As noted above, the Amended Counterclaims include six different counterclaims. [*147] The four antitrust counterclaims all relate to Siemens' allegation that Wabtec has "engaged in an ongoing scheme to exclude Siemens from the [Interoperable Train Control, or "ITC"]-PTC market[,] and has used "illegal anticompetitive actions such as tying, unfair exclusive dealing, and deception [to] maintain its monopoly over the ITC-PTC, [ITC-PTC Onboard Computer, or "OBC"], and [ITC-PTC Back Officer Server Software, or "BOS"] markets[,] to the detriment of its "only competitive threat" in those markets, Siemens. (D.I. 143 at 29-30) The four antitrust counterclaims allege, respectively, that Wabtec engages in monopolization in violation of the Sherman Antitrust Act ("Sherman Act"), attempted monopolization in violation of the Sherman Act, tying in [**7] violation of the Sherman Act and the Clayton Act, and agreements in restraint of trade in violation of the Sherman Act. (Id. at ¶¶ 156-205) The Lanham Act counterclaim alleges that Wabtec has made knowingly false or misleading statements in commercial advertising about the interoperability, safety, technical or other characteristics of Siemens' ITC-PTC components, which materially mislead customers to Siemens' detriment. (Id. at ¶¶ 206-15) Lastly, the DDTPA counterclaim is very similar in nature to the Lanham Act counterclaim. (Id. at ¶¶ 216-23)

II. DISCUSSION

A. Legal Standard

Rule 21 provides that the "court may . . . sever any claim against a party." Fed. R. Civ. P. 21. Motions to sever in a patent case are governed by Federal Circuit law. *Vehicle IP, LLC v. AT&T Mobility LLC, C.A. No. 09-1007-LPS, 2016 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 149431, 2016 WL 6404093, at *1* (D. Del. Oct. 20, 2016) (citing In re EMC Corp., 677 F.3d 1351, 1354 (Fed. Cir. 2012)). The Federal Circuit, in turn, has noted that because Rule 21 does not otherwise provide a standard for district courts to consider when assessing a motion to sever, "courts have looked to [Federal Rule of Civil Procedure] 20 for guidance." In re EMC Corp., 677 F.3d at 1356 (internal quotation marks and citation omitted); see also In re Nintendo Co., Ltd., 544 F. App'x 934, 938 (Fed. Cir. 2013); *Vehicle IP, 2016 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 149431, 2016 WL 6404093, at *1; Power Integrations, Inc. v. ON Semiconductor Corp., No. 16-CV-06371-BLF, 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 94686, 2018 WL 2688875 at *2 (N.D. Cal. June 5, 2018)*. Defendants may be joined in one action pursuant to Rule 20 "only if the two independent [**8] requirements of Rule 20 are satisfied: (1) the claims against them must be asserted 'with respect to or arising out of the same transaction, occurrence, or series of transactions or occurrences,' and (2) there must be a 'question of law or fact common to all defendants.'" In re EMC Corp., 677 F.3d at 1356 (quoting F.R.C.P. 20(a)(2)); see also *Vehicle IP, 2016 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 149431, 2016 WL 6404093, at *1*. These two requirements are necessary, but not sufficient conditions for joinder; the Federal Circuit has noted that even if the claims at issue meet both requirements, joinder may still be refused "in the interest of avoiding prejudice and delay, ensuring judicial economy, or safeguarding principles of fundamental fairness." In re EMC Corp., 677 F.3d at 1360 (internal quotation marks and citation omitted); see also *In re Nintendo Co., Ltd., 544 F. App'x at 939; Power Integrations, Inc., 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 94686, 2018 WL 2688875 at *2.*<sup>2</sup>

Below, the Court will address the two Rule 20-related factors first, and will thereafter consider other factors such as avoidance of [*148] prejudice and delay, ensuring judicial economy and safeguarding principles of fundamental fairness.

B. Application of Rule 20-related Factors

1. Do the respective claims arise out of the same transaction, occurrence, or series of transactions or occurrences?

In deciding whether the Amended Counterclaims arise out of the same transaction or occurrence, or series of transaction or occurrences, [**9] as do Wabtec's patent infringement claims, the Court analyzes whether there is a "logical relationship between the separate causes of action" such that "there is substantial evidentiary overlap in the facts giving rise to the" different sets of claims or the claims "share an aggregate of operative facts." In re EMC Corp., 677 F.3d at 1358, see also *Vehicle IP, LLC, 2016 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 149431, 2016 WL 6404093, at *1*. "Rule 20 makes clear that the existence of a single common question of law or fact alone is insufficient to satisfy the transaction-or-occurrence requirement." In re EMC Corp., 677 F.3d at 1357.

Here, it is not difficult for the Court to conclude that Siemens' Amended Counterclaims do not share "a logical relationship" or "an aggregate of operative facts" with Wabtec's patent infringement claims. (Indeed, in its briefing, Siemens never really argues that they do.). This is not surprising, as, for the most part, the resolution of patent infringement claims and antitrust-related claims require different types of analysis. The question of whether Siemens' Trainguard PTC system infringes Wabtec's patents will focus on technical issues relating to the comparison of system components or methods of use to the content of the asserted patent claims. As to these claims, it is Siemens' conduct that will be at issue. Conversely, [**10] Siemens' antitrust claims are broad in scope and will be primarily focused on Wabtec's alleged monopolistic activity that is said to have occurred in three different product markets. There, it will be Wabtec's conduct that is being called out. Thus, it can be said that "[b]ecause the [a]ntitrust Mitigation arises from [Wabtec's] conduct, and the [patent] Mitigation arises from [Siemens'] conduct, the two [sets of claims] could not arise from the same transaction or occurrence." *Syngenta Seeds, Inc. v. Monsanto Co., No. Civ. 04-908-SLR, 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 4651, 2005 WL 678855 at *2* (D. Del. Mar. 24, 2005) (holding that patent infringement and antitrust claims do not arise from the same transaction or occurrence where the claims arise from the separate conduct of different actors); see also *Sanofi-Synthelabo v. Apotex Inc., No. 02 Civ. 2255(SHS), 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 80203, 2006 WL 3103321, at *4* (S.D.N.Y. Nov. 2, 2006) (granting a motion to sever defendant's antitrust counterclaims from plaintiffs' action asserting patent infringement in part because "[t]he Antitrust Allegations arise out of recent commercial activity that is distinct from the underlying patent dispute."). For this reason alone, Rule 20's requirements would not be satisfied.

<sup>2</sup> In their briefing, the parties addressed most or all of the factors relating to severance/joinder decisions cited in the above paragraph. That said, the parties (citing to non-patent cases) each utilized different tests for resolving motions to sever. Wabtec, for example, asserted that the Court should utilize a five-factor test (which appears to include most or all of the factors referenced in the paragraph above): "(1) whether the claims arise out of the same transaction or occurrence; (2) whether the claims present some common questions of law or fact; (3) whether settlement of the claims or judicial economy would be facilitated; (4) whether prejudice would be avoided if severance were granted; and (5) whether different witnesses and documentary proof are required for the separate claims." (D.I. 147 at 4-5 (citing *Karlo v. Pittsburgh Glass Works, LCC, No. 2:10-cv-1283, 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 141057, 2015 WL 6134052, at *2* (W.D. Pa. Oct. 16, 2015))). Siemens, for its part, did not directly address the two Rule 20-related factors at all, instead focusing on the following three-factor analysis: "(1) the convenience of the parties; (2) avoiding prejudice; and (3) expedience and economy." (D.I. 158 at 3 (citing Graudins v. Retro Fitness, LLC, 921 F. Supp. 2d 456, 467-68 (E.D. Pa. 2013))).

2. Is there a question of law or fact common to the disparate claims?

With regard to whether the two sets of claims share any common issues of law and fact, [**11] it is likely that there will be at least some fact questions relevant to Wabtec's patent case that will also be relevant to Siemens' Amended Counterclaims. For example, the commercial success of Wabtec's products that read on the asserted patents may be relevant to both cases. (D.I. 158 at 7) Similarly, Wabtec's asserted market dominance and the scope of its market power will be relevant to patent damages and to antitrust issues. (Id.); cf. Dentsply Intern. Inc. v. New Tech. Co., Civ.A. No. 96-272 MMS, 1996 WL 756766, at \*4 \(D. Del. Dec. 19, 1996\). And Siemens' Trainguard PTC system's sales will be relevant to damages in the patent case and to issues of competition in the antitrust matter. (D.I. 158 at 7)

But in the main, the key questions of law and fact at issue will be very different. As was noted above, Wabtec's patent litigation will focus on patent law issues, such as construction of the patent claims and whether the asserted patents are valid and whether those patents are infringed by Siemens' Trainguard PTC product. Cf. Syngenta Seeds, 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 4651, 2005 WL 678855 at \*2. Siemens' antitrust case, in contrast, will focus on "typical antitrust issues such as whether [Wabtec is a] [*149] monopolist[,] whether [Wabtec] engaged in anticompetitive [**12] conduct[,] and what are the relevant product markets and/or consumers. Syngenta Seeds, 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 4651, 2005 WL 678855 at \*2; see also Eurand Inc. v. Mylan Pharms. Inc., Civ. No. 08-889-SLR, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 92542, 2009 WL 3172197 at \*2 \(D. Del. Oct. 1, 2009\) (noting the "distinct lack of evidentiary overlap between issues of patent validity and infringement and issues of . . . antitrust"); Sanofi-Synthelabo, 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 80203, 2006 WL 3103321, at \*4 ("[T]he Antitrust Allegations principally concern questions of antitrust law and contract law, not patent law."). The documentary proof, fact witness testimony and expert witness testimony needed to litigate both sets of claims will therefore vary significantly.

Thus, although there would likely be some common questions of law or fact, the significant difference in legal and factual issues still suggests that severance is appropriate. See Sanofi-Synthelabo, 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 80203, 2006 WL 3103321, at \*4; Syngenta Seeds, 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 4651, 2005 WL 678855 at \*2; see also Federal Trade Commission v. Endo Pharmaceuticals, Inc., Civ. No. 16-1440, 2016 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 145329, 2016 WL 6124376, at \*4 \(E.D. Pa. Oct. 20, 2016\) (noting that with regard to Rule 20's "common question of law or fact" requirement, only one such common question need be shared to satisfy the Rule, but that "[c]ourts in [the Third] Circuit have found that the same series of transactions or occurrences prerequisite under Rule 20 essentially consumes the second requirement that there arise a question of law or fact common to all joined parties.") (internal quotation marks and citation omitted).

C. Other Relevant Factors

Because both Rule 20 [**13] factors are not satisfied, the Court could end its analysis, with the result that the Motion would be granted. But for sake of completeness, the Court will also analyze the other factors mentioned in Federal Circuit caselaw that sometimes come into play when a district court analyzes a Rule 21 motion. As will be seen below, review of those factors does not suggest that grant of the Motion is inappropriate.

With regard to whether severance (or the lack thereof) would engender prejudice to one side or the other, or whether it would contravene the principle of fundamental fairness, both sides make understandable arguments. On the one hand, Wabtec rightly asserts that the complexity and cost inherent in antitrust litigation could serve to unnecessarily delay the resolution of its earlier-filed patent claims, were the Amended Counterclaims not severed. (D.I. 147 at 14) On the other hand, Siemens understandably worries that were the Amended Counterclaims severed, the mechanics of getting a new case up and running could lead to some further delay in resolving its antitrust case (a case that will already be complicated enough). (D.I. 158 at 6-7) In the end, those arguments each have some force, but [**14] they about cancel each other out.

As to the issue of judicial economy, the Court recognizes that in Chief Judge Stark's earlier order on the motion to amend, he noted his expectation that adding the Amended Counterclaims to this case "which still has ample time left for discovery, is more likely to promote the just, speedy, and relatively inexpensive resolution of the parties' disputes than would the initiation of yet another case between these parties." (D.I. 142)<sup>3</sup> But in the interval, Siemens Amended Counterclaims have not moved forward much, as the parties have been tied up in further litigation over how and whether such discovery should proceed. (See D.I. 180) And because antitrust litigation surely "holds the potential for enormously costly and time-consuming discovery[.]" Superior Offshore Int'l. Inc. v. Bristow Grp., Inc., CIVIL ACTION No. 1:09-CV-00438-LDD, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 147376, 2010 WL 11470613, at \*6 \(D. Del. Dec. 1, 2010\), were the Amended Counterclaims not severed at this stage, it would almost certainly mean that the current case schedule "will be entirely displaced[.]" (D.I. 147 at 15). It does seem, then, that disentangling Wabtec's earlier-filed patent infringement allegations from Siemens' Amended Counterclaims will at least help Wabtec's [\[\*\*15\] patent case get to resolution on a much speedier timetable. Cf. Masimo Corp. v. Philips Elecs. N. Am. Corp., No. CIV.A 09-80-JJF-MPT, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 23057, 2010 WL 925864, at \*2 \(D. Del. Mar. 11, 2010\)](#) ("[T]here is a strong likelihood that consideration of the patent validity issues will be delayed significantly if tried together with the antitrust issues. Major antitrust litigation is often enormously time-consuming ") (internal quotation marks and citation omitted). And getting resolution on at least a subset of the current action, sooner rather than later, might well aid overall judicial economy.<sup>4</sup> This factor at least slightly favors grant of the Motion. See Eurand Inc., 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 92542, 2009 WL 3172197 at \*1 (granting severance of patent infringement and antitrust claims where "this request is supported by the promotion of judicial economy and avoiding the injection of complex, unrelated and perhaps unnecessary issues into the patent infringement case.").

III. CONCLUSION

Ultimately, Wabtec has shown that the Rule 20 factors do not both militate in favor of keeping the claims at issue in one litigation, as the two sets of claims really are related to distinct transactions and occurrences. In light of that, and because judicial economy may be somewhat better served via severance, [\[\*\*16\]](#) the Court GRANTS Plaintiffs Motion. Although Siemens will now have to file its counterclaims in a separate case, the Court expects that the parties will work together to avoid inefficiency and to move both cases forward at a good pace.<sup>5</sup>

<sup>3</sup>The Court assumes that were the Amended Counterclaims not severed, they would ultimately be bifurcated for trial from Wabtec's patent claims Cf. Orthophoenix, LLC v. Dfine, Inc., No. CV 13-1003-LPS, 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 61417, 2015 WL 1938702, at \*1 \(D. Del. Apr. 28, 2015\) (bifurcating an antitrust counterclaim from an affirmative patent infringement case relating to 15 patents-in-suit); see Ciena Corp. v. Corvis Corp., 210 F.R.D. 519, 521 \(D. Del. 2002\) (holding that "bifurcation is an important discretionary tool that district courts can use in patent cases to ensure that the cases are resolved in a just manner by juries that understand the complex issues before them."). Thus, the Court need not consider Wabtec's argument that to add the Amended Counterclaims to this "already complex patent infringement case . . . will . . . make the trial unmanageable for the Court and the jury." (D.I. 147 at 11)

<sup>5</sup>Regarding Siemens' concern about having to "repeat the entire motion to dismiss briefing stage" if severance is granted, (D.I. 158 at 5), that is not going to happen. When the new case is filed, and assuming there is no material change to the substance of Siemens' allegations, a responsive pleading will be filed on an abbreviated timeline and the entire motion to dismiss briefing package will simply be re-filed at once in the new case. (D.I. 168 at 7) Additionally, the Court expects that the parties' cross-use discovery agreement will apply to the new case. (Id.)

Opinion

LINARES, Chief District Judge.

This matter comes before the Court by way of Defendants Mercedes-Benz [*3] USA, LLC's and Daimler AG's motion to dismiss the Fourth Consolidated and Amended Class Action Complaint ("FAC"), (ECF No. 117), as well as Defendant Robert Bosch LLC's motion to dismiss the FAC, (ECF No. 118). Plaintiffs have opposed these motions (ECF Nos. 126-27), and Defendants have replied thereto, (ECF Nos. 131-32). The Court decides this matter without oral argument, pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 78. For the reasons stated below, Defendants' motions are granted in part and denied in part.

A. Facts

This is a putative class action involving allegations that Defendants Mercedes-Benz USA, LLC and Daimler AG (collectively, "Mercedes"), together with Bosch GmbH and Bosch LLC (collectively, "Bosch") have unlawfully misled consumers into purchasing certain "BlueTEC diesel" vehicles (the "Polluting Vehicles") by misrepresenting the environmental impact of these vehicles during on-road driving. (FAC ¶ 10-20).<sup>2</sup>

According to Plaintiffs, "Mercedes' advertisements, promotional campaigns, and public statements represented that the Polluting Vehicles had high fuel economy, low emissions, reduced NOx by 90%, had lower emissions than comparable diesel vehicles, and had lower emissions than other comparable [*4] vehicles." (FAC ¶ 323). However, Mercedes, with help of Bosch, installed an electronic control unit in the Polluting Vehicles known as the EDC17. (FAC ¶ 358). The EDC17 allegedly functions as a defeat device, meaning it turned off or limited emissions reductions during real-world driving conditions. (FAC ¶¶ 16-17, 21). This defeat device was "only discoverable when conducting over-the-road testing that is not part of the certification protocol." (FAC ¶ 252). The Polluting Vehicles also allegedly failed to perform up to their touted environmental standards in other situations, such as when ambient temperatures drop below 50°F/10°C—a defect Mercedes has acknowledged. (FAC ¶ 135).

Plaintiffs contend that Mercedes never disclosed the existence of the defeat device, nor the fact that the BlueTEC engines emit emissions substantially higher than those of gasoline vehicles, and thus, "defrauded its customers by omission, and engaged in fraud and unfair and deceptive conduct under federal and state law." (FAC ¶¶ 19, 313). Had Plaintiffs known of the emissions issues associated with the Polluting Vehicles, they would not have purchased those vehicles, or they would have paid substantially less [*5] for them. (FAC ¶ 317). As to Bosch, the FAC sets forth that Mercedes and Bosch entered into a scheme to evade U.S. emissions requirements and to deceive "the public into believing the Polluting Vehicles were 'clean diesels,'" in order to "bolster revenue, augment profits and increase Mercedes' share of the diesel vehicle market." (FAC ¶¶ 17, 356).

Plaintiffs, on behalf of a national class and state subclasses, now assert claims for violation of the RICO Act, as well as violations of state consumer protection statutes, and fraudulent concealment. (FAC ¶¶ 342-1752).

B. Procedural History

Plaintiffs initiated this action on February 18, 2016. (ECF No. 1). On May 6, 2016, Plaintiffs filed the Consolidated and Amended Class Action Complaint ("CAC"). (ECF No. 17). Mercedes moved to dismiss the CAC on July 8, 2016. (ECF No. 38). This Court granted that motion on December 6, 2016. (ECF Nos. 58-59). The Court found that Plaintiffs failed to establish Article III standing because the CAC did not allege that their injury was fairly traceable to Mercedes' conduct. (ECF No. 58 at 11-14). In particular, the Court found that "Plaintiffs have not alleged that they actually viewed any category of advertisements [*6] . . . that contained the alleged misrepresentations." (ECF No. 58 at 14). Accordingly, the Court dismissed the CAC without prejudice. (ECF Nos. 58-59). Plaintiffs then filed a third consolidated and amended class action complaint on March 3, 2017, (ECF No. 81), and finally, they filed the operative FAC on September 25, 2017 adding Bosch as a defendant and the accompanying RICO allegations. Mercedes and Bosch now move separately to dismiss the FAC arguing that Plaintiffs lack Article III standing, that Plaintiffs' state-law claims are preempted by the Clean Air Act or, alternatively, fail to state a claim, and finally that Plaintiffs fail to state a RICO claim.

II. LEGAL STANDARD

A. Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(b)(1): Standing

Defendants seek to dismiss Plaintiffs' Complaint for lack of standing. "Rule 12(b)(1) governs motions to dismiss for lack of standing, as standing is a jurisdictional matter." N. Jersey Brain & Spine Ctr. v. Aetna, Inc., 801 F.3d 369, 371 n.3 (3d Cir. 2015).

"In essence the question of standing is whether the litigant is entitled to have the court decide the merits of the dispute or of particular issues." Storino v. Borough of Point Pleasant Beach, 322 F.3d 293, 296 (3d Cir. 2003) (quoting Warth v. Seldin, 422 U.S. 490, 498, 95 S. Ct. 2197, 45 L. Ed. 2d 343 (1975)). "It is axiomatic that, in addition to those requirements imposed by statute, plaintiffs must also satisfy Article III of the Constitution . . ." Horvath v. Keystone Health Plan E., Inc., 333 F.3d 450, 455 (3d Cir. 2003). The requirements of Article III standing are as follows:

[*7] (1) the plaintiff must have suffered an injury in fact—an invasion of a legally protected interest which is (a) concrete and particularized and (b) actual or imminent, not conjectural or hypothetical; (2) there must be a causal connection between the injury and the conduct complained of; and (3) it must be likely, as opposed to merely speculative, that the injury will be redressed by a favorable decision.

Taliaferro v. Darby Twp. Zoning Bd., 458 F.3d 181, 188 (3d Cir. 2006) (quoting United States v. Hays, 515 U.S. 737, 742-43, 115 S. Ct. 2431, 132 L. Ed. 2d 635 (1995)); see also Spokeo, Inc. v. Robins, 136 S. Ct. 1540, 1547, 194 L. Ed. 2d 635 (2016) (reiterating the same factors and articulating the second factor as "fairly traceable to the challenged conduct of the defendant").

On a motion to dismiss for lack of standing, the plaintiff "bears the burden of establishing' the elements of standing, and each element must be supported in the same way as any other matter on which the plaintiff bears the burden of proof, i.e., with the manner and degree of evidence required at the successive stages of the litigation." FOCUS v.

Allegheny Cly. Ct. Com. Pl., 75 F.3d 834, 838 (3d Cir. 1996) (quoting Lujan v. Defenders of Wildlife, 504 U.S. 555, 561, 112 S. Ct. 2130, 119 L. Ed. 2d 351 (1992)). "For the purpose of determining standing, [the court] must accept as true all material allegations set forth in the complaint, and must construe those facts in favor of the complaining party." Storino, 322 F.3d at 296 (citing Warth, 422 U.S. at 501).

B. Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(b)(6)

To withstand a motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim, a "complaint [*8] must contain sufficient factual matter, accepted as true, to 'state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face.'" Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 678, 129 S. Ct. 1937, 173 L. Ed. 2d 868 (2009) (quoting Bell Atl. Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 570, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007)). "A claim has facial plausibility when the plaintiff pleads factual content that allows the court to draw the reasonable inference that the defendant is liable for the misconduct alleged." Id. at 678 (citing Twombly, 550 U.S. at 556). "The plausibility standard is not akin to a 'probability requirement,' but it asks for more than a sheer possibility that a defendant has acted unlawfully." Id. (quoting Twombly, 550 U.S. at 556).

To determine the sufficiency of a complaint under Twombly and Iqbal in the Third Circuit, the Court must take three steps. "First, it must 'tak[e] note of the elements [the] plaintiff must plead to state a claim.' Second, it should identify allegations that, 'because they are no more than conclusions, are not entitled to the assumption of truth.' Finally, '[w]hen there are well-pleaded factual allegations, a court should assume their veracity and then determine whether they plausibly give rise to an entitlement for relief." Connelly v. Lane Constr. Corp., 809 F.3d 780, 787 (3d Cir. 2016) (quoting Iqbal, 556 U.S. at 675, 679) (citations omitted). "In deciding a Rule 12(b)(6) motion, a court must consider only the complaint, exhibits attached to the complaint, matters of public record, [*9] as well as undisputedly authentic documents if the complainant's claims are based upon these documents." Mayer v. Belichick, 605 F.3d 223, 230 (3d Cir. 2010).

III. ANALYSIS

A. Article III Standing

As mentioned briefly above, this Court had previously dismissed Plaintiffs' CAC for lack of standing. In its prior Opinion, this Court found that while the Plaintiffs had set forth allegations "sufficient to support [their] claims that the [Polluting Vehicles] do not live up to Defendants' representations," Plaintiffs nevertheless failed to establish Article III standing because it was not clear that the injury was "fairly traceable" to Defendants' conduct. (ECF No. 58 at 8, 14). This was because "no Plaintiff ha[d] alleged that he or she relied upon any of the cited advertisements in deciding to lease or purchase one of Defendants' vehicles." (ECF No. 58 at 13-14). Both Mercedes and Bosch now argue that Plaintiffs lack Article III standing. (ECF Nos. 117-1 at 19-25; 118-1 at 19-27). Mercedes and Bosch both claim that Plaintiffs failed to address the traceability deficiencies raised in the Court's prior Opinion. (ECF Nos. 117-1 at 19-23; 118-1 at 25-27). Mercedes also argues that Plaintiffs' allegations contain three theories of injury that are [*10] foreclosed as a matter of law: allegations regarding public environmental and health harms, violations of environmental regulations, and allegations of fixture harm, and that Plaintiffs have nevertheless abandoned these theories as a basis for standing. (ECF No. 117-1 at 24). Mercedes argues that Plaintiffs' benefit of the bargain theory is unsupported by allegations in the FAC. (ECF No. 117-1 at 24). Bosch similarly claims that Plaintiffs have abandoned all theories of injury except for a benefit-of-the-bargain injury, but that the "benefit of the bargain, upon which Plaintiffs base their claim for overpayment, cannot serve as the basis for an Article III injury in the absence of a contract or any 'bargain' between [Bosch] and Plaintiffs." (ECF No. 118-1 at 20-21). The Court will address these arguments in turn.

1. Injury-in-Fact

Plaintiffs have established an injury in fact that can serve as the basis for Article III standing. In its prior Opinion, this Court found that "Plaintiffs have plausibly pled that the products received did not live up to the claims made by Defendants," and that "benefit of the bargain damages are recoverable for overpayment and recoverable to confer standing." [*11] (ECF No. 58 at 6, 8). In challenging Plaintiffs' benefit of the bargain theory of injury in fact, both Mercedes and Bosch argue that Plaintiffs have not shown that the Polluting Vehicles "failed to work for [their] intended purpose or [are] worth objectively less than what one could reasonably expect." (ECF No. 117-1 at 24 (quoting Koronthaly v. L'Oreal USA, Inc., 374 F. App'x 257, 259 (3d Cir. 2010)); ECF No. 118-1 at 21). However, accepting Plaintiffs' allegations as true, they paid a higher price for the BlueTEC clean diesel engines, which, in reality, polluted at levels far higher than would be expected. (FAC ¶¶ 317, 323). "In other words, they paid for a product which did not operate in the way they believed it did." In re Duramax Diesel Litig., 298 F. Supp. 3d 1037, 1052 (E.D. Mich. 2018). Claims of overpayment for a misrepresented product are "classic form[s] of injury in fact," that "[are] concrete and particularized." In re Gerber Probiotic Sales Practice Litig., No. 12-835, 2013 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 121192, 2013 WL 4517994, at *5 (D.N.J. Aug. 23, 2013).

Defendants' reliance on cases like Koronthaly and Estrada v. Johnson & Johnson, No. 16-7492, 2017 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 109455, 2017 WL 2999026 (D.N.J. July 14, 2017), is misplaced, as those cases are distinguishable. In fact, Estrada explains why the facts before Judge Wolfson in that case and before the Third Circuit in Koronthaly are different from those present here. Judge Wolfson wrote that:

[w]hile Plaintiff places reliance on several cases recognizing standing on a benefit-of-the-bargain theory of economic harm, those cases [*12] are distinguishable from the present matter[, because] . . . in each of those cases, the courts found that the plaintiffs did not receive the benefit of their bargain because either: (i) the plaintiffs received a defective product; or (ii) the plaintiffs pled facts sufficient for the court to conclude that they would not have purchased the product at issue but for a specific misrepresentation by the defendants; i.e., that the plaintiff was induced into purchasing the product by a specific misrepresentation.

Estrada, 2017 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 109455, 2017 WL 2999026, at *9. In both Koronthaly and Estrada, the plaintiffs pled injury-in-fact based on economic harm from an alleged physical injury that came from an undisclosed risk from using a cosmetic product. 374 F. App'x at 259; 2017 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 109455, 2017 WL 2999026, at *9. However, these are cases where "the plaintiffs suffered no ill effects." In re Gerber, 2013 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 121192, 2013 WL 4517994, at *5. That is not the case here, as Plaintiffs have pled facts asserting that they fall into either of the two categories recognizing standing on a benefit of the bargain theory as outlined in Estrada.

In addition, Bosch argues that Plaintiffs have not established an injury-in-fact in their claims against it, because "[Bosch] was not a party to any of Plaintiffs' vehicle-purchase contracts, and no named Plaintiff makes any [*13] allegation that they had any relationship with [Bosch]." (ECF No. 118-1 at 21). Bosch's reliance on the absence of privity of contract is not relevant in this context. In the cases Bosch cites in support of this proposition—Koronthaly, Bowman v. RAM Med., Inc., No. 10-cv-4403, 2012 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 75218, 2012 WL 1964452 (D.N.J. May 31, 2012), and Young v. Johnson & Johnson, No. 11-4580, 2012 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 55192, 2012 WL 1372286 (D.N.J. Apr. 19, 2012)—the lack of the contract alone was not the only reason the plaintiffs failed to establish injury-in-fact. In each case, it was the lack of privity of contract in addition to a failure to allege facts demonstrating that the product failed to work as intended or was worth less than what a reasonable consumer would expect. Koronthaly, 374 F. App'x at 259; Bowman, 2012 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 75218, 2012 WL 1964452, at *3; Young, 2012 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 55192, 2012 WL 1372286, at *4. Judge Chen explained in In re Cluysler-Dodge-Jeep Ecodiesel Marketing, Sales Practices and Products Liability Litigation ("FCA"):

[T]he courts in L'Oreal and Johnson & Johnson never held that a plaintiff must have a contractual relationship with a defendant in order to assert a cognizable overpayment injury. Instead, those courts simply noted that the plaintiffs there had invoked a benefit-of-the-bargain theory of injury, but could not maintain such a theory because they had not entered into contracts with the defendants. Here, Plaintiffs do not allege that they entered into contracts [*14] with the Bosch Defendants, which were then breached. Rather, Plaintiffs assert that the Bosch Defendants played a role in designing, implementing, and concealing software that was used in the Class Vehicles to cheat emissions tests. . . . The benefit-of-the-bargain contract analysis in L'Oreal and Johnson & Johnson is therefore inapplicable.

2. Fairly Traceable

Defendants' traceability arguments also fail. While this Court is very cognizant of its previous Opinion dismissing the CAC on traceability grounds, it now finds that the FAC addresses these concerns, in light of Plaintiffs amendments and a spate of recent decisions in other districts addressing Article III standing in very similar cases which support a finding that Plaintiffs have established Article III standing. Mercedes and Bosch attack the traceability query from different angles, so the Court will address their arguments separately.

i. Mercedes

Mercedes argues that "fifty-four out of the sixty named plaintiffs in the FAC [] still fail to allege facts sufficient to support Article III standing," despite the Court's prior Opinion holding that those same Plaintiffs did not establish reliance on the cited advertisements in their [*15] decision to purchase or lease a Polluting Vehicle. (ECF No. 117-1 at 19-20). Mercedes claims that twenty-four of those plaintiffs reallege the same boilerplate, generalized assertions of deception and reliance that the Court previously rejected. (ECF No. 117-1 at 20-21). Another seventeen Plaintiffs point to advertising from non-party dealerships, while seven Plaintiffs do not allege that the advertisements they saw "contained the alleged misrepresentations." (ECF No. 117-1 at 21-22). Finally, six more Plaintiffs do not allege that they viewed or relied on Mercedes' ads before buying or leasing their vehicle. (ECF No. 117-1 at 23).

Plaintiffs argue that they have cured these defects by retooling their complaint and "focusing on Mercedes' omissions and referencing the 'clean diesel' marketing campaign to demonstrate that those omissions were plausibly material to the targeted consumers." (ECF No. 126 at 28). The Court agrees. Plaintiffs have, for example, alleged that "Mercedes marketed the B1ueTEC-equipped vehicles as environmentally friendly and fuel efficient," that this advertising "[was] widely disseminated throughout the United States," and that Mercedes "h[eld] itself out as a [*16] protector of the environment." (FAC ¶¶ 321-22, 324). At the same time, Plaintiffs allege that "Mercedes intentionally shut[] down or severely limit[ed] the emissions control system when the B1ueTEC vehicles are on the road," and that Mercedes "intentionally concealed" and hid this fact "from the consuming public at the same time that" it "touted the vehicles as 'clean,' earth friendly, and compliant with all the relevant emissions standards." (FAC ¶ 16).

Similar allegations have been found by other courts addressing defeat device-based diesel emissions scandals across the country. In Counts v. General Motors, the plaintiffs also asserted an overpayment theory. 237 F. Supp. 3d 572, 582 \(E.D. Mich. 2017\). The Court explained as follows:

GM promised a clean diesel engine—including at least 90% less nitrogen oxide and particulate emissions—but actually delivered a vehicle that turns off its emissions reduction system when in use. GM charged more for the diesel Chevrolet Cruze model than a comparable gasoline model and Plaintiffs chose the diesel model based at least in part on its 'clean diesel' features. Accordingly, Plaintiffs allege that GM's misrepresentations resulted in their overpaying for a vehicle because the vehicle did [*17] not work in the way GM promised it would.

Id. The Counts Court found that:

[t]his alleged disparity between what the Cruze was represented to be and what it actually is . . . is sufficient to constitute an injury in fact. Even if the Plaintiffs did not specifically rely on the 'clean diesel' advertising in choosing to buy the Cruze, they paid a price, determined the market, which relied upon GM's representation that the vehicle included a fully functional 'clean diesel' system. . . . Plaintiff's overpayment can thus be traced directly to GM's alleged actions.

<sup>3</sup> Bosch also argues that the R320 and GLE types of the Polluting Vehicles should excluded from the claims because, "Plaintiffs have no standing to pursue claims based on Affected Vehicles that they did not purchase or lease." (ECF No. 118-1 at 13-14). This argument is premature at the motion to dismiss stage. Luppino v. Mercedes-Benz USA, LLC, No. 09-5582, 2013 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 161689, 2013 WL 6047556, at \*6 \(D.N.J. Nov. 12, 2013\) (finding that "dismissal of Plaintiffs' claims related to vehicle/wheel/tire combinations Plaintiffs did not purchase would be premature" at the motion to dismiss stage).

In In re Duramax Diesel Litigation, the plaintiffs alleged that GM "represented the Duramax [diesel] engine as providing both low emissions and high performance." 298 F. Supp. 3d 1037, 1046 \(E.D. Mich. 2018\). However, the Duramax plaintiffs alleged that the high power and efficiency of the Duramax engine was obtained only by reducing emissions controls with the aid of a defeat device. Id. at 1047. The Duramax plaintiffs alleged that had they known "of the higher emissions at the time they purchased or leased their Polluting Vehicles, they would not have purchased or leased those vehicles, or would have paid substantially less for the vehicles than they did." *Id. at 1050*. The Duramax Court found [*18] that the injury was "traceable to GM's actions: GM developed the Duramax engine (including the alleged defeat devices), marketed its diesel vehicles as environmentally friendly, and set the MSRP for its diesel vehicles." *Id. at 1052.*

Lastly, in In re Volkswagen "Clean Diesel" Marketing, Sales Practices, and Products Liability Litigation, the Court analyzed whether inflated financing and leasing fees paid by former lessees of the class vehicles were fairly traceable to the conduct of Volkswagen. 349 F. Supp. 3d 881 , 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 171598, 2018 WL 4777134, at \*9 \(N.D. Cal. Oct. 3, 2018\). The plaintiffs in that case alleged that they paid a premium for Volkswagen's TDI "clean diesel" vehicles, which Volkswagen marketed as "being low-emission, environmentally friendly, fuel efficient, and high performing," while concealing "the fact that VW had installed software in these cars that caused their emission controls to perform one way during emissions testing, and another (less effective) way during normal driving conditions." [2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 171598, \[WL\] at \*1](#). The Court found that the increased fees were fairly traceable to Volkswagen's conduct, because the "clean diesel" premium plausibly increased the price of the financed vehicles, which in turn would have led directly to higher financing fees." [2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 171598, \[WL\] at \*9.](#)

The allegations in the three cases [*19] finding Article III standing above are sufficiently similar to those before this Court to support a finding that the alleged injury in fact was fairly traceable to Mercedes' conduct. As to Mercedes' argument that fifty-four of the sixty named plaintiffs fail to establish Article III standing, this argument fails for the same reasons elaborated above. The "boilerplate" allegations that Mercedes' claims are insufficient are quite the opposite. That language is as follows:

Unknown to Plaintiff, at the time the vehicle was purchased, it was equipped with an emissions system that turned off or limited its emissions reduction system during normal driving conditions and emitted pollutants such as NOx at many multiples of emissions emitted from gasoline-powered vehicles, at many times the level a reasonable consumer would expect from a "Clean Diesel", and at many multiples of that allowed by federal law. Mercedes' unfair, unlawful, and deceptive conduct in designing, manufacturing, marketing, selling, and leasing the ML 350 without proper emission controls has caused Plaintiff out-of-pocket loss, future attempted repairs, and diminished value of his vehicle. Mercedes knew about, manipulated, [*20] or recklessly disregarded, the inadequate emission controls during normal driving conditions, but did not disclose such facts or their effects to Plaintiff, so Plaintiff purchased his vehicle on the reasonable, but mistaken, belief that his vehicle was a "clean diesel" as compared to gasoline vehicles, complied with United States emissions standards, and would retain all of its operating characteristics throughout its useful life, including high fuel economy. Plaintiff selected and ultimately purchased his vehicle, in part, because of the BlueTEC Clean Diesel system, as represented through advertisements and representations made by Mercedes. Plaintiff recalls that the advertisements and representations touted the cleanliness of the engine system for the environment and the efficiency and power/performance of the engine system. None of the advertisements reviewed or representations received by Plaintiff contained any disclosure that the Polluting Vehicle had high emissions compared to gasoline vehicles and the fact that Mercedes had designed part of the emissions reduction system to turn off during normal driving conditions. Had Mercedes disclosed this design, and the fact that the [*21] ML 350 actually emitted pollutants at a much higher level than gasoline vehicles do, and at a much higher level than a reasonable consumer would expect, and emitted unlawfully high levels of pollutants, Plaintiff would not have purchased the vehicle, or would have paid less for it.

(FAC ¶ 27). The FAC sets out these same allegations for each named Plaintiff. (FAC ¶¶ 27-87). These allegations mirror those in Counts, Durantax, and Volkswagen, in addition to the other portions of the FAC already outlined above. As such, the Court rejects Mercedes' arguments regarding the deficiencies of the named plaintiffs' claims as to Article III standing.

ii. Bosch

Bosch argues that Plaintiffs' allegations are based on its alleged misconduct with Volkswagen and Fiat-Chrysler, and Bosch's conduct with respect to other auto-makers "cannot serve to establish a causal relationship to Plaintiffs' alleged injuries concerning Mercedes vehicles." (ECF No. 118-1 at 25). Even if those allegations could establish a causal relationship, Bosch argues, Plaintiffs have failed to identify any advertisements, representations, or omissions by Bosch itself, and thus Plaintiffs' injuries are not fairly traceable to Bosch. [*22] (ECF No. 118-1 at 26).

Plaintiffs argue that they have adequately alleged that their injuries are fairly traceable to Bosch's conduct for the same reasons that the injuries are fairly traceable to Mercedes' conduct. (ECF No. 127 at 16). This Court agrees. The FAC is littered with allegations detailing Bosch's active participation in the alleged scheme to market the BlueTEC line of vehicles as "clean diesels" when Bosch knew they were not. For example, Plaintiffs allege that without Bosch's "knowing and active cooperation, Mercedes would not have been able to carry out the 'Clean Diesel' scheme outlined in this complaint," and that Bosch "participated not just in the development of the defeat device, but in the scheme to prevent U.S. regulators from uncovering the device's true functionality." (FAC ¶¶ 20, 106). Bosch also allegedly "marketed 'Clean Diesel' in the United States and lobbied U.S. regulators to approve 'Clean Diesel.'" (FAC ¶ 106).

In FCA, the Northern District of California dealt with facts nearly identical to the case before this court. There, the plaintiffs alleged that they paid more for the EcoDiesel feature, which the defendant falsely advertised as delivering more [*23] power, performance, fuel economy, and environmental friendliness than comparable gasoline vehicles. 295 F. Supp. 3d at 946. Bosch argued similarly that the plaintiffs had "not identified any statement that [Bosch] made to [the plaintiffs] that could support a purportedly inflated price for the Class Vehicles," and that because Bosch was not a party to the contract with Plaintiffs, it could not have deprived them of their benefit of the bargain. Id. at 951. There, as here, the plaintiffs alleged that Bosch "participated in a scheme and conspiracy with [the auto manufacturers] to develop, implement, and conceal software used in the Class Vehicles to cheat emissions tests." Id. The FCA Court found that the hidden software in the EDC17 rendered the affected vehicles defective, and thus less valuable, and that because Bosch "had a hand in developing and implementing this software, their conduct plausibly caused Plaintiffs' economic loss." Id. The FCA Court continued: "to the extent [Bosch] knowingly concealed the software installed in the Class Vehicles from regulators and consumers, Plaintiffs' economic injuries are also fairly traceable to that conduct," because the FCA plaintiffs, like the Plaintiffs here, alleged [*24] that they would not have bought or leased the Polluting Vehicles, or would have paid less to do so had the defeat device been disclosed. Id. at 952. Thus, the FCA court determined that the plaintiffs did not "need to identify a statement on which they relied that was made by [Bosch] to plausibly trace their economic injuries to these entities." Id.

The Duramax Court reached the same conclusion when facing Bosch's arguments regarding traceability. There, the Plaintiffs alleged that Bosch participated in the scheme to develop the defeat device and prevent U.S. regulators from discovering it, in addition to lobbying U.S. regulators to approve "clean diesel." 298 F. Supp. 3d at 1053. Faced with these allegations, Bosch argued that, because it did not manufacture the Duramax engine or market the affected vehicles, "any overpayment by Plaintiffs [was] attributable solely to GM's actions." Id. The Duramax Court reasoned that though "the exact nature of [Bosch's] marketing is unclear, it is plausible that Bosch's efforts contributed to the market demand for 'clean diesel' vehicles, generally, in the United States," and that the premiums Plaintiffs paid for those vehicles "were a natural consequence of that market demand." [*25] Id. "In other words, Plaintiffs overpaid for their vehicles because Bosch worked closely with GM to install working defeat devices in the Duramax vehicles." Id. Thus, the Duramax Plaintiffs adequately alleged that their injury was fairly traceable to Bosch's conduct. Id. at 1054. Both FCA and Duramax lay out factually analogous precedent for finding that Plaintiffs have established Article III standing as to their claims against Bosch, and this Court will apply that precedent here in finding the same.

B. Rico Claims

Plaintiffs have also alleged a RICO claim against defendants. They state:

For many years now, the RICO Defendants have aggressively sought to increase the sales of Polluting Vehicles in an effort to bolster revenue, augment profits and increase Mercedes' share of the diesel vehicle market. Finding it impossible to achieve their goals lawfully, however, the RICO Defendants resorted instead to orchestrating a fraudulent scheme and conspiracy. In particular, the RICO Defendants, along with other entities and individuals, created and/or participated in the affairs of an illegal enterprise ("Emissions Fraud Enterprise") whose direct purpose was to deceive the regulators and the public into [*26] believing the Polluting Vehicles were "clean diesels." As explained in greater detail below, the RICO Defendants' acts in furtherance of the Emissions Fraud Enterprise violate § 1962\(c\) and \(d\).

(FAC ¶ 336).

The *Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act* "makes it unlawful 'for any person employed by or associated with any enterprise engaged in, or the activities of which affect, interstate or foreign commerce, to conduct or participate, directly or indirectly, in the conduct of such enterprise's affairs through a pattern of racketeering activity.'" *In re Ins. Brokerage Antitrust Litig.*, 618 F.3d 300, 362 \(3d Cir. 2010\) (quoting 18 U.S.C. § 1962\(c\)). *Section 1962\(d\)* expands liability under the statute by making it "unlawful for any person to conspire to violate [18 U.S.C. § 1962(c)]". 18 U.S.C. § 1962\(d\). "The RICO statute provides for civil damages for 'any person injured in his business or property by reason of a violation of [\[§ 1962\]](#).'" *Amos v. Franklin Fill. Servs. Corp.*, 509 F. App'x 165, 167 \(3d Cir. 2013\) (quoting *Tabas v. Tabas*, 47 F.3d 1280, 1289 \(3d Cir. 1995\)). A violation of the statute requires:

(1) conduct (2) of an enterprise (3) through a pattern (4) of racketeering activity. The plaintiff must, of course, allege each of these elements to state a claim. Conducting an enterprise that affects interstate commerce is obviously not in itself a violation of § 1962, nor is the mere commission of the predicate offenses. In addition, the plaintiff only has [*27] standing if and can only recover to the extent that, he has been injured in his business or property by the conduct constituting the violation.

Id. (quoting *Sedima S.P.R.L. v. Imrex Co.*, 473 U.S. 479, 496, 105 S. Ct. 3275, 87 L. Ed. 2d 346 \(1985\)).

Defendants argue that Plaintiffs have failed to allege a RICO injury, RICO causation, and a RICO enterprise, and that they have otherwise failed to allege a pattern of racketeering with particularity. (ECF Nos. 117-1 at 25-39; 118-1 at 27-55).

1. RICO Injury

The injury to business or property element of a RICO claim requires "proof of a concrete financial loss and not mere injury to a valuable intangible property interest." *Maio v. Aetna, Inc.*, 221 F.3d 472, 483 \(3d Cir. 2000\) (quoting *Steele v. Hosp. Corp. of Am.*, 36 F.3d 69, 70 \(9th Cir. 1994\)). A complaint therefore must contain allegations "of actual monetary loss, i.e., an out-of-pocket loss" to adequately plead the injury element. Id. Physical or emotional harm to a person is insufficient to show that a person was injured in his business or property under the act. *Magnum v. Archdiocese of Phila.*, 253 F. App'x 224, 227 \(3d Cir. 2007\). "Similarly, losses which flow from personal injuries are not [damage to] property under RICO." Id. (quotations omitted).

Defendants argue that Plaintiffs alleged injuries—diminished value and overpayment—are not cognizable under RICO. Diminished value is not a proper RICO injury, according to Defendants, because Plaintiffs have [*28] not alleged facts showing that the vehicles have a lower resale value, and RICO injury cannot be based on possible future events or factual speculation. (ECF Nos. 117-1 at 26; 118-1 at 31-32). Defendants are correct that RICO does not recognize injuries conditioned on future events or injuries that are impermissibly speculative. Maio, 221 F.3d at 495.

In fact, Plaintiffs fail to address Defendants' contentions that their diminished value claims are not sufficient for RICO purposes. "Where an issue of fact or law is raised in an opening brief, but it is uncontested in the opposition brief, the issue is considered waived or abandoned by the non-movant in regard to the uncontested issue." Markert v. PNC Fin. Servs. Grp., 828 F. Supp. 2d 765, 773 \(E.D. Pa. 2011\). Thus, to the extent Plaintiffs' RICO claims are based on their diminished value theory of injury,<sup>4</sup> Plaintiffs do not have RICO standing. See Duramax, 298 F. Supp. 3d at 1071 (finding that the plaintiffs' diminished value damages—based on a nearly identical paragraph to paragraph 332 of the FAC—"are contingent on future, uncertain developments," and that those "injuries may never occur," "are . . . currently unmeasurable," and "cannot give rise to RICO standing").

Plaintiffs' overpayment theory does not suffer from the same fatal flaws. As described above, [*29] Plaintiffs allege that had Defendants disclosed the existence of the defeat device and the true emissions performance of the Polluting Vehicles, they would not have purchased those vehicles or would have paid substantially less for them. Defendants argue that Plaintiffs' overpayment allegations fail to establish RICO standing because "loss of value" or "benefit of the bargain" damages are typically not available in RICO suits, and because "absent the sale of [a Polluting] Vehicle at a loss, Plaintiffs' overpayment theory is a claim for a speculative, intangible property interest rather than a concrete financial loss." (ECF Nos. 117-1 at 27; 118-1 at 29). The existing diesel emissions litigation decisions squarely reject these arguments and distinguish the cases relied upon by Mercedes and Bosch. Volkswagen, 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 171598, 2018 WL 4777134, at \*13-15, FCA, 295 F. Supp. 3d at 959-61; Duramax, 298 F. Supp. 3d at 1068-73. The Court agrees with those decisions.

Defendants rely heavily on In re Bridgestone/Firestone, Inc. Tires Products Liabilities Litigation, 155 F. Supp. 2d 1069 (S.D. Ind. 2001), In re General Motors LLC Ignition Switch Litigation, Nos. 14-md-2543, 14-mc-2543, 2016 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 92499, 2016 WL 3920353 \(S.D.N.Y. July 15, 2016\), and McLaughlin v. American Tobacco Co., 522 F.3d 215 \(2d Cir. 2008\), in support of their claim that overpayment allegations are insufficient to create RICO standing.

The Bridgestone plaintiffs asserted a RICO claim against Bridgestone/Firestone on the grounds that there was an alleged defect in certain [*30] tires that created a dangerous likelihood of tread separation. 155 F. Supp. 2d at 1077. The plaintiffs based their RICO injury on their need to "bear the financial loss associated with the cost of replacing the Tires and/or the diminished value of their vehicles equipped with the Tires now that the truth regarding their safety and lack of roadworthiness is known." Id. at 1089. Plaintiffs also based RICO injury on the fact that, had they known of the defect, they would not have bought, or would have paid substantially less for the defective tires or the vehicles equipped with them. Id. The Court determined that these injuries were too speculative to sustain a RICO injury as "[t]he actual failure of the Tires . . . is a contingency upon which Plaintiffs' economic damages are dependent." Id. at 1092.

In Ignition Switch, the plaintiffs' RICO claim was premised on GM's manufacture of vehicles with a defective ignition switch. 2016 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 92499, 2016 WL 3920353, at \*1. The plaintiffs' theory of injury was that they would not have purchased those cars, or paid less for them, had they known of the defective ignition switch. [2016 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 92499, \[WL\] at \*7](#). The Court held that this theory did not create RICO standing, because "'loss of value' or 'benefit of the bargain' damages 'are generally unavailable in [*31] RICO suits' and 'plainly' unavailable where (similar to the case here) a RICO claim 'sound[s] in fraud in the inducement.'" [2016 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 92499, \[WL\] at \*16](#) (quoting McLaughlin, 522 F.3d at 228-29).

<sup>4</sup> Plaintiffs diminished value theory is articulated as follows: "Moreover, when and if Mercedes recalls the Polluting Vehicles and degrades the BlueTEC Clean Diesel engine performance and fuel efficiency in order to make the Polluting Vehicles compliant with EPA standards, Plaintiffs and Class members will be required to spend additional sums on fuel and will not obtain the performance characteristics of their vehicles when purchased. Moreover, Polluting Vehicles will necessarily be worth less in the marketplace because of their decrease in performance and efficiency and increased wear on their cars' engines." (FAC ¶ 332).

Finally, McLaughlin concerned a class action based on allegations that the defendants—tobacco companies—fraudulently marketed light cigarettes as healthier alternatives to "full-flavored" cigarettes. 522 F.3d at 220. The plaintiffs' theory of injury in this case was again based on a benefit of the bargain argument: the plaintiffs created a "loss of value" model which measured "the difference between the price plaintiffs paid for light cigarettes as represented by defendants and the (presumably lower) price they would have paid (but for defendants' misrepresentation) had they known the truth." Id. at 228. The Second Circuit held that these expectation-based damages did not suffice to create a RICO injury, because "Defendants' misrepresentation could in no way have reduced the value of the cigarettes that plaintiffs actually purchased, they simply could have induced plaintiffs to buy Lights instead of full-flavored cigarettes." Id. at 229. Additionally, the plaintiffs' theory required the Second Circuit to "conceptualize the impossible—a healthy cigarette—and then to imagine what a consumer [*32] might have paid for such a thing." Id. at 229.

There are critical differences between the theory of injury set forth here by Plaintiffs and the RICO injuries alleged in the three aforementioned cases. First, Plaintiffs allege that they overpaid for the Polluting vehicles at the time of purchase. FAC ¶ 400. All three courts to have dealt with the question of RICO injury in the context of a defeat device-based diesel emissions litigation have concluded that the fact that the injury occurred at the time of purchase constitutes a RICO injury. In Duramax, the Court wrote that such an injury, "clearly suffices to create RICO standing," as the plaintiffs had identified "a specific payment attributable directly to the vehicle component at issue which they opted to purchase on the basis of fraudulent conduct." 298 F. Supp. 3d at 1071-72. In FCA, the Court similarly found that "Plaintiffs' allegations of overpayment easily clear[ed] the threshold" for establishing a concrete RICO injury where "Plaintiffs . . . identified a particular, reasonably narrow range by which they allegedly overpaid for the Class Vehicles." 295 F. Supp. 3d at 962.

While Defendants argue that Duramax and FA are distinguishable because they allege an overpayment of a specific amount, [*33] (ECF Nos. 134-35,143-44), that is not the hill upon which RICO injury dies. In Volkswagen, Plaintiffs adequately alleged a RICO injury where they contended that "they each paid a premium for something that they did not receive—a vehicle with low emissions." 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 171598, 201x8 WL 4777134, at \*14. This injury was sufficiently concrete and tangible, despite the fact that these plaintiffs did not identify the specific amount of damage. Id. In fact, the FGA Court acknowledged the same. 295 F. Supp. 3d at 962 (noting that the threshold for RICO injury does not require a particular dollar amount); see also In re Avandia Mktg., Sales Practices & Prods. Liab. Litig., 804 F.3d 633,639-640 \(3d Cir. 2015\) (finding plaintiffs adequately alleged RICO injury based on allegations that they overpaid—absent a specific dollar amount—for a drug due to the inflationary effect that a drug manufacturer's illegal or deceptive marketing practices had on the drug); In re Aetna UCR Litig., MDL No. 2020, Civ. No. 07-3541, 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 84600, 2015 WL 3970168, at \*10 \(D.N.J. June 30,2015\) (finding plaintiffs adequately alleged RICO injury where plaintiffs claimed they suffered "out-of-pocket losses in the form of higher co-payments" and "overpaid for their health insurance plans"). What is important, and what is alleged here, is that the overpayment occurred at the time of purchase, rather than being "contingent on a future occurrence or on the vagaries of the free market." Duramax, 298 F. Supp. 3d at 1072.

Additionally, [*34] "courts have recognized expectation damages under RICO . . . where an agreement between the parties provided for a certain performance guarantee that the defendant had no intention of keeping." Ignition Switch, 2016 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 92499, 2016 WL 3920353, at \*17 (collecting cases). Here, as in Volkswagen, FCA, and Duramax, Plaintiffs allege that Defendants participated in a scheme to place a defeat device in the Polluting Vehicles, rendering them defective from the moment they were manufactured. Because Defendants allegedly knew of—and orchestrated the creation of—that defect, they had no intention of delivering vehicles with heightened fuel efficiency and environmental friendliness. See Duramax, 298 F. Supp. 3d at 1072 ("But, here, GM allegedly sold Duramax vehicles, for a premium, which did not perform as a reasonable consumer would expect. In other words, Defendants had no intention of delivering the emissions performance which consumers expected.").

Finally, to the extent there remains a question whether Plaintiffs' overpayment theory constitutes an injury to business or property for the purposes of RICO, Supreme Court precedent indicates that it does. Reiter v. Sonotone Corporation is an antitrust case in which the Supreme Court interpreted Section 4 of the Clayton Act, which allows any [*35] person injured "in his business or property" by the violation of an antitrust law to sue under that statute.

442 U.S. 330, 337, 99 S. Ct. 2326, 60 L. Ed. 2d 931 (1979) (quoting 15 U.S.C. § 15). The Supreme Court concluded that when "a consumer . . . acquir[es] goods or services for personal use, [she] is injured in 'property' when the price of those goods or services is artificially inflated by reason of the anticompetitive conduct complained of." Id. at 339. The Third Circuit has referenced the Supreme Court's rationale in Reiter when analyzing a RICO claim as support for the conclusion that monetary loss suffices to constitute a RICO injury. Maio, 221 F.3d at 483-84 (3d Cir. 2000). Thus, Reiter would indicate that Plaintiffs' allegations that they overpaid for the Polluting Vehicles as a result of Defendants' deceptive conduct constitute injuries to property. See Volkswagen, 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 171598, 2018 WL 4777134, at *14 (interpreting Reiter the same way); FCA, 295 F. Supp. 3d at 959 (same); Duramax, 298 F. Supp. 3d at 1067-68, 1072-73 (same).

2. RICO Causation

A civil RICO plaintiff is required "to show that a RICO predicate offense 'not only was a "but for" cause of his injury, but the proximate cause as well.'" Hemi Grp., LLC v. City of N.Y., 559 U.S. 1, 9, 130 S. Ct. 983, 175 L. Ed. 2d 943 (2010) (quoting Holmes v. Sec. Inv'r Prot. Corp., 503 U.S. 258, 268, 112 S. Ct. 1311, 117 L. Ed. 2d 532 (2010)). The "central question" is "whether the alleged violation led directly to the plaintiff's injuries." Anza v. Ideal Steel Supply Corp., 547 U.S. 451, 461, 126 S. Ct. 1991, 164 L. Ed. 2d 720 (2006). Mercedes argues that Plaintiffs' "entire theory of RICO conduct relies on the claim that" the defendants [*36] perpetrated a fraud against United States government regulators, and thus Plaintiffs have failed to allege that they were injured by the enterprise's conduct. (ECF No. 117-1 at 28). Even if Plaintiffs do allege that they were directly deceived by the enterprise, Mercedes argues that Plaintiffs' RICO allegations should be dismissed because they "are based on the same generalized advertising scheme that the Court previously found insufficient to satisfy the 'fairly traceable' requirement of Article III standing." (ECF No. 117-1 at 29). Bosch separately argues that Plaintiffs have not established either proximate or "but for" cause, because they have failed "to allege (1) reliance upon any actionable misstatement or omission, or (2) a direct relationship between Bosch LLC's purported conduct and their alleged injuries." (ECF No. 118-1 at 33).

i. Mercedes

Mercedes makes the argument that Plaintiffs fail to establish RICO causation for the same reasons that they failed to establish traceability for the purposes of Article III standing. (ECF No. 117-1 at 29). As this Court has already determined that Plaintiffs have adequately alleged that Plaintiffs' injuries were fairly traceable to Mercedes' [*37] conduct, it need to not rehash that analysis here, as Mercedes has not set forth any new arguments to the contrary.

Alternatively, Mercedes argues that, because Plaintiffs' RICO claim centers around a fraud-on-the-regulators theory, Plaintiffs have failed to meet RICO's proximate cause requirement. (ECF No. 117-1 at 30). The reasoning goes: because the purpose of the alleged enterprise was to deceive regulators (rather than promulgate advertisements), Plaintiffs' overpayment as a result of the advertisements touting the emissions bona fides of the Polluting Vehicles is in no way connected to the fraud on the regulators. (ECF No. 117-1 at 30-31).

Mercedes relies on Anza as support for its claim that Plaintiffs' RICO allegations do not satisfy the proximate cause requirement. In Anza, the plaintiff sued its primary competitor under the RICO statute, alleging that the competitor reduced its prices without harming its bottom line by "failing to charge the requisite New York sales tax to cash-paying customers." 547 U.S. at 453-54. The Supreme Court found that this theory of injury did not satisfy RICO's proximate cause requirement, because "[i]t was the State that was being defrauded and the State that lost [*38] tax revenue as a result." Id. at 458. The Court also observed that the cause of Plaintiff's injury—lower prices—was "entirely distinct" from the alleged RICO violation—the defrauding of the state—and that the plaintiff's lost sales could have resulted from any number of alternative factors. Id. at 458-59.

The facts in Anza are distinct from what Plaintiff's allege here. Plaintiff's specifically allege that Mercedes defrauded its customers when it failed to disclose the existence of the defeat device, and that this deception caused Plaintiffs' injuries. (FAC ¶¶ 313-15). Furthermore, while Plaintiffs allege that Defendants deceived regulators, those regulators are not alleged to have been harmed by that deception like the State of New York was in Anza. FCA, 295 F. Supp.

3d at 966. Plaintiffs argue that the deception of the regulators inevitably led to their injuries, because "but for [that] deception about compliance, it would not have been able to sell the Polluting Vehicles." (ECF No. 126 at 36-37). These allegations are sufficient to establish RICO causation. FCA, 295 F. Supp. 3d at 967 ("By deceiving regulators, Defendants were able to sell Class Vehicles that emitted NOx at levels up to 20 times legal limits and that contained one or more defeat devices . . . , [*39] [which] plausibly caused Plaintiffs to overpay for the defective Class Vehicles by an amount directly attributable to the alleged wrongful conduct of the Defendants."); see also Volkswagen, 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 171598, 2018 WL 4777134, at *15 ("[T]he regulators were more like gatekeepers than victims of the fraud: they did not lose money from the fraud like consumers did. Also, Plaintiffs base their RICO claims at least in part on allegations that VW (on behalf of the enterprise) directly deceived consumers into believing that the class vehicles were 'clean' and 'environmentally friendly,' when they were not. To prevail on this theory, Plaintiffs would not even need to prove that VW first defrauded EPA and CARB; they would only need to demonstrate that VW defrauded them about certain vehicle attributes.") (citations omitted).

ii. Bosch

Bosch first argues that the misstatements Plaintiffs allegedly relied on are either non-actionable puffery, assert compliance with U.S. emissions standards, or made by Mercedes, breaking "any causative link to Bosch."<sup>5</sup> (ECF No. 118-1 at 33-34). Secondly, Bosch argues that Plaintiffs fail to establish "any direct relationship between [Bosch's] alleged conduct and their alleged injuries." (ECF No. 118-1 at 35). These [*40] arguments have all been rejected in Duramax, FCA, and Volkswagen, and this Court agrees with those prior decisions.

In Duramax, Bosch argued that "to the extent Plaintiffs claim that their injury resulted from their reliance on purportedly false ads by GM, that itself breaks any causal link to the Bosch Defendants." 298 F. Supp. 3d at 1075. The Duramax Court deemed that argument "clearly inconsistent" with Supreme Court precedent, pointing to the Supreme Court's decision in Bridge v. Phoenix Bond & Indemnification Co., 553 U.S. 639, 128 S. Ct. 2131, 170 L. Ed. 2d 1012 (2008). Id. Duramax explained that Bridge held that reliance is not a requirement of a RICO cause of action and explicitly rejected the notion that "a plaintiff who brings [a RICO claim predicated on mail fraud] must show that it relied on the defendant's misrepresentations in order to establish the requisite element of causation." Id. at 1076 (quoting Bridge, 553 U.S. at 653). In fact, Bridge stands for the proposition that a plaintiff has identified a "a sufficiently direct relationship between the defendant's wrongful conduct and the plaintiff's injury" where "[i]t was a foreseeable and natural consequence of [the defendant's] scheme." Bridge, 553 U.S. at 657-58. The Duramax Court, applying this standard, then found that the plaintiffs' allegations established but-for and proximate cause. 298 F. Supp. 3d at 1076-77 ("According [*41] to Plaintiffs, Bosch 'exerts near-total control' over the customization of EDC17, eliminating the possibility that GM programmed the functionality which enables use of defeat devices without Bosch's knowledge.").

Here, Plaintiffs make nearly identical allegations: "All Bosch ECUs, including the EDC17, run on complex, highly proprietary engine management software over which Bosch GmbH exerts near-total control. In fact, the software is typically locked to prevent customers, like Mercedes, from making significant changes on their own. Accordingly, both the design and implementation are interactive processes, requiring Bosch's close collaboration with the automaker from beginning to end." (FAC ¶ 270). Thus, Plaintiffs have established a sufficiently direct relationship between Bosch and the alleged RICO injury for purposes of RICO causation. See Volkswagen, 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 171598, 2018 WL 4777134, at *15-17 (rejecting Bosch's argument that the actions of the car manufacturer break the causal link in the chain, and thus, that there is not a sufficiently direct relationship between Bosch and the plaintiff's RICO injury); FCA, 295 F. Supp. 3d at 967-68 (same).

3. The Merits of the RICO Claim

i. Impermissible Group Pleading

<sup>5</sup> The actionability of the misstatements as puffery are addressed infra Section III.B.3.iv. To the extent Bosch claims that Plaintiffs are trying to enforce compliance with emissions standards, that argument is addressed by Parts III.B.2.i and III.C.

Bosch contends that Plaintiffs "make impermissible group pleadings [*42] against 'RICO Defendants' and varying definitions of 'Bosch.'" (ECF No. 118-1 at 38). Bosch argues that this "blurs the conduct of the various defendants and does not put each defendant on notice of its precise conduct," and thus fails to satisfy the pleading requirements of Rule 9\(b\). (ECF No. 118-1 at 38-39). Rule 9\(b\) requires that Plaintiffs "state the circumstances of the alleged fraud with sufficient particularity to place the defendant on notice of the 'precise misconduct with which [it is] charged.' Frederico v. Home Depot, 507 F.3d 188, 200 (3d Cir. 2007) (quoting 1,111,711 '1'. Bank of Am., 361 F.3d 217, 223 (3d Cir. 2004)). However, Rule 9\(b\) does not require that a plaintiff plead with specificity "which fraudulent acts were caused or performed by which individual defendants." In re Midlantic Corp. Shareholder Litig., 758 F. Supp. 226, 233 (D.N.J. 1990).

Bosch made similar, unsuccessful arguments in both FA and Duramax. See FCA, 295 F. Supp. 3d at 976-77 (rejecting Bosch's arguments that the plaintiffs "improperly 'lumped' the Bosch entities together" for the purposes of Rule 9\(b\), because the structure of the Bosch entities was such that there were employees "at both entities [who] work together on certain projects, including the EDC17 project"); Duramax, 298 F. Supp. 3d at 1056 ("Given Plaintiffs' allegation that Bosch employees and constituent entities often blur the legal boundaries between Bosch subsidiaries, the allegations against the [*43] Bosch Defendants are sufficiently specific."). Here, Plaintiffs plead allegations similar to those that were found sufficient in FA and Duramax: Bosch GmbH and Bosch LLC "operate under the umbrella of the Bosch Group," individuals from both Bosch GmbH and Bosch LLC worked in divisions relevant to the creation and design of the EDC17, and Bosch itself does not distinguish between its own legal entities when describing its business. (FAC ¶¶ 109,111-12). The FAC sufficiently puts Bosch on notice of the claims made against it.

ii. RICO Enterprise

To allege an association-in-fact enterprise, which Plaintiffs purport to do here, they must plead a "purpose, relationships among those associated with the enterprise, and longevity sufficient to permit these associates to pursue the enterprise's purpose." In re Ins. Brokerage, 618 F.3d at 366 (quoting Boyle v. United States, 556 U.S. 938, 946, 129 S. Ct. 2237, 173 L. Ed. 2d 1265 (2009)). Defendants argue that Plaintiffs have not alleged a sufficient purpose or relationship between Defendants to constitute an association-in-fact enterprise. (ECF Nos. 117-1 at 31-35; 118-1 at 40-43).

An association-in-fact enterprise "need have no formal hierarchy or means for decision-making, and no purpose or economic significance beyond or independent from the group's pattern of racketeering [*44] activity." In re Aetna UCR Litig., 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 84600, 2015 WL 3970168, at *27 (quoting In re Ins. Brokerage, 618 F.3d at 366). Plaintiffs allege that the purpose of Defendants' enterprise was to "deceive the regulators and the public into believing the Polluting Vehicles were 'clean diesels.'" (FAC ¶ 356). Defendants worked together to design, manufacture, distribute, test, and sell the Polluting Vehicles, while implanting the EDC17, falsifying emissions tests, and distributing deceptive marketing materials. (FAC ¶¶ 360-67). Plaintiffs allege that Defendants profited from this enterprise due to the increased number of vehicles sold as a result of the fraudulently obtained Certificates of Compliance ("COCs") and Executive Orders ("EOs"), as well as through misleading advertising. (FAC ¶ 367). These allegations sufficiently allege a purpose of the enterprise. See In re Ins. Brokerage Antitrust Litig. ("In re Ins. Brokerage II"), MDL No. 1663, No. 04-5184, 2017 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 136684, 2017 WL 3642003, at *10 (D.N.J. Aug. 23, 2017) (finding that plaintiffs properly pleaded a purpose for the enterprise where they alleged that certain agreements existed "to facilitate the sale of insurance, in particular, the sale of insurance at supra-competitive rates to compensate both brokers and syndicates above what a competitive market would dictate"); In re Aetna UCR Litig., 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 84600, 2015 WL 3970168, at *27 (finding that plaintiffs properly alleged a purpose [*45] for the enterprise where the plaintiffs alleged a dual purpose: "(1) 'to create a mechanism through which Aetna, UHG and the Insurer Conspirators could under-reimburse subscribers . . . for Nonpar services through use of flawed and invalid data' and (2) to increase insurer profits by deceptively underpaying ONET benefits to their policy holders") (citation omitted); see also Duramax, 298 F. Supp. 3d at 1066, 1078-79 (finding a properly plead common purpose based on nearly identical allegations to those in this case, including that the purpose of the enterprise was "to deceive the regulators and the public into believing the Polluting Vehicles were 'clean' and 'environmentally friendly,'" and that GM and Bosch "associated for the common purpose of designing, manufacturing, distributing, testing, and selling the Polluting Vehicles through fraudulent COCs. . . and EO<sub>s</sub> . . . , false emissions tests, deceptive and misleading marketing and materials, and deriving profits and revenues from those activities").

With respect to the relationships of those associated with the enterprise, Mercedes argues that Plaintiff's FAC is deficient in that nearly all of the allegations "address Bosch's relationships with other vehicle manufacturers, [*46] namely Volkswagen and FCA." (ECF No. 117-1 at 32). Bosch, meanwhile, contends that Plaintiffs have done no more than "list the purported RICO participants," and have provided no allegations "plausibly implying the existence of an enterprise' separate from the legal entities." (ECF No. 118-1 at 42 (citations omitted)). Both Defendants allege that Plaintiffs plead nothing more than an ordinary business relationship. (ECF No. 117-1 at 34-35; ECF No. 118-1 at 42-43).

It is true that ordinary business relationships are not sufficient to impose RICO liability. Duramax, 298 F. Supp. 3d at 1080 (describing a "widespread consensus" to this effect). However, both Duramax and FCA addressed similar arguments and concluded that similar pleadings sufficiently alleged the existence of the kind of relationships necessary to establish an association-in-fact. The Duramax Court rejected GM and Bosch's argument that "any alleged relationship between them [was] simply a routine business relationship." 298 F. Supp. 3d at 1079. There, the plaintiffs alleged that defendants "associated for the common purpose of designing, manufacturing, distributing, testing, and selling the Polluting Vehicles through fraudulent COCs and EO<sub>s</sub>, false emissions tests, and deceptive [*47] and misleading marketing and materials, and deriving profits and revenues from those activities." Id. at 1080. The Court held that such allegations established a business relationship that was "far from 'routine,'" and was instead a course of conduct that was "inherently deceptive[, because] Bosch and GM collaborated to create an engine which performed one way when being tested for emissions and another way when in normal use." Id.

The Court in FCA came to the same conclusion. FCA reasoned that the EDC17 "had only a deceitful purpose—to cheat emissions tests," and that the plaintiffs' "allegations plausibly support[ed] that each Defendant participated in developing or implementing the [defeat devices]." 295 F. Supp. 3d at 981. The FCA court came to this conclusion based on allegations that set forth "that the Bosch Defendants' software documentation describes parameters and functions that correlate with many of the hidden [defeat devices]," and that "the FCA Defendants initiated and oversaw development of the EcoDiesel engine and activated the [defeat devices] in the Class Vehicles." 295 F. Supp. 3d at 981-82. Such allegations went "beyond connecting Defendants to each other by way of normal commercial dealings." Id. at 982. Plaintiffs here have laid [*48] out many of the same allegations in the FAC, alleging, for example, that Bosch "continuously cooperated with Mercedes to ensure that the EDC Unit 17 was fully integrated into the Polluting Vehicles," and that it concealed "the defeat devices on U.S. documentation and in communications with U.S. regulators." (FAC ¶ 374). The EDC17 was "customized . . . for installation in the Polluting Vehicles with unique software code to detect when it was undergoing emissions testing." (FAC ¶ 360). Such allegations are sufficient to show a relationship between Defendants beyond a normal business relationship.

iii. Directing the Conduct of the RICO Enterprise

As part of their RICO claim, Plaintiffs must also allege that Defendants "conducted or participated in the conduct of the 'enterprise's affairs,' not just their own affairs." Reves v. Ernst & Young, 507 U.S. 170, 185, 113 S. Ct. 1163, 122 L. Ed. 2d 525 (1993). "The word 'participate' makes clear that RICO liability is not limited to those with primary responsibility for the enterprise's affairs, just as the phrase 'directly or indirectly' makes clear that RICO liability is not limited to those with a formal position in the enterprise, but some part in directing the enterprise's affairs is required." Id. at 179. Defendants again argue that [*49] Plaintiffs have failed to assert anything more than legal conclusions as to their participation in the enterprise, and that any facts alleged show merely an ordinary business relationship. (ECF No. 117-1 at 35-37; ECF No. 118-1 at 43-47).

On top of Plaintiffs' allegations mentioned supra in Section III.B.3.ii, Plaintiffs have sufficiently alleged the participation of Mercedes and Bosch in the enterprise. They set forth that the EDC17 contains a "unique set of specifications and software code" made for the Polluting vehicles, that the implementation of those EDC17s into the Polluting Vehicles required Mercedes and Bosch to collaborate closely, and that Defendants knowingly and actively intended the EDC17 to function as a defeat device to evade United States emissions requirements. (FAC ¶¶ 13, 104, 108, 268, 270, 360, 374). Plaintiffs then allege that Defendants concealed the existence of the defeat device and lied to U.S. regulators. (FAC ¶¶ 125, 273-74, 374). Very similar allegations based on very similar facts have been found to satisfy this pleading element of a RICO claim in other diesel emissions litigations. See 295 F. Supp. 3d at 983 (finding that the plaintiffs adequately alleged FCA, participation in [*50] the enterprise where the FCA Defendants "conspired to install and conceal emission control software in the EcoDiesel® engines to illegally circumvent stringent U.S. emission standards" and oversaw the development of those engines, while Bosch's argument "that they were simply performing services for the enterprise," was "not sustainable at the pleading stage" "given the level of control they are alleged to have maintained over the emissions software in the Class Vehicles"); Duramax, 298 F. Supp. 3d at 1086-87 (holding that Bosch's argument that it simply "worked together with GM to design and implement software and . . . participated in promoting clean diesel technology generally" was a similarly faulty "repackaging of [its] previous argument that . . . the relationship between the Defendants was merely a routine business relationship," where the plaintiffs alleged "that Bosch was an integral part of the operation of the enterprise because Bosch 'locked out' EDC17 . . . [and] worked closely with its customers to customize EDC17," which performed "an inherently deceptive function," and thus Bosch's responsibility for programming the operation of the EDC17 was at the "heart of the fraudulent enterprise").

iv. Pattern of [*51] Racketeering Activity

A pattern of racketeering activity "requires at least two acts of racketeering activity, one of which occurred after the effective date of this chapter and the last of which occurred within ten years. . . after the commission of a prior act of racketeering activity." 18 U.S.C. § 1961\(5\). "These predicate acts of racketeering may include, inter alia, federal mail fraud under 18 U.S.C. § 1341 or federal wire fraud under 18 U.S.C. § 1343." In re Ins. Brokerage, 618 F.3d at 363 (quoting Lum, 361 F.3d at 223). Here, Plaintiffs allege precisely these two predicate acts. In order to plead mail or wire fraud, Plaintiffs must describe "(1) the existence of a scheme to defraud; (2) the use of the mails [or wires] . . . in furtherance of the fraudulent scheme; and (3) culpable participation by the defendant, that is, participation by the defendant with specific intent to defraud." United States v. Dobson, 419 F.3d 231, 237 \(3d Cir. 2005\). These allegations must satisfy the pleading standards of Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 9\(b\). In re Ins. Brokerage II, 2017 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 136684, 2017 WL 3642003, at \*6.

Mercedes argues that Plaintiffs have failed to plead a pattern of racketeering activity for two reasons: First, they have failed to satisfy Rule 9\(b\), because they "allege only nondescript acts by unidentified parties at unspecified times, and second, Plaintiffs "have not pled any facts demonstrating how the applications [for certification [*52] to the EPA] further the purposes of the alleged" enterprise. (ECF No. 117-1 at 38-39). Bosch additionally argues that Plaintiffs have failed to plead a claim of mail or wire fraud against it with the particularity required by Rule 9\(b\), as they have failed to allege a scheme to defraud, any participation by Bosch in that scheme, facts showing that Bosch should be held vicariously liable for Mercedes' alleged acts of mail and wire fraud, or a specific intent to defraud. (ECF No. 118-1 at 49-55).

Plaintiffs have sufficiently plead a pattern of racketeering activity with respect to Defendants. First, the allegations discussed at length in Parts III.B.3.ii and iii clearly allege the existence of scheme to defraud. Importantly, as noted in this Opinion's standing analysis, Plaintiffs pin Defendants' alleged liability on omissions rather than affirmative misrepresentations. Reliance on omissions on their own is sufficient to plead the predicate acts of mail and wire fraud. Kehr Packages, Inc. v. Fidelcor, Inc., 926 F.2d 1406, 1415 \(3d Cir. 1991\) ("Under the mail fraud statute, a scheme or artifice to defraud 'need not be fraudulent on its face, but must involve some sort of fraudulent misrepresentations or omissions reasonably calculated to deceive persons of ordinary [*53] prudence and comprehension . . . [and] [t]he scheme need not involve affirmative misrepresentation.") (quoting United States v. Pearlstein, 576 F.2d 531, 535 \(3d Cir. 1978\); Livingston v. Shore Shiny Seal, Inc., 98 F. Supp. 2d 594, 597 \(D.N.J. 2000\) (quoting the same language from Kehr Packages). As laid out in Duramax:

allegations of omissions—as opposed to affirmative misrepresentations—will inevitably be less specific. Misrepresentations occur at a definite point in time, but omissions occur over periods of time. And, because misrepresentations involve action while omissions involve inaction, plaintiffs are less likely to uncover discrete evidence of omissions. It must be remembered that the essential purpose of Rule 9\(b\) is to provide the defendants with adequate notice of the allegations so that they can defend against the claims.

298 F. Supp. 3d at 1083 (citations omitted); see also Christidis V. First Pa. Mortg. Tr., 717 F.2d 96, 99-100 \(3d Cir. 1983\) ("In applying the first sentence of Rule 9\(b\) courts must be sensitive to the fact that its application, prior to discovery, may permit sophisticated defrauders to successfully conceal the details of their fraud. Moreover, in applying the rule, focusing exclusively on its 'particularity' language 'is too narrow an approach and fails to take account of the general simplicity and flexibility contemplated by the rules.'") (quoting 5 C. Wright & A. Miller, Federal Practice and [<sup>54</sup>] Procedure § 1298, at 407 (1969)). As such, "plaintiffs pleading a fraud by omission claim are not required to plead fraud as precisely as they would for a false representation claim." Feldman v. Mercedes Benz USA, No. 11-984, 2012 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 178924, 2012 WL 6596830, at \*10 \(D.N.J. Dec. 18, 2012\).

To adequately plead the use of the mails and wires in furtherance of the scheme, Plaintiffs need not allege that each Defendant personally mailed or wired the allegedly fraudulent communications, only that the mailing or wiring of that communication was foreseeable to Defendants. United States v. Tiller, 302 F.3d 98, 101 \(3d Cir. 2002\). Furthermore, "the gravamen of the offense is the scheme to defraud, and any 'mailing that is incident to an essential part of the scheme satisfies the mailing element,' even if the mailing itself 'contain[s] no false information.'" Bridge, 553 U.S. at 647 (quoting Schmuck v. United States, 489 U.S. 705, 712, 715, 109 S. Ct. 1443, 103 L. Ed. 2d 734 \(1989\)). Plaintiffs allege several uses of the mails and wires in furtherance of the scheme, such as numerous, specific applications for certification of various Polluting Vehicles to the EPA, (FAC ¶ 384), as well as advertisements touting the low emissions and environmental friendliness of the BlueTEC engine, (see, e.g., FAC ¶¶ 32, 33, 36, 321, 323, 325).

These allegations are sufficient to establish the use of the mails and wires in furtherance of the scheme. The applications submitted to the EPA

[<sup>55</sup>] affirmed that the vehicles complied with emission standards. Without those mailings and electronic communications, [Mercedes] would have been unable to sell the vehicles. The applications and resulting certificates also increased the likelihood that consumers would perceive the [BlueTEC] vehicles as emitting pollution at a low level. And although Bosch may not have directly used the mail or wire to further the fraudulent scheme, [Mercedes'] uses of the mail and wire were inevitable and thus reasonably foreseeable.

Duramax, 298 F. Supp. 3d at 1084,<sup>6</sup> see also FCA, 295 F. Supp. 3d at 979 (applying the same standard to similar facts and coming to the same conclusion). As to the advertisements identified by Plaintiffs, if they were relying on these advertisements as the basis for [their] claim of fraud, then Defendants' arguments regarding puffery and duty to disclose would become relevant. However, these representations do not constitute the fraudulent scheme; they merely further it. The level of emissions produced by a diesel engine was a material consideration for consumers purchasing a vehicle. [Mercedes'] extensive advertising which emphasized the low emissions and environmentally-friendly nature of its "clean diesel" engine underscores its understanding [<sup>56</sup>] of that fact. Thus, regardless of whether these advertisements would be actionable on their own, they were material to the scheme.

Duramax, 298 F. Supp. 3d at 1084.

Finally, with respect to Defendants' culpable participation in the scheme, Plaintiffs need only allege intent generally. Fed. R. Civ. P. 9\(b\); In re Ins. Brokerage II, 2017 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 136684, 2017 WL 3642003, at \*9. Defendants' intent to defraud can be inferred from the scheme alone. United States v. Chartock 283 F. App'x 948, 954-55 \(3d

<sup>6</sup> Duramax also explicitly rejects "Bosch's repeated argument that Plaintiffs must specifically allege that Bosch used the mail or wire to defraud," as "simply, wrong," and notes that even though the plaintiffs had not "specifically alleged the date of the applications or the specific identity of the employee who prepared them," the plaintiffs had "alleged enough detail to put Defendants on notice of the alleged predicate acts." Id.

Cir. 2008); United States v. Pearlstein, 576 F.2d 531, 541 (3d Cir. 1978); see also FCA, 295 F. Supp. 3d at 977 ("Because the AECDs themselves plausibly have a deceitful purpose, allegations supporting that each Defendant knew about yet concealed the AECDs also support a plausible claim that each Defendant intended to defraud."); Duramax, 298 F. Supp. 3d at 1083 ("[I]ntent can be inferred from the nature of the alleged conduct. The way in which EDC17 interacted with the Duramax engine is inherently deceptive. The alleged purpose of the device is to provide the perception of reduced emissions while avoiding the reality of reduced emissions. Defendants cannot reasonably argue that the deceptive nature of EDC17 was unanticipated or unintended, and even if they do, that argument could be resolved only by a jury."); *In re Volkswagen "Clean Diesel" Mktg., Sales Practices, and Prods. Liab. Litig., MDL No. 2672, 2017 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 179652, 2017 WL 4890594, at *15 (N.D. Cal. Oct. 30, 2017)* ("Bosch's intent to defraud reasonably [could] be inferred from the scheme itself," as no party had "sought to justify, or explain a lawful [*57] purpose for, software that effectively turns a vehicle's emission systems on or off depending on whether the vehicle is undergoing emissions testing or being operated under normal driving conditions."). Thus, Plaintiffs have adequately alleged Defendants' intent to defraud and have adequately established a pattern of racketeering activity based on the predicate acts of mail and wire fraud.

v. RICO Conspiracy

Bosch argues that Plaintiffs failed to adequately plead a RICO conspiracy because they failed to plead a substantive RICO violation. As Plaintiffs have adequately plead their substantive RICO claim and that Bosch had knowledge of the racketeering activity, they have adequately plead a RICO conspiracy.

C. Preemption

Defendants contend that Plaintiffs' state-law claims are preempted by the Clean Air Act ("CAA"). (ECF No. 117-1 at 39; ECF No. 118-1 at 55). This argument has been discussed thoroughly and rejected several times over by courts dealing with diesel emissions litigations. *Volkswagen, 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 171598, 2018 WL 4777134, at *18-23; FCA, 295 F. Supp. 3d at 990-1003; Duramax, 298 F. Supp. 3d at 1057-65; Counts, 237 F. Supp. 3d at 588-92*. For the same reasons, this Court also rejects Defendants' preemption arguments.

"Federal law can preempt state law in three ways: (1) express preemption, (2) field preemption, and (3) conflict preemption." [*58] Farina v. Nokia, 625 F.3d 97, 115 (3d Cir. 2010).

Express preemption applies where Congress, through a statute's express language, declares its intent to displace state law. Field preemption applies where "the federal interest is so dominant that the federal system will be assumed to preclude enforcement of state laws on the same subject." Conflict preemption nullifies state law inasmuch as it conflicts with federal law, either where compliance with both laws is impossible or where state law erects an "obstacle to the accomplishment and execution of the full purposes and objectives of Congress."

Id. (quoting Hillsborough Cty. v. Automated Med. Labs., Inc., 471 U.S. 707, 713, 105 S. Ct. 2371, 85 L. Ed. 2d 714 (1985)). Both Defendants argue that Plaintiffs state-law claims are expressly preempted by the CAA, while Mercedes advances an additional implied preemption argument.

1. Express Preemption

Section 209 of the Clean Air Act reads:

No State or any political subdivision thereof shall adopt or attempt to enforce any standard relating to the control of emissions from new motor vehicles or new motor vehicle engines subject to this part. No State shall require certification, inspection, or any other approval relating to the control of emissions from any new motor vehicle or new motor vehicle engine as condition precedent to the initial retail sale, titling [*59] (if any), or registration of such motor vehicle, motor vehicle engine, or equipment.

42 U.S.C. § 7543(a). Defendants are correct that the CAA contains an express preemption clause. See In re Caterpillar, Inc. C13 and CIS Engine Prods. Liab. Litig., 14-3722, 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 98784, 2015 WL 4591236, at *10 (D.N.J. July 29, 2015) ("The CAA's express preemption provision is specific and unambiguous.").

Defendants argue that Plaintiffs' state-law claims fall squarely within that preemption provision because they relate to the Polluting Vehicles' compliance with emissions standards and are an attempt to enforce federal regulatory standards under state law. (ECF No. 117-1 at 41-42; ECF No. 118-1 at 56-57). Plaintiffs' state-law claims do not fall under the express preemptive scope of the CAA for several reasons. First, while Plaintiffs do reference violations of federal emissions standards those violations are not an essential element of their state-law claims. To prove their state-law claims, Plaintiffs must show that Defendants lied to or deceived them, not that Defendants violated federal emissions standards. The proof in which Plaintiffs must ground their claims pulls those claims outside the scope of the express preemption of the CAA. Volkswagen, 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 171598, 2018 WL 4777134, at *19; FCA, 295 F. Supp. 3d at 993-94; Duramax, 298 F. Supp. 3d at 1061; Counts, 237 F. Supp. 3d at 591-92. Second, Plaintiffs could prove [*60] that Mercedes lied about claims concerning its BlueTec engines, such as that it was "the world's cleanest and most advanced diesel" with "ultra-low emissions, high fuel economy and responsive performance," (FAC ¶ 11), without having to prove that emissions exceeded EPA-established limitations or that Defendants installed a defeat-device prohibited by the EPA. Volkswagen, 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 171598, 2018 WL 4777134, at *20; FCA, 295 F. Supp. 3d at 993-94; Duramax, 298 F. Supp. 3d at 1061-62; Counts, 237 F. Supp. 3d at 591-92. Thus, Plaintiffs' state-law claims are not expressly preempted by the CAA.<sup>7</sup>

2. Implied Preemption

Mercedes argues that even if Plaintiffs' claims are not expressly preempted, they are impliedly preempted under Buckman Co. v. Plaintiffs' Legal Committee, 531 U.S. 341, 121 S. Ct. 1012, 148 L. Ed. 2d 854 (2001). When dealing with a question of implied preemption, the Court begins its "analysis 'with the assumption that the historic police powers of the States [are] not to be superseded by the Federal Act unless that was the clear and manifest purpose of Congress.' That assumption applies with particular force when Congress has legislated in a field traditionally occupied by the States." Altria Grp. v. Good, 555 U.S. 70, 77, 129 S. Ct. 538, 172 L. Ed. 2d 398 (2008) (quoting Rice v. Santa Fe Elevator Corp., 331 U.S. 218, 230, 67 S. Ct. 1146, 91 L. Ed. 1447 (1947)). Buckman involved a defendant that allegedly made fraudulent representations to the FDA in order to gain approval for its orthopedic bone screws that plaintiffs alleged caused their injuries. 531 U.S. at 343. The [*61] Supreme Court held that allowing the plaintiffs to proceed on their state tort claims based on the alleged fraud on the FDA would "inevitably conflict with the [agency's] responsibility to police fraud consistently with [its] judgment and objectives." Id. at 350. Mercedes argues that Buckman thus preempts all state tort claims "stemming from a defendant's alleged fraud on a federal agency." (ECF No. 117-1 at 43-44).

Importantly, Buckman's holding rested in part on the fact that the Supreme Court had "clear evidence that Congress intended that the [Medical Device Amendments] be enforced exclusively by the Federal Government," and that the plaintiffs' "fraud claims exist[ed] solely by virtue of the [Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act] disclosure requirements." 531 U.S. at 352-53. While Mercedes frames Plaintiffs' claims as "all stem[ing] from the threshold allegation that 'the COCs were fraudulently obtained' and the vehicles were therefore 'never legal for sale; nor were they EPA and/or CARB complaint,'" (ECF No. 117-1 at 44 (quoting FAC ¶ 275)), this does not place Plaintiffs' state-law claims within the realm of Buckman. As explained above, Plaintiffs' claims do not "exist solely by virtue" of the alleged violations of the EPA's emissions [*62] standards. The core allegation of Plaintiffs' state-law tort claims is that Defendants lied to and deceived consumers, and so Buckman does not preempt these claims. See FCA, 295 F. Supp. 3d at 994-95 (applying the same reasoning to distinguish Buckman from state-law claims nearly identical to those before this Court); In re Caterpillar, 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 98784, 2015 WL 4591236, at *14 (holding that consumer fraud claims were not impliedly preempted by the CAA, as those claims were not "about the ability of Caterpillar's Engines to comply with EPA emissions standards").

D. Plaintiffs' State-Law Misrepresentation Claims

Mercedes argues that "[a] vast majority of plaintiffs' misrepresentation claims—including those arising under state common law and state consumer protection statutes—should also be dismissed because they are based on nonactionable puffery." (ECF No. 117-1 at 44). As mentioned supra Section III.A.2.i, Plaintiffs have shifted the focus of the FAC away from claims relying on Defendants' affirmative misrepresentations and are instead basing those claims on Defendants' omissions. This is reinforced by the fact that Plaintiffs do not respond to Mercedes' argument that their state-law misrepresentation claims should be dismissed. (See ECF No. 126 at 60 (addressing Mercedes' [*63] puffery arguments only in the context of fraudulent concealment)). Thus, to the extent that Plaintiffs' state-law consumer protection claims are based solely on affirmative misrepresentations, those affirmative misrepresentation claims are dismissed. Griglak v. CTX Mortg. Co., No. 09-5247, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 34941, 2010 WL 1424023, at *3 (D.N.J. Apr. 8, 2010) ("The failure to respond to a substantive argument to dismiss a count, when a party otherwise files opposition, results in a waiver of that count.").

E. Plaintiffs' State-Law Fraudulent Concealment Claims

Defendants also argue that this Court should dismiss Plaintiffs' fraudulent concealment claims. Both Defendants claim that Plaintiffs have failed to set forth facts showing a duty to disclose, (ECF Nos. 117-1 at 51-53; 118-1 at 58-60), while Mercedes also attacks the fraudulent concealment allegations in the FAC under Rule 9(b), (ECF No. 117-1 at 48-51). Defendants principally challenge Plaintiffs' fraudulent concealment claims under New Jersey law, which Plaintiffs seek to apply to the nationwide class.<sup>8</sup> To state a claim for fraudulent concealment under New Jersey law, a plaintiff must establish: (1) a material misrepresentation or omission of a presently existing or past fact; (2) knowledge or belief by the defendant of its falsity or knowing [*64] the omission to be material; (3) intention that the other person rely on it; (4) reasonable reliance thereon by the other person; and (5) resulting damages. Delaney v. Am. Express Co., No. 06-5134, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 34699, 2007 WL 1420766, at *5 (D.N.J. May 11, 2007); Gennari v. Weichert Co. Realtors, 148 N.J. 582, 610, 691 A.2d 350 (1997). Rule 9(b) applies to fraudulent concealment claims, GKE Enters., LLC v. Ford Motor Credit Co. LLC USA, No. 09-4656, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 53714, 2010 WL 2179094, at *4 (D.N.J. May 26, 2010); however, as mentioned above, Plaintiffs are not required to plead fraud by omissions claims as precisely as affirmative misrepresentation claims, Feldman, 2012 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 178924, 2012 WL 6596830, at *10, so long as the complaint places "the defendant on notice of the precise misconduct with which it is charged, Montich v. Miele USA, Inc., 849 F. Supp. 2d 439, 443 (D.N.J. 2012) (quoting Frederico, 507 F.3d at 200).

Mercedes contends that Plaintiffs have failed to satisfy the what, who, where, or when of the alleged fraudulent concealment, as required by Rule 9(b). In doing so, Mercedes mistakenly focuses on Mercedes' affirmative misrepresentations set forth in the FAC. For example, Mercedes argues that "every plaintiff fails to plead sufficiently the 'what' to satisfy Rule 9\(b\) because they fail to specify what false statements were allegedly made regarding their vehicle." (ECF No. 117-1 at 48-49 (referring to Plaintiff Andary, who "allege[d] that she read on the 'Mercedes website' 'something about a 'green generation of Mercedes'"') (quoting FAC ¶ 33)). With regard to the "who" element of Rule 9\(b\), Mercedes again argues that "[forty-nine plaintiffs . . .] attributed[e] claimed statements to dealership representatives or unidentified third-party websites." (ECF No. 117-1 at 49). In attacking Plaintiffs' fraudulent concealment claims, Mercedes applies a heightened Rule 9\(b\) standard to affirmative statements that Plaintiffs no longer rely on except to show the materiality of the omissions.

When looking at Plaintiffs' allegations concerning Defendants' omissions, they have sufficiently notified Mercedes and Bosch of the precise misconduct with which they are charged. Plaintiffs allege that Defendants "programmed [the] B1ueTEC vehicles to turn off or otherwise limit the effectiveness of the emission reduction systems during normal real world driving," throughout the entire period of BlueTEC vehicle production and sale in the U.S. (FAC ¶¶ 10, 13). Plaintiffs also allege that Mercedes failed to disclose these facts about the emissions controls nationwide. (FAC ¶ 316). Similar allegations have been found to satisfy Rule 9\(b\) both within and outside of this district in other automotive defect cases. See Volkswagen, 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 171598, 2018 WL 4777134, at \*24 (dismissing plaintiffs' fraudulent misrepresentation claims but finding that the fraudulent omissions claims survived, because plaintiffs identified "the specifics [*66] of what VW failed to disclose: (1) that 'the Clean Diesel engine systems were not EPA-compliant,' and (2) that the class vehicles 'used software that caused the vehicles to operate in low-emission test mode during emissions testing'); Counts, 237 F. Supp. 3d at 599 (finding that plaintiffs sufficiently alleged that GM "actively concealed and had exclusive knowledge of the alleged 'defeat device'"); Feldman, 2012 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 178924, 2012 WL 6596830, at \*10 (holding that plaintiffs adequately stated a claim of fraud by omission where they "allege[d] specific facts showing Defendants' knowledge and concealment of the alleged defect"). This Court will not dismiss Plaintiffs' state-law fraudulent concealment claims for failure to meet the standards of Rule 9\(b\).

Mercedes concludes that "[b]ecause no plaintiff has sufficiently alleged under Rule 9\(b\)'s heightened pleading standard the what, who, where, and when of any fraud, no plaintiff has adequately pled reliance, and all of their claims must be dismissed." (ECF No. 117-1 at 50-51). However, as the Court just found, Plaintiffs met the standards of Rule 9\(b\). Even still, the burden of establishing reliance on an omission is not difficult. Plaintiffs need not "offer direct proof that the entire class relied on defendant's representation that omitted [*67] materials facts, where the plaintiffs have established that the defendant withheld these material facts for the purpose of inducing the very action the plaintiffs pursued." Varacallo v. Mass. Mut. Life Ins. Co., 332 N.J. Super. 31, 50, 752 A.2d 807 \(App. Div. 2000\); see also Counts, 237 F. Supp. 3d at 596-97 (citing Varacallo and concluding that the plaintiffs need not plead individualized reliance for fraud by omission under New Jersey law).<sup>9</sup>

Bosch also contends that Plaintiffs "fail[ed] to plead any facts to suggest reliance on any specific or actionable representation by [it]." (ECF No. 118-1 at 59). However, for the same reasons that Plaintiffs need not establish direct reliance on Mercedes representations, they need not establish direct reliance on Bosch's: they allege that Bosch intentionally withheld the existence of the defeat device while simultaneously promoting clean diesel technology around the country.

Under New Jersey law, "courts will not imply a duty to disclose, unless such disclosure is necessary to make a previous statement true or the parties share a 'special relationship.'" Lightning Lube, Inc. v. Witco Cap., 4 F.3d

<sup>9</sup> Mercedes does not brief the Court on the differences in the laws of the various state subclasses with respect to reliance and fraudulent concealment. To the extent that Mercedes purports to rely on Appendix A to its brief, that attachment does not provide state-specific legal citation or information beyond a boilerplate statement that there was a "[f]ailure to satisfy Rule 9\(b\) with respect to reliance, by failing to allege the what and when of the purported fraud." (e.g., ECF No. 117-2 at 4 (referencing Plaintiff Roberts)). Thus, the Court declines to do a state-by-state analysis on the differing requirements for pleading reliance in fraudulent concealment claims at this stage. See Counts, 237 F. Supp. 3d at 597 (deciding that "the Court will not sua sponte analyze the elements of fraudulent concealment from each state's law that Plaintiffs purport to sue under" where the defendant did not specifically raise the argument).

1153, 1185 (3d Cir. 1993). The categories of relationships that give rise to a duty to disclose are: "(1) fiduciary relationships, such as principal and agent, client and attorney, or beneficiary and trustee; [<sup>68</sup>] (2) relationships where one party expressly reposes trust in another party, or else from the circumstances, such trust necessarily is implied; and (3) relationships involving transactions so intrinsically fiduciary that a degree of trust and confidence is required to protect the parties." Id. Here, Plaintiffs do not assert that they fall into one of the special relationship categories with Defendants. As such, the Court will only focus on the parties' arguments challenging whether or not a duty to disclose existed to make a previous statement true.<sup>10</sup>

Mercedes claims that Plaintiffs "cannot establish that disclosure was necessary to make true a previous statement made by [Mercedes]," because "the alleged representations vary from plaintiff to plaintiff." (ECF No. 117-1 at 53). Mercedes argues that this distinguishes the facts at hand from In re Volkswagen Timing Chain Products Liability Litigation, No. 16-2765, 2017 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 70299, 2017 WL 1902160 (D.N.J. May 8, 2017), because in Timing Chain, the partial disclosures were uniform. (ECF No. 117-1 at 53). The Court disagrees and finds that the facts at hand establish a duty to disclose for Mercedes and Bosch. Here, Plaintiffs set forth numerous examples of Mercedes' nationwide marketing efforts to promote its BlueTEC clean diesel vehicles. (FAC ¶¶ 323-27). In none [<sup>69</sup>] of those examples does Mercedes disclose that the purported benefits of the BlueTEC engine could only be achieved through or were completely obscured by the use of a defeat device. These allegations are sufficient to establish partial disclosures that Mercedes had an obligation to make true. See Timing Chain, 2017 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 70299, 2017 WL 1902160, at *20 (finding that the plaintiffs plead a partial disclosure after which the defendant had a duty to disclose "any and all information regarding the Timing Chain System" to plaintiffs, where the plaintiffs alleged that the defendant "represent[ed] in the maintenance schedules that the timing belt, which performs the same function as the Timing Chain System, will need service after a certain time but makes no representation that the Timing Chain System will need maintenance"); Strawn v. Canuso, 271 N.J. Super. 88, 104, 638 A.2d 141 (App. Div. 1994) (establishing a duty on buyers and brokers of real estate to disclose the existence of off-site conditions that were unknown to the buyer but that were known or should have been known to the seller and that would reasonably and foreseeably affect the value or desirability of the property), aff'd 140 N.J. 43, 657 A.2d 420 (1995).

In fact, in Strawn, the New Jersey Supreme Court adopted the interpretation of the Restatement (Second) of Torts which imposes [<sup>70</sup>] a "duty upon a party to disclose to another 'facts basic to the transaction, if he knows that the other is about to enter into it under a mistake . . . and the other, because of the relationship between them, the customs of the trade or other objective circumstances, would reasonably expect a disclosure of those facts,'" where the nondisclosure of those facts amounts to taking advantage of the plaintiffs ignorance, such that it would be "shocking to the ethical sense of the community, and [would be] so extreme and unfair, as to amount to a form of swindling." United Jersey Bank v. Kensey, 306 N.J. Super. 540, 554, 704 A.2d 38 (App. Div. 1997) (citations omitted). It is this Court's opinion that Mercedes and Bosch's active concealment of the existence of the defeat device amounts to such a situation. Cf. FCA, 295 F. Supp. 3d at 1009 (finding that allegations of defendants' active concealment of the defeat devices was sufficient to establish a duty to disclose under New Jersey law); Counts, 237 F. Supp. 3d at 600 (noting that the defendant's alleged active concealment of the defeat device was sufficient to establish a duty to disclose in some states).<sup>11</sup>

F. Plaintiffs' State Statutory Claims

1. Rule 9(b), Causal Nexus, and False, Deceptive, or Misleading Statements

<sup>10</sup> Bosch ignores the aspect of the duty to disclose that flows from a previous false statement and instead only focuses on the existence of a special relationship. (ECF No. 118-1 at 59).

Mercedes argues that Plaintiffs fail to state claims for violations [*71] of various states' consumer protection statutes under Rule 9\(b\) because Plaintiffs have not pled a "causal nexus" between Mercedes' unlawful conduct and Plaintiffs' injury with enough specificity and because Plaintiffs have "failed to allege facts establishing that the Mercedes Defendants made" false, deceptive, or misleading statements. (ECF No. 117-1 at 54-55). Mercedes attempts to address these state-specific arguments by citing to an "Appendix B," attached to their brief. (ECF No. 117 at 54-55). Appendix B is a six-page document containing four columns: the state law that applies, the causes of action under that state's law, the elements of the cause of action that Plaintiffs allegedly fail to establish, and "relevant authorities." (ECF No. 117-3 at 1-6). There is no context or analysis accompanying this document. Two courts have rejected similar attempts to argue that Plaintiffs have failed to meet the pleading requirements of various states' consumer protection statutes through an appendix. See FCA, 295 F. Supp. 3d at 1015 (deeming arguments made in a joint appendix regarding the plaintiffs' failure to allege reliance, a deceptive act, omission, or practice, and a concrete, non-speculative loss in relation to consumer [*72] protection claims as waived); Counts, 237 F. Supp. 3d at 593-94 ("Neither party makes a colorable effort to individually address the validity of Plaintiffs' . . . consumer protection . . . claims on a state specific basis. Rather, each attempts to 'raise' certain state-specific arguments by referencing appendices attached to their briefing. . . . The parties' scattershot effort to raise arguments and defenses by simply citing to dozens, if not hundreds, of state court cases will not be addressed."). This Court will also do the same. As in Counts, this Court agrees that "[c]ourts are not responsible for combing through appendices in an attempt to sua sponte raise and resolve legal arguments which the parties have not briefed." 237 F. Supp. 3d at 594.

In any event, Mercedes' arguments regarding causal nexus and false, deceptive, or misleading statements have been adequately addressed elsewhere in this Opinion. As to the existence of a causal nexus, this Court conducted an in-depth analysis of the causal link between Mercedes' alleged unlawful conduct and Plaintiffs' alleged injuries in the portions of the brief discussing Article III standing and RICO causation. See supra Sections III.A.2, B.2. With respect to whether Plaintiffs have adequately [*73] pled false, deceptive, or misleading statements, that has been discussed throughout, but particularly in reference to Plaintiffs' common law fraud claims supra Section III.E. This Court also notes that Duramax analyzed the state consumer protection claims in conjunction with the state common law fraud claims without meaningful distinction. 298 F. Supp. 3d at 1057-65.

1. Bosch and the Michigan Consumer Protection Act

Bosch argues that Plaintiffs fail to state a claim under the Michigan Consumer Protection Act \("MCPA"\), because they have failed "to identify any purportedly false affirmative misrepresentation by" Bosch, they have not identified Bosch's duty to disclose, and they have not alleged any injury as a result of Bosch's conduct. (ECF No. 118-1 at 60). By Bosch's own admission, an omission suffices as a "material misrepresentation" under the MCPA. (ECF No. 118-1 at 60). The Court has already established that Bosch made material omissions that it had a duty to disclose. Supra Section III.E. Additionally, the Court has rejected Bosch's argument that Plaintiffs have not adequately pled that they suffered an injury as a result of Bosch's conduct. Supra Section III.A.2.ii.

2. Ascertainable Loss under New Jersey [*74] and Florida Law

Mercedes argues that Plaintiffs Caputo, Caniero, Watkins, Carroll, and Cunningham "fail to plead injury with the specificity required under the consumer protection statutes of New Jersey and Florida because they have not alleged sufficient facts to show they suffered an ascertainable loss." (ECF No. 117-1 at 56). Ascertainable loss is an essential element of a claim under the New Jersey Consumer Fraud Act \(NJCFA\). Smajlaj v. Campbell Soup Co., 782 F. Supp. 2d 84, 97 \(D.N.J. 2011\). Mercedes claims that because Plaintiffs have failed to plead how much they paid for their vehicles and how much a comparable vehicle would cost, they have not satisfied the standard for ascertainable loss. (ECF No. 117-1 at 56 (citing In re Riddell Concussion Reduction Litig., 77 F. Supp. 3d 422, 439 \(D.N.J. 2015\))). Plaintiffs contend that Riddell is in conflict with New Jersey Supreme Court precedent, suggesting that New Jersey's highest court does not require a plaintiff to plead a price comparison, because "if the damages calculation were so simple, expert testimony would never be necessary." (ECF No. 126 at 66-67).

Here, Mercedes has the better argument. "In cases involving . . . misrepresentation, either out-of-pocket loss or a demonstration of loss in value will suffice to meet the ascertainable loss hurdle . . ." Thiedemann v. Mercedes-Benz

USA, LLC, 183 N.J. 234, 248, 872 A.2d 783 (2005). In demonstrating [*75] that out-of-pocket loss or loss in value, the New Jersey Supreme Court has explicitly endorsed the necessity of a price comparison in pleadings seeking to state a claim under the NJCFA. See D'Agostino v. Maldonado, 216 N.J. 168, 191, 78 A.3d 527 (2013) (detailing that an ascertainable loss must be capable of calculation); Thiedemann, 183 N.J. at 248 (describing ascertainable loss as "not hypothetical or illusory" and a loss that "must be presented with some certainty demonstrating that it is capable of calculation, although it need not be demonstrated in all its particularity"). This district has interpreted the New Jersey Supreme Court precedent to require this price comparison as well. E.g., Riddell, 77 F. Supp. 3d at 439; Smajlaj, 782 F. Supp. 2d at 100-01. In fact, in Bosland v. Warnock Dodge, Inc., the New Jersey Supreme Court addressed the question of ascertainable loss in an automobile overcharge case. There, the Supreme Court held that "the overcharge in question is one that can be readily quantified and thus [] ascertainable within the meaning of the CFA." 197 N.J. 543, 549, 964 A.2d 741 (2009). The plaintiff in Bosland though had specifically outlined the fee payments demonstrating that she could have been overcharged by either $40 or $20. Id. at 548.

Plaintiffs have not done that here. In their brief they do not set forth any instances of a price comparison in the FAC, nor [*76] can the Court find any. What Plaintiffs have done is set the table for a price comparison, alleging that Plaintiffs would not have purchased or leased the BlueTEC vehicles at the prices they paid, or would have purchased or leased a less expensive alternative. (E.g., FAC ¶ 535). They have not gone one step further to compare the price of a Polluting Vehicle with what they believe to be a comparable replacement. E.g., Smajlaj, 782 F. Supp. 2d at 103 (finding a sufficient allegation of ascertainable loss where plaintiffs alleged that when they bought a can of soup mislabeled as low-sodium they overpaid for what was essentially full-sodium soup that they alleged to be 20 to 80 cents cheaper).

Additionally, Plaintiffs' argument that expert testimony would never be required if the NJCFA only allowed claims with easily calculable ascertainable losses misses the mark. This is because, as mentioned above, the pleading need not demonstrate the ascertainable loss "in all its particularity." Thiedemann, 183 N.J. at 248. Ascertainable loss sets "the stage for establishing the measure of damages." Id. "There is no calculation of 'damages sustained' unless the ascertainable loss requirement is first satisfied. The two concepts indeed have separate functions [*77] in the analysis." D'Agostino, 216 N.J. at 192. Thus, the idea that requiring Plaintiffs to plead ascertainable loss as described above will necessarily write out a nuanced calculation of damages is incorrect. As such, Plaintiffs have failed to state a claim under the NJCFA. The Court will allow Plaintiffs to amend this claim.

As to Florida's Deceptive and Unfair Trade Practices Act (FDUTPA), this Court agrees with Judge Simandle in Riddell that actual damages under the FDUTPA are measured as "the difference in the market value of the product or service in the condition in which it was delivered and its market value in the condition in which it should have been delivered according to the contract of the parties." 77 F. Supp. 3d at 439 (quoting Rollins, Inc. v. Butland, 951 So. 2d 860, 869 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 2006)). However, this Court does not agree that this definition from Rollins establishes a pleading standard, as nothing in that case indicates that the Florida District Court of Appeal intended that definition to apply as a hurdle that must be cleared at the motion to dismiss phase. In fact, the 11th Circuit, the Southern District of Florida, and other courts analyzing FDUTPA have held that the pleading standard for a FDUTPA claim is less stringent than the definition of actual damages. See, e.g., [*78] Fitzpatrick v. General Mills, Inc., 635 F.3d 1279, 1283 (11th Cir. 2011) ("[E]ach putative class member would only need to show that he or she paid a premium for YoPlus to be entitled to damages under the FDUTPA."); Hasemann v. Gerber Prods. Co., No. 15-2995, 2016 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 134019, 2016 WL 5477595, at * 21 (E.D.N.Y. Sept. 28, 2016) ("A plaintiff may recover damages under the FDUTPA by alleging that the plaintiff 'paid a price premium' for the allegedly deceptive product.") (quoting Carriuolo v. Gen. Motors Co., 823 F.3d 977, 986 (11th Cir. 2016)); Moss v. Walgreen Co., 765 F. Supp. 2d 1363, 1367 n.1 (S.D. Fla. 2011) (stating that a consumer suffers damages when she pays "more for the product than she otherwise would have," based on a manufacturer's deceptive practice, regardless of whether or not the consumer relied on the deceptive practice). Thus, Plaintiffs have adequately stated their FDUTPA claim.

3. Statutory Time Bars

Mercedes next argues that Plaintiff Mose's Alabama claim, Findlay and Rubey's Indiana claims, and Watkins' Florida claim are time barred, as those statutes of limitation and repose "begin to run from the date that the alleged tort occurred—i.e., the original purchase date of the vehicles." (ECF No. 117-1 at 57).

The parties do not dispute that Alabama's consumer protection statute is subject to a four-year statute of repose. Mercedes presumes that Mose's purchase took place "in or near 2007," because it was a 2007 model vehicle. (ECF No. 117-1 at 57). However, the FAC explicitly states [*79] that Mose purchased his vehicle in February of 2013, (FAC ¶ 29), and thus falls within the statute of repose. Mercedes also argues in a footnote that because Mose asserted an Alabama Deceptive Trade Practices Act, he waived his right to bring other claims. (ECF No. 117-1 at 57 n.25). Given that Mercedes asserted an argument on which there is a split of authority, In re Gen. Motors LLC Ignition Switch Litig., 257 F. Supp. 3d 372, 405 (S.D.N.Y. 2017), in a footnote, this Court declines to address that argument. John Wyeth & Bro. Ltd. v. CIGNA Int'l Corp., 119 F.3d 1070, 1076 n.6 (3d Cir. 1997) ("[A]rguments raised in passing (such as, in a footnote), but not squarely argued, are considered waived").

As to Plaintiff Watkins' Florida claim, Mercedes again argues that because Watkins purchased a used vehicle in 2013, the vehicle must have originally been sold prior to 2013 and thus is subject to a four-year statute of limitations. (ECF No. 117-1 at 57-58). Mercedes cites no law supporting its proposition that the original sale date of the new car is what starts the clock running on the statute of limitations rather than the purchase date of the used car by Plaintiff Watkins. Moreover, Mercedes incorrectly argues that FDUTPA's statute is not tolled by the actions at bar. In re Takata Airbag Prods. Liab. Litig., 193 F. Supp. 3d 1324, 1344, 1346 (S.D. Fla. 2016) (stating that "the doctrine of fraudulent concealment will operate to toll the statute [*80] of limitations when it can be shown that fraud has been perpetrated on the injured party sufficient to place him in ignorance of his right to a cause of action or to prevent him from discovering his injury," and tolling the plaintiff's FDUTPA claim based on this reasoning). Plaintiff Watkins' FDUTPA claim is not barred by the statute of limitations.

With respect to Findlay and Rubey's Indiana consumer protection claims, Mercedes again uses the vehicle model years as the purchase dates, (ECF No. 117-1 at 58), when Findlay purchased his vehicle in August 2015 and Rubey purchased his vehicle in January 2014. This would put Findlay's purchase inside the two year statute of limitations. Ind. Code § 24-5-0.5-5\(b\). As to Rubey's purchase, Mercedes' alleged active and intentional fraudulent concealment operates to toll the statute of limitations. Cwiakala v. Economy Autos, Ltd., 587 F. Supp. 1462, 1466 (N.D. Ind. 1984).

4. State Consumer Protection Class Action Bars

Mercedes also argues that Plaintiffs' claims under the consumer protection laws of Alabama, Georgia, Mississippi, Montana, Ohio, South Carolina, and Tennessee are barred because the consumer protection laws of those states do not permit class actions. (ECF No. 117-1 at 59). Mercedes argues that pursuant to Shady Grove Orthopedic Associates, P.A. v Allstate Insurance Company, 559 U.S. 393, 130 S. Ct. 1431, 176 L. Ed. 2d 311 (2010), Rule 23 does not override [*81] state substantive law to permit class actions in this situation. (ECF No. 117-1 at 59). This Court has twice addressed and rejected this argument. In re Liquid Aluminum Sulfate Antitrust Litig., 16-md-2687, 2017 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 115294, 2017 WL 3131977, at *25 (D.N.J. July 20, 2017) (holding that Shady Grove instructs that state consumer protection class action bars do not apply to those claims if brought as a class action under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 23); Timing Chain, 2017 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 70299, 2017 WL 1902160, at *24 (holding the same); see also Fitzgerald v. Gann Law Books, Inc., 956 F. Supp. 2d 581, 586 (D.N.J. 2013) ("Shady Grove holds that, even where a federal-court plaintiff asserts a state-law cause of action, Rule 23 may permit class-wide relief where state law would deny it.").

G. Arbitration

Mercedes' final argument is that two plaintiffs, Andary and Feller, are bound to arbitrate all of their claims pursuant to their purchase agreements. (ECF No. 117-1 at 61). Generally, an agreement to arbitrate a dispute "is a matter of contract and a party cannot be required to submit to arbitration any dispute which he has not agreed so to submit." E.M. Diagnostic Systems, Inc. v. Local 169, International Brotherhood of Teamsters, etc., 812 F.2d 91, 94 (3d Cir. 1987) (quoting United Steelworkers of Am. v. Warrior & Gulf Navigation Co., 363 U.S. 574, 582, 80 S. Ct. 1347, 4 L. Ed. 2d 1409 (1960)). The Federal Arbitration Act \("FAA"\), applies to arbitration clauses contained in contracts involving matters of interstate commerce. See 9 U.S.C. § 2; Moses H. Cone Mem'l Hosp. v. Mercury Constr. Corp., 460 U.S. 1, 24, 103 S. Ct. 927, 74 L. Ed. 2d 765 (1983). When a party, whose claims are subject to the FAA, refuses to arbitrate the district court must decipher whether the claims are [*82] arbitrable. Medtronic Ave, Inc. v. Advanced Cardiovascular Sys., Inc., 247 F.3d 44, 54 (3d Cir. 2001) (citing AT&T Technologies, Inc. v. Communications Workers of America, 475 U.S. 643, 649, 106 S. Ct. 1415, 89 L. Ed. 2d 648 (1986)). In doing so, the district court applies "the relevant state contract law to questions of arbitrability, which may be decided as a matter of law only if there is no genuine issue of material fact when viewing the facts in the light most favorable to the nonmoving party." Aliments Krispy Kernels, Inc. v. Nichols Farms, 851 F.3d 283, 288-89 (3d Cir. 2017).

"[F]ederal policy favors arbitration and thus a court resolves doubts about the scope of an arbitration agreement in favor of arbitration." Medtronic, 247 F.3d at 55 (citing Moses H. Cone, 460 U.S. at 24-25). However, "[i]f there is doubt as to whether such an agreement [to arbitrate] exists, the matter, upon a proper and timely demand, should be submitted to a jury." Par-Knit, Par-Knit Mills, Inc. v. Stockbridge Fabrics Co., 636 F.2d 51, 54 (3d Cir. 1980), abrogated on other grounds by Aliments, 851 F.3d at 287-88. In considering a motion to compel arbitration, a court must engage in a two-step analysis: it must determine first whether there is a valid agreement to arbitrate and, if so, whether the specific dispute falls within the scope of said agreement. See Century Indem. Co. v. Certain Underwriters at Lloyd's, 584 F.3d 513, 523 (3d Cir. 2009).

Andary and Feller's arbitration provision reads as follows:

ARBITRATION PROVISION

PLEASE REVIEW • IMPORTANT • AFFECTS YOUR LEGAL RIGHTS

1. EITHER YOU OR WE MAY CHOOSE TO HAVE ANY DISPUTE BETWEEN US DECIDED BY ARBITRATION AND NOT IN COURT OR BY JURY TRIAL.
2. IF A DISPUTE IS ARBITRATED, YOU WILL GIVE UP YOUR RIGHT [*83] TO PARTICIPATE AS A CLASS REPRESENTATIVE OR CLASS MEMBER ON ANY CLASS CLAIM YOU MAY HAVE AGAINST US INCLUDING ANY RIGHT TO CLASS ARBITRATION OR ANY CONSOLIDATION OF INDIVIDUAL ARBITRATIONS.
3. DISCOVERY AND RIGHTS TO APPEAL IN ARBITRATION ARE GENERALLY MORE LIMITED THAN IN A LAWSUIT, AND OTHER RIGHTS THAT YOU AND WE WOULD HAVE IN COURT MAY NOT BE AVAILABLE IN ARBITRATION.

(ECF No. 117-4 at 9, 13).

Mercedes admits that it was not a signatory to these purchase or lease agreements. (ECF No. 117-1 at 62). As this Court explained in Timing Chain:

Basic contract law requires parties to be in privity with each other in order for them to enforce the terms of a contract. See Black's Law Dictionary (10th ed. 2014) (defining privity of contract as "[t]he relationship between the parties to a contract, allowing them to sue each other but preventing a third party from doing so"). Since the parties never personally entered into an agreement with each other, no privity of contract between Plaintiffs and Defendant can be established. . . . Hence, without privity of contract between the parties, Defendant . . . cannot enforce the arbitration clause contained within the purchase and/or lease agreements [*84] signed by Plaintiffs and the various dealerships. Thus, in accordance with [Century Indemnification Company,] there is no valid agreement between the parties that this Court can enforce, and the Motion to Compel Arbitration must be denied.

Even still, Mercedes argues, this is the type of relationship in which a non-signatory can enforce the arbitration agreement. (ECF No. 117-1 at 62). Courts have permitted "non-signatory third party beneficiaries to compel arbitration against signatories of arbitration agreements." E.L DuPont de Nemours and Co. v. Rhone Poulenc Fiber and Resin Intermediates, S.A.S., 269 F.3d 187, 195 (3d Cir. 2001). For example, courts have "bound a signatory to arbitrate with a non-signatory at the nonsignatory's insistence because of the close relationship between the entities involved, as well as the relationship of the alleged wrongs to the nonsignatory's obligations and duties in the contract . . . and [the fact that] the claims were intimately founded in and intertwined with the underlying contract obligations." E.I. DuPont, 269 F.3d at 199-200 (citations and quotations omitted). "The distinction between signatories and non-signatories is important to ensure that short of piercing the corporate veil, a court does not ignore the corporate form of a non-signatory based solely on the interrelatedness of [*85] the claims alleged." Id. at 202.

This Court rejected the same argument in Timixng Chain, 2017 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 70299, 2017 WL 1902160, at *9. As in Timing Chain, the FAC indicates that Plaintiffs each purchased and/or leased their vehicle from an authorized car dealership, that they entered into the purchase or lease agreement with that dealership, and that the agreement contained only the dealership's name and Andary and Feller's names. "Accordingly, there [is] no relationship, let alone a close one, that" indicates that the Court should permit Mercedes to enforce the arbitration agreements. As such Mercedes' motion to compel arbitration is denied.

IV. CONCLUSION

For the reasons stated herein, Mercedes' motion to dismiss the First Amended Complaint is granted in part and denied in part, and Bosch's motion to dismiss the First Amended Complaint is denied. An appropriate Order accompanies this Opinion.

ORDER

This matter comes before the Court by way of Defendants Mercedes-Benz USA, LLC's and Daimler AG's motion to dismiss the Fourth Consolidated and Amended Class Action Complaint ("FAC") (ECF No. 107), (ECF No. 117), as well as Defendant Robert Bosch LLC's motion [*86] to dismiss the FAC, (ECF No. 118). For the reasons set forth in the Court's corresponding Opinion,

IT IS on this 1st day of February, 2019,

ORDERED that Defendants' motions to dismiss the FAC are hereby GRANTED IN PART AND DENIED IN PART; and it is further

ORDERED that to the extent Plaintiffs' state-law claims are premised solely and Defendants' alleged affirmative misrepresentations, Defendants' motions are GRANTED as to those claims, and Plaintiffs will not be able to proceed on state-law claims that are not also based on Defendants' omissions. The Court notes, however, that it is not readily apparent that there are any of Plaintiffs claims state-law based solely on affirmative misrepresentations; and it is further

ORDERED that Mercedes' motion is GRANTED as to Plaintiffs' New Jersey state law consumer protection claim, and that claim is hereby DISMISSED WITHOUT PREJUDICE; and it is further

ORDERED that Defendants' motions are DENIED as to the rest of the claims in the FAC. SO ORDERED.

Under the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act (FDCA), pharmaceutical companies must obtain approval from the Food and Drug Administration (FDA) before marketing new drugs. 21 U.S.C.S. § 355. A company seeking approval files a New Drug Application (NDA), which must include information about the safety and efficacy of the drug, the drug's components, how the drug is made and packaged, and any patents on the drug's ingredients or methods of use. The Drug Price Competition and Patent Term Restoration Act, commonly known as the Hatch-Waxman Act. Pub. L. No. 98-417, 98 Stat. 1585 (1984), has simplified the regulatory process that generic drug manufacturers must traverse to bring generic drugs to market. Under the Hatch-Waxman Act, generic manufacturers may file an Abbreviated New Drug Application (ANDA) in lieu of a full New Drug Application (NDA). An ANDA allows the generic manufacturer to piggy-back on the pioneer's approval efforts in order to come to market quicker and with less expense. NDAs may rely on the safety and effectiveness findings in the listed drug's NDA by specifying that the generic is bioequivalent to the listed drug—that it contains the same active ingredient and exhibits the same bioavailability. 21 U.S.C.S. §§ 355\(j\)\(2\)\(A\)\(ii\) and \(iv\).

Because generic manufacturers can submit Abbreviated New Drug Applications (ANDAs) before the patent terms covering brand drugs expire, they must also certify that the generic drug will not infringe any patents listed in the Orange Book. Generic manufacturers may submit one of four types of certifications: (I) that the Orange Book does not list any patents covering the brand drug; (II) that any listed patents are expired; (III) that the generic is not seeking approval until the date any listed patents expire; or (IV) that any listed patent is invalid, unenforceable, or will not be infringed by the generic drug. 21 U.S.C.S. § 355\(j\)\(2\)\(A\)\(vii\). The fourth option is commonly referred to as paragraph IV certification. Paragraph IV ANDAs may be filed four years after approval of an New Drug Application (NDA). § 355\(j\)\(5\)\(F\)\(ii\).

A generic manufacturer filing an Abbreviated New Drug Application (ANDA) with a paragraph IV certification must notify the patent holder of the filing. § 355\(j\)\(2\)\(B\). Although no competing generic has yet been manufactured, submission of a paragraph IV certification ANDA automatically triggers a claim for patent infringement. 35 U.S.C.S. § 274(e)(2)(A). If a brand manufacturer files a patent infringement suit against the generic ANDA filer within 45 days of receiving notice, it results in an automatic 30-month stay, during which the Food and Drug Administration (FDA) may not approve the ANDA. 21 U.S.C.S. § 355\(j\)\(5\)\(B\)\(iii\). But if during that 30-month period the parties litigate the infringement suit to a final judgment or settlement which declares the patent invalid or not infringed, then the FDA may approve the ANDA prior to expiration of the 30 months.

To incentivize generic drug development and market entry, as well as challenges to potentially suspect patents listed in the Orange Book, the Hatch-Waxman Act permits the first company to file a paragraph IV Abbreviated New Drug Application (ANDA) (a first-filer) a 180-day period of generic marketing exclusivity. 21 U.S.C.S. § 355\(j\)\(5\)\(B\)\(iv\). During this 180 days the Food and Drug Administration (FDA) may not approve a later-filed ANDA referencing the same listed brand drug. Only the brand drug manufacturer is permitted to market a competing generic (a so-called "Authorized Generic" or "AG") during this time; all other generic manufacturers must await expiration of the exclusivity window. The 180-day exclusivity period can be extremely valuable for the first-filer. Generic manufacturers reap most of their potential profits during this time, which can be hundreds of millions of dollars. Generic drug market entry is aided by state laws permitting, and in many cases requiring, pharmacies to substitute therapeutically equivalent generic drugs for brand drugs absent a physician's contrary instructions.

The U.S. Supreme Court has concluded that agreements containing reverse payments can harm consumers if, in exchange, the generic manufacturer agrees to abandon a meritorious invalidity claim and enter the market later than it could have, assuming the patent were invalidated. The key issue is whether the reverse payment is "large and unjustified." The Court has declined to adopt a presumption that such settlements are unlawful, noting that the likelihood of a reverse payment bringing about anticompetitive effects depends upon its size, its scale in relation to the payor's anticipated future litigation costs, its independence from other services for which it might represent payment, and the lack of any other convincing justification.

A pleading that states a claim for relief must contain a short and plain statement of the claim showing that the pleader is entitled to relief. Fed. R. Civ. P. 8\(a\)\(2\). A pleading fails to meet this standard and is subject to dismissal under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(6\) when it does not contain sufficient factual matter, accepted as true, to state a claim that is plausible on its face. A claim has facial plausibility when the plaintiff pleads factual content that allows the court to draw the reasonable inference that the defendant is liable for the misconduct alleged. Factual allegations must be enough to raise a right to relief above the speculative level and beyond the level that is merely conceivable. Legal conclusions and threadbare recitals of the elements of a cause of action do not state a claim.

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrs & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

HN13 [blue document icon] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

The United States Supreme Court has described the motion to dismiss analysis in two parts. First, the court must accept the allegations of fact as true. However, a court is not required to accept as true a legal conclusion couched as a factual allegation, or a legal conclusion unsupported by factual allegations. After reviewing the allegations, the court must then consider whether they are sufficient to state a plausible claim for relief. This is a context-specific task that requires the reviewing court to draw on its judicial experience and common sense. A Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(6\) motion, then, should be granted if, after accepting all well-pleaded allegations in the plaintiff's complaint as true and drawing all reasonable factual inferences from those facts in the plaintiff's favor, it appears certain that the plaintiff cannot prove any set of facts in support of his claim entitling him to relief.

HN16 [ ] Regulated Practices, Monopolies & Monopolization

Patent holders enjoy the right to exclude competition for the duration of their patents. A patent is an exception to the general rule against monopolies. As a result, settlements of Paragraph IV litigation, which frequently allow the generic manufacturer to enter earlier than the patent's expiration, do not always produce antitrust harm. If they do not include a reverse payment from the patentee as compensation for the generic's agreement to delay generic entry, they are more likely to reflect the compromise of disputed issues than an allocation of monopoly profits. But where the settlement includes a payment from the patent holder to an alleged infringer, the question presented is, what are the reasons for the payment? If the payment represents no more than a rough approximation of the litigation expenses saved through the settlement or compensation for other services that the generic has promised to perform, there is less concern the settlement is intended to divide and extend the monopoly. But very large payments may not be justified by such traditional settlement considerations.

HN17 [ ] Regulated Practices, Private Actions

Those appellate courts which have examined reverse payment antitrust claims require no heightened level of pleading detail. Requiring facts sufficient to support the legal conclusion that the settlement at issue involves a large and unjustified reverse payment. In the case of a reverse payment based on allegations of a no-Authorized Generic (AG) agreement, the Third Circuit has held it sufficient for the Plaintiff to allege the manufacturer had an incentive to launch its own authorized generic and did not do so, and that the alleged infringer would earn many millions of dollars in additional revenue, from the no-AG agreement. These courts recognize that the value of non-cash reverse payments may be much more difficult to compute than that of their cash counterparts. But antitrust litigation often requires an elaborate inquiry into the reasonableness of a challenged business practice. And the absence of detailed support for the value of a no-AG promise should not bar the claim at the pleading stage.

The per se rule permits courts to make categorical judgments that certain practices, including price fixing, horizontal output restrictions, and market-allocation agreements, are illegal per se. But it is only appropriate after courts have had considerable experience with the type of restraint at issue, and only if courts can predict with confidence that such agreements would be invalidated in all or almost all instances under the rule of reason.

The only requirement is that the connection between plaintiff and defendant not be too attenuated. North Carolina Supreme Court precedent embraces an expansive view of unjust enrichment and the role or particulars of the conferral of a benefit element.

Conclusion

Introduction

In this multidistrict antitrust litigation, Plaintiffs allege that Defendants illegally conspired to artificially inflate the price of prescription drugs. The Complaints principally arise out of a patent infringement settlement concerning the drug ezetimibe, the active ingredient in the branded cholesterol-control medication Zetia. Plaintiffs allege that as part of their settlement, the brand manufacturer defendants made an unlawful "reverse payment" in exchange for the generic manufacturer's delayed entry into the market. Plaintiffs claim that this quid pro quo agreement is subject to antitrust scrutiny under the Supreme Court's decision in FTC v. Actavis, 570 U.S. 136, 133 S. Ct. 2223, 186 L. Ed. 2d 343 (2013). Plaintiffs assert claims under the Sherman Antitrust Act, 15 U.S.C. §§ 1, 2, along with antitrust and other claims under the laws of thirty-eight states, the District of Columbia, and Puerto Rico.

The matter is now before the court on three separate Motions to Dismiss all claims, each directed at one of the three classes of plaintiffs in the case.<sup>1</sup> Defendants argue that Plaintiffs have failed to plausibly allege any payment or other agreement that would give rise to antitrust liability under federal law. They also assert that plaintiffs proceeding under state law either lack standing or have failed to state a claim for various reasons particular to those claims.

Pursuant to 28 U.S.C. §636(b)(1)(B) and Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 72(b), the assigned district judge referred the motions to the undersigned for a report and recommendation. The court heard oral argument on all the motions January 14, 2019. As explained in greater detail below, this Report concludes that Plaintiffs have stated claims under both Sherman Act counts. Such claims are analyzed under the rule of reason approach set out by the Supreme Court in Actavis. There is, however, no per se violation of antitrust law arising from the same conduct. The count asserting a per se violation alleged only by the Retailer Plaintiffs fails to state a claim and should be dismissed. The Report also concludes the named End Payor Plaintiffs have standing to pursue the claims [*13] they assert, and any challenge to claims they assert in a representative capacity should be addressed at the class certification stage under Rule 23.

Finally, while some of the state antitrust, consumer protection, and unjust enrichment claims are adequately pled, the Report concludes that several are barred by the law of the states which created the remedies sought to be enforced here. Accordingly, as set out below, this Report recommends the Motions to Dismiss be GRANTED IN PART and DENIED IN PART.

I. Parties and Claims

A. Defendants

Merck & Company, Inc. is a New Jersey corporation that through itself and its subsidiaries markets and sells Zetia throughout the United States. Direct Purchaser Plaintiffs' Consolidated Class Action Complaint ("DPP Compl.") ¶ 10 (ECF No. 128 at 9). In 2009, Merck & Company, Inc. merged into defendant Schering-Plough Corporation and the resulting entity changing its name to Merck & Company, Inc. DPP Compl. ¶ 14. The original Merck & Company, Inc. changed its name to Merck Sharp & Dohme Corporation, another named defendant. DPP Compl. ¶ 14. Schering Corporation was a wholly owned subsidiary of Schering-Plough corporation and the original assignee of the relevant [*14] patents in this matter. DPP Compl. ¶ 13. Those patents are now assigned to defendant Merck Sharp & Dohme Corporation. DPP Compl. ¶ 11. MSP Singapore Company LLC ("MSP") is a subsidiary of Merck & Company, Inc.; it held the New Drug Application ("NDA") for ezetimibe and was the exclusive licensee of the relevant patents. DPP Compl. ¶ 15; Br. Supp. Defs' Mot. Dismiss DPP Compl. 2 n.1 (ECF No. 158 at 7 n.1). Except where otherwise indicated, all these Merck Defendants will be collectively referred to in this Report as "Merck."

Glenmark Pharmaceuticals Limited is a foreign company, which, along with its wholly owned subsidiary Glenmark Pharmaceuticals Inc., USA, will be collectively referred to in this Report as "Glenmark."<sup>2</sup> Glenmark is a generic drug manufacturer which, on October 25, 2006, filed the first Abbreviated New Drug Application seeking FDA approval for its generic version of Zetia. DPP Compl. ¶ 146. After Merck sued Glenmark for patent infringement, the two companies entered into the Settlement Agreement that is the core subject matter of this litigation.

B. Plaintiffs

Plaintiffs are corporations or other entities that allegedly purchased brand-name and generic Zetia at supracOMPETITIVE [*15] prices from late 2011 until at least June 12, 2017. DPP Compl. 84-85. Plaintiffs are divided into three groups. The Direct Purchaser Plaintiffs ("DPPs") are drug wholesalers that purchased brand-name and generic Zetia directly from the Defendants.<sup>3</sup> The DPPs assert federal antitrust claims on behalf of themselves and similarly situated class members under 15 U.S.C. §§ 1 & 2.

The Retailer Plaintiffs CVS, Walgreens, and Rite Aid ("Retailers") are large pharmacy retailers which assert claims on their own behalf and as assignees of claims from pharmaceutical wholesalers which purchased Zetia directly from Merck for resale to Retailers. Retailers assert three federal antitrust claims: (1) per se violation of 15 U.S.C. § 1; (2) violation of § 1 under rule of reason analysis; and (3) violation of § 2. Although the retailers are also direct purchasers, they are pursuing their claims individually and do not seek class certification.

The End Payor Plaintiffs ("EPPs") are a collection of municipal corporations, employee welfare benefit plans, or other similar entities. The EPPs allege that they purchased and/or provided reimbursement for purchases of Zetia and its generic equivalents for members or plan beneficiaries at supracOMPETITIVE [*16] prices.<sup>4</sup> Because the EPPs were downstream buyers who did not purchase Zetia directly from Defendants, they allege only indirect injury caused by Defendants' conduct. End Payor Consol. Class Action Compl. 80-81 (ECF No. 130 at 85-86). On their own behalf, and for similarly situated class members, the EPPs bring four sets of claims: (1) conspiracy and combination in restraint of trade under the antitrust laws of twenty-six states, the District of Columbia, and Puerto Rico; (2) analogous state-law monopolization claims in those same jurisdictions; (3) consumer protection claims under the laws of twenty-seven states and the District of Columbia; and (4) unjust enrichment claims under the laws of thirty-seven states and the District of Columbia.

II. Regulatory Background

HN1 Under the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act ("FDCA"), pharmaceutical companies must obtain approval from the Food and Drug Administration ("FDA") before marketing new drugs. 21 U.S.C. § 355. A company seeking approval files a New Drug Application ("NDA"), which must include information about the safety and efficacy of the drug, the drug's components, how the drug is made and packaged, and any patents on the drug's ingredients or methods [*17] of use. Id. § 355\(b\). The process of compiling an NDA, which requires comprehensive clinical testing (subject to its own approval processes) is long and expensive.

HN2 Once the FDA approves a manufacturer's NDA, the manufacturer may list it in the directory of "Approved Drug Products with Therapeutic Equivalence Evaluations," commonly known as the "Orange Book." Id. § 355\(b\)\(1\). The Orange Book listing contains any patents that the manufacturer believes it could assert against a generic manufacturer that makes, uses, or sells a generic version of the drug. Id. HN3 Certain NDAs qualify for New

<sup>4</sup> The named class representatives for the EPPs are the Sergeants Benevolent Association Health & Welfare Fund; United Food and Commercial Workers Local 1500 Welfare Fund; Philadelphia Federation of Teachers Health & Welfare Fund; Self-Insured Schools of California; City of Providence, Rhode Island; Law Enforcement Health Benefits, Inc.; Painters District Council No. 30 Health & Welfare Fund; International Union of Operating Engineers Local 49 Health & Welfare Fund; Turlock Irrigation District; Uniformed Firefighters' Association of Greater New York Security Benefit Fund; and the Retired Firefighters' Security Benefit Fund of the Uniformed Firefighters' Association of Greater New York Security Benefit Fund; and United Food and Commercial Workers Local 1500 Welfare Fund.

Chemical Entity ("NCE") exclusivity, which bars the FDA from accepting for review any ANDA referencing the NDA for a period of five years (or four in certain circumstances). Id. § 355\(c\)\(3\)\(E\)\(ii\).

A. Hatch-Waxman Amendments and Generic Drug Approval

HN4 In 1984, Congress passed the Drug Price Competition and Patent Term Restoration Act, commonly known as the Hatch-Waxman Act. Pub. L. No. 98-417, 98 Stat. 1585 \(1984\). The Act simplified the regulatory process that generic drug manufacturers must traverse to bring generic drugs to market. Under the Hatch-Waxman Act, generic manufacturers may file an Abbreviated New Drug Application ("ANDA") in lieu of a full NDA. An ANDA allows the generic manufacturer to "piggy-back on the pioneer's [*18] approval efforts" in order to come to market quicker and with less expense. Actavis, 570 U.S. at 142. ANDAs may rely on the safety and effectiveness findings in the listed drug's NDA by specifying that the generic is "bioequivalent" to the listed drug—that it contains the same active ingredient and exhibits the same "bioavailability." Id. (citing 21 U.S.C. §§ 355\(j\)\(2\)\(A\)\(ii\) and \(iv\)).

HN5 Because generic manufacturers can submit ANDAs before the patent terms covering brand drugs expire, they must also certify that the generic drug will not infringe any patents listed in the Orange Book. Id. at 143 (citation omitted). Generic manufacturers may submit one of four types of certifications: (I) that the Orange Book does not list any patents covering the brand drug; (II) that any listed patents are expired; (III) that the generic is not seeking approval until the date any listed patents expire; or (IV) that any listed patent is invalid, unenforceable, or will not be infringed by the generic drug. 21 U.S.C. § 355\(j\)\(2\)\(A\)\(vii\). The fourth option is commonly referred to as "paragraph IV certification." In re Opana ER Antitrust Litig., 162 F. Supp. 3d 704, 711 \(N.D. Ill. 2016\). Paragraph IV ANDAs may be filed four years after approval of an NDA which receives NCE exclusivity. 21 U.S.C. Id. § 355\(j\)\(5\)\(F\)\(ii\).

HN6 A generic manufacturer filing an ANDA with a paragraph IV certification [*19] must notify the patent holder of the filing. § 355\(j\)\(2\)\(B\). Although no competing generic has yet been manufactured, submission of a paragraph IV certification ANDA automatically triggers a claim for patent infringement. 35 U.S.C. § 274(e)(2)(A). If a brand manufacturer files a patent infringement suit against the generic ANDA filer within 45 days of receiving notice, it results in an automatic 30-month stay, during which the FDA may not approve the ANDA. 21 U.S.C. § 355\(j\)\(5\)\(B\)\(iii\). But if during that 30-month period the parties litigate the infringement suit to a final judgement or settlement which declares the patent invalid or not infringed, then the FDA may approve the ANDA prior to expiration of the 30 months. Id.

B. Generic Drug Exclusivity

HN7 To incentivize generic drug development and market entry, as well as challenges to potentially suspect patents listed in the Orange Book, the Hatch-Waxman Act permits the first company to file a paragraph IV ANDA (a "first-filer") a 180-day period of generic marketing exclusivity. § 355\(j\)\(5\)\(B\)\(iv\). During this 180 days the FDA may not approve a later-filed ANDA referencing the same listed brand drug. Only the brand drug manufacturer is permitted to market a competing generic (a so-called "Authorized Generic" or "AG") during [*20] this time; all other generic manufacturers must await expiration of the exclusivity window.

The 180-day exclusivity period can be extremely valuable for the first-filer. Generic manufacturers reap most of their potential profits during this time, which can be hundreds of millions of dollars. See Actavis, 570 U.S. at 144. Generic drug market entry is aided by state laws permitting, and in many cases requiring, pharmacies to substitute therapeutically equivalent generic drugs for brand drugs absent a physician's contrary instructions. See Opana, 162 F. Supp. 3d at 712. As a result, generics can quickly capture a large portion of the market for the corresponding branded drug. See id.; DPP Compl. ¶¶ 51-55.

C. "Reverse Payment" Patent Settlements and the Actavis Decision

The regulatory framework above gives generic manufacturers strong incentive to bring paragraph IV challenges to seemingly vulnerable patents. And brand manufacturers, faced with the prospect of losing their exclusivity, have good reason to respond with infringement suits against those companies. Given the expense of patent infringement litigation, however, brand manufacturers may seek to settle such claims, particularly if they "suspect their challenged patents may indeed be [*21] vulnerable." In re Aggrenox Antitrust Litig., 94 F. Supp. 3d 224, 234 \(D. Conn. 2015\). Such settlements sometimes result in the plaintiff (the patent holder) paying the defendant (the generic manufacturer and accused infringer). This type of settlement is commonly called a "reverse payment" settlement agreement. See id.; see also Actavis, 570 U.S. at 155-56 (noting that "reverse payment" patent infringement settlements are confined almost exclusively to the pharmaceutical industry). These settlements may also permit the generic manufacturer to enter the market at a later date but before the patent's expiration date. See Aggrenox, 94 F. Supp. 3d at 234. Such "pay for delay" settlements have uncertain market impacts.

Assuming the patent is valid, and that the patentholder would ultimately prevail, such a settlement means that the patent-holder is avoiding the cost of litigation by agreeing to shorten the length of its legal monopoly and to share some of its monopoly profits with the challenger. Consumers benefit by enjoying the lower prices of generics sooner than they otherwise would under the patent. Assuming, however, that the patent is invalid, and that the challenger would ultimately prevail, then such a settlement amounts to a "pay to delay" agreement: the patent-holder's monopoly is illegitimate, and it is [*22] paying a would-be competitor to delay its entry into the market. Consumers who should enjoy competitive prices now will instead pay monopoly prices until the end of the term of the anticompetitive collusion. The availability of such settlements allows manufacturers of brand-name drugs to avoid the invalidation of potentially weak patents and keep prices high by sharing their monopoly profits with manufacturers of generics.

Id. Before Actavis, some courts reasoned that because any pay for-delay settlement inevitably allowed generic market entry before the expiration of the brand's patent, the brand manufacturer was not gaining any exclusive time it was not already entitled to via its patent monopoly. See Actavis 570 U.S. at 146. The result was a split in circuit authority over whether such agreements could violate antitrust law.

HN8 [↑] The Supreme Court in Actavis said that they could - in certain circumstances. 570 U.S. at 141. The Court concluded that agreements containing reverse payments can harm consumers if, in exchange, the generic manufacturer agrees to abandon a meritorious invalidity claim and enter the market later than it could have, assuming the patent were invalidated. The key issue is whether the reverse payment is [*23] "large and unjustified." The Court declined the FTC's request to adopt a presumption that such settlements are unlawful, noting that "the likelihood of a reverse payment bringing about anticompetitive effects depends upon its size, its scale in relation to the payor's anticipated future litigation costs, its independence from other services for which it might represent payment, and the lack of any other convincing justification." Id. at 159.

D. "No-AG" Agreements

As scrutiny over reverse payment settlement agreements increased, antitrust plaintiffs began challenging not only cash payments (at issue in Actavis), but also more complex arrangements that still provide value to generic manufacturers. The form alleged in this case is a HN9 [↑] "No-AG" agreement - a promise by a brand manufacturer "not to market an AG version of the brand drug for some period of time after the first generic enters." DPP Compl. ¶ 79; see in re Lipitor Antitrust Litig., 868 F.3d 231, 252 (3rd. Cir. 2017) (holding reverse payment may be in the form of a no-AG agreement).

No-AG agreements compensate a first-filer's delayed entry by ensuring that it will face no generic competition during its 180-day exclusivity period. Depending on the brand's sales, the difference in generic profits can be hundreds [*24] of millions of dollars. DPP Compl. ¶ 84; see also Actavis, 570 U.S. at 153-54. These arrangements may harm consumers by extending the period of brand exclusivity and by eliminating the price competition that would result if the first-filer's generic had to compete with the brand's AG. Lost consumer savings would instead flow to the brand and generic manufacturers in the form of increased monopoly profits. See DPP Compl. ¶¶ 82-84.

Numerous courts relying on the Supreme Court's reasoning in Actavis have found potential antitrust violations deriving from no-AG agreements. See, e.g., In re Loestrin 24 FE Antitrust Litig., 814 F.3d 538, 551-52 (1st Cir. 2016); King Drug Co. of Florence v. SmithKline Beecham Corp., 791 F.3d 388, 403 (3rd Cir. 2015); In re Opana, 162 F. ### III. Factual Background

A. Merck Develops Ezetimibe and Seeks Patent Protection and FDA Approval

In the 1990s, Merck was working on a program to develop chemicals that would be useful in reducing cholesterol levels in humans.<sup>5</sup> Merck researchers discovered a lead compound and several of its metabolites and metabolite-like analogues, including ezetimibe, the active ingredient in Zetia. Merck quickly sought broad patent protection for these compounds. DPP Compl. 29-31 ¶¶ 96-97.<sup>6</sup>

Beginning with U.S. Patent Application 102,440 in September of 1993, Merck prosecuted a series of patents [*25] over the next few years. Merck would ultimately obtain several patents on azetidinone compounds. See DPP Compl. ¶ 103, Fig. 6 (depicting application and patent history of the azetidinone patents). Plaintiffs' allegations contain an extensive history of these patents and descriptions of their respective claims. Although much of this information may become relevant later in a potential motion for summary judgment or at trial, for present purposes only a simplified account is necessary.

Among the patents Merck ultimately obtained was U.S. Patent No. 5,767,115 ("the '115 patent"). Plaintiffs allege that ezetimibe is within the scope of several claims in this patent. The '115 patent expired on June 16, 2015. DPP Compl. ¶¶ 123-25. As it began preparing an NDA for the compound, Merck filed a reissue application on the '115 patent. The reissue application sought to add additional claims with narrower scope directed at "one of the most preferred compounds disclosed in the specification"—specifically, ezetimibe. DPP Compl. ¶¶ 128-29.

On December 27, 2001, Merck submitted an NDA seeking approval to market ezetimibe tablets as a cholesterol-control drug under the brand name Zetia. While the NDA was pending, the PTO issued U.S. Patent No. RE37,721 ("the '721 patent"), a reissue of the '115 patent. The '721 patent included the [*26] new claims for the compound ezetimibe, a composition of ezetimibe, and a method of using ezetimibe to treat high cholesterol. The FDA approved Merck's NDA on October 25, 2002 and granted it a five-year NCE exclusivity. Merck then sought extension of the 1721 patent term based on the duration of the FDA's review of the Zetia NDA. The PTO granted an extension of 497 days, which set the '721 patent's expiration date on October 25, 2016, not including pediatric exclusivity. Merck ultimately listed three patents in the Orange Book in conjunction with the Zetia NDA: (1) the '721 patent; (2) U.S. Patent No. 5,846,966, which claimed azetidinone compounds combined with statins; and (3) U.S. Patent No. 7,030,106, which claimed compounds that inhibit sterol absorption and methods for their use. DPP Compl. ¶¶ 126-45.

B. Merck Sues First-Filer Glenmark for Patent Infringement

<sup>5</sup> Although the three motions addressed in this Report are directed to three different complaints, the factual allegations describing the anticompetitive conduct are generally the same. HN10 Each motion to dismiss requires the court to accept all facts alleged in the complaint as true and draw all reasonable inferences in favor of the plaintiff. Edwards v. City of Goldsboro, 178 F.3d 231, 244 (4th Cir. 1999).

On October 25, 2006, generic drug manufacturer Glenmark filed an ANDA seeking FDA approval to market a generic version of Zetia. Glenmark's ANDA contained a paragraph IV certification to all of the ezetimibe patents listed in the Orange Book at that time. On or about February 9, 2007, Glenmark notified Merck of its ANDA filing. Merck sued Glenmark on March 22, 2007, alleging that it was infringing [*27] the 1721 patent. This triggered the automatic stay of FDA's approval of Glenmark's ANDA until the earlier of (i) the expiration of the 30-month stay, or (ii) entry of a final judgment that the 1721 patent was invalid, unenforceable, or not infringed. Glenmark answered and counterclaimed, seeking declaratory judgment that the 1721 patent was invalid and/or unenforceable.

Glenmark raised several arguments. It alleged that at least two compounds claimed in the 1721 patent are inherent metabolites of a compound disclosed in an earlier Schering patent application. See DPP Compl. ¶¶ 155-57. Glenmark also argued that Merck's failure to disclose the inherency of these metabolites to the PTO during prosecution of the 1721 patent was inequitable conduct. It alleged that Merck failed to disclose material publications that investigated these metabolites to the PTO during prosecution. It also alleged that Merck committed inequitable conduct in seeking patent term extension for the '721 patent without disclosing that certain claims were invalid for inherent anticipation. HN11 [↑] A finding of inequitable conduct related to the prosecution of a patent invalidates the entire patent. Therasense, Inc. v. Becton, Dickinson & Co., 649 F.3d 1276, 1288 (Fed. Cir. 2011). DPP Compl. ¶¶ 158-60. Glenmark also [*28] argued that the '721 patent was invalid for lack of enablement, failure to name the inventors, lack of proper reissue, and obviousness-type double patenting. DPP Compl. ¶¶ 161-65.

On April 24, 2009, the FDA tentatively approved Glenmark's Zetia ANDA. With this approval, Glenmark secured the 180-day generic exclusivity afforded to first-filers. However, Glenmark remained unable to launch its generic due to the 30-month stay triggered by Merck's infringement suit. DPP Compl. ¶¶ 166-67.

Glenmark filed two motions for partial summary judgment in the Merck/Glenmark patent litigation. Each motion focused on a discrete issue attacking the validity of the '721 patent. Specifically, Glenmark argued (1) that the '115 patent was wholly or partly invalid and therefore could not be reissued (as the '721 patent) under 35 U.S.C. § 251, and (2) that most of the claims in the '721 patent were invalid for obviousness-type double patenting. DPP Compl. ¶¶ 169-72.

On April 19, 2010, the district court granted Glenmark's motion for summary judgment on improper reissue and denied its motion on obviousness-type double patenting. The functional result of this partial ruling would have been invalidation of claims 10-13 in the '721 patent, which claimed ezetimibe expressly and had been added in [*29] reissue. Merck moved for reconsideration of the partial order on April 30, 2010. DPP Compl. ¶¶ 176-77.

C. Merck and Glenmark Settle the Infringement Suit

Two days before trial was scheduled to begin, and prior to any ruling in Merck's motion to reconsider, Merck and Glenmark reached the Settlement Agreement that is central to this case. As part of the settlement, the parties agreed to entry of a consent judgment and requested an order from the court vacating its partial summary judgment on improper reissue, thereby reinstating claims 10-13 in the '721 patent. The court referenced the Settlement Agreement in its consent judgment but did not docket the parties' written agreement in the record. DPP Compl. ¶¶ 178-82.

Plaintiffs allege that this Settlement Agreement contains a no-AG provision as quid pro quo for Glenmark's agreement to delay its generic launch until late 2016. Drafted without access to the Settlement Agreement itself, all the complaints assert certain facts which, in Plaintiffs' opinion, lead to the logical inference that Merck agreed not to launch a competing AG during Glenmark's 180-day exclusivity period in exchange for Glenmark's agreement to delay entry. Among the allegations Plaintiffs [*30] rely on are that: (1) Merck has previously acknowledged the economic benefit of marketing AGs; (2) Merck has a history of launching AGs after its patent exclusivity expires; (3) Zetia was a blockbuster drug with billions of dollars in sales when Glenmark launched its generic in 2016; and that (4) Merck ultimately did not launch an AG during Glenmark's exclusivity period. See DPP Compl. ¶¶ 183-90.

After reviewing the Settlement Agreement itself (which was produced in discovery but remains sealed), Plaintiffs identify two provisions which, functioning together, they allege act as the contractual no-AG agreement forecast in their pleadings. The first is the definition of Generic Ezetimibe, which reads:

The term "Generic Ezetimibe" shall mean a drug product containing ezetimibe as its sole active ingredient (a) that refers to the Approved Zetia Product as the reference-listed drug in an ANDA or pursuant to an application under 21 U.S.C. § 355\(b\)\(2\) or \(b\) that is sold pursuant to NDA No. 21-445 but is not sold under the trademark Zetia® or another trademark or trade name of Schering, MSP or their Affiliates.

Br. Supp. Def. Glenmark's Mot. to Dismiss DPP Compl. Ex. A "Sett. Agr." § 1.14 (filed under seal as ECF No. 159). [*31] Because any authorized generic would have to be sold pursuant to Merck's Zetia NDA, Plaintiffs allege its inclusion in the definition of Generic Ezetimibe indicates Merck intended to give up AG rights during Glenmark's exclusivity period. The second provision provides an express promise that the right to market "Generic Ezetimibe" would be "exclusive to Glenmark" except pursuant to a third-party ANDA. It reads:

During any period of exclusivity to which Glenmark is entitled under 21 U.S.C. § 355\(j\)\(5\)\(B\)\(iv\), and through the expiration of Schering's rights under the 1721 Patent and Ezetimibe Pediatric Exclusivity, Schering's grant of the rights in Paragraphs 5.1 and 5.2 is exclusive to Glenmark and its Affiliates with respect to the commercial distribution and sale of Generic Ezetimibe, subject only to Schering's right to grant rights to or otherwise authorize Third Parties to make, have made, use, sell, offer to sell, import, or distribute Generic Ezetimibe pursuant to such Third Parties' ANDAs or applications pursuant to 21 U.S.C. § 355\(b\)\(2\).

Sett. Agr. § 5.3.

Plaintiffs claim that these provisions, and Merck's actions in not launching an AG during Glenmark's period of exclusivity, amount to a reverse payment settlement. Absent these provisions, [*32] Plaintiffs allege Glenmark would have entered the market long before 2016, possibly as early as December 6, 2011. Plaintiffs base this assertion on two alternative possibilities. First, in the absence of a reverse payment agreement, Merck and Glenmark may have agreed to settle the infringement claim with an earlier agreed entry date. The settlement would have been based on the relative merits of the parties' claims in the infringement suit and ordinary considerations over the cost of litigating the claims. DPP Compl. ¶¶ 194-200. Under this theory, Glenmark would have insisted on an earlier entry date in compromise of its claims of invalidity, but-for the compensation it received in the No-AG agreement.

As a second possibility, Plaintiffs argue that Glenmark would have prevailed in the infringement suit and secured a declaration that the '721 patent, which Merck asserted against Glenmark's generic version of Zetia, was invalid or unenforceable. Glenmark would have thereafter taken reasonable and economically rational steps to launch its generic at the earliest possible date. DPP Compl. ¶¶ 201-02.<sup>7</sup>

The result in either scenario would have been the earlier launch of Glenmark's generic, perhaps [*33] as early as December of 2011. Plaintiffs allege that Merck would also have launched its competing AG around the same time, and that additional generics would have entered the market after Glenmark's 180-day exclusivity expired, as early as June of 2012. DPP Compl. ¶¶ 203-04.

Plaintiffs' allegations regarding the value of a pay-for-delay, no-AG agreement to both Merck and Glenmark center on the substantial market for Zetia during the period at issue and their estimates of market effects from generic entry. See DPP Compl. at 58-61. Plaintiffs allege that branded Zetia sales in 2011 totaled approximately $1.3 billion. DPP Compl. ¶ 208. In a scenario where Glenmark introduced its generic in December 2011, roughly concurrent with a Merck AG, Plaintiffs allege that the generic market would have captured roughly 80% of the branded sales during the first six months (which correspond to Glenmark's 180-day first-filer exclusivity). Glenmark's generic and Merck's AG would have split those generic sales roughly in half, and the generic would have sold at half the branded price. Merck would also retain a small portion of its branded revenue, which Plaintiffs estimate at about 10% of its pre-generic [*34] volume. Combining these figures, Plaintiffs estimate Merck's total branded and generic Zetia sales at about $780 million over the five-year class period in a scenario with generic entry in December 2011. DPP Compl. ¶¶ 205-09.

Plaintiffs estimate that Merck's actual sales during the class period were between $6.5 and $9.1 billion. Subtracting the early-entry sales estimate yields a predicted value between $5.7 and $8.3 billion. In other words, Plaintiffs allege that by trading a no-AG promise for Glenmark's delayed entry, Merck earned at least $5.7 billion more in profits on Zetia sales than it otherwise would have during the class period. DPP Compl. ¶¶ 210-11.

Glenmark, Plaintiffs allege, also benefited tremendously from the agreement. Using the same assumptions as for Merck, Plaintiffs estimate that Glenmark would have seen about $180 million in generic sales during its 180-day exclusivity period in the absence of a no-AG agreement. With the agreement, however, Glenmark captured the entire generic market during that time (which Plaintiffs allege was about 80% of the branded sales). It was also able to charge a higher price for its generic (90% of the brand price rather than 50%) owing [*35] to the lack of AG competition. Using a 2016 annual Zetia sales figure of $2.6 billion, Plaintiffs allege that Glenmark enjoyed about $936 million in generic sales during its exclusivity window. Thus, Glenmark's agreement with Merck was worth about $806 million in additional sales to Glenmark (or a lesser but still significant $225 million if the Zetia market remained flat from 2011). DPP Compl. ¶¶ 212-17.

D. Subsequent Patent Litigation between Merck and Additional Generic Manufacturers

After settling its litigation with Glenmark, Merck sought reissue of the 1721 patent. In its declaration, Merck acknowledged that at least one claim in the 1721 patent was potentially invalid for inherent anticipation by Merck's earlier disclosures. See DPP Compl. ¶¶ 218-20. The 1721 patent would eventually reissue as U.S. Patent No. RE42,461 ("the '461 patent"). As reissued, it included claims 8 through 13 and parts of claims 3 and 7 of the '721 patent. DPP Compl. ¶¶ 229-30.

In mid-2010, generic manufacturers Mylan Pharmaceuticals, Inc. ("Mylan") and Teva Pharmaceuticals ("Teva") each filed paragraph IV ANDAs seeking approval to market generic Zetia. Merck sued both manufacturers after receiving notice of their filings. DPP Compl. ¶¶ 221-26. Teva would later [*36] settle its claims with Merck by confidential agreement on July 7, 2011. The court entered a consent judgment that prohibited Teva from launching its generic version of Zetia before April 25, 2017. Teva also admitted that its generic infringed the '461 patent. DPP Compl. ¶ 231.

The Mylan litigation continued without settlement. After Merck substituted the reissued '461 patent for the '721 patent, Mylan filed an answer and counterclaims. Mylan argued that Merck's patent was invalid for inherent anticipation and unenforceable for failure to disclose prior art and for failure to disclose an ezetimibe inventor. The court denied Merck's motion for summary judgment on the inequitable conduct issue but granted Merck's motion on infringement, concluding that Mylan's ANDA infringed claims 3, 10, 11, and 12. DPP Compl. ¶¶ 232-35.

On November 18, 2011, Mylan withdrew its defense "based on the non-disclosure of information demonstrating a relationship between compounds claimed in predecessor patents and metabolites of a prior art compound." DPP Compl. ¶ 237. Plaintiffs allege that Mylan's decision was not a reflection of the relative substantive merits of its various arguments but simply a recognition of Mylan's present litigation [*37] position. Because it was not a first-filer, Mylan's potential gains if it succeeded in its litigation were smaller than Glenmark's had been. Mylan would likely be faced with immediate and substantial generic competition on entering the market and would have to wait out Glenmark's 180-day exclusivity in any case. As Plaintiffs characterize it, "Mylan's litigation strategy reflected the choice of not necessarily the best substantive defense, but the cheapest and fastest within the practical constraints." DPP Compl. ¶¶ 238-39.

The Mylan case proceeded to a bench trial. The sole issue at trial was whether the '461 patent was unenforceable for inequitable conduct by Merck in allegedly misrepresenting the inventorship. The court ruled that Mylan had failed to prove inequitable conduct on this issue and therefore upheld the '461 patent against that challenge. The Federal Circuit later affirmed the district court. DPP Compl. ¶¶ 240-41, 241 n.62.

In August 2012, Sandoz filed its own generic Zetia ANDA. Merck sued Sandoz for infringement of the '461 patent. Sandoz counterclaimed seeking a declaratory judgment of invalidity and unenforceability. Among other arguments, it alleged the '461 patent was unenforceable for inequitable conduct based [*38] on Merck's failure to disclose certain publications concerning metabolites of a prior art compound. On September 5, 2013, before the pleadings stage of the suit was complete, Merck and Sandoz settled. Sandoz admitted the '461 patent was valid and infringed and agreed not to launch its generic before April 25, 2017. DPP Compl. ¶¶ 243-47.

IV. Standard of Review

HN12 [+] "A pleading that states a claim for relief must contain ... a short and plain statement of the claim showing that the pleader is entitled to relief." Fed. R. Civ. P. 8\(a\)\(2\). A pleading fails to meet this standard and is subject to dismissal under Rule 12\(b\)\(6\) when it does not "contain sufficient factual matter, accepted as true, to 'state a claim that is plausible on its face.'" Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 678, 129 S. Ct. 1937, 173 L. Ed. 2d 868 \(2009\) (quoting Bell Atl. Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 570, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 \(2007\)). A claim has facial plausibility when the plaintiff pleads factual content "that allows the court to draw the reasonable inference that the defendant is liable for the misconduct alleged." Id. "Factual allegations must be enough to raise a right to relief above the speculative level" and beyond the level that is merely conceivable. Twombly, 550 U.S. at 555. Legal conclusions and "[t]hreadbare recitals of the elements of a cause of action" do not state a claim. Iqbal, 556 U.S. at 678.

HN13 [+] The United States Supreme Court has described the [*39] motion to dismiss analysis in two parts. First, the court must accept the allegations of fact as true. Id. However, a court is not required "to accept as true a legal conclusion couched as a factual allegation," Papasan v. Allain, 478 U.S. 265, 286, 106 S. Ct. 2932, 92 L. Ed. 2d 209 \(1986\), or a legal conclusion unsupported by factual allegations, Iqbal, 556 U.S. at 678-79. After reviewing the allegations, the court must then consider whether they are sufficient to state a plausible claim for relief. This is "a context-specific task that requires the reviewing court to draw on its judicial experience and common sense." Id. A Rule 12\(b\)\(6\) motion, then, should be granted if, "after accepting all well-pleaded allegations in the plaintiff's complaint as true and drawing all reasonable factual inferences from those facts in the plaintiff's favor, it appears certain that the plaintiff cannot prove any set of facts in support of his claim entitling him to relief." Edwards v. City of Goldsboro, 178 F.3d 231, 244 \(4th Cir. 1999\).

HN14 [+] "In antitrust cases in particular, the Supreme Court has stated that 'dismissals prior to giving the plaintiff ample opportunity for discovery should be granted very sparingly.'" Advanced Health-Care Servs., Inc. v. Radford Cnty. Hosp., 910 F.2d 139, 144 \(4th Cir. 1990\) (quoting Hospital Bldg. Co. v Trs. of Rex Hosp., 425 U.S. 738, 747, 96 S. Ct. 1848, 48 L. Ed. 2d 338 \(1976\)).

V. Analysis

Defendants raise two primary arguments in favor of outright dismissal of all antitrust claims. First, they argue that the written Settlement [*40] Agreement resolving the Merck/Glenmark litigation undermines Plaintiff's allegations that it included a "large and unjustified" reverse payment as required by Actavis. Secondly, Defendants contend that Merck's successful defense of the '721 patent in its later litigation with Mylan renders Plaintiffs' claims of anticompetitive effect implausible. Mylan's loss, according to Defendants, undermines Plaintiffs' allegations that Glenmark would have succeeded in its Paragraph IV challenge, thus forcing earlier generic entry. Additionally, Defendants' argue the § 2 Sherman Act claims falter on Plaintiffs' failure to plausibly allege a specific intent to monopolize.

The Plaintiffs contend that the written Settlement Agreement supports rather than undermines their other allegations of a reverse payment settlement between the two companies. They argue that the language of the Settlement Agreement is fully consonant with those allegations and supports the claim that Merck's promise not to introduce an authorized generic constituted a large and unjustified reverse payment. Plaintiffs also contend that Merck's defeat of Mylan's later challenge to the validity of the '721 patent does not preclude their claims of anticompetitive [*41] effect because they were not parties to the Mylan litigation. They also note that Glenmark had obtained a favorable ruling on summary judgment and alleged several other bases to invalidate the '721 patent-arguments not pressed by Mylan. These allegations are also sufficient, Plaintiffs claim, to plausibly support their claims of conspiracy to monopolize under §2.

A. Plaintiffs have Plausibly Alleged a Claim under § 1 of the Sherman Act Arising from a Reverse Payment Settlement between Merck and Glenmark.

HN15[] Section 1 of the Sherman Act broadly prohibits contracts or "combination[s] in restraint of trade," 15 U.S.C. § 1. Not every agreement resolving brand-generic patent litigation produces the anti-competitive effects the Sherman Act sought to address. Only settlement agreements that have "genuine adverse effects on competition" plausibly give rise to antitrust remedies. Actavis, 570 U.S. at 153 (quoting FTC v. Ind. Fed'n of Dentists, 476 U.S. 447, 460-61, 106 S. Ct. 2009, 90 L. Ed. 2d 445 \(1986\)).

HN16[] Patent holders already enjoy the right to exclude competition for the duration of their patents. Walker Process Equip., Inc. v. Food Mach. & Chem. Corp., 382 U.S. 172, 177, 86 S. Ct. 347, 15 L. Ed. 2d 247 ("[A] patent ... is an exception to the general rule against monopolies." (quoting Precision Instrument Mfg. Co. v. Auto Maint. Mach. Co., 324 U.S. 806, 816, 65 S. Ct. 993, 89 L. Ed. 1381, 1945 Dec. Comm'r Pat. 582 \(1945\))). As a result, settlements of Paragraph IV litigation, which frequently allow the generic manufacturer to enter earlier than the patent's expiration, do not always produce [*42] antitrust harm. If they do not include a reverse payment from the patentee as compensation for the generic's agreement to delay generic entry, they are more likely to reflect the compromise of disputed issues than an allocation of monopoly profits. Actavis, 570 U.S. at 158. But where the settlement includes a payment from the patent holder to an alleged infringer, the question presented is, what are the reasons for the payment? If the payment represents no more than "a rough approximation of the litigation expenses saved through the settlement ... [or] compensation for other services that the generic has promised to perform," there is less concern the settlement is intended to divide and extend the monopoly. Id. at 156. But very large payments may not be justified by such traditional settlement considerations. "An unexplained large reverse payment itself would normally suggest that the patentee has serious doubts about the patent's survival." Id. at 157. If so, then its objective may be "to maintain supracompetitive prices to be shared among the patentee and the challenger." Id. Such "large and unjustified" reverse payments raise antitrust concerns and subject the agreement to scrutiny for antitrust harms. Id.

Since Actavis was [*43] decided, the Fourth Circuit has not had occasion to address the precise contours of pleading reverse payment antitrust claims. HN17[] But those appellate courts which have examined them, require no heightened level of pleading detail. See Loestrin 24, 814 F.3d at 542 (requiring "facts sufficient to support the legal conclusion that the settlement at issue involves a large and unjustified reverse payment under Actavis"); King Drug Co., 791 F.3d at 409-10. In the case of a reverse payment based on allegations of a no-AG agreement, the Third Circuit held it sufficient for the Plaintiff to allege the manufacturer "had an incentive to launch its own authorized generic" and did not do so, and that the alleged infringer would earn "many millions of dollars in additional revenue," from the no-AG agreement. King Drug Co., 791 F.3d at 410. These courts recognize that "the value of non-cash reverse payments may be much more difficult to compute than that of their cash counterparts." Loestrin 24, 814 F.3d at 552. But antitrust litigation "often requires an 'elaborate inquiry into the reasonableness of a challenged business practice.'" Id. (quoting Arizona v. Maricopa Cty. Med. Soc'y., 457 U.S. 332, 343, 102 S. Ct. 2466, 73 L. Ed. 2d 48 \(1982\)). And the absence of detailed support for the value of a no-AG promise should not bar the claim at the pleading stage. Id.

In this case, detailed factual [*44] allegations in the Complaints support the Plaintiffs' claim that the Merck/Glenmark settlement included a large and unjustified reverse payment. As recited earlier, the Complaints allege in detail the regulatory framework encouraging generic competition in the pharmaceutical market and the powerful price effects it produces. DPP Compl. ¶¶ 28-64. They allege that Merck had "a well-established history" of launching AG competitors after losing its exclusivity on other brand name drugs. DPP Compl. at ¶ 185 (identifying 12 Merck branded drugs for which the company produced an AG). Zetia was a highly profitable drug and introducing an AG to compete with Glenmark's generic would have been in Merck's financial interest. DPP Compl. ¶¶ 63-64, 186, 211. Plaintiffs also allege that Merck expressly agreed not to do so in the case of Zetia. DPP Compl. ¶¶ 62, 183. On announcing its entry to the generic market, Plaintiffs allege Glenmark issued a press release stating that it would be selling the "first and only generic version of Zetia in the United States." DPP Compl. ¶ 187. Most importantly, Merck did not produce an authorized generic version of Zetia, leaving the generic market entirely to Glenmark [*45] during its 180-day period of exclusivity. DPP Compl. ¶¶ 57, 191, 216. Finally, Plaintiffs estimate the value to Glenmark of Merck's agreement not to introduce an AG at between $225 and $806 million. DPP Compl. ¶¶ 216-17. All of these claims must be taken as true on a motion to dismiss.

Defendants argue that all these factual claims are rendered implausible by the language of the written Settlement Agreement itself, which they claim preserved Merck's ability to launch an AG and to compete with Glenmark through "conventional commercial conduct." Sett. Agr. § 7.2(c). After reviewing the language of the Settlement Agreement in detail, this Report concludes that it does not unambiguously contradict any of Plaintiffs' claims. In fact, construing the Agreement in the light most favorable to Plaintiffs, it actually supports the claim that Merck agreed to limit competition from an authorized generic version of ezetimibe.

1. The written Settlement Agreement does not unambiguously contradict Plaintiffs' allegations of a no-AG agreement.

The Merck/Glenmark Settlement Agreement expressly provides Glenmark with the exclusive rights to distribute "Generic Ezetimibe" during its 180-day period of exclusivity. [*46] Sett. Agr. § 5.3. The definition of "Generic Ezetimibe" includes not only generics offered by generic competitors under separate ANDA filings, but also any drug sold pursuant to the Zetia NDA, unless the drugs were sold "under the trademark Zetia?? or another trademark or trade name of Schering, MSP or their Affiliates." Sett. Agr. § 1.14. According to Defendants, this reservation language in the definition of Generic Ezetimibe would have allowed Merck to introduce an AG in competition with Glenmark and thus all of Plaintiffs' allegations of a no-AG agreement are no longer entitled to the presumption of truth.

HN18 [+] Ordinarily, documents outside the complaint not expressly incorporated may not be considered by the court on a motion to dismiss without converting it to a motion for summary judgment. Witthohn v. Fed. Ins. Co., 164 F. App'x 395, 396 (4th Cir. 2006). However, the court may examine "documents sufficiently referred to in the complaint so long as the authenticity of these documents is not disputed." Id. at 396 (citing Alternative Energy, Inc. v. St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co., 267 F.3d 30, 33 (1st Cir. 2001)); see also Phillips v. LCI Int'l, Inc., 190 F.3d 609, 618 (4th Cir. 1999) (permitting consideration of extraneous material if such materials are "integral to and explicitly relied on in the complaint"). In this case, no party has disputed the authenticity of the Settlement Agreement. Because the Agreement memorializes [*47] a settlement which is integral to the Plaintiffs' Complaint, the court may consider it without converting the motion into one for summary judgment. But its language is only relevant if it unambiguously contradicts the factual claims in the Complaint. It does not.

HN19 [+] Considering documents outside the pleadings does not alter the standard of review on a motion to dismiss requiring that facts and reasonable inferences from those facts must be examined in the light most favorable to the Plaintiffs. And even without any special deference, it is clear that the language of the Settlement Agreement would not permit Merck to sell an AG under the generic name, ezetimibe. A plain language interpretation of the clause suggests the reservation's most likely purpose was to preserve competition only from branded drugs. As a result, the contract language does not render Plaintiffs' claims of a reverse payment no-AG agreement implausible.

First, in light of the other allegations in the Complaint, the Agreement's clear reservation of the ability to sell branded Zetia does not undermine the Plaintiffs' antitrust claims. Plaintiffs have not alleged that Merck could not compete by continuing to sell branded [*48] Zetia, by lowering its price, or generally trying to preserve its market share after generic entry. But the economics of generic competition, which are alleged in detail in the DPP's Consolidated Complaint, plausibly support Plaintiffs' claims that competition from the branded drug Zetia would not diminish the alleged value of the no-AG agreement to Glenmark. See DPP Compl. ¶¶ 54-55, 212-15.

Slightly more difficult is the question of whether a drug sold pursuant to Merck's NDA under "another trademark or trade name of Schering, MSP, or their Affiliates" might still qualify as an AG. If so, it might have competed with Glenmark's own generic sufficient to undermine the plausibility of the facts supporting Plaintiffs' claimed value of the no-AG agreement to Glenmark, and hence its claims of a "large and unjustified" reverse payment. On this point the parties strongly dispute what the written document would permit. Defendants argue that reservation of the ability to market a drug pursuant to Merck's NDA and under a "trade name" suggests that Merck retained the ability to market an authorized generic product so long as the company's name (i.e. Merck) appeared on the label. In support, Defendants [*49] cited the provisions of 21 U.S.C. § 355\(t\)\(3\). HN20↑ This code section requires the FDA to maintain a database listing of all "authorized generic drugs." The statute defines an "authorized generic" for purposes of inclusion in the database as a listed drug which is sold "under a different labeling, packaging, ... product code, labeler code, trade name, or trade mark than the listed drug." § 355\(t\)\(3\)\(B\). Because the statute uses terms similar to the Settlement Agreement - namely, trade name and trademark - Defendants argue that the Settlement Agreement must be read to permit Merck to release an AG competitor.

This argument reads too much into the language of the statutory listing requirements and ignores the Settlement Agreement's language mandating any drug excluded from the definition of Generic Ezetimibe must be sold "under" a Merck trademark or trade name. The reservation does not mirror the language of § 355\(t\)\(3\) exactly. As a result, if it is relevant to interpreting the Agreement, its language suggests that certain AGs - including those sold using a "different labeling, packaging product code [or] labeler code" - would be included in the Agreement's definition of Generic Ezetimibe and thus exclusive to Glenmark during its 180-day [*50] window.

The parties' briefing did not fully address the relevance of the FDA database required by subsection 355(t). But the statute reinforces the regulatory process which provides that all AGs are approved under the brand's NDA (as opposed to a competitor's separate ANDA). Because any authorized generic would have to be approved pursuant to Merck's NDA for Zetia (NDA #21-445), the Settlement Agreement's reference to the NDA in the definition of Generic Ezetimibe most likely indicates that Merck intended to limit its ability to launch an AG. Otherwise, why would there be any reference to the NDA in this defined term?

The Defendants urge the court to construe the Agreement's use of the term "trade name" in section 1.14 to mean any name the company uses in trade - including its company name, Merck. But an earlier provision of the same statutory section suggests that the term "trade name" means something other than the name of the manufacturer. See 21 U.S.C. § 355\(t\)\(1\)\(A\)\(i\) specifying that entries in the database are to include a "drug trade name, brand company manufacturer, and the date the authorized generic entered the market").

More importantly, generic drug names like ezetimibe are expressly not trade names. Generic drug [*51] names do not belong to the drug manufacturers, but are assigned to the drug by the United States Adopted Names Council, an official body of the American Medical Association.<sup>8</sup> The AMA's description of the USAN Council notes that it is responsible for "selecting simple, informative and unique non-proprietary (generic) drug names."<sup>9</sup> Thus, the name ezetimibe - under which generic forms of the drug are sold - is by definition nonproprietary and therefore not a trade name. And pharmaceuticals are not sold "under" a manufacturer's name, but under either a trademarked specialty name for branded drugs (e.g. Zetia, Lipitor, or Celebrex) or under the generic name assigned by the USAN Council (e.g. ezetimibe, atorvastatin, celecoxib). In either case the manufacturer's name (Merck, in the case of Zetia) would appear on the label.

<sup>8</sup> See Daphne E. Smith Marsh, Overview of Generic Drugs and Drug Naming, Merck Manual Consumer Version (Aug. 2017), www.merckmanuals.com/home/drugs/brand-name-and-generic-drugs/overview-of-generic-drug-and-drug-naming.

So even if the court construed the Settlement Agreement's use of the term trade name to allow Merck to market something with a different trade name that might be recognized as an AG under the terms of § 355(t)(3), it would not fundamentally change Plaintiffs' theory. The Agreement's plain language would still prevent Merck from selling an [*52] AG under the nonproprietary name ezetimibe. In fact, Plaintiffs concede that the reservation in the definition of Generic Ezetimibe would permit the sale of branded Zetia or another branded drug (should Merck choose to launch one) using the same active ingredient. Absent additional evidence regarding the parties' intention in crafting the definition of Generic Ezetimibe in the Settlement Agreement, this is the most that can be said of Merck's ability to compete in the generic market during the 180-day period of Glenmark's exclusivity. And this reservation - the ability to make another branded competitor - is insufficient to contradict and render implausible all of Plaintiffs' express allegations of a large reverse payment resulting from the no-AG agreement.

The Complaint describes dynamics of the market for generic drugs which produce rapid price decreases following generic entry. DPP Compl. ¶¶ 50-53. It asserts that "every state has adopted drug product selection laws that either require or permit pharmacies to substitute AB-rated generic equivalents for brand prescriptions." DPP Compl. ¶ 51. It describes generics as "essentially commodities" with price as the primary basis for competition. [*53] DPP Compl. ¶ 50. It also describes the effects of brand manufacturers selling an AG. DPP Compl. ¶¶ 59-64. Like other generics, AGs primarily compete on price. These allegations, accepted in the light most favorable to Plaintiffs, are sufficient to establish a significant value in Merck's promise not to launch an AG under the generic name "ezetimibe." The other allegations in the Complaint, and the language of the Settlement Agreement itself, are sufficient to plausibly allege that they made such a promise. This is particularly so in light of other corroborating evidence of the Agreement, including Glenmark's claims to exclusivity on release of its generic ezetimibe and Merck's failure to release any authorized generic in competition with Glenmark's generic product throughout the 180-day period of exclusivity.

At this stage of the proceedings, it is not necessary for the court to finally resolve the meaning of Generic Ezetimibe which was exclusively reserved to Glenmark under the Settlement Agreement. Plaintiffs have expressly pled the existence of a no-AG agreement, as well as other corroborating facts. Although the court could disregard facts which were contradicted by unambiguous [*54] language of the written Settlement Agreement, reservation of the right to sell branded Zetia, or another trademarked or trade-named drug with the same active ingredient would not so diminish the value of the no-AG agreement Plaintiffs have alleged as to render their claims deficient. Because the Settlement Agreement appears to reserve only these options to Merck, the language of that Agreement does not undermine the allegations of a large and unjustified reverse payment.

2. Merck's vindication of the patent in the Mylan litigation does not diminish the plausibility of Plaintiffs' allegations of anticompetitive effect.

Defendants also challenge the § 1 claim on the grounds that Plaintiffs have failed to plausibly allege anticompetitive effects. This argument is based on Merck's later defeat of a challenge to the validity of a reissued version of the '721 patent in litigation it filed against Mylan labs, another generic competitor. Because Merck upheld the patent in its later litigation with Mylan, Defendants argue that Plaintiffs' allegation that Glenmark would have prevailed in the Merck/Glenmark litigation and entered the market with a generic competitor earlier is rendered implausible. According [*55] to Defendants, absent Glenmark's ability to invalidate the '721 patent and begin generic competition earlier, its decision to delay entry did not produce any anticompetitive effect. Instead, its delay simply respected Merck's valid patent exclusivity through the remainder of the term.

As with Defendants' contractual arguments, the Plaintiffs counter by noting the express allegations in the Complaint which suggest that the Merck/Glenmark settlement produced anticompetitive effects. They allege that but for the no-AG promise, the strength of Glenmark's patent challenge would have produced one of two outcomes. The two companies would have settled with an earlier generic entry date, or Glenmark would have prevailed in the litigation, invalidated the '721 patent, and launched its generic thereafter. DPP Compl. ¶¶ 199-203. Plaintiffs allege either of these alternative outcomes would have accelerated generic entry and reduced prices. DPP Compl. ¶¶ 78-88, 203-204. Both outcomes depend on the plausibility of Plaintiffs' allegations that Glenmark's patent claims against Merck had substantial merit. If these allegations are plausible, the § 1 claim alleges anticompetitive effect because Glenmark's delay is not entirely [*56] out of respect for a valid patent, but rather the result of the Defendants' agreement to allocate unlawful monopoly profits obtained by paying Glenmark to delay generic entry in the form of the no-AG agreement.

As alleged in the Complaint, Glenmark's validity and enforceability claims against the '721 patent relied in part on the theory that certain compounds claimed in the '721 patent were inherent metabolites of a compound disclosed in an earlier Schering patent application. DPP Compl. ¶¶ 155-57. Glenmark claimed Merck failed to disclose these metabolites to the PTO during the reissue proceedings. It also alleged other failures to cite prior art, and that the combination of these failures to disclose amounted to inequitable conduct, which would invalidate the entire patent. DPP Compl. ¶¶ 158-60. None of these claims were litigated to final resolution in the Mylan case.

Plaintiffs also allege that Glenmark argued Merck may have failed to name all inventors of ezetimibe and that the '721 patent was invalid for obviousness-type double patenting over the claims of the earlier expiring '365 patent. DPP Compl. ¶¶ 163-65. Finally, Glenmark argued that certain claims in the '721 patent were invalid because Merck failed to identify in the predecessor [*57] patent the type of error that can be corrected on reissue. DPP Compl. ¶ 164.

Glenmark moved for summary judgment on two of its claims, and shortly before trial the district court granted summary judgment on one and denied the other. Specifically, the court granted Glenmark summary judgment on its claim of improper reissue, finding that Merck had failed to identify a type of error subject to correction on reissue. The court denied Glenmark's other argument, concluding that disputes of material fact precluded summary judgment on its obviousness-type double patenting claims. DPP Compl. ¶ 171. Merck did not move for summary judgment on any of Glenmark's claims, and the remaining arguments, including the claims of inherent anticipation and inequitable conduct, were reserved for trial at the time the parties settled. DPP Compl. ¶¶ 178-80.

Following its settlement with Glenmark, Merck sought reissue of the '721 patent to correct errors in certain claims. The reissue petition acknowledged that at least one claim in the '721 patent was potentially invalid for inherent anticipation as a result of the metabolite issue. DPP Compl. ¶¶ 218-20. Merck also faced new paragraph IV filings from Teva, Sandoz, and Mylan, and [*58] brought infringement actions against each. Both the Teva and Sandoz matters settled, but Mylan's proceeded to a bench trial before the same district judge who had presided over the Merck/Glenmark litigation. DPP Compl. ¶¶ 240-41. As in the Glenmark case, Mylan argued that Merck's patent was invalid for inherent anticipation and unenforceable as a result of its failure to disclose prior art. Mylan also alleged inequitable conduct in the failure to disclose an ezetimibe inventor. Merck moved for summary judgment on the inequitable conduct claims, which the district court denied. Later, Mylan withdrew its defenses based on failure to disclose compounds claimed in predecessor patents and inherent metabolites of prior art. DPP Compl. ¶ 237. The company proceeded to trial solely on the basis of its claim that Merck committed inequitable conduct in failing to disclose a named ezetimibe inventor. The district court resolved this issue in favor of Merck and upheld the patent against this remaining challenge. DPP Compl. ¶¶ 240-41.

As the foregoing summary demonstrates, Merck's defense of the patent in litigation initiated after the Merck/Glenmark settlement does not entirely negate Plaintiffs' [*59] claims of anticompetitive effects resulting from that settlement. Although the Mylan litigation may eventually bear on Plaintiffs' claims of anticompetitive effect, important differences between the Mylan and Glenmark challenges undercut the Defendants' argument that Plaintiffs' claims of anticompetitive effect lack plausibility.

In In re Lipitor Antitrust Litigation, the Third Circuit addressed and rejected a similar claim. 868 F.3d 231. There, the district court had dismissed antitrust claims alleging Walker Process fraud largely because a different district court had rejected similar allegations and foreign courts had upheld the patent against the related fraud claims in previous litigation. Id. at 267. The Third Circuit reversed the district court's dismissal, finding that the lower court's reliance on cases to which plaintiffs had not been party "amounted to the application of collateral estoppel and was therefore improper." Id.

While not precisely analogous, the Third Circuit's opinion is instructive. There, as here, the issue was not whether the plaintiff was literally bound by a prior ruling, but whether a prior ruling contrary to the facts alleged in the case before the court could render those allegations [*60] implausible. After noting that numerous factors prevented the direct application of collateral estoppel, the court also held that the prior decisions had no bearing on the plausibility of allegations made by the plaintiff before it. Id. at 269. Resolution of similar fraud allegations in litigation not involving those plaintiffs "should not dictate the plausibility of ... plaintiff's allegations when they were not parties to that litigation." Id.

Likewise here, the outcome of the Mylan litigation does not dictate the plausibility of Plaintiffs' allegations of anticompetitive effect. In addition to the fundamental issue that none of these Plaintiffs were parties to the prior litigation, the Mylan and Glenmark challenges were both procedurally and factually different. Procedurally, it is obvious that at the time of the Merck/Glenmark settlement, the litigating parties were in a significantly different posture than Mylan and Merck. Glenmark had already secured first filer status and would profit immensely from its 180-day period of exclusivity. Mylan, though it might force generic entry sooner, would still not enjoy any period of exclusive distribution and its concomitant period of higher margins [*61] on generic sales. DPP Compl. ¶ 55 (alleging 80% of first-filing generic's lifetime profit is earned during period of exclusivity).

Glenmark had also already persuaded the trial judge that certain claims in the '721 patent were invalid as a result of improper reissue. Several other of Glenmark's arguments were set for trial, suggesting Merck did not believe any were subject to dismissal on a motion for summary judgment. Although the Federal Circuit later reversed the precedent underlying Glenmark's summary judgment win, the facts alleged in this court establish that at the time of the settlement, Glenmark's case against the Merck patent could plausibly be described as very strong.

The question to be examined in this litigation is not whether later-developed facts undermined the strength of Glenmark's claims. Rather, it is whether the parties' actions at the time of the settlement were motivated exclusively by traditional settlement considerations or, as Plaintiffs allege, the allocation of monopoly profits to unlawfully extend Merck's patent exclusivity. In this regard, the existence of a large reverse payment in the form of a no-AG agreement disproportionate in value to anticipated litigation costs, [*62] and independent from services to be rendered or other justifications, makes the possibility of such anticompetitive effects far more likely. Lipitor, 868 F.3d at 256 (citing Actavis, 570 U.S. at 59).

In short, the fact that Merck successfully defeated a single challenge by a later-in-time ANDA filer does not totally undermine Plaintiffs' claims of anticompetitive effect. The no-AG settlement Plaintiffs allege arose almost two years before Merck's win in the Mylan case. DPP Compl. ¶ 241. Despite not having discovery, Plaintiffs have also credibly alleged that Mylan's decision to abandon certain claims of inequitable conduct was motivated by practical trial strategy and its dim prospects for obtaining first filer status as to any of Merck's branded cholesterol drugs. DPP Compl. ¶¶ 237-39. The no-AG Agreement alleged in the Complaint plausibly asserts a large and unjustified payment to a first filer. HN21[↑] Such payments "remove[] from consideration the most motivated challenge to a suspect patent." Actavis, 570 U.S. at 155 (quoting C. Scott Hemphill, Paying for Delay: Pharmaceutical Patent Settlement as a Regulatory Design Problem, 81 N.Y.U. L. Rev. 1553, 1586 (2006)). The Supreme Court recognized the "special advantage that the 180-day exclusivity period gives to first filers," and the resulting [*63] incentive to patent holders in this context to overcome the ordinary incentives to resist paying off such challengers. Id. at 156. Plaintiffs have plausibly alleged that Merck and Glenmark reached such an agreement and the court should DENY Defendants' motion to dismiss the § 1 Sherman Act claims.

B. Plaintiffs' Allegations of a No-AG Reverse Payment Settlement Agreement Plausibly Allege a Conspiracy to Monopolize the Market for Ezetimibe under § 2 of the Sherman Act.

Defendants also moved to dismiss Plaintiffs' claims under § 2 of the Sherman Act, which allege a conspiracy to monopolize trade. 15 U.S.C. § 2. They argue that Plaintiffs' § 2 claims fail for the same reasons already analyzed in regard to their § 1 claims. They also claim that Plaintiffs have failed to plausibly allege facts sufficient to support the specific intent required of a conspiracy to monopolize.

HN22[] To state a claim under § 2, Plaintiffs must allege a "concerted action, a specific intent to achieve an unlawful monopoly, and commission of an overt act in furtherance of the conspiracy." Advanced Health-Care Servs., 910 F.2d at 150. While a conspiracy does require proof of specific intent, the overt acts of each alleged conspirator do not themselves need to be predatory. Id. Specific intent refers to [*64] an intent to conspire, "a meeting of minds in an unlawful arrangement." Am. Tobacco Co. v. United States, 328 U.S. 781, 810, 66 S. Ct. 1125, 90 L. Ed. 1575 \(1946\).

The cases Defendants cite in support of this brief argument do not support dismissal. In fact, Advanced Health-Care Services, which the Defendants rely on for the elements of the claim, reversed a district court's dismissal of § 2 claims where the Plaintiff had alleged a conspiracy to monopolize a regional market for durable medical equipment (DME). 910 F.2d at 150. That case involved allegations of exclusionary contracts between hospitals and another DME supplier. The Fourth Circuit wrote that the agreements themselves and their implementation were sufficient to state a colorable claim for conspiracy to monopolize the DME markets around the hospitals. See id. at 147-49. While not precisely analogous, the Plaintiffs here have also alleged that the Merck/Glenmark Settlement Agreement involved a contract which sought to extend Merck's monopoly for the sale of ezetimibe and exclude competitors by preventing competition from an authorized generic. The Complaint details Merck's monopoly power, derived from direct evidence of its ability to control the price of ezetimibe and exclude competitors. DPP Compl. ¶ 280. It alternatively pleads a relevant market, [*65] both in terms of product and geography. DPP Compl. ¶¶ 281-82; see E.I. du Pont de Nemours & Co. v. Kolon Indus., Inc., 637 F.3d 435, 450 \(4th Cir. 2011\). Plaintiffs also allege that the Settlement Agreement provided Glenmark with exclusive rights to sell Generic Ezetimibe for the lucrative 180-day first-filer window, and that Glenmark agreed to settle its patent claims in order to receive this exclusive arrangement. DPP Compl. ¶¶ 212-17. HN23[] "[A] monopolist's use of exclusive contracts, in certain circumstances, may give rise to a § 2 violation even though the contracts foreclose less than [a] 40% to 50% share." United States v. Microsoft Corp., 253 F.3d 34, 70, 346 U.S. App. D.C. 330 \(D.C. Cir. 2001\). Allegations of a dominant market share, combined with exclusionary contracts, are generally sufficient to state a § 2 claim. See E.I. du Pont de Nemours, 637 F.3d at 452; Advanced Health-Care Servs., 910 F.2d at 147.

Defendants do not contest Plaintiffs' pleading with respect to § 2's requirements of overt acts or antitrust injury. Because the facts alleged in the Complaint are also sufficient to plausibly support the specific intent necessary to state a conspiracy claim, the court should DENY the Defendants' motion to dismiss the § 2 claims.

C. The Retailer Plaintiffs Have Failed to Plausibly Allege a Per Se Violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act, or Any Claim for Injunctive Relief.

The Retailer Plaintiffs' three Complaints also allege a per se violation of § 1, arguing [*66] that the Merck/Glenmark Settlement Agreement is per se illegal under the Sherman Act. Retailers claim the Agreement includes a horizontal market allocation, output restriction, and price fixing agreement, all of which they argue presumptively violate longstanding antitrust precedent. See e.g., Catalano, Inc. v. Target Sales, Inc., 446 U.S. 643, 100 S. Ct. 1925, 64 L. Ed. 2d 580 \(1980\) (holding competitors' price fixing agreement was illegal per se); United States v. Topco Assocs., Inc., 405 U.S. 596, 92 S. Ct. 1126, 31 L. Ed. 2d 515 \(1972\) (agreement among competitors to allocate market geographically is illegal per se).

HN24[] Per se analysis under the Sherman Act applies to such agreements because repeated review of similar conduct produced the consistent conclusion that it was "plainly anticompetitive," lacking any "redeeming virtue." Broadcast Music, Inc. v. Columbia Broad. Sys., Inc., 441 U.S. 1, 9-10, 99 S. Ct. 1551, 60 L. Ed. 2d 1 \(1979\). The per se rule "permits courts to make 'categorical judgments' that certain practices, including price fixing, horizontal output restrictions, and market-allocation agreements, are illegal per se." Continental Airlines, Inc. v. United Airlines, Inc., 277 F.3d 499, 509 \(4th Cir. 2002\) (quoting Northwest Wholesale Stationers, Inc. v. Pac. Stationery & Printing Co., 472 U.S. 284, 289, 105 S. Ct. 2613, 86 L. Ed. 2d 202 \(1985\)). But it is only appropriate after courts have had considerable experience with the type of restraint at issue, and only if courts can predict with confidence that such agreements "would be invalidated in all or almost all instances under the rule of reason." Leegin Creative Leather Prods., Inc. v. PSKS, Inc., 551 U.S. 877, 886-87, 127 S. Ct. 2705, 168 L. Ed. 2d 623 (2007).

This authority demonstrates that the Retailers have failed to plausibly [*67] allege a per se violation of § 1. Most fundamentally, this is because Retailers' allegations of market allocation, output restriction, and price fixing ignore Merck's existing patent rights. Absent a loss in the Merck/Glenmark patent litigation, Merck already enjoyed the right to exclude Glenmark as a competitor beyond the entry date fixed by the Settlement Agreement. The same patent monopoly allowed Merck to set prices for its branded Zetia throughout the term of the patent and to license other manufacturers to produce the drug, all without running afoul of the per se rules. See Broadcast Music, 441 U.S. at 24-25 (analyzing license agreement under the rule of reason).

While Retailers have alleged that Merck's patent was subject to Glenmark's invalidity challenge and thus insufficient to support the reverse payment alleged, those facts are sharply in dispute. The problem with Retailers' per se claim is that it would eliminate Defendants' right to contest the issue. A claim of a per se price fixing agreement, for example, depends upon the existence of a naked agreement to fix prices. See Ratino v. Med. Serv. of Dist. of Columbia, 718 F.2d 1260, 1269-70 (4th Cir. 1983). Retailers have not alleged such an agreement because the agreement they do allege also settled contested patent litigation that would [*68] have affected Defendants' ability to set prices.

Actavis itself recognized that certain patent Settlement Agreements could have procompetitive effects, including (as in this case) permitting generic competition before the scheduled patent term expires. See Actavis, 570 U.S. at 154. In addition, settling parties may lawfully provide for payments premised on "traditional settlement considerations such as avoided litigation costs or fair value for services." Id. at 156. In making these observations, the Supreme Court rejected the more cursory "quick look" review of reverse payment settlement agreements urged by the FTC. Id. at 159. And in so doing, the Court implicitly held that per se treatment of reverse payment settlements was inappropriate.

Much of the Retailers' briefing on this point is spent analogizing the market effects of the Settlement Agreement to forms of anticompetitive conduct which make up the "principal per se rules." Retailers Br. at 11. They observe that the Defendants agreed in the Settlement Agreement to "allocate" the market for ezetimibe exclusively to Merck until the generic entry date fixed by the Agreement. Thereafter, they argue that the market for Generic Ezetimibe would be reserved to Glenmark for its [*69] 180-day first-filer window. But for a per se violation based on market allocation to exist, such an allocation would have to be the sole — or at least a primary — purpose of the Agreement. Such a claim, which would be essential to the already strained market-allocation analogy, is rendered implausible by Merck's existing patent. In short, before the paragraph IV filing Merck already retained the right to legally "allocate" the ezetimibe market to preclude competition from Glenmark. Likewise, Glenmark's status as a first filer earned it a 180-day period of exclusivity precluding competition from other generic makers. Retailers' claimed per se bar fails to account for the complexity presented by these facts. Indeed, application of a per se rule would appear to preclude a mechanism for even examining the Defendants' proffered justifications for settlement. HN25 [↑] For this reason, courts analyzing reverse payment agreements have consistently applied the rule of reason analysis. In re Lipitor Antitrust Litig., 855 F.3d 126, 136, 140 (3rd Cir. 2017); In re Nexium \(Esomeprazole\) Antitrust Litig., 842 F.3d 34, 41-42 (1st Cir. 2016).

The Retailers' claims of a horizontal output restriction and horizontal price fixing have the same fatal defect. Each relies solely on a characterization of the Agreement's effects while ignoring entirely the admittedly [*70] lawful basis Defendants assert for those same effects.

There may come a time when reverse payment settlements are sufficiently uniform that "courts can predict with confidence that [they] would be invalidated in all or almost all instances under the rule of reason. Leegin Creative, 551 U.S. at 886-87. But that time does not appear close at hand. FTC v. Abbvie, Inc., 107 F. Supp. 3d 428, 436-37 (E.D. Pa. 2015) (finding that alleged reverse payment agreement was "procompetitive" and granting defendants' motion to dismiss), appeal docketed No. 18-2621 (3d Cir. Jul. 23, 2018); In re Wellbutrin XL Antitrust Litig., 133 F.

Supp. 3d 734 (E.D. Pa. 2015) (granting summary judgment for defendants in reverse payments case after applying rule of reason analysis); aff'd, 868 F.3d 132 (3rd Cir. 2017). Accordingly, this Report recommends the court GRANT Defendants' motion to dismiss Count 1 of the Retailer's Complaint which asserts per se claims under § 1 with prejudice.<sup>10</sup>

Defendants also moved to dismiss Retailers' request for injunctive relief. Walgreens Compl. ¶¶ 218-19; Rite Aid Compl. ¶¶ 217-18; CVS Compl. ¶¶ 217-18. They argue that Retailers' complaints do not allege any ongoing conduct to enjoin as the market for ezetimibe is now fully competitive with multiple generic competitors. The Retailers - the only group of plaintiffs to request injunctive relief - argue that they are not required [*71] to plead the exact nature of the injunctive relief they are requesting. They claim an injunction may be necessary to address "continuing effects" of Defendants' actions, or to prevent future wrongdoing. Neither of these arguments is sufficient to plausibly allege a right to injunctive relief.

HN27[] Plaintiffs seeking injunctive relief must "demonstrate a significant threat of injury from an impending violation of the antitrust laws or from a contemporary violation likely to continue or recur." Zenith Radio Corp. v. Hazeltine Research, Inc., 395 U.S. 100, 130, 89 S. Ct. 1562, 23 L. Ed. 2d 129 (1969). When the anticompetitive actions have ceased - such as with the entry of generic competition - there is usually nothing to enjoin. See United Food & Commercial Workers Local 1776 & Participating Emp's Health & Welfare Fund v. Teikoku Pharma USA, Inc., No. 14-md-02521, 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 94220, 2015 WL 4397396, at *3 (N.D. Cal. July 17, 2015) (dismissing injunctive relief claims because "generic drugs were able to enter the market"); United Food & Commercial Workers Unions & Emp's Midwest Health Benefits Fund v. Novartis Pharm. Corp., No. 15cv12732, 2017 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 102389, 2017 WL 2837002, at *1 (D. Mass. June 30, 2017), aff'd, 902 F.3d 1 (1st Cir. 2018) (request for injunction mooted by generic entry).

The Retailers do not really distinguish this precedent; rather they insist that at this stage of the proceedings they are not required to specify the exact behavior sought [*72] to be enjoined. They argue that courts commonly enter injunctions after unlawful conduct has ceased. See, e.g., California v. Am. Stores Co., 495 U.S. 271, 274-75, 110 S. Ct. 1853, 109 L. Ed. 2d 240 (1990) (approving court-ordered divestiture to address effects of unlawful merger). But in this case, the only anticompetitive conduct alleged has been addressed by the entry of multiple generic competitors. CVS Compl. ¶¶ 200-203. And any continuing effects of the past conduct alleged can be addressed by money damages. CVS Compl. ¶¶ 159-65. While Plaintiffs may not be compelled to specify the exact nature of injunctive relief, they must at least allege some basis to suggest that enjoining future behavior will be a necessary component of full relief. Because money damages capable of calculation will adequately remedy any harm Retailers allege, they have not plausibly alleged a basis for injunctive relief to address continuing harm.

The threat that future similar harm might arise without specifying "which drugs might be involved, or what fraudulent conduct might be undertaken, or which Plaintiffs might buy the drugs at supra-competitive prices" is also insufficient to state a claim for injunctive relief. See In re DDAVP Indirect Purchaser Antitrust Litig., 903 F. Supp. 2d 198, 210-11 (S.D.N.Y. 2012). Such claims are too speculative to provide a basis for the extraordinary [*73] remedy of injunction. See In re Plavix Indirect Purchaser Antitrust Litig., No. 1:06-cv-226, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 8940, 2011 WL 335034, at *4 (S.D. Ohio Jan. 31, 2011) (dismissing claim for injunctive relief based on "yet-to-be-determined reverse payment agreement on some yet unidentified drug").

The Retailers note that Defendants have previously had to defend reverse payment allegations, and imply this pattern distinguishes their claims from others seeking to enjoin future behavior. But the conduct in other reverse payment actions arose before Actavis was decided, at a time when circuits were split over whether such agreements were even subject to antitrust scrutiny. With the Supreme Court's pronouncement in 2013, the suggestion that Merck or Glenmark is likely to commit some unspecified future antitrust violation with respect to some unnamed future drug requires too much conjecture to survive the Defendants' motion. The court should GRANT the motion to dismiss the Retailers' request for injunctive relief without prejudice.

D. The End Payor Plaintiffs Have Standing and Plausibly Allege Claims under the Laws of Thirty Jurisdictions, but Some Claims Should Be Dismissed for Failing to Allege Elements Required by the Authority They Rely on.

The proposed EPP class [*74] asserts four separate categories of claims under the laws of thirty-eight states, the District of Columbia, and Puerto Rico. Defendants challenge these claims on multiple fronts. As explained in the following subsections, this Report recommends GRANTING IN PART and DENYING IN PART Defendants' motion to dismiss all the EPPs' state-law claims. This Report first addresses Defendants' challenges that apply to all categories of claims the EPPs are asserting. It then examines each category separately and by state as necessary. A summary of the recommended dispositions organized by jurisdiction is attached to this Report as Exhibit A. Exhibit B to the Report lists the ten states as to which all claims are recommended to be dismissed, and the claims remaining in the other thirty jurisdictions.

1. The EPPs have alleged anticompetitive conduct sufficient to plausibly state antitrust claims.

First, Defendants argue that all of the EPPs' claims fail for the reasons asserted against the DPPs and Retailers—namely, that the EPP Complaint fails to allege a large and unjustified reverse payment. As described above, this Report concludes that the various complaints have alleged sufficient facts to state [*75] a claim under §§ 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act. The EPPs' derivative state claims rest on the same allegations and likewise should not be dismissed on this basis.

2. The EPPs have Article III standing and Defendants' objection to the named class representatives' ability to represent absent class members in other states should be addressed under Rule 23.

In their second broad challenge to the EPP claims, Defendants argue that the EPPs lack standing to assert claims in states where no named plaintiff resides or suffered an injury—that is, paid for allegedly overpriced Zetia or generic ezetimibe. Defendants insist that because the named EPP class representatives themselves cannot assert claims in those states, they lack standing to assert them at this stage in the litigation. The EPPs reply that Defendants are improperly conflating standing issues with Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 23's class certification requirements.

HN28 Article III standing requires that claimants demonstrate three elements: injury in fact, causation, and redressability. Lujan v. Defs. of Wildlife, 504 U.S. 555, 560-61, 112 S. Ct. 2130, 119 L. Ed. 2d 351 (1992). Standing is ordinarily a "threshold jurisdictional question" decided at the outset of a case. See Pye v. United States, 269 F.3d 459, 466 (4th Cir. 2001). However, the Supreme Court has recognized an exception in certain circumstances where class-certification [*76] issues are "logically antecedent" to Article III considerations. Amchem Prods., Inc. v. Windsor, 521 U.S. 591, 612, 117 S. Ct. 2231, 138 L. Ed. 2d 689 (1997); see also Ortiz v. Fibreboard Corp., 527 U.S. 815, 831, 119 S. Ct. 2295, 144 L. Ed. 2d 715 (1999).

As the parties' extensive briefing illustrates, courts are split on when exactly that exception applies.<sup>11</sup> At minimum, Amchem appeared to endorse deferring standing questions when class-certification issues are dispositive. See 521

<sup>11</sup> Compare Mem. Opp. Defs.' Mot. Dismiss EPP Compl. 6 & n.7 (ECF No. 188) (citing numerous cases representing a "growing consensus on this question"), with Reply Mem. Supp. Mot. Dismiss EPP Compl. 5 & n.2 (ECF No. 202) (citing numerous decisions among the "majority of cases" that have "rejected EPPs' position").

U.S. at 612; see also Winfield v. Citibank, N.A., 842 F. Supp. 2d 560, 574 (S.D.N.Y. 2012). If class certification could affect the standing inquiry (such as by eliminating certain claims or proposed class members), then deferring the latter makes logical sense.<sup>12</sup> Other courts have gone further, explicitly holding that whether named plaintiffs may properly represent nonparty class members with claims under the laws of different states "is a question of predominance under Rule 23(b)(3), not a question of 'adjudicatory competence' under Article III." Langan v. Johnson & Johnson Consumer Cos., 897 F.3d 88, 93 (2d Cir. 2018); accord In re Asacol Antitrust Litig., 907 F.3d 42, 48-51 (1st Cir. 2018); Payton v. Cty. of Kane, 308 F.3d 673, 680, 682 (7th Cir. 2002).

I am persuaded by those opinions examining Amchem and Ortiz that this case is one where class certification is "logically antecedent" to Article III standing issues. The named class representatives clearly have standing to press claims in those states where they reside and made or reimbursed purchases. Defendants allege only that they may not, at this stage, assert claims in other states on behalf of those [*77] class members who are currently absent. HN29 But whether named plaintiffs may properly represent absent class members is exactly the focus of the Rule 23 class certification analysis. The named class representatives are not themselves seeking recovery under the laws of foreign states. They merely allege that all the claims derive from the same source-Defendants' unlawful reverse payment Settlement Agreement. And the proposed class members from those foreign states would, if certified, undoubtedly have standing to pursue claims under those states' laws. This is precisely the situation where class certification is "logically antecedent" to Article III standing. See In re Polyurethane Foam Antitrust Litig., 799 F. Supp. 2d 777, 804-06 (N.D. Ohio 2011); Jepson v. Ticor Title Ins. Co., No. C06-1723, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 53480, 2007 WL 2060856, at *1-2 (W.D. Wash. May 1, 2007). Closely scrutinizing class standing at this juncture "would render superfluous the Rule 23 commonality and predominance requirements because any case that survived such a strict Article III analysis would by definition present only common issues." Asacol, 907 F.3d at 49.

This Report therefore recommends that the court DENY Defendants' motion to dismiss for lack of standing the EPPs' claims in the following jurisdictions: Alaska, Hawaii, Maine, Nebraska, New Hampshire, Vermont, Puerto Rico, and the District of Columbia. Instead, any standing challenges should be [*78] examined during the class certification proceedings.

The remaining challenges to the EPPs' claims can be broken down by category and in many cases by specific states when the laws of those states vary in form or function. This Report analyzes each of these challenges in turn, addressing specific states where necessary.

3. Defendants' motion to dismiss the EPPs' state antitrust claims in nineteen jurisdictions should be denied.

In count one, the EPPs assert antitrust claims under the laws of twenty-four states, the District of Columbia, and Puerto Rico. Defendants moved to dismiss claims in nineteen of these jurisdictions either for lack of standing or for additional reasons as described below.

a. Indirect purchasers have standing under Puerto Rico law.

Defendants argue that the EPPs cannot maintain a claim under the antitrust laws of Puerto Rico because the jurisdiction has not passed an Illinois Brick repealer statute. HN30 In Illinois Brick, the Supreme Court held that indirect purchasers of goods produced by-entities engaged in anticompetitive conduct lack standing to bring claims under the federal antitrust laws. Illinois Brick Co. v. Illinois, 431 U.S. 720, 746-47, 97 S. Ct. 2061, 52 L. Ed. 2d 707 (1977). Because state antitrust laws are largely modeled off federal law and interpreted [*79] accordingly, this effectively limited indirect purchaser antitrust actions in any forum. In response, many states passed so-called Illinois Brick repealer statutes which specifically authorize suits by indirect purchasers under state antitrust laws.

The Supreme Court upheld these statutes in *California v. ARC America Corp., 490 U.S. 93, 109 S. Ct. 1661, 104 L. Ed. 2d 86 \(1989\)*.<sup>13</sup>

Defendants argue that the antitrust laws in Puerto Rico are subject to the Illinois Brick prohibition and therefore do not permit actions by indirect purchasers. The EPPs respond that the Puerto Rico Supreme Court has rejected this limitation, thereby-permitting indirect purchaser actions.

Authority on this question is mixed. Compare *Aggrenox, 94 F. Supp. 3d at 252* (indirect purchaser actions not permitted), with *Rivera-Muniz v. Horizon Lines Inc., 737 F. Supp. 2d 57, 61 \(D.P.R. 2010\)* (indirect purchaser actions permitted). The *Aggrenox* court reasoned that because the Puerto Rico Antitrust Act is modeled on the Clayton Act, it is subject to the Illinois Brick prohibition in the absence of a clear repealer. See *Aggrenox, 94 F. Supp. 3d at 252*.

Having reviewed several cases, I agree with the District of Puerto Rico's reasoning in *Rivera-Muniz*. There the court noted that under Puerto Rico Supreme Court precedent, private antitrust plaintiffs "need not establish anything beyond a factual causal relation between [*80] the injury and the violation." *Rivera-Muniz, 737 F. Supp. 2d at 61* (quoting *Pressure Vessels P.R. v. Empire Gas P.R., 137 D.P.R. 497, 520, 1994 Juris P.R. 144 \(P.R. 1994\)*). Based on this interpretation of the statute and Puerto Rico's liberal construction of antitrust standing requirements, the court held that "it is immaterial whether plaintiffs are direct or indirect purchasers." Id.; see also Order, *Sergeants Benevolent Ass'n Health & Welfare Fund v. Actavis, PLC, No. 15 Civ. 6549, 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 220574, 2018 WL 7197233, at \*23 \(S.D.N.Y. Dec. 26, 2018\)*. While true that *Pressure Vessels* did not explicitly mention Illinois Brick, its expansive standing test is clearly incompatible with Illinois Brick's indirect purchaser prohibition. See *Pressure Vessels, 137 D.P.R. at 518-20*. This indicates that Puerto Rico's antitrust law is not subject to that prohibition. See *Aggrenox, 94 F. Supp. 3d at 252* (acknowledging that a jurisdiction's own courts can "authoritatively interpret their laws as allowing antitrust recovery by indirect purchasers even in the absence of an express Illinois Brick repealer by the legislature").

In light of the Puerto Rico Supreme Court's statements in *Pressure Vessels*, this Report concludes that **HN31** indirect purchaser actions are permitted under the antitrust laws of that jurisdiction. Defendants' motion to dismiss the EPPs' claims on this basis should therefore be DENIED.

b. The EPPs' plausibly allege intrastate connection sufficient to meet the requirements of state law.

Defendants argue that the antitrust laws of [*81] certain jurisdictions require proof of some degree of intrastate connection. As Defendants characterize the broad allegations in the complaints, they describe only a nationwide pattern of conduct that lacks substantial intrastate action or effects. Defendants argue that failure to make such allegations is fatal to claims in states requiring this intrastate element. This challenge applies to the antitrust claims in Mississippi, Nevada, New York, North Carolina, South Dakota, Tennessee, West Virginia, Wisconsin, and the District of Columbia.

**HN32** Cases examining the antitrust laws in these states generally agree that they require allegations of intrastate conduct or effects but define those terms to give the statutes broad scope. See, e.g., *In re Broiler Chicken Antitrust Litig., 290 F. Supp. 3d 772, 816 \(N.D. Ill. 2017\)* (finding "substantial" intrastate effects based on allegations of purchases at supracompetitive prices within a state); *Aggrenox, 94 F. Supp. 3d at 253* ("[I]t is not obvious why the intra state effect of anticompetitive conduct would not be reached by the cited statutes merely because inter state conduct predominates."). Defendants' cited cases applying a more rigorous pleading standard are plainly in the minority and are unpersuasive. I rely instead on the ample authority permitting [*82] claims to proceed on allegations comparable to those before this court. See, e.g., *Aggrenox, 94 F. Supp. 3d at 253* (denying motion to dismiss claims under Mississippi, New York, Tennessee, Wisconsin, and District of Columbia law); Sheet Metal Workers Local 441 Health & Welfare Plan v. GlaxoSmithKline, PLC, 737 F. Supp. 2d 380, 397, 400 \(E.D. Pa. 2010\) (same in Nevada, North Carolina, and West Virginia); In re Intel Corp. Microprocessor Antitrust Litig., 496 F. Supp. 2d 404, 414 \(D. Del. 2007\) (same in South Dakota).

This Report concludes that the allegations in the EPPs' Consolidated Complaint sufficiently allege the necessary intrastate connections in each of the challenged jurisdictions. The EPPs allege that Defendants engaged in a nationwide pattern of anticompetitive conduct that resulted in the sale of brand and generic Zetia at supracompetitive prices. They allege that these sales took place in every state where they have asserted claims. The volume of sales and the proceeds realized from the alleged anticompetitive conduct are in the billions of dollars. The court should therefore DENY Defendants' motion to dismiss on the basis of failing to allege intrastate effects.

c. The EPPs' delay in meeting statutory notice requirements does not warrant dismissal.

Defendants next argue that the EPPs failed to comply with provisions in certain state antitrust laws that require private antitrust plaintiffs [*83] bringing claims under those laws to file notice of the suit with the state's Attorney General. Defendant moved to dismiss claims in Arizona, Hawaii, Nevada, Rhode Island, and Utah on this ground. The EPPs respond that they have since provided notice in each of those states,<sup>14</sup> that dismissal for late notice would frustrate the statutes' remedial purposes, and that these notice provisions are inapplicable in federal court under Shady Grove Orthopedic Assocs., P.A. v. Allstate Ins. Co., 559 U.S. 393, 130 S. Ct. 1431, 176 L. Ed. 2d 311 \(2010\).

Again, courts are split on the impact these notice requirements have in federal court. Some give them preclusive effect and dismiss claims when plaintiffs fail to comply. See, e.g., In re Asacol Antitrust Litig., No. 15-cv-12730, 2016 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 94605, 2016 WL 4083333, at \*14-15 \(D. Mass. July 20, 2016\). Others hold that they are merely state procedural rules that do not apply in federal court. See, e.g., Aggrenox, 94 F. Supp. 3d at 253-54. Still others conclude that, even assuming the notice provisions apply in federal court, late or improper notice does not warrant dismissal of the entire claim. See, e.g., In re Aftermarket Filters Antitrust Litig., No. 08C4883, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 104114, 2009 WL 3754041, at \*6 \(N.D. Ill. Nov. 5, 2009\) (refusing to dismiss Hawaii antitrust claim for failure to comply with notice requirement and noting that "nothing in the statutory scheme suggests that defendants may use the statute as a shield to avoid answering for alleged anti-competitive behavior"); [see also \[\*84\] Broiler Chicken, 290 F. Supp. 3d at 817](#) ("Defendants do not cite any authority that late notice requires dismissal, so the Court will not dismiss Plaintiffs' Arizona and Rhode Island antitrust claims on this basis.").

I am persuaded by this last group of cases that dismissal is unwarranted here. Nothing in any of the cited provisions dictates that failure to provide notice requires dismissal. And in this case, the EPPs provided notice. Although notice may have followed initiation of the suit it was provided early in litigation and prior to consolidation or the commencement of any discovery. Dismissing the claims now would be an inefficient and heavy-handed remedy for a relatively minor delay, as to which no one claims prejudice. No Attorney General or other state official has objected to the notice provided or indicated any intent to intervene in the litigation. Moreover, to the extent the statutes prescribe more complex procedural requirements, see, e.g., Haw. Rev. Stat. § 480-13.3, Shady Grove may preclude their operation in federal court, see In re Propranolol Antitrust Litig., 249 F. Supp. 3d 712, 728 \(S.D.N.Y. 2017\). Accordingly, Defendants' motion to dismiss based on improper notice should be DENIED.

d. The Illinois Antitrust Act class-action bar does not apply in federal court.

<sup>14</sup> Records of the notices may be found in MDL Member Case No. 2:18cv108, ECF Nos. 54-1 to -5. In each instance the EPPs provided the notice only after filing suit.

Defendants next argue that the EPPs are [*85] not authorized to bring their claims under the Illinois Antitrust Act as a class action. They cite to a provision of the Act reading "[N]o person shall be authorized to maintain a class action in any court of this State for indirect purchasers asserting claims under this Act, with the sole exception of this State's Attorney General." 740 Ill. Comp. Stat. 10/7\(2\). Some courts have read this provision to bar indirect purchaser class actions under Illinois law from proceeding in federal court. See, e.g., Opana ER, 162 F. Supp. 3d at 723; In re Wellbutrin XL Antitrust Litig., 756 F. Supp. 2d 670, 676-77 \(E.D. Pa. 2010\). These courts reason that the class action bar is a substantive restriction on the antitrust remedy fashioned by the Illinois legislature. Opana ER, 162 F. Supp. 3d at 723.

The EPPs' response raises two questions: First, does the Illinois Antitrust Act's class-action bar apply in federal court by its own terms? Second, if yes, does Shady Grove dictate that its prohibition on class actions yield to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 23?

HN33 [↑] The provision quoted above provides that indirect purchasers may not maintain class actions "in any court of this State." § 10/7\(2\). By its plain language, that does not include this court. Cf. In re Aggrenox Antitrust Litig., No. 3:14-md-2516, 2016 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 104647, 2016 WL 4204478, at \*5 \(D. Conn. Aug. 9, 2016\) ("It is not obvious that the formulaic expression 'in any court of this State' appearing in an Illinois statute applies [*86] to a federal court in Connecticut."); Piechur v. Redbox Automated Retail, LLC, No. 09cv984, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 16324, 2010 WL 706047, at \*4 \(S.D. Ill. Feb. 24, 2010\) (concluding that the Southern District of Illinois, "while it may sit in the state of Illinois, is not a court of the state of Illinois"). But see Wellbutrin XL, 756 F. Supp. 2d at 676 ("Courts outside of Illinois, however, have read the attorney general restriction to apply to bar indirect purchaser actions in federal court.").

Even if, contrary to its text, the bar applies in this court, I am persuaded by those courts which have concluded that under Shady Grove, Rule 23 governs class actions in federal court and permits the EPPs' suit under the Illinois statute. In Shady Grove, the Supreme Court held that Rule 23 controlled over New York's general class-action bar in federal court. See 559 U.S. at 398-99 (plurality opinion). Writing for a plurality, Justice Scalia concluded that both provisions answered the question whether plaintiffs could pursue their claims via class action. But since Rule 23 was a federal enactment, it was presumed to control the procedural point as long as it was validly enacted. Because the court found it was, its provisions controlled. See id. at 399-400. Justice Stevens concurred but suggested that seemingly procedural state laws may still control if they [*87] are "actually ... part of a State's framework of substantive rights or remedies." Id. at 419 (Stevens, J., concurring).

Shady Grove's split opinion has left some questions unresolved. See Mitchell-Tracey v. United General Title Ins. Co., 442 F. App'x 2, 6 \(4th Cir. 2011\) (suggesting that some state procedural requirements survived Shady Grove). But the bar Defendants seek to apply here is functionally indistinguishable from the bar in Shady Grove. It plainly says that the EPPs may not maintain their claims in a class action; Rule 23 says just the opposite. See Aggrenox, 2016 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 104647, 2016 WL 4204478, at \*5-6 (evaluating the Shady Grove issue and concluding that Rule 23 overrides Illinois class-action bar in federal court); see also Broiler Chicken, 290 F. Supp. 3d at 818 ("[W]hether such plaintiffs may bring a class action does not affect their substantive rights.").

Accordingly, this Report recommends the court DENY Defendants' motion to dismiss the EPPs' Illinois antitrust claims.

e. The EPPs have alleged class members with standing under the Utah Antitrust Act.

Defendants contend that standing to sue under Utah's Antitrust Act is limited to citizens and residents of Utah. See Utah Code Ann. § 76-10-3109\(1\)\(a\) (2018). Echoing their broader standing argument, Defendants argue that the EPPs have not alleged that any named plaintiffs are residents of Utah. The EPPs respond that the class definition in their consolidated [*88] complaint includes end-payors who purchased Zetia in Utah, thus satisfying the statute. See EPP Compl. ¶ 311 (ECF No. 130 at 88).

For the reasons detailed in the earlier standing discussion,<sup>15</sup> the EPPs' allegations that the class includes Utah residents is sufficient at this stage. See In re Liquid Aluminum Sulfate Antitrust Litig., No. 16md2687, 2017 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 115294, 2017 WL 3131977, at \*28 \(D.N.J. July 20, 2017\). The court should therefore DENY Defendants' motion to dismiss the EPPs' claims under the Utah Antitrust Act.

f. Antitrust claims - summary of recommended action.

As explained in the foregoing sections, this Report recommends that Defendants' motion to dismiss the EPPs' state antitrust claims be DENIED on all counts. Exhibit A to this Report provides a summary of the recommended disposition for all the EPP claims.

4. Defendants' motion to dismiss the EPPs' state monopolization claims should be denied except as to the claim under California Code section 17200.

In their second count, EPPs assert monopolization claims under the Sherman Act § 2 state analogues of the same twenty-six jurisdictions as in their count one antitrust claims. As with their other claims, EPPs rely on the same allegations set forth by the DPPs and the Retailers. With one exception, [*89] Defendants have not raised any specific challenges to these claims or provided any authority to suggest that they should be treated differently. They instead merely reiterate that the state monopolization claims should be dismissed for the same reasons as their federal counterparts.

As discussed above,<sup>16</sup> this Report concludes that Plaintiffs have alleged sufficient facts to state a claim of conspiracy to monopolize under § 2 of the Sherman Act. Therefore, to the extent Defendants' motion seeks dismissal of the corresponding state claims on the same grounds, it should be DENIED.

The sole exception relates to the EPPs' monopolization claim under California law. Defendants argue that under California's Business and Professions Code section 17200 et seq., plaintiffs pursuing a monopolization claim are limited to equitable relief and may not seek damages. See Korea Supply Co. v. Lockheed Martin Corp., 29 Cal. 4th 1134, 131 Cal. Rptr. 2d 29, 63 P.3d 937, 943 \(Cal. 2003\). The EPPs essentially conceded this point at oral argument. And on review of the pleadings, the EPPs have not asserted claims for restitution, instead seeking only damages which are expressly precluded under the California statute. Therefore, to the extent the EPPs' monopolization claim under California law seeks damages, it should be DISMISSED with prejudice.

5. The EPPs have stated consumer [*90] protection claims in some jurisdictions but have failed to allege required elements in others.

The EPPs' third category of claims arises under the consumer protection laws of twenty-seven states and the District of Columbia. Defendants argue that claims in twenty-five of these jurisdictions should be dismissed either for lack of standing or for specific reasons detailed below. As explained above, this Report concludes that Defendants' Article III standing challenge is better addressed at class certification and therefore recommends the court DENY their motion to dismiss on that ground. The remaining challenges will be addressed by category, addressing specific states as necessary. Note that in some instances claims in a particular state may be recommended for dismissal on some grounds but not others. The summary at the end of this subsection will identify those state claims recommended for dismissal on any ground and is reflected in Exhibit A.

a. Indirect purchasers may assert consumer protection claims under Illinois and Missouri law in federal court.

Defendants' assertion that indirect purchaser class actions are not permitted under Illinois' consumer protection statute is premised on their analogous challenge [*91] to the EPPs' antitrust claims under Illinois law.<sup>17</sup> They argue that, assuming indirect purchasers are barred from pursuing antitrust class actions, permitting them to do so under the consumer protection statute would undermine that policy determination. See In re Flonase Antitrust Litig. (Flonase II), 692 F. Supp. 2d 524, 539 (E.D. Pa. 2010).

HN34 [+] As explained above, however, Illinois' class-action bar does not prevent the EPPs from maintaining their class action suit in federal court under the Illinois Antitrust Act. Furthermore, to the extent the EPPs have stated an independent claim for violation of Illinois' consumer protection statute, they are entitled to seek remedies by the means available under that law. See Siegel v. Shell Oil Co., 480 F. Supp. 2d 1034, 1048-49 (N.D. Ill. 2007) (recognizing that actionable conduct under the Illinois Consumer Fraud Act may also be covered by the Illinois Antitrust Act). Furthermore, the Illinois CFA has broad scope by its own terms and has no corresponding class-action limitation. See 815 Ill. Comp. Stat. 505/2 (prohibiting "unfair methods of competition" in harmony with the FTC Act); id. § 505/10a. Laughlin v. Evanston Hosp., 133 Ill. 2d 374, 550 N.E.2d 986, 140 Ill. Dec. 861 (Ill. 1990), does not withdraw the EPPs' present claims from that coverage as Defendants' claim. See Siegel, 480 F. Supp. 2d at 1046-49. And allowing the claims under the CFA does not circumvent any substantive policy, because Illinois does not bar indirect purchaser antitrust [*92] claims. Accordingly, the EPPs' class action is not categorically barred under Illinois' consumer protection laws and this Report recommends that Defendants' motion to dismiss on this basis be DENIED.

Similarly, Defendants argue that because Missouri has not passed an Illinois Brick repealer, permitting the EPPs to bring an indirect purchaser action under Missouri's consumer protection statute "would provide an end-run around the state's prohibition of antitrust claims by indirect purchasers." In re Suboxone (Buprenorphine Hydrochloride & Naloxone) Antitrust Litig., 64 F. Supp. 3d 665, 702 (E.D. Pa. 2014).

In response, the EPPs cite to the Missouri Supreme Court's decision in Gibbons and subsequent cases applying it. Gibbons rejected any direct privity requirement for suits under Missouri's consumer protection statute and seemed to endorse indirect purchaser actions. See Gibbons v. J. Nuckolls, Inc., 216 S.W.3d 667, 669-70 (Mo. 2007). HN35 [+] Federal courts applying Gibbons have followed suit. See, e.g., In re Packaged Seafood Prods. Antitrust Litig., 242 F. Supp. 3d 1033, 1079 (S.D. Cal. 2017) ("This Court joins the majority of our sister courts and concludes that Illinois Brick does not bar indirect-purchaser claims under the MMPA."). Defendants' sole post-Gibbons case to the contrary rests on speculative reasoning and goes against the majority view. See Suboxone, 64 F. Supp. 3d at 702 (reasoning that Gibbons should not apply to claims premised on antitrust-type injury). Because Gibbons [*93] appears to answer the Defendants' indirect purchaser objection, this Report recommends the court DENY Defendants' motion on this basis.

b. The EPPs' allegations do not satisfy the deception and/or reliance requirements in some state consumer protection statutes.

Defendants challenge the EPPs' claims in eleven jurisdictions for failure to specifically allege deceptive conduct by Defendants or reliance by the EPPs. Defendants' broad contention is that the EPPs have alleged only antitrust violations that fail to satisfy the required elements under the laws of these jurisdictions, many of which are specifically directed at deceptive or fraudulent commercial conduct. The EPPs respond that many of these statutes prohibit "unfair" or "unconscionable" conduct and should be construed broadly regardless of their exact language.

HN36[] One recurring statutory pattern among several of these jurisdictions is the prohibition of "unfair methods of competition" (or similar language) and incorporation of a Federal Trade Commission ("FTC") Act harmonization provision. The latter is important because the Supreme Court has construed the FTC Act, on which many state consumer protection laws are modeled, to broadly [*94] cover unfair trade practices. See Ind. Fed'n of Dentists, 476 U.S. at 454 (recognizing that "unfairness" under the FTC Act encompasses "practices that violate the Sherman Act and the other antitrust laws"). Thus, state laws with equivalent "unfairness" language and an FTC Act harmonization provision can safely be assumed to have similarly broad scope. Other states, however, target a narrower range of conduct not included in the EPPs' claims of anticompetitive collusion. This Report's recommendations on this issue are as follows:

- Arizona. HN37[] Arizona's consumer protection law, as amended in 2013, prohibits "unfair" practices and contains an FTC Act harmonization provision. Ariz. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 44-1522. Defendants' sole cited case predates the addition of the "unfairness" language, which substantially broadens the statute's scope. Cf. Sheet Metal Workers, 737 F. Supp. 2d at 404. The court should DENY Defendants' motion to dismiss the Arizona claims on this basis.
- Arkansas. HN38[] Arkansas's consumer protection laws prohibit "[d]eceptive and unconscionable trade practices," Ark. Code Ann. § 4-88-107, language that Arkansas courts construe broadly, see Baptist Health v. Murphy, 365 Ark. 115, 226 S.W.3d 800, 811 (Ark. 2006); see also Packaged Seafood Prods., 242 F. Supp. 3d at 1072. However, the reliance requirement in section 4-88-113\(f\)'s private cause of action is incompatible with the allegations in the EPPs' Complaint. The EPPs cannot plausibly claim to have [*95] "relied" on any of the Defendants' acts which produced the elevated pricing of Zetia or ezetimibe. Coupled with the absence of broadly construed "unfairness" language in the statute, I conclude that the EPPs have not sufficiently alleged a violation of Arkansas's consumer protection laws. The EPPs' claims should therefore be DISMISSED without prejudice.
- District of Columbia. HN39[] Washington D.C.'s consumer protection laws prohibit "unfair" trade practices and include both an expansive list of enumerated examples and an FTC Act harmonization provision. D.C. Code §§ 28-3901, -3904. Courts regularly permit claims under D.C. law premised on anticompetitive conduct. See, e.g., In re Processed Egg Prods. Antitrust Litig., 851 F. Supp. 2d 867, 898-99 \(E.D. Pa. 2012\). The case of Williams v. Purdue Pharma Co., 297 F. Supp. 2d 171 \(D.D.C. 2003\), cited by Defendants, is distinguishable on its facts and because it considered only the statute's prohibition on "deceptive" conduct without addressing unfairness. Defendants' motion to dismiss the D.C. consumer protection claims should be DENIED.
- Idaho. HN40[] Idaho prohibits unfair methods of competition and aligns its consumer protection statute with the FTC Act. See Idaho Code §§ 48-603, -604. I agree with those cases that have permitted claims premised on anticompetitive conduct to proceed under this statute. See, e.g., Intel Corp., 496 F. Supp. 2d at 418. The motion to dismiss [*96] the EPPs' Idaho consumer protection claims should be DENIED.
- Maine. HN41[] Maine's consumer protection statute covers "unfair methods of competition" and includes an FTC Act harmonization provision. Me. Stat. tit. 5, § 207. It encompasses harms premised on antitrust violations. See In re New Motor Vehicles Canadian Export Antitrust Litig., 350 F. Supp. 2d 160, 186-87, 187 n.40 (D. Me. 2004). Defendants' motion to dismiss the Maine consumer protection claims should therefore be DENIED.
- Michigan. HN42[] Michigan's consumer protection law refers to the FTC Act but does not contain an express harmonization provision. See Mich. Comp. Laws § 445.911(3). The enumerated unlawful practices in section 445-903 are primarily directed at deceptive practices, and several courts have dismissed claims under Michigan law for failure to allege fraud or deception. See Packaged Seafood Prods., 242 F. Supp. 3d at 1076-77. The EPPs point to Solodyn, which held that anticompetitive conduct could be actionable under an anti-price-gouging provision. In re Solodyn \(Minocycline Hydrochloride\) Antitrust Litig., No. 14-md-02503, 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 125999, 2015 WL 5458570, at \*17 \(D. Mass. Sept. 16, 2015\). But that case appears to be an outlier on this point, and other cases permitting claims based on allegations of anticompetitive conduct have made specific findings of deceptive conduct. See, e.g., Suboxone, 64 F. Supp. 3d at 700-01 (concluding that Michigan consumer protection statute requires proof of "intent to deceive" and finding [*97] element satisfied by allegations that defendants fabricated a drug safety issue). Because the EPPs have not sufficiently alleged deceptive conduct, their consumer protection claims under Michigan law should be DISMISSED without prejudice.

- Minnesota. HN43[] The Minnesota consumer protection law applies only to "conduct that is deceptive or fraudulent, as opposed to merely anticompetitive." Niaspan, 42 F. Supp. 3d 735, at 760. Courts permitting claims of anticompetitive conduct under Minnesota Code section 325F.69(1) have relied on allegations of deception or fraud. See id. (collecting examples). Because the EPPs have made not made such allegations here, their consumer protection claims under Minnesota law should be DISMISSED without prejudice.
- New York. HN44[] New York's consumer protection law does not include broad "unfairness" language but is instead directed only at deceptive or misleading practices. See In re Digital Music Antitrust Litig., 812 F. Supp. 2d 390, 410 (S.D.N.Y. 2011) (examining state court authority). It does not cover "anticompetitive conduct that is not premised on consumer deception." Id. (quoting Leider v. Ralfe, 387 F. Supp. 2d 283, 295 (S.D.N.Y. 2005)). Because the allegations here do not reflect consumer-oriented deception by any Defendants, the EPPs' consumer protection claims under New York law should be DISMISSED without prejudice.
- Rhode Island. HN45[] Rhode [*98] Island's consumer protection statute contains broad unfairness language and an FTC Act harmonization provision. 6 R.I. Gen. Laws. Ann. §§ 6-13.1-2, -3. The Rhode Island Supreme Court has also endorsed a broad reading of the law. See Ames v. Oceanside Welding & Towing Co., 767 A.2d 677, 681 (R.I. 2001). Courts applying the Ames standard have permitted claims under the state's consumer protection statute premised on anticompetitive conduct. See, e.g., In re Effexor Antitrust Litig., 357 F. Supp. 3d 363, 2018 WL 6003893, at *22 (D.N.J. Nov. 15, 2018) (permitting claim based on anticompetitive conduct "which resulted in consumers purchasing Effexor XR at a premium rate"). In light of the Rhode Island Supreme Court's opinion, This Report recommends that the court DENY Defendants' motion to dismiss the EPPs' Rhode Island consumer protection claims.
- South Dakota. HN46[] South Dakota's consumer protection law specifically requires proof of deceptive conduct causing consumer harm. See DDAVP, 903 F. Supp. 2d at 229. The conduct complained of here—an unlawful pay-for-delay settlement agreement—may have harmed consumers, but it did not defraud or mislead them. The EPPs have included allegations in their complaint that Defendants engaged in inequitable conduct before the Patent and Trademark Office, but those claims are ancillary to the alleged anticompetitive practices central [*99] to the complaint. The EPPs have cited no authority supporting a broader scope for South Dakota law. Their South Dakota consumer protection claims should therefore be DISMISSED without prejudice.
- Vermont. HN47[] The Vermont Consumer Fraud Act prohibits "unfair methods of competition" and contains an FTC Act harmonization provision. Vt. Stat. Ann. 9, S 2453 (West 2018). The statute should be liberally construed "to have as broad a reach as possible in order to best protect consumers against unfair trade practices." Elkins v. Microsoft Corp., 174 Vt. 328, 817 A.2d 9, 13 (Vt. 2002). In Elkins the court explicitly held that indirect purchasers could bring antitrust claims under the civil penalty provision of the VCFA. Id. at 20. Propranolol, cited by Defendants, seemingly ignored the "unfair methods of competition" prong of the Vermont statute in dismissing a claim for failure to show a deceptive act. See 249 F. Supp. 3d at 729. Similarly, Aggrenox, which suggested that the VCFA did not reach antitrust conduct, seems to have overlooked Elkins. See Aggrenox, 2016 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 104647, 2016 WL 4204478, at *9 (further concluding that plaintiffs were not "consumers" under the VCFA). The EPPs' citation to Vermont caselaw is more persuasive. This Report therefore recommends the court DENY Defendants' motion to dismiss the EPPs' Vermont consumer protection [*100] claims on this ground.

c. The EPP's claims of anticompetitive conduct are not actionable under some states' consumer protection laws.

Defendants next argue that "pure antitrust" violations, as they have characterized the EPPs' allegations, are not cognizable claims under the consumer protection laws of several states. After reviewing the respective state laws and cases applying them, this Report recommends the court DENY Defendants' motion to dismiss the EPPs' consumer protection claims under the laws of Illinois and West Virginia. See Packaged Seafood Prods., 242 F. Supp. 3d at 1087-88 (sustaining price-fixing claim under West Virginia's consumer protection statute after highlighting importance of FTC Act harmonization provision added in 2015); Seigel, 480 F. Supp. 2d at 1043-49 (permitting antitrust-type claim to proceed under Illinois Consumer Fraud Act).

The court should DISMISS the EPPs' consumer protection claims with prejudice in each of the remaining challenged states for the reasons and on the authority cited:

- Idaho. See State ex rel. Wasden v. Daicel Chem. Indus., Ltd., 141 Idaho 102, 106 P. 3d 428, 433-35 \(Idaho 2005\) HN48 [↑] (limiting Idaho consumer protection statute to "unconscionable "sales conduct" that is direct at the consumer"); see also Polyurethane Foam, 799 F. Supp. 2d at 786.
- Kansas. "Despite the [Kansas Consumer Protection Act's] seemingly broad language, the Supreme Court of Kansas has distinguished [*101] between consumer harms redressable thereunder and pricing harms governed by the Kansas antitrust statute." In re Chocolate Confectionary Antitrust Litig., 602 F. Supp. 2d 538, 584 \(M.D. Pa. 2009\) (citing Equitable Life Leasing Corp. v. Abbrick, 243 Kan. 513, 757 P.2d 304, 306-08 \(Kan. 1988\)).
- Oregon. Courts typically dismiss claims under Oregon's consumer protection law that lack allegations of deceptive conduct, as is the case here. See, e.g., In re Lidoderm Antitrust Litig. \(Lidoderm II\), 103 F. Supp. 3d 1155, 1170-71 \(N.D. Cal. 2015\); see also In re Dynamic Random Access Memory \(DRAM\) Antitrust Litig., 516 F. Supp. 2d 1072, 1115-16 \(N.D. Cal. 2007\) (holding that plaintiffs could not state a price-fixing claim under Oregon's consumer protection law); cf. Packaged Seafood Prods., 242 F. Supp. 3d at 1083-84 (sustaining claim under Oregon law where plaintiffs "plausibly allege[d] affirmative misrepresentations").
- Tennessee. "[P]laintiffs cannot bring claims based on anticompetitive conduct under the Tennessee Consumer Protection Act." In re Flonase Antitrust Litig. \(Flonase I\), 610 F. Supp. 2d 409, 417 \(E.D. Pa. 2009\) (citing Sherwood v. Microsoft Corp., No. M2000-01850-COA-R9-CV, 2003 Tenn. App. LEXIS 539, 2003 WL 21780975, at \*110 \(Tenn. Ct. App. July 31, 2003\)); see also Bennett v. Visa USA, Inc., 198 S.W.3d 747, 754-55 \(Tenn. Ct. App. 2006\) (discussing the significance of TCPA's lack of "unfair competition" language).
- Utah. Although Utah's Consumer Sales Practices Act contains an FTC Act harmonization provision, it lacks the broad "unfair competition" language on which federal courts have relied in extending the latter to cover price-fixing. See DRAM, 516 F. Supp. 2d at 1117. The Utah CSPAs broadest provision covers "unconscionable" conduct, which Utah courts have interpreted using contract law definitions. See New Motor Vehicles, 350 F. Supp. 2d at 203-05 (surveying state court decisions). The EPPs have [*102] not pled sufficient facts to state a claim under this standard of unconscionability.

d. The EPPs have pled sufficient intrastate connection.

Defendants argue that the EPPs have not pled sufficient intrastate conduct or effects under the consumer protection laws of New Hampshire, New York, or North Carolina. As with state antitrust laws requiring intrastate allegations, see supra section V.D.3.b, the clear trend is to broadly construe these "intrastate" pleading requirements to include allegations of causing substantial harm to in-state residents. See, e.g., Suboxone, 64 F. Supp. 3d at 702 (sustaining claim under New York consumer protection statute on the basis of overcharges that occurred in the state); DDAVP, 903 F. Supp. 2d at 231 (concluding that allegations of in-state sales at supracompetitive prices satisfy the intrastate requirement); LaChance v. U.S. Smokeless Tobacco Co., 156 N.H. 88, 931 A.2d 571, 578 \(N.H. 2007\) (holding that allegations state a claim under New Hampshire Consumer Protection Act if they "encompass conduct which was part of trade or commerce that had direct or indirect effects on" state citizens). Because the EPPs have alleged a nationwide pattern of conduct that resulted in consumers in each of the challenged jurisdictions purchasing ezetimibe at elevated prices, they have pled sufficient intrastate [*103] connections under those consumer protection statutes. The court should therefore DENY Defendants' motion to dismiss the New Hampshire, New York, and North Carolina consumer protection claims on this basis.

e. The EPPs are not "Consumers" as defined by some state consumer protection laws.

HN49 Every jurisdiction defines "consumer" for the purposes of setting out the scope of its consumer protection laws and the persons or entities entitled to sue under those laws. Defendants argue that the EPPs as a class are not proper plaintiffs under the laws of eight jurisdictions. These jurisdictions, according to Defendants, do not provide a right of action to municipal corporations or health plans that reimburse members for private purchases.

The EPPs respond that the class definition is broad enough to encompass both third-party payors and individual purchasers.<sup>18</sup> However, the current named class representatives do not include any individuals and, as third-party payors, they would be unable to effectively represent individuals on these particular claims. This is because, as explained below, the current named plaintiffs cannot plausibly allege a right to recover under those state consumer protection laws [*104] that exclude third-party payors from their definition of "consumer." The current named class representatives therefore lack any incentive to litigate those claims.<sup>19</sup> In such circumstances, dismissal is proper even against plaintiffs purporting to be acting in representative capacity. See Asacol, 907 F.3d at 49 ("[T]he pertinent question is: Are the differences that do exist [between the claims of the class members and those of the class representative] the type that leave the class representative with an insufficient personal stake in the adjudication of the class members' claims?"). Accordingly, this court should not permit the EPPs' claims to go forward simply because the class may include individuals in the challenged states.

HN50 The EPPs are proper plaintiffs under Virginia's consumer protection law, which (1) provides a right of action [*105] to any person (including a legal entity) that suffers a loss caused by a violation of the statute, (2) covers fraudulent acts or practices committed by a supplier in connection with a consumer transaction," and (3) defines a consumer transaction as one that involves goods purchased primarily for personal, family, or household purposes. See Va. Code Ann §§ 59.1-198, -200. Drawing reasonable inferences in their favor, the EPPs plausibly allege that Defendants violated the statute in connection with the commercial sale of overpriced ezetimibe and that the EPPs, responsible for reimbursement of the purchase prices in those transactions, suffered a loss as a result. The court should therefore DENY Defendants' motion to dismiss the EPPs' consumer protection claim under Virginia law.

The presently named EPPs cannot, however, invoke the consumer protection laws of the other seven jurisdictions challenged on this basis. As health and benefit plans, they do not actually make purchases—rather, they reimburse their members or pharmacies for the costs of Zetia or ezetimibe purchases when their members fill prescriptions. That transaction is strictly commercial, carried out as a matter of contract between the named EPPs [*106] and their premium-paying members.<sup>20</sup> See In re Restasis (Cyclosporine Ophthalmic Emulsion) Antitrust Litig., 355 F.

All persons and entities in the Indirect Purchaser States that indirectly purchased, paid and/or provided reimbursement for some or all of the purchase price of Zetia or its AB-rated generic equivalents in any form, other than for resale, from December 6, 2011 through and until the anticompetitive effects of Defendants' unlawful conduct cease (the "Class Period").

EPP Compl. ¶ 311 (ECF No. 130 at 83).

<sup>19</sup> This nuance in state consumer protection laws distinguishes this issue from, for example, the question of whether the EPPs can assert an antitrust claim in Utah even though no named class representative resides there. See supra section V.D.3.e. Analogous antitrust laws in the named representatives' respective states do not restrict third-party payors from bringing claims.

Supp. 3d 145, 2018 WL 5928143, at *12 (E.D.N.Y. Nov. 13, 2018). And contrary to the EPPs' suggestion, the mere fact that the underlying transaction (that is, the drug purchase) is for "personal, family, or household use," as most of the laws at issue require, does not extend a right of action to third-party payors which reimburse those payments as part of a separate insurance obligation. This Report therefore recommends the court DISMISS the EPPs' consumer protections claims without prejudice in the following jurisdictions:

- District of Columbia. HN51[<sup>20</sup>] D.C.'s consumer protection statute is intended to reach "the ultimate retail transaction between the final distributor and the individual member of the consumer public." Adam A. Weschler & Son, Inc. v. Klank, 561 A. 2d 1003, 1005 (D.C. 1989). Secondary reimbursement transactions are outside the ambit of the statute. See Lidoderm II, 103 F. Supp. 3d at 1164-65 (dismissing health plan's consumer protection claim under D.C. law).
- Kansas.<sup>21</sup> Kansas law narrowly defines "consumer" in terms of individuals or natural persons, excluding the named EPP class representatives. See Kan. Stat. Ann. § 50-624; Solodyn, 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 125999, 2015 WL 5458570, at *17.
- Maine. Although Maine's consumer protection law defines "person" to include legal entities, it limits private actions to persons [*107] who "purchase[] or lease[] goods ... primarily for personal, family, or household purposes." Me. Stat. tit. 5, §§ 206, 213. This category does not include the named EPP class representatives.
- Massachusetts. Plaintiffs engaged in trade or commerce, a group that includes the third-party payor EPPs, must proceed under section 11 of the Massachusetts Consumer Protection Act. See Lidoderm I, 74 F. Supp. 3d at 1084-85 (concluding that municipality and welfare plan that purchased and/or reimbursed purchases of prescription drugs were engaged in "trade or commerce" within meaning of MCPA). However, section 11 bars indirect purchaser claims. Id. at 1086.
- Missouri. Private actions under Missouri's consumer protection law are limited to persons who purchase or lease merchandise "primarily for personal, family or household purposes." Mo. Rev. Stat. § 407.025. Third-party payors like health plans may not assert claims under this provision. See Asacol, 2016 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 94605, 2016 WL 4083333, at *12.
- Rhode Island. Only persons who purchase goods "for personal, family, or household purposes" may sue under Rhode Island's consumer protection law. R.I. Gen. Laws § 6-13.1-5.2; see also In re Effexor Antitrust Litig., 337 F. Supp. 3d 435, 467 (D.N.J. 2018).
- Vermont. See Aggrenox, 2016 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 104647, 2016 WL 4204478, at *9 ("The fact that Humana's members are consumers, and that Humana co-purchases or reimburses for consumer products that its members use, does not make Humana a consumer of those products."). [*108]

f. The EPPs have substantially complied with statutory notice provisions.

Defendants argue that the EPPs' consumer protection claims in Massachusetts and West Virginia should be dismissed for failure to comply with the notice provisions in those states' laws. As explained above, it is unclear whether these provisions even apply in federal court, let alone demand dismissal for noncompliance. See supra section V.D.3.C. The case for applying them in the consumer protection context is stronger than in the antitrust context because the required notice is to the defendant (in the form of a demand letter and cure opportunity), rather than to the state attorney general.<sup>22</sup> However, neither provision requires dismissal in this case.

<sup>20</sup> It is also not unique to Zetia, ezetimibe, or any particular drug; the EPPs simply reimburse consumers for some portion of all qualified healthcare costs.

<sup>21</sup> This Report recommends dismissing with prejudice the EPPs' consumer protection claim in Kansas on another basis. See supra section V.D.5.C

HN52[] The Massachusetts notice provision only applies to claims under section 9 of the state's consumer protection act. Section 11, under which the EPPs must proceed here, has no notice requirement. As for West Virginia, Defendants' characterization of the notice provision as a rigid pre-suit requirement ignores the language added by 2015 amendment that explicitly contemplates post-filing demand letters. See id. (specifying twenty days from receipt of notice to make [*109] a cure offer "but ten days in the case a cause of action has already been filed"). Waters v. Electrolux Home Prods., Inc., 154 F. Supp. 3d 340 \(N.D.W. Va. 2015\), a post-amendment case cited by Defendants, is factually distinguishable. There the plaintiffs never provided a written demand letter specifying the cure opportunity, but merely relied on their complaint to give notice. Id. at 354. Here, by contrast, the EPPs provided separate written notice with a ten-day cure offer window, as section 46A-6-106\(c\) requires.<sup>23</sup>

For these reasons, this Report recommends the court DENY Defendants' motion to dismiss the EPPs' Massachusetts and West Virginia consumer protection claims on this basis.

g. Florida's heightened pleading standard does not apply-in this case.

Defendants assert that the EPPs must plead their Florida consumer protection claims with particularity under the heightened pleading standard of Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 9\(b\). See, e.g., Suboxone, 64 F. Supp. 3d at 699-700. HN53[] However, the EPPs are proceeding under the statute's "unfair methods of competition" prong which encompasses antitrust violations and avoids the heightened pleading standard applicable to the fraud prong. See Processed Egg Prods., 851 F. Supp. 2d at 900. The court should therefore DENY Defendants' motion to dismiss on this basis.

h. Tennessee's class-action bar does not apply in federal court.

Defendants contend that Tennessee's [*110] consumer protection statute does not permit class actions. See Tenn. Code Ann. § 47-18-109\(a\)\(1\) ("Any person who suffers an ascertainable loss ... may bring an action individually to recover actual damages."). The EPPs argue that to the extent this statute prohibits class actions, it must yield to Rule 23 under Shady Grove.

This Report has already recommended dismissal of the EPPs' Tennessee consumer protection claims on alternative grounds.<sup>24</sup> The Shady Grove issue remains unsettled, but as discussed above, these procedural restrictions appear to conflict with Rule 23. This Report therefore recommends the court DENY Defendants' motion to dismiss the EPPs' Tennessee consumer protection claims on this basis.

i. Consumer protection claims - Summary of recommended action.

For the foregoing reasons, this Report recommends that the court GRANT Defendants' motion and DISMISS the EPPs' consumer protection claims in the following jurisdictions: Arkansas, Idaho, Kansas, Maine, Massachusetts, Michigan, Minnesota, Missouri, New York, Oregon, Rhode Island, South Dakota, Tennessee, Utah, Vermont, and the District of Columbia. For claims which may be affected by the addition of tag along cases, the definition of the class, or more specific [*111] evidence of deception not yet pled, the Report recommends without-prejudice dismissals as noted. The court should DENY Defendants' motion to dismiss the consumer protection claims in the remaining jurisdictions. A summary of the recommended disposition of all the EPP claims is included as Exhibit A.

6. The EPPs' state unjust enrichment claims should be dismissed in some jurisdictions and allowed in others.

Finally, the EPPs assert common-law unjust enrichment claims under the laws of thirty-seven states and the District of Columbia. Defendants renew their general objections to these claims and assert additional grounds for dismissal applicable to some or all. As with the previous sections, this Report will address each dismissal argument by category and by state as necessary. A summary follows and is reflected in Exhibit A.

a. The EPPs' Complaint satisfies the Rule 8 pleading requirement for unjust enrichment.

Defendants' initial challenge, applicable to every jurisdiction where the EPPs have asserted unjust enrichment claims, contends that the EPPs have not adequately pled their claims under Rule 8. Defendants argue that the EPPs have only "pled" unjust enrichment claims by alleging facts aimed at [*112] antitrust violations and then stating, in conclusory fashion, that such facts are also actionable as unjust enrichment. Cf. Aggrenox, 94 F. Supp. 3d at 254-56 (dismissing all state unjust enrichment claims without prejudice for failure to satisfy Rule 8). The EPPs argue in response that their Complaint broadly satisfies the elements for state unjust enrichment claims, which are "materially the same throughout the United States." Singer v. AT&T Corp., 185 F.R.D. 681, 692 \(S.D. Fla. 1998\).

HN54 [↑] At minimum, an unjust enrichment plaintiff must ordinarily allege receipt of a benefit by the defendant at plaintiff's expense and "that it would be inequitable or unjust for defendant to accept and retain the benefit." Flonase II, 692 F. Supp. 2d at 541. Examining the allegations in the EPPs' Complaint as a whole and drawing all reasonable inferences in their favor, I find that they have adequately pled the necessary elements of common-law unjust enrichment. Cf. In re Automotive Parts Antitrust Litig., 29 F. Supp. 3d 982, 1014-15 \(E.D. Mich. 2014\) (declining to dismiss all unjust enrichment claims for conclusory pleading because "the Court does not read these allegations in isolation, but in light of all of the factual allegations in the complaints"). The EPPs allege that Defendants unlawfully maintained monopoly pricing on ezetimibe products and unjustly reaped extraordinarily increased profits at the expense of [*113] the EPPs, who paid supracompetitive prices for those products for five years. Although the portion of the Complaint asserting unjust enrichment is somewhat conclusory, it incorporates by reference the extensive factual allegations that precede it. EPP Compl. ¶ 360 (ECF No. 130 at 105). Requiring recharacterization of every allegation into an unjust enrichment framework would create needlessly repetitive pleading. And conclusory pleading is to some degree unavoidable, given that an element of unjust enrichment is the character of the defendants' actions, not simply the actions themselves. This Report therefore recommends that Defendants' motion to dismiss all unjust enrichment claims for inadequate pleading be DENIED.

b. The EPPs cannot rely on common-law unjust enrichment to circumvent Illinois Brick.

Several of the jurisdictions in which the EPPs assert unjust enrichment claims follow the Illinois Brick rule precluding antitrust claims by indirect purchasers. Defendants argue that allowing unjust enrichment claims premised on antitrust violations in these jurisdictions circumvents state policy against indirect purchaser antitrust actions.

Although the EPPs cite some authority in their [*114] favor, the clear majority view favors Defendants on this point. See, e.g., Lidoderm I, 74 F. Supp. 3d at 1088-90 ("I agree with the majority of courts who have directly addressed this issue and find that the EPPs cannot circumvent the Illinois Brick prohibition absent authority from the courts of those states that would allow unjust enrichment claims to proceed."); DDAVP, 903 F. Supp. 2d at 231-33. The EPPs' few cited cases disagree with the general proposition but offer little in the way of state authority to contradict

c. The EPPs' allegations do not satisfy the direct benefit requirement under some states' unjust enrichment laws.

HN55 In some states, plaintiffs pursuing unjust enrichment claims must demonstrate that they conferred the unjust benefit directly on the defendant. Because the EPPs as a class did not deal directly with any Defendant, they may not advance an "indirect" unjust enrichment theory in states following this rule. The court should therefore DISMISS with prejudice the EPPs' [*115] unjust enrichment claims in the following states on the authority cited:

- Florida. See Kopel v. Kopel, 229 So. 3d 812, 818 \(Fla. 2017\) ("[T]o prevail on an unjust enrichment claim, the plaintiff must directly confer a benefit to the defendant.").
- Idaho. See Lincoln Land Co. v. LP Broadband, Inc., 163 Idaho 105, 408 P.3d 465 \(Idaho 2017\); Stevenson v. Windermere Real Estate/Capital Grp., Inc., 152 Idaho 824, 275 P.3d 839, 842-44 \(Idaho 2012\).
- Michigan. See Fenerjian v. Nongshim Co., 72 F. Supp. 3d 1058, 1086-88 \(N.D. Cal. 2014\) (analyzing state cases and concluding that indirect unjust enrichment claims are not permitted under Michigan law). The EPPs' cited cases find less support in state authority.

Defendants challenge claims in five additional states, which they claim require a direct benefit to impose unjust enrichment liability. However, this Report concludes that indirect unjust enrichment claims are permitted in those states. HN56 The court should therefore DENY Defendants' motion to dismiss the EPPs' unjust enrichment claims in the following states on the authority noted:

- Kansas. See Automotive Parts, 29 F. Supp. 3d at 1019-20 ("[T]here is no element [in Kansas unjust enrichment law] requiring that the benefit flow directly from the plaintiff to the defendants."). Cases reaching the opposite conclusion frequently rely on the Kansas Supreme Court's decision in Haz-Mat Response, Inc. v. Certified Waste Servs. Ltd., 259 Kan. 166, 910 P. 2d 839 \(Kan. 1996\). But Haz-Mat Response involved complicated factual issues and did not conclusively hold that indirect unjust enrichment claims cannot proceed under Kansas law. [*116] The case examined whether a plaintiff subcontractor hired by a prime contractor to do work on the defendant property owner's property could recover from the property owner via unjust enrichment when the prime contractor failed to pay the subcontractor. The court held that on the facts of the case, plaintiffs had not demonstrated "special circumstances" showing the defendant inequitably retained a benefit from the plaintiff when it reasonably should have known the plaintiff expected to be compensated. See id. at 847-48.
- Maine. See In re Opana ER Antitrust Litig., No. 14C10150, 2016 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 105915, 2016 WL 4245516, at \*2-3 \(N.D. 111. Aug. 11, 2016\) (sustaining indirect unjust enrichment theory and observing that "[t]he critical inquiry is whether the Defendants received a benefit at EPPs' expense").
- New York. HN57 Plaintiffs need not plead "direct dealing" or an "actual substantive relationship" with the defendant. The only requirement is that the connection between plaintiff and defendant not be "too attenuated." See Sperry v. Crompton Corp., 8 N.Y.3d 204, 215-16, 863 N.E.2d 1012, 831 N.Y.S.2d 760 \(N.Y. 2007\).

<sup>25</sup> This Report rejected similar Illinois Brick-circumvention challenges to consumer protection claims in some jurisdictions, but did so because state authority made clear that those claims were independently actionable or otherwise not barred by Illinois Brick. By contrast, little if any state authority exists to support common-law unjust enrichment claims by indirect purchasers alleging antitrust injury in jurisdictions following Illinois Brick.

• North Carolina. See Processed Egg Prods., 851 F. Supp. 2d at 930-32 (concluding that North Carolina Supreme Court precedent embraces an "expansive view of unjust enrichment and the role or particulars of the conferral of a benefit element" (citing Embree Const. Grp., Inc. v. Rafcor, Inc., 330 N.C. 487, 411 S.E.2d 916 \(N.C. 1992\))).

• North Dakota. See Automotive Parts, 29 F. Supp. 3d at 1025 (sustaining indirect purchaser unjust enrichment [*117] claim).

d. The EPPs may plead unjust enrichment in the alternative.

Finally, Defendants claim that the EPPs' unjust enrichment claims fail in Alabama, Hawaii, and Massachusetts because their Complaint alleges adequate remedies at law. But Rule 8 explicitly permits pleading in the alternative, and the EPPs' Consolidated Complaint does just that. Fed. R. Civ. P. 8\(d\)\(2\); EPP Compl. ¶ 361 (ECF No. 130 at 105). The court should therefore DENY Defendants' motion to dismiss on this basis.

e. Unjust Enrichment - Summary of recommended action.

For the foregoing reasons, this Report recommends the court GRANT Defendants' motion and DISMISS with prejudice the EPPs' unjust enrichment claims in Alaska, Arkansas, Colorado, Connecticut, Florida, Idaho, Maryland, Massachusetts, Michigan, Missouri, Montana, and South Carolina. The court should DENY Defendants' motion to dismiss the EPPs' unjust enrichment claims in the remaining jurisdictions. Exhibit A summarizes the recommended disposition for all of the EPP claims.

Conclusion

For the reasons described above, the court should DENY the Defendants' Motion to Dismiss the DPPs' Consolidated Complaint (ECF No. 157). The court should GRANT IN PART and DENY IN PART the Defendants' Motion [*118] to Dismiss the Retailers Complaints (ECF No. 160), denying the motion with respect to the Retailers' § 1 Sherman Act claim under the rule of reason (Count 2), and Retailers' § 2 Sherman Act claims (Count 3), but GRANTING the Motion with respect to Retailers' claims of a per se violation under § 1 (Count 1) and their request for injunctive relief.

Finally, this Report recommends the court GRANT IN PART and DENY IN PART Defendants' Motion to Dismiss the EPPs' claims, (ECF No. 162). The court should GRANT the Motion with respect to all claims asserted under the laws of Alaska, Arkansas, Colorado, Connecticut, Idaho, Maryland, Massachusetts, Missouri, Montana and South Carolina. With respect to the claims asserted under the laws of the remaining thirty jurisdictions, this Report's recommended dispositions are summarized in the attached Exhibit A. The state law claims remaining in those jurisdictions, should the court adopt the recommendation, are set forth on the attached Exhibit B.

Review Procedure

By copy of this Report and recommendation, the parties are notified that pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 636\(b\)\(1\)\(C\):

1. Any party may serve upon the other party and file with the Clerk written objections to the foregoing findings and [*119] recommendations within fourteen (14) days from the date of service of this Report on the objecting party, see 28 U.S.C. § 636\(b\)\(1\), computed pursuant to Rule 6 \(a\) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. A party may respond to any other party's objections within fourteen (14) days after being served with a copy thereof. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 72\(b\)\(2\) (also computed pursuant to Rule 6\(a\) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure).

2. A district judge shall make a de novo determination of those portions of this Report or specified findings or recommendations to which objection is made.

The parties are further notified that failure to file timely objections to the findings and recommendations set forth above will result in a waiver of appeal from a judgment of this Court based on such findings and recommendations.

I. INTRODUCTION

Plaintiff, Premier Comp [*2] Solutions, LLC ("Premier" or "Plaintiff") initiated this action by filing a seven (7) count Complaint against Defendants, UPMC ("UPMC"), UPMC Benefit Management Services, Inc. ("UPMC-BMS"), UPMC Health Benefits, Inc.<sup>1</sup> ("UPMC-HB") (collectively the "UPMC Defendants"), and MCMC, LLC ("MCMC") (collectively the "Defendants") alleging violations of Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. §§ 1 et seq., violation of Section 12 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 22, and common law Unfair Competition. Premier has filed a Motion in Limine to Exclude UPMC Expert Witness Dr. David Reitman (Document No. 258) and the UPMC Defendants have filed a Motion to Exclude the Testimony of Dr. Joseph P. Fuhr (Document No. 272). The parties have responded and the motions are now before the Court.

The UPMC Defendants identified Dr. David Reitman ("Dr. Reitman") as their economics expert, who intends to offer the following opinions:

1. Dr. Joseph P. Fuhr, Premier's expert witness, has failed to lay out a coherent theory of antitrust harm, including a failure to properly define relevant antitrust markets, to assess monopoly power, and to describe a theory of harm to competition.
2. UPMC does not have monopoly power or a dangerous probability of acquiring monopoly power [*3] in any of the relevant product markets identified by Plaintiff.
3. UPMC had neither the incentive nor the ability to monopolize those product markets or specifically to exclude Premier from those markets.
4. UPMC's actions at the core of Plaintiff's allegations of anticompetitive conduct, namely requesting additional information from Premier and switching from Premier to MCMC and Align for cost containment services, were done for procompetitive reasons: lowering costs and monitoring performance.

Premier argues that Dr. Reitman's opinions are without basis and are unreliable because Dr. Reitman lacks the knowledge, skill, experience, training, or education to render any opinion concerning the economic operation or incentives in the workers' compensation insurance or health care markets. Further, Premier contends that Dr. Reitman lacks the requisite expertise to provide an opinion concerning whether the theft of trade secrets from Premier had an anticompetitive effect in any of the relevant markets.

Premier identified Dr. Joseph P. Fuhr, Jr. ("Dr. Fuhr"), an economist with experience in analyzing antitrust issues in healthcare markets, as its expert. Dr. Fuhr produced a ten (10) page report [*4] which the UPMC Defendants contend "contains no relevant economic analysis, no acceptable methodology and no legitimate support for any of the few antitrust-related opinions expressed therein. Specifically, the UPMC argues that Dr. Fuhr's testimony must be excluded because:

- (1) Dr. Fuhr failed to adequately define any plausible relevant product market based on data or analysis;
- (2) The totality of Dr. Fuhr's geographic market definition opinion consists of one line: "The geographic market for each relevant product market is no larger than Western PA," but contains no citation, no theoretical or empirical support, and no methodology;
- (3) Dr. Fuhr provides no analysis of whether UPMC has market or monopoly power;
- (4) Dr. Fuhr failed to opine that PCS was substantially foreclosed from any market, one of the requirements necessary to establish PCS's claims; and
- (5) Dr. Fuhr did not find any anticompetitive effects on the market as a whole, but only considered PCS's loss of WorkPartners' customers.

The motions before the Court implicate the admissibility standard for expert witnesses under Rule 702 of the Federal Rules of Evidence as elucidated by the Supreme Court in Daubert v. Merrell Dow Pharmaceuticals, Inc., 509 U.S. 579, 113 S. Ct. 2786, 125 L. Ed. 2d 469 \(1993\). In Daubert, the Supreme Court set forth parameters [*5] for determining when proffered expert testimony can be admitted into evidence. The Court held:

Proposed testimony must be supported by appropriate validation -- i.e., "good grounds," based on what is known. In short, the requirement that an expert's testimony pertaining to "scientific knowledge" establishes a standard of evidentiary reliability.

Daubert, 509 U.S. at 590. The Court concluded that Rule 702 "clearly contemplates some degree of regulation of the subjects about which an expert may testify." 509 U.S. at 589. Thus, the Court established a "gatekeeping role for the judge." Id. at 597. The Court wrote:

Faced with a proffer of expert scientific testimony, . . . the trial judge must determine at the outset . . . whether the expert is proposing to testify to (1) scientific knowledge that (2) will assist the trier of fact to understand or determine a fact in issue. This entails a preliminary assessment of whether the reasoning or methodology underlying the testimony is scientifically valid and of whether that reasoning or methodology properly can be applied to the facts in issue.

Id. at 592-593. Moreover, the Third Circuit has established that Rule 702 includes "three distinct substantive restrictions on the admission of expert testimony: qualifications, reliability [*6] and fit." United States v. Mathis, 264 F.3d 321, 335 \(3d Cir. 2001\); Elcock v. Kmart Corp., 233 F.3d 734, 741 \(3d Cir. 2000\).

First, the witness must be a qualified expert, meaning that the witness must possess specialized expertise. Feit v. Great-West Life & Annuity Ins. Co., 460 F. Supp. 2d 632, 636 \(D.N.J. 2006\). Courts have interpreted this requirement liberally, holding that a broad range of knowledge, skills, and training qualify an expert. In re TMI Litig., 193 F.3d 613, 664 \(3d Cir. 1999\).

Second, Rule 702 requires that the testimony be reliable. The Supreme Court instructed that an "expert's opinion must be based on the 'methods and procedures of science' rather than on 'subjective belief or unsupported speculation;' the expert must have 'good grounds' for his or her belief." In re Paoli R.R. Yard PCB Litigation, 35 F.3d 717, 742 \(3d Cir. 1994\), cert. denied, 513 U.S. 1190, 115 S. Ct. 1253, 131 L. Ed. 2d 134 (1995) (quoting Daubert, 509 U.S. at 590). The Court emphasized, however, that the "focus . . . must be solely on principles and methodology, not on the conclusions they generate." Daubert, 509 U.S. at 595. The issue, therefore, is whether the evidence should be excluded because the flaw is large enough that the expert lacks good grounds for his or her conclusion. In re Paoli R.R. Yard PCB Litigation, 35 F.3d at 746. Further, an "expert's testimony must be accompanied by a sufficient factual foundation before it can be submitted to the jury." Elcock v. Kmart Corp., 233 F.3d at 754.

Daubert identified several factors which a district court should take into account in evaluating whether a particular scientific methodology is reliable. In re Paoli R.R. Yard PCB Litigation, 35 F.3d at 742. The factors that Daubert and the Third Circuit [*7] have declared important include: (1) whether a method consists of a testable hypothesis; (2) whether the method has been subject to peer review; (3) the known or potential rate of error; (4) the existence and maintenance of standards controlling the technique's operation; (5) whether the method is generally accepted; (6) the relationship of the technique to methods which have been established to be reliable; (7) the qualifications of the expert witness testifying based on the methodology; and (8) the non-judicial uses to which the method has been put. In re Paoli R.R. Yard PCB Litigation, 35 F.3d at 742 n.8. See also Oddi v. Ford Motor Co., 234 F.3d 136, 145 \(3d Cir. 2000\), cert. denied, 532 U.S. 921, 121 S. Ct. 1357, 149 L. Ed. 2d 287 (2001); Elcock v. Kmart Corp., 233 F.3d at 745-746; In re TMI Litig., 193 F.3d 613, 664 \(3d Cir. 1999\).

Daubert makes clear that these factors do not constitute a "definitive checklist or test." Daubert, 509 U.S. at 593. A court's gatekeeping inquiry must be "tied to the facts" of a particular "case." Kumho Tire Co. v. Carmichael, 526 U.S. 137, 150, 119 S. Ct. 1167, 143 L. Ed. 2d 238 \(1999\). "Whether Daubert's specific factors are, or are not, reasonable measures of reliability in a particular case is a matter that the law grants the trial judge broad latitude to determine." Id. at 153.

Moreover, the court's role as a gatekeeper "is not intended to serve as a replacement for the adversary system." See Crowley v. Chait, 322 F. Supp. 2d 530, 536 (D. N. J. 2004) quoting Fed. R. Evid. 702, Advisory Committee's Note. The Daubert Court recognized that jurors will have the capacity to distinguish "junk science" [*8] from the real thing. Accordingly, where an expert is expected to deliver "shaky" testimony, admission of the testimony may still be proper because "vigorous cross-examination, presentation of contrary evidence, and careful instruction on the burden of proof are the traditional and appropriate means of attacking shaky but admissible evidence." Daubert, 509 U.S. at 596. The Third Circuit further commented on the reliability notion of Daubert, stating:

The evidentiary requirement of reliability is lower than the merits standard of correctness. Further, a court may determine that "good grounds" exist for the expert opinion to be offered, even though the judge may believe "better grounds" exist for an alternate conclusion or that a somewhat flawed methodology, if fixed, would lead to a different conclusion.

Allstate Ins. Co. v. Hamilton Beach/Proctor-Silex, Inc., 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 63355 *12 (W.D. Pa. Aug. 19, 2008) (citing In re Paoli R.R. Yard PCB Litigation, 35 F.3d at 744).

Finally, the expert's testimony must "fit" or "be relevant for the purposes of the case and must assist the trier of fact." Calhoun v. Yamaha Motor Corp., U.S.A., 350 F.3d 316, 321 (3d Cir. 2003) (quoting Schneider v. Fried, 320 F.3d 396, 405 (3d Cir. 2003)). The touchstone for admissibility under Rule 702, is helpfulness to the trier of fact. Fed. R. Evid. 702 (a). However, while the standard for fitness is higher than bare relevance, it is not that high. In re Paoli R.R. Yard PCB Litigation, 35 F.3d at 745. In order to assist the trier of fact in understanding the evidence or in determining an issue [*9] of fact, the scientific or other specialized knowledge must be logically connected to the questions at issue in the case. Id. at 742-743. In contrast, expert testimony based on assumptions that lack any factual support in the record are properly excluded. Stecyk v. Bell Helicopter Textron, Inc., 295 F.3d 408, 414 (3d Cir. 2002); Elcock v. Kmart Corp., 233 F.3d at 756 n.13.

The proponent of the expert testimony bears the burden of establishing the reliability and admissibility of the expert's testimony by a preponderance of the evidence. See Daubert, 509 U.S. at 593 n. 10; In re TMI Litig., 193 F.3d at 663. Moreover, Rule 702 embodies a liberal policy of admissibility. Pineda v. Ford Motor Co., 520 F.3d 237, 243 (3d Cir. 2008); In re Paoli R.R. Yard PCB Litig., 916 F.2d 829, 857 (3d Cir. 1990).

A. Dr. Reitman

Premier argues that Dr. Reitman is not qualified to offer expert opinions in this action because he lacks "appreciable background, experience or education" in the workers' compensation and health care industries, as well as in the area of trade secrets. Specifically, Premier contends that Dr. Reitman lacks qualifications and expertise regarding:

- (1) the unique economic incentives built in the workers' compensation insurance industry and the specialized market for cost containment in the industry;
- (2) whether the misappropriation of trade secrets can constitute an antitrust violation; and
- (3) a vertically integrated health care organization which includes a health care provider and a workers' compensation [*10] cost containment entity.

Dr. Reitman is being presented by the UPMC Defendants as an expert in antitrust economics. He has a Master's Degree in Economics from Stanford University and a Ph.D. from Stanford in Decision Sciences, an interdisciplinary program that includes elements of both economics and operations management. Dr. Reitman was an Assistant Professor of Economics at Ohio State University for approximately nine (9) years, and he was employed as an economist at the Department of Justice Antitrust Division for ten (10) years. Moreover, while at the Department of Justice, Dr. Reitman worked on numerous cases involving health care products and health insurance, including insurer mergers and health insurance monopolization claims. Further, some of Dr. Reitman's cases at the Department of Justice involved vertical issues in the health care industry.

Dr. Reitman has testified on behalf of the Department of Justice in its successful lawsuit alleging that a company monopolized the market for denture teeth in the U.S. through the use of exclusionary conduct. United States v. Dentsply International, Inc., 277 F. Supp. 2d 387 (D. Del. 2003), rev'd and remanded, 399 F.3d 181 (3d Cir. 2005). Dr. Reitman has also provided testimony, or has been retained as an expert in, other monopolization cases [*11] involving allegations of exclusionary conduct, including restrictions on dealers or other complementary service providers.

As set forth above, a qualified expert must possess specialized expertise. Feit v. Great-West Life & Annuity Ins. Co., 460 F. Supp. 2d 632, 636 (D.N.J. 2006). Courts have interpreted this requirement liberally, holding that a broad range of knowledge, skills, and training qualify an expert. In re TMI Litig., 193 F.3d 613, 664 (3d Cir. 1999). While specialized knowledge is a requirement, the basis of such knowledge can be "practical experience as well as academic training and credentials." Betterbox Commc'n's Ltd. v. BB Techs., Inc., 300 F.3d 325, 328 (3d Cir. 2002) (noting that the specialized knowledge requirement has been construed "liberally").

The Court finds, therefore, that Dr. Reitman is indeed qualified to opine on the issues involved in this matter. The Court agrees that experience in the workers' compensation insurance industry is of no moment. Dr. Reitman's academic qualifications and experience as an antitrust economist certainly gives him the ability to analyze the relevant antitrust market or markets at issue here. Further, Premier's contention that Dr. Reitman should be precluded from opining on whether certain information was a trade secret is without merit. In his antitrust analysis, Dr. Reitman accepts the premise that compilation of data, which Premier [*12] contends was misappropriated by the Defendants, were trade secrets. Dr. Reitman acknowledged that such a theft could, "under certain conditions," constitute an antitrust violation but opined that such circumstances were not present in this case.

Premier argues that Dr. Reitman's opinions are unreliable, based on speculation, because of his lack of appropriate qualifications and experience. This Court has found that Dr. Reitman is qualified as an antitrust economist and, therefore, Premier's contention is without merit. Accordingly, Premier's motion to exclude Dr. Reitman's testimony will be denied.

B. Dr. Fuhr

The UPMC Defendants do not challenge Dr. Fuhr's qualifications, but contend that his testimony must be excluded because Dr. Fuhr's report contains no relevant economic analysis, no acceptable methodology and no legitimate support for any of the few antitrust-related opinions he expresses.

The court's role as a gatekeeper "is not intended to serve as a replacement for the adversary system." See Crowley v. Chait, 322 F. Supp. 2d 530, 536 (D. N. J. 2004) quoting Fed. R. Evid. 702, Advisory Committee's Note. The Daubert Court recognized that jurors will have the capacity to distinguish "junk science" from the real thing. Accordingly, where an expert is expected [*13] to deliver "shaky" testimony, admission of the testimony may still be proper because "vigorous cross-examination, presentation of contrary evidence, and careful instruction on the burden of proof are the traditional and appropriate means of attacking shaky but admissible evidence." Daubert, 509 U.S. at 596. The Third Circuit further commented on the reliability notion of Daubert, stating:

The evidentiary requirement of reliability is lower than the merits standard of correctness. Further, a court may determine that "good grounds" exist for the expert opinion to be offered, even though the judge may believe "better grounds" exist for an alternate conclusion or that a somewhat flawed methodology, if fixed, would lead to a different conclusion.

Allstate Ins. Co. v. Hamilton Beach/Proctor-Silex, Inc., 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 63355 *12 (W.D. Pa. Aug. 19, 2008) (citing In re Paoli R.R. Yard PCB Litigation, 35 F.3d at 744). A district court is not obligated to accept an expert's legal conclusion, Dalberth v. Xerox Corp., 766 F.3d 172, 189 (2d Cir. 2014), nor should a court "impermissibly weigh[] expert evidence by picking out "potential flaws." Petruzzi's IGA Supermarkets, Inc. v. Darling-Delaware Co., 998 F.2d 1224, 1241 (3d Cir. 1993).

Premier argues that Dr. Fuhr's expert report is not as lengthy or detailed as the report of the UPMC Defendant's expert, however neither the brevity of the Dr. Fuhr's report, nor his arguably limited or summary-like opinions, require that his testimony be excluded. Dr. Fuhr should be allowed [*14] to testify based on his extensive relevant experience and his commonsense application of his expertise to the issues in dispute. Moreover, Premier contends that, because of Dr. Fuhr's training and experience as a health care economist, his testimony will be helpful to the jury.

The Court, having read Dr. Fuhr's report, finds it to be a rather elementary, commonsense approach to matters at issue in this case. Such approach will be helpful to the jury in understanding certain aspects of the litigation, though it may do little in helping Premier prove the elements required to establish an antitrust violation. The Court agrees that the report lacks empirical data, however, we cannot say that Dr. Fuhr's opinions are not based on "good grounds" nor can his report be labeled "junk science."

Ultimately, Dr. Fuhr must defend his opinions under cross-examination, the presentation of the opinions of Dr. Reitman, and this Court's instruction on the elements of antitrust law and the burden of proof. The perceived failings of Dr. Fuhr's report are real, however, they do not rise to a level that requires exclusion. The motion to exclude Dr. Fuhr's testimony will be denied.

An appropriate Order follows. [*15]

REPORT OF MAGISTRATE JUDGE

Plaintiff, a state inmate, has filed a complaint pursuant to 42 U.S.C. § 1983. Plaintiff asserts federal antitrust law and due process violations, as well as a state-law claim.

This case has been referred to the undersigned for consideration and report. DE#7. The undersigned has granted plaintiff's motion for leave to proceed in forma pauperis and screened the complaint pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1915\(e\). As discussed below, plaintiff's federal claims should be dismissed, and the court should decline to exercise supplemental jurisdiction over plaintiff's state-law claim.

I. FACTUAL ALLEGATIONS

The following allegations come from plaintiff's complaint. DE#1. The court assumes their truth to screen the complaint.

Plaintiff is incarcerated at Martin Correction Institution ("MCI"). Id. at 2.<sup>1</sup> Plaintiff has sued Julie Jones, the former Secretary of the Florida Department of Corrections ("FDOC"). Defendant Mark S. Inch is currently the FDOC's Secretary. Ordinarily, the court would refer to Jones as Inch. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 25\(d\). However, nominally at least, plaintiff has sued Jones in her official and individual capacities. DE#1 at 1. Therefore, [*2] the undersigned will refer to Jones as Inch when discussing plaintiff's official-capacity claims. By contrast, the undersigned will refer to Jones as a defendant when discussing plaintiff's individual-capacity claims.

Plaintiff has also sued Trinity Service Group, Inc. ("Trinity"). Id. at 2. Trinity sells products at MCI's canteen (i.e., commissary). Id. at 3.

Inch and Trinity allegedly have "agreed and conspired to a monopoly and fixed prices on products sold in the inmate canteens under [Inch's] control[.]" Id. Inch conducts fair market value surveys. Id. at 5. Thus, he knows that prices for inmate canteen items are above prices for the same or similar items at retail and convenience stores. Id. Inch and Trinity have done so intentionally; they know that plaintiff "does not have a choice as to where he wishes to buy canteen items." Id. at 3.

Based on these allegations, plaintiff asserts: (1) claims under the Sherman and Clayton Acts; (2) a due process claim; and (3) a claim under the Florida Deceptive and Unfair Trade Practices Act \("FDUTPA"\). Id. at 3-5. Plaintiff seeks: (1) economic damages; and (2) an injunction requiring Inch to lower the "canteen prices to a fair market price consistent [with] that of a [convenience] or [*3] retail store." Id. at 4.

II. STANDARD UNDER 28 U.S.C. § 1915(e)

"[\[Section\] 1915\(e\)](#) . . . applies to cases in which the plaintiff is proceeding IFP." Farese v. Scherer, 342 F.3d 1223, 1228 \(11th Cir. 2003\) (per curiam). Under 28 U.S.C. § 1915\(e\)\(2\):

Notwithstanding any filing fee, or any portion thereof, that may have been paid, the court shall dismiss the case at any time if the court determines that--

- (A) the allegation of poverty is untrue; or
- (B) the action or appeal--
  - (i) is frivolous or malicious;
  - (ii) fails to state a claim on which relief may be granted; or
  - (iii) seeks monetary relief against a defendant who is immune from such relief.

In reviewing the complaint under § 1915\(e\), the court takes the allegations as true and construes them in the most favorable light. Hughes v. Lott, 350 F.3d 1157, 1159-60 \(11th Cir. 2003\); Maps v. Miami Dade State Atty., 693 F. App'x 784, 785 \(11th Cir. 2018\) (per curiam). Furthermore, courts hold complaints that pro se prisoners file to "less stringent standards than formal pleadings drafted by lawyers[.]" Haines v. Kerner, 404 U.S. 519, 520, 92 S. Ct. 594, 30 L. Ed. 2d 652 \(1972\) (per curiam).

Nonetheless, under § 1915\(e\)\(2\)\(B\)\(i\), courts may dismiss as frivolous claims that are "based on an indisputably meritless legal theory" or "whose factual contentions are clearly baseless." Neitzke v. Williams, 490 U.S. 319, 327, 109 S. Ct. 1827, 104 L. Ed. 2d 338 \(1989\).

Furthermore, the same standards govern dismissal for failure to state a claim under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(6\) and dismissal for failure to state a claim under 28 U.S.C. §1915\(e\)\(2\)\(B\)\(ii\). Mitchell v. Farcass, 112 F.3d 1483, 1490 \(11th Cir. 1997\). Thus, under § 1915\(e\)\(2\)\(B\)\(ii\), the court may dismiss a complaint that fails "to state a claim [*4] to relief that is plausible on its face." Bell Atl. Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 570, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 \(2007\). "A claim has facial plausibility when the plaintiff pleads factual content that allows the court to draw the reasonable inference that the defendant is liable for the misconduct alleged." Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 679, 129 S. Ct. 1937, 173 L. Ed. 2d 868 \(2009\).

III. DISCUSSION

A. Federal Antitrust Law Claims

1. State Action Doctrine

Plaintiff's federal antitrust law claims are not cognizable under the state action doctrine.

The U.S. Supreme Court has "interpreted the antitrust laws to confer immunity on anticompetitive conduct by the States when acting in their sovereign capacity." N.C. State Bd. of Dental Exam'r v. FTC, 135 S. Ct. 1101, 1110, 191 L. Ed. 2d 35 \(2015\) (citing Parker v. Brown, 317 U.S. 341, 350-51, 63 S. Ct. 307, 87 L. Ed. 315 \(1943\)); see also Nicholl v. Bd. of Regents of Univ. Sys. of Ga., 706 F. App'x 493, 495 \(11th Cir. 2017\) (per curiam) ("[N]either the Sherman Act nor the Clayton Act was intended to authorize restraint of governmental action." (alteration in original) (citation omitted)). Courts commonly call this doctrine the Parker doctrine, state action immunity doctrine, or state action doctrine. See, e.g., Crosby v. Hosp. Auth. of Valdosta & Lowndes Cnty., 93 F.3d 1515, 1521 \(11th Cir. 1996\) (citations omitted); Nicholl, 706 F. App'x at 495.

Relying on this doctrine, courts have repeatedly rejected inmates' claims that state prisons have charged them exorbitant prices at canteens, thus violating federal antitrust laws. Riley v. O'Brien, No. CV 16-11064-LTS, 2016 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 120039, 2016 WL 8679258, at \*9 \(D. Mass. Sep. 6, 2016\); Campbell v. Othoff, No. 4:15-CV-00143, 2016 U.S. Dist. Courts have extended Parker immunity to the contracting vendor. [Riley, 2016 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 120039, 2016 WL 8679258, at \*9; Countryman, 2012 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 185274, 2012 WL 6962294, at \*2-3; Ray, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 85223, 2009 WL 2997607, at \*16-17; [Byrd, 2005 U.S. Dist. To wit:

- The vendor is providing the goods or services on behalf of the state itself, Byrd, 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 18544, 2005 WL 2086321, at \*5; McGuire, 253 F. Supp. 2d at 1009.

- The vendor's provision of the goods or services is incidental to the state's primary purpose of providing and regulating goods and services to inmates to further its correctional objectives. Wheeler, 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 9778, 2005 WL 1217191, at \*6.
- Similarly, prison markets for goods and services are not like free markets in a traditional sense. Rather, single-provider markets [*6] are a type of captive market that furthers prisons' correctional objectives. Byrd, 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 18544, 2005 WL 2086321, at \*5; Wheeler, 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 9778, 2005 WL 1217191, at \*6.
- The prices that vendors charge are subject to prisons' review and approval. Ray, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 85223, 2009 WL 2997607, at \*17.
- Operating a prison requires specialized judgments regarding security. Countryman, 2012 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 185274, 2012 WL 6962294, at \*3.

One goal of the FDOC is to "provide a safe and humane environment for offenders and staff in which rehabilitation is possible." Fla. Stat. § 20.315\(1\)\(d\). Inch, as head of the FDOC, "is responsible for planning, coordinating, and managing the corrections system of the state." Id. § 20.315\(1\)\(c\). Inch must "ensure that the programs and services of the [FDOC] are . . . consistent with [Florida's] legislative intent." Id. The FDOC "has authority to adopt rules . . . to implement its statutory authority." Fla. Stat. § 944.09\(1\).

The Florida Legislature contemplated the creation of inmate canteens for the welfare of inmates. See generally Fla. Stat. § 945.215; see also id. § 945.2151 (noting that canteen accounts may be opened under § 945.215). Florida administrative regulations provide that each Florida prison "shall provide a canteen to be operated within the institution for the convenience of the inmates in obtaining items which are not furnished by the [FDOC], but which are allowable within the institution through canteen purchase." Fla. Admin. Code r. 33-602.101. The FDOC has "the power [*7] to contract for [canteen] goods and services." Am. Home Assur. Co. v. Nat'l R.R. Passenger Corp., 908 So. 2d 459, 463 \(Fla. 2005\) (citing, inter alia, Fla. Stat. § 945.215); see Fla. Admin. Code r. 33-203.101. A "Canteen Review Team" reviews and approves product prices. See id. r. 33-203.101\(2\).

Moreover, canteen operations in Florida prisons are extensively regulated. See, e.g., Fla. Stat. § 945.215\(1\)\(a\) (providing that net proceeds from inmate canteens must be deposited in Florida's General Revenue Fund); id. § 945.215\(1\)\(f\) (inmates generally may not spend more than $100 a week on canteen purchases); id. § 945.2151 ("Prior to opening a canteen account . . . , an inmate who is eligible to receive a social security number must report his or her social security number."); Fla. Admin. Code r. 33-203.101 (discussing canteen operations); id. r. 33-602.101\(1\) (requiring audits of canteen operations); id. r. 33-602.201\(4\)\(e\) (inmates generally must maintain receipts for items purchased at canteens).

Here, the state action doctrine immunizes defendants from plaintiff's federal antitrust claims. While there does not appear to be any controlling authority on point, it appears that every federal district court addressing the issue has held that the state action doctrine bars an inmate's claim that exorbitant canteen prices violate federal antitrust laws. Plaintiff's conclusory allegations of monopoly [*8] and price-fixing do not warrant a departure from this long line of authority.

Likewise, this immunity extends to Trinity here because Trinity is providing goods on behalf of the FDOC, which is an arm of the state of Florida. Wayne v. Fla. Dep't of Corr., 157 F. Supp. 3d 1202, 1204 \(S.D. Fla. 2016\) (citation omitted). The above Florida authority shows a clear policy to allow inmates to purchase approved canteen products to foster their care and welfare. The FDOC has adopted numerous regulations to implement this policy. These include contracting with vendors, approving goods and prices, and putting conditions on inmates' canteen access. In these circumstances, Parker immunity applies to Trinity as well. McGuire, 253 F. Supp. 2d at 1006 ("Where an actively supervised state policy is identified, the immunity extends not only to the state, but to the private parties acting pursuant to and in conformity with the state policy." (citation omitted)).

One can liberally construe Plaintiff's complaint to allege that the state action doctrine does not apply in light of Fla. Stat. § 945.215\(1\)\(e\). See DE#1 at 6. Thereunder, "[i]tems for resale at inmate canteens . . . shall be priced comparatively with like items for retail sale at fair market prices." Thus, the argument would go, Florida policy actually forbids the alleged [*9] monopoly and price-fixing at issue.

This is an overbroad construction of § 945.215\(1\)\(e\). Again, the above Florida authority shows that, to implement the policy of allowing inmates to purchase canteen products, the FDOC must contract with vendors and approve prices. Thus, read in context, § 945.215\(1\)\(e\) merely guides the prices that the FDOC may charge for canteen products. However, this provision does not negate Florida's authorization of the FDOC to operate canteens, which includes setting product prices. Indeed, § 945.215\(1\)\(e\) requires only that the products be "comparatively" priced with "like items for retail sale at fair market prices." And these terms, which on their face do not require equivalent pricing, are not defined. Therefore, § 945.215\(1\)\(e\) envisions the FDOC's exercise of discretion in setting product prices and selecting vendors. Allowing inmates to bring federal antitrust claims whenever they disagree with the FDOC's exercise of this discretion "is the type of threat to our federalism that fomented the [Supreme] Court to imply a state action exemption[.]" See Guyer, 1985 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 12505, 1985 WL 4984, at \*2 (citation omitted). In short, § 945.215\(1\)\(e\) does not preclude the application of the state action doctrine.

The fact that plaintiff has nominally sued Jones in her individual capacity [*10] does not preclude Parker immunity. This allegation is wholly conclusory. DE#1 at 1. Notably, plaintiff explicitly alleges that he sues Jones (now Inch) in her official capacity. And the remaining allegations, coupled with the above authority, compel the conclusion that plaintiff sues Jones (now Inch) in only her official capacity. Jones's actions of contracting with Trinity and setting prices for canteen items fall squarely within the ambit of her official duties. Plaintiff's conclusory allegation that Jones "conspired" with Trinity to monopolize the canteen market and fix prices fails to show otherwise. Compare id. at 3, with Iqbal, 556 U.S. at 678 (Courts "are not bound to accept as true a legal conclusion couched as a factual allegation[.]" (citation omitted)). Accordingly, the fact that plaintiff has nominally sued Jones in her individual capacity does not preclude Parker immunity. See Hunter v. Holsinger, No. 5:15-CV-00043, 2016 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 20057, 2016 WL 1169308, at \*10 \(W.D. Va. Feb. 19, 2016\), report and recommendation adopted, No. 5:15-CV-00043, 2016 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 38286, 2016 WL 1223347 \(W.D. Va. Mar. 24, 2016\).

In sum, the state action doctrine bars plaintiff's federal antitrust claims and, consequently, precludes plaintiff's request for injunctive relief. Cohn v. Bond, 953 F.2d 154, 158 \(4th Cir. 1991\); Griffith v. Health Care Auth. of City of Huntsville, 705 F. Supp. 1489, 1502 \(N.D. Ala. 1989\). The claims are frivolous. See Neitzke, 490 U.S. at 327 ("[C]laims against which it is clear that the defendants [*11] are immune from suit [are frivolous under § 1915(e)(2)(B)(ii)]." (citation omitted)).

2. Failure to State a Claim

Plaintiff's federal antitrust claims would fail even if Parker immunity did not apply. Plaintiff's complaint is conclusory. Plaintiff alleges that Inch conspired with Trinity to monopolize the canteen market and fix prices, which is a legal conclusion couched as a factual allegation. See Iqbal, 556 U.S. at 678. Plaintiff's only supporting factual allegation is that Inch conducts fair market value surveys and, therefore, knows that prices of canteen items are higher than prices for the same or similar items at retail and convenience stores. Therefore, plaintiff has not pleaded "factual content that allows the court to draw the reasonable inference that [defendants are] liable for the misconduct alleged." See id. In short, plaintiff's conclusory allegations of monopoly and price-fixing do not "suggest that an unlawful agreement was made." See Till v. Exxon Mobil Corp., 346 F. App'x 751, 752 \(3d Cir. 2009\) (citation omitted).

3. Sovereign Immunity

Sovereign immunity bars plaintiff's claim for economic damages against Inch in his official capacity. As noted, the official-capacity claim against Inch is one against the state of Florida. Will v. Mich. Dep't of State Police, 491 U.S. 58, 71, 109 S. Ct. 2304, 105 L. Ed. 2d 45 \(1989\) ("[A] suit against a state official in his [*12] or her official capacity is not a suit against the official but rather is a suit against the official's office. As such, it is no different from a suit against the State itself." (citations omitted)). "[A]bsent waiver by the State or valid congressional override, the Eleventh Amendment bars a damages action against a State in federal court." Kentucky v. Graham, 473 U.S. 159, 169, 105 S. Ct. 3099, 87 L. Ed. 2d 114 (1985) (citation omitted). "This bar remains in effect when State officials are sued for damages in their official capacity." Id. (citations omitted). "Congress has not abrogated Eleventh Amendment immunity in 42 U.S.C. §§ 1981, 1983, or 1985 cases, and Florida has not waived its Eleventh Amendment immunity in federal civil rights actions." Henry v. Fla. Bar, 701 F. App'x 878, 880 (11th Cir. 2017) (citing cases). Accordingly, the Eleventh Amendment bars plaintiff's damages claim against Inch in his official capacity.

B. Due Process Claim

Plaintiff piggybacks a due process claim onto his federal antitrust claims. DE#1 at 5-6. This claim is frivolous. "[A § 1983 claim alleging a denial of procedural due process requires proof of three elements: (1) a deprivation of a constitutionally-protected liberty or property interest; (2) state action; and (3) constitutionally-inadequate process." Grayden v. Rhodes, 345 F.3d 1225, 1232 (11th Cir. 2003).

However, courts have consistently held that prisoners do not have a liberty or property interest in canteen access or affordable [*13] canteen items. See, e.g., Riley, 2016 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 120039, 2016 WL 8679258, at *9 ("[T]here is no protected liberty interest or constitutional right to canteen access." (citing cases)); Ferguson v. Thomas, No. 514CV02396RDPJHE, 2016 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 91598, 2016 WL 3774126, at *11 (N.D. Ala. June 20, 2016) ("[P]risoners have no right to use of a prison commissary. Furthermore, an inmate has no constitutionally protected interest in buying food as cheaply as possible." (citing cases)), report and recommendation adopted, No. 514CV02396RDPJHE, 2016 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 91286, 2016 WL 3753230 (N.D. Ala. July 14, 2016); Campbell v. Othoff, No. 4:15-CV-143, 2016 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 34684, 2016 WL 1066287, at *4 (D.N.D. Feb. 17, 2016) ("Generally speaking, prisoners have no constitutional right of access to a jail commissary" (citing cases)), report and recommendation adopted, No. 4:15-CV-143, 2016 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 34683, 2016 WL 1065813 (D.N.D. Mar. 17, 2016); Ozmin, 2012 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 31519, 2012 WL 762460, at *10 ("Canteen access is [] not a protected liberty interest." (citing cases)); Jones v. Swanson Servs. Corp., No. CIV.A. 3:06-00002, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 60313, 2009 WL 2151300, at *2 (M.D. Tenn. July 13, 2009) ("[I]nmates do not have a constitutionally protected right to purchase commissary items at low prices." (citations omitted)); Dewhart v. City of Montgomery, No. 2:08-CV-0111-MEF, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 26202, 2008 WL 900911, at *1 (M.D. Ala. Mar. 31, 2008) ("Inmates have no constitutionally protected interest in purchasing goods available through the prison commissary . . ." (citations omitted)); Hopkins v. Keefe Commissary Network Sales, No. CIV.A. 07-745, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 50961, 2007 WL 2080480, at *5 (W.D. Pa. July 12, 2007) ("Inmates have no federal constitutional right to be able to purchase [*14] items from a commissary. A fortiori, Plaintiff has no federal constitutional right to purchase items from the ACJ commissary at any particular price or to have Keefe restrained from charging even exorbitant prices." (citing cases)). Therefore, plaintiff's due process claim fails.

C. State-Law Claim

Plaintiff has asserted a claim under the FDUTPA based on the same allegations. However, because all of plaintiff's federal claims should be dismissed, the court should decline to exercise supplemental jurisdiction over this claim. See 28 U.S.C. § 1337(c) & (3) ("The district courts may decline to exercise supplemental jurisdiction over a claim . . . if [.] . . the district court has dismissed all claims over which it has original jurisdiction[.]"); Baggett v. First Nat'l Bank of Gainesville, 117 F.3d 1342, 1353 (11th Cir. 1997) (judicial economy, fairness, convenience, and comity dictate dismissal of state claims when court dismisses all federal claims before trial).

IV. CONCLUSION

As discussed above, it is recommended that plaintiff's complaint be dismissed pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1915(e) for frivolity and failure to state a claim, with the following results:

- Plaintiff's federal antitrust claims should be dismissed.
- Plaintiff's due process claim should be dismissed.
- The court should decline to exercise supplemental [*15] jurisdiction over plaintiff's FDUTPA claim.

It is further recommended that the case be closed.

ORDER GRANTING MOTION TO DISMISS; AFFORDING LEAVE TO AMEND

Re: Dkt. No. 88

Before the Court is plaintiff/counterdefendant Becton, Dickinson and Company's ("BD") motion, filed October 29, 2018, to dismiss the First Cause of Action asserted against it in defendant/counterclaimant Cytek Biosciences,

Inc.'s ("Cytek") Counterclaims. Cytek has filed opposition, to which BD has replied. Having read and [*2] considered the papers filed in support of and in opposition to the motion, the Court rules as follows.<sup>1</sup>

BACKGROUND<sup>2</sup>

Cytek is a company that "provide[s] . . . flow cytometry products and services in the United States."<sup>3</sup> (See Counterclaims ¶ 2.) BD is a company that, according to Cytek, "dominates more than half the United States market for flow cytometers" (see id. ¶ 2) and "commands 30-40% of the cytometry reagent market in the United States" (see id. ¶ 19).<sup>4</sup>

In June 2017, Cytek "release[d] . . . the CytekTM Aurora ("Aurora") cytometer," a cytometer that "depart[s] from the traditional cytometer designs that BD and others have employed." (See id. ¶ 14.)

Cytek alleges that, "just months after the Aurora's release," Cytek was informed by one of its customers that "a BD executive threatened that BD would no longer supply the customer with the critical reagents for its BD cytometers if the [customer] purchased an Aurora from Cytek." (See id. ¶ 18.) Cytek further alleges that, sometime "earlier" in 2018, it "learned . . . that BD falsely told a representative of a large, public research university and potential Cytek customer that Cytek 'stole' the technology in the Aurora flow cytometer [*3] from BD." (See id. ¶ 34.)

Moreover, Cytek alleges, BD has required its employees to "enter into employee agreements" which contain "an assignment, or 'holdover,' provision that requires former employees to assign all 'right, title, and interest in any Innovation relating to Confidential Information arising because of [their] employment with [BD], conceived or made by [them] . . . at any time for a period of one (1) year after employment." (See id. ¶¶ 51-52 (alterations in original) (emphasis omitted).)

Based on the above, Cytek filed its Answer and Counterclaims, in which Cytek asserts two Causes of Action against BD. In particular, Cytek asserts a claim for injunctive relief under California Business and Professions Code § 17200, California's Unfair Competition Law ("UCL") (First Cause of Action), and a claim for declaratory relief under 28 U.S.C. § 2201 (Second Cause of Action).

By the instant motion, BD seeks an order dismissing the First Cause of Action pursuant to Rule 12\(b\)\(6\) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure.

LEGAL STANDARD

Dismissal under Rule 12\(b\)\(6\) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure "can be based on the lack of a cognizable legal theory or the absence of sufficient facts alleged under a cognizable legal theory." See Balistreri v. Pacifica Police Dep't, 901 F.2d 696, 699 (9th Cir. 1990). Rule 8\(a\)\(2\), however, "requires only 'a short and plain statement of the claim showing that the pleader is entitled to relief.'" [*4] See Bell Atlantic Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 555, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007) (quoting Fed. R. Civ. P. 8\(a\)\(2\)). Consequently, "a complaint attacked by a Rule 12\(b\)\(6\) motion to dismiss does not need detailed factual allegations." See id. Nonetheless, "a plaintiff's obligation to provide the grounds of his entitlement to relief requires more than labels and conclusions, and a

formulaic recitation of the elements of a cause of action will not do." See id. (internal quotation, citation, and alteration omitted).

In analyzing a motion to dismiss, a district court must accept as true all material allegations in the complaint, and construe them in the light most favorable to the nonmoving party. See NL Indus., Inc. v. Kaplan, 792 F.2d 896, 898 (9th Cir. 1986). "To survive a motion to dismiss, a complaint must contain sufficient factual material, accepted as true, to 'state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face.'" Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 678, 129 S. Ct. 1937, 173 L. Ed. 2d 868 (2009) (quoting Twombly, 550 U.S. at 570). "Factual allegations must be enough to raise a right to relief above the speculative level[.]" Twombly, 550 U.S. at 555. Courts "are not bound to accept as true a legal conclusion couched as a factual allegation." See Iqbal, 556 U.S. at 678 (internal quotation and citation omitted).

DISCUSSION

As noted above, BD seeks dismissal of Cytek's First Cause of Action, which asserts a claim solely for injunctive relief under the UCL.<sup>5</sup>

The UCL prohibits "any unlawful, unfair or [*5] fraudulent business act or practice." See Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17200. The California Supreme Court has recognized that "[b]ecause [the UCL] is written in the disjunctive, it establishes three varieties of unfair competition — acts or practices which are unlawful, or unfair, or fraudulent." See Cel-Tec Comm'n's, Inc. v. Los Angeles Cellular Telephone Co., 20 Cal. 4th 163, 180, 83 Cal. Rptr. 2d 548, 973 P.2d 527 (1999).

Cytek asserts BD violated the "unfair" and "unlawful" prongs of the UCL.<sup>6</sup> BD contends the First Cause of Action is subject to dismissal because Cytek has not pled sufficient facts to state a claim under either of the above-referenced prongs and because Cytek has not adequately alleged it is entitled to injunctive relief under the UCL.

The Court addresses below each of BD's proffered grounds for dismissal.

A. Failure to Allege Sufficient Facts to State a Claim

1. The "Unfair" Prong

Under the "unfair" prong of the UCL, "a practice may be deemed unfair even if not specifically proscribed by some other law." See Cel-Tech, 20 Cal.4th at 180. A competitor's conduct constitutes an "unfair" business practice when such "conduct . . . threatens an incipient violation of an antitrust law, or violates the policy or spirit of one of those laws because its effects are comparable to or the same as a violation of the law, or otherwise significantly threatens or harms [*6] competition." See id. at 187.

Cytek alleges BD has engaged in conduct that "threatens an incipient violation" of section 3 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 14, as well as the Cartwright Act, specifically, California Business and Professions Code §§ 16720 and 16727. (See Counterclaims ¶ 46.) In particular, Cytek alleges, "a BD executive threatened that BD would no longer supply [a Cytek] customer with the critical reagents for its BD cytometers if the [customer] purchased an Aurora from Cytek" (see id. ¶ 18) and, in so doing, attempted to "[tie] . . . the sale of its reagents to its customers' refusal to purchase competing Cytek machines" (see id. ¶ 45) ("tying arrangement theory").<sup>7</sup>

<sup>7</sup> Although Cytek alleges "BD has made similar threats to other potential Cytek customers" (see id. ¶ 21), the allegation is entirely lacking in factual support.

BD contends Cytek has not adequately alleged BD has engaged in conduct that would result in a tying arrangement that is per se illegal under either the Clayton Act or the Cartwright Act.

a. Section 3 of the Clayton Act

Pursuant to section 3 of the Clayton Act, it is "unlawful for any person engaged in commerce . . . to . . . make a sale or contract for sale of goods . . . on the condition, agreement, or understanding that the . . . purchaser thereof shall not use or deal in the goods . . . of a competitor . . . where the effect of such . . . contract for sale or condition, agreement, or understanding may [*7] be to substantially lessen competition." See 15 U.S.C. § 14. "Although the literal terms of [section 3 of the Clayton Act] refer to exclusive dealing contracts, the Supreme Court has extended its application to tying arrangements." Moore v. Jas. H. Matthews & Co., 550 F.2d 1207, 1213-14 (9th Cir. 1977).

A tying arrangement is "defined as an agreement by a party to sell one product but only on the condition that the buyer also purchases a different (or tied) product, or at least agrees that he will not purchase that product from any other supplier." See N. Pac. Ry. Co. v. United States, 356 U.S. 1, 5-6, 78 S. Ct. 514, 2 L. Ed. 2d 545 (1958). "Three elements must be satisfied to establish that a tying arrangement is illegal per se: (1) a tie-in between two products or services sold in different markets, (2) market power in the tying product, and (3) the tying arrangement affects a not insubstantial volume of commerce." Datagate Inc. v. Hewlett-Packard Co., 60 F.3d 1421, 1423-24 (9th Cir. 1995). The above-referenced test applies in determining whether a tying arrangement violates section 1 of the Sherman Act or section 3 of the Clayton Act. See Airweld, Inc. v. Airco, Inc., 742 F.2d 1184, 1189 n.2 (9th Cir. 1984) (applying same elements to analyze whether tying arrangement "violated . . . section 1 of the Sherman Act . . . and section 3 of the Clayton Act"); see also Mozart v. Mercedes-Benz of N. Am., 833 F.2d 1342, 1352 (9th Cir. 1987) (noting "the elements for establishing a Sherman Act § 1 claim and a Clayton Act § 3 claim" based on an illegal tying arrangement "are virtually the same").

Here, while BD acknowledges [*8] Cytek, to state a claim under the "unfair" prong of the UCL, need not allege that a purported tying arrangement has been consummated (see Reply at 3:20-4:6; see also id. at 5:19-6:2), BD contends Cytek has not adequately alleged BD engaged in conduct that threatens an incipient violation of section 3 of the Clayton Act. Specifically, BD argues that, even if the purported tying arrangement had been consummated, Cytek "fails to plausibly allege BD's market power in the purported tying product market" (see Mot. at 12:27-28), and "fails to allege foreclosure of a not-insubstantial dollar-volume of sales in the purported tied product market" (see Mot. at 15:13-14). As set forth below, the Court agrees.

i. Market Power

Market power refers to "the power, within the market for the tying product, to raise prices or to require purchasers to accept burdensome terms that could not be exacted in a completely competitive market." See United States Steel Corp. v. Fortner Enters., 429 U.S. 610, 620, 97 S. Ct. 861, 51 L. Ed. 2d 80 (1977) ("Fortner II"). In evaluating whether a seller possesses market power, courts consider "whether the seller has some advantage not shared by his competitors in the market for the tying product." See id. "When the seller's share of the market is high, or when the seller offers [*9] a unique product that competitors are not able to offer, the [Supreme Court] has held that the likelihood that market power exists and is being used to restrain competition in a separate market is sufficient to make per se condemnation appropriate." Jefferson Parish Hosp. District No. 2 v. Hyde, 466 U.S. 2, 13, 104 S. Ct. 1551, 80 L. Ed. 2d 2 (1984) (internal citations omitted).

As to market share, Cytek alleges BD "commands 30-40% of the cytometry reagent market in the United States." (See Counterclaims ¶ 19.) Such allegation, does not, however, support an inference that BD has market power in the tying product market. See Times-Picayune Pub. Co. v. United States, 345 U.S. 594, 611-12, 73 S. Ct. 872, 97 L. Ed. 1277 (holding publishing company did not have market power where its sales comprised 40% of total sales in tying product market); see also Jefferson Parish Hosp., 466 U.S. at 26-27 (holding hospital did not have market power where it served 30% of total patients in tying product market).

As to the uniqueness of the tying product, Cytek alleges "[t]he reagent BD threatened to withhold was a proprietary BD-licensed formulation . . . for which there is no market alternative" because BD holds a patent on it. (See Counterclaims ¶ 20; see also id. ¶ 20 n.5 (noting BD has "filed suit for patent infringement" against "competitor [who has] marketed what BD referred to as 'copycat products'").) Contrary to Cytek's argument, [*10] however, ownership of "a patent does not necessarily confer market power on the patentee," see Illinois Tool Works Inc. v. Independent Ink, Inc., 547 U.S. 28, 45, 126 S. Ct. 1281, 164 L. Ed. 2d 26 (2006), and Cytek does not allege any other facts to show "other competitors [in the tying product market] are in some way prevented from offering the distinctive product themselves," see Fortner II, 429 U.S. at 621.

ii. Substantial Volume of Commerce Affected

When evaluating whether a tying arrangement affects a substantial volume of commerce, "the controlling consideration is simply whether a total amount of business, substantial enough in terms of dollar-volume so as not to be merely de minimis, is foreclosed to competitors by the tie[.]" See Fortner Enters., Inc. v. United States Steel Corp., 394 U.S. 495, 501, 89 S. Ct. 1252, 22 L. Ed. 2d 495 (1969) ("Fortner I"). "The 'not insubstantial' requirement can be satisfied by the foreclosure of a single purchaser, so long as the purchaser represents a 'not insubstantial' dollar-volume of sales." Datagate, Inc. v. Hewlett-Packard Co., 60 F.3d 1421, 1425 (9th Cir. 1995).

Here, Cytek's Counterclaims lack sufficient facts to support a finding that the tying arrangement at issue, if consummated, would result in the foreclosure of sales by Cytek involving a "not insubstantial dollar-volume." Indeed, Cytek does not plead any facts showing the customer to whom the tying arrangement was presented had any interest in purchasing a cytometer from Cytek, such that the [*11] arrangement was likely to result in the loss of a sale by Cytek. Moreover, Cytek alleges its cytometers "range in price from tens of thousands of dollars to more than [a] quarter of a million dollars per machine" (see Counterclaims ¶ 39); Cytek does not allege the price of the cytometer the above-referenced customer would have purchased, nor, given the ambiguity in the above-quoted description of the alleged lowest-priced cytometer, has Cytek shown such purchase necessarily would entail a not insubstantial sum. See, e.g., Fortner I, 394 U.S. at 502 (holding foreclosure of $190,000 in sales was not "paltry or 'insubstantial'"); Moore, 550 F.2d at 1216 (noting "[t]he 'not insubstantial' test has been met by showing dollar volumes which total $60,800, and estimated sales of $86,376" (internal citations omitted)); Thompson v. Metropolitan Multi-List, Inc., 934 F.2d 1566, 1578 (11th Cir. 1991) (holding loss of membership dues "between $30,000.00 - 70,000.00 . . . is clearly substantial").

b. The Cartwright Act

"A tying arrangement may be condemned under either or both [Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code] section 16720 and section 16727." Morrison v. Viacom Inc., 66 Cal. App. 4th 534, 541, 78 Cal. Rptr. 2d 133 (1998). To establish a "per se tying arrangement violative of section 16720," the following elements must be met:

- (1) a tying agreement, arrangement or condition whereby the sale of the tying product was linked to the sale of the tied product or service; (2) the [*12] party had sufficient economic power in the tying market to coerce the purchase of the tied product; (3) a substantial amount of sale was affected in the tied product; and (4) the complaining party sustained pecuniary loss as a consequence of the unlawful act.

See id. at 541-42. "Under section 16727, a per se violation is established if either element (2) or (3) is established along with elements (1) and (4)." See id. at 542 (emphasis in original); see also Nicolosi Distrib., Inc. v. BMW of N. Am., 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 44544, 2011 WL 1483424, at *2 (N.D. Cal. Apr. 19, 2011).

BD contends Cytek fails to adequately allege BD's conduct threatens an incipient violation of the Cartwright Act "for the same reasons it fails to state a federal tying claim." (See Mot. at 16:15-16; see also Reply at 9:15-16). The Court agrees.

As discussed above, Cytek's Counterclaims lack sufficient facts to support a finding that BD has market power in the reagent market in the United States, that the tying arrangement at issue would affect a substantial volume of commerce in the cytometer market, or that Cytek would suffer a pecuniary loss as a consequence of BD's conduct.

c. Conclusion as to "Unfair" Prong

To the extent the First Cause of Action is premised on Cytek's tying arrangement theory, such claim is subject to dismissal.

2. The "Unlawful" Prong

Under the "unlawful" [*13] prong, the UCL "borrows violations of other laws and treats them as unlawful practices that the unfair competition law makes independently actionable." See Cel-Tech, 20 Cal. 4th at 180 (internal quotation and citation omitted).

Cytek alleges BD engaged in unlawful conduct when: (1) "BD falsely told a representative of a large, public research university and potential Cytek customer that Cytek 'stole' the technology in the Aurora flow cytometer from BD" (see Counterclaims ¶ 34) ("false statement theory");<sup>8</sup> and (2) BD "require[d] its employees . . . to enter into employee agreements that are illegal under California Business & Professions Code § 16600" (see id. ¶ 51) ("employee agreement theory").

While BD does not challenge the sufficiency of the factual allegations underlying Cytek's claim based on its employee agreement theory,<sup>9</sup> BD contends Cytek's Counterclaims lack sufficient facts to state a claim based on its false statement theory.

First, BD contends Cytek's allegations underlying its false statement theory are insufficient to state a claim under the "unlawful" prong of the UCL because Cytek "fail[s] to identify the legal basis for this claim." (See Reply at 10:12-13.) The Court agrees.

As BD correctly points out, the allegations in [*14] Cytek's Counterclaims do not identify the statute BD purportedly violated when it made the statement at issue. For this reason alone, Cytek has failed to state a claim under the "unlawful" prong of the UCL, as "a violation of another law is a predicate for stating a cause of action under the UCL's unlawful prong." See Berryman v. Merit Prop. Mgmt., Inc., 152 Cal. App. 4th 1544, 1554, 62 Cal. Rptr. 3d 177 (2007); see also E & E Co. v. Kam Hing Enters., 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 87554, 2008 WL 1924905, at *1 (N.D. Cal. Apr. 29, 2008) (holding "plaintiff's allegations [were] insufficient to satisfy the 'unlawful' prong, for the reason that allegations of illegality must be accompanied by reference to a particular statute"); Gonzalez v. Trust, 2015 WL 12081028, at *2 (S.D. Cal. Sep. 28, 2015) (dismissing claim under "unlawful" prong; noting, "while [p]laintiffs may have alleged facts to support a statutory violation, [p]laintiffs have not identified any such statute in their allegations directed at [defendant]").

Next, BD argues that, even assuming Cytek's Counterclaims had identified California Civil Code § 43 as the basis for its false statement theory, see Cal. Civ. Code § 43 (providing persons "the right of protection . . . from defamation"), Cytek has not pled sufficient facts to state a claim for defamation. As set forth below, the Court again agrees.

<sup>8</sup> Although Cytek alleges it "has learned of repeated instances of BD and its sales representatives making false statements of fact about Cytek's products and practices" (see id. ¶ 33), the allegation is lacking in any factual support beyond the above-referenced instance.

<sup>9</sup> Although Cytek characterizes the "holdover clauses" (see id. ¶ 54) as "illegal" and, consequently, unlawful, Cytek also alleges BD's use of such contractual provision is "unfair" (see id. ¶ 51). In any event, BD does not challenge the sufficiency of the underlying factual allegations under either theory.

"Defamation is the intentional publication of a statement of fact that is false, unprivileged, and has a natural tendency to injure or that causes [*15] special damage." Grenier v. Taylor, 234 Cal. App. 4th 471, 486, 183 Cal. Rptr. 3d 867 \(2015\). In order to plead a claim for defamation, "the defamatory statement must be specifically identified, and the plaintiff must plead the substance of the statement." See Pruitt v. Genentech, Inc., 2017 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 136258, 2017 WL 3641783, at \*4 \(E.D. Cal. Aug. 24, 2017\); see also MacKinnon v. Logitech, Inc., 2016 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 17789, 2016 WL 541068, at \*5 \(N.D. Cal. Feb. 11, 2016\) (noting "defamatory statement must be specifically identified" and "plaintiff must plead the substance of the statement" (internal quotation and citation omitted)). Specifically, to withstand dismissal, "the complaint must reference the speakers of the defamatory communications, the recipients, the timing, or the context in which they were made, sufficient to provide [the defendant] with notice of the issues to prepare a defense." See Pruitt, 2017 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 136258, 2017 WL 3641783 at \*4 (alteration in original) (internal quotation and citation omitted); see also MacKinnon, 2016 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 17789, 2016 WL 541068 at \*5 (noting plaintiff, to plead defamation claim, must "specifically identify who made the statements, when they were made, and to whom they were made" (internal quotation and citation omitted)); Cook v. UPS Cartage Service, Inc., 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 128412, 2018 WL 3630043, at \*2 \(E.D. Cal. July 31, 2018\) (dismissing defamation claim where plaintiff failed to allege identity of speakers and recipients of defamatory statements, as well as time or context in which statements were made).

Here, although Cytek alleges "BD falsely told a representative of a large, public research university and potential [*16] Cytek customer that Cytek 'stole' the technology in the Aurora flow cytometer from BD" (see Counterclaims ¶ 34), the allegation "lacks the requisite specificity" to state a claim for defamation. See Pruitt, 2017 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 136258, 2017 WL 3641783 at \*4. In particular, Cytek does not adequately allege the identity of the speaker or the recipient, when such statement was made, and the context in which the statement was made.<sup>10</sup>

Accordingly, to the extent the First Cause of Action is based on Cytek's false statement theory, such claim is subject to dismissal.

B. Failure to Allege Entitlement to Injunctive Relief

As noted above, Cytek's First Cause of Action asserts a claim solely for injunctive relief. (See Counterclaims ¶ 57.) BD contends Cytek has not adequately alleged entitlement to such relief because Cytek "alleges no basis for a remedy to stop any non-speculative future harm." (See Reply at 15:23-24.) The Court agrees.

Under California law, courts may award injunctive relief "as may be necessary to prevent the use or employment . . . of any practice which constitutes unfair competition." See Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17203. Injunctive relief under § 17203, however, "cannot be used . . . to enjoin an event which has already transpired; a showing of threatened [*17] future harm or continuing violation is required." See People v. Toomey, 157 Cal. App. 3d 1, 20, 203 Cal. Rptr. 642 \(1984\). "Injunctive relief has no application to wrongs which have been completed, absent a showing that past violations will probably recur." Id. (internal citation omitted). Where a plaintiff's UCL claim lacks facts showing he or she is entitled to the relief sought under the UCL, such claim is subject to dismissal. See Ice Cream Distrib. of Evansville, LLC v. Dreyer's Grand Ice Cream, Inc., 487 Fed. App'x 362, 363 \(9th Cir. 2012\) (affirming dismissal of UCL claim where plaintiff sought injunction and restitution but did not plead facts demonstrating entitlement to either form of relief).

Here, Cytek's tying arrangement and false statement theories are premised on statements purportedly made by BD representatives at some point in time between the Aurora's release in 2017 and the filing of the Counterclaims in

<sup>10</sup> To the extent BD argues the alleged statement is privileged under California's litigation privilege, California's common interest privilege, and the Noer-Pennington doctrine, such argument is premature, given the absence of sufficient facts regarding the circumstances under which the statement was made.

2018 (see Counterclaims ¶¶ 18, 34) and, consequently, are based on events "which [have] already transpired." See Toomey, 157 Cal. App. 3d at 20. Cytek's Counterclaims lack, however, sufficient facts to support a finding that such conduct "will probably recur" in the future. See id.

Next, with respect to Cytek's employee agreement theory, Cytek alleges it may be subject to future harm because "BD has asserted claims against Cytek . . . for inducing breach of [the] illegal [*18] holdover clauses," and, although such claims "have been dismissed," BD's "discovery requests . . . make clear that BD intends to pursue this claim in the future following additional discovery." (See Counterclaims ¶ 54.) In particular, Cytek alleges, BD has "request[ed] production by Cytek . . . of '[a]ll documents concerning patents, patent applications, or invention disclosure statements relating to Flow Cytometry Systems or Spectral Flow Cytometry Systems that were drafted, submitted, or filed by [Cytek or on Cytek's behalf] . . .' from January 1, 2012 to present." (See id. ¶ 31 (alterations in original).)

Cytek's allegations do not support a finding that BD will reassert against Cytek a claim for inducement of breach of contract premised on the "holdover provision." The Court dismissed BD's inducement of breach of contract claim on the ground such claim was preempted by the California Uniform Trade Secrets Act (see Doc. No. 65 (Order Granting Cytek's Motion to Dismiss) at 10-11), and Cytek has not pleaded any facts showing how the above-referenced discovery, or any other discovery, will provide BD with information sufficient to avoid that legal bar or to allow BD to reassert the [*19] "holdover provision" as the basis of any other claim.

Accordingly, to the extent the First Cause of Action is premised on Cytek's employee agreement theory, such claim is subject to dismissal, and, to the extent the First Cause of Action is premised on the tying arrangement and false statement theories, such claim is subject to dismissal on this additional ground as well.

CONCLUSION

For the reasons set forth above, BD's motion to dismiss is hereby GRANTED and Cytek's First Cause of Action is hereby DISMISSED with leave to amend. Cytek's Amended Counterclaims, if any, shall be filed no later than March 7, 2019.

[**1423] OPINION AND ORDER

Michael H. Simon, District Judge.

In this patent action, the Court previously granted partial summary judgment in favor of Plaintiff Ni-Q, LLC ("Ni-Q"), finding that the asserted claims of the subject patent are invalid and that Plaintiff did not infringe the asserted claims. Ni-Q had sought a declaration of invalidity and noninfringement and Defendant Prolacta Bioscience, Inc. ("Prolacta") had asserted a counterclaim against Ni-Q for infringement, seeking money damages and injunctive relief. Those claims have now been resolved with the Court's Opinion and Order granting Plaintiff's motion for summary judgment. The sole claim remaining in this case is [*1424] Plaintiff's claim for money damages and injunctive relief under Oregon's Unlawful Trade Practices Act ("UTPA"), Oregon Revised Statutes ("ORS") § 646.605, et seq. Prolacta moves for summary judgment against this claim. [*2] For the reasons discussed below, Prolacta's motion for summary judgment is denied.

STANDARDS

A. Summary Judgment

A party is entitled to summary judgment if the "movant shows that there is no genuine dispute as to any material fact and the movant is entitled to judgment as a matter of law." Fed. R. Civ. P. 56\(a\). The moving party has the burden of establishing the absence of a genuine dispute of material fact. Celotex Corp. v. Catrett, 477 U.S. 317, 323, 106 S. Ct. 2548, 91 L. Ed. 2d 265 \(1986\). The court must view the evidence in the light most favorable to the non-movant and draw all reasonable inferences in the non-movant's favor. Clicks Billiards Inc. v. Sixshooters Inc., 251 F.3d 1252, 1257 \(9th Cir. 2001\). Although "[c]redibility determinations, the weighing of the evidence, and the drawing of legitimate inferences from the facts are jury functions, not those of a judge . . . ruling on a motion for summary judgment," the "mere existence of a scintilla of evidence in support of the plaintiff's position [is] insufficient." Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc., 477 U.S. 242, 252, 255, 106 S. Ct. 2505, 91 L. Ed. 2d 202 \(1986\). "Where the record taken as a whole could not lead a rational trier of fact to find for the non-moving party, there is no genuine issue for trial." Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 587, 106 S. Ct. 1348, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538 \(1986\) (citation and quotation marks omitted).

B. Oregon's UTPA

Ni-Q alleges that Prolacta has violated Oregon's UTPA. Specifically, Ni-Q alleges that Prolacta violated ORS § 646A.810\(2\) by asserting a patent infringement [*3] claim in bad faith. ORS § 646A.810\(2\) provides:

A person or the person's affiliate may not communicate a demand, or cause another person to communicate a demand, to a recipient if in the demand the person or the person's affiliate alleges, asserts or claims in bad faith that the recipient has infringed or contributed to infringing a patent or the rights that a patentee has . . . under the patent.

ORS § 646A.810\(2\).

In addition, ORS § 646A.810\(4\) provides a list of possible conditions that "[a] court may consider . . . as evidence that a person or the person's affiliate has, in bad faith, alleged, asserted or claimed an infringement of a patent." These include that the person making the demand did not properly compare the claims of the patent to the features of the allegedly infringing product (§ 646A.810\(4\)\(d\)) and that the person making the demand knew or should have known that the claim of infringement was without merit or was deceptive (§ 646A.810\(4\)\(f\)). Any violation of ORS § 646A.810\(2\) constitutes an unlawful practice under ORS § 646.608, which triggers the right to file suit.

BACKGROUND

Prolacta is a corporation that produces and sells human milk formula to medical service providers. Prolacta sells its formula to hospitals for $180 per ounce, and a single premature infant might consume thousands [*4] of dollars' worth of formula during the course of his or her hospital stay. Ni-Q is a relatively new entrant into the market for producing and selling human milk formula. Ni-Q is a competitor of Prolacta. Ni-Q's human milk formula is sold at a significantly lower price than is Prolacta's.

On November 11, 2016, Prolacta sent a letter ("November 11 Letter") to the Chief Executive Officer ("CEO") of Ni-Q, Bill Pfost. ECF 25-2 at 1. The letter's stated intent was to apprise Mr. Pfost of the patents owned by Prolacta. Prolacta admitted to having "very limited visibility into the products and processes being developed by [Ni-Q]." Id. Nonetheless, Prolacta expressed a suspicion "that [Ni-Q] may be relying on matching donor genetic identity marker profiles with donated milk samples." Id.

In the November 11 Letter, Prolacta alleges that Ni-Q infringed U.S. Patent No. 8,628,921 (the '921 Patent), among other patents. This patent involves "methods and systems for diagnosing or screening human milk samples to confirm that the milk is from a defined source." ECF 57-1 at 5. Prolacta acquired the '921 Patent through an assignment of ownership rights from the inventors. Ni-Q asserts [**1425] that the '921 Patent has an effective filing date of March 20, 2008, and Prolacta [*5] does not dispute this date.<sup>1</sup>

Claim 1 of the '921 Patent describes "[a] method for determining whether a donated mammary fluid was obtained from a specific subject." This method comprises:

- (a) testing a donated biological sample from the specific subject to obtain at least one reference identity marker profile for at least one marker;
- (b) testing a sample of the donated mammary fluid to obtain at least one identity marker profile in step (a);
- (c) comparing the identity marker profiles, wherein a match between [them] indicates that the mammary fluid was obtained from the specific subject; and
- (d) processing the donated mammary fluid . . . wherein the processed donated mammary fluid comprises a human protein constituent of 11-20 mg/mL; a human fat constituent of 35-55 mg/mL; and a human carbohydrate constituent of 70-120 mg/mL.

'921 Patent at 21:45-65. In the November 11 Letter, Prolacta encouraged Ni-Q to review the '921 Patent, among others, to ensure that Ni-Q was not infringing the patented method of using genetic information from donated milk samples to confirm the identity of the donors.

On March 21, 2017, Mr. Pfost sent an email to Prolacta's CEO Scott Elster, contending that Ni-Q was confident that it was not infringing [*6] any of Prolacta's patents. ECF 25-2 at 2. Prolacta responded by stating that it remained concerned about Ni-Q's infringement because of information in the brochure for Ni-Q's product. ECF 25-2 at 3. On May 11, 2017, Prolacta, through its legal counsel, requested samples of each product that Ni-Q made with donated human milk. ECF 25-2 at 7-8. Prolacta also inquired about the fat, protein, and carbohydrate constituents in Ni-Q's human milk products. Id.

Ni-Q neither submitted the samples nor answered the questions about protein, fat, and carbohydrate constituents. Instead, Ni-Q replied that Prolacta had already admitted to having "absolutely no basis for alleging infringement." ECF 25-2 at 9-10. According to Ni-Q, this admission was based on Prolacta's statement that it had so far been "unable to uncover details regarding Ni-Q's products sufficient to show whether or not Ni-Q's products are infringing Prolacta's patent[]." Id. Ni-Q also requested that Prolacta submit a claim chart, to indicate exactly how Ni-Q's product incorporates all the claim elements from Prolacta's patent. Prolacta did not submit the requested claim chart. Id.

On May 31, 2017, Prolacta filed a complaint against Ni-Q [*7] in the Central District of California ("California Lawsuit"). The California Lawsuit alleged that Ni-Q was infringing the '921 Patent. In response, Ni-Q filed a Motion to Dismiss and a Rule 11 Motion for Sanctions against Prolacta. *Prolacta Bioscience, Inc. v. Ni-Q, LLC, 2017 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 217030, 2017 WL 5664985, at \*1 \(C.D. Cal. 2017\)* Judge James Otero decided the case, id., and dismissed Prolacta's infringement complaint for lack of proper venue under 28 U.S.C. § 1400\(b\).<sup>2</sup> [*2017 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 217030, \[WL\] at \*7.*](#) The court declined to issue Rule 11 sanctions against Prolacta. Id.

<sup>1</sup> The '921 patent was filed on August 23, 2012. The '921 patent is a continuation of Application No. 13/079,923, which was filed on April 5, 2011. This application is a continuation of Application No. 12/052,253, which was filed on March 20, 2008. Ni-Q asserts that Application No. 12/052,253 is a continuation-in-part of international application PCT/US2006/036827, which was filed on September 20, 2006, in accordance with the Patent Cooperation Treaty. Ni-Q argues that because the international application contains no disclosure of either the macronutrient ranges or the mammary fluid processing treatment mentioned in claim (1)(d) of the '921 patent, the chain of continuation is broken at this point and the '921 Patent therefore has the effective filing date of March 20, 2008.

<sup>2</sup> "Any civil action for patent infringement may be brought in a judicial district where the defendant resides, or where the defendant has committed acts of infringement and has a regular and established place of business." 28 U.S.C. § 1400\(b\).

While the California Lawsuit was pending, Ni-Q filed its lawsuit in this Court, seeking declaratory relief and money damages. Prolacta filed a counterclaim alleging that Ni-Q infringed the '921 Patent. Ni-Q filed a motion for summary judgment, arguing that the asserted claims of the '921 Patent are invalid for patenting natural law and asserting that there is no genuine issue of material fact that Ni-Q infringes the '921 Patent even if it is valid. On September 21, 2018, Ni-Q moved for leave to amend its answer to Prolacta's counterclaim. [**1426] The proposed amended answer added the affirmative defense of inequitable conduct. Ni-Q asserted that it first became aware of the fact that Prolacta might have engaged in inequitable conduct before the U.S. Patent and Trademark Office ("PTO") when Prolacta filed its response [*8] to Ni-Q's motion for summary judgment. Ni-Q's new affirmative defense was based on allegations that Prolacta engaged in sales or offers to sell products covered by the '921 Patent more than one year before the effective filing date of the patent. The Court granted the motion to amend, finding that Ni-Q's proposed pleading met the heightened standard for alleging fraud. The Court concluded:

The facts alleged by Ni-Q give rise to a reasonable inference that the inventors knew of the withheld information, which allegedly all were Prolacta publications and commercial sales. Prolacta offers no explanation for the withholding of this information. At this stage of the litigation, these allegations support a reasonable inference of an intent to mislead the PTO.

DISCUSSION

In its motion for partial summary judgment, Prolacta argues: (1) Ni-Q's UTPA claim is barred under the Noerr-Pennington<sup>3</sup> doctrine; (2) Ni-Q's claim for state law tort liability is preempted under federal patent law; and (3) the doctrine of issue preclusion prevents Ni-Q from arguing that Prolacta's conduct in enforcing the '921 Patent meets was objectively baseless because the Central District of California necessarily decided this issue against Ni-Q. [*9] Each argument is addressed in turn.

A. Noerr-Pennington Doctrine

The Noerr-Pennington doctrine is most often seen asserted as a defense against certain claims of antitrust liability. *Octane Fitness, LLC v. ICON Health & Fitness, Inc.*, 572 U.S. 545, 134 S. Ct. 1749, 1757, 188 L. Ed. 2d 816 \(2014\) ("Under the Noerr-Pennington doctrine . . . defendants are immune from antitrust liability for engaging in conduct (including litigation) aimed at influencing decisionmaking by the government."). The parties do not discuss whether the law of the Ninth Circuit or the Federal Circuit applies to the asserted application of Noerr-Pennington to a state law tort claim.<sup>4</sup> The Court, however, need not resolve that question because the analysis is the same under either circuit's law. Both Circuits apply Noerr-Pennington to patent litigation and pre-litigation communications. See *Sosa v. DIRECTV, Inc.*, 437 F.3d 923, 934-37 \(9th Cir. 2006\); *Globetrotter Software, Inc. v. Elan Computer Grp., Inc.*, 362 F.3d 1367, 1377 \(Fed. Cir. 2004\). Both Circuits also extend the immunity from antitrust suits to state law tort action. See *Theme Promotions, Inc. v. News Am. Mktg. FSI*, 546 F.3d 991, 1007 \(9th Cir. 2008\) ("There is simply no reason that a common-law tort doctrine can any more permissibly abridge or chill the constitutional right of petition than can a statutory claim such as antitrust."); *Globetrotter*, 362 F.3d at 1377 ("Our decision to permit state-law tort liability for only objectively baseless allegations of infringement rests on both federal preemption [*10] and the First Amendment. . . . In addition, the same First Amendment policy reasons that justify the extension of Noerr immunity to pre-litigation conduct in the context of federal antitrust law apply equally in the context of state-law tort claims. (citation omitted)).

<sup>3</sup> The Noerr-Pennington doctrine is named after two cases: *Eastern R.R. Presidents Conference v. Noerr Motor Freight, Inc.*, 365 U.S. 127, 81 S. Ct. 523, 5 L. Ed. 2d 464 \(1961\) and *United Mine Workers of Am. v. Pennington*, 381 U.S. 657, 85 S. Ct. 1585, 14 L. Ed. 2d 626 \(1965\).

<sup>4</sup> Federal Circuit law applies in analyzing whether federal law preempts Ni-Q's state law claim. See *Globetrotter Software, Inc. v. Elan Computer Grp., Inc.*, 362 F.3d 1367, 1374 \(Fed. Cir. 2004\) ("We apply Federal Circuit law not only to the patent issues but also in deciding whether the patent laws preempt a state-law tort claim.").

In its Amended Complaint, Ni-Q alleges that Prolacta engaged in unfair practices by making pre-suit demands without having a reasonable basis to believe that Ni-Q was infringing Prolacta's patent, filing the California Lawsuit without having a reasonable basis to conclude that Ni-Q was infringing Prolacta's patent, and filing the California Lawsuit in California without having a reasonable basis to conclude that it was a proper venue. Thus, alleges, Ni-Q, Prolacta's conduct was done in bad faith. In response to Prolacta's motion for summary judgment, however, Ni-Q adds the bad faith assertions included in its amended answer—that Prolacta enforced the '921 Patent knowing it was invalid because Prolacta [**1427] had engaged in commercial sales and publications more than one year before the effective filing date.

Ni-Q requests under Rule 56\(d\) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure that the Court stay Prolacta's motion and allow additional discovery on these new allegations. Ni-Q bases its most recent allegations [*11] of bad faith on evidence submitted by Prolacta in response to Ni-Q's motion for summary judgment. Specifically, Ni-Q cites to a declaration filed by Prolacta in which the declarant testifies that she purchased Prolacta's patented product in 2006, more than one year before the effective filing date of the '921 Patent. Because, as discussed below, the Court finds that Ni-Q has sufficiently raised an issue of fact regarding Prolacta's bad faith and thus the objective and subjective baselessness of Prolacta's enforcement of the '921 Patent, the Court declines to stay Prolacta's motion for summary judgment for additional discovery.

Regardless of whether the asserted bad faith was making pre-suit demands and filing the lawsuit without ensuring that Ni-Q's product infringed or with knowledge that Prolacta's patent was invalid, the actions taken by Prolacta are conduct within the prima facie scope of Noerr-Pennington doctrine. There are, however, two primary exceptions to Noerr-Pennington immunity. The first exception is the "sham" exception. Under the sham exception, "activity ostensibly directed toward influencing governmental action does not qualify for Noerr immunity if it is a mere sham to cover an attempt [*12] to interfere directly with the business relationships of a competitor." *Octane Fitness, 572 U.S. at 556* (quotation marks and alterations omitted). The second exception is the "Walker Process fraud" exception.<sup>5</sup> Under this exception, enforcement of a patent obtained by fraud on the PTO is not entitled to Noerr-Pennington immunity. See *Kaiser Found. Health Plan, Inc. v. Abbott Labs, Inc., 552 F.3d 1033, 1045 \(9th Cir. 2009\)*. Ni-Q argues that both exceptions apply.

1. Sham Exception

"[W]hile genuine petitioning is immune from antitrust liability, sham petitioning is not." *BE & K Constr. Co. v. N.L.R.B., 536 U.S. 516, 525-26, 122 S. Ct. 2390, 153 L. Ed. 2d 499 \(2002\)*. In order "to qualify as a 'sham,' a 'lawsuit must be objectively baseless' and 'must conceal an attempt to interfere directly with the business relationships of a competitor.'" *Octane Fitness, 572 U.S. at 556* (alterations omitted) (quoting *Professional Real Estate Inv'rs., Inc. v. Columbia Pictures Indus., Inc., 508 U.S. 49, 60-61, 113 S. Ct. 1920, 123 L. Ed. 2d 611 \(1993\)* (hereinafter "PRE")). More specifically, "the lawsuit must be objectively baseless in the sense that no reasonable litigant could realistically expect success on the merits. . . . Only if challenged litigation is objectively meritless may a court examine the litigant's subjective motivation." *PRE, 508 U.S. at 60*. Under the second prong, the subjective prong, "the court should focus on whether the baseless lawsuit conceals 'an attempt to interfere directly with the business relationships of a competitor' through the 'use [of] the governmental [*13] process—as opposed to the outcome of that process—as an anticompetitive weapon.'" *Id. at 60-61* (emphasis and alteration in original) (citation omitted). Moreover, "[t]he existence of probable cause to institute legal proceedings precludes a finding that an antitrust defendant has engaged in a sham litigation." *Id. at 62*. In the context of a tort allegation of a "wrongful civil proceeding[]," the plaintiff carries the burden of "prov[ing] that the defendant lacked probable cause to institute an unsuccessful civil lawsuit, and that the defendant pressed the action for an improper, malicious purpose." Id.

a. Objective Baselessness

In evaluating objective baselessness, a court must inquire into the reasonableness of a defendant's litigation at the time when the complaint was filed. *FilmTec Corp. v. Hydranautics*, 67 F.3d 931, 938 \(Fed. Cir. 1995\). "A bad faith patent enforcement may form the basis for . . . liability." *Boydston Metal Works, Inc. v. Cottrell, Inc.*, 2017 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 175659, 2017 WL 4803938, at \*5 \(D. Or. Oct. 24, 2017\); see also *Octane Fitness*, 572 U.S. at 556 ("In other words, the plaintiff must have brought baseless claims . . . to thwart competition (i.e. in bad faith).") (emphasis added)).

The Court focuses on Ni-Q's most recent argument, that Prolacta enforced its patent in bad faith because it knew its patent was invalid [**1428] based on the "on sale bar" of the U.S. Patent Act in effect at the relevant time. [*14] For patents predating the America Invents Act of 2011 ("AIA"), if a claimed invention is either sold or offered for sale in the U.S. more than one year before the effective filing date, then the patent for that invention is not valid. 35 U.S.C. § 102\(b\) (pre-AIA). This rule is known as the "on sale bar."

"The on sale bar is triggered if two conditions are met by the critical date: (1) the invention was offered for sale, and (2) the invention was ready for patenting." *Boydston Metal Works, Inc. v. Cottrell, Inc.*, 519 F. Supp. 2d 1119, 1128 \(D. Or. 2007\) (citing *Pfaff v. Wells Elecs.*, 525 U.S. 55, 67, 119 S. Ct. 304, 142 L. Ed. 2d 261 \(1998\)). For patents predating the AIA, the relevant critical date is the date of filing. 35 U.S.C. § 102\(b\) (pre-AIA). "[T]he invention that is the subject matter of the offer for sale must satisfy each claim limitation of the patent." *Scaltech, Inc. v. Retec/Tetra, LLC*, 269 F.3d 1321, 1329 \(Fed. Cir. 2001\). The accused infringer has the burden "to establish by 'clear and convincing evidence that there was a definite sale or offer to sell more than one year before the application for the subject patent, and that the subject matter of the sale or offer to sell fully anticipated the claimed invention.'" *Boydston*, 519 F. Supp. 2d at 1124 (quoting *Elan Corp., PLC v. Andrx Pharms., Inc.*, 366 F.3d 1336, 1340 \(Fed. Cir. 2004\)). Even one single sale or offer to sell may invalidate a patent under the pre-AIA Patent Act. See *Electromotive Div. of Gen. Motors Corp. v. Transportation Sys. Div. of Gen. Elec. Co.*, 417 F.3d 1203, 1209 \(Fed. Cir. 2005\) ("We need not consider whether the district court was correct as to all of these sales because a single sale or offer for sale suffices [*15] to bar patentability."); *Atl. Thermoplastics Co. v. Faytex Corp.*, 970 F.2d 834, 836 \(Fed. Cir. 1992\) ("A single sale or offer to sell suffices to bar patentability.").

The '921 Patent's effective filing date of March 20, 2008 is before the AIA. Accordingly, the effective filing date serves as the critical date for the on sale bar analysis. Ni-Q's argument that Prolacta enforced the '921 Patent in bad faith hinges on Ni-Q's assertion that Prolacta sold or offered to sell products that satisfied the claim limitations of the '921 Patent before March 20, 2007. Because Prolacta knew or should have known about those sales, argues Ni-Q, Prolacta knew or should have known it improperly obtained the patent, the patent was invalid, and that it should not be enforcing the patent.

Prolacta submitted the testimony of Martin L. Lee, PhD, in response to Ni-Q's motion for summary judgment. According to Dr. Lee, "[t]he claims of the '921 patent . . . cover Prolacta's NEO20TM product, which is manufactured from DNA matched donor milk, and which includes the multi-nutrient enhanced ranges cited in the patent." ECF 99 at 8: P 18. Neither party argues that NEO20 is not covered by the claims of the '921 patent.

Prolacta also submitted the declaration of Dr. Sarah Lentz-Kapua in response to Ni-Q's motion for summary judgment. Dr. Lentz-Kapua [*16] testified that she first learned about Prolacta's NEO20 product "in or around 2006" and that it was being sold at the time. ECF 98 at 1-2. This testimony is evidence that NEO20—a product that fully embodied the claims of the '921 Patent—was being sold more than one year before the effective filing date of March 20, 2008. Indeed, after Ni-Q pointed out this issue to counsel for Prolacta, counsel for Prolacta suggested that the parties file a joint motion to dismiss under Rule 41 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure and indicated that otherwise Prolacta "could unilaterally concede the invalidity of the asserted claims and move to dismiss its counterclaims." ECF 118-8. Prolacta later changed its position and averred that its first sale of NEO20 was March 27, 2007, one week after the on sale bar date.

There is conflicting evidence in the record regarding whether Prolacta first sold or offered for sale a product that fully anticipated the claim limitations in the '921 Patent before March 20, 2007. Accordingly, Ni-Q has raised a genuine issue of fact whether the on sale bar applies and therefore whether Prolacta enforced its patent in bad faith. There is thus an issue of fact whether Prolacta's enforcement was objectively baseless.

a. Subjective Baselessness [*17]

For the same reasons there is an issue of fact on objective baselessness, there is an issue of fact on subjective baselessness. If Prolacta was enforcing a patent that it knew or should have known was invalid, then its lawsuit was to "conceal an attempt to interfere directly with the business relationships of a competitor." Octane Fitness, 572 U.S. at 556. [**1429] Because there are genuine issues of fact regarding whether Prolacta's enforcement was objectively and subjectively baseless, there are issues of fact regarding whether the sham exception applies. Prolacta's defense based on Noerr-Pennington, therefore, cannot be resolved by summary judgment.

2. Walker Process Fraud Exception

In Walker Process, the Supreme Court found "that enforcement of a fraudulently obtained patent claim could violate the Sherman Act." Spectrum Sports, Inc. v. McQuillan, 506 U.S. 447, 455, 113 S. Ct. 884, 122 L. Ed. 2d 247 (1993); see also Cal. Motor Transp. Co. v. Trucking Unlimited, 404 U.S. 508, 512-13, 92 S. Ct. 609, 30 L. Ed. 2d 642 (1972) ("Use of a patent obtained by fraud to exclude a competitor from the market may involve a violation of the antitrust laws, as we held in [Walker Process]."). Ni-Q asserts that the '921 Patent was obtained through fraud on the PTO, and thus Prolacta is not entitled to immunity with respect to its infringement action.

In order to make out a Walker Process fraud claim, an "antitrust-plaintiff must show . . . that the [*18] antitrust-defendant obtained the patent by knowing and willful fraud on the patent office and maintained and enforced the patent with knowledge of the fraudulent procurement." TransWeb, LLC v. 3M Innovative Props. Co., 812 F.3d 1295, 1306 (Fed. Cir. 2016). Thus, a Walker Process plaintiff must allege both materiality and a clear intent to deceive. Nobelpharma, 141 F.3d at 1069-70. The materiality standard "requires that the patent would not have issued but for the patent examiner's justifiable reliance on the patentee's misrepresentation or omission." Dippin' Dots, Inc. v. Mosey, 476 F.3d 1337, 1347 (Fed. Cir. 2007). "Walker Process intent may be inferred from the facts and circumstances of a case." Id. "[O]missions, as well as misrepresentations, may in limited circumstances support a finding of Walker Process fraud." Nobelpharma, 141 F.3d at 1070. "[T]he knowing failure to disclose sales" can be "particularly egregious" and it "reasonably supports an inference that [the patent applicant] intended to mislead the PTO. . . . because, unlike the applicant's failure to disclose, for example, a material patent reference, the [PTO] has no way of securing the information on [its] own." Paragon Podiatry Lab., Inc. v. KLM Labs., Inc., 984 F.2d 1182, 1193 (Fed. Cir. 1993).

Ni-Q argues that the Walker Process exception applies because Prolacta committed fraud on the PTO by concealing sales and offers to sell of products from before March 20, 2007, which fully [*19] anticipated the claimed limitations of the '921 Patent. These included sales and offers to sell NEO20 that occurred in 2006. As explained above, these sales would invalidate the '921 patent under the on sale bar. The concealment of these sales is material because the PTO would not have issued the '921 Patent "but for the patent examiner's justifiable reliance" on Prolacta's alleged misrepresentation and omission. Dippin' Dots, 476 F.3d at 1347. Likewise, the clear intent requirement would be met because "evidence of a knowing failure to disclose sales . . . reasonably supports an inference that [the patent applicant] intended to mislead the PTO." Paragon Podiatry, 984 F.2d at 1193.

As discussed above, there is a genuine issue regarding the first date of sale or offer for sale by Prolacta of a product covered by the '921 Patent. Accordingly, Ni-Q has raised a genuine issue regarding whether the Walker Process exception applies. For this reason as well, Prolacta's defense based on Noerr-Pennington cannot be resolved by summary judgment. Prolacta's motion for summary judgment on this basis is denied.

B. Patent Preemption

Under the Supremacy Clause, any state law that conflicts with a federal law is invalid. U.S. Const., Art. VI, cl. 2. Federal Circuit law governs whether federal patent law preempts a state law claim. Globetrotter, 362 F.3d at 1374. The Federal Circuit [*20] has held that "federal patent law preempts state-law tort liability for a patentholder's good faith conduct in communications asserting infringement of its patent and warning about potential litigation." Globetrotter, 362 F.3d at 1374. Such state-law claims, including Ni-Q's UTPA claim, can only avoid federal preemption "to the extent that those claims are based on a showing of 'bad faith' action in asserting the infringement." Id.

The consideration of "bad faith" for purposes of preemption of this type of tort claim is the same as for purposes of the Noerr-Pennington doctrine. See id. at 1374-77 (setting forth the "jurisprudential background of the bad faith standard" by discussing Noerr, PRE, and other cases involving the Noerr-Pennington doctrine). The Federal Circuit has [**1430] held that for purposes of preemption of this type of state-law tort claim, an accused infringer must show that the patent holder engaged in objectively baseless conduct. Id. at 1377 ("Accordingly, the objectively baseless standard of Professional Real Estate applies to state-law claims based on communications alleging patent infringement, such as those in this case. A plaintiff claiming that a patent holder has engaged in wrongful conduct by asserting claims of patent [*21] infringement must establish that the claims of infringement were objectively baseless." (footnote omitted)).

Prolacta argues that ORS § 646A.810 (patent infringement claim made in bad faith) is preempted both by the federal Patent Act and by Congress's constitutional authority "[t]o promote the progress of science and the useful arts, by securing for limited times to . . . inventors the exclusive right to their respective writings and discoveries." U.S. Const., Art. I, § 8, cl. 8. Accordingly, Prolacta argues that federal patent law preempts the following subsection from the UTPA:

[A person] may not communicate a demand . . . to a recipient if in the demand [the person] alleges, asserts or claims in bad faith that the recipient has infringed . . . a patent or the rights that a patentee has, or has granted to an assignee or licensee, under the patent.

ORS § 646A.810\(2\).

As discussed above, however, Ni-Q has shown a genuine issue of material fact regarding whether Prolacta's enforcement of the '921 Patent, including through pre-litigation letters and the California Lawsuit itself, was objectively baseless. Because the Federal Circuit has held that preemption of state-law torts encompassing this type of claim rests on whether the patent holder's conduct was objectively [*22] baseless, there is an issue of fact on whether Ni-Q's UTPA claim is preempted. Accordingly, Prolacta's motion for summary judgment on this basis is denied.

C. Issue Preclusion

The Federal Circuit applies "the law of the regional circuit to the general procedural question of whether issue preclusion applies" in a patent infringement suit. Soverain Software LLC v. Victoria's Secret Direct Brand Mgmt., LLC, 778 F.3d 1311, 1314 \(Fed. Cir. 2015\). Issue preclusion, also known as collateral estoppel, "is designed to 'bar [] successive litigation of an issue of fact or law actually litigated and resolved in a valid court determination.'" Paulo v. Holder, 669 F.3d 911, 918 \(9th Cir. 2011\) (quoting Taylor v. Sturgell, 553 U.S. 880, 892, 128 S. Ct. 2161, 171 L. Ed. 2d 155 \(2008\)); see also Robi v. Five Platters, Inc., 838 F.2d 318, 322 \(9th Cir. 1988\) ("The doctrine of issue preclusion prevents relitigation of all issues of fact or law that were actually litigated and necessarily decided in a prior proceeding. . . . The issue must have been actually decided after a full and fair opportunity for litigation." (quotation marks and citations omitted)). Thus, the party asserting issue preclusion must demonstrate: (1) the issue at stake was identical in both proceedings; (2) the issue was actually litigated in the prior proceedings; (3) there was a full and fair opportunity to litigate the issue; and (4) the issue was necessarily decided, also described as necessary or essential to the judgment. [*23] <sup>6</sup> See Howard v. City of Coos Bay, 871 F.3d 1032, 1041 \(9th Cir. 2017\). Issue preclusion may be used either defensively or offensively. "In both the offensive and defensive use situations the party against whom [collateral] estoppel is asserted has litigated and lost in an earlier action." Parklane Hosiery Co. v. Shore, 439 U.S. 322, 329, 99 S. Ct. 645, 58 L. Ed. 2d 552 \(1979\).

[**1431] Prolacta asserts issue preclusion defensively against Ni-Q's UTPA claim. Prolacta argues that Judge Otero's refusal to impose sanctions under Rule 11 is a final judgment that precludes Ni-Q's argument that Prolacta's California Lawsuit was objectively baseless, as is required for the sham exception to Noerr-Pennington and the question of federal preemption.

Whether issue preclusion applies in this case turns on whether Judge Otero's denial of Rule 11 sanctions is "identical" to determining whether Prolacta's enforcement conduct was objectively baseless and whether that determination was "necessarily decided" when Judge Otero denied Rule 11 sanctions. The Court finds that these elements are not met.

A federal court's authority to impose sanctions under Rule 11 is discretionary, and a court may consider numerous factors. See Fed. R. Civ. P 11\(c\)\(1\) ("[T]he court may impose an appropriate sanction.") (emphasis added); Fed. R. Civ. P. 11, 1993 Advisory Notes (noting that courts should consider the following factors [*24] in deciding whether to impose a sanction: "Whether the improper conduct was willful, or negligent; whether it was part of a pattern of activity, or an isolated event; whether it infected the entire pleading, or only one particular count or defense; whether the person has engaged in similar conduct in other litigation; whether it was intended to injure; what effect it had on the litigation process in time or expense; whether the responsible person is trained in the law; what amount, given the financial resources of the responsible person, is needed to deter that person from repetition in the same case; what amount is needed to deter similar activity by other litigants."); see also Goto v. R & B Realty Grp., 69 F.3d 1485, 1488 \(9th Cir. 1995\) (noting that district courts have "wide discretion in determining whether Rule 11 sanctions are appropriate"); Kersten v. Quick Collect, Inc., 152 F. Supp. 3d 1301, 1304 \(D. Or. 2016\) ("Rule 11\(c\)\(1\) gives a court discretion to sanction an attorney who files a motion for an improper purpose, 'such as to harass, cause unnecessary delay, or needlessly increase the cost of litigation.'" (quoting Fed. R. Civ. P. 11\(b\)\(1\))). Furthermore, "[Rule 11] is intentionally drafted to leave the question of the type of remedy to the trial judge's discretion, and not to straitjacket the court by limiting the type or number of sanctions that [*25] it is empowered to impose." Gregory P. Joseph, Sanctions: The Federal Law of Litigation Abuse, 283 (5th ed. 2018).

In declining to award sanctions, Judge Otero first noted that Ni-Q did not present evidence of Prolacta's improper purpose, such as harassment. Prolacta, 2017 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 217030, 2017 WL 5664985, at \*7. Judge Otero next noted that Ni-Q had not considered documents protected by the attorney work product doctrine, which might support Prolacta's claims. Id. Judge Otero concluded: "Though it may be the case that Prolacta could have done more work prior to filing suit to determine whether Ni-Q's products infringe one or more claims of the '921 Patent, the Court is unable to sanction Prolacta at this time." Id.

Judge Otero had broad discretion to impose, or decline to impose, Rule 11 sanctions and had numerous factors to consider. His decision does not state precisely what factors he relied on, but the factors that he specifically <sup>6</sup>The Ninth Circuit sometimes discusses issue preclusion as requiring either the issue be "necessarily decided" or "essential to the judgment," interchangeably. See United States v. Weems, 49 F.3d 528, 532 \(9th Cir. 1995\) (setting out the elements as including "necessarily decided" and then discussing the "necessary to the judgment" element as being the same element). The Court uses "necessarily decided" because the weight of Ninth Circuit authority describes the "essential" or "necessary" to the judgment element in this manner for issue preclusion. Additionally, the Ninth Circuit sometimes lists the elements for issue preclusion as: (1) the issue was necessarily decided; (2) the first proceeding ended with a judgment on the merits; and (3) the party against whom preclusion is sought was a party or in privity with a party in the first litigation. See Paulo, 669 F.3d at 917. The Court considers the latter two elements to be more appropriate elements for claim preclusion, see Howard, 871 F.3d at 1039, although part of having a full and fair opportunity to litigate encompasses being a party or being in privity with a party. See Taylor, 553 U.S. at 892-93 (noting that "[a] person who was not a party to a suit generally has not had a 'full and fair opportunity to litigate' the claims and issues settled in that suit" and then discussing several exceptions to that rule).

mentioned are not coextensive with the factors relevant to a consideration of objective baselessness. Accordingly, Judge Otero's denial of Rule 11 sanctions is not "identical" to a finding that Prolacta's conduct was not objectively baseless and does not result in the issue being "necessarily decided" for the purpose of issue preclusion. [*26] Prolacta's motion for summary judgment based on issue preclusion is denied.

[*819] Rufe, J.

Defendants in this multidistrict antitrust litigation have moved to dismiss the state law claims by the End-Payer Plaintiffs ("EPPs") and the Indirect-Reseller Plaintiffs ("IRPs") with respect to the following generic drugs: (1) clobetasol; (2) digoxin; [*820] (3) divalproex ER; (4) doxycycline; (5) econazole; [*21] and (6) pravastatin (collectively, the "Group 1" drugs).<sup>1</sup> For the reasons set forth below, the motions will be granted in part and denied in part.

I. BACKGROUND

The background relevant to this decision is set forth at length in the Court's October 16, 2018 Opinion<sup>2</sup> addressing Defendants' motions to dismiss Plaintiffs' Sherman Act claims with respect to the Group 1 drugs and the Court will not here restate it in detail. Broadly, Plaintiffs contend that Defendants — pharmaceutical manufacturers — engaged in an unlawful scheme or schemes to fix, maintain and stabilize prices, rig bids, and engage in market and customer allocations of certain generic pharmaceutical products, including the Group 1 drugs. The EPPs and the IRPs allege that during the time relevant to their claims Defendants sold or distributed the Group 1 drugs "in a continuous and uninterrupted flow of interstate commerce to customers throughout the United States."<sup>3</sup>

<sup>2</sup> Id. at 411-34. Relevant formulations of the Group 1 drugs implicated in the Group 1 Plaintiffs' complaints also are identified in the Court's prior Opinion. See id. at 410, nn.4-9.

Relevant to the issues presently before the Court, the EPPs and the IRPs assert claims for monetary damages under various state antitrust laws, as well as state law consumer protection claims and/or claims for unjust enrichment. They bring state law claims because [**22] they are precluded from asserting federal antitrust claims for damages under the Supreme Court's decision in Illinois Brick Co. v. Illinois,<sup>4</sup> which "determined that direct purchasers are the only parties 'injured' in a manner that permits them to recover damages."<sup>5</sup>

A. EPPS

The EPPs include employee welfare benefits funds, labor unions, and private insurers, as well as individual plaintiffs, that allege either that they indirectly purchased generic pharmaceuticals manufactured by one or more Defendants or that they provided reimbursements for some or all of the purchase price for the following drugs:

<sup>7</sup> EPPs have now withdrawn all New Jersey Consumer Protection Act claims. See CB EPP Opp. Mem. at 35; DG EPP Opp. Mem. at 40; DV EPP Opp. Mem. at 36; DX EPP Opp. Mem. at 38; EC EPP Opp. Mem. at 36; PV EPP Opp. Mem. at 36. Accordingly, they will be dismissed. IRPs' New Jersey Consumer Protection Act claims have not been withdrawn.

<sup>8</sup> In their motions to dismiss the digoxin and divalproex ER EPPs' complaints, Defendants argue that "Vermont does not have an antitrust statute of general application . . ." Defs.' Mem. in Support of Mot. to Dismiss DG EPPs' Compl. at 29 n.18; Defs.' Mem. in Support of Mot. to Dismiss DV EPPs' Compl. at 27 n.11. Digoxin EPPs respond that "Vermont combines its antitrust and consumer protection provisions into a single statute that plainly prohibits both antitrust and consumer protection violations." DG EPP Opp. Br. at 32 (citing 9 V.S.A. § 2453(a)). They note that the Vermont statute authorizes indirect purchaser antitrust suits, addresses antitrust remedies and expressly prohibits collusion, market allocation and price-fixing. DG EPP Opp. Br. at 32 (citing 9 V.S.A. §§ 2453a, 2451a(h), and 2465). The Court will not dismiss EPPs' or IRPs' Vermont antitrust claims.

[*823] Group 1 EPPs reside in or are headquartered in various states, but not in all of the jurisdictions listed above.<sup>9</sup> Their Complaints allege that they indirectly purchased or made payments or reimbursements for the Group 1 drugs in many — but not necessarily all — of the jurisdictions where they bring their state law claims.<sup>10</sup> However, they assert their claims individually and on behalf of a class, seeking damages for "[a]ll persons and entities in the End-Payer Damages Jurisdictions who indirectly purchased, paid and/or provided reimbursement for [**26] some or all of the purchase price for" the Group 1 Drugs.<sup>11</sup> The "End-Payer Damages Jurisdictions" are defined as to include all States (except Indiana and Ohio), as well as the District of Columbia, Puerto Rico and the U.S. Virgin Islands.<sup>12</sup>

Alabama, Alaska, Arizona, Arkansas, California, Colorado, Delaware, Florida, Georgia, Idaho, Illinois, Iowa, Kansas, Louisiana, Maine, Maryland, Massachusetts, Michigan, Minnesota, Mississippi, Missouri, Montana, Nebraska, Nevada, New Hampshire, New Jersey, New Mexico, New York, North Carolina, North Dakota, Oregon, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, South Carolina, South Dakota, Tennessee, Texas, Utah, Vermont, Virginia, Washington, West Virginia, Wisconsin and Wyoming as well as the District of Columbia, Puerto Rico, and the U.S. Virgin Islands.<sup>25</sup>

C. DEFENDANTS

Moving Defendants, alleged manufacturers of the Group 1 drugs,<sup>26</sup> are identified at length in the Court's October 16, 2018 Opinion and will not be thoroughly inventoried here.<sup>27</sup> Group 1 Defendants are alleged to be incorporated in the following states: Colorado (Sandoz), Delaware (Actavis, Glenmark, Impax, Heritage, Hi-Tech Pharmacal, Lannett, Lupin, Mayne, Morton Grove, Perrigo, Taro, Teligent, Teva, West-Ward, Wockhardt), Florida (Apotex), Louisiana (Akorn), Michigan (Sun), New Jersey (Dr. Reddy's, Zydus), New York (Fougera, Par), Pennsylvania

<sup>26</sup> No Defendant named in a Group 1 case is alleged to have manufactured all the pharmaceutical products included in the Group 1 cases. Several of the Defendants named in the Group 1 cases are alleged to have manufactured only one relevant pharmaceutical product, while others are alleged to have manufactured two or more of the pharmaceutical products included in this MDL.

(Mylan, Inc.), and West Virginia (Mylan Pharmaceuticals). They are alleged to have principal places of business in: California (Impax), Florida (Apotex), Illinois (Akorn, Morton Grove), Maryland (Lupin), New Jersey (Actavis, Dr. Reddy's, Glenmark, Heritage, Sandoz, Sun, Teligent, West-Ward, Wockhardt, Zydus), New York (Fougera, Hi-Tech Pharmacal, Par, Perrigo, Taro), North Carolina (Mayne), Pennsylvania (Lannett, Teva), and West Virginia (Mylan Defendants). Group 1 EPPs and IRPs allege that during the class period Group 1 Defendants sold the Group 1 drugs to purchasers throughout the United States.<sup>28</sup>

[*827] In their complaints, Group 1 Plaintiffs allege that: "Defendants' and their coconspirators' conduct, including the marketing and sale of [the relevant Group 1 drug], took place within, has had, and was intended to have, a direct, substantial, and reasonably foreseeable anticompetitive effect upon interstate commerce within the United States"<sup>29</sup>; and/or that:

Defendants' anticompetitive conduct occurred in part in trade and commerce within the states and territories set forth herein, and also had substantial intrastate effects in that, inter alia, drug wholesalers within each state and territory were foreclosed from offering less expensive generic [the relevant Group 1 drug] to Plaintiffs inside each respective state and territory. The foreclosure of these less expensive generic products directly impacted and disrupted commerce for Plaintiffs within each state and territory and forced Plaintiffs to pay supracompetitive prices.<sup>30</sup>

Group 1 EPPs and IRPs allege that "Defendants engaged in unfair competition or unfair, unconscionable, deceptive or fraudulent acts or practices in violation the state consumer protection and unfair competition statutes" of various states.<sup>31</sup> They also allege [**31] that Group 1 Defendants benefitted from their alleged conduct and that Defendants have been "enriched by revenue resulting from overcharges for" the Group 1 drugs while "Plaintiffs have been impoverished by the overcharges they paid for [the Group 1 drugs] imposed through Defendants' unlawful conduct."<sup>32</sup>

II. DISCUSSION

Group 1 Defendants move to dismiss the state law claims brought by the Group 1 EPPs and IRPs. They argue that Group 1 EPPs' and IRPs' claims under the laws of those states or territories in which they do not reside or allege to have reimbursed purchases for Group 1 drugs should be dismissed for lack of Article III standing. Defendants also argue that Group 1 EPPs' and IRPs' state antitrust, consumer protection, and unjust enrichment claims suffer from a variety of state specific pleading failures. Finally, they assert that many of the Group 1 EPPs' and IRPs' state law claims are barred by applicable statutes of limitations. The Court considers Group 1 Defendants' arguments in turn.

To the extent that Group 1 Defendants seek to dismiss certain of the EPP and IRP state law claims for failure to allege facts sufficient to establish Article III standing, [**32] Rule 12\(b\)\(1\) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure applies to their [*828] motions "because standing is a jurisdictional matter."<sup>33</sup> Article III of the Constitution requires Plaintiffs to have standing in order to assert their claims.<sup>34</sup> To sufficiently allege constitutional standing, Plaintiffs must allege three elements: (1) injury-in-fact: an invasion of a legally protected interest that is "concrete and particularized" and "actual or imminent" (not merely "conjectural" or "hypothetical"); (2) causation: an injury which is fairly traceable to the challenged conduct; and (3) redressability: that it is "'likely,' as opposed to merely 'speculative,' that the injury will be 'redressed by a favorable decision.'"<sup>35</sup> Where a complaint fails to satisfy these requirements, the federal court does not have subject matter jurisdiction and the claims must be dismissed.<sup>36</sup> Because Group 1 EPPs and IRPs have invoked this Court's federal jurisdiction over their state law claims, they bear the burden of establishing the elements required for Article III standing.<sup>37</sup> When considering a 12(b)(1) motion, the Court "review[s] only whether the allegations on the face of the complaint, taken as true, allege sufficient facts to invoke the jurisdiction of the district court."<sup>38</sup>

Group 1 Defendants contend [**33] Group 1 EPPs and IRPs lack Article III standing to pursue claims under the laws of the jurisdictions where the named Plaintiffs have not specifically alleged purchases or reimbursements.<sup>39</sup> "[W]hen the issue presented in a motion to dismiss concerns solely whether the named plaintiffs have standing to assert class action claims, the named plaintiffs' standing is a threshold issue, and there is no reason to defer the named plaintiffs' standing determination until class certification."<sup>40</sup> Here, Group 1 Defendants do not dispute that Group 1 EPPs and IRPs have standing to pursue claims under the laws of those jurisdictions where they paid for the generic drugs at issue. No named Plaintiff seeks relief for itself under the laws of a jurisdiction where it would not have standing. Rather, [*829] the Group 1 EPP and IRP complaints include "a mixture of state law claims only because [Plaintiffs] bring [each action] as a proposed class action."<sup>41</sup>

As one court has explained, "[t]he interplay between Article III standing and class standing presents a surprisingly difficult question."<sup>42</sup> "Courts have taken different views about how to evaluate Article III and class standing at the motion to dismiss [**34] stage where putative class representatives assert claims arising under the laws of states where they neither reside nor allege to have suffered injury."<sup>43</sup> The Third Circuit has not definitively answered this question. In Neale v. Volvo Cars of North America, LLC,<sup>44</sup> the Court of Appeals did caution that "[r]equiring individual standing of all class members would eviscerate the representative nature of the class action." It explained that it was "not persuaded" that it should "adopt the approach taken by some of [its] sister courts that require all class members to possess standing."<sup>45</sup> It held that "so long as a named class representative has standing, a class action presents a valid 'case or controversy' under Article III."<sup>46</sup>

In this District, the decision in In re: Niaspan Antitrust Litigation concluded that Neale did not "affect the requirement that plaintiff must establish standing individually with respect to each claim asserted,"<sup>47</sup> citing "prior decisions in this district and others [that] have ruled that named plaintiffs in an antitrust class action lack standing to bring [**35] claims on behalf of putative classes under the laws of states where no named plaintiff is located and where no named plaintiff purchased the product at issue."<sup>48</sup> Before Neale, a prior decision in the same litigation had explained that "deferring this standing determination would allow named plaintiffs in a proposed class action, with no injuries in relation to the laws of certain states referenced in their complaint, to embark on lengthy class discovery with respect to injuries in potentially every state in the Union."<sup>49</sup>

But other courts, including some in this Circuit, have taken a different view. In the case In re Liquid Aluminum Sulfate Antitrust Litigation, the District of New Jersey rejected the defendants' argument that the named plaintiffs "lack[ed] standing to [*830] bring state law claims under the laws of a state in which they do not reside."<sup>50</sup> The Court explained that "class certification . . . is 'logically antecedent' to the issue of standing. This is because class discovery will unveil the various members of the currently unknown class."<sup>51</sup> Similarly, in the In re Chocolate Confectionary Antitrust Litigation, the Middle District of Pennsylvania found that because "the plaintiffs' [**36] attempt to represent the proposed class" gave rise to the question of whether they had standing to represent individuals from other states, the question of class certification was "logically antecedent" to the standing concerns" and the Court declined to rule on the issue "until class certification proceedings."<sup>52</sup>

Group 1 "Defendants are not challenging [EPPs' or IRPs'] standing to bring their own claims; they are challenging their standing to bring claims on behalf of the class."<sup>53</sup> It matters that this issue arises in the context of a class action. In a recent decision in a putative class action asserting claims under the Americans with Disabilities Act, where the named plaintiffs sought to require the defendant "to correct alleged ADA violations at more than the two restaurant locations where they claim[ed] to have actually experienced injury," the Third Circuit rejected the defendants' "invitation to insert Rule 23 issues into [its] inquiry on standing," and explained that "the standing inquiry must be limited to a consideration of the class representatives themselves, after which [the court] may 'employ Rule 23 to ensure that classes are properly certified.'"<sup>54</sup>

Similarly, [**37] the Second Circuit has explained that:

Since class action plaintiffs are not required to have individual standing to press any of the claims belonging to their unnamed class members, it makes little sense to dismiss the state law claims of unnamed class members for want of standing when there was no requirement that the named plaintiffs have individual standing to bring those claims in the first place.<sup>55</sup>

It held that "whether a plaintiff can bring a class action under the state laws of multiple states is a question of predominance under Rule 23\(b\)\(3\), not a question of standing."<sup>56</sup> And yet another court has concluded that:

there is no constitutional imperative that the named plaintiff himself have a valid claim under every legal theory he proposes to assert on behalf of a class. . . . If such a requirement exists, it is the consequence of the class-certification prerequisites imposed by Rule 23 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, [*831] not of Article III.<sup>57</sup>

Even more recently, the First Circuit explained that:

the question of standing is not: Are there differences between the claims of the class members and those of the class representative? Rather, the pertinent question is: Are the differences that do exist the type that leave the class representative [**38] with an insufficient personal stake in the adjudication of the class members' claims?<sup>58</sup>

The First Circuit explained the plaintiffs had successfully stated a basis for Article III standing where "success on the claim under one state's law will more or less dictate success under another state's law" and the "laws are materially the same," such that "the fact that judgments for some class members will nevertheless enter under the laws of states other than the states under which any of the class representatives' judgments will enter . . . has no relevant bearing on the personal stake of the named plaintiffs in litigating the case[.]"<sup>59</sup> The court observed that "[i]n a properly certified class action, the named plaintiffs regularly litigate . . . claims of other class members based on transactions in which the named plaintiffs played no part."<sup>60</sup>

Group 1 EPPs' and IRPs' allegations are sufficient to demonstrate a substantial and shared interest in proving that Group 1 Defendants' alleged unlawful conduct resulted in overpayments for the Group 1 drugs, injuries redressable by an award of damages under the state antitrust, consumer protection and unjust enrichment laws cited in the Group 1 EPP and [**39] IRP complaints.<sup>61</sup> Because the state law claims of the named Group 1 EPPs and IRPs largely parallel those of the putative class members, it is both proper and more efficient to consider whether they may pursue their claims on behalf of the unnamed class members in the context of the class certification analysis required under Rule 23 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure (e.g., commonality and typicality under 23\(a\), and predominance under 23\(b\)). Therefore, Group 1 EPPs' and IRPs' claims on behalf of absent class members will not be dismissed for lack of Article III standing.

B. FAILURE TO STATE A CLAIM

To the extent that Group 1 Defendants seek to dismiss certain of the Group 1 EPP and IRP state law claims for failure state a claim pursuant to certain state laws, Rule 12\(b\)\(6\) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure applies to their motions. Rule 12\(b\)\(6\) provides for dismissal of a complaint for failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted where a plaintiff's "plain statement" lacks enough substance to show that he is entitled to relief.<sup>62</sup> To withstand dismissal, the complaint must set forth "direct or inferential [*832] allegations respecting all the material elements necessary to sustain recovery under some viable legal theory."<sup>63</sup> On a motion to dismiss, the Court "consider[s] plausibility, [**40] not probability."<sup>64</sup> In other words, Plaintiffs are not required "to plead facts that, if true, definitely rule out all possible innocent explanations."<sup>65</sup> The Court must ordinarily consider only those facts alleged in the complaint, accepting the allegations as true and drawing all logical inferences in favor of the non-moving party.<sup>66</sup> In addition, "courts may consider documents integral to or explicitly relied upon in the complaint . . . or any undisputedly authentic document that a defendant attaches as an exhibit to a motion to dismiss if the

1. STATE ANTITRUST CLAIMS

Group 1 Defendants argue that many of Group 1 EPPs' and IRPs' state antitrust claims should be dismissed for failure to state a claim. To the extent that Group 1 Defendants contend the state antitrust claims should be dismissed because the EPPs and IRPs have not stated a claim under the overlapping federal antitrust laws, the motions fail. The Court has already determined that Group 1 Plaintiffs' allegations (with the exception of their allegations against Telligent)<sup>69</sup> are [**41] sufficient to permit their federal antitrust claims to withstand dismissal.<sup>70</sup> Also, the Group 1 [*833] EPPs and IRPs have alleged a basis for antitrust standing, the Court having held that they have sufficiently pled "that they have suffered harm that is an essential component of Defendants' anticompetitive scheme, as opposed to an ancillary byproduct of it."<sup>71</sup>

The Court considers Defendants' state specific arguments regarding the sufficiency of Group 1 EPPs and IRPs state law antitrust claims below. Some of the arguments apply to all or most of such claims, others to subsets, and still others to the laws of individual states.

a. Class Action Bar: Illinois Antitrust Act

Group 1 Defendants argue that EPPs and IRPs cannot bring class claims under the Illinois Antitrust Act. The statute provides that "no person shall be authorized to maintain a class action in any court of this State for indirect purchasers asserting claims under this Act, with the sole exception of this State's Attorney General."<sup>72</sup> "District courts are divided on whether the Illinois Antitrust Act precludes indirect purchasers from filing class actions"<sup>73</sup> and Econazole EPPs and IRPs filed consolidated amended class action complaints on December 20 and 21, 2018, respectively. The Court does not here consider the sufficiency of the allegations in the amended econazole complaints, having reserved judgment with respect to the motions to dismiss EPPs' and IRPs' state law claims for this later decision.

Group 1 Defendants argue that the Illinois "restriction on indirect purchaser class actions is substantive, represents a policy judgment as to the feasibility of managing duplicative recovery, which the [Illinois] legislature has entrusted to the [State] Attorney General but not to individual indirect purchasers, and therefore must be applied in federal court."<sup>77</sup> Group 1 EPPs respond that "the class action bar is not part of Illinois' framework of substantive rights and remedies," because Rule 23 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, the rule governing class actions is, "merely a procedural mechanism that affects how those claims proceed in federal court."<sup>78</sup> Likewise, Group 1 IRPs assert that the Illinois Antitrust Act class action bar is a "procedural limitation" that does [*834] not apply because they "filed in federal court and bring a class action under Rule 23 . . ."<sup>79</sup>

The prevailing [**43] view of the District Courts that have considered this issue within this Circuit is that the Illinois Antitrust Act prohibits indirect purchaser class actions.<sup>80</sup> Under the Supreme Court's decision in *Shady Grove Orthopedic Association v. ## b. Pre-Suit Notice Requirements

The antitrust laws of Arizona, Hawaii, Nevada, and Utah have pre-filing notice requirements obligating any antitrust plaintiff to serve certain state officials with pre-suit notices in order to pursue their claims.<sup>83</sup> Group 1 Defendants argue that the clobetasol, digoxin, divalproex, econazole and pravastatin EPPs' Arizona, Hawaii, Nevada, and Utah antitrust claims and the clobetasol, [**44] divalproex, econazole, and pravastatin IRPs' Arizona, Nevada, and Utah antitrust claims must be dismissed because the relevant plaintiffs have not sufficiently alleged that they met each state's pre-suit notice requirement. The relevant EPPs respond that they "did send notices as required" and submit a declaration in support of their efforts to provide the notice required under each of the relevant state laws.<sup>84</sup> The relevant IRPs assert [*835] that defendants "had notice of the incoming IRP complaints long before they were served" and "are in no way prejudiced by the IRP's omission of an allegation that notice was provided."<sup>85</sup> Group 1 Plaintiffs also contend that their "adherence to the notice requirements is not mandatory because the states' procedural rules are superseded by federal procedural rules."<sup>86</sup> Group 1 Defendants counter that compliance with the notice requirements should not be excused under Shady Grove.<sup>87</sup>

With respect to the Shady Grove issue, there is no consensus regarding whether the cited notice requirements are "substantive" or "procedural." To the extent that the relevant statutory provisions have been considered, [**45] some have concluded that the provisions are mandatory and that declining to follow them "in federal court would encourage forum shopping and the inequitable administration of laws."<sup>88</sup> Others have found they are not sufficiently a part of the relevant States' framework of substantive rights or remedies to be controlling.<sup>89</sup> Regardless

<sup>84</sup> See CB EPP Opp. Mem. at 28 (citing CB EPP Opp. Mem. App'x H). In deciding whether EPPs have sufficiently alleged compliance with the relevant notice requirements, the Court cannot consider EPPs' declaration, as it is not part of their complaints, an exhibit attached thereto, or a matter of public record. See In re Asbestos Prods. Liab. Litig. \(No. VI\), 822 F.3d 125, 133 n.7 \(3d Cir. 2016\) ("courts may consider documents integral to or explicitly relied upon in the complaint . . . or any undisputedly authentic document that a defendant attaches as an exhibit to a motion to dismiss if the plaintiff's claims are based on the document") (brackets, internal quotation marks, and citations omitted).

<sup>85</sup> See PV IRP Opp. Mem. at 16. The relevant question is not whether Defendants have been prejudiced by any failure to follow the statutorily required notice procedures. As Defendants argue, the purpose of the statutory rules is not to give notice to Defendants, but to inform the relevant state attorney general so they may decide whether to intervene or otherwise proceed with the claim. See DV Defs.' IRP Reply Br. at 7-8.

<sup>86</sup> CB EPP Opp. Mem. at 28-29; see also PV IRP Opp. Mem. at 16 ("Pre-suit or post-suit notice is not an element required to state a claim but instead a procedural rule superseded by the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure.") (citation omitted).

c. Intrastate Conduct

Group 1 Defendants challenge the sufficiency of certain Group 1 EPPs' and IRPs' claims under the antitrust laws of the District of Columbia, Hawaii, Illinois<sup>90</sup>, [*836] Kansas, Maine, Minnesota, Nebraska, Nevada, New Mexico, New York, North Carolina, North Dakota, Oregon, South Dakota, Tennessee, West Virginia and Wisconsin, arguing the laws require Plaintiffs to allege a nexus between Defendants' conduct and intrastate commerce.<sup>91</sup> Group 1 Defendants contend that the relevant state antitrust claims should be dismissed because Group 1 EPPs' and IRPs' [***46] complaints lack specific allegations connecting Group 1 Defendants' alleged conduct to each state where they raise a state antitrust claim and instead include only conclusory allegations that Group 1 Defendants' alleged conduct "substantially affected" the commerce of each relevant state.<sup>92</sup> Group 1 Defendants assert that the Group 1 EPPs' allegations do not allow the Court to "assess whether the conduct had an incidental or substantial effect — if any at all — on the states under which the EPPs bring their claims."<sup>93</sup> Similarly, they argue that the Group 1 IRPs' allegations of a nationwide conspiracy with "conclusory and identical allegations for each state, including unspecific assertions that the conspiracy restrained competition, raised prices, and substantially affected commerce in that state" are not enough to plead a substantial effect on intrastate commerce.<sup>94</sup>

Group 1 EPPs respond that to withstand dismissal, no more is needed than their allegations that class members made purchases of the Group 1 drugs at supracompetitive prices within the states relevant to their state law claims.<sup>95</sup> They argue that "[s]tate statutes do not require that the anticompetitive conduct [**47] (i.e., the act of conspiring) occur within the state, so long as the adverse effects are felt within the state. Moreover, the alleged effects need not occur entirely or even predominately within a state to meet the requirement."<sup>96</sup> Similarly, Group 1 IRPs argue that "there can be no question that it is at least plausible that each of the [relevant] states suffered a compliance with the notice requirements of the Hawaii antitrust statute); In re Aftermarket Filters Antitrust Litig., No. 08-4883, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 104114, 2009 WL 3754041, at *6 (N.D. Ill. Nov. 5, 2009) (finding the Hawaii antitrust "statute does not provide for dismissal of the action for failure to comply [with the presuit notice requirement], and that dismissal is inconsistent with the remedial purposes of the statute").

<sup>90</sup> Because the Court has already found that Plaintiffs cannot state a claim under the Illinois Antitrust Act, it need not consider Group 1 Defendants' intrastate conduct arguments regarding Group 1 Plaintiffs' Illinois antitrust claims.

substantial effect on commerce within its borders" where they have alleged that "wholesalers, pharmacies, patients and their health plans were all illegally overcharged for generic drugs" as a result of Group 1 Defendants' alleged conduct.<sup>97</sup>

[*837] Other courts have held that plaintiffs sufficiently pled state antitrust claims where they alleged a "nationwide antitrust violation that increased prices paid by the end payors in each state," rejecting arguments that state law antitrust claims should be dismissed because the relevant state laws "target only anticompetitive conduct that occurs solely or predominantly within the borders of the state . . ."<sup>98</sup> At this stage of the litigation, the Court agrees that the Group 1 EPPs' and IRPs' allegations of a broad nationwide-scheme to fix generic drug prices are enough to satisfy the [*838] nexus requirement for asserting claims under the relevant state antitrust laws.<sup>99</sup> "[I]t is not obvious why the intra state effect of anticompetitive conduct would not be reached by the cited statutes merely because inter state conduct predominates."<sup>100</sup> Whether EPPs [*838] and/or IRPs will later be able to prove the requisite nexus is a separate question to be addressed later in this litigation. #### d. Citizenship or Residency Requirements

Group 1 Defendants argue that certain of the Group 1 EPPs' and IRPs' state antitrust law claims must be dismissed because the relevant state antitrust statutes include citizenship or residency requirements that Group 1 EPPs and IRPs have not supported with sufficient allegations.<sup>102</sup> Indeed, the Utah Antitrust Act specifies that "[a] person who is a citizen of this state or a resident of this state" is permitted to bring a claim.<sup>103</sup> Group 1 EPPs and IRPs respond that that dismissal is not warranted because "nothing in the [**49] relevant statutes requires that the named Plaintiffs in class actions be citizens or residents . . .".<sup>104</sup> They assert that there are members of the putative Group 1 EPP and IRP classes that made purchases or reimbursements for the Group 1 drugs in each relevant U.S. and state territory at supracompetitive prices and that no more is needed for their claims to withstand dismissal.<sup>105</sup> The Court agrees with EPPs and IRPs. "Allegations that members of the putative class presumably include Utah [and, in this case, South Dakota] citizens and residents are sufficient to overcome a motion to dismiss."<sup>106</sup> Defendants' motions will be denied to the extent that they seek to dismiss Group 1 EPPs' and IRPs' claims for failure to sufficiently [*839] allege they have met citizenship or residency requirements set forth under the antitrust laws of South Dakota and Utah.

e. Rhode Island: Partial Illinois Brick Bar

Group 1 Defendants contend that the divalproex ER and doxycycline EPPs and IRPs cannot seek redress under the Rhode Island antitrust law<sup>107</sup> for their claims concerning alleged overcharges incurred before July 15, 2013, arguing that the state's Illinois Brick repealer statute, [**50] enacted on that date, does not apply retroactively.<sup>108</sup>

The Court agrees. Divalproex ER and doxycycline EPPs and IRPs have not cited a decision that would support a conclusion to the contrary. Courts that have considered the question have determined that the Rhode Island statute is prospective, not retroactive.<sup>109</sup> Divalproex ER and doxycycline EPPs and IRPs may not recover for any alleged overcharges incurred before the Rhode Island Illinois Brick-repeater statutes took effect, but may proceed with their claims for alleged overcharges incurred on or after July 15, 2013.

2. STATE CONSUMER PROTECTION CLAIMS

Group 1 EPPs' and IRPs' state consumer protection claims rest on the same allegations as the direct purchasers' underlying federal antitrust claims which the Court has already determined sufficient to support plausible antitrust claims. As with Group 1 EPPs' and IRPs' state antitrust claims, Group 1 Defendants argue that many of their state consumer protection claims should be dismissed for failure to state a claim.

Group 1 EPPs respond that the same "detailed and extensive factual allegations" that support their federal antitrust claims also "demonstrat[e] that Defendants engaged in [**51] an unfair, deceptive and unconscionable scheme to fix prices and allocate markets, thereby causing harm to consumers and third-party payers in each state, who paid supracompetitive prices and were deprived of the benefits of free and open competition."<sup>110</sup> Likewise, Group 1 IRPs assert that Defendants' alleged "deceptive conduct regarding pricing is actionable as an unfair or unconscionable trade practice, independent of any antitrust cause of action."<sup>111</sup>

[*840] Group 1 EPPs and IRPs have the better argument. Their Complaints contain detailed factual allegations that make plausible their claims that Group 1 Defendants engaged in unfair competition and they need not reiterate these facts in their consumer protection law counts.<sup>112</sup> The Court considers Defendants' additional state specific arguments for dismissal of Group 1 EPPs' and IRPs' state consumer protection claims below.

a. Illinois Brick Does Not Preclude State Consumer Protection Claims

Group 1 Defendants assert that because the Group 1 EPPs' and IRPs' state consumer protection law claims are just repackaged federal antitrust claims, they cannot be used to circumvent the Illinois Brick prohibition on indirect purchaser claims in Alaska, [**52] Florida, Missouri, Montana, New Jersey and South Carolina. They argue that

July 13, 2016) ("To the extent Defendants' one-paragraph [Twombly] argument is an invitation for the Court to comb through all of Plaintiffs' consumer protection claims and determine whether the elements have been adequately pleaded, the Court respectfully declines the invitation.").

EPPs and IRPs cannot simply dress up their antitrust claim as a consumer protection claim. In response, EPPs argue that Illinois Brick does not nullify (or even address) state consumer protection claims. IRPs assert that if they had made these claims without alleging any antitrust claim, Defendants would have no argument for dismissal and their consumer protection claims should not be dismissed merely because they are pleaded in the same complaint.

The Court agrees with EPPs and IRPs that Defendants' "repackaging" argument is not enough to require dismissal of EPPs' and IRPs' consumer protection law claims. Because "states remain free to permit recovery by indirect purchasers," Group 1 EPPs and IRPs are not barred from pursuing such a recovery under the various state consumer protection laws so long as their allegations are enough to plead the relevant consumer protection violation.<sup>113</sup>

Further, with respect to EPPs' and IRPs' Florida consumer protection claims, Florida courts have held that the Florida Deceptive and Unfair Trade Practices Act does not have the same indirect purchaser restriction as the state's [**53] antitrust law.<sup>114</sup> Accordingly, the Court "decline[s] to dismiss the claims for monopolization and [*841] attempted monopolization brought under the FDUTPA on Illinois Brick grounds."<sup>115</sup> Similarly, Illinois Brick does not bar EPPs' or IRPs' claims under the Alaska Unfair Trade Practices and Consumer Protection Act,<sup>116</sup> the Missouri Merchandising Practices Act,<sup>117</sup> the Montana Unfair Trade Practices and Consumer Protection Act,<sup>118</sup> the New Jersey Consumer Fraud Act,<sup>119</sup> or the South Carolina Unfair Trade Practices Act.<sup>120</sup>

The Court notes that EPPs have now withdrawn their New Jersey Consumer Protection Act Claims. See supra n.8. IRPs have not.

b. State Consumer Protection Statutes Permit Claims for Anticompetitive Conduct

Defendants make a similar argument that the consumer protection laws of Arkansas, the District of Columbia, Florida, Georgia, New Mexico, Rhode Island, and West Virginia do not cover Group 1 EPPs' and IRPs' claims that Defendants engaged in anticompetitive conduct because "those laws do not encompass actions based on allegations of an antitrust conspiracy."<sup>121</sup> Group 1 EPPs and IRPs [*842] respond that courts have liberally construed these statutes to include conduct that would also be covered by antitrust laws.<sup>122</sup> They [**54] also argue that "these states model their consumer protection statutes on the Federal Trade Commission ('FTC') Act, which encompasses claims based on antitrust violations."<sup>123</sup>

Defendants have not made a persuasive argument as to why Group 1 EPPs and IRPs cannot assert consumer protection claims under the laws of these states simply because they also assert antitrust claims.<sup>124</sup> Whether they can ultimately prove a consumer protection claim separate and apart from their antitrust claims is not a question for resolution at this stage of the litigation.

c. Class Action Bars Under State Consumer Protection Laws

Group 1 Defendants also challenge certain of Group 1 EPPs' and IRPs' claims under the consumer protection laws of Alaska, Georgia, Montana, South Carolina, and Utah, arguing that the relevant state laws do not permit them to proceed with their consumer protection claims in a class action.<sup>125</sup> The Court will consider their challenges with respect to each state law.

First, a class action bar does not require dismissal of Group 1 EPPs' Utah consumer protection claims. The Utah [**843] Consumer protection law "does not prohibit class actions; rather, it provides [**55] that class members may only seek actual, not statutory, damages."<sup>126</sup> Further, Group 1 EPPs and IRPs allege that Defendants have engaged in unfair competition or unfair, unconscionable, or deceptive acts or practices in violation of Alaska Statute § 45.50.471, et seq., a consumer protection statute that does not include a provision restricting class action claims.<sup>127</sup> Arguing that the Group 1 EPP and IRP Alaska consumer protection claims are subject to a class action bar, Defendants instead cite a decision that relies on a provision of the separate Alaska antitrust statute, Alaska Statute § 45.50.577\(i\).<sup>128</sup> Group 1 EPPs' and IRPs' Alaska consumer protection claims therefore are not subject to dismissal because of a class action bar.

Further still, Defendants seek to dismiss Group 1 EPPs' and IRPs' Georgia consumer protection claims, citing the class action bar in the Georgia Fair Business Practices Act, which provides that "[a]ny person . . . may bring an action individually, but not in a representative capacity . . .".<sup>129</sup> However, Group 1 EPPs' and IRPs' complaints do not specifically assert claims under the Georgia Fair Business Practices Act.<sup>130</sup> Instead, their complaints allege that "Defendants have engaged in unfair competition or [**56] unfair, unconscionable, or deceptive acts or practices in violation of the Georgia Uniform Deceptive Trade Practices Act, Georgia Code § 10-1-370, et seq.".<sup>131</sup> That statute does not include the same class action bar as the Georgia Fair Business Practices Act. In the absence of such a bar, the Court will not dismiss Group 1 EPPs' or IRPs' Georgia consumer protection claims on that basis. Nevertheless, the Court notes that unlike the Georgia Fair Business Practices Act, which permits a recovery of damages,<sup>132</sup> the sole remedy available under the Georgia Uniform Deceptive Trade Practices Act is injunctive relief.<sup>133</sup> Accordingly, the Court will dismiss Group 1 EPPs' and IRPs' Georgia Uniform Deceptive Trade Practices Act claims to the extent that they seek monetary relief for such claims.

Finally, Defendants argue that class action bars preclude Group 1 EPPs' [*844] and IRPs' South Carolina<sup>134</sup> consumer protection claims and Group 1 EPPs' Montana<sup>135</sup> consumer protection claims. Here, as with Group 1 EPPs' and IRPs' Illinois Antitrust Act claims, the analysis depends on whether the relevant state class action bar provisions are procedural or substantive. Defendants contend that the provisions are substantive because they are "intertwined" [**57] with the substantive rights granted by the statutes.<sup>136</sup> EPPs and IRPs argue that the provisions are procedural — that they affect only how the consumer protection claims are processed.<sup>137</sup> There is no controlling authority or a consensus among the District Courts that have considered the effect of these class action bars, and the Court has determined that the class action bar provisions specifically included in the Montana and South Carolina consumer protection laws reflect a substantive policy choice.<sup>138</sup> Plaintiffs may not pursue these claims as class claims. To the extent that plaintiffs wish to pursue these claims on an individual basis, they may if they have Article III standing to assert the claims.

d. Purely or Primarily Intrastate Conduct

Group 1 Defendants argue that the consumer protection laws of certain states (Delaware, Florida, Massachusetts, New Hampshire, New York, North Carolina, Vermont) require that Plaintiffs' consumer protection claims arise from purely or primarily intrastate conduct or an instate injury and that Group 1 EPPs and IRPs have not alleged any misconduct that is specific to these states.<sup>139</sup> Group 1 EPPs [*845] and IRPs respond that [**58] they have alleged that because of Defendants' alleged actions, prices for the Group 1 drugs were elevated, class members made purchases at supracompetitive prices, and competition was suppressed within each state where they assert a consumer protection claim.<sup>140</sup> The Court agrees with Group 1 EPPs and IRPs that - at this stage of the litigation — their allegations of a broad nationwide-scheme to fix generic drug prices are sufficient to satisfy the intrastate pleading requirements of the state consumer protection laws under which they pursue their claims.<sup>141</sup> Whether the Group 1 EPPs or IRPs will ultimately establish facts sufficient to prove each of their state consumer protection law claims is a question that remains to be addressed later in this litigation.

e. Deceptive or Unconscionable Conduct

Group 1 Defendants also argue that EPPs' and IRPs' claims under the consumer protection statutes of various states fail because their complaints do not sufficiently allege fraud or deception. Specifically, they contend that the consumer protection laws of Arkansas, Colorado, Delaware, Florida, Michigan, Minnesota, New [**59] Mexico, New York, North Dakota, South Dakota, and Wisconsin require more than an allegation that "Defendants misrepresented to all purchasers during the Class Period that Defendants' [Group 1 drug] prices were competitive and fair."<sup>142</sup> Defendants argue that EPPs' and IRPs' complaints should include allegations of particular "instances where Defendants made such representations."<sup>143</sup> They also argue that "the absence of any well-pled facts in support of deceptive or unconscionable conduct . . . also infects the Complaints' claims pursuant [*846] to the Utah and Virginia consumer protection laws."<sup>144</sup>

Group 1 EPPs respond that to the extent they are required to plead deceptive conduct under any of the cited statutes, they have done so because their Complaints allege "an illegal price-fixing conspiracy among Defendants, hatched in secret and maintained through deception, during which Defendants misleadingly conveyed to Plaintiffs and the market that pricing for Defendants' products was competitive."<sup>145</sup> They also contend that "unconscionable" conduct has been recognized to encompass "a broad swath of activities, including price-fixing conspiracies."<sup>146</sup> Group 1 IRPs respond that they have pled [**60] facts in support of a finding that Defendants' conduct was unconscionable, explaining that the drug pricing data referenced in their complaints shows that Defendants

LEXIS 220574, 2018 WL 7197233, at *44 (finding plaintiffs' allegations of drug sales "affecting consumers and third party payors across the country, including in Massachusetts" sufficient to satisfy "intrastate" pleading requirements); Sheet Metal Workers Local 441 Health & Welfare Plan, 737 F. Supp. 2d at 409 ("[I]ndirect payor plaintiffs may assert a cause of action under the FDUTPA for claims arising in Florida based on reimbursement for purchases of over-priced drugs, even when the alleged injuries did not take place entirely within Florida."); cf. In re Loestrin 24 FE, 261 F. Supp. 3d at 361 (holding that it would be more efficient to address questions including whether the plaintiffs had sufficiently alleged intrastate conduct at the class certification, explaining that "[i]t is conceivable, for example, that the Court could deny class certification, which would obviate the need to consider the arguments with respect to some of the states").

The Court also notes that, in at least some instances, Group 1 EPPs and IRPs include allegations specific to the in-state injury that Defendants contend are lacking. See, e.g., DV IRP Opp. Br. at 22-24 (rebutting Defendants' argument that divalproex ER IRPs had not pled a plausible claim under the New York Consumer protection law because their complaint includes an allegation that "Falconer Pharmacy . . . located in Falconer, New York . . . indirectly purchased . . . consistently offered low prices for the Group 1 drugs before the alleged price increases which, they contend increased despite no change in the product or increase in costs for raw materials, labor or overhead.<sup>147</sup>

At this stage of the litigation, Group 1 EPPs and IRPs have sufficiently alleged that Defendants engaged in deceptive and/or unconscionable conduct to permit their claims to withstand dismissal. First, Group 1 EPPs' and IRPs' consumer protection claims rest on Defendants' alleged unconscionable or deceptive conduct, not on fraud. Therefore, their claims do not require application of the heightened pleading standard of Rule 9\(b\) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. Further, even if Rule 9\(b\) does apply to the allegations supporting Group 1 EPPs' or IRPs' consumer protection claims, their allegations would be sufficient to withstand dismissal. To satisfy Rule 9\(b\), plaintiffs "must plead or allege the date, time and place of the alleged fraud or otherwise inject precision or some measure of substantiation into a fraud allegation."<sup>148</sup> Group 1 EPPs' and IRPs' Complaints include detailed [**61] allegations regarding Group 1 Defendants' trade association memberships, their representation on trade association boards, and attendance at industry gatherings the prices of the Group 1 drugs and the timing of price increases along with detailed allegations regarding the prices of the Group 1 Drugs and the timing and size of alleged price increases. The Complaints are sufficiently detailed to "inject precision" into EPPs' and IRPs' consumer protection claims at this stage of the litigation. Whether Group 1 EPPs or IRPs will be able to meet their burden to show deceptive or unconscionable conduct on the developed evidentiary record at summary judgment or trial is a question for another day.

f. Statutory Definition of a "Consumer"

Group 1 Defendants argue the state consumer protection claims of certain EPPs and IRPs must be dismissed because they do not meet the requirements of statutes that permit suits only by certain types of consumers.<sup>149</sup> They also argue that Group 1 EPPs' and IRPs' claims fail under the [*847] consumer protection laws of certain states that limit their protections to those who purchased "goods or services primarily for personal, family, or household purposes."<sup>150</sup>

In response, EPPs note that they and the putative class they represent includes both individuals and third party payers such as employee welfare benefit funds, labor unions, and private insurers.<sup>151</sup> And, to the extent that they are not individual consumers, EPPs assert that they fall within the relevant state statutes' definitions of a "consumer" in that they participate in consumer transactions by paying some or all of the prices charged to individual consumers, and, as a result, pay a portion of any overcharges. These purchases are made for the personal purposes of the patient. [Third party payors] do not purchase drugs for resale, distribute products or act as intermediaries in the distribution chain.<sup>152</sup>

To the extent that Group 1 Defendants contend that IRPs' North Carolina consumer protection claims should be dismissed, IRPs respond that Defendants have not "cite[d] any authority limiting the statute to consumers who purchased for household purposes only."<sup>153</sup> IRPs also assert that their "California consumer protection claims are validly asserted" because they "did indeed purchase the drugs in question."<sup>154</sup> In addition, IRPs respond to Defendants' "consumer definition" arguments by voluntarily [**63] dismissing their claims under the Michigan and Nevada consumer protection statutes.<sup>155</sup>

Group 1 EPPs and IRPs have plausibly alleged that they are entitled to recover for state consumer protection violations on behalf of at least some of the named plaintiffs and members of the putative class in each of their Complaints. This is enough to permit their California, District of Columbia, Hawaii, Massachusetts, Michigan, Missouri, Montana, Nevada, Rhode Island, and Vermont consumer protection law claims to proceed.<sup>156</sup> Whether

g. Demand Letter Requirement

Defendants move to dismiss clobetasol, digoxin, divalproex ER, and doxycycline EPPs' Massachusetts Consumer Protection Law claims because they have not alleged compliance with pre-filing demand letter requirements.<sup>160</sup> The relevant statutory provision encourages settlement by means of a "written demand for relief" to be mailed to a defendant before an action is filed.<sup>161</sup> Massachusetts statute's notice requirement — designed to encourage settlement — is procedural and not substantive in nature.<sup>162</sup> The Court declines to dismiss the relevant Massachusetts consumer protection claims on the basis of this argument.

3. STATE UNJUST ENRICHMENT CLAIMS

Group 1 Defendants seek to dismiss certain of Group 1 EPPs' and IRPs' unjust enrichment claims. The doctrine of unjust enrichment "is founded on the principle that a party which receives a benefit under inequitable circumstances should not be permitted to retain the benefit."<sup>163</sup> "Generally speaking, in order to state a claim for unjust ("'Person' means natural persons, corporations, trusts, partnerships, incorporated or unincorporated associations, and any other legal entity."). At least some of the Group 1 EPPs are alleged to have made such purchases. Vermont: As with Rhode Island, at least some of the Group 1 EPPs are alleged to have made purchases of Group 1 Drugs for use as consumers and thus they have stated a plausible claim for relief at this stage of the litigation. LEXIS 104647, 2016 WL 4204478, at \*9](#) (explaining that the Vermont Consumer Fairness Act's "definition of 'consumer' allows businesses to sue as consumers with respect to the products they use as consumers.").

Defendants make a similar argument with respect to clobetasol, digoxin, divalproex ER, and doxycycline EPPs' and clobetasol IRPs' West Virginia Consumer protection law claims. Because the Court will dismiss these claims pursuant to White v. Wyeth, it need not consider this argument.

enrichment, a plaintiff must allege (1) at plaintiff's expense (2) defendant received [a] benefit [**65] (3) under circumstances that would make it unjust for defendant to retain [the] benefit without paying for it."<sup>164</sup> The specific requirements to plead unjust enrichment vary by state.

a. Illinois Brick Does Not Bar Unjust Enrichment Claims

Group 1 Defendants first argue that EPPs and IRPs cannot assert unjust enrichment claims under the laws of the 25 jurisdictions that have not repudiated Illinois Brick's prohibition against indirect purchaser damages actions.<sup>165</sup> As a result, they contend the Court should dismiss EPPs' and IRPs' unjust enrichment claims [*850] brought under the laws of Alaska, Arkansas, Colorado, Connecticut, Delaware, Florida, Georgia, Idaho, Illinois, Kentucky, Louisiana, Maryland, Massachusetts, Missouri, Montana, New Jersey, Oklahoma, Pennsylvania, Puerto Rico, Rhode Island, South Carolina, Texas, Virginia, Washington, and Wyoming.<sup>166</sup> EPPs respond that, "[w]hile decisions go both ways, the better reasoned decisions permit unjust enrichment claims in non-Illinois Brick repealer states."<sup>167</sup> IRPs argue that "[i]n the absence of authority from state courts precluding the common law cause of action, it is incorrect to assume that any state prevents an unjust enrichment claim."<sup>168</sup>

As Group 1 EPPs and IRPs argue, the concerns that motivate Illinois Brick — the complexity associated with correctly apportioning recovery among direct purchasers, middlemen, and ultimate consumers,<sup>169</sup> are not implicated in the context of unjust enrichment claims because "the very nature of such claims requires a focus on the gains of the defendants, not the losses of the plaintiffs."<sup>170</sup> "No reason or logic supports a conclusion that a state's adherence to the rule of Illinois Brick dispossesses a person not only of a statutory legal remedy for an antitrust violation, but also dispossesses the same person of his right to pursue a common law equitable remedy."<sup>171</sup> Therefore, Illinois Brick does not require dismissal of the unjust enrichment claims at this time. Plaintiffs are "entitled to plead causes of action in the alternative. Pursuant to Rule 8(d)(2) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, a party 'may set out 2 or more statements of a claim or defense alternatively or hypothetically, either in a single count or defense or in separate ones."<sup>172</sup>

b. Confer a Direct Benefit

Group 1 Defendants also contend that because Group 1 EPPs' and IRPs' are indirect purchasers, they have not alleged that they conferred a direct [**67] benefit on any Defendant as is necessary to plead an unjust enrichment claim under the laws of Alabama, Arizona, the District of Columbia, Florida, Georgia, Idaho, Iowa, Kansas, Maine, Maryland, Michigan, Missouri, New Jersey, New York, North Carolina, North Dakota, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, South Carolina, Tennessee, Texas, and Utah.<sup>173</sup>

Group 1 EPPs and IRPs respond that Defendants' "direct benefit" argument fails because, in the unjust enrichment context, [*851] the term direct refers to a benefit that is not incidental, and not to a requirement that there be privity between the parties.<sup>174</sup> They argue that "the chain of distribution in the pharmaceutical industry is short, direct, and well understood . . . [and p]rice increases can be directly chased throughout this distribution chain."<sup>175</sup> They contend that it is enough that they have alleged "that they overpaid as a result of Defendants' unlawful actions, that Defendants benefited and were enriched from those sales, that the benefits are traceable by overpayments by Plaintiffs and the Damages class, and that it would be inequitable for Defendants to retain those revenues."<sup>176</sup>

Group 1 EPPs and IRPs have pleaded that [**68] they conferred a non-monetary benefit to Defendants — here the act of purchasing the Group 1 drugs or providing funds for the purchase of the Group 1 drugs through reimbursement — in that their actions allowed Defendants to obtain the benefit of increased revenue from the sale of the Group 1 drugs. The EPPs and IRPs have plausibly alleged that their alleged losses from purchasing Group 1 drugs at inflated prices are connected to benefits incurred by Defendants who allegedly conspired to raise the prices of those drugs. "[T]he mere fact that there has been no direct contact between a defendant and the plaintiff does not preclude a finding that the defendant received a direct benefit from that plaintiff."<sup>177</sup> At this stage of the litigation, the connection between the EPPs and IRPs and the Defendants is not so attenuated as to render implausible Group 1 EPPs' or IRPs' claims for unjust enrichment. This conclusion arguably comports with the equitable purpose of an unjust enrichment claim.<sup>178</sup>

c. No Adequate Legal Remedy

Group 1 Defendants also argue that EPPs' and IRPs' Arizona, Minnesota, Montana, New Hampshire, New York, South Dakota, Tennessee, and Utah unjust enrichment claims must be [**69] dismissed because they have not pled that they lack an adequate legal remedy.<sup>179</sup> Group 1 EPPs' and IRPs' complaints allege that they have no adequate remedy at law.<sup>180</sup> At this stage of the litigation, considering:

<sup>178</sup> See id. ("It would not serve the principles of justice and equity to preclude an unjust enrichment claim merely because the 'benefit' passed through an intermediary before being conferred on a defendant.").

Rule 8(d)(2)'s permissiveness of alternative pleading, given the [allegations of no adequate remedy at law in the Complaints], and allowing for all inferences to be drawn in favor of Plaintiffs, the Court cannot rule as a matter of law that Plaintiffs have failed to plausibly suggest that there is an absence of an adequate remedy at law.<sup>181</sup>

The Court will not dismiss these unjust enrichment claims based on Defendant's argument regarding an adequate legal remedy.

[*852] C. STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS

To the extent that Defendants seek to dismiss certain of EPPs' and IRPs' claims as being barred by the statute of limitations, their motions are denied. The question of whether any of Plaintiffs' claims are barred by the asserted statute of limitations defenses is more appropriate for resolution at a later stage of the proceedings following more particularized discovery.<sup>182</sup>

III. CONCLUSION

Consistent with the analysis set forth above, the Court will grant Defendants' motions in part and deny them [***70] in part. The Court will dismiss the following claims with prejudice: (1) Group 1 EPPs' and IRPs' claims under the Illinois Antitrust Act; (2) divalproex ER and doxycycline EPPs' and IRPs' claims under the Rhode Island antitrust law to the extent they seek to recover damages for alleged overcharges incurred prior to July 15, 2013; (3) Group 1 EPPs' and IRPs' Georgia Uniform Deceptive Trade Practices Act claims to the extent that they seek monetary relief for such claims; and (4) Group 1 EPPs' and IRPs' claims under the West Virginia Consumer Credit and Protection Act. The Court will also dismiss with prejudice Group 1 EPPs' and IRPs' South Carolina consumer protection claims and Group 1 EPPs' Montana consumer protection claims to the extent that they seek to pursue these claims on behalf of a class. They may proceed with the South Carolina and Montana consumer protection claims on an individual basis if they have Article III standing to assert such claims.

In addition, the Court will dismiss Group 1 EPPs' Alabama antitrust claims, Group 1 EPPs' New Jersey Consumer Protection Act claims, and Group 1 IRPs' claims under the Michigan and Nevada consumer protection statutes because they have [***71] indicated their intent to withdraw or voluntarily dismiss these claims in response to Defendants' motions.

The Court otherwise concludes that Group 1 EPPs' and IRPs' state law claims are sufficient to withstand dismissal.

An appropriate Order follows.

1. Defendants' motions are GRANTED to the extent they seek to dismiss any Illinois state antitrust law claims brought by the Group 1 EPPs and IRPs. Group 1 EPPs' and IRPs' claims under the Illinois Antitrust Act are DISMISSED with prejudice.
2. Defendants' motions are GRANTED to the extent that they seek to dismiss any of Group 1 EPPs' and IRPs' Rhode Island antitrust claims for damages for putative overcharges incurred prior to July 15, 2013. Divalproex ER and doxycycline EPPs' and IRPs' claims under the Rhode Island antitrust law alleging overcharges before [**72] July 15, 2013 are DISMISSED with prejudice. Group 1 EPPs' and IRPs' claims for monetary relief under the Georgia Uniform Deceptive Trade Practices Act are DISMISSED with prejudice. Group 1 EPPs and IRPs may pursue claims for injunctive relief only under this law.
4. Defendants' motions are GRANTED to the extent that they seek to dismiss Group 1 EPPs' and IRPs' South Carolina consumer protection claims and Group 1 EPPs' Montana consumer protection claims insofar as the claims are brought on behalf of a putative class. Group 1 plaintiffs' claims for class-based relief under the South Carolina and Montana consumer protection laws are DISMISSED with prejudice. 6. In addition, Group 1 EPPs' Alabama antitrust claims, Group 1 EPPs' New Jersey Consumer Protection Act claims, and Group 1 IRPs' claims under the Michigan and Nevada consumer protection statutes are DISMISSED, Plaintiffs having stated their intent to withdraw or voluntarily dismiss these claims in response to Defendants' motions.
7. Defendants' motions are DENIED in all other respects.

It is so ORDERED.

MARTINOTTI, DISTRICT JUDGE

Before this Court is a Motion to Dismiss filed by Defendant Novo Nordisk Inc. ("Novo") and Defendant Sanofi-Aventis U.S. LLC ("Sanofi") (collectively "Defendants") seeking to dismiss the putative plaintiffs' ("Plaintiffs") First Amended Complaint pursuant to Federal Rules of Civil Procedure 8\(a\), 9\(b\), and 12\(b\)\(6\). (ECF No. 158.)<sup>1</sup>

Plaintiffs filed an Opposition to Defendants' Motion to Dismiss. (ECF No. 181.) Defendants filed a Reply Brief to the Plaintiffs' Opposition. (ECF No. 190.) On January 17, 2019, this Court held oral argument on the limited issue of the applicability of the indirect purchaser rule to Plaintiffs' RICO claims, Counts One and [*8] Two. Plaintiffs' counsel supplemented the record by way of a letter brief to this Court on February 5, 2019. (ECF No. 249.) Defendants replied on February 8, 2019. (ECF No. 251.) For the reasons set forth herein, Defendants' Motion to Dismiss is GRANTED IN PART and DENIED IN PART.

A. Factual Background

The Plaintiffs are sixty-seven individuals, including one "Jane Doe," who filed the Complaint on behalf of themselves and a proposed nationwide class of analog insulin consumers. (Plaintiffs' First Amended Complaint (ECF No. 131) ¶¶ 21-155.) The Plaintiffs bring this action on behalf of themselves and all others similarly situated under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 23(a) and 23(b)(3). (ECF No. 131 ¶ 280.) The Plaintiffs define their class as "[a]ll individual persons in the United States and its territories who paid any portion of the purchase price for a prescription of Lantus, Levemir, Novolog, Apidra, and/or Toujeo at a price calculated by reference to a benchmark price, AWP (Average Wholesale Price)<sup>2</sup>, or WAC (Wholesale Acquisition Price) for purposes other than resale."

(Id.)

Specifically, the class includes uninsured consumers, consumers in high-deductible health plans, consumers who reach the Medicare Part D donut [*9] hole, and consumers with high coinsurance rates. (Id. ¶ 282.) The Plaintiffs request this Court toll the class period to the "earliest date of the Defendant Drug Manufacturers' initiation of the scheme described herein." (Id. ¶ 283.)

Defendants are pharmaceutical companies headquartered in the United States. (Id. ¶¶ 157-58.) Defendants research, develop, and manufacture prescription medications. (Id.) Defendant Novo ("Novo") makes the "rapid-acting" analog insulin Novolog and the "long-acting" insulin Levemir. (Id. ¶ 282 (Table 2).) Novo introduced Novolog to the United States market in 2000 and Levemir in 2005. (Id.) Defendant Sanofi ("Sanofi") manufactures the "rapid-acting" insulin Apidra and the "long-acting" insulin Pantus. (Id.) Sanofi introduced Lantus to the United States market in 2000 and Apidra in 2004. Novo and Sanofi determine the sale price of their drugs, the AWP or WAC, and subsequently publish list prices for their analog insulins. (Id. ¶ 174.)

The distribution of a branded prescription drug, such as the analog insulin at issue in this litigation, involves three transactions. First, a drug manufacturer sells its medication to a wholesaler. (Id. ¶¶ 163-164.) Second, the [*10] wholesaler takes possession of the medication and sells it to a pharmacy. (Id. ¶¶ 164, 170 fig. 3.) Third, the pharmacy sells the drug to the consumers. (Id. ¶¶ 164, 170 fig. 3.) Health insurers and pharmacy benefit managers ("PBMs")<sup>3</sup>, which many insurers hire to manage their prescription drug benefits, are not directly involved in this distribution chain as they do not take physical possession of the medication. (Id. ¶¶ 165-66.)

New Jersey Consumer Fraud Act Against Sanofi), and Five (Violation of the New Jersey Consumer Fraud Act Against Novo and Sanofi). (ECF No. 158-1.) The second brief focuses on Counts Six through Fifty-Nine, violations of the consumer fraud laws of the various states. (ECF No. 158-2.)

<sup>3</sup> PBMs are retained by health insurance companies to manage their prescription drug benefits and negotiate, specifically for discounts, with drug companies and pharmacies on behalf of the health insurance companies. (ECF No. 131 ¶ 166.) PBMs do not purchase prescription drugs, nor do they make any payments to manufacturers. (Id.) PBMs typically do not take possession of drugs either, however, some PBMs operate mail-order pharmacies and purchase drugs from wholesalers solely in their capacity as a seller to the consumer. (ECF No. 131 ¶¶ 7, 166.)

Three separate payments are involved in the medication distribution chain: from the wholesaler to the manufacturer; from the pharmacy to the wholesaler; and from the consumer, and his or her insurer, if any, to the pharmacy. (Id. ¶ 168.) Additionally, there may also be a rebate payment from the manufacturer to the insurer or the insurer's PBM. (Id. ¶ 169.)

Wholesalers pay manufacturers based on the manufacturer's publicly reported list price, the WAC. (Id. ¶ 176.) The WAC is "the manufacturer's list price for the drug or biological to wholesalers or direct purchasers in the United States, not including prompt pay or other discounts, rebates, or reductions in price[.]" 42 U.S.C. § 1395w-3a\(c\)\(6\)\(B\). Accordingly, wholesalers pay the manufacturer the WAC price minus small percentage discounts [*11] derived via prompt payment or some other incentive. (ECF No. 131 ¶¶ 169, 176, 181.) Manufacturers are required to report the average price that wholesalers pay for each drug, accounting for any discounts, which is known as the Average Manufacturing Price ("AMP"). See 42 U.S.C. § 1396r-8\(k\)\(1\).

Wholesalers sell to pharmacies at a price negotiated with each individual pharmacy. (ECF No. 131 ¶ 176.) The prices paid by the pharmacies are frequently very close to the WAC, as wholesalers generally pay manufacturers the WAC minus a percentage discount. (Id. ¶ 181.)

The consumer's purchase price is determined by his or her pharmacy, and in the case of insured consumers, by the terms of his or her insurance contract. (Id. ¶¶ 181, 183-184.) The drug manufacturers do not sell the drugs directly to the consumers, and as such, they do not set the price that the consumer pays for the prescription drug. (Id. ¶¶ 163, 171.) If a consumer is uninsured, the pharmacy independently determines the payment price. (Id. ¶¶ 182, 285.) If the consumer is insured, the insurance company or its PBM negotiates with the pharmacy to set a price. (Id. ¶¶ 166, 170 fig. 3, 171.) The insurer and the consumer each pay a portion of the negotiated [*12] price, subject to any deductibles or copayment requirements contained in the consumer's contract. (Id. ¶¶ 165, 183-184.) Plaintiffs contend that the prices charged by the pharmacies to uninsured consumers, and the prices set by insurers and PBMs for consumers subject to deductible and copayment requirements, are directly related to the AWP, or "benchmark" or "sticker" price. (Id. ¶¶ 2, 209.)

Plaintiffs allege that PBMs retain a portion of the rebate and pass the remainder of the cost on to the health insurance company and/or consumer. (Id. ¶¶ 4, 201, 204.) Plaintiffs further maintain that some insurers have elected not to pass on manufacturer rebates to consumers (Id. ¶ 200), and that as a result, the benchmark price is fraudulent because it does not account for manufacturer rebate payments made to PBMs. (Id. ¶¶ 252, 255). Additionally, Plaintiffs assert that spread between the "net price"<sup>4</sup> and the benchmark price constitutes further evidence of a fraudulent scheme. (Id. ¶¶ 202, 206.)

Plaintiffs allege that PBM rebates are part of an industry scheme to inflate the price of analog insulin, whereby the three largest PBMs — CVS Health, Express Scripts, and OptumRx — use their leverage to [*13] create formularies, ranked lists of drugs. (Id. ¶¶ 169, 180.) Plaintiffs allege that health insurers "cover all or a portion of their members' drug costs based on whether and where drugs fall on their PBM formularies." (Id. ¶ 180.) If a drug is excluded from the formularies, consumers may be required to pay a larger share of the cost, or even the full cost. (Id. ¶¶ 193-94.) Plaintiffs assert that the use of formularies gives PBMs wide latitude to extract rebates from manufacturers. (Id. ¶ 241.) Accordingly, Plaintiffs contend that Novo and Sanofi compete against one another by offering rebates to PBMs for formulary placements. (Id.)

Plaintiffs contend a pricing "scheme" to "widen a secret spread between the manufacturers' published and misleading benchmark prices, and their undisclosed, net selling prices for their analog insulins." (Id. ¶ 2.) Plaintiffs assert "PBM profits are tied to the size of the spread between the benchmark price and actual net selling prices," (Id. ¶¶ 2, 210) such that manufacturers have an incentive to offer a larger spread to PBMs than those offered by their competitors. (Id. ¶ 267). Plaintiffs premise their pricing scheme on two separate theories. First, Plaintiffs [*14]

contend that Defendants "publicly report one price . . . for their analog insulins while secretly offering a far lower price — the net price — to the largest PBMs." (Id. ¶ 2.) Plaintiffs argue that because PBMs do not "negotiate discounts or rebates" and instead merely "pad [their] pockets[]," the rebates are illegitimate. (Id. ¶¶ 2, 6.) Second, Plaintiffs contend that Defendants misrepresented the benchmark prices as "reasonable approximations of the insulins' real prices." (Id. ¶¶ 3, 12-13, 254, 302, 350.) Plaintiffs allege that each of these schemes entails a "pattern" of predicate acts of federal mail and wire fraud in violation of 18 U.S.C. §§ 1341 and 1343, (Id. ¶ 326) and that these violations "have directly and proximately caused the plaintiffs and members of the class to be injured . . . [through] inflated payments based on fictitious benchmark prices for the analog insulins." (Id. ¶¶ 20, 266, 336, 341, 354.)

B. Procedural History

On February 2, 2017, the first complaint was filed in this matter, Chaires, et. al v. Novo Nordisk, et al. ("In re Insulin"), Civil Action No. 17-699(BRM)(LHG). (ECF No. 1.) Thereafter, several prospective plaintiffs filed complaints in six separate actions: *Barnett, et [*15] al. v. Novo Nordisk, Inc* ("Barnett"), Civil Action No. 17-1580(BRM)(LHG); Boss, et al. v. CVS Health Corp. ("Boss"), Civil Action No. 17-1823(BRM)(LHG); Christensen, et al. v. Novo Nordisk, Inc., et al. ("Christensen"), Civil Action No. 17-2678(BRM)(LHG); Valdes, et al. v. Sanofi-Aventis U.S. LLC, et al. ("Valdes"), Civil Action No. 17-939(BRM)(LHG); Carfagno v. Novo Nordisk Inc. ("Carfagno"), Civil Action No. 17-3407(BRM)(LHG); and Bentele, et al. v. Eli Lilly & Co. ("Bentele"), Civil No. 18-11479(BRM)(LHG).

On February 22, 2017, this Court consolidated Valdes into In re Insulin absent objection from any parties, pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 42\(a\). (ECF No. 11.) On September 18, 2017, this Court appointed Steve W. Berman, Esq. of Hagens Berman and James E. Cecchi, Esq. of Carella Byrne as interim lead Plaintiffs' counsel pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 23\(g\). (ECF Nos. 71 & 72.) On January 3, 2018, this Court consolidated Carfagno into In re Insulin absent objection from any of the parties. (ECF No. 84.) On January 19, 2018, this Court consolidated Barnett, Boss, and Christensen into In re Insulin. (ECF No. 89.)

On March 29, 2018, Plaintiffs filed the First Amended Class Action Complaint against Defendants. (ECF No. 131.) On May [*16] 14, 2018, Defendants filed a Motion to Dismiss Plaintiffs' Complaint (ECF No. 158), comprised of a brief in support of dismissing Counts One through Five of the Complaint (ECF No. 158-1) and a separate brief in support of dismissing Counts Six through Fifty-Nine of the Complaint. (ECF No. 158-2.) On July 5, 2018, Plaintiff filed an Opposition to Defendants' Motion to Dismiss. (ECF No. 181.) On August 20, 2018, Defendants filed a Reply Brief to Plaintiffs' Opposition to the Motion to Dismiss. (ECF No. 190.)

II. LEGAL STANDARDS

A. Rule 12\(b\)\(6\)

In deciding a motion to dismiss pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12\(b\)\(6\), a district court is "required to accept as true all factual allegations in the complaint and draw all inferences in the facts alleged in the light most favorable to the [plaintiff]." Phillips v. Cty. of Allegheny, 515 F.3d 224, 228 (3d Cir. 2008). "[A] complaint attacked by a Rule 12\(b\)\(6\) motion to dismiss does not need detailed factual allegations." Bell Atlantic Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 555, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007) (citations omitted). However, the plaintiff's "obligation to provide the 'grounds' of his 'entitle[ment] to relief' requires more than labels and conclusions, and a formulaic recitation of the elements of a cause of action." Id. (citing Papasan v. Allain, 478 U.S. 265, 286, 106 S. Ct. 2932, 92 L. Ed. 2d 209 (1986)). A court is "not bound to accept as true a legal conclusion couched as a factual allegation." Papasan, 478 U.S. at 286. Instead, [*17] assuming the factual allegations in the complaint are true, those "[f]actual allegations must be enough to raise a right to relief above the speculative level." Twombly, 550 U.S. at 555.

"To survive a motion to dismiss, a complaint must contain sufficient factual matter, accepted as true, to 'state a claim for relief that is plausible on its face.'" Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 678, 129 S. Ct. 1937, 173 L. Ed. 2d 868 (2009) (citing Twombly, 550 U.S. at 570). "A claim has facial plausibility when the pleaded factual content allows the court to draw the reasonable inference that the defendant is liable for misconduct alleged." Id. This "plausibility standard" requires the complaint allege "more than a sheer possibility that a defendant has acted unlawfully," but it "is not akin to a probability requirement." Id. (quoting Twombly, 550 U.S. at 556). "Detailed factual allegations" are not required, but "more than an unadorned, the defendant-harmed-me accusation" must be pled; it must include "factual enhancements" and not just conclusory statements or a recitation of the elements of a cause of action. Id. (citing Twombly, 550 U.S. at 555, 557).

"Determining whether a complaint states a plausible claim for relief [is] . . . a context-specific task that requires the reviewing court to draw on its judicial experience and common sense." Iqbal, 556 U.S. at 679. "[W]here the well-pleaded [*18] facts do not permit the court to infer more than the mere possibility of misconduct, the complaint has alleged—but it has not 'show[n]'—that the pleader is entitled to relief." Id. at 679 (quoting Fed. R. Civ. P. 8\(a\)\(2\)). However, courts are "not compelled to accept 'unsupported conclusions and unwarranted inferences,'" Baraka v. McGreevey, 481 F.3d 187, 195 (3d Cir. 2007) (quoting Schuylkill Energy Res. Inc. v. Pa. Power & Light Co., 113 F.3d 405, 417 (3d Cir. 1997)), nor "a legal conclusion couched as a factual allegation." Papasan, 478 U.S. at 286.

While, as a general rule, the court may not consider anything beyond the four corners of the complaint on a motion to dismiss pursuant to Rule 12\(b\)\(6\), the Third Circuit has held that "a court may consider certain narrowly defined types of material without converting the motion to dismiss to one for summary judgment pursuant to [Rule 56]." In re Rockefeller Ctr. Props. Sec. Litig., 184 F.3d 280, 287 (3d Cir. 1999). Specifically, courts may consider any "document integral to or explicitly relied upon in the complaint." In re Burlington Coat Factory Sec. Litig., 114 F.3d 1410, 1426 (3d Cir. 1997) (quoting Shaw v. Dig. Equip. Corp., 82 F.3d 1194, 1220 (1st Cir. 1996)).

B. Rule 9\(b\)

Pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 9\(b\), when alleging fraud, "a party must state with particularity the circumstances constituting fraud or mistake, although intent, knowledge, and other conditions of a person's mind may be alleged generally." In re Lipitor Antitrust Litig., 868 F.3d 231, 249 (3d Cir. 2017) (citations omitted); see also U.S. ex rel. Moore & Co., P.A. v. Majestic Blue Fisheries, LLC, 812 F.3d 294, 307 (3d Cir. 2016) (holding that a plaintiff alleging fraud must . . . support its allegations with all of the essential factual background that would accompany [*19] the first paragraph of any newspaper story — that is, the who, what, when, where and how of the events at issue") (citations omitted). Accordingly, "a party must plead [its] claim with enough particularity to place defendants on notice of the 'precise misconduct with which they are charged.'" [United States ex rel. Petras v. ## III. DECISION

A. RICO Violation Claims

Defendants contend that this Court should dismiss Counts One and Two of Plaintiffs' Complaint, which allege violations of the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act, 18 U.S.C. §§ 1961-1968 (1970) ("RICO"), asserting that Plaintiffs' claims are barred by the "indirect purchaser rule," do not plead facts amounting to mail or wire fraud, fail to plead a valid RICO enterprise, do not adequately plead proximate causation, and do not adequately plead a RICO conspiracy. (ECF No. 158-1 at 26-54.) Plaintiffs counter that the RICO claims should not be dismissed at this juncture because, inter alia, they have adequately pled each element of such violation and Supreme Court and Third Circuit precedent have consistently rejected Defendants' narrow interpretation of the indirect purchaser rule. (ECF No. 181 at 14-52.) For the reasons set [*20] forth below, this Court finds that Plaintiffs cannot sustain their RICO causes of action.

To demonstrate a violation of 18 U.S.C. § 1962\(c\), a plaintiff must prove:

"(1) the existence of an enterprise affecting interstate commerce; (2) that the defendant was employed by or associated with the enterprise; (3) that the defendant participated . . . , either directly or indirectly, in the conduct or the affairs of the enterprise; and (4) that he or she participated through a pattern of racketeering activity."

United States v. Bergrin, 650 F.3d 257, 265 (3d Cir. 2011) (quoting United States v. Irizarry, 341 F.3d 273, 285 (3d Cir. 2003)).

i. RICO Elements

First, Defendants contend that Plaintiffs do not plead facts amounting to mail or wire fraud. (ECF No. 158-1 at 30.) Illicit racketeering activity includes "a host of so-called predicate acts, including 'any act which is indictable under . . . Section 1341 [mail fraud].'" Bridge v. Phoenix Bond & Indem. Co., 553 U.S. 639, 647, 128 S. Ct. 2131, 170 L. Ed. 2d 1012 (2008) (quoting 18 U.S.C. § 1961\(1\)\(B\)). The Third Circuit has traditionally interpreted mail fraud statutes broadly. See United States v. Martinez, 905 F.2d 709, 715 (3d Cir.), cert. denied, 498 U.S. 1017, 111 S. Ct. 591, 112 L. Ed. 2d 595 (1990). Fraud is "measured in a particular case by determining whether the scheme demonstrated a departure from fundamental honesty, moral uprightness, or fair play and candid dealings in the general life of the community." United States v. Riley, 621 F.3d 312, 327 n.19 (3d Cir. 2010) (citation omitted). However, without "a [*21] specific fraudulent statement" identifying "the time, place, speaker, and content" of the alleged misrepresentation, a civil RICO claim asserting fraud should be dismissed. Jaye v. Oak Knoll Vill. Condo. Owners Ass'n, Inc., 2016 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 165269, 2016 WL 7013468, at *15 (D.N.J. Nov. 30, 2016).

Plaintiffs have adequately pled mail and wire fraud. Plaintiffs allege Defendants committed mail and wire fraud by publishing artificially inflated AWPs via mail and interstate wire facilities. (ECF No. 131 ¶¶ 318-25.)<sup>5</sup> Plaintiffs further alleged Defendants knew that AWP is a pricing index and that purchasers pay for analog insulin based on that index. (ECF No. 131 ¶¶ 253-62, 323, 325.) Federal courts have held that excessive inflation of prices on an index, such as the AWPs in this matter, may constitute mail and wire fraud. See In re Lupron® Mktg. & Sales Practices Litig., 295 F. Supp. 2d 148, 165-68 (D. Mass. 2003); see also Schmuck v. United States, 489 U.S. 705, 710-11, 109 S. Ct. 1443, 103 L. Ed. 2d 734 (1989). Defendants' reliance on Langford v. Rite Aid of Alabama, Inc., 231 F.3d 1308, 1313-14 (11th Cir. 2000) and Bonilla v. Volvo Car Corp., 150 F.3d 62, 71 (1st Cir. 1998) is misplaced. As Plaintiffs highlight in their brief, this is not a matter of nondisclosure. (ECF No. 181 at 19.) Rather, Plaintiffs allege that Defendants committed fraud by "[holding] out their artificially increased AWPs as benchmark prices, fully aware that AWP is a pricing index intended to approximate the true cost of a drug." (Id.) Plaintiffs further contend that the AWP had no reasonable relationship to the actual price of [*22] the drugs, and that Defendants knew of this fraud. (ECF No. 131 ¶¶ 176-178, 254.) Accordingly, Plaintiffs have adequately pled mail and wire fraud.

Second, Defendants contend Plaintiffs failed to plead a valid RICO enterprise. (ECF No. 158-1 at 41.) An essential feature of an association-in-fact enterprise is the sharing of a "common purpose" between the members. United States v. Boyle, 556 U.S. 938, 948, 129 S. Ct. 2237, 173 L. Ed. 2d 1265 (2009). "From the terms of RICO, it is apparent that an association-in-fact enterprise must have at least three structural features: a purpose, relationships among those associated with the enterprise, and longevity sufficient to permit the enterprise's purpose." Id. at 946.<sup>6</sup>

<sup>5</sup> Specifically, Plaintiffs allege "[t]he Defendant Drug Manufacturers intended that the PBMs would (and did) distribute, through the U.S. mail and interstate wire facilities, promotional and other materials which claimed that rebates saved health care payers and consumers like the plaintiffs and class members money on their prescription needs." (ECF No. 131 ¶ 321(f).)

The Third Circuit has held that Boyle's construction of the term "association-in-fact enterprise" is "capacious," "expansive," and "obviously broad." In re Ins. Brokerage Antitrust Litig., 618 F.3d 300, 366 (3d Cir. 2010). Additionally, a valid RICO enterprise requires "defendants [to] conduct[] or participat[e] in the conduct of the 'enterprise's affairs,' not just their own affairs." Reves v. Ernst & Young, 507 U.S. 170, 185, 113 S. Ct. 1163, 122 L. Ed. 2d 525 (1993) (quoting 18 U.S.C. § 1962(c)).

Plaintiffs have adequately pled a valid RICO enterprise. Indeed, Plaintiffs' Complaint alleged a common fraudulent purpose between the Defendants, provided a motive for such purpose, and detailed the alleged relationships between the Defendants. [*23] (ECF No. 131 ¶¶ 254, 302-09, 334-35.)<sup>7</sup> Moreover, Plaintiffs also point out that the Amended Complaint satisfies the participation prong by virtue of their allegation that Novo and Sanofi both accomplished "something more" that would be unlikely absent collusion: preferred formulary status without real price reductions. (ECF No. 181 at 48-49.)

Defendants' contentions that Plaintiffs have failed to adequately plead a valid RICO enterprise are without merit. Defendants contend that PBMs and manufacturers cannot have a common purpose in the RICO enterprise because they play different roles in the distribution chain (ECF No. 158-1 at 42-43.) However, Defendants' construction of the common fraudulent purpose prong is too narrow, as federal courts have held that allegations of falsely inflated AWPs may "provide a plausible common fraudulent purpose." In re Pharm. Indus. Average Wholesale Price Litig., 307 F. Supp. 2d 196, 206 (D. Mass. 2004). Defendants also argue that Plaintiffs have not adequately pled that Defendants participated in the affairs of the alleged enterprise, contending that the allegations are "entirely consistent with [defendants and the PBMs] each going about their own business." United Food & Commercial Workers Unions & Emp'r's Midwest Health Benefits Fund v. Walgreen Co., 719 F.3d 849, 855 (7th Cir. 2013). On the contrary, Plaintiffs have alleged conduct that would not occur in competition [*24] for business in a legitimate market. See id. at 856. As such, Plaintiffs adequately alleged a valid RICO enterprise.

Third, Defendants contend that Plaintiffs failed to adequately plead proximate causation. A sustainable RICO claim requires proximate causation. In re Avandia Marketing, Sales Practices & Product Liability Litigation, 804 F.3d 633, 638 (3d Cir. 2015). "[T]o state a claim under civil RICO, the plaintiff is required to show that a RICO predicate offense 'not only was a but for cause of his injury, but was the proximate cause as well.'" Hemi Group, LLC v. City of New York, 559 U.S. 1, 9, 130 S. Ct. 983, 175 L. Ed. 2d 943 (2010) (quoting Holmes v. Sec. Inv'r Prot. Corp., 503 U.S. 258, 268, 112 S. Ct. 1311, 117 L. Ed. 2d 532 (1992)). If a plaintiff's alleged injuries "could have resulted from factors other than [the defendants'] alleged acts of fraud," there is no proximate causation. Anza v. Ideal Steel Supply Corp., 547 U.S. 451, 459, 126 S. Ct. 1991, 164 L. Ed. 2d 720 (2006).

Plaintiffs have adequately plead proximate causation. Although Plaintiffs assert that the costs were passed down to them, they explicitly allege that their injuries would not have occurred "[b]ut for the misrepresentations that the Defendant Drug Manufacturers made regarding the benchmark prices of their analog insulins" as the inflated AWP prices forced the intermediaries to raise their prices so as to not suffer the out-of-pocket overcharges alleged in the suit. (ECF No. 131 ¶¶ 339-40.) Defendants assert that Plaintiffs "cannot show the direct relationship required to establish proximate [*25] causation," (ECF No. 158-1 at 50), however, the allegation that the cost is borne by the "end payor" is sufficient to establish proximate causation in this context. In re Pharm. Indus. Average Wholesale <sup>6</sup>The Supreme Court has also defined an association-in-enterprise, for RICO purposes, as "a group of persons associated together for a common purpose of engaging in a course of conduct." United States v. Turkette, 452 U.S. 576, 583, 101 S. Ct. 2524, 69 L. Ed. 2d 246 (1981).

<sup>7</sup> Specifically, Plaintiffs allege that "[e]ach manufacturer-PBM Enterprise also shares a common purpose of perpetuating use of insulin benchmark prices as the basis for consumer cost-sharing and out-of-pocket payments in the pharmaceutical industry . . . these corporations would not be able to market large spreads to PBMs in exchange for formulary positions without the use of the inflated benchmark prices as the basis for consumer cost-sharing and out-of-pocket payments in the pharmaceutical industry." (ECF No. 131 ¶ 302.) Plaintiffs further alleged that "[e]ach of the Manufacturer-PBM Insulin Pricing Enterprises has a systemic linkage because there are contractual relationships, financial ties, and continuing coordination of activities between each Defendant Drug Manufacturer and each PBM that is an associate." (ECF No. 131 ¶ 303.)

Price Litig., 295 F. Supp. 2d at 175. Proximate causation in the RICO context requires "some direct relation between the injury asserted and the injurious conduct alleged," Holmes, 503 U.S. at 268, and the Amended Complaint makes such allegations.

Finally, Defendants assert that Plaintiffs have not adequately pled a RICO conspiracy. (ECF No. 158-1 at 51.) In order to adequately plead a RICO conspiracy, Plaintiffs must "allege facts suggesting that [the defendants] knowingly agreed to facilitate any illegal scheme." Mason v. Campbell, 2016 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 100121, 2016 WL 8716458, at *6 (E.D. Pa. July 29, 2016) (citing Twombly, 550 U.S. at 570). "[E]vidence of parallel conduct by alleged co-conspirators is not sufficient to show an agreement." In re Ins. Brokerage, 618 F.3d at 321. Rather, allegations of parallel conduct "must be placed in a context that raises a suggestion of a preceding agreement, not merely parallel conduct that could just as well be independent action." Id. at 322 (quoting Twombly, 550 U.S. at 557).

Plaintiffs have adequately pled a RICO conspiracy. Plaintiffs do not merely allege parallel conduct, but rather assert facts that suggest a preceding agreement. Plaintiffs assert not only that Defendants "agree[d] and conspir[ed] to violate 18 U.S.C. § 1962(c)" (ECF No. [*26] 131 ¶ 346), but also allege separate conspiracies of pricing enterprises between Novo and Sanofi and each PBM: CVS, Express Scripts, and OptumRx. (ECF No. 131 ¶¶ 310-12.) These allegations clearly suffice for a RICO conspiracy, and as such, Plaintiffs have adequately pled the existence of a RICO conspiracy.

ii. The Indirect Purchaser Rule

Next, Defendants assert Plaintiffs lack standing to pursue their RICO claim because they are "three levels down the distribution chain" from Defendants and are therefore "classic indirect purchasers" pursuant to the indirect purchaser rule doctrine established by the Supreme Court in Illinois Brick Co. v. Illinois, 431 U.S. 720, 97 S. Ct. 2061, 52 L. Ed. 2d 707 (1977) and Kansas v. UtiliCorp United Inc., 497 U.S. 199, 110 S. Ct. 2807, 111 L. Ed. 2d 169 (1998). (ECF No. 158-1 at 26-27.) Plaintiffs argue that applying the indirect purchaser rule — an antitrust law principle — to RICO claims of fraudulent pricing runs contrary to Supreme Court precedent, and that, in any event, Plaintiffs were directly harmed as they paid prices based on Defendants' fraudulent AWPs, irrespective of the prices paid by intermediaries in the distribution chain. (ECF No. 181 at 31-32.) On January 17, 2019, this Court held oral argument on the limited issue of the applicability of the indirect purchaser rule to Plaintiffs' RICO claims.

The Supreme [*27] Court developed the indirect purchaser rule in the antitrust context, when it held that Clayton Act plaintiffs may not demonstrate injury by providing evidence only of indirect purchases. Illinois Brick, 431 U.S. at 737. The Court warned that allowing indirect purchasers to recover under such a theory would "transform treble-damages actions into massive multiparty litigations involving many levels of distribution and including large classes of ultimate consumers remote from the defendant." Id. at 739. Moreover, the indirect purchaser rule was also intended to prevent defendants from being exposed to "multiple liability" should both indirect and direct purchasers in a distribution chain be permitted to assert claims arising out of a single overcharge. McCarthy v. Recordex Serv., Inc., 80 F.3d 842, 851 (3d Cir. 1996). Because 18 U.S.C. § 1964(c), RICO's private cause of action, was modeled on the Clayton Act, "antitrust standing principles apply equally to allegations of RICO violations." McCarthy, 80 F.3d at 855; see also Holmes, 503 U.S. at 270-74.

Defendants argue Plaintiffs "do not, and cannot, allege that they purchase analog insulin directly from any defendant," (ECF No. 158-1 at 39), citing the Complaint's allegation that Defendants' products are sold "from manufacturers to wholesaler, wholesaler to retailer (or mail order), and retailer to patient." [*28] (Id.) In support of its argument, Defendants cite this District's decision in Hale v. Stryker Orthopaedics, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 126886, 2009 WL 321579 at *3 (D.N.J. Feb. 9, 2009), which dismissed a plaintiff's RICO complaint where the plaintiffs did "not plead that they purchased [the products] directly from [the defendants]." The Hale court determined that a plaintiffs' co-payment alone does not confer standing upon it as several actors stood in the distribution chain between the plaintiffs and the defendants. *2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 126886, [WL] at *4*.

Although Plaintiffs advocated competently against applying the indirect purchaser rule in this case, this Court is bound by the controlling caselaw and thus concludes Plaintiffs' Complaint has not sufficiently pled allegations to withstand Defendants' indirect purchaser rule challenge. Plaintiffs' Complaint merely alleges that Defendants' artificial price inflation of the AWPs caused them to pay an increased price for analog insulin, yet never alleges that such overpayments were made directly to Defendants. Specifically, Plaintiffs assert:

336. . . . [W]hen a plaintiff or class member fills a prescription for one of the analog insulins, she is responsible for paying all or a portion of the medication's cost. If the plaintiff or class member is uninsured, she must pay 100% [*29] of the drugs' point-of-sale prices, which are based on the Defendant Drug Manufacturers' benchmark prices. If the plaintiff or class member has a high-deductible health plan, she must pay 100% of the drugs' point-of-sale prices, based on Defendant Drug Manufacturers' benchmark prices, until she satisfies her deductible. If the plaintiff's or class member's health plan contains a coinsurance requirement, she is responsible for paying a percentage of her drugs' point-of-sale prices, based on the Defendants Drug Manufacturers' benchmark prices. And if the plaintiff or class member is a member of a Medicare Part D plan, she is responsible for paying all or a portion of her drugs' point-of-sale prices based on Defendant Drug Manufacturers' benchmark prices, until she reaches her maximum contribution.

337. The amount of each of these cash payments is based on the Defendant Drug Manufacturers' benchmark prices. Therefore, when each Defendant Drug Manufacturer artificially inflated each analog insulin's benchmark price and then used each Manufacturer-PBM Insulin Pricing Enterprises to sell those analog insulins, they also artificially inflate plaintiffs' and class members' out-of-pocket expenses. [*30]

338. The plaintiffs' and class members' damages are therefore the difference between the defendants' reported benchmark prices and the net prices at which they sell their analog insulins for all plaintiff and class member out-of-pocket expenses. 339. Plaintiffs' injuries, and those of the class members, were proximately caused by the Defendant Drug Manufacturers' racketeering activity. But for the misrepresentations that the Defendant Drug Manufacturers made regarding the benchmark prices of their analog insulins and the scheme that the Manufacturer-PBM Insulin Pricing Enterprises employed, plaintiffs and others similarly situated would have paid less, out-of-pocket, for their analog insulins.

Plaintiffs' core allegation is that Defendants engaged in a scheme to "artificially inflat[e] the benchmark prices of their analog insulin." (ECF No. 131 at ¶ 20.) However, Plaintiffs concede that they, the consumers, are not the first party to pay for the analog insulin at a purportedly inflated price. Rather, Plaintiffs outline a scheme whereby the analog insulins are sold to wholesalers at prices "based on the benchmark prices that are set by the manufacturers," and are [*31] subsequently sold to pharmacies, hospitals, and clinics at prices approximating the benchmark prices. (ECF No. 131 at ¶¶ 164, 176.) As such, Plaintiffs are multiple purchasers down the distribution chain from Defendants and are quintessential indirect purchasers for the purposes of the indirect purchaser rule. See McCarthy, 80 F.3d at 848 (holding that "only the purchaser immediately downstream from the alleged [RICO violator]" possesses standing to pursue an action).

Plaintiffs contend the indirect purchaser rule does not vitiate their RICO standing as the rule does not apply to RICO claims, and that Defendants' alleged fraud directly injured Plaintiffs as Defendants set the AWPs that ultimately dictated the price paid by the Plaintiffs, thereby conferring upon them RICO standing. (ECF No. 181 at 30-36.) Plaintiffs posit the Complaint explains the process by which Plaintiffs pay out-of-pocket costs, and thus suffer a direct injury based directly on the prices set by Defendants. (ECF No. 131 ¶¶ 260-69.) This Court is not persuaded by Plaintiffs' arguments. In McCarthy, the Third Circuit unequivocally held that the indirect purchaser rule applies to RICO claims, stating "the central and dispositive issue [in [*32] a RICO action] is whether plaintiffs are 'direct purchasers.' If so, they are entitled to pursue . . . their . . . RICO claims." McCarthy, 80 F.3d at 855.

At oral argument, Plaintiffs urged this Court to rely on Avandia, 804 F.3d at 638, to the extent it conflicts with McCarthy with respect to the applicability of the indirect purchaser rule in RICO actions. Though Avandia is the more recent Third Circuit decision, the facts of this matter are meaningfully distinguishable such that Avandia does not provide persuasive support to Plaintiffs' position. Plaintiffs assert the Avandia plaintiffs were "third party payors" who "did not directly purchase [the product] from the manufacturer . . . but instead reimbursed a pharmacy that purchased [the product] in the chain of distribution." (ECF No. 181 at 35.) Plaintiffs contend that because the "distribution chain did not preclude the RICO claim" and because "the issue was whether the pharmaceutical company's misrepresentations directly caused the health insurers to pay a higher rate than they otherwise would have," its Complaint should be permitted to proceed as it alleges the "same conduct forming the basis of the RICO scheme." (ECF No. 181 at 35-36.) This Court disagrees.

Unlike here, the [*33] Avandia plaintiffs were not seeking recourse pursuant to payments made to third parties based on allegedly fraudulent prices set by a manufacturer. Avandia did not concern an identical case of an indirect purchaser. Rather, the Avandia plaintiffs' cause of action was couched in the defendants' alleged failure to disclose known health risks of various drugs ultimately included in their formularies, as the court explained:

The conduct that allegedly caused plaintiffs' injuries is the same conduct forming the basis of the RICO scheme alleged in the complaint — the misrepresentation of the heart-related risks of taking Avandia that caused TPPs and PBMs to place Avandia in the formulary. The injury alleged by the TPPs is an economic injury independent of any physical injury suffered by Avandia users. And, as far as we can tell, prescribing physicians did not suffer RICO injury from [the] marketing of Avandia.

Avandia, 804 F.3d at 644.

The Avandia plaintiffs were third-party payors who included the product, Avandia, in their formulary decisions at favorable rates in direct reliance on material misrepresentations made by the defendant, a pharmaceutical company. Avandia, 804 F.3d at 636.<sup>8</sup> By contrast, Plaintiffs allege their damages stem from [*34] artificially inflated AWPs paid by wholesalers and pharmacies before the consumers make their purchases from those intermediaries. See Warren Gen. Hosp. v. Amgen Inc., 643 F.3d 77, 95 (3d Cir. 2011) (holding that the indirect purchaser rule applies to prescription drug sales and noting that "[b]ecause of the complicated interplay between market forced, the possibility that the wholesaler was harmed by defendant's actions exists even if the majority of the injury is borne by the indirect purchaser").

At oral argument, Plaintiffs also cited a recent decision from the District of Kansas, In re EpiPen, 336 F. Supp. 3d 1256, 1259 (D. Kan. 2018), in further support of its position that the indirect purchaser rule should not bar its RICO claim. (Ps' Ltr. (ECF No. 244).) Plaintiffs contend the EpiPen court relied on Supreme Court decisions in Holmes and Bridge v. Phoenix Bond & Indem. Co., 553 U.S. 639, 128 S. Ct. 2131, 170 L. Ed. 2d 1012 (2008) in declining to extend the indirect purchaser rule to a RICO action with a similar fact pattern. (Id.) This Court disagrees with Plaintiffs' assertions. Holmes explicitly held that federal jurisprudence interpreting antitrust principles govern RICO claims because Congress modeled RICO's civil action provision on a substantially similar provision in the Clayton Act, stating:

The key to better interpretation lies in some statutory history. We have repeatedly observed, [*35] see Agency Holding Corp. v. Malley-Duff & Assocs., Inc., 483 U.S. 143, 150-51, 107 S. Ct. 2759, 97 L. Ed. 2d 121 (1987) . . . that Congress modeled § 1964(c) . . . [of RICO after] the federal antitrust laws, § 4 of the Clayton Act . . .

In Associated General Contractors . . . we discussed how Congress enacted § 4 in 1914 with language borrowed from § 7 of the Sherman Act, passed 24 years earlier. Before 1914, lower federal courts had read § 7 to incorporate common-law principles of proximate causation . . . and as we reasoned, as many lower federal courts had done before us . . . that congressional use of the § 7 language in § 4 presumably carried the intention to adopt 'the judicial gloss that avoided a simple literal interpretation.' . . . Thus, we held that a plaintiff's right to sue under § 4 required a showing that the defendant's violation not only was a 'but for' cause of his injury, but was the proximate cause as well.

<sup>8</sup> Similarly, Plaintiffs' reliance on the Second Circuit's decision in Desiano v. Warner-Lambert Co., 326 F.3d 339 (2d Cir. 2003) is also misplaced. (ECF No. 181 at 36.) Desiano concerned an antitrust action to recover alleged overpayments made to a drug manufacturer, however, unlike in this matter, the relief sought included "only the portion of the prescription paid [directly] by the [healthcare providers] and exclude[d] the part paid by the patients, in the form of a 'co-pay.'" Id. at 345.

The reasoning applies just as readily to § 1964\(c\) [of RICO]. We may fairly credit the 91st Congress, which enacted RICO, with knowing the interpretation federal courts had given the words earlier Congresses had used first in § 7 of the Sherman Act, and later in the Clayton Act's § 4. . . . It used the same words, and we can only assume it intended them to have the same meaning that courts had already given them.

Nothing [*36] in Holmes undercuts the voluminous federal jurisprudence determining that courts may apply the indirect purchaser rule to RICO actions with the same force as under antitrust law.<sup>9</sup> The EpiPen court's discussion of Holmes merely suggests Holmes did not create a bright line applying the indirect purchaser rule to all RICO actions with the same force as in the antitrust context, stating "the Court has 'cautioned our use of the term "direct" should merely be understood as a reference to the proximate cause enquiry that is informed by the concerns set out in the text.'" EpiPen, 336 F. Supp. 3d at 1324 (quoting Holmes, 503 U.S. at 269 n.15). The court in EpiPen continued to note "the Supreme Court has recognized that 'the infinite variety of claims that may arise [under RICO] make it virtually impossible to announce a black-letter rule that will dictate the result in every case' for determining whether an alleged RICO violation was the proximate cause of plaintiff's injuries." EpiPen, 336 F. Supp. 3d at 1324-25 (quoting Holmes, 503 U.S. at 272 n.20).

Similarly, the Supreme Court's holding in Bridge does not preclude the application of the indirect purchaser rule to Plaintiffs' RICO claims. Bridge merely held that plaintiffs who are injured "by reason of" a pattern of mail fraud may have RICO standing "even [*37] if he [or she] has not relied on any misrepresentations." Bridge, 553 U.S. at 649-50. Unlike here, Bridge does not concern the case of an indirect purchaser and does not stand for the proposition that plaintiffs multiple levels down the consumer chain may possess RICO standing despite the indirect purchaser rule. The disparity between the holding in EpiPen and the Third Circuit decisions is best explained by the conflicting application of the indirect purchaser rule between the Third and Tenth Circuits. The EpiPen court readily admitted the Third Circuit recognizes the indirect purchaser rule in the RICO context, whereas the Tenth Circuit does not, explaining:

Because defendants just cite cases from outside the Tenth Circuit to support their argument that indirect purchasers lack RICO standing, the court declines to apply that rule here. Instead, applying the guidance from our Circuit in Safe Streets Alliance v. Hickenlooper, 859 F.3d 865 \(10th Cir. 2017\), the court already has determined that the class plaintiffs adequately have alleged that defendants' RICO violations proximately caused their injuries.

And just as importantly, defendants cite no cases from the Tenth Circuit holding that a RICO plaintiff lacks standing to assert a claim for overpaying for [*38] pharmaceuticals when the plaintiff receives the benefit of the bargain in the form of purchasing effective drugs, even at inflated prices. The court declines to apply the holdings from the District of New Jersey cases here, as defendants urge.

EpiPen, 336 F. Supp 3d at 1325-26.

Finally, Plaintiffs' contentions that they suffered direct injury as a result of Defendants' artificially inflated AWPs, thereby conferring RICO standing, are also without merit. (ECF No. 181 at 32.) Plaintiffs argue the consumers' place in the chain of distribution is irrelevant because "the plaintiffs pay prices directly based on the defendants' fraudulent AWPs irrespective of the prices other intermediaries within the chain pay." (Id.) Plaintiffs further assert that Defendants' potential overcharges of intermediaries are inconsequential as "[t]he issue is that the defendant[] grossly misrepresented the pricing benchmarks used to directly set consumer prices." (Id.) However, such is still insufficient to overcome the indirect purchaser rule.

<sup>9</sup> Additionally, this Court disagrees with Plaintiffs' reliance on Sedima, 479 U.S. at 498-99. Although Sedima postulates that "RICO is evolving into something quite different from the original conception of its enactors," id. at 500, and even suggests that interpreting its elements in identical fashion to those under antitrust law may play a role in such evolution, id. at 498-99, it does not at all mention the indirect purchaser rule and certainly provides no analysis tending to suggest a preference that such rule not be applied in the RICO context.

The Amended Complaint explicitly describes the distribution chain and flow of revenue therein: first, Defendants sell analog insulin to wholesalers at prices "based on benchmark prices that are set by manufacturers" [*39] (ECF No. 131 ¶ 176); second, wholesalers earn a margin by selling insulin to pharmacies at approximately the same prices as the benchmarks prices set (ECF No. 131 ¶¶ 164, 167-68); and third, pharmacies earn a margin by charging benchmark-based prices, which are set by bargaining between the pharmacy and PBMs (in the case of insured consumers) or unilaterally by the pharmacy (in the case of uninsured consumers). (ECF No. 131 ¶¶ 179, 181, 201). Notably, Plaintiffs do not allege that Defendants invariably set the direct prices paid by consumers, but instead that those prices are sometimes determined after certain negotiations between intermediaries in the distribution chain who subsequently impose various mark-ups. (Id.)

Although Plaintiffs do allege the benchmark prices "directly" affect the price paid by consumers (ECF No. 181 at 32), such would be insufficient to overcome the indirect purchaser rule bar to RICO standing. The indirect purchaser rule still applies even when the alleged improper price inflation is passed to a plaintiff on a "dollar for dollar basis." McCarthy, 80 F.3d at 853.<sup>10</sup> The Plaintiffs have merely alleged a pass-through of the inflated price from one of the various intermediaries to the [*40] consumers. Such allegations cannot overcome an indirect purchaser rule challenge.

The facts of this case closely mirror those of Hale. 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 126886, 2009 WL 321579. In Hale, plaintiffs asserted RICO violations pursuant to the defendants' alleged artificial price inflation of hip and knee implant devices. 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 126886, [WL] at *1. As in this matter, the Hale plaintiffs failed to allege they directly purchased the subject products from the defendants. 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 126886, [WL] at *4. Rather, the plaintiffs pled only that they suffered a direct injury evidenced by heightened coinsurance payments passed down to them through the distribution chain. Accordingly, the Hale court determined that the plaintiffs lacked RICO standing pursuant to the indirect purchaser rule, stating:

While Plaintiffs argue that they have pled direct injury since they paid artificially-inflated coinsurance payments for their surgeries, Plaintiffs have not alleged that they were direct purchasers of the replacement joints manufactured by Defendants. Between Plaintiffs and Defendants in the chain of distribution stand several actors, including the hospitals performing the joint surgeries and Plaintiffs' insurers. The chain of distribution squarely presents the multiple liability [*41] and damage apportionment risks discussed in McCarthy. Thus, Plaintiffs' co-payment alone does not allow them to stand in the shoes of a direct purchaser for standing purposes.

After carefully considering the arguments put forth by both sides, it seems clear that under the facts as pled, Plaintiffs cannot escape the bar of the "direct purchaser" rule. To do so, Plaintiffs would have to plead that they bought their implants directly from Defendants. Since Plaintiffs have not so pled, they lack standing under these facts to bring their RICO claims.

Id.

Although Plaintiffs allege injury not only through heightened coinsurance payments, but also via fraudulent AWPs that "directly set consumer prices" (ECF No. 181 at 32), Plaintiffs have failed to plead any direct purchase between themselves and Defendants. The chain of distribution alleged in this matter is fatal to Plaintiff's RICO claim, and as in Hale, such distribution chain "squarely presents the multiple liability and damage apportionment risks discussed in McCarthy." Id. Allowing Plaintiffs' RICO claims to proceed would expose Defendants to liability to Plaintiffs as well as to the various direct purchasers, such as the wholesalers [*42] and PBMs, thereby allowing to persist the exact harm that the indirect purchaser rule seeks to prevent.

<sup>10</sup> McCarthy notes "the fact that the [subject costs] were passed on [from an intermediary] to [the plaintiffs] on a dollar for dollar basis . . . is not dispositive. Indeed, the subcontractors in Illinois Brick and the utility companies in Utilicorp passed on their costs to the plaintiffs in those respective cases; yet the Supreme Court deemed this fact insufficient to confer standing to the indirect-purchaser plaintiffs in those cases." 80 F.3d at 853.

Finally, in a February 5, 2019 letter brief (ECF No. 249), Plaintiffs urged this Court to follow a recent decision from this District, In re Mercedes-Benz Emissions Litig., No. 16-881, 2019 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 16381, 2019 WL 413541 \(D.N.J. Feb. 1, 2019\), in which the court allowed RICO claims to persist despite the fact that the plaintiffs did not directly purchase the product, luxury automobiles, directly from the manufacturers. Mercedes-Benz is distinguishable from this case. Although the Mercedes-Benz plaintiffs were not direct purchasers, that matter did not concern overpayments made to and by intermediaries, as here. Rather, Mercedes-Benz dealt primarily with proximate causation in the RICO context, a separate requirement. The court was not confronted with an indirect purchaser challenge to plaintiffs' standing, it was not briefed on the indirect purchaser rule, and it did not perform an analysis of the indirect purchaser rule whatsoever. [2019 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 16381, \[WL\] at \*18-26.](#)

Although Plaintiffs have adequately pled the various elements of a RICO claim, they failed to allege that they directly purchased the analog insulin from Defendants. Rather, Plaintiffs claim injury by virtue of inflated prices of their downstream purchase. [*43] Therefore, Plaintiffs' claims are barred by the indirect purchaser rule, and as such, Plaintiffs lack standing to maintain this action pursuant to RICO. Accordingly, Defendants' Motion to Dismiss Plaintiffs' Amended Complaint is GRANTED WITHOUT PREJUDICE as to Counts One and Two.

B. New Jersey Consumer Fraud Act

Defendants contend that this Court should dismiss Counts Three, Four, and Five of the Plaintiffs' Complaint, which allege violations of the NJCFA, asserting that the Plaintiffs' Complaint fails to plead the deceptive practices and unconscionable pricing claims with specificity, does not plead unlawful conduct, and does not allege that Plaintiffs suffered any ascertainable loss. (ECF No. 158-1 at 54-60.) Plaintiffs counter that the Complaint plausibly pleads all necessary elements on an NJCFA claim. (ECF No. 181 at 52-59.) For the reasons set forth below, this Court finds that Plaintiffs have adequately pled an NJCFA claim.

The New Jersey Consumer Fraud Act, N.J.S.A. § 56:8-1, et seq. ("NJCFA") states, in pertinent part:

The act, use or employment by any person of any unconscionable commercial practice, deception, fraud, false pretense, false promise, misrepresentation, or the knowing, concealment, suppression, [*44] or omission of any material fact with intent that others rely upon such concealment, suppression or omission, in connection with the sale or advertisement of any merchandise or real estate, or with the subsequent performance of such person as aforesaid, whether or not any person has in fact been misled, deceived or damaged thereby, is declared to be an unlawful practice; . . . .

N.J.S.A. § 56:8-2.

Courts have interpreted this section to require the following three elements to state a cause of action under the NJCFA: "1) unlawful conduct by defendant; 2) an ascertainable loss by plaintiff; and 3) a causal relationship between the unlawful conduct and the ascertainable loss." Bosland v. Warnock Dodge, Inc., 197 N.J. 543, 964 A.2d 741, 749 \(N.J. 2009\) (citing Int'l Union of Operating Eng'rs Local No. 68 Welfare Fund v. Merck & Co., Inc., 192 N.J. 372, 929 A.2d 1076, 1086 \(N.J. 2007\)).

i. Specificity

Defendants assert Plaintiffs' Complaint does "not identify with specificity how defendants purportedly violated the NJCFA," and that as such, the Complaint lacks the particularity and specificity required by Rule 9\(b\) to withstand a motion to dismiss. (ECF No. 158-1 at 54.) The heightened pleading standard set forth in Rule 9\(b\) applies to a plaintiff's NJCFA claim. See Dewey v. Volkswagen, 558 F. Supp. 2d 505, 524 \(D.N.J. 2008\) (applying Rule 9\(b\) to a NJCFA and common law fraud claims); see also Degennaro v. Am. Bankers Ins. Co. of Fla., 2017 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 96372, 2017 WL 2693881, at \*5 \(D.N.J. June 22, 2017\). To satisfy the specificity requirement of Rule 9\(b\), "the pleadings must state what the misrepresentation [*45] was, what was purchased, when the conduct complained of occurred, by whom the misrepresentation was made, and how the conduct led plaintiff to sustain an ascertainable loss." Smajlaj v. Campbell Soup Co., 782 F. Supp. 2d 84, 104 \(D.N.J. 2011\).

Plaintiffs' Complaint makes the necessary, specific allegations to withstand Defendants' Motion to Dismiss. The Complaint alleges misrepresentation in that Defendants warranted that the artificially inflated publicly reported benchmark prices of Novolog, Levemir, Apidra, Lantus, and Toujeo were the reasonable approximations of the true cost (ECF No. 131 ¶¶ 359-63, 379-83). Moreover, the Complaint also alleges that Plaintiffs purchased the subject drugs (Id. ¶¶ 355, 375), provides allegations concerning when the conduct occurred. (Id. ¶¶ 234-37), and asserts that the conduct led Plaintiffs to suffer a loss. (Id. ¶¶ 372-73, 392-93, 403-04). Accordingly, the allegations in Plaintiffs' Complaint are pled with sufficient specificity.

ii. Unlawful Conduct

Defendants assert Plaintiffs' Complaint has "failed to plead any unlawful conduct by defendants" in that it fails "to identify any actions of defendants that were capable of misleading consumers as to analog insulin pricing or rebates" (ECF No. 158-1 at 55), and that [*46] as such, it cannot withstand this Motion to Dismiss. "The [NJCFA] creates three categories of unlawful practices: affirmative acts, knowing omissions, and violations of state regulations." Maniscalco v. Brother Int'l Corp. \(USA\), 627 F. Supp. 2d 494, 499 \(D.N.J. 2009\) (quoting Vukovich v. Haifa, No. 03-737, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 13344, 2007 WL 655597, \*9 \(D.N.J. Feb. 28, 2007\) (citing Cox v. Sears Roebuck & Co., 138 N.J. 2, 647 A.2d 454 \(N.J. 1994\))). Affirmative acts require no showing of intent on behalf of the defendant. See Fenwick v. Kay Am. Jeep, Inc., 72 N.J. 372, 371 A.2d 13, 16 \(N.J. 1977\). "Thus, a defendant who makes an affirmative misrepresentation is liable even in the absence of knowledge of the falsity of the misrepresentation, negligence or the intent to deceive." Vukovich, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 13344, 2007 WL 655597, at \*9 (citation omitted). "In contrast, when the alleged consumer fraud consists of an omission, a plaintiff must show that the defendant acted with knowledge, thereby making intent an essential element of the fraud." Id. Notably, unlawful acts expressly regulated by other statutes, regulations, or rules not promulgated under the NJCFA can also give rise to an NJCFA claim. See Henderson v. Hertz Corp., No. L-6937-03, 2006 N.J. Super. Unpub. LEXIS 2871, 2005 WL 4127090, at \*5 \(N.J. Super. Ct. App. Div. June 22, 2006\); see also Lemelledo v. Beneficial Mgmt. Corp. of Am., 150 N.J. 255, 696 A.2d 546, 551-55 \(N.J. 1997\).

Additionally, the NJCFA "prohibit[s] business practices that are unfair or unconscionable in addition to practices that are fraudulent, deceptive, or misleading; these terms are defined separately and differently in the text of the statutes and in relevant case law interpreting them." Cottrell v. Alcon Labs., 874 F.3d 154, 166 \(3d Cir. 2017\) (citations [*47] omitted). "There is no precise formulation for an 'unconscionable' act that satisfies the statutory standard for an unlawful practice." D'Agostino v. Maldonado, 216 N.J. 168, 78 A.3d 527, 537 \(N.J. 2013\). Rather, the NJCFA "establishes 'a broad business ethic' applied 'to balance the interest of the consumer public and those of the sellers.'" Id. (quoting Kugler v. Romain, 58 N.J. 522, 279 A.2d 640, 652 \(N.J. 1971\)).

Plaintiffs' Complaint adequately pled unlawful conduct in violation of the NJCFA. New Jersey courts have interpreted NJCFA's reach expansively, and in light of the applicable jurisprudence, Plaintiffs have adequately pled unconscionable conduct. Specifically, the Complaint alleges that Defendants knew, but did not disclose, the benchmark prices it selected for the various drugs it manufactures, and then offered the price spreads to PBMs in exchange for favorable placement on formularies. (ECF No. 131 ¶¶ 360, 380.) Additionally, Plaintiffs adequately pled unfair business practices in their assertions that Defendants' artificially inflated AWPs thereby causing gross overpayments among the most vulnerable members of society. (ECF No. 131 ¶¶ 267-71.) Accordingly, Plaintiffs' Complaint has adequately pled unlawful conduct pursuant to the NJCFA.

iii. Ascertainable Loss

Defendants contend Plaintiffs' Complaint [*48] must be dismissed because they have not, and cannot, establish an ascertainable loss, as required in an NJCFA pleading. (ECF No. 158-1 at 57.) An "ascertainable loss" is one that is "quantifiable or measurable." Thiedemann v. Mercedes-Benz USA, LLC, 183 N.J. 234, 872 A.2d 783, 793 (N.J. 2005). A "plaintiff must suffer a definite, certain and measurable loss, rather than one that is merely theoretical." Bosland, 964 A.2d at 749. However, New Jersey courts have found that "if the defendant or a non-party takes action to ensure that plaintiff sustains no out-of-pocket loss or loss of value prior to litigation, then plaintiff's CFA claim may fail." D'Agostino, 78 A.2d at 543; see also Thiedemann, 872 A.2d at 794 (finding no ascertainable loss when defendant repaired defect in accordance with terms of warranty). Courts support alleged damages based on either an out-of-pocket theory or a benefit of the bargain theory. See Smajlaj v. Campbell Soup Co., 782 F. Supp. 2d 84, 99-103 (D.N.J. 2011). "An out-of-pocket-loss theory will suffice only if the product received was essentially worthless." Mladenov v. Wegmans Food Mkt., Inc., 124 F. Supp. 3d 360, 374 (D.N.J. 2015). "A benefit-of-the-bargain theory requires that the consumer be misled into buying a product that is ultimately worth less than the product that was promised." Id. (citation omitted). Additionally, plaintiffs must set forth allegations sufficient to show that those losses are causally connected to defendant's alleged conduct. [*49] Bosland, 964 A.2d at 749.

Plaintiffs have adequately pled an ascertainable loss. Plaintiffs' Complaint fails to plead an ascertainable loss under the "out-of-pocket-loss" theory because it never alleges that the products are "essentially worthless." Mladenov, 124 F. Supp. 3d at 374, however, Plaintiffs have adequately pled ascertainable losses pursuant to the "benefit-of-the-bargain theory." A plaintiff alleging an ascertainable loss under the benefit of the bargain theory "states a claim if he or she alleges (1) a reasonable belief about the product induced by a misrepresentation; and (2) that the difference in value between the product promised and the one received can be reasonably quantified." Smajlaj, 782 F. Supp. 2d at 99. As such, a plaintiff "must proffer evidence of a loss that is not hypothetical or illusory" and that is 'presented with some certainty demonstrating that it is capable of calculation.' Id. (quoting Thiedemann, 872 A.2d at 792-93); see also Hemy v. Perdue Farms, Inc., 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 137923, 2011 WL 6002463, at *18 (D.N.J. Nov. 30, 2011) (holding that the allegation that plaintiff was charged a "premium," by itself, does not support a claim for an ascertainable loss).

Plaintiffs have alleged that they were misled as to the difference between the benchmark prices and the "true prices" of the medications. (ECF No. 131 ¶¶ 359-63, 379-83.) Plaintiffs contend that Defendants [*50] intentionally and knowingly misrepresented material facts and thereby "inflated" the price of analog insulin to the detriment of the consumers, who "pay for analog insulin based on the medicines' benchmark price." (ECF No. 131 ¶¶ 10, 209.) Accordingly, Plaintiffs have adequately pled an ascertainable loss pursuant to the "benefit-of-the-bargain" theory, as they contend that they were "unfairly deprived of the benefit of the bargain" as they paid more than their pro-rata share of the net prices of the subject insulin. (ECF No. 131 ¶¶ 368-70.)

As Plaintiffs have sufficiently pled unlawful conduct with specificity as well as an ascertainable loss, Defendants' Motion to Dismiss Plaintiffs' Amended Complaint is DENIED as to Counts Three, Four, and Five.

C. Plaintiffs' State Law Claims, Generally

Defendants contend that all of Plaintiffs' various state law claims should be dismissed, as Plaintiffs fail to allege fraudulent, unfair, or unconscionable conduct (ECF No. 158-2 at 4-5), all of Plaintiffs' claims are cursory recitations of the statutory elements (Id. at 5-6), all the claims fail to plead proximate causation (Id. at 6-7), all the claims fail to comply with Rule 9(b) (Id. at 7-8), and all the claims fail because the Plaintiffs' [*51] damages are speculative (Id. at 8-9). This Court finds Plaintiffs have adequately alleged fraudulent, unfair, or unconscionable conduct, have pled proximate causation, and have satisfied the requirements of Rule 9(b). Additionally, Plaintiffs have also adequately pled an ascertainable loss. (ECF No. 131 ¶ 250.) Accordingly, Defendants' Motion to Dismiss Plaintiffs' Amended Complaint is DENIED as to Counts Six through Fifty-Nine.<sup>11</sup>

D. Plaintiffs' State Law Claims, Specifically

i. Article III Standing

Defendants contend that seventeen of the various state law claims asserted against them should be dismissed as they each lack a plaintiff with Article III standing. (ECF No. 158-2 at 9-11.) Specifically, Defendants assert that the Complaint contains seventeen counts under the laws of states in which no named plaintiff resides or is alleged to have made any purchases of the subject insulin analog.<sup>12</sup> (ECF No. 158-2 at 10.) "Plaintiffs have the burden to establish standing." Winer Family Trust v. Queen, 503 F.3d 319, 325 (3d Cir. 2007). "[A] plaintiff who raises multiple causes of action 'must demonstrate standing for each claim he seeks to press.'" In re Schering Plough Corp. Intron/Temodar Consumer Class Action, 678 F.3d 235, 245 (3d Cir. 2012) (quoting DaimlerChrysler Corp. v. Cuno, 547 U.S. 332, 352, 126 S. Ct. 1854, 164 L. Ed. 2d 589 (2006)). The threshold standing determination may not be postponed to class certification, rather, "class representatives must [*52] meet Article III standing requirements the moment a complaint is filed." Neale v. Volvo Cars of N. Am., LLC, 794 F.3d 353, 367 (3d Cir. 2015) (citing Lewis v. Casey, 518 U.S. 343, 358, 116 S. Ct. 2174, 135 L. Ed. 2d 606 (1996)).

Consistent with Neale, district courts within the Third Circuit and throughout the nation have held that named plaintiffs in a class action "lack standing to bring claims on behalf of putative classes under the laws of states where no named plaintiff is located and where no named plaintiff purchased the product at issue." In re: Niaspan Antitrust Litig., 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 164021, 2015 WL 8150588, at *3 (E.D. Pa. Dec. 8, 2015). Indeed, the Complaint includes seventeen counts in which no named plaintiff resides in such state, nor is there any allegation of injury in such state. This runs afoul of the Supreme Court's holding in DaimlerChrysler, as well as the rules promulgated by courts of this Circuit.

Plaintiffs concede that the Complaint includes several counts for which it lacks a named plaintiff residing in, or claiming injury in, such state. (ECF No. 181 at 63.) Instead, Plaintiffs assert that they do not need to claim an injury in each state to maintain standing, citing the Third Circuit's decision in In re Prudential Ins. Co., 148 F.3d 283 (3d Cir. 1998). Plaintiffs' reliance on Prudential is inappropriate. While the court in Prudential held that "[o]nce individual standing by the class representative is met, a proper party is before the court" and there [*53] "remains no further separate class standing requirement in the constitutional sense," id. at 306-07, Prudential concerned a matter where the class included members alleging injury in all fifty states. Indeed, Prudential explicitly noted that the matter was "an appeal from the approval of the settlement of a nationwide class action lawsuit against Prudential Life Insurance company alleging deceptive sales practices affecting over 8 million claimants throughout the fifty states and the District of Columbia." Id. at 289 (emphasis added). As such, any attempt by Plaintiffs to assert that the holding in Prudential somehow undermines the Supreme Court's ruling in DaimlerChrysler is without merit.

Accordingly, Defendants' Motion to Dismiss Plaintiffs' Amended Complaint is GRANTED WITHOUT PREJUDICE as to Counts Seven, Eight, Fourteen, Fifteen, Sixteen, Twenty, Thirty-Nine, Forty-Two, Forty-Three, Forty-Five, Forty-Eight, Forty-Nine, Fifty, Fifty-Five, Fifty-Six, Fifty-Seven, and Fifty-Nine.

ii. Standing for Claims as to Particular Defendants

Defendants contend that Plaintiffs lack standing to pursue certain claims against certain defendants because none of them "suffered an injury alleged in a given state from that [*54] defendant's products." (ECF No. 158-2 at 11.)<sup>13</sup> Plaintiffs counter that all claims raised in the Complaint satisfy Rule 23's typicality requirement. (ECF No. 181 at 66-67.) To determine whether a plaintiff is typical of a class, courts consider the attributes of the plaintiff, the class as a whole, and the similarity between the plaintiff and the class. *Marcus v. BMW of N. Am., LLC, 687 F.3d 583, 598 \(3d Cir. 2012\)*. The Third Circuit has explained the typicality requirement as follows:

[The analysis involves] three distinct, though related, concerns: (1) the claims of the class representative must be generally the same as those of the class in terms of both (a) the legal theory advances and (b) the factual circumstances underlying that theory; (2) the class representative must not be subject to a defense that is both inapplicable to many members of the class and likely to become a major focus of the litigation; and (3) the interests and incentives of the representative must be sufficiently aligned with those of the class.

*Schering Plough, 589 F.3d at 599.*

Although Plaintiffs' claims at issue may satisfy the three typicality prongs, this matter is distinguishable from Marcus in that Marcus dealt with claims regarding slightly differing products against a single defendant. Contrary to Plaintiffs' [*55] contention, Marcus did not hold that plaintiffs who did not purchase a product from a defendant may nevertheless sue that defendant based on their purchase of a different defendant's similar product.<sup>14</sup> *Marcus, 687 F.3d at 599.* Rather, this District has held that claims concerning products that a class-action plaintiff neither purchased nor used cannot stand.<sup>15</sup> See *Lieberson v. Johnson & Johnson Consumer Cos., Inc., 865 F. Supp. 2d 529, 537 \(D.N.J. 2011\)* (holding that "[b]ecause Plaintiff has not alleged that she purchased or used two of the four . . . products at issue here, Plaintiff cannot establish an injury-in-fact with regard to those products); see also Green v. Green Mountain Coffee Roasters, Inc., 279 F.R.D. 275, 280 (D.N.J. 2011) (holding that plaintiffs did not have standing to pursue claims concerning products that they "neither purchased nor used"). As Plaintiffs have asserted multiple claims absent allegations of such products being purchased or used in such jurisdictions, such claims cannot withstand this Motion to Dismiss.

Accordingly, Defendants' Motion to Dismiss Plaintiffs' Amended Complaint is GRANTED WITHOUT PREJUDICE as to Counts Thirteen, Twenty-Seven, Twenty-Nine, Thirty, Thirty-Four, Thirty-Five, Thirty-Eight, Forty-Seven, and Fifty-One.

iii. Statutory Prohibitions on Consumer Class Actions

<sup>13</sup> Those counts are, as to Novo: Count Thirteen (Colorado); County Thirty (Massachusetts); Count Thirty-Five (Missouri); and Count Thirty-Eight (Nevada). As to Sanofi, the counts include: Count Twenty-Seven (Louisiana); County Twenty-Nine (Maryland); Count Thirty-Four (Mississippi); Count Forty-Seven (Pennsylvania); and Count Fifty-One (Tennessee).

<sup>14</sup> Similarly, this Court is unpersuaded by Plaintiffs' argument that *Riaubia v. Hyundai Motor Am., No. 16-5150, 2017 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 133846, 2017 WL 3602520 \(Aug. 22, 2017\)* supports its position. Like Marcus, Riaubia deals with "absent [class] members [who] were allegedly injured by the same non-conforming feature of different models of the same product, manufactured or distributed by the same defendants based on uniform representations." [*2017 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 133846, \[WL\] at \*2*](#) (emphasis added).

<sup>15</sup> This Court notes that, while many decisions from this District have held that claims concerning products that a plaintiff has not alleged to have used nor purchased cannot stand, "[c]ourts in this district are divided on this issue." *Neuss v. Rubi Rose, LLC, No. 16-2339, 2017 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 83444, 2017 WL 2367056, at \*5 \(D.N.J. May 31, 2017\)*. In Neuss, this District declined to grant a defendant's motion to dismiss claims against one defendant from plaintiffs who had neither purchased nor used their product, on the basis that (1) the class-action plaintiffs had the same basis for each defect among the different products, (2) the products were closely related, and (3) all of the claims were against only two defendants. Id. Unlike in this matter, however, one of the defendants in Neuss was a subsidiary and agent of the other. [*2017 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 83444, \[WL\] at \*2.*](#)

Defendants contend [*56] that eight of the Plaintiffs' claims must be dismissed due to state law statutory prohibitions on consumer class actions in each respective state.<sup>16</sup> (ECF No. 158-2 at 13.) Defendants assert that the Supreme Court's holding in Shady Grove Orthopedic Assocs., P.A. v. Allstate Ins. Co, 559 U.S. 393, 130 S. Ct. 1431, 176 L. Ed. 2d 311 (2010) compels this Court to apply the class-action bar incorporated in state consumer protection laws. (ECF No. 158-2 at 14.) Plaintiffs argue that the Third Circuit's holding in Knepper v. Rite Aid Corp., 675 F.3d 249 (3d Cir. 2012) interprets Shady Grove to preclude applying state class-action bars in the consumer protection context. (ECF No. 181 at 68.)

Shady Grove held that the certification of a class-action under Rule 23 alleging violations of New York law did not violate the Rules Enabling Act, even though New York state law prohibited such a suit from proceeding as a class action. 559 U.S. at 406-09. Knepper noted "[u]nder the plurality's view [in Shady Grove], any supposed substantive purpose underlying § 216(b) [the FLSA's provision barring opt-out classes] is irrelevant, and we need only determine whether Rule 23 'really regulates procedure,' which the Court has already concluded it does." 675 F.3d at 265. As such, any supposed, substantive purpose of a state law bar to class-actions is irrelevant, because Rule 23 "really regulates procedure." Id. Therefore, Defendants' [*57] contention lacks merit.

Accordingly, Defendants' Motion to Dismiss Plaintiffs' Amended Complaint is DENIED as to Counts Seven, Eighteen, Twenty-Six, Twenty-Seven, Thirty-Four, Thirty-Six, Forty-Nine, and Fifty-One.<sup>17</sup>

iv. Privity

Defendants assert that six of Plaintiffs' claims must be dismissed as the consumer protection laws of such states require privity, which Plaintiffs have failed to plead.<sup>18</sup> (ECF No. 158-2 at 14-15.) Plaintiffs concede that Kentucky law requires privity — thereby agreeing that their claim under Kentucky law should be dismissed — but that no other state law as alleged by Defendant requires privity to maintain a consumer fraud action. (ECF No. 181 at 69-70.)

In support of its contention that privity is required under the Arizona Consumer Fraud Act, Ariz. Rev. Stat. § 44-1522, et seq. ("ACFA"), Defendants cite Sutter Home Winery, Inc. v. Vintage Selections, Ltd., 971 F.2d 401 (9th Cir. 1992). The court in Sutter held that the ACFA has a "clear intent to protect unwary buyers from unscrupulous sellers" and that where a plaintiff is "not a buyer, nor [a] . . . target of deceptive advertising" it cannot maintain an action under the ACFA. Id. at 407. Plaintiffs have asserted that they are both "buyers," although not directly from Defendants, and the target of deceptive pricing. As Arizona jurisprudence [*58] does not explicitly require direct privity of contract between the plaintiff and defendant to maintain a suit under the ACFA, Plaintiffs' Arizona state law claim survives.

In support of its contention that privity is required under the Idaho Consumer Protection Act, I.C. § 48-601, et seq. ("ICPA"), Defendants cite Taylor v. McNichols, 149 Idaho 826, 243 P.3d 642 (Idaho 2010). Taylor held that in order to have standing under the ICPA, "the aggrieved party must have been in a contractual relationship with the party alleged to have acted unfairly or deceptively." Id. at 662; see also Haskin v. Glass, 102 Idaho 785, 640 P.2d 1186, 1189 (Idaho Ct. App. 1982) (holding "that a claim under the ICPA must be based upon a contract"). However, while a contractual relationship is necessary, courts have not determined whether direct privity is required to confer standing under the ICPA. See In re Chrysler-Dodge-Jeep Ecodiesel Mktg., Sales Practices, & Prods. Liab. Litig., 295 F. Supp. 3d 927, 1021-22 (N.D. Cal. 2018) (holding that "[a]rguably, [the ICPA] and Haskin simply reflect that a plaintiff's claim must ultimately be founded on a contract; they do not necessarily require that the contract must be one entered into by the plaintiff and defendant directly"); see also *Johnson v. Ford Motor Co., 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 172348, 2015 WL 7571841, at *10 (S.D. W.Va. Nov. 24, 2015)* (rejecting the assertion that an automobile purchaser could not sue Ford Motor Company under the ICPA because she was not a direct purchaser). Accordingly, as direct privity is not required under Idaho law, Plaintiffs' [*59] failure to plead such is not fatal to its action.

<sup>17</sup> Defendants' motion to dismiss each count herein is only denied as to the extent that such counts may be dismissed on other grounds.

Finally, Defendants assert that the Vermont Consumer Fraud Act, Vt. Stat. Ann. Tit. 9, § 2451, et seq. ("VCFA") requires privity of contract. (ECF No. 158-2 at 15.) In support of this contention, Defendants cite Otis-Wisher v. Medtronic, Inc., 616 F. App'x 433, 435 (2d Cir. 2015), which upheld the dismissal of a claim under the VCFA finding that the plaintiff was not a "consumer" because she was merely prescribed the device by her doctor. Otis-Wisher is inapplicable to this matter, as Plaintiffs undoubtedly qualify as consumers. On the contrary, in Elkins v. Microsoft Corp., 174 Vt. 328, 817 A.2d 9, 20 (Vt. 2002), the Vermont Supreme Court held that "consumers can generally sue under [the VCFA] even though they are indirect purchasers of a good or service from the defendant." Thus, direct privity of contract is not required under Vermont law and Plaintiffs may assert its claim under the VCFA.

Accordingly, Defendants' Motion to Dismiss Plaintiffs' Amended Complaint is GRANTED WITHOUT PREJUDICE as to Count Twenty-Six and DENIED as to Counts Nine, Twenty-One, and Twenty-Four.<sup>19</sup>

v. Reliance

Defendants assert that six of Plaintiffs' claims must be dismissed as Plaintiffs failed to adequately plead reliance.<sup>20</sup> (ECF No. 158-2 at 15-16.) These six counts all allege violations of state consumer fraud laws in which reliance [*60] is a necessary element. On the contrary to Defendants' contention, Plaintiffs adequately pled reliance upon Defendants' alleged misrepresentations, as well as proximate causation to their damages stemming therefrom. (ECF No. 131 ¶¶ 3, 206, 259, 335.) Accordingly, Defendants' Motion to Dismiss Plaintiffs' Amended Complaint is DENIED as to Counts Ten, Twelve, Eighteen, Thirty-One, Thirty-Eight, and Forty-Seven.<sup>21</sup>

vi. Allegations of Wrongdoing

Defendants assert that five of Plaintiffs' claims must be dismissed as Plaintiffs failed to adequately plead wrongdoing within the state, as required by each respective state consumer fraud law.<sup>22</sup> (ECF No. 158-2 at 16-17.) Plaintiffs contend that Defendants argument is erroneous, as each claim concerns consumers who reside in and purchased insulin in the particular state whose laws they invoke. (ECF No. 181 at 73.) The Court agrees with Plaintiffs.

<sup>19</sup> This Court did not provide an analysis for its decision to grant Defendants' motion to dismiss Count Twenty-Six, pleading a violation of the Kentucky Consumer Protection Act, as Plaintiff conceded that such Act requires direct privity of contract, which its Complaint failed to allege. (ECF No. 181 at 69.) Additionally, this Court also did not provide an analysis of Defendants' privity of contract argument as to Count Sixteen, alleging a violation of the Washington D.C. Consumer Protection Procedures Act, or Count Thirty, alleging a violation of the Massachusetts General Law Chapter 93(A), as both counts were previously dismissed without prejudice for lack of standing.

<sup>21</sup> Defendants' motion to dismiss each count herein is only denied as to the extent that such counts may be dismissed on other grounds.

The Illinois Consumer Fraud and Deceptive Practices Act, 815 Ill. Comp. Stat. § 505, et seq. ("ICFA") "applies only to fraudulent transactions that take place 'primarily and substantially' inside Illinois." Barbara's Sales, Inc. v. Intel Corp., 227 Ill. 2d 45, 879 N.E.2d 910, 921, 316 Ill. Dec. 522 \(Ill. 2007\) (quoting Avery v. State Farm Mut. Auto Ins. Co., 216 Ill. 2d 100, 835 N.E.2d 801, 852, 296 Ill. Dec. 448 \(Ill. 2005\)). It is evident that the purchase of insulin by a plaintiff within Illinois would satisfy this requirement, and Plaintiffs' Complaint [*61] pled such. Therefore, Plaintiffs adequately pled wrongdoing under Illinois law.

The New Hampshire Consumer Protection Act, N.H. Rev. Stat. § 358-A:1, et seq. ("NHCPA") is construed "to cover a defendant's extra-territorial acts if those acts affect travel or commerce within the state." Harbour Capital Corp. v. Allied Capital Corp., 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 63041, 2009 WL 2185449, at \*8-9 \(D.N.H. July 22, 2009\). Defendants may not "injure trade or commerce in New Hampshire but escape liability under [the NHCPA] by remaining outside the state." Id. As Plaintiffs have pled extra-territorial acts affecting commerce within New Hampshire, they have sufficiently pled wrongdoing under New Hampshire law.

New York courts hold that in order to allege injury under the New York General Business Law §§ 349-350, the plaintiff must allege that "the transaction in which the consumer is deceived" occurred in New York. Goshen v. Mut. Life Ins. Co. of New York, 98 N.Y.2d 314, 774 N.E.2d 1190, 1195, 746 N.Y.S.2d 858 \(N.Y. 2002\). In Goshen, the plaintiff "purchased his policy and paid his premiums in Florida, through a Florida insurance agent," and the Court found that "for the purposes of section 349, any deception took place in Florida, not in New York." Id. at 1196. On the contrary, Plaintiffs allege that the New York class members purchased the insulin analog in New York, and thus that the deception occurred in New York. Accordingly, Plaintiffs have adequately alleged wrongdoing in New York.

Finally, this Court is satisfied that [*62] Plaintiffs have adequately pled wrongdoing in both Tennessee and Wisconsin so as to withstand Defendants' Motion to Dismiss. The Tennessee Consumer Protection Act, Tenn. Code Ann. § 47-18-101, et seq. ("TCPA") is to "be liberally construed" to "protect consumers and legitimate business enterprises from those who engage in unfair or deceptive acts or practices in the conduct of any trade or commerce in part or wholly within the state." Id. at § 47-18-102\(2\). Tennessee courts allow plaintiffs discovery "in order to tie its TCPA claims to specific transactions occurring in Tennessee." Encore Med., L.P. v. Jay Kennedy, D.C., 2013 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 31028, 2013 WL 839838, at \*32 \(W.D. Pa. Mar. 6, 2013\). Similarly, the Wisconsin Supreme Court has held that the purpose of the Wisconsin Deceptive Trade Practices Act, Wis. Stat. § 110.18 ("DTPA") "includes protecting Wisconsin residents from untrue, deceptive, or misleading representation made to induce action." K&S Tool & Die Corp. v. Perfection Mach. Sales, Inc., 2007 WI 70, 301 Wis. 2d 109, 732 N.W.2d 792, 802 \(Wis. 2007\). This necessarily includes transactions that took place in Wisconsin, see, e.g., In re GM LLC Ignition Switch Litig., 257 F. Supp. 3d 372, 446-60 \(S.D.N.Y. 2017\), which the Complaint pleads. As such, Plaintiffs have sufficiently pled factual allegations asserting wrongdoing in Tennessee and Wisconsin so as to withstand Defendants' Motion to Dismiss.

Accordingly, Defendants' Motion to Dismiss Plaintiffs' Amended Complaint is DENIED as to Counts Twenty-Two, Thirty-Nine, Forty-One, and Fifty-One. [*63]

vii. Procedural Requirements

Finally, Defendants contend that Plaintiffs' claims under Mississippi law, Count Thirty-Four, and Ohio law, Count Forty-Four, must be dismissed because they fail to meet procedural requirements under respective state laws. (ECF No. 158-2 at 17-18.) As this Court has determined that Plaintiffs lack standing to bring its Mississippi state claim, Count Thirty-Four will not be analyzed again herein.

Defendants assert that this Court must dismiss Plaintiffs' claim pursuant to the Ohio Consumer Sales Practice Act, Ohio Rev. Code Ann. § 1345.01, et seq. ("OCSPA") because the statute's section on remedies prohibits a plaintiff from bringing a class action "unless the defendant has notice that conduct substantially similar to its alleged conduct is deceptive or unconscionable as declared by either (1) a rule adopted by the Ohio Attorney General, or (2) an Ohio state court holding." Chapman v. Tristar Prods., Inc., 2016 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 147474, 2016 WL 6216135, at \*4 \(N.D. Ohio Oct. 25, 2016\). "Ohio courts are to construe the OCSPA liberally in favor of consumers."

Id. Courts interpreting Ohio law have held that the notice argument "is not appropriate at the moment-to-dismiss stage; it belongs at the class certification or summary judgment stages." Id. at 4 (citing In re Whirlpool Corp. Front-Loading Washer Prods. Liab. Litig., 684 F. Supp. 2d 942, 948 (N.D. Ohio 2009)). As such, there are no grounds to dismiss Plaintiffs' [*64] claims at Ohio law at this juncture. Accordingly, Defendants' Motion to Dismiss Plaintiffs' Amended Complaint is DENIED as to Count Forty-Four.

IV. CONCLUSION

For the reasons set forth above, Defendants' Motion to Dismiss is GRANTED IN PART and DENIED IN PART as set forth herein and in the accompanying order.

ORDER GRANTING PLAINTIFF'S MOTION FOR PARTIAL JUDGMENT ON THE PLEADINGS

This matter comes before the Court on Plaintiff the State of Washington's ("the State") motion for partial judgment on the pleadings as to the weakened competitor defense. Dkt. 153. The Court has considered the pleadings filed in support of and in opposition to the motion and the remainder of the file and hereby grants the motion for the reasons stated herein.

I. PROCEDURAL HISTORY

On August 31, 2017, the State filed a complaint against Franciscan Health System, Franciscan Medical Group (collectively "Franciscan"), The Doctors Clinic ("TDC"), and Westsound Orthopaedics. Dkt. 1. Relevant to the instant motion, the State alleged that a series of agreements between Franciscan and TDC violated section 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1. Dkt. 1, ¶¶ 67-68. The State alleged these agreements represented a per se violation of section 1, and in the alternative, violated section 1 under the rule of reason. Id. ¶¶ 70-74. On March 26, 2018, TDC and Franciscan answered, asserting multiple affirmative defenses. Dkts. 88, 89. Also relevant to the instant motion, on July 24, 2018, the Court granted in part the State's [*3] motion to strike certain affirmative defenses from TDC and Franciscan's answers. Dkts. 105, 132.

In its July 24th Order, the Court struck the first two sentences of TDC and Franciscan's tenth affirmative defense, which reads:

TDC was as of the date of the transaction with CHI Franciscan a failing company. But for the transaction, TDC would have gone out of business, and its productive assets (including its physicians) would have left the market. Alternatively, even if TDC, or some of its physicians, could have stayed in the market without the transaction, its competitive significance would have been far less than it was before the transactions.

Dkt. 132 at 17 (citing Dkt. 89 at 48). The first two sentences pertain to the affirmative "failing-company defense," which the State argued and the Court agreed is not available for per se claims under section 1 of the Sherman Act. Dkt. 132 at 17. The Court reasoned that the failing-company defense "has been applied successfully only in the context" of section 7 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 18. Id. at 18. The Court distinguished section 1 of the Sherman Act which "examines the existence of an 'unreasonable restraint on trade' under either the rule of reason or per se test" from "the substantial [*4] lessening of competition presented under the Clayton Act." Id. The Court further reasoned that "[a]n alleged scheme of horizontal price-fixing, as alleged by the State, falls into the narrow category of arrangements that are per se illegal—they are not evaluated in terms of their purpose, aim or effect in the elimination of so-called competitive evils." Id. (quoting United States v. Socony-Vacuum Oil Co., 310 U.S. 150, 228, 60 S. Ct. 811, 84 L. Ed. 1129 \(1940\)). The Court declined to consider the State's motion to strike the second half of the tenth affirmative defense, the "weakened competitor" defense, because the State raised relevant arguments for the first time in reply. Dkt. 132 at 19. However, the Court commented "[a]t first blush, it seems apparent that such a defense is irrelevant in this case for the same reason as the failing-company defense." Id.

On November 29, 2018, the State moved for partial judgment on the pleadings as to the TDC and Franciscan's weakened competitor defense. Dkt. 153. On December 10, 2018, TDC and Franciscan responded. Dkt. 159. On December 14, 2018, the State replied. Dkt. 160.

II. FACTUAL BACKGROUND

In early September 2016, Franciscan and TDC entered into a series of agreements. The State claims that Franciscan and TDC are separate economic [*5] entities which entered into an agreement to jointly negotiate the prices for the services they provide to the public. The State asserts that these agreements establish a horizontal price-fixing agreement that is per se illegal or otherwise constitutes an unreasonable restraint of trade in violation of section 1 of the Sherman Act.

III. DISCUSSION

A. Motion for Judgment on the Pleadings

The State has moved for judgment on the pleadings on the weakened competitor affirmative defense advanced by TDC and Franciscan. "After the pleadings are closed—but early enough not to delay trial—a party may move for judgment on the pleadings." Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(c\). The pleadings are closed for purposes of Rule 12\(c\) once a complaint and answer have been filed. Doe v. United States, 419 F.3d 1058, 1061 \(9th Cir. 2005\). While an affirmative defense "will usually bar judgment on the pleadings" if it raises issue of fact, Gen. Conference Corp. of Seventh-Day Adventists v. Seventh-Day Adventist Congregational Church, 887 F.2d 228, 230 \(9th Cir. 1989\), courts will grant a Rule 12\(c\) dismissal if "the movant clearly establishes that no material issue of fact remains to be resolved and that he is entitled to judgment as a matter of law," Doleman v. Meiji Mut. Life Ins. Co., 727 F.2d 1480, 1482 \(9th Cir. 1984\) (quoting Charles A. Wright & Arthur R. Miller, Federal Practice and Procedure § 1368 (1st ed. 1969)).

Here, TDC and Franciscan present two points of opposition to the State's motion: (1) they believe that in a rule [*6] of reason analysis, they should be able to affirmatively defend on the basis that TDC was a weakened competitor, and (2) they believe the weakened competitor defense should remain available in the event the State decides to allege their conduct constituted a merger violating section 1 of the Sherman Act. Dkt. 159. The Court will address the second argument first.

1. Merger

"[T]he 1950 amendment of Clayton Act § 7 largely superseded the Sherman Act's role" in prosecution and regulation of anticompetitive mergers. Phillip E. Areeda & Herbert E. Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law ¶ 902 (4th ed. 2018). The State's complaint alleges a horizontal agreement to restrain trade in violation of section 1 of the Sherman Act. Dkt. 1. It does not allege a merger in violation of section 1. Id. While TDC and Franciscan are likely correct that "courts apply the same Section 7 standard and analysis to review merger claims brought under Section 1," Dkt. 159 at 9 (citing United States v. Rockford Mem. Corp., 898 F.3d 1278, 1281-83 \(7th Cir.\), cert. denied, 498 U.S. 920, 111 S. Ct. 295, 112 L. Ed. 2d 249 (1990)), if the State wished to allege a merger violation, it would have to amend its complaint. In the event that the Court granted a motion by the State to amend to include a merger theory, TDC and Franciscan could include any relevant affirmative defenses in their answer under Fed. R. Civ. P. 15\(a\)\(3\).

To [*7] the extent that TDC and Franciscan argue the State's experts are evaluating the case using analytical concepts inappropriate for a restraint of trade claim under section 1, that argument is beyond the scope of the instant motion, and may be addressed in a motion to exclude.

2. The TDC Weakened Competitor Defense

The parties agree that the weakened competitor defense would not apply to a per se violation of section 1. Dkt. 160 at 1 (quoting Dkt. 159 at 7) ("TDC and Franciscan admit that a 'weakened competitor defense does not apply to a per se claim because no justifications are permitted.'"). Conduct that is not a per se violation of section 1 may be analyzed in depth under the rule of reason or under the abbreviated "quick look" analysis. Cal. Dental Ass'n v. F.T.C., 526 U.S. 756, 770-71, 119 S. Ct. 1604, 143 L. Ed. 2d 935 \(1999\). "[M]ost antitrust claims are analyzed under a 'rule of reason,' according to which the finder of fact must decide whether the questioned practice imposes an unreasonable restraint on competition, taking into account a variety of factors, including specific information about the relevant business, its condition before and after the restraint was imposed, and the restraint's history, nature, and effect." State Oil Co. v. Khan, 522 U.S. 3, 10, 118 S. Ct. 275, 139 L. Ed. 2d 199 \(1997\). In the rule of reason's burden-shifting analysis:

- (1) The plaintiff bears [*8] the initial burden of showing that the restraint produces significant anticompetitive effects within a relevant market. (2) If the plaintiff meets this burden, the defendant must come forward with evidence of the restraint's procompetitive effects. (3) The plaintiff must then show that any legitimate objectives can be achieved in a substantially less restrictive manner.

O'Bannon v. Nat'l Collegiate Athletic Ass'n, 802 F.3d 1049, 1069-70 (9th Cir. 2015) (quoting Tanaka v. Univ. of S. Cal., 252 F.3d 1059, 1063 (9th Cir. 2001)).

The analysis weighs "whether the anticompetitive aspects of the challenged practice outweigh its procompetitive effects," Paladin Assocs., Inc. v. Montana Power Co., 328 F.3d 1145, 1156 (9th Cir. 2003), but "does not support a defense based on the assumption that competition itself is unreasonable," Nat'l Soc'y of Prof. Eng'rs. v. United States, 435 U.S. 679, 696, 98 S. Ct. 1355, 55 L. Ed. 2d 637 (1978) ("Professional Engineers").

Here, the Court is not asked to decide which analysis may ultimately be appropriate in this case. Rather, the Court must resolve whether, if the agreements between TDC and Franciscan are judged under the rule of reason, an affirmative weakened competitor defense would be legally relevant.

Affirmative defenses offer legal reasons why, accepting the claims as true, the defendant is not liable. In re Wash. Mut., Inc., Sec., Derivative & ERISA Litigation, No. 08-md-1919MJP, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 33531, 2011 WL 1158387, at *1 (W.D. Wash. Mar. 25, 2011). A defense which seeks to negate an element of a plaintiff's claim or to "demonstrate that [*9] plaintiff has not met its burden of proof" is not an affirmative defense. Zivkovic v. S. Cal. Edison Co., 302 F.3d 1080, 1088 (9th Cir. 2002).

TDC and Franciscan's argument that they may present information about the weakened competitor defense to aid the Court's "understanding of the alleged conduct's impact on competition under the rule of reason," Dkt. 159 at 10, would not constitute an affirmative defense. The Court agrees with TDC and Franciscan that they may put forward any relevant evidence as part of their burden to show procompetitive effects justifying otherwise anticompetitive conduct if the case is judged under the rule of reason.

However, the Court agrees with the State that TDC and Franciscan have failed to cite any authority contradicting the proposition set out in the Court's July 24th Order, that restraint of trade claims under the Sherman Act are not defeated by affirmative defenses based on the competitive losses of a market participant. Dkt. 132 at 17; Dkt. 160 at 5 ("TDC and Franciscan fail to cite to a single case where a court has applied the weakened competitor defense . . . as an affirmative defense to a restraint of trade claim under the Sherman Act."). Moreover, TDC and Franciscan have not identified the elements of the defense, [*10] or explained why this defense should be available when the Court has held the apparently similar failing-company defense is inapplicable to section 1 claims. Dkt. 132.

TDC and Franciscan cite four cases in support of the section in their response titled "A Weakened Competitor Defense Is Allowed Under the Rule of Reason." Dkt. 159 at 10-12 (citing Bd. of Trade of City of Chi. v. United States, 246 U.S. 231, 238, 38 S. Ct. 242, 62 L. Ed. 683 (1918); United States v. General Dynamics Corp., 415 U.S. 486, 498, 94 S. Ct. 1186, 39 L. Ed. 2d 530 (1974); Professional Engineers, 435 U.S. at 692; O'Bannon, 802 F.3d at 1070). However, all arguments in that section assert that the weak financial condition of TDC is relevant to analysis under the rule of reason, not that a discrete weakened competitor affirmative defense exists or applies to claims under section 1. See, e.g., Dkt. 159 at 10 (citing O'Bannon, 802 F.3d at 1070) ("The rule of reason focuses on the net effect of the challenged conduct on the relevant market."). None of the cited authorities involve a court's application of an affirmative weakened-competitor defense to a section 1 restraint of trade case, or even discuss how such a defense would be established.

The State relies on Freeman v. San Diego Ass'n of Realtors, 322 F.3d 1133, 1150-54 (9th Cir. 2003) in foreclosing the availability of an affirmative weakened competitor defense even under the rule of reason. Dkt. 153 at 8. While TDC and Franciscan distinguish Freeman as "a per se case not a rule of reason one," Dkt. 159 at 11, the Circuit's reasoning thoroughly analyzes [*11] the defendant's assertion that the rule of reason should apply to the case in place of per se analysis, in order to make room for various procompetitive justifications the defendant presented. Freeman, 322 F.3d at 1150-54. While the Circuit does not explicitly discuss an affirmative weakened competitor defense, it explained:

[i]t does not matter that Fallbrook and Valley Center would have operated at a loss in a competitive environment. Their precarious financial situation may have explained their intransigence, but it does not transform it into a viable defense. If there is any argument the Sherman Act indisputably forecloses, it is that price fixing is necessary to save companies from losses they would suffer in a competitive market.

Id. at 1152 n.24 (emphasis added). The State is correct that this language leaves no opening for an affirmative defense based on competitive weakness in a section 1 restraint of trade claim.

In sum, if the State prosecutes its claim under the rule of reason, TDC and Franciscan may present evidence relevant to carrying their burden under the rule's burden-shifting framework. However, no relief could be granted under an affirmative weakened competitor defense to a section 1 restraint of trade claim. Because no relief [*12] would be available, the State is entitled to judgment on the pleadings.

IV. ORDER

Therefore, it is hereby ORDERED that the State's motion for judgment on the pleadings as to the TDC weakened competitor defense, Dkt. 135, is GRANTED.

Dated this 19th day of February, 2019.

Prior History: Connecticut Fine Wine and Spirits, d/b/a Total Wine & More ("Total Wine"), challenged certain provisions of Connecticut's Liquor Control Act and related regulations. Total Wine alleged that these provisions were preempted by the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1 [**1]. The United States District Court for the District of Connecticut, Janet Hall, J., granted the defendants' motion to dismiss the complaint, holding, inter alia, that the post-and-hold provisions and the minimum-retail-price provisions of the Connecticut Liquor Control Act were hybrid restraints on trade, but that Total Wine failed to plead facts that plausibly support the conclusion that those provisions constitute per se violations of, and therefore were preempted by, the Sherman Act. The District Court also held that Total Wine did not plausibly allege that the price discrimination provision was a hybrid restraint on trade; therefore, that provision imposes a unilateral restraint on trade that falls outside the scope of the Sherman Act. We agree with the District Court that the post-and-hold, minimum-retail-price, and price-discrimination provisions are not preempted by the Sherman Act. We therefore AFFIRM.

HN1 [] Sherman Act, Scope

The preemption inquiry under 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 requires courts to apply principles similar to those employed in considering whether any state statute is preempted by a federal statute pursuant to the Supremacy Clause. As in the typical preemption case, the inquiry is whether there exists an irreconcilable conflict between the federal and state regulatory schemes. The existence of hypothetical or potential conflict is insufficient to warrant the preemption of the state statute. A state regulatory scheme is not preempted by the federal antitrust laws simply because in a hypothetical situation a private party's compliance with the statute might cause him to violate the antitrust laws. A state statute is not preempted by the federal antitrust laws simply because the state scheme might have an anticompetitive effect.

HN2 [] Sherman Act, Scope

A party may successfully enjoin the enforcement of a state statute only if the statute on its face irreconcilably conflicts with federal antitrust policy. In other words, for a state statute to be preempted by 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, the statute must bring about conduct that would require per se condemnation under § 1. A state statute, when considered in the abstract, may be condemned under the antitrust laws only if it mandates or authorizes conduct that necessarily constitutes a violation of the antitrust laws in all cases, or if it places irresistible pressure on a private party to violate the antitrust laws in order to comply with the statute. Such condemnation will follow under § 1 of the Sherman Act when the conduct contemplated by the statute is in all cases a per se violation. If the activity addressed by the statute does not fall into that category, and therefore must be analyzed under the rule of reason, the statute cannot be condemned in the abstract. Analysis under the rule of reason requires an examination of the circumstances underlying a particular economic practice, and therefore does not lend itself to a conclusion that a statute is facially inconsistent with federal antitrust laws.

A restraint imposed unilaterally by government does not become concerted-action within the meaning of the 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 of the Sherman Act simply because it has a coercive effect upon parties who must obey the law. The ordinary relationship between the government and those who must obey its regulatory commands whether they wish to or not is not enough to establish a conspiracy.

HN11 [+] Vertical Restraints, Resale Price Maintenance

Connecticut's provisions prohibiting price discrimination impose a unilateral restraint. They leave each wholesaler at liberty to choose the price it will charge all retailers for a product while prohibiting each from charging different prices to different retailers. Although limiting a wholesaler's range of motion, these provisions do not grant any private actor a degree of regulatory control over competition. Rather, it is a restraint imposed by government to the exclusion of private control. Such a restraint does not implicate the concerns of concerted activity animating 15 U.S.C.S. § 1.

HN12 [blue icon] Sherman Act, Scope

The price restraint worked by Conn. Gen. Stat. § 30-68k is purely vertical in operation. It limits the ability of a wholesaler that has already charged one retailer a given price to charge another retailer a different price. Therefore, even if this provision could be viewed as a hybrid, rather than a unilateral, price-fixing provision, after Leegin Creative Leather Prods., Inc. v. PSKS, Inc., 551 U.S. 877 \(2007\), it would no longer implicate a category of conduct that remains per se unlawful. While its impact may be to harmonize prices at a retail level of beverages sold by a common wholesaler, the provision does not mandate, or even incent, collaboration among horizontal competitors. For this separate reason, it is not preempted by 15 U.S.C.S. § 1.

Given the participation that a post-and-hold law requires of each wholesaler in connection with the posting component, Connecticut's law, viewed as a whole, qualifies as hybrid under judicial precedent. But the United States Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit doubts that such a law mandates or authorizes concerted action among the wholesalers subject to it. Particularly as to the hold component of the law, Connecticut's prohibition on altering prices for a 30-day period is a purely negative restraint. It does not call for any private action, let alone concerted action.

HN15 [Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade]

15 U.S.C.S. § 1 of the Sherman Act does not prohibit all unreasonable restraints of trade. It prohibits only restraints effected by a contract, combination, or conspiracy. Therefore, in § 1 cases, the crucial question is whether the challenged anticompetitive conduct stems from independent decision or from an agreement. Even conscious parallel acts based on competitors' mutual recognition of shared economic interests are not in themselves unlawful. In other words, under § 1, that conscious parallel conduct can create an equally uncompetitive market to parallel conduct achieved by agreement is of no moment. The gravamen of § 1 is an agreement among competitors.

HN16 [Vertical Restraints, Resale Price Maintenance]

Under a post-and-hold law, there is a natural explanation, independent of any agreement or coordination among liquor wholesalers, for competitors to arrive at common monthly product prices. Such a law authorizes a wholesaler, during the four days after initial posting, to match a competitor's lower price, with such prices then held for a month. Under these circumstances, the law itself invites and facilitates conscious parallelism in pricing. It puts in public view each competing wholesaler's price quotes. And it authorizes, but it does not oblige, wholesalers during a defined window unilaterally to match (or parallel) a competitor's lower price as the held price for the coming month. Nothing about this arrangement requires, anticipates, or incents communication or collaboration among the competing wholesalers. Quite the contrary: A post-and-hold law like Connecticut's leaves a wholesaler little reason to make contact with a competitor. The separate, unilateral acts by each wholesaler of posting and matching instead are what gives rise to any synchronicity of pricing.

[*162] PAUL A. ENGELMAYER, District Judge:

Connecticut Fine Wine and Spirits, d/b/a Total Wine & More ("Total Wine") appeals from a judgment of the United States District Court for the District of Connecticut (Janet C. Hall, District Judge) dismissing its complaint against the Connecticut Department of Consumer Protection ("DCP") and the Director of the Connecticut Division of Liquor Control ("DLC"). Total Wine claimed that certain statutory and regulatory provisions that govern the distribution and sale of alcoholic beverages in Connecticut, and which often result in common retail-level pricing across the state for particular such beverages, are preempted by federal antitrust law. For the reasons that follow, we hold that these laws are not preempted. We therefore affirm.

BACKGROUND

A. Connecticut's Laws Regarding Alcohol Distribution and Sale

Like many other states, Connecticut heavily regulates the distribution and sale of alcoholic beverages within its borders. The state's Liquor Control [*4] Act prohibits the sale of alcoholic beverages in a manner that fails to comply with that statute. See Conn. Gen. Stat. § 30-74\(a\).

At issue here are three sets of provisions under Connecticut statutes and regulations that bear on the price at which alcoholic beverages may lawfully be sold: "post-and-hold" provisions; minimum retail pricing provisions; and provisions prohibiting price discrimination and volume discounts.<sup>1</sup> These, in tandem, establish the method by which alcoholic beverage prices are set by the manufacturer, the wholesaler, and the retailer.

The three sets of provisions at issue are as follows:

Post-and-hold provisions: Connecticut's "post and hold" provisions require state-licensed manufacturers, wholesalers, and "out-of-state permittees" (together, "wholesalers") to post a "bottle price" and a "case price" each month with the DCP for each alcoholic product that the wholesaler intends to sell during the following month. (For beer, the wholesaler must post a "can price.") Posted prices are then made available to industry participants. During the four days after the posting of the prices, wholesalers may "amend" their posted prices to "match" competitors' lower prices—specifically, "to meet a lower [*5] price posted by another wholesaler with respect to alcoholic liquor bearing the same brand or trade name." Those amended prices, however, may not be "lower than those [prices] being met." Wholesalers are obligated to "hold" their prices at the posted price (amended or not) for a month. These post-and-hold provisions—variations of which are found in many states—are the heart of the Connecticut regulatory regime that Total Wine challenges.<sup>2</sup>

[*163] Minimum-retail-price provisions: Connecticut's minimum-retail-price provisions require that retailers sell to customers at or above a statutorily defined "[c]ost." "Cost," however, is not defined as the retailer's actual cost. Instead, generally, a retailer's "[c]ost" for a given [*8] alcoholic beverage, is determined by adding the posted bottle price—as set by the wholesaler—and a markup for shipping and delivery. The post-and-hold provision, because it supplies the central component of the "[c]ost" at which the retailer may sell its product, thus largely dictates the price at which Connecticut retailers must sell their alcoholic products.<sup>3</sup>

For alcoholic liquor other than beer, each manufacturer, wholesaler and out-of-state shipper permittee shall post with the department, on a monthly basis, the bottle, can and case price of any brand of goods offered for sale in Connecticut, which price when so posted shall be the controlling price for such manufacturer, wholesaler or out-of-state permittee for the month following such posting. On and after July 1, 2005, for beer, each manufacturer, wholesaler and out-of-state shipper permittee shall post with the department, on a monthly basis, the bottle, can and case price, and the price per keg or barrel or fractional unit thereof for any brand of goods offered for sale in Connecticut which price when so posted shall be the controlling price for [*6] such brand of goods offered for sale in this state for the month following such posting. Such manufacturer, wholesaler and out-of-state shipper permittee may also post additional prices for such bottle, can, case, keg or barrel or fractional unit thereof for a specified portion of the following month which prices when so posted shall be the controlling prices for such bottle, can, case, keg or barrel or fractional unit thereof for such specified portion of the following month. Notice of all manufacturer, wholesaler and out-of-state shipper permittee prices shall be given to permittee purchasers by direct mail, Internet web site or advertising in a trade publication having circulation among the retail permittees except a wholesaler permittee may give such notice by hand delivery. Price postings with the department setting forth wholesale prices to retailers shall be available for inspection during regular business hours at the offices of the department by manufacturers and wholesalers until three o'clock p.m. of the first business day after the last day for posting prices. A manufacturer or wholesaler may amend such manufacturer's or wholesaler's posted price for any month to meet a [*7] lower price posted by another manufacturer or wholesaler with respect to alcoholic liquor bearing the same brand or trade name and of like age, vintage, quality and unit container size; provided that any such amended price posting shall be filed before three o'clock p.m. of the fourth business day after the last day for posting prices; and provided further such amended posting shall not set forth prices lower than those being met. Any manufacturer or wholesaler posting an amended price shall, at the time of posting, identify in writing the specific posting being met. On and after July 1, 2005, all wholesaler postings, other than for beer, for the following month shall be provided to retail permittees not later than the twenty-seventh day of the month prior to such posting. All wholesaler postings for beer shall be provided to retail permittees not later than the twentieth day of the month prior to such posting.

(a) For the purposes of this section:

(1) "Cost" for a retail permittee means (A) for alcoholic liquor other than beer, the posted bottle price from the wholesaler plus any charge for shipping or delivery to the retail permittee's place of business paid by the retail permittee in addition to the posted price, and (B) for beer, the lowest posted price during the month in which the retail permittee is selling plus any charge for shipping or delivery to the retail permittee's place of business paid by the retail permittee in addition to the price originally paid by the retail permittee;

(b) No retail permittee shall sell alcoholic liquor at a price below his or her cost.

Relatedly, Section 30-68m\(a\)\(3\) defines "bottle price" as:

[the] price per unit of the contents of any case of alcoholic liquor, other than beer [which] shall be arrived at by dividing the case price by the number of units [*9] or bottles making up such case price and adding to the quotient an amount that is not less than the following: A unit or bottle one-half pint or two hundred milliliters or less, two cents; a unit or bottle more than one-half pint or two hundred milliliters but not more than one pint or five hundred milliliters, four cents; and a unit or bottle greater than one pint or five hundred milliliters, eight cents.

[*164] Plaintiffs allege that wholesalers will occasionally lower their posted case prices for a given month, without lowering posted bottle prices, during what are called "off-post" months. Although retailers buy almost exclusively by the case, their prices remain fixed by the minimum-retail-price provisions, which are keyed to bottle prices.

Price discrimination/volume discounts: Finally, Connecticut bans volume discounts and other forms of price discrimination. Wholesalers must sell a given product to all retailers at the same price. Wholesalers may not offer discounts to retailers who are high-volume purchasers.<sup>4</sup>

While multiple policy [**11] interests have been asserted in support of these provisions, they (particularly the post-and-hold and minimum-retail-price provisions) commonly have been justified as means of guarding against escalating price wars among alcohol retailers that may lead to excessive consumption. See Slimp v. Dep't of Liquor Control, 239 Conn. 599, 687 A.2d 123, 129 (Conn. 1996) (noting "legislature's concern that artificial inducements to purchase liquor will result in increased consumption"); Eder Bros. v. Wine Merchants of Conn., Inc., 275 Conn. 363, 880 A.2d 138, 147 (Conn. 2005) (noting that "price wars among retail dealers" for liquor "may induce persons to purchase, and therefore consume, more liquor than they would if higher prices were maintained"); Eder Bros., 880 A.2d at 147-48 (noting that "the cutthroat competition" characteristic of price wars "is apt to induce the retailers to commit such infractions of the law as selling to minors and keeping open after hours in order to withstand the economic pressure"). These provisions (particularly the price-discrimination provision) have also been justified as guarding against favoritism within the liquor industry and protecting smaller retailers. See Slimp, 687 A.2d at 129. Unsurprisingly, countervailing arguments have also been made, including ones noting the anticompetitive nature of these price restraints.

B. Total Wine's Complaint

Total Wine is the largest retailer [**12] of wine and spirits in the United States. Headquartered in Bethesda, Maryland, Total [*165] Wine, with its affiliates, owns and operates wine and liquor stores in 21 states.

In December 2012, Total Wine opened a retail beverage store in Norwalk, Connecticut, its first such store in the state. Since then, Total Wine has opened additional stores, in Milford, Manchester, and West Hartford, Connecticut.

On August 23, 2016, Total Wine filed suit against Jonathan Harris, the Commissioner of the DCP, and John Suchy, Director of the DLC, in their official capacities.<sup>5</sup> Seeking injunctive and declaratory relief, it brought a facial challenge to the three sets of statutory and regulatory provisions reviewed above governing the distribution and sale of alcoholic beverages in Connecticut: (1) the post-and-hold provisions, (2) the minimum-retail-price provisions, and

No holder of any wholesaler's permit shall ship, transport or deliver within this state or any territory therein or sell or offer for sale, to a purchaser holding a permit for [**10] the sale of alcoholic liquor for on or off premises consumption, any brand of alcoholic liquor, including cordials, as defined in section 30-1, at a bottle, can or case price higher than the lowest price at which such item is then being sold or offered for sale or shipped, transported or delivered by such wholesaler to any other such purchaser to which the wholesaler sells, offers for sale, ships, transports or delivers that brand of alcoholic liquor within this state.

Similarly, Section 30-63(b) of the Connecticut General Statutes provides:

No manufacturer, wholesaler or out-of-state shipper permittee shall discriminate in any manner in price discounts between one permittee and another on sales or purchases of alcoholic liquors bearing the same brand or trade name and of like age, size and quality, nor shall such manufacturer, wholesaler or out-of-state shipper permittee allow in any form any discount, rebate, free goods, allowance or other inducement for the purpose of making sales or purchases. Nothing in this subsection shall be construed to prohibit beer manufacturers, beer wholesalers or beer out-of-state shipper permittees from differentiating in the manner in which their products are packaged on the basis of on-site or off-site consumption.

(3) the price-discrimination and volume-discount-prohibition provisions. Total Wine alleged that these provisions bring about per se violations of § 1 of the Sherman Antitrust Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1, and so are preempted by that statute.

Total Wine's claim was that the Connecticut regulatory scheme eliminates incentives for alcoholic beverage wholesalers to compete [**13] on the basis of price and invites wholesalers to maintain prices "substantially above what fair and ordinary market forces would dictate." App. at 19, Compl. ¶ 16. Total Wine further claimed that Connecticut's regulations inhibit meaningful price competition at the retail level.

Specifically, Total Wine claimed, the regulations, in two ways, bring about prices that exceed those that a competitive market would produce.

First, it argued, the post-and-hold provisions—and the opportunity they give wholesalers to match a lower price during the forthcoming month for a given product with no risk of sparking a price war—reduce any wholesaler's incentive to be the first to reduce price. The post-and-hold provisions, Total Wine argued, effectively bring about horizontal price fixing. As it put the point on appeal: "If a wholesaler were to drop its price on a particular product, its competitors would know immediately (from having seen the posted price), and would have four days to match the posted price." Appellant Br. at 8-9. Even if the wholesaler who had been the first to reduce its price still wished to set a price beneath its competitors, Total Wine noted, it would then be required to "hold the lower [**14] price for an entire month—during which it would have no competitive advantage because its competitors would be charging the same price."<sup>6</sup> Id. at 9.

Second, Total Wine argued, Connecticut's system precludes retailers from competing on the basis of cost. Fundamentally, Total Wine noted, the minimum-retail-price provision is keyed to a definition of "[c]ost" that turns not on the retailer's actual cost but on the price charged to the retailer by the wholesaler. This, Total Wine argued, prevents a high-volume, lower-average-cost retailer such as itself from attracting customers by offering discounts enabled by its lower-cost structure. This result is exacerbated, Total Wine alleged, by a practice in which wholesalers often engage: They set high minimum bottle prices, and then lower the case prices for the product without making corresponding [**166] reductions to the bottle price. While retailers (who buy almost exclusively by the case) take advantage of the reduced case price and buy larger quantities during months where the case price is lower, this, Total Wine alleged, does not benefit the consumer because retailers are required to sell the product at a margin fixed by the higher minimum bottle price, [**15] which has effectively been set by the wholesaler. In this manner, Total Wine alleged, "wholesalers effectively control both retail price and retailers' profit margins," and retailers like Total Wine that wish to use their business efficiencies to reduce the prices offered to consumers are blocked from doing so. App. at 20, Compl. ¶ 17.

The end result, Total Wine alleged, is a market without meaningful price competition: "Competing wholesalers for the same brands routinely set the same bottle and case prices down to the penny, month after month, with each wholesaler exactly tracking its competitors' . . . case prices." Id., Compl. ¶ 19. In other words, Total Wine argued, the regulatory scheme promotes vertical price fixing. Total Wine's complaint attached data tables reflecting that, over long periods, leading wholesalers often have charged the same amount for each alcoholic beverage product—e.g., Bombay Sapphire, Grey Goose, Jose Cuervo Gold—and have adjusted prices in lockstep. These prices, Total Wine claimed, exceed those which a competitive market would produce: Citing a study, Total Wine alleged that Connecticut's regulatory scheme "result[s] in retail prices for wine and spirits in Connecticut [**16] that are as much as 24% higher than prices offered for identical products in the surrounding states." Id., Compl. ¶ 18.

Finally, Total Wine alleged, the Connecticut regulatory scheme does not entail active supervision by any state agency or instrumentality. Wholesalers post and retailers charge the prices they see fit, it alleged, without any review or intervention by regulators, save where a lawsuit has been brought claiming noncompliance with the state's regulations.

<sup>6</sup> Total Wine's claim that the Connecticut regulations promote horizontal price fixing was substantially developed in its briefs on the motion to dismiss and further refined on appeal. Its Complaint overwhelmingly focused instead on its claims as to vertical price fixing. We conclude, however, that the Complaint satisfactorily pled both theories.

C. The Motion to Dismiss

On October 14, 2016, the defendants moved to dismiss. They were supported in this motion by five intervenors, four of which were trade associations and the fifth of which was a liquor distributor.<sup>7</sup>

On June 6, 2017, the district court, following argument, granted the motion to dismiss. See Conn. Fine Wine & Spirits v. Harris, LLC, 255 F. Supp. 3d 355 (D. Conn 2017). Analyzing the challenged provisions separately,<sup>8</sup> the district court applied as to each the first step in the two-step framework used to assess claims of preemption by § 1 of the Sherman Act in this Circuit.<sup>9</sup> As a threshold matter, the court inquired [*167] whether the restraints are unilateral ("imposed by the government . . . to the exclusion of private control") and hence immune from preemption by § 1, or hybrid (imposed by [*17] both the government and by granting "private actors a degree of regulatory control over competition" and hence capable of preemption. Id. at 364. Then, the court inquired whether the challenged provision brought about facially, or per se, unlawful restraints on trade, in which case they are preempted, or restraints that are subject to rule of reason scrutiny, in which case they are not. Id.

As to the post and hold restraint, the district court held that it is a hybrid restraint, but that the conduct it brings about is not per se unlawful, and so is subject to rule of reason analysis. Id. at 371. Therefore, it is not preempted. Id. The district court relied on Battipaglia v. New York State Liquor Authority, 745 F.2d 166 (2d Cir. 1984), in which we upheld New York State's post-and-hold provision as similarly not preempted.

As to the minimum resale price restraint, the district court held that it too was hybrid, but that it also implicated only the rule of reason, not condemnation per se. Id. at 373. The district court held that this provision imposed a vertical restraint. And, it noted, recent Supreme Court cases, in particular Leegin Creative Leather Prods., Inc. v. PSKS, Inc., 551 U.S. 877, 127 S. Ct. 2705, 168 L. Ed. 2d 623 (2007), have held that courts are to apply rule of reason, not per se, analysis to vertical restraints, meaning that this provision is not facially preempted. Id. at 378.

Finally, [*18] the district court held that Connecticut's provisions forbidding price discrimination amounted to a unilateral restraint on trade, imposed solely by the state and not involving private conduct. Id. That was because these provisions "simply prohibit[] liquor wholesalers from charging different prices to different retailers," and do not "grant[] private actors a degree of regulatory authority over competition." Id. at 379. Thus, it held that these provisions, too, are not preempted. Id. at 380.

Accordingly, the district court upheld all challenged aspects of Connecticut's alcoholic beverage regulatory regime.

On June 26, 2017, Connecticut Fine Wine appealed.

<sup>7</sup> These were: the Wine & Spirit Wholesalers of Connecticut ("WSWC"), the Connecticut Beer Wholesalers Association ("CBWA"), the Connecticut Restaurant Association ("CRA") and the Connecticut Package Stores Association ("CPSA") (collectively, "the trade associations"), as well as Brescome Barton, Inc. ("Brescome" and, with the trade associations, "intervenors").

<sup>8</sup> The district court stated that separate consideration of each challenged provision was required (1) under principles of federalism, (2) because each provision presented distinct analytic issues under principles of antitrust preemption, and (3) because Connecticut's general rule of statutory construction provides that the invalidity of some sections of a statute should not invalidate the statute as a whole. See Conn. Fine Wine & Spirits, 255 F. Supp. 3d at 366-67; Conn. Gen. Stat. § 1-3.

This case presents questions of preemption: Does § 1 of the Sherman Antitrust Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1, which makes illegal "[e]very contract, combination . . . or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce," preempt the challenged provisions of Connecticut's Liquor Control Act?

We begin by reviewing the two key precedents that frame the § 1 preemption inquiry: Rice v. Norman Williams Co., 458 U.S. 654, 102 S. Ct. 3294, 73 L. Ed. 2d 1042 \(1982\), and Fisher v. City of Berkeley, California, 475 U.S. 260, 106 S. Ct. 1045, 89 L. Ed. 2d 206 \(1986\). Then, because the analysis differs by provision, we review serially the three sets of challenged provisions. We first address the minimum-resale-price restraint and then the prohibition on price discrimination. [\[\*\*19\]](#) We last address the post-and-hold provisions, which are the primary focus of plaintiffs' challenge. None of the provisions, we hold, are preempted.<sup>10</sup>

[*168] A. Principles of Preemption Under § 1: Rice and Fisher

The Supreme Court's decisions in Rice and Fisher frame the § 1 preemption inquiry.

1. Rice: The Requirement That the State Law "Mandate or Authorize," or "Place Irresistible Pressure" on Private Parties to Bring About, a Per Se Violation of § 1

In Rice, the Court held that HN1 the preemption inquiry under § 1 requires courts to apply principles similar to those which we employ in considering whether any state statute is pre-empted by a federal statute pursuant to the Supremacy Clause. As in the typical pre-emption case, the inquiry is whether there exists an irreconcilable conflict between the federal and state regulatory schemes. The existence of hypothetical or potential conflict is insufficient to warrant the pre-emption of the state statute. A state regulatory scheme is not pre-empted by the federal antitrust laws simply because in a hypothetical situation a private party's compliance with the statute might cause him to violate the antitrust laws. A state statute is not preempted by the federal antitrust laws simply [\[\*\*20\]](#) because the state scheme might have an anticompetitive effect.

458 U.S. at 659 (citations omitted). Rather, the Court held, HN2 "[a] party may successfully enjoin the enforcement of a state statute only if the statute on its face irreconcilably conflicts with federal antitrust policy." Id. In other words, for a state statute to be preempted by § 1, the statute must bring about conduct that would require per se condemnation under § 1:

Our decisions in this area instruct us, therefore, that a state statute, when considered in the abstract, may be condemned under the antitrust laws only if it mandates or authorizes conduct that necessarily constitutes a violation of the antitrust laws in all cases, or if it places irresistible pressure on a private party to violate the antitrust laws in order to comply with the statute. Such condemnation will follow under § 1 of the Sherman Act when the conduct contemplated by the statute is in all cases a per se violation. If the activity addressed by the statute does not fall into that category, and therefore must be analyzed under the rule of reason, the statute cannot be condemned in the abstract. Analysis under the rule of reason requires an examination of the circumstances underlying [\[\*\*21\]](#) a particular economic practice, and therefore does not lend itself to a conclusion that a statute is facially inconsistent with federal antitrust laws.

<sup>10</sup> While we address the three areas separately here, we have also considered them in tandem. The outcome is the same: considered separately or as a whole, the provisions are not preempted. We therefore do not reach the question of which analysis would have been the right one had the difference been determinative.

Applying these principles, the Rice Court upheld the codes at issue: California Alcoholic Beverage Control provisions which prohibited a licensed importer from importing any brand of distilled spirits for which it was not a designated importer. These, the Court explained, would not give rise in all instances to per se illegal conduct. *Id.* at 661-62.

2. Fisher: The Requirement of Concerted Action

In Fisher, the Court identified a related hurdle that a claim of preemption by § 1 must clear. At issue was a rent stabilization law enacted by the City of Berkeley, California, that placed strict controls on certain classes of real property rented for residential use. The ordinance required landlords to adhere to the prescribed rent ceilings; violators were subject to civil and criminal penalties. 475 U.S. at 262-63. A group of landlords sued the [*169] city, arguing that the ordinance was a traditional—and per se invalid—form of fixing prices.

The Supreme Court rejected that argument. HN3 Sherman Act § 1, it noted, can be violated only by collective action: "unreasonable restraints of trade [**22] effected by a 'contract, combination . . . , or conspiracy' between separate entities." Id. at 266 (quoting Copperweld Corp. v. Indep. Tube Corp., 467 U.S. 752, 768, 104 S. Ct. 2731, 81 L. Ed. 2d 628 (1984)). But, the Court held, Berkeley's unilateral imposition of rent control did not amount to agreement or "concerted action." Id. The Court acknowledged that, had the Berkeley landlords banded together to fix rental prices in the absence of an ordinance, their action would have been a per se violation of the Sherman Act. Id. But the fact that the price-fixing ordinance resulted from the city acting unilaterally, not the landlords acting concertedly, saved it from preemption:

HN4 A restraint imposed unilaterally by government does not become concerted-action within the meaning of the Sherman Act simply because it has a coercive effect upon parties who must obey the law. The ordinary relationship between the government and those who must obey its regulatory commands whether they wish to or not is not enough to establish a conspiracy. Similarly, the mere fact that all competing property owners must comply with the same provisions of the Ordinance is not enough to establish a conspiracy among landlords. Under Berkeley's Ordinance, control over the maximum rent levels of every affected residential [**23] unit has been unilaterally removed from the owners of these properties and given to the Rent Stabilization Board.

Id. at 267. In sum, the challenged rent control laws could exist, alongside § 1, because "the rent ceilings imposed by the Ordinance and maintained by the Rent Stabilization Board have been unilaterally imposed by government upon landlords to the exclusion of private control." Id. at 266. As the Court put the point: "There is no meeting of the minds here." Id. at 267.

The Supreme Court in Fisher was careful to limit its holding to unilateral action by a government entity. It recognized that a governmentally imposed restraint on trade that enforces private pricing decisions would be a "hybrid restraint" that fulfills the Sherman Act's "concerted action" requirement. The Court explained:

HN5 Not all restraints imposed upon private actors by government units necessarily constitute unilateral action outside the purview of § 1. Certain restraints may be characterized as 'hybrid,' in that nonmarket mechanisms merely enforce private marketing decisions. See Rice, 458 U.S. at 665 (Stevens, J., concurring in the judgment). Where private actors are thus granted "a degree of private regulatory power," id. at 666 n.1, the regulatory scheme may be attacked under [**24] § 1."

Id. at 267-68.

HN6 We have previously read Rice and Fisher to constitute the first step in a two-step inquiry to decide whether a statute is preempted by § 1. See, e.g., Freedom Holdings Inc. v. Spitzer, 357 F.3d 205, 223 (2d Cir. 2004).<sup>11</sup>

---

<sup>11</sup> In cases in which alcoholic-beverage laws are claimed to be preempted by § 1, states have sometimes additionally defended by asserting state action immunity, which is the second step in our Circuit's two-step preemption inquiry, and immunity derived

[*170] B. Connecticut's Minimum-Retail-Price Provisions

The Court applies these principles, first, to the minimum-retail-price provisions. As noted, these provisions (e.g., Conn. Gen. Stat. § 30-68m) dictate the relationship between the liquor prices set by wholesalers and those set by retailers.

In 324 Liquor v. Duffy Corp., 479 U.S. 335, 107 S. Ct. 720, 93 L. Ed. 2d 667 \(1987\), the Supreme Court considered a similar New York statute, which "impose[d] a regime of resale price maintenance on all New York liquor retailers" and required them to charge at least 112% of the wholesaler's posted bottle price. Id. at 337, 341. The Supreme Court classified the New York statute, under Fisher, as a hybrid restraint. Id. at 345 n.8 (describing provisions as having granted "private actors . . . a degree of private regulatory power") (quoting Fisher, 475 U.S. at 268). Then, applying the Rice framework, the Court found the statute was "inconsistent with § 1" because it authorized per se violations of § 1 under precedents that, "since the early years of national antitrust enforcement," had so treated resale price maintenance agreements. Id. at 341 (quoting Monsanto Co. v. Spray-Rite Service Corp., 465 U.S. 752, 761, 104 S. Ct. 1464, 79 L. Ed. 2d 775 \(1984\)). Hence, the New York statute was preempted. Id. at 343.

The Supreme Court's [*25] classification in 324 Liquor of the minimum-retail-price restraints as hybrid, and hence capable of preemption by § 1, binds the Court here. The New York statute there is substantively identical to the Connecticut statute here. And the hybrid classification in 324 Liquor remains good law. See Freedom Holdings, 357 F.3d at 223-24 (noting that 324 Liquor found a hybrid arrangement based on limited private acts: "the individual determinations of each wholesaler as to what bottle price to post").

The same, however, cannot be said for the Supreme Court's application of Rice in 324 Liquor. The Court's premise, that the New York statute mandated per se violations of § 1, has been overtaken by a change in antitrust law. In 2007, the Supreme Court, culminating a line of decisions, held that HN7 rule of reason—and not per se—analysis applies to all vertical restraints. See Leegin, 551 U.S. at 882. Leegin overruled Dr. Miles Medical. Co. v. John D. Park & Sons Co., 220 U.S. 373, 31 S. Ct. 376, 55 L. Ed. 502 \(1911\), the precedent cited by 324 Liquor as the fount of the doctrine that vertical price fixing arrangements are per se illegal. See 324 Liquor, 479 U.S. at 341. Henceforth, the Supreme Court stated, HN8 "vertical price restraints are to be judged by the rule of reason." Leegin, 551 U.S. at 882. Justifying the doctrinal change, the Court explained that "it cannot be stated with any degree of [*26] confidence that resale price maintenance 'always or almost always tend[s] to restrict competition and decrease output,'" id. at 894 (quoting Bus. Elecs. Corp. v. Sharp Elecs. Corp., 485 U.S. 717, 723, 108 S. Ct. 1515, 99 L. Ed. 2d 808 \(1988\)), noting that Leegin capped a gradual doctrinal move "away from Dr. Miles' strict approach," id. at 900.

HN9 In light of Leegin, 324 Liquor's holding that minimum-retail-price provisions constitute a per se violation of antitrust laws in all cases, 479 U.S. at 343, is, necessarily, no longer good law. The need to analyze vertical pricing arrangements under the rule of reason means that § 1 cannot preempt as per se unlawful [*171] even a statute that overtly mandates such arrangements. See Rice, 458 U.S. at 658 ("If the activity addressed by the statute . . . must be analyzed under the rule of reason, the statute cannot be condemned in the abstract. Analysis under the rule of reason requires an examination of the circumstances underlying a particular economic practice, and therefore does not lend itself to a conclusion that a statute is facially inconsistent with the federal antitrust laws.").

We therefore hold that HN10 Connecticut's minimum-retail-price provisions, compelling as they do only vertical pricing arrangements among private actors, are not preempted under § 1.<sup>12</sup> from the Twenty First Amendment to the U.S. Constitution. Connecticut has not raised such defenses in connection with this appeal.

C. Connecticut's Provisions Prohibiting Price Discrimination [**27]

The Court next considers Connecticut's provisions prohibiting price discrimination. These provisions, as noted, require that wholesalers sell a given alcoholic product to all retailers at the same price.

For two reasons, we hold that these provisions are not preempted.

First, as the district court recognized, HN11<sup>14</sup> these provisions impose a unilateral restraint. They leave each wholesaler at liberty to choose the price it will charge all retailers for a product while prohibiting each from charging different prices to different retailers. Although limiting a wholesaler's range of motion, this provision does not grant any private actor "a degree of regulatory control over competition." Freedom Holdings Inc. v. Cuomo, 624 F.3d 38, 50 (2d Cir. 2010). Rather, like the rent cap set by the Berkeley municipality in Fisher, it is a restraint "imposed by government . . . to the exclusion of private control." Id. (citing Fisher, 475 U.S. at 266). Such a restraint does not implicate the concerns of concerted activity animating § 1.

Second, HN12<sup>15</sup> the price restraint worked by § 30-68k is purely vertical in operation. It limits the ability of a wholesaler that has already charged one retailer a given price to charge another retailer a different price. Therefore, even if this provision could be viewed as a [\[\*\*28\]](#) hybrid, rather than a unilateral, price-fixing provision, after Leegin, it would no longer implicate a category of conduct that remains per se unlawful. While its impact may be to harmonize prices at a retail level of beverages sold by a common wholesaler, the provision does not mandate—or even incent—collaboration among horizontal competitors. For this separate reason, under Rice, it is not preempted by § 1.

D. Connecticut's Post-and-Hold Provisions

The Court finally considers the post-and-hold provisions, described above. On the question whether § 1 preempts these provisions, the parties primarily dispute whether, as the district court held, Battipaglia, 745 F.2d 166, which rejected a claim that § 1 preempted a New York liquor-pricing statute, is controlling here.

1. Review of Battipaglia

In Battipaglia, decided after Rice and before Fisher, a divided panel of this Court, per Judge Friendly, upheld a New York statute whose price restraint components governing the sale of liquor were strikingly similar to those at issue here. The New York law contained post-and-[\[\*172\]](#) hold provisions that obliged wholesalers to file monthly price schedules with the state liquor authority by the fifth day of the preceding month, Id. at 168 (citing N.Y. [\[\*\*29\]](#) Alco. Bev. Cont. § 101-b(3)(b)), and authorized wholesalers to amend their filed schedules "to meet lower competing prices and discounts 'provided such amended prices and discounts are not lower and discounts are not greater than those to be met,'" id. (quoting N.Y. Alco. Bev. Cont. Law § 101-b(4)). The New York law also contained price-discrimination and minimum-retail-price provisions that constrained sales prices at the retail level. See id. (citing N.Y. Alco. Bev. Cont. § 101-b(2)).

In the relevant portion of its analysis,<sup>13</sup> Battipaglia held that the challenged post-and-hold provisions were not preempted because they "do not compel any agreement" among wholesalers, but only individual action. Id. at 170. The Court stated: "The schedules required to be filed by the wholesalers are their individual acts." Id. And the

<sup>13</sup> Battipaglia addressed two other issues not presented here. It discussed—but did not resolve—whether, if the New York law were in conflict with § 1, it was nonetheless insulated from attack by the "state action" doctrine of Parker v. Brown, 317 U.S. 341, 63 S. Ct. 307, 87 L. Ed. 315 (1943). See Battipaglia, 745 F.2d at 176-77. And it addressed whether, if the New York law were in conflict with § 1, the state's important policy interests warranted deference under § 2 of the Twenty-First Amendment. Id. at 177-79 (holding that, on the case record, such deference was warranted).

Battipaglia plaintiffs (a liquor store owner and a wholesaler) had not alleged that "any agreement among the wholesalers" arose as a result of these laws. Id.

Battipaglia addressed and rejected two arguments the plaintiffs had made for preemption.

First, the Court distinguished California Retail Liquor Dealers Ass'n v. Midcal Aluminum, 445 U.S. 97, 100 S. Ct. 937, 63 L. Ed. 2d 233 (1980), which, like 324 Liquor, had held preempted a state statute that "created a resale price maintenance system for wine." Battipaglia, 745 F.2d at 170; see also id. at 171 (describing California [**30] statute as having forced "all persons at various levels of the chain of distribution . . . to establish identical prices fixed by the brand owner for each brand of wine" and stating that this type of "vertical control" was impermissible under § 1). In contrast, the Court stated, New York's post-and-hold provisions "plainly are not a resale price maintenance scheme." Id. at 172. And, the Court again noted, the New York law did not constrain wholesalers, each of which "is completely free to file whatever price schedule he desires." Id. As Judge Friendly put the point: "Midcal simply did not deal with a statute like New York's which merely requires wholesalers to post and adhere to their own unilaterally determined prices and nothing more." Id.

Second, the Court addressed the argument that the post-and-hold law gave rise to a per se violation of § 1 because (1) it "forces each wholesaler to inform other wholesaler[s] of its prices and then to adhere for a month to them (or a lowered price meeting that of a competitor filed within three days)" and (2) "if this had been done pursuant to an agreement [among wholesalers], the agreement would have constituted a violation of § 1." Id. Rejecting this argument, [**31] the Court reiterated that § 1 "is directed only at joint action and does not prohibit independent business actions and decisions." Id. (internal citations omitted).

The Court then paused on the conceptual issue of whether, to be preempted by § 1, a state law must compel an actual [*173] agreement among competitors. The Court described as "appealing" the reasoning that:

Section 1 requires an agreement, state compulsion of individual action is the very antithesis of an agreement, and the argument that an agreement could have been inferred if the wholesalers had voluntarily done what they been compelled to do is simply too 'iffy.'

Id. at 173.<sup>14</sup> At the same time, the Court acknowledged "some force" to the counterargument: that "a statute compelling conduct which, in its absence, would permit the inference of an agreement unlawful under § 1 is inconsistent with that section." Id. In the end, the Court stated, there was no need to resolve this conceptual issue. That was because the New York law did not meet the Rice standard for preemption. Id.

Rice, the Court emphasized, had held that HN13[↑] "[a] state regulatory scheme is not pre-empted by the federal antitrust laws simply because in a hypothetical situation [**32] a private party's compliance with the statute might cause him to violate the antitrust laws." Id. at 174 (quoting Rice, 458 U.S. at 659). Rather, under Rice, a state law could be "condemned under the antitrust laws only if it mandates or authorizes conduct that necessarily constitutes a violation of the antitrust laws in all cases, or if it places irresistible pressure on a private party to violate the antitrust laws in order to comply with the statute." Id. (quoting Rice, 458 U.S. at 661). New York's statute did not do that, the Court stated, because the only conduct that it compelled—"the exchange of price information" among competitors—does not "constitute a violation of the antitrust laws in all cases." Id. at 174. Such an exchange might or might not signify an agreement among them. See id. at 175 ("[T]he dissemination of price information is not a per se violation of the Sherman Act." (quoting United States v. Citizens & S. Nat'l Bank, 422 U.S. 86, 113, 95 S. Ct. 2099, 45 L. Ed. 2d 41 (1975) (internal citations omitted)). That the post-and-hold law might result in common wholesaler pricing did not support inferring an agreement either, the Court stated. Absent "plus factors" signifying an agreement, "conscious parallelism" among competitors did not equate to an agreement. Id. (citations omitted).

<sup>14</sup> As support for this view, the Court cited a district court decision finding against preemption and rejecting the argument that "simply because the statute compelled individual actions which, if taken pursuant to an agreement, might have constituted a violation," the statute was preempted. Id. at 173 (quoting United States Brewers Asso. v. Healy, 532 F. Supp. 1312, 1329-30 (D. Conn.), rev'd on other grounds, 692 F.2d 275 (2d Cir. 1982)), aff'd, 464 U.S. 909, 104 S. Ct. 265, 78 L. Ed. 2d 248 (1983).

The Battipaglia Court concluded:

Section 101-b thus does not mandate [**33] or authorize conduct that necessarily constitutes a violation of the antitrust laws in all cases. New York wholesalers can fulfill their obligations under the statute without either conspiring to fix prices or engaging in consciously parallel pricing. So, even more clearly, the New York law does not place irresistible pressure on a private party to violate the antitrust laws in order to comply with it. It requires only that, having announced a price independently chosen by him, the wholesaler shall stay with it for a month.

Id. (internal quotation marks omitted).

In dissent, Judge Winter faulted Judge Friendly's majority opinion for dwelling on the "post" component of New York's law and paying too little heed to the law's "hold" component. Were competitors to enter into an agreement to hold their prices [*174] in place for 30 days, he observed, such a private agreement would be horizontal price fixing and per se illegal. See 745 F.2d at 179-80 (Winter, J., dissenting). The Fourth and Ninth Circuits, the only two circuit courts to address similar laws, have sided with Judge Winter. Each has emphasized that the statutory requirement of adherence to posted prices, were it adopted by private agreement, would be [**34] per se illegal price fixing. See Costco Wholesale Corp. v. Maleng, 522 F.3d 874 (9th Cir. 2008) (holding Washington provisions preempted by § 1); Miller v. Hedlund, 813 F.2d 1344 (9th Cir. 1987) (holding Oregon provisions not exempt from § 1 and remanding the case to the district court for a determination whether the Twenty First Amendment shielded the challenged regulations); TFWS, Inc. v. Schaefer, 242 F.3d 198, 210 (4th Cir. 2001) (holding Maryland provisions preempted by § 1, while reserving on whether, under the Twenty First Amendment, Maryland's regulatory interests with respect to alcohol trumped federal interest under the Sherman Act); see also 1 Phillip E. Areeda & Herbert Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law ¶ 217, at 388-89 & nn.45-53 (4th ed. 2013) (reviewing reported decisions, including lower court decisions in each direction).

2. Battipaglia Controls Here

We find Battipaglia controlling authority here.

Connecticut's post-and-hold provisions are substantially identical to the New York post-and-hold provisions upheld in that case. Total Wine does not contend otherwise. Both sets of provisions required the wholesaler to set and publicly file a price that it is going to charge the retailer; both provided a brief time window in which wholesalers may match a lower price set by a competitor; and both required the wholesaler to hold that price for one month.

Further, as the above discussion reflects, [**35] the Court in Battipaglia considered at length the § 1 preemption question in the face of similar arguments to those Total Wine makes here. The Court applied the controlling standards, from Rice, to these provisions. The Court held that the post-and-hold provisions did not "mandate or authorize conduct 'that necessarily constitutes a violation of the antitrust laws in all cases'" or "place[ ] irresistible pressure on a private party to violate the antitrust laws in order to comply" with it. Id. at 175 (quoting Rice, 458 U.S. at 661). Those are the questions presented here.

Finally, Total Wine has not identified any later precedent of the Supreme Court or this Court that fairly calls Battipaglia's vitality into question.

Total Wine argues that 324 Liquor and our decision in Freedom Holdings, 357 F.3d at 223 (Winter, J.) are such precedent. A footnote in 324 Liquor suggested that a statute need not bring about an actual agreement between private parties to be preempted by § 1. See 324 Liquor, 479 U.S. at 345-46 n.8 (rejecting New York's defense that provisions at issue had not yielded a "contract, combination, or conspiracy in restraint of trade"). Freedom Holdings picked up on that footnote to suggest, in a footnote of its own, that "an actual 'contract, combination, or conspiracy' need [**36] not be shown for a state statute to be preempted by the Sherman Act." See 357 F.3d at 223 n.17 (Winter, J.) (citing 324 Liquor, 479 U.S. at 345-46 n.8). Total Wine argues, on account of these statements, that these decisions vitiate Battipaglia.

For three reasons, they do not.

[*175] First, Freedom Holdings itself distinguished Battipaglia and treated it as good law. Freedom Holdings recognized that, although the Battipaglia majority had discussed whether a state law must give rise to an actual agreement for § 1 to preempt it, Battipaglia ultimately did not resolve nor rule on the basis of that conceptual issue. Rather, Battipaglia had relied on its application of the Rice standard to New York's post-and-hold provision. See id. (recognizing that Battipaglia "did not reach the question" whether "a private contract, combination, or conspiracy" must be shown for Sherman Act preemption to occur (internal citation omitted)).

Second, to the extent that Freedom Holdings and 324 Liquor opine on whether the state law at issue must give rise to an actual private agreement for there to be preemption, these cases are readily distinguished factually because they involved express or readily implied agreements. Freedom Holdings involved an express contract among [**37] horizontal competitors—a "Master Settlement Agreement" among major tobacco manufacturers pursuant to which the challenged New York legislation had been enacted. Freedom Holdings, 357 F.3d at 208. Its discussion of whether the state law must give rise to such an agreement was, therefore, dicta. See id. at 224 ("Even if a 'contract' among private parties is required in the first step of preemption analysis, therefore, it exists in the present matter."). As for 324 Liquor, it addressed vertical restraints affecting a wholesaler-retailer relationship. In that context, the wholesaler and each of its retailers were in privity and necessarily had an agreement to buy from and/or sell to each another. They entered into these agreements against the backdrop (and presumably with the knowledge) of the price-fixing term that state law would supply. In fact, every Supreme Court case to hold state liquor laws preempted by § 1, has done so on the ground that these laws either mandated or authorized forms of then per se unlawful vertical price-fixing arrangements between wholesalers and retailers. See, e.g., Midcal, 445 U.S. 97, 100 S. Ct. 937, 63 L. Ed. 2d 233 (California law mandated resale price maintenance among wholesaler and its retailers); 324 Liquor, 479 U.S. 335, 107 S. Ct. 720, 93 L. Ed. 2d 667 (same as to New York law); [**38] Schwegmann Bros. v. Calvert Distillers Corp., 341 U.S. 384, 71 S. Ct. 745, 95 L. Ed. 1035, 60 Ohio Law Abs. 81 (1951) (same as to Louisiana law per an interpretation of § 1 as amended by the now-repealed Miller-Tydings Act). Of course, as noted earlier, the application of preemption doctrine to vertical price fixing arrangements has been overtaken by Leegin's removal of vertical restraints from per se condemnation.

Third, and finally, two post-Battipaglia decisions of the Supreme Court, each involving claims of horizontal price-fixing, lend support to Judge Friendly's reasoning in finding against preemption. One, Fisher, discussed earlier, does so by narrowing the scope of state action within § 1's preemptive reach. The other, Bell Atlantic Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007), does so by underscoring the limited scope of private conduct capable of per se violating § 1.

Fisher, as noted, upheld Berkeley's rental-cap ordinance in the face of a § 1 preemption claim that it brought about horizontal price fixing. The Supreme Court recognized that "[h]ad the owners of residential rental property in Berkeley voluntarily banded together to stabilize rents in the city," that concerted activity would have worked a per se violation of § 1. Fisher, 475 U.S. at 266. But, the Court emphasized, more was required. There needed to be concerted action. "A restraint imposed unilaterally by government does [**39] not become concerted-action [*176] within the meaning of the statute simply because it has a coercive effect upon parties who must obey the law." Id. at 267. "[T]he mere fact that all competing property owners must comply with the same provisions of the Ordinance is not enough to establish a conspiracy among landlords." Id.

This requirement is significant here. We do not take issue with the holding of the district court here that, HN14 given the participation that a post-and-hold law requires of each wholesaler in connection with the posting component, Connecticut's law, viewed as a whole, qualifies as hybrid under Fisher.<sup>15</sup> But we doubt that such a law mandates or authorizes "concerted action" among the wholesalers subject to it. Particularly as to the "hold" component of the law that was the basis of the Battipaglia dissent, Connecticut's prohibition on altering prices for a

<sup>15</sup> In finding that the statute grants private actors "a degree of private regulatory power" so as to qualify as hybrid, Fisher, 475 U.S. at 268, the district court relied on 324 Liquor, which had held hybrid a resale-price maintenance law with similar price-posting features. See Conn. Fine Wines & Spirits, 255 F. Supp. 3d at 369.

30-day period is a purely negative restraint. It does not call for any private action, let alone concerted action. See Hertz Corp. v. City of New York, 1 F.3d 121, 127 (2d Cir. 1993) (finding hybrid, but upholding, city statute that "eliminate[d] an element of price competition" among rental-car industry competitors); cf. Flying J, Inc. v. van Hollen, 621 F.3d 658, 662–63 (7th Cir. 2010) ("[I]t is only when a state law mandates or authorizes [**40] collusive conduct that it is preempted by federal antitrust law." (citing Fisher, 475 U.S. at 265)). Fisher's emphasis on the need for concerted action reinforces that Judge Friendly was right both to focus on the posting, rather than the holding, component of New York's post-and-hold law, and to find the law non-preempted.

As to Twombly, although it is more commonly cited for its articulation of pleading standards, the Court in its substantive discussion homed in on the discrete evil prohibited by § 1. HN15 [↑] "§ 1 of the Sherman Act does not prohibit [all] unreasonable restraints of trade." Twombly, 550 U.S. at 553. It prohibits "only restraints effected by a contract, combination, or conspiracy." Id. (emphasis added). The Court explained, therefore, that in § 1 cases, "[t]he crucial question is whether the challenged anticompetitive conduct stem[s] from independent decision or from an agreement." Id. (internal citations omitted). Even conscious parallel acts based on competitors' mutual recognition of "shared economic interests" are not "in [themselves] unlawful." Id. at 553–54 (quoting Brooke Grp. Ltd. v. Brown & Williamson Tobacco Corp., 509 U.S. 209, 227, 113 S. Ct. 2578, 125 L. Ed. 2d 168 (1993)); see also United States v. Apple, Inc., 791 F.3d 290, 315 (2d Cir. 2015) ("[P]arallel behavior that does not result from an agreement is not unlawful even if it is anticompetitive."). In other words, under § 1, that conscious [**41] parallel conduct can create an equally uncompetitive market to parallel conduct achieved by agreement is of no moment. The gravamen of § 1 is an agreement among competitors.

On this basis, Twombly upheld the dismissal of a complaint that alleged consciously parallel decisions among recently deregulated telecommunications carriers not to compete in one another's (horizontal) regional markets. The complaint had not alleged actual agreement among the carriers, and its allegations were consistent with "natural" and "unilateral" behavior by each carrier, as each had good reason to appreciate that its self-interest lay [*177] in forebearing from initiating competition. See 550 U.S. at 564, 566; see also id. at 568 ("[The carriers] doubtless liked the world the way it was, and surely knew the adage about him who lives by the sword. Hence, a natural explanation for the noncompetition alleged is that the former Government-sanctioned monopolists were sitting tight, expecting their neighbors to do the same thing.")

Twombly's reasoning resonates here because, HN16 [↑] under a post-and-hold law, there is a "natural" explanation—independent of any agreement or coordination among liquor wholesalers—for these competitors to arrive at common monthly [**42] product prices. Such a law authorizes a wholesaler, during the four days after initial posting, to match a competitor's lower price, with such prices then held for a month. Under these circumstances, the law itself invites and facilitates conscious parallelism in pricing. It puts in public view each competing wholesaler's price quotes. And it authorizes, but it does not oblige, wholesalers during a defined window unilaterally to match (or parallel) a competitor's lower price as the "held" price for the coming month. Nothing about this arrangement requires, anticipates, or incents communication or collaboration among the competing wholesalers. Quite the contrary: A post-and-hold law like Connecticut's leaves a wholesaler little reason to make contact with a competitor. The separate, unilateral acts by each wholesaler of posting and matching instead are what gives rise to any synchronicity of pricing. To mirror Twombly: "[A] natural explanation for the noncompetition alleged," id. at 568, is that the state-regulated wholesalers are independently making pricing decisions within a framework aimed at avoiding price wars that invites them, before being held to a price for a month, to match that of [**43] their competitors. A post-and-hold law, therefore, does not implicate the evil against which § 1 guards: an agreement to unreasonably restrain trade. It would make little sense to preempt a state statute which facilitates parallel conduct that parties can legally undertake on their own under § 1.

Under these circumstances, we do not find reason to conclude that Battipaglia has been, sub silentio, overruled. If anything, its reasoning has been fortified by intervening decisions like Fisher and Twombly. Battipaglia therefore controls Total Wine's challenge to Connecticut's post-and-hold provisions. See United States v. Moore, 949 F.2d 68, 71 (2d Cir. 1991) (prior opinions of a Second Circuit panel bind future panels "in the absence of a change in the law by higher authority" or a ruling by the en banc Court). Any application to revisit Battipaglia is beyond this panel's authority. Battipaglia remains good—and persuasive—law.

CONCLUSION

For the reasons above, we affirm the decision below. We hold that the challenged provisions of Connecticut law governing liquor pricing are not preempted by § 1 of the Sherman Act.

Prior History: Connecticut Fine Wine and Spirits, d/b/a Total Wine & More ("Total Wine"), challenged certain provisions of Connecticut's Liquor Control Act and related regulations. Total Wine alleged that these provisions were preempted by the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1. The United States District Court for the District of Connecticut, Janet Hall, J., granted the defendants' motion to dismiss the complaint, holding, inter alia, that the post-and-hold provisions and the minimum-retail-price provisions of the Connecticut Liquor Control Act were hybrid restraints on trade, but that Total Wine failed to plead facts that plausibly support the conclusion that those provisions constitute per se violations of, and therefore were preempted by, the Sherman Act. The District Court also held that Total Wine did not plausibly allege that the price discrimination provision was a hybrid restraint on trade; therefore, that provision imposes a unilateral restraint on trade that falls outside the scope of the Sherman Act. We agree with the District Court that the post-and-hold, minimum-retail-price, and price-discrimination provisions are not preempted by the Sherman Act. We therefore AFFIRM.

HN1 [down arrow] Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason, Per Se Violations

The preemption inquiry under § 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, requires courts to apply principles similar to those which the court employ in considering whether any state statute is preempted by a federal statute pursuant to the Supremacy Clause. As in the typical preemption case, the inquiry is whether there exists an irreconcilable conflict between the federal and state regulatory schemes. The existence of hypothetical or potential conflict is insufficient to warrant the preemption of the state statute. A state regulatory scheme is not preempted by the federal antitrust laws simply because in a hypothetical situation a private party's compliance with the statute might cause him to violate the antitrust laws. A state statute is not preempted by the federal antitrust laws simply because the state scheme might have an anticompetitive effect. In other words, for a state statute to be preempted by § 1, the statute must bring about conduct that would require per se condemnation under § 1.

Constitutional Law > Supremacy Clause > Federal Preemption

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act

HN2 [down arrow] Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason, Per Se Violations

A state statute, when considered in the abstract, may be condemned under the antitrust laws only if it mandates or authorizes conduct that necessarily constitutes a violation of the antitrust laws in all cases, or if it places irresistible pressure on a private party to violate the antitrust laws in order to comply with the statute. Such condemnation will follow under § 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, when the conduct contemplated by the statute is in all cases a per se violation. If the activity addressed by the statute does not fall into that category, and therefore must be analyzed under the rule of reason, the statute cannot be condemned in the abstract. Analysis under the rule of reason requires an examination of the circumstances underlying a particular economic practice, and therefore does not lend itself to a conclusion that a statute is facially inconsistent with federal antitrust laws.

HN3 [down arrow] Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

Section 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, can be violated only by collective action: unreasonable restraints of trade effected by a contract, combination., or conspiracy between separate entities.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

HN4 [↓] Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

A restraint imposed unilaterally by government does not become concerted-action within the meaning of the Sherman Act simply because it has a coercive effect upon parties who must obey the law. The ordinary relationship between the government and those who must obey its regulatory commands whether they wish to or not is not enough to establish a conspiracy.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

HN5 [↓] Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

Not all restraints imposed upon private actors by government units necessarily constitute unilateral action outside the purview of § 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1. Certain restraints may be characterized as "hybrid," in that nonmarket mechanisms merely enforce private marketing decisions. Where private actors are thus granted a degree of private regulatory power, the regulatory scheme may be attacked under § 1.

With respect to the distribution and sale of alcoholic beverages, Connecticut's minimum-retail-price provisions, compelling as they do only vertical pricing arrangements among private actors, are not preempted under § 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Discrimination

Constitutional Law > Supremacy Clause > Federal Preemption

HN8 Regulated Practices, Price Discrimination

The price restraint worked by Conn. Gen. Stat. Ann. § 30-68k is purely vertical in operation. It limits the ability of a wholesaler that has already charged one retailer a given price to charge another retailer a different price. Therefore, even if this provision could be viewed as a hybrid, rather than a unilateral, price-fixing provision, it would no longer implicate a category of conduct that remains per se unlawful. While its impact may be to harmonize prices at a retail level of beverages sold by a common wholesaler, the provision does not mandate - or even incent - collaboration among horizontal competitors. For this reason, it is not preempted by § 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act

A state regulatory scheme is not preempted by the federal antitrust laws simply because in a hypothetical situation a private party's compliance with the statute might cause him to violate the antitrust laws. Rather, a state law may be condemned under the antitrust laws only if it mandates or authorizes conduct that necessarily constitutes a violation of the antitrust laws in all cases, or if it places irresistible pressure on a private party to violate the antitrust laws in order to comply with the statute.

Opinion

[*24] PAUL A. ENGELMAYER, District Judge:

Connecticut Fine Wine and Spirits, d/b/a Total Wine & More ("Total Wine") appeals from a judgment of the United States District Court for the District of Connecticut (Janet C. Hall, District Judge) dismissing its complaint against the Connecticut Department of Consumer Protection ("DCP") and the Director of the Connecticut Division of Liquor Control ("DLC"). Total Wine claimed that certain statutory and regulatory provisions that govern the distribution and sale of alcoholic beverages in Connecticut, and which often result in common retail-level pricing across the state for particular such beverages, are preempted by federal antitrust law. For the reasons that follow, we hold that these laws are not preempted. We therefore affirm.

BACKGROUND

A. Connecticut's Laws Regarding Alcohol Distribution and Sale

Like many other states, Connecticut heavily regulates the distribution and sale of alcoholic beverages within its borders. The state's [**4] Liquor Control Act prohibits the sale of alcoholic beverages in a manner that fails to comply with that statute. See Conn. Gen. Stat. § 30-74(a).

At issue here are three sets of provisions under Connecticut statutes and regulations that bear on the price at which alcoholic beverages may lawfully be sold: "post-and-hold" provisions; minimum retail pricing provisions; and provisions prohibiting price discrimination and volume discounts.<sup>1</sup> These, in tandem, establish the method by which alcoholic beverage prices are set by the manufacturer, the wholesaler, and the retailer.

The three sets of provisions at issue are as follows:

Post-and-hold provisions: Connecticut's "post and hold" provisions require state-licensed manufacturers, wholesalers, and "out-of-state permittees" (together, "wholesalers") to post a "bottle price" and a "case price" each month with the DCP for each alcoholic product that the wholesaler intends to sell during the following month. (For beer, the wholesaler must post a "can price.") Posted prices are then made available to industry participants. During the four days after the posting of the prices, wholesalers may "amend" their posted prices to "match" competitors' lower prices—specifically, "to [**5] meet a lower price posted by another wholesaler with respect to alcoholic liquor bearing the same brand or trade name." Those amended prices, however, may not be "lower than those [prices] being met." Wholesalers are obligated to "hold" their prices at the posted price (amended or not) for a month. These post-and-hold provisions—variations of which are found in many states—are the heart of the Connecticut [*25] regulatory regime that Total Wine challenges.<sup>2</sup>

Minimum-retail-price provisions: Connecticut's minimum-retail-price provisions require that retailers sell to customers at or above a statutorily defined "[c]ost." "Cost," however, is not defined as the retailer's actual cost. Instead, generally, a retailer's "[c]ost" [**8] for a given alcoholic beverage, is determined by adding the posted bottle price—as set by the wholesaler—and a markup for shipping and delivery. The post-and-hold provision, because it supplies the central component of the "[c]ost" at which the retailer may sell its product, thus largely dictates the price at which Connecticut retailers must sell their alcoholic products.<sup>3</sup>

For alcoholic liquor other than beer, each manufacturer, wholesaler and out-of-state shipper permittee shall post with the department, on a monthly basis, the bottle, can and case price of any brand of goods offered for sale in Connecticut, which price when so posted shall be the controlling price for such manufacturer, wholesaler or out-of-state permittee for the month following such posting. On and after July 1, 2005, for beer, each manufacturer, wholesaler and out-of-state shipper permittee shall post with the department, on a monthly basis, the bottle, can and case price, and the price per keg or barrel or fractional unit thereof for any brand of goods offered for sale in Connecticut which price when so posted shall be the controlling [**6] price for such brand of goods offered for sale in this state for the month following such posting. Such manufacturer, wholesaler and out-of-state shipper permittee may also post additional prices for such bottle, can, case, keg or barrel or fractional unit thereof for a specified portion of the following month which prices when so posted shall be the controlling prices for such bottle, can, case, keg or barrel or fractional unit thereof for such specified portion of the following month. Notice of all manufacturer, wholesaler and out-of-state shipper permittee prices shall be given to permittee purchasers by direct mail, Internet web site or advertising in a trade publication having circulation among the retail permittees except a wholesaler permittee may give such notice by hand delivery. Price postings with the department setting forth wholesale prices to retailers shall be available for inspection during regular business hours at the offices of the department by manufacturers and wholesalers until three o'clock p.m. of the first business day after the last day for posting prices. A manufacturer or wholesaler may amend such manufacturer's or wholesaler's posted price for any month [**7] to meet a lower price posted by another manufacturer or wholesaler with respect to alcoholic liquor bearing the same brand or trade name and of like age, vintage, quality and unit container size; provided that any such amended price posting shall be filed before three o'clock p.m. of the fourth business day after the last day for posting prices; and provided further such amended posting shall not set forth prices lower than those being met. Any manufacturer or wholesaler posting an amended price shall, at the time of posting, identify in writing the specific posting being met. On and after July 1, 2005, all wholesaler postings, other than for beer, for the following month shall be provided to retail permittees not later than the twenty-seventh day of the month prior to such posting. All wholesaler postings for beer shall be provided to retail permittees not later than the twentieth day of the month prior to such posting.

(a) For the purposes of this section:

(1) "Cost" for a retail permittee means (A) for alcoholic liquor other than beer, the posted bottle price from the wholesaler plus any charge for shipping or delivery to the retail permittee's place of business paid by the retail permittee in addition to the posted price, and (B) for beer, the lowest posted price during the month in which the retail permittee is selling plus any charge for shipping or delivery to the retail permittee's place of business paid by the retail permittee in addition to the price originally paid by the retail permittee;

[*26] Plaintiffs allege that wholesalers will occasionally lower their posted case prices for a given month, without lowering posted bottle prices, during what are called "off-post" months. Although retailers buy almost exclusively by the case, their prices remain fixed by the minimum-retail-price provisions, which are keyed to bottle prices.

Price discrimination/volume discounts: Finally, Connecticut bans volume discounts and other forms of price discrimination. Wholesalers must sell a given product to all retailers at the same price. Wholesalers may not offer discounts to retailers who are high-volume purchasers.<sup>4</sup>

While multiple [**11] policy interests have been asserted in support of these provisions, they (particularly the post-and-hold and minimum-retail-price provisions) commonly have been justified as means of guarding against escalating price wars among alcohol retailers that may lead to excessive consumption. See Slimp v. Dep't of Liquor Control, 239 Conn. 599, 687 A.2d 123, 129 \(Conn. 1996\) (noting "legislature's concern that artificial inducements to purchase liquor will result in increased consumption"); Eder Bros. v. Wine Merchants of Conn., Inc., 880 A.2d 138, 147, 275 Conn. 363 \(Conn. 2005\) (noting that "price wars among retail dealers" for liquor "may induce persons to purchase, and therefore consume, more liquor than they would if higher prices were maintained"); Eder Bros., 880 A.2d at 147-48 (noting that "the cutthroat competition" characteristic of price wars "is apt to induce the retailers to commit such infractions of the law as selling to minors and keeping open after hours in order to withstand the economic pressure"). These provisions (particularly the price-discrimination provision) have also been justified as guarding against favoritism within the liquor industry and protecting smaller retailers. See Slimp, 687 A.2d at 129. Unsurprisingly, countervailing arguments have also been made, including ones noting the anti-competitive nature of these price restraints.

[*27] B. Total Wine's Complaint

Total Wine is the largest [**12] retailer of wine and spirits in the United States. Headquartered in Bethesda, Maryland, Total Wine, with its affiliates, owns and operates wine and liquor stores in 21 states.

---

(b) No retail permittee shall sell alcoholic liquor at a price below his or her cost.

Relatedly, Section 30-68m\(a\)\(3\) defines "bottle price" as:

[the] price per unit of the contents of any case of alcoholic liquor, other than beer [which] shall be arrived at by dividing the case price by the number [**9] of units or bottles making up such case price and adding to the quotient an amount that is not less than the following: A unit or bottle one-half pint or two hundred milliliters or less, two cents; a unit or bottle more than one-half pint or two hundred milliliters but not more than one pint or five hundred milliliters, four cents; and a unit or bottle greater than one pint or five hundred milliliters, eight cents.

No holder of any wholesaler's permit shall ship, transport or deliver within this state or any territory therein or sell or offer for sale, to a purchaser holding a permit [**10] for the sale of alcoholic liquor for on or off premises consumption, any brand of alcoholic liquor, including cordials, as defined in section 30-1, at a bottle, can or case price higher than the lowest price at which such item is then being sold or offered for sale or shipped, transported or delivered by such wholesaler to any other such purchaser to which the wholesaler sells, offers for sale, ships, transports or delivers that brand of alcoholic liquor within this state.

Similarly, Section 30-63\(b\) of the Connecticut General Statutes provides:

No manufacturer, wholesaler or out-of-state shipper permittee shall discriminate in any manner in price discounts between one permittee and another on sales or purchases of alcoholic liquors bearing the same brand or trade name and of like age, size and quality, nor shall such manufacturer, wholesaler or out-of-state shipper permittee allow in any form any discount, rebate, free goods, allowance or other inducement for the purpose of making sales or purchases. Nothing in this subsection shall be construed to prohibit beer manufacturers, beer wholesalers or beer out-of-state shipper permittees from differentiating in the manner in which their products are packaged on the basis of on-site or off-site consumption.

In December 2012, Total Wine opened a retail beverage store in Norwalk, Connecticut, its first such store in the state. Since then, Total Wine has opened additional stores, in Milford, Manchester, and West Hartford, Connecticut.

On August 23, 2016, Total Wine filed suit against Jonathan Harris, the Commissioner of the DCP, and John Suchy, Director of the DLC, in their official capacities.<sup>5</sup> Seeking injunctive and declaratory relief, it brought a facial challenge to the three sets of statutory and regulatory provisions reviewed above governing the distribution and sale of alcoholic beverages in Connecticut: (1) the post-and-hold provisions, (2) the minimum-retail-price provisions, and (3) the price-discrimination and volume-discount-prohibition provisions. Total Wine alleged that these provisions bring about per se violations of § 1 of the Sherman Antitrust Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1, and so are preempted by that statute.

Total Wine's claim was that the Connecticut regulatory scheme eliminates incentives for alcoholic beverage wholesalers [\[\*\*13\]](#) to compete on the basis of price and invites wholesalers to maintain prices "substantially above what fair and ordinary market forces would dictate." App. at 19, Compl. ¶ 16. Total Wine further claimed that Connecticut's regulations inhibit meaningful price competition at the retail level.

Specifically, Total Wine claimed, the regulations, in two ways, bring about prices that exceed those that a competitive market would produce.

First, it argued, the post-and-hold provisions—and the opportunity they give wholesalers to match a lower price during the forthcoming month for a given product with no risk of sparking a price war—reduce any wholesaler's incentive to be the first to reduce price. The post-and-hold provisions, Total Wine argued, effectively bring about horizontal price fixing. As it put the point on appeal: "If a wholesaler were to drop its price on a particular product, its competitors would know immediately (from having seen the posted price), and would have four days to match the posted price." Appellant Br. at 8-9. Even if the wholesaler who had been the first to reduce its price still wished to set a price beneath its competitors, Total Wine noted, it would then be required to "hold [\[\*\*14\]](#) the lower price for an entire month—during which it would have no competitive advantage because its competitors would be charging the same price."<sup>6</sup> Id. at 9.

Second, Total Wine argued, Connecticut's system precludes retailers from competing on the basis of cost. Fundamentally, Total Wine noted, the minimum-retail-price provision is keyed to a definition of "[c]ost" that turns not on the retailer's actual cost but on the price charged to the retailer by the wholesaler. This, Total Wine argued, prevents a high-volume, lower-average-cost retailer such as itself from attracting customers by offering discounts enabled by its lower-cost structure. This result is exacerbated, Total Wine alleged, [\[\*28\]](#) by a practice in which wholesalers often engage: They set high minimum bottle prices, and then lower the case prices for the product without making corresponding reductions to the bottle price. While retailers (who buy almost exclusively by the case) take advantage of the reduced case price and buy larger quantities during months where the case price is lower, this, Total Wine alleged, does not benefit the consumer because retailers are required to sell the product at a margin fixed by the higher minimum bottle [\[\*\*15\]](#) price, which has effectively been set by the wholesaler. In this manner, Total Wine alleged, "wholesalers effectively control both retail price and retailers' profit margins," and retailers like Total Wine that wish to use their business efficiencies to reduce the prices offered to consumers are blocked from doing so. App. at 20, Compl. ¶ 17.

The end result, Total Wine alleged, is a market without meaningful price competition: "Competing wholesalers for the same brands routinely set the same bottle and case prices down to the penny, month after month, with each wholesaler exactly tracking its competitors' . . . case prices." Id., Compl. ¶ 19. In other words, Total Wine argued, the regulatory scheme promotes vertical price fixing. Total Wine's complaint attached data tables reflecting that, over long periods, leading wholesalers often have charged the same amount for each alcoholic beverage product—

<sup>6</sup> Total Wine's claim that the Connecticut regulations promote horizontal price fixing was substantially developed in its briefs on the motion to dismiss and further refined on appeal. Its Complaint overwhelmingly focused instead on its claims as to vertical price fixing. We conclude, however, that the Complaint satisfactorily pled both theories.

e.g., Bombay Sapphire, Grey Goose, Jose Cuervo Gold—and have adjusted prices in lockstep. These prices, Total Wine claimed, exceed those which a competitive market would produce: Citing a study, Total Wine alleged that Connecticut's regulatory scheme "result[s] in retail prices for wine and spirits [**16] in Connecticut that are as much as 24% higher than prices offered for identical products in the surrounding states." Id., Compl. ¶ 18.

Finally, Total Wine alleged, the Connecticut regulatory scheme does not entail active supervision by any state agency or instrumentality. Wholesalers post and retailers charge the prices they see fit, it alleged, without any review or intervention by regulators, save where a lawsuit has been brought claiming noncompliance with the state's regulations.

C. The Motion to Dismiss

On October 14, 2016, the defendants moved to dismiss. They were supported in this motion by five intervenors, four of which were trade associations and the fifth of which was a liquor distributor.<sup>7</sup>

On June 6, 2017, the district court, following argument, granted the motion to dismiss. See Conn. Fine Wine & Spirits v. Harris, LLC, 255 F. Supp. 3d 355 (D. Conn 2017). Analyzing the challenged provisions separately,<sup>8</sup> the district court applied as to each the first step in the two-step framework used to assess claims of preemption by § 1 of the Sherman Act in [*29] this Circuit.<sup>9</sup> As a threshold matter, the court inquired whether the restraints are unilateral ("imposed by the government . . . to the exclusion of private control") and hence immune from preemption by § 1, or hybrid [**17] (imposed by both the government and by granting "private actors a degree of regulatory control over competition" and hence capable of preemption. Id. at 364). Then, the court inquired whether the challenged provision brought about facially, or per se, unlawful restraints on trade, in which case they are preempted, or restraints that are subject to rule of reason scrutiny, in which case they are not. Id.

As to the post and hold restraint, the district court held that it is a hybrid restraint, but that the conduct it brings about is not per se unlawful, and so is subject to rule of reason analysis. Id. at 371. Therefore, it is not preempted. Id. The district court relied on Battipaglia v. New York State Liquor Authority, 745 F.2d 166 (2d Cir. 1984), in which we upheld New York State's post-and-hold provision as similarly not preempted.

As to the minimum resale price restraint, the district court held that it too was hybrid, but that it also implicated only the rule of reason, not condemnation per se. Id. at 373. The district court held that this provision imposed a vertical restraint. And, it noted, recent Supreme Court cases, in particular Leegin Creative Leather Prods., Inc. v. PSKS, Inc., 551 U.S. 877, 127 S. Ct. 2705, 168 L. Ed. 2d 623 (2007), have held that courts are to apply rule of reason, not per se, analysis to vertical restraints, meaning that this provision is not facially preempted. [**18] Id. at 378.

Finally, the district court held that Connecticut's provisions forbidding price discrimination amounted to a unilateral restraint on trade, imposed solely by the state and not involving private conduct. Id. That was because these provisions "simply prohibit[] liquor wholesalers from charging different prices to different retailers," and do not

<sup>7</sup>These were: the Wine & Spirit Wholesalers of Connecticut ("WSWC"), the Connecticut Beer Wholesalers Association ("CBWA"), the Connecticut Restaurant Association ("CRA") and the Connecticut Package Stores Association ("CPSA") (collectively, "the trade associations"), as well as Brescome Barton, Inc. ("Brescome" and, with the trade associations, "intervenors").

<sup>8</sup>The district court stated that separate consideration of each challenged provision was required (1) under principles of federalism, (2) because each provision presented distinct analytic issues under principles of antitrust preemption, and (3) because Connecticut's general rule of statutory construction provides that the invalidity of some sections of a statute should not invalidate the statute as a whole. See Conn. Fine Wine & Spirits, 255 F. Supp. 3d at 366-67; Conn. Gen. Stat. § 1-3.

"grant[] private actors a degree of regulatory authority over competition." Id. at 379. Thus, it held that these provisions, too, are not preempted. Id. at 380.

Accordingly, the district court upheld all challenged aspects of Connecticut's alcoholic beverage regulatory regime.

On June 26, 2017, Connecticut Fine Wine appealed.

DISCUSSION

This case presents questions of preemption: Does § 1 of the Sherman Antitrust Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1, which makes illegal "[e]very contract, combination . . . or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce," preempt the challenged provisions of Connecticut's Liquor Control Act?

We begin by reviewing the two key precedents that frame the § 1 preemption inquiry: Rice v. Norman Williams Co., 458 U.S. 654, 102 S. Ct. 3294, 73 L. Ed. 2d 1042 (1982), and Fisher v. City of Berkeley, California, 475 U.S. 260, 106 S. Ct. 1045, 89 L. Ed. 2d 206 (1986). Then, because the analysis differs by provision, we review serially the three sets of challenged provisions. We first address the minimum-resale-price restraint and then the prohibition on [**19] price discrimination. We last address the post-and-hold provisions, which are the primary focus of plaintiffs' challenge. [*30] None of the provisions, we hold, are preempted.<sup>10</sup>

A. Principles of Preemption Under § 1: Rice and Fisher

The Supreme Court's decisions in Rice and Fisher frame the § 1 preemption inquiry.

1. Rice: The Requirement That the State Law "Mandate or Authorize," or "Place Irresistible Pressure" on Private Parties to Bring About, a Per Se Violation of § 1

In Rice, the Court held that HN1[ the preemption inquiry under § 1 requires courts to apply principles similar to those which we employ in considering whether any state statute is pre-empted by a federal statute pursuant to the Supremacy Clause. As in the typical pre-emption case, the inquiry is whether there exists an irreconcilable conflict between the federal and state regulatory schemes. The existence of hypothetical or potential conflict is insufficient to warrant the pre-emption of the state statute. A state regulatory scheme is not pre-empted by the federal antitrust laws simply because in a hypothetical situation a private party's compliance with the statute might cause him to violate the antitrust laws. A state statute is not preempted by the federal [**20] antitrust laws simply because the state scheme might have an anticompetitive effect.

458 U.S. at 659 (citations omitted). Rather, the Court held, "[a] party may successfully enjoin the enforcement of a state statute only if the statute on its face irreconcilably conflicts with federal antitrust policy." Id. In other words, for a state statute to be preempted by § 1, the statute must bring about conduct that would require per se condemnation under § 1:

Our decisions in this area instruct us, therefore, that HN2[ a state statute, when considered in the abstract, may be condemned under the antitrust laws only if it mandates or authorizes conduct that necessarily constitutes a violation of the antitrust laws in all cases, or if it places irresistible pressure on a private party to violate the antitrust laws in order to comply with the statute. Such condemnation will follow under § 1 of the

<sup>10</sup> While we address the three areas separately here, we have also considered them in tandem. The outcome is the same: considered separately or as a whole, the provisions are not preempted. We therefore do not reach the question of which analysis would have been the right one had the difference been determinative.

Sherman Act when the conduct contemplated by the statute is in all cases a per se violation. If the activity addressed by the statute does not fall into that category, and therefore must be analyzed under the rule of reason, the statute cannot be condemned in the abstract. Analysis under the rule of reason requires an examination [**21] of the circumstances underlying a particular economic practice, and therefore does not lend itself to a conclusion that a statute is facially inconsistent with federal antitrust laws.

Id. at 661.

Applying these principles, the Rice Court upheld the codes at issue: California Alcoholic Beverage Control provisions which prohibited a licensed importer from importing any brand of distilled spirits for which it was not a designated importer. These, the Court explained, would not give rise in all instances to per se illegal conduct. Id. at 661-62.

2. Fisher: The Requirement of Concerted Action

In Fisher, the Court identified a related hurdle that a claim of preemption by § 1 [*31] must clear. At issue was a rent stabilization law enacted by the City of Berkeley, California, that placed strict controls on certain classes of real property rented for residential use. The ordinance required landlords to adhere to the prescribed rent ceilings; violators were subject to civil and criminal penalties. 475 U.S. at 262-63. A group of landlords sued the city, arguing that the ordinance was a traditional—and per se invalid—form of fixing prices.

The Supreme Court rejected that argument. HN3[] Sherman Act § 1, it noted, can be violated only by collective action: [**22] "unreasonable restraints of trade effected by a 'contract, combination . . . , or conspiracy' between separate entities." Id. at 266 (quoting Copperweld Corp. v. Indep. Tube Corp., 467 U.S. 752, 768, 104 S. Ct. 2731, 81 L. Ed. 2d 628 (1984)). But, the Court held, Berkeley's unilateral imposition of rent control did not amount to agreement or "concerted action." Id. The Court acknowledged that, had the Berkeley landlords banded together to fix rental prices in the absence of an ordinance, their action would have been a per se violation of the Sherman Act. Id. But the fact that the price-fixing ordinance resulted from the city acting unilaterally, not the landlords acting concertedly, saved it from preemption:

HN4[] A restraint imposed unilaterally by government does not become concerted-action within the meaning of the [Sherman Act] simply because it has a coercive effect upon parties who must obey the law. The ordinary relationship between the government and those who must obey its regulatory commands whether they wish to or not is not enough to establish a conspiracy. Similarly, the mere fact that all competing property owners must comply with the same provisions of the Ordinance is not enough to establish a conspiracy among landlords. Under Berkeley's Ordinance, control over the maximum rent levels [**23] of every affected residential unit has been unilaterally removed from the owners of these properties and given to the Rent Stabilization Board.

Id. at 267. In sum, the challenged rent control laws could exist, alongside § 1, because "the rent ceilings imposed by the Ordinance and maintained by the Rent Stabilization Board have been unilaterally imposed by government upon landlords to the exclusion of private control." Id. at 266. As the Court put the point: "There is no meeting of the minds here." Id. at 267.

The Supreme Court in Fisher was careful to limit its holding to unilateral action by a government entity. It recognized that a governmentally imposed restraint on trade that enforces private pricing decisions would be a "hybrid restraint" that fulfills the Sherman Act's "concerted action" requirement. The Court explained:

HN5[] Not all restraints imposed upon private actors by government units necessarily constitute unilateral action outside the purview of § 1. Certain restraints may be characterized as 'hybrid,' in that nonmarket mechanisms merely enforce private marketing decisions. See Rice, 458 U.S. at 665 (Stevens, J., concurring in the judgment). Where private actors are thus granted "a degree of private regulatory power," id. at 666 n.1, the regulatory [**24] scheme may be attacked under § 1."

Id. at 267-68.

We have previously read Rice and Fisher to constitute the first step in a two-step inquiry to decide whether a statute is preempted by § 1. See, e.g., Freedom Holdings Inc. v. Spitzer, 357 F.3d 205, 223 (2d Cir. 2004).<sup>11</sup>

B. Connecticut's Minimum-Retail-Price Provisions

The Court applies these principles, first, to the minimum-retail-price provisions. As noted, these provisions (e.g., Conn. Gen. Stat. § 30-68m) dictate the relationship between the liquor prices set by wholesalers and those set by retailers.

In 324 Liquor v. Duffy Corp., 479 U.S. 335, 107 S. Ct. 720, 93 L. Ed. 2d 667 (1987), the Supreme Court considered a similar New York statute, which "impose[d] a regime of resale price maintenance on all New York liquor retailers" and required them to charge at least 112% of the wholesaler's posted bottle price. Id. at 337, 341. The Supreme Court classified the New York statute, under Fisher, as a hybrid restraint. Id. at 345 n.8 (describing provisions as having granted "private actors . . . a degree of private regulatory power") (quoting Fisher, 475 U.S. at 268). Then, applying the Rice framework, the Court found the statute was "inconsistent with § 1" because it authorized per se violations of § 1 under precedents that, "since the early years of national antitrust enforcement," had so treated resale price maintenance agreements. Id. at 341 (quoting Monsanto Co. v. Spray-Rite Service Corp., 465 U.S. 752, 761, 104 S. Ct. 1464, 79 L. Ed. 2d 775 (1984)). Hence, the New York statute was preempted. [**25] Id. at 343.

The Supreme Court's classification in 324 Liquor of the minimum-retail-price restraints as hybrid, and hence capable of preemption by § 1, binds the Court here. The New York statute there is substantively identical to the Connecticut statute here. And the hybrid classification in 324 Liquor remains good law. See Freedom Holdings, 357 F.3d at 223-24 (noting that 324 Liquor found a hybrid arrangement based on limited private acts: "the individual determinations of each wholesaler as to what bottle price to post").

The same, however, cannot be said for the Supreme Court's application of Rice in 324 Liquor. The Court's premise, that the New York statute mandated per se violations of § 1, has been overtaken by a change in antitrust law. In 2007, the Supreme Court, culminating a line of decisions, held that rule of reason—and not per se—analysis applies to all vertical restraints. See Leegin, 551 U.S. at 882. Leegin overruled Dr. Miles Medical Co. v. John D. Park & Sons Co., 220 U.S. 373, 31 S. Ct. 376, 55 L. Ed. 502 (1911), the precedent cited by 324 Liquor as the fount of the doctrine that vertical price fixing arrangements are per se illegal. See 324 Liquor, 479 U.S. at 341. Henceforth, the Supreme Court stated, "vertical price restraints are to be judged by the rule of reason." Leegin, 551 U.S. at 882. Justifying the doctrinal change, the Court explained that "it cannot be stated [**26] with any degree of confidence that resale price maintenance 'always or almost always tend[s] to restrict competition and decrease output,'" id. at 894 (quoting Bus. Elecs. Corp. v. Sharp Elecs. Corp., 485 U.S. 717, 723, 108 S. Ct. 1515, 99 L. Ed. 2d 808 (1988)), noting that Leegin capped a gradual doctrinal [*33] move "away from Dr. Miles' strict approach," id. at 900.

In light of Leegin, 324 Liquor's holding that minimum-retail-price provisions constitute a per se violation of antitrust laws in all cases, 479 U.S. at 343, is, necessarily, no longer good law. The need to analyze vertical pricing arrangements under the rule of reason means that § 1 cannot preempt as per se unlawful even a statute that overtly mandates such arrangements. See Rice, 458 U.S. at 658 ("If the activity addressed by the statute . . . must be analyzed under the rule of reason, the statute cannot be condemned in the abstract. Analysis under the rule of reason requires an examination of the circumstances underlying a particular economic practice, and therefore does not lend itself to a conclusion that a statute is facially inconsistent with the federal antitrust laws.").

<sup>11</sup> In cases in which alcoholic-beverage laws are claimed to be preempted by § 1, states have sometimes additionally defended by asserting state action immunity, which is the second step in our Circuit's two-step preemption inquiry, and immunity derived from the Twenty First Amendment to the U.S. Constitution. Connecticut has not raised such defenses in connection with this appeal.

We therefore hold that HN6 Connecticut's minimum-retail-price provisions, compelling as they do only vertical pricing arrangements among private actors, are not preempted under § 1.<sup>12</sup>

C. Connecticut's Provisions Prohibiting [\[\*\*27\]](#) Price Discrimination

The Court next considers Connecticut's provisions prohibiting price discrimination. These provisions, as noted, require that wholesalers sell a given alcoholic product to all retailers at the same price.

For two reasons, we hold that these HN7 provisions are not preempted.

First, as the district court recognized, these provisions impose a unilateral restraint. They leave each wholesaler at liberty to choose the price it will charge all retailers for a product while prohibiting each from charging different prices to different retailers. Although limiting a wholesaler's range of motion, this provision does not grant any private actor "a degree of regulatory control over competition." Freedom Holdings Inc. v. Cuomo, 624 F.3d 38, 50 (2d Cir. 2010). Rather, like the rent cap set by the Berkeley municipality in Fisher, it is a restraint "imposed by government . . . to the exclusion of private control." Id. (citing Fisher, 475 U.S. at 266). Such a restraint does not implicate the concerns of concerted activity animating § 1.

Second, HN8 the price restraint worked by § 30-68k is purely vertical in operation. It limits the ability of a wholesaler that has already charged one retailer a given price to charge another retailer a different price. Therefore, even if this provision [\[\*\*28\]](#) could be viewed as a hybrid, rather than a unilateral, price-fixing provision, after Leegin, it would no longer implicate a category of conduct that remains per se unlawful. While its impact may be to harmonize prices at a retail level of beverages sold by a common wholesaler, the provision does not mandate—or even incent—collaboration among horizontal competitors. For this separate reason, under Rice, it is not preempted by § 1.

D. Connecticut's Post-and-Hold Provisions

The Court finally considers the post-and-hold provisions, described above. On the question whether § 1 preempts these provisions, the parties primarily dispute whether, as the district court held, Battipaglia, 745 F.2d 166, which rejected a [\[\*34\]](#) claim that § 1 preempted a New York liquor-pricing statute, is controlling here.

1. Review of Battipaglia

In Battipaglia, decided after Rice and before Fisher, a divided panel of this Court, per Judge Friendly, upheld a New York statute whose price restraint components governing the sale of liquor were strikingly similar to those at issue here. The New York law contained post-and-hold provisions that obliged wholesalers to file monthly price schedules with the state liquor authority by the fifth day of the preceding [\[\*\*29\]](#) month, Id. at 168 (citing N.Y. Alco. Bev. Cont. § 101-b(3)(b)), and authorized wholesalers to amend their filed schedules "to meet lower competing prices and discounts 'provided such amended prices and discounts are not lower and discounts are not greater than those to be met,'" id. (quoting N.Y. Alco. Bev. Cont. Law § 101-b(4)). The New York law also contained price-discrimination and minimum-retail-price provisions that constrained sales prices at the retail level. See id. (citing N.Y. Alco. Bev. Cont. § 101-b(2)).

In the relevant portion of its analysis,<sup>13</sup> Battipaglia held that the challenged post-and-hold provisions were not preempted. It noted that these provisions "do not compel any agreement" among wholesalers. Id. at 170. Rather, the Court stated: "The schedules required to be filed by the wholesalers are their individual acts." Id. And the Battipaglia plaintiffs (a liquor store owner and a wholesaler) had not alleged that "any agreement among the wholesalers" arose as a result of these laws. Id.

Battipaglia addressed and rejected two arguments the plaintiffs had made for preemption.

First, the Court distinguished California Retail Liquor Dealers Ass'n v. Midcal Aluminum, 445 U.S. 97, 100 S. Ct. 937, 63 L. Ed. 2d 233 (1980), which, like 324 Liquor, had held preempted a state statute that "created a resale price maintenance system for wine." Battipaglia, 745 F.2d at 170; see also [**30] id. at 171 (describing California statute as having forced "all persons at various levels of the chain of distribution . . . to establish identical prices fixed by the brand owner for each brand of wine" and stating that this type of "vertical control" was impermissible under § 1). In contrast, the Court stated, New York's post-and-hold provisions "plainly are not a resale price maintenance scheme." Id. at 172. And, the Court again noted, the New York law did not constrain wholesalers, each of which "is completely free to file whatever price schedule he desires." Id. As Judge Friendly put the point: "Midcal simply did not deal with a statute like New York's which merely requires wholesalers to post and adhere to their own unilaterally determined prices and nothing more." Id.

Second, the Court addressed the argument that the post-and-hold law gave rise to a per se violation of § 1 because (1) it "forces each wholesaler to inform other wholesaler[s] of its prices and then to adhere for a month to them (or a lowered price meeting that of a competitor filed within three days)" and (2) "if this had [*35] been done pursuant to an agreement [among wholesalers], the agreement would have constituted a violation of § 1." Id. Rejecting [**31] this argument, the Court reiterated that § 1 "is directed only at joint action and does not prohibit independent business actions and decisions." Id. (internal citations omitted).

The Court then paused on the conceptual issue of whether, to be preempted by § 1, a state law must compel an actual agreement among competitors. The Court described as "appealing" the reasoning that:

Section 1 requires an agreement, state compulsion of individual action is the very antithesis of an agreement, and the argument that an agreement could have been inferred if the wholesalers had voluntarily done what they been compelled to do is simply too 'iffy.'

Id. at 173.<sup>14</sup> At the same time, the Court acknowledged "some force" to the counterargument: that "a statute compelling conduct which, in its absence, would permit the inference of an agreement unlawful under § 1 is inconsistent with that section." Id. In the end, the Court stated, there was no need to resolve this conceptual issue. That was because the New York law did not meet the Rice standard for preemption. Id.

Rice, the Court emphasized, had held that HN9 "[a] state regulatory scheme is not pre-empted by the federal antitrust laws simply because in a hypothetical [**32] situation a private party's compliance with the statute might cause him to violate the antitrust laws." Id. at 174 (quoting Rice, 458 U.S. at 659). Rather, under Rice, a state law could be "condemned under the antitrust laws only if it mandates or authorizes conduct that necessarily constitutes a violation of the antitrust laws in all cases, or if it places irresistible pressure on a private party to violate the antitrust laws in order to comply with the statute." Id. (quoting Rice, 458 U.S. at 661). New York's statute did not do that, the Court stated, because the only conduct that it compelled—"the exchange of price information" among competitors—does not "constitute a violation of the antitrust laws in all cases." Id. at 174. Such an exchange might or might not signify an agreement among them. See id. at 175 ("[T]he dissemination of price information is not a per se violation of the Sherman Act." (quoting United States v. Citizens & S. Nat'l Bank, 422 U.S. 86, 113, 95 S. Ct. 2099, 45 L. Ed. 2d 41 (1975) (internal citations omitted))). That the post-and-hold law might result in common wholesaler pricing did not support inferring an agreement either, the Court stated. Absent "plus factors" signifying an agreement, "conscious parallelism" among competitors did not equate to an agreement. Id. (citations omitted).

<sup>13</sup> Battipaglia addressed two other issues not presented here. It discussed—but did not resolve—whether, if the New York law were in conflict with § 1, it was nonetheless insulated from attack by the "state action" doctrine of Parker v. Brown, 317 U.S. 341, 63 S. Ct. 307, 87 L. Ed. 315 (1943). See Battipaglia, 745 F.2d at 176-77. And it addressed whether, if the New York law were in conflict with § 1, the state's important policy interests warranted deference under § 2 of the Twenty-First Amendment. Id. at 177-79 (holding that, on the case record, such deference was warranted).

<sup>14</sup> As support for this view, the Court cited a district court decision finding against preemption and rejecting the argument that "simply because the statute compelled individual actions which, if taken pursuant to an agreement, might have constituted a violation," the statute was preempted. Id. at 173 (quoting U.S. Brewers Ass'n, Inc. v. Healy, 532 F. Supp. 1312, 1329-30 (D. Conn.), rev'd on other grounds, 692 F.2d 275 (2d Cir. 1982)), aff'd, 464 U.S. 909, 104 S. Ct. 265, 78 L. Ed. 2d 248 (1983)).

The Battipaglia Court concluded:

Section 101-b thus does [**33] not mandate or authorize conduct that necessarily constitutes a violation of the antitrust laws in all cases. New York wholesalers can fulfill their obligations under the statute without either conspiring to fix prices or engaging in consciously parallel pricing. So, even more clearly, the New York law does not place irresistible pressure on a private party to violate the antitrust laws in order to comply with it. It requires [*36] only that, having announced a price independently chosen by him, the wholesaler shall stay with it for a month.

Id. (internal quotation marks omitted).

In dissent, Judge Winter faulted Judge Friendly's majority opinion for dwelling on the "post" component of New York's law and paying too little heed to the law's "hold" component. Were competitors to enter into an agreement to hold their prices in place for 30 days, he observed, such a private agreement would be horizontal price fixing and per se illegal. See 745 F.2d at 179-80 (Winter, J., dissenting). The Fourth and Ninth Circuits, the only two circuit courts to address similar laws, have sided with Judge Winter. Each has emphasized that the statutory requirement of adherence to posted prices, were it adopted by private agreement, [**34] would be per se illegal price fixing. See Costco Wholesale Corp. v. Maleng, 522 F.3d 874 (9th Cir. 2008) (holding Washington provisions preempted by § 1); Miller v. Hedlund, 813 F.2d 1344 (9th Cir. 1987) (holding Oregon provisions not exempt from § 1 and remanding the case to the district court for a determination whether the Twenty First Amendment shielded the challenged regulations); TFWS, Inc. v. Schaefer, 242 F.3d 198, 210 (4th Cir. 2001) (holding Maryland provisions preempted by § 1, while reserving on whether, under the Twenty First Amendment, Maryland's regulatory interests with respect to alcohol trumped federal interest under the Sherman Act); see also 1 Phillip E. Areeda & Herbert Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law ¶ 217, at 388-89 & nn.45-53 (4th ed. 2013) (reviewing reported decisions, including lower court decisions in each direction).

2. Battipaglia Controls Here

We find Battipaglia controlling authority here.

Connecticut's post-and-hold provisions are substantially identical to the New York post-and-hold provisions upheld in that case. Total Wine does not contend otherwise. Both sets of provisions required the wholesaler to set and publicly file a price that it is going to charge the retailer; both provided a brief time window in which wholesalers may match a lower price set by a competitor; and both required the wholesaler to hold that price for one month.

Further, as the above discussion [**35] reflects, the Court in Battipaglia considered at length the § 1 preemption question in the face of similar arguments to those Total Wine makes here. The Court applied the controlling standards, from Rice, to these provisions. The Court held that the post-and-hold provisions did not "mandate or authorize conduct 'that necessarily constitutes a violation of the antitrust laws in all cases'" or "place[ ] irresistible pressure on a private party to violate the antitrust laws in order to comply" with it. Id. at 175 (quoting Rice, 458 U.S. at 661). Those are the questions presented here.

Finally, Total Wine has not identified any later precedent of the Supreme Court or this Court that fairly calls Battipaglia's vitality into question.

Total Wine argues that 324 Liquor and our decision in Freedom Holdings, 357 F.3d at 223 (Winter, J.) are such precedent. A footnote in 324 Liquor suggested that a statute need not bring about an actual agreement between private parties to be preempted by § 1. See 324 Liquor, 479 U.S. at 345-46 n.8 (rejecting New York's defense that provisions at issue had not yielded a "contract, combination, or conspiracy in restraint of trade"). Freedom Holdings picked up on that footnote to suggest, in a footnote of its own, that "an actual 'contract, combination, [*37] or conspiracy' [**36] need not be shown for a state statute to be preempted by the Sherman Act." See 357 F.3d at 223 n.17 (Winter, J.) (citing 324 Liquor, 479 U.S. at 345-46 n.8). Total Wine argues, on account of these statements, that these decisions vitiate Battipaglia.

For three reasons, they do not.

First, Freedom Holdings itself distinguished Battipaglia and treated it as good law. Freedom Holdings recognized that, although the Battipaglia majority had discussed whether a state law must give rise to an actual agreement for § 1 to preempt it, Battipaglia ultimately did not resolve nor rule on the basis of that conceptual issue. Rather, Battipaglia had relied on its application of the Rice standard to New York's post-and-hold provision. See id. (recognizing that Battipaglia "did not reach the question" whether "a private contract, combination, or conspiracy" must be shown for Sherman Act preemption to occur (internal citation omitted)).

Second, to the extent that Freedom Holdings and 324 Liquor opine on whether the state law at issue must give rise to an actual private agreement for there to be preemption, these cases are readily distinguished factually because they involved express or readily implied agreements. Freedom Holdings involved an express contract [*37] among horizontal competitors—a "Master Settlement Agreement" among major tobacco manufacturers pursuant to which the challenged New York legislation had been enacted. Freedom Holdings, 357 F.3d at 208. Its discussion of whether the state law must give rise to such an agreement was, therefore, dicta. See id. at 224 ("Even if a 'contract' among private parties is required in the first step of preemption analysis, therefore, it exists in the present matter."). As for 324 Liquor, it addressed vertical restraints affecting a wholesaler-retailer relationship. In that context, the wholesaler and each of its retailers were in privity and necessarily had an agreement to buy from and/or sell to each other. They entered into these agreements against the backdrop (and presumably with the knowledge) of the price-fixing term that state law would supply. In fact, every Supreme Court case to hold state liquor laws preempted by § 1, has done so on the ground that these laws either mandated or authorized forms of then per se unlawful vertical price-fixing arrangements between wholesalers and retailers. See, e.g., Midcal, 445 U.S. 97, 100 S. Ct. 937, 63 L. Ed. 2d 233 (California law mandated resale price maintenance among wholesaler and its retailers); 324 Liquor, 479 U.S. 335 (same as to New York [**38] law); Schwegmann Bros. v. Calvert Distillers Corp., 341 U.S. 384, 71 S. Ct. 745, 95 L. Ed. 1035, 60 Ohio Law Abs. 81 (1951) (same as to Louisiana law per an interpretation of § 1 as amended by the now-repealed Miller-Tydings Act). Of course, as noted earlier, the application of preemption doctrine to vertical price fixing arrangements has been overtaken by Leegin's removal of vertical restraints from per se condemnation.

Third, and finally, two post-Battipaglia decisions of the Supreme Court, each involving claims of horizontal price-fixing, lend support to Judge Friendly's reasoning in finding against preemption. One, Fisher, discussed earlier, does so by narrowing the scope of state action within § 1's preemptive reach. The other, Bell Atlantic Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007), does so by underscoring the limited scope of private conduct capable of per se violating § 1.

Fisher, as noted, upheld Berkeley's rental-cap ordinance in the face of a § 1 preemption claim that it brought about horizontal price fixing. The Supreme Court recognized that "[h]ad the owners of residential rental property in Berkeley voluntarily [*38] banded together to stabilize rents in the city," that concerted activity would have worked a per se violation of § 1. Fisher, 475 U.S. at 266. But, the Court emphasized, more was required. There needed to be concerted action. "A restraint imposed unilaterally by government [**39] does not become concerted-action within the meaning of the statute simply because it has a coercive effect upon parties who must obey the law." Id. at 267. "[T]he mere fact that all competing property owners must comply with the same provisions of the Ordinance is not enough to establish a conspiracy among landlords." Id.

This requirement is significant here. We do not take issue with the holding of the district court here that, given the participation that a post-and-hold law requires of each wholesaler in connection with the posting component, Connecticut's law, viewed as a whole, qualifies as hybrid under Fisher.<sup>15</sup> But we doubt that such a law mandates or authorizes "concerted action" among the wholesalers subject to it. Particularly as to the "hold" component of the law that was the basis of the Battipaglia dissent, Connecticut's prohibition on altering prices for a 30-day period is a purely negative restraint. It does not call for any private action, let alone concerted action. See Hertz Corp. v. City of New York, 1 F.3d 121, 127 (2d Cir. 1993) (finding hybrid, but upholding, city statute that "eliminate[d] an element of price competition" among rental-car industry competitors); cf. Flying J. Inc. v. van Hollen, 621 F.3d 658, 662-63 (7th Cir. 2010) ("[I]t is only when a state law mandates or authorizes [**40] collusive conduct that it is preempted by federal antitrust law." (citing Fisher, 475 U.S. at 265)). Fisher's emphasis on the need for concerted action reinforces that Judge Friendly was right both to focus on the posting, rather than the holding, component of New York's post-and-hold law, and to find the law non-preempted.

As to Twombly, although it is more commonly cited for its articulation of pleading standards, the Court in its substantive discussion homed in on the discrete evil prohibited by § 1. HN10 "§ 1 of the Sherman Act" does not prohibit [all] unreasonable restraints of trade." Twombly, 550 U.S. at 553. It prohibits "only restraints effected by a contract, combination, or conspiracy." Id. (emphasis added). The Court explained, therefore, that in § 1 cases, "[t]he crucial question is whether the challenged anticompetitive conduct stem[s] from independent decision or from an agreement." Id. (internal citations omitted). Even conscious parallel acts based on competitors' mutual recognition of "shared economic interests" are not "in [themselves] unlawful." Id. at 553-54 (quoting Brooke Grp. Ltd. v. Brown & Williamson Tobacco Corp., 509 U.S. 209, 227, 113 S. Ct. 2578, 125 L. Ed. 2d 168 (1993)); see also United States v. Apple, Inc., 791 F.3d 290, 315 (2d Cir. 2015) ("[P]arallel behavior that does not result from an agreement is not unlawful even if it is anticompetitive."). In other words, under § 1, that conscious [**41] parallel conduct can create an equally uncompetitive market to parallel conduct achieved by agreement is of no moment. The gravamen of § 1 is an agreement among competitors.

On this basis, Twombly upheld the dismissal of a complaint that alleged consciously parallel decisions among recently [*39] deregulated telecommunications carriers not to compete in one another's (horizontal) regional markets. The complaint had not alleged actual agreement among the carriers, and its allegations were consistent with "natural" and "unilateral" behavior by each carrier, as each had good reason to appreciate that its self-interest lay in forebearing from initiating competition. See 550 U.S. at 564, 566; see also id. at 568 ("[The carriers] doubtless liked the world the way it was, and surely knew the adage about him who lives by the sword. Hence, a natural explanation for the noncompetition alleged is that the former Government-sanctioned monopolists were sitting tight, expecting their neighbors to do the same thing.")

Twombly's reasoning resonates here because, under a post-and-hold law, there is a "natural" explanation— independent of any agreement or coordination among liquor wholesalers—for these competitors to arrive at common monthly [**42] product prices. Such a law authorizes a wholesaler, during the four days after initial posting, to match a competitor's lower price, with such prices then held for a month. Under these circumstances, the law itself invites and facilitates conscious parallelism in pricing. It puts in public view each competing wholesaler's price quotes. And it authorizes, but it does not oblige, wholesalers during a defined window unilaterally to match (or parallel) a competitor's lower price as the "held" price for the coming month. Nothing about this arrangement requires, anticipates, or incents communication or collaboration among the competing wholesalers. Quite the contrary: A post-and-hold law like Connecticut's leaves a wholesaler little reason to make contact with a competitor. The separate, unilateral acts by each wholesaler of posting and matching instead are what gives rise to any synchronicity of pricing. To mirror Twombly: "[A] natural explanation for the noncompetition alleged," id. at 568, is that the state-regulated wholesalers are independently making pricing decisions within a framework aimed at avoiding price wars that invites them, before being held to a price for a month, to match that of [**43] their competitors. A post-and-hold law, therefore, does not implicate the evil against which § 1 guards: an agreement to unreasonably restrain trade. It would make little sense to preempt a state statute which facilitates parallel conduct that parties can legally undertake on their own under § 1.

<sup>15</sup> In finding that the statute grants private actors "a degree of private regulatory power" so as to qualify as hybrid, Fisher, 475 U.S. at 268, the district court relied on 324 Liquor, which had held hybrid a resale-price maintenance law with similar price-posting features. See Conn. Fine Wine & Spirits, 255 F. Supp. 3d at 369.

Under these circumstances, we do not find reason to conclude that Battipaglia has been, sub silentio, overruled. If anything, its reasoning has been fortified by intervening decisions like Fisher and Twombly. Battipaglia therefore controls Total Wine's challenge to Connecticut's post-and-hold provisions. See United States v. Moore, 949 F.2d 68, 71 (2d Cir. 1991) (HN11[]) prior opinions of a Second Circuit panel bind future panels "in the absence of a change in the law by higher authority" or a ruling by the en banc Court). Any application to revisit Battipaglia is beyond this panel's authority. Battipaglia remains good—and persuasive—law.

CONCLUSION

For the reasons above, we affirm the decision below. We hold that the challenged provisions of Connecticut law governing liquor pricing are not preempted by § 1 of the Sherman Act.

OPINION AND ORDER

When a consumer enters a supermarket, she may see an instant coupon dispenser on a shelf or a cardboard structure in an aisle promoting a specific product. These types of displays are generically referred to as in-store promotions ("ISPs"). Providers of ISPs pay supermarket retailers for the exclusive right to place ISPs in the retailer's entire chain of stores. Having locked up the chain, the ISP provider then markets its ability to place ISPs to manufacturers and distributors of consumer packaged goods ("CPGs"). CPGs then pay ISP providers to place ISPs for their products into the retailer's stores. In addition to supermarkets (i.e. the "food" segment), similar arrangements are made in the "drug" and "dollar" segments of the ISP market.

One ISP provider, Valassis [<sup>3</sup>] Communications, Inc., brings an assortment of claims, including, monopolization, predatory pricing, and exclusive dealing claims, against the dominant player in the market, News Corporation and its affiliates (collectively, "News").<sup>1</sup>

News now moves for summary judgment dismissing all of Valassis's claims. For reasons that will be explained, that motion will be granted in part and denied in part.

THE COMPLAINT AND THE PROCEDURAL HISTORY OF THE ACTION

For most of its life, this action has been pending in the Eastern District of Michigan. Three years and ten months after filing, it was transferred to this district and assigned to the undersigned.

Valassis alleged eight counts of federal antitrust violations and eight counts of state law violations, numbered below according to the complaint. Specifically, Valassis alleged violations of sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act and section 3 of the Clayton Act: (I) monopolization of the ISP market in violation of 15 U.S.C. § 2; (II) predatory pricing in the ISP market in violation of 15 U.S.C. § 2; (III) attempted monopolization of the market for free-standing inserts ("FSIs"), a form of coupon distribution, in violation of 15 U.S.C. § 2; (IV) exclusive dealing with retailers in the ISP market in violation [<sup>4</sup>] of 15 U.S.C. §§ 1&2 and 15 U.S.C. § 14; (V) exclusive dealing with CPGs in the ISP market in violation of 15 U.S.C. §§ 1&2 and 15 U.S.C. § 14; (VI) exclusive dealing with CPGs in the FSI market in violation of 15 U.S.C. §§ 1&2 and 15 U.S.C. § 14; (VII) bundling in violation of 15 U.S.C. §§ 1&2 and 15 U.S.C. § 14; and (VIII) tying in violation of 15 U.S.C. § 1 and 15 U.S.C. § 14. Valassis also alleged state law claims under (IX) the Michigan Antitrust Reform Act, (X) the California Cartwright Act, (XI) the California Unfair Trade Practices Act, (XII) the common law of unfair competition, and (XIII)-(XVI) the common law of tortious interference.

Judge Tarnow, to whom the case was then assigned, dismissed Valassis' bundling and tying claims (Counts VII and VIII) and later transferred the suit to the Southern District of New York. (Docs. 60; 115).

Valassis has confirmed that it is no longer pursuing its FSI-related claims. (Doc. 131; Oct. 20, 2017 Tr. at 4:9-11). The Court accordingly dismisses Counts III, VI, and XI. With respect to the remaining claims, News's motion will be granted with respect to so-called predatory bidding allegations and otherwise denied.

THE UNDISPUTED FACTS

The following facts are undisputed except where otherwise noted. The Court has drawn all reasonable inferences in favor of Valassis, as the nonmovant. [<sup>5</sup>] See Costello v. City of Burlington, 632 F.3d 41, 45 (2d Cir. 2011).

Both Valassis and News are in the business of selling ISPs, in-store promotions, to CPGs. (Def. 56.1 ¶ 1; Pl. 56.1 Resp. ¶ 1). ISP providers place such things as shelf signs and coupon machines into retail stores. (Id.). To place ISPs into retail stores, ISP providers must obtain contracts with individual retailers. (Pl. 56.1 ¶ 25; Def. 56.1 Resp. ¶ 25). CPGs then purchase these ISPs from the ISP providers and use them to advertise CPG products in the retail stores. (Def. 56.1 ¶ 1; Pl. 56.1 Resp. ¶ 1).

News's Alleged Anticompetitive Conduct

News entered the ISP market in 1997 and has been the dominant player in the market since its entry. (Pl. 56.1 ¶¶ 24, 31, 35; Def. 56.1 Resp. ¶¶ 24, 31, 35). During the period at issue, News had only one competitor as an ISP provider, Valassis. (Id.). Over the course of Valassis's ISP business, Valassis and News competed in the "food," "drug," and "dollar" segments of the ISP market. (Levinsohn Report at Ex. 10).

News engaged in a variety of conduct that Valassis alleges was anticompetitive. This conduct includes entering into long-term contracts with retailers; staggering the expiration dates of those contracts; employing exclusivity provisions; [*6] employing "wind-down" provisions that allowed News's presence at retailer stores to continue past the contract end date; employing autorenewal provisions; preemptively renewing contracts with retailers before the contracts expired; employing provisions that prohibited retailers from discussing potential contracts with News's competitors; obtaining long-term, exclusive commitments from CPGs; and increasing its guaranteed commissions to retailers to win contracts while Valassis was a market participant (collectively, the "alleged anticompetitive conduct"). (Def. 56.1 ¶ 20; Pl. 56.1 Resp. ¶ 20; Pl. 56.1 ¶¶ 66-69, 70-89, 99-114; Def. 56.1 Resp. ¶¶ 66-69, 70-89, 99-114). News's current CEO has highlighted some of this conduct when discussing News's "proven strategy," noting that News aims to "secure long-term retail deals where the revenue-share remains constant over the term of the agreement[,] . . . [and] stagger the deals to prevent a large percentage of the network from being vulnerable at any specific point in time." (Pl. 56.1 ¶ 51; Def. 56.1 Resp. ¶ 51).<sup>2</sup>

News's exclusive long-term contracts with food retailers averaged 4.5 years in length. (Pl. 56.1 ¶ 72; Def. 56.1 Resp. ¶ [*7] 72). Some contracts, like those with Ahold, Kroger, and Safeway, ranged from seven to ten years. (Pl. 56.1 ¶¶ 51, 80; Def. 56.1 Resp. ¶¶ 51, 80). These contracts employed exclusivity provisions, which News's Vice President of Sales has described as "the crux of [News's] agreement and payment model." (Pl. 56.1 ¶ 69; Def. 56.1 Resp. ¶ 69). News preemptively renewed contracts with CVS, Kroger, and others as part of what News called "Project Preempt," years before they were set to expire because News "[didn't] want deals to get . . . close to expiration" for fear of losing the contract to Valassis. (Pl. 56.1 ¶¶ 75-78, 81-83, 89, 111-112; Def. 56.1 Resp. ¶¶ 75-78, 81-83, 89, 111-112). News sometimes used these preemptive renewals to effectuate the staggering of end dates on its retailer contracts. (Pl. 56.1 ¶¶ 85, 89; Def. 56.1 Resp. ¶¶ 85, 89). Some retailer contracts never became available during Valassis's tenure, including contracts with Safeway and Kroger, the largest food retailer in the ISP market. (Pl. 56.1 ¶¶ 79, 108-09, 111, 113; Def. 56.1 Resp. ¶¶ 79, 108-09, 111, 113). When retailer contracts did become available, News competed with Valassis for these contracts by increasing [*8] its guaranteed retailer commissions "to protect [its] store network." (Pl. 56.1 ¶¶ 83, 91-94; Def. 56.1 Resp. ¶¶ 83, 91-94). Further, pursuant to its long-term, exclusive contracts with CPGs, News held CPGs to the number of stores for which they contracted, regardless of whether News lost retailers to Valassis. (Pl. 56.1 ¶¶ 101-04; Def. 56.1 Resp. ¶¶ 101-04).

Valassis's Exit From the ISP Market

In order to become a viable competitor in the ISP business in the long run, an ISP provider must obtain more than just a few retailers—it must obtain a "critical mass." (Pl. 56.1 ¶ 51; Def. 56.1 Resp. ¶ 51). To achieve such a critical mass, an ISP provider must accumulate a large number of retailers and establish a retailer network that has nationwide reach; the retailers should be high quality retailers (i.e. retailers that sell a relatively high volume of products and thus have a high "all commodities volume" ("ACV")). (Pl. 56.1 ¶¶ 44-48; Def. 56.1 Resp. ¶¶ 44-48). Without a critical mass of retailers, a new ISP provider will not be able to attract enough CPG spending to generate the revenue needed to contract with more retailers. (Pl. 56.1 ¶ 49; Def. 56.1 Resp. ¶ 49). In discussing News's strategy, [*9] its current CEO has acknowledged that "[a] big part of being successful with our [CPG] clients is having the critical mass to deliver promotions that move volume." (Pl. 56.1 ¶ 43; Def. 56.1 Resp. ¶ 43). News's liability expert, Kevin Murphy, has similarly opined that an ISP provider with a large retail network has a "natural advantage" when competing with an operator of a smaller network. (Def. 56.1 ¶¶ 5, 21; Pl. 56.1 Resp. ¶¶ 5, 21). In its brief, News acknowledges that "[a]ccess to retailers is a key input for an ISP business." (Def. Brief at 6).

<sup>2</sup> News argues that statements made by News's CEO prior to February 4, 2010 (Pl. 56.1 ¶¶ 43, 51, 85) are inadmissible at trial, and thus should not be considered on summary judgment, as a result of a settlement agreement signed on that date by Valassis and News. In the settlement agreement, Valassis released all then-existing claims against News. (Doc. 244-5). Though the statements by News's CEO were made in 2004 and 2007, Valassis's present claims do not arise from these statements or the conduct described therein. Instead, the statements are offered and considered as some evidence of News's understanding of market dynamics and later intent in adopting market strategies. In an analogous context, the Second Circuit has held that where the statute of limitations for a Title VII employment discrimination claim expired on a certain date, "any discrete acts occurring before that date are not actionable," but a court may still consider those acts as relevant "background evidence." Jute v. Hamilton Sundstrand Corp., 420 F.3d 166, 176 (2d Cir. 2005); see also Domenech v. New York City Employees' Ret. Sys., No. 15-CV-2521 (ILG), 2016 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 61175, 2016 WL 2644892, at *4 (E.D.N.Y. May 9, 2016) ("Although [plaintiff's] attempted termination is not actionable (the plaintiff released that claim as part of a settlement), . . . it is evidence of retaliatory intent.").

Valassis entered the ISP business in 2010. (Def. 56.1 ¶¶ 2-3; Pl. 56.1 Resp. ¶¶ 2-3). During its tenure, Valassis obtained contracts with retailers that included Supervalu, A&P, Winn-Dixie, Rite Aid, and Family Dollar. (Def. 56.1 ¶ 4; Pl. 56.1 Resp. ¶ 4). Valassis's ISP business was profitable over the first three quarters. (Def. 56.1 ¶ 5; Pl. 56.1 Resp. ¶ 5). However, Valassis was unable to obtain a critical mass of retailers and exited the food ISP segment in 2014 and the drug segment in 2015. (Pl. 56.1 ¶¶ 136-42; Def. 56.1 Resp. ¶¶ 136-42). Valassis now only places signs in Family Dollar. (Id.).

Valassis's liability expert, Jeffrey MacKie-Mason, [*10] opined that News's conduct ensured that no ISP provider was ever able to secure a critical mass of retailers and that but for News's anticompetitive conduct, it is "highly likely" that Valassis would have reached critical mass, remained profitable, and persisted as a viable competitor to News. (Pl. 56.1 ¶¶ 50, 105, 143-47; Def. 56.1 Resp. ¶¶ 50, 105, 143-47). Moreover, News's current CEO has suggested that the goal of News's strategy was to make it more difficult for competitors to obtain a critical mass of retailers. Specifically, he stated that "[News's strategy] means that any competitor who wants to develop critical mass for their network would have to dedicate a lot of money over a considerable amount of time in order to break into the in-store game in any significant way." (Pl. 56.1 ¶ 51; Def. 56.1 Resp. ¶ 51). Additionally, he stated "[News's] strategy serves as a deterrent to other major competitors from joining the In-Store fray—because they know that it will be a long hard fought, drawn out process to develop the critical mass necessary to be successful in this arena." (Pl. 56.1 ¶ 43; Def. 56.1 Resp. ¶ 43).

Valassis's employees have testified that Valassis's lack of critical [*11] mass led to its inability to succeed as an ISP provider. (Pl. 56.1 ¶¶ 118-19; Def. 56.1 Resp. ¶ 118-19). Valassis's internal surveys indicate that some CPGs did not contract with Valassis because of its limited retailer network and lack of coverage. (Pl. 56.1 ¶¶ 117; Def. 56.1 Resp. ¶¶ 117). Prior to Valassis's entry, News had two other competitors in the ISP business, Floorgraphics and Insignia. (Pl. 56.1 ¶¶ 34, 52, 145; Def. 56.1 Resp. ¶¶ 34, 52, 145). According to MacKie-Mason, both exited the ISP business within a few years of entry because they were also unable to obtain a critical mass of retailers. (Id.).

While Valassis was unable to attract CPG revenue due to a lack of critical mass, Valassis's costs increased as a result of competing with News's guaranteed retailer commissions. (Pl. 56.1 ¶¶ 90, 97, 101, 105, 125, 129-136; Def. 56.1 Resp. ¶¶ 90, 97, 101, 105, 125, 129-136). As a result, Valassis eventually began losing money. (Pl. 56.1 ¶¶ 131, 136; Def. 56.1 Resp. ¶¶ 131, 136). Valassis's exit from the market injured its relationship with some CPGs. (Pl. 56.1 ¶ 140; Def. 56.1 Resp. ¶ 140). According to MacKie-Mason, had Valassis persisted, CPGs would have enjoyed lower prices, [*12] higher quality, more choices, and more innovation. (Pl. 56.1 ¶¶ 148-61; Def. 56.1 Resp. ¶¶ 148-61).

SUMMARY JUDGMENT STANDARD

Summary judgment "shall" be granted "if the movant shows that there is no genuine dispute as to any material fact and the movant is entitled to judgment as a matter of law." Rule 56\(a\), Fed. R. Civ. P. A fact is material if it "might affect the outcome of the suit under the governing law." Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc., 477 U.S. 242, 248, 106 S. Ct. 2505, 91 L. Ed. 2d 202 \(1986\). "A dispute regarding a material fact is genuine 'if the evidence is such that a reasonable jury could return a verdict for the nonmoving party.'" Weinstock v. Columbia Univ., 224 F.3d 33, 41 \(2d Cir. 2000\) (quoting Anderson, 477 U.S. at 248). On a motion for summary judgment, the court must "construe the facts in the light most favorable to the non-moving party" and "resolve all ambiguities and draw all reasonable inferences against the movant." Delaney v. Bank of Am. Corp., 766 F.3d 163, 167 \(2d Cir. 2014\).

It is the initial burden of the movant to come forward with evidence sufficient to entitle the movant to relief in its favor as a matter of law. Vt. Weyerhaeuser Co., 536 F.3d 140, 145 (2d Cir. 2008). If the moving party meets its burden, "the nonmoving [*13] party must come forward with admissible evidence sufficient to raise a genuine issue of fact for trial in order to avoid summary judgment." Id. In raising a triable issue of fact, the non-movant carries only "a limited burden of production," but nevertheless "must 'demonstrate more than some metaphysical doubt as to the material facts,' and come forward with 'specific facts showing that there is a genuine issue for trial.'" Powell v. Nat'l Bd. of Med. Exam'rs, 364 F.3d 79, 84 (2d Cir. 2004) (quoting Aslanidis v. U.S. Lines, Inc., 7 F.3d 1067, 1072 (2d Cir. 1993)). #### I. Valassis's Federal Antitrust Claims Valassis asserts that News engaged in a variety of anticompetitive conduct, which ultimately prevented Valassis from obtaining a critical mass of retailers and forced it to exit the ISP business in violation of sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act and section 3 of the Clayton Act. News argues that [*14] this Court should grant summary judgment in its favor on Valassis' federal antitrust claims because Valassis has not presented evidence upon which a reasonable jury could find that Valassis suffered antitrust injury.

Specifically, News argues that it did not engage in predatory pricing as a matter of law and because all of Valassis's damages result from News's alleged predatory pricing, Valassis suffered no antitrust injury and summary judgment is warranted on all of Valassis's federal claims. Viewing the summary judgment record as a whole and drawing every reasonable inference in favor of Valassis as the non-movant, the Court concludes that Valassis has not presented sufficient evidence that News engaged in predatory pricing through its use of retailer commissions and thus dismisses Valassis's standalone predatory pricing claim under section 2 of the Sherman Act (Count II). However, the Court holds that a reasonable trier of fact could find that Valassis suffered antitrust injury as a result of the other alleged anticompetitive conduct. Accordingly, this Court denies News's motion as to the remaining federal antitrust claims.

a. The Price-Cost Test Disposes of Valassis's Standalone Claim of [*15] Predatory Pricing and Bars Consideration of News's Retailer Commissions as Part of a "Monopoly Broth"

In its motion papers, Valassis urges the Court not to analyze News's retailer payments in isolation and to instead consider the payments as "only one part of a broader, mutually reinforcing, exclusionary scheme." (Pl. Br. at 22). Valassis argues that the Court should apply the rule of reason analysis to News's "monopoly broth" of conduct rather than the price-cost test for predatory pricing or bidding as articulated in Brooke Grp. Ltd. v. Brown & Williamson Tobacco Corp., 509 U.S. 209, 113 S. Ct. 2578, 125 L. Ed. 2d 168 (1993) and Weyerhaeuser Co. v. Ross-Simmons Hardwood Lumber Co., 549 U.S. 312, 127 S. Ct. 1069, 166 L. Ed. 2d 911 (2007). But Valassis plainly puts forth a standalone claim of "Predatory Pricing in the ISP Market (Retailers)" under section 2 of the Sherman Act (Complaint, Count II). The Court concludes that the price-cost test applies to Valassis's predatory pricing claim and dismisses Count II because Valassis has not presented sufficient evidence to satisfy that test. Moreover, the Court concludes that even with respect to claims where Valassis has asserted a "monopoly broth" of conduct, a pricing or bidding practice cannot properly be considered part of that "broth" unless the practice is predatory under the price-cost test.

i. Valassis Has Not Presented Sufficient Evidence to Establish [*16] That News's Retailer Payments Are Predatory Under the Price-Cost Test

Predatory pricing and predatory bidding claims are analytically similar, and are both governed by the price-cost test. Weyerhaeuser, 549 U.S. at 321. Predatory pricing is a strategy whereby the predator "reduces the sale price of its product (its output) to below cost, hoping to drive competitors out of business," and then when the "competition is vanquished," raises output prices to recoup what it lost. Id. at 318. To succeed on a claim of predatory pricing under section 2 of the Sherman Act, a plaintiff must show that (1) "the prices complained of are below an appropriate measure of [the defendant's] costs" and (2) "the [defendant] had . . . a dangerous probability[] of recouping its investment in below-cost prices." Brooke Grp., 509 U.S. at 223-24.

Predatory "bidding" occurs on the input side of the market rather than the output side.<sup>3</sup> Weyerhaeuser, 549 U.S. at 320. The strategy of a predatory bidder is to purchase inputs at such high prices that "rival buyers cannot survive (or compete as vigorously)" and then when the predatory bidder obtains "monopsony" power (a buyer's monopoly), it will either purchase its inputs at prices "below the competitive level" or increase its prices in the output market to recoup what it [*17] lost. Id. at 320-21, 321 n.2. To succeed on a claim of predatory bidding, a plaintiff must show that (1) "the alleged predatory bidding led to below-cost pricing of the predator's outputs" and (2) "the defendant has a dangerous probability of recouping the losses incurred in bidding up input prices." Id. at 325.

The price-cost test applies to Count II of Valassis's complaint, the standalone predatory pricing claim. In Count II of its complaint, Valassis alleges that News engaged in "predatory pricing" in violation of section 2 of the Sherman Act by offering cash "guarantees" to certain retailers "for access to the retailers' aisle space . . . in order to prevent the retailers from awarding . . . contracts to Valassis." (Compl't ¶ 350). Valassis further alleges that the guarantees caused News's "incremental cost of . . . ISPs sold to CPGs for placement in those retailers' stores[] to exceed News's revenues generated in the sale of those outputs to CPGs." (Compl't ¶ 351). Valassis does not allege any other exclusionary conduct on the part of News in Count II nor does it purport that the retailer payments were part of any "monopoly broth" or exclusionary scheme in Count II. News's payments to retailers constitute transactions [*18] for the purchase of inputs by News from retailers—the inputs being access to retailer aisles. (See Def. Brief at 6 ("Access to retailers is a key input for an ISP business.")). As such, Valassis's claim of "predatory pricing" based on these payments is properly analyzed under the price-cost test discussed in Weyerhaeuser for predatory bidding.<sup>4</sup>

Count II must be dismissed because Valassis has not presented evidence which would permit a reasonable jury to conclude that News's retailer guarantees were predatory under the price-cost test. News challenges the sufficiency of Valassis's evidence only with respect to the first prong of the Weyerhaeuser price-cost test. In other words, News challenges whether the retailer payments "led to below-cost pricing of [News's] outputs"—these outputs being the ISPs News sells to CPGs.

Valassis's primary evidence of predatory bidding is the expert opinion of Jeffrey MacKie-Mason. MacKie-Mason opines that News's retailer payments increased when Valassis entered the ISP market and decreased when Valassis left. (MacKie-Mason Report at 96-97). MacKie-Mason chose to focus on the profitability of the [*19] specific retailer contracts that News won over Valassis in determining whether News's retailer payments were predatory, rather than the effect of retailer payments to News's ISP business as a whole.<sup>5</sup> (MacKie-Mason Rebuttal

<sup>3</sup> "Bidding," in this context, is a short-hand term for the process of purchasing a unit of input. Here, the negotiation and determination of payments by ISP providers to retailers constitute the "bidding," while the prices ISP providers charge CPGs for ISP products are the "pricing."

<sup>5</sup> It is undisputed that News's ISP business, as a whole, has been profitable in every year. (Def. 56.1 ¶ 6; Pl. 56.1 Resp. ¶ 6).

Report at 11). He ultimately concludes that News's bids to certain retailers were predatory. To reach this conclusion, he adopts the Ordover-Willig definition of predation, which provides: "Predatory objectives are present if a practice would be unprofitable without the exit it causes, but profitable with the exit. Thus, although a practice may cause a rival's exit, it is predatory only if the practice would not be profitable without the additional monopoly power resulting from the exit." (MacKie-Mason Report at 97).

To determine whether News's retailer payments would be "unprofitable without the exit," MacKie-Mason assumes that the prices News would have charged CPGs for ISP products would have been lower than the prices News actually charged had Valassis not exited the ISP market. (MacKie-Mason Report at 98). He refers to this hypothetical price as the "competitive ISP price." (Id.). MacKie-Mason does not quantify what the competitive ISP price is, rather he calculates [*20] the profitability of each of News's contested retailer contracts in the event that the competitive price is 10%, 15%, 20%, 30%, and 40% below actual ISP prices. (Id.). In deposition, MacKie-Mason clarified that he does not opine that News's prices would actually have dropped by 10%-40% had Valassis remained in the market and that he opines only to what News's profitability would have been in the event that the prices dropped 10%-40%. (MacKie-Mason Dep. at 17:7-18:5). Unsurprisingly, the lower that MacKie-Mason assumed the competitive price to be, the more retailer payments turned out to be "predatory" by his calculations. (MacKie-Mason Report at 101-02). Because he renders no opinion as to what the competitive price should be, it is unclear which retailer payments, aside from Kmart, he concludes were actually predatory. (See id.).<sup>6</sup>

MacKie-Mason's opinion does not create a genuine dispute of material fact as to whether News employed predatory bidding. To the extent that MacKie-Mason's analysis is an application of the first prong of the price-cost test, he strays from the standard adopted by this Circuit and others.<sup>7</sup> See, e.g., Northeastern Telephone Co. v. American Telephone & Telegraph Co., 651 F.2d 76, 88 (2d Cir. 1981) (adopting the Areeda & Turner test); (MacKie-Mason Dep. at [*21] 188:11-13 (I'm not using Areeda & Turner, no.")). Moreover, his standard is contrary to Weyerhaeuser and the policy considerations underlying it. In Weyerhaeuser, the parties were competing sawmills. Weyerhaeuser, 549 U.S. at 314-15. The plaintiff argued that the defendant drove it out of business by "bidding up the price of sawlogs [a necessary input] to a level that prevented [the plaintiff] from being profitable." Id. The district court had held that the jury could have reasonably concluded that defendant's conduct was anticompetitive, reasoning in part, as MacKie-Mason does now, that the defendant's conduct "made economic sense only because of its anticipated adverse effect upon competition." *Washington Alder LLC v. Weyerhaeuser Co., No. CV 03-753-PA, 2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 15269, 2004 WL 1717650, at *2 (D. Or. July 27, 2004)* (emphasis added). The Ninth Circuit affirmed. In reversing, the Supreme Court held that the price-cost test, as enunciated in Brooke Group, applied to predatory bidding claims. Weyerhaeuser, 549 U.S. at 325. Elaborating on the first prong of the test, the Court noted that "bidding on the buy side must have caused the cost of the relevant output to rise above the revenues generated in the sale of those outputs" and "only higher bidding that leads to below-cost pricing in the relevant output market [*22] will suffice as a basis for liability for predatory bidding." Id.

As the Supreme Court noted, "higher bidding that does not result in below-cost output pricing" may have anticompetitive effects, but such conduct is "beyond the practical ability of a judicial tribunal to control without courting intolerable risks of chilling legitimate procompetitive conduct." Id. The Court was explicit in its desire to create a bright-line rule with which competitors could comply when engaging in pricing and bidding practices. The test put forth by MacKie-Mason to evaluate News's retailer payments injects speculation and complexity into the price-cost test, requiring a competitor to predict what "competitive prices" would look like if a rival were to successfully enter the market before determining the lawfulness of a retailer payment. Such speculation risks chilling legitimate pricing and bidding practices that the Supreme Court has labeled "the very essence of competition." Id. at 323. A reasonable jury could not find predatory bidding in light of Weyerhaeuser.

<sup>6</sup> MacKie-Mason concludes that the Kmart payment was exclusionary, that the Ingles payment and the Giant Eagle payment were the "next-most likely offers to have been exclusionary," while "the next-most likely" were the 2015 BI-LO/Winn Dixie payment and the 2011 Delhaize payment. (MacKie-Mason Rebuttal Report at 30).

<sup>7</sup> The Second Circuit has adopted what has become known as the Areeda & Turner test. Irvin Indus., Inc. v. Goodyear Aerospace Corp., 974 F.2d 241, 245 (2d Cir. 1992). This test compares the actual prices charged for output against reasonably anticipated average variable cost. Id.; see also Northeastern Telephone Co. v. American Telephone & Telegraph Co., 651 F.2d 76, 88 (2d Cir. 1981) ("We agree with Areeda and Turner that in the general case at least, the relationship between a firm's prices and its marginal costs provides the best single determinant of predatory pricing. Thus, prices below reasonably anticipated marginal cost will be presumed predatory, while prices above reasonably anticipated marginal cost will be presumed non-predatory. And because marginal cost cannot be determined from conventional accounting methods, we will use average variable cost as its surrogate.") (citations omitted) (footnote omitted).

Without hypothesizing competitive ISP prices, and instead using actual prices, MacKie-Mason testified that, with the exception of Kmart, [*23] he did not identify "any retail contracts [to be] predatory before [] adjust[ing] the real-world prices downward." (Pl. 56.1 ¶ 95; Def. 56.1 Resp. ¶ 95; MacKie-Mason Dep. at 39:16-40:1). In his rebuttal report, MacKie-Mason acknowledges that his "analysis of the profitability of News's offers at status quo prices is virtually identical to News's own analysis of the profitability of its offers." (MacKie-Mason Rebuttal Report at 15). News's internal profit and loss analyses ("P&L" reports) were prepared before making a contract proposal to a retailer and projected whether the offer to the retailer would be profitable to News. (Def. 56.1 ¶ 7; Pl. 56.1 Resp. ¶ 7). From 2010 onward, it is undisputed that the P&L reports projected that News expected to make a profit on every offer it made to a retailer, except for Kmart. (Def. 56.1 ¶ 11; Pl. 56.1 Resp. ¶ 11).

On the Kmart contract, Valassis asserts that News's P&L report projected the contract to be unprofitable.<sup>8</sup> Though News disputes the implications of the Kmart P&L, the disagreement does not amount to a genuine dispute of material fact because evidence of below-cost pricing related to "a single bid for a single contract" is not sufficient [*24] to support a predatory bidding claim. Astra Media Grp., LLC v. Clear Channel Taxi Media, LLC, 414 F. App'x 334, 336-37 (2d Cir. 2011) (summary order) (affirming the dismissal of a predatory pricing claim and noting that "[i]n a business environment in which the competing parties have entered into numerous contracts with numerous parties for the provision of rented advertising space, an allegation that one of those contracts provides below-cost prices for services is insufficient to allege predatory pricing").

Valassis also cites to the ultimate profitability of the fourteen contracts that News won over Valassis. Eight of these fourteen contracts turned out to be profitable for News, while the other six turned out to be unprofitable. (MacKie-Mason Report at Ex. 73). The parties' experts agree that in analyzing whether retailer payments were predatory, the proper standard looks to the expected profitability at the time the retailer payment is made, not the ultimate profitability of that contract ex post. (Def. 56.1 ¶ 10; Pl. 56.1 Resp. ¶ 10). Though ex post profitability of a contract is relevant, the fact that a minority of contested contracts ultimately were unprofitable for News, without more, is not sufficient evidence to permit a reasonable jury to find that News engaged [*25] in predatory bidding. Count II is dismissed.

ii. The Price-Cost Test Bars Consideration of News's Retailer Payments in a "Monopoly Broth"

Valassis urges that the price-cost test has no bearing where Valassis claims that News's retailer payments were only one ingredient in a "monopoly broth" of misconduct and that the Court should apply the rule of reason to the entire broth regardless of whether the retailer payments comport with the price-cost test. The Court acknowledges the Third Circuit's holding in ZF Meritor, LLC v. Eaton Corp., 696 F.3d 254, 269 (3d Cir. 2012) and Judge Pauley's holding in Dial Corp. v. News Corp., 165 F. Supp. 3d 25, 32 (S.D.N.Y. 2016), which Valassis has cited for the proposition that the price-cost test applies only where predatory pricing is not the "clearly predominant mechanism of exclusion."

The Court also acknowledges that in analyzing antitrust claims alleging a variety of anticompetitive conduct, courts must tow the line between two competing considerations. First, the Court must avoid "tightly compartmentalizing the various factual components" of a plaintiff's claims and "wiping the slate clean after scrutiny of each." City of Groton v. Connecticut Light & Power Co., 662 F.2d 921, 928-29 (2d Cir. 1981) (quoting Continental Ore Co. v. Union Carbide & Carbon Corp., 370 U.S. 690, 699, 82 S. Ct. 1404, 8 L. Ed. 2d 777 (1962)). At the same time, it is unlikely that multiple independently lawful acts can come together to create an unlawful monopoly "broth" from which antitrust [*26] injury can arise. See Pac. Bell Tel. Co. v. Linkline Commc'n, Inc., 555 U.S. 438, 457, 129 S. Ct. 1109, 172 L. Ed. 2d 836 (2009) (holding "price-squeezing" claims not cognizable under the Sherman Act); see also City of Anaheim v. S. California Edison Co., 955 F.2d 1373, 1376 (9th Cir. 1992) ("[I]f all we are shown is a number of perfectly legal acts, it becomes much more difficult to find overall wrongdoing.").

In Linkline, the defendant was a DSL internet provider that owned infrastructure and facilities needed to provide DSL service to DSL customers. Linkline, 555 U.S. at 442-43. Plaintiffs were competing DSL providers, who leased infrastructure from the defendant. Id. Plaintiffs brought suit alleging that the defendant raised its wholesale prices on infrastructure and lowered its retail prices for DSL services so as to unlawfully "squeeze" plaintiffs' profit margins and force them out of business in violation of section 2 of the Sherman Act. Id. The Supreme Court rejected plaintiffs' price squeezing claim because the claim was merely "an amalgamation of a meritless claim at the retail level"—i.e. a predatory pricing claim where pricing was not below cost—"and a meritless claim at the wholesale level"—i.e. a refusal to deal claim where the defendant had no antitrust duty to deal. Id. at 452. It reasoned that "[i]f there is no duty to deal at the wholesale level and no predatory pricing at the retail level, then [*27] a firm is certainly not required to price both of these services in a manner that preserves its rivals' profit margins." Id. at 457 ("Two wrong claims do not make one that is right."). Of particular relevance, the Supreme Court noted that "[r]ecognizing a price-squeeze claim where the defendant's retail price remains above cost would invite the precise harm the Court sought to avoid in Brooke Group: Firms might raise retail prices or refrain from aggressive price competition to avoid potential antitrust liability." Id. at 451-52.

In monopoly broth claims, it is not the case that "if there is a fraction of validity to each of [a plaintiff's] claims and the sum of the fractions is one or more, the plaintiffs have proved a violation of section 1 or section 2 of the Sherman Act." City of Groton, 662 F.2d at 928-29. Rather, "[t]he proper inquiry is whether, qualitatively, there is a 'synergistic effect.'" Id. (citing Northeastern Telephone Co. v. American Telephone & Telegraph Co., 651 F.2d 76, 95 n.28 (2d Cir. 1981)). If the evidence underlying each form of alleged anticompetitive conduct is "utterly lacking," there can be no synergistic effect. Northeastern Telephone, 651 F.2d at 95 n.28 (acknowledging the requirement that courts not "tightly compartmentalize" a plaintiff's claims but nonetheless determining that there was no synergistic effect where the plaintiff alleged a variety of exclusionary conduct [*28] including predatory pricing).

That a defendant's pricing or bidding practices pass muster under the price-cost test does not immunize other anticompetitive conduct. See Dial Corp., 165 F. Supp. 3d at 32; ZF Meritor, 696 F.3d at 269, 278 ("Although the Supreme Court has created a safe harbor for above-cost discounting, it has not established a per se rule of non-liability under the antitrust laws for all contractual practices that involve above-cost pricing. . . . Nothing in the case law suggests, nor would it be sound policy to hold, that above-cost prices render an otherwise unlawful exclusive dealing agreement lawful."); see also Northeastern Telephone, 651 F.2d at 95 (holding that plaintiff failed to prove that five of six types of conduct were anticompetitive, including the defendant's pricing practices, and remanding for a new trial on the sixth alleged method of exclusion). But, in this Court's view, the price-cost test applies even when pricing is not the "predominant method of exclusion."

Though the law prohibits courts from "tightly compartmentalizing" Valassis's individual allegations of anticompetitive conduct and "wiping the slate clean" after evaluation of each, not all actions of an alleged violator may be properly considered by a jury as ingredients in a "monopoly broth." [*29] This is especially so where, as here, Valassis has alleged that one ingredient in the broth is payments to retailers because such payments are so often "the very essence of competition" that the Supreme Court has created an explicit safe harbor to shield such payments from antitrust liability when they do not lead to below-cost pricing. Weyerhaeuser, 549 U.S. at 323. Competition on the buy side of the market benefits when high but lawful payments are made by ISP providers to retailers. Id. at 324 n.4 ("Higher prices for inputs obviously benefit existing sellers of inputs."). Higher payments by ISP providers permits greater price competition among retailers leading to lower prices for retail consumers.

If the Court were to allow Valassis to present to the jury a monopoly broth claim inclusive of News's retailer payments, no jury instruction the Court could give regarding how to evaluate those payments would prevent "courting intolerable risks of chilling legitimate procompetitive conduct." Id. at 325 (warning of the "risk of chilling procompetitive behavior with too lax a liability standard" for predatory bidding). Like the price-squeezing claim in Linkline, Valassis's monopoly broth claim, if permitted to include retailer payments that [*30] do not result in below-cost pricing, "would invite the precise harm the [Supreme Court] sought to avoid in Brooke Group" and Weyerhaeuser. Linkline, 555 U.S. at 451-52. Namely, a rational economic actor would temper its bidding for inputs in order to "avoid potential antitrust liability." Id.

Thus, the Court holds that when a pricing or bidding practice is lawful under the price-cost test, the evidence that the practice is anticompetitive is so "utterly lacking" that there can be no synergistic effect between the practice and other alleged anticompetitive conduct. See Northeastern Telephone, 651 F.2d at 95 n.28. Pricing or bidding practices that are above-cost under Brooke Group or Weyerhaeuser, therefore, cannot properly be considered an ingredient of a plaintiff's monopoly broth claim. Whether the alleged anticompetitive conduct that remains can sustain the claim depends on the strength of the evidence underlying that conduct. See id.

b. Valassis Has Presented Sufficient Evidence of Antitrust Injury with Respect to its Remaining Federal Antitrust Claims

News argues that Valassis has failed to show antitrust injury with respect to the remaining federal antitrust claims (Counts I, IV, V) because Valassis's damages expert, James Levinsohn, attributes all of Valassis's [*31] damages to News's retailer payments. This Court concludes Valassis has presented sufficient evidence of antitrust injury stemming from the alleged anticompetitive conduct other than the retailer payments and, in any case, Levinsohn's testimony and report do not attribute all damages to News's retailer commissions.

i. Valassis Has Presented Sufficient Evidence of Antitrust Injury in the Form of Exclusion From the ISP Market

Though Valassis has brought claims under sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act and section 3 of Clayton Act, the requirement that plaintiff show antitrust injury applies to each of these claims. This is so because under section 4 of the Clayton Act, a plaintiff has a private right of action to sue for damages that result from a violation of the federal antitrust laws. 15 U.S.C. § 15. Specifically, section 4 provides, "any person who shall be injured in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws may sue therefor . . . and shall recover threefold the damages by him sustained, and the cost of suit, including a reasonable attorney's fee." 15 U.S.C. § 15. To bring suit under § 4, therefore, a private plaintiff must show that a defendant engaged in anticompetitive conduct and that the plaintiff suffered "antitrust [*32] injury" as a result. Atl. Richfield Co. v. USA Petroleum Co., 495 U.S. 328, 339-40, 110 S. Ct. 1884, 109 L. Ed. 2d 333 (1990). To establish antitrust injury, a plaintiff must show that "the injuries alleged would not have occurred but for [the defendant's] antitrust violation." In re Publ'n Paper Antitrust Litig., 690 F.3d 51, 66 (2d Cir. 2012). The violation "need not be the sole cause of the plaintiffs' alleged injuries." Id. It need only be "a substantial or materially contributing factor in producing that injury." Id. (quotation marks omitted).

Importantly, antitrust injury is not merely "injury causally linked to an illegal presence in the market." Atl. Richfield, 495 U.S. at 334 (citing Brunswick Corp. v. Pueblo Bowl-O-Mat, Inc., 429 U.S. 477, 489, 97 S. Ct. 690, 50 L. Ed. 2d 701 (1977)). Rather, antitrust injury is "injury of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent and that flows from that which makes defendants' acts unlawful." Id. A competitor's "[e]xclusion from a market is a conventional form of antitrust injury" because it is "exactly the type [of injury] that antitrust laws were designed to prevent and flows from the competition-reducing aspect of [defendant's] conduct." Higgins v. New York Stock Exch., 755 F. Supp. 113, 116 (S.D.N.Y.), aff'd sub nom. Higgins v. New York Stock Exch., Inc., 942 F.2d 829 (2d Cir. 1991) (citation omitted); Xerox Corp. v. Media Scis. Int'l, Inc., 511 F. Supp. 2d 372, 381-82 (S.D.N.Y. 2007); see also Chadelaine Corp. Secs. & Co. v. Depository Trust & Clearing Corp., No. 05-CV-10711 (SAS), 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 49273, 2006 WL 2020950, *4 (S.D.N.Y. July 13, 2006) (noting that exclusion from the market amounts to antitrust injury where the exclusion resulted from the defendant's alleged anticompetitive conduct and "decreases [*33] the number of alternatives available to consumers of [plaintiff's] products"); Full Draw Prods. v. Easton Sports, Inc., 182 F.3d 745, 754 (10th Cir. 1999) ("[W]e find it hard to imagine a closer connection between anticompetitive effect and injury than the destruction of [one of two competitors] and the loss of competition in the . . . market.").

In parsing the antitrust injury requirement, courts have distinguished the fact of injury from the amount of damages. See, e.g., U.S. Football League v. Nat'l Football League, 644 F. Supp. 1040, 1052-53 (S.D.N.Y. 1986), aff'd, 842 F.2d 1335 (2d Cir. 1988) (discussing "the distinction between proof of antitrust injury and proof of antitrust damages"); Jacobi v. Bache & Co., 377 F. Supp. 86, 93 (S.D.N.Y. 1974), aff'd, 520 F.2d 1231 (2d Cir. 1975) ("In order to recover in a private antitrust action under § 4 of the Clayton Act, . . . plaintiffs must establish a causal connection between the alleged antitrust violation and some injury to them. This fact of legal injury must be established with certainty, although at this stage the precise amount of damages may remain somewhat speculative.").

Proof of the fact of injury informs the question of the defendant's liability, while proof of amount in damage determines an award. Fact of injury is an essential element of a claim under section 4 of the Clayton Act. See U.S. Football League, 704 F. Supp. at 479 ("The NFL's entire argument in this regard is based on the erroneous assertion that an award of [attorney's] fees for an [*34] antitrust violation requires proof of some threshold level of 'damages,' in addition to the fact of injury."); Sciambra v. Graham News, 892 F.2d 411, 415 (5th Cir. 1990) ("If a plaintiff can demonstrate that the defendant violated the antitrust laws and can establish the fact of damage, the plaintiff has established the defendant's liability for purposes of section 4 [of the Clayton Act]."); Gulfstream III Assocs., Inc. v. Gulfstream Aerospace Corp., 995 F.2d 414, 419 (3d Cir. 1993) (same). A plaintiff satisfies his or her burden of proving the fact of injury by proof of "some damage flowing from the [antitrust violation]" and "inquiry beyond this minimum point goes only to the amount and not the fact of damage." Zenith Radio Corp. v. Hazeltine Research, Inc., 395 U.S. 100, 114 n.9, 123-24, 89 S. Ct. 1562, 23 L. Ed. 2d 129 (1969) (citation omitted) (noting that a factfinder may "conclude as a matter of just and reasonable inference from the proof of defendants' wrongful acts[,] . . . their tendency to injure plaintiffs' business, . . . [and] the decline in prices, profits and values, not shown to be attributable to other causes, that defendants' wrongful acts had caused damage to the plaintiffs").

"If there is sufficient proof of [the] 'amount of damages,' . . . section 4 entitles the plaintiff to recover threefold this amount;" however, if "there is insufficient proof of the amount of damages, . . . proof of an antitrust violation and the fact of damage is a sufficient [*35] basis for an award of nominal damages." Sciambra, 892 F.2d at 415-16 (citing U.S. Football League v. Nat'l Football League, 842 F.2d 1335, 1376-79 (2d Cir. 1988)).

For the purpose of this motion, News argues that Valassis has not presented sufficient evidence that News's retailer payments were anticompetitive, but does not challenge the sufficiency of the evidence with respect to News's other alleged anticompetitive conduct (News's "contracting practices"). Accordingly, the Court will assume that the contracting practices were anticompetitive in deciding this motion. With respect to Valassis's remaining federal antitrust claims, therefore, the question becomes whether Valassis has presented sufficient evidence from which a reasonable jury could conclude that Valassis has suffered antitrust injury as a result of News's contracting practices.

Valassis's asserted antitrust injury is exclusion from the ISP market, which is a "conventional form of antitrust injury" and "exactly the type [of injury] that antitrust laws were designed to prevent," especially since Valassis was the only competing provider of ISP products. See Higgins, 755 F. Supp. at 116; Xerox Corp., 511 F. Supp. 2d at 381-82. A jury could reasonably conclude, based on the evidence and MacKie-Mason's opinion, that News's contracting practices were a "substantial or materially contributing factor" in [*36] causing Valassis's exit from the market because they prevented Valassis from obtaining a critical mass of retailers. See In re Publ'n Paper, 690 F.3d at 66. Specifically, a reasonable fact-finder could conclude that the long-term, staggered, exclusive contracts, and preemptive renewals severely limited the number of retailer contracts that became available during Valassis's tenure and caused large retailers like Kroger and Safeway, which made up a large percentage of participating retailers, to never become available.<sup>9</sup> A reasonable jury could also conclude that Valassis's lack of critical mass and News's long-term CPG commitments deterred CPGs from contracting with Valassis based on MacKie-Mason's expert opinion, Kevin Murphy's opinion, Valassis's internal studies, statements of Valassis employees, and statements made by News's own CEO about the intended impact of News's contracting practices. Ultimately, the jury could conclude that Valassis's inability to attract CPG revenue materially contributed to its exit from the ISP market to the detriment of CPG customers, who were left with only one ISP provider.

Thus, even if Levinsohn's damages model attributes all of Valassis's damages to News's retailer payments, as News [*37] argues, Valassis has still presented sufficient evidence to create a genuine issue for trial as to whether it suffered antitrust injury in the form of exclusion from the ISP market as a result of News's contracting practices. As Levinsohn noted in his report and testimony, he assumed liability and opined only on the measure of damages in the event that the jury found that News's combined conduct was anticompetitive. (Def. 56.1 ¶ 13; Pl. 56.1 Resp. ¶ 13). In other words, he assumed the fact of injury and opined only on the amount of damages. News reads too much into Levinsohn's opinion on damages. Levinsohn is neither a judge nor an antitrust lawyer. Any defect in Levinsohn's opinion on the amount of damages does not undermine Valassis's ability to prove the fact of injury. See Sciambra, 892 F.2d at 415-16 (citing U.S. Football League, 842 F.2d at 1376-79). In any event, as the Court discusses next, Levinsohn does not attribute damages solely to the retailer payments.

ii. Levinsohn's Report and Testimony Do Not Attribute Damages Solely to News's Retailer Payments

In calculating Valassis's damages, Levinsohn assumed that liability had been established based on all of News's alleged anticompetitive conduct. (Def. 56.1 ¶ 13; Pl. 56.1 Resp. ¶ 13). Levinsohn [*38] estimated damages by comparing the profits that Valassis made in the actual world to profits that Valassis would have made in a "but-for" world where News did not engage in the alleged anticompetitive conduct. (Levinsohn Report at 2). He used a "benchmark" approach to calculate damages. (Def. 56.1 ¶ 14; Pl. 56.1 Resp. ¶ 14). In doing so, he considered the first three quarters of 2010 as his "benchmark" period and the period from quarter three of 2010 through 2016 as the "damages" period. (Levinsohn Report at 19).

In creating the "but-for" world, Levinsohn assumed that the rate at which Valassis won retailer contracts ("win-rate") would equal the win-rate observed during the benchmark period (i.e. 41%); that the average length of a retailer contract would equal 2.5 years; that the total number of available ISP placements in retail stores would equal the number of placements available in the actual world; that 40% of retailer contracts would become available each year; and that costs and operating expenses would equal the costs and expenses observed during the benchmark period. (Id. at 20-25, Ex. 10). Based on these assumptions, Levinsohn estimated damages of $368 million ($217.6 million in past [*39] damages from the third quarter of 2010 through 2016 and $150.6 million in future damages from 2017 through 2021). (Id. at 3). Levinsohn's model calculates that, in the but-for world, Valassis would have maintained an ISP profit margin approximately equal to Valassis's profit margin during the benchmark period. (Def. 56.1 ¶ 15-17; Pl. 56.1 Resp. ¶ 15-17).

Levinsohn acknowledges that most of News's alleged anticompetitive conduct existed during his chosen benchmark period and concludes that his damages calculation is conservative as a result. (Levinsohn Report at 3; Levinsohn Dep. at 132: 9-22). For example, during the benchmark period, News used long term, staggered, and exclusive contracts with retailers. (Def. 56.1 ¶ 20; Pl. 56.1 Resp. ¶ 20). But according to Levinsohn, News began increasing its retailer payments after the benchmark period. (Def. 56.1 ¶ 18; Pl. 56.1 Resp. ¶ 18).

Q: So, the Court looks at this chart and it says that there is no problem with [the increased retailer payments] after 2010, okay? All of the other alleged conduct is the same. You are asked to come up with damages. [*40] Could you reliably say that Valassis's win rate and the amount that it would pay retailers in the "but for" world after 2010 would be the same as what you observe in the 2010 benchmark? . . .

A: I think I could reliably estimate damages, but that reliable estimate would come out around zero, and let me explain why that is so. . . . [D]uring the benchmark period, the other alleged anticompetitive behavior is for the most part already present, and these commissions are the delta. They are the new thing. And now, if you tell me that the only thing different between the benchmark period I have selected and the damages period, that the differentiating factor just went away, then my intuition says damages would go away."

(Levinsohn Dep. Tr. 178:21-179:21). In his declaration, Levinsohn clarified his deposition testimony as follows:

I understood that I was asked to make no changes to my approach to estimate damages other than to assume that the "differentiating factor" between "the benchmark period I have selected and the damages period" by stipulation "went away." . . . I understood that I was asked to use the same benchmark model that I had employed but to draw on the entire Damages Period [*41] as my "benchmark" to infer Valassis' but-for profit margin. In other words, I understood that I was asked to assume that profits in the but-for world and the actual world were the same. I responded that Valassis suffers zero damages in that scenario. Given the hypothetical, my response was a truism. . . . To be clear, my opinion has always been, and remains, that Valassis suffered quantifiable damages here, and would have suffered such damages whether or not News' retailer commissions were found by a jury to be anticompetitive. I will so testify at trial, if asked.

(Levinsohn Decl. at p. 5).

News argues that Levinsohn's testimony reveals that all calculated damages flow solely from News's payments to retailers and that no damages are attributable to News's contracting practices. This conclusion does not follow. For one, Levinsohn's deposition testimony is ambiguous, especially in light of his explanation of that testimony. Moreover, an examination of Levinsohn's damages model reveals that the calculated damages do not flow solely from News's increased retailer commissions. For example, in creating his damages model, Levinsohn assumed that the length of the average retailer contract in [*42] the "but-for" world would be only 2.5 years (as opposed to 4.5 years in the actual world) and that 40% of retailer contracts would become available each year (as opposed to an annual average of 26.6% from 2010 through 2014 in the actual world). (See MacKie-Mason Report at 95; MacKie-Mason Rebuttal Report at 23). These assumptions appear to take into account the effect of News's exclusive, long-term, staggered retailer contracts, its autorenewal provisions, and its preemptive renewals.

Levinsohn's testimony, therefore, does not render Valassis's proof of antitrust injury insufficient such that summary judgment is warranted on Valassis's remaining federal antitrust claims. Whatever modifications Levinsohn needs to make to the model in order to remove the effect of News's retailer commissions is a matter that the Court can address in the future in conjunction with the parties. Thus, News's motion for summary judgment is denied with respect to Valassis's remaining federal antitrust claims (Counts I, IV, V).

II. Valassis's State Law Antitrust Claims

On the state law antitrust claims, News argues that Count IX, under the Michigan Antitrust Reform Act, and Count X, under the California Cartwright [*43] Act, fail for the same reasons that it asserts that the federal antitrust Counts fail. News's motion for summary judgment on Counts IX and X is denied to the same extent that this Court has denied News's federal antitrust claims and granted to the same extent. See Little Caesar Enters. v. Smith, 895 F. Supp. 884, 898 (E.D. Mich. 1995) ("Michigan antitrust law is identical to federal law."); Universal Grading Serv. v. eBay, Inc., 2012 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 2325, 2012 WL 70644, at *10 (N.D. Cal. Jan. 9, 2012) ("[I]t is well established that '[i]nterpretation of federal antitrust law is . . . applicable to the Cartwright Act.'").

III. Valassis's State Law Claims of Unfair Competition and Tortious Interference

Valassis asserts the following five claims under Michigan common law, numbered according to the complaint: (XII) unfair competition, (XIII) tortious interference with CPG contracts, (XIV) tortious interference with CPG business relationships, (XV) tortious interference with retailer contracts, and (XVI) tortious interference with retailer business relationships. News argues that this Court should grant summary judgment on these five claims because Valassis has not presented any evidence of "damages stemming from tortious interference or unfair competition."

As discussed, when the party requesting summary judgment does not bear the burden [*44] of proof at trial, "it ordinarily is sufficient for the movant to point to a lack of evidence to go to the trier of fact on an essential element of the nonmovant's claim." Jaramillo v. Weyerhaeuser Co., 536 F.3d 140, 145 (2d Cir. 2008). However, "[a] moving defendant's mere assertion that a plaintiff 'has not produced' evidence that could prove its claim fails to show that the plaintiff lacks the necessary evidence, unless defendant also shows that plaintiff was obligated by discovery demand or court order to produce the evidence or that he voluntarily undertook to make the showing." Nick's Garage, Inc. v. Progressive Cas. Ins. Co., 875 F.3d 107, 115 (2d Cir. 2017). "Such a statement fails to show either that there is no genuine dispute as to any material fact or that the defendant is entitled to judgment as a matter of law." Id. If the movant does not satisfy its burden of production, then "summary judgment must be denied even if no opposing evidentiary matter is presented." Vermont Teddy Bear Co. v. 1-800 Beargram Co., 373 F.3d 241, 244 \(2d Cir. 2004\).

On the common law claims, Counts XII through XVI, News has not met its burden as the movant. In support of its request for summary judgment on all five claims, News dedicates one paragraph in its initial brief and eight lines in its reply brief. None of News's Local Rule 56.1 statement is dedicated to the unfair competition or tortious interference [*45] claims. In its initial brief, News argues that summary judgment is warranted on the claims because "Valassis has not adduced any evidence to support a finding of damages, let alone liability, for them" and cites two cases for the simple proposition that damages are an element of unfair competition and tortious interference claims. (Def. Brief at 25). News's only support for its assertion, found in its reply brief, is that "Valassis's only evidence of damages fails to calculate damages attributable to the state law claims. . . . Valassis stated [in its Initial Disclosures] that the 'calculation of Valassis's damages will be the subject of expert testimony' . . . Yet the only expert testimony in the record (Levinsohn) does not even purport to measure damages stemming from tortious interference or unfair competition." (Def. Reply at 10).

Valassis's initial disclosure statement does not amount to evidence that Valassis was "obligated by discovery demand or court order to produce" evidence of damages on these claims or that Valassis "voluntarily undertook" to make the showing. See Nick's Garage, 875 F.3d at 115-16. News's assertion that Valassis has presented no evidence of damages is, therefore, akin to the movant's "mere [*46] assertion" in Nick's Garage, and similarly "fails to show either that there is no genuine dispute as to any material fact or that the defendant is entitled to judgment as a matter of law."

This Court holds that News has not met its burden of showing that it is entitled to judgment as a matter of law on Valassis's state law claims of unfair competition or tortious interference. News's motion is, therefore, denied with respect to these claims. See Vermont Teddy Bear, 373 F.3d at 244.

CONCLUSION

For the aforementioned reasons, the Court dismisses Counts II, III, VI, and XI and DENIES defendants' summary judgment motion (Doc. 202) with respect to the remaining claims. The Court further concludes that any claim of predatory bidding asserted as part of a surviving claim is foreclosed. The Clerk is directed to terminate the motion.

SO ORDERED.

---

[*215] AMENDED OPINION (amending DE 200)

KEVIN MCNULTY, U.S.D.J.

Dr. Richard A. Kaul, an anesthesiologist by training, claims to be a minimally invasive spine surgeon. In March 2014, the New Jersey State Board of Medical Examiners (the "Board") said otherwise. Because his performance of spine surgeries on 11 patients without proper training and experience constituted gross and repeated malpractice, negligence, and incompetence, the Board revoked his medical license. From Dr. Kaul's perspective, the disciplinary proceedings were nothing but a sham. What really happened, [**4] he says, is that a network of politically connected neurosurgeons wanted to make an example of him. His high-quality medical practice was cutting into their margins, and so with the assistance of a cabal of lawyers, hospitals, insurance companies, and media figures, they importuned public officials to banish him from the practice of medicine in New Jersey. And so Dr. Kaul brought this action against some forty-odd defendants.

Now before the court are dozens of motions to dismiss, which in general will be granted. In part, the motions are granted under Rule 12\(b\)\(1\), on grounds of lack of subject matter jurisdiction. For the most part, however, dismissal is on 12(b)(6) grounds, because the amended complaint fails to allege plausibly any cause of action as to any defendant.

I. BACKGROUND

The gist of the amended complaint ("AC") is that the entire medical, legal, and political ("medico-legal", in Dr. Kaul's words) community of New Jersey conspired to revoke Dr. Kaul's license. No surprise, then, that Dr. Kaul's list of grievances contained in this 101-page AC is exhaustive. To begin to untangle the thick knot of private citizens, professional organizations, law firms, attorneys, administrators, politicians, [**5] and public officials alleged to have been in on the scheme to deprive Dr. Kaul of his license, this introductory section proceeds in five subparts.

Part I.A is a summary of the parties involved and the nature of the allegations against them. Part I.B summarizes the license revocation proceedings. Because it is relevant to res judicata and Younger abstention issues, Part I.O describes some actions related to this one. Part I.D concludes this background section with some information about the procedural history and claims asserted in this case.

[*216] A. The Parties

As I must, I accept as true Dr. Kaul's allegations for the purpose of these motions to dismiss.<sup>1</sup>

1. Dr. Kaul

Dr. Maul went to medical school in London and completed his residency here, at Albert Einstein-Montefiore Medical Center in New York. He became a board-certified anesthesiologist. In 2003, the Board suspended Dr. Kaul's license to practice medicine; in 2012, they revoked [**6] it entirely and permanently. These incidents, and others, are discussed below, but the takeaway for now is this: The AC claims that the 2012 disciplinary proceedings were the result of a vast conspiracy between the Governor, hospitals, insurance companies, lawyers, and competitors to drive Dr. Maul, a minimally invasive spine surgery pioneer, out of business. (See generally AC)

2. Defendants

For convenience, I group the defendants into eight categories.

i. The State Defendants

The New Jersey Attorney General's Office represents these nine defendants in this case:

- The Board, which is responsible for licensing and censuring New Jersey doctors. (AC ¶ 35)
- Christopher J., Christie, who is the Governor of the State of New Jersey. Allegedly, he was moved to revoke Dr. Maul's medical license by a series of kickback and quid pro quo arrangements with the other defendants. (Id. ¶ 3, 54)
- Jeffrey Chiesa is the former Attorney General ("AG") of the State of New Jersey. Chiesa was AG when the Board revoked Dr. Maul's license. As to Chiesa, the thrust of the AC is that he allowed the 2012 revocation hearings to unfold unfairly. Particularly distressing to Dr. Maul is Chiesa's failure to investigate [**7] the alteration of unidentified portions of certain transcripts of the administrative proceedings. (Id. ¶ 4, 57, 210)

- Howard Solomon is the Administrative Law Judge who presided over Dr. Maul's 2012 disciplinary proceedings. Following a 23-day hearing, he issued a 94-page opinion. ALJ Solomon concluded that Dr. Kaul's performance of spine surgeries on 11 patients constituted gross malpractice and recommended that the Board revoke his medical license. An article he read about Dr. Maul in a Bergen County newspaper, the Record, allegedly influenced his decision. [*217] (See generally ALJ Op.; AC ¶¶ 59-60, 97)
- William Roeder is executive director of the Board.<sup>2</sup> (Id. ¶ 36)
- Dr. Steven Lomazow is a neurologist and was a senior member of the Board in 2012. (Id. ¶ 15)
- Dr. Gregory Przybylski is a neurologist. He testified as an expert witness for the State in the 2012 disciplinary proceedings, falsely. (Id. ¶¶ 28, 85, 160)
- Dr. Andrew Kaufman, an anesthesiologist, also testified as an expert witness for the State in those proceedings. At some point, he made false statements that Dr. Maul was not qualified to perform minimally invasive spine surgeries, perhaps during the 2012 disciplinary proceedings. [**8] (ALJ Op. 41-44; AC ¶¶ 34, 67, 85).
- Dr. Maul is also suing the State of New Jersey. (AC ¶ 4)

ii. The Doctor Defendants

The following seven defendants are surgeons (though the AC isn't always clear, I presume they are neurosurgeons) in New Jersey. For the most part, Dr. Maul claims that they are his jealous competitors, and thus stood to benefit from his ruin.

- Dr. Robert Heary consulted with one of Dr. Maul's patients and encouraged her to sue Dr. Maul for medical malpractice. (Id. ¶ 13, 68)
- Dr. Frank Moore is a professor of neurosurgery at Mount Sinai School of Medicine in New York. (Id. ¶ 17)<sup>3</sup>
- Dr. Peter Carmel is a co-director of neurosurgery at the Neurological Institute of New Jersey in Newark. Dr. Carmel used his authority as President of the American Medical Association ("AMA") to enact legislation that favored neurosurgeons and hospitals and downgrade the value of endoscopic discectomies. (Id. IT 18, 72, 80, 92)
- Dr. William Mitchell is the attending neurosurgeon at John F. Kennedy Medical Center in Edison, New Jersey. He, too, caused endoscopic discectomies to become less profitable, which reduced Dr. Kaul's revenues. (Id. ¶¶ 20, 73)
- Dr. Thomas Peterson is also a neurosurgeon and affiliated [**9] in some way with Hackensack University Medical Center ("HUMC"). Dr. Peterson once called Dr. Kaul a "murderer" in front of one of Dr. Kaul's employees. (Id. ¶¶ 21, 90, 176)

<sup>2</sup>The AC does not state specify the capacity in which the State Defendants are being sued. I therefore assume Dr. Kaul intends to advance both official and individual capacity claims against these defendants.

<sup>3</sup>On December 22, 2016, Dr. Kaul moved for a default judgment against Dr. Moore, and then again on May 5, 2017. (ECF Nos. 146, 194) On June 16, 2016, Dr. Moore moved to vacate the clerk's entry of default, dismiss the motion for default judgment, and join the co-defendants' omnibus motion to dismiss. Dr. Moore claims that he was never served the original complaint, filed in the S.D.N.Y., or this amended complaint, an issue that many defendants have raised. (ECF No. 194) Dr. Kaul responded on June 29, 2017. (ECF No. 198) Because there exists good cause, because Dr. Moore has several meritorious defenses to Dr. Kaul's allegations, and because there is no prejudice to Dr. Kaul, who has responded to the omnibus motion, the motion is granted.

- Dr. Peter Staats is the President of The American Society of Interventional Pain Physicians ("ASIPP") and the editor of Pain Medicine News. He has "devoted a large percentage [*218] of career to medical politics." (Id. ¶¶ 22, 74)

- Dr. Marc Cohen sent a complaint about Dr. Kaul performing spine surgeries to the Board in 2007. (Id. ¶¶ 23, 75)

iii. The Hospital Defendants

Dr. Kaul's allegations as to these five defendants, hospitals and their presidents, are generally similar, so I group them together. (E.g. AC ¶¶ 118, 147, 176, 205, 235, 260, 293) He claims that these defendants compete with surgical centers, such as the one Dr. Kaul ran, and therefore had reason to divert business from him to themselves.

- Atlantic Health System ("AHS") is a healthcare company comprised of number of hospitals, including Morristown Medical Center, Overlook Medical Center, Chilton Medical Center, and Hackettstown Medical Center. Drs. Cohen, Heary, Carmel, Lomazow, and Kaufman "do business" with AHS. (AC ¶ 11)
- Brian Gragnolati became the president [**10] of AHS on May 4, 2015. (Id. ¶ 42, Def. Ex. V ¶ 14)
- Hackensack University Medical Center ("HUMC") is hospital. Drs. Peters and Heary "do business" with HUMC. (Id. ¶ 11)
- Robert Garrett is the president of HUMC. (Id. ¶ 41)
- University Hospital, incorrectly pled as Rutgers School of Biomedical and Health Sciences, is a hospital affiliated with Rutgers, The State University of New Jersey. Drs. Heary, Carmel, and Kaufman "do business" with University Hospital. (Id. ¶ 12)
- James Gonzalez is the president of University Hospital. Gonzalez allegedly failed to take appropriate action after Dr. Kaul sent Gonzalez a letter describing an incident in which Dr. Kaufman defamed him to one of his patients. (Id. ¶ 39)

iv. The Medical Organization Defendants

The following four medical organizations (plus Dr. Wolfa, the chairman of one) are involved in this case. Dr. Kaul generally attributes the wrongful acts (e.g., improper political influence, lobbying, defamation, etc.) of their members, the Doctor Defendants, to them.

- The Congress of Neurological Surgeons ("CNS") is a professional medical society. Drs. Heary, Przyblyski, Carmel, Mitchell, Moore, and Peterson are all members. (Id. ¶¶ 30)
- Christopher [**11] Wolfa is the chairman of the professional conduct committee at CNS. He allegedly failed to take appropriate action after Dr. Kaul filed an ethics complaint against Dr. Przbylski, who is a CNS member. (Id. ¶¶ 31, 70)
- The American Society of Interventional Pain Physicians ("ASIPP") is a professional medical society. Dr. Staats is president; Dr. Kaufman is a senior member. (Id. ¶¶ 29, 34)
- The American Medical Association ("AMA") is a professional medical association. Dr. Carmel was its president in 2011. (Id. ¶ 19)
- The North American Spine Society ("NASS") is global medical society. Dr. Przyblyski was its president in 2011; Dr. Cohen is a member. (Id. ¶¶ 28, 23)

v. The Insurance Defendants

The next five defendants allegedly stood to gain from the revocation of Dr. Kaul's [*219] license, and in some way bore responsibility for it:

372 F. Supp. 3d 206, *219 (2019 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 31732, **11

- Allstate New Jersey Insurance Company ("Allstate") is the New Jersey subsidiary of Allstate Insurance Company. Allstate owes Dr. Kaul $10 million for clinical services rendered. (AC ¶¶ 7, 56, 62)
- Richard Crist was the CEO of Allstate. (Id. ¶ 6, Def. Ex. BB, ECF No. 128-30)
- Government Employees Insurance Co., GEICO Indemnity Co., GEICO Insurance Company, and GEICO [**12] Casualty Co. (collectively, "GEICO") provides auto insurance. GEICO used the revocation of Dr. Kaul's license as an excuse not to pay him fees owed. They also advanced legislation that favored it at the expense of surgical centers and interventional pain physicians such as Dr. Kaul. Sometime in 2013, GEICO filed an insurance fraud lawsuit against Dr. Kaul, and conspired with the Media Defendants to publish false stories about him. (Id. ¶¶ 9, 61, 98, 153)
- Berkshire Hathaway is the parent company GEICO. Dr. Kaul seeks to hold it liable for GEICO's conduct. (Id. ¶¶ 9, 62)
- Warren Buffett is the chairman and CEO of Berkshire Hathaway, and Dr. Kaul's seeks to hold him liable for GEICO and Berkshire Hathaway's conduct. (Id. ¶¶ 44, 63)

vi. The Bank Defendants

These two defendants allegedly illegally foreclosed on a $1 million loan they had given Dr. Kaul to construct a surgical center.

- TD Bank, N.A. is a bank. After obtaining a default judgment against Dr. Kaul, he had to declare bankruptcy. As a result of TD Bank's efforts to enforce that judgment, Dr. Kaul was unable to recover proceeds from the sale of his Manhattan townhouse. Dr. Kaul also says that TD Bank falsely told others in the [**13] banking community that he had committed insurance fraud. (Id. ¶¶ 10, 55, 64, 184)
- Divyesh Kothari is the Vice President of TD Bank. He used "false pretenses to obstruct . . . the townhouse and force it into foreclosure. (Id. ¶ 40, 185)

vii. The Law Firm Defendants

These five law firms and attorneys represented in Dr. Kaul in various capacities. He generally accuses them of ethical misconduct or incompetence, although it is not very clear what legal services or matters are involved.

- Scarinci Hollenbeck LLC ("S&H") is a New Jersey law firm, and Kenneth Hollenbeck is its Managing Partner. S&H and Hollenbeck attempted to extort $196,000 in legal fees from Dr. Kaul two weeks before the disciplinary hearing by threatening to withdraw from some representation unless Dr. Kaul paid up.<sup>4</sup> (AC ¶¶ 21, 25, 76, 77, 135)
- Brach Eichler LLC is a New Jersey law firm, and Joseph Gorrell is a partner there. The firm has close ties to the Governor and, at some point, represented ASIPP. Had Dr. Kaul known either of these facts, he would have retained different counsel for some matter. The remainder of the allegations involving Brach Eichler [**220] and Gorrell are difficult to parse, though the firm seems to have [**14] played an important role in alleged conspiracy.<sup>5</sup> Gorrell "was motived by the promise of increased revenues that he knew would be

<sup>5</sup> Here is an example, which purportedly ties Brach Eichler to ASIPP, Drs. Kaufman and Staats, and the Governor. It is representative of the approach of the AC:

The American Society of Interventional Pain Physicians violated 18 U.S.C. § 1961 when it permitted its New Jersey chapter to conspire with the defendant governor, defendant state and defendant medical board to unlawfully obtain the plaintiffs property. Defendant Kaufman and Staats are senior board members of the defendant and its [**15] New Jersey chapter. Staats was appointed the defendant's president in 2015 and along with defendant Kaufman competed with the generated from other physicians seeking legal counsel, in the wake of the commencement of the plaintiff's revocation proceedings.<sup>6</sup> (Id. ¶¶ 26, 27, 78, 79 137, 165)

- Dughi, Hewit & Domalewski, P.C., pled as "Dughi Hewitt LLC," is a New Jersey law firm. Michael Keating is partner at Dughi Hewit, and he represented Dr. Kaul in an unsuccessful December 2014 bid to reinstate his medical license. Way back when, Governor Christie was a partner at Dughi Hewit. Because of the firm and Keating's cozy relationship to the Governor and participants in the medical and legal community generally, Dr. Kaul claims that Keating and Dughi Hewit deliberately botched or slow-pedaled the reinstatement effort, and then overcharged him.<sup>7</sup> (Id. ¶¶ 32, 33, 83. 170, 229, 287)

viii. The Media Defendants

Dr. Kaul seeks to hold these final two defendants, a reporter and a newspaper publisher, liable for publishing an allegedly libelous article [**16] in November 2013.

- Lindy Washburn is a journalist. She wrote a defamatory "six-thousand-word story" on Dr. Kaul that was published on the front page of The Record on November 17, 2013, just before ALJ Solomon rendered the initial decision to terminate his medical license. The goal was to influence the ALJ's decision. Dr. Kaul specifically takes issue with the statement that he had "an Upper crust British accent," which was intended "to malign the plaintiffs character by associating him with the British Aristocracy, [*221] towards whom the average American holds hostility, because of the recent War of Independence." She recorded Dr. Kaul without his permission. She also knew that official transcripts of the 2012 disciplinary proceedings were altered but she didn't report that in her story. (Id. ¶¶ 37, 89, 153, 175, 204, 234, 259)

- North Jersey Media, Inc. ("NJM") owns The Record, and employs Washburn. Its owners, "The Borg Family," have commercial interests which align with the co-defendants, and NJM acted as "a mouthpiece" for the Governor and his defendant donors. The quid pro quo was preferential access to "state government news." (AC ¶¶ 37, 88)

B. The Disciplinary Proceedings

As Part [**17] I.A makes clear, the conduct and events at the heart of this dispute occurred during or immediately after disciplinary proceedings that concluded years ago. Here is a summary of those proceedings.

On June 13, 2012, the AG initiated administrative disciplinary proceedings against Dr. Kaul. The charges, in essence, were that Dr. Kaul did not possess the "accepted standard of surgical training, education, and experience to perform spinal surgical procedures" and the "flagrant disregard of his own lack of training and expertise . . .

plaintiff in the same market. Kaufman and Staats both receive patients from and refer patients to the defendant neurosurgeons, and used their positions of power within the defendant's political action committees to give money to the defendant governor. The business partner of defendant Staats was appointed to the defendant medical board by the defendant governor in 2014, in return for the money that the defendant's New Jersey chapter gave to the defendant governor. The money was given to defendant Brach Eichler by way of inflated legal fees, which were then siphoned to the defendant governor through political lobbying firms. The defendant governor rewarded defendant Staats by appointing his partner to the defendant medical board and by using his executive power to revoke the plaintiff's medical license. The plaintiff, in contrast to many of the defendants, never sought political patronage.

(AC ¶ 81)

<sup>6</sup> Gorrell's actions also "contributed to the opiate epidemic that now plagues the state, because patients with spinal pain had had to resort to the use of opiates, consequent to the reduced availability and increased cost of minimally invasive spine surgery." (Id. ¶ 109)

place[d] the public in clear and imminent danger." The AG sought an immediate suspension of Dr. Kaul's medical license.<sup>8</sup> (Def. Ex. A.)

The matter was then referred to the Office of Administrative Law as a contested matter. ALJ Solomon presided over 23 days of hearings, running from April 9, 2013, to June 28, 2013. Drs. Kaufman and Przybylski testified on behalf of the Board. The record closed on October 28, 2013. (ALJ Op. 1-44)

ALJ Solomon issued his initial decision on December 31, 2013. Here are a few of his findings of fact:

2. [Dr. Kaul's] education, training, internships, residencies and fellowships were insufficient to prepare him for surgeries of the spine, [**18] whether minimally invasive or open.
3. The CME courses he took were insufficient to provide such education and training. If hands-on training were offered, it was, in most instances, done on cadavers. In others, he was primarily an observer.
4. In addition to his lack of sufficient education and training in spinal surgeries, he did not receive sufficient monitoring by a trained overseer. For instance, he was on his own the first time he inserted a pedicle screw in a live patient, without the presence of any trained monitor.
5. Respondent's treatment included, but was not limited to, inserting pedicle screws into the spinal canal; failing to immediately remove a stimulator after the onset of infection, thereby risking paralysis; using OptiMesh<sup>9</sup> as [*222] an interbody structural device; and performing a staged fusion, as well as other acts as discussed above.
6. Some of his patient consents were unsigned. . . .
9. He used allograft bone in patients who were smokers.<sup>10</sup>
10. He failed to advise patients who were smokers of the risks associated with smoking and allograft bone.
11. He misrepresented his qualifications, not only on his website, but also in discussions with his patients.
12. None of his certifications [**19] were recognized by the American Board of Medical Specialties, with the exception of his board-certification in anesthesiology. Non-recognition included his certification by the American Board of Interventional Pain Management.

(ALJ Op. 80-81)

These infractions, the ALO found, went far beyond mere puffery or resume-fudging. To the contrary, over the course of 94 pages, ALJ Solomon detailed the physical and emotional harm Dr. Kaul inflicted on 11 patients who trusted that he was competent to do—and, on several occasions, that he would in fact do—what he told them he could do.

Here is just one example, patient T.Z.:

The next patient called by petitioner was T.Z., a forty-year-old woman. In the latter part of 2009, she began experiencing pain in her neck and back following an automobile accident. A neighbor, who had been a patient of respondent, recommended [Dr. Kaul]. T.Z. then checked respondent's website, where he represented that he was a board-certified minimally invasive spine specialist. T.Z. was under the clear impression that if she decided to treat with him, any surgery, if one were required, would be minimal, and nothing more . . . .

<sup>8</sup> The AG had been investigating Dr. Kaul since April 2012. A few days before the AG initiating the disciplinary action, on June 7, 2012, Dr. Kaul attempted to enjoin the State and various state agencies from immediately suspending his controlled dangerous substance registration. That complaint was dismissed by the trial court, and then the appeal of that dismissal was dismissed by the Appellate Division in July 2012. (Def. Ex. E, F)

<sup>9</sup> "OptiMesh is a three[-]dimensional mesh bag to contain bone fragments. ' . . . mesh is simply a bag that contains bones and is not capable of maintaining the load of body weight and, therefore, it is not considered to be an appropriate prosthetic device for an interspace.'" (Order 2 n.1)

<sup>10</sup> "Allograft bone is obtained from a cadaver. Autograft bone is harvested from the patient's own body, often from the iliac crest." (Order 17 n.5)

He told her that he was going to insert two screws [**20] and scrape a disc that appeared to be bulging, that the surgery would last approximately forty-five minutes, and would only involve a small incision, about one inch in length. The patient stated that it was her clear understanding was that this was going to be a minor procedure, nothing more, and that she would be discharged the same day, followed by a minimal recovery period of about a week or so. The patient stated that she made it very clear to respondent that she would not agree to anything more significant.

Although she smoked a pack of cigarettes a day, she stated that respondent never mentioned anything about smoking or its risks associated with surgery.

On September 19, 2011, respondent performed a fusion at L3-L4 with the insertion of five screws. . . .

On the date of the surgery, she and her husband arrived at the surgical center early in the morning for what was thought to be a forty-five-minute procedure. Instead, she left the surgery center around 5:00 or 6:00 p.m. Her husband told her that she was in surgery for about six to seven hours. The ride home was excruciating—she was in extreme pain and felt nauseous. . . . Upon arriving home, she could not walk because the pain [**21] was so intense. Her husband called his [*223] father and together they placed her in a plastic chair and lifted her up the ten to twelve steps into her home. Once she was inside, she was placed in a recliner.

On December 24, 2011, T.Z. was taken to Pocono Hospital, where she was admitted, because she had severe difficulty walking. The pain and numbness to the inside of her legs and buttocks was worsening. . . . While at Pocono Hospital, she was informed that the entire disc had been removed. She also learned that five screws, instead of two, had been inserted.

From Pocono Hospital, she was transferred by ambulance to Lehigh Valley Hospital . . . . It was then that she learned that respondent was not an orthopedist, as she had initially thought, but an anesthesiologist.

On October 14, 2011, after noticing oozing from one of the incisions left by respondent, she consulted Brian Morse, D.O., who performed nerve testing on her legs. They did not respond. He recommended that she see George Naseef, M.D., an orthopedic surgeon. She saw Dr. Naseef on November 17, 2011, complaining of difficulty in walking, leg numbness, her right ankle giving out (going off to the side), and loss of balance, [**22] particularly on non-flat surfaces . . . Dr. Naseef told her that two screws had penetrated the nerve in her spine and that she needed surgery. . . .

On January 30, 2012, Dr. Naseef performed a revision surgery at Morristown Memorial Hospital.

During these proceedings, T.Z. was asked to display the scars left by respondent. One scar was vertical at the midline of the low back, and measured approximately eight inches. There was also a horizontal scar to the left of the eight-inch scar, which measured about two inches. . . .

As the result of respondent's surgery, she had to use a walker for about six months for balance, which she began using immediately following the surgery. After six months, she used a cane daily, also for balance. For months, her husband had to escort her to the bathroom, where she used a specially raised toilet seat. This lasted for several months. In addition, her feet have become positioned outward. The inner sides of her legs remain numb and she continues to have back pain. She stated that no day is a good day. Her pain starts upon awakening and worsens as the day progresses.

It was noted by the undersigned that when she approached and left the witness stand, she used [**23] a cane and ambulated very slowly. She also brought a pillow to sit on and was sobbing throughout most of her testimony.

Her husband, M.Z., also testified. He accompanied T.Z. to her initial consultation with respondent. He specifically recalled respondent telling them that the procedure would last about forty-five minutes and would involve a three-quarter-inch incision. . . .

He stated that T.Z. is now essentially confined to a recliner. She does not even sleep in bed. . . .

Petitioner called George S. Naseef III, M.D., a board-certified orthopedic surgeon, to testify. Dr. Naseef . . . performed corrective surgery on T.Z. . . .

Dr. Naseef determined that the L-3 screws were not in proper line and the right S-1 screw was in the S-I nerve root, not in the pedicle. Both L-3 screws and the right S-1 screw had perforated the bone and were in the nerve canal. . . .

[*224] During surgery on January 30, 2012, Dr. Naseef noted that the right and left L-3 screws were in the canal, and the right S-1 screw was grossly malpositioned and in the canal. . . . Once the right S-1 screw was removed, nerve function immediately returned to the patient's leg. . . . He stated that of the five screws inserted, only one [**24] was positioned correctly.<sup>11</sup>

(ALJ Op. 53-57)

Assessing the evidence in the record,<sup>12</sup> ALJ Solomon concluded that the Attorney General "prove[d] [] well beyond a preponderance of the credible evidence" that Dr. Kaul "never should have performed any spinal surgeries, whether they were called minimally invasive or open, given his lack of education and training." "[T]hat he performed such surgeries, without the requisite education and training, and in disregard for the safety of several patients who testified on behalf of petitioner, . . . warrant[sl] nothing less than the revocation of his medical license[,] the ALJ recommended. (ALJ Op. 93)

On March 12, 2014, the Board adopted ALJ Solomon's opinion and order in its entirety. It then considered the appropriate penalty for Dr. Kaul's conduct. Observing that Dr. Kaul, rather than acknowledging wrongdoing or demonstrating contrition after the ALJ's decision [*25] instead lobbed "broad allegations of altered court transcripts, interference with legal evidence and political influence," the Board struggled to "find any mitigating factors in this matter."<sup>13</sup> Indeed, the Board found Dr. Kaul's lack of remorse "disturbing."<sup>14</sup> (Order 22-23, 25)

The Board also considered that this was not his first offense. About ten years earlier, the Board had suspended Dr. Kaul's medical license based on his failure to disclose in various credentialing applications that he had been convicted of manslaughter for killing a patient in England.<sup>15</sup> Despite [*225] his failure to be forthright and honest in his dealings with the Board and others, the Board was lenient. The tragic incident in England, it reasoned, appeared to be just a mistake, and with due care similar incidents could be prevented. It therefore "eschewed a more stringent penalty with the hope and expectation that respondent will resolve to practice with the vigilance that he

<sup>11</sup> The Board, in adopting the ALJ's findings of fact as to T.Z., quoted Dr. Naseef directly on this point:

[Dr. Naseef testified that] they were in a place I have never seen before . . . this one completely missed the pedicle and went directly through the lamina and into the vertebral body which putting screws in that is a completed different field. When you are not in bone, it's grossly abnormal."

(Order 18-19)

<sup>12</sup> ALJ Solomon specifically found the "testimony of each and every witness produced by [the Attorney General] . . . extremely credible and compelling" while most of Dr. Kaul's witnesses lacked credibility or opined on irrelevant issues. (ALJ Op. 7879)

<sup>13</sup> Over the objection of Dr. Kaul's counsel, the Attorney General admitted an independent (i.e., not official) transcript from one day of the 23-day hearing. Dr. Kaul had apparently appended the transcript to a letter addressed to President Obama, which he had posted on a personal website. "It shows," the Board concluded, "that Respondent's transcript and the official transcript had only minor insubstantial inconsistencies." (Order 22)

<sup>14</sup> In videos posted to his website, Dr. Kaul claimed that he was "absolutely shocked" by the ALJ's decision and pledged to continue to perform spine surgeries and teach others his methods. The plan, he said, was to open minimally invasive spine surgery clinics in places where people lack access to affordable spine care, such as Africa, Mexico, and Colombia. (Id. 22-23)

<sup>15</sup> In March 1999, while practicing medicine in England, a patient for whom Dr. Kaul had administered anesthesia died. About two years later, in February 2001, a jury convicted Dr. Kaul of gross negligence and manslaughter. From September 2000 to May 2001, Dr. Kaul made a number of false or misleading statements about those criminal proceedings, the related disciplinary proceedings, and later, the conviction, in a number of documents submitted to the Board and New Jersey hospitals. (ALJ Op. 90-92)

For example, on April 8, 2011, Dr. Kaul submitted an application for privileges at HUMC. He was asked the following question: "Please indicate if you have been ever been convicted of any criminal offense, excluding minor traffic violations, e.g., passing a stop sign, (if yes, give details on a separate sheet.)" Kaul checked the "NO" box, even though he had been convicted of manslaughter just a few months earlier.

has promised." Under the circumstances, the Board found a two-year suspension to be a sufficient sanction. But "[f]uture transgressions," it warned, "will not be deserving of leniency." (Order 23-24)

Against that backdrop—Dr. Kaul's lack of remorse, [**26] his intent to continue to perform spine surgeries, and his failure to "turn over a new leaf to practice medicine responsibly"—the Board adopted the ALJ's recommendation to revoke Dr. Kaul's license, effective February 12, 2014. It further imposed the statutory maximum fine of $20,000 for each of the 15 counts of malpractice and misconduct charged, as well as attorneys' fees and costs. All told, the Board imposed $475,422.32 in civil penalties, fees, and costs. (Order 28-29)

Dr. Kaul did not appeal the Board's final decision to the New Jersey Superior Court, Appellate Division.

C. Concurrent and Subsequent Litigation

Over the years, Dr. Kaul has sued, and has been sued, in several actions that bear some relation to this one. Two are particularly relevant to these motions to dismiss.

1. BER-L-2256-13 (suit against doctors)

A couple weeks before the first ALJ hearing, on March 22, 2013, Dr. Kaul sued Drs. Heary, Moore, Carmel, Przybylski and Mitchell in New Jersey Superior Court, Bergen County. He alleged defamation, commercial disparagement, intentional interference with prospective economic advantage, unfair competition, conspiracy, and aid in the commission of a tort. On March 7, 2014 (about [**27] three months after the ALJ's initial decision and five days before the Board's final decision), the complaint was dismissed with prejudice as to Drs. Przybylski, Moore, and Carmel. (State Compl.; State Orders)

2. UNN-L332-15 (Santos malpractice)

On September 24, 2015, Ana Santos filed a malpractice complaint against Dr. Kaul in New Jersey Superior Court, Union County. In June 2016, Dr. Kaul filed counterclaims and third-party claims against Governor Christie, the Board, Dr. Staats, and Dr. Carmel alleging the same causes of action asserted here: violations of RICO, the Sherman and Clayton Acts, the Hobbs Act, mail fraud, wire fraud, honest services fraud, defamation, section 1983, Title VII, commercial disparagement, intentional interference with prospective economic advantage, and aid in the commission in the tort. That case appears to be ongoing. (Def. Ex. J, ECF No. 128-12)

D. This Case

Dr. Kaul filed his original complaint on February 22, 2016, in the United States District Court for the Southern District in New York. Because almost all of the defendants and events giving rise to the complaint were located in New Jersey, on April 19, 2016, Judge Richard Sullivan transferred venue of the case to this Court. [**28] (ECF Nos. 1, 19)

[*226] On June 8, 2016, Dr. Kaul Filed the amended complaint, which is the subject of the current motions. It asserts 12 causes of action:

- Count One: Violations of the Racketeer and Influenced Corruption Act ("RICO"), 18 U.S.C. § 1961, against Governor Christie, New Jersey, Chiesa, ALJ Solomon, GEICO, Allstate, Berkshire Hathaway, Buffett, TD Bank, Kothari, Rutgers, Gonzalez, Dr. Heary, Dr. Lomazow, Dr. Przybylski, Dr. Wolfa, Dr. Moore, Dr. Carmel, Dr. Mitchell, Dr. Staats, Dr. Cohen, Scarinci Hollenbeck, Hollenbeck, Brach Eichler, Gorrell, NASS, ASIPP, CNS, Dughi Hewitt, Keating, Dr. Kaufman, the Board, Roeder, NJM, Washburn, HUMC, AHS, Gragnolati, Garrett, Dr. Peterson, and AMA;

- Count Eleven: Intentional interference with prospective economic advantage against Drs. Staats, Carmel, Heary, Przybylski, Mitchell, Cohen and Kaufman; and
- Count Twelve: Aid in the commission of a tort against all of defendants.

For each count, Dr. Kaul requests the same relief: compensatory, consequential, and punitive damages, attorneys' fees and costs, and anything else that is just and equitable. (AC ¶¶ 92, 119, 148, 177, 206, 236, 261, 294, 308, 315, 318) Elsewhere in the AC, on the next-to-last page, Dr. Kaul asks for "the immediate reinstatement of an unrestricted [**31] plenary medical license" and "expunge[ment] [of] the prior revocation of plaintiffs medical license from the public record." (Id. p. 101)

On November 23, 2016, defendants moved to dismiss the AC pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(1\) and 12\(b\)\(6\). To streamline motion practice, the defendants submitted an omnibus brief addressing facts and points of law common to all defendants. (ECF No. 128-1) Defendants individually submitted supplementary declarations. (ECF Nos. 128-12 through 32) Generally, the supplementary declarations amplify certain issues raised in the common brief (e.g., the applicability of res judicata or collateral estoppel) or point out issues peculiar to a particular defendant (e.g., lack of service of process or personal jurisdiction).<sup>16</sup> After a couple of false starts (ECF No. 139, 165), on March 20, 2017, Dr. Kaul filed an omnibus opposition brief.<sup>17</sup> (ECF Nos. 166) He also filed supplementary opposition briefs in response to number of the defendants' supplemental declarations. (ECF No. 167) On May 3, 2017, Defendants replied, again jointly, with supplementary declarations or briefs. (ECF Nos. 181, 182, 183, 184, 186, 187)

All told, nearly 2,000 pages of briefs, affidavits, and documents have been filed in connection [**32] with these motions to dismiss. Almost half of that total—around 940 pages—consists of a mishmash of unsponsored exhibits submitted by Dr. Kaul. (ECF No. 179)

II. STANDARDS OF REVIEW

A. Rule 12(b)(1) Standard

Based on the Rooker-Feldman and Younger doctrines, all defendants move to dismiss based on lack of subject matter jurisdiction. Certain State Defendants also move to dismiss based on sovereign immunity. A motion to dismiss for lack of subject matter jurisdiction pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(1) may be raised at any time. Iwanowa v. Ford Motor Co., 67 F. Supp. 2d 424, 437-38 (D.N.J. 1999). Rule 12(b)(1) challenges are either facial or factual attacks. See 2 James W. Moore, Moore's Federal Practice § 12.30[4] (3d ed. 2007). The defendant may facially challenge subject matter jurisdiction [*228] by arguing that the complaint, on its face, does not allege sufficient grounds to establish subject matter jurisdiction. Iwanowa, 67 F. Supp. 2d at 438. Under this standard, a court assumes that the allegations in the complaint are true, and may dismiss the complaint only if it appears to a certainty that the plaintiff will not be able to assert a colorable claim of subject matter jurisdiction. Id.

All of the defendants' Rooker-Feldman, Younger, or immunity arguments are postured as facial challenges to the jurisdictional basis of the complaint. In considering them, the Court [**33] will take the allegations of the complaint as true. See Gould Elecs., Inc. v. U.S., 220 F.3d 169, 178 (3d Cir. 2000).

B. Rule 12(b)(6) Standard

Rule 12(b)(6), Fed. R. Civ. P., provides for the dismissal of a complaint, in whole or in part, if it fails to state a claim upon which relief can be granted. The defendant, as the moving party, bears the burden of showing that no claim has been stated. Animal Science Products, Inc. v. China Minmetals Corp., 654 F.3d 462, 469 n. 9 (3d Cir. 2011). For the purposes of a motion to dismiss, the facts alleged in the complaint are accepted as true and all reasonable inferences are drawn in favor of the plaintiff. New Jersey Carpenters & the Trustees Thereof v. Tishman Const. Corp. of New Jersey, 760 F.3d 297, 302 (3d Cir. 2014).

Federal Rule of Procedure 8(a) does not require that a complaint contain detailed factual allegations. Nevertheless, "a plaintiff's obligation to provide the 'grounds' of his 'entitlement to relief requires more than labels and conclusions, and a formulaic recitation of the elements of a cause of action will not do.'" Bell Atl. Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 555, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007). Thus, the complaint's factual allegations must be sufficient to raise a plaintiff's right to relief above a speculative level, so that a claim is "plausible on its face." Id. at 570; see also West Run Student Housing Assocs., LLC v. Huntington Nat. Bank, 712 F.3d 165, 169 (3d Cir. 2013). That facial-plausibility standard is met "when the plaintiff pleads factual content that allows the court to draw the reasonable inference that the defendant is liable for the misconduct alleged." Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 678, 129 S. Ct. 1937, 173 L. Ed. 2d 868 (2009) (citing Twombly, 550 U.S. at 556). While "[t]he plausibility standard is not akin to a 'probability' [**34] requirement' . . . it asks for more than a sheer possibility." Iqbal, 556 U.S. at 678.

However, a plaintiff alleging fraud or mistake must meet a heightened pleading standard under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 9(b). Under Rule 9(b), "[i]n alleging fraud or mistake, a party must state with particularity the circumstances constituting fraud or mistake." Fed. R. Civ. P. 9(b) (emphasis added). As the Third Circuit has explained, "[a] plaintiff alleging fraud must therefore support its allegations with all of the essential factual background that would accompany the first paragraph of any newspaper story—that is, the who, what, when, where and how of the events at issue." U.S. ex rel. Moore & Co., P.A. v. Majestic Blue Fisheries, LLC, 812 F.3d 294, 307 \(3d Cir. 2016\) (citing In re Rockefeller Ctr. Props., Inc. Securities Litig., 311 F.3d 198, 217 \(3d Cir. 2002\)) (citation and quotation marks omitted). In other words, a plaintiff may satisfy this requirement by pleading "the date, time and place" of the alleged fraud or deception, or by "otherwise injecting] precision or some measure of substantiation" into the allegation. Frederico v. Home Depot, 507 F.3d 188, 200 \(3d Cir. 12291 2007\) (citing Lum v. Bank of Am., 361 F.3d 217, 224 \(3d Cir. 2004\)).

The heightened specificity required by Rule 9\(b\) extends to the pleading of all claims that "sound in fraud." See Giercyk v. Nat'l Union Fire Ins. Co. of Pittsburgh, No. 13-6272, 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 162628, 2015 WL 7871165, at \*2 \(D.N.J. Dec. 4, 2015\); Mladenov v. Wegmans Food Markets, Inc., 124 F. Supp. 3d 360, 372 \(D.N.J. 2015\). This includes Dr. Kaul's claims of mail, wire, and honest services fraud. See Warden v. McLelland, 288 F.3d 105, 114 \(3d Cir. 2002\).

Where a plaintiff, like Dr. Kaul here, is proceeding pro se, the complaint is to be "liberally construed," and, "however inartfully pleaded, [**35] must be held to less stringent standards than formal pleadings drafted by lawyers." Erickson v. Pardus, 551 U.S. 89, 93-94, 127 S. Ct. 2197, 167 L. Ed. 2d 1081 \(2007\). Nevertheless, "pro se litigants still must allege sufficient facts in their complaints to support a claim." Mala v. Crown Bay Marina, Inc., 704 F.3d 239, 245, 58 V.I. 691 \(3d Cir. 2013\). "While a litigant's pro se status requires a court to construe the allegations in the complaint liberally, a litigant is not absolved from complying with Twombly and the federal pleading requirements merely because s/he proceeds pro se." Thakar v. Tan, 372 F. App'x 325, 328 \(3d Cir. 2010\) (citation omitted). Pro se plaintiffs are also not exempt from meeting the heightened pleading requirements of Rule 9\(b\) when alleging claims that sound in fraud. See Kowalsky v. Deutsche Bank Nat'l Trust Co., No. 14-07856 \(CCC\)\(JBC\), 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 133284, 2015 WL 5770523, at \*9 \(D.N.J. Sept. 30, 2015\).

C. Extrinsic Materials

In connection with these motions to dismiss, the parties have submitted reams of documents extrinsic to the complaint. Many, especially the documents submitted by Dr. Kaul, cannot be considered without converting these motions to dismiss into summary judgment motions. Others, however, are properly considered on a motion to dismiss, and I do consider them. I refer in particular to the records of the state administrative proceedings and other court records. I stress that I have considered these documents, not to establish contested [**36] factual matters, but to establish the nature and scope of prior proceedings between the parties, and the rulings of the Board and state courts.

Such records<sup>18</sup> are subject to judicial notice:

[O]n a motion to dismiss, we may take judicial notice of another court's opinion—not for the truth of the facts recited therein, but for the existence of the opinion, which is not subject to reasonable dispute over its authenticity. See Kramer v. Time Warner Inc., 937 F.2d 767, 774 \(2d Cir. 1991\); United States v. Wood, 925 F.2d 1580, 1582 \(7th Cir. 1991\); see also Funk v. Commissioner, 163 F.2d 796, 800-01 \(3d Cir. 1947\) (whether a court may judicially notice other proceedings depends on what the court is asked to notice and on the circumstances of the instant case).

Even setting aside judicial notice, many of these documents, such as the ALJ's initial decision and the Board's final order, are intrinsic to the allegations of the complaint [*230] and may be considered without converting a facial Rule 12\(b\)\(1\) challenge into a factual one, or a Rule 12\(b\)\(6\) motion into one for summary judgment. ### III. SOME PRELIMINARY ISSUES

I first address a number of threshold, or threshold-ish, issues. Disposing of some [**37] preliminaries now will make it easier to discuss and analyze defendant-specific, or merits-oriented, issues later. Because all defendants raise the Rooker-Feldman and Younger doctrines, I discuss them first. I then turn my attention to a number of facial pleading defects. Section III concludes with an analysis of the potential preclusive effect of certain state court orders.

The upshot of my analysis of these preliminary issues is this: I have jurisdiction to hear this case, and I will not abstain from hearing it. The AC, however, will be dismissed as to Berkshire Hathaway, Buffett, Crist, and Gragnolati for failure to state a claim. Counts Three, Four, Five, Six, Seven, and Nine will also be dismissed as to all defendants for incurable pleading defects. And all claims will be dismissed as to Drs. Moore, Carmel, AMA, and NASS on res judicata and entire controversy grounds.

As to the defendants and claims remaining, in Sections IV and V I will analyze additional jurisdictional, immunity, and merits-based arguments.

A. Rooker-Feldman and Younger Abstention

All defendants move to dismiss this case pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(1) under the Rooker-Feldman doctrine, see generally Rooker v. Fidelity Trust Co., 263 U.S. 413, 416, 44 S. Ct. 149, 68 L. Ed. 362 (1923), District of Columbia Court of Appeals v. Feldman, 460 U.S. 462, 103 S. Ct. 1303, 75 L. Ed. 2d 206 (1983), or alternatively the federalism-based [**38] abstention doctrine of Younger v. Harris, 401 U.S. 37, 91 S. Ct. 746, 27 L. Ed. 2d 669 (1971). For the reasons set forth below, I decline to dismiss the AC on either ground.<sup>19</sup>

1. Rooker-Feldman

The Rooker-Feldman doctrine prohibits federal courts from exercising jurisdiction over "cases brought by state-court losers complaining of injuries caused by state-court judgments rendered before the district court proceedings commenced and inviting district court review and rejection of those judgments." Exxon Mobil Corp. v. Saudi Basic Indus. Corp., 544 U.S. 280, 284, 125 S. Ct. 1517, 161 L. Ed. 2d 454 (2005). In the Third Circuit, Rooker-Feldman bars claims in federal court if: "(1) the federal plaintiff lost in state court; (2) the plaintiff 'complain[s] of injuries caused by [the] state-court judgments'; (3) those judgments were rendered before the federal suit was filed; and (4) the plaintiff is inviting the district court to review and reject the state judgments." Great Western Mining & Mineral Co. v. Fox Rothschild [*231] LLP, 615 F.3d 159, 166 (3d Cir. 2010).

All defendants argue that the AC is a naked attempt to overturn and re-litigate the Board's Order revoking Dr. Kaul's license. That is correct as far as it goes; the AC, among other things, requests reinstatement of Dr. Kaul's medical license and expungement of the Board's decision from the public record. The problem, however, is that the Order, while a final administrative action, is not [**39] a state court judgment. Because Dr. Kaul never appealed the Order to the Appellate Division (though he could have), he is not, and was never, a state court loser. Without a state court judgment, Rooker-Feldman cannot apply.<sup>20</sup>

Citing *Ninal v. Evangelista, Civ. Action No. 04-5718, 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 25251, at *11 (D.N.J. Oct. 21, 2005)*, defendants suggest that administrative determinations that are "judicial in nature" may trigger Rooker-Feldman. That is not the law; the Rooker-Feldman doctrine is actually much narrower. "The Supreme Court has made clear . . . that the Rooker-Feldman doctrine only applies to state judicial proceedings, not administrative or legislative proceedings." AMTRAK v. Pa. PUC, 342 F.3d 242, 257 (3d Cir. 2003) (citing Verizon Md., Inc. v. PSC, 535 U.S. 635, 644 n.3, 122 S. Ct. 1753, 152 L. Ed. 2d 871 (2002)); accord Stone v. N.J. Admin Office of the Courts, 557 Fed. App'x 151, 153 (3d Cir. 2014) ("Rooker-Feldman does not bar review of claims never decided by the courts.") As the Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit has explained:

While the Rooker-Feldman doctrine recognizes that the federal district courts may not review decisions by a state's courts, it does not preclude federal district court review of 'executive action, including determinations made by state administrative agencies.' This principle holds true even where the administrative agency acted in an adjudicative capacity, or plaintiff could have sought, but did not seek, review of the agency's determination [**40] in state court.

Mitchell v. Fishbein, 377 F.3d 157, 165 (2d Cir. 2004) (citations omitted).<sup>21</sup>

Dr. Raul's failure to avail himself of state court remedies may have other consequences. This action, however, does not require this Court "to exercise appellate jurisdiction over a state-court judgment." Verizon, 535 U.S. at 644 n.3. Rooker-Feldman does not bar the Court from hearing this case.<sup>22</sup>

[*232] 2. Younger abstention

Defendants' fallback position is that dismissal is appropriate based on the abstention doctrine of Younger v. Harris, 401 U.S. 37, 91 S. Ct. 746, 27 L. Ed. 2d 669 (1971). Younger abstention is a closer call, but I find that abstention is not warranted under the circumstances of this case.

<sup>20</sup> That is also why the Santos case, UNN-L332-15, cannot be the basis of Rooker-Feldman dismissal. As far as the Court is aware, there was no final judgment entered in that case as of the time this action was commenced, and there does not appear to have been a final judgment even now.

<sup>22</sup> The Bank defendants argue that Rooker-Feldman dismissal is appropriate on grounds unique to them. Around April 2009, TD Bank became the holder of a $1 million loan that another bank had made Dr. Kaul and his companies. In 2012, he defaulted on that loan; on March 22, 2013, TD Bank obtained a default judgment against Dr. Kaul and his businesses. Attempting to enforce the judgment, the Bank Defendants allegedly "defraud[ed] the plaintiff of his right to sell his Manhattan townhouse" and "used false pretenses to obstruct [] the townhouse and force it into foreclosure." (E.g. AC ¶¶ 184-85) Dr. Kaul, the Bank defendants conclude, is thus a state-court loser complaining of injuries caused by a state-court judgment rendered before this case was filed, which he invites me to review and reject.

Dr. Kaul, however, does not assert claims based on injuries caused by the state court judgment itself, but rather injuries traceable to the Bank Defendants' attempts to enforce that judgment. See, e.g., B.S. v. Somerset County, 704 F.3d 250, 260 (3d Cir. 2013) (holding that suits seeking redress for injuries traceable to defendants' actions, rather than the state court orders themselves, are not barred by Rooker-Feldman). Nor does Dr. Kaul explicitly ask this court to invalidate the judgment. Post-Exxon, a court must be cautious in applying Rooker-Feldman where the federal claims do not directly clash with the state claims, but are merely "intertwined" with them. See, e.g., Gary v. Braddock Cemetery, 517 F.3d 195, 200 n.5 (3d Cir. 2008) (advising caution in employing pre-Exxon Third Circuit precedent interpreting Rooker-Feldman). The Rooker-Feldman doctrine does not apply to the claims against the Bank defendants.

Younger requires federal courts to abstain from interfering with certain pending state proceedings. See Gonzalez v. Waterfront Comm'n of N.Y. Harbor, 755 F.3d 176, 180 \(3d Cir. 2014\). It applies rarely, "in only three 'exceptional' classes of cases: (1) 'state criminal prosecutions,' (2) 'civil enforcement proceedings,' and (3) 'civil proceedings involving certain orders that are uniquely in furtherance of the state courts' ability to perform their judicial functions." Id. (citing Sprint Communs., Inc. v. Jacobs, 571 U.S. 69, 134 S. Ct. 584, 588, 187 L. Ed. 2d 505 \(2013\)).

This case undeniably involves a state proceeding falling in the second category: a civil enforcement proceeding. The proceedings that resulted in [*41] the revocation of Dr. Kaul's license bear hallmarks of a quasi-criminal proceeding. The State, for example, was a party. Gonzalez, 755 F.3d at 181. The proceedings began with an "investigation that 'culminat[ed] in the filing of a formal complaint.' Id. And they were initiated by the State "to sanction the federal plaintiff, i.e., the party challenging the state action, for some wrongful act." Id. Since the administrative proceedings here were "akin to a criminal prosecution," one prerequisite to Younger abstention is met.

That is just the beginning of the analysis, however. I must also consider the three factors identified in Middlesex County Ethics Comm. v. Garden State Bar Ass'n, 457 U.S. 423, 102 S. Ct. 2515, 73 L. Ed. 2d 116 \(1982\). Condensing somewhat, those factors are that there be (1) an ongoing or pending state or administrative judicial proceeding (2) implicating important state interests (3) in which the plaintiff has an opportunity to raise the issues she seeks to litigate in federal court. Gonzalez, 755 F.3d at 182-83 (citing Sprint, 134 S. Ct. at 593). For the reasons stated below, factors (1) and (2) are met, but because the administrative proceedings did not afford Dr. Kaul the opportunity to raise most of the issues he seeks to litigate here, factor (3) is not satisfied.

As to the first factor, this case may technically interfere with an ongoing judicial [*42] proceeding. True, Dr. Kaul never asked a New Jersey state court to review the Board's Order, but that is not required for purposes of Younger. As the Third Circuit has held:

[S]tate proceedings remain "pending," within the meaning of Younger abstention, . . . where a coercive administrative proceeding has been initiated by the State in a state forum, where adequate state-court judicial review of the administrative determination is available to the federal claimants, and where the [*233] claimants have chosen not to pursue their state-court judicial remedies, but have instead sought to invalidate the State's judgment by filing a federal action.

O'Neill v. City of Philadelphia, 32 F. 3d 785, 791 \(3d Cir. 1994\); accord Zahl v. Harper, 282 F.3d 204, 209 \(3d Cir. 2002\); Williams v. Gov't of Virgin Islands, No. 2005-97, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 99648 at \*1, 3, 50 V.I. 852 \(D.V.I. Dec. 8, 2008\), aff'd sub nom., 360 F. App'x. 297 \(3d Cir.\), cert. denied, 560 U.S. 965, 130 S. Ct. 3445, 177 L. Ed. 2d 324 (2010) (concluding that the requirements of Younger had been met in a case involving a doctor attempting to enjoin a medical board that had suspended and revoked the doctor's medical license). Having lost in a coercive administrative proceeding initiated by the State, Dr. Kaul had the right to appeal the Board's final administrative decision to the New Jersey Superior Court, Appellate Division. E.g., N.J. Appellate Ct. R. 2:2-3(a)(2); In re Polk, 90 N.J. 550, 560, 449 A.2d 7 \(1982\). While he chose not to do so, as far as Younger is [*43] concerned his case is ongoing.

The disciplinary hearings, moreover, clearly were judicial. ALJ Solomon presided over 23 days of hearings in which counsel for Dr. Kaul and the AG submitted evidence, cross-examined witnesses, and filed post-hearing briefs. The ALJ issued a formal, written recommendation. The Board considered and rejected Dr. Kaul's exceptions to ALJ Solomon's recommendation, adopted it, and then held a hearing to consider the appropriate punishment. Although not held in a court of law, these proceedings were quintessentially judicial. Because the disciplinary proceedings are ongoing and judicial in nature, the first Middlesex factor is present here.

So too is the second Middlesex factor. The proceedings before the Board surely implicate important state interests. New Jersey has a strong interest in regulating the medical profession and censuring physicians who are a danger to public health and safety. E.g. Zahl, 282 F. 3d at 210 (recognizing the "obvious" interest states have in regulating the practice of medicine) (collecting cases)). On this factor, no further analysis is required.

The analysis of the third and final Middlesex factor—whether Dr. Kaul had an adequate opportunity to assert his [**44] federal claims in the state proceedings—is slightly more complicated. Dr. Kaul no doubt had an opportunity to raise his claims of procedural and substantive due process before the Board (and, had he exercised his right to state court judicial review, before the Appellate Division).<sup>23</sup> Dr. Kaul, however, asserts many other federal claims, some of which could not have been heard before the Board, against persons and entities that were not parties to the administrative proceedings.

Persuasive here is Prevost v. Twp. of Hazlet, 159 F. App'x 396 (3d Cir. 2005). There, a police officer in Hazlet, New Jersey, was subjected to disciplinary proceedings and eventually fired. He sued the Township of Hazlet and several of its employees under Section 1983. Even though the administrative disciplinary proceeding remained pending, and the federal case rested on the same facts, the Third Circuit found abstention unwarranted. It emphasized three factors: (1) the only opposing party in the administrative proceeding was the Township, not its employees, who were parties to only the federal proceeding; (2) the only question in the administrative [*234] proceeding was whether the officer's termination violated state statutes or regulations, not federal law; and (3) in the administrative proceedings, [**45] the officer could not obtain certain injunctive and monetary relief that he could obtain in federal court. Id. at 398.

Those Prevost considerations apply here as well. The only parties to the disciplinary proceedings were Dr. Kaul and the State, not the entire "medico-legal" community Dr. Kaul attempts to hold liable now. The only questions before the Board were whether Dr. Kaul had committed repeated instances of gross malpractice and professional misconduct. By contrast, the issues here concern allegedly collusive and anticompetitive conduct, and conspiracy to defraud and extort. Some of that alleged conduct, moreover, occurred at the same time as, or even after, the administrative proceedings. And the administrative proceedings would not provide for the punitive and treble damages that Dr. Kaul seeks here.

On balance, then, I do not think that the third Middlesex factor is met. Dr. Kaul could not have raised the federal claims central to the AC—specifically the RICO and antitrust claims—in the administrative disciplinary proceedings below; nor could he have obtained anything like the damages he seeks to impose against the multifarious defendants involved in this case. In these peculiar circumstances, [**46] I will not dismiss the AC on Younger grounds.

I note in passing a final consideration. "A federal court will consider Younger abstention when the requested equitable relief would constitute federal interference in state judicial or quasi-judicial proceedings." Marran v. Marran, 376 F.3d 143, 154 (3d Cir. 2004) (emphasis in original) (quoting Marks v. Stinson, 19 F.3d 873, 883 (3d Cir. 1994)). Although, on the next-to-last page of the AC, Dr. Kaul requests an order reinstating his medical license and expunging the Board's Order "from the public record," the overall goal of this pro se complaint seems to an award of damages for violations of antitrust and organized crime laws. (AC ¶¶ 92, 119, 148, 177, 206, 236, 261, 294, 308, 315, 318 (requesting compensatory, consequential, and punitive damages). Abstention is most obviously appropriate in cases where a plaintiff asks a federal court to enjoin some state judicial or quasi-judicial proceeding. See, e.g., Younger, 401 U.S. at 45.<sup>24</sup> The AC does not directly ask me to do that.

<sup>23</sup> At least with respect to allegations of altered transcripts, the Board noted that the single instance of such alteration provided by Dr. Kaul contained only "minor insubstantial inconsistencies." (Order 22)

<sup>24</sup> Even if this reference to reinstatement and expungement were construed as a claim for equitable or declaratory relief, the law of this Circuit would mandate a stay, not outright dismissal, of the AC. See, e.g., Marran, 376 F.3d at 155.

To look at it another way, consider this. The central insight of Younger is that a federal court should not grind important and presumptively lawful state processes to a halt by granting discretionary equitable relief. To do otherwise would unduly interfere in a state's sovereign prerogatives, which is why the "normal thing to do" is to withhold the requested relief and dismiss the case. E.g., New Orleans Pub. Serv., Inc. v. Council of New Orleans, 491 U.S. 350, 359, 109 S. Ct. 2506, 105 L. Ed. 2d 298 (1989) (Or, where both an injunction and damages are requested, stay the case and let the state proceedings run their course.) In this case, the administrative proceedings, while technically still pending, have essentially concluded. The time for Dr. Kaul to appeal the Board's Order lapsed long ago. The primary objective of AC appears to be to obtain money damages. I am confident that, to the

For these reasons, as well as those detailed above, this case is distinguishable from *Williams v. Gov't of the V.I. Bd. of Med. Examiners*, 360 F. App'x 297 \(3d Cir. 2010). There, the Third Circuit upheld a [*235] district court's decision to abstain from hearing a case involving a doctor suing a medical board for alleged due process violations and violations [*47] of the antitrust laws. The board and members of the board were the only parties in that case, and the events giving rise to the plaintiff's federal claims stemmed from conduct that had transpired during the administrative proceedings. The plaintiff also requested emergent relief (which he actually received, a couple of times), a preliminary injunction, and a declaration "that Defendants must adopt reasonable rules and regulations in accordance with Virgin Islands law". Those circumstances, which are not present here, suggest a much stronger case for Younger abstention.<sup>25</sup>

So, in short, holding this pro se complaint to the appropriate pleading standard and giving all due weight to the Court's "virtually unflagging" obligation to hear and decide cases that fall within its jurisdiction, *Sprint, 134 S. Ct. at 584*, I will not abstain from adjudicating the claims of the AC.<sup>26</sup>

B. Berkshire Hathaway, Buffet, Crist, and Gragnolati

Changing gears, I will clear away four parties who are named as defendants, but against whom no substantive allegations can be found in the AC. These defendants—Berkshire Hathaway, Buffet, Crist, and Gragnolati—will be dismissed from the case.

No allegation is directed towards Crist. (AC ¶ [*48] 8) As to Berkshire Hathaway, its liability is based solely on the conduct of its subsidiary, GEICO. That, without more, is an insufficient allegation of RICO liability against Berkshire Hathaway. See, e.g., *Lorenz v. CSX Corp., 1 F.3d 1406, 1412 \(3d Cir. 1993\)* ("[T]he plaintiff must plead facts which, if assumed to be true, would clearly show that the parent corporation played a role in the racketeering activity which is distinct from the activities of its subsidiary.") The sole allegation as to Buffet makes little sense, and thus fails to plausibly suggest any wrongdoing (let alone meet the heightened pleading requirements of *Rule 9\(b\)*).<sup>27</sup> Having been the President and CEO of AHS only since May 4, 2015, Gragnolati could not have conspired to revoke Dr. Kaul's license, an event which occurred on February 12, 2014.

For these reasons, Berkshire Hathaway, Buffet, Crist, and Gragnolati's motions to [*236] dismiss for failure to state a claim are granted.<sup>28</sup> extent Dr. Kaul intended to plead it, the discretionary equitable relief requested here will not unduly interfere with any state proceedings or objectives.

C. Counts Three, Four, Five, Six, Seven, and Nine

<sup>25</sup> Same reasoning applies to *Zahl v. Harper, 282 F.3d 204 \(3d Cir. 2002\)*, in which a doctor tried to get a district court to enjoin the State from bringing disciplinary proceedings. The Third Circuit ruled that the district court appropriately dismissed the case on abstention grounds.

<sup>26</sup> The Bank Defendants claim that their default judgment against Dr. Kaul injects special jurisdictional considerations as to the claims against them. There is no analysis, however, why that may be the case. Because the Bank Defendants have failed to argue, let alone show, that Younger abstention is triggered by its March 22, 2013 default judgment or the subsequent foreclosure proceedings, I will not abstain from hearing the claims as to them.

<sup>27</sup> AC ¶ 63 ("Warren Buffet[t] is the Chairman and CEO of Berkshire Hathaway, which is the parent company of GEICO. The defendant is liable for illegal acts to which there exists a nexus to the aforementioned corporations. The protections of the corporate veil become forfeited when the majority of shareholders are ignorant as to the existence of the illegal acts. The illegal act was the alteration of court transcripts by the defendant state, which deprived the plaintiff of his Constitutional right to due process and which caused damage to the plaintiff's estate and reputation. The defendant violated the Racketeer and Influenced Corruption Act when he conspired by willful ignorance with the defendant Governor to revoke the medical license of the plaintiff.")

<sup>28</sup> Because I dismiss the AC pursuant to *Rule 12\(b\)\(6\)* as to Crist, Berkshire Hathaway, and Buffet, I do not reach these defendants' arguments that dismissal is warranted for lack of sufficient process and personal jurisdiction.

Several causes of action alleged in the AC are obvious non-starters, and I will weed them out now.

Counts Three, Four and Five allege violations of federal mail, wire, and honest services fraud statutes. Count Six alleges violations of the Hobbs Act, which essentially [**49] outlaws certain forms of extortion. Not one of these federal criminal statutes provides a private right of action, express or implied.<sup>29</sup> To the extent the AC purports to assert Counts Three, Four, Five, and Six as independent causes of action, they are dismissed as to all defendants. I will consider them as potential predicate acts on which to base RICO liability, however. See infra Part V.A.

Count Seven, which is pleaded as defamation in violation of 28 U.S.C. § 4104, is also defective. That statute addresses the recognition of foreign defamation judgments; the cited provision provides a definition for "defamation." Defamation is not a federal statutory cause of action. Count Seven is dismissed as to all defendants.

Count Nine alleges violations of Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964. Title VII prohibits employers from taking adverse employment actions against their employees on the basis of protected characteristics. 42 U.S.C. § 2000e-2\(a\). An "employer" is defined as "a person engaged in an industry affecting commerce who has fifteen or more employees . . . and any agent of such a person." [**50] 42 U.S.C. § 2000e\(b\). An "employee" is defined as "an individual employed by an employer[.]" 42 U.S.C. § 2000e\(f\). To determine whether a person is an employee of an employer, courts look to common law master-servant agency principles. E.g., Clackamas Gastroenterology Assocs., P.C. v. Wells, 538 U.S. 440, 445, 123 S. Ct. 1673, 155 L. Ed. 2d 615 \(2003\). Those principles include:

die hiring party's right to control the manner and means by which the product is accomplished[;] ... the skill required; the source of the instrumentalities and tools; the location of die work; the duration of the relationship between the parties; whether the hiring party has the right to assign additional projects to the hired party; the extent of the hired party's discretion over when and how long to work; the method of payment; the [*237] hired party's role in hiring and paying assistants; whether the work is part of the regular business of the hiring party; whether the hiring party is in business; the provision of employee benefits; and the tax treatment of the hired party.

None of these factors are present here, for any of the defendants, anywhere in the AC. No defendant acted as Dr. Kaul's employer. To the contrary, the record suggests that Dr. Kaul was self-employed and ran his own surgical center. There is no employer-employee relationship here that [**51] could give rise to a Title VII violation. Count Nine is therefore dismissed as to all defendants. I will consider, however, that Dr. Kaul may have intended to advance a parallel disparate treatment claim under section 1983. See infra Part V.C.3.

D. Res Judicata and the Entire Controversy Rule

To round out this section, I consider the argument that some of Dr. Kaul's claims are barred by res judicata and New Jersey's entire controversy rule. Recall that, on March 22, 2013, Dr. Kaul sued Drs. Heary, Moore, Carmel, Przybylski, Mitchell, John Does 1-5, and ABC Associations 1-5 in New Jersey Superior Court (referred herein as "State Complaint" and cited as "State Compl.") As to Drs. Moore, Przybylski, and Carmel, that complaint was dismissed with prejudice on March 7, 2014. That disposition, virtually all defendants argue, precludes all or many of the claims advanced here. To some extent, I agree, but only as to Drs., Carmel, Moore, NASS, and AMA.<sup>30</sup>

Res judicata, though an affirmative defense, may be considered on a Rule 12\(b\)\(6\) motion where, as here, the necessary facts are apparent on the face of the complaint and other documents properly considered on a motion to dismiss. Whether a state court judgment should have [\[\*\*52\]](#) a preclusive effect in a subsequent federal action depends on the law of the state that adjudicated the original action. See Greenleaf v. Garlock, Inc., 174 F.3d 352, 357 \(3d Cir. 1999\) ("To determine the preclusive effect of [the plaintiff's] prior state action we must look to the law of the adjudicating state."). See also Allen v. McCurry, 449 U.S. 90, 96, 101 S. Ct. 411, 66 L. Ed. 2d 308 \(1980\) ("Congress has specifically [\[\*238\]](#) required all federal courts to give preclusive effect to state-court judgments whenever the courts of the State from which the judgments emerged would do so."). Here, that state is New Jersey.

Claim preclusion in the traditional sense tends to be subsumed by New Jersey's "entire controversy" rule. "In New Jersey, the entire controversy doctrine 'is an extremely robust claim preclusion device that requires adversaries to join all possible claims stemming from an event or series of events in one suit.'" Chrystral v. N.J. Dep't of Law & Pub. Safety, 535 Fed. Appx. 120, 123 \(3d Cir. 2013\) (quoting Paramount Aviation Corp. v. Agusta, 178 F.3d 132, 135 \(3d Cir. 1999\)). The doctrine precludes, not just claims actually decided by a prior judgment, but all claims that a party could and should have joined in a prior case based on the same transaction or occurrence.<sup>31</sup>

We have described the entire controversy doctrine as "New Jersey's specific, and idiosyncratic, application of traditional res judicata principles." Rycoline Prods., Inc. v. C & W Unlimited, 109 F.3d 883, 886 \(3d Cir. 1997\). A mainstay of New Jersey civil procedure, [\[\*\*53\]](#) the doctrine encapsulates the state's longstanding policy judgment that "the adjudication of a legal controversy should occur in one litigation in only one court[.]" Cogdell v. Hosp. Ctr. at Orange, 116 N.J. 7, 560 A.2d 1169, 1172 \(N.J. 1989\); see also N.J. Const, art. VI, § 3, 4 ("[L]egal and equitable relief shall be granted in any cause so that all matters in controversy between the parties may be completely determined."); Smith v. Red Top Taxicab Corp., 111 N.J.L. 439, 168 A. 796, 797 \(N.J. 1933\) ("No principle of law is more firmly established than that a single or entire cause of action cannot be subdivided into several claims, and separate actions maintained thereon."). . . .

<sup>30</sup> H&S and Hollenbeck advance a res judicata argument based on orders from another action. The facts necessary to perform the appropriate analysis, however, are not apparent from the face of die complaint or other documents properly considered on a motion to dismiss.

On August 25, 2014, H&S obtained a default judgment against Dr. Kaul in die amount of $97,886.96 for unpaid legal services. Almost two years later, in June 2016, Dr. Kaul filed a motion to vacate the judgment and sought leave to file an answer, counterclaims, and third party complaint. The proposed counterclaims and third party complaint asserted RICO, Hobbs Act, mail fraud, wire fraud, honest services fraud, and violations of constitutional rights against the Governor, the Board, and Drs. Peterson and Heary. On October 6, 2016, the motion to vacate was denied. (Def. Ex. Q)

S&H and Hollenbeck do not identify which order—the August 2014 default judgment or the October 6, 2016 denial of the motion to vacate—they believe carries preclusive effect. Presumably they mean the default judgment; if so, I still cannot discern from the face of the complaint and the appropriate documents the relationship between the $97,886.96 worth of legal fees Dr. Kaul owed S&H and the $196,000 S&H allegedly "attempted to extort" from Dr. Kaul weeks before the August 2013 disciplinary hearings. The answer to that question would be best explored on a motion for summary judgment, not to dismiss.

Under die entire controversy doctrine, a party cannot withhold part of a controversy for separate later litigation even when the withheld component is a separate and independently cognizable cause of action. The doctrine has three purposes: (1) complete and final disposition of cases through avoidance of piecemeal decisions; (2) fairness to parties to an action and to others with a material interest in it; and (3) efficiency and avoidance of waste and delay. See DiTrolio v. Antiles, 142 N.J. 253, 662 A.2d 494, 502 \(N.J. 1995\). As an equitable doctrine, its application is flexible, with a case-by-case appreciation for fairness to the parties.

Ricketti v. Barry, 775 F.3d 611, 613 (3d Cir. 2014).

There is no requirement that the claim as to which preclusion is sought have been actually asserted [**54] in the prior action. Rather, the necessary relation between the prior and present actions is a transactional one:

In determining whether a subsequent claim should be barred under this doctrine, "the central consideration is whether the claims against the different parties arise from related facts or the same transaction or series of transactions." [citing DiTrollo v. Antiles, 142 N.J. 253, 268, 662 A.2d 494 (1995).] "It is the core set of facts that provides the link between distinct claims against the same parties ... and triggers the requirement that they be determined in one proceeding." Id. at 267-68, 662 A.2d 494. There is no requirement that there be a "commonality of legal issues." Id. at 271, 662 A.2d 494.

Wadeer v. New Jersey Mfrs. Ins. Co., 220 N.J. 591, 605, 110 A.3d 19, 27 (2015). So the entire controversy doctrine applies in [*239] federal court "when there was a previous state-court action involving the same transaction." Bennun v. Rutgers State Univ., 941 F.2d 154, 163 (3d Cir. 1991).

The original version of Rule 4:30A applied to both claims and parties. In its amended 1998 version, however, the Rule dropped the words "and parties." It currently reads as follows: "Non-joinder of claims required to be joined by the entire controversy doctrine shall result in the preclusion of the omitted claims to the extent required by the entire controversy doctrine . . ." N.J. Ct. R. 4:30A (current ver.). See Kent Motor Cars, Inc. v. Reynolds & Reynolds, Co., 207 N.J. 428, 25 A.3d 1027, 1036 (2011) ("Rule 4:30A was amended to limit its scope to mandatory joinder [**55] of claims." (emphasis omitted)); see also Paramount Aviation Corp. v. Agusta, 178 F.3d 132, 135 n.1 (3d Cir. 1999) ("The party joinder aspect of the [entire controversy] doctrine ... has now been eliminated."). There is one caveat; a watered-down version of the party joinder component still arises from another rule, N.J. Ct. R. 4:5-1 (b)(2). See Ricketti v. Barry, 775 F.3d 611, 614 (3d Cir. 2015) (dismissal appropriate "if the noncompliance [with the Rule's requirement of disclosure of all potentially liable parties] was 'inexcusable' and 'the right of the undisclosed party to defend' a successive action was 'substantially prejudiced.'"). Because the privity rule suffices, I do not consider this watered-down party joinder rule.

The entire controversy doctrine as such, then, is no longer a party-joinder rule. It bars claims that were or could have been asserted against the actual parties to the prior litigation, or those in privity with them: "[T]he doctrine applies not only to actual or potential claims between the parties in the first suit, but also 'extends to all those in privity with the parties involved in the preceding litigation.'" Wisniewski v. Travelers Cas. & Sur. Co., 390 F. App'x 153, 156 (3d Cir. 2010) (quoting McNeil v. Legislative Apportionment Comm'n, 177 N.J. 364, 396, 828 A.2d 840 (2003)).

All of the foregoing boils down to three requirements for application of the entire controversy doctrine:

(1) the judgment in the prior action [is] valid, final, and on the merits; (2) [**56] the parties in the later action [are] identical to or in privity with those in the prior action; and (3) the claim in the later action [ ] grow[s] out of the same transaction or occurrence as the claim in the earlier one.

McNeil, 177 N.J. at 395 (quoting Watkins v. Resorts Int'l Hotel & Casino, Inc., 124 N.J. 398, 412, 591 A.2d 592 (1991)).

Turning to the claims and parties involved in the State Complaint, we immediately see a number of striking similarities to the AC. The thrust of that action was that Drs. Heary, Moore, Carmel, Przybylski, Mitchell, John Does 1-5, and ABC Associations 1-5 conspired to oust Dr. Kaul from competition through defamation, downgrading certain billing codes to make certain procedures performed by Dr. Kaul less profitable, and spurring the State to initiate disciplinary proceedings. (State Compl. ¶¶ 52-110) Indeed, some of the specific factual averments contained in AC seem to have been copied from the State Complaint. There, as here, Dr. Kaul alleged that Dr. Heary "encouraged" one of his patients to file an action with the Board. (Compare State Comp. ¶¶ 53-55 with AC ¶ 68) There, as here, Drs. Przybylski, Carmel, and Mitchell allegedly used the power of their positions at the NASS and AMA to lobby politicians, insurance companies, and professional organizations [**57] to make endoscopic discectomies less profitable. (Compare State Comp. ¶¶ 87-98 [*240] with AC ¶¶ 72, 80, 92, 103) And there, as here, Dr. Przyblyski allegedly testified before some tribunal "to ensure . . . permanent suspension of Dr. Kaul's medical license." (Compare State Comp. ¶ 62 with AC ¶ 85)

The State Complaint's specific legal claims, too, substantially overlap the claims asserted here. Four are identical: defamation, commercial disparagement, intentional interference with prospective economic advantage, and aid in the commission of a tort. A fifth, violations of New Jersey's antitrust law, is now pled under its federal counterpart, the Sherman and Clayton Antitrust Acts.<sup>32</sup> The sixth, a conspiracy claim, is analogous to the claim now pled under the federal RICO law, and involves essentially the same allegations (i.e., conspiracy to defraud, defame, commercially disparage, and unlawfully interfere with legitimate business activities). Because the BER-L-2256-13 case is "a previous state-court action involving the same transaction"—a conspiracy to force Dr. Kaul from the minimally invasive spine surgery market—the necessary connection is present. See, e.g. Printing Mart-Morristown v. Rosenthal, 650 F. Supp. 1444, 1447 (D.N.J. 1987) ("[T]he entire controversy doctrine [*58] applies both to subsequent actions asserting different legal theories and those requesting alternative relief.")

For at least some claims involved here, then, the entire controversy rule facially applies. The real question is as to whom and to which claims.

First, I consider the parties affected. The Doctor Defendants claim that the State Complaint was dismissed with prejudice as to every named defendant, i.e., Drs. Heary, Moore, Carmel, Przyblyski, and Mitchell. Therefore, the Doctor Defendants say, the AC should be dismissed as to each of them. Two of the Medical Organization Defendants, NASS and AMA, claim that dismissal is appropriate, even though they were not named as defendants. The rest of the defendants claim that they should be dismissed as well—especially the remaining Doctor Defendants (Drs. Cohen, Staats, Lomazow, Kaufman, and Peterson) and Medical Organization Defendants (ASSIP, CNS, and Wolfa)—because they are encompassed within the list of Fictitious defendants, John Does 1-5 and ABC Associations 1-5.

Generally, I think these arguments go too far, but the entire controversy rule is clearly appropriate as to Drs. Moore, Carmel, and Przyblyski. Contrary to defendants' [*59] suggestions, I do not have an order before me clearly dismissing the State Complaint with prejudice as to all named parties. I instead have three orders, each appearing to dismiss the case as to one of the moving defendants. (See State Orders.) Those defendants are Drs. Przyblyski, Carmel, and Moore. As to those three, there is a prior final judgment: "[D]ismissal with prejudice constitutes an adjudication of the merits as fully and completely as if the order had been entered after trial." Gambocz v. Yelencsics, 468 F.2d 837, 840 (3d Cir. 1972); see also N.J. Ct. R. 4:37-2(d) (dismissal with prejudice "operates as an adjudication on the merits").

I am convinced, though, that the potential preclusive effect of these orders is not limited to Drs. Przyblyski, Carmel, and Moore, but also applies to their privies, AMA and NASS. While not named as defendants in the State Complaint, these two organizational defendants allegedly played some role in the conspiracy to drive [*241] Dr. Kaul from the market, mostly related to the billing code downgrading scheme. (State Compl. ¶¶ 87-90) The liability of NASS and AMA in both the federal and state actions is alleged to be based on the conduct of Dr. Przyblyski, the president of NASS, and Dr. Carmel, the president of the AMA. NASS [*60] and AMA are therefore in privity with Drs. Przyblyski and Carmel under the broad definition employed by the State of New Jersey.<sup>33</sup>

In comparison to federal preclusion principles, New Jersey has adopted a broader definition of "privity." See Opdycke v. Stout, 233 F. App'x 125, 129 n. 6 (3d Cir. 2007). "In New Jersey, privity is merely a word used to say that the relationship between the one who is a party on the record and another is close enough to include that other within the res judicata." Hamburg Music Corp. v. Winter, No. 04-2738, 2005 U.S. App. LEXIS 21140, 2005 WL 2170010, at *3 (3d Cir. Sept. 8, 2005) (citation and quotation omitted). Furthermore, New Jersey courts are more likely to find "privity" when a party to the first litigation attempts an end-run around the entire controversy doctrine by either bringing suit under a different name or

372 F. Supp. 3d 206, *241L 2019 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 31732, **60

So Drs. Przybylski, Carmel, Moore, AMA, and NASS all may benefit from the preclusive effect of the March 2013 Orders dismissing the State Complaint with prejudice. Common sense suggests that the BER-L-2256-13 action has been dismissed entirely, but I have not been given clear evidence that this is so. I therefore deny, without prejudice, the motion to dismiss based on res judicata and entire controversy rule for any remaining defendants.

There is, however, a follow up question: Which claims against those five defendants are precluded? I conclude that all claims are barred.

In both actions, the alleged liability of Doctors Carmel and Moore, as well as the two Medical Societies, arises from a scheme to defame, disparage, and otherwise impair Dr. Kaul from competing freely in the marketplace. Prominently featured in both complaints is the scheme to downgrade endoscopic discectomies. While the AC attempts to tie them to other defendants' [**62] acts with generalized allegations of conspiracy and collusion, there are no plausible allegations suggesting their involvement in any conspiracy that extends beyond March 2013, when the State Complaint was filed. Those claims therefore could have been joined in the earlier action. Dismissal based on res judicata and the entire controversy doctrine of all of the claims against these defendants is therefore appropriate.

As to Dr. Przybylski, however, things are less certain. The AC addresses events and circumstances that occurred sometime after the filing of the March 2013 State Complaint. Dr. Przybylski allegedly had some role in schemes to defraud, defame, [*242] disparage, and exclude Dr. Kaul from the market, but he also is alleged to have perjured himself during the disciplinary proceedings, which occurred after the State Complaint was filed. That conduct, which occurred during sometime between April and June 2013, is not literally based on same facts or transactions as the State Court Complaint (although it may be related). No party has addressed the circumstances in which the entire controversy rule might bar claims related to a transaction or a series of transactions that had not yet [**63] occurred when the first action was filed.<sup>34</sup> I therefore will deny Dr. Przybylski's motion to dismiss the complaint based on the entire controversy rule without prejudice to renewal, if necessary.

IV. JURISDICTION, AMENABILITY TO SUIT, IMMUNITY

I consider next a second bundle of threshold or quasi-threshold issues: the applicability of Eleventh Amendment immunity, whether defendants are "persons" liable under section 1983, and whether defendants may benefit from absolute or qualified immunity.

A. The State Defendants: Sovereign Immunity

naming related entities as defendants. See *Hamburg Music, 2005 U.S. App. LEXIS 21140, 2005 WL 2170010, at *3* ("Moreover, New Jersey courts are more willing to find that parties are in privity if the plaintiff had a full and fair opportunity to litigate its claims in the first action."); *Radovich v. Citibank, N.A., No. 05-4302, 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 38085, 2006 WL 5100512, at *1 (D.N.J. <sup>34</sup> Without further facts, I will not imply a duty to amend the prior Complaint. The case law seems to indicate that the question turns on when the plaintiff knew about the cause of action. See Cafferata v. Peyser, 251 N.J. Super 256, 260-61, 597 A.2d 1101 (Super. Ct. App. Div. 1991).

The remaining State Defendants—New Jersey, the Governor, the Board, ALJ Solomon, Chiesa, Roeder, and Drs. Przybylski, Lomazow, and Kaufman—move to dismiss the complaint on jurisdictional grounds. All claim that they partake of the State's Eleventh Amendment sovereign immunity. As to New Jersey and the Board, I agree insofar as Dr. Kaul seeks damages; as to Chiesa, Roeder, Dr. Lomazow, ALJ Solomon, the Governor, I agree insofar as Dr. Kaul has sued them in their official capacities. As to Drs. Kaufman and Przybylski, the briefs lack the appropriate analysis or information for me to rule on the Eleventh Amendment issue at this time. As to those two defendants, I deny the motion without prejudice to renewal.

This is essentially [\[\*\*64\]](#) a suit for damages. As to such suits, the Eleventh Amendment incorporates a general principle of sovereign immunity that bars citizens from suing any State in federal court. See Pennhurst State Sch. & Hosp. v. Halderman, 465 U.S. 89, 104 S. Ct. 900, 79 L. Ed. 2d 67 (1984). The Eleventh Amendment, as a bar to suit, is of jurisdictional stature. Id. at 98 (citing Hans v. Louisiana, 134 U.S. 1, 10 S. Ct. 504, 33 L. Ed. 842 (1900)). That bar applies unless Congress has abrogated it, or the State has waived it, two exceptions that do not apply here.<sup>35</sup> E.g., [Pa Fedn. of Sportsmen's \[\*243\] Clubs, Inc. v. Hess](#), 297 F.3d 310, 323 (3d Cir. 2002).

In general, Eleventh Amendment immunity extends to state agencies and state officials in their official capacities. Thus the Court clearly lacks jurisdiction to entertain damages claims against the State of New Jersey. In doubtful cases, the Court will analyze several factors to determine whether an entity is an agency of the State, i.e., whether the State is the real party in interest. See Fitchik v. New Jersey Transit Rail Operations, Inc., 873 F.2d 655, 659-60 (3d Cir. 1989). As to the Board and the Office of Administrative Law, the appropriate analysis has been performed elsewhere and is not subject to reasonable dispute. E.g., Zahl v. N.J. Dep't of Law & Pub. Safety, Civ. Action No. 06-3749, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 24022, \*60-62 \(D.N.J. Mar. 26, 2008\) (holding that the New Jersey Department of Law and Public Safety, and its subdivisions, the Division of Consumer Affairs and the Board of Medical Examiners, are arms of the state for Eleventh Amendment purposes); Rodrigues v. Fort Lee Bd. of Educ., 458 F. App'x 124, 127 (3d Cir. 2011) ("The Office of Administrative Law is a state [\[\*\*65\]](#) agency, and is thus immune from suit under the Eleventh Amendment.") (internal citation omitted). I therefore adopt it here without further analysis, and hold that the Board and the Office of Administrative Law enjoy the State's Eleventh Amendment immunity.

Governor Christie, former AG Chiesa, ALJ Solomon, Roeder, and Dr. Lomazow are state officials sued in their official capacities. As such, they are immune from damages claims on Eleventh Amendment grounds.<sup>36</sup> It is not so clear that Drs. Kaufman and Przybylski are State officials. It seems the State may be picking up the tab for their defense only because they were state witnesses during the disciplinary proceedings. Their motions to dismiss based on the Eleventh Amendment will therefore be denied.<sup>37</sup>

I pause here to allude to a recurring issue. The Eleventh Amendment does not bar a suit for prospective injunctive relief. Sportsmen's Clubs, 297 F.3d at 323. Whether the AC actually requests injunctive relief, however, is something of an open question; as previously noted, each of the twelve counts seeks damages. At one point,

<sup>37</sup> To the extent they are private citizens, they probably lack "person" status to be sued under section 1983, however. See infra Part IV.B.

however, Dr. Kaul requests that I reinstate his medical license and expunge the Board's Order from the public record. Broadly interpreted, this may be a request for an injunction to dissipate some kind of ongoing [**66] harm (i.e., his inability to practice medicine in New Jersey). To the extent any injunctive claim survives the Eleventh Amendment analysis, however, it will be dismissed for failure to state a claim. See infra Part V.

B. Section 1983 "Persons"

As to section 1983, Count Eight, there is another issue that is customarily analyzed together with, but is distinct from, Eleventh Amendment immunity. I refer to the issue of who or what is a suable "person" under section 1983. This issue affects not only the State Defendants, but also everyone else.

Section 1983 provides:

[*244] Every person who, under color of any statute, ordinance, regulation, custom, or usage, of any State or Territory or the District of Columbia, subjects, or causes to be subjected, any citizen of the United States or other person within the jurisdiction thereof to the deprivation of any rights, privileges or immunities secured by the Constitution and laws, shall be liable to the party injured in an action at law, suit in equity, or other proper proceeding for redress . . . .

As to most of the State Defendants, the "person" analysis is essentially the same as the Eleventh Amendment analysis. A state and its departments are not considered "persons" amenable to suit under section 1983. Will v. Michigan Dep't of State Police, 491 U.S. 58, 67-70, 109 S. Ct. 2304, 105 L. Ed. 2d 45 (1989). Also barred are section 1983 suits for damages against "governmental entities" [**67] that are considered 'arms of the state' for Eleventh Amendment purposes, which are "no different from a suit against the State itself." Id. at 70-71. State officials, sued in their official capacities, are likewise not "persons" subject to a damages suit under section 1983. Will, 491 U.S. at 71 n.10; Kentucky v. Graham, 473 U.S. 159, 167 n.14, 105 S. Ct. 3099, 87 L. Ed. 2d 114 (1985). On the other hand, a state official sued in his or her personal capacity is a "person" amenable to suit under section 1983, and does not enjoy Eleventh Amendment protection. Hafer v. Melo, 502 U.S. 21, 30-31, 112 S. Ct. 358, 116 L. Ed. 2d 301 (1991). That means that an award of damages from an individual defendant, as opposed to the public treasury, is a "permissible remedy in some circumstances." Scheuer v. Rhodes, 416 U.S. 232, 238, 94 S. Ct. 1683, 40 L. Ed. 2d 90 (1974). And a state official sued in his or her official capacity for prospective injunctive relief is likewise a "person" amenable to suit. Hafer, 502 U.S. at 27.

These principles lead us to a series of now-familiar conclusions. New Jersey, a state, is not a "person" under section 1983. The Board, as an arm of the state, is not a "person" under section 1983. The Governor, ALJ Solomon, Chiesa, Roeder, and Lomazow are not "persons" under section 1983 to the extent they are sued in their official capacities for damages. Accordingly, and with these caveats in mind, defendants' motions to dismiss Count Eight based on lack of 1983 "person" status are granted.

Because they are not state actors, the non-State Defendants also move [**68] to dismiss Count Eight for lack of 1983 "person" status. "To establish a claim under § 1983, a plaintiff 'must establish that she was deprived of a federal constitutional or statutory right by a state actor.'" Frierson v. St. Francis Med. Ctr., 525 F. App'x 87, 90 (3d Cir. 2013) (quoting Kach v. Hose, 589 F.3d 626, 646 (3d Cir. 2009)) (emphasis added). Courts thus routinely dismiss Section 1983 claims brought against private parties. I cite just a few recent examples. See Neuman v. Ocean City Cnty. Democratic Cnty. Comm., Civ. Action No. 16-2701(FLW), 2017 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 12254, at *10-22 (D.N.J. Jan. 30, 2017) (dismissing section 1983 allegations that political organization conspired to select and to endorse certain candidates); Dougherty v. Adams-Dougherty, No. 15-cv-8541(JBS)(AMD), 2016 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 128725, at *21-22 (D.N.J. Sept. 21, 2016) (dismissing section 1983 allegations that ex-spouse's family members conspired with courts and police to deprive plaintiff of his rights in divorce proceedings); Roy v. Cumberland Mut Fire Ins. Co., Civ. Action No. 15-8171 (JBS/AMD), [*245] 2016 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 109065, at *5-6 (D.N.J. Aug. 2016) (finding insurance company alleged to have wrongfully denied a claim was not a state actor for purposes of section 1983).

Now it is true, as Dr. Kaul argues, that in rare circumstances a private party may be found to act for the State. For that to occur, a plaintiff must "show 'a sufficiently close nexus' between the actions of the private party and the State to warrant treating those actions as those of the State." Munoz v. City of Union City, 481 F. App'x 754, 761 (3d Cir. 2012) (quoting Kost v. Kozakiewicz, 1 F.3d 176, 184 (3d Cir. 1993)). The required nexus may be found where "(1) the private party performed a function typically performed by the state; (2) the private [**69] party acted in concert with the State; or (3) the State has become interdependent with the private party." Id. (citing Kach v. Hose, 589 F.3d 626, 646 (3d Cir. 2009)). The AC contains no allegations that would establish such a nexus, however. The AC, to be sure, alleges that a number of conspiracies exist, but that is not the same thing as alleging facts sufficient to establish a plausible allegation of conspiracy. E.g., Coulter v. Allegheny Cnty. Bar. Ass'n, 496 F. App'x 167, 169 (3d Cir. 2012) (upholding dismissal of section 1983 claim against attorney, law firm, and bar associations where allegations of conspiracy relied on "vague inferences" and "[b]are assertions of joint action action"). The "conspiratorial relationship[s]" between the State Defendants and non-State Defendants alleged in the AC are amorphous; the alleged "improper connections" between them are loose and speculative. Id. (E.g., AC ¶¶ 54, 78, 88) There is no plausible allegation that the non-state defendants acted under the color of state of law.

Thus, I will grant the non-State Defendants' motions to dismiss Count 8 for lack of section 1983 "person" status.

C. Absolute and Qualified Immunity

Dismissal of official-capacity claims, however, is not the end of the story. Individuals named as defendants in their personal capacities may assert individual defenses, [**70] such as absolute or qualified immunity.<sup>38</sup> ALJ Solomon claims absolute judicial immunity; many of the State Defendants claim qualified immunity. For the reasons stated herein, I find that ALJ Solomon enjoys absolute immunity, [*246] and the Governor, Chiesa, Roeder, and Lomazow enjoy qualified immunity.<sup>39</sup>

1. Absolute Immunity

ALJ Solomon argues that he enjoys absolute immunity as to all claims for damages. A judicial officer in the performance of his or her duties enjoys absolute immunity from suit. Mireles v. Waco, 502 U.S. 9, 12, 112 S. Ct. 286, 116 L. Ed. 2d 9 (1991). Absolute judicial immunity applies to all claims, whether official-capacity or personal-capacity, that are based on judicial acts. See Dongon v. Banar, 363 F. App'x 153, 155 (3d Cir. 2010) ("[J]udges are entitled to absolute immunity from liability based on actions taken in their official judicial capacity.") (citing Briscoe v. LaHue, 460 U.S. 325, 334, 103 S. Ct. 1108, 75 L. Ed. 2d 96 (1983)). "A judge will not be deprived of immunity because the action [s]he took was in error, was done maliciously, or was in excess of [her] authority . . ." Stump v.

<sup>38</sup> These defenses—especially qualified immunity—ordinarily parry alleged violations of constitutional rights; it is somewhat atypical for a public official to shield themselves from violations of federal statutes, such as the RICO or antitrust laws, with absolute or qualified immunity. Nevertheless, there is persuasive authority that absolute and qualified immunity applies to RICO claims, and none of it appears to be disputed. See, e.g., Cullinan v. Abramson, 128 F.3d 301, 308-312 (6th Cir. 1997) (applying qualified and absolute immunity to RICO claims); Van Beek v. Ag-Credit Bonus Ptnrs., 316 F. App'x 554, 555-56 (9th Cir. 2008) (applying judicial and prosecutorial immunity to RICO claims); Parette v. Virden, 173 F. App'x 534, 536 (8th Cir. 2006) (applying absolute immunity analysis to RICO claims).

As to antitrust claims, there seems to be no authority directly on point. There is no reason to think, however, that the Sherman or Clayton acts abridged the common law immunity from damages suits "for all persons—governmental or otherwise—who were integral parts of the judicial process." Briscoe, v. Lahue, 460 U.S. 325, 335-36, 103 S. Ct. 1108, 75 L. Ed. 2d 96 (1983). And while the qualified immunity analysis has been honed in the context of alleged violations of civil or constitutional rights, there is no obvious reason to think that it cannot be performed in the context of antitrust claims. The debate in any case is academic; the AC fails to state a claim under the antitrust laws, which is essentially the first step in the qualified immunity analysis.

<sup>39</sup> The State does not assert that Drs. Przybylski and Kaufman are absolutely immune for claims arising from their testimony, or that Chiesa is entitled to prosecutorial immunity. I therefore do not reach those issues.

Again, because it is not clear whether Drs. Przybylski or Lomazow are state officials, I do not reach the qualified immunity question as to them. To the extent the motion is denied, it is without prejudice as to them.

Sparkman, 435 U.S. 349, 356-57, 98 S. Ct. 1099, 55 L. Ed. 2d 331 (1978). The immunity is not vitiated by "allegations of malice or corruption of motive." Gromek v. Maenza, 614 F. App'x 42, 45 (3d Cir. 2015) (quoting Gallas v. Supreme Ct. of Pa., 211 F.3d 760, 768 (3d Cir. 2000)). An ALJ is entitled to absolute immunity. See Raffinee v. Comm'r of Soc. Sec., 367 F. App'x. 379, 381 (3d Cir. 2010) (citing Butz v. Economou, 438 U.S. 478, 514, 98 S. Ct. 2894, 57 L. Ed. 2d 895 (1978)).

There are two exceptions to absolute judicial immunity: (1) "a judge is not immune from liability for nonjudicial actions" and [**71] (2) "a judge is not immune for actions, though judicial in nature, taken in the complete absence of all jurisdiction." Mireles, 502 U.S. at 11-12. Neither exception applies. All of the allegations against ALJ Solomon focus on conduct that occurred during the course of the disciplinary hearings. He had jurisdiction to preside over those proceedings. See generally, N.J. Stat. Ann. § 52:14B-10. A conclusory, fact-free allegation of bribery or fraud is not sufficient to defeat ALJ Solomon's claim to absolute immunity. As all personal capacity damages claims asserted against him, the AC is dismissed.

2. Qualified Immunity

The Governor, Chiesa, Dr. Lomazow and Roeder argue that they enjoy qualified immunity. Such immunity protects government officials from insubstantial claims in order to "shield officials from harassment, distraction, and liability when they perform their duties reasonably." Pearson v. Callahan, 555 U.S. 223, 231, 129 S. Ct. 808, 172 L. Ed. 2d 565 (2009). "When properly applied, it protects 'all but the plainly incompetent or those who knowingly violate the law.'" Ashcroft v. al-Kidd, 563 U.S. 731, 743, 131 S. Ct. 2074, 179 L. Ed. 2d 1149 (2011) (quoting Malley v. Briggs, 475 U.S. 335, 341, 106 S. Ct. 1092, 89 L. Ed. 2d 271 (1986)). To overcome qualified immunity, a plaintiff must plead facts "showing (1) that the official violated a statutory or constitutional right, and (2) that the right was 'clearly established' at the time of the challenged [**72] conduct." Id. at 735. The Court has discretion to analyze the steps in either order. Pearson, at 236 (partially overruling Saucier v. Katz, 533 U.S. 194, 201, 121 S. Ct. 2151, 150 L. Ed. 2d 272 (2001), in that courts are no longer required [**247] to analyze issues (1) and (2) in that order).

For the reasons stated in Part V below, I find that the AC fails to allege sufficient facts to make out a violation of any constitutional right, RICO violation, or violation of the antitrust laws. The first qualified immunity prong is really no different from finding, under the usual Rule 12(b)(6) standard, that the complaint does not sufficiently allege a constitutional or federal statutory cause of action as a matter of law. I therefore incorporate that reasoning here, and dismiss on this alternative ground.

As we approach the merits analysis, it is useful to take stock of what has been decided. The AC is dismissed as to Berkshire Hathaway, Buffett, Crist, and Gragnolati for failure to state a claim. The AC is dismissed as to Carmel, Moore, NASS and AMA on res judicata and entire controversy grounds. Counts Three (Hobbs Act) Four (mail fraud), Five (wire fraud), Six (honest services fraud), Seven (defamation in violation of 28 U.S.C. § 4101), and Nine (Title VII) are dismissed as to all defendants for obvious legal defects. [**73] Count Eight (section 1983) is dismissed as to all non-State Defendants, New Jersey, and the Board for lack of "persons" status. All official capacity damages claims against the State Defendants are dismissed (except for Drs. Kaufman and Przybylski) based on sovereign immunity.<sup>40</sup> All personal capacity damages claims against MO Solomon are dismissed based on absolute immunity. All personal capacity damages against the Governor, Chiesa, Dr. Lomazow, and Roeder will be dismissed on qualified immunity grounds, and for failure to state a claim, see infra Part V.

I turn now to the merits of the remaining claims against the remaining the defendants.

<sup>40</sup> For the purposes of argument going forward, I assume that a plaintiff may obtain injunctive relief under RICO. Curley v. Cumberland Farms Dairy, 728 F. Supp. 1123, 1137-38 (D.N.J. 1989) (concluding that injunctive relief is unavailable under RICO); but see Steamfitters Local Union No. 420 Welfare Fund v. Phillip Morris, 171 F.3d 912, 935 n.20 (3d Cir. 1999) ("This court has yet to decide whether injunctive relief is available for a private party under RICO.").

V. FAILURE TO STATE A CLAIM

There are three remaining federal claims: violations of RICO, the antitrust laws, and 42 U.S.C. § 1983. As to each, the AC fails to state a claim.

A. RICO

Count One alleges a violation of the RICO Act, 18 U.S.C. § 1961 et seq. Although the AC does not identify which of the four subparts of section 1962 defendants allegedly violated, it appears that a section 1962\(c\) violation is intended. (E.g., AC ¶ 52) The particular subsection, however, doesn't matter, because the AC in fails to allege a pattern of racketeering acts. Since that is an essential element for any RICO claim,<sup>41</sup> I will dismiss the [\[\*\*74\]](#) AC as to all defendants.

[\[\*248\]](#) I interpret the AC as alleging essentially three predicate acts: fraud, extortion, and conspiracy. As to each, the AC fails to state a claim.

1. Mail-and-Wire Fraud

The offense of mail or wire fraud has two essential elements: "[1] a scheme to defraud, and (2) a mailing or wire in furtherance of that scheme." Annulli v. Panikkar, 200 F.3d 189, 200 n.9 \(3d Cir. 1999\). Use of the mails may be intrastate; use of the wires must be interstate. Id. Allegations of either, as predicates for a civil cause of action, must meet the heightened pleading standard of Rule 9\(b\). Warden, 288 F.3d at 114; Bonavitacola Elec. Contr., Inc. v. Boro Developers, Inc., 87 F. App'x 227, 231 \(3d Cir. 2003\) ("[T]he 'who, what, when, and where details of the alleged fraud' are required.") (quoting Allen Neurosurgical Assocs. v. Lehigh Valley Health Network, No. CIV-A-99-4653, 2001 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 284 \(E.D. Pa. Jan. 18, 2011\)).

Honest services fraud is just a variant of wire and mail fraud. "The honest-services statute, 18 U.S.C. § 1346, defines the "the term 'scheme or artifice to defraud'" . . . to include "a scheme or artifice to deprive another of the intangible right to honest services." Skilling v. United States, 561 U.S. 358, 130 S. Ct. 2896, 2908 n.1, 177 L. Ed. 2d 619 \(2010\). Typically, honest services fraud is a bribery or kickback scheme involving a public official, e.g., United States v. Bryant, 655 F.3d 232 \(3d Cir. 2011\) although it can involve a private fraud scheme, see Skilling, at 2934 n.45.

Here, the AC fails to explain the who, what, when, where, and how of any scheme to defraud. There are many conclusory allegations of kickbacks and bribery [\[\*\*75\]](#) (e.g., AC ¶ 54 (Governor Christie "conspired with the other defendants to unlawfully obtain the plaintiff's property . . . through an elaborate scheme of kick backs")); improper influence (e.g., id. ¶ 61 (GEICO "has a long history of bribing New Jersey politicians . . . , enable[ing] it to advance legislation favorable to its business agenda)); abuses of power (e.g., id. ¶ 69 (Dr. Lomazow, "through members of his family, had commercial ties to insurance companies" and has "abus[ed] his position [on the Board] for political and financial gain")); political patronage, (e.g., id. ¶ 81 (Dr. Staats used his position as ASIPP "to give money to" Governor Christie who "rewarded . . . Staats by appointing his partner to the defendant medical board"))); and <sup>41</sup> Pursuant to 18 U.S.C. § 1964\(c\), by any person injured in her business or property by reason of a violation of section 1962. In order to state a claim under 1964\(c\), a plaintiff must plead "(1) a section 1962 violation and (2) an injury to business or property by reason of such injury." Lightning Lube, Inc., v. Witco Corp., 4 F.3d 1153, 1187 \(3d Cir. 1993\). To establish a claim under 1962(a), "a plaintiff must allege: (1) that the defendant has received money from a pattern of racketeering activity; (2) invested that money in an enterprise; and (3) that the enterprise affected interstate commerce." Id. at 1189 (citation omitted). Establishing a pattern of racketeering requires allegations of "at least two acts of racketeering activity within a ten-year period." 18 U.S.C. § 1961\(5\). Under section 1962\(b\), "a plaintiff must show injury from the defendant's acquisition or control of an interest in a RICO enterprise, in addition to injury from the predicate acts" of racketeering. Lightning Lube, 4 F.3d at 1190. To allege a claim under Section 1962\(c\), a plaintiff must plead conduct of an enterprise through a pattern of racketeering activity. District 1199P Health & Welfare Plan v. Janssen, L.P., 784 F. Supp. 2d 508, 518-19 \(D.N.J. 2011\) (citation omitted). Section 1962\(d\) prohibits conspiring to violate sections (a)-(c). 18 U.S.C. § 1962\(d\).

alternation of official transcripts, (e.g., III 210, 211, 220). There is nothing, however, remotely approaching a factual or legal allegation of mail, wire, or honest services fraud.<sup>42</sup>

[*249] There are, in short, no credible allegations of wire, mail, or honest services fraud pled here.

2. Extortion

Other crimes that could constitute racketeering activities include extortion under the Hobbs Act, 18 U.S.C. § 1951, and extortion chargeable under state law. 18. U.S.C § 1961\(1\)\(A\), [\[\*76\] \(B\)](#). Under the Hobbs Act, "extortion means the obtaining of property from another, with his consent, induced by wrongful use of actual or threatened force, violence, or fear, under color of official right." 18 U.S.C. § 1951\(b\)\(2\).<sup>43</sup> Under New Jersey law a person commits extortion if he or she purposefully threatens to:

- a. Inflict bodily injury on or physically confine or restrain anyone or commit any other criminal offense;
- b. Accuse anyone of an offense or cause charges of an offense to be instituted against any person;
- c. Expose or publicize any secret or any asserted fact, whether true or false, tending to subject any person to hatred, contempt or ridicule, or to impair his credit or business repute;
- d. Take or withhold action as an official, or cause an official to take or withhold action;
- e. Bring about or continue a strike, boycott or other collective action, if the property is not demanded or received for the benefit of the group in whose interest the actor purports to act;
- f. Testify or provide information or withhold testimony or information with respect to another's legal claim or defense; or
- g. Inflict any other harm which would not substantially benefit the actor but which is calculated to materially harm [\[\*77\]](#) another person.

N.J. Stat. Ann. § 2C:20-5. Hobbs Act liability, however, does not depend on whether the state offense is labeled as extortion; any conduct alleged under state law "must be capable of being generically classified as extortionate," i.e., the "obtaining something of value from another with his consent induced by the wrongful use of force, fear, or threats." Scheidler v. NOW, 537 U.S. 393, 409-11, 123 S. Ct. 1057, 154 L. Ed. 2d 991 \(2003\) (quoting United States. v. Nardello, 393 U.S. 286, 290, 89 S. Ct. 534, 21 L. Ed. 2d 487 \(1969\)).

The AC seems to allege two instances of extortion. The more prominent one is that defendants attempted to extract from Dr. Kaul the $300,000 in civil penalties and $175,422.21 in costs imposed by the Board by means of promises to reinstate his license. (E.g., AC ¶¶ 174, 125, 131, 144, 181) That is not extortion in any meaningful or plausible sense, however. Dr. Kaul, of course, did not consent to having to pay the civil penalties and costs imposed by the Board. But he owed them as a result of an official, legally sanctioned process. Imposition of such penalties was no more "extortionate" than is this Court's imposition of fines and penalties. Likewise, conditioning [\[\*250\]](#) the reinstatement of a license upon payment of a sanction is a common feature of professional discipline, as familiar to attorneys as it is to physicians. It is not entirely [\[\*78\]](#) clear why the payment (or non-payment, as it seems to be the case here) of the penalties would be in any way valuable to most or all of the defendants here. But more fundamentally, there is no factual indication that any wrongful tactic was employed in connection with collection of the penalty.

<sup>42</sup> Nor does the AC very specifically really adequately allege the use of the mails or interstate wires. There are a handful of exceptions. (E.g., AC ¶¶200-206, 208) Nevertheless, the letters or wires element is pled only generally and without reference to the interstate/intrastate distinction. (E.g., ¶ 200 ("Dughi + Hewit, LLC violated 18 U.S.C. § 1341 when it schemed to defraud the plaintiff of his property with false representations of the work it had performed and for which the plaintiff had paid it $7500. The defendant committed wire fraud when it caused these false representations to be transmitted by phone and internet."); ¶ 201 ("Andrew Kaufman violated 18 U.S.C. § 1341 when he communicated via phone and the internet that the plaintiff was not qualified to perform minimally invasive spine surgery."). Nor is there is the relation, if any, of the use of wires or mails to the allegedly fraudulent scheme explained. At any rate, the substantive allegations of fraud for each of these allegations are far too thin and non-specific to state a claim for mail, wire, or honest services fraud.

<sup>43</sup> There is also a jurisdictional element; the statute applies to one who "in any way degree obstructs, delays, or affects commerce or the movement of any article or commodity by robbery or extortion . . ." 18 U.S.C. § 1951\(a\). The AC only sometimes alleges that the attempted extortion was an effort to obstruct, delay, or affect commerce. That would be an independent reason to dismiss many of these extortion claims.

The second extortion allegation concerns H8LS and Hollenbeck only. The AC alleges that the law firm threatened to withdraw from an unspecified representation if he did not come up with $196,000 two weeks before certain proceedings.<sup>44</sup> (E.g., ¶¶ 76, 77, 96, 136) Without any pertinent factual allegations, however, it is impossible to conclude that such a threat was plausibly made, and if it was, that it was wrongful.

In sum, no predicate act of extortion is pled.

3. Conspiracy

The final potential predicate act, although not clearly pled, might consist of a conspiracy to commit a predicate act. For such an unusual claim, the legal analysis is slightly more involved. Nevertheless, I have no difficulty finding that a conspiracy has not been pled factually.

The general federal conspiracy statute, 18 U.S.C. § 371, is not a listed RICO predicate under section 1961\(1\)\(B\), \(C\), or \(D\). Some listed statutory predicate offenses, however, contain their [\[\*79\]](#) own conspiracy provisions, which may be cited as predicate offenses. Alternatively, sections 1961\(1\)\(A\) and \(D\) both possess broad language (i.e., "any act or threat involving" or "any offense involving") in the description of potential indictable offenses. Certain courts, primarily in the Second Circuit, have found that language broad enough to encompass a conspiracy to commit a section 1961\(1\)\(A\) or \(D\) offense.

Even under the broad view, conspiracy to commit mail or wire fraud is not a predicate RICO act. See Volmar Distrib. v. New York Post, 825 F. Supp. 1153, 1167 (S.D.N.Y. 1993). The mail and wire fraud statutes do not fall under the general language of § 1961\(1\)\(A\) and \(D\). Rather, 18 U.S.C. §§ 1341 and 1343 are specifically listed as predicates under § 1961\(1\)\(B\). Although mail and wire fraud are subject to their own, dedicated conspiracy provision, 18 U.S.C. § 1349, that provision is omitted from the § 1961\(1\)\(A\) or \(D\) list.

The Hobbs Act, 18 U.S.C. § 1951, is different. That statute is specifically cited under subsection 1961\(1\)\(B\) as a predicate offense. And embedded within that very statutory provision is the Hobbs Act's own, dedicated conspiracy provision. See 18 U.S.C. § 1951\(a\) (" . . . or conspires to do so . . . ."). Thus, conspiracy to commit extortion in the violation of the Hobbs Act may constitute a predicate act. See Volmar, 825 F. Supp. at 1167 n.23; cf. Odesser v. Vogel, Civil Action No. 85-6931, 1986 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 18085, at *25 n.17 (E.D. Pa. Nov. 5, 1986).

State law extortion is generically described as a predicate act [\[\*80\]](#) under section 1961\(1\)\(A\). As noted above, some courts have found the 1961\(1\)\(A\) language ("any [\[\*251\]](#) act or threat involving" the enumerated offense) to be broad enough to encompass a conspiracy to commit an offense chargeable under that subsection. See, e.g. United States v. Ruggiero, 726 F.2d 913, 918 (2d Cir.) (murder), cert. denied, 469 U.S. 831, 105 S. Ct. 118, 83 L. Ed. 2d 60 (1984).

Under federal and New Jersey law, the elements of conspiracy are generally same: a conspiracy is an agreement jointly entered into between two or more persons to obtain an unlawful objective. See N.J. Stat Ann. § 2C:5-2; United States v. Bansal, 663 F.3d 634, 669-70 (3d Cir. 2011) (essential elements of conspiracy are "(1) a mutual agreement or understanding, (2) knowingly entered by the defendant, with (3) an intent to jointly commit a crime"). There is a one key distinction, however. Conspiracies under the Hobbs Act do not require allegations of an overt act. United States v. Salahuddin, 765 F.3d 329, 340 (3d Cir. 2014). But, under New Jersey law, extortion is a second degree crime, N.J. Stat. Ann. § 2C-20-2(b)(1)(b), and so an overt act must be alleged. Id. § 2C:5-2\(d\).

<sup>44</sup> It is not clear whether the representation was related to the administrative proceedings. (AC ¶ 76 ("The defendant defrauded the plaintiff of approximately $200,000 with false representations that it had performed legal work in preparation for the plaintiffs OAL hearing. The defendant then attempted to extort $196,000 from the plaintiff two weeks before the OAL hearing was meant to commence with the threat that they would abandon the case if the plaintiff did not pay the money within 24 hours of the demand."))

Not much, in the end, really turns on these distinctions. The AC is devoid of any credible allegations of conspiracies, agreements, or combinations to extort. As stated above, there are many generalized, sketchy allegations of conspiracy but no concrete factual averments to lend them a hue of plausibility.<sup>45</sup> Without some facts tending to show agreement [\*\*81] and some circumstantial evidence of concerted action, there is simply no way to find a conspiracy to extort in this sea of grievances.

The AC, in sum, fails to state a predicate act, whether of the substantive or conspiracy-to-commit variety. Because there is no racketeering activity, a priori, there cannot be a pattern of such activity. That is enough to dispose of the RICO claims. As to all defendants that remain, Count One is dismissed.

B. Antitrust Violations

Count Two of the AC alleges violations of federal antitrust law.<sup>46</sup> No such claim, however, is pled plausibly here. The primary defect is the failure to define the relevant market, so I go no further in the analysis, but other defects lurk, and I allude to them briefly.

Contracts, combinations, and conspiracies in restraint of trade are illegal. [\*252] 15 U.S.C. § 1. To sustain such a claim, the plaintiff must prove:

- (1) that the defendants contracted, combined, or conspired among each other; (2) that the combination or conspiracy produced adverse, anti-competitive effects within relevant product and geographic markets; (3) that the objects of and the conduct pursuant to that contract or conspiracy were illegal; and (4) that the plaintiff [\*\*82] was injured as a proximate result of that conspiracy.

Martin B. Glauser Dodge Co. v. Chrysler Corp., 570 F.2d 72, 81-82 (3d Cir. 1977); accord Howard Hess Dental Laboratories Inc. v. Dentsply Int'l, Inc., 602 F.3d 237, 253 (3d Cir. 2010) ("A plaintiff asserting a Section 1 claim . . . must allege four elements: (1) concerted action by the defendants; that produced anti-competitive effects within the relevant product and geographic markets; (3) that the concerted actions were illegal; and (4) that it was injured as a proximate result of the concerted action.") (citing Gordon v. Lewistown Hasp., 423 F.3d 184, 207 (3d Cir. 2005)).

It is also illegal to monopolize, attempt to monopolize, or conspire to monopolize trade. 15 U.S.C. § 2. Claims under Sherman Act section 2 generally come in two flavors: monopoly abuse and attempted monopolization.

<sup>45</sup> I quote three of the conspiracy allegations, which are typical. See, e.g., AC ¶ 74 (alleging that Staats "conspired with the defendant governor, defendant medical board and defendant state in a scheme whose purpose was to revoke the plaintiff's medical license . . . Defendant is regularly in Washington, DC meeting with Congressmen and US Senators, and the defendant society of which he is the President, has an active political donation apparatus. The defendant's business partner was appointed to the defendant medical board by the defendant governor in approximately 2014, and was involved in the attempt by the defendant medical board to extort $450,000 from plaintiff."); AC 1177 (Hollenbeck "conspired with the defendant governor, defendant state and defendant medical board to extort money from the plaintiff under the color of right, with a threat two weeks before the OAL hearing, that he would withdraw legal services if the plaintiff did not pay $196,000 within twenty-four hours. The defendant . . . is a member of the New Jersey Republican Party. The defendant has close professional and commercial ties with the defendant governor and defendant attorney general and has given money to the Republican Party. The defendant has offices in both Trenton and Washington, DC."); AC ¶ 125 (alleging that GEICO "conspired with the defendant governor and his executive agencies to impose a $450,000 'fine' which they attempted to extort from the plaintiff when he made an application for license reinstatement in 2014").

<sup>46</sup> Specifically, the AC pleads violations of section 2 of the Sherman Act, which generally addresses single-firm conduct. Since this is a pro se plaintiff, I assume the AC intends to plead section 1 violations as well.

"The offense of monopoly under § 2 of the Sherman Act has two elements: (1) the possession of monopoly power in the relevant market and (2) the willful acquisition or maintenance of that power as distinguished from growth or development as a consequence of a superior product, business acumen, or historic accident."

Queen City Pizza v. Domino's Pizza, 124 F.3d 430, 437 \(3d Cir. 1997\) (quoting Aspen Skiing Co. v. Aspen Highlands Skiing Corp., 472 U.S. 585, 596 n. 19, 105 S. Ct. 2847, 86 L. Ed. 2d 467 \(1985\)). An attempted monopolization claim has three elements: "a plaintiff must prove that the defendant (1) engaged in predatory or anticompetitive conduct with (2) specific intent to monopolize and with (3) a dangerous probability of achieving [**83] monopoly power." Id. at 442.

Under either section 1 or 2, the plaintiff bears the burden of pleading the relevant geographic and product markets. See Queen City Pizza, 124 F.3d at 436-37. The AC, however, contains virtually no allegations, factual or otherwise, about the relevant market in this case. There seem to be two contenders: generally, "the minimally invasive spine surgery market," and somewhat more specifically, the market for "minimally invasive spinal fusions." (E.g., AC ¶¶ 95, 112) Either way, the AC contains none of the usual and necessary product market allegations. Queen City Pizza, 124 F.3d at 436 ("Where the plaintiff fails to define its proposed relevant market with reference to the rule of reasonable interchangeability and cross-elasticity of demand, . . . the relevant market is legally insufficient and a motion to dismiss may be granted.") There is no allegation concerning the relevant geographic market, which seems to include at least New Jersey, but might be larger. For these reasons, the antitrust claims are facially invalid, and therefore will be dismissed.

Even assuming that the AC pled a relevant market, these antitrust claims would still face an uphill battle, if not certain dismissal. As to the section 1 claims, for example, there are no factual allegations [**84] establishing one of the canonical per se violations (e.g., horizontal price-fixing, horizontal market division, or group boycott), and absolutely no factual allegations establishing [*253] anticompetitive effect.<sup>47</sup> As to the Section 2 claims, there are no factual allegations that defendants, however configured, possess substantial market power in the relevant market. These issues aside, there is a more fundamental pitfall: these antitrust claims seem to be based, at least in part, on the allegation that defendants lobbied for "legislation that enabled the defendant hospitals and neurosurgeons to monopolize the minimally invasive spine surgery market." (E.g., AC ¶ 95) That conduct, however, squarely falls within the Noerr-Pennington doctrine, which "provides broad immunity from liability to those who petition the government, including administrative agencies and courts, for redress of their grievances." Hanover 3201 Realty, LLC v. Vill. Supermarkets, Inc., 806 F. 3d 162, 179 \(3d Cir. 2015\).<sup>48</sup> Given the undisputed outcome of the disciplinary proceedings, moreover, the sole exception for "sham" litigation has not been adequately alleged. Id. 180-81.

The motions to dismiss Count Two are granted.

C. Section 1983

Count Eight alleges violations of 42 U.S.C. § 1983. I interpret it to be asserting [**85] violations of Dr. Kaul's due process and equal protection rights. As to each aspect, the AC fails to state a claim.

1. Due Process

<sup>47</sup> E.g., AC ¶ 94 ("The effect of the monopolization has been an increase in the cost of care and a reduction in the availability of clinical services.")

<sup>48</sup> Noerr-Pennington, by the way, would probably apply to the RICO claims as well. Cf. We, Inc., v. City of Philadelphia, 174 F.3d 322, 326-27 \(3d Cir. 1999\) ("This court, along with other courts, has by analogy extended the Noerr-Pennington doctrine to offer protection to citizens' petition activities in contexts outside the anti-trust area as well.").

The AC alleges that the disciplinary proceedings violated Dr. Kaul's right to due process. In general, a procedural due process claim requires plaintiff to allege that (1) he was deprived of an individual interest that is encompassed within the Fourteenth Amendment's protection of "life, liberty, or property," and (2) the procedures afforded him did not constitute "due process of law." Hill v. Borough of Kutztown, 455 F.3d 225, 234 (3d Cir. 2006) (quoting Alvin v. Suzuki, 227 F.3d 107, 116 (3d Cir. 2000)); accord Res v. De Jongh, 638 F.3d 169, 173, 55 V.I. 1251 (3d Cir. 2011).

The individual interest at stake is Dr. Kaul's medical license; the unconstitutional procedure is the disciplinary hearing. I do not doubt that a license to practice medicine is an individual property interest deserving of due process protections. But the state afforded Dr. Kaul the full panoply of due process rights during the disciplinary proceedings. He was represented by counsel. He submitted evidence and was able to cross-examine the State's witnesses. The Board and the ALJ issued reasoned, written opinions, and Dr. Kaul had the opportunity to take exception to or appeal them. The disciplinary proceedings possessed virtually all the usual and expected safeguards, and therefore [**86] the probative value of allegations that additional safeguards could have been provided is very low. E.g., Matthews v. Eldridge, 424 U.S. 319, 334-35, 96 S. Ct. 893, 47 L. Ed. 2d 18 (1976).

Indeed, the thrust of the AC seems to involve procedural irregularities, rather than deficiencies in the procedures themselves. Examples include the alleged alteration of transcripts, the ALJ's consideration of extrinsic evidence, and witness perjury. These allegations, as discussed above, are meritless. Not a single pertinent example of transcript alteration can [*254] be found in the AC, let alone an alteration that would have been material to the outcome of the proceedings. Specifics are likewise lacking for the allegations of false testimony; the allegations are generic ones that could be expressed by any litigant who came out on the losing side of a credibility contest. The AC does allege that the Media Defendants published a hit job of Dr. Kaul. There is no plausible factual allegation, however, that ALJ Solomon knew about or would have been influenced by the article, and his written decision is closely tied to the evidence of record.

In short, no procedural due process violation has been alleged here.

2. Substantive Due Process

A closely related claim is that the State Defendants [**87] violated Dr. Kaul's substantive due process rights. That claim, too, fails for lack of any specific, plausible factual allegations in support.

"To establish a substantive due process claim, a plaintiff must prove the particular interest at issue is protected by the substantive due process clause and the government's deprivation of that protected interest shocks the conscience? Chaney v. Street, 523 F.3d 200, 219 (3d Cir. 2008) (citing UA Theatre Circuit, Inc. v. Twp. of Warrington, 316 F.3d 392, 400-02 (3d Cir. 2003)).

The substantive due process at issue here is the right to practice medicine. Whether construed broadly as a deprivation of liberty (i.e., the ability to freely choose one's profession) or more narrowly as a deprivation of a property interest (i.e., the license to practice medicine), the deprivation in any case does not "shock the conscience." That standard encompasses "only the most egregious official conduct." United Artists, 316 F.3d at 400. New Jersey officials have a strong interest in regulating the medical profession, and, for reasons stated herein, there are no allegations plausibly establishing that use of government power was such as to "shock the conscience." No factual allegations establish that this license revocation, regular on its face, was arbitrary and wanton.

3. Equal Protection

The third and final claim (it is pled as a Title VII [**88] violation, but I interpret it as an equal protection claim) alleges that the State Defendants discriminated against Dr. Kaul because he is Indian. "Eighty percent (80%) of revocations are against ethnic minorities," the AC alleges, "while they only account for twenty-five percent (25%) of the physician population." (AC ¶ 297) Dr. Kaul also "recollects that in 2009 he was asked questions about his race/nationality/ethnicity on his biennial license application, and believes that his Indian nationality was a factor in the defendant governor's consideration to revoke his license." (Id. 301) These allegations are insufficient to establish a discrimination claim as a matter of law.

To state a claim under the Equal Protection Clause, a plaintiff must allege that (1) he is a member of a protected class; (2) that he was treated differently from similarly situated individuals; and (3) that this disparate treatment was based on his or her membership in the protected class. See Kasper v. Cnty. of Bucks, 514 F. App'x 210, 214-15 (3d Cir. 2013) (citing Andrews v. City of Philadelphia, 895 F.2d 1469, 1478 (3d Cir. 1990)).

The bare allegation that Dr. Kaul "believes" that race or nationality "was a factor" in the revocation of his license is not enough. No specific instances of similarly situated individuals being treated differently are alleged. Even disparate [**89] impact, assuming it has been alleged, is not itself [*255] sufficient to meet the threshold of intentional, purposeful discrimination. E.g., Washington v. Davis, 426 U.S. 229, 248, 96 S. Ct. 2040, 48 L. Ed. 2d 597 (1976).

Because no violation of a constitutional right has been pled, Count 8, the section 1983 claim, must be dismissed.

D. State Law Claims

For the reasons expressed above, the AC contains no viable federal cause of action. When a court has dismissed all claims over which it had original federal-question jurisdiction, it has the discretion to decline to exercise supplemental jurisdiction over the remaining state law claims. See 28 U.S.C. § 1337(c); see also Hedges v. Musco, 204 F.3d 109, 123 (3d Cir. 2000) (quoting Borough of West Mifflin v. Lancaster, 45 F.3d 780, 788 (3d Cir. 1995)). Where, as here, the federal claims are dismissed in the early, Rule 12(b)(6) stages of litigation, courts generally decline to exercise supplemental jurisdiction over state claims. See United Mine Workers v. Gibbs, 383 U.S. 715, 726, 86 S. Ct. 1130, 16 L. Ed. 2d 218 (1966). Considerations of judicial economy, convenience, fairness, or comity do not weigh in Dr. Kaul's favor. I therefore decline to exercise supplemental jurisdiction over Counts Ten, Eleven, and Twelve.

VI. CONCLUSION

For the reasons set forth above, the defendants' motions to dismiss are GRANTED in part and DENIED in part, as follows.

1. Because amendment would be futile, the following defendants are DISMISSED WITH PREJUDICE:

- Drs. Carmel, Moore, Przyblyski, [**90] NASS, and AMA, on res judicata and entire controversy grounds;
- New Jersey and the Board on sovereign immunity grounds;
- ALJ Solomon on absolute immunity grounds;
- Governor Christie, former AG Chiesa, ALJ Solomon, Roeder, and Dr. Lomazow on sovereign immunity and qualified immunity grounds;

2. Because amendment would be futile, the following counts are DISMISSED WITH PREJUDICE:

- Counts Three, Four, Five, Six, Seven and Nine as to all defendants, for failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6);
- Count Eight as to all non-state defendants (except Drs. Przyblyski and Kaufman), for failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6);

3. As to all defendants not dismissed with prejudice, the following counts are DISMISSED WITHOUT PREJUDICE:

- Counts One, Two, and Eight as to all such defendants, for failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6);

372 F. Supp. 3d 206, *2551 2019 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 31732, **90

- Counts Ten, Eleven, and Twelve as to all such defendants, for lack of supplemental jurisdiction.

Although the AC states no claim upon which relief can be granted, this is a first dismissal. Any amended complaint shall be filed within 30 days after the date of this order and opinion. [**91]

MEMORANDUM OPINION AND ORDER

Plaintiffs, twenty-two customers of defendants' retail cosmetics stores in eighteen states, bring this putative class action lawsuit, asserting state-law claims of breach of warranty, unjust enrichment, and consumer fraud. Defendants have moved to dismiss. For the following reasons, the motion is granted in part and denied in part.

I. BACKGROUND

Defendant Ulta Salon, Cosmetics & Fragrance, Inc. ("Ulta Salon") is a "mass retailer of beauty products," operating retail stores "coast to coast." (2d Am. Compl. ¶¶ 1, 4, ECF No. 91.) It is a wholly owned subsidiary of defendant Ulta Beauty, Inc. ("Ulta Beauty"). Plaintiffs, consumers hailing from eighteen states, purchased cosmetics or beauty products at defendants' stores, only to learn that defendants (collectively, "Ulta") had a practice of reshelfing products that had been used and returned by dissatisfied customers. In some [*3] cases, plaintiffs noticed shortly after purchase that the products appeared to have been previously used (Id. ¶¶ 13, 19-20, 26-27, 33.) In other cases, plaintiffs infer that the products may have been previously used based on the following information about Ulta's business practices.

On January 9, 2018, a former Ulta employee revealed that, when customers returned products after using them, the products were "made to 'look new'—but not sanitized—and put back on the shelf to sell to unsuspecting customers." (Id. ¶ 62.) The employee posted her revelations on the microblogging website Twitter, identifying herself by the Twitter handle, "@fatinamxo." She posted pictures of used foundation and lipsticks, which Ulta resold as if new. (Id.) She claimed that Ulta even trained its staff members to "restore" products, and managers were careful to keep an eye on products in the "damage bin" to assess whether they could be resold. (Id. ¶ 63.) Managers taught employees "how to clean eyeshadow palettes and let it dry [overnight] so it can be repackaged and sold the next day." (Id.)

Other Twitter users responded to @fatinamxo's posts by claiming that they too worked at Ulta, and what @fatinamxo reported [*4] was consistent with their own experience in various places, including California, Washington, Texas, Florida, Michigan, South Carolina, Wisconsin, and Ohio. (Id. ¶¶ 66-68.) One of these Twitter users even claimed to have worked at Ulta store number 1221 in Sherman Oaks, California, the same store where plaintiff Kimberly Laura Smith-Brown routinely shopped. (Id. ¶ 70.)

@fatinamxo's Twitter revelations created a "social media frenzy" (id. ¶ 66), and news outlets began to pick up the story. A former Ulta manager in Ohio told Business Insider that "there was often pressure" on managers "to sell used products":

Our bosses constantly told us if it looked like it could be sold, put it back out. The company always had a percentage they wanted you to stay below weekly in what we damaged. We would literally get lectured by our boss on our conference calls if our stores were over.

(Id. ¶ 71.) Twitter users corroborated this pressure from management above the store level to reduce damaged product and get as much product as possible back on the shelves after it was returned. (Id. ¶ 77.)

The Ohio manager told Business Insider that products such as mascara and foundation were simply returned to the [*5] shelf "because it was difficult to tell if they were used." (Id. ¶ 72.) When bottled products such as shampoo or lotions were returned, Ulta employees would clean them, "wipe out the spout and turn the pump cap back down," and then reshelve them. (Id.) A former Ulta employee in South Carolina told Business Insider that bottled products were put back on the shelf as long as they were at least 80% full when they were returned to Ulta. (Id. ¶ 73.)

In the wake of these and other, similar revelations about Ulta on the internet and social media, plaintiffs obtained sworn affidavits from five former Ulta employees—Tammy Geier, Kami Turner, Ella Soto, Laura Hornick, and Michael Fisher—who worked in Ulta stores in Georgia, Tennessee, South Carolina, Florida, and California. (Id. ¶ 83.) Fisher, Geier, and Turner, while working as general managers of individual Ulta stores, were trained by regional management, apparently based on pressure from senior management, on how to restore and repackage used makeup and beauty products in order to reduce "shrink," or inventory going to waste. (Id. ¶¶ 84-86.) All five former employees were instructed to use returned products as "testers" in their stores, [*6] despite the potential to "spread disease and germs to those" who use them. (Id. ¶ 87.)

Plaintiffs allege that Ulta's policy of reselling or reusing returned products is "unsanitary and hazardous to the public." (Id. ¶ 88.) Many of the plaintiffs allege that they suffered sties, rashes, and irritation due to skin and eye infections after purchasing and using Ulta products. (Id. ¶¶ 11-12, 16-18, 23, 25-26, 29-31, 34.) They believe the Ulta products they purchased were, unbeknownst to them, previously used and their use of these unsanitary products caused the infections they suffered.

Plaintiffs seek to represent in this action not only themselves but also (a) a nationwide class consisting of "[a]ll persons in the United States who purchased, other than for resale, beauty products from Ulta Beauty retail locations" (2d Am. Compl. ¶ 93), or alternatively, (b) eighteen state subclasses made up of all persons who purchased Ulta beauty products, other than for resale, in each of the eighteen states plaintiffs represent, namely, Alabama, California, Florida, Georgia, Illinois, Indiana, Maryland, Michigan, Nevada, New Jersey, New York, Ohio, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, South Carolina, Virginia, [*7] Washington, and Wisconsin.

The Second Amended Complaint consists of twenty-three claims for relief: breach of the implied warranty of merchantability, on behalf of the nationwide class or, alternatively, each state subclass; unjust enrichment, on behalf of the nationwide class or, alternatively, each state subclass; and twenty-one claims under twenty-one separate consumer fraud and deceptive business practices statutes in the various states plaintiffs represent, each claim on behalf of the subclass of persons who purchased Ulta products in the state supplying the governing law.

II. LEGAL STANDARDS

"A motion under Rule 12\(b\)\(6\) tests whether the complaint states a claim on which relief may be granted." Richards v. Mitcheff, 696 F.3d 635, 637 \(7th Cir. 2012\). Under Rule 8\(a\)\(2\), a complaint must include "a short and plain statement of the claim showing that the pleader is entitled to relief." Fed. R. Civ. P. 8\(a\)\(2\). The short and plain statement under Rule 8\(a\)\(2\) must "give the defendant fair notice of what the claim is and the grounds upon which it rests." Bell Atl. Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 555, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 \(2007\) (quoting Conley v. Gibson, 355 U.S. 41, 47, 78 S. Ct. 99, 2 L. Ed. 2d 80 \(1957\) (internal quotation altered)).

Under federal notice-pleading standards, a plaintiff's "[f]actual allegations must be enough to raise a right to relief above the speculative level." Id. Stated differently, "a complaint must contain sufficient [*8] factual matter, accepted as true, to 'state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face.'" Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 678, 129 S. Ct. 1937, 173 L. Ed. 2d 868 \(2009\) (quoting Twombly, 550 U.S. at 570). "A claim has facial plausibility when the plaintiff pleads factual content that allows the court to draw the reasonable inference that the defendant is liable for the misconduct alleged." Id. (citing Twombly, 550 U.S. at 556). "In reviewing the sufficiency of a complaint under the plausibility standard, [courts must] accept the well-pleaded facts in the complaint as true, but [they] 'need[ ] not accept as true legal conclusions, or threadbare recitals of the elements of a cause of action, supported by mere conclusory statements.'" Alam v. Miller Brewing Co., 709 F.3d 662, 665-66 \(7th Cir. 2013\) (quoting Brooks v. Ross, 578 F.3d 574, 581 \(7th Cir. 2009\)).

A party "must state with particularity the circumstances constituting fraud." Fed. R. Civ. P. 9\(b\). The requirement that fraud be pleaded with particularity "ensures that plaintiffs do their homework before filing suit and protects defendants from baseless suits that tarnish reputations." Pirelli Armstrong Tire Corp. Retiree Med. Ben. Trust v. Walgreen Co., 631 F.3d 436, 439 \(7th Cir. 2011\). The requirement is not rigid, and what must be alleged will vary, depending on the facts of the case. Id. at 442. The heightened pleading standard applies to all allegations of fraud (such as a misrepresentations), not merely claims labeled fraud. Id. at 447.

"Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12\(b\)\(1\) authorizes the Court to dismiss any claim for which the [*9] Court lacks subject-matter jurisdiction, such as lack of standing." Bohn v. Boiron, Inc., No. 11 C 8704, 2013 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 107928, 2013 WL 3975126, at \*2 \(N.D. Ill. Aug. 1, 2013\). In order to establish a justiciable "case or controversy" that provides standing to sue under Article III, § 2 of the United States Constitution, a plaintiff must show the following: (1) he has suffered an injury-in-fact that is both (a) concrete and particularized and (b) actual and imminent, not conjectural or hypothetical; (2) the injury is fairly traceable to the challenged action of the defendant; and (3) it is likely, as opposed to merely speculative, that the injury will be redressed by a favorable decision. See Friends of the Earth, Inc. v. Laidlaw Envtl. Servs. \(TOC\), Inc., 528 U.S. 167, 180-81, 120 S. Ct. 693, 145 L. Ed. 2d 610 (2000) (citing Lujan v. [Silha v. ACT, Inc., 807 F.3d 169, 174 (7th Cir. 2015). The court takes well-pleaded allegations of the complaint as true unless they are refuted by the defendant in an affidavit. Tamburo v. Dworkin, 601 F.3d 693, 700 (7th Cir. 2010).

III. STANDING

Defendants challenge plaintiffs' standing in three respects, arguing as follows: (a) plaintiffs lack standing to sue over the purchase of products that were new, not used; (b) plaintiffs lack standing to sue on behalf of class members who did not [*10] purchase the same beauty products as plaintiffs did; and (c) plaintiffs lack standing to sue on behalf of class members in other states whose claims will be governed by other states' laws.

A. Standing—New Products

Defendants argue that plaintiffs have no standing based on any purchase of new, unused products because the purchase of such products did not cause any actual injury. Rather, according to defendants, plaintiffs who purchased new products received exactly what they bargained for.

Plaintiffs generally allege that, during a given time frame, they purchased certain Ulta products that they believed were new at the time, but now believe had been previously used. (See, e.g., 2d Am. Compl. ¶ 15.) Some plaintiffs allege some personalized basis for this belief, generally that they suffered some sort of infection after using an Ulta product (see, e.g., id. ¶ 16) or the product showed physical signs of having been used, such as a fingerprint in a jar of lip balm (id. ¶ 27) or build-up of mascara on a brush (id. ¶ 20), or perhaps both (see, e.g., id. ¶ 26.). Other plaintiffs apparently believe that they purchased used products based only on the revelations about Ulta's general business practice [*11] of reshelfing returned product. None of them specifically claims to have bought new products from Ulta. However, some portions of plaintiff's complaint suggest that the commingling of new and used products on Ulta shelves reduced the value of all Ulta products. (2d Am. Compl. ¶¶ 4, 6-7, 92.) In their opposition brief, plaintiffs argue that even if they received new products, they still received less than they bargained for because, had they known of the risk that they might receive a used product that might cause an infection, they would have paid less or even shopped elsewhere. According to plaintiffs, based on this theory, even purchasers of new Ulta products suffered an injury-in-fact that confers standing.

Plaintiffs rely principally on In re Aqua Dots Products Liability Litigation, 654 F.3d 748, 751 (7th Cir. 2011), in which the Seventh Circuit recognized that plaintiffs who had unknowingly purchased a dangerously defective toy had asserted an injury-in-fact because they claimed to have suffered a "loss [that was] financial: they paid more for the toys than they would have, had they known of the risks the beads posed to children." But, as defendants correctly explain in reply, Aqua Dots is distinguishable because the defect (the toy beads, if ingested, "metabolize[d] [*12] into gamma-hydroxybutyric acid (GHB), which can induce nausea, dizziness, drowsiness, agitation, depressed breathing, amnesia, unconsciousness, and death," id. at 749) was inherent in the products the plaintiffs purchased; all of the beads posed the same risk of harm, and every purchaser received an inherently dangerous product. In this case, to the extent plaintiffs received new Ulta products, there was no defect or risk of harm in the products they purchased, and therefore no overpayment or injury.

In that respect, this case is similar to *Lewert v. P.F. Chang's China Bistro, Inc.*, 819 F.3d 963, 968 \(7th Cir. 2016\), in which the plaintiffs claimed "that the cost of their meals is an injury because they would not have dined at P.F. Chang's had they known of its poor data security." In dicta, the Seventh Circuit was "skeptical" that such a claim described an Article III injury. Id. The court distinguished Aqua Dots, which acknowledged that plaintiffs who claim they would have shopped elsewhere had they known of a safety risk may suffer a "financial injury," but "only where the product itself was defective or dangerous and consumers claim they would not have bought it . . . had they known of the defect." *Lewert*, 819 F.3d at 968. In this case, to the extent plaintiffs or class members purchased [*13] new products, it was not the "product itself" (i.e., the one with which they walked out of the store) that was "defective or dangerous," and therefore such purchasers have not suffered an injury-in-fact that confers Article III standing. Plaintiffs do not have standing to assert claims arising out of the purchase of new Ulta products.

B. Standing—Different Products

Defendants argue that plaintiffs lack standing to assert claims based on Ulta products of a kind that they themselves did not purchase. They do not point to any claims of any of the named plaintiffs that they seek to dismiss on this basis; rather, defendants seem to be anticipating that plaintiffs will attempt to represent unnamed class members who purchased certain kinds of Ulta products that the named plaintiffs did not. Plaintiffs argue that they may do so, relying in part on this Court's decision in *Ulrich v. Probalance, Inc.*, No. 16 C 10488, 2017 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 132202, 2017 WL 3581183, at \*6 \(N.D. Ill. Aug. 18, 2017\) (quoting *Wagner v. Gen. Nutrition Corp.*, No. 16-CV-10961, 2017 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 112106, 2017 WL 3070772, at \*5 \(N.D. Ill. July 19, 2017\)), in which the Court recognized that a plaintiff may have standing to bring claims on behalf of unnamed class members based on products he did not purchase "so long as the products and the alleged misrepresentations are substantially similar."

Based on the present allegations, the Court doubts whether the issue is [*14] ripe for resolution at this early stage. Cf. *Ulrich*, 2017 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 132202, 2017 WL 3581183, at \*6 (complaint was unclear about whether named plaintiff purchased "one bottle of each of the four Products or four bottles of one Product"). In this case, the issue is better reserved for the class certification stage. But even if it were ripe, the Court tends to agree with plaintiffs that the named plaintiffs can represent any consumer who purchased one of defendants' products believing it was new, but that was actually used, because in any such case the deceptive conduct and harm are essentially the same, even if the damages might differ. See id. ("The alleged misrepresentations are the same, they all relate to the Products' quantity of protein, which 'fill[s] the same function' in each Product and is 'used in the same manner' in each Product, and the protein claims are 'inaccurate' in 'the same manner on every' Product.") (quoting *Mednick*, 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 159687, 2014 WL 6474915, at \*4). Defendants' motion is denied as to this argument, although they may re-raise the issue at a later stage if the facts support it.

C. Standing—Class Members in Other States

Defendants argue that plaintiffs lack standing to assert claims on behalf of any class members who may have purchased defendants' products in [*15] states where no named plaintiffs did, and whose claims will be governed by the laws of those states, because the named plaintiffs "must possess the same interest and suffer the same injury shared by all members of the class [they] represent[]." See *In re Dairy Farmers of Am., Inc. Cheese Antitrust Litig.*, No. 09 CV 3690, 2013 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 119962, 2013 WL 4506000, at \*7-8 \(N.D. Ill. Aug. 23, 2013\) (quoting *Keefe v. Wexler*, 149 F.3d 589, 592-93 \(7th Cir. 1998\)). Plaintiff responds that this argument is premature at this stage because the appropriate time to resolve the issue is at class certification. See *Block v. Lifeway Foods, Inc.*, No. 17 C 1717, 2017 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 143828, 2017 WL 3895565, at \*7 \(N.D. Ill. Sep. 6, 2017\).

The Court agrees with defendants. Defendants' citation to Dairy Farmers is apt, and that decision's reasoning is persuasive. Plaintiffs' only response to Dairy Farmers is to attempt to distinguish it as a "multi-district class action composed of separate consolidated actions involving a variety of individualized issues, including tolling of the statute of limitations," but they do not explain—and the Court fails to see—why the distinction matters. In *Dairy*

Farmers, 2013 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 119962, 2013 WL 4506000, at *7-8, see also In re Dairy Farmers of Am., Inc. Cheese Antitrust Litig., 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 84152, 2015 WL 3988488, at *25 (N.D. Ill. Jun. 29, 2015), the Court's analysis was not apparently based on any individualized issues or anything other than the general principle that class representatives and class members must "possess the same interest and suffer the same injury," and the Court fails to see why the same principle does not lead to the same result here.

As for whether [*16] the issue is premature at the present stage of the case, it is true that courts have taken different approaches, both procedurally and substantively, toward the issue of a named class representative in one state purporting to represent unnamed class members who reside in other states on claims governed by those other states' laws. See Liston v. King.com, Ltd., 254 F. Supp. 3d 989, 998-1002 (N.D. Ill. 2017) (collecting cases and tracing different approaches). The Court need not unravel this conceptual tangle in this case, however, because no matter which perspective one takes, "there is plainly ample reason at this juncture to question whether [plaintiffs] will be able to pursue claims based on statutory causes of action created by states where [plaintiffs] neither lived nor [were] injured." Id. at 1001. As the Seventh Circuit has explained, "[n]o class action is proper unless all litigants are governed by the same legal rules," because "[o]therwise the class cannot satisfy the commonality and superiority requirements" of Rule 23. In re Bridgestone/Firestone, Inc., 288 F.3d 1012, 1015 (7th Cir. 2002). "[S]tate laws about theories such as those presented by our plaintiffs differ, and such differences have led" the Seventh Circuit to hold that "other warranty, fraud, or products liability suits may not proceed" together in a single class that [*17] extends across state boundaries. See id. (citing Isaacs v. Sprint Corp., 261 F.3d 679 (7th Cir. 2001); Szabo v. Bridgeport Machines, Inc., 249 F.3d 672 (7th Cir. 2001); In re Rhone-Poulenc Rorer Inc., 51 F.3d 1293 (7th Cir. 1995)); Dolmage v. Combined Ins. Co. of Am., No. 14 C 3809, 2017 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 67555, 2017 WL 1754772, at *5-6 (N.D. Ill. May 3, 2017) (citing Bridgestone/Firestone). Where claims must be adjudicated under the differing laws of numerous jurisdictions, it is likely that "a single . . . class is not manageable." Bridgestone/Firestone, 288 F.3d at 1018.

To the extent that plaintiffs attempt to assert claims on behalf of class members in states where they do not reside and were not injured, "it would . . . be inappropriate to engage in wide-ranging discovery premised on a prospect as to which there is substantial doubt—namely, [plaintiff's] ability to assert causes of action created by other states for the benefit of other individuals injured in those other states." Liston, 254 F. Supp. 3d at 1001-02. Any such claims are dismissed, although plaintiffs may move to amend their complaint if circumstances arise to support it.

IV. FAILURE TO STATE A CLAIM

Defendants argue that plaintiffs fail to state a claim because they have not pleaded their claims with particularity in accord with Rule 9(b) and they have used improper group pleading.

A. Rule 9(b) and Particularity

Defendants argue that plaintiffs' complaint fails to meet the Rule 9(b) standard because, although plaintiffs' claims depend on their allegation that the practice of reshelving used products was widespread [*18] at Ulta stores all over the country, they do not identify who set this policy, which products it applied to, which stores in which locations followed it, or when the alleged misrepresentations or omissions were made. Without such details, defendants argue, plaintiffs' claims rest in large part on anonymous or pseudonymous allegations posted on social media networks and declarations from a handful of employees, which are insufficient to make claims of nationwide fraud plausible. Additionally, defendants argue that plaintiffs' allegations offer insufficient detail because many plaintiffs do not identify the particular Ulta store at which they shopped; the products they purchased, apart from generic descriptions such as "lipstick" or "eyeliner"; or precisely when they purchased them, apart from a month or year.

The Court disagrees. First, plaintiffs were not required to plead every detail of how defendants carried out the alleged deception, particularly considering that pleading such details would require inside knowledge of the defendant business entities' inner workings, which mere customers cannot realistically obtain. Plaintiffs cannot know precise details of how, when, and by whom [*19] used products were restored and returned to Ulta shelves. See U.S. ex rel. Ceas v. Chrysler Grp. LLC, No. 12-CV-2870, 2016 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 7923, 2016 WL 6963060, at \*4 \(N.D. Ill. Jan. 19, 2016\) (quoting U.S. ex rel. Heath v. AT&T, Inc., 791 F.3d 112, 125, 416 U.S. App. D.C. 289 \(D.D.C. 2015\)) ("The complaint makes clear, in other words, that corporate levers were pulled; identifying precisely who pulled them is not an inexorable requirement of Rule 9\(b\) in all cases.").

Plaintiffs' allegations of defendants' business practices are based on information and belief. Fraud can be pleaded based on information and belief "so long as (1) the facts constituting the fraud are not accessible to the plaintiff and (2) the plaintiff provides the ground for his suspicions." Pirelli, 631 F.3d at 443 (internal quotation marks omitted). As the Court has already explained, this is a case in which "the facts constituting the fraud are not accessible" to plaintiffs because they cannot know how Ulta stores managed their inventory, as that is a part of defendants' operations that is hidden from public view. Further, plaintiffs have provided the ground for their suspicions: they have pointed to specific accounts by people who claim to have personal knowledge of defendants' business practice of placing used beauty products back on store shelves for resale. Although the accounts in the media and social media are often either anonymous or pseudonymous, they [*20] are corroborated by the five employee declarations and by the named plaintiffs' allegations of suffering infections after shopping at Ulta and of purchasing Ulta products that physically appeared to have been previously used. Remaining sensitive to "information asymmetries that may prevent a plaintiff from offering more detail," the Court agrees with plaintiffs that they have stated sufficient facts with a sufficient degree of particularity to make the alleged fraud plausible. See id. at 443.

As for defendants' arguments that the named plaintiffs were required to allege additional details about the transactions in which they purchased used Ulta products, the Court agrees with plaintiffs that "Rule 9\(b\) does not demand that level of granularity or precision, at least in this case." Hobbs v. Gerber Prods. Co., No. 17 CV 3534, 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 136943, 2018 WL 3861571, at \*6 \(N.D. Ill. Aug. 14, 2018\). While there is a "good deal of caselaw that speaks of a journalistic-type approach to [Rule 9\(b\)]s] requirement of pleading 'with particularity,' that locution really does not fit well in dealing with extended fraudulent schemes involving a large volume of transactions—it must be remembered that what Rule 9\(b\) mandates particularity about are 'the circumstances constituting fraud.'" U.S. ex rel. Salmeron v. Enter. Recovery Sys., Inc., 464 F. Supp. 2d 766, 768 \(N.D. Ill. 2006\) (Shadur, J.). The deception in this case stems from Ulta's [*21] behind-the-scenes inventory management, rather than from what happened at the cash register, and plaintiffs have described those behind-the-scenes circumstances with as much particularity as they are able, as outsiders looking in. The details of the transactions in which they purchased Ulta products are closer to an issue of damages, and Rule 9\(b\) does not require that circumstances relating to damages be pleaded with particularity. Hobbs, 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 136943, 2018 WL 3861571, at \*10. Defendants' motion to dismiss for failure to comply with Rule 9\(b\) is denied.

B. Group Pleading

Defendants argue that plaintiffs' complaint should be dismissed because plaintiffs make no effort to differentiate between Ulta Beauty and Ulta Salon. Plaintiffs refer to defendants collectively as "defendants" or "Ulta," but as plaintiffs themselves recognize, Ulta Beauty is a holding company that conducts operations only through subsidiaries such as Ulta Salon; Ulta Beauty conducts no operations of its own. According to defendants, this is improper group pleading because Ulta Beauty and Ulta Salon "are entitled to know the specific allegations levelled against each of them" (Defs.' Mem. Supp. Mot. Dismiss at 14, ECF No. 100), without having to guess who is accused of doing what. [*22]

Plaintiffs allege that Ulta Salon was originally incorporated in 1990 with no parent corporation and "total operating authority over its stores." (2d Am. Compl. ¶¶ 35, 37; see Pl.'s Mem. Opp'n at 11, ECF No. 122.) On January 29, 2017, plaintiffs allege, the company reorganized. Ulta Beauty was incorporated as a new company that has "on a consolidated basis, the same assets, businesses, and operations" as Ulta Salon had prior to the reorganization. (2d Am. Compl. ¶ 39.) Thus, Ulta Beauty became the successor to Ulta Salon, "the former publicly-traded company and now a wholly owned subsidiary" of Ulta Beauty. (Id.) Plaintiffs note that, in forms it has filed with the Securities and Exchange Commission, Ulta Beauty has explicitly and intentionally used collective terms such as "we," "us," "Ulta Beauty" or "the Company" to refer to "Ulta Beauty, Inc. and its consolidated subsidiaries." (Id.) Further, plaintiffs allege that Ulta Salon "does not appear to have a CEO, Chairman of the Board, or Board of Directors separate from Ulta Beauty, Inc. As a result, there is no separate decisionmaking apparatus for Ulta Salon . . . and the Board of Directors and CEO of Ulta Beauty exert direct control [*23] over Ulta Salon." (Id. ¶ 36.) Additionally, the entities allegedly have the same general counsel and same address. (2d Am. Compl., Ex. F.)

While it is true that "[e]ach defendant is entitled to know what he or she did that is asserted to be wrongful," Bank of America, N.A. v. Knight, 725 F.3d 815, 818 \(7th Cir. 2013\), defendants have not cited a case in which a court found analogous allegations against two such intertwined business entities to be impermissible group pleading. Plaintiffs have alleged that, less than a year before the date of this lawsuit, and therefore during the time period that the alleged wrongdoing was taking place, which is "at least as long as the relevant statute of limitations periods" (2d Am. Compl. ¶ 4), Ulta Salon reorganized into two companies, which apparently share a CEO and Board of Directors. The Court understands plaintiffs to be accusing both entities of wrongdoing, at different times and potentially at the same time to the extent they operated as one after the reorganization, although plaintiff cannot say at this early stage who pulled which "corporate lever." Ceas, 2016 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 7923, 2016 WL 6963060, at \*4. By providing facts to describe the reorganization and the resulting shared corporate structure in some detail, they have alleged a plausible basis for asserting [*24] claims against both entities. See Rysewyk v. Sears Holdings Corp., No. 15 CV 4519, 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 169124, 2015 WL 9259886, at \*7 \(N.D. Ill. Dec. 18, 2015\) (plaintiffs stated claim against holding company as well as operating subsidiary because they alleged that holding company participated in "market[ing], sell[ing], and servic[ing]" the offending products "through its retail establishments"). Although plaintiffs' theory of which entity is responsible for which acts may need to be refined as the case progresses, plaintiffs' allegations are sufficient at this early stage to state a claim that survives defendants' motion to dismiss.

C. Breach of Warranty Claims and Pre-Suit Notice

Defendants contend that plaintiffs' breach of warranty claims must be dismissed because plaintiffs did not give defendants the pre-suit notice that the Uniform Commercial Code requires.<sup>1</sup>

1. Pre-suit notice by plaintiff Smith-Brown as to Ulta Salon

Before plaintiff Smith-Brown filed her initial complaint in this matter, she submitted her pre-suit notice letter only to Ulta Beauty. Defendants argue that the letter did not provide effective notice to Ulta Salon.

Plaintiffs respond that Smith-Brown's letter, although addressed only to Ulta Beauty, nevertheless provided effective notice to Ulta Salon because the two entities share the [*25] same address, the same general counsel, and the same corporate secretary. According to plaintiffs, Ulta Salon therefore had "actual knowledge" of Smith-Brown's grievance prior to the filing of her complaint, and "lack of pre-litigation notice is excused" when the defendant has "actual knowledge" of the defect. See Fuchs v. Menard, Inc., No. 17 C 1752, 2017 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 160336, 2017 WL 4339821, at \*6 \(N.D. Ill. Sep. 29, 2017\).

The Court might agree with plaintiffs' legal reasoning under Illinois law, but Smith-Brown is a citizen of California who allegedly purchased used Ulta products in California, so California law presumably applies to her claims. Plaintiffs have not cited a case in which a court recognized an "actual knowledge" exception to the pre-suit notice requirement under California law. Plaintiffs cite In re Ford Motor Co. E-350 Van Prod. Liability Litigation \(No. II\), No. CIV03-4558, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 73690, 2008 WL 4126264, at \*10-11 \(D.N.J. Sept. 2, 2008\), which considered breach of warranty claims under Alabama, Arkansas, California, and Illinois law, but that case never suggested that there is any "actual knowledge" exception to the pre-suit notice requirement under California law. Instead, it recognized a California exception to the pre-suit notice requirement only for "injured consumers against manufacturers with whom they have not dealt" because [*26] an injured consumer who is not "steeped in the business practice which justifies the rule" will rarely be savvy enough to "give notice to one with whom he has had no dealings." 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 73690, JWL at \*10 (quoting Greenman v. Yuba Power Prods., 59 Cal. 2d 57, 27 Cal. Rptr. 697, 377 P.2d 897, 898 \(Cal. 1963\)). This exception is of no use to Smith-Brown in this case because she is not suing a remote manufacturer "with whom [she has] not dealt"; instead, she is suing the retailer who was the immediate seller of the product that harmed her, so the exception does not apply.

<sup>1</sup> Defendants also argue that plaintiffs do not state breach of warranty claims as to any new products. The Court need not address this argument because it has already concluded that plaintiffs have no standing to bring any such claims.

Nevertheless, the Court will not dismiss Smith-Brown's breach of warranty claim at this early stage. As the Court has explained above in Part IV.B. of this opinion, plaintiffs allege that Ulta Beauty and Ulta Salon are intertwined entities that shared directors and officers, as well as a general counsel and address. If plaintiffs' allegations are proved true, it may be that Smith-Brown's pre-suit notice to Ulta Beauty was effective as to Ulta Salon, based on the interconnectedness of the entities. Cf. Incubadora Mexicana, SA de CV v. Zoetis, Inc., 310 F.R.D. 166, 174 \(E.D. Pa. 2015\), background facts in earlier opinion at 116 F. Supp. 3d 519, 522 \(E.D. Pa. 2015\) (pre-suit notice to subsidiary not effective as to parent company where subsidiary "was to . . . operate as an independent company" and moved its "global headquarters" to another state to "complete[] [*27] its corporate separation" from parent). Ulta Salon's motion to dismiss Smith-Brown's breach of warranty claim for lack of pre-suit notice is denied.

2. Pre-suit notice by other plaintiffs

Smith-Brown initially filed this case as a lone plaintiff on January 26, 2018. The other plaintiffs only became parties when they joined in the Second Amended Complaint on June 6, 2018. Defendants argue that these other plaintiffs did not provide pre-suit notice prior to the filing of this suit, so their breach of warranty claims must be dismissed.

Plaintiffs respond that the other plaintiffs were not required to submit pre-suit notice before this action was filed; they were merely required to give pre-suit notice before they became parties to it, and each of them did provide pre-suit notice prior to filing the Second Amended Complaint, if not prior to Smith-Brown's original complaint.

The Court agrees with plaintiffs that their notice was sufficient. "The purpose of the pre-suit notice requirement is to give sellers the opportunity to resolve breaches short of litigation." Ulrich, 2017 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 132202, 2017 WL 3581183, at \*8. In order to do that, they must have notice of "the trouble with a particular product purchased by a particular buyer"; general [*28] awareness of a certain recurring complaint with the sellers' products is beside the point. Connick v. Suzuki Motor Co., 174 Ill. 2d 482, 675 N.E.2d 584, 590, 221 Ill. Dec. 389 \(Ill. 1996\); see id. at 591-92 ("As Judge Learned Hand stated . . . : 'The notice of the breach required is not of the facts, which the seller presumably knows quite as well as, if not better than, the buyer, but of buyer's claim that they constitute a breach.'") (quoting Am. Mfg. Co. v. U.S. Shipping Bd. Emergency Fleet Corp., 7 F.2d 565, 566 \(2d Cir. 1925\)). Because the required notice is of a particular buyer's claim that the seller is in breach of warranty, plaintiffs complied with the notice requirement to the extent that they individually provided notice of their claims prior to joining this suit, regardless of whether another plaintiff had already filed suit. Defendants' motion to dismiss is denied as to this basis.

3. Pre-suit notice by New Jersey plaintiff Allison Sot

Defendants argue that New Jersey plaintiff Allison Sot, unlike the other plaintiffs, did not provide notice of her claims prior to joining the Second Amended Complaint, so her breach of warranty claim should be dismissed.

Plaintiffs respond that, under New Jersey law, plaintiffs need not provide pre-suit notice at all; rather, the filing of the complaint is sufficient to permit the seller to redress the buyer's grievance by settling [*29] the dispute. See Strzakowski v. Gen. Motors Corp., No. CIV.A. 04-4740, 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 18111, 2005 WL 2001912, at \*3-4 \(D.N.J. Aug. 16, 2005\). But this relaxed version of the pre-suit notice requirement only applies, if at all, to claims against remote manufacturers, not claims against immediate sellers of defective products. Id. Because Sot's claim is against the immediate seller of the defective beauty products she complains of purchasing, the pre-suit notice requirement applies in full force. Plaintiff Sot's breach of warranty claim is dismissed.

D. Unjust Enrichment

Defendants argue that plaintiffs fail to state a claim for unjust enrichment because they have adequate remedies at law and because there is no private cause of action for unjust enrichment under California or New Jersey law.<sup>2</sup>

1. Adequate remedies at law

Defendants argue that unjust enrichment is unavailable where there is an otherwise adequate remedy at law, such as a cause of action for breach of contract. Plaintiffs respond that, under Rule 8, which permits them to plead alternative theories of relief, Fed. R. Civ. P. 8\(a\)\(3\), \(d\)\(2\)-\(3\), they may plead their unjust enrichment claims in the alternative to their breach of contract and consumer fraud claims. Plaintiffs are correct. See, e.g., Estate of Stepney v. UMG Recordings, Inc., No. 10 C 8266, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 56533, 2011 WL 2119130, at \*3 \(N.D. Ill. May 26, 2011\) ("Although Plaintiffs may not recover under a theory of unjust enrichment where there is [*30] an adequate remedy at law, Plaintiffs may plead both breach of contract and unjust enrichment in the alternative."); Sharbaugh v. First Am. Title Ins. Co., No. 07 C 2628, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 82166, 2007 WL 3307019, at \*2 \(N.D. Ill. Nov. 2, 2007\) ("[P]laintiff may plead an alternative claim for unjust enrichment, even if he alleges in other counts that the parties have a contract or he has an adequate remedy at law."); see also Horwitz v. Sonnenschein Nath & Rosenthal LLP, 399 Ill. App. 3d 965, 926 N.E.2d 934, 947, 339 Ill. Dec. 459 \(Ill. App. Ct. 2010\) ("But where a party pleads breach of contract, he also can plead unjust enrichment in the alternative.").

Defendants cite federal and state court decisions in a number of states—California, Florida, Georgia, Indiana, Maryland, Michigan, Nevada, New York, Ohio, and Washington—dismissing unjust enrichment claims because the plaintiffs had an adequate remedy at law. (Defs.' Mem. at 19.) Many of these cases are distinguishable because the complaints did not admit of any possibility that the plaintiffs' allegations were true and that they had no adequate remedy at law, but defendants do not establish that that is precisely the case here. They argue that an unjust enrichment claim simply cannot be pleaded alongside a claim for a legal remedy, but as a general matter, under Rule 8, defendants are incorrect, as even courts in some of the jurisdictions they cite have recognized. See, e.g., [*31] Napa Overseas, S.A. v. Nextran Corp., No. 16-20862-CIV, 2016 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 90179, 2016 WL 3841677, at \*5 \(S.D. Fla. July 12, 2016\) ("Nothing prevents Plaintiff from pursuing alternative claims of breach of contract and unjust enrichment in separate counts."); GlaxoSmithKline LLC v. Beede, No. 1:13-CV-00001, 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 28663, 2014 WL 896724, at \*7 \(N.D.N.Y. Mar. 6, 2014\) ("Initially, Plaintiff is permitted at this stage of the proceedings to pursue the alternate theories of breach of contract and unjust enrichment."). The basic proposition that unjust enrichment is unavailable to a plaintiff with an adequate remedy at law, by itself, does not require this Court to dismiss plaintiffs' alternative unjust enrichment claim. Defendants' motion is denied as to this basis.

2. California and New Jersey law

Defendants argue that plaintiffs' unjust enrichment claim should be dismissed to the extent it is governed by California or New Jersey law because unjust enrichment is not a stand-alone cause of action under the law of these states.

In similar circumstances, a court of this district has recognized an unjust enrichment claim under California law. See Carrol v. S.C. Johnsons & Son, Inc., No. 17-CV-05828, 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 57052, 2018 WL 1695421, at \*5-6

<sup>2</sup> Defendants also argue that plaintiffs do not state unjust enrichment claims as to any new products, but the Court need not address this argument because it has already concluded that plaintiffs have no standing to bring any such claims.

(N.D. Ill. Mar. 29, 2018). This Court is persuaded by that court's reasoning to follow suit and deny defendants' motion to dismiss plaintiffs' unjust enrichment claim under California law.

As for unjust enrichment under New [*32] Jersey law, defendants argue that plaintiffs must show not only that defendants received a benefit that it would be unjust to retain, but also that plaintiffs "expected remuneration" from defendants at the time they "performed or conferred a benefit" on defendants. Nelson v. Xacta 3000 Inc., No. 08 C 5426, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 109580, 2009 WL 4119176, at *7 (D.N.J. Nov. 24, 2009). According to defendants, plaintiffs have not alleged that they "expected remuneration" at the time they purchased defendants' products. But other New Jersey decisions have phrased the remuneration element differently, instead requiring that the plaintiff "expected remuneration, or, if the true facts were known to plaintiff, he would have expected remuneration from defendant, at the time the benefit was conferred." Callano v. Oakwood Park Homes Corp., 91 N.J. Super. 105, 219 A.2d 332, 334-35 (N.J. App. Div. 1966) (emphasis added); see In re NorVergence, Inc., 384 B.R. 315, 361-62 (Bankr. D.N.J. 2008) (denying motion to dismiss unjust enrichment claim brought by plaintiffs who alleged that they signed "leases for significantly overvalued equipment" because "it [was] plausible that if the [plaintiffs] had known the truth about the [equipment] when they entered the equipment lease, then they would have expected remuneration from Nortel who arguably benefited from the arguably overpriced [equipment].") The Court is not persuaded that New Jersey would not recognize plaintiffs' unjust enrichment [*33] claim. Defendants' motion is denied as to the unjust enrichment claim.

A. State Deceptive Business Practices Statutes

Defendants argue that plaintiffs' claims fail under certain state consumer fraud and deceptive business practices statutes for the following various reasons.<sup>3</sup>

1. California, Florida, Pennsylvania, and Michigan—No Facts About Used Products

Defendants argue that the Florida, Pennsylvania, and Michigan plaintiffs, as well as California plaintiff Robin Okman, fail to state a claim under the deceptive business practices statutes of those states because they state no facts to support or corroborate their belief that they purchased used products. Unlike some of the plaintiffs, defendants argue, these plaintiffs' claims are purely conclusory because they do not allege that they suffered infections from using defendants' products or that the products they purchased were noticeably used.

But the Court is not required to view these particular plaintiffs' allegations in isolation. When their allegations are viewed in light of all the other allegations of the complaint, including the social media revelations, the former employee declarations, and the allegations of the other named plaintiffs [*34] who suffered infections or bought products that appeared to be used, it is at least plausible that these plaintiffs also received used products. These plaintiffs may ultimately have difficulty proving their claims, but they need not prove them in the complaint; their claims need only be plausible. FKFJ, Inc. v. Vill. of Worth, No. 18 C 2828, 2019 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 9817, 2019 WL 277723, at *5 (N.D. Ill. Jan. 22, 2019) (citing Iqbal, 556 U.S. at 678). These plaintiffs' claims survive defendants' motion to dismiss.

2. Alabama—Pre-Suit Notice

Next, defendants argue that plaintiffs' claim under the Alabama Deceptive Trade Practices Act ("ADTPA") must be dismissed because plaintiffs did not provide adequate pre-suit notice at least fifteen days prior to filing the Second Amended Complaint, as the statute requires. Ala. Code § 8-19-10(e). The Court agrees with defendants. Plaintiffs <sup>3</sup> Defendants also argue that plaintiffs' claims fail under the various state statutes to the extent they seek relief for the purchase of new products. The Court need not address this argument because it has already explained that plaintiffs have no standing to assert claims for the purchase of new products.

provided their pre-suit notice letter on May 23, 2018, only fourteen days prior to the filing of the Second Amended Complaint on June 6, 2018. Plaintiffs argue that the Court should excuse their failure to provide timely pre-suit notice because they substantially complied with the fifteen-day requirement by providing notice fourteen days before filing suit and because defendants had actual notice of the issues plaintiffs raised long before May 23, 2018. But plaintiffs cite [*35] no authority to support giving the ADTPA's fifteen-day requirement a liberal construction or implying a substantial compliance or actual notice exception, nor is the Court aware of any. With only the plain language of the statute for guidance, the Court must apply the statute as written. Plaintiffs' claim under the ADTPA must be dismissed.

3. California—"Unfair" conduct

Defendants argue that plaintiffs' claim under California's Unfair Competition Law ("UCL") must be dismissed because plaintiffs have not alleged any conduct that is "unfair" within the meaning of that statute. According to defendants, the "unfair" conduct that the statute prohibits is the sort of unfair competition that the antitrust laws are meant to protect against. Plaintiffs respond that, while there is a split of authority, some California courts have taken a different approach, instead analyzing whether a challenged business practice is unfair by "weigh[ing] the utility of the defendant's conduct against the gravity of the harm to the alleged victim." S. Bay Chevrolet v. Gen. Motors Acceptance Corp., 72 Cal. App. 4th 861, 886-87, 85 Cal. Rptr. 2d 301, 316 \(1999\).

Defendants' position is based on Cel-Tech Communications, Inc. v. Los Angeles Cellular Telephone Co., 20 Cal. 4th 163, 83 Cal. Rptr. 2d 548, 973 P.2d 527, 543-44 \(Cal. 1999\), in which the California Supreme Court criticized the balancing test plaintiffs proffer as "amorphous," and instead explained that [*36] "unfair" conduct is that which "threatens an incipient violation of an antitrust law, or violates the policy or spirit of one of those laws because its effects are comparable to or the same as a violation of the law, or otherwise significantly threatens or harms competition." However, the court specifically cautioned that its "discussion and this test are limited to [the] context" of "an action by a competitor alleging anticompetitive practices." Id. at 544 n.12. California decisions are split on whether the test differs in consumer actions—like this one—alleging unfairness to the defendant's customers, as opposed to "suits involving unfairness to the defendant's competitors," such as Cel-Tech. See Lozano v. AT & T Wireless Servs., Inc., 504 F.3d 718, 735-36 \(9th Cir. 2007\) (citing cases). Notably, the case plaintiffs cite in support of applying the balancing test, South Bay Chevrolet v. General Motors Acceptance Corp., was decided a month after the California Supreme Court's decision in Cel-Tech, and it expressly interpreted that case as limited to the competitor context. S. Bay, 85 Cal. Rptr. 2d at 309 n.9. The Court is not persuaded that plaintiffs' allegations do not fall within a valid theory of unfairness under the UCL. See Lozano, 504 F.3d at 736. Defendants' motion to dismiss is denied as to this claim.

4. Wisconsin—Omissions [*37] Not Actionable

Defendants argue that plaintiffs' claims fail under the Wisconsin Deceptive Trade Practices Act ("WDTPA") because omissions are not actionable under that statute.<sup>4</sup> Plaintiffs respond that they are proceeding not on an omission theory but on the theory that defendants affirmatively represented that their products were new by offering them for sale in Ulta stores. But plaintiffs have not cited a case in which any court recognized any such theory under Wisconsin law. The only case plaintiffs cite is distinguishable because, there, the plaintiffs claimed to have been deceived by affirmative misrepresentations of quality on the packaging of the defendants' products. See Loeb v. Champion Petfoods USA Inc., No. 18-CV-494-JPS, 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 95601, 2018 WL 2745254, at \*6-7 \(E.D. Wis. June 7, 2018\) (denying motion to dismiss WDTPA claim that dog food was contaminated with heavy metals because dog food packaging contained "representations of quality and fitness for [even] human consumption"). In this case, plaintiffs have not pointed to any specific misrepresentations defendants made about whether their products were new or used. Defendants' motion to dismiss is granted as to the WDTPA claim.

<sup>4</sup> In their opening brief, defendants made a similar argument about the Indiana Deceptive Consumer Sales Act ("IDCSA"), but in response, plaintiffs explained that that statute has recently been amended and expanded to cover omissions. Defendants apparently concede the point because they do not mention the statute at all in their reply. The Court considers defendants to have waived their argument on this point.

5. Nevada—No Affirmative Misrepresentations And No Duty To Disclose [*38]

Defendants move to dismiss plaintiffs' claims under the Nevada Deceptive Trade Practices Act ("NDTPA") because they are not grounded in affirmative misrepresentations about Ulta products, and plaintiffs have not identified any special relationship or other circumstance giving defendants a duty to disclose facts about Ulta products to plaintiffs. The NDTPA defines an actionable deceptive trade practice in various ways, see NRS § 598.0915, and all pertinent definitions contain the element of making a false representation of fact. As the Court explained in the preceding subsection of this opinion, plaintiffs have not alleged that defendants made any such affirmative misrepresentation to plaintiffs.

One district court has suggested, in the context of an NDTPA claim, that "the suppression or omission of a material fact is equivalent to a false representation . . . when a party is bound in good faith to disclose that material fact." Mallory v. McCarthy & Holthus, LLP, No. 2:14-CV-00396, 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 61456, 2015 WL 2185413, at \*3 \(D. Nev. May 11, 2015\). But the court apparently imported this principle from Nevada's common law of fraud without any authority for applying it to NDTPA claims, and neither in Mallory nor in any other case plaintiffs have cited has a court permitted [*39] a plaintiff to proceed under the NDTPA without pleading that the defendant made specific, affirmative misrepresentations. Applying the plain language of the statute, the Court concludes that plaintiffs must plead an affirmative misrepresentation in order to state a claim under the NDTPA. Defendants' motion to dismiss is granted as to the NDTPA claim.

6. South Carolina—Class Action Bar

Federal courts must apply federal procedural law, including Rule 23, even when they are applying state substantive law, so long as doing so does not "abridge, enlarge or modify any substantive right." 28 U.S.C. § 2072\(b\). Defendants argue that the class claim under the South Carolina Unfair Trade Practices Act ("SCUTPA") should be dismissed because the SCUTPA expressly prohibits class actions:

- (a) Any person who suffers any ascertainable loss of money or property, real or personal, as a result of the use or employment by another person of an unfair or deceptive method, act or practice declared unlawful by § 39-5-20 may bring an action individually, but not in a representative capacity, to recover actual damages.

S.C. Code § 39-5-140 (emphasis added). Defendants cite only a single case, Fejzulai v. Sam's West, Inc., 205 F. Supp. 3d 723, 727-28 \(D.S.C. 2016\). Fejzulai reasoned that the SCUTPA's class action bar is part and parcel [*40] of the substantive right that the SCUTPA confers because it is incorporated into the core provision of the SCUTPA, and the bar therefore applies in any action to enforce that substantive right, whether in federal or state court. Id.

Plaintiffs argue that the SCUTPA's class action bar is procedural, not substantive, and Rule 23 "unambiguously authorizes any plaintiff, in any federal civil proceeding, to maintain a class action if the Rule's prerequisites are met," so the Court must apply Rule 23 instead of the SCUTPA's class action bar. See Shady Grove Orthopedic Assocs., P.A. v. Allstate Ins. Co., 559 U.S. 393, 416-17, 130 S. Ct. 1431, 176 L. Ed. 2d 311 \(2010\) (New York class action bar does not preclude federal courts sitting in diversity from entertaining Rule 23 class actions governed by New York substantive law).

A leading treatise states that "[m]ost courts considering the question have determined that the legislature's placement of a class action prohibition within a specific state consumer protection act (as opposed to a free-standing rule of procedure) does not necessarily mean that the prohibition is a substantive one." 1 McLaughlin on Class Actions § 2:47 (15th ed.) (citing Reed v. Dynamic Pet Prods., No. 15CV0987-WQH-DHB, 2016 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 96206, 2016 WL 3996715, at \*6 \(S.D. Cal. July 21, 2016\) and In re Hydroxycut Mktg. & Sales Practices

Litig., 299 F.R.D. 648, 654 (S.D. Cal. 2014); but see Delgado v. Ocwen Loan Servicing, LLC, No. 13CV4427, 2017 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 186408, 2017 WL 5201079, at *10 (E.D.N.Y. Nov. 9, 2017) (reasoning that "the specific inclusion of a class action bar in . . . consumer protection [*41] laws evinces a desire by the state legislature to limit not only the form of the action but also the remedies available"). This Court agrees with those decisions holding that the fact that a class action bar is included within a consumer protection statute does not make it any more substantive than if it were found instead among the state's rules of procedure. See Lisk v. Lumber One Wood Preserving, LLC, 792 F.3d 1331, 1336 (11th Cir. 2015) ("[H]ow a state chooses to organize its statutes affects the analysis not at all. . . . [T]he question whether a federal rule abridges, enlarges, or modifies a substantive right turns on matters of substance—not on the placement of a statute within a state code."). The class action mechanism is merely a way of joining numerous plaintiffs' claims together in order to adjudicate them more efficiently; a law permitting it or prohibiting it is procedural, not substantive, because it does not alter the nature of the claim or the right that gives rise to it. In this vein, one district court, guided by Shady Grove, reasoned as follows:

In Shady Grove, Justice Scalia explained:

A class action no less than traditional joinder (of which it is a species), merely enables a federal court to adjudicate claims of multiple parties at once, [*42] instead of separate suits. And like traditional joinder it leaves the parties' legal rights and duties intact and the rules of decision unchanged.

Shady Grove, 559 U.S. at 408. Conversely, a rule barring class actions does not prevent individuals who would otherwise be members of the class from bringing their own separate suits or joining in a preexisting lawsuit. The substantive rights of these individuals are not affected. The prohibitions against class actions only affect "how the claims are processed." Id. The fact that the class action prohibitions are within the individual state consumer protection acts, as opposed to free-standing rules, does not alter the Court's conclusion.

Hydroxycut, 299 F.R.D. at 654 (internal citation altered). The Court finds Hydroxycut's analysis persuasive. Defendants' motion to dismiss is denied as to the SCUTPA claim.

7. Georgia—Injunctive Relief

Defendants argue that plaintiffs' Georgia Uniform Deceptive Trade Practices Act ("GUDTPA") claims must fail because they do not allege future injury, and the only remedy that the GUDTPA provides is injunctive relief. Plaintiff Veronica Sanders, the only plaintiff who resides in Georgia, alleges that she wants to shop at Ulta again, but is hesitant to do so while she [*43] knows that, in doing so, she would run the risk of purchasing a product that has been previously used by someone else. (2d Am. Compl. ¶ 25.)

This Court has previously recognized that a plaintiff alleges sufficient facts to assert a claim for injunctive relief in a consumer protection action if she alleges that she faces a "threat of future harm" because "she will be unable to rely on the product's advertising or labeling in the future, and so will not purchase the product although she would like to." Curran v. Bayer Healthcare LLC, No. 17 C 7930, 2019 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 15362, 2019 WL 398685, at *5 (N.D. Ill. Jan. 31, 2019) (citing Davidson v. Kimberly-Clark Corp., 889 F.3d 956, 969-70 (9th Cir. 2018)). Defendants do not explain—nor does the Court see—why plaintiff Sanders's allegations do not similarly state a claim for injunctive relief for similar reasons. The case that plaintiffs cite, Collins v. Athens Orthopedic Clinic, 347 Ga. App. 13, 815 S.E.2d 639, 646-47 (Ga. App. Ct. 2018), sheds little light on the question because it concerned a defendant's lax information security practices, which had allowed a hacker to steal plaintiffs' personally identifiable information. Once stolen, such information cannot be stolen again; but a consumer who unwittingly buys previously used beauty products could be victimized again in the same way by the same retailer. Collins is distinguishable, and defendants' motion is denied as to this claim.

CONCLUSION

Defendant's motion to dismiss [*44] [99] is granted in part and denied in part. The motion is granted as to (1) any claims based on the purchase of new products, (2) any claims on behalf of prospective class members residing outside the states represented by the named plaintiffs, (3) plaintiff Sot's breach of warranty claim under New Jersey law, (4) any claim under the Alabama Deceptive Trade Practices Act, (4) any claim under the Wisconsin Deceptive Trade Practices Act, and (6) any claim under the Nevada Deceptive Trade Practices Act. The motion is otherwise denied.

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Antitrust Statutes > Clayton Act

HN1 [] Antitrust Statutes, Clayton Act

Section 7 of the Clayton Act prohibits mergers where in any line of commerce or in any activity affecting commerce in any section of the country, the effect of such acquisition may be substantially to lessen competition. 15 U.S.C. § 18. Congress acted out of concern with probabilities, not certainties inasmuch as statutes existed only for dealing with clear-cut menaces to competition. Mergers with a probable anticompetitive effect were to be proscribed by the Clayton Act. It left to the courts the difficult task of assessing probabilities in the commercial marketplace in the interest of halting incipient monopolies and trade restraints outside the scope of the Sherman Act. Therefore, § 7 applies a much more stringent test than does the rule-of-reason analysis under § 1 of the Sherman Act. Although § 7 requires more than a mere possibility of competitive harm, it does not require proof of certain harm. Instead, the government must show that the proposed merger is likely to substantially lessen competition, which encompasses a concept of reasonable probability.

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Antitrust Statutes > Clayton Act

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Horizontal Mergers

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Vertical Acquisitions

HN2[] Antitrust Statutes, Clayton Act

Under the burden-shifting framework, the government must first establish a prima facie case that the merger is likely to substantially lessen competition in the relevant market. But unlike horizontal mergers, the government cannot use a short cut to establish a presumption of anticompetitive effect through statistics about the change in market concentration, because vertical mergers produce no immediate change in the relevant market share. Instead, the government must make a fact-specific showing that the proposed merger is likely to be anticompetitive. Once the prima facie case is established, the burden shifts to the defendant to present evidence that the prima facie case inaccurately predicts the relevant transaction's probable effect on future competition, or to sufficiently discredit the evidence underlying the prima facie case. Upon such rebuttal, the burden of producing additional evidence of anticompetitive effects shifts to the government, and merges with the ultimate burden of persuasion, which remains with the government at all times.

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > Clearly Erroneous Review

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Injunctions > Permanent Injunctions

HN3[] Standards of Review, Clearly Erroneous Review

Where the government has presented its challenges to the district court's denial of a permanent injunction, the question for the appellate court is whether the district court's factual findings are clearly erroneous. Fed. R. Civ. P. 52\(a\). This is a deferential standard. A finding is clearly erroneous when although there is evidence to support it, the reviewing court on the entire evidence is left with the definite and firm conviction that a mistake has been committed. Findings that are plausible in light of the entire record are not clearly erroneous, so where there are two permissible views of the evidence, the factfinder's choice between them cannot be clearly erroneous. A finding may be clearly erroneous when it is illogical or implausible, rests on internally inconsistent reasoning.

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Antitrust Statutes > Clayton Act

HN4[] Antitrust Statutes, Clayton Act

Quantitative evidence of price increase is not required in order to prevail on a § 7 of the Clayton Act challenge. Vertical mergers can create harms beyond higher prices for consumers, including decreased product quality and reduced innovation.

[**390] [*1031] Opinion for the court filed by Circuit Judge ROGERS.

ROGERS, Circuit Judge: On October 22, 2016, AT&T Inc. announced a proposed merger with Time Warner Inc. The government sued to enjoin this vertical merger under Section 7 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 18, and now appeals the denial of its request for a permanent injunction. United States v. AT&T Inc., 310 F. Supp. 3d 161, 254 \(D.D.C. 2018). Although it pursued three theories of antitrust violation in the district court, the government on appeal challenges only the district court's findings on its increased leverage theory whereby costs for Turner Broadcasting System's content would increase after the merger, principally through threats of long-term "blackouts" during affiliate negotiations.

At trial, the government presented expert opinion on the likely anticompetitive effects of the proposed merger on the video programming and distribution industry as forecast by economic principles and a quantitative model. It also presented statements by the defendants in administrative [***5] proceedings about the anticompetitive effects of a proposed vertical merger in the industry seven years earlier. The defendants responded with an expert's analysis of real-world data for prior vertical mergers in the industry that showed "no statistically significant effect on content prices." The government offered no comparable analysis of data and its expert opinion and modeling predicting such increases failed to take into account Turner Broadcasting System's post-litigation irrevocable offers of no-blackout arbitration agreements, which a government expert acknowledged would require a new model. Evidence also indicated that the industry had become [*1032] [**391] dynamic in recent years with the emergence, for example, of Netflix and Hulu. In this evidentiary context, the government's objections that the district court misunderstood and misapplied economic principles and clearly erred in rejecting the quantitative model are unpersuasive. Accordingly, we affirm.

I.

HN1[] Section 7 of the Clayton Act prohibits mergers "where in any line of commerce or in any activity affecting commerce in any section of the country, the effect of such acquisition may be substantially to lessen competition." 15 U.S.C. § 18 (emphasis added). Congress [***6] acted out of concern with "probabilities, not certainties" inasmuch as "statutes existed [only] for dealing with clear-cut menaces to competition . . . . Mergers with a probable anticompetitive effect were to be proscribed by [the Clayton Act.]" Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, 323, 82 S. Ct. 1502, 8 L. Ed. 2d 510 (1962). It left to the courts the difficult task of assessing probabilities in the commercial marketplace in the interest of "halting 'incipient monopolies and trade restraints outside the scope of the Sherman Act,'" Rothery Storage & Van Co. v. Atlas Van Lines, Inc., 792 F.2d 210, 220, 253 U.S. App. D.C. 142 (D.C. Cir. 1986) (quoting Brown Shoe, 370 U.S. at 318 n.32). Therefore, Section 7 "applies a much more stringent test than does the rule-of-reason analysis under section 1 of the Sherman Act." Id. Although Section 7 requires more than a "mere possibility" of competitive harm, it does not require proof of certain harm. Brown Shoe, 370 U.S. at 323 n.39. Instead, the government must show that the proposed merger is likely to substantially lessen competition, which encompasses a concept of "reasonable probability." Id.

Neither the government nor the defendants challenge application of the burden-shifting framework in United States v. Baker Hughes, 908 F.2d 981, 982-83, 285 U.S. App. D.C. 222 (D.C. Cir. 1990), for horizontal mergers that the district court applied to consider the effect of the proposed vertical merger of AT&T and Time Warner on competition. HN2[] Under this framework, the government must first establish a prima facie case that [***7] the merger is likely to substantially lessen competition in the relevant market. United States v. Anthem, 855 F.3d 345, 349, 428 U.S. App. D.C. 403 (D.C. Cir. 2017). But unlike horizontal mergers, the government cannot use a short cut to establish a presumption of anticompetitive effect through statistics about the change in market concentration, because vertical mergers produce no immediate change in the relevant market share. See Dept. of Justice & Fed. Trade Comm'n, Non-Horizontal Merger Guidelines § 4.0 (June 14, 1984) ("1984 Non-Horizontal Merger Guidelines"). Instead, the government must make a "fact-specific" showing that the proposed merger is "likely to be anticompetitive." Joint Statement on the Burden of Proof at Trial at 3-4. Once the prima facie case is established, the burden shifts to the defendant to present evidence that the prima facie case "inaccurately predicts the relevant transaction's probable effect on future competition," Anthem, 855 F.3d at 349 (quoting Baker Hughes, 908 F.2d at 991), or to "sufficiently discredit" the evidence underlying the prima facie case, id. Upon such rebuttal, "the burden of producing additional evidence of anticompetitive effects shifts to the government, and merges with the ultimate burden of persuasion, which remains with the government at all times." Baker Hughes, 908 F.2d at 983.

The relevant market definition is also undisputed by the government [***8] and the defendants. (For ease of reference, we refer hereinafter to defendants AT&T Inc., Direct TV Group Holdings, LLC, and Time Warner Inc. as "AT&T.") The district [*1033] [*392] court accepted the government's proposal that the product market is the market for multichannel video distribution. Although this market definition excludes distributors of only on-demand content, such as Netflix and Hulu, the district court considered the impact of the increasing presence of these distributors on the multichannel video programming and distribution industry. AT&T, 310 F. Supp. 3d at 196-97. The district court also accepted the government's proposed geographic market, which included over 1,100 local multichannel video distribution markets. Id. at 197. The government did not rely on any particular market for enjoining the proposed merger; one of its experts aggregated the alleged harms in the local markets to derive a total measure of nationwide economic harm. See Proposed Findings of Fact of the United States 13 (May 8, 2018).

HN3 As the government has presented its challenges to the district court's denial of a permanent injunction, the question for this court is whether the district court's factual findings are clearly erroneous. Fed. R. Civ. P. 52\(a\); see FTC v. H.J. Heinz Co., 246 F.3d 708, 713, 345 U.S. App. D.C. 364 \(D.C. Cir. 2001\). This is [***9] a deferential standard. Zenith Radio Corp. v. Hazeltine Research, Inc., 395 U.S. 100, 123, 89 S. Ct. 1562, 23 L. Ed. 2d 129 \(1969\). "A finding is 'clearly erroneous' when although there is evidence to support it, the reviewing court on the entire evidence is left with the definite and firm conviction that a mistake has been committed." United States v. Gypsum Co., 333 U.S. 364, 395, 68 S. Ct. 525, 92 L. Ed. 746 \(1948\). Findings that are plausible in light of the entire record are not clearly erroneous, Anderson v. City of Bessemer City, N.C., 470 U.S. 564, 575, 577, 105 S. Ct. 1504, 84 L. Ed. 2d 518 \(1985\), so "[w]here there are two permissible views of the evidence, the factfinder's choice between them cannot be clearly erroneous," id. at 574 (citing United States v. Yellow Cab Co., 338 U.S. 338, 342, 70 S. Ct. 177, 94 L. Ed. 150 \(1949\)); see also Cooper v. Harris, 137 S. Ct. 1455, 1465, 197 L. Ed. 2d 837 \(2017\). A finding may be clearly erroneous when it is illogical or implausible, Anderson, 470 U.S. at 577, rests on internally inconsistent reasoning, Heinz, 246 F.3d at 718, or contains errors of economic logic, FTC v. Advocate Health Care Network, 841 F.3d 460, 464 \(7th Cir. 2016\).

The government contends that it has made the requisite showing of error because the district court's conclusion it had failed to meet its burden of proof "rests on two fundamental errors: the district court discarded the economics of bargaining, and the district court failed to apply the foundational principle of corporate-wide profit maximization." Appellant Br. 29, 37-38. Further, the government contends that the district court used internally inconsistent logic when evaluating industry evidence and clearly erred in rejecting its expert's quantitative model of harm. [***10]

In Part II, we provide an overview of the video programming and distribution industry. Then, as relevant to the issues on appeal, we summarize the evidence before the district court and its findings. In Part III, we address the government's challenges to the district court's findings.

II.

A.

The video programming and distribution industry traditionally operates in a three-stage chain of production. Studios or networks create content. Then, programmers package content into networks and license those networks to video distributors. Finally, distributors sell bundles of networks to subscribers. For example, a studio may create a television show and sell it to Turner Broadcasting System ("Turner Broadcasting"), [*1034] [*393] a programmer, which would package that television show into one of its networks, such as CNN or TNT. Turner Broadcasting would then license its networks to distributors, such as DirecTV or Comcast.

Programmers license their content to distributors through affiliate agreements, and distributors pay "affiliate fees" to programmers. Programmers and distributors engage in what are oftentimes referred to as "affiliate negotiations," which, according to evidence before the district court, [***11] can be lengthy and complicated. If a programmer and a distributor fail to reach an agreement, then the distributor will lose the rights to display the programmer's content to its customers. This situation, known as a "blackout" or "going dark," is generally costly for both the programmer, which loses affiliate fee revenues, and the distributor, which risks losing subscribers. Therefore, blackouts rarely occur, and long-term blackouts are especially rare. The evidence indicated, however, that programmers and distributors often threaten blackouts as a negotiating tactic, and both may perform "go dark" analyses to estimate the potential impact of a blackout in preparation for negotiations.

The evidence before the district court also showed that the industry has been changing in recent years. Multichannel video programming distributors ("MVPDs") offer live television content as well as libraries of licensed content "on demand" to subscribers. So-called "traditional" MVPDs distribute channels to subscribers on cable or by satellite. Recently, "virtual" MVPDs have also emerged. They distribute live videos and on-demand videos to subscribers over the internet and compete with traditional MVPDs [***12] for subscribers. Virtual MVPDs, such as DirecTV Now and YouTube TV, have been gaining market share, the evidence showed, because they are easy to use and low-cost, often because they offer subscribers smaller packages of channels, known as "skinny bundles."

In addition, subscription video on demand services ("SVODs") have also emerged on the market. SVODs, such as Netflix, do not offer live video content but have large libraries of content that a viewer may access on demand. SVODs also offer low-cost subscription plans and have been gaining market share recently. Increasingly, cable customers are "cutting the cord" and terminating MVPD service altogether. Often these customers do not exit the entertainment field altogether, but instead switch to SVODs for entertainment service.

Leading SVODs are vertically integrated, which means they create content and also distribute it. Traditional MVPDs typically are not vertically integrated with programmers. In 2009, however, Comcast Corporation ("Comcast") (a distributor and the largest cable company in the United States) announced a $30 billion merger with NBC Universal, Inc. ("NBCU") (a content creator and programmer), whereby it would control [***13] popular video programming that included the NBC broadcast network and the cable networks of NBC Universal, Inc. The government sued to permanently enjoin the merger under Section 7, alleging that Comcast's "majority control of highly valued video programming . . . would prevent rival video-distribution companies from competing against the post-merger entity." United States v. Comcast, 808 F. Supp. 2d 145, 147 \(D.D.C. 2011\). The district court, with the defendants' agreement and at the government's urging, allowed the merger to proceed subject to certain remedies for the alleged anticompetitive conduct post-merger, including remedies ordered in a related proceeding before the Federal Communications Commission [**394] [*1035] ("FCC"). Id. One remedy in the Comcast-NBCU merger was an agreement by the defendants to submit, at a distributor's option, to "baseball style" arbitration — in which each side makes a final offer and the arbitrator chooses between them — if parties did not reach a renewal agreement. During the arbitration, the distributor would retain access to NBC content, thereby mitigating concerns that Comcast-NBCU may withhold NBC programming during negotiations in order to benefit Comcast's distribution subscriptions. Comcast-NBCU currently operates as a "vertically [***14] integrated" programmer and distributor.

Now the government has again sued to halt a proposed vertical merger of a programmer and a distributor in the same industry. On October 22, 2016, AT&T Inc. announced its plan to acquire Time Warner Inc. ("Time Warner") as part of a $108 billion transaction. AT&T Inc. is a distribution company with two traditional MVPD products: DirecTV and U-verse. DirecTV transmits programming over satellite, while U-verse transmits programming over cable. Time Warner, by contrast, is a content creator and programmer and has three units: Warner Bros., Turner Broadcasting, and Home Box Office Programming ("HBO"). Warner Bros. creates movies, television shows, and other video programs. Turner Broadcasting packages content into various networks, such as TNT, TBS, and CNN, and licenses its networks to third-party MVPDs. HBO is a "premium" network that provides on-demand content to subscribers either directly through HBO Now or through licenses with third-party distributors. The merged firm would operate both AT&T MVPDs (DirecTV and U-verse) and Turner Broadcasting networks (which license to other MVPDs). The government alleged that "the newly combined firm likely [***15] would . . . use its control of Time Warner's popular programming as a weapon to harm competition." Compl. 2.

A week after the government filed suit to stop the proposed merger, Turner Broadcasting sent letters to approximately 1,000 distributors "irrevocably offering" to engage in "baseball style" arbitration at any time within a seven-year period, subject to certain conditions not relevant here. According to President of Turner Content Distribution Richard Warren, the offer of arbitration agreements was designed to "address the government's concern that as a result of being . . . commonly owned by AT&T, [Turner Broadcasting] would have an incentive to drive prices higher and go dark with [its] affiliates," Tr. 1182 (April 3, 2018). In the event of a failure to agree on renewal terms, Turner Broadcasting agreed that the distributor would have the right to continue carrying Turner networks pending arbitration, subject to the same terms and conditions in the distributor's existing contract.

B.

The government's increased leverage theory is that "by combining Time Warner's programming and DirecTV's distribution, the merger would give Time Warner increased bargaining leverage in negotiations [***16] with rival distributors, leading to higher, supracompetitive prices for millions of consumers." Appellant Br. 33. Under this theory, Turner Broadcasting's bargaining position in affiliate negotiations will change after the merger due to its relationship with AT&T because the cost of a blackout will be lower. Prior to the merger, if Turner Broadcasting failed to reach a deal with a distributor and engaged in a long-term blackout, then it would lose affiliate fees and advertising revenues. After the merger, some costs of a blackout would be offset because some customers would leave the rival [*1036] [**395] distributor due to Turner Broadcasting's blackout and a portion of those customers would switch to AT&T distributor services. The merged AT&T-Turner Broadcasting entity would earn a profit margin on these new customers. Because Turner Broadcasting would make a profit from switched customers, the cost of a long-term blackout would decrease after the merger and thereby give it increased bargaining leverage during affiliate negotiations with rival distributors sufficient to enable it to secure higher affiliate fees from distributors, which would result in higher prices for consumers.

To support this [***17] theory of competitive harm, the government presented evidence purporting to show the real-world effect of the proposed merger. Specifically, it introduced statements in prior FCC filings by AT&T and DirectTV that vertical integration provides an incentive to increase prices and poses a threat to competition. Various internal documents of the defendants were to the same effect. Third-party competitors, such as cable distributors, testified that the merger would increase Turner Broadcasting's bargaining leverage.

The government also presented the expert opinion of Professor Carl Shapiro on the likely anticompetitive effect of the proposed merger. He opined, based on the economic theory of bargaining — here, the Nash bargaining theory — that Turner Broadcasting's bargaining leverage would increase after the merger because the cost of a long-term blackout would decrease. His quantitative model predicted net price increases to consumers. Specifically, his model predicted increases in fees paid by rival distributors for Turner Broadcasting content and cost savings for AT&T through elimination of double marginalization ("EDM"). The fee increases for rival distributors were based on the expected [***18] benefit to AT&T of a Turner Broadcasting blackout after the merger. Professor Shapiro determined the extent to which rival distributors and AT&T would pass on their respective cost increases and cost decreases to consumers. His model predicted: (1) an annual fee increase of $587 million for rival distributors to license Turner Broadcasting content, and cost savings of $352 million for AT&T; and (2) an annual net increase of $286 million in costs passed on to consumers in 2016, with increases in future years.

AT&T responded by pointing to testimony of executives' past experience in affiliate negotiations, and presenting testimony by its experts critiquing Professor Shapiro's opinion and model. It purported to show through its own experts that the government's prima facie case inaccurately predicted the proposed merger's probable effect on competition. Professor Dennis Carlton's econometric analysis (also known as a regression analysis, Tr. 2473 (April 12, 2018)), showed that prior instances of vertical integration in the MVPD market had not had a "statistically significant effect on content prices," id. at 2477, pointing to data on the Comcast-NBCU merger in 2011 as well as prior vertical integration [***19] between News Corp.-DirecTV and Time Warner Cable-Time Warner Inc., which split in 2008 and 2009, respectively. Professor Carlton and Professor Peter Rossi critiqued the "inputs" used by Professor Shapiro in his quantitative model, opining for instance that values he used for subscriber loss rate and diversion rate were not calculated through reliable methods. Professor Carlton also opined that Professor Shapiro's quantitative model overestimated how quickly harm would occur because it failed to consider existing long-term contracts.

Professor Shapiro, in turn, critiqued Professor Carlton's econometric analysis as comparing different types of vertical mergers. Regarding the "inputs" to his [*1037] [**396] quantitative model, Professor Shapiro conceded that he was unaware the subscriber loss rate percentage he used (from a consultant report for Charter Communications, Inc.) had been changed after the report was presented to Charter executives. He also acknowledged that he had not considered the effects of the arbitration agreements offered by Turner Broadcasting and that to do so would require preparation of a new model. Tr. 2208, 2325 (Apr. 11, 2018).

The district court acknowledged the uncertainty regarding [***20] the measure of proof for the government's burden because Section 7 does not require proof of certain harm. AT&T, 310 F. Supp. 3d at 189-90 n.16. The government and AT&T had used various phrases to describe the government's burden, including that it must show an "appreciable danger" of competitive harm, or that it must show that harm is "likely" or "reasonably probable." Id. The district court concluded that it need not articulate the differences between these phrases because "even assuming the 'reasonable probability' or 'appreciable danger' formulations govern here . . . [its] conclusions regarding the [g]overnment's failure of proof would remain unchanged." Id. Acknowledging also the lack of precedent and the complexity in establishing the correct approach in a Section 7 challenge to a proposed vertical merger, the district court viewed the outcome of the litigation to "turn[] on whether, notwithstanding the proposed merger's conceded procompetitive effects, the [g]overnment has met its burden of establishing, through 'case-specific evidence,' that the merger of AT&T and Time Warner, at this time and in this remarkably dynamic industry, is likely to substantially lessen competition in the manner it predicts." Id. at 194 (quoting Proposed Conclusions [***21] of Law of the United States ¶ 25).

Several amici urge this court to speak definitively on the proper legal standard for evaluating vertical mergers. See Amicus Curiae 27 Antitrust Scholars et al. Br. 10-16; Amicus Curiae Chamber of Commerce et al. Br. 5-8; Amicus Curiae Open Markets Institute Br. 16-20. There is a dearth of modern judicial precedent on vertical mergers and a multiplicity of contemporary viewpoints about how they might optimally be adjudicated and enforced. See, e.g., Amicus Curiae 27 Antitrust Scholars et al. Br. 6-16; Amicus Curiae Chamber of Commerce et al. Br. 17-24. The government's guidelines for non-horizontal mergers were last updated in 1984, over three decades ago. See 1984 Non-Horizontal Merger Guidelines. But there is no need to opine on the proper legal standards for evaluating vertical mergers because, on appeal, neither party challenges the legal standards the district court applied, and no error is apparent in the district court's choices, see Amicus Curiae Open Markets Institute Br. 18-19 (citing cases). See generally Narragansett Indian Tribe v. Nat. Indian Gaming Com'n, 158 F.3d 1335, 1338, 332 U.S. App. D.C. 429 (D.C. Cir. 1998); Michel v. Anderson, 14 F.3d 623, 625, 304 U.S. App. D.C. 325 (D.C. Cir. 1994).

The district court found that the government had "failed to clear the first hurdle of showing that the proposed merger is likely to [***22] increase Turner [Broadcasting]'s bargaining leverage in affiliate negotiations." AT&T, 310 F. Supp. 3d at 199. Although acknowledging, as Professor Shapiro had opined, that the Nash bargaining theory could apply in the context of affiliate fee negotiations, the district court found more probative the real-world evidence offered by AT&T than that offered by the government. The econometric analysis of AT&T's expert had examined real-world data from prior instances of vertical integration in the video programming and distribution industry and concluded that "the bulk of [*1038] [**397] the results show no significant results at all, but many do show a decrease in content prices." Id. at 216 (quoting Prof. Carlton, Tr. 2477 (April 12, 2018)); see id. at 207, 218. The district court also credited the testimony of several industry executives — e.g., Madison Bond, lead negotiator for NBCU, and Coleman Breland and Richard Warren, lead negotiators for Turner Broadcasting — that vertical integration had not affected their affiliate negotiations in the past. By contrast, the testimony from third-party competitors that the merger would increase Turner Broadcasting's bargaining leverage was, the district court found, "speculative, based on unproven assumptions, [***23] or unsupported." Id. at 214. Although Professor Shapiro's opinion was that the Nash bargaining theory predicted an increase in Turner Broadcasting's post-merger bargaining leverage, leading to an increase in affiliate fees, the district court found, in view of the industry's dynamism in recent years, that Professor Shapiro's opinion (by contrast with Professor Carlton's) had "not been supported by sufficient real-world evidence." Id. at 224.

Second, the district court found that Professor Shapiro's quantitative model, which estimated the proposed merger would result in future increases in consumer prices, lacked sufficient reliability and factual credibility to generate probative predictions of future competitive harm. Relying on critiques by Professor Carlton and Professor Rossi, the district court found errors in the model "inputs," for example, the value used for subscriber loss rate was not calculated through a reliable method. Neither the model nor Professor Shapiro's opinion accounted for the effect of the irrevocably-offered arbitration agreements, which the district court stated would have "real world effects" on negotiations and characterized "as extra icing on a cake already frosted," id. at 241 n.51, i.e. [***24], another reason the government had not met its first-level burden of proof.

The district court therefore concluded that the government failed to present persuasive evidence that Turner Broadcasting's bargaining leverage would "materially increase" as a result of the merger, id. at 204, or that the merger would lead to "any raised costs" for rival distributors or consumers, id. at 241 (emphasis in original). It therefore did not address the balancing analysis offered by Professor Shapiro's quantitative model, nor the question whether any increased costs would result in a substantial lessening of competition.

III.

On appeal, the government contends that the district court court (1) misapplied economic principles, (2) used internally inconsistent logic when evaluating industry evidence, and (3) clearly erred in rejecting Professor Shapiro's quantitative model. Undoubtedly the district court made some problematic statements, which the government identifies and this court cannot ignore. And in the probabilistic Section 7 world, uncertainty exists about the future real-world impact of the proposed merger on Turner Broadcasting's post-merger leverage. See Brown Shoe, 370 U.S. at 323. At this point, however, the issue is whether the district court [***25] clearly erred in finding that the government failed to clear the first hurdle in meeting its burden of showing that the proposed merger is likely to increase Turner Broadcasting's bargaining leverage.

(1) Application of economic principles. The government contends that in evaluating the evidence in support of its increased leverage theory, the district court erroneously discarded or otherwise misapplied two economic principles — the Nash bargaining [*1039] [**398] theory and corporate-wide profit maximization.

(a) Nash bargaining theory. The Nash bargaining theory is used to analyze two-party bargaining situations, specifically where both parties are ultimately better off by reaching an agreement. John F. Nash, Jr., The Bargaining Problem, 18 Econometrica 155 (1950). The theory posits that an important factor affecting the ultimate agreement is each party's relative loss in the event the parties fail to agree: when a party would have a greater loss from failing to reach an agreement, the other party has increased bargaining leverage. Tr. 2193-94 (Shapiro, April 11, 2018). In other words, the relative loss for each party affects bargaining leverage and when a party has more bargaining leverage, that [***26] party is more likely to achieve a favorable price in the negotiation.

The district court had to determine whether the economic theory applied to the particular market by considering evidence about the "structure, history, and probable future" of the video programming and distribution industry. United States v. General Dynamics, 415 U.S. 486, 498, 94 S. Ct. 1186, 39 L. Ed. 2d 530 (1974) (internal quotation marks omitted); see also Brown Shoe, 370 U.S. at 321-22 & n.38. As one circuit has put it, "[t]he Nash theorem arrives at a result that follows from a certain set of premises," while the theory "asserts nothing about what situations in the real world fit those premises." VirnetX, Inc., v. Cisco Sys. Inc., 767 F.3d 1308, 1332 (Fed. Cir. 2014). The district court concluded that the government presented insufficient real-world evidence to support the prediction under the Nash bargaining theory of a material increase of Turner Broadcasting's post-merger bargaining leverage in affiliate negotiations by reason of less-costly long-term blackouts. The government's real-world evidence consisted of statements by AT&T Inc. and DirecTV in FCC regulatory filings that vertical integration, such as in the proposed Comcast-NBCU merger, can give distributors an incentive to charge higher affiliate fees and expert opinion and a quantitative model prepared by Professor Shapiro. The expert opinion [***27] and model were subject to deficiencies identified by AT&T's experts, some of which Professor Shapiro conceded. By contrast, AT&T's expert's econometric analysis of real-world data showed that content pricing in prior vertical mergers in the industry had not increased as the Nash bargaining theory and the model predicted. Given evidence the industry was now "remarkably dynamic," the district court credited CEO testimony about the null effect of vertical integration on affiliate negotiations. AT&T, 310 F. Supp. 3d at 194.

In other words, the record shows that the district court accepted the Nash bargaining theory as an economic principle generally but rejected its specific prediction in light of the evidence that the district court credited. The district court explained that its conclusion does not turn on defendants' protestations that the theory is 'preposterous,' 'ridiculous,' or 'absurd.' . . . [but] instead on [its] evaluation of the shortcomings in the proffered third-party competitor testimony, . . . the testimony about the complex nature of these negotiations and the low likelihood of a long-term Turner [Broadcasting] blackout, . . . and the fact that real-world pricing data and experiences of individuals [***28] who have negotiated on behalf of vertically integrated entities all fail to support the [g]overnment's increased-leverage theory.

Id. at 207 (internal citations omitted).

More concerning is the government's contention that the district court misapplied the Nash bargaining theory in a manner that negated its acceptance of the economics of bargaining by erroneously [\[\*1040\]](#) [\[\*\*399\]](#) focusing on whether long-term blackouts would actually occur after the merger, rather than on the changes in stakes of such a blackout for Turner Broadcasting. The government points to the district court's statements that Professor Shapiro's testimony was undermined by evidence that "a blackout would be infeasible." AT&T, 310 F. Supp. 3d at 223. The district court also stated that "there has never been, and is likely never going to be, an actual long-term blackout of Turner [Broadcasting] content." Id. The district court noted that "Turner [Broadcasting] would not be willing to accept the 'catastrophic' affiliate fee and advertising losses associated with a long-term blackout." Id. at 223-24 n.35 (emphasis in original).

The question posed by the Nash bargaining theory is whether Turner Broadcasting would be more favorably positioned after the merger to assert its leverage in affiliate [\[\*\*\*29\]](#) negotiations whereby the cost of its content would increase. Considered in isolation, the district court's statements could be viewed as addressing the wrong question. Considered as part of the district court's analysis of whether the stakes for Turner Broadcasting would change and if so by how much, the statements address whether the threat of long-term blackouts would be credible, as posited by the government's increased leverage theory. The district court found that after the merger the stakes for Turner Broadcasting would change only slightly, so its threat of a long-term blackout "will only be somewhat less incredible." Id. at 224 (quoting Professor Shapiro); see generally Brown Shoe, 370 U.S. at 328-29. Recognizing Professor Shapiro applied the Nash bargaining theory in opining that "if a party's alternative to striking a deal improves, that party is more willing and able to push harder for a better deal because it faces less downside risk if the deal implodes," AT&T, 310 F. Supp. 3d at 223 n.35, the district court rejected the assumption underlying the government's theory that Turner Broadcasting would gain increased leverage from this slight change in stakes. It relied on testimony that the small change in bargaining position from a less costly [\[\*\*\*30\]](#) blackout would not cause Turner Broadcasting to take more risks, specifically noting the Time Warner CEO's analogy of the cost difference between having a 1,000-pound weight fall on Turner Broadcasting and a 950-pound weight fall on it — the difference being unlikely to change the risk Turner Broadcasting would be willing to take. Id. at 224 n.36 (Jeff Bewkes, Time Warner CEO, Tr. 3121 (April 18, 2018)).

The district court's statements identified by the government, then, do not indicate that the district court misunderstood or misapplied the Nash bargaining theory but rather, upon considering whether in the context of a dynamic market where a similar merger had not resulted in a "statistically significant increase in content costs," the district court concluded that the theory inaccurately predicted the post-merger increase in content costs during affiliate negotiations.

Of course, it was not enough for the government merely to prove that after the merger the costs of a long-term blackout would change for Turner Broadcasting. Its theory is that Turner Broadcasting's bargaining leverage would increase sufficiently to enable it to charge higher prices for its content. The district court's focus on the [\[\*\*\*31\]](#) slight change in the cost of a long-term blackout in finding Turner Broadcasting's bargaining leverage would not meaningfully change aligns with determining whether the government's evidence established that a change in the post-merger stakes for Turner Broadcasting would likely allow it to extract higher prices during affiliate negotiations. The district court reasoned that because long-term blackouts are very [*1041] [**400] costly and would therefore be infeasible for Turner Broadcasting even after the merger, there was insufficient evidence that "a post-merger Turner [Broadcasting] would, or even could, drive up prices by threatening distributors with long-term blackouts." Id. at 223 (emphasis in original). In finding the government failed to "prov[e] that Turner [Broadcasting]'s post-merger negotiating position would materially increase based on its ownership by AT&T," id. at 204, the district court reached a fact-specific conclusion based on real-world evidence that, contrary to the Nash bargaining theory and government expert opinion on increased content costs, the post-merger cost of a long-term blackout would not sufficiently change to enable Turner Broadcasting to secure higher affiliate fees. Witnesses such [***32] as a Turner Broadcasting president Coleman Brelan, AT&T executive John Stankey, and Time Warner CEO Jeff Bewkes, whom the district court credited, testified that after the merger blackouts would remain too costly to risk and that any change in that cost would not affect negotiations as the government's theory predicted.

Not to be overlooked, the district court also credited the efficacy of Turner Broadcasting's "irrevocable" offer of arbitration agreements with a no-blackout guarantee. It characterized the no-blackout agreements as "extra icing on a cake already frosted." AT&T, 310 F. Supp. 3d at 241 n.51. In crediting Professor Carlton's econometric analysis, the district court explained that it was appropriate to consider the analysis of the Comcast-NBCU merger because the Comcast-NBCU merger was similar to the proposed merger — a vertical merger in the video programming and distribution industry. There the government had recognized, "'especially in vertical mergers, that conduct remedies,' such as the ones proposed [in the Comcast case], 'can be a very useful tool to address the competitive problems while preserving competition and allowing efficiencies' that 'may result from the transaction.'" AT&T, 310 F. Supp. 3d at 169 n.3 (quoting Hr'g Tr. [***33] 15:16-21 (July 27, 2011), Comcast, 808 F. Supp. 2d 145). Like there, the district court concluded the Turner arbitration agreements would have "real-world effect." Id. at 217-18 n.30.

The post-merger arbitration agreements would prevent the blackout of Turner Broadcasting content while arbitration is pending. AT&T, 310 F. Supp. 3d at 217. As mentioned, Turner Broadcasting "irrevocably offer[ed]" approximately 1,000 distributors agreements to engage in baseball style arbitration in the event the parties fail to reach a renewal agreement, and the offered agreement guarantees no blackout of Turner Broadcasting content once arbitration is invoked. AT&T's counsel represented the no-blackout commitment is "legally enforceable," Oral Arg. Tr. 53:7-8, and AT&T "will honor" the arbitration agreement offers, Oral Arg. Tr. 55:2, 61:22-25, 62:1-10. Consequently, the government's challenges to the district court's treatment of its economic theories becomes largely irrelevant, at least during the seven-year period. Counsel for Amici Curiae 27 Antitrust Scholars explained that arbitration agreements make the Nash bargaining model premised on two-party negotiations "substantially more complicated," Oral Arg. Tr. 50:10, and Professor Shapiro acknowledged that taking the arbitration [***34] agreements into account would require "a completely different model." Tr. 2325 (April 11, 2018).

Further, the government's contention that the district court failed to properly weigh the probative force of the defendants' statements in FCC filings is unavailing. During licensing and rulemaking proceedings before the FCC, DirecTV stated "a standard economic model" (i.e., the Nash bargaining theory) predicts that [*1042] [**401] the proposed Comcast-NBCU merger "would significantly increase the prices other MVPDs pay for NBCU programming," and two years later stated, similar to AT&T Inc. comments, that "vertically integrated MVPDs have an incentive to charge higher license fees for programming that is particularly effective in gaining MVPD subscribers than do non-vertically integrated MVPDs."<sup>1</sup> The district court took judicial notice of these statements pursuant to Federal Rule of Evidence 201, explaining it was "hesitant" to assign significant evidentiary value to the prior regulatory filings because AT&T and DirecTV made the statements acting as competitors whose positions would be affected by FCC review. AT&T, 310 F. Supp. 3d at 206. FCC rules require all regulated parties — whether applicants seeking to transfer licenses in connection with a proposed merger [***35] or competitors who oppose the merger — to provide only "[t]ruthful and accurate statements to the Commission" in adjudicatory proceedings. 47 C.F.R. § 1.17; see FCC Amicus Curiae Br. 3. The statements were admissible as party admissions pursuant to Federal Rule of Evidence 801\(d\)\(2\), see Talavera v. Shah, 638 F.3d 303, 309, 395 U.S. App. D.C. 7 \(D.C. Cir. 2011\), yet even as admissions, the district court had to evaluate their persuasive force in the circumstances before it, and the district court did. See VirnetX, 767 F.3d at 1332; cf. General Dynamics, 415 U.S. at 498; Owens v. Republic of Sudan, 864 F.3d 751, 790, 431 U.S. App. D.C. 163 \(D.C. Cir. 2017\).

The district court accepted the FCC statements as probative of the proposition that the Nash bargaining theory could apply in the context of affiliate fee negotiations. But it concluded generic statements that vertical integration "can" allow an entity to gain an unfair advantage over rivals were "informed by the state of the market at the time . . . and the particular inputs to the models presented to the FCC." AT&T, 310 F. Supp. 3d at 206. As such the FCC [***36] statements were "not particularly probative of whether [the proposed merger] could do the same with its programming in today's more competitive marketplace," with the rising presence of virtual MVPDs and SVODs, like Netflix and Hulu. Id. at 206-07; see also id. at 173. The district court also noted that many of the statements in the FCC regulatory filings related to whether a vertically integrated programmer would withhold content, which Professor Shapiro opined would not occur here because it would be profitable for the merged firm to continue to license Turner programming. Id. at 206; see also id. at 201; Tr. 2218, 2293. Once the district court credited AT&T's expert's opinion based on an econometric analysis that the similar Comcast-NBCU merger had not had a "statistically significant effect on content costs," id. at 218, the district court could understand that the defendants' admissions at the time of the Comcast-NBCU merger offered little probative support for the government's increased leverage theory.

Thus, even viewing the statements to the FCC as supportive of the government, the district court's finding of the efficacy of Turner Broadcasting's irrevocable offers of no-blackout arbitration agreements means [*1043] [**402] the merger is unlikely [***37] to afford Turner Broadcasting increased bargaining leverage.

(b) Corporate-wide profit maximization. Still, the government maintains that the reliance on past negotiation experience indicates that the district court misunderstood, and failed to apply, the principle of corporate-wide profit maximization by treating the principle as a question of fact, when "[t]he assumption of profit maximization is 'crucial' in predicting business behavior." Appellant Br. 50 (citation omitted). This principle posits that a business with multiple divisions will seek to maximize its total profits. It was adopted as a principle of antitrust law in Copperweld Corp. v. Independence Tube Corp., 467 U.S. 752, 771, 104 S. Ct. 2731, 81 L. Ed. 2d 628 \(1984\), holding that a parent and a wholly-owned subsidiary are not capable of conspiracy against each other under Section 1 of the Sherman Antitrust Act. Companies with multiple divisions must be viewed as a single actor, and each division will act to pursue the common interests of the whole corporation. See id. at 770.

The district court never cited Copperweld in its opinion, which is troubling given the government's competitive harm theories and expert evidence based on economic principles. But the government's position that the district court never accepted this economic principle [***38] overlooks that it did "accept Professor Shapiro's (and the Government's) argument that generally, 'a firm with multiple divisions will act to maximize profits across them.'" AT&T, 310 F. Supp. 3d at 222 (citations omitted). And it ignores that if the merged firm was unable to exert the leverage required by the government's increased leverage theory, then inquiring (as the district court did of Professor Shapiro) about an independent basis to conclude that the firm did have such leverage is not a rejection of the corporate-wide profit maximization principle.

The government maintains that the district court's misapplication of the principle of corporate-wide profit maximization is evident from its statement the evidence suggests "vertically integrated corporations have previously determined that the best way to increase company wide profits is for the programming and distribution components to separately maximize their respective revenues." Id. at 222-23. Stating that the programming and distribution divisions would "separately maximize their respective revenues" is contrary to the maximization principle to the extent separate units would act against the merged entity's common interest. See Copperweld, 467 U.S. at 770. At this point in its opinion, however, [***39] the district court was explaining why "that profit-maximization principle is not inconsistent with testimony that the identity of a programmer's owner has not affected affiliate negotiations in real-world instances of vertical integration." Id. at 222. The district court can be viewed as conveying its understanding that Turner Broadcasting's interest in spreading its content among distributors, not imposing long-term blackouts, would redound to the merged firm's financial benefit, not that Turner Broadcasting would act in a manner contrary to the merged firm's financial benefit. Industry executives testified that "the identity of a programmer's owner has not affected affiliate negotiations in real-world instances of vertical integration," AT&T, 310 F. Supp. 3d at 222. For instance, the Chair of Content Distribution at NBC Universal testified that at Comcast-NBCU, he "never once took into account the interest of Comcast cable in trying to negotiate a carriage agreement" for NBC Universal. Tr. 2014 (Madison Bond, NBC Universal, Chairman of Content Distribution (April 10, 2018)); see also Tr. 1129 (Coleman Breland, Turner [*1044] [**403] Broadcasting President (April 2, 2018)).

To the extent the government maintains this testimony is irreconcilable [***40] with the legal principle of corporate-wide profit maximization, it gives no credence to the district court's focus on "the best way to increase company wide profits," referring to the merged firm. AT&T, 310 F. Supp. 3d at 222. In other words, the district court was explaining that real-world evidence reflected the profit-maximization principle. Even if the district court could have made clearer that it understood the principle was not a question of fact, the government does not explain how considering how that is done in a particular industry is contrary to the principle of corporate-wide profit maximization.

Nor is the conclusion that the merged firm would not be able to maximize its profits by raising prices during negotiations inconsistent with the principle of corporate-wide profit maximization. Based on the record evidence, the district court could plausibly understand that the proposed merger would not enable the merged entity to exert increased bargaining leverage by means of long-term blackouts and, therefore, would not affect affiliate fee negotiations to raise content costs. See Anderson, 470 U.S. at 575, 577. Finding the distributor division's interest would not affect Turner Broadcasting's negotiations with other distributors is [***41] consistent with the evidence that when a programmer and distributor merge, it is still in the best interests of the merged entity as a profit maximizer to license programming broadly to other distributors. Tr. 1129 (Breland (April 2, 2018)). That is, instead of withholding content in an attempt to benefit the merged entity, programmers will seek to license their content to other distributors. In this instance, the district court concluded the principle and the real world "fit." Moreover, AT&T's view that the government's claims of fundamental economic errors are ultimately irrelevant in light of Turner Broadcasting's irrevocable arbitration/no blackout commitment is not implausible.

Similarly, contrary to the government's position, the district court's findings about post-merger negotiating are not internally inconsistent with its finding on the cost savings of the merger. The district court found, and the government agreed, that the merger would result in cost savings as a result of EDM. Pre-merger, both Turner Broadcasting and AT&T earned margins over cost before their products reached consumers: Turner Broadcasting earned a profit margin when it licensed content to AT&T, and AT&T [***42] earned a profit margin when it sold content to consumers. Post-merger, Turner Broadcasting would not earn a profit margin when licensing content to AT&T because the merged entity would eliminate that cost and, according to Professor Shapiro, pass on some of those cost savings to consumers in order to attract additional subscribers. For there to be EDM savings, Professor Shapiro opined, the merged firm must act on its unified interest across divisions. Thus, Turner Broadcasting, instead of maximizing its own revenue, would license its programming to AT&T for a lower price. The government did not contest AT&T's position that a merged entity can maximize its own profits by eliminating cost even if it has no ability to secure higher prices from other companies during negotiations. At most, the government challenged the sufficiency of the evidence for finding the merged entity would not be able to increase prices for Turner Broadcasting content. Reply Br. 13-14. But there is record evidence to support finding that AT&T would be able to eliminate its own costs without gaining the ability to raise Turner Broadcasting content prices.

[*1045] [**404] (2) Inconsistent reasoning in evaluating trial testimony [***43]. The government further maintains that the district court used internally inconsistent reasoning when evaluating testimony from witnesses in the industry.

At trial, third-party distributors and executives from Comcast-NBCU and Time Warner testified about negotiations in the video programming and distribution industry. Third-party distributors testified about their concerns, and their reasons, that Turner Broadcasting would gain increased bargaining leverage as a result of the proposed merger. Comcast-NBCU and Time Warner executives testified that the interests of an affiliated distributor did not affect negotiations in their prior experiences negotiating on behalf of vertically integrated companies. The district court concluded that the third-party distributor testimony "fail[ed] to provide meaningful, reliable support for the [g]overnment's increased leverage theory," AT&T, 310 F. Supp. 3d at 211, while the executives' testimony "undermine[d] the persuasiveness of the [g]overnment's proof," id. at 219. The district court declined to credit the third-party distributors' testimony because "there is a threat that [third-party distributor] testimony reflects self-interest," id. at 211, yet dismissed the suggestion that testimony from \*\*\*44 the Time Warner executives should be discounted as potentially biased due to self-interest, id. at 219.

The government contends this reasoning was inconsistent because self-interest existed on both sides of the issue of whether the proposed merger would have anticompetitive effects. Even so, the potential for self-interest was not the only reason the district court found third-party distributor testimony of little probative value. Much of the third-party competitor testimony, the district court found, "consisted of speculative concerns," id. at 212, and did not contain any analysis or factual basis to support key assumptions, such as how Turner Broadcasting's bargaining leverage would change and how many subscribers distributors would lose in a blackout. By contrast, the Time Warner executives' testimony did "not involve promises or speculations about the employees' future, post-merger behavior" and instead recounted "what these executives previously experienced when working within a vertically integrated company." Id. at 219. Their testimony was uniform among all testifying witnesses and corroborated by that of a Comcast-NBCU executive — a competitor of AT&T. To the extent the government also maintains the district \*\*\*45 court improperly discounted the third-party distributor testimony because it contradicted Professor Shapiro's opinion that Turner Broadcasting would not actually withhold content from other distributors, any error in that regard does not demonstrate the district court clearly erred in discounting their testimony for the independent reasons that it rested on speculative, future predictions and lacked adequate factual support.

(3) Rejection of Professor Shapiro's quantitative model. Finally, the government contends that the district court clearly erred in rejecting Professor Shapiro's quantitative bargaining model. Specifically, that the district court erred in finding insufficient evidence to support Professor Shapiro's calculations of fee increases for rival distributors and in finding no proof of any price increase to consumers.

Preliminarily, HN4↑ the court does not hold that quantitative evidence of price increase is required in order to prevail on a Section 7 challenge. Vertical mergers can create harms beyond higher prices for consumers, including decreased product quality and reduced innovation. See Amicus Curiae Open Markets Institute Br. 4-12. Indeed, the Supreme Court upheld the Federal Trade \*\*\*46 Commission's Section 7 [\[\*1046\]](#) [\[\*\*405\]](#) challenge to Ford Motor Company's proposed vertical merger with a major spark plug manufacturer without quantitative evidence about price increases. Ford Motor Co. v. United States, 405 U.S. 562, 567-69, 578, 92 S. Ct. 1142, 31 L. Ed. 2d 492 \(1972\). Here, however, the government did not present its challenge to the AT&T-Time Warner merger in terms of creating non-price related harms in the video programming and distribution industry, and we turn to the government's challenges to the district court's handling of the quantitative evidence regarding the proposed merger's predicted effect on consumer price.

Professor Shapiro presented a quantitative model that predicted an annual net increase of $286 million being passed on to consumers in 2016, with increasing costs in future years. This figure was based on the model's predictions of an annual fee increase of $587 million for rival distributors to license Turner Broadcasting content and cost savings of $352 million for AT&T. The district court accepted Professor Shapiro's testimony about the $352 million cost savings from the merger. But it found that insufficient evidence supported the inputs and assumptions used to estimate the annual costs increases for rival distributors, crediting criticisms by Professor Carlton and \*\*\*47 Professor Rossi. Indeed, the district court found that the quantitative model as presented through Professor Shapiro's opinion testimony did not provide an adequate basis to conclude that the merger will lead to "any" raised costs for distributors or consumers, "much less consumer harms that outweigh the conceded $350 million in annual cost savings to AT&T's customers." AT&T, 310 F. Supp. 3d at 241 (emphasis in original).

Whatever errors the district court may have made in evaluating the inputs for Professor Shapiro's quantitative model, the model did not take into account long-term contracts, which would constrain Turner Broadcasting's ability to raise content prices for distributors. The district court found that the real-world effects of Turner Broadcasting's existing contracts would be "significant" until 2021 and that it would be difficult to predict price increases farther into the future, particularly given that the industry is continually changing and experiencing increasing competition. This failure, the district court found, resulted in overestimation of how quickly the harms would occur. Professor Shapiro acknowledged that predictions farther into the future, after the long-term contracts expire, are [***48] more difficult. Tr. 2317 (April 11, 2018). Neither Professor Shapiro's opinion testimony nor his quantitative model considered the effect of the post-litigation offer of arbitration agreements, something he acknowledged would require a new model. And the video programming and distribution industry had experienced "ever-increasing competitiveness" in recent years. AT&T, 310 F. Supp. 3d at 241. Taken together, the government's clear-error contention therefore fails.

It is true that the district court misstated that the government had not proven that any price increases would "outweigh the conceded $350 million in annual cost saving to AT&T's customers." Id. Professor Shapiro testified that the merger would result in $352 million cost savings to AT&T and that not all those savings would be passed on to consumers. The $352 million, therefore, was not cost savings to consumers but to AT&T. But the district court did not weigh increased prices for consumers against cost savings for consumers, and instead found that the government had not shown at the first level that the merger was likely to lead to any price increases for consumers because of the failure to show that costs for rival MVPDs would increase as a result [***49] of Turner Broadcasting's increased leverage in affiliate [*1047] [**406] negotiations after the merger. Counsel for the government and AT&T agree the error regarding the consumer savings value alone would not require remand because the district court's opinion was not based on balancing any price increases against cost savings to consumers. Oral Arg. Tr. 36-37, 57:1-13. Consequently, because the government failed to meet its burden of proof under its increased leverage theory at the first level, the error regarding cost savings was harmless error, see Czekalski v. LaHood, 589 F.3d 449, 453, 389 U.S. App. D.C. 17 \(D.C. Cir. 2009\); Fed. R. Civ. P. 61.

Accordingly, because the district court did not abuse its discretion in denying injunctive relief, see Anthem, 855 F.3d at 352-53, we affirm the district court's order denying a permanent injunction of the merger.

OPINION AND ORDER

MCSHANE, Judge:

As observed by the First Circuit over a decade ago, "[s]ome antitrust cases are intrinsically hopeless because . . . they merely dress up in antitrust garb what is, at best, a business tort or contract violation." Stop & Shop Supermarket Co. v. Blue Cross & Blue Shield of R.I., 373 F.3d 57, 69 \(2004\). The same can be said of allegations based on the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act 18 U.S.C. § 1962 et seq ("RICO"). [*2] Here, in the course of alleging that his deed of trust did not allow certain third-party default-related service fees, plaintiff Melvin Neagle dresses up his complaint in both antitrust and RICO garb. While Neagle's complaint is long on pages and conclusory allegations, it is short on specific factual detail as to how these defendants violated antitrust or RICO laws while servicing Neagle's loan. Although he relies heavily on a Consent Order agreed to between his loan servicer and New York state regulators, none of the acts described in that case involve acts Neagle alleges the servicer did here. Because Neagle fails to state an antitrust, RICO, or financial elder abuse claim, defendants' motions to dismiss are granted.

BACKGROUND<sup>1</sup>

Neagle purchases foreclosed homes at auction and rents them or sells them later for a profit. The Ocwen defendants engage in mortgage loan servicing. Ocwen Loan Servicing, LLC is a wholly owned subsidiary of Ocwen Mortgaging Servicing, Inc., which in turn is a wholly owned subsidiary of Ocwen Financial Corporation. "Founded in 1988 by William C. Erbey, Ocwen quickly became the largest non-bank loan servicer in the United States, and the fourth-largest servicer [*3] of mortgages generally." Second Am. Compl. (SAC) ¶ 14. "As a non-bank mortgage loan servicer, Ocwen is responsible for the collection and remittance of principal and interest payments, the administration of escrow accounts, the collection of insurance claims, the management of loans that are in default, and foreclosures." SAC ¶ 19.

In 2009, defendant Altisource Solutions, Inc. "was spun off from Ocwen and became a completely independent company. Altisource is now the exclusive entity that provides Ocwen with third-party services relating to Ocwen's practices in the nonbank mortgage loan servicing market pursuant to a series of exclusive dealing arrangements, with a specific focus on subprime loans."<sup>2</sup> SAC ¶ 15. Defendant MTQLP Investors, L.P. "primarily performs mortgage liquidation[.]" SAC ¶ 16.

Neagle sets out the history of loans and the loan servicing industry, including in the aftermath of the housing market crash. Traditionally, banks serviced loans themselves and had a financial interest in the repayment of the loan. After the crash, servicing loans became unprofitable for banks. "Today, banks are reluctant to enter the market as a competitor of Ocwen, which has allowed Ocwen to [*4] dominate as a non-bank mortgage loan servicer that specializes in subprime loans." SAC ¶ 22. Nonbank servicers like Ocwen have "a cost advantage relative to bank servicers in handling nonperforming loans. That cost advantage stemmed from both their specialization in this type of servicing and from their ability to harness technological innovations in order to reduce costs." SAC ¶ 22.

Ocwen is paid in contractual monthly servicing fees by the owner of the loan, often under a pooling and servicing agreement (PSA) with investors or noteholders. "Ocwen and other loan servicers assess fees on borrowers' accounts for services provided by third-parties, or for Ocwen's servicing itself. The fees and costs include, among other things, broker's price opinion ("BPO") fees, appraisal fees, title search fees, various 'technology' fees, late fees, escrow fees, and other ancillary fees." SAC ¶ 24. While a bank who services its own loans is concerned with interest profit, "Ocwen's primary concern as a loan servicer is to generate as much revenue as possible from fees and costs assessed against the mortgage accounts that it services." SAC ¶ 25.

After the housing market crash, Ocwen rapidly grew its business, [*5] going from $360 million in revenues in 2010 to $2.2 billion in revenues in 2014. SAC ¶ 27. Much of Ocwen's growth came from "massive acquisitions:"

Due to the massive amounts of acquisitions by Ocwen, coupled with the reluctance of financial institutions to enter the servicing market as a competitor, Ocwen rapidly expanded as a nonbank loan servicer that specialized in subprime loans. But the end of 2014, Ocwen serviced over 50% of all subprime mortgage loans in the nation.

SAC ¶ 29 (internal citation omitted).

"Ocwen developed technology services to reduce the cost of servicing loans, including software programs designed to manage homeowners' loan accounts and assess fees pursuant to protocols and policies designed by the executives at Ocwen." SAC ¶ 30. "In August of 2009, Ocwen spun-off its technology platforms business into a separate company, Altisource." SAC ¶ 31. Ocwen's Chairman of the Board, who owned 13% of Ocwen's stock, took the same position at Altisource. "Other key executives shared positions with Altisource as well." SAC ¶ 31.

"Ocwen contracted with Altisource to purchase mortgage and technology services under service agreements that extend through 2025. Ocwen quickly became [*6] Altisource's largest customer, accounting for over 80% of Altisource's total revenue in 2014." SAC ¶ 32. "Altisource's revenues more than tripled between 2010 and 2014." SAC ¶ 52.

The close relationship between Ocwen and Altisource (and other "closely affiliated" companies) led to an investigation by the New York Department of Financial Services." See SAC ¶ 34 (quoting letter from regulators stating an "ongoing review of Ocwen's mortgage servicing practices has uncovered a number of potential conflicts of interest between Ocwen and other public companies with which Ocwen is closely affiliated."). Regulators questioned whether Ocwen had an "arms-length business relationship" with the affiliated companies and were "concerned that this tangled web of conflicts could create incentives that harm borrowers and push homeowners unduly into foreclosure." SAC ¶ 34. Quoting the regulators, Neagle alleges the servicing industry "presents the extraordinary circumstance where there is effectively no customer to select a vendor for ancillary services" and "Ocwen's use of related companies to provide such services raises concerns about whether such transactions are priced fairly and conducted at arms-length." [*7] SAC ¶ 37.

At some point, Ocwen began serving Neagle's loan. "As a loan servicer, Ocwen's interactions with a borrower are governed by a mortgage contract." SAC ¶ 39. These contracts consist of the note and deed of trust and, at least with loans serviced by Ocwen, are generally identical as they follow the Fannie Mae template.

Neagle's deed of trust provides that in the event of a default, the lender will "pay for whatever is reasonable or appropriate to protect Lender's interest in the Property and rights under this Security Instrument, including protecting and/or assessing the value of the Property, and securing and/or repairing the Property." Deed of Trust ¶ 9; ECF No. 57-1.<sup>3</sup> "Any amounts disbursed by Lender under this Section 9 shall become additional debt of Borrower[.]" Deed of Trust ¶ 9. Neagle alleges that nothing in the deed of trust discloses "that the loan servicer or lender will engage in self-dealing or will mark-up the actual cost of those third party services to make a profit from the borrower's delinquency." SAC ¶ 42. This undisclosed mark-up is the focus of Neagle's claims:

Pursuant to the conspiracy, Ocwen directs Altisource to order and coordinate default-related services, and [*8] Altisource places orders for such services with third-party vendors. The third-party vendors charge Altisource for the performance of the default related services, who then marks up the price, in numerous instances by 100% or more, and passes it along to Ocwen. Thereafter, Ocwen willfully accepts the inflated charge from Altisource, and bills the marked-up fees and costs to the borrower, increasing the balance owed.

SAC ¶ 45.

The inflated fees drive borrowers further into default. "In the present case, Plaintiff had incurred well over $14,000.00 in debt as a result of artificially inflated fees and costs." SAC ¶ 70. At some point, Neagle defaulted on his loan. In April 2012, OneWest Bank FSB filed a foreclosure action against Neagle. SAC ¶ 80. On June 13, 2013, Ocwen purchased the mortgage servicing rights to Neagle's loan as part of a deal to purchase servicing rights on $78 billion in unpaid principal loans. SAC ¶ 81. In October 2013, OneWest Bank FSB assigned the beneficial interest in Neagle's deed of trust to Ocwen, who moved to substitute itself into the foreclosure action. On March 3, 2016, Ocwen assigned its rights to MTQLQ. SAC ¶ 94.<sup>4</sup>

STANDARDS

To survive a motion to dismiss under [*9] Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(6\), a complaint must contain sufficient factual matter that "state[s] a claim to relief that is plausible on its face." Bell Atlantic Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 570, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 \(2007\). A claim is plausible on its face when the factual allegations allow the court to infer the defendant's liability based on the alleged conduct. Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 663, 129 S. Ct. 1937, 173 L. Ed. 2d 868 \(2009\). The factual allegations must present more than "the mere possibility of misconduct." Id. at 678.

While considering a motion to dismiss, the court must accept all allegations of material fact as true and construe those facts in the light most favorable to the non-movant. Burget v. Lokelani Bernice Pauahi Bishop Trust, 200 F.3d 661, 663 \(9th Cir. 2000\). But the court is "not bound to accept as true a legal conclusion couched as a factual allegation." Twombly, 550 U.S. at 555. If the complaint is dismissed, leave to amend should be granted unless "the pleading could not possibly be cured by the allegation of other facts." Doe v. United States, 58 F.3d 494, 497 \(9th Cir. 1995\).

DISCUSSION

Neagle alleges the conspiracy to pass inflated fees to borrowers violated the Sherman Act, RICO, and constitutes Financial Elder Abuse under Oregon law in violation of ORS § 124.100. As discussed below, Neagle fails to state a valid claim for any of his five claims. Ocwen and MTGLQ also argue dismissal is appropriate because Neagle failed to comply with the notice and cure provision of his deed of trust before filing this [*10] action. I agree and begin with that argument.

1. NOTICE AND CURE PROVISION

Neagle's deed of trust states, "The covenants and agreements of this Security Instrument shall bind (except as provided in Section 20) and benefit the successors and assigns of Lender." ¶ 13. Ocwen and MTGLQ are assigns of the lender. See SAC ¶¶ 78, 79, 82, 94 (alleging the original lender assigned the deed to OneWest Bank, FSB, who assigned the deed to Ocwen, who assigned the deed to MTGLQ). Section 20 of Neagle's deed of trust provides:

Neither Borrower nor Lender may commence, join, or be joined to any judicial action (as either an individual litigant or the member of a class) that arises from the other party's actions pursuant to this Security Instrument or that alleges that the other party has breached any provision of, or any duty owed by reason of, this Security Instrument, until such Borrower or Lender has notified the other party (with such notice given in compliance with the requirements of Section 15) of such alleged breach and afforded the other party hereto a reasonable period after the giving of such notice to take corrective action.

<sup>4</sup> Neagle includes a history of the foreclosure proceedings, with multiple reinstatements of the action followed by later orders vacating the earlier orders. Neagle alleges MTQLQ intentionally violated the automatic stay after Neagle filed for bankruptcy and then instructed the sheriff to sell Neagle's property after the foreclosure was dismissed. SAC ¶¶ 87-97. But those actions are not part of the alleged conspiracy, and the parties agree that Neagle still owns the property. At this stage, these allegations are not particularly relevant to Nagle's claims alleging defendants conspired to violate antitrust and RICO laws by inflating the fees charged to Nagle for default related services. As discussed below, these allegations are only relevant to Neagle's financial elder abuse claim.

Neagle did not allege that he provided Ocwen or MTGLQ with notice and opportunity to cure but argues [*11] the provision does not apply because: (1) neither Ocwen nor MTQLQ is the "Lender;" (2) his claims are statutory, not contractual; and (3) notice here would be futile.

The Ninth Circuit considered, and rejected, the same arguments Neagle raises when affirming the dismissal, on notice and cure grounds, of a borrower's Fair Debt Collections Practices Act (FDCPA) claim against a loan servicer (also Ocwen).<sup>5</sup> Giotta v. Ocwen Loan Serv., LLC, 706 Fed. Appx. 421, 422-23 (2017) (unpublished). Though I am not bound by the unpublished Giotta opinion, I am not prevented from being persuaded by its logic. Giotta is directly on point and its reasoning is as sound as it is concise.

The borrowers there challenged the district court's dismissal of their FDCPA claim for failing to provide their loan servicer with notice and the opportunity to cure. Although the district court in Giotta relied on a written loan modification, the Ninth Circuit looked to the deed of trust. The notice provision there is identical to the notice provision here. In its brief discussion that applies equally well here, the Ninth Circuit explained:

1. The Notice Provision's text covers this action. The Notice Provision clearly applies to: (1) "any judicial action . . . that arises from the other [*12] party's actions pursuant to this Security Instrument;" or (2) "any judicial action . . . that alleges that the other party has breached any provision of, or any duty owed by reason of, this Security Instrument." The Giottas were in default on their mortgage. Therefore, the Deed of Trust authorized property inspections and valuations to protect the Lender's interest in the property and to pass the fees for those services on to the borrower: "Lender may charge Borrower fees for services performed in connection with Borrower's default, for the purpose of protecting Lender's interest in the Property and rights under this Security Instrument, including, but not limited to, attorneys' fees, property inspection and valuation fees." In this case, the Giottas allege that Ocwen violated the FDCPA when it billed the Giottas for those fees without disclosing the profit structure of the third-party entity that conducted the services. Accordingly, the instant suit is a "judicial action . . . that arises from the other party's actions pursuant to this Security Instrument."
2. The Notice Provision requires notice to Ocwen. Per its text, the Notice Provision applies only to the "Lender." However, the [*13] Deed of Trust explicitly provides that "[t]he covenants and agreements of this Security Instrument shall bind (except as provided in Section 20) and benefit the successor and assigns of Lender." Further, it specifically notified the Giottas that the note may be sold. Although Ocwen is not the "Lender" as defined in the Deed of Trust, it is an assign. Per the record, OneWestBank assigned the servicing rights on the Giottas' mortgage to Ocwen . . . . Providing notice before filing an action is a benefit (as opposed to a binding covenant or agreement), because it gives the Lender prior notice and an opportunity to take corrective action before litigation is formally commenced. Therefore, as an assign of the Lender, the Notice Provision is a "benefit" of the "covenants and agreements" in the Deed of Trust, inuring to Ocwen.

706 Fed. Appx. at 422 (all but final alteration in original).

The reasoning in Giotta is persuasive. Neagle alleges that Ocwen and MTGLQ were (at least) assigns of the Lender. See SAC ¶¶ 78, 79, 82, 94. Neagle's claims arise from Ocwen and MTGLQ's actions pursuant to the deed of trust; i.e., servicing the loan and charging Neagle "fees for services performed in connection with [Neagle's] default . [*14] . . . including property inspection and valuation fees." Deed of Trust ¶ 14.

Neagle argues that because his claims arise from statute and not contract, the notice provision does not apply. Giotta considered, and rejected, that argument. 706 Fed. Appx. at 422-23 (concluding notice provision did not contravene the purpose of the FDCPA and "thus does not impermissibly abrogate" the statute). Although Neagle does not bring a FDCPA claim, the notice provision does not abrogate any of the claims he does bring.

<sup>5</sup> Although Giotta did not address whether notice there would be futile, Neagle's futility argument is, itself, futile. Neagle alleges defendants caused his debt to increase by over $14,000. SAC ¶ 70. Although Ocwen no longer services Neagle's loan, it could have decided to simply cut a check for that amount directly to Neagle. Alternatively, MTGLQ may have concluded reducing the amount of Neagle's debt is appropriate. Guessing what Ocwen or MTGLQ would have done had Neagle provided notice is purely speculative.

The purpose of the Sherman Act is "to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies." Miranda v. Selig, 860 F.3d 1237, 1240 (9th Cir. 2017) (quoting Sherman Act, ch. 647, 26 Stat. 209 (1890)). RICO's purpose is to prohibit racketeering activity. Reves v. Ernst & Young, 507 U.S. 170, 181-82, 113 S. Ct. 1163, 122 L. Ed. 2d 525 (1993). ORS 124.110 seeks to prevent financial abuse of a vulnerable person via a wrongful taking of money or property. Schmidt v. Noonkester, 287 Ore. App. 48, 50 n.1, 401 P.3d 266 (2017). As in Giotta, "the Notice Provision does not contravene the statute[s'] purposes and, thus does not impermissibly abrogate the [statutes]." 706 Fed. Appx. At 422-23; see also Clark v. Capital Credit & Collection Servs., Inc., 460 F.3d 1162, 1170 (9th Cir. 2006) (noting party may generally waive statutory protection if waiver does not "contravene[] the statutory policy.") (quoting New York v. Hill, 528 U.S. 110, 116, 120 S. Ct. 659, 145 L. Ed. 2d 560 (2000)).

As Neagle does not allege he provided Ocwen or MTGLQ with notice and the opportunity to cure the alleged violations, [*15] his claims against those defendants are dismissed. Because Altisource does not argue the notice provision applies to it, and because I assume Neagle could allege notice in an amended complaint, I turn to the merits of Neagle's claims.

2. ANTITRUST CLAIMS

Neagle brings antitrust claims under sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. §§ 1, 2.<sup>6</sup> Section 1 of the Sherman Act restricts unreasonable restraints on trade perpetrated by distinct entities acting in concert, whether via, "contract, combination . . . or conspiracy." See Copperweld Corp. v. Indep. Tube Corp., 467 U.S. 752, 768, 104 S. Ct. 2731, 81 L. Ed. 2d 628 (1984) (quoting 15 U.S.C. § 1).

To successfully bring a claim under section 1 of the Sherman Act, a plaintiff must prove three elements: (1) an agreement, conspiracy, or combination among two or more persons or distinct business entities; (2) which is intended to harm or unreasonably restrain competition; and (3) which actually causes injury to competition, beyond the impact on the claimant, within a field of commerce in which the claimant is engaged (i.e., "antitrust injury").

McGlinchy v. Shell Chem. Co., 845 F.2d 802, 811 (9th Cir. 1988) (internal citations omitted).

Section 2 of the Sherman Act functions as a restraint against the tendency in capitalistic economies for single firms to seek and maintain monopoly power over a specific market. See Verizon Commc'n Inc. v. Law Offices of Curtis V. Trinko, LLP, 540 U.S. 398, 407, 124 S. Ct. 872, 157 L. Ed. 2d 823 (2004). Section 2 prohibits monopolies as well as attempts or [*16] conspiracies to form monopolies. Image Tech. Services, Inc. v. Eastman Kodak Co., 125 F.3d 1195, 1202 (9th Cir. 1997); 15 U.S.C. § 2. Firms with monopoly power can set prices far above where the rational forces of supply and demand in a competitive marketplace would have them, to the detriment of both consumers and the economy as a whole. See Rebel Oil Co. v. Atl. Richfield Co., 51 F.3d 1421, 1433 (9th Cir. 1995).

The enforcement mechanisms of section 2 of the Sherman Act restricts the ability of firms to acquire monopoly power via illegal, anticompetitive actions, but are not meant to prevent a firm from acquiring an increased share of a specific market via legitimate business practices. See Verizon Commc'n Inc., 540 U.S. at 407. To state a claim under section 2, Neagle must allege the defendants "(1) possessed monopoly power in the relevant market, (2) willfully acquired or maintained that power through exclusionary conduct and (3) caused antitrust injury." MetroNet Services Corp. v. Qwest Corp., 383 F.3d 1124, 1130 (9th Cir. 2004). "Monopoly power" under section 2 is a higher standard than that of "market power" required under section 1. Image Tech. Services, Inc. 125 F.3d at 1206.

While the specific elements required under section 1 and section 2 differ, those differences are immaterial when, as here, Neagle's antitrust claims fail on a fundamental level. Under either section, Neagle "must allege both that a

'relevant market' exists and that the defendant has power within that market." *Newcal Indus., Inc. v. Ikon Office Sol., 513 F.3d 1038, 1044 \(9th Cir. 2008\)*. The relevant market consists of a product market that "must encompass [*17] the product at issue as well as all economic substitutes for the product." Id. at 1045. Dismissal is appropriate "if the complaint's 'relevant market' definition is facially unsustainable." Id.

Neagle alleges Ocwen operates in the "nonbank subprime mortgage loan servicing" market. Reply, 34; ECF No. 63. Neagle's first problem regarding the alleged relevant market is that nowhere in the complaint does he allege his mortgage is a subprime mortgage. More significantly, Neagle fails to allege facts demonstrating the "nonbank subprime mortgage loan servicing market" actually exists for antitrust purposes. While "nonbank subprime mortgage loan servicing" is certainly a product, Neagle fails to allege why obvious "economic substitutes for the product" are not included in the relevant market. Neagle alleges that banks also service mortgages. SAC ¶ 21. And while subprime mortgages must be serviced, so must prime mortgages. Both bank and nonbank prime servicers are obvious potential competitors to nonbank subprime servicers.

The complaint tacitly acknowledges this potential crossover competition. Neagle specifically alleges that Ocwen also services prime, or "conventional" mortgages. SAC ¶ 28. As of the [*18] end of 2013, prime mortgages, along with "government insured" mortgages made up the majority of Ocwen's servicing portfolio. SAC ¶ 28. "For antitrust purposes, defining the product market involves identification of the field of competition: the group or groups of sellers or producers who have actual or potential ability to deprive each other of significant levels of business." *Thurman Indus., Inc. v. Pay 'N Pak Stores, Inc., 875 F.2d 1369, 1374 \(9th Cir. 1989\)*.

Attempting to justify the proposed submarket, Neagle alleges "The market for servicing subprime mortgage loans is a market in which Ocwen specializes due to the high cost and inability of banks or prime-servicers to meet Ocwen's level of cost reduction." SAC ¶ 105. But "the scope of the relevant market is not governed by the presence of a price differential between competing products." *Twin City Sportservice, Inc. v. Charles O. Finley & Co., Inc., 512 F.2d 1264, 1274 \(9th Cir. 1975\)* (noting Supreme Court concluded the flexible wrapping market included cellophane, glassine, and grease-proof papers despite the fact that cellophane was two or three times more expensive than the others). Although Neagle alleges nonbank subprime mortgage loan servicers collect payments, administer escrow accounts, collect insurance claims, and manage loans in default and foreclosure, SAC ¶ 19, he omits obvious competitors from [*19] his proposed submarket. It seems clear those competitors, who currently compete with Ocwen in the prime market, would perform those same tasks for the right price. Neagle's proposed nonbank subprime mortgage loan servicing market is "facially unsustainable." *Newcal Indus., Inc., 513 F.3d at 1045*.

Altisource's proposed market fares no better. Neagle alleges Altisource's relevant market is the third-party default-related services market. SAC ¶ 106. Neagle expends little effort demonstrating that the default-related services market and the non-default related mortgage services market are in fact separate relevant markets. But even looking beyond that deficiency, Neagle must also allege "that the defendant has power within that market." *Newcal Indus., Inc., 513 F.3d at 1044*. Regarding Altisource's market power, Neagle alleges:

Altisource generated over 80% of all of its revenue from Ocwen. Altisource's business focuses on providing third-party services for defaulted borrowers. As such, Altisource was able to exploit Ocwen's market share of over 50% of all subprime loans in the nation so that Altisource could rapidly expand its volume in the default related services market, more than tripling its revenue by 2014, completely insulating Altisource from competition [*20] in its market and resulting in a substantial foreclosure of competitors.

SAC ¶ 106.

But alleging Altisource grew rapidly and received 80% of its revenue from Ocwen (who had a market share of over 50% in its own, separate and distinct relevant market), does little to establish Altisource had market power in the default-related services market. As noted by Altisource, "A roadside farm may advertise 'locally-grown blueberries,' and derive 100% of its revenue from the sale of such blueberries, but these facts are irrelevant to whether 'locally-grown blueberries' constitutes a distinct antitrust product market, and offers no basis to conclude that the farm stand exercises market power within that market." Reply, 5-6 n.5. Neagle's response to Altisource's market power argument is puzzling:

The SAC alleges market power as well. [SAC] ¶ 6. Altisource's market share can be aggregated with Ocwen's market share due to the SAC's allegation of a conspiracy between the two parties. See Rebel Oil Co. v. Atl. Richfield Co., 51 F.3d 1421, 1437 (9th Cir. 1995) ("The aggregation of market shares of rivals is justified if the rivals are alleged to have conspired to monopolize." The combined market share of Ocwen and Altisource is well above 50% of all defaulted borrowers serviced [*21] by nonbank mortgage loan servicers, and is sufficient "as a matter of law to support a finding of market power." See Rebel, 51 F.3d at 1438 (ARCO's market share of 44 percent is sufficient as a matter of law to support a finding of market power.").

Resp. 10-11; ECF No. 64 (emphasis added) (footnote omitted).

Rebel dealt with an alleged conspiracy to fix prices at competing Las Vegas gas stations. 51 F.3d at 1437. If Altisource and Ocwen were rivals, it would certainly apply. But although Altisource and Ocwen are alleged conspirators, they are not competitors. They are two independent companies, SAC ¶ 15, operating in two different distinct markets. Considering the SAC does not make even a cursory description of the alleged default-related services market, Neagle fails to allege Altisource has market power within it.

As Neagle fails to allege a relevant market for Ocwen and fails to allege that Altisource has market power in the default-related services market, he fails to state a claim under section 1 or 2 of the Sherman Act. Newcal Indus., Inc., 513 F.3d at 1045. Because additional deficiencies in Neagle's antitrust claims demonstrate leave to amend would be futile, I briefly touch on some of the other deficiencies in the SAC.

A rather large hurdle for Neagle is that, [*22] at least as to the impact on the nonbank subprime loan servicing market, the alleged conspiracy simply does not make sense. Neagle alleges:

Ocwen and Altisource entered into an agreement to circumvent the borrower protections in a mortgage contract in order to continue profiting in a market that would otherwise drive Ocwen out. As a nonbank loan servicer, Ocwen's main source of profit comes from fees and costs generated by third-party services, not the interest on the loan.

SAC § 43.

The first sentence is largely conclusive, essentially just adding the specific defendant names into language found in any antitrust treatise outlining a general antitrust conspiracy. At first glance, it certainly sounds impressive, especially as it alleges that absent the conspiracy, Ocwen would be driven out of the relevant market.

The second sentence details how Ocwen makes a profit: "from fees and costs generated by third-party services." But the reader then remembers that Ocwen does not mark up the alleged overcharge Altisource bills it for third party services. As Ocwen merely passes along the alleged overcharge to the borrower, the very best it can ever hope for is to be reimbursed at some later point for the [*23] overcharge it earlier paid Altisource. In other words, Ocwen merely hopes to eventually break even from this conspiracy. There is no profit "from fees and costs generated by third-party services" for Ocwen in the alleged conspiracy. Every penny of profit from this alleged conspiracy flows to Altisource, not Ocwen. Therefore, the alleged conspiracy does not allow Ocwen to "continue profiting in [the non-bank subprime mortgage servicing] market that would otherwise drive Ocwen out."<sup>7</sup>

Additionally, Neagle fails to allege Ocwen and Altisource reached an agreement or conspired to restrain trade.<sup>8</sup> Neagle points to the fact that the founder and Chairman of Ocwen is also the Chairman of Altisource and "[o]ther key executives shared positions with Altisource as well," SAC ¶ 31; the Consent Order Ocwen agreed to with New <sup>7</sup> While the alleged conspiracy would benefit Altisource in the "third party default related services" market, as described above, Neagle fails to provide any allegations as to Altisource's market power in that market.

<sup>8</sup> Neagle does not make even a half-hearted attempt at connecting MTGLQ to this conspiracy. As described below, the only specific factual allegations as to MTGLQ are that it now owns the mortgage and it filed a court document asking the Sheriff to conduct a foreclosure sale of Neagle's home.

York regulators; and a Services Agreement between Ocwen and Altisource. None, however, actually point to an agreement to unlawfully restrain trade.

Much like any contract where one company agrees to provide certain services or goods for a set time to another company, the Services Agreement sets out the price Ocwen will pay Altisource for the services Altisource provides. Neagle [*24] notes the agreement designates the services "Fixed Price Project" and argues that this is direct evidence of price fixing. But the Services Agreement is a standard contract, not evidence of an agreement to illegally restrain trade. "Literalness is overly simplistic and often overbroad. When two partners set the price of their goods or services they are literally 'price fixing,' but they are not per se in violation of the Sherman Act." Broad. Music, Inc. v. Columbia Broad. Sys., Inc., 441 U.S. 1, 9, 99 S. Ct. 1551, 60 L. Ed. 2d 1 (1979). While it clearly sets a "fixed price" for certain services, the Services Agreement also states, "The parties intend that any such fees reflect the market rate for comparable services." ¶ 4(a).

Additionally, the Services Agreement is not an unlawful exclusive dealing agreement. As shown above, Neagle provides no allegations concerning Altisource's share of the third-party default-related services market. Absent that, Neagle cannot demonstrate the Services Agreement forecloses competition in a substantial share of that market. ZF Meritor, LLC v. Eaton Corp., 696 F.3d 254, 286 (3rd Cir. 2012). Perhaps recognizing his inability to allege Altisource's market share and power in the third-party default-related services market, Neagle points to the existence of a "Services Letter," which Neagle apparently has never seen but [*25] which he argues "likely contains terms concerning market share and volume." Resp. 30; ECF No. 63. Perhaps that letter exists somewhere, and perhaps it contains information that would be helpful to Neagle now. But it is not before the court at this time, and Neagle fails to demonstrate the agreement would foreclose substantial competition in the market for third-party default-related services market.

The Consent Order likewise fails to help Neagle. That document merely shows New York regulators were concerned about conflicts of interest between Ocwen and other public companies who had the same Chairman. The Consent Order states the Chairman "participated in the approval of a number of transactions between the two companies or from which Altisource received some benefit, including the renewal of Ocwen's forced placed insurance program in early 2014." ECF No. 66-2, ¶ 21. Additionally, "In certain circumstances, [an Altisource subsidiary] has charged more for its services to Ocwen than to other customers—charges which are then passed on to borrowers and investors." ECF No. 66-2, ¶ 22. Hubzu, the subsidiary mentioned in the Consent Order, performed online auctions for Ocwen (via Altisource). [*26] The SAC does not mention Hubzu and Neagle does not allege that his home was the subject of an online auction. The Consent Order is silent as to property preservation fees, BPOs, title examination or search fees, appraisals, property inspections, or escrow account related fees. In other words, the Consent Order is silent as to any conflict of interest regarding any services Neagle alleges were charged here.<sup>9</sup>

"[T]o allege an agreement between antitrust co-conspirators, the complaint must allege facts such as a 'specific time, place, or person involved in the alleged conspiracies' to give a defendant seeking to respond to allegations of a conspiracy an idea of where to begin." Kendall v. Visa U.S.A., Inc., 518 F.3d 1042, 1047 (9th Cir. 2008). The Services Agreement to "fix prices" is the closest Neagle comes to alleging an actual agreement. But that standard business contract does not unreasonably restrain trade. See NCAA v. Bd. of Regents, 468 U.S. 85, 98, 104 S. Ct. 2948, 82 L. Ed. 2d 70 (1984) (noting that "every contract is a restraint of trade, and as we have repeatedly recognized, the Sherman Act was intended to prohibit only unreasonable restraints of trade."). This is a far cry from conspiracy cases where the plaintiffs allege not only the opportunity to collude (as Neagle does), but also support those allegations with specific [*27] factual allegations of multiple meetings between senior executives of different companies who entered express agreements to achieve a common goal in violation of antitrust laws (as Neagle does not). See In re Lithium Ion Batteries Antitrust Litig., 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 7516, 2014 WL 309192, at *3 (N.D. Cal. 2014) ("Plaintiffs allege particular meetings, particular attendees, particular times and places, and the content of particular conversations" and documents memorializing the meetings); In re High-Tech Emp. Antitrust Litig., 856

F. Supp. 2d 1103, 1118-19 \(N.D. Cal. 2012\) (complaint "details the actors, effect, victims, location and timing of the six bilateral agreements [not to poach employees from one another]," quotes one CEO discussing the alleged conspiracy with another CEO, and noted a DOJ investigation found the agreements "per se unlawful" and defendants agreed the DOJ "stated a federal antitrust claim."). Other than the benign Services Agreement, Neagle does not state who entered into an agreement (other than the companies generally), or where or when defendants entered into an agreement to unlawfully restrain trade.

Additionally, Neagels' five specific alleged violations—of a horizontal agreement, an unreasonable resale price maintenance agreement, a tying arrangement, an unreasonable exclusive dealing arrangement, and discriminatory pricing—fare no better. Some [*28] of Neagle's responsive arguments are bizarre, turning antitrust theory on its head. Perhaps the best example is Neagle's argument regarding how predatory pricing supports his discriminatory pricing theory:

Loan servicers like Ocwen compete by reducing their costs, resulting in a greater profit margin for the loan servicer. To drive competitors out of the market, Ocwen conspires with Altisource to inflate third-party services sold to Ocwen under its Services Agreement, something competing loan servicers cannot do. Therefore, Ocwen suffers a loss that is identical to the loss suffered by a monopolist that sells its products below its cost. See Solyndra, 62 F. Supp. 3d. at 1040 ("In a typical predatory-pricing scheme, the predator reduces the sale price of its product (its output) to below cost, hoping to drive competitors out of business."). Ocwen just willingly pays higher prices instead.

While the common below-cost predatory pricing scheme forecloses competition by selling services at a price that competitors cannot sustain, Ocwen and Altisource's inflated predatory pricing scheme provides a profit margin that competitors cannot obtain. See ECF No. 47 ¶ 102(5). The effect is identical: the exclusion of competitors from [*29] the market.

As long as Plaintiff has alleged predatory pricing that can result in the exclusion of competitors, Plaintiff's allegations are "sufficient to avoid dismissal" under section one of the Sherman Act.

Resp. 32-33; ECF No. 63.

The "output" here are default-related services. Altisource, not Ocwen, benefits from the inflated pricing. Unlike a true predatory pricing scheme, which trades short term losses for less competition (and greater profits) later, Altisource's own short term profits will not drive its competitors out of business. Altisource merely rakes in more profits than its competitors in the default-related services market. After all, a conspiracy "to charge higher than competitive prices" would tend to benefit Altisource's competitors in the default-related services market. Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co., Ltd. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 582-83, 106 S. Ct. 1348, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538 \(1986\). And even assuming Ocwen is eventually reimbursed for the higher prices it willingly pays Altisource, the best it can hope for is to break even. The scheme to willfully overpay makes Ocwen less competitive in its market, where loan servicers "compete by reducing their costs, resulting in a greater profit margin for the loan servicer." Ocwen's competitors in the nonbank subprime mortgage loan servicing [*30] market are not harmed by the inflated profits Altisource makes in the default-related services market. In addition to not making economic sense, Neagle's "inflated predatory pricing scheme" fails to demonstrate any competitors would be excluded from either relevant market.

Neagle's attempt at salvaging his tying theory also fails.

A tying arrangement is a device used by a seller with market power in one product market to extend its market power to a distinct product market. To accomplish this objective, the seller conditions the sale of one product (the tying product) on the buyer's purchase of a second product (the tied product). Tying arrangements are forbidden on the theory that, if the seller has market power over the tying product, the seller can leverage this market power through tying arrangements to exclude other sellers of the tied product.

The Supreme Court has developed a unique per se rule for illegal tying arrangements. For a tying claim to suffer per se condemnation, a plaintiff must prove: (1) that the defendant tied together the sale of two distinct products or services; (2) that the defendant possesses enough economic power in the tying product market to coerce its customers [*31] into purchasing the tied product; and (3) that the tying arrangement affects a not insubstantial volume of commerce in the tied product market.

Cascade Health Solutions v. PeaceHealth, 515 F.3d 883, 912-13 (9th Cir. 2008) (internal citations, quotations, and footnotes omitted).

Neagle argues Ocwen used its market power in the nonbank subprime mortgage serving market to force Neagle to purchase the inflated third-party default-related services. There are multiple fatal flaws with this theory. First, in this alleged scheme, the buyer of the tying product (the owner of the mortgage) never buys the tied product (third-party default-related services). Neagle therefore can never establish that Ocwen used its market power in the loan servicing market to coerce the owner of the mortgage to purchase third-party default-related services.

Second, Ocwen does not sell third-party default-related services, it buys them (allegedly at an inflated price) from Altisource and then passes those charges on to the borrower. Tying arrangements are prohibited because the seller of the tying product "can leverage this market power through tying arrangements to exclude other sellers of the tied product." Cascade Health Solutions, 515 F.3d at 912. The seller of the tying product needs an unlawful advantage (market power in the [*32] tying market) to protect its tied product from competition. Here, Altisource, the seller of the tied product, does not even participate in the tying market and has no leverage to force the buyer of the tying product to also purchase third-party default-related services.

Third, Neagle cannot prove a tying arrangement where he is not a purchaser in either the tying or the tied market. Because Neagle did not purchase either product, he could not have influenced competition in either market. Neagle never wanted to purchase any default-related services. To the extent Neagle argues he may bring a tying claim as an "indirect purchaser" of default-related services, his argument is barred by the zero foreclosure doctrine. "Zero foreclosure exists where the tied product is completely unwanted by the buyer." Blough v. Holland Realty, Inc., 574 F.3d 1084, 1089 (9th Cir. 2009). "[W]hen a purchaser is 'forced' to buy a product he would not have otherwise bought even from another seller in the tied product market, there can be no adverse impact on competition because no portion of the market which would otherwise have been available to other sellers has been foreclosed." Id. (quoting Jefferson Parish Hosp. Dist. No. 2 v. Hyde, 466 U.S. 2, 16, 104 S. Ct. 1551, 80 L. Ed. 2d 2 (1984)).

Moving past the flawed tying theory, Neagle fails to allege a horizontal conspiracy [*33] to inflate "charges incurred by horizontally situated and independent third-party default related services providers enlisted by Altisource," SAC ¶ 102(1) because he fails to allege the third-party providers conspired to fix the prices charged to Altisource. Because there is no allegation the third-party service providers agreed on fix prices, Neagle fails to establish the "rim" of the conspiracy. In re Musical Instruments & Equip. Antitrust Litig., 798 F.3d 1186, 1192 (9th Cir. 2015) ("the rim of the wheel, which consists of horizontal agreements among the spokes" is an element of a hub-and-spoke conspiracy). Altisource's mere act of charging Ocwen more than it paid the third-party service providers does not support Neagle's claim because that mark-up "suggests a rational business decision, not a conspiracy." Kendall, 518 F.3d at 1049. After all, a middleman who does not mark up the price it charges from the price it paid will not stay in business for long.

Neagle similarly fails to demonstrate defendants entered into "an illegal resale price maintenance agreement which requires servicers to charge borrowers for fees and default related services in an amount that is no less than the inflated price required by Altisource." SAC ¶ 102(2). While the Services Agreement provides the fixed price Ocwen [*34] will pay Altisource for certain third-party services, Neagle fails to point to any agreement between the two concerning a price Ocwen must charge the borrower. That Ocwen does not charge the borrower less than what it paid to Altisource is not evidence of an "illegal resale price maintenance agreement."

<sup>10</sup> Neagle is, at best, an indirect consumer of third-party default-related services. He is not a consumer, even indirectly, of nonbank subprime mortgage loan services.

US West Communications, Inc., 957 F. Supp. 201, 205 (D. Or. 1997). The competitor, not the consumer, is the party with antitrust standing to bring a claim of attempted monopolization. In re Air Passenger Reservation Sys., 727 F. Supp. 564, 570 (C.D. Cal. 1989) (citing P. Areeda & H. Hovencamp, Antitrust Law ¶¶ 340.2b & 337.1 (1988 Supplement)). After all, while supracompetitive rates are a result of a monopoly, higher rates absent a monopoly are invitations for new competitors to enter the market, not exclusionary acts. Id. Thus, higher prices paid by consumers in an attempted monopolization, as Neagle alleges here, are not injuries the antitrust laws were designed to prevent.

The fundamental defects in Neagle's pleadings, the tacit acknowledgment that absent a Services Letter that he has never seen he cannot allege Altisource's [*35] market share, and Neagle's bizarre arguments (including his "inflated predatory pricing" argument) convince the court that no amount of repleading will save Neagle's antitrust claims.

3. RICO CLAIMS

"To state a claim under § 1962(c), a plaintiff must allege (1) conduct (2) of an enterprise (3) through a pattern (4) of racketeering activity." Sanford v. MemberWorks, Inc., 625 F.3d 550, 557 (9th Cir. 2010) (quoting Odom v. Microsoft Corp., 486 F.3d 541, 547 (9th Cir. 2007)).

The parties agree that because Neagle bases his RICO claims on mail and wire fraud, those claims must satisfy rule 9(b)'s heightened pleading standards for claims sounding in fraud. To state a claim for wire or mail fraud, Neagle must allege: "(1) formation of a scheme or artifice to defraud; (2) use of the United States mails or wires, or causing such a use, in furtherance of the scheme; and (3) specific intent to deceive or defraud." Sanford v. MemberWorks, Inc., 625 F.3d 550, 557 (9th Cir. 2010). Neagle must state with particularity "the factual circumstances of the fraud itself." Id. (quoting Odom, 486 F.3d at 554).

What the SAC lacks in specific factual allegations, it makes up for in length. Throughout the 43-page SAC and nearly 100 pages of briefings in opposition to the motions to dismiss, Neagle repeatedly takes a lot of space to say remarkably little about how these defendants conspired to defraud him in the course of servicing [*36] his mortgage.

Neagle alleges few specific instances where Ocwen and closely affiliated companies conspired to inflate fees. Neagle points to the Consent Order between Ocwen and New York regulators, where those parties agreed:

In certain circumstances, [Altisource subsidiary] Hubzu has charged more for its services to Ocwen than to other customers—charges which are then passed on to borrowers and investors. Moreover, Ocwen engages Altisource Portfolio subsidiary REALHome Services and Solutions, Inc. as its default real estate agency for short sales and investor-owned properties, even though this agency principally employs out-of-state agents who do not perform the onsite work that local agents perform, at the same cost to borrowers and investors.

Consent Order ¶ 22; ECF No. 66-2; SAC ¶50.

While that is a specific factual allegation, Neagle does not allege Hubzu provided, let alone charged Ocwen for, any services performed on Neagle's loan. Similarly, Neagle does not allege REALHome charged Ocwen for any services on his loan. Neither Hubzu nor REALHome are mentioned in the SAC, and Neagle does not allege any defendant conducted a short sale.

Neagle also points to a scheme to overcharge for [*37] lender-placed insurance. SAC ¶¶ 53-58. In this lone specific factual allegation of an inflated fee Ocwen actually charged him, Neagle alleges:

Ocwen imposed a lender-placed insurance policy obtained from SWBC onto Plaintiff in July of 2014. The master policy number of the insurance policy was NP098022301. Consistent with the agreement to artificially inflate the charge of this policy, Altisource received inflated fees and costs that were ultimately charged to Plaintiff through Ocwen's agreement with SWBC, and SWBC's agreement with Altisource.

SAC ¶ 57.

This allegation appears to meet rule 9(b)'s requirement that Neagle must allege the who, what, where, and when concerning the alleged fraud. Neagle, however, released any claims regarding lender-placed insurance as part of the class action settlement in Lee v. Ocwen Loan Servicing, LLC, S.D. Fla. No. 0:14-cv-60649-JG.<sup>11</sup> Ocwen Req. Judicial Notice, Ex. C; ECF No. 57-3. The Lee settlement released all claims from borrowers charged by Ocwen under a lender-placed insurance policy from January 1, 2008 through January 23, 2015. *Lee, 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 121998, 2015 WL 544813, at \*3 \(Sept. 14, 2015\)*. Class members released any claims that could have been brought in the class action, or that relate or pertain in any way to Ocwen's [*38] issuance of lender-placed insurance policies during the settlement class period. Ocwen Req. Judicial Notice, Ex. C, ¶ 2(a), (b). Among other claims, class members released any claims of "kickbacks" or "tying" arrangements between Ocwen and lender-placed insurance. ¶ 2(b). The lender-placed insurance allegation therefore does not actually support Neagle's claims.

Neagle's generalized allegations fall well short of establishing the who, what, when and where necessary to meet the heightened pleading requirements for a fraud claim. Conspicuously absent is any allegation of Ocwen charging Neagle a specific, inflated fee on a specific date:

66. Another fee or cost that is significantly marked-up includes title examination and/or title search fees. Title related fees assessed by Ocwen and charged to borrowers and Plaintiff are significantly marked-up, at times exceeding $800. Moreover, fees and costs incurred by hiring "property preservation" vendors are commonly marked up. Plaintiff was excessively charged for "property preservation" fees by Ocwen and subsequent loan servicers of Plaintiff's mortgage loan. Plaintiff was also charged for escrow fees related to property taxes and for the [*39] balance of tax payments forwarded by Ocwen into escrow, despite having made payments for property taxes himself.

67. The above described costs and fees are not exclusive. Ocwen and subsequent servicers participating with Ocwen and the conspiracy between Ocwen and Altisource charged marked up fees related to several other types of third party services and mortgage insurance for lender placed insurance.

84. During the relevant period, Ocwen assessed inflated fees and costs to Plaintiff's mortgage balance which included, inter alia, (1) property preservation fees, which were repeatedly and excessively charged to Plaintiff's account, sometimes with multiple unexplained "property preservation" charges during one monthly period; (2) broker price opinion fees, which despite costing approximately $30,<sup>12</sup> were charged to Plaintiff for anywhere from $80 to $100; (3) title examination and title search fees; (4) lender-placed insurance costs and fees; (5) appraisals; (6) property inspections; and (7) escrow account related fees, among other things.

* * * *

86. Ocwen alone maintains a complete accounting of all fees assessed and paid, and the details of each and every fee assessed and paid cannot [*40] be alleged with complete precision without access to Ocwen's records. Plaintiff has attempted to obtain these records from Ocwen and its successors, but has routinely been denied access to this information.

SAC.

Neagle need not allege with complete precision "the details of each and every fee assessed and paid," but he needs to allege at least one to state a claim for mail or wire fraud. Neagle's RICO claims do not rely only on the inflated charge, but on the fact that defendants used the mails and wires to further their scheme to defraud him. *Sanford, 625 F.3d at 557.* In a general manner, Neagle alleges the defendants used mailings or calls to perpetuate the scheme:

134. Furthermore, to lull homeowners into a sense of trust and dissuade them from challenging Ocwen's unlawful charges, Ocwen concealed the scheme from borrowers by telling them, in statements and other documents, that such fees are in accordance with the terms of their mortgage.

<sup>12</sup> Earlier in the SAC, Neagle alleges that Ocwen paid agents $45 to $50 for a BPO 10 years earlier, in 2004. SAC ¶ 65.

135. The mortgage invoices, loan statements, or proofs of claims provided to borrowers disguised the fact that the default-related service fees assessed on homeowners' accounts were marked-up. By disguising the true nature of amounts purportedly owed in communications [*41] to borrowers, the Ocwen Enterprise made false statements using the internet, telephone, facsimile, United States mail, and other interstate commercial carriers.

SAC.

But other than the lender-placed insurance allegation (which Neagle cannot rely on), Neagle includes no specifics at all as to when any defendant used the mails or wires to defraud him. Neagle does not, for example, allege he received a mortgage statement on a specific date, sent from a specific defendant, that included a specific fraudulent charge. "[T]o avoid dismissal for inadequacy under Rule 9\(b\), [the] complaint would need to state the time, place, and specific content of the false representations as well as the identities of the parties to the misrepresentation." Sanford, 625 F.3d. at 558. Neagle's response concedes he cannot plead his fraud claims with specificity: "The above-described allegations concern the 'time' and 'place' of the fraudulent activities because Plaintiff alleges the period of time that Ocwen serviced Plaintiff's loan, and the 'nature' of the fraudulent activities are alleged by the category of fees that were charged to Plaintiff's account."<sup>13</sup> Resp. 42-43; ECF No. 63. But merely alleging that Ocwen serviced his loan for 2.5 years and [*42] the alleged fraud happened at some point during that time period will not do. Pleading the specifics of an alleged scheme, without alleging the specific times and places of the "factual circumstances of the fraud itself[,]" fails to rise to rule 9\(b\)'s heightened pleading standards. Sanford, 625 F.3d at 557-58 (where it is reasonable that plaintiff would have personal knowledge of the relevant facts, plaintiff must plead specific time and place in addition to outlining the general scheme).

Neagle argues Weiner v. Ocwen Fin. Corp., 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 99156, 2015 WL 4599427 \(E.D. Cal.\) "is nearly identical to the allegations in this case." Resp. 43. For two reasons, Weiner, a case involving essentially the same allegations as to Ocwen's alleged scheme to defraud borrowers, does not help Neagle. First, Weiner brought his claims as part of a class action. Second, Weiner alleged two specific BPO fees and one title search, and for each instance, Weiner included the specific amount Ocwen billed him, the amount he should have been billed, and the exact dates Ocwen assessed the fees on his mortgage account. [2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 99156, \[WL\] at \*7-8](#). As noted, Neagle does not include any specific allegations. As Neagle does not specifically allege a single false representation any defendant sent him using the mails or wires, his RICO claims are dismissed. [*43] As Neagle fails to state a RICO violation, his RICO conspiracy claim fails. Sanford, 625 F.3d at 559.

4. FINANCIAL ELDER ABUSE

"A statutory claim for financial abuse has four elements: there must be (1) a taking or appropriation (2) of money or property (3) that belongs to an elderly or incapacitated person, and (4) the taking must be wrongful." Church v. Woods, 190 Ore. App. 112, 117, 77 P.3d 1150 \(2003\). "Conduct generally is wrongful if it is carried out in pursuit of an improper motive or by improper means . . . . Improper means, for example, include violence, threats, intimidation, deceit, misrepresentation, bribery, unfounded litigation, defamation and disparaging falsehood." Id. at 118 (internal quotation marks omitted).

Neagle alleges the "Defendants wrongfully took and withheld the property of Plaintiff by charging unlawfully inflated fees, costs, mortgage insurance premiums, and escrow fees, among other things, and by foreclosing on plaintiff's mortgage and selling plaintiff's home, without good cause and in bad faith." SAC ¶ 151. As for the allegedly inflated fees, the fact that Ocwen added those to Neagle's debt does not qualify as a "taking" under the statute. "ORS chapter 124 does not define 'takes' or 'taking.' The ordinary meaning of 'take' is 'to transfer into one's own keeping [*44] [or to] enter into or arrange for possession, ownership, or use of[.]"' Id. (quoting Webster's Third New Int'l Dictionary 2330 (unabridged ed 1993) (alterations in original)). Neagle does not allege he ever paid one of the disputed fees (that he fails to state with specificity). Adding to the amount of Neagle's debt is not a taking or appropriation of Neagle's money or property.

Neagle alleges that Ocwen initiated unfounded litigation, i.e., foreclosure proceedings. Even assuming "unfounded litigation" satisfies the "wrongful element" of financial elder abuse, Neagle must still meet the "taking" element. Schmidt v. Noonkester, 287 Ore. App. 48, 54-55, 401 P.3d 266 (2017). In Schmidt, plaintiffs brought a baseless fraud claim against the elderly defendant. The court concluded that "the alleged damages incurred by the defendant—the time, effort, stress, and expense incurred in defending against plaintiffs' fraud claim—do not involve a transfer of defendant's money or property into plaintiffs' own keeping." Id. 287 Ore. App. at 55.

Neagle alleges that on May 3, 2016, Ocwen assigned all rights to Neagle's property to MTGLQ. SAC ¶ 94. At that time, the foreclosure proceedings were ongoing, and there had been no sale of Neagle's property. Therefore, even assuming the foreclosure [*45] proceedings were "unfounded litigation" and therefore "wrongful," Neagle fails to allege Ocwen conducted an "unlawful taking" of his property.<sup>14</sup>

The only specific factual allegations as to MTGLQ in the 43-page complaint are: (1) on May 3, 2016, Ocwen assigned its rights in Neagle's property to MTGLQ; (2) "MTGLQ simultaneously filed a Praecept for Writ of Execution, instructing the Linn County Sheriff to sell Plaintiff's property at public auction;" and (3) the Sheriff "sold Plaintiff's home and property to MTLGQ on July 19, 2016." SAC ¶ 95. But these allegations do not demonstrate MTLGQ was aware of the conspiracy to inflate fees for third-party default-related services between Ocwen and Altisource.<sup>15</sup>

Throughout the SAC, the defendants are often mashed together, which Neagle apparently believes is sufficient because he labels this a "conspiracy." To take but one example:

In this complaint, whenever reference is made to any act, deed, or conduct of any one of the above-mentioned defendants, committed in connection with the combination and conspiracy alleged herein, the allegation means the defendants collectively, or the defendant or defendants that are the subject of the relevant allegation [*46] collectively, and each defendant engaged in the act, deed, or conduct by or through one or more of their officers, directors, agents, employees, coconspirators, or representatives, each of whom was actively engaged in the management, direction, control, or transaction of the ordinary business and affairs of defendants individually and collectively, and the combination and conspiracy itself.

SAC ¶ 17.

For the purpose of a motion to dismiss, the entire paragraph above says absolutely nothing. Unlike Altisource, which Neagle alleges is closely connected to Ocwen through the common Chairman and other senior executives, there are no allegations linking MTGLQ to Ocwen or Altisource. The only alleged connection between MTGLQ and either other defendant is, "On or about May 3, 2016, Ocwen filed an Assignment of Judgment purporting to assign all right[s], title, and interest in Plaintiff's property, including the rights as judgment creditor for Plaintiff's property, to MTGLQ Investors, L.P." SAC ¶ 94. There is no allegation that MTGLQ knew of the allegedly inflated fees, or even knew that Neagle challenged the fees.<sup>16</sup> Neagle alleges defaulting on his mortgage. SAC ¶ 3. Other than generally alleging [*47] that the three defendants acted "collectively," there is no allegation that MTGLQ knew the foreclosure proceedings were "wrongful."

Additionally, in his response, Neagle admits that even assuming the foreclosure proceedings were "wrongful," there was no "taking" of Neagle's property:

The order that reinstated the case in which MTGLQ filed its Praecept for Writ of Execution was entered during a valid automatic bankruptcy stay. [SAC ¶ 92] A bankruptcy stay applies to "any act . . . to exercise control over property of the estate," 11 U.S.C.A. § 362(a)(3), including "the commencement . . . of a judicial, administrative, <sup>14</sup> Other than the general allegations of a conspiracy between the defendants, there are no allegations that Altisource ever took, wrongfully or otherwise, any money or property of Neagle's.

<sup>15</sup> The Court does not intend to imply that Neagle has, in fact, adequately pleaded a conspiracy between Ocwen and Altisource. I merely point out that the SAC is hopelessly deficient in connecting MTGLQ to the alleged conspiracy.

<sup>16</sup> As noted, Neagle did not allege he gave any defendant notice and opportunity to cure before filing this action.

or other action." Id. (a)(1). Unless a party obtains relief from a bankruptcy court, "violations of the stay are void." In re Schwartz, 954 F.2d 569, 573 (9th Cir. 1992). Therefore, Ocwen's order reinstating the case in which MTGLQ filed its Praeipe for Writ of Execution was "void." Id. It logically follows that MTGLQ's filing were void, which is why the sale was rescinded.

Resp. 14; ECF No. 65.

Intentionally or not, Neagle leaves out the final logical step: a void foreclosure sale that is quickly rescinded "do[es] not involve a transfer of [Neagle's] money or property into [MTGLQ's] 'own keeping'." Schmidt, 287 Ore. App. at 54-55. To be clear, Neagle does not allege that [*48] after the void sale, MTGLQ moved into the property and changed the locks. Quite the opposite, Neagle alleges that somehow the void Praeipe for Writ of Execution resulted in a sale occurring by operation of law under ORS § 18.936, which provides that a judgment creditor like Altisource "may instruct the sheriff to accept any bid that matches the amount of the judgment creditor's bid." Especially when Neagle alleges the Praeipe for Writ of Execution was itself void, a void sale under § 18.936(3) is not a "taking" under ORS 124.110.

CONCLUSION

Naegle chose to frame this action challenging the reasonableness of servicing fees charged under his mortgage contract as a conspiracy to violate antitrust and RICO laws. In reading the complaint and Neagle's responses, one continually pictures Neagle attempting to force a square peg into a round hole. I do not mean to imply that I approve of the scheme alleged here. I merely say that Neagle does not state a claim for antitrust or RICO violations. Nor does Neagle state a claim for financial elder abuse. As Neagle did not comply with the notice and cure provision of his deed of trust, his claims are dismissed. Because it is clear leave to amend would be futile, Neagle's claims are [*49] dismissed with prejudice.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

HN1 [down arrow] Standards of Review, De Novo Review

Appellate courts review a district court's dismissal of a complaint with prejudice for failure to state a claim de novo. While they accept the factual allegations in the complaint as true, construing them in the light most favorable to the plaintiff, the allegations must state a claim for relief that is plausible, not merely possible. Under this standard, threadbare recitals of the elements of a cause of action, supported by mere conclusory statements, do not suffice.

Antitrust &amp; Trade Law &gt; ... &gt; Monopolies &amp; Monopolization &gt; Conspiracy to Monopolize &gt; Sherman Act

HN2 [down arrow] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Section One of the Sherman Act, under which both the price-fixing and boycotting claims are brought, provides that every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, is declared to be illegal. 15 U.S.C.S. § 1. In addition to that bare bones recital of prohibited behavior, the U.S. Supreme Court has long concluded that Congress intended only to prohibit "unreasonable" restraints on trade. Thus, § 1 prohibits (1) conspiracies that (2) unreasonably (3) restrain interstate or foreign trade.

Antitrust &amp; Trade Law &gt; ... &gt; Monopolies &amp; Monopolization &gt; Conspiracy to Monopolize &gt; Sherman Act

HN3 [down arrow] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Where the plaintiffs are required to allege facts plausibly suggesting a conspiracy, the crucial question is whether the challenged anticompetitive conduct stems from independent decision or from an agreement, tacit or express. The U.S. Supreme Court in Twombly was confronted with the antecedent question of what a plaintiff must plead in order to state a claim under § 1 of the Sherman Act. In applying the general standards applicable under Fed. R. Civ. P. 8 to a § 1 of the Sherman Act claim, the Supreme Court held that stating such a claim requires a complaint with enough factual matter, taken as true, to suggest that an agreement was made. Asking for plausible grounds to infer an agreement does not impose a probability requirement at the pleading stage; it simply calls for enough facts to raise a reasonable expectation that discovery will reveal evidence of illegal agreement.

Antitrust &amp; Trade Law &gt; ... &gt; Monopolies &amp; Monopolization &gt; Conspiracy to Monopolize &gt; Sherman Act

HN4 [down arrow] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Proof of a § 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, conspiracy must include evidence tending to exclude the possibility of independent action. Conspiracy evidence must tend to rule out the possibility that the defendants were acting independently.

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Complaints > Requirements for Complaint

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

HN5 Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Evidence of conscious parallelism alone does not permit an inference of conspiracy unless the plaintiff either establishes that, assuming there is no conspiracy, each defendant engaging in the parallel action acted contrary to its economic self-interest, or offers other plus factors tending to establish that the defendants were in a collusive agreement to fix prices or otherwise restrain trade in violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1. These plus factors remove a plaintiff's evidence from the realm of equipoise and render that evidence more probative of conspiracy than of conscious parallelism.

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Complaints > Requirements for Complaint

HN6 Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Conclusory allegations of agreement or conspiracy are insufficient. An allegation of parallel conduct and a bare assertion of conspiracy will not suffice. Without more, parallel conduct does not suggest conspiracy, and a conclusory allegation of agreement at some unidentified point does not supply facts adequate to show illegality. Hence, when allegations of parallel conduct are set out in order to make a § 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, claim, they must be placed in a context that raises a suggestion of a preceding agreement, not merely parallel conduct that could just as well be independent action. The plaintiff has the obligation to provide more than labels and conclusions, and a formulaic recitation of the elements of a cause of action will not do.

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

HN7 Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

On a motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim, it is only the factual allegations contained therein which courts must accept as true.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

HN8 [blue download icon] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Following the example set by a competitor, without agreeing to do so in advance, is textbook "price leadership" — a practice we have repeatedly stated is insufficient to establish the existence of an agreement. It is well settled that evidence of conscious parallelism alone does not permit an inference of conspiracy for a § 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, claim, unless the plaintiff either establishes that each defendant engaging in the parallel action acted contrary to its economic self-interest, or offers other plus factors tending to establish that the defendants were not engaging merely in oligopolistic price maintenance or price leadership but rather in a collusive agreement to fix prices. Consciously parallel behavior by oligopolists does not in itself support an inference of agreement, of a meeting of the minds, any more strongly than it supports an inference of legal price maintenance or leadership.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Horizontal Refusals to Deal > Sherman Act

HN9 [blue download icon] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Mere interdependent parallelism does not establish contract, combination, or conspiracy required by Sherman Act § 1, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1. Even conscious parallelism,' a common reaction of firms in a concentrated market that recognize their shared economic interests and their interdependence with respect to price and output decisions is not in itself unlawful.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

HN10 [blue download icon] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Courts have recognized a company's actions that were against its self-interest can constitute a plus factor for a § 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1. Courts and commentators have further observed that this plus factor often restates interdependence in the context of alleged price-fixing.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Horizontal Refusals to Deal > Sherman Act

HN11 [blue download icon] Horizontal Refusals to Deal, Sherman Act

A group boycott is included within the Sherman Act's prohibition of any unreasonable contract, combination, or conspiracy in the restraint of interstate trade or commerce. 15 U.S.C.S. §§ 1, 1013\(b\). A boycott consists of pressuring a party with whom one has a dispute by withholding, or enlisting others to withhold, patronage or services from the target. The ultimate target of the agreement can be either a competitor or a customer of some or all of the boycotters who is being denied access to desired goods or services because of a refusal to accede to particular terms set by some or all of the boycotters. For boycotting to be per se illegal, it must involve horizontal agreements among direct competitors. In other words, a conspiracy to boycott claim requires as a prerequisite sufficient allegations of an agreement or conspiracy. The crucial, antecedent question is whether the alleged actions stem from independent actions or from prior agreement.

Contracts Law > Remedies > Equitable Relief > Quantum Meruit

HN12 [+] Types of Contracts, Quasi Contracts

For a party to prevail under the theory of unjust enrichment, they must prove three elements: (1) benefit conferred upon defendant at plaintiff's expense; (2) a resulting appreciation of benefit by defendant; and (3) inequitable retention of benefit without payment for its value.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Contracts Law > Types of Contracts > Quasi Contracts

Contracts Law > Remedies > Equitable Relief > Quantum Meruit

HN13 [+] Types of Contracts, Quasi Contracts

To state a cause action for quantum meruit, plaintiffs are required to allege, among other elements, that they expected to get paid or that they reasonably expected to be compensated.

Opinion

[*1256] ANDERSON, Circuit Judge:

This antitrust case requires us to apply the standards announced in Bell Atlantic Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007), to determine whether the allegations of the five complaints before us are sufficient to "nudge[] their claims across the line from conceivable [*1257] to plausible," id. at 570, 127 S. Ct. at 1974, so as to state a claim under § 1 of the Sherman Act. Plaintiff-Appellant automobile repair shops (the "Body Shops") claim that the Defendant-Appellee Insurance Companies colluded to lower repair prices by improperly pressuring the shops to lower prices and by threatening to boycott those who do not comply. The Body Shops claim a per se price-fixing conspiracy and a per se conspiracy to boycott. They also bring several state law claims.

* Senior Judge R. Lanier Anderson elected to participate in this decision pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 46(c).

** Judges Marcus, Rosenbaum, and Jill Pryor are recused. Judge Britt Grant joined the Court on August 7, 2018, and did not participate in these en banc proceedings.

The cost of repairing a damaged vehicle is primarily based on labor and material costs. Repair shops can consult estimating guides to assist in calculating their labor rates but there is no standard way of determining a shop's labor rate. Within the category of labor costs, variables such as overhead, shop size and capacity, repair volume, and expertise affect each shop's rate. Market [**22] considerations, such as the prevailing labor rates within the geographic area of the shop, can dominate that cost. Material costs are driven by the cost of repairing or replacing damaged parts. Parts can be sourced from the original manufacturer, an aftermarket company, a salvage yard, or a parts refurbisher. Alfred M. Thomas & Michael Jund, Collision Repair and Refinishing: A Foundation Course for Technicians 7 (2014).

The Body Shops are a group of professional automobile repair companies that provide collision repair services to individuals insured by the Insurance Companies. Accepting the factual allegations in the complaint<sup>1</sup> as true and construing them in the light most favorable to the plaintiff—as required by the Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6) posture of this case—the Body Shops derive seventy to ninety-five percent of their revenue from customers who pay via insurance and the Insurance Companies account for sixty-five to eighty-five percent of the insurance market in each of the relevant states. The Body Shops broadly allege that the Insurance Companies—with Defendant-Appellee State Farm as their leader—have combined or conspired to depress the amounts they pay for auto repairs performed on behalf of their [**23] insureds. According to the Body Shops, the Insurance Companies accomplish this in a number of ways.

First, the Body Shops allege that each of the Insurance Companies use a formal agreement system called "direct repair programs" or "DRPs."<sup>2</sup> In exchange for entering into a DRP, the several Insurance Companies each agrees to list a shop as a "preferred provider" for its insureds which, at least in theory, generates increased business for the shop. In return, the shop agrees to certain concessions regarding, among other things, the "market rate" at which they are entitled to be reimbursed for labor costs. State Farm sets its market rate using an electronic survey of the shops in a particular geographic area and advises the Body Shops that they will pay no more than the market rate. In addition, the other Insurance Companies advise the Body Shops that [*1258] they will pay no more than State Farm. The Body Shops allege, primarily, that the survey is methodologically unsound,<sup>3</sup> that State Farm manipulates the survey to achieve an artificial rate, that State Farm will contact a shop and demand that they lower their rates, that State Farm will threaten—and effectuate—removal [**24] from the "preferred providers" list if a shop attempts to raise its rate, and that State Farm attempts to prohibit discussions among repair shops about their rates on the theory that such discussions constitute illegal price-fixing. The Body Shops allege that the market rate is enforced even against those shops which are not signatories to a DRP.<sup>4</sup>

Additionally, the Body Shops allege that the Insurance Companies have combined or conspired to depress the amounts they pay for replacement parts on damaged vehicles. According to the Body Shops, the Insurance Companies refuse to pay for "original equipment manufacturer" parts, which—because they are designed by the car manufacturer to fit the precise make and model of the damaged car—are more expensive. Rather, the Body Shops are required to use either "aftermarket" parts designed by third-parties or "salvaged" parts from other wrecked <sup>1</sup> Because this appeal is a consolidation of five separate cases, there are five separate complaints in the record. The parties agree that the five complaints are "nearly identical," En Banc Br. of Body Shops, at 6 n.1, and that the complaint in the lead case, Quality Auto Painting Center v. State Farm, No. 15-14160, is representative. Accordingly, unless otherwise noted, citations to a complaint in this opinion are to paragraphs of that complaint.

<sup>2</sup> Each of the Insurance Companies who use DRPs has a unique name for their specific program. However, the term "DRP" appears to be widely used in the industry and, in any event, the parties here appear to prefer its usage when describing these programs generally.

<sup>3</sup> The survey sets the market rate just slightly above the rate offered by the median "technician or work bay" in the relevant area when those rates are listed from lowest to highest. The Body Shops assert that this is an invalid means of determining the rate because it does not take into account the variances in shop size, skill of technicians, and other quality variables, and that State Farm alters the shops' labor rates arbitrarily.

<sup>4</sup> None of the Body Shops here are currently a party to a DRP, and only one has apparently ever been. That relationship ended approximately one year before this action was filed.

vehicles. These parts require extra time to install—which the Insurance Companies do not pay for—and cannot be guaranteed as safe by the Body Shops. The Insurance Companies also allegedly: utilize industry-standard databases<sup>5</sup> — which identify "target" costs for certain repairs—only when financially advantageous [**25] to them; often refuse to pay for necessary repairs; routinely refuse to reimburse the cost of certain materials; mandate participation in their parts procurement process; and force discount programs on the Body Shops. The Body Shops argue that these actions constitute a per se price-fixing violation of the Sherman Act.

Lastly, the Body Shops allege that the Insurance Companies engage in a practice known as "steering," in which they discourage their insureds from patronizing a noncompliant repair shop through "misrepresentation, insinuation, and casting aspersions." These practices allegedly include telling insureds that a particular repair shop: is not on the preferred provider list; has had quality control issues; charges more than other shops in the area (and that they will not pay the excess amount); takes longer than other shops (and that they will not pay for additional car rental days); and does not perform work that can be guaranteed by the Insurance Companies, even though the Insurance Companies never guarantee any repair work. The Body Shops argue that the Insurance Companies conspire with respect to such steering, constituting a per se group boycott.

[*1259] The Body Shops filed [**26] approximately twenty-two similar lawsuits in federal district courts throughout the country.<sup>6</sup> The Judicial Panel on Multidistrict Litigation transferred all of the actions to the Middle District of Florida (Judge Presnell) where the "lead case," A&E Auto Body, Inc. v. 21st Century Centennial Insurance Co., No. 6:14-cv-310, was already pending. Of the twenty-two actions: two—the lead case and one other—were dismissed with prejudice<sup>7</sup> and not appealed; four were dismissed and are currently on appeal; and two were dismissed by the district court and then also had their appeals dismissed for lack of prosecution. Of the remaining fourteen, five are the subject of this appeal.

As relevant to this appeal, the Body Shops alleged two violations of federal law under the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1, for price-fixing and group boycotting. They also alleged three causes of action under the laws of the state in which the suits were filed for unjust enrichment, quantum meruit, and tortious interference<sup>8</sup> (collectively, the "State Law Claims").<sup>9</sup> The Insurance Companies moved to dismiss all fourteen cases, the Body Shops filed a consolidated <sup>5</sup> According to the complaint, there are three leading collision repair estimating databases—ADP, CCC, and Mitchell—which "provide software and average costs associated with particularized types of repairs to create estimates." Compl. ¶¶ 65-66. The databases generate estimates that include "the ordinary and customary repairs, repair time (labor) and materials to return a vehicle to its pre-accident condition," and are considered reliable starting points. Id. at ¶ 66.

<sup>6</sup> The parties' filings and the district court's orders are less than clear about the total number of cases involved in this multidistrict litigation. It appears that there were, at one point, twenty-four independent causes of action with regard to this litigation: the twenty-two discussed above; a RICO class action that was filed in Illinois, was transferred to the Middle District of Florida, and is still currently pending; and a state consumer protection action filed by the State of Louisiana in Louisiana state court, removed to federal court in Louisiana by the Insurance Companies, transferred to the Middle District of Florida, and then remanded to Louisiana state court by the district court.

<sup>7</sup> The initial complaint in the lead case was dismissed without prejudice "on the grounds that it was a prohibited 'shotgun' pleading, that it failed to properly set forth the basis for [the district court's] jurisdiction, that it failed to identify which parties had ongoing contracts with one another, and that all of the allegations of wrongdoing were attributed, collectively, to every [Insurance Company], even where such collective attribution made no sense." A&E Auto Body, 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 127531, 2015 WL 5604786, at *1 (M.D. Fla. Sept. 23, 2015). The Body Shops filed an amended complaint and the district court dismissed one claim with prejudice and the remainder of the claims without prejudice once again. Id. Finally, the district court dismissed all the claims from the second amended complaint with prejudice, noting that "[d]espite becoming much wordier, the Plaintiffs' pleadings have not come remotely close to satisfying the minimum pleading requirements as to any of the claims asserted."

2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 127531, [WL] at *12.

response to which the Insurance Companies replied, and the district court referred [**27] the matter to a magistrate judge for a report and recommendation.

Pursuant to that referral, the magistrate judge entered a fifty-nine page Report and Recommendation (the "R&R"), which concluded that the relevant claims should be dismissed without prejudice. The Body Shops then filed an Omnibus Objection to the R&R (the "Objection"), wherein they challenged the magistrate judge's conclusions with respect to some of their claims. The district court overruled the Body Shops' objections to the R&R, adopted the [*1260] R&R, and dismissed all of the relevant claims without prejudice (the "Dismissal Order").<sup>10</sup> Rather than file amended complaints, the Body Shops appealed the district court's decision with respect to five of the initial actions—two that were filed in New Jersey and one each from Kentucky, Missouri, and Virginia. Those five actions were consolidated on appeal. A divided panel of this Court reversed the district court's decision, holding that the Body Shops had alleged sufficient allegations to survive a motion to dismiss on all of the claims. That decision was vacated when this Court voted to hear the case en banc.<sup>11</sup>

II. ISSUES ON APPEAL

The parties were instructed to brief the en banc [**28] court on the following issues:

- 1) Can a per se illegal price-fixing agreement or conspiracy between and among the several defendant-Insurance Companies plausibly be inferred from the allegations of the complaints in the several cases before this Court.
- 2) Can a per se illegal agreement or conspiracy between and among the several defendant-Insurance Companies to boycott the plaintiffs' Body Shops plausibly be inferred from the allegations of the complaints in the several cases before this Court.

The parties also briefed the state law issues involving the three state law claims—unjust enrichment, quantum meruit, and tortious interference. We address first the federal antitrust claims, including the alleged price-fixing conspiracy and the alleged group boycott, and then the state law claims.

III. STANDARD OF REVIEW

HN1 [↑] We review a district court's dismissal of a complaint with prejudice for failure to state a claim de novo. Am. Dental Ass'n v. Cigna Corp., 605 F.3d 1283, 1288 (11th Cir. 2010). While we accept the factual allegations in the complaint as true, construing them in the light most favorable to the plaintiff, the allegations must state a claim for relief that is plausible, not merely possible. Twombly, 550 U.S. at 570, 127 S. Ct. at 1974; Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 678, 129 S. Ct. 1937, 1949, 173 L. Ed. 2d 868 (2009). Under this standard, "[t]hreadbare recitals of the elements [**29] of a cause of action, supported by mere conclusory statements, do not suffice." Iqbal, 556 U.S. at 678, 129 S. Ct. at 1949.

IV. FEDERAL ANTITRUST CLAIMS

A. The Legal Landscape

HN2 [↑] Section One of the Sherman Act, under which both the price-fixing and boycotting claims are brought, provides that "[e]very contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, is declared to be illegal." 15 U.S.C. § 1. In addition to <sup>9</sup>The Body Shops alleged additional violations of state law founded on theories of quasi-estoppel, equitable estoppel, conversion, state antitrust statutes, and state consumer protection statutes—all of which were dismissed. The Body Shops did not challenge the dismissal of those claims and they are thus abandoned on appeal. See Greenbriar, Ltd. v. City of Alabaster, 881 F.2d 1570, 1573 n.6 (11th Cir. 1989) (holding that issues not raised on appeal are deemed waived).

<sup>10</sup>An identical R&R, Objection, and Dismissal Order was filed in each of the cases present on appeal.

that bare bones recital of prohibited behavior, the Supreme Court has long concluded that Congress intended only to prohibit "unreasonable" restraints on trade. See, e.g., Arizona v. Maricopa Cty. Med. Soc., 457 U.S. 332, 343, 102 S. Ct. 2466, 2472-73, 73 L. Ed. 2d 48 (1982). Thus, § 1 prohibits (1) conspiracies that (2) unreasonably (3) restrain interstate or foreign trade. Spanish Broad. Sys. of Fla., Inc. v. Clear Channel Commc'n's, Inc., 376 F.3d 1065, 1071 (11th Cir. 2004). Only the first element is at issue on this appeal.<sup>12</sup>

[*1261] Therefore, HN3↑ because the Body Shops are required to allege facts plausibly suggesting a conspiracy, "the crucial question is whether the challenged anticompetitive conduct stems from independent decision or from an agreement, tacit or express." Twombly, 550 U.S. at 554, 127 S. Ct. at 1964. As in this case, the Supreme Court in Twombly was confronted with "the antecedent question of what a plaintiff must plead in order to state a claim under § 1 of the [**30] Sherman Act." Id. at 555-56, 127 S. Ct. at 1964. In applying the general standards applicable under Fed. R. Civ. P. 8 to a § 1 claim, the Supreme Court held that "stating such a claim requires a complaint with enough factual matter (taken as true) to suggest that an agreement was made." Id. at 556, 127 S. Ct. at 1965. The Court recognized that "[a]sking for plausible grounds to infer an agreement does not impose a probability requirement at the pleading stage; it simply calls for enough facts to raise a reasonable expectation that discovery will reveal evidence of illegal agreement." Id. at 556, 127 S. Ct. at 1965. The Court held:

While a showing of parallel "business behavior is admissible circumstantial evidence from which the fact finder may infer agreement," it falls short of "conclusively establishing agreement or . . . itself constituting a Sherman Act offense." Theatre Enterprises, Inc. v. Paramount Film Distributing Corp., 346 U.S. 537 at 540-541, 74 S. Ct. 257, 98 L. Ed. 273 [(1954)]. Even "conscious parallelism," a common reaction of "firms in a concentrated market that recognize their shared economic interests and their interdependence with respect to price and output decisions" is "not in itself unlawful." Brooke Group Ltd. v. Brown & Williamson Tobacco Corp., 509 U.S. 209, 227, 113 S. Ct. 2578, 125 L.Ed.2d 168 (1993); see 6 P. Areeda & H. Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law ¶ 1433a, p. 236 (2d ed. 2003) (hereinafter Areeda & Hovenkamp) ("The courts are nearly unanimous in saying that mere interdependent [**31] parallelism does not establish the contract, combination, or conspiracy required by Sherman Act § 1) . . .

The inadequacy of showing parallel conduct or interdependence, without more, mirrors the ambiguity of the behavior: consistent with conspiracy, but just as much in line with a wide swath of rational and competitive business strategy unilaterally prompted by common perceptions of the market. . . . HN4↑ [P]roof of a § 1 conspiracy must include evidence tending to exclude the possibility of independent action . . . [C]onspiracy evidence must tend to rule out the possibility that the defendants were acting independently.

Even before Twombly, "it [was] well settled in this circuit that HN5↑ evidence of conscious parallelism alone does not permit an inference of conspiracy unless the plaintiff either establishes that, assuming there is no conspiracy, each defendant engaging in the parallel action acted contrary to its economic self-interest, or offers other 'plus factors' tending to establish that the defendants were . . . in a collusive agreement to [*1262] fix prices or otherwise restrain trade." City of Tuscaloosa v. Harcros Chems., 158 F.3d 548, 571 (11th Cir. 1999) (internal quotations, changes, and footnotes omitted). As this Court has [**32] noted, these plus factors "remove [a plaintiff's] evidence from the realm of equipoise and render that evidence more probative of conspiracy than of conscious parallelism." Williamson Oil Co. v. Philip Morris USA, 346 F.3d 1287, 1301 (11th Cir. 2003).

<sup>12</sup> Regarding the second element, certain behaviors have been held to be so "plainly anticompetitive," National Society of Professional Engineers v. United States, 435 U.S. 679, 692, 98 S. Ct. 1355, 1365, 55 L. Ed. 2d 637 (1978), and to so often "lack . . . any redeeming virtue," North Pacific Railway Co. v. United States, 356 U.S. 1, 5, 78 S. Ct. 514, 518, 2 L. Ed. 2d 545 (1958), that they are conclusively presumed to be unreasonable, Broadcast Music, Inc. v. Columbia Broadcasting System, Inc., 441 U.S. 1, 8, 99 S. Ct. 1551, 1557, 60 L. Ed. 2d 1 (1979). Horizontal price-fixing and group boycotts—the two alleged violations here—often, if not always, fall into this category of "per se" violations. In light of our disposition, we need not address Geico's argument that the per se analysis should not apply to the context of insurance companies reimbursing their insureds for the companies' obligation to pay a body shop for vehicle repairs.

HN6 Conclusory allegations of agreement or conspiracy are insufficient. As the Court held in Twombly:

[A]n allegation of parallel conduct and a bare assertion of conspiracy will not suffice. Without more, parallel conduct does not suggest conspiracy, and a conclusory allegation of agreement at some unidentified point does not supply facts adequate to show illegality. Hence, when allegations of parallel conduct are set out in order to make a § 1 claim, they must be placed in a context that raises a suggestion of a preceding agreement, not merely parallel conduct that could just as well be independent action.

550 U.S. at 556-57, 127 S. Ct. at 1966. The plaintiff has the obligation to provide "more than labels and conclusions, and a formulaic recitation of the elements of a cause of action will not do." Id. at 555, 127 S. Ct. at 1964-65.

We address first the Body Shops' claim of horizontal price-fixing conspiracy, and then turn to their claim of horizontal boycotting conspiracy. As noted above, both claims require that the Plaintiffs allege facts supporting an agreement or conspiracy among the [[**33]] Insurance Companies.

B. Horizontal Price-Fixing Conspiracy

At the outset, we address an issue regarding the complaints. The first is merely an observation of the time-worn principle that HN7 it is only the factual allegations contained therein which we must accept as true. The Body Shops' appellate briefing takes undue liberties in construing the inferences that can be fairly read from their pleadings. The district court dismissed these claims without prejudice and, therefore, the Body Shops had an opportunity to amend their complaints to include any additional allegations that may have been omitted from their initial pleadings. Having chosen not to do so, they are not permitted to simply "insert" new allegations through their appellate briefing. These gaps—between the allegations of the complaints and the allegations of the appellate briefing—are discussed, where relevant, below.<sup>13</sup>

The Body Shops identify several purported plus factors that they contend—in conjunction with their allegations of parallel [[*1263]] conduct—warrant an inference of a per se horizontal price-fixing conspiracy. We discuss each<sup>14</sup> of their purported plus factors in turn.<sup>15</sup>

<sup>13</sup> In the briefing instructions for the en banc briefs, the Body Shops were instructed to "identify the allegations [of the complaints] from which such an agreement or conspiracy can plausibly be inferred and discuss whether any asserted inference of agreement or conspiracy is 'just as much in line with a wide swath of rational competitive business strategy prompted by common perceptions of the market . . . or whether such inference is supported by allegations tending to rule out the possibility that the defendants were acting independently.'" Reluctantly, we cannot conclude that the en banc brief of the Body Shops complied with that directive. Although their brief lists numerous statements that it asserts are "specific allegations of conduct that probably do not result from . . . independent responses to common stimuli," many have no tendency to suggest an advance agreement among the insurance companies, and are thus simply irrelevant. As indicated in this opinion, others reflect facts that are simply not pled in the complaints and not reasonably inferred from the actual allegations. We also discuss in this opinion those allegations with respect to actions just as much in line with a wide swath of rational competitive business strategy and thus cannot qualify as the plus factors required for a viable claim.

<sup>14</sup> Two can be rejected outright. The Body Shops argue that they asserted "specific allegations of conduct that indicate the sort of restricted freedom of action and sense of obligation that one generally associates with agreement." However, despite arguing in their brief that representatives from non-State Farm Defendants have stated that they are restricted from altering the purported market rate unless authorized by State Farm, that allegation is nowhere to be found in the complaints. Quite the contrary, the only relevant specific allegation of fact is that the non-State Farm Insurance Companies advise the Plaintiffs that they will pay no more than State Farm pays—i.e., mere price leadership as discussed below.

The Body Shops also argue that the conspiracy is shown by the presence of a common motive, namely desire to maximize profits. However, under this logic, most businesses with similar pricing would be deemed in cahoots with each other because that is the goal of most corporations. This plus factor is more properly invoked in contexts where the motive is unique and specific to the alleged conspirators. See, e.g., Instructional Sys. Dev. Corp. v. Aetna Cas. & Sur. Co., 817 F.2d 639, 647 (10th

1. Uniformity of Price

The [**34] Body Shops argue in their brief that the Insurance Companies' conduct does "not result from chance, coincidence, independent responses to common stimuli, or mere interdependence unaided by an advance understanding among the parties" because they have "adopt[ed] a uniform price despite variables that would ordinarily result in divergent prices." This asserted plus factor consists of two components. First, the defendants must have adopted a uniform price. This component, however, is suggestive only of parallel conduct and, without more, will not justify invoking the plus factor. Accordingly, the uniform price must exist "despite variables that would ordinarily result in divergent pricing." The second component is an indicator of the agreement that makes collusion more plausible than conscious parallelism, thus moving the needle off of equipoise.

The sources on which the Body Shops rely make clear the necessity of both components. In Federal Trade Commission v. Cement Institute, 333 U.S. 683, 713, 68 S. Ct. 793, 809, 92 L. Ed. 1010, 44 F.T.C. 1460 (1948), the Supreme Court inferred an agreement where "for many years, with rare exceptions, cement has been offered for sale in every given locality at identical prices and terms by all producers." But the record evidence in that case established that "[t]housands [**35] of secret sealed bids ha[d] been received by public agencies which corresponded in prices of cement down to a fractional part of a penny." 333 U.S. at 713, 68 S. Ct. at 809. Likewise, the Body Shops quote a leading antitrust treatise for the idea that an agreement may be present if rivals establish identical prices, but they fail to grapple with the caveat [*1264] that this is only true where there are "simultaneous identical bids on a made-to-order product not readily assembled from standard and conventionally priced items." Phillip E. Areeda & Herbert Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law ¶ 1434b (3d ed. 2012).<sup>16</sup> Thus, while this so-called convergent pricing certainly is—or at least could be—a plus factor, it should only be invoked where we should otherwise expect divergent pricing. Considered in the appropriate light, the differences between the instant case and the case on which the Body Shops rely are substantial.

First, the focus in Cement Institute on "secret," "sealed," and "simultaneous" bids is crucial precisely because that is what takes the situation beyond that of mere conscious parallelism: competitors cannot consciously parallel one another if they only learn of the other's price after they have established [**36] their own. Perhaps sensing this, the Body Shops' brief argues that all of the Insurance Companies employ the same, identical "market rate" which State Farm does not make public. As an initial matter, alleging that State Farm does not publicly disclose the market rate and arguing that it is a secret are two very different things. The fact that State Farm does not issue a press release with the market rate does not foreclose the possibility that it is publicly known. This is a crucial distinction.

There are no factual allegations that the market rate is a secret. Indeed, nowhere in the complaints do the Body Shops suggest that the labor rate is a secret. Quite the opposite, the complaints reveal that State Farm must necessarily tell the rate to every repair shop in a given geographic area.

Even if it were possible to share the market rate with the Body Shops while, at the same time, keeping it a secret from the other Insurance Companies, there are no allegations at all that the other Insurance Companies knew what it was in advance. Indeed, rather than allege that all of the Insurance Companies simultaneously approached the Areeda & Herbert Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law ¶ 1434c, at 276-77 (4th ed. 2017), ¶ 1434c, at 276-77 (discussing how motivation can, in some cases, merely restate interdependence).

<sup>15</sup> In considering each plus factor, we are cognizant of the Supreme Court's admonition that antitrust plaintiffs receive "the full benefit of their proof without tightly compartmentalizing the various factual components and wiping the slate clean after scrutiny of each." Cont'l Ore Co. v. Union Carbide & Carbon Corp., 370 U.S. 690, 699, 82 S. Ct. 1404, 1410, 8 L. Ed. 2d 777 (1962). At the same time, it is undoubtedly our responsibility "to evaluate the evidence proffered by the plaintiffs not to ascertain its credibility, but instead to determine whether that evidence, if credited, 'tends to' establish a conspiracy more than it indicates conscious parallelism." Williamson Oil, 346 F.3d at 1301.

<sup>16</sup> Both Twombly and the Appellants quote from earlier editions of Areeda and Hovenkamp's Antitrust Law. However, we use the fourth edition of that treatise.

Body Shops with an identical market rate (which might possibly [**37] indicate that they had communicated in advance), the complaints allege that the other Insurance Companies simply conform to State Farm's rate—whatever that may be. Compl. ¶ 62 ("Defendants . . . specifically advised the Plaintiff they will pay no more than State Farm pays for labor."); Compl. ¶ 115 ("[D]efendants [state] that they will conform to State Farm's payment structure."). HN8<sup>17</sup> Following the example set by a competitor, without agreeing to do so in advance, is textbook "price leadership"—a practice we have repeatedly stated is insufficient to establish the existence of an agreement. See, e.g., Williamson Oil, 346 F.3d at 1301-03 ("It is well settled in this circuit that evidence of conscious parallelism alone does not permit an inference of conspiracy unless the plaintiff either establishes that . . . each defendant engaging in the parallel action acted contrary to its economic self-interest, or offers other 'plus factors' tending to establish that the defendants were not engaging merely in oligopolistic price maintenance or price leadership but rather in a collusive agreement to fix prices") (internal punctuation and citations omitted); City of Tuscaloosa, 158 F.3d at 571 ("[C]onsciously parallel behavior by oligopolists does not in itself support [**38] an inference of agreement, of 'a meeting of the minds,' any more strongly than it supports an inference of legal price maintenance or leadership."). Price leadership is comprehensively described in the leading antitrust treatise:

[*1265] The first firm in a five-firm oligopoly, Alpha, may be eager to lower its price somewhat in order to expand its sales. However, it knows that the other four firms would probably respond to a price cut by reducing their prices to maintain their previous market shares. Unless Alpha believes that it can conceal its price reduction for a time or otherwise gain a substantial advantage from being the first to move, the price reduction would merely reduce Alpha's profits and the profits of the other firms as well.

Such "oligopolistic rationality" cannot only forestall rivalrous price reductions, it can also provide for price increases through, for example, price leadership. If the price had for some reason been less than X [the price a monopolist would charge to maximize profits], firm Beta might announce its decision to raise its price to X effective immediately, or in several days, or next season. The other four firms may each choose to follow Beta's lead; if they [**39] do not increase their prices to Beta's level, Beta may be forced to reduce its price to their level. Because each of the other firms knows this, each will consider whether it is better off when all are charging the old price or price X. They will obviously choose X when they believe that it will maximize industry profits.

Phillip E. Areeda & Herbert Hovenkamp, **Antitrust Law** ¶ 1429b (4th ed. 2017).<sup>17</sup> With respect to interdependent parallelism like price leadership, the treatise notes: "The courts are nearly unanimous in saying that HN9<sup>17</sup> mere interdependent parallelism does not establish contract, combination, or conspiracy required by Sherman Act §1." Id. ¶ 1433a. This follows from the Supreme Court's holding in Twombly: "Even 'conscious parallelism,' a common reaction of firms in a concentrated market that recognize their shared economic interests and their interdependence with respect to price and output decisions is not in itself unlawful." 550 U.S. at 553-54, 127 S. Ct. at 1964 (internal quotations and punctuation omitted).

Further distinguishing our case is the fact that auto body repairs are not the type of "made-to-order product not readily assembled from standard and conventionally priced items" where we expect to see divergent [**40] pricing. On the contrary, the "products" here—cars—are so readily assembled from standard parts that their assembly-line manufacturing set the standard for other industries. That the Body Shops are repairing those cars, rather than assembling them for the first time, does not make the parts used to do so any less standard. And they are so conventionally priced that, as discussed below, the Body Shops believe that the Insurance Companies should not be allowed to deviate from third-party databases that set standardized prices. Indeed, these industry databases not only indicate standardized pricing for parts, but they also estimate repair time (labor) for particular types of repairs which are ordinary and customary repairs. Thus, while convergent pricing where it should otherwise not be expected can undoubtedly serve as a plus factor, none of the indicators to which courts and commentators have traditionally looked to support such a factor—or at least none to which the Body Shops have pointed and none that we can perceive—are present here.

The Body Shops have not pointed to any plausible reason that one should expect that prices in this market— involving standardized automobile parts and [**41] repairs—would be divergent. Quite the contrary, the Body Shops argue that the Insurance Companies should comply with several databases [*1266] that exist for the sole purpose of establishing standardized pricing. That is, the fact that the Body Shops insist that the Insurance Companies should comply with the prices published in these three separate databases demonstrates that such prices are standardized, and that one should expect convergent prices—not divergent prices.

In short, the instant case bears none of the traditional hallmarks of a situation in which uniform pricing is present in an industry where we would otherwise not expect it. Nor are any of the other reasons offered by the Body Shops suggestive of an environment in which we would expect to see divergent pricing. And without an expectation of divergent pricing, all that remains is an allegation of uniform pricing, which is indicative only of parallel conduct. Although the complaints repeatedly allege that the insurance companies have agreed and conspired with respect to price, these allegations have no basis in the facts actually alleged. They are merely conclusions and therefore are an insufficient basis on which to infer a prior [**42] agreement. Twombly, 550 U.S. at 557, 127 S. Ct. at 1966 ("[A] conclusory allegation of agreement at some unidentified point does not supply the facts adequate to show illegality.").

In this case, the Body Shops' own allegations put a nail in their coffin. Their own allegations explain why there is uniformity in price—the other Insurance Companies simply tell body shops that they will pay no more than State Farm. This is a rational and legitimate business strategy and one which involves clearly legal price leadership. Accordingly, we reject this plus factor as an indicator of the necessary agreement.

2. Uniformity of Tactics

As its second plus factor, the Body Shops argue that the Insurance Companies have engaged in uniform practices suggestive of an agreement. Several courts have found a plus factor where there is a similarity of language, terms, or conditions used by the alleged co-conspirators that would be improbable absent collusion. See, e.g., De Jong Packing Co. v. U.S. Dep't of Agric., 618 F.2d 1329, 1332-34 \(9th Cir. 1980\). Although the Body Shops' briefing describes the Insurance Companies' tactics as "the same," "identical," and part of a "script[]," the Body Shops' briefing is betrayed by their complaints, which introduce the relevant tactics as follows:

Through various methods, the [Insurance Companies] [**43] have, independently and in concert, instituted numerous methods of coercing the [Body Shops] into accepting less than actual and/or market costs for materials and supplies expended in completing repairs.

Compl. ¶ 63. There is nothing in those allegations to suggest that the Insurance Companies' tactics are uniform or that they use a script.<sup>18</sup> None of the actual allegations of the complaints suggest that language used by the several Insurance Companies was the "same" or "identical" or like a "script." Indeed in none of the five complaints do the words "same," "identical" or "script" appear in reference to the tactics used. Nor is there any other actual allegation that suggests some uniform practice that is somehow idiosyncratic and not to be expected as within the "wide swath of rational and competitive business strategy unilaterally prompted by common perceptions of the market." [Twombly, 550 U.S. at 554, 127 S. Ct. at \[\*1267\] 1964](#). Not only is there no allegation of identical or similar language, the language actually used in the complaints suggests just the opposite. As noted, ¶ 63 alleges "[t]hrough various means" and ¶ 64 alleges "[s]ome of these methods"—i.e., phrases that do not suggest that all or a substantial group of the Insurance [**44] Companies engage in all or most of the methods in strikingly similar ways.

The Body Shops argue that the Insurance Companies have engaged in uniform tactics in that they require the Body Shops: to repair faulty parts rather than install replacement parts; to install used or recycled parts; and to offer

<sup>18</sup> As for what else can be said about that allegation, the fact that the Body Shops concede that some of the alleged actions occurred "independently" is certainly noteworthy. And the allegation of concerted action is merely conclusory.

discounts and concessions. Even if there were considerable uniformity with respect to the Insurance Companies' use of such methods, that would be suggestive of an agreement only if such usage would not plausibly arise from "independent responses to common stimuli." See Twombly, 550 U.S. at 556 n.4, 127 S. Ct. at 1965 n.4 (quoting Areeda and Hovenkamp ¶ 1425). All of these purported "highly uniform" tactics are easily explained by the most common of corporate stimuli: a desire to increase profits. And while some methods of increasing profits could be so idiosyncratic as to be unlikely to arise in the absence of an agreement, this is plainly not the case here. None of these tactics could even be fairly described as novel, let alone idiosyncratic, so as to support an inference of an agreement. It can hardly be denied that repairing (rather than replacing) damaged parts, installing recycled (rather than new) parts, and requiring discounts [**45] are among the most common and time-worn methods of increasing corporate profits in any industry, let alone in an industry where parts and labor reimbursements are the primary business expenditures, and where the parts are standardized and most repairs are "ordinary and customary" with industry wide databases that provide standardized estimates.<sup>19</sup> In re Musical Instruments & Equip. Antitrust Litig., 798 F.3d 1186, 1189 (9th Cir. 2015) ("But plaintiffs' plus factors are no more consistent with an illegal agreement than with rational and competitive business strategies, independently adopted by firms acting within an interdependent market."). Thus, even if we assume considerable uniformity among the Insurance Companies with respect to requiring where possible the repair of parts (rather than using new), requiring the use of recycled parts (rather than new), and requiring discounts, there would be no basis for inferring a prior agreement because each insurance company would rationally and independently want to do precisely that. That is, independent action is at least as plausible as concerted action pursuant to prior agreement; thus nothing "tends to exclude the possibility of independent action," Twombly, 550 U.S. at 553-54, 126 S. Ct. at 1964, or "remove[s] . . . [this case] from the realm of equipoise and render[s] [**46] [this case] more probative of conspiracy than of conscious parallelism," Williamson Oil, 346 F.3d at 1301. Indeed, this is especially true in this case where the complaints repeatedly allege that the several companies say they will "conform to State Farm's payment structure." Compl. ¶ 115.

A complaint merely alleging several common and obvious industry practices should not proceed directly past a motion to dismiss and into the expensive and settlement-inducing quagmire of antitrust discovery. The Supreme Court has described precisely this problem:

[*1268] [E]ven if [defendants committed all the acts] in all the ways the plaintiffs allege, there is no reason to infer that the companies had agreed among themselves to do what was only natural anyway; so natural, in fact, that if alleging parallel decisions to resist competition were enough to imply an antitrust conspiracy, pleading a § 1 violation against almost any group of competing businesses would be a sure thing.

Twombly, 550 U.S. at 566, 127 S. Ct. at 1971 (citation omitted).

The Body Shops' briefing suggests that the Insurance Companies' tactics are highly uniform when even the complaint does not allege that. Although the Body Shops do allege uniformity of actions, no facts are actually alleged in support of this conclusion. [**47] Therefore, the allegation is merely conclusory and insufficient. Id. at 557, 127 S. Ct. at 1966. The Body Shops do not explain which of the challenged activities occurred "in concert" and which occurred "independently." And no facts are actually alleged suggesting concerted action pursuant to a prior agreement. The Body Shops rely upon several alleged tactics which are clearly common, obvious, and mainstream. An inference of prior agreement does not arise from the mere fact that several Insurance Companies adopt policies favoring use of cheaper parts and offering discounts to Insurance Companies. The Body Shops' position is inconsistent with Supreme Court precedent, especially with Twombly, as well as Eleventh Circuit precedent.

Long before Twombly clearly established what an antitrust plaintiff had to plead in order to warrant an inference of prior agreement or conspiracy for purposes of a viable claim under § 1 of the Sherman Act, both the D.C. Circuit in Proctor v. State Farm Mutual Automobile Insurance Co., 675 F.2d 308, 218 U.S. App. D.C. 289 (D.C. Cir. 1982), and the Seventh Circuit in Quality Auto Body, Inc. v. Allstate Insurance Co., 660 F.2d 1195 (7th Cir. 1981),<sup>20</sup> held in a summary judgment context that parallel conduct of insurance companies in dealing with automobile repair shops (parallel conduct the same or very similar to that alleged in the instant case) was in the self-interest of each [**48] insurance company and thus did not give rise to an inference of prior agreement or concerted action necessary to prove a horizontal price-fixing conspiracy. The D.C. Circuit held:

<sup>19</sup> As noted above, there are no actual allegations that the Insurance Companies use identical language conveying their instructions to body shops to use recycled parts, etc., nor any other actual allegation of fact suggesting that some uniform practice is somehow idiosyncratic so as to give rise to an inference of advance agreement.

There is some evidence of parallel behavior by appellees. Construing this evidence in the light most favorable to appellants, it suggests that upon occasion certain appellees used the same labor rate in writing estimates, that they had similar arrangements with repair shops that agreed to do volume work at the low rates used in their estimates, that they conducted surveys of repair shops to determine the average rate charged by shops in particular areas, and that they tended to resist price increases by repair shops. However, these alleged parallel practices, without more, cannot create an inference or a conspiracy among appellees where, as here, the practices are in the economic self-interest of each of the individual appellees. The practices are as consistent with independent as with concerted actions. Unless an insurance company is willing to pay whatever price is charged at any given repair shop, it stands to reason that it would conduct surveys to determine the rates charged by repair shops. It is equally [**49] understandable that a company would, in an effort to control costs, resist price increases and write estimates using the lowest rates acceptable to a sufficient number of quality garages. [*1269] It also makes economic sense for an insurance company to make arrangements with certain repair shops that agree to do work at the rates used by the company in writing estimates in exchange for volume referrals by the company.

675 F.2d at 334; see also Workman v. State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co., 520 F.Supp. 610, 621 \(N.D. Cal. 1981\) (holding, in the same context of insurance companies dealing with automobile repair shops, that parallel conduct very similar to that alleged in the instant case alone does not create an inference of impermissible conspiracy because "[s]uch conduct is in the economic self-interest of each individual insurance company"). All three of these cases so held on the basis of such parallel conduct alone, without the additional nail-in-the-coffin of our plaintiffs' case—i.e., the follow-the-leader practices in our case which conclusively explain why the Insurance Companies here engage in such parallel conduct. As discussed above, it is clearly established that such follow-the-leader practices are legal and do not, by themselves, give rise to an inference of prior agreement. [**50] In other words, our case is not only controlled by Twombly but our case is a fortiori from the three cited cases in this same context of an insurance company's dealings with automobile repair shops.

For the foregoing reasons, both of the Body Shops' first two purported plus factors—identity of price and identity of tactics—are mere parallel conduct and do not support their attempt to allege the necessary agreement or conspiracy.

3. Contrary to Economic Interest

The Body Shops' brief suggests that the Insurance Companies' adherence to State Farm's artificial "market rate" and other payment structures is in contradiction to the industry databases, and by implication is against their economic self-interest. HN10[<sup>20</sup>] Courts have recognized a company's actions that were against its self-interest can constitute a plus factor. See, e.g., In re Flat Glass Antitrust Litigation, 385 F.3d 350, 360 \(3d. Cir. 2004\). Courts and commentators have further observed that this plus factor often restates interdependence in the context of alleged price-fixing. Id. at 361; see also Areeda & Hovenkamp, supra ¶ 1434c1.

This argument exists only by implication because the Body Shops merely entitle the section of their brief "contrary to []economic self-interest." However, they do not explain how the fact that the other Insurance [**51] Companies follow the lead of State Farm rather than adhering to the industry databases is against their own self-interest. Nothing in the complaints indicates to us that the actions of the Insurance Companies are against their economic interests. The pages in the complaint cited in the brief do not illuminate the argument either. Moreover, it is hard to imagine how choosing the least costly method of repair, thereby reducing the reimbursement, is contrary to an insurance company's economic self-interest. Thus, we reject this suggested plus factor.

<sup>20</sup> By coincidence, the Illinois Body Shop in this Seventh Circuit case has a name very similar to that of the New Jersey Quality Auto Shop in the instant case.

4. Opportunity to Exchange Information

The Body Shops also assert in their brief that they alleged that the Insurance Companies "have exchanged or have had the opportunity to exchange information relative to the conspiracy." Appellants' En Banc Br. at 27.<sup>21</sup> However, the argument they make in their brief to support their assertion is: "identical labor rates, [*1270] identical refusal to compensate for the same processes and procedures, identical false excuses for such refusal, uniform adherence to the refusal to alter labor rates until State Farm does is indicative of shared information and agreement overall and agreement on the language to be used in [**52] refusing payment for repair services (a 'script')."Id. In other words, they argue that because the Insurance Companies acted in identical ways, they must have been meeting and exchanging information.

There are two problems with this argument. First, the complaints make no factual allegations that the Insurance Companies either exchanged information, employed identical tactics, followed a script, or declined to pay for the same repairs. Second, even if the actual allegations did indicate considerable uniformity of price and uniformity of tactics, there would be no inference that this was the result of exchange of information for the same reasons discussed above. That is, even if there were considerable uniformity in requiring, for example, repair of parts (not replacement), use of recycled parts (not new), and requiring discounts, such actions just as plausibly result from independent resort to common and rational business practices as from exchange of information. And, as noted above, this is especially true in light of repeated allegations in the complaints that the several Insurance Companies say they will "conform to State Farm's payment structure." Compl. ¶ 115.<sup>22</sup>

<sup>21</sup> Although the Body Shops assert in their brief that the Insurance Companies share with each other the identity of problem body shops and other information, the actual complaints make no such allegations.

<sup>22</sup> To the extent that the Body Shops point to their statement in the complaint that "members of the insurance industry meet regularly to discuss such matters in and amongst themselves," Compl. ¶ 115, this statement is so vague as to be useless as support for a conspiracy. The Supreme Court in Twombly advised that plaintiffs' pleading of meetings between defendants needs to provide some degree of detail about the meetings in order to satisfy Rule 8's notice requirements. 550 U.S. at 565 n.10, 127 S. Ct. at 1970 n.10. The Court faulted the plaintiff in Twombly for not providing any details about when, where or with whom in particular the meetings took place. Id.; <sup>21</sup> see also id. at 567 n.12, 127 S. Ct. at 1971 n.12 (suggesting that membership in a trade association is not significant). Referring to Twombly and its footnote 10, Areeda and Hovenkamp opine: "In sum, a conceded 'opportunity' to conspire was completely insufficient absent additional allegations about when and where such opportunity occurred, and about which of the defendants' employees participated." Areeda & Hovenkamp, supra, ¶ 1417b. Indeed, the treatise concludes:

Even if "opportunity" were defined narrowly and limited to proven interfirm contacts, deeming opportunity to be prima facie proof of conspiracy would lead to widespread condemnation of procompetitive collaborations. Once competitors assemble for a lawful activity, they would be presumptive conspirators . . . on every parallel action subsequently occurring. Because parallel pricing is common even in competitive markets, juries would be entitled to infer that competitors had agreed on prices, and price agreements are condemned absolutely. Thus, the effect of holding opportunity sufficient would be to discourage all trade associations, industry gatherings, or joint ventures. Thereby to imperil reasonable and procompetitive collaborations would be inconsistent both with the purposes of the antitrust laws and with well-established Supreme Court permission for many kinds of collaboration among competitors. Mere conspiratorial opportunity is routinely and correctly held insufficient to support a conspiracy finding.

Id. Accord Almanza v. United Airlines, Inc., 851 F.3d 1060, 1071 (11th Cir. 2017) (applying the Twombly standard, and holding "Defendants' participation in trade associations . . . do not show a meeting of the minds"); Am. Dental Ass'n v. Cigna Corp., 605 F.3d 1283, 1295 (11th Cir. 2010) ("[I]t was well-settled before Twombly that participation in trade organizations provides no indication of conspiracy").

5. Conclusion with respect to Horizontal Price-Fixing Conspiracy

In sum, the Body Shops have alleged only parallel conduct, and have not [**54] alleged [*1271] any facts supporting plus factors that would tip the scale from equipoise towards conspiracy sufficiently to prevent dismissal of this count. Accordingly, we affirm the district court's dismissal of this claim.

C. Group Boycott

HN11 A group boycott is included within the Sherman Act's prohibition of any unreasonable contract, combination, or conspiracy in the restraint of interstate trade or commerce. 15 U.S.C. §§ 1, 1013\(b\); St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. v. Barry, 438 U.S. 531, 541, 98 S. Ct. 2923, 2929, 57 L. Ed. 2d 932 \(1978\). A boycott consists of "pressuring a party with whom one has a dispute by withholding, or enlisting others to withhold, patronage or services from the target." Barry, 438 U.S. at 541, 98 S. Ct. at 2930. The "ultimate target" of the agreement can be either a competitor or "a customer of some or all of the [boycotters] who is being denied access to desired goods or services because of a refusal to accede to particular terms set by some or all of the [boycotters]." Id. at 543, 98 S. Ct. at 2931. For boycotting to be per se illegal, it must involve "horizontal agreements among direct competitors." NYNEX Corp. v. Discon, Inc., 525 U.S. 128, 135, 119 S. Ct. 493, 498, 142 L. Ed. 2d 510 \(1998\). In other words, as with the price-fixing claim of the Body Shops, their conspiracy to boycott claim requires as a prerequisite sufficient allegations of an agreement or conspiracy. Again the crucial, antecedent question is whether the alleged actions of the [**55] Insurance Companies stem from independent actions or from prior agreement.

The boycott allegations in this case are even weaker than the allegations of price-fixing. Neither the "steering" allegations nor the "boycott" section of the complaint allege even in conclusory fashion that there was an agreement to do so. And even if we incorporate the conclusory allegations of an agreement from the price-fixing sections of the complaint, the instant complaint would still fall short of even the "few stray statements [that] speak directly of agreement" which the Supreme Court has held are insufficient. Twombly, 550 U.S. at 564, 127 S. Ct. at 1970.

The Body Shops have asserted in their appellate briefing facts that are simply unsupportable on this record. Indeed, although the Body Shops have argued on appeal that "[a]ll of the Defendants utilize the same script containing identical false and misleading steering statements," both the word "script" and the word "identical" are conspicuously absent from the complaints. Quite the contrary, in the only factual allegations with regard to steering insureds away from their shops, the Body Shops allege that:

Examples of this practice include telling insureds and/or claimants that a particular chosen [**56] shop is not on the preferred provider list, that quality issues have arisen with that particular shop, that complaints have been received about that particular shop from other consumers, that the shop charges more than any other shop in the area and these additional costs will have to be paid by the consumer, that repairs at the disfavored shop will take much longer than at other, preferred shops and the consumer will be responsible for rental car fees beyond a certain date, and that the Defendant cannot guarantee the work of that shop as it can at other shops.

Compl. ¶ 83. From this, it is argued in the Body Shops' brief that the Insurance Companies have engaged in "identical" tactics.

There is nothing in these allegations that would suggest action in concert or "rule out the possibility that the defendants were acting independently." Twombly, 550 U.S. at 553-54, 127 S. Ct. at 1964. There is no allegation that all or most of the Insurance Companies used most or all of the foregoing excuses in urging insureds [*1272] against patronizing a shop. There is no allegation that the several companies used the same language. There is no allegation suggesting any other uniformity that would be unexpected or idiosyncratic.

Moreover, even if there were [**57] considerable uniformity with respect to those reasons that an insured should not use a particular shop, there could hardly be reasons more expected or more commonly used than those alleged by the Body Shops. That the shop is not on the preferred provider list, that there are quality issues, that it charges more, and/or that it takes longer are reasons that any company would be expected to use in an effort to persuade an insured not to use a particular shop. The alleged boycotting methods are not so idiosyncratic that they suggest conspiracy. To the contrary, they are methods that would logically be employed by any insurer to dissuade its insureds from using a disfavored shop. In other words, even a considerable uniformity with respect to the use of these reasons would fall well within the "wide swath of rational and competitive business strategy unilaterally prompted by common perceptions of the market." *Id. at 554, 127 S. Ct. at 1964.*

For the same reasons that it forecloses the Body Shops' price-fixing claim, *Twombly* forecloses the Body Shops' group boycott claims; their allegations allege only parallel conduct which is insufficient to create an inference of prior agreement or conspiracy. The Seventh Circuit in [**\[\*\*58\] *Quality Auto, 660 F.2d at 1206,***](#) and the Northern District of California in *Workman, 520 F. Supp. at 623,* rejected similar group boycott claims in this same context involving parallel conduct on the part of several insurance companies in their dealings with automobile repair shops.

For the foregoing reasons, we affirm the district court's dismissal of the Body Shops' group boycott claims.

V. THE STATE LAW CLAIMS

The Body Shops bring three state law claims for unjust enrichment, quantum meruit, and tortious interference. We address each in turn.

A. Unjust Enrichment Claims

The Plaintiffs in all four states bring claims of unjust enrichment against these Defendants. Under the laws of the four states relevant here—Kentucky, Missouri, New Jersey, and Virginia—the elements of the cause of action include: (1) the plaintiff conferred a benefit on the defendant; (2) the defendant was aware thereof; and (3) it would be unjust to permit the defendant to retain the benefit.<sup>23</sup> [**\[\*1273\]**](#) The gist of the Plaintiffs' claims is that the several Body Shops conferred a benefit on the several Insurance Companies, the latter were aware thereof, and allowing the Defendants to retain the benefit without full payment would be unjust.

Fatal to these unjust enrichment [**\[\*\*59\]**](#) claims is the fact that each of the five complaints alleges that each Insurance Company advised the Body Shops that it would pay no more than State Farm. Because the Plaintiff in each complaint knew before it undertook the repair that each Defendant-Insurance Company would pay no more than State Farm would pay, it clearly was not unjust for the Insurance Company to pay only that amount and no more. Without satisfying the unjust element, the cause of action fails even if we assume the other elements can be satisfied.

<sup>23</sup> See *Jones v. Sparks, 297 S.W.3d 73, 78 \(Ky. Ct. App. 2009\)* (HN12)  "For a party to prevail under the theory of unjust enrichment, they must prove three elements: (1) benefit conferred upon defendant at plaintiff's expense; (2) a resulting appreciation of benefit by defendant; and (3) inequitable retention of benefit without payment for its value."); *Binkley v. Am. Equity Mortg., Inc., 447 S.W.3d 194, 199 \(Mo. 2014\)* ("An unjust enrichment claim requires a showing that: (1) the plaintiff conferred a benefit on the defendant; (2) the defendant appreciated the benefit; and (3) the defendant accepted and retained the benefit under inequitable and/or unjust circumstances") (quotation omitted); *VRG Corp. v. GKN Realty Corp., 135 N.J. 539, 641 A.2d 519, 526 \(N.J. 1994\)* ("To establish unjust enrichment, a plaintiff must show both that defendant received a benefit and that retention of that benefit without payment would be unjust."); *Schmidt v. Household Fin. Corp., II, 276 Va. 108, 661 S.E.2d 834, 838 \(Va. 2008\)* ("To state a cause of action for unjust enrichment, [a plaintiff has] to allege that: (1) he conferred a benefit on [the defendant]; (2) [defendant] knew of the benefit and should reasonably have expected to repay [plaintiff]; and (3) [defendant] accepted or retained the benefit without paying for its value."). Although the Virginia rule statement does not expressly require that retention of the benefit be unjust, such a requirement is routinely read into the elements by Virginia courts. See, e.g., *R.M. Harrison Mech. Corp. v. Decker Indus., Inc., 75 Va. Cir. 404, 2008 WL 10669311, at \*3 \(2008\)* ("The circumstances of the acceptance or retention of the benefit must render it inequitable for the defendant not to compensate the plaintiff.").

The Body Shops' only response to this fatal flaw is that they could not turn away sixty to ninety-five percent of the available repair business,<sup>24</sup> and therefore their contract to accept the amount State Farm would pay was an invalid contract. However, the Body Shops cite no law—in any of the four states—to the effect that market power alone is sufficient to invalidate a contract voluntarily entered into. Our independent research has also uncovered no such case. Moreover, we have already concluded that the Body Shops have failed to allege facts warranting an inference that the Insurance Companies agreed to or engaged in a conspiracy. Thus, the Body Shops' premise of market [**60] power may also collapse in any event.

We conclude that the Body Shops' unjust enrichment claims are wholly without merit.

B. Quantum Meruit Claims

The Body Shops in four of the five complaints<sup>25</sup> before us also bring quantum meruit claims arising under the laws of Kentucky, New Jersey, and Virginia. HN13↑ To state a cause action for quantum meruit, the Body Shops were required to allege, among other elements, that the circumstances reasonably notified the Insurance Companies that the Body Shops expected to get paid (Virginia and Kentucky) or that they reasonably expected to be compensated (New Jersey).<sup>26</sup> They cannot do so here.

As discussed above, the Body Shops specifically alleged that each of the Insurance Companies informed them that they would pay no more than State Farm. The Body Shops then undertook the repairs. Having fully informed the Body Shops of what they were willing to pay, the circumstances could have only reasonably informed the Insurance Companies that the Body Shops expected to be paid the amount State Farm would pay. This is fatal to the Virginia and Kentucky claims. Likewise, having been fully informed that the Insurance Companies would only pay the amount State Farm would [**61] pay, the Body Shops could not have reasonably expected to receive more than that amount. This is fatal to the New Jersey claim.

[*1274] The Body Shops have cited no authority—and our independent research has uncovered none—to support their position that they can contract to repair the car for a specified amount, do the repair, and then sue, claiming that they should be paid more. The only analogous case law our research has uncovered suggests just the opposite of the Body Shops' position: when a plaintiff has a reasonable expectation of some amount, they cannot reasonably expect to receive additional compensation and therefore cannot bring suit to recover it.<sup>27</sup>

We conclude that the quantum meruit claims of the Body Shops in the four complaints are wholly without merit.

C. Tortious Inference Claims

Although we have concluded—as did the district court—that the unjust enrichment and quantum meruit claims of the Body Shops are wholly without merit, the situation with respect to their tortious interference claims is more

<sup>24</sup> Aside from this allegation relating to market power, the Body Shops have alleged no concrete facts that might give rise to an inference of force.

<sup>27</sup> See, e.g., Hindsight Sols., LLC v. Citigroup Inc., 53 F. Supp. 3d 747, 776 \(S.D.N.Y. 2014\) (unjust enrichment claim failed because plaintiff could not have reasonably expected to receive additional compensation); Rodriguez v. Ready Pac Produce, 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 64139, 2014 WL 1875261, at \*3 \(D.N.J. May 9, 2014\) (dismissing unjust enrichment claim where plaintiff "would have no reasonable expectation to receive additional compensation for hours worked in excess of a particular amount per week").

complicated. The district court expressly adopted and approved the magistrate judge's dismissal of the tortious interference claims as a violation of the group pleading doctrine. [**62] The district court held:

Consistent with this Court's prior orders, a general allegation that some unidentified Defendants—or all Defendants—interfered with some unidentified customers of some unnamed plaintiff does not satisfy the pleading standard of *Ashcroft v. Iqbal*, 556 U.S. 662, 129 S. Ct. 1937, 173 L. Ed. 2d 868 \(2009\). Because the Plaintiffs' allegations are too vague to satisfy *Rule 8\(a\)*, Judge Smith recommends dismissal of all the tortious interference claims. (June 3 Report at 39).

Doc. 222 at 7. Although the district court invoked *Iqbal*, we understand its ruling to be based on a very narrow group pleading rationale, rather than a standard-issue *Twombly-Iqbal* determination of the plausibility of the tortious interference claims in light of the well-pleaded factual allegations.<sup>28</sup> The gist of the problem with group pleading—as the magistrate judge noted earlier on page 9 of that same June 3 report—is the failure to give fair notice to each named defendant of the claims against it. For example, a complaint may fail to provide fair notice of the claims by failing to specify which defendants interfered with which plaintiffs. *Weiland v. Palm Beach Cty. Sheriff's Office*, 792 F.3d 1313, 1323 \(11th Cir. 2015\). Because the district court rested its dismissal of the tortious interference claims on this narrow group pleading rationale, and because [**63] we think the district court will be well situated to determine the status of these claims on [*1275] remand, we need not address the merits of the tortious interference claims or even the general contours of the doctrine of group pleading. We also do not address the relationship between that doctrine and the *Twombly-Iqbal* plausibility pleading standard or, for that matter, whether the allegations of tortious interference meet the plausibility standard. We address only the above-quoted narrow basis on which the district court relied.

We cannot agree with the district court that the instant five complaints' failure to name a plaintiff, to identify specific defendants, or to identify specific customers in the allegations relating to tortious interference deprived the Defendants of fair notice. Contrary to the suggestion of the district court, there is no problem with respect to "some unnamed plaintiff." In four of these five cases, there is only one plaintiff and thus it is absolutely clear that the person or entity interfered with is the single named plaintiff in each complaint. Although the fifth case<sup>29</sup> involves four named plaintiffs, they are four body shops located in close proximity [**64] to each other in Virginia Beach and Suffolk, Virginia. It is amply clear in this fifth complaint that *each* Defendant-Insurance Company is alleged to have tortiously interfered with each of these four Virginia body shops. The allegations provide fair notice that each of the Plaintiffs is claiming that each of the named Defendants is tortiously interfering in the manner alleged with the named Plaintiff in each of the four single-plaintiff complaints and with the four named Plaintiffs in the fifth case.<sup>30</sup>

We are also unpersuaded by the district court's concern that the allegations in the complaints concern "some unidentified Defendants—or all Defendants." The substance of the alleged tortious interference is as follows. As alleged in ¶¶ 107-08 of the representative Quality Auto complaint, each complaint alleges that the named Insurance Companies—by means of a campaign of misrepresentation of facts about poor quality, etc.—have repeatedly steered their insureds away from each named Plaintiff to punish that Plaintiff for complaints about or refusal to submit to the price ceilings and other practices imposed by the named Defendants. [*65] Although these <sup>28</sup> We note that, in a report and recommendation adopted by the district judge in dismissing another complaint in this multidistrict litigation, the magistrate judge concluded that the allegations adequately alleged the elements of Tennessee tortious interference and did state a plausible claim if taken as true, but determined that the complaint "suffer[ed] from a different problem"—i.e., the group pleading issue. *Brewer Body Shop v. State Farm Mut. Ins. Co.*, 101 F. Supp. 3d 1256, 1265-66 \(M.D. Fla. 2015\). We take and mean to imply no position on the correctness of that plausibility holding. We mention it only to observe that the magistrate judge seems to have considered the group pleading "problem" as a separate matter from a run-of-the-mill *Twombly-Iqbal* analysis.

<sup>29</sup> The fifth case, *Pappas Body Shop, Inc., v. State Farm Mutual Automobile Insurance Co.*, No. 15-14179, has four listed plaintiffs.

<sup>30</sup> Counting the named Insurance Companies in the same corporate family as a single defendant, as the district court did earlier in its opinion, Doc. 222 at 4, there are between twelve and twenty named defendants in the five complaints.

allegations are aimed generally at "the Defendants," each complaint stipulates that, "[w]here the term 'Defendants' is used within this Complaint, 'Defendants' is intended to and does mean each and every Defendant named in the caption above." In other words, the named Defendants<sup>31</sup> in each complaint had fair notice that "each and every" one of them is alleged to have improperly steered its own insureds away from the named Body Shops in each complaint because that Body Shop was not compliant with that Insurance Company's preferred reimbursement rate and other cost-saving practices.

Thus, of the potential deficits identified by the district court—i.e., general allegations about "unidentified Defendants," "unidentified customers," and "unnamed plaintiff[s]"—the only possible defect remaining is the failure to identify specific insureds/potential customers who were thus steered. We cannot conclude that the Body Shops' failure to identify particular potential customers who were steered away constitutes a failure to give each defendant fair notice of the claim against it. It is not [*1276] the potential customer who is the target of the alleged tortious interference; it is the targeted [**66] Body Shop. A potential customer may—but very well may not—tell the Body Shop that he or she was steered away. On the other hand, each Insurance Company, or its claims adjusters, will know whether the company engages in such a practice, and will know whether each named Plaintiff in the five complaints was noncompliant with that company's preferred practices and, most important, whether its insureds were steered away from that Plaintiff Body Shop.

In sum, we are not persuaded by the district court's grounds for concluding that the allegations of tortious interference in each of these five cases violated the group pleading doctrine, i.e., failed to give fair notice to each defendant of the claim being made against it. Accordingly, we vacate the judgment of the district court only with respect to the tortious interference claims in each of these five cases, and we remand for further proceedings. We note that in vacating the judgment of the district court with respect to the tortious interference claim, we have ruled only on the district court's stated group pleading rationale. We note also, because the federal antitrust claims have been eliminated from the case, the district court may well [**67] decide to exercise its discretion to decline to exercise pendent jurisdiction of these state law tortious interference claims, pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1367.<sup>32</sup>

VI. CONCLUSION

We affirm the judgment of the district court dismissing all of the claims except the tortious interference claims, which we vacate and remand for further proceedings not inconsistent with this opinion.

AFFIRMED in PART, VACATED in PART, and REMANDED.

JORDAN, Circuit Judge, joined by MARTIN, Circuit Judge, concurring:

I concur in Parts II, III, and V of the court's opinion. And given the pleading standards that the Supreme Court has put in place for antitrust cases, see Bell Atlantic Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 553-70, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007), and the complaint's failure to include important factual allegations on which the plaintiffs now rely, I concur in the judgment as to Parts I and IV.

<sup>32</sup> We note that declining to exercise pendent jurisdiction is only one of the various options available to the district court on remand. We emphasize that we vacate the judgment of the district court with respect to the tortious interference claims only on the above described basis—i.e., our rejection of the narrow theory of group pleading upon which the district court relied. We decline to address other possible theories on the basis of which that judgment might have been affirmed (whether on the basis of the merits or other pleading deficiencies, including even other possible group pleading theories).

I have some concerns about a court relying on its own independent research with respect to facts on the ground, particularly in a motion to dismiss context. I am not convinced that we should be citing to a book on collision repairs, see Maj. Op. at 5, to understand how the auto repair industry actually operates. This is not the sort of adjudicative fact—a fact which is "relevant to a determination of the claims presented [\[\*\*68\]](#) in a case," Dippin' Dots, Inc. v. Frosty Bites Dist., 369 F.3d 1197, 1204 \(11th Cir. 2004\)—which can be judicially noticed under Rule 201 of the Federal Rules of Evidence.

The taking of judicial notice is "a highly limited process" because it "bypasses the safeguards which are involved with the usual process of proving facts by competent evidence in district court." Shahar v. Bowers, 120 F.3d 211, 214 \(11th Cir. 1997\) (en banc). In my view, how the auto repair industry works is not a matter that "can [\[\*1277\]](#) be accurately and readily determined from sources whose accuracy cannot reasonably be questioned." Rule 201\(b\)\(2\). Cf. A & H Sportswear, Inc. v. Victoria's Secret Stores, Inc., 166 F.3d 191, 196 \(3d Cir. 1999\) (denying motion to take judicial notice that swimwear and lingerie are separate industries because "it requires a factual determination [which is] inappropriate for judicial notice").

Dissent

WILSON, Circuit Judge, dissenting in part:

Anticompetitive exercises of buyer market power often go unpunished.<sup>1</sup> Not because the antitrust laws and existing antitrust jurisprudence cannot address them, but because it is often counterintuitive. To the average non-efficiency minded observer, condemning a practice that results in low prices seems like bad policy. But low prices do not tell the whole story. Antitrust law—with its goal to enable optimal market output through competition—demands a closer look. It is in that context that this case asks us to determine [\[\*\*69\]](#) when an antitrust complaint alleging an anticompetitive exercise of collective buyer market power can survive a motion to dismiss.

At this early stage, the law requires us to view the complaint as a whole, accept all the allegations as true,<sup>2</sup> draw all reasonable inferences in favor of the body shops, and only then decide whether the allegations, taken together, plausibly suggest an agreement. See Bell Atl. Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 558, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 \(2007\). Following that directive, and viewed in the proper economic context, the body shops' allegations state a price-fixing claim under the Sherman Act.<sup>3</sup>

The majority portrays this as an easy case for condemning an antitrust action under Twombly, finding a lack of so-called "plus factors" required to allege a plausible agreement under Sherman Act § 1. And if the law and facts were as simple as described by the majority, I would be inclined to agree. But the majority's narrow view of Twombly

<sup>2</sup> Relatedly, Twombly instructs us to resist reasoning backwards from our own version of the facts or knowledge of the industry at issue. See Maj. Op. at 5 (citing Alfred M. Thomas & Michael Jund, Collision Repair and Refinishing: A Foundation Course for Technicians 7 (2014)); Maj. Op. at 22 ("[T]he 'products' here—cars—are so readily assembled from standard parts that their assembly line manufacturing set the standard for other industries."); Maj. Op. at 27 (noting that for the auto insurance industry, "parts and labor reimbursements are the primary business expenditures"). Imagine the already difficult job of a district court analyzing an antitrust complaint if that was Twombly's directive: not just to analyze the facts alleged in the complaint in front of it, but to embark on its own independent fact-finding mission to determine whether other facts might exist that discredit those we must accept as true.

does not represent the balance the Supreme Court struck between the cost of antitrust discovery and the burden on antitrust plaintiffs—the "group of private attorneys general," [**70] Illinois Brick Co. v. Illinois, 431 U.S. 720, 746, 97 S. Ct. 2061, 52 L. Ed. 2d 707 \(1977\)—tasked with enforcing the antitrust laws.

I. The Basic Economics of Buyer Cartels The body shops plausibly allege an agreement when viewed in the context of buyer, rather than seller, cartels. The difference has confused many courts. See Phillip E. Areeda & Herbert Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law ¶ 350b (4th ed. 2017) ("Clearly mistaken is the occasional court that thinks low buying prices procompetitive [*1278] regardless of the restraints on competition that lead to such prices . . . . The suppliers' loss also constitutes antitrust injury, for it reflects the rationale for condemning buying cartels—namely, suppression of competition among buyers, reduced upstream and downstream output, and distortion of prices."); W. Penn Allegheny Health Sys., Inc. v. UPMC, 627 F.3d 85, 103-04 \(3d Cir. 2010\) (reversing district court and rejecting its reliance on the argument that "low reimbursement rates translate into low premiums for subscribers" because "[s]uch shortchanging poses competitive threats similar to those posed by conspiracies among buyers to fix prices").

Buyer cartels cause "suboptimal output, reduced quality, allocative inefficiencies, and (given the reductions in output) higher prices for consumers in the long run." W. Penn, 627 F.3d at 104. An oligopsony market is one in which a cartel of relatively [**71] few buyers has significant market power in the buying market. Compared to a competitive market, oligopsony generates infracompetitive<sup>4</sup> input prices and a smaller quantity of the input demanded. See generally Areeda & Hovenkamp, supra, ¶¶ 2002, 2011. Using body shop labor as an example, a simplified causal chain goes like this: A group of auto insurers form a cartel and collectively agree on the maximum price they will pay for body shop labor. The cartel collectively dominates the market for the purchase of body shop labor. The cartel also collectively dominates the market for the sale of auto insurance. There are no substitute "inputs" for auto body shop labor—the ability to sell auto insurance depends on the ability of each insurer to purchase auto body labor. The colluding insurers pay a lower price for body shop labor, which, given the simple mechanics of supply (production) and demand (price), drives down the quantity of auto body shop labor produced. In other words, in response to the artificially low market price of labor, auto body shops produce fewer units (hours) of body shop labor. The first anticompetitive effect, then, is below-market body shop labor output.

With fewer units of body shop labor now [**72] on the market, insurers have fewer units available to purchase. Because the insurers purchase fewer units of body shop labor, they have fewer units to incorporate into their final "product"—auto insurance. Assuming the colluding insurers have collective market power in the selling market—the market for auto insurance—the necessary result is that insurers must either: (1) decrease the number of "units" of labor included in each insurance policy (say by decreasing the quality or number of repairs so that each repair requires fewer labor hours); or (2) include the same number of units of labor in insurance policies and sell fewer insurance policies, which would require a price increase. The second anticompetitive effect, then, is on consumers of auto insurance: lower quality auto insurance (insurance that covers lower quality or fewer repairs) and increased prices for the same quality insurance.

The upshot is that the colluding auto insurers can increase profits by purchasing their inputs (body shop labor and repair parts) at a price below the competitive level and selling their output product (auto insurance) at a price above the competitive level.<sup>5</sup>

<sup>5</sup> Because the auto body shops allege a per se illegal agreement among the auto body insurers to fix prices, they are not required adequately to allege anticompetitive harm. Even so, the anticompetitive effects of monopsony power are well-documented, both in the context of horizontal cartel agreements and horizontal mergers. See, e.g., Todd v. Exxon Corp., 275 F.3d 191 \(2d Cir. 2001\) (Sotomayor, J.) (holding employees' allegations of information exchanges and oligopsonistic market sufficient to state claim of wage suppression conspiracy); Law v. Nat'l Collegiate Athletic Ass'n, 134 F.3d 1010 \(10th Cir. 1998\) (condemning agreement among colleges to limit salaries of basketball coaches); United States v. Anthem, Inc., 855 F.3d 345, 378, 428 U.S. App. D.C. 403 \(D.C. Cir. 2017\) (Kavanaugh, J., dissenting) (disagreeing on the availability of efficiency defense to [*1279] With this framework in mind, [***73] it is easy to see why insurers have a motive to form an agreement. Every colluding insurer is better off, at least in the short run, if they all comply with the agreement: the insurers can only continue to purchase inputs at infracompetitive levels if the other insurers do not cheat on the agreement and purchase more units, driving up the market rate. But every insurer also has an incentive to cheat. If one insurer purchases more hours of body shop labor, it can sell either higher quality insurance (insurance that covers more or higher quality repairs) or it can sell more units of insurance. "The individual cartel member experiences the full benefit of [purchasing more inputs] but only a portion of the burden of the [increase] in the market price, which is shared by all cartel members . . . . [I]f everyone cheats without limit, the market moves back to the competitive price." Areeda & Hovenkamp, supra, ¶ 2002d.

II. The Twombly Standard

We review motions to dismiss de novo. Jacobs v. Tempur-Pedic Intern., Inc., 626 F.3d 1327, 1332 (11th Cir. 2010). To state a claim under Sherman Act § 1, a complaint must contain "allegations plausibly suggesting (not merely consistent with) agreement." Bell Atl. Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 558, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007).<sup>6</sup> "Plausibility is the key," and the well-pleaded allegations "must nudge the claim across the line [***74] from conceivable to plausible." Jacobs, 626 F.3d at 1333 (internal quotation marks and citations omitted). "But no part of the Twombly-Iqbal pleading standard requires a plaintiff to provide evidence for the factual allegations in a complaint before they are entitled to the assumption of truth at the motion-to-dismiss stage." Hi-Tech Pharms., Inc. v. HBS Int'l Corp., 910 F.3d 1186, 1197 (11th Cir. 2018) (internal quotation marks omitted). "And, of course, a well-pleaded complaint may proceed even if it strikes a savvy judge that actual proof of [*1280] those facts is improbable, and that a recovery is very remote and unlikely." Twombly, 550 U.S. at 556 (internal quotation marks omitted).

III. Allegations Plausibly Suggesting an Agreement

Because price fixers typically conceal their conspiracies, courts may infer an agreement from circumstantial evidence. See id. at 553. To survive a motion to dismiss, the plaintiff must allege "parallel conduct" plus "further factual enhancement." Id. at 557. These so-called "plus factors" serve as proxies for direct evidence of an agreement. We have never prescribed a rigid set of factors or the weight of any particular factor. Instead, "any showing that tends to exclude the possibility of independent action can qualify as a plus factor." Williamson Oil Co. v. Phillip Morris U.S.A., 346 F.3d 1287, 1301 (11th Cir. 2003) (emphasis added) (internal [***75] quotation marks omitted). The importance of any factor rests on its tendency to show that the defendants' behavior is plausibly consistent with a pricefixing conspiracy, as opposed to a rational and competitive business strategy, independently adopted by competing firms. See id.

A. Consciously Parallel Conduct

merger of two health insurers but recognizing that if the merged insurer "would obtain provider rates that are below competitive levels because of its exercise of unlawful monopsony power against providers, that could be a problem, and perhaps a fatal one for this merger"); W. Penn Allegheny Health Sys., Inc. v. UPMC, 627 F.3d 85 (3d Cir. 2010) (sustaining complaint that hospital system and health insurer conspired to suppress reimbursement rates paid to healthcare providers).

<sup>6</sup> Given the majority's extensive reliance on Twombly's antitrust holding, it is worth noting how the antitrust allegations here are unlike those in Twombly. The complaint in Twombly alleged that four dominant telephone companies agreed not to compete by dividing the market into exclusive selling territories. Twombly, 550 U.S. at 551. The totality of the allegations to support an agreement were that: the four phone companies did not expand into one another's territories, each defendant excluded other companies from their respective territories, and the CEO of one of the telephone companies had once stated that expanding to its rivals' territories "might be a good way to turn a quick dollar but that doesn't make it right." Id. at 550. "[P]rice fixing is a very different practice, producing different kinds of signals, from the market division scheme alleged in Twombly. Most importantly, parallel lockstep pricing requires interdependence, while simultaneous failure to enter one another's markets creates no such inference . . . . By contrast, the Twombly complaint, which alleged little more than a parallel failure to enter one another's markets, did no more than describe behavior that was equally consistent with collusion and competition." Areeda & Hovenkamp, supra, ¶ 1434c2.

The complaints are replete with factual allegations showing consciously parallel conduct, including perhaps the quintessential example of it: all the defendants routinely and uniformly refused to pay more than State Farm. The insurers also uniformly: used the same formula for reimbursing paint jobs, refused to reimburse body shops for a specific set of repairs, and refused to reimburse shops for new or higher quality parts.<sup>7</sup>

B. Plus Factors

"An allegation of parallel conduct . . . gets the complaint close to stating a claim, but without some further factual enhancement it stops short of the line between possibility and plausibility of entitlement to relief." Twombly, 550 U.S. at 557 (internal quotation marks omitted). With the allegations already "close to stating a claim," id., we must decide [*1281] whether the body shops allege plus factors sufficient to nudge their allegations [**76] of conspiracy into a plausible entitlement to relief. The majority thinks they did not. But viewed as a whole, the body shops have done enough to proceed to discovery.

1. Plus Factor: Customary Indications of Traditional Conspiracy

A widely accepted plus factor is allegations showing customary indications of a traditional conspiracy. See Areeda & Hovenkamp, supra, ¶ 1434b. Conduct that "does not result from chance, coincidence, independent responses to common stimuli, or mere interdependence" falls into this category. Id. at ¶ 1425. This conduct includes allegations suggesting the defendants adopted uniform prices and practices despite variables that would ordinarily, absent an agreement, cause those prices and practices to diverge. See id. In other words, conduct that conflicts with "what that defendant's legitimate economic self-interest would be under the assumption that it acted alone." City of Tuscaloosa v. Harcros Chems., Inc., 158 F.3d 548, 570 n.33 \(11th Cir. 1998\).

i. Uniform Pricing Behavior

"[T]he fact that competitors have knowingly charged identical prices is a neutral fact in the absence of evidence which would lead one to expect that the prices would have been different if truly independent decisions had been made." Id. at 571 (emphasis added) (internal quotation marks omitted) (reversing [**77] the district court's grant of summary judgment for defendants on price-fixing claim). There are allegations in the complaints at issue plausibly suggesting prices would be different absent an agreement.<sup>8</sup>

<sup>7</sup> In discussing uniformity of tactics, the majority notes: "Not only is there no allegation of identical or similar language, the language actually used in the complaints suggests just the opposite. As noted, ¶ 63 alleges '[t]hrough various means' and ¶ 64 alleges '[s]ome of these methods'—i.e. phrases that do not suggest that all or a substantial group of the Insurance Companies engage in all or most of the methods in strikingly similar ways." Maj. Op. at 26. That portion of the complaint says: "Through various methods, the Defendants have, independently and in concert, instituted numerous methods of coercing the Plaintiff into accepting less than actual and/or market costs for materials and supplies," and then the next paragraph lists "[s]ome of these methods." Compl. ¶¶ 63, 64. These two sections could reasonably be read to mean the Defendants have all instituted various methods of coercing the body shops—rather than the majority's reading that each of the Defendants instituted varying methods. While far from an object of clarity, if we view this section as a whole, the majority's reading is implausible. This paragraph begins the section titled "Suppression of Repair and Material Costs." The rest of the section describes the "various methods," and clarifies that "the Defendants" engage in those methods. See, e.g., Compl. ¶ 65 ("In addition to the above, the Defendants have repeatedly and intentionally failed to abide by industry standards for auto repairs."); Compl. ¶ 67 (noting that "the Defendants will refuse to allow the body shop to perform required procedures and processes"); Compl. ¶ 68 ("A non-exhaustive list of procedures and processes the Defendants refuse to pay and/or pay in full is attached hereto as Exhibit '3.'"). "As we have explained, a court reviewing a motion to dismiss must draw all reasonable inferences from the factual allegations in a plaintiff's complaint in the plaintiff's favor." Bailey v. Wheeler, 843 F.3d 473, 482 \(11th Cir. 2016\).

<sup>8</sup> The majority finds it significant that this case does not contain the precise market factors that made convergent pricing suspect in prior cases—the "secret," "sealed," and "simultaneous" bids that suggested the identical prices in FTC v. Cement Inst., 333 U.S. 683, 713, 68 S. Ct. 793, 92 L. Ed. 1010, 44 F.T.C. 1460 \(1948\), were the product of collusion. See Maj. Op. at 18-23. While the Supreme Court used these factors to show the dubious provenance of the prices in Cement Institute, they certainly are not the only way—or, in the seventy years since the Supreme Court's decision in that case, the typical way—to do so. But see Maj.

First, all the insurers charge the same rate as State Farm without independent market information or verification of State Farm's calculation of labor rates. Second, the insurers all use State Farm's geographic market definitions for determining the labor rate, without determining whether the insurer may have different relationships with the shops surveyed in that area. Third, State Farm's rate is not in fact the market rate: State Farm arbitrarily calculates and unilaterally modifies it to reach an infracompetitive figure. The body shops allege that each insurer uniformly conformed to this identical arbitrary and infracompetitive [*1282] market rate without conducting their own surveys of the body shops they use or drawing their own market boundaries using the location of their insureds or their DRP shops. Each insurer, then, is not merely responding to "common stimuli" in the market. See *Twombly, 550 U.S. at 556 n.4* (quoting Areeda & Hovenkamp, supra, ¶ 1425).

Why would an insurer blindly accept a rate [*78] determined arbitrarily by one of its competitors and divorced from the true competitive rate? Collusion—and with it the assurance that other competitors will do the same—might not be the only possible answer, but it is a plausible one. See, e.g., *Lifewatch Servs. Inc. v. Highmark Inc., 902 F.3d 323, 333-35 \(3d Cir. 2018\)* (finding plus factor where insurers adopted a model policy's approach to reimbursement of certain medical device with "near total uniformity" and reasoning that it was improbable "that the same coverage decision would be reached by nearly all the [insurers] independently" because some other insurers, independent medical review boards, and some medical studies concluded the device was medically necessary or met the standard of care); *In re Text Messaging Antitrust Litig., 630 F.3d 622, 628 \(7th Cir. 2010\)* (finding a plus factor where all defendants adopted a "uniform pricing structure" that raised prices in the face of falling costs, suggesting it was the "sort of restricted freedom of action and sense of obligation that one generally associates with agreement" (internal quotation marks omitted)); cf. *Proctor v. State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co., 675 F.2d 308, 334, 218 U.S. App. D.C. 289 \(D.C. Cir. 1982\)* (noting that "[u]nless an insurance company is willing to pay whatever price is charged at any given repair shop, it stands to reason that it would conduct surveys to determine the rates charged by repair shops," [*79] after discussing evidence that the defendant insurers conducted their own independent surveys of body shop rates, which sometimes led to the same rate).

Another element of the insurers' pricing behavior makes it competitively suspect. While the majority correctly states that requiring discounts is "among the most common and time-worn methods of increasing corporate profits," Maj. Op. at 27, uniformly adhering to a rate that drives the input price below cost is neither common nor consistent with rational independent business activity. The uniform "market rate" is below cost—including "artificially created less-than-market labor rates" and "less than actual and/or market costs for materials and supplies."<sup>9</sup> The insurers have uniformly and persistently kept the labor rate at this infracompetitive level, even in the face of rising input costs and an awareness that the price was below the body shops' costs. The body shops allege that "multiple body shops have attempted to raise their labor rates and advised State Farm of such." Compl. ¶59. But State Farm tells each body shop, falsely, that "they are the only one to demand a higher labor rate." Compl. ¶ 59.

Op. at 19 ("[T]he Body Shops quote a leading antitrust treatise for the idea that an agreement may be present if rivals establish identical prices, but they fail to grapple with the caveat that this is only true where there are 'simultaneous identical bids on a made-to-order product not readily assembled from standard and conventionally priced items.'" (emphasis added) (quoting Areeda & Hovenkamp, supra, ¶ 1434b)). Just after the portion quoted by the majority, the same treatise gives a host of other examples that may amount to "parallelism that is too close for coincidence and beyond explanation by mere recognized interdependence" including "conspiratorial opportunity, unexplained meetings, furtive behavior, discussions and information exchanges, ambiguous participant admissions, solicitations of agreement, sham bids, threats of common action directed against a potential victim, identical bids, refusals to bid, proved conspiracy or competition in other markets or times." Areeda & Hovenkamp, supra, ¶ 1434b. The allegations here make other cases better analogues. See, e.g., *In re Text Messaging Antitrust Litig., 630 F.3d 622 \(7th Cir. 2010\)*.

<sup>9</sup> See Compl. ¶ 61 ("net effect of this tactic is to allow State Farm to manipulate the 'market rate' and artificially suppress the labor rate"; Compl. ¶ 62 ("These Defendants have agreed to join forces with State Farm, the dominant market holder, and each other to coerce the Plaintiff into accepting the artificially created less-than-market labor rates"; Compl. ¶ 63 ("Defendants have, independently and in concert, instituted numerous methods of coercing the plaintiff into accepting less than actual and/or market costs for materials and supplies")); Compl. ¶ 64 ("requiring discounts and/or concessions, even when doing so requires the shop to operate at a loss"); Compl. ¶ 71 (Defendants universally used formula for reimbursing paint repairs "which compensates the shops for only half the actual cost on average").

[*1283] In a buyers' cartel, uniform infracompetitive [***80] input prices in the face of rising input costs plausibly suggests an agreement among buyers. Cf. City of Tuscaloosa v. Harcros Chems., Inc., 158 F.3d 548, 572-73 (11th Cir. 1998) (holding in the context of a sellers' cartel that parallel increased prices despite falling costs, high incumbency rates, and awareness of other sellers' prices plausibly suggest conspiracy not to compete on price); Areeda & Hovenkamp, supra, ¶ 1434d3 (citing City of Tuscaloosa favorably for this plus factor); In re Flat Glass Antitrust Litig., 385 F.3d 350, 360-61 (3d Cir. 2004) (finding, in the context of a sellers' cartel, "[e]vidence that the defendant acted contrary to its interests means evidence of conduct that would be irrational assuming that the defendant operated in a competitive market. In a competitive industry, for example, a firm would cut its price with the hope of increasing its market share if its competitors were setting prices above marginal costs."); Starr v. Sony BMG Music Entm't, 592 F.3d 314, 324 (2d Cir. 2010) (finding a plus factor where defendants raised price above competitive market price despite falling costs, and uniformly included contract term that industry commentator said was unprofitable, reasoning that "some form of agreement among defendants would have been needed to render the enterprises profitable"); In re Text Messaging Antitrust Litig., 630 F.3d 622, 628 (7th Cir. 2010) (Posner, J.) (finding a plus factor where allegations included that "in the face of steeply falling costs, [***81] the defendants increased their prices . . . because falling costs increase a seller's profit margin at the existing price, motivating him, in the absence of agreement, to reduce his price slightly in order to take business from his competitors, and certainly not to increase his price").

The economic basis for this conclusion is well established. Recall the incentives created in a cartel. Every insurer is better off if they all comply with the agreement: the insurers can only continue to purchase inputs at infracompetitive levels if the other insurers do not cheat on the agreement by purchasing more hours of body shop labor and driving up the market rate. But every insurer also has an incentive to cheat. If one insurer purchases more hours of body shop labor, it can steal business from its rivals by selling either higher quality insurance (insurance that covers more or higher quality repairs) or more units of insurance. "The individual cartel member experiences the full benefit of [purchasing more inputs] but only a portion of the burden of the [increase] in the market price, which is shared by all cartel members . . . . [I]f everyone cheats without limit, the market moves back to the [***82] competitive price." Areeda & Hovenkamp, supra, ¶ 2002d; see also id. at ¶ 1434c2 (noting that In re Text Messaging relied on "sound economic theory about collusion and the behaviors that are very difficult to explain in its absence"). Sustained infracompetitive input prices requires agreement among purchasers, and, as a result, allegations of infracompetitive input rates in an oligopsonistic purchasing market at least constitute a plus factor that, along with the other allegations plausibly suggests collusion.<sup>10</sup>

[*1284] ii. Uniform Refusal to Follow Industry Standards and Uniform Quality

<sup>10</sup> To argue that the identical prices here are not cause for concern, the majority cites the Seventh Circuit's decision in Quality Auto Body, Inc. v. Allstate Insurance Co., 660 F.2d 1195 (7th Cir. 1981). Quality Auto Body was an appeal from the grant of summary judgment for the insurers. The plaintiff body shop conducted significant discovery, including each insurer's rates, depositions of their executives, and the results of State Farm's surveys. See Quality Auto Body, 660 F.2d at 1200 ("The uncontested affidavits and deposition testimony submitted by defendants establish that each company has unilaterally developed its own claim-handling procedures."). The Seventh Circuit found that, contrary to the plaintiff's complaint, the evidence after discovery revealed that the labor rates used by the insurers were variable and that each insurer "uses a different method for determining the lowest prevailing competitive rate." Id. The complaint that apparently warranted discovery merely alleged that the insurers followed a "common formula" for calculating rates. Id. Similarly, in the other case the majority cites for this proposition, Proctor v. State Farm Mutual Automobile Insurance Co., 675 F.2d 308, 316, 218 U.S. App. D.C. 289 (D.C. Cir. 1982), the D.C. Circuit similarly reviewed an order granting summary judgment. Noting this important distinction, the court reasoned that "[i]n considering whether to grant summary judgment in this case the District Court relied . . . on the length of time . . . and the ample opportunities for discovery that the appellants had to 'unearth evidence to support their allegations.'" Proctor, 675 F.2d at 316 (internal quotation marks and citations omitted). The results of discovery—all the body shops here seek—from a pair of cases in the 1980s can hardly undercut the allegations we must accept as true at the motion to dismiss stage. And if the body shops here are similarly unsuccessful at uncovering evidence of a conspiracy during discovery, they too would lose at summary judgment.

First, the insurers uniformly require repair shops to use used or imitation parts, even where new or OEM parts are necessary to put the vehicle in preaccident condition. Second, the insurers refuse to reimburse for repairs that, in the "shop's professional opinion" are required for a safe and quality repair. Third, the insurers unvaryingly refuse to reimburse the body shops for the same list of repairs and services, even where a listed repair or service is necessary to return a given vehicle to pre-accident condition.<sup>11</sup> Fourth, the insurers refuse to comply with industry standards, including three separate independent [**83] auto collision repair databases. The databases include the "ordinary and customary repairs, repair time (labor) and materials necessary to return a vehicle to its pre-accident condition." Both the insurers and body shops agree that the databases are the industry standard. State Farm even assured at least one state insurance regulator that it would begin to abide by the databases, but still does not.

This behavior is at least plausibly inconsistent with rational business behavior—that is, inconsistent with the normal incentive to compete with rivals on a profitable aspect of quality to gain market share. See *Starr v. Sony BMG Music Entm't, 592 F.3d 314, 327 \(2d Cir. 2010\)* ("[I]t would not be in each individual defendant's self-interest to sell [a product] at prices, and with [certain contract terms], that were so unpopular as to ensure that 'nobody in their right mind' would want to purchase [it], unless the defendant's rivals were doing the same."). For example, the "Defendants' conduct runs counter to the millions of dollars insurers spend to gain or maintain market share by advertising 'new car replacement' and 'accident forgiveness' policy terms." Compl. ¶ 118; see also Compl. ¶ 117 (noting "the incentives insurers have to gain market share [**84] by advertising themselves as the insurer that does not cut corners on safety and quality of repair work").

These allegations plausibly suggest an agreement. See *Lifewatch Servs., 902 F.3d at 334-35* (holding defendant insurers' identical refusal to reimburse a product [*1285] that "many sophisticated third parties," including physicians and state medical review boards, agreed was medically necessary was a plus factor); *Evergreen Partnering Grp., Inc. v. Pactiv Corp., 720 F.3d 33, 49-51 \(1st Cir. 2013\)* (finding a plus factor where defendants acted against their independent interests by uniformly refusing to adopt a policy "standard in the industry" and would have "resulted in a higher volume of customer sales due to the attractiveness of potential savings and environmental benefits").

2. Plus Factor: Meeting Often to Discuss Prices

Merely belonging to an industry trade association does not in itself constitute a plus factor. *Am. Dental Ass'n v. Cigna Corp., 605 F.3d 1283, 1295-96 \(11th Cir. 2010\)*. "But we expect competitors to meet together only minimally and to assemble publicly for relatively open meetings conducted with a particular and justifiable purpose in mind. To the extent that rivals move away from this model, their activity becomes less consistent with normal competition and more consistent with a conspiracy to suppress it." Areeda & Hovenkamp, supra, ¶ 1417b (emphasis added). The body shops allege [**85] that insurance industry meetings happen "approximately once a month," are closed to non-members, and that a State Farm representative admitted it would discuss with other insurers whether to begin using third-party reimbursement metrics to set rates.<sup>12</sup> Compl. ¶ 74 (emphasis added).

<sup>11</sup> The majority's assertion that "the complaints make no factual allegations that the Insurance Companies . . . declined to pay for the same repairs" is simply not true. See Compl. ¶ 68 ("A non-exhaustive list of procedures and processes the Defendants refuse to pay and/or pay in full is attached hereto as Exhibit '3.'"); Exhibit 3 (listing repairs); Compl. ¶ 67 ("In many instances, the Defendants will refuse to allow the body shop to perform required procedures and processes, thereby requiring body shops to perform less-than-quality work or suffer a financial loss on a given repair.").

<sup>12</sup> Compl. ¶ 74 (State Farm "assured those present, and the Department of Insurance representative that it would begin abiding by those database estimates and stated it would raise the matter at its insurance industry meetings, held locally approximately once a month"); Compl. ¶ 75 ("The [auto body shop] association representative present for the meeting, John Mosley, invited State Farm to attend those [auto body shop] Association meetings if State Farm would permit members of the Association to attend the insurance meetings. Mr. Simpkins [the State Farm representative] refused."). The majority opinion ignores these allegations, instead pointing to the summary paragraph that notes "members of the insurance industry meet regularly to discuss such matters in and amongst themselves." Compl. ¶ 115. The majority, disregarding the other related allegations—and thus failing to follow Twombly's directive to view the complaint as a whole—argues that "this statement is so vague as to be useless as support for a conspiracy." Maj. Op. at 33 n.22.

State Farm's promise to raise the reimbursement issue at the industry meeting suggests that State Farm sought the acceptance of the trade association before adopting database estimates as the method of calculating reimbursement, and that decisions about the system of calculating rates are made collectively, not unilaterally by each insurer. These allegations plausibly suggest a conspiracy to suppress competition rather than independent and rational "follow the leader" activity. See [*1286] Osborn v. Visa Inc., 797 F.3d 1057, 1067, 418 U.S. App. D.C. 193 \(D.C. Cir. 2015\) ("But the Plaintiffs here have done much more than allege 'mere membership.' They have alleged that the member banks used the bankcard associations to adopt and enforce a supracompetitive pricing regime for ATM access fees."); In re Text Messaging Antitrust Litig., 630 F.3d 622, 628 \(7th Cir. 2010\) (holding plaintiffs plausibly stated a claim for conspiracy when complaint alleged that "defendants belonged to trade association and exchanged price information directly at association meetings"); [**86] Evergreen Partnering Grp., Inc. v. Pactiv Corp., 720 F.3d 33, 47-48 \(1st Cir. 2013\) (finding plus factor where complaint alleged that defendants attended an industry meeting where two dominant defendants "put forward their position that [adopting a certain policy] was not an option," and the court "could infer that their prominent place in the organization would place some pressure on the other producer defendants to conform with their position"); Lifewatch Servs. Inc. v. Highmark Inc., 902 F.3d 323, 334 \(3d Cir. 2018\) (finding plus factor where insurers met several times a year to set model policy terms on the reimbursement of a particular medical device, and the insurers uniformly followed the model policy even though it was not binding them).

The body shops raise more suspicion about these industry meetings by giving an example of how the insurance industry has used similar meetings to suppress competition in this precise way in the past. Allegations of "opportunities for abuse" are "not to be ignored when the opportunity is proved to have been utilized in the past." See Am. Tobacco Co. v. United States, 328 U.S. 781, 796, 66 S. Ct. 1125, 90 L. Ed. 1575 \(1946\) (emphasis added); cf. Williamson Oil Co. v. Phillip Morris U.S.A., 346 F.3d 1287 \(11th Cir. 2003\) (refusing to allow evidence of the defendants' industry's history of antitrust violations at the summary judgment stage because the class had failed to direct it to any precedent holding a history of violations suggests a present violation); [**87] Areeda & Hovenkamp, supra, ¶1432b (criticizing Williamson Oil because "whether a history of past collusion is relevant to likelihood of current collusion is a question of fact, not of law"). The body shops allege—and attach a 1963 consent decree to the complaints to show—that in the past, the auto insurance industry has used trade associations to fix auto body repair costs, including auto body labor, using the same methods alleged here. Compl. ¶¶ 87-89; Exhibit 4 (listing various auto insurer trade associations as defendants).

3. Facilitating Factor: Market Structure

Several of our sister circuits have held that allegations showing a market susceptible to collusion, while not alone sufficient, can nudge other factual allegations tending to show an agreement across the line to plausibility. See, e.g., In re Text Messaging Antitrust Litig., 630 F.3d 622, 627-28 \(7th Cir. 2010\) ("Parallel behavior of a sort anomalous in a competitive market is thus a symptom of price fixing, though standing alone it is not proof of it; and an industry structure that facilitates collusion constitutes supporting evidence of collusion."); SD3, LLC v. Black & Decker \(U.S.\) Inc., 801 F.3d 412 \(4th Cir. 2015\); Evergreen Partnering Grp., Inc. v. Pactiv Corp., 720 F.3d 33, 48 \(1st Cir. 2013\); Starr v. Sony BMG Music Entm't, 592 F.3d 314, 323 \(2d Cir. 2010\); In re Flat Glass Antitrust Litig., 385 F.3d 350, 360-61 \(3d Cir. 2004\) (considering market structure a plus factor for summary judgment analysis pre-Twombly). Market structure susceptible to collusion is not independently a plus [**88] factor, but it can place other allegations "in a context that raises a suggestion of preceding agreement." Twombly, 550 U.S. at 557 n.4; see

The complaint does not specifically allege whether other defendants attend the "insurance industry meetings" in question. We do know that "the Insurance Companies account for sixty-five to eighty-five percent of the insurance market in each of the relevant states." Maj. Op. at 6. It is a reasonable inference that at least some participate in "insurance industry meetings." But regardless, State Farm's admission is important because it suggests State Farm seeks approval from other insurance industry members on its rate setting mechanism. That admission—made in front of several witnesses—alone suggests the rate that the insurers uniformly follow is not derived independently by State Farm with the other insurers simply following its lead. See Compl. ¶ 114 (referring to the "concert of action among the Defendants and co-conspirators to control and suppress automobile damage repair costs"); Compl. ¶ 115 ("Evidence of this conspiracy or combination includes, but is not limited to, admission before witnesses that members of the insurance industry meet regularly to discuss such matters in and amongst themselves").

generally Areeda & Hovenkamp, supra, ¶¶ 2002f(1)-(8) (listing [*1287] factors that make a market susceptible to collusion including: a small number of firms with large aggregate market share; a fungible service, considered in the context of standardization efforts; few avenues for non-price competition; and high elasticity of supply).

The complaint suggests that at least some of these market factors are present. First, accounting for those entities with common headquarters,<sup>13</sup> roughly a dozen insurers control between 70 and 95 percent of the body shops' revenue. See Todd v. Exxon, 275 F.3d 191, 210 (2d Cir. 2001) (Sotomayor, J.) (finding fourteen defendants that employed 80-90% of industry's workforce sufficient). Second, the as the majority seems to recognize, Maj. Op. at 23, the insurers have implemented standardization mechanisms that make comparing their inputs easier—including establishing a quality standard by uniformly refusing to reimburse for the same repairs. See Areeda & Hovenkamp, supra, ¶ 1435b ("[A]greed steps might be taken to reduce the product or transactional variety that impedes rivals' ability to . . . compare transactions, or to detect 'cheating' from parallel [**89] uniformity" such as "agreements standardizing the product . . . or creating formulas for the computation of freight rates or other elements of price"); Todd, 275 F.3d at 210 (finding jobs at various firms fungible because "the sophisticated techniques employed by defendants to account for the differences among jobs" made coordinating price possible). Finally, labor is the quintessential example of inelastic supply because "an hour not worked today can never be recovered." Todd, 275 F.3d at 211. A plaintiff alleging a per se antitrust violation need not allege anticompetitive harm in a precisely defined market like a plaintiff proceeding under the rule of reason. See Arizona v. Maricopa Cty. Med. Soc., 457 U.S. 332, 347, 102 S. Ct. 2466, 73 L. Ed. 2d 48 (1982) ("We have not wavered in our enforcement of the per se rule against price-fixing."); Areeda & Hovenkamp, supra, ¶ 307d2 ("If the claim is made under the per se rule, proof of a relevant market and power are not required by the substantive law and thus need not be pled."). But what we do know from the complaint suggests this market could be susceptible to collusion. While certainly not a plus factor on its own, the market structure facilitates the plausibility of an agreement.

4. Facilitating Factor: Exchange of Price Information

Because it allows firms to detect cheating and easily set [**90] rates, the apparent exchange of price information between the insurers also facilitates collusion and can also nudge other allegations into plausible claims of an agreement. See Areeda & Hovenkamp, supra, ¶ 1435a. First, all the insurers charged the same "market rate" as State Farm. Second, only State Farm collects market information from the body shops used to determine that rate. Third, State Farm's rate is artificial, arbitrarily adjusted, and not otherwise derived from actual market information that would be available to all insurers, seemingly ruling out the possibility that each insurer is simply responding to common market stimuli to set its rate. Fourth, the other insurers do not verify the accuracy or validity of State Farm's rate with the body shops. Fifth, the body shops are prohibited from discussing their individual labor rates with each other. And finally, State Farm admitted to discussing a method for setting [*1288] reimbursement rates at industry meetings.

These allegations lead to two possible explanations. Either the other insurers blindly accept the body shops' recitation of State Farm's rate without confirming or otherwise discussing that rate with State Farm, or State Farm shares its rate with [**91] the other insurers. The latter is at least a reasonable inference from the allegations in the complaint. This apparent exchange and use of rate information nudges the allegations of an agreement closer to plausibility. See In re Flat Glass Antitrust Litig., 385 F.3d 350, 369 (3d Cir. 2004).

Like standardization, the exchange of rate information is also a facilitating practice because it makes it easier to detect cheating. If an insurer decided to cheat on the agreement by offering a higher price to body shops and purchasing more units of body shop labor, it might drive the actual market rate above State Farm's artificial "market rate." The body shops allege that State Farm collects shop-wide and market-wide rate data and speaks with body shops that report rates it unilaterally considers too high. State Farm's survey could reveal the rate increase occasioned by the cheating insurer, and its conversations with body shops could reveal the offender. See In re Text Messaging Antitrust Litig., 630 F.3d 622 (7th Cir. 2010) (market structure that enables cartel members "to be able to detect 'cheating'" facilitates collusion). Again, the exchange of rate information alone does not constitute a plus factor, but it is a well-accepted facilitating practice that can tip other plus factors into suggesting a plausible agreement. [**92]

IV. Conclusion

None of this is to suggest that any of these plus factors or facilitating factors, standing alone, would allow the plaintiff in another case to survive a motion to dismiss. The plus factor inquiry is wholistic. We cannot analyze each possible plus factor in isolation, accept or reject it, and move on to the next. Instead, we view all the possible plus factors and the allegations that support them in their proper economic context. And only then we decide, whether, viewed as a whole, there is enough to "nudge the claim across the line from conceivable to plausible." Jacobs, 626 F.3d at 1333 (internal quotation marks and citations omitted).

Antitrust laws are often underenforced against anticompetitive exercises of buyer market power. And yet, under the majority's interpretation of the Twombly standard, never has it been harder for an antitrust plaintiff to proceed to discovery. "The plaintiffs have conducted no discovery. Discovery may reveal the smoking gun or bring to light additional circumstantial evidence that further tilts the balance in favor of liability." In re Text Messaging Antitrust Litig., 630 F.3d 622, 629 \(7th Cir. 2010\). Discovery might uncover, for example, that the insurers agreed at industry meetings to use the same market rate, same reimbursement [**93] formulas, and same standards of quality. It might reveal exchanges of rate information, attempts to punish cheating insurers, or communications between insurers about successfully maintaining infracompetitive labor rates. And it might not. But "[a]ll that we conclude at this early stage in the litigation is that the . . . complaint provides a sufficiently plausible case of price fixing to warrant allowing the plaintiffs to proceed to discovery." Id. Because the majority incorrectly reaches the opposite conclusion, I respectfully dissent.

MEMORANDUM OPINION

This lawsuit involves claims by pro se Plaintiffs Aaron and Carolyn Mulvey that Defendants American Airlines Inc. ("America"), Delta Air Lines Inc. ("Delta"), Southwest Airlines Co. ("Southwest"), and United Airlines, Inc. ("United") violated the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. §§ 1, 3, by "artificially inflating prices and conspiring with one another to commit fraud on the plaintiffs."<sup>1</sup> Complaint, ECF No. 1, ¶ 2; see Pls.' First Amended Complaint, ECF No. 19 (incorporating by reference the allegations of the Complaint). Pending before this Court is Defendants American Airlines, Inc. and Delta Air Lines Inc's [9] Motion to Dismiss, which alleges that [*2] Plaintiffs lack standing under Article III and antitrust laws. Upon consideration of the pleadings,<sup>2</sup> the relevant legal authorities, and the record as it

---

- Plaintiffs' Complaint, ECF No. 1 ("Pls.' Compl."); currently stands, the Court GRANTS Defendants American Airlines, Inc. and Delta Air Lines Inc's [9] Motion to Dismiss and dismisses without prejudice Plaintiffs' claims against these two Defendants.

I. BACKGROUND

Plaintiffs' case was transferred to this Court based upon American, Delta and United "fil[ing] a Notice of Potential Tag-Along Action with the Judicial Panel on Multidistrict Litigation ("JPML")." Joint Stipulation Extending Time [*3] to Respond to Complaint, ECF No. 4 (extending the time for Defendants American and Delta to respond to the Complaint); see In Re Domestic Airline Travel Antitrust Litigation, 15mc1404 (CKK). In the underlying MDL action referenced above, Defendants Southwest and American have entered into Settlement Agreements with the Plaintiffs' Class Counsel, and notification of the settlements was provided to putative class members. According to Plaintiffs' Class Counsel, an opt-out request was received from the Plaintiffs in this case, Aaron and Carolyn Mulvey, and accordingly, these Plaintiffs are not part of the settlement class in the underlying MDL action.

On January 25, 2019, Defendants American and Delta filed their [9] Motion to Dismiss, On January 31, 2019, this Court issued an Order notifying the pro se Plaintiffs that they had until February 25, 2019 to respond to the [9] Motion to Dismiss, and furthermore, that such response should include "either an Amended Complaint, or a precise statement of the nature of the claims they are making in their Complaint and the legal grounds in order to assist the Court and parties in determining f[Plaintiffs'] claims." Order, ECF No. 16. Plaintiffs [*4] responded to the Motion to Dismiss by filing a two-page First Amended Complaint, which was accepted by this Court for filing on March 4, 2019, despite several procedural deficiencies including Plaintiffs' failure to include a certificate of service, failure to request leave to amend pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 15 \(a\)\(2\), and the questionable timeliness of the filing, which was received in the Clerk's Office on February 26, 2019.<sup>3</sup> That First Amended Complaint incorporates by reference the allegations in Plaintiffs' original Complaint, and it adds the following paragraph:

Plaintiffs hereby supplement Plaintiff's Original Complaint and additionally allege that they do have Article III and Antitrust standing. Specifically, the Plaintiffs purchased airline tickets from both Delta Airlines Co. and American Airlines, Inc. and have in turn suffered concrete harm. While the plaintiffs frequently travel on Southwest Airlines, the plaintiffs purchased airfare from defendants Delta Airlines Co. and American Airlines, Inc. and have in turn been harmed. These allegations in supplement to the plaintiffs' original complaint filed at cause number 3:18-cv-3038, in the Northern District of Texas, establish that the Plaintiff has [*5] both Article III standing and Antitrust standing.

Plaintiffs' First Amended Complaint, ECF No. 19, at 1-2. Defendants filed their [18] Reply in Support of their Motion to Dismiss or, in the Alternative, Motion to Dismiss the First Amended Complaint.

- Motion to Dismiss by Plaintiffs American Airlines, Inc. and Delta Air Lines Inc. ("Defs.' Mot."), ECF No. 9, the Memorandum in Support of the Motion to Dismiss, ECF No. 9-1 ("Defs' Memo."), and the Errata to that Motion, ECF No. 10 (correcting the signature pages);
  - Plaintiffs' First Amended Complaint, ECF No. 19 (which incorporates by reference their Complaint) ("Pls' First Am. Compl."); and
  - Defendants' Reply in Support of their Motion to Dismiss or, in the Alternative, Motion to Dismiss the First Amended Complaint, ECF No. 18 (Defs.' Reply").

In an exercise of its discretion, the Court finds that holding oral argument in this action would not be of assistance in rendering a decision. See LCvR 7(f).

<sup>3</sup> This Court's Order Establishing Procedures, ECF No. 14, at ¶ 7(A) states that "Motions for extensions of time must be filed at least four (4) business days prior to the first affected deadline."

When a motion to dismiss is filed, a federal court is required to ensure that it has "the 'statutory or constitutional power to adjudicate [the] case[.]'" Morrow v. United States, 723 F. Supp. 2d 71, 77 \(D.D.C. 2010\) (quoting Steel Co. v. Citizens for a Better Env't, 523 U.S. 83, 89, 118 S. Ct. 1003, 140 L. Ed. 2d 210 \(1998\)). "Federal courts are courts of limited jurisdiction" and can adjudicate only those cases or controversies entrusted to them by the Constitution or an Act of Congress. Kokkonen v. Guardian Life Ins. Co. of Am., 511 U.S. 375, 377, 114 S. Ct. 1673, 128 L. Ed. 2d 391 \(1994\). "In an attempt to give meaning to Article III's case-or-controversy requirement, the courts have developed a series of principles termed 'justiciability doctrines,'" including the doctrines of standing and ripeness. Nat'l Treasury Employees Union v. United States, 101 F.3d 1423, 1427, 322 U.S. App. D.C. 135 \(D.C. Cir. 1996\) (citing Allen v. Wright, 468 U.S. 737, 750, 104 S. Ct. 3315, 82 L. Ed. 2d 556 \(1984\)).

A. Standing Under Article III

"Article III of the Constitution limits the 'judicial power' of the United States to the resolution of 'cases' and 'controversies.'" Valley Forge Christian Coll. v. Ams. United for Separation of Church & State, Inc., 454 U.S. 464, 471, 102 S. Ct. 752, 70 L. Ed. 2d 700 \(1982\). A case or controversy exists only if the plaintiff has standing, which is a "predicate to any exercise of [the Court's] jurisdiction." Dominguez v. UAL Corp., 666 F.3d 1359, 1361, 399 U.S. App. D.C. 92 \(D.C. Cir. 2012\). Because standing is a [*6] "threshold jurisdictional requirement," a court may not assume that a plaintiff has standing to proceed to evaluate a case on its merits. Bauer v. Marmara, 774 F.3d 1026, 1031, 413 U.S. App. D.C. 338 \(D.C. Cir. 2014\). A plaintiff "bears the burden of showing that he has standing for each type of relief sought." Summers v. Earth Island Inst., 555 U.S. 488, 493, 129 S. Ct. 1142, 173 L. Ed. 2d 1 \(2009\). If standing "is lacking, then the dispute is not a proper case or controversy, [and] the courts have no business deciding it or expounding the law in the course of doing so." Dominguez, 666 F.3d at 1361 (alteration in original, quotation omitted). "[E]very federal court has a special obligation to satisfy itself of its own jurisdiction before addressing the merits of any dispute." Dominguez, 666 F.3d at 1362 (quotation omitted).

To establish constitutional standing, a plaintiff bears the burden of demonstrating that it "(1) suffered an injury in fact, (2) that is fairly traceable to the challenged conduct of the defendant, and (3) that is likely to be redressed by a favorable judicial decision." Spokeo, Inc. v. Robins, U.S. , 136 S. Ct. 1540, 1547, 194 L. Ed. 2d 635 \(2016\), as revised (May 24, 2016) (citing Lujan, 504 U.S. at 560-61 \(1992\)); Andrx Pharms., Inc. v. Biovail Corp. Int'l, 256 F.3d 799, 806 & n.9, 347 U.S. App. D.C. 178 \(D.C. Cir. 2001\) ("As in any civil action for damages, the plaintiff in a private antitrust lawsuit must show that the defendant's illegal conduct caused its injury . . . The plaintiff's first step is to plead an injury-in-fact.") At the pleading stage, this requires Plaintiff to "clearly [*7] . . . allege facts demonstrating' each element." Spokeo, 136 S. Ct. at 1547 (quoting Warth v. Seldin, 422 U.S. 490, 518, 95 S. Ct. 2197, 45 L. Ed. 2d 343 \(1975\)). Plaintiff cannot "rely on a bare legal conclusion" to establish an injury-in-fact. Maya v. Centex Corp., 658 F.3d 1060, 1068 \(9th Cir. 2011\); see Martin-Trigona v. Fed. Reserve Bd., 509 F.2d 363, 367, 166 U.S. App. D.C. 30 \(D.C. Cir. 1974\) (in determining standing, conclusory statements are insufficient allegations of an injury in fact).

1. Injury in Fact

The critical question in this case centers around injury in fact, which is the "[f]irst and foremost" element of standing. Spokeo, 136 S. Ct. at 1547 (quoting Steel Co. v. Citizens for a Better Env't, 523 U.S. 83, 103, 118 S. Ct. 1003, 140 L. Ed. 2d 210 \(1998\) (alteration in original)). "To establish injury in fact, a plaintiff must show that he or she suffered 'an invasion of a legally protected interest' that is 'concrete and particularized' and 'actual or imminent, not conjectural or hypothetical.'" Id. at 1548 (quoting Lujan, 504 U.S. at 560). "For an injury to be 'particularized,' it 'must affect the plaintiff in a personal and individual way.'" Id. (quoting Lujan, 504 U.S. at 560 n.1). For an injury to be "concrete," it "must be 'de facto'; that is, it must actually exist." Id. (quoting Black's Law Dictionary 479 (9th ed. 2009)). "Concrete" is not "necessarily synonymous with 'tangible,'" and can include the "risk of real harm." Id. at 1549.

Plaintiffs in the instant case have failed to meet their burden in establishing that they have met the minimum requirements of standing because they have not established [*8] an injury in fact. In their First Amended Complaint, they allege generally that they purchased tickets from Defendant airlines, but they do not allege that the tickets were for domestic flights, at artificially inflated prices, or during the relevant period. Absent facts establishing that "plaintiffs purchased [the relevant] services from defendants" and thereby "paid the alleged[ly]" unlawful prices, the Complaint lacks "basic facts to support an inference that each plaintiff was harmed." Oxbow Carbon & Minerals LLC v. Union Pac. R.R. Co., 926 F. Supp. 2d 36, 43 \(D.D.C. 2013\). Standing "is not dispensed in gross," and the fact that other consumers purchased airline tickets is irrelevant to the Mulveys' lawsuit because "each plaintiff must demonstrate that it has suffered injury in order to establish standing." Id. (quotation omitted); see In re Opana ER Antitrust Litig., 2016 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 23319, 2016 WL 738596, at \*4-5 \(N.D. Ill. Feb. 25, 2016\) (assessing whether opt-out plaintiffs independently had Article III standing). To permit a deviation from the "threshold" standing requirements would open the doors to a "seemingly unlimited number" of non-purchaser plaintiffs who "could assert a virtually unlimited" number of claims, Montreal Trading Ltd. v. Amax Inc., 661 F.2d 864, 867-68 \(10th Cir. 1981\) (finding no standing for "nonpurchasers"). For the reasons set out infra, the Court accordingly finds that Plaintiffs lack Article III standing.

B. Antitrust [*9] Standing

In a private action for alleged antitrust violations, "a plaintiff must go beyond showing that it meets the Article III standing requirements of injury, causation, and redressability; it must also demonstrate 'antitrust standing.'" Novell, Inc. v. Microsoft Corp., 505 F. 3d 302, 310 \(4th Cir. 2007\). "Harm to the antitrust plaintiff is sufficient to satisfy the constitutional standing requirement of injury in fact, but the court must make a further determination whether the plaintiff is a proper party to bring a private antitrust action." Associated Gen. Contractors of Cal. v. Cal. State Council of Carpenters, 459 U.S. 519, 535 n. 31, 103 S. Ct. 897, 74 L. Ed. 2d 723 \(1983\). Antitrust standing requires inter alia: 1) an injury that the antitrust laws were designed to prevent and that flows from that which makes defendants' acts unlawful; (2) direct and non-speculative damages to plaintiffs' business or property; and (3) proper plaintiff status, which ensures that other parties are not better situated to sue. Adams v. Pan Am. World Airways, Inc., 828 F.2d 24, 26-27, 264 U.S. App. D.C. 174 \(D.C. Cir. 1987\); see Andrx., 256 F.3d at 806; Nat'l ATM Council, Inc. v. Visa Inc., 922 F. Supp. 2d 73, 81 \(D.D.C. 2013\). "[A]ntitrust standing is a threshold, pleading-stage inquiry and when a complaint by its terms fails to establish this requirement [it] must [be] dismiss[ed] as a matter of law." NicSand, Inc. v. 3M Co., 507 F.3d 442, 450 \(6th Cir. 2007\) (en banc). Antitrust standing is limited to "proper parties" in recognition that under antitrust law, "defendants who may have violated a provision of the antitrust" [*10] statutes are not liable to every person who can persuade a jury that he suffered a loss in some manner 'that might conceivably be traced' to the conduct of the defendants." Reading Indus., Inc. v. Kennecott Copper Corp., 631 F.2d 10, 12 \(2d Cir. 1980\) (citation omitted); NicSand, 507 F.3d at 449-50 (This type of standing is the "glue that cements each suit with the purposes of the antitrust laws," and it "prevents abuses" of those laws.)

Because the Mulveys do not allege a purchase of any airline tickets during the relevant time frame, they do not have antitrust standing. See Norris v. Hearst Tr., 500 F.3d 454, 466 (5th Cir. 2007) ("Plaintiffs [who] are neither consumers [purchasers of a relevant product] nor competitors in a relevant market" have not "suffered antitrust injury."); see also Klein v. Am. Land Title Ass'n, 560 F. App'x 1, 1-2 \(D.C. Cir. 2014\) (affirming dismissal for lack of antitrust standing when plaintiff "neither purchased nor was insured by" the relevant product). Furthermore, even Plaintiffs' allegations that they purchased tickets from Delta and American, without any additional information about such tickets, is not enough to give them antitrust standing. "[W]ithout knowing which specific products" Plaintiffs purchase, "it is impossible to determine" whether any alleged "increase in their price is the type of injury that furthers the object of the alleged conspiracy to [*11] fix prices" or otherwise was caused by Defendants' alleged conduct. In re Magnesium Oxide Antitrust Litig., 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 121373, 2011 WL 5008090, at \*7 \(D.N.J. Oct. 20, 2011\); see Johnson v. Comm'n on Presidential Debates, 869 F.3d 976, 983, 432 U.S. App. D.C. 392 \(D.C. Cir. 2017\) (An "inability to define a commercial market in which [plaintiffs] operate" undermines antitrust standing and requires dismissal.)

III. DISCUSSION

In their Reply, Defendants American and Delta address the sufficiency of the Plaintiffs' allegations in their First Amended Complaint, which incorporates by reference their Complaint. As a preliminary matter, Defendants note that an "attorney proceeding pro se is 'presumed to have knowledge of the legal system,' and '[a]s a result, he is not entitled to the same level of solicitude often afforded non-attorney litigants proceeding without legal representation.'" Lovitky v. Trump, 308 F. Supp. 3d 250, 254 (D.D.C. 2018) (Kollar-Kotelly, J.) (quoting Lempert v. Power, 45 F. Supp. 3d 79, 81 n.2 (D.D.C. 2014) (Kollar-Kotelly, J.)). Accordingly, pro se attorneys "need less protection from the court," and their "pro se status will not weigh in favor of denying the defendants' motions to dismiss." Richards v. Duke Univ., 480 F. Supp. 2d 222, 234-35 (D.D.C. 2007), aff'd, 2007 U.S. App. LEXIS 30275, 2007 WL 4589770 (D.C. Cir. Aug. 27, 2007). Defendants assert further that Plaintiffs' First Amended Complaint should not be construed as an opposition to Defendants' motion to dismiss because a "plaintiff may not amend [its] complaint by the briefs in opposition to a motion to dismiss." Middlebrooks v. Godwin Corp., 722 F. Supp. 2d 82, 87 n.4 (D.D.C. 2010), aff'd, 424 F. App'x 10 (D.C. Cir. 2011). Furthermore, Plaintiffs were [*12] instructed by this Court to "include in their response to Defendants' Motion to Dismiss either an Amended Complaint, or a precise statement of the nature of the claims they are making . . . and the legal grounds" for those claims. January 31, 2019 Order, ECF No 16 (emphasis added). This Order did not anticipate Plaintiffs' filing of an amended complaint with nothing more.

Defendants argue that Plaintiffs' First Amended Complaint is both procedurally and substantively deficient. Beginning with the procedural violations, Defendants explain that "Plaintiffs emailed American and Delta an Amended Complaint on February 21, 2019 — and indicated that they would mail the same document" but that does not constitute the requisite timely filing with the clerk or the judge. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 5(d)(2); Local Civil Rule 5.1(a). In this case, the First Amended Complaint was mailed to the Clerk's Office (without including a certificate of service), and it was postmarked February 21, 2019, and date stamped February 26, 2019, which was one day after the deadline set by this Court. Because there was only a one-day delay, and it was postmarked February 21, 2019, and a copy was previously emailed to American and Delta, this Court shall not dismiss [*13] Plaintiffs' First Amended Complaint on grounds that it is untimely and did not include a certificate of service. Nor shall this Court dismiss Plaintiffs First Amended Complaint on grounds that Plaintiffs did not request leave of Court to amend their Complaint, pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 15 (a)(1), as it is arguable perhaps that the Court's January 31, 2019 Order granted Plaintiffs advance permission to amend their Complaint.

Putting aside the procedural deficiencies of the Plaintiffs' Amended Complaint, this Court finds that the allegations contained in the First Amended Complaint do not sufficiently indicate that Plaintiffs have an actionable claim against Defendants American and Delta. Plaintiffs state merely that they have "purchased airline tickets from both Delta Airlines Co and American Airlines Inc. and have in turn suffered concrete harm." First Amended Complaint, ECF No. 19, at 1. Plaintiffs do not indicate however that the airline tickets were for a "domestic flight, at artificially inflated prices, during the relevant period." Defs' Reply, ECF No. 18, at 8-9. Accordingly, because Plaintiffs' First Amended Complaint lacks basic facts supporting an inference that each plaintiff was harmed, it fails [*14] to satisfy "threshold" standing requirements. Oxbow, 926 F. Supp. 2d at 43; see GEICO Corp. v. Autoliv, Inc., 345 F. Supp. 3d 799, 818-19, 827-28 (E.D. Mich. 2018) (dismissing for lack of Article III and antitrust standing when an opt-out plaintiff failed to allege purchases causing injury). Moreover, Plaintiffs' assertion that they "suffered concrete harm" is simply a "conclusory statement[] [or] legal conclusion[]," which is "insufficient to state a plausible basis for standing." Williams v. Lew, 819 F.3d 466, 472, 422 U.S. App. D.C. 119 (D.C. Cir. 2016) (citing Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 663, 129 S. Ct. 1937, 173 L. Ed. 2d 868 (2009)). Similarly, Plaintiffs lack antitrust standing because they "advance [no] plausible allegations regarding any purchase in any market for air transportation." Defs.' Mem., ECF No. 9-1, at 6. See National ATM Council v. Visa Inc. 922 F. Supp. 2d 73, 86 (D.D.C. 2013) (in a case alleging conspiracy to impose ATM access fees, even where plaintiffs were able to allege the payment of at least one ATM fee and show that they were consumers of the relevant product at issue, they did not have antitrust standing because they did not plausibly allege that they conducted transactions at the specifically impacted ATMs, and that "mean[t] that there [was] no link between the alleged harm to competition and the plaintiff's pocketbook.") The fact that other consumers may have antitrust standing as part of the class is irrelevant, because the Mulveys opted out of the settlement. See GEICO, 345 F. Supp. 3d at 827-28 & n. 5 [*15] (It is "wholly immaterial" that other purported class members "have been included in settlement classes in the multidistrict litigation without having to make [a] showing [of antitrust standing]" where Plaintiff opted out of participating in the settlement and is pursuing his own claims.); see also Stills v. Dairy Farmers of Am, Inc. 276 F. Supp. 3d 195, 203-04 (D. Vt. 2017) ("Unless or until [opt-out] Plaintiffs can allege they suffered discernible injuries as a result of Defendants' alleged [antitrust violation], they lack antitrust standing.") Accordingly, Plaintiffs lack both Article III and antitrust standing, and their First Amended Complaint, which incorporates by reference their Complaint, shall be dismissed.

III. CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, the Court GRANTS Defendants' [9] Motion to Dismiss because of Plaintiffs' lack of standing. The Court shall DISMISS WITHOUT PREJUDICE Plaintiffs' First Amended Complaint (incorporating by reference their Complaint) against Defendants American Airlines Inc. and Delta Air Lines Inc. An appropriate Order accompanies this Memorandum Opinion.

HN7 Brokers, Discipline, Licensing & Regulation

Colorado law provides that a licensed real estate broker must act either as a single agent or as a transaction-broker in providing real estate services. Colo. Rev. Stat. § 12-61-803(1) (2018). A single agent represents one party to a real estate transaction. Colo. Rev. Stat. § 12-61-802(4) (2018). Such an agent's duties include exercising reasonable skill and care, presenting all offers in a timely manner, and disclosing known adverse material facts to the other party in a transaction. Colo. Rev. Stat. §§ 12-61-804 to 12-61-805 (2018). Colo. Rev. Stat. § 12-61-803(2) makes transaction-broker the default role for a real estate broker who has not entered into a single-agency written agreement with the represented party. Transaction-brokers assist with a transaction but are not agents for any party. Colo. Rev. Stat. § 12-61-807(1). Though transaction-brokers share certain statutory duties that single agents have, such as the duty to present all offers in a timely manner, Colo. Rev. Stat. § 12-61-807(2)(b)(I), their role is more limited than that of a single agent. Colo. Rev. Stat. § 12-61-803(1) requires a transaction-broker to disclose the general duties and obligations arising from that relationship" to the seller and the buyer pursuant to Colo. Rev. Stat. § 12-61-808 (2018).

To determine whether a state agency's actions are considered the actions of the state in its sovereign capacity and thus shielded from federal antitrust law, the court applies the two-part test set forth in Midcal. Under the Midcal test, a state agency's allegedly anticompetitive conduct will be shielded by state-action immunity from federal antitrust law if, first, the State has articulated a clear policy to allow the anticompetitive conduct, and second, the State provides active supervision of the anticompetitive conduct. Midcal's clear articulation requirement is satisfied where the displacement of competition is the inherent, logical, or ordinary result of the exercise of authority delegated by the state legislature. In that scenario, the State must have foreseen and implicitly endorsed the anticompetitive effects as consistent with its policy goals. Midcal's active supervision requirement demands realistic assurance that a private party's anticompetitive conduct promotes state policy, rather than merely the party's individual interests. The active supervision requirement also mandates that the State exercise ultimate control over the challenged anticompetitive conduct.

A division of the court of appeals considers whether a licensed real estate broker can contract away his statutorily required obligations as a transaction-broker under section 12-61-807(2), C.R.S. 2018. Interpreting section 12-61-807(2) and related provisions, the division determines that a transaction-broker's statutory duties are mandatory and cannot be contracted away.

The division also concludes that the Colorado Real Estate Commission's discipline of the appellant broker for failing to perform his statutory duties fell within the Commission's statutory authority and did not violate federal antitrust laws. The division determines that the Commission's decision not to disclose the identity of the informant who brought appellant's actions to the Commission's attention did not violate appellant's due process rights.

Accordingly, the division affirms the Commission's final order disciplining appellant for failing to comply with the mandatory duties of a transaction-broker under section 12-61-807(2).

[**473] [*P1] Can a licensed real estate broker contract away his statutory obligations as a transaction-broker under section 12-61-807(2), C.R.S. 2018? We answer "no" to this question, and therefore affirm the final agency order of the Colorado Real Estate Commission disciplining a licensed real estate broker, John J. Vizzi, for failing to fulfill those statutory obligations. We also conclude that the Commission's enforcement of that statute against Vizzi does not violate federal antitrust laws. As a result, we affirm the Commission's order.

I. Factual Background

[*P2] Vizzi entered into contracts in 2013 and 2014 with three clients to provide unbundled real estate brokerage services in exchange for a flat fee. In one instance, he contracted only to list the client's property on the Multiple Listing Services (MLS) list. In two other instances, he contracted only to provide a yard sign, a lock [***3] box, and centralized showing services, and to list the properties on the MLS.

[*P3] After an anonymous informant notified the Commission of Vizzi's practices, it investigated. As a result, the Commission charged Vizzi with failing to fulfill his statutory duties under section 12-61-807(2) and sought to discipline him.

[*P4] An Administrative Law Judge (ALJ) heard the case. She concluded that the duties listed in section 12-61-807(2) are mandatory and that Vizzi had not fulfilled them in any of the three transactions at issue. She therefore disciplined Vizzi under section 12-61-113(1)(k), C.R.S. 2018, requiring him to take twelve hours of continuing education and levying a fine of $2000 plus the statutory surcharge. Although the Commission had sought public censure, the ALJ did not impose it.

[*P5] Vizzi filed exceptions to the ALJ's decision with the Commission. After hearing oral argument on the exceptions, the Commission issued a final agency order.

[*P6] The Commission adopted the ALJ's findings of fact and conclusions of law. It agreed with the ALJ's ruling that Vizzi was required to provide to his clients all of the services listed in section 12-61-807(2), and that he violated the provisions of section 12-61-113(1)(k) and (n) by entering into contracts [**474] that essentially disclaimed any responsibility to provide statutorily [***4] required services.

[*P7] The Commission modified the discipline imposed on Vizzi to include public censure. In doing so, the Commission relied on its issuance of a December 2010 position statement that said, in part: "A broker is not allowed to solely perform 'additional' services which require a real estate broker's license . . . without providing the minimum duties required by single agency or transaction brokerage." Dep't of Regulatory Agencies, Div. of Real Estate, CP-36 Commission Position on Minimum Service Requirements, <https://perma.cc/6UZE-DY2T>. Because the position statement was issued before Vizzi entered into the contracts at issue, the Commission concluded that he "should have known that the listing contracts he prepared in 2013 and 2014 were improper."

II. Contentions Raised on Appeal

[*P8] Vizzi maintains that he was permitted by statute to contract out of many of the duties imposed on transaction-brokers under section 12-61-807(2), and that the contracts in question successfully accomplished that goal.

[*P9] Invoking the United States Supreme Court's decision in *N.C. State Bd. of Dental Exam'rs v. FTC*, 574 U.S. 135 S. Ct. 1101, 191 L. Ed. 2d 35 \(2015\), Vizzi asserts that the Commission's enforcement action against him violates federal antitrust law.

[*P10] He argues that the Commission violated his [***5] due process rights by declining to disclose the identity of the person who notified the Commission of Vizzi's actions in the questioned transactions.

[*P11] And he contends that the Commission exceeded its statutory authority and thus violated his due process rights when it disciplined him more harshly than did the ALJ, and that its decision to do so was arbitrary and capricious.

[*P12] For the reasons discussed below, we reject these contentions.

IV. Roles of Licensed Real Estate Brokers

[*P17] Vizzi is licensed as a real estate broker, and it is uncontested that, in entering [**475] into the contracts in issue, he acted as a transaction-broker.

[*P18] As pertinent here, "real estate broker" is defined as "any person . . . who, in consideration of compensation by fee, commission, salary, or anything of value . . . engages in . . . [l]isting, offering, attempting, or agreeing to list real estate, or interest therein, or improvements affixed thereon for sale, exchange, rent, or lease[.]" [***7] § 12-61-101(2)(a)(V), C.R.S. 2018.

[*P19] HN7 Colorado law provides that a licensed real estate broker must act either as a single agent or as a transaction-broker in providing real estate services. § 12-61-803(1), C.R.S. 2018.

[*P20] A single agent represents one party to a real estate transaction. § 12-61-802(4), C.R.S. 2018. Such an agent's duties include exercising reasonable skill and care, presenting all offers in a timely manner, and disclosing known adverse material facts to the other party in a transaction. §§ 12-61-804 to -805, C.R.S. 2018.

[*P21] Section 12-61-803(2) makes transaction-broker the default role for a real estate broker who has not entered into a single-agency written agreement with the represented party.

[*P22] Transaction-brokers assist with a transaction but are not agents for any party. § 12-61-807(1). Though transaction-brokers share certain statutory duties that single agents have, such as the duty to present all offers in a timely manner, § 12-61-807(2)(b)(I), their role is more limited than that of a single agent.

[*P23] Section 12-61-803(1) requires a transaction-broker to disclose the "general duties and obligations arising from that relationship" to the seller and the buyer pursuant to section 12-61-808, C.R.S. 2018.

A. Mandatory Duties or Default Duties?

[*P24] The statutory duties of transaction brokers are detailed in sections 12-61-807 to -808.

[*P25] Vizzi interprets sections 12-61-807 and -808 together to mean that section 12-61-807(2) sets forth only default duties — [***8] not mandatory duties — for transaction-brokers. We disagree.

[*P26] Section 12-61-802(6) defines "transaction-broker" as "a broker who assists one or more parties throughout a contemplated real estate transaction with communication, interposition, advisement, negotiation, contract terms, and the closing of such real estate transaction without being an agent or advocate for the interests of any party to such transaction." (Emphasis added.) HN8↑ The legislature's use of the words "throughout" and "and" indicates that it intended a transaction-broker to assist in the entire transaction and to undertake each of the listed activities.

[*P28] HN10↑ The provisions of the transaction-broker statutes indicate that the term [***9] "shall" in section 12-61-807(2) specifies mandatory duties. It would be illogical and would frustrate the legislature's intent to interpret the word "shall" as merely permissive, given the lengthy list of "obligations" in subsection (2) of the statute, including the requirement that a transaction-broker "comply with all requirements of this article and any rules promulgated pursuant to this article." § 12-61-807(2)(c) (emphasis added).

[*P30] The General Assembly declared its intent in [***10] creating this statutory scheme as follows:

The general assembly finds, determines, and declares that the public will best be served through a better understanding of the public's legal and working relationships with real estate brokers and by being able to engage any such real estate broker on terms and under conditions that the public and the real estate broker find acceptable. This includes engaging a broker as a single agent or transaction-broker. Individual members of the public should not be exposed to liability for acts or omissions of real estate brokers that have not been approved, directed, or ratified by such individuals. Further, the public should be advised of the general duties, obligations, and responsibilities of the real estate broker they engage.

§ 12-61-801(1), C.R.S. 2018 (emphasis added).

[*P31] Though the legislature emphasized the importance of the public's ability to engage real estate brokers on terms that both the public and real estate brokers "find acceptable," it also limited that ability. There are only two roles for which the public can engage a real estate broker: single agent or transaction-broker. See § 12-61-803(1).

[*P32] The statutes do not say that the public can engage a real estate broker to provide [***11] unbundled brokerage services, or in any manner that the broker and customer might find mutually acceptable.

[*P33] Vizzi argues that the duties listed in section 12-61-807 are mere "defaults," and that a broker can contract for the performance of only certain limited duties. We are not persuaded. If the transaction-broker duties in section 12-61-807 — and the parallel single agent duties in section 12-61-805 — were mere defaults, a transaction-broker or a single agent would be able to contract out of the required statutory duties and, in essence, cease acting as a transaction-broker or single agent as defined by statute.

[*P34] The ALJ found that in entering into certain contracts he drafted, Vizzi "intended not to act as a transaction-broker," and manifested that intent by inserting language into the contracts disclaiming the duties of such a broker. We will not disturb those findings because they are supported by the record.

[*P35] Allowing Vizzi to disclaim the role of transaction-broker would contravene the statutory scheme. See § 12-61-801. The relevant statutes were drafted to create the role of transaction-broker and distinguish it from the role of single agent, and not to enable licensed real estate professionals to avoid the statutorily required duties of [***12] a transaction-broker. See Hoff & Leigh, Inc. v. Byler, 62 P.3d 1077, 1078 \(Colo. App. 2002\) (discussing the legislative history and purpose of sections 12-61-801 to -810); see also §§ 12-61-801, -803.

B. Section 12-61-808(2)(a)(III)

[*P36] In arguing that the section 12-61-807(2) duties are merely defaults, and are not strictly required, Vizzi points to section 12-61-808(2)(a)(III), which covers the disclosure of contractual obligations that transaction-brokers undertake.

[*P37] Section 12-61-808(2)(a)(III) provides, "[i]f the transaction-broker undertakes any obligations or responsibilities in addition to or different from those set forth in section 12-61-807, such obligations or responsibilities shall be disclosed in a writing which shall be signed by the involved parties." (Emphasis added.)

[*P38] Vizzi points us to Wolford v. Pinnacol Assurance, 107 P.3d 947, 951 \(Colo. 2005\), which says that courts should interpret statutes to avoid rendering words redundant or superfluous. Based on this proposition, he argues that the Commission's interpretation that he could not modify the duties set out in [**477] section 12-61-807 would impermissibly render superfluous the phrase "different from" in section 12-61-808(2)(a)(III). According to Vizzi, section 12-61-808(2)(a)(II) modifies section 12-61-807(2) to allow an agent to enter into an agreement to provide fewer services than those enumerated in section 12-61-807. This interpretation is not supported by the statute.

[*P39] Could the legislature have intended to allow a transaction-broker to contract his way out of having to perform the required duties [***13] that the legislature — with great specificity — enumerated in section 12-61-807(2)? Such a reading is highly implausible.

[*P40] We acknowledge that the "different from" language in section 12-61-808(2)(a)(III) distinguishes that statute from the language of section 12-61-803, which defines relationships between brokers and the public. Section 12-61-803(5) says, "[n]othing contained in this section shall prohibit the public from entering into written contracts with any broker which contain duties, obligations, or responsibilities which are in addition to those specified in this part 8." (Emphasis added.)

[*P41] But we do not interpret the "different from" language in section 12-61-808(2)(a)(III) as permitting a transaction-broker to contract to provide fewer services than those listed in section 12-61-807. Instead, HN12↑ the legislature intended the services enumerated in section 12-61-807 to be mandatory. We reach this conclusion for the following reasons.

[*P42] As the Commission argues, HN13↑ section 12-61-808(2)(a)(III) — addressing when a transaction-broker "undertakes any obligations or responsibilities . . . different from those set forth in section 12-61-807" — does not refer specifically to the mandatory duties listed in section 12-61-807(2). Thus, contrary to Vizzi's argument, section 12-61-808(2)(a)(III) would not allow a broker to contract out of mandatory statutory duties.

[*P43] Instead, HN14 we construe the "different from" language of section 12-61-808 to refer [***14] to three provisions of section 12-61-807: subsection (3) ("information shall not be disclosed by a transaction-broker without the informed consent of all parties"); subsection (4) (a "transaction-broker has no duty to conduct an independent inspection of the property" or "to independently verify the accuracy or completeness of statements made by the seller, landlord, or independent inspectors"); and subsection (5) (a "transaction broker has no duty to conduct an independent investigation of the buyer's or tenant's financial condition or to verify the accuracy or completeness of any statement made by the buyer or tenant").

[*P44] Thus, the parties may alter those default provisions by requiring the broker to take on duties in addition to those listed. See § 12-61-803(5) ("Nothing contained in this section shall prohibit the public from entering into written contracts with any broker which contain duties, obligations, or responsibilities which are in addition to those specified in this part 8.").

[*P45] For example, subsection (3) would allow certain information to be disclosed by a transaction-broker if all parties provide informed consent. If — but only if — such consent is given, the transaction-broker can deviate from the default statutory duty of nondisclosure for the following [***15] matters detailed in that subsection:

The following information shall not be disclosed by a transaction-broker without the informed consent of all parties:

- (a) That a buyer or tenant is willing to pay more than the purchase price or lease rate offered for the property;
- (b) That a seller or landlord is willing to accept less than the asking price or lease rate for the property;
- (c) What the motivating factors are for any party buying, selling, or leasing the property;
- (d) That a seller, buyer, landlord, or tenant will agree to financing terms other than those offered;

- (e) Any facts or suspicions regarding circumstances which may psychologically impact or stigmatize any real property pursuant to section 38-35.5-101, C.R.S.; or

- (f) Any material information about the other party unless disclosure is required by law or failure to disclose such information [\[\*\*478\]](#) would constitute fraud or dishonest dealing.

§ 12-61-807(3)(a)-(f) (emphasis added).

[*P46] If the transaction-broker entered into an agreement that allowed disclosure of any of the matters listed above, the broker would, indeed, be permissibly contracting to "undertake[] any obligation[] or responsibilities . . . different from" the default responsibility of nondisclosure of those matters "set forth [\[\*\*\*16\]](#) in section 12-61-807." § 12-61-808(2)(a)(III).

[*P47] Moreover, section 12-61-808 deals not with a broker's duties, but only with required disclosures. As a result, an interpretation of section 12-61-808 as somehow modifying the required duties set forth in section 12-61-807 would frustrate the legislature's intent.

[*P48] And HN15 section 12-61-808(2)(a)(III) provides that if responsibilities different from those listed in 12-61-807 are engaged in, "such obligations or responsibilities shall be disclosed." (Emphasis added.) The italicized language would make no sense if the broker's statutory obligations or responsibilities were being eliminated. It only makes sense if obligations or responsibilities are being added to those required by statutes.

[*P49] As the ALJ and the Commission noted, Vizzi's interpretation would also lead to absurd results, by, for example, allowing him to contract out of the statutory mandate to comply with "any applicable federal, state, or local laws, rules, regulations, or ordinances including fair housing and civil rights statutes or regulations." See § 12-61-807(2)(d); see also Whitman v. Am. Trucking Ass'n, 531 U.S. 457, 468, 121 S. Ct. 903, 149 L. Ed. 2d 1 \(2001\) (Legislatures do not "alter the fundamental details of a regulatory scheme in vague terms or ancillary provisions."); Asphalt Specialties Co. v. City of Commerce City, 218 P.3d 741, 746 \(Colo. App. 2009\) (A court "will not construe statutes or ordinances in such a manner as to frustrate their purposes or lead to an absurd [\[\*\*17\]](#) or unreasonable result.").

[*P50] We conclude that HN16↑ the provisions of section 12-61-808 do not permit a broker to contract away any of the required statutory duties.

V. Support for Commission's Determination

[*P51] In light of our construction of the statutory provisions discussed above, we conclude that the record supports the Commission's adoption of the ALJ's findings that Vizzi violated sections 12-61-113(1)(k), 12-61-113(1)(n), and 12-61-803(1), and we therefore uphold the Commission's determination to discipline Vizzi.

VI. Federal Antitrust Law

[*P52] Citing N.C. State Bd. of Dental Exam'rs, 574 U.S. , 135 S. Ct. 1101, 191 L. Ed. 2d 35, Vizzi argues here, as he did below, that the Commission's policy prohibiting the provision of limited real estate services violates federal antitrust law. According to Vizzi, "the Commission's enforcement of 'minimum services' does not stem from formal rulemaking or statute" but merely from an "unenforceable position statement," apparently referencing the Commission's "Position on Minimum Service Requirements." See Dep't of Regulatory Agencies, Div. of Real Estate, CP-36 Commission Position on Minimum Service Requirements. He argues that the Commission is "dominated by market participants — three real estate brokers and two representatives of the public at large," and that, under Dental Examiners, the Commission's [*P52] policy violates federal antitrust laws. We consider and reject these arguments.

A. Legal Standards

[*P53] HN17↑ The Supreme Court in Parker v. Brown, 317 U.S. 341, 350-51, 63 S. Ct. 307, 87 L. Ed. 315 \(1943\), "interpreted the antitrust laws to confer immunity on anticompetitive conduct by the States when acting in their sovereign capacity." Dental Examiners, 574 U.S. at , 135 S. Ct. at 1110. A state legislature may delegate the power to regulate a profession to a state agency on which a controlling number of decision-makers are active market participants in that profession, and, in some cases, the actions of that state agency will be immune to federal antitrust law. See id. at , 135 S. Ct. at 1111.

[*P54] HN18↑ To determine whether such a state agency's actions are considered the actions [*P54] of the state in its sovereign capacity and thus shielded from federal antitrust law, we apply the two-part test set forth in California Retail Liquor Dealers Ass'n v. Midcal Aluminum, Inc., 445 U.S. 97, 100, 100 S. Ct. 937, 63 L. Ed. 2d 233 \(1980\). Dental Examiners, 574 U.S. at , 135 S. Ct. at 1111-12. Under the Midcal test, a state agency's allegedly anticompetitive conduct will be shielded by state-action immunity from federal antitrust law if, "first, the State has articulated a clear policy to allow the anticompetitive conduct, and second, the State provides active supervision of [the] anticompetitive conduct." Dental Examiners, 574 U.S. at , 135 S. Ct. at 1112 (quoting Fed. Trade Comm'n v. Ticor Title Ins. Co., 504 U.S. 621, 631, 112 S. Ct. 2169, 119 L. Ed. 2d 410 \(1992\)).

[*P55] Midcal's clear articulation requirement is satisfied "where the displacement of competition [is] the inherent, [*P55] logical, or ordinary result of the exercise of authority delegated by the state legislature. In that scenario, the State must have foreseen and implicitly endorsed the anticompetitive effects as consistent with its policy goals." Fed. Trade Comm'n v. Phoebe Putney Health Sys., Inc., 568 U.S. 216, 229, 133 S. Ct. 1003, 185 L. Ed. 2d 43 \(2013\). Midcal's active supervision requirement demands "realistic assurance that a private party's anticompetitive conduct promotes state policy, rather than merely the party's individual interests." Patrick v. Burget, 486 U.S. 94, 101, 108 S. Ct. 1658, 100 L. Ed. 2d 83 \(1988\). The active supervision requirement also mandates that "the State exercise ultimate control over the challenged anticompetitive conduct." Id.

B. Analysis

[*P56] We conclude that the Commission's enforcement of the section 12-61-807(2) duties against Vizzi satisfies both the clear articulation and active supervision requirements described in Midcal. Such enforcement lies within the bounds of the state's statutory scheme and is properly considered state sovereign action, shielded from federal antitrust law.

[*P57] The "clear articulation" prong is met by section 12-61-802(6), which defines "transaction-broker"; section 12-61-801, which sets out the General Assembly's policy goals in regulating transaction-brokers; and section 12-61-807, which sets out mandatory obligations for transaction-brokers. Notably, HN19↑ by setting out mandatory duties, section 12-61-807(2) precludes transaction-brokers [***20] from providing real estate services that are more limited than those required by statute. We thus conclude that the General Assembly has "foreseen and implicitly endorsed" the prohibition of practices engaged in by Vizzi here. See Phoebe Putney Health Sys., 568 U.S. at 229.

[*P58] The "active supervision" prong is met by section 12-61-101(2)(a), which defines what constitutes the practice of a real estate broker, and section 12-61-113, which authorizes the Commission to investigate and censure licensed real estate brokers for violations of state license laws. Together, these sections give a "realistic assurance" that the Commission, in disciplining Vizzi for violating the section 12-61-807(2) duties, acted within its statutory purview and thus to promote state policy. See Burget, 486 U.S. at 100.

[*P59] In Dental Examiners, the Supreme Court based its decision on a lack of proof indicating that the state legislature intended North Carolina's Board of Dental Examiners to have oversight of tooth whitening, 574 U.S. at \_\_, 135 S. Ct. at 1116, and the Court's concern that the Board's action may have been motivated by anti-competitive animus, id. at __, 135 S. Ct. at 1114 ("When a State empowers a group of active market participants to decide who can participate in its market, and on what terms, the need for supervision is manifest.").

[*P60] The considerations that motivated the [***21] Supreme Court's decision in that case are not present here.

[*P61] First, Vizzi's actions fell within the Commission's statutory purview. It was uncontested that Vizzi's actions, such as posting properties on the MLS, constituted the practice of a real estate broker. It was also uncontested that the Commission's statutory purview is the regulation of the practice of real estate brokers. In contrast, in Dental [***480] Examiners, it was unclear whether tooth whitening constituted the practice of dentistry and, thus, whether tooth whitening fell within the statutory purview of North Carolina's Board of Dental Examiners.

[*P62] Second, unlike in Dental Examiners, there is no support in the record for the notion that the Commission's enforcement actions were motivated by anticompetitive animus.

[*P63] Thus, Dental Examiners is simply inapposite.

[*P64] For two reasons, we reject Vizzi's conclusory argument that "the Commission's position conflicts with the Department of Justice's interpretation of Colorado law." First, we see no reason why, even if Vizzi's contention is true, any such interpretation of Colorado law would be binding on us. Second, Vizzi does not explain this contention and instead cites only the written exceptions [***22] he filed to the Commission's decision. See People v. Diefenderfer, 784 P.2d 741, 752 \(Colo. 1989\) (it is the duty of counsel for the appealing party to inform the reviewing court as to the specific errors relied on, as well as the grounds, supporting facts, and authorities therefor).

[*P65] We thus conclude that Vizzi has not established a violation of federal antitrust law.

VII. Anonymous Complainant

[*P66] Vizzi next maintains that the ALJ violated his due process rights by denying his motion to compel disclosure of the identity of the anonymous complainant. We are not persuaded.

[*P67] HN20↑ We review discovery rulings for an abuse of discretion. Silva v. Basin W., Inc., 47 P.3d 1184, 1188 \(Colo. 2002\).

[*P68] Vizzi has not shown how the complainant's identity was relevant to his ability to defend against the Commission's charges. Vizzi was given notice of all of the Commission's witnesses and exhibits — the totality of evidence which supported the charges against him. Cf. Copley v. Robinson, 224 P.3d 431, 436 \(Colo. App. 2009\) (resident's due process rights were violated where he was denied a gun permit on a basis unknown to him at the time of his hearing).

[*P69] The ALJ's initial decision and the Commission's final judgment stated the grounds, law, and reasoning for their respective decisions, which did not rely on anything extraneous to the record. Cf. id. (resident's due process [*P69] rights were violated where sheriff's summary denial of his gun permit stated no grounds, facts, law, or reasoning to support the denial of the permit). We thus conclude that the Commission did not err in upholding the ALJ's denial of Vizzi's motion to compel disclosure of the anonymous complainant. See In re Dist. Court, 256 P.3d 687, 691 (Colo. 2011).

VIII. Imposition of Public Censure

[*P70] Vizzi argues that the Commission exceeded its statutory authority and thus violated his due process rights when it imposed public censure after the ALJ had imposed only a fine and continuing education. Alternatively, he argues that the Commission's decision to impose public censure, given the ALJ's choice not to, was arbitrary and capricious. We disagree with these contentions.

[*P71] In Colorado Real Estate Commission v. Hanegan, 947 P.2d 933, 935-36 (Colo. 1997), the Colorado Supreme Court upheld the Commission's imposition of public censure of a real estate broker after an ALJ, in his initial decision, had imposed only a fine. The Hanegan court concluded that, HN21 "[a]s long as the record as a whole provides sufficient evidence that the penalty is not manifestly excessive in relation to the misconduct and the public need, the penalty will be upheld." Id. at 937. There, the sanctioned broker was one of only a few brokers to fail to take a required [*P71] eight-hour course. Id. at 934.

[*P72] Vizzi violated his statutory duties multiple times after the Commission's December 2010 position statement put him on notice that the listing contracts he prepared in 2013 and 2014 were improper.

[*P73] Applying Hanegan, we conclude that the Commission acted within its statutory authority by imposing a sanction beyond that [*P73] imposed by the ALJ, and that the Commission's sanction bore some relation to Vizzi's misconduct and to the needs of the public. See id. at 936-37; see also § 24-4-105(15)(b), C.R.S. 2018 (granting Commission authority to "affirm, set aside, or modify the order or any sanction or relief entered therein, in conformity with the facts and the law").

[*P74] We reach this conclusion even though the Commission did not file exceptions to the ALJ's initial decision, because Vizzi's sanction was still an issue presented by the record. See § 24-4-105(15)(a) (For administrative appeals, the scope of review is "within the scope of the issues presented on the record."); cf. Cornell v. State of Colo. Bd. of Pharmacy, 813 P.2d 771, 772-73 (Colo. App. 1990) (where the Colorado State Board of Pharmacy increased the disciplinary sanction on a pharmacist after the ALJ's initial decision, it did not exceed its jurisdiction, even though the agency did not file exceptions).

[*P75] And the public censure penalty was sought in [*P75] the original charge against Vizzi. Thus, he had a full and fair opportunity to argue about the appropriateness of this penalty.

IX. Conclusion

[*P76] The order is affirmed.

JUDGE J. JONES and JUDGE NIETO concur.

[*1061] FINDINGS OF FACT AND CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

INTRODUCTION

Plaintiffs are current and former student-athletes who played men's Division I Football Bowl Subdivision (FBS) football and men's and women's Division I basketball during the relevant period. Defendants [*1062] are the National Collegiate Athletic Association (NCAA) and eleven of its conferences<sup>1</sup> that participate in FBS football and Division I basketball.

Plaintiffs challenge the current, interconnected set of NCAA rules that limit the compensation they may receive in exchange for their athletic services. Plaintiffs contend that these limits on compensation, which are set and enforced by agreement of Defendants, violate federal antitrust law, because Plaintiffs would receive greater compensation in exchange for their athletic services in the absence of [**19] these artificial limits.

Defendants respond that the limits are procompetitive for two reasons. First, the limits help preserve the demand for college sports because consumers value amateurism as Defendants define it. Second, the rules promote integration of student-athletes into their academic communities, which in turn improves the college education they receive in exchange for their services.

The Court resolved certain of the issues relevant to Plaintiffs' claims on summary judgment, and presided over a non-jury trial on the remaining issues.

The Court finds and concludes that Defendants agreed to and did restrain trade in the relevant market, affecting interstate commerce, and that the challenged limits on student-athlete compensation produce significant anticompetitive effects. The Court further finds that the only procompetitive effect that Defendants established, namely preventing unlimited cash payments, unrelated to education, similar to those observed in professional sports, can be achieved through less restrictive means. Specifically, the Court finds that an alternative compensation scheme that would allow limits on the grant-in-aid scholarships at not less than the cost of [**20] attendance and limits on compensation and benefits unrelated to education, but that would generally prohibit the NCAA from limiting education-related benefits, would be virtually as effective as the challenged rules in achieving the only procompetitive effect that Defendants have shown here. The only education-related compensation that the NCAA could limit under this alternative would be academic or graduation awards or incentives, provided in cash or cash-equivalent. The limit imposed by the NCAA could not be less than its current or future caps on athletics participation awards.

<sup>1</sup> Conference Defendants are: Pac-12 Conference (Pac-12), The Big Ten Conference, Inc. (Big Ten), The Big 12 Conference, Inc. (Big 12), Southeastern Conference (SEC), and The Atlantic Coast Conference (ACC) (collectively, the Power Five Conferences); American Athletic Conference (AAC), Conference USA, Inc., Mid-American Conference (MAC), Mountain West Conference, Sun Belt Conference, and Western Athletic Conference (WAC).

Based on the findings of fact and conclusions of law set forth below, the Court will enter separately a permanent injunction barring the restraints that the Court finds to be overly and unnecessarily restrictive.

FINDINGS OF FACT<sup>2</sup>

I. Background

The NCAA, then known as the Intercollegiate Athletic Association (IAA), was founded in 1905 to regulate college football. Today, the NCAA and its members collectively issue rules that govern many [*1063] aspects of athletic competitions among NCAA member schools. Joint Stipulation of Facts (Stip. Facts) ¶ 1, Docket No. 1098.

The NCAA comprises three Divisions. Id. ¶ 2. Of the NCAA's [*21] eleven hundred schools, approximately three hundred and fifty schools compete in Division I. Id. ¶ 5. Division I itself is divided, for the purposes of football competition, into two subdivisions, one of which is the FBS. Id. ¶ 6. There are thirty-two conferences in Division I. Id. ¶ 7. Conferences may enact and enforce conference-specific rules, but these must be consistent with the NCAA's own rules. Id.

The NCAA rules governing participation in Division I generally are enacted by the Division I Board of Directors. Id. ¶¶ 11, 12. The rules that Plaintiffs challenge here govern a small subset of the conduct that the NCAA regulates.

The NCAA generates approximately one billion dollars in revenues each year. See Defs.' Ex. 0532 (D0532); Pls.' Ex. 0030 (P0030). Its revenues have increased consistently over the years. See P0030. Most of the NCAA's revenues are derived from the Division I men's basketball post-season tournament known as March Madness, and the media and marketing rights relating to it. Trial Transcript (Tr.) (McNeely) at 2134; D0532 at 0006. The total value of the current multi-year media contracts for March Madness, which extend to 2032, is $19.6 billion. See P0045 at 0001-02. Each year, the NCAA distributes about [*22] half of its revenues to conferences. Joint Ex. 0021 (J0021); P0030.

Division I conferences negotiate their own contracts and generate their own revenues from regular-season basketball and regular-and post-season FBS football. See, e.g., Dr. Daniel Rascher Direct Testimony Declaration ¶¶ 169-172, Docket No. 865-3. The FBS conferences have a multi-year media contract with ESPN for the College Football Playoff, the total value of which is $5.64 billion. See P0045 at 0006-07. The five conferences with the largest revenues, known as the Power Five Conferences, each generate hundreds of millions of dollars in revenues per year, in addition to the money that the NCAA distributes to them. See P0031; P0032; P0033; P0036; see also P0037 (showing that SEC made more than $409 million in revenues from television contracts alone in 2017, with its total conference revenues exceeding $650 million that year). The revenues of the Power Five have increased over time and are projected to continue to increase. See P0031; P0032; P0033; P0036; P0037. Conferences distribute most of their revenues to their member schools.

Among the areas that the NCAA regulates are the compensation and benefits that can be afforded [*23] to student-athletes. The 1906 bylaws of the IAA, as the NCAA was originally known, expressly prohibited student-athletes from receiving any compensation whatsoever, even athletics scholarships, in exchange for their participation in college sports. In 1956, the NCAA enacted a new set of rules permitting schools to award athletics scholarships, known as "grants-in-aid," to student-athletes. Stip. Facts ¶ 25, Docket No. 1098. These rules imposed a limit on the size of the grant-in-aid that schools were permitted to offer. Id. The limit precluded student-athletes from receiving any financial aid beyond that needed for commonly accepted educational expenses, which were tuition, fees, room and board, books, and cash for incidental expenses such as laundry.

<sup>2</sup> Defendants moved to strike portions of Plaintiffs' closing brief, Docket No. 1125, on the ground that they improperly rely on expert testimony to support substantive assertions of fact. The Court will resolve this motion by way of a separate order. The findings of fact in this order do not rely on evidence that is inadmissible.

In 1976, the cash for incidental expenses was disallowed by way of an amendment to the definition of the grant-in-aid that limited the scope of commonly accepted educational expenses to include only "tuition and fees, room and board and required course-related books." Stip. Facts ¶ 26, [\*1064] Docket No. 1098. Cash for incidental expenses related to school attendance, such as laundry, supplies, and transportation, was not included in the grant-in-aid [\*\*24] limit. This definition of a grant-in-aid remained in place until August 2015. See Stip. Facts ¶ 10, Docket No. 1093.

On August 7, 2014, the NCAA adopted a new legislative process for the Power Five, which is referred to as the Autonomy structure.<sup>3</sup> It allows those five conferences collectively to adopt legislation in specific areas, which include limits on grants-in-aid. Soon afterward, in January 2015, the Power Five voted to increase the overall limit on grants-in-aid, from the limit then in place, to a higher limit based on the cost of attendance at each school. See O'Bannon v. Nat'l Collegiate Athletic Ass'n, 802 F.3d 1049, 1054-55 \(9th Cir. 2015\) (O'Bannon II), cert. denied, 137 S. Ct. 277, 196 L. Ed. 2d 33 (2016). This became effective on August 1, 2015. The revised "full grant-in-aid" comprises 'tuition and fees, room and board, books and other expenses related to attendance at the institution up to the cost of attendance[.]" Division I Bylaw 15.02.6; Stip. Facts ¶ 10, Docket No. 1093. Cost of attendance is calculated by each school in accordance with federal regulations. J1517 at 0002; Stip. Facts 9191 3-6, Docket No. 1093. It is generally several thousand dollars higher than the prior grant-in-aid limit because it includes cash for incidental expenses related to the cost of attendance. See Stip. [\*\*25] Facts ¶ 5, Docket No. 1093.

Compensation and benefits in addition to the full grant-in-aid, some related and some unrelated to education, are also allowed and regulated by the NCAA. These include benefits the NCAA denominates "incidental to athletics participation," as well as money from the NCAA's Student Assistance Fund and Academic Enhancement Fund, government grants, and payments from outside entities. Other compensation is generally prohibited.

In 2009, a group of Division I male basketball and FBS football student-athletes brought an antitrust class action against the NCAA and its licensees to challenge the association's rules preventing them from being paid by schools or other entities for the sale of licenses to use their names, images, and/or likenesses (NIL) in videogames, live game telecasts, and other footage.<sup>4</sup> See O'Bannon v. Nat'l Collegiate Athletic Ass'n, 7 F. Supp. 3d 955, 962-63 \(N.D. Cal. 2014\) (O'Bannon I), aff'd in part, vacated in part, 802 F.3d 1049 \(9th Cir. 2015\). The rules challenged by the O'Bannon plaintiffs related to the release, use, and licensing of NIL. The then-applicable maximum limit on the grant-in-aid was discussed and implicated in the relief ordered by the Court, but the plaintiffs did not specifically challenge it in O'Bannon I. Some of the rules challenged [\*\*26] in the present case were challenged in O'Bannon; others were not.

This Court held in O'Bannon I that the NCAA rules challenged there violated Section 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1. [\*1065] Id. at 963. The Court found that the plaintiffs met their burden to show that the NCAA had fixed the price of the student-athletes' NIL rights, which had significant anticompetitive effects in the relevant market. Id. at 971-73, 988-93. On the question of procompetitive justifications of the restraints, the Court found that the NCAA's challenged restrictions on student-athlete compensation played "a limited role in driving consumer demand for FBS football and Division I basketball-related products." Id. at 1001. The Court also found that the challenged rules might facilitate the integration of student-athletes with their academic communities. Id. at 1003.

The O'Bannon plaintiffs proposed alternatives they asserted were less restrictive than the NCAA rules they challenged. This Court found that two of these proposed alternatives, which relied specifically on the use of revenue derived from NIL licensing, constituted "less restrictive means of achieving" the challenged rules' limited procompetitive effects. Id. at 982-84; 1004-07.

<sup>4</sup> The class in O'Bannon was defined as including "[a]ll current and former student-athletes residing in the United States who compete on, or competed on, an NCAA Division I (formerly known as 'University Division' before 1973) college or university men's basketball team or on an NCAA Football Bowl Subdivision (formerly known as Division I-A until 2006) men's football team and whose images, likenesses and/or names may be, or have been, included or could have been included (by virtue of their appearance in a team roster) in game footage or in videogames licensed or sold by Defendants, their co-conspirators, or their licensees." O'Bannon II, 802 F.3d at 1055-56.

Accordingly, this Court issued an injunction barring [**27] the NCAA from enforcing any rules that would prohibit its member schools and conferences from offering their FBS football and men's Division I basketball recruits compensation for the use of the: NIL in addition to a full grant-in-aid as then defined. The Court permitted the NCAA to implement rules capping the amount of compensation that could be paid to student-athletes while they are enrolled in school as long as the amount of the cap was not lower than the cost of attendance for students at that school. Id. at 1007-08. The Court also required the NCAA to allow member school to deposit a limited share of NIL licensing revenue in trust for their student-athletes. Id. at 1008. The Ninth Circuit affirmed the liability finding and the remedy prohibiting the NCAA from limiting payment of a share of NIL revenues to less than the cost of attendance. It vacated the remedy allowing a trust fund payment. O'Bannon II, 802 F.3d at 1074-79. By the time the O'Bannon injunction went into effect, the NCAA had already increased, through the Autonomy structure, the grant-in-aid limit to the cost-of-attendance amount for all Division I student-athletes, regardless of NIL use or revenue.

Plaintiffs in the present case are student-athletes who played Division [**28] I FBS football and men's and women's basketball between March 5, 2014, and the present.<sup>5</sup> Order Granting Motion for Rule 23(b)(2) Class Certification (Class Cert. Order) at 1, Docket No. 305. The Court certified three injunctive relief classes in the consolidated action under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 23(b)(2), each consisting of student-athletes who would be offered or receive a full grant-in-aid during the pendency of this action.<sup>6</sup> Id. at 4-5, 31.

[*1066] II. Agreement in Restraint of Trade Affecting Interstate Commerce

On summary judgment, the Court found that the existence of an agreement (i.e., a contract, combination, or conspiracy) restraining trade and affecting interstate commerce was undisputed. Defendants did not contest evidence showing that (1) the compensation limits that Plaintiffs challenge are enacted by agreement of Defendants and other NCAA members through the NCAA's legislative process and are embodied in NCAA rules published in the NCAA Division I Manual; (2) Defendants enforce these rules by requiring all NCAA members to comply with them, and by punishing violations; (3) the challenged rules affect interstate commerce, because they regulate transactions between Plaintiffs and their schools [**29] in multiple states nation-wide; and (4) these transactions are commercial because they regulate an essential component of Division I basketball and FBS football. Order Granting in Part and Denying in Part Cross-Motions for Summary Judgment (Summary Judgment Order) at 15, Docket No. 804.

The Court also found on summary judgment that the challenged NCAA rules restrain trade in that they limit the compensation that student-athletes may receive for their athletic services. These limits cap athletics-based grants-in-aid at the cost of attendance, but they also allow and fix the prices of numerous and varied additional benefits and compensation on top of a grant-in-aid that have a monetary value above the cost of attendance.<sup>7</sup> Some of <sup>5</sup> The first of the actions that became a part of this consolidated case, Alston v. NCAA, Case No. 14-cv-01011, was filed on March 5, 2014. Additional actions were filed in that year and in 2015. The United States Judicial Panel on Multidistrict Litigation transferred actions filed in other districts to this Court pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1407. Plaintiffs in all of the actions, except Jenkins v. NCAA, Case No. 14-cv-02758, filed a consolidated amended complaint. Docket No. 60.

<sup>6</sup> The Division I FBS Football Class is defined as "[a]ny and all NCAA Division I Football Bowl Subdivision ("FBS") football players who, at any time from the date of the Complaint through the date of the final judgment, or the date of the resolution of any appeals therefrom, whichever is later, received or will receive a written offer for a full grant-in-aid as defined in NCAA Bylaw 15.02.5, or who received or will receive such a full grant-in-aid." Class Cert. Order at 5, Docket No. 305. The Division I Men's Basketball Class and the Division I Women's Basketball Class are defined similarly. Id. In the Jenkins action, the Court certified the men's football and basketball classes; women's basketball class certification was not sought in that case. Id.

<sup>7</sup> The rules that Plaintiffs challenge here are listed and described in Plaintiffs' Opening Statement at 13-15 and Appendices A-C, Docket No. 068-3.

these rules regulate compensation that relates to education; others regulate compensation incidental to athletics participation and unrelated to education, including monetary awards that reward performance in athletics. The compensation limits are artificially set through an exercise of Defendants' monopsony power, and Plaintiffs would receive more compensation in exchange for their athletic services in the absence of the challenged limits. This Court had made [**30] similar findings in O'Bannon I, which were affirmed on appeal in O'Bannon II, O'Bannon I, 7 F. Supp. 3d at 971-73; O'Bannon II, 802 F.3d at 1064-69. Horizontal price-fixing among competitors is usually a per se violation of antitrust law. However, because "a certain degree of cooperation" is necessary to market athletics competition, the Court applies the Rule of Reason. See O'Bannon II, 802 F.3d at 1069 (citation and internal quotation marks omitted).

III. Rule of Reason: Market Definition

The Court's first step in applying the Rule of Reason is to determine the relevant market. On summary judgment, at the request of both parties and in the absence of a genuine issue of material fact, the Court adopted the market definition from the O'Bannon case.<sup>8</sup> The relevant [*1067] market there was that for a college education combined with athletics, or, alternatively, the market for the student-athletes' athletic services. See Summary Judgment Order at 18, Docket No. 804. In O'Bannon I, the Court had found that the plaintiffs' antitrust claims could be analyzed as a monopoly or, alternatively, as a monopsony. 7 F. Supp. 3d at 991. Under the theory of monopsony, sometimes referred to as a buyers' cartel, schools were characterized as buyers and student-athletes as sellers in a market for recruits' athletic services and licensing [**31] rights. Id. The NCAA did not challenge the market definitions on appeal and the Ninth Circuit adopted them. O'Bannon II, 802 F.3d at 1070.

At trial in this case, Plaintiffs based their claims on a theory of monopsony only. Dr. Rascher, Plaintiffs' economics expert, defined the relevant market here as comprising national markets for Plaintiffs' labor in the form of athletic services in men's and women's Division I basketball and FBS football, wherein each class member participates in his or her sport-specific market. See Rascher Report ¶¶ 30-130, 148-85. In these markets, the class-member recruits sell their athletic services to the schools that participate in Division I basketball and FBS football in exchange for grants-in-aid and other benefits and compensation permitted by NCAA rules. Dr. Rascher found that Defendants have monopsony power in all of these markets and exercise that power to cap artificially the compensation offered to recruits. Id. ¶ 37.

Dr. Rascher's definition of these markets is based on economic analyses similar to those performed in the O'Bannon case. His analyses here are predicated on updated data and take into account women's Division I basketball, which was not [**32] at issue in O'Bannon. Id. ¶¶ 148-53. Dr. Rascher's economic analyses show that the most talented athletes are concentrated in the respective markets for Division I basketball and FBS football; possible alternatives, such as the National Association of Intercollegiate Athletics (NAIA) or the National Christian College Athletic Association (NCCAA), have not proved to be viable substitutes; none of the major professional sports leagues in class members' sports provide competitive options for most college-aged talent; high barriers to entry into the market preclude any viable alternatives emerging for class members' athletic services; and the geographic scope of the markets is nationwide. Id. ¶¶ 154-85. In sum, class members cannot obtain the same combination of a college education, high-level television exposure, and opportunities to enter professional sports other than from Division I schools.

IV. Rule of Reason: Anticompetitive Effects

<sup>8</sup> After the Court had entered summary judgment on market definition, Defendants argued that the Court should have considered or adopted an alternative market definition that their economics expert, Dr. Kenneth Elzinga, discussed in his report, namely a "multi-sided market for college education in the United States" in which colleges operate as multi-sided platforms that balance their pricing to numerous constituencies. Elzinga Report at 26-28; see also Order Reaffirming Exclusion of Certain Expert Testimony by Dr. Elzinga at 9, Docket No. 1018. The Court rejected this argument on the ground that it was untimely, because Defendants did not offer any alternative definition of the relevant market or point to any admissible evidence to raise a genuine issue of material fact with respect to market definition during summary judgment proceedings; and on the ground that Dr. Elzinga's expert opinions about a multi-sided relevant market were unreliable and inadmissible. See generally id.

On summary judgment, the Court found that the challenged restraints produce significant anticompetitive effects in the relevant market. The absence of a genuine dispute with respect to the existence of an agreement among Defendants that is intended to, [**33] and does, limit student-athlete compensation in the relevant market, is in and of itself sufficient to find that this agreement has a strong potential for significant anticompetitive effects. Plaintiffs offered evidence of significant anticompetitive effects, however, which Defendants did not meaningfully dispute. The Court had also found significant anticompetitive [*1068] effects with respect to the rules challenged in O'Bannon I, which the Ninth Circuit affirmed in O'Bannon II. O'Bannon I, 7 F. Supp. at 973, 993; O'Bannon II, 802 F.3d at 1057-58, 1070-72.

The economic analyses of Plaintiffs' experts established that the challenged rules have the effect of artificially compressing and capping student-athlete compensation and reducing competition for student-athlete recruits by limiting the compensation offered in exchange for their athletic services. The compensation that student-athletes receive under the challenged rules does not correlate meaningfully with the value of their athletic services, based on indicators of their talent.<sup>9</sup> This is consistent with the absence of rigorous competition among schools with respect to student-athlete compensation. In a market free of the challenged restraints, competition among schools would increase in terms of the compensation they would [**34] offer to recruits, and student-athlete compensation would be higher as a result. Student-athletes would receive offers that would more closely match the value of their athletic services. See Lazear Report ¶¶ 11-50.

Plaintiffs' experts' analyses also show that Defendants are able to artificially compress and limit student-athlete compensation as described above because they possess monopsony power in the relevant market. See Rascher Report ¶¶ 30-130, 148-85; id. ¶ 37 ("Defendants and their co-conspirators have monopsony power in all three markets - that is, they have the power to collectively depress input prices without fear of loss of revenue in excess of the immediate cost savings"). Because of the absence of viable alternatives to Division I basketball and FBS football, and because of reduced competition among conferences due to the challenged compensation limits, the market for recruits in these sports is highly or perfectly concentrated under the current NCAA compensation limits. By contrast, if each conference were free to set its own compensation limits in competition with other conferences, the market concentration would decrease from highly or perfectly concentrated, to "moderately [**35] concentrated" for FBS football and "unconcentrated" for Division I basketball. Rascher Report ¶¶ 155-57.

This evidence shows that student-athletes are harmed by the challenged compensation limits, because these rules deprive them of compensation they would receive in the absence of the restraints.

At trial, Plaintiffs offered additional proof of the anticompetitive effects of the NCAA's limits on compensation. It shows that changes had been made, starting in August 2014, to the amounts and types of permissible student-athlete compensation. The changes were caused, in part, by the desire of the Power Five, those conferences with the highest revenues in Division I, to divert some of their relatively significant resources away from expenditures that only indirectly benefit student-athletes (such as expenditures on opulent athletic facilities and multi-million dollar coaches' salaries) and toward student-athlete compensation. See, e.g., P0056 at 0001-02; Rascher Direct Testimony Declaration ¶ 212. Dr. Harvey Perlman, chancellor of the University of Nebraska, agreed with the statement that, "[i]n short, we recruit by shifting funds from regulated benefits for student athletes to unregulated [**36] frills[.]" Perlman Deposition Transcript (Dep. Tr.) at 60-61.

[*1069] In a presentation in 2013, the presidents and chancellors of the Power Five had asked the Division I Board of Directors for autonomy in a variety of subject areas, for the following reasons: (1) the recognition of criticisms and accusations "of exploiting student athletes for our own financial gain"; (2) the desire to avoid "unintended consequences" if "ill-advised reforms are imposed" as a result of these criticisms; (3) a wish to move away from efforts to "create a level playing field," because "[t]oo often, our efforts to improve the lives of student athletes have been deflected because of cost implications that are manageable by our institutions but not by institutions with less resources"; and (4) a sense that efforts to "level the playing field" led the Power Five to "spend these resources in almost any way we want EXCEPT to improve support for student athletes." P0056 at 0001-02. This is evidence that these conferences were prevented from making the increases in student-athlete compensation that they would have made absent the anticompetitive effects of the challenged restraints.

After the new Autonomy structure [**37] became effective on August 7, 2014, in January 2015, the Power Five voted to increase the overall limit on grant-in-aid athletics scholarships from the limit in place at the time of the O'Bannon I trial to the higher, cost-of-attendance limit, effective on August 1, 2015.<sup>10</sup> The Power Five also created new forms of permissible compensation for student-athletes, and expanded the scope of previously permissible benefits or compensation. These changes permitted student-athletes to borrow against their future professional earnings to purchase loss-of-value insurance (Division I Bylaw 12.1.2.4.4); expanded reimbursement or payment of travel expenses for certain family members to attend certain events (Division I Bylaw 16.6.1.1); provided unlimited food (Division I Bylaw 16.5.2.5); and required schools to pay for medical care for athletics-related injuries for at least two years after graduation (Division I Bylaw 16.4.1).

Although the Power Five's Autonomy legislative enactments have resulted in greater compensation for student-athletes, such compensation is still capped by overarching NCAA limits that prevent the Power Five and all NCAA members [**38] from expanding compensation beyond a point determined by the NCAA through its traditional rulemaking process.<sup>11</sup> [*1070] In light of the foregoing, the Court finds that Defendants, through the NCAA, have monopsony power to restrain student-athlete compensation in any way and at any time they wish, without any meaningful risk of diminishing their market dominance. This is because the NCAA's Division I essentially is the relevant market for elite college football and basketball. And, because elite student-athletes lack any viable alternatives to Division I, they are forced to accept, to the extent they want to attend college and play sports at an elite level after high school, whatever compensation is offered to them by Division I schools, regardless of whether any such compensation is an accurate reflection of the competitive value of their athletic services. Moreover, the compensation that class members receive under the challenged rules is not commensurate with the value that they create for Division I basketball and FBS football; this value is reflected in the extraordinary revenues that Defendants derive from these sports.

The challenged rules thus have severe anticompetitive effects [**39] and student-athlete are harmed as a result of the challenged rules, because the rules deprive them of compensation that they would otherwise receive for their athletic services.

V. Rule of Reason: Asserted Justifications for the Challenged Restraints<sup>12</sup>

<sup>10</sup> This Court issued its O'Bannon I injunction on August 8, 2014, to take effect on August 1, 2015. Case No. 09-cv-3329, Docket Nos. 292, 298. On July 31, 2015, the Ninth Circuit stayed the injunction. Case No. 09-cv-3329, Docket No. 418. On September 30, 2015, while the injunction was stayed, the Ninth Circuit issued its opinion affirming in part this Court's decision; the judgment became effective on December 28, 2015, when the Ninth Circuit issued its mandate. See O'Bannon II, 802 F.3d at 1079; Case No. 09-CV-3329, Docket Nos. 437, 463. Thus, the Autonomy structure change to the full grant-in-aid limit became effective before the injunctive relief ordered by this Court in O'Bannon I ever went into effect. The Autonomy structure change differs from the relief ordered in O'Bannon; it permits grants-in-aid up to the cost of attendance for any Division I athlete (in any sport) and is not limited to compensation for the use or licensing of NIL. By contrast, the relief ordered in O'Bannon I, in relevant part, prohibited the NCAA from precluding its members from compensating Division I men's basketball and FBS football student-athletes for the licensing or use of their NIL, at an amount lower than the cost of attendance. Compare Division I Bylaw 15.02.6 "Full Grant-in-Aid" with Case No. 09-cv-3329, Docket No. 292 (injunction).

<sup>11</sup> See, e.g., Trial Tr. (Lennon) at 1618 (the Power Five's ability to modify athletics financial aid caps is limited by NCAA Bylaw 15.01.6); id. at 1620 (the Power Five's ability to award expenses and benefits is limited by NCAA Bylaw 12.1.2.1.4); id. at 1629 (the NCAA Board of Directors has the authority to override Autonomy legislation).

<sup>12</sup> Two additional pro-competitive justifications had been offered previously: increased output and competitive balance. These were rejected by the Court on summary judgment. They also were rejected in O'Bannon I and the NCAA did not address them on appeal, so the rejection was accepted in O'Bannon II. See Summary Judgment Order at 23 n.7, Docket No. 804; see also

A. Consumer Demand for Amateurism

Defendants argue that the challenged compensation limits are procompetitive because "amateurism is a key part of demand for college sports" and "consumers value amateurism." Defs.' Closing Brief at 7, 10, Docket No. 1128. The corollary is that if consumers did not believe that student-athletes were amateurs, they would watch fewer games and revenues would decrease as a result. Defendants rely on the notion that it is the "principle" of amateurism that drives consumer demand, and that the challenged restraints are procompetitive because they "implement" or "effectuate" that principle. Id. at 37. They did not offer evidence to establish that the challenged compensation rules, in and of themselves, have any direct connection to consumer demand.

Defendants nowhere define the nature of the amateurism they claim consumers insist upon. Defendants offer no stand-alone definition of amateurism [**40] either in the NCAA rules or in argument. The "Principle of Amateurism," as described in the current version of the NCAA's constitution, uses the word "amateurs" to describe the amateurism principle, and is thus circular. It does not mention compensation or payment. The constitution says, "Student-athletes shall be amateurs in an intercollegiate sport, and their participation should be motivated primarily by education and by the physical, mental and social benefits to be derived. Student participation in intercollegiate athletics is an avocation, and student-athletes should be protected from exploitation by professional and commercial enterprises." NCAA Constitution Article 2.9. No connection between the "Principle of Amateurism" and the challenged compensation limits is evident. Mike Slive, who served as commissioner of the SEC, one of the Power Five, [*1071] from 2002 to 2015, testified that amateurism is "just a concept that I don't even know what it means. I really don't." Slive Dep. Tr. at 23, 45. He repeated, "You know, the term amateur I've never been clear on what is meant either by in your question or otherwise, what is really meant by amateurism[.]" Id. at 43.

The definition of amateurism that Defendants point to [**41] is one that cannot be found in the Division I manual. Defendants and their witnesses often describe amateurism by reference to what they say it is not: namely, amateurism is not "pay for play." See, e.g., Defs.' Closing Brief at 36 n.214, Docket No. 1128 ("Amateurism is, by definition, 'not paying' the participants."); Trial Tr. (Lennon) at 1275-77 (justifying challenged compensation limits on the ground that they prevent "pay for play"). Defendants do not explain the origin or meaning of the term "pay for play." The NCAA constitution and the Division I Bylaws do not define, or even mention, "pay for play."

The concept of "pay" is addressed only in certain bylaws that govern student-athlete compensation and eligibility. In these bylaws, "pay" is defined only indirectly; it is defined by listing a variety of forms of compensation that could be considered pay, and indicating that each form of compensation constitutes prohibited "pay," unless it falls within one of many exceptions or is otherwise permitted by the NCAA. Thus, whether any form of compensation constitutes "pay" in violation of NCAA rules cannot be determined except by studying all of the relevant bylaws and all of their exceptions [**42] and cross-references. Erik Price, the Pac 12's Rule 30(b)(6) witness, testified, "Well, I think the NCAA, the way Bylaw 12 is written is a series of things that you cannot do, and by then still remain an amateur. It doesn't exactly have a beautiful definition of [amateurism]." Pac 12 Rule 30(b)(6) witness (Erik Price) Dep. Tr. at 60; see Division I Bylaw 12.1.2 (listing items that would cause a student-athlete to lose "amateur status" and eligibility for intercollegiate competition); Division I Bylaw 12.1.2(a) (prohibiting a student-athlete from using his or her athletic skills "for pay in any form" in his or her sport); but see Division I Bylaw 12.1.2.4 ("Exceptions to Amateurism Rule").

"Pay" under NCAA rules does not necessarily track the plain meaning of the word, whereby something of monetary value is provided in exchange for something else. Indeed, a review of the bylaws shows that many forms of payment, often in unrestricted cash, from schools and other sources, are allowed by the NCAA as "not pay," and thus as not inconsistent with amateurism. Much of this permissible compensation appears on its face to be akin to "pay" under the plain meaning of the word. In some instances it is provided to student-athletes [**43] in exchange for their athletic performance, making it similar to what a reasonable person could consider to be "pay for play."

As noted, the NCAA allows grants-in-aid up to the cost of attendance, which are intended to pay for the student-athletes' education-related expenses. It also allows monetary awards it describes as "incidental to athletics participation" on top of a grant-in-aid, which reward participation or achievement in athletics, such as qualifying for a bowl game in FBS football. See Division I Bylaw 16.1.4.1 and Figures 16-1, 16-2, 16-3; Trial Tr. (Lennon) at 1275. These performance awards, which are not related to education and can be provided on top of a full cost-of-attendance grant-in-aid, are allowed at several hundred dollars for each award, but the rules permit student-athletes to qualify for multiple of these awards, meaning that they could receive several thousand dollars in cash-equivalent [*1072] compensation if they perform well enough in their sport. See Rascher Direct Testimony Declaration ¶¶ 72, 205; Dr. Kenneth Elzinga Direct Testimony Declaration ¶¶ 95-96, Docket No. 883-1 (a student-athlete on a team that won a national championship could receive $5,600 total [**44] in athletics participation awards when combined); Hostetter Dep. Tr. at 207. These awards can be provided to student-athletes in the form of Visa gift cards that can be used like cash.<sup>13</sup> See Hostetter Dep. Tr. at 224-27. Robert Bowlsby, the Big 12 Conference's Rule 30(b)(6) witness, explained that "these things [gift cards] were all previously geared towards being mementos of the . . . games" and "it's . . . taken . . . another turn, and the gift cards are representative of that." Big 12 Conference Rule 30(b)(6) witness (Robert Bowlsby) Dep. Tr. at 160. On their face, athletics participation awards seem to violate other Division I bylaws, including those that prohibit cash or cash-equivalent payment or compensation that incentivizes athletic performance (Division I Bylaws 12.1.2.1.4.1 and 12.1.2.1.5); nevertheless, these awards do not constitute a prohibited form of payment or compensation only because the NCAA has chosen to permit them.

Without affecting their status as amateurs, Division I student-athletes can also receive money from their schools, from monies provided by the NCAA each year through the conferences, by way of the Student Assistance Fund (SAF) and the Academic Enhancement [**45] Fund (AEF), on top of a full cost-of-attendance grant-in-aid.<sup>14</sup> In 2018, the NCAA made available for distribution more than $84 million in SAF money, and more than $48 million in AEF money. This money is disbursed by schools to assist student-athletes in meeting financial needs, improve their welfare or academic support, or recognize academic achievement.<sup>15</sup> Division I Revenue [*1073] Distribution Plan, J0021 at 0004, 0014. It can be provided in cash or as a benefit, and it is not limited to education-related expenses. The schools are not constrained in the amount of these funds they can disburse to an individual student-athlete;

<sup>13</sup> At the time of O'Bannon I, student-athletes could receive performance awards in the form of store-specific gift cards but can now receive these awards in the form of Visa gift cards. See Hostetter Dep. Tr. at 224-27. Performance awards also can be provided in the form of "gift suites," which involve allowing student-athletes access to a location where they can select from a variety of gifts. See Elzinga Direct Testimony Declaration ¶ 95. Gifts available through gift suites include prepaid debit cards from stores such as Best Buy, iPad minis, speakers, watches, and headphones. See, e.g., James Dep. Tr. at 168 (received a watch and a $452 Best Buy gift card at gift suite, which he used to buy his mother a television); Jemerigbe Dep. Tr. at 206 (received iPad mini, iTunes gift card, headphones, and speaker through gift suites).

<sup>15</sup> The Division I Bylaws address only the uses of SAF monies that are impermissible. Neither schools nor conferences report to the NCAA detailed information (i.e., by student-athlete or by expense) to show how SAF funds were allocated; conferences report to the NCAA only amounts and types of uses of SAF monies in the aggregate. Trial Tr. (Lennon) at 1634-35. SAF monies have been used for expenses related to education, including postgraduate scholarships; fees for internship programs; international student fees, taxes, and insurance; school supplies and electronics (such as laptops, cameras, tablets); graduate school application fees; graduate school exam fees; tutoring; and academic achievement or graduation awards. J0002 at 0010; J0020 at 0001; P0043 at 0001; J0019 at 0001. SAF monies also have been used for benefits that are not related to education, such as loss-of-value insurance premiums, Trial Tr. (Lennon) at 1340; medical expenses; professional program testing; career assessments; travel expenses for both the student-athlete and family members; clothing; magazine subscriptions; and grocery reimbursement. J0002 at 0010; J0020 at 0001. AEF monies have been used for education-related benefits, such as academic achievement or graduation awards; summer school; fifth-or sixth-year aid; tutoring; academic support services; international student fees and taxes; professional program testing; and supplies (expendable or educational). J0021 at 0004-05. They have also been used for benefits that are not related to education, such as insurance premiums; medical, dental, or vision expenses (not covered by another insurance program); clothing; travel; and capital improvements/equipment. they are limited only in the aggregate by the amount that the NCAA distributes through these funds each year. Since 2015, SAF disbursements to individual student-athletes has reached to the tens of thousands of dollars above a full cost-of-attendance grant-in-aid,<sup>16</sup> and in some cases, $50,000 for premiums for loss-of-value insurance against the loss of future professional earnings, Trial Tr. (Lennon) at 1340.

Schools can also make thirty-dollar per diem payments to student-athletes for un-itemized incidental expenses while they are travelling for certain events. Division [**46] I Bylaw 16.8.1.1. Schools can pay travel expenses for certain family members to attend certain events. Division I Bylaw 16.6.1. In January 2015, without changing any bylaws, the NCAA began to pay up to $3,000 for family members of student-athletes who reach the Final Four but do not advance to the basketball championships, and up to $4,000 to attend the basketball championships. See P0148. Also in January 2015, the College Football Playoff committee began to pay up to $3,000 for each competing athlete's family members to travel to that event. Id.

Cost-of-attendance grants-in-aid themselves provide cash for expenses, as well as providing tuition, room, board, and books at no cost to the student-athlete. Any athletics aid in excess of the fixed expenses of tuition, room, board and books is provided to the student-athlete in the form of a cash stipend. The cash stipend can total several thousand dollars for some students. Defendants do not monitor how student-athletes spend their stipend. NCAA Rule 30(b)(6) witness (Kevin Lennon) Dep. Tr. at 35, 37; Hostetter Dep. Tr. at 85-86. Schools may provide full cost-of-attendance grants-in-aid to student-athletes who have already received federal Pell grants, [**47] which also are calculated to cover the cost of attendance. Any athletics aid in excess of tuition, room, board, and books, therefore, pays student-athletes a second time for the same cost-of-attendance expenses that the Pell grant is intended to cover.<sup>17</sup> [*1074] Each school may award two post-eligibility graduate school scholarships per year of $10,000 each that can be used at any institution (Senior Scholar Awards). Division I Bylaw 16.1.4.1.1. This is an exception to the NCAA's prohibition on post-eligibility financial aid to attend graduate school at a different institution. Defendants have not provided any cogent explanation for why the NCAA generally prohibits financial aid for graduate school at another institution, or for why the Senior Scholar Awards are limited in quantity and amount. The record suggests that these limitations are arbitrary. For example, when asked whether increasing the current limit on Senior Scholar Awards from two students per school to five students per school would render the awards inconsistent with amateurism, the NCAA's Rule 30(b)(6) witness, Kevin Lennon, provided no meaningful response other than to justify the current limit on the basis that the membership decided [**48] that limiting the awards to two students per school constituted a "reasonable cap." Trial Tr. (Lennon) at 1551-53. Lennon agreed that if the membership wanted to increase the awards "from two to three . . . they'd certainly be permitted to raise that[.]" Lennon Rule 30(b)(6) Dep. Tr. at 179.

In addition to the payments in excess of cost of attendance allowed from schools to student-athletes described above, the NCAA has allowed, and in recent years increased, payments that student-athletes may receive from outside entities without being found ineligible to play. For example, since 2015, international student-athletes have been allowed to receive unlimited payment from their national Olympic governing body in exchange for their performance at certain international competitions. And student-athletes continue to receive unlimited funds from the

When a student-athlete receives athletics aid permitted by the NCAA in addition to a Pell grant, the athletics aid may exceed the student's need as determined by federal regulations. See J1518 at 0001-02. This is an exception to the general practice that requires schools to adjust nonfederal aid awards to ensure that the total aid does not exceed a student's financial need. Id.

U.S. Olympic Committee for their performance in the Olympics; this also is not "pay." NCAA Rule 30(b)(6) witness (Mark Lewis) Dep. Tr. at 50-51 (a swimmer received $115,000 for participating in the Olympics, permissible under NCAA rules).

A given student-athlete is permitted to receive, in combination, all of the foregoing compensation and benefits for which he or she qualifies, [**49] on top of a full cost-of-attendance grant-in-aid, regardless of what the total amount of such compensation may turn out to be. Yet this compensation, some of which is unrelated to education and some of which is provided in cash or a cash-equivalent, is not considered to be "pay" and student-athletes who receive it remain amateurs.

These payments and benefits are, without a doubt, justifiable and well-deserved. They are relevant to the analysis of Defendants' consumer-demand procompetitive justification for two reasons. First, the rules that permit, limit, or forbid student-athlete compensation and benefits do not follow any coherent definition of amateurism, including Defendants' proffered definition of no "pay for play," or even "pay." The only common thread underlying all forms and amounts of currently permissible compensation is that the NCAA has decided to allow it.

Second, whatever understanding consumers have of amateurism, they enjoy watching sports played by student-athletes who receive compensation and benefits such as these, because this compensation has been paid and increased while college athletics has become and remains exceedingly popular and revenue-producing. This belies [**50] Defendants' position that the challenged current restrictions on student-athlete compensation are necessary to preserve consumer demand. Indeed, as discussed in more detail below, increases in compensation since 2015 have not reduced consumer demand, suggesting that [*1075] all of the current limits on student-athlete compensation are not necessary to preserve consumer demand.

Defendants' only economics expert on the issue of consumer demand, Dr. Elzinga, failed to show that the challenged compensation limits are necessary to preserve consumer demand. First, Dr. Elzinga's opinions on consumer demand are unreliable. He did not study any standard measures of consumer demand, such as revenues, ticket sales, or ratings. See Trial Tr. (Noll) at 285-287. The "narrative" evidence that formed the primary basis of his demand analysis was not representative. Trial Tr. (Elzinga) at 477-78, 445-47 (acknowledging that his economic analysis did not include interviews of fans, coaches, student-athletes, broadcasters, or conference commissioners). Instead, he interviewed people connected with the NCAA and its schools, who were chosen for him by defense counsel. Id. at 446-47.

Second, Dr. Elzinga's analysis of consumer demand [**51] is not relevant because he failed to study the effect of changes to student-athlete compensation on consumer demand. Dr. Elzinga explained his failure to study this issue by opining that "no test of the effect of amateurism" is possible "because there is no period during which the NCAA did not have and enforce amateurism standards." See Elzinga Direct Testimony Declaration ¶ 20. Dr. Elzinga also posits that studying the effects on consumer demand of changes to compensation would be unnecessary in any event because the principle of amateurism has been "materially consistent over the years." Id. ¶ 23. He explains that "[t]he central tenet of amateurism is not a specific dollar amount (as in $X = amateur, but $X +□ = professional)," rather, it is whether student-athletes are "being paid to play." Id. ¶¶ 14, 34-35; see also id. ¶ 14 ("[T]he difference between amateurism and professionalism isn't captured in some wooden and mechanical way by the number of dollars a student-athlete receives. True student-athletes are amateurs in the sense that they are not being paid to play.") (emphasis omitted). The record directly undercuts the premises of Dr. Elzinga's analysis. Dr. Elzinga's assertion [**52] that there is "no period" during which the NCAA did not "have and enforce amateurism standards" is contradicted by undisputed facts, which show that "NCAA did not have any rule-making or enforcement authority over its members until the 1950s." Stip. Facts ¶ 23, Docket No. 1098. And, as discussed above in the Background section, the NCAA's implementation of amateurism has changed materially on multiple occasions throughout its history.<sup>18</sup>

<sup>18</sup> In addition to the changes described in the Background section above, the fact that the NCAA currently permits student-athletes to receive the other forms of compensation discussed in this section in addition to a full grant-in-aid scholarship, such as

Further, Dr. Elzinga's contention that amateurism does not depend on a specific dollar amount is contradicted by the NCAA. The NCAA's Rule 30(b)(6) witness, Kevin Lennon, testified that specific dollar limits on student-athlete compensation incidental to athletics participation, such as performance awards, are set precisely for the purpose of distinguishing between permissible compensation and "pay for play." Trial Tr. (Lennon) at 1275. In other words, the amounts are set for the purpose of distinguishing between amateurism and non-amateurism. Dollar amounts (and changes to such amounts), therefore, cannot be said to be irrelevant [*1076] to the analysis of this procompetitive justification. As described above, such amounts can reach the hundreds and thousands of dollars. [**53]

For these reasons, the Court is not convinced by Dr. Elzinga's testimony.

The only economic analysis in the record that specifically speaks to the effects of compensation amounts on consumer demand is that by Dr. Rascher. Dr. Rascher analyzed two natural experiments to determine whether increases in student-athlete compensation would have an impact on consumer demand. He concluded that increased student-athlete compensation does not negatively affect consumer demand for Division I basketball and FBS football. The Court finds Dr. Rascher's analysis and opinions to be reliable and persuasive.

The first natural experiment involved comparing consumer demand before and after the increase to the grant-in-aid limit to the cost of attendance, which was voted on in January 2015 and implemented in August 2015. As explained earlier, this change to the grant-in-aid limit, on its own, resulted in a significant increase in permissible compensation per student-athlete, because it allowed grants-in-aid to provide cash for expenses that previously could not be covered, such as supplies and transportation. Rascher Direct Testimony Declaration ¶¶ 52, 54; Noll Direct Testimony Declaration ¶ 12. Some schools [**54] adjusted their cost-of-attendance calculations so that the value of a full cost-of-attendance grant-in-aid would be greater. See, e.g., Trial Tr. (Lennon) at 1365 ("some" schools' financial aid offices "revisited their calculation[s]" regarding the cost of attendance after the increase of the grant-in-aid limit to cost of attendance). Moreover, because the NCAA rule that permits schools to award full grants-in-aid to student-athletes in addition to a Pell grant was not adjusted after the change to the grant-in-aid limit in 2015, the amount of cash provided above the cost of attendance increased even more for student-athletes who are awarded both a Pell grant and a full grant-in-aid scholarship. See Noll Direct Testimony Declaration ¶¶ 78-79.

Dr. Rascher's conclusions are also supported by the fact that the NCAA has increased its SAF and AEF distributions since 2015. See P0039 at 0001; D0695 at 0001. As noted, a student-athlete can receive unlimited money through the school, from the NCAA's SAF and AEF, on top of a full cost-of-attendance grant-in-aid. Since 2015, SAF cash to individual students has reached to the tens of thousands of dollars above a full cost-of-attendance grant-in-aid. [**55] See P0104; P0105; P0106; Rascher Direct Testimony Declaration ¶¶ 75, 78-81. The schools are not constrained in terms of the amount of these funds they can disburse to an individual student-athlete. Stip. Facts ¶¶ 3-12, Docket No. 1094.

Thus, Dr. Rascher found that total permissible student-athlete compensation has increased since August 2015, resulting in thousands of class members receiving significant benefits and compensation on top of full cost-of-attendance grants-in-aid since Q'Bannon I was decided. Rascher Direct Testimony Declaration ¶ 52.<sup>19</sup> This has had no negative impact on consumer demand; to the contrary, Dr. Rascher found that NCAA, conference, and school revenues from Division I basketball and FBS football have increased since 2015. Rascher Direct Testimony Declaration ¶¶ 45, 47, 52, 54-55; P0139, P0030, P0032-P0039; P0048, P0049; P0137. The revenues [*1077] of the schools in the Power Five alone for basketball and FBS football increased from a very large amount in 2014-2015 disclosed under seal, to an even larger amount in 2015-16. Rascher Direct Testimony Declaration ¶ 47; see also P0045; J0017 at 0012-13 (showing that generated revenues have increased since 2014 for schools in [**56] the Power Five and other schools not in the Power Five). Revenues are one of the best economic measures of consumer demand. Rascher Direct Testimony Declaration ¶ 51.

compensation "incidental to athletics participation, including performance awards, also distinguishes today's concept of the amateur student-athlete from that in effect in earlier years.

<sup>19</sup> Again, this is not intended to suggest that student-athletes should not receive these payments, but that the increases in compensation described above have not negatively affected consumer demand.

Dr. Rascher acknowledged that some of the media revenues he examined are derived from multi-year contracts that were executed before 2015 and have escalating clauses (i.e., the payments under the contracts will increase each year for their duration without the need to renegotiate). Trial Tr. (Rascher) at 32. Nonetheless, some of the most valuable and longest-term contracts were executed after 2015.<sup>20</sup> This supports the finding that consumer demand was not negatively affected after more student-athlete compensation became permissible in 2015. Dr. Rascher also testified that multi-year contracts that were executed before 2015 show that the increase in student-athlete compensation in 2015 did not negatively impact consumer demand given that these contracts were not renegotiated after the compensation change in 2015.<sup>21</sup> Trial Tr. (Rascher) at 32.

The second natural experiment is based on the University of Nebraska Post-Eligibility Opportunities (PEO) program, which was created after the O'Bannon trial [**57] and allows post-eligibility aid from the university, on top of a grant-in-aid, of up to $7,500 for education-related endeavors, including graduate school, as well as study abroad, or an internship. Perlman Dep. Tr. 127-28. This natural experiment shows two things. First, at least one school has the desire to offer post-eligibility benefits such [*1078] as these provided on top of a grant-in-aid. Second, there is no evidence that the creation of this program has reduced consumer demand for Nebraska sports or Division I basketball or FBS football in general. The evidence is to the contrary: Nebraska's chancellor testified that this program is consistent with amateurism because it advances "the kinds of activities that higher education are involved with" and that Nebraska's "Athletic Director talks about it at every opportunity, public and private[.]" Perlman Dep. Tr. at 127-28; see also Trial Tr. (Rascher) 19-20; Rascher Direct Testimony Declaration ¶¶ 206-07; Trial Tr. (Elzinga) at 434-37.

Dr. Rascher's analysis and opinions, therefore, support a finding that, because the described increases to student-athlete compensation did not lead to a decrease in consumer demand, similar future increases [**58] in compensation would not reduce demand.

Some defense witnesses corroborated Dr. Rascher's conclusions. See, e.g., NCAA Rule 30(b)(6) witness (Mark Lewis) Dep. Tr. at 112 (negotiated media contracts for NCAA, testified that increase of grant-in-aid limit to cost of attendance did not affect consumer demand for FBS football and Division I basketball); Big 12 Rule 30(b)(6) witness (Robert Bowlsby) Dep. Tr. at 67-68 (he is not aware of "any impact on revenue" based on "greater meals and snacks," and "with respect to Big 12 members' ability to provide cost of attendance scholarships").

Defendants try to show that consumer demand is dependent on maintaining current restrictions on student-athlete compensation by presenting the opinions of a survey expert, Dr. Bruce Isaacson, who concluded that "amateurism"

<sup>20</sup> For example, in 2016, the NCAA extended its agreement with CBS/Turner for the March Madness tournament; the previous contract was to run through 2024. The 2016 extension increased substantially the average annual fees owed to the NCAA relative to the prior iteration of the contract. D0532 at 0023; Rascher Direct ¶ 47; P0045 at 0001-02. The total value of the 2016 extension, which covers eight years, from 2024 to 2032, is $8.8 billion. P0045 at 0002. The prior iteration, which covers fourteen years, from 2010 to 2024, is valued at $10.8 billion. P0045 at 0001. Additionally, the 2016 extension is through 2032; witnesses who have experience negotiating media contracts in the context of college sports have described this as a major extension on the ground that contracts of greater potential value to broadcasters are typically executed for a longer timeframe. See Trial Tr. (Aresco) at 1009 (characterizing the 2016 extension as a "major extension"); id. at 998 (in the context of media contracts in college sports, "[t]he more attractive the product, the longer [the networks would] want to go" with the length of a contract).

<sup>21</sup> Some defense witnesses speculated that networks or sponsors could choose to renegotiate broadcast rights fees under provisions for "changed circumstances" if they believed that Division I basketball and FBS football changed from amateur to professional. See, e.g., NCAA Rule 30(b)(6) witness (Mark Lewis) Dep. Tr. at 247. This testimony, however, is not supported. Defendants have not pointed to any instance in which networks or sponsors have chosen to renegotiate licensing rights fees as a result of changes in student-athlete compensation or otherwise, and the record shows no renegotiations or fees adjustments after the grant-in-aid limit was increased to cost of attendance on August 1, 2015. See, e.g., Big 12 Rule 30(b)(6) witness (Robert Bowlsby) Dep. Tr. at 121, 125-28. No evidence was presented that student-athlete compensation or amateurism have even been discussed with media partners in this context, suggesting that these issues are not of concern to media partners and that renegotiation based on these issues is unlikely. See, e.g., Conference USA Rule 30(b)(6) witness (Judy McLeod) Dep. Tr. 149-50; Big 12 Rule 30(b)(6) witness (Robert Bowlsby) Dep. Tr. 125-28.

is an "important" factor in consumers' decision to watch or attend college sports, and is an "important reason for the popularity of college sports." Dr. Bruce Isaacson Direct Testimony Declaration ¶¶ 24, 26, 160, 13, Docket No. 883-3. Dr. Isaacson surveyed 1,086 consumers of college football and basketball, id. ¶¶ 111, 114, on-line to determine the reasons why they watch college sports. One of the reasons that [**59] respondents could select was that student-athletes are "amateurs and/or not paid." He also asked whether consumers would favor or oppose certain compensation scenarios.

Dr. Isaacson's survey results and the inferences he draws from them do not establish or reliably indicate that a relationship exists between the challenged compensation limits and consumer demand for Division I basketball and FBS football.

First, the Court is not persuaded that the selection by some respondents of the "amateurs and/or not paid" option as a reason for viewing college sports sheds any light on the question of whether the challenged compensation limits, or increases in them, would cause those respondents to view fewer college sports events. Dr. Isaacson did not define "amateurs" or "not paid" in his survey, or determine what either of those terms meant to respondents. Trial Tr. (Isaacson) at 1907-09. Worse, the use of the phrase "amateurs and/or not paid" renders the responses hopelessly ambiguous. (emphasis added). The phrase includes the response "amateurs or not paid," implying that a respondent could believe that an athlete could be an amateur though not unpaid. Dr. Isaacson "intend[ed] [the terms] to [**60] be synonymous" but admits that he provided no indication to respondents in his survey that they were so intended. Id. at 1908-09.

Even so, Dr. Isaacson's conclusion that "amateurism" is an "important" factor in consumers' decision to watch or attend college sports is an overstatement, because only 31.7% selected the "amateur and/or not paid" option as a reason why they watch or attend college sports, meaning [*1079] that the great majority of respondents, 68.3%, gave other reasons. Isaacson Direct Testimony Declaration 153, 24, 26; Trial Tr. (Isaacson) at 1903-04. More respondents selected the options "I like it when certain colleges win or lose" and "my friends or family watch games, or attend games in person" than the "amateurs and/or not paid" option (which was the third most common selection). This suggests that these more-frequently selected reasons are more "important" factors for viewing college sports than "amateurism and/or not paid." Moreover, the respondents who selected the "amateurs and/or not paid" option selected an average of more than four other reasons they watch college sports. Trial Tr. (Isaacson) at 1902.

Second, Dr. Isaacson did not show that opposition or support for the hypothetical [**61] compensation scenarios he asked about would serve as a reliable indicator of how consumers would actually behave if the scenarios were implemented. Trial Tr. (Isaacson) at 1893; Dr. Hal Poret Direct Testimony Declaration ¶ 28. Dr. Isaacson tested four compensation scenarios: (1) academic incentive payment; (2) graduation incentive payment; (3) off-season expenses; and (4) unlimited payments. Isaacson Direct Testimony Declaration ¶ 126. He also tested a fifth "control" scenario that was not related to compensation. Id. ¶ 130. Dr. Isaacson's survey did not ask whether respondents would view fewer or more Division I basketball and FBS football events if additional compensation were provided to student-athletes. Dr. Isaacson acknowledged that measuring consumer preferences is "not the same thing" as measuring future consumer behavior, and that he did not do any work to measure any relationship between the two.<sup>22</sup> See Trial Tr. (Isaacson) at 1894-96; see also id. (testified at his deposition that his "survey does not attempt to measure future behavior"); see also Poret Direct Testimony Declaration ¶ 28 and Poret Rebuttal Testimony ¶¶ 2-3 (opposition to a scenario does not translate to a change [**62] in behavior if the scenario were implemented).<sup>23</sup>

<sup>22</sup> The NCAA offered in O'Bannon a survey by Dr. J. Michael Dennis that did ask respondents about their future behaviors. This survey suffered from other defects. See O'Bannon I, 7 F. Supp. 3d at 975-76; O'Bannon II, 802 F.3d at 1059.

<sup>23</sup> Moreover, Dr. Isaacson acknowledged that he was "not providing an opinion on whether or not opposition to a particular benefit relates to amateurism. I'm going to leave that to you and the NCAA and the conferences." See Trial Tr. (Isaacson) at 1912.

By contrast, Plaintiffs' survey expert, Dr. Hal Poret, did attempt to measure the potential impact on future consumer behavior of providing additional compensation.<sup>24</sup> He conducted a survey of 2,696 people who watch or attend college basketball or football to assess the extent to which certain scenarios involving increased compensation, if permitted by conferences and schools, would cause them to watch or attend these sports events more or less often. Poret Direct Testimony Declaration ¶¶ 4, 17 and n.2, 18. Unlike Dr. Isaacson, Dr. Poret specifically asked respondents to indicate whether scenarios whereby compensation provided by conferences or schools would include some compensation that is not currently permitted or is currently limited would affect their viewership [*1080] or attendance and, if so, to indicate the extent. Id. ¶¶ 44-47. Dr. Poret tested scenarios involving (1) a healthcare fund; (2) an academic incentive payment of up to $10,000 per school year; (3) a one-time graduation incentive payment of up to $10,000; (4) a post-eligibility undergraduate scholarship; (5) a work-study payment; (6) off-season expenses; (7) a graduate [*63] school scholarship for the cost of attendance; and (8) a post-eligibility study abroad scholarship. Poret Direct Testimony Declaration ¶ 24. Dr. Poret concluded, based on the survey responses, that viewership and attendance would not be negatively impacted if the scenarios he tested were implemented individually. Id. ¶ 59; Trial Tr. (Poret) at 1792, 1795. Dr. Poret's survey, therefore, supports the finding that the current limits on student-athlete compensation, to the extent they relate to the scenarios that he tested, are not necessary to preserve consumer demand.

Defendants presented no evidence that NCAA bylaws limiting compensation are enacted based on any analysis of consumer demand.<sup>25</sup> Limits on student-athlete compensation and benefits are set through "a deliberative process" of NCAA members, Trial Tr. (Lennon) at 1309, and are based on the "delicate balancing that the membership . . . engage[s] in," Trial Tr. (Lennon) at 1552. That deliberative process and delicate balancing do not appear to include considering any possible effects on consumer demand. Indeed, Lennon, who has worked for the NCAA for more than thirty years, testified that he does not recall any instance in which [*64] any study on consumer demand was considered by the NCAA membership when making rules about compensation. Trial Tr. (Lennon) at 1550-51. Lennon did not offer much insight as to what the NCAA membership does consider when it decides where to set a compensation cap, and the explanations that he did provide suggest that the caps are set arbitrarily.

Defendants also rely on the testimony of lay witnesses to try to establish a connection between the compensation limits and consumer demand. These lay witnesses presented their own personal opinions and those of unidentified other people with whom they * 3 * * * have spoken. This testimony posits that consumers oppose increasing compensation to student-athletes and support what the witnesses described as amateurism. The witnesses imply that these consumers would watch fewer games if they did not believe that student-athletes were amateurs. But there is no way to know what that concept means to the consumers these witnesses reported on.

Some lay defense witnesses testified that, absent the challenged NCAA limits in their current form, conferences would set limits, or not, based upon different values and resources, and that could diminish [*65] the consumer appeal of national tournaments or rivalries or lead to conference realignment. See, e.g., Trial Tr. (Scott) at 1141-1143. But, at present, there is wide variation among conferences and their members in Division I in terms of the compensation they permit their student-athletes to receive [*1081] within the current NCAA limits.<sup>26</sup> Further, <sup>24</sup> The Court finds that Dr. Poret's survey results and the conclusions he draws therefrom regarding future consumption of Division I basketball and FBS football are based on a methodology that is sufficiently reliable. Dr. Poret showed that his use of controls and other aspects of his survey's design allowed him to assess reliably the potential impact on future consumer behavior of implementing the scenarios he tested. Poret Rebuttal Testimony ¶¶ 12-26; Trial Tr. (Poret) at 1713-16; 1725-26; 1729; 1781-82; 1784.

<sup>25</sup> Some witnesses referred to studies conducted by third parties at the request and for the use of conferences. See Trial Tr. (Scott) at 1167, 1153-57; D0541 (third-party study commissioned by the Pac-12, dated January 2014); Trial Tr. (Scott) 1149-53, 1172; D0683 (third-party study commissioned by the Big Ten, dated September 21, 2009); Trial Tr. (Smith) at 1412-18; D0239 (third-party study commissioned by the Big Ten, dated June 3, 2008). There is no evidence that these or any other studies were considered by the NCAA when enacting any bylaws limiting compensation. These studies were admitted for a limited purpose and not for the truth of the matter asserted therein because their contents constitute hearsay within hearsay.

resources, budgets, revenues, and performance among schools and conferences that continue to play each other in Division I already vary significantly, and the disparities that exist are longstanding.<sup>27</sup> There is no evidence that this lack of uniformity detracted from the popularity of national tournaments or rivalries. Rascher Direct Testimony Declaration ¶¶ 97-98. The variety in compensation models and resources across schools and conferences may, in fact, promote the popularity of national tournaments. See Trial Tr. (Elzinga) at 546 (agreeing that a "david/goliath story" is appealing to consumers in the national NCAA men's basketball tournament, March Madness, because it provides "differentiation" due to the schools' varying economic models and strengths); id. at 483.<sup>28</sup> Moreover, this testimony is further undermined by the fact that other rules that assist in [**66] promoting equity among conferences, such as the limits on total scholarships, are not being challenged in this litigation and would not be modified through any of the proposed alternatives.<sup>29</sup>

Further, even if modifications to the NCAA's current compensation scheme resulted in some conferences realigning their membership because of differences in values, the argument that this would harm college sports as a product is unconvincing. Changes in conference membership have happened frequently in the last two decades. See Trial Tr. (Elzinga) at 485-87 (it is a "well-established fact" that "dozens and dozens of teams have" changed conferences over the years and conference changes "have increased in the past two decades"); Stip. Facts ¶ 10, Docket No. 1098.

The record does not support a finding that media or other commercial agreements would be renegotiated or terminated if conferences realigned. Some of the conference media agreements in the record contain clauses that permit the networks to renegotiate fees or terminate the agreement in the event that certain schools leave the conference. There is no [*1082] evidence that any agreement was renegotiated or terminated in the past as [**67] a result of realignment. Instead, when the Big East experienced a significant realignment and ultimately became the AAC in July 2013, ESPN did not terminate its contract with the Big East/AAC; in fact, the existence of this contract was described as one of the reasons why the Big East/AAC was able to "recover" from the realignment. Trial Tr. (Aresco) at 1023, 1048; J1509 at 0003-05.

Defense lay witnesses also testified that consumer demand for Division I basketball and FBS football is driven by consumers' perception that student-athletes are, in fact, students. See, e.g., Bowlsby Dep. Tr. at 12-13 ("This really isn't about amateurs or not amateurs. This is . . . about the concept of student athlete."); NCAA Rule 30(b)(6) witness (Mark Lewis) Dep. Tr. at 166 (he would draw the line to limit pay in the context of consumer demand as follows: "the line is if it's now not about . . . going to school, but now it's about paying somebody to play a sport"); Trial Tr. (Blank) at 954, 869 (fans of college sports "love seeing their fellow students out there playing"); Trial Tr. (Blank) at 949-50 (viewership of college sports is based on student-athletes being "students at the university"); Trial

<sup>26</sup> For example, the Ivy League does not offer any athletics-based scholarships. Military academies offer no athletics scholarships but pay their students as salaried employees. Some conferences, like the Big 12, require their members to offer athletics scholarships up to the maximum allowed by the NCAA. Some schools in other conferences cap athletics-related compensation at the cost of attendance (in other words, these schools do not permit students to, for example, receive a full cost-of-attendance grant-in-aid on top of a Pell grant). Rascher Direct Testimony Declaration ¶¶ 41, 96; Big 12 Handbook J0005 at 0017.

<sup>27</sup> See e.g., Trial Tr. (Aresco) at 1054-55 (disparities in revenue and branding opportunities currently exist between conferences, and schools with fewer resources still play schools with greater resources); Bowlsby Dep. Tr. at 38-39 (agreeing that the concept of "competitive equity is largely a mirage" because "in reality, there hadn't been much balance in the past"); Slive Dep. Tr. at 39 ("the effort to ensure a level playing field was an unattainable concept").

<sup>28</sup> See also Lynn Holzman Dep. Tr. 129-30 (NCAA Vice President for Women's Basketball, testifying that under current NCAA rules for March Madness, "institutions with different resources, institutions that provide athletic scholarships and some that don't end up being matched up and play against one another. So if there's an institution that permissibly is providing a benefit or something to student-athletes, under the current construct of the championship, an institution that does not provide the same thing, in my opinion, would be okay for them to play one another").

<sup>29</sup> See Trial Tr. (Aresco) at 1025-26 (the "larger schools" cannot "take 200 of the best student athletes" because "there are scholarship limits, 85 per school. And that was imposed in 1992. And it was to enhance the competition in college football").

Tr. (Smith) [**68] at 1411-12 (same); Trial Tr. (Smith) at 1394-95, 1407-08 (the "collegiate fan is more aligned to the educational experience that college sports provide"). Michael Aresco, the commissioner of the AAC who previously worked for CBS and ESPN, noted that the programming of televised college sports focuses on "the college experience," which includes the campus, academics, and community service. See Trial Tr. (Aresco) at 1032. This testimony does not establish that the challenged rules have a connection to consumer demand, however, because student-athletes would continue to be students in the absence of the challenged rules. Fellow students, alumni, and neighbors of the schools would continue to identify with them.

The Court does credit the importance to consumer demand of maintaining a distinction between college sports and professional sports. In addition to the fact that college sports are played by students actually attending the college, student-athletes are not paid the very large salaries that characterize the professional sports leagues that many student-athletes aspire to, the National Basketball Association and the National Football League.

Some lay witnesses, particularly those who [**69] have professional experience with third-party networks such as CBS or ESPN, testified that the value of media rights contracts has a relationship to the popularity of college sports as being distinguishable from professional sports. Trial Tr. (Aresco) at 1004, 1032-35; see also NCAA Rule 30(b)(6) witness (Mark Lewis) Dep. Tr. at 65-66 ("the people that are our fans who create that consumer demand would feel differently if college sports looked like professional sports"); id. at 99 ("if the college game looks to be professional sports, less people will watch it" and "there won't be the same demand" and "revenue will decline").

The Court credits this testimony and finds that some of the challenged compensation limits may have some effect in preserving consumer demand to the extent that they serve to support the distinction between college sports and professional sports. That distinction cannot be based on student-athletes not receiving any compensation and benefits on top of a grant-in-aid; this is because student-athletes currently can receive thousands or tens of thousands of dollars in such compensation, related and unrelated to education, while remaining NCAA amateurs. Accordingly, it follows [*1083] that the [**70] distinction between college and professional sports arises because student-athletes do not receive unlimited payments unrelated to education, akin to salaries seen in professional sports leagues.

Rules that prevent unlimited payments such as those observed in professional sports leagues, therefore, are procompetitive when compared to having no such restrictions. Such rules include those challenged that are necessary to limit compensation and benefits unrelated to education. The same is true with respect to the challenged limit on grants-in-aid; because the difference between the fixed costs of tuition, room, board, and books and the cost of attendance is paid to student-athletes in cash, removing the limit on the grant-in-aid could result in unlimited cash payments.

However, rules that limit or prohibit non-cash education-related benefits do not serve to foster consumer demand by maintaining a distinction between college and professional sports. The value of such benefits, like a scholarship for post-eligibility graduate school tuition, is inherently limited to its actual value, and could not be confused with a professional athlete's salary. Further, the relationship of the benefits [**71] to education would serve to emphasize that the recipients are students, and not professional athletes. A subset of these education-related rules, namely those that limit cash or cash-equivalent benefits, such as academic or graduation awards or incentives, have a procompetitive effect to the extent that they prevent unlimited cash payments similar to those observed in professional sports. As will be discussed in more detail below in the section on less restrictive alternatives, the current challenged rules that limit education-related benefits and compensation are more restrictive than necessary to accomplish this procompetitive effect.

B. Integration

Defendants' second remaining procompetitive justification is that the challenged limits promote the integration of student-athletes with their academic communities, which improves the college education student-athletes receive.<sup>30</sup>

---

<sup>30</sup>in this context, Defendants also argue that academic integration itself plays a role in preserving consumer demand for college sports. This is merely a restatement of the argument that the challenged limits preserve consumer demand because consumers within this rubric, Defendants present evidence that student-athletes benefit from receiving a college education, that the challenged limits help to incentivize academics and that the limits help integrate student-athletes into their academic communities where otherwise a "wedge" might be created.

Defendants have [**72] not shown that the challenged rules have an effect on improving or promoting integration. While the evidence shows that student-athletes benefit from receiving a college education, it does not support the notion that any such benefits arise out of, or are caused by, the challenged compensation limits.

Defendants rely on the expert testimony of Dr. James Heckman to support the proposition that student-athletes benefit from their college education. Plaintiffs quarrel with Dr. Heckman's methodology,<sup>31</sup> but accepting his opinion that student-athletes [*1084] benefit from attending college, this opinion says nothing about whether the challenged compensation rules cause the benefits that he observed. Indeed, Dr. Heckman conceded as much at trial. See Trial Tr. (Heckman) at 564-66. Dr. Heckman also conceded that additional compensation could improve outcomes for student-athletes, which contradicts the notion that the challenged compensation limits have a positive effect on student-athlete outcomes. Trial Tr. (Heckman) at 597 (if a student-athlete received "another $10,000" then the "student is clearly better off. No question about it").

Defendants also proffer lay witness testimony on the benefits of [**73] college education. None of this shows a connection between the challenged compensation limits and the benefits of the education. Some student-athletes testified that they gained skills and learning opportunities, but they did not attribute these benefits to the caps on their grant-in-aid athletic scholarships. See, e.g., Trial Tr. (Hartman) at 825-27.

Dr. Heckman's opinion that student-athletes would be incentivized to spend time on athletics to the detriment of academics if they received additional compensation is undermined by evidence suggesting that additional compensation can have a positive impact on academic achievement. See, e.g., NCAA Research: Trends in Graduation Success Rates and Federal Graduation Rates at NCAA Division I Institutions (Nov. 2017), J0018 at 0026-29; see also Trial Tr. (Petr) 1884-85 (showing that graduation rates for student-athletes in Division I basketball and FBS football have increased since 2015, when permissible athletics-related compensation increased).

Defendants point to policies that assist with student-athletes' involvement in academics and other aspects of university life, but these policies are not related to the challenged compensation limits. [**74] See, e.g., Trial Tr. (Blank) at 887-89 (student-athletes at Wisconsin are not limited in their selection of major or to athlete-only dorms, and are permitted to miss only a certain number of classes in a season); Trial Tr. (Smith) at 1398-99 (Ohio State requires student-athletes to live on campus for two years); Trial Tr. (Hatch) at 1997 (same at Notre Dame); Division I Bylaw 17.1 (governing required time off); Emmert Dep. Tr. at 209-15 (proposals to reduce athletics time demands).

Defendants next contend that the challenged rules help prevent a "wedge" between student-athletes and other students that could result if student-athletes received compensation that was not available to ordinary students. Defendants again rely on Dr. Heckman, who opined that academic achievement incentives would isolate student-athletes "from the rest of the student body" and affect the "camaraderie in these various institutions." Trial Tr. (Heckman) at 631-33. Defendants also point to testimony, by university administrators and former student-athletes, that additional compensation for student-athletes would create tensions and resentment between student-athletes and non-athletes, as well as among student-athletes [**75] to the extent that any additional compensation is not provided equally. See, e.g., Trial Tr. (Hatch) at 2000-01; Trial Tr. (Smith) at 1409-10; Jemerigbe Dep. Tr. at 294-95.

This testimony is outweighed by the fact that income disparities inevitably exist as a result of family background or wealth derived from other sources. See e.g. Trial Tr. (Blank) at 920-21 (Wisconsin students come from different value amateurism. Indeed, the evidence that Defendants offer to support both of these arguments overlaps. The Court considers this argument to be part of the consumer demand justification.

<sup>31</sup> Dr. Heckman's analysis was based on data whose temporal scope did not capture the class period in this litigation, and did not include any information about whether the student-athletes actually received an athletics scholarship (and if so, the amount of such scholarship) or any of the other types of compensation that are at issue in this case.

socioeconomic backgrounds). Moreover, levels of student-athlete compensation vary already. The [*1085] amount of a cost-of-attendance grant-in-aid is calculated by each school with the discretion to adjust it on an individual-student basis. J1517 at 0002; Stip. Facts ¶¶ 3-6, Docket No. 1093; NCAA Rule 30(b)(6) witness (Mark Lewis) Dep. Tr. at 164. Another reason why compensation can vary among student-athletes is that the NCAA permits them to receive their grant-in-aid on top of federal Pell grants, which the government awards to some but not all student-athletes. Also variable is the payment of SAF and AEF benefits, which are not limited on an individual-student basis, and the awards incidental to athletics participation, including performance awards paid in Visa gift cards. Athletes who perform well in the [**76] Olympics can receive unlimited compensation for their performance; such compensation has reached six figures. NCAA Rule 30(b)(6) witness (Mark Lewis) Dep. Tr. at 50-51. And athletes in certain sports, such as tennis, can receive up to $10,000 in prize money per year prior to enrolling in college and still compete as amateurs. See Division I Bylaw 12.1.2.4.2.1. At least for some, these disparities are not problematic. See, e.g., Trial Tr. (Jenkins) at 735-736 (he did not resent a football teammate who received more than a million dollars from a baseball professional league as a recruitment bonus).

In O'Bannon I, the Court found that the challenged limits may help integrate student-athletes with their academic communities by preventing a wedge, which may improve their college education. See 7 F. Supp. 3d at 980-81. The Ninth Circuit affirmed that finding, although it noted that on appeal the NCAA focused its argument regarding procompetitive justifications entirely on the amateurism justification. O'Bannon II, 802 F.3d at 1072. Nonetheless, support for the Court's finding with respect to integration in O'Bannon I was weak, and it is weaker now. Evidence was presented at this trial that did not exist at the time of the O'Bannon trial showing that the [**77] challenged rules are not necessary to prevent a wedge between student-athletes and other students. This is the natural experiment resulting from the increase to the cost of attendance for grants-in-aid. As discussed above, since 2015, student-athletes have been allowed to receive thousands of dollars in increased compensation and benefits from full cost-of-attendance grants-in-aid and other payments. Rascher Direct Testimony Declaration ¶¶ 52, 54, 75, 78-81; Noll Direct Testimony Declaration ¶ 12; P0104; P0105; P0106. Yet, there is no evidence that, since 2015, student-athletes have experienced more separation. The NCAA's Rule 30(b)(6) witness, Kevin Lennon, has acknowledged that there is no evidence that the recent increase in student-athlete compensation has created a wedge. Trial Tr. (Lennon) at 1355-58 (agreeing that there is no evidence that increased compensation that student-athletes have received because of the increase of the grant-in-aid limit to cost of attendance and because of benefits that became permissible or expanded recently, such as premiums for loss-of-value insurance against loss of future professional wages, unlimited food, and travel expenses for family members for certain [**78] events, has created a wedge).

In fact, the challenged limits may serve to increase separation among students, not decrease or prevent it. According to Dr. Perlman, the University of Nebraska chancellor, the challenged compensation limits result in schools spending their recruitment resources on "unregulated frills" in facilities that benefit student-athletes exclusively, which promotes separation. See, e.g., Perlman Dep. Tr. at 60-61; see also Bilas Dep. Tr. at 105-06 (Kentucky's "opulent" facility for basketball players "functions [*1086] to segregate them from the normal student population"); Emmert Dep. Tr. at 24-29 (expenditures on training facilities, stadiums, and student-athlete living quarters are not limited by NCAA). Limits on compensation may constrain student-athletes' financial ability to engage in social activities with other students. See, e.g., Trial Tr. (Alston) at 680 (additional compensation would have permitted him to "mingle" more with non-athletes). Accordingly, the evidence here does not support the notion that the challenged rules promote integration by preventing a wedge.

Finally, Defendants proffer Dr. Heckman's opinion that a "substantial change" to what he terms the [**79] "Collegiate Model" would alter the incentives of "participants/stakeholders in the college sports world," and would result in a "new equilibrium." Heckman Direct Testimony Declaration ¶ 14. This opinion does not appear to be related to the integration theory. Further, Dr. Heckman did not conduct any empirical, econometric, or quantitative analysis to distinguish "substantial" changes from those that are not; when asked at trial to describe exactly what would qualify as a "large" or "substantial" change, he referred to dollar amounts that "have been put out in the literature" or that others had mentioned during trial, but he declined to adopt any such numbers as what he believes, based on his own work, is "large" or "substantial." Trial Tr. (Heckman) at 607-11.

Because Defendants have not met their burden to show that the challenged limits are procompetitive due to an effect on promoting integration, by preventing a wedge or otherwise, the Court finds that Defendants have not shown that the challenged rules are justified based on this theory.

VI. Rule of Reason: Alternatives to the Challenged Restraints

The Court finds that the current rules, read together, are more restrictive than necessary [**80] to prevent demand-reducing unlimited compensation indistinguishable from that observed in professional sports. Plaintiffs propose three alternatives to the challenged restraints as less restrictive.

First, they propose an alternative that would prohibit the NCAA from placing any limits on compensation or benefits, whether or not related to education, given in exchange for athletic services. This would permit individual conferences to set limits on such compensation or benefits.

Second, they propose an alternative that would allow the NCAA to continue limiting the compensation or benefits given in exchange for athletic services except for (1) benefits that are related to education, and (2) the seventeen benefits incidental to athletics participation that the NCAA currently allows and caps. These are listed in Plaintiffs' Opening Statement, Appendix C, Docket No. 868-3. While these could no longer be capped by the NCAA, limits on these two types of compensation and benefits could nonetheless be maintained or set by individual conferences.

Third, Plaintiffs propose an alternative that would allow the NCAA to continue to limit the compensation or benefits given in exchange for athletic services, [**81] but would not allow NCAA limits on compensation and benefits related to education. Again, limits on education-related benefits could be set by individual conferences.

For all of the proposed alternatives, any permissible limits could be enforced by the NCAA, the conferences, or the schools. Schools, of course, could continue to set their own limits on their offers.

[*1087] A. First and Second Proposed Alternatives

The Court finds that Plaintiffs' first proposed alternative, which would eliminate all NCAA limits on compensation, would not be as effective as the current rules in preserving consumer demand for Division I basketball and FBS football; that alternative leaves open the possibility that at least some conferences would allow their schools to offer student-athletes unlimited cash payments that are unrelated to education. Such payments could be akin to those observed in professional sports leagues. Payments of that nature could diminish the popularity of college sports as a product distinct from professional sports. The Court notes that Plaintiffs' survey expert Dr. Poret did not test a proposed scenario of cash compensation greater than $10,000 in value.

Plaintiffs and their experts strenuously [**82] argue and opine, perhaps correctly, that if this alternative were adopted, conference officials, as rational economic actors, would not act contrary to their members' aggregate economic interests, and would not choose to pay amounts of cash compensation unrelated to education that would be demand-reducing for Division I sports. Whether by survey or trial and error, these actors would eventually discover the level of cash compensation to student-athletes that would encourage competition for recruits but would not reduce the demand for their product. Be that as it may, the inevitable trial-and-error phase could result in miscalculations by one or more conferences as to levels of cash pay that would not reduce demand for the product, and this could produce unintended consequences.

It is to be hoped that gradual change will be instructive. If it were persuaded to do so, the NCAA could conduct market research and allow gradual increases in cash compensation to student-athletes to determine an amount that would not be demand-reducing.

Plaintiffs' second proposed alternative likewise would not be as effective in achieving the procompetitive effect of the challenged rules to the extent that [**83] it would remove the NCAA caps on athletics participation awards and other compensation and benefits that are unrelated to education. It would prohibit NCAA caps on cash or cash-equivalent awards or incentives. Without such limits, conferences could suddenly decide to allow the award of any sum of cash to some or all student-athletes. This could lead to unlimited cash payments and the same effect as the first alternative.

B. Third Proposed Alternative as Modified: Prohibiting Limits on Most Education-Related Payments

The Court finds that a less restrictive alternative to the current set of challenged NCAA limits would be to (1) allow the NCAA to continue to limit grants-in-aid at not less than the cost of attendance; (2) allow the association to continue to limit compensation and benefits unrelated to education; (3) enjoin NCAA limits on most compensation and benefits that are related to education, but allow it to limit education-related academic or graduation awards and incentives, as long as the limits are not lower than its limits on athletic performance awards now or in the future. This is Plaintiffs' third proposed alternative, as modified by the Court. It would be less restrictive [**84] than the current compensation rules, allowing for additional compensation and benefits related to education. It would therefore be less harmful to competition in the relevant market, but would not provide a vehicle for unlimited cash payments, unrelated to education.

[*1088] The types of education-related benefits that could not be capped by the NCAA would include those that it currently prohibits or limits in some fashion. These include computers, science equipment, musical instruments and other items not currently included in the cost of attendance calculation but nonetheless related to the pursuit of various academic studies. Also included would be post-eligibility scholarships to complete undergraduate or graduate degrees at any school; scholarships to attend vocational school; expenses for pre- and post-eligibility tutoring; expenses related to studying abroad that are not covered by the cost of attendance; and paid post-eligibility internships. See Trial Tr. (Lennon) at 1559-1565, 1571-72; NCAA Rule 30(b)(6) witness (Kevin Lennon) Dep. Tr. 195-213; Division I Bylaw 13.2.1.1(k). There may be other education-related benefits that the NCAA, in an exercise of its good faith judgment, would allow. Payment [**85] for these benefits would be limited to their actual value and could be provided in kind. For that reason, they would not be a vehicle for potentially unlimited cash payments.

A subset of education-related benefits, namely, cash academic or graduation awards and incentives, if not capped by the NCAA, could potentially be unlimited and allow for payments indistinguishable from those received in professional sports. Accordingly, limits on these awards or incentives may have the procompetitive effect of preventing professional-style unlimited cash payments. This alternative would allow the NCAA to place a limit on such awards, as long as the limit is not less than the maximum amount of compensation that an individual student-athlete could receive in an academic school year in participation, championship, or special achievement awards (combined) under Division I Bylaw, Article 16, and listed in Figures 16-1, 16-2, and 16-3 of the Division I Manual, J0024 at 0249-50. (These figures list the current caps.) If the NCAA increased the current athletics participation awards limit just described, any limits on academic or graduation awards and incentives must be increased so that they are never less than the [**86] new athletics participation awards limit. Allowing the NCAA to cap education-related awards and incentives at the athletics participation awards limit, which is an amount that has been shown not to decrease consumer demand and not to be inconsistent with the NCAA's understanding of amateurism, would enable the NCAA to prevent unlimited cash, demand-reducing payments. On the other hand, the NCAA could decide to set higher limits, or no limits at all, for academic or graduation awards and incentives.

Individual conferences could vote to set or maintain limits on education-related benefits that the NCAA will not be allowed to cap. Conferences could also set limits on academic and graduation awards and incentives. This would not have an anticompetitive effect because no individual conference dominates nearly the entire market, like the NCAA does. Rascher Direct Testimony Declaration ¶¶ 160-61. Market concentration would be reduced in the absence of NCAA caps limiting education-related compensation and benefits described above. Thus, the third alternative would be less restrictive than maintaining the current NCAA compensation scheme. Id. ¶¶ 162, 175.

NCAA's latitude to superintend college [**87] sports would not be greatly impacted. This alternative would affect only a small fraction of the NCAA's rulemaking jurisdiction, namely rules that limit education-related compensation and benefits.

The third alternative as modified would be virtually as effective as the current rules in achieving the effect on the preservation [*1089] of consumer demand for Division I basketball and FBS football that the Court found here, and its implementation would not require significant increased costs.

1. Virtually as Effective

As discussed above, according to Defendants' own witnesses, consumer demand for Division I basketball and FBS football is driven largely by consumers' perception that student-athletes are, in fact, students. Providing additional, even uncapped, education-related compensation and benefits to student-athletes would not affect student-athletes' status as students. These benefits are, by definition, related to education and thus would be consistent with the values propounded by the NCAA. The Principle of Amateurism in its constitution, quoted above, holds that amateur student-athletes should be motivated primarily by education. Education-related compensation and benefits would enhance [**88] the student-athletes' connection to academics. See, e.g., Perlman Dep. Tr. at 126-27 ("I think if you're paying them to play athletics, I think it is inconsistent with the idea of what a student athlete is. I don't think it's inconsistent to provide them with benefits that relate to the educational enterprise"); MAC Rule 30(b)(6) witness (Jon Steinbrecher) Dep. Tr. at 189 (compensation above cost of attendance is not problematic because "the key point" is "linking what we're doing to the pursuit of the educational opportunities of the individual involved"); Renfro Dep. Tr. at 84 ("I personally don't see the offer of a post graduate grant in aid as something that violates the concept of amateurism[.]"); Bowlsby Dep. Tr. at 13-14 (an inducement to stay in school an extra year or to graduate "is worthy of consideration").

Other evidence shows that providing additional education-related compensation would not negatively impact consumer demand. See, e.g., NCAA Rule 30(b)(6) witness (Mark Lewis) Dep. Tr. at 269-70 (changes to the NCAA rules regarding compensation and benefits that have occurred in the last five years have not had "any adverse impact on consumer demand" because "they're all tied to education"). Prohibitions [**89] or limitations on such benefits have not been shown to be necessary to preserve the distinction between college and professional sports in that the benefits are inherently limited in value and nature and can be provided in kind, not cash; accordingly, they could not be confused with professional-style unlimited cash payments. The natural experiments, discussed above, show that recent increases in student-athlete compensation, related and even unrelated to education, have not decreased consumer demand for Division I basketball or FBS football. Dr. Hal Poret's survey also supports this finding. One of the scenarios he tested was offering scholarships to complete an undergraduate or graduate degree at any institution, which he found would not negatively impact consumer demand. Poret Direct Testimony Declaration ¶¶ 17, 19-24, 26, 59, 131. Dr. Isaacson's survey does not speak to the possible effects of implementing this alternative, because he did not test any analogous scenarios.

The academic and graduation awards and incentives that would be allowed with a cap in the same amount as current caps on athletic performance awards likewise will be virtually as effective as the current compensation [**90] scheme. The amount will not be demand-reducing because it will be in the same amount that is allowed for athletic performance awards, which are deemed to be consistent with amateurism and the preservation of the distinction between college and professional sports. And because they are education-related, they will further the perception of the student-athletes as students.

[*1090] Thus, this alternative set of rules will be as effective as the current set of challenged rules in preserving consumer demand. It will also allow the NCAA to maintain the distinction between college student-athletes playing for educational benefits and professional athletes playing for large cash salaries unrelated to education. The education-related amounts that could be expended under this alternative would be either inherently limited by the actual value of the benefit, or limited by the NCAA at a level that has been shown not to be demand-reducing or inconsistent with amateurism. The NCAA will be permitted to continue to cap grants-in-aid at not less than the cost of attendance. The association will remain free to bar or limit compensation and benefits that are unrelated to education, including cash or cash-equivalent [**91] awards for athletic performance. Conferences individually will be free to limit any benefits that the NCAA could not.

2. No Significant Increased Costs

The Court finds that the implementation of this third alternative as modified would not result in significant increased costs. To the contrary, because this alternative would result in the elimination of NCAA caps on most education-related benefits, it would eliminate the need to expend resources on compliance and enforcement in connection with such caps. The NCAA engages in rule-making, interpretation, investigations, and enforcement of its rules.<sup>32</sup> It could employ its systems and resources to the extent it chooses to limit cash or cash-equivalent academic or graduation awards and incentives.

Individual conferences would not be required to enact their own rules to limit any education-related benefits that the NCAA would not be able to cap. Even so, the Court finds no evidence that the costs that could be incurred to do so, if any, would be significant. Conferences are required to be "legislative bod[ies]," Division I Constitution Article 3.3.1.1, and thus, they already can and do enact their own rules. The scope of the benefits that could not be capped by the [**92] NCAA under this alternative would be those related to education, which is a small fraction of the conduct that the NCAA currently regulates and enforces. Any new rulemaking activities by the conferences would be correspondingly limited.

Conferences are also required by the NCAA to have compliance programs and are involved in ensuring compliance with both NCAA and conference rules by their members. The changes contemplated here would not add to their enforcement burden. Conferences also may require their members to enforce both conference and NCAA rules. See, e.g., The Big 10 Handbook at J0006 at 0013 (providing that it "shall be the responsibility of each member university" to "adhere to and enforce all Conference Rules and Agreements, and the NCAA Constitution, Bylaws and Regulations and their respective interpretations"). Thus, schools currently engage in compliance efforts, including investigations, and enforcement of NCAA and conference [*1091] rules relating to student-athlete compensation and eligibility.<sup>33</sup> Schools also currently interpret NCAA rules. P0146 at 0002. Implementing this alternative will impose little or no additional burden on the schools.

Some defense witnesses testified [**93] that eliminating all of the challenged NCAA limits would result in new costs to the conferences and schools. See, e.g., Trial Tr. (Scott) 1180; Trial Tr. (Smith) at 1520-23. The Court finds that this testimony lacks specificity or support and thus is speculative. Other evidence also outweighs or undermines it.<sup>34</sup> Additionally, this testimony hypothesized the removal of all NCAA compensation limits, which diminishes its relevance in the context of implementing the third alternative as modified, whereby only a subset of the challenged rules will be affected.<sup>35</sup>

Finally, to the extent that new enforcement costs at the conference or school levels are incurred, the NCAA could shift to its members some of the resources it now spends on enforcement, so there would be no net new costs. Trial

<sup>32</sup> Starting in August 2019, as a result of the findings and recommendations of the Commission on College Basketball chaired by Dr. Condoleezza Rice, see P0060, the NCAA will add a body composed of "both external investigators with no school or conference affiliations and select NCAA enforcement staff" to adjudicate independently cases involving potential violations of NCAA rules that are deemed "complex." Stip. Facts ¶ 9, Docket No. 1098 (internal quotation marks omitted). Examples of complex cases include alleged violations of core NCAA values such as prioritizing academics and the well-being of college athletes. Id. The perceived need for this new enforcement mechanism is unrelated to the changes mandated here, but this mechanism could certainly be used to police them.

<sup>33</sup> The NCAA requires all of its members to comply with and enforce its rules. See, e.g., Division I Constitution Article 1.3.2 (requiring member institutions to "apply and enforce" NCAA legislation about eligibility, financial aid, and recruiting, among other matters); Division I Constitution Article 2.1 (requiring member schools to maintain "institutional control").

<sup>34</sup> For example, Larry Scott testified that in the absence of NCAA compensation limits, there would be "significant additional infrastructure and expense" at the Pac-12 relating to "rule development." Trial Tr. (Scott) at 1136-37. But other evidence shows that the Pac-12 already has a system in place for passing and amending bylaws relating to student-athlete financial aid and otherwise. See Pac-12 Handbook, J0010 at 0008, 0014, 0015, 0017-18.

<sup>35</sup> Defendants contend in their opening statement that adopting any of Plaintiffs' proposed alternatives would result in conference realignment, which would entail increased costs. As discussed above, conference realignment is common and the evidence does not support a finding that adopting the third alternative would result in conference realignment.

Tr. (Scott) at 1240 (suggesting that any new costs at the conference and school levels could be offset by such distributions). In sum, the Court finds that any new costs of implementing this alternative would not rise to the level of "significant."

The Court notes that it asked Defendants several times, during the closing argument hearing held on December 18, 2018, and previously, to propose, based on their [**94] superior knowledge of the NCAA and its members and their functions, adjustments to the challenged rules or to Plaintiffs' proposed less restrictive alternatives that would be more workable from their perspective. They offered none.

CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

I. Legal Standard under Section 1 of the Sherman Act

Section 1 of the Sherman Act makes it unlawful to form a "contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States[.]" 15 U.S.C. § 1. "To establish a claim under Section 1 of the Sherman Act, Plaintiffs must show 1) that there was a contract, combination, or conspiracy; 2) that the agreement unreasonably restrained trade under either a per se rule of illegality or a rule of reason analysis; and 3) that the restraint affected interstate commerce." Cnty. of Tuolumne v. Sonora Cnty. Hosp., 236 F.3d 1148, 1155 (9th Cir. 2001) (citation and internal quotation marks omitted).

Here, Plaintiffs challenge the NCAA rules that generally (1) cap at the cost of [*1092] attendance grants-in-aid they may receive for their athletic services, and (2) limit the additional compensation and benefits that they can receive in addition to a grant-in-aid athletic scholarship, which have a monetary value above the cost of attendance. Plaintiffs contend that Defendants [**95] enact these limits by exercising their monopsony power by way of price-fixing agreements that are made and enforced through the NCAA's bylaws. Plaintiffs contend that they would receive more compensation in exchange for their athletic services in the absence of these limits.

As discussed in the findings of fact above, on summary judgment the Court found no genuine dispute of material fact as to the existence of an agreement among Defendants in restraint of trade that affects interstate commerce, which satisfies the first and third elements of a Section 1 claim. Specifically, Defendants did not meaningfully dispute evidence showing that (1) the compensation limits that Plaintiffs challenge are enacted by agreement of Defendants through the NCAA's legislative process and are embodied in NCAA rules published in the NCAA Division I Manual; (2) Defendants enforce these rules by requiring all NCAA members to comply with them, and by punishing violations; (3) these rules affect interstate commerce, because they regulate transactions between Plaintiffs and their schools with respect to Plaintiffs' athletic services in multiple states nation-wide; and (4) these transactions are commercial because they [**96] regulate an essential component of Division I basketball and FBS football. Summary Judgment Order at 15, Docket No. 804; see also O'Bannon II, 802 F.3d at 1065-66 (holding that the NCAA's compensation rules are restraints of trade that regulate "commercial transaction[s]").

As to the remaining element of a Section 1 claim, which requires a showing that the challenged restraints are unreasonable under either the per se rule or the Rule of Reason, the Court held on summary judgment that the NCAA's regulations "must be tested under a rule-of-reason analysis" as opposed to under the per se rule. Summary Judgment Order at 15, Docket No. 804; see also O'Bannon II, 802 F.3d at 1053 (holding that "the NCAA's amateurism rules . . . must be analyzed under the Rule of Reason").

Horizontal price-fixing agreements, those among competitors, like the challenged rules in this case, "are ordinarily condemned as a matter of law under an 'illegal per se' approach because the probability that these practices are anticompetitive is so high . . . . In such circumstances a restraint is presumed unreasonable without inquiry into the particular market context in which it is found." Nat'l Collegiate Athletic Ass'n v. Bd. of Regents of Univ. of Okla., 468 U.S. 85, 100, 104 S. Ct. 2948, 82 L. Ed. 2d 70 (1984) (Board of Regents) (citation omitted). But where, as here, a "certain degree of cooperation" is [**97] necessary to market college sports, the Rule of Reason is appropriate. O'Bannon II, 802 F.3d at 1069 (quoting Board of Regents, 468 U.S. at 117) (internal quotation marks omitted).

II. Issue or Claim Preclusion

As a threshold matter, Defendants argue that Plaintiffs have not shown that this case is not precluded by the Ninth Circuit's ruling in O'Bannon II. The Court denied Defendants' motion for summary judgment that this action is barred by O'Bannon II under the doctrines of res judicata<sup>36</sup> and collateral estoppel.<sup>37</sup> See [*1093] Summary Judgment Order at 9-15, Docket No. 804. Defendants invite the Court to revisit these issues, arguing that Plaintiffs must, but have failed to, show that a new antitrust violation occurred since O'Bannon I or that there has been any material change in the factual basis for O'Bannon II.

It is not Plaintiffs' burden to show that this action is not precluded; instead, the burden of proving preclusion is on Defendants. See Karim-Panahi v. Los Angeles Police Dep't, 839 F.2d 621, 627 n.4 (9th Cir. 1988) (res judicata); Kendall v. Visa U.S.A., Inc., 518 F.3d 1042, 1050-51 (9th Cir. 2008) (collateral estoppel). Defendants failed to satisfy this burden on summary judgment, and they have offered nothing new to warrant altering the Court's summary judgment holding on this issue.

In its Summary Judgment Order, the Court found that material differences between this action and the O'Bannon [**981] case prevent a finding that this action is precluded by that case. These include (1) that class members in the two actions are not in complete privity; and (2) that the conduct and rules challenged, the rights implicated, and the evidence presented and available were not the same in both actions.<sup>38</sup>

The class in O'Bannon did not include, as does one of the classes here, female student-athletes. The class in O'Bannon was not limited to student-athletes in receipt of an offer for a full grant-in-aid athletic scholarship; it included male Division I basketball and FBS football student-athletes whose NIL were used or could have been used in game footage or videogames licensed or sold by the NCAA and its licensees, regardless of whether they received any scholarship money. O'Bannon II, 802 F.3d at 1055-56. By contrast, the classes in this case include student-athletes who were offered or received a full grant-in-aid athletic scholarship. No use of their NIL was necessary; therefore, these classes are not limited to student-athletes whose NIL were used or licensed. Additionally, the classes in this case are limited to student-athletes who received an offer for a full grant-in-aid from March 5, 2014, to the date of final [**99] judgment in this action; few of the male class members in this case would have been O'Bannon class members because most would have been recruited after the O'Bannon I trial, which ended in August 2014.

The crux of the O'Bannon case was the right to student-athletes' NIL. The plaintiffs sought relief as a result of price-fixing [*1094] conduct by the NCAA and its licensing partners that prevented them from benefiting financially, through compensation from their schools or from outside sources, from the use and licensing of their NIL. The class members in O'Bannon were required to release the rights to their NIL, the use and licensing of which had monetary value, to the NCAA as a condition of eligibility to play in Division I basketball and FBS football; this was the case regardless of whether they received a grant-in-aid. The rules challenged in O'Bannon related to NIL rights and their <sup>36</sup> Res judicata prohibits the re-litigation of any claims that were raised or could have been raised in a prior action. Tahoe-Sierra Pres. Council, Inc. v. Tahoe Reg'l Planning Agency, 322 F.3d 1064, 1077-78 (9th Cir. 2003). Three elements must be present for res judicata to apply: (1) an identity of claims; (2) a final judgment on the merits; and (3) the same parties or their privies. Id. at 1077.

<sup>37</sup> Collateral estoppel "prevents a party from relitigating an issue decided in a previous action if four requirements are met: '(1) there was a full and fair opportunity to litigate the issue in the previous action; (2) the issue was actually litigated in that action; (3) the issue was lost as a result of a final judgment in that action; and (4) the person against whom collateral estoppel is asserted in the present action was a party or in privity with a party in the previous action.'" Kendall v. Visa U.S.A., Inc., 518 F.3d 1042, 1050 (9th Cir. 2008) (citation omitted).

<sup>38</sup> See Costantini v. Trans World Airlines, 681 F.2d 1199, 1201-02 (9th Cir. 1982) (citation omitted) (holding that a single cause of action for the purpose of applying res judicata exists in successive lawsuits, if, among other things, both actions "involve infringement of the same right," and "substantially the same evidence" was presented in both actions); Cent. Delta Water Agency v. United States, 306 F.3d 938, 953 (9th Cir. 2002) (holding that collateral estoppel cannot be applied where the facts of the prior action are merely "similar" to the ones in the second case) (citation and internal quotation marks omitted).

commercialization by the NCAA and its licensees, to the exclusion of student-athletes.<sup>39</sup> See O'Bannon II, 802 F.3d at 1055 ("The gravamen of O'Bannon's complaint was that the NCAA's amateurism rules, insofar as they prevented student-athletes from being compensated for the use of their NIL, were an illegal restraint of trade under [**100] Section 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1."); id. at 1072 (concluding that "the NCAA's compensation rules fix the price of one component (NIL rights) of the bundle that schools provide to recruits"). The plaintiffs in O'Bannon did not challenge the limit on a full grant-in-aid athletic scholarship, although the limit was implicated in the less restrictive alternative that the plaintiffs proposed and that this Court adopted.

In this case, by contrast, Plaintiffs seek relief from price-fixing conduct by the NCAA, Conference Defendants, and other NCAA members that prevents them from receiving compensation and benefits from their schools in excess of certain limits in exchange for their athletic services. The conduct at issue here is not connected to NIL rights. The rules challenged in this case, in addition to the limit on a grant-in-aid, include those that limit other compensation and benefits that student-athletes can receive on top of a full cost-of-attendance grant-in-aid. See Pls.' Opening Statement at 13-15 and Appendices A-C, Docket No. 868-3, for a list of the challenged rules. They include those that limit compensation and benefits related to education, such as scholarships for undergraduate or graduate study [**101] at other institutions. They also include rules that limit compensation and benefits incidental to athletics participation but are unrelated to education, such as performance awards and travel expenses for student-athletes' family members. These rules were not challenged in O'Bannon. Accordingly, neither these rules nor the compensation and benefits that can be provided pursuant to them were comprehensively addressed in that case.

Some of the rules challenged in this case did not exist or have materially changed since the O'Bannon trial, those relating to reimbursement for travel expenses for family members, student-athletes borrowing against their future earnings to purchase loss-of-value insurance, and payments to international student-athletes from their home countries.

While some NCAA rules were challenged in both cases, these are core rules that address eligibility and compensation in general terms.<sup>40</sup> This overlap is a consequence [*1095] of the interconnected nature of NCAA bylaws, and does not indicate that the two actions overlap in terms of the specific and distinct conduct being challenged, or the rights affected. The fact that the limit on the grant-in-aid is addressed in both cases also [**102] does not preclude this action. The NCAA changed this limit before the Court's injunction in O'Bannon went into effect, and the NCAA's changed rule differs from the less restrictive alternative that the Court found in O'Bannon I with respect to the student-athletes who would receive the relief and the source and type of the compensation that would cover the difference between the prior grant-in-aid limit and the cost of attendance.

Moreover, since O'Bannon, there have been material increases in permissible compensation above the cost of attendance that is not related to education. These increases are relevant to the question of whether restrictions on student-athlete compensation are necessary to preserve consumer demand for college sports as distinct from professional sports. These include the payment by schools from SAF monies of $50,000 premiums for loss-of-value insurance against the loss of future professional earnings in case of injury in college. In January 2015, the NCAA began to pay up to $3,000 for family members of student-athletes to attend the Final Four games and up to $4,000 to attend basketball championships; the College Football Playoff committee began to pay up to $3,000 [**103] for each competing athlete's family members to travel to that event. Student-athletes previously could receive performance awards in the form of store-specific gift cards but can now receive these awards, in capped amounts, in the form of Visa gift cards that can be used anywhere that accepts Visa. Schools can now provide unlimited food to student-athletes.

<sup>39</sup> See O'Bannon I, Case No. 09-cv-3329, Pls.' Trial Brief at 4, Docket No. 172 (listing challenged rules); Case No. 09-cv-1967, Third Am. Consolidated Complaint $359, Docket No. 832 (same).

<sup>40</sup> For example, challenged rules that are common to both cases include Division I Bylaw 13.2.1 (prohibiting benefits and financial aid not permitted by the NCAA); Division I Bylaw 16.02.5 (prohibiting funds, awards, or benefits not permitted by the NCAA); and Division I Bylaw 12.1.2.1 (listing prohibited forms of "pay"). These rules must be read in conjunction with rules that address compensation and benefits in more specific terms and in more specific contexts.

Defendants note that some of the forms of compensation and benefits addressed in this case, such as Pell grants, benefits from the SAF, and store-specific gift cards, were mentioned or can be found in the record in O'Bannon. This fact is not sufficient to support Defendants' claim preclusion argument.

Because student-athlete compensation has expanded since O'Bannon, Defendants also argue that no new actionable conduct or material change in the factual basis of O'Bannon has occurred since O'Bannon I to justify a conclusion that this action is not precluded. This argument misses the point. It is the fact that the prices of student-athlete compensation are fixed, as opposed to the amount at which these prices are fixed, that renders the agreements at issue anticompetitive. See O'Bannon II, 802 F.3d at 1071 ("It is no excuse that the prices fixed are themselves reasonable.") [**104] (quoting Catalano, Inc. v. Target Sales, Inc., 446 U.S. 643, 647, 100 S. Ct. 1925, 64 L. Ed. 2d 580 (1980)) (internal quotation marks omitted). Defendants do not dispute that the challenged rules embody agreements among competitors that fix the prices of student-athlete compensation. Accordingly, the Court cannot dismiss Defendants' "anticompetitive price-fixing agreement as benign," see id., simply because they contend that the fixed prices are more reasonable than they used to be. See Associated Press v. United States, 326 U.S. 1, 16 n.15, 65 S. Ct. 1416, 89 L. Ed. 2013 (1945) ("[T]he Sherman Act cannot be evaded by good motives.") (citation and internal quotation marks omitted).

The material factual differences discussed above defeat Defendants' preclusion arguments and warrant examining the conduct challenged in this case under the Rule of Reason. See Oltz v. St. Peter's Cnty. Hosp., 861 F.2d 1440, 1449 (9th Cir. 1988) ("The rule of reason requires an [**1096] evaluation of each challenged restraint in light of the special circumstances involved. That the analysis will differ from case to case is the essence of the rule.") (citation omitted). Whether the challenged price-fixing conduct here is justified by a procompetitive effect must be proved, and not presumed. See O'Bannon II, 802 F.3d at 1063-64.

In sum, because Plaintiffs raise new antitrust challenges to conduct affecting a different class, in a different time period, relating to rules and forms of compensation that are [**105] not the same as those challenged in O'Bannon, the claims in this case are not precluded by O'Bannon II.

III. The Rule of Reason

The Rule of Reason is intended for the analysis of "agreements whose competitive effect can only be evaluated by analyzing the facts peculiar to the business, the history of the restraint, and the reasons why it was imposed." Natl Soc. of Prof'l Eng's v. United States, 435 U.S. 679, 692, 98 S. Ct. 1355, 55 L. Ed. 2d 637 (1978). "[T]he purpose of the analysis is to form a judgment about the competitive significance of the restraint; it is not to decide whether a policy favoring competition is in the public interest, or in the interest of the members of an industry." Id.; see also Cont'l T. V., Inc. v. GTE Sylvania Inc., 433 U.S. 36, 49, 97 S. Ct. 2549, 53 L. Ed. 2d 568 (1977) ("Under this rule, the factfinder weighs all of the circumstances of a case in deciding whether a restrictive practice should be prohibited as imposing an unreasonable restraint on competition.").

Several Ninth Circuit opinions have articulated burden-shifting schemes to apply the Rule of Reason. "Under the rule of reason burden-shifting scheme, plaintiffs first must 'delineate a relevant market and show that the defendant plays enough of a role in that market to impair competition significantly.'" Cnty. of Tuolumne, 236 F.3d at 1150 (citation omitted). Second, if the plaintiffs make that showing, the burden then shifts [**106] to the defendants to offer evidence that a legitimate procompetitive effect is produced by the challenged behavior. Id. Third, if the defendants do so, the burden then shifts back to the plaintiffs to demonstrate that there are less restrictive alternatives to the challenged conduct. Id. Finally, if the plaintiffs fail "to meet their burden of advancing viable less restrictive alternatives," the court then will "reach the balancing stage," wherein the court "must balance the harms and benefits" of the challenged conduct to determine whether it is "reasonable." Id. at 1160 (citing Phillip E. Areeda and Herbert Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law: An Analysis of Antitrust Principles and Their Application ¶ 1507b).

IV. Rule of Reason: Market Definition

Plaintiffs first must show that the challenged conduct has significant anticompetitive effects in the relevant market. "Proof that defendant's activities had an impact upon competition in the relevant market is 'an absolutely essential element of the rule of reason case."Supermarket of Homes, Inc. v. San Fernando Valley Bd. of Realtors, 786 F.2d 1400, 1405 (9th Cir. 1986) (citation omitted). The term "relevant market" in this context "encompasses notions of geography as well as product use, quality, and description. The geographic market extends to the area [**107] of effective competition . . . where buyers can turn for alternative sources of supply. The product market includes the pool of goods or services that enjoy reasonable interchangeability of use and cross-elasticity of demand." Tanaka v. Univ. of S. Cal., 252 F.3d 1059, 1063 (9th Cir. 2001) (citation and internal quotation marks omitted).

[*1097] As discussed in the findings of fact, Plaintiffs produced sufficient evidence on summary judgment to establish the existence of a relevant market comprising national markets for Plaintiffs' labor in the form of athletic services in men's and women's Division I basketball and FBS football, wherein each class member participates in his or her sport-specific market. In these markets, the class members sell their athletic services to the schools that participate in Division I basketball and FBS football in exchange for grants-in-aid and other compensation and benefits permitted by NCAA rules on top of grants-in-aid. Because of the absence of any viable substitutes for Division I basketball and FBS football, Defendants hold monopsony power in all of these markets and exercise that power to cap artificially the compensation offered to recruits. This is reflected in the high degree of concentration found in the relevant [**108] market. Class members cannot obtain the same combination of a college education, high-level television exposure, and opportunities to enter professional sports other than from Division I schools. See O'Bannon I, 7 F. Supp. 3d at 965-68, 991-93 (finding relevant market wherein Division I basketball and FBS football schools compete to recruit elite football and basketball players); O'Bannon II, 802 F.3d at 1056-57, 1070 (affirming relevant market found in O'Bannon I on the ground that the NCAA did not "take issue with the way that the district court defined" the relevant market).

During summary judgment proceedings, Defendants did not request that the Court adopt an alternative market definition, or point to any admissible evidence to create a genuine issue of material of fact with respect to market definition. Although Defendants argued later that this Court should have considered or adopted a multi-sided market definition, the Court rejected these arguments on the ground that they were untimely, and on the ground that the only evidence to support the belated multi-sided market definition was inadmissible in any event. See generally Order Reaffirming Exclusion of Certain Expert Testimony by Dr. Elzinga, Docket No. 1018.

V. Rule of Reason: Anticompetitive Effects

The [**109] requisite showing of significant anticompetitive effects calls for evidence that "the activity is the type that restrains trade and that the restraint is likely to be of significant magnitude." Bhan v. NME Hosps., Inc., 929 F.2d 1404, 1413 (9th Cir. 1991). This can be done by showing that "the defendant plays enough of a role" in the relevant market "to impair competition significantly," or by showing that the challenged restraint "has actually produced significant anti-competitive effects," such as by restricting output or fixing a price. Id.; Board of Regents, 468 U.S. at 109 ("[W]hen there is an agreement not to compete in terms of price or output, 'no elaborate industry analysis is required to demonstrate the anticompetitive character of such an agreement.'") (citation omitted).

Because Defendants have near complete dominance of, and exercise monopsony power in, the relevant market, and because it is undisputed that the challenged restraints suppress competition and fix the price of student-athletes' services, the Court has found that the anticompetitive effects of the challenged rules are severe. On summary judgment, the Court found no genuine issue of material fact that the challenged rules cause significant anticompetitive effects in the relevant market. Plaintiffs produced [**110] sufficient evidence on summary judgment and at trial to show that the challenged rules amount to overt [*1098] horizontal price-fixing among competitors, because they essentially eliminate price competition as to one key aspect of the recruitment of student-athletes in Division I basketball and FBS football, namely the price of the services of student-athletes. See Board of Regents, 468 U.S. at 100 (noting that horizontal price-fixing agreements have a "high" probability of resulting in anticompetitive effects and are "ordinarily condemned as a matter of law" under an illegal per se approach).

This evidence also established that the challenged rules harm class members, because the rules deprive them of compensation they would receive in the absence of the restraints. See O'Bannon II, 802 F.3d at 1071 (holding that NCAA compensation rules have anticompetitive effects because they "extinguish" one form of competition among schools seeking to land recruits and deprive student-athletes of compensation they would receive absent the rules) (citation and internal quotation marks omitted).

VI. Rule of Reason: Asserted Justifications for the Challenged Restraints

Because Plaintiffs have established that the challenged rules restrain competition and have severe anticompetitive [**111] effects, the burden shifts to Defendants to show that the challenged price-fixing conduct "brings about some procompetitive effect in order to justify it under the antitrust laws." O'Bannon II, 802 F.3d at 1073 (emphasis omitted).

The only two asserted procompetitive justifications for the challenged rules that survived summary judgment<sup>41</sup> are (1) that the challenged rules promote amateurism, which in turn enhances consumer demand for Division I basketball and FBS football; and (2) that the challenged rules promote integration of student-athletes with their academic communities, which in turn improves the quality of the college education that student-athletes receive for their athletic services.

A. Consumer Demand for Amateurism

Defendants first contend that the challenged rules are procompetitive because they promote the principle of amateurism, which enhances consumer demand. Defendants argue that consumers value amateurism, and that consumer demand for Division I basketball and FBS football would deteriorate if student-athletes received more compensation. To support their contentions, Defendants rely on the expert opinions of Dr. Elzinga and Dr. Isaacson, and lay testimony by various NCAA, conference, [**112] and school administrators regarding the preferences of viewers of college sports.

As a threshold matter, it is important to recognize that the challenged limits on compensation cannot be deemed procompetitive simply because they promote or are consistent with amateurism. To be procompetitive, the challenged rules must have some procompetitive effect on the relevant market.

Although their theory is that the challenged rules promote amateurism, Defendants did not offer an affirmative definition of amateurism. While Defendants place great emphasis on the Principle of Amateurism, which is described in the Division I constitution, the principle does not mention or address compensation; nor does it prohibit or even discourage compensation. [*1099] Accordingly, no link appears between this principle and the challenged compensation limits.

Defendants argue that amateurism can be defined based on what it is not, namely, amateurism is not "pay for play." But the concept of "pay for play" does not help define amateurism because this term itself is undefined.

Defendants have not pointed to any NCAA bylaws that define amateurism, pay for play, or pay. In the bylaws, "pay" is defined only indirectly, by way [**113] of a list of forms of compensation that the NCAA permits and does not permit. A reading of these bylaws discloses no principled, articulable difference between amateurism and not amateurism, or "pay for play" and not "pay for play." The only thing that can be inferred is that compensation constitutes "pay for play" or "pay" if the NCAA has decided to forbid it, and compensation is not "pay for play" or "pay" if the NCAA has decided to permit it.

The NCAA permits grants-in-aid up to the cost of attendance. In addition, student-athletes can receive cash or cash-equivalent compensation that exceeds the cost of attendance by thousands of dollars. The NCAA permits schools and conferences to pay student-athletes awards for their performance in their sport, which can be paid in cash-equivalent Visa cards; student-athletes who reach high levels of competition can receive up to $5,600 in such awards in a school year. Because these awards are directly correlated with athletic performance, they appear, on their face, to be "pay for play," and thus, inconsistent with amateurism as Defendants and their witnesses describe that term. Yet, they are allowed. Also permissible are SAF payments in the [**114] thousands of dollars for varying purposes, including for $50,000 premiums for loss-of-value insurance against future loss of professional wages.

The NCAA permits schools to provide per diem payments to student-athletes for un-itemized expenses. It also permits schools to pay for family members' travel expenses to attend certain events; separately, the NCAA and the College Football Playoff committee have paid thousands of dollars for family members to travel to the Final Four, as well as the basketball and FBS championships. The NCAA allows outside organizations to provide payments to certain student-athletes for their performance; in the case of student-athletes who do well in the Olympics or in international competitions, the payments that can be provided under current NCAA rules are unlimited.

Some of the compensation and benefits above the cost of attendance that the NCAA currently permits are related to education. For example, the NCAA permits schools to provide student-athletes with funding for post-eligibility graduate school at any institution, although this is capped at $10,000 per student, two students per school, per year. These are the Senior Scholar Awards. It also permits [**115] schools to pay, with SAF funds, for education-related items and expenses, such as laptops and pre-eligibility tutoring, that are not covered by the cost of attendance.

An individual student-athlete could receive all of the aforementioned forms of compensation, in combination, without losing his or her status as an amateur or eligibility to play in Division I sports. When combined, this compensation can total thousands and even tens of thousands of dollars above a full cost-of-attendance grant-in-aid. Again, the Court does not mean to imply that these payments should not be made. The point is that student-athletes' receipt of this compensation in excess of the cost of attendance, some of which is related to education and some of which is not, has not led to a reduction in [*1100] consumer demand for college sports as a distinct product, which continues apace.

Defendants' only economics expert on consumer demand, Dr. Elzinga, did not even attempt to examine whether a relationship exists between compensation and consumer demand. He opines that this analysis is not possible because amateurism has always existed and the NCAA has always enforced it; he also opines that any such analysis would be unnecessary [**116] in any event because amateurism is not about whether student-athletes receive specific dollar amounts in compensation, but is instead about whether they are paid to play, which is a concept that he does not define. Dr. Elzinga's opinions and assumptions are contrary to the record, which shows that the NCAA has not always enforced amateurism rules; that amateurism, and amounts of permissible student-athlete compensation, have changed materially over time; and that the amounts of compensation that student-athletes receive are very relevant to the determination of whether a student-athlete is an NCAA amateur or not, because the NCAA's limits on certain forms of compensation are set based on specific dollar amounts for that very purpose. Accordingly, the Court found Dr. Elzinga's opinions to be unconvincing.

Defendants attempted to establish a connection between student-athlete compensation and consumer demand by way of the opinions of their survey expert, Dr. Isaacson. His opinions, however, do not establish or suggest that a relationship exists between the challenged rules and consumer demand.

The only economic analysis in the record that addresses the impact of changes to student-athlete [**117] compensation on consumer demand, that of Dr. Rascher, shows that recent increases in student-athlete compensation, related and unrelated to education, have not decreased consumer demand. Dr. Rascher concluded, in fact, that revenues, which are an indicator of demand, at the NCAA, conference, and school levels have increased since 2015, when class members' permissible compensation increased significantly as a result of the change to the grant-in-aid limit that year and the expansion or creation of other benefits that schools can provide on top of a full grant-in-aid. Accordingly, Dr. Rascher's findings suggest that additional increases in compensation would not reduce consumer demand.

Dr. Rascher's conclusions are corroborated by other evidence, including the opinions of Plaintiffs' survey expert, Dr. Poret, and some testimony from defense witnesses.

Dr. Poret specifically tested whether providing certain forms of additional compensation to student-athletes would affect future viewership or attendance of basketball and football. He concluded that viewership and attendance would not be negatively impacted if the scenarios he tested were implemented individually.

If limits on student-athlete [**118] compensation were necessary to maintain consumer demand, one would expect to see increases in compensation leading to decreases in consumer demand. The evidence described above shows that actual increases in compensation have not decreased demand, and it suggests that future increases in compensation likewise would not do so.

The challenged compensation limits do not appear to be set by the NCAA based on considerations of consumer demand. The NCAA's Rule 30(b)(6) witness, Kevin Lennon, testified that he does not recall any instance in his more than thirty years with the organization in which a study on consumer demand was considered by the [*1101] NCAA membership when making rules about compensation.

Defendants rely on lay witness testimony to try to establish a connection between the challenged compensation rules and consumer demand. Most of this testimony is predicated on personal opinion and conversations with unidentified fans of college sports with whom witnesses have spoken. Some of these witnesses testified that the challenged rules prevent conferences from setting different rules on student-athlete compensation based on their different values and resources; these witnesses posited that changing the [**119] challenged rules could negatively impact the consumer appeal of national tournaments and rivalries, or could result in conference realignment, all of which could negatively affect consumer demand for college sports. But this testimony is unsupported by the weight of the evidence, which shows that significant variance already exists among conferences in terms of student-athlete compensation schemes, resources, and performance, and that conference realignment has been frequent. None of this has negatively affected consumer demand or revenues.

Some witnesses testified that consumers enjoy college sports because of the difference between college sports and professional sports. Much of this difference is based on the fact that student-athletes are students playing for their school. But this does not in itself establish any connection between consumer demand and the challenged rules. Indeed, student-athletes would remain students even if their compensation were not limited by the challenged rules. See O'Bannon II, 802 F.3d at 1073 (concluding that the opportunity to earn a higher education "would still be available to student-athletes if they were paid some compensation in addition to their athletic scholarships. Nothing [**120] in the plaintiffs' prayer for compensation would make student-athletes something other than students and thereby impair their ability to become student-athletes").

Other distinctions between college and professional sports are the amounts and types of compensation players receive. The distinction, currently, cannot be based on student-athletes receiving no compensation or benefits above the cost of attendance and professionals receiving large cash salaries, sometimes in the millions of dollars. This is because student-athletes already receive moderate amounts in compensation and benefits on top of a grant-in-aid without affecting the distinction between college and professional sports. Instead, the Court found that a distinction between college and professional sports arises from the fact that student-athletes do not receive unlimited cash payments, especially those unrelated to education, like those seen in professional sports leagues.

Accordingly, the Court found that, when compared with having no limits on compensation, some of the challenged compensation rules may have an effect on preserving consumer demand for college sports as distinct from professional sports to the extent that [**121] they prevent unlimited cash payments unrelated to education such as those seen in professional sports leagues. As will be discussed in more detail in the next section, however, not all of the challenged rules in their current form are necessary to achieve this procompetitive effect, and there is a less restrictive alternative to the set of current challenged compensation restrictions.

The challenged compensation limits can be divided into three categories: (1) the limit on the grant-in-aid at not less than the cost of attendance; (2) compensation and benefits unrelated to education paid on top of a grant-in-aid; (3) compensation and benefits related to education provided on top of a grant-in-aid.

[*1102] The Court found that the challenged limits in the first and second categories are procompetitive relative to having no limits, to the extent that they help maintain consumer demand for college sports as a distinct product by preventing unlimited cash payments unrelated to education.

As for the limits in the third category, only some have been shown to be procompetitive, namely limits on academic or graduation awards and incentives that are provided in cash or cash-equivalents. These [*122] could become a vehicle for unlimited payments. The Court found that limits or prohibitions on most other benefits related to education that can be provided on top of a grant-in-aid, such as those that limit tutoring, graduate school tuition, and paid internships, have not been shown to have an effect on enhancing consumer demand for college sports as a distinct product, because these limits are not necessary to prevent unlimited cash compensation unrelated to education. Educational benefits limited or prohibited by these rules are distinct from professional-level compensation because they have a connection to education, are paid to students, their value is inherently limited to their actual cost, and they can be provided in kind, not in cash. Defendants have offered no cogent explanation for why limits or prohibitions on these education-related benefits are necessary to preserve consumer demand. Some evidence instead suggests that the challenged limits on education-related compensation are arbitrary.<sup>42</sup> Accordingly, because no procompetitive justification for limiting these education-related benefits has been shown, limits on these benefits cannot be included in a less restrictive alternative. [*123]

B. Integration

Defendants contend that the challenged rules have a procompetitive effect because they promote the integration of student-athletes into their academic communities. Defendants posit that this integration improves the college education that student-athletes receive for their athletic services.

For this proffered justification to be viable, Defendants would have to establish (1) that the challenged rules promote integration, and (2) that integration has a procompetitive effect in the relevant market. As detailed in the findings of fact, Defendants did not meet their burden to show that the challenged rules have an effect on promoting integration. That alone defeats integration as a procompetitive justification.

The evidence shows that student-athletes benefit in various ways from the college education they receive, but Defendants have not shown that such benefits arise out of the challenged compensation limits. Most of the benefits that student-athletes can gain from attending college are caused, instead, by the education itself and by other rules and policies, such as those relating to academic eligibility requirements, tutoring, academic support, living conditions, and the [*124] scheduling of athletic practice and events. None of these rules and policies, which appear to be the driving force behind the integration that Defendants describe, are challenged here. Accordingly, student-athletes would still [*1103] enjoy the benefits caused by the latter rules and policies even if the challenged compensation limits were changed.

Defendants' expert, Dr. Heckman, conceded that additional compensation could improve outcomes for student-athletes, belying the notion that the challenged compensation limits, as they currently stand, are necessary to achieve positive student-athlete outcomes. Additionally, other evidence shows that student-athlete achievement, as measured by graduation rates, has increased since 2015, when permissible athletics-related compensation increased. This also suggests that the challenged compensation limits are not necessary to improve student-athlete academic outcomes. This evidence also undermines Dr. Heckman's opinion that student-athletes would be incentivized to spend time on athletics to the detriment of academics if they received additional compensation.

Defendants also rely on testimony positing that additional compensation for student-athletes [*125] would create a "wedge" between student-athletes and non-athletes, and even among student-athletes if any additional compensation provided were not distributed equally. The NCAA advanced the same theory in O'Bannon I. See 7 F. Supp. 3d at 980-81. There, this Court found that certain limited restrictions on student-athlete compensation "may help" prevent a wedge between student-athletes and others on campus, see id. at 980, and the Ninth Circuit affirmed that finding, although it noted that, on appeal, the NCAA focused all of its arguments regarding a procompetitive justification on its amateurism theory. O'Bannon II, 802 F.3d at 1059-60, 1072.

<sup>42</sup> For example, when asked whether increasing the current limit on Senior Scholar Awards from two students per school to five students per school would render the awards inconsistent with amateurism, the NCAA's Rule 30(b)(6) witness, Kevin Lennon, provided no meaningful response other than to justify the current limit on the basis that the membership decided that limiting the awards to two students per school constituted a reasonable cap. Trial Tr. (Lennon) at 1551-53. It could be raised from two to three. Lennon Rule 30(b)(6) Dep. Tr. at 179.

Here, the evidence that Defendants cite in support of their "wedge" theory is even weaker than that presented in O'Bannon I, and it also is directly contradicted by evidence that was not available at the time of O'Bannon I. This shows that student-athlete compensation increased since 2015 and this greater compensation, which can reach thousands or tens of thousands of dollars above a full cost-of-attendance grant-in-aid, has not resulted in increased separation between student-athletes and other students. This evidence distinguishes the factual record here regarding the "wedge" theory from the record in O'Bannon I, \*\*1261, and it justifies a different conclusion with respect to the "wedge" theory and integration as a procompetitive justification. Divisions among students exist and are inevitable as a result of factors that are unrelated to the challenged rules. Further, the challenged rules may create or exacerbate a wedge because they result in some schools spending money that would otherwise go to student-athlete compensation on frills, like extravagant, athletes-only facilities.

Because Defendants failed to show that the challenged rules have an effect on promoting integration, Defendants' integration justification fails.

VII. Rule of Reason: Alternatives to the Challenged Restraints

Defendants have sufficiently shown a procompetitive effect of some aspects of the challenged compensation scheme.<sup>43</sup> These are the cost-of-attendance limit on the grant-in-aid, the limits on compensation and benefits unrelated to education, and the limits on cash or cash-equivalent education-related awards and incentives for academic achievement or graduation. The procompetitive effect of these caps is [\[\*1104\]](#) preventing unlimited, professional-level cash payments, unrelated to education, that could blur the distinction between college [\[\*\*127\]](#) sports and professional sports and thereby negatively affect consumer demand for Division I basketball and FBS football. Defendants, however, have not shown a procompetitive justification for caps on education-related benefits that are inherently limited by their actual cost and that can be provided in kind, not in cash, such as rules that limit scholarships for graduate school.

The burden shifts to Plaintiffs to show that there are substantially less restrictive alternative rules that would achieve the same procompetitive effect as the challenged set of rules.

Where a restraint "is patently and inexplicably stricter than is necessary to accomplish" demonstrated procompetitive objectives, "an antitrust court can and should invalidate it and order it replaced with a less restrictive alternative." O'Bannon II, 802 F.3d at 1075 (emphasis omitted). To be viable, a less restrictive alternative must be "virtually as effective" in serving the established procompetitive effect of the challenged restraints, and its implementation must be achieved "without significantly increased cost." See id. at 1074, 1076 n.19 (citation and internal quotation marks omitted). In the context of NCAA rules limiting student-athlete compensation, a court must afford [\[\*\*128\]](#) the NCAA "ample latitude" to superintend college athletics, and may not "use antitrust law to make marginal adjustments to broadly reasonable market restraints." Id. at 1074-75 (citation and internal quotation marks omitted).

As discussed in the findings of fact, there is a less restrictive alternative to the set of challenged rules that meets these requirements. Under these alternative rules, the NCAA can continue to cap the grant-in-aid at not less than the cost of attendance. The NCAA can also continue to limit compensation and benefits, paid in addition to the cost of attendance, that are unrelated to education. The association can continue to limit academic or graduation awards or incentives, provided in cash or cash-equivalent on top of a grant-in-aid, as long as the limit is not less than the athletics participation awards limit.<sup>44</sup> a lower cap is not necessary to preserve consumer demand because athletics participation awards, at the current caps, have not been demand-reducing. In fact, the NCAA considers these amounts consistent with amateurism. While the NCAA could reduce the athletics participation awards limit in the future, it may not reduce academic or graduation awards or incentives to [**129] amounts lower than the current athletics participation awards limit. The NCAA may increase athletics participation awards in the future, but it must increase any limits on academic or graduation awards and incentives so that such limits are never lower than the limit on athletics participation awards.

Defendants have not shown a procompetitive effect for NCAA rules that restrict inherently limited, non-cash, education-related benefits provided on top of a grant-in-aid. Accordingly, such limits are not included in the less restrictive alternative rules. The types of inherently limited education-related benefits that are uncapped as part of this alternative include those [*1105] that currently are prohibited or limited in some fashion by the NCAA. These are listed in the findings of fact.

As discussed in the findings of fact, this alternative would be virtually as effective as the challenged set of rules in preserving the same contribution to consumer demand for Division I basketball and FBS football, as a product distinct from professional sports, that the current NCAA compensation scheme achieves. This is because this alternative expands education-related compensation and benefits only, and [**130] it does so in a way that would not result in unlimited cash payments, untethered to education, similar to those observed in professional sports.

This alternative also would not require significant new costs to implement, because it eliminates NCAA caps on education-related benefits. This will eliminate the need to expend resources on compliance and enforcement in connection with such caps. To the extent that the NCAA, conferences, or schools choose to regulate compensation in any way that is permissible under this alternative, they could employ existing rule-making, interpretation, and enforcement structures to do so. The NCAA could assist conferences and schools in that undertaking, by reallocating the resources it uses to enforce or interpret the NCAA caps that this alternative eliminates, or otherwise.

The alternative adopted here is consistent with the teachings of O'Bannon II. As noted above, in that case, the Ninth Circuit affirmed this Court's conclusion that the NCAA's compensation limits relating to the use or licensing of NIL violated the Sherman Act, and affirmed its order that the NCAA could not cap compensation for student-athletes' NIL at an amount lower than the cost of [**131] attendance. The circuit court reasoned that (1) the evidence in that case did not "suggest[] that consumers of college sports would become less interested in those sports" if this compensation were provided because it "would be going to cover [student-athletes'] 'legitimate costs' to attend school;" and (2) the additional compensation "would have virtually no impact on amateurism" as the NCAA defined the concept in that case. O'Bannon II, 802 F.3d at 1074-75. "By the NCAA's own standards, student-athletes remain amateurs as long as any money paid to them goes to cover legitimate educational expenses." Id. at 1075. The circuit court, however, vacated this Court's order that the NCAA could not limit the schools' compensation in trust to student-athletes for their NIL at an amount lower than $5,000 per year. The majority found that this Court erred in allowing student-athletes to be paid cash untethered to their education expenses, even if such payment was deferred, because that alternative would not be "virtually as effective as the NCAA's current amateur-status rule." Id. at 1074.

The non-cash education-related benefits allowed here, like the compensation approved by the court of appeal in O'Bannon II, will go to cover legitimate education-related [**132] costs. As in O'Bannon II, there is no evidence here suggesting that uncapping non-cash education-related benefits would negatively affect consumers' interest in Division I basketball and FBS football. According to defense witnesses, consumer demand for Division I basketball and FBS football as distinct from professional sports is driven by consumers' perception that student-athletes are students. See Board of Regents, 468 U.S. at 101-02 (noting that "[t]he identification of this 'product' [college football] with an academic tradition differentiates [it]" from professional sports). Additional education-related benefits, if anything, would serve to enhance student-athletes' connection to [*1106] academics. The natural experiments discussed in the findings of fact, as well as the testimony of Plaintiffs' survey expert, Dr. Poret, and some testimony by defense witnesses, also show that increasing education-related compensation and benefits would not reduce consumer demand for Division I basketball or FBS football. Defendants and their witnesses agree that the types and amounts of compensation that the NCAA currently permits schools to provide to student-athletes on top of a grant-in-aid are consistent with what they describe as [**133] amateurism. Some of this currently permissible compensation on top of a grant-in-aid, which can reach thousands and even tens of thousands of dollars above the cost of attendance, is related to education, and some is not. It follows that allowing limited non-cash education-related benefits on top of a grant-in-aid is not inconsistent with what Defendants describe as amateurism.

<sup>44</sup> As discussed in the findings of fact, the athletics participation awards limit is the maximum amount of compensation that an individual student-athlete could receive in an academic school year in participation, championship, or special achievement awards (combined) under Division I Bylaw, Article 16, and listed in Figures 16-1, 16-2, and 16-3 of the 2018-2019 Division I Manual, J0024.

Nor is there evidence here that allowing limited academic awards would negatively affect consumers' interest in Division I basketball or FBS football. The NCAA will be permitted to limit academic and graduation awards and incentives that are provided in cash or a cash-equivalent to a level that the record shows is not demand-reducing or inconsistent with NCAA amateurism, namely the level at which athletics participation awards, which are provided in cash-equivalents, are capped by the NCAA. The NCAA also will be permitted to continue to limit grants-in-aid at not less than the cost of attendance and limit compensation and benefits unrelated to education.

Defendants rely heavily on the following language from O'Bannon II: "The Rule of Reason requires that the NCAA permit its schools to provide up to the cost of [**134] attendance to their student athletes. It does not require more." Id. at 1079. But this language from O'Bannon II cannot be read to preemptively bar any Rule of Reason challenge to any NCAA rule that restricts or prohibits student-athlete compensation. Such a broad reading would be inconsistent with the circuit court's statement elsewhere in the opinion that, under the Rule of Reason, the validity of each rule "must be proved, not presumed." Id. at 1064.

Further, this statement was made in the context of the majority's disapproval of allowing deferred cash payments above the cost of attendance and "untethered to educational expenses." Id. at 1078. Based on the evidence in that case, the majority held that paying student-athletes any amount of cash above the cost of attendance, if unrelated to education, would "vitiate their amateur status," id. at 1077, whereas including additional compensation in a grant-in-aid up to the cost of attendance would not.

New evidence presented in this case shows that payments above the cost of attendance do not vitiate student-athletes' NCAA amateur status, even when such payments are made in cash-equivalents, are unrelated to education, and can amount to thousands and even tens of thousands of dollars. [**135] The NCAA permits student-athletes to receive, above the cost of attendance, cash-equivalent payments for their athletic performance directly from their schools and conferences, the cumulative value of which could reach $5,600 in an academic school year. This evidence was not before the Ninth Circuit in O'Bannon II. Moreover, the NCAA also currently permits a variety of other payments above the cost of attendance that have no tether to education, such as payments of $50,000 premiums for loss-of-value insurance against loss of future professional wages, thousands of dollars of SAF and AEF monies that can be used in a wide variety of ways, and thousands of dollars of travel expenses for family members. [*1107] Defense witnesses have testified that these payments are not inconsistent with amateurism. The economic analyses discussed above show that consumer demand has not been negatively affected.

The concern described in O'Bannon II that, if the line of paying cash, non-education-related compensation were crossed, there would be "no defined stopping point," id. at 1078-79, is inapplicable here. The alternative being adopted would remove NCAA caps on education-related benefits only. These benefits are inherently [**136] limited to their actual value, such as graduate school tuition. Cash or cash-equivalent academic and graduation awards and incentives would be limited to the NCAA-approved amounts of athletics participation awards. Thus, the alternative rules being adopted here do have a stopping point, and that stopping point falls within amateurism as Defendants described it in this case.

Under these less restrictive rules, the NCAA would retain the right to define these education-related benefits and to regulate how schools provide them to student-athletes. For example, the NCAA could require schools to pay the cost of such benefits directly to the educational institution or provider from which the student-athletes will obtain the benefits. In the case of education-related supplies, such as computers and science equipment, the NCAA could require schools to pay for these items directly or to reimburse student-athletes for these expenses if adequate proof of purchase is shown.

The adoption of this alternative set of rules also would not significantly impact the NCAA's ability to superintend college sports, because only a small fraction of the conduct that the NCAA regulates would be affected. The NCAA [**137] will otherwise remain free to manage college sports as it wishes.

These alternative rules are less restrictive than the current compensation rules, and therefore less harmful to competition in the relevant market. They will result in increased competition among NCAA members and increased education-related compensation for student-athletes.

VIII. Balancing

As discussed above, the Court has found and concluded that Plaintiffs have shown a less restrictive alternative to the challenged rules. Accordingly, the Court can impose its remedy without weighing the anticompetitive effects of the challenged restraints against their procompetitive benefits as a final balancing consideration.

Several Ninth Circuit cases describe the balancing inquiry as being necessary as a final consideration only if the court finds no viable less restrictive alternative. For example, in County of Tuolumne, the Ninth Circuit explained that where "plaintiffs have failed to meet their burden of advancing viable less restrictive alternatives," a court then "reach[es] the balancing stage," where it "must balance the harms and benefits of the [challenged restraints] to determine whether they are reasonable." 236 F.3d at 1160 (citing Areeda [**138] ¶ 1507b at 397). Similarly, in Bhan, the circuit court described the Rule-of-Reason inquiry as involving four steps, and noted that, after the third step in which a plaintiff must "try to show that any legitimate objectives can be achieved in a substantially less restrictive manner," "[f]inally, the court must weigh the harms and benefits to determine if the behavior is reasonable on balance." 929 F.2d at 1413 (citing Areeda ¶ 1502 at 371-72).

An argument can be made that balancing should be done at an earlier stage, and in the Ninth Circuit, the Rule of Reason inquiry has been described in varying ways. In Tanaka, the circuit court described [*1108] it as involving three steps but also noted that a "restraint violates the rule of reason if the restraint's harm to competition outweighs its procompetitive effects." 252 F.3d at 1063. In Paladin Assocs., Inc. v. Mont. Power Co., the circuit court described the Rule of Reason inquiry as "determin[ing] whether the anticompetitive aspects of the challenged practice outweigh its procompetitive effects," without mentioning any burden-shifting steps. 328 F.3d 1145, 1156 \(9th Cir. 2003\). In Am. Ad Mgmt., Inc. v. GTE Corp., the court ruled, "The fact finder must balance the restraint and any justifications or pro-competitive [**139] effects of the restraint in order to determine whether the restraint is unreasonable." 92 F.3d 781, 791 \(9th Cir. 1996\) (citation, internal quotation marks, and emphasis omitted).

Some Supreme Court cases have described the Rule of Reason inquiry without mentioning a burden-shifting framework at all. See, e.g., Leegin Creative Leather Prods., Inc. v. PSKS, Inc., 551 U.S. 877, 885, 127 S. Ct. 2705, 168 L. Ed. 2d 623 \(2007\) (under the rule of reason, "the factfinder weighs all of the circumstances of a case in deciding whether a restrictive practice should be prohibited as imposing an unreasonable restraint on competition") (citation and internal quotation marks omitted).

Thus, Supreme Court and Ninth Circuit cases have used various formulations of the Rule of Reason: three steps followed by balancing, four steps including balancing, balancing at the second step, or eschewing a burden-shifting test with defined steps altogether. None of these cases has endorsed or required the use of any particular formulation over any other.

The Court is not persuaded by Defendants' contention that the mention of a three-step test by the Supreme Court in Ohio v. American Express Co., 138 S. Ct. 2274, 2284, 201 L. Ed. 2d 678 \(2018\) (analyzing challenged restraints under the Rule of Reason using "a three-step, burden-shifting framework") and by the Ninth Circuit in O'Bannon II, 802 F.3d at 1060 (referring to the "third and final" step), means that the \*\*140 Rule of Reason analysis can end without balancing if a viable less restrictive alternative is not shown. Neither the Supreme Court nor the Ninth Circuit has so held. In O'Bannon II, the Ninth Circuit found a less restrictive alternative was viable; accordingly, balancing as a final consideration was not necessary in that case. See 802 F.3d at 1070. The Supreme Court's rule-of-reason analysis in American Express did not reach the balancing stage either, because the plaintiffs had not satisfied their burden to show that the conduct at issue had anticompetitive effects.

As can be observed in many citations above, the Supreme Court and the Ninth Circuit frequently rely on the treatises and other writings of Phillip E. Areeda and Herbert Hovenkamp in cases involving the Sherman Act. See, e.g., American Express, 138 S. Ct. at 2284 (citing Areeda & Hovenkamp). These scholars have noted that a three-step burden-shifting framework and balancing "are hardly the same thing" because "the sequence of evidentiary steps, with its shifting burdens, is an attempt to avoid general balancing." See Areeda & Hovenkamp ¶ 1507d. Their view is that balancing is appropriate as a final consideration where no viable less restrictive alternative has been established. \*\*141 See id. ("A better way to view balancing is as a last resort when the defendant has offered a procompetitive explanation for a prima facie anticompetitive restraint, but no less restrictive alternative has been shown .... The court must then determine whether the anticompetitive effects made in the prima facie case are sufficiently offset by the proffered defense.").

[\[\*1109\]](#) If no balancing were required at any point in the analysis, an egregious restraint with a minor procompetitive effect would have to be allowed to continue, merely because a qualifying less restrictive alternative was not shown. In this case, however, the Court has found a viable less restrictive alternative and will enter its injunction accordingly.

IX. Summary of Liability Determinations

For the reasons set forth above, the Court finds and concludes that the challenged rules, in their current form, unreasonably restrain trade in violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act. The challenged rules constitute horizontal price-fixing agreements enacted and enforced with monopsony power. This essentially eliminates price competition as to one key aspect of the recruitment of student-athletes in Division I basketball and FBS football, namely \*\*142 the labor that goes into these sports. As such, the challenged rules harm student-athletes by depriving them of compensation they otherwise would receive for their athletic services.

Defendants failed to show that the challenged rules have an effect on promoting integration of student-athletes and their academic communities. While Defendants have shown that limiting student-athlete compensation has some effect in preserving consumer demand for Division I basketball and FBS football as compared with no limit, Plaintiffs have shown that not all of the challenged rules are necessary to achieve this effect and that a less restrictive alternative set of rules would be virtually as effective as the set of challenged rules, without requiring significant costs to implement. The less restrictive alternative would remove limitations on most education-related benefits provided on top of a grant-in-aid, while allowing the NCAA to limit cash or cash-equivalent awards or incentives for academic achievement or graduation to the same extent it limits athletics awards. Limits on compensation and benefits that are not related to education and a limit on the grant-in-aid at not less than the cost of attendance \*\*143 would remain.

X. Remedy

The Sherman Act grants the power to district courts to "prevent and restrain violations" of Section 1, 15 U.S.C. § 4. In accordance with the viable less restrictive alternative discussed above, the NCAA may continue to limit the grant-in-aid at not less than the cost of attendance, and to limit compensation and benefits that are unrelated to education provided on top of a grant-in-aid. The NCAA may also limit academic or graduation awards or incentives, provided in cash or cash-equivalent, as long as the limit imposed by the NCAA is not less than the athletics participation awards limit.

Current NCAA limits on other education-related benefits that can be provided on top of a grant-in-aid are invalidated. The NCAA may not limit these benefits in the future.

Each conference will continue to be able to limit any compensation or benefits, including the education-related benefits that the NCAA will not be permitted to cap, as long as it does so independently from other conferences. Schools will remain free to set limits on their own offers to student-athletes.

The NCAA will retain the right to define, in an exercise of discretion and good faith, education-related benefits and to regulate how [**144] schools provide them to student-athletes. The NCAA may also assist conferences and schools in enforcing any conference rules limiting educational benefits.

[*1110] The Court will herewith issue an injunction, which will take effect in ninety days but will be stayed pending the issuance of a mandate if a notice of appeal is timely filed. The Court will retain jurisdiction over the enforcement and amendment of the injunction.

CONCLUSION

There is a great disparity between the extraordinary revenue that Defendants garner from Division I basketball and FBS football, and the modest benefits that class members receive in exchange for their participation in these sports relative to the value of their athletic services and the contributions they make. Class members contribute their elite talent and time, they limit their educational options, and they risk their long-term health to create enormous financial value for Defendants.

Restricting non-cash education-related benefits and academic awards that can be provided on top of a grant-in-aid has not been proven to be necessary to preserving consumer demand for Division I basketball and FBS football as a product distinct from professional sports. Allowing [**145] each conference and its member schools to provide additional education-related benefits without NCAA caps and prohibitions, as well as academic awards, will help ameliorate their anticompetitive effects and may provide some of the compensation student-athletes would have received absent Defendants' agreement to restrain trade.

The clerk shall enter judgment in favor of the Plaintiff class. Plaintiffs shall recover their costs from Defendants. The parties shall not file any post-trial motions based on arguments that have already been made.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

Opinion

MEMORANDUM

SCHMEHL, J. /s/ JLS

Plaintiff, a mixed martial arts promoter, brought this pro se antitrust action, claiming that three Pennsylvania casinos and certain of their parent companies, management companies and employees conspired to engage in a horizontal group boycott of Plaintiff's mixed martial arts events as punishment for Plaintiff having filed a previous antitrust suit against two other local casinos. Plaintiff claims that the defendants' alleged actions violate Section 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1. Plaintiff also alleges that the defendants' actions are in violation of the essential facilities doctrine under Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act. Following the filing of motions to dismiss by multiple defendants for failure to state a claim, Plaintiff filed a motion for leave to file an Amended Complaint (ECF 41). The Court granted the motion as unopposed (ECF 52). Plaintiff subsequently filed an Amended Complaint (ECF 54). Presently before the Court are five motions to dismiss the Amended Complaint by various defendants. For the reasons that follow, the motions are granted.

Plaintiff is the owner of a mixed martial arts ("MMA") promotion company known as Xtreme Caged Combat ("XCC"). [*3] (Am. Compl., ECF 54 at ¶ 3). Plaintiff alleges that he has promoted MMA events longer than any promoter in the history of Pennsylvania and that XCC has been in existence for over eight years. (Id. at ¶¶ 3-4).

The Amended Complaint alleges that: Defendant Parx Casino is a casino with an attached event center located in Bethlehem, Pa; Defendant Greenwood Gaming & Entertainment, LLC is the parent company of Parx Casino; Defendant Helmut Perzi is the Director of Entertainment at Parx Casino; Defendant SugarHouse Casino is a casino with an attached event center located in Philadelphia, Pa.; Defendant SugarHouse HSP Gaming LP is the parent company of SugarHouse Casino; Defendant SugarHouse HSP Gaming Prop Mazz is the parent company of SugarHouse HSP Gaming LP; Defendant Rush Street Gaming is the managing company which runs and oversees the operation of the Sugarhouse Casino; Defendant Linda Powers is the Vice President of Marketing at SugarHouse Casino; Defendant Julia Spieler is the Catering Sales Manager at SugarHouse Casino; Defendant Erika Joy Erb is the Director of Marketing at SugarHouse Casino; Defendant Jules Vorndran is the Vice President of & Casino Operations at SugarHouse Casino; [*4] Defendant Sands Casino is a casino with an attached event center located in Bethlehem, Pennsylvania; Defendant Sands Bethlehem Event Center is the event center that is attached to the Sands Casino; Defendant Sands Bethlehem Event Center; Defendant SMG Worldwide Entertainment & Convention Venue Management is the facility management company that oversees the daily operations of Sands Event Center; Defendant James Hines is the General Manager of Sands Bethlehem Event Center. (ECF 54 at ¶¶ 5-26). .

According to Plaintiff's Amended Complaint, some time prior to the filing of the instant matter, Plaintiff filed an antitrust suit in this Court against Valley Forge Casino, Harrah's Casino, Cage Fighting Championships, and Xtreme Fight Events, among others, alleging claims of attempted monopolization, refusal to deal, and essential facility doctrine violations under the Sherman Act and the Clayton Act. (Id. at ¶¶ 35-36). Specifically, Plaintiff alleges "an illegal monopoly over the production of mixed martial arts events in all of the casinos in Pennsylvania who had the ability to host such events." (Id. at ¶ 37). The casinos involved in the [*5] monopoly were Valley Forge Casino and Harrah's Casino. (Id.) Plaintiff alleges that said monopoly "was procured by David Feldman (formerly of Xtreme Fight Events and Cage Fury Fighting Champions) who had gained serious influence over these casinos through various bribes paid to casino officials." (Id. at ¶ 38.) The parties reached a settlement and, as part of the settlement, Plaintiff agreed not to promote his MMA events at either the Valley Forge Casino or Harrah's Casino. (Id. at ¶ 40).

Plaintiff now alleges that the three casinos named as Defendants in this matter, are "acting in concert with one another, are now boycotting plaintiff from being able to promote his mixed martial arts events at all of their casinos as punishment for filing the antitrust suit he filed against Harrah's Casino and Valley Forge Casino." (Id. at ¶ 42). Plaintiff alleges that the relevant product market is the "market of mixed martial arts events." (Id. at ¶ 27). He alleges that the relevant geographic market is the "Eastern Pennsylvania Region that surrounds the Essential Casino Venues in question. This region is comprised of King of Prussia, Chester, Philadelphia, Bensalem and Bethlehem, Pennsylvania as [*6] well as the nearby areas surrounding these same counties." (Id. at ¶¶ 30-31).

With regard to Defendant Sands Casino, Plaintiff alleges that the former Director of Entertainment at Sands Casino and Event Center, Matt Salkowski, allowed Plaintiff access to hold his MMA events on two separate occasions at the Sands' event center even after Plaintiff had filed his initial antitrust suit. (Id. at ¶ 44). Plaintiff alleges that Salkowski was forced to resign the day after Plaintiff held the second event. (Id. at ¶ 51). After Salkowski resigned, he was replaced by defendant James Hines. (Id. at ¶ 53). Two months after he promoted his second event at the Sands, Plaintiff spoke with Hines about doing more mixed martial arts events there. (Id. at ¶ 54). Hines agreed to allow Plaintiff to hold future events at the Sands' event center but offered Plaintiff unfavorable terms and conditions. (Id. at ¶¶ 55-57). Plaintiff alleges that Hines' intent was to make it unprofitable for Plaintiff to promote an event at the Sands which would force Plaintiff to decline the offer without the Sands having to explicitly deny Plaintiff access. Plaintiff alleges that he had no choice, but to reject the unfavorable [*7] terms. (Id.)

Plaintiff alleges that no other MMA events have taken place at Sands Casino since Plaintiff's second event because the Sands drove up the rental fees so high that doing an event there would be unprofitable. (Id. at ¶ 57). Although Plaintiff alleges that the increase in rental fees was done to keep Plaintiff out of the Sands, he alleges at the same time that "no competing promotions have agreed to such inflated terms either." (Id.) Plaintiff alleges that boxing events promoted by David Feldman are still taking place at the Sands on much better terms than were offered Plaintiff. (Id. at ¶ 60).

With regard to defendant SugarHouse Casino, Plaintiff alleges that on October 27, 2015, he contacted the Casino about conducting his MMA events at the Sugarhouse event center, which was scheduled to open in March 2016. (Id. at ¶ 61). After speaking with defendants Julia Spieler and Erika Joy Erb, both of whom seemed very interested in Plaintiff's MMA events, Plaintiff submitted a written proposal. (Id. at ¶ 63). After receiving Plaintiff's proposal, Erb spoke with the Vice President of Marketing at SugarHouse Casino, defendant, Linda Powers. (Id. at ¶ 65). On November 6, 2015, Erb sent [*8] Plaintiff an email informing him that, after speaking with Powers, it was determined that the "timing is just not right" and that Plaintiff should check back in June, 2016 to discuss holding an event at the event center in the fall of 2016. (Id.) On May 9, 2016, Erb informed Plaintiff that SugarHouse had no interest in committing to any dates for XCC holding a MMA event in the fall of 2016. (Id. at ¶ 69).

SugarHouse scheduled a boxing event with Hard Hitting Promotions to take place at the event center on August 26, 2016. (Id. at ¶ 70). On July 20, 2016, Helen Locura from XCC emailed Erb about XCC holding its own boxing event at the Center. (Id. at ¶ 71). After the exchange of a series of emails, Erb informed Locuro by email dated July 29, 2016 that "[w]e are still testing out our involvement with boxing events and are not ready to commit to anymore at this time. We will reach out once we internally discuss our future involvement with the sport. Thanks!" (Id. at ¶ 73). Although Erb had told Plaintiff that SugarHouse was not ready to commit to hosting any more boxing matches, SugarHouse apparently had already scheduled a second boxing event with Hard Hitting Promotions for October 28, [*9] 2016. (Id. at ¶ 78).

At this point, Plaintiff contacted the ring announcer for SugarHouse and XCC, Pat Fattore, who offered to speak with the Vice President of Marketing & Casino Operations at SugarHouse, defendant Jules Vorndran. (Id. at ¶¶ 81-82). Fattore informed Plaintiff that Vorndran had told him that SugarHouse "would be delighted to have [XCC] do its events at the casino." (Id. at ¶ 83). Fattore provided Plaintiff with Vorndran's cell phone number. (Id.) On September 1, 2016, Plaintiff called Vorndran who informed Plaintiff that he "would be delighted to have XCC do its events there" and offered to give Plaintiff a tour of the facility and contractual details on September 5 or September 6, 2016. (Id. at ¶ 85).

About an hour later, however, Vorndran called Plaintiff and left a message on Plaintiff's voicemail to the effect that he had spoken to "Linda" and that the SugarHouse would not be interested in having any MMA event until sometime after January 1, 2017. (Id. at ¶ 86). Plaintiff called Vorndran and was told that the events center was completely booked for the remainder of 2016, that Plaintiff could not come to see the events center and that there would be no contractual [*10] discussions for an event in 2017. (Id. at ¶ 88). Plaintiff alleges that "Linda" is defendant Linda Powers, the Vice-President of Marketing at SugarHouse. (Id. at ¶ 89).

After speaking with Vorndran, Plaintiff sent an email to Spieler and Erb on September 1, 2016 informing them of his intention to sue SugarHouse. (Id. at ¶ 90). The email further stated that "[y]ou are obviously well aware of the previous suit so all of us know this not a bluff." (Id.) Plaintiff alleges that Erb called Plaintiff and the following conversation ensued:

Plaintiff: Hello.

Erika: Hi Ryan, this is Erika. You don't need to speak, you can just listen. First of all, I have much more important things to worry about then responding to your email.... Now, no matter what you say or do, Sugarhouse is never going to let you in here. If it wasnt for you we would have had mma events here long ago. You filed that lawsuit, now live with it. Now have a nice day. (Immediately hung up.)

(Id. at ¶ 92). Plaintiff alleges that SugarHouse has continued to allow Hard Hitting Promotions as well as David Feldman to promote boxing events at the casino. (Id. at ¶ 95).

With regard to Parx Casino, Plaintiff alleges that he emailed defendant [*11] Helmut Perzi, the Director of Entertainment for Parx Casino, on May 6, 2017 regarding the possibility of XCC holding MMA events at the Casino's event center, which was scheduled to open in the near future. (Id. at ¶101). Plaintiff spoke with Perzi by phone on May 22, 2017. (Id. at ¶ 106). Following the conversation, Plaintiff emailed Perzi offering to beat the offer of any other MMA promoter and to guarantee attendance. (Id. at ¶ 107). Over the next two months, Perzi emailed Plaintiff to tell him that the Parx Casino was "reviewing its options." (Id. at ¶¶ 108-111). Plaintiff met with defendant Perzi on August 1, 2017 to discuss the terms and conditions of a possible relationship between XCC and Parx Casino. (Id. at ¶¶120-121). Perzi's offer to Plaintiff included a $3,000 rental fee and the requirement that Plaintiff provide 100 free tickets to the Casino. (Id. at ¶ 121). Plaintiff not only agreed to the proposal, but offered to actually supply the casino with 200 free tickets. (Id. at ¶ 123). In response, Perzi sent Plaintiff an email which stated, inter alia, "[a]ll of our decisions are not always about the best financials, but with whom we are comfortable working with and we find [*12] synergy with to be successful together." (Id. at ¶ 124). Ultimately, defendant Perzi contacted Plaintiff on November 14, 2017 and informed him that Parx Casino was deciding between two other companies for MMA events at the Casino. (Id. at ¶¶ 128-129).

Plaintiff further alleges that "[Rob] Haydak and [Cage Fury Fighting Charnpionships] will now move forward with doing their mma events at Parx Casino's event center." (Id. at ¶ 131). According to Plaintiff, Mr. Haydak informed him, during an October 28, 2016 meeting at the Borgata Casino, that CFFC had already agreed to terms with Parx Casino for CFFC to promote MMA events at Parx Casino. (Id. at ¶¶ 112-113).

Plaintiff alleges that "[a]llowing a competing mma promotion to do their mma events at the Defendant Casinos, while simultaneously refusing to allow Plaintiff to do his events there, will result in Plaintiff going out of business." (Id. at ¶ 137). Plaintiff further alleges that "[i]f Plaintiff is put out of business by the Defendant Casino's horizontal group boycott, it will result in the remaining Mixed Martial Arts promotion [sic] who has the ability to do events at the Casinos obtaining market power and monopolistic control over [*13] mixed martial arts in the Eastern Pennsylvania region." (Id. at 138).

STANDARD OF REVIEW

The motion to dismiss standard under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12\(b\)\(6\) is set forth in Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 129 S. Ct. 1937, 173 L. Ed. 2d 868 (2009). After Iqbal, it is clear that "threadbare recitals of the elements of a cause of action, supported by mere conclusory statements do not suffice" to defeat a Rule 12\(b\)\(6\) motion to dismiss. Id. at 663; see also Bell Atl. Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007). "To survive a motion to dismiss, a complaint must contain sufficient factual matter, accepted as true, to state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face." Ethylpharm S.A. France v. Abbott Labs., 707 F.3d 223, 231 n.14 (3d Cir.

2013) (citing Sheridan v. NGK Metals Corp., 609 F.3d 239, 262 n.27 (3d Cir. 2010)). "A claim has facial plausibility when the plaintiff pleads factual content that allows the court to draw the reasonable inference that the defendant is liable for the misconduct alleged." Id.

Applying the principles of Iqbal and Twombly, our Court of Appeals in Santiago v. Warminster Twp., 629 F.3d 121 (3d Cir. 2010), set forth a three-part analysis that a district court in this Circuit must conduct in evaluating whether allegations in a complaint survive a 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss: First, the court must "take note of the elements a plaintiff must plead to state a claim." Second, the court should identify allegations that, "because they are no more than conclusions, are not entitled to the assumption of truth." Finally, "where there are well-pleaded [*14] factual allegations, a court should assume their veracity and then determine whether they plausibly give rise to an entitlement for relief." Id. at 130 (quoting Iqbal, 556 U.S. at 675, 679). "This means that our inquiry is normally broken into three parts: (1) identifying the elements of the claim, (2) reviewing the complaint to strike conclusory allegations, and then (3) looking at the well-pleaded components of the complaint and evaluating whether all of the elements identified in part one of the inquiry are sufficiently alleged." Malleus v. George, 641 F.3d 560, 563 (3d Cir. 2011).

A complaint must do more than allege a plaintiff's entitlement to relief, it must "show" such an entitlement with its facts. Fowler v. UPMC Shadyside, 578 F.3d 203, 210-11 (citing Phillips v. Cnty. of Allegheny, 515 F.3d 224, 234-35 (3d Cir. 2008)). "[W]here the well-pleaded facts do not permit the court to infer more than the mere possibility of misconduct, the complaint has alleged — but it has not 'shown' — 'that the pleader is entitled to relief.'" Iqbal, 556 U.S. at 679. The "plausibility" determination is a "context-specific task that requires the reviewing court to draw on its judicial experience and common sense." Id.

DISCUSSION

In Count One of the Amended Complaint which asserts a claim against the defendants for horizontal group boycott, Plaintiff makes the following allegations:

140. Parx Casino, Sugarhouse Casino [*15] and Sands Casino and Event Center, control facilities that host events in plaintiff's product market and regional market that he requires access to in order to remain a viable competitor in his commercial industry.

141. Parx Casino, Sugarhouse Casino, Sands Casino and Event Center, their owners, and Defendants James Hines, Helmut Perzi, Erika Joy Erb, Julia Spieler, Jules Vorn Oran and Linda Powers collectively entered into a conspiracy to boycott plaintiff and his mixed martial arts promotion Xtreme Caged Combat from being permitted the ability to promote his mma events inside the casino defendant's venues.

142. Parx Casino, SugarHouse Casino and Sands Casino and Event Center, as well as their owners and employees, are direct competitors with one another, and the conspiracy entered into between these parties is horizontal.

143. This horizontal conspiracy is a per se antitrust violation.

144. Parx Casino, Sugarhouse Casino and Sands Casino and Event Center, and their owners and employees, have no legitimate business reason for not allowing plaintiff and XCC the ability to promote his mma events at their casino venues and under fair and reasonable terms.

145. Parx Casino, Sugarhouse Casino [*16] and Sands Casino and Event Center's, and their owners and employees, refusal to allow plaintiff access into the casino venues to do his mma events and under fair and reasonable terms has no purpose except to stifle competition.

146. Parx Casino, Sugarhouse Casino and Sands Casino and Event Center, and their owners and employees, had a unity of purpose and a common design and understanding amongst and between one another to boycott plaintiff and his MMA promotion form the casino venues as punishment for filing his antitrust suit against Harrah's and Valley Forge Casino.

Section 1 of the Sherman Act prohibits "every contract, combination . . . , or conspiracy" that unreasonably restrains trade. 15 U.S.C. § 1. All three of these terms essentially mean that Plaintiff has to plead an agreement or "some form of concerted action..., in other words, a unity of purpose or a common design and understanding or a meeting of minds or a conscious commitment to a common scheme . . ." In re Ins. Brokerage Antitrust Litig., 618 F. 3d 300, 315 (3d Cir. 2010) (citations and internal quotation marks omitted). "Unilateral activity by a defendant, no matter the motivation, cannot give rise to a [S]ection 1 violation." InterVest, Inc. v. Bloomberg, L.P., 340 F. 3d 144, 159 (3d Cir. 2003).

"To adequately plead an agreement, a plaintiff [*17] must plead either direct evidence of an agreement or circumstantial evidence." Burtsch v. Milberg Factors, Inc. 662 F. 3d 212, 225 (3d Cir. 2011). Direct evidence of a conspiracy is "evidence that is explicit and requires no inferences to establish the proposition or conclusion being asserted." Ins. Brokerage, 618 F.3d at 324 n. 23.

Plaintiff has failed to plead direct evidence of an agreement. To the contrary, Plaintiff alleges an agreement to boycott Plaintiff and his MMA events only in the most conclusory of terms. For example, the sole allegation in the Amended Complaint of an alleged conspiracy states: "[a]ll of the Pennsylvania Casinos, acting in concert with one another are now boycotting plaintiff from being able to promote his mixed martial arts events at all of their casinos. . ." (Am. Compl. at ¶ 42) (emphasis added). See also id. at ¶ 141 (repeating same conclusion with slightly different wording but without alleging any facts). However, such allegations of a "conclusory nature...are not entitled to assumptions of truth," Burtsch, 662 F.3d at 225, and Twombly requires more than "a few stray statements [that] speak directly of agreement." 550 U.S. at 564; see also Schuylkill Health Sys. v. Cardinal Health 200, LLC, No. 12-7065, 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 103663, 2014 WL 3746817, at *7 (E.D. Pa. July 30, 2014) (dismissing conspiracy claims and explaining "most telling factor" was that Plaintiff "state[d] only in a conclusory fashion that Defendants conspired [*18] to allocate markets or employ identical contract terms"). Indeed, the Amended Complaint lacks any allegation related to Defendants' purported group boycott.

Plaintiff argues that Erb's email to him in which Erb stated "SugarHouse is never going to let you in here. If it wasn't for you, we would have had MMA events here long ago. You filed that lawsuit, now live with it." (ECF 77 at 11 (quoting Am. Compl. at ¶ 92)) constitutes direct evidence of a conspiracy. At best, Erb's statement constitutes unilateral action on the part of SugarHouse Casino not to do business with Plaintiff. Plaintiff has not alleged any connection between Erb's statement and any actions of employees of Parx Casino and Sands Casino. Indeed, Plaintiff alleges that Erb made this statement as part of her response to Plaintiff's earlier email on the same day in which he threatened to sue SugarHouse Casino. (Id. at 92).

Plaintiff also argues that non-party David Feldman's alleged revelation of a plot by Sands Casino to allow Plaintiff to do one promotion at the Sands' event center in the hope that he would fail constitutes direct evidence. (ECF 77 at 12-13 citing Am. Compl. at ¶¶ 44-50). Again, even assuming the truth of this allegation, [*19] it demonstrates nothing more than unilateral action on the part of Sands Casino and not a conspiracy between all three Defendants. In any event, Plaintiff admits that he was in fact allowed to promote two MMA events at the Sands' event center even after the filing of his initial antitrust lawsuit. (Id.) The Court finds that Plaintiff has failed to plead any type of an agreement at all through allegations of direct evidence.

Circumstantial evidence of parallel behavior must be pled in "a context that raises a suggestion of a preceding agreement, not merely parallel conduct that could just as well be independent action." Twombly, 550 U.S. at 557, 127 S. Ct. 1955. The law is well-established that "evidence of parallel conduct by alleged co-conspirators is not sufficient to show an agreement." Ins. Brokerage, 618 F.3d at 321; Plaintiff must allege both parallel conduct and something "more," commonly referred to as a "plus factor." Id. A plus factor could include evidence (1) "that the defendant had a motive to enter into a . . . conspiracy," (2) "that the defendant acted contrary to its interests," or (3) "implying a traditional conspiracy." Id. at 321-22. Such facts must "tend to rule out the possibility that the defendants were acting independently." Ins. Brokerage, 618 F.3d at 322-23 (emphasis added) [*20] (quoting Twombly, 550 U.S. at 553-54).

Plaintiff cannot meet this burden where, as here, "common economic experience,' or the facts alleged in the complaint itself, show that independent self-interest is an 'obvious alternative explanation' for defendants' common behavior." Id. at 326 (emphasis added). Here, Plaintiff has failed to plead any facts that, as Twombly and Insurance Brokerage require, "rule out the possibility that the defendants were acting independently." 618 F.3d at 321. The few facts that Plaintiff pleads with respect to Defendants' refusal to host his MMA events clearly demonstrate conduct consistent with independent decision-making and that Defendants' independent self-interest is an "obvious alternative explanation" for Defendants' conduct. See id. at 322-23.

Specifically, with regard to the Sands Defendants, Plaintiff admits that he actually promoted two events at the Sands Casino during his alleged boycott (Am. Compl. at ¶¶ 44; 49-50) and was offered the opportunity to host an additional event, but declined because he did not like the business terms offered. (Id. at ¶¶ 55; 57). In addition, Plaintiff alleges that no MMA events have taken place at the Sands Casino since Plaintiff's last event because the other MMA promoters will [*21] also not agree to the Casino's "inflated terms." (Id. at ¶ 59).

With regard to both SugarHouse (see id. at ¶¶ 61-100) and Parx (see id. at ¶¶ 101-131), Plaintiff's Amended Complaint discloses that both of these casinos engaged in a lengthy dialogue with Plaintiff but were non-committal about hosting his events and ultimately declined. It is certainly probable that the harassing and threatening nature of Plaintiff's constant communications with both Casinos and their representatives caused each casino to unilaterally not want to enter into a business relationship with Plaintiff. (Id. at ¶¶ 90-92; 117-119). See also id. at ¶ 124 ("All of our decisions are not always about the best financials, but with whom we are comfortable working with and we find synergy with to be successful together.") After all, in this country a business has "the right to deal or not to deal with whomever it likes, as long as it does so independently." Laurel Sand & Gravel, Inc. v. CSX Transp. Inc. 924 F.2d 539, 542 (4th Cir. 1991).

Moreover, assuming, arguendo, that each of the three Casinos independently decided to boycott XCC from doing MMA events at their event centers solely because of Plaintiff's previous suit, Plaintiff does not identify a single meeting, phone call, or document in which [*22] an agreement concerning a group boycott was reached between any of the Defendants. Nor does Plaintiff identify a single employee of any Defendant who was involved in forming an unlawful agreement with an employee of another Defendant. Finally, Plaintiff does not state any facts at all that would indicate that any alleged agreement was even formed, or what it entailed.

In short, nowhere in the Amended Complaint does Plaintiff allege any evidence of a conspiracy that supports an inference of collusion. The Amended Complaint fails to allege any facts demonstrating "traditional" noneconomic evidence of conspiracy. Ins. Brokerage, 618 F.3d at 322. Instead, Plaintiff attempts to imply a conspiracy claim from allegations that since he supplied the Defendants with better business proposals than those of his competitors the fact that none of the three Defendants would enter into an agreement with Plaintiff must mean that the Defendants engaged in a horizontal conspiracy to boycott Plaintiff. In making this argument, Plaintiff ignores the other allegations in the Amended Complaint that indicate purely unilateral conduct of each Casino Defendant in not wanting to enter into a business relationship because of his threatening [*23] and litigious actions. None of the allegations in the Amended Complaint demonstrate that "the inference of rational independent choice is less attractive than that of concerted action." Ins. Brokerage, 618 F.3d at 323 & n.22 (quoting Lum v. Bank of America, 361 F.3d 217, 230 (3d Cir. 2004)).

Accordingly, since Plaintiff has failed to plead an agreement, we need not reach any of the other elements of claim under Section 1 of the Sherman Act and Count I will be dismissed.

In Count Two, Plaintiff alleges that Defendants (as well as previous defendants Harrah's Casino and Valley Forge Casino) are collective monopolists who have control of essential facilities from Central to Eastern Pennsylvania to which Plaintiff needs access in order to remain a viable competitor in the MMA industry. (Id. at ¶¶ 152-162).

"[U]nder the 'essential facilities' or 'bottleneck' doctrine, 'a business or group of businesses which controls a scarce facility has an obligation to give competitors reasonable access to it.'" Cyber Promotions, Inc. v. Am. Online, Inc., 948 F. Supp. 456, 460 (E.D. Pa. 1996) (citing Byars v. Bluff City News Co., Inc., 609 F.2d 843, 846, 856 & n. 34 (6th Cir. 1980)). The elements of an essential facility claim are: "(1) control of the essential facility by a monopolist;

(2) the competitor's inability practically or reasonably to duplicate the essential facility; (3) denial of the use of the facility to a competitor; [*24] and (4) the feasibility of providing the facility." Ideal Dairy Farms, Inc. v. John Labatt, Ltd., 90 F.3d 737, 748 \(3d Cir. 1996\).

"An 'essential facility' is one that is not merely helpful but vital to the claimant's competitive viability." Cyber Promotions, 948 F. Supp. at 463 \(E.D. Pa. 1996\). For purposes of antitrust law, "essential means essential; it does not mean 'the most economical.' Nor does it mean 'best' or 'preferable.' A facility is not essential even if it is widely preferred by consumers and producers in the market, as long as there is an alternative (albeit inferior) venue." JamSports and Entertainment, LLC v. Paradama Productions, Inc., 336 F. Supp. 2d 824, 839 \(N.D. Ill. 2004\).

Plaintiff's own allegations in the Amended Complaint undermine any claim that the event centers of the Defendant Casinos are essential facilities. Plaintiff alleges that he has promoted MMA events longer than any promoter in the state's history and that XCC has been in existence for over eight years. (Am. Comp. at ¶¶ 3-4). Plaintiff further alleges that he has promoted 16 of his 29 MMA events at the National Guard Armory in Philadelphia and was scheduled to promote a 17th event at the armory on February 3, 2018. (Id. at ¶ 103). Obviously, an MMA event can take place in many different kinds of venues. In fact, Plaintiff even admits that besides the casino event centers, other venues exist such as the National Guard Armory [*25] for him to promote his MMA events. By his own words he has ended up promoting MMA events in this state longer than any other promoter. Plaintiff also alleges that as part of his settlement with Valley Forge Casino and Harrah's Casino in the previous case, Plaintiff agreed not to use their event centers to promote any of his MMA events. (Id. at ¶ 40). Therefore, two of the five casinos that Plaintiff alleges comprise the essential casino market are not available because it was Plaintiff himself who agreed not to host events at these casino's event centers. Again, essential does not mean the most economical or the most preferable. Plaintiff does not allege that attendance at his promotions has dwindled, that he has had to raise ticket prices or that his fighters have refused to fight at venues other than casinos. As long as Plaintiff has access to alternative venues such as the National Guard Armory, hotels, arenas and other venues to promote his MMA events, even though in Plaintiff's view such venues are economically inferior to the casino event centers, access to casino event centers is not essential to Plaintiff's competitive viability.

The Court also notes that the essential facilities [*26] doctrine is applicable "only where a party is being denied access to something necessary for that party to engage in business which is controlled by his competitors." Mid-South Grizzlies v. National Football League, 550 F. Supp. 558, 569-70 \(E.D. Pa. 1982\) (emphasis added).

Plaintiff does not and cannot allege that any of the casino defendants are competitors with Plaintiff. Indeed, Plaintiff alleges that Defendants own or manage casino event facilities (or are employed by such), and that he promotes MMA events. Plaintiff does not allege that he is in the casino business; nor does he allege that any of the Defendants are in the business of promoting MMA events. Accordingly, he cannot even establish that Defendants have denied an essential facility to a competitor.

Plaintiff has filed a motion to for leave to file a second amended complaint. In doing so, Plaintiff fails to take into consideration that he has already been given an opportunity to amend his complaint after the Defendants filed motions to dismiss his original complaint. Further, in light of the reasons cited above for dismissing his claims, Plaintiff has not set forth any reason to believe that further amendment of his complaint will cure the deficiencies identified by the Court. Phillips, 515 F.3d at 245 \(3d Cir.2008\) (determining that dismissal [*27] without leave to amend is justified where the amendment would be futile).

An appropriate Order follows.

MEMORANDUM

KEARNEY, J.

Commercial acoustical ceiling tile manufacturer Roxul USA, Inc., doing business as Rockfon, claims its largest American competitor Armstrong World Industries, Inc. requires building supply distributors sign agreements, as a condition of selling Armstrong ceiling tiles, prohibiting the distributor from selling a ceiling tile other than Armstrong ceiling tile and, even if the distributor does not sell Armstrong ceiling tile in a certain geographic area, to still not sell Roxul's ceiling tile sold through its Rockfon company. Roxul seeks damages from Armstrong alleging anti-competitive conduct prohibited by federal law. Armstrong [*2] claims its agreements are not anti-competitive under federal law. Roxul hired Professor Einer Elhauge of Harvard University to assist the jury in understanding the alleged anti-competitive conduct. Armstrong hired Dr. Janusz Ordover of New York University to assist the jury in understanding how its agreements are not anti-competitive. We face the prototypical battle of economic competition experts. Armstrong now moves we preclude Professor Elhauge's opinions as lacking a reliable fact basis and possibly not fitting Roxul's anti-competitive claims. We studied Professor Elhauge's lengthy opinions. At counsel's request, we evaluated his testimony in a hearing where Armstrong cross-examined him. After this analysis, we find Professor Elhauge's testimony based on his disclosed opinions is reliable, fits the issues, and will assist our jury. We deny Armstrong's motion to preclude his opinions at trial.

Armstrong argues Professor Elhauge's methodology supporting his opinions lacks reliability and his opinions do not fit the facts of this complex anti-trust challenge in a national market with multiple channels to sales. Roxul, the seller of acoustical ceiling tile through its United [*3] States company Rockfon, responds Professor Elhauge used reliable methods fitting the facts. While finding Armstrong raises several fair questions better suited for jury evaluation, we cannot preclude Professor Elhauge's opinions.

Federal Rule of Evidence 702 governs admissibility of an expert's testimony. Rule 702 provides:

A witness who is qualified as an expert by knowledge, skill, experience, training, or education may testify in the form of an opinion or otherwise if:

- (a) the expert's scientific, technical, or other specialized knowledge will help the trier of fact to understand the evidence or to determine a fact in issue;
- (b) the testimony is based on sufficient facts or data;
- (c) the testimony is the product of reliable principles and methods; and
- (d) the expert has reliably applied the principles and methods to the facts of the case.<sup>2</sup>

When determining whether to exclude testimony, we act "as a gatekeeper to ensure that the expert's opinion is based on the methods and procedures of science rather than on subjective belief or unsupported speculation."<sup>3</sup> As a gatekeeper, we must ensure the proffered expert opinions "reliably follow from the facts known to the expert and the methodology used."<sup>4</sup> We do not preclude expert opinions [*4] because we may disagree with the findings. Roxul, in adducing Professor Elhauge's opinions, bears the burden of showing a basis for admitting his testimony by a preponderance of the evidence.

Armstrong advances several arguments as to why we should exclude Professor Elhauge's testimony as to foreclosure, anticompetitive conduct, and injury. We address each in turn.

A. Professor Elhauge may opine as to substantial foreclosure and anticompetitive harm.

1. Armstrong's challenge to falsity of foreclosure assumption.

Armstrong argues we should exclude Professor Elhauge's opinion regarding substantial foreclosure because (1) he ignored Rockfon's growth, (2) he failed to assert Armstrong's exclusivity agreements bind contractors to purchase Armstrong tiles, (3) he failed to prove contractors cannot freely choose to purchase different tile brands.

Roxul argues (1) Professor Elhauge did not ignore Rockfon's growth but found Rockfon would have grown "two times faster but-for the market foreclosure,"<sup>5</sup> and (2) our Court of Appeals rejected arguments against foreclosure when the defendant did not foreclose the "ultimate consumers."

Roxul can still show foreclosure despite its growth. In *Mc Wane, Inc. [*5] v. FTC*, the court of appeals for the Eleventh Circuit held a plaintiff can prove foreclosure even when "the targeted rival gained market share—but less than it likely would have absent the conduct."<sup>6</sup> The court, citing our Court of Appeals' decisions in ZF Meritor and Dentsply, explained "exclusive dealing measures that slow a rival's expansion can still produce consumer injury."<sup>7</sup>

While Armstrong argues its exclusivity agreements do not bind contractors, we do not look only at contractors as the "ultimate consumers." In Dentsply, the defendant manufacturer argued because the plaintiff could sell its tooth products directly to dental laboratories, it had not foreclosed the plaintiff by exclusively dealing with dental distributors. The district court concluded the defendant could not exclude rivals from the market because it did not have exclusive agreements with the "ultimate consumers," the dental laboratories.<sup>8</sup> Our Court of Appeals explained the district court clearly erred by focusing on "ultimate consumers" when manufacturers sell to both distributors and dental laboratories.<sup>9</sup> Our Court of Appeals found the defendant excluded rivals from the market through its exclusive arrangements [*6] with distributors, even though the agreements did not contractually bind the dental laboratories.

We do not exclude Professor Elhauge's opinion on foreclosure. Professor Elhauge amply demonstrates while Rockfon grew in the relevant time period, it grew "less than it likely would have absent the conduct." Professor Elhauge cites evidence showing, while Armstrong's exclusivity agreements do not bind contractors, contractors may not have "the ability to make a meaningful choice" because of their reliance on preferred distributors.<sup>10</sup> Professor Elhauge cited evidence showing the tiles brands a distributor carries influence a contractor's choice.<sup>11</sup>

Both Professor Elhauge and Dr. Ordover relied on a survey amongst contractors.<sup>12</sup> When asked whether they prefer a particular ceiling tile brand, several contractors identified distributor availability as the most important factor, with responses including "[n]umber 1 is our supplier," "the main thing [is] the service I get from my distributor," and "having the distributor have the product in stock."<sup>13</sup> When asked to rate factors "important to contractors in determining their preferred brand," the most important factors were "lowest price for product" [*7] and "availability and service from the distributor or dealer you prefer."<sup>14</sup> Professor Elhauge also relied on evidence showing distributors' sales forces influence the brands contractors purchase.<sup>15</sup> We do not exclude as unreliable Professor Elhauge's opinion regarding foreclosure because Armstrong's exclusivity agreements do not contractually bind end-users.

2. Challenge to including repair and replace sales.

Armstrong argues we must exclude Professor Elhauge's foreclosure opinion because it incorrectly includes Armstrong's "repair and replace" sales. Roxul responds Armstrong's foreclosure share includes "all sales subject to the foreclosing conduct, even if [Armstrong] still would have made some of those sales but-for the foreclosing conduct."<sup>16</sup> Professor Elhauge testified at our Daubert hearing Armstrong's position in "repair and replace" jobs exacerbate the effect of its exclusivity agreements.

While Armstrong argues Roxul's inclusion of "repair and replace" sales warrants exclusion of Professor Elhauge's opinion, we note our Court of Appeals have affirmed foreclosure findings even when the foreclosure calculations include sales the defendant would have made despite the alleged [*8] anticompetitive conduct.<sup>17</sup> To the extent Armstrong challenges Professor Elhauge's foreclosure calculation, it can cross-examine him on his basis and conclusions.

3. Challenge to aggregating USG and Armstrong conduct.

Armstrong argues Professor Elhauge improperly aggregates the conduct of USG and Armstrong to arrive at its foreclosure calculation. Roxul argues Supreme Court precedent allows Professor Elhauge to aggregate Armstrong and USG's conduct.

In Standard Oil Co. of California v. United States, the United States sued Standard Oil alleging its exclusivity contracts with petroleum dealers violated the Sherman and Clayton Acts.<sup>18</sup> The Supreme Court considered Standard Oil's competitors used similar exclusivity agreements. In finding foreclosure, the Court explained the effect of Standard Oil and its competitors' conduct "ha[d] been to enable the established suppliers individually to maintain their own standing and at the same time collectively, even though not collusively, to prevent a late arrival from wresting away more than an insignificant portion of the market."<sup>19</sup>

In Federal Trade Commission v. Motion Picture Advertising Service Co., the defendant advertising company had exclusivity [*9] agreements with movie theaters to play advertisements in the theaters.<sup>20</sup> The defendant and three other companies in the market maintained exclusive agreements with theaters.<sup>21</sup> The Commission charged only the defendant and found the "[defendant]'s exclusive contracts unreasonably restrain competition and tend to monopoly" under the Federal Trade Commission Act.<sup>22</sup> The Supreme Court affirmed the Commission. It found substantial evidence to support the Commission's finding, explaining the "[defendant] and the three other major companies have foreclosed to competitors 75 percent of all available outlets for this business throughout the United States."<sup>23</sup> The Supreme Court also found the defendant's conduct violated the Sherman Act.

Armstrong cites the dissent in Motion Picture to support its argument Roxul may not aggregate foreclosure. Concerning the court's decision to aggregate the conduct of the defendant and the non-defendant companies, Justice Frankfurter, who wrote the majority opinion in Standard Oil, explained "[w]hile the existence of the other exclusive contracts is, of course, not irrelevant in a market analysis, this Court has never decided that they may, in the absence of conspiracy, [*10] be aggregated to support a charge of Sherman Law violation."<sup>24</sup>

While Armstrong cites district court cases outside our circuit, we find the Supreme Court approved aggregation in the context of the antitrust laws. Again, Armstrong can cross-examine Professor Elhauge on his basis and conclusions.

4. Challenge to anticompetitive harm for denying "most efficient" distributors.

Armstrong argues Professor Elhauge's opinion warrants exclusion because he bases anticompetitive harm on Armstrong foreclosing the "most efficient" distributors. Roxul argues our Court of Appeals allows a finding of foreclosure when the defendant prevents access to the most efficient distributors.

In Dentsply, the defendant signed exclusivity agreements with distributors to sell artificial teeth. The defendant argued against foreclosure because manufacturers could sell teeth directly to dental laboratories. The defendant's competitor sold through dealers, but the defendant maintained exclusivity agreements with twenty-three "key dealers" in the market, leaving hundreds of other distributors for competitors.<sup>25</sup> Our Court of Appeals reversed the district court's grant of summary judgment for the defendant, holding the defendant [*11] excluded rivals because the defendant maintained exclusive dealing agreements with "the key dealers."<sup>26</sup> Although competitors could sell through nonexclusive distributors, the court held such alternative channels were not viable as the defendant "block[ed] access to the key dealers," explaining "the firm that ties up the key dealers rules the market."<sup>27</sup>

Armstrong's argument for excluding Professor Elhauge's opinion citing preclusion from the "most effective dealers" fails. As explained, a jury may find no foreclosure if we find Rockfon can utilize alternative channels for selling ceiling tiles. But these alternative channels must be viable. If Rockfon's distributors were so inefficient as to prevent competition from rivals, a jury may find such alternatives to foreclosed distributors are not viable. Professor Elhauge cited evidence Armstrong's largest distributors—Foundation and Gypsum Management—purchased smaller distributors selling Rockfon tiles. After the acquisition, the "No Rockfon" clause in Foundation and Gypsum Management's agreements then bound these smaller distributors, foreclosing a portion of the distribution network. Roxul contends Foundation and Gypsum Management are two [*12] of the biggest distributors in the market.

Roxul adduced evidence Armstrong had exclusivity agreements with "stronger distributors."<sup>28</sup> Professor Elhauge explained the 2017 Simon-Kutcher report shows Rockfon had access to lesser quality distributors due to foreclosure. Simon-Kutcher rated distributors on a scale of one to five, weakest to strongest.<sup>29</sup> It concluded distributors covered by Armstrong's exclusivity agreements rated on average 3.5, while unforeclosed distributors rated 2.2.<sup>30</sup> Professor Elhauge also cited evidence Armstrong's exclusivity forced Rockfon to rely on an insulation distributor with "lack of specialized [ceiling tile] knowledge and ceiling contractor relationships."<sup>31</sup>

We cannot exclude Professor Elhauge's testimony based on this evidence-based opinion. In his foreclosure analysis, Professor Elhauge assesses the ceiling tile market, including the effectiveness of the distributors in the market. He cites evidence Rockfon could not access the most effective distributors. A jury can use this evidence to determine whether the alternative channels available to Rockfon—here, the inferior "unforeclosed" distributors—were a viable means to sell its products. Armstrong cites [*13] caselaw outside of our Circuit to argue we cannot find foreclosure because Rockfon could not access the most efficient distributors. But our Court of Appeals requires we must look whether alternative channels are viable. Professor Elhauge's opinion assists the jury in this analysis, subject to cross-examination and rebuttal.

5. Challenge to failing to show substantial anticompetitive effect.

Armstrong argues Professor Elhauge fails to show the exclusivity agreements had a "substantial" anticompetitive effect on competition.<sup>32</sup> Roxul argues Professor Elhauge shows (1) Rockfon would have 100% greater revenue shares but for foreclosure, (2) foreclosure caused Rockfon to delay investment in a United States manufacturing plant; (3) Rockfon's slow growth prevented it from achieving economies of scale.

We find Professor Elhauge shows substantial anticompetitive effect. Our Court of Appeals explained when a monopolist enacts exclusivity agreements impeding a new market entrant, anticompetitive effect results "from the delay that the dominant firm imposes on the smaller rival's growth."<sup>33</sup> We find Professor Elhauge presents evidence of substantial anticompetitive effect. The jury may not believe this [*14] opinion. But it is reliable and fits the issues.

B. Professor Elhauge may opine Armstrong's exclusivity agreements produce zero efficiencies.

1. Challenge to ignoring Rockfon's and CertainTeed's exclusivity agreements.

Armstrong argues we should exclude as unreliable Professor Elhauge's opinion Armstrong's exclusivity agreements produce "zero" procompetitive effects.<sup>34</sup> Armstrong argues Professor Elhauge ignored Rockfon and CertainTeed entered into exclusivity agreements.

Roxul responds a "lower-level Rockfon employee" entered into a single exclusivity agreement Rockfon terminated in 2013.<sup>35</sup> Roxul also responds Armstrong ignores Professor Elhauge acknowledged CertainTeed's exclusivity agreements failed because it lacked market power to exclude Rockfon.<sup>36</sup>

We do not exclude Professor Elhauge's testimony on this ground. Professor Elhauge provided factual basis for his opinion Armstrong's exclusivity agreements lack "procompetitive effects." Professor Elhauge found CertainTeed's exclusivity agreements failed because it lacked power to exclude rivals.<sup>37</sup> This evidence supports Professor Elhauge's opinion exclusivity agreements are anticompetitive. We cannot say, as Armstrong argues, an [*15] exclusivity agreement is procompetitive merely because Rockfon and CertainTeed uses them. Professor Elhauge's opinion does not lack a factual basis to make it unreliable. To the extent Armstrong challenges Professor Elhauge's assumptions, Armstrong may cross-examine him based on this allegedly similar conduct.<sup>38</sup>

2. Challenge to ignoring efficiencies.

Armstrong argues we should exclude Professor Elhauge's opinion because he "denies that exclusivity is a source of any procompetitive benefits to distributors."<sup>39</sup> Roxul responds Professor Elhauge acknowledged exclusivity agreements can have procompetitive effects but found Armstrong's agreements have no procompetitive effects. We agree with Roxul and leave the decision of which theory succeeds for the jury.

Contrary to Armstrong's argument, Professor Elhauge acknowledges "exclusive dealing agreements can have procompetitive effects in some cases."<sup>40</sup> Professor Elhauge also explained he found no procompetitive effects in this case. Acknowledging exclusive dealing can lead to investment in distributors, he found Armstrong's only "manufacturer agnostic" investment in its distributors consisted training course for which it charged attendees [*16] $1500.<sup>41</sup> We cannot say Professor Elhauge's testimony is unreliable because he concluded Armstrong's agreements produce no procompetitive effects.

3. Challenge to finding exclusive agreements do not incentivize distributors.

Armstrong argues we should exclude Professor Elhauge's opinion because he "rejected the view that Armstrong's exclusive distribution agreements incentivize distributors to promote Armstrong's brand more aggressively."<sup>42</sup> Roxul responds while Professor Elhauge acknowledged an exclusivity agreement can incentivize a distributor, Armstrong's agreements fail to incentivize distributors.

In his deposition, Professor Elhauge explained the evidence did not support a finding "Armstrong's exclusive distribution agreements incentivize distributors to promote Armstrong's brand more aggressively."<sup>43</sup> Professor Elhauge rather found "Nile evidence suggests to the contrary, that [Armstrong's agreements] preclude competition, and thus, incentivize lackluster or weaker efforts to promote any brand because one brand is exclusive, so there's less free market competition for sales."<sup>44</sup> Professor Elhauge based this opinion on his finding Armstrong provided smaller rebates than Rockfon.<sup>45</sup> Professor [*17] Elhauge supported his opinion with facts from the record. We cannot say Professor Elhauge's opinion is unreliable.

4. Challenging opinion exclusivity incentivizes distributors to provide distorted or misleading info.

Professor Elhauge opines distributor incentivization does not necessarily benefit consumers. He explains exclusive agreements "actually provide dealers an incentive to provide distorted or misleading information to consumers in an attempt to convince consumers that the exclusive brand is best, given that the distributor will lose the customer's business if the customer chooses a brand that the distributor is not allowed to carry."<sup>46</sup> Armstrong characterizes Professor Elhauge's opinion exclusivity incentivizes distributors to provide misleading information as absurd. We cannot say Professor Elhauge's opinion is absurd as Armstrong suggests.

Armstrong also argues Professor Elhauge's opinion would lead to the conclusion any business would provide misleading information. Armstrong compares distributors to Apple Store employees and argues an Apple Store employee has an incentive to provide misleading information about Apple products.<sup>47</sup> The comparison fails, as distributors generally carry [*18] different product brands. Roxul argues contractors trust distributors to provide neutral advice when selecting brands of building products.<sup>48</sup>

The cases Armstrong cite do not concern exclusive dealing. But Leegin Creative Leather Products, Inc. v. PSKS, Inc. supports Roxul's argument.<sup>49</sup> In Leegin, the Supreme Court dealt with the legality of "resale price maintenance agreements," manufacturer agreements with distributors setting the minimum price the distributor can charge for the manufacturer's goods.<sup>50</sup> The Court explained while they can have procompetitive benefits, vertical agreements—like exclusive dealing in our case—can have "anticompetitive effects."<sup>51</sup> A powerful manufacturer can abuse the vertical arrangement tactic of resale price maintenance by "giv[ing] retailers an incentive not to sell the products of smaller rivals or new entrants."<sup>52</sup>

Roxul argues Armstrong uses its exclusivity agreements to prevent distributors from selling products from Rockfon, a company with a smaller market share than Armstrong. We cannot say Professor Elhauge's opinion is absurd. We do not exclude Professor Elhauge's opinion exclusivity agreements incentivize distributors to provide misleading information.

C. [*19] We allow Professor Elhauge to describe his damages model.

Armstrong argues we should exclude Professor Elhauge's damages model as unreliable. Professor Elhauge calculated damages based on Rockfon's revenue from 2014 to 2018 amongst unforeclosed customers—customers not bound by Armstrong's exclusivity agreements. Professor Elhauge explained "[a] conservative benchmark for how much [ceiling tiles] Rockfon would sell in the but-for world (where there would be no anticompetitive foreclosure) is Rockfon's actual share of [ceiling tiles] to unforeclosed customers.<sup>53</sup> We address each of Armstrong's arguments.

1. We allow foreclosure and anticompetitive harm opinions.

Armstrong argues we should exclude Professor Elhauge's damages model for the same reasons it argues we should exclude his foreclosure and anticompetitive harm opinions. Because we rejected Armstrong's arguments on foreclosure and anticompetitive harm, we deny Armstrong's arguments for exclusion of Professor Elhauge's damages model for the same reasons.

2. Claiming Professor Elhauge's damages model suffers from selection bias.

Armstrong argues Professor Elhauge's damages model suffers from selection bias because contractors can purchase [*20] any ceiling tile they desire. Armstrong concludes Professor Elhauge's damages calculation includes contractors who wanted to purchase Armstrong tiles. Roxul argues (1) Armstrong merely speculates as to contractors' preference, (2) ceiling tiles only account for a small portion of a contractor's purchases from distributors, (3) foreclosure forced Rockfon to use unfavored distributors, and (4) Rockfon's market share among "direct-to-contractor" sales is similar to its share amongst unforeclosed customers. Roxul's argument is persuasive at least as to allowing Professor Elhauge explain this theory to the jury and face cross-examination.

Professor Elhauge swore when contractors purchase building materials from a distributor, eighty-four percent are materials other than ceiling tiles.<sup>54</sup> Because ceiling tiles account for approximately sixteen percent of a contractor's purchases, Professor Elhauge opines a contractor would not choose another distributor because of a preferred ceiling tile brand.<sup>55</sup> We cannot say Professor Elhauge's opinion is unreliable. Combined with Professor Elhauge's finding Armstrong forced Rockfon to rely on unfavored distributors,<sup>56</sup> we cannot find Professor Elhauge's opinion [*21] suffers from selection bias as to render it unreliable.

Both Professor Elhauge and Dr. Ordover recognized Rockfon's market share among "direct-to-contractor" sales as a "benchmark to estimate Rockfon's but-for world sales."<sup>57</sup> Thus, Armstrong's expert acknowledges one can measure sales in the "but-for" world with sales in the unforeclosed world. We cannot say measuring damages based on actual performance amongst unforeclosed customers is unreliable.

3. Claiming Professor Elhauge ignore key features of the "but-for" world.

Armstrong argues we should exclude Professor Elhauge's damages calculation because he failed to consider, in the "but-for" world: (1) Armstrong's exclusive distributors may voluntarily sell only Armstrong tiles, (2) Armstrong's "minimum purchase terms" in its agreements would still have a competitive effect, and (3) Rockfon would face additional competition from Armstrong.

Roxul responds Professor Elhauge did not assume Rockfon would sell to every exclusive Armstrong distributor in the "but-for" world. Professor Elhauge accounted for competition as the unforeclosed market he considered includes sales from Armstrong, USG, and CertainTeed.

We do not exclude Professor [*22] Elhauge's damages model for failure to identify key features of the "but-for" world. Armstrong's expert acknowledged sales in the unforeclosed market are a "benchmark" for sales in the "but-for" world. To the extent Armstrong challenges alleged deficiencies in Professor Elhauge's damages model, it can raise these issues on cross-examination.

4. Accounting for USG foreclosure in damages.

II. Conclusion.

Armstrong asks we exclude Professor Elhauge's damages model because it includes damages attributable to USG's exclusivity agreements. Roxul argues Professor Elhauge offered two alternative damages calculations based on Armstrong's conduct alone and Armstrong and USG's conduct together. Roxul further argues because Supreme Court precedent allows it to aggregate conduct for its foreclosure calculation, it may do so in damages as well. Professor Elhauge described these alternative calculations during our evidentiary hearing. He explained the alternative nature of his fact patterns. He described the methodology. These are issues for the jury.

We do not view Daubert analysis as the time to decide who is right or which theory we would adopt. We evaluate whether there is a reliable basis for the [*23] opinions fitting the facts. Professor Elhauge submitted an exhaustive analysis supporting his positions. Armstrong will have fertile territory to examine on these issues. It raises several fair points. But Professor Elhauge's opinions will assist the jury in understanding the complexity of competition claims based on the challenged conduct including Armstrong's agreements. We deny Armstrong's motion to preclude Professor Elhauge's opinions in the accompanying Order.

MEMORANDUM

KEARNEY, J.

After thirty years of enjoying the largest market share in the sale of acoustical ceiling tiles to commercial builders in the United States among three long-established competitors, the leading domestic ceiling tile manufacturer decided it could not afford a Danish ceiling tile manufacturer hoping to sell its ceiling tiles in the United States beginning in 2013 to repeat its success in Europe. Before the Danish manufacturer arrived, the leading domestic manufacturer — and at least one of its existing domestic competitors — offered exclusivity rights to building supply distributors to sell only its commercial tile product in specified domestic markets. The distributors appear to be the end-consumer commercial [*2] building contractor's primary means of purchasing ceiling tiles for their building projects. But when the Danish manufacturer arrived, the leading domestic manufacturer prohibited its exclusive building supply distributors from selling the Danish manufacturer's ceiling tiles in any market, even if its exclusive distributor did not otherwise sell its ceiling tiles in a certain market. As the large distributors purchased smaller distributors, this clause precluded the Danish manufacturer from accessing building distributors who once sold its product or who never sold the leading manufacturer's ceiling tiles. The Danish manufacturer sued the lead domestic manufacturer for anti-trust violations under the Sherman and Clayton Acts. Following extensive discovery, the lead manufacturer now asks for summary judgment on all claims and the Danish manufacturer seeks summary judgment in its favor on one Clayton Act claim. We deny the motions due to genuine issues of material fact as to the extent of anti-trust injury and whether the lead manufacturer: substantially foreclosed the market, possesses monopoly power, used its power to foreclose competition, extended its exclusivity agreements to prevent [*3] meaningful competition, and, coerced contractors into accepting exclusivity or otherwise precluding competition.

I. Undisputed facts.<sup>1</sup>

Armstrong World Industries, Inc. and Roxul USA, Inc. dba Rockfon, sell suspended acoustical ceiling tiles for commercial buildings in the United States.<sup>2</sup> Four manufacturers now account for most commercial ceiling tile sales in the United States: Armstrong, United States Gypsum (USG), CertainTeed, and Rockfon.<sup>3</sup>

Contractors use ceiling tiles to cover ducts, wiring and other structural features in a commercial building.<sup>4</sup> The tiles fit into grid systems in two-by-two foot or two-by-four foot patterns.<sup>5</sup> Contractors purchase ceiling tiles for new construction projects and "repair and replace" projects.<sup>6</sup> For "repair and replace" jobs, contractors take old, worn-out, or damaged existing tiles in buildings and replace them with new tiles.<sup>7</sup>

In a construction project, a building owner can hire an architect to design the building.<sup>8</sup> The architect provides the specification—or "spec"—for the project, sometimes listing the architect's desired brand for the necessary building products.<sup>9</sup> Architects often include the listed brand of ceiling tile for the project and several [*4] "equal" alternatives to the listed brand.<sup>10</sup> Ceiling tile manufacturers often influence architects to use their products in the specifications.<sup>11</sup>

The contractor orders the product based on the architect's specifications from retailers, distributors, or directly from the manufacturer.<sup>12</sup> Sometimes, the contractor "flips the spec" and orders a brand different than the brand in the specification.<sup>13</sup> A contractor may "flip the spec" because of preference, cost, or availability.<sup>14</sup> Contractors sometimes have preferred distributors who they use repeatedly for construction jobs.<sup>15</sup>

A. Armstrong, holding the largest market share for commercial ceiling tile in the United States, placed restrictions on the building products distributors if they wish to sell Armstrong's tile.

Armstrong has manufactured ceiling tiles since the 1940s.<sup>16</sup> Armstrong accounts for approximately sixty percent of the suspended acoustical ceiling tile market in the United States in terms of revenue.<sup>17</sup> USG is the second largest manufacturer, with a market share of twenty-nine to thirty percent, while CertainTeed is the third largest with eleven to fifteen percent of the market.<sup>18</sup> Armstrong sells its ceiling tiles primarily to building [*5] supply distributors, who in turn sell the tiles to contractors for construction projects.<sup>19</sup> Contractors historically prefer to purchase their building supplies from a distributor who can minimize travel and delay costs. As testified at our Daubert hearing, a building supply distributor generally sells more than ceiling tile and will deliver the building products to the job site on the requested date. This practice allows contractors to efficiently manage inventory on a job site. Armstrong provides building distributors selling its acoustical tile with rebates through its "Gold Circle" program.<sup>20</sup> Armstrong also provides its distributors with online and in-class sales training programs.<sup>21</sup>

In addition to rebates and training, Armstrong hopes to maintain its market leader position through extensive multi-year contracts with building distributors. For example, Armstrong has long required distributors who wish to sell the largest selling Armstrong tile to only sell Armstrong's tiles: "Distributor will use its best efforts to promote, sell and service all Ceiling Products within its Territory and will not have a direct buying relationship with any other manufacturer of competing ceiling products[.]"<sup>22</sup> Armstrong generally limits its written exclusivity agreements to three-year terms, although Rockfon argues these exclusivity agreements last indefinitely.<sup>23</sup> Like Armstrong, USG also has exclusivity agreements with its distributors.<sup>24</sup> Armstrong enjoyed particularly strong distributor relationships with many of the largest building supply distributors, including Foundation Building Materials and Gypsum Management Supply, two of the largest building supply distributors in the United States.

Rockfon, a subsidiary of the Danish company Rockwool International, attained a thirty-percent market share in the European ceiling tile market before 2013. In 2011, Rockfon hired the consulting firm Ducker Worldwide to assess the North American market.<sup>25</sup> Ducker reported, assuming a "solid distribution network established upfront," Rockfon could "capture up to 3% of the overall suspended ceiling market" in five years.<sup>26</sup> Ducker also explained in the United States market, "Fit is most common for a distributor location to be exclusive in one brand (especially smaller distributors). . . . due to manufacturers desire for a secure dealer relationship and [*7] decreased competition on the sales floor."<sup>27</sup>

Knowing these obstacles, Rockfon entered the United States market in 2013 with a strategy of building a distribution network and placing its tiles in architect specifications.<sup>28</sup> In a June 2016 presentation, Rockfon reported "Wile U.S. market is virtually 100% based on specification for ceiling products—being specified does not mean the project is automatically won, but not being specified severely limits growth opportunities."<sup>29</sup> Rockfon also reached out to architects to increase its presence in specifications.<sup>30</sup> By 2017, Rockfon specified over seventy million square feet of ceiling tiles.<sup>31</sup>

While maintaining a strategy of building a presence in specifications, Rockfon also recognized the importance of distributors. A Rockfon representative testified "[h]aving a strong distributor partner in any territory would be key to growing and maintaining market share."<sup>32</sup>

From 2013 to 2017, Rockfon imported its ceiling tiles into the United States from its plant in Poland.<sup>33</sup> In July 2017, Rockfon opened a tile manufacturing plant in Mississippi.<sup>34</sup> In the proposal for its first U.S. plant, it stated "[d]istributors see local production as a necessary show of ROCKWOOL's [*8] commitment to the market. Without it, they will not take the risk of carrying ROCKFON as their sole ceilings brand."<sup>35</sup>

C. Armstrong's response to Rockfon's entry in the United States market.

Armstrong described Rockfon's entry into the United States market as "one of the most challenging obstacles" to its business and "the most significant competitive threat in 30 years."<sup>36</sup> In September 2012, Armstrong told its employees, "Rockfon entered the European market and was able to gain approximately 30% market share in a relatively short period of time, we cannot afford this to happen in the Americas."<sup>37</sup>

1. The "No Rockfon" clause in its exclusive distributor agreements.

In 2013, Armstrong began including a clause in its exclusivity agreements precluding building distributors selling Armstrong tile from selling Rockfon tile even if the distributor's specific location did not sell Armstrong:

Distributor will use its best efforts to promote, sell and service all Ceiling Products within the Territory. Distributor agrees not to purchase for resale at any Distributor Location listed on Attachment A of the Distribution Agreement, ceiling products of any type from any manufacturer other than Armstrong. [*9] For all other Distribution Locations not listed on Attachment A that are owned or operated by any of Distributor, its owners, successors or affiliated companies ("Non-Armstrong Locations"), Distributor agrees (on behalf of itself and its owners, successor and affiliates) that none of them will purchase any Rockfon ceiling products for resale.<sup>38</sup>

If the building distributor decided to sell Rockfon tiles in locations where it did not sell Armstrong tiles, Armstrong could stop supplying Armstrong tiles to any of the building distributor's locations or allow other distributors to also now sell Armstrong in the distributor's otherwise exclusive markets:

In the event Distributor, its owners, successors or affiliated companies breach the agreements in this Paragraph 4, Armstrong may, in its sole discretion (a) terminate this Agreement or any other distribution arrangement with any of them for cause, (b) terminate for cause the authority to distribute Ceiling Products in all or part of any non-exclusive Territory, and (c) change to non-exclusive distribution any or all of any exclusive distribution Territory granted under this Agreement or any other distribution arrangement with any of them for [*10] cause.<sup>39</sup>

Rockfon refers to this clause as the "No Rockfon" clause.<sup>40</sup> Armstrong included the "No Rockfon" clause in its written distribution agreements with six different distributors including Foundation Building Materials and Gypsum Management Supply.<sup>41</sup> By 2013, Foundation and Gypsum Management began to purchase smaller distributors across the country.<sup>42</sup> Since Foundation and Gypsum Management had "No Rockfon" Clauses in their distributor contractors, the "No Rockfon" clause similarly bound a smaller distributor after consolidation.<sup>43</sup> Distributors Great Western Building Materials, Gypsum Supply, Badgerland Supply, and Rockwise all sold Rockfon in the United States.<sup>44</sup> After Foundation and Gypsum Management purchased these distributors, they stopped selling Rockfon tiles.<sup>45</sup>

2. Armstrong's pressure outside of the "No-Rockfon" clause.

Armstrong pressured its distributor CEMEX not to carry Rockfon tiles. Armstrong contracted with CEMEX, a distributor in Florida.<sup>46</sup> In a November 2014 email, Armstrong area manager Frank Pasquerello informed Armstrong Vice President Paul Corr about a conversation he had with a CEMEX representative:

I explained the situation as we discussed and told him we have asked [*11] our distributors not to support Rockfon in markets where they sell Armstrong and also markets where they don't handle the Armstrong line. I explained as you suggested that this was being handled either through new distributor agreements or through verbal understandings for lack of a better word.<sup>47</sup>

After meeting with Mr. Corr in 2014, CEMEX representative Frank Salters understood from Mr. Corr "if CEMEX pursued or attempted to pursue the Rockfon line, that CEMEX might lose the Armstrong line."<sup>48</sup>

Ceiling tile manufacturers sometimes sell their ceiling tiles directly to contractors — cutting out the middle man building distributor. The parties dispute whether direct sales to contractors is a viable alternative to selling through distributors. Armstrong argues its exclusivity agreements with distributors do not bind contractors, who can purchase their desired tile brand from any distributor or buy directly from a manufacturer. Rockfon argues direct sales to contractors are not a viable means of sale as manufacturers in the United States primarily sell ceiling tiles through distributors. Rockfon also argues contractors are not truly free to choose their desired brand as they usually purchase [*12] the brand carried by their preferred distributor.

Acousti, a building contractor, refused to purchase ceiling tiles from Rockfon in 2014 because of "pressure from Armstrong."<sup>49</sup> Rockfon representative Douglas Bernard met with Acousti representatives in January 2014.<sup>50</sup> The contractor's representatives told Mr. Bernard of having "to take a hands-off approach" with respect to Rockfon, explaining it "had too much to risk with losing the Armstrong line."<sup>51</sup>

D. Rockfon's growth in the United States market.

In October 2013, Rockwool acquired Chicago Metallic Company, a tile grid manufacturer.<sup>52</sup> The purchase afforded access to Chicago Metallic's pre-established distributor network, with 190 grid distributors.<sup>53</sup> Rockfon also sold ceiling tiles through Insulation Distributors, Inc., a distributor primarily focused on selling insulation products.<sup>54</sup> Mr. Noeth, a Rockfon representative, testified IDI "was mostly insulation-focused," and Rockfon chose Insulation Distributors "because that was our only option after the changes that were forced on us through the Armstrong pressures."<sup>55</sup>

In 2014, Rockfon reported $4,324,953 in ceiling tile revenue.<sup>56</sup> In 2017, it reported ceiling tile revenue of $20,999,933.<sup>57</sup> It [*13] projected $30,707,152 in revenue for 2018.<sup>58</sup> While Rockfon had an exclusive arrangement with its distributor Gypsum Supply in 2013, it cancelled the arrangement and no longer has exclusivity agreements with distributors.<sup>59</sup>

In a 2017 report, independent consulting firm Simon-Kutcher found Rockfon had access to at least one distributor or contractor in each "metropolitan statistical area."<sup>60</sup> Simon-Kutcher also found with respect to the United States market a "[l]ack of distribution partners in core North American markets is a real issue."<sup>61</sup>

E. The parties adduced qualified expert testimony.

Rockfon's expert Professor Einer Elhauge, an antitrust professor at Harvard University, opined on foreclosure, damages, anti-competitive harm, lack of procompetitive effect, and Armstrong's monopoly power.<sup>62</sup> Professor Elhauge calculated Rockfon maintains an approximately two-percent share of the suspended acoustical ceiling tile market in the United States four years after entering the market.<sup>63</sup> He calculated Armstrong's market share as sixty-one to sixty-two percent in terms of revenue, and fifty-five to fifty-six percent in terms of volume from 2013 to 2017.<sup>64</sup>

Professor Elhauge defined sixty-one [*14] regional submarkets in the United States where Armstrong charges different prices.<sup>65</sup> Armstrong calls these areas "Pricing Metros" and assigns each of its distributors to one of the metros.<sup>66</sup> Armstrong allows its distributors to sell its products only within the defined territory in the distributor agreement.<sup>67</sup> The defined territory is usually smaller than the Pricing Metro.<sup>68</sup>

Professor Elhauge opined on the extent Armstrong's exclusivity agreements foreclosed Rockfon from the United States market. He calculated between 2014 and 2017, Armstrong, through its exclusivity agreements, foreclosed thirty-eight to forty-one percent of the United States suspended acoustical ceiling tile market in terms of volume, and forty-six to fifty-one percent of the market in terms of revenue.<sup>69</sup> When aggregating foreclosure caused by both USG and Armstrong's exclusivity agreements, he calculated approximately fifty to fifty-three percent foreclosure by volume and fifty-eight to sixty-three percent by revenue.<sup>70</sup> He opined Rockfon grew faster amongst "unforeclosed" customers—distributors not bound by Armstrong's exclusivity agreements—than amongst "foreclosed" distributors, those bound by Armstrong's exclusivity [*15] agreements.<sup>71</sup> He calculated between 2014 and 2017, Rockfon's market revenue share amongst foreclosed distributors did not grow at all, while its revenue share amongst =foreclosed distributors increased from 0.8% in 2014 to 3.2% in 2017.<sup>72</sup> He also calculated while it had an actual market share of 1.9% in 2017, Rockfon's market share would have been 3.2% in 2017 "but for" Armstrong's alleged anti-competitive conduct—its exclusivity agreements.<sup>73</sup>

Professor Elhauge acknowledged while exclusive dealing agreements can have procompetitive effects, he opined Armstrong's exclusivity agreements have none.<sup>74</sup>

To measure Rockfon's damages, Professor Elhauge calculated Rockfon's lost profits resulting from Armstrong's exclusivity agreements. He calculated Rockfon's estimated revenue without Armstrong's exclusivity agreements—Rockfon's "but-for" revenue.<sup>75</sup> Professor Elhauge also calculated Rockfon's actual revenue amongst "unforeclosed" customers from 2014 to 2017, with projected revenue for 2018.<sup>76</sup> He then calculated Rockfon's incremental profit margin for both actual performance and "but-for" performance. To calculate lost profits, Professor Elhauge subtracted Rockfon's actual incremental profit [*16] from its "but-for" incremental profits.<sup>77</sup>

Armstrong proffered Dr. Janusz Ordover, a professor of economics at New York University, to opine on whether Armstrong engaged in prohibited anti-competitive conduct. Dr. Ordover opined the evidence does not support Rockfon's allegations Armstrong violated anti-trust laws with its use of exclusivity agreements.<sup>78</sup> Dr. Ordover opined Rockfon's growth in the United States market precludes a finding of substantial foreclosure.<sup>79</sup> Dr. Ordover calculated Rockfon's 2018 market share as 2.7% in terms of volume, and 2.9% for revenue.<sup>80</sup> Dr. Ordover found this market share consistent with Ducker's projection from 2011.<sup>81</sup>

Dr. Ordover found Armstrong's exclusivity agreements have procompetitive effects. He opined exclusivity with distributors "can incentivize investments in a brand and increase competition among brands even if competition among distributors of the same brand is restricted."<sup>82</sup> He opined because Armstrong invests in its distributors with training classes and sales leads, its exclusivity agreements prevent competitors from "free-riding" on these investments.<sup>83</sup> Acknowledging the "No Rockfon" clause in Armstrong's exclusivity agreements [*17] applies to locations where the distributor does not carry Armstrong tiles, he opines (1) Armstrong trained distributor

II. Analysis.<sup>85</sup>

Rockfon sues Armstrong for (1) unlawful monopolization under Section 2 of the Sherman Act, (2) attempted monopolization under Section 2 of the Sherman Act, (3) restraint of trade through exclusive dealing under Section 1 of the Sherman Act and Section 3 of the Clayton Act.<sup>86</sup> Rockfon moves for summary judgment solely claiming Armstrong's "No Rockfon" clause violates Section 3 of the Clayton Act. Armstrong moves for summary judgment on all claims.

To establish an anti-trust violation under both Acts, Rockfon must show (1) Armstrong engaged in "anti-competitive conduct" and (2) Rockfon suffered anti-trust injury as a result of the challenged conduct.<sup>87</sup>

Rockfon alleges two types of anti-competitive conduct: (1) Armstrong's "exclusive dealing" agreements with its distributors and (2) the "No Rockfon" clause preventing its distributors from selling Rockfon tiles. "An exclusive dealing arrangement is an agreement [*18] in which a buyer agrees to purchase certain goods or services only from a particular seller for a certain period of time."<sup>88</sup> "A claim of unlawful exclusive dealing may be pursued under § 1 or § 2 of the Sherman Act or § 3 of the Clayton Act."<sup>89</sup> Rockfon alleges exclusive dealing claims under all three sections. It also alleges Armstrong's "No Rockfon" clause is a naked restraint in violation of Section 3 of the Clayton Act and seeks summary judgment on this Section 3 claim.

A. We deny Armstrong's Motion as there are several genuine issues of material fact precluding judgment on whether Armstrong engaged in anti-competitive conduct.

We use the rule of reason to analyze Rockfon's exclusive dealing agreements under Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act and Section 3 of the Clayton Act.<sup>90</sup> "Under the rule of reason, an exclusive dealing arrangement is anti-competitive only if its 'probable effect' is to substantially lessen competition in the relevant market, rather than merely disadvantage rivals."<sup>91</sup> We look at "not only the percentage of the market foreclosed, but also take into account 'the restrictiveness and the economic usefulness of the challenged practice in relation to the business factors extant in the market.'"<sup>92</sup>

Our Court of Appeals [*19] explained there is "no set formula" for determining legality of an exclusive dealing arrangement but generally a plaintiff must show (1) "significant market power by the defendant," (2) "substantial foreclosure," (3) "contracts of sufficient duration to prevent meaningful competition by rivals," and (4) "an analysis of likely or actual anticompetitive effects considered in light of any procompetitive effects."<sup>93</sup> With regard to foreclosure, we also ask whether competitors "can reach the ultimate consumers of the product by employing existing or potential alternative channels of distribution."<sup>94</sup> We also may ask whether Armstrong "engaged in coercive behavior" and whether the Armstrong's customers could terminate the agreements.<sup>95</sup> We can also consider whether Armstrong's competitors engaged in exclusive dealing.<sup>96</sup>

1. We find a genuine issue of fact as to substantial foreclosure.

To establish "substantial foreclosure," Rockfon must "define the relevant market and prove the degree of foreclosure."<sup>97</sup> Rockfon need not prove "total foreclosure" from the market but must show Armstrong's practices "bar a substantial number of rivals or severely restrict the market's ambit."<sup>98</sup> "[O]ur concern is not about [*20] which products a consumer chooses to purchase, but about which products are reasonably available to that consumer."<sup>99</sup> "Substantial foreclosure allows the dominant firm to prevent potential rivals from ever reaching 'the critical level necessary' to pose a real threat to the defendant's business."<sup>100</sup> In circumstances where a monopolist controls the market, we may find foreclosure when the monopolist uses "its power to break the competitive mechanism and deprive customers of the ability to make a meaningful choice."<sup>101</sup> "Traditionally a foreclosure percentage of at least 40% has been a threshold for liability in exclusive dealing cases," but some courts require a "lesser degree of foreclosure" when the "defendant is a monopolist."<sup>102</sup>

We also ask in determining substantial foreclosure whether Rockfon could sell its products through alternative channels. "If competitors can reach the ultimate consumers of the product by employing existing or potential alternative channels of distribution, it is unclear whether such restrictions foreclose from competition any part of the relevant market."<sup>103</sup> We ask not whether alternative channels exist, but whether such channels are "viable."<sup>104</sup>

The parties dispute [*21] whether Armstrong's exclusivity agreements substantially foreclosed competition as necessary to find a violation under the Sherman and Clayton Acts. Armstrong argues we should follow the lead of our Court of Appeals' decisions in Eisai and Barr Laboratories affirming summary judgment in favor of the defendant in Sherman and Clayton Act cases. Rockfon argues our Court of Appeals' decision in United States v. Dentsply International, Inc.<sup>105</sup> applies.

GN Netcom offers the most persuasive guidance on summary judgment.

While these cases offer similarities to ours, we find Chief Judge Stark's opinion in GN Netcom, Inc. v. Plantronics, Inc.<sup>106</sup> most informative since Armstrong primarily argues its exclusivity agreements do not foreclose competition because they do not bind end-users—the architects and contractors who consume the products. In GN Netcom, Netcom sued Plantronics for exclusive dealing in the telephone headset market. Like the ceiling tile market, telephone headset manufacturers primarily sold their products to end users—call centers—through distributors. Plantronics maintained exclusivity agreements with its distributors prohibiting the distributors from purchasing or promoting competitors' [*22] products.<sup>107</sup> Like today's case, Netcom sued for monopolization and attempted monopolization under Section 2 of the Sherman Act, and restraint of trade under Section 1 of the Sherman Act and Section 3 of the Clayton Act. Netcom argued Plantronics' exclusive dealing agreements with headset distributors foreclosed it from forty-seven percent of the market.<sup>108</sup> Plantronics moved for summary judgment on all claims, arguing Netcom's ability to reach to end-users "negate[d] the essential element of significant market foreclosure."<sup>109</sup>

Plantronics argued Netcom could market its products to call centers, sell its products through the "hundreds" of nonexclusive distributors available to Netcom, or even sell directly to call centers and deliver the products through Plantronics' distributors.<sup>110</sup> Plantronics also presented evidence Netcom successfully sold to call centers through these alternative channels, resulting in an increased market share. Plantronics also introduced evidence it did not coerce call centers to purchase its products. Netcom argued such alternative channels were not viable because Plantronics maintained exclusivity with superior distributors, these distributors "control[led] access to end-users," the distribution networks [*23] were "long entrenched," and the end-users remained loyal to Plantronics' distributors.<sup>111</sup>

Chief Judge Stark denied summary judgment on all claims finding a genuine issue of fact as to whether Netcom could avail itself of alternative channels. He explained Plantronics must show more than the "mere existence of other avenues of distribution" and the court must assess whether such alternative channels are "practical or feasible in the market as it exists and functions."<sup>112</sup> Chief Judge Stark explained while Plantronics offered evidence showing Netcom could "adequately compete" for end-users' business despite exclusivity agreements, Netcom offered evidence showing such efforts required "extensive work" to reach end-users.<sup>113</sup> Netcom also offered evidence showing "long-standing relationships between end-users and distributors," further impeding the viability of alternative channels.<sup>114</sup> Thus, while the exclusivity agreements did not contractually bind end-users, Judge Stark found a genuine issue of material fact as to whether Netcom could successfully reach end-users without Plantronics' distributors.

Armstrong essentially makes the same argument as Plantronics. Armstrong explains because its exclusivity [*24] agreements do not bind contractors, a contractor seeking a Rockfon tile can freely choose to find a distributor carrying Rockfon. Armstrong also argues its agreements do not bind architects from including Rockfon tiles in the specifications for construction jobs.<sup>115</sup> Armstrong argues Rockfon did in fact reach out to architects to develop a presence in specifications. In a June 2016 presentation, Rockfon recognized "[t]he U.S. market is virtually 100% based on specification for ceiling products—being specified does not mean the project is automatically won, but not being specified severely limits growth opportunities."<sup>116</sup> Armstrong also argues Rockfon can sell directly to contractors, retail stores, and national accounts. Dr. Ordover estimated direct-to-contractor sales may account for twenty-five percent of sales across the entire market.<sup>117</sup> For retail sales, Dr. Ordover testified sales to retail stores accounted for ten to thirteen percent of Armstrong's revenue from 2011 to 2018.<sup>118</sup> Armstrong shows "national accounts" like Kaiser Permanente, Chick-fil-A, RaceTrac, and Taco Bell, purchase ceiling tiles directly from Rockfon.<sup>119</sup>

Rockfon argues considering the reality of the [*25] market, contractors do not freely switch between distributors based on a tile brand preference. Rockfon offers evidence showing contractors choose a tile based on the tiles carried by their preferred distributor. Professor Elhauge found "contractors typically will include a [ceiling tile] brand in its bid for the job only if the contractors' preferred distributor carries the [ceiling tile] brand."<sup>120</sup> As Armstrong maintains exclusivity with the largest and most efficient distributors, Rockfon argues it cannot effectively reach end users who prefer the largest, most efficient distributors. Rockfon instead resorts to inferior distributors not bound by Armstrong's exclusivity agreements. Professor Elhauge also testified, because ceiling tiles account for only sixteen percent of the building materials contractors use on a construction job, contractors do not switch from their preferred distributor merely to seek out a ceiling tile brand.<sup>121</sup> Rockfon also presents evidence Armstrong pressured contractors not to sell Rockfon tiles at the risk of losing Armstrong's line.<sup>122</sup>

Regarding architects, Rockfon argues fifty to seventy-five percent of architect specifications allow contractors to purchase brands [*26] "equal" to the specified brand, allowing contractors to influence brand selection.<sup>123</sup> Rockfon offers evidence showing while it intended to develop a position in architect specifications, it understood the importance of distributors, as sales through distributors accounted for seventy-seven percent of ceiling tile sales between 2014 and 2017.<sup>124</sup>

Rockfon also argues direct sales to contractors, retail stores, and national accounts are not viable alternatives to sales through distributors. Rockfon also cites an Armstrong representative statement's showing direct sales to contractors is not a viable option: "Rockfon in 2017 has been focusing on going directly to contractors to sell products. Will this be a sustainable strategy? We think not, as ceiling tile primarily is sold through the distribution network for a reason."<sup>125</sup> Professor Elhauge testified manufacturers cannot viably sell through retailers like Home Depot because retailers do not provide the same "whole range of services" distributors provide.<sup>126</sup>

While a jury could find lack of foreclosure based on the availability of alternative channels, we find Roxul has presented sufficient evidence from which a jury could find such channels were [*27] not feasible. We do not judge the strength of either party's evidence but find a jury could decide whether alternative means are "practical" and would "pose[ ] a real threat" to Armstrong's market share.<sup>127</sup>

We are not persuaded by cases evaluating other strategies in other markets.

We are not similarly persuaded by the parties' reliance on guidance from other markets and involving other competitive strategies. For example, while Rockfon cites Dentsply, the size of the competitors in the market differed significantly. In Dentsply, the defendant sold artificial teeth through dealers and prevented its dealers from carrying competitors' products.<sup>128</sup> The defendant threatened to cut off access to its products when a dealer considered adding another manufacturer's products.<sup>129</sup> Our Court of Appeals reversed the district court's finding competitors had access to alternative channels of distributions. It explained, while the defendant's competitors had access to hundreds of dealers, the defendant had exclusivity with twenty-three key dealers. The court noted "[t]he reality in this case is that the firm that ties up the key dealers rules the market."<sup>130</sup>

The defendant maintained a substantial market share [*28] of seventy-five to eighty percent of the artificial teeth market, with the closest competitor achieving only five percent of the market.<sup>131</sup> While Armstrong does not dispute it holds the largest share of the ceiling tile market, the next largest competitor—USG—holds a thirty-percent market share, significantly larger than five percent. Even CertainTeed, the third largest manufacturer, holds an eleven to fifteen percent market share.

Armstrong argues we cannot find substantial foreclosure because its exclusivity agreements do not harm all rivals, pointing to USG and CertainTeed's significant market shares. But to determine substantial foreclosure, we ask whether Armstrong's exclusivity agreements "bar a substantial number of rivals or severely restrict the market's ambit."<sup>132</sup> While the United States ceiling tile market has three established competitors, a new manufacturer had not successfully entered the market for thirty years before 2013. Rockfon argues it is a "maverick" firm with (1) more aggressive prices and (2) unique products.<sup>133</sup> Department of Justice Merger Guidelines instruct regulators ask whether a merger "may lessen competition by eliminating a 'maverick' firm, i.e., a firm that plays [*29] a disruptive role in the market to the benefit of consumers."<sup>134</sup> Elimination of a maverick under anti-trust law has the same ability to lessen competition. A jury could find while Armstrong's exclusivity agreements do not foreclose a substantial number of rivals, exclusivity severely restricts the market's ambit by preventing a "maverick" like Rockfon from achieving a footing in the market.

The loyalty discount agreements in Eisai do not present the same anti-competitive conduct as Armstrong's exclusivity agreements. In Eisai, the defendant entered into agreements with hospitals offering incremental discounts if the hospitals purchased a certain percentage of its drugs from the defendant.<sup>135</sup> The defendant offered (1) a flat discount of one percent if a hospital purchased less than seventy-five percent of its drugs from the defendant and (2) discounts ranging from nine to thirty percent if the hospitals purchased over seventy-five percent of its drugs from the defendant.<sup>136</sup> While this incentivized purchasing the defendant's drugs, the hospitals "were not contractually obligated to do so."<sup>137</sup> If a hospital terminated the agreement, it could still buy the defendant's drugs at wholesale prices.<sup>138</sup>

The district court granted summary judgment for the defendant on the plaintiff's Sherman and Clayton Act claims and our Court of Appeals affirmed. The plaintiff argued the hospitals lacked a meaningful choice to purchase the plaintiff's products, comparing the loyalty discount agreements to the exclusivity agreements in ZF Meritor and Dentsply. The Court of Appeals explained the defendant's anti-competitive conduct differed from the challenged conduct in those cases. If the hospitals did not achieve the seventy-five percent target, the defendant did not cut off supply to the hospital but merely offered the base one-percent discount. Even if the hospital terminated the agreement, it could still buy the defendant's drugs. The hospitals did not risk losing access to the defendant's products if they did not purchase seventy-five percent of its drugs from the defendant, or even chose to instead purchase the plaintiff's drugs. The court distinguished a case like Dentsply and ZF Meritor, where "the defendant threatened to refuse to continue dealing with customers if customers purchased rival's products."<sup>139</sup>

Armstrong's exclusivity agreements more closely resemble the exclusivity agreements [*31] in Dentsply and ZF Meritor than the loyalty discount agreements in Eisai. With the "No Rockfon" clause in its exclusivity agreements, Armstrong provided if the covered distributor purchases Rockfon tiles for resale in locations where the distributor did not sell Armstrong tiles, Armstrong could, "in its sole discretion (a) terminate [the] Agreement or any other distribution arrangement with any of them for cause."<sup>140</sup> In other words, Armstrong could refuse to continue dealing with a distributor if it purchased Rockfon tiles. Armstrong's exclusivity agreements do not present the same choice as the discount agreements in Eisai since distributors risked losing Armstrong's products if they purchased Rockfon tiles.

Armstrong argues our case is like Barr Laboratories v. Abbott Laboratories, but the rebate agreements in Barr resemble the discount agreements in Eisai.<sup>141</sup> In Barr, the defendant contracted with drugstores offering discounts if the drugstores purchased a certain volume of the defendant's drugs.<sup>142</sup> The defendant charged back the difference between the discounted and undiscounted price if the drugstore failed to purchase the target volume. The drugstores did not believe the defendant's contracts [*32] precluded them from buying competitors' drugs.<sup>143</sup> The plaintiff calculated (1) the defendant maintained a fifty-percent market share and (2) the defendant's contracts foreclosed the plaintiff from fifteen percent of the market.<sup>144</sup> The district court granted summary judgment for the defendant and our Court of Appeals affirmed. The Court of Appeals held the district court did not err in concluding fifteen-percent foreclosure combined with other factors—the stability in the market and the emergence of new manufacturers—showed a lack of "substantial foreclosure."<sup>145</sup>

We find Barr distinguishable for several reasons. The contracts in Barr were essentially loyalty discount agreements. The defendant did not prohibit drugstores from carrying competitors' products but rather only retracted a discount if the drugstore failed to purchase a target volume. The defendant in Barr did not include a provision allowing it to terminate the agreements if the drugstores carried a competitor's product, unlike the "No Rockfon" clause allowing Armstrong to terminate an agreement if the distributor carried Rockfon tiles. The plaintiff's foreclosure and market share calculations were significantly lower than the alleged [*33] foreclosure and market share attributed to Armstrong in our case. The district court in Barr also found the number of manufacturers in the market increased by twenty-three percent in the relevant six-year timeframe.<sup>146</sup> Here, before Rockfon, a new competitor has not entered the market for thirty years.

Rockfon adduced additional credible foreclosure evidence.

In addition to the unavailability of alternative channels for tile sales, Rockfon argues Armstrong's exclusivity agreements both quantitatively and qualitatively foreclosed it from growing in the suspended acoustical ceiling tile market in the United States.

To show quantitative foreclosure, Professor Elhauge defined the relevant market as sales of suspended acoustical ceiling tiles in the United States.<sup>147</sup> Roxul further breaks down the market into sixty-one geographical submarkets known as "Price Metros" where Armstrong can charge different prices for their tiles.<sup>148</sup> Professor Elhauge calculated, between 2014 and 2017, Armstrong foreclosed thirty-eight to forty-one percent of the United States market in terms of volume.<sup>149</sup> USG and Armstrong's exclusivity agreements together foreclosed approximately fifty-percent foreclosure.<sup>150</sup> Professor Elhauge [*34] further calculates after four years in the United States market, Rockfon has only achieved a two-percent market share.<sup>151</sup>

Professor Elhauge compared (1) Rockfon's unforeclosed distributors and (2) distributors foreclosed by Armstrong's exclusivity agreements. He determined Rockfon grew "significantly faster" among unforeclosed distributors when comparing foreclosed distributors and unforeclosed distributors.<sup>152</sup> He calculated between 2014 and 2017, Rockfon's market revenue share among foreclosed distributors did not grow at all, while its amongst unforeclosed customers increased from 0.8% in 2014 to 3.2% in 2017.<sup>153</sup> Professor Elhauge calculates in 2017, Rockfon's market share would have been 3.2% "but for" Armstrong's exclusivity agreements, as opposed to its actual market share of 1.9%.<sup>154</sup>

To show qualitative foreclosure, Roxul presents evidence showing Armstrong's exclusivity agreements forced Roxul to use inferior distributors. A 2017 report from independent firm Simon-Kutcher shows Rockfon had access to lesser quality distributors than Armstrong. Simon-Kutcher rated distributors on a scale of one to five, weakest to strongest.<sup>155</sup> It concluded distributors foreclosed by Armstrong's [*35] exclusivity agreements rated on average 3.5, while unforeclosed distributors rated 2.2.<sup>156</sup> Roxul also points to evidence it had to rely on an insulation distributor with "lack of specialized [ceiling tile] knowledge and ceiling contractor relationships."<sup>157</sup>

Armstrong argues Professor Elhauge inflated his foreclosure calculation because he included Armstrong's incontestable "repair and replace" jobs. With these jobs, contractors replace worn-out Armstrong tiles with new tiles.

The building owners generally desire Armstrong replacement tiles to match the existing Armstrong tiles.<sup>158</sup> Armstrong argues its exclusivity agreements do not foreclose these sales since customer preference for the existing brand drives "repair and replace" sales. Armstrong cites deposition testimony showing the "repair and replace" sales account for sixty to eighty percent of ceiling tile sales, while accounting for only thirty to fifty percent of Rockfon's sales in the United States.<sup>159</sup> Armstrong argues Rockfon maintains a seven to fourteen percent share of non-"repair and replace" sales.<sup>160</sup>

Rockfon responds "repair or replace" sales for Armstrong tiles account for only twenty-five percent of suspended acoustical [*36] ceiling tile sales in the United States.<sup>161</sup> Rockfon also denies incontestability since an Armstrong representative testified contractors can use ceiling tiles interchangeably; in other words, a contractor could use Rockfon tiles to replace existing Armstrong tiles in a building.<sup>162</sup> Rockfon further argues "repair and replace" sales exacerbate the effect of exclusivity as distributors cannot forego exclusivity with Armstrong or switch to Rockfon tiles without losing access to "repair and replace" sales.<sup>163</sup>

Armstrong also argues Rockfon's growth in the United States negates substantial foreclosure. Armstrong cites to an internal Rockfon presentation from September 2016 showing Rockfon's pace "to sell 28 million sqft of tile in 2016 which continues to be the fastest market introduction in Rockfon history."<sup>164</sup> Armstrong cites another Rockfon presentation from 2016 claiming Rockfon "ha[s] a location selling tile in every major [metropolitan statistical area] in the U.S."<sup>165</sup> In a February 2018 presentation, Rockfon stated it has "[d]istributors in every major market."<sup>166</sup>

Rockfon disputes the number of its distributors in the United States. Armstrong cites a Rockfon document showing it has "190+ distribution [*37] points,"<sup>167</sup> but Dr. Ordover at times testified Rockfon has either 136 or 170 distributors.<sup>168</sup> Rockfon also presents evidence Armstrong foreclosed it from accessing the best distributors, forcing Rockfon to rely on inferior distributors.<sup>169</sup> For example, Rockfon enlisted an insulation distributor because, as a Rockfon representative testified, "that was our only option after the changes that were forced on us through the Armstrong pressures."<sup>170</sup>

Armstrong also argues distributors preferred local production and Rockfon did not have a manufacturing plant in the United States until July 2017.<sup>171</sup> Armstrong cites a May 2015 Rockfon report: "Distributors see local production as a necessary show of ROCKWOOL's commitment to the market. Without it, they will not take the risk of carrying ROCKFON as their sole ceilings brand."<sup>172</sup>

Armstrong cites a presentation from independent marketing consultant Simon-Kutcher stating "Rockfon can still compete successfully" in the United States.<sup>173</sup> Rockfon responds in the same presentation, Simon-Kutcher stated "[m]arket access is a valid concern," as "[t]op customers in the North American markets are exclusive to a competitor."<sup>174</sup>

There are genuine issues of material [*38] fact as to whether Armstrong's exclusivity agreements substantially foreclosed the market for suspended acoustical ceiling tiles. Rockfon offers expert testimony showing it would have grown faster but for Armstrong's agreements. Professor Elhauge calculated Rockfon grew faster amongst unforeclosed customers than amongst foreclosed customers. Armstrong argues Professor Elhauge cannot attribute "repair and replace" sales to Armstrong's exclusivity agreements, but Professor Elhauge responds "repair and replace" jobs exacerbate the effect of exclusivity. Armstrong points to Rockfon's success in the United States market, Rockfon's priority for increasing its specification position, and distributor preference for local production.

While Armstrong points to Rockfon's success to show a lack of foreclosure, a new competitor's entry into the market does not necessarily negate foreclosure. Armstrong cites McWane v. FTC.<sup>175</sup> In McWane, the Federal Trade Commission sued iron pipe fitting manufacturer McWane under Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act. When a new rival attempted to enter the market, McWane, the dominant market participant, threatened its distributors if they purchased the new rival's [*39] products, McWane would withhold rebates and deny access to its products for twelve weeks.<sup>176</sup> During the relevant timeframe, the rival's market share grew ten percent, while McWane's share shrank.

The defendant argued on appeal the Federal Trade Commission erred in finding "substantial foreclosure" under the rule of reason since the new rival entered the market and attained significant growth. The court of appeals affirmed the Commission, explaining other courts "have found monopolists liable for anticompetitive conduct where, as here, the targeted rival gained market share—but less than it likely would have absent the conduct."<sup>177</sup> Citing Dentsply and ZF Meritor, the court explained "exclusive dealing measures that slow a rival's expansion can still produce consumer injury."<sup>178</sup> Rockfon argues it would have grown faster "but-for" Armstrong's exclusivity agreements and presents Professor Elhauge's calculations showing Roxul would have attained a higher market share "but for" Armstrong's exclusivity.

While Armstrong argues anti-trust law does not entitle Rockfon to the "best" distributors, our Court of Appeals instructs we look at the quality of distributors when determining anti-competitive conduct. [*40] When discussing a monopolist's anti-competitive conduct, the court provided an example of when a monopolist's exclusive dealing is illegal:

[S]uppose an established manufacturer has long held a dominant position but is starting to lose market share to an aggressive young rival. A set of strategically planned exclusive-dealing contracts may slow the rival's expansion by requiring it to develop alternative outlets for its product, or rely at least temporarily on inferior or more expensive outlets. Consumer injury results from the delay that the dominant firm imposes on the smaller rival's growth.<sup>179</sup>

Assuming Rockfon proves Armstrong a monopolist, a jury could find because Armstrong's exclusivity agreements, coupled with the agreements containing the "No Rockfon" clause, forced Rockfon to use inferior distributors, such agreements substantially foreclosed Rockfon from the market.

While Rockfon's growth may be relevant to "substantial foreclosure," a jury must decide whether Armstrong's exclusivity agreements prevent Rockfon from ever attaining 'the critical level necessary' to pose a real threat to [Armstrong]'s business.<sup>180</sup>

2. We find a genuine issue of fact as to Armstrong's market [*41] power.

Roxul must show "significant market power by the defendant[.]"<sup>181</sup> For monopolization claims under Section 2 of the Sherman Act in particular, Rockfon must establish Armstrong (1) possessed monopoly power and (2) maintained monopoly power "as distinguished from growth or development as a consequence of a superior product, business acumen, or historic accident."<sup>182</sup>

a. The parties dispute whether Armstrong possesses monopoly power.

"Monopoly power is the ability to control prices and exclude competition in a given market."<sup>183</sup> We infer "monopoly power" from "a predominant share of the market, and the size of that portion is a primary factor in determining whether power exists."<sup>184</sup> Our Court of Appeals determined a market share "significantly larger than 55%" establishes the requisite predominant market share.<sup>185</sup> In the event a defendant has less than a predominant market share, a plaintiff can establish monopoly power with other factors, including "the size and strength of competing firms, freedom of entry, pricing trends and practices in the industry, ability of consumers to substitute comparable goods, and consumer demand."<sup>186</sup>

Rockfon argues monopoly power based on Armstrong's share of the market. Professor [*42] Elhauge found Armstrong maintains "an overall revenue share of 61-62% and an overall average square-foot share of 55-56% from 2013-2017."<sup>187</sup> With respect to Armstrong's distribution network, Rockfon points to evidence showing Armstrong has "over 15% more distribution points than the number two player which approximates to 900 distributor representatives."<sup>188</sup>

Professor Elhauge also testified "repair and replace" jobs give Armstrong a significant market power and present a barrier for new entrants to the market.<sup>193</sup> Professor Elhauge argues because Armstrong knows contractors working "repair and replace" jobs demand Armstrong tiles to replace existing Armstrong tiles, it can charge higher prices for these sales.<sup>194</sup> Professor Elhauge also explains Armstrong charges thirty percent more for its Optima and Ultima line of ceiling tiles than Rockfon's comparable Sonar and Alaska db lines.<sup>195</sup> Dr. Ordover testified through discounts, Armstrong charged [*43] below its list price for thirty-four to fifty-one percent of its sales.<sup>196</sup>

Armstrong cites evidence showing it has only 355 distribution locations and 109 outside sales representatives in the United States.<sup>197</sup> Armstrong argues market share is properly measured by volume of sales and Professor Elhauge measured Armstrong's market share as fifty-three and fifty-five percent by volume.<sup>198</sup> Dr. Ordover testified Professor Elhauge excluded smaller ceiling tile manufacturers like OWA, Top Tile, and Sky Acoustics when he calculated Armstrong's market share.<sup>199</sup> Armstrong argues Professor Elhauge acknowledged these smaller companies "collectively achieved a 4% market share of tile and grid sales in North America."<sup>200</sup> Dr. Ordover also found between 2013 and 2017, Armstrong had less than a fifty-percent market share in twenty five of the Pricing

Metros.<sup>201</sup> Armstrong argues even assuming a sixty-percent market share, our Court of Appeals has never recognized a defendant with a sixty-percent market share as a monopolist in an anti-trust case.

While Armstrong argues we cannot find it a monopolist with only a sixty-percent market share, this is not the law. Our Court of Appeals determined a plaintiff [*44] establishes predominant market share with "significantly larger than 55%."<sup>202</sup> A plaintiff can show monopoly power even with a showing of less than fifty-five percent by pointing to other relevant factors like barriers to entry.<sup>203</sup> The ultimate test is whether Armstrong has "the ability to control prices and exclude competition in a given market."<sup>204</sup>

The parties raise a genuine issue of fact as to Armstrong's market share. A reasonable jury could credit Professor Elhauge's calculation of market share. Rockfon points to several other relevant factors from which a jury could conclude Armstrong possesses monopoly power, including the need for a domestic plant, economies of scale, patent protection, and the significant share of "repair and replace" jobs, all showing barriers to entry into the United States market.

b. A jury must determine whether Armstrong used monopoly power to foreclose competition.

Under the second element of the Section 2 claims, Rockfon must show Armstrong maintained monopoly power "as distinguished from growth or development as a consequence of a superior product, business acumen, or historic accident."<sup>205</sup> In other words, Rockfon must prove Armstrong used its monopoly power "to foreclose [*45] competition."<sup>206</sup> "Unlawful maintenance of a monopoly is demonstrated by proof that a defendant has engaged in anti-competitive conduct that reasonably appears to be a significant contribution to maintaining monopoly power."<sup>207</sup>

Rockfon argues Armstrong has the power to exclude rivals from the market. Rockfon cites Armstrong's dealings with Acousti and CEMEX, showing Armstrong pressured contractors and distributors to refrain from carrying Rockfon tiles.<sup>208</sup> Professor Elhauge opined Armstrong charges higher prices for its tiles than its smaller competitors and can charge prices because of its significant market share.<sup>209</sup> Rockfon also argues Armstrong's ability to insert the "No Rockfon" clause in agreement without consideration demonstrates its power to exclude rivals.

Armstrong argues it does not have the ability to exclude rivals from the market. Dr. Ordover opined Armstrong cannot exclude rivals, pointing to (1) Rockfon's entry into the market and growth, achieving an approximately two-percent share of the United States market after four years, and (2) the existence of two formidable competitors, USG and CertainTeed, holding a thirty and fifteen percent market share respectively.<sup>210</sup> Dr. Ordover [*46] also found Armstrong charged higher prices due to rising demand, higher costs, and Armstrong marketing higher quality product.<sup>211</sup> Armstrong also argues its distributors received consideration in return for inclusion of the "No Rockfon" clause, namely, the ability to carry Armstrong tiles at new distributor locations acquired by the larger distributor.<sup>212</sup>

Professor Elhauge responds Dr. Ordover's claim of Rockfon's growth showing Armstrong's inability to exclude rivals is misleading. He argues to determine whether Armstrong excluded Rockfon, we "compare [Rockfon's] actual growth to an estimate of how they would have grown but-for the [anticompetitive] conduct."<sup>213</sup> Professor Elhauge calculates in 2017, Rockfon's market share would have been 3.2% "but for" Armstrong's exclusivity agreements, as opposed to its actual market share of 1.9%.<sup>214</sup>

We find a genuine issue of material fact as to whether Armstrong used monopoly power to exclude rivals. Rockfon presents evidence Armstrong charges higher prices for its products, despite Rockfon offering comparable products. Armstrong presents evidence it charged higher prices due to rising demand, higher costs, and higher quality products. A jury must [*47] decide whether Armstrong can exclude rivals.

3. We find genuine issues of material fact on whether Armstrong's exclusivity agreements were of sufficient duration to prevent meaningful competition by rivals.

Roxul must show Armstrong's exclusivity agreements were "of sufficient duration to prevent meaningful competition by rivals."<sup>215</sup> Long-term exclusivity agreements are not per se unlawful, but "[t]he significance of any particular contract duration is a function of both the number of such contracts and market share covered by the exclusive-dealing contracts."<sup>216</sup> In ZF Meritor, our Court of Appeals held exclusivity agreements with five to seven year terms with every purchaser, foreclosing eighty-five percent of the market, showed the agreements prevented meaningful competition.<sup>217</sup> Agreements less than one year, on the other hand, are presumptively lawful.<sup>218</sup>

Armstrong argues its exclusivity agreements last three years.<sup>219</sup> Armstrong further argues it did not have exclusivity agreements with all of its distributors, citing its agreements with Marjam, Kamco, and Contractors Choice Supply.<sup>220</sup> Rockfon argues while its written exclusivity agreements list terms of three years, Armstrong had "verbal understandings" [*48] with its distributors exclusivity would last indefinitely, citing an email between Armstrong representatives from 2014.<sup>221</sup> Rockfon also cites an Armstrong representative's testimony showing Armstrong has exclusivity agreements with all of its distributors.<sup>222</sup>

Rockfon adduces credible evidence creating genuine issues of material fact as to the duration of the exclusivity agreements. Combined with evidence of Armstrong's share of the market, a reasonable jury could credit Rockfon's evidence and decide Armstrong's exclusivity agreements prevent meaningful competition by its rivals.

4. We find a genuine issue of fact as to procompetitive benefits and anti-competitive effects of Armstrong's exclusivity agreements.

Our Court of Appeals instructs we perform "an analysis of likely or actual anticompetitive effects considered in light of any procompetitive effects."<sup>223</sup> Armstrong argues its exclusivity agreements have only procompetitive benefits because the agreements prevent competitors from free-riding on its investments in its distributors.

Dr. Ordover opined exclusive dealing arrangements have procompetitive benefits: "[W]herein a distributor sells only or primarily the products of a single manufacturer [*49] can incentivize investments in a brand and increase competition among brands even if competition among distributors of the same brand is restricted."<sup>224</sup> He also opined exclusive dealing between a distributor and a manufacturer prevents a rival manufacturer from "free-riding" on the manufacturer's investment in the distributor.<sup>225</sup> Armstrong invests in its distributors by (1) sharing job opportunities in the distributor's sales territory, and (2) developing "Action Plans" to help distributors grow and improve their business.<sup>226</sup> Armstrong also provides training courses for its distributors on "general sales and marketing methods" and "inventory management."<sup>227</sup> Dr. Ordover testified Roxul could "free ride" on Armstrong's investments by using its distributors. While acknowledging the exclusivity agreements in this case prevent distributors from selling Rockfon products even in areas where the distributor does not sell Armstrong products, Dr. Ordover argues Rockfon could still take advantage of Armstrong's investments when distributor employees trained by Armstrong move locations.<sup>228</sup> Armstrong also enacted the "Gold Circle" program to provide rebates for its exclusive distributors based on sales figures. [*50]<sup>229</sup>

While acknowledging exclusivity can produce procompetitive benefits, Rockfon argues Armstrong's exclusive agreements have no procompetitive benefits. Rockfon also argues Armstrong overstates its investment in its distributors. Professor Elhauge found Armstrong offers its distributors only one "manufacturer agnostic" training course—a course not specific to Armstrong's products.<sup>230</sup> He explained Rockfon could only potentially "free-ride" on this course since it does not pertain only to Armstrong's products. He explained the training course was highly selective and Armstrong charges attendants $1,500 for the class.<sup>231</sup> Professor Elhauge explains Rockfon similarly invests in its distributors even without exclusivity agreements.<sup>232</sup> He found Rockfon offered greater rebates to its customers than Armstrong.<sup>233</sup> He also explains exclusivity reduces investments in a distributor since a firm like Armstrong with an exclusivity agreement does not have to compete with rivals.<sup>234</sup> He further opined any increased investment provides no benefit to the ultimate consumers of the tiles.<sup>235</sup>

We find a genuine issue of fact as to whether Armstrong's exclusivity agreements provide procompetitive [*51] benefits. Armstrong offers evidence its exclusivity agreements provide procompetitive benefits by preventing "free-riding" on its distributor investments. Rockfon offers evidence showing the exclusivity agreements do not offer procompetitive benefits because Armstrong overstates the impact of its investments. Rockfon also offers evidence it invests in its distributors even without exclusivity. A jury must decide whether Armstrong's exclusivity agreements offer any procompetitive benefits.

5. We find a genuine issue of material fact as to whether Armstrong coerced customers into accepting exclusivity.

We consider "whether there is evidence that the dominant firm engaged in coercive behavior."<sup>236</sup>

Rockfon cites evidence showing Armstrong coerced its distributors into accepting the "No Rockfon" Clause. Frank Salters, a former manager with Armstrong's distributor CEMEX, attended a meeting with Armstrong representatives in 2014.<sup>237</sup> During the meeting, an Armstrong representative told him if CEMEX carried Rockfon products, even in areas where CEMEX did not sell Armstrong products, "it could affect the distribution position with Armstrong in the markets that they had the line."<sup>238</sup> Mr. Salters understood [*52] this to mean CEMEX would lose Armstrong's business if it tried to sell Rockfon products.<sup>239</sup> Ms. Hart, a Rockfon sale representative, talked to a representative from the distributor Kamco in Connecticut.<sup>240</sup> The Kamco representative told her Kamco would not let him place an order with Rockfon because Kamco "didn't want to jeopardize [its] relationship with Armstrong."<sup>241</sup>

Armstrong argues it did not coercively prevent its distributors from carrying the Rockfon line. Armstrong argues its distributors wanted to carry the Armstrong line and willingly entered into its exclusivity agreements. The president of Hughes Industries, one of Armstrong's distributors, testified he preferred Armstrong over Rockfon because "[i]t's a name brand, it's already accepted . . . it's the premier line to have."<sup>242</sup> In cases where a larger distributor acquired a smaller distributor, Armstrong argues the larger distributor received the ability to transfer the Armstrong line to the newly acquired distributor in return for applying the "No Rockfon" clause to the acquired distributor.<sup>243</sup>

While Armstrong offers evidence its distributors willingly entered into exclusivity agreements, a reasonable jury could find Armstrong [*53] enforced its exclusivity agreements with coercion, thus creating an anti-competitive effect.<sup>244</sup> Rockfon offers evidence showing CEMEX felt threatened it would lose business if it sold Rockfon tiles.<sup>245</sup>

6. We find a genuine issue of material fact as to competitors' use of exclusive dealing.

We also ask whether Armstrong's competitors used exclusive dealing agreements.<sup>246</sup> Rockfon presents evidence USG has exclusivity agreements with distributors. Armstrong offers evidence showing Rockfon has exclusivity agreements with distributors. Rockfon responds it briefly had an exclusivity agreement with a distributor but no longer has exclusivity with any distributor.<sup>247</sup>

The parties' evidence of competitors' exclusivity agreements does not warrant summary judgment. A jury can consider this evidence in determining whether Armstrong's use of exclusivity agreements violates anti-trust laws.

7. We find a genuine issue of material fact as to whether Armstrong's exclusivity agreement caused an anti-trust injury.

We also ask whether Armstrong's exclusivity agreements caused anti-trust injury.<sup>248</sup> we ask whether the plaintiff's "loss stems from a competition-reducing aspect or effect of the defendant's behavior."<sup>249</sup> In ZF Meritor [*54], our Court of Appeals found sufficient evidence existed the defendant's exclusive dealing agreements foreclosed a substantial share of the market for truck transmission and the plaintiff exited the market because it could not maintain a "high enough market shares to remain viable."<sup>250</sup> Because of such foreclosure evidence, the court found a jury could conclude the plaintiff's "inability to grow was a direct result of [the defendant]'s exclusionary conduct."<sup>251</sup>

Rockfon offers evidence from which a jury could conclude foreclosure limited Rockfon's ability to grow. Professor Elhauge calculated between 2014 and 2017, Rockfon grew faster amongst "unforeclosed" customers than amongst foreclosed customers bound by Armstrong's exclusivity agreements.<sup>252</sup> Further, Professor Elhauge found Rockfon would have achieved a 1.3% greater market share in the absence of Armstrong's exclusivity agreements.<sup>253</sup> A jury could find Armstrong's exclusivity agreements caused Rockfon's inability to grow and thus caused an anti-trust injury.

B. We deny Rockfon's Motion as there are genuine issues of material fact on whether the "No Rockfon" clause is a naked restraint.

Rockfon argues Armstrong's "No Rockfon" clause is a [*55] naked restraint under Section 3 of the Clayton Act, with no other purpose than preventing Armstrong distributors from carrying Rockfon tiles. A naked restraint has "no purpose except (the) stifling of competition."<sup>254</sup> As explained, Armstrong adduces evidence it instituted the "No Rockfon" clause to prevent free-riding, an acknowledged procompetitive benefit.<sup>255</sup> Armstrong raises a genuine issue of fact as to whether the "No Rockfon" clause is a naked restraint. We deny Rockfon's motion for summary judgment under Section 3 of the Clayton Act.

LINARES, Chief District Judge.

This matter comes before the Court by way of several motions to dismiss by various Defendants in differing underlying actions. These motions are as follows:

- Defendant USALCO, LLC ("USALCO") moves to dismiss the City of Akron ("Akron")'s Complaint filed in Civil Action Number 18-9781 pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12\(b\)\(6\). (ECF No. 1100).<sup>1</sup>
- Defendants Brenntag Mid-South, Inc., Brenntag Southeast, Inc., and Brenntag North America (collectively "Brenntag") move to dismiss the Commissioners of Public Works of the City of Charleston (d.b.a Charleston Water System) and Grand Strand Water & Sewer Authority ("GSWSA") (collectively "the Charleston Plaintiffs")'s Complaint filed in Civil Action Number 18-3440 pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12\(b\)\(6\). (ECF No. 1116).
- Brenntag moves to dismiss the Commission of Public Works of the City of Greenville (d.b.a. Greenville Water) ("Greenville")'s Complaint filed in Civil Action Number 18-11027 pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12\(b\)\(6\). (ECF No. 1117).
- USALCO moves to dismiss the Charleston Plaintiffs, Greenville, and the Commission of Public Works of the City of Spartanburg, the City of Winston-Salem, and the South Carolina [*27] Public Service authority (d.b.a. Santee Cooper) (collectively "the Spartanburg Plaintiffs" and all together "the South Carolina Plaintiffs")'s Complaints filed in Civil Action Numbers 18-3440, 18-11027, and 18-9231 pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12\(b\)\(2\). (ECF No. 1143).
- Delta Chemical Corporation and John D. Besson (the "Delta Defendants") move to dismiss the South Carolina Plaintiffs' Complaints filed in Civil Action Numbers 18-3440, 18-11027, and 18-9231 pursuant to Federal Rules of Civil Procedure 12\(b\)\(2\) and 12\(b\)\(6\). (ECF Nos. 1144-46).

All Plaintiffs named above have submitted oppositions (ECF Nos. 1101, 1118, 1147-48), to which all Defendants named above have replied. (ECF Nos. 1104, 1120, 1149, 1152). The Court decides this matter without oral argument pursuant to Rule 78 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. Because of the similarity of the facts in these complaints and the similarity of the arguments set forth in the motions and oppositions, the Court will consolidate the analysis where feasible. For the reasons set forth below, the Court denies Defendants' motions to dismiss.

I. BACKGROUND<sup>2</sup>

The Court has set forth, at length, the factual and procedural background as it pertains to this Multidistrict Litigation in its Opinion dated July 20, 2017. (ECF No. 405 at 1-24). Accordingly, the [*28] Court need not restate, and hereby incorporates, that factual and procedural background herein. Thus, the Court will set forth only the relevant factual and procedural background as it pertains to these specific Defendants and their motions.

Plaintiffs brought these actions seeking to recover monetary damages and injunctive relief against Defendants for conspiring to suppress and eliminate competition in the sale and marketing of aluminum sulfate ("Alum"), pursuant to the Sherman Antitrust Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1, et seq., the Clayton Antitrust Act, 15 U.S.C. §§ 12-17 & 29 U.S.C. §§ 52-53, and the laws of the State of South Carolina and North Carolina.<sup>3</sup> (FAC ¶ 1; Civ. No. 18-9231, ECF No. 1 ("Spartanburg Compl.") III). Plaintiffs contend that Defendants agreed to "rig bids and allocate customers for, and to fix, stabilize, inflate, and maintain the price of Alum sold to companies and municipal authorities in the United States from January 1, 1997 through at least February 2011 . . . ." (FAC ¶ 1). Specifically, Plaintiffs allege that Defendants met to "discuss their respective Alum businesses," agreed to "stay away" from each other's historical customers," submitted "intentionally high," or "throw away" bids, and withdrew winning bids "in [*29] cases where a bid was inadvertently submitted." (FAC ¶ 14).

<sup>2</sup> For purposes of brevity, the Court will cite only to the Charleston Plaintiffs' Amended Complaint whenever the Akron, Greenville, and/or Spartanburg Complaints allege similar facts. Hence, this background is generally derived from Charleston Plaintiffs' Amended Complaint ("FAC"), which was docketed on the consolidated docket, 16-md-2687. (ECF No. 839). The Court must accept the allegations therein as true at this stage of the proceedings. See Alston V. Countrywide Fin. Corp., 585 F.3d 753, 758 \(3d Cir. 2009\).

Defendant John D. Besson is presently a resident of Miami Beach, Florida. (FAC ¶ 21). He was the president of Delta Chemical and "oversaw its sale and marketing of water treatment chemicals, including Alum," in addition to "effectuating attempts" to sell or merge Delta Chemical with another company. (FAC ¶ 21). Plaintiffs allege that Defendant John Besson "joined, participated in, and benefitted from the unlawful [Alum] conspiracy." (FAC ¶ 21). After Delta Chemical combined with USALCO in November 2011, Defendant John Besson became a USALCO consultant. (FAC ¶ 21).

Defendant Delta Chemical is a Maryland corporation with a principal place of business in Baltimore, Maryland. (FAC ¶ 49). Delta Chemical sold Alum throughout the United States. (FAC ¶ 49). Plaintiffs allege that "[f]rom the beginning of the Conspiracy Period to the date USALCO combined with Delta Chemical on November 17, 2011, Delta Chemical was an active participant in, and benefitted from, the conspiracy." (FAC ¶ 49). Moreover, "[a]s a result of Delta Chemical's combination with USALCO, Delta Chemical ceased to be a potential competitor in the sale and marketing [*30] of Alum." (FAC ¶ 49). Plaintiffs contend that the combination "was made in furtherance of and intended to reinforce, the Defendants' unlawful conspiracy . . . by increasing USALCO's market power and eliminating the possibility of competition emerging . . . ." (FAC ¶ 50). Plaintiffs also argue that Defendant John Besson "profited handsomely" from the combination of the two firms. (FAC ¶ 51).

Defendant USALCO is a Maryland corporation with a principal place of business in Baltimore, Maryland. (FAC ¶ 48). USALCO manufactures and distributes Alum throughout North America. (FAC ¶ 48). After the combination of Delta Chemical and USALCO, USALCO "assumed Delta Chemical's rights and obligations under Delta Chemical's then-operative Alum supply contracts." (FAC ¶ 49). Thus, USALCO became the successor in interest to Delta Chemical's liabilities. (FAC 1149).

Brenntag Mid-South and Brenntag Southeast are wholly owned subsidiaries of Brenntag North America, which are Kentucky and North Carolina corporations with principal places of business in Kentucky and North Carolina, respectively. (FAC ¶¶ 54, 56). Brenntag North America is a Delaware corporation with a principal place of business in Reading, [*31] Pennsylvania. (FAC ¶ 55). Brenntag distributes Alum throughout the United States and is alleged to have participated in the conspiracy. (FAC ¶ 55).

Akron alleges that USALCO was part of a conspiracy to fix Alum prices, allocate consumers, and reduce competition amongst the members of the conspiracy. (Akron Compl. 115). In order to further and effectuate the conspiracy, Akron contends that USALCO met and communicated in secret to exchange confidential, competitive information regarding their business with other members of the conspiracy. (Akron Compl. ¶ 5). Those meetings and conversations resulted in agreements to: (1) "stay away" from each firm's historical customers, (2) track the bid and pricing histories of the co-conspirators for the purposes of rigging bids, (3) actually submit those rigged—or "throw away"—bids to intentionally lose the bid for a coconspirator's customer, (4) set price floors for the price of Alum, (5) compensate the losing firm where one of the other firms could not withdraw a bid that it was not supposed to win, (6) teach new employees how to figure out how to comply with the bid rigging arrangement, and (7) sell Alum to customers at non competitive rates. (Akron [*32] Compl. ¶¶ 5-6, 56-74).

The South Carolina Plaintiffs assert similar allegations against Defendants. For example, they point to an example from March 2005, where USALCO entered into a three-year contract with Grand Rapids, Michigan at a price of $149.52 per ton. (FAC ¶ 185(a)). The other two bidders were General Chemical and C&S Chemicals which submitted bids that were 25% and 55% higher than USALCO's, indicating a practice of "throw-away" bidding. (FAC ¶ 185(a)). On top of these anomalous bidding practices, a study of forty-seven United States drinking water utilities indicated an average 53% price increase over the preceding year from 2008 to 2009. (FAC ¶ 99). These stark price jumps can be seen in Brenntag's winning bid for a contract with GWSA in 2009. (FAC ¶ 244). Brenntag's bid—at $359.75 per ton of Alum—constituted a 94% increase in price from 2007. (FAC ¶ 244). Plaintiffs also contend that Defendants' bidding history with respect to Alum contracts was not "freight-logical," because Defendants did not bid (or submitted higher bids) on customers that were close to their production plants, which would have reduced shipping costs. (FAC ¶ 181-84).

"As a result of the conspiracy among [*33] Defendants," the Plaintiffs were allegedly "forced to pay supra-competitive prices for Alum." (FAC ¶ 264). The Charleston Plaintiffs, for example, saw their cost for Alum quadruple over a decade rising from $95.34 per ton in 1998 to $319.10 per ton in 2011. (FAC ¶ 264). Plaintiffs argue that Defendants "used non-public means of communication . . . to eliminate competition by, inter cilia, fixing prices, rigging bids, and allocating customers for Alum in the United States." (FAC ¶ 271). Moreover, Defendants allegedly "took additional affirmative acts of concealment, including ensuring that there were few written communications regarding their conspiracy and agreement;"<sup>4</sup> (FAC ¶ 282).

Accordingly, Plaintiffs assert the following contested claims: Conspiracy in Restraint of Trade in violation of the Sherman Act against all Defendants; Arrangements, Contracts, Agreements, Trusts and Combinations Adversely Affecting Competition or Price in violation of South Carolina Code Ann. § 39-3-10 against all Defendants; Common Law Fraud against Brenntag; Breach of Contract against Brenntag (by GWSA only); and Restitution, Disgorgement, and Unjust Enrichment against the Delta Defendants.<sup>5</sup>

Defendants now seek to dismiss Plaintiffs' complaints [*34] for lack of personal jurisdiction pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12\(b\)\(2\) and for failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted under Federal Rules of Civil Procedure 12\(b\)\(6\).

II. LEGAL STANDARD

A. 12(b)(2) Motion to Dismiss for Lack of Personal Jurisdiction

In a multi-district litigation such as this, the "transferee court can exercise personal jurisdiction to the same extent that the transferor court could." In re Auto. Refinishing Paint Antitrust Litig., 358 F.3d 288, 297 n.11 (3d Cir. 2004). In this case, that would be the District Court for the District of South Carolina.

Once a defendant files a motion to dismiss for lack of personal jurisdiction pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12\(b\)\(2\), the burden shifts to the plaintiff to prove that jurisdiction exists. In re Celotex Corp., 124 F.3d 619, 628 (4th Cir. 1997). Where, as here, there is no evidentiary hearing, a plaintiff need only establish a prima facie case of personal jurisdiction and the court must construe the facts and draw inferences in favor of the plaintiff. Id.

A federal court sitting in South Carolina has jurisdiction over parties to the extent provided under South Carolina state law. Gracious Living Corp. v. Colucci & Gallaher, PC, 216 F. Supp. 3d 662, 667 (D.S.C. 2016). "South Carolina's long-arm statute extends to the outer limits allowed by the Due Process Clause." Id. A district court sitting in South Carolina may therefore exercise personal jurisdiction over a non-resident defendant if the defendant has "certain minimum contacts [with [*35] South Carolina] such that the suit does not offend 'traditional notions of fair play and substantial justice.'" Id. (quoting Int'l Shoe Co. v. Washington, 326 U.S. 310, 320, 66 S. Ct. 154, 90 L. Ed. 95 (1945)).

A court's personal jurisdiction over a non-resident defendant is either specific or general. ESAB Grp. v. Centricut, Inc. 126 F.3d 617, 623-24 (4th Cir. 1997). General jurisdiction results from systematic and continuous contact between a non-resident defendant and the forum state. Helicopteros Nacionales de Colombia, S.A. v. Hall, 466 U.S. 408, 414, 104 S. Ct. 1868, 80 L. Ed. 2d 404 & nn. 8-9 (1984).<sup>6</sup> Specific jurisdiction over a defendant exists where the suit is related to the defendants conduct in the forum. Id.

The Fourth Circuit has established a three-part test for specific jurisdiction: first, the defendant must have purposefully availed itself of the privilege of conducting activities within the forum; second, the plaintiff's claims must arise out of those activities related to the forum; and third, the exercise of jurisdiction must be "constitutionally reasonable." Christian Sci. Bd. of Dirs. of First Church of Christ, Scientist v. Nolan, 259 F.3d 209, 216 (4th Cir. 2001).

B. Rule 12(b)(6) Motion to Dismiss for Failure to State a Claim

To withstand a motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim, a "complaint must contain sufficient factual matter, accepted as true, to 'state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face.'" Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 678, 129 S. Ct. 1937, 173 L. Ed. 2d 868 (2009) (quoting Bell Atl. Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 570, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007)). "A claim has facial plausibility when the plaintiff pleads factual content that allows the court to [*36] draw the reasonable inference that the defendant is liable for the misconduct alleged." Id. at 678 (citing Twombly, 550 U.S. at 556). "The plausibility standard is not akin to a 'probability requirement,' but it asks for more than a sheer possibility that a defendant has acted unlawfully." Id. (quoting Twombly, 550 U.S. at 556).

To determine the sufficiency of a complaint under Twombly and Iqbal in the Third Circuit, the Court must take three steps. "First, it must 'tak[e] note of the elements [the] plaintiff must plead to state a claim.' Second, it should identify allegations that, 'because they are no more than conclusions, are not entitled to the assumption of truth.' Finally, '[w]hen there are well-pleaded factual allegations, a court should assume their veracity and then determine whether they plausibly give rise to an entitlement for relief." Connelly v. Lane Constr. Coip., 809 F.3d 780, 787 (3d Cir. 2016) (quoting Iqbal, 556 U.S. at 675, 679) (citations omitted). "In deciding a Rule 12(b)(6) motion, a court must consider only the complaint, exhibits attached to the complaint, matters of public record, as well as undisputedly authentic documents if the complainant's claims are based upon these documents." Mayer v. Belichick, 605 F.3d 223, 230 (3d Cir. 2010). The Court can review the record of prior actions between the parties and take judicial notice of the same in considering a motion to [*37] dismiss. See Toscano v. Conn. Gen. Life Ins. Co., 288 F. App'x 36, 38 (3d Cir. 2008).

III. ANALYSIS

A. Personal Jurisdiction

USALCO and the Delta Defendants move to dismiss the South Carolina Plaintiffs' complaints for lack of personal jurisdiction pursuant to Rule 12(b)(2).

i. USALCO

---

<sup>6</sup> Plaintiffs are not asserting general jurisdiction, so the Court will not go into detail regarding that legal standard.

USALCO argues that this Court lacks personal jurisdiction over it because the South Carolina Plaintiffs' complaints "are devoid of any . . . factual allegations sufficient to establish personal jurisdiction" and instead "make two sweeping, generalized, bare and conclusory allegations that they fail to back up with supporting facts." (ECF No. 1143-2 at 7-8). USALCO contends that the South Carolina Plaintiffs have failed to establish jurisdiction by lumping all Defendants together in their allegations, and that the allegations specific to USALCO are vague and conclusory. (ECF No. 1143-2 at 8). The South Carolina Plaintiffs respond that USALCO is subject to personal jurisdiction on three grounds: (1) under the national contacts doctrine applicable in federal antitrust actions, (2) as a co-conspirator in the Alum conspiracy, and (3) under the doctrine of pendant personal jurisdiction for the state law claims. (ECF No. 1147 at 5-6).

The South Carolina Plaintiffs are correct that personal jurisdiction [*38] in federal antitrust lawsuits is assessed under the national contacts doctrine, which bases personal jurisdiction on a defendant's aggregate contacts with the United States where the relevant statute authorizes nationwide service of process. See e.g., ESAB Grp., 126 F.3d at 626 27 (applying the national contacts doctrine to a RICO suit, where Congress has authorized nationwide service of process); see also In re Auto. Refinishing Paint Antitrust Litig., 358 F.3d at 299 ("We hold that personal jurisdiction in federal antitrust litigation is assessed on the basis of a defendant's aggregate contacts with the United States as a whole."). This means that personal jurisdiction must comply with the due process requirements of the Fifth Amendment, which requires only that the South Carolina Plaintiffs show that USALCO had minimum contacts with the United States as a whole. ESAB Grp., 126 F.3d at 626-27. The South Carolina Plaintiffs allege that USALCO is a Maryland corporation, with a principal place of business in Maryland, that manufactured, distributed and sold Alum throughout the United States from January 1, 1997 through at least February 2011. (FAC ¶ 48). Plaintiffs also allege that USALCO has manufacturing facilities in Indiana, Louisiana, Maryland, and Ohio. (FAC ¶¶ 1, 48). Such contacts are sufficient to establish [*39] personal jurisdiction.<sup>7</sup> See In re Celotex Corp., 124 F.3d at 630 (holding that there is "no doubt" that a Delaware corporation with a principal place of business in New York has sufficient contacts with the United States so as not to offend the Due Process Clause of the Fifth Amendment). With respect to the state law antitrust claims, this Court has pendant jurisdiction over those claims, as those claims arise out of the "same nucleus of operative fact." ESAB Grp., 126 F.3d at 628.<sup>8</sup>

ii. The Delta Defendants

The Delta Defendants make the same arguments regarding lack of personal jurisdiction as USALCO, and the South Carolina Plaintiffs respond in the same manner with one exception: individual defendant John Besson. (ECF Nos. 1144-1 at 17-20; 1145-1 at 17-20; 1146-1 at 17-20; 1148 at 16-22). The South Carolina Plaintiffs allege that Delta Chemical is a Maryland Corporation, with a principal place of business in Maryland and that throughout the injury period, Delta Chemical sold Alum across the United States. (FAC ¶ 49). For the same reasons that these allegations established personal jurisdiction over USALCO, they establish personal jurisdiction over Delta Chemical for both the federal and state antitrust claims.

As to John Besson, the Delta Defendants argue that he is not subject to personal [*40] jurisdiction as an officer of Delta Chemical. (ECF No. 1144-1 at 19). Personal jurisdiction over an officer of a defendant corporation is established where there is a "showing of direct, personal involvement by the corporate officer in some decision or action which is causally related to the plaintiff's injury." Magic Toyota, Inc. v. Se. Toyota Distrib., Inc., 784 F. Supp. 306, 315 \(D.S.C. 1992\) (quoting Escude Cruz v. Ortho Pharm. Corp., 619 F.2d 902, 907 \(1st Cir. 1980\)). This Court <sup>7</sup> The Court need not analyze service of process and venue, as USALCO waived service of process, (ECF No. 804), and it does not challenge venue.

<sup>8</sup> USALCO also moves in the alternative for a more definite statement concerning the pleading of certain facts related to the Court's personal jurisdiction analysis. (ECF No. 1143-2 at 12-14). As the Court finds that the South Carolina Plaintiffs have established personal jurisdiction without relying on those facts, USALCO's motion for a more definite statement is denied as moot.

has already found that John Besson participated in the conspiracy, (ECF No. 1030 at 10, 12), and as such there has been a showing of Besson's direct and personal involvement that was causally related to the plaintiffs injury.

B. Failure to State a Claim

For the following reasons, Defendants' motions to dismiss Plaintiffs' complaints are denied.

i. Conspiracy in Restraint of Trade in Violation of the Sherman Act

To survive a motion to dismiss, Plaintiffs must prove two essential elements for a claim of conspiracy in restraint of trade in violation of the Sherman Act. Plaintiffs must show that (1) a contract, combination, or conspiracy existed and that (2) such contract, combination, or conspiracy "imposed an unreasonable restraint on trade." In re Ins. Brokerage Antitrust Litig., 618 F.3d 300, 315 (3d Cir. 2010) (quoting Toledo Mack Sales & Serv., Inc. v. Mack Trucks, Inc., 530 F.3d 204, 218 (3d Cir. 2008)).

Preliminarily, this Court has already found that, at least at the pleading stage, a conspiracy existed. (ECF [*41] No. 405 at 45-65). In addition to the specific examples of alleged bid-rigging and collusive behavior detailed above, Plaintiffs allege that Defendants conspired to suppress and eliminate competition in the sale and marketing of Alum. (FAC ¶ 1). Specifically, Plaintiffs allege that Defendants agreed to "rig bids and allocate customers for, and to fix, stabilize, inflate, and maintain the price of Alum sold to companies and municipal authorities in the United States from January 1, 1997 through at least February 2011 . . ." (FAC ¶ 1). Furthermore, Plaintiffs allege Defendants met to "discuss their respective Alum businesses," agreed to 'stay away' from each other's historical customers," submitted "intentionally high," or "throw away" bids, and withdrew winning bids "in cases where a bid was inadvertently submitted." (FAC ¶ 4). These allegations are sufficient to support a prima facie claim that Defendants engaged in a conspiracy which imposed an unreasonable restraint on the trade of Alum in violation of the Sherman Act. Hence, the claim must survive Defendants' motions to dismiss.

As to USALCO's argument that they have been improperly lumped together with other Defendants in the [*42] Akron Complaint, that argument fails. "If 'inferences can be fairly drawn from the behavior of the alleged conspirators' which indicate that they participated in the conspiracy, the Court should construe the Complaint 'liberally in the plaintiffs' favor' at the motion to dismiss stage and allow the case to proceed. In re Elec. Carbon Prods. Antitrust Litig., 333 F. Supp. 2d 303, 312 (D.N.J. 2004) (quoting Jung v. Assoc. of Am. Med. Colleges, 300 F. Supp. 2d 119, 157-58) (D.D.C. 2004)). Given the Court's preliminary findings about the existence of a conspiracy, (ECF No. 405 at 45-65), Akron's Complaint sufficiently ties USALCO to that wide-ranging conspiracy in that it alleges that USALCO manufactures and sells Alum in a market that is conducive to collusion and that has seen guilty pleas from other participants in that same market who are involved in this litigation, (Akron Compl. ¶¶ 3-4, 8-9, 27, 44-55).

Brenntag also makes a statute of limitations argument as well as one it claims is unique to its position as a distributor of Alum rather than a manufacturer. First, it argues that the Charleston Plaintiffs and Greenville's claims are barred by the Sherman Act's four-year statute of limitations. (ECF No. 1116-1 at 10-13).<sup>9</sup> Second, Brenntag argues that it had no rational economic incentive to participate in the conspiracy, and even if it did, its [*43] conduct complied with federal law. (ECF No. 1116-1 at 14-19).

The Sherman Act's statute of limitations would apply unless the Charleston Plaintiffs and Greenville have sufficiently pled fraudulent concealment. In re Elec. Carbon Prods., 333 F. Supp. 2d at 315. For fraudulent concealment to toll the statute of limitations, a plaintiff must plead "(1) wrongful concealment by the party raising the statute of limitations defense, resulting in (2) plaintiff's failure to discover the operative facts forming the basis of his

---

<sup>9</sup> It also argues that the Charleston Plaintiffs and Greenville's state antitrust claims are time-barred under that statute's three-year statute of limitations. (ECF No. 1116-1 at 13-14). For the same reasons that this Court finds that the Charleston Plaintiffs and Greenville's federal antitrust claims are not time-barred, their state antitrust claims are not time-barred.

cause of action during the limitations period (3) despite the exercise of due diligence." Dewey v. Volkswagen AG, 558 F. Supp. 2d 505, 523 \(D.N.J. 2008\).

The Court is satisfied that the Charleston Plaintiffs and Greenville have adequately pled fraudulent concealment. First, the Court has already found that the conspiracy was self-concealing and that the applicable statute of limitations may be tolled as to other defendants in the conspiracy. (ECF No. 405 at 38-40). The Charleston Plaintiffs and Greenville make very similar allegations to those that this Court already found established fraudulent concealment. They allege that Brenntag participated in a "self-concealing" conspiracy, that the participation in that conspiracy was secret, and that Brenntag included non-collusion provisions [*44] in their bid invitations to hide their conspiratorial acts. (FAC ¶¶ 270,276,277-79). These allegations, coupled with a detailed history of Brenntag's participation in the conspiracy, (FAC ¶¶ 241-55), are sufficient to establish a claim of fraudulent concealment. Brenntag's argument that the Charleston Plaintiffs and Greenville should have been on notice of the conspiracy because due diligence would have uncovered the obviously coordinated nature of their bids has already been rejected by this Court. (ECF No. 405 at 37-40).

As to Brenntag's economic incentive to participate in the conspiracy, the Charlotte Plaintiffs and Greenville point to emails that they allege show that Brenntag's profit was based on a percentage of the price charged for Alum. (FAC ¶¶ 250-52). As the Charlotte Plaintiffs and Greenville correctly indicate, it is a matter of mathematics that a fixed percentage of a higher sale price would result in higher profits for Brenntag, if that is indeed how the compensation structure was arranged. (ECF No. 1118 at 22). In any event, accepting those allegations as true at this stage, Brenntag had sufficient financial incentive to participate in the conspiracy. Nor was Brenntag's [*45] conduct "equally consistent with lawful conduct," as they allege, (ECF No. 1116-1 at 17). As explained above, the Charleston Plaintiffs and Greenville have made several allegations and attached several documents indicating Brenntag's participation in the conspiracy. (See, e.g., FAC ¶ 250 (purporting to show bid coordination between C&S Chemical and Brenntag); ECF No. 1118-3 at 2 (an internal GEO Specialty Chemicals report noting that they discussed with Brenntag their "concerns with competitive activity [they] have experienced at municipal accounts," and that Brenntag assured it would "work closely with GEO to eliminate the opportunity of taking any direct accounts of [theirs]")). Consistent with this Court's earlier decisions in this MDL, such allegations are sufficient to state a claim under the Sherman Act at the motion to dismiss stage.

ii. Arrangements, Contracts, Agreements, Trusts and Combinations Adversely Affecting Competition or Price in violation of South Carolina Code Ann. Ss 39-3-10

"South Carolina has long adhered to a policy of following federal precedents in matters relating to state trade regulation enforcement." Drs. Steuer and Latham, P.A. v. Nat'l Med. Enters., 672 F. Supp. 1489, 1521 \(D.S.C. 1987\), aff'd 846 F.2d 70 (4th Cir. 1988) (quoting In re Wiring Device Antitrust Litig., 489 F. Supp. 76, 78 \(E.D.N.Y. 1980\)). As such, claims brought under South [*46] Carolina's state antitrust law will be interpreted the same as claims brought under federal antitrust law. Id. Because the South Carolina Plaintiffs' claims pursuant to the Sherman Act are sufficient to survive Defendants' motions to dismiss, the South Carolina Plaintiffs' claims under South Carolina state antitrust claims must also survive.<sup>10</sup>

iii. Common Law Fraud as to Brenntag

Brenntag fails to brief the Court on the requirements of a common law fraud claim in South Carolina and instead only argues that Greenville and the Charleston Plaintiffs fail to meet the standard of Rule 9\(b\). (ECF No. 116-1 at 20-21). The Court must analyze Greenville and the Charleston Plaintiffs' fraud claim in the context of the relevant state law, so the elements of a South Carolina fraud claim are as follows: (1) a representation; (2) that is false; (3) and material; (4) made with either knowledge of or reckless disregard for its truth or falsity; (5) with the intent that it be acted upon; (6) where the hearer is ignorant of the representation's falsity; (7) relies on its truth; (8) had a right to rely on its truth; (9) and was proximately injured by that reliance. Ardis v. Cox, 314 S.C. 512, 431 S.E.2d 267, 269 \(S.C. 1993\).

<sup>10</sup> The City of Spartanburg brings its state antitrust claims under the antitrust laws of North Carolina. The Delta Defendants admit that this analysis is substantially the same as the federal antitrust analysis. (ECF No. 1146-1 at 31).

The Greenville and Charleston Plaintiffs allege [*47] that Brenntag "used deception," "made a misrepresentation," and "concealed, suppressed or omitted material facts in connection with the sale" of Alum. (FAC ¶ 319). Specifically, Defendants allegedly "represented" that Alum prices were offered based on a "competitive market" while participating in an unlawful conspiracy to "inflict monetary harm" on Plaintiffs. (FAC ¶¶ 320, 324). For example, Greenville and the Charleston Plaintiffs have set forth a number of communications that they allege show explicit bid coordination between Brenntag and C&S chemicals. (FAC ¶¶ 250-52). One such communication shows the vice president of C&S Chemicals directing the market manager of Brenntag Southeast to bid on the Greenville contract at $246.75. (FAC ¶ 250). Brenntag bid that amount, and C&S chemicals submitted a bid only 25 cents higher. (FAC 250). The Greenville and Charleston Plaintiffs also allege that Brenntag affirmatively concealed this conspiratorial behavior in their contracts, which contained sections affirming and ensuring compliance with federal, state, and local law, and assured the parties to the contract that the bids were not collusive. (FAC ¶¶ 277-79).

Greenville and the Charleston [*48] Plaintiffs' allegations, when taken as true, support the claims that Brenntag knowingly misrepresented the propriety of their Alum bidding practices with the purpose of defrauding Greenville and the Charleston Plaintiffs and that Greenville and the Charleston Plaintiffs reasonably relied upon Brenntag's representation and suffered a resulting compensable injury. Ardis, 431 S.E.2d at 269. Therefore, at this juncture, Plaintiffs' claims of common law fraud must survive Brenntag's motion to dismiss.

iv. Breach of Contract against Brenntag

Brenntag argues only that GSWSA's breach of contract claim fails for the same reasons that its antitrust claims fail: "no allegations plausibly suggest that Brenntag engaged in collusive conduct." (ECF No. 1116-1 at 21). As this Court has already found that there are allegations plausibly suggesting that Brenntag engaged in collusive conduct, Brenntag's argument fails and this Court will allow GSWSA's breach of contract claim to proceed.

v. Restitution, Disgorgement, and Unjust Enrichment

In South Carolina, to support a claim for unjust enrichment, a "plaintiff must show: (1) he conferred a non-gratuitous benefit on the defendant; (2) the defendant realized some value from the [*49] benefit; and (3) it would be inequitable for the defendant to retain the benefit without paying the plaintiff for its value." Inglese v. Beal, 403 S.C. 290, 742 S.E.2d 687, 691 \(S.C. Ct. App. 2013\). "The remedy for unjust enrichment is restitution." Id.

The South Carolina Plaintiffs assert that it would be "inequitable" for the Delta Defendants "to be allowed to retain the benefits" they "obtained from their illegal agreements, manipulative acts, and other unlawful conduct" at the expense of the South Carolina Plaintiffs. (FAC 338). Moreover, the South Carolina Plaintiffs aver that it would be equally inequitable for Defendant John Besson to be "allowed to retain the millions of dollars that he personally received . . . in connection with Delta Chemical's combination with USALCO" because of its alleged connection to the aforementioned conspiracy. (FAC ¶ 339). However, the Delta Defendants argue, and the South Carolina Plaintiffs do not contest, that there were no contracts between the Delta Defendants and the South Carolina Plaintiffs for the sale of Alum, and thus there was no benefit conferred. (ECF No. 1144-1 at 33).<sup>11</sup>

The question then is whether a claim for unjust enrichment can be based on the inflated prices that the South Carolina Plaintiffs paid [*50] for Alum and the allegedly excess profits that the Delta Defendants received, albeit not directly from the South Carolina Plaintiffs, based on the conspiracy as a whole. One court, analyzing state-law unjust enrichment claims (including South Carolina) in a nationwide antitrust class action at the motion to dismiss stage, collected substantial authority indicating that the benefit conferred on the defendant need not be direct. In re Auto. Parts Antitrust Litig., 50 F. Supp. 3d 869, 896-97 \(E.D. Mich. 2014\) (collecting cases and concluding that the "critical inquiry" is whether the relationship between the plaintiff's detriment and defendant's benefits "flow[s] from the challenged conduct" (quoting In re Cardizem CD Antitrust Litig., 105 F. Supp. 2d 618, 669 \(E.D. Mich. 2000\))); see also In re Auto. Parts Antitrust Litig., 12-md-2311, 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 90724, 2014 WL 2993753, at \*36 \(E.D. Mich. July 3, 2014\) (finding that where the plaintiffs alleged that they "conferred a benefit to [the defendants] because they paid more than the true value of [the product] as a result of [the defendants'] conspiracy," those allegations satisfied the elements of South Carolina law at the pleading stage for a claim of unjust enrichment); Daniel R. Karon, Undoing the Otherwise Pet, fect Crime — Applying Unjust Enrichment to Consumer Price-Fixing Claims, 108 W. Va. L. Rev. 395, 418-28 \(2005\) (surveying unjust enrichment claims in antitrust cases across the country and [*51] concluding that the plaintiff need not pay a direct benefit to the defendant).

As discussed above, the South Carolina Plaintiffs have sufficiently alleged the existence of the Delta Defendants' collusive behavior, which contributed to higher prices of Alum across the United States and increased profits for the Delta Defendants. As such, the South Carolina Plaintiffs have adequately pled a claim for unjust enrichment against the Delta Defendants.<sup>12</sup>

IV. CONCLUSION

For the aforementioned reasons, Defendants' motions to dismiss are denied. An appropriate Order accompanies this Opinion.

ORDER

This matter comes before the Court by way of several motions to dismiss by various Defendants in differing underlying actions. These motions are as follows:

- Defendant USALCO, LLC ("USALCO") moves to dismiss the City of Akron ("Akron")'s Complaint filed in Civil Action Number 18-9781 pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12\(b\)\(6\). (ECF No. 1100).<sup>1</sup>
- Defendants Brenntag Mid-South, Inc., Brenntag Southeast, Inc., and Brenntag North America (collectively "Brenntag") move to dismiss the Commissioners of Public Works of the City of Charleston (d.b.a Charleston [*52] Water System) and Grand Strand Water & Sewer Authority ("GSWSA") (collectively "the Charleston Plaintiffs")'s Complaint filed in Civil Action Number 18-3440 pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12\(b\)\(6\). (ECF No. 1116).
- Brenntag moves to dismiss the Commission of Public Works of the City of Greenville (d.b.a Greenville Water) ("Greenville")'s Complaint filed in Civil Action Number 18-11027 pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12\(b\)\(6\). (ECF No. 1117).
- USALCO moves to dismiss the Charleston Plaintiffs, Greenville, and the Commission of Public Works of the City of Spartanburg, the City of Winston-Salem, and the South Carolina Public Service authority (d.b.a Santee Cooper) (collectively "the Spartanburg Plaintiffs" and all together "the South Carolina Plaintiffs")'s Complaints

<sup>12</sup> The Delta Defendants also argue that for the South Carolina Plaintiffs to proceed on their unjust enrichment claim against John Besson, they must pierce the corporate veil. (ECF No. 1144-1 at 33-34). However, the cases cited by the Delta Defendants do not establish that this is the law of South Carolina. The Court declines to weigh in on what appears to be unsettled state law, particularly in light of the fact that it has already allowed unjust enrichment claims to proceed against John Besson based on nearly identical allegations, (ECF No. 1030 at 15).

filed in Civil Action Numbers 18-3440, 18-11027, and 18-9231 pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(b)(2). (ECF No. 1143).

- Delta Chemical Corporation and John D. Besson (the "Delta Defendants") move to dismiss the South Carolina Plaintiffs' Complaints filed in Civil Action Numbers 18-3440, 18-11027, and 18-9231 pursuant to Federal Rules of Civil Procedure 12(b)(2) and 12(b)(6). (ECF Nos. 1144-46).

For the reasons set forth in the Court's corresponding Opinion,

IT IS on this 11 day of March, 2019,

ORDERED that Defendants' motions to dismiss, (ECF Nos. 1100, [*53] 1116, 1117, 1143, and 1144-46), are hereby DENIED.

SO ORDERED.
