the registration invalid, and requested that the court so instruct the jury. The district court refused, instructing the jury instead that minor, inadvertent errors in the deposit of excerpts of computer code do not threaten the validity of the copyright

¹³ The district court also held that neither ADEX nor DG's schematics were "essential facilities" that DG (as a monopolist in the service aftermarket) must share with its competitors. Id. at 191-92. Grumman does not assign error to this aspect of the district court's decision.

¹⁴ "Source code" refers to an annotated text, written in a programming language intelligible to humans, that represents the set of instructions comprising a particular computer program. See Computer Assocs. Int'l, Inc. v. Altai, Inc., 22 F.3d 32, 33 n.1 (2d Cir. 1994); Johnson Controls, Inc. v. Phoenix Control Sys., Inc., 886 F.2d 1173, 1175 n.2 (9th Cir. 1989). "Object code" refers to the text of the same set of instructions, translated into binary form (a sequence of zeros and ones) intelligible to the computer itself. See id.

¹⁵ The errors are described infra, note 23.

registration. As a fall-back tactic, Grumman renewed its previous request that the district court compel DG to produce the entire human-readable source code for each version of ADEX so that Grumman could more effectively cross-examine Gove about the significance of the errors. The district court refused to do so, and later explained its discretionary decision by finding that "Grumman had an adequate opportunity to explore the errors contained in the initial copyright deposits, to challenge Data General's explanation of those errors, and to argue these issues before the jury." Grumman VI, 825 F. Supp. at 352. Using a special verdict form, the jury found that DG had properly registered each [\[23\]](#) of the ADEX copyrights.

b. Actual Damages and Profits

Grumman argued that the jury should identify and ignore that portion of Grumman's [\[*1158\]](#) profits which was not attributable to Grumman's use of ADEX. To this end, Grumman introduced evidence that some of its revenues were derived from servicing DG computers that cannot or need not be serviced with ADEX, and that the value of Grumman's use of ADEX to service customers with MV computers was distinct from the value of other products and services Grumman provided to those customers.

In contrast, DG offered evidence that because equipment owners prefer to purchase all service from one vendor, equipment owners with both MV computers and other DG computers ("mixed-equipment customers") would not have purchased service from Grumman if Grumman had lacked access to ADEX. DG also offered evidence tending to show that, even if Grumman did not always use ADEX in servicing a computer, Grumman could not have attracted and retained its MV-related business had it not been for Grumman's use of ADEX. DG's expert witness opined that DG's damages totaled $ 28,003,000 -- $ 26,364,000 in DG's lost profits and $ 1,639,000 in nonduplicative profits¹⁶ [\[24\]](#) earned by Grumman as a result of its acquisition and use of ADEX.

Attempting to blunt at least part of DG's sweeping "but for" theory, Grumman asked the district court to instruct the jury to discount that portion of Grumman's profits which was not attributable to the infringement. The court instructed the jury that DG could recover that portion of Grumman's profits that was "attributable to the infringement," but did not elaborate on the jury's task in this regard. Left to choose between the parties' theories, the jury apparently accepted the essence of DG's theory, though the total award of compensatory damages was $ 27,417,000, [\[25\]](#) somewhat less than DG requested.¹⁷

3. Post-Trial Issues

Grumman sought relief from the judgment on a number of grounds, two of which are most relevant to this appeal.

a. Actual Damages and Profits

Claiming that the jury's award was speculative and excessive, Grumman moved for a new trial or, in the alternative, remittitur. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 59\(a\). As the district court related:

Grumman complains that the jury awarded speculative and excessive damages because it uncritically adopted the plaintiff's damage analysis in its entirety which was built on theoretically unsound and factually inaccurate assumptions. More specifically, defendant contends that the plaintiff's damage analysis failed to identify relevant revenues, failed to apply a reasonable profit margin, and failed to apportion service profits between infringing and non-infringing activities.

¹⁶ HN1  "Nonduplicative profits" are those profits earned by Grumman that would not have been available to DG in the absence of Grumman's wrongful conduct. See 17 U.S.C. § 504\(b\) (providing that copyright owner may "recover . . . any profits of the infringer that are attributable to the infringement and are not taken into account in computing the actual damages").

¹⁷ On the verdict slip, the jury assessed the same amount of damages -- $ 27,417,000 -- for Grumman's misappropriation of trade secrets.

[1392] Grumman VI, 825 F. Supp. at 349 [26] (footnote omitted). The district court denied the motion, ruling in essence that DG's theory of damages was proper and that the jury was free to weigh the testimony of DG's experts more heavily than that of Grumman's experts. Id. at 349-51.

b. Attorney's Fees

The district court included in its judgment order an award of attorney's fees under the Copyright Act, although it appears that the court has not yet fixed the amount. Grumman argued that the court should not award attorney's fees because DG had "elected" only those remedies available under Massachusetts trade secrets law, which does not allow an award of attorney's fees.¹⁸ The district court denied the motion, finding that DG had merely sought to maximize the judgment by selecting the most generous body of [*1159] law for each element of its recovery. Grumman VI, 825 F. Supp. at 346. The district court reasoned further that because DG would not receive a double award of attorney's fees, the judgment was in no need of correction. Id. at 346-47.

[27] 4. Issues on Appeal

Grumman renews its arguments concerning the pre-trial, trial, and post-trial issues described above. Grumman claims that the district court erred in entering summary judgment on its affirmative defenses, questions the propriety of certain of the district court's jury instructions, maintains that the jury's award of damages lacks evidentiary support, and insists that DG is not entitled to recover attorney's fees. After reviewing the procedural rules that govern this appeal, we address each of Grumman's arguments in turn.

II.

PROCEDURAL PRINCIPLES

HN2 [↑] Because this appeal turns largely on questions of law, we outline the corresponding standard of review. Although the reasoning of the court below may provide a useful starting point for analysis, the district court's view of the law is not binding on a court of appeals. See Williams v. Poulos, 11 F.3d 271, 278 \(1st Cir. 1993\) (citing Dedham Water Co. v. Cumberland Farms Dairy, Inc., 972 F.2d 453, 457 \(1st Cir. 1992\)). Thus, we exercise our independent judgment in evaluating the legal correctness of the district court's jury instructions. [28] Likewise, we must reach our own conclusion as to a statute's correct construction. See FDIC v. Keating, 12 F.3d 314, 316 \(1st Cir. 1993\).

Similarly, HN3 [↑] in reviewing a district court's entry of summary judgment, we determine anew whether the moving party has shown "that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that [it] is entitled to judgment as a matter of law." Fed. R. Civ. P. 56\(c\). See also Bird v. Centennial Ins. Co., 11 F.3d 228, 231 \(1st Cir. 1993\). "In this context, 'genuine' means that the evidence about the fact is such that a reasonable jury could resolve the point in favor of the nonmoving party and 'material' means that the fact is one that might affect the outcome of the suit under the governing law." Pagano v. Frank, 983 F.2d 343, 347 \(1st Cir. 1993\) (citations, internal quotation marks, and brackets omitted). Although "we read the record and indulge all inferences in a light most favorable to the non-moving party," Rivera-Ruiz v. Gonzalez-Rivera, 983 F.2d 332, 334 \(1st Cir. 1993\), the adverse party cannot defeat a well-supported [29] motion by "resting upon the mere allegations or denials of [its] pleading," Fed. R. Civ. P. 56\(e\). HN4 [↑] If the nonmovant bears the ultimate burden of persuasion with respect to its claim or defense, it may avert summary judgment only if it identifies issues genuinely in dispute and advances convincing theories as to their materiality. See Pagano, 983 F.2d at 347 (citing Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc., 477 U.S. 242, 247-48, 91 L. Ed. 2d 202, 106 S. Ct. 2505 \(1986\)). Of course, it may be difficult for a trial court to forecast the reaction of a reasonable jury to an intricate array of complex theories. Nonetheless, Rule 56 applies equally to simple cases as well as cases involving complicated legal principles and theories of recovery. See, e.g., Amerinet, Inc. v. Xerox Corp., 972 F.2d

¹⁸ Massachusetts law provides for a higher rate of prejudgment interest on compensatory damages than does federal law.

1483, 1490 (8th Cir. 1992) ("In complex antitrust cases, no different or heightened standard for the grant of summary judgment applies."), cert. denied, 122 L. Ed. 2d 356, 113 S. Ct. 1048 (1993).

Finally, we note that HN5¹⁸ we are [30] at liberty to affirm a district court's grant of summary judgment "on any ground supported in the record even if the issue was not pleaded, tried or otherwise referred to in the proceedings below." de Casenave v. United States, 991 F.2d 11, 12 n.2 (1st Cir. 1993). [1393]

III.

DISCUSSION

A. DG's Intellectual Property Claims

We first examine the two arguments that strike at the heart of DG's right to pursue its claims: DG's alleged failure to comply with the copyright registration requirements and the possible preemption of the state trade secrets claim by Section 301 of the Copyright [*1160] Act. We then discuss Grumman's two affirmative defenses -- the 1976 Settlement Agreement Defense and the "misuse" defense -- each of which is intended to undermine both the copyright claim and the trade secrets claim. Finally, we review Grumman's challenges to the award of actual damages, infringer's profits, and attorney's fees.

1. Validity of Copyright Registration

HN6¹⁹ Registration of a work with the Copyright Office provides several benefits to a plaintiff in an infringement action. First, although copyright protection attaches the day original [31] expression is fixed in a tangible medium, see 17 U.S.C. § 102(a) (1988 & Supp. IV 1992), and thus an infringer may be liable for infringement from that day forward, see 17 U.S.C. § 408(a) (1988 & Supp. IV 1992) (providing that "registration is not a condition of copyright protection"), registration of the copyright is a prerequisite to suit under the Copyright Act, 17 U.S.C. § 411(a) (1988 & Supp. IV 1992). Second, upon accepting the registrant's application, fee, and deposit of a representative copy of the work, see 17 U.S.C. § 408, the Copyright Office issues a certificate of registration, which is admissible in an infringement action as "prima facie evidence of the validity of the copyright and of the facts stated in the certificate," 17 U.S.C. § 410(c) (1988).²⁰ HN7²¹ In the case of computer programs which, like ADEX, are either unpublished or published only in machine-readable form, the copyright owner must deposit "identifying portions of the program," generally the first and last 25 pages [32] of the human-readable source code 37 C.F.R. § 202.20(c)(2)(vii) (1993).²² By questioning DG's compliance with the registration requirements, Grumman is effectively claiming that (1) DG may not claim infringement of those ADEX copyrights for which DG tendered a defective deposit; and (2) even if DG is free to bring such claims, it is not entitled to a presumption as to the validity of the copyrights at issue.

[33] Essentially, Grumman's argument is that the district court erred in instructing the jury that minor, inadvertent errors in material deposited with a registration application do not affect the validity of the registration.²³ [34] DG

¹⁹ HN8²⁴ To demonstrate copyright infringement, DG had the burden of demonstrating (1) that it owns a valid copyright in the versions of ADEX alleged to have been copied, and (2) that Grumman copied constituent, original elements of ADEX. See Feist Publications, Inc. v. Rural Tel. Serv. Co., 499 U.S. 340, 111 S. Ct. 1282, 1296, 113 L. Ed. 2d 358 (1991); Concrete Mach. Co. v. Classic Lawn Ornaments, Inc., 843 F.2d 600, 605 (1st Cir. 1988); 3 Melville B. Nimmer & David Nimmer, Nimmer on Copyright § 13.01, at 13-5 to 13-6 (1993) (hereinafter "Nimmer").

²⁰ HN9²⁵ Where the program contains trade secret material, the copyright regulations permit some portions of the deposit to be blocked out, and allow a portion of the deposit to be in machine-readable "object code" (lines of zeroes and ones). 37 C.F.R. § 202.20(c)(2)(vii)(A)(2). If the deposit includes no blocked-out portions and consists entirely of source code, the first and last ten pages of the program will suffice. Id.

²¹ The district court instructed the jury as follows:

admits that there were inadvertent errors in the material deposited with the registration application for ADEX Revisions 0.0 to 2.0,²² but maintains that the errors are inconsequential.²³ Grumman does not quibble [1394] [*1161] with DG's denial of intent, but argues in effect that any error, however minor, precludes a finding that the plaintiff complied with Section 408\(b\). Alternatively, Grumman argues that an unintentional error in the deposit may still invalidate a copyright registration if the error is material. Grumman contends further that the district court erred in refusing Grumman's request for production of the entire source code for each of the first three versions of ADEX, a decision which allegedly prejudiced Grumman's ability to demonstrate that the defects in the deposit were not minor. We address these contentions seriatim.

[35] a. Immaterial Errors in the Copyright Deposit

HN10 [↑] It is well established that immaterial, inadvertent errors in an application for copyright registration do not jeopardize the validity of the registration. See Masquerade Novelty, Inc. v. Unique Indus., Inc., 912 F.2d 663, 667-68 & n.5 (3d Cir. 1990); Whimsicality, Inc. v. Rubie's Costume Co., 891 F.2d 452, 456 (2d Cir. 1989) (citing Eckes v. Card Prices Update, 736 F.2d 859, 861-62 (2d Cir. 1984)); Harris v. Emus Records Corp., 734 F.2d 1329, 1335 (9th Cir. 1984); Original Appalachian Artworks, Inc. v. Toy Loft, Inc., 684 F.2d 821, 828 (11th Cir. 1982); 2 Nimmer § 7.20, at 7-201 ("[A] misstatement or clerical error in the registration application if unaccompanied by fraud will not invalidate the copyright nor render the registration certificate incapable of supporting an infringement action."). In general, an error is immaterial if its discovery is not likely to have led the Copyright Office to refuse the application. See Eckes, 736 F.2d at 861-62. [36] ²⁴

Grumman observes that the cases approving substantial compliance with registration requirements concern errors in the application, not the deposit, and suggests that we adopt a rule demanding strict compliance with the deposit requirement. Although a different rule for deposit errors might be warranted if the language and underlying purposes [37] of the deposit requirement were of a significantly different character than that of the application requirement, we do not find that to be the case.

Because the function or registration [with respect to computer programs] is symbolic, clerical errors in the materials deposited with the application for registration do not affect the validity of the registration. For instance, discrepancies in the dates, filing the wrong pages, or partial pages, and similar errors, if accepted by the Copyright Office, do not impeach the validity and effect of the registration. If the errors were intentional, however, for purposes of deceiving the Copyright Office and perpetrating a fraud, the errors invalidate the registration.

²² Grumman does not question the validity of the copyright registration for the last five versions of ADEX, which Grumman also admitted it copied and used. Therefore, Grumman's argument, if persuasive, would not constitute a complete defense to the infringement action; the real issue is the extent of infringement properly subject to suit.

²³ With respect to ADEX Revisions 0.0, 1.0, and 2.0, DG attempted to deposit the first and last ten pages of source code (with no trade secrets blocked-out) in accordance with 37 C.F.R. § 202.20\(c\)\(2\)\(vii\)\(A\)\(2\). In all three instances, DG deposited the correct last ten pages but did not deposit the correct first ten pages. Nonetheless, in the case of ADEX Revisions 1.0 and 2.0, there was only one difference between the deposited pages and the pages DG intended to deposit: the Primary Label Block on the copyright deposit designates "1982" rather than "1983" as the copyright date. The same error occurred in the deposit for ADEX Revision 0.0, although there were three additional errors: two other discrepancies concerning the Primary Label Block, and one line of code missing from the deposited pages. The district court observed that "the Primary Label Block, which contains descriptive information about the tape, does not instruct or direct the computer." Grumman VI, 825 F. Supp. at 356. In addition, Mr. Gove, DG's expert, testified that the few errors in the deposited pages would have no bearing on the operation of the programs.

²⁴ HN11 [↑] Some courts have suggested that a defendant must show that it was prejudiced by a fraudulent misstatement or omission in a registration application, see, e.g., Harris, 734 F.2d at 1335 ("Absent intent to defraud and prejudice, inaccuracies in copyright registrations do not bar actions for infringement."), whereas others merely require proof that an intentional error, if discovered by the Copyright Office, would have been material to the registration decision, see, e.g., Eckes, 736 F.2d at 861-62. Any substantive difference in these standards has no bearing on our decision today.

HN12[²⁴] In the first place, the registration application described in Section 409, as well as the deposit described in Section 408\(b\), are both equally mandatory components of the registration process outlined in Section 408\(a\). Likewise, just as Section 409 sets forth what an application "shall include," (emphasis added), Section 408\(b\) uses the same phrase to prescribe the contents of the deposit. There is nothing in this language that would prevent our interpreting both the application requirements and the deposit requirements in a consistent and practical manner.

Nor do the apparent purposes of the deposit requirement counsel a different result. Although related to the deposit requirement in Section 407, which is designed to further the acquisitions policy of the Library of Congress, the deposit required by Section 408\(b\) serves the separate purpose of providing the Library's Copyright Office with sufficient material to identify the work in which the registrant claims a copyright. See H.R. Rep. No. 94-1476, 94th Cong., 2d Sess. 5 [^{38}] (1976), reprinted in 1976 U.S.C.C.A.N. 5659, 5766-70; see also 37 C.F.R. § 202.20\(c\)\(2\)\(vii\) (requiring deposit of "identifying portions" of [1162] programs that are unpublished or published only in machine-readable form). In other words, a key purpose of the Section 408\(b\) deposit requirement is to prevent confusion about which work the author is attempting to register.

A second apparent aim of Section 408\(b\) is to furnish the Copyright Office with an opportunity to assess the copyrightability of the applicant's work. HN13[²⁵] Pursuant to the Copyright Act, the Register of Copyrights must register a copyright claim and issue a registration [^{1395}] certificate "when, after examination, the Register . . . determines that . . . the material deposited constitutes copyrightable subject matter." 17 U.S.C. § 410\(a\) \(1988\).

²⁵ [^{40}] Some provisions of the copyright regulations seek to preserve the same opportunity for examination in relation to the deposit of a relatively small subset of a computer program. In adopting regulations encouraging source code deposits for computer programs, the Copyright Office explained that "in registering all copyright claims, the Copyright Office [^{39}] examines the deposit to determine the existence of copyrightable authorship." 54 Fed. Reg. 13,173 \(1989\). In order to allow the Office to continue this practice, the new regulations provide, for example, that when the applicant's deposit contains portions of the source code of an unpublished computer program with blocked-out trade secrets the deposit must still "reveal[] an appreciable amount of original computer code." See 37 C.F.R. § 202.20\(c\)\(2\)\(vii\)\(A\)\(2\) (emphasis added). On the other hand, HN14[²⁶] where there are no blocked-out portions in the deposited portions of a computer program, the regulations do not specifically require that the deposit contain "an appreciable amount of original computer code." In other words, the Copyright Office seems to have assumed that in such cases the deposited pages are likely to contain sufficient elements of original expression to determine the copyrightability of the work at issue. At any rate, it appears that Congress viewed the deposit requirement as a means of collecting information that the Copyright Office may use in resolving the question of copyrightability for the purposes of Section 410.²⁶

²⁵ Because Section 410\(a\) does not specify the nature of the "examination," and because there is evidence that Congress intended the government to play a role in copyright registration that is much more limited than its extensive responsibilities in overseeing patent registration, the Copyright Office may have the discretion to limit its examination to the facial validity of the application and deposit. See Midway Mfg. Co. v. Bandai-America, Inc., 546 F. Supp. 125, 143-44 (D.N.J. 1982) (citing, inter alia, Donald v. Uarco Business Forms, 478 F.2d 764, 765 n.1 (8th Cir. 1973)). Nevertheless, any such HN15[²⁷] discretion resides in the Copyright Office, not the applicant, for Section 410\(a\) suggests that an applicant must always give the Copyright Office an opportunity to undertake an appropriate examination.

²⁶ Another objective of Section 408\(b\) might be to give would-be infringers notice of the extent of their civil liability. Yet, this can hardly have been an important legislative goal because a copyright owner is free to register any time before filing suit, even after the act of infringement. See 17 U.S.C. § 408\(a\); Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corp. v. Dunnahoo, 637 F.2d 1338, 1342-43 (9th Cir. 1981); see also Olan Mills, Inc. v. Linn Photo Co., 23 F.3d 1345, 1349 (8th Cir. 1994); Konor Enters. v. Eagle Publications, Inc., 878 F.2d 138, 140 (4th Cir. 1989). In addition, because Congress had included a recordation requirement elsewhere in the copyright laws until 1988, see 17 U.S.C.A. § 205\(d\) \(West 1977\) (providing that recordation of transfer of copyright ownership is prerequisite to infringement suit by transferee), but did not do so in the context of Section 408, we may infer that affording notice to potential infringers was not Congress's primary motivation in drafting Section 408\(b\). See City of Chicago v. Environmental Defense Fund, 128 L. Ed. 2d 302, 114 S. Ct. 1588, 1593 (1994) ("It HN16[²⁸] is generally presumed that Congress acts intentionally and purposely when it includes particular language in one section of a statute but omits it in another.") (citation,

[41] Neither of these objectives differs so significantly from those of the application requirement as to justify a departure from the rule governing application errors. Quite naturally, HN17²⁷ one important function of a registration application is to identify the work in which the applicant claims a copyright. See 17 U.S.C. § 409 \(1988 & Supp. IV 1992\) (requiring application to include, inter alia, title of work, dates of completion and publication, along with "any other information . . . bearing upon the . . . identification of the work"). Furthermore, like the deposit, the [1163] application also provides some evidence of copyrightability, because it must identify any preexisting work from which the author borrowed in creating a compilation or derivative work. See 17 U.S.C. § 409\(9\). Indeed, the Copyright Office may often be in a better position to assess the originality of the work being registered by reviewing a list of preexisting works than by conducting a cursory inspection of the deposited material. And yet, an inadvertent failure to identify preexisting works on an application is treated no differently from [42] any other application error. See, e.g., Toy Loft, 684 F.2d at 828 (analyzing in similar fashion failure to mention co-author and failure to mention preexisting works).

We conclude that there is no support in law or reason for a rule that penalizes immaterial, inadvertent errors in a copyright deposit.²⁷ Accordingly, we find no flaw in the [1396] district court's instruction that such errors "do not impeach the validity and effect of the registration."

[43] b. Material Errors in the Copyright Deposit

HN18²⁸ The law is not quite as settled as to the effect of an application error that is inadvertent but nonetheless material. No court has suggested that a registration premised in part on an unintentional material error would fail to satisfy the jurisdictional requirement of Section 411\(a\). At the same time, at least one court has suggested that in such instances the proper approach might be to prevent the plaintiff from exploiting the presumption of validity that ordinarily attaches to a registered copyright under Section 410\(c\). Masquerade Novelty, 912 F.2d at 668 n.5 (dictum). We assume for argument's sake that a material error in a copyright deposit, even if unintentional, may destroy the presumption of validity.

c. Refusal to Compel Production of Source Code

Grumman next argues that it was unfairly deprived of an opportunity to prove that the errors in the deposits were material. Specifically, Grumman claims that the district court abused its discretion when, during the trial, it refused to compel DG to produce roughly 40,000 pages of source code (on approximately 33,000 floppy disks) for each of [44] the first three versions of ADEX (0.0 to 2.0). See Geremia v. First Nat'l Bank, 653 F.2d 1, 5-6 \(1st Cir. 1981\) (reviewing denial of mid-trial discovery motion for abuse of discretion).

Grumman renewed its unsuccessful pre-trial requests for the source code after Edward Gove, a DG witness, admitted on cross-examination that there were some discrepancies between the source code deposited with the Copyright Office and the actual source code for ADEX 0.0 to 2.0, and then explained in rebuttal testimony that those errors were minor and of no consequence to the operation of the diagnostic program as a whole. In response internal quotation marks, and brackets omitted); United States ex rel S. Prawer & Co. v. Fleet Bank, 24 F.3d 320, 329 \(1st Cir. 1994\) (similar).

²⁷ Contrary to Grumman's vigorous assertions, this court's opinion in Unistrut Corp. v. Power, 280 F.2d 18 \(1st Cir. 1960\), does not compel a different rule. In that case, plaintiff claimed infringement of the 1942 edition of its catalog but apparently sought to prove unauthorized copying at trial by demonstrating the similarity of the defendant's work to the 1943 edition of plaintiff's catalog, "which admittedly contained some, unspecified, additions." Id. at 23. Because "there was no proof that copies of this later edition were deposited with the Copyright Office, and there was no proof that the infringed material was contained in the 1942 edition," we held that there was insufficient proof of infringement of the earlier edition. Id. Unistrut is distinguishable in at least two respects. First, our opinion in Unistrut does not suggest that the plaintiff mistakenly deposited the 1943 edition when attempting to register a copyright claim concerning the 1942 edition; hence, Unistrut cannot serve as authority on the legal ramifications of registration errors. Second, in this case there is evidence that sections of source code from ADEX Revisions 0.0 to 2.0 were among the pages deposited with the Copyright Office, even if other portions of the deposited material came from other computer programs.

to the renewed request, DG provided Grumman with those portions of the source codes for ADEX Revisions 0.0 to 2.0 necessary to conduct a character-by-character comparison of the intended deposits of source code with those portions of source code actually deposited.²⁸ Nonetheless, [*1164] Grumman insisted that it was entitled to the entire source code for all three versions.

[45] Grumman apparently sought the three sets of source code because it believed that analysis of the entire source code would permit a more effective cross-examination of the DG witness about the magnitude of the discrepancies during DG's rebuttal. It seems that Grumman had one main goal: it believed it might be able to show that, although the discrepancies were few in number and seemingly minor in character, ADEX would not function properly if the source code deposited with the Copyright Office had been inserted into the versions of ADEX DG intended to register.

The marginal benefit to Grumman of obtaining the balance of the source code was at best highly uncertain, and all indications were that such a test would produce no compelling results. Even if Grumman could demonstrate that inserting the errors would impair the operation of ADEX, it is extremely unlikely that this would establish the materiality of the errors. Grumman does not allege that any of the errors, if discovered, would have led the Copyright Office to refuse registration of DG's copyright claims. Nor does Grumman contend that the Copyright Office would have been unable to use [1397] the correct portions of the deposits to identify [46] the works DG intended to register or make a preliminary determination concerning the copyrightability of those works.²⁹ In contrast, DG produced evidence that production of the requested material would be an extremely cumbersome process, a point Grumman does not contest. We find no abuse of discretion in the district court's decision to deny Grumman's mid-trial discovery request.

[47] 2. Preemption of Trade Secrets Claim

Seeking to avoid the additional damages associated with the trade secrets remedies selected by DG, Grumman argues that the state claim is preempted by Section 301 of the Copyright Act, 17 U.S.C. § 301\(a\).

HN19 [Section 301(a)] precludes enforcement of any state cause of action which is equivalent in substance to a federal copyright infringement claim.³⁰ See generally Gates Rubber Co. v. Bando Chem. Indus., Ltd., 9 F.3d 823, 846-47 \(10th Cir. 1993\); Trandes Corp. v. Guy F. Atkinson Co., 996 F.2d 655, 658-60 (4th Cir.), cert. denied, 126 L. Ed. 2d 377, 114 S. Ct. 443 (1993); 1 [Nimmer § 1.01\[B\]\[h\]](#), at 1-35 to 1-36.1. Courts have developed a functional test to assess the question of equivalence. "If a state cause of action requires an extra element, beyond mere copying, preparation of derivative works, performance, distribution or display, then the state cause of action is qualitatively different from, and not subsumed within, a copyright infringement claim and federal law will not preempt the [48] state action." Gates Rubber, 9 F.3d at 847 (citing Computer Assocs. Int'l, Inc. v. Altai, Inc., 982 F.2d 693, 716 \(2nd Cir. 1992\)).

²⁸ In its brief, DG states that "Data General collected and provided to Grumman copies of the entire source code of all of the sub-programs that were, or should have been, filed in the Copyright Office for each of the relevant revisions of MV/ADEX." Grumman does not challenge this assertion.

²⁹ If a showing of prejudice is necessary to enable a defendant to use a registration error as a defense to an infringement action, see supra note 24, Grumman has failed in this respect as well because Grumman has not shown that it was misled as to the copyrightability of ADEX Revisions 0.0 to 2.0. It appears that Grumman has always acted in a manner consistent with the belief that each revision of ADEX contains copyrightable elements. In these proceedings, moreover, Grumman has never seriously argued that the first three versions of ADEX are entirely devoid of original computer code, and has consistently admitted that it made identical copies of the entire contents of each version of ADEX at issue in this action. Accordingly, we are unable to see why Grumman was disadvantaged by bearing the burden of proving that there are no copyrightable elements in the first three versions of ADEX, a task even Grumman seems to have forsaken.

³⁰ In pertinent part, Section 301\(a\) provides that "all HN20 legal or equitable rights that are equivalent to any of the exclusive rights within the general scope of copyright . . . are governed exclusively by this title. No person is entitled to any such right or equivalent right in any such work under the common law or statutes of any State."

HN21[] Not every "extra element" of a state claim will establish a qualitative variance between the rights protected by federal copyright law and those protected by state law. For example, a state claim of tortious interference with contractual relations may require [*1165] elements of awareness and intentional interference not necessary for proof of copyright infringement. And yet, such an action is equivalent in substance to a copyright infringement claim where the additional elements merely concern *49 the extent to which authors and their licensees can prohibit unauthorized copying by third parties. Harper & Row, Publishers, Inc. v. Nation Enters., 723 F.2d 195, 201 (2d Cir. 1983), rev'd on other grounds, 471 U.S. 539, 85 L. Ed. 2d 588, 105 S. Ct. 2218 (1985). Similarly, HN22[] a state law misappropriation claim will not escape preemption under Section 301(a) simply because a plaintiff must prove that copying was not only unauthorized but also "commercially immoral[,]" a mere "label attached to [the same] odious business conduct." Mayer v. Josiah Wedgwood & Sons, Ltd., 601 F. Supp. 1523, 1535 (S.D.N.Y. 1985). Nonetheless, a trade secrets claim that requires proof of a breach of a duty of confidentiality stands on a different footing. Such claims are not preempted because participation in the breach of a duty of confidentiality -- an element that forms no part of a copyright infringement claim -- represents unfair competitive conduct qualitatively different from mere unauthorized copying. See Gates Rubber, 9 F.3d at 847-48; *50 Trandex Corp., 996 F.2d at 660; Computer Associates, 982 F.2d at 717; S.O.S., Inc. v. Payday, Inc., 886 F.2d 1081, 1090 n.13 (9th Cir. 1989).³¹

1398 DG's trade secrets claim fits comfortably within this category. HN23[] To demonstrate misappropriation of trade secrets under Massachusetts law, DG must *51 prove that "(1) MV/ADEX is a trade secret; (2) Data General took reasonable steps to preserve the secrecy of MV/ADEX; and (3) Grumman used improper means, in breach of a confidential relationship, to acquire and use the trade secret." Grumman VI, 825 F. Supp. at 357 (citing, inter alia, J.T. Healy & Son, Inc. v. James A. Murphy & Son, Inc., 357 Mass. 728, 260 N.E.2d 723, 729-31 (Mass. 1970)). The district court instructed the jury that "wrongful acquisition" is an element of a Massachusetts trade secrets claim, and that "acquisition of a trade secret is wrongful . . . if it is by theft of property known to belong to another, or by knowing participation in the breach of an express or implied confidentiality agreement by, for instance, a former employee or customer of Data General." (Emphasis added.) Grumman does not assign error to this portion of the charge, which thus becomes the law of the case. See United States v. Connell, 6 F.3d 27, 30 (1st Cir. 1993) (explaining that unchallenged legal decisions are ordinarily unassailable at later stages in litigation). *52 Furthermore, DG's theory was precisely that Grumman acquired ADEX by participating in the breach of confidentiality agreements binding on former employees and service customers of DG.³² Because the Copyright Act does not prevent the states from imposing liability for such conduct, the district court was correct to spare DG's trade secrets claim from preemption under Section 301(a).

3. 1976 Settlement Agreement Defense

Grumman denies its liability for copyright infringement and misappropriation of trade secrets, arguing that the Settlement Agreement contains a license allowing Grumman to copy and use ADEX in the maintenance and repair of DG computers. The district court granted DG's motion for partial summary judgment on this issue, and Grumman now appeals that decision on two alternative grounds: (1) the Settlement Agreement unambiguously grants Grumman a license to use ADEX; or (2) the Settlement Agreement is at least ambiguous, and conflicting *53 extrinsic evidence about the scope of the license presents a factual dispute worthy of resolution by a jury.

1166] a. Maryland Contract Law

³¹ Grumman insists that acquisition of copyrightable software in violation of confidentiality agreements is equivalent to unauthorized copying where, as appears to be the case here, the defendant does not actually learn the trade secrets embodied in the software. The qualitative difference between unauthorized copying and such acts as the discovery of wrongfully acquired trade secrets and the illegal use of that knowledge may be more striking than the difference between unauthorized copying and mere participation in the breach of a confidentiality agreement. But we cannot agree that the latter relationship is one of equivalence.

³² The relevant contract language appears infra, note 37.

The parties agree that the Settlement Agreement, executed in Maryland, is governed by Maryland contract law. HN24²⁴ Maryland courts do not follow the subjective theory of contracts, which aims to discover the actual intent of the parties even at the expense of unambiguous language to the contrary. See Hershon v. Gibraltar Bldg. & Loan Ass'n, 275 U.S. App. D.C. 26, 864 F.2d 848, 851 (D.C. Cir. 1989) (applying Maryland law). Instead, Maryland subscribes to the objective approach. See id. Under that approach, a court may consider extrinsic evidence only in determining whether contract language is ambiguous. See 864 F.2d at 852. However, as long as the result is objectively reasonable, a court may not use extrinsic evidence "to interpret facially explicit contractual terms." Id. at 851-52. See also General Motors Acceptance Corp. v. Daniels, 303 Md. 254, 492 A.2d 1306, 1310 (Md. 1985).

HN25²⁵ Where contract terms are ambiguous, a court may look to [54] extrinsic evidence in order to ascertain the intention of the parties and, if successful, interpret the contract as a matter of law. See Collier v. MD-Individual Practice Ass'n, 327 Md. 1, 607 A.2d 537, 541 (Md. 1992); Truck Ins. Exch. v. Marks Rentals, Inc., 288 Md. 428, 418 A.2d 1187, 1190 (Md. 1980). If, after such examination, the meaning of the ambiguous terms remains in genuine dispute, and the dispute is material to the outcome of the claim or defense at issue, the ambiguity must be resolved by the trier of fact. See id.; Monumental Life Ins. Co. v. United States Fidelity & Guar. Co., 94 Md. App. 505, 617 A.2d 1163, 1174 (Md. Ct. Spec. App.) ("Only when there is a bona fide ambiguity in the contract's language or legitimate doubt as to its application under the circumstances is the contract submitted to the trier of the fact for interpretation."), cert. denied, 330 Md. 319, 624 A.2d 491 (Md. 1993).³³

[*1399] [55] b. Areas of Agreement

In order to focus our analysis of DG's entitlement to summary judgment, we first determine the reach of Grumman's contentions in light of the existing areas of agreement.

In the first place, the parties agree that the existence and scope of a license turn on the interpretation of the "maintenance or repair" exception to the general prohibition of paragraph four of the Settlement Agreement, which provides that Grumman's predecessor "will not, directly or indirectly, copy or utilize 'Proprietary Information' of DG for the design or manufacture of computers or any other purpose."³⁴ In addition, DG admits that the Settlement Agreement gives Grumman a right to use some of DG's proprietary information for some purposes. Although DG denies that the Settlement Agreement allows Grumman to use ADEX itself, DG nonetheless admitted in its answers to Grumman's request for admissions "that, as part of the settlement of the CSSC litigation, Data General agreed that CSSC could use Data General proprietary information that was defined in the Agreement and the nature of which was then understood by [*1167] and agreed to by the parties, to maintain or repair Data General computers." [56] While the Settlement Agreement does not bear many of the traits of a traditional licensing agreement, it does grant some permission to use DG's intellectual property, at least in certain circumstances, and ³³ Grumman asserts that any ambiguity must be interpreted against DG as the drafter of the Settlement Agreement. However, HN26²⁶ because the Settlement Agreement is the product of negotiations by sophisticated parties represented by counsel, this "secondary rule of construction . . . perhaps should have but slight force." Acme Markets, Inc. v. Dawson Enters., 253 Md. 76, 251 A.2d 839, 847 (Md. 1969) (quoting Rossi v. Douglas, 203 Md. 190, 100 A.2d 3, 6 (Md. 1953)). In any event, this interpretive presumption has no application where, as here, the record contains extrinsic evidence sufficient to discover the intention of the parties to the Settlement Agreement. See Pacific Indem. Co. v. Interstate Fire & Casualty Co., 302 Md. 383, 488 A.2d 486, 497 (Md. 1985); St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Pryserski, 292 Md. 187, 438 A.2d 282, 288 (Md. 1981).

³⁴ In its entirety, paragraph four reads as follows:

4. Defendants [CSSC, Lloyd Root, and Robert Montgomery] agree, jointly and severally, that they will not, directly or indirectly, copy or utilize "Proprietary Information" of DGC for the design or manufacture of computers or any other purpose except [i] maintenance or repair of DGC equipment, [ii] installation and integration of equipment manufactured or sold by companies other than DGC, or [iii] other purposes permitted by any proprietary or confidentiality legends accompanying or made part of any data or documentation comprising Proprietary Information. "Proprietary Information" of DGC shall mean data and documentation which is marked confidential or proprietary to DGC by appropriate legend.

therefore creates some type of "license."³⁵ [57] Consequently, Grumman's defense turns on the scope of the license.³⁶

Also worthy of note are undisputed facts concerning the nature of Grumman's acquisition and use of ADEX. Grumman did not simply gain access to copies of ADEX left at the sites of former DG service customers solely for the purpose of using on-site maintenance tools to service computers at that site. Rather, Grumman acquired copies of ADEX from former service customers in an effort to expand its own library of MV diagnostic software, which [58] Grumman technicians freely copied and used in servicing the computers of any Grumman customer with MV equipment. Moreover, there is no evidence that Grumman acquired ADEX from equipment owners at a time when those equipment owners were also customers of DG. Nor is there evidence that Grumman acquired ADEX directly from DG, or from current or former CMO customers. In addition, the record reveals that DG service customers were contractually bound both to prevent ADEX from falling into the hands of third parties such as TPMs and to return copies of ADEX to DG after the termination of the relevant service agreement.³⁷ Thus, Grumman acquired ADEX from those customers who no longer had lawful possession [1400] of the program and had no right to transfer it.³⁸

[59] The question we must resolve is whether the "maintenance or repair" exception authorized Grumman both to gain access to and acquire copies of ADEX in the possession of former DG service customers despite the fact that these customers had agreed not only to prevent such third-party access but also to return copies of ADEX to DG after the termination of their service contract.

d. Scope of the License

The plain language of the Settlement Agreement does not answer our question. Despite the fact that the exception anticipates that Grumman will "copy or utilize" DG proprietary information for the "maintenance and repair of DGC equipment," the Settlement Agreement does not specify whether it merely refers to Grumman's right to gain access to maintenance tools it finds at a customer site (including the routine copying and use inherent in the operation of a computer program), or whether the exception somehow allows Grumman to acquire such tools for the service of DG computers at other sites. Similarly, the Settlement Agreement [*1168] contains no prescription for resolving potential conflicts between the "maintenance or repair" exception and provisions in DG's Service Agreement prohibiting [60] third-party access during the term of the Agreement and retention of DG proprietary information thereafter. Accordingly, we turn to the extrinsic evidence in the record in an attempt to resolve the ambiguity.

³⁵ Because neither party has offered a legal definition of a license, we will regard the term as carrying its usual definition: HN27 [↑] permission to use the property of another. Black's Law Dictionary 829-30 (5th ed. 1979). A license can be general, with few or no restrictions, or quite limited. The use of the word "license" in a contract is clearly evidence of an intent to permit use, but the absence of the word is not dispositive, as long as other contract language grants some permission to use. Cf. 3 [Nimmer § 10.03\[A\]](#), at 10-38 (explaining that "[a] nonexclusive license may be granted orally, or may even be implied from conduct") (footnotes omitted).

³⁶ DG argues that the Settlement Agreement was not intended to apply to proprietary information created by DG after settlement of the 1975 lawsuit. We cannot agree. The language "'Proprietary Information' of DGC" strikes us as unambiguous, and unqualifiedly embraces all DG proprietary information, whether in existence in 1976 or not. However, even if the phrase were ambiguous, an examination of the extrinsic evidence reveals that DG would still not be entitled to summary judgment on this basis because there is extrinsic evidence that would allow a reasonable jury to find that the Settlement Agreement was intended to apply to information in the future.

³⁷ For example, in one version of DG's On-Call Service Agreement, service customers agreed "NOT TO DISCLOSE OR MAKE AVAILABLE TO ANY THIRD PARTY THE PROPRIETARY ITEMS [installed at customer locations by DG;] AND . . . TO RETURN ALL THE PROPRIETARY ITEMS TO [DG] UPON EXPIRATION OR CANCELLATION/TERMINATION OF THIS AGREEMENT."

³⁸ Grumman also acquired copies of ADEX from former DG employees who brought copies of the program with them, in violation of their employment agreements. Grumman does not maintain that the Settlement Agreement gives it the right to duplicate and use copies of ADEX acquired in this manner.

Even when viewed in a light most favorable to Grumman, the record evidence makes clear that the parties to the Settlement Agreement intended the "maintenance and repair" exception to function as what we shall call a "third-party access agreement," allowing CSSC, Grumman's predecessor in interest, to gain access to proprietary information that DG sold, licensed, or otherwise entrusted to owners of DG equipment. For example, when called to testify in the STI litigation, Edward Canfield, CSSC's attorney at the time, used these words to describe his contemporary understanding of the "maintenance and repair" exception: "If the customer had it, [CSSC] had a right to use it." ³⁹ In addition, the language of DG licensing agreements in the 1970s as well as the pleadings in the 1975 litigation strongly corroborate the view that the settlement negotiations primarily concerned CSSC's right to use proprietary information in the hands of DG equipment owners. As late as 1976, DG licensed [61] proprietary maintenance information to equipment owners under an agreement which specifically allowed licensees to grant access to third parties "on LICENSEE's premises with LICENSEE's permission for purposes specifically related to LICENSEE's use of the Licensed Program." Moreover, in its 1975 counterclaim, CSSC intimated that DG had begun to undermine the ability of TPMs to gain access to maintenance information in the hands of equipment owners, alleging that DG had attempted "to prevent owners of DGC Mini-computers from having their equipment serviced and maintained by any competitor of DGC . . . by restricting the use those owners make of their owner maintenance information."

There is also specific evidence that the parties to the Settlement Agreement were not negotiating about the ongoing transfer of proprietary information directly from DG to CSSC. For example, during the STI/[62] trial, counsel for DG asked Canfield whether, under the Settlement Agreement, DG had an "obligation to give [CSSC] something." "No sir," replied Canfield, "Data General was not offering to give us anything."

The nature of the "maintenance and repair" exception as a third-party access agreement has several ramifications. As a provision designed to ensure access to Grumman, the exception was arguably intended to override contrary restrictions in proprietary legends and confidentiality agreements. Indeed, there is evidence that this was the case. A letter to Canfield from Carl Kaplan, a lawyer who represented DG in the settlement negotiations, outlined the proposed settlement, stating that improper utilization of DG proprietary information "would be the use of that information other than as marked by DGC or without DGC's express written permission." (Emphasis added.) Kaplan added that "use of DGC proprietary information for the maintenance of DGC equipment would expressly be permitted the defendants." Id. In addition, Canfield's deposition testimony suggests that his primary concern was for DG to guarantee CSSC's [1401] right to use proprietary information distributed to DG equipment [63] owners, notwithstanding future restrictions on third-party access to such information. Thus, a jury could reasonably conclude that the Settlement Agreement allowed Grumman to gain access to information in the hands of DG equipment owners for the purpose of maintaining DG computers, even if equipment owners generally could not allow third parties access to DG proprietary information.

Characterizing the exception as a third-party access agreement also means that Grumman's right to use copies of ADEX in the possession of DG equipment owners is necessarily derivative of the rights of those equipment owners. As a consequence, [*1169] Grumman only has the right to operate a customer's copy of ADEX for the benefit of that customer; there is no basis for the proposition that Grumman can use its third-party access rights to acquire copies of ADEX for unlimited copying and use in the service of any MV computer. Indeed, this was the import of Canfield's testimony in STI. Referring to a CSSC customer as a "party," Canfield stated that he understood the Settlement Agreement to allow "[CSSC] to use whatever [was] on the party's equipment . . . for the repair and maintenance of that party's [64] equipment." (Emphasis added). ⁴⁰ Furthermore, to the extent that an equipment

³⁹ The district court accepted a transcript of Canfield's testimony in STI as part of the summary judgment record in this case.

⁴⁰ We note in passing that STI appeared to adopt Canfield's statement in the course of the STI trial. When Judge Motz characterized Canfield's testimony as stating that proprietary maintenance tools in the hands of CSSC's customers "were to be used . . . for the customer's own computers," counsel for STI responded, "I don't have a problem with that."

owner no longer has the right to possess copies of ADEX, as in the case of a former DG service customer, Grumman's rights as a third party are extinguished.⁴¹

[65] In summary, we conclude that the Settlement Agreement merely grants Grumman the right to gain access to copies of ADEX lawfully possessed by a DG equipment owner in order to service the computers of that particular equipment owner. Because Grumman's copying and use of ADEX does not fall within this category, the Settlement Agreement does not serve as a defense either to the infringement action or the trade secrets claims. The district court did not err in granting partial summary judgment for DG on Grumman's Settlement Agreement defense.

4. Misuse Defense

Grumman claims that DG is not entitled to enforce its copyrights or its rights under state trade secrets law because it has "misused" those property rights by engaging in anti-competitive behavior in violation of federal antitrust laws. DG argues that there is no "copyright misuse" defense to a federal copyright infringement claim and no applicable "unclean hands" defense to the state claim for misappropriation of trade secrets. Alternatively, DG argues that it did not violate the antitrust laws.

HN29 [+] A "copyright misuse" defense is not without legal support. In a carefully reasoned opinion, the Fourth Circuit recently approved [66] such a defense after noting that it has long been recognized in the analogous context of patent infringement. See Lasercomb America, Inc. v. Reynolds, 911 F.2d 970, 976 (4th Cir. 1990) ("Since copyright and patent law serve parallel public interests, a 'misuse' defense should apply to infringement actions brought to vindicate either right."); see also 3 Nimmer § 13.09[A], at 13-269 to 13-276 (collecting conflicting decisions of lower courts); Ramsey Hanna, Note, Misusing Antitrust: The Search for Functional Copyright Misuse Standards, 46 Stan. L. Rev. 361, 404-10 (1994) (charting the development of the copyright misuse defense). Although DG correctly notes that the misuse in Lasercomb (conditioning a copyright license on a noncompetition agreement) is not identical to the misuse alleged in this case (tying access [1402] to ADEX to the purchase of DG service and refusing to license ADEX to TPMs), the reasoning of Lasercomb does not turn on the particular type of anti-competitive behavior [*1170] alleged. DG also suggests that the policy rationale for a copyright misuse defense is weaker than in the case of patent misuse [67] because an exclusive right to express an idea in a particular way (a copyright) is a lesser threat to competition than an exclusive right to use the idea itself (a patent). We acknowledge that it is often more difficult to prove an antitrust violation when the claim rests on the questionable market power associated with a copyright, but that would not be a reason to prohibit a defendant from attempting to meet its burden of proof, and would be a poor reason to refrain entirely from recognizing a copyright misuse defense.

Nevertheless, this case does not require us to decide whether the federal copyright law permits a misuse defense. Nor need we determine whether Massachusetts recognizes an unclean hands defense to a claim for misappropriation of trade secrets. Grumman does not claim that DG misused its copyright or acted inequitably in any fashion other than through its alleged violations of the Sherman Act.⁴² [68] And, because we conclude infra, ⁴¹ Our conclusion that the "maintenance or repair" exception was intended to be a third-party access agreement also disposes of Grumman's assertion that the Settlement Agreement somehow obligates DG to distribute its proprietary maintenance information either to Grumman's customers or directly to Grumman. As explained above, the extrinsic evidence demonstrates that the Agreement concerns Grumman's right to gain access to proprietary information that DG distributes to equipment owners. Nowhere does the Agreement say that DG will distribute to Grumman proprietary information DG chooses to distribute only to its own field engineers. Further, it would be unreasonable to interpret the Agreement as providing for direct licensing of proprietary information on demand given that the Agreement did not even allow the individual parties to the Agreement (Root and Montgomery, both former DG employees) to retain or purchase any proprietary information they acquired during their employment with DG. And finally, HN28 [+] a mere agreement to agree to an unspecified future license would be unenforceable as a matter of contract law. See STI, 737 F. Supp. at 339 (citing First Nat'l Bank v. Burton, Parsons & Co., 57 Md. App. 437, 470 A.2d 822, 828 (Md. Ct. Spec. App.), cert. denied, 300 Md. 90, 475 A.2d 1201 (Md. 1984)).

Section III.B., that there is insufficient evidence to justify a trial on either of Grumman's antitrust counterclaims, Grumman's misuse and unclean hands defenses are equally devoid of merit.⁴³

[69] 5. Damages

Grumman's principal assault on the jury's award of $ 27,417,000 in damages (DG's lost profits and Grumman's nonduplicative profits) is that the district court failed to give the jury adequate guidance to find the necessary causal connection between Grumman's infringement and DG's damages. Because the calculus of causation is partly a function of the particular theory of damages advanced by the plaintiff, we divide our discussion accordingly.

a. Actual Damages

HN32 [↑] A successful plaintiff in an infringement action is entitled to "actual damages suffered by [it] as result of the infringement." 17 U.S.C. § 504\(b\). Actual damages are generally calculated with reference to the loss in the fair market value of the copyright, often measured by the profits lost as a result of the infringement. See, e.g., Eales v. Envtl. Lifestyles, Inc., 958 F.2d 876, 880 (9th Cir.), cert. denied, 113 S. Ct. 605 (1992); see generally 3 Nimmer § 14.02[A], at 14-8 to 14-9.

HN33 [↑] The plaintiff bears the burden of proving that the infringement was the cause of its loss of revenue. [70] See Harper & Row, Publishers, Inc. v. Nation Enters., 471 U.S. 539, 567, 85 L. Ed. 2d 588, 105 S. Ct. 2218 (1985); Frank Music Corp. v. MGM, Inc., 772 F.2d 505, 514 n.8 (9th Cir. 1985) (citing Shapiro, Bernstein & Co. v. 4636 S. Vermont Ave., Inc., 367 F.2d 236, 241 (9th Cir. 1966)). In defining that burden, it is useful to borrow familiar tort law principles of causation and damages. See Deltak, Inc. v. Advanced Sys., Inc., 574 F. Supp. 400, 403 (N.D. Ill. 1983) [*1171] (Posner, J., sitting by designation) (referring to "normal tort damages principles" in discussion of copyright damages), vacated on other grounds, 767 F.2d 357 (7th Cir. 1985); 3 Nimmer § 14.02[A], at 14-11, 14-20 to 14-21 n.49.8 (alluding to notions of "but for" and proximate causation). Thus, HN34 [↑] the plaintiff should first establish that the infringement was the cause-in-fact of its loss by showing with reasonable [1403] probability that, but for the defendant's infringement, the plaintiff would not have suffered the loss. See [71] , e.g., Robert R. Jones Assocs. v. Nino Homes, 858 F.2d 274, 281 (6th Cir. 1988); 3 Nimmer, § 14.02[A], at 14-9; cf. Harper & Row, 471 U.S. at 567 (noting that in rebuttal defendant may "show that this damage would have occurred [anyway] had there been no taking of copyrighted expression"); Aro Mfg. Co. v. Convertible Top Replacement Co., 377 U.S. 476, 507, 12 L. Ed. 2d 457, 84 S. Ct. 1526 (1964) (noting that actual damages in patent infringement case are based on "what [the patent holder's] condition would have been if the infringement had not occurred") (citation and internal quotation marks omitted). The plaintiff must also prove that the infringement was a proximate cause of its loss by demonstrating that the existence and amount of the loss was a natural and probable consequence of the infringement. See Big Seven Music Corp. v. Lennon, 554 F.2d 504, 509 (2d Cir. 1977) ("HN35")⁴⁴ Damages may be recovered only if there is a necessary, immediate and direct causal connection between the wrongdoing [72] and the damages."). A plaintiff may seek compensation for both direct and "indirect" losses, as long as the losses claimed are not unduly speculative. See Business Trends Analysts, Inc. v. Freedonia Group, Inc., 887 F.2d 399, 404 (2d Cir. 1989) (recognizing possibility of recovery for loss of "enhanced good will" and "market recognition"); Abeshouse v. Ultragraphics, Inc., 754 F.2d 467, 471 (2d Cir. 1985) (ruling that claimed harm to "reputation" and "marketability" of copyrighted poster was "too speculative to support any award of actual damages"); Sunset Lamp Corp. v. Alsip Corp., 749 F. Supp. 520, 524-25 (S.D.N.Y. 1990) (recognizing possibility of recovery for lost sales of noninfringed items); 3 Nimmer § 14.02[A], at 14-11 to 14-21. At the same time, the plaintiff need not prove its loss of revenue with mathematical precision. See, e.g., Stevens Linen Assocs. v. Mastercraft Corp., 656 F.2d 11, 14 (2d Cir. 1981) ("In establishing lost sales due to sales of an infringing product, courts must necessarily engage in some degree of speculation.").

⁴² Note that the Lasercomb court held that HN30 [↑] a copyright misuse defense does not require proof of an antitrust violation, only proof that "the copyright is being used in a manner violative of the public policy embodied in the grant of a copyright." 911 F.2d at 978.

⁴³ Even if Grumman's antitrust counterclaims could survive summary judgment, Grumman would not necessarily have the privilege of interposing its counterclaims as defenses. Lasercomb explains that HN31 [↑] copyright misuse and its ancestor, patent misuse, are equitable defenses. See 911 F.2d at 976-77. If copyright misuse is an equitable defense, a defendant that has itself acted inequitably may not be entitled to raise such a defense. Cf. 3 Nimmer § 13.09[B], at 13-278 to 13-279 (noting the possible propriety of denying a defense of unclean hands "when the defendant has been guilty of conduct more unconscionable and unworthy than the plaintiff's"). Mere infringement may not be inequitable in this context because a misuse defense would appear to sanction at least some infringement as a necessary measure of self-help. But violation of a valid injunction against further infringement issued pursuant to a court's equitable powers would constitute blatantly inequitable behavior. Here, the jury specifically found that Grumman violated the district court's 1988 injunction against the use of ADEX. Grumman does not appeal that finding. Accordingly, while Grumman may be free to pursue antitrust counterclaims, cf. Perma Life Mufflers, Inc. v. International Parts Corp., 392 U.S. 134, 138-40, 20 L. Ed. 2d 982, 88 S. Ct. 1981 (1968) (holding that doctrine of in pari delicto is not a defense to an antitrust suit), it would not necessarily be entitled to raise a defense of copyright misuse predicated on antitrust violations.

[73] DG argued at trial that ADEX capability was essential both to service MV computers and attract customers, and therefore nearly all of Grumman's MV customers would have remained with DG (or would have switched back to DG) had Grumman not touted its possession and use of ADEX. In opposition, Grumman introduced evidence that ADEX was of little use to Grumman's field engineers and only a minor factor in consumer's selection of a service vendor. In effect, Grumman argued that, even without ADEX, customers would have switched to (or remained with) Grumman in order to take advantage of its lower prices and allegedly higher-quality service.

In its objections to the jury charge, Grumman expressed concerns about the court's instructions on causation in the lost profits context. Grumman asked the court to instruct the jury that it was free to consider whether factors other than Grumman's infringement enabled Grumman to win customers from DG. On appeal, Grumman continues to challenge the adequacy of the district court's instructions on causation, and raises several questions about the sufficiency of the evidence.

(1) Jury Instructions

The district court's charge, relevant portions of which [74] are set forth in the margin, invited the jury to consider the "diverse factors" that make up a customer's choice of a service organization, and properly allowed the jury to consider whether the majority of MV equipment owners would have turned to DG for service had Grumman not possessed and used ADEX.⁴⁴ [75] The instructions also introduced [*1172] the jury to the concept of proximate cause. The charge not only mentioned the concept by name but also gave it content by explaining, among other things, that the plaintiff "bears the burden of proving its damages to a reasonable degree of certainty," may not be compensated for "purely speculative" damages, and is entitled only to "reasonable" damages. We conclude that the charge adequately equipped the jury to determine whether or not DG had established the requisite causal link between Grumman's infringement and the profits DG claimed to have lost.⁴⁵

⁴⁴ In its charge, the district court stated:

If you conclude that Grumman would not have been in the business of servicing MV computers but for its possession and use of MV/ADEX, or that some or all of Grumman's customers would not have hired Grumman to maintain or repair their computers if Grumman had not infringed Data General's copyrights, then you should consider what percentage of those customers would have done business with Data General instead.

You may take into account all the diverse factors which . . . might bear on the determination, including price, customer loyalty and level of customer satisfaction.

⁴⁵ Grumman's other challenges to the jury instructions are either meritless or moot. First, Grumman claims that an apportionment instruction (the subject of the following section) would have affected the outcome of the lost profits analysis. As we explained above, however, the district court's instructions enabled the jury to make findings about the relative role of infringing and noninfringing factors in customers' selection of Grumman over DG. Further examination of the value added by Grumman to its own products would have been unnecessary. Second, Grumman contends that it was impermissible for DG to calculate its lost profits based on its monopoly prices. This argument is untimely because Grumman did not raise this issue in its objections to the jury instructions. In any event, Grumman has not established that DG's exploitation of its monopoly is unlawful, infra, Section

[1404] [76] (2) Sufficiency of the Evidence

Grumman's challenge to the evidentiary basis for the jury's award of actual damages is less developed and equally unavailing. HN36⁴⁵ Upsetting a jury's damage award is a daunting task for any appellant, for we must draw all reasonable inferences in favor of the verdict, upholding the award if it derives from "any rational appraisal or estimate of the damages that could be based on the evidence before the jury." Anthony v. G.M.D. Airline Servs., 17 F.3d 490, 493 \(1st Cir. 1994\) (citations and internal quotation marks omitted). The likelihood of a victorious appeal is especially remote in the absence of rigorous argumentation. Cf. Chakrabarti v. Cohen, 31 F.3d 1 \(1st Cir. 1994\), [Nos. 92-1987 and 92-1988, slip op. at 8] (suggesting that, when challenging the sufficiency of the evidence, a defendant-appellant must make a "serious effort . . . to analyze the evidence taking it in the light most favorable to [the plaintiff] and resolving credibility issues in [the plaintiff's] favor"). Moreover, the calculation of lost profits will always involve "some degree of speculation." Stevens Linen Assocs., 656 F.2d at 14. [77] As a result, we rely on the appellant to specify with some precision the manner in which unduly speculative reasoning is likely to have infected the jury's verdict.

Grumman raises several specific concerns. First, Grumman complains that the jury had no basis to conclude that Grumman would not be in the MV business because DG's damage expert, Alan Friedman, did not consider the relative infrequency of Grumman's use of ADEX, or the value Grumman added to its product through "substantially lower prices, superior service and higher level of customer satisfaction." Grumman's ultimate concern is that "no attempt at apportionment was made." But Friedman did not set out to show that there was nothing attractive about Grumman service apart from its possession and use of ADEX. Instead, he reported -- and the jury apparently believed -- that, for most owners of MV equipment, ADEX capability was the critical attribute in a service vendor. As a result, Friedman concluded, ADEX capability was the sine qua non of Grumman's success in its chosen niche as a national vendor of MV service. Drawing all reasonable inferences in favor of DG, we [*1173] conclude that a reasonable jury was free to agree.

[78] Grumman also argues that the jury must have improperly followed Friedman's lead in adding to the lost profits figure all of the service and hardware needs of Grumman's MV customers that DG was capable of filling. Grumman notes that Friedman based his testimony on evidence that customers prefer to have a single vendor of service, but claims that this evidence deserves little weight because "customers that had gone to [Grumman] had already demonstrated their particular price/service sensitivity." Viewed in a light most favorable to the verdict, however, the record evidence adequately supports the inference that Friedman invited the jury to draw. For example, while MV equipment owners may have switched to Grumman in search of lower prices and better service, the evidence suggests that none of them had to give up a preference for single sourcing to do so. Indeed, the evidence suggests that Grumman's drawing power was due in part to its ability to be a single source of service, particularly for customers with multiple brands of computer equipment. Nor did Grumman attempt to rebut Friedman's view with evidence of MV equipment owners who sacrificed their preference for single sourcing in [79] certain circumstances.⁴⁶ [80] More [1405] importantly, Friedman did not presume that customers

III.B.2., and has not provided any authority for the proposition that actual damages cannot be based on the loss of lawful monopoly profits. Third, Grumman suggests that the damage award was inflated because the jury was improperly forbidden from considering the extent to which the 1976 Settlement Agreement authorized Grumman's use of ADEX. However, as illustrated supra, Section III.A.3., Grumman did not present trialworthy evidence that the Settlement Agreement authorized the acquisition and use of ADEX in any meaningful sense.

⁴⁶ Such rebuttal evidence, if it existed, should have been easily within Grumman's reach. For example, the evidence suggests that purchasers of DG equipment generally used DG service in the initial warranty period. Thus, owners of DG equipment might periodically upgrade a portion of their equipment, and therefore there would be times when one owner will have some newly upgraded equipment still under warranty and some older equipment no longer under warranty. Grumman could readily have introduced evidence that some of these equipment owners ignored their single-vendor preference by turning to a TPM for service of equipment not under warranty. Similarly, it would not have been difficult for Grumman to discredit Friedman's opinion by showing that DG had a significant number of price-conscious service customers who regularly turned to other vendors when purchasing new equipment, or that customers who purchased DG service on a "time and materials" basis often used TPMs as well.

would be entirely insensitive to issues of price and quality. In calculating DG's lost profits, he reduced the figure by an estimate of the business DG would itself have lost to competition from TPMs.⁴⁷ Finally, we note that DG did not seek compensation for a loss in "goodwill" or "market recognition" that was difficult to ascertain, cf. Business Trends, 887 F.2d at 404, but rather for the loss of a reasonably verifiable number of customers with a limited and predictable set of service needs and a demonstrated tendency to satisfy those needs by turning to a single vendor. In short, the evidence does not suggest that the jury's award of actual damages falls outside the "wide range of arguable appropriateness." Toucet v. Maritime Overseas Corp., 991 F.2d 5, 11 (1st Cir. 1993) (quoting Wagenmann v. Adams, 829 F.2d 196, 216 (1st Cir. 1987)).

b. Infringer's Profits

HN37[] In addition to actual damages, a copyright plaintiff may also recover the infringer's nonduplicative profits, i.e., "any profits of the infringer that are attributable to the infringement and are not taken into account in computing the actual damages." 17 U.S.C. § 504\(b\). In the context of infringer's profits, the plaintiff must meet only a minimal burden of proof in order to trigger a rebuttable presumption that the defendant's revenues are entirely attributable to the infringement; the burden then shifts to the defendant to demonstrate what portion of its revenues represent profits, and what portion of its profits are not traceable to the infringement. See id.; Frank Music, 772 F.2d at 514; Cream Records, Inc. v. Jos. Schlitz Brewing Co., 754 F.2d 826, 828 (9th Cir. 1985). Specifically, Section 504\(b\) provides: [81]

HN38[] In establishing the infringer's profits, the copyright owner is required to present proof only of the infringer's gross revenue, and the infringer is required to prove his or her deductible expenses and the elements [*1174] of profit attributable to factors other than the copyrighted work.⁴⁸

[82] DG introduced evidence that, of Grumman's gross revenue from MV-related business during the period 1984 to 1990, $ 5.4 million consisted of business eliminated from the calculation of DG's lost profits. Although no further proof was required, DG accepted Grumman's estimates of its profit margin, and concluded that Grumman's nonduplicative profits amounted to approximately $ 1.6 million.⁴⁹ Anticipating Grumman's attempt to prove the need for apportionment, DG also argued that, without ADEX, Grumman would not have been in the MV service business on a national scale, and that therefore Grumman would not have earned the remainder of its MV-related profits. In other words, DG's theory was that because ADEX capability was generally essential to attract customers with MV computers, few such [1406] customers would have chosen Grumman as a service vendor, causing Grumman to leave (or perhaps never enter) the national market for service of MV-related equipment. Thus,

⁴⁷ In estimating this "volume loss," Friedman assumed that, without ADEX, Grumman would not have been among the TPMs competing for MV-related business.

⁴⁸ Contrary to DG's unsupported assertions, HN39[] a defendant in a Massachusetts trade secrets action appears to have the same right to ask for apportionment along with the same burden of proof. Citing 17 U.S.C. § 504\(b\) as persuasive authority, the Massachusetts Supreme Judicial Court has set forth the following rule for apportionment in trade secrets cases:

Once a plaintiff demonstrates that a defendant made a profit from the sale of products produced by improper use of a trade secret, the burden shifts to the defendant to demonstrate those costs properly to be offset against its profit and the portion of its profit attributable to factors other than the trade secret.

USM Corp. v. Marson Fastener Corp., 392 Mass. 334, 467 N.E.2d 1271, 1276 \(Mass. 1984\). See also Jet Spray Cooler, Inc. v. Crampton, 377 Mass. 159, 385 N.E.2d 1349, 1358-59 n.14 \(Mass. 1979\) (citing, inter alia, Sheldon v. Metro-Goldwyn Pictures Corp., 106 F.2d 45, 48 \(2d Cir. 1939\), aff'd, 309 U.S. 390, 84 L. Ed. 825, 60 S. Ct. 681 \(1940\)).

⁴⁹ This amount included DG's estimated "volume loss" and "excluded revenue." "Volume loss" represents the MV-related business that DG would have lost in competition with TPMs even if DG had been the only service vendor with ADEX capability. "Excluded revenue" represents the MV-related business that DG did not have the capacity or the desire to seek, such as service contracts for certain systems with at least one non-DG CPU or service contracts for certain non-DG peripheral equipment attached to DG CPUs.

according to DG, Grumman's nonduplicative profits were the indirect result of consumer choices distorted by Grumman's infringement.

[83] It is unclear whether Grumman contested DG's theory on the merits, although Grumman did introduce some expert testimony that owners of MV equipment were relatively indifferent to the ADEX issue in their choice of service vendors. As amplified by its arguments on appeal, however, Grumman's primary strategy was to invite the jury to take Grumman's infringement as a given, and focus instead on why its customers were willing to pay for Grumman service. Grumman argued that factors other than its possession and use of ADEX contributed to its customers' willingness to pay, and that it was entitled to retain a corresponding share of the resulting profits. Grumman introduced some evidence tending to show that its customers attached high value to the price and quality of Grumman service, as well as Grumman's ability to service non-DG equipment in a mixed-equipment system.

Recognizing that DG's "but for" theory focused on a different aspect of consumer behavior than Grumman's "contributing factors" theory, Grumman argued below that the court's instructions should leave the jury free to adopt either line of reasoning. Grumman's suggested method of doing so was for the court to instruct the [84] jury on the concept of apportionment of infringer's profits set forth in Section 504\(b\). The district court agreed that the jury could adopt the approach best suited to the circumstances, but refused to give an explicit instruction on apportionment.

Assuming for the moment that Grumman was entitled to invite the jury to adopt its analytical framework, we do not believe that the court's instruction "properly apprised" the jury of the validity of such an approach. Joia v. Jo-Ja Serv. Corp., 817 F.2d 908, 912 (1st Cir. 1987), cert. denied, 484 U.S. 1008 (1988). Although the district court instructed the jury to include among infringer's profits only those revenues "attributable to the infringement," [*1175] at no point did the court fully reveal or explain the relatively difficult statutory concept of "elements of profit attributable to factors other than the copyrighted work." 17 U.S.C. § 504\(b\). As noted in the preceding section, the court did refer (at least in its instruction on actual damages) to "diverse factors" which might have influenced customers' choice of Grumman over DG, but the [85] court did not inform the jury that there may have been many reasons for customers' willingness to pay for Grumman service apart from the fact that Grumman possessed and used ADEX. Cf. Walker v. Forbes, Inc., 28 F.3d 409, 1994 WL 287173, at * 7 (4th Cir. 1994) (praising district court's "rich and detailed instructions . . . explaining . . . the correct apportionment of profit attributable to the infringement, [and] faithfully explaining the rules and procedures set out in the statute").

It is unclear why, if the district court chose to reject Grumman's proposed instruction, it did not simply read to the jury the language of Section 504\(b\). HN40 [↑] We may overlook its failure to do so only if there is no basis in law or fact for the application of Grumman's theory. See Joia, 817 F.2d at 912 (holding that "all parties are entitled to an adequate jury instruction upon the controlling issues"); cf. Allen v. Chance Mfg. Co., 873 F.2d 465, 470 (1st Cir. 1989) (holding that remand on basis of instructional error is required only if error "may have unfairly affected the jury's conclusions"). For the reasons set forth [86] below, we believe that Grumman's theory is firmly rooted in the law of copyright and the record of this case.

HN41 [↑] The defendant's burden under the apportionment provision of Section 504\(b\) is primarily to demonstrate the absence of a causal link between the infringement and all or part of the profits claimed by the plaintiff. See Walker, 1994 WL 287173, at * 3-4 (describing Section 504\(b\) as "a rule of causation"). Because the rebuttable presumption of causation represents a presumption as to both cause-in-fact and proximate cause, there are two avenues of attack available to a copyright defendant. First, the defendant can attempt to show that consumers would have purchased its product even without the infringing element. See, e.g., id. at * 4 (holding that district court properly allowed the defendant to show that an unauthorized reproduction of a photograph in an issue of its magazine had no causal relation to "amounts of revenue . . . committed to the issue sight unseen").⁵⁰ Alternatively, the defendant may show that the existence and amount of its profits are not the natural and probable [1407] consequences of the infringement alone, but are also the result of other factors [87] which either add intrinsic value to the product or have independent promotional value. See, e.g., Sheldon v. Metro-Goldwyn Pictures Corp., 309 U.S. 390, 407-08, 84 L. Ed. 825, 60 S. Ct. 681 \(1940\) (approving apportionment where profits of defendant's film were largely attributable not to the plaintiff's pirated story but rather to the "drawing power" of the star performers and the artistry of others involved in the creation of the film); Abend v. MCA, Inc., 863 F.2d 1465, 1480 \(9th Cir. 1988\) (remanding for apportionment where factors other than the underlying story -- particularly the talent and popularity of Alfred Hitchcock, Jimmy Stewart, and Grace Kelly -- "clearly contributed" to the success of the film "Rear Window"), aff'd on other grounds, 495 U.S. 207 \(1990\); Sygma Photo News, Inc. v. High Soc'y Magazine, Inc., 778 F.2d 89, 96 \(2d Cir. 1985\) (apportioning profits from sales of "Celebrity Skin" magazine where promotional cover contained not only infringing photograph of Raquel [88] Welch but also a list of other nude celebrity photographs contained within); Cream Records, 754 F.2d at 828-29 (upholding apportionment of profits from malt liquor sales apparently based on popularity of noninfringing product and promotional value of noninfringing elements of defendant's commercial); cf. USM Corp., 467 N.E.2d at 1277 (trade secrets; recognizing that apportionment would have been proper if defendant had demonstrated that factors such as "management skill" or "capital investment" [*1176] had contributed to the success of its product). Grumman apparently wished to tread the second path, and it was unquestionably entitled to do so.

⁵⁰ Note, however, that HN42 [↑] if the plaintiff cannot prove actual damages and the defendant shows that none of its gain is attributable to the infringement, the plaintiff would still be entitled to elect statutory damages. See 17 U.S.C. 504\(c\) \(1988\); see generally 3 Nimmer § 14.04, at 14-47 to 14-79.

[89] Grumman also suggests on appeal that the jury should have been instructed that it could not accept DG's theory on the apportionment issue because DG gave little or no weight to Grumman's contributions. But the only argument presented to the district court was that the court should add an instruction to inform the jury that it was permitted to apportion Grumman's profits. HN43[¹⁴] It is usually imprudent for a court of appeals to pass on an issue not presented to the district court in the first instance, and we decline to do so in these circumstances. See, e.g., Mariani v. Doctors Assocs., 983 F.2d 5, 8 n.4 \(1st Cir. 1993\) ("We have repeatedly warned that we will not entertain arguments made for the first time on appeal.") (citing FDIC v. World Univ., Inc., 978 F.2d 10, 13 \(1st Cir. 1992\)); United States v. Zannino, 895 F.2d 1, 17 \(1st Cir.\) ("[A] litigant has an obligation to spell out its arguments squarely and distinctly, or else forever hold its peace.") (citations and internal quotation marks omitted), cert. denied, 494 U.S. 1082, 108 L. Ed. 2d 944, 110 S. Ct. 1814 \(1990\). [90]

We are compelled to add, however, that an instruction on apportionment would not rob DG's theory of all possible meaning. In the first place, DG was free to argue that Grumman's infringement was a "but for" cause of Grumman's nonduplicative profits, even if the court should have explained to the jury that Grumman could still satisfy its burden by demonstrating the absence of proximate causation. In addition, DG was entitled to argue that Grumman's infringement should be viewed as the sole or overriding cause of Grumman's profits. Cf. Frank Music, 772 F.2d at 518 (noting that "no one element was the sole or overriding reason" for the success of defendant's infringing "Hallelujah Hollywood" stage show).

HN44[¹⁵] Moreover, although apportionment primarily depends on questions of causation, it is ultimately a delicate exercise informed by considerations of fairness and public policy, as well as fact. The doctrine of apportionment was "established upon equitable principles" in the analogous context of patent infringement. Sheldon, 309 U.S. at 401. And, in adopting the principle of apportionment for copyright [91] cases, the Court observed that "equity is concerned with making a fair apportionment so that neither party will have what justly belongs to the other." Id. at 408 (emphasis added). See also 3 Nimmer § 14.03[C], at 14-42 (noting that Copyright Act of 1976 "expressly adopted" the apportionment principle announced in Sheldon). HN45[¹⁶] In fact, the burden-shifting rule in Sheldon (and Section 504(b)) is itself an equitable response to an infringer who has frustrated the task of apportionment by co-mingling profits. See Sheldon, 309 U.S. at 401 ("The defendant, being responsible for the blending of the lawful with the unlawful, had to abide the consequences, as in the case of one who has wrongfully produced a confusion of goods.") (referring to Callaghan v. Myers, 128 U.S. 617, 32 L. Ed. 547, 9 S. Ct. 177 \(1888\)). Equitable factors may also affect the substance of the apportionment analysis. For example, where the plaintiff cannot prove actual damages and the defendant's profits are only from [92] the sale of a noninfringing product, the only way to prevent unjust enrichment may be to place more weight on the profit-generating effect of an infringing sales tool used to promote that product. See, e.g., Konor Enters. v. Eagle Publications, Inc., 878 F.2d 138, 140 \(4th Cir. 1989\) (suggesting [1408] that defendant may not be entitled to retain any of the profits from sale of advertising space where it is "plausible . . . that all profits were a direct result" of infringing marketing information distributed to potential advertisers).

Similarly, the policies underlying the Copyright Act may play some role in the apportionment of profits. For example, Sheldon and its progeny suggest that HN46⁵¹ apportionment is almost always available in the context of infringing derivative works, perhaps in part because original expression added by the infringer is itself entitled to copyright protection. Furthermore, where the plaintiff is seeking to vindicate its right to exclude others rather than its right to collect a licensing fee, see [17 U.S.C. § 106 \(1988 & \[*1177\] Supp. IV 1992\)](#) (describing rights of copyright owner), it may [\[*93\]](#) be more appropriate to view the infringement as an "overriding" cause of the defendant's profits. In such cases, rigid isolation of the value of the infringement to the defendant (which would approximate a "reasonable" licensing fee) would effectively condone a license the plaintiff never wished to grant. Lastly, we note that an unjust enrichment theory aims to strip the defendant of its ill-gotten gains, see, e.g., 3 [Nimmer § 14.01\[A\]](#), at 14-6, encourage compliance with the Copyright Act, see, e.g., Walker, 1994 WL 287173, at * 2 (noting that an award of infringer's profits "makes the infringer realize that it is cheaper to buy than to steal"), and perhaps "compensate" a plaintiff unable to prove actual damages, see Sheldon, 309 U.S. at 399 (describing the goal of an award of infringer's profits as "just compensation for the wrong"). Therefore, apportionment of infringer's profits may be particularly appropriate where a concurrent award of actual damages significantly serves all three purposes.⁵¹

[\[*94\]](#) In light of the discussion above, we hold that Grumman was entitled to an instruction on apportionment in order to allow the jury to determine whether and to what extent apportionment of its nonduplicative profits was reasonable under the circumstances of this case.

Whether a remand is necessary is a different question, but one readily resolved. Grumman clearly introduced evidence that would have permitted a jury to find that Grumman's customers were willing to pay for Grumman service for reasons beyond its possession and use of ADEX. Indeed, we believe that Grumman's evidence is sufficiently compelling that Grumman is entitled to some apportionment as a matter of law. Because the absence of an explicit instruction on apportionment "may have unfairly affected the jury's conclusions," Allen, 873 F.2d at 470, we remand the case to the district court for an appropriate resolution of the issue of apportionment of Grumman's nonduplicative profits.⁵²

⁵¹ Our discussion of equitable and policy considerations is intended to aid courts in apportioning profits when the parties submit the issue of infringer's profits to the court, see Sid & Marty Krofft Television Productions, Inc. v. McDonald's Corp., 562 F.2d 1157, 1175 \(9th Cir. 1977\) (noting that parties may stipulate to bench trial on issue of infringer's profits), and to provide some rational explanation for the discordant aspects of the case law on apportionment. While a court may instruct the jury that damages should be "reasonable" (as the court in this case did without objection from either party), we do not hold that a court may ask the jury itself to weigh matters of equity and public policy.

⁵² In order to avoid undue confusion and unnecessary proceedings, we add the following procedural notes to assist the district court in resolving the issue of apportionment of Grumman's nonduplicative profits.

Cognizant of our authority to take whatever action "may be just under the circumstances," 28 U.S.C. § 2106, we believe that remittitur would provide the most equitable and efficient means of remedying the error. The factual record was highly developed at trial on the issue of Grumman's profits, leaving a trail adequate to allow the district court to approximate the effect of the erroneous instruction on the jury's verdict. See 6A James Wm. Moore, et al., Moore's Federal Practice P 59.08[7], at 59-207 (2d ed. 1994) (explaining that if "the HN47⁵³ effect of [an erroneous instruction] can be reasonably approximated to a definite portion of the amount of the verdict, the appellate court may condition its affirmance on the plaintiff remitting that amount of the verdict which is apparently traceable to the error below"). Moreover, Grumman requested remittitur as an alternative remedy in its Rule 59 motion.

We are aware that the jury did not separately award actual damages and infringer's profits. Nevertheless, the verdict is relatively close to the amount DG requested and it is extremely unlikely that the jury would not have relied primarily on one or the other of the competing expert theories. DG requested $ 28,003,000 in damages, consisting of $ 26,364,000 in lost profits and $ 1,639,000 in nonduplicative profits. The jury awarded DG a total of $ 27,417,000 in damages -- $ 586,000 less than the requested amount. As a result, DG appears to have won infringer's profits of at least $ 1,053,000 ($ 27,417,000 - $ 26,364,000)

[1409] [95] [*1178] 6. Attorney's Fees

Because it appears that an award of attorney's fees has not been quantified, see Grumman VII, 825 F. Supp. at 370 (ordering DG to resubmit its application for attorney's fees), the merits of such an award are not before this court. Nonetheless, Grumman mounts a procedural attack that does appear to be ripe for review. Grumman claims that (1) DG "elected" the state trade secrets remedy over any remedy available under the Copyright Act, and (2) since attorney's fees are only available under the Copyright Act, and not state trade secrets law, DG is not entitled to any attorney's fees. Grumman is wrong in both respects. DG did not simply elect state law remedies. DG proposed a judgment form, wholly adopted by the district court, that included (1) the compensatory damages awarded by the jury,⁵³ (2) state law statutory damages, (3) state law prejudgment interest, and (4) federal law attorney's fees. Nor HN48 was DG required to forsake nonduplicative elements of the various federal and state law remedies. See Foley v. City of Lowell, 948 F.2d 10, 17 \(1st Cir. 1991\) (suggesting that, as long as the damages [96] are "segregated into federal and state components," plaintiff need not choose one body of law under which all damages will be paid); cf. Freeman v. Package Mach. Co., 865 F.2d 1331, 1343-45 \(1st Cir. 1988\) (holding that plaintiff may not receive award based on federal and state law so as to receive double recovery for same element of relief); Schroeder v. Lotito, 747 F.2d 801, 802 \(1st Cir. 1984\) (per curiam) (approving judgment for state law accounting of profits and federal law attorney's fees). Because DG has not requested a double award of attorney's fees, there was no error in the award of attorney's fees under federal law.

B. Grumman's Antitrust Counterclaims

The district court granted DG's motions for summary judgment with respect to Grumman's tying claim under Section 1 of the Sherman [97] Act as well as its monopolization claim under Section 2. We affirm both rulings, although on somewhat different grounds.

1. Illegal Tying

HN49 Section 1 of the Sherman Act prohibits a seller from "tying" the sale of one product to the purchase of a second product if the seller thereby avoids competition on the merits of the "tied" product. See 15 U.S.C. § 1 ("Every contract . . . in restraint of trade or commerce . . . is declared to be illegal."); Jefferson Parish Hosp. Dist. No. 2 v. Hyde, 466 U.S. 2, 9-18, 80 L. Ed. 2d 2, 104 S. Ct. 1551 \(1984\); Lee v. Life Ins. Co. of N. Am., 23 F.3d 14, 16 \(1st Cir. 1994\); Grappone, Inc. v. Subaru of New England, Inc., 858 F.2d 792, 794-97 \(1st Cir. 1988\) (Breyer, J.); Wells Real Estate, Inc. v. Greater Lowell Bd. of Realtors, 850 F.2d 803, 814-15 \(1st Cir.\), cert. denied, 488 U.S. 955, 102 L. Ed. 2d 381, 109 S. Ct. 392 \(1988\). In addition to outlawing "positive" ties likely [98] to restrain competition, Section 1 also forbids "negative" ties -- arrangements conditioning the sale of one product on an agreement not to purchase a second product from competing suppliers. See Eastman Kodak Co. v. Image Technical Servs., Inc., 119 L. Ed. 2d 265, 112 S. Ct. 2072, 2079 \(1992\) (citing Northern Pac. Ry. Co. v. United States, 356 U.S. 1, 5-6, 2 L. Ed. 2d 545, 78 S. Ct. 514 \(1958\)); Lee, 23 F.3d at 16.

and at most $ 1,639,000. While we do not mandate this particular analysis, we are confident that the district court, with its superior understanding of the voluminous record, will be able to estimate either the relevant figures or, if necessary, the "maximum effect" of the error on the jury's verdict. See id. P 59.09[7], at 59-207 to 59-208 ("Even when the effect of the error cannot be allocated to a distinct portion of the verdict, remittitur may still be used if the maximum effect of the error can be established.").

If DG were to refuse remittitur in favor of a new jury trial on the issue of apportionment of Grumman's nonduplicative profits, we hope that the parties will negotiate in good faith to settle the remanded portion of the case or at least agree to a more expeditious procedure. See, e.g., Sid & Marty Krofft, 562 F.2d at 1175 (noting that right to jury trial extends to adjudication of claim for infringer's profits but that parties may stipulate to bench trial).

⁵³ The jury awarded the same amount of compensatory damages for both the federal copyright infringement claim and the state trade secrets claim.

HN50[] There are essentially four elements of a *per se*⁵⁴ tying claim: (1) the tying and tied products are actually two distinct products; (2) there is an agreement or condition, [*1179] express or implied, that establishes a tie; (3) the entity accused of tying has sufficient economic power in the market for the tying product to distort consumers' choices with respect to the tied product; and (4) the tie forecloses a substantial amount of commerce in the market for the tied product. See, e.g., Kodak, 112 S. Ct. at 2079-81; [Grappone, I1410\] 858 F.2d at 794](#); [99] see also STI, 963 F.2d at 683.

Grumman claims that DG unlawfully restrained competition in the sale of MV service by tying access to ADEX (the tying product) to an equipment owner's promise to either purchase service from DG (a positive tie) or not purchase service from any other vendor (a negative tie). While a substantial amount of commerce is potentially involved, DG's motions for summary judgment claimed that there was no proof of any of the first three elements of a tying claim. The district court denied DG's first motion for summary judgment but then granted its renewed motion, stating in a sparse opinion that, [100] as in STI, there was "no evidence which would warrant a finding of the existence of a tying agreement." Grumman V, 834 F. Supp. at 485. See also STI, 963 F.2d at 686 ("[STI's] evidence at bottom shows nothing more than a unilateral decision by Data General to license MV/ADEX to CMOs but not to others."). We agree with the district court's conclusion that there is insufficient evidence of a negative tying arrangement, but believe that the allegation of a positive tie falters at an earlier step.

a. Two Products

HN51[] To establish the existence of two separate products, Grumman must identify the products at issue in each tie and demonstrate that "there is 'sufficient demand for the purchase of [the tied product] separate from [the tying product] to identify a distinct product market in which it is efficient to offer [the tied product] separately from [the tying product].'" STI, 963 F.2d at 684 (brackets in original) (quoting Jefferson Parish, 466 U.S. at 21-22. See also Jefferson Parish, 466 U.S. at 40 [101] (O'Connor, J., concurring) ("When the economic advantages of joint packaging are substantial the package is not appropriately viewed as two products, and that should be the end of the tying inquiry."); Lee, 23 F.3d at 16 n.6 (noting that there must be evidence of "sufficient consumer demand for each individual product, and not merely as part of an integrated product 'package'") (emphasis in original).

While Grumman has characterized the tying product in general terms as "access to ADEX," Grumman actually identifies two different tying products: ADEX service (a service) and ADEX software (a good). With respect to the positive tie, Grumman alleges that DG will not provide ADEX service (i.e., use of ADEX by a DG service technician) to equipment owners unless they also purchase DG support services. With respect to the negative tie, Grumman alleges that DG will not license ADEX software to equipment owners unless they agree not to purchase support services from a TPM.

Grumman has not introduced evidence that ADEX service is a product separate from other components of service. There is no evidence that any customer has purchased, or would wish [102] to purchase, ADEX service separately from the purchase of other components of service. Nor is there evidence that it would be efficient for any entity to provide ADEX service separately from other components of service.⁵⁵

⁵⁴ Grumman does not argue at this stage that DG violated the "rule of reason" and proceeds only on a "per se" theory. See Jefferson Parish, 466 U.S. at 29-31 (noting that in absence of per se liability, antitrust plaintiff must prove that defendant's conduct had an "actual adverse effect on competition").

⁵⁵ The Fourth Circuit came to a similar conclusion on a nearly identical record when it rejected STI's tying claim:

If "access to" MV/ADEX and repair services are considered to be the products in question, appellants have clearly failed to produce sufficient evidence that the products are in fact separate. On the record before us, demand for mere "access to" MV/ADEX, in contrast to demand for licenses to use MV/ADEX, is indistinguishable from demand for repair services. Appellants have introduced no evidence that there are customers who would purchase MV/ADEX-assisted diagnostic services separately from all other repair services for Data General equipment.

In contrast, the record does contain evidence that ADEX software is a product [103] separate from support services. It is undisputed that CMO customers wish to license -- [*1180] and have licensed -- ADEX software without purchasing support services from DG or a TPM. There is also evidence that some of Grumman's customers would consider licensing ADEX from DG so that Grumman could continue to service their MV computers. In addition, the summary judgment record would support a finding that for many years DG provided diagnostics and other service "tools" to computer purchasers as part of a computer equipment package, regardless whether the owner performed self-maintenance or hired DG or a TPM to maintain the computers. In fact, there is evidence that through the early 1980s, DG provided service "tools" -- including diagnostic software other than ADEX -- directly to TPMs. Finally, there is some evidence that other computer manufacturers (IBM, Digital Equipment Corporation, and Wang) have licensed or sold diagnostics to those other than their service customers. Viewed in a light most favorable to Grumman, the record reveals a genuine dispute as to whether ADEX software and [1411] support services for DG computers are distinct products for the purposes of a tying analysis.⁵⁶ Consequently, [104] we may proceed to determine whether Grumman has introduced sufficient proof that DG has conditioned the licensing of ADEX to CMOs on the agreement of these customers not to purchase service from TPMs.

b. Tying Arrangement

HN52 Proof of a tying arrangement generally requires evidence that the supplier's sale of the tying product is conditioned upon the unwilling purchase of the tied product from the supplier or an unwilling promise not to purchase the tied product from any other supplier. See, e.g., Jefferson Parish, 466 U.S. at 12 ("The essential characteristic of an invalid tying arrangement lies in the seller's exploitation of its control over the tying product to force the buyer into the purchase of a tied product that the buyer either did not want at all, or might have preferred to purchase elsewhere on different [105] terms."); Wells Real Estate, 850 F.2d at 814 (HN53) Tying arrangements involve the use of leverage over the market for one product . . . to coerce purchases of a second product). In the absence of an explicit tying agreement, conditioning may be inferred from evidence indicating that the supplier has actually coerced the purchase or non-purchase of another product. See Amerinet, Inc. v. Xerox Corp., 972 F.2d 1483, 1500 (8th Cir. 1992), cert. denied, 122 L. Ed. 2d 356, 113 S. Ct. 1048 (1993); Advanced Computer Servs., Inc. v. MAI Sys. Corp., 845 F. Supp. 356, 368 (E.D.Va. 1994) (citing John H. Shenefield & Irwin M. Stelzer, The Antitrust Laws: A Primer 72 (1993) ("In the absence of an explicit agreement requiring the purchase as a condition of the sale, courts will accept proof suggesting any kind of coercion by the seller or unwillingness to take the second product by the buyer.")); see also Tic-X-Press, Inc. v. Omni Promotions Co., 815 F.2d 1407, 1418 (11th Cir. 1987) (HN54) It is well established [106] that coercion may be established by showing that the facts and circumstances surrounding the transaction as a practical matter forced the buyer into purchasing the tied product."). In essence, whether the conditioning is explicit or implicit, we will not consider the anti-competitive effects of a tie to be unreasonable per se unless there is evidence that the supplier of the tying product has actually used its market power to impose the condition.

Grumman points to only one alleged negative tying arrangement, asserting that DG's Cooperative Maintenance Agreement ("CMO Agreement") contains an explicit tying condition. The CMO Agreement indeed states that DG designed the CMO program for "customers who perform their own maintenance" and that one qualifying criterion for CMO status is that the customer "maintain[] systems which were purchased either for itself or for resale to its customers [as an official DG distributor]." And, although the record suggests that CMOs may still purchase DG service (and presumably TPM service) [*1181] on a "time and materials" basis,⁵⁷ CMOs do not enter contracts with either DG or TPMs for ongoing support services. DG and Grumman both agree that CMOs cannot [107] allow TPMs to use copies of ADEX licensed by a CMO.

STI, 963 F.2d at 685 n.9.

⁵⁶ Again, the Fourth Circuit reached a similar conclusion for similar reasons. See STI, 963 F.2d at 684-85.

⁵⁷ Frederick Raley, Jr., a DG official, testified at his deposition that "self-maintaining" CMO customers would still be able to use DG service, except that "they wouldn't be a contract customer, they would be a time and materials customer." This portion of Raley's deposition was actually placed in the record by Grumman as part of an exhibit to an affidavit supporting Grumman's opposition to one of DG's motions for summary judgment.

Grumman's allegation of an illegal tie cannot go to a jury on a record so sparse. Before turning to the principal flaw in Grumman's case, we note that these facts lend only modest support to the accusation that CMOs have actually promised not to purchase support services from TPMs. The CMO Agreement does require that participants maintain their own computers, but nowhere does the agreement define self-maintenance status in detail or elaborate on the consequences to a CMO if it enters a service contract with a TPM. In fact, as we have [108] noted, there is some evidence in the record that CMOs are free to purchase support services from others without adverse consequences, at least on a "time and materials" basis.

More importantly, there is virtually no evidence that any CMO has unwillingly chosen to maintain its own computers. Although there is some evidence that DG officials designed the CMO program in part to prevent loss of DG revenue to TPMs, there is no evidence that consumers became CMO customers for any reason other than their belief that the CMO program was a "product" [1412] superior to TPM service. Indeed, while Grumman has argued tirelessly that DG service customers are forced to swallow overpriced and inferior support service, Grumman has offered no evidence that CMO customers are similarly disadvantaged. There is not a single affidavit in the record in which a CMO customer expresses either displeasure with the CMO program or an unfulfilled desire to switch to a TPM.⁵⁸ Nor is there any other type of evidence that DG equipment owners capable of maintaining their own equipment would be more satisfied as TPM customers than as CMO customers. Consequently, the evidence in the record would not allow a reasonable [109] jury to find that the CMO program is "an inferior or overpriced product," Amerinet, 972 F.2d at 1501, protected from competition by DG's exploitation of its control over ADEX.

In conclusion, Grumman's allegation of a positive tie between ADEX service and DG support services fails in the absence of proof that these services are truly two distinct products. Grumman's allegation of a negative tie between ADEX software and non-purchase of TPM support services fails in the absence of proof that DG coerced consumers to accept such an arrangement. Accordingly, the district court did not err in granting DG's motion [110] for summary judgment on Grumman's tying counterclaim.

2. Monopolization

In addition to alleging unlawful tying, Grumman accused DG of willfully maintaining its monopoly in the aftermarket for service of DG computers in violation of Section 2 of the HN55⁵⁹ Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 2, which prohibits the monopolization of "any part of the trade or commerce among the several States." To survive summary judgment on its willful maintenance claim, Grumman must demonstrate a genuine dispute about the existence of two elements: (1) DG's possession of monopoly power in the market⁶⁰ for support services of DG computers; and (2) DG's maintenance of that power through "exclusionary conduct." Town of Concord v. Boston Edison Co., 915 F.2d 17, 21 (1st Cir. 1990) (citing, inter alia, United [*1182] States v. Grinnell Corp., 384 U.S. 563, 570-71, 16 L. Ed. 2d 778, 86 S. Ct. 1698 (1966)), cert. denied, 499 U.S. 931 (1991). The district court assumed the existence of monopoly power but granted summary judgment on the grounds [111] that Grumman had not demonstrated the need for a trial on the element of exclusionary conduct. We follow suit.⁶⁰

⁵⁸ Likewise, there is no evidence in the record that former TPM customers have reluctantly terminated their relationship with Grumman in order to participate in the CMO program. Cf. Kodak, 112 S. Ct. at 2081 (noting that record contained evidence that "consumers have switched to Kodak service even though they preferred [TPM] service").

⁵⁹ DG does not seriously dispute Grumman's contention that the aftermarket for service of DG computers comprises the "relevant market" for purposes of antitrust analysis. Accordingly, and in view of our disposition of this case on other grounds, we need not consider this issue.

⁶⁰ We note, however, that the record does contain evidence of DG's monopoly power in the assumed service aftermarket for DG computers. In addition to DG's monopoly share (over 90%) of the service aftermarket, the record contains evidence of barriers to HN56 [↑] "Exclusionary conduct" is defined as "conduct, other than competition [112] on the merits or restraints reasonably "necessary" to competition on the merits, that reasonably appears capable of making a significant contribution to creating or maintaining monopoly power." Town of Concord, 915 F.2d at 21 (quoting Barry Wright Corp. v. ITT Grinnell Corp., 724 F.2d 227, 230 (1st Cir. 1983)) (Breyer, J.), and 3 Phillip Areeda & Donald F. Turner, Antitrust Law P 626, at 83 (1978) (hereinafter "Areeda & Turner")). We label as improper that conduct which harms the competitive process and not conduct which simply harms competitors. Id. That process is harmed when conduct "obstructs the achievement of competition's basic goals -- lower prices, better products, and more efficient production methods." Id. at 21-22. Cf. Olympia Equip. Leasing Co. v. Western Union Tel. Co., 797 F.2d 370, 375 (7th Cir. 1986) (describing shift in the emphasis of "antitrust policy . . . from the protection of competition as a process of rivalry to the protection of competition as a means of promoting economic efficiency"), cert. denied, 480 U.S. 934, 94 L. Ed. 2d 765, 107 S. Ct. 1574 (1987). [113] HN57 [↑] In contrast, exclusionary conduct does not include behavior which poses no unreasonable threat to consumer welfare but is merely a manifestation of healthy competition, an absence of competition, or a natural monopoly. See, e.g., United States v. Grinnell Corp., 384 U.S. 563, 570-71, 16 L. Ed. 2d 778, 86 S. Ct. 1698 (1966) (holding that Section 2 punishes only "willful acquisition or maintenance [1413] [of monopoly power] as distinguished from growth or development as a consequence of a superior product, business acumen, or historic accident").

Grumman's primary contention is that DG's unilateral refusal to license ADEX to anyone other than qualified self-maintainers constitutes exclusionary conduct.⁶¹ Grumman also attacks as exclusionary DG's refusal to provide other service tools directly to TPMs. We first review the principles governing the analysis of a monopolist's unilateral refusal to deal, and then discuss whether a unilateral refusal to license a copyrighted work might ever deserve to be condemned as exclusionary. HN58 [↑] We hold below that the desire of an author to be the exclusive user of its original work is [114] a presumptively legitimate business justification for the author's refusal to license to competitors. We hold further that Grumman has not presented sufficient proof to rebut this presumption and thereby avert summary judgment. In particular, we find no merit in Grumman's contention that DG acted in an exclusionary fashion in discontinuing its liberal policies allowing TPM access to diagnostic software. Finally, we conclude that no reasonable jury could find that DG's restrictions on TPM access to other service tools amount to exclusionary conduct.

a. Unilateral Refusals to Deal

HN59 [↑] Because a monopolization claim does not require proof of concerted activity, [115] even the unilateral actions of a monopolist can constitute exclusionary conduct. See 15 U.S.C. § 2 (referring to "every person who shall monopolize . . . or combine or conspire with any other person . . . to monopolize") [*1183] (emphasis added); Moore v. Jas. H. Matthews & Co., 473 F.2d 328, 332 (9th Cir. 1973) (observing that "section 2 is not limited to concerted activity"). Thus, a monopolist's unilateral refusal to deal with its competitors (as long as the refusal harms the competitive process) may constitute prima facie evidence of exclusionary conduct in the context of a Section 2 claim. See Kodak, 112 S. Ct. at 2091 n.32 (citing Aspen Skiing Co. v. Aspen Highlands Skiing Corp., 472 U.S. 585, 602-05, 86 L. Ed. 2d 467, 105 S. Ct. 2847 (1985)). A monopolist may nevertheless rebut such evidence by establishing a valid business justification for its conduct. See Kodak, 112 S. Ct. at 2091 n. 32 (suggesting that monopolist may rebut an inference of exclusionary [116] conduct by establishing "legitimate competitive reasons for the refusal"); Aspen Skiing, 472 U.S. at 608 (suggesting that sufficient evidence of harm to consumers and competitors triggers further inquiry as to whether the monopolist has "persuaded the jury that its [harmful] conduct was justified by [a] normal business purpose"). HN60 [↑] In general, a business justification is valid if it relates directly or indirectly to the enhancement of consumer welfare. Thus, pursuit of efficiency and quality control might entry (e.g., costs to TPMs of obtaining diagnostics and other service "tools"), market imperfections (e.g., high information costs for computer purchasers and high switching costs for DG equipment owners), and more importantly, supracompetitive service prices and price discrimination among DG service customers.

⁶¹ Grumman also seeks to portray the alleged positive and negative tying arrangements as exclusionary conduct violative of Section 2. We do not consider this argument because of our determination in the previous section that DG's ADEX policies cannot properly be described as arrangements conditioning the sale of one product on the purchase or non-purchase of another.

be legitimate competitive reasons for an otherwise exclusionary refusal to deal, while the desire to maintain a monopoly market share or thwart the entry of competitors would not. See Kodak, 112 S. Ct. at 2091 (discussing the validity and sufficiency of various business justifications); Aspen Skiing, 472 U.S. at 608-11 (same); see generally 7 Areeda & Turner P 1504, at 377-83; 9 Areeda & Turner PP 1713, 1716-17, at 148-61, 185-239. In essence, a unilateral refusal to deal is prima facie exclusionary if there [\[117\]](#) is evidence of harm to the competitive process; a valid business justification requires proof of countervailing benefits to the competitive process.

HN61 [¶] Despite the theoretical possibility, there have been relatively few cases in which a unilateral refusal to deal has formed the basis of a successful Section 2 claim. Several of the cases commonly cited for a supposed duty to deal were actually cases of joint conduct in which some competitors joined to frustrate others. See Associated Press v. United States, 326 U.S. 1, 89 L. Ed. 2013, 65 S. Ct. 1416 \(1945\); United States v. Terminal R.R. Ass'n, 224 U.S. 383, 56 L. Ed. 810, 32 S. Ct. 507 \(1912\). Prior to Aspen Skiing, the case that probably came closest to condemning a true unilateral refusal to deal was Otter Tail Power Co. v. United States, 410 U.S. 366, 35 L. Ed. 2d 359, 93 S. Ct. 1022 \(1973\), which condemned the refusal of a wholesale power supplier either to sell wholesale power to municipal systems or to "wheel power" when Otter Tail's retail franchises expired and local municipalities sought to supplant Otter Tail's local distributors. The case not only involved a capital-intensive public utility facility -- which could not effectively be duplicated and occupied a distinct separate market -- but the Supreme Court laid considerable emphasis on "supported" findings in the district court "that Otter Tail's refusals to sell at wholesale or to wheel were solely to prevent municipal power systems from eroding its monopolistic position." 410 U.S. at 378. [\[1414\]](#)

In Aspen Skiing, the Court criticized a monopolist's unilateral refusal to deal in a very different situation, casting serious doubt on the proposition that the Court has adopted any single rule or formula for determining when a unilateral refusal to deal is unlawful. In that case, an "all-Aspen" ski ticket -- valid at any mountain in Aspen -- had been developed and jointly marketed when the three (later four) ski areas in Aspen were owned by independent entities. 472 U.S. at 589. Some time after Aspen Skiing Company ("Ski Co.") came into control [\[119\]](#) of three of the four ski areas, Ski Co. refused to continue a joint agreement with Aspen Highlands Skiing Corp. ("Highlands"), the owner of the fourth area. Id. at 592-93. Although there was no "essential facility" involved, the Court found that it was exclusionary for Ski Co., as a monopolist, to refuse to continue a presumably efficient "pattern of distribution that had originated in a competitive market and had persisted for several years." Id. at 603.

It is not entirely clear whether the Court in Aspen Skiing merely intended to create a [\[*1184\]](#) category of refusal-to-deal cases different from the essential facilities category or whether the Court was inviting the application of more general principles of antitrust analysis to unilateral refusals to deal. We follow the parties' lead in assuming that Grumman need not tailor its argument to a preexisting "category" of unilateral refusals to deal.

b. Unilateral Refusals to License

DG attempts to undermine Grumman's monopolization claim by proposing a powerful irrebuttable presumption: a unilateral refusal to [\[120\]](#) license a copyright can never constitute exclusionary conduct. We agree that some type of presumption is in order, but reach that conclusion only after an exhaustive inquiry touching on the general character of presumptions, the role of market analysis in the copyright context, existing responses to the tension between the antitrust and patent laws, the nature of the rights extended by the copyright laws, and our duty to harmonize two conflicting statutes.

(1) The Propriety of a Presumption

We begin our analysis with two observations. First, DG's rule of law could be characterized as either an empirical assumption or a policy preference. For example, if we were convinced that refusals to license a copyright always have a net positive effect on the competitive process, we might adopt a presumption to this effect in order to preclude wasteful litigation about a known fact. On the other hand, if we were convinced that the rights enumerated in the Copyright Act should take precedence over the responsibilities set forth in the Sherman Act, regardless of the realities of the market, we might adopt a blanket rule of preference. DG's argument contains elements of both archetypal categories [\[121\]](#) of presumptions.

Second, we note that the phrase "competitive process" may need some refinement in order to evaluate either an empirical assumption or a policy presumption concerning the desirability of unilateral refusals to license a copyright. HN62 [↑] Antitrust law generally seeks to punish and prevent harm to consumers in particular markets, with a focus on relatively specific time periods. See, e.g., Jefferson Parish, 466 U.S. at 18 (holding that "any inquiry into the validity of a tying arrangement must focus on the market or markets in which the two products are sold, for that is where the anticompetitive forcing has its impact"). Thus, in determining whether conduct is exclusionary in the context of a monopolization claim, we ordinarily focus on harm to the competitive process in the relevant market and time period. See generally 3 Areeda & Turner PP 517-28, at 346-88, PP 533-36, at 406-431. Confining the competitive process in this way assists courts in deciding particular disputes based primarily on case-specific adjudicative facts rather than generally-applicable "legislative" facts or assumptions. The [122] use and protection of copyrights also affects the "competitive process," but it may not be appropriate to judge the effect of the use of a copyright by looking only at one market or one time period.

We now consider what appears to be an empirical proclamation from DG: "The refusal to make one's innovation available to rivals . . . is pro-competitive conduct." ⁶² As support, DG cites Grinnell, 384 U.S. at 570-71, in which the Court held that willful maintenance of monopoly does not include "growth or development as a consequence of a superior product." HN63 [↑] It is not the superiority of a work that allows the author to exclude others, however, but rather the limited monopoly granted by copyright law. Moreover, one reason why the Copyright Act fosters investment and innovation is that it may allow the author to earn monopoly profits by [1415] licensing the copyright to others or reserving the copyright for the author's exclusive use. See Sony Corp. of Am. v. Universal City Studios, Inc., 464 U.S. 417, 429, 78 L. Ed. 2d 574, 104 S. Ct. 774 (1984) (explaining that the limited [123] copyright monopoly "is intended to motivate the creative activity of authors and inventors by the provision of a special reward"). Thus, at least in a particular market and for a particular [*1185] period of time, the Copyright Act tolerates behavior that may harm both consumers and competitors. Cf. SCM Corp. v. Xerox Corp., 645 F.2d 1195, 1203 (2d Cir. 1981) ("The primary purpose of the antitrust laws -- to preserve competition -- can be frustrated, albeit temporarily, by a holder's exercise of the patent's inherent exclusionary power during its term."), cert. denied, 455 U.S. 1016, 72 L. Ed. 2d 132, 102 S. Ct. 1708 (1982).

DG does not in fact argue that consumers are better off in the short term because of the inability of TPMs to license ADEX. Instead, [124] DG suggests that allowing copyright owners to exclude others from the use of their works creates incentives which ultimately work to the benefit of consumers in the DG service aftermarket as well as to the benefit of consumers generally. In other words, DG seeks to justify any immediate harm to consumers by pointing to countervailing long-term benefits. Certainly, a monopolist's refusal to license others to use a commercially successful patented idea is likely to have more profound anti-competitive consequences than a refusal to allow others to duplicate the copyrighted expression of an unpatented idea (although such differences may become less pronounced if copyright law becomes increasingly protective of intellectual property such as computer software). But by no means is a monopolist's refusal to license a copyright entirely "pro-competitive" within the ordinary economic framework of the Sherman Act. Accordingly, it may be inappropriate to adopt an empirical assumption that simply ignores harm to the competitive process caused by a monopolist's unilateral refusal to license a copyright. Even if it is clear that exclusive use of a copyright can have anti-competitive consequences, [125] some type of presumption may nevertheless be appropriate as a matter of either antitrust law or copyright law.

(2) Antitrust Law and the Accommodation of Patent Rights

HN64 [↑] Antitrust law is somewhat instructive. Although creation and protection of original works of authorship may be a national pastime, the Sherman Act does not explicitly exempt such activity from antitrust scrutiny and courts should be wary of creating implied exemptions. See Square D Co. v. Niagara Frontier Tariff Bureau, Inc., 476 U.S. 409, 421, 90 L. Ed. 2d 413, 106 S. Ct. 1922 (1986) ("Exemptions from the antitrust laws are strictly construed and strongly disfavored."); cf. Flood v. Kuhn, 407 U.S. 258, 32 L. Ed. 2d 728, 92 S. Ct. 2099 (1972) (holding that the longstanding judicially created exemption of professional baseball from the Sherman Act is an established "aberration" in which Congress has acquiesced). HN65⁶³ The Supreme Court has suggested that an otherwise reasonable yet anti-competitive use of a copyright should not "be deemed a per se violation of the Sherman Act," Broadcast Music, Inc. v. CBS, Inc., 441 U.S. 1, 19, 60 L. Ed. 2d 1, 99 S. Ct. 1551 (1979), [126] but a monopolistic refusal to license might still violate the rule of reason, see Rural Tel. Serv. Co. v. Feist Publications, Inc., 957 F.2d 765, 767-69 (10th Cir.) (analyzing reasonableness of monopolist's unilateral refusal to license copyrighted telephone listings to a competing distributor of telephone directories), cert. denied, 121 L. Ed. 2d 429, 113 S. Ct. 490 (1992).⁶³ Should [*1186] an antitrust plaintiff be allowed to demonstrate the anti-competitive [1416] effects of a monopolist's unilateral refusal to grant a copyright license? Would the monopolist then have to justify its refusal to license by introducing evidence that the protection of the copyright laws enabled the author to create a work which advances consumer welfare?

⁶² Elsewhere in its brief, DG adds that DG's "refusal to allow Grumman to use MV/ADEX is . . . the precise conduct that the antitrust and copyright laws are designed to encourage."

[127] The courts appear to have partly settled an analogous conflict between the patent laws and the antitrust laws, treating the former as creating an implied limited exception to the latter. In Simpson v. Union Oil Co., 377 U.S. 13, 24, 12 L. Ed. 2d 98, 84 S. Ct. 1051 (1964), the Supreme Court stated that "the patent laws which give a 17-year monopoly on 'making, using, or selling the invention' are in pari materia with the antitrust laws and modify them pro tanto." Similarly, we have suggested that the exercise of patent rights is a "legitimate means" by which a firm may maintain its monopoly power. Barry Wright, 724 F.2d at 230. Other courts have specifically held that a monopolist's unilateral refusal to license a patent is ordinarily not properly viewed as exclusionary conduct. See Miller Insituform, 830 F.2d at 609 ("HN67") A patent holder who lawfully acquires a patent cannot be held liable under Section 2 of the Sherman Act for maintaining the monopoly power he lawfully acquired by refusing to license the patent to others."); Westinghouse, 648 F.2d at 647 [128] (finding no antitrust violation because "Westinghouse has done no more than to license some of its patents and refuse to license others"); SCM Corp., 645 F.2d at 1206 (holding that HN68⁶³ "where a patent has been lawfully acquired, subsequent conduct permissible under the patent laws cannot trigger any liability under the antitrust laws"); see also 3 Areeda & Turner P 704, at 114 ("The patent is itself a government grant of monopoly and is therefore an exception to usual antitrust rules."). This exception is inoperable if the patent was unlawfully "acquired." SCM Corp., 645 F.2d at 1208-09 (analyzing legality of Xerox's acquisition of plain-paper copier patent); see generally 3 Areeda & Turner PP 705-707, at 117-45 (discussing effect of patent acquisition, internal development of patents, and improprieties in patent procurement on applicability of antitrust laws).

HN69 The "patent exception" is largely a means of resolving conflicting rights and responsibilities, i.e., a policy presumption. See, e.g., Miller Insituform, 830 F.2d at 609 (declaring summarily that "there is no [129] adverse effect on competition since, as a patent monopolist, [the patent holder] had [the] exclusive right to manufacture, use, and sell his invention.") (emphasis added). At the same time, the exception is grounded in an empirical assumption that exposing patent activity to wider antitrust scrutiny would weaken the incentives underlying the patent system, thereby depriving consumers of beneficial products. See, e.g., SCM Corp., 645 F.2d at 1209

⁶³ HN66 It is in any event well settled that concerted and contractual behavior that threatens competition is not immune from antitrust inquiry simply because it involves the exercise of copyright privileges. See, e.g., Kodak, 112 S. Ct. at 2089 n.29 ("The Court has held many times that power gained through some natural and legal advantage such as a patent, copyright, or business acumen can give rise to liability if 'a seller exploits his dominant position in one market to expand his empire into the next.'") (quoting Times-Picayune Publishing Co. v. United States, 345 U.S. 594, 611, 97 L. Ed. 1277, 73 S. Ct. 872 (1953) (tying case)); United States v. Paramount Pictures, Inc., 334 U.S. 131, 143, 92 L. Ed. 1260, 68 S. Ct. 915 (1948) (holding that horizontal conspiracy to engage in price-fixing in copyright licenses is illegal per se); id. at 159 (holding that block-booking of motion pictures -- "a refusal to license one or more copyrights unless another copyright is accepted" -- is an illegal tying arrangement); Straus v. American Publishers' Ass'n, 231 U.S. 222, 234, 58 L. Ed. 192, 34 S. Ct. 84 (1913) ("No more than the patent statute was the copyright act intended to authorize agreements in unlawful restraint of trade"); Digidyne Corp. v. Data General Corp., 734 F.2d 1336 (9th Cir. 1984) (affirming finding of illegal tie between copyrighted software and computer hardware), cert. denied, 473 U.S. 908, 87 L. Ed. 2d 657, 105 S. Ct. 3534 (1985); cf. Miller Insituform, Inc. v. Insituform of N. Am., Inc., 830 F.2d 606, 608-09 & n.4 (6th Cir. 1987) (describing ways in which patent holder may violate the antitrust laws), cert. denied, 484 U.S. 1064, 98 L. Ed. 2d 988, 108 S. Ct. 1023 (1988); United States v. Westinghouse Elec. Corp., 648 F.2d 642, 646-47 (9th Cir. 1981) (same).

(holding that imposition of antitrust liability for an arguably unreasonable refusal to license a lawfully acquired patent "would severely trample upon the incentives provided by our patent laws and thus undermine the entire patent system").

(3) Copyright Law

Copyright law provides further guidance. HN70[] The Copyright Act expressly grants to a copyright owner the exclusive right to distribute the protected work by "transfer of ownership, or by rental, lease, or lending." 17 U.S.C. § 106. Consequently, "the owner of the copyright, if [it] pleases, may refrain from vending or licensing and content [itself] with simply exercising the right to exclude others from using [130] [its] property." Fox Film Corp. v. Doyal, 286 U.S. 123, 127, 76 L. Ed. 1010, 52 S. Ct. 546 \(1932\). See also Stewart v. Abend, 495 U.S. 207, 229, 109 L. Ed. 2d 184, 110 S. Ct. 1750 \(1990\). We may also venture to infer that, in passing the Copyright Act, Congress itself made an empirical assumption that allowing copyright holders to collect license fees and exclude others from using their works creates a system [*1187] of incentives that promotes consumer welfare in the long term by encouraging investment in the creation of desirable artistic and functional works of expression. See Feist Publications, Inc. v. Rural Tel. Serv. Co., 499 U.S. 340, 111 S. Ct. 1282, 1290, 113 L. Ed. 2d 358 \(1991\) ("The primary objective of a copyright is not to reward the labor of authors, but 'to promote the Progress of Science and useful Arts.'") (brackets in original) (quoting U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 8); Sony Corp., 464 U.S. at 429 (discussing goals and [131] incentives of copyright protection); Twentieth Century Music Corp. v. Aiken, 422 U.S. 151, 156, 45 L. Ed. 2d 84, 95 S. Ct. 2040 \(1975\) ("The immediate effect of our copyright law is to secure a fair return for an 'author's' creative labor. But the ultimate aim is, by this incentive, to stimulate artistic creativity for the general public good."). HN71[] We cannot require antitrust defendants to prove and reprove the merits of this legislative assumption in every case where a refusal to license a copyrighted work comes under attack. Nevertheless, although "nothing in the copyright statutes would prevent an author from hoarding all of his works during the term of the copyright," [Stewart, 495 U.S. at \[1417\] 228-29](#) (emphasis added), the Copyright Act does not explicitly purport to limit the scope of the Sherman Act. And, if the Copyright Act is silent on the subject generally, the silence is particularly acute in cases where a monopolist harms consumers in the monopolized market by refusing to license a copyrighted work to competitors.

We acknowledge that Congress has not [132] been entirely silent on the relationship between antitrust and intellectual property laws. Congress amended the patent laws in 1988 to provide that HN72[] "no patent owner otherwise entitled to relief for infringement . . . of a patent shall be denied relief or deemed guilty of misuse or illegal extension of the patent right by reason of [the patent owner's] refusal to license or use any rights to the patent." 35 U.S.C. § 271\(d\) \(1988\). HN73[] Section 271\(d\) clearly prevents an infringer from using a patent misuse defense when the patent owner has unilaterally refused a license, and may even herald the prohibition of all antitrust claims and counterclaims premised on a refusal to license a patent. See Richard Calkins, Patent Law: The Impact of the 1988 Patent Misuse Reform Act and Noerr-Pennington Doctrine on Misuse Defenses and Antitrust Counterclaims, 38 Drake L. Rev. 192-97 (1988-89). Nevertheless, while Section 271\(d\) is indicative of congressional "policy" on the need for antitrust law to accommodate intellectual property law, Congress did not similarly amend the Copyright Act.

(4) Harmonizing the Sherman Act and the [133] Copyright Act

HN74[] Since neither the Sherman Act nor the Copyright Act works a partial repeal of the other, and since implied repeals are disfavored, e.g., Watt v. Alaska, 451 U.S. 259, 267, 68 L. Ed. 2d 80, 101 S. Ct. 1673 \(1981\), we must harmonize the two as best we can, id., mindful of the legislative and judicial approaches to similar conflicts created by the patent laws. We must not lose sight of the need to preserve the economic incentives fueled by the Copyright Act, but neither may we ignore the tension between the two very different policies embodied in the Copyright Act and the Sherman Act, both designed ultimately to improve the welfare of consumers in our free market system. Drawing on our discussion above, we hold that while exclusionary conduct can include a monopolist's unilateral refusal to license a copyright, an author's desire to exclude others from use of its copyrighted work is a presumptively valid business justification for any immediate harm to consumers.⁶⁴

[134] c. DG's Refusal to License ADEX to non-CMOs

Having arrived at the applicable legal standards, we may resolve Grumman's principal allegation of exclusionary conduct. Although there may be a genuine factual dispute about the effect on DG equipment owners of DG's refusal to license ADEX to TPMs, DG's desire to exercise its rights under [*1188] the Copyright Act is a presumptively valid business justification.

Apparently sensing the uphill nature of its allegation of an exclusionary refusal to license, Grumman seeks to overcome any obstacles primarily by characterizing DG's licensing policies as a monopolist's exclusionary withdrawal of assistance within the framework of Aspen Skiing. Citing Aspen Skiing, Grumman contends that DG's refusal to license ADEX to TPMs, in light of the fact that DG previously allowed TPMs to use DG diagnostics, is exclusionary conduct because "[a] monopolist that has helped a market develop may not withdraw its support without legitimate business justifications."

Assuming that such a claim can overcome the presumption that a refusal to license is not exclusionary, we nevertheless hold that Aspen Skiing cannot apply to the facts of this case. The reasoning [135] of Aspen Skiing has little to do with the fact that defendant Ski Co. withdrew assistance upon which competitors may have relied when entering the market. Rather, the decision turns on a comparison of the behavior of firms in a competitive market (the Aspen ski market) with a monopolist's behavior once competition has been curtailed. The Court noted that the rich soil of competition had produced the all-mountain ticket in Aspen and other multimountain areas, justifying an "inference that such tickets satisfy consumer demand in free competitive markets." 472 U.S. at 603. See also Olympia Equip., 797 F.2d at 377 (suggesting that the facts in Aspen Skiing indicate that "competition required some cooperation among competitors" in the Aspen ski market). Ski Co.'s decision to eliminate the ticket in later years was a sign that the [1418] weeds of monopoly had begun to take hold, to the possible detriment of consumer welfare. Aspen Skiing, 472 U.S. at 604. Finally, after canvassing evidence of consumer preferences concerning skiing options [136] at Aspen, the Court concluded that Ski Co.'s new policies did in fact harm consumers. Id. at 605-607. In short, instead of prescribing a categorical approach, Aspen Skiing ultimately calls for an inquiry that is relatively routine in antitrust analysis: namely, whether the monopolist's actions unjustifiably harm the competitive process by frustrating consumer preferences and erecting barriers to competition. Cf. Olympia Equip., 797 F.2d at 379 ("If [Aspen Skiing] stands for any principle that goes beyond its unusual facts, it is that a monopolist may be guilty of monopolization if it refuses to cooperate with a competitor in circumstances where some cooperation is indispensable to effective competition.").

Grumman attempts to analogize this case to Aspen Skiing by focusing on the fact that DG once encouraged firms to enter the DG service aftermarket by allowing liberal access to service tools, but no longer does so. The analytical framework of Aspen Skiing cannot function in these circumstances, however, because we are unable to view DG's market practices in both competitive [137] and noncompetitive conditions. While TPMs have made inroads in the market for service of DG computers, DG has always been a monopolist in that market, and competitive conditions have never prevailed. Therefore, it would not be "appropriate to infer" from DG's change of heart that its former policies "satisfy consumer demand in free competitive markets." Aspen Skiing, 472 U.S. at 603.

Nor does it appear that Grumman would be able at trial to overcome the presumption on any other theory. There is no evidence that DG acquired its ADEX copyrights in any unlawful manner; indeed, the record suggests that DG developed all its software internally. Cf. 3 Areeda & Turner P 706, at 127-28 (arguing that although an internally developed patent may be as exclusionary as one acquired from outside a firm, labelling the former as exclusionary would "discourage progressiveness by monopolists"). And, while there is evidence that DG knew that developing a ⁶⁴ Wary of undermining the Sherman Act, however, HN75 we do not hold that an antitrust plaintiff can never rebut this presumption, for there may be rare cases in which imposing antitrust liability is unlikely to frustrate the objectives of the Copyright Act.

"proprietary position" in the area of diagnostic software would help to maintain its monopoly in the aftermarket for service of DG computers, there is also evidence that DG set out [138] to create a state-of-the-art diagnostic that would help to improve the quality of DG service. Cf. id. P 706, at 128-29 (suggesting that "nearly all commercial research rests on a mixture of motivations" [*1189] and that a search for an overriding "antisocial" motivation would be unilluminating). In fact, there is clearly some evidence that ADEX is a significant benefit to owners of DG's MV computers. ADEX is a better product than any other diagnostic for MV computers. The use of ADEX appears to have increased the efficiency and reduced the cost of service because technicians can locate problems more quickly and, through the use of the software's "remote assistance" capability, can arrive at customer sites having determined ahead of time what replacement parts are necessary. In addition to the possibility of lower prices occasioned by such gains in efficiency, ADEX also promises to lower prices through gains in effectiveness. For example, customers may save the cost of replacing expensive hardware components because the use of advanced diagnostics increases the possibility that technicians can locate a problem and repair the component.

d. DG's Other Restrictive Policies

Grumman's [139] other allegations of exclusionary conduct are equally devoid of merit and require no extended analysis. It is essentially undisputed that DG will not provide spare parts, depot repair services, certain documentation, change order kits, or schematics to TPMs. But there is no evidence of any resulting harm to DG equipment owners. DG makes most of these items available directly to equipment owners. Equipment owners "may purchase . . . depot repair services, rev-ups [change order kits], and spare parts directly from DG, regardless of whether their computers are serviced by DG, TPMs, or themselves." Grumman II, 761 F. Supp. at 189. We cannot presume that elimination of an intermediate seller of such items harms consumers; indeed, consumers are likely to benefit by not having to accept TPMs' mark-up of DG prices. Further, a direct sales policy does not act as a significant barrier to market entry by competitors offering lower prices for higher quality support services. TPM technicians may identify broken parts for the customer to send to DG's repair depot, use the change order kits to upgrade a customer's computer, and install spare parts the customer has ordered [140] from DG.

Neither equipment owners nor TPMs may purchase schematics (blueprints of equipment that often contain manufacturing secrets), but Grumman has not introduced sufficient evidence that this policy constitutes exclusionary conduct. Grumman's theory [1419] below was that DG's refusal to sell schematics to TPMs prevented TPMs from acquiring the information necessary to develop fully competitive substitutes for ADEX. HN76[
↑] Even a monopolist, however, "may normally keep its innovations secret from its rivals as long as it wishes." Berkey Photo, Inc. v. Eastman Kodak Co., 603 F.2d 263, 281 \(2d Cir. 1979\), cert. denied, 444 U.S. 1093, 62 L. Ed. 2d 783, 100 S. Ct. 1061 (1980). DG's policy might be exclusionary if DG had sought to alter its equipment (and therefore the schematics describing that equipment) in order to prevent technological advances by TPMs. But, as the district court noted, "Grumman . . . makes no allegations that DG has in fact attempted to subvert competitors' efforts to develop and implement competing diagnostics." Grumman II, 761 F. Supp. at 191.

In conclusion, [141] Grumman has not produced evidence from which a jury could find that DG engaged in exclusionary conduct by unilaterally refusing to license ADEX or sell schematics to TPMs, or by only selling other service tools directly to equipment owners. Therefore, there was no error in the district court's entry of summary judgment on Grumman's monopolization claim.

IV.

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, we affirm the district court in every respect save for its failure to instruct the jury on its duty to consider Grumman's plea for apportionment of Grumman's nonduplicative profits.⁶⁵ We [1190] remand the case to the district court for the sole purpose of resolving that issue.

So ordered.

End of Document

⁶⁵ We have considered all of Grumman's other arguments, and find none of sufficient merit to alter our conclusions.

Bob Nicholson Appliance v. Maytag Co.

United States District Court for the Southern District of Indiana, New Albany Division

September 15, 1994, Decided ; September 15, 1994, Filed

CAUSE NO. NA 91-131-C

Reporter

883 F. Supp. 321 *; 1994 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 20208 **

BOB NICHOLSON APPLIANCE, INC., Plaintiff, vs. MAYTAG COMPANY, Defendant.

Core Terms

pricing, antitrust, appliances, predatory, anti trust law, competitors, consumers, summary judgment, summary judgment motion, fraudulent concealment, material fact, alleges, price discrimination, duty to disclose, Robinson-Patman Act, nonmoving, dealer

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

HN1 [down arrow] Antitrust & Trade Law, Clayton Act

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 13\(a\).

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Appropriateness

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Summary Judgment > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Motions for Summary Judgment > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Genuine Disputes

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Supporting Materials > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Supporting Materials > Discovery Materials

HN2 [down arrow] Entitlement as Matter of Law, Appropriateness

Under Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(c), summary judgment is proper if the pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories, and admissions on file, together with the affidavits, if any, show that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the moving party is entitled to a judgment as a matter of law. While the burden rests squarely on the party moving for summary judgment to show that there is an absence of evidence to support the nonmoving party's case, the nonmoving party responding to a properly made and supported summary judgment motion still must set forth facts showing that there is a genuine issue of material fact and that a reasonable jury could return a verdict in its favor.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > Movant Persuasion & Proof

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > Nonmovant Persuasion & Proof

HN3 Summary Judgment, Entitlement as Matter of Law

For purposes of summary judgment, the moving party is entitled to a judgment as a matter of law if the nonmoving party has failed to make a sufficient showing on an essential element of her case with respect to which she has the burden of proof. If doubts remain, however, as to the existence of a material fact, then those doubts should be resolved in favor of the nonmoving party and summary judgment denied. Although the general rule is that a court must draw all inferences in favor of the nonmoving party, antitrust law limits the extent to which permissible inferences from ambiguous evidence may be drawn. If the record is clear that the antitrust claims cannot succeed judicial administration is served better by disposition prior to trial.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Scope

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Remedies > Damages

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > Prioritizing Resources & Organization for Intellectual Property Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Remedies > Damages

HN4 Clayton Act, Claims

Section 4 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 15\(a\), defines the class of persons who may maintain private damage actions under the antitrust laws, and requires that a plaintiff show "antitrust injury" before a court can consider other substantive violations of the Sherman or Robinson-Patman Acts.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > Clayton Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Remedies > Damages

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

HN5 Standing, Clayton Act

The four elements a plaintiff must satisfy to bring an action for treble damages under § 4 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 15\(a\), are: (1) a duty recognized by the antitrust laws; (2) a violation of the antitrust laws; (3) injury to an interest protected by the antitrust laws and attributable to the antitrust violation--that is antitrust injury; and (4) a direct link between the antitrust violation and the antitrust injury, that is to say, standing.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

HN6 Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

The "antitrust injury doctrine" requires every plaintiff to show that its loss comes from acts that reduce output or raise prices to consumers.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Discrimination > Competitive Injuries > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > General Overview

HN7 Robinson-Patman Act, Claims

In the context of the Robinson-Patman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 13\(a\), plaintiff must show that the price discrimination it suffered may substantially lessen competition. The Robinson-Patman Act condemns price discrimination only to the extent that it threatens to injure competition.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Actual Monopolization > Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices > General Overview

HN8 Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

"Predatory pricing" is defined as pricing below an appropriate measure of cost for the purpose of eliminating competitors in the short run and reducing competition in the long run.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

HN9[] Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

Non-predatory pricing is competitive pricing that cannot inflict antitrust injury upon a competitor.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Discrimination > Competitive Injuries > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Discrimination > Competitive Injuries > Secondary & Tertiary Line Injuries

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > General Overview

HN10[] Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

A violation of 15 U.S.C.S. § 13\(a\) requires not only proof of price discrimination, but a potential impact substantially to lessen competition or create a monopoly in any line of commerce.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

HN11[] Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

The antitrust injury requirement cannot be met by broad allegations of harm to the "market" as an abstract entity. Although all antitrust violations, under both the per se rule and rule-of-reason analysis, "distort" the market, not every loss stemming from a violation counts as antitrust injury.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

HN12[] Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

When the plaintiff is a poor champion of consumers, a court must be especially careful not to grant relief that may undercut the proper function of antitrust.

Governments > Fiduciaries

Torts > ... > Fraud & Misrepresentation > Nondisclosure > General Overview

Torts > Business Torts > Fraud & Misrepresentation > General Overview

HN13 [blue document icon] Governments, Fiduciaries

A party asserting fraudulent concealment must prove: (1) the wrongdoer had a duty to disclose certain facts to another, (2) it knowingly failed to do so, and (3) the other justifiably relied upon such non-disclosure to his detriment. Fraudulent concealment can arise from either active efforts to conceal malpractice, or from a failure to disclose material information when a fiduciary or confidential relationship exists. To be affirmative acts of concealment, the actions must be calculated to mislead and hinder a plaintiff from obtaining information by the use of ordinary diligence, or to prevent inquiry or elude investigation.

Torts > ... > Fraud & Misrepresentation > Nondisclosure > Elements

Torts > Business Torts > Fraud & Misrepresentation > General Overview

Torts > ... > Fraud & Misrepresentation > Nondisclosure > General Overview

HN14 [blue document icon] Nondisclosure, Elements

A prerequisite to a claim of fraudulent concealment is the existence of a duty to disclose the concealed information.

Contracts Law > ... > Consideration > Enforcement of Promises > General Overview

Torts > Business Torts > Fraud & Misrepresentation > General Overview

Contracts Law > Contract Formation > Consideration > General Overview

HN15 [blue document icon] Consideration, Enforcement of Promises

In order to prove a claim of fraud, plaintiffs must show: 1) a material representation of past or existing facts; 2) which is false; 3) which was made with knowledge or reckless ignorance of its falsity; 4) which causes reliance to the detriment of the person relying on the representation.

Counsel: [\[1\]](#) Attorney(s) for Plaintiff: James E. Fifer, Mark B. Geller, 220 East Main Street, P.O. Box 65, New Albany, Indiana 47151-0065.

Attorney(s) for Defendant: David W. Crumbo, Mary Ann Guenther, 120 West Spring Street, Suite 400, New Albany, Indiana 47150-3655, Kenneth J. Tuggle, BROWN TODD & HEYBURN, 3200 Providian Center, Louisville, Kentucky 40202-3363.

Judges: SARAH EVANS BARKER, CHIEF JUDGE, United States District Court, Southern District of Indiana

Opinion by: SARAH EVANS BARKER

Opinion

[*322] ENTRY

The Maytag Company ("Maytag") moves for summary judgment on Bob Nicholson [\[*323\]](#) Appliance, Inc.'s ("BNA") Second Amended Complaint. For the reasons stated below, we grant Maytag's motion for summary judgment as to all counts.

I. BACKGROUND

BNA, an Indiana corporation, sells home appliances at retail in New Albany, Indiana. Maytag, a Delaware corporation, manufactures and distributes home appliances. From 1979, up to November, 1990, BNA (and its predecessor, the sole proprietorship, Bob Nicholson Appliance) purchased home appliances from Maytag pursuant to several Retail Dealer Agreements ("RDA's). See Second Amended Complaint, Count I, P 3. In November, 1990, citing a decline in BNA's sales, Maytag cancelled [2] its RDAs with BNA.

BNA claims that Maytag had quantity discount pricing programs (hereinafter "Super Value Program"), through which selected dealers had the opportunity to buy certain models of home appliances from Maytag at prices below what BNA would normally pay to buy the same quality appliances. BNA further maintains that it repeatedly told Maytag that it wanted to participate in the Super Value Program if it received the same pricing. See Second Amended Complaint, Count I, at P 10. According to BNA, Maytag repeatedly refused to provide any information about the Super Value Program and failed to give BNA any opportunity to participate even though BNA met the requisite criteria.

BNA's Second Amended Complaint alleges five counts: Count I alleges that Maytag violated 15 U.S.C. § 13¹ (the Robinson-Patman Act) by engaging in price discrimination; Count II alleges that Maytag made fraudulent representations regarding the existence of and BNA's eligibility for the Super Value Program; Count III alleges that Maytag violated 15 U.S.C. § 1 (the Sherman Anti-Trust Act) by engaging in illegal tie-in arrangements; Count IV alleges that Maytag breached its retail dealer agreements [3] with BNA.² BNA claims that it is entitled to various damages including lost profits and treble damages under 15 U.S.C. § 15 (Section 4 of the Clayton Act).³

[4] II. DISCUSSION

A. Summary Judgment Standard

HN2[] Under Rule 56\(c\) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, summary judgment is proper "if the pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories, and admissions on file, together with the affidavits, if any, show that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the moving party is entitled to a judgment as a matter of law." Fed. R. Civ. Proc. 56\(c\). While the burden rests squarely on the party moving for summary judgment to show "that there is an absence of evidence to support the nonmoving party's case", Celotex Corp. v. Catrett, 477 U.S. 317, 325, 106 S. Ct. 2548, 91 L. Ed. 2d 265 \(1986\), the nonmoving party responding to a properly made and supported summary judgment motion still must set forth facts showing that there is a genuine issue of material fact and that a reasonable jury could return a verdict in its favor. See Wolf v. City of Fitchburg, 870 F.2d 1327, 1329 \(7th Cir. 1989\); Posey v. Skyline Corp., 702 F.2d 102, 105 \(7th Cir. 1983\), cert. denied, 464 U.S. 960, 78 L. Ed. 2d 336, 104 S. Ct. 392 [324] (1983). "The HN3[] moving party is 'entitled to a judgment as a matter of law' [if] the nonmoving party has failed to make a sufficient showing [5] on an essential element of her case with respect to

¹ HN1[] Section 2(a) of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 13\(a\), 38 Stat. 730, as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act provides:

It shall be unlawful for any person engaged in commerce, in the course of such commerce, either directly or indirectly, to discriminate in price between different purchasers of commodities of like grade and quality . . . where the effect of such discrimination may be substantially to lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly in any line of commerce, or to injure, destroy, or prevent competition with any person who either grants or knowingly receives the benefit of such discrimination, or with customers of either of them.

² Count V alleged that Smith's Appliance & Furniture Co. violated 15 U.S.C. § 13\(f\) by knowingly receiving discriminatory pricing from Maytag. Count V was dismissed with prejudice on April 29, 1994, after the Smith and BNA settled.

³ Section 4 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 15\(a\), provides that "any person who shall be injured in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws may sue therefor . . . and shall recover threefold the damages by him sustained. . . ."

which she has the burden of proof." Celotex Corp. v. Catrett, 477 U.S. 317, 323, 91 L. Ed. 2d 265, 106 S. Ct. 2548 (1986). If doubts remain, however, as to the existence of a material fact, then those doubts should be resolved in favor of the nonmoving party and summary judgment denied. See Wolf, 870 F.2d at 1330.

Although the general rule is that a court must draw all inferences in favor of the nonmoving party, Eastman Kodak Co. v. Image Technical Services, Inc., 504 U.S. 451, 112 S. Ct. 2072, 2077, 119 L. Ed. 2d 265 (1992), "antitrust law limits the extent to which permissible inferences from ambiguous evidence may be drawn." Wigod v. Chicago Mercantile Exchange, 981 F.2d 1510, 1514 (7th Cir. 1992). If the "record is clear that the antitrust claims cannot succeed. . . judicial administration is served better by disposition prior to trial." Id. at 1514-15.

B. Antitrust Injury

HN4 [↑] Section 4 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 15(a), "defines the class of persons who may maintain private damage actions under the antitrust laws," see Local Beauty Supply, Inc. v. Lamaur, Inc., 787 F.2d 1197, 1200 (7th Cir. 1986), and [6] requires that a plaintiff show "antitrust injury" before a court can consider other substantive violations of the Sherman or Robinson-Patman Acts. See Brunswick Corp. v. Pueblo Bowl-O-Mat, Inc., 429 U.S. 477, 97 S. Ct. 690, 50 L. Ed. 2d 701 (1977). In Greater Rockford Energy & Technology v. Shell Oil Co., 998 F.2d 391, 395 (7th Cir. 1993), cert. denied, 127 L. Ed. 2d 375, 114 S. Ct. 1054 (1994), the Seventh Circuit noted HN5 [↑] four elements a plaintiff must satisfy to bring an action for treble damages under Section 4 of the Clayton Act: "(1) a duty recognized by the antitrust laws; (2) a violation of the antitrust laws; (3) injury to an interest protected by the antitrust laws and attributable to the antitrust violation--that is antitrust injury; and (4) a direct link between the antitrust violation and the antitrust injury, that is to say, standing." (emphasis in original). HN6 [↑] The "antitrust injury doctrine" as elaborated in Atlantic Richfield Co. v. USA Petroleum Co., 495 U.S. 328, 110 S. Ct. 1884, 109 L. Ed. 2d 333 (1990); Cargill Inc. v. Monfort of Colorado, Inc., 479 U.S. 104, 107 S. Ct. 484, 93 L. Ed. 2d 427 (1986), Associated General Contractors, Inc. v. California State [7] Council of Carpenters, 459 U.S. 519, 534, 103 S. Ct. 897, 906, 74 L. Ed. 2d 723 (1983)⁴, and Brunswick, supra, "requires every plaintiff to show that its loss comes from acts that reduce output or raise prices to consumers." See Stamatakis Industries, Inc. v. King, 965 F.2d 469, 471 (7th Cir. 1992) (quoting Chicago Professional Sports Limited Partnership v. National Basketball Ass'n, 961 F.2d 667, 670 (7th Cir. 1992)); see also O.K. Sand and Gravel v. Martin Marietta Corp., 819 F. Supp. 771, 787 (S.D. Ind. 1992).

[8] In the context of the Robinson-Patman Act, BNA must show that the price discrimination it suffered may substantially lessen competition. See 15 U.S.C. § 13(a); Brooke Group, Ltd. v. Brown & Williamson Tobacco Corp., 113 S. Ct. 2578, 125 L. Ed. 2d 168 (1993) (Robinson-Patman Act "condemns price discrimination only to the extent that it threatens to injure competition.").⁵ Neither the Supreme Court nor the [*325] Seventh Circuit has addressed what constitutes a "competitive injury" under the Robinson-Patman Act; and the other circuits courts are divided on this issue. Some circuits have found that a plaintiff satisfies the antitrust injury requirement for a Robinson-Patman violation where the plaintiff showed an injury to competitors, not just consumers. See J.F. Feeser, Inc. v. Serv-A-Portion, Inc., 909 F.2d 1524, 15533-35, 1539-41 & n. 17 (3d Cir. 1990) (secondary line Robinson-Patman plaintiff need show only injury to a competitor; proof of injury to competition unnecessary); Hasbrouck v. Texaco, Inc., 842

⁴ In Associated General Contractors, the Supreme Court emphasized that "Congress did not intend the antitrust laws to provide a remedy in damages for all injuries that might conceivably be traced to an antitrust violation." Instead, the "focus of the doctrine of 'antitrust standing' is somewhat different from that of standing as a constitutional doctrine. Harm to the antitrust plaintiff is sufficient to satisfy the constitutional standing requirement of injury in fact, but the court must make the further determination whether the plaintiff is a proper party to bring a private antitrust action." 459 U.S. at 535 n. 31, 103 S. Ct. at 907 n. 31.

HN7 [↑]

⁵ Although the Supreme Court in Brooke Group required a showing of actual injury to competition in the market, the holding of the case is currently limited to the context of primary line competitors. It is unclear whether the Seventh Circuit would extend Brooke Group's requirement of actual injury to competition to secondary line competitors. See Greater Rockford Energy & Technology v. Shell Oil, 998 F.2d 391, 400 n. 11 (7th Cir. 1993).

F.2d 1034, 1040 \(9th Cir. 1987\) (plaintiff need only show a substantial price discrimination between themselves and their competitors over a period of time); P. Areeda [9] & H. Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law P340.5 (Supp. 1993). Others have required an injury to competition. See Boise Cascade Corp. v. FTC, 267 U.S. App. D.C. 124, 837 F.2d 1127, 1138-39, 1143-48 \(D.C. Cir. 1988\); Richard Short Oil Co. v. Texaco, 799 F.2d 415 \(8th Cir. 1986\) (lack of antitrust injury found where discriminating defendant was one of many sellers in the market).

In this case, BNA contends that its antitrust injury stems from Maytag's alleged fraudulent concealment of its Super Value Program. BNA claims that because it was not allowed to participate [10] in the program, its sales and profits declined, prompting Maytag to cancel its RDA with BNA. BNA further maintains that Maytag's Super Value Program amounted to a conspiracy with Smith to utilize a predatory pricing scheme to eliminate BNA from the market as a purchaser of Maytag products. BNA concludes that the predatory pricing eliminated competition thereby causing antitrust injury. Finally, BNA points to the dramatic reduction of its sales of Maytag appliances starting from the date that Smith Furniture (BNA's competitor) enrolled in the Super Value Program.

The Court initially rejects BNA's contention that Maytag may have engaged in predatory pricing. In Cargill, supra, 479 U.S. at 117-18, 107 S. Ct. at 493, the Supreme Court HN8 defined "predatory pricing" as "pricing below an appropriate measure of cost for the purpose of eliminating competitors in the short run and reducing competition in the long run." The Court further noted that:

[Predatory pricing] is a practice that harms both competitors and competition. In contrast to price cutting aimed simply at increasing market share, predatory pricing has as its aim the elimination of competition. Predatory pricing [11] is thus a practice 'inimical to the purposes of [the antitrust] laws,' Brunswick, 429 U.S. at 488, 97 S. Ct. at 697, and one capable of inflicting antitrust injury. (emphasis in original).

Id. HN9 By contrast, nonpredatory pricing is "competitive pricing that cannot inflict antitrust injury upon a competitor." Indiana Grocery, Inc. v. Super Valu Stores, Inc., 864 F.2d 1409, 1420 \(7th Cir. 1989\).

The Court finds that BNA has failed to raise any material facts which would support its allegation that Maytag engaged in predatory pricing by not giving BNA the reduced Super Value Program prices. First, BNA has cited no evidence showing that Maytag cut its prices to some of its dealers for the sole purpose of eliminating competition or increasing its overall market share. Second, a predatory pricing scheme would not make sense in the context of a supplier-dealer relationship because both Maytag and BNA have a mutual interest in maximizing the amount of overall sales of Maytag appliances. Third, BNA has failed to show that Maytag had any prospect of obtaining the sort of monopolistic power that would make predatory pricing feasible. If Maytag's intent was to drive BNA out [12] of the market and then radically increase its price on Maytag appliances through the remaining Maytag distributors, it is very likely that consumers would shift to comparable products rather than absorb the price increases. See Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co. v. Zenith Radio, 475 U.S. 574, 594, 106 S. Ct. 1348, 1358, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538 \(1986\) (noting that predatory pricing conspiracies are especially unlikely to occur where the prospects of attaining monopoly power are slight because a company must obtain enough market power to set higher than competitive prices and then sustain those prices long enough to offset earlier losses). Indeed, BNA presents no evidence suggesting that Maytag was close to obtaining monopoly [*326] power in the relevant appliance market. The Court grants Maytag's motion for summary judgment on BNA's Sherman Act claim (Count III) because no evidence suggests that Maytag engaged in predatory pricing and thus, no antitrust injury exists.

The more difficult question is whether BNA's Robinson-Patman Act claim survives the antitrust injury threshold requirement. BNA contends that it met the requirement by showing that competition was hurt because it lost sales to a competitor--Smith's [13] Furniture and Appliance--through allegedly discriminatory pricing. We have already rejected BNA's contention that it was driven from the market through predatory pricing. The key question is whether one can show competitive injury under the Robinson-Patman Act by showing that a secondary line competitor was injured. As we have noted above, some circuit courts have found injury where competitors were injured. See *Feeeser, Hasbrouck*⁶, supra.

However, we are persuaded that the Seventh Circuit would extend the reasoning of Brooke Group to secondary line competitors and require actual injury to competition. See e.g., H.L. Hayden of N.Y. v. Siemens Medical Systems, 879 F.2d 1005, 1021 n. 12 (2d Cir. 1989) ("[HN10] A] violation of 15 U.S.C. § 13(a) (1982) requires not only proof of price discrimination, [14] but a potential impact substantially to lessen competition or create a monopoly in any line of commerce."); Best Brands Beverage, Inc. v. Falstaff Brewing Corp., 842 F.2d 578, 586 n. 2 (2d Cir. 1987). Our analysis is consistent with numerous decisions from this circuit emphasizing that the historic purpose of the antitrust laws has been to protect competition, not competitors. See e.g., Stamatakis Industries, supra, 965 F.2d at 471, ("Entertaining claims of excessive competition would undermine the functions of the antitrust laws."); Chicago Professional Sports Ltd. Partnership v. Nat'l Basketball Ass'n, 961 F.2d 667 (7th Cir. 1992) ("Judicial relief from the real injuries caused by rivalry would harm the consumers the antitrust laws are supposed to protect.").

Applying the above standard to this case, the Court finds that BNA has failed to present any evidence of any reduction in output of Maytag appliances or increase in price to the ultimate consumers of the Maytag products. The mere fact that BNA may have had to pay more for Maytag appliances does not mean that competition as a whole suffered. See Atlantic Richfield Co. v. USA Petroleum Co., 495 U.S. 328, 340 [15] n. 8, 110 S. Ct. 1884, 1892 n. 8, 109 L. Ed. 2d 333 (1990) ("The [HN11] antitrust injury requirement cannot be met by broad allegations of harm to the 'market' as an abstract entity. Although all antitrust violations, under both the per se rule and rule-of-reason analysis, 'distort' the market, not every loss stemming from a violation counts as antitrust injury.") BNA's pleadings raise arguments relating to injuries from increased competition, not the lack thereof; and these are not the concern of the antitrust laws. Finally, were an anticompetitive effect of Maytag's pricing practice really to result in less competition, BNA would not be the most appropriate party to assert consumer interests because its interests are not necessarily aligned with consumer interests. The Seventh Circuit has recognized that "when [HN12] the plaintiff is a poor champion of consumers, a court must be especially careful not to grant relief that may undercut the proper function of antitrust." Ball Memorial Hosp. v. Mutual Hosp. Ins., 784 F.2d 1325, 1334 (7th Cir. 1986). Forcing Maytag to allow BNA to participate in a preferential pricing program may improve BNA's market position but will yield relatively few [16] positive results for consumers.⁷

[*327] The Court finds that BNA has failed to demonstrate "antitrust injury," and accordingly, grants summary judgment in favor of Maytag on BNA's antitrust claims--Counts I and III.

C. Fraudulent Concealment and Fraud

HN13 A party asserting fraudulent concealment must prove: [17] "(1) the wrongdoer had a duty to disclose certain facts to another, (2) it knowingly failed to do so, and (3) the other justifiably relied upon such non-disclosure to his detriment." DeVoe Chevrolet-Cadillac v. Cartwright, 526 N.E.2d 1237, 1240 (Ind. App. 4 Dist. 1988). In Keesling v. Baker & Daniels, 571 N.E.2d 562, 565 (Ind. App. 1 Dist. 1991), the court of appeals noted, "Fraudulent concealment can arise from either active efforts to conceal malpractice, or from a failure to disclose material information when a fiduciary or confidential relationship exists. . . . To be affirmative acts of concealment, the actions must be calculated to mislead and hinder a plaintiff from obtaining information by the use of ordinary diligence, or to prevent inquiry or elude investigation." 571 N.E.2d at 565.

⁶The Hasbrouck case is distinguishable because the retail gasoline market was very price-sensitive so that a small difference in retail prices generated significant swings in customers and sales.

⁷Even were this Court to adopt the Ninth Circuit's "injury to competitors" test and conclude that the antitrust injury requirement has been met by BNA, BNA's evidence is insufficient to create an issue for the jury on the causation issue--whether Smith Furniture's participation in the Super Value Program had a substantial effect on BNA's ability to capture a sizeable market. BNA offers no evidence refuting other relevant factors such as two recessions in the Louisville market, additional competition from Sears Brand Central and Circuit City, changes in the distribution procedures in the appliance industry, and increases by Whirlpool and G.E. in their market shares. See Bane depo. at 22-25, 105-106, 149-150.

The key issue is whether Maytag had a duty to disclose its Super Value Program to BNA. BNA contends that Maytag's duty of disclosure was implicit in the RDA and in any case, stemmed from its position of trust. Moreover, it argues that employees of Maytag repeatedly told Mr. Bane, the founder of BNA, that Maytag did not offer a Super Value Program. Although there are certainly disputed [18] issues of fact regarding the alleged misrepresentations, the Court finds that BNA has failed to raise material facts showing that Maytag had a duty to disclose information about the Super Value Program to BNA. It is well-known that Indiana does not recognize an implied good faith and fair dealing in contracts. See Hamlin v. Steward, 622 N.E.2d 535, 540 (Ind. App. 1 Dist. 1993). Nor do the cases in BNA's brief suggest that a duty to disclose certain facts exists between a manufacturer and dealer. See Lift-a Loft Corp. v. Rodes-Roper-Love Ins. Agency, Inc., 975 F.2d 1305, 1311 (7th Cir. 1992).⁸ Because "[HN14[↑]] a] prerequisite to a claim of fraudulent concealment is the existence of a duty to disclose the concealed information," see Jackson v. Blanchard, 601 N.E.2d 411, 418 (Ind. App. 4 Dist. 1992), and because BNA has failed to demonstrate that such a duty existed for Maytag, we grant Maytag's motion for summary judgment as to the fraudulent concealment and fraud claims.

[19] D. Breach of Contract

BNA failed to contest Maytag's argument regarding the breach of contract claim in its motion opposing summary judgment. Because BNA presents no material facts suggesting any obligation of Maytag to continue to supply BNA with refrigerators, we grant Maytag's motion for summary judgment as to this claim as well.

CONCLUSION

The Court grants Maytag's motion for summary judgment as to all counts of BNA's Second Amended Complaint.

It is so ORDERED this 15th day of September, 1994.

SARAH EVANS BARKER, CHIEF JUDGE

United States District Court

Southern District of Indiana

End of Document

⁸ Nor would BNA state a claim under common-law fraud. HN15[↑] In order to prove a claim of fraud, Plaintiffs must show: 1) a material representation of past or existing facts; 2) which is false; 3) which was made with knowledge or reckless ignorance of its falsity; 4) which causes reliance to the detriment of the person relying on the representation. See Knauf Fiber Glass, GmbH v. Stein, 615 N.E.2d 115, 123 (Ind. App. 5 Dist. 1993). At a minimum, BNA has failed to show that it relied to its detriment on any alleged misrepresentation made by Maytag.

General Devices v. Bacon

Court of Appeals of Texas, Fifth District, Dallas

September 15, 1994, Issued

No. 05-90-01298-CV

Reporter

888 S.W.2d 497 *; 1994 Tex. App. LEXIS 3104 **

GENERAL DEVICES, INC., Appellant v. ROGER L. BACON & ALLAN P. SHANNON, Appellees

Subsequent History: Writ denied by, 04/27/1995

Prior History: [1] On Appeal from the 134th Judicial District Court. Dallas County, Texas. Trial Court Cause No. 87-09787-G.

Original Opinion of December 10, 1991, Reported at: 1991 Tex. App. LEXIS 3283.

Bacon v. General Devices, 830 S.W.2d 106, 1992 Tex. LEXIS 63 \(Tex., June 3, 1992\)

Disposition: AFFIRMED in part, REVERSED and RENDERED in part, REVERSED and REMANDED in part covenant, compete, trial court, summary judgment motion, antitrust, summary judgment, lost profits, unenforceable, tortious interference, instructed verdict, matter of law, interfered, contracts, employees, shoppers, Travel, calculated, promisee, damages

Core Terms

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Contracts Law > Types of Contracts > Covenants

Labor & Employment Law > ... > Conditions & Terms > Trade Secrets & Unfair Competition > Noncompetition & Nondisclosure Agreements

Torts > ... > Contracts > Intentional Interference > Defenses

Torts > ... > Commercial Interference > Contracts > General Overview

HN1[] Types of Contracts, Covenants

An unenforceable covenant not to compete cannot form the basis of an action for tortious interference. However, mere unenforceability of a contract is not a defense to an action for tortious interference with a contract's performance.

Torts > ... > Contracts > Intentional Interference > Defenses

Torts > ... > Commercial Interference > Contracts > General Overview

HN2 [] Intentional Interference, Defenses

That a contract is terminable at will is not a defense to an action for tortious interference. Until a contract is terminated, it is valid and subsisting, and third persons are not free to tortiously interfere with the contract.

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Trials > Judgment as Matter of Law > General Overview

HN3 [] Appeals, Standards of Review

An appellate court reviews a trial court's grant of an instructed verdict on an evidentiary basis and determines whether there is any probative evidence to raise a material question of fact. The appellate court reviews the evidence in the light most favorable to the nonmoving party and disregards all contrary evidence and inferences. The appellate court gives the losing party the benefit of all reasonable inferences that arise from contrary evidence. If there is any conflicting evidence of probative value, the appellate court must reverse and remand the issue for a jury's determination.

Contracts Law > ... > Measurement of Damages > Foreseeable Damages > General Overview

HN4 [] Measurement of Damages, Foreseeable Damages

Recovery for lost profits does not require that the loss be susceptible of exact calculation. However, the amount of the loss must be shown by competent evidence and with reasonable certainty. What constitutes reasonably certain evidence of lost profits is a fact intensive determination. At a minimum, opinions or estimates of lost profits must be based on objective facts, figures, or data from which the amount of lost profits can be ascertained.

Contracts Law > ... > Measurement of Damages > Foreseeable Damages > General Overview

Torts > ... > Types of Losses > Lost Income > General Overview

HN5 [] Measurement of Damages, Foreseeable Damages

Evidence of lost income, standing alone, is not evidence of lost profits. The record must show how the lost profits were calculated. Recovery of lost profits must be predicated on one complete calculation. Pieces of several different methods of calculating lost profits are insufficient.

Civil Procedure > Trials > Judgment as Matter of Law > General Overview

Contracts Law > ... > Measurement of Damages > Foreseeable Damages > General Overview

HN6 [] Trials, Judgment as Matter of Law

To withstand a no evidence-directed verdict challenge, a party must show either a history of profitability or the actual existence of future contracts from which lost profits can be calculated with reasonable certainty. Texas cases permit recovery for lost profits in reliance upon routinely kept business records so long as the evaluation of the business's decreased profitability is based upon objective facts, figures, and data.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Appropriateness

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Appellate Review > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Appellate Review > Standards of Review

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Genuine Disputes

HN7 Entitlement as Matter of Law, Appropriateness

Summary judgment is proper if the record shows there is no genuine issue of any material fact and that the movant is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. Tex. R. Civ. P. 166a(c). The movant bears the burden of showing there is no genuine issue of material fact and that it is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. In deciding whether a disputed material fact issue exists, an appellate court accepts the evidence favorable to the nonmovant as true. The appellate court indulges in every reasonable inference and resolves any doubts in the nonmovant's favor. Summary judgment is proper when the controversy involves an unambiguous document.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Contracts Law > Types of Contracts > Covenants

Contracts Law > Defenses > Ambiguities & Mistakes > General Overview

HN8 Types of Contracts, Covenants

If a court can give a definite legal meaning or interpretation to a written instrument, it is not ambiguous. Courts construe unambiguous contracts as a matter of law and enforce unambiguous contracts as written. An instrument is ambiguous if it is reasonably susceptible to more than one meaning. If a covenant not to compete is susceptible to two meanings, the construction that validates it prevails.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Contracts Law > Types of Contracts > Covenants

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Damages > Monetary Damages

Labor & Employment Law > ... > Conditions & Terms > Trade Secrets & Unfair Competition > Noncompetition & Nondisclosure Agreements

HN9 Types of Contracts, Covenants

An agreement not to compete is reasonable if: (1) it is ancillary to a valid transaction or relationship; (2) it is necessary to protect the promisee's legitimate interest; and (3) neither hardship to the promisor nor public injury outweighs the covenant's legitimate benefits to the promisee. A covenant not to compete must be appropriately limited as to time, territory, and type of activity. A restrictive covenant must stand or fall as written for an award of money damages.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Contracts Law > Types of Contracts > Covenants

Contracts Law > Contract Interpretation > Severability

Labor & Employment Law > ... > Conditions & Terms > Trade Secrets & Unfair Competition > Noncompetition & Nondisclosure Agreements

HN10 [blue icon] Types of Contracts, Covenants

Although at common law courts did not redraft a contract to make it reasonable or enforceable, courts may sever an invalid covenant not to compete from lawful portions of the contract.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Contracts Law > Types of Contracts > Covenants

Labor & Employment Law > ... > Conditions & Terms > Trade Secrets & Unfair Competition > Noncompetition & Nondisclosure Agreements

HN11 [blue icon] Types of Contracts, Covenants

Unless an agreement not to compete is reasonable, it is a restraint of trade. Whether a covenant not to compete is a reasonable restraint of trade is a question of law for the court. Not every contract in restraint of trade is prohibited. An agreement may be unreasonable as between the parties yet not be a restraint of trade. A breach of an unreasonable restraint-of-trade covenant will not support damages.

Labor & Employment Law > ... > Conditions & Terms > Trade Secrets & Unfair Competition > Noncompetition & Nondisclosure Agreements

HN12 [blue icon] Trade Secrets & Unfair Competition, Noncompetition & Nondisclosure Agreements

See 1989 Tex. Gen. Laws 4852-53, amended by 1993 Tex. Gen. Laws 4201-02.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

Labor & Employment Law > ... > Conditions & Terms > Trade Secrets & Unfair Competition > Noncompetition & Nondisclosure Agreements

HN13 [blue icon] Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

An unreasonable non-compete agreement between parties does not necessarily violate antitrust laws. Antitrust law violations require an adverse effect on the relevant market.

Counsel: For Appellant: Robert B. Gilbreath and D. Bradley Dickinson, Dallas.

For Appellees: Bill Atkins, Arlington.

Judges: Before Justices Rowe,¹ Kinkeade, and Maloney. Opinion by Justice Maloney

Opinion by: FRANCES MALONEY

Opinion

[*500] OPINION ON REMAND

Opinion by Justice Maloney

The Texas Supreme Court vacated our earlier opinion and judgment and remanded this case² [2] for our review in light of its opinion in Travel Masters, Inc. v. Star Tours, Inc., 827 S.W.2d 830 (Tex. 1991). We have again reviewed the record and the supreme court's opinion in Travel Masters.³ We affirm in part. We reverse and remand in part. We reverse and render in part.

FACTUAL BACKGROUND

General Devices, Inc. (GDI) is a "job shop" that furnishes highly skilled temporary personnel to high-tech companies. GDI employed Roger L. Bacon and Allan P. Shannon. GDI and its employees execute employment agreements. All employment agreements contain covenants not to compete.

GDI placed Bacon, Shannon and twelve other engineers with LTV Aerospace & Defense and Vought Corporation. In 1987, Bacon, Shannon, and the other twelve LTV job shoppers left GDI's employment. Some evidence in the record indicates that Bacon and Shannon induced or encouraged the twelve other employees to leave GDI.

PROCEDURAL BACKGROUND

GDI sued Bacon and Shannon alleging that they: (1) breached the covenants not to compete in their employment contracts; (2) tortiously interfered with GDI's contractual relationships with twelve of its employees; and (3) tortiously interfered with [3] GDI's contractual relationship with LTV. Bacon and Shannon answered and sought a declaratory judgment that the covenants not to compete in their and all other employees' contracts were unenforceable. Bacon and Shannon also counterclaimed, alleging a cause of action under the Texas Free Enterprise and Antitrust Act of 1983. See TEX. BUS. & COM. CODE ANN. §§ 15.01-52 (Vernon 1987 & Supp. 1994).

GDI moved for summary judgment alleging that (1) the covenants not to compete were enforceable and (2) Bacon and Shannon had no viable claims under the Texas Free Enterprise and Antitrust Act. Bacon and Shannon responded to GDI's motion for summary judgment and moved for partial summary judgment alleging that (1) the covenants not to compete were unenforceable and (2) GDI had violated the Texas Free Enterprise and Antitrust Act of 1983. The trial court granted GDI's motion for summary judgment and denied Bacon and Shannon's motion for

¹ The Honorable Gordon Rowe, Justice, participated in this case on original submission. He did not participate in this case on remand.

² General Devices v. Bacon, 836 S.W.2d 179 (Tex. App.--Dallas 1991), opinion and judgment vacated and remanded per curiam, Bacon v. General Devices, Inc., 830 S.W.2d 106 (Tex. 1992).

³ We considered the potential impact of Travel Masters on this case when it was before us on motion for rehearing. We concluded that Travel Masters did not affect our original opinion's validity.

partial summary judgment. The trial court found that the covenants not to compete were valid and enforceable, and Bacon and Shannon had no viable counterclaims.

The case went to trial on GDI's remaining claims. At the close of GDI's case-in-chief, the trial [4] court directed a verdict for Bacon and Shannon holding that GDI presented insufficient evidence on damages.

GDI appealed, asserting that the trial court erred in directing a verdict against it. Bacon and Shannon cross-appealed, asserting that the trial court erred in denying their motion and granting GDI's motion for summary judgment. They argue the covenants not to compete were unenforceable and consequently GDI's claims of tortious interference were without merit.

TORTIOUS INTERFERENCE UNDER TRAVEL MASTERS

GDI claimed Bacon and Shannon interfered with the employment contracts between GDI and the twelve employees. GDI also [*501] claimed that Bacon interfered with the contractual relationship between GDI and LTV by coercing LTV into allowing GDI's fourteen employees to change job shops while still working for LTV. It did not allege below or argue on appeal that Bacon and Shannon interfered with the covenant not to compete.

In contrast, Star Tours attempted to enforce the covenant not to compete against a former employee and her travel agency, Travel Masters. See Travel Masters, 827 S.W.2d at 832. The jury found that Star Tours's former employee's father [5] and Travel Masters willfully and intentionally induced Star Tour's former employee to breach the covenant not to compete. Id. The Travel Masters court held that the covenant not to compete was unenforceable because it was not ancillary to an otherwise enforceable agreement. Id. at 833.

HN1 An unenforceable covenant not to compete cannot "form the basis of an action for tortious interference." See id. However, "mere unenforceability of a contract is not a defense to an action for tortious interference with [a contract's] performance." Juliette Fowler Homes, Inc. v. Welch Assocs., Inc., 793 S.W.2d 660, 664-65 \(Tex. 1990\).

HN2 That a contract is terminable at will is not a defense to an action for tortious interference. Sterner v. Marathon Oil Co., 767 S.W.2d 686, 689 \(Tex. 1989\). Until a contract is terminated, it is valid and subsisting, and third persons are not free to tortiously interfere with the contract. Id.

Bacon and Shannon argued that an unenforceable covenant not to compete is a defense to tortious interference claims. Because GDI never asserted that Bacon and Shannon tortiously interfered with the covenant not to compete, the covenant's invalidity [6] is not a defense.

The trial court did not err in denying Bacon and Shannon's motion for summary judgment on GDI's tortious interference claims.

INSTRUCTED VERDICT

GDI complains the trial court erred in granting Bacon and Shannon's motion for instructed verdict. The trial court granted the instructed verdict because GDI "failed to present sufficient evidence of damages to submit to the jury." GDI maintains its damage evidence was sufficient to submit the case to the jury.

1. Standard of Review

HN3 When we review the trial court's grant of an instructed verdict on an evidentiary basis, we determine whether there is any probative evidence to raise a material question of fact. Collora v. Navarro, 574 S.W.2d 65, 68 \(Tex. 1978\). We review the evidence in the light most favorable to the nonmoving party and disregard all contrary evidence and inferences. Id. We give the losing party the benefit of all reasonable inferences that arise from contrary evidence. See White v. Southwestern Bell Tel. Co., 651 S.W.2d 260, 262 \(Tex. 1983\). If there is any conflicting evidence of probative value, we must reverse and remand the issue for the jury's determination. Id.

[7] 2. Lost Profits

HN4 [↑] "Recovery for lost profits does not require that the loss be susceptible of exact calculation." Szczepanik v. First S. Trust Co., 883 S.W.2d 648, 37 Tex. Sup. J. 860, 861 (June 2, 1994); Holt Atherton Indus., Inc. v. Heine, 835 S.W.2d 80, 84 \(Tex. 1992\). However, the amount of the loss must be shown by competent evidence and with reasonable certainty. Heine, 835 S.W.2d at 84; D/FW Commercial Roofing Co. v. Mehra, 854 S.W.2d 182, 187 (Tex. App.--Dallas 1993, no writ). "What constitutes reasonably certain evidence of lost profits is a fact intensive determination. At a minimum, opinions or estimates of lost profits must be based on objective facts, figures, or data from which the amount of lost profits can be ascertained." Heine, 835 S.W.2d at 84.

HN5 [↑] Evidence of lost income, standing alone, is no evidence of lost profits. Id. The record must show how the lost profits were calculated. Id.; see Frank B. Hall & Co. v. Beach, Inc., 733 S.W.2d 251, 259 (Tex. App.-- [502] Corpus Christi 1987, writ ref'd n.r.e.); Village Square, Ltd. v. Barton, 660 S.W.2d 556, 559-60 (Tex. App.--San Antonio 1983, writ ref'd n.r.e.). "Recovery [8] of lost profits must be predicated on one complete calculation." Szczepanik, 37 Tex. Sup. J. at 861; Heine, 835 S.W.2d at 85. "Pieces of several different methods of calculating lost profits" are insufficient. Id. at 85-86. HN6 [↑] To withstand a "no evidence-directed verdict" challenge:

A party must show either a history of profitability or the actual existence of future contracts from which lost profits can be calculated with reasonable certainty. Texas cases permit recovery for lost profits in reliance upon routinely kept business records so long as the evaluation of the business's decreased profitability is based upon objective facts, figures, and data.

Mehra, 854 S.W.2d at 187.

3. Application of Law to Facts

GDI presented evidence of the monies: (1) GDI received from LTV for its job shoppers and (2) GDI paid to its job shoppers during the year before Bacon and Shannon's actions. Both GDI executives testified that, if Bacon and Shannon had not encouraged the other employees to leave, GDI's relationship with LTV and the job shoppers would have continued. Viewing this evidence in the light most favorable to GDI and considering all reasonable inferences [9] from that evidence, there was sufficient evidence for the jury to determine that Bacon's and Shannon's actions damaged GDI. The evidence presented a fact question for the jury. The trial court erred in granting an instructed verdict against GDI.

We sustain GDI's first point of error.

BACON AND SHANNON'S MOTION FOR SUMMARY JUDGMENT

In their sole cross-point of error, Bacon and Shannon maintain that the trial court erred in not granting their motion and in granting GDI's motion for summary judgment.

1. Standard of Review

HN7 [↑] Summary judgment is proper if the record shows there is no genuine issue of any material fact and that the movant is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. See TEX. R. CIV. P. 166a\(c\). The movant bears the burden of showing there is no genuine issue of material fact and that it is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. In deciding whether a disputed material fact issue exists, we accept the evidence favorable to the nonmovant as true. We indulge in every reasonable inference and resolve any doubts in the nonmovant's favor. Nixon v. Mr. Property Management Co., 690 S.W.2d 546, 548-49 \(1985\). Summary judgment is proper when the controversy [10] involves an unambiguous document. See Moody v. Moody Nat'l Bank, 522 S.W.2d 710, 715 (Tex.Civ.App.--Houston [14th Dist.] 1975, writ ref'd n.r.e.).

2. Rules of Construction

HN8 [↑] If we can give a definite legal meaning or interpretation to a written instrument, it is not ambiguous. We construe unambiguous contracts as a matter of law. Coker v. Coker, 650 S.W.2d 391, 393 (Tex. 1983). We enforce unambiguous contracts as written. Universal C.I.T. Credit Corp. v. Daniel, 150 Tex. 513, 517, 243 S.W.2d 154, 157 (1951).

An instrument is ambiguous if it is reasonably susceptible to more than one meaning. R & P Enters. v. LaGuarda, Gavrel & Kirk, Inc., 596 S.W.2d 517, 519 (Tex. 1980). If a covenant not to compete is susceptible to two meanings, the construction that validates it prevails. Harris v. Rowe, 593 S.W.2d 303, 306 (Tex. 1979).

3. Covenants Not to Compete

a. Common Law

HN9 [↑] An agreement not to compete is reasonable if: (1) it is ancillary to a valid transaction or relationship; (2) it is necessary to protect the promisee's legitimate interest; and (3) neither hardship to the promisor nor public injury outweighs the covenant's legitimate benefits [11] to the promisee. DeSantis v. Wackenhet Corp., 793 S.W.2d 670, 681-82 (Tex. 1990), cert. denied, 498 U.S. 1048, [*503] 111 S. Ct. 755, 112 L. Ed. 2d 775, (1991). A covenant not to compete must be appropriately limited as to "time, territory, and type of activity." DeSantis, 793 S.W.2d at 682. A restrictive covenant must stand or fall as written for an award of money damages. Frankiewicz v. National Comp Assocs., 633 S.W.2d 505, 507 (Tex. 1982).

HN10 [↑] At common law, courts did not redraft a contract to make it reasonable or enforceable. Id. But, we may sever an invalid covenant not to compete from lawful portions of the contract. Murco Agency, Inc. v. Ryan, 800 S.W.2d 600, 606 n.9 (Tex. App.--Dallas 1990, no writ).

HN11 [↑] Unless an agreement not to compete is reasonable, it is a restraint of trade. Martin v. Credit Protection Ass'n. Inc., 793 S.W.2d 667, 668-69 (Tex. 1990). Whether a covenant not to compete is a reasonable restraint of trade is a question of law for the court. Id. at 668; DeSantis, 793 S.W.2d at 681. Not every contract in restraint of trade is prohibited. DeSantis, 793 S.W.2d at 687. An agreement may be unreasonable as between [12] the parties yet not be a restraint of trade. Id. at 688. A breach of an unreasonable restraint-of-trade covenant will not support damages. See Weatherford Oil Tool Co. v. Campbell, 161 Tex. 310, 314, 340 S.W.2d 950, 953 (1960).

b. Statutes

At the time of trial, the Texas Business and Commerce Code provided:⁴

HN12 [↑] [A] covenant not to compete is enforceable to the extent that it:

(1) is ancillary to an otherwise enforceable agreement . . . ; and

(2) contains reasonable limitations as to time, geographical area, and scope of activity to be restrained that do not impose a greater restraint than is necessary to protect the goodwill or other business interest of the promisee.

Act of June 16, 1989, 71st Leg., R.S., ch. 1193, § 1, 1989 Tex. Gen. Laws 4852-53, amended by Act of June 19, 1993, 73d Leg., R.S., ch. 966, § 1, 1993 Tex. Gen. Laws 4201-02 (emphasis added). If the covenant:

⁴ Since the trial court decided this case, the legislature has amended the Texas Business and Commerce Code regarding reformation of covenants not to compete. See TEX. BUS. & COM. CODE ANN. §§ 15.50-51 (Vernon Supp. 1994). However, as the trial court finally adjudicated the enforceability of the covenants before the effective date of the amendments, the amendments do not apply. TEX. BUS. & COM. CODE ANN. § 15.52 (Vernon Supp. 1994).

does not meet the criteria set out in Subdivision \(2\) of Section 15.50 the court, at the request of the promisee, shall reform the covenant to the extent necessary . . . and enforce the covenant as reformed, except that the court may not award [13] the promisee damages for a breach of the covenant before its reformation and the relief granted shall be limited to injunctive relief.

Act of June 16, 1989, 71st Leg., R.S., ch 1193, § 1, 1989 Tex. Gen. Laws 4852 (amended 1993) (emphasis added).

4. Application of Law to Facts

a. Covenant Not To Compete

Bacon's and Shannon's employment agreements are identical. The agreements identify GDI as "COMPANY," Bacon or Shannon as "EMPLOYEE," and Vought Corporation (in Shannon's agreement) and LTV Aerospace & Defense (in Bacon's agreement) as "Client." Paragraph [14] 8(a) contains the covenant not to compete. It reads as follows:

Without written approval from COMPANY, EMPLOYEE shall not accept direct or other [sic] subcontract employment either at this or other facilities of CLIENT, or from any firm with which COMPANY has an existing contract, during and for a period of thirty (30) days beyond the period of association between COMPANY and CLIENT or any firm of aforesaid.

(Emphasis added.) Neither party argues the covenant is ambiguous, but they disagree on its meaning. GDI asserts that the covenant only limits Bacon and Shannon for thirty days after their relationship with GDI ends. Bacon and Shannon argue that the covenant limits their employment until thirty days after GDI's relationship with its clients ends.

[*504] The covenant is not ambiguous. Only one interpretation is possible. The phrase "beyond the period of association between COMPANY and CLIENT" refers to the business relationship between GDI and its clients--not GDI and its job shoppers.

The covenant prohibits Bacon and Shannon from accepting employment from GDI's clients for thirty days after GDI and its clients' association ends. The relationship [15] between GDI and its clients could exist indefinitely. The covenant does not define any geographic area where the job shoppers could accept employment during this time. Because it is not sufficiently limited as to time and territory, the covenant is not reasonable. We find the covenants not to compete unenforceable as a matter of law.

The trial court erred when it ruled "Paragraph 8(a) in General Device's Employment Contract is reasonable as a matter of law and enforceable." Consequently, the trial court erred in granting GDI's motion for summary judgment and denying that portion of Bacon and Shannon's motion for summary judgment based on the covenant's enforceability.

b. Antitrust Violations

Bacon and Shannon argue that if the covenant is unreasonable, it violates antitrust laws. We disagree. HN13 An unreasonable agreement between the parties does not necessarily violate the antitrust laws. Antitrust law violations require an adverse effect on the relevant market.

Bacon and Shannon offered no summary judgment evidence of the relevant market or any effect on that market. The trial court did not err in denying Bacon and Shannon's motion for summary judgment on their antitrust [16] claims. We affirm the trial court's denial of Bacon and Shannon's motion for summary judgment.

However, GDI moved for summary judgment on Bacon and Shannon's antitrust claim. Its motion alleged that the covenant not to compete was reasonable. The trial court granted GDI's motion for summary judgment because the covenant not to compete was reasonable and enforceable. We have found the covenant not to compete was neither reasonable nor enforceable. The trial court erred in granting GDI's motion for summary judgment on the antitrust claims.

CONCLUSION

We affirm the trial court's denial of summary judgment on Bacon and Shannon's antitrust and tortious interference claims. We reverse the instructed verdict granted against GDI. We reverse the trial court's summary judgment for GDI which held the covenant not to compete reasonable and enforceable as a matter of law. We reverse the trial court's denial of summary judgment on Bacon and Shannon's unenforceability of the covenant not to compete. We render judgment that the covenants are unreasonable and unenforceable. We reverse the trial court's summary judgment for GDI on Bacon and Shannon's claim of antitrust.

We remand this cause [17] for further proceedings consistent with this opinion.

FRANCES MALONEY

JUSTICE

End of Document

Pine Ridge Recycling v. Butts County

United States District Court for the Middle District of Georgia, Macon Division

September 15, 1994, Decided ; September 15, 1994, Filed, Entered

C.A. 93-426-2-MAC (WDO)

Reporter

864 F. Supp. 1338 *; 1994 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 13210 **

PINE RIDGE RECYCLING, INC., et al., v. BUTTS COUNTY, GA, et al., Defendants.

Core Terms

Ridge, landfill, disposal, solid waste, injunction, Region, site, customers, transfer station, geographic, monopolize, municipal, preliminary injunction, Antitrust, prices, monopoly power, per ton, defendants', ordinances, vertical, Zoning

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > Preliminary Considerations > Federal & State Interrelationships > Abstention

HN1 [down arrow] Federal & State Interrelationships, Abstention

Abstention is not required where the court has not been asked to determine the constitutionality of a state statute.

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Injunctions > Preliminary & Temporary Injunctions

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Injunctions > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Injunctions > Grounds for Injunctions > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Injunctions > Grounds for Injunctions > Public Interest

HN2 [down arrow] Injunctions, Preliminary & Temporary Injunctions

A preliminary injunction under Fed. R. Civ. P. 65 is an extraordinary remedy which should be granted only if the moving party clearly establishes: (1) a substantial likelihood that he will ultimately prevail on the merits; (2) a showing that he will suffer irreparable injury unless the injunction issues; (3) proof that the threatened injury to him outweighs whatever damage the proposed injunction may cause the opposing party; and (4) a showing that the injunction, if issued, would not be adverse to the public interest.

Civil Procedure > ... > Injunctions > Grounds for Injunctions > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Injunctions > Preliminary & Temporary Injunctions

HN3 [] Injunctions, Grounds for Injunctions

The preliminary injunction is an extraordinary and drastic remedy not to be granted unless the movant clearly carries the burden of persuasion as to the four prerequisites.

Civil Procedure > ... > Injunctions > Grounds for Injunctions > General Overview

HN4 [] Injunctions, Grounds for Injunctions

Plaintiffs need only show a likelihood of success on one of their alternative theories of recovery in order to obtain injunctive relief.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Market Definition > Relevant Market > Geographic Market Definition

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > Relevant Market

HN5 [] Relevant Market, Geographic Market Definition

A foremost issue in an antitrust action is defining the relevant product and geographic markets. Only after the markets are defined, can the court assess defendants' power within the relevant market.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

HN6 [] Regulated Practices, Market Definition

The product market is defined as the business in which defendants are engaged unless a reasonably interchangeable substitute product is available to the consumers.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

HN7 [] Regulated Practices, Market Definition

A geographic market is essentially an economic concept in which the courts should examine supplier-customer relations.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

HN8 [] Regulated Practices, Market Definition

The geographic market analysis includes consideration of where buyers seek supplies and sellers seek purchasers and an examination of transportation and other transaction costs.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

HN9 [down] Regulated Practices, Market Definition

The geographic market has been described as the market area in which the seller operates, and to which the purchaser can practicably turn for supplies.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

HN10 [down] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Section 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 2, provides that every person who shall monopolize, or attempt to monopolize, or combine or conspire with any other person or persons, to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce among the several states, or with foreign nations, shall be guilty of a felony.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

HN11 [down] Monopolies & Monopolization, Actual Monopolization

A monopolization claim requires proof of two elements: (1) defendants' possession of monopoly power; and (2) defendants' willful acquisition and maintenance of that power.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

HN12 [down] Monopolies & Monopolization, Actual Monopolization

Monopoly power can be shown by an ability to raise prices profitably or exclude competition.

Counsel: [\[1\]](#) For PINE RIDGE RECYCLING, INC., plaintiff: Mr. Stephen E. O'Day, Mr. Clark G. Sullivan, Atlanta, GA. Mr. George E. Butler, II, Atlanta, GA.

For BUTTS COUNTY, GA, THE BUTTS COUNTY BOARD OF COMMISSIONERS, THE SOLID WASTE MANAGEMENT AUTHORITY OF BUTTS COUNTY, GEORGIA, RUSS CRUMBLEY, Individually and as a Member of the Butts County Board of Commissioners, JIMMY HARDY, Individually and as a Member of the Butts County Board of Commissioners, FREDERICK J. HEAD, Individually and as a Member of the Butts County Board of Commissioners, EDDIE L. TRAVIS, Individually and as a Member of the Butts County Board of Commissioners, R. WESLEY HALEY, Individually and as member of the Butts County Board of Commissioners and The Solid Waste Management Authority of Butts County, Georgia, BILL JONES, Individually and as Members of The Solid Waste Management Authority of Butts County, Georgia, HARVEY NORRIS, Individually and as Members of The Solid Waste Management Authority of Butts County, Georgia, SAM THURMAN, Individually and as Members of The Solid Waste Management Authority of Butts County, Georgia, ROXILU K. BOHRER, Individually and as Members of The Solid Waste Management Authority of Butts County, [\[2\]](#) Georgia, JERRY GOODSON, Individually and as Members of The Solid Waste Management Authority of Butts County, Georgia, LIZ CARMICHAEL JONES, Individually and as Members of The Solid Waste Management Authority of Butts County, Georgia, GARY GRIZZELL, Individually and as Manager of The Solid Waste Management Authority of Butts County, Georgia, defendants: Mr. Joseph R. Cullens, Mr. Jack N. Sibley, Mr. H. Lang Young, II, Atlanta GA. For ALL DEFENDANTS: Mr. Nickolas P. Chilivis, Atlanta, GA.

Judges: OWENS, JR.

Opinion by: WILBUR OWENS, JR.

Opinion

[*1340] ORDER

This action seeks to prevent Butts County, Georgia, its Board of Commissioners ("Board"), the Butts County Solid Waste Management Authority ("Authority"), and their individual members from opposing or otherwise interfering with the establishment of Pine Ridge's municipal solid waste landfill ("MSWLF"). Plaintiffs Pine Ridge Recycling, Inc. ("Pine Ridge") and Stephen Dale have moved for preliminary injunctive relief based on violations of the Sherman Antitrust Act ("Sherman Act"), 15 U.S.C. §§ 1, et seq., the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act ("RICO"), 18 U.S.C. §§ 1961/31 et seq., and the Commerce Clause of the United States Constitution, U.S. Const. Art. 1, § 8, cl. 3. The court held a hearing on the motion on January 27, 1994, and requested further briefing after limited discovery. Defendants strenuously oppose the motion. After careful consideration of the arguments of counsel, the relevant case law, and the record as a whole, the court makes the following findings of fact and conclusions of law.

I. FINDINGS OF FACT

1. The Butts County Board of Commissioners is a governing authority in the State of Georgia, governing pursuant to authority granted by the Georgia Constitution and state statute.
2. The Butts County Solid Waste Management Authority was created pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 12-8-53\(a\) and operates a MSWLF in Butts County, Georgia ("the Butts landfill").
3. A MSWLF is a sanitary landfill which accepts any non-hazardous solid waste.
4. Effective in the early 1990s, federal regulations, known as "Subtitle D," tightened the requirements on MSWLFs.
¹ The Authority's current MSWLF does not comply with "Subtitle D", but the county intends to build and operate a conforming MSWLF before the expiration of the expansion permit.
- [4] 5. In 1993, the Authority applied for and received a vertical expansion permit from the Georgia Environmental Protection Division ("EPD") to continue receiving waste at its existing landfill until July 1, 1998. The vertical expansion permit allows the Authority to dispose of an unlimited amount of solid waste until July 1998.
6. Landfills in several neighboring counties have closed recently because of the Subtitle D regulations. (Kamerschen Supp. Aff. App. B.)
7. Due to these closures, the Butts landfill has been able to increase its intake of waste by 148% since obtaining its vertical expansion permit. (Wiltzee Aff. Exh. A.)
8. Since November 1991, revenues at the Butts landfill have risen from $ 0.00 to $ 680,000 per year. During that same period, defendants' share of the solid waste disposal market in Butts County has risen from 12.3% to 96%.

¹ Subtitle D refers to a subtitle of the Federal Resource Conservation and Recovery Act ("RCRA") 42 U.S.C. §§ 6941, et seq., and its implementing regulations. 40 C.F.R. Part 258.

Defendants share of the Spalding and Henry County markets have increased from 0% to 95% and from 0% to 48%, respectively.² (Wiltzee Aff. Exh. A.)

[5] 9. Defendants generally charge $ 18.00 per ton to dispose of residential waste originating outside Butts County and $ 20.50 per ton for most commercial waste. (Grizzell Depo., pp. 10-25.) Defendants earn a profit [^{*}1341] of 121% on disposal of commercial waste. (Kamerschen Depo., p. 132.)

10. Defendants plan to use the profits from the current landfill to build a Subtitle D landfill before the vertical expansion permit expires on July 1, 1998.

11. The Butts landfill is managed by defendant Gary Grizzell who is employed by the Authority.

12. Pine Ridge was incorporated for the purpose of developing and operating MSWLFs within Georgia.

13. Pine Ridge has purchased a 201 acre site in southwest Butts County on the border of Spalding County for approximately $ 290,000 and plans to construct a "Subtitle D" MSWLF thereon ("the Pine Ridge site"). (Dale Depo. II, p. 77; Exh P-88, P-89.)

14. In addition to purchasing the land, Pine Ridge has invested over $ 1,000,000 in planning and developing the Pine Ridge landfill. (Dale Aff. P 9.)

15. Pine Ridge has the financial capability to complete the landfill. (Dale Aff. P 10.)

16. Once permitted, Pine Ridge can be in operation in approximately 12 months. [6] (Wiltzee Aff. Exh B.) The principals of Pine Ridge plan to focus on Butts, Henry, and Spalding Counties as principal market areas, but will accept waste from a range of 30 miles or more. (Dale Depo. I, p. 10; Transcript of 1/27/94 hrg., p. 124.)

17. Pine Ridge has agreed to accept Spalding County's waste for $ 20.00 per ton, and expects to operate profitably by charging $ 20.00 per ton to waste haulers. (Dale Depo. I, p. 13-14, 111.)

18. Pine Ridge has not received a permit from Georgia EPD and can not begin construction of its proposed facility until a permit is issued.

19. Georgia EPD has completed its review of Pine Ridge's permit application and will issue a permit contingent upon the following: (1) a letter from Butts County to EPD that the site is consistent with Butts County's solid waste management plan; (2) a letter from Butts County to EPD that the site complies with local land use and zoning ordinances; and (3) defendants must hold a public hearing required by O.C.G.A. 12-8-24(e)(2). (Dale Aff., Exh. A.)

20. Georgia statute requires cities and counties to develop solid waste disposal plans assuring adequate disposal capacity over the next ten years. O.C.G.A. § 12-8-31.1.

[7] 21. Butts County has developed a solid waste disposal plan, but denies that the Pine Ridge site is consistent with the plan. This issue was recently addressed by the Superior Court of Butts County which granted summary judgment to Pine Ridge. Pine Ridge Recycling, Inc. v. Butts County, et al., Civ Action No. 92-659 (Butts Sup. Ct.) ("Butts II").

22. Defendants argue that addition of the Pine ridge facility will increase the amount of waste received at disposal facilities in contravention of O.C.G.A. § 12-8-21(c) and 12-8-39.1 which require counties to have a program for reduction of the amount of municipal solid waste received at such facilities by 25%.

² The figures for Spalding County exclude waste disposed of at the Southern States transfer station as discussed in paragraphs 20-24 the conclusions of law.

23. The Georgia Court of Appeals affirmed the trial court's mandamus requiring Butts County to verify to EPD that the Pine Ridge site is consistent with the Butts Waste Plan. Butts County, et al. v. Pine Ridge Recycling, Inc., 213 Ga. App. 510, 445 S.E.2d 294 \(Ga. Ct. App. 1994\).

24. On April 23, 1992, the Butts County Board of Zoning Appeals granted Pine Ridge's application for a Special Exception to the Butts County Zoning Ordinance allowing construction of a MSWLF. (Dale Aff., P 8.)

[8] 25. The Special Exception is being challenged in two state suits, Pine Ridge Recycling, Inc. v. Butts County, et al., Civ Action No. 92-285 (Butts Sup. Ct.) ("Butts I") and Crossland v. Butts County Zoning Board of Appeals, Civ Action No. 92-279 (Butts Sup. Ct.) ("Crossland").

II. CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

A. Abstention

1. This case presents issues of federal law, predominantly antitrust law and violations of the Commerce Clause. The legal issues presented do not mirror those presented [*1342] in the various state court cases involving these parties.

2. The court has not been asked to overrule current state court judgments. Rooker v. Fidelity Trust Co., 263 U.S. 413, 44 S. Ct. 149, 68 L. Ed. 362 \(1923\).

3. HN1 Abstention is not required because this court has not been asked to determine the constitutionality of a state statute. Railroad Commission of Texas v. Pullman Co., 312 U.S. 496, 61 S. Ct. 643, 85 L. Ed. 971 \(1941\).

4. The court declines to abstain from exercising jurisdiction in this matter.

B. Preliminary Injunction

5. HN2 A preliminary injunction under [9] Rule 65 is an extraordinary remedy which should be granted only if the moving party clearly establishes: (1) a substantial likelihood that he will ultimately prevail on the merits; (2) a showing that he will suffer irreparable injury unless the injunction issues; (3) proof that the threatened injury to him outweighs whatever damage the proposed injunction may cause the opposing party; and (4) a showing that the injunction, if issued, would not be adverse to the public interest. Lucero v. Operation Rescue, 954 F.2d 624, 627 \(11th Cir. 1992\); Tally-Ho, Inc. v. Coast Community College, 889 F.2d 1018, 1022 \(11th Cir. 1989\); Johnson v. U.S. Dep't of Agriculture, 734 F.2d 774, 781 \(11th Cir. 1984\).

6. HN3 "The preliminary injunction is an extraordinary and drastic remedy not to be granted unless the movant 'clearly carries the burden of persuasion' as to the four prerequisites." United States v. Jefferson County, 720 F.2d 1511, 1519 \(11th Cir. 1983\) (quoting Canal Authority v. Callaway, 489 F.2d 567 (5th Cir. 1974)).

7. Plaintiffs have sufficiently [10] demonstrated the last three requirements for a preliminary injunction.

8. First, Pine Ridge will suffer irreparable harm the longer it is delayed from obtaining a permit, in that they will be precluded from entering disposal contracts with surrounding counties. See GSW, Inc. v. Long County, 999 F.2d 1508, 1519 \(11th Cir. 1993\).

9. Because state law requires counties to have a plan assuring adequate solid waste disposal over the next ten years, counties will be entering into long term disposal contracts with landfills. The longer Pine Ridge is delayed from becoming operational, the less chance it will have to contract with counties which are committed to long term contracts with other landfills.

10. Moreover, Pine Ridge incurs substantial monetary loss with each day that it is delayed in obtaining an EPD permit. In light of the Local Government Antitrust Immunity Act ("LGAIA"), 15 U.S.C. § 35\(a\), plaintiffs can not recover damages from the county defendants. Hence, any money damages can not be regained.

11. Second, the court finds that the harm to plaintiffs absent an injunction substantially outweighs any potential [\[11\]](#) harm to defendants from imposition of the injunction.

12. Absent an injunction, Pine Ridge can not obtain an EPD permit or begin construction of the landfill. This delay, in turn, causes a substantial monetary loss and prevents Pine Ridge from entering into contracts with waste generators and counties for solid waste disposal. Any injunctive relief granted will be tailored so as to limit harm to Butts County and its current customers.

13. Third, an injunction will have no detrimental effect on the public. The public interest is served by having safe and low-cost solid waste disposal facilities. An injunction will allow for competition in the solid waste disposal market and will likely lower prices in that market.

14. On the question of whether plaintiffs have adequately demonstrated a substantial likelihood of success on the merits, HN4[↑] plaintiffs need only show a likelihood of success on one of their alternative theories of recovery in order to obtain injunctive relief.

15. Plaintiffs' main claims are based on the Sherman Antitrust Act and allege a monopoly, an attempted monopoly, a conspiracy to monopolize, and restraint of trade. Plaintiffs also allege that defendants have violated [\[12\]](#) the Commerce Clause. (Complaint PP 123-146, 163-168.)

[*1343] C. Antitrust Claims

1. Product Market

16. HN5[↑] A foremost issue in an antitrust action is defining the relevant product and geographic markets. Only after the markets are defined, can the court assess defendants' power within the relevant market. Thompson v. Metropolitan Multi-List, Inc., 934 F.2d 1566, 1572 \(11th Cir. 1991\).

17. HN6[↑] The product market is defined as the business in which defendants are engaged unless a reasonably interchangeable substitute product is available to the consumers. United States v. E.I. du Pont de Nemours & Co., 351 U.S. 377, 404, 76 S. Ct. 994, 1005, 100 L. Ed. 1264 \(1956\).

18. Defendants are engaged in the service of disposal of municipal solid waste at a landfill. Their customers are generators and haulers of municipal solid waste.

19. The parties dispute whether disposal of municipal solid waste at a transfer station is a part of the product market. Seemingly, customers would be indifferent whether their waste was disposed at a landfill or processed through a transfer station. However, in this region, [\[13\]](#) the cost charged by a transfer station is prohibitive which places the transfer station outside the product market.

20. The Southern States transfer station in Griffin, Georgia, charges a minimum of $ 4.50 and up to $ 10.00 more per ton to dispose of waste than do defendants.

21. The contract between Southern States and the City of Griffin, Georgia, was agreed to before the Butts landfill obtained its vertical expansion permit. The Butts Authority could not bid on the contract and, thus, they were not in a competitive position with regard to this contract.

22. Disposal at the Southern States transfer station can not be seen as reasonably interchangeable with disposal at a MSWLF because of its increased cost.

23. Therefore, the waste disposed at the Southern States transfer station is captive waste and is not a part of the product market.

24. The product market is municipal solid waste disposed of at a sanitary landfill.

2. Geographic Market

25. HN7 A geographic market is essentially an economic concept in which the courts should examine "supplier-customer relations." United States v. Philadelphia National Bank, 374 U.S. 321, 357, 83 S. Ct. 1715, 1738, 10 L. Ed. 2d 915 (1963). [14]

26. HN8 The analysis includes consideration of where buyers seek supplies and sellers seek purchasers and an examination of transportation and other transaction costs. Id. at 358, 83 S. Ct. at 1738.

27. HN9 The geographic market has been described as "the market area in which the seller operates, and to which the purchaser can practicably turn for supplies." Id. at 359, 83 S. Ct. at 1739 (emphasis omitted) (quoting Tampa Elec. Co. v. Nashville Coal Co., 365 U.S. 320, 327, 81 S. Ct. 623, 627, 5 L. Ed. 2d 580 (1961)).

28. Butts County's MSWLF disposes of solid waste generated in a three-county area, that of Butts, Henry, and Spalding Counties ("the Butts Region").

29. Because of the limited suppliers of disposal services and the disparity of prices,³ defendants' customers have little alternative to using the Butts landfill.

[15] 30. Competition is also chilled because the Butts facility is the closest landfill to [*1344] much of the Butts region, and transportation costs for the waste are prohibitive.

31. Although defendants charge significantly less than their nearest competition, in Dekalb and Taylor counties, they remain able to operate at a profit of 121% and could raise their prices considerably without losing customers to competitors. Kamerschen Depo., p. 132.

32. The relevant geographic market for analyzing whether the Butts landfill is in a position of monopoly power is the three-county region of Henry, Spalding, and Butts counties ("the Butts Region"). The Butts landfill services that area and its customers have no practicable alternative to disposing their waste at the Butts landfill.

33. Another indication that the Butts Region is the appropriate geographic market is that "sellers within the area are making price decisions protected from the need to take account of sellers outside the area." New York Citizens Committee v. Manhattan Cable TV, 651 F. Supp. 802, 807 (S.D.N.Y. 1986).

34. The relevant market is the disposal of municipal solid waste generated in the Butts Region [16] at a sanitary landfill.

3. Elements of Monopolization Claim

³ The nearby landfills charge the following rates:

1. The Southern States Transfer Station in Griffin, Georgia, receives waste under contract from Spalding County and charges between $ 25.06 and $ 30.50 per ton. Plaintiff's Findings of Fact, PP 46, 61.

2. The BFI Hickory Ridge landfill in south Dekalb County receives waste from northern Henry County and charges $ 28.00 per ton. Kamerschen Supp. Aff. Doc 1.

3. The Waste Management Live Oak landfill in south Dekalb County receives waste from north Henry County at a rate of $ 23.00 to $ 31.50 per ton. Kamerschen Supp. Aff. Doc 2.

4. The Butts County landfill charges between $ 18.00 and $ 20.50 per ton and accepts waste from Henry, Spalding, and Butts Counties. Kamerschen Depo., p. 132.

864 F. Supp. 1338, *1344L 1994 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 13210, 16

35. HN10 Section 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 2, provides:

Every person who shall monopolize, or attempt to monopolize, or combine or conspire with any other person or persons, to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, shall be guilty of a felony

36. The operation of the Butts County Landfill has an effect on interstate commerce. Construction Aggregate Transport, Inc. v. Florida Rock Indus., Inc., 710 F.2d 752, 767 \(11th Cir. 1983\).

37. HN11 A monopolization claim requires proof of two elements:

- (1) defendants' possession of monopoly power; and
- (2) defendants' willful acquisition and maintenance of that power.

Eastman Kodak Co. v. Image Technology Services, U.S., 112 S. Ct. 2072, 2089, 119 L. Ed. 2d 265 \(1992\).

38. HN12 Monopoly power can be shown by an ability to raise prices profitably or exclude competition. United States v. E.I. du Pont de Nemours & Co., 351 U.S. 377, 391, 76 S. Ct. 994, 1005, 100 L. Ed. 1264 \(1956\). [\[17\]](#)

Plaintiffs have proffered impressive evidence that defendants have the ability to raise prices by 10% or more within the Butts Region without losing customers because the customers in that region have no competitive alternative to doing business with the Butts County landfill.

39. The Butts landfill has the power to raise prices by 5-10% in the geographic market which strongly indicates monopoly power. DOJ/FTC Merger Guidelines, p. S-3.

40. Due to significant transportation costs, neighboring landfills could not respond competitively to an increase in price by defendants. (Kamerschen Aff., P 26.)

41. Monopoly power is also demonstrated by the increased market share and the increasingly highly concentrated structure of the market. (Kamerschen Aff., P 27.)

III. CONCLUSION

The court finds that plaintiffs have demonstrated a likelihood of prevailing on the monopolization claim and, therefore, a preliminary injunction shall issue.⁴

[[18] IV. INJUNCTION

WHEREFORE, based upon the above findings of fact and conclusions of law, the following injunction is hereby issued:

- (1) Defendants are enjoined from taking any action to further interfere, delay or obstruct the EPD permitting process for Pine Ridge's landfill in Butts County;
- (2) Defendants are enjoined from casting any further doubt, through verbal or written [\[*1345\]](#) communications, on the viability or chances for success of Pine Ridge's application for an EPD permit;
- (3) Defendants are enjoined from entering any contract for disposal of solid waste which exceeds 6 months in length or which contemplates disposal of solid waste after 6 months from the date of its signing;

⁴ Having found a substantial likelihood that plaintiffs will prevail on the monopolization claim, the court will not address the merits of the other antitrust claims or the Commerce Clause claims.

864 F. Supp. 1338, *1345L 1994 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 13210, 18

- (4) Defendants are required to conduct a public hearing in accordance with O.C.G.A. § 12-8-24\(e\)\(2\);
- (5) Defendants are further required to inform Georgia EPD by letter or other suitable means that
 - (a) the Pine Ridge site is consistent with the Butts County Solid Waste Plan; and
 - (b) that the Pine Ridge site complies with local zoning ordinances.

The preliminary injunction heretofore ordered shall issue upon plaintiffs giving security in the amount of $ 50,000.00 to the clerk of this court for the payment [19] of such costs and damages as may be incurred or suffered by any party.

In order to afford defendants an opportunity to discuss the specifics of the local land uses ordinances, defendants are directed to SHOW CAUSE in writing filed within 10 days from and after this date why they should not also be required to certify to Georgia EPD that the Pine Ridge site is consistent with local land use ordinances.

SO ORDERED, this 15 day of September, 1994.

WILBUR D. OWENS, JR.,

UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE

End of Document

O.K. Sand & Gravel v. Martin Marietta Technologies

United States Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit

April 4, 1994, Argued ; September 16, 1994, Decided

Nos. 93-1380, 93-1408, 93-2003

Reporter

36 F.3d 565 *; 1994 U.S. App. LEXIS 25654 ; 1994-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P70,719; 30 Fed. R. Serv. 3d (Callaghan) 20

O.K. SAND & GRAVEL, INCORPORATED, Plaintiff-Appellant, Cross-Appellee, v. MARTIN MARIETTA TECHNOLOGIES, INCORPORATED, Defendant-Appellee, Cross-Appellant.

Prior History: [\[1\]](#) Appeal from the United States District Court for the Southern District of Indiana, Indianapolis Division. No. 90 C 1051. Sarah Evans Barker, Chief Judge.

Core Terms

Sand, district court, Aggregates, terminated, instructions, antitrust, constructive fraud, affirmative defense, argues, damages, statute of limitations, breach of fiduciary duty, products, prices, two-year, summary judgment, proven, breach of contract claim, sand and gravel, anti trust law, competitor, conversion, occurring, objected, percent, dealer, laches, costs, conversion claim, verdict form

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Contract Formation > Consideration > Detrimental Reliance

Contracts Law > Contract Interpretation > Good Faith & Fair Dealing

Governments > Fiduciaries

HN1 Consideration, Detrimental Reliance

Indiana courts have recognized that a fiduciary relationship giving rise to a duty to disclose information relieves a party of an affirmative duty to detect wrong-doing.

Civil Procedure > ... > Jury Trials > Jury Instructions > Objections

Civil Procedure > ... > Jury Trials > Jury Instructions > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Reviewability of Lower Court Decisions > Preservation for Review

HN2 Jury Instructions, Objections

Fed. R. Civ. P. 51 provides no party may assign as error the giving or the failure to give an instruction unless that party objects thereto before the jury retires to consider its verdict, stating distinctly the matter objected to and the grounds of the objection.

Civil Procedure > ... > Jury Trials > Jury Instructions > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Reviewability of Lower Court Decisions > Preservation for Review

HN3 Jury Trials, Jury Instructions

Submitting instructions is not sufficient to preserve an error in failing to give those instructions; the party who wants the instruction given must object to the refusal to give the instruction.

Civil Procedure > ... > Jury Trials > Jury Instructions > General Overview

HN4 Jury Trials, Jury Instructions

Appellate courts must look to the instructions as a whole, in a common sense manner inquiring whether the correct message was conveyed to the jury reasonably well.

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrsers & Objections > Affirmative Defenses > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > Extensions & Revivals

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > General Overview

HN5 Defenses, Demurrsers & Objections, Affirmative Defenses

A continuing violation theory is where activity occurring outside the limitations period can be considered for liability purposes if it is part of an on-going violation.

Torts > Intentional Torts > Conversion > General Overview

HN6 Intentional Torts, Conversion

Under Indiana law where the initial possession is lawful, civil conversion occurs only after an unqualified demand for return. A demand will be excused if the defendant came into possession of the property unlawfully or if it would be futile.

Criminal Law & Procedure > Trials > Motions for Acquittal

Governments > Fiduciaries

Torts > Intentional Torts > Breach of Fiduciary Duty > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Theft & Related Offenses > Larceny & Theft > General Overview

HN7 Trials, Motions for Acquittal

Criminal conversion occurs when a person exercises unlawful or unauthorized control of goods, and does not include a demand requirement. Ind. Code § 35C4-3 (1988).

Civil Procedure > Judicial Officers > Judges > Discretionary Powers

Civil Procedure > ... > Costs & Attorney Fees > Costs > General Overview

HN8 Judges, Discretionary Powers

The award of costs is firmly committed to the district court's discretion, and the court may award costs to whichever party prevails in the substantial part of the litigation.

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > De Novo Review

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Appellate Review > Standards of Review

HN9 Standards of Review, De Novo Review

The review of a grant of summary judgment is de novo.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

HN10 Clayton Act, Claims

In order to maintain an antitrust action under § 4 of the Clayton Act, a party must show more than an injury linked to a violation of the antitrust laws. It must prove an antitrust injury, which is to say injury of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent and that flows from that which makes defendants' acts unlawful.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Remedies > Damages

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Communications > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Discrimination > Competitive Injuries > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN11 Remedies, Damages

A competitor may not recover damages for any conspiracy to charge higher than competitive prices. Such conduct would indeed violate the Sherman Act, but it could not injure respondents: as petitioner's competitors, respondents stand to gain from any conspiracy to raise the market price.

36 F.3d 565, *565LÁ994 U.S. App. LEXIS 25654, 1

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Discrimination > Competitive Injuries > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN12 Price Discrimination, Competitive Injuries

To establish an antitrust injury, a plaintiff must show not only that the injury is of the type intended to be protected by the antitrust laws, but that the violation was the cause-in-fact of the injury: that but for the violation, the injury would not have occurred.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN13 Private Actions, Remedies

The causation element of an antitrust injury stems, of course, from the requirement that a plaintiff show that its injury flows from that which makes the defendants' acts unlawful. The plaintiff must establish, with a fair degree of certainty, that the violation was a material element of, and substantial factor in producing, the injury.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Opposing Materials > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

HN14 Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

An antitrust plaintiff opposing a motion for summary judgment must present evidence that tends to exclude the possibility that the defendant's conduct was as consistent with competition as with illegal conduct.

Counsel: For O.K. SAND & GRAVEL, INCORPORATED, Plaintiff - Appellant (93-1380, 93-2003): G. Thomas Blankenship, BLANKENSHIP & ROBBINS, Indianapolis, IN. For O.K. SAND & GRAVEL, INCORPORATED, Plaintiff - Appellee (93-1408): G. Thomas Blankenship, BLANKENSHIP & ROBBINS, Indianapolis, IN. R. James George, Robert Roller, GRAVES, DOUGHERTY, HEARON & MOODY, Austin, TX.

For MARTIN MARIETTA TECHNOLOGIES, INCORPORATED, Defendant - Appellee: Donald E. Knebel, Lynn C. Tyler, BARNES & THORNBURG, Indianapolis, IN.

Judges: Before CUDAHY, EASTERBROOK and KANNE, Circuit Judges.

Opinion by: CUDAHY

Opinion

[*566] CUDAHY, Circuit Judge.

Martin Marietta and O.K. Sand & Gravel own competing sand and gravel companies in Indianapolis.¹ O.K. Sand operates out of a plant on the south side of Indianapolis; Martin Marietta has plants on both the north and south sides. In 1984, Martin Marietta was running out of sand. At the same time, O.K. Sand needed financial and marketing assistance, so the two companies entered into an agreement whereby Martin Marietta would be O.K. Sand's exclusive sales agent. ^{2} According to the agreement, effective in April 1984, Martin Marietta would sell O.K. Sand's aggregates at the prices on an O.K. Sand-approved Price List, and could discount these prices 10 percent for gravel and 20 percent for fill material. O.K. Sand would invoice Martin Marietta monthly for 85 percent of the O.K. Sand sales; the remaining 15 percent was Martin Marietta's commission.²

O.K. Sand claimed that Martin Marietta sold sand below the Price List and authorized ^{3} discounts. According to O.K. Sand, Martin Marietta sold customers a package of O.K. Sand aggregate and Martin Marietta limestone; by deflating the price of the O.K. Sand aggregate, Martin Marietta could inflate the price of its limestone. O.K. Sand also claimed that Martin Marietta bought O.K. Sand's aggregate at a low price and re-sold it as its own at a higher price, and that Martin Marietta transferred O.K. Sand's aggregates to the Martin Marietta plant on the north side and sold from there.

Martin Marietta claims that in 1986, O.K. Sand gave it permission to establish the List Prices and to discount below the 20 percent. Moreover, Martin Marietta argued that O.K. Sand should have figured out that Martin Marietta was selling too low. The companies had a very crude information flow system whereby Martin Marietta sent O.K. Sand a monthly lump sum accompanied by a cryptic "Invoice Register." The Invoice Register did not specify the tonnage sold of any particular product, but only reported the gross tonnage each customer purchased and the total amount Martin Marietta had received. Martin Marietta claims that O.K. Sand could have calculated the average price for ton of each sale, and ^{4} thus would have known that ^{*567} Martin Marietta sometimes sold below discount. O.K. Sand intermittently tried to make sense of the documents, but claims that getting more specific information from Martin Marietta was like pulling teeth (although O.K. Sand did not pursue the matter vigorously after its initial attempts).

O.K. canceled the sales contract in January 1989, complaining that Martin Marietta had sold products at unauthorized prices. Three months later, O.K. Sand entered into a new agency agreement with another sand and gravel company, American Aggregates. Under the agreement, American Aggregates allowed O.K. to mine its reserves and agreed to send O.K. Sand's products, rather than American Aggregates' sand, to its off-site customers. American Aggregates continued to supply its own sand to its on-site customers. Martin Marietta eventually arranged a contract as a dealer for Waverly Sand and Gravel, located outside of Indianapolis.

In April 1990, O.K. Sand filed a complaint against Martin Marietta alleging breach of contract, fraud, conversion and breach of fiduciary duty. The district court dismissed O.K. Sand's conversion claim for failure to state a claim. On Martin Marietta's ^{5} motion for summary judgment, the district court found that a two-year statute of limitations applied to the breach of fiduciary duty claims (although a ten-year limitation applied to the breach of contract claims), but that a genuine issue of fact remained regarding fraudulent concealment, which would toll the running of the statute. The district court denied Martin Marietta's motion for summary judgment on the other claims.

Martin Marietta also filed a counterclaim alleging that O.K. Sand had failed to pay certain commissions, and that O.K. Sand's sales agreement with American Aggregates violated §§ 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act and § 3 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. §§ 1, 2 & 14. O.K. Sand moved for summary judgment, claiming that Martin Marietta lacked standing to bring the Sherman Act claims, and had failed to allege an antitrust injury. The district court granted summary judgment to O.K. Sand.

¹ O.K. Sand is an Indiana corporation with its principal place of business in Indiana. Martin Marietta is a Delaware corporation with its principal place of business in Maryland. We have jurisdiction pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1332.

² The facts of the case are thoroughly discussed in the district court's published opinion, O.K. Sand & Gravel, Inc. v. Martin Marietta Corp., 819 F. Supp. 771 (S.D. Ind. 1992). We assume familiarity with these facts, and only summarize them here as necessary.

The case went to trial on both parties' breach of contract claims, and O.K. Sand's criminal conversion, breach of fiduciary duty, and constructive fraud claims. The district court granted a directed verdict on O.K. Sand's criminal conversion and punitive damages [6] claims.

The jury filled out a special verdict form on each of O.K. Sand's claims. The form required the jury first to answer whether O.K. Sand had proven its claims. If the jury answered "yes," the form instructed it to consider whether Martin Marietta had proven its affirmative defenses of waiver, estoppel or laches. If the jury found that O.K. Sand had proven its claim and that Martin Marietta had not proven any affirmative defenses, the form instructed the jury to assess damages. On each claim, the jury found against O.K. Sand at the first step, finding that Martin Marietta did not breach its contract, breach a fiduciary duty, or commit constructive fraud; the jury thus did not answer any of the questions about Martin Marietta's affirmative defenses or damages. The jury also found against Martin Marietta on its breach of contract counterclaim. Costs were assessed against O.K. Sand.

I.

A. INSTRUCTIONS ON FIDUCIARY DUTY

After receiving instructions on the basic elements of a constructive fraud and breach of fiduciary duty claim,³ the jury was instructed on the scope of the duty for the breach of agency claim:

Martin Marietta fulfilled any duty to disclose facts if it (1) [7] provided to O.K. Sand information which O.K. Sand could have used to determine such facts . . . or (2) provided information which would have reasonably led O.K. Sand to make an inquiry to obtain or learn such facts.

[*568] Instr. 24. On the constructive fraud claim, the jury was instructed that O.K. Sand's reliance had to be reasonable and that:

O.K. Sand must have exercised common sense and used ordinary care, prudence and diligence in guarding against constructive fraud and discovering the truth.

Instr. 30.

O.K. Sand claims that these instructions erroneously placed upon O.K. [8] Sand a duty of inquiry to discover Martin Marietta's wrongful conduct. While a duty to inquire may arise in an ordinary fraud case, O.K. Sand contends that there is no duty to inquire in a fiduciary relationship. HN1 Indiana courts have recognized that a fiduciary relationship giving rise to a duty to disclose information relieves a party of an affirmative duty to detect wrong-doing. Dotlich v. Dotlich, 475 N.E.2d 331 (Ind.App. 1985); Given v. Cappas, 486 N.E.2d 583, 592 (Ind.App. 1985); see also DeRance, Inc. v. Paine Webber, Inc., 872 F.2d 1312, 1321 (7th Cir. 1989) (Wisconsin law).

But O.K. Sand never objected to these instructions. At the instructions conference, O.K. Sand tendered its own instruction on the duty of inquiry in a fiduciary relationship. Tr. 1/13/93, at VIII-44. O.K. Sand explained that the tendered instruction was intended to supplement, not modify, the existing instructions. Id. The district court ruled that the substance of O.K. Sand's tendered instruction was already covered by Instruction 24. Id. at 45-46. O.K. Sand did not object to the court's refusal to accept [9] its instruction, nor to any other instruction on the matter. Id.

Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 51 provides: "No HN2 party may assign as error the giving or the failure to give an instruction unless that party objects thereto before the jury retires to consider its verdict, stating distinctly the matter objected to and the grounds of the objection." While filing an instruction may at times be seen as an objection to contrary instructions, see Hebron v. Touhy, 18 F.3d 421, 424 (7th Cir. 1994); Exxon Corp. v. Exxene Corp., 696 F.2d 544, 549 (7th Cir. 1982), O.K. Sand specifically described its proposed instruction as a supplement to, rather than a substitute for, the instructions given. O.K. Sand also failed to object when the district court rejected its proffered instruction, and thus cannot now argue that the district court erred. Nor can O.K. Sand appeal to a plain ³The jury was instructed that the elements of the breach of agency duty claim were the existence of a particular duty; breach; damages; and proximate causation. Instr. 22. The jury was instructed that the elements of the constructive fraud were a duty between the parties by virtue of the relationship of the parties; silence or representations that were deceptive and violative of that duty; justifiable reliance; and damages. Instr. 27.

error doctrine, since it does not apply to civil cases (except, of course, with respect to jurisdiction). Maul v. Constan, 928 F.2d 784, 787 (7th Cir. 1991). "Submitting HN3¹⁵ instructions is not sufficient to preserve an error in failing [10] to give those instructions; the party who wants the instruction given must object to the refusal to give the instruction." Salazar v. City of Chicago, 940 F.2d 233, 242 (7th Cir. 1991).

O.K. Sand argues that the district court "cut off" its explanations or objections. Although the transcript indicates that the instruction conference was rather free-flowing, it does not support O.K. Sand's argument that it did not have an opportunity to object. The discussion of the issue at the conference ended:

COURT: . . . I think the substance of your tendered instruction is covered in the existing instructions . . . and I'll not put it in again. That's my ruling. Okay, Mr. Lawrence; anything else?

MR. LAWRENCE: That's all. Thank you. I would just make the--well--that's all.

Tr. at VIII-46.

Moreover, after the jury had been instructed, the district court asked the parties whether they had any further objections:

COURT: Do you have any other changes you wish to put, or any objections that you haven't previously had?

MR. LAWRENCE: Just for the record, I don't have any objection to the changes that have been suggested in conference. We renew objections [11] regarding punitive damages and other claims dealt with in chambers.

Tr. at VIII-171.

Clearly, O.K. Sand had the last word, and the word was not "object." Having failed to make "a clear statement of the specific grounds for objection," Smith v. Great Am. Restaurants, Inc., 969 F.2d 430, 436 & n.1 (7th Cir. 1992), O.K. Sand has waived its claim of error.

[*569] B. LACHES

O.K. Sand also claims that the district court misstated the law in its instruction on Martin Marietta's affirmative defense of laches. The jury was instructed that laches would be a defense if, in part, O.K. Sand "knew or should have known" of its claims against Martin Marietta during the period of delay. Instr. 31. O.K. Sand objects to the language "should have known," arguing that Indiana law imposes no such requirement. O.K. Sand properly objected to this instruction on these grounds during the instructions conference, but was overruled. Tr. at VIII 36-39.

But any error was harmless, because the verdict form indicates that the jury never reached the question of laches. As noted above, the verdict form tells us that the jury concluded that O.K. Sand had failed to prove its case, and [12] that it did not reach the issue of affirmative defenses.

O.K. Sand argues that other jury instructions misled the jury to believe that it could consider the affirmative defenses as part of the first question of whether O.K. Sand had proven its claim. The first instruction on each claim stated that O.K. Sand could recover if it had established its claims and Martin Marietta had not proven any affirmative defenses. For example, on the breach of contract claim the jury was instructed of the elements of breach of contract and then instructed:

If you find that these propositions have been established by a preponderance of the evidence and that the defendant had not proved any of its affirmative defenses by a preponderance of the evidence, then you should find in favor of the plaintiff on its breach of contract claim.

If, on the other hand, you find that the plaintiff has not established all these elements by a preponderance of the evidence, or that the defendant has proved an affirmative defense by a preponderance of the evidence, then you should find in favor of the defendant on the plaintiff's breach of contract claim.

Instr. 17. A similar instruction was given on constructive [13] fraud and breach of fiduciary duty. Instr. 22, 27. O.K. Sand argues that following these instructions, a jury might believe that it could read back affirmative defenses into the principal claim. But the instructions, when taken as a whole, were clear. Instructions 17, 22 and 27 were correct statements of the law in this respect--O.K. Sand would win if it proved its case and Martin Marietta disproved its defenses. Cf. Wilk v. American Medical Ass'n, 719 F.2d 207, 218 (7th Cir. 1983), cert. denied, 467 U.S. 1210, 81 L. Ed. 2d 355, 104 S. Ct. 2398, 104 S. Ct. 2399 (1984) HN4 [↑] ("we must look to the instructions as a whole, in a common sense manner . . . inquiring whether the correct message was conveyed to the jury reasonably well").

The verdict form plainly spelled out the method of reasoning the jury was to follow: it was to consider first the elements of the claim, and then consider affirmative defenses. At bottom, O.K. Sand argues that the jury did not follow the instructions on the jury form, and that it considered affirmative defenses but did not fill out the appropriate box so indicating. But [14] we presume that jurors understand and follow their instructions, Bruton v. United States, 391 U.S. 123, 135-36, 20 L. Ed. 2d 476, 88 S. Ct. 1620 (1968); O.K. Sand gives us no reason to believe that the verdict form is an inaccurate statement of the jury's decisions.

C. STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS

O.K. Sand contends that the district court erroneously instructed the jury about the statute of limitations on the constructive fraud and breach of fiduciary duty claims. The jury was instructed that a two-year statute of limitations applied; O.K. Sand argues that the statute of limitations was six years.

Martin Marietta argues that while O.K. Sand objected to a two-year statute of limitations on constructive fraud, it did not object to a two-year limitations on breach of fiduciary duty, and thus has not preserved the latter error for appeal. O.K. Sand claims that it did object by arguing that constructive fraud and breach of fiduciary duty were the same. At the instructions conference, O.K. Sand's counsel began, "the statute of limitations for fraud is six years, and [I] think it would be inappropriate to have it [*570] included in the 1988 [15] cutoff." Tr. at VIII-8. In response to the court's observation that constructive fraud was essentially the same as breach of fiduciary duty, which was subject to a two-year limitation, O.K. Sand claimed that "there is a difference between breach of fiduciary duty and constructive fraud," and that breach of fiduciary duty is akin to a lesser included offense of constructive fraud. Id. The remainder of the argument was incoherent at best, and cannot even generously be construed as an objection to the application of a two-year limitations period.⁴ Id. at VIII-9. O.K. Sand had no response when the district court ruled that a two-year limitation applied to both claims. At best, O.K. Sand has only preserved its argument that the two-year limitation was erroneous with respect to constructive fraud.

[16] The jury instruction read in relevant part:

Martin Marietta's fourth affirmative defense is the statute of limitations defense. Martin Marietta claims that O.K. Sand's breach of agency duty and constructive fraud claims are partially barred or limited by what is known in the law as the statute of limitations. A statute of limitations is the time allowed by a statute for a plaintiff to bring ⁴The argument that O.K. Sand claims embodied its objection to application of a two-year statute of limitations to breach of duty went as follows:

In other words, my argument, if you will, your Honor, is that breach of fiduciary duty is a lesser, if you will, lesser included offense, and that breach of duty included actions that would not constitute constructive fraud, and constructive fraud must show the additional action taken for the benefit of the principal. And so that would be the difference, and therefore would-- That's the reason we would argue that there be two separate counts. It goes--The reason that it has a meaning to us, and the consequences of it is that we would also be asking the court to reconsider its instruction on commissions. The court has--I think correctly--has included commissions, our entitlement to ask the jury to find commissions, return of commissions for that breach of fiduciary duty.

Case law also--I will be happy the give the court case law and Storey on Equity and three other treatises that establish that fraud as well, and breach of duty is again a lesser included, that even more serious constructive fraud gives rise to a cause of action for the damages, if you will, to return commissions as well, so we would be seeking return of the commissions on the fraud count as well.

You say the damages, we would be seeking the same damage in both places under two separate theories. We understand that we can't recover the damages twice; we must elect a remedy after the jury comes back, That's the basis for both causes of action.

a lawsuit. You are instructed that the statute of limitations in a breach of agency claim and a constructive fraud claim is two years. You are further instructed that O.K. Sand filed this action on April 24, 1990. Accordingly, if you find that the statute of limitations applies to O.K. Sand's claims for breach of agency duty and constructive fraud, then damages for those claims can only be based on activities that occurred on or after April 24, 1988 and O.K. Sand cannot recover damages based on the activities of Martin Marietta occurring before that date.⁵

Instr. 35. (emphasis supplied).

[17] Martin Marietta argues that the jury never reached the affirmative defense of the statute of limitations. O.K. Sand argues, as it did on the laches defense, that the jury may not have considered the statute of limitations as an affirmative defense, but could have woven it into the decision on liability. Moreover, argues O.K. Sand, the instruction had a particularly prejudicial effect on the finding that O.K. Sand had not proven its claims, because the instruction precluded the jury from considering as evidence of liability any conduct occurring before April 1988, by which time most of the alleged wrongful acts had occurred.

But the court's instruction clearly was a limitation on damages; it did not preclude the jury from considering evidence about Martin Marietta's pre-1988 conduct in determining liability. HN5[↑] O.K. Sand's claim that Martin Marietta had breached its duties from 1984 until 1989 was essentially an allegation of a continuing violation, a theory whereby activity occurring outside the limitations period [*571] can be considered for liability purposes if it is part of an on-going violation. See, e.g., Chambers v. TransAir, 17 F.3d 998, 1002 (7th Cir. 1994). [18] The instruction the court gave was appropriate in such circumstances: it did not in any way limit the jury's consideration of evidence, but only stated that "damages . . . can only be based on activities that occurred on or after April 24, 1988 and O.K. Sand cannot recover damages based on the activities of Martin Marietta occurring before that date." Since the jury found no liability and never reached the question of damages, whether the district court accurately informed them of a limitation on damages is irrelevant.⁶

D. CONVERSION

O.K. Sand based its conversion claim on Martin Marietta's alleged transfers of O.K. Sand's products to its north side facility [19] and reductions in the price of O.K. Sand's products to boost sales of its own products. The district court dismissed the civil conversion claim on the grounds that O.K. Sand had failed to make a demand for return of the sand. HN6[↑] Under Indiana law, "where the initial possession is lawful, [civil] conversion occurs only after an unqualified demand for return." Coffel v. Perry, 452 N.E.2d 1066, 1069 (Ind.App. 1983). A demand will be excused if the defendant came into possession of the property unlawfully, French v. Hickman Moving & Storage, 400 N.E.2d 1384, 1388 (Ind.App. 1980), or if it would be futile. Merchants Natl. Bank & Trust Co. v. H.L.C. Enterprises, Inc., 441 N.E.2d 509, 514 (Ind. App. 1982). The district court concluded that O.K. Sand had not alleged that Martin Marietta possessed the sand unlawfully, and thus was not excused from the demand requirement. Indeed, O.K. Sand's entire complaint was based on the theory that Martin Marietta, as O.K. Sand's sales agent, had lawful control of O.K. Sand's products. On appeal, O.K. Sand argues only that demand should have been excused because Martin [20] Marietta allegedly engaged in self-dealing; however, O.K. Sand provides no evidence that Indiana courts would agree to carve out this exception to the demand requirement, so we refuse to do so here.

After the close of evidence at trial, the district court entered a directed verdict in favor of Martin Marietta on O.K. Sand's criminal conversion claim. HN7[↑] Criminal conversion occurs when a person exercises unlawful or unauthorized control of goods, and does not include a demand requirement. Ind. Code § 35C4-3 (1988). The district court concluded that O.K. Sand had failed to put forth any evidence of "unlawful control." On appeal, O.K. Sand admits that at all times Martin Marietta had lawful control of the products, but argues that Martin Marietta should be liable anyway since it breached its fiduciary duties. Again, O.K. Sand offers no support for this reading of the statute, and we will affirm the district court's directed verdict on the criminal conversion claim.

⁵ The remainder of the instruction concerned O.K. Sand's equitable argument that the statute of limitations did not apply because Martin Marietta had fraudulently concealed the facts giving rise to a cause of action.

⁶ O.K. Sand also claimed that the district court erred when it entered a directed verdict against O.K. Sand on its claim for punitive damages. O.K. Sand admits that the issue would only be relevant if we reversed the jury's findings of liability. Since we affirm the district court with respect to liability, we do not need to consider this question of damages.

E. COSTS

The district court awarded Martin Marietta $ 37,874.38 in costs as the prevailing party. F.R.C.P. 54\(d\). O.K. Sand argues that since Martin Marietta did not prevail at trial on its breach of contract claim, or at summary [\[*21\]](#) judgment on its antitrust claim, it cannot be considered the "prevailing party." HN8[↑] The award of costs is firmly committed to the district court's discretion, Landau & Cleary Ltd. v. Hribar Trucking, Inc., 807 F.2d 91, 94 \(7th Cir. 1986\), and the court may award costs to whichever party prevails in "the substantial part of the litigation." Northbrook Excess and Surplus Ins. Co. v. Procter & Gamble, 924 F.2d 633, 641 \(7th Cir. 1991\). Throughout the litigation the parties kept revising their damages estimates, so it is no surprise that each argues on appeal that it sought (and lost) only a paltry sum, while its opponent lost a small fortune. The district court concluded that O.K. Sand had asserted numerous claims worth about $ 2.2 million, and thus "far outweighed the number and value of the claims asserted by the defendant." Although it is true that Martin Marietta [\[*572\]](#) lost on its $ 50,000 breach of contract counterclaim, it successfully avoided a potentially multimillion dollar judgment on several claims. We cannot conclude that the district court abused its discretion when it determined that Martin Marietta had "substantially" [\[*22\]](#) prevailed in the litigation. The award of costs is affirmed.

II.

Martin Marietta cross-appeals the summary judgment in favor of O.K. Sand on Martin Marietta's antitrust counterclaims. Count One of the counterclaim alleged that O.K. Sand had terminated its agreement with Martin Marietta and entered into an agreement with American Aggregates in order to increase the price of sand and gravel, "adversely affecting the ability of Martin Marietta to compete in that market," in violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1. Count One also alleged that O.K. Sand's agreement with American Aggregates precluded American Aggregates from competing with O.K. Sand, and thus "foreclosed competition in a substantial portion of commerce, in violation of § 3 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 14." Count Two alleged that the O.K. Sand-American Aggregates agreement violated § 2 of the Sherman Act, since O.K. Sand intended to monopolize the southern Indianapolis sand and gravel market. Martin Marietta sought damages under § 4 of the Clayton Act for commissions it would have earned on sales of O.K. Sand's products had it not been terminated [\[*23\]](#) as an agent.

Martin Marietta had put forth three theories of damages: that it suffered lost profits as an agent terminated pursuant to O.K. Sand's price-fixing conspiracy with American Aggregates; that as a competitor it was injured by higher prices and a foreclosure of competition; and that it was an injured former consumer-for-resale. The district court held that Martin Marietta had introduced no evidence to support its first theory that it was terminated because of O.K. Sand's agreement with American Aggregates, and thus lacked standing to bring this claim. The district court also held that under neither of the remaining two theories had Martin Marietta alleged an antitrust injury.

It is not entirely clear whether Martin Marietta is pursuing on appeal all of the theories of recovery it alleged before the district court. At oral argument, Martin Marietta claimed, in nearly the same breath, that this case involves a boycott, a refusal to deal, a terminated distributorship and an injured competitor. Martin Marietta later seemed to abandon the boycott and injured seller theories, advocating instead a theory that its termination as a dealer evolved into a "refusal to deal on terms that [\[*24\]](#) allowed us to be an effective market player." Perhaps the only way to make sense of Martin Marietta's apparent confusion is to consider each theory in turn. HN9[↑] We, of course, review the grant of summary judgment de novo.

Martin Marietta's complaint alleged that it was injured as a competitor when O.K. Sand and American Aggregates increased sand and gravel prices in the market. But to the extent that Martin Marietta was also a seller in the market, increased prices caused it no injury, let alone antitrust injury.⁷ HN10[↑] In order to maintain an antitrust

⁷ The district court held that Martin Marietta lacked standing to bring this claim, although we affirm on the ground that Martin Marietta has failed to allege an antitrust injury. For discussion of the relationship between antitrust standing and antitrust injury, see Greater Rockford Energy and Technology v. Shell Oil, 998 F.2d 391, 394-96 & n.7 \(7th Cir. 1993\), cert. denied, 127 L. Ed. action under § 4 of the Clayton Act, Martin Marietta must show more than an injury linked to a violation of the antitrust laws. It must prove "an antitrust injury, which is to say injury of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent and that flows from that which makes defendants' acts unlawful." Brunswick Corp. v. Pueblo Bowl-O-Mat, Inc., 429 U.S. 477, 489, 50 L. Ed. 2d 701, 97 S. Ct. 690 (1977); see Associated Gen. Contractors v. California State Council of Carpenters, 459 U.S. 519, 540, 74 L. Ed. 2d 723, 103 S. Ct. 897 (1983); [25] Local Beauty Supply, 787 F.2d at 1201. Clearly, price increases [*573] could not be considered an antitrust injury to competitors. HN11 [↑] A competitor may not "recover damages for any conspiracy . . . to charge higher than competitive prices Such conduct would indeed violate the Sherman Act, but it could not injure respondents: as petitioner's competitors, respondents stand to gain from any conspiracy to raise the market price." Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co. v. Zenith Radio, 475 U.S. 574, 582, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538, 106 S. Ct. 1348 (1986) (citations omitted); Atlantic Richfield Co. v. USA Petroleum Co., 495 U.S. 328, 109 L. Ed. 2d 333, 110 S. Ct. 1884 (1990). This holds true for cases brought under both §§ 1 and 2 of the Act. Atlantic Richfield, 495 U.S. at 339-41. Thus Martin Marietta's argument that the O.K. Sand-American Aggregates agreement resulted in a 75 percent market share that would allow them to engage in predatory pricing (in violation of § 2) still requires Martin Marietta [26] to prove that it suffered an antitrust injury as a result of O.K. Sand's alleged § 2 violation. See also Indiana Grocery, Inc. v. Super Valu Stores, Inc., 864 F.2d 1409, 1418 (7th Cir. 1989). Since Martin Marietta has failed to show that it has suffered the type of injury the antitrust laws seek to prevent, it has not shown an antitrust injury on this theory.

[27] If, on the other hand, Martin Marietta were arguing that it was injured as a consumer, higher prices or restrictions in output due to an unlawful combination would be the "type" of injury the antitrust laws intend to prevent. Nelson v. Monroe Regional Medical Ctr., 925 F.2d 1555, 1564 (7th Cir.), cert. dismissed, 112 S. Ct. 285 (1991). Thus Martin Marietta characterizes O.K. Sand's termination of a dealership as a refusal to deal, attempting to bring its case within the purview of Nelson. In Nelson, we held that consumers denied health care as a result of a hospital merger had alleged an antitrust injury. Id. at 1564-65. Martin Marietta likens its termination as a dealer to the Nelson consumers' "termination" as patients, arguing that this case involves "O.K. Sand's termination of its Sales Agency Agreement with Martin Marietta and subsequent refusal to deal with Martin Marietta as an agent." Reply Br. 4/5/94 at 2. Martin Marietta also argues at one point that O.K. Sand would not sell to Martin Marietta at all—or, in effect, that O.K. Sand was engaging in a boycott. But the [28] boycott argument is frivolous, since Martin Marietta admits that it never attempted to purchase O.K. Sand's products at the retail price. Likewise, Martin Marietta presented no evidence that, as a consumer, it paid a monopoly or above-the-market price for O.K. Sand or American Aggregates's products, and thus has not shown that it suffered any injury at all. As Martin Marietta's own description of its case ("a refusal to deal as an agent") makes clear, the Nelson analogy is inapt, as Martin Marietta's only legitimate claim is that it is a terminated dealer.

Martin Marietta's claims that it was terminated as a dealer because O.K. Sand and American Aggregates entered into an illegal agreement to price-fix and monopolize the market. Even if Martin Marietta could prove that its injury is the type of injury the antitrust laws were intended to prevent, see Local Beauty Supply, 787 F.2d at 1201 (terminated dealer suffers no antitrust injury when terminated for undercutting maximum price maintenance scheme), Martin Marietta's claim would fail. HN12 [↑] To establish an antitrust injury, a plaintiff must show not only that the injury is of the type intended to be [29] protected by the antitrust laws, but that the violation was "the cause-in-fact of the injury: that 'but for' the violation, the injury would not have occurred." See Greater Rockford Energy & Technology v. Shell Oil, 998 F.2d 391, 394-96 (7th Cir. 1993) (citations omitted). Martin Marietta failed to adduce evidence that the alleged antitrust violations (either to price-fix or gain a monopoly) were the but-for cause of Martin Marietta's termination. Greater Rockford, 998 F.2d at 395. HN13 [↑] The causation element of an antitrust injury stems, of course, from the requirement that a plaintiff show that its injury "flows from that which makes the defendants' acts unlawful." Brunswick, 429 U.S. at 489. "The plaintiff must establish, with a fair degree of certainty, that the violation was a material element of, and substantial factor in producing, the injury." Greater Rockford, 998 F.2d at 401. Martin Marietta points to [*574] evidence that O.K. Sand was satisfied with Martin Marietta's performance as a sales agent as sufficient proof of causation. Since [30] O.K. Sand had no other reason to terminate their agreement, argues Martin Marietta, O.K. Sand must have terminated it in order to enter into an illegal combination with American Aggregates.

This, however, certainly does not show that the termination caused the illegal combination. At best, the termination merely removed an obstacle to the formation of the combination. Martin Marietta makes the illogical argument that, since its termination was a necessary prerequisite to O.K. Sand's entering into an agreement with American Aggregates, the agreement caused the termination. But the termination, as we have noted, was merely a step in a sequence. In any event, other factors can easily explain why O.K. Sand terminated Martin Marietta four months before entering into a new agreement with American Aggregates. See Greater Rockford, 998 F.2d at 402, and cases cited therein. Martin Marietta has "failed to show with a fair degree of certainty that the antitrust violation was a material and substantial factor causing their alleged injuries. Hence, the plaintiffs did not suffer an antitrust injury." Id.; cf. Indiana Grocery, 864 F.2d at 1412 [*31] ("an HN14[↑] antitrust plaintiff opposing a motion for summary judgment must present evidence that tends to exclude the possibility that the defendant's conduct was as consistent with competition as with illegal conduct").

III.

The decisions of the district court are AFFIRMED.

End of Document

Sullivan v. NFL

United States Court of Appeals for the First Circuit

September 16, 1994, Decided

No. 94-1031

Reporter

34 F.3d 1091 *; 1994 U.S. App. LEXIS 25613 ; 1994-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P70,720

WILLIAM H. SULLIVAN II, Plaintiff - Appellee, v. NATIONAL FOOTBALL LEAGUE, & MEMBERS OF THE NATIONAL FOOTBALL LEAGUE, Defendants - Appellants.

Subsequent History: [\[1\]](#) The Name of this Case has been Amended by the Court September 29, 1994. As Amended on Denial of Rehearing October 26, 1994, Reported at: 1994 U.S. App. LEXIS 38394. Certiorari Denied February 27, 1995, Reported at: 1995 U.S. LEXIS 1685.

Prior History: APPEAL FROM THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT FOR THE DISTRICT OF MASSACHUSETTS. Hon. Edward F. Harrington, U.S. District Judge.

Core Terms

teams, public ownership, ownership, ownership interest, league, relevant market, cases, stock, public offering, rule of reason, benefits, involvement, antitrust, effects, district court, stock sale, franchises, offering, compete, matter of law, output, restraint of trade, Sherman Act, anticompetitive, instructions, football, prices, sports, procompetitive, restricting

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > De Novo Review

Civil Procedure > Trials > Judgment as Matter of Law > General Overview

HN1 [blue icon] Standards of Review, De Novo Review

The United States Court of Appeals for the First Circuit reviews lower courts' decisions de novo, using the same stringent decisional standards that controlled a district court.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > General Overview

HN2 [blue icon] Monopolies & Monopolization, Actual Monopolization

Anticompetitive effects, more commonly referred to as "injury to competition" or "harm to the competitive process," are usually measured by a reduction in output and an increase in prices in the relevant market.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > General Overview

HN3 Monopolies & Monopolization, Actual Monopolization

An action harms the competitive process when it obstructs the achievement of competition's basic goals lower prices, better products, and more efficient production methods.

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Reviewability of Lower Court Decisions > Preservation for Review

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Reviewability > Waiver > Admission of Evidence

HN4 Reviewability of Lower Court Decisions, Preservation for Review

Matters averted to in a perfunctory manner, unaccompanied by some effort at developed argumentation, are deemed waived on appeal. The court will not consider arguments which could have been, but were not, advanced below.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > General Overview

HN5 Monopolies & Monopolization, Actual Monopolization

Overall consumer preferences in setting output and prices is more important than higher prices and lower output, per se, in determining whether there has been an injury to competition.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

HN6 Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

One basic tenet of the rule of reason is that a given restriction is not reasonable, that is, its benefits cannot outweigh its harm to competition, if a reasonable, less restrictive alternative to the policy exists that would provide the same benefits as the current restraint.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Sports > General Overview

Evidence > Inferences & Presumptions > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > General Overview

HN7 Regulated Industries, Sports

Under certain circumstances, an antitrust plaintiff must make a demand on the defendant to allow the plaintiff to take some action or obtain some benefit, which the defendant's challenged practice is allegedly preventing the plaintiff from taking or obtaining, in order to prove that the practice caused injury in fact to the plaintiff. Such a requirement only applies, however, where the plaintiff cannot otherwise prove that the illegal practice exists or that the practice is preventing the plaintiff from competing in the relevant market; in such cases, a refused demand is the only reliable evidence of causation.

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Relief From Judgments > Motions for New Trials

Evidence > ... > Testimony > Expert Witnesses > General Overview

HN8 Relief From Judgments, Motions for New Trials

When an expert opinion is not supported by sufficient facts to validate it in the eyes of the law, or when indisputable record facts contradict or otherwise render the opinion unreasonable, it cannot support a jury's verdict.

Civil Procedure > ... > Jury Trials > Jury Instructions > General Overview

Evidence > Relevance > Exclusion of Relevant Evidence > Confusion, Prejudice & Waste of Time

Civil Procedure > Judicial Officers > Judges > General Overview

HN9 Jury Trials, Jury Instructions

As long as a judge's instruction properly apprises the jury of the applicable law, failure to give the exact instruction requested does not prejudice the objecting party. A party, however, is entitled to have its legal theories on controlling issues, which are supported by the law and by the evidence, presented to the jury. An error in the jury instructions will warrant the reversal of the judgment and a new trial only if, upon review of the record as a whole, the error is determined to be prejudicial.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

Evidence > Relevance > Relevant Evidence

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > General Overview

HN10 Monopolies & Monopolization, Actual Monopolization

The true test of legality in connection with alleged monopolies is whether the restraint imposed is such as merely regulates and perhaps thereby promotes competition or whether it is such as may suppress or even destroy competition. To determine that question the court must ordinarily consider the facts peculiar to the business to which the restraint is applied; its condition before and after the restraint was imposed; the nature of the restraint and its effect, actual or probable. The history of the restraint, the evil believed to exist, the reason for adopting the particular remedy, the purpose or end sought to be attained, are all relevant facts.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Trials > Jury Trials > Province of Court & Jury

HN11[] Regulated Practices, Trade Practices & Unfair Competition

Courts should generally give a measure of latitude to antitrust defendants in their efforts to explain the pro-competitive justifications for their policies and practices; however, courts should also maintain some vigilance by excluding justifications that are so unrelated to the challenged practice that they amount to a collateral attempt to salvage a practice that is decidedly in restraint of trade.

Counsel: John Vanderstar, with whom Sonya D. Winner, Ethan M. Posner, Covington & Burling, Jeremiah T. O'Sullivan, Sarah Chapin Columbia, Choate, Hall & Stewart, Joseph W. Cotchett, and Cotchett, Illston & Pitre were on brief for appellants.

Joseph L. Alioto and Frederick P. Furth, with whom Angela M. Alioto, Law Offices of Joseph L. Alioto, Alan R. Hoffman, Lynch, Brewer, Hoffman & Sands, Bruce J. Wecker, Michael P. Lehmann and Furth, Fahrner & Mason, were on brief for appellees.

Judges: Before Torruella, Circuit Judge, Coffin, Senior Circuit Judge, and Stahl, Circuit Judge.

Opinion by: TORRUELLA

Opinion

[*1095] TORRUELLA, Circuit Judge. The National Football League and twenty-one organizations owning NFL franchises (referred to collectively as the "NFL") appeal the judgment entered against them after a jury found that the NFL violated the antitrust laws by restricting owners of member football clubs from selling shares in their teams to the public. Plaintiff-appellee, William H. Sullivan, former owner of the New England Patriots [*2] football team (the "Patriots"), was awarded a total of $ 51 million in damages for the losses Sullivan incurred when he had to sell the Patriots to a private buyer after the NFL prevented him from offering 49% of the team to the public in the form of publicly traded stock. Because several prejudicial errors were committed during the trial, we vacate the judgment and remand for a new trial.

I. BACKGROUND

Under Article 3.5 of the NFL's constitution and by-laws, three-quarters of the NFL club owners must approve all transfers of ownership interests in an NFL team, other than transfers within a family. In conjunction with this rule is an uncodified policy against the sale of ownership interests in an NFL club to the public through offerings of publicly traded stock. The members, however, retain full authority to approve any given transfer by a three-quarters vote according to Article 3.5.

Sullivan owned the Patriots from the team's inception in 1959 until October of 1988. When Sullivan formed the Patriots, he and his partner sold non-voting shares of the team to the public beginning in 1960. At that time, the Patriots were in the old American Football League ("AFL"), which was separate [*3] from the NFL, and which had no policy against public ownership of teams. In 1966, the AFL and the old NFL merged into a single league. Under the terms of the merger, the new NFL would adopt the old NFL's policy against public ownership. The Patriots, however, were allowed to retain their level of public ownership as a special exception to the rule under a grandfather clause.

In 1976, Sullivan sought to acquire the publicly held shares of the Patriots through a merger of the club into a new Sullivan-owned company. Stockholders approved the transfer and the transaction was subsequently consummated, although some shareholders subsequently brought suit, challenging the sufficiency of the purchase price. After protracted litigation, the shareholders obtained a judgment requiring Sullivan to pay them a higher price for their shares. The Patriots then became a fully privately owned club.

Sullivan and his son, Chuck Sullivan, who owned the stadium where the Patriots played, began to experience financial difficulties and increasing debt burdens in the mid-1980s. The Sullivans decided that they needed to raise capital to alleviate their financial problems. After the Boston Celtics professional [4] basketball franchise made a public offering of 40% of the team in December of 1986, the Sullivans decided to pursue a similar deal with the Patriots in order to raise cash to cover some of their debts.

On October 19, 1987, the Sullivans met with Stephens, Inc., a small investment banking firm in Little Rock, Arkansas. They discussed a debt financing deal whereby Stephens would loan the Sullivans $ 80 million dollars, with half going to the Patriots and the other half to Chuck Sullivan's company which owned the Patriots' stadium. The Patriots' portion of the loan would be repaid out of the proceeds of the sale of 49% of the Patriots through the offering of public stock. Stephens agreed to look into the possibility of arranging the deal, but informed the Sullivans that they would first have to get NFL approval. Sullivan ultimately never obtained NFL approval and the deal with Stephens never progressed beyond some preliminary discussions.

At a meeting of the NFL owners on October 27, 1987, Sullivan raised his stock sale [*1096] idea with the other owners and asked for a modification of the NFL's policy against public ownership to allow for certain controlled sales of minority interests in NFL [5] clubs. Alternatively, Sullivan requested a waiver from the public ownership policy for his contemplated public offering of the Patriots. Sullivan's request was eventually tabled at this meeting. Discussions continued among the owners and, at one point, Sullivan counted 17 of the 21 owners needed for approval as being in favor of allowing him to make his public offering (seven owners were still undecided). Pete Rozelle, NFL Commissioner at the time, told Sullivans that he was not in favor of Sullivan's proposals and that league approval was "very dubious." Sullivan ultimately never asked for a vote on amending the ownership policy or on waiving the policy for the Patriots, and the NFL never held such a vote. Sullivan claims that he did not ask for a vote because it would have been futile.

In October of 1988, Sullivan sold the Patriots for approximately $ 83.7 million to KMS Patriots L.P. ("KMS"), a limited partnership owned by Victor Kiam and Francis Murray. Sullivan alleges that, absent the NFL's public ownership policy, he would have been able to retain a majority share of a rapidly appreciating asset with a high potential for future profits. Instead, Sullivan asserts, he was forced [6] to sell the Patriots at a depressed price to private buyers.

On May 16, 1991, Sullivan sued the NFL claiming that, among other things, the NFL had violated the Sherman Antitrust Act, 15 U.S.C. §§ 1-2, by preventing him from selling 49% of the Patriots to the public in an equity offering. Sullivan alleged that, as a result, he was forced to sell the entire team to a private buyer at a fire sale price in order to pay off existing debts. Prior to trial, the district court dismissed Sullivan's claim under § 2 of the Sherman Act along with various state law claims. After a trial on Sullivan's claim under § 1 of the Sherman Act, the jury rendered a verdict for Sullivan in the amount of $ 38 million, which the judge later reduced through remittitur to $ 17 million. Pursuant to 15 U.S.C. § 15, which provides for treble damages for antitrust violations, the court entered a final judgment for Sullivan of $ 51 million. II. ANALYSIS

The NFL has raised a number of issues on appeal concerning the application of § 1 of the Sherman Act to the facts of this case, which, according to the NFL, entitle it to judgment as a matter [7] of law. We address these issues first to see if the present case should be dismissed, and we ultimately conclude that it should not. We next address the NFL's allegations of trial error and we find that several of them require that we overturn the verdict in this case and order a new trial.

The first set of issues involves the district court's denial of the NFL's motions for judgment as a matter of law under Fed. R. Civ. P. 50. HN1 We review the court's decision de novo, using the same stringent decisional standards that controlled the district court. Gallagher v. Wilton Enterprises, Inc., 962 F.2d 120, 125 (1st Cir. 1992); Hendricks & Assocs., Inc. v. Daewoo Corp., 923 F.2d 209, 214 (1st Cir. 1991). Under these standards, judgment for the NFL can only be ordered if the evidence, viewed in the light most favorable to Sullivan, points so strongly and overwhelmingly in favor of the NFL, that a reasonable jury could not have arrived at a verdict for Sullivan. Gallagher, 962 F.2d at 124-25; Hendricks, 923 F.2d at 214.

III. ISSUES ALLEGEDLY REQUIRING JUDGMENT [8] FOR THE NFL

A. Lack of Antitrust Injury

To establish an antitrust violation under § 1 of the Sherman Act, Sullivan must prove that the NFL's public ownership policy is "in restraint of trade." Monahan's Marine, Inc. v. Boston Whaler, Inc., 866 F.2d 525, 526 \(1st Cir. 1989\). Under antitrust law's "rule of reason," the NFL's policy is in restraint of trade if the anticompetitive effects of the policy outweigh the policy's legitimate business justifications. Id. at 526-27 (citing Business Electronics Corp. v. Sharp Electronics Corp., 485 U.S. 717, 723, 99 L. Ed. 2d 808, 108 S. Ct. 1515 \(1988\)). HN2 Anticompetitive effects, more commonly referred [[*1097] to as "injury to competition" or "harm to the competitive process," are usually measured by a reduction in output and an increase in prices in the relevant market. National Collegiate Athletic Ass'n v. Board of Regents of Univ. of Okla., 468 U.S. 85, 104-07, 82 L. Ed. 2d 70, 104 S. Ct. 2948 \(1984\) ("Restrictions on price and output are [9] the paradigmatic examples of restraints of trade") (hereinafter "NCAA"); Chicago Professional Sports Ltd. Partnership v. National Basketball Association, 961 F.2d 667, 670 \(7th Cir.\), cert. denied, 121 L. Ed. 2d 334, 113 S. Ct. 409 \(1992\). Injury to competition has also been described more generally in terms of decreased efficiency in the marketplace which negatively impacts consumers. Town of Concord v. Boston Edison Co., 915 F.2d 17, 21-22 \(1st Cir. 1990\), cert. denied, 499 U.S. 931, 113 L. Ed. 2d 268, 111 S. Ct. 1337 (1991); Interface Group, Inc. v. Massachusetts Port Auth., 816 F.2d 9, 10 \(1st Cir. 1987\). Thus, HN3 an action harms the competitive process "when it obstructs the achievement of competition's basic goals -- lower prices, better products, and more efficient production methods." [Town of Concord, 915 F.2d at 22.

The jury determined in this case, via a special verdict form, that the relevant market is the "nationwide market [10] for the sale and purchase of ownership interests in the National Football League member clubs, in general, and in the New England Patriots, in particular." The jury went on to find that the NFL's policy had an "actual harmful effect" on competition in this market.

The NFL argues on appeal that Sullivan has not established the existence of any injury to competition, and thus has not established a restraint of trade that can be attributed to the NFL's ownership policy. The league's attack is two-fold, asserting (1) that NFL clubs do not compete with each other for the sale of ownership interests in their teams so there exists no competition to be injured in the first place; and (2) Sullivan did not present sufficient evidence of injury to competition from which a reasonable jury could conclude that the NFL's policy restrains trade. Although we agree with the NFL that conceptualizing the harm to competition in this case is rather difficult, precedent and deference to the jury verdict ultimately require us to reject the NFL's challenge to the finding of injury to competition.

Critically, the NFL does not challenge on appeal the jury's initial finding of the relevant market and no [11] corresponding challenge was raised at trial.¹ As a result, the NFL faces an uphill battle in its attack on the presence of an injury to competition. Given the existence of a relevant market for ownership interests in NFL teams, it is reasonable to presume that a policy restricting the buying and selling of such ownership interests injures competition in that market. The NFL nevertheless maintains that NFL teams do not compete against each other for the sale of their ownership interests, even if we accept that a market exists for such ownership interests.

¹ The NFL argues in passing that certain expert testimony related to the relevant market issue was inherently unreasonable and thus could not support the jury's relevant market finding. We do not consider this passing argument to be sufficient to raise the relevant market issue on appeal as HN4 matters averted to in a perfunctory manner, unaccompanied by some effort at developed argumentation, are deemed waived on appeal. [United States v. Innamorati, 996 F.2d 456, 468 \(1st Cir. 1993\). More importantly, the NFL did not challenge the relevant market issue in either its directed verdict motion or in its motion for judgment as a matter of law. We will not consider arguments which could have been, but were not, advanced below. Domegan v. Fair, 859 F.2d 1059, 1065 \(1st Cir. 1988\).

[12] 1. No Competition Subject to Injury as Matter of Law

The NFL correctly points out that member clubs must cooperate in a variety of ways, and may do so lawfully, in order to make the football league a success. See United States Football League v. National Football League, 842 F.2d 1335, 1372 (2d Cir. 1988); Los Angeles Memorial Coliseum Comm'n v. National Football League, 726 F.2d 1381, 1391-92 (9th Cir.), cert. denied, 469 U.S. 990 (1984) (hereinafter "L.A. Coliseum"); North American Soccer League v. National Football League, 670 F.2d 1249, 1251 (2d Cir.), cert. denied, 459 U.S. 1074, 103 S. Ct. 499, 74, [*1098] L. Ed. 2d 639 (1982) (hereinafter "NASL"). On the other hand, it is well established that NFL clubs also compete with each other, both on and off the field, for things like fan support, players, coaches, ticket sales, local broadcast revenues, and the sale of team paraphernalia. Mid-South Grizzlies v. National Football League, 720 F.2d 772, 786-87 (3d Cir. 1983), [13] cert. denied, 467 U.S. 1215, 81 L. Ed. 2d 364, 104 S. Ct. 2657 (1984); L.A. Coliseum, 726 F.2d at 1390, 1393, 1395, 1397. The question of whether competition exists between NFL teams for sale of their ownership interests, such that the NFL's ownership policy injures this competition, is ultimately a question of fact. The NFL would have us find, however, that, as a matter of law, NFL teams do not compete against each other for the sale of their ownership interests. We decline to make such a finding.

The NFL relies on a series of cases which allegedly stand for the "well established" rule that a professional sports league's restrictions on who may join the league or acquire an interest in a member club do not give rise to a claim under the antitrust laws. Seattle Totems Hockey Club, Inc. v. National Hockey League, 783 F.2d 1347 (9th Cir.), cert. denied, 479 U.S. 932, 93 L. Ed. 2d 357, 107 S. Ct. 405 (1986); Fishman v. Estate of Wirtz, 807 F.2d 520 (7th Cir. 1986); [14] Mid-South Grizzlies, 720 F.2d at 772; Levin v. National Basketball Ass'n, 385 F. Supp. 149 (S.D.N.Y. 1974). These cases, all involving a professional sport's league's refusal to approve individual transfers of team ownership or the creation of new teams, do not stand for the broad proposition that no NFL ownership policy can injure competition. See, e.g., NASL, 670 F.2d at 1259-61 (finding that the NFL's policy against cross-ownership of NFL teams and franchises in competing sports leagues, which also effectively barred certain owners who owned other sports franchises from purchasing NFL teams, injured competition between the NFL and competing sports leagues and thus violated § 1 of the Sherman Act).

None of the cases cited by the NFL considered the particular relevant market that was found by the jury in this case or a league policy against public ownership. Seattle Totems and Mid-South Grizzlies considered potential inter-league competition when a sports league rejected plaintiffs' applications for new league franchises. Seattle Totems, 783 F.2d at 1349-50; [15] Mid-South Grizzlies, 720 F.2d at 785-86. Those decisions found no injury to competition because the plaintiffs were not competing with the defendant sports leagues, but rather, were seeking to join those leagues. Seattle Totems, 783 F.2d at 1350; Mid-South Grizzlies, 720 F.2d at 785-86. Mid-South Grizzlies left open the possibility that potential intra-league competition between NFL football clubs could be harmed by the NFL's action, but found that the plaintiff in that case had not presented sufficient evidence of harm to such competition. Mid-South Grizzlies, 720 F.2d at 786-87.

The Fishman and Levin cases concerned the National Basketball Association's ("N.B.A.") rejection of plaintiffs' attempts to buy an existing team. Fishman, 807 F.2d at 525-31; Levin, 385 F. Supp. at 150-51. Those cases also based their finding that there was no injury to competition on the fact that the plaintiffs were seeking to join with, rather than compete against, the N.B.A. Fishman, 807 F.2d at 544; [16] Levin, 385 F. Supp. at 152. Neither case considered whether competition between teams for investment capital was injured. As pointed out in Piazza v. Major League Baseball, 831 F. Supp. 420 (E.D.Pa. 1993), Fishman explicitly recognized the potential for competition in the market for ownership of teams, although the plaintiff had failed to raise the issue, and Levin simply presumed, incorrectly, that there could never be any competition among league members. Piazza, 831 F. Supp. at 430-31 & n.16 (citing Fishman, 807 F.2d at 532 n.9; and Levin, 385 F. Supp. at 152).

The important distinction to make between the cases cited by the NFL and the present case is that here Sullivan alleges that the NFL's policy against public ownership generally restricts competition between clubs for the sale of their ownership interests, whereas in the aforementioned cases, a league's refusal to approve a given sale transaction or a new team merely prevented particular outsiders from joining the league, but did not [*1099] limit competition between [17] the teams themselves. To put it another way, the NFL's public ownership policy allegedly does not merely prevent the replacement of one club owner with another -- an action having little evident effect on competition -- it compromises the entire process by which competition for club ownership occurs.²

[18] We take a moment to briefly address a related argument raised by the NFL to the effect that NFL clubs are unable to conspire with each other under § 1 of the Sherman Act because they function as a single enterprise in relation to the league's public ownership policy. The NFL asserts that the Supreme Court's holding in Copperweld Corp. v. Independence Tube Corp., 467 U.S. 752, 81 L. Ed. 2d 628, 104 S. Ct. 2731 \(1984\), controls the facts of this case and overturns prior caselaw holding that NFL clubs do not constitute a single enterprise but rather, are separate entities which were capable of conspiring with each other under § 1. See L.A. Coliseum, 726 F.2d at 1387-90; NASL, 670 F.2d at 1256-58.

We do not agree that Copperweld, which found a corporation and its wholly owned subsidiary to be a single enterprise for purposes of § 1, Copperweld, 467 U.S. at 771, applies to the facts of this case or affects the prior precedent concerning the NFL. See McNeil v. National Football League, 790 F. Supp. 871, 879-80 \(D.Minn. 1992\) [19] (holding that Copperweld did not apply to the NFL and its member clubs and finding the clubs to be separate entities capable of conspiring together under § 1). Copperweld's holding turned on the fact that the subsidiary of a corporation, although legally distinct from the corporation itself, "pursued the common interests of the whole rather than interests separate from those of the corporation itself." Copperweld, 467 U.S. at 770. As emphasized in City of Mt. Pleasant, Iowa v. Associated Elec. Co-op., Inc., 838 F.2d 268 \(8th Cir. 1988\), upon which the NFL relies for the application of Copperweld to this case, the critical inquiry is whether the alleged antitrust conspirators have a "unity of interests" or whether, instead, "any of the defendants has pursued interests diverse from those of the cooperative itself." Id. at 274-77 (defining "diverse" as "interests which tend to show that any two of the defendants are, or have been, actual or potential competitors"). As we have already noted, NFL member clubs compete in several ways off the field, which [20] itself tends to show that the teams pursue diverse interests and thus are not a single enterprise under § 1.

Ultimately, the NFL's Copperweld challenge is subsumed under the question of whether or not the evidence can support a finding that NFL teams compete against each other for the sale of their ownership interests. Proof of such competition defeats both the NFL's challenge to the existence of an injury to competition and the NFL's Copperweld argument as well. Insufficient proof of such competition would require a judgment in favor of the NFL anyway, regardless of the implications under Copperweld. As we discuss below, the jury's finding that there exists competition between teams for the sale of ownership interests was based on sufficient evidence.

2. Insufficient Evidence of Harm to Competition

The NFL contends that Sullivan did not present sufficient evidence concerning: (1) the existence of competition between NFL clubs for the sale of ownership interests, or (2) a decrease in output, an increase in prices, a detrimental effect on efficiency or other incidents of harm to competition in the relevant market, from which a reasonable jury could conclude that [21] the NFL's policy injured competition. Although we agree that [*1100] the evidence of all these factors is rather thin, we disagree that the evidence is too thin to support a jury verdict in Sullivan's favor.

With respect to evidence of the existence of competition for the sale of ownership interests, one of Sullivan's experts, Professor Roger Noll, testified that "one of the ways in which the NFL exercises monopoly power in the market for the franchises and ownership is by excluding certain people from owning all or part -- any type part of an ² This same argument distinguishes cases cited by the NFL for the proposition that a franchisor's disapproval of a proposed sale of a franchise does not give rise to an antitrust injury. See Kestenbaum v. Falstaff Brewing Corp., 514 F.2d 690 \(5th Cir. 1975\), cert. denied, 424 U.S. 943, 47 L. Ed. 2d 349, 96 S. Ct. 1412 (1976); McDaniel v. General Motors Corp., 480 F. Supp. 666 \(E.D.N.Y. 1979\). Individual decisions to block the sale of a franchise do not implicate the harm to competition that is caused by a policy restricting all sales of a certain type of ownership interest. Only the broad-based policy has the potential to compromise the entire competitive process for the buying and selling of a good in a relevant market.

NFL franchise." Dr. Noll explained that this "enables a group of owners, in this case, you only need eight owners, to exclude from the League and from competing with them, people who might be more effective competitors than they are." The record also contains statements from several NFL owners which could reasonably be interpreted as expressions of concern about their ability to compete with other teams in the market for investment capital in general, and for the sale of ownership interests in particular. For example, Arthur Rooney II of the Pittsburgh Steelers stated in a letter that he did not "believe that the individually or family owned teams will [22] be able to compete with the consolidated groups." Ralph Wilson of the Buffalo Bills stated that big corporations should not own teams because it gives them an "unfair competitive advantage" over other teams since corporations will funnel money into the team and make it "more competitive" than the other franchises. Former NFL Commissioner Pete Rozelle admitted that similar sentiments had been expressed by NFL members.

Although it is not precisely clear that the "competition" about which Noll, Rooney, and Wilson were discussing is the same competition at issue here -- that is competition for the sale of ownership interests -- a jury could reasonably interpret these statements as expressing a belief that the competition exists between teams for the sale of ownership interests. The statements of the two NFL owners imply that greater access to capital for all teams will put increased pressure on some teams to compete with others for that capital, and all the statements reveal that the ownership rules, particularly the rule against public ownership, is the main obstacle preventing such access. The fact that ownership by "consolidated groups" is not necessarily the same as public ownership [23] does not affect the conclusion that teams face competitive pressure in selling their ownership interests generally to whoever might buy them. We also note that evidence of actual, present competition is not necessary as long as the evidence shows that the potential for competition exists. See L. A. Coliseum, 726 F.2d at 1394 (discussing significance of potential competition, especially where challenged policy limits such competition so that it is not evident in practice). It would be difficult indeed to provide direct evidence of competition when the NFL effectively prohibits it.

The NFL focusses on the fact that Professor Noll testified that many of the purchasers of Patriots' stock would be New England sports fans and others in the New England area. The NFL points out that other NFL teams would not compete with the Patriots for the sale of stock to their own fans. This argument slightly distorts Professor Noll's testimony. Professor Noll stated that local souvenir buyers would be one portion of the market for Patriots stock. Professor Noll also testified several times that other investors would buy Patriots stock as well, for investment purposes. [24] Noll's point was that the souvenir buyers would serve to bid up the price of the stock above what the price would normally be if the Patriots were a regular company. His testimony did not preclude a finding that NFL teams compete against each other for investment capital via the sale of ownership interests.

The record also contains sufficient evidence of the normal incidents of injury to competition from the NFL's policy -- reduced output, increased prices, and reduced efficiency -- to support the jury's verdict. As Dr. Noll pointed out in his testimony, the NFL's policy "excludes individuals . . . who might want to own a share of stock in a professional football team." Several NFL officials themselves admitted that the policy restricts the market for investment capital among NFL teams. There is thus little dispute that the NFL's ownership policy reduces the available output of ownership interests.

[*1101] The NFL is correct that, in one sense, the overall pool of potential output is fixed because there are only 28 NFL teams and, although their value may fluctuate, the quantity of their ownership interests cannot. However, the NFL's public ownership policy completely wipes out a certain type [25] of ownership interest -- public ownership of stock. By restricting output in one form of ownership, the NFL is thereby reducing the output of ownership interests overall. In other words, the NFL is literally restricting the output of a product -- a share in an NFL team.

There was considerable testimony concerning the price effects of the NFL policy. Both of Sullivan's experts testified that the policy depressed the price of ownership interests in NFL teams because NFL franchises would normally command a premium on the public market relative to their value in the private market, which is all that the league currently permits. Professor Noll testified that fan loyalty would push up the price of ownership interests if sales to the public were allowed. Even former Commissioner Pete Rozelle acknowledged that "it was pointed out, with justification, it has been over the years, that [the ownership policy] does restrict your market and, very likely, the price you could get for one of our franchises if you wanted to sell it, because you are eliminating a very broad market . . . And they have said that there is a depression on the price they could get for their franchise."

The NFL points [26] out that the alleged effect of its ownership policy is to reduce prices of NFL team ownership interests, rather than to raise prices which is normally the measure of an injury to competition. E.g., Town of Concord, 915 F.2d at 22. We acknowledge that it is not clear whether, absent some sort of dumping or predatory pricing, see, e.g., Monahan's Marine, Inc. v. Boston Whaler, Inc., 866 F.2d 525, 527 \(1st Cir. 1989\), a decrease in prices can indicate injury to competition in a relevant market. The Supreme Court has emphasized, however, that HN5 overall consumer preferences in setting output and prices is more important than higher prices and lower output, per se, in determining whether there has been an injury to competition. NCAA, 468 U.S. at 107. In this case, regardless of the exact price effects of the NFL's policy, the overall market effects of the policy are plainly unresponsive to consumer demand for ownership interests in NFL teams. Dr. Noll testified that fans are interested in buying shares in NFL teams and that the NFL's policy deprives [27] fans of this product. Moreover, evidence was presented concerning the public offering of the Boston Celtics professional basketball team which demonstrated, according to some of the testimony, fan interest in buying ownership of professional sports teams. Thus, a jury could conclude that the NFL's policy injured competition by making the relevant market "unresponsive to consumer preference." *Id.*³

[28] As for overall efficiency of production in the relevant market,⁴ Sullivan's experts testified that the NFL's policy hindered efficiency gains, and that allowing public ownership would make for better football teams. Professor Noll stated that the NFL's public ownership policy prevented individuals who [*1102] might be "more efficient and much better at running a professional football team" from owning teams. Dr. Noll also stated that publicly owned NFL teams would be better managed, and produce higher quality entertainment for the fans. Noll testified that the ownership rule excluded certain types of management structures which would likely be more efficient in running the teams, resulting in higher franchise values. One NFL owner, Lamar Hunt, acknowledged that increased access to capital can improve a team's operations and performance. A memorandum prepared by an NFL staff member stated that changes to the NFL's public ownership policy could contribute to each NFL team's own financial strength and viability, which in turn would benefit the entire NFL because the league has a strong interest in having strong, viable teams.

[29] The NFL presented a large amount of evidence to the contrary and now claims on appeal that Sullivan's position was based on nothing more than sheer speculation. We have reviewed the record, however, and we cannot say that the evidence was so overwhelming that no reasonable jury could find against the NFL and in favor of Sullivan. We therefore refuse to enter judgment in favor of the NFL as a matter of law.

B. Ancillary Benefits

The NFL next argues that even if its public ownership policy injures competition in a relevant market, it should be upheld as ancillary to the legitimate joint activity that is "NFL football" and thus not violative of the Sherman Act. We take no issue with the proposition that certain joint ventures enable separate business entities to combine their skills and resources in pursuit of a common goal that cannot be effectively pursued by the venturers acting alone. See, e.g., Broadcast Music, Inc. v. Columbia Broadcasting System, Inc., 441 U.S. 1, 60 L. Ed. 2d 1, 99 S. Ct. 1551 (1979). We also do not dispute that a "restraint" that is ancillary to the functioning of such a joint [30] activity -- i.e. one that is required to make the joint activity more efficient -- does not necessarily violate the antitrust laws. Broadcast Music, 441 U.S. at 23-25; Rothery Storage & Van Co. v. Atlas Van Lines, Inc., 253 U.S. App. D.C. 142, 792 F.2d 210, at 223-24 (D.C. Cir. 1986), cert. denied, 479 U.S. 1033, 93 L. Ed. 2d 834, 107 S. Ct. 880 (1987); see also Northwest Wholesale Stationers, Inc. v. Pacific Stationery & Printing Co., 472 U.S. 284, 295-96, 86 L. Ed. 2d 202, 105 S. Ct. 2613 (1985). We further accept, for purposes of this appeal, that rules controlling who may join a joint venture can be ancillary to a legitimate joint activity and that the NFL's own policy against public ownership constitutes one example of such an ancillary rule. Finally, we accept the NFL's claim that its public ownership policy contributes to the ability of the NFL to function as an effective sports league, and that the NFL's functioning would be impaired [31] if publicly owned teams were permitted, because the short-term dividend interests of a club's shareholder would often conflict with the long-term interests of the league as a whole. That is, the policy avoids a detrimental conflict of interests between team shareholders and the league.

³ The NFL maintains that price and output are not affected because its ownership policy does not limit the number of games or teams, does not raise ticket prices or the prices of game telecasts and does not affect the normal consumer of the NFL's product in any other way. Such facts might be relevant to an inquiry of whether the NFL's policy harms overall efficiency, see infra note [4], but it is not relevant to whether the policy affects output and prices in the relevant market for ownership interests. Just because consumers of "NFL football" are not affected by output controls and price increases does not mean that consumers of a product in the relevant market are not so affected. In this case, two types of consumers are denied products by the NFL policy: consumers who want to buy stock of the Patriots or other teams, and consumers like Sullivan who want to "purchase" investment capital in the market for public financing.

⁴ Although the product at issue in the relevant market is "ownership interests," efficiency in production of that product can be measured by the value of the ownership interest. That is, an improved product produced more efficiently will be reflected in the value of the output in question (regardless of the price). In this case, the value of the product depends on the success of the Patriots' football team, the overall efficiency of its operations, and the success of the NFL in general.

We disagree, however, that these factors are sufficient to establish as a matter of law that the NFL's ownership policy does not unreasonably restrain trade in violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act. The holdings in Broadcast Music, Rothery Storage, and Northwest Stationers, do not throw the "rule of reason" out the window merely because one establishes that a given practice among joint venture participants is ancillary to legitimate and efficient activity -- the injury to competition must still be weighed against the purported benefits under the rule of reason. See, e.g., Broadcast Music, 441 U.S. at 24 (holding only that a particular ancillary restraint did not constitute a per se violation of the Sherman Act and remanding for a determination of the case under a rule of reason analysis); Northwest Stationers, 472 U.S. at 293-98 [32] (same); cf. SCFC ILC, Inc. v. Visa U.S.A. Inc., 36 F.3d 958, 1994 U.S. App. LEXIS 26849 *19, (10th Cir. Sept. 23, 1994) (rejecting arguments that joint [*1103] ventures require a "special" rule of reason review, but finding no violation of Section 1 on the specific facts of the case).

HN6 [↑] One basic tenet of the rule of reason is that a given restriction is not reasonable, that is, its benefits cannot outweigh its harm to competition, if a reasonable, less restrictive alternative to the policy exists that would provide the same benefits as the current restraint. L.A. Coliseum, 726 F.2d at 1396. The record contains evidence of a less restrictive alternative to the NFL's ownership policy that may yield the same benefits as the current policy. Sullivan points to one proposal to amend the current ownership policy by allowing for the sale of minority, nonvoting shares of team stock to the public with restrictions on the size of the holdings by any one individual. Dividend payments, if any, would be within the firm control of the NFL majority owner. Under such a policy, it would be reasonable for a jury to conclude that private control of member clubs is maintained, [33] conflicts of interest are avoided, and all the other "benefits" of the NFL's joint venture arrangement are preserved while at the same time teams would have access to the market for public investment capital through the sale of ownership interests. Whether this proposed amendment is indeed a less restrictive, equally beneficial policy, is a jury question we need not reach here. We merely point to it as one factor a jury may consider in its rule of reason analysis. Whether this proposed amendment is indeed a less restrictive, equally beneficial policy, is a jury question we need not reach here. We merely point to it as one factor a jury may consider in its rule of reason analysis.

C. Causation of Injury in Fact

The NFL next argues that Sullivan did not present sufficient evidence to support a finding by the jury that the NFL's public ownership policy caused injury in fact to Sullivan. An antitrust plaintiff must prove that he or she suffered damages from an antitrust violation and that there is a causal connection between the illegal practice and the injury. Associated General Contractors, Inc. v. California State Council of Carpenters, 459 U.S. 519, 532-33 & n.26, 74 L. Ed. 2d 723, 103 S. Ct. 897 (1983); Blue Shield of Virginia v. McCready, 457 U.S. 465, 476-78, 73 L. Ed. 2d 149, 102 S. Ct. 2540 (1982); Engine Specialties, Inc. v. Bombardier Ltd., 605 F.2d 1, 13 (1st Cir. 1979), cert. denied, 446 U.S. 983, 64 L. Ed. 2d 839, 100 S. Ct. 2964 (1980). [34] "Plaintiffs need not prove that the antitrust violation was the sole cause of their injury, but only that it was a material cause." Engine Specialties, 605 F.2d at 14.

Sullivan asserted at trial that the NFL's ownership policy forced him to sell the Patriots at a depressed price, far below what the team would have been worth in a market that included public ownership of the team. "But for" the NFL's policy, Sullivan claims, he would have been able to offer 49% of the Patriots to the public for $ 70 million, pay off his debts, and retained ownership of a much more valuable and profitable team.

The NFL contends that Sullivan failed to establish a causal connection between his "forced" sale of the Patriots and the NFL's ownership policy because (1) Sullivan never officially requested a vote on his proposals to amend or waive the policy so there is no way of knowing whether the policy would have prevented a public offering in the first place; and (2) Sullivan never established that the public stock sale was feasible or potentially successful and thus an alternative to what ultimately happened (i.e., even if the NFL did not have a policy against public ownership, [35] Sullivan would still have had to sell his team because the Patriots stock sale would not have happened or would not have raised enough money to pay off Sullivan's debts and prevent a fire sale of the team). Although the evidence of causation is not overwhelming, it is nevertheless sufficient to support the verdict.

Regarding the NFL's first claim that Sullivan never called for a vote from the owners to change or waive the ownership policy, Sullivan presented sufficient evidence to show that the NFL essentially rejected Sullivan's request, even though no official vote was taken. HN7 Under certain circumstances, an antitrust plaintiff must make a demand on the defendant to allow the plaintiff to take some action or obtain some benefit, which the defendant's challenged practice is allegedly preventing the plaintiff from taking or obtaining, in order to prove that the practice caused injury in fact to the plaintiff. See Wells Real Estate, Inc. v. Greater Lowell Bd. of Realtors, 850 F.2d 803, 816 \(1st Cir.\), cert. denied, 488 U.S. 955, 102 L. Ed. 2d 381, 109 S. Ct. 392 (1988); Out Front Productions, Inc. v. Magid, 748 F.2d 166, 170 \(3d Cir. 1984\). [36] Such a requirement only applies, however, where the plaintiff cannot otherwise prove that the illegal practice exists or that [1104] the practice is preventing the plaintiff from competing in the relevant market; in such cases, a refused demand is the only reliable evidence of causation. Out Front, 748 F.2d at 169-70. In cases like the present one, an official request and official refusal is not necessary to establish causality because there is other evidence showing that defendant's practice caused injury in fact to the plaintiff. Zenith Radio Corp. v. Hazeltine Research, 395 U.S. 100, 120 n.15, 23 L. Ed. 2d 129, 89 S. Ct. 1562 \(1969\); Continental Ore Co. v. Union Carbide & Carbon Corp., 370 U.S. 690, 699-702, 8 L. Ed. 2d 777, 82 S. Ct. 1404 \(1962\). There is certainly no blanket requirement, as the NFL maintains, in Wells or any other case, that Sullivan must call for a vote and obtain an official refusal from the NFL, even if such a request would be futile. See, e.g., Wells, 850 F.2d at 816 [37] (finding failure to request access to multiple listing service was critical because "there was no evidence of a group boycott;" although court noted request "may have been futile," there was no evidence to indicate that it would have been, so an actual request was required); Chicago Ridge Theatre Ltd. Partnership v. M & R Amusement Corp., 855 F.2d 465, 470 \(7th Cir. 1988\) (futility obviates the need for a demand). Certainly, if Sullivan can prove futility independent of any official request, he need not show that he actually called for a vote and received a denial from the other NFL owners.

The jury in this case heard evidence that would allow it to conclude that the NFL effectively denied Sullivan's request for a waiver or amendment of the public ownership policy, and that an official vote would indeed have been futile. The NFL's policy against public ownership was long-standing, and the policy withheld several efforts to change it over the years as proffered amendment proposals were never brought to a vote. Sullivan requested a waiver of, or amendment to, the policy at a meeting of the owners on October 27, 1987. His request was tabled. After [38] further discussions, then-Commissioner Pete Rozelle said that he opposed the proposal and that the chances for league approval were "very dubious." Although Sullivan was only four votes shy of winning a vote, with seven votes still undecided, the jury could reasonably conclude that, in light of the Commissioner's statement, Sullivan tried but failed to convince those undecided owners to vote in his favor and that an actual vote would have been futile. The evidence is thus sufficient to support a finding that the NFL's policy was effectively enforced against Sullivan and that the policy did in fact, when considered with the evidence discussed below, prevent Sullivan from making his public offering of 49% of the Patriots.

Sullivan also presented sufficient evidence to support a finding that the Patriots stock sale was both feasible and potentially successful. Sullivan met with Stephens, Inc., an investment banking firm, to discuss a deal whereby Stephens would arrange for a loan of $ 80 million to Sullivan and his son, half of which would be paid back out of the proceeds of the Patriots stock offering, which Stephens would also arrange. In a subsequent letter, Stephens stated that it [39] had been retained to assist in the "private placement of $ 80 million of debt" and set out some preliminary terms and conditions. Although specifics of the public offering were not discussed, and Stephens did not determine whether the stock offering was ultimately feasible, Stephens repeatedly made it clear to Sullivan that NFL approval was required -- indeed Stephens specifically singled out NFL approval as the prerequisite -- before Stephens could proceed any further with efforts to prepare for the placement of Patriots stock.

As discussed above, NFL approval was never obtained. Therefore, the jury could conclude that lack of approval was the reason Stephens was unwilling to proceed with the deal, even though Stephens also expressed some concern about Sullivan's financial and legal troubles. The jury also heard testimony that Charles Allen, a prominent investment banker in New York, thought the Patriots public offering was feasible and that he was potentially interested in arranging the deal. Sullivan himself testified that the stock sale was feasible based on his experience with the previous public offering of Patriots stock in 1960, and based on the public offering of the [40] Boston Celtics. Finally, one of Sullivan's experts, Patrick Brake, testified that the public offering would have been feasible had the NFL not blocked it.

In addition, despite significant financial and legal problems with the Patriots, the [*1105] evidence is sufficient to support a finding that Sullivan could have solved these problems in the course of the public offering and, further, that he could have brought off a successful stock sale that would have raised at least $ 70 million.

The NFL focusses its challenge to the potential success of Sullivan's offering on the testimony of Patrick Brake, who provided the $ 70 million figure as the value for the stock sale. According to the NFL, Brake's testimony could not support the jury's finding on causation because it was not supported by any facts, it was not grounded in any rational methodology, and it ignored important factors indicating that the Patriots offering would not be a success. The NFL does not challenge the admissibility of Brake's opinion but, instead, claims that his opinion cannot support the jury's finding that the Patriots stock sale would have been a success if the NFL had allowed it to happen.

HN8 [↑] "When an expert opinion is [41] not supported by sufficient facts to validate it in the eyes of the law, or when indisputable record facts contradict or otherwise render the opinion unreasonable, it cannot support a jury's verdict." Brooke Group, Ltd. v. Brown & Williamson Tobacco Corp., 125 L. Ed. 2d 168, 113 S. Ct. 2578, 2589 (1993); accord Price v. General Motors Corp., 931 F.2d 162, 165 (1st Cir. 1991); Richardson v. Richardson-Merrell, Inc., 273 U.S. App. D.C. 32, 857 F.2d 823, 829 (D.C. Cir. 1988), cert. denied, 493 U.S. 882, 107 L. Ed. 2d 171, 110 S. Ct. 218 (1989). A jury verdict cannot rest solely on an expert's "bottom line" conclusion, without some underlying facts and reasons, or a logical inferential process to support the expert's opinion. Mid-State Fertilizer Co. v. Exchange National Bank, 877 F.2d 1333, 1339 (7th Cir. 1989).

We agree that the facts and reasoning underlying Brake's opinions and testimony leave much to be desired from the standpoint of a factfinder charged [42] with determining the facts. As a matter of law, however, Brake provided enough of a basis for his opinions and had sufficient facts to back his opinions up, to support, in combination with the evidence from other sources, a jury finding of potential success of the Patriots stock sale venture. To begin with, Brake stated in his testimony that his opinion was based on a review of documents and depositions in the case, a review of the prospectus for the Boston Celtics public offering, the fact that future television revenues for the Patriots were likely to increase due to the Patriots' appearance in the Super Bowl, and the fact that the public stock for NFL teams, like the Patriots, would trade at a premium value over what the club would otherwise be worth. Brake also stated that he looked at a financial statement of the Patriots and was apprised of some of the debt and loss history of the club. Other testimony and evidence at trial supported the claim that stock of NFL teams would sell for a premium above the club's private sale value and the claim that TV revenues to the NFL teams would increase. Sullivan himself testified that a public offering would be successful based upon the success [43] of his earlier offering of Patriots stock and on the results of the Celtics public offering. There was also testimony -- highly disputed, but potentially credible testimony nonetheless -- to the effect that the Celtics' stock offering was a success and that the Patriots stock offering could be patterned after the Celtics offering.

As for the source of Brake's specific $ 70 million figure for the likely proceeds from a sale of 49% of the Patriots, Brake explained a two-step public offering process which, after subtracting underwriting fees, would yield the Sullivan's $ 70 million. Brake arrived at this figure after starting with a base value of $ 150 million for the Patriots. Given the $ 80 million private sale price of the Patriots obtained by Sullivan when he actually sold the team, and given the testimony by Brake and others that public stock of NFL teams would sell at a premium, we cannot say that the opinion by Brake, an investment banking expert, was unreasonable or "not supported by sufficient facts to validate it in the eyes of the law." Brooke Group, 113 S. Ct. at 2589.

Brake's testimony was not merely conclusory. Rather, it was 44 embellished by various explanations and justifications. His testimony was also not overwhelmingly contradicted by the weight of the evidence or inherently 1106 contradictory, unreasonable or irrational. Brake did overlook some important factors that contradicted his opinion, but he was questioned about these factors on cross-examination and the NFL argued them before the jury. The factors do not invalidate Brake's opinion as a matter of law; rather, they merely go to the weight and credibility of his opinions which are matters for the jury to consider. The basis of the opinion regarding the success of the Patriots public offering may be flimsy, but it is not nonexistent or irrational as a matter of law.

Although we share the NFL's skepticism that Sullivan would have succeeded in his public offering if the NFL had allowed him to try it, we cannot say that, as a matter of law, the evidence was so overwhelming that no reasonable jury could find that the NFL's policy harmed Sullivan by preventing him from doing something he would otherwise have been able to do. We therefore reject the NFL's claim that it is entitled to a judgment in its favor on the basis that Sullivan failed to prove his 45 injury was caused by the alleged antitrust violation.

D. Assignment of Antitrust Claim

The NFL argues that Sullivan cannot bring this lawsuit because he sold his antitrust claim when he sold the Patriots. The sale contract between Sullivan and KMS Patriots, L.P., provided that Sullivan transferred to the buyers "all other assets" of the Patriots' and its holding company,⁵ besides those specifically listed and those specifically excluded. None of the listed or excluded assets include an antitrust claim. According to the NFL, the term "all other assets" should be interpreted broadly to include the present antitrust cause of action. We disagree. Absent some express language to the effect that Sullivan was selling his football related "antitrust claims" or, at the very least, "causes of action," we cannot find that Sullivan assigned the present antitrust claim to the buyers of the Patriots. Gulfstream III Assocs., Inc. v. Gulfstream Aerospace Corp., 995 F.2d 425, 437-40 \(3d Cir. 1993\); see also Lerman v. Joyce Int'l, Inc., 10 F.3d 106, 112 \(3d Cir. 1993\) (affirming requirement in Gulfstream that assignment 46 of claim must be "express" but expanding definition of "express" language to include a grant of "all causes of action, claims and demands of whatsoever nature"). As no such express language appears in the contract for the sale of the Patriots, Sullivan did not transfer his interest in the present lawsuit to KMS Patriots when he sold the team.

The NFL's arguments concerning the application of § 1 of the Sherman Act to the facts of this case raise a substantial challenge to the jury verdict and are certainly weighty enough to give us pause. Upon careful consideration of the issues, however, we find Sullivan's 47 theory of the case to be a plausible one and ultimately find the evidence sufficient to support it. For the foregoing reasons, therefore, we see no justification, as a matter of law, for ringing the death knell on this litigation.

IV. TRIAL ERRORS

Having reviewed those issues which would have warranted a judgment in favor of the NFL, had we decided any of those issues in the NFL's favor, we now turn to the NFL's claim that it is entitled to a new trial because of allegedly erroneous jury instructions and other trial errors. In particular, the NFL asserts that the district court failed to provide the jury with several crucial jury instructions that were required in order to present to the jury certain legal theories that were potentially dispositive of the verdict. The NFL argues that the court's failure to give the instructions was prejudicial error requiring a new trial.

⁵ The language of the contract actually states "all other assets of Selling Group," which includes Sullivan himself. However, neither party asserts that Sullivan intended to transfer all his personal assets with this clause and, anyway, the "all other assets" clause is number seventeen on a list of items referred to by the contract as "the following assets of the Club and Holdco [the Patriots' holding company]."

Determining whether the failure to give proffered jury instructions is error depends on whether the instructions actually given to the jury, taken as a whole, adequately explained the law or whether they tended [*1107] to confuse or mislead the jury on the controlling issues of the case. Davet v. Maccarone, 973 F.2d 22, 26 (1st Cir. 1992); [48\] Transnational Corp. v. Rodio & Ursillo, Ltd.](#), 920 F.2d 1066, 1070 (1st Cir. 1990); see also L.A. Coliseum, 726 F.2d at 1398 ("The question, then, is whether, viewing the jury instructions as a whole, the trial judge gave adequate instructions on each element of the case to insure that the jury fully understood the issues."). We must also consider whether the NFL's proposed instructions are accurate or misleading. Shane v. Shane, 891 F.2d 976, 987 (1st Cir. 1989). HN9 "As long as the judge's instruction properly apprises the jury of the applicable law, failure to give the exact instruction requested does not prejudice the objecting party." Brown v. Trustees of Boston Univ., 891 F.2d 337, 354 (1st Cir. 1989), cert. denied, 496 U.S. 937, 110 L. Ed. 2d 664, 110 S. Ct. 3217 (1990) (internal quotations omitted). A party, however, is entitled to have its legal theories on controlling issues, which are supported by the law and by the evidence, presented to the jury. Jerlyn Yacht Sales, Inc. v. Roman Yacht Brokerage, 950 F.2d 60, 68 (1st Cir. 1991); [49\] L.A. Coliseum, 726 F.2d at 1398. An error in the jury instructions will warrant the reversal of the judgment and a new trial only if, upon review of the record as a whole, the error is determined to be prejudicial. Davet, 973 F.2d at 26; Jerlyn Yacht Sales, 950 at 69; Transnational Corp., 920 F.2d at 1070.](#)

In this case, we find that the failure to give certain instructions was prejudicial error⁶ and we therefore vacate the judgment and order a new trial.

A. Equal Involvement Defense

The NFL argued before the district court that Sullivan was a complete and substantially equal participant in the NFL's ownership 50 policy which he now challenges in the present lawsuit. As a result of Sullivan's involvement, the NFL claimed, Sullivan was barred from bringing a damages action under the antitrust laws pursuant to the "equal involvement defense" doctrine. The district court denied motions for summary judgment and a directed verdict on this issue and, further, refused to instruct the jury on the availability of the defense because it found that the evidence showed that Sullivan "had very little, if any, involvement in the formulation of [the public ownership] rule," and because the rule "was imposed on [Sullivan] by a preexisting National Football League rule." This ruling constituted prejudicial error because the "equal involvement defense" is an absolute defense to an antitrust claim and because the evidence warranted sending the issue to the jury.

A plaintiff's "complete, voluntary, and substantially equal participation" in an illegal practice under the antitrust laws precludes recovery for that antitrust violation. CVD, Inc. v. Raytheon Co., 769 F.2d 842, 856 (1st Cir. 1985), cert. denied, 475 U.S. 1016, 89 L. Ed. 2d 312, 106 S. Ct. 1198 (1986); [51\] General Leaseways, Inc. v. National Truck Leasing Ass'n, 830 F.2d 716, 720-23 \(7th Cir. 1987\); THI-Hawaii, Inc. v. First Commerce Financial Corp., 627 F.2d 991, 995 \(9th Cir. 1980\); see also Bateman Eichler, Hill, Richards, Inc. v. Berner, 472 U.S. 299, 310-11, 86 L. Ed. 2d 215, 105 S. Ct. 2622 \(1985\) \(applying equal involvement defense in securities law context\). In order to establish an "equal involvement" defense, an antitrust defendant must prove, by a preponderance of the evidence, that the plaintiff bears at least substantially equal responsibility for an anticompetitive restriction by creating, approving, maintaining, continually and actively supporting, relying upon, or otherwise utilizing and implementing, that restriction to his or her benefit.⁷ \[53\\] General\]\(#\) \[*1108\\] Leaseways\]\(#\), 830 F.2d at 720-26; CVD, 769 F.2d at 856. It](#) ⁶The court's failure to instruct on the complete involvement defense was prejudicial error and, by itself, sufficient grounds for reversal and a new trial. We do not decide whether any of the other errors, standing alone, are prejudicial. We do hold, however, that all the errors taken together are prejudicial.

⁷The Supreme Court in Bateman added an additional requirement to the "equal involvement" defense: that "preclusion of suit would not significantly interfere with the effective enforcement of" the antitrust laws. Bateman, 472 U.S. at 311. We do not see a preclusion of Sullivan's damages action as presenting any significant interference with antitrust law enforcement. The NFL's policy is still subject to challenge under the antitrust laws. Because the equal involvement defense only precludes a damages is not essential to the defense that the plaintiff actually helped author or create the policy, although such facts would be highly probative, as long as the plaintiff was [52] substantially responsible for maintaining and otherwise effectuating the policy. See, e.g., General Leaseways, 830 F.2d at 723 (applying equal involvement defense in case where plaintiff did not participate in the actual adoption of the policy although plaintiff was substantially involved in supporting, enforcing and maintaining the policy).⁸ On the other hand, proof that the plaintiff benefitted from the challenged policy or failed to object to the policy, without more, is not sufficient to show "substantially equal participation." See id., 830 F.2d at 725 (noting that "mere participation" in the challenged policy is not enough). Moreover, proof that the plaintiff was coerced ("economically" or otherwise) into supporting the policy, that the plaintiff attempted to oppose the illegal conduct, or that the plaintiff's participation was otherwise not voluntary, is highly probative of the absence of complete and equal involvement by the plaintiff in an antitrust violation. E.g., CVD, 769 F.2d at 856.

In this case, the evidence in the record was sufficient to support a jury instruction on the equal involvement defense. Sullivan was one of the three AFL members on the Joint Committee that established the policies, including the ownership policies, that were to govern the new expanded NFL. That Committee agreed, in a merger agreement signed by Sullivan, to adopt the NFL's policy against public [54] ownership for the new NFL. Sullivan's son, Chuck, stated that Sullivan was the central figure in the merger negotiations. Sullivan subsequently relied on the NFL's public ownership policy to justify his purchase, through the merger of his team into a wholly owned company, of the outstanding stock of the Patriots in 1976. In the proxy statement for that transaction, Sullivan listed the NFL's policy against public ownership as one of the "Reasons for the Merger", and he attached a letter from the NFL justifying the public ownership policy and explaining that the continued presence of public stockholders conflicted with the interests of the league. Sullivan also affirmatively supported the policy in sworn testimony during the litigation with his former shareholders following the Patriots merger. Sullivan stated that the NFL's public ownership policy, and the justifications underlying the policy, were the reasons for his desire to purchase all outstanding shares of the team. There is no evidence that Sullivan ever opposed or objected to the ownership policy prior to the circumstances surrounding this case.

Taken together, this evidence is sufficient for a reasonable jury to conclude [55] that Sullivan bears substantially equal responsibility for the NFL's public ownership policy because Sullivan helped adopt the policy, he relied upon it, and he actively supported it. The jury, however, was never given an opportunity to consider this evidence in light of the equal involvement defense.

Sullivan claims that he was not at the meetings in which Lamar Hunt, the chairman of the AFL committee, agreed to the NFL's public ownership policy, and that he did not know in advance that the old NFL's public ownership rule would be adopted by the new NFL. Mr. Hunt himself testified, however, that he always spoke for the entire AFL committee at his various meetings with NFL owners, and that he discussed various [*1109] negotiating points with the other AFL owners, including Sullivan, before any decisions were made. Moreover, Sullivan's own team obtained a specific waiver from the ownership policy, which, a reasonably jury could infer, indicates that Sullivan was involved in the decision to adopt the policy. In any event, it is the jury's responsibility to weigh the evidence and make a choice in circumstances like this where the same evidence supports two different yet reasonable conclusions.

[56] The district court erred by failing to give the jury the opportunity to choose between these versions of the facts. The court's "finding" that Sullivan's involvement in the public ownership policy was minimal ignores evidence action, Sullivan could have requested injunctive relief when the public ownership policy was allegedly preventing him from selling 49% of his team. In addition, other owners who were not involved in the adoption or support of the policy may still bring suit should they desire to sell ownership interests in their team to the public.

⁸ To the extent this conflicts with the "but for" standard applied in THI-Hawaii, 627 F.2d at 995 (finding that "a plaintiff's recovery is not barred unless the illegal conspiracy would not have been formed but for its participation"), we decline to follow that portion of the case. There is no evidence of such a rigid "but for" requirement in the Supreme Court's formulation of the equal involvement defense in Bateman, 472 U.S. at 310-11 (finding the defense applies where "as a direct result of his own actions, the plaintiff bears at least substantially equal responsibility for the violations he seeks to redress").

in the record. The court's view that the NFL imposed the ownership policy on the AFL owners, rendering their participation involuntary, is largely unsupported by the record. Ultimately, however, these are factual questions for the jury and none of the instructions provided by the district court served to adequately instruct the jury on this issue or send the issue to the jury. Therefore, the district court erred in refusing to give the NFL's proffered instruction on the "equal involvement" defense.

The error was prejudicial. By refusing to instruct the jury on the equal involvement defense, the district court deprived the NFL of a complete defense from Sullivan's lawsuit. The NFL presented facts that could have led to a dismissal of the case if they were believed by a properly instructed jury. While the NFL could have highlighted, and in fact did highlight, some of the facts concerning Sullivan's support of, and reliance upon, the ownership policy in its closing [57] argument before the jury, this effort was limited to the argument that the NFL's policy was "reasonable" for purposes of the rule of reason analysis. The NFL did not, and could not, argue to the jury that it should rule in favor of the NFL because Sullivan's participation in the adoption and maintenance of the public ownership policy was complete, voluntary and substantially equal. Without the proffered instruction, the jury had no occasion to consider whether Sullivan should be deprived of a damages remedy because of his involvement in the policy he now challenges. As a result, the district court's refusal to send the equal involvement defense to the jury was prejudicial error requiring a new trial.

B. Failure to Request an Official Vote of the Owners

As discussed in Section II.C. above, in order to establish that the policy actually caused injury to himself, Sullivan must prove that the NFL effectively denied his request to waive or amend its policy against public ownership. While there is evidence that supports a finding that the NFL's policy effectively blocked Sullivan from pursuing his public offering, there is also sufficient evidence to support a contrary finding. [58] Sullivan's failure to request a vote from the owners after he discovered that he was four votes shy of obtaining a waiver with seven owners still undecided, combined with former Commissioner Rozelle's testimony that he told Sullivan that Rozelle would put to the owners any plan that Sullivan wished, could support a finding that Sullivan was a "dormant plaintiff" who did not "spring into action" until it was "time to file suit." Out Front, 748 F.2d at 170. As such, a jury could conclude that the NFL did not prevent Sullivan from pursuing his stock sale, but instead, Sullivan simply dropped the idea for reasons unrelated to the NFL's policy. If the jury had reached such a conclusion, Sullivan would have failed to prove that his injury was caused by the antitrust policy, and judgment for the NFL would be required.

The NFL proposed instructions concerning Sullivan's failure to ask for a vote essentially stating that such a failure would result in judgment for the NFL if it was reasonable to require Sullivan to make such a request. The court refused to give the instruction because it felt that to do so would be to comment on the evidence, and the court did [59] not want to comment on any of the evidence presented at trial. We understand the court's concern but believe that, under the facts of this case, there is a crucial point of law contained in the NFL's instruction that was not otherwise provided to the jury.

The jury was instructed generally on the issue of causation, but it was not told that it [*1110] had to determine whether the NFL's policy against public ownership was actually enforced against Sullivan; that is, whether the policy, the alleged antitrust restraint, actually restrained Sullivan in any way from making a 49% public offering of his team. Although the NFL could, and did, argue that Sullivan's failure to ask for a vote was evidence that the policy did not cause injury to Sullivan, there was no legal hook upon which the jury could hang the NFL's argument. The failure of Sullivan to request a vote is a critical and potentially dispositive issue in this case. If the alleged restraint of trade does not even exist in practice, the whole case essentially disappears. Therefore, the jury should have been directed to make a specific finding as to whether the public ownership policy was enforced against Sullivan.

If the jury is instructed [60] that Sullivan must prove that the NFL's policy was enforced against him, the jury will have cause to consider the crucial matter of whether the NFL actually enforced its policy against Sullivan or rather, whether the NFL never had the chance to enforce its policy because Sullivan was never prepared to pursue his public offering. The instructions as proffered by the NFL may need to be tailored to avoid commenting on the evidence surrounding the "missing" vote by the NFL owners, but that does not excuse the court from giving no instruction at all on the issue. The failure to give some instruction concerning the failure of Sullivan to request a vote was error.

C. The Murray Option

In 1986, prior to Sullivan's decision to sell Patriots stock to the public, Sullivan sold Fran Murray an option to buy the entire club. The NFL took the position that the Murray option would have been an absolute bar to any public sale of Patriots stock and that Sullivan therefore could not prove causation. The NFL's position was supported by evidence introduced at trial. Sullivan proffered evidence that the option was not a bar to sale because the option could be bought out and because it could not [61] be legally enforced. The issue of whether Murray could have, or would have, blocked a public offering by the Patriots was ultimately disputed.

The option agreement and Murray's deposition testimony were received into evidence. The district court, however, refused to admit Murray's statement that he would indeed have stopped any public stock sale of the Patriots from going forward if he had been told about it. The court found the testimony to be too speculative to be admissible. While the court's decision to exclude Murray's "speculative" testimony is well within the court's wide latitude of discretion in making such evidentiary rulings, United States v. Abel, 469 U.S. 45, 54, 83 L. Ed. 2d 450, 105 S. Ct. 465 \(1984\); Doty v. Sewall, 908 F.2d 1053, 1058 \(1st Cir. 1990\), we note that Sullivan's entire case as to the causation of injury was equally speculative. Whether Sullivan's proposed stock sale could have proceeded and would have been successful in the absence of the NFL's public ownership policy was a matter of considerable conjecture. Fairness would seem to militate towards allowing [62] the NFL to present its own version of the probable course of future events to counter Sullivans' theorizing.

In any event, the court's subsequent refusal to give the NFL's proffered jury instruction on the law of options, specifically the legal consequences of options under Massachusetts law, erroneously removed another crucial issue from the jury's purview. The Murray option was a key defense for the NFL, because if Sullivan did not have a legal right to sell Patriots stock to the public, he did not suffer any harm from the NFL's ownership policy and the NFL would have been entitled to judgment in its favor. Again, the NFL could make this argument to the jury, but the jury would still lack crucial information concerning the legal underpinnings of a crucial defense for the NFL.

Sullivan argues that the NFL's proposed instruction would have singled out one factual issue related to causation for the jury's special attention, something that would have unfairly prejudiced Sullivan. Sullivan adds that allowing the instruction would have generated countering instructions on other legal facets of option law that were relevant to Sullivan's position on the option issue and ultimately would [63] have confused the jury. These arguments notwithstanding, we feel [*1111] that, as long as suitable instructions are provided covering the basic legal points relevant to each party's arguments, the jury would not be unduly confused. Furthermore, the risk of prejudice from the instruction -- due to the added attention afforded one of the NFL's defenses -- is not sufficient to justify effectively depriving the NFL of a crucial defense. Ultimately, it was for the jury to decide whether the Murray option constituted an insurmountable obstacle to Sullivan's case on causation, and the district court's refusal to instruct on the law of options virtually removed this issue from consideration by the jury.

D. Balancing Procompetitive and Anticompetitive Effects

in the Relevant Market

As we noted above, the rule of reason analysis requires a weighing of the injury and the benefits to competition attributable to a practice that allegedly violates the antitrust laws. Monahan's Marine, 866 F.2d at 526. The district court instructed the jury on its verdict form to balance the injury to competition in the relevant market with the benefits to competition in that same [64] relevant market. The NFL protested, claiming that all procompetitive effects of its policy, even those in a market different from that in which the alleged restraint operated, should be considered. The NFL's case was premised on the claim that its policy against public ownership was an important part of the effective functioning of the league as a joint venture. Although it was not readily apparent that this beneficial effect applied to the market for ownership interests in NFL teams, the relevant market found by the jury, the NFL argued that its justification should necessarily be weighed by the jury under the rule of reason analysis. Sullivan responded, and the district court agreed, that a jury cannot be asked to compare what are essentially apples and oranges, and that it is impossible to conduct a balancing of alleged anticompetitive and procompetitive effects of a challenged practice in every definable market.

The issue of defining the proper scope of a rule of reason analysis is a deceptive body of water, containing unforeseen currents and turbulence lying just below the surface of an otherwise calm and peaceful ocean. The waters are muddied by the Supreme Court's decision [\[65\]](#) in NCAA -- one of the more extensive examples of the Court performing a rule of reason analysis -- where the Court considered the value of certain procompetitive effects that existed outside of the relevant market in which the restraint operated. NCAA, 468 U.S. at 115-20 (considering the NCAA's interest in protecting live attendance at untelevised games and the NCAA's "legitimate and important" interest in maintaining competitive balance between amateur athletic teams as a justification for a restraint that operated in a completely different market, the market for the telecasting of collegiate football games).⁹ Other courts have demonstrated similar confusion. See, e.g., L.A. Coliseum, 726 F.2d at 1381, 1392, 1397, 1399 (stating that the "relevant market provides the basis on which to balance competitive harms and benefits of the restraint at issue" but then considering a wide variety of alleged benefits, and then directing the finder of fact to "balance the gain to interbrand competition against the loss of intrabrand competition", where the two types of competition operated in [\[66\]](#) different markets).

To our knowledge, no authority has squarely addressed this issue. On the one hand, several courts have expressed concern over the use of wide ranging interests to justify an otherwise anticompetitive practice, and others have found particular justifications to be incomparable and not in correlation with the alleged restraint of trade. Smith v. Pro Football, Inc., 193 U.S. App. D.C. 19, 593 F.2d 1173, 1186 \(D.C. Cir. 1978\); [\[67\] Brown v. Pro Football, Inc., 812 F. Supp. 237, 238 \(D.D.C. 1992\)](#); [Chicago Pro. Sports Ltd. Partnership v. National \[*1112\] Basketball Ass'n, 754 F. Supp. 1336, 1358 \(N.D.Ill. 1991\)](#). We agree that the ultimate question under the rule of reason is whether a challenged practice promotes or suppresses competition. Thus, it seems improper to validate a practice that is decidedly in restraint of trade simply because the practice produces some unrelated benefits to competition in another market.

On the other hand, several courts, including this Circuit, have found it appropriate in some cases to balance the anticompetitive effects on competition in one market with certain procompetitive benefits in other markets. See, e.g., NCAA, 468 U.S. at 115-20; Grappone, Inc. v. Subaru of New England, Inc., 858 F.2d 792, 799 \(1st Cir. 1988\); M & H Tire Co. v. Hoosier Racing Tire Corp., 733 F.2d 973, 986 \(1st Cir. 1984\); L.A. Coliseum, 726 F.2d at 1381, 1392, 1397, 1399. Moreover, [\[68\]](#) the district court's argument that it would be impossible to compare the procompetitive effects of the NFL's policy in the interbrand market of competition between the NFL and other forms of entertainment, with the anticompetitive effects of the intrabrand market of competition between NFL teams for the sale of their ownership interests, is arguably refuted by the Supreme Court's holding in Continental T.V., Inc. v. GTE Sylvania Inc., 433 U.S. 36, 53 L. Ed. 2d 568, 97 S. Ct. 2549 \(1977\). Continental T.V. explicitly recognized that positive effects on interbrand competition can justify anticompetitive effects on intrabrand competition. Id. at 51-59. Although Continental T.V. can reasonably be interpreted as referring only to interbrand and intrabrand components of the same relevant market, Hornsby Oil Co., Inc. v. Champion Spark Plug Co., 714 F.2d 1384, 1394 \(5th Cir. 1983\), there is also some indication that interbrand and intrabrand competition necessarily refer to distinct, yet related, markets. [\[69\] Continental T.V., 433 U.S. at 52 n.19](#) ("The degree of intrabrand competition is wholly independent of the level of interbrand competition."). Arguably, the market put forward by the NFL -- that is the market for NFL football in competition with other forms of entertainment -- is closely related to the relevant market found by the jury such that the procompetitive benefits in one can be compared to the anticompetitive harms in the other. Clearly this question can only be answered upon a much more in-depth inquiry that we need not, nor find it appropriate to, embark upon at this time.

⁹ The Supreme Court did not expressly consider the issue presented here. Therefore, it is impossible to tell whether the Court was consciously applying the rule of reason to include a broad area of procompetitive benefits in a variety of markets, or whether the Court was simply not being very careful and inadvertently extended the rule of reason past its proper scope. There is certainly no language, as Sullivan suggests, indicating that the Court was considering the alleged benefit of "competitive balance" only to the extent that it had procompetitive effects in the market for televised football games.

Finally, we note that although balancing harms and benefits in different markets may be unwieldy and confusing, such is the case with a number of balancing tests that a court or jury is expected to apply all the time. Indeed, Justice Brandeis' famous formulation of the rule of reason seems to contemplate the balancing of a wide variety of factors and considerations, many of which are not necessarily comparable or correlative:

HN10[[↑]] The true test of legality is whether the restraint imposed is such as merely regulates and perhaps thereby promotes [*70] competition or whether it is such as may suppress or even destroy competition. To determine that question the court must ordinarily consider the facts peculiar to the business to which the restraint is applied; its condition before and after the restraint was imposed; the nature of the restraint and its effect, actual or probable. The history of the restraint, the evil believed to exist, the reason for adopting the particular remedy, the purpose or end sought to be attained, are all relevant facts.

Board of Trade of the City of Chicago v. United States, 246 U.S. 231, 238, 62 L. Ed. 683, 38 S. Ct. 242 \(1918\).

Although the issue of the proper scope of the rule of reason analysis is more appropriately resolved in a case where it is dispositive and more fully briefed, we can draw at least one general conclusion from the caselaw at this point:

HN11[[↑]] courts should generally give a measure of latitude to antitrust defendants in their efforts to explain the procompetitive justifications for their policies and practices; however, courts should also maintain some vigilance by excluding justifications that are so unrelated to the [*71] challenged practice that they amount to a collateral attempt to salvage a practice that is decidedly in restraint of trade.

In any event, we need not enter these dangerous waters to resolve the instant dispute. The NFL wanted the jury to consider its proffered justifications for the public [*1113] ownership policy -- namely that the policy enhanced the NFL's ability to effectively produce and present a popular entertainment product unimpaired by the conflicting interests that public ownership would cause. These procompetitive justifications should have been considered by the jury, even under Sullivan's theory of the proper scope of the rule of reason analysis. As we point out in note [4] above, and as Sullivan himself points out, to the extent the NFL's policy strengthens and improves the league, resulting in increased competition in the market for ownership interests in NFL clubs through, for example, more valuable teams, the jury may consider the NFL's justifications as relevant factors in its rule of reason analysis. The danger of the proffered instructions on the verdict form is that they may have mislead the jury into thinking that it was precluded from considering the NFL's justifications [*72] for its ownership policy. Therefore, the relevant market language on the verdict form should be removed, or else the jury should be informed that evidence of benefits to competition in the relevant market can include evidence of benefits flowing indirectly from the public ownership policy that ultimately have a beneficial impact on competition in the relevant market itself.

E. References to Prior Antitrust Cases Against the NFL

Despite a pretrial motion in limine and repeated objections by the NFL, the district court allowed the jury to hear numerous references to prior antitrust cases against the NFL. Evidence about prior antitrust violations by the defendant may, in appropriate cases, be admissible to show things like market power, intent to monopolize, motive, or method of conspiracy. United States Football League v. National Football League, 842 F.2d 1335, 1371 \(2d Cir. 1988\) (hereinafter "USFL"). Because of the inherently prejudicial nature of such evidence, however, evidence of prior antitrust cases involving the NFL are only admissible if Sullivan can demonstrate that the conduct underlying those prior judgments had a direct, [*73] logical relationship to the conduct at issue in the present case. USFL, 842 F.2d at 1371; International Shoe Mach. Corp. v. United Shoe Mach. Corp., 315 F.2d 449, 454 \(1st Cir.\), cert. denied, 375 U.S. 820, 11 L. Ed. 2d 54, 84 S. Ct. 56 \(1963\) (plaintiff must show "that his claimed injury stemmed directly and proximately from the same type of practice condemned in the prior Government action"); see also Coleman Motor Co. v. Chrysler Corp., 525 F.2d 1338, 1351 \(3d Cir. 1975\). In many of the instances where Sullivan or his counsel made references to prior antitrust cases at trial, Sullivan failed to satisfy this burden.

Sullivan argues that the prior cases were relevant either to certain testimony regarding the reasonableness of the NFL's ownership policy and voting requirements or to the issue of defining the relevant market. Because none of the cases mentioned at trial concerned the NFL's ownership policy at issue here, evidence of those prior cases is not relevant to the reasonableness of the NFL's policy against public [74] ownership. The general voting requirements are not in dispute, so cases touching solely upon them are also not relevant. Certain limited portions of some prior antitrust decisions are relevant to the issue of defining the relevant market. The testimony and commentary at trial concerning these prior cases, however, was not limited to the relevant market portions of these cases and, on the contrary, focussed primarily on the issue of whether the NFL's public ownership policy was unreasonable. As such, that evidence was prejudicial, without any balancing relevance to justify its admission into evidence.

The references to prior NFL cases were made in a number of different contexts during the trial (including during direct examination, cross-examination, and at closing argument), and they contained a variety of different information. These references are not likely to be repeated in precisely the same context upon a new trial. Therefore, instead of identifying which particular pieces of evidence were inadmissible, we think it would be more useful to point out more generally that references to prior NFL cases are not relevant to the issue of the reasonableness of the NFL's public ownership [75] policy and such references should be excluded if they contain information about the unreasonableness of other policies of the NFL which were at issue in the other cases.

Reversed and remanded.

End of Document

D'Last Corp. v. Ugent

United States District Court for the Northern District of Illinois, Eastern Division

September 19, 1994, Decided ; September 22, 1994, Docketed

No. 94 C 1035

Reporter

863 F. Supp. 763 *; 1994 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 13450 ; 1994-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P70,773

D'LAST CORPORATION, Plaintiff, v. AVERY A. UGENT; THE BRADLEY ADAM CORPORATION; AMERICAN INTERNATIONAL IMMIGRATION AGENCY, INC.; PAN AMERICAN PHOTOGRAPHIC SUPPLY CORPORATION; AVALUG-CONCORDIA CORPORATION; AIIP, INC.;¹ and US PASSPORT PHOTO SERVICE, INC., Defendants.

Subsequent History: [1] Supplemental Opinion of September 20, 1994, Reported at: 1994 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 13408.

Core Terms

enterprise, conspiracy, employees, allegations, customers, pattern of racketeering activity, defendants', Passport, entities

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

HN1[Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6) principles require the district court to accept as true all of plaintiff's well-pleaded factual allegations, drawing all reasonable inferences in plaintiff's favor. No motion to dismiss should be granted unless the court concludes that no relief could be granted under any set of facts that could be proved consistent with those well-pleaded allegations.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act > General Overview

HN2[Private Actions, Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations

¹ This is the corporate name listed in the caption of the Complaint. As the text reflects, the actual name is AIPP, Inc.

In a Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act claim, a plaintiff must sufficiently allege a defendants' (1) conduct (2) of an enterprise (3) through a pattern (4) of racketeering activity.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act > Elements

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act > General Overview

HN3 Private Actions, Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations

An "association in fact," which is a permissible "enterprise" under 18 U.S.C.S. § 1961\(4\), is viewed as sufficiently separable from the individual members of that association so as to allow those members to be sued as Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act-violating "persons."

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act > General Overview

HN4 Private Actions, Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations

While the hallmark of conspiracy under the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act is agreement, the central element of an enterprise is structure. An enterprise must be more than a group of people who get together to commit a "pattern of racketeering activity." Congress intends the phrase a group of individuals associated in fact although not a legal entity, as used in its definition of the term "enterprise" in 18 U.S.C.S. § 1961\(4\), to encompass only an association having an ascertainable structure which exists for the purpose of maintaining operations directed toward an economic goal that has an existence that can be defined apart from the commission of the predicate acts constituting the "pattern of racketeering activity."

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act > General Overview

HN5 Private Actions, Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations

The illegality of purpose of a combination--a conspiracy--does not as such disqualify the combination for association-in-fact status under the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act. But where that illegality indeed consists of carrying on a pattern of racketeering activity, such disqualification follows for there was no independent "structure," no enterprise distinct, separate, and apart from a pattern of racketeering activity.

863 F. Supp. 763, *763A994 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 13450, 1

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

HN6 [blue download icon] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Act § 1 of the Sherman Act prohibits unreasonable restraints of trade effected by contract, combination, or conspiracy between separate entities.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN7 [blue download icon] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Courts, in determining whether a conspiracy may exist among related defendants, should consider whether affiliated corporate entities have a complete unity of interest, rather than focusing on mere corporate form. The Sherman Act does not reach conduct that is "wholly unilateral."

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Elements

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN8 [blue download icon] Conspiracy to Monopolize, Elements

Section 1 of the Sherman Act and the conspiracy-to-monopolize provision of § 2 of the Sherman Act require the same threshold showing: the existence of an agreement to restrain trade. Claims under the two sections differ primarily in that § 2 of the Sherman Act has the added requirement of specific intent to monopolize--they do not differ as to the nature of the conspiracy.

Counsel: For Plaintiff: Rodney F. Reeves, Chicago, IL.

For Defendants: Robert A. Filpi, Stack, Filpi, & Kakacek Chtd., Chicago, IL.

Judges: Shadur

Opinion by: MILTON I. SHADUR

Opinion

[*764] MEMORANDUM OPINION AND ORDER

D'Last Corporation ("D'Last") has filed a seven-count Complaint against a number of defendants, asserting claims grounded in the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act ("RICO") (Count I), the Sherman Act (Count II), the Illinois Consumer Fraud and Deceptive Practices Act (Count III), tortious [\[*765\]](#) interference with contracts and prospective contracts (Count IV), trade slander and libel (Count V), piercing the corporate veil (Count VI) and conspiracy (Count VII). As to all but the first two counts D'Last invokes the supplemental jurisdiction concept of 28 U.S.C. § 1337\(a\).

All of the corporate defendants have moved for dismissal pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. \("Rule"\) 9\(b\), 12\(b\)\(1\) and 12\(b\)\(6\), and the fully-briefed motions have been transferred from the calendar of this Court's colleague Honorable [2] James Alesia to this Court for disposition. For the reasons stated in this memorandum opinion and order, the motions to dismiss are granted and this action is dismissed.²

D'Last's Allegations

Familiar [HN1\[!\[\]\(05f3bf778979b4ac63dae073a14b39f4_img.jpg\) Rule 12\(b\)\(6\)\]](#) principles require the district court to accept as true all of plaintiff's well-pleaded factual allegations, drawing all reasonable inferences in plaintiff's favor (Bowman v. City of Franklin, 980 F.2d 1104, 1107 \(7th Cir. 1992\)). No motion [3] to dismiss should be granted unless the court concludes that no relief could be granted under any set of facts that could be proved consistent with those well-pleaded allegations (Hishon v. King & Spalding, 467 U.S. 69, 73, 81 L. Ed. 2d 59, 104 S. Ct. 2229 \(1984\)).

D'Last's grievances stem from a group of assertedly anticompetitive activities intended to harm its business of supplying photograph and fingerprint services used primarily for immigration purposes. D'Last and defendants The Bradley Adam Corporation ("Bradley Adam"), American International Immigration Agency, Inc. d/b/a Private Immigration Agency ("American International") and Pan American Photographic Supply Corporation ("Pan American") operate studios engaged in that business in Chicago. Defendants Avalug-Concordia Corporation ("Avalug") and AIPP, Inc. ("AIPP") operate similar businesses in Houston, Texas, and defendant US Passport Photo Service, Inc. ("US Passport") carries on a like business in Miami, Florida. Defendant Avery Ugent ("Ugent"), a Florida resident, is president and sole or controlling shareholder of each of the corporate defendants (all Florida [4] corporations).

D'Last alleges that from August 1991 through November 1992 employees of Ugent³ and of Bradley Adam undertook a campaign under Ugent's direction for the purpose of either forcing D'Last out of business or compelling D'Last to sell its business to Ugent at a minimal price (Complaint P21). Among the acts ascribed to those employees were stationing "large and threatening" individuals in front of D'Last's studio to prevent and dissuade customers from entering; stealing a canopy and sign from D'Last's entrance; committing batteries on D'Last's employees and on one of its customers; threatening to commit additional batteries; making a series of false or disparaging statements to potential D'Last customers; filing false criminal complaints against D'Last's employees; harassing D'Last's employees; staging fights with D'Last's employees in front of its entrance; paying D'Last's employees to stay home or "slack off" at work; soliciting "intelligence" from D'Last's employees by cash offers; physically turning away D'Last's customers; paying INS workers to direct immigrants to Bradley Adam or American International and to steal fingerprint forms; suborning perjury in a state court [5] action brought to restrain the obstruction of [*766] D'Last's customers and employees; obstructing D'Last's entrance; and trespassing on D'Last's premises. D'Last also asserts on information and belief that the same employees repeatedly attempted to solicit hit men to kill D'Last's president and perhaps others of its employees.

² Unfortunately both sides' presentations on the current motions have been extraordinarily shallow, in terms of both the analysis and the authorities cited. Although defendants do prevail, that result cannot really be credited to what their counsel has presented as grist for this Court's mill--virtually all of the controlling authorities cited in this opinion were not mentioned in defendants' memoranda at all (or were advanced in an inaccurate way). And on D'Last's RICO claim, the analysis owes nothing to either side's submissions.

³ This is a confusing characterization in light of what D'Last has alleged as to the parties. Ugent is not identified in the Complaint as carrying out any activities in his own name--on the contrary, Count VI seeks to impose personal liability on him on the theory that the several defendant corporations are sham entities (the veil-piercing concept). Thus the Complaint's reference to Ugent's "employees" appears to manifest the imprecision of thought or analysis that marks a material part of that pleading.

D'Last ties the other defendants into the complained-of activity by alleging in general terms that each of them participated to some degree in the charged acts. Ugent is said to have directed [6] the acts by telephone and by traveling from his home in Florida to Chicago (Complaint P22). Bradley Adam allegedly paid the unnamed individuals who actually performed the acts (Complaint P23). American International assertedly participated in the management of those same employees and "knowingly accepted the benefit" of those acts (Complaint P24). Pan American purportedly "conspired" with Bradley Adam, American International and Ugent to refer customers to Bradley Adam (Complaint P25). Avalug, AIPP and US Passport--though none is located or does business in Chicago--allegedly paid part of the salary of Eugene Dickerson ("Dickerson"), Ugent's national manager who was transferred to Chicago to manage the activities of Bradley Adam and to carry out the pattern of oppressive activity (Complaint PP20, 26).

D'Last's RICO claim also alleges other activity on defendants' part in order to satisfy the "racketeering activity" component of that claim (see 18 U.S.C. §§ 1961\(1\) and \(5\)⁴). Any discussion of those added allegations will be deferred to the section of this opinion dealing with the RICO claim.

[7] D'Last's Claims

As already indicated, D'Last advances a veritable host of legal theories. Because this opinion finds both federally-based claims insufficient, it also dismisses all of the state-law claims on a nonsubstantive basis under the teaching of United Mine Workers v. Gibbs, 383 U.S. 715, 726, 16 L. Ed. 2d 218, 86 S. Ct. 1130 \(1966\). What follows therefore focuses primarily (though not exclusively) on the RICO and Sherman Act claims.

I. RICO

D'Last seeks to bring Section 1962(c) into play to establish its RICO cause of action. As with every such HN2⁵ RICO claim, D'Last must sufficiently allege defendants' "(1) conduct (2) of an enterprise (3) through a pattern (4) of racketeering activity" (Vicom, Inc. v. Harbridge Merchant Serv., 20 F.3d 771, 778 \(7th Cir. 1994\), quoting Sedima, S.P.R.L. v. Imrex Co., 473 U.S. 479, 496, 87 L. Ed. 2d 346, 105 S. Ct. 3275 \(1985\)). Movants (who it will be remembered are all the corporate defendants--all of the defendants save Ugent himself⁵) contend that D'Last's RICO claim fails (1) [8] because D'Last has named precisely the same entities as the defendant RICO "persons" and as the RICO "enterprise" and (2) because D'Last has failed to show a pattern of racketeering activity. Those contentions will be examined in turn.⁶

A. Enterprise

Complaint P29 says that during the relevant time frame "Ugent, Bradley Adam, Avalug, AIPP, and US Passport were jointly engaged in an enterprise," which D'Last dubs as "Ugent Enterprises."⁷ [9] Although some confusion is created by the poor drafting of the Complaint,⁸ the required reasonable [*767] inferences call for Ugent Enterprises (as so defined) to be viewed as the "enterprise" whose affairs were conducted by the defendant "persons" through a "pattern of racketeering activity."

⁴ Further citations to RICO will take the form "Section--," referring to Title 18's numbering.

⁵ It seems that as of the time of the parties' briefing Ugent had not yet been served with process.

⁶ Many of the problems with the RICO claim stem from the disorganized, somewhat jumbled and cursory nature of the predicate act allegations.

⁷ American International and Pan American are thus omitted from the "Ugent Enterprises" grouping.

⁸ For example, Complaint P28 also speaks of each defendant (including American International and Pan American) as an "enterprise" as well as a "person" defined in Section 1961\(4\). Then P. Mem. 2 (blithely ignoring how counsel has drafted the Complaint) says that the "enterprise" is an association (identified as Ugent Enterprises) consisting of all seven corporate defendants and Ugent. For now, to view the Complaint in the light most favorable to D'Last, this opinion will assume that the alleged RICO enterprise is an association of virtually all, if not all, of the defendants.

Defendants point to Haroco v. American Nat'l Bank & Trust Co., 747 F.2d 384, 400 (7th Cir. 1984), aff'd per curiam on other grounds, 473 U.S. 606 (1985), as establishing that a liable "person" in RICO action must be distinct from the defined "enterprise." But that proposition, as to which Haroco chose to follow the analysis of Section 1962(c) set out by this Court in Parnes v. Heinold Commodities, Inc., 548 F. Supp. 20, 23-24 (N.D. Ill. 1982), [10] does not carry the precise consequence that defendants seek to ascribe to it here.

Where defendants' assertion fails in that respect is in their unwillingness to recognize the concept that HN3[¹¹] an "association in fact" (which is a permissible "enterprise" under Section 1961(4)), such as Ugent Enterprises is alleged to be here, is viewed as sufficiently separable from the individual members of that association so as to allow those members to be sued as RICO-violating "persons." Although that issue has not yet been ruled upon by our Court of Appeals, "the vast majority of courts agree that an association in fact enterprise is distinct from each of its members for purposes of the person/enterprise distinction requirement" (2 Arthur Matthews, Andrew Weissman & John Sturc, Civil Rico Litigation ["Civil Rico Litigation"] § 6.03[A], at 6-40 & n.88 and numerous cases cited there (2d ed. 1992); accord, River City Markets, Inc. v. Fleming Foods West, Inc., 960 F.2d 1458, 1462 (9th Cir. 1992)).

But having said that, this Court finds that defendants prevail nonetheless--not quite despite themselves, but for a reason materially different from the simplistic one that [11] they attempt to elicit from Haroco. D>Last's problem is that the combination of defendants that it lumps together as Ugent Enterprises does not qualify as an "association in fact" in the RICO sense. What RICO requires of such a grouping was aptly described by our Court of Appeals in United States v. Neapolitan, 791 F.2d 489, 500 (7th Cir. 1986), quoting United States v. Anderson, 626 F.2d 1358, 1372 (8th Cir. 1980):

HN4[¹²] While the hallmark of conspiracy is agreement, the central element of an enterprise is structure. An enterprise must be more than a group of people who get together to commit a "pattern of racketeering activity."

We hold that Congress intended the phrase "a group of individual's [sic] associated in fact although not a legal entity," as used in its definition of the term "enterprise" in section 1961(4), to encompass only an association having an ascertainable structure which exists for the purpose of maintaining operations directed toward an economic goal that has an existence that can be defined a part (sic) from the commission of the predicate acts constituting the "pattern of racketeering activity."

[12]

That concept has been adhered to in such cases as Jennings v. Emry, 910 F.2d 1434, 1440-41 (7th Cir. 1990) and Hartz v. Friedman, 919 F.2d 469, 471 (7th Cir. 1990)--and it has not been attenuated, in the context posited by D>Last, by the later dictum in Burdett v. Miller, 957 F.2d 1375, 1379-80 (7th Cir. 1992). See also 1 Civil Rico Litigation P5.04, and particularly P5.04[B][3] at 5-40 to 5-44 and cases cited there.

Here D>Last's own allegations negate an association in fact in the statutory sense--instead its grievance is that the very purpose for which Ugent Enterprises existed was to eliminate D>Last and other competitors in the passport photograph and fingerprint business through unlawful means--that is, through the complained-of pattern of racketeering activity. According to D>Last, each of the individual corporations was engaged in the business of providing photography and fingerprint services to its customers (a perfectly legitimate activity by itself). But the only identified goal for which defendants [*768] joined forces was the nefarious one of carrying on racketeering activity--that [13] was the raison d'être of the "association" as defined by D'Last itself.⁹

And so it is that D'Last has pleaded itself out of court on its attempted RICO claim. It has sought to sue RICO "persons" who have not conducted a separate RICO "enterprise" through a pattern of racketeering activity--at [14] least not in the sense that has been prescribed by Haroco and like decisions. Count I is dismissed.

B. Pattern of Racketeering That just-stated conclusion makes it unnecessary to parse the Complaint to see whether D'Last has sufficiently alleged a pattern of racketeering activity. Despite the guidance provided by the ultimate authority in H.J., Inc. v. Northwestern Bell Tel. Co., 492 U.S. 229, 237-43, 106 L. Ed. 2d 195, 109 S. Ct. 2893 (1989), the contours of such a pattern remain difficult to mark out with any precision. Suffice it to say that this Court's review of the Complaint has disclosed it to be problematic in a number of respects--but again those need not be rehearsed in light of Count I's already-identified deficiency.

II. Antitrust Violations

D'Last claims in Count II that the same actions that formed the gravamen of its unsuccessful RICO claim also constituted a conspiracy in restraint of trade and a conspiracy to monopolize trade in violation of Sherman Act ("Act") §§ 1 and 2, 15 U.S.C. §§ 1 and 2. Defendants move to dismiss that count on the grounds (1) that there [15] can be no actionable antitrust conspiracy because of the close affiliation among the purported conspirators and (2) that D'Last has failed to allege a sufficient nexus with interstate commerce.¹⁰ Because the first of those reasons compels the dismissal of Count II, once again there is no need to examine defendants' second contention.

[16] A. Intra-enterprise Conspiracy

HN6 [↑] Act § 1 prohibits "unreasonable restraints of trade effected by 'contract, combination, or . . . conspiracy' between separate entities" (Copperweld Corp. v. Independence Tube Corp., 467 U.S. 752, 768, 81 L. Ed. 2d 628, 104 S. Ct. 2731 (1984)) (emphasis in original)). Copperweld, id. at 776-77 held that a parent corporation and its wholly-owned subsidiaries are legally incapable of conspiring with each other in the sense proscribed by Act § 1. While the Court specifically limited its holding to the parent-subsidiary relationship (id. at 767), its rationale--essentially that a conspiracy with oneself is conceptually impossible, like the sound of one hand clapping--compels the same result here.

Copperweld, id. at 771-72 recommended that HN7 [↑] courts, in determining whether a conspiracy may exist among related defendants, should consider whether affiliated corporate entities have a complete unity of interest, rather [17] than focusing on mere corporate form. It held that the Act does not reach conduct that is "wholly unilateral" in that sense (id. at 768).

[*769] Here D'Last makes numerous allegations that defendants are unified, including these:

⁹ It is no accident that D'Last's Count II incorporates the selfsame substantive allegations, and no more, as the predicate for charging a conspiracy in violation of the antitrust laws. To be sure, HN5 [↑] the illegality of purpose of a combination--a conspiracy--does not as such disqualify the combination for association-in-fact status under RICO. But where that illegality indeed consists of carrying on a pattern of racketeering activity, such disqualification follows under the teaching of Neapolitan and the other cases cited here--for there was no independent "structure," no "enterprise . . . distinct, separate, and apart from a pattern of racketeering activity" (Jennings, 910 F.2d at 1440).

¹⁰ There are other critical flaws in D'Last's antitrust count. For one thing, it fails to allege injury to competition rather than merely to competitors (see, e.g., Car Carriers v. Ford Motor Corp., 745 F.2d 1101, 1107 (7th Cir. 1984); Vakharia v. Swedish Covenant Hosp., 824 F. Supp. 769, 779 (N.D. Ill. 1993)). For another, D'Last includes no adequate allegations of a specific intent to monopolize--an essential element of Section 2 conspiracies (Seagood Trading Corp. v. Jerrico, Inc., 924 F.2d 1555, 1576 (11th Cir. 1991); Appraisers Coalition v. Appraisal Inst., 845 F. Supp. 592, 603 (N.D. Ill. 1994)).

Avery A. Ugent . . . is sole or controlling shareholder of each of the corporate Defendants. (Complaint P6) Defendants Ugent, Bradley Adam, Avalug, AIPP, and US Passport were jointly engaged in an enterprise[.] (Complaint P29)

At all times mentioned . . . Ugent failed to operate the Defendant corporations as legal entities separate from himself and each other[.] (Complaint P55)

The several Defendants acted as agents and principals of each other[.] (Complaint P59)

Such allegations connote a complete unity of interest. This Court finds that the reasoning of Copperweld applies and that no conspiracy under the Sherman Act may exist under the circumstances alleged by D'Last.

To date our Court of Appeals has not directly addressed the question whether multiple defendants under the same ownership and control may "conspire" within the meaning of the Act.¹¹ Courts elsewhere, however, have regularly [18] held that the Copperweld rationale applies to such situations (see, e.g., Guzowski v. Hartman, 969 F.2d 211, 214 (6th Cir. 1992); Advanced Health-Care Serv., Inc. v. Radford Community Hosp., 910 F.2d 139, 146-47 (4th Cir. 1990) and cases cited there; H.R.M.. Inc. v. Tele-Communications, Inc., 653 F. Supp. 645, 647-48 (D. Colo. 1987)). Professor Areeda agrees (VII Philip Areeda, Antitrust Law § 1464f (1986)).

[19] This opinion's ruling applies to D'Last's conspiracy claims under both Act §§ 1 and 2. Indeed, *HN8*¹ Act § 1 and the conspiracy-to-monopolize provision of Section 2 "require the same threshold showing: the existence of an agreement to restrain trade" (Seagood Trading, 924 F.2d at 1576; see Appraisers Coalition, 845 F. Supp. at 603). Claims under the two sections differ primarily in that Act § 2 has the added requirement of specific intent to monopolize--they do not differ as to the nature of the conspiracy (see Seagood Trading, 924 F.2d at 1576).

B. Interstate Commerce

As just stated, D'Last has also pleaded itself out of court on its Count II for lack of an actionable conspiracy. Hence this opinion need not address defendants' argument that D'Last has failed to plead a sufficient effect on interstate commerce. This Court's silence on the issue should create no inference in either direction.

III. State Law Claims

With both federal-question claims thus having gone by the boards, nothing remains as a jurisdictional anchor to which D'Last's several state-law claims can moor themselves. Section I^{201} 1367 speaks of "supplemental jurisdiction," and the essential primary jurisdiction is nonexistent. Wright v. Associated Ins. Cos., No. 93-3619, 29 F.3d 1244, 1994 U.S. App. LEXIS 18302, at *17-*22 (7th Cir. July 21) is one of several recent decisions reconfirming that where such a determination has been made at the very threshold of a case in the circumstances posed here, the rule of United Mine Workers v. Gibbs, 383 U.S. at 726 compels dismissal. Accordingly Counts III through VII are dismissed without prejudice to their reassertion in a court of competent jurisdiction.¹²

Conclusion

Defendants' motions [21] to dismiss are granted in their entirety. Although Ugent has not joined in the motions, the flaws identified in this opinion are claim-oriented rather than [*770] party-specific and doom both federal claims in their entirety. And because those flaws are substantive rather than mere defects in pleading,¹³ not only the ¹¹ Fishman v. Wirtz, 807 F.2d 520, 542 n.19 (7th Cir. 1986) declined to extend the Copperweld rationale to a situation having "some overlap" of ownership and control, finding such an extension not warranted under the facts of that case. By contrast, this case involves a total overlap--a total unity of interest--among defendants, the same relationship that has led courts in other Circuits to apply the Copperweld rationale to find that no antitrust conspiracy may exist in those terms.

¹² This Court has examined all of those counts in detail and has found each of them wanting in different ways. But because anything said in those respects would be not only dictum but also in the nature of an advisory opinion prohibited by Article III, once again silence is the proper course to pursue.

863 F. Supp. 763, *770 (1994 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 13450, 21

Complaint but this action itself are dismissed. Such dismissal is with prejudice as to Counts I and II and without prejudice as to Counts III through VII.

Milton I. Shadur

Senior United States District Judge

Date: September 19, 1994

End of Document

¹³ Nor has D'Last's counsel suggested any prospect of a jurisdictionally curative amendment in its memorandum in opposition to defendants' motions.

Norcen Energy Resource v. Pacific Gas & Elec. Co.

United States District Court for the Northern District of California

September 19, 1994, Filed

No. C-94-0911-VRW

Reporter

1994 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 21347 *; 1994-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P70,851

NORCEN ENERGY RESOURCE LIMITED and NORCEN MARKETING INCORPORATED, Plaintiffs, v. PACIFIC GAS & ELECTRIC COMPANY, and PACIFIC GAS TRANSMISSION COMPANY and the PG&E/PGT PIPELINE EXPANSION PROJECT, Defendants.

Disposition: [*1] Defendants' motion to dismiss plaintiff's Sherman Act claims based on Noerr-Pennington and the state action doctrine GRANTED. Defendants' motion to dismiss plaintiff's Sherman Act claims based on collateral estoppel and the filed rate doctrine DENIED. Plaintiff's § 2 claims DISMISSED WITHOUT PREJUDICE. Plaintiff's Sherman Act § 1 claim DISMISSED WITHOUT PREJUDICE. All federal antitrust claims DISMISSED. Plaintiff's state law claims DISMISSED WITHOUT PREJUDICED.

Core Terms

defendants', rates, antitrust, ban, transportation, crossover, regulated, natural gas, customers, monopoly, pipeline, squeeze, Sherman Act, immunity, alleges, motion to dismiss, anticompetitive, intrastate, state action doctrine, postage stamp, manipulation, northern, filed rate doctrine, competitors, shippers, cases, antitrust claim, anti trust law, petition for review, state action

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > General Overview

HN1 [blue download icon] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

In considering a motion to dismiss under ed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6), a court must determine whether the facts pled in the complaint entitle plaintiff to the relief sought. A court may only consider allegations made in the complaint; extrinsic factual material may not be taken into account. If the allegations in the complaint are contradicted by the attached documents, a court may dismiss the claims under Rule 12(b)(6). The court may also consider records and reports of administrative bodies.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > General Overview

HN2 [blue download icon] Exemptions & Immunities, Noerr-Pennington Doctrine

The Noerr-Pennington doctrine holds that antitrust laws cannot be used to attack legitimate political activity. This is so even if the defendant harbors anticompetitive motives and the activity in question has detrimental effects on a particular industry or group of competitors.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > Scope

HN3[] Exemptions & Immunities, Parker State Action Doctrine

That a private party's political motives are selfish is irrelevant: the Noerr-Pennington doctrine shields from the Sherman Act a concerted effort to influence public official regardless of intent or purpose.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > General Overview

HN4[] Exemptions & Immunities, Noerr-Pennington Doctrine

The sham exception encompasses situations in which persons use the governmental process, as opposed to the outcome of that process, as an anticompetitive weapon.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > General Overview

HN5[] Exemptions & Immunities, Parker State Action Doctrine

The state action doctrine is based on principles of federalism and derives from the Supreme Court's opinion that the antitrust laws were not intended to interfere with states' exercise of their sovereign regulatory powers. Because of federal deference to states' decisions to displace competition with regulation, allegedly anticompetitive restraints become immune to antitrust attack if they are clearly articulated and affirmatively expressed as state policy and the policy in question is "actively supervised" by the state.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Actual Monopolization > Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices > Predatory Hiring & Price Squeezes

HN6[] Exemptions & Immunities, Parker State Action Doctrine

An antitrust challenge directed at the interaction of state and federal rates falls outside of the state action doctrine.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Energy & Utilities > State Regulation

Energy & Utilities Law > Utility Companies > Rates > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Energy & Utilities > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Energy & Utilities > Utility Companies

Energy & Utilities Law > Natural Gas Industry > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Utility Companies > General Overview

HN7 Energy & Utilities, State Regulation

The challenged restraint that is clearly articulated and affirmatively expressed as state policy is demonstrated by showing the state's intent to displace competition with a regulatory structure. In the California natural gas industry, the state's intention is made clear by the California Public Utilities Code, which leaves rate determination to California Public Utilities Commission's discretion. The second prong requires that the state "actively supervise" the regulatory program. The purpose of "active supervision" is to determine whether the State has exercised sufficient independent judgment and control so that the details of the rates or prices have been established as a product of deliberate state intervention.

Energy & Utilities Law > Utility Companies > Rates > General Overview

HN8 Utility Companies, Rates

See Cal. Pub. Util. Code § 739.6.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Filed Rate Doctrine > General Overview

HN9 Exemptions & Immunities, Filed Rate Doctrine

The filed rate doctrine holds that buyers and sellers have no legally cognizable right to pay or receive a rate in a regulated industry other than the rate established by the rate-setting agency.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Filed Rate Doctrine > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > General Overview

HN10 Exemptions & Immunities, Filed Rate Doctrine

The filed rate doctrine does not provide antitrust immunity. Rather, the doctrine limits the applicability of treble damage awards when they would have to be measured relative to baseline rates established by regulatory bodies.

Administrative Law > Agency Adjudication > Decisions > Collateral Estoppel

Civil Procedure > ... > Preclusion of Judgments > Estoppel > Collateral Estoppel

Administrative Law > Judicial Review > Reviewability > Factual Determinations

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > US Department of Justice Actions > Civil Actions > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Preclusion of Judgments > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Preclusion of Judgments > Estoppel > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > ... > Public Utility Commissions > Hearings & Orders > Judicial Review

HN11 [blue document icon] Decisions, Collateral Estoppel

Under California's statutory scheme for appeal of California Public Utilities Commission (CPUC) decisions, the California Supreme Court reviews CPUC findings to determine whether the commission acted within its authority and obeyed the federal and California Constitutions. Cal. Pub. Util. Code § 1757.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > US Department of Justice Actions > Civil Actions > General Overview

HN12 [blue document icon] US Department of Justice Actions, Civil Actions

See Cal. Pub. Util. Code § 1757.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > US Department of Justice Actions > Civil Actions > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Antitrust Issues > Administrative Considerations

Energy & Utilities Law > Administrative Proceedings > Rehearings

Energy & Utilities Law > Antitrust Issues > General Overview

HN13 [blue document icon] US Department of Justice Actions, Civil Actions

Regulatory agencies can and do approve actions, which violate antitrust policies where other economic, social and political considerations are found to be of overriding importance. In short, the antitrust laws are merely another tool, which a regulatory agency employs to a greater or lesser degree. The fact that an agency considers antitrust issues does not mean that its findings need be conclusively established.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN14 [blue document icon] Sherman Act, Claims

A § 2 violation of the Sherman Act has three elements: (1) monopoly power in a relevant market; (2) willful acquisition and maintenance of that power; and (3) causal antitrust injury. A plaintiff's complaint must state facts that establish all three of these elements to survive a defendant's motion to dismiss.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN15 [blue document icon] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

To state a claim under § 2 of the Sherman Act, a plaintiff must allege that its antitrust injury was caused by conduct that can give rise to an antitrust claim. A finding of some slight wrongdoing in certain areas need not by itself add up to an antitrust violation.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Monopolies & Monopolization > General Overview

HN16 [] Regulated Practices, Monopolies & Monopolization

The test of willful maintenance or acquisition of monopoly power is whether the acts complained of unreasonably restricted competition.

Energy & Utilities Law > Antitrust Issues > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Monopolies & Monopolization > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Natural Gas Industry > Marketing & Transportation > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Pipelines & Transportation > Natural Gas Transportation

HN17 [] Energy & Utilities Law, Antitrust Issues

If a monopolist is charged with refusing to aid a competitor, antitrust liability is determined by asking whether there was a legitimate business justification for the monopolist's conduct. In addition, a plaintiff must demonstrate that the defendant's conduct harmed not only the plaintiff but also competition generally.

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > Time Limitations

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > General Overview

HN18 [] Statute of Limitations, Time Limitations

15 U.S.C.S. § 15b provides a four-year statute of limitations for antitrust violations. The limitations period begins to run when the defendant commits the acts giving rise to the alleged injury.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Actual Monopolization > Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices > General Overview

HN19 [] Actual Monopolization, Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices

To demonstrate predatory conduct, the plaintiff must demonstrate that there is a likelihood that the predatory scheme alleged would cause a rise in prices above a competitive level that would be sufficient to compensate for the amounts expended on the predation.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > Sherman Act Violations

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > Per Se Rule

HN20 [blue icon] Sherman Act, Scope

A tying arrangement can be unlawful either per se or if it unreasonably restrains commerce in the tied product or service. The essential elements of a per se § 1 tying claim are, first, there must be two distinguishable product markets. Second, the seller of one product, the tying product, must, through exercise of control of that product, force the buyer into purchase of the second, or tied product, when the buyer did not wish to purchase it or would have wished to purchase it on different terms. Not every bundling of two products is unlawful. Only if the seller "forces" the buyer into a purchase it would not otherwise make does actionable tying exist. To determine whether a tying arrangement places unreasonable restraints on competition for the tied product, courts must investigate the effect of the alleged unlawful tie on competition for the tied product.

Counsel: For NORCEN ENERGY RESOURCES, NORCEN MARKETING, Plaintiffs: Robert A. Goodin, Goodin MacBride Squeri Schlotz & Ritchie, San Francisco, CA. Joseph L. Alioto, Joseph L. Alioto Law Offices, San Francisco, CA.

For PACIFIC GAS & ELECTRIC COMPANY, defendant: Marie L. Fiala, M. Laurence Popofsky, Heller Ehrman White & McAuliffe, San Francisco, CA.

For PACIFIC GAS TRANSMISSION CO., defendant: Michael D. Stokes, LeBoeuf Lamb Greene & MacRae, San Francisco, CA. Charles B. Renfrew, LeBoeuf Lamb Greene & MacRae, San Francisco, CA.

For PG&E/PGT PIPELINE EXPANSION PROJECT, defendant: Charles B. Renfrew, LeBoeuf Lamb Greene & MacRae, San Francisco, CA.

For PACIFIC GAS TRANSMISSION CO., Counter-claimant: Michael D. Stokes, LeBoeuf Lamb Greene & MacRae, San Francisco, CA. [*2] Charles B. Renfrew, Leboeuf Lamb Greene & Macrae, San Francisco, CA.

For NORCEN ENERGY RESOURCES, NORCEN MARKETING, Counter-defendants: Robert A. Goodin, Goodin MacBride Squeri Schlotz & Ritchie, San Francisco, CA. Joseph L. Alioto, Joseph L. Alioto Law Offices, San Francisco, CA.

Judges: VAUGHN R. WALKER, United States District Judge.

Opinion by: VAUGHN R. WALKER

Opinion

ORDER GRANTING DEFENDANTS' MOTION TO DISMISS.

Plaintiff Norcen Energy Resources Limited is a Canadian producer of petroleum products, including natural gas. Norcen Marketing Incorporated, the marketing arm of Norcen Energy, is a Delaware corporation and wholly owned subsidiary of Norcen Energy. For the purposes of this order, plaintiffs are treated as one entity.

Defendant Pacific Gas and Electric is a combined electrical and natural gas public utility. Within its service area in California, PG&E is regulated by the California Public Utilities Commission. Pacific Gas Transmission Company is a wholly owned subsidiary of PG&E that operates an interstate natural gas pipeline system and is regulated by the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission. PGT delivers natural gas from Kingsgate, British Columbia, to PG&E's terminal [*3] at Malin, Oregon. From Malin, gas is distributed over PG&E's local pipe to customers within California.

Defendant PG&E/PGT Pipeline Expansion Project is allegedly a partnership or joint venture between PGT and PG&E formed for the purpose of adding pipeline capacity between Kingsgate and various points of delivery within California. Portions of the Expansion Project between Kingsgate and Malin are regulated by FERC; portions from Malin to endpoints within California are regulated by the CPUC.

I

The events leading up to this lawsuit are largely undisputed, although their legal significance is hotly contested. Before 1986, CPUC regulations required large industrial users or natural gas in California to purchase a bundled combination of natural gas plus transportation from PG&E. In December 1986, however, changes to the regulatory framework allowed large customers to purchase transportation-only service from PG&E, enabling those customers to obtain natural gas from suppliers other than the utility. Following the 1986 rule changes, Norcen Marketing's predecessor in interest, Bonus, began marketing natural gas to California customers, transporting gas over interstate pipelines to the [*4] California border, where title would pass to the customers, who would use their own separately purchased transportation rights over PG&E's intrastate pipe to deliver gas to their burner tips.

In May 1987, Bonus obtained authorization from FERC allowing Bonus to ship gas over PGT's Kingsgate-Malin pipeline on an interruptible basis. As its name suggests, interruptible service can be interrupted by the pipeline owner, in this case PGT, to service customers who have noninterruptible, or firm, transportation rights. Bonus requested firm transportation over PGT's pipe, but its request was denied, allegedly because of pressure from PGT's parent, PG&E. Norcen contends that this refusal was motivated by PG&E's interest in keeping competitors out of the northern California market by eliminating reliable alternative sources of supply. Norcen also alleges that PG&E repeatedly informed Bonus' customers that Bonus could not provide reliable supply, and that Bonus' customers should switch back to PG&E. PG&E insists that all of PGT's firm capacity was needed to serve PG&E and that PGT was under no legal obligation to make firm transport available to competitors of PG&E.

In March 1988, PGT announced [*5] a proposed expansion of its Kingsgate-Malin pipeline to serve customers in the Pacific Northwest and southern (but not northern) California. Concurrent with PGT's expansion, PG&E planned to expand its intrastate capacity to bring the additional gas brought by PGT's expansion through California to a delivery point at Kern River Junction in southern California. This combined venture became known as the "Expansion Project." PGT filed for regulatory approval of the interstate portion of the Expansion Project in December 1988. Bonus protested this application before FERC, claiming that PGT's refusal to use the Expansion Project to deliver gas to Malin was an anticompetitive effort to preclude suppliers other than PG&E from selling into the northern California market.

Two days after PGT's Expansion Project announcement, Bonus requested firm transportation rights on the Expansion Project to PG&E's terminal at Malin, Oregon. PGT denied this request, instead offering Bonus delivery to Kern River Junction. Bonus refused. Several months later, Norcen contends, PGT provided PG&E firm transportation over the Expansion Project to Malin for the purpose of serving PG&E's northern California customers. [*6] Bonus then amended its opposition to PGT's application before FERC, protesting what Bonus saw as PGT's discriminatory allocation of capacity in favor of PG&E.

PG&E filed for CPUC approval of the intrastate portions of the Expansion Project in April 1989. Re Pacific Gas & Elec Co, 39 CPUC 2d 69, 77 \(1990\). The application for a certificate of public necessity stated that PG&E's proposed new capacity would be used only for shippers on the PGT portion of the Expansion Project and requested "postage stamp" rates. Id. at 126. Under postage stamp rates, the shipper is charged a flat rate for delivery, regardless of the actual distance the gas travels. Bonus also opposed this application.

In July 1990, FERC held a conference on PGT's Expansion application, Re Pacific Gas Transmission Co, 54 F.E.R.C. P61,035, 61,146 \(1991\), at which, Norcen alleges, FERC urged PGT to accommodate Bonus' request for firm transportation on the Expansion Project to Malin, Oregon. Following this meeting, Bonus and PGT executed a "July Letter Agreement," in which Bonus agreed to drop its opposition to the Expansion Project in return for what Norcen now claims was an agreement by PGT to request additional incremental [*7] capacity to allow Bonus firm transport to Malin.

CPUC authorized construction of the PG&E portion of the Expansion Project in December 1990 and specifically approved PG&E's postage stamp rates, finding that this rate structure provided a reasonable means of ensuring that Expansion shippers would bear the costs of the project. Re Pacific Gas & Elec Co, 39 CPUC 2d 69, 126, 156 \(1990\). In endorsing the rates, CPUC specifically relied on the assumption that the majority of Expansion shippers would be transporting gas to southern California. Id; see also Re Pacific Gas & Elec Co, 40 CPUC 2d 497, 504-05 \(1991\) (reaffirming postage stamp rates based on a finding that the Expansion Project would primarily supply southern California customers).

Concerned that the Expansion Project was excluding competitors from the northern California market, FERC in January 1991 ordered PGT to establish a delivery point for the Expansion Project at Malin and to hold an "open season" auction for Expansion Project capacity to Malin. Re Pacific Gas Transmission Co, 54 F.E.R.C. P61,035, 61,156, 61,162 \(1991\). PGT then allegedly repudiated the July Letter Agreement and required that Norcen, which had [^{*8}] acquired Bonus' interests, participate in the auction to obtain firm transportation rights to Malin.

Through the open season auction, Norcen obtained a thirty year firm service agreement (FSA), committing Norcen to purchase approximately $ 13 million dollars (Cdn) of capacity per year on the Expansion Project to the Malin terminal. Under the terms of the open season auction, FSA commitments were conditioned upon PG&E's construction of its portion of the Expansion Project.

Two days before the end of the open season auction, PG&E filed an application with CPUC to modify the Expansion Project certificate to include a "crossover ban," a declaration that PG&E's portion of the Expansion Project should be the sole means of delivery for gas shipped through PGT's portion of the Expansion to any California customer. In other words, gas shipped to Malin on the Expansion Project could not be delivered to customers over previously existing PG&E capacity. The effect of the crossover ban was to subject gas transported to Malin on the Expansion Project to higher intrastate delivery charges than gas transported to Malin over PGT's old capacity.

Despite Norcen's vigorous opposition to the crossover [^{*9}] ban, CPUC granted PG&E's petition in June 1991. Re Pacific Gas & Elec Co, 40 CPUC 2d 628 \(1991\). FERC, however, concerned that PGT Expansion customers would not have nondiscriminatory access to the northern California market, imposed a construction ban on the PGT Expansion in August 1991. Re Pacific Gas Transmission Co, 57 F.E.R.C. P61,192 \(1991\). CPUC, PGT and PG&E assured FERC that CPUC would reconsider the crossover ban, and FERC lifted its construction ban in October 1991 but reduced PGT's rate of return by more than two percentage points. Re Pacific Gas Transmission Co, 57 F.E.R.C. P61,097 \(1991\). In October 1992, CPUC reaffirmed the crossover ban. Re Pacific Gas & Elec Co, 1992 Cal. PUC LEXIS 920, 138 P.U.R.4th 105 (1992). A group of "Indicated Expansion Shippers," including Norcen, sought review of the CPUC decision by the California Supreme Court, which denied the petition in May 1993. Indicated Expansion Shippers v PUC, 1993 Cal. LEXIS 2541, No S031579 (Cal Sup Ct May 13, 1993) (order denying petition for review).

Meanwhile, in October 1991, PG&E went forward with construction its portion of the Expansion Project, triggering the obligations of shippers like Norcen obtained in the open season auction to purchase [^{*10}] capacity on PGT's portion of the Expansion Project. Norcen contends that PG&E's decision to go forward with the Expansion Project was commercially unreasonable, as PG&E had received subscriptions for only 40 percent of the intrastate capacity, and was part of a bad faith effort to ensure that PGT's Expansion would go forward. In September 1991, PG&E had allegedly agreed to grant TransCanada Pipelines a right of first refusal to purchase PGT, and the price PG&E would receive for PGT was related to whether the Expansion Project was built.

The Expansion Project went into service in November 1993. Norcen has been paying all monies invoiced by PGT under protest and has declined to make use of the capacity available to it under its FSA.

II

Norcen brings claims against PGT, PG&E and the alleged joint entity PG&E/PGT Pipeline Expansion Project for monopolization in violation of Sherman Act § 2, restraint of trade in violation of the Cartwright Act, unfair business practices in violation of the Unfair Practices Act, restraint of trade for allegedly unlawful tying of services in violation of Sherman Act § 1 and the Cartwright Act, fraudulent inducement, breach of contract, breach of the [*11] covenant of good faith and fair dealing for seeking the crossover ban, breach of the covenant of good faith and fair dealing for constructing the PG&E portion of the Expansion Project, promissory estoppel and rescission. Plaintiff seeks treble antitrust damages, contract damages, restitution and rescission of its thirty year FSA.

Defendants move to dismiss all of Norcen's claims under FRCP 12\(b\)\(6\). They assert that plaintiff's antitrust claims are barred by collateral estoppel, the state action doctrine, the Noerr-Pennington doctrine, the filed-rate doctrine and a lack of antitrust injury. Defendant PG&E also asserts that Norcen has no contract claims against it because PG&E was never a party to any of Norcen's purported contracts. Defendant PGT asserts that it had nothing to do with PG&E's decision to construct the PG&E portion of the Expansion Project and that no claims against it can be based on that event.

Finally, defendants argue that the alleged legal entity PG&E/PGT Pipeline Expansion Project is simply a cooperative enterprise of two separate corporations that does not give rise to joint and several liability, and that service on the alleged entity was improper.

III

[*12] HN1[↑] In considering a motion to dismiss under Rule 12(b)(6), the court must determine whether the facts pled in the complaint entitle plaintiff to the relief sought. Conley v Gibson, 355 U.S. 41, 2 L. Ed. 2d 80, 78 S. Ct. 99 \(1957\). A court may only consider allegations made in the complaint; extrinsic factual material may not be taken into account, Powe v City of Chicago, 664 F.2d 639, 642 \(7th Cir 1981\), although materials properly attached to a complaint as exhibits may be considered for purposes of Rule 12(b)(6). Hal Roach Studios v Richard Feiner & Co, 896 F.2d 1542, 1555 n. 19 \(9th Cir 1989\); Amfac Mortgage Corp v Arizona Mall of Tempe, Inc, 583 F.2d 426, 429 & n. 2 \(9th Cir 1978\); see FRCP 10\(c\) ("A copy of any written instrument which is an exhibit to a pleading is a part thereof for all purposes."). If the allegations in the complaint are contradicted by the attached documents, a court may dismiss the claims under Rule 12(b)(6). See Nishimatsu Const Co v Houston Nat'l Bank, 515 F.2d 1200, 1206 \(5th Cir 1975\) (dismissing claim under Rule 12(b)(6) where plaintiffs alleged in complaint that corporate officer signed agreement in personal capacity and the attached agreement revealed signature was [*13] made in corporate capacity); Durning v First Boston Corp, 815 F.2d 1265 \(9th Cir\) ("[Attached] documents are part of the complaint and may be considered in determining whether the plaintiff can prove any set of facts in support of the claim."), cert denied, 488 U.S. 944 (1987). The court may also consider records and reports of administrative bodies. Mack v South Bay Beer Distrib., Inc, 798 F.2d 1279, 1282 \(9th Cir 1986\). With these standards in mind, the court turns to the doctrinal bars defendants raise to plaintiff's antitrust claims.

A

HN2[↑] The Noerr-Pennington doctrine holds that antitrust laws cannot be used to attack legitimate political activity. This is so even if the defendant harbors anticompetitive motives and the activity in question has detrimental effects on a particular industry or group of competitors. For example, in City of Columbia v Omni Outdoor Advertising, Inc, 499 U.S. 365, 113 L. Ed. 2d 382, 111 S. Ct. 1344 \(1991\), plaintiff argued that defendant engaged in an unlawful conspiracy with the local government to cause passage of a zoning ordinance that prevented plaintiff from erecting billboards that would compete with defendant. The Court held that defendant's activities fell [*14] within the Noerr-Pennington exception as "activities relating to the enactment of the ordinances," id at 384, even though defendant's motive was clearly selfish and its behavior arguably corrupt. HN3[↑] That a private party's political motives are selfish is irrelevant: 'Noerr shields from the Sherman Act a concerted effort to influence public officials regardless of intent or purpose.' Id at 380 (quoting United Mine Workers of Am v Pennington, 381 U.S. 657, 670, 14 L. Ed. 2d 626, 85 S. Ct. 1585 \(1965\)); see also 499 U.S. at 382-84 (rejecting a "conspiracy exception" to Noerr-Pennington).

Defendants point out that all of the activities they have engaged in required regulatory approval, either by FERC or CPUC. Following the Noerr-Pennington line of cases, defendants argue that their efforts to further their own business interests through regulation are immune from antitrust attack as legitimate efforts to "petition the Government for a redress of grievances." U.S. Const. amend I; Omni Outdoor Advertising, 499 U.S. at 379.

Plaintiff responds by seeking to invoke a "price squeeze" exception to Noerr-Pennington. In City of Kirkwood v Union Electric Co, 671 F.2d 1173 \(8th Cir 1982\), cert denied, [*15] 459 U.S. 1170, 74 L. Ed. 2d 1013, 103 S. Ct. 814 (1983), and City of Mishawaka v American Electric Power Co, 616 F.2d 976 \(7th Cir 1980\), cert denied, 449 U.S. 1096, 66 L. Ed. 2d 824, 101 S. Ct. 892 (1981) (Mishawaka II), electric utility defendants created a "price squeeze" by raising federally regulated wholesale rates without raising state-regulated retail rates. Plaintiffs, municipalities that bought wholesale power from defendants and competed in retail sales, charged that defendants' rate manipulations were not immunized by Noerr-Pennington. The Seventh and Eighth Circuits agreed, holding that the doctrine does not protect use of the political process to achieve an unlawful end. See Kirkwood, 671 F.2d at 1181 ("The right [to Redress grievances] may not be used as a pretext to achieve otherwise unlawful results."); Mishawaka II, 616 F.2d at 981-83. Plaintiff argues that defendants' conduct falls squarely within this exception: defendants pushed their allegedly anticompetitive rate design through CPUC to manipulate and take advantage of the dual federal-state regulatory structure in the natural gas industry, thereby harming competition.

In crafting the price squeeze exception to Noerr-Pennington, the Eight Circuit [*16] in Kirkwood and the Seventh Circuit in Mishawaka II relied heavily on California Motor Transport Co v Trucking Unlimited, 404 U.S. 508, 30 L. Ed. 2d 642, 92 S. Ct. 609 \(1972\), which involved the so-called "sham" exception to Noerr. See Kirkwood, 671 F.2d at 1181; Mishawaka II, 616 F.2d at 982. In Trucking Unlimited, plaintiff and defendant were competing trucking companies. Plaintiff argued that defendant blocked plaintiff's attempts to secure regulatory approval to enter the California trucking business by repeatedly challenging plaintiff's regulatory petitions, thereby unlawfully monopolizing the industry. The Court held that such abuse of the political system fell within the sham exception to Noerr to the extent it precluded plaintiff's access to political bodies.

[A] pattern of baseless, repetitive claims may emerge which leads the factfinder to conclude that the administrative and judicial processes have been abused. That may be a difficult line to draw. But once it is drawn, the case is established that abuse of those processes produced an illegal result, viz., effectively barring respondents from access to the agencies and courts. Insofar as administrative or judicial [*17] processes are involved, actions of that kind cannot acquire immunity by seeking refuge under the umbrella of 'political expression.'

404 U.S. at 513. The Seventh and Eighth Circuits both viewed Trucking Unlimited as signaling a retreat from Noerr-Pennington, making possible their finding of a price squeeze exception. Kirkwood, 671 F.2d at 1181 (basing holding on Trucking Unlimited and Cantor v Detroit Edison Co, 428 U.S. 579, 49 L. Ed. 2d 1141, 96 S. Ct. 3110 \(1976\); Mishawaka II, 616 F.2d at 982-83 (comparing defendant's conduct with that in Trucking Unlimited)).

The Supreme Court's recent decision in Omni Outdoor Advertising reaffirms the vitality and broad scope of Noerr-Pennington and clearly limits the reach of Trucking Unlimited. The Court emphasized that HN4 the sham exception "encompasses situations in which persons use the governmental process--as opposed to the outcome of that process--as an anticompetitive weapon." 499 U.S. at 380 (emphasis in original). For example, a monopolist that seeks to drag out litigation to consume a would-be competitor's resources and drive it out of business could have committed an antitrust violation under the sham exception. [*18] Omni Outdoor Advertising makes clear, however, that use of administrative or legislative processes to achieve anticompetitive objectives is not a "sham" merely because the objectives sought are anticompetitive. See Omni Outdoor Advertising, 499 U.S. at 381 (noting that Noerr-Pennington applied even though "[defendant] indisputably set out to disrupt [plaintiff]'s business relationships"); see also id at 380 ("That a private party's political motives are selfish is irrelevant.").

Omni Outdoor Advertising must be read as implicitly overruling Kirkwood and Mishawaka II's recognition of a price squeeze exception to Noerr-Pennington. The presence of only one regulatory body does not render Omni Outdoor Advertising's reasoning inapplicable. A utility that asks a regulatory body for favorable rates against a background that includes a dual federal-state regulatory system is engaging in First Amendment conduct no less than a billboard company when it lobbies the city council to pass favorable zoning ordinances against a background of longstanding friendship between the billboard company and town council members. The alleged price squeeze in this case clearly [*19] stems from defendants' use of the regulatory processes. In Omni terms, it is an "outcome" that cannot be folded into the sham exception to Noerr.

The court, therefore, refuses to find that defendants' alleged manipulation of the dual federal-state regulatory scheme falls outside of the scope of First Amendment conduct protected from antitrust attack by the Noerr-Pennington doctrine.

Even if a price squeeze exception to Noerr exists, however, plaintiff's argument fails because Kirkwood and Mishawaka II are plainly distinguishable. In each, the regulatory allowed defendants to increase wholesale rates more rapidly than retail rates. The former went into effect automatically, subject to refund, thirty days after filing or after a limited suspension period imposed by FERC, whereas the latter went into effect only following state rate setting. Kirkwood, 671 F.2d at 1176; Mishawaka II, 616 F.2d at 980. This timing differential made possible the "manipulations" challenged in each case. As the Seventh Circuit described it, the Mishawaka II defendant "was able to set its own wholesale rates for lengthy periods of time without regulatory interference. * [*20]  When federal regulation actually occurs, the abuse is mildly remedied by refunds." Id. at 982. This is in contrast to the instant case, in which defendants were subject to regulatory preapproval for all of their actions. Defendants could not have manipulated the regulatory process in the same manner. See, e.g., Complaint PP 45 (defendants sought FERC approval for the Expansion Project), 71 (FERC ordered defendants to establish a delivery point at Malin and hold an open season auction for capacity to Malin), 93 (FERC temporarily refused to issue defendants' certificate of public convenience and necessity for the Expansion Project).

Both because the price squeeze exception to Noerr appears inconsistent with the Supreme Court's recent decision in Omni Outdoor Advertising and because the cases upon which plaintiff relies are distinguishable on their facts, the court holds that defendants' conduct before either CPUC or FERC is protected from antitrust attack by the Noerr-Pennington doctrine. Accordingly, the court GRANTS defendants' motion and DISMISSES WITH PREJUDICE plaintiff's federal antitrust claims to the extent they are based on defendants' actions before [*21] either CPUC or FERC.

B

Defendants' second argument for dismissal of plaintiff' complaint is that defendants' actions are protected by HN5[] the state action doctrine. This doctrine is based on principles of federalism and derives from the Supreme Court's opinion in Parker v Brown, 317 U.S. 341, 87 L. Ed. 315, 63 S. Ct. 307 \(1943\), which held that the antitrust laws were not intended to interfere with states' exercise of their sovereign regulatory powers. Because of federal deference to states' decisions to displace competition with regulation, allegedly anticompetitive restraints become immune to antitrust attack if they are "clearly articulated and affirmatively expressed as state policy" and the policy in question is "actively supervised" by the state. California Retail Liquor Dealers Ass'n v Midcal Aluminum, Inc, 445 U.S. 97, 105, 63 L. Ed. 2d 233, 100 S. Ct. 937 \(1980\).

Plaintiff responds to this argument by again invoking a "price squeeze" exception. Relying on the same set of cases used to defend their claims against Noerr-Pennington immunity, plaintiff claims that state action does not protect anticompetitive manipulation of state and federal regulatory systems. For example, in Kirkwood, the Eighth Circuit held that HN6[] an antitrust [*22] challenge directed at that interaction of state and federal rates falls outside of the state action doctrine. 671 F.2d at 1180.

Other circuits, including the Ninth, have found a price squeeze exception to state action when the alleged competitive harm is caused by a regulatory "gap" created by federal regulation of wholesale rates and state regulation of retail rates. See City of Anaheim v Southern Cal Edison, 955 F.2d 1373 \(9th Cir 1992\); Mishawaka II, 616 F.2d at 981. The Ninth Circuit in Anaheim accepted that a price squeeze can create antitrust liability, 955 F.2d at 1377, notwithstanding criticism of the doctrine by the First Circuit in Town of Concord v Boston Edison Co, 915 F.2d 17 \(1st Cir 1990\) (Breyer, J), cert denied, 499 U.S. 931, 113 L. Ed. 2d 268, 111 S. Ct. 1337 (1991). Recognizing the need to "tread carefully" in the area of regulated industries, where monopoly activity is often legalized, however, the Ninth Circuit limited application of this theory by instituting a "specific intent" requirement. 955 F.2d at 1378.

All of the price squeeze cases concerned challenges to defendants' manipulations of rate-setting mechanisms in the electricity industry. Plaintiffs accused defendants [*23] of jacking up the price of wholesale power, regulated by the federal government, without pursuing accompanying rate increases for retail rates, which were controlled by state regulations. In none of these cases did plaintiffs challenge a state's own regulatory program. Rather, defendants' alleged manipulations involved federally regulated rates. Not surprisingly, the Seventh, Eighth and Ninth Circuits held that such manipulation is not immunized by the state action doctrine.

In the case at bar, however, plaintiff directly challenges defendants' alleged manipulation of state regulated intrastate gas rates. This challenge is materially different from the rate manipulation challenges of the price squeeze cases. Plaintiff directly puts at issue the state's sovereign power to regulate intrastate rates for natural gas, a power that the state action doctrine seeks to protect from federal antitrust law. While manipulation of federally regulated rates in the price squeeze cases did not give rise to the federalism concerns that motivate the state action doctrine, CPUC activity that meets the Midcal test for state action certainly does.

The crossover ban and postage stamp rates clearly [*24] satisfy HN7  Midcal's requirements. The first requirement, that the challenged restraint be one "clearly articulated and affirmatively expressed as state policy," 445 U.S. at 105, is demonstrated by showing the state's intent to "displace competition * * * with a regulatory structure." Southern Motor Carriers Rate Conference, Inc v United States, 471 U.S. 48, 64, 85 L. Ed. 2d 36, 105 S. Ct. 1721 \(1985\). In the California natural gas industry, the state's intention is made clear by the California Public Utilities Code, which leaves rate determination to CPUC discretion.¹

Midcal's second prong requires that the state "actively supervise" the regulatory program. 445 U.S. at 105. As the Supreme Court wrote in [FTC v. ^{\[*25\]} Ticor Title Insurance Co, 504 U.S. 621, 112 S. Ct. 2169, 119 L. Ed. 2d 410 \(1992\)](#), the purpose of "active supervision" is "to determine whether the State has exercised sufficient independent judgment and control so that the details of the rates or prices have been established as a product of deliberate state intervention." 112 S. Ct. at 2177.

CPUC's thorough consideration and reconsideration of the crossover ban and postage stamp rates amply demonstrates the state's active role in regulating defendant PG&E's conduct in this case. See Re Pacific Gas & Elec Co, 39 CPUC 2d 69 (1990) (approving postage stamp rates for the intrastate Expansion Project); Re Pacific Gas & Elec Co, 40 CPUC 2d 497 (1991) (reaffirming postage stamp rates); Re Pacific Gas & Elec Co, 40 CPUC 2d 628 (1991) (approving the crossover ban); Re Pacific Gas & Elec Co, 1992 Cal. PUC LEXIS 920, 138 P.U.R.4th 105 (1992) (affirming the crossover ban and postage stamp rates).

The court therefore finds that the crossover ban and postage stamp rates are the product of the state's policy of displacing competition in the natural gas industry with regulation. Because this state policy is implemented pursuant to the state's sovereign regulatory powers and is part of the state's [*26] active regulation of the industry, it is immunized from attack by federal antitrust law under the state action doctrine.

Accordingly, the court GRANTS defendants' motion and DISMISSES WITH PREJUDICE plaintiff's federal antitrust claims to the extent they are based on the crossover ban and postage stamp rates approved by CPUC.

C

¹ HN8  California Public Utilities Code § 739.6 provides:

The [CPUC] shall establish rates using cost allocation principles that fairly and reasonably assign to different customer classes the costs of providing service to those customer classes, consistent with the policies of affordability and conservation.

Defendants also assert that adjudicating plaintiff's antitrust claims would require the court to assess damages in violation of HN9[↑] the filed rate doctrine. This doctrine holds that buyers and sellers have no legally cognizable right to pay or receive a rate in a regulated industry other than the rate established by the rate-setting agency. Square D Co v Niagara Frontier Tariff Bureau, Inc, 476 U.S. 409, 90 L. Ed. 2d 413, 106 S. Ct. 1922 \(1986\); Keogh v Chicago & Northwestern Ry Co, 260 U.S. 156, 67 L. Ed. 183, 43 S. Ct. 47 \(1922\).

Plaintiff's response to this argument is similar to its responses to the state action and Noerr claims, namely, the filed rate doctrine does not apply to harms created by the unlawful interaction of different rates. As the Eighth Circuit wrote in Kirkwood,

An award of antitrust damages for a price squeeze would not conflict with the [filed rate] doctrine's [*27] purpose, which is to ensure rate uniformity by confining the authority to oversee the reasonableness of rates to a single regulatory agency. * * * [Plaintiff] does not quarrel with the reasonableness determinations of the FERC and PSC as to any individual wholesale or retail rate. Instead, Kirkwood complains of anti-competitive effects resulting from the interaction of rates which, taken separately, may be reasonable. Thus, neither an award of antitrust damages nor the granting of properly conditioned injunctive relief for the price squeeze would interfere with either commission's regulatory authority.

671 F.2d at 1179 (citations omitted).

In addition, plaintiff urges this court to follow the Eighth Circuit's rule that the filed rate doctrine applies to rate-related claims by customers, not competitors, Kirkwood, 671 F.2d at 1179, and points out that the doctrine limits only damages awards, not the remedy of rescission. Square D, 476 U.S. at 422 ("Keogh simply held that an award of treble damages is not an available remedy for a private shipper claiming that the rate submitted to, and approved by, the ICC was the product of an antitrust violation. Such a holding is [*28] far different from the creation of an antitrust immunity * * *").

In Square D, the Supreme Court emphasized HN10[↑] that the filed rate doctrine does not provide antitrust immunity. Rather, the doctrine limits the applicability of treble damage awards when they would have to be measured relative to baseline rates established by regulatory bodies. Id. Thus, in the instant case it would be inappropriate for the court to dismiss plaintiff's cause of action entirely because of the filed rate doctrine, as that would amount to granting defendants immunity under the antitrust laws merely because they are regulated.

Plaintiff's argument that the filed rate doctrine only prohibits antitrust treble damage awards measured against regulatory rates is well taken. Still, the court is hardpressed to understand how plaintiff can allege any antitrust injury that is not predicated on an argument that it should not be paying the CPUC specified rates for transportation on the Expansion Project. Indeed, plaintiff's prayer for relief for each of its antitrust counts asks the court to award "three times the damages sustained by Plaintiffs" as a result of the particular antitrust violation alleged. Nevertheless, [*29] given the procedural posture of the case and the possibility that plaintiff may articulate a remedy available to it under antitrust laws that does not run afoul of the filed rate doctrine, see, e.g., Kirkwood, 671 F.2d at 1179 (noting that "properly conditioned injunctive relief" circumvents the filed rate doctrine), defendants' motion to dismiss plaintiff's federal antitrust claims based on the filed rate doctrine is DENIED WITHOUT PREJUDICE.

D

Defendants argue that plaintiff previously litigated before CPUC all of the antitrust issues that it now brings to court and that prior factual determinations from those CPUC proceedings are entitled to preclusive effect. In support of this argument, defendants cite Pacific Tel & Tel Co v CPUC, 600 F.2d 1309 (9th Cir), cert denied, 444 U.S. 920, 62 L. Ed. 2d 176, 100 S. Ct. 239, 100 S. Ct. 240 (1979), in which plaintiffs sought a preliminary injunction in district court to enjoin implementation of a CPUC order following the California Supreme Court's denial of plaintiffs' petition to review the same order. The district court denied the request, and the Ninth Circuit affirmed, holding that the California Supreme Court's denial of plaintiffs' petition for review constituted [*30] a final judgment on the merits entitled to res judicata effect. Pacific Telephone was followed by Judge Patel in United Parcel Service v CPUC, 839

F. Supp. 702 (1993), which held that UPS could not challenge a CPUC decision regarding its rate changing procedures after the California Supreme Court denied UPS' petition for review.

Based on these cases, defendants would have this court accept as true CPUC findings that the "old" PG&E pipeline had insufficient capacity to transport gas shipped over the PGT Expansion, the crossover ban is "just and reasonable," and the crossover ban "is not an unlawful tying arrangement." Def PG&E's Mtn to Dismiss at 8. While acknowledging that the CPUC proceedings at issue here were legislative rather than judicial, defendants contend that the CPUC's findings of fact were reviewable de novo by the California Supreme Court, and that the court's refusal to grant Norcen's petition gives those findings collateral estoppel effect in this court. Def PG&E's Reply at 16 n. 30.

Defendants give undue import to CPUC findings and the California Supreme Court's denial of review. Collateral estoppel generally bars relitigation only of factual issues that were [*31] actually litigated and essential to a judgment. Wright, Miller & Cooper, Federal Practice and Procedure § 4421 ("Issue preclusion attaches only to determinations that were necessary to support the judgment entered in the first action."). HN11[ Under California's statutory scheme for appeal of CPUC decisions, the California Supreme Court reviews CPUC findings to determine whether the commission acted within its authority and obeyed the federal and California Constitutions. Cal Pub Util Code § 1757.² Accordingly, all that the California Supreme Court had to determine to deny Norcen's petition for review of CPUC findings was that the commission acted constitutionally and within its authority. The only factual determinations from these proceedings that can be established by collateral estoppel are those necessary to demonstrate these conclusions.

[*32] All of the cases defendants cite in support of their broad collateral estoppel argument are consistent with this narrow interpretation of the preclusive effects of the prior litigation in this case. In Pacific Telephone, the Ninth Circuit simply reaffirmed the doctrine of Napa Valley Electric Co v California Railroad Comm'n, 251 U.S. 366, 64 L. Ed. 310, 40 S. Ct. 174 (1920), in which the Supreme Court held that commission findings could be given preclusive effect following the state supreme court's denial of a petition for review. Napa Valley made clear, however, that the state supreme court's denial of review was "tantamount [only] to a decision of the court that the orders and decisions of the Commission did not exceed its authority or violate any right of the several petitioners under the Constitution of the United States or of the State of California." Id at 372. The claims in Napa Valley were held constitutional in nature. Id at 368.

While Pacific Telephone did concern nonconstitutional challenges to CPUC decisions, the case is properly read as limited solely to the res judicata effects of a decision by the California Supreme Court to deny plaintiffs' petition to review CPUC decisions, [*33] not as establishing that factual determinations of the earlier proceedings must be given preclusive effect in separate proceedings that raise different issues from those raised earlier. Plaintiffs in Pacific Telephone sought an injunction in federal court to prevent implementation of a CPUC rate order after the CPUC had denied plaintiffs' request for a rehearing and the California Supreme Court had denied plaintiffs' petition for review. 600 F.2d at 1311. The district court determined that because plaintiffs had already challenged the rate order before the California Supreme Court, plaintiffs' suit for an injunction was precluded by the doctrine of res judicata. The Ninth Circuit affirmed this determination. Id. Nowhere in Pacific Telephone did the Ninth Circuit rely on particular findings of fact established in CPUC proceedings.

Defendants also cite People v Western Air Lines, Inc, 42 Cal. 2d 621, 268 P.2d 723 (1954), in which the California Supreme Court gave collateral estoppel effect to CPUC findings of fact after denying a petition for review of a CPUC order. Again, however, the issues presented in the petition for review were solely constitutional. 42 Cal. 2d at

² HN12[ Section 1757 provides:

The review shall not be extended further than to determine whether the commission has regularly pursued its authority, including a determination of whether the order or decision under review violates any right of the petitioner under the Constitution of the United States or of this State.

629-30; see also United [*34] Parcel Service, 839 F. Supp. at 707-08 (following Pacific Telephone and Napa Valley to bar relitigation of equal protection claim).

Defendants have provided no legal authority to support their claim that CPUC findings of fact should be given preclusive effect when the California Supreme Court did not need to consider those findings in denying plaintiff's petition for review. In this case, it is entirely possible, if not likely, that the California Supreme Court was able to find that the CPUC acted constitutionally and within its authority without ever deciding any of the facts that defendants would have this court take as conclusively established by prior judicial procedures. These issues were simply not before the California Supreme Court, which did not even have before it a full record of the CPUC proceedings. See Cal Pub Util Code § 1756 (requiring a writ to the commission to certify its record for review).

Nor is it clear to the court that CPUC factual findings should have preclusive effect following denial of rehearing by the California Supreme Court. The attention paid to antitrust issues by the CPUC is different from that provided by the federal courts. As Judge [*35] Skelly Wright wrote in an opinion overturning a regulatory agency finding that a natural gas merger did not violate § 7 of the Clayton Act, HN13 regulatory agencies "can and do approve actions which violate antitrust policies where other economic, social and political considerations are found to be of overriding importance. In short, the antitrust laws are merely another tool which a regulatory agency employs to a greater or lesser degree * * *." Northern Natural Gas Co v Federal Power Comm'n, 130 U.S. App. D.C. 220, 399 F.2d 953, 961 \(DC Cir 1968\). The fact that an agency considers antitrust issues does not mean that its findings need be conclusively established.

Accordingly, defendants' motion to dismiss plaintiff's complaint based on either res judicata or collateral estoppel is DENIED.

IV

Plaintiff offers several theories to support its argument that defendants' conduct violated Sherman Act § 2: defendants engaged in a "monopoly broth" of conduct; defendant PG&E committed anticompetitive fraud in not disclosing its intention to seek the crossover ban to open season auction bidders; defendants engaged in predatory expansion to preclude competition; defendants denied plaintiff access to essential [*36] facilities; and defendants engaged in monopoly leveraging.

HN14 A section 2 violation of the Sherman Act has three elements: (1) monopoly power in a relevant market; (2) willful acquisition and maintenance of that power; and (3) causal antitrust injury. City of Anaheim v Southern Cal Edison Co, 955 F.2d 1373, 1376 \(9th Cir 1992\). Plaintiff's complaint must state facts that establish all three of these elements to survive defendants' motion to dismiss.

A

Plaintiff argues that its antitrust claims are directed at a "monopoly broth" of anticompetitive conduct designed to preserve unlawfully PG&E's monopoly on the supply of natural gas to industrial customers in northern California, violating § 2 of the Sherman Act. Ingredients in the alleged broth include: fighting requests for transportation services and opposing new interstate pipelines; making public statements that PG&E wanted to remain the preferred supplier in the northern California industrial market; telling Norcen's customers that Norcen was unreliable; denying Norcen's request for firm transportation on PGT's pipeline to Malin; subscribing PGT capacity to northern California while rejecting Norcen's requests; designing the [*37] Expansion Project to preclude access to the northern California market; allegedly coercing Norcen and others into signing onto the Expansion Project through false misrepresentations; obtaining the crossover ban so as to disadvantage Norcen competitively; and unreasonably building the intrastate portion of the Expansion Project despite the lack of adequate subscriptions in order to increase the value of PGT, which PG&E intended to sell. Pl's Opp to PG&E's Mtn to Dismiss at 5-7.

Plaintiff urges this court to follow Continental Oil Co v Union Carbide & Carbon Corp, 370 U.S. 690, 8 L. Ed. 2d 777, 82 S. Ct. 1404 \(1962\), which stated that "plaintiffs should be given the full benefit of their proof without tightly compartmentalizing the various factual components and wiping the slate clean after scrutiny of each." Id at 699.

Still, HN15 to state a § 2 claim, plaintiff must allege that its antitrust injury was caused by conduct that can give rise to an antitrust claim. As the Ninth Circuit has noted, "a finding of some slight wrongdoing in certain areas need not by itself add up to an antitrust violation." Anaheim, 955 F.2d at 1376.

As discussed in Parts IIIA and IIIB of this order, Noerr-Pennington prevents plaintiff [*38] from concocting a monopoly broth out of defendants' requests of CPUC or FERC, and state action eliminates as ingredients the crossover ban and postage stamp rates approved by CPUC. Furthermore, for the reasons stated in Part IIIB, any of defendants' other actions approved by CPUC pursuant to its statutory regulatory authority are immunized by the state action doctrine. In oral argument, plaintiff's counsel suggested that all of defendants' activities between 1986 and 1990 were not subject to regulatory approval, placing defendants' conduct in that time period outside of the reach of Noerr-Pennington and state action. This contention is contradicted by plaintiff's complaint, however, which points to several instances in which defendants' conduct between 1986 and 1990 was subject to regulatory approval. Complaint PP 36 ("In May, 1987, Bonus was able to secure * * * an authorization by the FERC allowing Bonus to ship up to 30 MMcf/day on an interruptible basis to specified end users within PG&E's service territory."), 45 (PGT filed an application with FERC for the Expansion Project in 1988), 52 (PG&E filed for CPUC approval of the Expansion Project in 1989).

Moreover, plaintiff's [*39] complaint fails to specify acts by defendants in the 1986-1990 time period that demonstrate unlawful monopolization. HN16 "The test of willful maintenance or acquisition of monopoly power is whether the acts complained of unreasonably restricted competition." Oahu Gas Serv, Inc v Pacific Resources, Inc, 838 F.2d 360 \(9th Cir\), cert denied, 488 U.S. 870, 102 L. Ed. 2d 149, 109 S. Ct. 180 \(1988\) (quoting Drinkwine v Federated Publications, Inc, 780 F.2d 735 \(9th Cir 1985\), cert denied, 475 U.S. 1087, 89 L. Ed. 2d 727, 106 S. Ct. 1471 (1986)). The sum of plaintiff's argument is that defendants refused plaintiff's requests for firm transportation service to deliver Canadian natural gas to Malin, Oregon. in cases such as this, HN17 if a monopolist is charged with refusing to aid a competitor, antitrust liability is determined by asking "whether there was a legitimate business justification for the monopolist's conduct." Oahu, 838 F.2d at 368. In addition, plaintiff must demonstrate that defendant's conduct harmed not only the plaintiff but also competition generally. 838 F.2d at 370 ("The goal of antitrust laws * * * is to safeguard general competitive conditions, rather than to protect specific competitor.").

Plaintiff's complaint fails to allege defendants' [*40] conduct harmed competition and was not justified by legitimate business reasons. For example, plaintiff contends that its interruptible service on PGT's old pipeline was "interrupted with great frequency," Complaint P 38, but this only shows that defendants were acting within their rights. Similarly, plaintiff's contention that PG&E perceived plaintiff's request for firm transportation on PGT's old pipeline was "contrary to its interests," id P 40, merely shows that defendants saw plaintiff as a potential competitor.

Paragraph 63 of plaintiff's complaint alleges defendants acted without business justification:

On or about January 8, 1990, the Expansion Project rejected * * * Bonus['] request for firm capacity, asserting that available capacity was fully subscribed. This refusal constituted a discriminatory and anticompetitive refusal to provide for Bonus an accommodation for additional capacity that was provided instead to other shippers, including PG&E itself. * * * On information and belief, [defendants] in fact had and continue to have no business justification for their refusal to provide Bonus with service provided to other shippers.

But even this paragraph [*41] merely states that defendants refused to deal with plaintiff's predecessor in interest on the same terms with which it dealt with other shippers. At most, this paragraph alleges harm to plaintiff, but it does not allege harm to competition.

Furthermore, even if some harm to competition could be found. plaintiff's cause of action based on the events in this paragraph is now time barred. HN18 15 USC § 15b provides a four year statute of limitations for antitrust violations. The limitations period begins to run when the defendant commits the acts giving rise to the alleged injury. Mir v Little Co of Mary Hosp, 844 F.2d 646 \(9th Cir 1988\). Thus, the limitations period for plaintiff's antitrust action based on the events described in paragraph 63 of plaintiff's complaint expired on or about January 8, 1994. Plaintiff's complaint, filed March 16, 1994, was too late.

Only allegations related to defendant PGT's repudiation of its July 1990 agreement with Norcen's predecessor in interest are neither time barred nor subject to antitrust immunity under Noerr-Pennington or the state action doctrine. See Complaint P 72. All these allegations amount to, however, is a claim that defendant [*42] PGT breached a contract. Nothing suggests that the breach caused an injury to competition. As such, this paragraph cannot support a monopolization claim.

In sum, plaintiff's monopoly broth lacks the necessary ingredients. Plaintiff's complaint fails to allege that plaintiff suffered an antitrust injury as a result of activities that are neither time barred nor protected by Noerr-Pennington or state action. Defendants' motion to dismiss plaintiff's § 2 claims based on a monopoly broth of unlawful conduct is therefore GRANTED. Plaintiff's § 2 claims are DISMISSED WITHOUT PREJUDICE to give plaintiff the opportunity to amend its complaint to conform to the requirements of this order if it can do so.

B

Plaintiff contends that allegations that PG&E "embarked on the Expansion project both with a subscription level so low as to be unprecedented in the North American gas industry and with unreasonable estimates of demand are sufficient" to make out a § 2 claim based on predatory investment. Pl's Reply to Def PG&E's Mtn to Dismiss at 11.

This contention is plainly wrong. As the Supreme Court recently noted in Brooke Group Ltd v Brown & Williamson Tobacco Corp, 509 U.S. 209, 113 [*431] S. Ct. 2578, 2589, 125 L. Ed. 2d 168, HN19 [↑] to demonstrate predatory conduct, "the plaintiff must demonstrate that there is a likelihood that the predatory scheme alleged would cause a rise in prices above a competitive level that would be sufficient to compensate for the amounts expended on the predation * * *."

Here, plaintiff has pled just the opposite. It claims that PG&E's Expansion Project was undersubscribed when built and remains so today. Complaint P 101. Undersubscribed capacity is likely to cause downward rather than upward pressure on prices. Thus, plaintiff has failed to allege facts that suggest a likely increase in price.

Furthermore, defendant PG&E could not have gone forward with the Expansion Project without CPUC approval. For the reasons stated in Part IIIB of this order, CPUC approval of defendant PG&E's actions protects those actions from antitrust attack under the state action doctrine.

Defendants' motion to dismiss plaintiff's Sherman Act § 2 claims based on a predatory investment theory is therefore GRANTED, and plaintiff's predatory investment claim is DISMISSED WITH PREJUDICE.

C

Plaintiff alleges that defendants engaged in actionable "monopoly leveraging" by abusing [*44] their monopoly power in transportation to secure a competitive advantage in the downstream sales market. Pl's Opp to Def PG&E's Mtn to Dismiss at 12-13. The Ninth Circuit has specifically rejected monopoly leveraging as a basis for liability under § 2 of the Sherman Act independent of either monopolization or attempted monopolization. Alaska Airlines, Inc v United Airlines, Inc, 948 F.2d 536, 547 (9th Cir 1991), cert denied, 503 U.S. 977, 112 S. Ct. 1603, 118 L. Ed. 2d 316 (1992). For the reasons stated in part IVA of this order, plaintiff's complaint fails adequately to allege a monopolization claim under § 2 of the Sherman Act. Nor does plaintiff argue that its complaint can be interpreted as making out an attempted monopolization claim. Accordingly, defendants' motion to dismiss plaintiff's § 2 claims based on a theory of "monopoly leveraging" is GRANTED, and plaintiff's Sherman Act § 2 claim based on monopoly leveraging is DISMISSED WITH PREJUDICE.

D

Plaintiff alleges that it has stated a Sherman Act § 2 claim based on denial of access to two "essential facilities," PG&E's non-Expansion intrastate distribution system and firm transportation on PGT's old Kingsgate-Malin pipe.

The [*45] first of these claims can be dismissed under the state action doctrine. Plaintiff contends that defendants' engaged in exclusionary conduct by refusing to allow gas brought to Malin on the PGT Expansion to be distributed over PG&E's pre-Expansion capacity. This allegedly exclusionary behavior is the result of the crossover ban, however, which was adopted by CPUC as part of its exercise of sovereign regulatory powers. For the reasons stated in part IIIB of this order, the crossover ban is immune from antitrust challenge.

In Alaska Airlines, the Ninth Circuit sought to determine when a facility controlled by one competitor is "essential" such that denial of access constitutes an antitrust injury. After thoroughly reviewing the essential facilities case law, the court concluded that a facility controlled by one firm is essential "only if control of the facility carries with it the power to eliminate competition in the downstream market." 948 F.2d at 544 (emphasis in original).

This rule bars plaintiff's essential facilities claim based on a denial of access to PGT's pre-Expansion Kingsgate-Malin pipe. By plaintiff's own admission, it has the ability to compete with defendant [*46] PG&E in sales of natural gas to industrial customers in northern California, albeit at a lower rate of return than plaintiff expected. See Complaint, P 104 (noting that plaintiff has "declined to make any use" of its transportation entitlements). Accordingly, the court concludes that plaintiff has failed to state an essential facilities claim. Defendants' motion to dismiss plaintiff's § 2 claim based on denial of access to essential facilities is therefore GRANTED and plaintiff's essential facilities claim is DISMISSED WITHOUT PREJUDICE.

E

Plaintiff's fourth cause of action alleges that defendants unlawfully tied intrastate distribution on defendant PG&E's Expansion capacity to the purchase of capacity on PGT's Expansion pipe in violation of Sherman Act § 1. HN20 A tying arrangement can be unlawful either per se or if it unreasonably restrains commerce in the tied product or service. In Jefferson Parish Hospital District No 2 v Hyde, 466 U.S. 2, 80 L. Ed. 2d 2, 104 S. Ct. 1551 \(1984\), the Supreme Court specified the essential elements of a per se § 1 tying claim. First, there must be two distinguishable product markets. Id at 21. Second, the seller of one product, the tying product, must, through [*47] exercise of control of that product, force the buyer into purchase of the second, or tied product, when the buyer did not wish to purchase it or would have wished to purchase it on different terms. Id at 12 Not every bundling of two products is unlawful. Only if the seller "forces" the buyer into a purchase it would not otherwise make does actionable tying exist. Id; see also Robert's Waikiki U-Drive, Inc v Budget Rent-a-Car Sys, Inc, 732 F.2d 1403, 1407 \(9th Cir 1984\). To determine whether a tying arrangement places unreasonable restraints on competition for the tied product, courts must investigate the effect of the alleged unlawful tie on competition for the tied product. Jefferson Parish, 466 U.S. at 29.

Plaintiff's per se tying argument fails as a matter of law because, as plaintiff alleges, it has never purchased any of the allegedly tied product, intrastate natural gas distribution on PG&E's Expansion Project. Complain P 96.

Plaintiff also has failed to state a tying argument based on an unreasonable restriction on commerce in the tied product. The mechanism that creates the alleged tie between intrastate Expansion capacity and interstate Expansion capacity is the [*48] CPUC's crossover ban, which was adopted by CPUC after careful consideration of the policies underlying state regulation of the natural gas industry. Plaintiff's tying theory would require this court to use the antitrust laws to invalidate this state action. As the court discussed in part IIIB of this order, however, the crossover ban is entitled to antitrust immunity. Furthermore, plaintiff's complaint makes no allegations that the crossover ban has adversely affected competition in the sale of natural gas in northern California. Accordingly, defendants' motion to dismiss plaintiff's fourth cause of action based on Sherman Act § 1 is GRANTED and plaintiff's tying claim is DISMISSED WITHOUT PREJUDICE.

V

In summary, defendants' motion to dismiss plaintiff's Sherman Act claims based on Noerr-Pennington and the state action doctrine is GRANTED. Defendants' motion to dismiss plaintiff's Sherman Act claims based on collateral estoppel and the filed rate doctrine is DENIED. Plaintiff's § 2 claims based on a "monopoly broth" of anticompetitive conduct and denial of access to essential facilities are DISMISSED WITHOUT PREJUDICE. Plaintiff's § 2 claims [*49] based on predatory investment and monopoly leveraging are DISMISSED WITH PREJUDICE. Plaintiff's Sherman Act § 1 claim based on unlawful tying is DISMISSED WITHOUT PREJUDICE. For the reasons discussed in this order, all federal antitrust claims against the alleged joint entity PG&E/PGT Pipeline Expansion Project are also DISMISSED. Plaintiff may refile these claims based on any theories available to it consistent with this order.

Because the complaint fails to state any federal claim, the court finds itself without jurisdiction over plaintiff's state law claims, which are hereby DISMISSED WITHOUT PREJUDICE. 28 USC § 1331.

Plaintiff may refile any claims dismissed without prejudice within thirty days of this order.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

VAUGHN R. WALKER

United States District Judge

End of Document

Valley Drive Sys. v. EMPI, Inc.

United States District Court for the Northern District of Illinois, Western Division

September 19, 1994, Decided

No. 94 C 50118

Reporter

1994 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 13233 *; 1994-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P70,819

VALLEY DRIVE SYSTEMS, INC., Plaintiff, v. EMPI, INC., Defendant.

Notice: [*1] NOT FOR PUBLICATION

Core Terms

venue, convenience, factors, cages, judicial district, witnesses, reside, district court, antitrust, customers, parties, interest of justice, warehouse, lawsuit

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > ... > Venue > Federal Venue Transfers > Convenience Transfers

Civil Procedure > ... > Venue > Federal Venue Transfers > General Overview

HN1 [down arrow] Federal Venue Transfers, Convenience Transfers

28 U.S.C.S. § 1404(a) provides that for the convenience of parties and witnesses, in the interest of justice, a district court may transfer any civil action to any other district or division where it might have been brought. District courts have broad discretion to grant or deny a motion to transfer under § 1404(a). Additionally, the moving party has the burden of showing that the transferee forum is clearly more convenient.

Civil Procedure > ... > Venue > Federal Venue Transfers > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Preliminary Considerations > Venue > General Overview

HN2 [down arrow] Venue, Federal Venue Transfers

While courts have generally reduced the analysis of a venue question to the balancing of three factors: the convenience of parties, the convenience of non-party witnesses, and the interest of justice, the court must first determine whether venue is proper in each district.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Procedural Matters > Jurisdiction > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Preliminary Considerations > Venue > Corporations

Civil Procedure > Preliminary Considerations > Venue > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Preliminary Considerations > Venue > Multiparty Litigation

HN3 [down] Procedural Matters, Jurisdiction

In an antitrust action, a corporate defendant may be sued in any judicial district where it is an inhabitant, where it may be found or where it transacts business. 15 U.S.C.S. § 22. This venue provision is viewed together with the general venue provisions of 28 U.S.C.S. § 1391, and venue is proper if either statutory provision is satisfied. Under 15 U.S.C.S. § 22, a corporation transacts business in a judicial district if its business therein is of a substantial character.

Civil Procedure > ... > Jurisdiction > Diversity Jurisdiction > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Preliminary Considerations > Venue > Multiparty Litigation

HN4 [down] Jurisdiction, Diversity Jurisdiction

28 U.S.C.S. § 1391\(a\) states:(a) A civil action wherein jurisdiction is founded only on diversity of citizenship may, except as otherwise provided by law, be brought only in (1) a judicial district where any defendant resides, if all defendants reside in the same State, (2) a judicial district in which a substantial part of the events or omissions giving rise to the claim occurred, or a substantial part of property that is the subject of the action is situated, or (3) a judicial district in which the defendants are subject to personal jurisdiction at the time the action is commenced, if there is no district in which the action may otherwise be brought.

Civil Procedure > Preliminary Considerations > Venue > Corporations

Civil Procedure > ... > Diversity Jurisdiction > Citizenship > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Jurisdiction > In Rem & Personal Jurisdiction > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > In Rem & Personal Jurisdiction > In Personam Actions > Substantial Contacts

Civil Procedure > Preliminary Considerations > Venue > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Preliminary Considerations > Venue > Multiparty Litigation

HN5 [down] Venue, Corporations

28 U.S.C.S. § 1391\(c\) provides: (c) For purposes of venue under this chapter, a defendant that is a corporation shall be deemed to reside in any judicial district in which it is subject to personal jurisdiction at the time the action is commenced. In a state which has more than one judicial district and in which a defendant that is a corporation is subject to personal jurisdiction at the time an action is commenced, such corporation shall be deemed to reside in any district in that state within which its contacts would be sufficient to subject it to personal jurisdiction if that district were a separate state, and, if there is no such district, the corporation shall be deemed to reside in the district within which it has the most significant contacts.

Counsel: FOR PLAINTIFF: Gregory E. Barrett, John L. Olson, Schlueter, Ecklund, Olson, Barrett & Moor, Rockford, IL.

FOR DEFENDANT: Michael C. Cook, Robert C. Johnson, McCullough, Campbell & Lane, Chicago, IL.

Judges: REINHARD

Opinion by: PHILIP G. REINHARD

Opinion

MEMORANDUM OPINION AND ORDER

INTRODUCTION

Plaintiff, Valley Drive Systems, Inc., filed a complaint in the Circuit Court of Winnebago County, Illinois seeking $266,764 from defendant, EMPI, Inc., allegedly due and owing for the sale of certain products by plaintiff to defendant. Defendant removed the circuit court action to this court on April 15, 1994.¹ On April 14, 1994, defendant filed a three-count complaint against plaintiff in the United States District Court for the Central District of California alleging causes of action under section 2\(a\) of the Robinson-Putman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 13\(a\), and under section 2 of the Sherman Anti-Trust Act, 15 U.S.C. § 2. Defendant also answered the complaint herein and raised several affirmative defenses, one of which incorporated the allegations of the complaint filed by defendant in the California district court. Defendant [2] has moved in this court, pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1404\(a\), for a transfer of venue to the Central District of California or, alternatively, for a stay of the proceedings here pending resolution of the litigation in the California court. Plaintiff has also moved in the California court to dismiss the action there under Fed.R.Civ.P. 12\(b\) or to stay it because of alleged forum shopping by defendant and because of an alleged attempt by defendant to avoid the scrutiny of a motion for transfer under 28 U.S.C. 1404\(a\) or under the doctrine of forum non conveniens.

FACTS

Defendant is a California corporation that distributes automotive replacement parts, including constant velocity joint (CV joint) races and cages. Races and cages are used in the rebuilding of CV joints [3] for sale as replacement parts. Plaintiff, an Illinois corporation, is a manufacturer of races and cages used in the rebuilding of CV joints.

According to Daniel Welden, defendant's president, he was involved in 1992 in negotiations with plaintiff regarding the possibility of defendant becoming a distributor for plaintiff's races and cages. He went to Rockford, Illinois to visit plaintiff but made no commitments at that time. In approximately March 1993, Welden met with two representatives of plaintiff in California and placed his first purchase order with plaintiff. One of the representatives, Scott Gompper, was based in Los Angeles and acted as the West Coast sales representative for plaintiff.

Defendant continued to place orders with plaintiff through January 1994. Following the last order placed, which is the subject of this lawsuit, Welden learned that races and cages were being sold to non-distributors (defendant's actual and potential customers) at prices which make it impossible for defendant to sell the races and cages from plaintiff except at a loss. Plaintiff has also recently established a warehouse in Orange County, California, which is within in defendant's sales territory.

[4] Welden also asserts in his affidavit as factors favoring transfer of this cause to California: that Welden himself, Todd Piper, who was the representative of plaintiff involved in the initial deal between plaintiff and defendant and who is now defendant's employee, and Gompper, who resides in southern California, will probably be witnesses; that defendant's first order was negotiated for and placed in southern California; that plaintiff now has a warehouse in Orange County; that all parts purchased from plaintiff were shipped to southern California and the inventory remains there; and that a number of present and former customers of plaintiff and defendant are in California and will be witnesses.

¹ While defendant states in its motion to transfer venue that the notice of removal was filed in this court on April 14, 1994, the file stamp on the notice is dated April 15, 1994.

According to Piper, a former representative of plaintiff and present employee of defendant, he convinced Welden in about December 1991 to come to Rockford to visit plaintiff's facility and inspect its products. Welden made no commitments to plaintiff during his Rockford visit. He, Gompper and Welden met in Los Angeles, and Welden placed his first order at that time.

Plaintiff has submitted the declaration of its president, Don DiGiovanni, in opposition to the motion to transfer. According [*5] to DiGiovanni, he, plaintiff's vice-president, plaintiff's technical manager and plaintiff's head machinist would be required to testify. Each of the persons resides in the Rockford area and none of them are scheduled to travel to California in the next year. While Piper initially contacted Welden and generated orders for plaintiff, the orders which are the subject of the lawsuit were negotiated by DiGiovanni by telephone. Also, while Piper spends a portion of his time in California, he maintains a residence in Illinois, and his family lives in Rockford. All of the parts which are the subject of the lawsuit were manufactured in Rockford and all records regarding the parts are located here. According to DiGiovanni, plaintiff's principal customers, other than defendants, are located in Wisconsin, Pennsylvania and Florida. Plaintiff's principal competitors are located in Texas and Illinois. Approximately twenty percent of plaintiff's races and cages market is in California. In May 1994, plaintiff opened a 1,600 square foot warehouse in California maintained by a single employee who has no connection with the present dispute.

CONTENTIONS

Defendant contends that this cause should be [*6] transferred to the Central District of California because the factors set forth in 28 U.S.C. § 1404\(a\) weigh in favor of such transfer. Plaintiff responds that these factors compel denial of the motion to transfer.

DISCUSSION

HN1 [↑] Section 1404\(a\) provides that "for the convenience of parties and witnesses, in the interest of justice, a district court may transfer any civil action to any other district or division where it might have been brought." District courts have broad discretion to grant or deny a motion to transfer under section 1404\(a\). Heller Financial, Inc. v. Midwhey Powder Co., Inc., 883 F.2d 1286, 1293 \(7th Cir. 1989\). Additionally, the moving party has the burden of showing that the transferee forum is clearly more convenient. Id.

HN2 [↑] While courts have generally reduced the analysis of a venue question to the balancing of three factors: the convenience of parties, the convenience of non-party witnesses, and the interest of justice, Coffey v. Van Dorn Iron Works, 796 F.2d 217, 219 \(7th Cir. 1986\); the court must first determine whether venue is proper in each district, Vanguard Financial Serv. Corp. v. Johnson, 736 F. Supp. 832, 837 \(N.D. Ill. 1990\). [*7] Consequently, this court must decide whether venue properly lies in both the Central District of California and the Northern District of Illinois.

Turning first to the question of whether venue is proper in the Central District of California, the court notes that the cause of action brought there is at least, in part, an antitrust claim. HN3 [↑] In an antitrust action, a corporate defendant may be sued in any judicial district where it is an inhabitant, where it may be found or where it transacts business. 15 U.S.C. § 22; International Communications, Inc. v. Rates Technology, Inc., 694 F. Supp. 1347, 1352 \(E.D. Wisc. 1988\). This venue provision is viewed together with the general venue provisions of 28 U.S.C. § 1331, and venue is proper if either statutory provision is satisfied. International Communications, 694 F. Supp. at 1352; Sportmart, Inc. v. Frisch, 537 F. Supp. 1254, 1257 \(N.D. Ill. 1982\); Ohio-Sealy Mattress Mfg. Co. v. Kaplan, 429 F. Supp. 139, 141 \(N.D. Ill. 1977\). Under 15 U.S.C. § 22, [*8] a corporation transacts business in a judicial district if its business therein is of a substantial character. Armco Steel Co. v. CSX Corp., 790 F. Supp. 311, 319-20 (D.D.C. 1991); Amateur-Wholesale Elec. v. R.L. Drake Co., 515 F. Supp. 580, 584 (S.D. Fla. 1981).

In the present case, defendant was, according to DiGiovanni, a principal customer of plaintiff. Additionally, plaintiff sold several hundred thousand dollars of goods to defendant and delivered them to its facilities in the Central District of California.² Moreover, approximately twenty percent of plaintiff's race and cage market is in California, at least some of which is in the Central District. Based on these undisputed facts, the court finds that plaintiff transacted business in the Central District of California and that venue properly lies in that judicial district under 15 U.S.C. § 22.

[*9] As to the propriety of venue in this district, the court relies on the general venue provisions under 28 U.S.C. § 1331\(a\), as the matter here is one solely premised on diversity of citizenship.

HN4 [↑] Section 1331\(a\) states:

(a) A civil action wherein jurisdiction is founded only on diversity of citizenship may, except as otherwise provided by law, be brought only in (1) a judicial district where any defendant resides, if all defendants reside in the same State, (2) a judicial district in which a substantial part of the events or omissions giving rise to the claim occurred, or a substantial part of property that is the subject of the action is situated, or (3) a judicial district in which the defendants are subject to personal jurisdiction at the time the action is commenced, if there is no district in which the action may otherwise be brought.

HN5 [↑] Section 1331\(c\) provides:

(c) For purposes of venue under this chapter, a defendant that is a corporation shall be deemed to reside in any judicial district in which it is subject to personal jurisdiction at the time the action is commenced. In a State which has more than one judicial district and in which [*10] a defendant that is a corporation is subject to personal jurisdiction at the time an action is commenced, such corporation shall be deemed to reside in any district in that State within which its contacts would be sufficient to subject it to personal jurisdiction if that district were a separate State, and, if there is no such district, the corporation shall be deemed to reside in the district within which it has the most significant contacts.

Under the facts of this case, the court finds venue to be proper here under section 1331\(a\)\(2\) as a substantial part of the events or omissions giving rise to the claim occurred in this district. The claim in this court is essentially one for breach of a sales contract. The sale which is the subject of this lawsuit was negotiated by DiGiovanni by telephone from Illinois. Presumably the decision as to the price of the races and cages was also arrived at at least in part by DiGiovanni here in Illinois. Also, the parts were manufactured here and shipped from here to California. These facts support venue in this district under section 1331\(a\)\(2\).

Having concluded that venue properly lies in both this district and the Central District of California, [*11] the court must next decide whether the cause filed here is better heard here or in California. As noted above, the court must balance the three factors of convenience of the parties, convenience of non-party witnesses and the interest of justice, in determining which venue is most appropriate. See Coffey v. Van Dorn Iron Works, 796 F.2d 217, 219 (7th Cir. 1986). In doing so, the court must consider these statutory factors in light of all the circumstances of the case. Id. The weighing of these factors necessarily involves a large degree of subtlety and latitude. Id.

In looking at the evidence submitted by the parties relevant to these three factors, the court reiterates that it is defendant's burden, as the party seeking the transfer, to show that the Central District of California is clearly more convenient than the district chosen by plaintiff. See Coffey, 796 F.2d at 219-20. First, regarding the convenience of the parties, this factor does not weigh in favor of either party. Defendant has its corporate offices in California, and plaintiff has its facilities here. While defendant points to the existence of plaintiff's [*12] warehouse in California as evidence that a lawsuit there will not inconvenience plaintiff, the warehouse is relatively small and employs only one person. Such a minor presence does not make litigation in California any less inconvenient for plaintiff. Furthermore, several employees of defendant will have to travel here if the case proceeds in this district and several of plaintiff's employees will have to go to California should the court transfer this matter.

² The court takes judicial notice of the fact that defendant is located within the Central District of California.

Second, the only evidence as to non-party witnesses is offered by plaintiff. According to DiGiovanni, plaintiff's principal customers, other than defendant, are located in Wisconsin, Pennsylvania and Florida. Its principal competitors are in Texas and Illinois. To the extent witnesses from plaintiff's customers and competitors will be needed at trial, it would be generally less inconvenient for them to travel here than to California.

Lastly, the interest of justice includes such concerns as ensuring speedy trials, trying related litigation together and having a judge who is familiar with the applicable law try the case. Heller Financial, 883 F.2d at 1293. The interest of justice analysis relates [*13] to the efficient functioning of the courts. Coffey, 796 F.2d at 221.

In the present case, defendant has offered no evidence to show that the parties would receive a speedier trial in the Central District of California than here. While it is generally more efficient to try related litigation together, defendant has not specifically identified how in this case it will be less efficient to try a breach of contract claim here and an antitrust case in California. Furthermore, there is a pending motion to dismiss the California litigation which may be granted, as the district court there is holding that motion in abeyance pending the outcome of the present motion. Additionally, defendant has suggested no reason why it could not bring its antitrust claims as counterclaims in this action. Finally, as to the court's familiarity with the applicable law, the action here is for breach of a sales contract. The court does not consider the applicable law, whether California's or Illinois', to be particularly difficult of application. Furthermore, to the extent the case raises antitrust law by way of affirmative defense, that is a matter of federal law which this and [*14] the California court are equally capable of applying.

After considering the evidence bearing on the three factors, the court finds that defendant has not demonstrated that the Central District of California is clearly a more convenient forum than this court. Therefore, the court denies defendant's motion to transfer. The court further denies the alternative motion to stay as defendant had not offered, nor is this court aware of any, reason to stay this proceeding.

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, the court denies defendant's motion to transfer venue and motion to stay these proceedings pending disposition of the litigation in the Central District of California.

ENTER:

PHILIP G. REINHARD, JUDGE

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT

DATED: September 19, 1994