ORDER

Before the Court are Defendants' Amended Motion to Dismiss, filed July 30, 2015 (Clerk's Dkt. #64) and the responsive pleadings thereto. After reviewing the pleadings, relevant case law, as well as the entire case file, the Court issues the following order.

I. BACKGROUND

Plaintiffs Teladoc, Inc. and Teladoc Physicians, P.A. (jointly "Teladoc"), Kyon Hood, M.D. ("Dr. Hood"), and Emmette Clark, M.D. ("Dr. Clark") bring this action against fourteen members of the Texas Medical Board ("TMB") in their official capacities[1] challenging recent regulatory changes adopted by the TMB.

The TMB is a state agency [*4] "statutorily empowered to regulate the practice of medicine in Texas." 22 Tex. Admin. Code § 161.1. See also Tex. Occ. Code Ann. § 152.001 (TMB has "the power to regulate the practice of medicine," noting TMB replaces former Texas State Board of Medical Examiners). Teladoc describes itself as providing "telehealth services," utilizing telecommunication technologies to provide health care services outside the traditional models wherein medical professionals provides services in an in-person office or hospital setting. According to Plaintiffs, "[t]elehealth providers are generally available 24 hours per day, 365 days per year, for a fraction of the cost of a visit to a physician's office, urgent care center, or hospital emergency room." (Am. Compl. ¶ 2).

Teladoc's services are typically available to individuals whose employer has contracted with Teladoc for a per-member subscription fee. Individuals register with Teladoc either by telephone or online, creating a personal account, including information such as a medical history, physician, contact information, and medical records. Registrants may also upload photographs and medical records to Teladoc's system for inclusion with their medical history. (Id. ¶¶ 44-45).

Registrants seeking a physician consultation [*5] can log into Teladoc's web portal or call a toll-free number to place a request for consultation. Teladoc employs board certified physicians who are provided specialized training in treatment and diagnosis via telephone. Once a Teladoc physician accepts the request for consultation, the physician reviews the requesting registrant's information and medical records through the website, then calls the registrant by telephone and consults with him or her. Based on the medical records and history, reported symptoms, and other information the physician elicits during the consultation, the physician dispenses medical advice, including referring the registrant to a physician's office, dentist, or emergency room. When deemed appropriate, the physician can prescribe certain medications.[2] Following the consultation, the Teladoc physician enters notes and findings into the registrant's record, which is available to the registrant and, if the registrant chooses, is forwarded to his or her primary-care physician. (Id. ¶¶ 46, 69-71, 77-85).

[1] Plaintiffs originally named the TMB and fourteen of its members in both their individual and official capacities. The parties thereafter stipulated to the dismissal of the TMB and its members in their individual capacities, based on the parties' agreement that full relief could be obtained against the TMB's members in their official capacities. For convenience's sake, the Court refers herein to the members of the TMB collectively as "the TMB."

This action relates to the TMB's adoption of revisions to Chapters 174 and 190 of the Texas Administrative Code title which governs the TMB. Chapter 174 regulates the practice of telemedicine medical services in Texas. 22 Tex. Admin. Code § 174.1. Chapter 190 sets forth disciplinary guidelines for the practice of medicine in Texas. 22 Tex. Admin. Code § 190.1.

As originally adopted by the TMB in 2003, section 190.8(1)(L) ("Old Rule 190.8") prohibits prescription of any "dangerous drug or controlled substance" without first establishing a "proper professional relationship" which requires, in pertinent part, "establishing a diagnosis through the use of acceptable medical practices such as patient history, mental status examination, physical examination, and appropriate diagnostic and laboratory testing." 22 Tex. Admin. Code § 190.8(1)(L) (emphasis added). In 2004 the TMB adopted regulations specifically governing "telemedicine." 22 Tex. Admin. Code §§ 174.1, et seq.

Effective October 2010, the TMB amended its telemedicine regulations, restricting the definition of "telemedicine" to consultations using "advanced telecommunications technology that allows the distant site provider to see and hear the patient in real time." Id. § 174.2. The amended regulations also made clear that, to establish a "proper physician-patient relationship," [*7] telemedicine providers were required to conduct a physical examination of a patient. Id. § 174.8 ("New Rule 174"). In response to the amended regulations, Teladoc restricted the services it offered in Texas, specifically eliminating the option of video consultation. (Am. Compl. ¶¶ 100-02).

In June 2011, the TMB issued a letter to Teladoc, stating the language of Old Rule 190.8 required a "face-to-face" examination prior to prescription of a dangerous drug or controlled substance. Plaintiffs allege the letter was prompted by complaints from Texas physicians about competition from Teladoc. (Id. ¶¶ 104-05).

Teladoc sought legal recourse by bringing suit against the TMB in Texas state court. (Id. ¶ 106). In July 2011 the state court issued a temporary restraining order barring enforcement of the TMB's interpretation of Old Rule 190.8. (Id. ¶ 107). In December 2014 the court of appeals held the "TMB's pronouncements in its June 2011 letter are tantamount to amendments to the existing text," finding the TMB had effectively substituted "including" for the actual "such as" phrase. Teladoc, Inc. v. Texas Med. Bd., 453 S.W.3d 606, 620 (Tex. App.—Austin 2014, pet. filed). Thus, the court found the "TMB's pronouncements hardly 'track' [Old] Rule 190.8 . . . rather, they depart from and effectively change that text," rendering [*8] the June 2011 letter a procedurally invalid amendment to Old Rule 190.8. Id.

In response, the TMB issued an "emergency" rule on January 16, 2015, amending Old Rule 190.8. The emergency amendment mandated a "face-to-face visit or in-person evaluation" before a physician can issue a prescription. (Am. Compl. ¶ 111). Teladoc sought and obtained a temporary injunction of the emergency rule in Texas state court. (Id. ¶¶ 113-14). The TMB then engaged in a formal rulemaking, resulting in an April 10, 2015 vote by the TMB to adopt section 190.8(1)(L) ("New Rule 190.8") which sets forth practices the TMB deems to be violations of the Texas Medical Practices Act. According to the TMB, that new rule would require a face-to-face visit before a physician can issue a prescription to a patient, regardless of medical necessity. (Id. ¶ 115).

Plaintiffs filed this action on April 29, 2015, asserting Defendants have committed a violation of antitrust law, as well as the Commerce Clause of the Constitution in adopting New Rule 190.8 and New Rule 174. The TMB seeks to dismiss Plaintiffs' claims, arguing they are barred by the statute of limitations, the TMB is immune from antitrust liability, and Plaintiffs have failed to state an actionable claim under the Commerce Clause. The parties have filed responsive pleadings and [*9] the motion is now ripe for review.

[2] According to Teladoc, its physicians do not prescribe "DEA-controlled substances (including narcotics) or what are referred to as lifestyle drugs (i.e., Viagra, [*6] or diet pills)." (Am. Compl. ¶ 82).

II. STANDARD OF REVIEW

A federal court must dismiss an action "[w]henever it appears by suggestion of the parties or otherwise that the court lacks jurisdiction." Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(h)(3). Thus, lack of subject-matter jurisdiction may be raised at any time by any party, or by the court sua sponte. Bank One Texas v. United States, 157 F.3d 397, 403 (5th Cir. 1998); MCG, Inc. v. Great Western Energy Corp., 896 F.2d 170, 173 (5th Cir. 1990). However, the plaintiff bears the burden of establishing federal jurisdiction. Burge v. Parish of St. Tammany, 187 F.3d 452, 465-66 (5th Cir. 1999). See also Coury v. Prot, 85 F.3d 244, 248 (5th Cir. 1996) (presumption against subject matter jurisdiction must be rebutted by party bringing action to federal court). A motion to dismiss for lack of subject matter jurisdiction must be considered before any other challenge. See Steel Co. v. Citizens for Better Environment, 523 U.S. 83, 94-95, 118 S. Ct. 1003, 140 L. Ed. 2d 210 (1998) ("The requirement that jurisdiction be established as a threshold matter ... is inflexible and without exception"); Moran v. Kingdom of Saudi Arabia, 27 F.3d 169, 172 (5th Cir. 1994) (court must find jurisdiction before determining validity of claim). On a Rule 12(b)(1) motion, "the trial court is free to weigh the evidence and satisfy itself as to the existence of its power to hear the case." MDPhysicians & Assocs., Inc. v. State Board of Ins., 957 F.2d 178, 181 (5th Cir. 1992).

When evaluating a motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim under Rule 12(b)(6) the complaint must be liberally construed in favor of the plaintiff and all facts pleaded therein must be taken as true. Leatherman v. Tarrant Cnty. Narcotics Intelligence & Coordination Unit, 507 U.S. 163, 164, 113 S. Ct. 1160, 122 L. Ed. 2d 517 (1993); Baker v. Putnal, 75 F.3d 190, 196 (5th Cir. 1996). Although Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 8 mandates only that a pleading contain a "short and plain statement [*10] of the claim showing that the pleader is entitled to relief," this standard demands more than unadorned accusations, "labels and conclusions," "a formulaic recitation of the elements of a cause of action," or "naked assertion[s]" devoid of "further factual enhancement." Bell Atl. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 555, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007). Rather, a complaint must contain sufficient factual matter, accepted as true, to "state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face." Id. at 570. The court must initially identify pleadings that are no more than legal conclusions not entitled to the assumption of truth, then assume the veracity of well-pleaded factual allegations and determine whether those allegations plausibly give rise to an entitlement to relief. If not, "the complaint has alleged—but it has not 'show[n]'—'that the pleader is entitled to relief.'" Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 679, 129 S. Ct. 1937, 173 L. Ed. 2d 868 (2009) (quoting Fed. R. Civ. P. 8(a)(2)).

III. ANALYSIS

Defendants contend the claims asserted by Plaintiffs attacking New Rule 174 should be dismissed as barred by limitations. Defendants also maintain Plaintiffs' claim of an antitrust violation is barred by the doctrine of state action immunity. Finally, Defendants argue Plaintiffs have failed to state a claim under the Commerce Clause.

A. Statute of Limitations

Suits asserting antitrust violations under the Clayton Act are generally [*11] subject to a four year statute of limitations. 15 U.S.C. § 15b (action to enforce Clayton Act "shall be forever barred unless commenced within four years after the cause of action accrued"). The limitations period for a claim asserted under 42 U.S.C. § 1983 ("Section 1983") is determined by the state's personal injury limitations period. Whitt v. Stephens Cnty., 529 F.3d 278, 282 (5th Cir. 2008); Price v. City of San Antonio, 431 F.3d 890, 892 (5th Cir. 2005). In Texas it is two years. Tex. Civ. Prac. & Rem. Code Ann. § 16.003. The parties agree New Rule 174 took effect on October 17, 2010. Plaintiffs did not file this action until April 29, 2015, more than four years later. The TMB maintains each of Plaintiffs' claims attacking New Rule 174 are thus time barred.

As an initial matter, Plaintiffs point out that the TMB's assertion of limitations fails to account for all of the Plaintiffs. Specifically, they note that Dr. Hood first became licensed to practice medicine in 2014 and Dr. Clark did not begin practicing telemedicine through Teladoc until 2013. Plaintiffs correctly maintain neither would have had standing prior to beginning the practice of telemedicine to assert any injury from New Rule 174. See Price v. City of San Antonio, 431 F.3d 890, 893 (5th Cir. 2005) (cause of action under section 1983 accrues when plaintiff "knows or has reason to know of the injury which is the basis of the action."); Bourns, Inc. v. Raychem Corp., 331 F.3d 704, 711 (9th Cir. 2003) ("Only an actual competitor or one ready to be a competitor can suffer antitrust [*12] injury.").

The TMB suggests these facts are of no moment, arguing "[b]y plaintiffs' reasoning, a corporation can perpetually evade both limitations and laches by continuing to recruit new employees or contractors." (Def. Reply at 31).[3] But this argument merely buttresses Plaintiffs' point, that the TMB has focused only on Teladoc's claims, not those of the individual doctor plaintiffs. At a minimum, the TMB has failed to show limitations bars their claims.

Plaintiffs also argue the continuing violation doctrine acts to forestall the TMB's limitations argument. "Generally, a cause of action accrues and the statute begins to run when a defendant commits an act that injures a plaintiff's business." Rx.com v. Medco Health Sols., Inc., 322 F. App'x 394, 396 (5th Cir. 2009) (quoting Zenith Radio Corp. v. Hazeltine Research, Inc., 401 U.S. 321, 338, 91 S. Ct. 795, 28 L. Ed. 2d 77 (1971)) ("[I]f a [*13] plaintiff feels the adverse impact of an antitrust conspiracy on a particular date, a cause of action immediately accrues"). When a plaintiff alleges a continuous antitrust violation, suit may be brought within four years after the defendant "commits an additional overt act in furtherance of the antitrust conspiracy or commits an act that by its very nature is a continuing antitrust violation." Kaiser Alum. & Chem. Sales, Inc. v. Avondale Shipyards, Inc., 677 F.2d 1045, 1051 (5th Cir. 1982), Similarly, in a claim asserted under Section 1983, the continuing violation theory can relieve a plaintiff of showing that all of the defendant's conduct occurred within the limitations period, but only if the plaintiff can show "a series of related acts, one or more of which falls within the limitations period." Montgomery v. Louisiana, 46 Fed. Appx. 732 (5th Cir. 2002) (quoting Messer v. Meno, 130 F.3d 130, 134-135 (5th Cir. 1997)).

Plaintiffs point to their allegations of actions taken by Defendants between the adoption of New Rule 174 and the filing of this action as evidencing a continuing violation by Defendants. Specifically, Plaintiff allege the TMB's General Counsel sent a letter in June 2011 to Teladoc asserting a new interpretation of Old Rule 190.8, a letter which Plaintiffs assert was prompted by complaints from Texas doctors concerning competition from Teladoc. (Am. Compl. ¶¶ 104-05). Plaintiffs further allege the TMB [*14] thereafter sent letters to several of Teladoc's clients stating Teladoc was in violation of Old Rule 190.8, despite the stay of that interpretation issued in July 2011 by the Texas state court. (Id. ¶ 109). In addition, Plaintiffs allege Defendants adopted an invalid "emergency" amendment to Old Rule 190.8 in January 2015, before finally adopting New Rule 190.8 in April 2015. (Id. ¶¶ 111-19).

The TMB maintains the allegations do nothing more than suggest Plaintiffs suffered continuing effects from the adoption of New Rule 174. In an antitrust case, "[f]or statute of limitations purposes, . . . the focus is on the timing of the causes of injury, i.e., the defendant's overt acts, as opposed to the effects of the overt acts." Varner v. Peterson Farms, 371 F.3d 1011, 1019 (8th Cir. 2004) (quoting DXS, Inc. v. Siemens Med. Sys., Inc., 100 F.3d 462, 467 (6th Cir.1996)). Nor can a plaintiff use the continuing violation theory to resurrect claims alleging a civil rights violation "concluded in the past, even though its effects persist." McGregor v. La. State Univ. Bd. of Supervisors, 3 F.3d 850, 867 (5th Cir. 1993).

Plaintiffs, in contrast, characterize their allegations as a setting forth a continuous course of conduct by the TMB, aimed at interfering with Plaintiffs' ability to engage in telemedicine. The Court agrees this view more correctly describes Plaintiffs' claims here. This conclusion is supported by the fact that, according to Plaintiffs, [*15] the TMB began its course of conduct prior to adopting New Rule 174 by attempting to enforce a new reading of Old Rule 190.8, and when that attempt failed, continued its course of conduct by adopting the new rule.

Moreover, as the TMB admits, the question of limitations is not purely a matter of statutory proscription when solely equitable relief is sought. Rather, in such cases, courts apply the doctrine of laches, instead of the analogous limitations period. Kaiser Alum., 677 F.2d at 1057. See Solo v. SD-3C LLC, 751 F.3d 1081, 1084 (9th Cir. 2014), cert. denied, 135 S. Ct. 1733, 191 L. Ed. 2d 701 (2015) ("Because Plaintiffs seek only injunctive relief under federal law, their federal antitrust claim is subject to the equitable doctrine of laches and not the four-year statute of limitations in . . . the Clayton Act"). To establish that a cause of action is barred by laches, the defendant must show: (1) a delay in asserting the right or claim; (2) that the delay was not excusable; and (3) that there was undue prejudice to the defendant. Johnson v. Crown Enters., Inc., 398 F.3d 339, 344 (5th Cir. 2005). However, if the claim is brought outside the analogous limitations period, "the bare fact of delay creates a rebuttable presumption of prejudice" to the defendant. Kaiser Alum.. 677 F2d at 1057 (citing IT&T v. General Tel. & Elecs. Corp., 518 F.2d 913, 926 (9th Cir. 1975)).

[3] The TMB further suggests prior lack of standing is insufficient to prevent the application of limitations. No authority is cited for that proposition, however. Moreover, Dr. Hood lacked standing to attack the rules governing the practice of medicine in Texas prior to his licensure because he had not suffered any injury prior to that date. The TMB provides no explanation as to how his ability to seek relief for his alleged injury could have expired prior to his suffering the injury.

The TMB contends the presumed prejudice from Plaintiffs' delay is sufficient to justify the invocation [*16] of laches to bar their claims. Plaintiffs point out, however, that the Fifth Circuit has stated "[t]he concept of undue prejudice, an essential element in a defense of laches, is normally inapplicable when the relief is prospective." Envtl. Defense Fund v. Marsh, 651 F.2d 983, 1005 n.32 (5th Cir. 1981). See Danjaq LLC v. Sony Corp., 263 F.3d 942, 959-60 (9th Cir. 2001) ("almost by definition, the plaintiff's past dilatoriness is unrelated to a defendant's ongoing behavior that threatens future harm"); Lyons P'ship, L.P. v. Morris Costumes, Inc., 243 F.3d 789, 799 (4th Cir. 2001) ("A prospective injunction is entered only on the basis of current, ongoing conduct that threatens future harm. Inherently, such conduct cannot be so remote in time as to justify the application of the doctrine of laches."). In addition, Plaintiffs suggest it would not disserve the public interest to permit their attack to proceed. This suggestion is supported by the fact that in seeking, and obtaining, a preliminary injunction, Plaintiffs presented evidence that consumers will face higher prices for medical care, as well as reduced access as a result of the TMB's restrictions on telemedicine. The TMB provides no rebuttal to these arguments. Accordingly, the Court concludes application of laches is not justified on the facts of this case at this point. The TMB's motion to dismiss on the basis of limitations is, therefore, [*17] properly denied.

B. State Action Immunity[4]

The TMB next contends Plaintiffs' antitrust claim is barred by the doctrine of state action immunity. States are generally permitted to regulate their economies in ways they see fit, including "impos[ing] restrictions on occupations, confer[ring] exclusive or shared rights to dominate a market, or otherwise limit[ing] competition to achieve public objectives." N.C. State Bd. of Dental Exam'rs v. FTC, 135 S. Ct. 1101, 1109, 191 L. Ed. 2d 35 (2015). Thus, in most situations "federal antitrust laws are subject to supersession by state regulatory programs." F.T.C. v. Ticor Title Ins. Co., 504 U.S. 621, 632, 112 S. Ct. 2169, 119 L. Ed. 2d 410 (1992). As a result, the Supreme Court has "interpreted the antitrust laws to confer immunity on anticompetitive conduct by the States when acting in their sovereign capacity." Id. at 1110 (citing Parker v. Brown, 317 U.S. 341, 350-51, 63 S. Ct. 307, 87 L. Ed. 315 (1942)). However, the Supreme Court has also made clear that so-called "Parker immunity" is afforded only if two requirements are satisfied: "first that 'the challenged restraint . . . be one clearly articulated and affirmatively expressed as state policy,' and second that 'the policy . . . be actively supervised by the State.'" FTC v. Phoebe Putney Health Sys., 568 U.S. __, __, 133 S. Ct. 1003, 1010, 185 L. Ed. 2d 43 (2013) (quoting California Retail Liquor Dealers Ass'n v. Midcal Aluminum, Inc., 445 U.S. 97, 105, 100 S. Ct. 937, 63 L. Ed. 2d 233 (1980)). The Supreme Court has further [*18] cautioned that "given the fundamental national values of free enterprise and economic competition that are embodied in the federal antitrust laws, 'state-action immunity is disfavored.'" Phoebe Putney, 133 S. Ct. at 1010 (quoting Ticor Title, 504 U.S. at 636).

1. Burden of Proof

As an initial matter, the parties disagree concerning which of them bears the burden of establishing the applicability of state action immunity. The TMB argues the doctrine is jurisdictional. The TMB thus maintains Plaintiffs bear the burden to establish the immunity does not deprive this Court of jurisdiction. Plaintiffs contend the doctrine is an affirmative defense, therefore the TMB bears the burden to show its applicability.

Clearly, the doctrine enunciated in Parker is considered one of immunity. See N.C. State Bd. of Dental Exam'rs, 135 S. Ct. 1101 (repeatedly referring to "Parker immunity"); Acoustic Sys., Inc. v. Wenger Corp., 207 F.3d 287, 293 (5th Cir. 2000) (referring to state action doctrine as "immunity from suit"). But see Surgical Care Ctr., L.C. v. Hospital Serv. Dist. No. 1, 171 F.3d 231, 234 (5th Cir. 1999) (en banc) (noting "Parker immunity" is "inapt description" as it is "more accurately a strict standard for locating the reach of the Sherman Act"). Merely labeling a doctrine one of immunity, however, does not necessarily render it a matter of jurisdiction. For example, qualified immunity, while conferring [*19] immunity from suit, is an affirmative defense which must be established by the defendant. See Crawford-El v. Britton, 523 U.S. 574, 586, 118 S. Ct. 1584, 140 L. Ed. 2d 759 (1998) (qualified immunity is affirmative defense and burden of pleading it rests with the defendant); Pasco ex rel. Pasco v. Knoblauch, 566 F.3d 572, 577 (5th Cir. 2009) ("As an affirmative defense, qualified immunity must be pled and proved by the defendant."). More to the point, in application state action immunity has been treated as a defense to be proved by the purported state actor. See, e.g., Ticor Title, 504 U.S. at 625 (state action immunity was "[o]ne of the principal defenses" asserted); Town of Hallie v. City of Eau Claire, 471 U.S. 34, 38-39, 105 S. Ct. 1713, 85 L. Ed. 2d 24 (1985) ("municipalities must demonstrate" that their actions were taken pursuant to state policy to obtain immunity); Patrick v. Burget, 486 U.S. 94, 101, 108 S. Ct. 1658, 100 L. Ed. 2d 83 (1988) (concluding respondents had not succeeded in showing active supervision required to result in state action immunity); Acoustic Sys., 207 F.3d at 294 (state action immunity "provides only a defense against liability"); Yeager's Fuel v. Pennsylvania Power & Light Co., 22 F.3d 1260, 1266 (3d Cir. 1994) ("Cases since Parker, however, clarify that state action immunity is an affirmative defense as to which [defendant] bears the burden of proof"); Nugget Hydroelectric, L.P. v. Pacific Gas & Elec. Co., 981 F.2d 429, 434 (9th Cir. 1992) (party claiming immunity must demonstrate that its conduct satisfies requirements of state action immunity). Accordingly, the Court concludes the TMB bears the burden of showing it is entitled to the protection of state action immunity.

2. Supervision

The parties [*20] agree that a showing of active state supervision is required to obtain the protection of the state action doctrine. They disagree as to whether such supervision exists over the TMB.

An important backdrop to the case is the Supreme Court's most recent decision concerning state action immunity. At issue in that case was whether the North Carolina State Board of Dental Examiners ("the Board") was entitled to the protection of the doctrine. As in this case, the Board was largely composed of market participants. The Board argued its members were invested by North Carolina with the power of the State and thus, the Board's actions were protected by state action immunity. The Supreme Court rejected that argument, and made clear that a "nonsovereign actor controlled by active market participants—such as the Board—enjoys Parker immunity only if" it was subject to active state supervision and the challenged restraint was an expression of state policy. N.C. State Bd. of Dental Exam'rs, 135 S. Ct. at 1110 (emphasis added). While the Supreme Court did not need to decide whether state supervision existed because the Board made no claim that it was actively supervised, the Court did address the issue, stating:

> It suffices to note that the inquiry regarding [*21] active supervision is flexible and context-dependent. Active supervision need not entail day-to-day involvement in an agency's operations or micromanagement of its every decision. Rather, the question is whether the State's review mechanisms provide "realistic assurance" that a nonsovereign actor's anticompetitive conduct "promotes state policy, rather than merely the party's individual interests."
> The Court has identified only a few constant requirements of active supervision: The supervisor must review the substance of the anticompetitive decision, not merely the procedures followed to produce it; the supervisor must have the power to veto or modify particular decisions to ensure they accord with state policy; and the "mere potential for state supervision is not an adequate substitute for a decision by the State." Further, the > state supervisor may not itself be an active market participant. In general, however, the adequacy of supervision otherwise will depend on all the circumstances of a case.

N.C. State Bd. of Dental Exam'rs , 135 S. Ct. at 1116-17 (internal citations omitted). In this case, the TMB argues it is subject to active state supervision because its decisions are subject to judicial review by the courts of Texas and the State [*22] Office of Administrative Hearings ("SOAH"), as well as review by the Texas Legislature.

As to the first, Texas law permits a party adversely affected by an agency rule to challenge "the validity or applicability of the rule" by filing a challenge in a Travis County district court. Tex. Gov't Code Ann. § 2001.038. That review, however, is limited to inquiring whether the decision exceeded the statutory authority granted to the agency. See Harlingen Family Dentistry, P.C. v. Tex. Health & Human Servs. Comm'n, 452 S.W.3d 479, 481-82 (Tex. App.—Austin 2014, pet. dism'd) ("An agency's rules must comport with the agency's authorizing statute"); Tex. Orthopaedic Ass'n v. Tex. State Bd. of Podiatric Med. Exam'rs, 254 S.W.3d 714, 719-20 (Tex. App.—Austin 2008, pet. denied) ("when determining whether an agency's rule is valid, we must ascertain whether the rule is contrary to the relevant governing statutes, or whether the rule is in harmony with the general objectives of the statutes involved") (citations omitted). See also Patel v. Tex. Dep't of Licensing & Regulation, 469 S.W.3d 69, 80 (Tex. 2015) (plaintiffs "cannot attack the constitutionality of the statutes pursuant to Section 2001.038 of the APA").

The TMB maintains the review effectively permits an evaluation of whether a contested rule is consistent with state policy because state laws are the embodiment of state policy. But courts have made clear the review of the validity of a rule does not permit evaluation of the policy underlying the rule. See Office of Pub. Util. Counsel v. PUC of Tex., 104 S.W.3d 225, 234 (Tex. App.—Austin 2003, no pet.) (noting court's role "in assessing a rule's validity is to carry forward [*23] statutory directives, rather than weigh the wisdom of a particular policy"); Gulf Coast Coalition of Cities v. PUC, 161 S.W.3d 706, 712 (Tex. App.—Austin 2005, no pet.) ("This Court does not decide matters of policy; we are limited to evaluating whether the Commission acted contrary to the statute"). In contrast, the Supreme Court has made clear that to qualify as active supervision "the supervisor must have the power to veto or modify particular decisions to ensure they accord with state policy." N.C. State Bd. of Dental Exam'rs, 135 S. Ct. at 1116. And the TMB has not pointed to any example of judicial review which rejected the validity of a rule on the ground it did not "accord with state policy." In addition, the judicial review on which the TMB relies merely permits a court to determine a rule is invalid. It does not, therefore, meet the Supreme Court's mandate that "the supervisor must have the power to veto or modify particular decisions to ensure they accord with state policy. Id. (emphasis added).

The TMB also, in a footnote, suggests judicial review under two other sections of the Texas Government Code codifying Texas' version of the Administrative Procedures Act ("APA") is sufficient to constitute active supervision. Under those sections, an agency rule is "voidable" if it fails to comply with the procedural requirements [*24] of the APA, including failure to include a "reasoned justification for the rule as adopted" which "demonstrates in a relatively clear and logical fashion that the rule is a reasonable means to a legitimate objective." Tex. Gov't Code Ann. §§ 2001.033 & 2001.035. But the Supreme Court has made clear that the "supervisor must review the substance of the anticompetitive decision, not merely the procedures followed to produce it." N.C. State Bd. of Dental Exam'rs, 135 S. Ct. at 1116. See Patrick, 486 U.S. at 104 (finding judicial review, if it existed, was limited to whether reasonable procedure afforded and plaintiff doctor's conduct posed threat to patient safety and thus did not satisfy active supervision). And the reasoned justification requirement, as the TMB itself points out, amounts to little more than a certification that "the rule, as adopted, has been reviewed by legal counsel and found to be a valid exercise of the agency's legal authority." Tex. Gov't Code Ann. § 2001.033. This adds little to the review under section 2001.038 which the Court has found insufficient to constitute active supervision.

The TMB further maintains it is subject to active supervision because the disciplinary actions it takes are subject to judicial review. Texas law grants the TMB the authority to issue a cease and desist order prohibiting a person from engaging [*25] in an activity the TMB believes violates a rule adopted by the TMB. Tex. Occ. Code Ann. § 165.052(a). "If after the issuance of a cease and desist order the individual wishes to appeal the entry of the order, the individual may file a petition" in state district court. 22 Tex. Admin. Code § 187.83(f). Further, "[a] person whose license to practice medicine has been revoked or who is subject to other disciplinary action by the board may appeal to a Travis County district court." Tex. Occ. Code Ann. § 164.009.

Both appeals are governed by section 2001.174 of the Texas Government Code. See *Brooks v. Texas Med. Bd., 2015 Tex. App. LEXIS 6142, 2015 WL 3827327, at 2 (Tex. App.—Austin June 18, 2015, no pet.) (review of cease and desist hearing conducted by TMB); *Rodriguez-Aguero v. Texas Med. Bd., 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 3220, 2010 WL 1730023, at 3 (Tex. App.—Austin Apr. 30, 2010, no pet.) (review of order revoking license to practice). Under that provision, the court > shall reverse or remand the case for further proceedings if substantial rights of the appellant have been prejudiced because the administrative findings, inferences, conclusions, or decisions are:

> (A) in violation of a constitutional or statutory provision;
> (B) in excess of the agency's statutory authority;
> (C) made through unlawful procedure;
> (D) affected by other error of law;
> (E) not reasonably supported by substantial evidence considering the reliable and probative evidence in the record as a whole; or
> (F) arbitrary or capricious [*26] or characterized by abuse of discretion or clearly unwarranted exercise of discretion.

Tex. Gov't Code Ann. § 2001.174. As with the other provisions cited above, the review available under this section is limited, and fails to confer on the reviewing court a method for looking to whether the decision of the TMB is "in accord with state policy." Nor is the reviewing court permitted to modify any decision, but rather is limited to reversing or remanding the TMB's decision. See R.R. Comm'n of Tex. v. Torch Operating Co., 912 S.W.2d 790, 792 (Tex. 1995) (review under section 2001.174 "is a limited standard of review that gives significant deference to the agency" and "does not allow a court to substitute its judgment for that of the agency"). Significantly, the TMB does not cite to any case supporting its view that this type of review constitutes active supervision, while Plaintiffs cite to a string of cases concluding the opposite. See, e.g., Patrick, 486 U.S. at 104-05 (review limited to determining if board followed reasonable procedure and sufficient evidence existed to find terminated physician's conduct threatened patients "falls short of satisfying the active supervision requirement"); Pinhas v. Summit Health, Ltd., 894 F.2d 1024, 1030 (9th Cir. 1989) (judicial review evaluating "if the decision was substantively rational, lawful, not contrary to established public policy and the proceedings [*27] were fair" under which "court may not substitute a judgment for that of the governing board even if it disagrees with the board's decision" not active supervision); Shahawy v. Harrison, 875 F.2d 1529, 1535-36 (11th Cir. 1989) (where "courts merely review the board's decisions for procedural error and insufficient evidence" state did not actively supervise board).

Finally, the TMB argues the Texas Legislature exercises sufficient oversight to constitute active supervision. According to the TMB, the oversight consists of the "sunset review" process and a provision requiring the legislature to be notified of proposed rule changes.

As to the first, under sunset review, a state agency is evaluated to "determin[e] whether a public need exists for the continuation of a state agency" and the legislature thereafter simply votes whether to "continue the agency." Tex. Gov't Code Ann. §§ 325.011 & 325.015. Plaintiffs point out the last sunset review conducted of the TMB was in 2005. The rules challenged in this lawsuit were adopted well after that review, and the next review will not be conducted until 2017. Further, the TMB itself admits that the Sunset Commission does not have the power to veto or modify any rule adopted by the TMB.

As to the second, Texas law requires that every proposed state agency [*28] rule be referred by the presiding officer of each house "to the appropriate standing committee for review before the rule is adopted." Tex. Gov't Code Ann. § 2001.032(a). The standing committee is authorized simply to "send to a state agency a statement supporting or opposing adoption of a proposed rule." Tex. Gov't Code Ann. § 2001.032(c). Clearly absent is any authority to veto or modify the rule. Plaintiffs maintain, even in combination, this purported legislative review thus falls well short of the active supervision required.

The TMB suggests Plaintiffs have mischaracterized the relevant inquiry. The TMB contends legislative review need only put in place a system that provides "realistic assurance" that state regulators overseeing a profession to which they belong will promote state policy rather than their private professional interests. But the Supreme Court has made abundantly clear that the "mere presence of some state involvement or monitoring does not suffice." Patrick, 486 U.S. at 101. Rather, active supervision > requires that state officials have and exercise power to review particular anticompetitive acts of private parties and disapprove those that fail to accord with state policy. Absent such a program of supervision, there is no realistic assurance that a private [*29] party's anticompetitive conduct promotes state policy, rather than merely the party's individual interests.

Id. See also 324 Liquor Corp. v. Duffy, 479 U.S. 335, 345, n.7, 107 S. Ct. 720, 93 L. Ed. 2d 667 (1987) (periodic reexamination by state legislature of proposals to alter liquor pricing system did not constitute active supervision because it failed to "exert[] any significant control over" terms of restraint). Accordingly, the Court finds the TMB has failed to show the active supervision required to merit dismissal on the basis of state action immunity.

3. Clear Articulation

Plaintiffs also contend the TMB is not entitled to claim state action immunity because it has failed to show the challenged rules were enacted pursuant to a clearly articulated state policy. To satisfy the clear-articulation test, the "anticompetitive effect" in dispute should be the "foreseeable result of what the State authorized." United Nat'l Maint., Inc. v. San Diego Convention Ctr., Inc., 766 F.3d 1002, 1010 (9th Cir. 2014) cert. denied, 135 S. Ct. 980, 190 L. Ed. 2d 835 (2015). The statutory authority need not "explicitly permit[] the displacement of competition," rather, it is enough, "if suppression of competition is the 'foreseeable result' of what the statute authorizes." City of Columbia v. Omni Outdoor Advert., Inc., 499 U.S. 365, 372-73, 111 S. Ct. 1344, 113 L. Ed. 2d 382 (1991).

As the Court has concluded the TMB has failed to show its adoption of the challenged rules is subject to active state supervision, this second requirement [*30] of state action immunity need not be addressed.

C. Dormant Commerce Clause

Plaintiffs maintain both New Rule 174 and New Rule 190.8 violate the Commerce Clause because they discriminate against physicians who are licensed in Texas, but are physically located out of state. The "negative" or so-called "dormant" aspect of the Commerce Clause prohibits "economic protectionism—that is, regulatory measures designed to benefit in-state economic interests by burdening out-of-state competitors." Dep't of Revenue of Ky. v. Davis, 553 U.S. 328, 337-38, 128 S. Ct. 1801, 170 L. Ed. 2d 685 (2008). The Supreme Court has made clear "[t]ime and again," that state laws violate the Commerce Clause if they mandate "differential treatment of in-state and out-of-state economic interests that benefits the former and burdens the latter." Granholm v. Heald, 544 U.S. 460, 472, 125 S. Ct. 1885, 161 L. Ed. 2d 796 (2005) (quoting Oregon Waste Sys., Inc. v. Dep't of Envt'l Quality, 511 U.S. 93, 99, 114 S. Ct. 1345, 128 L. Ed. 2d 13 (1994)).

The TMB argues Plaintiffs' Commerce Clause claim fails for several reasons. First, they suggest such a claim is not cognizable under Section 1983. However, the Supreme Court rejected that argument more than twenty years ago, clearly holding a claim based on the Commerce Clause could be brought under Section 1983. Dennis v. Higgins, 498 U.S. 439, 451, 111 S. Ct. 865, 112 L. Ed. 2d 969 (1991). See Adar v. Smith, 639 F.3d 146, 161 n.9 (5th Cir. 2011) (noting in Dennis v. Higgins, "the Court held that violations of the commerce clause may be redressed by § 1983.").

The TMB also suggests Plaintiffs' Commerce Clause claim should be dismissed because it is contrary to their claim of an antitrust violation. The TMB points out that Plaintiffs' antitrust claim rests [*31] on their ability to show the TMB was not subject to active state supervision, but their Commerce Clause claim requires a showing that the TMB is a state actor. According to the TMB, those two arguments are irreconcilable.

The Court disagrees. In pertinent part, Texas law provides that "[t]he Texas Medical Board is an agency of the executive branch of state government with the power to regulate the practice of medicine." Tex. Occ. Code Ann. § 152.001(a). This statement clearly indicates the TMB acts on behalf of the state. Plaintiffs correctly point out that the question of immunity from antitrust liability rests on a different determination. That is, whether the TMB is subject to active state supervision in its decisions which have an anti-competitive effect. In contrast, liability under Section 1983 requires only a showing that the TMB is a state actor. Accordingly, Plaintiffs' Commerce Clause claim need not be dismissed on this basis.[5]

Finally, the TMB maintains Plaintiffs cannot establish more than "an indirect burden on interstate commerce" which does not violate the Commerce Clause. Dickerson v. Bailey, 336 F.3d 388, 396 (5th Cir. 2003). The Fifth Circuit has explained:

> A statute violates [*32] the dormant Commerce Clause where it discriminates against interstate commerce either facially, by purpose, or by effect. If the statute impermissibly discriminates, then it is valid only if the state "can demonstrate, under rigorous scrutiny, that it has no other means to advance a legitimate local interest." If the statute does not discriminate, then the statute is valid unless the burden imposed on interstate commerce is "clearly excessive" in relation to the putative local benefits.

Allstate Ins. Co. v. Abbott, 495 F.3d 151, 160 (5th Cir. 2007) (internal citations omitted).

As Plaintiffs point out, both New Rule 174 and New Rule 190.8 require a physician to provide an in-person physical exam of a patient to create a relationship with that patient. They maintain this requirement constitutes intentional discrimination against physicians located out of Texas and cannot withstand the strict scrutiny applicable to such regulations. Plaintiffs concede the regulation is facially neutral, but contend the regulation is nonetheless subject to rigorous scrutiny because, even though it does "not in explicit terms seek to regulate interstate commerce, it does so nonetheless by its practical effect and design." C & A Carbone, Inc. v. Town of Clarkstown, 511 U.S. 383, 394, 114 S. Ct. 1677, 128 L. Ed. 2d 399 (1994). The TMB, in turn, contends the challenged rules are not discriminatory, and [*33] thus not subject to rigorous scrutiny.[6] The TMB further maintains the rules withstand the lower level of scrutiny as Plaintiffs have not alleged facts sufficient to shown any burden imposed is "clearly excessive" in relation to the local benefits.

According to the TMB, the new rules are not discriminatory because "a Teladoc physician physically located in San Antonio advising a user in Dallas is no less inconvenienced by the requirement than a Teladoc physician in Oklahoma City." (Def. Mot. at 33). Plaintiffs respond by citing cases holding the mere fact that a regulation burdens some in-state commerce, as well as interstate commerce, does not insulate it from a Commerce Clause challenge. See C & A Carbone, 511 U.S. at 391 (ordinance requiring processing of waste to be performed within limits of town "is no less discriminatory because in-state or in-town processors are also covered [*34] by the prohibition"); Dean Milk Co. v. City of Madison, 340 U.S. 349, 354 n.4, 71 S. Ct. 295, 95 L. Ed. 329 (1951) (striking down ordinance requiring all milk in city to be pasteurized within five miles of city lines, finding it was "immaterial that Wisconsin milk from outside the Madison area [was] subjected to the same proscription as that moving in interstate commerce"); *Six Kingdoms Enters., LLC v. City of El Paso, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 2114, 2011 WL 65864, at 8 (W.D. Tex. Jan.

[5] In addition, the Court notes that, even if the theories are contradictory, a litigant is permitted to offer alternative theories of liability.

[6] It is worth noting that the Fifth Circuit has characterized "the jurisprudence in the area of the dormant Commerce Clause [as], quite simply, a mess," based on the Supreme Court's admitted failure to "produce a readily discernable standard for distinguishing between statutes that have discriminatory effects and those that merely create incidental burdens." Churchill Downs Inc. v. Trout, 589 F. App'x 233, 235 (5th Cir. 2014) (citing GMC v. Tracy, 519 U.S. 278, 298 n.12, 117 S. Ct. 811, 136 L. Ed. 2d 761 (1997)).

10, 2011) (striking down ordinance regulating sale price of puppies, finding "[w]hile it is true that the low price also likely thwarts the sale of pets in El Paso from other parts of Texas, this does not change the fact that the ordinance discriminates against interstate commerce.").

Plaintiffs further argue, even if the challenged rules are not viewed as discriminatory in effect and design, the rules cannot withstand a Commerce Clause challenge under even the lesser standard. In support, Plaintiffs point to their allegations that Teladoc's business model, including obtaining and retaining national clients, depends on being able to provide telehealth in Texas without the requirement of conducting an in-person physical exam before treating patients. (Am. Compl. ¶ 144). Plaintiffs have further alleged the challenged rules do not provide local benefits because the current regulatory scheme mandates that physicians abide by standards of [*35] care which dictate when an in-person physical exam is necessary. Further, they have alleged that the current standard of care permits a physician to provide "on-call" services to patients of other physicians without an in-person physical exam. (Id. ¶¶ 137-38). Finally, Plaintiffs have alleged the challenged rules are affirmatively harmful to public health because they reduce access to affordable and convenient treatment. (Id. ¶¶ 129-34).

The Court finds Plaintiffs' allegations sufficient at this early stage of the litigation. Resolution of Plaintiffs' Commence Clause challenge is "one of degree," requiring the Court to determine "the nature of the local interest involved, and [] whether it could be promoted as well with a lesser impact on interstate activities." Pike v. Bruce Church, Inc., 397 U.S. 137, 142, 90 S. Ct. 844, 25 L. Ed. 2d 174 (1970). This inquiry is inherently fact-intensive. See Colon Health Centers of Am., LLC v. Hazel, 733 F.3d 535, 546 (4th Cir. 2013) (reversing dismissal of dormant Commerce Clause claim because "[t]he Pike inquiry, like the discrimination test, is fact-bound" and declining to "attempt to forecast what further investigation may demonstrate."). Accordingly, the Court declines to dismiss Plaintiffs' Commerce Clause claim at this time.

IV. CONCLUSION

Accordingly, the Court hereby DENIES Defendants' Amended Motion to Dismiss (Clerk's Dkt. #64).

Opinion

ORDER Re: Plaintiff's Motion for Summary Judgment, or, in the Alternative, Partial Summary Judgment [57]

Currently before the Court is Plaintiff Ford Motor Company's ("Plaintiff") Motion for Summary Judgment, or, in the Alternative, Partial Summary Judgment [57] ("Motion").

The Court, having reviewed all papers submitted and pertaining to Plaintiff's Motion [57], NOW FINDS AND RULES AS FOLLOWS: The Court GRANTS Plaintiff's Motion for Summary Judgment [57] in its entirety.

I. FINDINGS OF FACT

1. Plaintiff Ford, a Delaware corporation with its principal place of business in Michigan, manufactures new motor vehicles bearing the Ford and Lincoln brand names. Joint Stip. Facts ("Stip. Facts") PP 1, 6, ECF No. 43 (undisputed).[1]

2. Defendant Titan Enterprise Inc. ("Defendant") is a California corporation with its principal place of business in California. Id. at P 2 (undisputed).

3. The Court has subject matter jurisdiction over this Action under 28 U.S.C. § 1332, and personal jurisdiction over Defendant. Id. at PP 3-4 (undisputed).

4. Venue is proper in the Central District of California pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1391(a). Id. at P 5 (undisputed).

3. Plaintiff offers incentive programs to qualified individuals and businesses to, among [*3] other things, encourage high-volume purchases of Ford vehicles. Id. at P 7 (undisputed).

4. One such incentive program is Plaintiff's Competitive Price Allowance Program ("CPA"), through which Plaintiff provides discounts to qualified high-volume purchasers of Ford vehicles through the Ford Fleet Program. Id. at P 8 (undisputed).

5. On September 18, 2013, Plaintiff and Defendant voluntarily executed a CPA Contract for the 2014 Program Year. Id. at P 9 (undisputed).

6. Pursuant to the CPA Contract, Plaintiff provided discounts to Defendant in exchange for Defendant's purchase of large numbers of Ford vehicles (the "Vehicles" or "Ford Vehicles"). Id. at P 13 (undisputed). Defendant agreed that, to be eligible for any discounts, the Vehicles must be operated solely in the United States and could not be exported. Id. at P 14 (undisputed).

7. The export prohibition is found in several of the CPA Contract's provisions, including:

a. The "Eligible Vehicles" provision: "Vehicles must be registered solely in the United States and must be operated in the United States." Id. at P 14a (citing CPA Contract, p. 4) (undisputed);

b. The "In-Service Requirements" provision: "The minimum in-service requirement for commercial vehicles is 12 months or 20,000 [*4] miles (whichever comes first). Vehicles must be registered and operated solely in the 50 United States." Id. at P 14b (citing CPA Contract, p. 4) (undisputed).

8. Plaintiff told Roger Catoire, an employee of Defendant who served as Defendant's primary negotiator of the CPA Contract, that pursuant to the "In-Service Requirements," Vehicles purchased under the CPA Contract must be operated in the United States. Id. at PP 12, 15 (undisputed). Mr. Catoire understood that this meant that the vehicles could not be exported. Id. (undisputed).

9. In 2014, Defendant purchased 185 Vehicles under the CPA Contract. Id. at P 16 (undisputed).

10. Plaintiff fulfilled its obligations and duties owed to Defendant under the CPA Contract by, among other things, manufacturing, delivering, and discounting the Vehicles purchased under the CPA Contract. Id. at P 17 (undisputed).

---

[1] The parties stipulated [*2] in their Joint Stipulated Facts that "no facts other than the facts contained [in the Stipulated Facts] may be submitted or referenced in support of or in opposition to any motion for summary judgment." Stip. Facts 2:3-5. Defendant concedes in its Statement of Genuine Disputes in Opposition to Plaintiff's Motion for Summary Judgment [60] ("Statement of Disputes") that "all facts submitted in [Plaintiff's] Statement of Uncontroverted Facts were stipulated to by" Plaintiff and Defendant. Def.'s Statement Disputes 1:25-2: 1. Given this concession and the language of the parties Joint Stipulated Facts [43] that the parties "jointly stipulate to the following facts," the Court finds that each of the facts contained in the Stipulated Facts is undisputed.

11. Defendant received discounts from Plaintiff totaling $823,000 for the Vehicles purchased under the CPA Contract. Id. at P 18 (undisputed).

12. Defendant did not operate the Vehicles solely in the United States. Id. at P 19 (undisputed). Less than 12 months after receiving the Vehicles, Defendant exported to China all of the Vehicles purchased under the CPA Contract. Id. at P 21 (undisputed).

13. Defendant [*5] did not comply with the "12-month or 20,000 mile" "In-Service Requirements" provision under the CPA Contract. Id. at P 20 (undisputed).

14. Plaintiff demanded that Defendant return the $823,000 in discounts it received pursuant to the CPA Contract. Id. at P 22 (undisputed).

15. Defendant refused to return any amount to Plaintiff. Id. (undisputed).

16. Defendant agrees that the CPA Contract is legally binding and valid, except for the export prohibition. Id. at P 23 (undisputed).

II. LEGAL STANDARD

Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 56 states that a "court shall grant summary judgment" when the movant "shows that there is no genuine dispute as to any material fact and the movant is entitled to judgment as a matter of law." Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(a). "The party moving for summary judgment has the initial burden of proof to show "no genuine dispute as to any material fact." Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(a); In re Oracle Corp. Securities Litigation, 627 F.3d 376, 387 (9th Cir. 2010). "A party asserting that a fact cannot be . . . genuinely disputed must support the assertion by: citing to particular materials in the record, including . . . stipulations." Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(c)(1)(A). "In determining any motion for summary judgment . . ., the Court may assume that the material facts as claimed and adequately supported by the moving party are admitted to exist without controversy except to the extent that such material [*6] facts are (a) included in the 'Statement of Genuine Disputes' and (b) controverted by declaration or other written evidence filed in opposition to the motion." Local Rule 56-3.

Where the non-moving party bears the burden of proof at trial, the moving party need only prove that there is an absence of evidence to support the non-moving party's case. In re Oracle Corp., 627 F.3d at 387. If the moving party meets this burden, the burden then shifts to the non-moving party to produce admissible evidence showing a triable issue of fact. Id.; Nissan Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Fritz Cos., 210 F.3d 1099, 1102-03 (9th Cir. 2000); see Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(a).

III. BACKGROUND

A. Factual Background

Plaintiff is a motor vehicle designer and manufacturer. First Am. Compl. ("FAC") P 7, ECF No. 23; Stip. Facts P 1. Plaintiff offers incentive programs, such as its Competitive Price Allowance ("CPA") Program, which "provides discounts or credits to qualified high-volume purchasers of Ford vehicles through the Ford Fleet Program." FAC P 9; Stip. Facts PP 7-8. On September 18, 2013, Plaintiff and Defendant executed a CPA Contract.[2] FAC P 10; Stip. Facts P 9. Under the CPA Contract, Plaintiff agreed to provide discounts to Defendant in exchange for Defendant's purchase of large numbers of Ford vehicles. FAC P 13; Stip. Facts P 13. The CPA Contract states: "Titan [*7] Enterprise Inc. must acquire 250 units during the course of the program year [i.e., the calendar year]. In the event this volume has not been reached, you will be required to reimburse Ford all or a portion of the CPA funds paid."

[2] The parties filed the CPA Contract under seal [56].

FAC P 14 (citing CPA Contract, p. 3). The CPA Contract also contained terms[3] requiring that, in order to be eligible for any discounts, Defendant's purchased vehicles must be operated in the United States and could not be exported. FAC P 15; Stip. Facts PP 14-15. Specifically, the "In-Service Requirements" provision states: "The minimum in-service requirement for commercial vehicles is 12 months or 20,000 miles (whichever comes first). Vehicles must be registered and operated solely in the 50 United States."[4] Stip. Facts P 14b (citing CPA Contract, p. 4, "In-Service Requirements").

In 2014, Defendant purchased over 185 vehicles from Ford ("Ford Vehicles" or "Vehicles"). FAC PP 18-19; Stip. Facts P 16. Defendant received combined discounts totaling $823,000. FAC PP 18-19; Stip. Facts P 18.

In May 2014, "[Plaintiff's] personnel verified that dozens of Ford Explorers purchased by [Defendant] pursuant to the CPA Contract were [] found at a port of entry in mainland China." FAC P 20; see Stip. Facts P 21. On June 17, 2014, Jim Chen, president of Defendant Titan Enterprise Inc., allegedly "admitted to [Plaintiff] that he exported to China some or all of the Ford Explorers [Defendant] purchased pursuant to the CPA Contract." FAC P 23; Stip. Facts P 21. Defendant also allegedly failed to purchase at least 250 vehicles, as required by the CPA Contract. FAC P 21. The parties stipulated that Defendant did not comply with the "In-Service Requirements" provision of the CPA Contract. Stip. Facts P 20.

B. Procedural Background

On October 3, 2014, Plaintiff filed its Complaint [1], alleging claims for breach of contract and fraud. On January 27, 2015, Plaintiff timely filed its FAC [23], which amended the Complaint to state only a claim for breach of contract. [*9]

On February 17, 2015, Defendant filed a Motion to Dismiss [20] under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(b)(6), which this Court denied [32].

On May 7, 2015, Defendant filed its Answer to the First Amended Complaint [36]. In its Answer, Defendant asserted twelve affirmative defenses.

On August 27, 2015, the parties filed a Joint Motion for Order: (1) Modifying the Scheduling Order, and (2) Granting Leave to Amend Defendant's Answer to First Amended Complaint [39]. The Court granted Defendant leave to amend its Answer to withdraw all affirmative defenses except the defense that the no-export clause in the CPA Contract is an undue restraint of trade. Order 2:4-7, ECF No. 40. The Court also granted the parties' joint stipulation that only facts contained in the Joint Stipulated Facts may be relied on for purposes of summary judgment. Id. at 2:9-13.

On September 8, 2015, the parties filed their Joint Stipulated Facts [43]. Exhibit 1 to the Stipulated Facts [56] contains the parties' confidential CPA Contract, which was filed under seal. On September 15, 2015, Defendant filed its Amended Answer to the First Amended Complaint [51], which asserted its sole affirmative defense that the no-export clause of the CPA Contract is an undue [*10] restraint of trade.

On October 16, 2016, Plaintiff filed the present Motion [57] and Statement of Uncontroverted Facts [58]. The Opposition [59], Statement of Genuine Disputes [60], and Reply [61] were timely filed. The hearing was set for December 1, 2015 [57], and the matter was taken under submission on November 23, 2015 [62].

[3] For example, the "Eligible Vehicles" provision states: "Vehicles must be registered solely in the United States and must be operated in the United States." Stip. Facts P 14a (citing CPA Contract, p. 4).

[4] The CPA Contract also provides for the possibility of fleet incentive chargebacks if the "In-Service Requirements" are violated. [*8] See CPA Contract, p. 4.

IV. DISCUSSION

A. Breach of Contract Claim

Under California law, the essential elements of a claim for breach of contract are (1) the existence of a contract, (2) Plaintiff's performance or excuse for nonperformance, (3) Defendant's breach, and (4) resulting damages to Plaintiff. San Mateo Union High Sch. Dist. v. Cnty. of San Mateo, 213 Cal. App. 4th 418, 152 Cal. Rptr. 3d 530, 548 (Cal. Ct. App. 2013); Greenwich Ins. Co. v. Rodgers, 729 F. Supp. 2d 1158, 1163 (C.D. Cal. 2010).

"[T]he measure of damages . . . is the amount which will compensate the party aggrieved for all the detriment proximately caused thereby, or which, in the ordinary course of things, would be likely to result therefrom." Cal. Civ. Code § 3300. The aim of contract damages is to put the injured party in as good a position as he or she would have been had performance been rendered as promised. *PAI Corp. v. Integrated Science Solutions, Inc., No. 06-CV-05349-JCS, 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 63045, 2015 WL 2265671, at 5 (N.D. Cal. May 13, 2015). "Where the fact of damages is certain, the amount of damages need not be calculated with absolute certainty." GHK Associates v. Mayer Group, Inc., 224 Cal. App. 3d 856, 274 Cal. Rptr. 168, 179 (Cal. Ct. App. 1990).

Here, the parties explicitly stipulated to [*11] each of the elements for breach of contract except damages. First, the parties voluntarily entered into a valid CPA Contract whereby Plaintiff agreed to provide discounts to Defendant in exchange for Defendant's purchase of large numbers of Ford Vehicles and adherence to the terms of the CPA Contract. Stip. Facts PP 9, 23. Defendant agreed that, to be eligible for any discounts, the Vehicles had to be operated in the United States and could not be exported. Id. at P 14. Defendant stipulates that, except for the export provision, the CPA Contract is legally binding and valid. Id. at P 23.

Second, Plaintiff fulfilled its obligations under the CPA Contract by, among other things, discounting the Vehicles Defendant purchased pursuant to the CPA Contract. Id. at P 17.

Third, the "In-Service Requirements" provision of the CPA Contract required Defendant to operate the Vehicles solely in the 50 United States, and Defendant stipulated that it understood that the "In Service Requirements" provision of the CPA Contract meant that the vehicles could not be exported. Id. at PP 14-15. Thus, Defendant breached the CPA Contract when it did not operate the Ford Vehicles solely in the United States, as required by the minimum "In Service Requirements" [*12] provision of the CPA Contract. Id. at PP 19-20.

As to damages, Plaintiff demands the return of the $823,000 in discounts. Id. at P 22. The Court finds that $823,000 will put Plaintiff in as good a position had performance been rendered as promised. See Cal. Civ. Code § 3300; *PAI Corp., 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 63045, 2015 WL 2265671, at 5. The parties stipulate that Defendant received $823,000 in discounts for the Ford Vehicles Defendant purchased pursuant to the CPA Contract. Stip. Facts P 18. Defendant received this discount in exchange for its adherence to certain restrictions, including a minimum purchase requirement and a prohibition on exporting. Since Defendant did not comply with the restrictions, Defendant is not entitled to the discount. Moreover, the CPA Contract provides for the possibility of fleet incentive chargebacks if the "In-Service Requirements" are violated. See CPA Contract, p. 4. In this case, the fleet incentive amounted to $823,000. Because Defendant failed to comply with the conditions of the CPA Contract, Defendant is required to pay the full price for the Ford Vehicles to put Plaintiff in the same position had Defendant performed under the CPA Contract as promised.

As to Plaintiff's breach of contract claim, Plaintiff shows that there is no genuine dispute as to any [*13] material fact, and Plaintiff is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. Accordingly, the Court GRANTS Plaintiff's Motion as to its claim for breach of contract.

B. Undue Restraint of Trade Affirmative Defense

Section 1 of the Sherman Act prohibits "[e]very contract, combination . . . or conspiracy, in restraint of trade." 15 U.S.C. § 1. Under antitrust law, "[r]estraints imposed by agreement between competitors have traditionally been denominated as horizontal restraints, and those imposed by agreement between firms at different levels of distribution as vertical restraints." Bus. Electronics Corp. v. Sharp Electronics Corp., 485 U.S. 717, 730, 108 S. Ct. 1515, 99 L. Ed. 2d 808 (1988). A vertical nonprice restraint is judged under the "rule of reason." Id. at 735-36.

The rule of reason "requires the antitrust plaintiff to demonstrate that a particular contract or combination is in fact unreasonable and anticompetitive." California v. Safeway, Inc., 651 F.3d 1118, 1133 (9th Cir. 2011) (quoting Texaco Inc. v. Dagher, 547 U.S. 1, 5, 126 S. Ct. 1276, 164 L. Ed. 2d 1 (2006)) (internal quotation marks omitted). "Under this rule, the factfinder weighs all of the circumstances of a case in deciding whether a restrictive practice should be prohibited as imposing an unreasonable restraint on competition." Leegin Creative Leather Prods., Inc. v. PSKS, Inc., 551 U.S. 877, 885, 127 S. Ct. 2705, 168 L. Ed. 2d 623 (2007) (quoting Continental T.V., Inc. v. GTE Sylvania Inc., 433 U.S. 36, 49, 97 S. Ct. 2549, 53 L. Ed. 2d 568 (1977)). Factors to take into account include (1) "specific information about the relevant business," (2) "the restraint's history, nature, and effect," and (3) "[w]hether the businesses involved have [*14] market power." Id. at 885-86 (internal citations omitted).

Here, on Plaintiff's Motion for Summary Judgment, Defendant bears the burden of proof on its affirmative defense. In re Oracle Corp., 627 F.3d at 387. The Court finds that Plaintiff has shown that there is no evidence to support Defendant's affirmative defense because the Joint Stipulated Facts[5] contain no evidence that the CPA Contract created a manufacturer-dealer like relationship between Plaintiff and Defendant or that the no-export clause is anticompetitive. See id.; Safeway, 651 F.3d at 1133. Moreover, Defendant has not met its burden of producing admissible evidence showing a triable issue of fact. In re Oracle Corp., 627 F.3d at 387.

In its Opposition, Defendant makes two arguments. Defendant first argues that the CPA Contract cannot be construed as a prohibition on exporting the Vehicles. Def.'s Opp'n 9:9-12. This argument is misplaced. A plain reading of CPA Contract clearly states the vehicles must be operated in the United States, and therefore cannot be exported. The CPA Contract term requiring that "Vehicles must be registered and operated solely in the 50 United States" is the equivalent of a prohibition on the Vehicles' export outside the United States.

Defendant's second argument is that the no-export clause cannot be reasonable because Defendant's exporting the Vehicles does not compete with or injure Plaintiff. Def.'s Opp'n 9:18-21. However, in order to survive summary judgment, Defendant must present admissible evidence showing a triable issue of fact that the no-export clause has an anticompetitive effect, not that Defendant's violation of the no-export clause did not compete with Plaintiff. It does not follow [*16] that because Plaintiff did not sustain damages due to Defendant's exporting the Vehicles, the no-export clause has adverse anticompetitive effects, and is therefore, an unreasonable restraint of trade.

Under the rule of reason, Plaintiff has shown that there is no evidence that the CPA Contract created a manufacturer-dealer or a broker-like relationship between Plaintiff and Defendant. The CPA Program provides discounts or credits to high-volume purchasers of Ford vehicles, in exchange for agreeing to the restriction that the vehicles must be operated in the United States and could not be exported. Stip. Facts PP 7-8, 14. The Stipulated Facts provide no evidence that the CPA Program intended to place the Vehicles for resale into the stream of commerce. Accordingly, there is no evidence that the CPA Contract created a manufacturer-dealer or a broker-like relationship between Plaintiff and Defendant.

[5] The parties stipulated that "no facts other than the facts contained [in the Joint Stipulated Facts] may be submitted or referenced in support of or in opposition to any motion for summary judgment." Stip. Facts 2:3-5. The Stipulated Facts makeno mention of Defendant's affirmative defense. Only paragraphs 15 and 23 are relevant to the affirmative defense. These paragraphs state, in relevant part: "Ford personnel told Mr. Catoire that, pursuant to the 'In-Service Requirements,' vehicles purchased pursuant to the CPA Contract had to be operated in the United States, and Mr. Catoire understood that [*15] this meant the vehicles could not be exported," and "Except for the export prohibition, [Defendant] agrees that the CPA Contract is a legally binding and valid contract." Stip. Facts PP 15, 23.

Second, even if such a relationship was shown, and assuming the "In-Service Requirements" provision constitutes a restraint, the restraint would be a vertical restraint subject to the "rule of reason." Bus. Electronics Corp., 485 U.S. at 735-36. Under the "rule of reason," Plaintiff has shown that there is no evidence to support that [*17] the no-export provision "should be prohibited as imposing an unreasonable restraint on competition." Leegin Creative Leather Prods., Inc., 551 U.S. at 885. The Stipulated Facts make no mention of any relevant factors or circumstances suggesting that the no-export clause has any anticompetitive effect. As Plaintiff notes, Defendant has not (1) defined the relevant market, (2) shown that Plaintiff has any market power in any relevant market, or (3) shown how the "In-Service Requirements" have or possibly could restrict output and raise prices to consumers in the United States. Pl.'s Mot. 7:15-18.

Accordingly, the Court finds that (1) Plaintiff has met its burden to prove that there is an absence of evidence to support Defendant's affirmative defense, and (2) Defendant has not met its burden to produce admissible evidence showing a triable issue of fact. For these reasons, Plaintiff's Motion [57] is GRANTED and the affirmative defense DISMISSED.

V. CONCLUSION

Based on the foregoing, the Court GRANTS Plaintiff's Motion for Summary Judgment [57] in its entirety. Judgment in favor of Plaintiff Ford Motor Company and against Defendant Titan Enterprise Inc. shall be entered accordingly.

IT IS HEREBY ORDERED that Plaintiff shall submit a proposed [*18] judgment within ten (10) days of the date of this Order.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

Opinion

Bank of America, N.A. and ReconTrust Company (Recon) (together, Respondents) successfully demurred to the first amended complaint of the Palms & Sands Owners Association, Inc. (the Association). On appeal, the Association contends the trial court erred by (1) sustaining the demurrer without leave to amend, (2) denying the Association's motion for leave to amend, (3) entering judgment in favor of Respondents while the motion for leave to amend was still pending, and (4) sustaining certain of Respondents' evidentiary objections. We reject these contentions and affirm.

FACTUAL AND PROCEDURAL BACKGROUND

The Development and Association

"Palms & Sands" is a common interest development in Rancho Mirage, California. Sixteen of its 71 fee simple parcels [*2] are improved with residential duplexes (Residential Units); one parcel is improved with access roads, lawn area, a pool and pool house, and a laundry facility, all of which are used and shared by the owners in common.

The Association manages Palms & Sands under a Declaration of Covenants, Conditions, Restrictions and Easements (the Declaration) that governs each property owner within the development. The Declaration defines "owner(s)" as "[t]he parties . . . holding a recorded fee simple interest in a Lot . . . . 'Owner' does not include any party having an interest in a Lot merely as security for the performance of an obligation."

The Association maintains the common area roads, parking lot, pool, yard, and buildings; pays property taxes on the common lots; provides trash pickup for the Residential Units; maintains insurance coverage for common area and Residential Unit building structures; and provides water service, general maintenance, and management services.

The Declaration authorizes the Association to require each owner to pay regular and special assessments "for improvement and maintenance of the Common Area(s), administration of the Property, and to promote the recreation, safety, [*3] and welfare for the common good of all the owners." Under this authority, the Association levied a regular monthly assessment to pay for the services described in the preceding paragraph. Under the Declaration, an owner's acceptance of a deed to a lot within the development constitutes the owner's agreement to pay the assessments, which are "the personal obligations of the owner . . . ."

If an owner fails to pay an assessment, the Declaration authorizes the Association to record a lien against that owner's lot. "In addition to all other legal rights and remedies," the Association may sue the owner to collect the unpaid assessments or foreclose on the lien.

Unit 8

In December 2002, Ron Bailey purchased Unit 8 at Palms & Sands. In February 2005, he borrowed $129,000 from Countrywide Home Loans, Inc. (Countrywide Loans). The loan was secured by a first deed of trust that named Recon as trustee. Countrywide Bank assigned its interests in the first deed of trust to CitiMortgage, Inc. (Citi) in 2005.

In July 2005, Bailey obtained a $51,000 home equity line of credit from Countrywide Bank, N.A. The line of credit was secured by a second deed of trust that also named Recon as Trustee. In 2013, [*4] Countrywide Bank assigned its interests in the second deed of trust to Bank of America.

As a result of these transactions, Citi holds the first deed of trust; Bank of America holds the second deed of trust; and Recon is trustee of both deeds of trust. Bank of America is the servicer of both loans.

At times not specified in any filed pleading, Bailey defaulted on his loans, stopped paying the Association's monthly assessments, and died. The Association initially opened an estate for Bailey, but his heirs had no interest in pursuing it because Unit 8 was then valued at less than $60,000 while its encumbrances exceeded $200,000.

The Complaints

In May 2012, the Association sued Bailey and other Residential Unit owners on a variety of legal theories to recover unpaid assessments. In December 2013, the Association amended its complaint to add Respondents as defendants on four causes of action: breach of oral and written contract, breach of implied contract, declaratory relief, and unjust enrichment. The Association alleged that notwithstanding Respondents' knowledge that Bailey (and his estate) had failed to pay Association assessments, Respondents "strategic[ally]" and "wrongful[ly]" delayed foreclosing on Unit 8 to [*5] allow market conditions to improve; in the meantime, Respondents enjoy the benefits the Association provides in maintaining and insuring Unit 8, yet avoid paying the monthly assessments Respondents would incur if they were to acquire title to Unit 8 by foreclosure.

Bank of America moved for judgment on the pleadings and Recon demurred. The trial court dismissed the Association's contract-based claims, but granted leave to amend as to the unjust enrichment and declaratory relief claims.

In April 2014, the Association filed a first amended complaint that, as relevant here, sought to recover Bailey's unpaid assessments on Unit 8 from Respondents under unjust enrichment and declaratory relief grounds.

Respondents demurred. While the demurrer was pending, the Association moved for leave to file a second amended complaint adding a cause of action against Respondents for violation of California's Unfair Competition Law (UCL) (Bus. & Prof. Code, § 17200).[1] The Association supported its motion with a declaration from the Association's proposed banking industry expert, who opined Respondents' strategic delay in foreclosing on Unit 8 constituted an unfair business practice.

The Trial Court's Rulings

At the hearing on Respondents' demurrer, the trial court announced its tentative decision to sustain the demurrer without leave to amend. The court reasoned that although Respondents were entitled to foreclose, they were not obligated to do so and, thus, had not been unjustly enriched. The Association's counsel requested the trial court immediately consider its motion for leave to amend, which was scheduled to be heard a few weeks later. The court responded it had read the expert's declaration and thought amending to allege a UCL violation "might be, perhaps, a good way for the [Association] to go," but the court was not in a position to accelerate the hearing on the motion for leave to amend.[2] The court adopted its tentative ruling as final on July 9, 2014.

On July 11, Respondents served a notice of ruling and attached a trial court order (1) sustaining the demurrer without leave to amend, (2) dismissing the claims against Respondents with prejudice, and (3) stating judgment shall be entered in Respondents' favor.

On July 15, the Association objected to the notice of ruling "in that it asserts [Respondents] were dismissed with prejudice" even though the Association's motion for leave to amend a new claim against them was still pending. On

[1] The proposed second amended complaint alleged Bailey [*6] stopped paying assessments in February 2010 and died in March 2011. It further alleged the Unit 8 assessments were $14,000 in arrears as of April 2014. As discussed below, the second amended complaint was never filed.

[2] The court's full explanation was as follows: "Well, I read the declaration of the banker expert, if you will. I'm not in a position to advance that motion to today and grant the motion to amend [*7] to allege that cause of action. I mean, I looked at it and I thought about it, and personally I thought it might be, perhaps, a good way for the plaintiff to go, but I wasn't sure. And I understand the plaintiff's position. They're sitting there, they're not getting their money, and they want it. And I—I just can't, in my own mind, come up with some legal theory as to how they are going to get it. [¶] . . . [¶] . . . You go ahead and come in here on July 28, and you can argue what you want to us at that time."

July 18, the Association filed a motion for reconsideration on the same basis. Respondents opposed the Association's various requests for relief and objected to the expert's declaration.

On July 28, [*8] the trial court entered a judgment dismissing Respondents with prejudice. The same day, the court continued the hearing on the Association's motion for leave to amend so it could be heard in conjunction with the motion for reconsideration.

On August 18, the trial court issued tentative rulings denying the Association's motions for leave to amend and for reconsideration. The trial court denied leave to amend on the basis the Association "cited no authority that a lender is required to foreclose on a deed of trust when a borrower defaults. Foreclosure is just one of the avenues open to the lender in the event the borrower defaults on the underlying obligation. [¶] Objections to declaration of [the proposed banking expert] are sustained."

The trial court explained it was denying the motion for reconsideration because the court lacked jurisdiction by virtue of having already entered a judgment dismissing Respondents, but further explained it would have denied the motion in any event for the same reasons it denied the motion for leave to amend.

The Association did not request oral argument and the court adopted its tentative ruling as final on August 19, 2014.

DISCUSSION

I. Demurrer

The Association [*9] contends the trial court erred by sustaining Respondents' demurrer to the unjust enrichment claim. The Association does not challenge the ruling as to the declaratory relief claim.

A. Standard of Review

"In reviewing a judgment following the sustaining of a demurrer without leave to amend, we decide de novo whether the complaint states facts sufficient to state a cause of action." (Bower v. AT&T Mobility, LLC (2011) 196 Cal.App.4th 1545, 1552, 127 Cal. Rptr. 3d 569.) "We treat the demurrer as admitting all facts properly pleaded, but we do not assume the truth of contentions, deductions or conclusions of law." (Ibid.) We may also consider documents attached to the complaint and matters subject to judicial notice.[3] (Hoffman v. Smithwoods RV Park, LLC (2009) 179 Cal.App.4th 390, 400, 102 Cal. Rptr. 3d 72.) "A reviewing court will affirm a judgment based on the sustaining of a demurrer on any properly supported ground, regardless of the trial court's reason for its ruling." (Bower, at p. 1552.) "'However, it is error for a trial court to sustain a demurrer when the plaintiff has stated a cause of action under any possible legal theory.'" (Ibid.)

B. Analysis

Our court has repeatedly held ""[t]here is no cause of action in California for unjust enrichment."" (Levine v. Blue Shield of California (2010) 189 Cal.App.4th 1117, 1138, 117 Cal. Rptr. 3d 262, quoting Durell v. Sharp Healthcare (2010) 183 Cal.App.4th 1350, 1370, 108 Cal. Rptr. 3d 682 (Durell); see Melchior v. New Line Productions, Inc. (2003) 106 Cal.App.4th 779, 793, 131 Cal. Rptr. 2d 347 ["'The phrase "Unjust Enrichment" does not describe a theory of recovery, but an effect: the result of a failure to make restitution under circumstances where it is equitable to do so.'"].) Thus, the Association's allegation that Respondents have been unjustly enriched by their strategic delay in foreclosing on Unit 8 does not state a cause of action. (Levine, at p. 1138.) However, because "[u]njust enrichment is synonymous with restitution" (Durell, at p. 1370), on review of an order sustaining a demurrer we may assess whether the Association's allegations state a cause of action that may give rise to a right to restitution. (See McBride v. Boughton (2004) 123 Cal.App.4th 379, 387-388, 20 Cal. Rptr. 3d 115 (McBride).)

---

[3] We deny the Association's motion for judicial notice. The documents attached as Exhibits A through C of the motion are already in the appellate record, and the document attached as Exhibit D postdates the judgment and is not necessary [*10] for our determination of the issues on appeal.

"'Under the law of restitution, "[a]n individual is required to make restitution if he or she is unjustly enriched at the expense of another. [Citations.] A person is enriched if the person receives a benefit at another's expense. [Citation.]" [Citation.] However, "[t]he fact that one person benefits another is not, by itself, sufficient to require restitution. The person receiving the benefit is required to make restitution [*11] only if the circumstances are such that, as between the two individuals, it is unjust for the person to retain it."'" (Durell, supra, 183 Cal.App.4th at p. 1370.) "There are several potential bases for a cause of action seeking restitution. For example, restitution may be awarded in lieu of breach of contract damages when the parties had an express contract, but it was procured by fraud or is unenforceable or ineffective for some reason. [Citations.] Alternatively, restitution may be awarded where the defendant obtained a benefit from the plaintiff by fraud, duress, conversion, or similar conduct. . . . [Citations.] In such cases, where appropriate, the law will imply a contract (or rather, a quasi-contract), without regard to the parties' intent, in order to avoid unjust enrichment." (McBride, supra, 123 Cal.App.4th at p. 388, fn. omitted.)

The Association has not alleged facts establishing it is entitled to restitution from Respondents. It has not alleged the existence of a contract between it and Respondents that was procured by fraud or was otherwise invalidated. (McBride, supra, 123 Cal.App.4th at p. 388.) Instead, the only contract the first amended complaint identifies is the Declaration, which expressly excludes lenders from the definition of owners responsible for paying assessments.

Nor has the [*12] Association identified fraudulent or other untoward conduct by Respondents that would render their refusal to foreclose or pay assessments unjust. Although the Association alleges it has incurred expenses in maintaining the development's common areas and in insuring the collateral for Respondents' loans (Unit 8), we are not persuaded it would be unjust for Respondents to retain those benefits.

The Association argues Respondents are unjustly enriched because their "benefit will never need to be repaid because when they finally decide market conditions are right, their foreclosure wipes out the unpaid [Association] fees so there is no reimbursement." This argument is unavailing for several reasons. First, the Association ignores the fact Bailey (and his estate) are primarily responsible for the assessments. Even if Respondents foreclose on Unit 8, Bailey's underlying contractual obligation to pay the assessments will survive foreclosure as the foreclosure only extinguishes junior liens, not the contractual obligations secured by them. (See Diamond Heights Village Assn., Inc. v. Financial Freedom Senior Funding Corp. (2011) 196 Cal.App.4th 290, 301, 126 Cal. Rptr. 3d 673 (Diamond Heights).)

Second, the Association is speculating regarding Respondents' motives and is assuming Respondents' eventual foreclosure and sale [*13] of Unit 8 would not yield sufficient proceeds to reimburse the Association for Bailey's unpaid assessments. Moreover, the Association cites no authority, and we are aware of none, that requires the holder of a deed of trust to foreclose at a particular time so that a homeowners association can replace a nonpaying owner with a paying one. To the contrary, lenders are generally entitled to foreclose if and when they choose. (See Sierra-Bay Fed. Land Bank Assn. v. Superior Court (1991) 227 Cal.App.3d 318, 334-335, 277 Cal. Rptr. 753 ["in this state a commercial lender is privileged to pursue its own economic interests and may properly assert its contractual rights"].)

Third, it is unclear that Respondents have received or ever will receive a benefit at the Association's expense. In light of the significant amount of debt encumbering Unit 8-$200,000 compared to its alleged value of $60,000—the only entity likely to benefit from the Association's efforts is the holder of the first deed of trust (nonparty Citi).

Finally, and most fundamentally, the Association's grievance is not so much with Respondents as it is with California's lien priority scheme. That is, although the Association is entitled to record a lien of its own against Unit 8 to secure Bailey's unpaid assessments, that lien would [*14] be junior to the first and second deeds of trust and would be extinguished in the event of a foreclosure on either senior lien. (Civ. Code, § 5675 [homeowners association assessments become lien on owner's separate interest when association records notice of delinquent assessment with county recorder]; Diamond Heights, supra, 196 Cal.App.4th at p. 301 [condominium assessment liens follow California's "'first in time, first in right'" lien priority scheme]; Dover Mobile Estates v. Fiber Form Prods., Inc. (1990) 220 Cal.App.3d 1494, 1498, 270 Cal. Rptr. 183 ["Liens which attach after execution of the foreclosed trust deed are extinguished. The purchaser at the trustee sale therefore takes title free of those junior or subordinate liens."].) The Association is not required to wait for senior lienholders to foreclose on their liens; it could foreclose on its own lien first. (See Civ. Code, § 5700; Diamond Heights, supra, 196 Cal.App.4th at pp. 301-302.) Yet the Association has not done so, presumably for the same type of strategic reasons for which it faults Respondents.

Moreover, although the parties have not cited any cases addressing homeowners association challenges to lien priority statutes, our independent research reveals that the courts that have considered such challenges—Connecticut and Florida state appellate courts—have rejected them. (See Dime Sav. Bank, FSB v. Muranelli (Conn.Ct.App. 1995) 39 Conn. App. 736, 667 A.2d 803, 806 [rejecting association's argument that "because [association] expenditures [*15] are used for the common good of all units and the mortgagee often takes title to the unit as a result of the foreclosure action, the mortgagee realizes a gain at the expense of the association"]; U.S. Bank Nat'l Ass'n ex rel. Harborview 2005-10 Trust Fund v. Tadmore (Fla.Ct.App. 2009) 23 So.3d 822, 823 (Tadmore) [reversing trial court's order requiring lender to pay association dues during foreclosure action where association challenged lender's alleged "'undue delay in pursuing . . . foreclosure'"]; U.S. Bank N.A. v. Farhood (Fla.Ct.App. 2014) 153 So.3d 955, 959-960 [reversing trial court's order requiring lender to pay homeowners association dues as sanction for dilatory pursuit of foreclosure action].)[4]

Our independent research also reveals that some state legislatures have addressed the Association's dilemma by adopting [*16] the Uniform Common Interest Ownership Act of 1982[5] (UCIOA) or similar statutory provisions that create a "superpriority lien" for homeowners association assessments, which allow a portion of the assessments to survive foreclosure of an otherwise senior lien. (See, e.g., SFR Invs. Pool 1 v. U.S. Bank, N.A. (Nev. 2014) 334 P.3d 408, 410-412.) However, California's Law Revision Commission recommended against adopting the UCIOA in 2003. (See Cal. Law Revision Com. (Nov. 21, 2003), Minutes, p. 8.)

Because California does not recognize a cause of action for unjust enrichment, and because the Association has not alleged facts entitling it to a restitution under some other cause of action, the trial court did not err by sustaining Respondents' demurrer.

II. Denying Leave to Amend to Allege a UCL Violation

The Association contends the trial court erred by denying it leave to further amend its complaint to allege a violation of the UCL's "unfair" prong. Respondents counter that allowing the amendment would have been futile because the Association could not state a valid UCL claim. We agree.

A. Standard of Review

"'A general demurrer may be sustained without leave to amend where it [*17] is probable from the nature of the defects and previous unsuccessful attempts to plead that the plaintiff cannot state a cause of action.' [Citation.]" (Oddone v. Superior Court (2009) 179 Cal.App.4th 813, 823, 101 Cal. Rptr. 3d 867.) Similarly, a trial court may deny a motion for leave to amend where the proposed amended claims lack merit. (Oakland Raiders v. National Football League (2005) 131 Cal.App.4th 621, 652, 32 Cal. Rptr. 3d 266.) We review an order denying leave to amend in either circumstance for an abuse of discretion. (Oddone, at p. 823; Foxborough v. Van Atta (1994) 26 Cal.App.4th 217, 230-231, 31 Cal. Rptr. 2d 525.)

B. The UCL's "Unfair" Prong

---

[4] The Association's reliance on In re Spa at Sunset Isles Condo. Ass'n, Inc. (Bankr. S.D. Fla. 2011) 454 B.R. 898, is misplaced. There, the bankruptcy court held federal bankruptcy law preempted Florida's statute relieving lenders of liability for homeowners association assessments prior to foreclosure. (Id. at pp. 905-906.) No bankruptcy preemption issues apply here. Moreover, the bankruptcy code at issue required only that the association's expenditures benefit the lender; there was no requirement, as there is under California law, that the lender's retention of the benefit be unjust. (Id. at p. 908.)

[5] (Unif. Common Interest Ownership Act of 1982, § 3-116 (amended 2008), 7 pt. II, U.L.A. 374.)

California's UCL defines "'unfair competition' as 'any unlawful, unfair or fraudulent business act or practice and unfair, deceptive, untrue or misleading advertising.'" (Zhang v. Superior Court (2013) 57 Cal.4th 364, 370, 159 Cal. Rptr. 3d 672, 304 P.3d 163 (Zhang).) Because the statute "'is written in the disjunctive, it establishes three varieties of unfair competition—acts or practices which are unlawful, or unfair, or fraudulent.'" (Cel-Tech Communications, Inc. v. Los Angeles Cellular Telephone Co. (1999) 20 Cal.4th 163, 180, 83 Cal. Rptr. 2d 548, 973 P.2d 527 (Cel-Tech).)

"The standard for determining what business acts or practices are 'unfair' in consumer actions under the UCL is currently unsettled." (Zhang, supra, 57 Cal.4th at p. 380, fn. 9.) "In Cel-Tech, the Supreme Court addressed the term 'unfair' in the context of actions between competitors alleging anticompetitive practices, but it broadly criticized previous attempts to define 'unfair' as 'too amorphous' to provide guidance." (Graham v. Bank of America, N.A. (2014) 226 Cal.App.4th 594, 612, 172 Cal. Rptr. 3d 218 (Graham), quoting Cel-Tech, supra, 20 Cal.4th at pp. 184-185.) "Previously, courts defined 'unfair' [*18] as a practice that offends public policy or "'is immoral, unethical, oppressive, unscrupulous or substantially injurious to consumers'" or required courts to ""weigh the utility of the defendant's conduct against the gravity of the harm to the alleged victim.""" (Ibid., quoting Cel-Tech, supra, 20 Cal.4th at p. 184.)

"The Cel-Tech court concluded it must 'require that any finding of unfairness to competitors under [Business and Professions Code] section 17200 be tethered to some legislatively declared policy or proof of some actual or threatened impact on competition' and, in actions challenging a direct competitor's 'unfair' act, defined the term as 'conduct that threatens an incipient violation of an antitrust law, or violates the policy or spirit of one of those laws because its effects are comparable to or the same as a violation of the law, or otherwise significantly threatens or harms competition.'" (Graham, supra, 226 Cal.App.4th at p. 612, quoting Cel-Tech, supra, 20 Cal.4th at pp. 186-187.)

"Thereafter, the appellate courts split regarding the definition of 'unfair' business practices in consumer actions." (Graham, supra, 226 Cal.App.4th at p. 612.) In In re Ins. Installment Fee Cases (2012) 211 Cal.App.4th 1395, 1418, 150 Cal. Rptr. 3d 618, we described the following three-way split:

"One line of cases applied a pre-Cel-Tech balancing test for determining whether a business practice is unfair, under which the court examines the practice's ""impact on its alleged [*19] victim, balanced against the reasons, justifications and motives of the alleged wrongdoer. In brief, the court must weigh the utility of the defendant's conduct against the gravity of the harm to the alleged victim . . . . [Citations.]' . . . [A]n 'unfair' business practice occurs when that practice 'offends an established public policy or when the practice is immoral, unethical, oppressive, unscrupulous or substantially injurious to consumers.'" (Smith v. State Farm Mutual Automobile Ins. Co. (2001) 93 Cal.App.4th 700, 718-719, 113 Cal. Rptr. 2d 399 . . . .)

"A second line of cases adopted the following test or factors for determining unfairness set forth in section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act (15 U.S.C. § 45(n): '(1) [t]he consumer injury must be substantial; (2) the injury must not be outweighed by any countervailing benefits to consumers or competition; and (3) it must be an injury that consumers themselves could not reasonably have avoided.' (Camacho v. Automobile Club of Southern California (2006) 142 Cal.App.4th 1394, 1403, 48 Cal. Rptr. 3d 770. . . .)

"A third line of cases, represented by Gregory v. Albertson's, Inc. (2002) 104 Cal.App.4th 845, 128 Cal. Rptr. 2d 389 . . . (Gregory), applied a more rigorous test for unfairness in consumer UCL actions. The Gregory court disagreed with the balancing test applied by courts before Cel-Tech, stating: 'Cel-Tech . . . may signal a narrower interpretation of the prohibition of unfair acts or practices in all unfair competition actions and [*20] provides reason for caution in relying on the broad language in earlier decisions that the [Cel-Tech] court found to be "too amorphous." Moreover, where a claim of an unfair act or practice is predicated on public policy, we read Cel-Tech to require that the public policy which is a predicate to the action must be "tethered" to specific constitutional, statutory or regulatory provisions.'"

"This court has consistently followed the Gregory, supra, 104 Cal.App.4th 845 . . . line of cases and has held a plaintiff alleging an unfair business practice must show the 'defendant's "conduct is tethered to an[] underlying constitutional, statutory or regulatory provision, or that it threatens an incipient violation of an antitrust law, or violates the policy or spirit of an antitrust law."'" (Graham, supra, 226 Cal.App.4th at p. 613.)

C. Analysis

The Association's proposed UCL cause of action does not allege conduct that is "unfair" under Gregory's definition. The UCL claim is premised on the same facts as the unjust enrichment claim. However, as discussed in part I, ante, the Association has not cited any authority to which to "tether" its UCL claim. In fact, Respondents cite authority suggesting California's public policy discourages rapid foreclosures, which is contrary [*21] to the Association's theory of the case. (See Jolley v. Chase Home Finance, LLC (2013) 213 Cal.App.4th 872, 903, 153 Cal. Rptr. 3d 546 ["[T]he California Legislature has expressed a strong preference for fostering more cooperative relations between lenders and borrowers who are at risk of foreclosure, so that homes will not be lost."].) Accordingly, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in denying the Association leave to amend a cause of action under the UCL's "unfair" prong.

III. Evidentiary and Procedural Challenges

The Association contends the trial court erred by dismissing Respondents before the court ruled on the Association's motion for leave to amend and by sustaining Respondents' evidentiary objections to the banker's declaration. Even if either of these actions was erroneous, any error was not prejudicial in light of our conclusions above.

DISPOSITION

The judgment is affirmed. Respondents are entitled to their costs on appeal.

Opinion

ORDER

THIS CAUSE comes before the Court for consideration of the Motion to Transfer Venue or, in the Alternative, to Stay the Case Pending Resolution of Plaintiff's Previously-File Action Against Bank of America (Dkt. 14) filed by Defendants, Bank of America Corp. and Bank of America, N.A. ("BANA") and the Response in opposition thereto (Dkt. 15) filed by Plaintiff, Patrick Ryan Bray ("Bray"). Upon consideration of all relevant filings, case law, and being otherwise fully advised, the Court GRANTS Defendants' alternative request to stay the case, for the reasons set forth below.

I. BACKGROUND

a. The Instant Suit

Plaintiff Bray initiated this action against Defendants, Bank of America Corp. and BANA on October 27, 2015. (Dkt. 1) In his Complaint, Bray alleges that BANA committed violations of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1, et seq., the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 12, et seq., and the Florida Antitrust Act, Fla. Stat. § 542.15, et seq. (Id.) Bray's antitrust claims are expressly premised on BANA's alleged violation of the Bank Holding Company Act, 12 U.S.C. § 1972, which prohibits banks from engaging in certain "tying" arrangements. (Id. at ¶¶ 42, 56, 104, 106, 108, 113, 118, 120)

Bray alleges [*3] that he independently managed a General Public Account ("GPA") through bonds and bond mutual funds for a company called American Express Incentive Solutions ("AEIS"), which later changed its name to Intelispend Prepaid Solutions ("Intelispend").[1] Intelispend was owned by Martiz Holding, Inc. ("Maritz"), which had a syndicated loan for which BANA acted as the arranger. Bray alleges that in 2009, as a requirement for the renewal of the syndicated loan, BANA required that the GPA be collateralized and that all of its marketable securities in bond mutual funds be transferred to BANA's affiliate, Merryll Lynch. Bray alleges that this requirement constituted a violation of the Bank Holding Company Act ("BHCA"), 12 U.S.C. § 1972, which prohibits the conditioning of the extension of credit on the customer's obtaining certain other services from the bank or one of its affiliates. Bray alleges that he was damaged by BANA's allegedly unlawful requirement that Martiz move the GPA to its affiliate Merryll Lynch because he was no longer able to independently manage the GPA. Following the move of the GPA, Bray accepted a position with Merryll Lynch so that he could continue to manage the GPA on behalf of Intelispend. [*4] However, Bray alleges that the move caused him to take a 50% reduction in pay as a Merryl Lynch employee compared to his previous career working as an Independent Investment Advisor. Bray also alleges that the unlawful requirement damaged other entities with which he did business because they could no longer profit from his independent management of the GPA.

b. Bray's Prior Pending Suit against BANA

On February 10, 2014, Bray filed an action in this Court against BANA. (See Dkt. 10, 13; see also Patrick Ryan Bray v. Bank of America, Case No. 8:14-cv-332-T-23TBM (M.D. Fla.)) Bray's Complaint in that action alleged claims against BANA for: 1) the prohibited tying of services under the BHCA, 12 U.S.C. § 1972; 2) libel; 3) slander; and 4) harassment. (Dkt. 14-1 at P. 2-18) On July 29, 2014, the Honorable Steven D. Merryday granted BANA's motion under 28 U.S.C. § 1404(a) and transferred the case to the Eastern District of Missouri, Eastern Division. (Id. at P. 20-23)

[1] AEIS was originally a joint-venture between Maritz and American Express. (Dkt. 1 at ¶ 17) In February of 2010, Maritz purchased the minority shares held by American Express in AEIS. (Id. at ¶ 18) After becoming the 100% owner of AEIS, Maritz changed the name from AEIS to Intelispend. (Id.)

Following the transfer of the case, Bray withdrew the harassment claim and the District Court for the Eastern District of Missouri ("Missouri District Court") dismissed his state law defamation claims for failure to state a claim upon which relief may be [*5] granted and dismissed his BHCA claim due to lack of Article III standing. (See Patrick Ryan Bray v. Bank of America, Case No.4:14-cv-01336-CEJ (E.D. Mo.) (hereinafter "Missouri case") at Dkt. 50, 51) Bray appealed the dismissal of his claims to the United States Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit. (Id. at Dkt. 55) On August 3, 2015, the Eight Circuit affirmed the Missouri District Court's dismissal of Bray's state law defamation claims and reversed the dismissal of his BHCA claim. (Id. at Dkt. 61) The Eight Circuit remanded the BHCA claim, directing the Missouri District Court to determine in the first instance whether Bray has standing to pursue his claim in light of the Supreme Court's decision in Lexmark Int'l, Inc. v. Static Control Components, Inc., 572 U.S. 118, 134 S. Ct. 1377, 1391-92, 188 L. Ed. 2d 392 (2010). (Id.) Per the Missouri District Court's direction, the Parties have now fully briefed the Article III standing issue and the Court's decision remains pending. (Dkt. 13; Missouri Case at Dkt. 74-78)

c. The Instant Motion

On November 30, 2015, Defendants filed the instant motion requesting that the Court transfer this action to the Eastern District of Missouri pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1404(a). (Dkt. 14) Defendants contend that this case should be transferred to the Eastern District of Missouri for the same [*6] reasons that Judge Merryday transferred Bray's previously-filed case to that venue. Additionally, because the two cases are so closely related, both legally and factually, Defendants state that they intend to request consolidation of the two cases, should the Court order the requested transfer of this case. Alternatively, Defendants request that the Court stay this case pending the outcome of the closely-related Missouri case.

Bray responds objecting to the requested transfer, arguing that the two cases are not related, that Defendants' motion simply represents a forum-shopping attempt, and that a transfer in this case would only operate as an inconvenience to Bray and his witnesses.

II. DISCUSSION

Based on the foregoing facts, the Court finds that a determination of whether the first-filed rule should apply to the Missouri case and this action and whether this action should be transferred to the Eastern District of Missouri, Eastern Division under the rule is warranted. "The first-filed rule provides that when parties have instituted competing or parallel litigation in separate courts, the court initially seized of the controversy should hear the case." Collegiate Licensing Co. v. Am. Cas. Co. of Reading, Pa., 713 F.3d 71, 78 (11th Cir. 2013). "Thus, [the Eleventh Circuit [*7] has held] that '[w]here two actions involving overlapping issues and parties are pending in two federal courts, there is a strong presumption across the federal circuits that favors the forum of the first-filed suit under the first-filed rule.'" Id. (quoting Manuel v. Convergys Corp., 430 F.3d 1132, 1135 (11th Cir. 2005)). The Eleventh Circuit "require[s] that the party objecting to jurisdiction in the first-filed forum carry the burden of proving 'compelling circumstances' to warrant an exception to the first-filed rule." Manuel, 430 F.3d at 1135. Moreover, "[t]he first-filed rule not only determines which court may decide the merits of substantially similar cases, but also generally establishes which court may decide whether the second filed suit must be dismissed, stayed, or transferred and consolidated." Collegiate Licensing, 713 F.3d at 78. Collegiate Licensing also teaches that "the court initially seized of the controversy" should make the determination in the first instance of whether the first-filed rule applies and whether the instant action should be transferred. 713 F.3d at 78.

As a threshold matter, it is undisputed that the Missouri case was filed first. That action commenced with Bray filing his Complaint in this Court on February 10, 2014. Thereafter, the case was transferred to the Eastern District of [*8] Missouri. Although the case was technically filed first in this Court, between the two cases currently pending, the Missouri District Court is the forum that is seized of the initial controversy and the first-filed case. Accordingly, the Missouri District Court should make the determination of whether the first-filed rule applies and whether the case should be transferred because it is "the forum of the first-filed suit." Collegiate Licensing, 713 F.3d at 78.

Likewise, it appears facially that the two actions involve "overlapping issues and parties." Manuel, 430 F.3d at 1135. Bray is the Plaintiff in both cases. In the Missouri case, BANA is the only defendant. In this case, both BANA and Bank of America Corp. are listed as defendants. According to the Complaint, BANA is a wholly-owned subsidiary of Bank of America Corp. (Dkt. 1 at ¶¶ 23-24) Therefore, it appears that the interests of Bank of America Corp. are similarly aligned with those of BANA. The "precise identity of parties is not required" for application of the first-filed rule. Rudolph & Me, Inc. v. Ornament Central, LLC, No. 8:11-cv-670-T-33EAJ, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 100430, 2011 WL 3919711, at *2 (M.D. Fla. Sept. 7, 2011). In this case, there appears to be sufficient overlap and/or privity between and among the parties in both cases to warrant a determination [*9] by the Missouri District Court of whether the first-filed rule should apply.

Additionally, although the title of the claims for relief may not be identical, the central issue presented in both cases is the same.

> The applicability of the first-filed rule is not limited to mirror image cases where the parties and the issues perfectly align. Rather, the principles underlying the rule support its application where the subject matter of the later filed case substantially overlaps with that of the earlier one.

Rudolph, No. 8:11-cv-670-T-33EAJ, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 100430, 2011 WL 3919711, at *2. As Bray's Complaint makes clear, the crux of this case concerns whether BANA's requirement that Maritz move the GPA's marketable securities in bond mutual funds to BANA's affiliate, Merryll Lynch, as a condition of the renewal of Maritz's syndicated loan constituted an impermissible tying arrangement. Although Bray's Complaint in this action does not include a claim explicitly asserted under the BHCA, his general antitrust claims are expressly premised on BANA's alleged violation of the BHCA's anti-tying provisions. (Dkt. 1 at ¶¶ 42, 56, 104, 106, 108, 113, 118, 120) Accordingly, both cases concern the same central issue and arise out of the same operative [*10] set of factual circumstances.

Furthermore, the cases contain substantial overlap in the legal issues presented as well. Under antitrust laws, a tying arrangement is "an agreement by a party to sell one product [the 'tying' product] but only on the condition that the buyer also purchases a different (or 'tied') product." Integon Life Ins. Corp. v. Browning, 989 F.2d 1143, 1150 (11th Cir. 1993) (citation omitted). Tying arrangements may violate the general antitrust provisions of the Sherman Act and the Clayton Act, which apply to all businesses, including banks. See Heatransfer Corp. v. Volkswagenwerk, A. G., 553 F.2d 964, 976 (5th Cir. 1977).[2] In order to prove a general antitrust illegal tying claim, a plaintiff must prove the following five elements: "(1) two separate products, a 'tying' or 'desirable' product and a 'tied' or 'undesirable' product; (2) [that] the buyer was in fact forced to buy the tied product to get the tying product; that is, a 'tying'; (3) [that] the seller possessed sufficient economic power in the tying product market to coerce the buyer's acceptance of the tied product; (4) an anti-competitive effect in the tied product market; and (5) the involvement of a not insubstantial amount of interstate commerce in the tied product market." Integon, 989 F.2d at 1150.

When Congress passed the BHCA, it intended to "apply the general principles [*11] of the Sherman Antitrust Act prohibiting anticompetitive tying arrangements specifically to the field of commercial banking." Parsons Steel, Inc. v. First Alabama Bank of Montgomery, N.A., 679 F.2d 242, 245 (11th Cir. 1982). However, the BHCA's anti-tying provisions extend further than the anti-tying provisions of the general antitrust laws because "[a] plaintiff is not required to prove the last three elements of a[n] anti-trust tying claim in order to establish a violation of the BHCA anti-tying provisions." Integon, 989 F.2d at 1150 (citing Parsons, 679 F.2d at 245). Thus, the required elements for a tying claim under the BHCA include: "(1) two separate products, a 'tying' or 'desirable' product and a 'tied' or 'undesirable' product; and (2) [that] the buyer was in fact forced to buy the tied product to get the tying product; that is, a 'tying'." Id.

As to Bray's anti-tying claim asserted under the Florida Antitrust Act, it too appears to overlap his BHCA claim. Notably, Florida Statute § 542.32 provides that "[i]t is the intent of the Legislature that, in construing [Florida's antitrust laws], due consideration and great weight be given to the interpretations of the federal courts relating to comparable federal antitrust statutes." Accordingly, Florida courts construe the Florida Antitrust Statute in accordance with federal court decisions construing [*12] the federal antitrust statutes. See St. Petersburg Yacht Charters, Inc. v. Morgan Yacht, Inc., 457 So. 2d 1028, 1032 (Fla. 2d DCA 1984). Furthermore, tying claims asserted under the Florida Antitrust law have essentially the same elements as tying claims asserted under the federal antitrust laws. See Day v. Le-Jo Enterprises, Inc., 521 So. 2d 175, 177 (Fla. 3d DCA 1988). The principal difference between the two claims is that "under the Florida act there is no jurisdictional requirement that interstate commerce be involved." St. Petersburg Yacht Charters, Inc., 457 So. 2d at 1032; see also id. at 178 ("Since the [plaintiffs'] antitrust claim is brought under the Florida Antitrust Act of 1980, the federal requirement . . . that interstate commerce be involved need not be met.").

[2] In Bonner v. City of Prichard, 661 F.2d 1206, 1209 (11th Cir. 1981), the Eleventh Circuit adopted as binding precedent all decisions of the former Fifth Circuit handed down prior to the close of business on September 30, 1981.

Accordingly, although Bray may be required to prove additional elements in order to succeed on his federal and state anti-tying claims asserted in this action, he will be required to prove the same underlying elements here as he is required to prove in the Missouri case. It further appears, at least from the allegations of Bray's Complaint, that this case may also ultimately require an examination of the issue of Article III standing, which is already being untaken by the Missouri District Court in the Missouri case on remand. (See Dkt. 1 at ¶¶ 83-92) Therefore, it appears facially that inconsistent rulings and the duplication of efforts [*13] and judicial resources might result if both cases were to proceed simultaneously in two different venues. This is precisely the situation that the first-filed rule seeks to avoid. See Supreme Intern. Corp. v. Anheuser-Busch, Inc., 972 F. Supp. 604, 606 (S.D. Fla. 1997).

Although Bray may be able to show that "compelling circumstances" exist warranting an exception to the first-filed rule, cases addressing this issue suggest that this Court defer to the Missouri District Court's determination of the issue. Collegiate Licensing, 713 F.3d at 78; Manuel, 430 F.3d at 1135. Therefore, this Court finds that the Missouri District Court should determine whether the application of the first-filed rule is warranted here and whether this action should be transferred to the Eastern District of Missouri. Accordingly, this action is stayed pending the Missouri District Court's determination.

III. CONCLUSION

Upon consideration of the foregoing, it is hereby ORDERED as follows:

1. The Court STAYS this action pending a determination by the U.S. District Court for the Eastern District of Missouri, Eastern Division as to whether the first-filed rule applies to the Missouri case and this action and whether this action should be transferred to the Eastern District of Missouri, Eastern Division for further proceedings.

2. Defendants shall provide a copy [*14] of this Order along with their request for a determination of the Missouri District Court on this issue. Defendants shall file a notice with this Court within seven (7) days of the Missouri District Court's determination of this issue. Presumably, the Missouri District Court will direct any further briefing that it may require.

3. The Court has also considered Bray's Motion for Reconsideration (Dkt. 20) directed at the Court's previous order extending the deadlines for Defendants to respond to the Complaint and for the Parties to conduct their case management meeting. (Dkt. 19) Because this entire case is now stayed pending a determination by the Missouri District Court, that Motion (Dkt. 20) is DENIED as moot.[3]

4. The Clerk is DIRECTED to TERMINATE any pending motions until the Missouri District Court has determined how the two actions should proceed. If, after the Missouri District Court's determination concerning

[3] The Court has considered the arguments raised in Bray's Motion, specifically that he was not given an opportunity to file a response to the motion requesting extension prior to the Court's ruling. The Court granted the extension of deadlines due to the nature of the dispute raised in the motion to transfer. Had the Court awaited Bray's response, its ruling would have been the same. Therefore, the Court did not require a response prior to ruling on the motion requesting extension. If the Missouri Court declines to accept transfer, Bray will have an opportunity to weigh-in on the setting of case management deadlines in this case.

the possible transfer of this case, the Court retains jurisdiction over this matter, the Court will direct the Clerk to reinstate any terminated motions.

ORDER GRANTING IN PART AND DENYING IN PART THE MOTION TO DISMISS

Re: Dkt. No. 46

Killian Pest Control contends that HomeTeam Pest Defense is violating the antitrust laws by locking its competitors out of a particular type of pest control business. HomeTeam has moved to dismiss the Second Amended Complaint

("SAC"). The motion is granted to the extent Killian seeks to assert claims relating to 35 geographic markets in which it does not operate, in which it has not attempted to operate, and in which it has expressed no intent to operate. The motion is denied with respect to the antitrust claims asserted for the two geographic markets in which Killian does operate.

I.

The allegations discussed in this opinion, which must be assumed true for purposes of this motion, are taken from the SAC and the documents it relies on. Bell Atl. Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 555, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007).

HomeTeam provides a unique kind of pest control service. It partners with home builders to install "tube-in-the-wall" pest control systems that allow homeowners to fight termites and other pests without having to spray chemicals in the living areas of their homes. [*3] The tubes, which contain small perforations, run through the walls of the home. The system is serviced by squirting pesticides into a "port" that accesses the tubes from the exterior of the house. The pesticides travel through the tubes and exit through the perforations, while remaining inside the walls and outside the living areas. HomeTeam gets paid by homebuilders for installing the system into homes as they are being built. It also gets paid by homeowners for servicing the systems after the homes are purchased. HomeTeam installs and services tube-in-the-wall systems in many places throughout the country. HomeTeam used to own a patent for the tube-in-the-wall system, but it has expired.

Killian Pest Control does business in and around Bakersfield and Fresno, California. During the 1990s, Killian tried to get into the business of installing tube-in-the-wall systems, as well as servicing those systems. Killian originally had a business arrangement with HomeTeam that allowed Killian to install tube-in-the-wall systems. But HomeTeam sent Killian a letter asserting that it "no longer [had] any rights or license to use any of [HomeTeam's] patented technologies, including Tubes-In-The-Wall, [*4] trademarks, or other Intellectual Property Rights of [HomeTeam]." As a result, Killian "quit marketing [its] ability to install tube-in-the-wall pest defense systems," and limited itself to servicing those systems.

Almost 10 years later, in 2004, HomeTeam started trying to push Killian and others out of the servicing business. This is discussed more fully in Section III, but for now suffice to say that by this time HomeTeam had started doing a number of things to prevent anyone else from servicing the tube-in-the-wall systems. For example, HomeTeam started placing locks on the ports to the systems, without giving the key to the homeowners. (HomeTeam justified this in part by claiming to be the owner of the ports to the systems). HomeTeam also misled homeowners into believing they were not permitted to use anyone else to service the systems, and that servicing by anyone other than HomeTeam would damage the systems.

Killian was, with the permission of its clients, breaking the locks (since the clients didn't have keys) to provide the service they desired. HomeTeam sent two letters to Killian, threatening to sue it for a variety of reasons if it didn't stop breaking the locks and servicing [*5] the systems. HomeTeam ultimately did sue Killian, in state court. And now Killian has sued HomeTeam in federal court, alleging that HomeTeam is violating the antitrust laws by locking everyone else out of the market (literally and figuratively) for servicing tube-in-the-wall pest control systems.

In a prior round of motions, the Court ruled that Killian has adequately pled the relevant product market — the market for servicing tube-in-the-wall systems. But the Court granted HomeTeam's motion to dismiss on the ground that Killian had not pled enough facts to adequately explain what the relevant geographic market might be. Now, in the SAC, Killian alleges that there are a number of individual geographic markets throughout the country in which HomeTeam behaves anticompetitively. HomeTeam has moved to dismiss the SAC.

II.

The first question presented by the new motion to dismiss is whether Killian, as a competitor who does business in Fresno and Bakersfield, has standing to sue for alleged antitrust violations committed by HomeTeam throughout the country.

Killian now alleges that there are 37 "individual regional geographic markets for HomeTeam's services," and that these 37 individual markets [*6] correspond to "specific metropolitan 'statistical areas' that have been defined by the United States Government's Office of Management and Budget."[1] The SAC includes concrete allegations about two of these 37 markets — Bakersfield and Fresno. And it includes concrete allegations about the effect of HomeTeam's conduct on those two markets. It alleges that HomeTeam engaged in improper tactics that eliminated competition in those markets, in a way that harmed competition to service tube-in-the-wall systems (namely, by freezing out Killian), which in turn forced consumers to pay supracompetitive prices for servicing. The SAC also alleges that HomeTeam's anticompetitive conduct directly harmed Killian. This is enough to allege standing to challenge HomeTeam's conduct in the geographic markets where Killian has operated. See, e.g., Bhan v. NME Hospitals, Inc., 772 F.2d 1467, 1470 (9th Cir. 1985); Glen Holly Entm't, Inc. v. Tektronix, Inc., 352 F.3d 367, 372 (9th Cir. 2003) (To allege antitrust injury for purposes of establishing antitrust standing, a plaintiff must plead "unlawful conduct, . . . causing an injury to the plaintiff, . . . that flows from that which makes the conduct unlawful, and . . . that is of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent."' (quoting Am. Ad Mgmt., Inc. v. Gen. Tel. Co. of Cal., 190 F.3d 1051, 1055 (9th Cir. 1999))).

However, Killian does not allege it ever participated [*7] in the other 35 markets. Nor does Killian allege it has attempted to, or genuinely intends to and is prepared to, expand its business into any of the other markets, only to be stymied by HomeTeam's anticompetitive conduct in those markets. Bubar v. Ampco Foods, Inc., 752 F.2d 445, 450 (9th Cir. 1985). The closest the SAC comes to addressing this issue is in Paragraph 73, which alleges that Killian "planned to open in California and Arizona by 1994, expand to Nevada in 1995, and then open in New Mexico, Colorado, Oregon, Hawaii, and Texas in 1996." But this background allegation was in reference to Killian's earlier efforts to enter the market for installing tube-in-the-wall systems, and to HomeTeam's alleged efforts to prevent Killian from entering that market. The SAC does not assert antitrust violations with respect to the installation market, however, and more importantly it does not allege that HomeTeam's anticompetitive conduct in the servicing markets during this decade has stymied any effort by Killian to expand into the other servicing markets. Indeed, there is no allegation that Killian has made any effort to, or possessed any desire to, expand its servicing business into the other markets. Therefore, Killian lacks standing to pursue [*8] antitrust claims for anticompetitive conduct in geographic markets other than Fresno or Bakersfield. Cf. Glen Holly Entm't, 352 F.3d at 372; Bourns, Inc. v. Raychem Corp., 331 F.3d 704, 712 (9th Cir. 2003); Bhan, 772 F.2d at 1470; Bubar, 752 F.2d at 450; Solinger v. A&M Records, Inc., 586 F.2d 1304, 1309-1310 (9th Cir. 1978).

Killian protests that the question whether it may complain of anticompetitive conduct in the other 35 markets is not really one of standing. Killian contends it is a question of damages, and that the absence of injury to it in the 35 other markets will simply mean that if it establishes antitrust violations in those markets it won't be able to collect damages for them. If Killian had alleged a single, unified but non-contiguous market for servicing of tube-in-the-wall systems that existed in various places around the country and that Killian only participated in portions of that single market, perhaps this argument would work. But Killian chose to allege 37 "individual" geographic markets for servicing tube-in-the-wall pest control systems. And although the SAC is virtually silent about how these markets compare to one another, it hints that there may be competitive distinctions among them that matter for antitrust purposes. For example, the SAC alleges: "The individual geographic markets for servicing of the tube-in-the-wall system may include, in addition to HomeTeam [*9] and other national competitors, regional firms who are willing to service tube-in-the-wall systems but have been unable to enter the market due to HomeTeam's monopolization of the service market." SAC ¶ 203.

[1] To be more precise, the current iteration of Killian's complaint alleges only 36 individual markets, because Killian's lawyers forgot to include the Fresno metropolitan statistical area. However, Killian's lawyers have made clear that this was an inadvertent omission, and Killian will not be penalized for this. Killian will be permitted to amend the operative complaint to cure this omission. For the sake of efficiency, this discussion assumes that Killian has actually alleged all 37 of the markets it intended to allege, because that will be the case once Killian's lawyers fix the mistake.

Given the way Killian has alleged the geographic markets, it lacks standing to pursue antitrust claims with respect to the ones in which it has not been, and is not likely to be, injured.

III.

"'The offense of monopoly under § 2 of the Sherman Act has two elements: (1) the possession of monopoly power in the relevant market and (2) the willful acquisition or maintenance of that power as distinguished from growth or development as a consequence of a superior product, business acumen, or historic accident.'" Eastman Kodak Co. v. Image Tech. Servs., Inc., 504 U.S. 451, 481, 112 S. Ct. 2072, 119 L. Ed. 2d 265 (1992) (quoting United States v. Grinnell Corp., 384 U.S. 563, 570-71, 86 S. Ct. 1698, 16 L. Ed. 2d 778 (1966)). At the pleading stage, Killian satisfies these elements.

A.

To adequately plead possession of monopoly power in a relevant market, "[a] plaintiff must [both] allege that the defendant has market power within a 'relevant market,'" and must provide a facially plausible definition of that market. Newcal Indus., Inc. v. Ikon Office Sol., 513 F.3d 1038, 1044, 1045 n.4 (9th Cir. 2008). Defining the relevant market requires alleging both "a relevant product market and a relevant geographic market." Sidibe v. Sutter Health, 4 F. Supp. 3d 1160, 1174 (N.D. Cal. 2013); see also Newcal, 513 F.3d at 1045 n.4.

As the Court ruled in its June 16, 2015 Order, Killian [*10] has adequately pled a relevant product market: the market for service of tube-in-the-wall pest control systems. The SAC now also adequately pleads the two individual relevant geographic markets in which Killian has standing to sue — the Bakersfield and Fresno markets — because it plausibly describes "in reasonably concrete geographic terms" the boundaries of those two areas of effective competition for service of tube-in-the-wall systems. See Sidibe, 4 F. Supp. 3d at 1175.

And Killian has plausibly alleged that HomeTeam "controls [or controlled during the relevant period] nearly 100% of the . . . market" for servicing tube-in-the-wall systems in Bakersfield and Fresno.[2] Kodak, 504 U.S. at 481. That is sufficient to allege HomeTeam possesses or possessed monopoly power in these two markets at the relevant time. Id. ("80% to 95%" market share is a monopoly under Section 2); Grinnell Corp., 384 U.S. at 587 n.2 (87% is a monopoly under Section 2).

B.

Killian has also plausibly alleged that HomeTeam willfully maintained its monopoly in the Bakersfield and Fresno service markets through anticompetitive conduct, i.e., that Killian used its monopoly power "'to foreclose competition, to gain a competitive advantage, or to destroy a competitor.'" Kodak, 504 U.S. at 482-83 (quoting United States v. Griffith, 334 U.S. 100, 107, 68 S. Ct. 941, 92 L. Ed. 1236 (1948)). The SAC explains that

---

[2] The SAC alleges that although HomeTeam purported to leave the Bakersfield market in 2014 (in an attempt to encourage Killian to settle prior state-court litigation between the parties), it merely handed its operations over to Orkin, a company owned by HomeTeam's parent company, Rollins. Even if HomeTeam has truly exited the Bakersfield market, its allegedly monopolistic conduct before its exit is still a proper basis for an antitrust claim for damages, and also likely does not moot Killian's prayer for injunctive relief with respect to that market, given the SAC's allegation that HomeTeam left the market despite that it was profitable and could easily return to the same improper tactics as before. See, e.g., United States v. Concentrated Phosphate Exp. Ass'n, 393 U.S. 199, 203, 89 S. Ct. 361, 21 L. Ed. 2d 344 (1968) (noting, in an antitrust case, that "[m]ere voluntary cessation of allegedly illegal conduct does not moot a case; if it did, the courts would be compelled to leave '[t]he defendant . . . free to return to his old ways.'" (quoting United States v. W. T. Grant Co., 345 U.S. 629, 632, 73 S. Ct. 894, 97 L. Ed. 1303 (1953) (alterations original)). In any case, Killian also alleges HomeTeam continues to engage in monopolistic conduct in the Fresno market.

HomeTeam "used its monopoly over [*11] [the installation of tube-in-the-wall pest control systems] to gain . . . a monopoly over the service of" those systems. Image Tech. Servs., Inc. v. Eastman Kodak Co., 125 F.3d 1195, 1208 (9th Cir. 1997). HomeTeam allegedly accomplished this in part by placing locked covers on the ports of the tube-in-the-wall systems it installed, to prevent competitors from servicing those systems. HomeTeam also allegedly refused to give homeowners a key to the locks, falsely claimed that it owned the locks, and deliberately misled homeowners into thinking that service by another provider could damage the tube-in-the-wall system, despite having no reason to believe this was the case. Killian further alleges that HomeTeam engaged in "bad faith enforcement" of its expired patent for the tube-in-the-wall system to discourage competitors in the service market. Nat'l Semiconductor Corp. v. Linear Tech. Corp., 703 F. Supp. 845, 850 (N.D. Cal. 1988). HomeTeam threatened competitors by falsely claiming that servicing tube-in-the-wall systems violated HomeTeam's patent on the system (which is impossible, because the patent was for the system itself, not for a method of servicing the system). Killian also alleges that, in 2013, HomeTeam threatened to sue Killian for patent infringement if it attempted to install a tube-in-the-wall system, despite knowing the patent on that [*12] system had expired in 2007. The SAC suggests HomeTeam did this to discourage Killian from competing with HomeTeam in the service market as well.

Killian further alleges that HomeTeam eventually brought an objectively baseless lawsuit against it when Killian ignored HomeTeam's threats and broke locks with the homeowners' permission to service tube-in-the-wall systems installed by HomeTeam. Killian alleges that HomeTeam knew there was no legal basis for that lawsuit. While HomeTeam is correct that Noerr-Pennington doctrine immunizes legitimate litigation from antitrust claims, the specific allegations about the baselessness of HomeTeam's pre-suit assertion of patent rights and the baselessness of HomeTeam's insistence that it owned the locks are sufficient, at the pleading stage, to warrant a conclusion that HomeTeam's conduct falls into the "sham litigation" exception to Noerr-Pennington doctrine. Prof'l Real Estate Inv'rs, Inc. v. Columbia Pictures Indus., Inc., 508 U.S. 49, 60, 113 S. Ct. 1920, 123 L. Ed. 2d 611 (1993); see also Boone v. Redev. Agency of City of San Jose, 841 F.2d 886, 894 (9th Cir. 1988). Moreover, Killian has alleged that the lawsuit was part of a larger plan by HomeTeam to stifle the competition by installing the locks, misleading homeowners about the system, and threatening to bring baseless litigation against other competitors that attempted to service the systems. [*13] "When . . . the [protected] activity is but a part of a larger overall scheme to restrain trade, there is no overall immunity" for the anticompetitive conduct. Clipper Exxpress v. Rocky Mountain Motor Tariff Bureau, Inc., 690 F.2d 1240, 1263 (9th Cir. 1982). That is, litigation that would normally be protected under Noerr-Pennington (because it is not objectively baseless) may still give rise to an antitrust claim if the litigation is part of a larger plot by the defendant to violate antitrust laws. Id.

It also does not matter, at least at the pleading stage, that HomeTeam obtained its monopoly power in the servicing market partly by reaching service agreements with some of the people who purchased houses with tube-in-the-wall systems. Although "the law prohibits an antitrust claimant from resting on market power that arises solely from contractual rights that consumers knowingly and voluntarily gave to the defendant," Newcal, 513 F.3d at 1048 (emphasis added), that rule does not apply where the defendant obtained the monopoly only partially by that means, or where the defendant reached the contractual agreements in an anticompetitive market, or where "market imperfections, as well as [the defendant's] . . . deceit, prevent consumers from realizing that their choice in the initial market will impact their [*14] freedom to shop in the aftermarket," id. at 1050. Here, Killian has alleged that HomeTeam's market power does not arise "solely" from these service contracts, but also from other anticompetitive behavior; indeed, it is undisputed that not all purchasers of homes with tube-in-the-wall systems have service contracts with HomeTeam. And Killian has alleged that HomeTeam deliberately misled consumers to prevent them from realizing they were limiting their choice in the market for service of their tube-in-the-wall systems. Accordingly, this "is not a case in which the alleged market power flows [solely] from [knowing and voluntary] contractual exclusivity." Id.

At root, one major problem with HomeTeam's argument for dismissal is that it assumes consumers went shopping for tube-in-the-wall systems and freely negotiated contracts with HomeTeam to service those systems. But based on the allegations in the SAC (as well as common sense), the homeowner-consumers in this case did not go out and purchase tube-in-the-wall systems; they went out and purchased houses that happened to have tube-in-the-wall pest control systems installed in them (only to be misled into signing anticompetitive service contracts at [*15] closing). Given this, and given the other conduct alleged in the SAC, the cases in which antitrust claims are foreclosed by a consumer's decision to limit his choices in the future do not control. Cf. Queen City Pizza, Inc. v. Domino's Pizza, Inc., 124 F.3d 430, 440 (3d Cir. 1997).

For all these reasons, Killian has stated a claim for violation of section 2. The motion to dismiss Killian's Sherman Act claim as to the Bakersfield and Fresno markets is denied.

IV.

Because Killian's Sherman Act section 2 claim survives, Killian's state-law antitrust claims also survive. See Cnty. of Tuolumne v. Sonora Cmty. Hosp., 236 F.3d 1148, 1160 (9th Cir. 2001) ("The analysis under California's antitrust law mirrors the analysis under federal law because the Cartwright Act was modeled after the Sherman Act." (citation omitted)). Likewise, Killian's California Unfair Competition Law claim survives because HomeTeam's allegedly unlawful conduct consists solely of the antitrust violations, and so the UCL claim stands or falls with those antitrust claims. *See, e.g., PNY Techs., Inc. v. SanDisk Corp., No. C-11-04689 YGR, 2012 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 55965, 2012 WL 1380271, at 15 (N.D. Cal. Apr. 20, 2012).

IT IS SO ORDERED.

ORDER

Before the Court are Defendant Salt River Agricultural Improvement and Power District's (the "District") Motion [*2] for Certification under [28 U.S.C. § 1292(b)], (Doc. 82), and Motion to Stay, (Doc. 83). The motions are fully briefed, and neither party requested oral argument. For the reasons below, both motions are denied.

BACKGROUND

Plaintiff SolarCity Corporation, a manufacturer and distributor of solar panels, filed suit against the District and the Salt River Valley Water Users' Association (the "Association") alleging violations of federal and state antitrust laws. (Doc. 39.) SolarCity alleges that the District and the Association, operating as the Salt River Project ("SRP"), exercise monopoly power over the sale of retail electricity in the greater Phoenix-metro area. (Id., PP 1-2.) It claims SRP imposed a fee that makes it economically infeasible for customers to obtain some of their electricity from solar systems and that the fee has the effect of eliminating competition from SolarCity and other solar companies in the market. (Id., PP 4, 13.)

The District and the Association both filed motions to dismiss, which raised several immunities based on the District's status as a political subdivision of the State of Arizona. (Docs. 52, 53.) On October 27, 2015, the Court dismissed the Association and several of SolarCity's antitrust claims. [*3] (Doc. 77.) It also found that the Local Government Antitrust Act ("LGAA") barred SolarCity's claims for damages under federal antitrust law because the District is a political subdivision of Arizona, but denied the District's motion with respect to the remaining immunity defenses. (Id. at 22-26.) SolarCity's claims for equitable relief under § 2 of the Sherman Act (monopolization and attempted monopolization) and damages claims under state antitrust and tort law survived. The District now moves for the Court to certify three issues for interlocutory appeal pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1292(b): (1) whether it is immune from all remaining claims under the state action doctrine, (2) whether it is immune from all damages claims under Arizona Revised Statute ("A.R.S.") § 12-820.01, and (3) whether it immune from all remaining claims under the filed-rate doctrine. (Doc. 82.) The District also requests that the Court stay the case pending its appeal. (Doc. 83.)

LEGAL STANDARD

Under § 1292(b), the district court shall state in a non-appealable order if the court is of the "opinion that such order involves a controlling question of law as to which there is substantial ground for difference of opinion and that an immediate appeal from the order may materially [*4] advance the ultimate termination of the litigation[.]" 28 U.S.C. § 1292(b). The "requirements of § 1292(b) are jurisdictional," and the procedure is a "narrow exception to the final judgment rule[.]" Couch v. Telescope Inc., 611 F.3d 629, 633 (9th Cir. 2010) (internal quotations omitted). "The party seeking certification has the burden of showing that exceptional circumstances justify a departure from the 'basic rule of postponing appellate review until after the entry of a final judgment.'" Fukuda v. County of Los Angeles, 630 F. Supp. 228, 229 (C.D. Cal. 1986) (quoting Coopers & Lybrand v. Livesay, 437 U.S. 463, 475, 98 S. Ct. 2454, 57 L. Ed. 2d 351 (1978)). "[A] party's strong disagreement with the Court's ruling is not sufficient for there to be a 'substantial ground for difference.' [In addition,] [t]hat settled law might be applied differently does not establish a substantial ground for difference of opinion." Couch, 611 F.3d at 633.

ANALYSIS

I. Motion for § 1292(b) Certification

The District argues that each immunity issue satisfies the requirements of § 1292(b). It claims that resolution of these issues would avoid the risk of piecemeal litigation and multiple appeals, which would lower the costs and burden for both the parties and the Court. (Doc. 82 at 2.) The Court disagrees.

A. State-Action Immunity

State-action immunity "exempts qualifying state and local government regulation from federal antitrust, even if the regulation at issue compels an otherwise clear violation [*5] of the federal antitrust laws." Cost Mgmt. Servs. v. Wash. Nat. Gas Co., 99 F.3d 937, 941 (9th Cir. 1996) (internal quotation marks omitted). The doctrine originated in Parker v. Brown, 317 U.S. 341, 63 S. Ct. 307, 87 L. Ed. 315 (1943), in which the Supreme Court found that the "Sherman Act was not intended to apply to acts of the States 'as sovereigns.'" Springs Ambulance Serv., Inc. v. City of Rancho Mirage, Cal., 745 F.2d 1270, 1272 (9th Cir. 1984). But "this state-action immunity does not apply automatically to the state's political subdivisions." Id. "As with private parties, immunity will only attach to the activities of local governmental entities if they are undertaken pursuant to a 'clearly articulated and affirmatively expressed' state policy to displace competition." F.T.C. v. Phoebe Putney Health Sys., Inc., 133 S. Ct. 1003, 1011, 185 L. Ed. 2d 43 (2013). "[G]iven the fundamental national values of free enterprise and economic competition that are embodied in the federal antitrust laws, 'state-action immunity is disfavored[.]'" Id. at 1010 (quoting F.T.C. v. Ticor Title Ins. Co., 504 U.S. 621, 636, 112 S. Ct. 2169, 119 L. Ed. 2d 410 (1992)).

The District argues that the question of state-action immunity is a controlling question of law because, if it applies, it bars all of SolarCity's antitrust claims.[1] An issue is "controlling" if its resolution on appeal "could materially affect the outcome of litigation in the district court." In re Cement Antitrust Litig., 673 F.2d 1020, 1026 (9th Cir. 1982). Because equitable relief under the federal antitrust laws is the crux of SolarCity's case, the Court concludes that application of state-action immunity is a controlling [*6] question of law under § 1292(b). See Springs Ambulance, 745 F.2d at 1272 (granting permission for interlocutory appeal of district court's order denying state-action immunity on motion to dismiss after district court found that it is a controlling issue of law). However, the Court finds that the District has failed to demonstrate a substantial ground for difference of opinion on this issue.

In ruling on the motion to dismiss, the Court concluded that whether Arizona has articulated a clear policy permitting the District's conduct is a question of fact and noted that SolarCity had adequately alleged that Arizona has no such policy. (Doc. 77 at 25.) The District argues that the "clear articulation" prong is a question of law that the Court should have decided in its Order. The Court agrees with the District. "[T]he state-action immunity question is one of law that turns on whether the displacement of competition with monopolies in the [relevant] market was 'clearly articulated and affirmatively expressed as state policy.'" Columbia Steel Casting Co. v. Portland Gen. Elec. Co., 111 F.3d 1427, 1442 (9th Cir. 1996).

However, correction of this error on appeal would not materially advance the ultimate termination of the litigation because there is no substantial ground [*7] for difference of opinion that the District's alleged conduct is not protected by state-action immunity. Had the Court decided the issue as a matter of law, it would have found that Arizona has not expressly articulated a clear policy authorizing the conduct of the District. See Cost Mgmt., 99 F.3d at 942 ("the relevant question is whether the regulatory structure which has been adopted by the state has specifically authorized the conduct alleged to violate the Sherman Act"). In fact, the opposite is true. A.R.S. § 40-202(B), cited by SolarCity in its response to the District's motion to dismiss, provides that "[i]t is the public policy of this state that a competitive market shall exist in the sale of electric generation service." The District did not address this statute in its reply brief, even though, as the moving party, it had the burden of demonstrating that state-action immunity protects its conduct. In light of the statute, there are no substantial grounds for disagreement that Arizona has no clearly expressed and affirmative policy displacing competition in the retail electricity market.[2]

Nonetheless, the District argued that "Arizona's clearly articulated policy, which is expressed in the Arizona Constitution and statutes, has been to displace unfettered competition with an elaborate regulatory structure." (Doc. 53 at 10.) It claimed "[r]etail electric rates in Arizona are not determined by competition," and cited a litany of statutes and regulations pertaining to the Arizona Corporation Commission's ("ACC") authority to prescribe rates for public service corporations and the ratemaking process in general. (Id. at 10-11.); see also Ariz. Const. Art. 15 § 3

[1] It would not bar SolarCity's remaining state law tort claims.

[2] The District presents no additional arguments on the merits of its state-action immunity defense. Instead, it only takes issue with the [*8] Court's finding that whether Arizona has a clearly expressed and articulated policy displacing competition in the retail electricity market was a question of fact.

(mandating that the ACC "shall, prescribe just and reasonable rates and charges to be made and collected, by public service corporations"). In essence, the District argued that its conduct is a foreseeable result of Arizona's regulatory scheme pertaining to electricity rates because the retail electric market is heavily regulated, no other companies are certified to provide retail electricity, and electricity rates are set by the ACC, not the market. See Hallie v. Eau Claire, 471 U.S. 34, 43, 105 S. Ct. 1713, 85 L. Ed. 2d 24 (1985) (finding that state-action immunity applies [*9] if "anticompetitive effects logically would result from [the State's] authority to regulate").

At most, the District demonstrated that Arizona does not permit retail electricity rates to be determined in the open market. This is the function of the ACC. But the fact that electricity rates are heavily regulated does not mean that the District is free to act anticompetitively when setting its own prices for distribution of electricity, which incorporates those rates. See Phoebe, 133 S. Ct. at 1012 ("Our case law makes clear that state-law authority to act is insufficient to establish state-action immunity; the substate governmental entity must also show that it has been delegated authority to act or regulate anticompetitively."). Nor is the District's anticompetitive conduct a foreseeable result of fixed electricity rates. The District adheres to an administrative scheme when setting its "terms and conditions for customer selection, complaint resolution, consumer protection, stranded costs, distribution service rates and charges, system benefit charges and other related matters[.]" A.R.S. § 30-802(B). But this hardly indicates that the District is free to act anticompetitively. Rather, the purpose of the administrative process [*10] governing the District's prices is to "promote consistent statewide application of [the public power entities'] respective rules, procedures and orders." Id. § 30-802(A).

In summary, had the Court reached the issue as a matter of law, it would have concluded that Arizona does not have a clearly articulated policy to displace competition in the retail electricity market. The clearly articulated policy in Arizona favors competition. Although the Court erroneously concluded that application of state-action immunity presented questions of fact, correction of this error on appeal would not materially advance the ultimate termination of this case because, given the undisputed language of A.R.S. § 40-202(B), it is beyond substantial dispute that the District's alleged conduct is not protected by state-action immunity. Therefore, the Court declines to certify this issue for interlocutory appeal.

B. Absolute Immunity Under Arizona Law

A.R.S. § 12-820.01 provides "absolute immunity" for a public entity's "exercise of a judicial or legislative function." As a political subdivision of the state, the District is a "public entity" under Arizona law. See A.R.S. § 12-820(7) ("'Public entity' includes this state and any political subdivision of this state."). This [*11] immunity applies to damages only, not equitable relief. See AlliedSignal, Inc. v. City of Phx., 182 F.3d 692, 697 (9th Cir. 1999) (citing Zeigler v. Kirschner, 162 Ariz. 77, 781 P.2d 54, 61 (Ariz. Ct. App. 1989)). Because this issue turns on questions of fact and would only bar damages, not SolarCity's claims for equitable relief under the federal antitrust laws, it is not a controlling question of law. See In re Cement Antitrust Litig., 673 F.2d at 1026.

In addition, there are no substantial grounds for difference of opinion regarding the Court's decision. The Court found that whether the District's alleged ratemaking ability is a legislative function is a question of fact. (Doc. 77 at 23.) The District argues this is a question of law. (Doc. 82 at 8.) Absolute immunity is generally a question of law for the court to decide; however, "[b]ecause absolute immunity is related to a defendant's status, usually there are limited factual determinations necessary to resolve the issue." Link v. Pima Cty., 193 Ariz. 336, 972 P.2d 669, 674 (Ariz. Ct. App. 1998) (internal citations omitted). "If an absolute immunity defense is raised and related factual issues exist, those issues should be resolved by the jury as in qualified immunity cases." Id.

The District labels its conduct as ratemaking, but there is no authority holding that the District's adoption of prices for sale of retail electricity is ratemaking, let alone that it is a legislative function. The cases [*12] cited by the District in its motion applied to the ACC's ratemaking ability, not the District's. See Arizona Corp. Comm'n v. State ex rel. Woods, 171 Ariz. 286, 830 P.2d 807, 812 (Ariz. 1992) (noting ratemaking is a legislative power of the ACC); Arizona Corp. Comm'n v. Superior Court, 107 Ariz. 24, 480 P.2d 988, 991 (Ariz. 1971) (same). The prices set by the District for its distribution of electricity are wholly separate from the ACC's process for setting the rate of a commodity sold by a public utility.

The District claims "it is the substance of the public function at issue that determines whether it is legislative in character and that if ratemaking is legislative in character for the ACC, it is legislative in character for the District as well." (Doc. 83 at 13.) But when ruling on a motion to dismiss, the Court is limited to the allegations in the complaint. Here, the allegations of the complaint do not allow the Court to make any determination about the District's price setting function, i.e., whether this function has the same features that make the ACC's rate setting functions legislative in character. Instead, SolarCity alleges that the District acts more like a private corporation because its Board approves the prices after it receives comment from interested parties, it is not subject to any regulation by any state agency with respect to determining [*13] its prices, it refused to release information about the process, and it never released a final decision stating the factual and legal bases for the prices. (Doc. 39, PP 42, 91-102.) Whether the District engages in ratemaking at all, let alone any legislative functions as a traditional branch of government, remains to be determined on a fully-developed factual record. The Court will not certify this issue for interlocutory appeal.

C. Filed-Rate Doctrine

The filed-rate doctrine "precludes interference with the rate setting authority of an administrative agency[.]" Wah Chang v. Duke Energy Trading & Mktg., 507 F.3d 1222, 1225 (9th Cir. 2007). Rates that are deemed reasonable by a regulatory agency are insulated from challenge. See Ark. La. Gas Co. v. Hall, 453 U.S. 571, 577, 101 S. Ct. 2925, 69 L. Ed. 2d 856 (1981).[3] Originally, the doctrine applied to rates reviewed and filed by federal agencies. See id. at 578. Several states have adopted the doctrine, see Qwest Corp. v. Kelly, 204 Ariz. 25, 59 P.3d 789, 800 (Ariz. Ct. App. 2002) (listing cases), but Arizona has not, *see id.; see also Johnson v. First Am. Title Ins. Co., No. CV-08-01184-PHX-DGC, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 93415, 2008 WL 4850198, at 4 (D. Ariz. 2008) (Arizona "has never adopted the filed-rate doctrine"). Here, the Court concluded that the doctrine did not apply because, even assuming the prices set by the District are "rates," "SolarCity does not challenge the District's electricity rates as unreasonable, but instead alleges the District imposed [*14] the rates to exclude it from the market." (Doc. 77 at 25.)

Assuming arguendo that this is a controlling question of law, there are no substantial grounds for difference of opinion regarding the Court's finding. The filed-rate doctrine is one of deference for a regulatory agency's conclusion that a rate for some type of public good or service is reasonable. See Hall, 453 U.S. at 577. The purpose of the doctrine is to prevent "price discrimination among rate payers" and preserve "the role of regulatory agencies in deciding reasonable rates for public utilities and services." Qwest, 59 P.3d at 799. Federal courts "apply the filed rate doctrine out of deference to a 'congressional scheme of uniform . . . regulation.' Otherwise [courts] would impermissibly 'usurp[ ] a function that Congress has assigned to a federal regulatory body.'" Cty. of Stanislaus v. Pac. Gas & Elec. Co., 114 F.3d 858, 862 (9th Cir. 1997) (quoting Hall, 453 U.S. at 579, 582) (internal citations omitted).

SolarCity does not challenge the reasonableness of any "filed rate" set by any regulatory agency. It does not claim the District's prices are too high, too low, or that they are artificially inflated to increase profit. Rather, they challenge the [*15] District's discriminatory pricing directed at restricting competition. The result would be the same had the District decided to refuse electric service to customers who purchase some of their electricity from SolarCity.

The District also conflates the rate for electricity, which is determined by the ACC, and the prices set by the District for distributing that electricity via the grid. The District does not claim to be a regulatory authority, it does not argue that Arizona grants it any authority to set uniform prices for distributing electricity, and it does not file the prices with any other governmental unit but itself.[4] No regulatory authority, such as the ACC, approved the District's electricity prices, and thus there is no reason to assume the prices are reasonable as a matter of law.[5]

[3] Although refined in Hall, the doctrine originated in Keogh v. Chicago & Northwestern Railway, Co., 260 U.S. 156, 43 S. Ct. 47, 67 L. Ed. 183 (1922), and has been criticized and narrowed by the Ninth Circuit in Cost Management, 99 F.3d at 943-48.

Furthermore, the doctrine does not bar antitrust suits by competitors alleging that "the rates which were adopted were adopted in part because of an antitrust violation on the part of the defendant." Cost Mgmt., 99 F.3d at 947. The District argues SolarCity brings this action "in the shoes" of electric customers. (Doc. 99 at 11.) But the Court has concluded that SolarCity is a competitor of the District, and SolarCity alleges the District violated antitrust laws when it changed its pricing structure. The doctrine simply does not apply to this case, and the Court declines to certify this issue for interlocutory appeal.

D. Conclusion

The District has failed to establish exceptional circumstances that would justify immediate appeal of these issues. See Livesay, 437 U.S. at 475. The motion is denied.

II. Motion to Stay

The District requests that the Court stay this action pending resolution of its appeal on two issues: state-action immunity and absolute immunity under Arizona law. (Doc. 83.) The District appealed the Court's ruling on these issues on November 20, 2015. (Doc. 81.) It argues these two immunities are immediately appealable at this stage, and thus the Court should stay the case.[6] Even assuming these issues are appealable [*17] as of right, it "is firmly established that an appeal from an interlocutory order does not divest the trial court of jurisdiction to continue with other phases of the case." Plotkin v. Pac. Tel. & Tel. Co., 688 F.2d 1291, 1293 (9th Cir. 1982).[7] Although the Court must wait for the Ninth Circuit's determination before proceeding on those issues, the Court is not required to stay the entire case. See Britton v. Co-op Banking Grp., 916 F.2d 1405, 1412 (9th Cir. 1990) ("Absent a stay, an appeal seeking review of collateral orders does not deprive the trial court of jurisdiction over other proceedings in the case, and an appeal of an interlocutory order does not ordinarily deprive the district court of jurisdiction except with regard to the matters that are the subject of the appeal."). As stated above, the Court declines to certify the three immunity issues for direct appeal, and it sees no reason to further delay the case.

[4] If, for instance, SolarCity filed suit challenging the rates for electricity set by the ACC, the doctrine would apply and bar the suit. See Hall, 453 U.S. at 584

[5] The District argues that its Board approved the prices, and thus they are entitled to deference. But the District cannot self-police its own rates, especially given the Board is elected by its "shareholders," much like a for-profit corporation. (Doc. [*16] 39, PP 24, 25).

[6] The cases cited by the District in support of immediate appeal are not Ninth Circuit authority, and each case dealt with a trial court's denial of an immunity at the summary judgment stage, not the 12(b) stage. See Commuter Transp. Sys., Inc. v. Hillsborough Cty. Aviation Auth., 801 F.2d 1286, 1289 (11th Cir. 1986) (finding district court's order denying summary judgment on state-action immunity grounds a final appealable decision); Tucson Unified Sch. Dist. v. Borek, 234 Ariz. 364, 322 P.3d 181, 184 (Ariz. Ct. App. 2014) (accepting special action jurisdiction of trial court order denying [*18] summary judgment on absolute immunity under A.R.S. § 12-820.01); *Pinal Cty. v. Cooper, 360 P.3d 142, 2015 WL 6157397, at 2 (Ariz. Ct. App., 2015) (allowing appeal of immunity claims denied on motion for summary judgment).

[7] The Court has serious doubts as to whether the two immunity issues are immediately appealable. "Federal appellate jurisdiction is generally limited to review of 'final decisions of the district courts of the United States.'" DC Comics v. Pac. Pictures Corp., 706 F.3d 1009, 1012 (9th Cir. 2013) (quoting 28 U.S.C. § 1291)). The Court did not make a final decision on the state-action doctrine or absolute immunity under Arizona law. The District is free to raise these immunities at summary judgment.

The District asks the Court to use its discretion and stay the case because the District is likely to succeed on its immunity claims, and it will suffer irreparable injury if the Court denies the stay. (Doc. 83 at 9.) "A stay is not a matter of right, even if irreparable injury might otherwise result." Nken v. Holder, 556 U.S. 418, 433, 129 S. Ct. 1749, 173 L. Ed. 2d 550 (2009). Whether to impose a stay is an exercise of judicial discretion guided by four factors: "(1) whether the stay applicant has made a strong showing that he is likely to succeed on the merits; (2) whether the applicant will be irreparably injured absent a stay; (3) whether issuance of the stay will substantially injure the other [parties]; and (4) where the [*19] public interest lies." Id. at 434.

The Court has already concluded that the District is unlikely to succeed on its state-action immunity defense and that questions of fact preclude a determination that the District is absolutely immune under Arizona law. In addition, were the Court inclined to grant the stay, the harm suffered by SolarCity would likely outweigh the harm suffered by the District. SolarCity has allegedly been ousted from the market by the District. Not only does it lose sales, it loses customer goodwill and market share. The District, meanwhile, suffers only monetary harm as a result of litigation, i.e., the money it spends defending itself. Monetary harm is not irreparable. See Sampson v. Murray, 415 U.S. 61, 90, 94 S. Ct. 937, 39 L. Ed. 2d 166 (1974) ("Mere injuries, however substantial, in terms of money, time and energy necessarily expended in the absence of a stay, are not enough."). As such, the Court will not exercise its discretion to stay this case.

Because the Court declines to certify these issues for appeal, and because the Court finds that the District failed to present "a substantial case for relief on the merits," see Lair v. Bullock, 697 F.3d 1200, 1204 (9th Cir. 2012), the District's motion to stay is denied.

IT IS ORDERED that the District's motion for certification pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1292(b), (Doc. [*20] 82), and motion to stay, (Doc. 83), are DENIED.

REPORT AND RECOMMENDATION OF UNITED STATES MAGISTRATE JUDGE

TO: Honorable Orlando L. Garcia

United States District Judge

Pursuant to the order of referral of the above-styled and numbered cause to the undersigned United States Magistrate Judge,[1] and consistent with the authority vested in United States Magistrate Judges under the provisions of 28 U.S.C. § 636(b)(1) and Rule 1 of the Local Rules for the Assignment of Duties to United States Magistrate Judges, Appendix C to the Local Rules for the Western District of Texas, the following report is submitted for your review and consideration.

I. JURISDICTION

Plaintiff United States of America ex rel. University Loft Company ("University Loft," "plaintiff," or "relator") has alleged subject matter jurisdiction under various provisions, including: 31 U.S.C. § 3732(a) (False Claims Act); 31 U.S.C. § 1345 (United States as plaintiff); 28 U.S.C. § 1331 (federal question); 15 U.S.C. § 1121 and 28 U.S.C. §§

[1] Docket no. 31 (filed Sept. 23, 2015).

1338(a) (Lanham Act); 15 U.S.C. §§ 15(a) and 26 (Antitrust claims under Sections 4 and 16 of the Clayton Act); and supplemental jurisdiction over state law claims.[2]

II. SELECTED SUMMARY OF PROCEDURAL HISTORY

Plaintiff initiated this case on June 11, 2014, when it filed an original complaint, [*5] which named four defendants: Avteq, Inc. ("Avteq"), KLN Steel Products Company, LLC ("KLN"), John O'Donnell, and Kelly O'Donnell.[3] Plaintiff's action is principally a qui tam complaint within the meaning of the False Claims Act, brought by University Loft, on behalf of the United States.[4] University Loft is an American company that manufactures and/or assembles furniture in factories located in Indiana and Tennessee.[5] Plaintiff alleges the collective corporate defendants have "common management and manufacturing facilities;" however, they "represent themselves to the Government and the public at large since 2012 as separate companies under the Avteq Group umbrella (the "Avteq Group")."[6] John O'Donnell and Kelly O'Donnell are alleged to "own and/or control the companies of the Avteq Group."[7] Defendants are alleged to be a direct competitors of the plaintiff and "often bid for the same contracts in supplying furniture and related items for government installations."[8] Plaintiff alleges "[i]n recent years [], University Loft has lost multiple contracts to companies in the Avteq Group"[9] due to defendants' engagement "in numerous illegal activities which have given them an unfair competitive advantage [*6] over University Loft."[10] Plaintiff further alleges "Defendants have defrauded the United States out of millions of dollars by engaging in a range of illegal activities involving procurement and delivery of goods under Government Contracts."[11]

Plaintiff's original complaint asserted claims in four counts, with counts one through three asserted against all four defendants and count four asserted against Avteq and KLN:

> count one—"Violation of the False Claims Act - 31 U.S.C. § 3729(a)(1)(A);"
> count two—"Violation of the False Claims Act - 31 U.S.C. § 3729(a)(1)(B);"
> count three—"Conspiracy to Violate the False Claims Act - 31 U.S.C. § 3729(a)(1)(C);" and > count four—"Unfair Competition by Avteq and KLN."[12]

On April 15, 2015, plaintiff filed its motion to file first amended complaint in camera and under seal.[13] On April 22, 2015, the Court denied its motion to seal and, in sum and in part, unsealed plaintiff's original complaint, the United States' notice of election not to intervene, and all filings to be made after the date of the order.[14] On April 22, 2015, plaintiff filed a first amended complaint, that, in sum, added Thurston Manufacturing ("Thurston") as defendant and asserted three federal False Claims Act causes of action against all defendants, one Lanham Act cause of [*7] action against Avteq, and a cause of action for violations of state statutes against Avteq, KLN, and Thurston:

count one—"Violation of the False Claims Act - 31 U.S.C. § 3729(a)(1)(A);"

count two—"Violation of the False Claims Act - 31 U.S.C. § 3729(a)(1)(B);"

count three—"Conspiracy to Violation of the False Claims Act - 31 U.S.C. § 3729(a)(1)(C);"
count four—"False Advertising by Avteq of the Lanham Act;" and count five—"Unfair Competition by Avteq, KLN, and Thurston."[15]

After the return of service on KLN, Avteq, and Thurston,[16] but before defendants filed an answer or responsive pleading, plaintiff filed a second amended complaint, on July 31, 2015.[17] Plaintiff's second amended complaint added Dehler Manufacturing, Inc. ("Dehler") as a party defendant and a new cause of action for tortious interference with prospective business relationships against all defendants:

count one—"Violation of the False Claims Act - 31 U.S.C. § 3729(a)(1)(A):"

count two—"Violation of the False Claims Act - 31 U.S.C. § 3729(a)(1)(B):"

count three—"Conspiracy to Violation of the False Claims Act - 31 U.S.C. § 3729(a)(1)(C);"
count four—"False Advertising by Avteq of the Lanham Act;"
count five—"Unfair Competition by Avteq, KLN and Thurston;" and count six—"Tortious Interference with Prospective Business Relationships."[18]

On September 4, 2015, all defendants jointly filed [*8] motions: (1) to dismiss for failure to state a claim, and (2) for more definite statement.[19] Plaintiff filed separate responses to both motions on September 21, 2015.[20] The same day, plaintiff filed a motion for leave to file third amended complaint.[21] On September 23, 2015, the District Judge referred the case to the undersigned for pretrial management.[22] On October 5, 2015, Defendants filed a consolidated response to plaintiff's motion for leave to file third amended complaint and reply in support of their motion for more definite statement and a reply to plaintiff's response filed to its motion.[23] On October 12, 2015, plaintiff filed its reply in support of its motion for leave to file third amended complaint.[24]

The undersign entered its report and recommendation on October 14, 2015.[25] Thereafter, the District Court entered an order adopting the recommendations made in the report, granted plaintiff's motion for leave to file a third amended complaint, denied as moot defendants' motion for more definite statement,[26] and denied without prejudice defendants' motion to dismiss plaintiff's second amended complaint.[27]

Plaintiff's third amended complaint is plaintiff's "live" pleading.[28] The third amended [*9] complaint included an additional cause of action for bid-rigging in violation of the Sherman Act and Clayton Act against all defendants and added "details" to "clarif[y] its allegations" in response to defendants' previous motions for more definite statement and to dismiss.[29] In sum, the third amended complaint alleges the following causes of action:

> count one—"Violation of the False Claims Act - 31 U.S.C. § 3729(a)(1)(A)" (asserted against all defendants); > count two—"Violation of the False Claims Act - 31 U.S.C. § 3729(a)(1)(B)" (asserted against all defendants); > count three—"Conspiracy to Violation of the False Claims Act - 31 U.S.C. § 3729(a)(1)(C)" (asserted against all defendants); > count four—"False Advertising by Avteq of the Lanham Act" (asserted against Avteq, KLN, and Thurston); > count five—"Bid-rigging in Violation of the Sherman Act and Clayton Act" (asserted against all defendants); > count six—"Unfair Competition by Avteq, KLN and Thurston" (asserted against Avteq, KLN, and Thurston); and > count seven—"Tortious Interference with Prospective Business Relationships" (asserted against Avteq, KLN, and Thurston).[30]

On November 4, 2015, defendants filed a motion to dismiss third amended complaint.[31] On November 13, 2015, plaintiff filed its response to defendants' motion. [*10] [32] On November 25, 2015, defendants filed their reply.[33]

A. Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(1)

As federal courts have limited jurisdiction, the court must diligently assure itself that it has the power to adjudicate the claims before it. "A case is properly dismissed for lack of subject matter jurisdiction when the court lacks the statutory or constitutional power to adjudicate the case."[34] Motions filed under Rule 12(b)(1) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure permit a party to challenge the subject matter jurisdiction of the district court to hear a case.[35]

Lack of subject matter jurisdiction may be found in one of three instances: "(1) the complaint alone; (2) the complaint supplemented by undisputed facts evidenced in the record; or (3) the complaint supplemented by undisputed facts plus the court's resolution of disputed facts."[36] The burden of proof for a Rule 12(b)(1) motion to dismiss is on the party asserting jurisdiction.[37] Accordingly, plaintiff constantly bears the burden of proof that jurisdiction does in fact exist.[38]

A facial attack on subject matter jurisdiction requires the court to decide if the plaintiff has correctly alleged [*11] a basis for subject matter jurisdiction.[39] Such an attack is valid if, from the face of the pleadings, the court can determine it lacks subject matter jurisdiction.[40] When a Rule 12(b)(1) motion attacks the lack of subject matter based on the face of the complaint, the motion is analyzed under the same standard as a motion to dismiss under Rule 12(b)(6),[41] in that all factual allegations in the complaint are taken as true and construed favorably to the plaintiff.[42]

In deciding a Rule 12(b)(1) motion, a federal court may consider the facts in the record, whether disputed or undisputed.[43] But, a Rule 12(b)(1) motion based on evidence in the record, also termed a factual attack, does not accept as true the factual allegations in the live complaint.[44] Factual attacks challenge "the existence of subject matter in fact, irrespective of the pleadings, and matters outside the pleadings, such as testimony and affidavits are considered."[45] Unlike a Rule 12(b)(6) motion, a Rule 12(b)(1) motion is not converted to a summary judgment when a court considers matters outside the complaint.[46] This is true because:

> [A]t issue in a factual 12(b)(1) motion is the trial court's jurisdiction -- its very power to hear the case -- there is substantial authority that the trial court is free to [*12] weigh the evidence and satisfy itself as to the existence of its power to hear the case. In short, no presumptive truthfulness attaches to plaintiff's allegations, and the existence of disputed material facts will not preclude the trial court from evaluating the merits of jurisdictional claims.[47]

When a Rule 12(b)(1) motion is filed with a Rule 12(b)(6) motion, the court generally will consider the Rule 12(b)(1) jurisdictional attacks before addressing any attack on the merits.[48] This requirement prevents a court without jurisdiction from prematurely dismissing a case with prejudice. The court's dismissal of a plaintiff's case because the court lacks subject matter jurisdiction is not a determination of the merits and does not prevent the plaintiff from pursuing a claim in a court that does have proper jurisdiction.[49]

Pursuant to Rule 12(b)(6) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, a plaintiff must state a claim upon which relief can be granted or the complaint may be dismissed with prejudice as a matter of law.[50] When considering a motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim, the "court accepts 'all well-pleaded facts as true, viewing them in the light most favorable to the plaintiff.'" [*13] [51] To withstand a Rule 12(b)(6) motion, "the plaintiff must plead 'enough facts to state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face.'"[52]

Rule 8(a)(2) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure sets out the fundamental pleading standard for civil litigation and governs all claims in a civil suit, requiring "a short plain statement of the claim showing that the pleader is entitled to relief."[53] Although "heightened fact pleading of specifics"[54] may not be adopted when not authorized by the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure,[55] the complaint [*14] taken as a whole "must contain either direct or inferential allegations respecting all the material elements necessary to sustain recovery under some viable legal theory"[56] and a plaintiff's pleading obligation includes the twin requirements of fact-based pleading and plausibility. More specifically, "a plaintiff's obligation to provide the 'grounds' of his 'entitle[ment] to relief' requires more than labels and conclusions, and a formulaic recitation of the elements of a cause of action will not do."[57] "Factual allegations must be enough to raise a right to relief above the speculative level . . . on the assumption that all of the allegations in the complaint are true (even if doubtful in fact)."[58] Although the Supreme Court in Twombly stressed that it did not impose a probability standard at the pleading stage, nevertheless, the allegation of a mere possibility of relief does not satisfy the threshold requirement of Rule 8(a)(2) that the "plain statement" of a claim include factual "allegations plausibly suggesting (not merely consistent with)" an entitlement to relief.[59]

In Katrina Canal Breaches, 495 F.3d at 205 n.10, the United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit acknowledged the United States Supreme Court's abrogation of the "no set of facts" standard for determining the adequacy of a pleading in Bell Atlantic Corp. v. Twombly, a Sherman Act case:

> We have often stated that a claim should not be dismissed under Rule 12(b)(6) unless the plaintiff would not be entitled to relief under any set of facts or any possible theory he may prove consistent with the allegations in the complaint. See, e.g., Martin K. Eby Constr., 369 F.3d at 467 (quoting Jones, 188 F.3d at 324). This standard derived from Conley v. Gibson, which stated that "a complaint should not be dismissed for failure to state a claim unless it appears beyond doubt that the plaintiff can prove no set of facts in support of his claim which would entitle him to relief." 355 U.S. 41, 45-46, 78 S. Ct. 99, 2 L.Ed.2d 80 (1957). When ruling on a motion to dismiss under Rule 12(b)(6), a court must accept as true all of the factual allegations [*15] contained in the complaint.[60] But, a court need not accept as true "conclusory allegations, unwarranted factual inferences, or legal conclusions," which will not defeat a Rule 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss.[61] In Iqbal, the Court formalized a two-pronged approach to apply the underlying jurisprudential principles of Twombly.[62] The first prong required the Court to separate factual allegations from legal conclusions. The Court dismissed those allegations deemed to be "conclusory" on the basis that bare legal conclusions are not entitled to the privilege that all well-pleaded facts be taken as true at the motion to dismiss stage.[63] The second prong then applied the plausibility test to the remaining allegations.[64] That two-pronged approach is now the standard for evaluating the plausibility of a complaint under Rule 8(a)(2).

V. DISCUSSION

Defendants include four [*17] main subsections of argument in their motion to dismiss: (1) "U-Loft's Lanham Act Claim (Count 4) should be dismissed because U-Loft lacks standing and has failed to state a claim;" (2) "U-Loft's Sherman/Clayton (Count 5) and 'Unfair Competition' (Count 6) Claims should be dismissed because i) 'unfair competition' is not an independent cause of action and ii) U-Loft lacks standing and has failed to state a claim under the Sherman/Clayton Act;" (3) "U-Loft's Tortious Interference (Count 7) claim should be dismissed because U-Loft did not plead Defendants had actual knowledge of contracts U-Loft was pursuing and thus failed to state a claim;" and (4) "U-Loft has failed to state a claim for relief against KOD [Kelly O'Donnell] and JOD [John O'Donnell], individually, because U-Loft has not alleged any facts which would allow the Court to pierce the corporate veil."[65] The Court addresses the parties' arguments as to each cause of action separately. [63] Id. Iqbal illustrated its analysis of the first prong as follows:

> We begin our analysis by identifying the allegations in the complaint that are not entitled to the assumption of truth. Respondent pleads that petitioners "knew of, condoned, and willfully and maliciously agreed to subject [him]" to harsh conditions of confinement "as a matter of policy, solely on account of [his] religion, race, and/or national origin and for no legitimate penological interest." [*16] Complaint ¶ 96, App. to Pet. for Cert. 173a-174a. The complaint alleges that Ashcroft was the "principal architect" of this invidious policy, id., ¶ 10, at 157a, and that Mueller was "instrumental" in adopting and executing it, id., ¶ 11, at 157a. These bare assertions, much like the pleading of conspiracy in Twombly, amount to nothing more than a "formulaic recitation of the elements" of a constitutional discrimination claim, 550 U.S., at 555, 127 S.Ct. 1955, namely, that petitioners adopted a policy "'because of,' not merely 'in spite of,' its adverse effects upon an identifiable group." Feeney, 442 U.S., at 279, 99 S.Ct. 2282. As such, the allegations are conclusory and not entitled to be assumed true. Twombly, supra, 550 U.S., at 554-555, 127 S.Ct. 1955. To be clear, we do not reject these bald allegations on the ground that they are unrealistic or nonsensical. We do not so characterize them any more than the Court in Twombly rejected the plaintiffs' express allegation of a "'contract, combination or conspiracy to prevent competitive entry,'" id., at 551, 127 S.Ct. 1955, because it thought that claim too chimerical to be maintained. It is the conclusory nature of respondent's allegations, rather than their extravagantly fanciful nature, that disentitles them to the presumption of truth.

A. Count IV - Lanham Act

1. standing [*18]

a. summary of arguments

Defendants argue plaintiff lacks standing under Article III and the Lanham Act's statutory standing.[66] Under Article III, defendants argue plaintiff has failed to meet all elements required to having standing. First, defendants argue plaintiff "failed to allege (and cannot allege) that any certification representation was a factor in Defendants obtaining any contract. . . .that U-Loft did not obtain and could otherwise have obtained based on a certification."[67]

Second, defendants argue their "actions have no bearing on whether U-Loft is eligible to participate in bids or contracts set aside for certified businesses or selected for student housing contracts slated for businesses with certifications."[68] Third, defendants argue there is "no causal connection between the alleged damages and Defendants' actions."[69] Fourth, defendants argue "U-Loft cannot demonstrate that its alleged injury is likely to be redressed by a favorable decision."[70]

Further, defendants argue plaintiff lacks "statutory standing" required by the Lanham Act for two reasons.[71] First, defendants argue plaintiff's allegations do not fall within the zone of interests protected by the statute because [*19] plaintiff "did not allege facts supporting an injury to a commercial interest in business reputation or sales lost."[72] Second, defendants argue plaintiff "cannot meet the proximate causation prong of the statutory test"[73] because plaintiff failed to allege that it lost business as a "result of Defendants' alleged misrepresentations as opposed to less nefarious market factors or that U-Loft was otherwise eligible to be selected over Defendants."[74]

In response, plaintiff argues four main points. First, plaintiff argues that it has sufficiently pleaded an injury in fact or an invasion of a legally protected interest because its Lanham Act claim "is only targeting situations where Corporate Defendants and University Loft are competitors"[75] and "harm is presumed when advertising is literally false."[76] Second, plaintiff argues "[t]here is no requirement that University Loft prove it would have won the contracts absent the false advertising to obtain this recovery."[77] Plaintiff argues to get the injunctive relief it seeks, "it is enough to show 'sufficient evidence that [University Loft] had been or was likely to be injured as a result of the violation of the Act.'"[78] Third, plaintiff argues the proximate [*20] causation prong is satisfied because "Corporate Defendants' false advertising misled potential customers []" which damaged its commercial interest in sales.[79]

In reply, defendants argue plaintiff has failed to allege that defendants' false advertising was "a factor in award of the contract."[80] Further, defendants argue in the bidding process "[t]he contract is either Set Aside or Unrestricted." As a result, "[i]f it is Set Aside, then U-Loft concedes it has no standing. If it is Unrestricted, then there is no injury and no casual connection/proximate causation between Defendants' conduct and U-Loft's injury."[81]

b. analysis

In consideration of "Article III's limitation of the judicial power to resolving Cases and Controversies, and the separation-of-power principles underlying that limitation" the Supreme Court has "deduced a set of requirements that together make up the 'irreducible constitutional minimum of standing."[82] The doctrine of standing "serv[es] to identify those disputes which are appropriately resolved through the judicial process."[83] The three elements of Article III standing are succinctly stated as: "[P]laintiff must have suffered or be imminently threatened with a concrete [*21] and particularized 'injury in fact' that is fairly traceable to the challenged action of the defendant and likely to be redressed by a favorable judicial decision."[84]

In addition to Article III standing, a plaintiff must also satisfy a two-part test for "statutory standing" under the Lanham Act, because "whether the plaintiff is authorized to sue under the statute is different in kind from whether the plaintiff has Article III standing or prudential standing."[85] In Lexmark, the Supreme Court described the two presumed elements of statutory standing as follows: (1) "a statutory cause of action extends only to plaintiffs whose interest 'fall within the zone of interests protected by the law invoked;"[86] and (2) "a statutory cause of action is limited to plaintiffs whose injuries are proximately caused by violations of the statute."[87] As a result, the "direct application of the zone-of-interests test and the proximate-cause requirement supplies the relevant limits on who may sue."[88]

The "first part of this standing test concerns the question whether the interest sought to be protected by the complainant is arguably within the zone of interest to be protected or regulated by the statute or constitutional [*22] guarantee in question."[89] To fall within the zone of interests "in a suit for false advertising under § 1125(a), a plaintiff must allege an injury to a commercial interest in reputation or sales."[90]

The "second part of this test requires that injuries be proximately caused by violations of the statute,"[91] which "generally bars suits for alleged harm that is 'too remote' from the defendant's unlawful conduct."[92] The plaintiff "must show economic and reputation injury flowing directly from the deception wrought by the defendant's advertising; and that occurs when deception of consumers causes them to withhold trade from the plaintiff."[93] To survive a motion to dismiss, "[i]t is sufficient that [plaintiffs] pleaded that customers were induced by false advertising to offer their business to Plaintiffs' competitors instead of Plaintiffs."[94]

Concerning Article III standing, the Court finds plaintiff does not meet the required standing elements.[95] First, plaintiff has failed to allege an injury in fact that resulted from defendants' alleged false certification because plaintiff makes no allegation that any contract bid was lost, resulting in injury to plaintiff's commercial interest, due to defendants' false advertising. Second, although [*23] plaintiff's allegations against defendants could demonstrate potential injury to its bid competitors, plaintiff has failed to provide a particularized statement of facts sufficient to allege a casual connection between an injury in fact and the conduct of which plaintiff complains. There is no allegation that defendants' false certifications were ever an applicable factor in a government unrestricted bid contest in which plaintiff and defendant(s) were direct competitors. Thus, the Court does not find plaintiff has provided a particularized statement of facts sufficient to show plaintiff suffered a concrete and particular injury in fact that is fairly traceable to defendants' alleged false advertising of certain certifications. Third, the Court could offer no relief that would allow plaintiff to become a competitor in the restricted bid process or would otherwise have any effect on plaintiff's commercial interest if defendants could no longer claim to have specific business certifications.

Concerning Lanham Act statutory standing, although plaintiff satisfies the first prong of analysis regarding the zone of interests qualifier because the Lanham Act's purpose, in part, is to provide [*24] competitors "protection against a myriad of deceptive commercial practices, including false advertising or promotion,"[96] plaintiff fails to satisfy the second prong regarding proximate cause. Plaintiff has not shown an economic or reputation injury "flowing directly from the deception wrought by the Defendant's advertising. . . ."[97] As stated previously, plaintiff has not pleaded the government was induced by defendants' alleged false advertising to offer its business to the defendants instead of the plaintiff. Further, plaintiff has not pleaded that defendants' alleged false advertising was the proximate cause of plaintiff failing to win bids in any unrestricted competitive bid process. Rather, plaintiff's only contention is that "a procurement officer might give additional consideration to a vendor that represented itself" with the alleged false certifications.[98] This allegation, even if true, is insufficient to support an inference that the government, as a customer, was lured away from awarding bids to plaintiff due to defendants' alleged false advertising of specific business certifications. Ultimately, plaintiff has not pleaded a particularized statement of facts to show a causal connection [*25] between its alleged harm and the influence of certifications in an unrestricted bid competition. As a result, plaintiff has not sufficiently alleged a link or proximate cause between defendants' alleged false advertising and a resulting injury to plaintiff. Therefore, defendants' motion to dismiss plaintiff's Lanham Act claim under Rule 12(b)(1) based on plaintiff's lack of standing should be granted.

2. Rule 12 (b)(6) failure to state a claim

a. summary of arguments

Defendants alternatively argue plaintiff has failed to state a Lanham Act claim for false advertising because, in sum, plaintiff "wholly failed" to allege: (1) "Defendants' certification representations deceived or had the capacity to deceive a substantial segment of potential customers;" and (2) "the alleged misrepresentation was material or likely to influence the consumer's purchasing decision."[99] As a result, defendants argue plaintiff does not meet the pleading requirements "because it has not demonstrated that it was actually injured or is likely to be injured as a result of Defendants' representations, and not stemming from the fact that it does not qualify for any of the discussed certifications."[100] In response, plaintiff argues the Lanham Act [*26] prohibits "'any false designation of origin or misleading description of fact' that 'misrepresents the nature, characteristics, qualities or geographic origin' of good or services," thus "falsely representing that goods/services are provided by a certified woman-owned business or the like falls squarely within the Lanham Act's prohibition."[101]

b. analysis

Section 43(a) of the Lanham Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1125(a),[102] provides, in relevant part:

[100] Id. at 11.

[101] Docket no. 50 at 5 (citing 15 U.S.C. § 1125(a)).

(1) Any person who, on or in connection with any goods or services, or any container for goods, uses in commerce any word, term, name, symbol, or device, or any combination thereof, or any false designation of origin, false or misleading description of fact, or false or misleading representation of fact, which— * * *
(B) in commercial advertising or promotion, misrepresents the nature, characteristics, qualities, or geographic origin of his or her or another person's goods, services, or commercial activities, shall be liable to in a civil action by any person who believes that he or she is or is likely to be damaged by such act.[103]

The Lanham Act's purpose is to provide "protection against a myriad of deceptive commercial practices, including false advertising or promotion."[104] A prima facie case [*27] of false advertising includes five elements:

(1) A false or misleading statement of fact about a product;
(2) Such statement either deceived or had the capacity to deceive a substantial segment of potential consumers;
(3) The deception was material, in that it is likely to influence the consumer's purchasing decision;
(4) The product is in interstate commerce; and
(5) The plaintiff has been or is likely to be injured as a result of the statement at issue.[105]

Defendants' arguments in support of dismissal under Rule 12(b)(6) specifically challenge two of the Lanham Act's prima facie elements: (1) "Defendants' certification representations deceived or had the capacity to deceive a substantial segment of potential consumers;" and (2) "the alleged misrepresentation was material or likely to influence the consumer's purchasing decision."[106] The Court must decide if the plaintiff has stated "enough fact[s] to raise a reasonable expectation that discovery will reveal evidence of [the claim or element]."[107] The plaintiff must provide "more than labels and conclusions, and a formulaic recitation of a cause of action will not do."[108]

The Court agrees that plaintiff has failed to sufficiently allege that defendants' allegedly [*28] false advertising of its business certifications was a material factor in the government awarding bids in an unrestricted bid contest, such that plaintiff suffered a disadvantage in the bidding process or lost winning bids. Although plaintiff conclusorily alleges it has "suffered injury to its commercial interest in sales caused by Avteq's false advertising,"[109] plaintiff has not pleaded a particularized statement of facts to show a direct and material correlation between the defendants' alleged false advertising and what loss the plaintiff suffered. Stated differently, plaintiff has not alleged in any instance that plaintiff and defendants were ever direct competitors in a bid process for which specific certifications were influential or material to the awarding of such bid. In essence, when the alleged certifications were applicable in the competitive bid process, the government was only a potential customer of the alleged defendants and not a potential customer of the plaintiff. Thus, plaintiff fails to sufficiently plead that the alleged deception was material as applied to the competition between the parties or that the deception was likely to influence the consumer's purchasing [*29] decision resulting in harm to plaintiff. Therefore, defendant's motion to dismiss plaintiff's Lanham Act cause of action under Rule 12(b)(6) because plaintiff has failed to state a claim for relief should be granted.

3. conclusion

For the reasons summarized in this report, plaintiff has failed to satisfy the standing requirements under Article III and the Lanham Act and has failed to state a Lanham Act claim. Accordingly, defendants' motion to dismiss Count IV- Lanham Act in plaintiff's third amended complaint should be granted and plaintiff's Count IV - Lanham Act claim should be dismissed.

B. Count V - Sherman Act and Clayton Act

1. standing

a. summary of arguments

Defendants argue plaintiff does not have Article III standing and statutory standing under the Sherman Act and Clayton Act because "U-Loft did not suffer injury" due to defendants' alleged bid-rigging.[110] Instead, defendants argue, plaintiff failed to win bids "because its own bid was not the lowest price or fastest delivery time"[111] and "if U-Loft's bid had been the low bid, nothing else would have prevented U-Loft from winning the contract."[112] Thus, defendants argue, the "lack of proximate cause negates Article III standing and requires dismissal." [*30] [113]

Further, defendants argue "U-Loft lacks statutory standing or antitrust injury," because defendants "alleged bid-rigging actually increased competition by providing consumers with lower prices."[114] Finally, defendants argue plaintiff lacks standing because "U-Loft is not a proper plaintiff, in its own right, to complain about alleged bid rigging by Defendants when the focus of the allegations relate to alleged misrepresentations made to the government to secure payment of claims."[115]

In response, plaintiff argues "the government is only required to obtain a limited number of bids on certain contracts" and "[s]ubmitting multiple bids gave Avteq Group an advantage in these situations (and harmed the government), precisely because there were fewer true competitors involved in the bidding process."[116] Thus, "the United States did not obtain truly competitive bids, or get what it bargained for when it accepted a tainted bid."[117] Lastly, plaintiff argues "[r]estraint in the market affects consumers and competitors in the market; as such, they are the parties that have standing to sue."[118]

In reply, defendants argue "U-Loft failed to address how its alleged injury falls into the type of injury [*31] the anti-trust laws were designed to prevent"[119] because "U-Loft's entire claim of damages is based on its claim to profits that would have been earned had defendants company not been awarded contracts."[120]

b. analysis

The Sherman Act, under 15 U.S.C. § 1, provides "every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce . . . .is declared to be illegal." Article III and the Sherman Act's "statutory standing" elements are merged into a single inquiry, under the antitrust standing analysis.[121] To have standing to pursue an antitrust claim, the plaintiff must show: "(1) injury-in-fact, an injury to the plaintiff proximately caused by the defendants' conduct; (2) antitrust injury; and (3) proper plaintiff status, which assures that other parties are not better situated to bring suit."[122]

First, the Court must determine if plaintiff alleged an injury-in-fact, proximately caused by defendants' alleged conduct. Plaintiff alleges it is a direct competitor to the corporate defendants for government bids and defendants allegedly "repeatedly and illegally colluded with each other in submitting bids on government contract to the detriment of University Loft."[123] Further, [*32] plaintiff alleges defendants' separate bids were purposefully structured with varying terms to appeal to the purchaser.[124] By submitting multiple bids, defendants advanced their commercial interest, especially "in procuring contracts that only required the government to obtain a limited number of bids."[125] The Court finds the plaintiff, as a direct competitor bidding against defendants when an alleged bid rigging scheme was conducted, would suffer harm if defendants' bid rigging advanced the defendants' bids over the plaintiff's bids.

Second, the Court must consider whether plaintiff's injury is the type that the antitrust laws were intended to prevent.[126] "Antitrust injury for standing purposes should be viewed from the perspective of the plaintiff's position in the marketplace, not from the merits-related perspective of the impact of defendant's conduct on overall competition."[127] Taking the plaintiff's allegations as true, the plaintiff is not simply a remote or indirect victim of the defendant's alleged scheme. Instead, plaintiff is a direct competitor for government contracts and participated in bidding processes, alleged to be manipulated by the defendants.[128] An antitrust injury "should [*33] reflect the anticompetitive effect either of the violation or of anticompetitive acts made possible by the violation."[129] The Court views the plaintiff's alleged antitrust injury from the plaintiff's position in the marketplace and finds plaintiff, as defendants' direct competitor, has allegedly suffered injury by losing government contracts due to defendants' bid-rigging scheme, which is a fundamental antitrust injury.

Lastly, the Court must determine if plaintiff has proper status to challenge defendants' alleged bid rigging scheme as a direct competitor in the bidding process.[130] "Congress did not intend the antitrust laws to provide a remedy in damages for all injuries that might conceivably be traced to antitrust violation"[131] and the court must find "the plaintiff's demand for relief ultimately serves the purposes of antitrust law to increase consumer choice, lower prices and assist competition, not competitors."[132] "Restraint in the market affects consumers and competitors in the market; as such, they are the parties that have standing to sue."[133] Plaintiff has alleged losses and a competitive disadvantage due to defendants' bid-rigging, which appear to come within the "conceptual bounds of [*34] antitrust injury, whatever the ultimate merits of this case."[134] As a result, defendants' alleged conduct would serve to place restraint on the competitive bidding market and plaintiff, as a competitor, has proper plaintiff standing to pursue an antitrust claim against the defendants.[135]

2. failure to state a claim

a. summary of arguments

Defendants argue plaintiff has failed to state a claim under the Sherman/Clayton Act because she has failed to allege the first and second elements of the claim as by the Texas Court of Appeals: "1) a contract, combination . . . . or conspiracy between competitors, 2) is unreasonable, and 3) has an adverse effect on competition in the relevant market."[136] Defendants argue "U-Loft has pleaded that bids submitted by Defendants were reviewed, edited, and controlled by a single decision maker, and as such, there can be no restraint of trade as it relates to the bid-rigging allegations."[137] Defendants argue "U-Loft did not allege that Defendants were in fact competitors among themselves, only that they allegedly misrepresented being competitors with one another to the government."[138] Further, defendants argue "U-Loft also wholly failed to plead the conduct was unreasonable, [*35] if in fact deemed a restraint of trade."[139]

In response, plaintiff argues "bid rigging is a per se violation of the Sherman Act."[140] As a basis of its Sherman Act claims, plaintiff argues defendants represented to the government that they were not a single economic unit, but were, instead separate companies for competitive bidding purposes, thus "Defendants cannot now complain that University Loft is alleging that Corporate Defendants were separate competing entities."[141] In sum, plaintiff argues either defendants "(i) violated the FCA by lying to the government about being separate companies for competitive bidding so they could illegally submit multiple bids, or (ii) violated the anti-trust laws by colluding with each other to rig bids."[142]

In reply, defendants argue: (1) "U-Loft confused the elements required to plead an FCA claim with those under the Sherman Act;"[143] and (2) "U-Loft conceded that Defendants' statement of law—that a single economic unit or a parent and its subsidiary cannot be liable for bid rigging under the Sherman Act—is correct" and "U-Loft incorrectly argues that it pleaded Defendants were competitors with one another."[144]

b. analysis

Liability under the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1, [*36] derives from "contract, combination . . . or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce."[145] "Conspiracies to submit collusive, noncompetitive, rigged bids, allocate customers, and fix prices are per se violations of the Sherman Act."[146] To establish a violation of the Sherman Act section prohibiting conspiracies to restrain trade, a plaintiff must demonstrate that: (1) defendants engaged in a conspiracy; (2) the conspiracy had the effect of restraining trade; and (3) trade was restrained in the relevant market.[147] "Because § 1 of the Sherman Act "does not prohibit [all] unreasonable restraints of trade . . . but only restraints effected by a contract, combination, or conspiracy, [t]he crucial question is whether the challenged anticompetitive conduct stem[s] from independent decision or from an agreement, tacit or express."[148] "The court's inquiry should ultimately focus upon 'form[ing] a judgment about the competitive significance of the restraint."[149]

Applying Rule 8(a)(2) and cases, the Supreme Court has held "stating [] a [Sherman Act] claim requires a complaint with enough factual matter (taken as true) to suggest an agreement was made."[150] "Antitrust claims do not necessitate a higher pleading [*37] standard and a plaintiff need only plead enough facts to state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face."[151] The plaintiff should plead "enough fact[s] to raise a reasonable expectation that discovery will reveal evidence of illegal agreement."[152]

Under the first element of an antitrust claim, concerning engagement in a conspiracy, the Court must determine whether the plaintiff sufficiently alleges that the defendants "engaged in concerted action—that is, a 'conscious commitment to a common scheme designed to achieve an unlawful objective.'"[153] The "pivotal question is whether the concerted action was a result of an agreement" between the defendants.[154] In favor of dismissal defendants argue "a single economic unit or a parent and its subsidiary cannot be liable for bid rigging under the Sherman Act" and plaintiff "did not allege the Defendant Companies were competitors with one another, but instead they were 'separate economic actors.'"[155]

"As a general rule, Section 1 of the Sherman Act does not apply to single entitles,"[156] although the Supreme Court has "long held that concerted action under § 1 does not turn simply on whether the parties involved are legally distinct entities" and the Court has "eschewed [*38] such formalistic distinctions in favor of a functional consideration of how the parities involved in the alleged anticompetitive conduct actually operate."[157] "Substance, not form, should determine whether an entity is capable of conspiring under § 1."[158] Participants to a bid rigging scheme should not be afforded protection against Sherman Act claims simply because they seek to be classified as a single economic unit. The inquiry concerns not whether "two legally distinct entities have organized themselves under a single umbrella" rather, "the question is whether the agreement joins together independent centers of decisionmaking," which if it does "the entities are capable of conspiring under § 1, and the court must decide whether the restraint of trade is an unreasonable and therefore illegal one."[159]

Plaintiff alleges the individual defendants structured competitive bids to maximize the potential for one of the corporate defendants to win the government contracts,[160] thus demonstrating a "conscious commitment to a common scheme designed to achieve an unlawful objective."[161] When corporate defendants allegedly submitted bids in a competitive bid process against each other with varying bids terms, through [*39] the coordinated efforts between the individual defendants and corporate defendants, such bid rigging demonstrates an agreement between competitors to restrain trade. As a result, defendants' alleged actions demonstrate an agreement, tacit or express, to increase each corporate defendants' chances of winning the bids through their collusive effort.

Further, the Court must evaluate the "competitive significance of the restraint."[162] By allegedly submitting two or three bids on government projects that may only require the government to consider a minimum of three bids, a direct restraint of trade would occur, either by: (1) effectively shutting down the bid process so fewer or none of the defendants' competitors' bids would be considered; or (2) manipulating the terms of bid through coordinated efforts to beat their competition. To prevent such manipulation, the Federal Acquisition Regulation rules require bid prices to be calculated "independently, without, for the purpose of restricting competition, any consultation, communication, or agreement with any other offeror or competitor."[163] Because coordinated bids are expressly prohibited by the Federal Acquisition Regulation rules, defendants' [*40] alleged collusive bidding would be a direct a violation of the rules and would significantly restrain the competitive bid process.

Taking all allegations as true, plaintiff's allegations are sufficient to indicate "concerted action that is not categorically beyond § 1."[164] The Court cannot say there are insufficient facts to state a claim and that it is implausible that defendants engaged in a conspiracy, effectively restraining the government bid process in the specialized government installations market.[165]

3. conclusion

Plaintiff has pleaded facts sufficient to demonstrate standing under the antitrust laws at issue and plaintiff has pleaded sufficient facts to state a claim under § 1 of the Sherman Act. Accordingly, defendants' motion to dismiss plaintiff's Count V - Sherman Act and Clayton Act alleged in the third amended complaint should be denied.

1. summary of arguments

Defendants argue plaintiff "did not plead all required elements of its tortious interference claim because "U-Loft has not alleged Defendants intentionally interfered with the [business] relationship, which requires actual knowledge."[166] Defendants [*41] argue they "could only obtain actual knowledge of the contracts U-Loft was pursuing if U-Loft disclosed such [] contracts or relationships, in violation of general procurement procedures."[167]

In response, plaintiff argues it has stated a claim for tortious interference through its allegation that "[Corporate] Defendants carried out such actions [tortious interference] with a conscious desire to prevent Plaintiff from obtaining these contracts or they knew the interference was certain or substantially certain to occur as a result of their conduct."[168] Thus, defendants' "interference allegations are more than plausible" to state a claim for tortious interference.[169]

In reply, defendants argue plaintiff's claim of tortious interference is "a mere conclusory allegation with no factual support and does not overcome a 12(b)(6) motion."[170] Further, defendants argue "[a]ctual knowledge requires more than just a hunch or speculation that U-Loft might bid on certain contracts."[171]

2. analysis

To establish a claim for tortious interference with prospective business relationships, a plaintiff must establish:

> (1) there was a reasonable probability that the plaintiff would have entered into a business relationship [*42] with a third party; (2) the defendant either acted with a conscious desire to prevent the relationship from occurring or knew the interference was certain or substantially certain to occur as a result of the conduct; (3) the defendant's conduct was independently tortious or unlawful; (4) the interference proximately caused the plaintiff injury; and (5) the plaintiff suffered actual damage or loss as a result.[172]

Defendants specifically challenge the second element of plaintiff's Count VII - Tortious Interference with Business Relationships cause of action[173] regarding whether defendants had actual knowledge that plaintiff was its competitor for certain government bids.[174] Intentional interference does not necessarily require actual knowledge. Instead, the "defendant intentionally interferes if it desires to bring about the interference or if it knows the interference is certain or substantially certain to occur as a result of its conduct."[175] "If the interference was merely an incidental result of conduct that the defendant was engaging in for another purpose, the interference may be considered unintentional."[176]

In viewing the third amended complaint as a whole and taking [*43] all allegations as true,[177] the Court cannot say that plaintiff has failed to plead enough facts to state a claim for relief that is plausible on its face.[178] Under the first element of the claim, there is a reasonable probability that plaintiff would have entered into certain government contracts due to their previous frequency of competing against defendant in their specialized industry and plaintiff's history of winning bids over defendants.[179] Under the second element, there are sufficient allegations that defendants acted with a conscious desire to prevent the relationship from occurring between the plaintiff and the government or that the defendants knew their acts were certain or substantially certain to interfere with the prospective business relationship between the plaintiff and government. From its specialized business industry, defendants would have known its common competitor for government contracts, the plaintiff, was substantially certain to submit bids for student housing and military installation bids. Through its participation in alleged tortious or unlawful acts, defendants "surely knew of the substantial likelihood that [plaintiff] would lose prospective business" from [*44] the government because plaintiff was a frequent direct competitor for those specific types of government contracts.[180]

Further, the plaintiff has satisfied the third, fourth, and fifth elements of the claim by alleging defendants' actions were independently tortious or unlawful and the interference would deprive the plaintiff of a business relationship, thus proximately causing the plaintiff injury. Lastly, by losing the bid contest due to alleged unlawful conduct, the plaintiff would suffer actual damage or loss as a result.

3. conclusion

The Court finds the plaintiff [*45] has met its minimum burden under Rule 8(a)(2) to state a claim for tortious interference with prospective business relationships claim. Accordingly, defendants' motion to dismiss third amended complaint regarding plaintiff's Count VII - Tortious Interference with Prospective Business Relationships should be denied.

D. Count VI - Unfair Competition

1. summary of arguments

Defendants argue "[t]he law of unfair competition is the umbrella for all statutory and nonstatutory causes of action arising out of business conduct which is contrary to honest practice in industrial or commercial matters" and is "not, in and of itself, a separate tort."[181] Thus, defendants argue "[b]ecause U-Loft does not have viable claims under the [177] Plaintiff has alleged that defendants tortiously interfered with its prospective business relations:

> By virtue of the illegal acts described [in the third amended complaint] that violate the False Claims Act these Defendants have tortiously interfered with Plaintiff University Loft's prospective business relations with the United States. These Defendants were able to underbid Relator or otherwise secure awards of Government contracts by engaging in unlawful conduct such as bid-rigging and delivering low bids with the intention to substitute cheaper nonconforming or noncompliant products or with the intention to later seek an increase in funding once the bid was secured.

Lanham Act, Sherman/Clayton Act, or for tortious interference as discussed herein, there is no viable underlying claim to which unfair competition can attach and Count 6 must be dismissed."[182]

In response, plaintiff agrees with the defendants that "unfair competition is not, in and of itself, a separate tort."[183] Thus, plaintiff argues it "expressly based this claim on four different types of illegal actions," including the "violations of the Sherman Act, the FCA, the Lanham Act and Texas tortious [*46] interference law constitute unfair competition under Texas law."[184] Plaintiff argues "Defendants appear to concede [] that if any one of the Sherman Act, Lanham Act and/or tortious interference claims survives[,then] the unfair competition claims also survives."[185] As a result, the "main disagreement between the parties is whether the FCA claims that Defendants have not challenged can serve as a basis for the unfair competition claim."[186] Plaintiff further argues, even if the Court granted defendants' motion to dismiss third amended complaint, as to all counts, and plaintiff's Lanham Act, Sherman/Clayton Act, and tortious interference claims were dismissed, its unfair competition claim would remain because the "FCA provides that a civil action may be brought 'for the person and for the United States Government,' indicating that the relator can also assert its own claims."[187]

In reply, defendants argue "U-Loft failed to find one case that allowed an unfair competition claim to 'piggy-back' or boot-strap to an FCA claim"[188] and "[b]ecause U-Loft has not alleged any direct injury by way of the alleged misrepresentations made to the government by Defendants, U-Loft cannot bootstrap a claim for [*47] unfair competition [] to the FCA claims."[189]

2. analysis

In previous sections of analysis, the Court recommended the plaintiff's Lanham Act claim should be dismissed, but that plaintiff's Sherman Act and Clayton Act claims, and tortious interference with prospective business relationships claim should remain pending. Accordingly, the Court need not reach the issue of whether the plaintiff's False Claim Act claims may serve as the basis for plaintiff's unfair competition claim, because defendants have not provided argument or authority to show that plaintiff's unfair competition claim cannot relate to plaintiff's claims for violations of the Sherman Act and Clayton Act and tortious interference.

E. Piercing the Corporate Veil

1. summary of arguments

their individual capacities, and has not pleaded any other basis to pierce the corporate veil."[190] Defendants argue no liability for Kelly O'Donnell or John O'Donnell would be created under the Texas Business Organizations Code, § 22.235, unless their "conduct was [*48] not exercised 1) in good faith, 2) with ordinary care, and 3) in a manner the officer reasonably believed to be in the best interest of the corporation."[191] Further, defendants argue, "there is nothing in U-Loft's Complaint to suggest the actions by KOD and JOD were anything other than in the course and scope of their position as agents for the Defendant Corporations."[192]

In response, plaintiff sets forth it "seeks to hold Individual Defendants liable only for violations of the FCA and Sherman Act."[193] Plaintiff argues the False Claim Act "clearly encompasses corporate principals, who cause their companies to present a false claim for payment or false documents in support of a claim."[194] Further, plaintiff argues under the Sherman Act, "[i]ndividuals or corporate officers may be subject to liability for a Section 1 violation of the Sherman Act when they 'knowingly participate[] in effecting the illegal contract, combination or conspiracy,' whether they authorize, order, or help perpetrate the violation."[195]

In reply, defendants argue plaintiff's citations to authority in support of its False Claim Act claims fail to demonstrate how personal liability for Kelly O'Donnell and John O'Donnell could exist. [*49] [196] Further, defendants argue:

> "[i]ndividual liability of KOD is unjustified because U-Loft did not allege KOD: (1) participated in any of the alleged bid-rigging activities; (2) personally bidrigged; (3) knew that JOD was allegedly reviewing bids prior to submission to the government; or (4) otherwise authorized or ordered the alleged bid-rigging to take place."[197]

As a result, defendants argue "JOD's individual liability is unjustified as JOD cannot legally conspire with himself."[198]

2. analysis

The False Claim Act imposes liability on any person who:

[199] 31 U.S.C. § 3729(a)(1)(A-C) (emphasis added). Plaintiff argues defendants John O'Donnell and Kelly O'Donnell are individually liable under the False Claims Act and Sherman Act. Thus, the Court limits the scope of its analysis to those applicable causes of action regarding the defendants' individual liability. Docket no. 50 at 2.

Further, the False Claim Act applies to any defendant who "knowingly assist[s] in causing the government to pay claims grounded in fraud, without regard to whether that person ha[s] direct contractual relations with the government."[200] "Thus, a person need not be the one who actually submitted the claim forms in order to be liable."[201] When a plaintiff alleges that the defendants "assisted one another and cooperated in [*50] a scheme or pattern of billing for and covering up these false-claim items" the "knowing assistance standard of Hess and Peterson" shall "suffice to implicate all Defendants."[202] For example, False Claim Act liability may exist for physicians who argued claims were "billed by the hospital, not the physicians" and "they do not bill for physician services and had no part in the admission or [unnecessary] upgrade of patients to ICU" because the charges generated arose only by doctor's orders.[203] As a result, individual physicians could be liable for their knowing assistance in causing "the government to pay claims grounded in fraud."[204]

In the third amended complaint, plaintiff alleges both individual defendants should be liable "through causing or knowingly assisting corporate defendants" to perpetuate False Claims Act violations, thus, subjecting themselves to liability.[205] Plaintiff's allegations against the individual defendants demonstrate sufficient allegations to state a claim for individual liability under the False Claim Act. The Fifth Circuit found physicians to be individually liable for the submission of false claims in violation of the False Claim Act, which stands to reason [*51] that a corporate officer who allegedly caused the corporation to present false claims and false documents to the government in connection with each of the schemes described in plaintiff's third amended complaint, or knowingly assisted them in doing so, would also have individual liability for such acts.[206] Even if the individual defendants did not personally submit the false claims to the government for payment, there are sufficient allegations that Kelly O'Donnell and John O'Donnell "knowingly assisted in causing the government to pay claims grounded in fraud."[207] As a result, by allegedly participating in a scheme or pattern of false claim submission, the individual defendants have subjected themselves to individual liability under the False Claims Act.

In addition, the Supreme Court has found individual liability for antitrust claims: "We construe the Sherman Act in its common-sense meaning to apply to all officers who have a responsible share in the proscribed transaction."[208] The Court held, "a corporate officer is subject to prosecution under § 1 of the Sherman Act whenever he knowingly participates in effecting the illegal contract, combination, or conspiracy—be he one who authorizes, [*52] orders, or helps perpetrate the crime— regardless of whether he is acting in a representative capacity."[209]

Plaintiff alleges the individual defendants violated the Sherman Act by making false certifications during the bidding process,[210] structuring bids in a bid-rigging scheme[211] and engaging in "collusive bidding."[212] Through these allegations, it appears the individual defendants could have authorized, ordered, or helped to perpetrate an antitrust violation and plaintiff has plead enough facts to state a claim for individual liability under the Sherman Act,[213] because the individual defendants could be liable through their knowing participation in an alleged illegal conspiracy, regardless of their representative capacity. As a result, the Court finds Kelly O'Donnell and John O'Donnell may be subject to liability under the Sherman Act for their alleged "responsible share in the proscribed transactions."[214]

3. conclusion

Accordingly, defendants' motion to dismiss third amended complaint regarding plaintiff's claims against individual defendants, Kelly O'Donnell and John O'Donnell, should be denied.

VI. RECOMMENDATIONS

For the reasons discussed, based upon the record thus far developed, it is recommended [*53] that defendants' motion to dismiss third amended complaint[215] is GRANTED in part and DENIED in part, as specified in this report. More specifically, defendants' motion to dismiss Count IV - False Advertising in Violation of Lanham Act claims should be granted and the claims should be dismissed; in all other respects, defendants' motion to dismiss should be denied at this time.

If, after the consideration of objections to this report, the District Judge accepts each of the recommendations in this report, the following claims in plaintiff's third amended complaint will remain pending for further disposition:

- as against all defendants, plaintiff's claims for Count I—Violation of the False Claims Act - 31 U.S.C. § 3729(a)(1)(A); Count II—Violation of the False Claims Act - 31 U.S.C. § 3729(a)(1)(B); Count III—Conspiracy to Violation of the False Claims Act - 31 U.S.C. § 3729(a)(1)(C); and Count IV— Bid-rigging in Violation of the Sherman Act and Clayton Act.

The United States District Clerk shall serve a copy of this Report and Recommendation [*54] on all parties by either: (1) electronic transmittal to all parties represented by an attorney registered as a Filing User with the Clerk of Court pursuant to the Court's Procedural Rules for Electronic Filing in Civil and Criminal Cases; or (2) by certified mail, return receipt requested, to any party not represented by an attorney registered as a Filing User.

As provided in 28 U.S.C. § 636(b)(1) and FED. R. CIV. P. 72(b), any party who desires to object to this Report must file with the District Clerk and serve on all parties and the Magistrate Judge written Objections to the Report and Recommendation within 14 days after being served with a copy, unless this time period is modified by the District Court. A party filing Objections must specifically identify those findings, conclusions or recommendations to which objections are being made and the basis for such objections; the District Court need not consider frivolous, conclusive or general objections.

A party's failure to file timely written objections to the proposed findings, conclusions and recommendations contained in this Report will bar the party from receiving a de novo determination by the District Court.[216] Additionally, a party's failure to file timely written objections [*55] to the proposed findings, conclusions and recommendations contained in this Report will bar the aggrieved party, except upon grounds of plain error, from attacking on appeal the unobjected-to proposed factual findings and legal conclusions accepted by the District Court.[217]

Illinois courts construe 740 ILCS 10/3(2) (2010), in accordance with the construction given its federal counterpart, the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1. To state a cause of action under 740 ILCS 10/3(2), a complaint must allege the existence of an illegal combination or conspiracy. Although courts have been liberal in reading antitrust complaints, they have required at least that the defendants be identified, that the conspiracy be explained and that relevant facts of the claimed agreement be disclosed.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

Healthcare Law > Healthcare Litigation > Actions Against Facilities

HN6[] Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

A hospital has an unquestioned right to exercise some control over the identity and number to whom it accords staff privileges. Moreover, of the legion of cases that addressed the issue, the cases almost always come to the same conclusion: the staffing decision at a single hospital was not a violation of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1. A staffing decision does not itself constitute an antitrust injury. If the law were otherwise, many a physician's workplace grievance with a hospital would be elevated to the status of an antitrust action. To keep the antitrust laws from becoming so trivialized, the reasonableness of a restraint is evaluated based on its impact on competition as a whole within the relevant market.

Torts > ... > Prospective Advantage > Intentional Interference > Elements

HN7[] Intentional Interference, Elements

To plead a sufficient cause of action for tortious interference with prospective economic advantage, a plaintiff must allege that (1) he had a reasonable expectancy of a valid business relationship; (2) the defendant knew about the expectancy; (3) the defendant intentionally interfered with the expectancy and prevented it from ripening into a valid business relationship; and (4) the intentional interference injured the plaintiff. A plaintiff states a cause of action only if he alleges a business expectancy with a specific third party as well as action by the defendant directed toward that third party. It is not enough for the defendant's action to impact a third party; rather, the defendant's action must be directed towards the third party.

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > Abuse of Discretion

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Amendment of Pleadings > Leave of Court

HN8[] Standards of Review, Abuse of Discretion

Courts are given broad discretion in liberally allowing amendments of pleadings to foster the policy of resolving controversies on their merits, 735 ILCS 5/2-616 (2010). Nevertheless, plaintiffs do not have an absolute and unlimited right to amend. Appellate courts review a trial court's decision to grant or deny a motion for leave to amend a pleading under the abuse of discretion standard. In determining whether the circuit court properly exercised its discretion, the courts consider (1) whether the proposed amendment would cure the defective pleading; (2) whether other parties would sustain prejudice or surprise by virtue of the proposed amendment; (3) whether the proposed amendment is timely; and (4) whether previous opportunities to amend the pleading could be identified. Where it is apparent even after amendment that no cause of action can be stated, leave to amend should be denied.

[889] OPINION

[*P1] Plaintiffs Boffa Surgical Group LLC, Dr. James Boffa, and Dr. Andrew Agos (collectively, the Boffa Group) were not asked to participate in managed care groups at a hospital where they had staff privileges. The Boffa

Group sued defendants Managed Healthcare Associates Ltd. (MHCA) and Swedish Covenant Managed Care Alliance (SCMCA), alleging antitrust violations and tortious interference with prospective economic advantage. The circuit court dismissed the Boffa Group's amended complaint for failure to state a cause of action, and the Boffa Group appealed.

[*P2] We affirm the judgment of the circuit court. We hold that the circuit court properly dismissed the Boffa Group's claim that defendants violated Illinois antitrust law because, without something more, a staffing pattern dispute at one hospital does [2] not cause an unreasonable restraint of trade within the ambit of the antitrust laws. The circuit court also properly dismissed the Boffa Group's claim of tortious interference with prospective economic advantage because they failed to allege defendants engaged in conduct directed at a specific third party.

[*P3] I. BACKGROUND

[*P4] Plaintiff Boffa Surgical Group LLC is a medical group comprised of general surgeons licensed to practice medicine in Illinois, and plaintiffs Dr. Boffa and Dr. Agos are two of its general surgeons. Defendant MHCA is an independent practice association that arranges for the delivery of health care services to individuals covered by various health plans. Defendant SCMCA is a physician hospital organization. MHCA does credentialing for SCMCA. Both MHCA and SCMCA provide to the public at Swedish Covenant Hospital what are generally known as healthcare maintenance and management association services. The Boffa Group was not asked to be participants or physician members in MHCA and SCMCA. However, the Boffa Group had privileges to practice medicine, and did practice medicine, at Swedish Covenant Hospital. The Boffa Group also practiced medicine at other facilities in Illinois. [3]

[*P5] In December 2011, the Boffa Group sued defendants, alleging they engaged in conduct that served an anti-competitive objective in violation of Illinois antitrust law and interfered with plaintiffs' prospective economic advantage. The Boffa Group amended its complaint in March 2012 and alleged that, although they had privileges and continued to practice at Swedish Covenant Hospital, defendants unreasonably restrained competition at the hospital by excluding the Boffa Group from defendants' network even though the number of physicians in that network was not adequate to provide the necessary services for public health. The Boffa Group alleged this anticompetitive limitation of membership to a select group limited the number of physicians who could provide services to the hospital's patients, limited referrals by physicians with privileges at the hospital, limited the public's access to the Boffa [572] [*890] Group's services, and intentionally prevented the Boffa Group from obtaining prospective business at the hospital. The Boffa Group alleged such practices had prevented one patient from receiving prompt treatment and resulted in that patient's death.

[*P6] Defendants moved the court to dismiss the amended [4] complaint under section 2-615 of the Code of Civil Procedure (Code) (735 ILCS 5/2-615 (West 2010)), contending the factual allegations were insufficient to establish the elements of an antitrust violation or tortious interference with prospective economic advantage. Defendants argued that the Boffa Group could not allege an unreasonable restraint on the relevant market where they continued to provide services at Swedish Covenant Hospital and various other institutions located in Illinois and there were 21 other hospitals or medical centers within 20 miles of Swedish Covenant Hospital.

[*P7] After the parties briefed the motion to dismiss, the circuit court granted the motion in favor of defendants on November 6, 2012. Concerning the antitrust claim, the court concluded there were inadequate grounds for the court to interfere with the hospital's staffing decisions and the Boffa Group failed to allege an unreasonable restraint of trade where they still practiced medicine in the relevant marketplace. Concerning the tortious interference claim, the court found the Boffa Group failed to allege the necessary element that defendants interfered with action directed toward a specific third party, namely, the patients.

[*P8] The Boffa [5] Group moved to vacate and set aside the dismissal order, contending the court erred in its application of the case law concerning the antitrust claim. The Boffa Group also contended they would be able to state a claim for tortious interference with prospective economic advantage if they were able to file a second amended complaint under seal. After the parties briefed the motion to vacate and set aside the dismissal order, the circuit court denied that motion on April 5, 2013. Thereafter, the Boffa Group filed an emergency renewed motion to vacate and set aside the dismissal order, seeking leave to file an amended complaint on the tortious interference claim. Citing statutory confidentiality provisions, the Boffa Group asserted that filing the amended complaint under seal would allow defendants to defend on the issue of specific patients without publicly disclosing those patients. The circuit court granted the Boffa Group's motion and gave them leave until May 27, 2013 to file an amended complaint with respect to the tortious interference claim only.

[*P9] After that deadline lapsed, the Boffa Group filed a motion for leave to file their complaint under seal. After hearing oral argument, [6] the circuit court continued the motion to July 10, 2013, at which time the Boffa Group was to either have written consent from the patients to file the complaint or prove to the court that written consent was not required. That deadline lapsed, and the court gave the Boffa Group until August 12, 2013 to file an amended complaint under seal.

[*P10] On September 12, 2013, the Boffa Group sought leave to file their amended complaint under seal, seeking an extension of time due to a docketing error. The circuit court allowed them to file an amended complaint instanter but denied their request to file it under seal, finding that they had failed to show a need for filing the complaint under seal. On September 24, 2013, the Boffa Group moved the court to reconsider allowing them to file the complaint under seal. They stated the basis for this request was to protect the identity of other physicians, not the [573] [*891] prospective patients. The circuit court denied the motion and gave the Boffa Group until October 4, 2013 to file the second amended complaint.

[*P11] On October 4, 2013, the Boffa Group filed their second amended complaint, alleging violations of Illinois antitrust law and tortious interference with [7] a prospective economic advantage against defendants. The Boffa Group argued defendants required them to provide "fill-in" service but excluded them from membership in defendants' network and thereby interfered with the Boffa Group's ability to treat patients at Swedish Covenant Hospital and resulted in the loss of valuable referral business from individual physicians and physician groups.

[*P12] Defendants moved to dismiss the complaint pursuant to section 2-615 of the Code, arguing the Boffa Group failed to correct the deficiencies previously recognized by the court in its initial dismissal decision. In the alternative, defendants moved to dismiss pursuant to section 2-619 of the Code (735 ILCS 5/2-619 (West 2012)), arguing internal staffing decisions at private hospitals were not subject to judicial review unless the hospital's decision resulted in a revocation, suspension or reduction of a physician's existing staff privileges. After the parties briefed the motion, the circuit court granted defendants' section 2-615 motion to dismiss the second amended complaint on March 6, 2014.

[*P14] II. ANALYSIS

[*P15] Because this matter was disposed of at the trial level upon defendants' motion to dismiss pursuant to section 2-615 of the Code, the issue before this court is whether the dismissed complaint stated a cause of action upon which relief can be granted. Metrick v. Chatz, 266 Ill. App. 3d 649, 651-52, 639 N.E.2d 198, 203 Ill. Dec. 159 (1994). HN1[] The issue presented is one of law; consequently, our review is *de novo. T&S Signs, Inc. v. [*P16] A. Illinois Antitrust Act Claim [*P17] To support their claim of a violation of section 3(2) of the Illinois Antitrust Act (Act) (740 ILCS 10/3(2) [9] (West 2010)), the Boffa Group alleged defendants entered into an arrangement with Swedish Covenant Hospital to provide services to the hospital but limited the number of physicians admitted to defendant's organizations and excluded defendants from membership in defendants' group. The Boffa Group alleged defendants lacked the ability to provide the public in their area with medical services solely with their staff [574] [*892] physicians and, thus, asked the Boffa Group on a regular basis to provide emergency medical services and treat patients admitted to Swedish Covenant Hospital. The Boffa Group argued that their exclusion from defendants' network restrained competition in the geographic market at and around Swedish Covenant Hospital by limiting the Boffa Group's ability to provide patient care and denying their services to the public. The Boffa Group contends they sufficiently pled the ultimate facts needed to support their claim of conspiracy under the Act and suggest that if they are permitted to conduct discovery, additional supporting facts will come to light.

[*P18] Defendants respond that the Boffa Group has failed to state a cause of action under section 3(2) of the Act because their only complaint of an [10] antitrust violation is that they were not afforded membership in defendants' network. Defendants argue this claim, which is based solely on allegations concerning a single hospital's staffing decision, is insufficient under the Act to constitute an unreasonable restraint of the trade of providing medical services to patients. Defendants also assert there is no antitrust violation here because the Boffa Group continues to perform surgery at Swedish Covenant Hospital and there are 21 other hospitals and medical centers within 20 miles of that hospital; consequently, there is no restraint of trade or impact on competition as a whole within the relevant market. In addition, defendants argue the Boffa Group's complaint failed to allege a violation of section 3(2) of the Act because there were no factual allegations of a conspiracy, a restraint on trade, or that the staffing decision was for an anticompetitive purpose which operated to restrain trade.

[*P19] HN3[] "When the wording of this Act is identical or similar to that of a federal antitrust law, the courts of this State shall use the construction of the federal law by the federal courts as a guide in construing this Act." 740 ILCS 10/11 (West 2010). Section 3(2) of the Act provides [11] in relevant part that HN4[] "[e]very person shall be deemed to have committed a violation of this Act who shall  [b]y contract, combination, or conspiracy with one or more other persons unreasonably restrain trade or commerce[.]" 740 ILCS 10/3(2) (West 2010). HN5[] Illinois courts construe section 3(2) of the Act in accordance with the construction given its federal counterpart, section 1 of the Sherman Act, under 15 U.S.C. § 1. Laughlin v. Evanston Hospital, 133 Ill. 2d 374, 384, 550 N.E.2d 986, 140 Ill. Dec. 861 (1990).

[*P20] To state a cause of action under section 3(2) of the Act, a complaint must allege the existence of an illegal combination or conspiracy. Adkins v. Sarah Bush Lincoln Health Center, 129 Ill. 2d 497, 520-21, 544 N.E.2d 733, 136 Ill. Dec. 47 (1989). "Although courts have been liberal in reading antitrust complaints, they have required at least that the defendants be identified, that the conspiracy be explained and that relevant facts of the claimed agreement be disclosed." Id. at 521 (where a physician alleged that the denial of his application for renewal of staff privileges was a conspiracy by the hospital and its administrators designed to restrict trade, the court affirmed dismissal of the conclusory and general complaint, which failed to contain allegations describing or suggesting "when, how or what the defendants agreed to do to restrict the plaintiff's right to practice medicine or what the purpose of such an agreement was," and failed to allege [12] facts showing that the conspiracy unreasonably restrained trade). See also Holzrichter v. County of Cook, 231 Ill. App. 3d 256, 263, 595 N.E.2d 1237, 172 Ill. Dec. 567 (1992) (complaint failed to [575] [*893] "articulate specific acts, statements or directives from the [American Medical Association] that would support the contention that [it] perpetrated or joined in such a conspiracy to harm or control the health care market by concealing malpractice"); Regal Motors, Inc. v. Fiat Motors of North America, Inc., 133 Ill. App. 3d 370, 376, 479 N.E.2d 1, 88 Ill. Dec. 666 (1985) (complaint failed to allege "how the alleged conspiracy manifested itself with respect to the marketplace or what ultimate anticompetitive effects were realized").

[*P21] Although the seventh circuit decision in BCB Anesthesia Care, Ltd. v. Passavant Memorial Area Hospital Ass'n, 36 F.3d 664 (7th Cir. 1994), is not binding precedent on this court, we find its reasoning persuasive and applicable to the instant case. In that case, the plaintiffs, a group of nurse anesthetists competed with physician anesthesiologists to provide anesthesia services at the only acute care general hospital in Jacksonville, Illinois. The plaintiffs alleged the hospital and the defendant doctors with staff privileges violated section 1 of the Sherman Act when the hospital terminated its contract with the plaintiffs and replaced them with services offered by physician anesthesiologists. Id. at 664-65.

[*P22] The court noted HN6[] a "hospital has an unquestioned right to exercise some control over the [13] identity and number to whom it accords staff privileges." Id. at 667. Moreover, of the legion of cases that addressed the issue, the cases "almost always come to the same conclusion: the staffing decision at a single hospital was not a violation of section 1 of the Sherman Act." Id. at 667-68. The court stated:

> "A staffing decision does not itself constitute an antitrust injury. 'If the law were otherwise, many a physician's workplace grievance with a hospital would be elevated to the status of an antitrust action. To keep the antitrust laws from becoming so trivialized, the reasonableness of a restraint is evaluated based on its impact on competition as a whole within the relevant market.' " Id. at 669 (quoting Oksanen v. Page Memorial Hospital, 945 F.2d 696, 708 (4th Cir. 1991)).

The court concluded that the plaintiffs failed to state a claim under section 1 of the Sherman Act because they could continue to practice at the hospital or elsewhere and the hospital could continue with its present arrangement or choose another; the only restraint alleged was that the plaintiffs could not currently practice in the business form they preferred and the hospital may have charged somewhat higher prices. Id. at 668. Taking the pled facts as true, the court held that it could not infer that the plaintiffs' claim fell within [14] the ambit of the Sherman Act, and the court would need better reasons before it would engage in the "micromanagement of the staffing arrangements at [the hospital] under the aegis of the antitrust laws." Id. at 669.

[*P23] The facts of BCB Anesthesia Care, Ltd. are very analogous to the instant case. Like the nurse anesthetists in that case, the Boffa Group here continued to practice at Swedish Covenant Hospital and elsewhere in Illinois; the only restraint was that they could not practice as they would have preferred, as members of defendants' network of physicians. Furthermore, defendants' conduct here has an even less restraining effect on competition in the relevant market than in BCB Anesthesia Care, Ltd., where the nearest hospital was 23 miles away in Springfield. The facts alleged by the Boffa Group do not bring their claim within the ambit of section 3(2) of the Act, and the reasons urged by the Boffa Group do not persuade this court to micromanage Swedish Covenant Hospital's [576] [*894] staffing and healthcare management arrangement with defendants under the aegis of the Act. Section 3(2) of the Act requires the Boffa Group, in addition to alleging illegal conspiracy, to plead facts that show that the conspiracy unreasonably [15] restrained trade. Adkins, 129 Ill. 2d at 521-22. The complaint merely alleges defendants entered into an amorphous and poorly explained agreement to exclude the Boffa Group and concludes that defendants' conduct was for an anticompetitive purpose. The complaint lacks specific allegations supportive of an illegal antitrust conspiracy or agreement or that such a conspiracy or agreement truly operated to restrain trade. There are no factual details given as to the who, when, or how of the purported conspiracy or how it resulted in a restraint of trade in the marketplace, particularly when there are 21 competing hospitals or medical centers within a short distance of Swedish Covenant Hospital and the Boffa Group, at all relevant times, enjoyed staff privileges and carried on their medical practice at Swedish Covenant Hospital and other Illinois institutions. Accordingly, we conclude that dismissal of the Boffa Group's antitrust claim was proper.

[*P24] The Boffa Group argues this court should not follow BCB Anesthesia Care, Ltd. and should instead follow Brader v. Allegheny General Hospital, 64 F.3d 869 (3d Cir. 1995), where the court held that the plaintiff physician, who sued a hospital and other physicians for Sherman Act violations based on his loss of staff privileges, adequately [16] alleged an antitrust injury. We conclude, however, that Brader addressed a set of facts and issues that are distinguishable from the instant case. In Brader, the defendant peer review board allegedly violated the Sherman Act when its summary suspension of the plaintiff's staff privileges prevented him from obtaining staff privileges not only at the defendant hospital, but also at other hospitals in neighboring counties. Id. at 872. Like BCB

Anesthesia Care, Ltd., and unlike Brader, nothing prevented the Boffa Group from working at Swedish Covenant Hospital or hospitals in Chicago and elsewhere. The Boffa Group alleged they continued to perform surgery, albeit subject to defendants' limitations, at Swedish Covenant Hospital. Additionally, this court takes judicial notice that there are 21 other hospital or medical centers within 20 miles of Swedish Covenant Hospital where the Boffa Group can and does provide services.

[*P25] The Boffa Group also cites Summit Health, Ltd. v. Pinhas, 500 U.S. 322, 111 S. Ct. 1842, 114 L. Ed. 2d 366 (1991), and Fuentes v. South Hills Cardiology, 946 F.2d 196 (3d Cir. 1991), and argues allegations concerning the exclusion of a single physician from the medical market were sufficient to state a claim under the Sherman Act. We find the Boffa Group's reliance on those distinguishable cases to be misplaced. In Summit Health [17] , the Court addressed the interstate commerce requirement of the Sherman Act with respect to the attempted exclusion of a physician from a particular geographic market. An ophthalmologist alleged that a hospital, its corporate owner, and its medical staff conspired in violation of section 1 of the Sherman Act to prevent him from providing ophthalmological services in the Los Angeles market by, inter alia, initiating peer review proceedings against him, summarily suspending and terminating his medical staff privileges, and threatening to distribute an adverse report about him to all hospitals in the market area. Summit Health, 500 U.S. at 324. Similarly, in Fuentes, 946 F.2d at 197-98, the plaintiff physician alleged that he could [577] [*895] not obtain another position both within and outside Pennsylvania as a result of the termination of his privileges due to the defendants' wrongful conduct. Here, in contrast, the Boffa Group's allegations establish that they have not been denied access to the market for surgical services in the Chicago area because they continue to practice at Swedish Covenant Hospital and elsewhere in Illinois.

[*P26] B. Tortious Interference With Prospective Economic Advantage

[*P27] The Boffa Group argues they pled sufficient facts to state a claim of [18] tortious interference with prospective economic advantage where they alleged defendants unfairly limited referrals of patients to members of defendants' in-house physicians group, which was restricted in size and inadequate to service the needs of the patients of Swedish Covenant Hospital. Furthermore, although the Boffa Group had a medical practice at Swedish Covenant Hospital and elsewhere, they alleged defendants' refusal to offer them membership in defendants' group prevented them from obtaining any referral business from fellow physicians who had patients at Swedish Covenant Hospital and thereby unlawfully prevented them from obtaining the necessary benefits and economic advantage that would have resulted from the "fill-in" service they provided at Swedish Covenant Hospital. The Boffa Group argues the circuit court improperly required them to provide evidentiary facts to prove their allegation that defendants' denial of full network membership to them caused other physicians not to refer business to them.

[*P28] HN7[] To plead a sufficient cause of action for tortious interference with prospective economic advantage, a plaintiff must allege that (1) he had a reasonable expectancy of a valid [19] business relationship; (2) the defendant knew about the expectancy; (3) the defendant intentionally interfered with the expectancy and prevented it from ripening into a valid business relationship; and (4) the intentional interference injured the plaintiff. Douglas Theater Corp. v. Chicago Title & Trust Co., 288 Ill. App. 3d 880, 887, 681 N.E.2d 564, 224 Ill. Dec. 249 (1997). "A plaintiff states a cause of action only if he alleges a business expectancy with a specific third party as well as action by the defendant directed toward that third party." Associated Underwriters of America Agency, Inc. v. McCarthy, 356 Ill. App. 3d 1010, 1020, 826 N.E.2d 1160, 292 Ill. Dec. 724 (2005). It is not enough for the defendant's action to impact a third party; rather, the defendant's action must be directed towards the third party. Schuler v. Abbott Laboratories, 265 Ill. App. 3d 991, 995, 639 N.E.2d 144, 203 Ill. Dec. 105 (1993) (where the plaintiff alleged the defendant, his former employer, interfered with prospective economic advantage by threatening to enforce a noncompetition agreement with respect to two prospective employers, section 2-615 dismissal was proper because the defendant did not direct its activity to anyone other than the plaintiff, even though such activity would likely dissuade the prospective employers).

[*P29] The Boffa Group has failed to meet the requirement of alleging a business expectancy with a specific third party. Their complaint merely alleges that defendants' conduct prevented unnamed physicians from referring patients to [20] the Boffa Group and prevented unnamed patients from receiving services from the Boffa Group. They have also failed to allege any conduct by defendants directed at those unnamed physicians and patients. Even if defendants' conduct of not offering the Boffa Group membership in defendants' network was likely to dissuade other physicians from making referrals to the Boffa Group [578] [*896] or dissuade other patients from using their services, "[c]ourts have rejected this argument, instead requiring that the interfering action be directed in the first instance at the third party." Id. Accordingly, the circuit court properly dismissed the Boffa Group's claim of tortious interference with prospective economic advantage.

[*P30] C. Denial of Leave to Amend

[*P31] The Boffa Group argues the circuit court deprived them of the opportunity to present a valid complaint by dismissing their claims with prejudice and without leave to amend. The Boffa Group does not propose any amendments that would cure their defective pleading; they argue, without providing any specifics, that if they were permitted to conduct discovery, supporting facts would come to light.

[*P32] HN8[] Courts are given broad discretion in liberally allowing amendments of pleadings [21] to foster the policy of resolving controversies on their merits. Cook v. Board of Education of Edwardsville Community Unit School District No. 7, Madison County, 126 Ill. App. 3d 1013, 1019, 467 N.E.2d 305, 81 Ill. Dec. 605 (1984); 735 ILCS 5/2-616 (West 2010). Nevertheless, plaintiffs do not have an absolute and unlimited right to amend. Ruklick v. Julius Schmid, Inc., 169 Ill. App. 3d 1098, 1113, 523 N.E.2d 1208, 120 Ill. Dec. 297 (1988). We review a trial court's decision to grant or deny a motion for leave to amend a pleading under the abuse of discretion standard. Selcke v. Bove, 258 Ill. App. 3d 932, 937, 629 N.E.2d 747, 196 Ill. Dec. 202 (1994). In determining whether the circuit court properly exercised its discretion, we consider "(1) whether the proposed amendment would cure the defective pleading; (2) whether other parties would sustain prejudice or surprise by virtue of the proposed amendment; (3) whether the proposed amendment is timely; and (4) whether previous opportunities to amend the pleading could be identified." (Internal quotation marks omitted.) Hayes Mechanical, Inc. v. First Industrial, L.P., 351 Ill. App. 3d 1, 7, 812 N.E.2d 419, 285 Ill. Dec. 599 (2004). Where it is apparent even after amendment that no cause of action can be stated, leave to amend should be denied. Ruklick, 169 Ill. App. 3d at 1111.

[*P33] As set forth in detail in the Background section of this order, the court gave the Boffa Group multiple opportunities to plead their claims but they failed to present a complaint sufficient to withstand section 2-615 dismissal. When the court dismissed the antitrust claim and delineated the deficiencies of the complaint in a four-page written order, the Boffa Group never set [22] forth any argument in their multiple motions to reconsider indicating they could amend the complaint to set forth facts showing the elements of that cause of action. Furthermore, concerning their tortious interference claim, the Boffa Group was allowed to amend their complaint to allege conduct by defendants directed towards a specific third party and, despite the circuit court granting them numerous continuances, failed to allege facts showing the elements of that cause of action. We find no abuse of discretion by the circuit court where the Boffa Group could not show that they could cure the deficiencies of their complaint.

[*P34] III. CONCLUSION

[*P35] We affirm the judgment of the circuit court dismissing plaintiffs' amended complaint under section 2-615 of the Code for failure to plead a cause of action.

[*P36] Affirmed.

I. INTRODUCTION

Plaintiff UniStrip Technologies, Inc. ("UniStrip") brings this civil action against Defendants LifeScan, Inc. and LifeScan Scotland, Ltd. (collectively, "LifeScan") for various antitrust violations in connection with the market for blood glucose test strips that both parties manufacture and distribute. (Doc. No. 47.)

Before the Court is LifeScan's Motion to Dismiss Plaintiff's Second Amended Complaint ("SAC"), which was filed on May 1, [*734] 2015. (Doc. No. 54.) For the following reasons, the Court [2] will deny LifeScan's Motion to Dismiss Counts I, II, III, IV, and VI of the Second Amended Complaint, and will grant LifeScan's Motion to Dismiss Count V.

II. BACKGROUND

LifeScan is a wholly owned subsidiary of Johnson & Johnson. It manufactures and sells blood glucose self-monitoring systems that allow individuals with diabetes to maintain healthy blood glucose levels. (Doc. No. 47 at 1, 7.) Blood glucose self-monitoring systems consist of disposable, single-use test strips that are read by an accompanying electrochemical meter. (Doc. No. 56 at 14.) The electronic meter can only read test strips that are designed to be compatible with it. (Id.) For this reason, the market for blood glucose self-monitoring systems consists of two sub-markets—one for electronic meters and one for accompanying test strips. (Id. at 14-15.)

In 2010, the United States market for blood glucose self-monitoring systems was valued at approximately $3.97 billion, with the test strip sub-market valued at $3.46 billion. (Doc. No. 47 at 1.) Four competitors in the United States market, including LifeScan, share more than 83% of the market. (Id. at 2.) Of these competitors, LifeScan vaunts that it is the leading manufacturer and seller [3] of blood glucose self-monitoring systems with more than 30% of the United States market. (Id.)

Blood glucose monitoring system manufacturers make their products available on the market by selling them to distributors, wholesalers, mass merchandisers, pharmacies, and direct-to-patient managed mail order service providers. (Id. at 4.) LifeScan offers these resellers various rebates and discounts on its blood glucose self-monitoring products in order to lower the high cost of its products. (Id. at 9.) For example, LifeScan offers discounts that significantly depress the cost of its electronic meters, an enticement to many individuals to purchase them. (Id.) Once the patient acquires a LifeScan meter, that patient is locked into purchasing LifeScan meter-compatible test strips, which are used by many diabetics multiple times per day. (Id.) Because LifeScan previously was the only manufacturer of LifeScan meter-compatible test strips, LifeScan cornered the market on these test strips. (Id.) The entry of a competitor, such as UniStrip, into the market for LifeScan-compatible test strips therefore would disrupt LifeScan's market strategy.

LifeScan markets a monitoring system, OneTouch Ultra, which consists [4] of an electronic meter and test strips that, until recently, were the only test strips available that were compatible with this meter. (Doc. No. 56 at 15.) Thus, LifeScan captured 100% of the market for those test strips. (Doc. No. 47 at 3.) In November 2013, however, the United State Food and Drug Administration approved a test strip, UniStrip1, which UniStrip developed to be compatible with—and thus usable in—OneTouch Ultra meters. (Id.) With this regulatory approval, UniStrip now was permitted to sell its lower-cost UniStrip1 and compete with LifeScan in the market for test strips that were compatible with the OneTouch Ultra meter. (Id.)

Following the entry into the market of UniStrip's generic alternative to LifeScan's test strip, LifeScan began entering into exclusivity contracts and agreements with its resellers. (Id. at 13.) According to Plaintiff, LifeScan would offer rebates and discounts to resellers on the condition that those resellers would not purchase any non-LifeScan products compatible with the OneTouch Ultra meter. (Id.) Should a reseller purchase a non-LifeScan product, such as the UniStrip1 test strip, LifeScan [*735] allegedly would reduce or terminate its offered rebates and discounts. [5] (Id.) The reseller then would face steep price increases on LifeScan products. (Id.) UniStrip alleges that there are "exclusionary contracts with resellers [that] include terms or provisions that expressly or impliedly condition the payment of rebates, discounts, allowances and other financial incentives on the agreement and/or understanding that the customer not purchase sell [sic] non-LifeScan products." (Id.) UniStrip also asserts that "LifeScan has also made these threats in-person, over the phone, in e-mails and other written correspondences notwithstanding any express penalty term in the agreement with the reseller." (Id. at 13-14.) The exclusionary conditions, UniStrip asserts, have prevented resellers from purchasing UniStrip products due to the reseller's fear of losing the coveted rebates and discounts LifeScan offers. (Id.)

UniStrip alleges that these exclusivity agreements violate antitrust law because they impede competition by foreclosing the market to LifeScan's competitors. (Id. at 15.) UniStrip also contends that LifeScan's exclusionary strategy amounts to an illegal attempt to maintain its monopoly power over the test strip market. (Id.) Because LifeScan conditions rebates and discounts [6] on all of its products and not only test strips, UniStrip asserts that this strategy is an illegal bundling scheme that violates antitrust law. (Id.) UniStrip argues that LifeScan's conditions impermissibly allow it to terminate a discount on any of its products, such as that on the OneTouch Ultra meter, if the reseller purchases a UniStrip1 test strip. (Id.)

As a result of UniStrip's allegations of LifeScan's anticompetitive behavior, UniStrip brought this suit against LifeScan on July 29, 2014. (Doc. No. 1.) In its Complaint, UniStrip claims that LifeScan has violated Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act and Section 3 of the Clayton Act, and also has violated applicable state law by tortiously interfering with actual and prospective contracts. (Id.) UniStrip filed a First Amended Complaint on November 19, 2014. (Doc. No. 30.) LifeScan responded by filing a Motion to Dismiss on December 19, 2014. (Doc. No. 37.)

A hearing was held on LifeScan's Motion to Dismiss on February 19, 2015. (Doc. No. 46.) Following the hearing, UniStrip filed a Second Amended Complaint on March 30, 2015.[1] (Doc. No. 47.) LifeScan filed a Motion to Dismiss the Second Amended Complaint on May 1, 2015. (Doc. No. 54.) Plaintiff responded [7] to LifeScan's Motion to Dismiss on June 2, 2015 (Doc. No. 56), and LifeScan replied on June 17, 2015 (Doc. No. 58). For the following reasons, the Court will deny LifeScan's Motion to Dismiss in part and will grant it in part.

III. STANDARDS OF REVIEW

A. Legal Standard for Motion To Dismiss

In deciding a motion to dismiss, the court "accept[s] as true all allegations in the complaint and all reasonable inferences that can be drawn therefrom, and views them in the light most favorable to the non-moving party." DeBenedictis v. Merrill Lynch & Co., 492 F.3d 209, 215 (3d Cir. 2007). The motion to dismiss standard under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(b)(6) establishes that "threadbare recitals of the elements of a cause of action, supported by mere conclusory statements do not suffice" to defeat a Rule 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss. *Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 663, [736] 129 S. Ct. 1937, 173 L. Ed. 2d 868 (2009); see also Bell Atl. Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007). "To survive a motion to dismiss, a complaint must contain sufficient factual matter, accepted as true, to state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face." Ethypharm S.A. France v. Abbott Labs., 707 F.3d 223, 231 n.14 (3d Cir. 2013) (citing Sheridan v. NGK Metals Corp., 609 F.3d 239, 262 n.27 (3d Cir. 2010)). "A claim has facial plausibility when the plaintiff pleads factual content that allows the court to draw the reasonable inference that the defendant is liable [8] for the misconduct alleged." Id. Where "the well-pleaded facts do not permit the court to infer more than the mere possibility of misconduct, the complaint has alleged—but it has not 'shown'—'that the pleader is entitled to relief.'" Iqbal, 556 U.S. at 679. The "plausibility" determination is a "context-specific task that requires the reviewing court to draw on its judicial experience and common sense." Id.

B. Legal Standard for Exclusive Dealing

When a party asserts violations of antitrust laws based on allegations that "a business rival has priced its products in an unfair manner with an object to eliminate or retard competition and thereby gain and exercise control over prices in the relevant market," the court must determine which of two tests applies to that party's claims. Brooke Grp. Ltd. v. Brown & Williamson Tobacco Corp., 509 U.S. 209, 222, 113 S. Ct. 2578, 125 L. Ed. 2d 168 (1993); see also ZF Meritor, LLC v. Eaton Corp., 696 F.3d 254, 268 (3d Cir. 2012). Specifically, if a Plaintiff alleges violations of Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act and Section 3 of the Clayton Act due to an exclusive dealing arrangement, the court will determine if it should apply the "price-cost test" or the "rule of reason." Id. at 268-69.[2] When a plaintiff's claim of exclusive dealing by a competitor is based predominately on the allegation that the mechanism of exclusion is pricing practices—that is, pricing products below [9] that competitor's cost of production—the price-cost test applies. Id. This test requires a plaintiff to demonstrate "that the defendant's prices are below an appropriate measure of the defendant's costs." Id. at 269 (quoting Brooke Grp., 509 U.S. at 222 (quotations omitted)). In contrast, when a plaintiff's allegations of exclusive dealing are not centered on pricing practices alone, the "rule of reason" test applies to determine if the arrangement will "foreclose on competition in such a substantial share of the relevant market so as to adversely affect competition." Id. at 271. In applying this test, the court can consider "a showing of significant market power by the defendant . . . , substantial foreclosure [of the market] . . . , contracts of sufficient duration to prevent meaningful competition by rivals . . . , and whether there is evidence that the dominant firm engaged in coercive behavior." Id. at 271-72 (citations omitted).

[1] In view of the filing of the SAC, the Motion to Dismiss the First Amended Complaint (Doc. No. 37) was denied without prejudice as moot. (Doc. No. 48.)

[2] "An exclusive dealing arrangement is an agreement in which a buyer agrees to purchase certain goods or services only from a particular seller for a certain period of time." ZF Meritor, 696 F.3d at 270.

IV. ANALYSIS

A. The Rule of Reason Applies in this Case

A fundamental disagreement between the parties here is whether the Court should apply [10] the rule of reason or the price-cost test when evaluating UniStrip's allegations of exclusive dealing by LifeScan in violation of antitrust law. According [*737] to LifeScan, UniStrip's allegations that LifeScan threatened to terminate rebates is only a pleading of aggressive price competition. (Doc. No. 54 at 15.) LifeScan argues that because UniStrip claims anticompetitive behavior based on predatory pricing, the price-cost test applies, which requires Plaintiff to allege that LifeScan has priced its test strips below cost in an attempt to eliminate competition. (Id. at 15-16.) LifeScan presses the Court to apply the price-cost test because UniStrip's allegations, in essence, are that pricing is the primary mechanism of LifeScan's exclusionary conduct. (Id. at 16.) Because UniStrip has not alleged that LifeScan's prices are below cost, LifeScan would have the Court dismiss this case pursuant to the price-cost test as outlined in Brooke Group. (Id.)

UniStrip, on the other hand, insists that the Court apply the rule of reason because UniStrip pleads nowhere in its SAC that price was LifeScan's mechanism of exclusion, but rather pleads that it engaged in anticompetitive, predatory conduct. (Doc. No. 56 at 23-24.) [11] UniStrip contends that the exclusivity of the arrangements that LifeScan has imposed on resellers of its products prevents competitors from entering the market, not price competition. (Id. at 24.) As such, UniStrip asserts that the rule of reason applies and LifeScan simply mischaracterizes the claims made against it in an attempt to have the case dismissed. (Id.)

Here, viewing the allegations in the SAC in the light most favorable to Plaintiff UniStrip, it is clear that the claims made in its SAC plead anticompetitive behavior rather than merely competitive pricing. LifeScan's arguments that the price-cost test applies is therefore unpersuasive at this stage of the litigation.

In ZF Meritor, the Third Circuit examined a plaintiff's claims of exclusive dealing in connection with the market for heavy-duty truck transmissions. 696 F.3d at 263. The facts of that case are quite similar to those presently before the Court. The plaintiff alleged violations of Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act and Section 3 of the Clayton Act because the defendant entered into agreements with purchasers of the transmissions that required the purchase of a specific quantity of the defendant's products, rather than those of a competitor, or else rebates [12] offered to the purchasers would be terminated. Id. at 265. The Third Circuit acknowledged that generally, a claim that rebate programs "which condition the . . . rebate on the costumer's purchasing of" its products should be analyzed under the price-cost test. Id. at 275. Despite this acknowledgment, the Third Circuit applied the rule of reason because of the exclusionary nature of the agreements, finding that predatory pricing was not alleged to be the primary mechanism of exclusion. Id. at 277. Specifically, the several-year length of the contracts and the defendant's dominance in the market for a necessary product were the primary factors leading it to apply the rule of reason. Id. The Third Circuit also considered that, apart from the formal contracts, correspondence that threatened the termination of rebates warranted the application of the rule of reason because it amounted to exclusionary anticompetitive behavior and not predatory pricing. Id. at 277-78.

In this case, as in ZF Meritor, UniStrip alleges that rebates have been offered to purchasers of LifeScan's products on the condition that a competitor's products would not be purchased. UniStrip similarly alleges that these conditions extended for several years (Doc. [13] No. 56 at 41), and were contained in contracts or were made as threats in correspondence between LifeScan and purchasers. UniStrip also points to [*738] LifeScan's dominance in the market for test strips that are compatible with LifeScan's meters. Given the similarities between this case and ZF Meritor, the rule of reason applies here based on the allegations in the SAC.[3]

B. Analysis of the Motion to Dismiss Each Count of the SAC

LifeScan has moved to dismiss the entirety of UniStrip's SAC for failure to state a claim for relief pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(b)(6). (Doc. No. 54 at 10.) Accordingly, the Court will evaluate each of UniStrip's six Counts seriatim to determine which will survive the Motion to Dismiss.

1. Count I (Exclusionary Arrangements in Violation of Section 3 of the Clayton Act) Will Not Be Dismissed

UniStrip first alleges in its SAC that LifeScan has violated Section 3 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 14, by engaging in unlawful exclusionary agreements. (Doc. No. 47 at 16.) As noted, UniStrip asserts that LifeScan has threatened purchasers or potential purchasers of UniStrip's test strips not to buy [14] them, or else LifeScan would terminate highly-valued rebates on its own products. According to UniStrip, LifeScan has engaged in such exclusive dealing arrangements with the purpose of eliminating competition from the market for LifeScan meter-compatible test strips. Though these agreements may not contain express exclusivity clauses in writing, UniStrip argues that the absence of such a clause does not preclude review of its allegations.

Under Section 3 of the Clayton Act, an entity may not "make a sale or contract for sale of goods . . . or discount from, or rebate upon, such price, on the condition, agreement, or understanding that the . . . purchaser thereof shall not use or deal in the goods . . . of a competitor . . . where the effect . . . may be to substantially lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly" in the market for those goods. 15 U.S.C. § 14. The Third Circuit has held that Section 3 Clayton Act violations are held to stricter standards than the less restrictive provisions of the Sherman Act. Barr Labs, Inc. v. Abbott Labs, 978 F.2d 98, 110 (3d Cir. 1992). Under this stricter standard, when a court reviews the "legality of an exclusive dealing arrangement under the Clayton Act," it must determine "whether the competition foreclosed constitutes a substantial [15] share of the relevant market." Id. The court need not limit its review of the exclusive dealing arrangement to an express exclusivity requirement in a contract. LePage's Inc. v. 3M, 324 F.3d 141, 157 (3d Cir. 2003) (citing Tampa Elec. Co. v. Nashville Coal Co., 365 U.S. 320, 327, 81 S. Ct. 623, 5 L. Ed. 2d 580 (1961)).

UniStrip's Clayton Act claim set forth in Count I will not be dismissed. UniStrip has alleged that LifeScan engaged in anticompetitive behavior in the form of requiring purchasers of its products to commit to agreements in which those purchasers were influenced not to buy a competitor's products. UniStrip has identified the specific product and geographic markets that it alleges it is excluded from, as well as several actual and potential distributors in those markets that have been foreclosed from conducting business with UniStrip due to LifeScan's alleged exclusive dealing. UniStrip further alleges that this scheme was concocted for the purposes of chilling competition in the market and maintaining Defendants' monopoly. This allegation is [*739] squarely in line with the prohibitions found in Section 3 of the Clayton Act.

LifeScan provides the Court with a test to determine if a "substantial lessening of competition" exists under the rule of reason: a court should examine "(1) the extent of market foreclosure, [16] (2) the duration of the allegedly anticompetitive arguments, (3) the nature of the anticompetitive conduct, and (4) any procompetitive justifications for defendants' conduct." (Doc. No. 54 at 24 (citing ZF Meritor, 696 F.3d at 286-89).) In ZF Meritor, the Third Circuit considered these factors in weighing the sufficiency of the evidence that a jury considered at trial in evaluating plaintiff's claims under the rule of reason. At this stage of the litigation, however, the Court does not evaluate the sufficiency of the evidence. Rather, in applying the pertinent standard of review at the motion to dismiss stage, at which the litigation is currently, UniStrip has adequately pled in the SAC plausible allegations of a violation of Section 3 of the Clayton Act.

2. Count II (Contracts and Agreements in Violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act) Will Not Be Dismissed

UniStrip next alleges that LifeScan has violated Section 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C § 1, by engaging in contracts and agreements that restrain competition to the detriment of consumers. (Doc. No. 47 at 20.) To reiterate, UniStrip asserts that LifeScan has entered into exclusivity contracts and agreements with resellers—who might potentially purchase UniStrip products—that specifically eliminate [17] UniStrip from the relevant test strip market. These agreements, which predicate discounts on LifeScan products on the condition that UniStrip products are not purchased, restrain trade by excluding LifeScan's competitor from the market. Because UniStrip offers a potentially lower-priced alternative product, UniStrip asserts that consumers are disadvantaged and injured by LifeScan's scheme to jettison the competition from the market. UniStrip is also financially harmed by its inability to sell its product and grow in the market.

Section 1 of the Sherman Act makes it illegal to make a "contract [or] combination . . . , or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce." 15 U.S.C. § 1. As stated above, alleged Sherman Act violations are held to a less restrictive standard than those made under the Clayton Act. Barr Labs., 978 F.2d at 110. To establish a cognizable violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act for unreasonable restraint of trade due to exclusive dealing, a plaintiff must show "(1) concerted action by the defendants; (2) that produced anti-competitive effects within the relevant product and geographic markets; (3) that the concerted action was illegal; and (4) that the plaintiff was injured as a proximate result of the concerted action." [18] Queen City Pizza, Inc. v. Domino's Pizza, Inc., 124 F.3d 430, 442 (3d Cir 1997). Under this test, Plaintiff's claims as set forth in Count II of the SAC are plausible and will not be dismissed.

To show concerted action, a plaintiff must reference a contract or agreement that demonstrates an unlawful arrangement. Mathews v. Lancaster General Hosp., 87 F.3d 624, 639 (3d Cir. 1996). UniStrip has done so by repeatedly alleging that illegal exclusivity agreements exist. LifeScan even acknowledges these references to the agreements. (Doc. No. 58 at 5.) Moreover, to demonstrate anticompetitive effects within the relevant product and geographic markets in rule of reason cases, a plaintiff can satisfy this burden by proving the defendant's market power in the relevant market. Orson, Inc. v. Miramax Film Corp., 79 F.3d 1358, 1367 (3d Cir. 1996). UniStrip could plausibly prove [*740] this factor, as it has pointed to LifeScan's dominance in the market for blood glucose self-monitoring systems—which LifeScan has admitted—as well as LifeScan's share of virtually the entire sub-market for LifeScan meter-compatible test strips. Finally, UniStrip has alleged that the exclusive dealing agreements are illegal, and that these agreements have deprived and will continue to deprive UniStrip of revenues, profits, and market growth, resulting in injury.

At the motion to dismiss stage, Plaintiff only must advance plausible claims. [19] UniStrip's Section 1 Sherman Act allegations are plausible, and Defendants' Motion to Dismiss as to Count II of Plaintiff's SAC will be denied.

3. Count III (Attempted Monopolization in Violation of Section 2 of the Sherman Act) Will Not Be Dismissed

Count III of UniStrip's SAC charges LifeScan with alleged violations of Section 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 2, for attempts to monopolize the test strip market. (Doc. No. 47 at 25.) UniStrip claims that by engaging in exclusionary and anticompetitive practices, LifeScan has schemed to preclude competitors of the OneTouch Ultra meter-compatible test strips from competing in the market. By such action, LifeScan has illegally attempted to maintain its monopoly over it. UniStrip asserts that given LifeScan's dominance in the market, there is a dangerous probability that LifeScan will maintain or even expand its monopoly in the relevant markets, allowing it to set prices, reduce output, and exclude competition from those markets. UniStrip alleges that LifeScan's anticompetitive and exclusionary practices were undertaken with the specific intent of monopolizing the market for test strips used in OneTouch Ultra meters.

Section 2 of the Sherman Act provides that an entity may not "monopolize, [20] or attempt to monopolize, or combine or conspire . . . to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce among the several States." 15 U.S.C. § 2. A defendant has violated Section 2 of the Sherman Act when it "possesses monopoly power in the relevant market" and "willfully acquired or maintained that power." LePage's Inc., 324 F.3d at 146 (citing United States v. Grinnell Corp., 384 U.S. 563, 86 S. Ct. 1698, 16 L. Ed. 2d 778 (1966)). "Exclusive dealing arrangements are of special concern when imposed by a monopolist." ZF Meritor, 696 F.3d at 271; see also United States v. Dentsply Int'l, Inc., 399 F.3d 181, 187 (3d Cir. 2005) ("Behavior that otherwise might comply with antitrust law may be impermissibly exclusionary when practiced by a monopolist"). A monopolist can be found to have willfully maintained its monopolist power when it engages in exclusive dealing, especially where that exclusive agreement is alleged to be based on the bundling of rebates. LePage's Inc., 324 F.3d at 147.

Under these principles, UniStrip has pled a violation of Section 2 of the Sherman Act sufficient to survive LifeScan's Motion to Dismiss. UniStrip has alleged—and LifeScan has conceded—that LifeScan is the leading manufacturer and seller of blood glucose self-monitoring systems, with a significant share of the market. UniStrip has also alleged that LifeScan controls virtually the entire market for test strips that are compatible with its OneTouch Ultra meters. These allegations [21] are plausible to demonstrate LifeScan's monopolist power in the relevant market.

Furthermore, UniStrip repeatedly alleges in its SAC that LifeScan has engaged in exclusive dealing, in violation of several antitrust laws, and that this exclusive dealing consists of bundling schemes by which [*741] rebates are offered on the condition that multiple products from LifeScan are purchased. Viewing the allegations in the SAC in the light most favorable to Plaintiff, this claim is plausibly indicative of LifeScan's willful attempt to maintain its monopoly power in the market for test strips that are compatible with its meters. Applying LePage's Inc. and the plausibility standards for pleading at the motion to dismiss stage, then, UniStrip has adequately pled a violation of Section 2 of the Sherman Act against LifeScan.

Therefore, Count III of Plaintiff's SAC will remain, and Defendant's Motion to Dismiss Count III will be denied.

4. Count IV (Bundling in Violation of Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act and Section 3 of the Clayton Act) Will Not Be Dismissed

In Count IV of its SAC, UniStrip alleges that LifeScan engaged in an illegal bundling scheme, in violation of Section 3 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 14, and Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. §§ 1, 2. (Doc. No. [22] 47 at 28.) Using the same factual scenarios set forth above, UniStrip claims that LifeScan offers discount and rebate programs to induce customers to purchase its OneTouch Ultra meters, and then lock those customers into purchasing LifeScan's accompanying test strips. Because LifeScan threatens to eliminate those discounts and rebates on the condition that resellers only purchase LifeScan products that are compatible with its products, rather than those of a competitor, UniStrip argues that this bundling scheme amounts to anticompetitive exclusive dealing. UniStrip asserts that this bundling scheme has the effect and intent of barring competition from entering or expanding in the market, as well as to maintain its monopoly in the market.

Bundling of rebates occurs when a producer of one product induces customers to purchase that product instead of a similar product produced by a competitor by offering the customer discounts on another one of its products that its rival does not produce. LePage's Inc., 324 F.3d at 155. This market strategy by a monopolist has the potential anticompetitive effect of "foreclos[ing] portions of the market to a potential competitor who does not manufacture an equally diverse group of products and [23] who therefore cannot make a comparable offer." Id. To demonstrate the impermissibility of a bundling scheme under antitrust law, a plaintiff must show that: 1) there is an "agreement by a party to sell one product but only on the condition that the buyer also purchases a different (or [bundled]) product"; 2) that the "seller has sufficient economic power with respect to the [bundled] product to appreciably restrain competition"; and 3) that "interstate commerce is affected." SmithKline Corp. v. Eli Lilly & Co., 575 F.2d 1056, 1061 n.3 (3d Cir. 1976) (quotations omitted); see also LePage's Inc., 324 F.3d at 155. If these elements are shown, a defendant is potentially in violation of the Sherman and Clayton Acts.

UniStrip meets these requirements in its SAC, and for this reason, the Motion to Dismiss Count IV will be denied. Under the first requirement, UniStrip made several allegations of bundling contracts and agreements, both written and oral, between LifeScan and named third-party buyers. With specificity, UniStrip alleges that each agreement required the buyer to purchase LifeScan test strips—the bundled product—or else rebates and discounts on other LifeScan products, such as the meter, would be discontinued or reduced. As to the second requirement that Plaintiff demonstrate Defendants' [24] economic power in the market for the bundled product, UniStrip has alleged that LifeScan control virtually the entire market for [*742] OneTouch Ultra meter-compatible test strips, and LifeScan admits to being the leader in the market for blood glucose self-monitoring systems. Finally, UniStrip meets the third requirement by averring that the alleged bundling arrangements affect interstate commerce. Accordingly, UniStrip has alleged a plausible and impermissible bundling scheme in violation of antitrust laws.

Having sufficiently pled a plausible claim against LifeScan with regard to the alleged illegal bundling arrangement, UniStrip may proceed on this claim. The Court will therefore deny LifeScan's Motion to Dismiss Count IV.

5. Count V (Tortious Interference with Prospective Contractual Relations) Will Be Dismissed

In Count V of the SAC, UniStrip claims that LifeScan tortiously interfered with prospective contractual relations between UniStrip and resellers. UniStrip alleges that potential resellers were discouraged from purchasing the UniStrip1 due to LifeScan's contracts with them that threaten to revoke rebates and discounts on LifeScan products should the UniStrip1 be purchased. LifeScan [25] allegedly contacted UniStrip and informed it of these contracts, and that LifeScan would be enforcing them. Because LifeScan's intentional conduct is without any legitimate business justification, UniStrip pleads, LifeScan has caused UniStrip financial injury and has made it difficult for UniStrip to remain as a competitor on the market.

The parties agree that both the laws of Pennsylvania and North Carolina govern these claims, and that both laws are essentially the same. (Doc. No. 46 at 57; Doc. No. 54 at 30). Under Pennsylvania law, an action for tortious interference with prospective contractual relations requires the following elements:

> (1) the existence of a contractual, or prospective contractual relation between the complainant and a third party; (2) purposeful action on the part of the defendant, specifically intended to harm the existing relation, or to prevent a prospective relation from occurring; (3) the absence of privilege or justification on the part of the defendant; and (4) the occasioning of actual legal damage as a result of the defendant's conduct.

Maverick Steel Co. v. Dick Corp./Barton Malow, 2012 PA Super 173, 54 A.3d 352, 355 (Pa. Super. 2012). Regarding the first element—the existence of a prospective contractual relationship—there must be a demonstration of [26] "something less than a contractual right, [but] something more than a mere hope," Thompson Coal Co. v. Pike Coal Co., 488 Pa. 198, 412 A.2d 466, 471 (Pa. 1979), and that there is "an objectively reasonable probability that such a contract would arise," Applied Tech. Intern., Ltd. v. Goldstein, Civ. No. 03-848, 2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 21219, 2004 WL 2360388, at *6 (E.D. Pa. Oct. 20, 2004). Under the law of North Carolina, a plaintiff in an action for tortious interference with prospective economic advantage "must allege facts to show that the defendants acted without justification in inducing a third party to refrain from entering into a contract with them which contract would have ensued but for the interference." Walker v. Sloan, 137 N.C. App. 387, 529 S.E.2d 236, 242 (N.C. Ct. App. 2000) (quotations omitted).

The essence of both states' laws require that the plaintiff must establish that a prospective contract likely would have been agreed to by the plaintiff and a third party in the absence of the defendant's alleged interference and that the defendant acted without a legitimate business justification. Given these requirements, UniStrip fails to make a plausible claim of interference with prospective contractual relations.

[*743] First, UniStrip has not plausibly pled that it was likely that a contractual relationship would have occurred in the absence of LifeScan's alleged tortious interference. UniStrip lists a number of resellers with which it potentially could have engaged [27] in contractual relations,[4] but it does not plead that there were actual relations or potential contracts with those resellers that "would have ensued" beyond "a mere hope." There is no plausible allegation provided by UniStrip that there was any "objectively reasonable probability" that a contract would arise from the dealings with prospective buyers. See *Applied Tech. Intern., 2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 21219, 2004 WL 2360388 at 6. UniStrip's allegations include unnamed prospective resellers, and there is meager information about its dealings with the prospective resellers it names. In short, the Court cannot identify "specific business relationships suffering as a result of the defendant's interference" that UniStrip is required to plead. Id.

Second, UniStrip merely claims that LifeScan improperly acted without justification, yet it fails to provide any reasoning that underlies this assertion. Merely reciting this element of the tort is not sufficient to reach the levels of a plausible claim.

[28] Accordingly, given these insufficiencies, Count V of Plaintiff's claim will be dismissed.

6. Count VI (Tortious Interference with Actual Contractual Relations) Will Be Not Dismissed

UniStrip avers that LifeScan also is in violation of Pennsylvania and North Carolina law for tortious interference with actual contractual relations. UniStrip's only cognizable claim under Count VI is that LifeScan interfered with a contract with reseller Discount Drug Mart ("DDM"), an Ohio pharmacy. (Doc. No. 47 at 33.) UniStrip asserts that, after DDM had purchased the UniStrip1, LifeScan had "informed DDM that its contracts with Humana and Medicare beneficiaries would not pay rebates" on LifeScan products if it sold non-LifeScan products. (Id.) Afterwards, DDM requested that it return its purchase to UniStrip, and UniStrip accepted the request.

To claim tortious interference with actual contractual relations under Pennsylvania law, a plaintiff must prove the same elements as provided above for tortious interference with prospective contractual relations, except that an actual contract must be shown to have existed. Maverick Steel Co., 54 A.3d at 355. Under the law of North Carolina, the "tort of interference with contract has five elements: [29] (1) a valid contract between the plaintiff and a third person which confers upon the plaintiff a contractual right against a third person; (2) the defendant knows of the contract; (3) the defendant intentionally induces the third person not to perform the contract; (4) and in doing so acts without justification; (5) resulting in actual damage to the plaintiff." Austin Maint. & Constr., Inc. v. Crowder Constr. Co., 224 N.C. App. 401, 742 S.E.2d 535, 546 (N.C. Ct. App. 2012).

UniStrip alleges a plausible claim of the existence of actual contractual relations because it points to a stock order transaction in which it engaged with DDM. In addition, the other elements of this cause of action are properly alleged in the SAC. To counteract UniStrip's claim, LifeScan essentially argues that it was cloaked with a privilege in the course of competition to [*744] interfere with the relationship of a competitor selling a similar product. However, UniStrip has alleged wrongful antitrust conduct independent from the claim of tortious interference of actual contractual relations. Therefore, Count VI of Plaintiff's SAC will not be dismissed.

V. CONCLUSION

UniStrip has alleged plausible claims of antitrust violations and tortious interference with actual contractual relations against LifeScan. Accordingly, the Court will [30] deny LifeScan's Motion to Dismiss Counts I, II, III, I V, and VI. LifeScan's Motion to Dismiss Count V, alleging tortious interference with prospective contractual relations, will be granted. An appropriate order follows.

[*none] ORDER

AND NOW, this 28th day of December, 2015, upon consideration of Plaintiff's Second Amended Complaint (Doc. No. 47), Defendants' Motion to Dismiss (Doc. No. 54), Plaintiff's Response in Opposition to Defendant's Motion to Dismiss (Doc. No. 56), Defendants' Reply to Plaintiff's Response (Doc. No. 58), and Plaintiff's Notice of Supplemental Authority in Opposition to Defendants' Motion to Dismiss (Doc. No. 59), it is ORDERED in accordance with the Opinion issued by the Court on this day that Defendants' Motion to Dismiss is GRANTED IN PART and DENIED IN PART:

1. Count V of Plaintiff's Second Amended Complaint (Doc. No. 47) is DISMISSED.
2. Counts I, II, III, I V, and VI of Plaintiff's Second Amended Complaint (Doc. No. 47) will not be dismissed.

OPINION AND ORDER

GARCIA-GREGORY, D.J.

This matter is before the Court on Defendants' renewed Motion to Dismiss Plaintiffs' claims under the Sherman Antitrust Act ("Sherman Act") pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6). Docket No. 83. Plaintiffs timely opposed. Docket No. 84. Plaintiffs, a group of licensed chiropractors and chiropractic clinics, sued Defendants, the Corporacion del Fondo del Seguro del Estado ("CFSE") and several CFSE directors and officials,[1] alleging, inter alia, that Defendants violated Section 1 and Section 2 of the Sherman Act by illegally discriminating against chiropractors and taking steps to exclude them from the services provided by the CFSE. Docket No. 28.

There are two issues before the Court. The first issue is whether Plaintiffs' claims should be dismissed because Defendants are immune from Sherman Act liability under the doctrine of state-action antitrust immunity of Parker v. Brown, 317 U.S. 341, 63 S. Ct. 307, 87 L. Ed. 315 (1943). The second issue is whether Plaintiffs have failed to plead successful claims under Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act. The Court GRANTS Defendants' Motion to Dismiss and hereby dismisses Plaintiffs' Sherman Act claims with prejudice because Defendants are immune from Sherman Act liability under Parker. Since Defendants are immune, the Court does not address the second issue concerning the sufficiency of Plaintiffs' claims.

BACKGROUND

A. Factual [*4] Background[2]

The CFSE is a public corporation created by the Puerto Rico legislature for the purpose of carrying out the Puerto Rico Compensation System for Work-Related Accidents Act ("Worker's Compensation Act" or "Act"). P.R. Laws Ann. tit. 11 §§ 1, 1b. Every employer covered by the Act is required to insure its workers through the CFSE, and CFSE compensation is the exclusive remedy available to an injured worker. P.R. Laws Ann. tit. 11 §§ 19, 21. Private insurance companies are not allowed to offer worker's compensation insurance to employers in Puerto Rico, Docket No. 28, thus ensuring that the CFSE is the only provider of worker's compensation insurance in Puerto Rico. The CFSE is tasked with creating a worker's compensation system that complies with the policies stated under the Act, P.R. Laws Ann. tit. 11 § 1b-3, and it is empowered to establish a program to "achieve the physical as well as vocational rehabilitation" of injured employees, P.R. Laws Ann. tit. 11 § 1b-1. The Puerto Rico legislature empowered the CFSE with "all the necessary or convenient powers" to be able to accomplish its mission, including the authority to enter into contracts, among others. Id.

[*5] The CFSE is governed by a seven member Board of Directors ("BOD"). P.R. Laws Ann. tit. 11 § 1b-2. All seven members are appointed by the Governor of Puerto Rico and can be removed by the Governor for just cause. Id. Of the seven BOD members, one "shall be the Insurance Commissioner, who is a person of great technical competence in the insurance area; one shall be identified with the employers, another one . . . shall be identified with the employees . . . and two (2) members shall be officials of the Departments of Labor and Human Resources, and Health . . . . The two (2) remaining members . . . shall be freely selected." Id. The CFSE also contains a seven member Industrial Medical Council (IMC), which consists of four (4) medical doctors, a Health Services Administrator, a professional nurse and a specialist in vocational rehabilitation. P.R. Laws Ann. tit. 11 § 1c. The IMC is tasked with designing guidelines for the adequate treatment of most medical conditions for employees who receive benefits from the CFSE. Id.

[1] These officials are: Liza M. [*3] Estrada ("Estrada") in her official capacity as Administrator of CFSE; Sheila Rivera-Serrano ("Rivera-Serrano") in her personal and official capacity as Director of the CFSE Medical Area; Maria I. Lastra-Gonzalez ("Lastra-Gonzalez") in her personal and official capacity as Medical Director at the CFSE Bayamon Regional Office; Jose Colon-Grau ("Colon-Grau") in his personal and official capacity as an External Advisor; and Lorena Diaz-Trancon ("Diaz-Trancon") in her personal and official capacity as a Type VII Internal Medical Council of CFSE.

[2] For purposes of Defendants' Motion to Dismiss, all facts in Plaintiffs' Amended Complaint, Docket No. 28, are presumed to be true.

However, these guidelines must be ratified by the governing BOD. Id. Plaintiffs allege that Defendants have engaged in a pattern to discriminate against chiropractors and to exclude them from CFSE services from 2003 up to the present. Docket No. 28. According to the Amended Complaint, Defendants, in particular Defendant Lastra-Gonzalez, have denied contracts to several chiropractors, including Plaintiffs, without any reasonable cause. Id. Defendant Lastra-Gonzalez also sent an internal memo to the CFSE's regional medical directors instructing them to cease all referrals of new patients for chiropractic treatment during a three-week period. Id. Moreover, Defendant Lastra-Gonzalez began to spread the rumor that the CFSE was in the process of eliminating chiropractic care from the CFSE's compensated services due to its harmful side effects and the ineffectiveness of the treatment. Id. To this day, some physicians opt not to refer patients to chiropractors due to the dissemination of this information. Defendant Lastra-Gonzalez has denied referrals to chiropractors even after the patients' physicians approved the [*6] treatment. Id.

On August 9, 2013, the CFSE issued a letter concerning the adoption of new guidelines and policies regarding chiropractic services and patient referrals. Id. The letter discussed in an inflammatory and exaggerated manner the contraindications and side effects of chiropractic treatment. Id. This letter, which was signed by Defendant Rivera-Serrano, was sent to 9 regional directors and 310 occupational primary care physicians, as well as several patients. Id. Despite this, Defendants Rivera-Serrano and Colon-Grau have denied the existence of the letter and the new guidelines to Plaintiffs on various occasions. Id.

The new guidelines require a physician that wishes to refer an injured worker to a chiropractor to comply with several new onerous requirements that only apply to chiropractic services. *Id. T*he guidelines also reduced the maximum number of covered chiropractic treatments, and any extension must be authorized by the regional medical director. Id.

B. Procedural Background

The Court is evaluating Defendants' renewed Motion to Dismiss, which only concerns Plaintiffs' Sherman Act claims. Docket No. 83. Plaintiffs originally asserted against Defendants, inter alia, violations [*7] of the Sherman Act, Due Process Clause, Equal Protection Clause, Contract Clause, the First Amendment, and Puerto Rico law. Docket No. 28. Defendants filed two Motions to Dismiss all of Plaintiffs' claims. Docket Nos. 30 and 44. On September 9, 2015, this Court issued an Opinion and Order granting in part Defendants' motions and dismissing with prejudice Plaintiffs' Due Process Clause, Equal Protection Clause, and Contract Clause claims. Docket No. 77. The Court also dismissed with prejudice Plaintiffs' First Amendment claims only as to Defendants Lastra-Gonzalez, Diaz-Trancon, Rivera-Serrano, and Colon-Grau. Id. The Court denied Defendants' Motions to Dismiss as to Plaintiffs' First Amendment claims against the CFSE and Defendant Estrada; and Plaintiffs' Puerto Rico law claims. Id. Finally, the Court denied without prejudice Defendants' Motions to Dismiss as to Plaintiffs' Sherman Act claims. Id. The Court gave Defendants an opportunity to renew their motion only as to these claims because a key Supreme Court decision had come out after Defendants' original Motions to Dismiss and because the relevant issues were not briefed properly by either party. Id.

STANDARD OF REVIEW

A defendant may move to dismiss an action for failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6). To survive dismissal under this standard, a complaint [*8] must allege "a plausible entitlement to relief." Bell Atl. Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 1967, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007).

According to Twombly, the complaint must state enough facts to "nudge [the plaintiff's] claims across the line from conceivable to plausible." Id. at 1974. Therefore, to preclude dismissal pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6), the complaint must rest on factual allegations sufficient "to raise a right to relief above the speculative level." Id. at 1965.

At the motion to dismiss stage, courts accept all well-pleaded factual allegations as true, and draw all reasonable inferences in the plaintiff's favor. See Correa-Martinez v. Arrillaga-Belendez, 903 F.2d 49, 51 (1st Cir. 1988). Thus, the plaintiff bears the burden of stating factual allegations regarding each element necessary to sustain recovery under some actionable theory. Gooley v. Mobil Oil Corp., 851 F.2d 513, 514 (1st Cir. 1988). Courts need not address complaints supported only by "bald assertions, unsupportable conclusions, periphrastic circumlocutions, and the like." Aulson v. Blanchard, 83 F.3d 1, 3 (1st Cir. 1996).

Defendants argue that Plaintiffs' Sherman Act claims should be dismissed for two reasons. Docket No. 83. First, Defendants contend that they are immune from Sherman Act liability under the state-action doctrine of Parker v. Brown, 317 U.S. 341, 63 S. Ct. 307, 87 L. Ed. 315 (1943). Docket No. 83 at 1-8. Second, Defendants assert that Plaintiffs have failed to state a claim under either Section 1 or Section 2 of the Sherman Act. Id. at 8-15.

The Court grants Defendants' [*9] Motion to Dismiss because Defendants' actions are immune from Sherman Act liability under Parker immunity. As a preliminary matter the Court determines that the CFSE is a nonsovereign actor and to qualify for Parker immunity, it must satisfy the two part test set forth in California Retail Liquor Dealers Ass'n v. Midcal Aluminum, Inc., 445 U.S. 97, 105, 100 S. Ct. 937, 63 L. Ed. 2d 233 (1980) to show that its anticompetitive conduct "result[s] from procedures that suffice to make it the State's own." See N. Carolina State Bd. of Dental Examiners v. F.T.C., 135 S. Ct. 1101, 1111, 191 L. Ed. 2d 35 (2015). The Court holds that the Defendants have met Midcal's first requirement, the clear articulation requirement, because each of Defendants' actions was either expressly authorized by the Puerto Rico legislature or was the foreseeable result of the legislature's delegation of authority. The Court also holds that Defendants were exempt from Midcal's second requirement, the active supervision requirement, because the CFSE is a public subdivision of the State, not a private actor, and it does not pose a risk that active market participants will pursue private interests in restraining trade. Accordingly, all of Defendants' actions are immune from Sherman Act liability under Parker and all of Plaintiffs' Sherman Act claims against Defendants are dismissed.[3] Since Plaintiffs' claims are dismissed pursuant to the Parker [*10] state-action doctrine, the Court need not address whether Plaintiffs sufficiently pled their claims.

A. The State-Action Doctrine Generally

The state-action doctrine, commonly called Parker immunity, immunizes state efforts to displace competition with regulation from federal antitrust laws.[4] See Parker v. Brown, 317 U.S. 341, 63 S. Ct. 307, 87 L. Ed. 315 (1943). In Parker, the Supreme Court interpreted the Sherman Act to confer immunity on state anticompetitive conduct when a state acts in its sovereign capacity. 317 U.S. at 351-52 (1943); see also Bd. of Dental Examiners, 135 S. Ct. at 1110. "State legislation and 'decisions of a state supreme court, acting legislatively' . . . are an undoubted exercise

[3] Even though Plaintiffs have sued CFSE officials in both their personal and individual capacity in addition to the CFSE, Plaintiffs are suing them based on their conduct as CFSE officials. Plaintiffs cannot circumvent the doctrine of Parker immunity by simply suing the state agency officials that engaged in the challenged activity, rather than the state agency itself. See Fisichelli v. City Known as Town of Methuen, 956 F.2d 12, 15-16 (1st Cir. 1992). Accordingly, Plaintiffs' claims against the individual Defendants are also dismissed.

[4] The Parker state-action immunity doctrine should not be confused [*11] with the state-action doctrine under the Fourteenth Amendment. They are two completely different doctrines.

of state sovereign authority" and are thus automatically exempt from the Sherman Act. Bd. of Dental Examiners, 135 S.Ct. at 1110 (quoting Hoover v. Ronwin, 466 U.S. 558, 567-68, 104 S. Ct. 1989, 80 L. Ed. 2d 590 (1984)).

While Parker antitrust immunity has been extended to state subdivisions (e.g., agencies and public corporations) and private parties that act pursuant to the sovereign power of the State, it is clear that these nonsovereign entities "do not receive all the federal deference of the States that create them." City of Lafayette v. Louisiana Power & Light Co., 435 U.S. 389, 412-13, 98 S. Ct. 1123, 55 L. Ed. 2d 364 (1978). "[A] nonsovereign actor is one whose conduct does not automatically qualify as that of the sovereign State itself." See Bd. of Dental Examiners, 135 S.Ct. at 1110-11. In other words, it is an actor other than the state legislature, or the state supreme court, acting legislatively. The CFSE is neither one of these. It is a public corporation. Therefore, for purposes of Parker immunity there is no doubt that the CFSE is a nonsovereign actor.

For Parker immunity to be extended to a nonsovereign actor, the actor must show that its anticompetitive conduct "result[s] from procedures that suffice to make it the State's own." Bd. of Dental Examiners, 135 S. Ct. at 1111. To do this, a nonsovereign actor must meet two possible additional requirements set forth in California Retail Liquor Dealers Ass'n v. Midcal Aluminum, Inc., 445 U.S. 97, 105, 100 S. Ct. 937, 63 L. Ed. 2d 233 (1980). First, all nonsovereign actors must show that the challenged restraint is one clearly articulated and affirmatively expressed as state [*12] policy. See F.T.C. v. Phoebe Putney Health Sys., Inc., 133 S. Ct. 1003, 1010-11, 185 L. Ed. 2d 43 (2013). Second, some actors also must comply with the additional requirement that their actions be actively supervised by the State. Id. Since the CFSE is a nonsovereign actor, the Court evaluates whether its conduct meets this two part test.

B. The Clear Articulation Requirement

The Court holds that Defendants have satisfied the clear articulation requirement. Any nonsovereign actor seeking Parker immunity must show that its actions are undertaken "pursuant to a 'clearly articulated and affirmatively expressed' state policy to displace competition." Phoebe Putney Health Sys., Inc., 133 S. Ct. at 1011 (2013) (quoting Community Communications Co. v. Boulder, 455 U.S. 40, 52, 102 S. Ct. 835, 70 L. Ed. 2d 810 (1982)). In doing so, the actor need not "point to a specific, detailed legislative authorization," but rather, show that the "legislature contemplated the kind of action complained of." Louisiana Power & Light, 435 U.S. at 415; see also Corey v. Look, 641 F.2d 32, 37 (1st Cir. 1981). This burden, also known as the "clear articulation" requirement, is met so long as the challenged action is a "foreseeable result" of the State's authorization. Phoebe Putney Health Sys., Inc., 133 S. Ct. at 1011. If the displacement of competition is the "inherent, logical, or ordinary result of the exercise of authority delegated by the state legislature" then "the State must have foreseen and implicitly endorsed" the anticompetitive effects of its delegation. Id. at 1012-13.

It is unclear from [*13] Plaintiffs' Amended Complaint what actions Plaintiffs base their antitrust claims on. However, the Court is able to discern the following potential anticompetitive conduct that Plaintiffs allege Defendants engaged in: 1) refusing to enter into or to renew service agreements with chiropractors; 2) issuing new guidelines regarding chiropractic services which reduce the number of approved chiropractic visits for CFSE patients; 3) establishing extra requirements for CFSE approval of chiropractic services that are not required for other medical services; 4) denying or decreasing the number of referrals to chiropractors versus other medical professionals; 5) and communicating information to doctors about the negative effects of chiropractic services. Docket No. 28.

All of these alleged anticompetitive actions comply with the clear articulation requirement. Defendants' first two alleged anticompetitive acts — refusing or renewing service agreements (contracts) and issuing new guidelines concerning the chiropractic care approved by the CFSE—are specifically authorized by the Worker's Compensation Act. See P.R. Laws Ann. tit. 11 § 1b-4 (authorizing the CFSE's administrator to award contracts to health professionals as may [*14] be necessary for the treatment of injured workers); P.R. Laws Ann. tit. 11 § 1c (authorizing the CFSE to design guidelines for the adequate treatment of the most common medical conditions suffered by employees, including a general description of the treatment, the frequency of medical appointments, and the maximum treatment period for a condition). Therefore, it is clear that the legislature contemplated the CFSE taking these actions. See Louisiana Power & Light, 435 U.S. at 415.

Defendants' other three alleged anticompetitive acts — establishing extra requirements for approving chiropractic services; denying or decreasing referrals to chiropractors; and communicating information about the adverse effects of chiropractic services—are all "inherent, logical, or ordinary" results of the legislature's delegation to the CFSE to establish treatment programs and procedures to be followed for worker's compensation patients. The Puerto Rico legislature created the CFSE to be the only worker's compensation insurance provider in Puerto Rico and to enforce the provisions of the Worker's Compensation Act. See P.R. Laws Ann. tit. 11 §§ 1, 1a, 1b, 1b-1, 19, 21. In carrying out its responsibilities, the CFSE has the express authority to establish a program to "achieve the physical as well as vocational [*15] rehabilitation" of injured workers, P.R. Laws Ann. tit. 11 § 1b-1, and to design guidelines for the adequate treatment of common medical conditions, P.R. Laws Ann. tit. 11 § 1c. The inherent result of this delegation of authority is that the CFSE would evaluate the efficacy of competing medical professionals and services to establish the best rehabilitation program and treatment procedures. Inevitably, the CFSE would have to determine that certain services were better than others and for the services that the CFSE deemed inferior — in this case chiropractic services[5] — it is reasonable and logical for the CFSE to take the adverse actions that it has taken against chiropractors to best provide for the rehabilitation of injured employees. See P.R. Laws Ann. tit. 11 § 1b-1. Therefore, each of these challenged actions was a foreseeable result of the legislature's delegation of authority.

Plaintiffs argue that the CFSE does not meet the clear articulation requirement because Defendants have failed to show "that the Commonwealth itself supports the monopolization of spinal treatment to medical professionals other than chiropractors." Docket No. 84 at 5. However, Plaintiffs impose an overly difficult burden for Defendants to satisfy. Defendants must only show that the alleged anticompetitive acts the CFSE engaged in were the "inherent, logical, or ordinary result of the exercise of authority delegated by the state legislature." Phoebe Putney Health Sys., Inc., 133 S. Ct. at 1012-13. Therefore, Defendants do not have to show that the Puerto Rico legislature specifically supports the removal of chiropractors from the worker's compensation market. It is sufficient that Defendants show that the legislature authorized the CFSE to determine which medical professionals will treat worker's compensation patients — which they have — because the logical result of this delegation is that the CFSE would exclude certain medical professionals over others. Thus, all of the CFSE's alleged anticompetitive actions are taken pursuant to clearly articulated state policy to displace [*17] competition, and the clear articulation requirement is met.

C. The Active Supervision Requirement

The Court holds that Defendants are exempt from complying with the active supervision requirement. The next step in the Parker immunity test requires some nonsovereign actors to prove that their anticompetitive conduct is "actively supervised by the State." Phoebe Putney Health Sys., Inc., 133 S. Ct. at 1010-11. This "active supervision" requirement serves the evidentiary function of "ensuring that the actor is engaging in the challenged conduct pursuant to state policy." Town of Hallie v. City of Eau Claire, 471 U.S. 34, 46, 105 S. Ct. 1713, 85 L. Ed. 2d 24 (1985). However, "there are instances in which a [nonsovereign] actor can be excused from [the] active supervision requirement." Bd.. of Dental Examiners, 135 S. Ct. at 1112. Private parties seeking Parker immunity must always satisfy this requirement. See Hallie, 471 U.S. at 46-47. On the other hand, when the nonsovereign actor is a public subdivision of the State, a court must look at the risk that active market participants will use anticompetitive conduct to pursue private interests to determine if the requirement applies. See Hallie, 471 U.S. at 46-47; Bd. of Dental Examiners, 135 S. Ct. at 1114. In this case, the CFSE is a public corporation with a public mission and its board members are appointed by the Governor of Puerto Rico. P.R. Laws Ann. tit. 11 §§ 1b, 1b-2. Therefore, the Court will evaluate the CFSE as a public nonsovereign actor, [*18] not a private party, and thus the CFSE is not automatically required to comply with the active supervision requirement as private parties are.

[5] Plaintiffs refute the CFSE's judgment concerning the medical efficacy of chiropractic treatment. Docket No. 28. However, whether the CFSE's judgments are correct or medically sound is irrelevant. It is not for this Court to determine whether chiropractic services are an effective treatment for Puerto Rican injured workers' back injuries. The critical inquiry is whether the Puerto Rico legislature [*16] has authorized the CFSE to make those judgments — which it has.

Instead, to evaluate whether the CFSE is exempt from the active supervision requirement, this Court must evaluate whether the CFSE poses a risk that active market participants will pursue anticompetitive conduct in their own private interests. See Hallie, 471 U.S. at 46-47; Bd. of Dental Examiners, 135 S. Ct. at 1114. In Hallie, the Court held that municipalities did not have to satisfy the active supervision requirement because there was little or no risk that a municipality was engaged in private anticompetitive conduct. 471 U.S. at 46-47. Until recently, courts had uniformly interpreted Hallie to mean that any state agency or subdivision did not have to satisfy the active supervision requirement. See Phillip E. Areeda & Herbert Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law: An Analysis of Antitrust Principles and Their Application 466 (2nd ed. 2000). However, the Supreme Court recently clarified that the applicability of the requirement does not turn on the formal designation given to the actor, but instead must turn on "the risk that active market participants will pursue private interests in restraining trade." Bd. of Dental Examiners, 135 S. Ct. at 1114.

In Board of Dental Examiners [*19] , the Supreme Court held "that a state board on which a controlling number of decisionmakers are active market participants in the occupation the board regulates must satisfy [the] active supervision requirement" to invoke Parker immunity. Id. at 1114. The case concerned efforts by the North Carolina State Board of Dental Examiners (the "Board") to exclude nondentists from offering teeth whitening services. Id. at 1108. The Federal Trade Commission (FTC) sued the Board alleging violations of Federal antitrust law. Id. at 1108-09. The Board moved to dismiss, alleging Parker state-action immunity. Id. at 1109.

The Board argued that since the State had designated the Board a state agency, N.C. Gen. Stat. Ann. § 90-22, that it was exempt from the active supervision requirement. Bd. of Dental Examiners, 135 S. Ct. at 1113. However, the Court rejected this formalistic approach and explained that "the need for supervision turns not on the formal designation given by states to regulators but on the risk that active market participants will pursue private interests in restraining trade." Bd. of Dental Examiners, 135 S. Ct. at 1114. The Court held that the active supervision test "is an essential prerequisite of Parker immunity for any nonsovereign entity—public or private — controlled by active market participants." Id. at 1113 (emphasis added). The Court reasoned that state agencies controlled by active market participants who possess strong private interests "pose the very risk of self-dealing [the] supervision requirement was created to address." Id. at 1114. The Court distinguished Hallie because the entity there "was an electorally accountable municipality with general regulatory powers and no [*20] private price-fixing agenda." Id. at 1114.

This case is not controlled by the holding in Board of Dental Examiners and instead is more analogous to the situation in Hallie. There are two reasons why this case is different than Board of Dental Examiners. First, the CFSE is not controlled by active market participants as the Board was in Board of Dental Examiners. Second, even if Board of Dental Examiners is interpreted more broadly, the CFSE does not pose the risk that active market participants will pursue private interests that the Court was concerned with in Board of Dental Examiners. Instead, as in Hallie, the small risk that the CFSE will pursue its own specific interests rather than "more overriding state goals" is sufficiently mitigated by the clear articulation requirement.

Unlike the Board in Bd. of Dental Examiners, the CFSE is not controlled by active market participants. In Bd. of Dental Examiners, six of the Board's eight members had to be licensed practicing dentists who were elected by other licensed dentists in North Carolina and there was no mechanism for a public official to remove any of the Board's elected members. 135 S. Ct. at 1108. These dentists clearly competed with nondentists in the market [*21] for teeth whitening services and had strong private interests to exclude nondentists from competition. Therefore, the need for state supervision was manifest. In contrast, the Governor of Puerto Rico appoints all seven members of the CFSE's governing Board of Directors ("BOD"). P.R. Laws Ann. tit. 11 § 1b-2. Of the seven members, one "shall be the Insurance Commissioner, who is a person of great technical competence in the insurance area; one shall be identified with the employers, another one . . . shall be identified with the employees . . . and two (2) members shall be officials of the Departments of Labor and Human Resources, and Health . . . . The two (2) remaining members . . . shall be freely selected." Id. Therefore, none of the CFSE's BOD's members are required to be active market participants that compete with chiropractors in the worker's compensation market.[6] At most, there could be two members—the freely selected members—out of the seven that might be active market participants, and even this seems unlikely given the Worker's Compensation Act's focus on having BOD members with expertise in insurance and labor matters, rather than medical expertise. See id. Thus the CFSE is not controlled by active [*22] market participants.[7]

Furthermore, the CFSE does not pose the risk that active market participants will use CFSE policy to pursue private interests that the Court was concerned with in Board of Dental Examiners for three reasons.

First, Plaintiffs have failed to plead that any CFSE officials [*23] are actually active market participants that compete with chiropractors in the worker's compensation market. Plaintiffs point out that four of the seven members of the CFSE's Industrial Medical Council ("IMC") must be medical doctors. Docket No. 84 at 6. They then make the conclusory statement that "in this case . . . a majority of the [IMC's members][8] are active market participants in the occupation." Id. However, the Worker's Compensation Act does not specify, nor do Plaintiffs indicate, the type of medical doctors that are IMC members. Thus these doctors could be gynecologists, neurologists, gastroenterologists, or many others that do not compete with chiropractors in the worker's compensation market. In addition, IMC members are prohibited from having any financial or professional relationship with the CFSE. P.R. Laws Ann. tit. 11 § 1c. Thus, even if IMC members are the types of medical doctors that could compete with chiropractors generally, they would not be competing for the specific patients that receive CFSE benefits because IMC members cannot receive patients from the CFSE. Thus, Plaintiffs have failed to plead that the doctors on the IMC are active market participants.

Second, even if we assume that the doctors on the IMC are active market participants, the IMC does not have sufficient authority to dictate CFSE policy. The IMC is responsible for, inter alia, designing guidelines for the adequate treatment of most medical conditions for employees who receive CFSE benefits. P.R. Laws Ann. tit. 11 § 1c. However, the BOD must ratify the guidelines for them to take effect. Id. Thus, even though the CFSE could take anticompetitive actions against chiropractors through these guidelines, only the BOD—which is not controlled by active market participants and does not present a risk of pursuing private interests, see supra at 15-16—has the authority to take these actions. This oversight by the BOD sufficiently cures any risk that the doctors on the IMC might use CFSE policy to further their own private interests.

Third, unlike in Board of Dental Examiners where Board members were elected by other dentists and were not removable by a public official, the CFSE's BOD's members are all elected by the Governor and the Governor has [*25] the power to remove them. P.R. Laws Ann. tit. 11 § 1b-2. This reduces the risk that BOD members would pursue private interests because the Governor should appoint individuals he believes will carry out state interests, and he can remove a member for failing to do so. Accordingly, there are sufficient measures in place to achieve the objective of the active supervision requirement of sufficiently ensuring that CFSE policy is indeed the policy of the State and that the CFSE is not furthering private interests. See Hallie, 471 U.S. at 46-47. Therefore, there is no need to impose the active supervision requirement on the CFSE.

[6] Plaintiffs' complaint also fails to allege that any of the BOD's members are active market participants that compete with chiropractors.

[7] Plaintiffs argue that the CFSE is controlled by active market participants because four out of the seven members of the CFSE's Industrial Medical Council ("IMC") are medical doctors. Docket No. 84 at 6. However, Plaintiffs' argument is based on Plaintiffs' incorrect statement that the IMC is part of the governing BOD of the CFSE. Id. Had Plaintiffs read the Worker's Compensation Act, they would have realized that the IMC is a separate body from the BOD. P.R. Laws Ann. tit. 11 §§ 1b-2, 1c. The BOD is the only governing body with decision making authority in the CFSE. P.R. Laws Ann. tit. 11 § 1b-2. Any action taken by the IMC must first be submitted to the BOD for ratification. P.R. Laws Ann. tit. 11 § 1c. Therefore, the fact that four IMC members are medical doctors does not warrant the conclusion that the CFSE is controlled by active market participants.

[8] Plaintiffs referred to the IMC [*24] members as decision makers. However, the Court has already pointed out that Plaintiffs were incorrect in deeming IMC members the decision makers of the CFSE. See supra note 7.

Notwithstanding Bd. of Dental Examiners, the current case is analogous to Hallie, where the Court held that the active supervision requirement was not needed for municipalities. 471 U.S. at 46. In Hallie, the Court concluded that there was little or no danger that a municipality would engage in private anticompetitive conduct. Id. at 47. Instead the Court reasoned that "the only real danger is that [the municipality] will seek to further purely parochial public interests at the expense of more overriding state goals." Id. However, the Court concluded that the clear articulation requirement was sufficient to mitigate this danger. Id. ("Once [*26] it is clear that state authorization exists, there is no need to require the State to supervise actively the municipality's execution of what is a properly delegated function."). As the Court has already discussed, like the municipality in Hallie, there is little to no danger that the CFSE will engage in anticompetitive conduct to further private interests. See supra at 16-18. Instead the only danger would be that the CFSE would act to further the specific interests of the CFSE, rather than "more overriding state goals." See id. However, like in Hallie, this danger is sufficiently mitigated by the clear articulation requirement and therefore active supervision is not needed.

Thus for the reasons stated above, this Court holds that the CFSE is not required to show that it is actively supervised by the State to claim Parker immunity. Since the Court also holds that the CFSE has met the clear articulation requirement, see supra at 9-12, the CFSE's actions are hereby immune from Sherman Act liability under Parker. Thus all of Plaintiffs' Sherman Act claims are dismissed pursuant to the state-action doctrine. Accordingly, there is no need for the Court to consider whether Plaintiffs sufficiently pled their Sherman [*27] Act claims.

CONCLUSION

In view of the foregoing, Defendants' Motion to Dismiss is GRANTED. Plaintiffs' Sherman Act claims are hereby dismissed with prejudice. The only remaining claims in this case are Plaintiffs' First Amendment retaliation claims against Defendant the CFSE and Defendant Estrada; and Plaintiffs' Puerto Rico law claims against all Defendants.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

[*1145] ORDER

Mediacom has historically offered its customers the ability to make telephone calls over the Internet. That technology [2] is called "Voice over Internet Protocol," or VoIP. One difficulty with VoIP is that traffic sent over the internet is formatted differently than traffic sent over ordinary telephone lines.[1] Without something to convert Internet formatting to telephone formatting, Mediacom's customers could not call telephone users. Sprint Communications provided that conversion service. When a Mediacom customer placed a VoIP call, Mediacom passed that traffic to Sprint. Sprint changed its format, and then delivered it to telephone lines owned by Windstream Iowa Communications. Sprint paid Windstream to use the lines. It paid at rates set by a tariff that Windstream had filed with the Iowa Utilities Board, in accordance with Iowa law.

In 2009, Sprint stopped paying Windstream for that use, and started withholding [*1146] payments for other services. It argued that it had been overpaying Windstream: it should have been paying rates determined by federal law, because state law had been preempted. The Iowa Utilities Board heard the dispute, and found in Windstream's favor. It ordered Sprint to pay what [3] it owed Windstream under state law. Sprint sued the Board's members in this Court, arguing that the Board's order was contrary to federal law and seeking declaratory and injunctive relief. Windstream and the Office of Consumer Advocate intervened as defendants, and all parties have agreed on the material facts and moved for summary judgment.

I. Legal and Historical Background

A. The Communications Act Era

Commercial telephone service in the United States. began as a monopoly: Alexander Graham Bell's telephone company held all the key patents. Peter W. Huber, et. al., Federal Telecommunications Law, § 1.3 (2d ed. Supp. 2011); AT&T Corp. v. Iowa Utilities Bd., 525 U.S. 366, 402, 119 S. Ct. 721, 142 L. Ed. 2d 834 (1999) (Thomas, J., concurring in part and dissenting in part). Even after the patents expired, the Bell company maintained its dominance by refusing to carry telephone traffic from independent telephone companies. Huber, Federal Telecommunications, at § 1.3; AT&T Corp., 525 U.S. at 403 (Thomas, J., concurring in part and dissenting in part). The Communications Act of 1934 enshrined the monopolistic approach, requiring telephone carriers to get permission from the new Federal Communications Commission before operating a new telephone line or acquiring an old one. 47 U.S.C. § 214(a); see also F.C.C. v. RCA Communications, 346 U.S. 86, 92-93, 73 S. Ct. 998, 97 L. Ed. 1470 (1953) (describing the extent of and reasons [4] for the Act's limitations on competition). This system left Bell in control of the telephony market.[2] Huber, Federal Telecommunications, at § 1.3.4.

The Act gave the F.C.C. other regulatory powers, but limited its jurisdiction to "interstate and foreign communication." 47 U.S.C. § 152(a). The F.C.C. had no authority over "services... for or in connection with intrastate communication." 47 U.S.C. § 152(b); see also Louisiana Public Service Com'n v. F.C.C., 476 U.S. 355, 360, 106 S. Ct. 1890, 90 L. Ed. 2d 369 (1986) ("[T]he Act would seem to divide the world of domestic telephone service neatly into two hemispheres—one comprised of interstate service, over which the F.C.C. would have plenary authority, and the other made up of intrastate service, over which the States would retain exclusive jurisdiction.")

A communication was classified as either interstate or intrastate based on an "end-to-end" analysis. In the Matter of Vonage Holdings Corporation, 19 F.C.C. Rcd. 22404, 22413 (2004). If a call both began and ended within a state, it was intrastate; if it ended in a different state or in a foreign country, it was interstate. Id. If a service enabled both intra-and interstate calls, it was "jurisdictionally mixed." Id. Usually both [5] the F.C.C. and the states regulated "mixed" services, the states regulating their intrastate components and the F.C.C. their interstate components. Id. But if the intrastate and interstate components could not be disentangled, the F.C.C. could preempt state regulation and regulate unilaterally. Louisiana Public, 476 U.S. at 375 n.4; Public Service Com'n of Maryland v. F.C.C., 909 F.2d 1510, 1515, 285 U.S. App. D.C. 329 (D.C. Cir. 1990). That rule [*1147] was called the "impossibility exception." People of State of Cal. v. F.C.C., 905 F.2d 1217, 1243 (9th Cir. 1990).

The impossibility exception is relevant to this case because it applied to some VoIP services. VoIP services come in two varieties: nomadic and fixed. Minnesota Public Utilities Com'n v. F.C.C., 483 F.3d 570, 575 (8th Cir. 2007). Nomadic VoIP services can be used anywhere "in the universe" the user can get an Internet connection. Id. Fixed VoIP services require equipment installed at a specific location, like a cable connection, to work. Id. The F.C.C. decided to exercise exclusive jurisdiction over one nomadic VoIP service, because the end points of those calls could not be determined. Vonage Holdings Corporation, 19 F.C.C. Rcd. 22404, 22424 (2004). The parties debate that decision's breadth.

B. Moving Beyond Bell

The Bell monopoly system was in tension with federal antitrust law, and over the years Bell defended an increasing number of antitrust suits brought by both private plaintiffs and the federal government. See, for example, Pastor v. American Tel. & T. Co., 76 F.Supp. 781 (S.D. N.Y. 1940); Carter v. American Tel. & Tel. Co., 365 F.2d 486 (5th Cir. 1966); Litton Systems, Inc. v. American Tel. and Tel. Co., 700 F.2d 785 (2nd Cir. 1983). Finally, in the mid-1980s, Bell settled [6] one such suit through a massive divestiture. William J. Quirk and Fred A. Walters, A Constitutional and Statutory History of the Telephone Business in South Carolina, 51 S.C. L. Rev. 290, 336 (2000). The consent decree divided the country into "local access and transport areas," or "exchanges," and split Bell up into a number of local operating companies and one long distance carrier. Huber, Federal Telecommunication, at § 4.5.8.2. The local operating companies provided only local telephone service—service within the exchanges. Joseph D. Kearney, From the Fall of the Bell System to the Telecommunications Act: Regulation of Telecommunications under Judge Greene, 50 Hastings L.J. 1395, 1414 (1999). They were not allowed to provide inter-exchange (also called long-distance) service. Id. at 1413 n.53. Longdistance service providers (also called interexchange carriers) would provide services by paying the local companies for "equal access" to their telephone lines. Id. at 1413; *Great Lakes Communication Corp. v. Iowa Utilites Bd., No. C09-4085-DEO, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 104849, 2009 WL 3806176, at 1 (N.D. Iowa Nov. 10, 2009) (equating "long-distance companies" with "interexchange carriers"). The payment amounts were set by either tariffs filed with the F.C.C., for interstate traffic, or by the relevant state's law. See 47 U.S.C. § 203(a); Brief for the Federal Communications Commission as Amicus Curiae at 4, *Central Telephone Company of Virginia, Inc. v. Sprint Communications Co., 715 F.3d 501 (4th Cir. 2013), 2013 WL 146262, at 4 ("The access charges associated with interstate [7] calls traditionally are specified in tariffs filed with the F.C.C.; access charges associated with intrastate calls traditionally are specified in tariffs filed with the state regulatory commissions."). This system assumed that the market for local telephone services was naturally monopolistic, but that the long-distance service market could be competitive. Huber, Federal Telecommunications, at § 4.5.7. The local monopolies were therefore permitted, but their influence over long-distance services limited. Id.; Kearney, From the Fall of the Bell System, at 1417.

The F.C.C. recognized one significant exception to the access charges system. Telecommunications law had already distinguished between services which transmit information and services which somehow modify that information. Huber, Federal Telecommunications, at § 12.1; [*1148] In the Matter of Regulatory and Policy Problems Presented by the Interdependence of Computer and Communication Services and Facilities (Computer I), 28 F.C.C.2d 267, 267-68 n.3 (1971) (distinguishing between communications services and "data processing services," defined to include "storing, retrieving, sorting, merging and calculating data"); compare 47 U.S.C. § 153(53) (defining telecommunications service) with 47 U.S.C. § 153(24) (defining information service). The former are called "basic services" or "telecommunications services," while the latter are referred to as "enhanced services" or "information services."[3] Huber, Federal [8] Telecommunications, at §§ 12.2.1 & 12.2.2. Many information service providers, like interexchange carriers, need to purchase access to local telephone lines. In the 1980s, the F.C.C. exempted them from the tariffs that applied to interexchange carriers. Connect America Fund, 26 F.C.C. Rcd. 17663, 18016 n. 1959 (2011). They could instead pay the same rate that the local telephone company charged other business subscribers. Id. at 18016. That arrangement was called the "ESP exemption." Id. at 18016 n. 1959.

C. The Telecommunications Act

Congress ended the local monopoly system in 1996, by passing the Telecommunications Act. AT&T Corp., 525 U.S. at 371 ("Technological advances... have made competition among multiple providers of local service seem possible, and Congress recently ended the longstanding regime of state-sanctioned monopolies."). The local companies had monopoly power in part because [9] they controlled the industry's physical infrastructure. Huber, Federal Telecommunications, at § 5.5. The Act therefore requires local telephone companies, now called "local exchange carriers," to allow competitors to use their infrastructure. 47 U.S.C. §§ 153(32) & 251(b).

It also changes the way local exchange carriers are paid for access to their telephone lines. Instead of the old tariff system, § 251(b)(5) requires local carriers to negotiate rates. 47 U.S.C. § 251(b)(5). But that change did not go into effect universally. Section 251(g) preserved part of the pre-Act regulatory framework until the F.C.C. "explicitly superseded" it. 47 U.S.C. § 251(g). Specifically, it required local exchange carriers to continue providing access to "interexchange carriers and information service providers" on the same terms as they had before the Act. Id. The F.C.C. did not "explicitly supersede[]" those arrangements until 2011. See Connect America Fund, 26 F.C.C. Rcd. at 17923.

The Act altered the division of power between the federal government and the states. The Telecommunications Act did not repeal the Communications Act; the statute still explicitly limits the F.C.C.'s jurisdiction to interstate communication. 47 U.S.C. § 152(b). But it also gives the F.C.C. authority "to carry out the provisions of this chapter," which now includes regulations [10] on local carriers. 47 U.S.C. § 201(b); AT&T Corp., 525 U.S. at 377-78. The F.C.C. immediately interpreted the Act to give it authority over intrastate communications, and the Supreme Court agreed. AT&T Corp., [*1149] 525 U.S. at 378. "With regard to the matters addressed by the 1996 Act," Congress "unquestionably" took "the regulation of local telecommunications away from the states." Id. at 378 n.6.

At the same time, the Act preserved broad state authority. States can regulate "to further competition" as long as their regulations are consistent with the Act and with the F.C.C.'s regulations. 47 U.S.C. § 261. The F.C.C. cannot abrogate state regulations that are consistent with the Act and with the F.C.C.'s implementation. 47 U.S.C. § 251(d)(3). And the Act delegates important responsibilities to the states: state commissions must approve access agreements, and can act as arbitrators and mediators when carriers' negotiations fail. 47 U.S.C. § 252. The result is an "unusual regime of cooperative federalism." Southern New England Telephone Co. v. Comcast Phone of Connecticut, Inc., 718 F.3d 53, 58 (2nd Cir. 2013); AT&T Corp., 525 U.S. at 385 n.10 (describing the Telecommunications Act as a "decidedly novel" scheme involving both federal and state authority).

II. FACTUAL BACKGROUND

Windstream is a local exchange carrier serving an exchange in Iowa. At some point after the 1996 Telecommunications Act was passed, Sprint began purchasing access to Windstream's telephone [11] lines. The relevant part of the traffic Sprint sent to Windstream's lines was generated by VoIP calls placed in a different exchange within Iowa. Those calls traveled to their destination in three stages. First, an MCC Telephony of Iowa (here called "Mediacom," because it was a Mediacom affiliate) customer would place a call using Mediacom's VoIP service. That service was a fixed VoIP service. At this stage, the call would be formatted as internet traffic. In the second stage, Mediacom would pass the call to Sprint's telecommunications network. Sprint would convert the call to the formatting used by telephone lines, then send the call onto Windstream's lines. In the third stage, Windstream would deliver the call to its intended recipient.

[3] This opinion will treat "basic services" as a synonym for "telecommunications services" and "enhanced services" as equivalent to "information services," even though the terms have slightly different meanings. See Huber, Federal Telecommunications, at §§ 12.2.1 & 12.2.2; Implementation of the Non-Accounting Safeguards of Sections 271 and 272 of the Communications Act of 1934, F.C.C. Rcd. 21905, 21955-21956 (1996); National Cable & Telecommunications Ass'n v. Brand X Internet Services, 545 U.S. 967, 992, 125 S. Ct. 2688, 162 L. Ed. 2d 820 (2005). The differences are not relevant to this case.

From the beginning of this arrangement until 2009, Sprint paid Windstream at rates set in a tariff Windstream had filed with the Iowa Utilities Board, a tariff enforced by state law. But in June 2009, Sprint stopped paying, arguing that its VoIP traffic was not subject to access charges. Windstream was not the only company to have problems with Sprint during that period. A nationwide rash of litigation broke out in 2008 and 2009, with Sprint refusing [12] to pay bills on a variety of rationales. See Central Telephone Co. of Virginia v. Sprint Communications Co. of Virginia, Inc., 759 F.Supp.2d 789, 792, 797 (E.D. Vir. 2011) (attributing Sprint's actions to a cost-cutting effort and finding that its reasons "frankly... defy credulity").[4] Windstream threatened to stop providing service to Sprint, and the parties took their dispute to the Iowa Utilities Board.

[*1150] III. PROCEDURAL HISTORY

Sprint asked the Iowa Utilities Board to protect its access to Windstream's lines, but argued that it did not have jurisdiction to resolve the underlying dispute: in Sprint's view, only the F.C.C. could decide what rates Sprint had to pay. The Board disagreed, and ordered Sprint to pay Windstream the amounts set by state law. Sprint sought review in Iowa district court and simultaneously [13] filed suit with this Court, asking the Court to declare that the Board's decision violated federal law and to enjoin the Board's order. Windstream and Iowa's Office of Consumer Advocate intervened as defendants in this Court.

Since then, the Court has twice considered and granted motions to dismiss. It first deferred to the pending state-court proceeding, invoking Younger v. Harris. 401 U.S. 37, 57, 91 S. Ct. 746, 27 L. Ed. 2d 669 (1971). The Supreme Court ultimately reversed that decision. Sprint Communs., Inc. v. Jacobs, 134 S. Ct. 584, 588, 187 L. Ed. 2d 505 (2013). While those appeals proceeded, the Iowa District Court for Polk County upheld the Board's decision. Sprint Comm'ns. Co. v. Jacobs, No. 05771 CVCV008638, at *15 (Iowa D. Ct. Polk County September 16, 2013). When the case returned to this Court, the Court dismissed on issue preclusion grounds. The Eighth Circuit reversed and remanded. Sprint Communications Co., L.P. v. Jacobs, 798 F.3d 705, 709 (8th Cir. 2015). The case is now once again before the Court, this time on the parties' cross-motions for summary judgment. The parties agree that there are no genuine disputes of material fact; they ask the Court to resolve the legal issues presented.

IV. STANDARD OF REVIEW

"Summary judgment is proper where there is a question of law but no issue of facts." Aho v. Erie Min. Co., 466 F.2d 539, 541 (8th Cir. 1971). Because there is no genuine dispute of fact in this case, the Court must determine which movant [14] is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. Fed. R. Civ. Pro. 56(a).

The Iowa Utilities Board has made legal determinations relevant to this case. While federal courts acknowledge state commissions' institutional competence, they do not defer to state agency applications of federal law. See MCI Telecommunication Corp. v. Bell Atlantic Pennsylvania, 271 F.3d 491, 516 (3rd Cir. 2001); Orthopaedic Hosp. v. Belshe, 103 F.3d 1491, 1496 (9th Cir. 1997) ("A state agency's interpretation of federal statutes is not entitled to the deference afforded a federal agency's interpretation of its own statutes."). This Court therefore applies federal law de novo. Qwest Corp. v. Minnesota Public Utilities Com'n, 684 F.3d 721, 725 (8th Cir. 2012).

V. Analysis

Sprint argues that the state tariffs were invalid because the Telecommunications Act of 1996 preempted state regulation of payments to local exchange carriers. There are three kinds of preemption: express preemption, field preemption, and conflict preemption. Cipollone v. Liggett Group, 505 U.S. 504, 516, 112 S. Ct. 2608, 120 L. Ed. 2d 407 (1992). Express preemption occurs when a statute's language explicitly preempts state law. Id. Field preemption exists when "federal law so thoroughly occupies a legislative field... that Congress left no room for the States to supplement it." Id. (internal quotation omitted). And conflict preemption occurs when state law "actually conflicts" with federal law. Id. Neither express nor field preemption is at issue here. The Telecommunications Act does not explicitly [15] preempt state law, and it does explicitly approve non-conflicting state regulation. See 47 U.S.C. § 261. [*1151] This case therefore turns on whether Iowa's tariff system conflicts with the Telecommunications Act's regulations on local exchange carriers.

A. Limits on Federal Jurisdiction

The defendants argue that the Telecommunications Act does not apply to the calls at issue in this case. Those calls were intrastate, and the defendants claim that the Act preserves state authority over intrastate communications. They point to § 251(d)(3), which limits F.C.C. regulation of state commissions, to support their argument. The Supreme Court has already soundly rejected that conclusion. AT&T Corp., 525 U.S. at 378 n.6 ("[T]he question in these cases is not whether the Federal Government has taken the regulation of local telecommunications competition away from the States. With regard to the matters addressed by the 1996 Act, it unquestionably has."). And § 251(d)(3) does not support the defendants' position, for two reasons. First, the provision on its face limits the F.C.C.'s authority. 47 U.S.C. § 251(d)(3) ("[T]he Commission shall not preclude the enforcement of any regulation... of a State commission that [meets three criteria]."). This case is not about the F.C.C.'s authority; no party is arguing [16] that an F.C.C. regulation preempted state law. The question is whether the Act itself—its plain text—overrode state regulation. Second, the provision only protects state regulations that are "consistent with the requirements of this section." 47 U.S.C. § 251(d)(3)(B). If the state law at issue here contradicted another of § 251's provisions, then (d)(3) did not protect it.

B. Applicable Federal Law

Once it is clear that federal law does apply to the traffic at issue here, the next question is what provision controls. On its face, § 251(b)(5) applies. That provision requires local exchange carriers to negotiate compensation arrangements "for the transport and termination of telecommunications." Windstream was a local exchange carrier, and it was terminating telecommunications on Sprint's behalf, apparently putting it in (b)(5)'s purview. But 251(g) limits 251(b)(5): if 251(g) applies, then Windstream had the same "restrictions and obligations... that appl[ied]" before the Telecommunications Act took effect. 47 U.S.C. § 251(g). § 251(g) covers local exchange carrier services if two requirements are met. First, the service must be "exchange access, information access, [or] exchange services." Id. Second, the service must be provided to "interexchange carriers [17] [or] information service providers." Id.

The parties here agree that Windstream provided Sprint with "exchange access." And all parties concede the facts necessary to classify Sprint as an "interexchange carrier:" they agree that Sprint received traffic from one telephone exchange and transported it to a different exchange. Sprint argues that it was an "information services provider," because the traffic it carried came from an information service. Addressing that question is unnecessary. Using either classification, 251(g) applied to the traffic at issue here. The question then becomes how this type of traffic was regulated before the 1996 Act.

C. Pre-Telecommunications Act Regulation

Before the Telecommunications Act was passed, federal law only controlled interstate communications. 47 U.S.C. § 152. That implies that federal law cannot have preempted state regulation of intrastate communications, like those at issue here. Sprint makes two arguments against that conclusion. First, it claims both that VoIP is an information service and that the federal ESP exemption applied to all information [*1152] services (then called enhanced services), even when their communications were intrastate. Second, it argues [18] that the impossibility exemption covered this VoIP traffic, giving the F.C.C. exclusive jurisdiction over the traffic.

1. Intrastate enhanced services were not federally regulated.

Sprint has not cited and this Court has not found any authority specifying that the ESP exemption covered both interstate and intrastate communications. The F.C.C. has in fact described the exemption as covering "providers of interstate services." Amendments of Part 69, 3 F.C.C. Rcd. 2631, 2631 (1988). That is unsurprising, because before 1996, the F.C.C. had no authority to regulate intrastate enhanced services. 47 U.S.C. §152(b); People of State of Cal., 905 F.2d at 1240 (holding that intrastate enhanced services were "squarely within the regulatory domain of the states"). Sprint's first argument is therefore unpersuasive.

2. VoIP services were not all federally regulated.

In Vonage Holding Corp., the F.C.C. applied the impossibility exception to one VoIP service, and said it would preempt state regulation of services with similar "basic characteristics." Vonage Holdings Corp., 19 F.C.C. Rcd. at 22424. But that VoIP service was nomadic; its users could call anyone from anywhere with Internet. Id. at 22419. It was "designed to overcome geography." Id. This case's service was fixed; the users could call Iowa locations from other Iowa locations. The F.C.C. [19] has explicitly said that Vonage's reasoning does not apply to providers "with the ability to track the jurisdictional confines of customer calls." Universal Service, 21 F.C.C. Rcd. 7518, 7546 (2006). Such providers are "subject to state regulation." Id. Sprint's second argument therefore also fails.

VI. Conclusion

The Court holds that federal law did not preempt the state tariffs Sprint was charged under, because the tariffs did not conflict with federal law. In reaching that conclusion, the Court does not decide whether VoIP is an information service, or whether Sprint was an information service provider. Under any answer to those questions, Sprint's arrangement with Windstream was governed by 47 U.S.C. § 251(g), which in turn preserved state authority to regulate the arrangement.

For these reasons, Sprint's Motion for Summary Judgment is DENIED and Windstream's and the Iowa Utilities Board's members' Motions for Summary Judgment are GRANTED. The Court denies Sprint's requests for declaratory and injunctive relief. The Clerk shall enter judgment accordingly.

REPORT AND RECOMMENDATION

The above matter came before the undersigned on Defendants' U.S. Bank National Association, Jacob vanBrandwijk and Richard Hartnack (collectively, "U.S. Bank") Motion to Dismiss Counts One Through 10. [Docket No. 51]. Philip L. Guarino, Esq. and Michael Weidner, Esq. appeared on Plaintiff's behalf. Brooks F. Poley, Esq., Reid Golden, Esq. and Paige Fitzgerald, Esq. appeared on behalf of defendants U.S. Bank, Jacob Vanbrandwijk and Richard Hartnack. There was no appearance by or on behalf of defendants United Credit Recovery, LLC, Leonard Potillo, or Wilbur Tate, III.[1]

This matter has been referred to the undersigned Magistrate Judge for a Report and Recommendation by the District Court pursuant to 28 U.S.C. §636(b)(1)(A), (B), and Local Rule 72.1(c). [Docket No. 58].

I. BACKGROUND

A. Amended Complaint

Plaintiff TMT alleged that TMT was a customer of defendant U.S. Bank and is in the business of purchasing debt from vendors, then reselling the debt to third parties. Amended Complaint, ¶ 1 [Docket No. 22]. Pursuant to Federal regulations, U.S. Bank was required to "charge off" its delinquent Demand Deposit Accounts ("DDAs"). Id., ¶ 12. U.S. Bank would realize a loss on the accounts, but the consumer account holder had a continuing obligation to repay the DDA. Id., ¶ 13. To reduce its losses, U.S. Bank sold the DDAs to third-party debt purchasers and assigned them the right to collect on the charged-off accounts. Id., ¶ 14. Each sale involved hundreds to thousands of individual accounts, ("DDA Portfolios"), with the balance of the DDAs often being in the millions of dollars. Id., ¶ 15. Bids to purchase the debt were in cents on the dollar of the book value [*4] of the DDAs. Id., ¶ 16. The value of a DDA Portfolio depended on the number of attempts made to collect the debt by a collection agency. Id., ¶ 17. For example, "one-agency" DDAs were more valuable than "two-agency" DDAs because less effort had been made to collect the debts. Id. From as early as 2008, U.S. Bank sold DDA Portfolios to defendant UCR. Id., ¶ 18. Even though the DDA Portfolios were to be sold through an open bidding process, UCR was the only third party with which U.S. Bank did business between January, 2008, and September, 2011. Id. U.S. Bank sold the DDA Portfolios to UCR for less than four cents on the dollar. Id.

In September, 2009, TMT's banker with U.S. Bank, Todd Loosbrock, asked a U.S. Bank employee to pass along TMT's contact information to defendant Wilbur Tate, III, U.S. Bank's Assistant Vice President in Consumer Lending, Collections and Recovery. Id., ¶¶ 3, 19. Tate and defendant Jacob vanBrandwijk, a Senior Vice President and Director of U.S. Bank's Consumer Lending, Collections and Recovery office in Cincinnati, Ohio, were responsible for the DDA Portfolio bidding process and sales. Id., ¶¶ 4, 20. From September, 2009 through July, 2010, TMT repeatedly attempted [*5] to contact Tate to bid on DDA Portfolios, but Tate refused to respond. Id., ¶¶ 21, 22. Tate refused to consider TMT's purchase proposal, even though TMT was a U.S. Bank client (UCR was not) and U.S. Bank had a policy that supposedly favored bank clients. Id., ¶ 23.

In or around August, 2010, Tate told Loosbrook that UCR was bidding less on DDA Portfolios than TMT was offering. Id., ¶ 24. Tate finally told TMT that it could bid on the September, 2010, DDA Portfolio and represented that U.S. Bank would accept bids from TMT in the form of a certain number of cents per dollar of book value of the DDA. Id., ¶ 25. Tate told TMT that U.S. Bank employed an open bid process in connection with the DDA Portfolios.

[1] United Credit Recovery, LLC ("UCR") [*2] was served with the Amended Complaint on April 7, 2015. [Docket No. 29]. Leonard Potillo was served on April 9, 2015. [Docket No. 31]. Wilbur Tate, III was served on April 6, 2015, and has never answered. [Docket No. 33]. UCR and Potillo received an extension of time to answer. [Docket Nos. 44, 48]. Potillo answered the Amended Complaint on June 8, 2015. [Docket No. 65]. UCR filed a pro se answer on June 8, 2015. [Docket No. 66]. On June 10, 2015, this Court issued a Report and Recommendation recommending that UCR's answer be stricken because a corporation cannot appear pro se in this district. [Docket No. 67]. The District Court adopted this Report and Recommendation and struck UCR's answer. [Docket No. 86]. On June 18, 2015, Potillo moved to stay the lawsuit because he was being held without bond at the Orange County, Florida correctional facility and lacked financial and legal resources to participate in the lawsuit. [Docket No. 69]. U.S. Bank and TMT opposed the motion. [Docket Nos. 74, 81]. This Court denied Potillo's motion on July 6, 2015. [Docket No. 82]. As a result, UCR and Tate have not answered the Amended Complaint, nor did they respond to the instant motion. U.S. Bank [*3] moved to stay discovery pending the outcome of the instant motion to dismiss. [Docket No. 75]. This Court granted the motion. [Docket No. 88].

Id., ¶ 26. This representation was restated on April 15, 2011, and in May, 2011, by vanBrandwijk, and on May 9, 2011, by defendant Richard Hartnack, now-retired Vice Chairman of Small Business Banking for U.S. Bank. Id., ¶¶ 5, 26.

TMT submitted a bid of $0.055 for the September, 2010 DDA Portfolio. Id., ¶ 27. The bid was initially awarded to TMT but then was disallowed because, according to Tate, U.S. Bank did not have on file a non-disclosure agreement from TMT. Id., ¶ 28. Tate represented [*6] that this non-disclosure agreement was required as part of the bidding process — a representation reiterated by Tate and vanBrandwijk through March, 2012. Id. U. S. Bank had not previously told TMT that a non-disclosure agreement was a prerequisite for bidding. Id., ¶ 29.

TMT sent a non-disclosure agreement to U.S. Bank by e-mail on November 23, 2010, copying Loosbrock on its correspondence. Id., ¶ 31. TMT bid $0.055 for the November DDA Portfolio, but lost out to UCR. Id. ¶ 32. After this, TMT's principal learned that UCR was bribing Tate to ensure UCR's purchases of the DDA Portfolios. Id. ¶ 33. In January, 2011, TMT's principal phoned Tate to ask about the bribes, and Tate hung up. Id. ¶ 34. Tate resigned from U.S. Bank on February 1, 2011, and thereafter, U.S. Bank directed TMT to contact U.S. Bank Vice President Kirk Villaloboz regarding future bids. Id., ¶ 35.

At a meeting with Villaloboz, Loosbrock and TMT in March, 2011, Villaloboz agreed to enter into a five-year forward flow agreement[2] with TMT, which permitted TMT to purchase DDA Portfolios on a going forward basis at the rate of $0.055. Id., ¶ 36. At the meeting, U.S. Bank also agreed to sell to TMT that quarter's DDA Portfolio [*7] under those terms. Id., ¶ 37. About a week later, Villaloboz reneged on the agreement, stating that vanBrandwijk would not agree to the DDA Portfolio purchase or the forward flow agreement. Id., ¶ 38.

On April 11, 2011, TMT informed U.S. Bank by email that Potillo and UCR were engaging in bribery to purchase DDA Portfolios. Id., ¶ 39. At a meeting [*8] on April 15, 2011, TMT told Loosbrock, vanBrandwijk and Villaloboz that UCR was bribing Tate, to which vanBrandwijk responded that "although it may be wrong, it is not illegal." Id., ¶ 42. At this meeting, vanBrandwijk also stated that U.S. Bank did not allow forward flow DDA contracts, despite the fact that Villaloboz had earlier represented that it did, and TMT had heard from vanBrandwijk and another U.S. Bank representative that U.S. Bank had a forward flow agreement with UCR. Id., ¶ 43. Additionally, at this meeting, vanBrandwijk falsely stated that one of the reasons TMT had not won a bid was the lack of a non-disclosure agreement. Id., ¶ 45. vanBrandwijk directed TMT to deal with Villaloboz, and stated that TMT should lower its bid from $0.055 to $0.045 and if it did so, TMT would be awarded the April, 2011 DDA Portfolio. Id., ¶ 46. No one could understand why vanBrandwijk would want TMT to offer U.S. Bank less money. Id.

TMT bid $0.045 for the April, 2011 DDA Portfolio, but lost out to UCR. Id., ¶ 48. vanBrandwijk told TMT that its bid was the only one U.S. Bank received but nonetheless, UCR won the bid because it had a forward flow contact with U.S. Bank at a guaranteed price [*9] of $0.045. Id., ¶ 49. This contract had a 30-day exit clause, which vanBrandwijk had failed to timely invoke. Id. vanBrandwijk stated that TMT could bid on the next DDA Portolio. Id., ¶ 50. Villaloboz later confirmed that TMT's was the only bid received for the April, DDA Portfolio. Id., ¶ 51.

On May 6, 2011, TMT e-mailed Hartnack and copied Loosbrock on the email. Id.,¶ 52. TMT again raised concerns that UCR and Potillo had been bribing U.S. Bank officers for years to purchase DDA Portfolios. Id., ¶ 52. Hartnack stated that he would look into the matter, but instead of investigating, concluded that the accusations were poorly documented and amounted to competitor disagreements. Id., ¶¶ 54, 56.

[2] The Eleventh Circuit has described forward flow agreements in this context as follows:

> When a consumer is delinquent on a credit account, the company that provided the account begins by trying to collect the debt itself. After 180 days, however, the company normally sells the debt to a wholesale purchaser. Most sales of debt occur in large pools. Some of these pools are sold at auction. Others are sold pursuant to long-term contracts with large purchasers, so-called "forward-flow contracts." Forward-flow contracts are attractive to the seller because they provide a consistent and reliable way to get rid of debt. They are attractive to the wholesaler because they provide a reliable supply and also typically guarantee that the accounts are a representative sample of the company's debt pool and that none of the debtors are deceased or bankrupt.

On May 13, 2011, vanBrandwijk told TMT that U.S. Bank offered DDA Portfolios for sale quarterly and it would include TMT in the bidding process, the bids would be open, and the terms of each sale confirmed before the deal was consummated. Id., ¶ 57. vanBrandwijk further stated that each bidder that completed a non-disclosure agreement would be offered a prospectus and an opportunity to examine the file before bidding closed. Id.

On July 11, 2011, TMT bid $0.045 for a DDA Portfolio of $30,000,000. [*10] Id., ¶ 58. Vincent Lorenzo, Outsourcing Manager for U.S. Bank, told TMT the bid was insufficient, so TMT increased its bid to $0.0525. Id. Even though TMT submitted the highest bid, TMT again lost out to UCR because UCR allegedly had a "first right of refusal" and met and exceeded TMT's bid. Id., ¶ 59. U.S. Bank told TMT that if it had stayed with its original numbers, it would have been awarded the purchase. Id. Yet TMT only lowered its bid based on U.S. Bank's advice.[3] Id. U.S. Bank had never previously disclosed that UCR had a right of first refusal. Id., ¶ 60. After losing this bid, TMT's banker, Loosbrock, e-mailed Hartnack to complain about U.S. Bank's treatment of TMT and noted that U.S. Bank had lost over $2.0 million on DDA Portfolio sales over the past four quarters by rejecting TMT's bids. Id., ¶¶ 62, 63. But what Loosbrock "undoubtedly" did not know was that UCR was paying U.S. Bank significantly more than the DDA Portfolios were worth, which UCR could afford to do because it was defrauding third-party purchasers by reselling the DDA as zero-agency paper when in reality it was two-agency paper. Thus, U.S. Bank was benefitting by selling its two-agency paper at a premium. [*11] Id., ¶ 64.

On September 14, 2011, TMT emailed vanBrandwijk and notified him of a personal relationship between Potillo, Tate and UCR and of the existence of a misleading affidavit signed by Tate. Id., ¶¶ 66, 67. TMT had previously provided vanBrandwijk with false affidavits by UCR and Tate. Id., ¶ 67.

In September, 2011, TMT successfully bid on what it believed was zero-agency debt for $0.0515. Id., ¶ 69. TMT also based its bid on vanBrandwijk's August 19, 2011 false representation that UCR's bid was in excess of $0.045 and U.S. Bank wanted to "shake some more out of the DDA agency returns." Id., ¶ 69. Almost immediately, UCR and Potillo retaliated by posting a comment in a public forum that TMT's recent purchase was of two-agency paper, while UCR had zero-agency paper. Id., ¶ 71. TMT shared its concerns about this posting with vanBrandwijk, who responded that "whomsoever posted the comment has a problem [*12] with the facts." Id., ¶ 72. TMT paid U.S. Bank the purchase price for the DDA Portfolio of $1,667,242 on October 3, 2011. Id., ¶ 74. The next day, Villaloboz informed TMT for the first time, and contrary to vanBradnwijk's representations, that the DDA Portfolio TMT had just purchased was two-agency paper. Id., ¶ 75. Much later, on May 21, 2012, Villaloboz sent another letter on U.S. Bank letterhead, retracting the statements he made in his October 4, 2011, letter and stating that he had lacked authority to send the letter. Id., ¶ 76. TMT pled on information and belief that the May 21, 2012, letter was fabricated and forged. Id.

In March, 2012, TMT successfully bid $0.0495 for U.S. Bank's first quarter DDA Portfolio — an overbid based on vanBrandwijk's August 19, 2011, false statement that UCR was bidding in excess of $0.045, and U.S. Bank was trying to increase the amount it realized from DDA Portfolio sales. Id., ¶ 77. In reality, UCR had been bidding much less than $0.040 on the dollar. Id. TMT paid the purchase price of $1,154,715 on March 26, 2012. Id., ¶ 79. Afterwards, TMT asked U.S. Bank to complete a seller survey. Id., ¶ 80. One of the survey questions asked U.S. Bank to state [*13] how many agencies had collected on the accounts "after your purchase." Id. U.S. Bank responded "[i]ndicated in Offering or additional declaration Document." Id. This response was false, as no offerings or additional documents were ever provided to TMT. Id.

In sum, TMT alleged that it bid on DDA Portfolios six times: (1) September, 2010 (unsuccessful, purportedly due to the lack of a non-disclosure agreement); (2) November, 2010 (unsuccessful, without explanation by U.S. Bank); (3) April, 2011 (unsuccessful because of the purported forward flow agreement between U.S. Bank and UCR); (4) July,

[3] This statement is very confusing, because in paragraph 58 of the Amended Complaint TMT stated that it had raised, not lowered, its bid based on information from U.S. Bank's Outsourcing Manager, Vince Lorenzo. Perhaps, TMT is referencing its earlier bid of $0.055. Amended Complaint, ¶ 51.

2011 (unsuccessful because UCR had a "first right of refusal" and had met and exceeded TMT's bid); (5) September, 2011 (successful bid of $0.0515 for fourth quarter, 2011 Portfolios); (6) March, 2012 (successful bid of $0.0495). Id., ¶¶ 27-35, 47-51, 57-60, 68-80.

On May 8, 2013, U.S. Bank, through Kent Stone, a U.S. Bank Vice Chairman, agreed to sell TMT at least $200,000,000 of U.S. Bank DDA Portfolios for $0.03 cents on the dollar. Id., ¶¶ 84, 85. TMT arrange to sell the May, 2013 DDA Portfolio to a third party for $0.0775 cents on the dollar, but thereafter U.S. Bank failed to sell the DDA Portfolio to TMT. [*14] Id., ¶ 86. In July, 2014, vanBrandwijk left U.S. Bank. Id., ¶ 87.

Tate was arrested on February 27, 2013, and charged with conspiracy to commit bank bribery. Id., ¶ 88; Amended Complaint, Ex. A (Criminal Complaint against Tate in the United States District Court, District of Connecticut). The criminal complaint against Tate stated that he was in charge of outsourcing collection accounts to collection agencies, including Oxford Collection Agency ("Oxford"). Id., ¶ 87. Executives of Oxford pled guilty to conspiracy to commit wire fraud, bank fraud and money laundering in December, 2012, and told a Special Agent that they had been bribing Tate with $2,500 to $5,000 per month in cash. Id., ¶ 90. An Information was filed against Tate and a separate Information was filed against Oxford executives. Id., ¶ 91; Amended Complaint, Ex. B (Information filed against Tate). Tate pled guilty on November 22, 2013, and as detailed in the Information, Tate used both the mails and wires. Id., ¶¶ 93-95.

On June 4, 2014, Potillo was indicted in the U.S. District Court for the Middle District of Florida on 33 counts of wire fraud, bribery of a bank official and unlawful monetary transactions. Id., ¶ 96; Amended [*15] Complaint, Ex. C (Indictment against Potillo). As part of his scheme, Potillo represented to investors that they were purchasing zero-agency or one-agency debt that UCR had purchased from U.S. Bank, when, in fact, it was two-agency debt. Id., ¶ 99. Potillo created false affidavits from U.S. Bank officers falsely "confirming" the quality of the debt. Id., ¶ 99. Potillo paid Tate more than $1.0 million in bribes to enable UCR to purchase DDA Portfolios for $31.0 million, or less than four cents on the dollar. Id., ¶ 100. Potillo used wires and the mail to effectuate transfers of funds to purchase luxury vehicles, real estate and to bribe Tate. Id., ¶¶ 101-103. UCR continued bribing Tate after he left U.S. Bank on February 1, 2012, and the bribes continued well into 2012. Id., ¶ 104. The indictment stated that Tate received over $1.0 million in bribes when he was employed by U.S. Bank. Id., ¶ 103.

TMT alleged that as a result of this fraudulent scheme and U.S. Bank's misrepresentations as to the DDA being zero-agency paper, TMT overpaid for its purchases of DDA Portfolios in September, 2011 and March, 2012. Id., ¶ 105. Additionally, TMT was denied the opportunity of purchasing eleven U.S. [*16] Bank DDA Portfolios, which were sold to UCR as part of the fraudulent scheme. Id., ¶ 106. Absent the scheme, TMT was or would have been the highest bidder on the DDA Portfolios and could have resold them to third party purchasers. Id. Also as a result of the scheme and misrepresentations, the sale of U.S. Bank DDA Portfolios was suspended from the second quarter of 2012 through 2013 and TMT lost its ability to bid on, purchase, and resell DDA Portfolios during this time and lost over $9.0 million in profits. Id., ¶ 107. As a result of U.S. Bank's breach of its agreement to enter into a five-year forward flow agreement, TMT suffered damages in excess of $13.0 million. Id., ¶ 108. As a result of U.S. Bank's breach of its May 8, 2013 agreement to sell to TMT the DDA Portfolio, TMT suffered damages in excess of $9.0 million. Id., ¶ 109. In all, TMT claimed $70,000,000 in damages, of which it contended over $48,000,000 had to be trebled due to U.S. Bank's RICO and antitrust violations. Id., ¶ 110.

Based on these facts, TMT alleged the following causes of action.

In Counts One and Two, TMT alleged civil RICO claims and conspiracy to violate RICO under 18 U.S.C. § 1962(c) and (d) against all defendants except Hartnack, [*17] and sought damages in excess of $48.0 million. Id., ¶¶ 111-166.

Count Three alleged that UCR and U.S. Bank violated Section One of the Sherman Act (15 U.S.C. § 1) by conspiring to fix the price at which U.S. Bank would sell DDA Portfolios to UCR and conspiring to assure that "no parties such as TMT would be able to successfully bid on U.S. Bank DDA Portfolios, thereby allocating the entire market of all U.S. Bank DDA Portfolio sales to UCR." Id., ¶¶ 168, 169. TMT alleged that such conduct by UCR and U.S. Bank was a per se violation the Sherman Act, for which TMT sought in excess of $48.0 million actual damages. Id., ¶¶ 170, 171.

Count Four alleged that U.S. Bank and UCR violated Minnesota Chapter 325D (Restraint of Trade) by conspiring to fix the rate at which U.S. Bank DDA Portfolios would be sold to UCR and by refusing to deal with TMT and others seeking to purchase U.S. Bank DDA Portfolios, thereby diminishing competition. Id., ¶¶ 174-176. TMT sought in excess of $48.0 million actual damages. Id., ¶ 177.

Count Five alleged respondeat superior against U.S. Bank based on allegations that TMT had notified U.S. Bank employees Loosbrock, vanBrandwijk, Hartnack and Villaloboz that UCR was bribing Tate [*18] so UCR could purchase the DDA Portfolios. Id., ¶¶ 179-189. U.S Bank did nothing to stop its officers' wrongful actions and instead directed TMT to work with the "same corrupt individuals that U.S. Bank had knowingly entrusted with the sale of its DDA Portfolios." Id., ¶ 190. TMT alleged that U.S. Bank was vicariously liable for the wrongful conduct of its officers under the doctrine of respondeat superior, and for all damages for violations of the Clayton Act, Minnesota Chapter 325D and its state law claims. Id., ¶ 191.

Counts Six and Seven alleged intentional and negligent misrepresentation against U.S. Bank, Tate, vanBrandwijk and Hartnack, (id., ¶¶ 193-219), including eighteen specific examples of what TMT alleged were false representations made by U.S. Bank employees on U.S. Bank's behalf, including defendants Tate, vanBrandwijk and Hartnack. Id., ¶ 204. TMT alleged that U.S. Bank intended TMT to rely and TMT reasonably and justifiably relied on these statements, and was damaged in excess of $48.0 million. d., ¶¶ 205-213, 216, 219.

Count Eight alleged breach of contract against U.S. Bank based on two separate contracts. Id., ¶¶ 221-226. First, TMT alleged that on March 17, 2011, [*19] it entered into a five-year forward flow contract with U.S. Bank for the purchase of DDA Portfolios at the rate of $0.055. Id., ¶ 221. U.S. Bank breached this agreement when it did not allow TMT to purchase the 2011 second quarter DDA Portfolio at the rate of $0.055, and TMT was damaged in excess of $13.0 million. Id., ¶¶ 222, 223. Second, on May 8, 2013, U.S. Bank, through Stone, entered into an agreement for the purchase by TMT of $200,000,000 of U.S. Bank DDA Portfolio at $0.03 as a one-time transaction. Id., ¶ 224. TMT arranged to sell this Portfolio to a third party for $0.0775 on the dollar but then U.S. Bank breached its agreement and TMT was damaged in excess of $0.0 million. Id.

Count Nine alleged unjust enrichment against U.S. Bank and TMT sought damages in excess of $1.1 million. Id., ¶¶ 228-233. TMT claimed that it overpaid for what it believed was zero-agency debt (which was actually two-agency debt) and U.S. Bank knowingly received the benefit of TMT's overpayment. Id., ¶¶ 229, 230. Moreover, TMT paid more than fair value because U.S. Bank falsely told TMT that UCR was paying $0.045. Id., ¶ 229.

Count Ten alleged negligent supervision against U.S. Bank for which TMT sought [*20] damages in excess of $70.0 million. Id., ¶¶ 235-237. TMT alleged that U.S. Bank had a duty to use reasonable care to supervise the bank officers acting on its behalf and failed to exercise that reasonable care regarding Tate, vanBrandwijk, Hartnack and "others at U.S. Bank" knowing that the officers were in a position where they could harm TMT. Id., ¶ 236.[4]

[4] TMT did not respond to U.S. Bank's argument in support of dismissing Count Ten. See TMT's Brief in Opposition to Motion to Dismiss ("TMT's Mem.") [Docket No. 63]. As a result, it waived its objections. *Njema v. Wells Fargo Bank, N.A., 124 F. Supp. 3d 852, Civ. No. 13-519 (PJS/JSM), 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 108758, 2015 WL 5008940, at 12 (D. Minn. Aug. 18, 2015) (failing to respond to defendant's statements in a motion for summary judgment regarding damages resulted in waiver of plaintiff's argument on that point) (citing *Salaimeh v. Messerli & Kramer, P.A., Civ. No. 13-3201 (DSD/HB), 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 165386, 2014 WL 6684970, at 2, n. 2 (D. Minn. Nov. 25, 2014) (noting that plaintiff did not address certain issues raised by defendant in her opposition to summary judgment and stating "[a]lthough this court considers those claims, it notes that they have been effectively waived.") (citing Satcher v. University of Ark. at Pine Bluff Bd. Of Trs., 558 F.3d 731, 735 (8th Cir. 2009) ("[F]ailure to oppose a basis for summary judgment constitutes waiver of that argument.")). At any rate, TMT agreed at the motion to dismiss hearing that this Court could recommend dismissal of Count Ten. As a result, the Court will not address Count Ten further [*21] in this Report and Recommendation except to recommend its dismissal with prejudice (the relief sought by U.S Bank and not opposed by TMT) to the District Court.

B. U.S. Bank's Motion to Dismiss and TMT's Response[5]

U.S. Bank, vanBrandwijk and Hartnack (hereafter collectively referred to as "U.S. Bank") moved to dismiss the Amended Complaint pursuant to Rule 12(b)(6) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure on numerous grounds. For starters, and before addressing the specific counts of the Amended Complaint, U.S. Bank argued that TMT pled no actionable facts regarding vanBrandwijk and Hartnack, and no facts to support any claim that U.S. Bank was aware of Tate's illegal activities while he was employed by U.S. Bank. U.S. Bank Memorandum in Support of Motion to Dismiss ("U.S. Bank Mem."), pp. 5-7 [Docket No. 55]. For example, the only statement regarding any alleged criminal activity by vanBrandwijk was contained in paragraph 134 of the Amended Complaint, which stated that he "conducted and/or participated, directly or indirectly, in the affairs of the RICO enterprise through a pattern of racketeering activity. He engaged in [*22] wire and mail fraud to further the scheme of fraud and to make false representations, and accepted bribes, all so as to prevent TMT from purchasing U.S. Bank DDA Portfolios and assure they would be sold to UCR." Amended Complaint, ¶ 134. According to U.S. Bank, this allegation was conclusory and unsupported by any facts that vanBrandwijk engaged in any criminal activity or that U.S. Bank had any knowledge of such activity. U.S. Bank Mem., p. 6.

Likewise, TMT alleged that Tate resigned on February 1, 2011, and that TMT did not inform U.S. Bank of his acts of bribery until months later. Id., pp. 6-7. Consequently, but for its conclusory claims of knowledge, TMT pled no facts to support any claims that U.S. Bank was aware of Tate's misconduct while he was employed at U.S. Bank. Id.,

Further, U.S. Bank contended that TMT alleged no actionable conduct by Hartnack. Id., p. 7. TMT's claims that it informed Hartnack on April 15, 2011, that it had been "mislead and totally blown off" by vanBrandwijk, (Amended Complaint, ¶ 53), even if true, neither constituted racketeering activity under RICO, nor was otherwise unlawful. Id. TMT also alleged no facts that it had apprised Hartnack of any mail or wire fraud or that [*23] it was accusing vanBrandwijk of fraud, bribery, or any other unlawful activity. Id. (citing Amended Complaint, ¶ 42; Ex. B at 2-3.).

Proceeding to the specific counts, U.S. Bank contended that TMT's RICO claims (Counts One and Two), must be dismissed because of numerous fatal pleading errors. First, TMT failed to distinguish between a RICO person and RICO enterprise and failed to plead a RICO enterprise distinct from the alleged pattern of racketeering activity. Id., pp. 8-10. Second, the four-year statute of limitations had run on TMT's RICO claims, based on an email from TMT's president, Mark Bugni, to U.S. Bank, which showed that TMT was aware of the alleged RICO violation over three years before the 4-year statute of limitations had begun to run. Id., pp. 10-13 (citing Affidavit of Brooks Poley in Support of Motion to Dismiss ("Poley Aff."), Ex. A). Third, to the extent that TMT was alleging a RICO claim in connection with the March, 2012, DDA Portfolio, the one-year contractual limitation in the purchase agreement barred TMT's action. Id., pp. 13-14. Fourth, the Amended Complaint failed to plead facts establishing U.S. Bank's participation in any purported RICO scheme. Id., pp. 14-16. Lastly, TMT's RICO conspiracy claim (Count Two) [*24] failed because its underlying RICO claims failed. Id., p. 16.

U.S. Bank asserted that the federal and state antitrust claims (Counts Three and Four) must be dismissed because TMT did not plead an actionable restraint of trade (e.g., price fixing or boycotting) and the alleged restraints of trade were permissible vertical agreements, which "are almost never illegal per se." Id., pp. 17-21. Moreover, TMT did not allege a viable violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act under the rule of reason. Id., pp. 22-24. As TMT's state law antitrust claim was factually identical with its federal antitrust claims and TMT had failed to plead a viable federal claim, its state law claim also had to be dismissed for failure to state a claim. Id., p. 25.

As to Count Five alleging respondeat superior, U.S. Bank contended that TMT failed to plead sufficient facts showing that U.S. Bank was responsible for the alleged actions of Tate and vanBrandwijk, including the factual predicates necessary to meet the high standards required for a finding of vicarious liability under RICO and a RICO conspiracy, and for any state law claims. Id., pp. 34-39. Besides, U.S. Bank could not be held liable for any statements Tate may have made after he was no longer a bank employee. Id., p. 36.

[5] The parties' arguments in favor of and opposing dismissal of the federal claims are considered in more detail, infra.

U.S. Bank [*25] submitted that TMT's intentional and negligent misrepresentation claims (Counts Six and Seven) failed because TMT failed to allege facts to establish reliance or causation. Id., pp. 26-29. Additionally, U.S. Bank allegations regarding the September, 2011, DDA Portfolio were vague and "overstated," there were no actionable misrepresentations regarding the March, 2012 DDA Portfolio and, at any rate, any claims arising out of the March, 2012, DDA Portfolio purchase were barred by the one-year statute of limitations contained in the purchase agreement. Id., p. 29-34. U.S. Bank pointed to an email it claimed demonstrated that TMT was told the September, 2011 DDA Portfolio was two-agency debt before TMT's purchase. Id., p. 30 (citing Affidavit of Brooks Poley, Ex. E).[6]

U.S. Bank moved to dismiss Count Eight asserting a breach of contract claim, contending that as to the supposed March, 2011, oral agreement to enter into a five-year forward flow contract, this claim was barred by the statute of frauds because the contract could not be performed within one year. Id.. p. 40. Furthermore, TMT did not sufficiently allege that U.S. Bank and TMT formed a valid contract in May, 2013, for the sale of $200,000,000 worth of DDA Portfolios. Id., pp. 40-41. According to U.S. Bank, there was no agreement as to quantity or price and therefore, no enforceable agreement was ever formed. Id.

U.S. Bank moved to dismiss Count Nine asserting unjust enrichment, contending that TMT was not eligible for this equitable relief where it had also alleged that written contracts governed the parties' rights. Id., p. 41.

Finally, as to Counts One through Seven and Nine collectively, U.S. Bank argued that these counts were based on TMT's flawed theory that but for U.S. Bank's fraudulent scheme, it would have been able to purchase certain DDA portfolios; yet, TMT failed to allege sufficient factual content to permit the Court to infer that was the case. Id., p. 42. As a result, [*27] all claims based on this theory of "causation" had to be dismissed. Id., pp. 42-43.

TMT opposed the motion, arguing generally that it had properly pled its causes of action, and that U.S Bank was vicariously liable for the misconduct of its high-level officers because the it had written notice of Tate's criminal behavior, the officers' misrepresentations occurred during the scope of their employment, and the actions of the bank's high level officers benefitted the bank. TMT's Memorandum in Opposition to Motion to Dismiss ("TMT's Mem."), pp. 6-12 [Docket No. 63].

TMT rejected U.S. Bank's argument that it pled no actionable facts regarding vanBrandwijk and Hartnack, and no facts to support any claim that U.S. Bank was aware of Tate's illegal activities while he was employed by U.S. Bank. Id., pp. 23-26. According to TMT, it pled "scores" of specific facts showing that vanBrandwijk was involved in the "fraudulent scheme, pattern of racketeering activity and anti-competitive behavior of U.S. Bank." Id., p. 24 (citing Amended Complaint, ¶¶ 17, 38, 43, 46, 48, 66, 67, 75, 81, 82). The Amended Complaint stated that vanBrandwijk misrepresented the quality of the DDA Portfolios, the requirement for a non-disclosure agreement prior [*28] to bidding, U.S. Bank's failure to receive a non-disclosure agreement from TMT, the terms and conditions for the purchase of DDA Portfolios, the amount being bid by UCR for the DDA Portfolios, and the bidding process was fair and open. Id. (citing Amended Complaint, ¶ 149). TMT further argued that it had alleged that vanBrandwijk accepted bribes to prevent TMT from purchasing DDA Portfolios. Id., p. 25 (citing Amended Complaint, ¶¶ 127, 134). TMT told vanBrandwijk numerous times about the bribery and other fraudulent acts, yet vanBrandwijk did nothing, leading a reasonable finder of fact to conclude that he was also accepting bribes. Id., p. 25. As to Hartnack, TMT noted that Hartnack is not a RICO defendant, although he also misrepresented facts to TMT. Id. (citing Amended Complaint, ¶¶ 52-54, 196, 204).

As for its RICO claims, TMT asserted that it had properly alleged the requisite distinctions between a RICO enterprise and RICO persons, and between a RICO enterprise and a pattern of racketeering. Id., pp. 12-19.

[6] For the reasons described infra, the Court will not consider this exhibit. U.S. Bank stated that it was not offering the document in support of its motion and then did exactly that. U.S. Bank Mem., pp. 30-31. The Court also did not consider Exhibit F to the Poley Affidavit, which U.S. Bank stated it was submitting "for purposes of illustration only" and then relied on the exhibit to show that TMT's statement that it never received any offering materials regarding [*26] the March, 2012 DDA Portfolio was "patently false." Id., p. 32, n.18.

Regarding the former, TMT maintained that the "association-in-fact enterprise" consisted of "U.S. Bank, two of its high-level officers, an outside company (UCR) and its principal (Potillo). U.S. Bank is a [*29] separate legal entity distinct from the alleged association-in-fact enterprise, ..." Id., p. 13. Regarding the latter, TMT submitted that the "enterprise engaged in conduct distinct and apart from the predicate acts of racketeering" such as "acts necessary to close sales, obtain closing proceeds, and provide post-sale services (e.g. providing bills of sale, U.S. Bank affidavits of correctness/assignment, and records relating to loans sold [ ])," [7] and "undoubtedly engaged in certain legitimate sales of U.S. Bank DDA Portfolios outside of defendants' pattern of racketeering." Id., pp. 16-18 (citing Amended Complaint, ¶ 122 ("The enterprise and its members conducted other business wholly separate and apart from the pattern of racketeering activity")). In any event, TMT urged that "discovery undoubtedly will reveal that there were certain U.S. Bank DDA Portfolio sales where it was unnecessary to commit RICO predicate acts in order for UCR to be awarded the DDA Portfolios." TMT's Mem., p. 18. Alternatively, TMT claimed that "even if the association-in-fact enterprise were a wholly criminal association, . . . the facts alleged demonstrate that it had a distinct structure and an organizational pattern or system [*30] of authority and planning beyond that which was necessary to perpetrate the predicate crimes, including but not limited to a division of the gains reaped through the pattern of racketeering activity." Id., p. 19. Therefore, "an enterprise separate and distinct from the pattern of racketeering has been alleged." Id. (citing United States v. Bledsoe, 674 F.2d 647, 665 (8th Cir. 1982), cert. denied, 459 U.S. 1040, 103 S. Ct. 456, 74 L. Ed. 2d 608 (1982)).[8]

TMT denied that the statute of limitations had run on its RICO claims. Id., pp. 19-20. According to TMT, nothing in the April 11, 2011, email cited by U.S. Bank in support of this argument would have put TMT on notice that Potillo was bribing U.S. Bank years later. Id., p. 20. Nor would the fact that Tate had informed TMT in August of 2010, that "UCR was bidding substantially less for U.S. Bank DDA Portfolios than the $0.055 (on the dollar) that TMT was offering," (Amended Complaint, [*31] ¶ 24), have put TMT notice that Tate or others at U.S. Bank were being bribed. Id., pp. 20-21. Additionally, there was ample evidence to support tolling of the statute of limitations, because TMT had asked whether U.S. Bank officers were engaged in criminal conduct, and the bank had concealed the fact that it was occurring. Id., p. 21. TMT also rejected U.S. Bank's argument that the one-year statute of limitations in the DDA Portfolio purchase agreement had any bearing on its RICO claims. Id., p. 22. TMT noted that it was not asserting a claim for breach of the purchase agreement and, at any rate, TMT's RICO claims, were controlled by the four-year statute of limitations. Id.

Finally, TMT contended that as it had properly pled its RICO claim, there was no basis to dismiss its RICO conspiracy claim. Id., p. 23.

Regarding its antitrust claims, TMT submitted that U.S. Bank fixed bids so that all horizontal competition was destroyed, a per se violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act. Id., pp. 27-41. As for U.S. Bank's argument regarding the rule of reason, TMT argued that it should be permitted to amend its Amended Complaint to plead the illegality of U.S. Bank's conduct under a rule of reason analysis. Id., p. 41. In addition, TMT's antitrust claims were viable [*32] under Minn. Stat. § 325D.53, which makes it per se illegal to refuse to deal with another party, allocate markets, allocate customers or fix or control the price of commodities. Id., pp. 42-43.

Regarding its contract claims, TMT rejected U.S. Bank's statute of frauds argument, noting that the statute does not require that a contract be fully performed within a year; only that it be commenced within a year, as was the case here. Id., pp. 43-44. But even if the statute of frauds did apply, TMT contended that U.S. Bank should be estopped from asserting it where its dealings with TMT in connection with its contractual commitments were all "part and parcel" of U.S. Bank's pattern of racketeering activity. Id., pp. 44-45. Additionally, discovery may reveal the existence of a writing in U.S. Bank's possession that would satisfy the statute of frauds. Id., p. 45.

[7] These facts were not pled in the Amended Complaint.

[8] In Bledsoe, the Eighth Circuit described the requirement for an ascertainable structure distinct from the pattern of racketeering activity in terms of criminal enterprises, such as a Mafia family or prostitution ring, both of which would have an organizational structure and system of authority beyond that necessary to perpetuate the predicate crimes. 674 F.2d at 665.

As to the contract dated May 8, 2013, TMT contended that it was an enforceable oral agreement and contrary to U.S. Bank's position, agreement on the material terms of price ($0.03 cents on the dollar for every dollar of DDA) and quantity ($200,000,000) had been reached. Id., pp. 45-46 (citing Amended Complaint, ¶ 224).

As for U.S. Bank's arguments regarding causation and reliance, TMT asserted that each time a false misrepresentation [*33] was made regarding why it did not win a bid, TMT relied on that misrepresentation to continue bidding, working with U.S. Bank and "entering into broken contracts with U.S. Bank and suffering injury." Id., p. 47. Similarly, TMT countered U.S. Bank's argument that it did not change its position based on the misrepresentation by stating that it the misrepresentations caused TMT to continue dealing with U.S. Bank and the misrepresentations "contributed to" TMT not being awarded bids. Id. In response to U.S. Bank's challenge regarding how TMT could have reasonably relied on the false representation that it would be awarded a bid if it lowered its bid price, TMT submitted that in light of U.S. Bank's previous unfair treatment of it, a reasonable person might conclude that U.S. Bank was trying to "redeem" itself by telling TMT that it was bidding higher than necessary. Id., p. 48.

TMT rebuffed U.S. Bank's argument that TMT's intentional and negligent misrepresentation counts fail because it cannot show causation — i.e., that it would have been the successful bidder on the DDA Portfolios absent U.S. Bank's fraud, and that as a result, causation was lacking. Id., pp. 55-56. TMT submitted that the evidence on that point (who [*34] bid what at each sale) was in U.S. Bank's possession and would be disclosed in discovery. Id., p. 56. Additionally, TMT alleged that as to the November, 2010 DDA Portfolio sale, TMT's bid was not accepted because U.S. Bank accepted UCR's bid based on UCR's fraud. Id., p. 55-56. Regarding the DDA Portfolio sale on April 29, 2011, U.S. Bank falsely represented that TMT was not awarded the bid because UCR had a forward flow contract with a 30-day exit clause. Id., p. 56. Absent this false misrepresentation, TMT would have been the successful bidder. Id. Similarly, TMT would have been the successful bidder on the DDA Portfolio sale in July, 2011, but for U.S. Bank's fraudulent statement that UCR had a "right of first refusal." Id.

TMT also contended that its claims for intentional and negligent misrepresentation as to the September 2011 DDA Portfolio and March 2012 DDA Portfolio were pled with the particularity required by Rule 9(b). Id., pp. 49-53. For example, TMT alleged that between August, 2011 and September 19, 2011, vanBrandwijk represented that the DDA Portfolios were zero-agency debt. Id., pp. 49-50. While U.S. Bank minimized VanBrandwijk's statement regarding whether the September, 2011 DDA Portfolio was a two-agency debt ("whomsoever posted the [*35] comment has a problem with the facts"), TMT contended that it was reasonable interpret vanBrandwijk's statement to mean that UCR's statement that the debt was two-agency debt was not accurate, but at any rate, the interpretation of vanBrandwijk's statement was a jury matter. Id., pp. 51-52.

TMT rejected U.S. Bank's argument that it never represented that the March, 2012, DDA Portfolio was zero-agency debt as a basis for dismissing this claim. Id. According to TMT, quality of the debt was not the basis of its misrepresentation claims; rather it had alleged a false representation by vanBrandwijk about UCR's bid price. Id., pp. 52-53. TMT also spurned U.S. Bank's argument regarding the one-year contractual limitations period, noting that it did not allege any breach of contract claims arising out of the March 2012, DDA Portfolio purchase agreement. Id., p. 53.

TMT contended that its unjust enrichment claim was adequately pled because the unjust enrichment complained of fell outside the scope of any contract and was, therefore, not covered by any contract provision. Id., pp. 54-55. TMT's unjust enrichment claim was premised on U.S. Bank's misrepresentations as to the quality of the DDA and the price at which UCR was bidding, which resulted [*36] in TMT overpaying for the DDA Portfolios. Id., p. 55.

In reply, U.S. Bank submitted that TMT failed to properly plead respondeat superior in connection with its RICO claim. U.S. Bank Reply Mem., pp. 1-2 [Docket No. 71]. TMT was required to plead that Tate's and vanBrandwijk's purported fraud and bribery served U.S. Bank's corporate policy goals and its failure to do so was fatal. Id. (citing K & S P'ship v. Continental Bank, N.A., 127 F.R.D. 664, 670 (D. Neb. 1989)). As to the state claims, vicarious liability for intentional torts requires foreseeability and TMT did not allege that Tate's or vanBrandwijk's conduct was foreseeable. Id., p. 1. Vicarious liability for negligent torts requires action within the scope of employment and bribery is not within the scope of employment, nor was the bribery foreseeable or authorized. Id., p. 2. As a result, U.S. Bank cannot be held liable under a theory of respondeat superior for the RICO claim or any of the state law claims. Id., p. 2.

U.S. Bank reiterated that TMT's RICO claims failed because TMT alleged that the RICO enterprise consisted solely of the defendants — a fatal error in pleading RICO claims. U.S. Bank's Reply Mem., p. 2. Additionally, TMT failed to allege an enterprise distinct from the racketeering activity — another incurable flaw. Id., pp. 2-3. U.S. [*37] Bank noted that TMT's effort to salvage its RICO claims by stating that the alleged RICO enterprise "undoubtedly" engaged in legitimate DDA sales must be rejected, as these facts were not pled in the Amended Complaint and the only allegations TMT cited in support of these unalleged facts was its conclusory claim of enterprise and pattern of racketeering activity distinctiveness at paragraph 122 of the Amended Complaint. Id., p. 3. As to TMT's argument that the statute of limitations on the RICO claims were subject to equitable tolling, U.S. Bank noted that TMT did not plead fraudulent concealment and cannot assert it at this point. Id., p. 4.

U.S. Bank also rejected TMT's contention that U.S. Bank knew of its "officers'" purported involvement in the RICO scheme, as the Amended Complaint, ¶¶ 184-189, only stated that TMT informed U.S. Bank of Tate's misconduct after he resigned, and there was no factual support for any allegation that vanBrandwijk accepted bribes. Id., pp. 4-5.

As to the antitrust claims, U.S. Bank noted that the only case cited by TMT in support of its argument that an agreement between a buyer and seller could be deemed horizontal if it affected competitors, Cernuto v. United Cabinet Corp., 595 F.2d 164, 168 (3rd Cir. 1979), was rejected by the United States Supreme [*38] Court on this point in Business Elecs. Corp. v. Sharp Elecs. Corp., 485 U.S. 717, 730, n. 4, 108 S. Ct. 1515, 99 L. Ed. 2d 808 (1988). Id., pp. 6-7. TMT never alleged an agreement between U.S. Bank and a U.S. Bank competitor. Id., p. 7. Further, while TMT contended that U.S. Bank was in the same business as TMT, UCR and its competitors, (TMT's Mem., p. 37), TMT never pled that U.S. Bank was UCR or TMT's competitor. Id., p. 7, n. 5.

Because TMT failed to state a federal antitrust claim, its state law antitrust claims also failed. Id., pp. 7-8.

As for the contract claims, U.S. Bank contended that pursuant to Wiebeler v. Milwaukee Mechanics' Mut. Ins. Co., 30 Minn. 464, 16 N.W. 363, 363 (Minn. 1883), a contract that can be fully performed and ended within one year falls outside the statute of frauds. Id., p. 8. Here, the five-year forward flow contract could not have been completed within a year. Id. To the extent TMT argued that U.S. Bank should be estopped from asserting the statute of frauds, U.S. Bank noted that TMT did not plead any of the elements of equitable estoppel described by Lunning v. Land O'Lakes, 303 N.W.2d 452, 457 (Minn. 1980). Id. Further, TMT's argument that discovery "may well" reveal a writing that satisfied the statute of frauds was insufficient under the Twombly pleading standard. Id., p. 9.

Regarding TMT's misrepresentation claims, U.S. Bank stated that TMT failed to plead reliance on any misrepresentations. Id. For example, TMT did not allege that any misrepresentations resulted [*39] in its losing out at DDA Portfolio auctions. Id. Additionally, TMT claimed it lost auctions due to bribery, not due to reliance on alleged misrepresentations by U.S. Bank. Id.

As to the contractual limitations period reflected in the March, 2012 purchase agreement, U.S. Bank contended that, contrary to TMT's assertion that it only applied to breach of contract claims and was unenforceable due to fraud, the limitations period facially applied to all actions, "regardless of form." Id., p. 10 (citing Poley Aff., Ex. C at p. 12, Art. VIII, § G). As a result, any claims based on this purchase agreement must be dismissed. Id.

Finally, U.S. Bank argued that the unjust enrichment claim was based on the same alleged misrepresentations as its fraud and RICO claims. Id., p. 10. Because those claims constituted actions at law, the equitable claim of unjust enrichment had to be dismissed. Id.

II. STANDARD OF REVIEW

In considering a motion to dismiss under Rule 12(b)(6), the pleadings are construed in the light most favorable to the nonmoving party, and the facts alleged in the complaint must be taken as true. In re Operation of Mo. River Sys.

Litig., 418 F.3d 915, 917 (8th Cir. 2005) (citations omitted); see also Hamm v. Groose, 15 F.3d 110, 112 (8th Cir. 1994). In addition, "the court must resolve any ambiguities concerning the sufficiency of the plaintiffs' [*40] claims in favor of the plaintiffs, and give the plaintiffs the benefit of every reasonable inference drawn from the well-pleaded facts and allegations in their complaint." Ossman v. Diana Corp., 825 F. Supp. 870, 880 (D. Minn. 1993) (internal quotation marks omitted) (quoting Retail Clerks Int'l Ass'n v. Schermerhorn, 373 U.S. 746, 753 n. 6, 83 S. Ct. 1461, 10 L. Ed. 2d 678 (1963)).

Litigants also must properly plead their claims under Rule 8 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure and meet the principles articulated by the United States Supreme Court in Bell Atlantic Atl. Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007) and Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 129 S. Ct. 1937, 173 L. Ed. 2d 868 (2009). To satisfy Rule 8, Twombly and Iqbal, "a complaint need not contain 'detailed factual allegations,' . . . ." United States ex rel. Raynor v. National Rural Utils. Coop. Fin., Corp., 690 F.3d 951, 955 (8th Cir. 2012) (quoting Twombly, 550 U.S. at 555). However, "it must contain facts with enough specificity 'to raise a right to relief above the speculative level.'" Id. (citation omitted). The court is not bound to accept as true "'[t]hreadbare recitals of the elements of a cause of action, supported by mere conclusory statements . . . or legal conclusions couched as factual allegations." McDonough v. Anoka Cty., 799 F.3d 931, 945 (8th Cir. 2015) (citing Papasan v. Allain, 478 U.S. 265, 286, 106 S. Ct. 2932, 92 L. Ed. 2d 209 (1986)). Accordingly, to "survive a motion to dismiss, a complaint must contain sufficient factual matter, accepted as true, to 'state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face.'" Iqbal, 556 U.S. at 678 (quoting Twombly, 550 U.S., at 570). "A claim has facial plausibility when the plaintiff pleads factual content that allows the court to draw the reasonable inference that the defendant is liable for the misconduct alleged." Id. (quoting [*41] Twombly, 550 U.S. at 556).

"Asking for plausible grounds . . . does not impose a probability requirement at the pleading stage; it simply calls for enough facts to raise a reasonable expectation that discovery will reveal evidence of" the claimed violations. Twombly, 550 U.S. at 556. "There is no requirement for direct evidence; the factual allegations may be circumstantial and 'need only be enough to nudge the claim 'across the line from conceivable to plausible.'" McDonough, 799 F3d at 945 (quoting Cardigan Mountain Sch. v. New Hampshire Ins. Co., 787 F.3d 82, 88 (1st Cir. 2015) (quoting Twombly, 550 U.S. at 556)). "Courts should consider whether there are lawful, 'obvious alternative explanation[s]' for the alleged conduct, because '[w]here a complaint pleads facts that are merely consistent with a defendant's liability, it stops short of the line between possibility and plausibility of entitlement to relief.'" Id. (quoting Iqbal, 556 U.S. at 678, 682 (quoting Twombly, 550 U.S. at 557, 567 (brackets omitted)) (internal quotation marks omitted). "If the alternative explanations are not sufficiently convincing, however, the complaint states a plausible claim for relief, because '[f]erreting out the most likely reason for the defendants' actions is not appropriate at the pleadings stage.'" Id. (citing Watson Carpet & Floor Covering, Inc. v. Mohawk Indus., Inc., 648 F.3d 452, 458 (6th Cir. 2011)).

As a general rule, the Court may not consider materials "outside the pleadings" on a motion to dismiss. However, "a court may consider the complaint, [*42] matters of public record, orders, materials embraced by the complaint, and exhibits attached to the complaint in deciding a motion to dismiss under Rule 12(b)(6) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure." Wickner v. McComb, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 15304, 2010 WL 610913, at *5 (D. Minn. 2010) (citing Porous Media Corp. v. Pall Corp., 186 F.3d 1077, 1079 (8th Cir. 1999)).

III. DISCUSSION

Before addressing the merits of the motion to dismiss, the Court must first take up the six exhibits U.S. Bank submitted in support of its motion to dismiss. Poley Aff., Exs. A-F. [Docket No. 54] and letters sent to the Court by the parties following the briefing on this motion.

U.S. Bank stated that Exhibits A-D to the Poley Affidavit were "embraced by the pleadings," and submitted Exhibits E and F to the Poley affidavit "not . . . in support of its Motion" but "for purposes of illustration only." U.S. Bank Mem., pp. 30, 32, n.18. U.S. Bank contended that Exhibit E, an email regarding the September, 2011 DDA Portfolio, refuted TMT's allegations that U.S. Bank failed to disclose to TMT that the September, 2011 and March, 2012 DDA Portfolios were two-agency debt before TMT purchased the Portfolios. Id., p. 30. U.S. Bank submitted Exhibit F to show that TMT's allegation that it was not sent any offering materials on the March 8, 2012 DDA Portfolio was "patently false." Id., p. 32, n.18. TMT objected to Poley Aff., Ex. E and submitted the [*43] Affidavit of Mark Bugni, a TMT principal, to "provide at least minimal evidence to demonstrate the falsity of certain of U.S. Bank's arguments that purport to be supported by emails attached to the [Poley Affidavit]. TMT's Mem., pp. 3, n.1, p. 50; Affidavit of Mark Bugni [Docket No. 62].

Under the motion to dismiss standard, the Court accepts the allegations in the Amended Complaint as true. Therefore, the Court will not consider Exhibits E and F to the Poley Affidavit or the Bugni Affidavit submitted by TMT. These materials were submitted to challenge (and prove) the truth of the allegations alleged in the Amended Complaint. If the lawsuit proceeds, the parties will be entitled to conduct discovery on the issue of U.S. Bank's disclosures to TMT of the status of the DDA Portfolios and submit that issue, if warranted, on a motion for summary judgment. As to the Poley Affidavit Exhibits A-D, the Court has considered them because they were embraced by the pleadings.

On October 19, 2015, TMT's attorney wrote to this Court to inform the Court that Potillo had pled guilty to bribing Tate and conspiring to commit bribery. [Docket No. 89]. TMT attached to this letter a copy of Potillo's plea [*44] agreement in United States v. Potillo, Crim. No. 6:14-128-Orl-28GJK [Docket No 101], Magistrate Judge Gregory Kelly's Report and Recommendation to the District Court, Middle District of Florida, recommending that the plea be accepted [Docket No. 109], and the registration and a certificate from the Ohio Secretary of State's office regarding an Ohio LLC — Drake Tate Enterprises, LLC — that Tate apparently had established as part of the bribery scheme. Id. All of these documents appear to be part of the public record. However, TMT's counsel's letter to the Court enclosing these documents also contained additional, unauthorized argument opposing U.S. Bank's Motion to Dismiss and stated that "if need be" TMT would amend its Amended Complaint to incorporate some of the information from the plea agreement that TMT argued bolstered its RICO and antitrust claims. Id.

In response to TMT's letter, U.S. Bank wrote to the Court on October 22, 2015, and argued that the evidence TMT had submitted was not new or germane to the Court's decision on its Motion to Dismiss. [Docket No. 90]. U.S. Bank's letter also contained additional, unauthorized argument. Id.

Both letters constituted unauthorized briefs [*45] in violation of Local Rule 7.1(i), which states "[e]xcept with the court's prior permission, a party must not file a memorandum of law except as expressly allowed under LR 7.1." The Court will take judicial notice of Potillo's plea agreement, the Magistrate Judge's Report and Recommendation, and the filing from the Ohio Secretary of State's Office, all of which are publicly filed documents and embraced by the facts as alleged by the Amended Complaint. See Mattes v. ABC Plastics, Inc., 323 F.3d 695, 697, n.4 (8th Cir. 2003) ("[I]n considering a motion to dismiss, the district court may sometimes consider materials outside the pleadings, such as materials that are necessarily embraced by the pleadings and exhibits attached to the complaint.") (citing Porous Media Corp. v. Pall Corp., 186 F.3d 1077, 1079 (8th Cir. 1999)); Levy v. Ohl, 477 F.3d 988, 991 (8th Cir. 2007) ("In reviewing a motion to dismiss under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(b)(6) the court is not precluded in [its' review of the complaint from taking notice of items ion the public record.") (quotation and citation omitted). As for the arguments reflected in the parties' letters, the Court does not condone these filings. Nonetheless, it reviewed and considered them.

A. Civil RICO Claim (Counts One and Two Against U.S. Bank, UCR, Tate, Potillo, and vanBrandwijk)

The U.S Bank defendants moved to dismiss the civil RICO claims against U.S. Bank and vanBrandwijk, on the following [*46] grounds. First, U.S. Bank claimed that TMT failed to plead a RICO enterprise distinct from the defendants. U.S. Bank's Mem., pp. 8-9. Pursuant to Cedric Kushner Promotions, Ltd. v. King, 533 U.S. 158, 161, 121 S. Ct. 2087, 150 L. Ed. 2d 198 (2001), a plaintiff must allege the existence of two distinct entities: (1) a "person" and (2) an "enterprise." Id., p. 8. Here, TMT alleged that Tate, Potillo, vanBrandwijk, UCR, and U.S. Bank were "RICO persons," and then alleged that these "RICO persons" associated as a "RICO enterprise." Amended Complaint, ¶¶ 112, 113. TMT failed to offer any facts to support the existence of a RICO enterprise separate from the U.S. Bank defendants and thus, failed to adequately plead a required element of a RICO claim. Id., p. 9.

Second, U.S. Bank asserted that a RICO claimant must assert the existence of an association-in-fact enterprise with "'an ascertainable structure distinct from the conduct of a pattern of racketeering.'" Id. (quoting United States v. Lee, 374 F.3d 637, 647 (8th Cir. 2004)). The test for distinctness is whether the enterprise would still exist without the predicate acts. Id. (citation omitted). Here, TMT stated only that "the enterprise did not exist solely to engage in the predicate acts and pattern of racketeering," (Amended Complaint, ¶ 122), a "formulaic recitation" that did not meet Rule 8 pleading standards. [*47] Id., pp. 9-10. Similarly, TMT's conclusory statement that the enterprise "conducted other business wholly separate and apart from the pattern of racketeering activity" was unsupported by any facts. Id., p. 10.

Third, U.S. Bank argued that TMT's RICO claims were barred by the governing four-year statute of limitations. Id., p. 10. RICO claims accrue when the facts constituting fraud were or by reasonable diligence should have been discovered. Id. (citation omitted). According to U.S. Bank's calculations, TMT filed its initial complaint on November 7, 2014, and therefore, if it knew or should have known of its injury before November 7, 2010 (the "cutoff date"), then its entire RICO claim was time-barred. Id., p. 11. U.S. Bank pointed to two instances that established that TMT had notice of its RICO injury before the cutoff date. The first instance was Paragraph 39 of the Amended Complaint, which referenced an email from TMT's president, Mark Bugni, informing U.S. Bank that Potillo and UCR were engaged in bribery to purchase U.S. Bank DDA Portfolios. Id., p. 12. In this email dated April 11, 2011, Bugni stated:

> Also, as I have told Todd [Loosbrock] previously, Len Pontillo [sic] contacted my old boss 4 years ago at (IDT Carmel) trying to [*48] pay him off so that our old company would not bid on U.S. Bank DDA. Needless to say, we never got the bid?????. At that time, 4 years ago, our bid was 4 cents. I would be interested to see what the portfolio was going for then since we somehow did not get it. This bid price was verbally offered to Bill Tate, which I witnessed!

Poley Aff., Ex. A, p. 2. According to U.S. Bank, this statement by Bugni showed that TMT was aware of the RICO scheme in 2007 (i.e. by referencing "4 years ago"), over three years before the cutoff date. U.S. Bank's Mem., p. 12.

The second instance arose out of TMT's allegation that it learned in August, 2010 (three months before the statute of limitations cutoff date) that UCR was bidding substantially less than TMT for DDA. Id., p. 13 (citing Amended Complaint, ¶ 24). As a result, "a reasonable person in TMT's position would question why it was not winning the DDA auctions upon learning that it was 'substantially' outbidding the winning bidder, UCR." Id.

Fourth, U.S. Bank alleged that the portion of the RICO claim that was based on the March, 2012 purchase agreement was barred by the one-year statute of limitations in the agreement. Id. (citing Poley Aff., Ex. C (March [*49] 15, 2012 purchase agreement between U.S. Bank and TMT at Article VIII, ¶ G (stating "[n]o cause of action, regardless of form, shall be brought by either party more than one (1) year after the cause of action arises.")). Therefore, if any of TMT's claims relating to the March, 2012 transaction accrued on or before November 7, 2013, (the one-year contractual cutoff date), then those claims are time-barred. Id., p. 14. In support, U.S. Bank pointed to TMT's admission that it learned Tate was taking bribes from UCR shortly after November 23, 2010. Id. (citing Amended Complaint, ¶ 33). Additionally, TMT knew about the alleged RICO scheme as early as April, 2007 (based on Bugni's e-mail).

Fifth, TMT did not plead facts to support U.S. Bank's involvement in the RICO scheme. Id., pp. 14-16. Potillo's indictment, on which the RICO claim is primarily based, (Amended Complaint, Ex. C), did not implicate U.S. Bank or even mention vanBrandwijk. Id., p. 15. Moreover, to impose vicarious liability on U.S. Bank for Tate and vanBrandwijk's actions, TMT was required to allege that they were serving U.S. Bank's corporate policy goals, which it failed to do. Id. Additionally, TMT's allegation that it successfully purchased two DDA portfolios [*50] was inconsistent with its allegation that U.S. Bank was involved in a scheme to exclude other DDA buyers; likewise, TMT did not explain why U.S. Bank would use an open auction system to exclude other buyers, rather than a private sale to UCR. Id., p. 16.

Finally, U.S. Bank argued that the RICO conspiracy claim failed because its underlying RICO claim failed. Id. (citing *Jaworski v. Rollupspacovers, Civ. No. 11-1816 (DSD/JSM), 2012 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 46938, 2012 WL 1130684, at 3 (D. Minn. Apr. 3, 2012) (dismissal of claim for conspiracy to violate RICO warranted when substantive RICO claim failed)).

TMT responded that the association-in-fact enterprise in the instant case was comprised of U.S. Bank, its two officers (vanBrandwijk and Tate), UCR and Potillo. TMT's Mem., p. 13. According to TMT, U.S. Bank's argument amounted to a legally unsupported position that a bank could never be a RICO person that conducted or participated in the affairs of an association-in-fact enterprise comprised of the bank, its officers and unrelated third parties, without violating the requirement that the RICO enterprise be distinct from the RICO person/defendant. Id., p. 14. TMT contended that U.S. Bank was a "separate legal entity" distinct from the association-in-fact enterprise and, therefore, it met the requirement for distinctiveness between RICO persons [*51] and the RICO enterprise. Id., pp. 12-14.

TMT acknowledged that an enterprise must exist separate from the pattern of racketeering activity. Id., p. 15. TMT argued that in this case, the enterprise engaged in conduct distinct from and apart from the predicate acts of racketeering in that it also existed to organize and oversee acts distinct from the pattern of racketeering, such as acts necessary to close sales, obtain closing proceeds, and provide post-sale services. Id., p. 17. TMT further claimed that the association-in-fact enterprise "undoubtedly" engaged in legitimate sales of DDA Portfolios. Id.

In sum, TMT argued that the association-in-fact enterprise was separate and distinct from the pattern of racketeering activity because U.S. Bank would have engaged in legitimate activity in connection with the DDA Portfolio sales as well as illegal activities, which were part of pattern of racketeering activities. According to TMT, it has described sufficient facts to raise a reasonable expectation that discovery will reveal evidence that the enterprise engaged in legitimate as well as illegal activity. Id., p. 18.

TMT denied that its claims were barred by the governing four-year statute of limitations, stating that the email on which [*52] U.S. Bank relied did not show that TMT was aware of the RICO scheme four years before filing the Complaint. Id., p. 20. The email merely showed that Potillo tried to bribe a competitor of the former employer of TMT's principal. Id. Nothing in the email indicated that TMT knew or had reason to know that Potillo was bribing a U.S. Bank officer years later. Id. As to U.S. Bank's argument regarding TMT's knowledge in August, 2010, that UCR was bidding substantially less for the DDA Portfolios that TMT's offers, TMT noted that it only learned of this through Tate. Id. In light of the fact that it was a U.S. Bank officer providing the information, there was no reason why TMT should have been tipped off that Tate and others were bring bribed. Id., pp. 20-21. Moreover, there are ample facts alleged to support equitable tolling of the statute of limitations, as there was evidence that U.S. Bank concealed its bribery from TMT by stringing it along with false explanations regarding why TMT was not being injured through its inability to succeed in its DDA Portfolio bids. Id., p. 21.

In reply, U.S. Bank reiterated that TMT's RICO claims failed because TMT alleged that the RICO enterprise consisted solely of the defendants — a fatal [*53] pleading error. U.S. Bank's Reply Mem., p. 2. Additionally, TMT failed to allege an enterprise distinct from the racketeering activity — another fatal error. Id., pp. 2-3. U.S. Bank noted that TMT's effort to salvage its RICO claims by stating that the alleged RICO enterprise "undoubtedly" engaged in legitimate DDA sales failed, as it was not pled in the Amended Complaint, and the only allegations TMT cited in support of these unalleged facts was its conclusory claim of enterprise and distinctiveness of pattern of racketeering activity at paragraph 122 of the Amended Complaint. Id., p. 3. As to TMT's argument that the statute of limitations on the RICO claims were subject to equitable tolling, U.S. Bank noted that TMT did not plead fraudulent concealment and cannot assert it at this point. Id., p. 4.

U.S. Bank rejected TMT's contention that U.S. Bank knew of its "officers" purported misconduct, as paragraphs 184-189 of the Amended Complaint only stated that TMT informed U.S. Bank of Tate's misconduct after he resigned, and there was no factual support for any allegation that vanBrandwijk accepted bribes. Id., p. 5.

In its unsolicited letter brief to the Court, TMT contended that the fact that Tate wired his bribe funds to [*54] the bank account of Drake Tate Enterprises, LLC was evidence that "the RICO enterprise would be separate and distinct from the RICO defendants because Drake Tate Enterprises, LLC — which we now know was an important member of the enterprise — is not a defendant." Letter to Court from TMT dated October 19, 2015, p. 2. TMT stated that "if need be," it would seek leave to amend to add these facts to a Second Amended Complaint, but also argued that there was no need to amend the Amended Complaint on this point because it had already alleged a RICO enterprise separate from the RICO defendants. Id., n.1. According to TMT, the fact that all defendants comprised the association-in-fact enterprise did not "detract from the fact that the enterprise can be a separate and distinct entity." Id. (citing Securitron Magnalock Corp. v. Schnabolk, 65 F.3d 256 (2d Cir. 1995); Shearin v. E.F. Hutton, 885 F.2d 1162 (3d Cir. 1989); River City Markets v. Fleming, 960 F.2d 1458 (9th Cir. 1992)).

U.S. Bank responded in its unsolicited letter brief to the Court that TMT should not be allowed to amend the Amended Complaint to add facts regarding Drake Tate, LLC because any such amendment would be futile. Letter to Court from U.S. Bank dated October 22, 2015, pp. 1-2. According to U.S Bank, Drake Tate Enterprises, LLC, which was organized eight days before Tate received his first bribe, [*55] would necessarily be deemed a RICO "person." Id., p. 2, n.2. Therefore, even if TMT named Drake Tate Enterprises, LLC as a member of the alleged RICO enterprise, there would still be no distinction between the alleged RICO persons and the RICO enterprise. Id. As for TMT's citation of Securitron Magnalock Corp., Shearin, and River City Markets in support of its positon that a RICO violation can be maintained even though the defendants and enterprise-in-fact are the same, U.S. Bank maintained that those cases pre-dated the Supreme Court's decision in Cedric Kushner Promotions, Ltd. v. King, 533 U.S. 158, 121 S. Ct. 2087, 150 L. Ed. 2d 198 (2001), which set forth the requirement for distinction between RICO persons and the enterprise-in-fact. Id., p. 1, n.1.

1. Requisites of a Civil RICO Claim

The Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act ("RICO") prohibits persons "employed by or associated with any enterprise engaged in. . . interstate . . . commerce, to conduct or participate, directly or indirectly, in the conduct of such enterprise's affairs through a pattern of racketeering activity." 18 U.S.C. § 1962(a) (2012). RICO "defines 'racketeering activity' as the commission of any of several predicate offenses." *Illinois Farmers Ins. Co. v. Mobile Diagnostic Imaging, Inc., Civ. No. 13-2820 (PJS/TNL), 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 114745, 2014 WL 4104789, at 6 (D. Minn. Aug. 19, 2014) (citing 18 U.S.C. § 1961(1)). Mail fraud and wire fraud are predicate offenses. Id. (quoting 18 U.S.C. § 1341 (mail fraud statute), id. § 1343 (wire [*56] fraud statute)). RICO does not encompass all instances of wrongdoing, but "is a unique cause of action that is concerned with eradicating organized, long-term, habitual criminal activity." Crest Constr. II, Inc. v. Doe, 660 F.3d 346, 353 (8th Cir. 2011). RICO provides a civil remedy for any person injured in his business or property by reason of a violation of the law's substantive provisions. See 18 U.S.C. § 1964(c).

To plead a viable RICO claim, a plaintiff must allege: "(1) the conduct, (2) of an enterprise, (3) through a pattern, (4) of racketeering activity." Crest Constr. II, 660 F.3d at 353 (quotation omitted).

A RICO enterprise "'includes any individual, partnership, corporation, association, or other legal entity, and any union or group of individuals associated, in fact, although not a legal entity.'" Id. at 354 (quoting 18 U.S.C. § 1961(4)). "An association-in-fact enterprise must have at least three structural features: a purpose, relationships among those associated with the enterprise, and longevity sufficient to permit these associates to pursue the enterprise's purpose." Boyle v. United States, 556 U.S. 938, 946, 129 S. Ct. 2237, 173 L. Ed. 2d 1265 (2009) (finding that a jury instruction containing these three structural features was correct and adequate). "Under longstanding Eighth Circuit precedent, an alleged RICO enterprise must also have 'an ascertainable structure distinct from the conduct [*57] of a pattern of racketeering.'" *Ill. Farmers, 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 114745, 2014 WL 4104789, at 14 (citing Crest Constr. II, 660 F.3d at 354, quoting Lee, 374 F.3d at 647).

TMT claimed that collectively, UCR, Potillo, U.S. Bank, Tate and vanBrandwijk comprised an association-in-fact enterprise "for the common purpose of overseeing and participating in the sale of U.S. Bank DDA Portfolios." Amended Complaint, ¶ 113. For the reasons described below, the Court has concluded that TMT did not adequately plead a RICO claim or a RICO conspiracy.

a. Person-Enterprise Distinction

TMT did not plead a RICO enterprise distinct from the defendants. The Amended Complaint described Tate, vanBrandwijk, Potillo and UCR as "RICO persons." Amended Complaint, ¶ 112. TMT also named U.S. Bank a "culpable RICO person given that Tate, vanBrandwijk and Hartnack were high-level officers of U.S. Bank," U.S. Bank acted through these individuals, and U.S. Bank acted with knowledge of the criminal conduct and scheme of fraud. Id. The Amended Complaint then defined the RICO enterprise as the "RICO persons" who "associated in fact as a RICO enterprise." Id., ¶ 113. Further, the RICO persons "associated in fact for the common purpose of overseeing and participating in the sale of U.S. Bank DDA Portfolios" and U.S. Bank and these individuals [*58] "associated together to cause U.S. Bank DDA Portfolios to be sold to UCR — and only UCR — so as to enrich all members of the enterprise." Id., ¶¶ 113, 120. Elsewhere in the Amended Complaint, TMT alleged that all of the RICO persons committed the predicate acts and engaged in racketeering activities, reinforcing the concept that the RICO persons and association-in-fact enterprise were identical. Under Kushner, these allegations do not meet the required distinction between RICO persons and the enterprise. Zavala v. Wal-Mart Stores, Inc., 447 F. Supp. 2d 379, 383-84 (D. N.J. 2006) (dismissing RICO claim with prejudice on a Rule 12(b)(6) motion for failure to plead distinction between RICO persons and RICO enterprise and noting that "[t]his pleading failure is not an omission that can be remedied by amendment; rather, it is woven into the fabric of the Second Amended Complaint, and could not be removed without restructuring the entire RICO theory." It was a "serious, fatal problem" to allege that the RICO person and RICO enterprise were the same); *Okaya (U.S.A.), Inc. v. Denne Indus., Inc., Civ. No. 00-1203, 2000 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 20352, 2000 WL 1727785, at 2, 4-5 (N.D. Ill. Nov. 20, 2000) (dismissing civil RICO claims on a Rule 12(b)(6) motion for failure to plead RICO enterprise-person distinction and noting that the complaint stated that the defendants were both RICO persons and the RICO "association in fact" that made up the purported [*59] enterprise).

As a result of TMT's failure to plead a RICO person distinct from the RICO association-in-fact enterprise, its RICO claim fails.

b. RICO Enterprise-Pattern of Racketeering Activity Distinction

Even assuming that TMT had adequately pled the requisite distinction between the RICO association-in-fact enterprise and the RICO persons, its RICO claim fails for the alternative reason that TMT failed to allege a RICO enterprise separate and distinct from the pattern of racketeering activity. A RICO enterprise requires that the common activities of the enterprise extend beyond the minimal association necessary to sustain the pattern of racketeering. Diamonds Plus, Inc. v. Kolber, 960 F.2d 765, 770 (8th Cir. 1992) ("The focus of the inquiry is whether the enterprise encompasses more than what is necessary to commit the predicate RICO offense."). "[A]n enterprise cannot simply be the undertaking of the acts of racketeering, neither can it be the minimal association which surrounds these acts." Stephens, Inc. v. Geldermann, Inc., 962 F.2d 808, 815 (8th Cir. 1992) (citation omitted) (holding that plaintiff insufficiently pled a RICO enterprise because although "each member of th[e] group carried on other legitimate activities, these activities were not in furtherance of the common or shared purpose of the enterprise, and thus, [*60] were not acts of the enterprise"). That each member of a group carries on activities distinct from the pattern of racketeering is insufficient; the group as a whole must have a common link other than the racketeering activity. McDonough v. National Home Ins. Co., 108 F.3d 174, 177 (8th Cir. 1997) (citations omitted) (emphasis added). "Proof the enterprise conducts lawful activity unrelated to the pattern of racketeering will often serve to prove the enterprise is separate from the pattern of racketeering." Diamonds Plus, Inc., 960 F.2d at 770, 770 n. 5 (citations omitted). "In deciding whether an alleged RICO enterprise has an ascertainable structure distinct from the pattern of racketeering activity," the court must "determine if the enterprise would still exist were the predicate acts removed from the equation." Crest Constr. II, 660 F.3d at 354-55 (quoting Handeen v. Lemaire, 112 F.3d 1339, 1352 (8th Cir. 1997)). Here, the predicate acts alleged are the 60-plus examples of mail fraud and wire fraud alleged in the Amended Complaint. Amended Complaint, ¶ 154.

The Amended Complaint stated summarily, and without any factual support, that "the enterprise and its members conducted other business wholly separate and apart from the pattern of racketeering activity." Amended Complaint, ¶ 122. This allegation does not satisfy Rule 8 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. In response to U.S. Bank's motion to dismiss, TMT stated (again, without [*61] any factual support in its Amended Complaint) that the association-in-fact enterprise conducted the commission of the predicate acts, but also "acts necessary to close sales, obtain closing proceeds, and provide post-sale services (e.g. providing bills of sale, U.S. Bank affidavits of correctness/assignment, and records relating to loans sold.)." TMT Mem., p. 17. Not only were these facts not pled, but most critically, even if they had been alleged, these activities would be construed as legitimate business activities of one member of the association-in-fact enterprise — U.S. Bank — but not the association-in-fact enterprise itself, which included Potillo and UCR.

As the Eighth Circuit noted in Crest Constr. II, where "the only common factor that linked" the individually named defendants "and defined them as a distinct group was their direct or indirect participation" in a scheme to defraud the plaintiff, plaintiff had not adequately pled a RICO enterprise. 660 F.3d at 355 (citing Stephens, 962 F.2d at 815-16).

In Stephens, the Eighth Circuit found that while each member of the alleged enterprise also carried on other legitimate activities, these other activities were not in furtherance of the common enterprise and were not, [*62] therefore, acts of the enterprise. Id. The same is true here. The only activities that allegedly brought U.S. Bank, vanBrandwijk, Tate, Potillo and UCR together was the commission of the predicate RICO acts. See, e.g., Amended Complaint, ¶¶ 124-128, 130-132, 147-154. The fact that U.S. Bank, vanBrandwijk and Tate may have carried on legitimate business separate activities from the alleged enterprise is inadequate to establish distinction between the enterprise and the pattern of racketeering. Absent the predicate acts of wire and mail fraud, the association-in-fact enterprise in this case had no structure and it conducted no other activities together as an enterprise-in-fact. For all of these reasons, the Court concludes that the Amended Complaint fails to plead the requisite distinction between the enterprise and the pattern of racketeering distinction. Stephens, 962 F.2d at 816 (noting that absent the predicate acts of wire and mail fraud, the association-in-fact enterprise had no form or structure and if the predicate acts were removed "the alleged association-in-fact enterprise evaporates.").

2. Repleading to Add Drake Tate Enterprises, LLC

Repleading to add Drake Tate Enterprises, LLC, as suggested by TMT, [*63] does not solve the pleading defects in the RICO counts. Letter to Court dated October 19, 2015 from TMT, p. 2. The plea agreement stated that Potillo would pay Tate for information by making payments via wire transfer to the bank account of a company set up by Tate. Id., Ex. A, p. 26. The plea agreement does not identify this company as "Drake Tate Enterprises, LLC," but the Court accepted TMT's representation that this was the case for the purpose of its analysis. Letter to Court dated October 19, 2015, p. 2. TMT has not identified any purpose for this company other than to receive the bribe payments — as the Amended Complaint noted, the address of Drake Tate Enterprises, LLC was Tate's home address and Tate was listed as the statutory agent. Amended Complaint, ¶ 94. Even assuming that the company had some legitimate purpose (although none has been identified), what binds Drake Tate Enterprises, LLC to the already-named RICO defendants are the predicate acts of the RICO scheme, specifically, the wire transfer of the bribe payments from Potillo to Tate, which were routed to the bank account of Drake Tate Enterprises, LLC. Letter to Court dated October 19, 2015 from TMT, Ex. A, p. 26. [*64] Therefore, even if TMT amended its Amended Complaint to add Drake Tate Enterprises, LLC, there would still not be any distinction between the RICO association-in-fact enterprise and the pattern of racketeering activity, because Drake Tate Enterprises, LLC would merely be another member of the association-in-fact enterprise.

3. RICO Statute of Limitations

The Court rejected U.S. Bank's arguments in favor of dismissal based on the four-year statute of limitations. U.S. Bank Mem., pp. 12-13. Civil RICO claims are governed by a four-year statute of limitations. See Association of Commonwealth Claimants v. Moylan, 71 F.3d 1398, 1402 (8th Cir. 1995). The statute of limitations can be tolled if the plaintiff is able to show that there was fraudulent concealment of the violation and that the plaintiff exercised due diligence to discover the claim. Klehr v. A.O. Smith Corp., 521 U.S. 179, 194-95, 117 S. Ct. 1984, 138 L. Ed. 2d 373 (1997). The email from Bugni dated April 11, 2011, on which U.S. Bank relied, was insufficient to show that TMT was aware of Potillo's bribery of Tate more than four years before the Complaint was filed. See Poley Aff., Ex. A. The Amended Complaint alleged that TMT learned that Tate was accepting bribes from UCR after November 23, 2010, and the Complaint was filed on November 7, 2014, within the statute of limitations. All that the Bugni [*65] email showed was that TMT's President Bugni had reported to U.S. Bank that Potillo had contacted Bugni's former boss at IDT Carmel in 2007 "trying to pay him off" so that IDT Carmel would not bid on U.S. Bank DDA Portfolios. The email does not support U.S. Bank's statements that TMT was "aware of the alleged RICO scheme" over three years before the statute of limitations cutoff date. U.S. Bank Mem., p. 12; U.S. Bank Reply, p. 4.[9]

The Court rejects U.S. Bank's argument that TMT's allegation that it had learned in August 2010, three months before the date the 4-year statute of limitations began to run, that UCR was bidding substantially less for U.S. Bank DDA Portfolio than TMT, somehow triggered the running of the statute of limitations. U.S. Bank Mem., p. 13 (citing Amended Complaint, ¶ 24). While it is possible, as U.S. Bank argued, that a reasonable person in TMT's shoes may have questioned why UCR was winning bids based on lower bid amount, that is a far cry from knowing of an alleged RICO injury sufficient to prompt the running of the RICO statute of limitations.

4. One-Year Contractual Statute of Limitations

This Court rejects U.S. Bank's argument that TMT's claims based on the March, 2012 DDA Portfolio purchase agreement were barred by the one-year contractual limitation clause found [*67] in that agreement. U.S. Bank Mem., pp. 13-14. To begin with, the Amended Complaint (or any other claims, for that matter) do not allege a breach of contract related to its bid on the March, 2012 DDA Portfolio. Moreover, TMT asserted that it "had no such claims." TMT's Mem., p. 22. For those reasons, any suggestion by U.S. Bank that the contractual limitations period in the March, 2012, purchase agreement governs any RICO claim by TMT fails.

5. Conspiracy to Violate RICO

Having concluded that TMT failed to state a civil RICO claim against U.S Bank and vanBrandwijk, the Court recommends that Count Two, Conspiracy to Violate RICO (against all defendants except Hartnack), be dismissed against these defendants. See *Jaworski, 2012 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 46938, 2012 WL 1130684, at 3 (noting that although the Eighth Circuit has not directly addressed the issue, "other courts have determined that [a]ny claim under section 1962(d) based on conspiracy to violate the other subsections of section 1962 necessarily must fail if the substantive claims are themselves deficient.") (citation omitted) (collecting cases).

6. Dismissal of the RICO Claims With Prejudice

"Ordinarily dismissal of a [pleading] for failure to comply with Rule 8 should be with leave to amend." Michaelis v. Nebraska State Bar Ass'n., 717 F.2d 437, 438-39 (8th Cir. 1983). Nonetheless, when a complaint is so [*68]

---

[9] Having concluded that the RICO claims were timely (although insufficiently pled), the Court need not address TMT's argument that there was ample evidence to support tolling of the statute of limitations. TMT's Mem., p. 21. However, the Court does note that the case cited by U.S. Bank for the proposition that equitable tolling based on fraudulent concealment had to be pled with particularity in the complaint is distinguishable. U.S. Bank's Reply Mem., p. 4 (citing Summerhill v. Terminix, 637 F.3d 877, 880 (8th Cir. 2011)). In Summerhill, the claims were clearly time-barred and the court determined that it was plaintiff's burden to plead tolling based on fraudulent concealment with particularity. 637 F.3d at 880. Normally, a statute of limitations is an affirmative defense, which it is a defendant's burden to plead and prove. [*66] John R. Sand & Gravel Co. v. United States, 552 U.S. 130, 128 S. Ct. 750, 753, 169 L. Ed. 2d 591 (2008). Therefore, the possible existence of a statute of limitations defense is not ordinarily a ground for dismissal under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6), "unless the complaint itself establishes the defense." Jessie v. Potter, 516 F.3d 709, 715, n.2 (8th Cir. 2008) (citing Varner v. Peterson Farms, 371 F.3d 1011, 1017-18 (8th Cir. 2004)). Here, there is nothing obvious about the facts alleged in the Amended Complaint that brings the RICO claims outside the statute of limitations.

deficient or defective that the court is convinced that its defects cannot be cured through re-pleading, dismissal with prejudice is appropriate. *Sellors v. Obama, Civ. No. 13-2484 (SRN/JSM), 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 51829, 2014 WL 1607747, at 14 (D. Minn. April 15, 2014) (Order overruling objections to Report and Recommendation that recommended dismissal of an amended complaint with prejudice due to incurable pleading defects); McLean v. United States, 566 F.3d 391, 400-401 (4th Cir. 2009) ("to the extent ... that a district court is truly unable to conceive of any set of facts under which a plaintiff would be entitled to relief, the district court would err in designating [a] dismissal to be without prejudice. Courts, including this one, have held that when a complaint is incurable through amendment, dismissal is properly rendered with prejudice and without leave to amend."); McKesson HBOC, Inc. v. New York State Common Ret. Fund, Inc., 339 F.3d 1087, 1096 (9th Cir. 2003) (dismissal with prejudice is appropriate where "deficiencies in [plaintiff's] claims cannot be cured by amendment").

Here, the allegedly offending conduct by U.S. Bank and vanBrandwijk did not amount to a violation of RICO. Consequently, even if TMT could plausibly allege acts constituting fraud by these defendants, it cannot plead, much less show, an enterprise with an ascertainable structure, different from that inherent in a pattern of racketeering activity. Therefore, any attempt to amend [*69] the Amended Complaint to assert a viable RICO claim is futile, and the Court recommends that U.S. Bank's motion to dismiss as to the RICO claim should be granted and the claim be dismissed with prejudice.

B. Antitrust Claim (Count Three Against UCR and U.S. Bank)

TMT alleged that UCR and U.S. Bank violated § 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1. Amended Complaint, ¶¶ 168-172. According to TMT, UCR and U.S. Bank's price fixing scheme was a per se violation of the Sherman Act. Id., ¶¶ 169-170.

"To demonstrate a violation of section 1 of the Sherman Act, a plaintiff must provide proof of an illegal contract, combination, or conspiracy which results in an unreasonable restraint of trade." Double D. Spotting Serv., Inc. v. Supervalu, Inc., 136 F.3d 554, 558 (8th Cir. 1998); Regional Multiple Listing Serv. of Minn. v. Am. Home Realty Network, Inc., 960 F.Supp.2d 958, 979 (D. Minn. 2013) ("To establish a claim under Section 1 of the Sherman Act, a plaintiff must demonstrate (1) that there was a contract, combination, or conspiracy; (2) the agreement unreasonably restrained trade under either a per se rule of illegality or a rule of reason analysis; and (3) the restraint affected interstate commerce."). The United States Supreme Court has repeatedly recognized that by the language of the Sherman Act, "'Congress intended to outlaw only unreasonable restraints.'" Texaco Inc. v. Dagher, 547 U.S. 1, 5, 126 S. Ct. 1276, 164 L. Ed. 2d 1 (2006) (emphasis in original).

A violation of § 1 alone is insufficient [*70] to support a civil lawsuit for restraint of trade. The Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 15, defines the class of persons who may "maintain a private damage action under the antitrust laws." Associated Gen. Contractors of Cal., Inv. v. California State Council of Carpenters, 459 U.S. 519, 529, 103 S. Ct. 897, 74 L. Ed. 2d 723 (1983). Pursuant to § 15(a), "any person who shall be injured in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws may sue therefor in any district court of the United States." In Brunswick Corp. v. Pueblo Bowl—O—Mat, Inc., the Supreme Court held that § 15(a) creates an additional element for a civil claim based upon an alleged antitrust violation. A plaintiff must prove more than injury causally linked to an illegal presence in the market. Instead, a plaintiff must prove antitrust injury — that is, an "injury of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent and that flows from that which makes defendants' acts unlawful. The injury should reflect the anticompetitive effect either of the violation or of anticompetitive acts made possible by the violation." 429 U.S. 477, 489, 97 S. Ct. 690, 50 L. Ed. 2d 701 (1977); see also Cargill, Inc. v. Monfort of Colo., Inc., 479 U.S. 104, 109-110, 107 S. Ct. 484, 93 L. Ed. 2d 427 (1986) (summarizing Brunswick Corp.). "Even an act of pure malice by one business competitor against another does not, without more, state a claim under the federal antitrust laws." Brooke Group, Ltd. v. Brown & Williamson Tobacco Corp., 509 U.S. 209, 225, 113 S. Ct. 2578, 125 L. Ed. 2d 168 (1993); see also Associated Gen. Contractors of Cal. 459 U.S. at 537 (noting that an "allegation of improper motive, although [*71] it may support a plaintiff's damages under § 4 [of the Clayton Act] is not a panacea that will enable any complaint to withstand a motion to dismiss.").

Most antitrust claims are analyzed under the "rule of reason," where the fact finder determines whether the practice complained of is an unreasonable restraint on competition based on a number of factors, such as specific information about the relevant business, its condition before and after the restraint was imposed, and the restraint's history, nature, and effect. State Oil v. Khan, 522 U.S. 3, 10, 118 S. Ct. 275, 139 L. Ed. 2d 199 (1997) (citations omitted). Under the rule of reason analysis, "[t]he true test of legality is whether the restraint imposed is such as merely regulates and perhaps thereby promotes competition or whether it is such as may suppress or even destroy competition. To determine that question the court must ordinarily consider the facts peculiar to the business to which the restraint is applied; its condition before and after the restraint was imposed; the nature of the restraint and its effect, actual or probable." Continental T.V., Inc. v. GTE Sylvania Inc., 433 U.S. 36, 49 n.15, 97 S. Ct. 2549, 53 L. Ed. 2d 568 (1977) (citation omitted). The rule of reason is the presumptive or default standard and requires the antitrust plaintiff to "demonstrate that a particular contract or combination is [*72] in fact unreasonable and anticompetitive." Dagher, 547 U.S. at 5. To state a claim under the rule of reason, a plaintiff must allege concerted action intended to harm or unreasonably restrain competition and that actually injures competition. Five Smiths, Inc. v. National Football Players Ass'n., 788 F. Supp. 1042, 1051 (D. Minn. 1992). A plaintiff must further allege a relevant market that has been adversely affected by the challenged restraint. Id. (citation omitted). The failure to adequately plead a relevant market is grounds for dismissal of a rule of reason claim. Id. (citations omitted).

TMT did not plead an antitrust violation under the rule of reason. Instead, TMT alleged that "UCR and U.S. Bank contracted, engaged in concerted action and conspired together in a manner which unreasonably restrained trade and restricted competition, all with an effect on interstate commerce" by conspiring to fix the price at which DDA Portfolios would be sold to UCR, fix UCR's bid prices and refuse to deal with TMT, and conspiring to ensure that "no parties such as TMT" could successfully bid on DDA Portfolios. Amended Complaint, ¶ 169. According to TMT, this conduct constituted a per se violation of the Sherman Act. Id., ¶ 170; TMT's Mem., p. 41.

"Some types of restraints . . . have such predictable and [*73] pernicious anticompetitive effect and such limited potential for procompetitive benefits, that they are deemed unlawful per se." State Oil, 522 U.S. at 10 (citation omitted); Regional Multiple Listing Serv. of Minn., 960 F. Supp. 2d at 983 ("Certain kinds of agreements, however, are considered unlawful per se because they are of a type that is so often harmful and so rarely justified that proof of anti-competitiveness is not required.") (quotation omitted). Such restraints "'are conclusively presumed to be unreasonable and therefore illegal without elaborate inquiry as to the precise harm they have caused or the business excuse for their use.'" Northwest Wholesale Stationers, Inc. v. Pacific Stationery & Printing Co., 472 U.S. 284, 289, 105 S. Ct. 2613, 86 L. Ed. 2d 202 (1985) (quoting Northern Pac. Ry. Co. v. United States, 356 U.S. 1, 5, 78 S. Ct. 514, 2 L. Ed. 2d 545 (1958)). Per se treatment is proper only "[o]nce experience with a particular kind of restraint enables the [c]ourt to predict with confidence that the rule of reason will condemn it." Arizona v. Maricopa Cnty. Med. Soc'y, 457 U.S. 332, 344, 102 S. Ct. 2466, 73 L. Ed. 2d 48 (1982). "[A] 'departure from the rule-of-reason standard must be based upon demonstrable economic effect rather than . . . upon formalistic line drawing.'" Leegin Creative Leather Prods., Inc. v. PSKS, Inc., 551 U.S. 877, 887, 127 S. Ct. 2705, 168 L. Ed. 2d 623 (2007) (second alteration in original) (quoting Continental T.V., Inc., 433 U.S. at 58-59). To justify a per se violation, a challenged practice must have "manifestly anticompetitive" effects and lack "any redeeming virtue." Id. at 886. (internal quotation marks omitted). The Supreme Court has "'expressed reluctance to adopt per se rules where the economic impact of [*74] certain practices is not immediately obvious.'" Dagher, 547 U.S. at 5 (quotation marks and ellipses omitted) (quoting State Oil, 522 U.S. at 10). Practices that have been found to be per se illegal include price-fixing, division of markets, group boycotts, and tying arrangements.[10] Double D. Spotting, 136 F.3d at 558 (citations omitted).

To determine whether an alleged restraint is unreasonable, the court must decide initially whether it is per se illegal or whether it must be analyzed under the rule of reason. Paladin Assocs., Inc. v. Mont. Power Co., 328 F.3d 1145, 1155 (9th Cir. 2003). The purpose of both analyses is to "form a judgment about the competitive significance of the restraint; it is not to decide whether a policy favoring competition is in the public interest, or in the interest of the members of an industry. Subject to exceptions defined by statute, that policy decision has been made by the Congress." National Soc. of Professional Engineers v. United States, 435 U.S. 679, 692, 697, 98 S. Ct. 1355, 55 L. Bd. of Regents of Univ. of Okla., 468 U.S. 85, 104, 104 S. Ct. 2948, 82 L. Ed. 2d 70 (1984). In other words, regardless of whether a plaintiff [*75] pleads an antitrust claim as a per se violation, or a violation under the rule of reason, the court must make a threshold determine that the alleged injury falls within the scope of the Sherman Act.

The Supreme Court had described a horizontal restraint of trade as a "naked restraint [ ] of trade with no purpose except stifling of competition." United States v. Topco Assocs., 405 U.S. 596, 608, 92 S. Ct. 1126, 31 L. Ed. 2d 515 (1972). The classic horizontal restraint involves an agreement between competitors at the same level of the market structure to allocate territories in order to minimize competition. Id.; Double D. Spotting, 136 F.3d at 558 ("Horizontal restraints of trade result when combinations of traders at one level of the market structure agree to exclude direct competitors from the same level of the market.") (citation omitted). Horizontal restraints are per se illegal. Topco Assocs., 405 U.S. at 608 (citations omitted). A plaintiff alleging a horizontal restraint must "at least define the market and its participants." Double D. Spotting, 136 F.3d at 559. "If an alleged restraint falls within the category of restraints subject to per se analysis, a plaintiff need not prove its anticompetitive effects." Flegel v. Christian Hosp., Ne.-Nw., 4 F.3d 682, 686 (8th Cir. 1993).

Vertical restraints of trade result from agreements among "combinations of persons at different levels of the market structure, e.g., manufacturers and distributors." [*76] Topco Assocs., 405 U.S. at 608. Vertical minimum price restrictions are generally per se antitrust violations. Double D. Spotting, 136 F.3d at 559 (citation omitted).

In support of its contention that it properly pled a per se violation of the Sherman Act, TMT argued that U.S. Bank and UCR were engaged in a horizontal restraint of trade because UCR, through its bribery and bank fraud scheme cut TMT out of the market and also cut out all other potential UCR competitors. TMT's Mem., p. 31. TMT contended that UCR and U.S. Bank's relationship was only facially vertical. Id., p. 30. In fact, UCR controlled U.S. Bank's actions through bribery and "allocated its product ... between competing customers in a given horizontal market and effectively destroyed competition between them." Id., p. 34. TMT relied heavily on American Motor Inns, Inc. v. Holiday Inns, Inc., 521 F.2d 1230 (3rd Cir. 1975), in support of its contention that although facially vertical, the relationship between U.S. Bank and URC was actually horizontal. TMT submitted that pursuant to American Motor Inns, where a party to a facially vertical relationship (there, Holiday Inns) allowed its franchisees to have veto power over granting new franchises to competitors, that was sufficient to infer a per se illegal horizontal restraint of trade. Id., p. 33. TMT argued that like American Motor Inns, U.S. [*77] Bank's decisions regarding sale of the DDA Portfolios was not independent, but was controlled by UCR and "allocated its product (DDA Portfolios) between competing customers in a given horizontal market and effectively eliminated all competition between them." Id.

After carefully reviewing the allegations in the Amended Complaint, as well as TMT's unsolicited letter brief and attachments, the Court recommends dismissal of Count Three with prejudice. The Court reached this determination for the following reasons.

First, as U.S. Bank argued, the Amended Complaint fails to state a claim under the Sherman Act because it alleged only an injury to TMT, not injury to competition in general. U.S. Bank Mem., p. 24. Without an injury to competition, there is no antitrust violation. Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, 320, 82 S. Ct. 1502, 8 L. Ed. 2d 510 (1962) (antitrust laws are "concern[ed] with the protection of competition, not competitors."); Brunswick Corp., 429 U.S. at 489 (noting that an antitrust plaintiff must prove antitrust injury). In an antitrust action, the plaintiff must show an "injury of the type that the antitrust laws were intended to prevent and that flows from that which makes defendants' acts unlawful." In re Canadian Import Antitrust Litig., 470 F.3d 785, 791 (8th Cir. 2006) (quoting Brunswick Corp., 429 U.S. at 489). The Eighth Circuit has held that "antitrust injury is a threshold issue that [*78] plaintiffs must establish in order to have standing[11] to sue under the antitrust laws." Fischer v. NWA, Inc., 883 F.2d 594, 597 n. 5 (8th Cir. 1989); accord Midwest Commc'ns, Inc. v. Minn. Twins, Inc., 779 F.2d 444, 449 (8th Cir. 1985), cert denied, 476 U.S. 1163, 106 S. Ct. 2289, 90 L. Ed. 2d 730 (1986) ("[A]ntitrust standing requirements go beyond injury in fact; the court must also determine whether the plaintiff, even if injured, is a proper party to bring the action."). Whether or not a plaintiff has suffered an antitrust injury may be dispositive. Midwest Commc'ns, Inc., 779 F.2d at 450 ("[I]f there is no showing of injury, or if the injury alleged is not an 'antitrust injury,' the plaintiff does not have a claim cognizable under the antitrust laws.").

In a vague and conclusory [*80] fashion, the Amended Complaint stated that the scheme involved "a multitude of victims including third-party debt purchasers and purchasers of U.S. Bank debt;" the conduct complained of "assure[d] that no parties such as TMT" would be able to bid successfully on the DDA Portfolios; and UCR and U.S. Bank worked together in a way that "restricted competition" and that the Sherman Act violations by UCR and U.S. Bank "had the effect of decreasing competition." Id., ¶¶ 98, 169, 170. But TMT never named any of these supposed competitors. To the contrary, elsewhere in the Amended Complaint, TMT alleged that its bid on the April, 2011 DDA Portfolio was the only one U.S. Bank received, (Amended Complaint, ¶ 49), indicating that there were no competitors, at least for that DDA Portfolio. Additionally, TMT failed to reconcile its allegations that U.S. Bank reneged on its agreement to enter into a five-year forward flow agreement at a set price with TMT, (Id., ¶ 221), with the supposed anticompetitive effects of U.S. Bank's relationship with UCR. In other words, on the one hand, TMT asserted that UCR and U.S. Bank "unreasonably restricted trade" by virtue of their exclusive dealings, but then asserted [*81] that it has been injured because of U.S. Bank's refusal to enter into a similarly exclusive relationship through its own five-year forward flow agreement, albeit one not based on criminal activity. These facts undermine TMT's assertions regarding competitive injury. TMT responded that "the difference" was that it did not employ illegal means to obtain an exclusive relationship U.S. Bank. TMT's Mem., p. 27. Yet, as noted by U.S. Bank, the test for a violation of the antitrust law is whether otherwise legal conduct becomes illegal because it has anticompetitive effects. U.S. Bank Mem., p. 18, n.14; see also, In re Cardizem CD Antitrust Litig., 332 F.3d 896, 914, n.19 (6th Cir. 2003) (describing as a "basic premise" of antitrust law that "in many instances, an otherwise legal action — e.g. setting a price — becomes illegal if it is pursuant to an agreement with a competitor.").

Ultimately, the allegations in the Amended Complaint do not meet the minimal pleading requirement for a violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act. See TheMLSonline.com, Inc., 840 F. Supp. 2d at 1182 (dismissing antitrust claims with prejudice because plaintiff only alleged that he was the victim of a conspiracy aimed at driving him out of [11] Some courts distinguish between the "injury to competition" requirement of a substantive Sherman Act claim and the requirements for standing to assert an antitrust claim. TheMLSonline.com, Inc. v. Regional Multiple Listing Serv. of Minn., 840 F. Supp. 2d 1174, 1180 (D. Minn. 2012) (citing Angelico v. Lehigh Valley Hosp., Inc., 184 F.3d 268, 275 n.2 (3d Cir. 1999) ("The District Court erred by incorporating the issue of anticompetitive market effect into its standing analysis, confusing antitrust injury with an element of a claim under section 1 of the Sherman Act."); Doctor's Hosp. of Jefferson, Inc. v. Southeast Med. Alliance, Inc., 123 F.3d 301, 305 (5th Cir.1997) (distinguishing between "antitrust injury and injury to competition, the latter of which is often a component of substantive liability.")). As the court noted in TheMLSonline.com. Inc.: "[t]he two concepts are closely related, however, and the Eighth Circuit and decisions from this District largely conflate [*79] the two and incorporate an injury-to-competition requirement into the analysis of antitrust standing. E.g., Midwest Commc'ns, 779 F.2d at 450 (noting in its discussion of antitrust injury for purposes of determining standing that "Congress enacted the antitrust laws to protect competition, not competitors"); Fair Isaac Corp. v. Experian Info. Solutions Inc., 645 F.Supp.2d 734, 751 (D. Minn. 2009) ("[M]erely showing that [defendant] targeted and caused injury to [plaintiff] is insufficient to show an antitrust injury necessary to establish antitrust standing.")." 840 F. Supp. 2d at 1180. In Minnesota Made Hockey, Inc. v. Minnesota Hockey, Inc., 789 F. Supp. 2d 1133, 1142-43 (8th Cir. 2011) the Eighth Circuit distinguished between antitrust standing and antitrust injury, but then focused its standing analysis on whether plaintiff had adequately pled that it was the target of anticompetitive activity.

Neither party framed the issue of anticompetitive injury as a question of antitrust standing. Of course, the Court is entitled to "'examine standing sua sponte where standing has erroneously been assumed . . . .'" Meuir v. Greene County Jail Employees, 487 F.3d 1115, 1119 (8th Cir. 2007) (quoting Adarand Const., Inc. v. Mineta, 534 U.S. 103, 109, 122 S. Ct. 511, 151 L. Ed. 2d 489 (2001)). Even assuming that TMT did not need to show competitive injury to establish antitrust standing, it was required to do so to assert a substantive claim under the Sherman Act. TheMLSonline.com, 840 F. Supp. 2d at 1180. Therefore, the Court has focused its attention on TMT's failure to adequately plead a substantive Sherman Act claim.

(citing Richter Concrete Corp. v. Oct. 31, 2008) (dismissing [*83] antitrust claims because "the complaint set forth allegations supportive of an injury to plaintiff's business, but antitrust injury must represent an adverse effect on competition as a whole in the relevant market rather than to plaintiff.")

Second, TMT did not allege that UCR and U.S. Bank were at the same level of market structure — a requirement for a claim of a horizontal restraint of trade. Double D. Spotting, 136 F.3d at 558. Although TMT argued in briefing that this was so, (TMT's Mem., p. 37), that argument was unsupported by any facts and it was not pled in the Amended Complaint.

Third, as U.S. Bank argued, (U.S. Bank Reply, p. 6), TMT never pled the existence of a horizontal agreement between competitors, a requirement for pleading a per se illegal horizontal restraint of trade or illegal bid rigging scheme. Business Elecs. v. Sharp Elecs. Corp., 485 U.S. 717, 730, n.4, 108 S. Ct. 1515, 99 L. Ed. 2d 808 (1988) ("[A] restraint is horizontal not because it has horizontal effects, but because it is the product of a horizontal agreement."); Nitro Distrib., Inc. v. Alticor, Inc., 565 F.3d 417, 424 (8th Cir. 2009) (affirming district court's grant of summary judgment based in part on the fact that appellants failed to show the existence of an agreement between competitors at the same level of the market to restrain competition); United States v. Mobile Materials, Inc., 881 F.2d 866, 869 (10th Cir. 1989), cert. denied, 493 U.S. 1043, 110 S. Ct. 837, 107 L. Ed. 2d 833 (1990) (defining "bid rigging" as: "any agreement [*84] between competitors pursuant to which contract offers are to be submitted [to] or withheld from a third party constitutes bid rigging per se violative of 15 U.S.C., section 1.") (emphasis added).

Apparently in recognition of its failure to plead the existence of a horizontal agreement between competitors, TMT argued that U.S. Bank "was in the same business" as TMT and UCR and was, as a result, their competitor. TMT's Mem., p. 37. Not only were these alleged facts never pled, they are contrary to the facts that were alleged — that U.S. Bank is a national bank that sold its charged off DDA debt to third party debt purchasers, TMT is in the business of purchasing debt from vendors, and UCR is a limited liability company that purchases debt. Amended Complaint, ¶¶ 1, 2, 6, 18. Notwithstanding TMT's efforts to shore up its "horizontal restraint" argument by transforming U.S. Bank into a competitor of third party debt purchasers, it is obvious that the relationship between U.S. Bank, TMT and UCR was one of seller and purchaser, not competitor.

Significantly, the information reflected in Potillo's plea agreement supports this Court's conclusion that even accepting all of the allegations in the Amended Complaint [*85] as true, they do not describe a horizontal restraint of trade within the meaning of 15 U.S.C. § 1. See Letter from TMT to Magistrate Judge dated October 19, 2015, Ex. A. Potillo's plea stated that Tate (described in the plea as "W.T.") would provide information to Potillo concerning the highest bids for the DDA Portfolios and the lowest minimum bid price U.S. Bank would accept. Id., ECF p. 25. Based on that information, Potillo would submit bids that were slightly higher than the next highest bid and also above the minimum bids deemed acceptable to U.S. Bank. Id. Potillo paid Tate for providing this information. Id.

Though TMT describes defendants' activities as "price-fixing" and "bid-rigging," (TMT's Mem., pp. 27, 28, 39; Amended Complaint, ¶ 169), two practices that are considered per se violations of § 1, the conduct alleged in the Amended Complaint is neither price fixing nor bid rigging. Price fixing generally describes a "combination formed for the purpose of and with the effect of raising, depressing, fixing or stabilizing the price of a commodity." Eureka Urethane, Inc. v. PBA, Inc., 746 F. Supp. 915, 932 (8th Cir. 1990) (citation omitted). Bid-rigging has a more specialized meaning in antitrust law and is analogous to bid rotation. United States v. Heffernan, 43 F.3d 1144, 1150 (7th Cir. 1994) (noting that the "vast majority" [*86] of cases to consider the term "bid rigging" have treated it as synonymous with bid rotation). Bid rigging or bid rotation occurs when two or more competitors agree which of them should be the low bidder for a particular job, and the others submit higher bids to make sure the designated bidder wins. Id. at 1146. See also United States v. Reicher, 983 F.2d 168, 170 (10th Cir. 1992) (defining bid rigging in the context of the Sherman Act as "any agreement between competitors to which contract offers are to be submitted to or withheld from a third party.") (citation omitted).

As to price fixing, TMT alleged that Potillo and UCR conspired with Tate and U.S. Bank to obtain "inside information" to purchase the DDA Portfolios. Amended Complaint, ¶¶ 100, 125. This conduct is not price-fixing because there is no allegation that two competitors jointly set prices for their respective goods. United States v. Socony—Vacuum Oil Co., 310 U.S. 150, 221, 60 S. Ct. 811, 84 L. Ed. 1129 (1940) (describing horizontal price fixing as competitors who make an arrangement that interferes with the setting of prices by free market forces.). Nor was it vertical price fixing, which occurs when a supplier attempts to fix prices charged by those who resell its products. Kingray, Inc. v. NBA, Inc., 188 F. Supp. 2d 1177, 1188 (S.D. Cal. 2002) (citations omitted).

This alleged conduct is also not bid-rigging since there is no [*87] allegation that UCR and TMT (again, the only two competitors named in the Amended Complaint) agreed in advance of submitting their bids for the DDA Portfolios that one of them would offer a higher bid in order for the other to win the contracts. See Heffernan, 43 F.3d at 1146; Reicher, 983 F.2d at 170.

Because the Amended Complaint failed to allege a per se violation of § 1 and is otherwise devoid of any allegation that U.S. Bank's conduct restrained trade in a way prohibited by the antitrust laws, it fails to state an antitrust claim and Count Three should be dismissed.

TMT submitted that it should be allowed to replead its antitrust claim under a rule of reason. TMT's Mem., p. 41. TMT correctly noted that generally leave to amend a complaint should be granted in the absence of undue delay or bad faith and when an amendment would not be futile or unfairly prejudice a party. Id. (citations omitted).

To the extent TMT is actually moving for leave to amend, its request is not properly before the Court. See Gomez v. Wells Fargo Bank, N.A., 676 F.3d 655, 665 (8th Cir. 2012) ("'A district court does not abuse its discretion in failing to invite an amended complaint when plaintiff has not moved to amend and submitted a proposed amended pleading.'") (quoting Drobnak v.. Andersen Corp., 561 F.3d 778, 787 (8th Cir. 2009)); accord Misischia v. St. John's Mercy Health Sys., 457 F.3d 800, 805 (8th Cir. 2006) (district court did not abuse discretion [*88] in denying leave to amend where plaintiff requested leave "with a one line request in his brief opposing defendants' motion to dismiss," filed "no motion for leave to amend [,] and did not explain the substance of his proposed amendment"). However, even if this request to amend were properly before the Court, the Court nonetheless recommends dismissal of Count Three with prejudice because any proposed amendment by TMT is futile.

The Court is mindful that "courts are hesitant to dismiss antitrust actions before the parties have had an opportunity for discovery, because proof of illegal conduct lies largely in the hands of the alleged antitrust conspirators." Double D. Spotting, 136 F.3d at 560. That said, a court may dismiss claims with prejudice if repleading would be futile. *Sellors, 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 51829, 2014 WL 1607747, at 14; Bernstein v. Extendicare Health Servs., Inc., 607 F. Supp. 2d 1027, 1032 (D. Minn. 2009). The Court has considered that TMT has proposed amending its Amended Complaint to allege an antitrust violation under the "rule of reason," (TMT's Mem., p. 41), and has stated that it was prepared to amend to allege the facts described in Potillo's plea agreement. Letter to Magistrate Judge from TMT dated October 19, 2015, p. 2. However, even if these amendments were allowed, the conduct TMT intends to plead still does not fall within the scope [*89] of § 1. Indeed, after amending once, briefing its opposition to U.S. Bank's motion to dismiss and submitting an unsolicited post-hearing letter brief, TMT has still not adequately alleged or presented evidence that it could allege the injury that is at the heart of antitrust law — an injury to competition, not individual competitors. See TheMLSonline.com, Inc., 840 F. Supp. 2d at 1182 (dismissing antitrust claims with prejudice where plaintiff failed to allege competitive injury). On this basis, the Court has concludes that any repleading is futile and, therefore, recommends dismissal of Count Three with prejudice. See Five Smiths, 788 F. Supp. at 1051-1053 (dismissing antitrust claims with prejudice and without leave to amend because plaintiffs alleged only injury to themselves, not to competition, therefore, any rule of reason claim failed) (citing Garshman v. Universal Resources Holding, Inc., 824 F.2d 223, 230-231 (3d Cir. 1987) (affirming district court's dismissal of Sherman Act claim noting that "what was still missing" under a rule of reason analysis was "any allegation of an adverse effect on competition."); Car Carriers, Inc. v. Ford Motor Co., 745 F.2d 1101, 1107 (7th Cir. 1984) (stating that a rule of reason claim requires a plaintiff to "allege, not only an injury to himself, but an injury to the market as well"); Caremark Homecare Inc. v. New England Critical Care, Inc., 700 F. Supp. 1033, 1036 (D. Minn. 1988) (rule of reason claim requires plaintiff to plead "anticompetitive effect on the market as a whole."); [*90] Schwartz v. Jamesway Corp., 660 F.Supp. 138, 141 (E.D. N.Y. 1987) (dismissing antitrust claim pled under the rule of reason because plaintiff failed to allege competitive harm and noting "[p]laintiff merely states that he has been injured in his business. Such pleading does not state an antitrust claim because it does not allege an injury to competition among several competitors.") (citation omitted)).

C. State Law Claims

The Court concluded that TMT's federal claims based on RICO and the Sherman Act fail as a matter of law. These were the claims on which the subject matter jurisdiction of the Federal District Court was premised. Amended Complaint, ¶ 9. TMT invoked jurisdiction over the state law claims under the supplemental jurisdiction statute, 28 U.S.C. § 1367, which provides jurisdiction over state law claims forming part of the same case or controversy as the federal claims. Hartnack is a Minnesota resident and TMT is a Minnesota Limited Liability Corporation. Amended Complaint, ¶¶ 1, 5. Therefore, the Court cannot maintain the case in federal court based on diversity.[12] "When the court dismisses federal claims, and there is no basis for diversity jurisdiction, the court no longer has original jurisdiction over the action and must consider whether to exercise supplemental [*91] jurisdiction over the state-law claims." *Walsh Bishop Assocs., Inc. v. O'Brien, Civ. No. 11-2673 (DSD/AJB), 2012 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 25219, 2012 WL 669069, at 8 (D. Minn. Feb. 28, 2012) (citing 28 U.S.C. § 1367(c)(3); Johnson v. City of Shorewood, 360 F.3d 810, 819 (8th Cir. 2004)). "In the usual case in which all federal-law claims are eliminated before trial, the balance of factors to be considered under the pendent jurisdiction doctrine [judicial economy, convenience, fairness and comity -] will point toward declining to exercise jurisdiction over the remaining state-law claims." Id. (quoting Johnson, 360 F.3d at 819, quoting Carnegie—Mellon Univ. v. Cohill, 484 U.S. 343, 350 n. 7, 108 S. Ct. 614, 98 L. Ed. 2d 720 (1988)). Based on these factors, the Court finds that supplemental jurisdiction over TMT's state law claims against U.S. Bank (Counts Four (Violation of Minn. Stat. Chapter 325F), Five (Respondeat Superior), Eight (Breach of Contract) and Nine (Unjust Enrichment)), along with Counts Six (Intentional Misrepresentation) and Seven (Negligent Misrepresentation) against U.S. Bank and vanBranswijk and Hartnack, should not be undertaken. Therefore, the Court recommends that all state claims be dismissed without prejudice.

D. Dismissal of Federal Claims Against Remaining Defendants

The Court acknowledges that Tate, UCR and Potillo, who are named in Counts One (Civil RICO) and Two (Conspiracy [*92] to Violate RICO), and UCR, which is named in Count Three (Violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act), did not move for dismissal. In fact, neither Tate nor UCR have made an appearance in this case. Nonetheless, the Court recommends dismissal of these claims against these defendants with prejudice because, as set forth above, the claims fail as a matter of law. See, e.g. Silverton v. Department of Treasury, 644 F.2d 1341, [12] At the motion hearing, U.S. Bank's counsel conceded that if the federal claims were dismissed, jurisdiction would be lacking over the state law claims.

1345 (9th Cir. 1981) ("A District Court may properly on its own motion dismiss an action as to defendants who have not moved to dismiss where such defendants are in a position similar to that of moving defendants or where claims against such defendants are integrally related.") (citations omitted); *Silva v. Federal Nat'l Mortg. Corp., Civ. No. 15-1514, 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 171283, 2015 WL 9460559, at 5, n.2 (D. N.J. Dec. 23, 2015) (granting moving defendants' motion to dismiss and noting that "[a] court dismissing claims against moving defendants may sua sponte dismiss identical claims against non-moving defendants.") (citation omitted); Rose v. Arkansas Valley Envtl. & Util. Auth., 562 F. Supp. 1180, 1213, n.11 (W.D. Mo. 1983) ("While only Rausch has moved for dismissal on this basis, it is clear that the same ruling would inevitably apply to each of the defendants. In these circumstances a court is empowered to act, sua sponte, to grant dismissal as to all defendants.") (emphasis in original) (citation omitted).

IV. RECOMMENDATION

For the reasons set forth above, it [*93] is recommended that U.S. Bank's Motion to Dismiss [Docket No. 51] be GRANTED in part and DENIED in part as follows:

1. Counts One (Civil RICO), Two (Conspiracy to Violate RICO), Three (Violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act) should be dismissed with prejudice as to all defendants.

2. Counts Four (Violation of Minnesota Statute Chapter 325F), Five (Respondeat Superior), Count Six (Intentional Misrepresentation (Fraud)), Seven (Negligent Misrepresentation), Eight (Breach of Contract) and Nine (Unjust Enrichment) should be dismissed without prejudice.

3. Count Ten (Negligent Supervision) should be dismissed with prejudice as to U.S. Bank.

HN1[] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

Fed. R. Civ. P. 8(a) requires a plaintiff to plead each claim with sufficient specificity to give the defendant fair notice of what the claim is and the grounds upon which it rests. A complaint which falls short of the Rule 8(a) standard may be dismissed if it fails to state a claim upon which relief can be granted. Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6). Dismissal under Rule 12(b)(6) is appropriate only where the complaint lacks a cognizable legal theory or sufficient facts to support a cognizable legal theory. Moreover, the factual allegations must be enough to raise a right to relief above the speculative level such that the claim is plausible on its face.

When deciding whether to grant a motion to dismiss, the court generally may not consider any material beyond the pleadings. However, the court may consider material submitted as part of the complaint or relied upon in the complaint, and may also consider material subject to judicial notice. In addition, the court must generally accept as true all well-pleaded factual allegations. The court must also construe the alleged facts in the light most favorable to the plaintiff. However, courts are not bound to accept as true a legal conclusion couched as a factual allegation.

Even though a portion of the California Homeowner's Bill of Rights begins with "upon request from a borrower who requests a foreclosure prevention alternative," courts have been reluctant to interpret this phrase as requiring a homeowner to specifically request a single point of contact. Courts do, however, interpret the statute as requiring the borrower to request a foreclosure prevention alternative.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Contract Formation > Consideration > Promissory Estoppel

HN7[] Consideration, Promissory Estoppel

A claim for promissory estoppel requires the establishment of the following four elements: (1) a promise that is clear and unambiguous in its terms; (2) reliance by the party to whom the promise is made; (3) the reliance must be reasonable and foreseeable; and (4) the party asserting the estoppel must be injured by his or her reliance.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Contract Formation > Consideration > Promissory Estoppel

HN8[] Consideration, Promissory Estoppel

A promise that is vague, general, or of indeterminate application is not enforceable through a claim for promissory estoppel. Where an alleged promise is conditional or subject to further negotiations, the clear and unambiguous requirement for promissory estoppel is not met.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Contract Formation > Consideration > Promissory Estoppel

HN9[] Consideration, Promissory Estoppel

Promissory estoppel only binds a promissor when he should reasonably expect a substantial change of position, either by act or forbearance, in reliance on his promise, if injustice can be avoided only by its enforcement.

Contracts Law > Remedies > Equitable Relief > Quantum Meruit

Contracts Law > Remedies > Restitution

HN10[] Equitable Relief, Quantum Meruit

In California, a standalone cause of action for "unjust enrichment," when synonymous with "restitution," does not exist. This is because unjust enrichment and restitution simply describe the theory underlying a claim that a defendant has been unjustly conferred a benefit through mistake, fraud, coercion, or request. The return of that benefit is the remedy that is typically sought in a quasi-contract cause of action. When a plaintiff asserts unjust enrichment, a court may construe the cause of action as a quasi-contract claim seeking restitution. Importantly, however, a claim for quasi-contract cannot lie where there exists between the parties a valid express contract covering the same subject matter.

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Equitable Accountings

HN11[] Remedies, Equitable Accountings

An accounting is generally an equitable remedy. In rare cases, an accounting can be a cause of action when a defendant has a fiduciary duty to a plaintiff which requires an accounting, and some balance is due to the plaintiff that can only be ascertained by a judicial accounting. Thus, two elements must be pled: (1) the relationship between a plaintiff and defendant, such as a fiduciary relationship, calls for an accounting, and (2) the defendant owes a balance to the plaintiff that is too complicated to calculate without an accounting from the court. An action for accounting is not available if the amount of debt can be made certain by calculation.

Under 28 U.S.C.S. § 2201, any court of the United States, upon the filing of an appropriate pleading, may declare the rights and other legal relations of any interested party seeking such declaration, whether or not further relief is or could be sought. However, such relief is limited by the express terms of the statute to cases "of actual controversy. 28 U.S.C.S. § 2201(a). Consequently, there must be a real controversy between the parties for a plaintiff to assert a claim for declaratory judgment.

Real Property Law > Title Quality > Adverse Claim Actions > Quiet Title Actions

HN13[] Adverse Claim Actions, Quiet Title Actions

A claim to quiet title must describe five elements: (1) a legal description of the property and its street address or common designation, (2) the title of the plaintiff and the basis of the title, (3) the adverse claims to the title of the plaintiff, (4) the date as of which the determination is sought and (5) a prayer for the determination of the title of the plaintiff against the adverse claims. Cal. Civ. Proc. Code § 761.020.

Real Property Law > Title Quality > Adverse Claim Actions > Quiet Title Actions

HN14[] Adverse Claim Actions, Quiet Title Actions

A basic requirement of an action to quiet title is an allegation that plaintiffs are the rightful owners of the property, i.e., that they have satisfied their obligations under the Deed of Trust. Indeed, the cloud upon title persists until the debt is paid, and the borrower cannot clear his title without satisfying his debt. Thus, under California law, a borrower may not assert an action to quiet title against a mortgagee without first paying the outstanding debt on the property.

"Unlawful" practices are forbidden by law, be it civil or criminal, federal, state, or municipal, statutory, regulatory, or court-made. "Unfair" practices constitute conduct that threatens an incipient violation of an antitrust law, or violates the policy or spirit of one of those laws because its effects are comparable to or the same as a violation of the law, or otherwise significantly threatens or harms competition. The "fraudulent" prong under the UCL requires a showing of actual or potential deception to some members of the public, or harm to the public interest. The UCL borrows violations of other laws and treats them as unfair business practices under the unlawful prong, and also makes clear that a practice may be deemed unfair even if not specifically proscribed by some other law.

ORDER GRANTING DEFENDANTS' MOTION TO DISMISS

Re: Dkt. No. 7

In this action, Plaintiff Ralph Neal ("Plaintiff") brings suit against Select Portfolio Servicing, Inc. ("SPS") and Bank of America, N.A. (collectively "Defendants") for claims related to a home loan he obtained from Washington Mutual Bank ("WAMU") in 2007. Presently before the court is Defendants' motion to dismiss the Complaint pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(b)(6). Dkt. No. 7. Plaintiff opposes the motion. Dkt. No. 15. Having carefully reviewed the relevant papers submitted by the parties, the Court GRANTS Defendants' Motion to Dismiss for the reasons explained below.

I. FACTUAL AND PROCEDURAL BACKGROUND

On May 25, 2007, Plaintiff obtained a home loan in the amount of $1,150,000 secured by a note and deed of trust ("DOT") encumbering his residence located at 1588 Calco Creek Drive in San Jose, California (the "Property"). Dkt. No. 8, at Ex. A.[1] The DOT was recorded with the Santa Clara County Recorder's Office [*2] on May 17, 2006, and identifies WAMU as lender and beneficiary on the loan, Plaintiff as its trustor, and California Reconveyance Company ("CRC") as the trustee. Id. at 6-7.

[1] Defendants' request for judicial notice is GRANTED. See Fed. R. Evid. 201(b) (the court "may judicially notice a fact that is not subject to reasonable dispute because it . . . can be accurately and readily determined from sources whose accuracy cannot reasonably be questioned"); see also Reyn's Pasta Bella, LLC v. Visa USA, Inc., 442 F.3d 741, 746 n.6 (9th Cir. 2006) (the court "may take judicial notice of court filings and other matters of public record").

On November 4, 2010[2], JP Morgan Chase Bank ("Chase"), the successor-in-interest to WAMU, recorded an "Assignment of Deed of Trust" which purportedly transferred its interest to Bank of America. Id. at Ex. B. The Assignment identified Bank of America as the successor by merger to LaSalle Bank, which previously served as a trustee for WAMU Mortgage Pass-Through Certificate Series 2007-OA6. Id. The pertinent portion of the Assignment states:

> FOR VALUE RECEIVED, the undersigned hereby grants, assigns and transfers to Bank of America, National Association, successor by merger to LaSalle Bank NA as trustee for WaMu Mortgage Pass-Through Certificates Series 2007-OA6 Trust [*3] all beneficial interest under that certain Deed of Trust dated 05-17-2007 . . . .
> DATE: November 03, 2010

Id.

Plaintiff initiated this action in Santa Clara County Superior Court on June 1, 2015. He alleges that SPS now claims to be the current servicer of his loan. Dkt. No. 2 at ¶ 31. He further alleges that Defendants made "transfers" and "assignments" of the loan such that "it is now unknown and doubtful who is the current lender/beneficiary/assignee with legal authority and standing regarding the mortgage" on the Property. Id. at ¶ 12. Plaintiff also contends "upon information and belief" that Defendants used deceptive business models "with the purpose of immediately selling pools of loans to the securities market and with the fraudulent intent to foreclose rather than modifying or helping homeowners" which he asserts is "contrary to federal and state efforts to assist homeowners." Id. at ¶ 13. According to Plaintiff, Defendants are "engaged in the securitization of loans whereby they have been buying and selling mostly toxic loans as Trustees of a Securitized Trust with pooling and service agreements." [*4] Id. at ¶ 15.

Specific to his own loan, Plaintiff alleges Chase did not have authority to execute an assignment of the DOT to Bank of America because there was "no prior chain of assignment, recorded or unrecorded," to Chase from the original lender, WAMU. Id. at ¶ 28. Plaintiff also asserts that without an effective assignment, Defendants lack the requisite standing to initiate a foreclosure or execute a loan modification. Id. at ¶ 33. In addition, Plaintiff alleges his loan was assigned to a securitized trust after the trust's closing date, rendering the assignment void. Id. at ¶ 36. Furthermore, Plaintiff asserts that Defendants violated the California Homeowner's Bill of Rights ("CHBOR") by failing to provide a single point of contact ("SPOC") for a loan modification application. Id. at ¶ 54.

Procedurally, SPS removed this case to federal court on July 10, 2015. Defendants filed the instant motion on July 17, 2015, to which Plaintiff filed an opposition on September 14, 2015. Defendants filed a reply to the opposition on September 24, 2015.

II. LEGAL STANDARD

HN1[ ] Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 8(a) requires a plaintiff to plead each claim with sufficient specificity to "give the defendant fair notice of what the . . . claim is and the [*5] grounds upon which it rests." Bell Atl. Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 555, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007) (internal quotations omitted). A complaint which falls short of the Rule 8(a) standard may be dismissed if it fails to state a claim upon which relief can be granted. Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6). "Dismissal under Rule 12(b)(6) is appropriate only where the complaint lacks a cognizable legal theory or sufficient facts to support a cognizable legal theory." Mendiondo v. Centinela Hosp. Med. Ctr., 521 F.3d 1097, 1104 (9th Cir. 2008). Moreover, the factual allegations "must be enough to raise a right to relief above the speculative level" such that the claim "is plausible on its face." Twombly, 550 U.S. at 556-57.

[2] On November 3, 2010 a Notice of Default was also recorded by CRC. Dkt. No. 8, at Ex. C.

HN2[] When deciding whether to grant a motion to dismiss, the court generally "may not consider any material beyond the pleadings." Hal Roach Studios, Inc. v. Richard Feiner & Co., 896 F.2d 1542, 1555 n. 19 (9th Cir. 1990). However, the court may consider material submitted as part of the complaint or relied upon in the complaint, and may also consider material subject to judicial notice. See Lee v. City of Los Angeles, 250 F.3d 668, 688-69 (9th Cir. 2001).

In addition, the court must generally accept as true all "well-pleaded factual allegations." Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 664, 129 S. Ct. 1937, 173 L. Ed. 2d 868 (2009). The court must also construe the alleged facts in the light most favorable to the plaintiff. Love v. United States, 915 F.2d 1242, 1245 (9th Cir. 1988). However, "courts are not bound to accept as true a legal conclusion couched as a factual allegation." Iqbal, 556 U.S. at 678.

III. DISCUSSION

Plaintiff asserts the following claims: (1) Wrongful Assignment of Deed of Trust; (2) Lack of [*6] Legal Standing; (3) violation of the CHBOR; (4) Promissory Estoppel; (5) Unjust Enrichment; (6) Accounting; (7) Declaratory Relief; (8) Quiet Title; (9) violation of the Unfair Competition Law ("UCL"), California Business and Professions Code § 17200; and (10) violations of Consumer Financial Protection Act ("CFPA"). Defendants move to dismiss all ten claims, each of which is discussed below.

A. Wrongful Assignment of Deed of Trust and Lack of Legal Standing

In the first claim entitled "Wrongful Assignment of Deed of Trust," Plaintiff alleges that Chase "had no legal authority" to execute an assignment of the DOT to Bank of America because there was no "chain of assignment" from WAMU, his original lender, to Chase. Plaintiff further alleges that Defendants improperly securitized the DOT by assigning it to a trust after the closing date required by the trust's governing documents, commonly referred to as a Pooling and Servicing Agreement ("PSA"). Plaintiff makes similar allegations in his second claim entitled "Lack of Legal Standing."

In response to these claims, Defendants argue it is actually Plaintiff who lacks standing to challenge either the validity of the assignment or any irregularities in the securitization process. The court [*7] agrees. As to the assignment of the DOT from WAMU to Chase, both state and federal courts have held that HN3[] "third-party borrowers lack standing to assert problems in the assignment of the loan." Flores v. GMAC Mortg., LLC, No. C-12-794-SI, 2013 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 68606, 2013 WL 2049388, at *3 (N.D. Cal. May 14, 2013); Moran v. GMAC Mortg., LLC, No. 13-CV-04981-LHK, 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 84411, 2014 WL 3853833, at *4 (N.D. Cal. Aug. 5, 2014); Simmons v. Aurora Bank, FSB, No. 13-CV-00482 HRL, 2013 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 142917, 2013 WL 5508136, at *2 (N.D. Cal. Sept. 30, 2013) ("Even if there were some defect in the assignment of the deed of trust, that assignment would not have changed plaintiff's payment obligations."); Fontenot v. Wells Fargo Bank, N.A., 198 Cal. App. 4th 256, 272, 129 Cal. Rptr. 3d 467 (2011) ("If MERS . . . lacked the authority to make the assignment, the true victim was not plaintiff but the original lender, which would have suffered the unauthorized loss of a $1 million promissory note"). This so because an alleged defect in the assignment chain does not invalidate or change the terms of the underlying loan. See Fontenot, 198 Cal. App. 4th at 272 (observing, in addressing a similar claim, that "an assignment merely substituted one creditor for another, without changing [plaintiff's] obligations under the note"). This means that Plaintiff remains obligated to make loan payments as required by his agreement with WAMU irrespective of the validity or invalidity of the DOT assignment. Indeed, as another court has observed, the "true victim" in [*8] this scenario is not Plaintiff, but the noteholder, because it "would have suffered the unauthorized loss of a $1 million promissory note." Id. Therefore, Plaintiff cannot assert a claim for "Wrongful Assignment of Deed of Trust."

The same is true of Plaintiff's challenge to any aspect of the securitization process as completed in violation of the trust's PSA. HN4[] Under California law, "someone who is not a party to [a] contract has no standing to enforce it." Jones v. Aetna Cas. & Sur. Co., 26 Cal. App. 4th 1717, 1722, 33 Cal. Rptr. 2d 291 (1994). To that end, the California Court of Appeal held in Jenkins v. JP Morgan Chase Bank, N.A., 216 Cal. App. 4th 497, 515, 156 Cal. Rptr. 3d 912 (2013), that:

> As an unrelated third party to the alleged securitization, and any other subsequent transfers of the beneficial interest under the promissory note, [plaintiff] lacks standing to enforce any agreements, including the investment trust's pooling servicing agreement, relating to such transactions . . . even if any subsequent transfers of the note were invalid, [plaintiff] is not the victim of such invalid transfers because [plaintiff's] obligations under the note remained unchanged. Instead, the true victim may be an entity or individual who believes it has a present beneficial interest in the promissory note and may suffer the unauthorized loss of their interest in the note. [*9]

Similarly, this court has dismissed as legally implausible analogous theories based on defects in the securitization process. See, e.g., *Sepehry-Fard v. Aurora Bank FSB, No. 5:12-cv-00871 EJD, 2013 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 12048, 2013 WL 597788, at 4 (N.D. Cal. Jan. 29, 2013) (rejecting theories of liability based on securitization of the note and violation of the PSA).

Plaintiff relies on Glaski v. Bank of America, N.A., 218 Cal. App. 4th 1079, 160 Cal. Rptr. 3d 449 (2013), to support his standing to challenge the securitization of his loan. In Glaski, the California Court of Appeal found that a plaintiff sufficiently stated a claim for wrongful foreclosure by alleging the DOT was transferred to a securitized trust after the pool's closing date. 218 Cal. App. 4th at 1097-98. This court has previously observed, however, that Glaski represents a distinct minority view regarding a borrower's standing to enforce or assert claims based on alleged violations of a trust's PSA, and this district has uniformly rejected Glaski as persuasive authority. See *Miller v. JP Morgan Chase Bank, N.A., No. 5:13-CV-03192-EJD, 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 110038, 2014 WL 3921361, at 4 (N.D. Cal. August 8, 2014) ("The California Supreme Court has not ruled on whether borrowers may challenge the mortgage securitization process so as to reconcile Glaski with other California authority, but unpublished Court of Appeal opinions have characterized Glaski as the minority view."); see also Khan v. ReconTrust Co., 81 F. Supp. 3d 867, 873 (N.D. Cal. 2014) ("The court [*10] . . . concludes that plaintiffs lack standing to challenge noncompliance with a PSA in securitization unless they are parties to the PSA or third party beneficiaries of the PSA."); see also *Dahnken v. Wells Fargo Bank, N.A., No. C-13-2838-PJH, 2013 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 160686, 2013 WL 5979356, at 2 (N.D. Cal. Nov. 8, 2013) ("[T]he court adopts the majority position of courts within this district, which is that plaintiffs lack standing to challenge noncompliance with a PSA in securitization unless they are parties to the PSA or third party beneficiaries of the PSA") (citations omitted); see also *McGough v. Wells Fargo Bank, N.A., No. C-12-0050-TEH, 2012 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 84327, 2012 WL 2277931, at 4 (N.D. Cal. June 18, 2012) ("To the extent that Plaintiff bases her claims on the theory that Wells Fargo allegedly failed to comply with the terms of the PSA, the court finds that she lacks standing to do so because she is neither a party to, nor a third party beneficiary of, that agreement"); see also *Almutarreb v. Bank of New York Trust Co., N.A., No. C-12-3061-EMC, 2012 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 137202, 2012 WL 4371410, at 2 (N.D. Cal. Sept. 24, 2012) (holding that plaintiffs "lack standing to challenge the validity of the securitization process, including whether the loan transfer occurred outside the temporal bounds prescribed by the PSA"). So has the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals. Davies v. Deutsche Bank Nat'l Trust Co. (In re Davies), 565 Fed. Appx. 630, 633 (9th Cir. 2014) ("[Plaintiff] cannot challenge violations of the pooling and [*11] servicing agreement . . . . the weight of authority holds that debtors in [plaintiff's] shoes - who are not parties to the pooling and servicing agreements - cannot challenge them . . . .")

For these reasons, the court finds as a matter of law that Plaintiff lacks the requisite standing to challenge irregularities in either the assignment or the securitization of his home loan. Accordingly, the first and second claims will be dismissed without leave to amend since allowing for further amendment would be futile under these circumstances. Miller v. Rykoff-Sexton, 845 F. 2d 209, 214 (9th Cir. 1988) ("HN5[] A motion for leave to amend may be denied if it appears to be futile or legally insufficient.").

B. California Homeowner's Bill of Rights

In the third claim for violation of CHBOR, Plaintiff alleges "there were various document irregularities" within the purview of the statute. He further contends that Defendants denied him a "rightful opportunity" for a loan modification and instead chose to short sell or takeover the Property. Plaintiff also alleges that Defendants failed to provide him with a SPOC, which he argues is a requirement under the statute

Defendants argue that Plaintiff has not stated a claim under the CHBOR because a facial reading of the statute requires [*12] a homeowner to initiate a request for a SPOC. Defendants further assert that even if Plaintiff did specifically request a SPOC, the provision of such a contact is nonetheless dependent on a "request for a foreclosure prevention alternative" from the homeowner. According to Defendants, Plaintiff failed to allege such a request in his complaint.

The relevant portion of the CHBOR is contained in California Civil Code § 2923.7(a). It reads as follows:

> Upon request from a borrower who requests a foreclosure prevention alternative, the mortgage servicer shall promptly establish a single point of contact and provide to the borrower one or more direct means of communication with the single point of contact

HN6[] Even though this portion of the CHBOR begins with "upon request from a borrower who requests a foreclosure prevention alternative," courts have been reluctant to interpret this phrase as requiring a homeowner to specifically request a SPOC. See *McFarland v. JP Morgan Chase Bank, No. 13-CV-01838-JGB, 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 118240, 2014 WL 4119399, at 11 (C.D. Cal. Aug. 21, 2014) (citing Penermon v. Wells Fargo Bank, N.A., 47 F. Supp. 3d 982, 1000 (N.D. Cal. 2014)). Courts do, however, interpret the statute as requiring the borrower to request a foreclosure prevention alternative. Penermon, 47 F. Supp. 3d at 1000 ("A plain reading of the statute requires Wells Fargo to assign a SPOC when a borrower requests a foreclosure [*13] prevention alternative"). A request for a loan modification qualifies as a foreclosure prevention alternative. Id. ("Enrico contacted Wells Fargo to request a loan modification, which is a request for 'a foreclosure prevention alternative'"); see also *Tapia, 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 102837, 2015 WL 4650066, at 3 ("Plaintiff alleges that he attempted to modify his mortgage with Defendant several times . . . . because Plaintiff alleges he requested a foreclosure prevention alternative and was not appointed a contact person, this series of facts is sufficient to both give notice to the Defendant and to plausibly suggest entitlement to relief").

Here, it is not clear from Plaintiff's allegations whether and when he requested a "foreclosure prevention alternative," such that the court can determine whether he was then wrongfully denied a SPOC. Although he argues in opposition that he had been "on many occasions . . . trying to seek modification of the loan even from the time when Chase was handling the servicing," this allegation is not contained in the Complaint. Even if it was, the phrase "trying to seek" is ambiguous; trying to request something is not the same as actually requesting it.

Based on the current allegations, Plaintiff has not stated [*14] a claim under the CHBOR. The third claim will be dismissed with leave to amend.

C. Promissory Estoppel

In support of a claim for promissory estoppel, Plaintiff alleges SPS agreed to modify his loan and that he relied on that promise to his detriment. Defendants respond to this claim by pointing out that Plaintiff failed to allege a "clear and unambiguous promise" or justifiable reliance on such a promise.

HN7[] A claim for promissory estoppel requires the establishment of the following four elements: (1) a promise that is clear and unambiguous in its terms; (2) reliance by the party to whom the promise is made; (3) the reliance must be reasonable and foreseeable; and (4) the party asserting the estoppel must be injured by his or her reliance." *Cockrell v. Wells Fargo Bank, N.A., No. 13-cv-02072-SC, 2013 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 103050, 2013 WL 3830048, at 1 (N.D. Cal. July 23, 2013); see also Boon Rawd Trading Int'l Co., Ltd. v. Paleewong Trading Co., Inc., 688 F. Supp. 2d 940, 953 (N.D. Cal. 2010).

Plaintiff has failed to state a claim for promissory estoppel. As to the first element, Plaintiff does not disclose anything beyond a terse and conclusory statement that an unidentified individual at SPS agreed to modify his loan, which he simultaneously concedes did not contain any specific terms. Such an allegation does not constitute a "clear and ambiguous" promise. See Aguilar v. Int'l Longshoremen's Union Local #10, 966 F.2d 443, 446 (9th Cir. 1992) [*15] (HN8[] "[A] promise that is 'vague, general or of indeterminate application' is not enforceable through a claim for promissory estoppel); *Aguinaldo v. Ocwen Loan Servicing, LLC, No. 5:12-CV-01393-EJD, 2012 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 125400, 2012 WL 3835080, at 4 (N.D. Cal. Sep. 4, 2012) ("Where an alleged promise is conditional or subject to further negotiations, the 'clear and unambiguous' requirement for promissory estoppel is not met."). The case Plaintiff relies on for this claim, Garcia v. World Savings, FSB, 183 Cal. App. 4th 1031, 107 Cal. Rptr. 3d 683 (2010), does not hold otherwise.

In addition, the current allegations do not establish the second and third elements, which together require justifiable reliance. HN9[] Promissory estoppel only "binds a promissor 'when he should reasonably expect a substantial change of position, either by act or forbearance, in reliance on his promise, if injustice can be avoided only by its enforcement.'" Jones v. Wachovia Bank, 230 Cal. App. 4th 935, 944, 179 Cal. Rptr. 3d 21 (2014) (quoting Garcia, 183 Cal. App. 4th at 1041). Outside of a conclusion, Plaintiff did not plead what he did or did not do in reliance on SPS's alleges promise to modify his loan.

Due to these deficiencies, the third claim for promissory estoppel will be dismissed with leave to amend.

D. Unjust Enrichment

Within the claim for unjust enrichment, Plaintiff alleges that Defendants materially altered the total amount of his loan by [*16] charging exorbitant fees and hidden charges. Defendants argue that unjust enrichment is not a valid cause of action.

HN10[] In California, a standalone cause of action for "unjust enrichment," when synonymous with "restitution," does not exist. Astiana v. Hain Celestial Grp., Inc., 783 F. 3d 753, 762 (9th Cir. 2015). This is because unjust enrichment and restitution simply describe the theory underlying a claim that a defendant has been unjustly conferred a benefit "through mistake, fraud, coercion, or request." Id. The return of that benefit is the remedy that is typically "sought in a quasi-contract cause of action." Id.

When a plaintiff asserts unjust enrichment, a court may "construe the cause of action as a quasi-contract claim seeking restitution." Id.; see Jogani v. Super. Ct., 165 Cal. App. 4th 901, 911, 81 Cal. Rptr. 3d 503 (2008) ("As Jogani concedes, however, unjust enrichment is not a cause of action. Rather, it is a general principle underlying various doctrines and remedies, including quasi-contract."). Importantly, however, a claim for quasi-contract "cannot lie where there exists between the parties a valid express contract covering the same subject matter." Lance Camper Mfg. Corp. v. Republic Indemnity Co., 44 Cal. App. 4th 194, 203, 51 Cal. Rptr. 2d 622 (1996).

Here, Plaintiff's allegations reveal that this claim is rooted in the same subject matter covered by an express contract, namely the DOT he executed with his original [*17] lender. Plaintiff cannot, on the one hand, acknowledge this written contract and, on the other, maintain a claim for quasi-contract based on terms governed by that document. Id. (holding that, to maintain a claim for quasi-contract, the plaintiff "must allege that the express contract is void or was rescinded in order to proceed"). The fifth claim for unjust enrichment will therefore be dismissed with leave to amend.

E. Accounting

HN11[] An accounting is generally an equitable remedy. Pantoja v. Countrywide Home Loans, Inc., 640 F. Supp. 2d 1177, 1187 (N.D. Cal. 2009). In rare cases, an accounting can be a cause of action when a defendant has a fiduciary duty to a plaintiff which requires an accounting, and some balance is due to the plaintiff that can only be ascertained by a judicial accounting. Id. at 1191. Thus, two elements must be pled: "(1) the relationship between a plaintiff and defendant, such as a fiduciary relationship, calls for an accounting, and (2) the defendant owes a balance to the plaintiff that is too complicated to calculate without an accounting from the Court." *Ford v. Lehman Bros. Bank, FSB, No. C 12-00842 CRB, 2012 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 85600, 2012 WL 2343898, at 14 (N.D. Cal. June 20, 2012) (citing Teselle v. McLoughlin, 173 Cal. App. 4th 156, 179, 92 Cal. Rptr. 3d 696 (2009)). "An action for accounting is not available if the amount of debt can be made certain by calculation." Id.

Plaintiff's allegations fall far short from pleading a viable accounting claim for several [*18] reasons. First, Plaintiff admits there is no fiduciary relationship between himself and any Defendant, and despite his representation to the contrary, nothing in Arbuckle v. Clifford F. Reid, Inc., 118 Cal. App. 272, 4 P.2d 978 (1931), excuses that element. Second, Plaintiff has not plausibly alleged why anything about his loan is so complicated such that only a judicial accounting can sort it out. Vague allusion to unspecified "charges and fees" and reference to the monthly loan payment is not enough. Third, the validity of the DOT assignment is irrelevant to an accounting claim.

Due to these deficiencies, the sixth claim for accounting will be dismissed with leave to amend.

F. Declaratory Relief

HN12[] Under 28 U.S.C. § 2201, "any court of the United States, upon the filing of an appropriate pleading, may declare the rights and other legal relations of any interested party seeking such declaration, whether or not further relief is or could be sought." However, such relief is limited by the express terms of the statute to cases "of actual controversy." 28 U.S.C. 2201(a). Consequently, there must be a real controversy between the parties for a plaintiff to assert a claim for declaratory judgment. See Principal Life Ins. Co. v. Robinson, 394 F.3d 665, 669 (9th Cir. 2005) ("[W]e have long held that the district court must first inquire whether there is an actual case or [*19] controversy within its jurisdiction.").

Plaintiff has not cited to facts which raise an actual controversy between himself and any defendant. It appears this claim is based on a portion of the PSA entitled "Article II - Assumption of Liabilities." But as has been explained above, Plaintiff is not a party to the PSA and has no standing to either enforce or challenge it. Accordingly, he cannot base a claim for declaratory relief on the terms of that document. This claim will be dismissed with leave to amend.

G. Quiet Title

HN13[] A claim to quiet title must describe five elements: "(1) a legal description of the property and its street address or common designation, (2) the title of the plaintiff and the basis of the title, (3) the adverse claims to the title of the plaintiff, (4) the date as of which the determination is sought and (5) a prayer for the determination of the title of the plaintiff against the adverse claims." Janolkar v. Bank of Am., N.A., No. 5:12-cv-03693 EJD, 2012 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 174756, 2012 WL 6115629, at *3 (N.D. Cal. Dec. 10, 2012) (citing Cal. Civ. Proc. Code § 761.020).

Plaintiff's quiet title claim is particularly deficient on the second element because the allegations do not plausibly establish a basis for Plaintiff's entitlement to the Property. "HN14[] A basic requirement of an action to [*20] quiet title is an allegation that plaintiffs 'are the rightful owners of the property, i.e., that they have satisfied their obligations under the Deed of Trust.'" Santos v. Countrywide Home Loans, No. Civ. 2:09-02642, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 103453, 2009 WL 3756337, at *4 (E.D. Cal. Nov.6, 2009) (quoting Kelley v. Mortg. Elec. Reg. Sys., Inc., 642 F. Supp. 2d 1048, 1057 (N.D. Cal. 2009)). Indeed, "[t]he cloud upon title persists until the debt is paid," and the borrower "cannot clear his title without satisfying his debt." Aguilar v. Bocci, 39 Cal. App. 3d 475, 477-78, 114 Cal. Rptr. 91 (1974). Thus, "[u]nder California law, a borrower may not assert an action to quiet title against a mortgagee without first paying the outstanding debt on the property." Williams v. Bank of America Nat'l Assoc., No. 15-CV-00792-LHK, 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 148337, 2015 WL 6602403, at *7 (N.D. Cal. Oct. 30, 2015).

Here, Plaintiff suggests a "legal and equitable interest" based on his position as trustor to the DOT. But the terms of the DOT also state that Plaintiff is obligated to make loan payments, and Plaintiff has not alleged the ability to satisfy the debt in order to quiet title. To the extent Plaintiff contends that an alleged void assignment relieves him of the contractual payment obligation, the court disagrees for reasons already explained. See Simmons, 2013 U.S.

*Dist. LEXIS 142917, 2013 WL 5508136, at 2. The cases cited by Plaintiff, all of which are factually distinguishable because they discuss foreclosure sales, do not compel another conclusion.

Since Plaintiff has not described [*21] a plausible basis for ownership of the Property, the claim for quiet title will be dismissed with leave to amend.

H. Violation of the CFPA

In the Complaint, Plaintiff alleges "Defendants are in clear violation of the Consumer Financial Protection Act of 2010." However, HN15[] there is no private right of action under the CFPA. *Nguyen v. Ridgewood Sav. Bank, No. 14-CV-1058-MKB, 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 64301, 2015 WL 2354308, at 11 (E.D.N.Y. May 15, 2015) ("Plaintiffs provide no statutory basis, and the Court can find none, for finding a private right of action under these provisions of the statute, which outline duties, authorities and enforcement powers . . . ."); see *Johnson v. J.P. Morgan Chase Nat'l Corp. Servs., Inc., No. 13-CV-678-MOC-DSC, 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 122552, 2014 WL 4384023, at 5 (W.D.N.C. Aug. 5, 2014) ("[T]here is no private right of action under the CFPA."). This claim will be dismissed without leave to amend because allowing a further amendment would be futile. Miller, 845 F. 2d at 214.

I. Violation of the UCL

HN16[] The UCL proscribes three varieties of competition: "acts or practices which are unlawful, or unfair, or fraudulent." Khoury v. Maly's of California, Inc., 14 Cal. App. 4th 612, 618-19, 17 Cal. Rptr. 2d 708 (1993). "Unlawful" practices are "forbidden by law, be it civil or criminal, federal, state, or municipal, statutory, regulatory, or court-made." Saunders v. Super. Ct., 27 Cal. App. 4th 832, 838, 33 Cal. Rptr. 2d 438 (1999). "Unfair" practices constitute "conduct that threatens an incipient violation of an antitrust law, or violates [*22] the policy or spirit of one of those laws because its effects are comparable to or the same as a violation of the law, or otherwise significantly threatens or harms competition." Cal-Tech Commc'ns, Inc. v. L.A. Cellular Tel. Co., 20 Cal. 4th 163, 187, 83 Cal. Rptr. 2d 548, 973 P.2d 527 (1999). The "fraudulent" prong under the UCL requires a showing of actual or potential deception to some members of the public, or harm to the public interest. See id. at 180; see also McKell v. Wash. Mut., Inc., 142 Cal. App. 4th 1457, 49 Cal. Rptr. 3d 227 (2006). The UCL 'borrows' violations of other laws and treats them as unfair business practices under the unlawful prong, and also "makes clear that a practice may be deemed unfair even if not specifically proscribed by some other law." Cal-Tech, 20 Cal. 4th at 180.

Plaintiff has not pled a plausible UCL claim. The claim fails to the extent it is based on any of his other dismissed claims. See *Franczak v. Suntrust Mortg. Inc., No. 5:12-cv-01453 EJD, 2013 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 126977, 2013 WL 4764327, at * (N.D. Cal. Sept. 5, 2013)*. In addition, neither the conclusory allegation that Defendants violated the UCL by "engag[ing] in deceptive business practices with respect to loan servicing" and "related foreclosure activities," nor the list of general practices which follow that allegation, are sufficient to satisfy the applicable pleading standard. See Ashcroft, 556 U.S. at 678 (holding that HN17[] a complaint containing "naked assertions devoid of further factual enhancement" [*23] will not suffice). The UCL claim will therefore be dismissed with leave to amend.

IV. CONCLUSION

For the reasons stated above, the Court GRANTS Defendants' Motion to Dismiss. The claims for "Wrongful Assignment of Deed of Trust" (Claim 1), "Lack of Legal Standing" (Claim 2), and Violation of the Consumer Financial Protection Act (Claim 10) are each DISMISSED WITHOUT LEAVE TO AMEND. All other claims are DISMISSED WITH LEAVE TO AMEND.

Any amended complaint must be filed on or before January 26, 2016, and must be consistent with the discussion above. Plaintiff is advised that, although leave to amend certain claims has been permitted, he may not add new claims or new parties to this action without first obtaining Defendants' consent or leave of court pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 15.

In addition, Plaintiff is advised that the court may dismiss this action without further notice for failure to prosecute under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 41(b) if an amended complaint is not filed by the deadline designated herein.

The court declines to set a case management schedule at this time given the dismissal of all claims.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

ORDER GRANTING PLAINTIFF'S MOTION TO DISMISS COUNTERCLAIMS, DISMISSING COUNTERCLAIMS, GRANTING PLAINTIFF'S MOTION TO STRIKE JAPANESE ANTITRUST DEFENSE, STRIKING JAPANESE ANTITRUST DEFENSE, DENYING WITHOUT PREJUDICE DEFENDANT'S MOTION FOR PARTIAL JUDGMENT ON THE PLEADINGS, GRANTING PLAINTIFF'S MOTION TO QUASH NON-PARTY SUBPOENAS, AND SCHEDULING RULE 16(b) SCHEDULING CONFERENCE

Plaintiff Hemlock Semiconductor ("Hemlock") and Defendant Kyocera are significant participants [*2] in the global solar energy industry. Their immediate dispute arises from a series of contracts for the sale of quantities of industrial-grade polycrystalline silicon by Hemlock to Kyocera. Following changes in global solar market conditions, Kyocera sought to excuse its performance under a force majeure provision in the parties' contracts. In response, Hemlock sought adequate assurances that Kyocera would perform its obligations under the agreements. When Hemlock concluded that Kyocera had not provided adequate assurances that it would perform its contractual commitment, it initiated this suit.

Hemlock filed its initial complaint on April 1, 2015, and filed an amended complaint on April 29, 2015. ECF No. 4. Now before the Court are three motions filed by Hemlock on August 3, 2015: (1) Motion to Dismiss Defendant Kyocera Corporation's Counterclaims, ECF No. 21; (2) Motion to Strike Defendant Kyocera Japanese Antitrust Defense, ECF No. 22; and (3) Motion to Quash Non-Party Subpoenas Issued by Defendant Kyocera Corporation, ECF No. 24. Hemlock's motion to dismiss and motion to strike will be granted. Hemlock's motion to quash non-party subpoenas will be provisionally granted.

Also before [*3] the Court are two motions from Kyocera. ECF Nos. 38 and 45. Kyocera's motion for partial judgment on the pleadings will be denied without prejudice, and Kyocera's motion to compel discovery will be addressed at the Rule 16(b) conference.

I.

Hemlock, Plaintiff in this action, is a Michigan corporation involved in the manufacture and sale of polycrystalline silicon ("polysilicon") and photovoltaic solar cells and modules. ECF No. 4 at ¶¶ 1, 3, 7. The majority of the common stock of Hemlock is owned by Dow Corning Corporation. Shin-Etsu Handotai Co. Ltd. owns a significant minority interest in Hemlock. See Joint Venture Partners, HSCPOLY, http://www.hscpoly.com/content/hsc_comp/ownership.aspx . Shin-Etsu is described as "the largest chemical company in Japan." See Top 100 Global Innovators, THOMAS REUTERS, top100innovators.stateofinnovation.thomsonreuters.com/content/shin-etsu-chemical . Kyocera, Defendant in this action, is a Japanese corporation that describes itself as "one of the world's largest vertically-integrated producers and suppliers of solar energy panels." ECF No. 4 at ¶ 8.

A.

In considering Hemlock's motion to dismiss, the Court accepts the facts in a light most favorable to the nonmovant, Kyocera. See Lambert v. Hartman, 517 F.3d 433, 439 (6th Cir. 2008). Beginning in 2005, in the face of [*4] a worldwide polysilicon shortage, Hemlock and Kyocera entered into four long-term polysilicon supply contracts. The first Long Term Supply Agreement ("Agreement I") is effective from August 30, 2005 to December 31, 2015. The second Long Term Supply Agreement ("Agreement II") is effective from July 21, 2006 to December 31, 2018. The third Long Term Supply Agreement ("Agreement III") is effective from July 18, 2007 to December 31, 2019. Finally, the fourth Long Term Supply Agreement ("Agreement IV") is effective from November 13, 2008 to December 31, 2020. Am. Compl. at ¶¶ 12-13. The agreements require Kyocera to make large initial payments to assist Hemlock's expansion of its existing polysilicon production facilities in the United States.

After the parties entered into the agreements, the global solar industry was affected by Chinese government intervention. Specifically, the Chinese government provided subsidies to Chinese solar-based companies and facilitated large-scale "dumping" of Chinese solar panels into the global market in order to increase Chinese market share in the solar industry. In response, in 2012 the United States government imposed anti-subsidy and anti-dumping import [*5] tariffs of 24-36 percent on Chinese solar components. These state actions caused the prices of both polysilicon and solar panels to drop precipitously.

In response to the falling market prices, the parties agreed to short-term contract modifications in 2011 and 2012 that lowered the gross price and the advance payment for those years. These modifications did not affect any other contract terms or future pricing schedules. While the short-term price amendments came to an end, the Chinese market saturation and resulting trade war did not. From mid-2014 to early 2015, Kyocera proposed additional price modifications, all of which Hemlock rejected.

B.

After failing to reach a modification agreement, Kyocera sent notice to Hemlock in February 2015 that it was exercising a contractually bargained-for right to invoke the force majeure provision of Agreement IV. Hemlock refused to recognize Kyocera's invocation of any force majeure rights, contending that the force majeure provision in Agreement IV did not excuse Kyocera from performance because of the changing solar-market conditions. Consequently, on February 13, 2015 Kyocera filed suit in Michigan state Court seeking a declaration that its [*6] contractual performance could be excused by Agreement IV's force majeure clause.

On June 16, 2015, the Michigan State trial court granted Hemlock's motion for summary disposition, finding that the change in market conditions did not implicate Agreement IV's force majeure clause. On December 3, 2015, the Michigan Court of Appeals affirmed, explaining that Kyocera had assumed the market risks that gave rise to the alleged liability and that "the plain language of the force majeure clause at issue does not permit relief to plaintiff on the grounds that the market for polysilicon has shifted, regardless of the cause of that shift." *Kyocera Corp. v. Hemlock Semiconductor, 15-025786-CK, 2015 Mich. App. LEXIS 2249, [WL] 2 (Mich. Ct. App. Dec. 3, 2015), ECF No. 58 Ex. A.

C.

On February 26, 2015 Hemlock sent Kyocera a demand for adequate assurances that it would perform under Agreements I-III pursuant to MCLA § 440.2609. Compl. ¶ 28. Kyocera sent Hemlock a response on March 26, 2015, arguing that Kyocera had no obligation to provide written assurances to Hemlock and that MCLA § 440.2609 did not apply to the supply agreements. Id. at ¶ 29. Hemlock then initiated the instant suit on April 1, 2015 alleging that Kyocera had failed to provide Hemlock with adequate [*7] assurances that it would make purchases under the supply agreements in 2015. Am. Compl. ¶ 28. Two days later, on April 3, 2015, Kyocera filed a complaint against Hemlock in the Civil Division of Tokyo District Court in Japan. The Tokyo complaint alleges that Hemlock violated Japanese antitrust law by abusing a superior position of bargaining power in entering into the supply agreements. That case remains pending.

On July 7, 2015 Kyocera filed an answer to Hemlock's amended complaint, listing twenty-five affirmative defenses and seven counterclaims. ECF No. 9. Hemlock responded on August 3, 2015 by filing a motion to dismiss Kyocera's counterclaims, a motion to strike Kyocera's Japanese Antitrust Defense, and a Motion to quash non-party subpoenas. ECF Nos. 21-22, 24. Subsequently, on September 15, 2015 Kyocera filed a motion for partial judgment on the pleadings. ECF No. 38. Finally, on October 8, 2015, Kyocera filed a motion to compel discovery. ECF No. 45. Each of these pending motions will be addressed in turn.

II.

The Court first addresses Plaintiff Hemlock's motion to dismiss Defendant Kyocera's seven counterclaims. ECF No. 21. This Court may dismiss a pleading for "failure to state [*8] a claim upon which relief can be granted." Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6). A pleading fails to state a claim if it does not contain allegations that support recovery under any recognizable legal theory. Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 678, 129 S. Ct. 1937, 173 L. Ed. 2d 868, (2009). In considering a Rule 12(b)(6) motion, the Court construes the pleading in the non-movant's favor and accepts the allegations of facts therein as true. See Lambert, 517 F.3d at 439. The pleader need not have provided "detailed factual allegations" to survive dismissal, but the "obligation to provide the 'grounds' of his 'entitle[ment] to relief' requires more than labels and conclusions, and a formulaic recitation of the elements of a cause of action will not do." Bell Atlantic Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 555, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007). Furthermore, the legal effects of contractual clauses are questions of law that must be reviewed de novo. Quality Products and Concepts Co. v. Nagel Precision, Inc., 469 Mich. 362, 369, 666 N.W.2d 251 (Mich. 2003). In essence, the pleading "must contain sufficient factual matter, accepted as true, to 'state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face.'" Iqbal, 556 U.S. at 678, (quoting Twombly, 550 U.S. at 570).

Kyocera has brought the following seven counterclaims against Hemlock that Hemlock now moves to dismiss: (1) Declaratory Judgment of Impracticability/Impossibility; (2) Declaratory Judgment of Frustration of Purpose; (3) Declaratory Judgment of Force Majeure for Agreement III; (4) Declaratory Judgment that Agreements I-III are Void for [*9] Violations of Public Policy, Including Illegality; (5) Declaratory Judgment that Agreements I-III are Void for Mutual Mistake; (6) Unjust Enrichment; and (7) Breach of Agreements I-III. See ECF No. 9 47-60.

Five of the seven counterclaims seek declaratory judgments. Under the Declaratory Judgment Act, a district courts may "[i]n a case or controversy, within its jurisdiction ... declare the rights and other legal relations of any interested party seeking such declaration, whether or not further relief is or could be sought." 28 U.S.C. § 2201(a) (2012). There is no clear rule addressing whether a declaratory judgment action meets the Article III case and controversy requirement, however, parties involved must have "adverse legal interests," and there must be an actual dispute that relates to the "legal relations[hip]" between them. MedImmune, Inc. v. Genentech, Inc., 549 U.S. 118, 127, 127, 127 S. Ct. 764, 166 L. Ed. 2d 604 (2007). The parties' dispute must be the kind that requires the "specific" and conclusive relief that a declaratory judgment offers. Aetna Life Ins. Co. v. Haworth, 300 U.S. 227, 240-41, 57 S. Ct. 461, 81 L. Ed. 617 (1937). The party seeking the declaratory judgment has the burden of demonstrating that an actual case or controversy exists.

A.

Kyocera's first counterclaim seeks a declaratory judgment that Kyocera is relieved from performance under Agreements I-III on a theory of impracticability/impossibility. [*10] Answer to Am. Compl. ¶¶ 71-81, ECF No. 9. Generally, under Michigan law, "[e]conomic unprofitableness [sic] is not the equivalent to impossibility of performance. Subsequent events which in the nature of things do not render performance impossible, but only render it more difficult, burdensome, or expensive, will not operate to relieve [a party of its contractual obligations]." Chase, 217 N.W. at 567. See, also Milligan 295 N.W. at 563, and Sheldon 29 N.W.2d at 835.

The Sixth Circuit considered a set of claims similar to those now before this Court in Karl Wendt Farm Equipment Co., Inc. v. International Harvester Co., 931 F.2d 1112, 1117-18 (6th Cir. 1991). In holding that impracticability was an "inappropriate defense" in that case, the Court explained:

> The fact that [Defendant] experienced a dramatic downturn in the farm equipment market and decided to go out of the business does not excuse its unilateral termination of its dealership agreements due to impracticability. [Defendant] argues that while mere unprofitability should not excuse performance, the substantial losses and dramatic market shift in the farm equipment market between 1980 and 1985 warrant the special application of the defense in this case. [Defendant] cites losses of over $2,000,000.00 per day and a drop in the company's standing on the Fortune 500 list from 27 to 104.... [Defendant] also put on [*11] evidence that if it had not sold its farm equipment division, it might have had to declare bankruptcy. While the facts suggest that [Defendant] suffered severely from the downturn in the farm equipment market, neither market shifts nor the financial inability of one of the parties changes the basic assumptions of the contract such that it may be excused under the doctrine of impracticability.

Id.

Kyocera argues that Karl Wendt is inapplicable here. Specifically, Kyocera claims that Karl Wendt was limited to its particular facts and that the Court acknowledged the defense of impracticality/impossibility was available in other factual situations. Kyocera also argues that Karl Wendt is distinguishable in that it did not involve claims of "illegal or non-routine actions, much less concerted, continuous, and illegal series of acts to override free market forces, as was alleged here." ECF No. 34 at 15.

These arguments are without merit. The alleged illegal acts of the Chinese government have no bearing on whether Kyocera's performance has become impossible or impracticable. Rather, the alleged illegal acts have simply caused a market shift in pricing, making it unprofitable for Kyocera to continue [*12] to perform as promised. Regardless of the cause of the market shift, Kyocera's allegations amount only to claims of "economic unprofitableness," which are insufficient to give rise to claims of impossibility or impracticability. See Chase, 217 N.W. at 567. Kyocera's first counterclaim will thus be dismissed.

B.

Kyocera next seeks a declaratory judgment that it is relieved from performance under Agreements I-III on a theory of frustration of purpose. Answer to Am. Compl. ¶¶ 82-92. "Frustration of purpose is generally asserted where a change in circumstances makes one party's performance virtually worthless to the other...." Liggett, 676 N.W.2d at 637 (internal citations and quotations omitted). Application of the doctrine of frustration is a question of law and not a question of fact. See Restatement (Second) of Contracts, 310 (1979); See also Columbian National Title Insurance Company v. Township Title Services, Inc., 659 F.Supp. 796 (D.Kan.1987).

For a party to avail itself of the defense of frustration of purpose under Michigan law it must prove the following conditions:

> (1) the contract must be at least partially executory; (2) the frustrated party's purpose in making the contract must have been known to both parties when the contract was made; (3) this purpose must have been basically frustrated by an event not reasonably foreseeable at the time the contract was made, [*13] the occurrence of which has not been due to the fault of the frustrated party and the risk of which was not assumed by him.

Molnar v. Molnar, 110 Mich. App. 622, 313 N.W.2d 171, 173 (Mich. Ct. App. 1981).

The first prong is satisfied, since all three agreements are executory. Under the first agreement, the parties are obligated to perform through the 2015 calendar year. Under the second and third agreements, the parties are obligated to perform through 2018 and 2019 respectively. Thus the parties have continuing performance obligations under all three agreements at issue.

The second prong turns on the primary purpose of the contract. According to the Restatement (Second) of Contracts, "It is not enough that he had in mind some specific object without which he would not have made the contract. The object must be so completely the basis of the contract that, as both parties understand, without it the transaction would make little sense." Restatement (Second) of Contracts § 265.

In its counterclaim, Kyocera alleges that the purpose of the contract was "to create a long-term agreement in which Kyocera would help Hemlock grow its manufacturing capabilities, and in which Hemlock would use that expanded production to provide Kyocera with a stable supply of polysilicon within a legally functioning market." ECF [*14] No. 9. Although all of the nonmovant's factual allegations must be accepted as true in reviewing a motion to dismiss, legal conclusions need not be taken as true. See Lambert, 517 F.3d at 439. To determine the intent of the parties, courts must enforce unambiguous contracts according to their terms. See Quality Products, 469 Mich. at 370-71. "[A]n unambiguous contractual provision is reflective of the parties' intent as a matter of law." Id. at 375.

Kyocera's contention regarding the primary purpose of the agreements goes too far. The unambiguous primary purpose of the agreements was for Hemlock to provide Kyocera with a stable supply of polysilicon at a predictable price. This is apparent by the preambles of the agreements, which provide, "...Buyer desires to purchase and [Hemlock] agrees to sell Products (herein defined) pursuant to the terms and conditions of this Agreement." See ECF No. 1, Exhibit 1 at 1, Exhibit 2 at 1, Exhibit 3 at 1. It is also apparent by the parties' choice to structure their relationship in the form of long-term requirement contracts in order to provide some stability in fluctuating markets. Any express or implied understanding that Hemlock would expand its production capabilities was collateral to this central purpose.

Under the [*15] third prong, the primary purpose must have been "basically frustrated by an event not reasonably foreseeable at the time the contract was made, the occurrence of which has not been due to the fault of the frustrated party and the risk of which was not assumed by him." Molnar, 313 N.W.2d at 173. In general, "[i]t is not enough that the transaction has become less profitable for the affected party or even that he will sustain a loss." Seaboard Lumber Co. v. U.S., 41 Fed.Cl. 401, 417 (Fed.Cl.1998). "The frustration must be so severe that it is not fairly to be regarded as within the risks that he assumed under the contract." Id. (quoting Restatement (second) of Contracts § 265 (1981)). "[A] lack of profit is generally insufficient to frustrate the purpose of a contract." Seaboard Lumber, 41 Fed.Cl at 418.

Regardless of any changes in the polysilicon market and regardless of the cause of those changes, Hemlock is still able to provide Kyocera with a stable supply of polysilicon at a predictable price. There is no allegation that Hemlock can no longer provide polysilicon to Kyocera, and there is no allegation that there is no longer an existing market for solar products. Kyocera simply claims that it can no longer act profitably in the international solar market if it must honor its supply agreements with Hemlock. A party's claim that it is unable [*16] to conduct business profitably is insufficient to state a claim of frustration of purpose.[1] As a matter of law, the primary purpose of the agreements between Hemlock and Kyocera has not been frustrated.

Kyocera argues that the illegal actions of a third party, the Chinese government, in manipulating the solar markets were unforeseeable. However, because the Chinese Government's actions did not have an effect on the principal purpose of the agreement — Hemlock providing Kyocera with a stable supply of polysilicon at a predictable price — whether those acts were foreseeable is not material. Under the doctrine of frustration of purpose, foreseeability is only relevant to the extent that it relates to an action that frustrates the primary purpose of [*17] a contract. See Molnar, 313 N.W.2d at 173.

Kyocera also argues that it should not have to bear the entire risk of harm resulting from China's illegal disruption of the solar market. ECF No. 34 at 11. However, Kyocera concedes that the agreements were initiated "[t]o combat the instability in the solar market." ECF No. 34 at 3. In setting forth long-term price and quantity schedules, both parties accepted a risk that future market developments would work against them. Hemlock accepted the risk that polysilicon prices would increase, requiring them to sell to Kyocera at below market prices. Kyocera accepted the risk that prices would decrease, requiring them to buy from Hemlock at above market prices. More likely than not one party to the contract would profit and one would lose based on changes in the market price. In this circumstance Kyocera ended up on the losing end of the equation.

C.

In its third counterclaim, Kyocera seeks a declaratory judgment that the force majeure provision of Agreement III excuses its performance. Answer to Am. Compl. ¶¶ 93-107. The effect of a force majeure clause is to excuse performance in the event an unforeseen circumstance occurs." Melford Olsen Honey, Inc. v. Adee, 452 F.3d 956, 963 (8th Cir.2006). "The performance to be excused is determined by [*18] the language of the clause." Id. The "bargained for" force majeure clause found in Agreement III provides:

> HSC shall not be liable for delays or failures in performance of an order or default in the delivery arising out of or resulting from causes beyond its control. Such causes include, but are not limited to, acts of God, acts of Buyer, acts of the Government or the public enemy, fire, flood, epidemics, quarantine restrictions, strikes, freight embargoes, severe weather, equipment breakage or default of suppliers due to any of such causes. [1] It is unclear whether the defense of frustration of purpose can even justify rescission of a contract under Michigan law. See Liggett, 676 N.W.2d at 637; See also Klein Steel Services Inc. v. Sirius Protection, LLC, 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 59054, 2014 WL 1685912 (E.D. Mich. 2014). Federal courts in Michigan have dismissed claims for rescission on this ground. *See, e.g. Klein Steel Services, 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 59054, 2014 WL 1685912 at 4. A party can, however, seek restitution under a theory of frustration of purpose if that party has conferred any benefits on the opposing party through partial performance. *See Jabero v. Haraji, 2004 Mich. App. LEXIS 1507, 2004 WL 1335896 at 3 (Mich.Ct.App. 2004).

> the event of any such delay of HSC's performance, Buyer shall honor its obligations hereunder as soon as HSC is able to perform.
> If HSC fails to deliver or Buyer fails to Purchase Product...and such failure occurs as the result of a Force Majeure Event, HSC may deliver and Buyer may purchase the deficient Product, (at the prevailing contract price which was in effect during the Force Majeure Event), within a reasonable time after resolution of the Force Majeure Event, (determined by mutual agreement of the parties). The term of this Agreement may be extended for a period not to exceed one (1) year so as to complete the purchase and delivery of [*19] deficient Product. HSC will provide Buyer notice of the deficient Product delivery schedule for the deficient Product prior to delivery as well as notice of its request to extend the Terms of the Agreement.
> In addition, if due to force majeure or any other cause, HSC is unable to produce sufficient goods to meet all demands from customers and internal uses, HSC shall have the right to allocate production among its customers and plants in any manner which HSC may determine to be equitable.

See Exhibit 3 § 19, ECF No. 28.

Force majeure is not a contract defense under Michigan Law, but it can be a bargained-for contract provision or protection. See Hemlock Semiconductor Corp. v. Deutsche Solar GmbH, 116 F. Supp. 3d 818, 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 97956, 2015 WL 4476327 (E.D. Mich. 2015). Numerous courts have refused to apply contractual force majeure clauses where "governmental action affects the profitability of a contract, but does not preclude a party's performance." United Sugars Corp. v. U.S. Sugar Co., Inc., 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 43573, 2015 WL 1529861 (D.C. Minn. 2015). See also Seaboard Lumber Co. v. United States, 308 F.3d 1283, 1293-94 (Fed.Cir.2002) (declining to apply the force majeure clause because the risk that market price will make performance unprofitable is inherent in fixed-price contracts); In re Millers Cove Energy Co., 62 F.3d 155, 159 (6th Cir.1995) (holding that "lack of economic feasibility" does not exclude contract performance under contract's force majeure clause absent specific language to that effect); Langham—Hill Petroleum, Inc. v. S. Fuels Co., 813 F.2d 1327, 1330 (4th Cir.1987) (rejecting application of force majeure [*20] clause where foreign government acted to cause a collapse in world oil prices, making the contract unprofitable for one party); N. Ind. Pub. Serv. Co. v. Carbon Cnty. Coal Co., 799 F.2d 265, 274-76 (7th Cir.1986) (holding that the government's denial of a party's request to pass increased coal prices along to its customers did not excuse that party from a long-term contract to buy coal even though performance created economic hardship); B.F. Goodrich Co. v. Vinyltech Corp., 711 F.Supp. 1513, 1519 (D.Ariz.1989) (rejecting the argument that an unexpected drop in market price was within the scope of the contract's force majeure clause).

The most analogous case to the present case is Langham-Hills. There, following the collapse of the world crude oil market because of Saudi Arabian attempts to acquire market share, Southern Fuels attempted to invoke a force majeure clause in its fixed price petroleum supply contract with Langham-Hills. Langham Hills, 813 F.2d at 1329. Langham-Hills then brought suit against Southern Fuels in federal district court for breach of contract. Id. Declining to find a contractual force-majeure clause applicable, the district court granted Langham-Hills motion for summary judgment. The Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals affirmed, citing "the law of contracts and the realities of the business world." Id. The Fourth Circuit explained that "[i]f fixed-price [*21] contracts can be avoided due to fluctuations in price, then the entire purpose of fixed-price contracts, which is to protect both the buyer and the seller from the risks of the market, is defeated." Id. at 1330. The Court then quoted the Seventh Circuit:

> [the defendant] committed itself to paying a price at or above a fixed minimum and to taking a fixed quantity at that price. It was willing to make this commitment to secure an assured supply of [the product], but the risk it took was that the market price of [the product or substitutes] would fall. A force majeure clause is not intended to buffer a party against the normal risks of a contract. The normal risk of a fixed price contract is that the market price will change. If it rises, the buyer gains at the expense of the seller (except insofar as escalator provisions give the seller some protection); if it falls, as here, the seller gains at the expense of the buyer. The whole purpose of a fixed price contract is to allocate risks in this way. A force majeure clause interpreted to excuse the buyer from the consequences of the risk he expressly assumed would nullify a central term of the contract.

Id. (quoting N. Ind. Pub. Serv., 799 F.2d at 275). See also In re Millers Cove Energy Co., Inc., 62 F.3d 155, 158 (6th Cir. 1995) (adopting the Fourth [*22] Circuit's reasoning in Langham-Hill).

The "bargained for" force majeure provision in Agreement III does not excuse Kyocera from performing under the circumstances alleged. First, by its express terms the protections of the force majeure clause as written was to protect Hemlock from unanticipated events, not Kyocera. See Exhibit 3 § 19, ECF No. 28 ("[Hemlock] shall not be liable for delays or failures in performance of an order or default in the delivery arising out of or resulting from causes beyond its control"). Second, the contractual provision only addresses events that give rise to an actual, physical inability to perform, not those that only make performance inconvenient. Id. Third, the force majeure provision does not allow a total rescission of the contract or excuse from performance, but merely provides for a delay in performance. Id. ("In the event of any such delay of HSC's performance, Buyer shall honor its obligations hereunder as soon as [Hemlock] is able to perform"). Accordingly, Kyocera's claim that an unfavorable market fluctuation warrants excuse of performance under Agreement III's force majeure clause is without merit as a matter of law and will be dismissed.

D.

In its fourth [*23] counterclaim, Kyocera seeks a declaratory judgment that Agreements I-III are void for violations of public policy, including illegality. See Answer to Am. Compl. ¶¶ 108-115. Specifically, Kyocera argues that the Agreements violate Article 19 of Japanese Antimonopoly Law and Article 90 of the Japanese Civil Code, which prohibits contract provisions that are against the public order and morals. Hemlock moves to dismiss this counterclaim on the grounds that Kyocera has failed to plead any facts in support of its Japanese antitrust claim and Kyocera has not alleged that the Supply Agreements violate antitrust law on their face. In the alternative, Hemlock argues the claim should be dismissed in consideration of principles of international comity.

In its response to Hemlock's motion to dismiss, Kyocera asserts that its counterclaim for declaratory judgment under Japanese antitrust laws should not be dismissed because its Tokyo district court complaint has been incorporated into its answer and counterclaims. Kyocera further argues that its Japanese antitrust claim will be decided by a Japanese court, and so this Court will not need to consider any complex factual issues related to the claims. Kyocera concludes that comity considerations weigh [*24] in favor of allowing the Japanese court to determine if Hemlocks' agreements violate Japanese law before this Court determines if that illegality bars enforcement. Kyocera in effect argues that this Court should apply the doctrine of abstention, staying consideration of the present matter until the Tokyo courts have decided the Japanese antitrust issue. Kyocera then seeks to apply the principal of collateral estoppel to the Tokyo judgment in this Court.

Hemlock argues that Kyocera has failed to state a claim upon which relief may be granted. To raise a claim under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 8(a), a pleading must contain "a short and plain statement of the claim showing that the pleader is entitled to relief". Id. A pleading fails to state a claim if it does not contain allegations that support recovery under any recognizable legal theory. Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 678, 129 S. Ct. 1937, 173 L. Ed. 2d 868, (2009). The "obligation to provide the 'grounds' of his 'entitle[ment] to relief' requires more than labels and conclusions, and a formulaic recitation of the elements of a cause of action will not do." Bell Atlantic Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 555, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007). In essence, the pleading "must contain sufficient factual matter, accepted as true, to 'state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face.'" Iqbal, 556 U.S. at 678, (quoting Twombly, 550 U.S. at 570).

Kyocera does not identify any legal theory [*25] or claim beyond a conclusory assertion that the Agreements violate Japanese Antitrust law. Kyocera states only that "the contracts are invalid because the contract clauses of the trading establish contract terms unilaterally disadvantageous to Kyocera and are against the public order and morals... in Japan." Answer to Am. Compl. ¶ 111. Kyocera then claims that it is "entitled to a declaration that the Agreements are void because, among other things, they are illegal under Japanese law, and it is not liable for delays in performance of its obligations under the agreements." Id. at ¶ 115. Kyocera has not provided this Court with a recitation of the elements of the cause of action, much less any explanation as to how the facts support such a theory of recovery. Because Kyocera has not provided any explanation as to how the Supply Agreements violate the public order and morals in Japan, Kyocera has not stated a claim upon which relief may be granted under Japanese antitrust law. See Oparaugo v. Watts, 884 A.2d 63, 72 (D.C. 2005) (holding that the district court acted properly in refusing a plaintiff's request to apply foreign law where the plaintiff failed to provide any information regarding the elements of the foreign law or any [*26] information as to how the foreign law should be applied in assessing the sufficiency of his complaint).

Furthermore, in its response to Hemlock's motion for summary judgment, Kyocera states that "[t]he antitrust issues underlying Kyocera's claim will be decided by the Japanese Court. Kyocera is not asking this Court to consider any complex factual issues related to Kyocera's antitrust claims." Resp. to Mot. to Dismiss Counterclaims 27. Accordingly, despite styling its counterclaim as a motion for declaratory judgment, Kyocera does not appear to seek a declaration about the parties' rights or a decision concerning Kyocera's legal claim. Instead, it apparently seeks a declaratory judgment that any decision by the Tokyo district court in its favor has collateral estoppel effect. Kyocera has not only failed to state a claim upon which relief may be granted, but Kyocera has also failed to state a demand for the relief it actually seeks or any allegations in support of that relief. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 8(a)(3).

Kyocera's claim that the antitrust issue will be decided by a Japanese court is problematic for an additional reason: the Supply Agreements contain both a forum selection clause and a choice-of-law provision that [*27] preclude this Court from recognizing any decision by a Japanese Court. The choice of forum provision states that the parties "submit to the exclusive jurisdiction and venue of the U.S. District Court for the Eastern District of Michigan for all disputes arising, directly or indirectly, under [the Supply Agreements]." Agreements I-III ¶ 21. The choice-of-law provision provides that the Supply Agreements "shall be governed and controlled in all respects by the laws of the State of Michigan, USA... and all disputes, including interpretation, enforceability, validity, and construction, shall be determined under the law of the State of Michigan, without regard to any conflict of law provision." Id. at ¶ 20. Michigan public policy "favors the enforcement of contractual forum-selection clauses and choice-of-law provisions." Turcheck v. Amerifund Financial, Inc., 272 Mich. App. 341, 725 N.W.2d 684, 688 (Mich. Ct. App. 2006). Indeed, this point will be further discussed below in part III.B.

Because Kyocera has not stated a foreign antitrust counter-claim upon which relief may be granted and because this Court cannot grant Kyocera the relief it seeks — recognition of a Japanese district court judgment — Kyocera's fourth counterclaim will be dismissed.

E.

In its fifth counterclaim, Kyocera claims [*28] that Agreements I-III are voidable for mutual mistake. See Answer to Am. Compl. ¶¶ 116-22. Kyocera argues that the parties were mutually mistaken in assuming that the polysilicon market would continue to legally function. Id. at 118-19. Hemlock moves to dismiss this counterclaim, arguing that the doctrine of mutual mistake relates only to "fact[s] in existence at the time the contract is executed" and not to predictions as to occurrences or non-occurrences.

As explained by the Michigan Supreme Court, a mutual mistake excusing performance must relate to facts in existence at the time the contract is executed. Lenawee Cty. Bd. of Health v. Messerly, 417 Mich. 17, 331 N.W.2d 203, 207 (Mich. 1982). In other words "the belief which is found to be in error may not be, in substance, a prediction as to a future occurrence or non-occurrence." Id. Mistaken expectations alone do not relate to a fact in existence at the time of the agreement. Akahoshi v. S. Waste Servs., 181 F. Supp. 2d 711, 714 (E.D. Mich. 2001). "Moreover, rescission of a contract for mutual mistake is not available where the party seeking rescission has assumed the risk of loss in connection with the mistake." Id.

Kyocera's claim of mutual mistake amounts to an assertion that it was mistaken in its failure to anticipate future market disruptions. This allegation does not raise a claim of mutual mistake [*29] for two reasons. First, mistaken expectations about market behavior do not relate to a fact in existence at the time the Supply Agreements were executed. Second, in entering into the long-term supply agreements, Kyocera accepted the risk that the market prices for polysilicon would decrease, thereby rendering its performance unprofitable. See Seaboard Lumber, 308 F.3d 1283, 1293-94 (holding that the risk that market price will make performance unprofitable is inherent in fixed-price contracts); Langham Hills, 813 F.2d at 1330 (holding that the entire purpose of fixed-price contracts is to protect both the buyer and the seller from the risks of the market). Because Kyocera has failed to state a claim of mutual mistake, its fifth counterclaim will be dismissed.

F.

Kyocera next alleges that the large advanced payments it has paid to Hemlock constitute unjust enrichment and violate Japanese antitrust law. See Answer to Am. Compl. ¶¶ 123-28. Hemlock argues this counterclaim should be dismissed because the advanced payments were expressly agreed to by the parties.

Unjust enrichment is a common law remedy whereby the law implies a contract in order to prevent unjust enrichment, specifically when one party inequitably receives and retains a benefit from another. [*30] See Martin v. East Lansing School Dist., 193 Mich. App. 166, 483 N.W.2d 656 (Mich. Ct. App. 1992). To proceed on such a claim, a plaintiff must establish (1) the receipt of a benefit by defendant from plaintiff, and (2) an inequity resulting to plaintiff because of the retention of the benefit by defendant. Barber v. SMH (US), Inc., 202 Mich. App. 366, 509 N.W.2d 791 (Mich. Ct. App. 1993). "However, a contract will be implied only if there is no express contract covering the same subject matter." Belle Isle Grill Corp. v. Detroit, 256 Mich. App. 463, 666 N.W.2d 271 (Mich. Ct. App. 2003). In other words, the law will not imply a contract where there is an express contract between the same parties on the same subject matter. Morris Pumps v. Centerline Piping, Inc., 273 Mich. App. 187, 729 N.W.2d 898 (Mich. Ct. App. 2006) (quoting 42 CJS IMPLIED AND CONSTRUCTIVE CONTRACTS § 34, p. 33).

Here, Agreement I contains an advance payment clause, expressly providing:

> Non-Refundable Advance Payment. Buyer agrees to make a non-refundable, unconditional, irrevocable advance payment in the amount of $36,120,000.00 (the "Advance Payment"). Fifty percent (50%) of the Advance Payment shall be due on or before October 3, 2005 and the remaining fifty percent (50%) shall be due on or before October 2, 2006. Notwithstanding anything herein to the contrary, Buyer expressly acknowledges its understanding and agrees that, once this Agreement is executed, there are no circumstances or occurrences that will require [Hemolock] to refund to Buyer all or any portion of the Advance payment. The Advance Payment shall [*31] be applied as a credit against the price of the Products that Buyer is required to purchase under this Agreement at the times and amounts shown [in the schedules].

Agreement I ¶ 2. Agreement II contains the same clause, but requires a $48,000,000.00 advance payment to be paid in installments on or before October 4, 2006, October 4, 2007, and October 4, 2008. Agreement II ¶ 2.

Agreement III contains a similar clause, requiring a $84,915,000.00 advance payment to be paid in installments on or before October 4, 2007, October 4, 2008, and October 4, 2009. Agreement III ¶ 2. The clause differs from the previous two advance payment clauses in that it allows Kyocera to recover a portion of the advance payment if it sustains loss, damage, or injury resulting from Hemlock's failure to perform, specifically in situations involving a delay in Hemlock's completion of its expanded manufacturing facility. Id. at ¶¶ 2, 9, 15. Agreement III limits any such liability to the "remaining net balance of the advanced payment", and provides that, "[e]xcept for situations involving a delay in completion of the manufacturing facility... [Hemlock] shall not be liable for any loss, damage, or injury resulting from delay [*32] in delivery of the products, or for any failure to perform which is due to circumstances beyond its control." Id. ¶ 15 (original in all-caps).

Because the Supply Agreements expressly contemplate and govern Kyocera's non-refundable advance payments to Hemlock, Kyocera cannot recover its advance payments by implied contract. See Belle Isle, 666 N.W.2d at 281 (concluding that a plaintiff could not recover costs of improvement by implied contract where his lease expressly provided for capital improvements in lieu of rent). See also Liggett Restaurant Group, Inc. v. City of Pontiac, 260 Mich. App. 127, 676 N.W.2d 633, 639 (Mich. Ct. App. 2003) (holding that the trial court properly dismissed the plaintiff's unjust enrichment claim where there was an express provision in the parties' contract contemplating the subject matter of the dispute); Fodale v. Waste Mgmt. of Mich., Inc., 271 Mich. App. 11, 718 N.W.2d 827, 841 (2006) (holding that a plaintiff was foreclosed from bringing an unjust enrichment claim where an express contract governed the parties' loan).

Kyocera argues that, despite the existence of express contracts governing the advance payments, it may still proceed on its unjust enrichment counterclaim because the Supply Agreements are invalid or unenforceable. In H.J. Tucker and Associates, Inc. v. Allied Chucker and Engineering Co., the Michigan Court of Appeals held that a party could proceed on its [*33] unjust enrichment claim where an express oral contract existed, but where there was a material question as to the scope of the oral contract or whether the contract was still in force. 234 Mich. App. 550, 595 N.W.2d 176 (Mich. Ct. App. 1999). The court explained that the plaintiff could have recovered under its breach of contract claim for the period of time that the contract was in force, and could recover under its unjust enrichment claim for the period of time the contract was allegedly not effective. Id. In the alternative, the court explained, the trial court could find that recovery under unjust enrichment doctrine was appropriate if it found there was no contract between the parties due to the dispute regarding material contract terms.

Unlike in H. J. Tucker, here the Supply Agreements are express written agreements. Neither the scope nor the terms of the agreement are in dispute. Instead, Kyocera argues only that the Supply Agreements are not enforceable contracts due to violations of Japanese antitrust law and mutual mistake. However, because Kyocera cannot proceed on either theory as a matter law, See I.D. and I.E. supra, Kyocera cannot, as a matter of law, argue that the express contracts are unenforceable under either theory.

Kyocera argues that [*34] it should be allowed to proceed on its unjust enrichment counterclaim because it is not in pari delicto with Hemlock. Kyocera argues that if the Supply Agreements are found to be illegal agreements under Japanese antitrust law, this Court should not simply leave the parties as it finds them (the proper course of action when the Court is asked to aid either party to an illegal agreement. Jones v. Chennault, 323 Mich. 261, 267, 35 N.W.2d 256 (Mich. 1948)). Instead, Kyocera argues, because any illegality under Japanese antitrust law would be the result of Hemlock's abuse of its superior bargaining power, the parties are not in pari delicto because Kyocera's payments were a product of that abuse. Id.

On the present facts, the argument is academic. Because Kyocera has failed to properly plead any claims under Japanese antitrust law, Kyocera cannot allege in this action that the Supply Agreements are unenforceable under Japanese antitrust law.

Finally, Kyocera argues that Hemlock will be unjustly enriched if it is allowed to retain the advance payments because Kyocera only committed to the advance payment arrangement based on Hemlock's promise that it would use the payments to expand its polysilicon production facilities. However, because express written [*35] agreements exist between the parties, Kyocera cannot challenge the fairness of the contract terms it agreed to or its performance under the express contract terms on a quantum meruit theory of unjust enrichment. If Kyocera seeks to challenge the fairness of the express contract terms, it must do so under claims of unconscionability, duress or fraud. Kyocera may only challenge Hemlock's performance under the express contract terms by asserting a breach of contract claim.

G.

In its seventh counterclaim Kyocera alleges that Hemlock has breached the ¶ 9 of the Supply Agreements by failing to maintain expanded manufacturing facilities. See Answer to Am. Compl. ¶¶ 129-134. Hemlock moves to dismiss that counterclaim, arguing that Kyocera has not alleged the breach of any express provision of the Supply Agreements.

To state a breach of contract claim under Michigan law, a plaintiff must plead "(1) that there was a contract, (2) that the other party breached the contract and, (3) that the party asserting breach of contract suffered damages as a result of the breach." Dunn v. Bennett, 303 Mich. App. 767, 846 N.W.2d 75 (Mich.Ct.App.2013). The first prong requires an express promise, as "Michigan does not recognize a cause of action for breach of the implied covenant [*36] of good faith and fair dealing." Fodale, 718 N.W.2d at 841.

The disputed provision of the Supply Agreements, ¶ 9, provides: "Buyer acknowledges that [Hemlock] will be expanding its manufacturing facilities... in order to produce the Products to be supplied under this Agreement."

Agreements I-III ¶ 9. That paragraph further provides: "Buyer acknowledges the possibility of delays in completing the manufacturing facility and expressly agrees that, so long as production of Product commences by [June 30, 2008/June 30, 2009/June 30, 2010], [Hemlock] SHALL HAVE NO LIABILITY TO BUYER FOR ANY SUCH DELAY." Id. (emphasis in originals).

Kyocera argues that ¶ 9 amounts to an express promise by Hemlock to maintain expanded manufacturing capacities. Kyocera cites Sexton v. Panel Processing, Inc., for the proposition that a promise is defined as "a manifestation of intention to act or refrain from acting in a specified way, so made as to justify a promise in understanding that a commitment has been made." 912 F. Supp. 2d 475, 478 (E.D. Mich. 2013) aff'd 754 F.3d 332, 334 (6th Cir), cert. Denied, 135 S. Ct. 677, 190 L. Ed. 2d 389 (2014). Kyocera argues that the language of ¶ 9 stating that Hemlock "will be expanding" is a manifestation of intention to act. Kyocera concludes that, viewing the facts in a light most favorable to Kyocera, ¶ 9 [*37] supports Kyocera's allegation of an express contract term and a subsequent breach. As a result of this alleged breach, Kyocera claims that it has suffered damages because it has not received what it bargained for in exchange for its advance payments.

Hemlock, in contrast, argues that ¶ 9 is not an express promise, but merely serves as an acknowledgment by Kyocera that Hemlock would be expending substantial capital improvements to expand its manufacturing capacity. Hemlock argues that the purpose of that acknowledgment was that Hemlock would eventually credit Kyocera's advance payments against Kyocera's take-or-pay obligations. Hemlock further argues that, because no provision in the agreement requires Hemlock to maintain expanded manufacturing facilities, Kyocera's breach of contract claim should be dismissed.

Viewing the facts in a light most favorable to Kyosera and assuming that ¶ 9 amounts to an express promise by Hemlock to expand its manufacturing facilities, there is nothing in the Supply Agreements that supports Kyocera's allegation that Hemlock agreed to maintain expanded manufacturing facilities. At most, the provision could amount to a promise by Hemlock to expand its manufacturing [*38] facilities to meet Kyocera's product demands under the Supply Agreements. Accordingly, Kyocera's claim will be dismissed to the extent that it suggests that Hemlock breached the Supply Agreements by failing to maintain expanded facilities.

Turning to Hemlock's alleged promise to expand, Kyocera admits in its answer that Hemlock's expanded production facility in Tennessee was completed, but notes that it was permanently closed in December 2014. Answer to Am. Compl. ¶ 20. Kyocera also alleges that Hemlock did not expand other facilities to the extent contemplated by the parties. Id. at ¶ 133. In this way, Kyocera argues, Hemlock has breached a promise to perform.

It is not enough for Kyocera to allege that Hemlock breached a promise to perform. Under Michigan law, Kyocera must also allege that it "suffered damages as a result of the breach." Dunn, 846 N.W.2d at 75. Kyocera makes no allegation that Hemlock has been unable to meet its obligation to fulfill Kyocera's demands for polysilicon under the Supply Agreements — indeed, the basis of this lawsuit is Kyocera's suggestions that it no longer has any demand whatsoever for Hemlock's polysilicon at the agreed upon prices. Kyocera thus does not allege damages [*39] in the form of Hemlock's failure to meet its product demands.

Kyocera does allege that it was damaged by not receiving what it bargained for in exchange for its advance payments. Kyocera argues that because it agreed to the advanced payments for the purpose of allowing Hemlock to expand its manufacturing facilities, it has been injured as a result of Hemlock's failure to sufficiently expand its facilities. However, by the very terms of the advanced payment provision, Kyocera agreed "to make a non-refundable, unconditional, irrevocable advance payment" and expressly acknowledged its understanding and agreed that, "once this Agreement is executed, there are no circumstances or occurrences that will require [Hemolock] to refund to [Kyocera] all or any portion of the Advance Payment." Agreements I-III ¶ 2. Nothing in the Supply Agreements suggests that the advanced payments were in consideration for the expanded facilities. Instead, all three contracts are clear that the advanced payments were "non-refundable, unconditional, [and] irrevocable." Id. at ¶ 9. The Supply Agreements further explain that the only circumstance or occurrence requiring Hemlock to refund a portion of the advance [*40] payment is if, as a result of Hemlock's delay in completing its expanded manufacturing facility, Kyocera suffered loss, damage or injury resulting from (1) Hemlock's delay in delivery or (2) Hemlock's "failure to perform which is due to circumstances beyond its control." Id. at ¶ 15. Because Kyocera has not pled any loss, damage, or injury in either form, it has not stated an injury under the Supply Agreements or under Michigan law. At the time of the agreements, Kyocera agreed to the non-refundable, unconditional, and irrevocable advanced payments. It cannot now, with the benefit of hindsight, recast the nature of those advanced payments.

Furthermore, Kyocera's advanced payments to Hemlock are to be "applied as a credit against the price of the Products that Buyer is required to purchase under this Agreement at the times and amounts shown [in the schedules]." Accordingly, any damages that Kyocera suffers relating to the advanced payment is a result of its decision to cease performance under the agreed upon terms of the Supply Agreements. If Kyocera continued to perform as promised, then the advance payments would continue to be credited against Kyocera's subsequent purchases.

In conclusion, [*41] even assuming that Hemlock promised to expand its manufacturing facilities, Kyocera has not pled any actionable damages resulting from any breach of that promise. Kyocera's seventh counterclaim will thus be dismissed.

III.

Also before the Court is Hemlock's Motion to strike Kyocera's tenth affirmative defense, relating to violations of Japanese antitrust law. Mot. to Strike, ECF No. 24. Hemlock argues that Supreme Court precedent, as well as this Court's recent decision in Hemlock Semiconductor Corp. v. Deutsche Solar GmbH, 116 F. Supp. 3d 818, 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 97956, 2015 WL 4476327 (E.D.Mich. May 7, 2015) support its motion. In response Kyocera argues that this case is distinguishable from Deutsche Solar because Kyocera is not asking the Court to adjudicate any foreign antitrust claim, but is instead asking the Court to "respect a Japanese court's adjudication of a pending Japanese antitrust claim." Resp. to Mot. to Strike 1, ECF No. 33.

A "court may strike from a pleading an insufficient defense or any redundant, immaterial, impertinent, or scandalous matter." Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(f). A defense is insufficient "if as a matter of law, the defense cannot succeed under any circumstances." *Hahn v. Best Recovery Servs., LLC, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 116136, 2010 WL 4483375, 2 (E.D. Mich. Nov.1, 2010) (internal quotation marks and citations omitted). A Rule 12(f) motion is also proper "if it aids in eliminating spurious issues before trial, thereby streamlining [*42] the litigation." Id. (internal quotation marks and citation omitted). "Generally, however, a Rule 12(f) motion should not be granted if the insufficiency of the defense is not clearly apparent, or if it raises factual issues that should be determined on a hearing on the merits." Id. (internal quotation marks and citation omitted). Motions seeking to strike an affirmative defense are disfavored and should be used sparingly. As observed by the Sixth Circuit, a motion to strike "is a drastic remedy to be resorted to only when required for purposes of justice. The motion to strike should be granted only when the pleading to be stricken has no possible relation to the controversy." Brown & Williamson Tobacco Corp. v. United States, 201 F.2d 819, 822 (6th Cir. 1953) (internal quotation marks and citations omitted).

A.

The Supreme Court has twice addressed the question of when a contract's illegality under antitrust laws and regulations can serve as an affirmative defense in a contract-enforcement action. See Kelly v. Kosuga, 358 U.S. 516, 79 S. Ct. 429, 3 L. Ed. 2d 475 (1959), and Kaiser Steel Corp. v. Mullins, 455 U.S. 72, 102 S. Ct. 851, 70 L. Ed. 2d 833 (1982). Under those opinions, a party can usually raise a claim of illegality under antitrust law in a contract dispute only where a provision is patently illegal and not severable from the sued-upon provision. See Hemlock Semiconductor Corp. v. Deutsche Solar GmbH, 116 F. Supp. 3d 818, 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 97956, 2015 WL 4476327 (May 7, 2015). Here, there is no patent illegality in the supply agreements. [*43] Rather, Kyocera argues that the Supply Agreements violate Japanese antitrust law if Hemlock abused a position of bargaining power in arriving at the agreements.

The District of Columbia Circuit addressed an affirmative antitrust defense that did not allege patent antitrust illegality in National Souvenir Center, Inc. v. Historic Figures, Inc., 728 F.2d 503, 234 U.S. App. D.C. 222 (D.C. Cir. 1984). National Souvenir arose out of "a series of pre-trial rulings by the district court in three consolidated anti-trust cases involving wax museums[.]" Id. at 506. After a wax museum in Washington D.C. began franchising museums throughout the United States, the franchisees sued, claiming that the agreements violated the Sherman Act because they impermissibly tied a certain supplier's figures to the museum franchise. Id. The franchisor and owners responded by asserting a breach of contract counterclaim, to which the franchises defended by alleging that the agreements were illegal tying agreements under the Sherman Act. In dismissing the defense, the district court concluded that the defense could not be sustained under Kaiser Steel because "the promise being sued on is not itself illegal under the antitrust laws, [and so] Kaiser did not require recognition of the defense." Id. at 508 (quoting opinion below) (internal quotation [*44] marks omitted).

In reviewing the district court opinion, the District of Colombia Circuit Court noted that "Kosuga was generally viewed as permitting antitrust defenses only in a very narrow class of contract suits, courts being understandably hesitant to interpose complex antitrust issues in a simple suit for breach of contract." Id. The circuit court then read Kosuga to limit antitrust defenses to situations where "the requested enforcement was of agreements not to compete or other direct market restrictions, that made 'the court . . . a party to an anticompetitive scheme.'" Id. (quoting Mullins v. Kaiser Steel Corp., 642 F.2d 1302, 206 U.S. App. D.C. 334 (D.C. Cir. 1980)). The circuit court noted that the Supreme Court in Kaiser Steel "opened the window only a notch to antitrust defenses, i.e., it refused to enforce a promise to pay that was itself a mechanism to police anticompetitive conduct." Id. In distilling the two cases, the circuit court determined the relevant inquiries are (1) whether the agreement to be enforced is facially illegal under federal antitrust laws (the Kosuga question) and (2) whether the agreement to be enforced is itself a mechanism to enforce a collateral agreement or provision that facially violates federal antitrust laws.

In the case before [*45] it, the District of Columbia Circuit determined that "the promises to pay franchise fees in this case do not appear on their face to be primarily means to enforce the allegedly illegal tie-ins between the wax figures and start-up services." Id. Rather, they appeared to be merely consideration for goods and services, or nothing more than an inoffensive market transaction. Id. Importantly, the court held:

> To transform the contracts here into illegal tie-ins would require complex proof of monopoly power in the tying market and leverage of that power in the tied market. Even then, their vice would extend only to the amount that the agreed prices exceeded the fair value of the goods and services received and consumed—the portion of the prices that could be traced to the illegal practice. The complexity of proof and speculative nature of appellants' defenses seem to us to place them outside of the [Kaiser Steel] exception and clearly within the ambit of disfavor for such defenses articulated in Kosuga.

Id. at 515-16. Stated differently, not only was the promise the court was asked to enforce not patently illegal, but fulfilling the promise did not force the franchisees to comply with another portion of [*46] the agreement that was patently illegal. Any illegality under a collateral provision of the agreement would only arise under the presence of specific market conditions external to the agreement and upon which the agreement does not rely.

Here, Kyocera does not challenge any specific provision of the Supply Agreements as patently illegal under Japanese Antitrust law. Instead, Kyocera argues that the Supply Agreements are wholly invalid and unenforceable under Japanese Antitrust law because "Hemlock abused its superior bargaining position to obtain punitive terms from Kyocera in violation of Japan's Anti-Monopoly Act ("AMA"). Resp. to Mot. to Strike 5. Kyocera argues that, although Hemlock's market dominance is probative, it is not required under Japanese antitrust law, and that Kyocera's claim does not need to allege any market-control thresholds or any particular market share. Id. at 6.

Kyocera makes no allegation that the Supply Agreements either (1) facially violate Japanese Antitrust law or (2) serve as a mechanism to facially violate Japanese Antitrust law. As such, Kyocera's claim of wholesale unenforceability under a broad and amorphous provision of Japanese antitrust law is not a defense [*47] in this breach of contract case.

Kyocera attempts to distinguish this case from Kaiser Steel and Kosuga by arguing that those cases involved situations where one party had already received the property of another and the complaining party sought to avoid paying for the delivered goods. In contrast, Kyocera argues that there are no delivered goods in the present case and that it is being forced to pay for goods that it has not received. First, the decision to cease acceptance of goods under the Supply Agreements is Kyocera's. If Kyocera honored the terms and schedules that it agreed to in the Supply Agreements, then its advance payments would continue to be credited against its future purchases. Second, and more importantly, this is not a material distinction and has no bearing on the question of whether it is appropriate for this Court to entertain a foreign anti-trust defense as part of a Michigan breach of contract case.

Kyocera also argues that, like in Kaiser Steel, the Supply Agreements require Kyocera to pay a penalty if it selects any supplier other than Hemlock. Kyocera cites to no provision of the Supply Agreements supporting such an argument, and there is in fact no provision [*48] of the Supply Agreements requiring Kyocera to pay a penalty if it uses polysilicon suppliers other than Hemlock. Furthermore, Kyocera provides no explanation as to how any such provision would violate Japanese antitrust law — the law that Kyocera attempts to raise in its defense. The fact that such conduct was found to facially violate United States antitrust law in Kaiser Steel is irrelevant where Kyocera has not pled as a defense any violations of United States antitrust law.

B.

Kyocera also attempts to distinguish this case from Deutsche Solar by arguing that this Court should not in fact adjudicate any Japanese antitrust issues. Id. at 7. Kyocera instead argues that this Court should apply the doctrine of abstention and, if and when the Japanese court issues a final and valid judgment on the antitrust issue, review the Japanese court's findings and determine whether the decision renders Hemlock's contract unenforceable in the United States. Id.

Abstention from the exercise of federal jurisdiction is a "narrow exception to the duty of a District Court to adjudicate a controversy properly before it." Colorado River Water Conservation Dist. v. United States, 424 U.S. 800, 813, 96 S. Ct. 1236, 47 L. Ed. 2d 483 (1976). It is "the exception, not the rule." Id. Colorado River instructed courts to consider several [*49] factors in determining whether to abstain in favor of a parallel proceeding in the courts of another sovereign, the most important factor being whether there exists a "clear federal policy evinc[ing] ... the avoidance of piecemeal adjudication." Id. Additional factors include how far the parallel proceeding has advanced in the other sovereign's courts, the number of defendants and complexity of the proceeding, the convenience of the parties, and whether a sovereign government is participating in the suit. See Answers in Genesis of Kentucky, Inc. v. Creation Ministries Intern., Ltd., 556 F.3d 459, 467 (6th Cir. 2009).

As to breach of contract cases, there is no clear federal policy evincing the avoidance of piecemeal adjudication. There is, however, a clear federal policy in favor of enforcing bargained for forum selection clauses. E. & J. Gallo Winery v. Andina Licores S.A., 446 F.3d 984, 991-92 (9th Cir. 2006). American courts will generally only recognize foreign judgments that are both final and valid. See Pilkington Bros. P.L.C. v. AFG Industries Inc., 581 F.Supp. 1039, 1045 (D. Del. 1984). Even where a party obtains a final and valid foreign judgment, a court may refuse to recognize the judgment "where the proceeding in the foreign court was contrary to an agreement between the parties under which the dispute in question was to be determined otherwise than by proceedings in that foreign court." 2005 Recognition Act § 4(c)(5); 1962 Recognition Act § 4(b)(5). In Bremen v. Zapata [*50] Off-Shore Co., the United States Supreme Court held that, where a choice of forum was made "in an arm's-length negotiation by experienced and sophisticated businessmen... absent some compelling and countervailing reason it should be honored by the parties and enforced by the courts." 407 U.S. 1, 11, 92 S. Ct. 1907, 32 L. Ed. 2d 513 (1972). In order to overcome this presumption a party must show that the provision in question was affected by "fraud, undue influence, or overweening bargaining power." Id. at 12. The Court concluded that, "in the light of present-day commercial realities and expanding international trade we conclude that the forum clause should control absent a strong showing that it should be set aside." Id. at 15. Circuit Courts have applied this Bremen test to choice of law provisions as well as choice of forum provisions. See Lipcon v. Underwriters at Lloyd's, London, 148 F.3d 1285, 1292 (11th Cir. 1998).

The Supply Agreements contain a choice of forum provision stating that the parties "submit to the exclusive jurisdiction and venue of the U.S. District Court for the Eastern District of Michigan for all disputes arising, directly or indirectly, under [the Supply Agreements]." Agreements I-III ¶ 21. The Supply Agreements also contain a choice of law provision, providing that the Supply Agreements "shall be governed [*51] and controlled in all respects by the laws of the State of Michigan, USA... and all disputes, including interpretation, enforceability, validity, and construction, shall be determined under the law of the State of Michigan, without regard to any conflict of law provision." Id. at ¶ 20. Michigan public policy "favors the enforcement of contractual forum-selection clauses and choice-of-law provisions." Turcheck v. Amerifund Financial, Inc., 272 Mich. App. 341, 725 N.W.2d 684, 688 (Mich. Ct. App. 2006). Importantly, Kyocera has not challenged the enforceability of either provision in its pleadings or responses.

Kyocera's antitrust defense will be stricken; first, because it does not meet the requirements of Kaiser Steele and Kosuga to be proper for this Court's determination as part of this breach of contract action, and second, because even if Kyocera obtained a final judgment from the Tokyo District court, the Supply Agreements' forum selection provision and choice of law provision would preclude this Court from recognizing the foreign judgment.

IV.

The final substantive motion before the Court at this time is Kyocera's motion for partial judgment on the pleadings. ECF No. 38. Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(c) provides that "[a]fter the pleadings are closed—but early enough not to delay trial—a party may move for judgment [*52] on the pleadings." The standard of review for a motion for judgment on the pleadings is the same as that applied to motions to dismiss under Rule 12(b)(6). See, e.g., Lindsay v. Yates, 498 F.3d 434, 438 (6th Cir.2007); Morgan v. Church's Fried Chicken, 829 F.2d 10, 11 (6th Cir.1987) (noting that where a Rule 12(b)(6) defense of failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted is raised by a Rule 12(c) motion for judgment on the pleadings, the Court must apply the standard for a Rule 12(b)(6) motion). Accordingly, "[f]or purposes of a motion for judgment on the pleadings, all well-pleaded material allegations of the pleadings of the opposing party must be taken as true, and the motion may be granted only if the moving party is nevertheless clearly entitled to judgment." JPMorgan Chase Bank, N.A. v. Winget, 510 F.3d 577, 581 (6th Cir.2007) (internal citations and quotation marks omitted).

In its Rule 12(c) motion, Kyocera requests that the Court dismiss Hemlock's claim for accelerated damages. Kyocera argues that the accelerated damages provisions in the Supply Agreements do not approximate Hemlock's actual damages but instead serve as unenforceable penalties. Hemlock responds that it is not in fact seeking accelerated termination damages in this litigation. Resp. to Mot. for J. on Pleadings, ECF No. 48.

Because Hemlock is not seeking accelerated damages at this time, and because this Court's jurisdiction extends only [*53] to actual cases and controversies, Kyocera's motion for judgment on the pleadings will be denied. If and when Hemlock seeks accelerated damages, Kyocera may renew its challenge to the accelerated damage provisions.

V.

Also before the Court is Hemlock's motion to quash non-party subpoenas issued by Kyocera. The scope of discovery is governed by Federal Rule 26(b)(1), which as of December 1, 2015 provides:

> Unless otherwise limited by court order, the scope of discovery is as follows: Parties may obtain discovery regarding any nonprivileged matter that is relevant to any party's claim or defense and proportional to the needs of the case, considering the importance of the issues at stake in the action, the amount in controversy, the parties' relative access to relevant information, the parties' resources, the importance of the discovery in resolving the issues, and whether the burden or expense of the proposed discovery outweighs its likely benefit. Information within this scope of discovery need not be admissible in evidence to be discoverable.

Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(b)(1). The 2015 Committee notes explain that "[t]he parties and the court have a collective responsibility to consider the proportionality of all discovery and consider [*54] it in resolving discovery disputes." Rule 26(b)(2)(C) provides additional limitations on the scope of discovery, explaining that the Court must limit the extent of discovery if it determines that "the discovery sought is unreasonably cumulative or duplicative, or can be obtained from some other source that is more convenient, less burdensome, or less expensive;".

Under Federal Rule 45(d)(3), upon a timely motion, the Court must quash or modify a subpoena that "requires disclosure of privileged or other protected matter, if no exception or waiver applies" or a subpoena that "subjects a person to an undue burden." Rule 45(d)(3)(A)(iii)-(iv). The Court may quash or modify a subpoena that requires disclosing trade secrets or other confidential information. Rule 45(d)(3)(B).

Hemlock moves to quash non-party subpoenas served on the following attorneys in companion cases: (1) Daniel Malone, the attorney for Deutsche Solar GmbH in Deutsche Solar and attorney for both Green Energy Technology, Inc. and Tatung Co. in Hemlock Semiconductor Corporation v. Green Energy Technology Inc., et al., No. 13-020593 (Mich. Cir. Ct. Saginaw Cnty. 2013); (2) Larry Elliot, attorney for Deutsche Solar in Deutsche Solar; and (3) David Tsai, attorney for both Green Energy and Tatung [*55] in Green Energy. Hemlock argues that the documents Kyocera seeks are subject to protective orders entered by the Courts in both Deutsche Solar and Green Energy, and that Hemlock has a privilege and proprietary interest in the documents. Hemlock further argues that the subpoenas should be quashed under Rule 45(d)(3), since Hemlock is in possession of all of the documents and depositions sought by Kyocera and because Kyocera has already requested the exact same documents from Hemlock pursuant to Rule 34. In opposition to Hemlock's motion, Kyocera argues that its third-party requests are proper because the documents have already been gathered and produced and because Hemlock has indicated that it will force Kyocera to engage in motion practice before it will produce the materials in question.

A.

"[A] party generally has no standing to seek to quash a subpoena directed to a non-party." *Systems Products and Solutions, Inc. v. Scramlin, 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 109389, 2014 WL 3894385 7 (E.D. Mich. August 8, 2014) (internal quotations and citation omitted). A party establishes standing if it carries its burden of persuading the court that it has a claim of personal interest or privilege in the material sought by the third-party subpoenas. Id. Here, because the relevant documents relate to lawsuits in which Hemlock was a party and are [*56] covered by protective orders, Hemlock has shown privilege conferring standing.

B.

At this time, Kyocera's non-party subpoenas will be provisionally quashed for two reasons: First, because the information it seeks from the non-parties is covered by protective orders, thus making it privileged material under Rule 26(b)(1); second, because the subpoenas are unreasonably cumulative or duplicative under Rule 26(b)(2)(C) and Kyocera is able to obtain the same material directly from Hemlock. If Hemlock makes the discovery process unduly expensive, inconvenient or burdensome, then this order will be revisited and Kyocera may be allowed to reissue subpoenas to the non-parties.

VI.

The final motion currently before this Court is Kyocera's motion to compel discovery. This motion will be addressed during the Rule 16(b) scheduling conference scheduled below.

VII.

Accordingly, it is ORDERED that Plaintiff Hemlock's motion to dismiss Defendant Kyocera's counterclaims, ECF No. 21, is GRANTED.

It is further ORDERED that Defendant Kyocera's counterclaims Nos. I-VII are DISMISSED.

It is further ORDERED that Plaintiff Hemlock's motion to strike Defendant Kyocera's Japanese antitrust defense, ECF No. 22, is GRANTED.

It is further ORDERED that Defendant [*57] Kyocera's Japanese antitrust defense, Affirmative Defense No. 10, is STRICKEN.

It is further ORDERED that Defendant Kyocera's motion for partial judgment on the pleadings, ECF No. 38, is DENIED without prejudice.

It is further ORDERED that Plaintiff Hemlock's motion to quash non-party subpoenas, ECF No. 24, is PROVISIONALLY GRANTED.

It is further ORDERED that the non-party subpoenas issued to Attorneys Daniel Malone, Larry Elliott, and David Tsai are QUASHED.

It is further ORDERED that a Rule 16(b) scheduling conference is SCHEDULED for March 9, 2016 at 4:00 PM at the United States Courthouse, 1000 Washington Avenue, Bay City, Michigan, 48708.

Although Fed. R. Civ. P. 15 provides that a court should freely grant leave to amend when justice so requires, Fed. R. Civ. P. 15(a)(2), Fed. R. Civ. P. 16 further provides that a pre-trial scheduling order may be modified only for good cause and with the judge's consent, Fed. R. Civ. P. 16(b)(4). Good cause depends in part on the diligence of the moving party. In addition, the court may, in its discretion, consider other relevant factors including, in particular, whether allowing the amendment of the pleading at the stage of the litigation will prejudice defendants. In addition, even where the movant shows good cause under Rule 16, it must also show that the amendment would comply with Rule 15—in other words, that amendment is not futile, is not the product of undue delay or bad faith, and would not overly prejudice the non-movant.

Civil Procedure > ... > Preclusion of Judgments > Estoppel > Collateral Estoppel

HN2[] Estoppel, Collateral Estoppel

The doctrine of non-mutual offensive collateral estoppel allows a plaintiff who was not a party to a prior judgment to use that judgment offensively to prevent a defendant from relitigating issues resolved in the earlier proceeding. Issue preclusion may only apply where: (1) the issues in both proceedings are identical; (2) the issue in the prior proceeding was actually litigated and actually decided; (3) there was full and fair opportunity to litigate in the prior proceeding; and (4) the issue previously litigated was necessary to support a valid and final judgment on the merits. The specific legal claims asserted in the second action need not be identical to those asserted in the prior action for collateral estoppel to apply. With respect to the fourth element, an issue is necessary to a prior judgment for issue preclusion purposes if its disposition was the basis for the holding with respect to the issue and not mere dictum.

Civil Procedure > ... > Preclusion of Judgments > Estoppel > Collateral Estoppel

HN3[] Estoppel, Collateral Estoppel

In the Second Circuit, each of two alternative, independent grounds for a prior holding is given effect for collateral estoppel purposes. However, if an appeal is taken and the appellate court affirms on one ground and disregards the other, there is no collateral estoppel as to the unreviewed ground. In addition, in the Second Circuit, a lower court judgment is final for purposes of collateral estoppel even while an appeal of that judgment is pending.

HN4[] Estoppel, Collateral Estoppel

A trial court has broad discretion in determining whether collateral estoppel should apply, and it should not apply the doctrine where doing so would be unfair to a defendant. For example, application of collateral estoppel may be unfair where the defendant did not have incentive to litigate the issue(s) in the first action vigorously or could not foresee follow-on actions, where the resolution of the first action is inconsistent with other previous decisions, or where procedural opportunities available to the defendant in the second action were unavailable in the first action and may have led to a different result. Finally, where collateral estoppel does apply, a plaintiff may use its application as a basis for seeking summary judgment in full or in part.

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Summary Judgment > Evidentiary Considerations

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Legal Entitlement

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Materiality of Facts

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Genuine Disputes

HN5[] Summary Judgment, Evidentiary Considerations

Summary judgment must be granted when there is no genuine dispute as to any material fact and the movant is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(c). A fact is material if it might affect the outcome of the suit under the governing law. No genuine dispute of material fact exists if the record taken as a whole could not lead a rational trier of fact to find for the non-moving party. In evaluating a motion for summary judgment, the court is required to construe the evidence in the light most favorable to the non-moving party and to draw all reasonable inferences in its favor.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > Absence of Essential Element

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > Movant Persuasion & Proof

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > Nonmovant Persuasion & Proof

HN6[] Burdens of Proof, Absence of Essential Element

A party moving for summary judgment bears the initial burden to show an absence of genuine factual dispute. Summary judgment will be granted if the opposing party then fails to make a showing sufficient to establish the existence of an element essential to that party's case, and on which that party will bear the burden of proof at trial. To defeat summary judgment, the opposing party must do more than demonstrate some metaphysical doubt as to the material facts, and may not rely on conclusory allegations.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Defenses

HN7[] Actual Monopolization, Claims

The date on which a monopolization claim accrues depends on the relationship that the plaintiff has with the defendant as either a competitor or as a purchaser of the defendant's products and services. A purchaser plaintiff's cause of action accrues when he or she actually pays an overcharge.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Defenses

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Affirmative Defenses > Laches

HN8[] Clayton Act, Defenses

After the laches period based on a statute of limitations expires, a court may, in its discretion, allow an action for equitable relief to go forward if it determines: (1) that sufficient reasons cognizable in equity excuse the delay; or (2) that the delay caused defendants no prejudice.

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Affirmative Defenses > Laches

HN9[] Affirmative Defenses, Laches

A defendant has been prejudiced by a delay when the assertion of a claim available some time ago would be inequitable in light of the delay in bringing that claim. Specifically, prejudice ensues when a defendant has changed his position in a way that would not have occurred if the plaintiff had not delayed.

Opinion

MEMORANDUM & ORDER

NICHOLAS G. GARAUFIS, United States District Judge.

In this set of consolidated antitrust actions (the "MP Actions"), Merchant Plaintiffs (the "MPs")[1] challenge under Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Antitrust Act the contracts that they have entered into with Defendants American Express Travel Related Services Company, Inc. and American Express Company (together, "Amex" or "Defendants"). Specifically, the MPs challenge Defendants' anti-steering rules, referred to as the Non-Discrimination Provisions ("NDPs"), which are contained in merchant agreements entered into between Amex and each MP. The MPs seek an order enjoining Amex from enforcing the NDPs, as well as treble damages for the injuries the MPs allege they have sustained on account of the NDPs.

Pending before the court are the parties' cross-motions for summary judgment, as well as the MPs' [*59] motions for leave to modify the Scheduling Order and amend the operative pleadings, and motion for the application of collateral estoppel. For the reasons discussed below, the MPs' motion to modify the Scheduling Order and for leave to amend is DENIED WITHOUT PREJUDICE, the MPs' motion for the application of collateral estoppel is DENIED WITHOUT PREJUDICE, and the MPs' motion for partial summary judgment is DENIED WITHOUT PREJUDICE. The court DENIES Amex's motion for summary judgment with respect to the no-surcharge rule and Amex's statute of limitations and laches defenses, and RESERVES JUDGMENT on Amex's motion for summary judgment with respect to the existence of an Amex-only market.

I. BACKGROUND AND RELEVANT PROCEDURAL HISTORY

[1] The MPs are Ahold U.S.A., Inc.; Albertson's LLC; BI-LO, LLC; CVS Pharmacy, Inc.; The Great Atlantic & Pacific Tea Company, Inc.; H.E. Butt Grocery Co.; Hy-Vee, Inc.; The Kroger Co.; Meijer, Inc.; Publix Super Markets, Inc.; Raley's Inc.; Rite Aid Corporation; Rite Aid HDQTRS Corp.; Safeway Inc.; SuperValu Inc.; and Walgreen Co.

The MP Actions comprise part of a multi-district litigation ("MDL") pending before the court, and the court addresses the parties' motions with the benefit of having presided over the coordinated litigation for several years,[2] as well as the seven-week bench trial in the related case captioned United States, et al. v. American Express Co., et al., No. 10-CV-4496 (E.D.N.Y.) (NGG) (RER), appeal docketed, No. 15-1672-CV (2d Cir.) (the "Government Action"). See [*60] Rite Aid Corp. v. Am. Express Travel Related Servs. Co., 708 F. Supp. 2d 257 (E.D.N.Y. 2010) (the "SOL Decision") (denying Defendants' motion for judgment on the pleadings in the MP Actions); United States v. Am. Express Co., 88 F. Supp. 3d 143 (E.D.N.Y. 2015) (the "Government Decision") (findings of fact and conclusions of law in the Government Action); United States v. Am. Express Co., No. 10-CV-4496 (NGG) (RER), 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 56945, 2015 WL 1966362 (E.D.N.Y. Apr. 30, 2015) (setting forth reasoning behind terms of Permanent Injunction in the Government Action).

In order to describe and address the parties' pending motions, the court first must provide a brief outline of the procedural history of the MP Actions. In 2008, certain of the MPs filed antitrust actions against Amex in this court.[3] After answering each Complaint, Amex moved for judgment on the pleadings, arguing that all of the MPs' claims are barred by the Sherman Act's four-year statute of limitations. On March 3, 2010, the court denied the motion, holding that the MPs alleged facts that, if true, would allow both their Section 1 and 2 claims to proceed under exceptions to the Sherman Act's four-year statute of limitations. See generally SOL Decision, 708 F. Supp. 2d at 264-72; see also infra Part III.B.3 (addressing Amex's motion for summary [*61] judgment on its statute of limitations and laches defenses).

In October 2010, the Department of Justice and the attorneys general of eighteen states filed the Government Action against Amex, MasterCard, and Visa. In 2011, several new MPs filed antitrust actions against Amex, asserting claims similar to those alleged by the original MPs.[4] The MP Actions (including those actions filed in 2008 and those filed in 2011) and the Government Action against Amex[5] proceeded to coordinated discovery.

In late 2013, Amex moved for summary judgment in both the Government Action and the MP Actions, and moved to consolidate the actions for trial. (See Not. of Mot. for Summ. J. (Dkt. 276)[6]; Not. of Mot. to Consolidate for the Purpose of Trial (Dkt. 279); Not. of Mot. for Summ. J. (Dkt. 281 in Gov't Action).) In the MP Actions, Amex argued that: (1) the MPs' alleged Amex-only market fails as a matter of law; (2) the MPs' claims related to Amex's NDP prohibiting differential surcharging (the "no-surcharge rule") should be dismissed; and (3) the evidentiary record reflects that no exceptions to the four-year statute of limitations apply, and the claims of all MPs except Albertson's LLC ("Albertsons") are therefore time-barred.[7] (See Mem. of Law in Supp. of Defs.' Mot. for Summ. J. ("Defs.' Original Mem.") (Dkt. 277-1) (filed under seal); Reply Mem. of Law in Further Supp. of Defs.' Mot. for Summ. [*63] J. ("Defs.' Original Reply") (Dkt. 308-1) (filed under seal).) The MPs opposed Amex's motion, but they did not cross-move for summary judgment at that time. (MPs' Opp'n to Defs.' Mot. for Summ. J. ("MPs' Original Mem.") (Dkt. 287-1) (filed under seal); MPs' Sur-Reply in Opp'n to Defs.' Mot. for Summ. J. (Dkt. 324).) In connection with Amex's motion, the parties filed voluminous factual materials and 56.1 statements, which the court has reviewed.

On March 19, 2014, the court held oral argument on Amex's motions for summary judgment in the Government Action and the MP Actions. (See Mar. 20, 2014, Min. Entry.) The court denied Amex's motion for summary judgment in the Government Action in May 2014. (See May 7, 2014, Mem. & Order (Dkt. 369 in Gov't Action).) Separately, the court denied Amex's motion to consolidate the actions for the purpose of trial (see generally Feb. 11, 2014, Order (Dkt. 335)), and stayed the MP Actions during the [*64] pendency of a motion for final settlement approval in consolidated class actions that comprise part of the MDL and in which the MPs are putative class members[8] (see Class Settlement Preliminary Approval Order (Dkt. 333)). At that time, the court reserved judgment on Amex's motion for summary judgment in the MP Actions.

The Government Action proceeded to trial before the court during the summer of 2014. On February 19, 2015, the court issued the Government Decision, see 88 F. Supp. 3d at 143, finding by a preponderance of the evidence that the specific NDPs challenged by the Government[9] violate Section 1.[10] After receiving additional briefing from the parties to the Government Action, as well as other interested parties including the MPs, the court issued a Permanent Injunction on April [*65] 30, 2015 (see Order Entering Permanent Injunction as to the American Express Defs. (Dkt. 638 in Gov't Action)), as well as a Memorandum setting forth its reasoning concerning the scope of the Permanent Injunction, see Am. Express Co., 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 56945, 2015 WL 1966362.

Amex subsequently moved to stay the implementation of the Permanent Injunction pending its appeal of the Government Decision; the court denied the motion on May 19, 2015, holding, among other things, that Amex could not show that there was a substantial possibility that it would prevail on the merits of its appeal. (See May [*66] 19, 2015, Order (Dkt. 663 in Gov't Action).) Amex thereafter filed a notice of appeal (Not. of Appeal (Dkt. 664 in Gov't Action)), and sought a stay pending appeal from the Second Circuit. On June 16, 2015, a three-judge panel of the Second Circuit denied the motion. (See June 16, 2015, Order of U.S. Court of Appeals (Dkt. 687 in Gov't Action).)

During a status conference on July 7, 2015, the court lifted the stay of the MP Actions and set a trial date; the court also granted the MPs leave to file a motion to amend the operative pleadings and a cross-motion for summary judgment on the basis of collateral estoppel. (See July 7, 2015, Min. Entry.) Accordingly, the following motions are now pending before the court: (1) Amex's motion for summary judgment (filed in the fall of 2013 and discussed above); (2) the MPs' motion for leave to amend the operative pleadings (see MPs' Mot. to Suppl. or Amend Compls. (Dkt. 667)); (3) the MPs' motion for collateral estoppel (see MPs' Mot. for Collateral Estoppel (Dkt. 663)); and (4) the MPs' motions for partial summary judgment on liability under Sections 1 and 2 (see Albertson's LLC's Mot. for Partial Summ. J. on Liability under § 1 (Dkt. 664); MPs' Mot. for Partial [*67] Summ. J. under § 1 (Dkt. 665); MPs' Mot. for Partial Summ. J. on Liability under § 2 (Dkt. 666)).[11] With respect to the MPs' motions, the parties have

[8] On August 4, 2015, the court ultimately denied the joint motion of class plaintiffs and Amex for final approval of their proposed class action settlement. See In re Am. Express Anti-Steering Rules Antitrust Litig., No. 11-MD-2221 (NGG) (RER), 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 102714, 2015 WL 4645240 (E.D.N.Y. Aug. 4, 2015). Various class actions related to Amex's NDPs, as well as a related class action captioned Marcus Corp. v. American Express Co., No. 13-CV-7355 (E.D.N.Y.) (NGG) (RER), remain pending before the court.

[9] The MPs challenge the same NDPs at issue in the Government Action, as well as two additional provisions contained in the NDPs that the Government did not challenge: (1) the no-surcharge rule, a provision prohibiting merchants from imposing a fee for the use of an Amex card that is not imposed equally on all other payment products (i.e., prohibiting merchants from differentially surcharging Amex cards vis-a-vis its competitors' cards), and (2) a provision prohibiting merchants from mischaracterizing Amex cards or engaging in activities that harm Amex's business or brand. See Government Decision, 88 F. Supp. 3d at 163.

filed consolidated briefs discussing the impact of the Government Action as well as the factual record developed in the MP Actions. (See MPs' Omnibus Mem. ("MPs' Suppl. Mem.") (Dkt. 668-1) (filed under seal); Defs.' Mem. of Law in Further Supp. of Defs.' Mot. for Summ. J. and in Opp'n to MPs' Mots. ("Defs.' Suppl. Mem.") (Dkt. 687-1) (filed under seal); MPs' Reply Br. in Supp. of Mots. (Dkt. 694-1) (filed under seal).) On November 12, 2015, the court heard oral argument on the pending motions in the MP Actions. (See Nov. 13, 2015, Min. Entry.)

On December 17, 2015, a panel of the Second Circuit held oral argument on Amex's appeal of the Government Decision. On December 18, 2015, the panel entered on its own motion a temporary stay of the Permanent Injunction and a temporary stay of the Government Action in this court. (See Dec. 18, 2015, Order of U.S. Court of Appeals (Dkt. 697 in Gov't Action).) As of the entry [*68] of this Memorandum and Order, the Second Circuit has not issued a decision in the appeal of the Government Action.[12]

II. MPs' MOTIONS BASED ON GOVERNMENT DECISION

The court first addresses the MPs' motions for leave to amend the pleadings and for the application of collateral estoppel in each of the MP Actions. For the reasons discussed below, the motions are DENIED WITHOUT PREJUDICE.

A. Legal Standards

1. Leave to Amend

HN1[] Although Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 15 provides that a court "should freely grant leave when justice so requires," Fed. R. Civ. P. 15(a)(2), Rule 16 further provides that a pre-trial scheduling order "may be modified only for good cause and with the judge's consent," Fed. R. Civ. P. 16(b)(4). See also Parker v. Columbia Pictures Indus., 204 F.3d 326, 340 (2d Cir. 2000) (discussing the interaction between Rule 15 and Rule 16 and "holding that despite the lenient standard of Rule 15(a), a district court does not abuse its discretion in denying leave to amend the pleadings after the deadline set in the scheduling order where the moving party has failed to establish good cause"). In Parker, the Second Circuit explained that good [*69] cause depends in part on the diligence of the moving party. 204 F.3d at 340. In addition, the court may, in its discretion, "consider other relevant factors including, in particular, whether allowing the amendment of the pleading at this stage of the litigation will prejudice defendants." Kassner v. 2nd Ave. Delicatessen Inc., 496 F.3d 229, 244 (2d Cir. 2007).

In addition, even where the movant shows good cause under Rule 16, it must also show that the amendment would comply with Rule 15—in other words, that amendment is not futile, is not the product of undue delay or bad faith, and would not overly prejudice the non-movant.[13] See, e.g., *Joinnides v. Floral Park-Bellerose Union Sch. Dist., No. 12-CV-5682 (JS) (AKT), 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 42933, 2015 WL 1476422, at 15 (E.D.N.Y. Mar. 31, 2015) ("If the party seeking the amendment satisfies the 'good cause' standard of Rule 16(b), the court then determines whether the movant also meets the liberal standards of Rule 15(a)." (citing Kassner, 496 F.3d at 244)).

2. Collateral Estoppel

[11] Also pending before the court are four fully briefed motions in limine, which the court does not address in this Memorandum and Order.

[12] The court does not construe the panel's December 18, 2015, Order as having any jurisdictional effect on the MP Actions, which were separately filed from the Government Action and are not currently before the Second Circuit.

[13] In the context of an amendment to a pleading, certain of the typical Rule 15 inquiries merge, in effect, with the Rule 16 inquiry, such as prejudice to the non-movant. Others, however, do not, including whether the amendment is futile even if the movant shows good cause to modify the scheduling order.

HN2[] The doctrine of non-mutual offensive collateral estoppel allows a plaintiff who was not [*70] a party to a prior judgment to "use that judgment 'offensively' to prevent a defendant from relitigating issues resolved in the earlier proceeding." Parklane Hosiery Co. v. Shore, 439 U.S. 322, 326, 99 S. Ct. 645, 58 L. Ed. 2d 552 (1979); see also Montana v. United States, 440 U.S. 147, 153, 99 S. Ct. 970, 59 L. Ed. 2d 210 (1979) ("Under collateral estoppel, once an issue is actually and necessarily determined by a court of competent jurisdiction, that determination is conclusive in subsequent suits based on a different cause of action involving a party to the prior litigation."). Issue preclusion may only apply where: "(1) the issues in both proceedings are identical, (2) the issue in the prior proceeding was actually litigated and actually decided, (3) there was full and fair opportunity to litigate in the prior proceeding, and (4) the issue previously litigated was necessary to support a valid and final judgment on the merits." In re PCH Assocs., 949 F.2d 585, 593 (2d Cir. 1991).[14] The specific legal claims asserted in the second action need not be identical to those asserted in the prior action for collateral estoppel to apply. See Parklane Hosiery, 439 U.S. at 326 n.5 ("Under the doctrine of collateral estoppel . . ., the second action is upon a different cause of action and the judgment in the prior suit precludes relitigation of issues actually litigated and necessary to the outcome of the first action."). With respect to the fourth [*71] element, "[a]n issue is necessary to a prior judgment for issue preclusion purposes if its disposition was the basis for the holding with respect to the issue and not mere dictum." MTS, Inc. v. 200 E. 87th St. Assocs., 899 F. Supp. 1180, 1184 (S.D.N.Y. 1995) (internal quotation marks and citations omitted); see also RX Data Corp. v. Dep't of Soc. Servs., 684 F.2d 192, 197 (2d Cir. 1982) (explaining that collateral estoppel applies if the prior determination was "necessary and essential to the judgment in that action"); Restatement (Second) of Judgements § 27 cmt. j ("The appropriate question, then, is whether the issue was actually recognized by the parties as important and by the trier as necessary to the first judgment.").

HN3[] In the Second Circuit, "each of two alternative, independent grounds for a prior holding is given effect for collateral estoppel purposes."[15] Purdy v. Zeldes, 337 F.3d 253, 258 n.6 (2d Cir. 2003); see also Gelb v. Royal Globe Ins. Co., 798 F.2d 38, 45 (2d Cir. 1986); Irving Nat'l Bank v. Law, 10 F.2d 721, 724 (2d Cir. 1926) (Hand, J.). "However, if an appeal is taken and the appellate court affirms on one ground and disregards the other, there is no collateral [*73] estoppel as to the unreviewed ground." Gelb, 798 F.2d at 45. In addition, in the Second Circuit, a lower court judgment is "final" for purposes of collateral estoppel even while an appeal of that judgment is pending. See United States v. Int'l Bhd. of Teamsters, 905 F.2d 610, 620-21 (2d Cir. 1990).

[14] The MPs argue that the Supreme Court's recent decision in B&B Hardware Inc. v. Hargis Industries Inc., 135 S. Ct. 1293, 191 L. Ed. 2d 222 (2015), broadened the identicality standard into an inquiry concerning whether the two issues in the two actions are not "materially unlike." (See. e.g., MPs' Suppl. Mem. at 22 ("The question is whether steering by discounting is 'materially unlike' steering by surcharging in a manner that has 'legal significance' . . . .").)

The court is not convinced that the Supreme Court's decision in B&B Hardware went so far. There, in holding that findings from a registration challenge to a trademark in the Trademark Trial and Appeal Board ("TTAB") could apply to a later infringement action brought in federal court, [*72] the Court noted that if the same usage of a trademark is at issue in the registration proceeding and the district court proceeding, then the "issues" to be decided in the context of the likelihood of confusion test are likely identical, but that if "a mark owner [later] uses its mark in ways that are materially unlike the usages in its [previous TTAB] application, then the TTAB is not deciding the same issue" as presented in the later federal action based on the later use of the mark. B&B Hardware, 135 S. Ct. at 1308. Nothing in the Court's analysis indicates that its use of the "materially unlike" framework applies outside of the factual context of the case—i.e., whether determinations made about a usage of a mark in the first action apply to a similar analysis of a materially similar usage of a mark in the second action. Cf. id. ("A fortiori, if the TTAB considers a different mark altogether, issue preclusion would not apply.").

[15] This differs from the approach of other circuits, see, e.g., Turney v. O'Toole, 898 F.2d 1470, 1472 n.1 (10th Cir. 1990) ("Because either proposed reason would have been a sufficient ground for granting the writ, it cannot be said that either issue was actually and necessarily decided."), as well as the Restatement of Judgments, see Restatement (Second) of Judgements § 27 cmt. i ("If a judgment of a court of first instance is based on determinations of two issues, either of which standing independently would be sufficient to support the result, the judgment is not conclusive with respect to either issue standing alone.").

HN4[] A trial court has broad discretion in determining whether collateral estoppel should apply, and it should not apply the doctrine where doing so would be unfair to a defendant. Parklane Hosiery, 439 U.S. at 331; see also, e.g., PenneCom B.V. v. Merrill Lynch & Co., 372 F.3d 488, 493 (2d Cir. 2004) ("[C]ollateral estoppel is an equitable doctrine—not a matter of absolute right. Its invocation is influenced by considerations of fairness in the individual case."); Remington Rand Corp. v. Amsterdam-Rotterdam Bank, N.V., 68 F.3d 1478, 1486 (2d Cir. 1995) ("Despite the economies achieved by use of collateral estoppel, it is not to be mechanically applied, for it is capable of [*74] producing extraordinarily harsh and unfair results."). For example, application of collateral estoppel may be unfair where the defendant did not have incentive to litigate the issue(s) in the first action vigorously or could not foresee follow-on actions, where the resolution of the first action is inconsistent with other previous decisions, or where procedural opportunities available to the defendant in the second action were unavailable in the first action and may have led to a different result. Parklane Hosiery, 439 U.S. at 331-32.

Finally, where collateral estoppel does apply, a plaintiff may use its application as a basis for seeking summary judgment in full or in part. See, e.g., id. at 324 (affirming grant of partial summary judgment through application of non-mutual offensive collateral estoppel); Discover Fin. Servs. v. Visa U.S.A. Inc., 598 F. Supp. 2d 394, 397 (S.D.N.Y. 2008) (granting in part and denying in part the plaintiffs motion for partial summary judgment on the basis of collateral estoppel).

B. Discussion

The MPs only seek leave to amend their alleged market definition to conform to the Government Action in the event that the court finds it appropriate to give preclusive effect to that issue. Accordingly, the court first turns to the MPs' motion for collateral estoppel.

The parties offer widely [*75] diverging views on the appropriateness of applying collateral estoppel in this action. Under the MPs' approach, collateral estoppel would allow the court to enter summary judgment in their favor on their claims under both Sections 1 and 2, including claims related to the no-surcharge rule, leaving as the only triable issues of fact Amex's statute of limitations defense and damages. According to Defendants, the MPs' attempt to apply broadly the findings from the Government Action to the MP Actions is improper, and, given the number of issues that cannot be resolved by the application of collateral estoppel, there would be no efficiency gained by a more limited application.

The court first notes that the application of collateral estoppel is not uncommon in the context of private antitrust actions that follow a successful government enforcement action. See, e.g., Univac Dental Co. v. Dentsply Intl, Inc., 702 F. Supp. 2d 465, 491 (M.D. Pa. 2010) (adopting report and recommendation) ("These principles apply with particular force to a case such as this, where many of the questions raised in this private antitrust action arise out of the precise business practices which have been thoroughly, comprehensively and fairly litigated in the prior case brought by the United States. In such [*76] instances, the use of the offensive issue preclusion doctrine to resolve fully litigated issues as a matter of law has been expressly endorsed by the courts." (citations omitted)); Discover, 598 F. Supp. 2d at 397-401 (applying collateral estoppel to certain core antitrust issues following the Second Circuit's affirmance of the Government's action against Visa and MasterCard).

However, considering the current posture of the Government Decision and the court's discretion in determining whether to apply collateral estoppel, the court defers a resolution of the MPs' motion for collateral estoppel until after the Second Circuit reaches a decision in the appeal of the Government Action. The MPs have not identified any case, nor is the court aware of any case, in which a district court gave preclusive effect to such a significant set of antitrust issues during the pendency of a merits appeal of the first-decided action. To apply collateral estoppel under such circumstances—even assuming each of the four elements were met as to each issue—would be unfair to Defendants. In addition, depending on the Second Circuit's resolution of the appeal of the Government Action, the application of collateral estoppel at this stage in the [*77] proceeding could, in fact, create inefficiencies. Accordingly, the court DENIES WITHOUT PREJUDICE the MPs' motion for collateral estoppel, with leave to renew the application following the Second Circuit's decision in the Government Action.

Because the court denies the MPs' motion for collateral estoppel, it need not determine whether there is good cause to amend the Scheduling Order under Rule 16, or whether leave to amend should be granted under Rule 15. Accordingly, the court DENIES WITHOUT PREJUDICE the MPs' motions for leave to amend the Scheduling Order and to amend the operative pleadings' alleged product market, with leave to renew the motions following the Second Circuit's decision in the Government Action.

III. CROSS-MOTIONS FOR SUMMARY JUDGMENT

The MPs move for summary judgment on the basis of collateral estoppel and, for certain issues, collateral estoppel combined with record evidence. Because the court declines to apply collateral estoppel at this stage of the proceeding, see supra Part II.B, the MPs' motion for summary judgment is DENIED WITHOUT PREJUDICE, with leave to renew their application following the Second Circuit's decision in the Government Action and in advance of trial.

Amex [*78] moves for summary judgment on three distinct issues: (1) the alleged Amex-only market, (2) the MPs' claims related to the no-surcharge rule, and (3) Amex's statute of limitations and laches defenses as to all MPs except Albertsons. For the reasons discussed below, the court (1) RESERVES JUDGMENT on Amex's motion for summary judgment on the Amex-only market until after the Second Circuit's resolution of the appeal of the Government Action, (2) DENIES summary judgment as to the no-surcharge rule, and (3) DENIES summary judgment as to Amex's statute of limitations and laches defenses.

A. Legal Standards

1. Summary Judgment

HN5[] Summary judgment must be granted when "there is no genuine dispute as to any material fact and the movant is entitled to judgment as a matter of law." Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(c). A fact is material if it "might affect the outcome of the suit under the governing law." Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc., 477 U.S. 242, 248, 106 S. Ct. 2505, 91 L. Ed. 2d 202 (1986). No genuine dispute of material fact exists if "the record taken as a whole could not lead a rational trier of fact to find for the non-moving party." Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 587, 106 S. Ct. 1348, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538 (1986). In evaluating a motion for summary judgment, the court "is required to construe the evidence in the light most favorable to the non-moving party and to draw all reasonable inferences [*79] in its favor." Trammell v. Keane, 338 F.3d 155, 161 (2d Cir. 2003); see also Anderson, 477 U.S. at 255 ("The evidence of the non-movant is to be believed, and all justifiable inferences are to be drawn in his favor.").

HN6[] The moving party bears the initial burden to show an absence of genuine factual dispute. See Adickes v. S. H. Kress & Co., 398 U.S. 144, 157, 90 S. Ct. 1598, 26 L. Ed. 2d 142 (1970). Summary judgment will be granted if the opposing party then "fails to make a showing sufficient to establish the existence of an element essential to that party's case, and on which that party will bear the burden of proof at trial." Celotex Corp. v. Catrett, 477 U.S. 317, 322, 106 S. Ct. 2548, 91 L. Ed. 2d 265 (1986). To defeat summary judgment, the opposing party must do more than demonstrate "some metaphysical doubt as to the material facts," Matsushita, 475 U.S. at 586, and may not rely on "conclusory allegations," Twin Labs., Inc. v. Weider Health & Fitness, 900 F.2d 566, 568 (2d Cir. 1990).

2. Statute of Limitations and Laches

In the SOL Decision, the court set forth the standards governing the statute of limitations and the relevant exceptions, see 708 F. Supp. 2d at 257, which the court again outlines below.

a. Section 2 Claim

With respect to the MPs' Section 2 claim, the court explained that HN7[] "[t]he date on which a section two monopolization claim accrues depends on the relationship that the plaintiff has with the defendant as either a competitor or as a purchaser of the defendant's products and services." SOL Decision, 708 F. Supp. 2d at 264 (citing Berkey Photo v. Eastman Kodak Co., 603 F.2d 263, 295-96 (2d Cir. 1979)). "A purchaser plaintiff's cause of action [such as the MPs'] [*80] accrues when he or she actually pays an overcharge." Id. Accordingly, the court held, "[u]nder Berkey's purchaser rule, Plaintiffs' section two overcharge claims accrued when they paid Amex a supracompetitive merchant discount fee. The statute of limitations in this context only bars Plaintiffs' claims based on overcharges outside of the limitations period—i.e. overcharges paid more than four years before filing suit." Id. at 265.

b. Section 1 Claim

With respect to the MPs' Section 1 claim, the court first explained that "[u]nder Zenith's general accrual rule, any section one cause of action arising out Amex's merchant agreements accrued on the date that Plaintiffs' merchant agreements took effect." Id. at 265 (citing Zenith Radio Corp. v. Hazeltine Research, Inc., 401 U.S. 321, 338, 91 S. Ct. 795, 28 L. Ed. 2d 77 (1971)). Because all MPs other than Albertsons filed suit more than four years after their respective merchant agreements took effect, the court considered whether the speculative damages exception and/or the continuing violation exception could apply to the MPs' Section 1 claim as alleged. Id. at 266-72.

First, the court concluded that the MPs adequately alleged that at the time they signed their merchant acceptance agreements with Amex, damages caused by Amex's alleged overcharges were speculative, since they could not have been reasonably estimated. [*81] Id. at 266. In other words, the speculative damages exception, first announced in Zenith, 401 U.S. at 339, "applies in this circuit if the fact of damage is uncertain or if the nature and amount of damages cannot be reasonably estimated." Id. The court explained that at the time each MP signed its merchant agreement, "the amount of Plaintiffs' damages arising from Amex's supracompetitive discount fees could not have been reasonably estimated," since "[t]he merchant agreements did not specify the payment schedule or the quantity of Plaintiffs' purchases of Amex payment services: when, how large, and how many Amex retail transactions Plaintiffs would process." Id. at 266-67. Moreover, the court explained, "[e]ven if these terms could have been estimated when Plaintiffs executed the merchant agreements, Amex retained the ability to unilaterally change the discount fee after the agreements' initial terms." Id. at 267.

Here, the court noted that Amex could present evidence following discovery showing that future damages could have been reasonably estimated, and addressed the potential interplay between the speculative damages exception and the purchaser-accrual rule under Section 2:

> Following discovery, Amex may introduce evidence showing that future damages flowing [*82] from Plaintiffs' merchant agreements could have been reasonably estimated when they became effective. If future damages were not speculative when the agreements became effective, the cause of action to collect them would also have accrued at that time. If damages were not speculative, Plaintiffs' section two claims may also be time-barred. As discussed above, Berkey's purchaser accrual rule is based on the rationale that a purchaser's damages for paying overcharges are "entirely speculative" until the purchaser actually pays the overcharge. If damages from Amex's overcharges could have been reasonably estimated based on the terms contained in the merchant agreements, the justification for the purchaser accrual rule may not apply.

Id. at 267.

Next, the court concluded that the MPs also adequately alleged that the continuing violation exception applied. Id. at 267-72. The court explained that "[i]n cases challenging illegal contracts made effective before the limitations period and that remain effective during the limitations period, the continuing-violation question is whether acts within the limitations period toll the cause of action challenging the underlying contract." Id. at 268. Again noting the alleged speculative [*83] nature of the MPs' damages, the court surveyed the relevant case law and held that contractual performance can qualify as an "overt act" for purposes of restarting the four-year statute of limitations where damages are otherwise speculative; here, as alleged, Amex's mere collection of discount fee payments could not qualify as an overt act as a matter of law, since such an act is not new and independent, but Amex's alleged unilateral increases to its merchant discount fee during the contractual period could qualify as an overt act, and therefore restart the statute of limitations. Id. at 268-72. Thus, the court held, "[u]nder the continuing violation exception, Plaintiffs' section one claims are not barred to the extent that they seek damages based on fee adjustments that Amex implemented within four years before Plaintiffs filed suit." Id. at 272.

c. Claims for Equitable Relief

Finally, with respect to the MPs' claims for equitable relief, the court explained that the Clayton Act's four-year statute of limitations does not apply to claims for equitable relief, but that a four-year period of laches does apply to such claims. Id. at 272. "After the four-year laches period expires, a court may, in its discretion, allow an action [*84] for equitable relief to go forward if it determines '(1) that sufficient reasons cognizable in equity excuse the delay or (2) that the delay caused defendants no prejudice.'" Id. (quoting Argus Inc. v. Eastman Kodak Co., 552 F. Supp. 589, 599 (S.D.N.Y. 1982)). Because the parties had not specifically addressed the applicability of the laches defense in their briefing, the court declined to reach the issue in the SOL Decision. See id.

B. Discussion

1. Amex-only Market

Amex continues to press its argument that a reasonable jury could not find that there is an Amex-only product market, and argues that the findings made against Amex in the Government Decision only reinforce this argument. Considering the analytical significance of the alleged product market to the MPs' claims, and that the MPs may ultimately renew their motions for leave to amend the pleadings and for the application of collateral estoppel following the Second Circuit's decision, the court RESERVES JUDGMENT on this ground.

2. No-surcharge Rule

Defendants argue that a reasonable jury could not find that the no-surcharge rule is an antitrust violation. The court disagrees. There is ample evidence in the record in the MP Actions from which a reasonable jury could find that for purposes of Section 1, the no-surcharge [*85] rule has an adverse effect on competition and that the procompetitive justifications of the no-surcharge rule do not outweigh any anticompetitive effects, or that for purposes of Section 2, the no-surcharge rule is a form of maintaining monopoly power, and that there is not a valid business reason for it.[16] The court again notes that the Government Action did not include a challenge to the no-surcharge rule; however, should the Second Circuit's decision in the Government Action affect the analysis of the no-surcharge rule, Defendants may seek leave to renew their motion for summary judgment on this ground in advance of trial, or move for judgment as a matter of law during or after trial.

First, contrary to Defendants' arguments, the cases they cite do not establish that, as a matter of law, the no-surcharge rule is not an unreasonable restraint and/or is pro-competitive. (See Defs.' Original Mem. at 21-24; Defs.' Original Reply at 22-23; Defs.' Suppl. Mem. at 26-28 (all discussing Tennessean Truckstop, Inc. v. NTS, Inc., 875 F.2d 86, 90 (6th Cir. 1989) and Kartell v. Blue Shield of Massachusetts, 749 F.2d 922 (1st Cir. 1984) (Breyer J.)).)

[16] Because the court finds that summary judgment is inappropriate even if the no-surcharge rule is analyzed unbundled from the rest of the NDPs, it need not reach the MPs' argument that consideration of the no-surcharge rule in isolation is legally impermissible. (See MPs' Original Mem. at 38-40 (arguing that principles set forth in Continental v. Union Carbide & Carbon Corp., 370 U.S. 690, 82 S. Ct. 1404, 8 L. Ed. 2d 777 (1962), preclude consideration of one alleged restraint without consideration of the others); Defs.' Original Reply at 23-24 (arguing that consideration of the no-surcharge rule in isolation [*86] is appropriate because regulators and Congress have elected to treat discounting and surcharging differently).)

In Tennessean Truckstop, the Sixth Circuit held that a merchant challenging a network services provider's contractual provision prohibiting it from imposing a surcharge over 5% of the price of the good failed to allege antitrust injury. 875 F.2d at 87-88. According to the Sixth Circuit, the merchant's complaint failed to allege an injury to competition and merely alleged that it lost profits due to the network services provider's conduct. Id. at 88. Here, however, the MPs allege (and have offered evidence tending to show) that the no-surcharge rule prevents Amex-accepting merchants from imposing a surcharge on any credit card transaction, thereby eliminating any incentive for network services providers to compete horizontally on price. Tennessean Truckstop is therefore distinguishable [*87] on at least this ground.

In Kartell, doctors challenged a health insurer's program in which the insurer agreed to pay participating doctors a pre-set, capped price as payment in full for medical services rendered to insureds, but under which the doctors could not raise the price or surcharge insureds above the price the insurer agreed to pay. 749 F.2d at 923-24. Writing for the panel, and noting the uniqueness of the health insurance industry, then-Judge Breyer explained that the program was not an unlawful restraint in violation of Section 1, since the insurer "in essence 'buys' medical services for the account of others," and merely "obtained prices [on behalf of the insureds] that reflected its market power." Id. at 925, 928. In other words, the conduct at issue was simply an agreement between a buyer (the insurer) and a seller (the doctors) regarding price—"[w]hether or not that price bargain is, in fact, reasonable is, legally speaking, beside the point." Id. at 928. Indeed, the court noted that "the prices at issue here are low prices, not high prices," and "the Congress that enacted the Sherman Act saw it as a way of protecting consumers against prices that were too high, not too low." Id. at 930-31 (emphasis in original).

Here, however, the MPs have [*88] offered evidence tending to show that they, the purchasers of Amex's services, are paying higher prices as a result of the NDPs' inhibition on horizontal price competition, including through the no-surcharge rule. In addition, the MPs have also offered evidence tending to show that because merchants pass the costs of network services through to consumers, those consumers who pay with forms of payment other than Amex cards pay a higher price for those goods, "effectively subsidiz[ing] the purchases made by customers who use higher-cost Amex cards." (MPs' Original Mem. at 42.) And again, like Tennessean Truckstop, Kartell lacked any allegation by the plaintiff that the insurance program eliminated horizontal competition across the entire product market.

The facts of Kartell also differ from this case in an important way. As another district court has observed, the holding in Kartell flowed in large part from "the First Circuit's reliance on the concept that [the insurer] was acting as a purchaser when it purchased, on behalf of its enrollees, services from doctors at the lowest possible prices." United States v. Delta Dental of R.I., 943 F. Supp. 2d 172, 177 (D.R.I. 1996) (adopting report and recommendation); cf. Drug Mart Pharmacy Corp. v. Am. Home Prods. Corp., 472 F. Supp. 2d 385, 401 (E.D.N.Y. 2007) ("In short, a chorus of judicial opinion has proclaimed that [*89] when insurers purchase health services and pharmaceuticals for the benefit of their members, they are treated like purchasers under the antitrust laws." (emphasis in original) (footnote omitted)). But Amex does not purchase goods and services from merchants on behalf of its cardholders; rather, it provides card-payment services to cardholders and card-acceptance services to merchants as a way of facilitating a transaction between cardholder and merchant, and in doing so, collects a fee from the merchant. The MPs allege that in this capacity, and through the NDPs, Amex prohibits the merchant from expressing any preference (through a surcharge or otherwise) for any other "facilitator" (such as Visa or MasterCard) that may charge the merchant a lesser fee to facilitate the very same transaction between merchant and cardholder. Cf. Kartell, 749 F.2d at 925-26 (limiting its analysis to "contracts in which those who directly provide goods or services to insureds have agreed to cap or forego completely additional charges to those insureds in return for direct payment by the insurer"). Amex does not "cap" the prices that merchants charge to its cardholders for goods or services—in other words, nothing in the NDPs prohibits [*90] a merchant from raising the price of each of the goods it offers by $2 or 2% to account for rising costs of network services and then passing that cost through to Amex cardholders.[17]

[17] Of course, Amex does not make the parallel argument that the NM's' prohibition on merchant discounting (as opposed to surcharging) ensures lower prices for its cardholders. A discount offered by a merchant for the cardholder's use of an Amex card would, in fact, result in lower prices for Amex cardholders. But the NDPs prevent such conduct by merchants.

Second, Defendants present a public policy argument, focusing primarily on the fact that some states, including New York, have enacted statutes prohibiting merchant surcharging but no other forms of steering; indeed, New York's statute was recently upheld by the Second Circuit following a First Amendment challenge by merchants, see *Expressions Hair Design v. Schneiderman, 803 F.3d 94, 2015 WL 8537667, at 1 (2d Cir. 2015) (am. opinion).[18] However, while this public policy argument may be relevant, it cannot establish whether, for antitrust purposes, a parallel contractual restraint imposed by a market participant with market or monopoly power survives Sherman Act scrutiny. Even Defendants acknowledge that their public policy arguments cannot "immunize" their conduct, [*91] but rather, only serve to "reinforce the holdings of the relevant appellate case law," which the court has distinguished above. (See Defs.' Original Reply at 24.)

3. Statute of Limitations and Laches Defenses

Finally, the court denies Defendants' motion for summary judgment with respect to each of their statute of limitations and laches defenses.

a. Section 2

With respect to the Section 2 claim, the parties dispute the meaning and intent of the court's SOL Decision. According to the MPs, "Amex's limitations defense only defines the time period for which the MPs can seek damages on [their] Section 2 claims, and cannot preclude Amex's liability." (MPs' Suppl. Mem. at 35-36.) Amex counters that the court's SOL Decision left open the possibility that the timeliness of the Section 2 claim "could turn on the factual record concerning whether damages were speculative." (Defs.' Suppl. Mem. at 17.)

Although the court previously stated in its discussion of the MPs' Section 1 claim that a showing [*92] by Amex that the MPs' Section 1 damages were not speculative may also render the purchaser-accrual rule inapplicable to the MPs' Section 2 claims, the court remains unconvinced that, as a matter of law, a defendant who successfully challenges an antitrust plaintiff's assertion of the Section 1 speculative damages exception thereby defeats the plaintiff's assertion of the Section 2 purchaser-accrual doctrine. Although Berkey's discussion of the Section 2 purchaser-accrual exception does invoke language from Zenith addressing speculative damages under Section 1, see Berkey, 603 F.2d at 295 ("Plainly, at the time a monopolist commits anticompetitive conduct it is entirely speculative how much damage that action will cause its purchasers in the future."), Berkey also makes clear that "[s]o long as a monopolist continues to use the power it has gained illicitly to overcharge its customers, it has no claim on the repose that a statute of limitations is intended to provide," id. See also id. at 296 ("The taint of an impure origin does not dissipate after four years if a monopolist continues to extract excessive prices because of it."). The core holding of Berkey applies here, and Defendants have cited nothing to the contrary: "[A] purchaser suing a monopolist for overcharges paid [*93] within the previous four years may satisfy the conduct prerequisite to recovery by pointing to anticompetitive actions taken before the limitations period." Id. Accordingly, assuming the MPs can establish Section 2 liability, they may, at a minimum, recover all Section 2 damages caused within four years of the filing of each MP Action, or within four years of the commencement of the tolling of their Section 2 claims.[19]

[18] But see, e.g., Dana's R.R. v. Attorney Gen., No. 14-14426, 807 F.3d 1235, 1239, 1247 n.9 (11th Cir. 2015) (distinguishing Expressions Hair Design and explaining that "[t]autologically speaking, surcharges and discounts are nothing more than two sides of the same coin; a surcharge is simply a 'negative' discount, and a discount is a 'negative' surcharge").

[19] Even if Amex was correct that, as a legal matter, a sufficient showing by a defendant that Section 1 damages were not speculative could defeat the application of the purchaser-accrual exception under Section 2, summary judgment on the Section 2 claim would not be appropriate in this case because there are genuine issues of material fact with respect to whether the MPs' Section 1 damages were or were not speculative. See infra Part III.B.3.b.

Turning to the MPs' Section 1 claim, the court concludes that there are genuine issues of material fact that must be resolved by a jury as to both the speculative damages and continuing violation exceptions.

With respect to the speculative damages exception, the MPs have adduced evidence from which a reasonable jury could infer that as of 2002, the MPs' then-future damages were speculative.[20] In particular, [*94] there exist factual disputes concerning the ability of the MPs to estimate, as of 2002, critical elements of their alleged damages, such as future Amex charge volume and the future discount fees or other charges that would be imposed by Amex for that charge volume. In addition, it is undisputed that Defendants possessed the unilateral right to raise the discount rate throughout the contractual period. Viewed in the light most favorable to the MPs, these were no ordinary contracts; rather, they were long-term agreements under which the MPs had no ability to estimate accurately the core variables of any damages projection, including charge volume (dependent upon third-parties' use of the Amex card at the point-of-sale and in turn dependent on Amex's success at card issuance) and overall discount rate (dependent upon Amex's ability to change the base discount rate and effective discount rate throughout the term of the contract). Cf., e.g., Charlotte Telecasters, Inc. v. Jefferson-Pilot Corp., 546 F.2d 570, 573 (4th Cir. 1976) (affirming grant of summary judgment where, before entering into contract, plaintiff included in application to defendant its projections of total subscribers and gross receipts, and later "introduced no proof that cast doubt on its projections or [*95] indicated that they were speculative"); Tex. Utils. Co. v. Santa Fe Indus., Inc., 627 F. Supp. 44, 48-49 (D.N.M. 1985) (denying motion for summary judgment where plaintiffs offered evidence "that the prices they had to pay for coal under the contracts were indeterminable at the time these contracts were made" because, inter alia, ultimate payments under the contracts fluctuated due to yearly changes in government-calculated "implicit price deflator," based on the gross national product for each calendar year); *In re N.M. Nat. Gas Antitrust Litig., MDL No. 403 (HCB), 1982 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 9452, 1982 WL 1827, at 14 (D.N.M. Jan. 26, 1982) (denying motion for summary judgment on statute of limitations defense and explaining that "[t]his is not a case where the [pre-limitations contract] finalized the rights and liabilities of the parties by fixing the price, quantity, and delivery or payment schedules so that any subsequent acts were but unabated inertial consequences of some pre-limitations action" (internal quotation marks and citations omitted)).

With respect to the continuing violation exception, genuine issues of material fact again preclude summary judgment. Defendants reference the court's statement in the SOL Decision that the MPs could ultimately prove an alleged continuing violation because "Amex's unilateral increases to its merchant discount fee do constitute overt acts." SOL Decision, 708 F. Supp. 2d at 271 (emphasis added). According to Amex, the evidentiary record now shows that "the merchant discount fees have been constant—or dropped—for each Plaintiff." (Defs.' Original Mem.

[20] The parties appear to agree that a purported class action challenging the NDPs filed on April 18, 2006, tolled the statute of limitations pursuant to American Pipe Construction Co. v. Utah, 414 U.S. 538, 94 S. Ct. 756, 38 L. Ed. 2d 713 (1974), through the present. (See Defs.' Original Mem. at 3 & n.2; MPs' Original Mem. at 24 n. 11.) Accordingly, for purposes of the speculative damages exception and summary judgment, the relevant inquiry [*96] is whether a reasonable jury could find that the MPs' future damages were speculative as of the beginning of May 2002. If a reasonable jury would be compelled to find that damages were reasonably estimable as of May 2002, then, based on the effective dates of each merchant agreement, each MP's Section 1 claim (except Albertsons) would have necessarily expired before May 2006, no claims would be tolled pursuant to American Pipe, and the MP Actions (filed in 2008 and 2011) would be time-barred.

In other words, the parties appear to agree that damages that may have occurred in January 2002 are time-barred. Even if they were speculative as of the signing of the merchant agreement (for example, in 1996), these damages would have actually occurred (and were no longer speculative) at the very latest upon Amex actually imposing a supracompetitive discount fee for that particular month, and the MPs were therefore required to file suit for January 2002 damages by January 2006, before American Pipe tolling applied. The MPs did not file suit by January 2006, and claims related to January 2002 damages expired in January 2006. Claims related to damages that occurred in June 2002 would have similarly expired [*97] in June 2006, but American Pipe tolled the expiration of the claim for June 2002 damages through 2008 and 2011, when the MPs filed suit.

The court notes, in addition, that the filing of the Government Action in October 2010 also tolled any of the MPs' live claims as of that date. See 15 U.S.C. § 16(i). However, because the Government Action was filed many years after the May 2006, class action, it is the 2006 date and American Pipe tolling that provides the MPs with the longest period of tolling and the relevant date of May 2002 for purposes of the speculative damages exception.

at 19 (footnote omitted).) The MPs respond that Amex's "hyper-technical view" of the merchant discount rate focuses [*98] solely on the base discount rate, ignoring other unilateral changes imposed by Amex that affected the net price paid (the effective discount rate) by merchants to Amex for its services during the contractual period. (See MPs' Original Mem. at 31.)

The court recognizes that a narrow reading of the SOL Decision—which was based only on the court's understanding of the allegations in the original complaints in the MP Actions—could support Defendants' argument that summary judgment should be granted on the continuing violation exception due to the MPs' failure to rebut Defendants' evidence that they did not unilaterally raise base discount rates during the contractual period. However, the evidence offered by the MPs at this stage of the proceeding raises a genuine issue of material fact concerning whether Amex's other unilateral changes to the effective discount rate (such as changes to significant rebate and incentive programs) were overt acts sufficient to restart the limitations period with respect to damages caused by those acts. Indeed, the MPs have offered evidence tending to show that Amex officials viewed these changes as relevant to the effective rate paid by merchants to Amex for [*99] its services.[21]

Defendants are correct, however, that if the MPs rely solely [*101] on the continuing violation exception at trial, they can only recover damages caused by Amex's overt acts. See Klehr v. A.O. Smith Corp., 521 U.S. 179, 189, 117 S. Ct. 1984, 138 L. Ed. 2d 373 (1997) ("[T]he commission of a separate new overt act generally does not permit the plaintiff to recover for the injury caused by old overt acts outside the limitations period."); see also Zenith, 401 U.S. at 338 ("[E]ach time a plaintiff is injured by an act of the defendants a cause of action accrues to him to recover the damages caused by that act and . . ., as to those damages, the statute of limitations runs from the commission of the act."); Bankers Trust Co. v. Rhoades, 859 F.2d 1096, 1104 (2d Cir. 1988) ("An action for the injury must be brought within four years, plus any additional period during which the statute of limitations may be tolled. In the context of a continuing antitrust violation with continuing injuries, this has usually been understood to mean that each time plaintiff suffers an injury caused by an illegal act of defendants, a cause of action accrues to plaintiff to recover damages based on that injury." (emphasis added) (internal citations omitted)).

c. Claims for Equitable Relief

[21] With respect to a minority of the MPs, the parties dispute whether agreements entered from 2002 through 2005, which appear to have amended each of the particular MPs' operative card acceptance agreements in order to create new, higher fuel discount rates as opposed to the pre-existing and otherwise generally applicable supermarket discount rates, constitute overt acts that inflicted new injury under the continuing violation doctrine. Amex argues that the increased fuel discount rates merely remedied a windfall that the MPs were receiving for fuel that they sold, since fuel discount rates for other fuel retailers were historically higher than supermarket discount rates. (See Defs.' Original Reply at 20-21.) In addition, Amex argues that the agreements setting forth the fuel discount rates constitute agreed-upon contracts between it and the MPs, and therefore cannot qualify as a "unilateral" increase in the discount rate. (Id. at 20.) The MPs counter that the new fuel discount rates were exactly the type of act that qualifies as an overt act inflicting new injury under the continuing violation doctrine: whereas before, the MPs did not pay Amex a premium for fuel transactions, they [*100] did after the change.

The court concludes that genuine issues of material fact preclude the entry of summary judgment on this sub-issue. If the agreements containing the new fuel discount rates are, in fact, "new" and independent agreements between the MPs and Amex, then the court's discussion in the SOL Decision regarding when performance under a long-term contract can qualify as an overt act (e.g., a unilateral increase in the discount fee) becomes irrelevant, because a new claim for damages would have accrued at that time with respect to that particular contract and any resulting damages. If, on the other hand, the rise in fuel discount rates occurred pursuant to the original merchant agreements, the MPs have raised a genuine issue of material fact regarding whether the new rate is more than a mere "reaffirmation" of a previous act, and instead qualifies as an overt act that allows them to recover damages stemming from that act. Cf., e.g., *Madison Square Garden, L.P. v. Nat'l Hockey League, No. 07-CV-8455 (LAP), 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 80475, 2008 WL 4547518, at 10 (S.D.N.Y. Oct. 10, 2008) (holding that the renewal of policy that does not include any substantive changes in the plaintiff's rights constitutes a reaffirmation of the prior act and not a new and independent act).

Finally, Amex argues that the laches defense warrants summary judgment in its favor on the MPs' claims for injunctive relief. (See Defs.' Original Mem. at 18; Defs.' Original [*102] Reply at 21.) The MPs respond by arguing that (1) exceptions to the statute of limitations, including both the speculative damages and continuing violation exceptions, also serve as exceptions to the laches defense, and (2) even if the exceptions do not apply, Amex has failed to show the prejudice required for the laches doctrine to apply. (See MPs' Original Mem. at 33-35.)

As the court explained in the SOL Decision, the Clayton Act's four-year statute of limitations only applies to a damages action, whereas the defense of laches applies to actions in equity. See SOL Decision, 708 F. Supp. 2d at 272. Many courts use the applicable statute of limitations as a starting point to analyzing a parallel laches defense. See, e.g., Conopco, Inc. v. Campbell Soup Co., 95 F.3d 187, 191 (2d Cir. 1996) (explaining, in equity action under the Lanham Act, that "[a]lthough laches is an equitable defense, employed instead of a statutory time-bar, analogous statutes of limitation remain an important determinant in the application of a laches defense"); Kaiser Aluminum & Chem. Sales, Inc. v. Avondale Shipyards, Inc., 677 F.2d 1045, 1057 (5th Cir. 1982) ("[I]f the plaintiff's claim is brought outside the analogous limitations period, the bare fact of delay creates a rebuttable presumption of prejudice to the defendant." (internal quotation marks and citation omitted)); Int'l Tel. & Tel. Corp. v. Gen. Tel. & Elecs. Corp., 518 F.2d 913, 926 (9th Cir. 1975) (using Clayton Act's four-year statute of limitations [*103] as "a guideline for computation of the laches period in suits" seeking equitable relief), overruled on other grounds by California v. Am. Stores Co., 495 U.S. 271, 283, 110 S. Ct. 1853, 109 L. Ed. 2d 240 (1990).

HN8[] "After the four-year laches period expires, a court may, in its discretion, allow an action for equitable relief to go forward if it determines (1) that sufficient reasons cognizable in equity excuse the delay or (2) that the delay caused defendants no prejudice." SOL Decision, 708 F. Supp. 2d at 272 (internal quotation marks and citation omitted); see also, e.g., Argus, 552 F. Supp. at 600 (denying motion for summary judgment where the defendants failed to establish the absence of genuine issue of material fact with respect to whether the plaintiffs' delay caused any prejudice).

Few decisions within the Second Circuit have analyzed the applicability of the laches defense in an antitrust action where an exception to the four-year statute of limitations for damages actions tolls the damages claims, and the court did not have occasion to do so in the SOL Decision. The MPs and Defendants each point to Madison Square Garden, L.P. v. National Hockey League, No. 07-CV-8455 (LAP), 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 80475, 2008 WL 4547518 (S.D.N.Y. Oct. 10, 2008). There, in finding the antitrust claim seeking an equitable remedy barred by laches, the court did consider the plaintiff's argument that the continuing violation [*104] exception should apply and toll the claim, but rejected the argument on the merits, as the plaintiff failed to allege an actionable overt act. See *2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 80475, [WL] at 10; see also, e.g., Int'l Tel. & Tel., 518 F.2d at 928-29 (analyzing laches doctrine and considering both the court's equitable discretion and otherwise applicable exceptions to four-year statute of limitations, such as the continuing violation doctrine).

As laches is an equitable doctrine that the court applies in its discretion, there is limited analytical value to determining whether categorical "exceptions" to the four-year period of laches do or do not apply. But suffice it to say, here, the court already has held that there are genuine issues of material fact with respect to whether the speculative damages and continuing violation exceptions save the MPs' otherwise untimely damages claims. This determination is sufficient, at this stage of the proceeding, to support a parallel determination that genuine issues of material fact preclude the entry of summary judgment on Amex's laches defense.[22]

Moreover, there are genuine issues of material fact with respect to whether there is any excuse for the MPs' delay in bringing suit or whether that delay caused any prejudice to Defendants. HN9[] "A defendant has been prejudiced by a delay when the assertion of a claim available some time ago would be inequitable in light of the delay in bringing that claim. Specifically, prejudice ensues when a defendant has changed his position in a way that would not have occurred if the plaintiff had not delayed." Conopco, 95 F.3d at 192 (internal quotation marks and citations omitted) (discussing laches defense in context of Lanham Act). Here, the only equitable relief sought by the MPs is prospective in nature; they do not seek, for example, divestiture or to unwind a transaction, such as a merger. See 2 Phillip E. Areeda & Herbert Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law ¶ 320, at 374 (4th ed. 2014) ("A stricter limitation is especially appropriate and should be [*106] absolute where equity relief is retroactive in character, such as divestiture or illegally acquired assets. It is less true where the requested relief is merely prospective."); see also, e.g., Midwestern Mach. Co. v. Nw. Airlines, Inc., 392 F.3d 265, 277 (8th Cir. 2004) (finding that defendant would be prejudiced where plaintiff's equitable action was filed eleven years after allegedly anticompetitive merger, and shareholders who invested in company seven years after the merger had no reason to believe that the original merger could still be the basis for an antitrust suit). Where, as here, a plaintiff seeks only an injunction, "the right to engage in ongoing anticompetitive conduct should not ordinarily be acquired by prescription." Areeda & Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law ¶ 320, at 374.

[22] The court notes, as Amex points out, that there may be little reason to apply the speculative damages exception to the laches defense, as the reason justifying the exception—that the plaintiff [*105] could not have known the extent of its monetary damages at the time of the unlawful act—does not apply where the plaintiff could have brought suit seeking prospective injunctive relief to stop both the unlawful act and the further accumulation of unknown and speculative damages.

Defendants counter that they have "suffered obvious prejudice," as they "spent years operating, and investing in, a business model that relies on the NDPs that Plaintiffs now say are illegal." (Defs.' Original Mem. at 18.) But, since the initial signing of the merchant agreements, Amex has merely continued its longstanding practice of imposing NDPs on merchants, and has not, in fact, changed course or position in any significant way. The mere continuation of the very conduct challenged [*107] by the plaintiff is not the type of activity or investment by a defendant that the laches doctrine is designed to protect in equity. Cf. Conopco, 95 F.3d at 192-93 (focusing prejudice analysis on fact that during the plaintiff's delay in bringing suit targeting defendant's marketing strategy, defendant lost opportunity to adopt alternative marketing strategies that were adopted by rival brands in the interim).

Accordingly, the court denies Defendants' motion for summary judgment on the laches defense. At trial, the parties may offer any relevant evidence addressing the MPs' delay in bringing suit or any prejudice to American Express, but the court cannot enter summary judgment on this basis.

IV. CONCLUSION

For the reasons discussed above, the MPs' motion to modify the Scheduling Order and for leave to amend is DENIED WITHOUT PREJUDICE, the MPs' motion for the application of collateral estoppel is DENIED WITHOUT PREJUDICE, the MPs' motion for partial summary judgment is DENIED WITHOUT PREJUDICE. The court DENIES Amex's motion for summary judgment with respect to the no-surcharge rule and Amex's statute of limitations and laches defenses, and RESERVES JUDGMENT on Amex's motion for summary judgment with respect to [*108] the existence of an Amex-only market.

In addition, as noted above, the Government Action remains pending before the Second Circuit, and the merits panel has entered a stay of the Permanent Injunction entered in that case. Accordingly, the court postpones the May 2, 2016, trial date in the MP Actions, and stays all upcoming deadlines in the parties' pre-trial schedule. (See July 21, 2015, Order (Dkt. 642).) Within fourteen (14) days of the date of entry of the mandate following the Second Circuit's disposition of the appeal in the Government Action, the parties shall confer regarding potential trial dates and file a joint letter setting forth their availability.

SO ORDERED.

Opinion

[983] MEMORANDUM[]

After a six-week trial, a jury found HannStar Display Corp. ("HannStar") liable to Best Buy Co., Inc. and several of its subsidiaries (collectively, "Best Buy") for antitrust violations under federal and Minnesota law, and awarded damages, fees, and costs.[1] HannStar appeals the district court's denial of its post-trial motion for judgment as a matter of law. Best Buy cross-appeals the district court's partial [*984] summary judgment allowing HannStar [3] to present a pass-through defense to its indirect purchaser claim under Minnesota law. Best Buy also appeals the district court's order awarding attorney's fees and costs. We affirm in all respects.

1. HannStar contends the special verdict did not set forth factual findings that would bring HannStar's foreign conduct within the reach of American antitrust law, and even if it did, these findings are not supported by substantial evidence. We disagree. HN1[] We review de novo the district court's denial of judgment as a matter of law. Harper v. City of Los Angeles, 533 F.3d 1010, 1021 (9th Cir. 2008). We review the verdict for substantial evidence, which is "evidence adequate to support the jury's conclusion, even if it is also possible to draw a contrary conclusion." Id. (internal quotation marks omitted).

HN2[] The Foreign Trade Antitrust Improvements Act of 1982 ("FTAIA"), 15 U.S.C. § 6a, "lays down a general rule placing all (nonimport) activity involving foreign commerce outside the Sherman Act's reach." F. Hoffmann-La Roche Ltd. v. Empagran S.A., 542 U.S. 155, 162, 124 S. Ct. 2359, 159 L. Ed. 2d 226 (2004). It permits the Sherman Act to reach conduct with a "direct, substantial, and reasonably foreseeable effect" on "trade or commerce which is not trade or commerce with foreign nations, [4] or on import trade or import commerce with foreign nations." 15 U.S.C. § 6a(1).

[] The Honorable Rosemary Márquez, District Judge for the U.S. District Court for the District of Arizona, sitting by designation.

[*] This disposition is not appropriate for publication and is not precedent except as provided by 9th Cir. R. 36-3.

[1] We consolidate Appeals No. 13-17408, 13-17618, and 14-16144 for purposes of disposition.

We read the special verdict form completed by the jury to include a finding that HannStar's foreign conduct had a direct, substantial, and reasonably foreseeable effect on import commerce.[2] The jury found that HannStar participated in a conspiracy involving "TFT-LCD panels and/or finished products . . . imported into the United States," and that this conspiracy "produced substantial intended effects in the United States."[3] The jury necessarily found that this conduct had a "direct" effect when it awarded damages based on special verdict questions 8 and 9 and the corresponding instructions, which allowed it to compensate Best Buy for only that injury that was "a direct result or likely consequence of the conduct that you have found to be unlawful." The jury's findings were supported by substantial evidence, including the testimony of Best Buy executive Wendy Fritz and economic expert Douglas Bernheim, and the plea agreements and supporting documents from the prior criminal proceedings against HannStar and its co-conspirators. Thus, the district court did not err in denying HannStar's motion for judgment as a matter of law.

2. HannStar also argues that the judgment should be set aside because the Best Buy entities did not present individualized evidence of antitrust injury-in-fact. Although the trial evidence of injury and damages did not distinguish between the parent corporation and its subsidiaries, any error attributable to the failure to apportion injury and damages was harmless. The antitrust injury experienced by the subsidiaries was necessarily experienced [*985] by the parent, and the apportionment of injury among the plaintiffs [6] did not affect the amount or availability of relief. The district court did not err in denying HannStar's motion for judgment as a matter of law on this ground. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 61; see also 28 U.S.C. § 2111.

3. The district court did not err in permitting HannStar to assert a pass-through defense to Best Buy's indirect purchaser claim under Minnesota law. HN3[] The Minnesota Antitrust Law authorizes the court "[i]n any subsequent action" to "take any steps necessary to avoid duplicative recovery against a defendant." Minn. Stat. § 325D.57. The Minnesota Supreme Court has construed this provision to "restore Minnesota antitrust law to its pre-Illinois Brick [Co. v. Illinois, 431 U.S. 720, 97 S. Ct. 2061, 52 L. Ed. 2d 707 (1977)] contours," which made available a pass-through defense to indirect purchaser claims. Lorix v. Crompton Corp., 736 N.W.2d 619, 634 (Minn. 2007) (citing Alaska v. Standard Oil Co. of Cal. (In re W. Liquid Asphalt Cases), 487 F.2d 191, 194-95, 200 (9th Cir. 1973)). The Minnesota cases on which Best Buy relies are distinguishable, as they concerned standing rather than the measure of damages. Under the circumstances presented, the district court properly permitted HannStar to assert a pass-through defense. Without it, there would have been a significant risk of duplicative recovery among Best Buy and other downstream indirect purchasers that sued or could sue HannStar.

4. The district court did not improperly consider Best Buy's prior settlements with HannStar's [7] co-conspirators in awarding attorney's fees to Best Buy under 15 U.S.C. § 15. The record makes clear that the district court, which adopted the analysis and calculations of the special master, reduced Best Buy's requested attorney's fees by approximately 80% based on the limited results Best Buy obtained at trial. HN4[] This is a permissible basis on which to reduce an award of fees under 15 U.S.C. § 15. Twentieth Century Fox Film Corp. v. Goldwyn, 328 F.2d 190, 221 (9th Cir. 1964). The award is therefore reviewed for abuse of discretion. Azizian v. Federated Dep't Stores, Inc., 499 F.3d 950, 955 (9th Cir. 2007). Because Best Buy sought nearly $800 million in damages from HannStar, but the jury awarded it only $7.47 million before trebling and offset, the district court did not abuse its discretion in reducing the award of attorney's fees.

5. The district court correctly ruled that Best Buy could recover no more than the federal limit of $40 per day per witness in expert witness fees. See 28 U.S.C. § 1821. HN5[] The statutory title and equivocal case law advanced

[2] [5] Thus, it is not necessary to reach Best Buy's arguments that the judgment may be affirmed on the alternative grounds that HannStar's conduct satisfied the import commerce exclusion to the FTAIA, or that the FTAIA does not apply to claims under Minnesota law.

[3] Although the jury also found that the conspiracy did not involve conduct with a "direct, substantial and reasonably foreseeable effect on trade or commerce in the United States," this does not speak to the jury's findings regarding effects on import commerce. In light of the jury instructions, the most natural understanding of "in the United States" is "wholly within the United States," i.e., in nonimport domestic commerce.

by Best Buy do not contain an "express indication" that Minnesota Statutes section 325D.57 creates a substantive entitlement to expert witness fees as an element of damages under Minnesota law. Clausen v. M/V New Carissa, 339 F.3d 1049, 1065-66 (9th Cir. 2003). Rather, section 325D.57 is a state procedural "expert witness cost provision[]," and so it is trumped by federal procedural law in this action. Clausen, 339 F.3d at 1064-65 (citing Aceves v. Allstate Ins. Co., 68 F.3d 1160, 1168 (9th Cir. 1995)). Therefore, the district court [8] did not err in adopting the special master's recommended award of expert fees, which applied the federal limit set forth by 28 U.S.C. § 1821. See Clausen, 339 F.3d at 1064-65.

Opinion

[*343] OPINION & ORDER

KATHERINE B. FORREST, District Judge:

Pending before the Court are four motions to dismiss claims brought by purchasers of primary zinc under Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act. Plaintiffs allege, inter alia, that defendants, which consist of trading and metals warehouse operating affiliates of Glencore plc, The Goldman Sachs Group, Inc. ("Goldman Sachs"), and JPMorgan Chase & Company ("JPMorgan"), have engaged in a conspiracy to monopolize and otherwise restrain trade in the market of services for zinc stored in warehouses licensed by the London Metal Exchange ("LME") in the United States, North America, and/or the world, with the intended effect of manipulating the market [5] for special high grade zinc or the market for selling such zinc. Essentially, plaintiffs allege that the purpose and effect of defendants' anticompetitive activity in the market for LME warehouse services was to manipulate the price of zinc premiums, and thus the price of physical zinc.

According to plaintiffs, since May 2010 defendants have engaged in anticompetitive conduct designed to ensure lengthy metals queues at LME-licensed warehouses, creating a supply constraint and artificially high prices in the market for physical [*344] zinc. These actions included, inter alia, manipulation of LME rules, strategic warrant cancellations, shuttling zinc between LME-licensed warehouses, hording zinc in warehouses, agreeing to a particular order of the load out of zinc from defendants' warehouses, and falsifying shipping records.

At first glance, the basic storyline and allegations in this case strongly resemble those in the aluminum antitrust multidistrict litigation currently pending before this Court. See In re Aluminum Warehousing Antitrust Litigation ("Aluminum"), 13-md-2481 (S.D.N.Y.). Indeed, counsel are largely overlapping for both plaintiffs and defendants; and while the plaintiffs are different [6] between the actions, the defendants are not. Under these circumstances, it is perhaps unsurprising that plaintiffs have piggybacked on an early complaint and judicial opinions in Aluminum.[1]

Both actions involve allegations that these same defendants entered into anticompetitive agreements to increase load-out queues for metal stored at LME-licensed warehouses in order to drive up the price of premiums that comprise part of the formula used to create global benchmarks for physical [7] contracts for the delivery of those metals. Plaintiffs here are in an analogous market position to the first level purchaser and direct purchaser plaintiffs in Aluminum, and essentially allege the same sort of injury in fact. As was the case in Aluminum, plaintiffs are not themselves zinc producers, traders or warehouse owners; in other words, they are not competitors of defendants in any market. Nor are they consumers of defendants' products (that is, warrants or trading instruments with regard to the traders) or services (warehouse storage with regard to the warehouse operators). In both cases, they are purchasers at the first level of the supply/distribution chain of physical zinc.

While there are certainly many similarities between this case and Aluminum, the allegations differ in important ways that justify different outcomes as to certain claims. One significant distinction is that, in Aluminum, plaintiffs plausibly alleged that Goldman Sachs and Metro needed and used conspirators to assist in their scheme; this led to a plausible series of interconnections, with the following webbed structure:

Here, in contrast, plaintiffs do not plausibly explain why, given Glencore and/or Pacorini's [8] alleged dominance in physical zinc, they needed outside conspirators to assist in the alleged anticompetitive scheme, or, why outside conspirators would want to assist them. An equally significant distinction is that plaintiffs here have far less specific and non-conclusory allegations supporting an inference of anticompetitive agreement. Plaintiffs do not present the

---

[1] The parties heavily cite, and assume substantial familiarity with, this Court's two principal decisions in Aluminum in their filings in relation to the pending motions. In the first decision, this Court dismissed an initial set of complaints and granted certain plaintiffs leave to amend. In re Aluminum Warehousing Antitrust Litig. ("Aluminum I"), No. 13-MD-2481 KBF, 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 121435, 2014 WL 4277510 (S.D.N.Y. Aug. 29, 2014). In the second decision, this Court allowed the Section 1 claims of certain plaintiffs to survive the various defendants' Rule 12(b)(6) motions, but dismissed all Section 2 claims. In re Aluminum Warehousing Antitrust Litig. ("Aluminum II"), 95 F. Supp. 3d 419 (S.D.N.Y. 2015). The parties here devote a great deal of attention to comparing and contrasting plaintiffs' pleadings to those at issue in Aluminum I and Aluminum II.

specificity of allegations in terms of communications between various defendants that the plaintiffs presented in Aluminum II. In addressing plaintiffs' Section 1 claim in particular, the Court explains these differences and why they lead to a determination that plaintiffs' allegations are insufficient to plausibly state a claim, whereas the allegations were sufficient in Aluminum II.

Turning back to the pending motions, defendants primarily raise common issues including antitrust standing and the plausibility of allegations supporting claims for violations of Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act. Individual motions also articulate reasons why certain defendants should be dismissed for reasons that are specific to those defendants.

The Court has expended significant time considering the pending motions. In addition to the parties' thorough [9] briefing of the issues raised in this complex action, the Court had the benefit of nearly four hours of oral argument in which the parties addressed specific issues that the Court had raised prior to argument. In resolving these motions, the Court has considered all of the briefing as well as the parties' oral presentations.

For the reasons set forth below, the Court GRANTS defendants' motions to dismiss all four claims in plaintiffs' Consolidated Amended Complaint. While plaintiffs' opposition brief has "curb appeal" on a first review (at least with respect to certain claims), closer reading reveals that their arguments are not backed up by the allegations. Digging into the substance of the allegations (both on an individual basis and when viewed in the aggregate), reveals numerous flaws in plaintiffs' pleadings. Put otherwise, if one reads only plaintiffs' opposition brief or the transcript of their presentation at oral argument, without actual reference to the complaint, their claims appear stronger than is actually the case. In reaching its conclusions set forth herein, the Court takes no position on whether defendants' conduct was in fact legitimate—it remains possible that shenanigans [10] drove up the price of physical zinc. But, at long last, plaintiffs have not adequately alleged that such price movement was due to a plausible antitrust violation, as opposed to parallel, unilateral conduct [*346] beyond the reach of that statutory scheme.

Plaintiffs have requested leave to amend. Although plaintiffs had considerable opportunity to learn from this Court's decisions in Aluminum when they drafted the operative complaint (a lengthy schedule was designed to that end), and they have not explained how they would seek to supplement their pleadings, the Court will, as discussed below, allow plaintiffs one additional opportunity to re-plead their most promising Section 2 claims for monopolization and attempted monopolization against defendants Glencore Ltd. and Pacorini Metals USA, LLC.[2] In contrast, any attempt by plaintiffs to re-plead their Section 1 claim and Section 2 conspiracy claim would be futile, and those claims are therefore dismissed with prejudice.

I. PROCEDURAL BACKGROUND

Plaintiff Duncan Galvanizing Corporation commenced this action by filing a class action complaint on May 23, [11] 2014, alleging antitrust conspiracy and monopolization claims against the London Metal Exchange Limited, LME Holdings Limited, Hong Kong Exchanges & Clearing Limited, Glencore Xstrata plc, Glencore Ltd., Pacorini Metals USA, LLC, The Goldman Sachs Group, Inc., Metro International Trade Services LLC, and JPMorgan Chase & Company. (14-cv-3728, ECF No. 2.)[3] Plaintiffs Oklahoma Steel and Wire Co., Inc., Iowa Steel and Wire Co., and Southwestern Wire, Inc., subsequently filed a complaint on June 13, 2014 (14-cv-4290, ECF No. 2), and plaintiff Galvanizers Company filed on July 8, 2014 (14-cv-5066, ECF No. 1), each making similar allegations to those made in Duncan Galvanizing's initial complaint. The Court held a joint initial pre-trial conference for all three actions on July 23, 2014, and directed plaintiffs to file a consolidated amended complaint no later than September 30, 2014. (ECF No. 74.)

After the Court granted several extensions to allow plaintiffs time to frame their consolidated amended complaint in response to the Court's decision on the second round of motions regarding the then-proposed [12] amended complaint in Aluminum (see ECF Nos. 78, 84, 101), plaintiffs filed their consolidated amended complaint on June 17, 2015 (ECF No. 106).[4] That complaint dropped a number of defendants from this action based on the Court's decisions in Aluminum. (CAC at 13 n.4.) The CAC asserts one cause of action under Section 1 of the Sherman Act for combination and conspiracy in restraint of trade against all defendants, and three causes of action under Section 2 of the Sherman Act—one claim for conspiracy to monopolize against all defendants, and claims for monopolization and attempted monopolization against defendants Glencore Ltd. and Pacorini Metals USA, LLC. (CAC ¶¶ 264-90.)

Defendants collectively filed a total of four motions to dismiss the CAC under [*347] Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6). (ECF Nos. 122, 124, 127, [13] 130.) With leave of Court, plaintiffs filed one omnibus opposition brief in response to defendants' motions on September 17, 2015. (ECF No. 136; see ECF No. 135.) The motions became fully briefed on October 19, 2015. (ECF Nos. 143, 144, 146, 147.) The Court held oral argument on the motions on October 30, 2015. On the day prior to oral argument, the Court issued three Orders informing the parties of a number of issues and questions of particular interest to the Court. (ECF Nos. 149, 150, 151.) The Court appreciates the parties' thoughtful presentations and responses to the Court's questions, and has carefully considered the parties' elaborations of their positions at oral argument in resolving the pending motions.

II. FACTUAL ALLEGATIONS

On these motions to dismiss, the Court accepts the factual allegations in the complaint as true. Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 678, 129 S. Ct. 1937, 173 L. Ed. 2d 868 (2009). The Court does not credit "mere conclusory statements" or "threadbare recitals of the elements of a cause of action," id., nor will it give effect to "legal conclusions couched as factual allegations," Anderson News, L.L.C. v. Am. Media, Inc., 680 F.3d 162, 185 (2d Cir. 2012).

In deciding a Rule 12(b)(6) motion, the Court may consider facts alleged in the complaint and documents attached to it or incorporated in it by reference, DiFolco v. MSNBC Cable L.L.C., 622 F.3d 104, 111 (2d Cir. 2010), as well [14] as documents that are integral to the complaint and relied upon in it, even if not attached or incorporated by reference, Roth v. Jennings, 489 F.3d 499, 509 (2d Cir. 2007). The Court may also properly consider matters of public record of which it may take judicial notice. Tellabs, Inc. v. Makor Issues & Rights, Ltd., 551 U.S. 308, 322, 127 S. Ct. 2499, 168 L. Ed. 2d 179 (2007) (court may consider "matters of which a court may take judicial notice" on a Rule 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss); Global Network Commc'ns, Inc. v. City of New York, 458 F.3d 150, 157 (2d Cir. 2006).

A. The Zinc Industry

Zinc is the twenty-third most abundant element in the earth's crust and is the world's fourth most produced metal in terms of tonnage, trailing only iron, aluminum and copper. (CAC ¶ 91.) The world's largest zinc producer is Nyrstar. (CAC ¶ 95.) More than 13 million tons of zinc are mined and produced annually worldwide. (CAC ¶ 96.) Zinc uses range from metal products to rubber and medicines, but corrosion resistant zinc plating of iron is its major application. (CAC ¶¶ 91, 94.) Commercially pure zinc is known as Special High Grade ("SHG") zinc and is 99.995% pure. (CAC ¶ 95.) Primary zinc, which is produced from mining ore, is sold to two broad categories of customers who directly compete with each other for the same supply of metal: (1) manufacturers, processors, and brokers in physical zinc that use zinc in industrial processes and/or fabricate [15] finished products, and (2) traders, speculators, and holders of zinc stocks who buy and sell zinc for profit. (CAC ¶ 97.)

Plaintiffs allege that several government regulators, including the Commodities Futures Trading Commission, the U.S. Department of Justice, the U.S. Senate Banking Committee, the Permanent Subcommittee on Investigations

[4] On September 28, 2015, plaintiffs filed—and the Court accepted—a Corrected Consolidated Amended Complaint that fixed several numerical errors. (Corrected Consolidated Amended Complaint ("CAC"), ECF No. 138; see ECF No. 141.) Plaintiffs also filed a corrected omnibus brief in opposition to defendants' motions to dismiss that reflected those corrections. (ECF No. 139.) The Court will refer only to those corrected filings in the remainder of this decision.

of the U.S. Senate, and the European Commission, have, since 2012, conducted investigations regarding industrial metals, including zinc. (CAC ¶¶ 221-43.)

[*348] B. London Metal Exchange[5]

The London Metal Exchange Limited ("LME") is the world center for trading industrial metals; about 85% of all non-ferrous [16] metals futures business is transacted on the LME's trading platforms. (CAC ¶ 99.)[6] By the end of 2013, the LME market share of global exchange-traded metals futures reached 84.2%, including 89.4% for zinc. (CAC ¶ 107.) The LME's role is to bring together industrial and financial participants to create a market for buyers and sellers, and it serves to provide producers and consumers of metals with a physical market of last resort and the ability to hedge against the risk of volatile metal prices. (CAC ¶ 99.) The purchase of zinc on the LME operates through the use of warrants, which serve as documents of title to metal stored in LME-approved warehouses around the world. (CAC ¶ 204 n.103.) When an LME forward contract matures, delivery of warrants for metal in a LME-certified warehouse must be made by sellers who have not liquidated (i.e. traded out of their contract) to buyers who have not liquidated. (CAC ¶ 204 n.103.) Each warrant represents a specific, non-interchangeable physical lot, tonnage, and brand in a specific LME warehouse. (CAC ¶ 204 n.103.)

The LME was sold to Hong Kong Exchanges & Clearing Ltd. ("HKEx") in December 2012. (CAC ¶ 130.) Prior to the sale, Goldman Sachs owned approximately 9.5% of the LME and JPMorgan owned approximately 11%; they subsequently remained Class B shareholders and their affiliates remained a Category 2 member and Category 1 member of the LME, respectively. (CAC ¶ 130.) An affiliate of Glencore plc serves as a category 5 member of the LME. (CAC ¶ 130.)[7]

As mentioned above, the [18] LME also licenses and certifies an international network of warehouses for metals, including zinc in the United States. (CAC ¶ 99.) There are over 700 LME-licensed warehouses globally, approximately 200 of which are located in the United States. (CAC ¶ 102.) These warehouses must meet certain requirements relating to proximity to highways, railroads, and/or waterways, and must have the capacity to offload a specified daily minimum tonnage of metal. (CAC ¶ 104.) Defendants Metro International Trade Services, LLC ("Metro"), Henry Bath LLC ("Henry Bath"), and Pacorini Metals USA, LLC ("Pacorini"), collectively own and operate more than 80% [*349] of the LME-certified warehouses in the United States and throughout the world. (CAC ¶ 102.) Metro operates warehouses in Detroit, Toledo, Chicago, Mobile and New Orleans. (CAC ¶ 103.) Pacorini operates warehouses in Detroit, Baltimore, Chicago, New Orleans, Mobile and Los Angeles. (CAC ¶ 103.) Henry Bath operates warehouses in Baltimore, Chicago and New Orleans. (CAC ¶ 103.)

Only LME-registered warehouses deal in LME-warrants, which are the receipts for all LME-traded metals. (CAC ¶ 102.) SHG zinc warranted to LME specifications is stored in LME warehouses. [19] (CAC ¶ 116.) About 65-70%

[5] The Court notes that while plaintiffs appear to have used the complaints filed in Aluminum as a template in drafting the CAC and seem to assume a great deal of familiarity with the operation of the LME and metals markets in general, the CAC does not clearly explain what, if any, differences exist between the operation of the zinc and aluminum markets. The CAC largely assumes that zinc pricing operates similarly to that for aluminum, and does not explain the mechanics of the market to the same degree that the plaintiffs in Aluminum did in their latest pleadings.

[6] According to the LME's website, the non-ferrous metals transacted on the LME include, inter alia, zinc, aluminum alloy, aluminum, copper, [17] lead, nickel, tin and NASAAC (North American Special Aluminum Alloy Contract). Non-ferrous Metals, LME Website (Nov. 20, 2015), https://www.lme.com/metals/non-ferrous/ . Plaintiffs repeatedly cite the LME's website in the CAC, and it is therefore incorporated by reference. (E.g., CAC ¶¶ 101 n.19, 102 n.20, 106 n.22, 107 n.23, 108 n.28.)

[7] Category 1 members consist primarily of investment banks that are members of the open-outcry "Ring", which, as discussed below, is the process by which physical base metals are traded. (CAC ¶ 100.) Category 2 members are associated broker clearing members and have all the privileges of Category 1 members except that they may not openly trade in the Ring. (CAC ¶ 100.) Category 5 members are primarily mining companies. (CAC ¶ 100.)

of zinc stored in LME-certified warehouses is located in New Orleans, Louisiana. (CAC ¶¶ 103, 249.) Approximately 12% of zinc stored in LME warehouses is located in Detroit, Michigan. (CAC ¶ 105.)

C. Zinc Pricing

Plaintiffs allege that "[n]early all industrial contracts for the physical delivery of [SHG] Zinc express the price for zinc using a formula with at least two standardized components," the "LME Settlement Price" and a "regional premium" such as the Platts Midwest Special High Grade Zinc Premium ("MW SHG Premium"). (CAC ¶ 128.) Together, these components are generally referred to as the "all-in" price for physical delivery of SHG zinc. (CAC ¶¶ 115, 129.)

The LME Official Price serves as the global reference for physical base metal contracts and the LME Official Settlement Price is the price at which all LME futures are settled. (CAC ¶ 101.) LME prices for physical base metal contracts, including zinc, are arrived at through a live open-outcry process in London in what is called the "Ring." (CAC ¶ 101.)[8] The cost of purchasing physical zinc in satisfaction of an LME forward contract long position is the LME Official Settlement Price, plus any warrant trading costs, [20] plus the costs to the owner to move the zinc from the LME warehouse to its factory or facility. (CAC ¶ 114.) This method of purchasing zinc is small in volume relative to the market as a whole, but it serves as an important price discipline and check on prices in the remainder of the physical zinc market. (CAC ¶ 114.)

The remainder of physical zinc is purchased at the MW SHG Premium plus the LME price, or another "all-in" price. (CAC ¶ 115.) Regional premiums, such as the MW SHG Premium, are compiled based on reporting of the preponderance of physical transactions between buyers and sellers of spot zinc on a given day for delivery to relevant geographic points. (CAC ¶ 129.) The premiums reflect current offers for immediately available zinc for delivery from United States and foreign producers, traders, and holders of warehoused zinc, and these offers in turn incorporate the fluctuating delivery, storage, finance, and insurance costs incurred by these competing suppliers of [21] zinc. (CAC ¶ 129.) Regional premiums are published by private companies, including Platts, a division of McGraw-Hill Financial, and Metal Bulletin. (CAC ¶¶ 19, 129.)

D. Parties

1. Plaintiffs

The named plaintiffs are five companies in the business of producing galvanized metal products coated with a protective [*350] layer of zinc. (CAC ¶¶ 32, 39, 46, 53, 60.) Plaintiffs allege that they purchased physical zinc for delivery in the United States between May 24, 2010 and the present (the "Class Period") and were the first in the chain of distribution to pay prices that incorporated the MW SHG Premium on such zinc or directly purchased physical zinc from a defendant, or both. (CAC ¶¶ 22, 29-31, 36-38, 43-45, 50-52, 57-59.) Plaintiffs claim they suffered injury in fact as well as antitrust injury by having to pay a higher premium than they otherwise would have paid but for defendants' alleged conduct. (CAC ¶¶ 33, 40, 47, 54, 61.) Plaintiffs define their putative plaintiff class as "All persons [with certain exclusions] who, or entities which, purchased LME U.S. Zinc and paid the Platts Zinc MW SHG Premium or similar price premium in the United States from a primary zinc producer or a Defendant from [22] May 24, 2010 to the present." (CAC ¶¶ 255-56.)

2. Defendants[9]

Defendants include three operators of LME-certified warehouses that store zinc (among other metals)—Pacorini, Metro, and Henry Bath—and a number of their corporate affiliates that consist of financial entities with commodities trading units that, during the Class Period, traded financial instruments whose price was predicated on the underlying cost of physical zinc and its storage. (CAC ¶¶ 62-89.) Plaintiffs allege that these defendants collectively own 54 of 56 LME-approved warehouses in New Orleans, Pacorini owns 55 of 60 LME-approved warehouses in Vlissingen, Netherlands, "Metro dominates warehousing in Detroit", and defendants own 15 of 20 LME-approved warehouses in Johor, Malaysia. (CAC ¶ 218.) In conclusory terms, plaintiffs allege that defendants agreed to a market allocation to Metro of aluminum in Detroit and to Pacorini of aluminum in Vlissingen and zinc in New Orleans. (CAC ¶ 241.) Plaintiffs [23] do not allege that any market was allocated to Henry Bath.

[9] As discussed below, plaintiffs improperly apply generic names to corporate affiliates throughout the CAC, making it difficult at various points for the Court to determine which specific defendant(s) to whom plaintiffs intend to refer.

Pacorini has been owned, and its operations controlled by, defendant Glencore Ltd. since it was acquired for $209 million in September 2010. (CAC ¶¶ 67, 108.) It owns 34 of the 56 LME-approved warehouses in New Orleans. (CAC ¶ 218.) Glencore Ltd.'s ultimate parent is Glencore plc, which was formerly known as Glencore Xstrata plc. (CAC ¶ 62.) When Glencore plc merged with Xstrata in 2013, it became the world's largest commodities trading company. (CAC ¶ 140.) The CAC alleges that no player was or is as dominant in the zinc market as Glencore and its affiliates. (CAC ¶ 140.)

Until it was sold to Reuben Brothers, a Swiss private equity firm, in December 2014, Metro was wholly-owned directly by defendant Mitsi Holdings LLC ("Mitsi") and operated as a subsidiary of The Goldman Sachs Group, Inc. ("Goldman Sachs"). (CAC ¶¶ 74, 229.) The CAC alleges that Metro stores zinc at 14 LME-approved warehouses located in and around New Orleans and owns a total of 15 LME-approved warehouses in the city. (CAC ¶¶ 81, 218.) Metro was acquired by Goldman Sachs's wholly-owned subsidiaries for a deal worth purportedly $550 million in February 2010. [24] (CAC ¶¶ 75, 108.) Mitsi is owned by defendants GS Power Holdings LLC ("GS Power Holdings") and MCEPF Metro I, Inc. ("MCEPF Metro I"), both of which are wholly-owned subsidiaries of Goldman Sachs. (CAC ¶¶ 71-72, 74.) Defendant Goldman Sachs International ("GSI") is a "significant subsidiary" of [*351] Goldman Sachs and is the affiliate of Goldman Sachs that serves as a member of the LME. (CAC ¶ 70.)

Henry Bath is a subsidiary of Henry Bath & Son, Ltd., which was acquired by defendant JPMorgan Ventures Energy Corporation ("JPMorgan Ventures") as part of the purchase of the commodities business of RBS Sempra in 2010 for approximately $1.7 billion. (CAC ¶¶ 84, 108.) Henry Bath owns 5 LME-approved warehouses in New Orleans. (CAC ¶ 218.) JPMorgan Ventures is the commodities division of JPMorgan Chase & Co. ("JPMorgan"). Defendant JPMorgan Securities plc ("JPMorgan Securities") provides securities brokerage services for its ultimate parent, JPMorgan, and was a Category 1 ring dealing member of the LME. (CAC ¶ 83.) The CAC alleges that JPMorgan Securities transacted directly with Metro regarding zinc storage in the United States. (CAC ¶ 83.) Henry Bath and its warehousing business was sold by JPMorgan-affiliated [25] entities to Mercuria, a Swiss commodities firm, in a transaction that closed on or about October 3, 2014. (CAC ¶¶ 86, 228.)

E. Defendants' Allegedly Unlawful Conduct

1. Conspiracy Allegations

Plaintiffs allege a conspiracy prohibited by both Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act. In their Section 1 claim, plaintiffs assert that defendants "shared a conscious commitment to a common scheme designed to achieve the unlawful objective of artificially fixing, depressing, raising, pegging, maintaining, stabilizing, and otherwise manipulating the supply of physical zinc available for delivery from LME warehouses." (CAC ¶ 267.) In their conspiracy to monopolize claim under Section 2, they assert that defendants "by and through the LME, and, on information and belief, with each other have conspired to monopolize the market for the LME Zinc Warehouse Services Market." (CAC ¶ 272.)

Both claims depend on the same alleged scheme, summarized as follows: at least by the start of the Class Period, defendants "owned the largest LME warehouses in the world, were on the rules committee for recommending storage fees and minimum delivery requirements for those warehouses, and traded in zinc as well as financial instruments tied to the price [26] of zinc," enabling them to "conspire with each other to manipulate the LME warehousing system and its rules to, inter alia, maximize profits from rental income and trading." (CAC ¶ 109.) Plaintiffs' support for this alleged conspiracy includes allegations of, inter alia, manipulation of LME load-out rules, Pacorini's falsification of bills of lading, an agreement to organize warrant cancellations in Pacorini's warehouses, Pacorini's and Metro's provision of financial incentives for storing zinc, and the use of shadow warehousing and delisting of warehouses.

In this regard, plaintiffs allege that, as members of the LME Warehousing Committee and by their influence of and membership on various other LME committees, defendants combined and conspired to treat as a maximum the LME's minimum load-out requirement of 1,500 tons (increased to 3,000 tons during the Class Period) of metal per city per day. (CAC ¶¶ 132, 138.) This minimum applied on a city-wide basis (i.e. no minimum percentage-per-warehouse was required) and it applied to all metals as a whole. (CAC ¶ 132.) Plaintiffs further allege that this arrangement allowed defendants to "net" incoming shipments and "shuttle" shipments between [27] warehouses that would count against the daily quota without requiring warehouse operators to actually [*352] release zinc from storage into the market. (CAC ¶¶ 132-33.) Plaintiffs then assert that by virtue of their ownership of and rulemaking role in the LME, defendants have controlled the supply of zinc and thereby dictated the price of premiums incorporated into zinc prices in the United States. (CAC ¶ 139.)

Plaintiffs allege that in late summer or fall of 2012, during a meeting with Pacorini CFO Lisa Loeffler and Assistant General Manager Deborah Bressie, plaintiffs' Confidential Witness 1 ("CW1"), who worked in management for Pacorini and had oversight for the LME warranting side of Pacorini's business during the Class Period, was told that Pacorini was going to engage in high volume transfers of canceled LME metals between its warehouses in New Orleans. (CAC ¶ 179.) CW1 was ordered to create falsified bills of lading for Pacorini to mask the high volume movements of zinc so that Pacorini could manipulate the daily reports sent to the LME without being detected. (CAC ¶¶ 180, 185.) CW1 was instructed that these bills of lading were to falsely state that the zinc was to be delivered to a [28] customer location when in actuality it was either not being moved at all or was being redirected to another Pacorini warehouse; these documents also contained false signatures and, at times, incorrect tonnage amounts. (CAC ¶ 180.) CW1 recalls that warehouses not owned by Pacorini, but owned by third parties such as Metro and Henry Bath, were also sometimes falsely listed as delivery locations in the forged bills of lading. (CAC ¶ 181.)[10] There are no allegations that any defendant other than Pacorini engaged in these practices.

Plaintiffs' Confidential Witness 2 ("CW2"), who worked as a shipping and receiving/LME clerk for Pacorini during the Class Period, corroborates that Pacorini altered bills of lading to make it appear as if zinc and other metals moved from warehouse to warehouse when in fact the metals were [29] not moving at all; CW2 also recalls that many of the falsified bills of lading listed a Metro warehouse as a delivery location. (CAC ¶ 184.) Plaintiffs allege that, "[o]n its own, Pacorini's efforts to hide the implementation of defendants' scheme from the LME through false bills of lading and non-existent ghost transactions had the effect of further increasing warehouse queues." (CAC ¶ 188.) The CAC does not allege that any entity unaffiliated with Pacorini engaged in a practice of falsifying bills of lading.

Plaintiffs further allege that, according to CW1, in the fall of 2012 defendants "agreed to a 'synchronized' and 'highly coordinated' schedule of warrant cancellations at Pacorini's warehouses." (CAC ¶ 189.) Plaintiffs allege that CW1 attended a meeting with Pacorini management in which Pacorini CEO Mario Casciano informed CW1 and others that certain of Pacorini's preferred customers, which mostly consisted of "big trading companies", had recently met and agreed on the load-out queue order and tonnage amounts at Pacorini's warehouses. (CAC ¶ 189.) It was explained to CW1 that representatives of Glencore, Goldman Sachs, JPMorgan, Henry Bath and metals trader Noble Americas Corp. ("Noble") [30] entered into an agreement (the "Queue Order Agreement") that zinc would be the first metal to be released from Pacorini's warehouse load-out queue and that these customers [*353] were going to get their zinc tonnage released first and in a certain agreed upon order. (CAC ¶ 189.) Plaintiffs allege that CW1 was informed that defendants agreed that Noble would have its zinc removed first, followed by Goldman Sachs, and then JPMorgan. (CAC ¶ 190.)

Plaintiffs allege that "many warrants were canceled at once" by each of these "preferred customers" pursuant to the agreed upon order and no two companies involved in setting the queue order canceled warrants at the same time. (CAC ¶ 190.) According to CW1, it was not uncommon, prior to this agreement, for warrant cancellations by warrant holders to overlap at times. (CAC ¶ 190.) In addition to their agreed upon schedule of warrant cancellations,

[10] The CAC does not provide any indication that Metro or Henry Bath would have had to be complicit in (or even have knowledge of) Pacorini's false listing of their warehouses as delivery locations. If the falsified deliveries to Metro and Henry Bath warehouses were entirely fabricated, the Court doesn't see why Pacorini would need Metro or Henry Bath's cooperation or involvement.

Pacorini also provided these preferred customers with special rates on both rent and the cost to ship the metal out of a warehouse if they canceled warrants on a certain amount of metal. (CAC ¶ 193.)

To monitor and manage the implementation of the Queue Order Agreement, Pacorini created a "Queue Manager" spreadsheet—first [31] "rolled out" in fall 2012—listing all of Pacorini's warehouse customers in line in the queue for each day and month. (CAC ¶ 194.)[11] Plaintiffs allege that Pacorini held weekly internal meetings to discuss the Queue Manager spreadsheet, and that Loeffler directed CW1 to enter information into the spreadsheet and specifically informed CW1 that Casciano was directing the spreadsheet activities. (CAC ¶ 195.) After implementing the spreadsheet, Pacorini officials knew exactly when cancellations were going to occur prior to the warrants being officially canceled through the LME. (CAC ¶ 195.) According to CW1, the Queue Manager spreadsheet was a strictly "in-house" (Pacorini) project that contained certain information, such as tonnage, that differed from what Pacorini reported to the LME in daily reports. (CAC ¶ 196.) Plaintiffs allege that, according to CW1 and CW2, wait times for customers to get metal out of the queue were significantly lengthened after implementation of the Queue Manager spreadsheet. (CAC ¶¶ 197, 198.) According to one trader in October 2012, "zinc and aluminum cancellations [we]re being carried out on what appear[ed] to be a friendly basis by two warehousing firms in particular, creating [32] a queue for material and allowing the market to be bid as a result." (CAC ¶ 249.)

Plaintiffs also allege that defendants engaged in certain other anticompetitive practices to manipulate the volume of zinc maintained in warehouses, including that Pacorini and Metro provided ever increasing financial incentives to metals producers and traders to store zinc in their warehouses. This practice, according to plaintiffs, resulted in defendants amassing even greater stockpiles of zinc and inflating zinc premiums. (CAC ¶¶ 201-04.) Plaintiffs allege, in particular, that Pacorini paid incentives exceeding the price premium that producers could obtain by selling their zinc on the open market. (CAC ¶ 202.) Plaintiffs also [33] allege that "defendants" engaged in "shadow warehousing", which is the practice of moving metal from LME-approved warehouses to areas not registered as LME warehouses because such locations [*354] are unregulated and don't disclose their holdings, allowing defendants to manipulate the inventories reported to the LME. (CAC ¶ 205.) However, these allegations are (again) factually limited to Pacorini. Plaintiffs allege that, with the LME's permission, "Glencore"—which is defined in the CAC as Glencore Ltd. and Pacorini—has also delisted LME warehouses to increase its ability to manipulate market conditions. (CAC ¶ 207; see CAC ¶ 68.)

Plaintiffs allege that "defendants"—which are identified only in the aggregate and in general terms—have profited in numerous ways from their anticompetitive agreements in light of their positions in the market. They allege that defendants profited from increased storage fees and higher zinc premiums by taking long positions in zinc and selling it into the market at a higher premium than at which they purchased it. (CAC ¶ 210.) Plaintiffs also allege that defendants created conditions that allowed a market "contango" to persist during the Class Period, meaning that [34] the spot or cash price for zinc was lower than the futures price; the contango reflected purchasers' willingness to pay more for zinc at a future date than at the current spot or cash price. (CAC ¶ 211.) The contango allowed investors, such as defendants, to take advantage of historically low interest rates to enter into warehouse financing deals in which they purchased zinc at depressed spot prices, incurred carrying and storage costs, and still profited from the difference between the costs incurred and the increased futures price. (CAC ¶¶ 212, 244.) Plaintiffs allege that Goldman Sachs or J. Aron[12] traded in zinc and zinc derivatives and stood to benefit from increases in the zinc premium. (CAC ¶ 242.) The CAC contains no allegation specifically identifying any other defendant by name as having traded in financial instruments involving zinc premiums.

2. Monopolization Allegations

[11] According to the Report of the Permanent Subcommittee on Investigations of the U.S. Senate, Metro's Vice President of Marketing, Mark Askew, sent an email in December 2010 to Metro CEO Chris Wibbelman expressing reservations about "Q Management" in light of a conversation with "Paco" (i.e. Pacorini) a few weeks prior. (CAC ¶ 240.) The CAC contains no allegations describing what this email relates to or whether it has any relation to zinc or to Pacorini's New Orleans warehouses.

[12] The CAC does not define or elsewhere reference "J. Aron." The Court presumes that plaintiffs mean to refer to J. Aron & Company, which the plaintiffs in Aluminum alleged was a trading division of Goldman Sachs. See Aluminum II, 95 F. Supp. 3d at 445 n.28.

Plaintiffs also allege that Glencore Ltd. and/or Pacorini had monopoly power, or attempted to [35] acquire monopoly power, in the market for LME-licensed zinc warehousing services in violation of Section 2 of the Sherman Act.[13] (CAC ¶¶ 277-90.) Plaintiffs allege two relevant markets: (1) the market of "services for zinc stored in LME warehouses" (which plaintiffs refer to as the "LME Zinc Warehouse Services Market") in the United States, North America, and/or the world, and (2) the "market for Special High Grade Zinc or the market for selling such zinc" in North America (which plaintiffs refer to as the "LME U.S. Zinc Market"), and/or the world (which plaintiffs refer to as the "Zinc Market"). (CAC ¶ 113.)

Plaintiffs allege that the "LME Zinc Warehouse Services Market" provides and controls the release of physical zinc to owners that have taken delivery in satisfaction of an LME zinc forward contract long position. (CAC ¶ 114.) Count III alleges that Glencore "willfully acquired and maintained monopoly power in the market for LME Zinc Warehouse Services in the United States" by owning a substantial majority of warehouses in New Orleans, where most LME-licensed [36] warehouses are located. (CAC ¶¶ 278-79.) Count IV alleges, in the alternative, that Glencore specifically intended to obtain a monopoly in the "market for LME-licensed zinc warehousing [*355] in the United States" and had a dangerous probability of success in doing so. (CAC ¶¶ 285-86.)

Plaintiffs allege that there are no reasonable substitutes for LME zinc warehouse services because LME warrants are considered first class collateral, and the only zinc sources of such first class collateral is zinc deliverable on the LME. (CAC ¶ 118.) Plaintiffs also allege that there are no reasonable substitutes for SHG zinc, which is of specific quality and has specific industrial uses, including galvanizing steel. (CAC ¶ 119.) Finally, plaintiffs allege that demand for primary zinc is "relatively price inelastic." (CAC ¶ 123.)

In the physical zinc market, plaintiffs allege that "no player was or is as dominant as Glencore and its affiliates." (CAC ¶ 140.) After Glencore plc's merger with Xstrata, it became the world's largest zinc miner, with 24 mines producing around 1.5 million metric tons of contained zinc in 2012 out of total global production of 13 million metric tons. (CAC ¶ 142.) Glencore plc also [37] operates seven zinc smelters with a capacity of around 1.2 million metric tons per year of zinc metal, sells 100% of primary zinc produced in the United States, trades 60% of the world's zinc, and owns or has exclusive rights to 35% of the output of the world's zinc mines, including 100% of all U.S. output of primary zinc. (CAC ¶¶ 124, 142, 160, 163, 166.) Plaintiffs allege that even where it does not own a mine, Glencore and its affiliates partially own or have marketing or "off take" agreements with miners providing it with exclusive rights to sell a zinc mine's output. (CAC ¶¶ 124, 161.) Glencore and its affiliates recognized more than $7.7 billion of revenue from zinc assets in 2014. (CAC ¶ 171.)

Beyond its dominant position in the United States, plaintiffs allege that Glencore "has a dominant position in zinc distribution worldwide"; "[s]ince 2009, its control over LME warehouse stocks of zinc is estimated to have grown to more than 90% of all LME warehouse stocks of zinc." (CAC ¶ 143.) Plaintiffs allege that in the months preceding Glencore's takeover of Pacorini, extraordinary volumes of zinc thought to be from Glencore and its affiliates in Spain were delivered to New Orleans warehouses, [38] resulting in a 25% jump in the MW SHG Premium. (CAC ¶¶ 146, 149.) Within a week after Glencore's August 2010 announcement that it was acquiring Pacorini, warrants for more than 50,000 tons of zinc in New Orleans warehouses were canceled in a single day. (CAC ¶¶ 155, 157.) Plaintiffs allege that after Glencore completed its acquisition of Pacorini on September 14, 2010, it moved zinc to New Orleans to create lengthy warehouse queues. (CAC ¶ 160.)

F. Alleged Effects on the Physical Zinc Market

As detailed below, plaintiffs allege that defendants' anticompetitive conduct had numerous effects on the zinc market, including increasing the MW SHG Premium, the trading volume of zinc futures contracts, the level of zinc inventories, the number of canceled warrants, and the length of load-out queues at LME warehouses. Notably, plaintiffs' own allegations indicate that several of these trends began prior to the start of the Class Period and prior to much of the anticompetitive conduct alleged.

[13] As discussed above, plaintiffs also allege that all of the defendants conspired to monopolize that market in violation of Section 2. (CAC ¶¶ 271-76.)

The first and primary competitive effect was allegedly price related. Plaintiffs assert that during the Class Period, price premiums for physical zinc (based on the MW SHG Premium) nearly tripled from 3.50 [39] cents per pound to 9.25 cents per pound (CAC ¶¶ 7, 143, 250-51), and that these changes were "causally related" to "changes in the estimated zinc load-out [*356] queue from the Pacorini LME warehouses located in New Orleans and to changes in the Herfindahl index of concentration of zinc stocks in LME warehouses worldwide." (CAC ¶ 144.)[14] Notably, however, the MW SHG Premium increased by almost 50% from 3.25 cents per pound to 4.75 per pound in the roughly four months prior to Glencore's acquisition of Pacorini in 2010. (CAC ¶ 250.) The CAC also states that between 2009 (prior to defendants' warehouse acquisitions) and 2013, the volume of zinc futures nearly doubled, and that there was significant volume growth in the one-and-a-half years prior to the start of the Class Period. (CAC ¶ 245.) Plaintiffs allege that in May 2010 (again, prior to certain defendants' warehouse acquisitions), zinc inventories reached a five-year high, and reached a seventeen-year high by July 2012; notably, though, zinc inventories roughly doubled in the year prior to the start of the Class Period. (CAC ¶¶ 151, 174.) Plaintiffs also allege that by July 2011, canceled warrants in New Orleans reached 105,650 metric tons, [40] extending the maximum queue to withdraw material to 70 working days. (CAC ¶ 176.)

Plaintiffs allege that there have been long backlogs of zinc (and other metals) at LME-certified warehouses due to LME rules that allow warehouse operators to release much less material per day than they take in, raising premiums. (CAC ¶¶ 246-47.) Of the 71% of total LME warehouse stocks of zinc stored in New Orleans in October 2012, plaintiffs allege that 45% of that inventory was waiting in queue to be delivered out. (CAC ¶ 249.) This represented a tripling of the outbound delivery queue from that in late 2011. (CAC ¶ 249.) By November 2012, purchasers of zinc had to wait months and sometimes more than a year to get deliveries of zinc. (CAC ¶ 249.) Load-out delays had a substantial effect on metals stored in LME warehouses under warrants because canceled warrants on zinc have consistently exceeded the daily load-out rate throughout the Class Period, leading to increases in the rents paid to defendants. (CAC ¶ 134.)[15] During the Class Period, the LME agreed to increase storage rates by [41] 20%; the storage rental rate per ton per day increased from $0.40 in 2010 to $0.41 in 2011, to $0.45 in 2012, and finally to $0.48 in 2013. (CAC ¶ 135.)

III. MOTION TO DISMISS STANDARD

To survive a Rule 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss, the factual allegations in a complaint must raise the plaintiffs' right to relief above the speculative level. Bell Atl. Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 555, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007). In other words, a complaint must allege enough facts to "state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face." Iqbal, 556 U.S. at 678 (quoting Twombly, 550 U.S. at 570). "A claim has facial plausibility when the plaintiff pleads factual content that allows the court to draw the reasonable inference that the defendant is liable for the misconduct alleged." Id. at 678. In applying that standard, a court accepts as true all well-pleaded factual allegations, but does not credit "mere conclusory statements" or "threadbare recitals of the elements of a cause of action." Id. Similarly, a court need not accept "legal conclusions couched as factual allegations." Anderson News, 680 F.3d at 185.

[*357] If the Court can infer no more than "the mere possibility of misconduct" from the factual averments—that [42] is, if the well-pleaded allegations of the complaint have not "nudged [plaintiffs'] claims . . . across the line from conceivable to plausible"—dismissal is appropriate. Iqbal, 556 U.S. at 679-80 (quoting Twombly, 550 U.S. at 570).

The "plausibility" requirement should not, however, be misunderstood as a "probability" standard. Twombly, 550 U.S. at 556; Anderson News, 680 F.3d at 184. "Because plausibility is a standard lower than probability, a given set of actions may well be subject to diverging interpretations, each of which is plausible." Anderson News, 680 F.3d at 184. On a Rule 12(b)(6) motion, the Court may not choose between two plausible inferences that may both be drawn from the factual allegations. Id. at 185. This is so even if a court finds one of the two versions more plausible. Id.

[14] The Herfindahl index is a standard measure of concentration used in industrial organization analysis. (CAC ¶ 144 n.51.)

[15] When a warrant is "canceled", the canceled metal is added to the load-out queue but the owner continues to pay daily rent until the metal exits the facility. (CAC ¶ 134.)

IV. ANTITRUST STANDING[16]

In an antitrust case, a plaintiff must have constitutional standing under Article III, as well as antitrust standing. See Associated Gen. Contractors of Cal., Inc. v. Cal. State Council of Carpenters ("AGC"), 459 U.S. 519, 535 n.31, 103 S. Ct. 897, 74 L. Ed. 2d 723 (1983); see also Port Dock & Stone Corp. v. Oldcastle Ne., Inc., 507 F.3d 117, 121 (2d Cir. 2007). Plaintiffs' Article III standing is not in dispute. Defendants do, however, contest that plaintiffs have or could plead antitrust standing as to both their Section 1 and 2 claims.

Antitrust standing is "a threshold, pleading-stage inquiry and when a complaint by its terms fails to establish this requirement [the court] must dismiss it as a matter of law." Gatt Commc'ns Inc. v. PMC Assocs. L.L.C., 711 F.3d 68, 75 (2d Cir. 2013) (quoting NicSand, Inc. v. 3M Co., 507 F.3d 442, 450 (6th Cir. 2007) (en banc)); see also Paycom Billing Servs., Inc. v. MasterCard Int'l, Inc., 467 F.3d 283, 290-95 (2d Cir. 2006) (dismissing a complaint under Rule 12(b)(6) for lack of antitrust standing). A court must answer three separate questions to determine if plaintiffs have antitrust standing: have plaintiffs alleged injury in fact; have they alleged antitrust injury, and are they efficient enforcers of the antitrust laws? See AGC, 459 U.S. at 535 n.31; Port Dock, 507 F.3d at 121.

Plaintiffs allege that [44] they have paid higher prices for zinc than they would have paid in the absence of defendants' actions. (See CAC ¶¶ 24, 33, 40, 47, 54, 61.) Because plaintiffs' alleged injury is concrete, particularized, and actual, plaintiffs have sufficiently alleged that they suffered injury in fact as to their claims under Sections 1 and 2. See Lujan v. Defs. of Wildlife, 504 U.S. 555, 560, 112 S. Ct. 2130, 119 L. Ed. 2d 351 (1992).[17]

[*358] The Court next turns to the questions of whether plaintiffs adequately allege antitrust injury and have shown that they would be efficient enforcers of the antitrust laws, first in relation to their Section 1 claim, and then with respect to their Section 2 claims.

To establish antitrust injury, a plaintiff [45] must allege plausible facts that he suffered "injury 'of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent and that flows from that which makes [the] defendants' acts unlawful.'" Gatt, 711 F.3d at 78 (quoting Brunswick Corp. v. Pueblo Bowl-O-Mat, Inc., 429 U.S. 477, 489, 97 S. Ct. 690, 50 L. Ed. 2d 701 (1977)). Thus, although causally related to an antitrust violation, injury does not constitute "antitrust injury" unless it is "attributable to an anti-competitive aspect of the practice under scrutiny." Atl. Richfield Co. v. USA Petroleum Co., 495 U.S. 328, 334, 110 S. Ct. 1884, 109 L. Ed. 2d 333 (1990). The antitrust injury requirement is derived from the principle that the antitrust laws were enacted for "'the protection of competition, not competitors.'" Paycom Billing, 467 F.3d at 290 (quoting Brunswick Corp., 429 U.S. at 488); see also Gatt, 711 F.3d at 75 ("Absent such boundaries, the potent private enforcement tool that is an action for treble damages could be invoked without service to—and potentially in disservice of—the purpose of the antitrust laws: to protect competition."). The Second Circuit employs a three-step analysis to determine whether a plaintiff has sufficiently alleged antitrust injury arising from an anticompetitive practice. First, a court must determine whether the party asserting that it has been injured by an illegal competitive practice has identified the practice complained of and the reasons such a practice is or might be anticompetitive. Gatt, 711 F.3d at 76. Second, [46] a court must "identify the actual injury the plaintiff

[16] Neither § 1 nor § 2 of the Sherman Act provides for a private right of action. That is accomplished by §§ 4 and 16 of the Clayton Act. Section 4 provides for a treble damages action and states that "any person who shall be injured in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws" may sue for treble damages. 15 U.S.C. § 15. Section 16 provides for an action for injunctive relief and states that "[a]ny person, firm, corporation, or association shall be entitled to sue for and have injunctive relief . . . against threatened loss or damage by [43] a violation of the antitrust laws . . . ." 15 U.S.C. § 26. Plaintiffs must establish antitrust standing with respect to each antitrust claim pursued. See Daniel v. Am. Bd. of Emergency Med., 428 F.3d 408, 436-38 (2d Cir. 2005) (antitrust standing inquiry is injury-specific). Accordingly, the Court reviews standing with regard to plaintiffs' §§ 1 and 2 claims separately.

[17] That plaintiffs do not allege that their zinc was stuck in the load-out queue at Pacorini's New Orleans warehouses behind that of Pacorini's allegedly "preferred customers" does not mean that they fail to allege injury in fact. Plaintiffs' allegations that they paid higher prices as a result of defendants' conduct, even if causation is attenuated, are sufficient to plead injury in fact. Defendants' arguments relating to the indirectness of plaintiffs' alleged injury are more appropriately directed at the question of antitrust injury and efficient enforcer prongs of the standing analysis.

alleges." Id. (quotation marks omitted). Third, a court compares the "anticompetitive effect of the specific practice at issue to the actual injury the plaintiff alleges." Id. (quotation marks omitted).

The questions of antitrust injury and whether a plaintiff is an efficient enforcer of the antitrust laws are often analyzed together. The Court is guided by the Supreme Court's decision in AGC, in which it concluded that a union lacked standing to redress alleged antitrust violations on behalf of its members. AGC, 459 U.S. at 520. In AGC, the Supreme Court identified several factors a court should consider in determining whether a plaintiff has antitrust standing: (1) the causal connection between the violation and the harm, (2) the presence of an improper motive, (3) the type of injury and whether it was one Congress sought to address, (4) the directness of the injury, (5) the speculative nature of the damages, and (6) the risk of duplicative recovery or complex damage apportionment. Id. at 537-44. Applying these factors, the Court concluded that the plaintiff union lacked antitrust standing because: (1) the causal chain consisted of several "somewhat vaguely defined" [47] links, (2) motive was not a significant issue in the case, (3) the type of injury was not one Congress sought to address because the union was "neither a consumer nor a competitor in the market in which trade was restrained", [*359] (4) the union's alleged injury was too indirect; (5) the injury was speculative because the effects of the conspiracy were indirect and could have been caused by independent factors, and (6) there was an alternative class of plaintiffs better situated to pursue the claims, which created a risk of duplicative damages. Id. at 539-45 & n.37.

The Second Circuit has "distilled" these factors "into two imperatives": first, that a plaintiff plausibly allege facts supporting antitrust injury, and, second, that he plausibly allege facts supporting his suitability as a plaintiff to pursue the alleged antitrust violation—and that he would therefore be an "efficient enforcer" of the antitrust laws. Gatt, 711 F.3d at 76; see also Port Dock, 507 F.3d at 121; Daniel, 428 F.3d at 443. Whether a plaintiff is an efficient enforcer of the antitrust laws depends on a balancing of the following factors:

> (1) the directness or indirectness of the asserted injury; (2) the existence of an identifiable class of persons whose self-interest would normally motivate them [48] to vindicate the public interest in antitrust enforcement; (3) the speculativeness of the alleged injury; and (4) the difficulty of identifying damages and apportioning them among direct and indirect victims so as to avoid duplicative recoveries.

Gatt, 711 F.3d at 76 (quoting Paycom Billing, 467 F.3d at 290-91); see also Port Dock, 507 F.3d at 121; Daniel, 428 F.3d at 443.

To determine if a pleading adequately alleges antitrust injury as well as whether each plaintiff is an efficient enforcer of the antitrust laws, a court must analyze whether a plaintiff's alleged injury constitutes injury to the competitive process, and not just injury to a competitor. Understanding where plaintiffs have positioned themselves in the competitive landscape is the most logical starting point for this question. The Court asks whether plaintiffs are consumers of a product, and therefore injured when sellers engage in price fixing, allocating markets, or dividing customers, etc., because those actions have increased the prices paid? Or, whether plaintiffs allege that they are competitors of a defendant, and injured when, for instance, they are deprived of customers as a result of an unlawful bargain struck between the defendants? The Court must, finally, ask whether plaintiffs allege that they are neither [49] consumers nor competitors but nonetheless have suffered an injury of the type the antitrust laws are intended to address?

In answering this third question, the Court is also guided by the Supreme Court's decision in Blue Shield of Virginia v. McCready ("McCready"), 457 U.S. 465, 102 S. Ct. 2540, 73 L. Ed. 2d 149 (1982), a case decided in the term immediately prior to the term in which AGC was decided. In McCready, a case arising under Section 1 of the Sherman Act, the Supreme Court held that while the plaintiff was not a competitor of the alleged conspirators, she had nevertheless suffered antitrust injury because "the injury she suffered was inextricably intertwined with the injury the conspirators sought to inflict." Id. at 484. McCready had alleged that her health insurer, Blue Shield of Virginia, and an organization of psychiatrists conspired to exclude psychologists from eligibility for compensation under Blue Shield's insurance plans. Id. at 469-70. McCready alleged that she suffered injury when she sought reimbursement from Blue Shield for treatment by a psychologist and was denied because Blue Shield only allowed her and other subscribers to choose between "visiting a psychologist and forfeiting reimbursement, or [*360] receiving reimbursement by forgoing treatment [50] of a provider of their choice." Id. at 467-69, 483. The Court found that McCready's injury "flow[ed] from that which makes defendants' acts unlawful" under the antitrust laws, and accordingly there was no persuasive rationale to deny McCready redress. Id. at 484-85. Although not frequently relied upon, lower courts have, subsequent to McCready, cited its inextricably intertwined analysis. See, e.g., Crimpers Promotions Inc. v. Home Box Office, Inc., 724 F.2d 290, 294 (2d Cir. 1983) (Friendly, J.) (plaintiff was trade show organizer, not direct participant in relevant market, but had antitrust standing); Province v. Cleveland Press Publ'g Co., 787 F.2d 1047, 1052 (6th Cir. 1986) (plaintiffs who are not "direct participants in the relevant market" can establish standing by showing that their injury is "inextricably intertwined" with the injury inflicted on the relevant market). "To be inextricably intertwined with the injury to competition, the plaintiffs must have been 'manipulated or utilized by [d]efendant as a fulcrum, conduit or market force to injure competitors or participants in the relevant product and geographical market.'" Province, 787 F.2d at 1052 (quoting Southaven Land Co. v. Malone & Hyde, Inc., 715 F.2d 1079, 1086 (6th Cir. 1983)).[18]

A. Standing for the Section 1 Claim

At least with respect to the issue [51] of antitrust standing for their § 1 claim, plaintiffs are situated much like the first level purchaser plaintiffs in Aluminum. As in Aluminum, plaintiffs are not competitors of any of the defendants or consumers of their products or services: they do not operate warehouses, do not have commodities trading arms, and do not allege that they directly consume any of defendants' trading products or zinc warehouse-related products or services. See Aluminum II, 95 F. Supp. 3d at 442.[19] Rather, as was true for the first level purchasers in Aluminum, the core of plaintiffs' claims is that they have suffered necessary yet collateral damage from defendants' scheme by having to pay artificially inflated prices for primary zinc in the physical market. Plaintiffs allege that they are the real world users whose demand for zinc creates the market for zinc sales. (CAC ¶¶ 32, 39, 46, 53, 60.) Were it not for entities like plaintiffs, who need to use zinc for their galvanizing processes, defendants' trading arms would not be able to trade zinc futures as a commodity, and their warehousing arms would not have need to store the metal. (CAC ¶ 26.) Plaintiffs allege that they are thus central to—or the fulcrum of—the creation of the market opportunity [52] underlying both metal storage and warrant trading for zinc. (CAC ¶ 26.) As the entities that were the first purchasers to pay the MW SHG Premium, they were closest to the anticompetitive effects of defendants' alleged conduct and are necessarily directly impacted by defendants' alleged manipulation of the price of that premium. That is, their purchases are inextricably intertwined with the competitive landscape in which defendants' alleged scheme ultimately played out. Plaintiffs argue that, at the very least, they therefore fall within the scope of antitrust injury contemplated by McCready. The Court agrees.

[*361] The heart of defendants' argument is that as plaintiffs are neither direct consumers nor competitors of defendants, they cannot have experienced a competition reducing impact of defendants' conduct. But plaintiffs' theory of antitrust injury depends not on any single act, but rather on the aggregate impact of the acts. McCready makes clear that the antitrust laws do not require a plaintiff to fit neatly into a box of competitor [53] or consumer, so long as "the injury [they] suffered was inextricably intertwined with the injury the conspirators sought to inflict." 457 U.S. at 484. Defendants also contend that plaintiffs lack antitrust standing because they do not allege that they owned or stored zinc in any Pacoriniowned or other LME-approved warehouse such that defendants' alleged agreement would have delayed their ability to load their zinc out of Pacorini's warehouses. Plaintiffs' lack of direct participation in warehouse operations and services or the trading of zinc warrants is, here, not dispositive as it might well be in some cases. Given the totality of the factual allegations here, plaintiffs' participation in the separate but related market of purchasing zinc, the price of which is allegedly directly impacted by defendants' conduct, is sufficient to allege antitrust injury for purposes of their Section 1 claim. See, e.g., Loeb Indus. Inc. v. Sumitomo Corp., 306 F.3d 469, 481 (7th Cir. 2002) ("McCready . . . recognizes that different injuries in distinct markets may be inflicted by a single antitrust conspiracy, and thus . . . differently situated plaintiffs might be able to raise claims.").

[18] The term "fulcrum" is defined as "the support about which a lever turns," or alternatively, "one that supplies capability for action." Fulcrum, Merriam-Webster, http://www.merriam-webster.com/dictionary/fulcrum (last visited Nov. 17, 2015).

[19] The sole arguable exception is that plaintiff Jasper Materials, Inc., alleges that it purchased zinc directly from Glencore during the Class Period. (CAC ¶ 56.)

The Court recognizes that, like Aluminum, this case does not fit into any traditional box and these are [54] unusual facts for an antitrust case, but McCready dictates that this Court examine whether plaintiffs have alleged facts that call for the application of analogous principles. Plaintiffs have done so here. If defendants have engaged in a conspiracy that caused dysfunction in the price-setting process and drove prices higher, and plaintiffs paid those higher prices, then, so long as McCready remains good law, plaintiffs have suffered an injury of the type that the McCready Court stated the antitrust laws were designed to prevent.

Defendants also argue that even if plaintiffs are able to allege injury to the competitive process, they have not alleged sufficient facts to demonstrate that they are efficient enforcers of the antitrust laws. Based on the facts as alleged, the Court must find otherwise. As was the case with the first level purchaser and direct purchaser plaintiffs in Aluminum, the facts supporting the existence of antitrust injury also demonstrate that plaintiffs are efficient enforcers for Section 1 purposes.

First, each plaintiff is alleged to buy zinc directly from a zinc producer (and, in the case of Jasper Materials, Inc., directly from Glencore), and the contracts between the [55] producer-seller and plaintiff-buyer allegedly contain provisions tying the contract prices to the MW SHG Premium. (CAC ¶¶ 28-30, 35-37, 42-44, 49-51, 56-58.) Plaintiffs also allege that, due to industry standards, they had no choice but to purchase zinc at a price that included the MW SHG Premium. (CAC ¶ 19.) Second, according to plaintiffs, no buyer of primary zinc higher up or more direct in their respective distribution chains paid prices that included the MW SHG Premium. (CAC ¶¶ 31, 38, 45, 52, 59.) Third, plaintiffs' allegations support nonspeculative damages, as they define damages by the amount by which the MW SHG Premium was inflated. (CAC ¶¶ 2, 24, 145-47, 203, 250-53.) At the motion to dismiss stage, this is sufficient. See Gatt, 711 F.3d at 76 [*362] (whether plaintiff is efficient enforcer is based in part on a prospective analysis of the difficulty of identifying and apportioning damages); Paycom Billing, 467 F.3d at 291 (same). Applying the Gatt factors, these allegations show that (1) plaintiffs' injuries were directly caused by defendants' alleged misconduct, (2) their damages are not speculative, (3) there are no issues regarding duplicative recovery or complex apportionment of damages given that plaintiffs were the first [56] in the chain of distribution to pay a price incorporating the MW SHG Premium, and (4) there are no more direct victims of defendants' misconduct. See Gatt, 711 F.3d at 76.[20] Based on the facts alleged—that they are the first level of purchasers to pay, and thus be harmed by—inflated prices of zinc, plaintiffs have sufficiently positioned themselves as efficient enforcers of the antitrust laws to pass muster at the pleading stage.

B. Standing for the Section 2 Claims

On the other hand, as was the case in Aluminum, plaintiffs [57] do not fare as well in asserting antitrust standing with respect to their Section 2 claims. The CAC alleges two relevant product markets: the market of "services for zinc stored in LME warehouses" and the "market for Special High Grade Zinc or the market for selling such zinc." (CAC ¶ 113.) The only market for which they allege that monopoly power was obtained or dangerously close to being acquired (and the market which plaintiffs allege defendants conspired to monopolize), however, is the "LME Zinc Warehouse Services Market", which, as previously noted plaintiffs define as the market of "services for zinc stored in LME warehouses." (CAC ¶¶ 272, 278-79, 285-86.) As set forth below, plaintiffs do not adequately allege an antitrust injury based on antitrust conduct in this market, and in any event have not adequately alleged they are efficient enforcers as to their Section 2 claims.

[20] Defendants counter that plaintiffs are not efficient enforcers because their injuries are at best indirect and speculative, and at worst nonexistent. Defendants contend that warrant holders whose metal was possibly stuck in the queue at Pacorini's New Orleans warehouses behind that of Pacorini's "preferred customers" were more directly harmed by defendants' alleged agreement. At this stage, that argument cannot alter the outcome on this element. Injury to such entities (such as inflated rents and warehousing fees, or delayed load-outs) could well be entirely different from the injury alleged by plaintiffs here (namely, paying inflated prices for primary zinc due to increases in the MW SHG Premium).

While plaintiffs allege that they were participants in the "market for Special High Grade Zinc or the market for selling such zinc" (and suffered injury in that market due to defendants' conduct), they do not allege that they were purchasers of LME warehousing services or participants in the "LME Zinc Warehouse Services Market." [58] As noted above, however, the "LME Zinc Warehouse Services Market" is the only market in which plaintiffs allege that defendants conspired to obtain, and Glencore had obtained or attempted to acquire, a monopoly position. (CAC ¶¶ 272, 278-79, 285-86.)[21] As a result, [*363] plaintiffs' antitrust standing for Section 2 purposes would have to arise solely from injuries they sustained in connection with Glencore Ltd.'s and/or Pacorini's monopoly (or near-monopoly) position in that market.[22] But, as was the case with respect to the similarly situated plaintiffs in Aluminum, plaintiffs' allegations do not support such an injury. As cast, plaintiffs' injury does not come from actions in the "LME Zinc Warehouse Services Market" alone because plaintiffs themselves have not paid higher warehouse rent or storage fees. Instead, plaintiffs' claim is drafted around injury from a combination of load-out delays, warrant trading and price increases.

The injury resulting from monopolization (or attempted monopolization) is higher prices for output or reduced output; the "output" here is "LME Zinc Warehouse Services." "Higher prices" would reference prices for such services; restrictions in output would relate to restrictions in availability of such services. Plaintiffs' claim is quite different: that they purchase the good that is stored and pay higher prices for that good—the physical zinc—itself. It is easy to see that the injury arising from monopolization of a service would be to buyers and sellers of that service. And plaintiffs were neither. For the same reason, plaintiffs would not be efficient enforcers—the efficient enforcers would be participants in that market.

The fundamental difference between this Section 2 claims and the Section 1 claim is that Section 2 is aimed at conduct within a single market. Section 1, in contrast, allows for the flexibility to allege a result (e.g. higher prices) derived from conspiratorial behavior between two or more actors, who need not be within the same market, to achieve that end.

Plaintiffs attempt to distinguish their Section 2 claims from those in [61] Aluminum (as to which this Court concluded that the plaintiffs lacked antitrust standing, Aluminum II, 95 F. Supp. 3d at 456), arguing that their allegations of the two inextricably intertwined markets for LME zinc warehouse services and for SHG zinc may support an antitrust injury under McCready and Crimpers. The Court is unconvinced. First, it is incorrect to say that the plaintiffs in Aluminum did not allege two inextricably intertwined markets. Such allegations were tried, and this Court considered and rejected the same argument that plaintiffs make here. See Aluminum II, 95 F. Supp. 3d at 456. Second, although the Court agrees that the two markets are, as alleged, inextricably intertwined for Section 1 purposes, McCready's concept of inextricably intertwined markets does not extend to the claims brought under Section 2 here; whether there is some conceivable Section 2 case where it may apply is not a question this Court need resolve here. McCready was a Section 1 case, [*364] McCready, 457 U.S. at 469-70, and there is nothing in that decision to suggest that its logic extends to the type of Section 2 monopolization claim pled here

[21] At oral argument, plaintiffs asserted that because Counts II-IV incorporate all of the CAC's preceding allegations, those claims may be fairly read as alleging monopoly power in both markets. (October 30, 2015 Oral Arg. Tr. ("Oral Arg. Tr.") at 102:24-103:20, ECF No. 153; see [59] CAC ¶¶ 271, 277, 284.) This, however, is not a fair characterization of the CAC, which specifically alleges monopoly power only over the warehousing services market and the relevant counts make no reference to the market for the sale of primary zinc. (See CAC ¶¶ 271-90.) As discussed below, to the extent that plaintiffs seek to amend their complaint to attempt to state a monopoly claim as to both markets, the Court grants them leave to amend to do so.

[22] Plaintiffs cite In re Crude Oil Commodity Futures Litigation, 913 F. Supp. 2d 41 (S.D.N.Y. 2012), for the proposition that paying supra-competitive prices as a result of a defendant's monopoly power is a "quintessential antitrust injury" for Section 2 purposes. Id. at 57. In Crude Oil, the court noted the lack of authority "for the proposition that an antitrust injury cannot extend beyond the bounds of the monopolized market," and went on to conclude that plaintiffs sufficiently alleged antitrust injury because their losses were "of the type that the antitrust laws were intended to prevent." Id. While the paying of higher prices due to monopoly power is at the very core of what Section 2 is intended to prevent, as explained below, Section 2 is designed to protect against the raising of prices or restricting of output in the particular, defined market [60] for which the defendant has monopoly power, not in an entirely separate market.

(notwithstanding that much of the discussion in McCready was directed at Section 4 of the Clayton Act, the remedial provision which applies to claims brought under both Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act). While a [62] number of subsequent lower court decisions, including from the Second Circuit, have cited McCready's inextricably intertwined language, plaintiffs have not cited a single case in which a court grappled with—or even had presented to it—the rather thorny issue of whether and how that language might apply to a Section 2 claim alleging the sort of indirect harm asserted here.[23]

Because Section 2 is concerned with the monopolization of a particular market that raises prices or restricts output in that market, see, e.g., PepsiCo, Inc. v. Coca-Cola Co., 315 F.3d 101, 107 (2d Cir. 2002) ("The core element of a monopolization claim is market power, which is defined as "the ability to raise price by restricting output." (quotation marks omitted)); see also Spectrum Sports, Inc. v. McQuillan, 506 U.S. 447, 459, 113 S. Ct. 884, 122 L. Ed. 2d 247 (1993) ("We hold that petitioners may not be liable for attempted monopolization under § 2 of the Sherman Act absent proof of a dangerous probability that they would monopolize a particular market and specific intent to monopolize." (emphasis added)), it makes perfect sense to limit McCready's broader approach to antitrust injury to the Section 1 context. The Supreme Court itself has stated that "[c]oncerted activity subject to § 1 is judged more sternly than unilateral activity under § 2." Copperweld Corp. v. Indep. Tube Corp., 467 U.S. 752, 768, 104 S. Ct. 2731, 81 L. Ed. 2d 628 (1984). Thus, plaintiffs' alleged injury in a different market [64] than that in which defendants allegedly conspired to obtain, obtained, or came close to obtaining a monopoly is not "of the type that [Section 2 was] intended to prevent." Brunswick Corp., 429 U.S. at 489. In the absence of binding authority to the contrary, and in light of the harms sought to be prevented by Section 2, there is good reason to limit the inextricably intertwined test to the Section 1 context.

Even if McCready's inextricably intertwined test does extend to Section 2 claims such that plaintiffs have adequately alleged an antitrust injury as to those claims, plaintiffs nonetheless fail the efficient enforcer test under the same logic as this Court relied on in Aluminum. As in [*365] Aluminum, it is only the combination of the coordinated actions of many different participants that spells out how plaintiffs' injury can be inextricably intertwined with defendants' alleged monopolistic conduct. Analyzed on its own, as injury based solely on the monopolization of the market for LME zinc warehouse services, plaintiffs are not efficient enforcers. As was the case with respect to the first level purchaser and direct purchaser plaintiffs in Aluminum, there are others, such as entities that stored their metal at Pacorini's New Orleans warehouses and whose [65] metal was stuck behind that of Pacorini's allegedly "preferred customers" in the load-out queue, who are more appropriately situated to pursue a monopoly claim in the LME zinc warehouse services market. Plaintiffs are simply too remote from that market to have antitrust standing to pursue a Section 2 claim based on anticompetitive conduct in that market, and thus, based on their current pleadings, they fail the fourth Gatt factor.

V. SECTION 1 CONSPIRACY

Section 1 of the Sherman Act prohibits "[e]very contract, combination . . . or conspiracy, in restraint of trade . . . ." 15 U.S.C. § 1. Since all contracts necessarily restrain trade to some extent, this provision cannot be read literally: only "unreasonable" restraints of trade are unlawful. Bus. Elecs. Corp. v. Sharp Elecs. Corp., 485 U.S. 717, 723,

---

[23] In Crimpers, the Second Circuit applied McCready's inextricably intertwined concept where the plaintiff alleged claims under both Sections 1 and 2, but the Court's analysis was focused on the Section 1 conspiracy claim (and actually questioned whether plaintiff's Section 2 monopolization claim was in fact one of oligopoly under Section 1, see Crimpers, 724 F.2d at 291 n.1); it did not specifically address whether and how the inextricably intertwined concept might apply to Section 2, see id. at 294-95. The Second Circuit again cited McCready's inextricably intertwined language in a case involving a Section 2 claim in In re DDAVP Direct Purchaser Antitrust Litigation, 585 F.3d 677 (2d Cir. 2009), although in that case the plaintiffs alleged that they were direct purchasers of the drugs as to which the defendants were alleged to have unlawfully maintained a monopoly, id. at 683. Given the absence of discussion of there being multiple markets at issue, it is far from clear that In re DDAVP was intended to endorse [63] the application of McCready to a situation in which plaintiffs allege injury in one market caused by defendants' monopoly in another market. Plaintiffs point to no lower court decision citing McCready's inextricably intertwined language that discussed the interaction of two different markets where the alleged monopolistic conduct in one market caused damage in another market.

108 S. Ct. 1515, 99 L. Ed. 2d 808 (1988); see also In re Publ'n Paper Antitrust Litig., 690 F.3d 51, 61 (2d Cir. 2012). To run afoul of Section 1, the unreasonable restraint must result from an agreement between two or more entities. See Twombly, 550 U.S. at 553-54; Theatre Enters., Inc. v. Paramount Film Distrib. Corp., 346 U.S. 537, 540, 74 S. Ct. 257, 98 L. Ed. 273 (1954); Anderson News, 680 F.3d at 182. As a matter of law, only separate entities can conspire in violation of the antitrust laws; thus, a corporate parent and its wholly owned subsidiary are incapable of conspiring in violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act as a matter of law. Copperweld, 467 U.S. at 767, 771; Capital Imaging Assocs., P.C. v. Mohawk Valley Med. Assocs., Inc., 996 F.2d 537, 542 (2d Cir. 1993).[24] A unilateral business decision by a single entity—typically including parents and their wholly owned subsidiaries—is not a violation [66] of Section 1. Copperweld, 467 U.S. at 775. "The crucial question in a Section 1 case is . . . whether the challenged conduct stems from independent decision or from an agreement, tacit or express." Mayor & City Council of Balt., Md. v. Citigroup, Inc., 709 F.3d 129, 135 (2d Cir. 2013) (quotation marks omitted).

The primary substantive issue that defendants raise in their motions with respect to plaintiffs' Section 1 claim is that the allegations do not plausibly support an inference of anticompetitive agreement or concerted action. Although plaintiffs advance several theories of a conspiracy in the CAC and in [67] opposition to defendants' motions, the Court agrees that plaintiffs [*366] have failed to plead a plausible unlawful agreement.

Before turning to the issue of the adequacy of plaintiffs' allegations of an agreement, the Court briefly pauses to again note the markets that plaintiffs allege were manipulated by defendants' alleged anticompetitive agreement. The CAC identifies and defines two markets: the market of "services for zinc stored in LME warehouses" and the "market for Special High Grade Zinc or the market for selling such zinc." (CAC ¶¶ 113-14.) Geographically, both markets are alleged to cover the United States, North America, and/or the world. (CAC ¶ 113.) It is these markets as to which the Court must determine if plaintiffs plausibly plead an anticompetitive agreement.

In order for plaintiffs to plausibly allege coordinated conduct running afoul of Section 1, they must plausibly allege concerted action. Allegations merely consistent with unilateral action are insufficient. See Twombly, 550 U.S. at 556-57; Copperweld, 467 U.S. at 768; Monsanto Co. v. Spray-Rite Serv. Corp., 465 U.S. 752, 761, 104 S. Ct. 1464, 79 L. Ed. 2d 775 (1984); Anderson News, 680 F.3d at 183. "[T]here is a basic distinction between concerted and independent action . . . ." Monsanto, 465 U.S. at 761. Allegations must support a unity of purpose, common design and understanding, or a meeting of the minds in an unlawful agreement. [68] Am. Tobacco Co. v. United States, 328 U.S. 781, 810, 66 S. Ct. 1125, 90 L. Ed. 1575 (1946); Int'l Distribution Centers, Inc. v. Walsh Trucking Co., 812 F.2d 786, 793 (2d Cir. 1987).

"Allegations of direct evidence of an agreement, if sufficiently detailed, are independently adequate." In re Insurance Brokerage Antitrust Litig., 618 F.3d 300, 323 (2d Cir. 2010) (citing Twombly, 550 U.S. at 564). Plaintiffs need not, however, plead direct evidence of conspiracy. See Anderson News, 680 F.3d at 183. Conspiracies are rarely evidenced by explicit agreements—they must nearly always be proven through "'inferences that may fairly be drawn from the behavior of the alleged conspirators.'" Id. (quoting Michelman v. Clark-Schwebel Fiber Glass Corp., 534 F.2d 1036, 1043 (2d Cir. 1976)); see also Mayor & City Council of Balt., 709 F.3d at 136-37 (in many antitrust cases, "smoking gun" evidence can be hard to come by, and thus a complaint must set forth sufficient circumstantial facts supporting an inference of conspiracy).

At the pleading stage, plaintiffs must allege sufficient facts to support (not "prove" or even "demonstrate") a plausible inference that defendants reached an agreement; a complaint merely alleging parallel conduct alone is not sustainable. Twombly, 550 U.S. at 556; see also Mayor & City Council of Balt., 709 F.3d at 135-36 ("[A]lleging parallel conduct alone is insufficient, even at the pleading stage."); Anderson News, 680 F.3d at 184. [24] Although certain sets of defendants are affiliated with one another, defendants have for the most part not argued that plaintiffs' Section 1 claim is deficient for failure to allege an agreement between separate entities (although defendants vigorously contest whether any alleged agreement has otherwise been sufficiently pled). Because the CAC alleges agreements between a number of entities from different corporate families, plaintiffs' Section 1 claim does not fail under Copperweld's separate entities requirement. That being said, to the extent that plaintiffs' Section 1 claim remains viable only as to defendants that are part of the same corporate family (such as Glencore Ltd. and Pacorini), plaintiffs' allegations run into Copperweld issues.

which there is obvious parallel conduct and the question is whether it is the product of coordinated or unilateral decision making, a plaintiff must allege additional facts that point toward a meeting of the minds. Twombly, 550 U.S. at 557.

Even conscious parallelism in pricing among competitors is not [69] itself unlawful. Id. at 553-54; In re Publ'n Paper, 690 F.3d at 62. By engaging in conscious parallelism, firms in a concentrated market may lawfully recognize shared economic interests and, in effect, lawfully exercise their leverage to set prices at a profit maximizing—and even a supra-competitive—level. Brooke Grp. Ltd. v. Brown & Williamson Tobacco Corp., 509 U.S. 209, 227-28, [*367] 113 S. Ct. 2578, 125 L. Ed. 2d 168 (1993). "Plus-factors" may provide the additional circumstances necessary to permit a fact-finder to infer a conspiracy. Examples of plus-factors are a common motive to conspire, actions taken against economic self-interest, and a high level of inter-firm communications. In re Publ'n Paper, 690 F.3d at 62; see also Apex Oil Co. v. DiMauro, 822 F.2d 246, 253-54 (2d Cir. 1987) (suggesting that allegations that are consistent only with market actors who are aware of and anticipate similar actions by competitors would be insufficient to support the existence of a tacit agreement).[25]

Several overlapping theories of a conspiratorial agreement among defendants may be read into the CAC. Some are quite explicitly made and apparent from a first reading of the CAC, while others have been identified by the Court only upon a careful parsing of plaintiffs' allegations and arguments when viewed in their totality. Broadly construed, the CAC appears to assert the following anticompetitive agreements: (1) a broad horizontal agreement extending over the entire duration of the Class Period to restrain the supply of zinc, with the Queue Order Agreement serving as a brief "window" into a larger, far-reaching and pre-existing agreement among defendants, (2) the Queue Order Agreement as a stand-alone conspiracy beginning in fall 2012 and extending until the end of the Class Period, (3) a market allocation across multiple metals (including zinc and aluminum) and geographic areas, and (4) a hub-and-spoke type conspiracy with Glencore Ltd./Pacorini at the "hub" and the other defendants acting as "spokes." Below, the Court addresses each of these alternatives in turn and concludes [72] that none are sufficiently plausible under the standards of Twombly and Iqbal to withstand defendants' motions.

Plaintiffs' first theory, and the one that at first glance most closely parallels the theory of a Section 1 conspiracy alleged in Aluminum II, is that JPMorgan, Goldman Sachs and Glencore each acquired LME-certified warehouse operators in 2010 and subsequently (through certain commodities trading and warehouse operating affiliates) [*368] engaged in a broad range of concerted activity to drive up the price of zinc (and thereby reap profits through trading activity and increased warehouse rent and metal storage fees) by artificially restraining the supply of zinc through choreographed load-out delays. The CAC does not clearly identify who precisely made this agreement, when it was made, where it was made, or its terms, but rather lists a number of alleged anticompetitive means used [25] In Mayor & City Council of Baltimore v. Citigroup, Inc., the Second Circuit reviewed whether allegations of certain parallel conduct in the auction rate securities market were sufficient to support a § 1 conspiracy. Plaintiffs alleged that defendant banks conspired with each other to simultaneously stop buying auction rate securities for their own proprietary accounts, causing auctions to fail and the market to collapse. 709 F.3d at 131-32. The Court found that the allegations [70] supported only parallel conduct. Id. at 138.

The Court began by noting that the crucial question in a § 1 case is whether the challenged conduct stems from an agreement, and that the existence of such an agreement is a legal conclusion to be determined by the court—and not a factual allegation. Id. at 135-36 (citing Starr v. Sony BMG Music Entm't, 592 F.3d 314, 319 n.2 (2d Cir. 2010)). The Court further stated that plaintiffs must allege additional circumstances supporting an inference of conspiracy; merely alleging that parallel conduct occurred is insufficient to overcome a motion to dismiss because it would "risk propelling defendants into expensive antitrust discovery on the basis of acts that could just as easily turn out to have been rational business behavior as they could a proscribed antitrust conspiracy." Id. at 136-37. The Court found that defendants' alleged actions—an en masse flight from a collapsing market in which they had significant downside exposure—made perfect sense in light of their business interests. Id. at 138. This distinguished the case from Starr, in which specific allegations supporting an inference that defendants' parallel conduct was against their own economic self-interest led the Second Circuit to conclude that plaintiffs had plausibly alleged an antitrust conspiracy. [71] See id. at 138-39 (citing Starr, 592 F.3d at 327). Accordingly, the Court affirmed the district court's grant of defendants' motion to dismiss. Id. at 140.

to execute it. Somewhat similar to the scheme described in Aluminum, this alleged conspiracy would have to involve a web of horizontal and vertical agreements. For instance, this zinc scheme would require horizontal agreements between the trading affiliates of Goldman Sachs, Glencore, and JPMorgan (each with each [73] other), and between their respective warehousing affiliates Metro, Pacorini and Henry Bath, as well as separate vertical agreements between each of the trading defendants and each of the warehouse operator defendants.

Plaintiffs argue that the CAC contains both sufficient direct evidence and parallel conduct with plus factors, to support the existence of this web-like scheme. This Court disagrees.

At oral argument, in an effort to sum up what appears to be the crux of plaintiffs' theory as to how their sprawling allegations fit together, the Court posited that the CAC could be read as alleging what would otherwise be parallel conduct beginning in 2010 and occurring at different moments in time, followed by the Queue Order Agreement in 2012—which provided a momentary "window" into the scheme. (See Oral Arg. Tr. at 20:15-21:7.) Plaintiffs agreed that the conspiracy they alleged could be conceived this way. (See Oral Arg. Tr. at 72:18-21.) Below, the Court sets out the allegations that support this theory and explains why, even when those allegations are considered as a whole, they still fail to plausibly support a Section 1 claim.

The Court first addresses plaintiffs' alleged direct evidence, which [74] consists of the testimony of two confidential witnesses (both of whom are former employees of Pacorini) relating to the Queue Order Agreement between defendants and nonparty Noble, as well as Pacorini's practice of falsifying metal shipping records and transactional documents. According to CW1, defendants and Noble met in the fall of 2012 and entered into the Queue Order Agreement, the terms of which were that: (1) zinc would be the first metal loaded out of Pacorini's New Orleans warehouses, (2) defendants' and Noble's zinc would be prioritized for load out ahead of other customers' zinc, and (3) defendants would sequence and time their warrant cancellations in an agreed upon order such that those cancellations would not overlap with each another. (CAC ¶¶ 189-90.) Plaintiffs allege that wait times for customers to load zinc out of Pacorini's warehouses increased after defendants entered into this agreement, although they do not state with detail how long load-out queues were at various times within the Class Period. (See CAC ¶¶ 197-98.) Plaintiffs allege that both confidential witnesses also testified that Pacorini engaged in a practice of falsifying bills of lading and other documents [75] concerning warrant cancellations and metal transfers in order to manipulate the load-out numbers that Pacorini reported to the LME. (CAC ¶¶ 180-86.) As explained below, none of this direct evidence, however, makes plausible the claim that the array of defendants sued as co-conspirators here participated in this broad unlawful anticompetitive agreement spanning from 2010 until the present.

First, as to the Queue Order Agreement, it is simply too thin a branch to support [*369] this theory; it is too isolated, as it is described as unilateral, private action by Pacorini. The allegations of the CAC—stripped of the rhetoric painting the Queue Order Agreement as nefarious—amount to no more than one agreement to prioritize and organize the loading out of zinc from Pacorini's New Orleans warehouses.[26] That is, placing zinc of one warrant holder in front of the zinc of another. Accordingly, the type of agreement is—as alleged—output neutral (or even enhancing), and it happens only once during a multi-year conspiracy. Plaintiffs fail to explain why an agreement in which no two participants would cancel their warrants at the same time would lead to longer load-out queues; if anything, such an agreement [76] suggests that queues would be more limited because there would be a more ordered outflow and less buildup. This agreement was, furthermore, allegedly made sometime in the middle of the duration of the alleged conspiracy. If it is a window, it is showing sunny, not cloudy skies—and for only one point in time. This cannot support the broad scheme alleged. Put otherwise, the scheme alleged is so broad with so many participants over so much time, this is just too little to push this conspiracy over the line into plausibility.[27] See Ross v. Am. Exp. Co., 35 F. Supp. 3d 407, 452 (S.D.N.Y. 2014) (stating that court would not

[26] To the extent that plaintiffs point to the "Queue Manager" spreadsheet as further evidence of an unlawful agreement, the CAC describes the spreadsheet as something that Pacorini used as a "very private" and "strictly 'in-house'" project; it is thus unclear how evidence relating to the spreadsheet could meaningfully contribute to plaintiffs' claim that this collection of defendants engaged in a broad five-year conspiracy. (CAC ¶ 196.)

"read evidence of a benign agreement as evidence of a separate, illegal agreement"), aff'd sub nom. Ross v. Citigroup, Inc., Nos. 14-1610(L), 14-1616(Con), 630 Fed. Appx. 79, 2015 U.S. App. LEXIS 20025, 2015 WL 7292176 (2d Cir. Nov. 24, 2015).

But there is more. Even assuming that the Queue Order Agreement could serve as a window into a larger, pre-existing conspiracy, it can only plausibly occupy that role to the extent that the larger conspiracy is similar in kind. Acquisition of warehouse companies and the other activities that defendants allegedly engaged in to restrain the supply of zinc (which the Court describes below) go much further and are simply too different from the type of coordination contemplated by the alleged Queue Order Agreement to be able to infer those activities from it.

Next, as to plaintiffs' evidence of the falsification of bills of lading and other metal shipping documents, their allegations relate solely to Pacorini and not any other defendant. To the extent that plaintiffs contend that the falsification of shipping documents is further evidence of unlawful aims of the Queue Order Agreement, there is no logical relationship between these activities, and, at least based on [78] the allegations in the CAC, plaintiffs' confidential witnesses do not draw any connection between the two practices. While plaintiffs' allegations that Pacorini falsified bills of lading may tend to show that Pacorini was engaged in fraudulent or otherwise unlawful conduct, those allegations—which do not demonstrate any activity related to any other defendant—do little to support the existence of an unlawful anticompetitive agreement [*370] among the various competitor defendants. Thus, even when accepting plaintiffs' allegations regarding their confidential witnesses as true at this stage, see Hinds Cnty., Miss. v. Wachovia Bank N.A., 700 F. Supp. 2d 378, 396 n.5 (S.D.N.Y. 2010), plaintiffs' alleged direct evidence does not support a broad conspiracy to restrain the supply of zinc stretching from 2010 (when Glencore, Goldman Sachs and JPMorgan acquired Pacorini, Metro and Henry Bath, respectively) up until Goldman Sachs and JPMorgan sold off their warehouse affiliates in 2014.

In addition to their purported direct evidence, plaintiffs also argue that they have plausibly alleged a broad five-year conspiracy through a combination of allegations of parallel conduct, circumstantial evidence, and recognized "plus" factors. The Court addresses each set of allegations in turn, detailing [79] why, even when viewed collectively, they are insufficient to support a plausible inference of concerted action under the standards set forth in Twombly and Iqbal. While the Court addresses each of plaintiffs' relevant allegations individually, the Court considers, as it must at this stage, the allegations in their totality to determine if, taken as a whole, they create a plausible inference of the alleged anticompetitive agreement.[28] See H.L. Hayden Co. of New York v. Siemens Med. Sys., Inc., 879 F.2d 1005, 1012 (2d Cir. 1989) (citing Cont'l Ore Co. v. Union Carbide & Carbon Corp., 370 U.S. 690, 699, 82 S. Ct. 1404, 8 L. Ed. 2d 777 (1962)).

Starting with parallel conduct, the CAC alleges that JPMorgan, Goldman Sachs and Glencore engaged in parallel conduct when they acquired significant influence over the LME by each acquiring a major metal warehousing operator (Henry Bath, Metro, and Pacorini, respectively) between February and September 2010. (CAC ¶ 108.)[29] The CAC alleges that Goldman Sachs and JPMorgan respectively [80] held equity interests of 9.5% and 11% in the LME until the HKEx acquired it in December 2012 (less than halfway into the Class Period) and continue to hold class B shares; it also alleges that JPMorgan, Goldman Sachs and Glencore served as and continue to serve as members of the LME and have positions on the LME's Lead and Zinc Committee, the LME Warehousing Committee, and the LME Executive Committee. (CAC ¶¶ 80, 130.) The CAC alleges that defendants were able to [27] The Court separately considers below (in addressing [77] what the Court refers to as plaintiffs' second theory) whether the allegations relating to the Queue Order Agreement may nonetheless support a plausible inference of a narrower (both temporally and in scope) conspiracy under § 1.

[28] The Court incorporates by reference its prior discussion of the flaws with plaintiffs' direct evidence relating to the alleged Queue Order Agreement and Pacorini's practice of falsifying bills of lading, and notes that it considers all of that evidence collectively with plaintiffs' other allegations to determine whether plaintiffs have pled a plausible § 1 conspiracy.

[29] The CAC alleges that Glencore did not acquire Pacorini until September 2010, approximately four months after the start of the Class [81] Period. (CAC ¶ 108.) Notably, the CAC does not allege that defendants made an agreement that each would acquire a LME-certified warehousing services provider.

use these positions to make warehousing-related policy recommendations to the LME, including with respect to issues such as setting minimum load-out rules and the maximum storage rental rate in LME-certified warehouses. (CAC ¶¶ 138-39.) The CAC alleges, in particular, that defendants' membership on the LME Warehousing Committee allowed them to establish rules in which they could treat the LME's minimum daily metal load-out requirement as a maximum and could net incoming shipments and shuttle zinc between their warehouses to meet the minimum without having to reduce load-out queues. (CAC ¶¶ 132-33.)

The CAC further alleges other parallel conduct less directly tied to defendants' [*371] positions in the LME, including that Pacorini and Metro paid incentives to market participants to store zinc in their warehouses and that Pacorini's incentives exceeded the price premium that producers could obtain by selling metal on the open market. (CAC ¶¶ 202-03.) Such incentives are, however, equally consistent with competitive behavior; the CAC itself alleges that the incentives offered were affordable because defendants would "recoup the premium outlay on the rent." (CAC ¶ 202.)[30] Finally, plaintiffs also allege that defendants engaged in the practices of shadow warehousing, in which metal is moved from LME warehouses to areas not registered as LME warehouses, and strategic delisting of LME warehouses (citing specific instances in Vlissingen). Even on the face of the CAC, however, these practices are equally consistent with rational economic decision-makers acting independently. In short, if you own a warehouse, it makes sense to try to get as [82] much metal into that warehouse and keep it there for as long as possible. And, of course, there is nothing inherently problematic or suspect about moving metal off-warrant. Notably, plaintiffs do not allege that these practices were carried out pursuant to any specific agreement—just that there must have been one. (CAC ¶¶ 205-09.)

While certain of this conduct, if true, is problematic and—to say the least—does not enhance the promotion of a fair market, as this Court held in Aluminum, these sort of allegations do not lead to a plausible inference of unlawful communication or coordination between defendants. *Aluminum I, 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 121435, 2014 WL 4277510, at 31-34. The CAC itself alleges that a bank would have an edge when trading commodities by independently acquiring a warehouse operator (CAC ¶ 109), and plaintiffs fail to show why a rational economic actor would not independently take any of the subsequent alleged actions, including influencing LME policy, that leverage a combined trading firm/warehouse operator's position for its own [83] self-interest. It hardly seems remarkable to have commodities traders decide—if they can afford it—to buy and hold the commodity to drive up the price. While this may violate LME rules, financial regulations, or even market expectations, that alone does not render such conduct a violation of the antitrust laws.

Plaintiffs, of course, do not purport to rely solely on the alleged parallel conduct described above. They also cite purported circumstantial evidence of an anticompetitive agreement, which consists primarily of data showing changes in the zinc market during the Class Period, and anecdotal evidence of unusual and irregular warrant cancellation activity. Plaintiffs' circumstantial evidence includes data that the stock of warehoused zinc rose to an all-time high of more than 1.2 million tons by 2013 (compared to 300 thousand tons in 2009) (CAC ¶ 174), New Orleans warehouse outbound delivery queues tripled by the end of 2011 and sometimes exceeded a year by November 2012 (CAC ¶ 249), the MW SHG Premium nearly tripled during the Class Period (CAC ¶¶ 250-51), and the volume of zinc futures trading on the LME nearly doubled between 2009 and 2013 during a period of a "contango" in the [84] market (CAC ¶ 245).

Plaintiffs cannot adequately plead their broad, five-year conspiracy simply by noting developments in the zinc market, particularly when many of those developments occurred at vastly different times over the Class Period such that the possibility of [*372] causation is hard to assess. Plaintiffs allege that the rise of the MW SHG Premium began prior to Glencore's acquisition of Pacorini (CAC ¶¶ 250-51), but that Pacorini's zinc queue did not increase significantly until 2012 when the Queue Manager spreadsheet was initiated (see CAC ¶ 197).

Plaintiffs' other allegations equally support the inference that Glencore and its affiliates occupied such a dominant position in the various facets of the zinc market that it is hard to contemplate why Glencore would find it necessary or desirable to involve outside third parties in any plan to drive up the price of zinc. Specifically, plaintiffs allege that Glencore and its affiliates have a dominant zinc operation "breathtaking in scope and scale" that accounts for 60% of trading of the world's zinc, ownership and control of 35% of the output of the world's zinc mines, and control over 90% of all LME warehouse stocks of zinc. (CAC ¶¶ [85] 140-43.) Glencore's alleged position in the zinc market far exceeds the dominance that Goldman Sachs and its affiliates allegedly had in the aluminum market, rendering it less probable here than in Aluminum that Glencore would gain much from involving unaffiliated entities in an anticompetitive scheme. Plaintiffs' Section 2 monopolization and attempted monopolization claims are, in this sense, incompatible with their conspiracy claims.

[30] Furthermore, even if these allegations contributed some support to an inference of an anticompetitive agreement, the CAC does not allege that JPMorgan or Henry Bath provided any similar incentive payments.

As noted above, plaintiffs' circumstantial evidence also includes alleged irregular and unexplained warrant cancellation activity. This alleged activity mostly occurred around the time that Glencore announced that it was taking over Pacorini in September 2012, and the CAC also cites trader statements later in 2012 that "two warehousing firms in particular" appeared to be carrying out warrant cancellations on a "friendly basis." (CAC ¶¶ 157-58, 249.) As with the Queue Order Agreement (which, based on the timing, might serve as the underlying explanation of the latter instances of irregular warrant cancellations), plaintiffs' allegations relating to warrant cancellations in 2012 do not support an agreement that violates the antitrust laws. Purportedly irregular [86] warrant activity engaged in by unnamed or unknown entities during a limited period in the middle of the Class Period cannot render plausible plaintiffs' allegations of a complex, far-reaching, five-year anticompetitive agreement among various entities, some of whom are not alleged to have taken part in the alleged irregular warrant cancellation activity at all.

Plaintiffs, finally, also rely on purported plus factors to support the existence of an unlawful anticompetitive agreement, some of which have already been addressed above. The alleged plus factors not previously discussed include the existence of various government investigations concerning metals warehousing practices (CAC ¶¶ 221-43), a market concentration and structure conducive to collusion (e.g., CAC ¶ 218), and that defendants acted against their own self-interest by allowing massive queues to build up in their warehouses. Plaintiffs also allege that defendants had an opportunity to conspire through their involvement in the LME (CAC ¶¶ 130-32), and a profit motive to do so (e.g., CAC ¶¶ 210-12).

These factors are, by and large, the same factors that the plaintiffs sought to rely on in Aluminum I, and the Court rejects these [87] allegations as not pushing plaintiffs' conspiracy claim across the line from conceivable to plausible for the same reasons it rejected them in that case. Plaintiffs rely on defendants' alleged opportunity and motive to conspire through their involvement with the LME, but this Court rejected the very same allegations in Aluminum. *Aluminum I, 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 121435, 2014 WL 4277510, at 33-34 [*373] (citing Capital Imaging Assocs., 996 F.2d at 545). This Court also concluded in Aluminum I that allegations that defendants acted against their own self-interest by allowing massive queues to build up in their warehouses (which appeared to be economically incorrect in Aluminum, and similarly illogical here), and that various government entities commenced investigations concerning warehousing practices, did not render the plaintiffs' broad conspiracy allegations plausible. *Aluminum I, 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 121435, 2014 WL 4277510, at 32-33. To the extent that plaintiffs now argue that defendants' alleged involvement in a related aluminum conspiracy also serves as a plus factor, that allegation carries little weight without any finding of liability having been made in that case. See Ross, 35 F. Supp. 3d at 450.

Plaintiffs counter that their conspiracy allegations are at least as strong, if not stronger, than the allegations this Court deemed sufficient in the Third Amended Complaint and Joint Amended [88] Complaint in Aluminum II. Plaintiffs assert that their allegations are sufficient because they rely on the same documents and communications alleged in Aluminum II and because they have also added allegations relating to the Queue Order Agreement. The Court disagrees with plaintiffs' characterization of the relative strength of their claim. As discussed above, most of plaintiffs' allegations mirror the vague and conclusory allegations that this Court rejected in Aluminum I, and many of their most specific allegations relate solely to Glencore and/or Pacorini. In contrast, the two complaints that survived the defendants' Rule 12(b)(6) motions in Aluminum II included allegations that were far more specific and detailed than those pled here, including allegations of various discussions and arrangements among the various defendants and citation to emails and documents that plausibly supported the existence of those agreements. See Aluminum II, 95 F. Supp. 3d at 434-35, 452. The CAC is devoid of the type of specific allegations that nudged the surviving claims in Aluminum II across the line from conceivable to plausible.

In weighing the allegations and alleged plus factors, the Court recognizes that plaintiffs' allegations must not be compartmentalized [89] and that the Court must evaluate the CAC as a whole and consider the combined character and effect of plaintiffs' alleged conspiracy. See H.L. Hayden, 879 F.2d at 1012. But even viewing the allegations in their totality and in the light most favorable to plaintiffs, the Court concludes that the allegations more closely resemble those rejected by this Court in Aluminum I, rather than those found sufficient in Aluminum II.[31]

Even if the CAC does not adequately allege the broad, far-reaching five-year conspiracy that plaintiffs seek to show, it would nonetheless be theoretically possible for the allegations to be sufficient to allege a different conspiracy. Reviewing the CAC for the strongest claim that it may potentially state, plaintiffs' allegations may be fairly read as asserting a theory of [90] conspiracy narrower in duration and scope—namely, that the Queue Order Agreement was a stand-alone anticompetitive agreement that began in the fall of 2012. Under this theory, defendants and non-party Noble [*374] made an agreement that zinc would be the first metal to be loaded out of Pacorini's New Orleans warehouses, and that their zinc would be prioritized ahead of other customers and would be loaded out in an agreed upon order. (CAC ¶¶ 189-90.) Although such alleged concerted action is far more limited in scope than that asserted under plaintiffs' first theory, this theory has some appeal because plaintiffs have at least plausibly shown that such an agreement existed based on the direct evidence provided by CW1. Even standing alone, however, the Queue Order Agreement continues to suffer from a fatal flaw: it is output neutral (or even enhancing). Plaintiffs do not plausibly show that this agreement harmed them—both because it resulted in metal moving out of the warehouses, not staying in, as well as because no allegations connect this agreement to an effect on the MW SHG Premium.

The allegations of a load-out agreement are consistent with a routine logistics arrangement governing the [91] order in which a series of warehouse customers arrange to pick up their metal. While plaintiffs could potentially show harm if they stored zinc (or some other metal) at Pacorini's warehouses and alleged that they paid increased rent or other storage fees as a result of the Queue Order Agreement, plaintiffs here do not include such allegations. Thus, even if such a claim were plausible, plaintiffs lack antitrust standing to pursue that claim because they neither suffered an antitrust injury nor are efficient enforcers. Gatt, 711 F.3d at 77-79.

To the extent that plaintiffs argue that defendants also pre-agreed on the number of warrants to be cancelled by each defendant, the CAC does not allege that the total volume of cancellations was gerrymandered. That is, that fewer or more warrants in the aggregate were cancelled. Thus, the Queue Order Agreement is merely one of ordering. In any event, the allegations that defendants pre-agreed on the number of warrants are not attributed to plaintiffs' confidential witness, and instead are wholly conclusory. (See CAC ¶ 190.) Plaintiffs allege only that the agreement provided "certainty" as to the "timing and amount" of defendants' warrant cancellations. (CAC ¶ 190.) [92] These allegations, taken as a whole, do not plausibly support an anticompetitive agreement as to which plaintiffs have standing to bring a Section 1 claim.

Plaintiffs' third theory of conspiracy (the "Market Allocation Agreement"), which extends beyond the zinc market itself (and was not fully explained until plaintiffs' presentation at oral argument), is that the Glencore-affiliated entities and the Goldman Sachs-affiliated entities entered into an anticompetitive agreement to allocate the markets for zinc and aluminum, with Pacorini getting control over the zinc market in New Orleans and the aluminum market in Vlissingen, and Metro getting control of the aluminum market in Detroit. (CAC ¶ 241.)[32] "[A] horizontal agreement

[31] Plaintiffs argue that the alleged agreement to restrain supply in the zinc warehousing market constitutes a per se violation of Section 1. The Court need not resolve whether the purported conspiracy should be viewed as a per se violation or whether it must be reviewed under a rule of reason analysis because plaintiffs have not plausibly pled the existence of concerted action that could give rise to a Section 1 violation in the first instance.

[32] Noticeably absent from plaintiffs' market allocation theory is any mention of the JPMorgan-affiliated [93] entities. (See CAC ¶¶ 241-43.) Thus, even if the Market Allocation Agreement was sufficiently pled against the other defendants, the JPMorgan among competitors to eliminate competition by allocating markets is a per se violation" of Section 1. New York ex rel. Spitzer v. Saint Francis Hosp., 94 F. Supp. 2d 399, 414 (S.D.N.Y. 2000) (citing United States v. Topco Assocs., Inc., 405 U.S. 596, 608, 92 S. Ct. 1126, 31 L. Ed. 2d 515 (1972)). Market allocation agreements are "anticompetitive regardless of whether [*375] the parties split a market within which both do business or whether they merely reserve one market for one and another for the other." Palmer v. BRG of Georgia, Inc., 498 U.S. 46, 49-50, 111 S. Ct. 401, 112 L. Ed. 2d 349 (1990). Courts do not accept conclusory allegations of an agreement as true. Starr, 592 F.3d at 319 n.2.

Plaintiffs' market allocation allegations consist, in their totality, of the following. Plaintiffs allege that defendants dominate LME-certified warehousing services in four significant geographic markets, including in New Orleans (where Glencore entities owns 34 of 56 warehouses and Goldman Sachs and JPMorgan entities collectively own another 20), Detroit (where Metro "dominates"), Vlissingen (where Pacorini owns 55 of 60 warehouses) and Johor (where defendants own 15 of 20 warehouses). (CAC ¶ 218.) The CAC further alleges that "there was market allocation to Metro of aluminum in Detroit and to Pacorini of aluminum in Vlissingen and zinc in New Orleans." (CAC ¶ 241.) It also alleges that Glencore stored aluminum in Metro's Detroit warehouses instead of in its own warehouses, and that Goldman Sachs stored zinc in Glencore's New Orleans warehouses instead [94] of in its own. (CAC ¶ 241.) As further support, plaintiffs also cite a December 2010 Metro email referencing "Q management" and mentioning a conversation with "Paco" (i.e. Pacorini) (CAC ¶ 240), and another email in which a Metro employee "referr[ed] to Pacorini and Glencore not 'nitpick[ing] them in Detroit due to concerns regarding retaliation elsewhere'" (CAC ¶ 243). Plaintiffs allege that they do not actually know what either of these emails refer to and do not allege that these communications include any reference to zinc or to New Orleans.[33]

These allegations, taken together, are insufficient because they do not raise a plausible inference of the international market allocation scheme that plaintiffs claim. There are simply not enough dots to connect to draw a plausible picture of an agreement. The emails that plaintiffs cite are vague and their meaning and relevance to the zinc market is wholly speculative. Plaintiffs, moreover, do not directly allege that defendants agreed to allocate the markets for zinc and aluminum and to split up their dominance geographically. Instead, [95] they allege only that "there was market allocation." (CAC ¶ 241.) The allegations are equally consistent with the inference—supported by other allegations in the CAC—that Pacorini and Metro's alleged conduct is "indicative of no more than a natural and independent desire to avoid a turf war and preserve the profits guaranteed by regional dominance." Erie Cnty., Ohio v. Morton Salt, Inc., 702 F.3d 860, 871 (6th Cir. 2012). Ultimately, the market allocation allegations are an insufficient basis for plaintiffs to rest their entire Section 1 claim.

The fourth theory of an unlawful anticompetitive agreement that may be gleaned from the CAC is that there was a hub-and-spoke type conspiracy with Pacorini (and Glencore) at the hub, and the Goldman Sachs and JPMorgan trading defendants at the spokes. This theory proceeds along the following lines: Pacorini (and Glencore Ltd.) made an agreement with Goldman Sachs and JPMorgan's commodities trading affiliates to allow slower load-outs in Pacorini's warehouses to maintain the contango in the market (or other advantageous trading positions).[34] While [*376] plaintiffs did not expressly raise a hub-and-spoke theory either in their complaint or in their opposition brief to defendants' motions, the Court nonetheless considers it and, for [96] the reasons set forth below, finds that the allegations are insufficient to support this theory even if it were expressly pled.[35] entities and Henry Bath would be entitled to dismissal of this claim because the CAC does not plausibly allege that they were allocated any market or had any involvement in this alleged scheme.

[33] The Court notes that the plaintiffs in Aluminum relied on these same emails and argued they were about the aluminum market. See Aluminum II, 95 F. Supp. 3d at 435.

[34] Under this theory, the other warehouse operating defendants, Metro and Henry Bath, are not involved in the unlawful agreement. Thus, if this theory was the only basis upon which plaintiffs stated a plausible Section 1 claim, both of these defendants would be entitled to dismissal.

[35] While the CAC does not expressly include the language of a hub-and-spoke theory, the Court addresses it because at this stage the complaint need only give full notice of the circumstances giving rise to the plaintiffs' claim for relief and need not also Agreements that fall within the scope of Section 1 are characterized as either "horizontal" or "vertical." See Topco Assocs., 405 U.S. at 608; Anderson News, 680 F.3d at 182. A horizontal agreement is an "agreement between competitors at the same level [97] of the market structure," while a vertical agreement is a "combination[] of persons at different levels of the market structure." Topco Assocs., 405 U.S. at 608. "[C]ourts have long recognized the existence of 'hub-and-spoke' conspiracies in which an entity at one level of the market structure, the 'hub,' coordinates an agreement among competitors at a different level, the 'spokes.'" United States v. Apple, Inc., 791 F.3d 290, 314 (2d Cir. 2015) (quoting Howard Hess Dental Labs. Inc. v. Dentsply Int'l, Inc., 602 F.3d 237, 255 (3d Cir. 2010)). "These arrangements consist of both vertical agreements between the hub and each spoke and a horizontal agreement among the spokes 'to adhere to the [hub's] terms,' often because the spokes 'would not have gone along with [the vertical agreements] except on the understanding that the other [spokes] were agreeing to the same thing.'" Id. (quoting VI Phillip E. Areeda & Herbert Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law ¶ 1402c (3d ed. 2010)). Existing case law makes clear that a hub-and-spoke theory is cognizable under Section 1 only if there are both vertical agreements between the hub and each spoke, and also a horizontal agreement among the various spokes with each other. Id.; see also Dickson v. Microsoft Corp., 309 F.3d 193, 203-04 (4th Cir. 2002); Toys "R" Us, Inc. v. FTC, 221 F.3d 928, 934-36 (7th Cir. 2000).

In order for plaintiffs to plead a cognizable hub-and-spoke conspiracy, they must allege not only a vertical agreement between the hub (Glencore/Pacorini) and [98] the spokes (the Goldman Sachs and JPMorgan affiliates), but also a horizontal agreement among the competitors that form the spokes. Plaintiffs fail to do so for essentially the same reasons that this Court rejected their first theory of a broad, five-year conspiracy. As discussed above, many of the allegations do not support an inference of concerted action, and a great deal of the most probative conduct consists solely of actions taken by Glencore and/or Pacorini, including the falsification of bills of lading. Very little of the relevant conduct involves the JPMorgan entities and, to the extent it does, it is speculative to believe that the allegations show anything more than bilateral arrangements between Pacorini and its preferred customers. The only allegations that do actually tend to support a horizontal agreement among the defendants who make up the "spokes" are those [*377] relating to the Queue Order Agreement, although, as set forth above, plaintiffs do not plausibly show that such an agreement was unlawful or that it could have caused harm, let alone antitrust injury, to these plaintiffs. Plaintiffs, therefore, do not plausibly state a hub-and-spoke theory.

As plaintiffs have failed [99] to plausibly allege unlawful concerted action or an anticompetitive agreement, their Section 1 conspiracy claim must be dismissed.

VI. SECTION 2 CLAIMS

Although, as discussed above, plaintiffs lack antitrust standing to pursue their Section 2 claims as currently pled, the Court also addresses whether plaintiffs' Section 2 claims pass muster at this stage on the merits, and concludes that they do not.

Section 2 provides, in pertinent part: "[e]very person who shall monopolize, or attempt to monopolize . . . any part of the trade or commerce among the several States . . . shall be deemed guilty of a felony." 15 U.S.C. § 2. A violator of Section 2 may be held civilly liable to any party suffering "injur[y] in his business or property" as a result of such a violation. 15 U.S.C. § 15. Under Section 2, both the actions of a single firm to monopolize or to attempt to monopolize and conspiracies and combinations to monopolize or attempt to monopolize are unlawful. Spectrum Sports, 506 U.S. at 454.

Plaintiffs here assert three Section 2 claims: Count II alleges a conspiracy to monopolize the market for LME zinc warehousing services against all defendants, and Counts III and IV allege monopolization and attempted monopolization of that market by "Glencore" (defined in the CAC as defendants Glencore Ltd. and Pacorini, collectively). (CAC ¶¶ 271-90; [100] see CAC ¶ 68.) The Court first addresses plaintiffs' monopolization and correctly plead the legal theory or theories supporting the claim. Simonton v. Runyon, 232 F.3d 33, 36-37 (2d Cir. 2000). The Court raised the possibility of a hub-and-spoke theory in the questions that it provided the parties the day before oral argument (ECF No. 149), and the parties had the opportunity to address—and did address—this theory at oral argument (Oral Arg. Tr. at 17:25-20:14, 49:7-49:22, 115:7-115:18).

attempted monopolization claims against Glencore Ltd. and Pacorini, and then considers plaintiffs' conspiracy to monopolize claim against all defendants.

A. Monopolization

To state any claim under Section 2, a plaintiff must allege plausible facts that a defendant possesses market power (sometimes referred to as "monopoly power") in a relevant market, and willfully acquired or maintained such power as "distinguished from growth or development as a consequence of a superior product, business acumen, or historic accident." United States v. Grinnell Corp., 384 U.S. 563, 570-71, 86 S. Ct. 1698, 16 L. Ed. 2d 778 (1966); see also Verizon Commc'ns Inc. v. Law Offices of Curtis V. Trinko, LLP, 540 U.S. 398, 407, 124 S. Ct. 872, 157 L. Ed. 2d 823 (2004); Heerwagen v. Clear Channel Commc'ns, 435 F.3d 219, 226 (2d Cir. 2006); PepsiCo, Inc. v. Coca-Cola Co., 315 F.3d 101, 105 (2d Cir. 2002). A firm possesses market power when it has the ability to raise price by restricting output. PepsiCo., 315 F.3d at 107. To state a claim under Section 2, a plaintiff must also allege facts that the defendant has engaged in "'improper conduct that has or is likely to have the effect of controlling prices or excluding competition, thus creating or maintaining market power.'" Heerwagen, 435 F.3d at 227 (quoting PepsiCo, 315 F.3d at 108).

Market power may be proven directly by evidence of the control of prices or the exclusion of competition. PepsiCo, 315 F.3d at 107; Todd v. Exxon Corp., 275 F.3d 191, 206 (2d Cir. 2001) ("If a plaintiff can show that a defendant's conduct exerted an actual adverse effect on competition, this is a strong indicator of market [101] power."); Tops Mkts., Inc. v. Quality Mkts., Inc., 142 F.3d 90, 98 (2d Cir. 1998). However, in most cases this type of direct evidence is absent, in which case the plaintiff [*378] must rely on indirect proof. "Indirect proof of market power, that is, proof that the defendant has a large share of the relevant market, is a surrogate for direct proof of market power." Heerwagen, 435 F.3d at 227 (internal quotation marks omitted); see also PepsiCo, 315 F.3d at 107; Tops Mkts., 142 F.3d at 98. "'In resolving market or 'monopoly' power issues, the courts have typically relied heavily on market definition and on the defendant firm's share of the market thus defined.'" Heerwagen, 435 F.3d at 227 (quoting 2A Phillip E. Areeda, Herbert Hovenkamp & John L. Solow, Antitrust Law ¶ 515, at 114 (2d ed. 2002)). For instance, "a market share of over 70 percent is usually strong evidence of monopoly power." Tops Mkts., 142 F.3d at 99 (internal quotation marks omitted). A showing of market power is a substantive element of a monopolization claim, and "plaintiff cannot escape proving her claims with reference to a particular market even if she intends to proffer direct evidence of controlling prices or excluding competition." Heerwagen, 435 F.3d at 229.

The relevant market is the "area of effective competition," which is determined by defining relevant product and geographic markets. PepsiCo, 315 F.3d at 105, 108; AD/SAT v. Associated Press, 181 F.3d 216, 226 (2d Cir. 1999). A relevant product market consists of "products [102] that have reasonable interchangeability for the purposes for which they are produced—price, use and qualities considered." United States v. E.I. du Pont de Nemours & Co., 351 U.S. 377, 404, 76 S. Ct. 994, 100 L. Ed. 1264 (1956); Todd, 275 F.3d at 200-01 (same). Products are considered reasonably interchangeable if consumers treat them as acceptable substitutes. PepsiCo, 315 F.3d at 105. Cases are subject to dismissal when plaintiff fails to allege a plausible explanation as to why a market should be limited in a particular way. See Todd, 275 F.3d at 200 nn.3-4 (collecting cases).

The court must also determine the boundaries of a relevant geographic market. Tampa Elec. Co. v. Nashville Coal Co., 365 U.S. 320, 327, 81 S. Ct. 623, 5 L. Ed. 2d 580 (1967); United States v. Eastman Kodak Co., 63 F.3d 95, 104 (2d Cir. 1995). The geographic market encompasses the geographic area in which purchasers of the product can practicably turn for alternative sources of the product. Tampa Elec., 365 U.S. at 327. A geographic market is determined by "how far consumers will go to obtain the product or its substitute in response to a given price increase and how likely it is that a price increase for the product in a particular location will induce outside suppliers to enter that market and increase supply-side competition in that location." Heerwagen, 435 F.3d at 227. Factors relevant to geographic scope of a market "may include barriers to transactions between buyers and sellers of different locations, such as transportation costs to a particular location, as well as the relative preferences [103] of consumers with respect to travel and price." Id. at 228. The geographic market for "goods sold nationwide is often the entire United States, though it need not be if purchasers cannot practicably turn to areas outside their own area for supply of the relevant product." Id. (citing Standard Oil Co. v. United States, 337 U.S. 293, 299 n.5, 69 S. Ct. 1051, 93 L. Ed. 1371 (1949)).

Here, plaintiffs allege that "Glencore willfully acquired and maintained monopoly power in the market for LME Zinc Warehouse Services in the United States in violation of Section 2." (CAC ¶ 278.) The CAC states that this market "provides and controls the release of the physical zinc to owners that have taken delivery in satisfaction of an LME forward contract long position." (CAC ¶ 114.) The CAC further [*379] alleges that "Glencore dominates the LME Zinc Warehouse Services Market, with a substantial majority of warehouses in New Orleans, where 50-70% of all LME-licensed warehouses are located, including as much [as] 80% or more of those located in the U.S." and that Glencore's alleged conduct (which the Court detailed in addressing plaintiffs' Section 1 claim) "has caused substantial anticompetitive effects, including the inflation of the prices and price premiums of LME Physical Zinc to supra-competitive levels." (CAC ¶ 279.)

Elsewhere [104] in the CAC, plaintiffs include additional allegations that speak to Glencore's significant influence in various facets of the zinc trade, including, inter alia, that "Glencore Ltd. and affiliates dominate the zinc trade, both up and down the zinc supply chain in the United States", "Glencore Ltd. and affiliates trade physical zinc and zinc derivatives, smelt and refine zinc, and mine and produce zinc concentrate", "Glencore Ltd. sells primary zinc produced in the United States, and its ultimate parent, Glencore plc, trades 60% of the world's zinc, and owns and controls 35% of the output of the world's zinc mines, including 100% of all U.S. output", and "Glencore sells more than 55% of the primary zinc in the United States." (CAC ¶ 64.) While these allegations support an inference that Glencore has substantial influence in certain aspects of the zinc trade, plaintiffs seek to tether Glencore's alleged market power in one market (the LME zinc warehousing services market) to anticompetitive effects and injury (i.e. inflated prices) in another market (the market for physical zinc). For the reasons set forth below, as pled such a claim is not viable.

The only market as to which the CAC alleges [105] that "Glencore" has monopoly power is the LME Zinc Warehouse Services Market. It is therefore the sufficiency of allegations of Glencore Ltd. and/or Pacorini's position in that market that determines the viability of plaintiffs' monopolization claim.[36] Although plaintiffs' monopolization allegations largely mirror those that this Court rejected in Aluminum II (except that plaintiffs' swap Glencore/Pacorini in place of Goldman Sachs/Metro), they seek to distinguish their monopolization claim by conflating the two purported relevant markets in their arguments. But their claim, as currently pled, fails for many of the same reasons that the Section 2 monopolization claim failed in Aluminum II.

It is inherent in the concept of a claim brought under Section 2 that the monopolist has the power over price and competition in the market it purportedly monopolizes. Plaintiffs cite no authority for the proposition that Section 2 makes cognizable a theory that a company has an unlawful monopoly in a market in which it does not control price or competition because its conduct in that market has some indirect [*380] impact on the prices charged in another market. As such, Glencore Ltd.'s alleged domination of certain aspects of the physical zinc market is irrelevant to a claim that it and/or Pacorini monopolize [107] the market for LME zinc warehousing services. This cuts to a core distinction between claims brought under Sections 1 and 2. The Supreme Court has indicated that a Section 2 claim may not arise from monopoly power in one market causing competitive harm in a second market unless the plaintiff shows that there is a dangerous probability of success or actual monopoly in the second market. Trinko, 540 U.S. at 415 n.4 ("To the extent the Court of Appeals dispensed with a requirement that there be a [36] At oral argument, plaintiffs argued—for the first time—that by incorporating all of the CAC's prior allegations into their Section 2 claims (see CAC ¶¶ 271, 277, 284), those claims may be fairly read as alleging monopolization of the LME Zinc Warehouse Services Market and "the market for the physical price of zinc." (Oral Arg. Tr. at 102:24-103:20). As currently pled, the CAC does not plausibly allege monopoly power in the market for the sale of primary zinc. For instance, none of the Section 2 counts make any direct reference [106] to that market and the allegations in the CAC taken as a whole do not connect the dots to plausibly show that Glencore Ltd. and/or Pacorini have monopoly power in that market. If plaintiffs seek to assert that Glencore's activity in the physical zinc market created a monopoly position or was dangerously close to doing so, they must make that allegation more directly than they have done thus far. As set forth in the Leave to Amend section below, the Court will allow plaintiffs another opportunity to re-plead their monopolization and attempted monopolization claims in a way that addresses both markets.

'dangerous probability of success' in monopolizing a second market, it erred." (quoting Spectrum Sports, 506 U.S. at 459)). The CAC does not adequately allege that Glencore Ltd.'s position in the physical zinc market gave it a unilateral ability to create zinc queues at Pacorini's New Orleans warehouses such that it or Pacorini could control prices in the warehousing services market, attain monopoly power in that market, or create significant barriers to entry that blocked other warehousing companies from entering that market.

Construing the allegations in light of this understanding of Section 2, plaintiffs have failed to allege a plausible claim. Because the market allegedly monopolized is the market for LME zinc warehouse services, the only price that Pacorini can (even arguably) [108] set in that market is the cost of storage and related services. See Aluminum II, 95 F. Supp. 3d at 456. That is the market in which Pacorini is alleged to have a monopoly position. Raising the price in this market would be raising the price for these services; restricting output would be restricting the availability of these services by, for example, excluding competition in this market. That, however, is not the injury that plaintiffs claim to have suffered. Plaintiffs' injury consists of having paid more for physical zinc due to an inflated MW SHG Premium, which was, in turn, allegedly caused by an interaction between warehouse services and trading firm conduct.[37] Thus, plaintiffs' alleged injury does not arise directly from Pacorini's dominance of the market allegedly monopolized.[38]

Plaintiffs' monopolization claim also fails for the additional reason that the CAC does not actually allege that defendants engaged in conduct constituting monopoly maintenance. The conduct alleged to be primarily responsible for increased load-out delays from Pacorini's New Orleans warehouses (and, indirectly, responsible for an elevated MW SHG Premium) is increased warrant cancellation activity. But the decision whether to cancel an LME warrant is made by the warrant holder, not by the warehouse operator. Pacorini is not alleged to have "itself controlled [*381] the warrants and futures contracts that determined when [zinc] went into and took a place in line to get out of its warehouses." *Aluminum I, 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 121435, 2014 WL 4277510, at 36. Pacorini therefore lacked control [110] over the very activity alleged to have caused plaintiffs' injury, and its alleged dominance over the provision of LME-warehousing services in New Orleans does not translate into a power to raise the MW SHG Premium.[39]

Furthermore, even if the CAC plausibly stated a monopolization claim against Pacorini, Glencore Ltd. is independently entitled to dismissal of this claim as to it. While plaintiffs assert monopolization and attempted monopolization claims against "Glencore", which the CAC defines collectively as both Glencore Ltd. and Pacorini (CAC ¶ 68), there are no plausible allegations that Glencore Ltd., a trading company, directly owns any LME warehouses or actually competes in the market for LME [111] zinc warehouse services (CAC ¶¶ 62-64, see CAC ¶ 69). The CAC does not allege any facts to show that Glencore Ltd. is able to control the price for LME storage at any warehouses. "[I]t is axiomatic that a firm cannot monopolize a market in which it does not compete." Discon, Inc. v. NYNEX Corp., 93 F.3d 1055, 1062 (2d Cir. 1996) vacated on other grounds, 525 U.S. 128, 119 S. Ct. 493, 142 L. Ed. 2d 510 (1998); see also Olde Monmouth Stock Transfer Co. v. Depository Trust & Clearing Corp., 485 F. Supp. 2d 387, 392 (S.D.N.Y. 2007) (same). In the absence of allegations that Glencore Ltd. failed to comply with corporate formalities vis-à-vis Pacorini such that it would be appropriate to pierce the corporate veil, Glencore Ltd.

[37] As was the case in Aluminum II, plaintiffs' § 2 claim is also incompatible with their § 1 claim. In Aluminum II, this Court stated that the first level purchasers' monopolization claim was undermined by the plausible and conflicting allegations that Goldman Sachs and Metro needed and used conspirators in areas outside Detroit to assist in their scheme. See Aluminum II, 95 F. Supp. 3d at 455-56. Plaintiffs' monopolization claim here is similarly incompatible with their allegations [109] that Glencore Ltd. and/or Pacorini needed and used third parties to effect the scheme, although the Court notes that, in this case, Glencore appears to have a more dominant position in the zinc market than Goldman Sachs/Metro had with respect to aluminum.

[38] Defendants also contend that the CAC does not contain the necessary facts to support a plausible product or geographic market. Because the Court grants defendants' motions on other grounds, it need not reach this argument.

[39] Plaintiffs' allegations that Glencore affiliates were responsible for cancelling large volumes of zinc are wholly conclusory and are insufficient to show monopoly power in the physical zinc market. (See CAC ¶¶ 146-50, 157). The Court does recognize, however, that the allegations here do suggest that Glencore and its affiliates occupy a more dominant and influential position in the zinc market than Goldman Sachs and its affiliates occupied with respect to the aluminum market. (E.g., CAC ¶ 64.)

may not be held liable under Section 2 simply by virtue of its ownership of Pacorini. See Concord Assocs., L.P. v. Entm't Properties Trust, No. 12 CIV. 1667 ER, 2013 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 186964, 2014 WL 1396524, at *26-27 (S.D.N.Y. Apr. 9, 2014) (citing United States v. Bestfoods, 524 U.S. 51, 69, 118 S. Ct. 1876, 141 L. Ed. 2d 43 (1998)); Invamed, Inc. v. Barr Labs., Inc., 22 F. Supp. 2d 210, 219 (S.D.N.Y. 1998). Thus, to the extent that Counts III and IV arise solely from monopolization and/or attempted monopolization of the LME zinc warehousing services market, these claims are independently subject to dismissal against Glencore Ltd.

B. Attempted Monopolization

To state an attempted monopolization claim, a plaintiff must allege plausible facts supporting that the defendant has engaged in predatory or anticompetitive conduct, with a specific intent to monopolize a particular and defined market, and a dangerous probability of success. See Spectrum Sports, 506 U.S. at 456; PepsiCo., 315 F.3d at 105; Tops Mkts., 142 F.3d at 99-100. A plaintiff must also [112] allege that anticompetitive conduct occurring in connection with obtaining or retaining a monopoly position is proximately related to plaintiffs' injuries. See Litton Sys., Inc. v. Am. Tel. & Tel. Co., 700 F.2d 785, 802-03 (2d Cir. 1983) (proximate cause required to establish monopolization charge); see also Lexmark Int'l, Inc. v. Static Control Components, Inc., 134 S. Ct. 1377, 1390, 188 L. Ed. 2d 392 (2014) (a court should generally presume that a statutory cause of action is limited [*382] to plaintiffs whose injuries are proximately caused by violations of that statute).

Plaintiffs' attempted monopolization claim mirrors their actual monopolization claim, except that it asserts that "Glencore" specifically intended to obtain a monopoly over the LME zinc warehouse services market and had a dangerous probability of doing so, rather than actually acquiring and maintaining monopoly power. (Compare CAC ¶¶ 278-79 with CAC ¶¶ 285-86.) This claim fails for the same reasons as plaintiffs' actual monopolization claim. As discussed above, the fatal flaw in plaintiffs' actual monopolization claim is that Glencore's alleged monopoly power in the LME zinc warehouse services market is disconnected from plaintiffs' alleged injuries, which occurred in the different market for the sale of primary zinc. In other words, plaintiffs' alleged injury was suffered due to anticompetitive [113] effects that Glencore's alleged warehousing services monopoly conduct had in the separate market for the price of physical zinc. That disconnect poses no less of an issue in the context of plaintiffs' attempted monopolization claim, which is not saved by the lesser requirement that a plaintiff need only plausibly allege that a defendant came dangerously close to achieving monopoly power, rather than actual monopoly power, in a certain market.

C. Conspiracy to Monopolize

A conspiracy claim under Section 2 must allege "(1) concerted action, (2) overt acts in furtherance of the conspiracy, and (3) specific intent to monopolize." Elecs. Commc'ns Corp. v. Toshiba Am. Consumer Products, Inc., 129 F.3d 240, 246 (2d Cir. 1997). The specific intent to monopolize, rather than the power to exclude competitors, is the key element of a conspiracy to monopolize claim. United States v. Consol. Laundries Corp., 291 F.2d 563, 573 (2d Cir. 1961). "[W]hile rigorous proof of a relevant market and of a dangerous probability of achieving monopoly power are not, in this Circuit, essential elements of conspiracy to monopolize, the relevant market and the likelihood of its monopolization may have a significant bearing on whether the requisite specific intent to monopolize is present." Emigra Grp., LLC v. Fragomen, Del Rey, Bernsen & Loewy, LLP, 612 F. Supp. 2d 330, 340 (S.D.N.Y. 2009) (citing Hudson Valley Asbestos Corp. v. Tougher Heating & Plumbing Co., 510 F.2d 1140, 1144 (2d Cir. 1975)).

The CAC does not allege that defendants conspired to confer monopoly power on any single entity; [114] plaintiffs instead assert that defendants collectively sought to dominate the LME zinc warehousing services market. (CAC ¶¶ 271-76; see CAC ¶¶ 6, 218.) The Second Circuit has stated that a shared monopoly theory may not support a monopolization or attempted monopolization claim under Section 2, H.L. Hayden, 879 F.2d at 1018, and numerous district courts, including this Court in Aluminum I, have repeatedly rejected the viability of a Section 2 conspiracy claim based on a shared monopoly theory. Aluminum I, 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 121435, 2014 WL 4277510, at *36; see also RxUSA Wholesale, Inc. v. Alcon Labs., Inc., 661 F. Supp. 2d 218, 235 (E.D.N.Y. 2009), aff'd sub nom. RxUSA Wholesale Inc. v. Alcon Labs., 391 F. App'x 59 (2d Cir. 2010); Oxbow Carbon & Minerals LLC v. Union Pac. R. Co., 926 F. Supp. 2d 36, 46 (D.D.C. 2013); Standfacts Credit Servs., Inc. v. Experian Info.

Sols., Inc., 405 F. Supp. 2d 1141, 1152 (C.D. Cal. 2005), aff'd in part sub nom. Standfacts Credit Servs. v. Experian Info. Sols., Inc., 294 F. App'x 271 (9th Cir. 2008).

In the face of the weight of authority, plaintiffs argue that at least some courts "have suggested that a shared monopoly [*383] theory may be viable if the aim of the conspiracy is to form a single entity to possess the illegal market power, or where two or more competitors seek to allocate a market and exclude competitors, even if they do not form a single corporate entity." *In re Credit Default Swaps Antitrust Litig., No. 13md2476 (DLC), 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 123784, 2014 WL 4379112, at 14 (S.D.N.Y. Sept. 4, 2014) (quoting Arista Records LLC v. Lime Grp. LLC, 532 F. Supp. 2d 556, 580 (S.D.N.Y. 2007)). Plaintiffs, however, do not allege that defendants conspired to form a single entity to possess illegal market power, and cite no case in which a court has actually sustained a Section 2 conspiracy claim based on an allocation of markets. The Court need not [115] decide here whether allegations of an allocation of markets could ever support a Section 2 conspiracy because, as this Court has already concluded in addressing plaintiffs' Section 1 claim, the CAC does not plausibly support the existence of an unlawful market allocation agreement.

Further, even if Section 2 could otherwise support a conspiracy claim based on a shared monopoly, this claim also fails because plaintiffs do not plausibly allege concerted action. The specific intent necessary to establish a conspiracy to monopolize is the intent to enable or maintain a monopoly position in the relevant market. It is not sufficient to merely allege the intent to raise the prices that plaintiffs must pay or to increase the value of defendants' trading positions. As with plaintiffs' other Section 2 claims, the relevant market is the market for LME zinc warehouse services, and the claim arises from defendants' ownership of a substantial majority of the LME warehouses in New Orleans and elsewhere. (See CAC ¶ 272.) Again, as with the other Section 2 claims, plaintiffs' conspiracy claim also lacks any explicit reference to the market for the sale of SHG zinc.

Finally, the Court has, in addressing plaintiffs' Section 1 claim, already exhaustively considered [116] and found insufficient plaintiffs' allegations of an unlawful conspiratorial agreement.[40] Plaintiffs rely on the same allegations and theories of an unlawful agreement to support their Section 2 conspiracy claim, but do not explain how any of those theories would further a monopoly in LME warehousing services (or even in the market for physical zinc). Specifically, plaintiffs do not plausibly show how an agreement to load zinc out of Pacorini's New Orleans warehouses first and to load out certain preferred customers' metal in an agreed upon order at the head of the queue would enable defendants to acquire or maintain a monopoly position in either zinc warehousing services or the market for physical zinc. To the extent that plaintiffs rely on a hub-and-spoke agreement to support their Section 2 conspiracy claim, the Court has already explained why the CAC does not sufficiently allege a horizontal agreement between the entities that make up the spokes; as stated above, this is a necessary element to assert a hub-and-spoke theory. E.g., Apple, 791 F.3d at 314.

VII. GROUP PLEADING

Rule 8 provides that a defendant is entitled to notice of the claims brought [*384] against him; Twombly makes clear that at the pleading stage in this antitrust case, that means that each defendant is entitled to know how he is alleged to have conspired, with whom and for what purpose. See Twombly, 550 U.S. at 557-58. Mere generalizations as to any particular defendant—or even defendants as a group—are insufficient. See id. at 555-56. The fact that two separate legal entities may have a corporate affiliation—perhaps owned by the same holding company—does not alter this pleading requirement. Nor is it sufficient for plaintiffs to simply state in conclusory terms that separate legal entities are "sometimes collectively referred to" by a shared generic name. See Capmark Fin. Grp. Inc. v. Goldman Sachs Credit Partners L.P., 491 B.R. 335, 347 (S.D.N.Y. 2013) ("'[D]isregard of the corporate form is warranted only in extraordinary circumstances, and conclusory allegations of dominance and control will not suffice to defeat a motion to [118] dismiss.'" (quoting *Société d'Assurance de l'Est SPRL v. Citigroup Inc., No. 10 CIV. 4754 JGK, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 103375, 2011 WL 4056306, at 5 (S.D.N.Y. Sept. 13, 2011))). In the absence of allegations that corporate formalities have been ignored, courts appropriately and routinely adhere to legal separateness. See, e.g., De Letelier v. Republic of Chile, 748 F.2d 790, 794-95 (2d Cir. 1984).

[40] There appears to be a great deal of redundancy between conspiracy claims brought under Sections 1 and 2. At least one court in this district has stated that "[a]ny section 2 conspiracy to monopolize [117] must be covered under the broader umbrella of a section 1 conspiracy in restraint of trade." H.L. Hayden Co. of New York v. Siemens Med. Sys., Inc., 672 F. Supp. 724, 741 n.21 (S.D.N.Y. 1987) aff'd, 879 F.2d 1005 (2d Cir. 1989). There is nothing in the case law to suggest that the plausibility threshold is lower to state a conspiracy to monopolize claim under Section 2 than for a claim alleging a conspiracy in restraint of trade under Section 1.

Here, this means that grouping multiple defendants who are affiliated together with a single name (e.g. "Goldman", "JPMorgan" or "Glencore" to encompass affiliated trading and warehouse operations (see CAC ¶¶ 68, 75, 88)) for pleading purposes does not resolve this larger issue. Plaintiffs must be able to separately state a claim against each and every defendant joined in this lawsuit. In Aluminum I, this Court specifically admonished the plaintiffs for circumventing this pleading requirement by resorting to corporate or group pleading, see *Aluminum I, 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 121435, 2014 WL 4277510, at 38-39, and subsequently dismissed certain defendants where the plaintiffs claims' as to those defendants were based solely on corporate proximity, see *In re Aluminum Warehousing Antitrust Litig., No. 13-md-2481 (KBF), 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 26412, 2015 WL 1344429, at 3 (S.D.N.Y. Mar. 23, 2015).

Plaintiffs have clearly failed to separately state a claim against each and every defendant joined in this lawsuit. Plaintiffs' allegations as to [119] a number of defendants, including, without limitation, JPMorgan Ventures Energy Corporation, GS Power Holdings LLC, MCEPF Metro I, and Mitsi Holdings LLC, are sparse to the point of near non-existence or are grouped together with specific allegations relating to their affiliated but legally separate entities. JPMVEC, in particular, has moved to dismiss on the basis that, as to it, plaintiffs' claims fail for lack of any allegations of conspiratorial activity. The Court agrees, and concludes that the claims against JPMVEC are independently subject to dismissal. The Court furthermore believes that, as to GS Power Holdings LLC, MCEPF Metro I, and Mitsi Holdings LLC, there is a strong basis to dismiss these defendants for lack of specific allegations against them; at oral argument, plaintiffs conceded that the sole basis for identifying these entities as defendants was that they were in the chain of custody of ownership of Metro. (See Oral Arg. Tr. at 61:21-64:11.)

VIII. LEAVE TO REPLEAD

Leave to amend should be granted freely when justice so requires. Fed. R. Civ. P. 15(a)(2); Cruz v. TD Bank, N.A., 742 F.3d 520, 523 (2d Cir. 2013). If an amendment would be futile, a court may properly deny leave to amend. Loreley Fin. (Jersey) No. 3 Ltd. v. Wells Fargo Sec., LLC, 797 F.3d 160, 190 (2d Cir. 2015). [*385] Amendment is futile when a proposed amendment would not [120] cure any deficiencies and would also fail to state a claim. See Hayden v. Cnty. of Nassau, 180 F.3d 42, 53-54 (2d Cir. 1999) ("[W]here the plaintiff is unable to demonstrate that he would be able to amend his complaint in a manner that would survive dismissal, opportunity to replead is rightfully denied."). The adequacy of a proposed amended complaint should be assessed using the same standards as those governing the adequacy of a pleading. Ricciuti v. N.Y.C. Transit Auth., 941 F.2d 119, 123 (2d Cir. 1991). A court should generally not deem a request for leave to amend insufficient on the basis of the informality of the request alone. Loreley, 797 F.3d at 190.

In the conclusion section of their opposition brief, plaintiffs request leave to file a second consolidated amended complaint to redress whatever pleading deficiencies this Court identifies, but they do not specifically indicate what, if any, changes they would or could make to their complaint. (Plaintiffs' Omnibus Opposition Br. at 82, ECF No. 139.) Plaintiffs restated their request for leave to amend (if the Court chose to dismiss any claims) at oral argument. (Oral Arg. Tr. at 121:5-9.) Plaintiffs suggested only one substantive change that they would make to their pleadings at oral argument, which would be to more explicitly assert their Section 2 claims based on both the market for LME [121] zinc warehousing services and the market for the sale of primary zinc in the United States. (See Oral Arg. Tr. at 102:24-103:6.)

Although plaintiffs have already had ample opportunity to plead their strongest possible claims by drafting the CAC with the benefit of this Court's decisions in Aluminum I and Aluminum II as a roadmap, and the Court warned plaintiffs that it "intend[ed] to issue written rulings once on the pleadings in this case" and that plaintiffs should take their "best shot" at stating their claims in the then yet to be filed CAC (July 23, 2014 Status Conf. Tr. at 26:3-8, ECF

No. 131), the Court deems it appropriate to allow plaintiffs one more attempt to re-plead their monopolization and attempted monopolization claims. The Court's decision is based on its view that a claim arising from Glencore Ltd.'s monopolization of the market for the price of physical zinc, or from a combined monopolization of the LME zinc warehouse services market by Pacorini and the market for the price of physical zinc by Glencore Ltd., appears to present new issues not addressed in the pending motions or in those at issue in Aluminum I and Aluminum II. In light of the allegations in the CAC showing that [122] Glencore and its affiliates occupy a more powerful position in various aspects of the zinc trade than any of the defendants did in Aluminum, the Court cannot at this time determine whether any effort to recast Counts III and IV would be futile.

The Court notes, however, that while it is allowing plaintiffs' leave to re-plead Counts III and IV, the Court has no sense at this time as to the likelihood of success of any amendments, and will not be able to make that determination until it has the new allegations in front of it. Plaintiffs will still have hurdles to overcome, including demonstrating that they have antitrust standing and making plausible any claim that Glencore Ltd. and/or Pacorini had obtained or were dangerously close to acquiring a monopoly in the physical zinc market, or combined monopoly in both relevant markets.[41] The Court observes only [*386] that if plaintiffs do hope to successfully re-plead these claims, they will have to do significantly more than add conclusory references to the "LME U.S. Zinc Market" to the existing allegations in paragraphs 277-290; they will have to plausibly show that Glencore Ltd. and/or Pacorini have monopoly power (or came dangerously close to [123] obtaining it) in that market.

As to Counts I and II (the Section 1 claim and Section 2 conspiracy claim, respectively), however, plaintiffs have not identified any amendment that they would make if given an opportunity, nor have they have given the Court any basis to conclude that there is any likelihood that they could overcome the fatal defects identified by the Court in this decision. Plaintiffs have had ample opportunity to construct their pleadings in accordance with the teachings of this Court's decisions in Aluminum I and Aluminum II, which thoroughly considered and addressed conspiracy allegations of a similar sort to those that the Court rejects here. Despite being guided by Aluminum II as to what would be necessary to state a plausible Section 1 claim, plaintiffs were still unable to push their conspiracy allegations across the line from conceivable to plausible. Plaintiffs also had the benefit of prior notice in the Court's three October 29, 2015 Orders of the issues that were [124] of particular concern to the Court (ECF Nos. 149, 150, 151), yet at oral argument they gave no indication as to what amendments they could or would be able to make to strengthen their conspiracy claims. Although this case certainly presents complex issues, given plaintiffs' express reliance on Aluminum II, it is not the sort of situation in which plaintiffs' pleading defects were "latent, and easily missed or misperceived without full briefing and judicial resolution." Loreley, 797 F.3d at 191. Because there is no reasonable prospect that plaintiffs could do any more to strengthen these claims, leave to replead is denied as to Counts I and II.

IX. CONCLUSION[42]

For the reasons set forth above, defendants' motions to dismiss are GRANTED. Counts I and II of the Consolidated Amended Complaint are hereby dismissed with prejudice, while Counts III and IV are dismissed without prejudice. As a result, plaintiffs may attempt to re-plead Counts III and IV against Glencore Ltd. and/or Pacorini, but may not assert any amended claims against any of the other defendants. Should plaintiffs choose to replead Counts III and IV, [125] they must file any amendment, redlined against the CAC, within 21 days of the filing of this Opinion & Order.

The Clerk of Court is directed to close the motions at ECF Nos. 122, 124, 127, and 130.

SO ORDERED.

Dated: New York, New York

---

[41] The Court notes that plaintiffs would be advised to more clearly differentiate the roles played by Glencore Ltd. and Pacorini, instead of using the generic term "Glencore", throughout any second consolidated amended complaint.

[42] The Court has considered plaintiffs' other arguments, and has determined that they are without merit.

A plaintiff can recover under § 43(a) (15 U.S.C.S. § 1125(a)(1)) of the Lanham Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1051 et seq., under either of two theories: First, the plaintiff can demonstrate that the challenged advertisement is literally false, i.e., false on its face. When an advertisement is shown to be literally or facially false, consumer deception is presumed, and the court may grant relief without reference to the advertisement's actual impact on the buying public. This is because the plaintiffs alleging a literal falsehood are claiming that a statement, on its face, conflicts with reality, a claim that is best supported by comparing the statement itself with the reality it purports to describe. Alternatively, a plaintiff can show that the advertisement, while not literally false, is nevertheless likely to mislead or confuse consumers. The plaintiffs alleging an implied falsehood are claiming that a statement, whatever its literal truth, has left an impression on the listener or viewer that conflicts with reality--a claim that invites a comparison of the impression, rather than the statement, with the truth. Therefore, whereas the plaintiffs seeking to establish a literal falsehood must generally show the substance of what is conveyed, a district court must rely on extrinsic evidence of consumer deception or confusion to support a finding of an implicitly false message.

[*44] SUMMARY ORDER

UPON DUE CONSIDERATION, IT IS HEREBY ORDERED, ADJUDGED, AND DECREED that the judgment entered on October 21, 2014, is AFFIRMED.

Plaintiff Reed Construction Data, Inc. ("Reed") appeals from the award of summary judgment to defendant McGraw-Hill Companies, Inc. ("McGraw-Hill") on Reed's claims under the Lanham Act, 60 Stat. 427, Pub. L. No. 79-489,, codified at 15 U.S.C. §§ 1051 et seq., the Sherman Antitrust Act, 26 Stat. 209,, codified at 15 U.S.C. §§ 1-

7, and state law in connection with a McGraw-Hill advertising campaign [*45] making allegedly false or misleading comparisons between the quantity of construction project data offered by Reed and by McGraw Hill. HN1[] "We review an award of summary judgment de novo, construing the evidence in the light most favorable to the nonmoving party and drawing all reasonable [2] inferences in his favor." McElwee v. County of Orange, 700 F.3d 635, 640 (2d Cir. 2012). We assume the parties' familiarity with the facts and the record of prior proceedings, which we reference only as necessary to explain our decision to affirm for largely the reasons stated in the district court's thorough and well-reasoned opinion.

1. Lanham Act

HN2[] Section 43(a) of the Lanham Act provides a cause of action against "[a]ny person who . . . uses in commerce any . . . false or misleading description . . . or misleading representation of fact, which . . . in commercial advertising or promotion, misrepresents the nature, characteristics, qualities, or geographic origin of his or her or another person's goods, services, or commercial activities." 15 U.S.C. § 1125(a)(1). HN3[] Reed can recover under § 43(a) under either of two theories:

> First, the plaintiff can demonstrate that the challenged advertisement is literally false, i.e., false on its face. When an advertisement is shown to be literally or facially false, consumer deception is presumed, and the court may grant relief without reference to the advertisement's actual impact on the buying public. This is because plaintiffs alleging a literal falsehood are claiming that a statement, on its face, conflicts with reality, a claim that is best supported [3] by comparing the statement itself with the reality it purports to describe.
> Alternatively, a plaintiff can show that the advertisement, while not literally false, is nevertheless likely to mislead or confuse consumers. Plaintiffs alleging an implied falsehood are claiming that a statement, whatever its literal truth, has left an impression on the listener or viewer that conflicts with reality—a claim that invites a comparison of the impression, rather than the statement, with the truth. Therefore, whereas plaintiffs seeking to establish a literal falsehood must generally show the substance of what is conveyed, a district court must rely on extrinsic evidence of consumer deception or confusion to support a finding of an implicitly false message.

Time Warner Cable, Inc. v. DIRECTV, Inc., 497 F.3d 144, 153 (2d Cir. 2007) (brackets, citations, ellipsis, footnote, and internal quotation marks omitted). HN4[] "Under either theory, the plaintiff must also demonstrate that the false or misleading representation involved an inherent or material quality of the product." Id. at 153 n.3. This inquiry is "essentially one of materiality, a term explicitly used in other circuits." National Basketball Ass'n v. Motorola, Inc., 105 F.3d 841, 855 (2d Cir. 1997) (collecting cases analyzing effect on customers' buying decisions).

The district court found certain of McGraw-Hill's [4] statements to be arguably literally false, and certain others only to be arguably misleading. See Reed Constr. Data Inc. v. McGraw-Hill Cos., 49 F. Supp. 3d 385, 412-15 (S.D.N.Y. 2014). Yet the district court found that none of the statements, individually or in the aggregate, was material. See id. at 417-19. We agree. Discovery revealed only one customer who arguably relied upon McGraw-Hill's advertising in deciding between Reed and McGraw-Hill, while numerous other customers testified that they discounted the companies' representations as to their own products and conducted [*46] independent evaluations. Although McGraw-Hill's internal correspondence among its marketing professionals professed great enthusiasm for the advertising campaign at issue, the evidence from consumers makes clear that the market of sophisticated consumers relying largely on face-to-face sales was unmoved. Cf. 5 J. Thomas McCarthy, McCarthy on Trademarks and Unfair Competition § 27:35 (4th ed. rev. 2015) HN5[] ("Where an expensive product is sold by personal contacts, misleading claims in a sales brochure may not have a tendency to deceive or influence purchasing decisions and hence not be a violation of § 43(a)."). Given the overwhelming testimonial evidence from customers, no reasonable jury could have concluded that any false [5] or misleading statements were material to customers' purchasing decisions. Reed's Lanham Act claim therefore fails.[1]

[1] Because the district court excluded the report of Reed's expert, Dr. Warren-Boulton, only on the issue of damages, we need not reach Reed's challenge to that decision because the materiality defect in Reed's Lanham Act and Sherman Act claims causes them to fail in any event.

2. Sherman Act

HN6[] Reed's failure to establish materiality with regard to its Lanham Act claim a fortiori defeats its Sherman Act claim. "[A] plaintiff asserting a monopolization claim based on misleading advertising must 'overcome a presumption that the effect on competition of such a practice was de minimis.'" National Ass'n of Pharma. Mfrs. v. Ayerst Labs., 850 F.2d 904, 916 (2d Cir. 1988) (quoting Berkey Photo, Inc. v. Eastman Kodak Co., 603 F.2d 263, 288 n.41 (2d Cir. 1979)).

> [A] plaintiff may overcome the de minimis presumption "by cumulative proof that the representations were (1) clearly false, (2) clearly material, (3) clearly likely to induce reasonable reliance, (4) made to buyers without knowledge of the subject matter, (5) continued for prolonged periods, and (6) not readily susceptible of neutralization or other offset by rivals."

Id. (quoting 3 Phillip E. Areeda & Donald F. Turner, Antitrust Law ¶ 738(a), at 279 (1978)). Because McGraw-Hill's statements [6] were insufficiently material to influence customer decisions, they cannot support Reed's monopolization claims.

3. Tortious Interference with Prospective Economic Advantage

Insofar as Reed sued under state law for tortious interference with prospective economic advantage, the district court noted a choice-of-law question between New York, where McGraw-Hill is domiciled, and Georgia, where Reed is domiciled. See Reed Constr. Data Inc. v. McGraw-Hill Cos., 49 F. Supp. 3d at 425 n.20, 427. Reed conceded that if Georgia law applied, its tortious interference claim would be preempted by the Georgia Trade Secrets Act, Ga. Code Ann. §§ 10-1-760 et seq. See Reed Constr. Data Inc. v. McGraw-Hill Cos., 49 F. Supp. 3d at 427; App'x 480. The district court did not decide the choice of law question, concluding instead that Reed's tort claim failed at the causation element. HN7[] We are free, however to affirm a district court decision on any grounds supported by the record. See Gmurzynska v. Hutton, 355 F.3d 206, 210 (2d Cir. 2004). Because we conclude that the choice of law question supports affirmance, we need not address causation.

As the district court correctly found, Reed's failure to demonstrate material nationwide deception reduced his tortious interference claim to a single customer, J & J Industries. This customer was [*47] domiciled in Georgia.[2] HN8[] Applying New York choice of law principles, where the solicited customer and [7] the aggrieved plaintiff are both within a given state, that state has the greatest interest in regulating the behavior at issue, even if the allegedly tortious solicitation originates in a different state. See White Plains Coat & Apron Co. v. Cintas Corp., 460 F.3d 281, 284 (2d Cir. 2006) ("[B]ecause the alleged tort substantially occurred in New York, where the vast majority of the customers are located, and because the vast majority of the alleged harm occurred in New York (as [plaintiff] is a New York company headquartered in New York), we conclude that New York has the greatest interest in regulating the conduct in question and that the district court was correct to apply New York law."). Here, that straightforward choice-of-law analysis demands the application of Georgia law. Accordingly, as plaintiff has conceded that its tortious interference claim would be preempted under Georgia law, we affirm the district court's grant of summary judgment on that claim.

---

[2] HN9[] We may take judicial notice at any stage of the proceedings, including on appeal, of a fact that is "'capable of accurate and ready determination by resort to sources whose accuracy cannot reasonably be questioned.'" Hotel Emps. & Rest. Emps. Union v. City of N.Y. Dep't of Parks & Recreation, 311 F.3d 534, 540 n.1 (2d Cir. 2002) (quoting Fed. R. Evid. 201(b)(2)). The public records contained on the Georgia Secretary of State's website make clear [8] that J & J Industries is incorporated and headquartered in Georgia, a fact confirmed by the location indicated by the McCoy declaration. See Swindol v. Aurora Flight Scis. Corp., 805 F.3d 516, 519 (5th Cir. 2015) (examining "public records contained on the Mississippi Secretary of State's and the Virginia State Corporation Commission's websites" to determine jurisdiction of appellate court and concluding "that the accuracy of these public records . . . cannot reasonably be questioned").

We have considered Reed's remaining arguments and conclude that they are without merit. Accordingly, the judgment of the district court is AFFIRMED.

EXHIBIT A

JUDGMENT

These matters came before the Court on Wednesday, December 16, 2015, for hearing and oral argument on State Farm's Exception of No Cause of Action and Gene and David Haymon's Exception of No Cause of Action.

After reviewing the facts and relevant case law, the Court finds as follows:

If all alleged facts are taken as true, the Petition states all the necessary elements of a violation of both the Louisiana antitrust law and the Louisiana Unfair Trade Practices Act.

Therefore, Plaintiffs' Petition states a cause of action.

While the Court does believe the Plaintiffs have stated a cause of action for both alleged violations, the Court also notes Everything on Wheels Subaru, Inc. v. Subaru S, Inc., "if there are two or more items of damages or theories of recovery which arise out of the operative facts of a single transaction or occurrence, a partial judgment on an exception of no cause of action should not be rendered to dismiss one item of damages or theory of recovery." 616 So. 2d 1234 (La. 1993).

THEREFORE IT IS HEREBY ORDERED that State Farm's Exception of No Cause of Action is DENIED.

THEREFORE IT IS HEREBY FURTHER ORDERED that Gene Haymon and [*2] David Haymon's Exception of No Cause of Action is DENIED.

Opinion

[*130] By "bottom-line" order dated December 15, 2015, this Court denied plaintiff's motion for a temporary restraining order and preliminary injunction enjoining defendant from terminating plaintiff from defendant's retail pharmacy network during the pendency of this litigation. This Opinion explains the reasons for that ruling.

Plaintiff Park Irmat Drug Corp. ("Irmat") is a pharmacy located in midtown Manhattan. Defendant OptumRx, Inc. ("Optum") is one of the largest Pharmacy Benefit Managers ("PBMs") in the United States, providing coverage for prescription drugs to over 65 million members. By way of general background on the workings of the industry, PBMs such as Optum are third-party administrators of prescription drug programs, responsible for managing the pharmacy benefits for health plans, negotiating drug discounts with drug manufacturers, developing lists of approved [2] drugs for reimbursement, and processing pharmacies' and patients' prescription drug claims. In this capacity, PBMs build networks of pharmacies through which their members can purchase prescription medications at "covered" (i.e., discounted) rates. In order to gain access to a PBM's pharmacy network, pharmacies often contract with third-party Pharmacy Services Administrative Organizations ("PSAOs") that serve as a single point of contact for the PBMs and negotiate and contract with PBMs on the pharmacies' behalf.

Optum administers two types of pharmacy networks, a "retail" pharmacy network (which consists of some 65,000 pharmacies) and a "mail-order" pharmacy network. To participate in Optum's mail-order network, pharmacies must meet a specialized set of requirements, including being accredited by the Utilization Review Accreditation Commission as a mail service pharmacy, as well as by the National Association of Boards of Pharmacy as a Verified Internet Pharmacy Practice Site. Optum contends that it requires these accreditations to ensure that mail-order pharmacies have the appropriate controls and processes in place to safely dispense medication to patients by mail. Optum also owns [3] and operates its own mail-order pharmacy.

Irmat has been a member of Optum's pharmacy network since at least 2006. Complaint ("Compl") ¶ 4, ECF No. 7. In July 2012, however, Irmat entered into an agreement with the PSAO AccessHealth (the "Irmat/AccessHealth Agreement") in order to gain continued access to over 100 third-party payor networks, including Optum's, from which Irmat's customers receive prescription drug coverage. At that time, AccessHealth had a pharmacy network agreement in place with Optum (the "Prescription Drug Services Agreement") to which Irmat became subject. The parties appear to agree that the Prescription Drug Services Agreement did not prohibit the provision of mail-order pharmacy services except with respect to Medicare Part D patients -- to whom Irmat did not provide such services "as a general matter." Id. ¶ 39.

Beginning in 2011, Irmat began developing a niche practice in dermatology and, over the next several years, expanded this practice by participating in programs sponsored by certain dermatological drug manufacturers, under which such manufacturers would cover some or all of customers' co-pays. See Affidavit of Victor Falah dated Nov. 12, 2015 ("Falah Aff.") [4] ¶¶ 15-16, ECF No. 17. As a result, Irmat's business grew substantially and, in 2013, it began filling prescriptions via mail order. [*131] Irmat's revenue from Optum members has increased from approximately $2 million in 2012 to a projected $33 million in 2015. See Affidavit of Christopher O'Keefe dated Nov. 12, 2015 ("O'Keefe Aff.") ¶ 7, ECF No. 18. At the time of the filing of its motion, mail orders represented 80% of Irmat's business, see Falah Aff. ¶ 16, and sales to Optum members accounted for 27% of Irmat's sales overall, see O'Keefe Aff. ¶ 5.

In February 2015, AccessHealth and Optum entered into a new pharmacy network agreement (the "2015 Agreement"), with AccessHealth purporting to act on behalf of its participating pharmacies in its capacity as their agent. See Falah Aff., Ex. 3. Section 3.10 of the 2015 Agreement prohibits such pharmacies from engaging in mail-order fulfillment except upon advance written approval of Optum, and § 5.2.4 of the 2015 Agreement authorizes Optum to "terminate, suspend or revoke any Pharmacy location from participating under this Agreement immediately upon written notice to Company and Pharmacy if . . . (v) Pharmacy engages in mail fulfillment in violation of Section 3.10 without Administrator's [5] written authorization."

In apparent contravention of its separate agreement with Irmat, AccessHealth never furnished Irmat a written summary of the terms and conditions of the 2015 Agreement. See Falah Aff. ¶¶ 19-20. As a result, Irmat contends, it had no knowledge of the terms of the Agreement until it was advised by Optum by letter dated August 10, 2015 that Irmat was filling mail-order prescriptions in violation of the 2015 Agreement. See Falah Aff., Ex. 4; Falah Aff. ¶ 24. Optum requested that Irmat confirm within ten business days that it would cease the prohibited activity. In response, by letter dated August 17, 2015, Irmat requested "a 90-day delay in any action by Optum" and argued that it and its patients "would be irreparably harmed if termination occurs." Id., Ex. 5. On September 16, 2015, Optum advised Irmat via email that while Irmat must "remain in compliance with the retail agreement, including the no mail prohibition," nonetheless, if it wished to avoid termination, it could apply to Optum's mail-order pharmacy network. Id., Ex. 6. Irmat, in turn, requested that Optum allow it to continue dispensing medication by mail while it applied for the necessary accreditations [6] to join Optum's mail-order pharmacy network. Id., Ex. 7. By letter dated September 28, 2015, Optum advised Irmat that it would be terminating Irmat for cause, effective November 30, 2015. Id., Ex. 8.

On November 12, 2015, Irmat tiled a complaint against upturn in New York State Supreme Court for breach of contract, equitable estoppel, tortious interference with business relations, and antitrust violations under New York's Donnelly Act. See Declaration of Michael H. Bernstein dated Nov. 24, 2015 at ¶ 3, ECF No. 24. On November 13, 2015, Irmat filed the instant motion. Id. ¶¶ 4-5. That same day, Optum filed a notice of removal on diversity grounds pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1446 and the action was assigned to this Court. Ultimately, on consent of the parties, the Court issued a scheduling order setting a briefing schedule on plaintiff's motion and staying the termination of Irmat from Optum's pharmacy network until a hearing was held. Order dated Nov. 23, 2015, ECF No. 22.

A court may issue a preliminary injunction and temporary restraining order pursuant to Rule 65 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. "[A] preliminary injunction is an extraordinary and drastic remedy, one that should not be granted unless the movant, by a clear showing, carries [7] the burden of persuasion." Mazurek v. Armstrong, 520 U.S. 968, 972, 117 S. Ct. 1865, 138 L. Ed. 2d 162 (1997) (per [*132] curiam) (internal quotation mark omitted). A party seeking a preliminary injunction must show "(a) irreparable harm and (b) either (1) likelihood of success on the merits or (2) sufficiently serious questions going to the merits to make them a fair ground for litigation and a balance of hardships tipping decidedly toward the party requesting the preliminary relief." Citigroup Glob. Mkts., Inc. v. VCG Special Opportunities Master Fund Ltd., 598 F.3d 30, 35 (2d Cir. 2010) (internal quotation marks omitted). In addition, the court must ensure that the public, interest would not be disserved' by the issuance of a preliminary injunction." Salinger v. Colting, 607 F.3d 68, 80 (2d Cir. 2010) (quoting eBay Inc. v. MercExchange, L.L.C., 547 U.S. 388, 391, 126 S. Ct. 1837, 164 L. Ed. 2d 641 (2006)). A preliminary injunction is "never awarded as of right," Winter v. Nat. Res. Def. Council, Inc., 555 U.S. 7, 24, 129 S. Ct. 365, 172 L. Ed. 2d 249 (2008), and whether to grant such relief "rests in the sound discretion of the district court," JSG Trading Corp. v. Tray-Wrap, Inc., 917 F. 2d 75, 79 (2d Cir. 1990). "In deciding a motion for preliminary injunction, a court may consider the entire record including affidavits and other hearsay evidence." *Johnson v. Newport Lorillard, 2003 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 939, 2003 WL 169797, at 1 (S.D.N.Y. Jan. 23, 2003).[1]

"To establish irreparable harm, the movant must demonstrate an injury that is neither remote nor speculative, but actual and imminent and that cannot be remedied by an award of monetary damages." Shapiro v. Cadman Towers, Inc., 51 F.3d 328, 332 (2d Cir. 1995) (internal quotation [8] marks omitted); Brenntag Int'l Chems., Inc. v. Bank of India, 175 F.3d 245, 249 (2d Cir. 1999) (irreparable harm exists "where, but for the grant of equitable relief, there is a substantial chance that upon final resolution of the action the parties cannot be returned to the positions they previously occupied").

Irmat makes a facially compelling case that Optum's termination of it from its pharmacy network represents an existential threat to its business. Irmat contends that losing the ability to service Optum members (who account for 27% of Irmat's sales overall) will have spill-over effects on the rest of its business. According to Irmat, most dermatologists -- not wanting to bother with determining which pharmacies can fill which prescriptions for which patients -- do not make referrals to particular pharmacies based on a patient's coverage, but rather refer their patients to one or two pharmacies that accept all major insurance providers. See O'Keefe Aff. ¶ 11. Thus, Irmat submits that most dermatologists will simply stop referring patients to Irmat altogether if Irmat is terminated from Optum's network. These losses, Irmat contends, are not quantifiable and will not be easily recaptured even if Irmat ultimately prevails in this litigation, since referring [9] dermatologists will have moved on to other pharmacies.[2]

Optum responds that any losses Irmat might suffer are quantifiable, pointing to [*133] the fact that Irmat, in its papers, calculates the amount of revenues it derives from Optum members and the percentage of prescriptions from its top physician referrers that were made out for Optum members. But being able to break down actual revenues and referrals is a much simpler task than assessing the extent to which termination from Optum will affect Irmat's non-Optum business. And Optum does not attempt to rebut Irmat's assertion that [10] termination from Optum's network will result in dermatologists opting not to refer to Irmat altogether. As such, given the significant difficulties inherent in attempting to quantify the impact that termination from Optum's network will have on Irmat's business, the Court finds that Irmat has met its burden of showing an actual and imminent injury for which it lacks

[1] "The standard for granting a temporary restraining order and a preliminary injunction pursuant to Rule 65 of the Federal Rules of Procedure are identical." Spencer Trask Software & Info. Servs., LLC v. RPost Int'l Ltd., 190 F. Supp. 2d 577, 580 (S.D.N.Y. 2002).

[2] In support of this proposition, Irmat points to its recent experience with customers from the state of Georgia. Because of a new Georgia state licensing requirement, Irmat briefly ceased providing mail-order services to customers in Georgia in June 2015. See O'Keefe Aff. ¶¶ 14-15. As a result, dermatologists in Georgia found alternative pharmacies to refer patients to. Id. ¶ 16. Though Irmat resumed the provision of such services in August 2015, "the vast majority of dermatologists that had previously referred patients to Irmat did not revert back to doing so." an adequate remedy at law. See Salinger, 607 F.3d at 81 ("Harm might be irremediable, or irreparable, for many reasons, including that a loss is difficult to replace or difficult to measure . . . .").

Turning to the merits, however, the Court finds that plaintiff has failed to show a likelihood of success on the merits on any of its claims. Plaintiff's first cause of auction is for breach of contract. Rather than argue that Optum has breached any of the written contracts between the parties discussed above, Irmat argues that the parties entered into an implied-in-fact contract, as evidenced through their conduct, by which Irmat would provide pharmacy services to Optum's members and, in return, Optum would reimburse Irmat for the drugs that it dispenses to those members. Under this supposed implied-in-fact contract, Irmat was not prohibited from [11] providing mail-order pharmacy services to Optum members and never agreed that doing so would constitute grounds for termination. "A contract cannot be implied in fact where there is an express contract covering the subject matter involved." Julien J. Studley, Inc. v. New York News, Inc., 70 N.Y.2d 628, 629, 512 N.E.2d 300, 518 N.Y.S.2d 779 (1987). Thus, as part and parcel of its breach-of-contract argument, Irmat argues that it is not bound by the terms of the 2015 Agreement between Optum and its agent AccessHealth -- which made it a terminable offense for a "retail" pharmacy to provide mail-order services to Optum members -- because it had no notice of it and did not ratify it.

Irmat's argument that it is not bound by the 2015 Agreement ultimately fails. But before progressing any further in the analysis of the 2015 Agreement, the Court must address an oddity with respect to that agreement that emerged after briefing and oral argument on the instant motion. In the 2015 Agreement, AccessHealth "warrants that it has the authority to enter into th[e] Agreement as the agent for and on behalf of each Pharmacy identified on Exhibit A" and that "that each Pharmacy identified on Exhibit A has agreed to be bound by and comply with all of the terms and conditions of this Agreement." Falah Aff., Ex. 3, [12] § 3. Exhibit A, however, by defendant's own admission, was not attached to the contract and perhaps never existed. See Declaration of Jake McCreary dated Dec. 15, 2015 ("McCreary Decl.") ¶ 3. According to McCreary, a supervisor of pharmacy network operations at Optum who assists in the administration or the 2015 Agreement, "it has been the practice or the parties throughout their relationship to rely on data sent to OptumRx by AccessHealth to identify the pharmacies enrolled in the AccessHealth PSAO and participating in the OptumRx pharmacy network pursuant to the Contract." Id. AccessHealth has identified Irmat as such a pharmacy throughout the relevant period. Id. ¶¶ 4-9.

The Court finds that the missing exhibit does not render the 2015 Agreement fatally indefinite for three independent and alternative [*134] reasons. First, while AccessHealth purports in § 3 of the Agreement to act on behalf of the pharmacies listed on Exhibit A, its description of whom it represents is not so limited elsewhere in the Agreement. Indeed, the 2015 Agreement "is made and entered into by and between [Optum] . . . and [AccessHealth] as attorney-in-fact on behalf of its Participating Pharmacies." Falah Aff., Ex. [13] 3, at 1 (emphasis added). AccessHealth similarly represented in the Recitals section of the Agreement that it "has the authority to enter into this Agreement as the agent for and on behalf of its Participating Pharmacies." Id., Recital D. "Pharmacy" and "Pharmacies," in turn, are defined to mean "each or all the eligible pharmacy or pharmacies, pharmacy chains and/or pharmacy locations participating in [Optum's] network in accordance with the Agreement, addenda, exhibits, subsequent amendments, etc. and as specified on Exhibit A." Id. ¶ 1.30.[3]

At first glance, it is unclear whether "and as specified on Exhibit A" is intended to characterize the pharmacies described in the preceding language or is, rather, intended to represent one of several sets of pharmacies that constitute a "Pharmacy" (and, in turn, a "Participating Pharmacy") under the 2015 Agreement. But to adopt the former interpretation (such that "Pharmacies" refers only to those pharmacies specified on Exhibit A) would read the language "participating in [Optum's] network in accordance with the Agreement, addenda, exhibits, subsequent amendments, etc." out [14] of the definition. To give those words effect, a pharmacy not listed on Exhibit A must at least be capable of qualifying as a Pharmacy under the Agreement; otherwise, the definition could have referred simply to "eligible pharmacy or pharmacies, pharmacy chains and/or pharmacy locations, as specified on Exhibit A," and left it at that. See Olin Corp. v. Am. Home Assurance Co., 704 F.3d 89, 99 (2d Cir. 2012) (under New York law, "[a]ny interpretation of a contract that has the effect of rendering at least one clause superfluous or meaningless . . . is not preferred and will be avoided if possible" (internal quotation marks omitted)).

[3] "Participating Pharmacies" is not a defined term in the 2015 Agreement.

Notably, on the signature page of the 2015 Agreement, immediately above the signature of the signatory for AccessHealth, the "Chain Codes" 605 and 630 are listed. Plainly then, Chain Code 605, of which Irmat is a member, see McCreary Decl. ¶ 4, is an "eligible . . . pharmacy chain[] . . . participating in [Optum]'s network in accordance with the Agreement." As such, regardless of the absence of Exhibit A, AccessHealth entered into the 2015 Agreement in its capacity as Irmat's agent (among many other pharmacies). Such an interpretation is particularly warranted in light of the well-settled principle that a "contract must be interpreted [15] so as to give effect to, not nullify, its general or primary purpose." Smith v. City of Buffalo, 120 A.D.3d 1588, 1589, 992 N.Y.S.2d 816 (N.Y. App. Div. 4th Dep't. 2014) (internal quotation mark omitted).

Second, and alternatively, even if the 2015 Agreement could be read to have intended to bind only those Pharmacies identified on Exhibit A, the absence of Exhibit A would not in and of itself render the Agreement invalid. Rather, "[b]efore rejecting an agreement as indefinite, a court must be satisfied that the agreement cannot be rendered reasonably certain by reference to an extrinsic standard that makes its meaning clear. The conclusion that a party's promise should be ignored as meaningless is at best a last resort." *Cobble Hill Nursing Home, Inc. v. Henry & Warren Corp., 74 N.Y.2d 475, 483, 548 N.E.2d 203, 548 [135] N.Y.S.2d 920, (1989) (citation and internal quotation marks omitted); see also 166 Mamaroneck Ave. Corp. v. 151 E. Post Rd. Corp., 78 N.Y.2d 88, 91, 575 N.E.2d 104, 571 N.Y.S.2d 686 (1991) ("[W]here it is clear from the language of an agreement that the parties intended to be bound and there exists an objective method for supplying a missing term, the court should endeavor to hold the parties to their bargain."); Matter of Wallace v. 600 Partners Co., 86 N.Y.2d 543, 547-48, 658 N.E.2d 715, 634 N.Y.S.2d 669 (1995) ("[C]ourts may as a matter of interpretation carry out the intention of a contract by transposing, rejecting, or supplying words to make the meaning of the contract more clear . . . in those limited instances where some absurdity has been identified or the contract would otherwise be unenforceable either [16] in whole or in part."). While these principles are generally applied to supply, for example, a missing price term or, in the case of the Wallace doctrine, to correct an absurd scrivener's error, the principles are equally applicable to the situation at bar where the contracting parties failed to attach an important exhibit. Here, the reference to Chain Codes 605 and 630 on the signature page of the 2015 Agreement supplies the "extrinsic standard" or "objective method" by which the Court can hold the parties to the bargain they struck. In other words, rather than toss the 2015 Agreement as meaningless -- "a last resort" -- the Court may properly under New York law interpret the references to "Exhibit A" in the Agreement to refer to those pharmacies (such as Irmat) in Chain Codes 605 and 630.

Third, and finally, even if the 2015 Agreement were interpreted to bind no Pharmacies at the time of execution because of the missing exhibit, the 2015 Agreement explicitly contemplates that pharmacies will be added to the Optum network subsequent to the execution of the 2015 Agreement. See Falah Aff., Ex. 3, § 3.4.3 ("[AccessHealth] shall provide [Optum] with at least fifteen (15) days written notice prior [17] to adding a new Pharmacy Location for use in providing Covered Prescription Services to Members, which new Pharmacy location shall satisfy and comply with all terms and conditions of this Agreement . . . . On a monthly basis [AccessHealth] will provide a complete list of Pharmacies as of the end of the month as well as a summary list of new and former Pharmacies processed during the previous calendar month."). The fact that that mechanism is in place, and that Optum treated Irmat as an active pharmacy under the 2015 Agreement by virtue of the information provided to it by AccessHealth, see McCreary Decl. ¶¶ 5-9, further undermines any argument that Irmat cannot be bound by the 2015 Agreement simply because Exhibit A was not attached to the Agreement.

Returning to the arguments made in the briefing, Irmat's argument that it is not bound by the 2015 Agreement because it had no notice of it and did not ratify it is unpersuasive. Under black-letter agency law, a principal need not have notice to be bound by his agent. "It is well-settled that the principal is bound by notice to or knowledge of his agent in all matters within the scope of his agency although in fact the information may never [18] actually have been communicated to the principal." Farr v. Newman, 14 N.Y.2d 183, 187, 199 N.E.2d 369, 250 N.Y.S.2d 272 (1964); Minskoff v. Am. Express Travel Related Servs. Co., 98 F.3d 703, 708 (2d Cir. 1996) ("Under general principles of agency, the authority of an agent 'is the power of the agent to do an act or to conduct a transaction on account of the principal which, with respect to the principal, he is privileged to do because of the principal's manifestations to him.'"). Here, Irmat's agreement with AccessHealth [*136] provides that "[AccessHealth] shall have the authority to negotiate and enter into prospective Payor Agreements for the provision of Covered Pharmacy Services to Covered Persons. [Irmat] agrees that [AccessHealth] has the sole and exclusive right to bind [Irmat] to [Payor Plans], provided that [Irmat] may . . . opt out of Payor Plans as described in Section 5.2." Falah Aff., Ex. 1, § 5.1. Section 5.2 of the Agreement, in turn, contemplates that Irmat may "opt out of Payor Agreements available within the network selected by [Irmat]," although it will initially be "automatically enrolled in all Payor Agreements available under [said] network." Id. § 5.2. As such, Irmat, by the plain language of its own contract with AccessHealth, agreed to be bound to agreements entered into by AccessHealth on Irmat's behalf unless it opted out of such agreements, regardless [19] of whether Irmat would have agreed to those terms in the first instance. See Hidden Brook Air, Inc. v. Thabet Aviation Int'l Inc., 241 F. Supp. 2d 246, 260 (S.D.N.Y. 2002) ("It is black letter law that an agent binds his principal when he enters into a contract within the scope of his authority."); E. River Sav. Bank v. Samuels, 284 N.Y. 470, 480, 31 N.E.2d 906 (1940) ("When an agent contracts in the name of his principal, the principal contracts and is bound . . . .") .

Though it would appear that Irmat's authorization of AccessHealth to bind it could not be clearer, Irmat argues that AccessHealth did not have "carte blanche to bind Irmat to agreements as AccessHealth saw fit," Plaintiff's Reply Brief ("Pl. Reply Br.") at 5 (ECF No. 29), seizing on a provision of the Irmat/AccessHealth Agreement that requires AccessHealth to "furnish [Irmat] a written summary of the terms and conditions of each Payor Agreement for which [AccessHealth] proposes that [Irmat] participate." Falah Aff., Ex. 1, § 2.1 (emphasis added). But the word "proposes" cannot bear the weight plaintiff assigns to it in light of § 5 of the Agreement. An obligation to furnish a summary of terms is not tantamount to a requirement that Irmat ratify those terms for an agreement to be effective. The absence of any ratification procedure in the Irmat/AccessHealth Agreement defeats such an [20] interpretation, for if the parties intended such a limitation on AccessHealth's ability to bind Irmat, they almost certainly would have provided for one explicitly. And given that the Agreement allows for Irmat to opt out of Payor Agreements that it does not wish to participate in, the use of the word "proposes" in § 2.1 is not remotely inconsistent with the framework established by § 5.[4] That AccessHealth allegedly failed to furnish Irmat with a written summary of the terms and conditions of the 2015 Agreement, in apparent contravention of § 2.1 of their agreement, may very well provide-Irmat with a viable breach-of-contract claim against AccessHealth. But it does not provide Irmat with a breach-of-contract claim against Optum.[5]

Irmat also argues that Optum waived any contractual right to terminate [*137] Irmat for providing mail-order pharmacy services, in light of the fact that Optum reimbursed Irmat for over 200,000 prescriptions throughout the country from February 2013 through October 2015, without objection until August 2015. See O'Keefe Aff. ¶ 7. Noting that claims submitted by Irmat reflect less than two hundredths of one percent of the claims processed by Optum during that period, Optum responds that it did not know that Irmat was filling mail orders in violation of the 2015 Agreement until it conducted an investigation in mid-2015. But the Court need not wade into this factual dispute because the 2015 Agreement explicitly provides that "[t]he failure of any party to insist in any one or more instances upon performance of any terms or conditions of this Agreement shall not be construed as a waiver . . . and the obligations [22] of such party with respect thereto shall continue in full force and effect." Falah Aff., Ex. 3, § 11.3. Such "[n]o-waiver clauses are valid and enforceable" under New York law, and therefore Irmat's waiver argument fails. *Am. Movie Classics Co. v. Time Warner Entm't, L.P., 10 Misc. 3d 1062[A], 814 N.Y.S.2d 559, 2005 NY Slip Op 52081[U], 2005 WL 3487852, at 12 (N.Y. Sup. Ct. 2005). Irmat argues that the 2015 Agreement's no-waiver provision is inapplicable for the same reasons it argues that it is not bound by the 2015 Agreement generally, but that argument fails for the same reasons stated above.

[4] Because the Court finds that AccessHealth had actual authority to bind Irmat, it need not reach the issue of whether, in the absence of such actual authority, Irmat would still be bound by the 2015 Agreement on a theory of apparent authority.

[5] Irmat argues that Optum's 2015 Pharmacy Manual (which describes the necessary accreditations for mail-order pharmacies), and Optum's prohibition on providing mail-order pharmacy services, were not clearly incorporated by reference into [21] Irmat's own separate agreement with AccessHealth. This argument is a red herring that the Court need not reach. The dispositive point, for purposes of plaintiff's breach-of-contract claim, is that the 2015 Agreement entered into on Irmat's behalf by AccessHealth is a valid contract that binds Irmat.

Finally, Irmat claims that Optum acted in violation of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing by (1) prohibiting the provision of mail-order pharmacy services without notifying Irmat directly or seeking its consent; (2) demanding that Irmat cease providing mail-order services within 10 days or face termination; and (3) deciding to terminate Irmat despite Irmat's willingness to apply to Optum's mail-order pharmacy network. While "even an explicitly discretionary contract right may not be exercised in bad faith so as to frustrate the other party's right to the benefit under the agreement," Richbell Info. Servs., Inc. v. Jupiter Partners, L.P., 309 A.D.2d 288, 302, 765 N.Y.S.2d 575 (N.Y. App. Div. 1st Dep't. 2003), "[t]o sustain a breach of the implied covenant claim, the claimant must allege and show that the other party exercised a [contractual] right malevolently, for its [23] own gain as a part of a purposeful scheme designed to deprive [claimant] of the benefits under the contract," *Wilmington Trust Co. v. Strauss, 13 Misc. 3d 1231[A], 831 N.Y.S.2d 357, 2006 NY Slip Op 52080[U], 2006 WL 3076611, at 8 (N.Y. Sup. Ct. 2006) (internal quotation marks omitted).

Irmat has failed to show that it is likely to be able to demonstrate that Optum acted with the requisite bad faith to support such a theory of breach. Again, plaintiff's effort to pin its agent's failure to notify it of the 2015 Agreement on Optum is not well-taken. As for Optum's decision to terminate Irmat from its network, it was Irmat's choice to continue breaching the 2015 Agreement upon being notified of its breach rather than to cease filling mail-order prescriptions from Optum members while its application to Optum's mail-order pharmacy network remained pending. While Optum perhaps has not acted with the greatest generosity toward Irmat under the circumstances, it cannot be the case that Optum's decision to act on its contractual right to terminate Optum in the face of Irmat's continued breach constitutes bad faith. Although Irmat suggests that Optum pursued such termination in an effort to squash competition, these allegations are conclusory and are further undermined by the undisputed fact that Optum invited Irmat to apply to its [24] mail-order pharmacy network as part of the parties' correspondence. Ferguson v. Lion Holding, Inc., 478 F. Supp. 2d 455, 469 (S.D.N.Y. 2007) ("[C]onclusory allegations [*138] of a party's failure to act in good faith alone are insufficient . . . .").[6]

At bottom, Irmat is seeking to replace the written agreement between the parties with an unwritten, implied-in-fact contract with terms more favorable to Irmat. That it cannot do. As such, plaintiff has failed to show a likelihood of success on its breach-of-contract claim.

With its second cause of action, Irmat argues that Optum is precluded by the doctrine of equitable estoppel from terminating Irmat from its network. Here, too, Irmat fails to show a likelihood of success on the merits. "Under New York law, the elements of equitable estoppel are with respect to the party estopped: (1) conduct which amounts to a false representation or concealment of material facts; (2) intention that such conduct will be acted upon by the other party; and (3) knowledge of the real facts. [25] The parties asserting estoppel must show with respect to themselves: (1) lack of knowledge and of the means of knowledge of the true facts; (2) reliance upon the conduct of the party to be estopped; and (3) prejudicial changes in their positions." In re Vebeliunas, 332 F.3d 85, 93-94 (2d Cir. 2003) (citation omitted). The "doctrine is to be invoked sparingly and only under exceptional circumstances." LoCiciro v. Metro. Transp. Auth., 288 A.D.2d 353, 355, 733 N.Y.S.2d 477 (N.Y. App. Div. 2d Dep't 2001) (internal quotation marks omitted).

Irmat argues that it is likely to succeed on this claim because it relied to its detriment on Optum's reimbursement of its mail-order sales to Optum members from 2013 to 2015, substantially expanding its business from 20 to 208 employees and spending millions of dollars to expand its operations. Optum argues that equitable estoppel is unavailable because Irmat has a contractual relationship with Optum that governs the parties' relationship. *See Kopelowitz & Co. v. Mann, 23 Misc. 3d 1112[A], 886 N.Y.S.2d 67, 2009 NY Slip Op 50712[U], 2009 WL 1037734, at 11 (N.Y. Sup. Ct. 2009) ("Claims for equitable estoppel that are duplicative of dismissed breach of contract claims are properly dismissed."). Irmat appears to concede the point on reply, assuming that the Court finds an enforceable contract between Optum and Irmat. See Pl. Reply Br. at 8 n.16. But, in any case, Irmat has failed to demonstrate that it is likely to be able to show (1) [26] that Optum concealed anything from Irmat; (2) that Optum intended Irmat to act on any such concealment or misrepresentation, or (3) that Irmat lacked "the means of knowledge of the true facts." To the contrary, Irmat knew it was in Optum's pharmacy network and knew that it was obligated under the Irmat/AccessHealth agreement to "comply with the policies and procedures" of Optum. Falah Aff., Ex. 1, Recitals; id. ¶ 8.1. Irmat does not even plead that it lacked the means to know the true facts -- an understandable omission given that its own agent executed the agreement at issue.

[6] Plaintiff's implied covenant theory faces another hurdle that renders its success unlikely, viz., "New York law requires dismissal of an implied covenant claim where the claim derives from the same set of facts as a breach of contract claim," as it does here. FCOF UB Sec. LLC v. MorEquity, Inc., 663 F. Supp. 2d 224, 231 (S.D.N.Y. 2009).

Nor has Irmat met its burden of showing a likelihood of success on its third cause of action for tortious interference with business relations. "To prevail on a claim for tortious interference with business relations in New York, a party must prove (1) that it had a business relationship with a third party; (2) that the defendant knew of that relationship and intentionally interfered with it; (3) that the defendant acted solely out of malice or used improper or illegal means that amounted to a crime or independent tort; [*139] and (4) that the defendant's interference caused injury to the relationship with the third [27] party." Amaranth LLC v. J. P. Morgan Chase & Co., 71 A.D.3d 40, 47, 888 N.Y.S.2d 489 (N.Y. App. Div. 1st Dep't 2009). Irmat argues that Optum's termination of Irmat from its pharmacy network will interfere with its business relationships with customers, dermatologists, and drug manufacturers. It further contends, summarily, that "Optum's termination of Irmat is not in its member's [sic] interests . . . or in pursuit of legitimate business objectives" and that the purpose of the termination is "to el[i]minate a competitor in violation of antitrust law." Plaintiff's Opening Brief ("Pl. Br.") at 16, ECF No. 15. Optum responds that it simply has chosen to terminate Irmat from its network because Irmat refused to stop breaching the governing network agreement. While a violation of New York's Donnelly Act (assuming arguendo that one has occurred) would constitute a crime under New York law, the New York Court of Appeals has emphasized that "conduct constituting tortious interference with business relations is, by definition, conduct directed not at the plaintiff itself, but at the party with which the plaintiff has or seeks to have a relationship." Carvel Corp. v. Noonan, 3 N.Y.3d 182, 192, 818 N.E.2d 1100, 785 N.Y.S.2d 359 (2004). Irmat has not pled nor argued that Optum's conduct is directed at parties other than Irmat itself, so its claim is defective in this regard. See Valley Lane Indus. Co. v. Victoria's Secret Direct Brand Mgmt., L.L.C., 455 F. App'x 102, 106-07 (2d Cir. 2012) (affirming [28] dismissal of tortious interference with business relations claim because defendant's allegedly wrongful conduct "was directed at [plaintiff], rather than [the third party]," such that plaintiff's "allegations could not satisfy the wrongful means element even if they did sufficiently allege tortious conduct"). And Irmat's allegation that Optum acted "with the sole purpose of harming Irmat" is conclusory. Compl. ¶ 86. In any case, in order to show a likelihood of success on the merits of its tortious interference claim, plaintiff would need to show a likelihood of success on the merits of its antitrust claims, which, as explained below, plaintiff has failed to do.

Turning to those claims, the Donnelly Act tracks the federal Sherman Act, prohibiting "[e]very contract, agreement, arrangement or combination whereby [a] monopoly . . . is or may be established or maintained, or whereby [c]ompetition or the free exercise of any activity in the conduct of any business, trade or commerce or in the furnishing of any service . . . is or may be restrained." N.Y. Gen. Bus. Law § 340(1); see also Anheuser-Busch, Inc. v. Abrams, 71 N.Y.2d 327, 335, 520 N.E.2d 535, 525 N.Y.S.2d 816 (1988) (the Donnelly Act "should generally be construed in light of Federal precedent"). Irmat argues that the 2015 Agreement violates the Donnelly Act in [29] two ways: (1) by "negatively" tying retail pharmacy services to mail-order pharmacy services; and (2) as an unreasonable restraint on trade.

The elements of an illegal per se tying claim are: "(1) that the tying arrangement affects a substantial amount of interstate commerce; (2) the two products are distinct; (3) the defendant actually tied the sale of the two products; and (4) the seller has appreciable market power in the tying market." In re Visa Check/MasterMoney Antitrust Litig., 280 F.3d 124, 133 n.5 (2d Cir. 2001), overruled on other grounds, In re Initial Pub. Offering Sec. Litig., 471 F.3d 24 (2d Cir. 2006). As an initial matter, though Optum does not brief the viability of a "negative tying" theory in general, such a theory is far from well-established. A few courts have recognized that "[i]n addition to outlawing 'positive' ties likely to restrain competition, Section 1 [*140] [of the Sherman Act] also forbids 'negative' ties -- arrangements conditioning the sale of one product on an agreement not to purchase a second product from competing suppliers." Data Gen. Corp. v. Grumman Sys. Support Corp., 36 F.3d 1147, 1178 (1st Cir. 1994), abrogated on other grounds by Reed Elsevier, Inc. v. Muchnick, 559 U.S. 154, 130 S. Ct. 1237, 176 L. Ed. 2d 18 (2010). But plaintiff fails to cite a case in the Second Circuit or a decision of a New York state court that has accepted or applied the theory. See Posa, Inc. v. Miller Brewing Co., 642 F. Supp. 1198, 1209 (E.D.N.Y. 1986) (noting that plaintiffs had failed to "cite[] any case authority for the proposition that such a negative tie is [30] unlawful"). And Irmat cites no case in which a practice like defendant's has been found to constitute tying. Indeed, at a minimum, "tying" is an awkward fit on these facts since Optum is not offering products in the traditional sense of the word, or preventing Irmat from purchasing the "tied" product from a competitor. Rather, on plaintiff's theory, Optum is unlawfully forcing Irmat to choose between Optum's own pharmacy networks.

The Court need not resolve the viability of plaintiff's negative tying theory on this motion, because even assuming the theory would be viable on the facts pled, the theory is based on a mistaken factual premise. According to Optum, Irmat's contention that "Optum has forced its pharmacies that participate in Optum's 'retail' pharmacy network to refrain from providing mail order pharmacy services" is factually incorrect. Defendant's Brief ("Def. Br.") at 22 (quoting Pl. Br. at 17), ECF No. 25. To the contrary, Optum explains:

> A pharmacy that meets the credentialing reguirements of both the retail and mail networks is welcome to participate in both. It does not have to choose one or the other. If the pharmacy meets the credentialing reguirements of the retail [31] network, it may dispense in the retail setting. If it meets the additional requirements of the mail network, it can dispense in both retail and mail settings.

Id.; see also Declaration of Kerri Tanner dated Nov. 24, 2015 ("Tanner Decl.") ¶ 8 ("Optum [] permits pharmacies in its mail pharmacy network to also dispense medications when they are face-to-face with their customers. Thus, a pharmacy in the mail pharmacy network is effectively a participant in both the retail and mail pharmacy networks."), ECF No. 23.

In response, Irmat points to the 2015 Pharmacy Manual, which provides that "Mail Order Pharmacies do not qualify for participation in the Administrator Retail Pharmacy networks as a Retail Pharmacy." Tanner Decl., Ex. D at 109. While it is difficult (albeit not impossible[7]) to reconcile that provision with Optum's representations to the Court, Optum's position in this litigation is unequivocal: "There is no prohibition against a properly credentialed pharmacy participating in both the mail-order and retail pharmacy networks." Def. Br. at 10 n.6. Even if it were the case that a pharmacy could not technically belong to both networks, Optum's substantive point that a pharmacy in its [32] mail-order network is not prevented from dispensing medication face-to-face in a retail capacity remains unrebutted. Irmat fails to identify any action that a pharmacy in Optum's retail pharmacy network can take that a pharmacy in Optum's mail-order pharmacy network cannot. Put differently, Irmat appears unlikely to be able to show that [*141] Optum is negatively tying membership in the retail network to membership in the mail-order network because a properly credentialed pharmacy can dispense medication both by mail and in a retail capacity (i.e., in-store). This is borne out by the fact that Irmat is desperately trying to gain admission to Optum's mail-order network and has not indicated anywhere in its papers that it believes that obtaining such admission will have any negative effect whatsoever on its retail operations. Because the Court finds that plaintiff has failed to show a likelihood of success on the merits on its tying claim on this ground, the Court need not reach defendant's arguments as to antitrust standing and market definition.

Irmat's claim that Optum and AccessHealth have restrained competition in violation of the Donnelly Act by entering into the 2015 Agreement appears similarly weak. Under the Sherman Act (which the parties look to), to make out such a claim "plaintiff must demonstrate: (1) a combination or some form of concerted action between at least two legally distinct economic entities that (2) unreasonably restrains trade." Geneva Pharms. Tech. Corp. v. Barr Labs, Inc., 386 F.3d 485, 506 (2d Cir. 2004). Irmat argues that the 2015 Agreement unreasonably restrains trade in the market for mail-order pharmacy services to Optum members by allowing Optum to terminate retail pharmacies for providing mail-order pharmacy services. Given that the 2015 Agreement was entered into on behalf of Irmat by its agent AccessHealth, Irmat is placing itself in the position of arguing that an agreement to which it is a party unreasonably restrains trade, i.e., Irmat is essentially accusing itself of violating the Donnelly Act. While the parties fail to brief this issue, the Court is skeptical that Irmat will be able [34] to prevail on such a claim given this posture. Nor has plaintiff demonstrated that it is likely to be able to show that the Agreement unreasonably restrains trade or "that the challenged action has had an actual adverse effect on competition as a whole in the relevant market," rather than merely an adverse effect on plaintiff's balance sheet. Capital Imaging Assocs. v. Mohawk Valley Med. Assocs., 996 F.2d 537, 543 (2d Cir. 1993).[8]

Irmat has thus failed to show a likelihood of success on the merits on any of its claims. However, under this Circuit's case law, if the balance of hardships tipped decidedly in plaintiff's favor, injunctive relief would be warranted if plaintiff could make the lesser showing of "sufficiently serious questions going to the merits to make them a fair ground for litigation." Citigroup Glob. Mkts., Inc., 598 F.3d at 35. Though the Court indicated in its December 15 bottom-line order that the balance of hardships tips in plaintiff's favor, on reflection it finds that [35] the balance of hardships do not tip decidedly in plaintiff's favor. With respect to this factor, Irmat argues that while it "will suffer irreparable harm without an injunction, Optum will suffer none." Pl. Reply Br. at 10. However, the "balance of hardships" requirement would be superfluous if it could be met simply by virtue of making the already-required showing of irreparable harm. See Buffalo Courier-Express , Inc. v. Buffalo Evening News, Inc., 601 F.2d 48, 58 (2d Cir. 1979) ("A 'balance of hardships tipping decidedly toward the party requesting the preliminary relief must mean real hardship from the denial of relief Pendente lite not merely the showing of difficulty of measurement [*142] which may suffice to constitute 'irreparable damage' where a plaintiff shows probable success."). While plaintiff faces a significant hardship in the form of potentially irreparable harm to its business upon termination, the requested injunction would impose some hardship on Optum insofar as it would force Optum to bear risks related to Irmat acting as a mail-order pharmacy without the accreditations required by Optum for the purported purpose of patient safety. Tanner Decl. ¶ 7; Transcript of Proceedings held on Dec. 11, 2015 at 15 ("Optum doesn't have any reassurance that Irmat is qualified [36] and is not going to do something that could potentially be a danger to patient care that Optum may ultimately be responsible for not doing proper credentialing."), ECF No. 37.[9]

Perhaps more significantly, to a large extent the hardship Irmat faces is one of its own making. Though Irmat was purportedly unaware of the 2015 Agreement prior to being notified by Optum that it was in breach of it, Irmat continued to breach the 2015 Agreement months after being advised that it would face termination if it did not cure its breach. Significantly, Optum did not simply advise Irmat that it was terminating it. Rather, Optum gave Irmat the opportunity to cure its breach and, on September 16, 2015, advised Irmat that it could apply to Optum's mail-order pharmacy network if it wanted to continue filling mail orders from Optum members. At that time, Irmat had a choice: (1) it could continue breaching the 2015 Agreement (to the extent it was bound by that agreement) while it obtained the required credentials and hope that Optum would change its mind in the course of negotiations or that it [37] would succeed in obtaining injunctive relief in litigation; or (2) it could cease filling mail-order prescriptions from Optum members while its application to Optum's mail-order pharmacy network remained pending (thereby obviating the need for this litigation), but otherwise continue to be a member of Optum's retail pharmacy network. While that choice may not have been an attractive one for Irmat -- indeed, the second option surely would have been disruptive to Irmat's mail-order business (though presumably not as disruptive as full-scale termination) -- it was a choice nonetheless. Irmat chose to continue breaching, and, under the circumstances, the Court does not see how the balance of hardships could be said to tip decidedly in plaintiff's favor. *Columbus Rose Ltd. v. New Millennium Press, 2002 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 9130, 2002 WL 1033560, at 10 (S.D.N.Y. May 20, 2002) (where party had "deliberately sailed in harm's way" and "the hardship of which it complains [was] significantly of its own making," hardship argument was not credited); *Warner Bros. Entm't v. Glob. Asylum, Inc., 2012 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 185695, 2012 WL 6951315, at 22 (CD. Cal. Dec. 10, 2012) (where "hardship" was one of defendant's "own making," such hardship "carrie[d] little weight with the Court" in the balance of hardships analysis). Even if the balance of [8] Irmat asserts in a footnote, without any explanation, that the 2015 Agreement constitutes a per se illegal "group boycott," but Irmat fails to explain who is boycotting what. Pl. Br. at 19 n.7. The word "boycott" does not even appears in its complaint. This argument is made far too summarily to warrant the Court's consideration.

[9] While Irmat dismisses these justifications as pretextual, this contention, at present, lacks evidentiary support.

hardships did tip decidedly in plaintiff's favor, however, the Court would still find that plaintiff had [38] not raised sufficiently serious questions going to the merits to warrant injunctive relief.[10]

[*143] In sum, for the foregoing reasons, the Court, in its December 15, 2015 Order, denied plaintiff's [39] motion for a temporary restraining order and preliminary injunction.

[10] A court assessing a motion for a preliminary injunction must "ensure that the 'public interest would not be disserved' by the issuance" of such an injunction. Salinger, 607 F.3d at 80. Here, plaintiff has failed to show that an injunction is warranted and, as such, the Court need not address the public interest. However, to the extent the issue has not been entirely obviated, the Court finds the public interest to be a neutral factor. On the one hand, termination will result in the disruption of medical services to many of Irmat's customers. On the other hand, at present, Irmat lacks the accreditations as a mail-order pharmacy that Optum contends it requires to ensure that "pharmacies in its mail pharmacy network have the appropriate controls and processes in place to safely and effectively dispense medications by mail." Tanner Decl. ¶ 7. The public has an interest in uninterrupted and safe medical care and, as such, the public interest would not clearly be served or disserved by the issuance of the requested injunction.

ORDER

Presently before the Court is Defendants Ferrellgas Partners, L.P.; Ferrellgas, L.P.; AmeriGas Partners, LP's (collectively "Defendants") Motion for Judgment on the Pleadings. (Doc. # 210). Plaintiffs Mario Ortiz, Steven Tseffos, Stephen Morrison, Troy Winters, Thomas Gane, Mark I. Stevens, Richard Paradowski, John Gilbert, Gary Snow, William S. Vincent, Jr., Nicholas Pulli, Gary Sage, Kevin Dougherty, Josh Bartholow, and Allan Disbrow (collectively "Plaintiffs") oppose. (Doc. # 222). Also before the Court is Defendants' Motion to Strike portions of Plaintiffs' First Amended Complaint. (Doc. # 204). Plaintiffs oppose. (Doc. # 221). Finally before the Court is Plaintiffs' Motion for Entry of Judgment. (Doc. # 201). Defendants oppose. (Doc. # 218). For the reasons stated below, Defendants' Motion for Judgment on the Pleadings is GRANTED in part and DENIED in part, Defendants' Motion to Strike is GRANTED, and Plaintiffs' Motion for Entry of Judgment is DENIED. [*4]

DISCUSSION

I. FACTS

Defendants are the leading distributors of pre-filled propane exchange tanks. (Plaintiffs' First Amended Complaint ("Plaintiffs' FAC") ¶ 1). Beginning in 2006, Defendants entered into co-packing agreements wherein each company agreed to refurbish and refill propane tanks for the other company. (Id. ¶ 40). Before 2008, the tanks were filled with seventeen pounds of propane. (Id. ¶ 4). However, propane costs spiked in 2008. (Id.). In the summer of 2008, Defendants reduced the fill level of the tanks from seventeen to fifteen pounds of propane per tank while maintaining the same price per tank. (Id. ¶¶ 4-6).

In 2009, a group of plaintiffs filed suit against Ferrellgas and AmeriGas alleging that they had acted in concert to reduce the amount of propane contained within the tanks and thus, artificially increase the price of the tanks[1]. (Case No. 09-02086-MD-W-GAF, Amended Complaint ¶¶ 1-4). The 2009 plaintiffs alleged that the actions of Ferrellgas and AmeriGas were in violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act and state antitrust and consumer protection laws. (Id.). On December 8, 2009, the plaintiffs moved for preliminary approval of settlement agreements. (Id., Doc. # 37). The settlement [*5] agreements were granted final approval on October 6, 2010. (Id., Doc. # 166).

On March 27, 2014, the Federal Trade Commission (the "FTC") issued a complaint against Defendants (the "FTC Action") alleging that Defendants had restrained price competition because of their 2008 decision to decrease the fill level of the propane tanks. (Plaintiffs' FAC ¶¶ 167-68). The FTC Action resulted in Consent Orders wherein Defendants agreed to cease and desist from any conspiracy between them to raise, fix, stabilize, or maintain prices of the tanks through any means. (See Docs. ## 211-1, 211-2, FTC Consent Orders, p. 4). Defendants also agreed to refrain from communicating competitively sensitive information to any competitor with some limited exceptions for propane refilling agreements. (Id.).

[1] This 2009 action will be referred to as In re Propane I.

Shortly thereafter, Plaintiffs filed the present suit. (See Docket Sheet). Plaintiffs allege that the 2008 reduction in fill level was due to improper collusion between Defendants who conspired to force sellers of propane to accept the fill reduction and agreed not to compete with one another. (Plaintiffs' FAC, ¶¶ 4-9). Plaintiffs allege that this was a violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act and state [*6] antitrust law. (See id.).

On July 2, 2015, this Court granted in part Defendants' Motion to Dismiss Plaintiffs' Complaint. (Doc. # 162). This Court determined that Plaintiffs' antitrust claims were barred by the four-year federal antitrust statute of limitations. (Id. at 22). However, this Court determined that Plaintiffs' injunctive relief claim, as a claim in equity, was not governed by the statute of limitations and was instead governed by the doctrine of laches. (Id. at 23). This Court concluded that Defendants failed to meet their burden under the doctrine of laches because they failed to establish the existence of prejudice. (Id. at 24). In October of 2015, Plaintiffs were given leave to amend their Complaint to add state law antitrust claims in three states: Maine, Vermont, and Wisconsin. (Doc. # 197, p. 12). This amendment was allowed because those states have a six-year statute of limitations for antitrust actions. (Id. at 7-8). Thus, the only causes of action remaining in Plaintiffs' First Amended Complaint are a claim under Section 1 of the Sherman Act for injunctive relief (Count I) and claims that Defendants' actions violated Maine, Vermont, and Wisconsin's antitrust laws (Count II).

II. LEGAL STANDARD

Under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12, "a party [*7] may move for judgment on the pleadings" after the pleadings are closed. Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(c). Judgment on the pleadings is only appropriate "'where no material issue of fact remains to be resolved and the movant is entitled to judgment as a matter of law.'" Poehl v. Countrywide Home Loans, Inc., 528 F.3d 1093, 1096 (8th Cir. 2008) (quoting Faibisch v. Univ. of Minn., 304 F.3d 797, 803 (8th Cir. 2002)). In deciding a motion for judgment on the pleadings, a court may consider materials that are necessarily embraced by the pleadings or are part of the public record that do not contradict the complaint. Porous Media Corp. v. Pall Corp., 186 F.3d 1077, 1079 (8th Cir. 1999). A court views "all facts pleaded by the nonmoving party as true and grant[s] all reasonable inferences in favor of that party." Poehl, 528 F.3d at 1096 (citation omitted). Generally, a Rule 12(c) motion for judgment on the pleadings is reviewed under the same standard as a Rule 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss. Ginsburg v. InBev NV/SA, 623 F.3d 1229, 1233 n.3 (8th Cir. 2010).

III. ANALYSIS

A. Count I

1. Standing

In Count I of Plaintiffs' First Amended Complaint, Plaintiffs seek injunctive relief for Defendants' alleged violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act. (Plaintiffs' FAC, Count I). Defendants first argue that Count I should be denied because Plaintiffs lack standing to bring this claim. (Doc. # 211, p. 5). The requirement of standing is "an essential and unchanging part of the case-or-controversy requirement of Article III." Lujan v. Defenders of Wildlife, 504 U.S. 555, 560, 112 S. Ct. 2130, 119 L. Ed. 2d 351 (1992). It contains three elements. Id. [*8] "First, the plaintiff must have suffered an injury in fact . . . . Second, there must be a causal connection between the injury and the conduct complained of . . . . Third, it must be likely, as opposed to merely speculative, that the injury will be redressed by a favorable decision." Id. at 560-61 (internal citations and quotation marks omitted). Defendants argue that Plaintiffs lack both the first and third elements of standing. (Doc. # 211, p. 5).

i. Element One — Injury in Fact

An injury in fact is "an invasion of a legally protected interest which is (a) concrete and particularized, and (b) actual or imminent, not conjectural or hypothetical." Lujan, 504 U.S. at 560 (internal citations and quotations omitted). Defendants allege that no injury in fact is present in this case because Plaintiffs have alleged no ongoing or future injury, only the 2008 decision to reduce the fill level of the tanks. (Doc. # 211, p. 6). Plaintiffs contend that the continued sale of the propane tanks filled to only fifteen pounds without a corresponding decrease in price constitutes an ongoing injury in fact. (Doc. # 222, p. 3). This Court has already determined that such sales of the tanks at a stable but allegedly supra-competitive price [*9] do not constitute an overt act for the purposes of the continuing violations tolling theory. (See Doc. # 162, p. 11). However, the issue of whether such a sale constitutes an injury in fact for the purposes of standing has yet to be decided. See Moseke v. Miller & Smith, Inc., 202 F. Supp. 2d 492, 494 (E.D. Va. 2002) (indicating such issues are separate questions and finding an injury in fact present despite the lack of an overt act for the purposes of the continuing violation theory).

"Past exposure to illegal conduct does not in itself show a present case or controversy regarding injunctive relief." O'Shea v. Littleton, 414 U.S. 488, 495, 94 S. Ct. 669, 38 L. Ed. 2d 674 (1974). Thus, Defendants' allegedly anti-competitive actions in 2008 are alone insufficient to establish a present injury in fact, entitling Plaintiffs to injunctive relief. However, such past exposure is sufficient if it is accompanied by "continuing, present adverse effects." Id. at 496. Paying a supra-competitive price as a result of past anti-competitive behavior is a continuing effect, sufficient to establish an injury in fact. See Campos v. Ticketmaster Corp., 140 F.3d 1166, 1172 (8th Cir. 1998) ("In this case, the pleadings establish anti-trust standing to seek injunctive relief. All of the plaintiffs claim to have purchased tickets from Ticketmaster and claim to have paid the monopolistic service fees. The payment of those fees [*10] establishes standing to pursue a claim for injunctive relief."); In re Suboxone (Buprenorphine Hydrochloride & Naloxone) Antitrust Litig., 64 F. Supp. 3d 665, 711 (E.D. Pa. 2014) ("continuing to pay artificially inflated prices" constitutes an ongoing injury).

Defendants argue that In re Nifedipine Antitrust Litigation, 335 F. Supp. 2d 6 (D.D.C. 2004), comes to a contrary conclusion. (Doc. # 211, p. 7). In In re Nifedipine, the court determined that "lingering monetary injury, without any ongoing threat of recurrent violations, is not sufficient to confer standing to seek an injunction." 335 F. Supp. at 19. However, in that case the allegedly inflated prices had already decreased, competition had arisen on the market, and the plaintiffs failed to even allege that the prices were currently inflated. Id. at 18-19. The court ultimately determined standing was not present "based on the absence of facts alleged in the [c]omplaints and the speculative nature of the plaintiffs' remaining arguments regarding present and future damages." Id. at 19. Thus, the issue was not whether sales at supra-competitive prices were injuries in fact, but whether a supra-competitive price had been sufficiently alleged.

Accordingly, the question becomes whether Plaintiffs sufficiently alleged the existence of a supra-competitive price. Defendants cite to In re New Motor Vehicles Canadian Exp. Antitrust Litig., 522 F.3d 6 (1st Cir. 2008) in support of their argument that Plaintiffs failed to sufficiently plead [*11] an injury in fact. (Doc. # 211, p. 8). In In re New Motor Vehicles, the plaintiffs alleged that between 2001 and 2003 the exchange rate between the United States and Canada created gray market opportunities to sell lower-priced Canadian cars in the United States. 522 F.3d at 9. The plaintiffs alleged that in response to these opportunities, the defendants, automobile manufacturers, engaged in anti-competitive behavior to prevent Canadian cars from entering the United States. Id. at 10. The plaintiffs sued for an injunction. See, generally id. The First Circuit determined that standing was lacking because plaintiffs failed to establish the existence of an injury in fact. Id. at 14. The court so decided because the circumstances that created these opportunities — namely the favorable exchange rate — no longer existed and it would be purely speculation to determine that it would one day return. Id. at 14-15. The court determined that it would also be speculative to determine whether a potential plaintiff would have bought a Canadian car, had favorable circumstances existed. Id. at 15. The First Circuit ultimately decided that standing was lacking because it "was contingent on several events which may or may not happen." Id. (quotation omitted).

This case [*12] is unlike both In re Nifedipine and In re New Motor Vehicles. Unlike in In re Nifedipine, Plaintiffs' First Amended Complaint makes no mention of a decrease in price or an increase in competition since Defendants' allegedly anti-competitive actions in 2008. (Plaintiffs' FAC). Additionally, Plaintiffs allege that the price per pound of propane has stayed inflated since 2008. (Id. at ¶¶ 100, 180). Unlike in In re New Motor Vehicles, Plaintiffs' injury is not contingent on several events which may or may not happen. Instead, Plaintiffs allege that they are injured with every sale of propane because it has remained at an inflated price. (Id.). Further, in motions for judgment on the pleadings, a court views "all facts pleaded by the nonmoving party as true and grant[s] all reasonable inferences in favor of that party." Poehl, 528 F.3d at 1096 (citation omitted). While a court need not "accept as true a legal conclusion couched as a factual allegation," Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 678, 129 S. Ct. 1937, 173 L. Ed. 2d 868 (2009) (citation omitted), the allegation that Defendants colluded to raise prices and the allegation that the prices have remained inflated are not legal conclusions but factual assertions. Accordingly, this Court appropriately accepts them as true and finds that Plaintiffs [*13] have alleged a sufficient injury in fact.

Defendants allege that even if the payment of a stable but allegedly supra-competitive price is an injury in fact in general, it is not an injury in fact in this case because of the FTC Consent Orders. (Doc. # 211, p. 8). A valid injury in fact for the purposes of Article III may be one that a plaintiff "has sustained or is immediately in danger of sustaining." City of Los Angeles v. Lyons, 461 U.S. 95, 102, 103 S. Ct. 1660, 75 L. Ed. 2d 675 (1983) (quotation omitted). An injunction may be sought to prevent a future injury which a plaintiff is immediately in danger of sustaining when "the threat of injury is real and immediate, and not conjectural or hypothetical." In re Nifedipine, 335 F. Supp. 2d at 16 (quotation marks and citation omitted). Some courts have determined that the presence of an FTC consent order that mirrors the requested injunction, without an established need for cumulative relief, defeats a claim of future injury. See id at 16-19; *In re Ductile Iron Pipe Fittings (DIPF) Indirect Purchaser Antitrust Litig., No. 12-169, 2013 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 142466, 2013 WL 5503308, at 7 (D.N.J. Oct. 2, 2013); *In re Plavix Indirect Purchaser Antitrust Litig., No. 1:06-CV-226, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 8940, 2011 WL 335034, at 3-4 (S.D. Ohio Jan. 31, 2011). However, in this case Plaintiffs' injury in fact is not based on a claimed future injury. Instead, Plaintiffs have established the existence of a present injury in fact — the price per pound of propane. Thus, any discussion regarding whether the FTC Consent Orders [*14] prevent a claim of future injury is inapposite.

ii. Element Three — Redressability

Redressability requires that it "be likely, as opposed to merely speculative, that the injury will be redressed by a favorable decision." Lujan, 504 U.S. at 561 (internal quotation marks and citation omitted). Defendants argue that redressability is lacking in this case because the challenged conduct is already precluded by the FTC Consent Orders. "[T]he mere existence of [a consent order] does not preclude private injunctive relief. See Sam Fox Publishing Co. v. United States, 366 U.S. 683, 689, 81 S. Ct. 1309, 6 L. Ed. 2d 604 (1961). Indeed, in antitrust cases, private and governmental claims for injunctive relief were designed to be cumulative, not mutually exclusive." In re Nifedipine, 335 F. Supp. 2d at 17 (citations omitted); Sam Fox Publishing Co., 366 U.S. at 689. "However, the party seeking the injunction nonetheless has the burden of establishing that such cumulative relief is needed." Id. "[A] number of courts have found no risk of irreparable harm when a plaintiff seeks an injunction that mirrors a consent decree absent some showing that the consent decree is insufficient." *In re Ductile Iron Pipe Fittings, 2013 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 142466, 2013 WL 5503308, at 7. Thus the relevant question is whether the requested injunctive relief mirrors the FTC Consent Orders.

Plaintiffs request injunctive relief requiring Defendants to: (1) refrain from allocating market share; (2) void [*15] any existing co-packing agreements, refrain from making new co-packing agreements, and refrain from sharing pricing information or information regarding tank fill levels; and (3) increase the fill levels of the tanks to seventeen pounds of propane. (Plaintiffs' FAC ¶ 187). Defendants allege these requests are adequately covered by the FTC Consent Orders' prohibition from raising, fixing, stabilizing, or maintaining prices of the tanks through any means.

Plaintiffs first allege that a prohibition on market share allocation is necessary because market share allocation agreements are per se improper and can be independent from price fixing agreements. (Doc. # 222, pp. 9-10). Plaintiffs are correct that market allocation agreements are per se improper. United States v. Topco Associates, Inc., 405 U.S. 596, 608, 92 S. Ct. 1126, 31 L. Ed. 2d 515 (1972). However, in this case, Plaintiffs do not allege the existence of a market share allocation agreement divorced from any allegations of price fixing. Instead, Plaintiffs' claim that Defendants allocated markets in furtherance of their price fixing agreement. (Plaintiffs' FAC ¶¶ 94-95). To meet the requirements of standing, it is not enough that some potential injury may be redressed by a favorable decision. Instead, the claimed injury in [*16] fact in the case at hand must be redressable by the requested relief. See Vt. Agency of Natural Res. v. U.S. ex rel. Stevens, 529 U.S. 765, 771 (2000). In this case, market allocation was allegedly being used as a means of raising and fixing prices. Thus, the FTC Consent Orders' prohibitions from raising, fixing, stabilizing, or maintaining prices of the tanks through any means are sufficient to cover Plaintiffs' first requested injunction.

In Plaintiffs' second requested injunction, Plaintiffs seek an injunction preventing any co-packing agreements between Defendants. (Plaintiffs' FAC, ¶ 187). Plaintiffs contend such agreements give Defendants "ample opportunities for conspiratorial communications" as well as facilitate the exchange of pricing information. (Id., ¶¶ 40, 42). However, the FTC Consent Orders prohibit the communication of competitively sensitive information. (See Docs. ## 211-1, 211-2, FTC Consent Orders, p. 4). Plaintiffs are correct that Defendants are allowed to exchange competitively sensitive information as necessary to serve their co-packing agreements; however, they are prohibited from communicating any information regarding pricing, pricing strategies, fill level changes, fill level strategies, revenues, or business and strategic plans. [*17] (Id.). Thus, Plaintiffs' stated concern, the exchange of pricing information, is already expressly prohibited by the FTC Consent Orders.

Additionally, as explained above, Plaintiffs' claimed injury in fact is the allegedly supra-competitive prices. Thus, Plaintiffs allege that the co-packing agreements were used as a means of raising and fixing prices. In addition to the direct prohibition of communication of competitively sensitive information, Defendants are also prohibited from raising, fixing, stabilizing, or maintaining prices of the tanks through any means. (Id.). Thus, the FTC Consent Orders are sufficient to cover Plaintiffs' second requested injunction.

As to their third requested injunction, Plaintiffs correctly argue that the FTC Consent Orders do not force Defendants to return to pre-conspiracy fill levels. (Doc. # 222, p. 12). However, the price per pound of propane is dependent on two variables: the price of the tank and the amount of propane the tank contains. Plaintiffs and Defendants both agree that mandating an increase in the amount of propane in the tanks without a mandate regarding price would not decrease the price per pound of propane tanks. (Doc. # 227, p. 10; [*18] Doc. # 222, p. 12). This is problematic because Plaintiffs' injury in fact is the payment of a supra-competitive price per pound of propane. Thus, increasing the amount of propane in the tanks does not create a "substantial likelihood that the requested relief will remedy the alleged injury in fact." Vt. Agency of Natural Res., 529 U.S. at 771 (internal quotation marks omitted). Accordingly, Plaintiffs' third requested injunction does not meet the requirement of redressability.

Further, this Court has concerns about the wisdom of a court setting product fill levels for private companies. As the Supreme Court has long recognized, "[t]he establishment of a rate is the making of a rule for the future, and therefore is an act legislative, not judicial." Prentis v. Atl. Coast Line Co., 211 U.S. 210, 226, 29 S. Ct. 67, 53 L. Ed. 150 (1908). Such an act is better handled by the legislature because the legislature "looks to the future and changes existing conditions by making [ ] new rule[s], to be applied thereafter to all or some part of those subject to its power" while courts "investigate[ ], declare[ ], and enforce[ ] liabilities as they stand on present or past facts and under laws supposed already to exist." Id. While the requested injunction would not establish a rate, the rationale for the Supreme Court's prohibition [*19] on setting a rate is equally applicable here. It is a court's job to review and determine whether conduct conforms to the law. Setting a required fill level for the tanks goes beyond this goal and makes a new rule which Defendants must follow in the future. Doing so requires this Court to anticipate future market conditions and would prevent Defendants from making business decisions in response to ever changing markets. Given that free enterprise is a fundamental national value, see F.T.C. v. Phoebe Putney Health Sys., Inc., 568 U.S. 216, 225, 133 S. Ct. 1003, 1010 (2013), an injunction that would prevent a business from making legal, non-prohibited decisions, such as how much propane to put in its tanks, should be disfavored. This is especially true where, as here, such an injunction fails to remedy the alleged harm. Thus, all three of Plaintiffs' requested injunctions fail for lack of redressability, and Plaintiffs lack standing to proceed under Count I.

2. Laches

Even if Plaintiffs had standing to proceed, the doctrine of laches would act as an independent bar to Count I. "The doctrine of laches is an equitable defense . . . . For the application of the doctrine of laches to bar a lawsuit, the plaintiff must be guilty of unreasonable and inexcusable delay that has resulted [*20] in prejudice to the defendant." Goodman v. McDonnell Douglas Corp., 606 F.2d 800, 804 (8th Cir. 1979). "Laches is considered an affirmative defense, and generally the burden of persuasion on an affirmative defense rests with the defendant." Id. at 806 (internal citation omitted). Previously, the Court ruled Defendants had failed to meet their burden to establish the existence of laches as an affirmative defense. (Doc. # 162, p. 24).

In determining whether to bar an action based on the doctrine of laches, a court should consider whether an analogous statute of limitations has run, "the length of the delay, the reasons therefor, how the delay affected the defendant, and the overall fairness of permitting the assertion of the claim." Goodman, 606 F.2d at 804, 806. As this Court previously determined, the analogous statute of limitations had run, which weighs in favor of applying the doctrine. (Doc. # 162, p. 23). While, because of tolling theories, Plaintiffs only missed the limitations period by three months (see Doc. # 162), in total Plaintiffs delayed over six years between the challenged conduct and the filing of the present suit. (See Plaintiffs' FAC). This delay is particularly troubling considering the same attorneys involved in this case timely filed In re Propane I, which challenged [*21] the same conduct, in 2009. Further, Plaintiffs admit that they have provided no reason for their delay. (Doc. # 222, p. 14 n. 17). Thus, Plaintiffs' delay also weighs in favor of applying the doctrine.

Previously, despite these circumstances, this Court determined that Defendants failed to meet their burden because they failed to sufficiently allege that they had been prejudiced as a result of Plaintiffs' delay. (See Doc. # 162). "Not all prejudice to a defendant will be recognized as supporting a defense of laches." Goodman, 606 F.2d at 808 n.17. "There are two kinds of prejudice which might support a defense of laches: (1) the delay has resulted in the loss of the evidence . . .; or (2) the defendant has changed his position in a way that would not have occurred if the plaintiff had not delayed." Id. (quoting Tobacco Workers Int'l Union Local 317 v. Lorillard Corp., 448 F.2d 949, 958 (4th Cir. 1971)). Defendants now allege that evidence has been lost because key employees, such as former presidents and vice-presidents, are no longer employed by the companies. (Doc. # 211, p. 15). They further allege that twenty-five employees identified by Plaintiffs as having information relevant to the case are now gone from the company. (Id.). Such specifically identified prejudice is the type required to support [*22] application of laches.

Additionally, Defendants now argue that they changed their position in a way they would not have had Plaintiffs not delayed in seeking an injunction. (Id.). Prejudice for laches purposes exists when the challenged action could have been confronted sooner, is now completely implemented, and would be expensive to change. See Citizens & Landowners Against the Miles City/New Underwood Powerline v. Sec'y, U.S. Dep't of Energy, 683 F.2d 1171, 1177 (8th Cir. 1982). In this case, Plaintiffs knew of the decrease in fill level and co-packing agreements much earlier than they filed the present suit. Plaintiffs could have filed the present claim for an injunction in conjunction with In re Propane I, but chose not to do so. Currently, the decrease in fill level and co-packing agreements are fully implemented and would be costly to change. (See Doc. # 211). Thus, Defendants have sufficiently established the existence of prejudice, and the doctrine of laches is also an independent bar to Count I.[2]

B. Count II

---

[2] Plaintiffs' main argument against application of the doctrine of laches is that laches should not be applied at this stage of the proceedings. (Doc. # 222, p. 14). However, the doctrine of laches has often been applied at the pleadings stage. See Goodman, 606 F.2d at 809; Wolfchild v. Redwood Cty., 91 F. Supp. 3d 1093, 1105 (D. Minn. 2015); Little Rock Cardiology Clinic, P.A. v. Baptist Health, 573 F. Supp. 2d 1125, 1152 (E.D. Ark. 2008) aff'd sub nom. Little Rock Cardiology Clinic PA v. Baptist Health, 591 F.3d 591 (8th Cir. 2009).

1. Statute of Limitations

In Count II of their First Amended Complaint, Plaintiffs argue that Defendants' actions violated the antitrust laws of three states: Maine, Vermont, and Wisconsin. (Plaintiffs' FAC, Count II). Plaintiffs were previously given leave to add antitrust claims under the [*23] laws of these states because they have a six-year statute of limitations period for antitrust violations. (Doc. # 197, pp. 6-7). The challenged conduct occurred by August 1, 2008 (See Plaintiffs' FAC ¶ 70), thus, under a six-year statute of limitations period, the claim must have been filed by August 1, 2014. The first indirect purchaser complaint was filed on May 30, 2014 by Plaintiffs Mario Ortiz, Stephen Morrison, and Steven Tseffos (collectively the "Ortiz Plaintiffs").[3] Now that the First Amended Complaint has been filed, Defendants raise additional timeliness challenges to Count II.

i. Standing

Defendants first allege that the filing of the Ortiz Complaint was insufficient for statute of limitations purposes because none of the Ortiz Plaintiffs had standing to bring claims under the laws of Maine, Vermont, or Wisconsin. (Doc. # 211, p. 18). Thus, Defendants contend that the statute of limitations period was not tolled until Plaintiffs filed their First Amended Complaint, which included residents of Maine, Vermont, and Wisconsin. (Id.). The First Amended Complaint was not filed until October 16, 2015, more than six years after the conduct occurred. Thus, if Defendants are correct, [*24] Count II is not timely absent a tolling theory.

"[N]amed plaintiffs lack standing to assert claims under the laws of the states in which they do not reside or in which they suffered no injury." In re Packaged Ice Antitrust Litig., 779 F. Supp. 2d 642, 657 (E.D. Mich. 2011); see also Anthony v. Stodola, 329 F. App'x 693, 694 (8th Cir. 2009); *McGuire v. BMW of N. Am., LLC, No. CIV.A. 13-7356 JLL, 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 77009, 2014 WL 2566132, at 6 (D.N.J. June 6, 2014); *In re Refrigerant Compressors Antitrust Litig., No. 2:09-MD-02042, 2012 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 98827, 2012 WL 2917365, at 7 (E.D. Mich. July 17, 2012); In re Wellbutrin XL Antitrust Litig., 260 F.R.D. 143, 155 (E.D. Pa. 2009). Neither the Ortiz Plaintiffs nor any of the plaintiffs named in the Consolidated Class Action Complaint were residents of or made purchases in Maine, Vermont, or Wisconsin.

Plaintiffs argue that despite this fact, Maine, Vermont, and Wisconsin's antitrust statutes do not contain an express limitation as to residency. Plaintiffs are correct that the states' statutes contain no such express limitations. See Maine Rev. Stat. Ann. 10 §§ 1101 et seq.; Vt. Stat. Ann. 9 §§ 2451 et seq.; Wis. Stat. Ann. §§ 133.01 et seq. However, none of these states expressly permit antitrust actions based on commerce in other states. Id. Where the statutes fail to authorize "antitrust actions based on commerce in other states" and the named plaintiffs suffered no injury nor resided in the states, antitrust standing is lacking. In re Terazosin Hydrochloride Antitrust Litig., 160 F. Supp. 2d 1365, 1371 (S.D. Fla. 2001). Specifically, In re Terazosin Hydrochloride found that Maine's antitrust [*25] laws did not provide a cause of action for nonresidents who were not injured within the state. Id. In re Packaged Ice found the same for the antitrust laws in Maine, Vermont, and Wisconsin. 779 F. Supp. 2d at 657. Thus, the Ortiz Plaintiffs lacked standing to assert antitrust violations in Maine, Vermont, or Wisconsin.

ii. American Pipe

Defendants argue that this lack of standing means that the statute of limitations was not tolled until the First Amended Complaint was filed on October 16, 2015, which was past the deadline. Even if the filing of the Ortiz Complaint failed to toll the statute of limitations, Count II is still timely under American Pipe. The Supreme Court in American Pipe held that "the commencement of a class action suspends the applicable statute of limitations as to all asserted members of the class who would have been parties had the suit been permitted to continue as a class action." 414 U.S. at 504.

[3] This action will be known as the Ortiz Complaint

In its previous Order, this Court extensively discussed the availability of American Pipe tolling as a result of In re Propane I. (See Doc. # 162). This Court concluded that In re Propane I triggered American Pipe tolling until December 8, 2009. (Id.). Thus, Plaintiffs had six years from that date to file their present complaint. Even [*26] assuming the filing of the Ortiz Complaint was insufficient, Plaintiffs filed their First Amended Complaint on October 16, 2015, less than six years after the tolling from In re Propane I concluded.

Defendants only argument against application of American Pipe tolling as a result of In re Propane I is that doing so would be prudentially unwise. (Doc. # 226, p. 3, 22). As the Supreme Court has warned, it is important to make certain that American Pipe tolling is not abused. Crown, Cork & Seal Co. v. Parker, 462 U.S. 345, 355, 103 S. Ct. 2392, 76 L. Ed. 2d 628 (1983) (Powell, J., concurring). While this Court agrees that American Pipe is an expansive doctrine with high potential for abuse, the law on this issue, as discussed previously, is clear. (See Doc. # 162). As the law stands today, In re Propane I tolled the statute of limitations and makes Count II timely filed.

2. Standing

Defendants also argue that Count II is improper because Plaintiffs lack standing to bring this claim. (Doc. # 211, p. 24). Specifically, Defendants argue that Plaintiffs lack both an injury in fact and a causal connection between the alleged harm and the challenged conduct. (Id.). As explained above, sales at supra-competitive prices are injuries in fact, and such sales were sufficiently alleged in the [*27] First Amended Complaint. Accordingly, Plaintiffs for Count II meet the first element of standing.

The second element of standing, a causal connection between the injury and the conduct complained of requires the injury to be "'fairly . . . trace[able] to the challenged action of the defendant, and not . . . th[e] result [of] the independent action of some third party not before the court.'" Lujan, 504 U.S. at 560 (alterations in original) (quoting Simon v. E. Ky. Welfare Rights Org., 426 U.S. 26, 41-42, 96 S. Ct. 1917, 48 L. Ed. 2d 450 (1976)). "At the pleading stage, general factual allegations . . . may suffice, for on a motion to dismiss we 'presum[e] that general allegations embrace those specific facts that are necessary to support the claim.'" Wieland v. U.S. Dep't of Health & Human Servs., 793 F.3d 949, 954 (8th Cir. 2015) (alteration in original) (quoting Lujan, 504 U.S. at 561). Plaintiffs pled that the supra-competitive prices were the result of Defendants' 2008 collective decision to reduce fill levels. (Plaintiffs' FAC ¶¶ 4-10).

Defendants argue these allegations were insufficient to establish a causal connection because the alleged conduct occurred in 2008, years before any allegations of injury from these Plaintiffs. (Doc. # 211, p. 24). However, although a relevant factor, "passage of time alone does not automatically negate a causal connection." Karelitz v. Damson Oil Corp., 820 F.2d 529, 532 (1st Cir. 1987). This is especially true absent supporting [*28] facts. See id. Taking the pleadings as true, there are no facts that would indicate the injury is the result of some other party or factor as opposed to the actions of Defendants. Accordingly, at this juncture, a causal connection is present and Plaintiffs possess the necessary standing to proceed.

3. Sufficiency of the Pleadings

Defendants next argue that Count II is insufficiently pled because it does not allege a plausible agreement to raise prices. (Doc. # 211, p. 25). To state an antitrust claim, "an allegation of parallel conduct and a bare assertion of conspiracy will not suffice." Bell Atl. Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 556, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007). However, parallel conduct gets a complaint "close to stating a claim." Id. at 557. Thus, if Plaintiffs' First Amended Complaint merely asserted that Defendants all lowered the fill level in the propane tanks and then concluded that such action was the result of a conspiracy, the First Amended Complaint would be insufficient. However, that is not the case here. Plaintiffs do allege parallel action, but their First Amended Complaint does not stop there. Instead, the First Amended Complaint alleges facts that support a plausible agreement between the parties. (Plaintiffs' FAC ¶¶ 51-93). Thus, Count II sufficiently [*29] states a claim.[4]

Defendants also allege that Plaintiffs failed to sufficiently plead their claim of market allocation. (Doc. # 211, p. 25). A plaintiff must plead facts sufficient to state a claim "that is plausible on its face" and would entitle the party to the relief requested. Twombly, 550 U.S. at 570. Legal conclusions will not suffice. See Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 678, 129 S. Ct. 1937, 173 L. Ed. 2d 868 (2009). Plaintiffs point to paragraphs 94-97 of their First Amended Complaint as a sufficient statement of their claim. (Doc. # 222, p. 30). Paragraph 94 states a legal conclusion that Defendants agreed to allocate markets, and thus is unhelpful. Accordingly, only three paragraphs of Plaintiffs' thirty-four page First Amended Complaint speak to market allocation.

While the pleadings on this claim may be lackluster, the Court does not believe that they are legally insufficient at this juncture. Plaintiffs allege how the market was allocated and how the allocation was enforced and monitored. (Plaintiffs' FAC ¶¶ 95-97). Defendants fail to provide any specific law indicating these facts are insufficient or that more facts must be alleged in a market allocation claim. (See Doc. # 211). Accordingly, Defendants' argument fails.

C. Defendants' Motion to Strike

In their [*30] Motion to Amend, Plaintiffs attached a proposed first amended complaint that added what is now Count II and included Plaintiffs Mario Ortiz, Stephen Morrison, Steven Tseffos, Troy Winters, Thomas Gane, Gary Snow, Nicholas Pulli, Josh Bartholow, and Allan Disbrow (collectively the "Originally Included Plaintiffs"). (Doc. # 173-1). Their Motion was granted. (Doc. # 197). When Plaintiffs filed their First Amended Complaint, six additional plaintiffs were added that had not been mentioned previously: Mark I. Stevens, Richard Paradowski, John Gilbert, William S. Vincent, Jr., Gary Sage, and Kevin Dougherty (collectively the "Six New Plaintiffs"). (Plaintiffs' FAC).

The addition of the Six New Plaintiffs is notable because of In re Propane I. As this Court extensively discussed in its Dismissal Order, the settlement agreements from In re Propane I contained release provisions which bind all individuals who purchased a tank from AmeriGas before November 30, 2009 and from Ferrellgas before October 13, 2011. (Doc. # 162, p. 5). The Originally Included Plaintiffs did not contain an allegation of when their first propane purchase was; however, the Six New Plaintiffs all allege they first purchased [*31] propane after 2011. (Compare Doc. # 173-1 with Plaintiffs' FAC ¶¶ 104-131). This indicates the Originally Included Plaintiffs may have been included in the release provision of In re Propane I, while the Six New Plaintiffs were not.[5] Defendants ask this Court to strike the Six New Plaintiffs from Plaintiffs' First Amended Complaint. (Doc. # 205, p. 1).

Under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(f), a court may strike a matter from a pleading that is redundant, immaterial, impertinent, or scandalous. District courts enjoy great discretion when considering a motion to strike. Stanbury Law Firm, P.A. v. Internal Revenue Serv., 221 F.3d 1059, 1063 (8th Cir. 2000). "'Filing an amendment to a complaint without seeking leave of court or written consent of the parties is a nullity.'" Morgan Distrib. Co. v. Unidynamic Corp., 868 F.2d 992, 995 (8th Cir. 1989) (quoting Friedman v. Village of Skokie, 763 F.2d 236, 239 (7th Cir. 1985)); see also Fed. Beef Processors, Inc. v. CBS Inc., 858 F. Supp. 125, 126 (D.S.D. 1994) ("a party must seek leave of the court in order to amend"). When a complaint is amended without first seeking leave from the court, it is appropriate to strike that amendment because "to hold otherwise would be to essentially ignore Fed. R. Civ. P. 15(a) and the requirement that a plaintiff seek leave before amending its complaint." U.F.C.W. Local 56

[4] Defendants also argue that Plaintiffs' First Amended Complaint is insufficient because it fails to allege facts that tend to exclude the existence of independent action. (Doc. # 211, p. 25). However, this is a requirement at the summary judgment, not the motion to dismiss stage. See Twombly, 550 U.S. 544 at 554, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929; see also Erie Cty., Ohio v. Morton Salt, Inc., 702 F.3d 860, 869 (6th Cir. 2012).

[5] As discussed in the Order of Dismissal, at this stage, this Court must accept the factual allegations as true and may not consider outside evidence. (Doc. # 162, p. 5). Thus, at this juncture, the Court is not capable of deciding whether any Plaintiffs were included in the release provisions of In re Propane I.

Health & Welfare Fund v. J.D.'s Mkt., 240 F.R.D. 149, 154 (D.N.J. 2007); see also Strid v. Square D Co., Inc., No. 05-4371-CV-C-NKL, 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 27872, 2006 WL 1194810, at *1 (W.D. Mo. Apr. 28, 2006).

In this case, Plaintiffs failed to include the Six New Plaintiffs into their proposed first amended complaint. (See Doc. [*32] # 173-1). Because they were not included in Plaintiffs' request to amend, this Court did not grant leave for Plaintiffs to add those parties. Accordingly, the inclusion of those parties was improper and it is appropriate to strike them from the First Amended Complaint.

D. Plaintiffs' Motion for Entry of Judgment

Plaintiffs move for entry of judgment pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 54(b). Under Rule 54(b), "[w]hen an action presents more than one claim for relief . . ., the court may direct entry of a final judgment as to one or more . . . claims . . . only if the court expressly determines that there is no just reason for delay." "[A]ppeals under Rule 54(b) are generally disfavored." Clark v. Baka, 593 F.3d 712, 714 (8th Cir. 2010) (quotation omitted). "[I]t is only the special case that warrants an immediate appeal from a partial resolution of the lawsuit." Interstate Power Co. v. Kansas City Power & Light Co., 992 F.2d 804, 807 (8th Cir. 1993) (quotation omitted). The Eighth Circuit stated it will not assume jurisdiction under Rule 54(b) "unless there is some danger of hardship or injustice which an immediate appeal would alleviate." Taco John's of Huron, Inc. v. Bix Produce Co., LLC, 569 F.3d 401, 402 (8th Cir. 2009).

In its July 2, 2015 Order, this Court granted Defendants' Motion to Dismiss all of the Direct Purchaser Plaintiffs' claims as well as all of Plaintiffs' claims, except for its injunctive relief claim, on the basis of the statute of limitations. [*33] (See Doc. # 162). Following that Order, this Court, pursuant to the Supreme Court's opinion in Gelboim v. Bank of Am. Corp., U.S. , 135 S. Ct. 897, 190 L. Ed. 2d 789 (2015), entered final judgment against the Direct Purchaser Plaintiffs. (Doc. # 165). The Direct Purchaser Plaintiffs subsequently appealed the Order of Dismissal to the Eighth Circuit; that appeal is currently pending. (Doc. # 167). Plaintiffs argue final judgment should be entered on their dismissed claims so that they may appeal the Dismissal Order along with the Direct Purchaser Plaintiffs. (Doc. # 202). Plaintiffs also seek a final judgment on behalf of the claims they sought to add in their Motion to Amend, but were denied. (Id.).

For a Rule 54(b) Motion to be granted, there must be both a final judgment and no just reason for delay of appeal. Curtiss-Wright Corp. v. Gen. Elec. Co., 446 U.S. 1, 7-8, 100 S. Ct. 1460, 64 L. Ed. 2d 1 (1980). In this case, just reason to delay exists. Avoidance of piecemeal litigation and preservation of judicial economy are just reasons for delay. See Clark, 593 F.3d at 715. Plaintiffs argue that entering final judgment preserves judicial economy because it will allow the Eighth Circuit to consider the statute of limitations issues along with the Direct Purchaser Plaintiffs. However, the Direct Purchaser Plaintiffs appealed five and a half months ago. (Doc. # 167). Much of the briefing [*34] has already been completed. Thus, even if the present Motion was granted, Plaintiffs' appeal would be on a different timeline with separate briefing from the Direct Purchaser Plaintiffs. Granting the present Motion could thus result in the Eighth Circuit hearing this case three times if the appeal were not consolidated with the Direct Purchaser Plaintiffs' appeal, and if another appeal is made once the remaining issues in this case are resolved, which this Court believes is likely.

Accordingly, the question is whether judicial economy is best served by the Eighth Circuit hearing all of the issues surrounding Plaintiffs' claims together or by potentially hearing some of the statute of limitations issues together, and then separately hearing any remaining issues on Plaintiffs' claims. While the Order of Dismissal dismissed both Plaintiffs' and Direct Purchaser Plaintiffs' claims on statutes of limitations grounds, different analysis applied to each group of plaintiffs. (See Doc. # 162). Further, the facts surrounding each group of plaintiffs are at least partially individualized. Additionally, even in this Order, new statute of limitations issues were raised regarding Plaintiffs' claims, [*35] thus precluding consideration of all statute of limitations issues at one time. Thus, this Court believes that it is preferable to avoid piecemeal litigation of Plaintiffs' claims and instead hear any challenges Plaintiffs may have together. Further, Plaintiffs are in no danger of hardship or injustice. Plaintiffs will have their opportunity to appeal their claims' dismissal. Accordingly, entry of judgment is inappropriate in this case.

Plaintiffs also move for certification of an interlocutory appeal. (Doc. # 202, p. 6). An interlocutory appeal should be certified when a district court determines that an order "involves a controlling question of law as to which there is substantial ground for difference of opinion and that an immediate appeal from the order may materially advance the ultimate termination of the litigation." 28 U.S.C. § 1292(b). Such motions "must be granted sparingly, and the movant bears the heavy burden of demonstrating that the case is an exceptional one in which immediate appeal is warranted." White v. Nix, 43 F.3d 374, 376 (8th Cir. 1994). Plaintiffs seek an interlocutory appeal on both this Court's Dismissal Order and its denial of their Motion to Amend. (Doc. # 202, p. 6).

As an initial matter, Plaintiffs did not identify [*36] a controlling question of law until they filed their reply brief. (See Docs. ## 202, 225). In their initial brief, Plaintiffs simply allege that an interlocutory appeal should be granted based on the statute of limitations issues in the Court's previous Orders. (Doc. # 202, pp. 6-7). Failure to state a controlling question of law is grounds for denial of the Motion. See *Day v. Minnesota, No. 05-2675 MJD/RLE, 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 67093, 2006 WL 2670142, at 1 (D. Minn. Sept. 18, 2006).

Additionally, this Court does not agree that there are substantial grounds for a difference of opinion as to its decision. Plaintiffs simply repeat their previously made and rejected arguments. The fact that Plaintiffs disagree with this Court's analysis and application of the case law does not create substantial grounds for a difference of opinion. See *Anderson v. Gen. Motors Corp., No. CIV. A. 96-2090-GTV, 1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 11843, 1997 WL 457712, at 2 (D. Kan. July 25, 1997). All of the in-circuit case law discussed by Plaintiffs has been extensively considered and discussed previously. (See Docs. ## 162, 197). Any new out-of-circuit case law is irrelevant in light of the Eighth Circuit's decisions on this issue. See In re Miedzianowski, 735 F.3d 383, 384 (6th Cir. 2013). Accordingly, an interlocutory appeal is not warranted in this case.

CONCLUSION

Defendants moved for Judgment on the Pleadings. As to Count I, Defendants [*37] argued that Plaintiffs lacked standing. While Plaintiffs suffered an injury in fact each time they bought propane exchange tanks at an allegedly elevated price, Plaintiffs' injury in fact is not redressable by the requested relief because it duplicates the FTC's Consent Orders. Additionally, further briefing on the issue shows that Count I is barred by the doctrine of laches. Defendants also argued that Count II was barred by the statute of limitations; however, Count II is timely pursuant to American Pipe tolling. Further, Plaintiffs, under Count II, possess the requisite standing and sufficiently pled their claims. Accordingly, for these reasons and the reasons stated above, Defendants' Motion for Judgment on the Pleadings is GRANTED as to Count I and DENIED as to Count II.

Defendants also moved to strike the six additional plaintiffs that Plaintiffs included in their First Amended Complaint but did not include in their Motion to Amend. Parties must seek and receive leave of the Court before pleadings are amended. Plaintiffs did not seek leave to add the six additional plaintiffs, and thus, they were improperly included in Plaintiffs' First Amended Complaint. Accordingly, for these [*38] reasons and the reasons stated above, Defendants' Motion to Strike is GRANTED.

Plaintiffs moved for an entry of judgment. Because just reason exists to delay an appeal on the requested issues, Plaintiffs' Motion is DENIED. Plaintiffs also moved for certification of an interlocutory appeal. Because there are not substantial grounds for a difference of opinion, Plaintiffs' Motion for Interlocutory Appeal is also DENIED.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

Opinion

[*28] MEMORANDUM & ORDER

WILLIAM H. PAULEY III, District Judge:

Defendants News Corporation, News America Inc., News America Marketing FSI L.L.C., and News America Marketing In-Store Services L.L.C. (collectively, "News Corp.") move for summary judgment dismissing this antitrust action. News Corp. also moves in limine to exclude the testimony of Dr. Jeffrey MacKie-Mason and Dr. Paul Farris. For the [8] following reasons, News Corp.'s motions are denied.

BACKGROUND

On June 18, 2015, this Court certified a class of non-retailer consumer packaged goods firms ("CPGs") residing in the United States that have directly purchased in-store promotions from News Corp. at any time on or after April 5, 2008. See Dial Corp., et al. v. News Corp, et al., 13 Civ. 6802, 314 F.R.D. 108, 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 79686, 2015 WL 4104624 (S.D.N.Y. June 18, 2015). The Dial Corporation, Henkel Consumer Goods Inc., H.J. Heinz Company, Foster Poultry Farms, Smithfield Foods, Inc., HP Hood LLC, and BEF Foods, Inc. (collectively, "Plaintiffs") represent a class of CPGs who manufacture food and other consumer products. Defendant News Corp. sells in-store promotions ("ISP") like at-shelf signage, coupon distribution, and sampling products. The nuances of the business are described at length in this Court's prior memorandum and order granting class certification and are not repeated here. See Dial Corp., et al., 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 79686, 2015 WL 4104624.

At various times over the last 15 years, News Corp. has competed with Floorgraphics, Insignia, and Valassis in the third-party ISP market. By 2009, News Coip. had a 90.5% share of the revenue generated in that market. In 2014, News Corp.'s sole remaining competitor, Valassis, abandoned its third-party ISP business. [9]

Plaintiffs contend that News Corp. engages in exclusive dealing, and acquired and maintained a monopoly over the third-party ISP market in violation of Sections One and Two of the Sherman Act, Section Three of the Clayton Act, the New York Donnelly Act, and the Michigan Antitrust Reform Act.

I. NEWS CORP'S MOTION FOR SUMMARY JUDGMENT

Summary judgment is warranted when a moving party shows that "there is no genuine dispute as to any material fact" and that the party "is entitled to judgment as a matter of law." Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(a); Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc., 477 U.S. 242, 106 S. Ct. 2505, 91 L. Ed. 2d 202 (1986); De Sole v. Knoedler Gallery, LLC, 12 Civ. 2313, 139

F. Supp. 3d 618, 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 138729, 2015 WL 5918458, at *13 (S.D.N.Y. Oct. 9, 2015). "A dispute about a 'genuine issue' exists for summary judgment purposes where the evidence is such that a reasonable jury could decide in the non-movant's favor." Beyer v. Cnty. of Nassau, [*29] 524 F.3d 160, 163 (2d Cir. 2008) (citing Guilbert v. Gardner, 480 F.3d 140, 145 (2d Cir. 2007)). [W]here the non[-] moving party will bear the burden of proof at trial, Rule 56 permits the moving party to point to an absence of evidence to support an essential element of the party's claim.'" Lesavoy v. Lane, 02 Civ. 10162, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 52559, 2008 WL 2704393, at *7 (S.D.N.Y. July 10, 2008) (quoting Bay v. Times Mirror Magazines. Inc., 936 F.2d 112 , 116 (2d Cir. 1991)).

In the context of antitrust cases, summary judgment may be appropriate because protracted litigation chills pro-competitive market forces. PepsiCo. Inc. v. Coca-Cola Co., 315 F.3d 101, 104 (2d Cir. 2002). All inferences drawn in favor of the non-movant "must be reasonable in light of competing inferences of acceptable conduct." See Tops Mkts., Inc. v. Quality Mkts., Inc., 142 F.3d 90, 95 (2d Cir. 1995).

DISCUSSION

[10] A. New Corp.'s Exclusive Contracts with Retailers

An exclusive dealing arrangement is unlawful under Section One of the Sherman Act if its "probable effect" is to substantially lessen competition in the relevant market. Tampa Elec. Co. v. Nashville Coal Co., 365 U.S. 320, 327-29, 81 S. Ct. 623, 5 L. Ed. 2d 580 (1961). Exclusive dealing arrangements are often entered for entirely pro-competitive reasons, generally posing little threat to competition. ZF Meritor, LLC v. Eaton Corp., 696 F.3d 254, 270 (3d Cir. 2012). But "[e]xclusive dealing can have adverse economic consequences by allowing one supplier of goods or services unreasonably to deprive other suppliers of a market for their goods[.]" Jefferson Parish Hosp. Dist. No. 2 v. Hyde, 466 U.S. 2, 45, 104 S. Ct. 1551, 80 L. Ed. 2d 2 (1984) (O'Connor, J., concurring), abrogated on other grounds by Ill. Tool Works Inc. v. Indep. Ink, Inc., 547 U.S. 28, 126 S. Ct. 1281, 164 L. Ed. 2d 26 (2006).

It is undisputed that the majority of News Corp.'s contracts with retailers provide News Corp. with the exclusive right to be the in-store third-party provider of ISP products. (News Corp. 56.1 ¶¶ 7, 16, 17.) Payments to retailers under these contracts are often guaranteed on a quarterly or yearly basis. (News Corp. 56.1 ¶ 19.) Plaintiffs present evidence that News Corp.'s exclusive deals locked up at least 73% of participating retail stores during the damages period. (Pl. 56.1 Opp. ¶ 134.) And among grocers, Plaintiffs contend News Corp. had more than 80% of the participating retail store volume under exclusive [11] contract. (Pl. 56.1 Opp. ¶ 134.)

Plaintiffs highlight three aspects of News Corp.'s contracts with retailers as anticompetitive: (1) the length of the exclusive agreements; (2) the "staggered" expiration dates of the exclusive agreements; and (3) the guarantees News Corp. paid for access to retailers' stores. Plaintiffs argue that News Corp. deploys these three structural features to deter competition. As former News America Marketing CEO Paul Carlucci noted in 2004, it is "also an incredible deterrent, both the length of the contract, the fact that we can stagger the contracts at our own discretion and the payment they would have to come [up with], [for] a competitor to really get back into the marketplace." (Caughey Decl. Ex. 169, at 20.) News Corp. counters that the undisputed facts negate a finding that any of these three challenged features of its agreements substantially lessen competition in the market.

i. Length of Retailer Contracts

The parties spar over the average length of retailer contracts during the damages period and both sides rummage through [*30] the data. Under News Corp.'s analysis, the average term length of its retailer contracts was 2.7 years during the damages period. [12] (News Corp. Ex. 3, Murphy Rpt. ¶ 14; Ex. 8.) News Corp. argues that where, as here, opportunities exist to bid on exclusive contracts at the end of their terms, exclusivity periods of three years' duration or less "do not foreclose competition and are not anticompetitive as a matter of law." Spinelli v. Nat'l Football League, LLC, 96 F. Supp. 3d 81, 117 (S.D.N.Y. 2015).

But Spinelli is not dispositive because that case dealt with licensing agreements having durations no longer than three years. Spinelli, 96 F. Supp. 3d at 117. Here, News Corp. entered into exclusivity agreements with retailers that were far longer. For instance, News Corp. had five-year agreements with Albertson's, Winn Dixie, Food Lion, Ahold, and Schnucks. None of those agreements were included in News Corp.'s calculation of its 2.7 year average. (See PL 56.1 Opp. ¶ 144.)

Plaintiffs challenge News Corp.'s analysis, and calculate the average contract length at 3.9 years across the entire market, and even higher—at 5.1 years—when medium and large grocery stores are considered. (Pl. 56.1 Opp. ¶ 143.)[1] Plaintiffs point out that News Corp. omits its ten-year contract with Safeway from its 2.7 year average calculation. (News Corp. Ex. 3, Murphy Rpt., Ex. 8 n.1 (Safeway and News Corp. entered into a contract on 7/17/2004 with a ten-year [13] term, which was omitted from this analysis).) News Corp. also excludes its seven-year contract with Kroger. (Plaintiffs' Ex. 106 (noting that the effective date of the Kroger contract was 2/1/2006).)[2] In 2012, Safeway and Kroger accounted for 10.5% of the total retail volume of all grocery, drug, and mass retailers in the country. (News Corp. 56.1 ¶¶ 43, 53.) And together, their third-party ISP contracts represented nearly 19% of existing contracts during the damages period. (News Corp. 56.1 ¶¶ 43, 53.)

News Corp. also argues that the Safeway and Kroger contracts came up for re-bid during the damages period. But Plaintiffs respond that News Corp.'s only remaining competitor—Valassis—had already exited the third-party ISP business when the Safeway contract came up in 2014. (See Oral Arg. Tr. 46-48.) And that News Corp. negotiated an extension of the Kroger contract before a request for proposal was ever issued. (Caughey Decl. Exs. 126, 136; Oral Arg. Tr. 46-48.)

News Corp. also relies on Ticketmaster Corp. v. Tickets.com , Inc., 99 Civ. 7654, 2003 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 6484, 2003 WL 21397701 (C.D. Cal. Mar. 7, 2003), aff'd, 127 Fed. Appx. 346 (9th Cir. 2005), where the district judge granted summary judgment dismissing Sherman Act claims involving exclusive contracts ranging from three to ten years in duration. But News Corp.'s primary competitor in Ticketmaster had the "opportunity to bid for the [*31] contracts" and "did so." *Ticketmaster Corp., 2003 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 6484, 2003 WL 21397701, at 7. By contrast, Plaintiffs offer evidence that News Corp.'s competitors were not afforded the opportunity to compete for significant contracts. (See, e.g., Caughey Decl. Ex. 56, Dial Purchasing Manager, Karen Welch, Deposition Tr. at 239:7-17 ("Q: Have you ever done . . [15] . an RFP for in-store services? A: No. . . . Because . . . when I look at in-store services, there's—aside from News America, there's nobody else that I could put in side-by-side against News America and run an effective auction.").)

ii. Contract Expiration Dates

With respect to the expiration dates of News Corp.'s retailer contracts, the parties, yet again, have differing views of the evidence. News Corp. contends that approximately 40% of its retail network, on average, expired each year during the damages period. Further, contracts covering 98% of retailer volume expired over the whole period. (News Corp. 56.1 ¶¶ 60, 63.) As a matter of law, News Corp. argues that these exclusive retailer contracts do not substantially foreclose competition. See, e.g., *Ticketmaster Corp., 2003 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 6484, 2003 WL 21397701, at 5 (granting summary judgment for defendant on Sherman Act Section One and Two claims where exclusive contracts came up for bid at a rate of "about 20% per year"). And when Valassis entered the third-party ISP business, it won exclusive contracts with several significant retailers including SuperValu, Redner's, Winn Dixie, Family Dollar, Rite Aid, and Roundy's. (News Corp. 56.1 ¶¶ 21, 27-29, 60.)

---

[1] Plaintiffs' economist, MacKie-Mason, did not dispute News Corp.'s 2.7 year average in his expert reports. He also offered no opinion or analysis that the average contract length was different or longer than News Corp.'s estimation. (See News Corp. Ex. 24, MacKie-Mason Dep. Tr. 67:13-19.) For the first time during briefing of this motion, Plaintiffs' submit a declaration from MacKie-Mason in which he performs a new analysis to rebut News Corp.'s 2.7 year average. (See Pl. Ex. 3, Declaration of Jeffery MacKie-Mason in Support of Opposition to Summary Judgment.)

[2] Plaintiffs contend that News Corp.'s average excludes contracts entered into before 2008 but ran during the damages period. (Caughey [14] Decl. Ex. 3, Declaration of Jeffrey MacKie-Mason in Support of Opposition to Summary Judgment at ¶ 19.)

Plaintiffs slice the data differently to [16] focus on medium and large-sized food retailers—specifically, the top 28. From that perspective, the number of retailer contracts available to News Corp.'s competitors drops to less than 25% in each year from 2008 through 2012, and falls as low as 18.7%. (News Corp. Ex. 48, MacKie-Mason Rpt. at 41; Pl. 56.1 Opp. ¶ 182.) Plaintiffs argue that focusing on the largest customers is necessary because "capturing nothing but the small retailers is not a viable entry strategy[.]" (News Corp. Ex. 48, MacKie-Mason Rpt. at 41.) And as News America Marketing's former CEO, Marty Garofalo noted, "[a] big part of being successful with the package goods clients is having the critical mass to deliver promotions that move volume." (Caughey Decl. Exs. 21, 169.) Further, although the average of News Corp.'s retail network up for renewal on a yearly basis was 40%, News Corp.'s own analysis reveals that the rate ranged from 28% to 46% over the class period. (News Corp. 56.1 ¶ 61.) And by 2014, News Corp.'s only remaining competitor, Valassis, lost its key contracts and exited the third-party ISP business. (Pl. 56.1 Opp. ¶ 210.)

Plaintiffs also offer evidence that News Corp. intentionally staggered the end dates of key contracts to prevent competitors [17] from acquiring a "critical mass" of retail distribution. (Pl. 56.1 Opp. ¶¶ 149, 152, 153, 155, 156, 157.) See Insignia Sys. v. News America Marketing In-Store, 661 F. Supp. 2d 1039, 1064-65 (D. Minn. 2009) (denying motion for summary judgment in view of "staggering" allegations); see also Sunbeam Television v. Nielsen Media Research, 763 F. Supp. 2d 1341, 1346 (S.D. Fla. 2011), aff'd, 711 F.3d 1264 (11th Cir. 2013) ("A policy or practice of intentionally staggering contract terms may, under some circumstances, constitute anticompetitive conduct. .. ."). According to Marty Garofalo:

> Th[e] winning formula . . . starts with staggered retail deals . . . News America Marketing intentionally staggers the time of major retail deals to minimize the risk of losing a major number [*32] of stores in any short time period . . . . [T]his strategy serves as a deterrent to other major companies from joining the In-Store fray—because they know that it will be a long—hard fought drawn out process to develop the critical mass necessary to be successful in this arena.

(Pl. 56.1 Opp. ¶¶ 150) (emphasis added).

iii. Guarantees to Retailers

News Corp. contends that its guarantees to retailers do not foreclose competition as a matter of law under the "price-cost" test enumerated in Weyerhaeuser Co v. Ross-Simmons Hardwood Lumber Co., 549 U.S. 312, 127 S. Ct. 1069, 166 L. Ed. 2d 911 (2007). To succeed on a challenge to a defendant's input pricing practices under the "price-cost" test, a plaintiff must prove "that the [defendant's] prices are [18] below an appropriate measure of [the defendant's] costs." Brooke Grp. Ltd. v. Brown & Williamson Tobacco Corp., 509 U.S. 209, 222, 113 S. Ct. 2578, 125 L. Ed. 2d 168 (1993). News Corp. contends that Plaintiffs fail to satisfy the "price-cost" test for predatory bidding. Plaintiffs identify only one contract—the KMART contract—on which News Corp. lost money. While News Corp. lost $4.3 million on that contract in 2013 (Pl. 56.1 Opp. ¶ 170), its third-party ISP business has been profitable every year from 1999 to the present (News Corp. 56.1 ¶ 68).

Nevertheless, relying on ZF Meritor, LLC, 696 F.3d at 268-69, Plaintiffs contend that the "price-cost" test is not dispositive of exclusive dealing claims. In contrast to Weyerhauser, where pricing operated as the lone exclusionary tool, see ZF Meritor, 696 F.3d at 276-77, the prices paid by News Corp. in their contracts with retailers are not the clearly predominant method of exclusion. Rather, the length of the exclusive contracts and their staggered terms may also foreclose competition. See ZF Meritor, LLC, 696 F.3d at 277.

Further, Plaintiffs offer evidence suggesting that News Corp. pays retailers fixed commissions that "guarantee revenue even if the activity does not support it." (Pl. 56.1 Opp. ¶ 159.) And those commissions increased dramatically when Valassis entered the third-party ISP market. (Pl. 56.1 Opp. ¶ 159.) In early 2009, News Corp. [19] and Valassis competed for KMART's retailer network. (Pl. 56.1 Opp. ¶ 164.) In response to each of Valassis' bids, News Corp. countered with increasingly larger guarantees—finally offering $4,615 per store, approximately $6 million overall, and a $1.1 million signing bonus in exchange for a three-year renewal. (Pl. 56.1 Opp. ¶ 167.) In choosing News Corp. over Valassis, KMART noted that News Corp. was trying to "send Valassis a message" with its "over-the-top" offer. (Pl. 56.1 Opp. ¶ 168.) As Larry Berg of Valassis testified:

> [News Corp. was] sending a strong message that no more growth [sic], because at that point we started to grow our footprint. . . . News [Corp.] was trying to send a message to Valassis that they are not going to let us secure, not only KMART, but also send a pretty strong message to us across the board.

(Pl. 56.1 Opp. ¶ 169.)

B. Exclusive Dealing Under Section One of the Sherman Act

While there is no precise formula for evaluating the legality of an exclusive dealing agreement, antitrust law generally requires: "substantial foreclosure" from the relevant market, Tampa Elec. Co., 365 U.S. at 327-29; United States v. Microsoft Corp., 253 F.3d 34, 69, 346 U.S. App. D.C. 330 (D.C. Cir. 2001); contracts of sufficient duration to prevent meaningful competition by rivals, CDC Techs., Inc. v. IDEXX [*33] Labs., Inc., 186 F.3d 74, 81 (2d Cir. 1999); Omega Envt'l., Inc. v. Gilbarco, Inc., 127 F.3d 1157, 1163 (9th Cir. 1997); and an analysis of [20] likely or actual anticompetitive effects considered in light of any pro-competitive effects, ZF Meritor, LLC, 696 F.3d at 271-72.

Contracts that foreclose competition in a "substantial share" of the market may be unlawful under Section One of the Sherman Act. See Tampa Elec. Co., 365 U.S. at 327; see also Stop & Shop Supermarket Co. v. Blue Cross Blue Shield, 373 F.3d 57, 68 (1st Cir. 2004) (noting that foreclosure levels "are unlikely to be of concern where they are less than 30 or 40 percent."). Plaintiffs present evidence that only 18.7% to 25% of News Corp.'s total volume became available for bid each year between 2008 and 2012. (Pl. 56.1 Opp. ¶ 182.) Coupled with the broad market coverage of News Corp.'s retailer contracts—upwards of 73%—and the guarantees offered to retailers like KMART, a significant portion of the market may have been foreclosed to competitors. Viewing the duration of the contracts, their staggered end dates, and the guarantees as a whole, plaintiffs raise material questions of fact as to whether the effect of these contracts was to "substantially foreclose" rivals from obtaining a toehold in the third-party ISP marketplace. Such questions should be resolved by a jury. See Insignia Sys., Inc., 661 F. Supp. 2d at 1064-65 (noting that Insignia's evidence that News Corp. has substantially foreclosed competition was sufficient to withstand summary judgment given [21] that News Corp.'s retailer contracts foreclosed competitors' abilities to contract with retailers in 80 to 90 percent of grocery store opportunities, as well as the duration of News Corp.'s contracts, and News Corp.'s strategy to stagger its contracts).

Indeed, News Corp.'s dealings with competitors like Valassis raise questions about whether News Corp.'s contracts foreclosed competition in a substantial share of the market. Plaintiffs assert that while Valassis entered into several retailer agreements (Pl. 56.1 Opp. ¶ 204), it never had the opportunity to bid on key retailers such as Safeway and Kroger (Pl. 56.1 Opp. ¶¶ 206, 208), and finally gave up trying to compete in the third-party ISP business. (Pl. 56.1 Opp. ¶ 210.)[3] Within months, News Corp. was able to re-sign the retailers it lost to Valassis (Pl. 56.1 Opp. ¶ 210), and it currently faces no significant competition in the third-party ISP market (Pl. 56.1 Opp. ¶ 212). See Interface Grp. v. Mass Port Auth., 816 F.2d 9, 11 (1st Cir. 1987) (Breyer, J.) ("Exclusive dealing arrangements may sometimes be found unreasonable under the antitrust laws because they may place enough outlets . . . in the hands of a single firm . . . to make it difficult for new, potentially competing firms to penetrate [22] the market. . . [T]he arrangements may 'foreclose' outlets or supplies to potential entrants, thereby raising entry barriers."); see Areeda & Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law 1802(c), at 64 (2d ed. 2002) (noting that a dominant firm may be able to foreclose rival suppliers from a large enough portion of the market to deprive such rivals of the opportunity to achieve the minimum economies of scale necessary to compete).

News Corp. contends that its exclusive contracts are procompetitive because CPGs benefit from retail exclusivity. However, on the current record, this Court cannot conclude as a matter of law that the procompetitive benefits of the exclusive [*34] contracts are outweighed by the harm to competition. Accordingly, News Corp.'s motion for summary judgment as to Section One of the Sherman Act is denied.[4] [3] News Corp. disagrees and contends that Valassis failed because of its own strategy. But that is a fact question for the jury.

[4] The proscriptions of Section One of the Sherman Act are narrower than Section Three of the Clayton Act. See Tampa Elec. Co., 365 U.S. at 335 ("We need not discuss the respondents' further contention that the contract also violates s 1 and s 2 of the

C. Monopolization Under Section Two of the Sherman Act

Section Two of the Sherman Act makes it illegal for any person "to monopolize, or attempt to monopolize, or combine or conspire with any other person or persons, to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce among the several states." 15 U.S.C. § 2. To prevail, Plaintiffs must prove: (1) News Corp.'s possession of monopoly power in the third-party ISP market; and (2) the "willful acquisition or maintenance of that power as distinguished from growth or development as a consequence of a superior product, business acumen, or historic accident." United States v. Grinnell Corp., 384 U.S. 563, 570-71, 86 S. Ct. 1698, 16 L. Ed. 2d 778 (1966); LePage's Inc. v. 3M, 324 F.3d 141, 147 (3d Cir. 2003) ("A monopolist willfully acquires or maintains monopoly power when it competes on some basis other than the merits."),

i. Relevant Product Market

As a threshold matter, this Court must assess whether a genuine issue of fact exists as to the relevant product market News Corp. is allegedly monopolizing. News Corp. [24] contends that the evidence in the record is insufficient to support Plaintiffs' narrowly drawn product market definition. Plaintiffs' "pre-checkout" "third-party" product market includes "print and electronic signage, end-of-aisle displays, freezer displays, floor signage, and cart advertising." (Fourth Amended Complaint ¶¶ 54-55.) Their product market excludes "trade promotion arrangements where individual CPGs have contracts with individual retailers to promote their products[,]" all forms of out-of-store and digital marketing and product promotion, as well as promotional products offered at checkout. (Fourth Amended Complaint ¶¶ 56.)

A properly defined market includes "all products that have reasonable interchangeability for the purposes for which they are produced—price, use, and qualities considered." United States v. E.I. du Pont de Nemours & Co., 351 U.S. 377, 404, 76 S. Ct. 994, 100 L. Ed. 1264 (1956). "In economists' terms, two products or services are reasonably interchangeable where there is sufficient cross-elasticity of demand. Cross-elasticity of demand exists if consumers would respond to a slight increase in the price of one product by switching to another product." AD/SAT, Div. of Skylight. Inc. v. Assoc. Press, 181 F.3d 216, 227 (2d Cir. 1999).

Market definition "is a highly factual one best allocated to the trier of fact." Meredith Corp. v. SESAC LLC, 1 F. Supp. 3d 180, 219 (S.D.N.Y. 2014); see ABA Section on Antitrust [25] Law, Antitrust Law Developments 620 (6th ed. 2007) ("Definition of the relevant market is generally considered a question for the trier of fact. . . . The jury may accept the market definition proposed by either party or may develop its own definition based upon the evidence."); see also Lewis v. Philip Morris Inc., 355 F.3d 515, 533 (6th Cir. [*35] 2004) ("defining the product market. . . is a factual inquiry for the jury; the court may not weigh evidence or judge witness credibility.") (internal quotations marks and citations omitted). Considering the evidence in the light most favorable to Plaintiffs, a jury could adopt Plaintiffs' third-party ISP market definition—and that is all that is required to survive summary judgment. See Meredith Corp., 1 F. Supp. 3d at 219.

Indeed, Plaintiffs point to evidence that their proposed product market—that is, in-store, shelf-based, advertisements provided by a third-party—demonstrate unique functions and uses that distinguish them from substitute products. For instance, Plaintiffs highlight documents and testimony suggesting that CPGs consider the third-party ISP market to be distinct. (Pl. 56.1 Opp. ¶ 218). CPGs use third-party ISPs, as opposed to trade promotions or out-of-store tactics, because it is their last chance to communicate with consumers [26] about their brands when they select the product off the shelf, at the "moment of truth." (Pl. 56.1 Opp. ¶¶ 108, 219). News Corp. advertises its products as allowing CPGs to speak to consumers at the "moment of truth" when they select products (Pl. 56.1 Opp. ¶ 220), as opposed to TV, radio, magazines, and billboards, that do not confront consumers at the time of purchase. (Pl. 56.1 Opp. ¶ 221). And News Corp. markets itself as providing a different service than coupon providers. (Pl. 56.1 Opp. ¶ 225). Indeed, the court in Insignia Sys., Inc. v. News Am. Marketing In-Store, Inc. held that a nearly identical product market was sufficient to withstand summary judgment. 661 F. Supp. 2d 1039, 1059

Sherman Act, for if it does not fall within the broader [23] proscription of s 3 of the Clayton Act it follows that it is not forbidden by those of the former."). Because News Corp.'s motion is denied with respect to Plaintiffs' Sherman Act Section One claims, News Corp.'s motion is also denied under Section Three of the Clayton Act.

(D. Minn. 2009) (noting that Insignia had brought forth "substantial evidence highlighting the claimed unique nature of an in-store, at-shelf, third-party advertising market" to generate a genuine issue of fact).

Plaintiffs' market definition is also supported by MacKie-Mason's economic analysis. MacKie-Mason analyzed whether third-party ISP constitutes a distinct market by employing the "SSNIP" (small but significant and non-transitory increase in price) test, which asks how a buyer would respond to a hypothetical monopolist's imposition [27] of a small price increase. Meredith Corp., 1 F. Supp. 3d at 218. Applying such a test, MacKie-Mason used "critical loss analysis" to analyze demand elasticity to measure the loss in quantity demanded of all third-party ISP sold in the hypothetical relevant market if the pricing of the promotions were raised. (News Corp Ex. 4, Dr. MacKie-Mason Rpt. at 46-50.) MacKie-Mason concluded that the third-party ISP market alone composes the relevant product market.

News Corp.'s reliance on Menasha Corp. v. News America Marketing In-Store, Inc., 354 F.3d 661 (7th Cir. 2004) is misplaced. In Menasha, Judge Easterbrook found that plaintiff did not meet its burden of proving that the relevant market consisted of News Corp.'s at shelf-coupon dispensers. Judge Easterbrook found that plaintiff offered only "a potpourri of survey research and armchair economics" in place of econometric analysis. 354 F.3d at 664. In this case, Plaintiffs offer enough to survive summary judgment. Together, Plaintiffs' evidence supplies an "ample factual basis" on which a jury could conclude that the relevant product market consists of pre-checkout third-party ISP. See Meredith Corp., 1 F. Supp. 3d 180, 218 (S.D.N.Y. 2014). This evidence is further confirmed by MacKie-Mason's SSNIP test, which was absent in Menasha.

ii. News Corp.'s Monopoly Power

Plaintiffs contend that News Corp. possesses monopoly power in the third-party [*36] ISP market. [28] By 2009, Plaintiffs argue that News Corp. had a 90.5% share of the third-party ISP market. (Pl. 56.1 Opp. ¶ 242.) By comparison, during that same time, Valassis had a 2.8% market share and Insignia had a 6.7% market share. (Pl. Ex. 4, MacKie-Mason Rpt. at Ex. 59.) While News Corp.'s share of the third-party ISP market dropped to its lowest level—79.4%—in 2013, its market share today has rebounded. (News Corp. Ex. 4, Dr. MacKie Mason Rep. at Ex. 59.) This Court can infer the existence of monopoly power from a predominant share of the market, Grinnell, 384 U.S. at 571, and the size of that share is a primary factor in determining whether monopoly power exists. See Dentsply Int'l, Inc., 399 F.3d at 187. "A share above 70% is usually strong evidence of monopoly power[.]" *In re EVIC Class Action Litig., 00 Civ. 3811, 2002 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 14049, 2002 WL 1766554, at 14 (S.D.N.Y. July 31, 2002).

iii. News Corp.'s Anticompetitive Conduct

Under the antitrust laws, an overwhelmingly large market share alone—even one as large as 90.5%—does not equal an antitrust violation. The Supreme Court has defined anticompetitive conduct under Section Two in the following way:

> The question whether [a defendant's] conduct may properly be characterized as exclusionary cannot be answered by simply considering its effect on [a plaintiff]. In addition, [29] it is relevant to consider its impact on consumers and whether it has impaired competition in an unnecessarily restrictive way. If a firm has been "attempting to exclude rivals on some basis other than efficiency," it is fair to characterize its behavior as predatory.

Aspen Skiing Co. v. Aspen Highlands Skiing Corp., 472 U.S. 585, 605, 105 S. Ct. 2847, 86 L. Ed. 2d 467 (1985) (internal citation omitted).

Courts should condemn aggressive, exclusionary conduct by a monopolist, but encourage aggressive, competitive conduct. As Judge Easterbrook has noted, there is only one problem: "competitive and exclusionary conduct look alike." On Identifying Exclusionary Conduct, 61 Notre Dame L. Rev. 972, 972 (1986). And as one court of appeals has stated: "'Anticompetitive conduct' can come in too many different forms, and is too dependent upon context, for any court or commentator ever to have enumerated all the varieties." Caribbean Broad. Sys., Ltd. v. Cable & Wireless PLC, 148 F.3d 1080, 1087, 331 U.S. App. D.C. 226 (D.C. Cir. 1998).

To prove unlawful exclusive dealing under Section Two, Plaintiffs need to show that the probable effect of News Corp.'s conduct is to harm the competitive process. See Microsoft, 253 F.3d at 58. The standard for exclusive dealing under Section Two of the Sherman Act is lower than under Section One. See Microsoft, 253 F.3d at 70 (noting that a monopolist's use of exclusive dealing may give rise to a Section Two violation even without a level of foreclosure that could [30] support a Section One claim). Plaintiffs allege that News Corp.'s exclusive contracts closed a substantial percentage of the available opportunities for competitors in the third-party ISP business. This Court concludes that evidence of News Corp.'s exclusive contracts with retailers, as described above, raises a genuine issue of fact as to whether News Corp.'s conduct excluded competition in an effort to acquire and maintain monopoly power.

Moreover, "evidence of intent" may be relevant "to the question of whether the challenged conduct is fairly characterized as 'exclusionary' or 'anticompetitive.'" [*37] See Aspen Skiing, 472 U.S. at 602. And Plaintiffs present ample evidence that News Corp. intended to use their exclusive retailer contracts to do just that—to exclude rivals. (See] Caughey Decl. Ex. 83 ("[W]e have a proven strategy in place when it comes to our retail network. Our strategy is to secure long term retail deals . . . . We also stagger the deals to prevent a large percentage of the network from being vulnerable at any specific point in time .. . This method allows us to concentrate on our key negotiations. It also means that any competitor who wants to develop critical mass for their network would have to [31] dedicate a lot of money over a considerable amount of time in order to break into the in-store game in any significant way"); Caughey Decl. Ex. 172 ("What we do know is that our network of stores is over 50,000 strong, most of them are under long-term agreements with us, and the renewal dates of those agreements are staggered so we are well-prepared to weather . . . competitive challenges.").)

Plaintiffs seek to bolster their Section Two claim by presenting evidence that News Corp. acquired and maintained its monopoly through a series of exclusionary acts, including, inter alia, that News Corp. hacked into Floorgraphics computer systems (Pl. 56.1 Opp. ¶ 185), News Corp. defaced Floorgraphics products in retailers and used the photographs of the defaced products in sales pitches to retailers (Pl. 56.1 Opp. ¶ 189), News Corp. obtained Insignia's confidential information and used it to compete against Insignia (Pl. 56.1 Opp. ¶ 191), and News Corp. retained former Valassis Employee, Larry Mortimer, as its "black knight" to dislodge Valassis from retailer Winn Dixie (Pl. 56.1 Opp. ¶ 207).

"The Sherman Act is not a panacea for all evils that may affect business life." Berkey Photo, Inc. v. Eastman Kodak. Co., 603 F.2d 263, 288 n.41 (2d Cir. 1979). It is well settled [32] that "employing tactics that undermine one's competitors—even unfairly—does not violate the antitrust laws." *S.W.B. New England, Inc. v. R.A.B. Food Grp., LLC, No. 06 Civ. 15357, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 14892, 2008 WL 540091, at 6 (S.D.N.Y. Feb. 27, 2008). Moreover, false and misleading statements are presumed to have a de minimis effect on competition for purposes of the Sherman Act. See Reed Const. Data Inc. v. McGraw-Hill Cos., Inc., 49 F. Supp. 3d 385, 420 (S.D.N.Y. 2014).

However, in conjunction with News Corp.'s exclusive contracts with retailers, Plaintiffs present evidence sufficient to withstand summary judgment that News Corp.'s exclusionary acts may be anticompetitive. See, e.g.. Conwood Co., L.P. v. U.S. Tobacco Co., 290 F.3d 768, 783 (6th Cir. 2002), cert. denied, 537 U.S. 1148, 123 S. Ct. 876, 154 L. Ed. 2d 850 (2003) (holding evidence of defendant's exclusionary conduct sufficient to support a Section 2 violation where defendant: (1) removed and destroyed or discarded racks that displayed defendant's products from stores; (2) trained its operatives to take advantage of inattentive store clerks with various 'ruses'; (3) provided misleading information to retailers in an effort to dupe them into carrying defendant's products; and (4) entered into exclusive agreements with retailers in an effort to exclude rivals' products).

Further, News Corp. contends that most of Plaintiffs' identified tortious conduct occurred before 2008—the beginning of the damages period—and [33] is therefore irrelevant. But a monopoly which is "maintained" during the damages period would need to be created before the damages period, and anticompetitive conduct before the limitations period may be material to a showing that Plaintiffs were injured during the damages period. See, e.g., *Berkey [38] Photo, 603 F.2d at 296 ("The taint of an impure origin does not dissipate after four years if a monopolist continues to extract excessive prices because of it.").

D. Injury and Damages

News Corp. contends that summary judgment should be granted for the independent reason that Plaintiffs cannot prove injury or damages. "[C]ourts have allowed antitrust plaintiffs considerable latitude in proving the amount of damages. Proof of amount of damages thus need not conform to a particular theory or model[.]" U.S. Football League v. Nat'l Football League, 842 F.2d 1335, 1378 (2d Cir. 1988). However, damages awards must be, to some degree, traceable to unlawful acts. See U.S. Football League, 842 F.2d at 1378-79 ("A plaintiffs proof of amount of damages thus must provide the jury with a reasonable basis upon which to estimate the amount of its losses caused by other factors, such as management problems, a general recession or lawful factors.").

Citing Berkey Photo, News Corp. argues that Plaintiffs' benchmark model calculates generalized monopoly profits, [34] not damages directly flowing from anticompetitive conduct, as required by law. The defendant in Berkey Photo had acquired monopoly power in significant part through its skill and foresight rather than through illegal activities. In light of that determination, the Second Circuit found that Plaintiffs may "recover only for the price increment that 'flows from' the distortion of the market caused by the monopolist's anticompetitive conduct." See Berkey Photo, 603 F.2d at 297-98 ("But the Sherman Act does, as we have said, tolerate the lawfully acquired and maintained monopoly. This principle would be undercut if a monopolist whose position has for the most part been attained legitimately is required to forfeit all fruits of its success because its power has merely been supplemented by improper conduct.").

Plaintiffs' economist, MacKie-Mason, concludes that the generalized monopoly profits obtained by News Corp. are a result of—and "flow from"—its exclusive deals with retailers and other tactics which form the basis of News Corp.'s alleged anticompetitive conduct. Plaintiffs will need to prove this at trial. Indeed, whether some, all, or none of News Corp.'s conduct is anticompetitive is precisely the question of fact [35] that a jury will decide. And it will be Plaintiffs' burden to demonstrate to the jury that its requested damages flow from conduct the jury finds anticompetitive.

News Corp. also argues that Plaintiffs' benchmark model is deficient because the model "can't sort out" the effects of any particular form of allegedly anticompetitive conduct. See Areeda & Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law ¶ 657b1 (3d ed. 2008) ("If the plaintiffs expert's damage study cannot segregate lawful from unlawful practices, then no damages may be awarded on the basis of that study."). But calculating damages in antitrust cases is not an exact science. See, e.g., Bigelow v. RKO Radio Pictures, Inc., 327 U.S. 251, 264, 66 S. Ct. 574, 90 L. Ed. 652 (1946) ("An antitrust plaintiff must thus provide only sufficient evidence to support a 'just and reasonable estimate' of damages."). And if a jury were to find News Corp.'s actions taken as a whole to be a violation of Section Two of the Sherman Act, disaggregating the monopolist's lawful actions from its unlawful actions for the purpose of calculating damages may be "unnecessary, if not impossible." See LePage's, 324 F.3d at 166.

E. State Law Claims

Plaintiffs assert state law claims under the New York Donnelly Act and the Michigan Antitrust Reform Act for exclusive [*39] dealing and monopolization. [36] The relevant state law provisions are interpreted in the same manner as their federal counterparts. See Eatoni Ergonomics, Inc. v. Research in Motion Corp., 826 F. Supp. 2d 705, 708 (S.D.N.Y. 2011); Little Caesar Enters., Inc. v. Smith, 895 F. Supp. 884, 898 (E.D. Mich. 1995). Thus, News Corp.'s motion for summary judgment is also denied with respect to the state law claims.

II. NEWS CORP.'S MOTIONS IN LIMINE

Rule 702 of the Federal Rules of Evidence governs the admissibility of expert and other scientific or technical expert testimony, and states:

> If scientific, technical, or other specialized knowledge will assist the trier of fact to understand the evidence or to determine a fact in issue, a witness qualified as an expert by knowledge, skill, experience, training, or education, may testify thereto in the form of an opinion or otherwise, if (1) the testimony is based upon sufficient facts or data, (2) the testimony is the product of reliable principles and methods, and (3) the witness has applied the principles and methods reliably to the facts of the case.

In determining whether expert testimony is admissible, the Court must assume a gatekeeper function to determine whether "the expert's testimony both rests on a reliable foundation and is relevant to the task at hand." Daubert v. Merrell Dow Pharms., Inc., 509 U.S. 579, 597, 113 S. Ct. 2786, 125 L. Ed. 2d 469 (1993); accord Campbell v. Metro. Prop. & Cas. Ins. Co., 239 F.3d 179, 184 (2d Cir. 2001). Although the Daubert analysis was initially developed to examine scientific testimony, Daubert applies with equal [37] force to other types of expert testimony including that of economists. Kumho Tire Co. v. Carmichael, 526 U.S. 137, 147, 119 S. Ct. 1167, 143 L. Ed. 2d 238 (1999). The proponent of the testimony must establish admissibility by a preponderance of the evidence. Bourjaily v. United States, 483 U.S. 171, 175-76, 107 S. Ct. 2775, 97 L. Ed. 2d 144 (1988). And this Court has broad discretion in determining whether to admit expert testimony. Amorgianos v. AMTRAK, 303 F.3d 256, 265 (2d Cir. 2002).

DISCUSSION

A. News Corp.'s Motion to Exclude the Testimony of Dr. Paul Farris

News Corp. moves to exclude the testimony of Plaintiffs' industry expert, Dr. Paul Farris. Farris is the Landmark Communications Professor at the University of Virginia's Darden School of Business Administration, where he has taught since 1980. Farris was retained by Plaintiffs to opine on: (1) how CPGs use third-party ISP sold by News Corp.; (2) whether other marketing, advertising, or promotional tactics are competitive substitutes to third-party ISP; and (3) the degree to which third-party ISP complement other forms of advertising and promotion services. (Michael Decl. Ex. 79.) Farris identified five criteria to assess the substitutability of third-party ISP for other advertising methods, such as traditional out-of-store consumer promotions.

News Corp. contends that Farris' opinions are not supported by academic literature, are undermined by the record [38] in this case, and are at odds with his prior testimony in other actions. But in his report, Farris presents a table identifying sufficient support for his methodology in academic literature and practitioner studies. (Michael Decl. Ex. 79, Farris Rpt. at Table 1.) That no published study has used the same five criteria employed by Farris is not fatal to the admissibility of his opinion. *Amorgianos v. AMTRAK, [40] 303 F.3d 256, 266-67 (2d Cir. 2002). ("This is not to suggest that an expert must back his or her opinion with published studies that unequivocally support his or her conclusions."). Whether the documentary evidence is inconsistent with Farris' opinion, or whether Farris' testimony in prior litigation is at odds with his current testimony, are matters for cross-examination at trial.

Further, News Corp. contends that Farris' opinions are irrelevant because they do not address the appropriate product market inquiry, namely, what products are "reasonably interchangeable." But Farris' opinions concerning the key criteria considered by CPGs when selecting promotional tactics—and the substitutability of those tactics—are relevant to that issue. A jury may consider the testimony of industry experts regarding product substitutability. Accord ABA [39] Model Jury Instructions in Civil Antitrust Cases (2005), at C-7 ("In evaluating whether various products are reasonably interchangeable or are reasonable substitutes for each other, you may also consider . . . the perceptions of either industry or the public as to whether the products are in separate markets.").

As Plaintiffs point out, Farris does not opine on the ultimate conclusion of the relevant product market definition. On the contrary, his testimony is but "one piece" —along with MacKie-Mason's critical loss analysis and other evidence—supporting Plaintiffs' definition of the relevant product market. (Pl. Opp. Br. at 20.)

B. News Corp.'s Motion to Exclude Portions of the Testimony of Dr. Jeffery MacKie-Mason

News Corp. also moves to exclude portions of the testimony of Plaintiffs' economist, Dr. Jeffrey MacKie-Mason. In particular, News Corp. argues that: (1) MacKie-Mason's damages "benchmark" model is inadequate; (2) MacKie-Mason's opinions on liability are inappropriately based on News Corp.'s "intent" to harm competitors; and (3) MacKie-Mason's relevant product market definition is not supported by the "Lerner Index."

In its class certification decision, this Court rejected [40] News Corp.'s argument that MacKie-Mason's damages "benchmark" model is inadequate because of his selection of benchmark firms. As this Court explained:

> Because News Corp. has allegedly maintained a monopoly in the market for ISPs since at least 2000, creating a benchmark using News Corp.'s prices during a time of 'robust competition' is not feasible. (MacKie-Mason Rebuttal at 29.) And as Plaintiffs point out, the selection of perfectly comparable benchmark firms aside from News Corp. is impossible where News Corp.'s alleged monopoly prevents comparable firms from operating within the market. Indeed, the twenty benchmark firms selected by Dr. MacKie-Mason were not chosen arbitrarily: he chose the firms based on their capital intensity, growth, and size. (See MacKie-Mason Rebuttal Rpt. at 29-31.)

*Dial Corp., 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 79686, 2015 WL 4104624, at 10. News Corp. presents nothing new in its motion in limine to persuade this Court to revisit its earlier ruling. And once again, it is not dispositive that MacKie-Mason's benchmark model has not been cited in peer reviewed economic literature. See Astra Aktiebolag v. Andrx Pharms., Inc., 222 F. Supp. 2d 423, 489 (S.D.N.Y. 2002) (" [T]he mere fact that an expert's findings have not been peer-reviewed or published is not a sufficient reason to exclude it."). News further contends that MacKie-Mason should have used Catalina Marketing ("Catalina"), [41] a company which sells coupons [*41] distributed at checkout counters (see News Corp. 56.1 ¶ 94), as a benchmark firm. But Plaintiffs counter that Catalina went private in 2007 and ended public disclosure of its financial results. Thus, MacKie-Mason could not have used Catalina as a benchmark. (See Benz Decl. Ex. 9.)[5]

Additionally, News Corp. objects to MacKie-Mason's decision to average the margins of his benchmark firms, and his failure to control for differences between the benchmark firms and News Corp. But MacKie-Mason testified that "the average is an unbiased estimator" where, as here, he did not have any reason to think that there was "bias in the draw." (See Benz Decl. Ex. 8, MacKie-Mason Tr. at 211:13-212:7); see also In re Wellbutrin XL Antitrust Litig., 282 F.R.D. 126, 144 (E.D. Pa. 2011) ("The use of averages in this case does not mask meaningful variations in overcharges, and it provides a reliable method to provide a reasonable estimate of the damages based on relevant purchase data.").

News Corp. also argues that MacKie-Mason's opinions with respect to [42] liability are improperly based on his findings that News Corp. acted with anticompetitive "intent." Plaintiffs dispute this characterization and point out that MacKie-Mason's opinion rests on an economic analysis of News Corp.'s market domination and how it foreclosed competition. (See Michael Decl. Ex. 4 MacKie-Mason Rpt. at 56-72, 75-91.) And there is nothing inadmissible about MacKie-Mason's reliance on evidence of News Corp.'s statements regarding its strategies. See, e.g., United States v. Mulder, 273 F. 3d 91, 102 (2d Cir. 2001) (permitting expert testimony that "bore on the issue of intent"). Indeed, MacKie-Mason's testimony is distinguishable from other cases in which expert testimony is plainly untethered to any economic analysis. Cf. In re Rezulin Prods. Liab. Litig., 309 F. Supp. 2d 531, 546-47 & n.40 (S.D.N.Y. 2004) (precluding expert testimony on intent where expert admitted that "he ha[d] no factual or scientific basis for his views regarding intent, motive or state of mind[.]").

News Corp. objects to MacKie-Mason's use of "critical loss analysis" in defining the relevant product market. Plaintiffs contend that MacKie-Mason employs an approach to the product market definition, the SSNIP test, advocated "by the DOJ Guidelines." (Michael Decl. Ex. 4, MacKie-Mason Rpt. at 30-31 (citing DOJ and FTC, Horizontal Merger Guidelines (2010)). To implement this test, MacKie-Mason employs [43] a critical loss analysis, developed in Joseph Farrell and Carl Shapiro, Improving Critical Loss Analysis. The Antitrust Source 4 (Feb. 2008). The parties disagree over the proper application of this critical loss analysis. News Corp. contends that MacKie-Mason should have calculated the actual loss as part of the analysis. In lieu of calculating actual loss, which Plaintiffs contend would have been impossible, MacKie-Mason employs a critical loss analysis involving the estimation News Corp.'s margin above marginal cost and the aggregate diversion ratio (the fraction of the reduction

[5] Plaintiffs also point out that MacKie-Mason presents an "alternative benchmark" consisting of firms that the "data vendor Capital IQ identified as "similar to News [Corp.]." (Michael Decl. Ex 48, MacKie-Mason Rebuttal Rpt. at 54.)

in demand for News Corp.'s brand of in-store promotions in response to an increase in News Corp.'s prices that would be captured by other third-party ISP providers). (Michael Decl. Ex. 4, MacKie-Mason Rpt. at 47.)

Finally, News Corp. objects to Plaintiffs' use of the "Lerner Index," which MacKie-Mason uses to determine the margin variable [*42] in his critical loss analysis. News Corp.'s contention that the Second Circuit rejected the "Lerner Index" in all circumstances overstates United States v. Eastman Kodak Co., 63 F. 3d 95, 109 (2d Cir. 1995). There, the Second Circuit rejected use of the "Lerner Index" under the particular facts of that case. See Eastman Kodak, 63 F.3d at 109 ("[T]he contention that Kodak film is differentiated [44] from the film sold by its rivals is directly contradicted by the district court's findings . . . . Accordingly, we believe that the use of the Lerner index in this manner rests on unwarranted factual assumptions.").[6]

Ultimately, the parties' many disagreements over MacKie-Mason's methodologies go to the weight, not admissibility of MacKie-Mason's testimony. See, e.g., *In re Vitamin C Antitrust Litig., 06 MD 1738, 2012 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 181158, 2012 WL 6675117, at 8 ("[Movants'] motion asks the Court to take sides in a dispute between experts about the intricacies of economic modeling. That is not the proper function of a Daubert motion. This is not a case in which an expert is unable to articulate a rationale for his methodology; nor is it a case where the proffered rationale is patently flawed or unreasonable."). Where, as here, MacKie-Mason's [45] methodologies are not clearly unsound or unreasonable, this Court declines to exclude his testimony on a Daubert motion.

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, Defendants News Corporation, News America Inc., News America Marketing FSI L.L.C., and News America Marketing In-Store Services L.L.C.'s motion for summary judgment dismissing this antitrust action is denied. In addition, Defendants' motions in limine to exclude portions of the testimony of Dr. Jeffrey MacKie-Mason, and all of the testimony of Dr. Paul Farris, are denied.

The Clerk of Court is directed to terminate the motions pending at ECF Nos. 282, 285, and 286.

Opinion

[*175] MEMORANDUM OF DECISION AND ORDER

This case arises out of the negotiation and [3] enforcement of a subcontracting clause in the New England Regional Council of Carpenters (the "Carpenters") collective bargaining agreements ("CBAs") with non-party construction companies and construction managers. Plaintiffs allege that the Carpenters have used the subcontracting clause of their CBAs to expand the scope of work assigned to Carpenters to include work traditionally assigned to plaintiff organizations. Plaintiffs contend that this conduct constitutes anticompetitive behavior, in violation of sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. §§ 1 and 2 (Count I), and unfair labor practices, in violation of 29 U.S.C. § 187 (Count II).

The Carpenters move for summary judgment on both counts. With respect to Count I, the Carpenters argue that the non-statutory labor exemption and the "construction industry proviso" provided in Section 8(e) of the National Labor Relations Board Act ("NLRA"), 29 U.S.C. § 158(e), shield their actions from antitrust scrutiny. The Carpenters also contend that they are not liable under Count II because, if shielded by the construction industry proviso, their conduct does not violate the NLRA.

I agree. The Carpenters have demonstrated that the construction industry proviso and non-statutory labor exemption apply to shield [4] their conduct arising out of lawful collective bargaining relationships. Plaintiffs fail to adduce evidence sufficient to raise a material dispute with respect to whether such agreements in fact arose as part of lawful collective bargaining relationships. Accordingly, the Carpenters' summary judgment motion (doc. # 85) is granted.

I. STANDARD OF REVIEW

Summary judgment is appropriate when the record demonstrates that "there is no genuine dispute as to any material fact and the movant is entitled to judgment as a matter of law." Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(a); see also Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc., 477 U.S. 242, 256, 106 S. Ct. 2505, 91 L. Ed. 2d 202 (1986) (plaintiff must present affirmative evidence in order to defeat a properly supported motion for summary judgment). A district court applies the same standard "whether summary judgment is granted on the merits or on an affirmative defense such as the statute of limitations." Giordano v. Mkt. Am., Inc., 599 F.3d 87, 93 (2d Cir. 2009) (citing Buttry v. Gen. Signal Corp., 68 F.3d 1488, 1492 (2d Cir. 1995)).

[*176] When ruling on a summary judgment motion, the court must construe the facts of record in the light most favorable to the nonmoving party and must resolve all ambiguities and draw all reasonable inferences against the moving party. Anderson, 477 U.S. at 255; Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 587, 106 S. Ct. 1348, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538 (1986); Adickes v. S.H. Kress & Co., 398 U.S. 144, 158-59, 90 S. Ct. 1598, 26 L. Ed. 2d 142 (1970); see also Aldrich v. Randolph Cent. Sch. Dist., 963 F.2d. 520, 523 (2d Cir.), cert. denied, 506 U.S. 965, 113 S. Ct. 440, 121 L. Ed. 2d 359 (1992) (court is required to "resolve all ambiguities and draw all inferences in favor of the nonmoving party"). When [5] a motion for summary judgment is properly supported by documentary and testimonial evidence, however, the nonmoving party may not rest upon the mere allegations or denials of his pleadings, but must present sufficient probative evidence to establish a genuine issue of material fact. Celotex Corp. v. Catrett, 477 U.S. 317, 327, 106 S. Ct. 2548, 91 L. Ed. 2d 265 (1986); Colon v. Coughlin, 58 F.3d 865, 872 (2d Cir. 1995).

"Only when reasonable minds could not differ as to the import of the evidence is summary judgment proper." Bryant v. Maffucci, 923 F.2d 979, 982 (2d Cir. 1991); see also Suburban Propane v. Proctor Gas, Inc., 953 F.2d 780, 788 (2d Cir. 1992). If the nonmoving party submits evidence that is "merely colorable," or is not "significantly probative," summary judgment may be granted. Anderson, 477 U.S. at 249-50.

> The mere existence of some alleged factual dispute between the parties will not defeat an otherwise properly supported motion for summary judgment; the requirement is that there be no genuine issue of material fact. As to materiality, the substantive law will identify which facts are material. Only disputes over facts that might affect the outcome of the suit under the governing law will properly preclude the entry of summary judgment. Factual disputes that are irrelevant or unnecessary will not be counted.

Id. at 247-48. To present a "genuine" issue of material fact, there must be contradictory evidence "such that a reasonable jury could return a verdict for [6] the non-moving party." Id. at 248.

If the nonmoving party has failed to make a sufficient showing on an essential element of his case with respect to which he has the burden of proof at trial, then summary judgment is appropriate. Celotex, 477 U.S. at 322. In such a situation, "there can be 'no genuine issue as to any material fact,' since a complete failure of proof concerning an essential element of the nonmoving party's case necessarily renders all other facts immaterial." Id. at 322-23; accord Goenaga v. March of Dimes Birth Defects Found., 51 F.3d 14, 18 (2d Cir. 1995) (movant's burden satisfied if he can point to an absence of evidence to support an essential element of nonmoving party's claim). In short, if there is no genuine issue of material fact, summary judgment may enter. Celotex, 477 U.S. at 323.

II. BACKGROUND[1]

A more detailed recitation of the facts is set forth in my ruling on the Carpenters' motion to dismiss (doc. # 17). See Conn. [*177] Ironworkers Emplrs. Assoc. v. New Eng. Reg'l Council of Carpenters, No. 3:10-cv-165 (SRU), 2012 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 37523, 2012 WL 951793, at *2-6 (D. Conn. Mar. 20, 2012). Plaintiffs ("Ironworkers") are a district council, seven locals affiliated with construction trade unions, four construction contractors, and two trade organizations. Defendant (the "Carpenters") [7] is a labor organization that operates throughout New England. Ironworkers allege that the Carpenters have used their subcontracting agreements in order to expand the scope of work that is assigned to them by construction managers who are signatories to their CBAs. Ironworkers contend that such a practice violates section 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act and section 8(b)(4) of the NLRA.

A. Relevant Work and Market Area

The "relevant work" at issue in the case includes: exterior building enclosure systems such as exterior metal panels, composite wall panels, foam panels, and insulated panel systems; exterior panelized window systems, punched windows, curtain wall, store fronts; and metal roofing systems and related components. The relevant work has been the subject of a series of jurisdictional disputes between the parties. Def.'s Local Rule ("D.L.R.") 56(a)(1) Stmt. ¶ 68.

The "relevant market area" for Ironworkers' purposes is Connecticut, Rhode Island and Western Massachusetts. There were 8,030 construction projects built in that area between 2009 and 2014.

B. The Claims

Ironworkers' claims concern the enforcement of subcontracting provisions in the Carpenters' CBAs. The subcontracting clause in certain CBAs bars signatories from [8] subcontracting work to any firm that is not also a signatory to the Carpenters' CBAs. D.L.R. ¶¶ 29, 31, 33. The Carpenters argue that those provisions are commonplace in the construction industry, and point to similar provisions in CBAs to which Ironworkers are signatories. See D.L.R. ¶¶ 51, 55, 56. Ironworkers argue that the Carpenters used the subcontracting clause of the CBAs to act in concert with various non-party general contractors and construction managers to prevent plaintiff labor organizations from performing, bidding on, or benefitting from the performance of relevant work. Ironworkers contend that enforcement of these subcontracting clauses conflicts with the traditional industry practice and permits them to obtain work traditionally performed by Iron Workers, Sheet Metal Workers, and Glaziers. Prior to 2009, the Carpenters had never sought to bid on or perform the relevant work. Since 2008, however, the Carpenters have worked to ensure that bids for relevant work are submitted only by employers, contractors and subcontractors who are signatory to the Carpenters' agreement. Ironworkers allege that the above-described conduct is aimed at forcing plaintiff employers and [9] signatories of plaintiff labor organizations to enter into CBAs with Carpenters, which would extend the representative base of Carpenters and freeze plaintiff labor organizations and their members off job sites.

Ironworkers' allegations included seven examples of projects for which the Carpenters entered into an agreement with a construction manager allegedly in violation of the antitrust or labor laws. The non-party construction companies and their associated projects are as follows: (1) Suffolk Construction Company ("Suffolk"), 360 State Street Project, New Haven, Connecticut; (2) Dimeo Construction ("Dimeo"), New Rowe Residences, New Haven, Connecticut; (3) Turner Construction ("Turner"), St. Francis Hospital, Hartford, Connecticut; (4) Bond Brothers ("Bond"), [*178] Bryant University Project, Smithfield, Rhode Island; (5) E. Turgeon ("Turgeon"), Immaculate Conception Catholic Regional School, Cranston, Rhode Island; (6) Berry & Sons ("Berry"), Bay State Medical Center Hospital Project, Springfield, Massachusetts; and (7) Fusco, Inc. ("Fusco"), Schools Project, New London, Connecticut.

A fuller statement of the agreements associated with the above projects is laid out in my ruling on the [10] motion to dismiss (doc. # 17). See *Conn. Ironworkers, 2012 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 37523, 2012 WL 951793, at 4-6. Each project involved an agreement between the construction manager and the Carpenters to assign relevant work to Carpenters' signatories in accordance with the CBA. Ironworkers claim that such agreements violate sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. §§ 1 and 2 (Count I).

In Count II, plaintiff M.R.S. Enterprises ("MRS") alleges that Carpenters violated 29 U.S.C. § 187 by forcing Turgeon to cancel MRS's contract. Turgeon cancelled MRS's contract because MRS intended to hire plaintiff union members and not Carpenters' signatories. MRS alleges that Turgeon's actions were caused by Carpenters' threat to enforce their subcontracting agreement with Turgeon, which required the relevant work to be performed by Carpenters' union members.

III. DISCUSSION

As a general rule, agreements to refrain from dealing with others, such as the union signatory subcontracting clause at issue here, are "vulnerable to challenge under federal antitrust laws unless they are protected by both the construction industry proviso and by an exemption from antitrust scrutiny." Local 210, Laborer's Intern. Union of North America v. Labor Relations Division Assoc. General Contractors of America, N.Y.S. Chapter, Inc., 844 F.2d 69, 73 (2d Cir. 1988). The Carpenters contend that the "construction industry proviso" of section 8(e) of the NLRA and the non-statutory labor exemption to the antitrust laws permit them to enter [11] into the challenged union signatory subcontracting clause. Pls.' Opp'n to Def.'s Mot. Summ. J. at 12, 22. The Carpenters further claim that, if their conduct falls within the above exceptions to antitrust and labor laws, they are also exempt from liability for any alleged violations of 29 U.S.C. § 187.

If a defendant can introduce evidence sufficient to establish an affirmative defense, a plaintiff may only avoid summary judgment by introducing evidence to counter that assertion. Eagleston v. Guido, 41 F.3d 865, 873 (2d Cir. 1994) (affirming grant of summary judgment on qualified immunity defense because undisputed evidence showed that officer's conduct was objectively reasonable); see also Angevine v. State Farm Fire & Cas. Co., 189 F.3d 460 (2d Cir. 1999) (unreported) (affirming grant of summary judgment in favor of defendant when plaintiff failed to introduce evidence tending to show that insurance company's affirmative defense did not apply). In order to defeat a motion for summary judgment based on a well-supported affirmative defense, a plaintiff must "adduce[] evidence . . . sufficient to create a genuine issue of material fact" with respect to whether the affirmative defense applies. La

*Barbera v. R. Rio Trucking, No. 03CV1508 (SLT) (AKT), 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 54739, 2007 WL 2177063, at 4 (E.D.N.Y. July 27, 2007); In re Cardtronics ATM Fee Notice Litig., 874 F. Supp. 2d 916, 923 (S.D. Cal. 2012), aff'd, 559 Fed. Appx. 633 (9th Cir. 2014) (summary judgment in favor of defendant proper when plaintiffs failed [12] to offer evidence to rebut defendant's establishment of affirmative defense).

[*179] Because I conclude that the construction industry proviso and non-statutory labor exemption to the antitrust laws apply to shield the Carpenters' conduct, I do not reach the substance of Ironworkers' antitrust allegations. Furthermore, because the construction industry proviso countenances Carpenters' conduct that is the subject of MRS' unfair labor practices claim, I hold that MRS will be unable to establish a section 187 violation. Ironworkers have failed to raise a material dispute of fact with respect to those issues. Accordingly, the proviso and non-statutory labor exemption shield the defendant from liability and warrant a grant of the Carpenters' motion for summary judgment on all counts.

A. Antitrust Claims (Count I)

The Carpenters contend that the construction industry proviso of section 8(e) of the NLRA and the non-statutory labor exemption to the antitrust laws permit Carpenters to enter into the challenged subcontracting clauses.

1. "Construction Industry Proviso"

The Carpenters' subcontracting agreements with the named construction managers will be subject to antitrust scrutiny unless they fall within the construction industry proviso of NLRA section 8(e) [13] . In 1959, Congress enacted the Landrum-Griffin amendments to the NLRA. The amendments included section 8(e), which is commonly referred to as the "hot-cargo" provision. It provides:

> It shall be an unfair labor practice for any labor organization and any employer to enter into any contract or agreement, express or implied, whereby such employer ceases or refrains or agrees to cease or refrain from handling, using, selling, transporting or otherwise dealing in any of the products of any other employer, or to cease doing business with any other person, and any contract or agreement entered into heretofore or hereafter containing such an agreement shall be to such extent unenforceable and void: Provided, That nothing in this subsection shall apply to an agreement between a labor organization and an employer in the construction industry relating to the contracting or subcontracting of work to be done at the site of the construction, alteration, painting, or repair of a building, structure, or other work: Provided further, That for the purposes of this subsection and subsection (b)(4)(B) of this section the terms "any employer", "any person engaged in commerce or an industry affecting commerce", and "any person" when used in relation to the terms "any other producer, processor, or manufacturer", [14] "any other employer", or "any other person" shall not include persons in the relation of a jobber, manufacturer, contractor, or subcontractor working on the goods or premises of the jobber or manufacturer or performing parts of an integrated process of production in the apparel and clothing industry: Provided further, That nothing in this subchapter shall prohibit the enforcement of any agreement which is within the foregoing exception.

29 U.S.C. § 158(e) (emphasis in bold added). The language in bold is commonly referred to as the "construction industry proviso" and generally exempts those in the construction industry from the prohibitions of section 8(e). The Carpenters contend that Ironworkers' antitrust claims fail because the union signatory subcontracting clause with the construction employers is lawful under the proviso.

Plainly read, the construction industry proviso applies to agreements (1) between [*180] a labor organization and an employer in the construction industry; (2) relating to the contracting or subcontracting of work; (3) to be done at the site of construction. 29 U.S.C. § 158(e). However, a court is required to read section 8(e) light of its "statutory setting and the circumstances surrounding its enactment." Connell Construction Co. v. Plumbers & Steamfitters Local Union No. 100, 421 U.S. 616, 628, 95 S. Ct. 1830, 44 L. Ed. 2d 418 (1975). In Connell, the Court held that, even though Congress expressly permitted labor organizations and employers in the construction industry to enter into agreements otherwise prohibited, Congress intended the proviso [15] to apply principally to agreements in the context of a collective-bargaining relationship. Id. at 629-33. Moreover, the Second Circuit has held that, in order to adequately conduct such an analysis, the court must also determine whether the practice is consistent with "Congress' perceptions regarding the status quo in the construction industry [in 1959]." Local 210, 844 F.2d at 75-76 (citing Woelke & Romero Framing, Inc. v. N.L.R.B., 456 U.S. 645, 657, 102 S. Ct. 2071, 72 L. Ed. 2d 398 (1982)) (internal quotation marks omitted). Thus, the final inquiry requires a court to consider whether the agreements were obtained in the context of a collective-bargaining relationship of the type that was contemplated at the time of section 8(e)'s enactment.

The Carpenters contend that the subcontracting clauses fall within the construction industry proviso because they satisfy all prongs of the test, including that the agreements containing the clauses were obtained in the context of a collective bargaining relationship.

Ironworkers counter that the construction industry proviso does not apply here because the defendant has not shown that: (1) the parties with whom the Carpenters entered into a CBA were "employers within the construction industry"; (2) that the conduct occurred within the context of a collective bargaining agreement; and (3) the conduct [16] at issue is consistent with Congress' perception of practices in the construction industry in 1959. Each of the Ironworkers' three objections relies on a strained interpretation of the construction industry proviso that is unsupported by legal authority. None of the Ironworkers' objections raises a dispute of material fact with respect to the proviso.

a. Employers within the Construction Industry

Ironworkers argue that the construction industry proviso requires that the employers must not only be "within the construction industry," but that the employers must be an employer "within the construction industry, with respect to a particular project." Pls.' Opp'n to Def.'s Mot. Summ. J. at 18. Ironworkers point to the fact that, in some instances, a construction manager would award a subcontract to Carpenters, even though there were no carpenters employed on the job. Ironworkers argue that the failure to employ carpenters on a specific job is evidence that the subcontracting agreements are outside the scope of the construction industry proviso.

Ironworkers cite no support for that argument. A plain reading of the statute indicates that the term "employer in the construction industry" is just [17] that, an employer in the construction industry—no more and no less. The fact that a construction manager might be "employed in a managerial capacity and will not employ its own workers on the Project does not remove it from the category of 'construction employer.'" Albany Specialties, Inc. v. Board of Educ., No. 99-CV-1462 (TJM), 1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 21040, 1999 WL 1215291, at *8 (N.D.N.Y. Oct. 1, 1999). Moreover, Ironworkers' argument was specifically rejected [*181] in A.L. Adams Constr. Co. v. Georgia Power Co., 733 F.2d 853, 858 (11th Cir. 1984) (rejecting plaintiff's argument that general contractor who subcontracted out all of its work did not qualify as an "employer in the construction industry").

b. In the Context of a Collective Bargaining Agreement

Courts interpreting the construction industry proviso have held that the "mere existence of a labor agreement that was entered into before employees were hired and before the union had demonstrated that it represented a majority of the workforce (a prehire agreement), demonstrates a sufficient collective bargaining relationship to invoke the protection of the Construction Industry Proviso under Connell." Albany Specialties, 1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 21040, 1999 WL 1215291, at *6 (citing Bldg. & Constr. Trades Council v. Associated Builders and Contractors of Mass./R.I., Inc. (Boston Harbor), 507 U.S. 218, 229, 113 S. Ct. 1190, 122 L. Ed. 2d 565 (1993)) (internal footnotes omitted). That is because prehire agreements are seen as "the very means by which unions and employers typically initiate a bargaining relationship in the construction industry." A.L. Adams Constr., 733 F.2d at 856.

In the denial of the Carpenters' motion to [18] dismiss, I held that the Carpenters could only seek protection under the construction industry proviso if they could establish that the subcontracting agreements were sought or negotiated in the context of a collective bargaining relationship. See Conn. Ironworkers Emplrs. Assoc. v. New Eng.

Reg'l Council of Carpenters, No. 3:10-cv-165 (SRU), 2012 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 37523, 2012 WL 951793, at *9 (D. Conn. Mar. 20, 2012). The Carpenters could do so by showing that the subcontracting clause at issue was part of a valid CBA.

In support of the instant motion, the Carpenters came forward with evidence demonstrating that each of the subcontracting clauses at issue was part and parcel of an existing CBA. D.L.R. ¶¶ 29-34; Def.'s Mot. Summ. J. Br. at 15. Ironworkers did not introduce any evidence that raised a material dispute with respect to that fact.

Rather, Ironworkers countered by asserting that the subcontracting clauses at issue, though part and parcel of an existing CBA, were being enforced in a manner outside the scope of the CBA. Pls.' Opp'n to Def.'s Mot. Summ. J. 24. In support of their claim, Ironworkers argued that the subcontracting clauses in the CBAs did not apply any time the construction projects were subject to a project labor agreement ("PLA"). [19] Mot. Summ. J. Hr'g Tr. at 43. Thus, the argument goes, in a project covered by a PLA, any attempt to enforce such clauses was an attempt to enforce an agreement outside the scope of a collective bargaining relationship.

Ironworkers falter in their effort to show that the CBAs did not apply to projects governed by a PLA. At oral argument on this motion, I asked Ironworkers to provide legal support for their assertion. Ironworkers could not do so. Rather, Ironworkers relied solely on the language of the PLA to raise an inference that it wholly replaced the existing CBA's subcontracting clause. For example, Ironworkers pointed to the PLA that governed the Bay State Medical Center Hospital Project. Under that PLA, the construction manager, Berry, was given the discretion to hire "any qualified contractor." Def.'s Ex. 70, at 3. Ironworkers argued that the PLA's grant of discretion is in conflict with Berry's CBA with the Carpenters, which provided that the construction manager must use Carpenters-approved subcontractors. Mot. Summ. J. Hr'g Tr. at 30-31.

Ironworkers' argument is mistaken. None of the above evidence indicates that [*182] the CBA and PLA were in conflict. The PLA gave Berry the discretion [20] to hire "any qualified contractor." Berry used its discretion to hire a Carpenters' signatory contractor. The fact that his decision was based on a prior CBA agreement with Carpenters does not negate the fact that it was Berry's decision. There would only be a conflict between the PLA and the CBA if, as a result of the CBA, Berry was forced to hire an unqualified contractor. That would violate the PLA's authorization to hire "any qualified contractor." However, Ironworkers fail to show that the Carpenters' signatory contractor was not qualified. Accordingly, Ironworkers fail to introduce sufficient evidence to raise a material dispute regarding whether the two agreements are in conflict.[2]

Ironworkers also attempted to point to the PLA associated with the 360 State Street Project in order to show a conflict between it and the Carpenters' subcontracting agreement. The PLA contains language indicating that the subcontractor, not Carpenters, retained "full and exclusive authority for the management of its operations(s) . . . including the hiring . . . of its employees." Def.'s Ex. 88, Art. V., Section 1. That clause, on its face, looks like it is in direct conflict with Carpenters' subcontracting agreement with Suffolk, which required certain subcontractors to hire Carpenters' labor. However, a closer look at the PLA indicates that the purported "full and exclusive authority" was actually subject to—and thus subordinate to—the existing CBA. Def.'s Ex. 88, Art. V., Section 1 (subcontractors retained full and exclusive authority, "[e]xcept as expressly limited by other provisions of this Agreement," including a provision indicating that "all Subcontractors recognize the Unions signatory hereto as the sole and exclusive collective-bargaining [22] representative of its craft hourly wage employees employed on the Project . . . [and] [t]he Local collective bargaining Agreement(s) will be adhered to . . . ." Def.'s Ex. 88, Section 2(a), Section V. Thus, Ironworkers again fail in their attempt to raise a material dispute regarding an alleged conflict between a PLA and any of the CBAs at issue.[3] Because no conflict has been established, Ironworkers fail in their effort to provide evidence that the challenged subcontracting clauses are being enforced outside the scope of lawful CBAs.

[2] I should note that there is also some evidence indicating that the CBA was incorporated into the PLA. Each PLA at issue stated that its provisions were subject to the existing Schedules A. Although neither party could procure a list of the Schedules A listed in the PLAs, a plain reading of the PLAs suggests that the Schedules A were a list of CBAs to be incorporated into the PLAs. See Def.'s Ex. 70, at 4. I gave Ironworkers the opportunity to dispute this inference through post-hearing supplemental [21] memorandum, but they have failed to do so. Furthermore, Ironworkers could not point to any legal authority indicating that CBAs were legally outside the scope of the PLAs.

The record demonstrates, as a matter of law, that each of the subcontracting agreements was entered into as part of an existing, valid CBA, and thus necessarily arose in the context of a collective [23] bargaining relationship. Ironworkers have failed to raise a material dispute with respect to the issue and have failed to cite any legal authority compelling a contrary conclusion.

[*183] c. Construction Industry Practice in 1959

Finally, Ironworkers argue that they do not object to the subcontracting clauses themselves, but how they are being enforced. The Ironworkers pivot away from cases upholding the validity of similar subcontracting clauses and distinguish those cases on the ground that none of them considered the enforcement of subcontracting clauses against contractors whose role in the construction industry did not exist in 1959. Ironworkers argue that construction managers did not exist in 1959 and, therefore, that the Carpenters have not shown that the enforcement of the work assignment agreements against construction managers in the 2000s is consistent with the 1959 status quo.

Ironworkers' argument misses the point of Local 210's test for permissibility under the construction industry proviso. See Local 210, 844 F.2d at 75. Courts must interpret the proviso in light of Congress' concerns regarding the construction industry in 1959. Id. at 75. What Congress saw in the industry was restrictive subcontracting clauses [24] in collective bargaining agreements limiting the ability of employers to deal with non-union or non-signatory subcontractors. Id. The issue Congress confronted was the phenomenon of restrictive subcontracting clauses between employers in the construction industry and labor. Nothing suggests that Congress was particularly concerned with the title of an individual employer in the construction industry. Rather, Congress was concerned with whether the employer was in the construction industry. Construction managers are in the construction industry and are involved in the phenomenon of restrictive subcontracting. Even if the title "construction manager" did not exist in 1959, the concept of a construction industry employer engaged in subcontracting certainly did.[4]

The Carpenters have established the requisite elements to be afforded the protection of the construction industry proviso and Ironworkers have failed to raise any triable issue of fact [25] with respect to any of the elements.

2. Non-Statutory Labor Exemption

Even if a clause is protected by the construction industry proviso, "it is not necessarily beyond the reach of the federal antitrust laws." Local 210, 844 F.2d at 79. In Connell Constr. Co. v. Plumbers & Steamfitters Local Union No. 100, the Supreme Court recognized that certain clauses in collective bargaining agreements, even those concerning the construction industry, can act as a "direct restraint on the business market" in a manner having "substantial anticompetitive effects, both actual and potential." 421 U.S. 616, 625, 95 S. Ct. 1830, 44 L. Ed. 2d 418 (1975). Restrictive clauses like the one at issue in this case may be challenged under federal antitrust laws unless the clause is protected by both the construction industry proviso and an antitrust labor exemption. See Local 210, 844 F.2d at 73.

"[T]he [Sherman] Act is aimed primarily at combinations having commercial objectives and is applied only to a very limited extent to organizations, like labor unions, which normally have other objectives." Klor's Inc. v. Broadway-Hale Stores, Inc., 359 U.S. 207, 213 n.7, 79 S. Ct. 705, 3 L. Ed. 2d 741 (1959). Nevertheless, "[i]t would be a surprising thing if Congress, in order to prevent a misapplication of [antitrust] legislation to labor unions, [*184] had bestowed upon such unions complete and unreviewable authority to aide business groups [26] to frustrate its primary objective." Allen Bradley Co. v. Local Union No. 3, Int'l Bhd. of Elec. Workers, 325 U.S. 797, 809-10, 65 S. Ct. 1533, 89 L. Ed. 1939 (1945).

[3] After oral argument, I asked Ironworkers to provide support for their contention that Carpenters' enforcement of their CBA was contrary to public bid statutes. Ironworkers failed to mention any specific public bid law that the Carpenters allegedly violated in their attempt to enforce provisions of the CBA agreement. Accordingly I conclude that no dispute of material fact exists with respect to the allegations that the Carpenters enforced their CBA contrary to any public bid law.

[4] I also should note that the assertion that construction managers did not exist in 1959 is quite dubious, given that Carpenters have pointed to two pre-1959 cases involving construction managers. Nevertheless, that factual question is not material.

Courts have long recognized the tension between national antitrust policy and national labor policy. In light of the competing interests of congressional policy favoring both collective bargaining under the NLRA and free competition in business, two antitrust exemptions are recognized. Connell, 421 U.S. at 622. The statutory exemption, which the parties agree does not apply here, provides that union activity is exempt from antitrust liability "so long as [the] union acts in its self-interest and does not combine with non-labor groups."[5] United States v. Hutcheson, 312 U.S. 219, 232, 61 S. Ct. 463, 85 L. Ed. 788 (1941). The non-statutory exemption provides that the restraints are lawful so long as the alleged anticompetitive conduct is: inherent in the collective-bargaining process, concerns only the parties to the collective bargaining relationship, and relates to wages, hours, conditions of employment, or other relevant subjects of collective bargaining. See Connell, 421 U.S. at 622.

In this circuit, a court assessing whether an agreement [27] is protected by the non-statutory labor exemption should consider the relative impact of the agreement on the product market and the interests of the union members. See Local 210, 844 F.2d at 79. The Local 210 decision also instructs the district court to balance the conflicting policies embodied in labor and antitrust laws. Id.

The court must first consider whether the agreement at issue furthers goals that are protected by national labor law and are within the scope of traditionally mandatory subjects of collective bargaining. Id. Traditionally, mandatory subjects in a collective bargaining agreement include wages, hours, fringe benefits, conditions of employment, and other subjects that are more likely to embody legitimate employee concerns about compensation, workplace, or security, and less likely to be restraints on competition. See 1B Phillip E. Areeda & Herbert Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law, at ¶ 256d3 (3d ed. 2007). Courts have held that subcontracting agreements—"the replacement of employees in the existing bargaining unit with those of an independent contractor to do the same work under similar conditions of employment"—can be mandatory subjects of collective bargaining. See Fibreboard Paper Products Corp. v. N.L.R.B., 379 U.S. 203, 215, 85 S. Ct. 398, 13 L. Ed. 2d 233 (1964). Even though the Court in [28] Fibreboard declined to extend its holding to all types of subcontracting, it held that the "substitution of one group of workers for another to perform the same task in the same [location] under the ultimate control of the same employer" is a mandatory subject of collective bargaining. Id. at 224 (Stewart, J., concurring).

Second, the court must consider whether the agreement imposes a direct restraint on the market that has substantial anticompetitive effects that do not follow naturally from the collective bargaining agreement. Local 210, 844 F.2d at 79-80. If the agreement is a legitimate collective bargaining agreement, then the [*185] "touchstone in assessing its validity must be the policies embodied in federal labor law." Id. at 81. In Local 210, the Court relied heavily on the fact that the subcontracting clause at issue was part of an otherwise valid collective bargaining agreement. Id. at 80. The Court held that, "in seeking the inclusion of the clause in the agreement, the union was pursuing a legitimate bargaining objective . . . to promote the close community of interests among construction workers within its jurisdiction." (internal citations, quotation marks and alterations omitted). Id. at 81. Accordingly, because the Court saw no evidence [29] of an "antitrust conspiracy otherwise existing," both the construction industry proviso and the non-statutory labor exemption "preclude[d] any further antitrust scrutiny." Id.[6] The Court was not concerned with the threat that such a holding might allow the union to achieve monopoly status. Rather, the Court held that such a threat "would not, standing alone, necessarily mandate antitrust liability." Id.

[5] The Carpenters have not claimed that the challenged agreements fall within the statutory exemption. In any event, the agreements would not fall under the statutory exemption because the agreements concern both union and non-union conduct. See Local 210, 844 F.2d at 79.

[6] See also H. Perritt, Jr., Keeping the Government Out of the Way: Project Labor Agreements Under the Supreme Court's Boston Harbor Decision, 12 Lab. Law. 69, 90 (1996) ("[T]he more logical relationship between the two statutes is that conduct allowed by the NLRA also is within the labor exemptions to the antitrust laws. In other words, if a project labor agreement is permitted by section 8(e), it may not be the basis of antitrust liability.").

In denying the Carpenters' motion to dismiss, I gave Ironworkers the opportunity to introduce evidence that tended to show that the subcontracting agreements at issue were not embodied in a legitimate collective bargaining agreement.[7] Ironworkers once again rely on their assertion that the PLAs replace rather than incorporate the CBAs. Ironworkers contend that any attempt to enforce Carpenters' subcontracting [30] agreements outlined in the CBAs constitutes an agreement outside of the collective bargaining relationship. That argument has been considered and rejected in my discussion of the applicability of the construction industry proviso. See supra, Section III.A.1.

Ironworkers also allege that the Carpenters fail to satisfy elements of the non-statutory labor exemption as outlined in American Steel Erectors v. Local Union No. 7, 536 F.3d 68, 77 (1st Cir. 2008). Pls.' Opp'n to Def.'s Mot. Summ. J. at 24. In support of that argument, Ironworkers cite a number of cases, none of which involves a subcontracting agreement similar to those in the instant case. Id. For example, Ironworkers rely on U.S. Info. Sys., Inc. v. Int'l Bhd. of Elec. Workers Local Union No. 3, AFL-CIO—a case in which a plaintiff alleged that the defendants resorted to their "tried and true tactic of creating fear . . . sabotage and vandalism . . . if a [competition union] contractor is awarded the job." *No. 00-CV-4763 (RMB) (JCF), 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 56229, 2007 WL 2219513, at 2 (S.D.N.Y. Aug. 3, 2007), report and recommendation [31] adopted sub nom. United States Info. Sys. v. IBEW Local Union No. 3, No. 00-CV-4763 (RMB) (JCF), 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 69760, 2007 WL 2746902 (S.D.N.Y. Sept. 18, 2007), aff'd, 366 F. App'x 290 (2d Cir. 2010). Ironworkers also point to Allen Bradley Co. v. Local Union No. 3, Int'l Bhd. of Elec. Workers, a case in which the Supreme Court refused to apply the non-statutory labor exemption to an agreement that prohibited employers from buying goods manufactured by companies employing non-union labor. 325 U.S. 797, 809, 65 S. Ct. 1533, 89 L. Ed. 1939 [*186] (1945). All of the alleged agreements in those cases shared one of two characteristics: either they did not arise out of a collective bargaining relationship or they involved an agreement that far exceeded the scope of a lawful CBA.

In this case, however, each subcontracting agreement did not just arise in the context of a collective bargaining relationship, but also was a part of an existing CBA. D.L.R. ¶¶ 29-34. Furthermore, Ironworkers fail to cite any cases indicating that the type of subcontracting agreement at issue is anything other than a lawful subject of a CBA.[8]

This case is dissimilar to Connell, where the Court held that a union used extra-legal methods to pursue the legal goal of organizing as many subcontractors as possible. See Connell, 421 U.S. at 625. In Connell, the Court focused on the fact that the labor union's agreements with a general contractor were not designed to protect union members. Id. at 631. The union was unable to argue that the agreement was part of a valid collective bargaining relationship between the union and the general contractor because the contractor did not employ union laborers and the union had no interest in bargaining with the general contractor on their behalf. Id. at 619. Rather than arising out of the collective bargaining process designed to protect union member's labor interests, the agreements in Connell sought only to pressure subcontractors into recognizing the union as the representative of their employees. Id. at 631. The Court was concerned with the fact that the agreement between the general contractor and the defendant-union "did not flow naturally from [33] elimination of competition over wages and working conditions." Id. at 635. Similarly, in Larry V. Muko, Inc. v. Sw. Pa. Bldg. & Constr. Trades Council, the court held that an agreement was subject to antitrust scrutiny when it arose not out of a CBA but rather as a result of the defendant's picketing the employer for not hiring union labor. 609 F.2d 1368, 1371 (3d Cir. 1979).

[7] The Carpenters have come forward with evidence that the subcontracting agreements are part of the existing CBAs, which, absent evidence to the contrary, I conclude serve the legitimate goal of controlling the workplace. D.L.R. ¶¶ 29-34; Def.'s Mot. Summ. J. Br. at 6-9.

[8] Courts have also looked to the history of bargaining over a particular subject as evidence that an agreement relating to that subject fell within the non-statutory labor exemption. See Local Union No. 189, Amalgamated Meat Cutters & Butcher Workmen of N. Am., AFL-CIO v. Jewel Tea Co., 381 U.S. 676, 697, 85 S. Ct. 1596, 14 L. Ed. 2d 640 (1965). In the instant case, the Carpenters [32] point to the fact that Ironworkers have similar subcontracting agreements with their union-affiliated employers. That is even further evidence that such agreements are the proper subject of a CBA.

Ironworkers attempt to raise a similar issue of fact with respect to Carpenters' attempt to enforce subcontracting agreements with various construction managers. For example, Ironworkers point to grievance settlements reached by the Carpenters and their various construction managers as evidence that the Carpenters are attempting to unlawfully enforce the subcontracting agreements. Pls.' Opp'n to Def.'s Mot. Summ. J. at 3, 5, 9. In those cases, the Carpenters would contact the construction manager to inform it that they would be filing a grievance based on the failure to assign work according to the existing CBA. As a result of such communications, the construction manager would typically sign an agreement indicating that it had violated the relevant CBA and that, in the future, it would assign the work to Carpenters in accordance with the CBA. Def.'s Ex. [34] 30. Alternatively, if the construction manager felt it had not violated the CBA, it would refuse to sign such an agreement. Pls.' Local Rule 56(a)(2) Stmt. ¶ 48; Pls.' Suppl. Mem. in Opp'n to Def.'s Mot. Summ. J. at 9.

[*187] The described practice does not amount to evidence of an antitrust violation because it merely shows that the Carpenters were attempting to enforce their subcontracting agreements. Unless Ironworkers can show that such agreements are unlawful, a showing of attempts to enforce the agreements is beside the point. Ironworkers have failed to introduce evidence sufficient for a fact finder to conclude that the subcontracting provisions at issue were anything but lawful provisions of a valid CBA. Furthermore, Ironworkers have failed to point to any evidence of an antitrust conspiracy. Accordingly, I hold that the subcontracting agreements are protected by the non-statutory labor exemption. See Local 210, 844 F.2d at 81. I do not reach the question whether, absent the non-statutory labor exemption and the construction industry proviso, the Carpenters' conduct violated sections 1 or 2 of the Sherman Act.

B. Unfair Labor Practices (Count II)

In the second count, plaintiff MRS alleges that the Carpenters, in concert with their signatory [35] construction employers, violated 29 U.S.C. § 158(b)(4) (section 8(b)(4) of the NLRA) by encouraging and inducing its signatory contractors to refrain from entering into contracts with MRS in violation of 29 U.S.C. § 187. MRS claims that the Carpenters have a history of pursuing grievances against construction managers who are believed to have violated their CBAs by assigning covered work to non-Carpenters' signatory contractors. Pls.' Opp'n to Def.'s Mot. Summ. J. at 29. One of the non-Carpenters' signatory contractors was Turgeon Construction. MRS alleges that the Carpenters were not entitled to enforce their subcontracting clause against Turgeon with respect to the assignment of the installation of metal panels because that assignment was not covered by Carpenters' CBA. MRS contends that, notwithstanding the CBA's inapplicability, Carpenters threatened Turgeon with the enforcement of the subcontracting clause. Allegedly out of fear of such enforcement, Turgeon cancelled a portion of its contract with MRS.

Section 8(b)(4) of the NLRA makes it unlawful, inter alia, to threaten, coerce, or restrain any person engaged in commerce or in an industry affecting commerce, where the object thereof is forcing or requiring any person to cease using, selling, handling, transporting, [36] or otherwise dealing in the products of any other producer, processor, or manufacturer, or to cease doing business with any other person. 29 U.S.C. § 158(b)(4). Here, MRS alleges that the Carpenters forced Turgeon, a Carpenters' signatory, to cease doing business with MRS in violation of section 8(b)(4).

The Carpenters move for summary judgment on the basis that MRS fails to state a claim under section 8(b)(4). Specifically, the Carpenters argue that the subcontracting clause is part of a valid CBA and therefore the construction industry proviso allows the restraint. Def.'s Mot. Summ. J. Br. at 24-25. Furthermore, the Carpenters contend that, even if the proviso does not apply, the undisputed facts show that Turgeon unilaterally cancelled the work project without any input from the Carpenters.[9]

My earlier denial of defendant's motion to dismiss the unfair labor practices claim rested on the fact that, at the time, it was still undecided whether the construction industry proviso and non-statutory labor exemption applied. Because

---

[9] The Carpenters also point out that injunctive relief is not available under section 187. I need not address that issue because I have concluded that there has been no unfair labor practices violation.

I now hold both apply [37] with respect to the subcontracting [*188] clause at issue, I conclude as a matter of law that there has been no violation of section 158(b)(4).

Section 158(b)(4) prohibits threats to enforce agreements that are in violation of other provisions of section 158, including section 158(e). See § 158(b)(4)(A). In holding that the construction industry proviso permits Carpenters' subcontracting agreement with Turgeon, I am necessarily holding that the Carpenters have not violated section 158(e) with respect to those contracts. If the Carpenters have not entered into the contracts in violation of section 158(e), they cannot be liable under section 158(b)(4) for threatening to enforce them. Simply put, the Carpenters are not liable for attempting—even threatening—to enforce an otherwise lawful subcontracting agreement. Because MRS has not introduced evidence that, in a light most favorable to the plaintiff, tends to show that the Carpenters have committed a predicate violation of section 158(b)(4), MRS cannot maintain its unfair labor practices claim under section 187.[10] Summary judgment on Count II is granted in favor of the Carpenters.

IV. CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, I conclude that both the construction industry proviso and non-statutory labor exemption apply to the claimed anticompetitive conduct.[11] All of the challenged subcontracting agreements were entered into pursuant to valid CBAs. Ironworkers have failed to introduce evidence sufficient to permit a reasonable jury to find that the CBAs are unlawful or that the Carpenters attempted to enforce them beyond their legal scope. Accordingly, the Carpenters are not subject to antitrust liability for their attempts to enforce the subcontracting agreements at issue. Furthermore, there is no evidence that enforcement of such agreements violates the prohibition on unfair labor practices set forth in section 187. Accordingly, I grant Carpenters' motion for summary judgment on Counts I and II.

The clerk shall enter judgment and close this case.

So ordered at Bridgeport, Connecticut, this 20th day of January 2016.

[10] Because I have concluded that the construction industry proviso applies to shield the Carpenters from any alleged labor violation with respect to their lawful subcontracting agreements, I do not reach the question whether [38] or not an issue of fact was raised with respect to Carpenters' role in Turgeon's rescission of MRS's contract.

[11] Ironworkers moved to strike portions of the Carpenters' reply brief and accompanying exhibits (doc. # 106). Ironworkers argued that Carpenters violated Rule 56 and Local Rule 7(d) by introducing new materials in their reply brief and arguing outside the scope of the discussion of matters raised by [39] Ironworkers' opposition brief. Furthermore, Ironworkers argued that Carpenters violated Rule 56 by using inadmissible evidence in support of its motion for summary judgment. There is no need to strike those portions of the reply brief. See Martin v. Town of Westport, 558 F. Supp. 2d 228, 231 (D. Conn. 2008) ("the court knows the difference between admissible and non-admissible evidence, and would not base a summary judgment decision [on the latter]"). Because I have arrived at my conclusion independent of the Carpenters' arguments in their reply brief and the alleged inadmissible evidence submitted in support of the motion for summary judgment, I deny as moot Ironworkers' motion to strike (doc. # 106).

Each Carpenters' signatory must agree to be bound by the terms of its CBA which, among other things, includes a subcontracting provision that requires signatories to hire subcontractors who are party [*189] to Carpenters' CBA. The text of the pertinent subcontracting provision in the three regions is provided below:

[*132] RULING ON DEFENDANTS' MOTION TO DISMISS, PLAINTIFF'S MOTION FOR PRELIMINARY INJUNCTION, AND PROPOSED INTERVENER'S MOTIONS

HAIGHT, Senior District Judge:

Plaintiff Dr. John M. Robb, D.V.M., a doctor of veterinary medicine licensed in the state of Connecticut, brings this action for injunctive relief and damages under the Sherman Antitrust Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1, against Defendants, the Connecticut Board of Veterinary Medicine (the "Board")[1] and its five constituent [2] members: B. Kenneth Bernhard, Dr. Theresa Cianciolo, D.V.M., Mary Anne O'Neill, Dr. Timothy Plunkett, D.V.M., and Dr. Alfredo Sanchez-Zondono, D.V.M (together, the "Individual Defendants," and with the Board, the "Defendants"). The gravamen of Plaintiff's complaint is that Defendants have conspired to restrain trade through an agreement to remove from the Connecticut market for veterinary services any veterinarian who offers certain reduced dosages of the rabies vaccine to animal-patients, and that the Board is currently effectuating this [*133] anticompetitive scheme through an administrative proceeding against Plaintiff.

On June 12, 2015, Plaintiff filed his initial complaint, a motion for a temporary restraining order ("TRO") and a motion for a preliminary injunction [3] ("PI"), all aimed at forestalling Defendants' administrative proceedings against him. Docs. 1-5. The Court denied Plaintiff's TRO motion on the same day, [Doc. 11], but reserved decision on the PI motion, which is pending. Following a June 18, 2015 hearing with this Court on his PI motion, Plaintiff filed an Amended Complaint. Doc. 30. Defendants thereafter filed a motion to dismiss the Amended Complaint pursuant to Rules 12(b)(1) and 12(b)(6) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, which is also pending. Docs. 39, 44, 46. Non-parties Charter Practices International, LLC and Medical Management International, Inc. ("Proposed Interveners") have filed joint motions to intervene in the action, [Doc. 21], and for joinder in Defendants' motion to dismiss, [Doc. 43]. This Ruling resolves all pending motions.

I. Background

The following recitation is taken principally from Plaintiff's Amended Complaint ("AC"), whose well-pleaded factual allegations the Court takes as true for purposes of this motion to dismiss.

In 2008, Dr. Robb acquired ownership of a Banfield Pet Hospital franchise ("Banfield") in Stamford, Connecticut pursuant to an agreement with Charter Practices International ("CPI"), a corporate franchisor. AC ¶ 8. As part of his practice at the [4] hospital, Dr. Robb administered various animal vaccinations, including that for rabies. In his first several months at the Banfield franchise, he administered "the manufacturer's standard recommended dose" of 1 milliliter of the rabies vaccine to canines, regardless of the dog's size. Id. ¶¶ 19, 22. However, soon thereafter, a significant number of Dr. Robb's animal-patients experienced "vaccine-associated adverse events" or "VAAEs," particularly smaller breeds of dog. Id. ¶ 22. In light of this experience, and after review of a 2005 peer-reviewed study documenting a correlation between animal size and VAAEs,[2] Dr. Robb amended his hospital's vaccination policy such that it would administer only 0.5 milliliters to dogs under ten pounds. Id. ¶ 24. Dr. Robb offered lower dosages because he "was scientifically and morally unsatisfied with the unnecessary adverse reactions in companion animals from one-size-fits-all manufacturer's recommended dosages." Id. ¶ 3. Following the change in protocol, Dr. Robb's hospital saw an immediate reduction in VAAEs and thereafter incrementally expanded its reduced dosage policy to all breeds under fifty pounds. Id. ¶ 25.

According to the Amended Complaint, the resulting success in reducing VAAEs was stark. In the period between 2010 and July 2015, other Banfield franchise hospitals experienced 300 cases of anaphylaxis, "one of the most severe and fatal VAAEs that can occur," leading to six deaths, while Dr. Robb's hospital had no such cases, all while not a single animal contracted any of the diseases for which they were vaccinated. Id. ¶¶ 26-28. Given these circumstances, Dr. Robb vehemently and with manifest conviction and sincerity alleges that he has an "ethical obligation" to provide lower-dose vaccinations to smaller animals and that to do so has "been decisively found to be within the standard of care." Id. ¶¶ 3-4. Further, he experienced a significant consumer demand for his lower-dose [*134] vaccinations. Id. ¶ 3; see also Doc. 31, at 2 ("Patients flocked to his practice").

[1] The Board "is a quasi-private, quasi-public agency established under the laws of the State of Connecticut, charged with regulating the licensing and practice of veterinary medicine in Connecticut." Am. Compl. [Doc. 30] ¶ 9. Pursuant to C.G.S. § 20-196(a), three of the five Board members must be practicing veterinarians. Id. ¶ 60. Here, that role is served by Defendants Ciancolo, Plunkett, and Sanchez-Londono (the "Veterinarian Defendants"). Id. ¶ 61.

Not surprisingly, Dr. Robb's decision to offer lower than manufacturer-recommended doses led to direct conflict with certain institutional interests. The Amended Complaint lists a number of adverse reactions with which Dr. Robb has been contending. [6]

First, the Mars Candy Company, CPI's corporate parent, allegedly in retaliation for Dr. Robb's refusal to accept a "well-below-market" buy-out offer, used Dr. Robb's failure to provide the manufacturer's recommended vaccine dosage as a pretextual justification to terminate without justification his Banfield franchise agreement.[3] AC ¶¶ 30-31.

Second, "the Connecticut Department of Public Health brought charges . . . against Dr. Robb stemming directly from his rabies vaccination procedures." Id. ¶ 33. In an August 28, 2014 letter sent to Dr. Robb by the Board, the Board ordered Dr. Robb to appear "for a hearing on the attached Charges against [him]." Doc. 5-4, at 2-3. The "attached Charges" referenced by the Board's letter consists of an August 1, 2014 "Statement of Charges" issued by the Connecticut Department of Public Health ("DPH"). Id. at 4. The Statement of Charges states that "Pursuant to the General Statutes of Connecticut, §§19a-10 and 19a-14[4], the Department of Public Health . . . brings the following charges against John M. Robb." Id. The principal [7] and relevant charge at-issue against Dr. Robb is that he "instructed employees to administer half doses of rabies vaccines to animals under the weight of fifty pounds." AC ¶ 39. The Statement of Charges recites that, despite Dr. Robb's vehement protestations, the provision of lower than the manufacturer-recommended dosages of the rabies vaccine "constitute[s] grounds for disciplinary action pursuant to the General Statutes of Connecticut, §20-202(2)."[5] Doc. 5-4, at 4. DPH then "prays that: The Connecticut Board of Veterinary Medicine, as authorized in §§19a-17 and 20-202, revoke or order other disciplinary action against the veterinary license of John M. Robb as it deems appropriate and consistent with law." Id. The Board ordered Dr. Robb to appear for a December 2, 2014 hearing on those charges. Id. at 1. It is this administrative proceeding that is at the core of the instant litigation before this Court.

Dr. Robb argues that there is no basis for the administrative action against him because Connecticut "state policy is ambiguous as to vaccination protocols generally and entirely silent on dosage amount."[6] AC ¶ 63. Rather, as

[3] This dispute is being litigated concurrently in this District in front of Judge Chatigny. Charter Practices International v. Robb, No. 12-cv-01768 (RNC).

[4] Section 19a-14 states that DPH has the power to "[c]onduct any necessary review, inspection or investigation regarding qualifications of applicants for licenses or certificates, possible violations of statutes or regulations, and disciplinary matters."

[5] C.G.S. §20-202(2) states that the Board may impose disciplinary action pursuant to Section 19a-17 where, inter alia, there is "proof [8] that [a licensed veterinarian] has been guilty of . . . negligence towards animals[.] In determining whether the holder of such license has acted with negligence, the board may consider standards of care and guidelines published by the American Veterinary Medical Association including, but not limited to, guidelines for the use, distribution and prescribing of prescription drugs."

[6] Dr. Robb was not always of the view that state law is silent as to rabies dosages amounts. This is evident from various sources. Dr. Robb stated the following at a January 7, 2015 hearing in front of the Defendant Board:

> MR. BERNARD: Now, [whether you administered half dosages of rabies vaccine is] either true or not true. If it's [9] true, the reasons why you did it are not really anything we care about.
> DR. ROBB: Oh really.
> MR. BERNARD: There's a state statute that says you are to administer a full dose of rabies vaccine.
> DR. ROBB: That's wrong.
> MR. BERNARD: What's wrong?

discussed further below, [*135] Dr. Robb argues that the action is brought solely as part of a conspiracy by Defendants to eliminate competitors from the Connecticut veterinarian market that aim to compete with the Veterinarian Defendants by offering lower-dose vaccines.

To support his claims that the rationale for the disciplinary action against him for violation of state regulations is pretext, Dr. Robb alleges that at a hearing in front of the Defendant [10] Board, the "Board's own veterinarian expert witness, Dr. Jeffrey Loeven," testified clearly that Dr. Robb caused no harm to his animal-patients, that he "'fully agree[s] with [Dr. Robb's] assertion that you can modify the practice of medicine according to the Aesculapian authority,[7] including the Hippocratic oath,'" and that Dr. Robb's "'approach resulted in fewer reactions based on limited titers done and lack of documented disease breaks.'" Id. ¶¶ 41, 43 (quoting March 27, 2015 testimony).[8]

In consequence, Dr. Robb alleges that the Defendant Board has no basis "to pursue its baseless action against [him]" because it "and its veterinarian members have no medical, health or safety reason to pursue veterinarians like Dr. Robb that offer vaccination services with lower doses for smaller animals." Id. ¶ 44. Rather, at the core of his antitrust complaint, Dr. Robb alleges that the Board "pursues its" action "for the anticompetitive reason that offering such services threatens the profits that veterinarians, including three board members, make from vaccinations." Id. To effectuate their anticompetitive [12] goals, > [*136] the Board, along with the Individual Defendants, entered into an agreement to prevent competition on quality and price by excluding from the relevant service market any doctor of veterinary medicine who does not provide the manufacturer's recommended dose for rabies vaccinations. The agreement and conspiracy includes the Defendants' decision to pursue sanctions against Dr. Robb.

Id. ¶¶ 67-68. Dr. Robb also alleges that "[a]s part of Defendants' agreement and conspiracy, Defendants have communicated to the relevant purchasing public that Dr. Robb is currently under investigation for professional misconduct." Id. ¶ 72. Dr. Robb then alleges that "Defendants' conduct has no procompetitive or business justification." Id. ¶ 73.

> DR. ROBB: You should be interested.
> MR. BERNARD: No, no.
> DR. ROBB: The state statute is harming your pet because it's outdated. You should be interested.

Doc. 20-2, at 120 (emphasis added). Additionally, in his Second Amended Answer in the administrative proceeding, he argued that Conn. Agencies Regs. 22-359-1 is "an unconstitutional delegation of powers," but also referred to it as a "regulatory requirement . . . to administer the rabies vaccine in accordance with the private for-profit manufacture's label directions." Doc. 5-7, at 2. Further, in his initial TRO and PI papers, he refers to this as an "outdated regulation." Doc. 5-1, at 10. He also admits Section 22-359-1 is a regulation that "arguably requires that a veterinarian follow for-profit manufacturer label instructions when administering rabies vaccines." Id. at 13.

[7] Dr. Robb explained in his memorandum of law in support of his TRO and PI that the "Aesculapian Authority is the power of physicians to choose for their patient what they believe is the best practice," a "power [that] is now available to Veterinarians because of companion animal practice." Doc. 5-1, at 7 n.1 (citing Bernard E. Rollin, PhD, An Introduction to Veterinary Medical Ethics, Theory and Cases, at 84 (2d ed. 2006)). The adjective "Aesculapian" is derived from Aesculapius, the Greco-Roman god of medicine.

[8] There are a several issues with Plaintiff's citations to Dr. Loeven's March 27, 2015 testimony. First, his name is Dr. Koen Loeven, not Dr. Jeffrey Loeven. Doc. 39-4, at 8. Second, this witness was called by DPH, and thus is not the Defendant Board's witness. Id. ("The Department [11] calls Dr. Loeven to the stand"). Third, and most significantly, in a section omitted from Plaintiff's excerpted submission from the transcript, Dr. Loeven testified that: "My function was to review the case as to the standard of care under Connecticut statute and also veterinary guidelines and I believe that the use of half volume rabies vaccination is against State statute and also against the standard of care." Id. at 10 (emphasis added); see also id. at 13 (Plaintiff's letter response to Dr. Loeven "did not change the main core of my review that the standard of veterinary care was violated").

Dr. Robb does not allege any specific conduct actually engaged in by the Board's members that would constitute an "agreement" or a "conspiracy." Rather, Dr. Robb relies on circumstantial factors, specifically the Veterinarian Defendants' "direct pecuniary motivation" to preclude the availability of size-appropriate vaccinations. Id. at 18. He alleges that "the three veterinarian members of the Defendant Board use vaccination protocols that rely solely upon the manufacturer's [13] recommended dosage," and that therefore a market for vaccinations that deviate from that protocol "represent[s] a direct financial threat to the veterinarian Individual Defendants." Id. ¶¶ 56-57.

It is through the above conduct that Dr. Robb alleges that he, and the Connecticut markets for vaccination and veterinary services more generally, were harmed. Dr. Robb alleges repeatedly that the Defendants' actions harm the Connecticut market for vaccination and veterinarian services, of which Dr. Robb alleges vaccination services account for seventy percent. Id. ¶¶ 47, 55; see also Doc. 31, at 1 (vaccinations are "the golden goose of veterinarian practices"). Specifically, he alleges that his > competitors on the Connecticut Board of Veterinary Medicine—a quasi-private, quasi-public entity dominated by doctors of veterinary medicine in active, private practice—have restrained competition by declaring these safe, effective, and heretofore legal vaccination practices as a violation of their own vaguely drafted administrative rules.

Id. ¶ 4. Dr. Robb alleges that the practical effect of this restraint on competition has been to improperly obstruct a demonstrated demand for "size-appropriate vaccination dosages," [14] id. ¶ 46, both from veterinarians,[9] and from consumers.[10] Apart from harm caused by market disturbance, Dr. Robb also alleges that he is harmed directly through the administrative proceeding because his license, "professional reputation, goodwill, and livelihood [are] at [*137] stake," id. ¶ 75, and because "if successful, [it] will also jeopardize [his] $6.5 million in counterclaims against Banfield in a related federal case," id. ¶ 74.

Moreover, the Board, pursuant to its adjudicative function, has sufficient market power to effectuate such an anticompetitive effect "because they have the power to exclude any competitor from the practice of veterinary medicine in Connecticut." Id. ¶ 49; see also id. ¶ 64 (the Veterinarian Defendants "have the power to take collective action against Dr. Robb and any other veterinarian that seeks to offer better, different, or lower cost services relating to vaccinations").

In short, "[t]he anticompetitive actions of the Board, acting as a trade association, directly restrain trade by protecting the veterinarian establishment from the competition that would come from veterinarians, like Dr. Robb, who would adopt the reduced volume vaccine protocol." Id. ¶ 54.

In light of the above alleged conduct, Dr. Robb's Amended Complaint asserts a single claim for violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Antitrust Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1, against all Defendants in their individual and official capacities, for "Conspiracy to Restrain Trade — Group Boycott." Dr. Robb seeks injunctive relief, [16] treble compensatory damages under 15 U.S.C. § 15(a), and his costs and expenses in bringing the instant action. AC, at 23.

II. Defendants' Motion to Dismiss

Defendants argue that Plaintiff's claim should be dismissed in full for a significant number of independent reasons, which they group together as follows. Doc. 39. First, this Court lacks subject matter jurisdiction because: (i) Dr.

[9] Dr. Robb alleges that there are "multiple doctors of veterinary medicine," such as Dr. Marcus Suppa, D.V.M., who either "ceased providing size-appropriate vaccination dosages or [] entertained the possibility of offering size-appropriate vaccination dosages and have decided not to offer them as a direct result of the Defendants' anticompetitive actions." Id. ¶ 52.

[10] Dr. Robb alleges that "owners of pets who are concerned about or who have experienced VAAEs as a result of needless, one-size-fits-all vaccine dosages have flocked to his practice." Id. ¶ 50. Dr. Robb also alleges that "[m]any individual pet owners on [sic] Connecticut would, if they had the opportunity, purchase vaccination lower-dosage services for their small pets." Id. ¶ 53. Dr. Robb then identifies one [15] such patient who "demand[s] and desire[s] half-dosages of vaccine for [her] smaller pets [and] will be unable to contract for them" because of the Board's action. Id.

Robb lacks Article III standing; (ii) Dr. Robb lacks the more particularized "antitrust standing"; and (iii) Dr. Robb's claims are not ripe for review. Second, the 11th Amendment bars claims (i) against the Board and (ii) for monetary damages against the Board members in their official capacities. Third, the Individual Defendants are immune from suit either pursuant to absolute or qualified immunity. Fourth, Dr. Robb failed to allege in substance an antitrust claim. Fifth, this Court should not interfere with an ongoing state administrative proceeding in light of the abstention doctrine articulated in Younger v. Harris, 401 U.S. 37, 91 S. Ct. 746, 27 L. Ed. 2d 669 (1971). And Sixth, Dr. Robb has failed to exhaust his administrative remedies. The Court will address the substance of Defendants' arguments, as necessary, below.

III. Standard of Review

"To survive a motion to dismiss, a complaint must contain sufficient [17] factual matter, accepted as true, to 'state a claim that is plausible on its face.'" Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 678, 129 S. Ct. 1937, 173 L. Ed. 2d 868 (2009) (quoting Bell Atl. Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 570, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007)). This pleading standard creates a "two-pronged approach," Iqbal, 556 U.S. at 679, based on "[t]wo working principles, " id. at 678.

First, although a complaint need not include detailed factual allegations, it must provide "more than an unadorned, the-defendant-unlawfully-harmed-me accusation." Iqbal, 556 U.S. at 678. "A pleading that offers 'labels and conclusions' or 'a formulaic recitation of the elements of a cause of action will not do.'" Id. (quoting Twombly, 550 U.S. at 555). "Nor does a complaint suffice if it tenders 'naked assertion[s]' devoid of 'further factual enhancement.'"Id. (quoting Twombly, 550 U.S. at 557. "Although for the purposes of a motion to dismiss we must take all of the factual allegations in the complaint as true, [*138] we 'are not bound to accept as true a legal conclusion couched as a factual allegation.'" Id. (quoting Twombly, 550 U.S. at 555). "While legal conclusions can provide the framework of a complaint, they must be supported by factual allegations." Id. at 679.

Second, "[w]hen there are well-pleaded factual allegations, a court should assume their veracity and then determine whether they plausibly give rise to an entitlement to relief." Iqbal, 556 U.S. at 679. This "facial plausibility" prong requires the plaintiff to plead facts "allow[ing] the [18] court to draw the reasonable inference that the defendant is liable for the misconduct alleged." Id. at 678. Importantly, the complaint must demonstrate "more than a sheer possibility that a defendant has acted unlawfully." Id. "[W]here the well-pleaded facts do not permit the court to infer more than the mere possibility of misconduct, the complaint has alleged but it has not 'show[n]' — 'that the pleader is entitled to relief.'" Id. at 679 (quoting Fed. R. Civ. P. 8(a)(2)). "Determining whether a complaint states a plausible claim for relief [is] . . . a context-specific task that requires the reviewing court to draw on its judicial experience and common sense." Id.

IV. Analysis

The Supreme Court has "direct[ed] federal courts to resolve questions of Article III jurisdiction before reaching the merits of a plaintiff's claim." Spargo v. N.Y. State Comm'n on Judicial Conduct, 351 F.3d 65, 74 (2d Cir. 2003) (citing Steel Co. v. Citizens for a Better Env., 523 U.S. 83, 94, 118 S. Ct. 1003, 140 L. Ed. 2d 210 (1998) ("declin[ing] to endorse . . . an approach [of 'hypothetical jurisdiction'] because it carries the courts beyond the bounds of authorized judicial action and thus offends fundamental principles of separation of powers")).

The Court therefore begins with Defendants' jurisdictional arguments—that Plaintiff lacks Article III standing and that his claims are not yet ripe.[11] Only if Plaintiff prevails on those initial issues will the [19] Court be in a position to consider the merits of Plaintiff's antitrust claim.

[11] Defendants argue that "antitrust standing" is a jurisdictional question. Doc. 39-1, at 14 n.6 (citing Balaklaw v. Lovell, 14 F.3d 793, 800 (2d Cir. 1994)). First, Balaklaw does not address the question of the jurisdictional nature of antitrust standing. Second, while the question has been the subject of some debate, the Second Circuit has cited with approval the D.C. Circuit's "holding that statutory standing under the antitrust laws is not a prerequisite to federal subject matter jurisdiction." Lerner v. Fleet Bank,

As to that separate issue, Defendants contend on their motion to dismiss that Plaintiff's Amended Complaint fails as a matter of law to state an antitrust claim under the Sherman Act.

I discuss in order the related but separate issues of Plaintiff's standing to assert his claim and the legal viability of that claim as pleaded.

A. Subject Matter Jurisdiction [20]

Subject matter jurisdiction is a prerequisite for an adjudication in federal court. A federal district court has no subject matter jurisdiction over claims for [*139] which a plaintiff lacks Article III standing. Mahon v. Ticor Title Ins. Co., 683 F.3d 59, 62 (2d Cir. 2012). The same is true as to claims that are unripe. U.S. v. Quinones, 313 F.3d 49, 58 (2d Cir. 2002). The Court turns to these issues now.

1. Article III Standing

Defendants argue that Plaintiff's complaint fails to meet the "'irreducible constitutional minimum of standing.'" Doc. 39-1, at 12 (quoting Lujan v. Defenders of Wildlife, 504 U.S. 555, 560, 112 S. Ct. 2130, 119 L. Ed. 2d 351 (1992)). As recently reiterated by the Supreme Court, "[t]he requirements of Article III standing are familiar." U.S. v. Windsor, 133 S. Ct. 2675, 2685, 186 L. Ed. 2d 808 (2013). "First, the plaintiff must have suffered an 'injury in fact'—an invasion of a legally protected interest which is (a) concrete and particularized, and (b) 'actual or imminent, not 'conjectural or hypothetical.' Second, there must be a causal connection between the injury and the conduct complained of . . . [and] [t]hird, it must be 'likely' . . . that the injury will be 'redressed by a favorable decision.'" Id. (quoting Lujan, 504 U.S. at 560-61) (footnote and citations omitted)). "The party invoking federal jurisdiction bears the burden of establishing these elements." Lujan, 504 U.S. at 561. I consider those elements in that order.

a. Injury-in-Fact

Dr. Robb has alleged injuries that are [21] current, "concrete," "particularized," and "actual." Principally, Dr. Robb alleges an "antitrust injury"—a harm to the market for veterinary services—which is "sufficient to satisfy the constitutional standing requirement of injury in fact." Associated Gen. Contractors of Calif. v. Calif. State Council of Carpenters, 459 U.S. 519, 551 n.31, 103 S. Ct. 897, 74 L. Ed. 2d 723 (1983). Specifically, Dr. Robb alleges that he—and other like-minded veterinarians—cannot properly compete in the market because they "cannot provide size-appropriate vaccinations" given the administrative proceedings that they face. AC ¶ 51. Because, "[f]or purposes of determining standing, we 'must accept as true all material allegations of the complaint, and must construe the complaint in favor of the complaining party,'" Dr. Robb has sufficiently alleged an injury-in-fact. Denney v. Deutsche Bank AG, 443 F.3d 253, 263 (2d Cir. 2006) (quoting Warth v. Seldin, 422 U.S. 490, 501, 95 S. Ct. 2197, 45 L. Ed. 2d 343 (1975)).

Defendants' arguments do not lead to a contrary result. First, Defendants confusingly argue that Dr. Robb was not injured because his "allegation that the Board has prevented him from competing on quality is unfounded" in light of the fact the Board did not "promulgate the statutes or regulations that Plaintiff claims prohibit him from competing." Doc. 39-1, at 12-13. Whether or not it was the Defendants' actions that harmed Plaintiff goes to the element of causation—it is [22] irrelevant in determining an injury-in-fact. Second, they argue that Dr. Robb has not suffered an injury because the Board has yet to make any determination as to whether he in fact committed the regulatory violations with which he was charged. Id. at 13. However, in so arguing, Defendants ignore this action's antitrust context. As discussed above, Dr. Robb does not only allege injuries stemming from a potential adverse determination in the administrative proceeding against him; he alleges that the proceedings against him have dissuaded him and others from competing as to dosages.[12] Also, it is not the case that a [*140] plaintiff lacks standing ipso facto when his alleged injury stems from the potential future effect of a yet-to-occur government action. See Susan B. Anthony List v. Driehaus, 134 S. Ct. 2334, 2342-43, 189 L. Ed. 2d 246 (2014) (discussing Supreme Court "cases [that] illustrate the circumstances under which plaintiffs may bring a preenforcement challenge consistent with Article III"). Plaintiff has alleged an injury-in-fact.

N.A., 318 F.3d 113, 128 (2d Cir. 2003) (citing In re Lorazepam & Clorazepate Antitrust Litig., 289 F.3d 98, 107-08, 351 U.S. App. D.C. 223 (D.C. Cir. 2002) ("Unlike constitutional standing, this court's jurisdiction does not turn on antitrust standing.")); see also Paulsen v. Remington Lodging & Hospitality, LLC, 773 F.3d 462, 468 (2d Cir. 2014) ("statutory standing is not jurisdictional unless Congress says so"). Therefore, the Court need not address Defendants' antitrust standing argument as part of its Article III jurisdictional analysis.

However, Plaintiff then argues that his allegation of antitrust injury is sufficient to confer Article III standing in toto. Doc. 44, at 7 (citing Assoc. Gen., 459 U.S. at 551 n.31). Plaintiff is mistaken. As made clear in Assoc. Gen.,"[h]arm to the antitrust plaintiff is sufficient to satisfy the constitutional standing requirement of injury in fact." 459 U.S. at 551 n.31 (emphasis added). Dr. Robb still must sufficiently allege [24] the remaining two elements of Article III standing.

b. Causal Connection

To have Article III standing, a plaintiff must show "a causal connection between the injury and the conduct complained of—the injury has to be fairly . . . trace[able] to the challenged action of the defendant, and not . . . th[e] result [of] the independent action of some third party not before the court." Lujan, 504 U.S. at 560 (internal quotation omitted). However, "the 'fairly traceable' standard is not equivalent to a requirement of tort causation. . . . [F]or purposes of satisfying Article III's causation requirement, we are concerned with something less than the concept of proximate cause." Rothstein v. UBS AG, 708 F.3d 82, 92 (2d Cir. 2013) (internal quotation and citation omitted, emphasis in original). "Rather, 'at [the pleading] stage of the litigation,' the plaintiffs' 'burden . . . of alleging that their injury is 'fairly traceable' to' the challenged act 'is relatively modest.'" Id. (quoting Bennett v. Spear, 520 U.S. 154, 171, 117 S. Ct. 1154, 137 L. Ed. 2d 281 (1997)).

As Defendants repeatedly note—and as demonstrated through sources with which this Court may consider at this stage—Dr. Robb is undoubtedly incorrect when he posits that it is the Defendant Board that has brought the administrative proceeding against him. As made clear by, inter alia, the Statement of Charges [25] attached to Dr. Robb's initial complaint, it is the Connecticut "Department of Public Health [that] brings the [at-issue] charges against John M. Robb." Doc. 5-4, at 4 (emphasis added). Defendants use this fact to opine, quite accurately, that the "actions that Plaintiff complains against are actions traceable to the Legislature, the Commissioner of Agriculture, and the Department of Public Health. All parties not before the Court." Doc. 39-1, at 13. Despite its truth, it proves [*141] too much to argue that this fact alone leads to the conclusion that Dr. Robb does not have standing to bring this action.

Although other parties may be the proximate causes of Dr. Robb's alleged injuries, the issue here is whether Plaintiff's alleged injuries can meet the "relatively modest" test of being "fairly traceable" to the Defendants' alleged conduct. The demonstrated factual inaccuracies in the Amended Complaint aside, Dr. Robb makes the following allegation:

[12] In this regard, this case is distinct from Clapper v. Amnesty Int'l USA, 133 S. Ct. 1138, 185 L. Ed. 2d 264 (2013), in which the Court rejected plaintiff's standing theory that it was injured through the adoption of certain costly measures it took in anticipation of the government's use of a regulatory power in a way [23] that might injure it. There, where the government had not even taken action with respect to the regulation at issue, the Court denied this standing theory because "[a]llegations of a subjective 'chill' are not an adequate substitute for a claim of specific present objective harm or a threat of specific future harm." Id. at 1152. Here, where Dr. Robb is already facing regulatory sanctions (in the form of forcing him to refrain from providing lower dosages), he has caught a "chill" from standing in the face of the adverse wind of the administrative proceeding, and that chill is objective, not subjective, since Dr. Robb is required to defend himself against the administrative charges. Dr. Robb clearly stands in the face of a "threat of specific future harm," a circumstance sufficient at this stage of the case to constitute Article III "injury."

> [T]he Board, along with the Individual Defendants, entered into an agreement to prevent competition on quality and price by excluding from the relevant service market any doctor of veterinary medicine who does not provide the manufacturer's recommended [26] dose for rabies vaccinations.

AC ¶ 67. If that be true,[13] the alleged injuries—i.e., veterinarians not being able to provide lower-dose vaccinations—is "fairly traceable" to the Board's conduct in light of the fact that the adjudicator of any administrative proceeding challenging such vaccination procedures is likely, on Plaintiff's theory of the case, to have predetermined its outcome for anticompetitive reasons. In other words, Dr. Robb—and other like veterinarians—have been forced to "chill" their behavior, and thus they and the veterinarian market have suffered an injury, at least in part because of the knowledge that their potential or actual adjudicators have formed an agreement to remove them from the relevant market. Although the proximate cause of that chill may be the DPH, which decides to pursue sanctions in the first place, it cannot be said that a partial adjudicator of those charges is not also a cause of said chill. Dr. Robb has met his "relatively modest" burden of alleging a causal connection between the Board's conduct and the alleged injury.

c. Redressability

Finally, to have standing, a plaintiff must show that his alleged injury "can likely be redressed by a favorable decision." *Mantena v. Johnson, 809 F.3d 721, 2015 U.S. App. LEXIS 22843, 2015 WL 9487867, at 8 (2d Cir. Dec. 30, 2015) (citing Lujan, 504 U.S. at 560-61). Defendants argue that Dr. Robb's injury is not redressable by this Court because an injunction against the Board's disciplinary proceeding "would not change the rabies statute or regulations [which] would still prohibit veterinarians from administering rabies vaccines in the manner Plaintiff wishes." Doc. 39-1, at 13-14.

However, in line with the above analysis, Defendants' argument can quickly be dispatched. Dr. Robb alleges a harm to the veterinarian market effectuated through [28] an administrative adjudication infected by an anticompetitive conspiracy. In short, Dr. Robb argues that the Board will not fairly address a question of Connecticut law—whether veterinarians providing lower-dose vaccinations violate the law—because it has agreed to exclude these veterinarians [*142] from the market for reasons entirely unrelated to the purpose behind any regulatory vaccination requirement. To redress that injury to the market, Dr. Robb seeks, in part, permanent injunctive relief barring the Defendants from illegally conspiring to remove veterinarians from the market on the basis of an anti-competitive rationale, rather than impartially applying Connecticut law. See AC, at 23. Such relief is likely to redress the illegally caused harm to the veterinarian market.

Plaintiff has standing to bring this action.

2. Ripeness

"The doctrine of constitutional ripeness 'prevents a federal court from entangling itself in abstract disagreements over matters that are premature for review because the injury is merely speculative and may never occur.'" In re Methyl Tertiary Butyl Ether (MTBE) Prods Liab. Litig., 725 F.3d 65, 110 (2d Cir. 2013) (quoting Ross v. Bank of Am., N.A. (USA), 524 F.3d 217, 226 (2d Cir. 2008)). As is therefore apparent, "[t]his aspect of the ripeness doctrine overlaps with the standing doctrine, 'most notably in the shared requirement that [29] the plaintiff's injury be imminent rather than conjectural or hypothetical.'" Id. (quoting Ross, 524 F.3d at 226) ("In most cases, that a plaintiff has Article III standing is enough to render its claim constitutionally ripe.").

[13] The Court acknowledges (as made clear below) that for purposes of establishing an antitrust claim, the "ultimate existence of an [27] 'agreement' under antitrust law . . . is a legal conclusion, not a factual allegation," and thereby should not be accepted as true for purposes of a motion to dismiss. Mayor and City Council of Baltimore v. Citigroup, Inc., 709 F.3d 129, 135 (2d Cir. 2013). However, for purposes of standing, the Court may accept as true that the individual Defendants entered into an agreement without accepting the "ultimate existence of an 'agreement'" as that term is used with respect to the antitrust laws. See Denney v. Deutsche Bank AG, 443 F.3d 253, 264 ("an injury-in-fact," for standing purposes, "differs from a 'legal interest'; an injury-in-fact need not be capable of sustaining a valid cause of action").

Here, Defendants argue that Dr. Robb's claim is not ripe for review because the Board has yet to issue a decision. Doc. 39-1, at 18. As Defendants acknowledge, this is the same argument it made "[a]s with the standing issue." Id. The Court denied this argument as to standing, and it denies Defendants' argument as to ripeness for the same reasons. Further, the Second Circuit has also held that "[i]n the antitrust context in particular, a rule that has yet to be enacted or enforced may be ripe for review if its mere proposal is likely to inhibit competition." Volvo N. Am. Corp. v. Men's Int'l Prof. Tennis Council, 857 F.2d 55, 64 (2d Cir. 1988).

In the case at bar, Dr. Robb alleges that competition has already been inhibited by Defendants' illegal agreement to remove certain competitors from the market in light of the proceedings against him. His claim is thereby ripe for review, and, in light of the Article III standing analysis supra, I conclude that this Court has subject matter jurisdiction over this action.

B. Antitrust Claim

Although Plaintiff has standing to assert his [30] claim, that claim is nonetheless subject to dismissal if it has no merit as a matter of law. Defendants contend that Plaintiff's claim against them has no merit because, inter alia, it fails to plead an antitrust claim that is cognizable under the Sherman Act.

Plaintiff brings a one-count complaint alleging a violation of 15 U.S.C. § 1, which states that:

> Every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, is declared to be illegal.

The threshold question of a Section 1 claim is "whether an arrangement is a contract, combination, or conspiracy," a question "informed by the basic distinction in the Sherman Act between concerted and independent action." American Needle, Inc. v. Nat'l Football League, 560 U.S. 183, 186, 190, 130 S. Ct. 2201, 176 L. Ed. 2d 947 (2010) (internal quotation omitted). A state board comprised of a majority of private practitioners, such as the Defendant Board, is capable of illegal concerted action for purposes of Section 1. See *North Carolina State Bd. of Dental Exam'rs v. F.T.C., 717 F.3d 359, 371-72 [143] (4th Cir. 2013), aff'd 135 S. Ct. 1101, 191 L. Ed. 2d 35 (2015) ("Any agreement between the Board members . . . deprives the market of an independent center of decision making."). However, "concluding that the Board has the capacity to conspire 'does not mean . . . that every action taken' by the Board 'satisfies the contract, [31] combination, or conspiracy requirement.'" Id. at 372 (quoting Oksanen v. Page Mem'l Hosp., 945 F.2d 696, 706 (4th Cir. 1991)) (upholding a Sherman Act violation where "[s]ubstantial evidence support[ed] th[e] conclusion" of concerted action). In short, to survive dismissal, Dr. Robb must allege that the members of the Defendant Board affirmatively came together to form an agreement to restrain trade.

However, to satisfy the pleading requirement at the Rule 12(b)(6) stage, an antitrust plaintiff may not simply allege that "the parties agreed." This is because the "ultimate existence of an 'agreement' under antitrust law . . . is a legal conclusion, not a factual allegation." Mayor and City Council of Baltimore v. Citigroup, Inc., 709 F.3d 129, 135 (2d Cir. 2013). Accordingly, any conclusory allegation of an "agreement" is not to be accepted as true; the plaintiff must allege facts affirmatively demonstrating such an agreement. See Anderson News, L.L.C., 680 F.3d at 184 (plaintiff "must plead 'enough factual matter (taken as true) to suggest that an agreement was made,' i.e., it must provide 'some factual context suggesting [that the parties reached an] agreement,' not facts that would be 'merely consistent' with an agreement" (quoting Twombly, 550 U.S. at 556)). In Twombly, the Supreme Court laid out clearly the allegations sufficient for an antitrust plaintiff to overcome a motion to dismiss as to the element of conspiracy in a Section 1 claim:

> [A]n allegation [32] of parallel conduct and a bare assertion of conspiracy will not suffice. Without more, parallel conduct does not suggest conspiracy, and a conclusory allegation of agreement at some unidentified > point does not supply facts adequate to show illegality. Hence, when allegations of parallel conduct are set out in order to make a § 1 claim, they must be placed in a context that raises a suggestion of a preceding agreement, not merely parallel conduct that could just as well be independent action.

550 U.S. at 556-57; see also id. at 567-68 (dismissing allegations of conspiracy where allegedly conspiratorial actors had "an obvious alternative explanation" for their parallel conduct).

That is not to say that an antitrust complaint must always identify a "smoking gun" evincing an agreement (such as a written contract). However, a complaint like this one, which omits a "smoking gun," may survive dismissal only if an actual agreement "'may be inferred on the basis of conscious parallelism, when such interdependent conduct is accompanied by circumstantial evidence and plus factors.'" Mayor and City Council of Baltimore, 709 F.3d at 136 (quoting Todd v. Exxon Corp., 275 F.3d 191, 198 (2d Cir. 2001)). A "plaintiff must show the existence of additional circumstances, often referred to as 'plus' factors, which, when viewed in conjunction [33] with the parallel acts, can serve to allow a fact-finder to infer a conspiracy." Apex Oil Co. v. DiMauro, 822 F.2d 246, 253 (2d Cir. 1987). "'These 'plus factors' may include: a common motive to conspire, evidence that shows that the parallel acts were against the apparent individual economic self-interest of the alleged conspirators, and evidence of a high level of interfirm communications.'" Mayor and City [*144] Council of Baltimore, 709 F.3d at 136 (quoting Twombly, 425 F.3d at 114).

In the case at bar, Dr. Robb makes only conclusory allegations as to an agreement among the Individual Defendants, either tacit or express. The Amended Complaint does not describe any action to that effect engaged in by any of the Individual Defendants. The pleading refers to the alleged conspirators by name only once, and then only to identify the parties to the litigation. AC ¶¶ 10-14. By failing to make a single allegation as to the conduct of the individuals that allegedly came to an illegal agreement, nor as to the form, dates, place, structure, or detail of such an agreement, Dr. Robb faces a significant hurdle, as a matter of law, to support his claim of an antitrust conspiracy. To establish the factual underpinning of an actual "agreement," a party must allege facts that in some way describe the process of that agreement's formation. [34] For example, in Anderson News, the Second Circuit overturned the lower court's ruling that plaintiff's claims were overly conclusory in light of the fact that:

> The [complaint] allege[d] actual agreement; it allege[d] not just that all of the defendants ceased, in virtual lock-step, to deal with Anderson, but allege[d] that on various dates within the preceding two-week period defendants and News Group—through their executives, 10 of whose names or positions are specified—had met or communicated with their competitors and others and made statements that may plausibly be interpreted as evincing their agreement to attempt to eliminate Anderson and Source as wholesalers in the single-copy magazine market and to divide that market between News Group and Hudson.

680 F.3d at 186-89 (holding that in light of these allegations, the complaint "in the present case is vastly different from the complaint at issue in Twombly"). The Second Circuit's decision in Anderson News may be contrasted with its ruling in Mayor and City Council of Baltimore, which rejected a conspiracy claim as impermissibly conclusory even though the complaint alleged "two actual communications between competitors." 709 F.3d at 139 (emphasis omitted). Dr. Robb makes not even a single [35] such factual allegation as to the behavior of the individuals whom he accuses of conspiring.

Without alleging any "gun" (let alone of the "smoking" variety), Dr. Robb must allege sufficient "conscious parallelism," or "interdependent conduct," from which an agreement among the Individual Defendants may be plausibly inferred. See *Ross v. Citigroup, Inc., 630 F. App'x 79, 2015 U.S. App. LEXIS 20025, 2015 WL 7292176, at 1 (2d Cir. Nov. 19, 2015). As shown below, this he also entirely failed to do. In other words, not only has Dr. Robb failed to allege any facts supporting an actual agreement (as discussed above), he has also failed to allege properly any facts alleging concerted conduct from which this Court could theoretically infer such an agreement. Dr. Robb has simply made no proper and acceptable allegations that the Individual Defendants have done anything to implement or further the conspiratorial agreement that he (conclusorily) alleges.

A review of the few actions of the Board that Dr. Robb has alleged demonstrates the inadequacy of the pleading. First, he alleges that the "Board has continued to pursue its baseless action against Dr. Robb." AC ¶ 44. However, it is indisputably true that the Board is not pursuing the administrative action against Dr. Robb, but merely sits in adjudication of [36] charges that the DPH pursues, a fact Plaintiff [*145] largely admits in his pleading, id. ¶ 33, is made clear from the DPH's Statement of Charges, [Doc. 5-4], at 4, and is clear as a matter of Connecticut law, see C.G.S. §§ 19a-13(6), 19a-14(a)(8), 19a-14(a)(10)-(11), 20-196b, 20-204a.

Second, Dr. Robb purports to allege that the Board made a "decision not to dismiss the complaint upon failure of the case as a result of their own expert's testimony." Doc. 31, at 20. However, the Board did not deny Dr. Robb's motion to dismiss the complaint, it simply took "the motion under advisement" given that it had not "finish[ed] hearing the case" when Dr. Robb moved to dismiss the action at a June 15, 2015 hearing.[14] Doc. 34-1 Ex. C, at 80. Such an action cannot plausibly be used to infer that the Board members entered into an agreement to exclude Dr. Robb from the market, and actually furthers the Board's contention that it was taking serious its role as an impartial adjudicator. Moreover, and as discussed, the expert referred to by Dr. Robb was that of the DPH, not of the Board, and, in fact, that expert testified that Dr. Robb's conduct "is against State statute and also against the standard of care." Doc. 39-4, at 10 (emphasis added). It would be strange indeed for the Board to grant a motion to dismiss a complaint [37] alleging a violation of a state statute on the basis of an expert testifying that the respondent in fact committed the violation with which he was charged.

Third, in the introduction of his amended complaint, Dr. Robb alleges that the Board has "declar[ed] . . . [his] legal vaccination practices as a violation of their own vaguely drafted administrative rules." AC ¶ 4. However, it is quite clear that the Board has yet to make a decision as to whether Dr. Robb has violated any rules. See, e.g., Doc. 31, at 21 (Dr. Robb referring to the "Board's continued proceedings" against him).

Fourth, Dr. Robb alleges that, as part of its conspiracy, the Board has "communicated to the relevant purchasing public that Dr. Robb is currently under investigation for professional misconduct." AC ¶ 72. As an initial matter, Defendants [38] vigorously dispute that the Board had any role in publicizing the charges against Dr. Robb and proffers sworn testimony that it was the DPH that did so simply as a matter of course, [Doc. 34-1 Ex. B] ¶¶ 6-10; further, the documents Dr. Robb proffered allegedly evidencing such publication by the Board provide no ascertainable support for Dr. Robb's allegation that it was the Board, rather than DPH, that published the charges, [Docs. 31-3, 31-4]. More important, however, is the fact that, without more, simply listing on a website the true fact that Dr. Robb was under investigation for professional misconduct in no way evinces an illegal conspiracy amongst the adjudicators to remove the target of that investigation from the relevant market. See Mayor and City Council of Baltimore, 709 F.3d at 139 ("two vague references to isolated [behavior] among only three defendants" are insufficient to support inference of antitrust conspiracy). To hold otherwise would place under the umbrella of an antitrust conspiracy an overwhelming amount of legitimate actions taken by regulatory boards comprised of industry members.

[*146] Moreover, even were Dr. Robb to have alleged properly "interdependent conduct," Dr. Robb makes only one allegation suggesting any [39] of the circumstantial evidence or "plus factors" that would thereby be required for his claim to survive dismissal. Dr. Robb alleges "[o]n information and belief [that] the three veterinarian members of the Defendant Board use vaccination protocols that rely solely upon the manufacturer's recommended dosage," and that thereby "[s]ize-appropriate vaccination protocols like Dr. Robb's vaccination protocols thus represent a direct financial threat to the veterinarian Individual Defendants."[15] AC ¶¶ 56-57; see also Doc. 44, at 22 (describing such as an "enormous incentive to restrain trade"). Although this may demonstrate a theoretical "common motive to conspire" amongst the Veterinarian Defendants, it is insufficient to establish an antitrust conspiracy when there exists an "obvious alternative explanation," Twombly, 550 U.S. at 567, for any parallel conduct: compliance with their statutory duty to adjudicate claims brought by the Connecticut DPH. Therefore, the evidence of the Veterinarian Defendants' common motive to conspire does not come close to "exclud[ing] the possibility of independent action." Monsanto Co. v. Spray-Rite Serv. Corp., 465 U.S. 752, 768, 104 S. Ct. 1464, 79 L. Ed. 2d 775 (1984); see also Mayor and City Council of Baltimore, 709 F.3d at 137 ("even if a plaintiff alleges . . . "plus factors" . . . these facts must still lead to an inference of conspiracy"). [40] Any regulatory board comprised of industry members with a statutory duty to adjudicate regulatory violations will almost always have some common motive to conspire (i.e., excluding at least one competitor from the market). That motive simply cannot be independently sufficient to infer an antitrust conspiracy.

[14] To the extent Dr. Robb refers to the Board's earlier May 4, 2015 denial of his motion to dismiss, that decision likewise can in no way be used to infer an illegal conspiracy to remove Dr. Robb from the market. In that decision, the Defendant Board properly rejected Dr. Robb's clearly erroneous argument for dismissal based on an entirely unsupportable interpretation of North Carolina State Board of Dental Examiners v. Federal Trade Commission, 135 S. Ct. 1101, 191 L. Ed. 2d 35 (2015). See Doc. 5-9.

[15] This motive cannot even apply to the two members of the Board who do not have any demonstrated pecuniary motive to remove Dr. Robb from the market, Defendants Bernhard and O'Neill. The claims against them are therefore not just without merit, but largely frivolous.

In this regard, this case is far from North Carolina State Board of Dental Examiners, the Supreme Court's affirmance of which was and is relied on extensively by Dr. Robb. As summarized by the circuit court, that case was "about a state board run by private actors in the marketplace taking action outside of the procedures mandated by state law to expel a competitor from the market." 717 F.3d at 375 (emphasis added) (addressing board members' discretionary decision to send cease-and-desist letters to competitors). Here, Dr. Robb has not properly alleged any conduct of the individual Board members other then sitting in adjudication of [41] an administrative proceeding brought by another state agency, an action the Board members are required to take under state law. See C.G.S. § 20-196b (the Board "shall (1) hear and decide matters concerning suspension or revocation of licensure, (2) adjudicate complaints filed against practitioners licensed under this chapter and (3) impose sanctions where appropriate" (emphasis added)). Again, to thereby hold that Dr. Robb's bare allegations make out an antitrust conspiracy would effectively mean that nearly all actions of an adjudicative body controlled by a majority of industrial participants would constitute an antitrust conspiracy per se, an unsupportable argument that Plaintiff initially proffered, but wisely abandoned.[16]

[*147] In sum, Dr. Robb has failed to plead a single factual allegation affirmatively evincing [42] the existence of an agreement amongst the Defendants, and can point to no proper allegations of Defendants' conduct from which this Court can remotely infer such an agreement. Dr. Robb is thereby forced to rely solely on his allegation that the Veterinarian Defendants had a common incentive to foreclose veterinarians such as Dr. Robb from the market. Such naked identification of a theoretical motive to conspire, without significantly more, is far from sufficient to establish the plausible existence of an agreement amongst competitors. Dr. Robb has thereby failed to allege a plausible claim that the Defendants have conspired with each other. His antitrust claim must be dismissed.

With such a clear and adequate ground for dismissal based upon Defendants' substantive antitrust defense, the Court need not address Defendants' other arguments (as to immunity, abstention, or exhaustion), many of which implicate constitutional concerns. This is because judges are clearly directed to avoid unnecessary adjudications as to questions of constitutional law. See Lyng v. Northwest Indian Cemetery Protective Ass'n, 485 U.S. 439, 445-46, 108 S. Ct. 1319, 99 L. Ed. 2d 534 (1988) (collecting cases discussing the "fundamental and longstanding principle of judicial restraint [that] requires courts avoid reaching constitutional [43] questions in advance of the necessity of deciding them"); see also Burton v. U.S., 196 U.S. 283, 295, 25 S. Ct. 243, 49 L. Ed. 482 (1905) ("It is not the habit of the court to decide questions of a constitutional nature unless absolutely necessary to a decision of the case"). Here, Dr. Robb's antitrust claim is clearly deficient for the reasons discussed above, and any further ruling would be unnecessary.

V. Conclusion

The record in this case makes manifest the sincerity of spirit, even devotion, with which Dr. Robb, an experienced and successful practitioner of veterinary medicine, asserts that it is unnecessary, dangerous and contrary to sound [16] As Dr. Robb admitted in his reply brief in support of his preliminary injunction, "the Board's argument that Dr. Robb has 'grossly misconstrued' the holding of North Carolina State Board of Dental Examiners . . . is now moot because Dr. Robb's verified amended complaint (Dkt. 30) does not allege that the Board is violating the federal antitrust laws by way of its composition alone." practice to require that the full dosage of rabies vaccine administered to a Great Dane also be administered to a Chihuahua. However, such a requirement appears to be envisioned by the Connecticut Department of Public Health, and forms the gravamen of its administrative charge against Dr. Robb. Presumably the Board will eventually adjudicate that charge.

The Court is constrained to conclude that Dr. Robb's complaint must be dismissed because it does not allege a viable antitrust claim under the Sherman Act. In the absence of a viable claim under the Constitution or a federal statute, the limited jurisdiction of [44] this United States District Court does not extend to righting whatever wrongs, however real, Dr. Robb may have identified. The Rule of Law that courts such as this one enforce is a secular law. The Constitution places spiritual questions beyond the competence of courts. If Connecticut's rules with respect to rabies vaccine dosages should be changed, the Legislature and Governor must be asked to change them.

For the reasons stated above, Defendants' Motion to Dismiss [Doc. 39] is GRANTED. The following motions are DENIED AS MOOT: (i) Plaintiff's Motion for Preliminary Injunction [Doc. 4]; (ii) Proposed Interveners' Emergency Motion [*148] to Intervene [Doc. 21]; and (iii) Proposed Interveners' Proposed Joinder in Defendants' Motion to Dismiss the Amended Complaint [Doc. 43]. The Clerk of Court is directed to enter judgment for the Defendants, dismissing this action, and to close the file.

It is SO ORDERED.

MEMORANDUM OPINION AND ORDER

This matter comes before the Court on the State of Illinois' Motion for Partial Summary Judgment Against the Defendants' Foreign-Conduct Defenses. The Court has reviewed the foregoing motion and the State of Illinois' memorandum in support thereof ("MSJ"), as well as Defendants' Joint Opposition to the Attorney General's Motion for Partial Summary Judgment against the Defendants' Foreign-Conduct Defenses ("Resp."), the State of Illinois' Reply ("Reply"), Defendants' Sur-Reply ("S.Rep."), and the State of Illinois' Sur-Surreply ("SS.Rep."). The Court has also considered the oral arguments of counsels and relevant legal authorities.

Background

The underlying allegations of this long-pending case have been discussed at length in previous Orders and thus need not be recited again in great detail.[1] In late 2006, the public learned of a price-fixing investigation being conducted by the United States Department of Justice. The investigation centered on allegations that manufacturers of thin-film transistor liquid crystal display ("LCD") panels had held unlawful meetings for the purpose of fixing the prices and output of LCD panels [*2] throughout the United States, including in Illinois. The price fixing allegedly occurred between November 30, 1998, and December 11, 2006, during which time the State of Illinois and Illinois consumers purportedly paid artificially inflated prices for LCD panels.

After the investigation became public, a torrent of litigation ensued, with hundreds of civil actions filed in United States district courts throughout the country. To promote the efficient adjudication of those cases, the federal matters were consolidated in the United States District Court for the Northern District of California under the caption In re: TFT-LCD (Flat Panel) Antitrust Litigation, Case No. 3:07-MD-1827 SI, MDL No. 1827 (N.D. Cal.) (the "multidistrict litigation"). The Honorable Judge Susan Illston has presided over the multidistrict litigation since 2006, and ultimately certified two class actions therein. The first class consisted of entities that were direct purchasers of LCD panels (e.g., entities that utilize LCD panels as components of other products). The second class consisted of indirect purchasers of LCD panels, specifically individuals and entities that purchased products containing LCD panels [*3] (e.g., cellular phones, computer monitors, televisions, and numerous other items). Additionally, various plaintiffs opted out of the two classes and brought cases of their own in front of Judge Illston.

Though many states elected to participate in the multidistrict litigation, the State of Illinois opted to pursue its own action. On August 10, 2010, the Illinois Attorney General (the "Attorney General" or "the State") filed the instant case on behalf of Illinois indirect purchasers of products containing LCD panels.[2] The Complaint alleges that Defendants violated section 3(1) of the Illinois Antitrust Act (the "IAA") by conspiring to fix prices on LCD panels. The Complaint asserts claims for monetary relief (including treble damages) for damages suffered by the State of Illinois, its state agencies, and, in the State's parens patriae capacity, Illinois residents (both individuals and businesses) who purchased products containing LCD panels during the period of alleged price-fixing. Additionally, the Complaint seeks injunctive relief to undo the effects of Defendants' alleged unlawful conduct.

Numerous affirmative defenses to the Complaint have been filed. The instant motion is brought [*4] by the State regarding two categories of affirmative defenses filed by the AU Optronics Defendants[3] the Chimei Defendants[4] the Samsung Defendants[5] the Sharp Defendants[6] and the Toshiba Defendants[7] (collectively, the "Defendants"). The affirmative defenses at issue are: (1) statutory defenses derived from section 5(14) of the IAA and subsection 6a of the United States Foreign Trade Antitrust Improvements Act of 1982[8] ("FTAIA"); and (2) that the State's claims are barred by the Commerce Clause of the United States Constitution.

[6] Consisting of Sharp Corp., and Sharp Electronics Corp.

[7] Consisting of Toshiba Corp., Toshiba America Electronic Components, Inc., Toshiba Mobile Display Co., and Toshiba America Information Systems, Inc.

[8] Although the instant suit is brought pursuant to the IAA, not the FTAIA, subpart 14 of section 5 of the IAA invoked by Defendants as an affirmative defense is substantively identical to subsection 6a of the FTAIA. 740 ILCS 10/5; 15 U.S.C. § 6a. The IAA expressly directs that where its wording is "identical or similar to that of a federal antitrust law" such as the FTAIA, Illinois courts shall look to federal law for guidance when construing the language of the IAA. 740 ILCS 10/11.

The State requests that this Court grant summary judgment in its favor on both types of affirmative defenses because the State argues that Defendants' alleged conduct in the instant suit does not fall within the IAA exclusion invoked by Defendants, and because the Commerce Clause is not a bar to application of the IAA against Defendants in the instant suit. The State also argues that the AU Optronics Defendants are precluded from litigating the central issue of what constitutes "import trade or commerce" with respect to the first defense because they are collaterally estopped as to this issue by the Ninth Circuit's decision in United States v. Hsiung, 778 F.3d 738 (9th Cir. 2015) (upholding an indictment of the AU Optronics Defendants under the Sherman Act for the same price-fixing alleged in the instant suit based [*5] on a "domestic effects" theory and finding in the alternative that sufficient evidence was presented to convict based on "the import trade theory alone").[9]

With respect to the first category of affirmative defense, Defendants argue that the conduct alleged by the State falls within the IAA's exclusion. They argue that Hsiung does not preclude the AU Optronics Defendants from asserting that their alleged conduct in the instant case did not involve import trade or commerce because the court in Hsiung did not consider that issue. If Hsiung did make any finding on the issue, Defendants argue the outcome would be in conflict with the Seventh Circuit's decision in Motorola Mobility LLC v. AU Optronics Corporation, 775 F.3d 816, 818 (7th Cir. 2015) (price-fixed components sold to foreign subsidiaries and subsequently imported by plaintiff manufacturer are not part of "import commerce" and Sherman Act claims based thereon must proceed under a domestic effect theory). Defendants assert that there is a "conflict" between circuits whether their conduct involved "import commerce" and thus the State should not be allowed to raise collateral estoppel offensively on this issue. With respect to the Commerce Clause defense, Defendants separately assert that the Commerce Clause of the United States Constitution precludes Illinois from regulating commerce that take place [*6] in foreign countries.

Discussion

Summary judgment is appropriate "if the pleadings, depositions, and admissions on file, together with affidavits, if any, show that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the moving party is entitled to a judgment as a matter of law." 735 ILCS 5/2-1005(c). For the purposes of summary judgment, the court should construe the facts strictly against the movant and liberally in favor of the opponent. Adams v. N. Ill. Gas Co., 211 Ill.2d 32, 43 (2004). A summary judgment proceeding is not used to try an issue of fact, but to determine whether any genuine issue of material fact exists. Happel v. Wal-Mart Stores, 199 Ill.2d 179, 186 (2002). Summary judgment should not be granted unless the right of the moving party is clear and free from doubt. Horwitz v. Holabird & Root, 212 Ill.2d 1, 8 (2004). Partial summary judgment may also be appropriate on discrete issues where "a party moves for a summary determination of one or more, but less than all, of the major issues in the case, and the court finds that there is no genuine issue of material fact as to that issue or those issues," in which case "the court shall thereupon draw an order specifying the major issue or issues that appear without substantial controversy, and directing such further proceedings upon the remaining undetermined issues as are just." 735 ILCS 5/2-1005(d).

I. Section 5(14) of the IAA does [*7] not constitute an affirmative defense to the State of Illinois' claim against Defendants

The IAA, pursuant to which the State has brought the instant suit against Defendants, expressly provides in section 7.9 that "No action under this Act shall be barred on the grounds that the activities or conduct complained of in any way affects or involves interstate or foreign commerce." 740 LLCS 10/7.9. Section 5 of the IAA also provides in pertinent part as follows:

> No provisions of this Act shall be construed to make illegal:
> * * *
> (14) Conduct involving trade or commerce (other than import trade or import commerce) with foreign nations unless:

[9] The substantive difference between the "domestic effects" and "import trade" approaches to a claim under the Sherman Act are explained infra beginning on page six.

> (a) such conduct has a direct, substantial, and reasonably foreseeable effect:
> > (i) on trade or commerce which is not trade or commerce with foreign nations, or on import trade or import commerce with foreign nations; or
> > (ii) on export trade or export commerce with foreign nations of a person engaged in such trade or commerce in the United States; and
> (b) such effect gives rise to a claim under the provisions of this Act, other than this subsection (14).
> (c) if this Act applies to conduct referred to in this subsection (14) only because of the provisions of paragraph (a)(ii), then this Act shall apply to such conduct only for [*8] injury to export business in the United States which affects this State: [...]

740 ILCS 10/5. Defendants have asserted section 5(14), as well as subsection 6a of the FTAIA from which the language of section 5(14) of the IAA was directly drawn, as an affirmative defense to the State's complaint against them.

The Ninth Circuit has previously held that section 6a of the FTAIA is not an affirmative defense to a Sherman Act offense, and that such interpretation is "at odds with the plain language of the statute, which establishes that when a case involves nonimport trade with foreign nations, the Sherman Act does not apply unless the FTAIA domestic effects exception applies." Hsiung, 778 F.3d at 756. Utilizing interpretation of its federal counterpart, as section 11 of the IAA directs Illinois courts to do,[10] this Court likewise finds that section 5(14) of the IAA is not an affirmative defense to section 3(1) of the IAA.

An affirmative defense is an affirmative matter asserted by a party that "gives color to the opposing party's claim and then asserts new matter by which the apparent right is defeated." Basselen v. GMC, 341 Ill. App. 3d 278, 287 (2d Dist. 2003). Under the plain language of the statute, the IAA excludes "anticompetitive conduct that causes only foreign injury," just as FTAIA excludes such conduct from the Sherman Act, by creating a general rule that the acts "shall not apply to conduct involving trade or commerce . . [*9] . with foreign nations." See F. Hoffmann-La Roche Ltd. v. Empagran S. A., 542 U.S. 155, 158 (2004); 15 U.S.C. § 6a. The statutes then create "exceptions to the general rule, applicable where (roughly speaking) that conduct significantly harms imports, domestic commerce, or American[11] exporters." Empagran S.A., 542 U.S. at 158.

The United States Supreme Court divides inquiries regarding price-fixing conduct alleged to have occurred abroad into two parts: the court first looks at whether the alleged conduct falls within the general rule, and second, the court determines whether the conduct falls within one of the statute's exceptions to that general rule. Id. This analysis demonstrates that, rather than serving as an affirmative defense by which an apparent right to recovery under the IAA is defeated, section 5(14) removes from the IAA's reach all export activities and other commercial activities occurring entirely outside the state unless those activities have a direct, substantial, and reasonably foreseeable domestic effect. 740 ILCS 10/5; see also Empagran S.A., 542 U.S. at 161 ("the FTAIA seeks to make clear to American exporters (and to firms doing business abroad) that the Sherman Act does not prevent them from entering into business arrangements . . . however anticompetitive, as long as those arrangements adversely affect only foreign markets").

The substantive [*10] thrust of the State's Motion for Partial Summary Judgment as to Defendants' section 5(14) "affirmative defense" is thus effectively a motion for summary judgment on the merits of their claim against Defendants under section 3(1) of the IAA. This is because an "affirmative defense" that actually challenges whether the statute in question is applicable to the conduct alleged goes to the heart of the claim's merits: it is not some other affirmative matter negating the claim. As a result, the State's motion does not ask the Court to determine as a matter of law whether, even if Defendants violated the IAA, some other affirmative matter defeats the State's claim; the motion asks the Court to determine whether Defendants' conduct is in fact a violation of section 3(1).

[10] See 740 ILCS 10/11, as explained in Note 8, supra.

[11] The IAA adds to the language of the FTAIA that any harm to U.S. exporters must also affect the State of Illinois. 740 ILCS 10/5.

The instant motion is not the proper vehicle for such a determination, particularly where the Defendants' purported "affirmative defense" may be disposed of on other grounds that pose no risk of prejudicing any of the parties' arguments with respect to the merits of the State's claim. This Court's finding in favor of the State that section 5(14) does not constitute an affirmative defense to section 3(1) is therefore not determinative of the merits of the State's claim under section 3(1). The Court makes no [*11] finding at this time as to whether section 3(1) or section 5(14) are applicable to any of the conduct alleged by the State, or whether any of the Defendants are precluded from arguing any legal theories relating thereto. These issues will be taken up with the remainder of the case if and when the parties pursue them in their proper course.

II. The State of Illinois' claims against Defendants are not barred by the Commerce Clause of the United States Constitution

The State next argues that the Court should grant summary judgment against Defendants with respect to their affirmative defense that the State's claim under the IAA is barred by the Commerce Clause of the United States Constitution. Defendants have asserted that application of the IAA to activities that allegedly occurred overseas would constitute an impermissible intrusion of state law into foreign commerce.

Although there is only one Commerce Clause in the United States Constitution, federal courts typically distinguish between issues involving domestic interstate commerce and foreign commerce, referring separately to the "Domestic Commerce Clause" and the "Foreign Commerce Clause." See e.g., ABC Charters, Inc. v. Branson, 591 F. Supp. 2d 1272, 1304 (S.D. Fla. 2008) (citing National Foreign Trade Council v. Natsios, 181 F.3d 38, 66 (1st Cir. 1999) (the purpose of the dormant Domestic Commerce Clause is "preventing states and their political subdivisions from promulgating protectionist policies," while the Foreign Commerce Clause "also restrains the states from excessive [*12] interference in foreign affairs")); *Gerling Global Reinsurance Corp. of Am. v. Quackenbush, 2000 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 8815. * 40-41 (E.D. Cal.)*.

Just as the analysis differs somewhat between the domestic and foreign prongs of the Commerce Clause, federal courts also distinguish between dormant Commerce Clause analysis, where a state action may interfere with a foreign policy matter even though the federal government has not spoken on the issue, and preemption analysis, where a state action is in direct conflict with federal law or policy. See Odebrecht Constr., Inc. v. Prasad, 876 F. Supp. 2d 1305, 1317-18 (S.D. Fla. 2012).

One federal district court, addressing a dormant Foreign Commerce Clause challenge to a state statute, summarized the United States Supreme Court's interpretation and application of the constitutional provision as follows:

> The United States Constitution grants Congress the power to 'regulate Commerce with foreign Nations.' U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 3. The Supreme Court has consistently recognized that this allocation of power implicitly contains a negative command, known as the dormant Commerce Clause, which prohibits certain state action even absent Congressional legislation or regulation. See Okla. Tax Com'n v. Jefferson Lines, Inc., 514 U.S. 175, 179 (1995) (citing Quill Corp. v. North Dakota, 504 U.S. 298, 309 (1992); Nw. States Portland Cement Co. v. Minnesota, 358 U.S. 450, 458 (1959); H.P. Hood & Sons. Inc. v. Du Mond, 336 U.S. 525, 534-535 (1949)). The Foreign Commerce Clause in particular recognizes that 'with respect to foreign intercourse and trade the people of the United States act through a single government with unified and adequate national [*13] power.' Japan Line, Ltd. v. Los Angeles Cnty., 441 U.S. 434, 448 (1979) (quoting Bd. of Tr. v. United States, 289 U.S. 48, 59 (1933)).
> In Japan Line, Ltd. v. Los Angeles County, the Supreme Court held that the power conferred under the Foreign Commerce Clause is greater than the power conferred by the Interstate Commerce Clause. 441 U.S. at 448. This is because discriminatory treatment of foreign commerce 'may create problems, such as the potential for > international retaliation, that concern the Nation as a whole.' Kraft Gen. Foods, Inc. v. Iowa Dep't of Revenue & Fin., 505 U.S. 71, 79 (1992) (citing Japan Line, 441 U.S. at 450). Accordingly, the Supreme Court held that a state law violates the Foreign Commerce Clause when it 'impair[s] federal uniformity in an area where federal uniformity is essential,' and 'prevents this Nation from speaking with one voice in regulating foreign trade.' Japan Line, 441 U.S. at 448-53. Later, the Supreme Court qualified Japan Line by holding that absent an explicit directive from Congress, a state law does not violate the Foreign Commerce Clause if it merely has 'foreign resonances' but does not 'implicate foreign affairs.' Container Corp. of Am. v. Franchise Tax Bd.. 463 U.S. 159, 194 (1983). A state law 'at variance with federal policy' will thus violate the 'one voice' standard articulated in Japan Line if it 'either implicates foreign policy issues which must be left to the Federal Government or violates a clear federal directive.' Id. As the Supreme Court observed, 'the [*14] second of these considerations is, of course, essentially a species of preemption analysis.' Id.

Odebrecht Constr., Inc., 876 F. Supp. 2d at 1317-18.

Preemption analysis, with respect to the Commerce Clause specifically, is further divided between direct conflicts between laws and "field preemption," as explained in ABC Charters, Inc.:

> Field preemption occurs when federal regulation in a field is so pervasive that a court can reasonably infer that there is no room left for the states to supplement it. Hughes v. Att'y Gen. of Fla., 377 F.3d 1258, 1267 (11th Cir. 2004). The Supreme Court has repeatedly cited Hines [v. Davidowitz, 312 U.S. 52, 67, (1941)] for the proposition that an "Act of Congress may touch a field in which the federal interest is so dominant that the federal system will be assumed to preclude enforcement of state laws on the same subject." Maryland v. Louisiana, 451 U.S. 725, 746 (1981); Ray v. Atlantic Richfield Co., 435 U.S. 151, 157 (1978); see City of Burbank v. Lockheed Air Terminal, Inc., 411 U.S. 624, 633 (1973). Where the federal government has acted in an area of unique federal concern and has crafted a balanced, tailored approach to an issue, and the state law threatens to upset that balance, the state law is preempted. [Natsios, 181 F.3d at 77].

591 F. Supp. 2d at 1304.

The State initially seems to have understood Defendants' affirmative defense as invoking Due Process requirements to challenge application of the IAA to "foreign conduct." MSJ at 14. To that end, the State points to section 7.9 of the IAA, which provides that "No action under this Act shall [*15] be barred on the grounds that the activities or conduct complained of in any way affects or involves interstate or foreign commerce" as a manifestation of an intent on the part of the Illinois General Assembly for the IAA to apply to foreign conduct that has an effect on Illinois. 740 ILCS 10/7.9; MSJ at 14. The State then cites United States v. Nippon Paper Industrial Company for the following principle:

> a sovereign ordinarily can impose liability for conduct outside its borders that produces consequences within them, and while considerations of comity argue against applying [the Sherman Act] to situations in which no effect within the United States has been shown ... the statute, properly interpreted, does proscribe extraterritorial acts which were 'intended to affect imports to the United States and did affect them.'

109 F.3d 1, 3 (1st Cir. 1997); MSJ at 14.

In their Response, however, Defendants clarified that they had asserted "no such defense" and instead were of the position that the State's "foreign commerce claims" were barred by the Commerce Clause as stated in Healy v. Beer Institute. 491 U.S. 324, 336 (1989); Resp. at 17-18.[12] Defendants distinguish case law relied upon by the [12] The Court notes that certain phraseology used by Defendants, such as "extraterritorial," is not improper in the context of the Commerce Clause, but is more commonly associated with a Due Process challenge. See Watson v. Employers Liability Assurance Corp., 348 U.S. 66, 71 (1954) (referencing "extraterritoriality due process doctrine"). To avoid confusion, and in light of Defendants' unequivocal statement that they are not arguing a Due Process defense in the instant motion, this Court limits its analysis in this Part II to whether the Commerce Clause presents a bar to certain of the State's claim-', and does not address whether application of the IAA to the alleged conduct would exceed the scope of the IAA's reach for Due Process purposes.

---

State as pertaining to acts of the United States Congress, as an arm of the federal government, and insist [*16] it has no applicability to state legislation because the Commerce Clause "precludes the application of a state statute to commerce that takes place wholly outside of the State's borders, whether or not the commerce has effects within the State." Healy, 491 U.S. at 336 (quoting Edgar v. Mite Corp., 457 U.S. 624, 642 (1982)); Resp. at 18.

In Healy, the United States Supreme Court considered a Connecticut price-affirmation statute aimed at ensuring out-of-state beer vendors did not charge more to Connecticut wholesalers than the vendors charged to wholesalers in neighboring states for the same product. Id. at 326. The court invalidated the statute on two grounds: first, because of its extraterritorial price-controls, and second, because it facially discriminated against interstate commerce. Id. at 337-40. Regarding the extraterritorial grounds, the court explained that:

> Taken together, our cases concerning the extraterritorial effects of state economic regulation stand at a minimum for the following propositions: First, the 'Commerce Clause . . . precludes the application of a state statute to commerce that takes place wholly outside of the State's borders, whether or not the commerce has effects within the State,' and, specifically, a State may not adopt legislation [*17] that has the practical effect of establishing 'a scale of prices for use in other states.' Second, a statute that directly controls commerce occurring wholly outside the boundaries of a State exceeds the inherent limits of the enacting State's authority and is invalid regardless of whether the statute's extraterritorial reach was intended by the legislature. The critical inquiry is whether the practical effect of the regulation is to control conduct beyond the boundaries of the State. Third, the practical effect of the statute must be evaluated not only by considering the consequences of the statute itself, but also by considering how the challenged statute may interact with the legitimate regulatory regimes of other States and what effect would arise if not one, but many or every, State adopted similar legislation. Generally speaking, the Commerce Clause protects against inconsistent legislation arising from the projection of one slate regulatory regime into the jurisdiction of another State. And, specifically, the Commerce Clause dictates that no State may force an out-of-state merchant to seek regulatory approval in one State before undertaking a transaction in another.

Id. at 335-37 (internal [*18] citations omitted); see also Brown-Forman Distillers Corp. v. N.Y. State Liquor Auth., 476 U.S. 573 (1986); Baldwin v. G.A.F. Seelig Inc., 294 U.S. 511 (1935); but see Pharm. Research & Mfrs. of Am. v. Walsh, 538 U.S. 644 (2003)[13]

The State replies that because Healy dealt with a statute that facially discriminated against domestic interstate commerce it does not address the issue posed by the instant case, where the State is arguing that a nondiscriminatory statute applies to foreign imports coming into Illinois. Reply at 13. The State cites the Seventh Circuit's discussion in In re Brand Name Prescription Drugs Antitrust Litigation as supporting its argument that "State antitrust statutes generally comport with the Commerce Clause, even if they reach interstate commerce." 123 F.3d 599, 613 (7th Cir. 1997); Reply at 13. Brand Name involved several consolidated appeals arising from an alleged price fixing scheme between drug manufacturers. Id. Of potential relevance to the instant suit was a denial of a motion to remand to state court a class action on behalf of consumers in several states, purportedly based on an Alabama statute modeled after the Sherman Act. Id. at 604, 607. The plaintiff's desired to remain in state court and disputed the district court's determination of diversity jurisdiction, and alternatively, of federal question jurisdiction based on federal occupation of the field of antitrust law despite plaintiff's [*19] "'artfully pleaded" cause of action under Alabama law. Id. at 610-11.

The Seventh Circuit's decision in Brand Name reversed the district court's refusal to remand on the grounds that the suit had "potential merit" as a cause of action under the state statute. Id. at 613. The court also clarified that, although outdated case law had deemed federal power to regulate interstate commerce as "exclusive," reading some state antitrust statutes as reaching interstate commerce had become "constitutionally permissible." Id. The court went on to clarify its reasoning as follows:

[13] See Note 20, infra, for discussion of Walsh.

> A state's power to regulate interstate commerce is limited ... by the provisions of the federal Constitution that limit the extraterritorial powers of state government. A state cannot regulate sales that take place wholly outside it. State A cannot use its antitrust law to make a seller in State B charge a lower price to a buyer in C. Insofar as the Alabama suit challenges sales from plants or offices in other slates to pharmacies in other states, it exceeds the constitutional scope of the Alabama antitrust law. But insofar as it challenges sales from other states to pharmacies in Alabama, it is within the intended and permissible scope of the [*20] statute[.]

Id. (internal citations omitted).

The State points to another federal case, In re Lorazepam & Clorasepate Antitrust Litigation, as specifically upholding the IAA against a Commerce Clause challenge, 295 F.Supp. 2d 30, 49 (D.D.C. 2003); Reply at 14. In Lorazepam, a number of plaintiff-insurers brought a class action suit under Minnesota, Massachusetts and Illinois state law on behalf of themselves, as third party payors for prescription drugs, and a number of nonparty customers, seeking to recover alleged overpayments for the drugs Lorazepam and Clorasepate. Id. at 33. The plaintiffs alleged that defendant drug manufacturers had entered into exclusive licensing agreements in restraint of trade that drove up costs of generic versions of the drugs and that defendants had monopolized the markets for both the drugs and their active ingredients. Id. One of the plaintiffs, Health Care Service Corporation ("HCSC"), an entity incorporated in Illinois and "doing business principally in the states of Illinois, Texas, and New Mexico," sought damages under the IAA for sales to its divisions located in Texas and New Mexico. Id. at 47, 50. Defendant moved to dismiss the claims for damages incurred outside the state of Illinois on the grounds that [*21] interpreting the IAA as reaching such claims would violate the Commerce Clause. Id. at 47-48.

The federal district court explained that "the nexus between the alleged antitrust violation and the state of Illinois" was determinative of the IAA's reach pursuant to section 7.9[14] of the statute and held that the IAA "extends not only to illegal antitrust activity that occurs wholly within Illinois, but also to activity which may have effects in that state and which may have occurred, in part, outside of Illinois." Id. at 48. Key to this finding was the fact that HCSC alleged in its claim that it was "ultimately responsible" for the cost - and thus ultimately incurred the damages - for overpayments made by its divisions in Texas and New Mexico. Id. at 50. This factual allegation supported HCSC's claim that the harm at issue "occurred at least in part in Illinois and had a substantial effect in Illinois." Id. The court held that reading the IAA as applicable to HCSC's claim did not run afoul of the Commerce Clause because the IAA did not directly conflict with the Sherman Act and the IAA stated a legitimate state interest as its purpose in section 2.[15] Id. at 49.

Defendants argue in their Surreply that where a state action affects [*22] foreign commerce, as opposed to merely interstate commerce, "additional scrutiny is necessary to determine whether the regulations 'may impair uniformity in an area where federal uniformity is essential,' or may implicate 'matters of concern to the whole nation ... such as the potential for international retaliation.'" Pacific Northwest Venison Producers v. Smitch, 20 F.3d 1008, 1014 (9th Cir. 1994) (quoting Japan Line, Ltd. v. Cnty. of Los Angeles, 441 U.S. 434, 448, (1979); Kraft General Foods v. Iowa Dep't of Revenue, 505 U.S. 71, 79 (1992)); S. Rep. at 3.

Defendants further argue that the cases cited by the State are inapposite to the scenario in the instant case, where the Attorney General seeks to apply the IAA to commercial activity that Defendants characterize as "occurring wholly outside" the state of Illinois. S. Rep. at 4. Defendants argue that applying the IAA to such activity exceeds "the inherent limits of the enacting State's authority" described by Healy as restraining state action "regardless of whether the statute's extraterritorial reach was intended by the legislature" or "whether or not the commerce has effects within the State." Healy v. Beer Inst., 491 U.S. 324, 336 (1989) (internal citations omitted); S. Rep. at 4-5.

[14] "No action under this Act shall be barred on the grounds that the activities or conduct complained of in any way affects or involves interstate or foreign commerce." 740 ILCS 10/7.9.

[15] "[T]he purpose of this Act is to promote the unhampered growth of commerce and industry throughout the State [of Illinois] by prohibiting restraints of trade which are secured through monopolistic ... practices and which act or tend to decrease competition[.]" 740 ILCS 10/2.

Likewise, Defendants argue that it makes no difference if the IAA is not in conflict with the Sherman Act because the Commerce Clause "has long been understood . . . to provide 'protection from state legislation inimical [*23] to the national commerce [even] where Congress has not acted'" due to "the Framers' overriding concern that 'the Federal Government must speak with one voice when regulating commercial relations with foreign governments.'" Barclays Bank PLC v. Franchise Tax Bd., 512 U.S. 298, 310 (1994); Japan Line, Ltd., 441 U.S. at 449; S. Rep. at 6. Lorazepam - where the entity responsible for payment of the allegedly inflated drug prices was based in Illinois - does not support the State's position, Defendants argue, but instead follows Healy by pointing out that application of the IAA "to sales that take place wholly outside the state, whether or not the commerce has an effect within the state, would violate the Commerce Clause." In re Lorazepam & Clorasepate Antitrust Litigation, 295 F.Supp. 2d 30, 48 (D.D.C. 2003) (internal quotation omitted) (emphasis by Defendants); S. Rep. at 6.[16]

In a Sur-Surreply, the State argues that Healy and other cases cited by Defendants are limited to the context of state actions involving "economic protectionism" and do not present a challenge to an evenhanded application of the IAA to all price-fixing where the IAA is consistent with both the substance and the reach of the Sherman Act. SS. Rep. at 2-3. In support of this position, the State cites Energy And Environment: Legal Institute v. Epel, a Tenth Circuit case that characterizes the sweeping [*24] statement in Healy - and other cases which say that regulation of commercial activities occurring wholly outside the state violates the Commerce Clause - as applying only to price control statutes that "link prices paid in [the regulating state] with those paid out of state" or discriminate against out of state entities. 793 F.3d 1169, 1173 (10th Cir. 2015) (pet. for cert. currently pending before U.S. Supreme Court).

Epel considered a Colorado law that required electricity generators to ensure that a certain percentage of power sold to consumers in Colorado was derived from renewable resources. Id. at 1170. The electricity at issue was delivered via "an interconnected grid serving eleven states and portions of Canada and Mexico," meaning the electricity flowed freely between all points on the grid. Id. at 1171. Plaintiff was a coal producer located outside of Colorado who challenged the law under the Commerce Clause because the renewable energy mandate meant that it would lose business from utility companies also located outside of Colorado who supplied power to the grid, thereby attempting to control and causing harm to conduct outside Colorado. Id. at 1171, 1175. Plaintiffs argued that such application rendered the Colorado law per se invalid under Baldwin [*25] ,[17]Brown-Forman,[18] and Healy.[19]Id. at 1175. The Tenth Circuit characterized the law as regulating "the quality of a good sold to in-state residents," acknowledging that the law might have "ripple effects, including price effects, both in-state and elsewhere," but upholding it nonetheless because the law did not discriminate against out-of-state entities or attempt to implement price controls as did the laws in the Healy line of cases.[20]Id. at 1173.

[16] Defendants also briefly argue at page one of their Surreply that the Attorney General, has waived its argument against their Commerce Clause defense by initially characterizing it as a "due process" defense. See Ill. S. Ct. Rule 341(h)(7) ("Points not argued are waived and shall not be raised in the reply brief); S. Rep. at 1. However. mischaracterization of an argument is not the same as failing to raise the point at all: the State's initial brief argues and cites case law (described at page 11, supra) in support of its position that Illinois may impose liability for conduct that extends beyond its borders that causes in-state harm. MSJ at 14. The argument that the IAA is applicable to Defendants' alleged conduct despite limits on extraterritorial state regulations was therefore not waived by the State's initial brief.

[19] Healy. 491 U.S. at 335-37.

[20] The court's reasoning in Epel relied in part on the U.S. Supreme Court's holding in another case called Pharmaceutical Research & Manufacturers Of America v. Walsh, where plaintiffs also challenged a state statute under the Commerce Clause. 538 U.S. 644, 669 (2003). The regulation at issue in Walsh was a "prior authorization" process applied by the State of Maine to Medicaid sales from drug manufacturers who declined to enter into rebate agreements for program participants. Id. at 650. Plaintiff; in Walsh argued that the program constituted an impermissible extraterritorial regulation under the negative or donnant aspect of the Commerce Clause as iterated in Baldwin and Healy by regulating the terms of transactions occurring outside the

Even if the broad statements in Healy and its predecessor cases were applied to the instant suit, the State disputes Defendants' characterization of the conduct sought to be regulated as occurring "wholly outside Illinois." SS. Rep. at 7; S. Rep. at 4. The State argues that the commercial activity at issue in the instant suit, unlike that in the Healy line of cases, did not occur wholly outside Illinois because "the relevant commercial activity includes not only the first sale but also the last the one to the end-user... in Illinois." SS. Rep. at 7. Failure to include end-users in Illinois within the sphere of commercial conduct at issue because the first sale in the [*26] majority of instances took place abroad is contrary, the State insists, to the Lorazepam court's reading of the IAA as covering "activity which may have effects in that state and which may have occurred, in part, outside of Illinois." In re Lorazepam & Clorasepate Antitrust Litig., 295 F. Supp. 2d at 48; SS. Rep. at 8.

Furthermore, the result of failing to include end-users in Illinois as part of the conduct at issue "would eclipse other Commerce Clause tests and render unconstitutional many current state statutes." SS. Rep. at 7. The State returns to the Tenth Circuit's discussion in Epel for support its policy concerns regarding what it would characterize as an overly-expansive reading of Healy:

> if any state regulation that 'control[s] . . . conduct' out of state is per se unconstitutional, wouldn't we have to strike down state health and safety regulations that require out-of-state manufacturers to alter their designs or labels? [Plaintiffs have offered] no limiting principle that might prevent that possibility or others like it. Instead, it seems to embrace such results and, in this way, it seems to call on us not merely to respect the actual holdings of the most dormant authorities in all of donnant commerce clause jurisprudence but to revive and [*27] rebuild them on the basis of dicta into a weapon far more powerful than Pike[21] or Philadelphia.[22] That's an audacious invitation we think the [U.S. Supreme] Court unlikely to take up, especially given its remarks about the limits of Baldwin[23] doctrine in Walsh,[24] and it's a novel lawmaking project we decline to take up on our own.

Energy & Env'l Legal Inst, 793 F.3d at 1175.

The issue before the Court in the instant motion is whether the State has demonstrated that, as a matter of law, none of the State's claims are barred by the foreign or domestic prongs of the Commerce Clause of the United Slates Constitution in either their dormant or preclusive capacities. This Court finds that the State's claims are not barred.

As an initial matter, the Court finds that neither party has argued that the claims at issue with respect to the Commerce Clause defense are based upon conduct occurring in any of the several states other than Illinois. This removes from consideration concerns regarding the Domestic Commerce Clause, the purpose of which "is to curtail states' abilities to hinder interstate trade." Houlton Citizens' Coalition v. Town of Houlton, 175 F.3d 178, 182 (1st Cir. 1999) (citing Ben Oehrleins & Sons & Daughter, Inc. v. Hennepin County, 115 F.3d 1372, 1381-82 (8th Cir. 1997); Individuals for Responsible Gov't, Inc. v. Washue County, 110 F.3d 699, 703-04 (9th Cir. 1997)). As explained supra, this purpose is distinct from the Foreign Commerce Clause, which not only restricts protectionist policies but also restrains states from "excessive interference [*28] in foreign affairs" Nat. Foreign Trade Council v. Natsios, 181 F.3d 38, 66 (1st Cir. 1999).

state, and also that the program discriminated against interstate commerce by subsidizing in-state sales. Id. at 669. The Walsh court found that the Maine law did not regulate out-of-state prices, either expressly or effectively, nor did it attempt to tie in-state prices to out-of-state prices, and held, without further explanation, that "[t]he rule that was applied in Baldwin and Healy accordingly is not applicable to this case." Id.

[24] Sec discussion in Note 20, supra.

This Court finds case law cited by both sides offering guidance on the Domestic Commerce Clause, including Healy, Brown-Forman, Baldwin, Walsh, Brand Name, and Lorazepam, largely inapposite because the holdings in each of those cases addressed conduct occurring in one state which affected domestic commerce between states, not conduct involving commerce alleged to have occurred overseas and to have had a damaging effect in the plaintiff state. See Healy v. Beer Inst., 491 U.S. 324, 336 (1989); Brown-Forman Distillers Corp., 476 U.S. 573; Baldwin v. G. A. F. Seelig, Inc., 294 U.S. 511 (1935); Pharm. Research & Mfrs. of Am. v. Walsh, 538 U.S. 644 (2003): In re Brand Name Prescription Drugs Antitrust Litigation, 123 F.3d 599, 613 (7th Cir. 1997): In re Lorazepam & Clorasepate Antitrust Litigation. 295 F.Supp. 2d 30, 49 (D.D.C. 2003). Even Epel, which considered a facial challenge to a state statute that had implications for both domestic and foreign commerce, is somewhat lacking in persuasive power here to the extent that it considered whether resulting loss of business by out-of-state entities was actionable under the Commerce Clause, not whether a state law action based on alleged conduct by foreign entities affecting the plaintiff state is barred by the Commerce Clause. Energy & Env't Legal Inst., 793 F.3d at 1173.

The case law cited by the parties would have more weight if Defendants articulated any discrimination or discriminatory effect against foreign commerce, because discriminatory regulation would be unlikely to survive a challenge based upon either the domestic or foreign [*29] prongs of the Commerce Clause. Defendants have not, however, pointed to any way in which the IAA differentiates between foreign commerce - either from overseas or other states - and intrastate commerce. Neither can the Court see any basis in the IAA, the Complaint against Defendants, nor any of Defendants' briefs on the instant motion for finding that the IAA or the State have discriminated against foreign commerce.

The relevant inquiry under the Foreign Commerce Clause, as articulated supra, is whether a state law impairs federal uniformity with respect to foreign affairs. Japan Line, Ltd. v. Cnty. of Los Angeles, 441 U.S. 434, 448-53 (1979); Container Corp. of Am. v. Franchise Tax Bd., 463 U.S. 159, 194 (1983). A state law impairs that uniformity if it "implicates foreign policy issues which must be left to the Federal Government or violates a clear federal directive." Container Corp. of Am., 463 U.S. at 194. Because foreign affairs are the province of Congress, and not the states, where Congress has not spoken, the dormant Foreign Commerce Clause may preempt interfering state regulation. See Wardair Canada, Inc. v. Florida Dep't of Revenue, 477 U.S. 1, 12 (1986) ("the dormant Commerce Clause, in both its interstate and foreign incarnations, only operates where the Federal Government has not spoken"). Where Congress has spoken extensively, as it has in this case with the Sherman Act and related federal anti-trust legislation, two questions [*30] remain: (1) whether Congress has evidenced an intent to occupy the field of anti-trust law such that states are preempted entirely from even congruent regulation therein, and (2) whether a direct conflict exists between the federal and state laws at issue. See Wardair Canada, Inc., 477 U.S. at 12: ABC Charters, Inc. v. Branson, 591 F. Supp. 2d 1272, 1304 (S.D. Fla. 2008).

The answer to the first question has already been provided by the United States Supreme Court, which clearly stated in California v. ARC America Corporation that "Congress has not pre-empted the field of antitrust law. Congress intended the federal antitrust lawrs to supplement, not displace, state antitrust remedies." 490 U.S. 93, 101-02 (1989).[25] The second question is simplified by the fact that the IAA. and in particular section 3 and section 5, closely follow federal law antitrust law. See 740 ILCS 10/3; 740 ILCS 10/5; 15 U.S.C. § 1; 15 U.S.C. § 6a. Defendants have not pointed to any text in the IAA which contradicts any federal statute, nor have they pointed to any way in which the IAA has a broader reach than its federal counterpart. Defendants have instead argued that the bar to application of the IAA in the instant suit "does not depend upon whether federal law and state law conflict" or whether the IAA is "congruous" with the Sherman Act. Surreply at 6. That position is not consistent with federal Commerce Clause case law, [*31] as explained supra, which makes clear that the dormant Commerce Clause [25] Defendants characterize the State's argument as conflating "Commerce Clause and preemption principles." Surreply at 6. But as the United States Supreme Court explained in Container Corporation of America, consideration of whether a state law is "at variance with federal policy" by "violat[ing] a clear federal directive" is "essentially a species of preemption analysis." 463 U.S. at 194.

analysis relied upon by Defendants operates only "where the Federal Government has not spoken." Wardair Canada, Inc., 477 U.S. at 12 (emphasis added).

Defendants cite Pacific Northwest Venison Producers v. Switch, 20 F.3d 1008, (9th Cir. 1994), and Reeves, Inc. v. Stake, 447 U.S. 429 (1980), for the premise that additional scrutiny is applied under Commerce Clause analysis to slate laws affecting foreign commerce. While careful analysis is surely called for by those cases, they too failed to find a violation of the Commerce Clause where no evidence was presented of "economic protectionism on the part of the state, or of substantial burdens on interstate or foreign commerce." Pac. N. W. Venison Prods., 20 F.3d at 1017; Reeves, Inc., 447 U.S. at 446. Defendants" citation to Barclays Bank PLC v. Franchise Tax Board of California, where the United States Supreme Court addressed a dormant Foreign Commerce Clause challenge to a California state tax scheme, likewise reinforces this Court's conclusion that "specific indications of congressional intent" are needed to bar state regulation in a particular field even if the regulation has some impact on foreign companies, 512 U.S. 298, 323-28(1994).

Defendants have asserted numerous times in their briefs that their challenge is based upon the premise that the alleged conduct at issue occurred [*32] "wholly outside the state." The Court observes that, as stated in Part I, the IAA only reaches conduct involving "import trade or import commerce" with foreign nations or certain conduct having "a direct, substantial, and reasonably foreseeable effect," as further enumerated by the IAA, in Illinois. 740 ILCS 10/5, Defendants state in their Surreply that the federal court in Lorazepam "held that 'applying an Illinois statute to sales that take place wholly outside the state, whether or not the commerce has an effect within the state, would violate the Commerce Clause." Surreply at 6 (emphasis added). This statement by Defendants is patently false, and in fact the opposite of what the Lorazepam court held.

The quotation used by Defendants is taken from a section of the Lorazepam court's opinion entitled "Defendants Arguments." In re Lorazepam & Clorasepate Antitrust Litigation, 295 F. Supp. 2d at 47-48. The court in that case went on to reject the position taken by defendants, and held instead that "a determination of the nexus between the alleged antitrust violation and the state of Illinois . . . defines the reach of the Illinois Antitrust Act" with respect to transactions occurring outside the state. Id. at 48. "A state regulation is pre-empted by the 'negative' or 'dormant' Commerce [*33] Clause," the Lorazepam court held, "only if the state regulation unduly impedes upon interstate commerce such that it is in direct conflict with federal law." Id. at 49. The court then concluded that "the scope of the Illinois Antitrust Act does not directly conflict with that of the Sherman Act such that the state statute is partially pre-empted" with respect to sales occurring in other states that resulted in overpayments by an Illinois corporation. Id.

As explained supra, the Lorazepam case does not involve foreign commerce, but rather interstate commerce. However, it did involve an alleged conspiracy by drug manufactures to fix prices in violation of both federal and state antitrust laws, including the IAA. Id. at 34. The Court in Lorazepam considered whether a private plaintiff based in Illinois and bringing suit under the IAA could recover damages for activities that had occurred in other states but resulted in the Illinois plaintiff making overpayments. Id. at 48. Defendants argued that the Commerce Clause barred application of the IAA to activity that occurred in other states, but the federal district court disagreed because of the effect in Illinois. Id. at 48. Lorazepam, while not reaching Foreign Commerce Clause concerns [*34] as expressed in Japan Line, and not relied upon by this Court as authority with respect to overseas conduct, stands for the principle that the IAA is not limited only to activity occurring within Illinois so long as that activity has an effect in Illinois as defined under the statute. More importantly, it does not, as Defendants claim, say that that "applying an Illinois statute to sales that take place wholly outside the state, whether or not the commerce has an effect within the state, would violate the Commerce Clause." Surreply at 6 (emphasis added).

Defendants have pointed to many instances of discriminatory state actions being struck down under the Commerce Clause, but have not pointed to any discrimination in the IAA, either as written or as applied. The United States Supreme Court has held that the field of antitrust law is not preempted by federal legislation, and has stated that "state laws permitting indirect purchaser recoveries" for antitrust violations are generally "consistent with the broad purposes of the federal antitrust laws: deterring anticompetitive conduct and ensuring the compensation of victims of that conduct." ARC America Corp., 490 U.S. at 102. While that case did not consider whether the [*35] IAA specifically is consistent with federal antitrust law, nor did it scrutinize any impact on application to foreign entities, this Court finds no conflict between the provisions of the IAA at issue and federal law, and Defendants have not attempted to argue any. This Court therefore finds, as a matter of law, that the Commerce Clause of the United States Constitution does not present a bar to the State's claims against Defendants.

IT IS, THEREFORE, HEREBY ORDERED that:

1. The State of Illinois' Motion for Partial Summary Judgment Against the Defendants' Foreign-Conduct Defenses is GRANTED;

2. This matter is continued for status on __ without further notice.

MEMORANDUM OPINION

ANDREWS, U.S. DISTRICT JUDGE:

Presently before the Court are motions to dismiss filed by defendants Caterpillar Inc., Volvo Construction Equipment North America, LLC, Komatsu America Corp., and Associated Auction Services LLC ("AAS"). (D.I. 27, 28, 30, 33). Defendants request dismissal pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6). The issues have been fully briefed. (D.I. 35, 36, 38). Oral argument was held on October 20, 2015. (D.I. 44). For the reasons set forth herein, the motions to dismiss are GRANTED.

I. BACKGROUND

On January 29, 2015, International Construction Products LLC ("ICP") brought this antitrust action against Caterpillar, Volvo, Komatsu, and AAS. (D.I. 1). ICP imports and sells heavy construction equipment. (Id. ¶ 7). Caterpillar, Volvo, and Komatsu (the "Manufacturer Defendants") manufacture heavy construction equipment. (Id. ¶¶ 8-10). AAS facilitates auctions of used heavy construction equipment. (Id. ¶ 11). ICP's claims relate to violations of the Sherman Act, the Clayton Act, and state law. (Id. ¶¶ [*3] 113-52). More specifically, ICP alleges a group boycott, exclusive dealing, various monopolization claims, and unlawful merger. (Id.). I will summarize the relevant allegations of the complaint.

ICP alleges that, in the United States, the market for the sale of new heavy construction equipment is highly concentrated. (Id. ¶ 21). Defendant Caterpillar accounts for approximately 40 percent or more of all sales. (Id.). Komatsu accounts for more than 15%. (Id. ¶ 21). Volvo has a market share of more than 5%. (Id. ¶ 44).

Manufacturers of new heavy construction equipment typically sell equipment to local dealers throughout the country, who take title and resell the equipment to end users. (Id. ¶¶ 19, 20, 39). End users rely on these local dealers for service and support and therefore do not typically purchase new equipment from dealers without an authorized service location within 75 miles. (Id. ¶ 38). This in turn means that prices may vary in different states and regions within states. (Id.).

ICP alleges that the Manufacturer Defendants require exclusivity on the part of their equipment dealers. (Id. ¶ 39). That is, when a dealer takes title to equipment manufactured by one of the Manufacturer [*4] Defendants, the dealer is expected not to deal with competing suppliers. (Id.). ICP alleges that these exclusivity requirements foreclose substantial portions of the dealer market to new entrants. (Id. ¶ 42).

Historically, direct sales of new heavy construction equipment to end users have been uncommon. (Id. ¶ 20). ICP sought to change that paradigm by selling foreign (particularly Chinese) heavy construction equipment directly to consumers through the use of the Internet. (Id. ¶¶ 69, 70, 74). ICP planned to use an online entity called IronPlanet to host and support their online store. (Id. ¶ 74). IronPlanet is the largest online marketplace for the sale of used heavy construction equipment. (Id. ¶¶ 56, 57, 58). ICP alleges that the Manufacturer Defendants are among the highest volume sellers of used heavy construction equipment on the IronPlanet platform. (Id. ¶ 94). Through its partnership with IronPlanet, ICP hoped to benefit from the substantial user base of end users already using IronPlanet to purchase used heavy construction equipment. (Id. ¶ 74). ICP alleges that although the Manufacturer Defendants had exclusivity agreements with dealers, the requirements imposed by the Manufacturer [*5] Defendants did not extend to the servicing of equipment. (Id. ¶¶ 75, 76). Therefore ICP was able to successfully enter into arrangements with dealers for maintenance and repair of equipment it distributed online. (Id.). With this new business model, ICP could be a "master distributor" for "low priced, high-quality new heavy construction equipment" in a new and efficient distribution channel. (Id. ¶¶ 74, 76).

ICP announced its partnership with IronPlanet on March 3, 2014 at the CONEXPO-CON/AGG industry event. (Id. ¶ 82). This announcement was widely covered in the trade press and generated substantial interest, particularly from Chinese manufacturers seeking to enter into distribution deals with ICP. (Id. ¶¶ 82, 87, 88, 89, 90). ICP alleges that its entry into the market posed a significant competitive threat to the Manufacturer Defendants and that they, in response, conspired to block ICP's entry. (Id. ¶¶ 93, 94). ICP alleges that each of the Manufacturer Defendants communicated "the same or similar threat" to IronPlanet "within days of one another." (Id. ¶ 96). The thrust of the threat, ICP alleges, was that each Manufacturer Defendant would stop selling their used equipment through [*6] IronPlanet if IronPlanet continued to deal with ICP. (Id. ¶¶ 95, 96). IronPlanet then informed ICP that it would not perform under the terms of their agreement, and delivered a written notice of termination. (Id. ¶ 102).

ICP alleges that in furtherance of eliminating any potential threat to Caterpillar's business through the use of IronPlanet, Caterpillar sought to merge Cat Auction Services and IronPlanet. (Id. ¶¶ 105, 106). ICP alleges this merger was made possible because Caterpillar owned a minority stake in both companies. (Id. ¶ 105). This merger was effectuated by Caterpillar, ICP alleges, to align the goals of IronPlanet with those of Caterpillar, thus allowing Caterpillar to eliminate the threat ofiCP or any other potential market entrants. (Id. ¶¶ 105, 106).

II. LEGAL STANDARD

Rule 8(a) requires "a short and plain statement of the claim showing that the pleader is entitled to relief." Fed. R. Civ. P. 8(a)(2). When reviewing a motion to dismiss pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6), the court must accept the complaint's factual allegations as true, but may disregard any legal conclusions. Fowler v. UPMC Shadyside, 578 F.3d 203, 210-11 (3d Cir. 2009). The factual allegations do not have to be detailed, but they must provide more than labels, conclusions, or a "formulaic recitation" of the claim [*7] elements. Bell Atl. Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 555-56, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007) ("Factual allegations must be enough to raise a right to relief above the speculative level ... on the assumption that all the allegations in the complaint are true (even if doubtful in fact)."). There must be sufficient factual matter to state a facially plausible claim to relief. Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 678, 129 S. Ct. 1937, 173 L. Ed. 2d 868 (2009). The facial plausibility standard is satisfied when the complaint's factual content "allows the court to draw the reasonable inference that the defendant is liable for the misconduct alleged." Id. ("Where a complaint pleads facts that are merely consistent with a defendant's liability, it stops short of the line between possibility and plausibility of entitlement to relief." (quotation marks omitted)).

III. ANALYSIS

A. Group Boycott Under Sherman Act § 1 (Counts One and Two)

Section 1 of the Sherman Act provides: "Every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, is declared to be illegal." 15 U.S.C. § 1. In order to satisfy the requirement of a "contract, combination ... or conspiracy," there must be "some form of concerted action." In re Baby Food Antitrust Litig., 166 F.3d 112, 117 (3d Cir. 1999). "The existence of an agreement is the hallmark of a Section 1 claim." Id.

In alleging [*8] the existence of such an agreement, the plaintiff must state "enough factual matter (taken as true) to suggest that an agreement was made." Bell Atl. Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 556, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007). Evidence of parallel conduct is, by itself, not sufficient to show an agreement. In re Ins. Brokerage Antitrust Litig., 618 F.3d 300, 321 (3d Cir. 2010). When factual allegations of parallel conduct are set forth to satisfy the § 1 agreement requirement, the parallel conduct "must be placed in a context that raises a suggestion of a preceding agreement, not merely parallel conduct that could just as well be independent action." Twombly, 550 U.S. at 557. Parallel conduct can support an inference of agreement when it "would probably not result from chance, coincidence, independent responses to common stimuli, or mere interdependence unaided by an advance understanding among the parties." Id. at 556 n.4. The Third Circuit has advised courts to look to certain so-called "plus factors" to determine whether parallel conduct may give rise to an inference of agreement. In re Flat Glass Antitrust Litig., 385 F.3d 350, 360 (3d Cir. 2004). While there is no exhaustive list of "plus factors," the Third Circuit has identified the following three: "(1) evidence that the defendant had a motive to enter into a price fixing conspiracy; (2) evidence that the defendant acted contrary to its interests; and (3) evidence implying a traditional [*9] conspiracy." Id. (quotation marks omitted). When "'common economic experience,' or the facts alleged in the complaint itself, show that independent self-interest is an 'obvious alternative explanation' for defendants' common behavior," the complaint should be dismissed. In re Ins. Brokerage, 618 F.3d at 326.

In addition to demonstrating an agreement, the § 1 plaintiff must show that "the conspiracy to which the defendant was a party imposed an unreasonable restraint on trade:" Toledo Mack Sales & Serv., Inc. v. Mack Trucks, Inc., 530 F.3d 204, 218 (3d Cir. 2008). While § 1 agreements are ordinarily analyzed under the "rule of reason," some agreements are per se unlawful once proven. In re Ins. Brokerage, 618 F.3d at 316. One such per se unlawful agreement is a group boycott, or a "concerted refusal[] by traders to deal with other traders." Klor's Inc. v. Broadway-Hale Stores, Inc., 359 U.S. 207, 212, 79 S. Ct. 705, 3 L. Ed. 2d 741 (1959); see also NYNEX Corp. v. Discon, Inc., 525 U.S. 128, 135, 119 S. Ct. 493, 142 L. Ed. 2d 510 (1988).

The Court must first determine which allegations of the complaint are factual, and thus entitled to a presumption of truth, and which are mere legal conclusions. Fowler v. UPMC Shadyside, 578 F.3d 203, 210-11 (3d Cir. 2009). Here, the complaint's bare conclusory allegations of agreement-such as "[o]n information and belief, the Manufacturer Defendants agreed and conspired with one another to issue these threats" (D.I. 1 ¶ 98)—are to be disregarded in assessing the sufficiency of the complaint. See Fowler, 578 F.3d at 210-11.

As for the complaint's factual allegations, which must be accepted [*10] as true, there are no facts that directly show the existence of an agreement between the Manufacturer Defendants. ICP instead insists that the existence of an agreement can be inferred from the circumstances surrounding IronPlanet's failure to perform the terms of its agreement with ICP. (D.I. 40 at 20-22; D.I. 1 ¶¶ 81-86, 95-97, 100, 101). ICP "announced its partnership with IronPlanet on March 3, 2014." (D.I. 1 ¶ 82). ICP further alleges that "[e]ach of the Manufacturer Defendants communicated the same or similar threat to IronPlanet within days of one another," and that IronPlanet "contemporaneously communicated the fact and substance of these communications to ICP." (Id. ¶¶ 95, 96). Specifically, the complaint alleges that on April 3, 2014, the President of IronPlanet "informed ICP's Chairman that Caterpillar, and at least one other manufacturer of heavy construction equipment, had threatened to stop doing business with IronPlanet if IronPlanet continued to deal with ICP." (Id. ¶ 96). On April 10, 2014, in response to an inquiry about the identity of the other manufacturers, IronPlanet's President "replied 'you know who our investors are.'" (Id.). The complaint alleges that the investors [*11] in IronPlanet are the Manufacturer Defendants and venture capital firms. (Id. ¶ 97).

With all inferences drawn in favor of ICP, the complaint can be understood as alleging that each of the Manufacturer Defendants made similar threats to IronPlanet and that those complaints were made "within days of one another." (Id. ¶ 95). The Court may infer that because the Manufacturer Defendants were the sole manufacturer investors in IronPlanet, and because the President of IronPlanet stated that "Caterpillar and at least one other manufacturer" issued threats, all of the Manufacturer Defendants issued boycott threats.[1] (Id. ¶¶ 96, 97). This parallel conduct, however—without more—does not suffice. Twombly, 550 U.S. at 557. Even "'conscious parallelism' ... is 'not in itself unlawful,'" as "parallel conduct is 'just as much in line with a wide swath of rational and competitive business strategy unilaterally prompted by common perceptions of the market.'" In re Ins. Brokerage Antitrust Litig., 618 F.3d 300, 321 (3d Cir. 2010) (quoting Twombly, 550 U.S. at 553-54). ICP argues that it has alleged sufficient additional "plus factor" facts to plausibly suggest the existence of an agreement, rather than independent action. I disagree.

ICP argues that the close temporal proximity of the threats, in conjunction with their content, leads to an inference of agreement. The complaint does not, however, present a scenario where threats were made within minutes or hours of one another. See, e.g., Taxi Weekly, Inc. v. Metropolitan Taxicab Bd. of Trade, Inc., 539 F.2d 907, 911 (2d Cir. 1976) (taxi fleet owners all unexpectedly telephoned cancellations of long-standing subscriptions within a half-hour period). Nor does the complaint present a scenario where the threats at issue were so specific or complex that they could not be explained absent prior agreement. See, e.g., Twombly, 550 U.S. at 556 n.4 (noting with apparent approval that the parties agreed that "complex and historically unprecedented changes in pricing structure made at the very same time by multiple competitors, and made for no other discernible reason, would support a plausible inference of conspiracy" (quotation [*13] marks omitted)); FTC v. Cement Inst., 333 U.S. 683, 713 n.15, 68 S. Ct. 793, 92 L. Ed. 1010, 44 F.T.C. 1460 (1948) (identical bids were made by rivals on an item with no standard price). Instead, the factual allegations here are entirely consistent with the Manufacturer Defendants reacting to a common stimulus: the recent announcement of the ICP and IronPlanet partnership, an announcement made a month before the threats, which occurred "within days of one another." (D.I. 1 ¶¶ 82, 95, 96). The timing of the threats, as described in the complaint, does not suggest the contrary. Although ICP urges the Court to interpret IronPlanet's "contemporaneous communicat[ions]" with ICP to mean that several threats were issued on the same day, that reading is far too strained. (Id. ¶ 96; D.I. 44 at 20-22). The implausibility of this reading is particularly evident in light of the complaint's clear statement that the threats were made days apart. (D.I. 1 ¶ 95).

Further, while the complaint concludes that the Manufacturer Defendants "communicated the same or similar threat to IronPlanet," this particular boycott threat is not particularly complex. (Id. (emphasis added)). It is hard to imagine a scenario where one refusal to deal—under the circumstances described in the complaint—would not be "the same or similar" [*14] to another. In the absence of facts setting out some unexplained or striking similarity, a general assertion about the similarity of the threats is of little or no significance.

ICP argues that the because of the "costly and risky nature of [these] threats," no Manufacturer Defendant "would have made [such threats] had it not had assurances that the other Manufacturer Defendants would do the same." (D.I. 1 ¶¶ 99, 100; D.I. 36 at pp. 9-11). These conclusory statements fail to find support in the facts set forth in the complaint. In fact, ICP acknowledges that the Manufacturer Defendants individually wield powerful leverage over IronPlanet. The complaint states: "IronPlanet has in the past publicly acknowledged the risks to its revenues and profitability if one or more of the Manufacturer Defendants stopped selling their used heavy construction equipment through IronPlanet." (D.I. 1 ¶ 94 (emphasis added)). Therefore, the boycott threats issued to IronPlanet by each the Manufacturer Defendants are not "inconsistent with independent self-interest." In re Processed Egg Prods. Antitrust Litig., 821 F. Supp. 2d 709, 730 (E.D. Pa. 2011). In response to the recent announcement of a new entrant that threatened to change the entire industry dynamic, one would expect the Manufacturer [*15] Defendants to make the same rational decision to the same stimulus: stop ICP's entry. (D.I. 36 at pp. 2-4; D.I. 38 at pp. 3-4). That seems to be the "obvious alternative explanation" for the conduct of the Manufacturer Defendants. Twombly, 550 U.S. at 567.

[1] This understanding may exceed what would be properly understood in viewing the allegations [*12] in the light most favorable to Plaintiff. Caterpillar was named by IronPlanet's President, but no one else was. It approaches speculation to infer from the cryptic remarks of IronPlanet's President that there was more than one other threat conveyed to IronPlanet, and there is no basis to choose between Komatsu and Volvo as the threatmaker if there was only one other threat.

The purported interests of the Manufacturer Defendants, viewed together with the content and timing of the threats, do not suffice to plausibly suggest the existence of an agreement. That the complaint sets forth facts showing that an agreement was possible is not enough. See In re Text Messaging Antitrust Litig., 630 F.3d 622, 629 (7th Cir. 2010). To be actionable under § 1, the threats issued by the Manufacturer Defendants must have been predicated on an agreement, rather than independent self-interest. That necessary factual predicate is absent here. Therefore, Counts One and Two of the complaint are dismissed for failure to state a claim upon which relief could be granted.

B. Exclusive Dealing Under Clayton Act § 3 (Counts Three and Four)

An exclusive dealing claim may be pursued under § 1 or § 2 of the Sherman Act, or § 3 of the Clayton Act. See, e.g., United States v. Dentsply Int'l, Inc., 399 F.3d 181, 184 (3d Cir. 2005); Barr Labs., Inc. v. Abbott Labs., 978 F.2d 98, 110 (3d Cir. 1992) ("All exclusive dealing agreements must comply with section 1 of the Sherman Act ....," while "[c]ontracts for the sale of goods ...must also comply with the more rigorous standards of section 3 of the Clayton Act."). [*16] "An exclusive dealing arrangement is an agreement in which a buyer agrees to purchase certain goods or services only from a particular seller for a certain period of time." ZF Meritor, LLC v. Eaton Corp., 696 F.3d 254, 270 (3d Cir. 2012). The "agreement" may be express or de facto. Id. Exclusive dealing agreements are not by themselves unlawful; indeed, they may be entered into for "entirely procompetitive reasons ... and pose little threat to competition." Id. "Due to the potentially procompetitive benefits of exclusive dealing agreements, their legality is judged under the rule of reason," where the legality of such an agreement "depends on whether it will foreclose competition in such a substantial share of the relevant market so as to adversely affect competition." Id. at 271 (citing Tampa Elec. Co. v. Nashville Coal Co., 365 U.S. 320, 327, 81 S. Ct. 623, 5 L. Ed. 2d 580 (1961)). In short, the exclusion of competitors becomes actionable under the antitrust laws only when "it impairs the health of the competitive process itself." Roland Mach. Co. v. Dresser Indus., 749 F.2d 380, 394 (7th Cir. 1984); see also ZF Meritor, 696 F.3d at 271, 281.

In conducting the rule of reason analysis, "courts consider not only the percentage of the market foreclosed, but also take into account the restrictiveness and the economic usefulness of the challenged practice in relation to the business factors extant in the market." ZF Meritor, 696 F.3d at 271 (quotation marks omitted). To state a [*17] claim, a plaintiff must generally show "significant market power by the defendant, substantial foreclosure, contracts of sufficient duration to prevent meaningful competition by rivals, and an analysis of likely or actual anticompetitive effects considered in light of any procompetitive effects." Id. at 271-72 (internal citations omitted). Courts may also consider whether "the dominant firm engaged in coercive behavior, ... the ability of customers to terminate the agreements," and "[t]he use of exclusive dealing by competitors." Id. at 272 (internal citations omitted). For present purposes, it should be noted that if "competitors can reach the ultimate consumers of the product by employing existing or potential alternative channels of distribution, it is unclear whether such restrictions foreclose from competition any part of the relevant market." Omega Envtl., Inc. v. Gilbarco, Inc., 127 F.3d 1157, 1163 (9th Cir. 1997); see also United States v. Dentsply Int'l, Inc., 399 F.3d 181, 195 (3d Cir. 2005) (acknowledging the need to "assess[]" the "overall significance to the market" of "other avenues of distribution" in a Sherman Act § 2 exclusive dealing case).

Here, the factual allegations pertaining to exclusive dealing arrangements are sparse. (See D.I. 1 ¶¶ 40-42). ICP alleges that the Manufacturer Defendants impose "all or nothing" terms on dealers. (Id. 40 [*18]). Further, the complaint asserts that dealers are "slow to switch to new entrants ...because [the] exclusivity requirements effectively require new entrants to have a nearly full-line in order to compete successfully for distribution." (Id.). The complaint goes on to allege that "[b]arriers to entry at the ... dealer level of the market are also high, ... [since] [e]ntry ...would require ... access to a full line of heavy construction equipment[,] ... substantial investments in sales and service locations in any given territory, and ... substantial financing." (Id. ¶ 47). ICP concludes that, as a result of these exclusive dealing arrangements, "substantial portions of the dealer market" are foreclosed. (Id. ¶ 42). The "foreclosure percentages attributable to ... [the Manufacturer Defendants' arrangements] is at least equal to their market shares in relevant markets around the country," and "the exclusivity policies of the Manufacturer Defendants and the largest of the domestic incumbent manufacturers foreclose new entrants from 85 percent or more of dealers."[2] (Id.).

These factual allegations fail to make out a prima facie case of exclusive dealing for at least two independent reasons. First, ICP fails to adequately plead the lack of alternative channels of distribution. Second, aside from this shortcoming, ICP does not sufficiently allege substantial foreclosure of the relevant market.[3] These deficiencies are addressed separately below.

The complaint [*19] repeatedly acknowledges multiple alternative means of distribution. There are dealers "not tied up by ... exclusivity requirements." (D.I. 1 ¶ 42). There are several online marketplaces, aside from IronPlanet.[4] (Id. ¶ 65). ICP simply dismisses these alternatives as inferior. (D.I. 36 at p. 45). That may be, but the key consideration in an exclusive dealing claim is the harm to competition, not the "mere[] disadvantage" to a rival, arising from its inability to use its preferred distribution-methods. ZF Meritor, LLC v. Eaton Corp., 696 F.3d 254, 281 (3d Cir. 2012); see also Roland Mach. Co. v. Dresser Indus., 749 F.2d 380, 394 (7th Cir. 1984) ("The exclusion of one or even several competitors, for a short time or even a long time, is not ipso facto unreasonable."). ICP provides some factual allegations to support the conclusion that physical auctions are no substitute for online auctions. (D.I. 1 ¶¶ 62, 63). ICP also alleges that IronPlanet is the largest and most active online marketplace. (Id. ¶ 65). These factual allegations, however, do not plausibly suggest a lack of alternative distribution channels for ICP. ICP simply concludes—without any relevant factual support—that it is deprived of any "feasible way to reach consumers." (Id. ¶ 107; see also ¶¶ 2, 4, 109, 110; D.I. 36 at p. 45). That is not enough. See, [*20] e.g., *PNY Techs., Inc. v. SanDisk Corp., 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 58108, 2014 WL 1677521, at 7-8 (N.D. Cal. Apr. 25, 2014).

ICP's cited cases are distinguishable. The complaint does not lay out any facts that show a dominant firm barred competitors from entire modes of distribution, or from nearly all cost-effective means of distribution. See, e.g., United States v. Dentsply Int'l, Inc., 399 F.3d 181, 193 (3d Cir. 2005); United States v. Microsoft Corp., 253 F.3d 34, 64, 346 U.S. App. D.C. 330 (D.C. Cir. 2001). Instead, the complaint actually suggests that there are several viable alternative means of distribution. Recently, Chinese manufacturers SANY and LiuGong were able to enter the market by establishing their own dealerships. (Id. ¶¶ 45, 76); see Roland, 749 F.2d at 394 (holding that Komatsu's successful entry into the market, despite the "nationwide practice of exclusive dealing," tended to negate the plaintiff's claim of substantial foreclosure). SANY has been "able to reach approximately 5 percent of the U.S. market,"[5] and both SANY and LiuGong are now profitable. (Id. ¶¶ 45, 76). Further, the existence of IronPlanet itself demonstrates that "users [*21] of heavy construction equipment will purchase such equipment outside of longstanding channels of distribution." (D.I. 36 at p. 2). The complaint advances no facts and provides no theory as to how the large user base of an online auctioneer for used equipment renders it the sole avenue for direct sales of

[2] The term "domestic incumbent manufacturers" refers to "somebody who's currently a manufacturer," whether or not that manufacturer happens to be a defendant in this case. (D.I. 44 at 109).

[3] The parties agree that the exclusive dealing allegations may be characterized as three separate cases, one against each of the Manufacturer Defendants. (D.I. 44 at 44, 46). For purposes of showing substantial foreclosure, ICP argues that the effects of each exclusive dealing arrangement can be aggregated under principles established in Standard Oil Co. v. United States, 337 U.S. 293, 69 S. Ct. 1051, 93 L. Ed. 1371 (1949). (D.I. 36 at p. 40; D.I. 44 at 46).

[4] ICP contends that since the Manufacturer Defendants have prevented them from using IronPlanet, there are no alternative means of distribution left. For purposes of this motion, the Court assumes, without deciding, that ICP's inability to use IronPlanet precludes the consideration of IronPlanet as an alternative distribution method.

[5] It is not entirely clear what ICP means by this. From the context of the complaint, I take it to mean that SANY products are available for purchase in 5% of the nationwide market for new heavy construction equipment. While this may indicate that using IronPlanet would permit a seller to reach more of the market (as ICP states in the preceding sentence that "[t]hrough IronPlanet, ICP would reach approximately 80 percent of end users"), it does not indicate that SANY has been unable to establish its own alternative means of distribution. (See id. ¶ 76).

new equipment over the Internet. Accordingly, ICP has not adequately alleged facts showing the absence of alternative channels of distribution. See PNY Techs., 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 58108, 2014 WL 1677521, at *8.

Aside from ICP's failure to plead a lack of alternative distribution channels, it fails to demonstrate that the Manufacturer Defendants' exclusive dealing arrangements amount to substantial foreclosure in any alleged market at all. The complaint generally states that the Manufacturer Defendants have exclusive dealing arrangements with dealers, and therefore, new entrants are "unable to compete successfully for distribution." (D.I. 1 ¶¶ 40, 44). Further, ICP alleges that this "imposition of exclusivity ... is coercive and contrary to the preference of the dealers." (Id. ¶ 41). These are mere conclusions, ICP does, however, allege some facts for its assertion that existing dealers may have difficulty switching to new manufacturers and that [*22] entry is difficult for new dealers, but that is not enough. (Id. ¶¶ 40, 46, 47).

Since ICP alleges no facts about the nature of the exclusive dealing arrangements and their potentially anticompetitive effects, the Court cannot assess, as part of the prima facie case, whether the arrangements could suppress competition or not. In the rule of reason analysis of exclusive dealing arrangements, courts consider "significant market power by the defendant, substantial foreclosure, contracts of sufficient duration to prevent meaningful competition by rivals, and an analysis of likely or actual anticompetitive effects considered in light of any procompetitive [*23] effects," as well as the existence of coercion, "the ability of customers to terminate the agreements, ... [and] [t]he use of exclusive dealing by competitors." ZF Meritor, LLC v. Eaton Corp., 696 F.3d 254, 271 (3d Cir. 2012). Aside from allegations that all Manufacturer Defendants engage in exclusive dealing, and that there are risks and costs associated with dealerships switching suppliers, ICP has provided almost no factual basis upon which the court could consider the practical effects of the exclusive dealing arrangements. Compare, e.g., Tampa Elec. Co. v. Nashville Coal Co., 365 U.S. 320, 325-35, 81 S. Ct. 623, 5 L. Ed. 2d 580 (1961) (rule of reason analysis); ZF Meritor, 696 F.3d at 286-90 (same), with PNY Techs., 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 58108, 2014 WL 1677521, at *4-5 (finding that there were inadequate facts to determine whether there was unlawful foreclosure); Pro Search Plus, LLC v. VFM Leonard, Inc.; 2013 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 107895, 2013 WL 3936394, at *2-4 (C.D. Cal. July 30, 2013) (same). ICP need not prove its case in the complaint, but it must allege facts sufficient to "plausibly suggest an entitlement to relief." Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 681, 129 S. Ct. 1937, 173 L. Ed. 2d 868 (2009). It has not done so here. The Court cannot simply hypothesize that some set of facts could support a basis for relief to be granted. See Twombly, 550 U.S. at 562-63. Indeed, "the costs of modern federal antitrust litigation and the increasing caseload of the federal courts counsel against sending the parties into discovery when there is no reasonable likelihood that the plaintiffs can construct a claim from the events related in the complaint." Id. at 558 (quoting Car Carriers, Inc. v. Ford Motor Co., 745 F.2d 1101, 1106 (7th Cir. 1984)).

The complaint [*24] fails to make out a prima facie case of exclusive dealing sufficient to survive Defendants' motion to dismiss. The thrust of ICP's allegations is that the Manufacturer Defendants each have exclusive dealing arrangements with their respective dealers. This is not by itself actionable, as many industries function in such a fashion for entirely procompetitive reasons. See, e.g., Queen City Pizza, Inc. v. Domino's Pizza Inc., 124 F.3d 430, 440-41 (3d Cir. 1997); see also ZF Meritor, 696 F.3d at 270. There must be harm to the competitive process itself. ZF Meritor, 696 F.3d at 271, 281. Since ICP has failed to adequately plead substantial foreclosure and a lack of alternative channels of distribution, its exclusive dealing claim cannot be sustained. Therefore, Counts Three and Four of the complaint are dismissed.

C. Monopolization, Attempted Monopolization, and Conspiracy to Monopolize Under Sherman Act § 2 (Counts Five, Six, Seven, and Eight)

ICP alleges three types of § 2 monopoly claims in its complaint: monopolization, attempted monopolization, and conspiracy to monopolize. (D.I. 1 && 125, 127, 129, 131). The monopolization and attempted monopolization claims (Counts Five and Six) are directed solely at Caterpillar, while the conspiracy to monopolize claims (Counts Seven and Eight) are alleged against all of the Manufacturer Defendants [*25] and AAS. (Id.). The three types of monopoly claims are addressed separately below.

I. Monopolization

To state a claim for monopolization, the plaintiff must plead "(1) the possession of monopoly power in the relevant market and (2) the willful acquisition or maintenance of that power as distinguished from growth or development as a consequence of a superior product, business acumen, or historic accident." Broadcom Corp. v. Qualcomm Inc., 501 F.3d 297, 306-07 (3d Cir. 2007) (quoting United States v. Grinnell Corp., 384 U.S. 563, 570-71, 86 S. Ct. 1698, 16 L. Ed. 2d 778 (1966)).

"Monopoly power is the ability to control prices or exclude competition in a given market." Grinnell, 384 U.S. at 571. Monopoly power may be inferred from a firm's "possession of a dominant share of a relevant market that is protected by entry barriers." Harrison Aire, Inc. v. Aerostar Int'l, Inc., 423 F.3d 374, 381 (3d Cir. 2005) (quoting United States v. Microsoft Corp., 253 F.3d 34, 51, 346 U.S. App. D.C. 330 (D.C. Cir. 2001)). "Plaintiffs relying on market share as a proxy for monopoly power must plead and produce evidence of a relevant product market, of the alleged monopolist's dominant share of the market, and of high barriers to entry." Id. Barriers to entry include "regulatory requirements, high capital costs, or technological obstacles, that prevent new competition from entering a market in response to a monopolist's supra competitive prices." Broadcom, 501 F.3d at 307. The Third Circuit has held that "[a]s a matter of law, absent other relevant factors, a 55 percent market share [*26] will not prove the existence of monopoly power," and further, that a "significantly larger market share than 55 percent has been required to demonstrate prima facie monopoly power." Fineman v. Armstrong World Indus., 980 F.2d 171, 201-02 (3d Cir. 1992). In fact, "courts virtually never find monopoly power when market share is less than about 50 percent." ABA Section of Antitrust Law, Antitrust Law Developments 231-32 (6th ed. 2007).

Plaintiffs must plead a relevant market in which monopoly power exists. Queen City Pizza, Inc. v. Domino's Pizza, Inc., 124 F.3d 430, 436 (3d Cir. 2007). The boundaries of the relevant market "are determined by the reasonable interchangeability of use or the cross-elasticity of demand between the product itself and substitutes for it." Brown Shoe Co. v United States, 370 U.S. 294, 325, 82 S. Ct. 1502, 8 L. Ed. 2d 510 (1962). Products are considered reasonably interchangeable if"one product is roughly equivalent to another for the use to which it is put." Queen City Pizza, 124 F.3d at 437. When a plaintiff fails to properly define "its proposed relevant market with reference to the rule of reasonable interchangeability and cross-elasticity of demand, ...the relevant market is legally insufficient and a motion to dismiss may be granted." Id. at 436.

In addition to market power, the monopolization plaintiff must show "an element of anticompetitive conduct." Verizon Commc'ns Inc. v. Law Offices of Curtis V Trinka, LLP, 540 U.S. 398, 407, 124 S. Ct. 872, 157 L. Ed. 2d 823 (2004). This conduct "comprehends at the most behavior that not only (1) tends to impair [*27] the opportunities of rivals, but also (2) either does not further competition on the merits or does so in an unnecessarily restrictive way." Aspen Siding Co. v. Aspen Highlands Skiing Corp., 472 U.S. 585, 605 n.32, 105 S. Ct. 2847, 86 L. Ed. 2d 467 (1985) (quoting 3 Phillip Areeda & Donald F. Turner, Antitrust Law 78 (1978)). The Third Circuit has held that "there must be proof that competition, and not merely competitors, has been harmed." United States v. Dentsply Int'l, Inc., 399 F.3d 181, 187 (3d Cir. 2005).

ICP's allegations of monopoly power, to the extent they exist at all, consist almost entirely of threadbare conclusions. The complaint concludes that "Caterpillar has substantial market power in the relevant heavy construction equipment market as a whole [and] monopoly power within certain of the relevant heavy construction equipment markets within certain local geographic markets." (D.I. 1 ¶ 51). The factual support for this conclusion is as follows. The complaint alleges that Caterpillar "accounts for approximately 40 percent or more of all sales of new heavy construction equipment in the United States." (Id. ¶ 21). ICP further alleges that the exclusive dealing arrangements between manufacturers and local dealers, together with the substantial initial investments associated with entering the dealer market, constitute barriers to entry. (Id. ¶¶ 39-50). The [*28] complaint also alleges that the merger between AAS and IronPlanet is "anticompetitive." (Id. ¶¶ 111).

The complaint both fails to allege a relevant market and to plausibly suggest monopoly power. As to the former, ICP attempts to rely on several "submarkets" to meet its burden of pleading a relevant market for purposes of showing monopoly power: "[t]he relevant markets in which to evaluate Defendants' conduct are the sale of specific types of new heavy construction equipment (e.g., backhoes) in local geographic markets around the country (e.g., California), and in any event are no broader than the sale of all types of new heavy construction equipment in the United States." (D.I. 36 at p. 22; D.I. 1 ¶¶ 33-38). The complaint, however, alleges that ICP and the Manufacturer Defendants (including Caterpillar) compete nationally. (D.I. 1 ¶¶ 8-10, 19-21, 37, 56-57, 69, 76, 85). ICP must support its allegations of smaller, state-specific relevant markets with factual allegations. ICP cannot simply gerrymander markets, without supporting facts, where it deems it advantageous. See, e.g., Tampa Elec. Co. v. Nashville Coal Co., 365 U.S. 320, 330-32, 81 S. Ct. 623, 5 L. Ed. 2d 580 (1961); E.I DuPont de Nemours & Co. v. Kolon Indus., 688 F. Supp. 2d 443, 456-57 (E.D. Va. 2009); Sun Microsystems, Inc. v. Versata Enters., Inc., 630 F. Supp. 2d 395, 403-04 (D. Del 2009).

ICP's attempt to slice up heavy construction equipment into individual equipment-specific markets fails for [*29] similar reasons. ICP provides no facts for its equipment-specific markets, instead simply concluding that "[t]he closest substitutes for each type of new heavy construction equipment is used heavy construction equipment of that type." (D.I. 1 ¶ 35). This conclusion (which seems plausible to me) does nothing to explain how the various types of construction equipment differ from one another, however. While "the 'market' for antitrust purposes is the one relevant to the particular legal issue at hand," 2B Phillip E. Areeda & Herbert Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law 266 (4th ed. 2014), it is possible that Caterpillar possesses monopoly power in more than one market. If segments of a market are prone to prices being raised above competitive levels, "those segments would be proper topics of antitrust concern not because they are submarkets, but because they would be relevant product markets in their own right." Id. at 271 (quoting In re Owens-Illinois, Inc., 115 F.T.C. 179, 298 (1992)); see also Geneva Pharms. Tech. Corp. v. Barr Labs., Inc., 386 F.3d 485, 496 (2d Cir. 2004). The complaint advances no facts that define these markets "with reference to the rule of reasonable interchangeability and cross elasticity of demand." Queen City Pizza, Inc. v. Domino's Pizza, Inc., 124 F.3d 430, 436 (3d Cir. 2007). Therefore, these submarkets cannot constitute the relevant markets for ICP's monopolization claim.

Even assuming a market [*30] was properly alleged, ICP fails to adequately plead monopoly power on the part of Caterpillar. The complaint alleges that Caterpillar has "substantial market power," engages in "oligopoly pricing," and possesses a market share of "approximately 40 percent or more." (D.I. 1 && 21, 49, 51). ICP's claim fails on its face. An allegation of 40 percent market share does not suffice to show monopoly power. See, e.g., Fineman v. Armstrong World Indus., 980 F.2d 171, 201-02 (3d Cir. 1992). Aside from the allegation of market share, ICP has alleged no facts plausibly suggesting that Caterpillar has monopoly power. See Rebel Oil Co. v. At!. Richfield Co., 51 F.3d 1421, 1442-43 (9th Cir. 1995) (holding that oligopoly pricing does not show market power sufficient to cause antitrust concern and that "one firm alone must have the power to control market output and exclude competition").

ICP's complaint fails to allege the requisite facts to plausibly suggest monopoly power in a relevant market. Therefore, Counts Five and Six fail to state a claim for monopolization.

2. Attempted Monopolization

To state a claim for attempted monopolization, the plaintiff must plead "(1) that the defendant has a specific intent to monopolize, and (2) that the defendant has engaged in anticompetitive conduct that, taken as a whole, creates (3) a dangerous probability [*31] of achieving monopoly power." W. Penn. Allegheny Health Sys., Inc. v. UPMC, 627 F.3d 85, 108 (3d Cir. 2010). In assessing whether a defendant has a dangerous probability of achieving monopoly power, the court should examine factors other than the size of the defendant's market share, including "the strength of competition, probable development of the industry, the barriers to entry, the nature of the anti-competitive conduct, and the elasticity of consumer demand." Barr Labs., Inc. v. Abbott Labs., 978 F.2d 98, 112 (3d Cir. 1992).

Like ICP's claim for monopolization, the complaint is almost entirely bereft of any factual allegations supporting its claim for attempted monopolization. The allegations upon which ICP relies are identical to those it relies on for its monopolization claim. With the same facts and a similar claim, the result is the same.

One of the major distinctions between attempted monopolization and monopolization is that the latter requires a showing that, despite not being a monopoly, a firm possesses a "dangerous probability of achieving monopoly power" and has a "specific intent to monopolize." W Penn Allegheny Health Sys., Inc. v. UPMC, 627 F.3d 85, 103 (3d Cir. 2010). The complaint is devoid of any factual allegations that satisfy either of these elements.

Therefore, Counts Five and Six also fail to state a claim for § 2 attempt to monopolize. Since both the monopolization and attempt [*32] to monopolize theories cannot be maintained, Counts Five and Six of the complaint are dismissed.

3. Conspiracy to Monopolize

To state a claim for conspiracy to monopolize, the plaintiff must plead: "(1) an agreement to monopolize; (2) an overt act in furtherance of the conspiracy; (3) a specific intent to monopolize; and (4) a causal connection between the conspiracy and the injury alleged." Howard Hess Dental Labs. Inc. v. Dentsply Int'l, Inc., 602 F.3d 237, 253 (3d Cir. 2010). For present purposes, it should be noted that § 2 "applies to the conduct of single firms only, rather than to the conduct of a small number of firms engaged in tacit collusion, as in cases involving oligopoly, shared monopoly, or ... duopoly." ID Sec. Sys. Canada, Inc. v. Checkpoint Sys, Inc., 249 F. Supp. 2d 622, 649 (E.D. Pa. 2003); see also Arista Records LLC v. Lime Grp. LLC, 532 F. Supp. 2d 556, 580 (S.D.N.Y. 2007) (District courts "have uniformly held or approved the view that allegations of a 'shared monopoly' do not state a claim under section 2 of the Sherman Act." (collecting cases)); ABA Section of Antitrust Law, Antitrust Law Developments 322-23 (6th ed. 2007) ("Even where competitors allegedly have conspired to monopolize the market, the traditional view has been that the offense of monopolization requires that a single firm possess monopoly power.").

ICP fails to allege any facts which could give rise to a plausible inference of conspiracy [*33] to monopolize. In its opposition to this motion, ICP references the portions of the complaint pertaining to the group boycott. (D.L 36 at p. 53; D.L 1 ¶¶ 93-107). As indicated above, the only type of actionable conspiracy to monopolize necessarily involves a single firm monopoly, i.e., a conspiracy to make Caterpillar a monopoly. See Arista Records, 532 F. Supp. 2d at 580. Quite simply, there are no factual allegations concerning an agreement to create a single dominant firm. Even assuming the group boycott allegations were sufficient to plausibly suggest a conspiracy of any sort, they do not, under these circumstances, satisfy the requirements of a § 2 conspiracy to monopolize.

The allegations of conspiracy must be supported by factual allegations. Howard Hess, 602 F.3d at 255. ICP advances no facts beyond its assertion that the Manufacturer Defendants sought to exclude ICP from the market through the use of a group boycott. This does not suffice. Therefore, Counts Seven and Eight of the complaint are dismissed for failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted.

D. Unlawful Merger Under Sherman Act § 1 and Clayton Act § 7 (Counts Nine and Ten)

Section 7 of the Clayton Act prohibits mergers the effect of which "may be substantially to lessen competition, or [*34] to tend to create a monopoly." 15 U.S.C. § 18. The plaintiff must properly allege a market wherein the injury to competition occurs. Queen City Pizza, Inc. v. Domino's Pizza, Inc., 124 F.3d 430, 436 (3d Cir. 1997); see also United States v. E. I duPont de Nemours & Co., 353 U.S. 586, 593, 77 S. Ct. 872, 1 L. Ed. 2d 1057 (1957) (The "[d]etermination of the relevant market is a necessary predicate to a finding of a violation of the Clayton Act because the threatened monopoly must be one which will substantially lessen competition within the area of effective competition."). To state a claim, the harm to competition cannot be speculative. Instead, there must be "a threat of antitrust injury which produces directly harmful effects that are closely related to the violation." Broadcom Corp. v. Qualcomm Inc., 501 F.3d 297, 321 (3d Cir. 2007) (quotation marks omitted). "[I]njury ...will not qualify as 'antitrust injury' unless it is attributable to an anticompetitive aspect of the practice under scrutiny." Atl. Richfield Co. v. USA Petroleum Co., 495 U.S. 328, 334, 110 S. Ct. 1884, 109 L. Ed. 2d 333 (1990). Thus, the "[f]ailure to allege actionable anticompetitive conduct forecloses further judicial inquiry." Broadcom, 501 F.3d at 321.

It is difficult to comprehend the nature of ICP's claim for unlawful merger. The entirety of ICP's claim appears to be that the merger of AAS with IronPlanet effectively amounted to AAS joining an ongoing conspiracy between the Manufacturer Defendants "to eliminate the threat of ICP's entry through IronPlanet." (D.I. 1 ¶ 106). ICP explains that by taking control of IronPlanet [*35] through AAS, Caterpillar and the other Manufacturer Defendants could ensure that the possibility of a future competitive threat, like ICP, would be eliminated. (Id. ¶¶ 105-107). Put another way, ICP attempts to allege a vertical merger between Caterpillar and AAS. (D.I. 36 at pp. 55-56). This conclusion is premised on ICP's contentions that Caterpillar and the other Manufacturer Defendants are somehow acting through AAS, and that IronPlanet and ICP operate in the same market. (D.I. 1 ¶ 63, 64, 107).

ICP's vertical merger theory does not state a claim. The complaint does not allege a merger of Caterpillar (a manufacturer) and IronPlanet (an auctioneering service). The complaint instead refers to a horizontal merger between two auctioneering services, AAS and IronPlanet. (Id. ¶¶ 1, 5, 105, 106, 111, 133, 135). The vertical merger theory proposed by ICP hinges on the assumption that Caterpillar and AAS are interchangeable. The complaint, however, concedes that "Caterpillar is a shareholder in Cat Auction Services, along with more than twenty Caterpillar equipment dealers," and further, that "Caterpillar holds minority stakes" in both IronPlanet and AAS. (Id. ¶¶ 11, 105). ICP supplies no [*36] explanation as to how Caterpillar, let alone the other Manufacturer Defendants, could be deemed to have vertically merged with IronPlanet. Since ICP's unlawful merger claim depends on a vertical merger theory that cannot be sustained, it fails.

Even if the Court were to accept ICP's theory that AAS is some sort of alter ego of Caterpillar, the complaint fails to explain how any of the allegations give rise to any anticompetitive concern. The alleged market for ICP is the market for new heavy construction equipment. (D.I. 1 ¶¶ 105, 106, 133-36). The complaint does not explain how the merger of AAS and IronPlanet-both entities which operate in the market for used heavy construction equipment—substantially lessens competition in the market for new heavy construction equipment.

ICP's cited cases are inapposite. (D.I. 44 at 93-94, 105-06); see, e.g., AlliedSignal, Inc. v. B.F. Goodrich Co., 183 F.3d 568, 574-75 (7th Cir. 1999); HTI Health Servs., Inc. v. Quorum Health Grp., Inc., 960 F. Supp. 1104, 1114 (S.D. Miss. 1997). In AlliedSignal, B.F. Goodrich (a manufacturer of several components of aircraft landing systems: landing gear, wheels, and brakes) sought to merge with Coltec (a manufacturer oflanding gear). AlliedSignal, 183 F.3d at 570. AlliedSignal (a manufacturer of wheels and brakes) alleged that the merger would substantially lessen competition in the landing gear market, which [*37] would harm AlliedSignal in its capacity as a purchaser of landing gear. Id. at 571, 574. In HTI Health, the plaintiff sought to halt the merger between two large physician clinics and a large hospital. HTI Health, 960 F. Supp. at 1107. The plaintiff hospital alleged that the inpatient hospital services market, a market in which the plaintiff and the defendant hospital participated, would be harmed because clinic physicians, as future shareholders in the merged entity, would "have a financial incentive ...to send their patients to" the hospital belonging to the merged entity. Id. at 1114. The court found this to be sufficient antitrust injury. Id. These cases, along with others cited by the parties, stand for the proposition that the merger must have the effect of harming competition in the alleged market in which the plaintiff participates. United States v. E. I. duPont de Nemours & Co., 353 U.S. 586, 593, 77 S. Ct. 872, 1 L. Ed. 2d 1057 (1957). ICP has made no allegations as to how the merger of two auctioneers for used heavy construction equipment lessens competition in the market for new heavy construction equipment.

For the aforementioned reasons, I find that ICP has failed to state a claim for unlawful merger. Therefore, Counts Nine and Ten are dismissed.

E. Related State Law Claims

The basis for the court's subject matter jurisdiction over [*38] ICP's state law claims is the supplemental jurisdiction conferred by 28 U.S.C. § 1367. (D.I. 1 ¶ 15). A court "may decline to exercise supplemental jurisdiction" when the court "has dismissed all claims over which it has original jurisdiction." 28 U.S.C. § 1367(c)(3). A court should not exercise its supplemental jurisdiction in such circumstances unless "judicial economy, convenience, and fairness" require it. Bright v. Westmoreland Cty., 443 F.3d 276, 286 (3d Cir. 2006).

This case is still in its early stages, having not proceeded beyond the motion to dismiss stage. Accordingly, the Court sees no need to exercise its supplemental jurisdiction over ICP's state law claims. See United Mine Workers v. Gibbs, 383 U.S. 715, 726, 86 S. Ct. 1130, 16 L. Ed. 2d 218 (1966). Therefore, since the Court has no jurisdiction over the state law claims, Counts Eleven through Eighteen are dismissed.

F. Prejudice

A dismissal under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6) is a "judgment on merits" and is therefore ordinarily presumed to be with prejudice. See Federated Dep 't Stores, Inc. v. Moitie, 452 U.S. 394, 399 n.3, 101 S. Ct. 2424, 69 L. Ed. 2d 103 (1981). At oral argument, counsel for ICP requested that if the complaint were dismissed on the grounds that it "lack[ed] specificity," then ICP should be given "the ability to amend." (D.I. 44 at 107). The phrasing of this request informs the Court's decision with respect to whether the claims should be dismissed with or without prejudice. The monopoly and unlawful merger claims are defective [*39] on their face. Since no facts alleged in good faith could survive a motion to dismiss, the counts relating to these claims (Five, Six, Seven, Eight, Nine, and Ten) are dismissed with prejudice. As for the group boycott and exclusive dealing claims, I am not convinced that any amendment brought by Plaintiff would necessarily be futile. The factual pleading may fall short of stating a claim, but it does not appear from the face of the claims that the legal theory is clearly without merit. Therefore, the counts pertaining to these claims (One, Two, Three, and Four) are dismissed without prejudice.

The Court is confident that if Plaintiff seeks to amend its complaint, it "will do so only in good faith and allege facts that [it] believe[s] [it] can prove." United States ex rel. Wilkins v. United Health Grp., Inc., 659 F.3d 295, 315 (3d Cir. 2011). The Court is not sure, however, what facts Plaintiff may be able to allege, or indeed, whether Plaintiff will stand on its complaint as written. Therefore, Plaintiff is given leave to amend its group boycott and exclusive dealing claims. If Plaintiff does not so amend, the dismissal without prejudice of these four counts will be converted into a dismissal with prejudice.

The state law claims are dismissed for lack of subject matter jurisdiction. [*40] Accordingly, their dismissal is without prejudice. See Thompson v. Cty. of Franklin, 15 F.3d 245, 253 (2d Cir. 1994).

IV. CONCLUSION

For the reasons set forth above, the defendants' motions to dismiss (D.I. 27, 28, 30, 33) are GRANTED. An appropriate order will be entered.

ORDER

For the reasons discussed in the accompanying Memorandum Opinion, IT IS HEREBY ORDERED:

Defendants' Motions to Dismiss the Complaint (D.I. 27, 28, 30, 33) are GRANTED.

Counts One through Four are hereby DISMISSED WITHOUT PREJUDICE. If Plaintiff does not file a new complaint within TWO WEEKS, this dismissal will be converted into a DISMISSAL WITH PREJUDICE.

Counts Five through Ten are hereby DISMISSED WITH PREJUDICE.

Counts Eleven through Eighteen are hereby DISMISSED WITHOUT PREJUDICE.

CIVIL MINUTES — GENERAL

Proceedings: (IN CHAMBERS) Order DENYING Plaintiff's Motion to Exclude Evidence and Impose Evidentiary Inference; and GRANTING IN PART and DENYING IN PART Defendant's Motion for Partial Summary Judgment

Before the Court are two motions:

First, Plaintiffs Trendsettah USA, Inc. and Trend Settah Inc. (collectively, "Trendsettah") have filed a motion to exclude evidence and permit adverse evidentiary inferences against Defendant Swisher International, Inc. ("Swisher"). Docket No. 63. Swisher has filed an opposition. Docket No. 89. Trendsettah has filed a reply. Docket No. 90.

Second, Swisher has filed a motion for partial summary judgment on Trendsettah's claims for violation of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 2, violation of Florida Antitrust Law, Fl. Stat. § 542.19, trade libel, tortious interference with contract, and intentional interference with prospective economic relations. Docket No. 67. Trendsettah has filed an opposition. Docket No. 80. Swisher has filed a reply. Docket No. 93.

For the following reasons, the Court denies Trendsettah's motion to exclude evidence and grants in part and denies [*2] in part Swisher's motion for partial summary judgment.

1. Background

Swisher is a cigar manufacturer with its principal place of business in Florida. Docket No. 67-10 at 90. In January 2011, Trendsettah, another cigar manufacturer, entered into a supply agreement (the "First Private Label Agreement") with Swisher to manufacture cigarillos for Trendsettah under its "Splitarillos" brand name. Docket No. 67-5 at 2-14. In turn, Trendsettah would sell its Splitarillo-branded products to tobacco wholesalers and distributors.

In early December 2011, Swisher notified Trendsettah that it was terminating the First Private Label Agreement because Trendsettah failed to meet certain minimum order requirements as specified in the agreement. Id. at 35. After discussions between the parties, the First Private Label Agreement was then amended to terminate on October 31, 2012. Id. at 16-17. In February 2013, after the First Private Label Agreement expired, Swisher and Trendsettah entered into a second supply agreement (the "Second Private Label Agreement") that was scheduled to terminate on February 1, 2014. Id. at 20-32. The parties did not renew the Second Private Label Agreement when it ultimately expired in February 2014.

In October [*3] 2014, several months after the Second Private Label Agreement expired, Trendsettah filed a complaint with this Court against Swisher, alleging (1) violation of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 2; (2) violation of Florida Antitrust Law, Fl. Stat. § 542.19; (3) breach of contract; (4) breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing; (5) trade libel; (6) tortious interference with contract; (7) intentional interference with prospective economic relations; (8) negligent interference with prospective economic relations; and (9) violation of California's Unfair Competition Law, Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17200 et seq. Docket No. 1. In May 2015, the Court granted judgment on the pleadings on Trendsettah's claims for negligent interference with prospective economic relations and violation of California's Unfair Competition Law. Docket No. 40.

After discovery, Swisher now brings a motion for partial summary judgment under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 56 on Trendsettah's claims for violation of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 2, violation of Florida Antitrust Law, Fl. Stat. § 542.19, trade libel, tortious interference with contract, and intentional interference with prospective economic relations. Docket No. 67.

Trendsettah's antitrust claims under the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 2, and Florida Antitrust Law, Fl. Stat. § 542.19, allege that, throughout [*4] both the First Private Label Agreement and the Second Private Label Agreement, Swisher, in an effort to maintain its monopoly over the cigarillo industry, engaged in anticompetitive conduct that inhibited the economic growth of Trendsettah. E.g., Docket No. 1 ¶ 44. Swisher's anticompetitive conduct included failing to timely fulfill Trendsettah's product orders, refusing to deal with Trendsettah by failing to renew the Second Private Label Agreement, disparaging Trendsettah's products to Swisher's actual and potential customers, and physically removing Trendsettah products, advertising, and marketing materials from the wholesalers and distributors' shelves. Id. at 5-8. Trendsettah's claims for trade libel, tortious interference with contract, and intentional interference with prospective economic relations alleged that Swisher committed business torts by disparaging Trendsettah's products to wholesalers and distributors and interfering with Trendsettah's actual and prospective business relationships with wholesalers and distributors by failing to timely fulfill Trendsettah's orders. Id. at 13-14. As a result of Swisher's anticompetitive conduct and business torts, Trendsettah suffered both lost profits [*5] (from reduced or lost orders) and diminution of value (from being unable to increase its market growth).

2. Legal Standard on Rule 56 Motion for Summary Judgment

Summary judgment is appropriate if there is no genuine issue of material fact and the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(a). Material facts are those necessary to the proof or defense of a claim, and are determined by the underlying substantive law. Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc., 477 U.S. 242, 248, 106 S. Ct. 2505, 91 L. Ed. 2d 202 (1986).

To determine whether summary judgment is appropriate, federal district courts must engage in a two-step process. First, the party moving for summary judgment bears the initial burden to show the absence of a genuine issue of material fact. Celotex Corp. v. Catrett, 477 U.S. 317, 323, 106 S. Ct. 2548, 91 L. Ed. 2d 265 (1986). This burden may be satisfied by either (1) presenting evidence that negates an element of the non-moving party's case or (2) showing that the non-moving party has failed to establish an element of the non-moving party's case. Id. at 322-23. If the party moving for summary judgment does not bear the burden of proof at trial, it may show the absence of a genuine issue of material fact by showing that "there is an absence of evidence to support the non-moving party's case." Id. at 325. Second, if the moving party has met its initial burden, the burden then [*6] shifts to the party opposing summary judgment to designate "specific facts showing there is a genuine issue for trial." Id. In determining whether there is a genuine issue as to material fact, the court draws all reasonable factual inferences in favor of the non-movant. Scott v. Harris, 550 U.S. 372, 378, 127 S. Ct. 1769, 167 L. Ed. 2d 686 (2007).

3. Discussion

3.1. Evidentiary Record

When resolving a motion for summary judgment, the court may only consider admissible evidence. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(e). At the summary judgment stage, a court must focus on the admissibility of the evidence's content, not its form. Fraser v. Goodale, 342 F.3d 1032, 1036 (9th Cir. 2003). Accordingly, the court may consider evidence on summary judgment that is inadmissible in form so long as its contents can be presented in admissible form at trial. Id. at 1037. If the opposing party objects to the proposed evidence as inadmissible, the party seeking admission must direct the court to "authenticating documents, deposition testimony bearing on attribution, hearsay exceptions and exemptions, or other evidentiary principles under which the evidence in question could be deemed admissible . . . ." In re Oracle Corp. Sec. Litig., 627 F.3d 376, 385-86 (9th Cir. 2010).

Trendsettah objects to various evidence submitted in support of Swisher's motion for partial summary judgment. Docket No. 79 at 2. Trendsettah also requests the Court to exclude [*7] evidence regarding Swisher's profits from manufacturing Trendsettah's cigarillos and to permit adverse inferences that Swisher's profit margins on its cigarillo products were consistent with those of a monopoly. Docket No. 63 at 2. As the Court discusses below, all of these objections fail, and the Court declines to exclude evidence or permit adverse inferences regarding Swisher's profit margins.

3.1.1. Documents produced by Swisher during discovery.

Trendsettah objects to the admissibility of certain documents produced by Swisher on the grounds that Swisher's counsel lacked personal knowledge to authenticate the documents when submitting them in support of Swisher's motion for partial summary judgment. These documents include: (1) October 6, 2012 email from T. Hilmoe to C. Casey, Docket No. 67-5 at 37-38; (2) September 27, 2013 letter from C. Casey to T. Hilmore, Docket No. 67-6 at 40-41; (3) August 23, 2012 email from J. Green to B. Schoep, Docket No. 67-5 at 43-44; (4) January 15, 2013 email from J. Green, Docket No. 67-6 at 6; (5) January 30, 2014 email from J. Green, Docket No. 67-6 at 8-11; (6) November 19, 2010 letter from A. Alrahib to B. Schoep, Docket No. 67-6 at 16-17; (7) [*8] June 23, 2011 email from A. Alrahib to B. Schoep, Docket No. 67-6 at 19-24; (8) September 4, 2012 email from A. Alrahib to P. Arvia, Docket No. 67-6 at 26-27; (9) document entitled "Git N Go Planogram," Docket No. 67-7 at 6-8; (10) document entitled "K & G Stores -2 FT. SET," Docket No. 67-7 at 10-11; (11) document entitled "Schnucks 49" Kiosk POG," Docket No. 67-7 at 13-15; (12) document entitled "J&H Oil 24" Tadisfloor Display," Docket No. 67-7 at 17-19; (13) document entitled "BETA 4ft 6 shelves OTP Q2 2014," Docket No. 67-7 at 21-24; (14) document entitled "West Coast POG Main Line Items," Docket No. 67-7 at 26-28; (15) document entitled "G&M 2014 Extra Mile Planogram," Docket No. 67-7 at 30-33; (16) document entitled "Circle K West -8 x 94 -New 8' Set," Docket No. 67-7 at 40-45;

(17) document entitled "Circle K West -9 x 94 -New 9' Set," Docket No. 67-8 at 2-7; (18) document entitled "Circle K West -10 x 94 -New 10' Set," Docket No. 67-8 at 9-14; (19) document entitled, "Circle K West -11 x 94 -New 11' Set," Docket No. 67-8 at 16-22; and (20) document entitled, "Circle K West -12 x 94 -New 12' Set," Docket No. 67-8 at 24-30. At trial, Swisher employees could either authenticate [*9] each document based on their personal knowledge, see Fed. R. Evid. 901(b), or testify to the contents of each document from their personal knowledge, see Fed. R. Evid. 602. Accordingly, the documents are admissible at summary judgment. Fraser, 342 F.3d at 1037.

3.1.2. Documents produced by Trendsettah during discovery.

Trendsettah objects to the admissibility of certain documents that it produced during discovery on the grounds that Swisher's counsel lacked personal knowledge to authenticate the documents when submitting them in support of Swisher's motion for partial summary judgment. These documents include: (1) December 5, 2011 email from C. Casey to T. Hilmoe, Docket No. 67-4 at 34-35; (2) Amendment to First PLA, Docket No. 92-1 at 48-53; (3) July 26, 2012 email from R. Rahib to A. Alrahib, Docket No. 67-5 at 46; (4) August 15, 2012 email from B. Schoep to R. Rahib, Docket No. 67-5 at 48-50; (5) August 15, 2012 email from B. Schoep to R. Rahib, Docket No. 67-5 at 52-54; (6) June 18, 2013 email from R. Rahib to J. Miller, Docket No. 67-6 at 2-4; (7) January 30, 2014 email from A. Alrahib to J. Miller, Docket No. 67-6 at 13-14; (8) November 30, 2012 email from A. Alrahib to J. Green, Docket No. 67-6 at 29, (9) October 4, 2012 email from A. Alrahib [*10] to P. Arvia, Docket No. 67-6 at 33; (10) document entitled "OTP Competition vs. TSI," Docket Nos. 67-7 at 2, 92-1 at 102; (11) January 15, 2013 email from A. Alrahib to J. Miller, Docket No. 67-8 at 35; (12) August 24, 2012 email from A. Alrahib to J. Green, Docket No. 67-8 at 37; (13) March 9, 2015 email from A. Alrahib to B. Schoep, Docket No. 67-8 at 40-41; and (14) February 11, 2013 email from T. Hilmoe to C. Casey, Docket No. 67-8 at 43-44. Because these documents were produced by Trendsettah in response to Swisher's discovery requests, the documents are admissible at summary judgment. Anand v. BP West Coast Products LLC, 484 F. Supp. 2d 1086, 1092 n.11 (C.D. Cal. 2007) ("Documents produced in response to discovery requests are admissible on a motion for summary judgment since they are self-authenticating and constitute the admissions of a party opponent.").

3.1.3. Unsworn expert reports.

Trendsettah objects to excerpts from the expert report of Swisher's expert witness Alan Cox, Docket No. 67-10 at 69-84, the expert report of Trendsettah's expert witness DeForest McDuff, Docket No. 67-10 at 56-61, and the supplemental expert report of McDuff, Docket No. 67-10 at 63-66, because the expert reports were not sworn under penalty of perjury when first filed with Swisher's [*11] motion for partial summary judgment. Docket No. 79 at 7, 12, 21. All three reports have since been adopted by sworn affidavit. See Docket No. 92-1 at 95 (swearing Cox's report by affidavit); Docket No. 84 at 3 (swearing McDuff's expert report and supplemental expert report by affidavit). Accordingly, the reports are admissible at summary judgment. Volterra Semiconductor Corp. v. Primarion, Inc., 796 F. Supp. 2d 1025, 1039 (N.D. Cal. 2011) ("Volterra has now remedied any deficiency by providing a sworn declaration by Dr. Szepesi with all of the challenged reports attached."); Maytag Corp. v. Electrolux Home Products, Inc., 448 F. Supp. 2d 1034, 1064 (N.D. Iowa 2006) (holding that "subsequent verification or reaffirmation of an unsworn expert's report, either by affidavit or deposition, allows the court to consider the unsworn expert's report on a motion for summary judgment").

3.1.4. Motion to Exclude Evidence and Permit Adverse Inference.

In its motion to exclude, Trendsettah requests the Court to permit an adverse inference that Swisher's profit margins on its cigarillo products were consistent with those of a monopoly on the grounds that Swisher employees improperly failed to answer questions concerning Swisher's profits in depositions on Swisher's financial information. Docket No. 63 at 9. Federal district courts have the inherent power "to manage their own affairs [*12] so as to achieve the orderly and expeditious disposition of cases." Chambers v. NASCO, Inc., 501 U.S. 32, 43, 111 S. Ct. 2123, 115 L. Ed. 2d 27 (1991). As part of its inherent powers, the courts have "broad discretion to make discovery and evidentiary rulings conducive to the conduct of a fair and orderly trial." Campbell Indus. v. M/V Gemini, 619 F.2d 24, 27 (9th Cir. 1980) (citations omitted). This includes sanctioning parties for breaching their discovery obligations, for example, by granting an adverse inference instruction after the defendant fails to produce evidence. Residential Funding Corp. v. DeGeorge Fin'l Corp., 306 F.3d 99, 107 (2d. Cir. 2002) (citing Reilly v. Natwest Markets Group Inc., 181 F.3d 253, 267 (2d. Cir. 1999)). Here, the Court declines to exercise its discretion to permit adverse inferences on Swisher's profit margins.

The appropriate way to remedy the opposing party's failure to answer deposition questions is to file a motion to compel under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 37(a). See Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(a)(3)(B) (permitting motion to compel discovery response when deponent fails to answer a question asked in oral deposition). Trendsettah did not file a Rule 37(a) motion to compel discovery on Swisher's profit margins by the November 26, 2015 deadline for discovery motions. Trendsettah attempts to justify its failure to file a timely motion to compel by explaining that it forgot to file on time, and that it did not want to file a late motion pursuant to an informal scheduling agreement between Swisher and Trendsettah and risk [*13] violating the Court's standing order governing stipulations to modify scheduling deadlines. Docket No. 90 at 23-24; see Docket No. 10 at 12-14 ("No stipulations extending scheduling requirements or modifying applicable rules are effective until and unless the Court approves them.") (emphasis added). But Trendsettah did not need to file a joint stipulation extending the discovery motion deadline in order to file its motion to compel: instead, Trendsettah could have independently sought leave of court by filing an appropriate motion or ex parte application. Trendsettah did neither. Because Trendsettah failed to diligently pursue filing a motion to compel, Trendsettah should not now be allowed to seek adverse inference sanctions against Swisher as a substitute. Accordingly, the Court declines to exercise its discretionary inherent powers to permit adverse inferences on Swisher's profit margins.

In its motion to exclude, Trendsettah also requests that the Court preclude Swisher from offering evidence about (1) Swisher's production capacity constraints, (2) Trendsettah's failure to make monthly minimum orders or provide proper forecasting, or (3) Swisher's internal investigation of Trendsettah's [*14] trade libel allegations. Docket No. 63 at 8-9. None of these facts is relevant in determining whether there is a genuine issue of material fact as to Trendsettah's antitrust or tort claims. Accordingly, the Court denies these requests on summary judgment without prejudice to a properly filed pre-trial motion in limine. See Docket No. 63 at 10 ("[Trendsettah] recognizes that this Court typically hears motions to preclude evidence in conjunction with pre-trial motions in limine.").

3.2. The Court denies summary judgment on Trendsettah's antitrust claims.

Trendsettah's first and second causes of action for violation of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 2, and Florida Antitrust Law, Fl. Stat. § 542.19, allege that Swisher engaged in widespread anticompetitive activity against Swisher in the cigarillo market. Docket No. 1 ¶¶ 46-59. Trendsettah raises genuine issues of material fact as to both causes of action.

3.2.1. Monopolization

The Sherman Act and the Florida Antitrust Law make it unlawful to engage in a monopoly or attempt to engage in a monopoly. See 15 U.S.C. § 2; Fla. Stat. § 542.19. To state a claim for monopolization under federal or Florida law,[1] a plaintiff must show: (1) possession of monopoly power in the relevant market; (2) willful acquisition [*15] or maintenance of that power; and (3) causal antitrust injury. SmileCare Dental Grp. v. Delta Dental Plan of California, Inc., 88 F.3d 780, 783 (9th Cir. 1996). Swisher argues that it is entitled to summary judgment on Trendsettah's monopolization claims because there is no genuine issue of material fact as to any of these three elements. Docket No. 67-1 at 11-21. The Court disagrees.

3.2.1.1. Monopoly power

[1] "Federal and Florida antitrust laws are analyzed under the same rules and case law." All Care Nursing Service, Inc. v. High Tech Staffing Services, Inc., 135 F.3d 740, 745 n.11 (9th Cir. 1998); see also Ad-Vantage Tel. Directory Consultants, Inc. v. GTE Directories Corp., 849 F.2d 1336, 1340 (11th Cir. 1987) ("[T]he Florida courts held that the Florida legislature has, in effect, adopted as the law of Florida the body of anti-trust law developed by the federal courts under the Sherman Act. . . . Thus, in analyzing this case, we may, and indeed must, apply the federal precedent developed under Section 2 of the Sherman Act."). Accordingly, the Court's analysis on Trendsettah's federal antitrust claims also applies to its Florida antitrust claims.

Monopoly power is the "power to control prices or exclude competition." Rebel Oil Co., Inc. v. Atlantic Richfield, Co., 51 F.3d 1421, 1434 (9th Cir. 1995). Monopoly power can be proven through direct or circumstantial evidence. Id. To show monopoly power by direct evidence, the plaintiff must show (1) restricted output and (2) supracompetitive prices. Id. To show monopoly power by circumstantial evidence, the plaintiff must "(1) define the relevant market, (2) show that the defendant owns a dominant share of that market, and (3) show that there are significant barriers to entry." Id. Here, Trendsettah has provided sufficient circumstantial evidence to raise a genuine issue of material fact as to Swisher's monopoly power.[2]

Relevant market. To define the "relevant market," the plaintiff must identify both the relevant geographic market and the relevant product market. Am. Ad Mgmt., Inc. v. GTE Corp., 92 F.3d 781, 790 (9th Cir. 1996). "The relevant product market identifies the products or services that compete with [*16] each other, and the relevant geographic market identifies the area where the competition in the relevant product market takes place." Sidibe v. Health, 51 F. Supp. 3d 870, 883 (N.D. Cal. 2014) (citing Los Angeles Mem'l Coliseum Comm'n v. NFL, 726 F.2d 1381, 1392 (9th Cir. 1984)). The definition of the relevant market is generally a question of fact for the jury. Morgan, Strand, Wheeler & Biggs v. Radiology, Ltd., 924 F.2d 1484, 1489 (9th Cir. 1991) ("Ordinarily, the relevant market is a question of fact for the jury").

The parties disagree on both the geographic and product market. Swisher defines the geographic market as the entire United States, Docket No. 67-1 at 19-20, and Trendsettah defines the geographic market as 15 regional markets within the United States, Docket No. 80 at 18. Swisher defines the product market to include "non-tipped cigarillos," "tipped cigarillos," and large cigars, Docket No. 67-1 at 18-19, and Trendsettah argues that the product market is only non-tipped cigarillos, Docket No. 80 at 15-16.

To support its definition for geographic market, Trendsettah provides evidence from Swisher's vice president of sales that Swisher planned competitive strategies around regional markets, Docket No. 83-4 at 17-21, the tobacco industry uses regional-level data to assess market shares and trends, Docket No. 83-10 at 6-7, and distributors consider where manufacturers are located (and related [*17] transportation and shipping costs) when determining which manufacturer to purchase cigarillos from, Docket No. 86 at 2. This evidence raises genuine issues of material fact regarding the geographic areas in which the relevant market takes place.

To support its definition for product market, Trendsettah provides an expert report that conducted a "small but significant nontransitory increase in price" ("SSNIP") analysis[3] finding that the product market includes only non-tipped cigarillos. Docket No. 84 at 14-21 (describing and reporting results of expert report's SSNIP analysis).[4] In contrast, Swisher's expert report conducted a conflicting SSNID analysis to find that the product market, at minimum, also includes large cigars. Docket No. 93-1 at 80-81. Construing this conflicting expert testimony in the light most favorable to Trendsettah, the Court finds that there is a genuine dispute of material fact that precludes summary judgment on the relevant product market.

[2] Because the Court finds that Trendsettah provided sufficient circumstantial evidence to raise a genuine issue of material fact as to Swisher's monopoly power, the Court need not consider whether Trendsettah has provided direct evidence to raise a genuine issue of material fact as to Swisher's monopoly power, particularly the requirement to show supracompetitive prices.

[3] The Ninth Circuit regularly uses SSNIP analysis to determine the relevant market in antitrust cases. Saint Alphonsus Med. Ctr.-Nampa Inc. v. St. Luke's Health Sys., Ltd., 778 F.3d 775, 784 (9th Cir. 2015) ("A common method to determine the relevant geographic market, and the one used by the district court, is to find whether a hypothetical monopolist could impose a 'small but significant nontransitory increase in price' ("SSNIP") in the proposed market."); *Vesta Corp. v. Amdocs Mgmt. Ltd., 129 F. Supp. 3d 1012, 2015 WL 5178073, at 8 (D. Or. 2015) (observing that courts "often employ" SSNIP analysis to determine the relevant market in antitrust claims related to horizontal mergers). SSNIP analysis determines the relevant market by testing whether a monopolist "could profitably impose a small but significant and nontransitory price increase." Theme Productions, Inc. v. News Amer. Mkt'g FSI, 546 F.3d 991, 1002 (9th Cir. 2008). "If a significant number of customers would respond to a SSNIP by purchasing substitute products, the SSNIP would not be profitable for the hypothetical monopolist. If a monopolist could not profitably impose a SSNIP, the market definition should be expanded to include those substitute products that constrain the monopolist's pricing." Id. (citations omitted).

[4] Swisher's assertion at oral argument that Trendsettah's expert performed no SSNIP analysis is simply mistaken.

Market share. "A plaintiff relying on circumstantial evidence to establish a § 2 monopolization claim must show that the defendant owned a 'dominant share' of the market." Image Tech., 125 F.3d at 1206. "Courts generally require a 65% market share to establish [*18] a prima facie case of market power." Id.

A determination as to whether Swisher has a dominant share of the market depends on the definition of the relevant market. For example, if the relevant market is defined as the regional non-tipped cigarillo market, Trendsettah has made a prima facie case of Swisher's market share in the regions roughly corresponding to the Pacific Northwest, the Mountain States, the Southwestern United States, and the Great Plains. See Docket No. 84 at 6 (Trendsettah's expert report). In contrast, if the relevant market is defined as the national non-tipped cigarillo market, Trendsettah has not established a prima facie case of Swisher's market share: Swisher's market share in non-tipped cigarillos is currently around 55%. See Docket No. 67-10 at 64 (Trendsettah's supplemental expert report). This is less than the 65% threshold required to establish a prima facie case of market share. Image Tech., 125 F.3d at 1206. Because the Court concludes that Trendsettah has raised a genuine issue of material fact regarding the proposed relevant market, the Court also concludes that Trendsettah has raised a genuine issue of material fact regarding market share.[5]

Barriers to entry. Barriers to [*19] entry are "additional long-run costs that were not incurred by incumbent firms but must be incurred by new entrants," or "factors in the market that deter entry while permitting incumbent firms to earn monopoly returns." Los Angeles Land Co. v. Brunswick Corp., 6 F.3d 1422, 1427 (9th Cir. 1993). Such barriers include: (1) legal licenses; (2) control of essential or superior resources; (3) entrenched buyer preferences; (4) high capital entry costs; and (5) economies of scale. Image Technical Services, Inc. v. Eastman Kodak Co., 125 F.3d 1195, 1208 (9th Cir. 1997) (citing Rebel Oil, 51 F.3d at 1439). "Whether barriers to entry exist is usually a fact-intensive question." *IGT v. Alliance Gaming Corp., 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 111773, 2008 WL 7071468, at 14 (D. Nev. Oct. 21, 2008).

To show that the cigarillo market has significant barriers to entry, Trendsettah's expert report enumerates various factors imposing significant barriers to entry in the cigarillo market, including high capital investments; limited access to inputs (e.g., tobacco, wrapper paper, and flavorings/additives); economies of scale; strict limits on advertising; strict regulations on tobacco retailer licensing, tobacco flavors, and tobacco pricing; entrenched distributor relationships; and entrenched customer preferences. Docket No. 84 at 27-35. This evidence is sufficient to raise a genuine issue of material fact, apart from the hearsay statement of Trendsettah's founder to which Swisher objected both in its [*20] reply and at the hearing. See Docket No. 93 at 8. In response, Swisher argues that there can be no genuine issue of material fact as to whether these barriers are significant because there were many entrants into the cigarillo market from 2011 to 2013, and there are now over 30 competitors in the cigarillo market. Docket No. 93 at 21-22. The Court agrees that the number of market entrants suggests that the barriers to entry to the cigarillo market are not insurmountably high. But the number of new competitors alone does not necessarily indicate whether these barriers are significant. Rebel Oil, 51 F.3d at 1440 ("The fact that entry has occurred does not necessarily preclude the existence of 'significant' entry barriers."). In the absence of additional countervailing evidence that the barriers to entry are insignificant, and construing all evidence in the light most favorable to Trendsettah, the Court determines that Trendsettah has raised a genuine issue of material fact as to whether there are significant barriers of entry.

3.2.1.2. Willful acquisition or maintenance of monopoly power

[5] At the hearing on Swisher's motion for partial summary judgment, Swisher argued for the first time that it is entitled to summary judgment on Trendsettah's Florida antitrust claim because there is no genuine issue of material fact as to whether Swisher has made a prima facie case of market power: the relevant market for Trendsettah's Florida antitrust claim is Florida, see Fl. Stat. § 542.19 (prohibiting monopolies only "in this state"), and Swisher's market share for Florida is less than 65%. See Docket No. 67-10 at 23 (stating that Swisher's share of non-tipped cigarillos for the region consisting of Mississippi, Alabama, western Tennessee, and Northwest Florida is between 53-62%, and Swisher's share for the region consisting of Georgia, Puerto Rico, the Caribbean Islands, and the rest of Florida is 35-41%). Swisher did not raise this argument in its moving papers, however. Docket No. 67-1 at 20-21. Accordingly, this argument is waived for present purposes. See Zamani v. Carnes, 491 F.3d 990, 997 (9th Cir. 2007) ("The district court need not consider arguments raised for the first time in a reply brief.").

In addition to monopoly power, the plaintiff must also show that defendant engaged in anticompetitive conduct. Anticompetitive [*21] conduct is the use of monopoly power "to foreclose competition, to gain a competitive advantage, or to destroy a competitor." United States v. Griffith, 334 U.S. 100, 107, 68 S. Ct. 941, 92 L. Ed. 1236 (1948). The parties dispute that there is a genuine issue of material fact as to whether Swisher's alleged failure to timely fulfill Trendsettah's orders or its refusal to renew the Second Private Label Agreement constituted anticompetitive conduct.[6]

"As a general rule, a monopolist has no duty to deal with its competitors." High Tech., 996 F.2d 987 (citing Eastman Kodak, 504 U.S. 451, 483 n.32, 112 S. Ct. 2072, 119 L. Ed. 2d 265 (1992)). This rule is not absolute, however. A monopolist can refuse to deal with its competitors only if there are legitimate business reasons for its refusal. Aspen Skiing Co. v. Aspen Highlands Skiing Corp., 472 U.S. 585, 602-605, 105 S. Ct. 2847, 86 L. Ed. 2d 467 (1985). Accordingly, "[w]hen a legitimate business justification supports a monopolist's exclusionary conduct, that conduct does not violate § 2 of the Sherman Act." Image Tech. Servs., 125 F.3d at 1212. "Whether valid business reasons motivated a monopolist's conduct is a question of fact." High Technology Careers v. San Jose News, 996 F.2d 987, 990 (9th Cir. 1993).

Here, there is a genuine dispute of material fact as to whether valid business reasons motivated Swisher's alleged failure to fulfill orders and refusal to renew the Second Private Label Agreement. Swisher provides evidence that it attempted to fill Trendsettah's orders as they were received, and any failure to fulfill orders was caused by issues [*22] with Trendsettah's faulty ordering, forecasting, and credit practices. See Docket No. 67-6 at 2-3 ("Although [the fulfillment rate is] not 100%, we are trying to balance an extensive Swisher portfolio with the Splitarillo products."). In turn, Trendsettah disputes Swisher's characterization of its ordering, forecasting, and credit practices, see Docket No. 85 at 7, and provides deposition testimony from Swisher's vice president of sales stating that Swisher's decision not to renew the Second Private Label Agreement was motivated in part by its concern about the market growth of Splitarillo products, see Docket No. 83-4 at 11. Construing all evidence in the light most favorable to Trendsettah, the Court determines that Trendsettah has raised a genuine issue of material fact as to whether there were legitimate business reasons for Swisher's refusal to deal with Trendsettah.

3.2.1.3. Causal antitrust injury

Lastly, to recover under federal or Florida antitrust law, the plaintiff must demonstrate "antitrust injury." Rebel Oil, 51 F.3d at 1433. The Ninth Circuit has identified four requirements for antitrust injury: "(1) unlawful conduct, (2) causing an injury to the plaintiff, (3) that flows from that which makes [*23] the conduct unlawful, and (4) that is of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent." Am. Ad Mgm't, Inc., 190 F.3d at 1055. Under this standard, conduct results in an "antitrust injury" when the conduct harms competition. Glen Holly Entm't, Inc. v. Tektronix Inc., 343 F.3d 1000, 1007-08 (9th Cir. 2003). Accordingly, "[i]f the injury flows from aspects of the defendant's conduct that are beneficial or neutral to competition, there is no antitrust injury . . . ." Rebel Oil, 51 F.3d at 1433.

Here, Trendsettah raises a genuine issue of material fact as to whether it suffered causal antitrust injury. For example, Trendsettah provided evidence that it suffered lost revenue and inhibited economic growth because Swisher failed to timely deliver approximately 200 million cigarillo sticks. See Docket 83-9 at 24-25. This standing alone is not antitrust injury. However, this conduct harmed competition because it ultimately reduced the total market output for Trendsettah's cigarillo sticks; harm to competition resulting from restricted output constitutes a viable antitrust injury. Rheumatology Diagnostics Lab., Inc. v. Aetna, Inc., 2013 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 151128, 2013 WL

---

[6] In its complaint, Trendsettah also alleged that Swish's anticompetitive conduct included charging Trendsettah prices above those designated in the private label agreements, disparaging Trendsettah in the market, and removing Splitarillo products and advertisements from wholesaler and distributors' shelves. Docket No. 1 ¶¶ 31 (overcharging), 36-40 (disparagement and removal). Trendsettah provided no evidence of overcharging at summary judgment. Docket No. 81 at 58 ("undisputed" that "Swisher never charged [Trendsettah] higher prices for Splitarillos than those set forth in the parties agreements"). Moreover, as discussed in Section 3.3 below, Trendsettah has failed to provide any evidence that Trendsettah suffered injury as a result of Swisher's alleged disparagement or its removal of Splitarillo products and advertisements. E.g., Id. at 61 ("Undisputed that [Trendsettah] lacks knowledge that any of its customers stopped doing business as a result of the specific acts of Swisher removing Splitarillos products or advertising and marketing materials from stores.").

*5694452, at 15 (N.D. Cal. Oct. 18, 2013) ("Market power can be shown by actual harm to competition inflicted by the defendant, such as restricted output or supra-competitive prices, or by the defendant's dominant market share and barriers to entry in the relevant market.") (emphasis added); *Stearns v. Select Comfort Retail Corp., 2009 WL 1635931, at 13 (N.D. Cal. June 5, 2009) [*24] ("The antitrust laws are intended to prevent harm to competition manifested as higher prices, lower output, or decreased quality in the products within a defined market.") (emphasis added).

In response, Swisher argues that its failure to deliver 200 million cigarillo sticks to Trendsettah did not reduce overall market output for cigarillos because sales within the entire cigarillo industry increased during this period. Docket No. 67-1 at 15-16. But increased sales by itself does not show that the overall market output was unaffected by Swisher's failure to timely deliver cigarillo sticks to Trendsettah: it could still be the case that, had Swisher timely delivered cigarillo sticks to Trendsettah, Trendsettah would have sold these sticks to distributors and wholesalers. To show that there is no genuine issue of fact as to causal antitrust injury, Swisher needs to instead establish that, even if Swisher timely delivered the cigarillo sticks to Trendsettah, the total market output for cigarillos would have remained the same. To that end, Swisher argues that its failure to deliver the cigarillo sticks did not reduce market output because Trendsettah's customers (i.e., wholesalers and distributors) ultimately [*25] purchased substitute sticks from Trendsettah's competitors. Docket No. 93 at 10. To support this argument, Swisher cites to various emails from Trendsettah showing that wholesalers and distributors threatened to purchase cigarillos from competitors because Trendsettah failed to timely fulfill their orders for Splitarillo-branded products. E.g., Docket No. 67-6 at 29 ("[Wholesalers] are threatening and telling us that they are forced to go back to working with [Good Times USA, LLC] because of our lack in product and lack in timing of products."). But these emails only show that some wholesalers and distributors sometimes threatened to purchase cigarillos from competitors, and not that they actually did purchase substitute cigarillos. Construing the evidence in the light most favorable to Trendsettah, the Court cannot find that threats to purchase substitute goods from Trendsettah's competitors show that there is no genuine issue of material fact as to Trendsettah's alleged causal antitrust injury.

3.2.2. Attempted monopolization

To show attempted monopolization under federal or Florida law, a plaintiff must show: (1) the defendant engaged in predatory or anticompetitive conduct; (2) the [*26] defendant had a specific intent to monopolize; (3) a dangerous probability of achieving monopoly power; and (4) causal antitrust injury. SmileCare, 88 F.3d at 783; Lockheed Martin Corp. v. Boeing Co., 314 F. Supp. 2d 1198, 1224 (M.D. Fla. 2004) ("In order to state a claim for attempted monopolization under either the Sherman Act or the Florida Antitrust Law, a plaintiff must allege facts that, if proven, would satisfy his burden at trial to prove that: (1) the defendant has engaged in predatory or anticompetitive conduct (2) with a specific intent to monopolize and (3) that there is a dangerous probability that defendant will achieve monopoly power."). The requirements for attempted monopolization are similar to the requirements for a monopolization claim, "differing primarily in the requisite intent and the necessary level of monopoly power." Image Technical Services, Inc. v. Eastman Kodak Co., 125 F.3d 1195, 1202 (9th Cir. 1997).

In its motion, Swisher argues only that there is no genuine issue of material fact on Trendsettah's attempted monopolization claim because Trendsettah and its expert defined the wrong relevant market when determining whether there was a dangerous probability of achieving monopoly power. Docket No. 67-1 at 21. But, as discussed above, the Court has denied summary judgment on Trendsettah's monopolization claims because there are genuine issues of [*27] material fact about how to define the relevant market. Accordingly, as with the monopolization claims, the Court also denies summary judgment on Trendsettah's attempted monopolization claims.

3.3. The Court grants summary judgment on Trendsettah's trade libel claim.

Trendsettah's fifth cause of action for trade libel alleges that Swisher representatives orally disparaged the Splitarillo brand to wholesalers and distributors that purchased Splitarrillos. Docket No. 1 ¶¶ 71-77. To show trade libel under Florida law, the plaintiff must show: (1) a falsehood (2) has been published to a third person, (3) defendant knew or had reason to know that the falsehood will likely cause others not to deal with the plaintiff, (4) the falsehood induced others not to deal with the plaintiff, and (5) the published falsehood caused plaintiff to suffer special damages. Border Collie Rescue, Inc. v. Ryan, 418 F. Supp. 2d 1330, 1348 (M.D. Fla. 2006) (citing Stewart Title Guar. Co. v. Title Dynamics, Inc., 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 48191, 2005 WL 2548419 (M.D. Fla. 2005)).

In support of its trade libel claim, Trendsettah provided a declaration from an officer at SM Brothers, Inc., a wholesale distributor of Splitarillo products, stating only that unidentified Swisher representatives made disparaging comments about Splitarillos in his presence.[7] Docket No. 88 at 2-3. Trendsettah also provided a declaration [*28] from Trendsettah's Chief Financial Officer stating that, "after [he] first started hearing these rumors [that Swisher representatives made disparaging remarks about Splitarillos]," Trendsettah experienced a reduction in net sales of Splitarillos to Colonial Grocers, Core-Mark and Import Warehouse. Docket No. 87 at 2-3. These declarations provide no specific facts that the Swisher's disparaging comments in fact caused SM Brothers, Inc., Colonial Grocers, Core-Mark, Import Warehouse, or any other wholesaler or distributor not to deal with Trendsettah.[8] For example, the SM Brothers, Inc. officer nowhere declared that he chose not to deal with Trendsettah because of Swisher's disparaging comments.[9] Similarly, Trendsettah's Chief Financial Officer nowhere declares that the decrease in net sales to Colonial Grocers, Core-Mark and Import Warehouse was in fact caused by Swisher's disparaging comments. In the absence of specific facts establishing causation and damages, the Court grants summary judgment to Swisher on Trendsettah's trade libel claim.

3.4. The Court grants summary judgment on Trendsettah's tortious interference with contract claim.

To show tortious interference with contract under [*29] Florida law, the plaintiff must show: (1) the existence of a contract between plaintiff and a third-party; (2) the defendant knew of the contract; (3) breach of contract; (4) the defendant caused or induced the breach; (5) the defendant specifically intended to procure a breach of contract; (6) the defendant had no justification or privilege for his conduct; and (7) the plaintiff suffered damages as a result of the breach. See Johnson Enterprises of Jacksonville, Inc. v. FPL Group, Inc., 162 F.3d 1290, 1321 (11th Cir. 1998); Chicago Title Ins. Co. v. Alday-Donalson Title Co. of Florida, 832 So. 2d 810, 814 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 2002).[10]

In its motion for partial summary judgment, Swisher argues that there is no genuine issue of material fact as to whether Swisher caused Trendsettah to breach its contracts with wholesalers or distributors, or whether Trendsettah suffered any damages as a result of breach. Docket No. 67-1 at 28-29.[11] Swisher is correct. Although

[7] As relevant to Trendsettah's trade libel claim, the declarant also stated that part of the following statement is not true: "No Swisher representative has made statements to, or engaged in any conduct at, SM Brothers, Inc., that disparaged Splitarrillos brand cigarillos, Trendsettah USA, Inc., or Trend Settah, Inc., that had the purpose of reducing or stopping Splitarillos brand cigarillos purchases or sales, or that had the purpose of undermining Splitarillos brand cigarillos, Trendsettah USA, Inc. or Trend Settah, Inc. in any way." Docket No. 88 at 3. The declarant does not identify what part of that statement is false, however. Id.

[8] In response to a question whether any company "reduce[d] the volume of their business with Trendsettah as a result of Swisher's alleged disparagement of Trendsettah," Akrum Alrahib, founder of Trendsettah, stated that "[he] wouldn't know what the individual wholesaler did or --intended to do after they heard that." Docket No. 83-1 at 13.

[9] The parties do not dispute that SM Brothers, Inc. has continued doing business with Trendsettah. Docket No. 81 at 65.

[10] The Court is skeptical that a plaintiff can maintain a claim for tortious interference with a third-party contract against a defendant when, as here, the tortious interference arises wholly from conduct that constitutes breach of a separate, unrelated contract between the plaintiff and the defendant. Said another way, there must be some evidence of breach of the third-party contract, typically by showing that the third party has been induced to breach. See, e.g., Law Offices of David J. Stern, P.A. v. SCOR Reinsurance Corp., 354 F. Supp. 2d 1338, 1341 (S.D. Fla. 2005); Chicago Title, 832 So. 2d at 814 ("Chicago Title offered no evidence and raised no issue of material fact as to whether Stewart Title intended to procure the breach of the contracts between Chicago Title and the Alday Agencies."). To allow such a claim would, in effect, convert an ordinary breach of contract claim to an additional tort claim when the defendant's breach of its contract with the plaintiff also affects the plaintiff's third-party contracts. Under such circumstances, the plaintiff should instead seek consequential damages for the ensuing breach of its third-party contract, see Hadley v. Baxendale, 156 Eng. Rep. 145 (Ex. Ch. 1854), and not bring a separate tort claim. The Court nevertheless declines to grant summary judgment on Trendsettah's tortious interference with contract claim on this basis because, in any event, there is no genuine issue of material fact as to either breach, causation, or resulting damages.

Trendsettah has provided evidence of oral contracts between Trendsettah and certain distributors and wholesalers, see Docket No. 85 at 8, Trendsettah provides no specific evidence that Trendsettah, its distributors, or its wholesalers breached one such contract, or, if there was a breach, that the breach was caused by Swisher's anticompetitive conduct. Accordingly, the Court grants summary judgment on Trendsettah's tortious [*30] interference with contract claim.

3.5. The Court grants summary judgment on Trendsettah's tortious interference with prospective business relationships claim.

To show tortious interference with prospective business relationships under Florida law, the plaintiff must show: (1) the existence of a business relationship; (2) the defendant knew about the relationship; (3) the defendant intentionally and unjustifiably interfered with the relationship; and (4) plaintiff suffered damages as a result of the breach. Tamiami Trail Tours, Inc. v. Cotton, 463 So. 2d 1126, 1127 (Fla. 1985). "An action for tortious interference with a prospective business relationship requires a business relationship evidenced by an actual and identifiable understanding or agreement which in all probability would have been completed if the defendant had not interfered." ISS Cleaning Servs. Grp., Inc. v. Cosby, 745 So. 2d 460, 462 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 1999).

Trendsettah's claim for tortious interference with prospective business relationships alleges that Swisher interfered with Trendsettah's prospective business relationships in two ways. First, Swisher disparaged Splitarillo-branded products to wholesalers and distributors. Docket No. 1 ¶ 89. Second, Swisher limited its production of Splitarillos-branded cigarillos so that Trendsettah could not fulfill potential orders [*31] to wholesalers and distributors. Id. ¶ 88. Trendsettah has not raised a genuine issue of material fact on either theory. First, as to disparagement, Trendsettah provides no specific facts showing that Swisher's disparaging remarks materially affected Trendsettah's business relationships (contractual, prospective, or otherwise) with its wholesalers or distributors. See Section 3.3, supra. Accordingly, the Court grants summary judgment on Trendsettah's tortious interference claim to the extent it relies on Swisher's alleged disparagement. Second, as to limiting production, Trendsettah fails to provide specific evidence of even one prospective business relationship that would have been completed but for Trendsettah's anticompetitive conduct. See also Section 3.4 (failure to provide evidence of breach, causation, and resulting damages). Accordingly, the Court also grants summary judgment on Trendsettah's tortious interference to the extent it relies on Swisher's limited production of Splitarillo-branded products.

4. Conclusion

For the reasons stated above, the Court denies Trendsettah's motion to exclude evidence and grants in part and denies in part Swisher's motion for partial summary judgment.

As a result of [*32] the hearing, the Court allows limited discovery motions practice. Trendsettah shall file with this Court any ex parte applications relating to Swisher's profit data within seven days after issuance of this Order. Swisher shall have seven days to file its respective reply, if any. Swisher raised at oral argument possible motions practice related to third-party discovery. Any such motion shall be presented to the magistrate judge on a similarly expedited basis. The Scheduling Order is deemed amended to permit this limited motions practice.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

[11] Trendsettah's assertion at oral argument that Swisher did not argue lack of breach, causation, or damages in its motion for partial summary judgment is mistaken. See Docket No. 67-1 at 28 ("Plaintiffs also fail to show that they lost any business as a result of the alleged interference."), 29 ("There is no record evidence to show that Swisher's alleged actions influenced, induced, or coerced even one company to breach its contract or avoid doing business with [Trendsettah].") HN2[] Class Actions, Compromise & Settlement

Under Del. Ch. Ct. R. 23, the Court of Chancery must approve the dismissal or settlement of a class action. Del. Ch. Ct. R. 23(e). Although Delaware has long favored the voluntary settlement of litigation, the fiduciary character of a class action requires the Court to independently examine the fairness of a class action settlement before approving it. Approval of a class action settlement requires more than a cursory scrutiny by the Court of the issues presented. The Court must exercise its own judgment to determine whether the settlement is reasonable and intrinsically fair. In doing so, the Court evaluates not only the claim, possible defenses, and obstacles to its successful prosecution, but also the reasonableness of the "give" and the "get," or what the class members receive in exchange for ending the litigation.

Business & Corporate Law > ... > Corporate Governance > Directors & Officers > Management Duties & Liabilities

HN3[] Directors & Officers, Management Duties & Liabilities

Under Delaware law, when corporate directors solicit stockholder action, they must disclose fully and fairly all material information within the board's control. Delaware has adopted the standard of materiality used under the federal securities laws. Information is material if there is a substantial likelihood that a reasonable shareholder would consider it important in deciding how to vote. In other words, information is material if, from the perspective of a reasonable stockholder, there is a substantial likelihood that it significantly alters the "total mix" of information made available.

HN4[] Directors & Officers, Management Duties & Liabilities

Under Delaware law, when a corporate board relies on the advice of a financial advisor in making a decision that requires stockholder action, those stockholders are entitled to receive in the proxy statement a fair summary of the substantive work performed by the investment bankers upon whose advice the recommendations of their board as to how to vote on a merger or tender rely. This "fair summary" standard has been a guiding principle for the Court of Chancery in considering proxy disclosures concerning the work of financial advisors. A fair summary, however, is a summary. By definition, it need not contain all information underlying the financial advisor's opinion or contained in its report to the board. Indeed, the Court has held that the summary does not need to provide sufficient data to allow the stockholders to perform their own independent valuation. The essence of a fair summary is not a cornucopia of financial data, but rather an accurate description of the advisor's methodology and key assumptions.

HN5[] Directors & Officers, Management Duties & Liabilities

Although management projections and internal forecasts are not per se necessary for a fair summary of the substantive work performed by the investment bankers upon whose advice the recommendations of their corporate board as to how to vote on a merger or tender rely, the Court of Chancery of Delaware has placed special importance on this information because it may contain unique insights into the value of the company that cannot be obtained elsewhere.

Opinion

[*886] BOUCHARD, C.

This opinion concerns the proposed settlement of a stockholder class action challenging Zillow, Inc.'s acquisition of Trulia, Inc. in a stock-for-stock merger that closed in February 2015. Shortly after the public announcement of the proposed transaction, four Trulia stockholders filed essentially identical complaints alleging that Trulia's directors had breached their fiduciary duties in approving the proposed merger [*887] at an unfair exchange ratio. Less than four months later, after taking limited discovery, the parties reached an agreement-in-principle to settle.

The proposed settlement is of the type often referred to as a "disclosure settlement." It has become the most common method for quickly resolving stockholder lawsuits that are filed routinely in response to the announcement of virtually every transaction involving the acquisition of a public corporation. In essence, Trulia agreed to supplement the proxy materials disseminated to its stockholders before they voted on the proposed transaction to include some additional [3] information that theoretically would allow the stockholders to be better informed in exercising their franchise rights. In exchange, plaintiffs dropped their motion to preliminarily enjoin the transaction and agreed to provide a release of claims on behalf of a proposed class of Trulia's stockholders. If approved, the settlement will not provide Trulia stockholders with any economic benefits. The only money that would change hands is the payment of a fee to plaintiffs' counsel.

HN1[] Because a class action impacts the legal rights of absent class members, it is the responsibility of the Court of Chancery to exercise independent judgment to determine whether a proposed class settlement is fair and reasonable to the affected class members. For the reasons explained in this opinion, I conclude that the terms of this proposed settlement are not fair or reasonable because none of the supplemental disclosures were material or even helpful to Trulia's stockholders, and thus the proposed settlement does not afford them any meaningful consideration to warrant providing a release of claims to the defendants. Accordingly, I decline to approve the proposed settlement.

On a broader level, this opinion [4] discusses some of the dynamics that have led to the proliferation of disclosure settlements, noting the concerns that scholars, practitioners and members of the judiciary have expressed that these settlements rarely yield genuine benefits for stockholders and threaten the loss of potentially valuable claims that have not been investigated with rigor. I also discuss some of the particular challenges the Court faces in evaluating disclosure settlements through a non-adversarial process.

Based on these considerations, this opinion offers the Court's perspective that disclosure claims arising in deal litigation optimally should be adjudicated outside of the context of a proposed settlement so that the Court's consideration of the merits of the disclosure claims can occur in an adversarial process without the defendants' desire to obtain an often overly broad release hanging in the balance. The opinion further explains that, to the extent that litigants continue to pursue disclosure settlements, they can expect that the Court will be increasingly vigilant in scrutinizing the "give" and the "get" of such settlements to ensure that they are genuinely fair and reasonable to the absent class [5] members.

I. BACKGROUND

The facts recited in this opinion are based on the allegations of the Verified Amended Class Action Complaint in C.A. No. 10022-CB, which was designated as the operative complaint in the consolidation action; the brief plaintiffs submitted in support of their motion for a preliminary injunction; and the briefs and affidavits submitted in connection with the proposed settlement. Because of the posture of the litigation, the recited facts do not represent factual findings, but rather the [*888] record as it was presented for the Court to evaluate the proposed settlement.

A. The Parties

Defendant Trulia, Inc., a Delaware corporation, is an online provider of information on homes for purchase or for rent in the United States. Individual defendants Pete Flint, Robert Moles, Theresia Gouw, Gregory Waldorf, Sami Inkinen, Erik Bardman, and Steve Hafner were members of Trulia's board of directors when the merger was approved.

Defendant Zillow, Inc., a Washington corporation, is a real estate marketplace that helps home buyers, sellers, landlords and others find and share information about homes. Defendant Zebra Holdco, Inc. ("Holdco"), now known as Zillow Group, Inc., is a Washington [6] corporation that was formed to facilitate the merger at issue and is now the parent company of Zillow and Trulia.

Plaintiffs Christopher Shue, Matthew Sciabacucci, Chaile Steinberg, and Robert Collier were Trulia stockholders at all times relevant to this action.

B. The Announcement of the Merger and the Litigation

On July 28, 2014, Trulia and Zillow announced that they had entered into a definitive merger agreement under which Zillow would acquire Trulia for approximately $3.5 billion in stock.[1] The transaction was structured to include two successive stock-for-stock mergers whereby separate subsidiaries of Holdco would acquire both Trulia and Zillow. After these mergers, Trulia and Zillow would exist as wholly-owned subsidiaries of Holdco, and the former stockholders of Trulia and Zillow would receive, respectively, approximately 33% and 67% of the outstanding shares of Holdco.

After the merger was announced, the four plaintiffs filed class [7] action complaints challenging the Trulia merger and seeking to enjoin it. Each of the complaints alleged essentially identical claims: that the individual defendants had breached their fiduciary duties, and that Zillow, Trulia, and Holdco aided and abetted those breaches.

[1] By closing, the transaction value had fallen to $2.5 billion, based on the value of Zillow stock at the time. See Zillow Completes Acquisition of Trulia for $2.5 Billion in Stock; Forms "Zillow Group" Family of Brands, (Feb. 17, 2015), available at http://zillow.mediaroom.com/2015-02-17-Zillow-Completes-Acquisition-of-Trulia-for-2-5-Billion-in-Stock-Forms-Zillow-Group-Family-of-Brands .

On September 11, 2014, Holdco filed a registration statement containing Trulia and Zillow's preliminary joint proxy statement with the United States Securities and Exchange Commission. On September 24, 2014, one of the four plaintiffs filed a motion for expedited proceedings and for a preliminary injunction.

On October 13, 2014, the Court granted an unopposed motion to consolidate the four cases into one action and to appoint lead counsel. On October 14, at 10:37 a.m., plaintiffs filed a motion to expedite the proceedings in the newly consolidated case. The Court never heard the motion, however, because the parties promptly agreed on an expedited schedule, which they documented in a stipulated case schedule filed on October 14 at 12:12 p.m., less than two hours after the motion to expedite was filed.

Over the next few weeks, plaintiffs reviewed documents produced by defendants and deposed one director of Trulia (Chairman, [8] CEO, and co-founder Pete Flint) and a banker from J.P. Morgan Securities [*889] LLC, Trulia's financial advisor in the transaction.

On November 14, 2014, plaintiffs filed a brief in support of their motion for a preliminary injunction. In that brief, plaintiffs asserted that the individual defendants had breached their fiduciary duties by "failing to obtain the highest exchange ratio available for the Company's stockholders in a single-bidder process, failing to properly value the Company, agreeing to preclusive provisions in the Merger Agreement that impede the Board's ability to consider and accept superior proposals, and disseminating materially false and misleading disclosures to the Company's stockholders . . . ."[2] The discussion of the merits in that brief, however, focused only on disclosure issues. Plaintiffs provided no argument in support of any other aspect of their claims.

On November 17, Trulia and Zillow filed a definitive joint proxy statement regarding the transaction on Schedule 14A (the "Proxy").

C. The Parties Reach a Settlement

On November 19, 2014, the parties entered into a Memorandum of Understanding detailing an agreement-in-principle [9] to settle the litigation for certain disclosures to supplement those contained in the Proxy, subject to confirmatory discovery. The same day, Trulia filed a Form 8-K with the Securities and Exchange Commission containing the disclosures (the "Supplemental Disclosures").

On December 18, 2014, Trulia and Zillow held special meetings of stockholders at which each company's stockholders voted on and approved the transaction. Trulia's stockholders overwhelmingly supported the transaction. Of the Trulia shares that voted, 99.15% voted in favor of the transaction. In absolute terms, 79.52% of Trulia's outstanding shares voted in favor the transaction.[3]

On February 10, 2015, plaintiffs conducted a confirmatory deposition of a second Trulia director, Gregory Waldorf. On February 17, 2015, the transaction closed.

On June 10, 2015, the parties executed a Stipulation and Agreement of Compromise, Settlement, and Release (the "Stipulation") in support of a proposed settlement reiterating the terms of the Memorandum of Understanding. In the Stipulation, the parties agreed to seek certification of a class consisting of all Trulia stockholders from [10] July 28, 2014 (when the transaction was announced) through February 17, 2015 (when the transaction closed). The Stipulation included an extremely broad release encompassing, among other things, "Unknown Claims"[4] and claims "arising under federal, state, foreign, statutory, regulatory, common law or other law or rule" held by any member of the proposed class relating in any conceivable way to the transaction.[5] The Stipulation further provided that plaintiffs' counsel intended to seek an award of attorneys' fees and expenses [*890] not to exceed $375,000, which defendants agreed not to oppose.

Beginning on July 17, 2015, Trulia disseminated notices to the proposed class members in accordance [11] with a scheduling order the Court had entered.

D. Procedural Posture

On September 16, 2015, after receiving a brief and an affidavit from plaintiffs advocating for approval of the proposed settlement, I held a hearing to consider the fairness of the terms of the proposed settlement. Defendants made no submissions concerning the proposed settlement before the hearing, and no stockholder filed an objection to it. After the hearing, I took the request to approve the settlement under advisement and asked the parties for supplemental briefing on whether disclosures must meet the legal standard of materiality in order to constitute an adequate benefit to support a settlement, and on the rationale and justification for including "unknown claims" among the claims that would be released by the proposed settlement.

On September 22, 2015, Sean J. Griffith, a professor at Fordham University School of Law who has researched disclosure settlements and objected to them in the past,[6] requested permission to appear as amicus curiae in order to submit a brief on the topics for which I requested supplemental briefing. I approved this request on September 23, and the parties submitted their supplemental briefing [12] on October 16.

Along with their supplemental briefing, plaintiffs submitted an affidavit from Timothy J. Meinhart, a managing director of Willamette Management Associates, which provides business valuation and transaction financial advisory services. The affidavit addresses certain concerns about some (but not all) of the disclosures that I raised at the settlement hearing. Plaintiffs and defendants also informed the Court that, following the hearing, the parties had agreed to a revised stipulation with a narrower release.

Specifically, the parties removed "Unknown Claims" and "foreign" claims from the ambit of the release and added a carve-out so that the release would not cover "any claims that arise under the Hart-Scott-Rodino, Sherman, or Clayton Acts, or any other state or federal antitrust law." As revised, the release still encompasses "any claims arising under federal, state, statutory, regulatory, common law, or other law or rule" held by any member of the proposed class relating in any conceivable way to the transaction, with the exception of the carve-out for claims arising under state and federal antitrust law.[7] requires the Court to independently examine the fairness of a class action settlement before approving [*891] it.[10] "Approval of a class action settlement requires more than a cursory scrutiny by the court of the issues presented."[11] The Court must exercise its own judgment to determine whether the settlement is reasonable and intrinsically fair.[12] In doing so, the Court evaluates not only the claim, possible defenses, and obstacles to its successful prosecution,[13] but also "the reasonableness of the 'give' and the 'get,'"[14] or what the class members receive in exchange for ending the litigation.

II. LEGAL [13] ANALYSIS

Before turning to that analysis here, I pause to discuss some of the dynamics that have led to the proliferation of disclosure settlements[15] and the concerns that have been expressed about this phenomenon, and to offer the Court's perspective on how disclosure claims in deal litigation should [14] be adjudicated in the future.

B. Considerations Involving Disclosure Claims in Deal Litigation

Over two decades ago, Chancellor Allen famously remarked in Solomon v. Pathe Communications Corporation that "[i]t is a fact evident to all of those who are familiar with shareholder litigation that surviving a motion to dismiss means, as a practical matter, that economical[ly] rational defendants . . . will settle such claims, often for a peppercorn and a fee."[16] The Chancellor's remarks were not made in the context of a settlement, but they touch [15] upon some of the same dynamics that have fueled disclosure settlements of deal litigation.

Today, the public announcement of virtually every transaction involving the acquisition of a public corporation provokes a flurry of class action lawsuits alleging that the target's directors breached their fiduciary duties by agreeing to sell the corporation for an unfair price. On occasion, although it is relatively infrequent, such litigation has generated meaningful economic benefits for stockholders when, for example, the integrity of a sales process has been corrupted by conflicts of interest on the part of corporate fiduciaries or their advisors.[17] But far too often [15] In this Opinion, I use the term "disclosure settlement" to refer to settlements in which the sole or predominant consideration provided to stockholders in exchange for releasing their claims is the dissemination of one or more disclosures to supplement the proxy materials distributed for the purpose of soliciting stockholder approval for a proposed transaction. An example of a disclosure settlement in which the supplemental disclosures would be the predominant but not sole consideration is one that, in addition to supplemental disclosures, includes an insubstantial component of other non-monetary consideration, such as a minor modification to a deal protection measure.

[*892] such litigation serves no useful purpose for stockholders. Instead, it serves only to generate fees for certain lawyers who are regular players in the enterprise of routinely filing hastily drafted complaints on behalf of stockholders on the heels of the public announcement of a deal and settling quickly on terms that yield no monetary compensation to the stockholders they represent.

In such lawsuits, plaintiffs' leverage is the threat of an injunction to prevent a transaction from closing. Faced with that threat, defendants are incentivized to settle quickly in order to mitigate the considerable expense of litigation and the distraction it entails, to achieve closing [17] certainty, and to obtain broad releases as a form of "deal insurance." These incentives are so potent that many defendants self-expedite the litigation by volunteering to produce "core documents" to plaintiffs' counsel, obviating the need for plaintiffs to seek the Court's permission to expedite the proceedings in aid of a preliminary injunction application and thereby avoiding the only gating mechanism (albeit one friendly to plaintiffs[18]) the Court has to screen out frivolous cases and to ensure that its limited resources are used wisely.[19]

Once the litigation is on an expedited track and the prospect of an injunction hearing looms, the most common currency used to procure a settlement is the issuance of supplemental disclosures to the target's stockholders before they are asked to vote on the proposed transaction. The theory behind making these disclosures is that, by having the additional information, stockholders will be better informed when exercising their franchise rights.[20] Given the Court's historical practice of approving disclosure settlements when the additional information is not material, and indeed may be of only minor [*893] value to the stockholders,[21] providing supplemental disclosures is a particularly easy "give" for defendants [19] to make in exchange for a release.

Once an agreement-in-principle is struck to settle for supplemental disclosures, the litigation takes on an entirely different, non-adversarial character. Both sides of the caption then share the same interest in obtaining the Court's approval of the settlement.[22] The next step, after notice has been provided to the stockholders, is a hearing in [18] Stockholder plaintiffs who seek expedition benefit from the most favorable standard available under our law for assessing the merits of a claim—"colorability"—and from the sensible policy of this Court to attempt to resolve disclosure claims before stockholders are asked to vote. See *Ortsman v. Green, 2007 Del. Ch. LEXIS 29, 2007 WL 702475, at *2 (Del. Ch. [19] Notwithstanding the plaintiff-friendly pleading standard governing a motion to expedite, the Court takes seriously its role to deny expedition in deal litigation when warranted. *See, e.g., In re Rite Aid Corp. which the Court must evaluate the fairness of the proposed settlement. Significantly, in advance of such hearings, the Court receives briefs and affidavits from plaintiffs extolling the value of the supplemental disclosures and advocating for approval of the proposed settlement, but rarely receives any submissions expressing an opposing viewpoint.[23]

Although the Court commonly evaluates the proposed settlement of stockholder class and derivative actions without the benefit of hearing opposing viewpoints, disclosure settlements present some unique challenges. It is one thing for the Court to judge the fairness of a settlement, even in a non-adversarial context, when there has been significant [21] discovery or meaningful motion practice to inform the Court's evaluation. It is quite another to do so when little or no motion practice has occurred and the discovery record is sparse, as is typically the case in an expedited deal litigation leading to an equally expedited resolution based on supplemental disclosures before the transaction closes. In this case, for example, no motions were decided (not even a motion to expedite), and discovery was limited to the production of less than 3,000 pages of documents and the taking of three depositions, two of which were taken before the parties agreed in principle to settle and one of which was a "confirmatory" deposition taken thereafter.[24]

[*894] The lack of an adversarial process often requires that the Court become essentially a forensic examiner of proxy materials so that it can play devil's advocate in probing the value of the "get" for stockholders in a proposed disclosure settlement. Consider the following example. During discovery, plaintiffs will typically receive copies of board presentations made by financial advisors who ultimately opine on the fairness of the transaction from a financial point of view. It is all too common for a plaintiff to identify and obtain supplemental disclosure of a laundry list of minutiae in a financial advisor's board presentation that does not appear in the summary of the advisor's analysis in the proxy materials—summaries that commonly run ten or more single-spaced pages in the first instance. [23] Given that the newly added pieces of information were, by definition, missing from the original proxy, it is not difficult for an advocate to make a superficially persuasive argument that it is better for stockholders to have more information rather than less. In an adversarial process, defendants, armed with the help of their financial advisors, would be quick to contextualize the omissions and point out why the missing details are immaterial (and may even be unhelpful) given the summary of the advisor's analysis already disclosed in the proxy. In the settlement context, however, it falls to law-trained judges to attempt to perform this function, however crudely, as best they can.

In the rare case in which objectors are present, the question necessarily becomes whether the objectors represent the interests of the class or instead represent yet another set of interests. See Sean J. Griffith & Alexandra D. Lahav, The Market for Preclusion in Merger Litigation, 66 Vand. L. Rev. 1053, 1084 n.142, 1122 (2013) (noting that in some cases objectors may also be hold-outs demanding a piece of the settlement value).

[24] "Confirmatory" discovery is discovery taken after an agreement-in-principle to settle a case has been reached. Theoretically, it is an opportunity for plaintiffs' counsel to "confirm" that the settlement terms are reasonable—that is, to probe further the strengths and weaknesses of the claims relative to the consideration for the proposed settlement. In reality, given that plaintiffs' counsel already have resigned themselves to settle on certain terms, confirmatory discovery rarely leads to a renunciation [22] of the proposed settlement and, instead, engenders activity more reflective of "going through the motions." See Brinckerhoff v. Tex. E. Prods. Pipeline Co., LLC, 986 A.2d 370, 385 (Del. Ch. 2010) (questioning quality of confirmatory discovery process) ("Confirmatory discovery performances ranging from the diffident to the feckless impair, rather than inspire, judicial confidence."); In re Coleman Co., Inc. S'holders Litig., 750 A.2d 1202, 1212 (Del. Ch. 1999) ("[C]onfirmatory discovery in settlement situations is hardly the equivalent of adversarial pre-trial discovery.").

It is beyond doubt in my view that the dynamics described above, in particular the Court's willingness in the past to approve disclosure settlements of marginal value and to routinely grant broad releases to defendants and six-figure fees to plaintiffs' counsel in the process,[25] have caused deal litigation to explode in the United States beyond the realm of reason. In just the past decade, the percentage of transactions of $100 million or more that have triggered stockholder litigation in this country has more [24] than doubled, from 39.3% in 2005 to a peak of 94.9% in 2014.[26] Only recently has the percentage decreased, falling to 87.7% in 2015 due to a decline near the end of the year.[27] In Delaware, the percentage of such cases settled solely on the basis of supplemental disclosures grew significantly from 45.4% in 2005 to a high of 76.0% in 2012, and only recently has seen some decline.[28] The increased prevalence of deal litigation and [*895] disclosure settlements has drawn the attention of academics, practitioners, and the judiciary.

Scholars have criticized disclosure settlements, arguing that non-material supplemental disclosures provide no benefit to stockholders and amount to little more than deal "rents" or "taxes," while the liability releases that accompany settlements threaten the loss of potentially valuable claims related to the transaction in question or other matters falling within the literal scope of overly broad releases.[29] One recent study provides empirical data suggesting that supplemental disclosures make no difference in stockholder voting, and thus provide no benefit that could serve as consideration for a settlement.[30] Another paper, written by a practitioner, provides examples of cases in which unexplored but valuable claims that almost were released through disclosure settlements later yielded significant recoveries for stockholders.[31] A particularly vivid example is the recently concluded Rural/Metro case.[32] In that case, the Court of Chancery initially considered it a "very close call"[33] to reject [27] a disclosure settlement that would have released claims which subsequently yielded stockholders over $100 million, mostly from a post-trial judgment, after new counsel took over the case.[34]

Members of this Court also have voiced their concerns over the deal settlement process, expressing doubts about the value of relief obtained in disclosure settlements, and explaining their reservations over the [*896] breadth of the releases sought and the lack of any meaningful investigation of claims proposed to be released.[35] Judges outside of Delaware have expressed similar concerns.[36]

Given the rapid proliferation and current ubiquity of deal litigation, the mounting evidence that supplemental disclosures rarely yield genuine benefits for stockholders, the risk of stockholders losing potentially valuable claims that have not been investigated with rigor, and the challenges of assessing disclosure claims in a non-adversarial settlement process, the Court's historical predisposition toward approving disclosure settlements needs to be reexamined. In the Court's opinion, the optimal means by which disclosure claims in deal litigation should be adjudicated is outside the context of a proposed settlement so that the Court's consideration of the merits of the disclosure claims can occur in an adversarial process where the defendants' desire to obtain a release does not hang in the balance.

Outside the settlement context, [30] disclosure claims may be subjected to judicial review in at least two ways. One is in the context of a preliminary injunction motion, in which case the adversarial process would remain intact and plaintiffs would have the burden to demonstrate on the merits a reasonable likelihood of proving that "the alleged omission or misrepresentation is material."[37] In other words, plaintiffs would bear the burden of showing "a substantial likelihood that the disclosure of the omitted fact would have been viewed by the reasonable investor as having significantly altered the 'total mix' of information made available."[38]

A second way is when plaintiffs' counsel apply to the Court for an award of attorneys' fees after defendants voluntarily decide to supplement their proxy materials by making one or more of the disclosures sought by plaintiffs, thereby mooting some [*897] or all of their claims. In that scenario, where securing a release is not at issue, defendants are incentivized to oppose fee requests they view as excessive.[39] Hence, the adversarial process would remain in place and assist the Court in its evaluation of the nature of the benefit conferred (i.e., the value of the supplemental [31] disclosures) for purposes of determining the reasonableness of the requested fee.

In either of these scenarios, to the extent fiduciary duty claims challenging the sales process remain in the case, they may be amenable to dismissal. Harkening back to Chancellor Allen's words in Solomon, the Court would be cognizant of the need to "apply the pleading test under Rule 12 with special care" in stockholder litigation because "the risk of strike suits means that too much turns on the mere survival of the complaint."[40] In that regard, both the litigants and the Court are aided today by thirty years of jurisprudence that now exists interpreting the principles enunciated in Unocal and Revlon that often are central to reviewing fiduciary conduct in deal litigation.[41]

The preferred scenario of a mootness dismissal appears to be catching on. In the wake of the Court's increasing scrutiny of disclosure settlements, the Court has observed an increase in the filing of stipulations in which, after disclosure claims have been mooted by defendants electing to supplement their proxy materials, plaintiffs dismiss their actions without prejudice to the other members of the putative class (which has not yet been certified) and the Court reserves jurisdiction solely to hear a mootness fee application.[42] From the Court's perspective, this arrangement provides a logical and sensible framework for concluding the litigation. After being afforded some discovery [33] to probe the merits of a fiduciary challenge to the substance of the board's decision to approve the transaction in question, plaintiffs can exit the litigation without needing to expend additional resources (or causing the Court and other parties to expend further resources) on dismissal motion practice after the transaction has closed. Although defendants will not have obtained a formal release, the filing of a stipulation of dismissal [*898] likely represents the end of fiduciary challenges over the transaction as a practical matter.

In the mootness fee scenario, the parties also have the option to resolve the fee application privately without obtaining Court approval. [34] Twenty years ago, Chancellor Allen acknowledged the right of a corporation's directors to exercise business judgment to expend corporate funds (typically funds of the acquirer, who assumes the expense of defending the litigation after the transaction closes) to resolve an application for attorneys' fees when the litigation has become moot, with the caveat that notice must be provided to the stockholders to protect

[39] If defendants do not oppose a mootness fee application, then the Court presumably would not have the benefit of any opposing position when considering the application unless an objector appeared. But, in that case, the Court would have some indication of the reasonableness of the fee request.

[40] *1995 Del. Ch. LEXIS 46, 1995 WL 250374, at 4.

[41] That jurisprudence includes the Delaware Supreme Court's recent express confirmation that "the business judgment rule is invoked as the appropriate standard [32] of review for a post-closing damages action when a merger that is not subject to the entire fairness standard of review has been approved by a fully informed, uncoerced majority of the disinterested stockholders." Corwin v. KKR Fin. Hldgs. LLC, 125 A.3d 304, 305-06 (Del. 2015).

In this case, because the disputed transaction involved a stock-for-stock merger of widely held, publicly traded corporations, plaintiffs' claims presumably would not benefit from the enhanced scrutiny of Revlon and instead would need to overcome the business judgment presumption. Paramount Commc'ns, Inc. v. QVC Network, Inc., 637 A.2d 34, 46-47 (Del. 1994) (quoting *Paramount Communications Inc. v. Time Inc., 1989 Del. Ch. LEXIS 77, 1989 WL 79880, at *23 (Del. Ch. against "the risk of buy off" of plaintiffs' counsel.[43] As the Court recently stated, "notice is appropriate because it provides the information necessary for an interested person to object to the use of corporate funds, such as by 'challeng[ing] the fee payment as waste in a separate litigation,' if the circumstances warrant."[44] In other words, notice to stockholders is designed to guard against potential abuses in the private resolution of fee demands for mooted representative actions. With that protection in place, the Court has accommodated the use of the private resolution procedure on several recent occasions and reiterates here the propriety of proceeding in that fashion.[45]

Returning to the historically trodden but suboptimal path of seeking to resolve disclosure claims in deal litigation through a Court-approved settlement, practitioners should expect that the Court will continue to be increasingly vigilant in applying its independent judgment to its case-by-case assessment of the reasonableness of the "give" and "get" of such settlements in light of the concerns discussed above. To be more specific, practitioners should expect that disclosure settlements are likely to be met with continued disfavor in the future unless the supplemental disclosures address a plainly material misrepresentation or omission, and the subject matter of the proposed release is narrowly circumscribed to encompass nothing more than disclosure claims and fiduciary duty claims concerning the sale process, if the record shows that such claims have been investigated sufficiently.[46] In using the term "plainly material," I mean that it should not be a close call that the supplemental [36] information is material as that term is defined under Delaware law. Where the [*899] supplemental information is not plainly material, it may be appropriate for the Court to appoint an amicus curiae to assist the Court in its evaluation of the alleged benefits of the supplemental disclosures, given the challenges posed by the non-adversarial nature of the typical disclosure settlement hearing.[47]

Finally, some have expressed concern that enhanced judicial scrutiny of disclosure settlements could lead plaintiffs to sue fiduciaries of Delaware corporations in other jurisdictions in the hope of finding a forum more hospitable to signing off on settlements of no genuine value. It is within the power of a Delaware corporation to enact a forum selection [38] bylaw to address this concern.[48] In any event, it is the Court's opinion, based on its extensive experience in adjudicating cases of this nature, that the historical predisposition that has been shown towards approving disclosure settlements must evolve for the reasons explained above. We hope and trust that our sister courts will reach the same conclusion if confronted with the issue.

[46] In contrast to the settlement context, the Court does not need to weigh the "get" of the supplemental disclosures against the "give" of a release when determining whether to grant an award of fees in the mootness fee scenario discussed above. Accordingly, an award of fees in the mootness fee scenario may be appropriate for supplemental disclosures of less significance than would be necessary to sustain approval of a settlement. The amount of the fee in the mootness scenario, however, would be commensurate with the value of the benefit conferred. Thus, for example, a supplemental disclosure of nominal value would warrant only a nominal fee award.

With the foregoing considerations in mind, I consider next the "give" and the "get" of the proposed settlement in this case.

C. The Supplemental Disclosures Are not Material and Provided no Meaningful Benefit to Stockholders

HN3[] Under Delaware law, when directors solicit stockholder action, they must "disclose fully and fairly all material information within the board's control."[49] Delaware has adopted the standard of materiality used under the federal securities laws. Information is material "if there is a substantial likelihood that a reasonable shareholder would consider it important in deciding how to vote."[50] In other words, information is material if, from the perspective of a reasonable stockholder, there is a substantial likelihood that it "significantly [39] alter[s] the 'total mix' of information made available."[51]

Here, the joint Proxy that Trulia and Zillow stockholders received in advance of their respective stockholders' meetings to consider whether to approve the proposed [*900] transaction ran 224 pages in length, excluding annexes. It contained extensive discussion concerning, among other things, the background of the mergers, each board's reasons for recommending approval of the proposed transaction, prospective financial information concerning the companies that had been reviewed by their respective boards and financial advisors, and explanations of the opinions of each company's financial advisor. In the case of Trulia, the opinion of J.P. Morgan was summarized in ten single-spaced pages.

The Supplemental Disclosures plaintiffs obtained in this case solely concern the section of the Proxy summarizing J.P. Morgan's financial analysis, which the Trulia board cited as one of the factors it considered in deciding to recommend approval of the proposed merger.[52] Specifically, these disclosures provided additional details concerning: (1) certain synergy numbers in J.P. Morgan's value creation analysis; (2) selected [40] comparable transaction multiples; (3) selected public trading multiples; and (4) implied terminal EBITDA multiples for a relative discounted cash flow analysis.

Relevant to considering the materiality of information disclosed in this section of the Proxy, then-Vice Chancellor Strine observed in In re Pure Resources, Inc. Shareholders Litigation that there were "conflicting impulses" in Delaware case law about whether, when seeking stockholder action, directors must disclose "investment banker analyses in circumstances in which the bankers' views about value have been cited as justifying the recommendation of the board."[53] The Court held that, HN4[] under Delaware law, when the board relies on the advice of a financial advisor in making a decision that requires stockholder action, those stockholders are entitled to receive in the proxy statement "a fair summary of the substantive work performed by the investment bankers upon whose advice the recommendations of their board as to how to vote on a merger or tender rely."[54] This "fair summary" standard has been a guiding principle for this Court in considering proxy disclosures concerning the work of financial advisors for more than a decade.[55]

A fair summary, however, is a summary. By definition, it need not contain all information underlying the financial advisor's opinion or contained in its report to the board.[56] Indeed, this Court has held [*901] that the summary does not need to provide sufficient data to allow the stockholders to perform their own independent valuation.[57] The essence of a fair summary is not a cornucopia of financial data, but rather an accurate description of the advisor's methodology and key assumptions.[58] In my view, disclosures that provide extraneous details do not contribute to a fair summary and do not add value for stockholders.[59]

With the foregoing principles in mind, I consider next whether any of the four specific Supplemental Disclosures that plaintiffs obtained here were material or whether they provided any benefit to Trulia's stockholders at all.

1. Synergy Numbers in the Value Creation Analysis

The Supplemental Disclosures provided some additional details in the sections of J.P. Morgan's analysis entitled "Value Creation Analysis — Intrinsic Value Approach" and "Value Creation Analysis — Market-Based Approach." In the "Intrinsic Value Approach" analysis, J.P. Morgan compared the implied equity value derived [*902] from its discounted cash flow analysis of Trulia on a standalone basis to [45] Trulia stockholders' pro forma ownership of the implied equity value of the combined company. In the "Market- Based Approach," J.P. Morgan compared the public market equity value of Trulia on a standalone basis to Trulia stockholders' pro forma ownership of the implied equity value of the combined company.

As supplemented, the disclosure concerning the Intrinsic Value Approach reads in relevant part as follows, with the information that was added to the original disclosure in the Proxy appearing in bolded text:

> The pro forma combined company equity value was equal to: (1) the Trulia standalone discounted cash flow value of $2.9 billion, plus (2) the Zillow standalone discounted cash flow value of $6.2 billion, plus (3) $2.2 billion, representing the present value of (a) Trulia's management expected after-tax synergies of $2.4 billion, less (b) Trulia's management estimates of (i) the one-time costs to achieve such synergies of $65.0 million and (ii) transaction expenses of $85 million. The present value of after-tax synergies was based on an estimate of $175.0 million in synergies to be fully realized starting in 2016, extrapolated through 2029 based on assumptions provided by Trulia's [46] management.[60]

Plaintiffs argue that the disclosure of the $175 million synergies figure in the quote above was important because it is substantially different from the $100 million in synergies that J.P. Morgan used in the Market-Based Approach, which figure already was disclosed in the Proxy.[61] According to plaintiffs, "[h]ad [stockholders] initially known that the market-based approach analysis was skewed downward by using lower synergies numbers, their view as to the resulting implied value and reliability of [J.P. Morgan's] analysis may have changed appreciably."[62] There are three fundamental problems with this argument.

First, although plaintiffs question why J.P. Morgan used two different synergies figures in two different analyses, they provide no explanation as to why doing so would be inappropriate. To the contrary, it seems logical that an intrinsic value approach (which is based on a comparison derived from a discounted cash flow analysis) would use synergies based on long-term management projections, while a market-based approach [47] (which is based on a comparison to the public market equity value of Trulia) would use synergies based on what would be publicly announced to investors. Regardless, the Proxy accurately disclosed which synergies assumptions the financial advisor deemed appropriate to use in each analysis.[63]

[62] Id. at 23-24.

[63] Proxy at 130, 132.

Second, the $175 million synergies figure that plaintiffs consider so important was not new information. It already was disclosed in the Proxy, which contained the following table providing information about management's synergies expectations:[64]

> [*903] The following table presents summary estimated synergies that Trulia's management also prepared in respect of the combined company following the completion of the mergers for the calendar years ending 2014 through 2024 in connection with Trulia's evaluation of the mergers.

	Trulia Management Estimated Synergies (in millions, unaudited)
	2014E	2015E	2016E	2017E	2018E	2019E	2020E	2021E	2022E	2023E	2024E
Total Operating Synergies (1)	$—	$23	$175	$225	$285	$349	$416	$480	$535	$574	$594

> (1) "Total Operating Synergies" means the expected EBIT effect of revenue synergies plus the EBIT effect of cost savings/cost avoidance less one-time costs to achieve and retain such synergies. "EBIT" means earnings before interest and taxes. An assumed tax rate of 40% was applied to Total Operating Synergies to determine estimated after-tax synergies. Projected synergies (including costs to [48] achieve synergies) were prepared by Trulia's management through fiscal year 2016 after discussion with Zillow's management. The management of Trulia provided J.P. Morgan with assumptions relating to projected synergies for fiscal years 2017 through 2024 deemed appropriate by Trulia's management. The management of Trulia then directed J.P. Morgan to use these assumptions in extrapolating such estimated synergies for fiscal years extending beyond those for which the management of Trulia had provided projections. The management of Trulia then reviewed and approved such extrapolation of the synergies.[65]

Because the $175 million figure for 2016 synergies already appeared in this table, inserting it into a methodological paragraph a few pages later is of no benefit to stockholders. In my view, the supplemental disclosure may have added confusion more than anything else, because it lacks explanatory context and does not clearly describe the nature of management's estimate of synergies that was disclosed in the original Proxy.[66]

Third, plaintiffs exaggerate the significance of juxtaposing the synergy figures used in the Intrinsic Value Approach with those used in the Market-Based Approach. In contrast to the Intrinsic Value Approach, the Market-Based Approach was placed in the end of the summary of the financial advisor's analysis in the "Other Information" section, was termed an "illustrative value creation analysis," and "was presented merely for informational purposes."[67] As plaintiffs concede, a "fair reading" of the Proxy indicates that the Market-Based Approach analysis was less important than the Intrinsic Value Approach analysis.[68] Thus, the notion that the disclosure of the $175 million synergies figure used in one analysis (which already was disclosed [50] in the Proxy) was significant because it was higher than the $100 million figure used in a second, different analysis is based on a false equivalence of the relative importance of the two analyses.

In sum, the disclosures in the original Proxy already provided a fair summary of [*904] J.P. Morgan's methodology and assumptions in its two "Value Creation" analyses. Inserting additional minutiae underlying some of the assumptions could not reasonably have been expected to significantly alter the total mix of information and thus was not material. Indeed, in my view, the supplemental information was not even helpful to stockholders.

[64] Plaintiffs' counsel was not aware that this information already was disclosed in the Proxy until the Court pointed it out at the settlement hearing. See Hr'g Tr. 12-15, [49] Sept. 16, 2015. If the proposed settlement had been opposed, this fact presumably would have been brought to the attention of plaintiffs and the Court.

[65] Proxy at 123.

[66] For instance, the Supplemental Disclosures refer to the expected synergies after 2016 as extrapolations through 2029 based on management's assumptions. But the table in the Proxy, produced above, notes that management provided assumptions regarding synergies through 2024. Plaintiffs do not address this ambiguity.

[67] Proxy at 131-32.

[68] Hr'g Tr. 15, Sept. 16, 2015.

2. Individual Company Multiples in the Selected Transaction Analysis

The Proxy disclosed that J.P. Morgan used publicly available information to analyze certain selected precedent transactions involving companies engaged in businesses that J.P. Morgan considered analogous to Trulia's businesses.[69] The Proxy listed the date, the target, and the acquirer for each of 32 transactions that were considered. It also disclosed the low and high forward EBITDA multiples for the group of transactions. Using a narrower range of multiples falling between [51] the low and the high for the group, J.P. Morgan created an estimated range of equity values per share for Trulia common stock. This methodology was summarized in the Proxy as follows:

> J.P. Morgan reviewed the implied firm value for each of the transactions as a multiple of the target company's two-year forward EBITDA immediately preceding the announcement of the transaction. The analysis indicated a range of EBITDA multiples of 8.0x to 69.1x. Based on the result of this analysis and other factors that J.P. Morgan considered appropriate, J.P. Morgan applied an EBITDA multiple range of 10.0x to 23.0x to Trulia's fiscal 2015 Adjusted EBITDA and arrived at an estimated range of equity values per share for Trulia common stock of $17.25-$38.50.[70]

Plaintiffs' grievance is that the Proxy did not provide the relevant multiples for each of the 32 individual transactions. The individual multiples were added in the Supplemental Disclosures for those transactions for which the information was publicly available.[71] The addition of this information made evident that multiples were not publicly available for 15 of the 32 transactions. Plaintiffs argue that, without the Supplemental Disclosures, stockholders [52] would not have realized that J.P. Morgan's analysis did not consider multiples for half of the precedent transactions it listed and was therefore less robust than the Proxy portrayed it to be.

The addition of the individual multiples and the revelation that some were not publicly available could not reasonably have been expected to significantly alter the total mix of information. No argument is made, for example, that having 16 similar transactions was not sufficient to perform the analysis that J.P. Morgan conducted. The discussion in the Proxy, moreover, including the portion quoted above, fairly summarized the methodology and assumptions J.P. Morgan used in conducting that analysis to extrapolate a range of per share values for Trulia stock. A fair summary does not require disclosure of sufficient data to allow stockholders to perform their own valuation.[72]

This conclusion is supported by the Court's decision in In re MONY Group [*905] Shareholder Litigation.[73] There, the Court rejected a similar argument that the disclosure of transaction multiples was important [53] because it showed that 25% of the multiples in a set of 71 transactions were unavailable. After noting that the plaintiffs had not argued that the financial advisor did not have sufficient data to perform its analysis, the Court held that the additional information was "immaterial, as a matter of law," and a "triviality [that] could not reasonably be expected to affect the total mix of information."[74] In my view, the addition of similar trivialities was not helpful to Trulia's stockholders here.

3. Individual Company Multiples in the Selected Public Trading Analysis

The Proxy disclosed the names of sixteen publicly traded companies that J.P. Morgan used to construct ranges of forward EBITDA and revenue multiples for Trulia and Zillow.[75] The Proxy provided these multiples for Trulia and Zillow based on their last unaffected trading day before the announcement of the merger, and provided the median multiples for the three groups into which J.P. Morgan categorized the sixteen comparable companies: "Real Estate," "Software as a Service," and "Other." The Proxy did not include individual multiples for the peer companies.

The Supplemental Disclosures added the revenue and EBITDA multiples for [54] each of the sixteen companies. Citing In re Celera Corporation Shareholder Litigation,[76] plaintiffs argue, in essence, that individual company multiples are material per se. That is not a fair reading of the case. In Celera, the Court commented that "as a matter of best practices, a fair summary of a comparable companies or transactions analysis probably should disclose the market multiples derived for the comparable companies or transactions."[77] Although the decision reluctantly concluded that a multiples disclosure was compensable, it found it "questionable whether [the multiples] altered the 'total mix' of available information" because that information "already was publicly available."[78] The individual company multiples in the Supplemental Disclosures here also were already publicly available.[79]

[*906] More importantly, the original disclosures in Celera simply listed the comparable companies with no summary multiple data at all.[80] Although the supplemental disclosures in that case added summary data for each of three categories of companies, they did not provide any individual company multiples.[81] In [56] other words, the disclosures in Trulia's Proxy, which provided the median multiples for three different categories of companies that J.P. Morgan considered in its judgment to be similar to Trulia, essentially started at the point where Celera ended.[82]

[79] Meinhart, plaintiffs' expert, points out that not all stockholders can access all of this information because some of the forward-looking data are available only from proprietary fee-based services. It may be correct that not all of these data would be freely or easily obtainable. A fair summary, however, does not require disclosure of sufficient [55] data to allow stockholders to perform their own valuation. And it certainly does not require disclosure of underlying data that stockholders could obtain on their own, even if doing so would involve some cost or investment of time. Meinhart also opines that the multiples show a high level of dispersion, but he fails to explain how that information undermines J.P. Morgan's analysis or is otherwise informative considering that J.P. Morgan explicitly stated that its analysis was not strictly quantitative in nature. See Proxy at 126-27 ("J.P. Morgan did not rely solely on the quantitative results . . . . Based on various judgments concerning relative comparability of each of the selected companies to Trulia, as well its experience with the industry . . . J.P. Morgan selected a range of revenue and Adjusted EBITDA multiples that it believed reflected an appropriate range of multiples applicable to Trulia.").

[81] See id. The supplemental disclosure in Celera added more categories of summary data, namely the high, low, median, and mean multiples. This distinction is immaterial. The point of a fair summary is to summarize the methodologies and assumptions the financial advisor used in its analysis. Here, the Proxy fairly summarizes J.P. Morgan's use of multiples in its trading multiples analysis.

[82] Plaintiffs also rely on a transcript ruling in Turberg v. ArcSight, C.A. No. 5821-VCL (Del. Ch. Sept. 20, 2011) (TRANSCRIPT). As in Celera, the initial description in ArcSight did not have any multiples at all. The plaintiff obtained a full description of the analysis comparable to the depiction that would appear in a board book. The Court praised that disclosure in the context of a [57] Plaintiffs next argue that the individual multiples are important here because they allow stockholders to compare the selected companies' EBITDA growth rates and EBITDA multiples to Trulia's. This argument is unpersuasive for two reasons. First, basic valuation principles already would suggest to stockholders that higher growth rates should correspond to higher multiples.[83] Second, the Supplemental Disclosures do not contain EBITDA growth rates, so the figures necessary to make that comparison are not present in any event. Thus, plaintiffs have not persuaded me that individual company multiples are material or were even helpful in this case.

4. Implied Terminal EBITDA Multiples in the DCF Analysis

J.P. Morgan performed a relative discounted cash flow analysis to determine the per-share equity values of Trulia and Zillow, using [58] expected cash flows from 2014 through 2028 based on management's projections for each company and the perpetuity growth method to calculate the companies' respective terminal values.[84] The Proxy explained this methodology and provided the assumptions J.P. Morgan used in its analysis. Specifically, the Proxy disclosed management's projections of unlevered free cash flows, the ranges of discount rates (11.0% to 15.0%) and perpetuity growth rates (2.5% to 3.5%) that were used, the terminal period projected cash flows, and other details.[85] In my view, these disclosures already provided a more-than-fair summary of the relative discounted cash flow analysis that J.P. Morgan performed.

The Supplemental Disclosures added to this summary the EBITDA exit multiple ranges for Trulia and Zillow that were [*907] implied by the range of terminal values calculated based on J.P. Morgan's chosen inputs. Plaintiffs argue that, although J.P. Morgan used the perpetuity growth method and only derived the implied EBITDA exit multiples to check the strength of its methodology, the implied multiples were important to stockholders, who would be concerned that the exit multiples for Trulia and Zillow are nearly [59] identical despite differences in their current EBITDA growth rates, and that the exit multiples are much lower than the current EBITDA multiples of Trulia and its peers.[86]

The logic of plaintiffs' argument is flawed in two respects. First, because the same range of perpetuity growth rates (2.5% to 3.5%) was used to calculate the terminal values for both companies, it should not have been surprising that the implied exit EBITDA multiples would be similar for both companies: 4.0x to 6.7x for Trulia and 4.1x to 6.8x for Zillow. Second, although Trulia's then-current EBITDA growth rate was high, the exit EBITDA multiples are based on growth assumptions as of 2028, not 2015, and the 2015 growth rate cannot realistically continue through the projection period.[87] Basic principles of valuation suggest that it would be more reasonable to forecast that the growth of both Trulia and Zillow eventually would fall to a market-based rate, making plaintiffs' comparison to the current growth rates of Trulia and its peers inappropriate.[88] Thus, not only is the supplemental disclosure immaterial, it also serves none of the purposes that plaintiffs allege.

[87] Id. at 26 (noting [60] Trulia's expected EBITDA growth rate of 148% and the "decided correlation between higher growth rates and higher valuation multiples"). Were Trulia able to retain this impressive EBITDA growth rate for the entire forecast period, its 2028 EBITDA would amount to nearly $10 trillion, more than half the current GDP of the United States.

[88] See Rosenbaum & Pearl, supra note 83, at 132 ("The perpetuity growth rate is typically chosen on the basis of the company's expected long-term industry growth rate, which generally tends to be within a range of 2% to 4% (i.e., nominal GDP growth).").

* * * *

For the reasons explained above, none of plaintiffs' Supplemental Disclosures were material or even helpful to Trulia's stockholders. The Proxy already provided a more-than-fair summary of J.P. Morgan's financial analysis in each of the four respects criticized by the plaintiffs. As such, from the perspective of Trulia's stockholders, the "get" in the form of the Supplemental Disclosures does not provide adequate consideration to warrant the "give" of providing a release of claims to defendants and their affiliates, in the form submitted[89] or otherwise. Accordingly, I find that the proposed settlement is not fair or reasonable to Trulia's stockholders. [61] [90]

For the foregoing reasons, approval of the proposed settlement is DENIED.

[89] As noted above, after the settlement hearing, the parties commendably agreed to narrow the release to exclude "Unknown Claims," foreign claims, and claims arising under state or federal antitrust law. Nevertheless, even if the Supplemental Disclosures had provided sufficient consideration to warrant the "give" of a release of claims, which they did not, the scope of the revised release still would have been too broad to support a fair and reasonable settlement because the revised release was not limited to disclosure claims and fiduciary duty claims concerning the decision to enter the merger.

[90] Because I reject the proposed settlement, I do not address the issue of class certification, although stockholder classes in cases such as this are typically certified.

I. INTRODUCTION

Resco Products, Inc. ("plaintiff"), individually and as a class representative, brought a claim against Bosai Minerals Group ("Bosai") and CMP Tianjin Co. ("Tianjin") [2] (collectively, "defendants") alleging a conspiracy to fix the price and limit the supply of refractory grade bauxite in violation of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1. Pending before the court is defendants' motion for summary judgment, pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 56. (ECF No. 263). Upon consideration of the parties' submissions and the applicable law, the court concludes defendants are entitled to judgment as a matter of law. Their motion will be granted and the action dismissed.

II. Factual Background and Procedural History[1]

Plaintiff's principal place of business is in Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania. (ECF No. 92 ¶ 7). Plaintiff manufactures refractories—i.e., "heat resistant materials that provide the linings for high temperature furnaces, reactors, and other processing units." (Id. ¶ 28.) Bauxite is one of the raw materials plaintiff uses in the manufacture of refractories. Since at least the mid-1980s, a substantial percentage of the "refractory grade" [3] bauxite ("RGB") consumed throughout the world has been exported from China. (Id. ¶¶ 30, 32-33.) Defendants are two of China's largest RGB exporters. (Id. ¶¶ 8-9.)

Sometime before 1990, the Chinese government implemented industry-specific import-export "chambers of commerce," in place of government "ministries," to administer its export control laws and regulations. (ECF No. 284, Part I ¶ 14.) The "routine administration" of these "social organizations with function of business coordination and partial administration in a line of trade" was to "be under the direct charge of [the Chinese Ministry of Commerce]" ("MOFCOM").[2] (ECF No. 268-23 at 5).[3]

In its 1994 "Articles of Association," the China Chamber of Commerce of Metals, Minerals & Chemicals Importers & Exporters ("CCCMC") described itself as > a body corporate, consist[ing] of various kinds of enterprises incorporated within [*413] the territory of [China] in accordance with the laws, conducting import and export trading business of metal, mineral and chemical commodities, as well as providing with coordination among the industry and other services to the corporations, as approved by the [MOFCOM]. . . .

(ECF No. 268-3 at 1.) The announced purpose of the CCCMC is "to coordinate the import and export trading activities of [the] metal, mineral and chemical industry; to secure the normal order of import and export trading; to protect the legal rights and interests of the state; . . . and to serve to expand the import and export trading of metal, mineral[,] and chemical commodities." (Id.) In furtherance of its purpose, the CCCMC was given the power to establish, subject to MOFCOM approval, a [5] "Branch" for all CCCMC members engaged in the trade of each given commodity. (Id. at 4.) The CCCMC exercised this power to create the Bauxite Branch, of which both defendants are members. (ECF No. 284, Part II ¶ 5.)

In 1996, MOFCOM implemented "Export Quota Bidding with Compensation." (ECF No. 268-2 at 2.) The "Detailed Rules" of this implementation define a "Bidding Committee for Quotas of Export Commodities" (the "Bidding

[1] The factual background is derived from the undisputed evidence of record and the disputed evidence viewed in the light most favorable to the nonmoving party. See Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc., 477 U.S. 242, 255, 106 S. Ct. 2505, 91 L. Ed. 2d 202 (1986) ("The evidence of the nonmovant is to be believed, and all justifiable inferences are to be drawn in his favor.").

[2] Prior to being renamed, the Ministry of Foreign Trade and Economic Cooperation ("MOFTEC") was known as the Ministry of Foreign Economic Relations and Trade ("MOFERT"). (ECF No. 268-23 at 2.) Later, the MOFTEC became known as the MOFCOM (ECF No. 284, Part I ¶ 19), short for "Ministry of Commerce." (ECF No. 268-22 ¶ 3.) For simplicity, all three of these organizations will be referred to as "MOFCOM" regardless of which was active at the relevant time.

Grammatical irregularities appear throughout as apparent artifacts of the translation process.

Committee"), which was to "undertake the responsibilities of administering the bidding work for export quota with compensation." (Id. at 2.) MOFCOM required the Bidding Committee to set up a "Bidding Office" to interact with the chambers of commerce and handle the "routine affairs of compensated quota bidding." (Id. at 3.) The Bidding Committee was to "be accountable to [MOFCOM]," and the Bidding Office was set up to "be accountable to the Bidding Committee." (Id.) Though multiple "modes" of quota bidding are defined within these rules, the practice generally consists of an annual "quota," which is the total amount of a given commodity that can be exported within the subject year; individual exporters "bid" for the right to export some portion of the total quota. See (ECF No. 268-26.) The [6] Bidding Committee was authorized to set the amount of a commodity's annual quota up for bid on any occasion and the minimum and maximum amounts for bids. (Id. at 7.)

Under the quota bidding system, in addition to meeting other requirements, an aspiring exporter was required to pay an export license fee for each ton of a commodity it wished to export. (ECF No. 284, Part I ¶ 19.) For bauxite prior to 2005, under what was referred to as "paid use," the license fee was set at 230 Chinese yuan ("CNY") per ton. Id.; (ECF No. 268-52 at 2; ECF No. 268-53 at 1; ECF No. 268-54 at 2.) Beginning in 2005, bauxite exporters had to bid the amount they would pay for the license fee. (ECF No. 284, Part I ¶ 19.) According to public bidding announcements from 2005 through 2012, a bid had to be in an amount greater than the minimum set by the Bidding Committee in order to be considered valid. (ECF Nos. 268-55 through 268-67.)

Aside from the power of the Bidding Committee over the quota bidding processes, the Branches performed several functions with respect to import and export policy. The scope of these functions and the Bauxite Branch's autonomy in performing them, however, are less than clear based upon the [7] evidence produced in this case. Among other "authorities" granted to the Branches by CCCMC in 1994, they were tasked with "formulating or amending detailed coordination regulations in respect to import and export commodities" and "formulating or adjusting the price proposals of import and export commodities." (ECF No. 268-3 at 4.) In its "Measures for Coordination Management of [*414] Bauxite Branch" ("Coordination Measures"), adopted no later than 1999 (ECF No. 284, Part I ¶ 15), the Bauxite Branch was instructed to engage in "coordination work" that would be "favorable for protecting the fair competition" and "preventing and deterring the undesirable competition that impairs the interests of the state and the industry" and "favorable for self-regulation, self-discipline, self-protection, and self-development of the enterprise group." (ECF No. 268-4 at 2.) The "content" of this coordination work was defined to include "[e]xport price," among various other topics. (Id.)

These terms appear throughout later CCCMC and Bauxite Branch governing documents. In its 2001 Charter, the CCCMC provided that one of its purposes was to "coordinate and instruct the import and export trading activities. . . ." (ECF [8] No. 268-5 at 2.) According to the Bauxite Branch's 2003 Articles of Association, it is a "self-regulation trade organization" with a tenet of "conduct[ing] the coordination and guidance on the import and export trade of the bauxite." (ECF No. 275-4 at 1.) Specific actions to be taken by the CCCMC and the Bauxite Branch in furtherance of coordination, self-regulation, and self-discipline are not spelled out. Based on the 2001 "Measures for Quota Bidding of Export Commodities," however, MOFCOM "is responsible for deciding and announcing the types and the total quota quantity of commodities subject to bidding." (ECF No. 268-30 at 2.)

Despite the formal allocation to MOFCOM of power over export quotas, Liu Jian Hong ("Hong"), Bosai's vice president, explained in an October 27, 2005 email that "CCCMC will have meeting on Nov 12th to discuss/decide the quantity/price of bauxite quota in 2006." (ECF No. 275.) The Bauxite Branch was to have annual "General Meetings" according to its 2003 Articles of Association. (ECF No. 275-4 at 7-8.) Notices sent out in advance of the 2004, 2005, and 2010 meetings indicate these meetings were held at hotels over two to three days. (ECF No. 268-9; ECF No. 268-11; ECF No. 268-16.) Announced topics of these meetings included "advanced [9] research of market trends" (ECF No. 268-9 at 1), "[d]iscussing the total amount of bidding quota" (ECF No. 268-16 at 1), and a "vote" on the "coefficients" or "parameters" for quota bidding in the following year (ECF No. 268-9 at 1; ECF No. 268-11 at 1; ECF No. 268-16 at 1.) The minutes of the November 12, 2005 Bauxite Branch meeting indicate that six "opinions" were voted on, but only one "bec[a]me [an] industry resolution. . . ." (ECF No. 275-11 at 1.) "After the meeting, thirty-one members proposed to set the base price for 2006 bauxite export quota bidding at 100." (Id.)

The minutes from the other yearly meetings held between 2004 and 2010 reflect that "proposals" related to quota amount and price for the export quota were discussed and voted on. (ECF Nos. 268-10, 268-12, 268-13, 268-15, 268-17.) Most of these proposals, however, failed to pass after a vote.[4] Of the four proposals [*415] related to either quota amount or price for the export quota that passed during this time period, two were at odds with actions ultimately taken by the Bidding Committee. In 2008, despite the Bauxite Branch's successful resolution that the export quota be set at "1 million or more" (ECF No. 268-13 at 2), the Bidding Committee [10] announced only 940,000 tons available for bid. (ECF Nos. 268-60, 268-61.) The following year, although the Bauxite Branch had passed a resolution to "maintain" the quota at 940,000 metric tons, the Bidding Committee made available only 930,000 tons.[5] The only successful resolution of the Bauxite Branch related to the bauxite quota was one passed during the 2009 meeting specifying that the export quota "remain at 930,000 tons."[6] (ECF No. 268-17 at 1.)

In his declaration for the CCCMC, Liu Jian ("Jian"), a CCCMC employee [12] since 1995 and deputy director of the Bidding Office since 2006, provided the context for the Bauxite Branch resolutions and the often divergent actions of the Bidding Committee. (ECF No. 268-22.) Jian explained that "[a]t Bauxite Branch meetings, Bidding Office staff asked the Bauxite Branch members for their opinions about specific proposed quota amounts, quota bidding minimum prices, and other matters relating to quota bidding." (Id. at 2.)

> "Passage" of a Bauxite Branch resolution indicated that a certain percentage of exporting industry members were in favor of a proposal, but the authority and power to adopt quotas, and to establish the quota amount, minimum bidding price, and other terms, was always with MOFCOM, not the members or the CCCMC. MOFCOM could, and often did, set the quotas and minimum bidding prices at levels different than those favored by members.

Aside from the formal discussions at the Bauxite Branch annual meetings, there was also ample opportunity for informal private discussions between attendees. Haijian Liu ("Liu"), Tianjin's general manager in 1998 and its current chief executive officer, testified that meals were provided for meeting attendees in the conference room, [13] instead of requiring them to separate at meal times. (ECF No. 275-15 at 40-41.) Liu testified that in private conversations, attendees sometimes complained about "low" export prices for RGB. (Id. at 86-87.) Hong similarly testified that companies sometimes complained about contract prices reflected in customs data because they were "not reasonable." (ECF No. 275-17 at 96-97.) Private conversations also took place between Bosai and Tianjin executives outside Bauxite Branch meetings on multiple occasions since 2002, both [*416] in person and over the telephone. (ECF No. 284, Part II ¶ 21.)

According to plaintiff, the "price of RGB in the United States doubled during 2003 and 2004 and increased an additional 70 [percent] between 2004 and 2007." (Id. ¶ 4.) Bosai explains the increase by noting that its "costs for RGB more than quadrupled between 2003 and 2008" and its "transportation, loading, energy, and storage costs

[4] In 2004, proposals to "set the bauxite export quota at one million tons" and "to set 180 as the minimum price for 2005 export quota" "failed to pass in the enlarged council meeting." (ECF No. 268-10 at 2.) Proposals "to set the bauxite export quota at 1 million metric tons for 2007," "to maintain the level of bauxite export quota at 970,000," and "to set the minimum price for 2007 bauxite export quota at 130/ton," "100/ton," "60/ton," and "80/ton" all "failed to pass in the enlarged council meeting" in 2006. (ECF No. 268-12 at 2-3.) During the 2007 meeting, proposals to set the 2008 bauxite export quota at 950,000, 1 million, and 1.1 million metric tons similarly failed. (ECF No. 268-13 at 1-2.) A 2009 proposal that the 2010 bauxite export [11] quota "be cut down by 30%-50% of total volumes" failed to pass as well. (ECF No. 268-17 at 1.)

[5] Only one of the Bidding Committee's announcements concerning the 2009 bauxite export quota was produced here. The conclusion that the 2009 quota was 930,000 primarily is based on a Bauxite Branch proposal at the 2009 meeting that the quota "remain at 930,000 tons." (ECF No. 268-17, at 1). It is supported by the Bidding Committee's first announcement on bauxite export quotas for 2009, which specifies 465,000 tons available. (ECF No. 268-62, at 2). Announcements in other years show that 50 percent of the total annual quota was released with each announcement. (ECF Nos. 268-55, 268-56, 268-57, 268-58, 268-60, 268-61, 268-63, 268-64, 268-65, 268-66.)

[6] According to the minutes, the only other relevant resolution that "passed and came into resolution" was one to "maintain the minimum price for the bauxite export quota at 130/ton," which passed during the 2008 Bauxite Branch meeting. (ECF No. 268-15 at 2.) No evidence was produced to indicate what the Bidding Committee set the minimum price for the quota following this resolution.

also increased." (ECF No. 284, Part II ¶ 4.) In particular, the Chinese government reinstituted a 13 percent value-added tax ("VAT") on bauxite exports in 2003 and implemented a 15 percent duty on bauxite in 2008. (Id.) China also took certain actions for pollution control reasons, including [14] eliminating older-technology bauxite processing facilities and placing limitations on the transportation of commodities. (Id.) During this period, domestic demand for bauxite "sharply increased." (Id.) With all these variables considered, Bosai noted that "[o]ver the same period, Bosai's RGB export price increases closely tracked the levels of the increases in prices Bosai paid for RGB." (Id.)

Plaintiff filed a complaint on February 2, 2006, asserting that defendants[7] violated the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1, by conspiring to "limit competition, control supply, and increase prices for [RGB] products." (ECF No. 1 ¶ 2). Plaintiff brings this action under the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. §§ 15 and 26, seeking treble damages and injunctive relief on its own and on behalf of a putative class. (ECF No. 92, ¶¶ 3, 17-18.)

On October 7, 2009, defendants filed a joint motion to dismiss for lack of subject-matter and personal jurisdiction.[8] (ECF No. 98.) The court denied this motion without prejudice on June 4, 2010, and the case was stayed pending the release of a final report in a then-pending World Trade Organization proceeding with potential implications on the applicability of the "act of state" and "sovereign compulsion" doctrines to the instant matter. (ECF No. 146 at 2 (citing China-Measures Related to the Exportation of Raw Materials, WTO Doc. WT/DS394/7 (Nov. 9, 2009).) The stay was lifted on July 26, 2011.

Defendants again filed a joint motion to dismiss on August 16, 2011. (ECF No. 174.) After an unsuccessful attempt [16] at mediation (ECF Nos. 186, 191), the court denied this motion on January 9, 2012. (ECF No. 194.) Plaintiff was required to file a more definite statement with respect to paragraph 61 of its first amended complaint to specify "what effects of the cartel are separate and distinguishable from any government mandated ex parte restriction." (Id. at 2-3.) After plaintiff filed the more definite statement (ECF No. 193), defendants filed their answers on February 23, 2012. (ECF Nos. 197, 198.)

Discovery related to liability closed on February 27, 2015. (ECF No. 249.) Defendants filed a motion for summary judgment [*417] on May 29, 2015 (ECF No. 263), followed by a supporting brief, a concise statement of material facts, and exhibits filed under seal on June 1, 2015. (ECF Nos. 266, 267, 268.)[9] Plaintiff filed its responsive brief, concise statement of material facts, and supporting exhibits under seal on July 1, 2015. (ECF Nos. 275, 276, 277.)[10] On July 13, 2015, defendants filed their reply under seal. (ECF No. 281.)[11] The parties filed a combined concise statement of material facts under seal on July 27, 2015. (ECF No. 286.)[12] Defendant's motion for summary judgment is now fully briefed and ripe for disposition. [17]

---

[7] In plaintiff's original complaint, it named the following as defendants: Nanchuan Minerals Group Co. Ltd.; Jersey Mineral Processing Co. Ltd.; CMP Ltd., Minelco Tianjin Minerals Co. Ltd.; Minelco, Inc., USA; and LKAB. (ECF No. 1.) Due to ineffective service of process, LKAB, Minelco Tianjin Minerals Co. Ltd., and Minelco, Inc., USA were dismissed by stipulation (ECF Nos. 16, 43), and Nanchuan Minerals Group Co. Ltd. [15] and Jersey Mineral Processing Co. Ltd. were terminated. Plaintiff filed its first amended complaint on July 17, 2009, naming only Bosai and Tianjin as defendants. (ECF No. 92.) Bosai was previously known as Nanchuan Minerals Group Co. Ltd. and Tianjin was previously known as Jersey Mineral Processing Co. Ltd. (ECF No. 92, ¶¶ 8-9.)

[8] Tianjin filed a separate motion to dismiss for lack of personal jurisdiction that same day (ECF No. 99), but withdrew it on May 12, 2010. (ECF No. 142.)

[9] On May 29, 2015, defendants filed redacted copies of their supporting brief and concise statement of material facts along with the motion for summary judgment. (ECF Nos. 264, 265.)

[10] On June 29, 2015, redacted copies of plaintiff's brief in response to summary judgment and concise statement of material facts were filed. (ECF No. 272, 273.)

[11] Defendants filed a redacted copy of their reply that same day. (ECF No. 280.)

[12] A redacted copy of this document was filed. (ECF No. 284.)

III. STANDARD OF REVIEW

Summary judgment is appropriate if the record shows there is no genuine dispute with respect to any material fact and the movant is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. FED. R. CIV. P. 56(a). The mere existence of a factual dispute, however, will not necessarily defeat a motion for summary judgment. Only a dispute over a material fact—i.e., a fact that would affect the outcome of the suit under the governing substantive law—will preclude the entry of summary judgment. Liberty Lobby, 477 U.S. at 248. Even then, the dispute over the material fact must be genuine, such that a reasonable jury could resolve it in the nonmoving party's favor. Id. at 248-49.

In deciding a summary judgment motion, a court must view the facts in the light most favorable to the nonmoving [18] party and draw all reasonable inferences, and resolve all doubts, in favor of the nonmoving party. Id. at 255; Wishkin v. Potter, 476 F.3d 180, 184 (3d Cir. 2007); Doe v. Cnty. of Centre, 242 F.3d 437, 446 (3d Cir. 2001); Woodside v. Sch. Dist. of Phila. Bd. of Educ., 248 F.3d 129, 130 (3d Cir. 2001); Heller v. Shaw Indus., Inc., 167 F.3d 146, 151 (3d Cir. 1999). A court must not engage in credibility determinations at the summary judgment stage. Simpson v. Kay Jewelers, Div. of Sterling, Inc., 142 F.3d 639, 643 n.3 (3d Cir. 1998).

One of the principal purposes of summary judgment is to isolate and dispose of factually unsupported claims or defenses. Celotex Corp. v. Catrett, 477 U.S. 317, 323-24, 106 S. Ct. 2548, 91 L. Ed. 2d 265 (1986). The summary judgment inquiry asks whether there is a need for trial—"whether, in other words, there are any genuine factual issues that properly can be resolved only by a finder of fact because they may reasonably be resolved in favor of either party." Liberty Lobby, 477 U.S. at 250. In ruling on a motion for summary judgment, the court's function is not to weigh the evidence or determine the truth of the matter, but to determine whether the evidence of record is such that a reasonable jury could return a verdict for the nonmoving party. Reeves v. Sanderson Plumbing Prods., Inc., 530 U.S. 133, 150-51, 120 S. Ct. 2097, 147 L. Ed. 2d 105 (2000) (citing decisions); Liberty Lobby, 477 U.S. at 248-49.

The burden of showing that no genuine issue of material fact exists rests [*418] initially on the party moving for summary judgment. Celotex, 477 U.S. at 323; Aman v. Cort Furniture Rental Corp., 85 F.3d 1074, 1080 (3d Cir. 1996). The moving party may satisfy its burden either by producing evidence showing the absence of a genuine issue of material fact or by demonstrating that there is an absence of evidence to support the nonmoving party's case. [19] Marten v. Godwin, 499 F.3d 290, 295 (3d Cir. 2007) (citing Celotex, 477 U.S. at 325). A defendant who moves for summary judgment is not required to refute every essential element of the plaintiff's claim; rather, the defendant must only point out the absence or insufficiency of plaintiff's evidence offered in support of one or more those elements. Celotex, 477 U.S. at 322-23. Once the movant meets that burden, the burden shifts to the nonmoving party to "set forth specific facts showing that there is a genuine issue for trial" and to present sufficient evidence demonstrating there is indeed a genuine and material factual dispute for a jury to decide. FED. R. CIV. P. 56(e); see Liberty Lobby, 477 U.S. at 247-48; Celotex, 477 U.S. at 323-25. If the evidence the nonmovant produces is "merely colorable, or is not significantly probative," the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. Liberty Lobby, 477 U.S. at 249.

The nonmoving party must "do more than simply show that there is some metaphysical doubt as to the material facts." Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 586, 106 S. Ct. 1348, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538 (1986). To survive summary judgment, the nonmoving party must "make a showing sufficient to establish the existence of [every] element essential to that party's case, and on which that party will bear the burden of proof at trial." Celotex, 477 U.S. at 322. Furthermore, "[w]hen opposing summary judgment, the [nonmovant] may not rest upon mere allegations, but rather must 'identify those facts [20] of record which would contradict the facts identified by the movant.'" Corliss v. Varner, 247 F. App'x 353, 354 (3d Cir. 2007) (quoting Port Auth. of N.Y. & N.J. v. Affiliated FM Ins. Co., 311 F.3d 226, 233 (3d Cir. 2002)).

IV. DISCUSSION

A. Section 1 of the Sherman Act

Section 1 of the Sherman Act provides that "[e]very contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce" is unlawful. 15 U.S.C. § 1. The United States Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit has explained that "this statutory language imposes two essential requirements on an antitrust plaintiff." In re Ins. Brokerage Antitrust Litig., 618 F.3d 300, 315 (3d Cir. 2010). First, the plaintiff must show that defendants were parties to "'an agreement,' because '[§] 1 liability is predicated upon some form of concerted action.' Unilateral activity by a defendant, no matter the motivation, cannot give rise to a [§] 1 violation." InterVest, Inc. v. Bloomberg, L.P., 340 F.3d 144, 159 (3d Cir. 2003) (quoting Rossi v. Standard Roofing, Inc., 156 F.3d 452, 465 (3d Cir. 1998)). Second, the plaintiff must show that the agreement in question "imposed an unreasonable restraint on trade." In re Ins. Brokerage, 618 F.3d at 315. While purported restraints are generally analyzed under a "rule of reason" standard, id., "[h]orizontal price fixing and output limitation are ordinarily condemned as a matter of law under an 'illegal per se' approach because the probability that these practices are anticompetitive is so high," Nat'l Collegiate Athletic Ass'n v. Bd. of Regents of Univ. of Okla., 468 U.S. 85, 100, 104 S. Ct. 2948, 82 L. Ed. 2d 70 (1984).

[*419] Here, plaintiff's § 1 claim is based on its assertion that "[d]efendants and their co-conspirators colluded to fix export [21] prices and quotas for bauxite from 2003 to 2009." (ECF No. 272 at 8.) Because these alleged "'practice[s] appear . . . to be one[s] that would always or almost always tend to restrict competition and decrease output,'" an agreement to engage in them would be per se illegal. In re Ins. Brokerage, 618 F.3d at 316 (quoting Nat'l Collegiate Athletic Ass'n, 468 U.S. at 100). Defendants do not argue against this conclusion. Instead, they assert summary judgment is proper because no reasonable jury could find that they entered into such an agreement.

B. Proof of a Conspiracy in Restraint of Trade

In a per se case, "'the plaintiff need only prove that the defendants conspired among each other and that this conspiracy was the proximate cause of the plaintiff's injury.'" In re Chocolate Confectionary Antitrust Litig., 801 F.3d 383, 395 (3d Cir. 2015) (quoting InterVest, Inc., 340 F.3d at 159). Concerted action is the "very essence" of such a claim, and may be established with evidence of "'unity of purpose or a common design and understanding or a meeting of minds in an unlawful arrangement.'" Id. at 395 - 96 (quoting Alvord-Polk, Inc. v. F. Schumacher & Co., 37 F.3d 996, 999 (3d Cir. 1994)). The required evidence may be either direct or circumstantial. Id. at 396. However, when a plaintiff relies upon circumstantial evidence that necessarily requires the court to draw inferences, antitrust law sets permissible limits upon such inferences. Id. (citing Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 588, 106 S. Ct. 1348, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538 (1986)).

To that end, "'[c]onduct as consistent with permissible [22] competition as with illegal conspiracy does not, standing alone, support an inference of antitrust conspiracy.'" In re Chocolate Confectionary, 801 F.3d at 396 (quoting Matsushita, 475 U.S. at 588). "[U]nless the plaintiff 'presents evidence 'that tends to exclude the possibility' that the alleged conspirators acted independently,' summary judgment is appropriate." Id. Additionally, the plausibility of a plaintiff's economic theory behind a defendant's alleged conspiracy will also affect the range of permissible inferences. Id. (citing In re Flat Glass Litig., 385 F.3d 350, 357 (3d Cir. 2004)). Presently, plaintiff argues "[t]here is both direct and circumstantial evidence that [d]efendants conspired to increase prices of Chinese bauxite beginning in 2003." (ECF No. 272 at 19.) The court addresses plaintiff's assertions with respect to each kind of evidence, in turn.

1. Direct Evidence

"Direct evidence of a conspiracy is 'evidence that is explicit and requires no inferences to establish the proposition or conclusion being asserted.'" Burtch v. Milberg Factors, Inc., 662 F.3d 212, 225 (3d Cir. 2011) (quoting In re Ins.

Brokerage, 618 F.3d at 324 n.23) (noting an example of direct evidence is "a document or conversation explicitly manifesting the existence of the agreement in question"). To be considered direct evidence, the Third Circuit Court of Appeals has found that purportedly direct evidence must reach a certain level of "clarity." InterVest, Inc., 340 F.3d at 162-63 (citing [23] decisions in which documents or verbal statements that in some way referred to a conspiracy were considered as direct evidence). When a plaintiff successfully sets forth direct evidence of a conspiracy, the Matsushita standard does not apply because the "fact finder is not required to make inferences to establish facts." Rossi, 156 F.3d at 466. [*420] Direct evidence, therefore, relieves the plaintiff of the need to "adduce circumstantial evidence 'that tends to exclude the possibility that the alleged conspirators acted independently.'" Id. (quoting Matsushita, 475 U.S. at 588).

Plaintiff points to activities of members taken in relation to Bauxite Branch meetings from 2004 through 2008 as direct evidence that defendants conspired to fix prices and limit bauxite production. (ECF No. 272 at 19 - 20). Primarily, plaintiff's "direct" evidence consists of minutes from these meetings that show that defendants "voted on proposals concerning export quotas." (Id. at 20). Plaintiff notes Hong's email and deposition testimony regarding matters to be addressed during the November 12, 2005 meeting. (Id.). Plaintiff places particular emphasis on the October 27, 2005, email authored by Liu Hong, vice president of defendant Bosai. (Id.). When taken in the context [24] of the record before the court, a reasonable jury could not conclude that this evidence rises to the level of clarity necessary to consider it direct evidence of a conspiracy. See InterVest, Inc., 340 F.3d at 162-63.

In a vacuum, proposals to set bauxite quotas at specified levels being voted on at Bauxite Branch meetings appear to indicate explicit member participation in a conspiracy to limit output. However, the Bauxite Branch's demonstrated lack of authority with respect to quotas invalidates such a finding. Since at least 2001, MOFCOM has been "responsible for deciding and announcing the types and the total quota quantity of commodities subject to bidding," not the CCCMC or its Branches. (ECF No. 268-30 at 2). The quota announced by the Bidding Committee during each of the years of the alleged conspiracy never corresponded to a resolution of the Bauxite Branch. At its 2004 through 2006 meetings, the Bauxite Branch failed to pass any resolution related to quota amount, yet the Bidding Committee, an instrumentality of MOFCOM, still announced quotas in each of those years. (ECF Nos. 275-10 through 275-12; ECF Nos. 268-52 through 268-60.) Though the Bauxite Branch passed resolutions that the quota be set at "1 million [25] or more" tons in 2008 and 940,000 tons in 2009 (ECF Nos. 275-13, 275-14), the Bidding Committee announced quotas of only 940,000 in 2008 and 930,000 tons in 2009. (ECF Nos. 268-60 through 268-62.) No proposed quota quantity was ever less than the one ultimately announced by the Bidding Committee, which invalidates any inference that these proposals were intended to establish quotas separate from those publically announced. Any conspiracy to establish a limit equal to or higher than that imposed by the government could have no effect.

Consistent with the undisputed Declaration of the CCCMC, Bauxite Branch member votes for proposals concerning the yearly bauxite quota amount can only be construed as opinions offered to MOFCOM. (ECF No. 268-22 at 2-3.) These opinions were not that limits should be placed on bauxite output. The implementation of quotas was mandated by the Chinese government, not agreed to by private entities. See (ECF No. 268-26 at 2.) Opinions only went to the level at which the otherwise required quotas should be set. As such, these votes do not explicitly and without inference establish that Bauxite Branch members conspired to limit bauxite output. The votes cannot be [26] considered as direct evidence supporting a conspiracy. See Burtch, 662 F.3d at 225.

The Bauxite Branch's role in determining the yearly bauxite quota undermines plaintiff's argument that Hong's email and deposition testimony concerning the November 12, 2005 meeting support the existence of a conspiracy. In his October 27, [*421] 2005 email, Hung wrote that "CCCMC will have a meeting on Nov 12th to discuss/decide the quantity/price of bauxite quota in 2006." (ECF No. 275.) During his deposition, Hung testified that this statement was intended to convey that "there would be quantity and a price discussion and that we . . . would give our opinion on that." (ECF No. 275-17 at 149.) This explanation is consistent with the CCCMC's declaration that Bauxite Branch members were asked for their opinions pertaining to the bauxite quota during meetings, "but the authority and power to adopt quotas, and to establish the quota amount, minimum bidding price, and other terms, was always with MOFCOM." (ECF No. 268-22 at 2-3.) This explanation is supported by the Bidding Committee's December 6, 2005 announcement of a 970,000 ton bauxite quota for 2006 (ECF Nos. 268-57, 268-58), when the minutes of the November 12, 2005 Bauxite Branch [27] meeting contain no reference to a single proposal related to quota amount. (ECF No. 275-11.) Hung's email cannot be considered direct evidence that the Bauxite Branch conspired to limit bauxite output during the November 12, 2005 meeting when it lacked the authority to do so and the quota was later set by MOFCOM through the Bidding Committee.

In addition to lacking any ability to set prices under the quota bidding system, plaintiff's purported direct evidence that Bauxite Branch members "voted to fix prices" (ECF No. 272 at 14-15) fails for a separate and independently sufficient reason. The evidence plaintiff relies upon consists of the same meeting minutes and email from Hong, discussed above, and does not support plaintiff's claim that defendants fixed export prices. Instead, this evidence refers to conversations about the license fee—the price of the bauxite quota—that exporters would have to pay the Chinese government for each ton of bauxite exported, not the export price at which the bauxite itself would be sold to eventual purchasers. (ECF No. 275 (Hung's October 27, 2005 email explaining that discussions would concern the "price of bauxite quota in 2006" (emphasis added)).). [28]

The specific prices in the proposals voted on at the Bauxite Branch meetings cited by plaintiff clearly indicate they were not in reference to the prices to be charged to buyers. At Bauxite Branch meetings between 2004 and 2008, proposed "minimum prices for export quota" ranged from 60 to 180 CNY. (ECF Nos. 268-10, 268-12, 268-13, 268-15, 275-11.) By comparison, the "paid use" license fee was fixed at 230 CNY before exporters were required to bid the amount they would pay for the fee beginning in 2005. (ECF No. 284, Part I ¶ 19.) The proposals at issue could not have referred to minimum export prices where the export license fee, a necessary component of the total price charged to purchasers, equaled or exceeded the amounts proposed.

The conclusion that the votes pertaining to "minimum price for export quota" during Bauxite Branch meetings were not in reference to the price purchasers would pay is confirmed by the prices plaintiff actually paid for bauxite during the period of the alleged conspiracy. In January and April 2004, plaintiff purchased a total of 4,150 metric tons of bauxite between two orders placed with Bosai's predecessor, Nanchuan Minerals Group Co. Ltd. ("Nanchuan"). [29] (ECF Nos. 275-2, 275-3.) The unit cost per metric ton was $154.00 United States dollars ("USD") for the January order (ECF No. 275-2, at 7) and $172.50 USD for the April order, (ECF No. 275-3 at 3.) During the November 17, 2004 Bauxite Branch meeting, members voted on a proposal "to set 180 as the minimum price for [the] 2005 export [*422] quota." (ECF No. 268-10 at 2.) The court takes judicial notice that the exchange rate on this date was 8.2765 CNY per USD.[13] In USD, therefore, the amount being debated by the members was approximately $21.75.[14] At a time when Nanchuan was charging plaintiff a price nearly eight times higher seven months earlier and prices were steadily rising, a minimum export price of $21.75 could have served no purpose. In fact, plaintiff's own records of its bauxite purchases from late 1999 until mid-2012 show that plaintiff never paid less than $92.25 USD per ton, including the years before the alleged conspiracy began.[15] The only reasonable conclusion is that Bauxite Branch proposals pertaining to the "minimum price for export quota" were in reference to the amount of the export license fee, and are not direct evidence of a conspiracy to fix export prices of bauxite.

Because plaintiff failed to adduce direct evidence from which a reasonable jury could conclude defendants conspired to fix prices and limit bauxite output, it must rely solely on circumstantial evidence to prove the existence of a conspiracy, and the strictures of Matsushita apply. Rossi, 156 F.3d at 465-66.

2. Circumstantial Evidence

[13] IMF [30] Exchange Rates, INT'L MONETARY FUND, http://www.imf.org/external/np/fin/ert/GUI/Pages/CountryDataBase.aspx (last visited Nov. 20, 2015).

[14] (180 CNY) / 8.2765 = $21.748324 USD.

[15] Plaintiff's exhibit, entitled "Resco Spreadsheet of Chinese RGB Purchases, 2000-12," and labeled "RESCO0005552" through "RESCO0005559," was submitted in hardcopy to the court, but was not electronically filed.

When unable to offer direct evidence of a conspiracy, proof may come in the form of circumstantial evidence. In re Chocolate Confectionary, 801 F.3d at 395 - 96. Section 1 liability cannot be "predicated on a defendant's unilateral actions, no matter its anticompetitive motivations;" therefore, circumstantial evidence must tend to exclude the possibility of unilateral action. Id. at 396 - 97. The "range of acceptable inferences that may be drawn from ambiguous or circumstantial evidence 'varies with the plausibility of the plaintiffs' theory and the dangers associated with such inferences.'" Id. at 396 (quoting In re Flat Glass Antitrust Litig., 385 F.3d 350, 357 (3d Cir. 2004)). Mistaken inferences could impose [31] liability for lawful conduct. Id. (citing Matsushita, 475 U.S. at 594. "[S]trong circumstantial evidence," however, will not implicate such concerns, because it is sufficiently unambiguous to limit the inferences which may reasonably be gleaned. Id. at 397 n. 9.

The evidence adduced by plaintiff as direct evidence of a price-fixing conspiracy, including the October 27, 2005, email authored by Liu Hong, may properly be considered strong circumstantial evidence, because it leaves little room for unreasonable inferences regarding defendants' conduct with respect to bauxite bidding and quotas. However, for the same reasons this evidence failed to support plaintiff's claim as direct evidence, it fails as circumstantial evidence; specifically, defendants lacked the authority to influence bauxite bidding and quotas. If anything, the October 27, 2005, email and Bauxite Branch meeting records illustrate only an opportunity to conspire. In re Chocolate Confectionary, 801 F.3d at 409 (evidence of mere opportunity to conspire cannot alone support an inference of conspiracy). Even viewed in the light most favorable to plaintiff, no reasonable jury could render a verdict in plaintiff's favor based upon this evidence.

[*423] 3. Conscious Parallelism as Circumstantial Evidence

A showing of parallel conduct [32] or conscious parallelism is one other means of establishing the requisite proof of conspiracy via circumstantial evidence. Cosmetic Gallery, Inc. v. Schoeneman Corp., 495 F.3d 46, 53 (3d Cir. 2007). As this court has previously noted, "special considerations" must be applied to ensure that only reasonable inferences are drawn from that kind of evidence. InterVest, 340 F.3d at 155-60. While "strong circumstantial evidence" will not demand restrictive inferential limits because such evidence is "sufficiently unambiguous," In re Chocolate Confectionary, 801 F.3d at 397 n. 9, as a general matter, parallel conduct and conscious parallelism are not considered to be strong circumstantial evidence, and "cannot alone create a reasonable inference of conspiracy." Id. at 398 (citing In re Baby Food Antitrust Litig., 166 F.3d 112, 122 (3d Cir. 1999)). "To survive a motion for summary judgment, therefore, a plaintiff 'must present evidence that 'tends to exclude the possibility' that the alleged conspirators acted independently.'" InterVest, 340 F.3d at 160 (quoting Matsushita, 475 U.S. at 588).

In order to establish a successful claim supported by only conscious parallelism, "'a plaintiff must show (1) that the defendants' behavior was parallel; (2) that the defendants were conscious of each other's conduct and that this awareness was an element in their decision-making process; and (3) certain 'plus' factors.'" Superior Offshore Int'l, Inc., 490 F. App'x at 498 (quoting In re Flat Glass Antitrust Litig., 385 F.3d at 360 n.11). The evidence must "establish at least one 'plus [33] factor,' since plus factors are, by definition, facts that 'tend to ensure that courts punish concerted action—an actual agreement—instead of the unilateral, independent conduct of competitors.'" In re Ins. Brokerage, 618 F.3d at 323 (quoting In re Flat Glass, 385 F.3d at 360 (internal alterations omitted)); Superior Offshore Int'l, Inc., 490 F. App'x at 498 ("'Plus factors' are circumstances under which the inference of rational independent choice is less attractive than that of concerted action."). Though the list is admittedly non-exhaustive, the Third Circuit Court of Appeals has identified "at least three such plus factors: (1) evidence that the defendant had a motive to enter into a price fixing conspiracy; (2) evidence that the defendant acted contrary to its interests; and (3) 'evidence implying a traditional conspiracy.'" In re Flat Glass, 385 F.3d at 360 (quoting Petruzzi's IGA Supermarkets, Inc. v. Darling-Delaware Co., 998 F.2d 1224, 1244 (3d Cir. 1993)).

Here, plaintiff argues there is "compelling evidence of 'plus' factors which would allow a fact-finder to infer the existence of a conspiracy," even in the absence of direct evidence. (ECF No. 272 at 16.) Plaintiff's evidence relates to the bauxite bidding and quotas, not to the price paid by a buyer like plaintiff. For reasons discussed previously, the bauxite bidding and quota evidence is not sufficient to support a finding — directly or circumstantially — that [34] a conspiracy existed. There was no other evidence of parallel behavior adduced and, in any event, plaintiff failed to offer sufficient evidence to establish any of the plus factors.

The establishment of plus factors is essential to any § 1 claim supported by exclusively circumstantial evidence. Typically, a plaintiff must also show parallel behavior to survive summary judgment. See In re Ins. Brokerage, 618 F.3d at 323. As their name suggests, plus factors are only supplemental to a threshold showing of parallel behavior, meant to establish [*424] that the "allegedly wrongful conduct of the defense was conscious and not the result of independent business decisions of the competitors." In re Baby Food, 166 F.3d at 122. Without first showing some "allegedly wrongful conduct" by a defendant, there can be no evaluation of that defendant's motivation for engaging in it. See Superior Offshore Int'l, Inc., 490 F. App'x at 498 (observing a plaintiff must "adduce sufficient evidence of parallel conduct—so-called 'conscious parallelism'—and other 'plus factors' to survive summary judgment").

Plaintiff's argument against summary judgment focuses solely on the plus factors and other than the evidence of bauxite bidding and quotas makes no mention of any evidence of sufficient circumstantial evidence such as parallel behavior [35] by defendants or other alleged co-conspirators in fixing the prices paid by buyers. Despite its allegation that defendants conspired to limit the amount of bauxite exported through the use of quotas, the evidence shows that defendants did not have the authority or power to establish those limits; rather, the Chinese government fixed the bidding amount for the quotas and the amount of the quotas. As discussed previously, the evidence adduced with respect to the quotas cannot support a § 1 claim, because the Chinese government — and not defendants — set the quotas. There is no indication defendants began either producing less bauxite or turning away interested purchasers due to insufficient inventory. Plaintiff fails to point to parallel pricing behavior to support its claim that defendants fixed the price of bauxite. The nearest thing to evidence of that kind of behavior is plaintiff's unsupported assertion that the "price of RGB in the United States doubled during 2003 and 2004 and increased an additional 70 [percent] between 2004 and 2007." (ECF No. 284, Part II ¶ 4.) Even accepting this assertion as true, there is no suggestion that defendants' and other alleged co-conspirators' prices [36] "moved in a parallel fashion" during this period. In re Baby Food, 166 F.3d at 128. Plaintiff presented no evidence of the amount or timing of any of the pricing increases it claims were the product of collusion. Having failed to establish the necessary element of parallel behavior, or some other wrongful conduct, by defendants with respect to bauxite output or pricing, plaintiff's § 1 claim fails as a matter of law. Superior Offshore Int'l, Inc., 490 F. App'x at 498.

4. Plus factors

Even if plaintiff could show consciously parallel behavior by defendants, summary judgment is still proper given its failure to establish any plus factor. Plaintiff's arguments with respect to each of the three plus factors will be discussed.

(1) First plus factor

Plaintiff attempts to satisfy the first plus factor by noting that the "export market for RGB is concentrated in the hands of several Chinese producers." (ECF No. 272 at 16.) This factor, "[e]vidence that the defendant had a motive to enter into a price fixing conspiracy[,] means evidence that the industry is conducive to oligopolistic price fixing, either interdependently or through a more express form of collusion." In re Flat Glass, 385 F.3d at 360. An oligopolistic market is one in which there are few sellers. In re Baby Food, 166 F.3d at 122. The record does not support that the Chinese bauxite market [37] was oligopolistic. The "Report on the Work of the Second Governing Board of the CCCMC Bauxite Branch" notes that "[sixty-two] business enterprises" were engaged in bauxite export in 2002. (ECF No. 275-7 at 1.) The minutes of the Bauxite Branch meetings from 2005 through 2009 [*425] show that between fifty-eight and eighty bauxite exporters attended each meeting. (ECF Nos. 275-10 through 275-14.) A market with that many participants does not qualify as an oligopoly. In re Baby Food, 166 F.3d at 128 (discussing "an oligopoly consisting of no more than three companies at one time and collectively controlling almost the entire market"). Plaintiff offered no "evidence that the structure of the market was such as to make secret price fixing feasible." In re Flat Glass, 385 F.3d at 360. Plaintiff, therefore, failed to establish the first plus factor.

(2) Second plus factor

The second plus factor is satisfied with "evidence that the defendant acted contrary to its interests," i.e., "conduct that would be irrational assuming that the defendant operated in a competitive market." In re Flat Glass, 385 F.3d at 360. Plaintiff points only to its assertion that "Chinese bauxite exporters raised prices dramatically during the alleged conspiracy period" as an example of such conduct. (ECF No. 272 at 16.) [38] While increased prices undeniably could be the result of a price fixing agreement, they can be "'just as much in line with a wide swath of rational and competitive business strategy unilaterally prompted by common perceptions of the market.'" In re Ins. Brokerage, 618 F.3d at 321 (quoting Bell Atl. Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 554, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007)). As discussed above, defendants pointed to numerous external factors that increased their cost to export bauxite.[16] (ECF No. 284, Part I ¶ 4.) Plaintiff disputes neither the legitimacy of these factors nor that "Bosai's RGB export price increases closely tracked the levels of the increases in prices Bosai paid for RGB." (Id.) Given these facts, plaintiff failed to adduce sufficient evidence to permit a reasonable jury to find defendants' price increases were irrational and did not satisfy the second plus factor.

(3) Third Plus Factor

To satisfy the third and final plus factor, plaintiff must adduce "evidence implying a traditional conspiracy." In re Flat Glass, 385 F.3d at 360. This is > [noneconomic] [39] evidence that there was an actual, manifest agreement not to compete[,] . . . [which] may involve customary indications of traditional conspiracy, or proof that the defendants got together and exchanged assurances of common action or otherwise adopted a common plan even though no meetings, conversations, or exchanged documents are shown.

Id. at 361 (internal citations omitted). Plaintiff relies on CCCMC and Bauxite Branch governing documents, discussions that took place during Bauxite Branch meetings, and the occurrence of separate meetings and communications between representatives of Bosai and Tianjin as evidence that a traditional conspiracy was formed. Each of these categories of evidence is addressed below.

Plaintiff argues the existence of a conspiracy is confirmed by the CCCMC and Bauxite Branch "organizational and procedural documents." (ECF No. 272 at 3-4.) It should be noted at the outset that "mere membership in a trade association, including attendance at meetings, is insufficient without more to give rise to an inference of conspiracy." Zenith Radio [*426] Corp. v. Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co., 513 F. Supp. 1100, 1149 (E.D. Pa. 1981) (citing decisions). By pointing to the governing documents, plaintiff essentially contends that because defendants were members of the Bauxite Branch, [40] and the Bauxite Branch is a "self-regulation trade organization" (ECF No. 275-4 at 1) engaging in "coordination work" that should "be favorable for self-regulation, self-discipline, self-protection and self-development of the enterprise group" (ECF No. 268-4 at 2), defendants conspired to limit bauxite production and fix export prices. (ECF No. 272 at 3-4.) That inference is not reasonable.

Plaintiff calls attention to the use of the words "coordination," "self-regulation," and "self-discipline" throughout the CCCMC and Bauxite Branch governing documents to prove collusion. The meaning of those words, as intended by the subject documents, is ambiguous at best. The strongest indication that "coordination" was intended to encompass forming agreements to fix the export price of bauxite is found in the Coordination Measures. (ECF No. 268-4.) It explains that "Coordination content includes: . . . export price" and that the "Governing Board of [the] Bauxite Branch . . . shall study and decide the industrial agreement price of bauxite export." (Id. at 2-3.) It is unclear whether the "industrial agreement price of bauxite export" is the price to be paid by export buyers. Even assuming it is, plaintiff [41] concedes that regulations, like the Coordination Measures, that were "promulgated in the 1990s are immaterial to this litigation." (ECF No. 284, Part I ¶ 15.) This litigation concerns allegedly illegal agreements in effect from 2003 through 2009—not the 1990s.

[16] These factors included the price of bauxite more than quadrupling between 2003 and 2008, increases in transportation, loading, energy, and storage costs, the reimplementation of a 13 percent VAT in 2003, and the implementation of a 15 percent duty in 2008. (ECF No. 284, Part I ¶ 4.)

None of the remaining CCCMC and Bauxite Branch organizational and procedural documents in effect during the alleged conspiracy provide sufficient proof that "coordination," "self-regulation," and "self-discipline" should be understood to require the formation of agreements to fix bauxite export prices. This evidence is, at best, ambiguous and insufficient to prove a traditional conspiracy in satisfaction of the third plus factor.

Plaintiff argues various discussions that took place at Bauxite Branch meetings are evidence of a traditional conspiracy. (ECF No. 272 at 4-5.) Plaintiff relies on the Bauxite Branch member votes on proposals related to bauxite quotas as evidence that a conspiracy was formed. (Id.) As discussed above, the members' lack of authority with respect to setting quota quantities and license fees and subsequent contradictory actions taken by the Bidding Committee prevent these votes from being construed as "assurances [42] of common action" that could satisfy the third plus factor. In re Ins. Brokerage, 618 F.3d at 322. Beyond these votes, plaintiff points to Liu's testimony explaining that during these meetings, the companies also "discussed whether the market was good or bad, their forecasts for supply and demand, and whether overall prices would be going up or down." (ECF No. 272 at 5.) Liu explained that the companies "complained to one another regarding low prices and unfair competition." (Id.) These conversations occurred during and outside of official meeting times, because "meals were arranged so that representatives of companies would have meals together." (Id.) Hong testified similarly concerning these topics. (Id.) Defendants' meeting and discussing market conditions on multiple occasions is insufficient to raise an inference of an agreement. See Burtch, 662 F.3d at 228 ("'[F]requent meetings between the alleged conspirators . . . will not sustain a plaintiff's burden absent evidence which would permit the inference that [*427] those close ties led to an illegal agreement.'" (quoting Venture Tech., Inc. v. Nat'l Fuel Gas Co., 685 F.2d 41, 45 (2d Cir. 1982))). To support the third plus factor, evidence must suggest defendants somehow "adopted a common plan." See In re Ins. Brokerage, 618 F.3d at 322. Here, beyond the insinuation underlying its assertions that defendants met and [43] discussed prices, plaintiff offers no evidence that defendants "exchanged assurances of common action" with respect to fixing prices or limiting output of bauxite during any of these meetings. Id. Finally, plaintiff points to communications by and between representatives of Bosai and Tianjin separate from Bauxite Branch meetings as evidence that a traditional conspiracy was formed. (ECF No. 272 at 6.) Plaintiff notes Hong's October 2005 email that "CCCMC will have meeting on Nov 12th to discuss/decide the quantity/price of bauxite quota in 2006." (Id. (quoting (ECF No. 275)).) As discussed above, MOFCOM's delegation to the Bidding Committee of the power to set such a quota combined with the Bidding Committee's announcement of the 2006 quota following the November 12, 2005 meeting supports the interpretation that Hung expected to learn the quota amount at the meeting—not to agree to it. Hong's email is not "'sufficiently unambiguous' evidence that the defendants conspired." Petruzzi's IGA Supermarkets, Inc., 998 F.2d at 1233 (quoting Matsushita, 475 U.S. at 597).

In addition to Hong's email, plaintiff asserts "[d]efendants also engaged in other direct communications and held in-person meetings" to prove a conspiracy among them. (ECF No. 272 at 6.) Plaintiff offered no evidence [44] about the substance of the conversations that took place on these occasions. At best, the occurrences of these direct communications and in-person meetings show defendants had the opportunity to conspire. The Third Circuit Court of Appeals has held, however, that "[p]roof of opportunity to conspire, without more, will not sustain an inference that a conspiracy has taken place." Petruzzi's IGA Supermarkets, Inc., 998 F.2d at 1235.

Plaintiff failed to establish sufficient circumstantial evidence such as consciously parallel behavior by defendants or the existence of the plus factors. There is insufficient circumstantial evidence as a matter of law to support plaintiff's § 1 claim. See Superior Offshore Int'l, Inc., 490 F. App'x at 498.

V. CONCLUSION

Because plaintiff failed to adduce sufficient direct or circumstantial evidence of a conspiracy, summary judgment is proper. See Rossi, 156 F.3d at 465-66. No reasonable jury could render a verdict in favor of plaintiff on its claims. For the reasons set forth in this opinion, defendants' motion for summary judgment (ECF No. 263) will be granted.

An appropriate order will be entered.

HN1[] Entitlement as Matter of Law, Appropriateness

The court shall grant summary judgment if the movant shows that there is no genuine dispute as to any material fact and the movant is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(a). The moving party has the initial burden of proving the absence of a genuinely disputed material fact relative to the claims in question. Material facts are those that could affect the outcome of the proceeding, and a dispute about a material fact is genuine if the evidence is sufficient to permit a reasonable jury to return a verdict for the nonmoving party. The burden on the moving party may be discharged by pointing out to the district court that there is an absence of evidence supporting the non-moving party's case.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > Nonmovant Persuasion & Proof

HN2[] Burdens of Proof, Nonmovant Persuasion & Proof

With respect to a motion for summary judgment, once the moving party has discharged its burden, the burden then shifts to the non-movant to demonstrate the existence of a genuine issue for trial. A non-moving party asserting that a fact is genuinely disputed must support such an assertion by: (A) citing to particular parts of materials in the record, including depositions, documents, electronically stored information, affidavits or declarations, stipulations, admissions, interrogatory answers, or other materials; or (B) showing that the materials cited by the opposing party do not establish the absence of a genuine dispute. Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(c)(1).

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Summary Judgment > Evidentiary Considerations

HN3[] Summary Judgment, Evidentiary Considerations

When determining whether a genuine issue of material fact exists, the court must view the evidence in the light most favorable to the non-moving party and draw all reasonable inferences in that party's favor. A dispute is "genuine" only if the evidence is such that a reasonable jury could return a verdict for the non-moving party. If the non-moving party fails to make a sufficient showing on an essential element of its case with respect to which it has the burden of proof, the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law.

Section 1 of the Sherman Act provides: Every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, is declared to be illegal. 15 U.S.C.S. § 1. In order to satisfy the requirement of a contract, combination or conspiracy, there must be some form of concerted action. The existence of an agreement is the hallmark of a Section 1 claim.

HN5[] Sherman Act, Claims

In an action under 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, in addition to demonstrating an agreement, the § 1 plaintiff must show that the conspiracy to which the defendant was a party imposed an unreasonable restraint on trade. In most cases, courts apply the so-called rule of reason, a case-by-case inquiry designed to assess whether challenged conduct is an anticompetitive practice. Some agreements, however, are per se unlawful once proven. One such per se unlawful agreement is horizontal price fixing. In per se cases, the plaintiff need only prove that the defendants conspired among each other and that this conspiracy was the proximate cause of the plaintiff's injury.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Cartels & Horizontal Restraints > Price Fixing

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > Sherman Act

HN6[] Cartels & Horizontal Restraints, Price Fixing

There is no special burden on plaintiffs facing summary judgment in antitrust cases. There is, however, an important distinction in 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 cases: antitrust law limits the range of permissible inferences that may be drawn from ambiguous evidence. The acceptable inferences which can be drawn from circumstantial evidence vary with the plausibility of the plaintiff's theory and the dangers associated with such inferences. Thus, when a plaintiff's theory makes no economic sense, the plaintiff must produce more persuasive evidence. Even with a plausible theory, however, a plaintiff relying on ambiguous evidence alone cannot raise a reasonable inference of conspiracy sufficient to survive summary judgment. The Supreme Court has held explicitly that conduct as consistent with permissible competition as with illegal conspiracy does not, standing alone, support an inference of antitrust conspiracy. Therefore, to survive summary judgment, the plaintiff must present evidence that tends to exclude the possibility that the alleged conspirators acted independently. In the context of a claim alleging a horizontal price fixing conspiracy, the plaintiff must present evidence that would enable a reasonable jury to reject the hypothesis that the defendants, foreswore price competition without actually agreeing to do so.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Cartels & Horizontal Restraints > Price Fixing

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Sherman Act

HN7[] Cartels & Horizontal Restraints, Price Fixing

Courts have been cautious in accepting inferences from circumstantial evidence in cases involving allegations of horizontal price-fixing among oligopolists, due to the theory of interdependence. That theory posits that in an oligopolistic market, a single firm's change in output or price will have a noticeable impact on the market and on its rivals. Therefore, any rational decision by an oligopolist must take into account the anticipated reaction of the other firms. While the practice of parallel pricing, known as conscious parallelism, produces anticompetitive outcomes, it is lawful. It is lawful, in part, because it is not an agreement. Put another way, express collusion violates antitrust law; tacit collusion does not.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Cartels & Horizontal Restraints > Price Fixing

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Sherman Act

HN8[] Cartels & Horizontal Restraints, Price Fixing

Conscious parallelism cannot by itself create a reasonable inference of conspiracy. Parallel conduct is just as much in line with a wide swath of rational and competitive business strategy unilaterally prompted by common perceptions of the market. Therefore, when a plaintiff seeks to base a claim of collusion on inferences from consciously parallel behavior, the plaintiff is required to show certain "plus factors." While there is no exhaustive list of plus factors, the Third Circuit has identified three: (1) evidence that the defendant had a motive to enter into a price fixing conspiracy; (2) evidence that the defendant acted contrary to its interest; and (3) evidence implying a traditional conspiracy. The requirement of showing plus factors helps to ensure that courts punish an actual agreement instead of the unilateral, independent conduct of competitors.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Cartels & Horizontal Restraints > Price Fixing

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Sherman Act

HN9[] Cartels & Horizontal Restraints, Price Fixing

In cases alleging parallel price increases, the first two "plus" factors (motive and acting contrary to interests) largely restate the phenomenon of interdependence. Therefore, they may not suffice—by themselves—to defeat summary judgment on a claim of horizontal price-fixing among oligopolists. In short, they are neither necessary nor sufficient to preclude summary judgment. Accordingly, the most important evidence will generally be non-economic evidence that there was an actual, manifest agreement not to compete. This is the third plus factor. Evidence satisfying this plus factor may involve customary indications of traditional conspiracy, or proof that the defendants got together and exchanged assurances of common action or otherwise adopted a common plan even though no meetings, conversations, or exchanged documents are shown.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Cartels & Horizontal Restraints > Price Fixing

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Sherman Act

HN10[] Cartels & Horizontal Restraints, Price Fixing

In an action under 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, when assessing the "plus factor" of evidence that the defendant acted contrary to its interests, a court looks for evidence of conduct that would be irrational assuming that the defendant operated in a competitive market, or put differently, evidence that the market behaved in a noncompetitive manner.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Cartels & Horizontal Restraints > Price Fixing

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Sherman Act

HN11[] Cartels & Horizontal Restraints, Price Fixing

Absent increases in marginal cost or demand, raising prices generally does not approximate—and cannot be mistaken as—competitive conduct. While raising prices cannot be mistaken as competitive conduct, it does not necessarily follow that raising prices is evidence of an agreement. A firm's motivation to meet rival prices constitutes only interdependence. For parallel pricing to go beyond mere interdependence, it must be so unusual that in the absence of an advance agreement, no reasonable firm would have engaged in it. Oligopolists may maintain supracompetitive prices through rational, interdependent decision making, as opposed to unlawful concerted action, if the oligopolists independently conclude that the industry as a whole would be better off by raising prices. Evidence of a price increase disconnected from changes in costs or demand only raises the question: was the anticompetitive price increase the result of lawful, rational interdependence or of an unlawful price-fixing conspiracy? On this issue, expert testimony is useful as a guide to interpreting market facts, but it is not a substitute for them.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Cartels & Horizontal Restraints > Price Fixing

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Sherman Act

HN12[] Cartels & Horizontal Restraints, Price Fixing

In cases involving oligopolists and parallel pricing, the most important plus factor is the third: evidence implying a traditional conspiracy. This evidence has been characterized as non-economic evidence that there was an actual, manifest agreement not to compete. Such evidence may involve customary indications of traditional conspiracy, or proof that the defendants got together and exchanged assurances of common action or otherwise adopted a common plan even though no meetings, conversations, or exchanged documents are shown.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Sherman Act

HN13[] Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason, Sherman Act

For purposes of an action under 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, nothing about the sharing of aggregated information suggests the existence of a conspiracy.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Cartels & Horizontal Restraints > Price Fixing

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Sherman Act

HN14[] Cartels & Horizontal Restraints, Price Fixing

For purposes of an action under 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, communications between competitors do not permit an inference of an agreement to fix prices unless those communications rise to the level of an agreement, tacit or otherwise. In short, evidence that the executives from the industry were in the same place at the same time is insufficient to support a reasonable inference of conspiracy.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Cartels & Horizontal Restraints > Price Fixing

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Sherman Act

HN15[] Cartels & Horizontal Restraints, Price Fixing

In an oligopoly setting, any single firm's price and output decisions will have a noticeable impact on the market and its rivals. As a result, oligopolists may maintain supracompetitive prices through rational, interdependent decision making, as opposed to unlawful concerted action, if the oligopolists independently conclude that the industry as a whole would be better off by raising prices. In a concentrated market with high barriers to entry, a higher price generating higher profits will not be undone by the output of new entrants. Even if a new entrant caused a drastic fall in prices that would deny them the profits they sought to obtain from having entered, that drastic fall could well be the result of parallel but independent pricing decisions by the incumbent firms, rather than of agreement.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Per Se Violations

HN16[] Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason, Per Se Violations

The dissemination of price information is not itself, a per se violation of the Sherman Act.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Cartels & Horizontal Restraints > Price Fixing

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Sherman Act

HN17[] Cartels & Horizontal Restraints, Price Fixing

There is a fundamental distinction between express and tacit collusion: while express collusion violates antitrust law, tacit collusion does not. The same distinction is important when interpreting terms that refer to the industry generally. In an oligopoly, it may be in a firm's best interest to consider the interests and needs of the industry as a whole. Oligopolists may independently conclude that the industry as a whole would be better off by raising prices. Tacit collusion, however, does not suggest an agreement.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Cartels & Horizontal Restraints > Price Fixing

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Cartels & Horizontal Restraints > Sherman Act

HN18[] Cartels & Horizontal Restraints, Price Fixing

As the Third Circuit has recently held, it is generally unremarkable for the pendulum in oligopolistic markets to swing from less to more interdependent and cooperative. In fact, the extent of interdependence within an oligopolistic market may be either weak or strong and may vary from time to time. In order for a change in conduct to create an inference of a conspiracy, the shift in behavior must be a radical or abrupt change from the industry's business practices.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Cartels & Horizontal Restraints > Price Fixing

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > Sherman Act

HN19[] Cartels & Horizontal Restraints, Price Fixing

For purposes of an action under 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, in determining whether the plaintiff can survive summary judgment, the key question is whether the plaintiff has advanced sufficient evidence that would enable a reasonable jury to reject the hypothesis that the defendants foreswore price competition without actually agreeing to do so. Evidence used to meet that burden of production cannot be as consistent with interdependence as with a conspiracy, as that does not tend to exclude the possibility that the defendants acted lawfully.

[*237] MEMORANDUM OPINION

January 25, 2016

ANDREWS, U.S. DISTRICT JUDGE:

Presently before the Court is E.I. du Pont de Nemours and Company's motion for summary judgment. (D.I. 239). The issues have been fully briefed. (D.I. 240, 286, 381). Oral argument was held on November 16, 2015. (D.I. 396). For the reasons set forth herein, the motion for summary judgment is GRANTED.

I. PROCEDURAL BACKGROUND

Prior to filing suit in this case, Plaintiffs opted out of two separate class actions against the defendants in this [2] case.[1] [*238] (D.I. 1). On November 22, 2013, The Valspar Corporation and Valspar Sourcing, Inc. (collectively "Valspar") brought an antitrust action against DuPont, Huntsman International LLC, Rronos Worldwide, Inc., and Millennium Inorganic Chemicals, Inc., for violations of Section 1 of the Sherman Act, along with several state law claims.[2] (D.I. 1). Valspar alleged that DuPont and the other defendants, all suppliers of titanium dioxide (or "TiO2"), conspired to fix the price of titanium dioxide. (Id.). The action was originally brought in the District of Minnesota. (Id.). Valspar's case against Millennium remains there. Valspar Corp. v. Millennium Inorganic Chems., Inc., No. 13-CV-03214. Valspar's case against Huntsman was severed and transferred to the Southern District of Texas. (D.I. 100). The action against Kronos was also severed and transferred to that court. Valspar Corp. v. Kronos Worldwide, Inc., 50 F. Supp. 3d 1152, 1157-58 (D. Minn. 2014). The case against DuPont was severed and transferred to the District of Delaware. (D.I. 100). Following discovery, DuPont moved for summary judgment. (D.I. 239).

II. FACTUAL BACKGROUND

Titanium dioxide is a white pigment with certain refractive and UV properties, which makes it useful in certain products including paint and other coatings, plastics, rubber, and paper. (D.I. 250, Ex. 198; D.I. 293, Ex. 199). The market is highly concentrated.[3] (D.I. 288, Ex. 7 at 97-99, Ex. 11 at 5-12; D.I. 289, Ex. 24 at 4, Ex. 31; D.I. 290, Ex. 35 at 51; D.I. 291, Ex. 75 at . 12). DuPont was one of several companies—along with Huntsman, Millennium, Kronos, Tronox, and Asian and European producers—that sold titanium dioxide in the United States during the relevant time period. (D.I. 250, Ex. 206 at 10-12). Valspar, a manufacturer of paints and other coatings, was one of DuPont's largest customers. (D.I. 245, Ex. 74 at 271-72).

Relevant to this case is the existence of the Titanium Dioxide Manufacturers Association ("TDMA") and its associated Global Statistics Program ("GSP"). (D.I. 307, Ex. 701). The TDMA is a trade association organized by a European chemical industry trade association called "CEFIC." (Id.). The TDMA established the GSP to collect data on monthly sales, production, and inventory for members of the TDMA. (D.I. 307, Exs. 688, 690; D.I. 308, Ex. 734 at 54-56). This data is aggregated and distributed to the members of the TDMA. (D.I 307, Exs. 688, 690).

[1] The class action in the Northern District of California (Los Gatos Mercantile, Inc. v. E.I. DuPont de Nemours & Co., 13-cv-13-1180-BLF) is still active. The class action in [3] the District of Maryland ("Maryland Class Action") was dismissed in its entirety following settlement. In re Titanium Dioxide Antitrust Litig., 2013 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 176100, 2013 WL 7389427 (D. Md. Dec. 13, 2013). Notably, this occurred after the court denied the defendants' motion for summary judgment. See In re Titanium Dioxide Antitrust Litig., 959 F. Supp. 2d 799 (D. Md. 2013). It should also be noted that while Tronox was initially a defendant and an alleged co-conspirator in the Maryland case, it later declared bankruptcy. See In re Titanium Dioxide Antitrust Litig., 959 F. Supp. 2d at 802 n.2.

[2] Valspar later agreed to dismiss without prejudice its state law claims. (D.I. 72).

[3] The [4] parties agree that the titanium dioxide market is an oligopoly. (See D.I. 286 at 13; D.I. 240 at 11). An oligopoly is a market "in which a few relatively large sellers account for the bulk of the output." 2B Phillip E. Areeda & Herbert Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law 10 (4th ed. 2014).

In the 1990s and 2000s, the titanium dioxide industry suffered considerable declines in consumption and price. (D.I. 312, Ex. 983 ¶¶ 71-75, figs. 4, 5 & 6; D.I. 297, Ex. 386; D.I. 288, Ex. 16 at 143). Profitability reached an all-time low in 2001. (D.I. 289, Ex. 31 at 40; D.I. 297, Ex. 386). Valspar alleges that because of this decline, DuPont and the other defendants [5] entered into a conspiracy to fix prices. (D.I. 286 at 8). Valspar contends that this conspiracy resulted in 31 parallel price increase announcements between 2002 and 2013 (the "Conspiracy Period"). (Id. at 8-9). Valspar contends that, as a result of this conspiracy, DuPont and the other defendants charged an average of 16% more than they would have but for the conspiracy. (Id. at 9). Valspar purchased $1.27 billion of titanium dioxide from DuPont and the other defendants in the period [*239] from February 2003 to December 2013. (Id.; D.I. 312, Ex. 981 at 10-11). Valspar contends this resulted in an overcharge to Valspar of $176 million. (D.I. 286 at 9).

III. LEGAL STANDARD

HN1[] "The court shall grant summary judgment if the movant shows that there is no genuine dispute as to any material fact and the movant is entitled to judgment as a matter of law." Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(a). The moving party has the initial burden of proving the absence of a genuinely disputed material fact relative to the claims in question. Celotex Corp. v. Catrett, 477 U.S. 317, 330, 106 S. Ct. 2548, 91 L. Ed. 2d 265 (1986). Material facts are those "that could affect the outcome" of the proceeding, and "a dispute about a material fact is 'genuine' if the evidence is sufficient to permit a reasonable jury to return a verdict for the nonmoving party." [6] Lamont v. New Jersey, 637 F.3d 177, 181 (3d Cir. 2011) (quoting Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc., 477 U.S. 242, 248, 106 S. Ct. 2505, 91 L. Ed. 2d 202 (1986)). The burden on the moving party may be discharged by pointing out to the district court that there is an absence of evidence supporting the non-moving party's case. Celotex, 477 U.S. at 323.

HN2[] The burden then shifts to the non-movant to demonstrate the existence of a genuine issue for trial. Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 586-87, 106 S. Ct. 1348, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538 (1986); Williams v. Borough of West Chester, Pa., 891 F.2d 458, 460-61 (3d Cir. 1989). A non-moving party asserting that a fact is genuinely disputed must support such an assertion by: "(A) citing to particular parts of materials in the record, including depositions, documents, electronically stored information, affidavits or declarations, stipulations . . ., admissions, interrogatory answers, or other materials; or (B) showing that the materials cited [by the opposing party] do not establish the absence . . . of a genuine dispute . . . ." Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(c)(1).

HN3[] When determining whether a genuine issue of material fact exists, the court must view the evidence in the light most favorable to the non-moving party and draw all reasonable inferences in that party's favor. Scott v. Harris, 550 U.S. 372, 380, 127 S. Ct. 1769, 167 L. Ed. 2d 686 (2007); Wishkin v. Potter, 476 F.3d 180, 184 (3d Cir. 2007). A dispute is "genuine" only if the evidence is such that a reasonable jury could return a verdict for the non-moving party. Anderson, 477 U.S. at 247-49. If the non-moving party fails to make a sufficient showing on an essential element of its case with respect to which it [7] has the burden of proof, the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. See Celotex, 477 U.S. at 322.

IV. ANALYSIS

A. Sherman Act § 1 Legal Standard

HN4[] Section 1 of the Sherman Act provides: "Every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, is declared to be illegal." 15 U.S.C. § 1. In order to satisfy the requirement of a "contract, combination . . . or conspiracy," there must be "some form of concerted action." In re Baby Food Antitrust Litig., 166 F.3d 112, 117 (3d Cir. 1999). "The existence of an agreement is the hallmark of a Section 1 claim." Id.; see also Alvord-Polk, Inc. v. F. Schumacher & Co., 37 F.3d 996, 999 (3d Cir. 1994) (The "very essence of a section 1 claim . . . is the existence of an agreement.").

HN5[] In addition to demonstrating an agreement, the § 1 plaintiff must show that "the conspiracy to which the defendant was a party imposed an unreasonable [*240] restraint on trade." Toledo Mack Sales & Serv., Inc. v. Mack Trucks, Inc., 530 F.3d 204, 218 (3d Cir. 2008). In most cases, courts "apply the so-called rule of reason, a case-by-case inquiry designed to assess whether challenged conduct is an anticompetitive practice." In re Chocolate Confectionary Antitrust Litig., 801 F.3d 383, 395 (3d Cir. 2015). Some agreements, however, are per se unlawful once proven. In re Ins. Brokerage Antitrust Litig., 618 F.3d 300, 316 (3d Cir. 2010). One such per se unlawful agreement is horizontal price fixing. Texaco Inc. v. Dagher, 547 U.S. 1, 5, 126 S. Ct. 1276, 164 L. Ed. 2d 1 (2006). In per se cases, "the plaintiff [8] need only prove that the defendants conspired among each other and that this conspiracy was the proximate cause of the plaintiff's injury." InterVest, Inc. v. Bloomberg, L.P., 340 F.3d 144, 159 (3d Cir. 2003).

HN6[] There is no "special burden on plaintiffs facing summary judgment in antitrust cases." Eastman Kodak Co. v. Image Tech. Servs., Inc., 504 U.S. 451, 468, 112 S. Ct. 2072, 119 L. Ed. 2d 265 (1992). There is, however, an "important distinction" in § 1 cases: "antitrust law limits the range of permissible inferences [that may be drawn] from ambiguous evidence." In re Flat Glass Antitrust Litig., 385 F.3d 350, 357 (3d Cir. 2004) (quoting Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 588, 106 S. Ct. 1348, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538 (1986)). The "acceptable inferences which can be drawn from circumstantial evidence vary with the plausibility of the plaintiff's theory and the dangers associated with such inferences." Petruzzi's IGA Supermarkets, Inc. v. Darling-Delaware Co., 998 F.2d 1224, 1232 (3d Cir. 1993). Thus, when a plaintiff's theory "makes no economic sense," the plaintiff must produce "more persuasive evidence." Flat Glass, 385 F.3d at 357. Even with a plausible theory, however, "a plaintiff relying on ambiguous evidence alone cannot raise a reasonable inference of conspiracy sufficient to survive summary judgment." In re Chocolate, 801 F.3d at 396-97. The Supreme Court has held explicitly that "[c]onduct as consistent with permissible competition as with illegal conspiracy does not, standing alone, support an inference of antitrust conspiracy." Matsushita, 475 U.S. at 588. Therefore, to survive summary judgment, the plaintiff must present evidence "'that tends to exclude the possibility' that the alleged [9] conspirators acted independently." Id. (quoting Monsanto Co. v. Spray-Rite Serv. Corp., 465 U.S. 752, 761, 104 S. Ct. 1464, 79 L. Ed. 2d 775 (1984)). In the context of a claim alleging a horizontal price fixing conspiracy, the plaintiff must present "evidence that would enable a reasonable jury to reject the hypothesis that the defendants, foreswore price competition without actually agreeing to do so." Flat Glass, 385 F.3d at 368 (quoting In re High Fructose Corn Syrup Antitrust Litig., 295 F.3d 651, 661 (7th Cir. 2002)).

HN7[] Courts "have been cautious in accepting inferences from circumstantial evidence in cases involving allegations of horizontal price-fixing among oligopolists," due to the theory of "interdependence." Flat Glass, 385 F.3d at 358-59. That theory posits that in an oligopolistic market, "a single firm's change in output or price 'will have a noticeable impact on the market and on its rivals.'" In re Chocolate, 801 F.3d at 397 (quoting Flat Glass, 385 F.3d at 359). Therefore, "any rational decision [by an oligopolist] must take into account the anticipated reaction of the other firms." Flat Glass, 385 F.3d at 359 (quoting Phillip E. Areeda & Herbert Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law 207 (2d ed. 2000)). While the "practice of parallel pricing, known as 'conscious parallelism,' produces anticompetitive outcomes, it is lawful." In re Chocolate, 801 F.3d at 397. It is lawful, in part, because it "is not an agreement." [*241] Id. Put another way, "[e]xpress collusion violates antitrust law; tacit collusion does not." In re Text Messaging Antitrust Litig., 782 F.3d 867, 872 (7th Cir. 2015); see also Flat Glass, 385 F.3d at 362 (acknowledging, in the [10] context of price increases, the distinction between "collusion [that] was merely interdependent or [that which was] the result of an actual agreement").

HN8[] Conscious parallelism cannot by itself "create a reasonable inference of conspiracy." In re Chocolate, 801 F.3d at 398. "[P]arallel conduct is 'just as much in line with a wide swath of rational and competitive business strategy unilaterally prompted by common perceptions of the market.'" In re Ins. Brokerage Antitrust Litig., 618 F.3d 300, 321 (3d Cir. 2010) (quoting Bell Atl. Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 554, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007)). Therefore, when a plaintiff seeks to "bas[e] a claim of collusion on inferences from consciously parallel behavior," the plaintiff is required to show certain "plus factors." Flat Glass, 385 F.3d at 360. While there is no exhaustive list of plus factors, the Third Circuit has identified three: "(1) evidence that the defendant had a motive to enter into a price fixing conspiracy; (2) evidence that the defendant acted contrary to its interest; and (3) 'evidence implying a traditional conspiracy.'" Id. (quoting Petruzzi's IGA Supermarkets, Inc. v. Darling-Delaware Co., 998 F.2d 1224, 1244 (3d Cir. 1993)). The "require[ment]" of showing plus factors helps to "ensure that courts punish . . . an actual agreement . . . instead of the unilateral, independent conduct of competitors." Id. (internal quotation marks omitted).

HN9[] In cases alleging parallel price increases, however, "the first two factors [11] largely restate the phenomenon of interdependence." Id.; see also In re Chocolate, 801 F.3d at 398. Therefore, they "may not suffice—by themselves—to defeat summary judgment on a claim of horizontal price-fixing among oligopolists." Flat Glass, 385 F.3d at 361. In short, they are "neither necessary nor sufficient to preclude summary judgment." Id. at 361 n.12. Accordingly, "[t]he most important evidence will generally be non-economic evidence 'that there was an actual, manifest agreement not to compete.'" Id. at 361 (quoting In re High Fructose Corn Syrup, 295 F.3d at 661). This is the third plus factor. Evidence satisfying this plus factor "may involve 'customary indications of traditional conspiracy,' or 'proof that the defendants got together and exchanged assurances of common action or otherwise adopted a common plan even though no meetings, conversations, or exchanged documents are shown.'" Id. (quoting Phillip E. Areeda & Herbert Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law 243 (2d ed. 2000)).

A. Parallel Conduct

Valspar does not advance any direct evidence of conspiracy. Instead, Valspar relies on parallel conduct undertaken by DuPont and the other defendants, together with "plus factors." The parallel conduct at issue is parallel pricing. According to Valspar, DuPont and the other defendants "issued 31 parallel price increase announcements [12] nearly simultaneously, almost always in an identical amount and with identical effective dates." (D.I. 286 at 14; D.I. 312, Ex. 983 at 19-31). This characterization is generally accurate, with two caveats. First, "nearly simultaneously" frequently means several days or even weeks apart. (D.I. Ex. 983 at 19-31). Second, the "almost" in "almost always" is operative, as the total of "31" is reached by counting a number of announcements without identical amounts and with effective dates several days apart. (Id.).

DuPont does not contest the existence of parallel pricing, but instead argues that [*242] this conduct "alone is insufficient . . . to support an inference of conspiracy." (D.I. 240 at 9-11). DuPont is correct. Parallel pricing is obviously important to Valspar's claim, but "an inference of conspiracy" can be drawn only when there are "sufficient other 'plus' factors." In re Citric Acid Litig., 191 F.3d 1090, 1102 (9th Cir. 1999); see also Flat Glass, 385 F.3d at 360-61. Since the price increase announcements may be explained by conscious parallelism, Valspar must be able to show—through plus factors—the existence of "an actual agreement." Flat Glass, 385 F.3d at 360; see also In re Chocolate, 801 F.3d at 398.

B. Motive to Enter into Conspiracy

The first "plus factor" articulated by the Third Circuit relates to the motive of the defendant [13] to enter into a price fixing conspiracy. Flat Glass, 385 F.3d at 360. DuPont apparently concedes that the market for titanium dioxide is conducive to conspiracy. (D.I. 240 at 23-24; D.I. 396 at 59-60). The market is highly concentrated. (D.I. 288, Ex. 7 at 97-99, Ex. 11 at 5-12; D.I. 289, Ex. 24 at 4, Ex. 31; D.I. 290, Ex. 35 at 51; D.I. 291, Ex. 75 at 12). Titanium dioxide is a standardized commodity-like product. (D.I. 290, Exs. 36, 50-52, 58 at 87; D.I. 291, Ex. 59 at 5). There are no viable substitutes. (D.I. 289, Ex. 31 at 37; D.I. 290, Ex. 34 at 13, Ex. 35 at 51). There are substantial barriers to entry. (D.I. 289, Ex. 19 at 6; D.I. 292, Ex. 113). DuPont also does not dispute that the market conditions prior to the Conspiracy Period provided DuPont with a motive to enter into a conspiracy. (D.I. 240 at 23-24; D.I. 396 at 59-60). Prior to the Conspiracy Period, the demand for titanium dioxide declined, which resulted in a concomitant decline in prices. (D.I. 312, Ex. 983 ¶¶ 71-75, figs. 4, 5 & 6). Such market conditions made "price competition more than usually risky and collusion more than usually attractive." See In re High Fructose Com Syrup Antitrust Litig., 295 F.3d 651, 657 (7th Cir. 2002). Indeed, in the Maryland Class Action, the court concluded that these conditions amounted [14] to "a text book example of an industry susceptible to efforts to maintain supracompetitive prices." In re Titanium Dioxide Antitrust Litig., 959 F. Supp. 2d 799, 827 (D. Md. 2013) (quoting Flat Glass, 385 F.3d at 361). I therefore conclude that the market for titanium dioxide was conducive to conspiracy and that DuPont had a motive to enter into such a conspiracy. As articulated above, however, evidence of motive "does not create a reasonable inference of concerted action because it merely restates interdependence." In re Chocolate, 801 F.3d at 398; see also Flat Glass, 385 F.3d at 361; In re Baby Food Antitrust Litig., 166 F.3d 112, 122 (3d Cir. 1999).

C. Actions Contrary to Interest

The second "plus factor" that may indicate an agreement is "evidence that the defendant acted contrary to its interests." Flat Glass, 385 F.3d at 360. HN10[] When assessing this factor, a court looks for "evidence of conduct that would be irrational assuming that the defendant operated in a competitive market," or "[p]ut differently, . . . 'evidence that the market behaved in a noncompetitive manner.'" Id. at 360-61 (quoting In re High Fructose Corn Syrup, 295 F.3d at 655).

Here, Valspar points to several types of evidence that it argues satisfy this plus factor. Valspar contends that the market shares of the titanium dioxide manufacturers remained static, that defendants raised prices without correlated changes in the market, and that the defendants made inter-company sales at nonmarket prices. (D.I. 286 at 17-19). Each category [15] of evidence is addressed separately below.

Valspar contends that the market shares of the titanium dioxide producers remained relatively stable—despite some shifts from [*243] year-to-year—during the Conspiracy Period. (D.I. 303, Ex. 584 at 51-55; D.I. 313, Ex. 985 ¶¶ 174-84). Using the same evidence, DuPont argues that there were significant shifts in overall market shares throughout the Conspiracy Period. (D.I. 381 at 11-12). The undisputed evidence shows that DuPont's share fluctuated between 27% and 35%; Millennium's between 15% and 22%; Kronos's between 14% and 20%; and Huntsman's between 7% and 10%. (D.I. 313, Ex. 985 at 102). Even granting that Valspar's interpretation of stability is correct, this is entirely consistent—according to Valspar's own expert—with market shares in a concentrated, oligopolistic market. (D.I. 248, Ex. 109 ¶¶ 177-79). Therefore, even accepting Valspar's view, this fact does not support an inference of conspiracy.

In arguing that the price increases were not correlated with the market or "to supply-and-demand principles," Valspar relies on its expert, who opines that, by raising prices, DuPont overcharged Valspar by an average of 16% during the Conspiracy Period. [16] (D.I. 286 at 18-19; D.I. 312; Exs. 981 at 10, 982). Dr. McClave asserts that this overcharge has no non-collusive explanation. (D.I. 286 at 18-19; D.I. 312; Exs. 981 at 10, 982). The 16% figure is based on the average overcharge during the damages period of 2003 to 2013. (D.I. 312, Ex. 981 at 6). DuPont argues against the existence of an overcharge, but for purposes of this motion, does not dispute Dr. McClave's model or his conclusion that there was an overcharge. (D.I. 240 at 35 n.114).

HN11[] "[A]bsent increases in marginal cost or demand, raising prices generally does not approximate—and cannot be mistaken as—competitive conduct." Flat Glass, 385 F.3d at 358. While raising prices cannot be mistaken as competitive conduct, it does not necessarily follow that raising prices is evidence of an agreement. A "firm's motivation . . . to meet rival prices . . . constitute[s] only interdependence." In re Baby Food, 166 F.3d at 135; see also White v. R.M. Packer Co., 635 F.3d 571, 586 (1st Cir. 2011) ("One does not need an agreement to bring about this kind of follow-the-leader effect in a concentrated industry." (quoting Clamp-All Corp. v. Cast Iron Pipe Inst., 851 F.2d 478, 484 (1st Cir. 1988))). For parallel pricing to go "beyond mere interdependence," it "must be so unusual that in the absence of an advance agreement, no reasonable firm would have engaged in it." In re Baby Food, 166 F.3d at 135. Here, the evidence is entirely consistent [17] with interdependent behavior. Nothing about the parallel price increase announcements is "so unusual" that "no reasonable firm would have engaged in it." Id. Indeed, "oligopolists may maintain supracompetitive prices through rational, interdependent decision making, as opposed to unlawful concerted action, if the oligopolists independently conclude that the industry as a whole would be better off by raising prices." In re Chocolate Confectionary Antitrust Litig., 801 F.3d 383, 397 (3d Cir. 2015). "[E]vidence of a price increase disconnected from changes in costs or demand only raises the question: was the anticompetitive price increase the result of lawful, rational interdependence or of an unlawful price-fixing conspiracy?" Id. at 400. Dr. McClave's opinion, by itself, therefore cannot raise an inference of conspiracy. As the Supreme Court has advised, "[e]xpert testimony is useful as a guide to interpreting market facts, but it is not a substitute for them." Brooke Grp. Ltd. v. Brown & Williamson Tobacco Corp., 509 U.S. 209, 242, 113 S. Ct. 2578, 125 L. Ed. 2d 168 (1993).

Valspar argues that evidence of inter-company sales at nonmarket prices is evidence of conduct contrary to self-interest. (D.I. 286 at 19). Valspar's expert, Dr. [*244] Williams, argues that these sales are evidence of conspiracy because they could be "true-ups." [18] (D.I. 247, Ex. 106 ¶¶ 100-01). That is, they could be redistributions of gains or losses in share in accordance with the terms of an agreement. (Id.). Additionally, Dr. Williams opines that "if one seller buys anything from another at nonmarket prices, then a resource transfer is made for which there is no reasonable noncollusive explanation." (D.I. 247, Ex. 106 101-02 (quoting William E. Kovacic et al., *Plus Factors and Agreement in Antitrust Law, 110 Mich. L. Rev. 393, 423 (2011))). Throughout the Conspiracy Period, DuPont and the other defendants made inter-company sales at below-market prices. (D.I. 312, Ex. 983 at 67-76; D.I. 298-303, Exs. 476-579). It is undisputed that these sales existed; however, that does not advance Valspar's ball very far. These sales are just as consistent with non-collusive activity as with conspiracy. For instance, DuPont's purchases in 2005 and 2006 were made by DuPont's manufacturing business, which used titanium dioxide in its own products. (D.I. 248, Ex. 108 ¶¶ 194-209). Dr. Williams expressly concedes that the purchases made by DuPont during this period "might be explained by DuPont's temporary decrease in capacity due to its DeLisle plant being shut down from September 2005 through [19] February 2006 following Hurricane Katrina." (D.I. 247, Ex. 106 ¶ 103 n.157; see also D.I. 248, Ex. 108 ¶¶ 194-209). Dr. Williams also acknowledges that DuPont's purchases prices were sometimes higher and sometimes lower than the average prices for non-defendants. (D.I. 247, Ex. 106 at 64-75). Further, it is undisputed that the sales from DuPont to Kronos were largely attributable to a cross-licensing agreement reached to avoid litigation.[4] (D.I. 250, Exs. 188, 189, 204). From 2006 to 2008, the price was set by the agreement. (D.I. 250, Ex. 188 at 7-8). Thereafter, DuPont repeatedly negotiated to increase the price. (D.I. 250, Exs. 190-93, 197, 199-205). Even putting aside these non-collusive explanations, Dr. Williams acknowledged that while he had not "calculated how the shares would change given the volumes of intercompany sales . . ., [m]any of the sales [were] relatively small volumes . . . [and therefore he would not] expect that they would have resulted in large share shifts." (D.I. 382, Ex. 4 at 25-26). This concession undermines the entire theory of "true-ups." Therefore, these intercompany sales, which are consistent with a firm's independent interest, fail—under the theory advanced [20] by Dr. Williams—to be probative of conspiracy. In short, these transfers had "productive unilateral motivations" and therefore do not tend to exclude the possibility of independent action. (D.I. 247, Ex. 106 ¶ 101 (quoting William E. Kovacic et al., *Plus Factors and Agreement in Antitrust Law, 110 Mich. L. Rev. 393, 423 (2011))).

Valspar has presented sufficient evidence to show that the titanium dioxide market "behaved in a noncompetitive manner." In re High Fructose Com Syrup Antitrust Litig, 295 F.3d 651, 655 (7th Cir. 2002). Despite that showing, however, "the evidence does not go beyond interdependence and therefore does not create an inference of conspiracy." In re Chocolate Confectionary Antitrust Litig., 801 F.3d 383, 401 (3d Cir. 2015). This is not surprising, as in cases of parallel pricing, "the first two [plus] factors largely restate the phenomenon of interdependence." *In re [245] Flat Glass Antitrust Litig., 385 F.3d 350, 360 (3d Cir. 2004).

D. Evidence Implying a Traditional Conspiracy

HN12[] In cases involving oligopolists and parallel pricing, [21] the most important plus factor is the third: evidence implying a traditional conspiracy. Id. at 361. This evidence has been characterized as "non-economic evidence 'that there was an actual, manifest agreement not to compete.'" Id. (quoting In re High Fructose Corn Syrup, 295 F.3d at 661). Such evidence "may involve 'customary indications of traditional conspiracy,' or 'proof that the defendants got together and exchanged assurances of common action or otherwise adopted a common plan even though no meetings, conversations, or exchanged documents are shown.'" Id. (quoting Phillip E. Areeda & Herbert Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law 243 (2d ed. 2000)).

[4] Dr. Williams relies heavily on Professor Kovacic's article for this part of his opinion. In the section upon which Dr. Williams relies, Professor Kovacic himself notes: "Other transactions require scrutiny, such as patent licensing, cross-licensing, and patent pools, as well as the settlement of seemingly frivolous lawsuits." William E. Kovacic et al., Plus Factors and Agreement in Antitrust Law, 110 Mich. L. Rev. 393,423(2011).

To satisfy this plus factor, Valspar relies on four general categories of evidence. First, Valspar argues that the Global Statistics Program provided DuPont and the other defendants an opportunity both to share information and to conspire to fix prices. Second, Valspar contends that DuPont and the other defendants engaged in price signaling through the use of, among other things, price increase announcements. Third, Valspar argues that certain email communications are circumstantial evidence from which the Court can infer the existence of an agreement. Fourth, Valspar argues that, due to an agreement, [22] DuPont and the other defendants departed from their pre-conspiracy conduct by issuing numerous parallel price increase announcements. These categories of evidence are addressed separately below.

1. Global Statistics Program

Valspar contends that the "GSP was a means by which the defendants shared sensitive information and coordinated price increases." (D.I. 286 at 20-21). In September 2001, the TDMA's General Committee established the GSP to collect data on monthly sales, production, and inventory. (D.I. 308, Ex. 734 at 54-55). The data was then aggregated on a regional and country-by-country basis, and returned to the members of the TDMA on a monthly and quarterly basis. (D.I. 249, Ex. 183 at 16, Ex. 185 at 29-36; D.I. 242, Ex. 13 at 305-06; D.I. 307, Ex. 690). The TDMA sought DuPont's membership in the TDMA (and the GSP), because in the absence of DuPont's data, the aggregated GSP data would not be meaningful. (D.I. 249, Ex. 182). In January 2002, the TDMA amended its rules in order to admit DuPont as an Associate Member of the TDMA. (D.I. 307, Ex. 712 at 132-33). In September 2002, DuPont was approved as an Associate Member. (D.I. 307, Ex. 701 at 68).

The data reported by the GSP gave [23] the defendants "a very powerful and timely over view [sic] of market supply (production) and demand (region, country, market segment) conditions." (D.I. 306, Ex. 638 at 7). It permitted the defendants to determine "market share developments by country and region, amount and location of inventory, inventory relative to industry, industry trends, and capacity additions." (D.I. 286 at 22; D.I. 330, Ex. 1341 at 28-30).

Valspar contends that "[t]he defendants were able to disaggregate the data to better track individual firm inventories, market share, and capacity utilization." (D.I. 286 at 22; D.I. 396 at 47-48). The evidence provided by Valspar does not support this conclusion. The email—relied upon by Valspar—from Huntsman marketing analyst Paul Bradley, indicates that Huntsman could determine a production total in aggregate of Kronos (within Canada), Millennium (within Brazil), and DuPont [*246] (within Brazil and Mexico). (D.I. 307, Ex. 678 at 24). This could be achieved by subtracting the USA production totals from the North and South America production totals. (Id.). There is nothing in the record that suggests that DuPont or any other defendant could determine any individual statistics about [24] any firm other than their own. Indeed, Valspar's expert Dr. Williams conceded precisely this in his deposition. (D.I. 382, Ex. 4 at 28-29).

HN13[] Nothing about the sharing of aggregated information suggests the existence of a conspiracy. Participation in the GSP is properly characterized as "[c]onduct as consistent with permissible competition as with illegal conspiracy." Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 588, 106 S. Ct. 1348, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538 (1986). This was not an exchange of firm-specific information between competitors. It was historical, aggregated market statistics, which firms could use to analyze their position within the market. (D.I. 249, Ex. 183 at 16, Ex. 185 at 29-36; D.I. 242, Ex. 13 at 305-06; D.I. 307, Ex. 690). As such, it is directly analogous to the program at issue in In re Citric Acid Litig., 191 F.3d 1090 (9th Cir. 1999), which the court described as one which "collected figures on production and sales from its members . . . and produced statistics aggregated by country" to its members. Id. at 1099. There, the Ninth Circuit found that there was no evidence that any firm had access to firm-specific information of other members. Id. The court concluded that the program had a "perfectly legal" and "legitimate" purpose and therefore was "as consistent with legitimate behavior as with conspiratorial behavior." Id. I conclude [25] the same is true here.

Valspar also contends that during the period of 2002 to 2010, "the vast majority of the price increase announcements occurred within 30 days of a General Committee meeting of the TDMA." (D.I. 286 at 24). This demonstrates, according to Valspar, that "the defendants used the TDMA meetings to communicate their pricing plans, coordinate price increases, and confirm that each competitor would follow the leader on a price increase." (D.I. 386 at 24). The mere fact that there were communications between DuPont and the other defendants at TDMA meetings[5] does not, without more, raise an inference of conspiracy. In re Baby Food Antitrust Litig., 166 F.3d 112, 126 (3d Cir. 1999) (HN14[] "[Communications between competitors do not permit an inference of an agreement to fix prices unless 'those communications rise to the level of an agreement, tacit or otherwise.'" (quoting Alvord-Polk, Inc. v. F. Schumacher & Co., 37 F.3d 996, 1013 (3d Cir. 1994))), There is no evidence that there was any discussion of prices during these meetings and certainly no evidence of an agreement. In short, evidence "that the executives from the [industry] were in the same place at the same time . . . is insufficient to support a reasonable inference of' conspiracy. In re Chocolate Confectionary Antitrust Litig., 801 F.3d 383, 409 (3d Cir. 2015). Valspar's argument about the temporal proximity of price increases in relation [26] to TDMA meetings fares no better. In arriving at the [*247] stated "vast majority" of announcements, Valspar includes any announcements that occurred within 30 days before or after a General Committee meeting of the TDMA. (D.I. 247, Ex. 106 at 404; D.I. 286 at 24; D.I. 396 at 13). Since the meetings of the TDMA General Committee occurred quarterly, Valspar's logic would find suspect any announcement which occurred in eight out of twelve months. (D.I. 247, Ex. 106 at 404; D.I. 286 at 24; D.I. 396 at 13). This proves too much. Further, Valspar supplies no explanation as to how announcements occurring before a TDMA General Committee meeting could give rise to an inference that the meeting provided an opportunity to conspire about a subsequent price announcement.

Therefore, Valspar's evidence pertaining to the Global Statistics Program and the TDMA cannot raise a reasonable inference of conspiracy.

2. Signaling Price A nnouncements

Valspar proposes that the various price announcements issued by DuPont and the other defendants were "price beacons to competitors for the purpose of gauging their willingness to raise prices." (D.I. 286 at 25-26 (quoting In re Currency Conversion Fee Antitrust Litig., 773 F. Supp. 2d 351, 371 (S.D.N.Y. 2011)). Consistent with this theory, the court in the Maryland Class Action concluded that "[f]requent price increase announcements could have served as 'signals,' making further exchange of actual price information superfluous." In re Titanium Dioxide Antitrust Litig., 959 F. Supp. 2d 799, 828 (D. Md. 2013).

In further support of its signaling theory, Valspar cites to a presentation and several internal emails exchanged within the ranks of the defendant manufacturers. In one email, in September 2009, DuPont's North American Marketing Manager for Titanium Technologies Lloyd Sommers wrote:

> With our recent prices increases, we've begun the process of 'training' our competitors to follow our lead on price increases (or, in one [28] example, that we'll follow if they lead). From a testing perspective, it may be valuable to make the October announcement. If our competitors do follow, it sends a clear message to us that they are receiving/understanding our price increase messages. (D.I. 308, Ex. 770 at 55).

In another email, in July 2009, DuPont's Colette Daney remarked that a price increase "could help with messaging in the market place."[6] (D.I. 295, Ex. 297 at 16). A 2004 email from Millennium's Tim Edwards suggested that an

[5] It is undisputed that DuPont did not actually attend the General Meetings of the TDMA until 2010. (D.I. 242, Ex. 7 at 159; D.I. 245, Ex. 70 at 181-82; D.I. 396 at 11-12). Valspar states that this is immaterial, as DuPont attended other CEFIC meetings which were concurrent with the General Meetings. (D.I. 396 at 11-2; see also D.I. 249, Exs. 179-81). The Court will assume, for purposes of this motion, that DuPont and the other defendants [27] were at quarterly CEFIC meetings of some sort—and therefore were capable of communicating with each other in person—even though DuPont did not attend the General Meetings.

[6] The two 2009 DuPont emails seem, to put it charitably, inconsistent with the idea that DuPont had agreed to fix prices seven years earlier.

October 1st announcement date was "a bit early," while an announcement on November 1st would give "others [a] chance to get on their horses." (D.I. 298, Ex. 462). A 2008 email from a Millennium employee attached a Huntsman price increase and indicated that "[e]veryone is now on the bus." (D.I. 296, Ex. 344). On September 14, 2004, a Millennium email stated: "we have competition on board for the Oct 1 price increase announcement."[7] (D.I. 298, Ex. 436). In a strategic pricing presentation in 2007, DuPont noted in a slide titled "Lessons Learned," that in regard to "Price Leadership and Market Messaging," "[o]ur behavior, [*248] and how it is perceived, has a major impact on marketplace dynamics and pricing." (D.I. 292, [29] Ex. 93 at 36). In October 2008, Thomas Cerny of Kronos stated: "We must not give a signal to the competition with lower prices now . . . ,"[8] (D.I. 298, Ex. 407).

Valspar's characterization of this evidence largely neglects the theory of interdependence, as well as the distinction between tacit and express collusion. As stated earlier, HN15[] in an oligopoly setting, "any single firm's 'price and output decisions will have a noticeable [31] impact on the market and its rivals.'" In re Flat Glass Antitrust Litig., 385 F.3d 350, 359 (3d Cir. 2004) (quoting Phillip E. Areeda & Herbert Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law 206 (2d ed. 2000)). As a result, "oligopolists may maintain supracompetitive prices through rational, interdependent decision making, as opposed to unlawful concerted action, if the oligopolists independently conclude that the industry as a whole would be better off by raising prices." In re Chocolate Confectionary Antitrust Litig., 801 F.3d 383, 397 (3d Cir. 2015); see also In re Text Messaging Antitrust Litig., 782 F.3d 867, 871 (7th Cir. 2015) ("'[F]ollow the leader' pricing ('conscious parallelism,' as lawyers call it, 'tacit collusion' as economists prefer to call it).., means coordinating . .. pricing without an actual agreement to do so."); White v. R.M. Packer Co., 635 F.3d 571, 586 (1st Cir. 2011) ("One does not need an agreement to bring about this kind of follow-the-leader effect in a concentrated industry." (quoting Clamp-All Corp. v. Cast Iron Pipe Inst., 851 F.2d 478, 484 (1st Cir. 1988))). DuPont and the other defendants had lawful, non-collusive reasons for making public price announcements. The price announcements here served several purposes, including the satisfaction of a "contractual condition" to provide "some formal notification" to customers and the assurance to customers that announced prices (the starting point for negotiations) were raised as to all customers. (D.I. 382, Ex. 1 at 4-6, Ex. 3 at 16-18). Valspar's expert concedes that there are lawful [32] non-collusive reasons for a firm to make, public price announcements. (D.I. 382, Ex. 4 at 22-24). Even in the absence of these explanations, the parallel rises in price following a firm's announcement "may not be because they've agreed not to compete but because all of them have determined independently that they may be better off with a higher price." In re Text Messaging, 782 F.3d at 871. That this occurred over [*249] a long period of time is not surprising. In a concentrated market with high barriers to entry, "a higher price generating higher profits will not be undone by the output of new entrants." Id. at 872. Even if a new entrant caused a drastic fall in prices "that would deny them the profits [they sought to obtain] from having entered," "that drastic fall could well be the result of parallel but independent pricing decisions by the incumbent firms, rather than of agreement." Id.

---

[7] Contrary to Valspar's urging at oral argument, there is no nefarious inference of prior knowledge that can be derived from this communication. (D.I. 396 at 62-63). This conversation occurred after not only Millennium's announcement, but also the announcements from DuPont, Huntsman, and Kronos. (D.I. 247, Ex. 106 at 400).

[8] This is how the quote appears in Valspar's brief. (D.I. 286 at 25). The context is important, however. Mr. Cemy wrote this email in response to one from Kronos executive Joe Maas, where Mr. Maas informed Mr. Cemy that the Israeli paint company Tambour asked for a reduction in price for titanium dioxide. (D.I. 298, Ex. 407). Mr. Maas thought Kronos should comply and "take [that] business unless it [would] really [have] an adverse pricing impact in the market." (Id.). In response, Mr. Cemy stated that "such decisions [would] have an adverse impact on prices," and that prices [30] were higher in the Near East "as a result of significant price increases having been implemented by competition." (Id.). Mr. Cemy went on to state that Kronos should not lower prices for Tambour, as that would thereby "give a signal to competition" about Kronos' "bidding . . . for the ENAP business." (Id.). This email, as a whole, is thus best understood as one in which Kronos—knowing how its decisions may affect the market—sought to avoid providing its competitors with information about its activities. Therefore, not only does this email fail to support a nefarious inference of conspiracy, it clearly shows a perfectly legitimate, competitive interest. The Cemy excerpt is characteristic of many of the statements to which Valspar cites in support of its theory. That is, divorced from context, the quote is ambiguous. In context, the quote is not ambiguous. Instead, it can only be read as probative of "legitimate behavior." See In re Citric Acid Litig., 191 F.3d 1090, 1099 (9th Cir. 1999).

Valspar cannot "proceed by first assuming a conspiracy and then setting out to prove it." Blomkest Fertilizer, Inc. v. Potash Corp. of Saskatchewan, 203 F.3d 1028, 1037 (8th Cir. 2000). These parallel price increases, or "signals," would perhaps describe how a conspiracy practically functioned, but only if there were there some indication of an agreement to begin with, rather than conduct that could just as well be explained by independent action. [33] In short, nothing about these announcements tends to exclude the possibility of independent action. Importantly, HN16[] the "dissemination of price information is not itself, a per se violation of the Sherman Act." United States v. Citizens & S. Nat'l Bank, 422 U.S. 86, 113, 95 S. Ct. 2099, 45 L. Ed. 2d 41 (1975). Were it any other way, any evidence of lawful interdependence would also necessarily be evidence of actionable conspiracy. Despite Valspar's labeling of these announcements as "signals," it has presented no evidence that "tend[s] to exclude the possibility that the primary players in the . . . [market] were engaged in rational, lawful, parallel pricing behavior that is typical of an oligopoly." Williamson Oil Co., Inc. v. Philip Morris USA, 346 F.3d 1287, 1310 (11th Cir. 2003).

3. Other Email Communications

Valspar contends that certain emails from individuals, employed by DuPont and the other defendants, evince the existence of an agreement. Valspar repeatedly referenced these emails throughout its brief and in oral argument. The emails, however, suffer from many of the same flaws as the other evidence advanced by Valspar. That is, they are just as consistent with oligopoly as they are with conspiracy.

Several emails relate to market share. For instance, in 2007, Millennium executive John Hall advised that Millennium should "[b]e disciplined, keep our volume, do not take [34] others." (D.I. 311, Ex. 937 at 47). Also in 2007, Michael Card of Millennium stated: "Our share YTD is 20%, and our historical and sustainable share is 21%. The 1% represents approx. 8000MT analyzed sales we are not getting. We should have this extra share - customers have been and want to buy this from us. Competitors will let us have this." (D.I. 309, Ex. 816 at 192). A 2002 email from a Kronos employee, when discussing volume, stated: "I assume we still have SP to sell. The SP approved is 2090. Probably will be only 500st to start as this will not disrupt DUP." (D.I. 298, Ex. 456 at 59).

Other emails pertain to price increases. For instance, DuPont executive Ian Edwards wrote in 2006 that Millennium's and Huntsman's "reading of the CEFIC info like ours should give them confidence that NA price increases can be prosecuted despite the flat market in [North America] itself." (D.I. 306, Ex. 657). In March 2009, as "North American and Western European demand is decreasing," a DuPont executive commented, "[customers will ask why their 4Q price has not decreased or why they have not seen a price decrease this year." (D.I. 310, Ex. 861).

Valspar also cites to emails that refer to industry [35] "discipline" and "collective needs." (D.I. 286 at 28). For instance, in 2002, Millennium executive David Vercollone told other Millennium employees that the GSP would "be the best opportunity we have in structuring industry data for all [*250] of our collective needs."[9] (D.I. 308, Ex. 746 at 22). In a 2001 strategic development presentation, Millennium wrote—in a slide called "TiO2 Industry Trends"—"Possibly more industry discipline on pricing and capacity." (D.I. 304, Ex. 621, Part 1, at 8). In the minutes to a 2012 Millennium meeting, an entry states: "There is usually good discipline in our industry, however, Kronos were the first to break discipline and begin to sell in markets they don't usually sell in." (D.I. 303, Ex. 593 at 75).

These statements, while evidencing a noncompetitive market, do not tend to exclude the possibility of independent action. These emails are similar to those in In re Text Messaging because there [36] is no indication that any author or recipient "believed there was a conspiracy among the [defendants]." In re Text Messaging Antitrust Litig., 782 F.3d 867, 873 (7th Cir. 2015). Contrary to Valspar's interpretation, these emails—along with the others referenced by Valspar in their brief and during oral argument—actually suggest the absence of an agreement. The employees of DuPont and the other defendants repeatedly emphasize their lack of assurance as to what the other players in the industry were doing or were intending to do. For instance, the phrase "reading of the CEFIC info like ours should give them confidence" suggests an awareness of how other firms might act, but not an express agreement. (See D.I. 306, Ex. 657). DuPont and the other defendants relied on the Global Statistics Program to gain information about the state of the market and competition. This information was used to "make better business decisions." (D.I. 308, Ex. 746). It appears that, in making those decisions, DuPont and the other defendants undertook actions that could plausibly be interpreted as "collusive." (See D.I. 311, Ex. 937 at 47). That is not by itself sufficient, however, as HN17[] there is a "fundamental distinction between express and tacit collusion:" while "[e]xpress collusion violates [37] antitrust law[,] tacit collusion does not." In re Text Messaging, 782 F.3d at 867; see also In re Chocolate Confectionary Antitrust Litig., 801 F.3d 383, 398, 400 (3d Cir. 2015); In re Flat Glass Antitrust Litig., 385 F.3d 350, 362 (3d Cir. 2004). The same distinction is important when interpreting terms that refer to the industry generally. In an oligopoly, it may be in a firm's best interest to consider the interests and needs of the industry as a whole. "[O]ligopolists [may] independently conclude that the industry as a whole would be better off by raising prices." In re Chocolate, 801 F.3d at 397; see also In re Text Messaging, 782 F.3d at 871. Tacit collusion, however, does not suggest an agreement.

[9] It is clear from context that "our collective needs" refers to Millennium's needs, not the needs of Millennium and its competitors. Mr. Vercollone uses the phrase after separately asking four Millennium employees whether the statistics would meet their individual needs.

The communications at issue here are markedly different from those found sufficient to survive summary judgment in cases like Petruzzi's IGA Supermarkets, Inc. v. Darling-Delaware Co., 998 F.2d 1224 (3d Cir. 1993) and In re High Fructose Corn Syrup Antitrust Litig., 295 F.3d 651 (7th Cir. 2002). In Petruzzi's, a witness testified that a defendant "followed a 'code' in not soliciting the accounts of other renderers." Petruzzi's, 998 F.2d at 1233-34. A taped conversation revealed that a defendant firm's executive stated: "You're not playing." Id. at 1235-36. The Third Circuit found that the reasonable inference there was that this was an "attempt[] to get [someone] to play by the rules." Id. In High Fructose Corn Syrup, employees made the following statements, among others: [*251] "[w]e have an understanding within the industry not to undercut each other's prices" and "our competitors are our friends. Our customers are the enemy." In re High Fructose Corn Syrup, 295 F.3d at 662. Further, an executive stated that [38] "every business [he was] in [was] an organization," and in context, "it appear[ed] that 'organization' meant price-fixing conspiracy." Id. In these cases, the evidence tended to exclude the possibility of independent action. There were references to some sort of explicit agreement between competitors. Here, that is absent.

Valspar further contends that communications involving industry consultants Jim Fisher and Gary Cianfichi "demonstrate [that] these consultants served as conduits in the price-fixing conspiracy." (D.I. 286 at 29). In support of this assertion, Valspar points to numerous documents. Some documents show the sharing of information between Jim Fisher and Gary Cianfichi. For instance, in 2003, Mr. Cianfichi asked Mr. Fisher: "Are global TiO2 inventories modest, normal, high - steady or growing at Dup, KMG, Kronos, HT? . . . . Directional views with a few numbers on inventory if you can get them would be appropriate." (D.I. 319 Ex. 1058; see also Exs. 1056-57). Other communications show that Jim Fisher gave advice to Kronos executive Joe Maas:

> Jim, according [to] the Cefic production data and your estimate of capacity shutdowns ww . . ., the capacity utilization rates could be in the [39] mid 90's which is a prescription for prices to move up!. I know this is missing non Cefic production and demand but cefic is a big chunk of the business. Do you buy this story?? (D.I. 320, Ex. 1075; see also Exs. 1074, 1076).

Other emails indicate that DuPont regularly relied on the advice of Jim Fisher. (See, e.g., D.I. 319, Exs. 1026, 1028-29, 1031-33). In its brief, Valspar—without much discussion—cites to many more documents pertaining to Mr. Fisher and Mr. Cianfichi. (D.I. 298 at 30 n.19).

None of these cited communications support an inference of conspiracy. Valspar's theory amounts to an assertion that the consultants could have been an avenue whereby DuPont and the other defendants shared information pursuant to a conspiracy. That does not make the usage of consultants suggestive of conspiracy, nor does it tend to exclude the possibility of independent action. It defies common sense to suggest that there is no non-collusive purpose to retain consultants. Much of the cited evidence has little, if anything, to do with the activities of competitors within the industry. Further, to the extent that the consultants did help one competitor gather information on another, this is certainly [40] within a firm's unilateral self-interest. Indeed, "to keep tabs on the commercial activities of [one's] competitors" is "economically beneficial." Williamson Oil Co., Inc. v. Philip Morris

USA, 346 F.3d 1287, 1313 (11th Cir. 2003). Therefore, the use of these consultants to gather information "does not tend to exclude the possibility of independent action or to establish anticompetitive collusion." Id.

4. Departure from Pre-Conspiracy Conduct

Valspar argues that the parallel price increase announcements increased in frequency during the Conspiracy Period. (D.I. 286 at 14-17; D.I. 312, Ex. 983 ¶¶ 87-89, figs. 7, 8; D.I. 313, Ex. 985 ¶ 69, fig. 5). DuPont does not dispute this fact, but does dispute the inferences that can be drawn from it. (D.I. 381 at 11 n.7). Based on the data available, there were three unanimous parallel price increase announcements between 1994 and 2001. (D.I. 312, Ex. 983 at 59). There were a number of other nearly unanimous parallel price increase [*252] announcements during this period. (Id.). During the Conspiracy Period, there were 31 parallel price increase announcements. (D.I. 286 at 14; D.I. 312, Ex. 983 at 19-31). Valspar argues this increase in frequency is because the "competitors agreed to raise their prices, rather than doing so independently [41] and with no concerted coordination." (See D.I. 286 at 14-15 (quoting In re Flat Glass Antitrust Litig., 385 F.3d 350, 355 (3d Cir. 2004))).

Contrary to Valspar's assertion that this departure "is unprecedented and reflects strong circumstantial evidence of conspiracy," this variation in conduct gives rise to no such inference. (See D.I. 286 at 14). HN18[] As the Third Circuit has recently held, "[i]t is generally unremarkable for the pendulum in oligopolistic markets to swing from less to more interdependent and cooperative." In re Chocolate Confectionary Antitrust Litig., 801 F.3d 383, 410 (3d Cir. 2015). In fact, the extent of interdependence within an oligopolistic market "may be either weak or strong and may vary from time to time." Id. (quoting Phillip E. Areeda & Herbert Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law 229 (3d ed. 2010)). In order "[f]or a change in conduct to create an inference of a conspiracy, the shift in behavior must be a 'radical' or 'abrupt' change from the industry's business practices." In re Chocolate, 801 F.3d at 410 (quoting Toys "R" Us, Inc. v. FTC, 221 F.3d 928, 935 (7th Cir. 2000)).

The evidence presented by Valspar indicates that public announcements of price increases and parallel pricing were not historically uncommon in the titanium dioxide industry. (D.I. 312, Ex. 983 ¶¶ 87-89, figs. 7, 8). The behavior of DuPont and the other defendants is "consistent with how this industry has historically operated." In re Chocolate, 801 F.3d at 410. The [42] increased frequency of conduct that was lawful both before and during the conspiracy does not mark a "radical" or "abrupt" change. Id. Instead, the record reflects an "unremarkable" swing of the pendulum in an interdependent, oligopolistic market, and therefore does not support a reasonable inference of a conspiracy. See id.

E. Sufficiency of the Evidence

I have carefully reviewed the considered analysis in the Maryland Class Action. See In re Titanium Dioxide Antitrust Litig., 959 F. Supp. 2d 799 (D. Md. 2013). While there is substantially the same record in this case as in the Maryland Class Action, I must reach a different conclusion.[10] HN19[] In determining whether Valspar can survive summary judgment here, the key question is whether Valspar has advanced sufficient "evidence that would enable a reasonable jury to reject the hypothesis that the defendants foreswore price competition without actually agreeing to do so." In re Flat Glass Antitrust Litig., 385 F.3d 350, 368 (3d Cir. 2004) (quoting In re High Fructose Com Syrup Antitrust Litig., 295 F.3d 651, 661 (7th Cir. 2002)). Evidence used to meet that burden of production cannot be "as consistent with interdependence as with a conspiracy," as that does not "tend to exclude [*253] the possibility that [10] The Third Circuit's Chocolate Confectionary decision, decided after the Maryland Class Action ruling, is, I think, quite instructive. While it remains clear that careful consideration of the evidentiary record is necessary, it seems to me that Chocolate Confectionary might also be understood as suggesting that, in the antitrust oligopoly context, summary judgment cannot be avoided simply by having amassed a significant amount of ambiguous evidence. See In re Chocolate, 801 F.3d at 396-97, 397 n.9 ("[A] plaintiff relying on ambiguous evidence alone cannot raise a reasonable inference of a conspiracy sufficient to survive summary judgment." (citing Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 597 n.21, 106 S. Ct. 1348, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538 (1986))).

the [defendants] acted lawfully." In re Chocolate Confectionary Antitrust Litig., 801 F.3d 383, 412 (3d Cir. 2015); see also In re Text Messaging Antitrust Litig., 782 F.3d 867, 879 (7th Cir. 2015) (finding that the plaintiffs had only shown "[t]acit collusion," which is not prohibited by § 1, when they "presented circumstantial [43] evidence consistent with an inference of collusion, but that. . . . [was] equally consistent with independent parallel behavior").

In short, Valspar has not satisfied its burden of production. The evidence cited by Valspar demonstrates that the titanium dioxide industry is an oligopoly. That oligopoly may well have caused substantial anticompetitive harm to Valspar. To successfully bring a § 1 horizontal price fixing case, however, there must be evidence of an actual agreement to fix prices. That is lacking here. In alleging an eleven year conspiracy to fix prices, Valspar has failed to [44] obtain any evidence which, while consistent with conspiracy, is not just as consistent with the phenomenon of interdependence which is characteristic of oligopolies. In the oligopoly context, lawful conduct can bear a great resemblance to unlawful conduct. Without evidence that tends to exclude the possibility of independent action, however, Valspar has not presented evidence that creates a dispute as to the material fact of whether there was an agreement. Therefore, I find that summary judgment in favor of DuPont is appropriate.

V. CONCLUSION

For the reasons set forth above, defendant's motion for summary judgment (D.I. 239) is GRANTED. An appropriate order will be entered.

ORDER

For the reasons discussed in the accompanying Memorandum Opinion, IT IS HEREBY ORDERED:

Defendant's Motion for Summary Judgment (D.I. 239) is GRANTED.

ORDER GRANTING MOTION TO STRIKE AND GRANTING IN PART AND DENYING IN PART MOTION TO DISMISS MERCURY'S COUNTERCLAIMS

(Docket No. 94)

Plaintiff Heartland Payment Systems filed its original complaint on January 29, 2014. Defendant Mercury Payment Systems moved to dismiss the complaint and, on November 7, 2014, the Court granted Mercury's motion and granted Heartland leave to amend. Heartland filed an amended complaint, and Mercury moved to dismiss. On February [*2] 24, 2015, the Court granted Mercury's motion in part and denied it in part.

Mercury filed its answer to Heartland's amended complaint on March 23, 2015. In its answer, it asserted various affirmative defenses and counterclaims against Heartland. Heartland now moves to strike Mercury's affirmative defense of unclean hands, and moves to dismiss Mercury's counterclaims in their entirety. (Docket No. 94). Mercury has filed an opposition. Heartland has filed a reply. Having considered the motions on the papers, the Court GRANTS in part the motion to dismiss, DENIES it in part, GRANTS the motion to strike and GRANTS leave to amend.

BACKGROUND

The following is a summary of facts alleged in the counterclaims and taken as true for purposes of this motion.

Heartland and Mercury are competitors in the payment processing industry. Docket No. 84, Mercury's Counterclaims ¶ 16. Both companies offer payment processing services to small-and medium-sized businesses. Id. ¶¶ 15-18.

Heartland advertises its services on its website. Id. ¶ 20. On the website, Heartland states that it provides "fair, honest and fully disclosed payment solutions to help businesses prosper." Id. ¶ 21. It purports to offer its services [*3] to all of its customers according to an "interchange-plus" pricing model. Id. ¶ 19. Heartland claims that the term "interchange-plus" is a term of art in the industry, which is well understood by small and medium-sized businesses. Id. According to Mercury, however, "interchange-plus" does not have a generally accepted meaning in the payment processing industry. Id.

Mercury alleges that, despite Heartland's advertising that it offers "all" of its customers interchange-plus pricing, that offer extends only to customers who process $50,000 or more yearly. Id. ¶ 23. Mercury alleges that, in response to an unidentified survey about Heartland's advertising, several businesses complained that Heartland does not in fact offer "true" interchange-plus pricing, and that the pricing for businesses that process less than $50,000 per year is "way higher than any sane interchange-plus plan." Id. ¶ 24.

Heartland also advertises that it offers "fair and upfront pricing" to its customers. Id. ¶ 32. Mercury alleges that businesses understand that to mean that all fees and charges are disclosed in advance. Id. Despite this guarantee, Mercury alleges that Heartland charges "hidden early-termination fees." [*4] Id. ¶ 33. Mercury alleges that three of Heartland's former customers were surprised when they were charged $295 for terminating their contract early. Id. ¶ 34.

Mercury also alleges that Heartland "marks up certain fees that it claims to pass through at cost." Id. ¶ 33. These fees include MasterCard and Visa settlement fees. Id. Mercury also alleges that Heartland receives rebates from American Express, but fails to share those rebates with the businesses it serves. Id.

In addition to Heartland's deceptive pricing, Mercury alleges that Heartland falsely promises to keep businesses' customer data "safe at every level." Id. ¶ 43. On Heartland's website, it boasts that "Heartland Secure," its data protection system, "is the most secure credit card processing method backed by the most comprehensive merchant warranty -— in the industry." Id. It goes on to state: "Through our innovative use of [encryption and tokens] we are able to protect your customer credit card data from the moment you swipe their card. After that we use [another encryption] to make the data invisible to prying eyes. And this means that your business is protected like no other." Id. Mercury alleges that this statement is [*5] false because the "Heartland Secure" system is not totally secure, as admitted by Heartland's Chief Information Officer when he stated, "There is no such thing as totally secure software anymore, and there probably never will be." Id. ¶ 44.

Mercury also alleges that, "since at least 2011," Heartland has engaged in "deceptive business practices" by charging a fee and describing it on merchant statements as a "Service & Regulatory Mandate." Id. ¶¶ 3, 75 (describing the "mandate" as "but one specific example of Heartland's deceptive business practices"). According to Mercury, "[n]o such regulatory 'mandate' exists in the industry," id. ¶ 75, and using that terminology suggests that Heartland must charge the fee when, in fact, it charges the fee and keeps the proceeds without providing them to any regulatory entity, id.

In addition to its allegedly deceptive practices, Heartland has created a website that allegedly includes disparaging remarks about Mercury. Id. ¶ 52. On the site, Heartland states that Mercury has overcharged and defrauded businesses in the amount of $68,400,000 and has inflated Visa and MasterCard fees. Id. ¶ 53. Heartland also published a press release on the website that [*6] refers to this litigation. Id. Mercury alleges that it has suffered damages due to Heartland's conduct. Id. ¶ 60.

Mercury asserts five causes of action against Heartland: (1) false advertising in violation of 15 U.S.C. § 1125(a)(1)(B) (Lanham Act); (2) unfair competition in violation of California's Unfair Competition Law, Business and Professions Code section 17200 et seq. (UCL); (3) false advertising in violation of California Business and Professions Code section 17500 et seq. (FAL); (4) defamation; and (5) trade libel. As is relevant to this motion, Mercury also asserts an unclean hands affirmative defense.

LEGAL STANDARD

The standards that apply to the complaint apply to the counterclaims as well. See Charles Allen Wright & Arthur R. Miller, 5 Fed. Prac. & Proc. Civ. § 1407 (3d ed.) (noting that the "pleading of counterclaims and crossclaims is subject to the same Rule 8 standards that apply to the statement of any claim for relief" and that "an attempt to invoke Rule 13 must state a claim upon which relief can be granted . . ."). A complaint must contain a "short and plain statement of the claim showing that the pleader is entitled to relief." Fed. R. Civ. P. 8(a). The plaintiff must proffer "enough facts to state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face." Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 678, 129 S. Ct. 1937, 173 L. Ed. 2d 868 (2009) (quoting Bell Atl. Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 570, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007)). A claim is facially plausible "when the plaintiff [*7] pleads factual content that allows the court to draw the reasonable inference that the defendant is liable for the misconduct alleged." Id.

In considering whether the complaint is sufficient to state a claim, the court will take all material allegations as true and construe them in the light most favorable to the complaining party. Metzler Inv. GMBH v. Corinthian Colleges, Inc., 540 F.3d 1049, 1061 (9th Cir. 2008). The court's review is limited to the face of the complaint, materials incorporated into the complaint by reference, and facts of which the court may take judicial notice. Id. However, the court need not accept legal conclusions, including "threadbare recitals of the elements of a cause of action, supported by mere conclusory statements." Iqbal, 556 U.S. at 678 (citing Twombly, 550 U.S. at 555).

When granting a motion to dismiss, the court is generally required to grant the complaining party leave to amend, even if no request to amend the pleading was made, unless amendment would be futile. Cook, Perkiss & Liehe, Inc. v. N. Cal. Collection Serv. Inc., 911 F.2d 242, 246-47 (9th Cir. 1990). In determining whether amendment would be futile, the court examines whether the complaint could be amended to cure the defect requiring dismissal "without contradicting any of the allegations of [the] original complaint." Reddy v. Litton Indus., Inc., 912 F.2d 291, 296 (9th Cir. 1990).

DISCUSSION

I. Rule 9(b)

As a threshold matter, Heartland argues that Mercury's false advertising, FAL [*8] and UCL causes of action fail because they do not satisfy the heightened pleading requirements of Rule 9(b).

"In all averments of fraud or mistake, the circumstances constituting fraud or mistake shall be stated with particularity." Fed. R. Civ. P. 9(b). "Therefore, in an action based on state law, while a district court will rely on state law to ascertain the elements of fraud that a party must plead, it will also follow Rule 9(b) in requiring that the circumstances of the fraud be pleaded with particularity." Marolda v. Symantec Corp., 672 F. Supp. 2d 992, 996 (N.D. Cal. 2009); see also Kearns v. Ford Motor Co., 567 F.3d 1120, 1125 (9th Cir. 2009). "[W]hen the claim is 'grounded in fraud,' the pleading of that claim as a whole is subject to Rule 9(b)'s particularity requirement." Marolda, 672 F. Supp. 2d at 997 (citing Vess v. Ciba-Geigy Corp. USA, 317 F.3d 1097, 1104 (9th Cir. 2003)). A plaintiff must describe the alleged fraud in specific enough terms "to give defendants notice of the particular misconduct so that they can defend against the charge." Kearns, 567 F.3d at 1124. Rule 9(b) requires the plaintiff to allege "the who, what, when, where, and how" of the alleged fraudulent conduct. Cooper v. Pickett, 137 F.3d 616, 627 (9th Cir. 1997). "The requirement of specificity in a fraud action against a corporation requires the plaintiff to allege the names of the persons who made the allegedly fraudulent representations, their authority to speak, to whom they spoke, what they said or wrote, and when it was said or written." Tarmann v. State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co., 2 Cal. App. 4th 153, 157, 2 Cal. Rptr. 2d 861 (1991).

While Mercury [*9] may not use the word "fraud" in its false advertising, UCL and FAL causes of action, it has alleged "a unified course of fraudulent conduct and rel[ies] entirely on that course of conduct as the basis of [its] claim[s]." See Kearns, 567 F.3d at 1125. Throughout these counterclaims, Mercury alleges that Heartland has "intentionally set out to deceive the relevant consuming public." Mercury's Counterclaims ¶¶ 27, 38, 47. It claims that Heartland's advertisements are "literally false or misleading." Id. ¶¶ 30, 41, 45. Mercury also seeks punitive damages under California law "in view of Heartland's willful and malicious conduct." Docket No. 84 at 40.

Accordingly, the Court finds that Mercury must plead each of its false advertising, UCL and FAL claims with the particularity required by Rule 9(b). Mercury's defamation and trade libel claims relate to Heartland's statements on a website about Mercury and this litigation, and Heartland does not respond specifically to Mercury's argument that Rule 9(b) does not apply to these claims. The Court assumes that it does not.

II. First Cause of Action: False Advertising in Violation of 15 U.S.C. § 1125(a)(1)(B) (Lanham Act)

Mercury alleges that Heartland falsely advertises its "Interchange-Plus" pricing model, its "Fair and Upfront" [*10] pricing guarantee and its data security system.

> The elements of a Lanham Act . . . false advertising claim are: (1) a false statement of fact by the defendant in a commercial advertisement about its own or another's product; (2) the statement actually deceived or has the tendency to deceive a substantial segment of its audience; (3) the deception is material, in that it is likely to influence the purchasing decision; (4) the defendant caused its false statement to enter interstate commerce; and (5) the plaintiff has been or is likely to be injured as a result of the false statement, either by direct diversion of sales from itself to defendant or by a lessening of the goodwill associated with its products.

Southland Sod Farms v. Stover Seed Co., 108 F.3d 1134, 1139 (9th Cir. 1997) (citing 15 U.S.C. § 1125(a)(1)(B)). Accordingly, > to succeed on an Internet false advertising claim, a plaintiff must show that a statement made in a commercial advertisement or promotion is false or misleading, that it actually deceives or has the tendency to deceive a substantial segment of its audience, that it's likely to influence purchasing decisions and that the plaintiff has been or is likely to be injured by the false advertisement.

TrafficSchool.com, Inc. v. Edriver Inc., 653 F.3d 820, 828 (9th Cir. 2011).

As discussed below, Mercury fails to state a claim under Rule 9(b) and the Lanham [*11] Act.

1. "Interchange-Plus" pricing

It appears that Mercury's sole allegation on this point is that Heartland's website falsely states that "all" merchants are offered "interchange-plus" pricing. However, the facts Mercury provides in support of that allegation suggest that the real issue is not that "all" merchants do not receive "interchange-plus" pricing, but that the pricing offered to businesses with less than $50,000 yearly processing is not "true" or "sane" "interchange-plus" pricing. See Mercury's Counterclaims ¶ 24.

Heartland argues, "Mercury fails to plead any explanation of how Heartland's plan offered to merchants who process less than $50,000 per year is inconsistent with interchange-plus pricing." Heartland's Mot. to Dismiss, Docket No. 94 at 11. The Court agrees. Other than the alleged statements of two anonymous merchants commenting on an unidentified survey, Mercury states no facts to support the allegation that Heartland's customers that process less than $50,000 a year are not receiving "interchange-plus" pricing. Mercury does not identify the survey that reported these merchants' alleged dissatisfaction with Heartland's services, or provide any facts to support the [*12] inference that the survey exists or that the merchants' claims are credible.

Thus, Mercury fails to state facts sufficient to support its allegation that Heartland's "interchange-plus" pricing claim is false or misleading. Accordingly, this cause of action cannot be based on the allegedly false "interchange-plus" pricing guarantee.

2. "Fair and Upfront" pricing

Mercury claims that Heartland's guarantee of "fair and upfront pricing" is false because Heartland: (1) fails to pass through at cost MasterCard and Visa settlement fees; (2) fails to share an American Express rebate with businesses; and (3) fails to disclose an early termination fee. Heartland argues this basis for Mercury's Lanham Act claim should be dismissed because Mercury "never provides an explanation or support for its allegation that Heartland falsely advertises these fees or pricing." Docket No. 94 at 12.

Mercury does not state any facts to support its allegation that the MasterCard and Visa settlement fees are not disclosed. It does not state what the settlement fees are or how they should be disclosed in order to support the inference that those fees are not disclosed "upfront." Likewise, it does not state any facts [*13] to support the inference that those fees are marked-up and, thus, are not "passed through at cost."

In addition, Mercury's allegation with regard to the American Express rebate is insufficient to support its claim. Mercury alleges that the phrase "fair and upfront pricing" "necessarily implies that Heartland will not . . . siphon off rebates received from card networks." Mercury's Counterclaims ¶ 36. Mercury does not provide any facts to support the conclusion that telling businesses how they will be charged also implies that Heartland will share money that is returned to it by the card network.

Lastly, with regard to the early termination fees, Mercury again relies on the responses to an unidentified survey of anonymous businesses that formerly used Heartland's services. Pleading that a termination fee was not disclosed until a merchant had signed a contract, and that nonetheless a termination fee was later charged, could constitute pleading that the "fair and upfront pricing" advertisement was false or misleading. Nonetheless, the Court agrees with Heartland that Mercury has failed to meet its Rule 9(b) requirements. Mercury alleges that a first businessperson stated that he or she was told [*14] by a Heartland sales representative that there was no cancellation fee or penalty, and that the fee does not appear "on any document you sign." Mercury's Counterclaims ¶ 34 (quotation marks omitted). Yet when he or she cancelled the contract, a fee was charged. Id. To the extent Mercury relies on a sales representative's statement rather than Heartland's website, it is insufficient under Rule 9(b); for oral statements, the complainant must "allege the names of the persons who made the allegedly fraudulent representations, their authority to speak, to whom they spoke, what they said or wrote, and when it was said or written." Tarmann, 2 Cal. App. 4th at 157. To the extent this allegation and Mercury's allegation that two other business owners stated that the early termination fee was not disclosed in Heartland's contract or any document they signed, the allegations do not support Mercury's claim that the fee was not disclosed "upfront" elsewhere. And one of those unidentified merchants' statement to the unidentified surveyor about an undisclosed termination fee is also insufficient under Rule 9(b) to allege how the "fair and upfront pricing" advertisement was false or misleading because he or she does not state that he or she was [*15] charged the fee.

Thus, Mercury fails to state facts sufficient to support its allegation that Heartland's "fair and upfront pricing" claim is false or misleading. Accordingly, this cause of action cannot be based on the allegedly false "fair and upfront pricing" guarantee.

3. Data security

Mercury alleges that Heartland's website contains a statement about how securely the "Heartland Secure" data protection system keeps businesses' customer data. Mercury's Counterclaims ¶ 43. Mercury claims that the statement "necessarily implies" that Heartland's security system is "totally secure." Id. ¶ 45.

Mercury does not state any facts to support its conclusion that Heartland's description of its data security system implies that the system is "totally secure." Nowhere in Heartland's statement does the phrase "totally secure" appear. Furthermore, Mercury does not state any facts to support the conclusion that Heartland does not provide the "most secure credit card processing methods backed by the most comprehensive merchant warranty . . . in the industry."

Thus, Mercury fails to state facts sufficient to support its allegation that Heartland's data security claim is false or misleading. Accordingly, [*16] this cause of action cannot be based on the allegedly false data security statements.

4. Conclusion

For all the reasons discussed above, Mercury has failed to plead its Lanham Act cause of action with the particularity required by Rule 9(b). Accordingly, the Court GRANTS Heartland's motion to dismiss the Lanham Act cause of action. Mercury is granted leave to amend to remedy these deficiencies if it can do so truthfully and without contradicting the allegations in its prior pleadings.

III. Second Cause of Action: Unfair Competition in Violation of California Business and Professions Code section 17200 et seq. (UCL)

The UCL prohibits "any unlawful, unfair or fraudulent business act . . . ." Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17200 et seq. Because section 17200 is written in the disjunctive, it establishes three types of unfair competition. Davis v. Ford Motor Credit Co., 179 Cal. App. 4th 581, 593, 101 Cal. Rptr. 3d 697 (2009). Therefore, a practice may be prohibited as unfair or deceptive even if it is not unlawful and vice versa. Podolsky v. First Healthcare Corp., 50 Cal. App. 4th 632, 647, 58 Cal. Rptr. 2d 89 (1996). Mercury alleges claims under all three prongs. Because the counterclaims sound in fraud, Mercury must plead its UCL causes of action in accordance with Rule 9(b).

A. Unlawful business practices

An unlawful business practice includes anything that can be called a business practice and that is forbidden by law. Ticconi v. Blue Shield of Cal. Life & Health Ins., 160 Cal. App. 4th 528, 539, 72 Cal. Rptr. 3d 888 (2008). Any federal, state or local law can serve as a predicate for an unlawful [*17] business practice action. Smith v. State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co., 93 Cal. App. 4th 700, 718, 113 Cal. Rptr. 2d 399 (2001). Thus, the UCL incorporates violations of other laws and treats them as unlawful practices independently actionable under the UCL. Id.; Chabner v. United of Omaha Life Ins. Co., 225 F.3d 1042, 1048 (9th Cir. 2000); Cel-Tech Commc'ns., Inc. v. L.A. Cellular Tel. Co., 20 Cal. 4th 163, 180, 83 Cal. Rptr. 2d 548, 973 P.2d 527 (1999).

Because Mercury relies on the same allegations to support this claim as it does to support its Lanham Act claim and its California False Advertising claim, Mercury's allegations fail under Rule 9(b) and are insufficient to state a claim under either statute, as discussed elsewhere in this order.

Accordingly, Mercury's unlawful business practice claim fails.

B. Unfair business practices

"When a plaintiff who claims to have suffered injury from a direct competitor's 'unfair' act or practice invokes section 17200," the Court considers "'unfair' in that section [to] mean[] conduct that threatens an incipient violation of an antitrust law, or violates the policy or spirit of one of those laws because its effects are comparable to or the same as a violation of the law, or otherwise significantly threatens or harms competition." Cel-Tech Commc'ns, Inc., 20 Cal. 4th at 187 (footnote omitted)).

Mercury alleges that Heartland's actions "constitute unfair competition" because they, in part, "threaten an incipient violation of a consumer law, including but not limited to Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission [*18] Act, violate the policy or spirit of such law, and/or otherwise threaten or harm competition." Mercury's Counterclaims ¶ 73.

Because Mercury relies on the same allegations to support this claim as it does to support its Lanham Act claim and its California False Advertising claim, Mercury's allegations fail under Rule 9(b), as discussed elsewhere in this order. In addition, although the Court allowed Heartland's allegations of Mercury's deceptive practices to proceed under the "unfair" prong of the UCL, the Court notes that Cel-Tech indicates that only incipient violations of antitrust laws satisfy this prong. It may be that further proceedings will show that neither party may proceed under this prong, even if it plead its fraud allegations with sufficient particularity.

Accordingly, Mercury's unfair business practice claim fails.

C. Fraudulent business practices

"A fraudulent business practice is one in which members of the public are likely to be deceived." Morgan v. AT&T Wireless Servs., Inc., 177 Cal. App. 4th 1235, 1254, 99 Cal. Rptr. 3d 768 (2009).

Mercury alleges that Heartland's actions "are fraudulent in that they are likely to mislead the public; or [that] [t]hey constitute acts of untrue and misleading advertising." Mercury's Counterclaims ¶ 73. As discussed above, Mercury's allegations [*19] fail under Rule 9(b). Mercury fails to state any facts to support the allegation that statements on Heartland's website or in merchant statements are deceptive or misleading.

In addition, to the extent Mercury relies on its allegation that Heartland engaged in "deceptive business practices" by charging a fee it described on merchant statements as a "Service & Regulatory Mandate," the Court agrees with Heartland that Mercury fails to meet Rule 9(b)'s requirements. Mercury explains that using the words "Service & Regulatory Mandate" on merchant statements "since at least 2001," by itself—rather than using such terminology alongside any other disclosures—is deceptive because no such regulatory mandate exists. Yet, as Heartland argues, Mercury does not plead an instance in which Heartland charged the fee or how Heartland presented the fee to merchants on a billing statement, Merchant Application or other document.

Accordingly, Mercury's fraudulent business practice claim fails.

D. Conclusion

For all the reasons discussed above, Mercury has failed to plead its UCL cause of action with the particularity required by Rule 9(b). Accordingly, the Court GRANTS Heartland's motion to dismiss this cause of action. Mercury is [*20] granted leave to amend to remedy these deficiencies if it can do so truthfully and without contradicting the allegations in its prior pleadings.

IV. Third Cause of Action: False Advertising in Violation of California Business and Professions Code section 17500 et seq. (FAL)

> California's False Advertising Law makes it unlawful for any person to induce the public to enter into any obligation based on a statement that is untrue or misleading, and which is known, or which by the exercise of reasonable care should be known, to be untrue or misleading. Whether an advertisement is misleading must be judged by the effect it would have on a reasonable consumer. . . . A reasonable consumer is the ordinary consumer acting reasonably under the circumstances. To prevail under this standard, [Plaintiff] must show that members of the public are likely to be deceived by the advertisement.

Davis v. HSBC Bank Nev., N.A., 691 F.3d 1152, 1162 (9th Cir. 2012) (citations omitted).

Mercury relies on the same set of facts to support its FAL claims as it does to support its Lanham Act claim. Thus, for the reasons discussed above, Mercury has failed to plead its FAL cause of action with the particularity required by Rule 9(b). Mercury fails to state any facts to support the allegation that statements on Heartland's website are deceptive or misleading. [*21] Accordingly, the Court GRANTS Heartland's motion to dismiss the FAL cause of action. Mercury is granted leave to amend to remedy these deficiencies if it can do so truthfully and without contradicting the allegations in its prior pleadings.

V. Fourth Cause of Action: Defamation

Mercury argues that statements on Heartland's "Merchant Services Defense" website, specifically that Heartland has "found direct evidence of Mercury's deceptive practices," were made with the intent to defame Mercury.

Mercury alleges that Heartland published these statements on a webpage titled "Pennies Add Up," which Mercury downloaded on March 20, 2015. Mercury's Counterclaims ¶ 53. It also claims that Heartland has "disparaged [it] in other direct or indirect communications with other members of the payment processing industry[.]" Mercury's Counterclaims ¶ 56. Heartland argues that this claim is barred by the statute of limitations and that, with regard to the "direct or indirect communications," Mercury fails to state a claim.

A. Statute of Limitations

Under California law, the statute of limitations for defamation is one year. Cal. Civ. Proc. Code § 340. California courts follow the "single publication" rule for statements made in mass [*22] communications:

> No person shall have more than one cause of action for damages for libel or slander or invasion of privacy or any other tort founded upon any single publication or exhibition or utterance, such as any one issue of a newspaper or book or magazine or any one presentation to an audience or any one broadcast over radio or television or any one exhibition of a motion picture. Recovery in any action shall include all damages for any such tort suffered by the plaintiff in all jurisdictions.

Cal. Civ. Code § 3425.3. The Ninth Circuit has held that California Courts of Appeal have uniformly applied this rule to websites. See Roberts v. McAfee, Inc., 660 F.3d 1156, 1167 (9th Cir. 2011). Furthermore, the Ninth Circuit has held that the publication date of webpages, for the purposes of the statute of limitations, is the date the allegedly defamatory statements were first posted on the website. See id. ("Information is generally considered 'published' within the meaning of the single-publication rule when it is first made available to the public[.]"). Thus, claims brought more than one year from an initial publication on a website are time-barred. See id. at 1169.

Mercury states in its opposition that its "[c]ounterclaims allege that the Defamatory Statements were published on March 20, 2015 [*23] — well within the one-year statute of limitations for defamation claims." Docket No. 98 at 20.

However, as Heartland points out, Mercury's argument in its opposition, that the webpage was published on March 20, 2015, see id., is different from its allegation in its counterclaims, that it downloaded the webpage on March 20, 2015. See Mercury's Counterclaims ¶ 53. The statute of limitations for a defamation claim begins to run as of the date the information was "first made available to the public." Roberts, 660 F.3d at 1167. In its counterclaims, Mercury does not allege when the information was first published, only that it downloaded the information on March 20, 2015.

Heartland argues that Mercury must concede that the allegedly defamatory statements were made on January 30, 2014, because Mercury's counterclaim alleges that, on that date, Heartland published a press release announcing this litigation with a link to a "Merchant Services Defense" website containing the webpage at issue. Mercury does not allege that the webpage was changed or that content was added to it since it was first published. Thus, Mercury's defamation claim would be time-barred as of January 30, 2015. Heartland's argument is well-taken. [*24]

Regardless, Mercury argues that its defamation claim is a compulsory counterclaim. Thus, the statute of limitations was tolled by the filing of Heartland's complaint on January 29, 2014, and the claim was not time-barred when the counterclaims were filed on March 23, 2015. Mercury relies on Sidney v. Superior Court, 198 Cal. App. 3d 710, 244 Cal. Rptr. 31 (1988), which explained:

> Although ordinarily the statute of limitations will bar a cross-complaint in the same fashion as if the defendant had brought an independent action, the rule is different when the original complaint was filed before the statute of limitations on the cross-complaint had elapsed . . . . Such a cross-complaint need only be subject-matter related to the plaintiff's complaint -— i.e. arise out of the same occurrence —- to relate back to the date of filing the complaint for statute of limitation purposes.

Id. at 714 (citations, quotation marks and brackets omitted). For the purpose of the statute of limitations, if the defamation cause of action is a compulsory counterclaim, the claim is tolled as of the date of the complaint. See Burger v. Kuimelis, 325 F. Supp. 2d 1026, 1045 (N.D. Cal. 2004) ("Under Sidney, the commencement of an action by a plaintiff tolls the statute of limitations for any counterclaims that 'arise out of the same occurrence' as the allegations [*25] of the complaint." (citation omitted)). Heartland argues that this rule does not apply here because "Mercury's defamation claim is based entirely on alleged conduct that took place after Heartland filed its Complaint, and therefore does not arise from the same transactions or occurrences that are at issue in the Complaint." Docket No. 94 at 20. Thus, the question is whether a defamation claim, with regard to statements made by Heartland after the complaint was filed, can be considered a compulsory counterclaim.

As the parties agree, the Ninth Circuit has explicitly declined to decide this issue, but has discussed it. In Pochiro v. Prudential Ins. Co. of Am., 827 F.2d 1246 (9th Cir. 1987), the Ninth Circuit held, "As long as the allegedly defamatory statements are sufficiently related to [the] subject matter of the original action," they must be considered compulsory counterclaims. Id. at 1251. In Pochiro, Prudential plead various causes of action against a former employee and his wife, the Pochiros, who it alleged had used confidential records against it. The Pochiros filed a defamation counterclaim, based on Prudential's informing the employee's prospective employers about his allegedly dishonest actions. Many of the allegedly defamatory statements were made [*26] after the complaint was filed. The Ninth Circuit found that even though a few of the Pochiros' allegations "appear a bit removed from Prudential's action to enjoin the Pochiros' use of confidential records, it is undisputed that [the employee's] use of Prudential's customer records is inextricably intertwined with the facts as alleged in the Pochiros' complaint." Id. at 1250. The Ninth Circuit acknowledged that, in the Second Circuit, "a counterclaim which stems from the filing of the main action and subsequent alleged defamations is not a compulsory counterclaim." 827 F.2d at 1251 n.9 (citing Harris v. Steinem, 571 F.2d 119, 124 (2nd Cir. 1978)). The Ninth Circuit surmised,

> The rationale for [the Second Circuit's] rule seems to be that statements made after the filing of the original complaint simply cannot be logically related to the "transaction" which gave rise to the original complaint. This creates an exception to the general rule that an otherwise logically related claim need only have accrued by the time a responsive pleading is filed in the first action, not by the time of the complaint. . . . Indeed, Harris and the cases it relies upon seem to view any alleged defamation as a separate transaction from the underlying claim.

Id. The Ninth Circuit then expressly [*27] declined to reach the "limited issue actually addressed by Harris" because the Pochiros also alleged that Prudential made some defamatory statements prior to filing its complaint. Id.

Thus, there is no Ninth Circuit precedent that resolves this issue. The Court is persuaded, however, that the general rule is that if "the allegedly defamatory statements are sufficiently related to subject matter of the original action" the defamation claim is a compulsory counterclaim even if the alleged statements were made after the complaint was filed. Here, the facts underlying Mercury's defamation claim are sufficiently linked to the facts alleged in Heartland's complaint because the defamation claim alleges that Heartland's statements—that Mercury defrauded merchants—were false; if Heartland were to prevail on its fraud claims against Mercury, Mercury could be collaterally estopped from pursuing this defamation claim. Thus, even if the alleged defamatory statements were first published on January 30, 2014 at the time of Heartland's press release, the defamation claim would not be time-barred.

Accordingly, taking the facts as alleged in the counterclaims as true, Mercury's defamation cause of action [*28] is not time-barred. The Court will now turn to the sufficiency of the allegations.

2. Failure to state a claim

As already noted, Mercury alleges that, on a webpage titled "Pennies Add Up," Heartland has published disparaging statements that "Mercury has 'deceiv[ed] merchants' and 'misrepresented pennies per transaction' by 'falsely inflat[ing] pass-through Visa and MasterCard interchange fees of four (4) cents per transaction'[.]" Mercury's Counterclaims ¶ 53.

As stated above, under California law, a claim for defamation requires the intentional publication of a statement that is false, unprivileged, and has a tendency to injure. Cal. Civ. Code §§ 44-46. There is little doubt that the "Pennies Add Up" webpage was an intentional publication. Mercury also alleges adequate facts with particularity to support the allegation that the webpage contains false statements, and that such false statements have a tendency to injure Mercury. Thus, with regard to statements on the "Pennies Add Up" webpage that specifically state that Mercury has deceived or overcharged its customers, Mercury has alleged facts sufficient to support its defamation claim. Even if Rule 9(b) applies, Mercury has stated those facts with the particularity required by Rule 9(b).

However, [*29] allegations relating to the January 30, 2014 press release itself are insufficient to state a claim for defamation. Mercury does not state what defamatory information is included in the press release. Likewise, the Court agrees with Heartland that Mercury's reference to "other direct or indirect communications with other members of the payment processing industry concerning Heartland's allegations in its Complaint and Amended Complaint," Mercury's Counterclaims ¶ 56, is vague and fails to meet even Rule 8 pleading requirements. Mercury has not stated any facts to support the inference that Heartland's "other direct or indirect communications" were defamatory.

3. Conclusion

Accordingly, for the reasons discussed above, to the extent Mercury's defamation cause of action is based on the "Pennies Add Up" webpage, the Court DENIES Heartland's motion to dismiss. Also for the reasons above, however, the cause of action cannot be based on the January 30, 2014 press release or unspecified communications with other businesses in the industry. Mercury is granted leave to amend to remedy these deficiencies if it can do so truthfully and without contradicting the allegations in its prior pleadings.

VI. [*30] Fifth Cause of Action: Trade Libel

Mercury's trade libel cause of action relies on the same allegations that support its defamation cause of action.

"A cause of action for trade libel . . . requires (at a minimum): (1) a publication; (2) which induces others not to deal with plaintiff; and (3) special damages." Nichols v. Great Am. Ins. Companies, 169 Cal. App. 3d 766, 773, 215 Cal. Rptr. 416 (1985). "[U]nder Fed. R. Civ. P. 9(g) the pleader must state special damages with specificity. Counterplaintiffs must 'identify particular customers and transactions of which it was deprived as a result of the libel.'" Piping Rock Partners, Inc. v. David Lerner Associates, Inc., 946 F. Supp. 2d 957, 981 (N.D. Cal. 2013)(citing Mann v. Quality Old Time Service, Inc., 120 Cal. App. 4th 90, 109, 15 Cal. Rptr. 3d 215 (2004)).

Mercury does not identify any customer who refused to do business with it as a result of Heartland's allegedly libelous statements. Accordingly, the Court GRANTS Heartland's motion to dismiss the trade libel cause of action. Mercury is granted leave to amend to remedy this deficiency if it can do so truthfully and without contradicting the allegations in its prior pleadings.

VII. Motion to Strike Unclean Hands Affirmative Defense

Heartland argues that Mercury's unclean hands defense should be stricken for failure to plead it with particularity.

Rule 8 requires that, when "responding to a pleading, a party must . . . state in short and plain terms its defenses to each claim asserted against it." [*31] Fed. R. Civ. P. 8(b). Rule 12(f) provides that, on its own or on a motion by a party, a "court may strike from a pleading an insufficient defense or any redundant, immaterial, impertinent, or scandalous matter." Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(f). "The purpose[] of a Rule 12(f) motion is to avoid spending time and money litigating spurious issues." Barnes v. AT&T Pension Benefit Plan, 718 F. Supp. 2d 1167, 1170 (N.D. Cal. 2010) (citing Fantasy, Inc. v. Fogerty, 984 F.2d 1524, 1527 (9th Cir. 1993)). If a defense is struck, "[i]n the absence of prejudice to the opposing party, leave to amend should be freely given." Wyshak v. City Nat'l Bank, 607 F.2d 824, 826 (9th Cir. 1979). Thus Mercury's unclean hands defense must comply with Rule 8. Furthermore, because Mercury's unclean hands defense alleges fraud, it must also be plead with the particularity required by Rule 9(b).

Mercury's unclean hands defense relies on the same allegations Mercury uses unsuccessfully to support its Lanham Act and FAL causes of action. Likewise, they fail here.

Thus the Court GRANTS Heartland's Rule 12(f) motion to strike Mercury's unclean hands defense. Mercury is granted leave to amend if it can do so truthfully and without contradicting its previous pleadings.

CONCLUSION

For the reasons stated above, the Court GRANTS in part Heartland's motion to dismiss Mercury's counterclaims (Docket No. 94) and DENIES it in part. In addition, the Court GRANTS Heartland's motion to strike [*32] Mercury's unclean hands defense. Within fourteen days of the date of this order, Mercury may file an amended answer and counterclaims to remedy the deficiencies identified above. It may not add further claims or defenses not authorized by this order. If Mercury does not have facts to support some of these claims despite due diligence, but later discovers them, it may timely move for leave to amend further in the future. If Mercury files an amended answer with or without counterclaims, Heartland may file a motion to strike or dismiss, or both, within fourteen days of the date the amended answer is filed.

As set in the Court's April 1, 2015 Case Management Order, the parties' mediation deadline has passed. If the parties have not complied, they shall do so within twenty-eight days. The discovery deadline is July 1, 2016, and a further case management conference and motion hearing is scheduled for March 2, 2017. The final pre-trial conference is scheduled for June 7, 2017, with jury selection and trial to begin on June 19, 2017.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

Opinion

[*548] THIS DOCUMENT RELATES TO ALL DIRECT-PURCHASER PLAINTIFF CASES

ORDER AND REASONS

Defendants Pool Corporation, SCP Distributors LLC, and Superior Pool Products (collectively, "Pool") move for summary judgment on direct-purchaser [3] plaintiffs' (DPPs') per se horizontal conspiracy claim.[1] Having considered the record evidence as a whole, the Court finds that DPPs have not presented sufficient evidence to raise an issue of material fact as to the existence of an unlawful horizontal conspiracy. Accordingly, the Court grants the motion for summary judgment.

I. BACKGROUND

DPPs' lone per se claim under Section 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1, alleges that in the fall of 2007, the Manufacturer Defendants, Pentair Water Pool and Spa, Inc. (Pentair); Hayward Industries, Inc. (Hayward); and Zodiac Pool Systems, Inc. (Zodiac; formerly "Jandy"),[2] unlawfully conspired with each other and with Pool to increase the minimum purchase amount necessary for customers to qualify for free freight on their Pool Products purchases ("free freight minimums") from $10,000 to $20,000. Plaintiffs claim that Pool orchestrated the conspiracy to disadvantage buying groups. These buying groups consist of Pool Products "Dealers" who aimed to buy directly from the manufacturers rather than from Pool Products distributors, such as Pool. Plaintiffs contend that Pool, the Manufacturer Defendants' largest customer, demanded that the manufacturers increase their [4] free freight minimums. Plaintiffs also contend that the Manufacturer Defendants acted against their independent business interests by agreeing among [*549] themselves and with Pool to the identical price increase.

Defendants deny that any agreement exists among the manufacturers or with Pool. Regarding the Manufacturer Defendants' free freight minimum increases, defendants contend that the manufacturers acted in their independent best interests because their preferred means to market was through distribution and Dealer buying groups, which were a small part of the manufacturers' [5] sales base, grew to include smaller Dealers, which increased the manufacturers' production and distribution expenses during a time of rising fuel costs.

A. Summary Judgment Standard

[1] R. Doc. 516.

[2] Zodiac, as it exists today, did not come about until October 2008. Before then, a company called Polaris Pool Systems, Inc. sold pool products in the United States. Simultaneously, The Carlyle Group owned and operated Jandy Pool Products, Inc. In 2006, Polaris Pool Systems changed its name to Zodiac Pool Care, Inc. On September 28, 2007, the Carlyle Group and Zodiac announced that Jandy and Zodiac would be merging to form "Zodiac Marine & Pool." DPPs challenge Jandy's 2007 free freight minimum increase only. Therefore, any reference to conduct by "Jandy" throughout this Order is attributable to the modern, post-merger Zodiac.

Summary judgment is warranted when "the movant shows that there is no genuine dispute as to any material fact and the movant is entitled to judgment as a matter of law." Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(a); see also Celotex Corp. v. Catrett, 477 U.S. 317, 322-23, 106 S. Ct. 2548, 91 L. Ed. 2d 265 (1986); Little v. Liquid Air Corp., 37 F.3d 1069, 1075 (5th Cir. 1994). When assessing whether a dispute as to any material fact exists, the Court considers "all of the evidence in the record but refrain[s] from making credibility determinations or weighing the evidence." Delta & Pine Land Co. v. Nationwide Agribusiness Ins. Co., 530 F.3d 395, 398-99 (5th Cir. 2008). All reasonable inferences are drawn in favor of the nonmoving party, but "unsupported allegations or affidavits setting forth 'ultimate or conclusory facts and conclusions of law' are insufficient to either support or defeat a motion for summary judgment." Galindo v. Precision Am. Corp., 754 F.2d 1212, 1216 (5th Cir. 1985); see also Little, 37 F.3d at 1075.

If the dispositive issue is one on which the moving party will bear the burden of proof at trial, the moving party "must come forward with evidence which would entitle it to a directed verdict if the evidence went uncontroverted at trial." Int'l Shortstop, Inc. v. Rally's, Inc., 939 F.2d 1257, 1264-65 (5th Cir. 1991). The nonmoving party can then defeat the motion by either countering with evidence sufficient to demonstrate the existence of a genuine [6] dispute of material fact, or "showing that the moving party's evidence is so sheer that it may not persuade the reasonable fact-finder to return a verdict in favor of the moving party." Id. at 1265.

If the dispositive issue is one on which the nonmoving party will bear the burden of proof at trial, the moving party may satisfy its burden by merely pointing out that the evidence in the record is insufficient with respect to an essential element of the nonmoving party's claim. See Celotex, 477 U.S. at 325. The burden then shifts to the nonmoving party, who must, by submitting or referring to evidence, set out specific facts showing that a genuine issue exists. See id. at 324. The nonmovant may not rest upon the pleadings, but must identify specific facts that establish a genuine issue for trial. See, e.g., id.; Little, 37 F.3d at 1075 ("Rule 56 mandates the entry of summary judgment, after adequate time for discovery and upon motion, against a party who fails to make a showing sufficient to establish the existence of an element essential to that party's case, and on which that party will bear the burden of proof at trial." (quoting Celotex, 477 U.S. at 322)).

B. Proving a Horizontal Conspiracy Under Section 1 of the Sherman Act

Section 1 of the Sherman Act forbids every contract, combination, or conspiracy [7] that unreasonably restrains trade. See 15 U.S.C. § 1; Nat'l Collegiate Athletic Ass'n v. Bd. of Regents of the [*550] Univ. of Okla., 468 U.S. 85, 98, 104 S. Ct. 2948, 82 L. Ed. 2d 70 (1984). To prevail on their horizontal conspiracy claim, DPPs must prove the existence of an anticompetitive agreement or conspiracy among actual competitors. See Texaco Inc. v. Dagher, 547 U.S. 1, 5, 126 S. Ct. 1276, 164 L. Ed. 2d 1 (2006); United States v. Socony-Vacuum Oil Co., 310 U.S. 150, 223-24, 60 S. Ct. 811, 84 L. Ed. 1129 (1940). A showing of concerted action is vital to any Section 1 conspiracy claim. Tunica Web Adver. v. Tunica Casino Operators Ass'n, 496 F.3d 403, 409 (5th Cir. 2007) (citing Monsanto Co. v. Spray-Rite Serv. Corp., 465 U.S. 752, 761, 104 S. Ct. 1464, 79 L. Ed. 2d 775 (1984)). DPPs must also prove that they suffered an "antitrust injury" from Pool's alleged violation. Id.; see also Alabama v. Blue Bird Body Co., 573 F.2d 309, 317 (5th Cir. 1978). "Antitrust injury" is an "injury of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent and that flows from that which makes defendants' acts unlawful." Brunswick Corp. v. Pueblo Bowl-O-Mat, Inc., 429 U.S. 477, 489, 97 S. Ct. 690, 50 L. Ed. 2d 701 (1977).

1. Horizontal Price-Fixing Agreements Are Per Se Illegal

Courts consider certain agreements to be "inherently anticompetitive." See Tunica Web, 496 F.3d at 412. When the defendants' agreement "facially appears to be one that would always or almost always tend to restrict competition and decrease output," or constitutes a "naked restrain[t] of trade with no purpose except stifling [] competition," it is deemed per se unreasonable—and thus per se illegal—under Section 1, and condemned without further analysis. Broad. Music, Inc. v. Columbia Broad. Sys., Inc., 441 U.S. 1, 19-20, 99 S. Ct. 1551, 60 L. Ed. 2d 1 (1979); see also Leegin Creative Leather Prods. v. PSKS, Inc., 551 U.S. 877, 886, 127 S. Ct. 2705, 168 L. Ed. 2d 623 (2007).

Horizontal price-fixing agreements among competitors are traditionally per se illegal, while vertical price-fixing agreements among firms at different levels in the distribution chain [8] are not. See, e.g., Leegin, 551 U.S. at 886; Hyland v. HomeServices of Am., Inc., 771 F.3d 310, 318 (6th Cir. 2014). Agreements affecting components of a product's purchase price, such as agreements to terminate discounts or the practice of extending credit to purchasers, are equivalent to price fixing because they distort the ultimate price a consumer pays for a good or service. See Catalano, Inc. v. Target Sales, Inc., 446 U.S. 643, 648, 100 S. Ct. 1925, 64 L. Ed. 2d 580 (1980).

Here, the Manufacturer Defendants' freight charges are a component of the purchase price for Pool Product purchases. See id. at 648-49. DPPs allege that the Manufacturer Defendants, who are horizontal competitors, conspired among themselves and with Pool, to raise the free freight minimums for Pool Products purchases. To prevail on their claim of per se liability, plaintiffs must show that the Manufacturer Defendants conspired with each other, and that Pool knowingly joined their horizontal conspiracy. If plaintiffs cannot show the existence of the horizontal element, i.e., collusion among the Manufacturer Defendants, their per se claim must fail.

2. Proving an Unlawful Agreement with Direct Evidence or with Circumstantial Evidence and "Plus" Factors

To prove a Section 1 conspiracy, an antitrust plaintiff may present direct or circumstantial evidence of an unlawful agreement. Golden Bridge Tech., Inc. v. Motorola Inc., 547 F.3d 266, 271 (5th Cir. 2008). "Direct evidence explicitly refers to [9] an understanding between the alleged conspirators, while circumstantial evidence requires [*551] additional inferences . . . to support a conspiracy claim." Id. (citing Tunica Web, 496 F.3d at 409). In other words, direct evidence cannot be ambiguous; rather, "[d]irect evidence is tantamount to an acknowledgment of guilt . . . ." Hyland v. HomeServices of Am., Inc., 771 F.3d 310, 318 (6th Cir. 2014). With direct evidence, "the fact finder is not required to make inferences to establish facts." In re Baby Food Antitrust Litig., 166 F.3d 112, 118 (3d Cir. 1999) (quoting Rossi v. Standard Roofing, 156 F.3d 452, 466 (3d Cir. 1998)). Evidence of a conspiracy that depends on additional inferences is "at most, circumstantial[.]" Viazis v. Am. Ass'n of Orthodontists, 314 F.3d 758, 762 (5th Cir. 2002); see also Burtch v. Milberg Factors, Inc., 662 F.3d 212, 225 (3d Cir. 2011) (Direct evidence "is explicit and requires no inferences to establish the proposition or conclusion being asserted.")

An antitrust plaintiff who is unable to present direct evidence may nonetheless rely on circumstantial evidence of a conspiracy. See Viazis, 314 F.3d at 763. To survive summary judgment, however, the plaintiff must present strong circumstantial evidence of a conspiracy because "antitrust law limits the range of permissible inferences from ambiguous evidence in a § 1 case." Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 588, 106 S. Ct. 1348, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538 (1986). Circumstantial evidence "must tend to rule out the possibility that the defendants were acting independently[.]" Bell Atl. Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 554, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007) (citing Matsushita, 475 U.S. at 588); see also Golden Bridge Tech., 547 F.3d at 270-71 ("To survive a motion for summary judgment [the plaintiff] must present evidence that tends [10] to exclude the possibility that the alleged conspirators acted independently.").

Independent parallel conduct, "or even conduct among competitors that is consciously parallel," on its own, cannot establish the requisite contract, combination, or conspiracy. Golden Bridge Tech., 547 F.3d at 271 (citing Bell Atl., 550 U.S. at 553-54)). Neither will conduct that is "consistent with other, equally plausible explanations . . . give rise to an inference of conspiracy." Stewart Glass & Mirror, Inc. v. U.S. Auto Glass Disc. Centers, Inc., 200 F.3d 307, 315 (5th Cir. 2000) (quoting Matsushita, 475 U.S. at 587)); see also Southway Theatres, Inc. v. Ga. Theatre Co., 672 F.2d 485, 494 (5th Cir. 1984) ("[T]he inference of a conspiracy is always unreasonable when it is based solely on parallel behavior that can be explained as the result of the [defendants'] independent business judgment . . . ."); In re Ins. Brokerage Antitrust Litig., 618 F.3d 300, 322-23 (3d Cir. 2010) ("[A]llegations of conspiracy are deficient if there are 'obvious alternative explanation[s]' for the facts alleged."). Accordingly, a plaintiff relying only on circumstantial evidence must establish both "conscious parallelism" and certain "plus factors." See Royal Drug Co., Inc. v. Grp. Life & Health Ins. Co., 737 F.2d 1433, 1437 (5th Cir. 1984) (citation omitted). "Existence of these plus factors tends to ensure that courts punish 'concerted action'—an actual agreement—instead of the 'unilateral, independent conduct of competitors.'" In re Flat Glass Antitrust Litig., 385 F.3d 350, 360 (3d Cir. 2004) (citation omitted).

"Plus factors" include "(1) evidence that the defendant had a motive to enter into a price-fixing conspiracy; (2) evidence that the [11] defendant acted contrary to its interests; and (3) evidence implying a traditional conspiracy." Burtch, 662 F.3d at 227 (quoting In re Ins. Brokerage, 618 F.3d at 321-22). Most courts require evidence demonstrating the defendants' conduct [*552] "was contrary to their economic self-interest so as not to amount to a good faith business judgment." Royal Drug Co., 737 F.2d at 1437 (quoting Pan-Islamic Trade Corp. v. Exxon Corp., 632 F.2d 539, 559 (5th Cir. 1980)); see also Intervest, Inc. v. Bloomberg, L.P., 340 F.3d 144, 165 (3d Cir. 2003) (requiring plaintiff relying on circumstantial evidence to show that defendants acted contrary to their economic interests). Some courts also consider whether the defendants exchanged or "had the opportunity to exchange information relative to the alleged conspiracy." Hyland, 771 F.3d at 320. Generally though, "evidence that a market is ripe for collusion, that defendants acted against their interests, or that defendants were motivated to collude is too ambiguous to support an inference of agreement" because these circumstances are just as likely to result from independent conduct. In re Chocolate Confectionary Antitrust Litig., 999 F. Supp. 2d 777, 789 (M.D. Pa. 2014) (citing In re Baby Food, 166 F.3d at 122), aff'd, 801 F.3d 383 (3d Cir. 2015); see also In re Musical Instruments & Equip. Antitrust Litig., 798 F.3d 1186, 1193-94 (9th Cir. 2015).

The court "should not permit factfinders to infer conspiracies when such inferences are implausible, because the effect of such practices is often to deter procompetitive conduct." Matsushita, 475 U.S. at 593 (citing Monsanto, 465 U.S. at 762-64). Indeed, mistaken inferences of unlawful action "chill the very conduct the antitrust laws are designed to protect." [12] Id. (citing Monsanto, 465 U.S. at 763-64). In sum, an antitrust plaintiff will survive summary judgment only if "the inference of conspiracy is reasonable in light of competing inferences of independent action or collusive action that could not have harmed the plaintiff." Tunica Web, 496 F.3d at 409 (quoting Matsushita, 475 U.S. at 588)).

II. DISCUSSION

A. The Pool Products Industry

As defined by DPPs, Pool Products are the equipment, products, parts, and materials used for the construction, renovation, maintenance, repair, and service of residential and commercial swimming pools. Pool Products include pumps, filters, covers, drains, fittings, rails, diving boards, and chemicals, among other goods. The Pool Products industry is made up of multiple layers of market participants, including manufacturers, distributors, dealers, and ultimately, the end-consumers. Manufacturers sell Pool Products primarily to distributors, but they also sell to Dealer buying groups and big box retailers. Distributors also sell Pool Products to Dealers, who in turn sell those products to the end-consumers.

The Manufacturer Defendants are Pentair, Hayward, and Zodiac. Pool, the only distributor defendant, buys Pool Products from manufacturers, including the three Manufacturer Defendants, and [13] in turn sells them to DPPs, which include pool builders, pool retail stores, and pool service and repair companies (collectively referred to as "Dealers").

Pool is the largest Pool Products distributor, with a market share of no more than thirty-eight percent, which remained stable from 2004 - 2011.[3] The record does not reveal the Manufacturer Defendants' market shares, but Pool's preferred vendor program, which consisted of manufacturers who sold at least $2 million worth of merchandise to Pool, included seventy-six other [*553] vendors during the relevant period.[4] It appears undisputed that Pentair, Hayward, and Zodiac are the largest manufacturers in Pool's preferred vendor program and that each Manufacturer Defendant offers a broad line of Pool Products. During the relevant time period, Pool was the [3] Rausser Initial Report, April 10, 2014, at 38-39.

[4] Id. at 37.

Manufacturer Defendants' largest distributor customer. Together, the Manufacturer Defendants' sales to Pool totaled approximately forty-six percent of Pool's total purchases.[5]

Dealer "buying groups" are organizations made up of a number of Pool Products Dealers who aim to buy directly from the manufacturers instead of from Pool Products distributors, [14] such as Pool. Using their collective volume of purchases as leverage to negotiate directly with the manufacturers, Dealers submit their individual orders to the buying group organization, which then purchases, on behalf of its Dealer members, larger orders of Pool Products from the manufacturers.[6] The two principal buying groups in the Pool Products industry are Aquatech, led at all relevant times by Jeff Fausett, and Carecraft, led at all relevant times by Greg Howard.

During the alleged conspiracy period, buying groups expanded their membership to include smaller Pool Products Dealers. During the same period, fuel costs increased, peaking in November 2007.[7] According to plaintiffs' expert, no buying group accounted for more than one percent of the Manufacturer Defendants' sales, except for Aquatech and Carecraft. Plaintiffs' expert estimates that Pentair's sales to these two buying groups totaled five percent of its overall business; Zodiac's sales, eight percent; and Hayward's sales, three percent.[8]

B. Summary Judgment Evidence

1. Plaintiffs' [15] Purported Direct Evidence

There is no direct evidence that the Manufacturer Defendants agreed among themselves to the increase in free freight minimums. Nonetheless, plaintiffs contend that there is direct evidence of collusion.

First, plaintiffs rely on a November 30, 2007 e-mail in which Pool's CEO Manny Perez de la Mesa wrote: "Pentair, Hayward, and Jandy have all agreed to the $20K freight minimum with NO exceptions. I need to know if anyone does not comply."[9] This e-mail is not direct evidence of a horizontal agreement among the Manufacturer Defendants to increase their free freight minimums because the e-mail is ambiguous. See Hyland, 771 F.3d at 318 ("Direct evidence is tantamount to an acknowledgment of guilt . . . ."); Golden Bridge Tech., 547 F.3d at 271 (explaining that direct evidence must be "explicit"). This one-time use of the word "agree" cannot be unambiguously read to mean that the Manufacturer Defendants agreed with each other, as well as with Pool, to fix prices. See In re Baby Food, 166 F.3d at 127 (holding that an "isolated, single use" of the word "truce" was not direct evidence of an unlawful conspiracy).

The Manufacturer Defendants' $20,000 free freight minimums [16] applied [*554] equally to distributors, like Pool, and to other customers, like buying groups or independent Dealers. Considering this, the e-mail could be read to mean that each Manufacturer Defendant agreed separately with Pool that its new free freight minimum was $20,000 and that the manufacturers would not make exceptions for other customers. Thus, DPPs' argument that no additional evidence is required to show collusion among the Manufacturer Defendants is without merit. Although Perez de la Mesa testified as to what he meant by this e-mail, the Court's holding does not rest on a credibility determination as to Perez de la Mesa's testimony. The evidence, on its face, is ambiguous. Evidence that is equally consistent with each Manufacturer Defendant's agreeing separately with Pool is not direct evidence of a horizontal conspiracy among the manufacturers. Ambiguous statements cannot serve as direct evidence of a conspiracy. See Hyland, 771 F.3d at 318; Golden Bridge Tech., 547 F.3d at 271. "[C]ases require that direct evidence of an illegal agreement be established with much greater clarity." InterVest, Inc. v. Bloomberg, L.P., 340 F.3d 144, 149 (3d Cir. 2003).

Plaintiffs also rely on a September 2007 conversation between Bruce Fisher, Hayward's Vice President of Sales and Marketing, and Bob Rasp, Jandy's President and [17] CEO, as direct evidence of a conspiracy. The record does not support that assertion. On September 17-18, 2007, Fisher, for Hayward, and Rasp, for Jandy, separately attended the annual conference of the Independent Distributors Network (IDN).[10] By this time, both Pentair and Hayward had already announced their free freight minimum increases.[11] Pentair alerted customers, including Aquatech's Jeff Fausett, as early as August 30, 2007, that a $20,000 free freight minimum was effective immediately as part of Pentair's 2008 Early Buy program.[12] Hayward publicized its decision to combine its multiple product lines, accompanied by a new $20,000 free freight minimum—effective January 2, 2008—on September 10, 2007.[13]

After the IDN conference, Fisher summarized his encounter with Rasp in an e-mail to other Hayward employees. Fisher wrote: "Chatted with Bob Rasp and he advised that business is still very weak for them and he cannot afford to cut any more people. Interestingly enough, he openly admitted to being over staffed to begin [*555] with." [19] [14] DPPs argue that this "meeting" serves as direct evidence of a horizontal agreement among defendants because this conversation gave Fisher and Rasp an opportunity "to confirm the free-freight conspiracy."[15] Further, DPPs charge Rasp with admitting, "I might have said something to him."[16]

Not only does Fisher's e-mail fail to "explicitly refer[] to an understanding" between Hayward and Jandy, but it also fails to implicate in any way the other alleged conspirators, Pentair and Pool. See Golden Bridge Tech., 547 F.3d at 271. Most importantly, the e-mail is devoid of any mention of free freight minimums. Fisher's recalling that Jandy's "business is still very weak and [that Jandy] cannot afford to cut any more people" demonstrates nothing more than that Fisher and Rasp engaged in business small talk. Coleman v. Cannon Oil Co., 849 F. Supp. 1458, 1469 (M.D. Ala. 1993) ("[T]hat defendants met together or telephoned each other [does] not support a finding by itself that they had engaged in an effort to fix prices. . . . [I]t remains the plaintiff's burden to prove that the defendant succumbed to the temptation and conspired."). To conclude that this vague statement about Jandy's employee roster establishes that [20] Hayward and Jandy colluded with each other, as well as with Pentair and Pool, to fix the price of free freight minimums, would require additional inferences. See Tunica Web, 496 F.3d at 409 (holding that direct evidence must be explicit "while circumstantial evidence requires additional inferences").

Before 2007, Hayward maintained three separate free freight programs because Hayward maintained three separate product lines: "Hayward" brand products, "Goldline" brand products, and "AquaVac" brand products. To receive free freight, a customer had to purchase a minimum of $10,000 in Hayward brand products, a minimum of $10,000 in Goldline brand products, or a minimum of $10,000 in AquaVac brand products. A customer could not receive free freight on an order that totaled $10,000 in purchases from more than one product line. See HAY-0002638 (January 7, 2011 First Amended Responses to the Civil Investigative Demand issued by the Federal Trade Commission); HAY-MDL-0425818-21 (September 13, 2007 e-mail from Fausett to Massa with Hayward program flyer attached).

The Court also rejects DPPs' assertion that Rasp admitted at his deposition that he "might have said something to [Fisher]" about Jandy's free freight minimums. Rasp's "admission" came in response to questioning about a subject unrelated to price fixing: whether Rasp told Fisher that Jandy was over-staffed. When asked, "can you tell me what you meant when you said you couldn't afford to cut anymore people?" Rasp answered:

> [A]t that time we were going through an integration of the two companies, too. I knew that I was going to become president of the combined company, so there was -- and that wasn't public information. So I knew that we were going to have to combine and cut people, so I might have said something to him.[17]

Rasp's testimony is far from the admission or "acknowledgment of guilt," necessary to serve as direct evidence of a price-fixing conspiracy. See Hyland, 771 F.3d at 318. His reponse does not even touch the relevant subject matter [21] of the alleged conspiracy—that is, an increase in the Manufacturer Defendants' free freight minimums. At best, DPPs have offered circumstantial evidence of an opportunity to conspire. Yet the existence of an opportunity to conspire is an insufficient basis on which to infer a conspiracy. See, e.g., Cosmetic Gallery, Inc. v. Schoeneman Corp., 495 F.3d 46, 53 (3d Cir. 2007); Am. Chiropractic Ass'n v. Trigon Healthcare, Inc., 367 F.3d 212, 227 (4th Cir. 2004). Accordingly, this testimony does not constitute direct evidence of a price-fixing conspiracy among Pool and the Manufacturer Defendants.

Next, DPPs assert that an April 1, 2009 e-mail from a Pool employee, sent nearly two years after the allegedly unlawful 2007 free freight increase, is direct [*556] evidence of the alleged horizontal conspiracy. On December 15, 2008, Zodiac announced to Aquatech customers that its free freight minimum for 2009 would be $25,000.[18] Approximately three months later, on March 2009, Zodiac announced that, starting April 1, 2009, its free freight minimum would decrease to $20,000.[19] When another employee forwarded Zodiac's March announcement to Steve Nelson at Pool, Nelson wrote to Zodiac's David Nibler and Todd Cramer:

> I am concerned about the email below . . . on a couple of levels. The first is that a lot [22] of thought went into the establishment of the amount of the purchase from you that would result in freight prepaid status. We participated in those discussions and believe that the prior level was appropriate for distribution to provide value to its customers.
> The second concern is the total lack of consideration in providing us information not only on the fact that you were considering changing this level, but once that decision was reached no prior notification was provided to us.
> . . . .

Please evaluate how this issue was handled.[20] Cramer replied:

> We made the decision to change our freight policy very quickly, and in our haste, my colleagues and I each thought the other was to communicate this information to PoolCorp. We make it a point to communicate to you sooner than we do to others. But we blew this one, and for that I apologize.
> Your first point concerns the content of the decision itself.
> Our prepaid freight minimum has been at $25,000. Our primary competitors, Pentair and Hayward, are at $20,000.
> In a tough business environment, this placed [23] us at a severe competitive disadvantage.
> Sales pressure came from many directions, most of all Distribution. This was not a decision made in response to pressure from buying groups.
> Had Pentair and Hayward raised their minimums to $25,000, we would have been happy to keep ours there as well. It has been many months since we announced the move to $25,000, and they chose not to follow.

> We felt we had no choice but to remain competitive, and drop to their level.
> We also felt that most of our customers are operating at smaller volumes. Yesterday's 25 is today's 20. Just like we lowered the minimum for your orders at the end of March from $75K to $25K, we felt we needed to accommodate ourselves to everyone's new operational demands.[21]

The foregoing e-mail exchange is not direct evidence of DPPs' alleged price-fixing conspiracy for a number of reasons. First, DPPs' allege that the Manufacturer Defendants and Pool conspired to fix the price of the manufacturers' free freight minimums in fall 2007.[22] Nelson's e-mail, [*557] sent on April 1, 2009, came directly after [24] Zodiac announced a change to its free freight minimum in March 2009. Neither Zodiac's March 2009 announcement, Nelson's e-mail to Zodiac, nor Cramer's response to Nelson mention the 2007 free freight minimum increase. Second, Nelson's e-mail fails to mention any agreement that allegedly occurred two years earlier or any agreement with the other Manufacturer Defendants. See Golden Bridge Tech., 547 F.3d at 271 ("Direct evidence explicitly refers to an understanding between the alleged conspirators . . . ."); Burtch, 662 F.3d at 225-26 (holding that telephone conversations between defendants failed to constitute direct evidence of a conspiracy because they did not "specify a time or place that any actual agreement to fix credit terms occurred [or] indicate that any particular individuals or [defendants] made such an agreement"). In fact, the e-mail plainly explains that Zodiac had increased its free freight minimum from $20,000 to $25,000 without agreeing to the increase with the other two Manufacturer Defendants, that neither Pentair nor Hayward followed suit, and that Zodiac ultimately had to decrease its $25,000 minimum to meet competition.

Third, that Zodiac discussed the $25,000 minimum with Pool before Zodiac reduced it to $20,000 is not evidence of a horizontal conspiracy. Pool's relationship with Zodiac is vertical, not horizontal. See Monsanto Co. v. Spray-Rite Serv. Corp., 465 U.S. 752, 762, 104 S. Ct. 1464, 79 L. Ed. 2d 775 (1984) ("A manufacturer and its distributors have legitimate reasons to exchange information about the prices and the reception of their products in the market."); Ill. Corporate Travel, Inc. v. Am Airlines, Inc., 806 F.2d 722, 726 (7th Cir. 1986) ("In any chain of distribution discussions of price will be frequent—and . . . beneficial too."). Without more, Nelson's e-mail—sent to a single Manufacturer Defendant well after the relevant time period and in response to some other business decision—is far from "tantamount to an acknowledgment of guilt," and therefore cannot serve as explicit, direct evidence of an unlawful conspiracy. See Hyland, 771 F.3d at 318. If anything, Nelson's e-mail suggests that the Manufacturer Defendants did not collude regarding their free freight minimums.

In sum, none of the evidence on which DPPs rely directly establishes, without additional inferences, that defendants [26] engaged in a horizontal price-fixing conspiracy to raise the Manufacturer Defendants' free freight minimums. Accordingly, the Court considers the foregoing evidence among the totality of circumstantial evidence supporting DPPs' claims.

2. Analysis of Circumstantial Evidence and Plus Factors

Without direct evidence of an unlawful conspiracy, the Court must consider all of the circumstantial evidence in the record to determine whether the Manufacturer Defendants engaged in parallel pricing and whether sufficient evidence of certain "plus factors" supports DPPs' allegations of a horizontal price-fixing conspiracy. DPPs contend that, during August through December 2007, all three Manufacturer Defendants doubled their free freight minimums from $10,000 to $20,000. DPPs also rely on the following plus factors to support their claim of a horizontal price-fixing conspiracy: (1) the Manufacturer Defendants acted contrary to their individual interests; (2) the Manufacturer

The Manufacturer Defendants' collective increase was part of a conspiracy, led by PoolCorp . . . .").

Defendants' purported business justifications are pretextual; (3) the Manufacturer Defendants were motivated to conspire; and (4) [*558] the structure of the Pool Products industry was conducive to collusion.[23]

[27] To demonstrate parallel pricing, a plaintiff need not show that the defendants set uniform prices. See In re Baby Food Antitrust Litig., 166 F.3d 112, 132 (3d Cir. 1999) (citing United States v. Socony-Vacuum Oil Co., 310 U.S. 150, 222, 60 S. Ct. 811, 84 L. Ed. 1129 (1940)). Here, the evidence demonstrates that not only did the Manufacturer Defendants each announce their free freight minimum increases within a four-month period, but also that these increases all took effect within four months of each other. Pentair was the first to announce its free freight minimum increase on August 30, 2007, via e-mail to certain customers.[24] Pentair's Dave Murray wrote to Aquatech's Jeff Fausett: "Jeff . . . need to go over 2008 Early Buy program real time with you - same as 2007 except for following: . . . Prepaid freight has increase[d] from 10,000 to 20,000."[25] Hayward announced second. Though internal documents indicate that Hayward had decided as early as July 2007 to increase its free freight minimum to accompany unifying its multiple product lines,[26] Hayward did not announce the free freight increase until September 10, 2007, approximately two weeks after Pentair's announcement.[27] An e-mail between Hayward employees reveals that Hayward waited specifically to see if other manufacturers increased their free freight minimums: "Mike thought it would be [28] a good idea to see if Pentair and Jandy move forward with an increase in their free freight threshold before we announce."[28] Zodiac (Jandy) announced last. On December 7, 2007, four months after Pentair made the first announcement, Jandy published its new $20,000 free freight minimum in a bulletin titled, "Updated Jandy Freight Program."[29]

Pentair was also the first to make effective its free freight minimum increase. According to Pentair's 2008 National Early Buy Program, the "Standard 2008 Freight Terms," which required customers to purchase at least $20,000 worth of products to receive free freight, were effective with orders placed on September 4, 2007.[30] Hayward's September 2007 announcement [*559] specifically noted that its new "$20,000 prepaid freight minimum for all whole goods" would take effect on January 2, 2008, approximately four months after Pentair's free freight increase took effect.[31] Finally, Zodiac's December 2007 updated freight program bulletin explained that "[e]ffective with orders placed January 2, 2008"—four months after Pentair's effective date, but the same day as Hayward's effective date—Jandy products would be subject to a $20,000 free freight minimum.[32]

In support of its motion for summary judgment, Pool points out, and DPPs do not dispute, that the "pool year," which regulates the distribution of Pool Products, begins October 1.[33] Thus, according to Pool, the simultaneous timing of the Manufacturer Defendants' announcements is not unusual. Pool also emphasizes that the Manufacturer Defendants independently raised their respective free freight minimums at different times, with days or weeks between the Manufacturer Defendants' announcements and between the effective dates of the price increases. But as noted, to demonstrate that defendants engaged in parallel pricing, DPPs are not required to show that the Manufacturer Defendants increased their prices in lockstep; DPPs need only show that the price increases "are reasonably proximate in time." See In re Chocolate Confectionary, 999 F. Supp. 2d at 787. That the Manufacturer Defendants' announcements and effective price increases took place over the course of several months does not disprove that the Manufacturer Defendants engaged in parallel behavior. See In re Flat Glass Antitrust Litig., 385 F.3d 350, 364-68 (2d Cir. 2004) (finding sufficiently parallel price increases that occurred over two months); In re Text Messaging Antitrust Litig., No. 08 C 7082, MDL No. 1997, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 115513, 2009 WL 5066652, at *5 (N.D. Ill. Dec. 10, 2009) [31] (accepting as sufficiently parallel price increases that occurred over ten months).

Because proof beyond mere parallelism is required to sustain a claim of horizontal conspiracy, the Court now analyzes DPPs' plus factor evidence.

Actions Contrary to Individual Interests

DPPs first argue that the Manufacturer Defendants' free freight minimum increases were contrary to their individual economic interests.[34] To show that a defendant acted contrary to its interests, an antitrust plaintiff must present "evidence of conduct that would be irrational assuming that the defendant operated in a competitive market." See In re Flat Glass Antitrust Litig., 385 F.3d 350, 360-61 (3d Cir. 2004). "Where there is an independent business justification for the defendant's behavior, no inference of conspiracy can be drawn." Blomkest Fertilizer, Inc. v. Potash Corp. of Saskatchewan, 203 F.3d 1028, 1037 (8th Cir. 2000) (citing Todorov v. DCH Healthcare Auth., 921 F.2d 1438, 1456-57 (11th Cir. 1991)).

To show that the Manufacturer Defendants' direct sales to Dealers were profitable and thus in the manufacturers' best interests to continue, DPPs point to three documents indicating that, at some point, all three Manufacturer Defendants looked into how to maintain generally their Pool Products sales. DPPs first direct the Court [*560] to an undated Pentair PowerPoint, titled "Pentair Core Strategic [32] Growth," which contains a slide titled "Must Balance Multiple Channels to Market."[35] A chart on this slide depicts the four types of customers to which Pentair directly sells Pool Products.[36] The first group of customers contains "Distributor Association Groups & Dealer Buying Groups"; the second group, "Distributor[s]"; the third group, "Nat'l Retail[,] e.g. Leslie's"; and the fourth group, "Internet/Catalog."[37] This slide also notes that in the distributor category, Pool is the largest, but there are "170 others."[38] The following slide on Pentair's PowerPoint, titled "Channels to market - Preliminary," indicates that

Pentair's direct sales to Dealers make up less than ten percent of its total sales.[39] Specifically, Pentair calculates its sales to distributors as 92.4 percent of its total sales, while direct sales to Dealers make up 7.6 percent.[40]

DPPs next direct the Court to consider a Hayward document titled "Strategic Review of the Role of the Distributor in the U.S. Market."[41] This document, dated March 20, 2007—as DPPs note, months before the Hayward's [33] free freight increase—indicates that Hayward had considered a "Pool Market Channel Access Strategy between distribution (traditional 2 step) and the growth of dealer buying groups."[42] The document also states, "[t]he group was in agreement that the strategy should remain to be everything to all Markets. Commitment is to remain in both channels with some degree of separation through programming."[43] On the same page, but not mentioned by DPPs, Hayward notes that it also considered "Freight Requirements," elaborated as follows:

> Issue was to raise freight Requirements in all business segments nationally. Dollars discussed ranged from $15k to 20K, which would include Hayward, Goldline and Aqua Vac. One of the concerns was how it would affect Goldline. It was agreed that having single point of inventory would be essential in increasing the freight minimums and should be investigated further in order to be competitive with other major bundlers.[44]

Finally, DPPs direct the Court to consider a 2007 "Business Review" PowerPoint that Zodiac (Jandy) created.[45] On a slide titled "Special Topics-Strategic [34] Plan Outline," Zodiac notes as one of its strategies that it wants to "Continue to expand Jandy customer base & increase customer profitability."[46]

DPPs' proffered evidence is too general to suggest that the Manufacturer Defendants acted irrationally, or contrary to [*561] their individual interests, by increasing their free freight minimums. Further, DPPs ignore the breadth of evidence, dating as far back as 2002, which reveals that the Manufacturer Defendants considered large, full-truck orders of Pool Products, rather than smaller, more frequent orders from buying group Dealers, to be the most efficient means of distributing their goods to end-consumers.

Specifically, the Court begins by noting that Hayward's "Strategic Review" does demonstrate that Hayward desired to "remain in both [distribution] channels," albeit, "with some degree of separation."[47] On its face, this memo demonstrates that Hayward did not view distributors and dealers equally. In the same breath, however, Hayward considered "rais[ing] [35] freight Requirements in all business segments nationally," discussed increasing its current amount to "20K," and planned to investigate further how to raise its free freight minimum "to be competitive with other major bundlers."[48] The juxtaposition of Hayward's intent to sell its products to both distributors and Dealers with Hayward's idea to increase its free freight minimum illustrates that Hayward did not believe that these two sales approaches were inconsistent. This document indicates that Hayward did not view a decision to increase its free freight minimum as likely "to deprive itself of a profitable sales outlet," as DPPs suggest. See Toys "R" Us,

The evidence against Pentair and Zodiac is even less persuasive. As to Pentair, DPPs emphasize the title of an undated PowerPoint slide—"Must Balance Multiple Channels to Market"—without considering the information in context. DPPs ignore the remainder of the information on that slide, as well as the remainder of the information in the PowerPoint as a whole. See Brown v. Pro Football, Inc., 518 U.S. 231, 241, 116 S. Ct. 2116, 135 L. Ed. 2d 521 (1996) (noting that a plaintiff's supposed evidence of unlawful conduct must be considered in the appropriate context); Hyland, 771 F.3d at 319 (same). The relevant slide contains a chart, with sections indicating the four types of customers to which Pentair directly sells Pool Products, two of which are "Distributor Association Groups & Dealer Buying Groups" and "Distributor[s]."[49] The slide contains no other relevant information regarding [36] its sales to these customers.[50] Only on the following slide does Pentair note that the vast majority of its business—92.4 percent—goes through distribution, with 7.6 percent of total sales directly to Dealers. Further, a 2010 Pentair e-mail indicates that Pentair believed that its direct sales to buying groups had changed over the last several years because of a proliferation of smaller members, making these sales inefficient and disruptive of Pentair's primary channel to market, which was distribution. Dave Murray explained his view of dealer buying groups as follows:

> [T]hese groups historically were small in membership, made up of higher end builders with protected exclusive territories. This all changed over the past 4-5 years . . . . This was due to virtually allowing anyone at any time in any territory [*562] to join. The conflict created by them caused an unnecessary disruption to our distribution channel due to loss of business, lower distributor margins as dealers received our pricing and was a complete no win situation for Pentair. Distribution is 85% of our business and we must have distributors financially health[y] in order for Pentair to be successful. Additionally and most importantly, operationally [37] we do not have the template to service these smaller accounts efficiently or effectively.[51]

As to Zodiac, DPPs direct the Court to a company PowerPoint. A slide titled "Special Topics-Strategic Plan Outline" contains the following note within a long, bullet-point list: "Continue to expand Jandy customer base & increase customer profitability."[52] The slide says nothing about buying groups or the profitability or efficiency of Jandy's sales to Dealer customers. It would be speculative to infer anything about the relative value of buying group sales to Jandy from this single line in a multi-page PowerPoint presentation.

In addition to the overly general nature of DPPs' proffered evidence, there is ample record evidence suggesting that the Manufacturer Defendants viewed direct sales to Dealers as less desirable than their sales through distribution, especially as buying groups accepted an influx of smaller participants and fuel costs increased. To begin with, DPPs themselves specifically claim, and the [38] Manufacturer Defendants agree, that "the wholesale distribution network is the most efficient way for manufacturers to reach customers."[53] DPPs admit that manufacturers prefer to sell to distributors, rather than directly to Dealers, for a number of reasons:

> Distributors purchase and warehouse significant volumes of Pool Products throughout the year, allowing manufacturers to operate their factories year-round notwithstanding the seasonal nature of the pool industry. Distributors also provide one-stop shopping, timely delivery, and the extension of credit to thousands of Dealers, thereby providing Dealers and manufacturers with significant transactional efficiencies. Additionally, distributors often help manufacturers administer their Dealer rebate and warranty programs, and provide answers to the Dealers' product-related questions. By displaying the Pool Products of particular manufacturers, distributors are also able to afford manufacturers product visibility and help to create and maintain brand recognition among industry participants generally.[54]

Additionally, DPPs recognize that manufacturers prefer to sell their products to wholesale distributors because of the costs attendant to distribution, [39] the Manufacturer Defendants' lack of expertise in distribution, and the difficulty manufacturers have obtaining products to distribute from competing manufacturers.[55] The Supreme Court has also recognized the benefits of a traditional wholesale distribution chain: "[D]istributors are an important source of information for manufacturers. In order to assure an efficient distribution system, manufacturers and distributors constantly must coordinate their activities to assure that their product will reach the consumer persuasively and efficiently." Monsanto Co. v. Spray-Rite Serv. Corp., 465 U.S. 752, 763-64, [*563] 104 S. Ct. 1464, 79 L. Ed. 2d 775 (1984).

Moreover, each Manufacturer Defendant offers evidence suggesting that distribution efficiencies and efforts to cut costs were the impetus behind its free freight minimum increase. As Vice President of Marketing Carlos Del Amo testified, Pentair's business model "is to go through distribution . . . for consolidating freight purposes and many strategic reasons. A lot of cost savings. [Pentair is] really not good at selling small quantities of product and shipping them on time."[56] This testimony is consistent with Murray's e-mail from 2010, cited earlier. Further, Jeff Fausett, the President and CEO [40] of the Aquatech buying group admitted: "Pentair was consistently telling us that they were concerned about the smaller vendors . . . meaning that, you know, they were shipping product at low volume to people and that wasn't their business model. They were built around large-order sales, not small-order sales."[57] Consistent with Pentair's "lean" approach to manufacturing and distributing its Pool Products, Pentair repeatedly sought to decrease the cost of shipping goods to its customers.[58]

In August 2006, one year before Pentair increased its free freight minimum, a Pentair employee opined that raising free freight to just $14,000 was a "$750,000 opportunity" because this order minimum "would allow [Pentair] to build multi stop truckloads [that] are cheaper, faster, and will get [Pentair's] products to [its] customers in a non compromised fashion."[59] Pentair President Karl Frykman also testified that he discussed raising the $10,000 free freight minimum to "increase the [41] size of the orders going out of [Pentair's] factory [because] [t]he lower the order volume, the more [Pentair was] acting like a distributor, and [Pentair] really [was]n't set up to do that well. So it was a matter of efficiency . . . ."[60] Frykman also explained that "smaller dealers" burdened Pentair's shipping process, so Pentair "wanted to discourage their ability to buy small quantity orders . . . and drive [Pentair's] efficiency down."[61]

When Pentair finally announced its free freight increase in August 2007, Aquatech's Jeff Fausett described Pentair's increase as a way for Pentair "to mask its own ineffectiveness in production and inventory."[62] Another Dealer also wrote to Murray about the increase and acknowledged Pentair's freight issues: "I understand that freight cost[s] have been issues for most manufacture[r]s this past season and I am sure the level of your backorders and shipping from across the country have not helped your cost."[63] This same Dealer later wrote to Dave Murray again:

"The one point that . . . makes some sense to me is that Pentair is not a company that can support a lot of small volume locations."[64] [42] In contrast to those Dealer buying [*564] group members upset by the freight increase, Carecraft's Greg Howard wrote to Pentair's Dave Murray: "I fully support the change and . . . will gladly comply with it."[65]

Beginning in 2004, Hayward also considered increasing its free freight minimum to compensate for rising fuel costs. Vice President of Logistics and Information Systems David Caldwell wrote to another Hayward employee:

> [S]everal months ago, we (Bruce, you[,] Kevin[,] and I) talked about raising the free freight possibly as high as $15k. The reasoning at that time was the increase in freight costs as a result of fuel oil price inflation. With crude oil now even higher than it was in May/June when the issue was last raised . . . it would seem that we should opt for the higher threshold. For the past several years, I have been asked to monitor and report on freight costs whenever the issue came up during [43] the POB financial review.[66]

In March 2007, Hayward's Vice President of Sales and Marketing Bruce Fisher asked other employees to provide input on topics they wanted to discuss at Hayward's 2008 Annual Sales and Marketing Planning Meeting.[67] Fisher received a number of responses indicating that Hayward employees were concerned about shipping efficiency, freight costs, the existing $10,000 free freight minimum, and the influx of small Dealers joining buying groups. For example, Hayward's Vice President of Sales Michael Massa wrote:

> 1) Analyze our freight policy with regard to Freight Minimums and Single Point of Shipment:
> • Freight costs continue to rise and the more we can put on one shipment helps us keep our costs in line.
> • Purchasers of G[old]L[ine] Product are at a disadvantage because they need to buy a min of 10K on one order to receive freight prepaid. > join a builder group? The addition of too many group members will eventually put a strain on the system as we try to deliver to each of these members. Look at freight issues/minimums, pricing difference, truckload discount programs, terms, early buy programs, etc.[68]

David Caldwell voiced similar concerns:

> #1 - Freight Costs issue - assess notion of free freight and only freight. In other words, continue to provide free freight incentives, but assess the viability to pass along accessorial charges as a standard. Excessive accessorial charges would be billed (e.g., demurrage charges and the like)[.]

> Parts orders - "each" picks to be split off from case picks. Freight costs for Each Picks could be passed on to the customer to help defray some cost to HPP and incentivise [46] [sic] full case ordering.[69]

In addition, this e-mail chain reflects that Hayward's decision to combine its previously separate product lines also motivated its free freight minimum increase. Similarly, on July 1, 2007, another Hayward employee noted that he had already begun telling Dealer buying groups about the potential to combine product lines accompanied by a free freight increase:

> Here are my notes on a meeting . . . I had with Greg Howard last week. . . . [Howard] [u]nderstands that their [sic] may be changes in freight programs in 2008. I said nothing has been decided but we are looking at possibl[y] making a change. Tied in GL and HPP lines next year and raise minimum. He didn't see a problem.[70]

Zodiac's President and CEO also testified that freight costs were one of the reasons behind Jandy's new $20,000 free freight minimum:

> [T]here's various factors in the marketplace. One is we had a more extensive line. We at Jandy Pool Products - - we kept, you know, higher [47] volumes. Freight costs were going up. So to get free freight, we just required a larger volume. Plus, you know, we heard through market intelligence that Pentair or Hayward had done it as well, earlier in the year. So we thought it justified for us.[71]

Jandy's decision to follow its competitor's price increase to offset cost increases [*566] does not signal behavior contrary to its independent business interests. See In re Baby Food Antitrust Litig., 166 F.3d 112, 128 (3d Cir. 1999) (refusing to infer conscious parallelism "merely because the evidence tends to show that a defendant may have followed a competitor's price increase"). In In re Chocolate Confectionary Antitrust Litigation, the district court noted that a defendant with less market share relative to the others not only independently wanted to increase prices to meet rising costs, but also waited to see if its competitors increased prices so that it could "follow any price advance." 999 F. Supp. 2d 777, 796-97 (M.D. Pa. 2014), aff'd, 801 F.3d 383 (3d Cir. 2015). The court in Chocolate Confectionary found that this defendant's following other competitors' price leads was a rational business decision. See id. at 796; see also In re Musical Instruments & Equip. Antitrust Litig., 798 F.3d 1186, 1193 (9th Cir. 2015) (explaining that [48] "firms may arrive at identical decisions independently [because] they are cognizant of—and reacting to—similar market pressures [and their] competitors' behavior . . . .").

Further, DPPs' own economic expert, Dr. Gordon Rausser, testified that it was not unreasonable for Zodiac (Jandy) to pay attention to its competitors' prices and adopt similar policies:

Q: . . . It's not your position that Jandy somehow had an obligation to ignore information that's in the marketplace about what its competitors were doing on free freight policies, is it?
A: No.
Q: . . . And it's reasonable for a company that sees its competitors have taken a certain stance on free freight policy to consider adopting that policy for itself?
A: In the abstract . . . Yes.[72]

In sum, increasing free freight minimums made good business sense for the Manufacturer Defendants because higher free freight minimums encouraged all customers—distributors and Dealers alike—to make larger, less frequent orders. This, in turn, helped to reduce shipping costs in the face of rising fuel prices. It is undisputed that the Manufacturer Defendants preferred to deal in bulk because larger [49] orders, or "full truckload orders" decreased the Manufacturer Defendants' shipping costs, and therefore potentially increased profits. See Barr Labs. Inc. v. Abbott Labs., 978 F.2d 98, 104 (3d Cir. 1992) (noting that "dealing in large volumes" minimizes transaction costs). Further, it is undisputed, that "the vast majority of Dealers . . . tend to be small operations that lack the resources and customer base to purchase Pool Products in volume directly from manufacturers."[73] Thus, the higher free freight minimums benefitted the Manufacturer Defendants in two ways. First, the $20,000 minimum encouraged Dealers to continue to buy Pool Products from wholesale distributors—the Manufacturer Defendants' preferred channel to market. Second, the $20,000 minimum ensured that Dealers buying directly from the manufacturers would purchase Pool Products in sufficiently large volumes to minimize the Manufacturer Defendants' existing shipping inefficiencies, particularly as the buying groups began including smaller Dealers and fuel costs rose.

Hayward's free freight minimum was also justified by its decision to combine its previously distinct product lines. According [*567] to Hayward's September 2007 pricing announcement, this new "Single Point [50] of Contact" model gave customers "a single source for all of their Hayward, Goldline, and AquaVac product requirements," and enabled customers "to reach order minimums and prepaid freight minimums by combining what previously was a separate requirement for order size and freight minimums for each of the three companies."[74]

In opposition, DPPs point to the timing of the free freight increases—fall 2007, amid a national recession—as general evidence the price increases were contrary to the Manufacturer Defendants' economic interests. It is undisputed that the economy at this time was weak, the housing market was down, and the pool industry was slowing.[75] Generally, "reduced demand and excess supply are economic conditions that favor price cuts, rather than price increases." In re Flat Glass, 385 F.3d at 361. But "[r]ising prices do not themselves permit an inference of a collusive market dynamic. Even in a concentrated market, the occurrence of a price increase does not itself permit a rational inference of . . . supracompetitive pricing." In re Baby Food Antitrust Litig., 166 F.3d 112, 129-30 (3d Cir. 1999) (quoting Brooke Grp. Ltd. v. Brown & Williamson Tobacco Corp., 509 U.S. 209, 237, 113 S. Ct. 2578, 125 L. Ed. 2d 168 (1993)). And, as noted, cutting costs is also a rational response to declining economic conditions. See, e.g., Barr Labs., 978 F.2d at 104 (noting [51] that "dealing in large volumes" minimizes transaction costs); In re Chocolate Confectionary, 999 F. Supp. 2d at 792-93 (noting that competitors may rationally increase price to mitigate anticipated increases in costs); 6 Phillip E. Areeda & Herbert Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law ¶ 1434, at 269 (3d ed. 2010) (noting a "rise in raw material costs" as an "independent explanation" for a price increase); cf. Am. Tobacco Co. v. United States, 328 U.S. 781, 805-10, 66 S. Ct. 1125, 90 L. Ed. 1575 (1946) (finding conspiracy when firms simultaneously increased price absent a corresponding increase in costs).

In the face of ample evidence indicating that the Manufacturer Defendants raised their free freight minimums to offset growing and costly shipping inefficiencies, DPPs bear the burden to identify specific facts that establish a genuine issue for trial. See Celotex, 477 U.S. at 325; Little, 37 F.3d at 1075. To counter the Manufacturer Defendants' efficiency justifications, DPPs argue that these reasons are merely pretextual. The Court addresses this argument in the following section.

Pretextual Business Justifications

DPPs contend that there are factual disputes as to whether the Manufacturer Defendants' proffered efficiency justifications are pretextual. In support, DPPs [52] assert that none of the Manufacturer Defendants' formal announcements cites fuel costs or efficiency as the reason for the free freight increase.

Neither Pentair's 2008 Early-Buy Program announcement, nor Zodiac's Updated Freight Program announcement, cites any reason for their increases in free freight minimums or any other costs noted on the announcements.[76] They appear to be simply [*568] promotional bulletins. But, as noted, other documentary evidence supports the Manufacturer Defendants' explanation. Defendants point to evidence as far back as 2002 that shows shipping inefficiencies at the forefront of the manufacturers' pricing concerns. That these documented concerns predate, as well as are contemporaneous with, the allegedly collusive free freight increase undermines DPPs' pretextual argument. See In re Chocolate Confectionary, 999 F. Supp. 2d at 794 ("Plaintiffs have failed to adduce any evidence which would tend to suggest that these documents were sham portrayals in furtherance of the price-fixing conspiracy.").

[53] Further, although the price announcements themselves fail to mention fuel costs, oral and written communications between the manufacturers and their customers reveal that the Aquatech and Carecraft buying groups, as well as individual Dealers, understood that defendants justified their raising free freight minimums to account for shipping costs. For example, Pentair's Dave Murray left Jeff Fausett a voice message explaining that, to meet the new $20,000 free freight minimum, Pentair expected its customers to "condense buys" and "put things together" to build larger orders.[77] A Pool Products Dealer and Aquatech buying group member wrote to Murray: "I understand that freight cost[s] have been issues for most manufacture[r]s this past season."[78] Later, the same Dealer wrote to Murray again: "The one point that Dave [Murray] made that makes some sense to me is that Pentair is not a company that can support a lot of small volume locations."[79] In the face of evidence contrary to DPPs' arguments, "plaintiffs may not rely merely on general assertions that defendants' cost-based and self-interested rationalizations are pretextual: at summary judgment, antitrust plaintiffs, like any plaintiff, must offer affirmative evidence which creates a genuine issue of material fact for trial." In re Chocolate Confectionary, 999 F. Supp. 2d at 796.

Regarding Hayward's 2007 free freight minimum increase, DPPs admit that Hayward cited its product combination as justification raising its free freight minimum. Nonetheless, DPPs contend that this justification does not suffice to explain how Hayward came to offer its $20,000 free freight minimum "at exactly the same time" that Pentair and Zodiac increased their minimums.[80]

[80] R. Doc. 585 at 24.

First, Pentair's free [54] freight increase was already market knowledge by the time Hayward announced its increase on September 10, 2007.[81] In addition, that Hayward and Zodiac's price increase took effect simultaneously does not alter Hayward's announcing in early September that it would unify its product lines, accompanied by a $20,000 free freight minimum, starting January 2, 2008. Months after Hayward's announcement, in December 2007, Zodiac (Jandy) announced its own free freight increase would also take effect on the same day. Thus, the timing of Zodiac's free freight increase does not [*569] detract from Hayward's earlier justifications for its own decision.

In sum, beyond their own speculative assertions, DPPs have not offered any specific evidence to refute the Manufacturer Defendants' proffered business justifications. DPPs cannot withstand a motion for summary judgment merely by attempting to "discredit[] the [55] credibility of the movant's evidence." Big Apple BMW, Inc. v. BMW of N. Am., Inc., 974 F.2d 1358, 1363 (3d. Cir. 1992) (citing Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc., 477 U.S. 242, 256-57, 106 S. Ct. 2505, 91 L. Ed. 2d 202 (1986)). They must produce "some affirmative evidence" in their favor to create a factual dispute for trial. See id.

Motivation to Conspire and Industry Structure Conducive to Collusion

Evidence that a defendant was motivated to enter a price-fixing conspiracy is often similar or related to evidence that the industry is conducive to collusion. See, e.g., In re Flat Glass Antitrust Litig., 385 F.3d 350, 360-61 (3d Cir. 2004); see also In re Chocolate Confectionary Antitrust Litig., 801 F.3d 383, 398 (3d Cir. 2015) ("Evidence of a motive to conspire means that the market is conducive to price fixing . . . ."). Accordingly, the Court considers these factors together.

DPPs assert that a number of market dynamics rendered the Pool Products industry conducive to collusion. First, Pool Products are specialized, with few realistic substitutes. Second, the Manufacturer Defendants are the nation's "most important Pool Products suppliers." Third, Pool is the only national distributor; other Pool Products distributors are regional or local. Fourth, Pool is the Manufacturer Defendants' best customer. Fifth, Pool had "significant leverage" over the Manufacturer Defendants. Sixth, the Pool Products industry is insulated from import competition because foreign manufacturers sell poor quality products. DPPs [56] rely on the report of their economics expert, Dr. Gordon Rausser, for each of these assertions.[82] DPPs contend that the Manufacturer Defendants were motivated to conspire for similar reasons. DPPs assert that because Pool was each manufacturer's largest customer, all manufacturers sought to maintain access to Pool's national distribution network. DPPs also assert that to avoid any loss in market share incurred by raising prices, each Manufacturer Defendant was unwilling to increase its free freight minimum absent assurance that the others would do the same.[83]

DPPs' arguments here rest on the assumptions that the Manufacturer Defendants' free freight increases were contrary to their individual business interests and that the Manufacturer Defendants increased the free freight minimums out of fear of losing Pool's business. There is no evidence that Pool "demanded" or "insisted" that the Manufacturer Defendants raise their free freight minimums before the manufacturers' parallel price increase occurred. Nor is there any evidence that Pool threatened to switch to other manufacturers if the free freight minimums were not increased. Indeed, when Zodiac unilaterally [57] decreased its $25,000 free freight minimum in March 2009, Pool's response was not to cut off or punish Zodiac as a supplier, but merely to complain. Further, DPPs simply assume that Pool would have jettisoned a premier product line offered by its largest supplier, Pentair, to force a free freight increase to disadvantage buying groups and that Pentair had a realistic fear that this would [*570] happen.[84] DPPs' mere citation to conclusory statements by an expert does not make this assertion supported by the record evidence.

Aside from these problematic assumptions, any evidence that the Manufacturer Defendants [58] were motivated to conspire in a market conducive to collusion is insufficient to push DPPs' theory of conspiracy past the summary judgment stage. Once a court has already found that evidence of the defendants' parallel pricing may exist, "evidence that a market is ripe for collusion . . . or that defendants were motivated to collude is too ambiguous to support an inference of agreement, because these circumstances could just as readily be the result of unilateral independent conduct." In re Chocolate Confectionary Antitrust Litig., 999 F. Supp. 2d 777, 789 (M.D. Pa. 2014) (citing In re Baby Food Antitrust Litig., 166 F.3d 112, 122 (3d. Cir. 1999)), aff'd, 801 F.3d 383 (3d Cir. 2015). According to Professors Areeda and Hovenkamp, "motivation in the sense of a reasonable prospect of increasing profits through collective action is a logical corollary of interdependence. . . . Motivation is thus synonymous with interdependence and therefore adds nothing to it." 6 Phillip E. Areeda & Herbert Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law ¶ 1434, at 269 (3d ed. 2010). In other words, motivation to collude or market interdependence merely restates that parallel conduct occurred. See id. at 264.

When courts do rely on evidence of the defendants' motivation or general market structure, they often require that the plaintiff also show that defendants acted contrary to their own economic interests. See, e.g., [59] Royal Drug Co. Inc. v. Grp. Life & Health Ins. Co., 737 F.2d 1433, 1437 (5th Cir. 1984) (citation omitted); Venzie Corp. v. U.S. Mineral Prods. Co., Inc., 521 F.2d 1309, 1314 (3d Cir. 1975) (citations omitted). That the defendants acted contrary to their self-interests helps illustrate that something more than mere interdependence led to the parallel pricing. See Areeda & Hovenkamp, supra at 270. Here, because DPPs failed to present sufficient evidence that the Manufacturer Defendants acted irrationally by increasing their free freight minimums, DPPs' evidence does not go beyond mere interdependence. "Parallel conduct or interdependence, without more, mirrors the ambiguity of the behavior: consistent with conspiracy, but just as much in line with a wide swath of rational and competitive business strategy unilaterally prompted by common perceptions of the market." Bell Atl. Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 554, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007). The Sherman Act does not condemn parallel pricing achieved merely through interdependence, rather than collusion. See, e.g., Brooke Group Ltd. v. Brown & Williamson Tobacco Corp., 509 U.S. 209, 227, 113 S. Ct. 2578, 125 L. Ed. 2d 168 (1993) (holding interdependence is "not in itself unlawful").

3. Summary

Viewing the record as a whole, the Court finds that the evidence presented is insufficient to raise an genuine issue of material fact as to the existence of a horizontal conspiracy among the Manufacturer Defendants and with Pool. DPPs' best evidence is the ambiguous e-mail Pool's CEO [*571] Manny Perez de la Mesa sent to coworkers on November [60] 30, 2007, and the Manufacturer Defendants' parallel pricing. But the evidence presented here in its totality cannot withstand summary judgment because plaintiffs have failed to demonstrate significant plus factors. DPPs' circumstantial evidence does not tend to exclude the possibility that the Manufacturer Defendants independently raised their free freight minimums. Accordingly, DPPs' claim of a horizontal price-fixing conspiracy against Pool must be dismissed.

C. Impact

---

[84] Dr. Rausser estimates that, together, the Manufacturer Defendants made up approximately forty-six percent of Pool's total purchases during the relevant time period. Dr. Rausser does not further break down that number. See Rausser Initial Report, April 10, 2014, at 37. According to the defendants' experts, Pentair's sales to Pool accounted for anywhere from twenty to twenty-five percent of Pool's total purchases during the relevant period. This is almost twice as large as Pool's next largest supplier, Hayward. See Johnson Initial Report, at 29; Elzinga DPP Report, April 10, 2014, at 16-17.

Because the Court concludes that DPPs' evidence of alleged price-fixing agreement is insufficient as a matter of law, the Court need not also consider whether DPPs have demonstrated that they suffered "antitrust injury" as a result. Without proof of concerted action, DPPs' claim must fail because the "very essence of a section 1 claim, of course, is the existence of an agreement." Alvord-Polk, Inc. v. F. Schumacher & Co., 37 F.3d 996, 999 (3d Cir. 1994).

IV. CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, the Court GRANTS Pool's motion for summary judgment on DPPs' horizontal conspiracy claims.

HN2[] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

Pleadings standards in federal actions have shifted from simple notice pleading to a more heightened form of pleading, requiring a plaintiff to plead more than the possibility of relief to survive a motion to dismiss under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6). Therefore, when presented with a motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim, district courts conduct a two-part analysis. First, the factual and legal elements of a claim are separated. The court must accept all of the complaint's well-pleaded facts as true, but may disregard legal conclusions. Second, a district court must determine whether the facts alleged in the complaint are sufficient to show that the plaintiff has a plausible claim for relief. In other words, a complaint must do more than allege the plaintiff's entitlement to relief. A complaint has to show such an entitlement with its facts. Where the well-pleaded facts do not permit the court to infer more than the mere possibility of misconduct, the complaint has alleged—but it has not shown— that the pleader is entitled to relief.

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Complaints > Requirements for Complaint

HN3[] Complaints, Requirements for Complaint

Under Fed. R. Civ. P. 8(a)(2), a pleading must contain a short and plain statement of the claim showing that the pleader is entitled to relief. The pleading standard Rule 8 announces does not require detailed factual allegations, but it demands more than an unadorned, the-defendant-unlawfully-harmed-me accusation. A pleading that offers labels and conclusions or a formulaic recitation of the elements of a cause of action will not do. Nor does a complaint suffice if it tenders naked assertions devoid of further factual enhancement.

HN4[] Subject Matter Jurisdiction, Jurisdiction Over Actions

A motion to dismiss pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 12 (b)(1) for lack of jurisdiction over the subject matter is governed by a different standard. Because the motion goes to a court's jurisdiction, i.e., the very power to hear the case, there is substantial authority that the court is free to weigh the evidence and satisfy itself as to the existence of its power to hear the case. There is no presumptive truthfulness attached to plaintiff's allegations, the existence of disputed material facts will not preclude the trial court from evaluating for itself the merits of jurisdictional claims, the plaintiff has the burden of proof that jurisdiction does in fact exist.

Under the doctrine established in Barton v. Barbour, 104 U.S. 126, 26 L. Ed. 672 (1881), leave of the bankruptcy court is required before instituting an action against a bankruptcy trustee. It applies to bar suits against bankruptcy fiduciaries even after the bankruptcy proceedings have closed. Finally, the doctrine shields not only the bankruptcy trustee, but also other bankruptcy-court-appointed officers, for acts done in the actor's official capacity.

HN7[] Jurisdiction, Core Proceedings

A proceeding is within the bankruptcy jurisdiction, defined by 28 U.S.C.S. § 1334(b), if it "arises under" the Bankruptcy Code or "arises in" or is "related to" a case under the Code. "Arising under" proceedings are matters invoking a substantive right created by the Bankruptcy Code. The "arising in a case under" category is generally thought to involve administrative-type matters, or matters that could arise only in bankruptcy. The usual articulation of the test for determining whether a civil proceeding is related to bankruptcy is whether the outcome of the proceeding could conceivably have an effect on the estate being administered in bankruptcy.

HN8[] False Advertising, Lanham Act

Section 43(a)(1)(B) of the Lanham Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1125(a)(1)(B), provides: (1) Any person who, on or in connection with any goods or services, or any container for goods, uses in commerce any word, term, name, symbol, or device, or any combination thereof, or any false designation of origin, false or misleading description of fact, or false or misleading representation of fact which; (B) in commercial advertising or promotion, misrepresents the nature, characteristics, qualities, or geographic origin of his or her or another person's goods, services, or commercial activities, shall be liable in a civil action by any person who believes that he or she is or is likely to be damaged by such act.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Consumer Protection > False Advertising > Lanham Act

Liability under the Lanham Act arises if a commercial message, statement, or advertisement is either (1) literally false; or (2) literally true or ambiguous, but has the tendency to deceive consumers.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Consumer Protection > False Advertising > Lanham Act

HN10[] False Advertising, Lanham Act

The elements of a Lanham Act claim for false advertising, or false or misleading representation of a product, are: (1) that the defendant has made false or misleading statements as to his own product or another's; (2) that there is actual deception or at least a tendency to deceive a substantial portion of the intended audience; (3) that the deception is material in that it is likely to influence purchasing decisions; (4) that the advertised goods traveled in interstate commerce; and (5) that there is a likelihood of injury to the plaintiff in terms of declining sales, loss of good will, etc.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Consumer Protection > False Advertising > Lanham Act

HN11[] False Advertising, Lanham Act

Commercial advertising or promotion for purposes of Lanham Act § 43(a)(1)(B), 15 U.S.C.S. § 1125(a)(1)(B), consists of (1) commercial speech; (2) by a defendant in commercial competition with the plaintiff; (3) designed to influence customers to buy the defendant's products; (4) that is sufficiently disseminated to the relevant purchasing public to constitute advertising or promotion within the industry. The word "commercial" excludes use of § 43(a) to challenge the falsity of consumer or editorial content, parodies, satires, or other constitutionally protected material. Thus, any message that does not qualify as commercial speech cannot be the subject of a § 43(a) false advertising or product disparagement challenge.

HN16[] Elements, Breach of Duty

Under Pennsylvania law, to establish a common law cause of action in negligence, a plaintiff must demonstrate that the defendant owed a duty of care to the plaintiff, the defendant breached that duty, the breach resulted in injury to the plaintiff and the plaintiff suffered an actual loss or damage.

Torts > Negligence > Elements > Breach of Duty

HN17[] Elements, Breach of Duty

All negligence claims are premised on the alleged violation of a duty. A duty is that responsibility which exists by operation of law requiring a person to adhere to a standard of conduct protecting others against unreasonable or unnecessary risks. In the absence of legal duty, no liability will attach, even if a defendant's conduct was negligent. In this sense, the concept of legal duty is both a source of legal responsibility, and a limitation upon liability to others: recognition of a legal duty by the courts will impose certain obligations, while refusal to recognize a legal duty by the courts will insulate a party against liability. The duty owed by a defendant may be express or implied, may be general or arise from specific circumstances. In determining the existence of a duty, the courts will look to a variety of sources, including the common law, statutes, or a contract between the parties. Ultimately, however, it is the court's decision whether to recognize a duty that is fundamental to the existence of a negligence claim.

To allege a plausible claim of civil conspiracy, a plaintiff must make factual allegations of combination, agreement, or understanding among all or between any of the defendants or coconspirators to plot, plan, or conspire to carry out the alleged chain of events. It is not enough that the end result of the parties' independent conduct caused plaintiff harm or even that the alleged perpetrators of the harm acted in conscious parallelism.

HN22[] Civil Conspiracy, Elements

Proof of malice i.e., an intent to injure, is essential in proof of a conspiracy.

Torts > ... > Concerted Action > Civil Conspiracy > Defenses

HN23[] Civil Conspiracy, Defenses

For purposes of a civil conspiracy claim, a corporation cannot conspire with itself through the activities of its own employees, officers, and directors.

Torts > ... > Concerted Action > Civil Conspiracy > Defenses

HN24[] Civil Conspiracy, Defenses

Federal courts in the Third Circuit have explained that agents acting in their individual capacities rather than their official capacities can be liable for civil conspiracy. Courts that have followed the intra-corporate conspiracy doctrine allow an exception when the employees have acted for their sole personal benefit and thus outside the course and scope of their employment. That exception is based on the proposition that since the employer would not be subject to liability under respondeat superior, it would not be a conspirator. A conspiracy may exist between a corporation and an officer if the officer is acting in a personal, as opposed to official, capacity. An employer and its officers and employees acting in the scope of their duties constitute one legal person for purposes of conspiracy law and therefore cannot conspire together. However, at least one panel of the Pennsylvania Superior Court, in a non-precedential decision, has opined that no such exception to the intra-corporate conspiracy doctrine is recognized by Pennsylvania state courts. Consequently, it is not clear whether such an exception to the intra-corporate conspiracy doctrine exists in Pennsylvania law.

Torts > ... > Concerted Action > Civil Conspiracy > Defenses

HN25[] Civil Conspiracy, Defenses

Pennsylvania courts have often applied the intra-corporate conspiracy doctrine without elaborating on its reasoning or its relationship to the scope of employment, but they ordinarily apply the doctrine when defendants allegedly conspired with other agents or the principal corporation on behalf of the principal corporation. It cannot be the case that co-agents can never be liable for civil conspiracy—even if the alleged conspiracy was outside the scope of their employment—merely because they happen to be co-workers. There must be some connection between the alleged conspirators' status as co-agents and the alleged tort for the doctrine to preclude a finding of liability.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > Sherman Act

HN27[] Standing, Clayton Act

Section 1 of the Sherman Act states that every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, is hereby declared to be illegal. 15 U.S.C.S. § 1. Section 4 of the Clayton Act, in turn, grants the right to maintain a private cause of action to any person who shall be injured in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws. 15 U.S.C.S. § 15(a). As these sections imply, standing and antitrust injury are essential elements to maintaining an action for damages thereunder. Under Section 1, a plaintiff must plausibly allege the following three elements: (1) an agreement; (2) imposing an unreasonable restraint of trade within a relevant product market; and (3) resulting in antitrust injury. Antitrust injury consists of (1) harm of the type the antitrust laws were designed to prevent; and (2) an injury which flows from that which makes defendants acts unlawful.

HN28[] Robinson-Patman Act, Coverage

Section 2(c) of the Robinson-Patman Act provides: It shall be unlawful for any person engaged in commerce, in the course of such commerce, to pay or grant, or to receive or accept anything of value as a commission, brokerage, or other compensation, or any allowance or discount in lieu thereof, except for services rendered in connection with the sale or purchase of goods, wares, or merchandise, either to the other party to such transaction or to an agent, representative, or other intermediary therein where such intermediary is acting in fact for or on behalf, or is subject to the direct or indirect control, of any party to such transaction other than the person by whom such compensation is so granted or paid. 15 U.S.C.S. § 13(c).

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Coverage

HN29[] Robinson-Patman Act, Coverage

Section 2(c) of the Robinson-Patman Act was designed to eliminate the competitive advantage large buyers and sellers attained over their smaller competitors by virtue of their economic clout and bargaining power. Section 2(c) encompasses cases of commercial bribery tending to undermine the fiduciary relationship between a buyer and its agent, representative, or other intermediary in a transaction involving the sale or purchase of goods. For a finding of commercial bribery, a plaintiff must show that the illegal payments in question crossed the line from buyer to seller or vice-versa. Intrastate sales are subject to the Robinson-Patman Act as long as the sales remain in the flow of interstate commerce.

Torts > Intentional Torts > Breach of Fiduciary Duty > Elements

HN30[] Breach of Fiduciary Duty, Elements

To allege a breach of fiduciary duty, plaintiffs must assert that a fiduciary or confidential relationship existed between themselves and the defendants. Although no precise formula has been devised to ascertain the existence of a confidential relationship, it has been said that such a relationship exists whenever one occupies toward another such a position of advisor or counselor as reasonably to inspire confidence that he will act in good faith for the other's interest. To allege a breach of that duty, the plaintiffs must allege (1) that the defendants negligently or intentionally failed to act in good faith and solely for the benefit of the plaintiffs in all matters for which they were employed; (2) that the plaintiffs suffered injury; and (3) the defendants' failure to act solely for the plaintiffs' benefit was a real factor bringing about plaintiffs' injuries.

Contracts Law > Contract Interpretation > Fiduciary Responsibilities

Torts

HN31[] Contract Interpretation, Fiduciary Responsibilities

The gist of the action doctrine applies to tort claims: (1) arising solely from a contract between the parties; (2) where the duties allegedly breached were created and grounded in the contract itself; (3) where the liability stems from a contract; or (4) where the tort claim essentially duplicates a breach of contract claim or the success of which is wholly dependent on the terms of the contract. The principle underlying the doctrine is that a tort action derives from the breach of duties imposed as a matter of social policy, whereas a breach of contract action stems from the breach of duties imposed by mutual consensus.

Torts > Vicarious Liability > Agency Relationships > Negligence

HN32[] Agency Relationships, Negligence

Plaintiffs in a negligence action are allowed to recover from both a principal and his agent under Pennsylvania law.

Torts > Vicarious Liability > Employers > Scope of Employment

HN33[] Employers, Scope of Employment

Under Pennsylvania law, employees are liable for their own torts, even if they were acting within the scope of their employment when they engaged in the tortious conduct in question.

Torts > Vicarious Liability > Agency Relationships

HN34[] Vicarious Liability, Agency Relationships

An agent who does an act otherwise a tort is not relieved from liability by the fact that he acted at the command of the principal or on account of the principal.

Torts > Procedural Matters > Multiple Defendants

HN35[] Procedural Matters, Multiple Defendants

Pennsylvania law recognizes the participation theory, under which a corporate officer, employee, or other agent who takes part in the commission of a tort by the corporation is personally liable therefor. To be liable under this theory, the corporate agent must have participated in the wrongful acts, a requirement the Pennsylvania courts have interpreted to permit liability for an agent's misfeasance, but not for mere nonfeasance. Misfeasance consists of the doing of something which ought not to be done, something which a reasonable man would not do, or doing it in such a manner as a man of reasonable and ordinary prudence would not do it.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Breach > Breach of Contract Actions > Elements of Contract Claims

HN36[] Breach of Contract Actions, Elements of Contract Claims

A claim of unjust enrichment must allege the following elements: (1) plaintiff conferred a benefit on the defendant; (2) the defendant appreciated the benefit; and (3) acceptance and retention by the defendant of the benefits, under the circumstances, would make it inequitable for the defendant to retain the benefit without paying for the value of the benefit.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Breach > Breach of Contract Actions > Elements of Contract Claims

Contracts Law > Contract Interpretation > Intent

HN37[] Breach of Contract Actions, Elements of Contract Claims

To sustain a claim of unjust enrichment, a claimant must show that the party against whom recovery is sought either wrongfully secured or passively received a benefit that it would be unconscionable for her to retain. The polestar of the unjust enrichment inquiry is whether the defendant has been unjustly enriched; the intent of the parties is irrelevant. In order to recover, there must be both (1) an enrichment; and (2) an injustice resulting if recovery for the enrichment is denied.

The standard for striking a complaint or a portion of it is strict, and only allegations that are so unrelated to the plaintiffs' claims as to be unworthy of any consideration should be stricken. Consequently, motions to strike are generally disfavored by courts and will be denied unless the allegations have no possible relation to the controversy and may cause prejudice to one of the parties, or if the allegations confuse the issues in the case.

STENGEL, J.

I. INTRODUCTION

Presently pending are multiple Motions by the named Defendants in this Lanham Act and antitrust action to dismiss the Amended Complaint ("AC") of Plaintiffs Carter P. ("Reese") [2] and Sarah Reese (collectively the "Reeses").[1] For the reasons that follow, I grant the pending Motions, save for several common law claims against Defendants Jay Lowe[2] and Mike Caffarella.

II. STANDARD OF REVIEW

HN1[] A motion to dismiss under Rule 12(b)(6) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure for failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted examines the sufficiency of the complaint. Conley v. Gibson, 355 U.S. 41, 45-46, 78 S. Ct. 99, 2 L. Ed. 2d 80 (1957). Following the Supreme Court decisions in Bell At. Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 555, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007) and Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 679, 129 S. Ct. 1937, 173 L. Ed. 2d 868 (2009), HN2[] pleadings standards in federal actions have shifted from simple notice pleading to a more heightened form of pleading, requiring a plaintiff to plead more than the possibility of relief to survive a motion to dismiss under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6). Fowler v. UPMC Shadyside, 578 F.3d 203, 210-211 (3d Cir. 2009); see also Phillips v. County of Allegheny, 515 F.3d 224, 230 (3d Cir. 2008). Therefore, when presented with a motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim, district courts conduct a two-part analysis. First, the factual and legal elements of a claim are separated. The court must accept all of the complaint's well-pleaded facts as true but may disregard legal conclusions. Iqbal, 556 U.S. at 679. Second, a district court must determine whether [3] the facts alleged in the complaint are sufficient to show that the plaintiff has a "plausible claim for relief." Id. In other words, a complaint must do more than allege the plaintiff's entitlement to relief. A complaint has to "show" such an entitlement with its facts. Id.; see also Phillips, 515 F.3d at 234-235. "Where the well-pleaded facts do not permit the court to infer more than the mere possibility of misconduct, the complaint has alleged — but it has not 'show[n]' — 'that the pleader is entitled to relief.'" Iqbal, 556 U.S. at 679.

HN3[] Under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 8(a)(2), a pleading must contain a "short and plain statement of the claim showing that the pleader is entitled to relief." As the Court held in Twombly, the pleading standard Rule 8 announces does not require "detailed factual allegations," but it demands more than an unadorned, the-defendant-unlawfully-harmed-me accusation. Iqbal, 556 U.S. at 678 (quoting Twombly, 550 U.S. at 555). A pleading that offers "labels and conclusions" or "a formulaic recitation [*281] of the elements of a cause of action will not do."

---

[1] Because there are multiple Motions, Responses, and Replies, I will refer and cite to them by their ECF docket number.

[2] Plaintiffs name as defendants Jay Lowe and Connie and Jay Lowe Antiques. I refer to them collectively as "Lowe."

Twombly, 550 U.S. at 555. Nor does a complaint suffice if it tenders "naked assertion[s]" devoid of "further factual enhancement." Id. at 557.

HN4[] A motion to dismiss pursuant to Rule 12 (b)(1) for "lack of jurisdiction over the subject matter" is governed by a different standard. Because the motion goes to our jurisdiction, [4] i.e., the very power to hear the case, there is substantial authority that the court is free to weigh the evidence and satisfy itself as to the existence of its power to hear the case. Mortensen v. First Fed. Sav. and Loan Ass'n, 549 F.2d 884, 891 (3d Cir.1977). There is no presumptive truthfulness attached to plaintiff's allegations, the existence of disputed material facts will not preclude the trial court from evaluating for itself the merits of jurisdictional claims, the plaintiff has the burden of proof that jurisdiction does in fact exist. III. FACTUAL ALLEGATIONS

The Reeses are collectors of antique toys. (AC ¶ 4.) On October 2, 2012, they filed a Chapter 11 bankruptcy petition in the United States Bankruptcy Court for the Eastern District of Pennsylvania. (Id. ¶¶ 44-45.) As part of the bankruptcy proceeding, the Reeses were required to sell a portion of their toy collection. (Id. ¶ 46.) Defendant Pook & Pook, LLC ("P&P") was approved by the Bankruptcy Court as the auctioneer to sell the collection. (Id. ¶ 47.) P&P and the Bankruptcy Estate of Carter Reese and Sarah Reese entered into an agreement for the sale of the toys. (ECF 26 Ex. B.[3]) The agreement was approved by the Bankruptcy Court. (Id. Ex. C.) Defendants Ron Pook, Debra Pook, and James Pook [5] (collective "the individual Pook Defendants") are principals of P&P. (AC ¶¶ 20-22.) None of the individual Pook Defendants were parties to the agreement. There is no allegation in the AC that the Reeses obtained permission from the Bankruptcy Court to file the pending claims against P&P.

The Reeses allege that Carter Reese and Ron Pook agreed that the toy collection would be sold in several different sales, owing to the great volume being offered (AC ¶ 49), and Carter would be involved in the sale preparations to identify objects and review pre-sale estimates. (AC ¶ 51.) They allege that this did not happen and, despite their disapproval, P&P retained Defendants "Caffarella and, thus, Lowe," as experts to assist the auction [6] sale. (AC ¶ 53-54.) Although the auction resulted in proceeds of approximately $560,000, the Reeses assert that the toys should have "fetched a far greater amount." (Id. ¶ 80.) They contend that the poor result was caused by the improper presentation of the toys at the auction. They assert that the staging of the sale was deliberately flawed to diminish the value of the toys: toys were presented in piles with no effort to match parts into complete toys, parts of various two- and three-part toys were not matched, allowing, for example, the front end of one horse-drawn toy to go in one box lot with the back end placed in a different lot. (Id. ¶¶ 56-60.) As a result, on-line and phone [*282] bidders had no opportunity to identify boxes of mismatched objects and could not know the contents of any lot or where various parts could be found. (Id. ¶¶ 61-62.) They allege that this benefited Lowe, who knew where the mismatched parts were located in the different lots, and that he bid accordingly for the items he wanted, won them at depressed prices, reassembled them, and placed them for resale at significant markup at his own business. (Id. ¶¶ 63-75.) The Reeses allege that Lowe had previously disparaged [7] their collection at the James Julia Auctions in Maine, where he worked on commission basis gathering collections for auction, then bought dozens of lots to resell. (Id. ¶¶ 83-85.) Plaintiffs also assert that the P&P catalogue of the Reese sale prominently promoted fake antiques called "newtiques," created by Lowe using original parts from antique toys and placing them on new toys, further disparaging the quality of toys in the Reese collection. (Id. ¶¶ 87-109.) They also allege that, after the auction, P&P sent an employee, Jamie Shearer, to the Reninger Antique Mall to criticize the collection as "junk." (Id. ¶¶ 115-117.)

[3] Although it is not attached as an exhibit to the AC, the Reeses reference the agreement in the AC and do not dispute that Ex. B is the actual agreement. Accordingly, I consider it as part of the pleadings in deciding the pending Motions to dismiss. See W. Penn Allegheny Health Sys. v. UPMC, 627 F.3d 85, 97 n. 6 (3d Cir. 2010) (stating that, HN5[] as a general rule, the court may not consider on a motion to dismiss matters extraneous to the pleadings, but an exception exists for documents "integral to or explicitly relied upon in the complaint").

Lita Solis-Cohen is the senior editor of the Maine Antique Digest ("MAD"). (Id. ¶ 15.[4]) She authored an article, "Pook's First Toy Auction," for the December 2013 MAD issue ("the Article"). (Id. ¶ 129.) The first sentence read in part that P&P "will sell any collection that comes along." (Id. ¶ 130.) She went on to write, relying on information allegedly from Lowe, that:

> Everyone in the toy world seemed to know the major cosignor [sic, in AC] was Carter Reese, a longtime collector who bought toys that he loved before collectors got hung up on condition. It didn't matter [8] to him if the toy had replaced figures, was repainted, or if much of the paint was missing. If the toy had charm and was cheap, he bought it.

(Id. ¶ 131.) She stated that "'[t]he consensus was that many of the toys that Pook offered brought all they were worth. . .' because, in the words of Jay Lowe, 'condition is king.'" (Id. ¶ 132.) Plaintiffs allege that these statements were published with actual malice and/or with reckless disregard for the truth as a "puff piece" for Lowe and his newtiques. (Id. ¶¶ 133-135.)

The AC contains eleven counts: (1) civil conspiracy against P&P, the individual Pook Defendants, Caffarella and Lowe; (2) violation of the Lanham Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1125 for false commercial advertising in the placement of Lowe's newtique on the cover of the sale catalogue and the negative commentary in MAD about the quality of the collection;[5] (3) common law unfair competition, coextensive with the Lanham Act claim; (4) violation of section one [9] and [*283] two of the Sherman Act;[6] (5) commercial disparagement/trade defamation against MAD and Lowe for which they seek inter alia the publication of a corrective article; (6) a claim pursuant to Restatement (Second) of Torts § 652E for false light against MAD and Lowe; (7) common law "injurious falsehood" against MAD and Lowe; (8) breach of fiduciary duty against P&P, the individual Pook Defendants and Caffarella; (9) negligence;[7] (10) breach of contract, breach of the duty of good faith and fair dealing, and "dishonesty in fact" against P&P and the individual Pook Defendants; and (11) common law unjust enrichment against P&P, the individual Pook Defendants, Caffarella and Lowe.

IV. P&P AND INDIVIDUAL POOK DEFENDANTS' MOTION TO DISMISS

In their Motion (ECF 26), [11] P&P and the individual Pook Defendants argue that, as the claims contained in the AC all arise from their involvement in the auction sale of the Reeses' assets, and that their involvement arose from [4] Also named as defendants are MAD, S. Clayton Pennington, editor of MAD, and Kate Pennington, managing editor of MAD (collectively with Solis-Cohen, the "MAD Defendants"). (Id. ¶¶ 13-14.) The AC contains no substantive allegations concerning the Penningtons.

[5] Plaintiffs do not specifically state which Defendants they intend to hold liable under Count II and Count III. I assume they intend to include P&P, the individual Pook Defendants, and the MAD defendants. I note that while these Counts do not mention him, Lowe has raised an argument why the claims should be dismissed. There is no allegation that Lowe was responsible for the placement of his newtique on the cover of the sale catalogue; indeed the Reeses entitle that portion of the AC "Pook's Promotion of Lowe's "Newtiques" . . . . (AC at page 15.) While there is [10] no allegation that he published the allegedly negative comment in MAD about the quality of the Reeses' collection, he is quoted in the Article. Accordingly, I will address this aspect of the claim when I discuss Lowe's Motion.

[6] Count IV also does not specify which defendants Plaintiffs intend to name. They mention only that the count is based on "Pook & Pook sale preparation by Lowe/Caffarella." (Id. ¶ 198.) I note, however, that the MAD Defendants have included an argument why the Sherman Act count should be dismissed as to them. (See MAD Defs.' Mem. at 11-12.) In their Response, the Reeses have not addressed that argument, and only discuss the Sherman Act claim with regard to P&P, the individual Pook Defendants, Lowe, and Caffarella. (See Resp. at 60-63.) Accordingly, I assume that Plaintiffs intended to assert Sherman Act liability only against P&P, the individual Pook Defendants, Lowe, and Caffarella.

[7] Count X also does not state which defendants are sought to be held liable. It merely recited "Defendants have breached duties owed the Reeses." (AC ¶ 228.) I assume that Count X includes all defendants.

the Bankruptcy Court's order approving P&P's appointment to conduct the sale, Plaintiff's failure to allege that they secured the permission of the Bankruptcy Court before filing the claims strips us of subject matter jurisdiction. I agree.

In In re VistaCare Grp., LLC, 678 F.3d 218 (3d Cir. 2012), the United States Court for the Third Circuit "join[ed] our sister circuits in holding that, HN6[] under the doctrine established in Barton v. Barbour, [104 U.S. 126, 26 L. Ed. 672 (1881),] leave of the bankruptcy court is required before instituting" an action against a bankruptcy trustee. Id. at 224 (citing Lawrence v. Goldberg, 573 F.3d 1265, 1269 (11th Cir. 2009) (holding that the Barton doctrine is applicable to bankruptcy trustees); In re Crown Vantage, Inc., 421 F.3d 963, 970 (9th Cir. 2005) (same); Muratore v. United States, 520 F.2d 1027, 1029 (5th Cir. 1975) (same). The Barton doctrine has been applied to Chapter 11 proceedings as well as Chapter 7 proceedings. See, e.g., In re Crown Vantage, Inc., 421 F.3d at 970 (adopting Barton doctrine in Chapter 11 debtor-in-possession case). It applies to bar suits against bankruptcy fiduciaries even after the bankruptcy proceedings have closed. See Muratore v. Darr, 375 F.3d 140, 147 (1st Cir. 2004) (stating that "the doctrine serves additional purposes even after the bankruptcy case has been closed and the [12] assets are no longer in the trustee's hands) citing In re Linton, 136 F.3d at 544-45 (applying Barton to closed bankruptcy case). Finally, the doctrine shields not only the bankruptcy trustee, but also "other bankruptcy-court-appointed officer[s], for [*284] acts done in the actor's official capacity." Carter v. Rodgers, 220 F.3d 1249, 1252 (11th Cir. 2000) (applying doctrine to bar suit against bankruptcy trustee and antiques dealer appointed by the bankruptcy trustee to conduct sale of estate property).

The Reeses respond that the Barton doctrine does not apply because they "are operating under a confirmed plan and all of the assets have been returned to Carter to do with as he likes. Barton [is] simply inapplicable as there is zero impact on the confirmed plan and none of the Reeses' claims involve, in anyway [sic], any property under the Bankruptcy Court's jurisdiction." (ECF 26 at 18.) They also argue that Barton cannot apply because the Bankruptcy Court lacks jurisdiction to hear the claims against P&P and the Pook Defendants. While conceding that "it is true that the subject sale occurred during and as a result of the bankruptcy . . . all of the Reeses' claims exist post-confirmation outside of the Bankruptcy Code." (Id. at 18-19.)

The Reeses' arguments that the doctrine does not apply because [13] their claims are outside the bankruptcy code, because their bankruptcy has ended, and because the bankruptcy court would have no jurisdiction to hear the claims are meritless. In Carter, the United States Court of Appeals for the Eleventh Circuit rejected these very assertions. In Carter, the court-appointed bankruptcy trustee and his wife attended the auction of the estate property and the wife successfully bid on one lot. Carter filed suit against the trustee and the antiques dealer that conducted the auction for breach of fiduciary duty and negligence. In affirming the district court's dismissal for lack of subject matter jurisdiction under the Barton doctrine, the Court held that there was no merit to

> Carter's assertion that his tort claims — breach of fiduciary duty and reasonable care — are "unrelated to" and "outside the scope" of the bankruptcy proceeding because they do not arise directly from substantive provisions of the Bankruptcy Code. Carter posits the theory that because his claims are unrelated to the bankruptcy proceeding, the bankruptcy court lacks jurisdiction over his lawsuit and, therefore, he was not required to obtain leave of the bankruptcy court before bringing [14] his suit in district court. We disagree. The bankruptcy court has jurisdiction over Carter's claims because his breach of fiduciary duty and reasonable care claims are "related to" and "within the scope" of the bankruptcy proceeding. . . . HN7[] A proceeding is within the bankruptcy jurisdiction, defined by 28 U.S.C. § 1334(b), if it "arises under" the Bankruptcy Code or "arises in" or is "related to" a case under the Code.[8] "'Arising under' proceedings are [8] The Third Circuit has also recognized that bankruptcy jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. § 157(a) extends to cases "arising under," "arising in," and "related to" bankruptcy jurisdiction. In re W.R. Grace & Co., 591 F.3d 164, 171 (3d Cir. 2009). "Arising under" and "arising in" claims are "core" bankruptcy claims; claims "related to" a bankruptcy case are not. Stoe v. Flaherty, 436 F.3d 209, 219 (3d Cir. 2006).

The 'arising in a case under' category is generally thought to involve administrative-type matters, or as the ... court put it, 'matters that could arise only in bankruptcy.'" In re Toledo, 170 F.3d 1340, 1345 (11th Cir. 1999) (citations omitted).[9] We have stated, [*285] "The usual articulation of the test for determining whether a civil proceeding is related to bankruptcy is whether the outcome of the proceeding could conceivably have an effect on the estate being administered in bankruptcy." Miller v. Kemira, Inc. (In re Lemco Gypsum, Inc.), 910 F.2d 784, 788 (11th Cir. 1990). While Carter's action against Defendants arose after the date of the bankruptcy petition, his suit turns solely on allegations of wrongdoing in the sale of property belonging to the bankruptcy estate. Any recovery would reduce the administrative expenses [15] of the sale of the estate property and would perforce increase the amount of estate property available to satisfy creditors' claims. . . . Thus, the outcome of this case will impact Carter's bankruptcy estate. Further, Carter sued the trustee and other court approved officers of his bankruptcy estate for alleged breaches of their bankruptcy-related duties. The Bankruptcy Code establishes the office of trustee and defines the trustees' duties. Moreover, an action against a bankruptcy trustee for breach of bankruptcy-related fiduciary duty can only arise in a bankruptcy case. Thus, Carter's "fiduciary claims against [the fiduciaries] are within the bankruptcy jurisdiction defined by 28 U.S.C. § 1334(b) both as 'arising under' the Code and 'arising in' a bankruptcy case."

Carter, 220 F.3d at 1253-54 (internal citations omitted, emphasis added). The Reeses, notably, have failed to address the holding of Carter.

I find, applying the holding of Carter, that the claims against P&P and the individual Pook Defendants fall within the "arising in a case under" category of bankruptcy jurisdiction. The claims against these Defendants assert civil conspiracy, violation of the Lanham Act, unfair competition, violation of the Sherman Act, breach of fiduciary duty, negligence, breach of contract, dishonesty in fact, and unjust enrichment. All of them arise from these Defendants' involvement in the auction of the Reeses' toy collection, as ordered by the Bankruptcy Court. Like in Carter, the claims arise out of the disposition of property of an estate, as opposed to non-estate property of the bankruptcy petitioners. If the auction was tainted, it was the bankruptcy estate that suffered since the auction proceeds that were allegedly diminished by the [17] Defendants' actions were the property of the estate to be used to pay creditors. I also find that the claims, which concern how the estate was administered, qualify as both "arising under" the Code and "arising in" a bankruptcy case under 28 U.S.C. § 1334(b).

Because they are core claims, the Barton doctrine applies to them and leave of the bankruptcy court was required before instituting them. Because there is no assertion that the Reeses complied with that requirement, the claims against P&P and the individual Pook Defendants are subject to dismissal in their entirety.

V. MAD DEFENDANTS' MOTION TO DISMISS

In their Motion (ECF 25), the MAD Defendants argue all claims contained in the AC should be dismissed. I will discuss each claim in order.

[*286] a. Count II — Lanham Act

Count II is premised upon HN8[] Section 43(a)(1)(B) of the Lanham Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1125(a)(1)(B), which provides in pertinent part:

---

[9] The Third Circuit has similarly held that claims [16] that "arise in" bankruptcy include those "that by their nature, not their particular factual circumstances, could only arise in the context of a bankruptcy case." Stoe, 436 F.3d at 218 (citing Halper v. Halper, 164 F.3d 830, 836 (3d Cir. 1999) (stating that a proceeding is "core" "if it is a proceeding that, by its nature, could arise only in the context of a bankruptcy case") (quotation omitted) (emphasis added); 1 Collier on Bankruptcy § 3.01[4][c][iv] at 3-31).

> (1) Any person who, on or in connection with any goods or services, or any container for goods, uses in commerce any word, term, name, symbol, or device, or any combination thereof, or any false designation of origin, false or misleading description of fact, or false or misleading representation of fact which . . . (B) in commercial advertising or promotion, misrepresents [18] the nature, characteristics, qualities, or geographic origin of his or her or another person's goods, services, or commercial activities, shall be liable in a civil action by any person who believes that he or she is or is likely to be damaged by such act.

15 U.S.C. § 1125(a). HN9[] Liability arises if a commercial message, statement, or advertisement is "either (1) literally false or (2) literally true or ambiguous, but has the tendency to deceive consumers." Novartis Consumer Health, Inc. v. Johnson & Johnson-Merck Consumer Pharms. Co., 290 F.3d 578, 586 (3d Cir. 2002) citing Castrol Inc. v. Pennzoil Co., 987 F.2d 939, 943 (3d Cir. 1993) ("a plaintiff must prove either literal falsity or consumer confusion, but not both") (emphasis deleted). HN10[] The elements of a Lanham Act claim for false advertising, or false or misleading representation of a product, are: "(1) that the defendant has made false or misleading statements as to his own product [or another's]; (2) that there is actual deception or at least a tendency to deceive a substantial portion of the intended audience; (3) that the deception is material in that it is likely to influence purchasing decisions; (4) that the advertised goods traveled in interstate commerce; and (5) that there is a likelihood of injury to the plaintiff in terms of declining sales, loss of good will, etc." Warner-Lambert Co. v. Breathasure, Inc., 204 F.3d 87, 91-92 (3d Cir. 2000) (alteration in original) (quoting Johnson & Johnson-Merck Consumer Pharms. Co. v. Rhone—Poulenc Rorer Pharms., Inc., 19 F.3d 125, 129 (3d Cir. 1994)) [19] ; Pernod Ricard USA, LLC v. Bacardi U.S.A., Inc., 653 F.3d 241, 248 (3d Cir. 2011)).

HN11[] Commercial "advertising or promotion" for purposes of Lanham Act § 43(a)(1)(B) "consists of (1) commercial speech; (2) by a defendant in commercial competition with the plaintiff; (3) designed to influence customers to buy the defendant's products; (4) that is sufficiently disseminated to the relevant purchasing public to constitute advertising or promotion within the industry." Synygy, Inc. v. Scott-Levin, Inc., 51 F. Supp. 2d 570, 576-77 (E.D. Pa. 1999) aff'd sub nom. Synygy, Inc. v. Scott-Levin, 229 F.3d 1139 (3d Cir. 2000); *Premier Comp Solutions., LLC v. Penn Nat. Ins. Co., Civ. A. No. 07-1764, 2012 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 42524, 2012 WL 1038818, at 7 (W.D. Pa. Mar. 28, 2012) (same); 5 McCarthy on Trademarks and Unfair Competition § 27:71 (4th ed.) (same). The word "commercial" "excludes use of § 43(a) to challenge the falsity of "consumer or editorial content, parodies, satires, or other constitutionally protected material." 5 McCarthy on Trademarks and Unfair Competition § 27:71 (4th ed.). Thus, "any message that does not qualify as commercial speech cannot be the subject of a § 43(a) false advertising or product disparagement challenge." Id.

The MAD Defendants first argue that Count II fails to allege a plausible violation of Section 43(a) because the Article does not meet any of the first three elements of the test for commercial advertising or promotion. Specifically, they argue first that the Reeses have failed to allege that the Article — a piece of journalism [20] — constitutes "commercial advertising [*287] or promotion" since it does not describe a specific product or service, but rather an event, the Pook auction, that had already occurred. They note that the Reeses have failed to allege any motivation on their part for publishing the Article other than to provide information and opinion of interest to readers about that event. Second, they argue that the Reeses have failed to allege that they are in commercial competition with Plaintiffs in the antique toy trade. Rather, the AC alleges that the MAD Defendants produce a trade journal. (AC ¶¶ 119-120.) Third, they argue that there is no allegation that the Article influenced customers to buy any products sold by the MAD Defendants, since they are not sellers of antique toys.

The Reeses respond by asserting that direct competition between themselves and the MAD Defendants is not relevant because the Lanham Act is "'very broadly worded and applies to 'any person' who uses virtually any means to deceive the public regarding . . . commercial activities. . . ." (ECF 31 at 27 (quoting Electronic Lab. Supply. Co., Inc. v. Cullen, 977 F.2d 798, 807 (3d Cir. 1992)).) They contend that the Third Circuit has held that, "by denoting the broad scope of Section 43(a) — 'any person,' the 3rd Circuit conclusively [21] held that a non-competitor has the right to sue for harm caused by the false representation of services in commerce." (Id. (citing Serbin v. Ziebart Intern. Corp., Inc., 11 F.3d 1163, 1175-77 (3d Cir. 1993)).) I find that these citations are inapposite. In Cullen, the issue was whether one could be liable for another person's violation of Lanham Act § 34's prohibition on the use of counterfeit marks on an aiding and abetting theory (answered in the negative). Id. at 798. In Serbin, the issue was whether "consumers of goods or services in interstate commerce who allege that, to their detriment, they purchased such goods or services in reliance on the advertising claims of the vendor, have a federal cause of action under subsection 1 of Section 43(a). . . ." Id. at 1164 (emphasis added); 1177 (holding that "consumers fall outside the range of 'reasonable interests' contemplated as protected by the false advertising prong of Section 43(a)"). Neither decision stands for the proposition that a claim under Lanham Act § 43(a)'s prohibition against false commercial advertising or promotion may be maintained in the absence of competition between the parties.

The sole allegation in Count II, insofar as it relates to the MAD Defendants, is that the Article was "widely disseminated to the antique world." (AC ¶ 172.[10]) It must be [22] remembered, of course, that the Article was published after the sale occurred, and was a report of the sale itself. It is implausible, therefore, that any alleged falsity in the Article — even if it could be considered "commercial advertising or promotion"—could have damaged Plaintiffs by impacting the value of the collection sold at the auction.[11] As they allege no commercial competition with Plaintiffs in the antique toy trade, and no direct injury arising from the publication of the Article against which the Lanham Act was designed to protect, [*288] Count II is subject to dismissal as to the MAD Defendants.

b. Count III — State Law Unfair Competition

HN12[] "Under Pennsylvania law, the elements necessary to prove unfair competition through false advertising parallel those elements needed to show a Lanham Act violation, absent the requirement for goods to travel in interstate commerce." *Leonetti's Frozen Foods, Inc. v. Am. Kitchen Delights, Inc., Civ. A. No. 11-6736, 2012 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 47815, 2012 WL 1138590, at 11 (E.D. Pa. Apr. 4, 2012) (quoting KDH Elec. Sys., Inc. v. Curtis Tech. Ltd., 826 F. Supp. 2d 782, 807 (E.D. Pa. 2011)); see also Louis Vuitton Malletier & Oakley, Inc. v. Veit, 211 F. Supp. 2d 567, 582 (E.D. Pa. 2002) (same). Because the Lanham Act allegations in Count II fail to allege a plausible claim under federal law for a false advertising injury against the MAD Defendants, I find that the common law claim also fails. I note, additionally, that Count III does not even mention the MAD Defendants or the Article.

c. Counts V and VII — Commercial Disparagement and Injurious Falsehood

Counts V and VII allege the same injury under two legal theories containing the same elements, commercial disparagement and injurious falsehood arising from the publication of the Article.[12] It [*289] is undisputed by the

---

[10] The balance of Count II concerns only P&P, the individual Pook Defendants, Lowe, and Caffarella. The only other time the MAD Defendants are mention is the assertion that the placement of the newtiques on the cover of the sale catalogue "carried through antique malls and the nation's leading antique journal — the Maine Antique's Digest, both falsely represented, disparaged the Reeses' collection while inflating the value of Lowe's fake newtiques." (AC ¶ 170.)

[11] I discuss at length — and reject — whether the Article can constitute "commercial advertising or promotion" below in the consideration [23] of Defendant Lowe's Motion.

[12] The Article is referenced and quoted in the AC but not attached thereto. I consider it as part of the pleadings in deciding the pending Motions to dismiss. W. Penn Allegheny Health Sys., 627 F.3d at 97 n. 6. It stated in pertinent part:

> As with many regional auction houses, Pook & Pook in Downington, Pennsylvania, will sell any collection that comes along. . . . When a local collector wanted to downsize his huge toy collection, Pook & Pook agreed to try its first toy sale.
> . . .
>
> Everyone in the toy world seemed to know the major consignor was Carter Reese, longtime collector who bought toys that he loved before collectors got hung up on condition. It didn't matter to him if the toy had replaced figures, was repainted, or if much of the paint was missing. If the toy had charm and was cheap, he bought it.
> "The sale was a good test of the [25] middle market," said dealer Jay Lowe of Lancaster, Pennsylvania, who came to the sale and did some buying. The market has changed; condition makes a big difference. It used to be if a toy was an 8.5 or a 9, it could bring top dollar. Now it has to be 9.5 to 9.9 perfect, and if it isn't, it is not easy to sell, and the price differences are enormous."

parties that HN13[] the elements of these two torts are: (1) a false statement; (2) that the publisher either intends to cause pecuniary loss or reasonably should recognize that publication will result in pecuniary loss; (3) pecuniary loss does in fact result; and (4) the publisher either knows [24] the published statement is false or acts in reckless disregard of its truth or falsity.[13] See Pro Golf Mfg., Inc. v. Tribune Review Newspaper Co., 570 Pa. 242, 809 A.2d 243, 246 (Pa. 2002) (elements of commercial disparagement); McNulty v. Citadel Broad. Co., 58 Fed. App'x 556, 566 (3d Cir. 2003) (elements of common law injurious falsehood). The MAD Defendants argue that the Reeses have failed to allege a plausible claim under either iteration of the tort because they have not pled actual malice or any actual pecuniary loss arising from the publication of the Article. I agree.

While acknowledging in the AC that the elements of both torts require them to plead and prove actual malice, i.e., knowledge on the part of the publisher that the Article was false or that the MAD Defendants acted in reckless disregard of its truth or falsity[14] (see AC ¶¶ 134, 204, 214), the Reeses spend many pages of their Response asserting that they are not "public figures," and thus have no requirement to plead actual malice. (See Resp. at 37-42.[15]) This argument is entirely inapposite; the two torts clearly require that a plaintiff plausibly plead the actual malice element, irrespective of whether they are public figures.

> Lowe explained that's because in the 1970's and 1980's toys were rare, and fewer than 5% of the collectors wanted toys that were perfect. Now some toys that were rare are not rare anymore, and 60% of the toy collectors want toys to be 98% perfect.
> "It's the same thing with coins," Lowe went on. "One coin might sell for $1500, and one a little better goes for $3000, and one still better, $10,000. And it is the same with furniture. A chest with a rich old surface will bring one price, and one of the same forms that has been refinished [will bring] sixty to seventy percent less. The pendulum has swung. Huge prices are paid for condition."
> Lowe remembered a time when he could buy a toy for $800 that was missing a figure and needing a little repair and give it to a fellow to fix it and sell it for $1500 and have made a nice profit. Not anymore. [26] "Now I buy a toy for $800, and it costs me $400 to fix it, and I hope to sell it for $1500. Condition is king," he said.
> . . .
>
> The consensus was that may of the toys that Pook offered brought all they were worth, and there were a lot of bargains for dealers who knew what they were buying.
> . . .
> Condition drives all markets because collectors with deep pockets see perfect toys as investments. There was very little for them at this middle-market sale.
> . . .
> Some thought Pook should have employed a toy expert who would have included condition reports in the lot descriptions as many specialty toy auctioneers do, but others said the fact that this toy sale was not at a specialized toy auctioneer brought out the trade, who thought they would have a chance to make a discovery or two.

(ECF 25-2.)

[13] Count VII, alleging injurious falsehood, also references Section 623A of the Restatement (Second) of Torts. This section also has an actual malice element since it too requires that the defendant "knows that the statement is false or acts in reckless disregard of its truth or falsity." (Id.) Finally, Count VII also references Restatement Section 626, "Disparagement of Quality," which specifically incorporates the "rules of liability . . . stated in § 623A." Restatement (Second) of Torts § 626. Accordingly, I find that [27] every iteration of the injurious falsehood tort pled in Count VII contains an actual malice element.

[15] They also spend many pages asserting that they have suffered defamation, a claim they have not pled in the AC. (See Resp. at 49-53.)

The only attempt the Reeses make to satisfy the pleading requirement is in paragraph 134 of the AC where they state: "The article and its [sic] was published with actual malice and/or a reckless disregard for the truth." (AC ¶ 134.) The also assert that its publication "violated . . . industry [28] obligations and responsibilities," and it "evidences little to no editorial integrity — opting instead to be a puff piece for Lowe and his newtiques." (AC ¶¶ 133, 135.) I find that these allegations do not satisfy the Twombly/Iqbal standard. First, merely alleging actual malice is insufficient; HN14[] courts are not bound to accept as true legal conclusions couched as factual allegations. Twombly, 550 U.S. at 555, 564. Second, the allegations concerning journalistic standards and editorial integrity are likewise insufficient to put the MAD Defendants on notice of the basis for the claim of actual malice and that the claim is plausible, absent any specific examples of falsities in the Article that violated those standards. Third, the reference to the Article being a "puff piece" for Lowe's newtiques is implausible to demonstrate actual malice as a matter of law since the Article never mentions newtiques.

[*290] Turning to the content of the Article, I conclude as a matter of law that the Reeses cannot plausibly claim disparagement and actual malice. If anything, the Article was critical only of P&P — noting its lack of experience in conducting toy auctions, its failure to engage a toy expert to write condition reports, and that [29] its inclusion of too many lots in the auction may have resulted in "quite a few rarities sold under the money." The only references to the Reeses were that Carter bought toys "that he loved" rather than for their condition (i.e., investment potential) and that "if the toy had charm and was cheap he bought it." The only reference to the quality of their collection is the quote from Lowe describing the sale as a "good test of the middle market" (as opposed, one would assume, to the high end of the collectible toy market). Nothing in the AC suggests that the MAD Defendants were in possession of knowledge that would place a reasonable publisher on notice that these statements were false or that they acted with reckless disregard for whether they were true or false. Accordingly, Counts V and VII are dismissed as to the MAD Defendants.

d. Counts VI — False Light

A claim for false light is governed by the Restatement (Second) of Torts § 652E, which provides:

> HN15[] One who gives publicity to a matter concerning another that places the other before the public in a false light is subject to liability to the other for invasion of his privacy if
> (a) the false light in which the other was placed would be highly offensive to a reasonable person, [30] and
> (b) the actor had knowledge of or acted in reckless disregard as to the falsity of the publicized matter and the false light in which the other would be placed.

Restatement (Second) of Torts § 652E (1977); Krajewski v. Gusoff, 2012 PA Super 166, 53 A.3d 793, 805-806 (Pa. Super. Ct. 2012), appeal granted, 621 Pa. 117, 74 A.3d 119 (Pa. 2013), appeal dismissed, 624 Pa. 224, 84 A.3d 1057 (Pa. 2014). For the information about a person to be "highly offensive," it must constitute a "major misrepresentation of his character, history, activities or beliefs that serious offense may reasonably be expected to be taken by a reasonable man in his position . . . ." Id. cmt. c.

Because the false light tort also has as an element the actual malice standard required by commercial disparagement and injurious falsehood, I find that this claim too has not been plausibly pled. Alternatively, I find the claim is also implausible as a matter of law since the content of the Article would not be taken by reasonable persons in the Reeses' position to be highly offensive. As illustrations of material that would be highly offensive, the comment to the Restatement offers: the police improperly including one's photograph in a "rogues gallery" of criminals when one was mistakenly arrested and never convicted of a crime; and the use of a picture of a child who has been injured through no fault of [31] his own to illustrate an article captioned "They Ask to Be Killed." Referring to the Reeses' toy collection as "middle market" does not rise to the same level of offensiveness, and does not cast a similar level of adverse reflection on their character or reputation. Thus, this claim against the MAD Defendants is also dismissed as implausible.

e. Counts IX — Negligence

Finally, the MAD Defendants argue that the negligence claim is subject to dismissal. In Count IX, the Reeses allege only that "[a]s demonstrated above, in the best light, Defendants have breached duties owed the Reeses and, as a result, the [*291] Reeses have been injured, suffering actual damages." (AC ¶ 228.) Defendants contend that since the commercial disparagement and false light claims require a degree of fault greater than negligence under Pennsylvania law, the Reeses "must allege a degree of fault . . . that is greater than negligence." (ECF 25 at 23.) In their Response, the Reeses fail to address the negligence claim argument in any manner.

I find that this claim is subject to dismissal. Plaintiffs do not identify any specific duty the MAD Defendants breached, other than the duty not to engage in commercial disparagement or [32] paint them in a false light. HN16[] Under Pennsylvania law, "[t]o establish a common law cause of action in negligence, 'the plaintiff must demonstrate that the defendant owed a duty of care to the plaintiff, the defendant breached that duty, the breach resulted in injury to the plaintiff and the plaintiff suffered an actual loss or damage.'" Brisbine v. Outside In School of Experiential Educ., Inc., 2002 PA Super 138, 799 A.2d 89, 93 (Pa. Super. Ct. 2002) (quoting Brezenski v. World Truck Transfer, Inc., 2000 PA Super 175, 755 A.2d 36, 40 (Pa. Super. Ct. 2000)). HN17[] "All negligence claims are premised on the alleged violation of a duty." *Peek v. Philadelphia Coca-Cola Bottling Co., Civ. A. No. 97-3372, 1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 10138, 1997 WL 399379, at 5 (E.D. Pa. July 10, 1997) (citing Wenrick v. Schloemann—Siemag Aktiengesellschaft, 523 Pa. 1, 564 A.2d 1244, 1248 (Pa. 1989). A duty is > that responsibility which exists by operation of law requiring a person to adhere to a standard of conduct protecting others against unreasonable or unnecessary risks. In the absence of legal duty, no liability will attach, even if a defendant's conduct was negligent. In this sense, the concept of legal duty is both a source of legal responsibility, and a limitation upon liability to others: recognition of a legal duty by the courts will impose certain obligations, while refusal to recognize a legal duty by the courts will insulate a party against liability. The duty owed by a defendant may be express or implied, may be general or arise from specific circumstances. In determining the existence of a duty, the [33] courts will look to a variety of sources, including the common law, statutes, or a contract between the parties. Ultimately, however, it is the court's decision whether to recognize a duty that is fundamental to the existence of a negligence claim.

3 West's Pa. Prac., Torts: Law and Advocacy § 1.2 (footnotes omitted).

Whatever duty the MAD Defendants owed to the Reeses to refrain from publishing information that would constitute commercial disparagement or paint them in a false light is necessarily coterminous with the duty owed to refrain from committing the underlying torts. My findings that they have failed to allege plausible claims for those torts foreclose their ability to proceed on a negligence theory since these are the sources for any purported duty. More importantly, since this is a situation where liability for negligence is premised upon the exercise of the MAD Defendants' First Amendment right to publish their magazine, the same rationale that led the United States Supreme Court in Sullivan to impose the actual malice standard, rather than the common law negligence standard, applies here since all of the underlying torts incorporate the heightened standard in recognition that free speech rights [34] are involved.

Accordingly, I grant the MAD Defendants' Motion to Dismiss in its entirety.

VI. LOWE'S AND CAFFARELLA'S MOTIONS TO DISMISS

In his Motion (ECF 27), Lowe argues that all claims contained in the AC in [*292] which he is named as a defendant are subject to dismissal. In his Motion (ECF 30), Caffarella joins many of Lowe's arguments. I will discuss the two motion jointly; I will discuss each claim in order.

a. Count I — Conspiracy

The parties do not dispute that HN18[] a claim of civil conspiracy in Pennsylvania contains the following elements: (1) a combination of two or more persons acting with a common purpose to do an unlawful act or to do a lawful act by unlawful means; (2) an overt act done in pursuance of the common purpose; and (3) actual legal damage. Goldstein v. Phillip Morris, Inc., 2004 PA Super 260, 854 A.2d 585, 590 (Pa. Super. Ct. 2004). HN19[]

An "'actionable civil conspiracy must be based on an existing independent wrong or tort that would constitute a valid cause of action if committed by one actor.'" Levin v. Upper Makefield Twp., 90 F. App'x 653, 667 (3d Cir. 2004) (quoting In re Orthopedic Bone Screw Prods. Liab. Litig., 193 F.3d 781, 789 (3d Cir. 1999)). Ultimately, "only a finding that the underlying tort has occurred will support a claim for civil conspiracy." Alpart v. Gen. Land Partners, Inc., 574 F. Supp. 2d 491, 506 (E.D. Pa. 2008) (quotation omitted); see also Duffy v. Lawyers Title Ins. Co., 972 F. Supp. 2d 683, 698 (E.D. Pa. 2013) (HN20[] "Absent a civil cause of action for a particular act, there can be no cause of action for civil conspiracy to commit that [35] act."). HN21[] To allege a plausible claim of civil conspiracy, a plaintiff must make "factual allegations of combination, agreement, or understanding among all or between any of the defendants [or coconspirators] to plot, plan, or conspire to carry out the alleged chain of events." Spencer v. Steinman, 968 F. Supp. 1011, 1020 (E.D. Pa. 1997) (citation and internal quotation marks omitted). It is not enough that the "end result of the parties' independent conduct caused plaintiff harm or even that the alleged perpetrators of the harm acted in conscious parallelism." Id.

Lowe argues that the Reeses' attempt to state a claim for civil conspiracy fails because: (1) they do not identify the Defendants' alleged common purpose or the particular unlawful act that the Defendants were pursuing; rather Count I consists merely of recitations of Pennsylvania case law along with the conclusory statement that Defendants engaged in a conspiracy; and (2) Lowe, as well as Caffarella, were acting as P&P's consultants, were conducting the business of P&P, and "formed an indispensable part of the company. Consequently, they cannot have conspired with the company. . . ." (ECF 27 at 13.) Caffarella makes similar arguments. I find that the AC contains enough factual matter, [36] accepted as true, to create a plausible claim of civil conspiracy against these two Defendants. I also find that the intracorporate conspiracy doctrine does not bar the claim based on the allegations presented.

The substantive portion of Count I states, in its entirety, that "Pook[16] as principal, Caffarella as Pook's agent, and Lowe combined or agreed with intent to do an unlawful act, or to do an otherwise lawful act by unlawful means in the manner described above." (AC ¶ 163.) In other parts of the AC, the Reeses assert that Lowe and Caffarella improperly set up the display at the auction to permit their own below-value purchases of toys. They allegedly mixed unmatched parts of multi-part toys in different lots, reducing the likelihood [*293] that other bidders, particularly phone and internet bidders, would perceive the true value of the lots. They are alleged to have bid on lots using that inside information, in order to later rematch the parts and create toys of greater value that they could then sell at their own retail stand. (AC ¶¶ 56-75.) These allegations are sufficient, if proven, to show concerted action between them, their common purpose, and an intent to injure. See Thompson Coal Co. v. Pike Coal Co., 488 Pa. 198, 412 A.2d 466, 472 (Pa. 1979) (citing Miller v. Post Publ'g Co., 266 Pa. 533, 110 A. 265, 67 Pitts. Leg. J. 189 (Pa. 1920) (HN22[] "Proof [37] of malice i.e., an intent to injure, is essential in proof of a conspiracy.")

At this stage of the proceedings, I must also reject Lowe's argument that he could not as a matter of law have conspired with P&P or Caffarella.[17] While Lowe is correct that, HN23[] for purposes of a civil conspiracy claim, a corporation cannot conspire with itself through the activities of its own employees, officers, and directors, see Jagielski v. Pkg. Mach. Co., 489 F. Supp. 232, 233 (E.D. Pa. 1980) (stating that under Pennsylvania law, officers and employees of a corporation "cannot conspire with the corporation of which they form an indispensable part"), the Reeses have not averred that Lowe or Caffarella were P&P employees. They allege Lowe was involved "in multiple facets of the antique industry," an "expert, dealer, and purchaser," the owner of his [38] own antique business, Caffarella's partner in a consulting business, and had worked with Caffarella as an independent contractor for another auction house. (AC ¶¶ 27, 31, 33, 85.) James Pook allegedly told Carter Reese that P&P "was going to use a pair of 'toy experts' to assist him" in the Reese auction, and that Carter confirmed that [16] Count I of the AC does not state clearly to whom "Pook" refers. AC ¶ 16 states that Ron and Debra Pook would be referred to collectively as the "Pooks." AC ¶ 17 states that Pook & Pook, Inc. would be referred to as "Pook & Pook." The individual Pook family members are referred to individually by their first names. (See AC ¶¶ 20-22.) I assume that the use of "Pook" in Count I refers to P&P and not the individual Pook Defendants.

---

[17] Caffarella has not joined this argument.

"Caffarella and, thus, Lowe," were to be those experts. (AC ¶¶ 53-54.) There is no allegation that Lowe or Caffarella were P&P employees, and none of these alleged roles bring them within the intracorporate conspiracy doctrine.

At best, Lowe can be deemed an agent of P&P acting in his individual capacity. Judge Pratter recently had occasion to review the scope of the intracorporate conspiracy doctrine in Cannon v. City & Cty. of Philadelphia, Civ A. No. 14-5388, 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 178126, 2014 WL 7399037 (E.D. Pa. Dec. 30, 2014). She stated:

> HN24[] Federal courts in the Third Circuit have explained that agents acting in their individual capacities rather than their official capacities can be liable for civil conspiracy. See, e.g., Heffernan v. Hunter, 189 F.3d 405, 412-13 (3d Cir. 1999) ("[C]ourts that have followed the [intracorporate conspiracy] doctrine allow an exception when the employees have acted for their sole personal benefit and thus outside the course and scope of their employment. That exception [39] is based on the proposition that since the employer would not be subject to liability under respondeat superior, it would not be a conspirator."); General Refractories Co. v. Fireman's Fund Ins. Co., 337 F.3d 297, 313 (3d Cir. 2003); Robison v. Canterbury Village, Inc., 848 F.2d 424, 431 (3d Cir. 1988) (noting that a conspiracy may exist between a corporation and an officer "if the officer is acting in a personal, as opposed to official, capacity"); Lee v. SEPTA, 418 F. Supp. 2d 675, 681 (E.D. Pa. 2005) ("An employer and its officers and employees acting in the scope of their duties constitute one legal person for purposes of conspiracy law and therefore cannot conspire together." (emphasis added)). However, "at least one panel of the Pennsylvania Superior Court, in a non [*294] precedential decision, has opined that no such 'exception' to the intracorporate conspiracy doctrine 'is recognized by Pennsylvania state courts.'" Accurso [v. Infra-Red Servs., Inc.], 23 F. Supp. 3d [494] at 515 [E.D. Pa. 2014] (quoting *Lilly v. Boots & Saddle Riding Club, No. 57 C.D.2009, 2009 Pa. Commw. Unpub. LEXIS 547, 2009 WL 9101459, at 6 (Pa. Commw. Ct. July 17, 2009)). Consequently, it is not clear whether such an exception to the intracorporate conspiracy doctrine exists in Pennsylvania law.
> HN25[] Pennsylvania courts have often applied the intracorporate conspiracy doctrine without elaborating on its reasoning or its relationship to the scope of employment, but they ordinarily apply the doctrine when defendants allegedly conspired with other agents or the principal [40] corporation on behalf of the principal corporation. See, e.g., Lackner [v. Glosser,] 2006 PA Super 14, 892 A.2d [21] at 26 [(Pa. Super. Ct. 2006)] (alleging a conspiracy to engage in improper accounting practices to deprive plaintiff of promised bonuses); Rutherfoord v. Presbyterian-University [Hosp.], 417 Pa. Super. 316, 612 A.2d 500, 502 (Pa. Super. Ct.1992) (alleging a conspiracy to terminate plaintiff's employment with defendant company); Weiner v. Markel Int'l Ins. Co., No. 2005-1045, 2006 WL 1142484 (Pa. Ct. Comm. Pl. Apr. 25, 2006) (alleging a conspiracy to refuse to pay benefits); Rick's Original Philly Steaks, Inc. v. Reading Terminal Market Corp., No. 2008-3822, 2008 Phila. Ct. Com. Pl. LEXIS 43, 2008 WL 1780822 (Pa. Ct. Comm. Pl. Feb. 20, 2008) (alleging conspiracy between landlord and agent to refuse to renew lease).

*Cannon, 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 178126, 2014 WL 7399037, at 8-9. Judge Pratter went on to find persuasive the "reasoning of the federal courts in Pennsylvania that have adopted a limited scope-of-employment exception to the intracorporate conspiracy doctrine," stating that "[i]t cannot be the case that co-agents can never be liable for civil conspiracy — even if the alleged conspiracy was outside the scope of their employment — merely because they happen to be co-workers. There must be some connection between the alleged conspirators' status as co-agents and the alleged tort for the doctrine to preclude a finding of liability." *2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 178126, [WL] at 10.

Applying this rationale, I find that the Reeses' civil conspiracy claim against Lowe is not defeated by the alleged fact that Lowe assisted James Pook in setting up the auction. There is no assertion in the AC that Lowe was employed [41] by P&P, was engaged by P&P as a consultant, or was conducting the business of P&P. What the Reeses have pled is that Lowe owned his own independent antique business. Significantly, Lowe is alleged to have undertaken his attempt to subvert the value of the auction lots to benefit himself, not to benefit P&P (which arguably lost commission revenue on the auction as a result of the depressed prices). There is, according, no basis to apply the intracorporate conspiracy doctrine at this point in the proceedings to dismiss the civil conspiracy claim against Lowe.

b. Count II — Lanham Act

Lowe argues that Count II[18] fails as a matter of law to state a claim under Section 43(a)(1)(B) of the Lanham Act [*295] , 15 U.S.C. § 1125(a)(1)(B) insofar as it concerns the Article in which he was quoted. He argues that the Article merely recounted the events of the auction after it occurred, and cannot, accordingly, constitute "commercial advertising or promotion." He also argues that he is not in commercial competition with the Reeses. Caffarella argues that the claim fails because there are no allegations whatsoever that he engaged in any kind of commercial speech. I find that Lowe is correct when he asserts that the Article does not qualify as "commercial [42] advertising or promotion." Caffarella is also correct that there is a complete failure to allege he engaged in commercial speech.

As noted above, Lowe is quoted in the Article as stating, that,

> "The sale was a good test of the middle market," said dealer Jay Lowe of Lancaster, Pennsylvania, who came to the sale and did some buying. The market has changed; condition makes a big difference. It used to be if a toy was an 8.5 or a 9, it could bring top dollar. Now it has to be 9.5 to 9.9 perfect, and if it isn't, it is not easy to sell, and the price differences are enormous."

(ECF 25-2.) He opined that, while in the past few collectors desired perfect toys, as with collectors of other antiques, the majority of the toy collectors now desire perfect [43] examples and "[c]ondition is king." (Id.) Taken in the light most favorable to the Reeses, Lowe was quoted in an Article reporting on events that had already occurred, wherein he opined that the quality of their toys were middle market and failed to bring top dollar because of their less-than-perfect condition. He did not opine on the quality of the Reeses' remaining toy collection, or on the quality of his own inventory of toys, he did not write or publish the Article, there is no allegation he was responsible for its editorial content, and the Article contained no advertisement or promotion of Lowe's toy business. Given this, I find that the Reeses have failed to state a plausible violation of Section 43(a). There is simply no basis to conclude that Plaintiffs have plausibly alleged the Article constituted commercial speech, let alone Lowe's or Caffarella's commercial speech, or that it was designed to influence customers to buy Defendants' products.

c. Counts III, V and VII — Unfair Competition, Commercial Disparagement and Injurious Falsehood

Lowe and Caffarella argue that, to the extent that these claims reference the P&P auction that occurred on September 6-7, 2013, they are time barred because each such [44] claim is subject to a one year statute of limitations,[19] and the Reeses did not file this action until October 7, 2014. As the Reeses make no argument in their Response to show that this part of the claims are timely, I find they are subject to dismissal.

To the extent that the claims reference the Article, Lowe contends that his comments quoted therein did not address the Reeses personally, nor any specific item consigned by the Reeses in the P&P auction, but merely constituted a general description of antique toy market at that time and how items are valued by market participants. As such, he contends, his comments were not defamatory as a [*296] matter of law so as to support claims for unfair competition, commercial disparagement or injurious falsehood. Caffarella argues that the claims fails because he is not alleged to have engaged in any disparaging speech. I agree.

[18] As I previously noted, although Count II does not mention him, Lowe has raised an argument why the claim should be dismissed. There is no allegation that Lowe was responsible for the placement of his newtique on the cover of the sale catalogue. Accordingly, I limit the discussion of liability to the allegedly negative comment in the Article about the quality of the Reeses' collection sold at the auction, based upon Lowe's quotes in the Article.

[19] See HN26[] 42 Pa.C.S. § 5523 (providing one year statute of limitation on claims of commercial disparagement, false light and injurious falsehood); Pro Golf Mfg., 809 A.2d at 245 (holding that "one-year limitations period found in Section 5523(1) governs an action for commercial disparagement"); *Little v. City & Cty. of Philadelphia, Civ. A. No. 07-5361, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 57972, 2008 WL 2704579, at 4 (E.D. Pa. July 3, 2008) (holding that false light claim is subject to a one-year statute of limitations of Section 5523).

[45] For reasons similar to those discussed above with regard to the MAD Defendants, I find that all of these claims are implausible because they do not rise to the level of actual malice. First, Lowe did not write the Article; thus, he can only be responsible for his own statements — which I assume are accurately quoted — and not the Article's editorial content and opinions. Most significantly, this would exclude the identification of the Reeses as the consignor of the toys, a statement not attributed by the author to Lowe. Thus, there is a clear break in the causation between Lowe and any alleged impugning of the Reeses' collection in the Article. Second, the Reeses have failed to assert that, in making his statements, Lowe uttered something he knew was false or was stated in reckless disregard of its truth or falsity. As noted, the allegation that the Article was a "puff piece" for Lowe's newtiques, even if it could be attributed to Lowe, is implausible to demonstrate actual malice as a matter of law since the Article never mentions newtiques. Third, the allegedly defamatory statement central to the claim, that Carter bought toys "that he loved" rather than for their condition, is not [46] attributed to Lowe. Fourth, I find that the implication that the Reeses' collection was not high quality, which allegedly arises from Lowe describing the sale as a "good test of the middle market," is not "highly offensive" as a matter of law so as to support a false light claim, since it is not a "major misrepresentation of [] character, history, activities or beliefs that serious offense may reasonably be expected to be taken by a reasonable man." Restatement (Second) of Torts § 652E cmt. c. As suggested above with regard to the MAD Defendants, referring to the Reeses' toy collection as "middle market" does not rise to the same level of offensiveness as the examples listed in the Restatement, and does not cast a similar level of adverse reflection on their character or reputation. Finally, there is no allegation that Caffarella engaged in any allegedly disparaging speech.

Accordingly, Counts III, V and VII are dismissed as to Lowe and Caffarella.

d. Count IV — Antitrust Claims

In Count IV, the Reeses allege Lowe and Caffarella, along with P&P and the Pook Defendants, violated the Sherman Act and the Clayton Act, as well as Section 2(c) of the Robinson-Patman Act. (AC ¶¶ 188-200.) Other than recitations of the various antitrust statutes, [47] the only allegation contained in Count IV is that the "poor Pook & Pook sale preparation by Lowe/Caffarella was intentional, aimed at ensuring they and others could piecemeal make a killing off of the Reeses by purchasing seemingly disparate lots that, when combined, contained complete toys and 'rare finds' worth thousands of dollars more than the entire lot was purchased for." (AC ¶ 198.) Lowe, joined by Caffarella, argues that the Count is subject to dismissal because the Reeses have completely failed to allege antitrust injury. I agree.

HN27[] Section 1 of the Sherman Act states that "[e]very contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, is hereby declared to be illegal." 15 U.S.C. § 1. Section 4 of the Clayton Act, in turn, grants the right to maintain a private cause of action to "[a]ny person who shall be injured in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden [*297] in the antitrust laws." 15 U.S.C. § 15(a). As these sections imply, standing and antitrust injury are essential elements to maintaining an action for damages thereunder. See, e.g., Cargill, Inc. v. Monfort of Colorado, Inc., 479 U.S. 104, 110, 107 S. Ct. 484, 93 L. Ed. 2d 427 (1986). Under Section 1, a plaintiff must plausibly allege the following three elements: (1) an agreement; [48] (2) imposing an unreasonable restraint of trade within a relevant product market; and (3) resulting in antitrust injury." In re Ins. Brokerage Antitrust Litig., 618 F.3d 300, 315 (3d Cir. 2010). Antitrust injury consists of (1) harm of the type the antitrust laws were designed to prevent; and (2) an injury which flows from that which makes defendants acts unlawful. Brunswick Corp. v. Pueblo Bowl-O-Mat, Inc., 429 U.S. 477, 489, 97 S. Ct. 690, 50 L. Ed. 2d 701 (1977); Gulfstream III Assocs., Inc. v. Gulfstream Aerospace Corp., 995 F.2d 425, 429 (3rd Cir. 1993). To be an antitrust injury, the injury must "reflect the anticompetitive effect either of the violation or of the anticompetitive acts made possible by the violation" and represent "the type of loss that claimed violations. . . would be likely to cause." Brunswick Corp, 429 U.S. at 489; Race Tires of Am. Inc. v. Hoosier Racing Tire Corp., 614 F.3d 57, 76 (3d Cir. 2010); City of Pittsburgh v. West Penn Power Co., 147 F.3d 256, 266 (3d Cir. 1998). "While a plaintiff may have individually suffered an injury as a result of defendants' actions, the antitrust laws were designed to protect market-wide anticompetitive activities." Eichorn v. AT&T Corp., 248 F.3d 131, 140 (3d Cir. 2001), amended (June 12, 2001) (citing Atl. Richfield Co. v. USA Petroleum Co., 495 U.S. 328, 338, 110 S. Ct. 1884, 109 L. Ed. 2d 333 (1990)).

The Reeses make no attempt to tie the alleged wrongdoing of Lowe, Caffarella and P&P to any market-wide anticompetitive impact. Notably, they don't even attempt to define the relevant product market and the relevant geographic market. Count IV merely restates the Defendants' alleged improper conduct of the auction under the guise of an antitrust claim without any allegation of the specific antitrust law elements that create [49] such a claim. As such, I conclude the claim is implausible and subject to dismissal.[20]

[*298] e. Counts VIII — Breach of Fiduciary Duty

Lowe argues that Count VIII's claim for breach of fiduciary duty — in which the Reeses claim that "the Pook Defendants — including Caffarella" had a fiduciary relationship to them, is subject to dismissal under the "gist of the action doctrine" and because it fails to state claims upon which relief may be granted.

I note, preliminarily, that Count VIII by its own terms does not name Lowe as one who would be liable. There is no allegation that he was in a fiduciary relationship with the Reeses. Further, in their omnibus Response, [51] the Reeses do not raise any argument that Lowe is liable under Count VIII. (See ECF 31 at 66-70.) Accordingly, I the claim is dismissed to the extent that it might be construed as a claim against Lowe.

Caffarella argues the claim is implausible because any fiduciary relationship existed only between the Reeses and P&P, the entity with whom they contracted to conduct the sale. He argues there have been no facts alleged to suggest that he owed any such duty, that he had any form of contractual relationship with them, or that they had placed any trust or confidence in him, such that a fiduciary relationship could be deemed to exist. Indeed, he notes, Plaintiffs have alleged they told P&P they did not want Caffarella involved in the sale. (See AC ¶¶ 54-55.)

HN30[↑] To allege a breach of fiduciary duty, Plaintiffs must assert that a fiduciary or confidential relationship existed between themselves and Defendants. Baker v. Family Credit Counseling Corp., 440 F. Supp. 2d 392, 414 (E.D. Pa. 2006) (citing Harold v. McGann, 406 F. Supp. 2d 562, 571 (E.D. Pa. 2005). "Although no precise formula has been devised to ascertain the existence of a confidential relationship, it has been said that such a relationship exists whenever one occupies toward another such a position of advisor or counselor as reasonably to inspire confidence that he will [52] act in good faith for the other's interest." Id. (quoting Silver v. Silver, 421 Pa. 533, 219 A.2d 659, 662 (Pa. 1966); see also Basile v. H & R Block, Inc., 2001 PA Super 136, 777 A.2d 95, 101-02 (Pa.

[20] Although Plaintiffs quote Section 2(c) of the Robinson-Patman Act in the AC, neither side has addressed Count IV in terms of this statute. It provides:

> HN28[↑] (c) It shall be unlawful for any person engaged in commerce, in the course of such commerce, to pay or grant, or to receive or accept anything of value as a commission, brokerage, or other compensation, or any allowance or discount in lieu thereof, except for services rendered in connection with the sale or purchase of goods, wares, or merchandise, either to the other party to such transaction or to an agent, representative, or other intermediary therein where such intermediary is acting in fact for or on behalf, or is subject to the direct or indirect control, of any party to such transaction other than the person by whom such compensation is so granted or paid.

15 U.S.C. § 13(c). HN29[↑] This provision "was designed to eliminate the competitive advantage large buyers and sellers attained over their smaller competitors by virtue of their economic clout and bargaining power." Stephen Jay Photography, Ltd. v. Olan Mills, Inc., 903 F.2d 988, 991 n. 5 (4th Cir. 1990). Section 2(c) "encompasses cases of commercial bribery tending to undermine the fiduciary relationship between a buyer and its [50] agent, representative, or other intermediary in a transaction involving the sale or purchase of goods." Harris v. Duty Free Shoppers Ltd. P'ship, 940 F.2d 1272, 1274 (9th Cir. 1991) (citation omitted). For a finding of commercial bribery, plaintiff "must show that the illegal payments in question crossed the line from buyer to seller or vice-versa." Envtl. Tectonics v. W.S. Kirkpatrick, Inc., 847 F.2d 1052, 1066 (3d Cir. 1988), aff'd, 493 U.S. 400, 110 S. Ct. 701, 107 L. Ed. 2d 816 (1990); see also Ellwood City v. Pennsylvania. Power Co., 570 F. Supp. 553, 562 (W.D. PA. 1983) (noting "intrastate sales are subject to the Robinson—Patman Act as long as the sales remain in the flow of interstate commerce"). The AC also cites and quotes 15 U.S.C. § 13a, prohibiting price discrimination.

Because there is no allegation of commercial bribery or price discrimination, I find these aspects of Count IV are also subject to dismissal.

Super. Ct. 2001). To allege a breach of that duty, Plaintiffs must allege (1) that the Defendants negligently or intentionally failed to act in good faith and solely for the benefit of Plaintiffs in all matters for which they were employed; (2) that Plaintiffs suffered injury; and (3) the Defendants' failure to act solely for the Plaintiffs' benefit was a real factor bringing about Plaintiffs' injuries. Id. at 414-415 (citing McDermott v. Party City Corp., 11 F. Supp. 2d 612, 626 n.18 (E.D. Pa. 1998). I find that the Reeses have failed to allege the plausible existence of a fiduciary relationship.

In their Response, the Reeses discuss at length the terms of their agreement with P&P and how they placed their trust in P&P, in an attempt to establish that the company exercised absolute control over the auction. (ECF 31 at 66-70.) Notably absent from that discussion, however, is any mention of how that agreement, to which Caffarella was not a party, created a fiduciary duty between themselves and Caffarella. They cannot plausibly assert that they placed trust in Caffarella when they allege and argue that P&P had absolute control over the auction and that it violated that trust by utilizing Caffarella's [*299] services against their [53] wishes. Accordingly, Count VIII is dismissed against both Defendants.

e. Count IX — Negligence

Count IX's negligence claim, as noted earlier, appears to assert that all defendants are liable. Lowe argues that it is barred by the gist of the action doctrine because the negligence allegedly arises out of duties imposed by the contract the Reeses signed with P&P. I find this argument is meritless and the negligence claim survives.

HN31[] The gist of the action doctrine applies to tort claims: "(1) arising solely from a contract between the parties; (2) where the duties allegedly breached were created and grounded in the contract itself; (3) where the liability stems from a contract; or (4) where the tort claim essentially duplicates a breach of contract claim or the success of which is wholly dependent on the terms of the contract." Hults v. Allstate Septic Sys., L.L.P., Civ. A. No. 06-0541, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 56728, 2007 WL 2253509, at *10 (M.D. Pa. Aug. 3, 2007) (citing Hart v. Arnold, 2005 PA Super 328, 884 A.2d 316, 340 (Pa. Super. Ct. 2005)). The principle underlying the doctrine is that a tort action derives from "the breach of duties imposed as a matter of social policy," whereas a breach of contract action stems from "the breach of duties imposed by mutual consensus." Redevelopment Auth. of Cambria Cnty. v. Int'l Ins. Co., 454 Pa. Super. 374, 685 A.2d 581, 590 (Pa. Super. Ct. 1996).

The obvious flaw in Lowe's gist of the action argument is that there is no allegation that there is "a contract between the [54] parties." Indeed, Lowe himself argues that the Reeses' breach of contract claim must be dismissed because he is not a party to any contract with them. (See ECF 27 at 32.) Lowe was not a signatory to the Reese/P&P contract. There is no assertion that his liability to the Reeses stems from a contract or that the breach of duty underlying the negligence claim against him duplicates duties owed by a contract. None of the cases he cites involves an application of the doctrine where the parties were not bound by a contract. See Hart, 884 A.2d at 316 (contract for sale of land); Bash v. Bell Tel. Co., 411 Pa. Super. 347, 601 A.2d 825, 830 (Pa. Super. Ct. 1992) (contract for yellow pages ad); eToll, Inc. v. Elias/Savion Adver., Inc., 2002 PA Super 347, 811 A.2d 10 (Pa. Super. Ct. 2002) (contract to market and advertise product); The Brickman Grp., Ltd. v. CGU Ins. Co., 2004 PA Super 487, 865 A.2d 918 (Pa. Super. Ct. 2004) (insurance contract).

The duty allegedly breached arises not from P&P's agreement to conduct the auction, but from Lowe's alleged conduct in improperly manipulating the content of the auction lots, dividing multi-part toys into separate lots to discourage interest by others bidders and thereby obtain the merchandize more cheaply for himself. I find that the Reeses have alleged a plausible negligence claim based on these allegations.

Caffarella argues that the claim is implausible because any work he performed for the auction was done in his capacity as [55] a contractor engaged to perform work on behalf of P&P. Thus, he contends, he did not owe an independent duty of care to the Reeses. He cites no authority for his implied proposition that an employee/contractor/agent can never as a matter of law be negligent where the injured party has also sued his principal. Nor could he.

HN32[] Plaintiffs in a negligence action are allowed to recover from both a principal and his agent under Pennsylvania law. See, e.g., Milton S. Hershey Med. Ctr. of Pa. State Univ. v. Milzoco Builders, Inc., 503 Pa. 614, 470 A.2d 86, 90 (Pa. 1983) (citation omitted); [56] see also *Sannuti v. Starwood Hotels & Resorts Worldwide, Inc., Civ. A. No. 14-587, 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 52916, 2014 WL 1515650, at 2 (E.D. Pa. Apr. 16, 2014). To be liable under this theory, the corporate agent must have "participate[d] in the wrongful acts," a requirement the Pennsylvania courts have interpreted to permit liability for an agent's misfeasance, but not for "mere nonfeasance." Wicks, 470 A.2d at 90. Misfeasance consists of "the doing of something which ought not to be done, something which a reasonable man would not do, or doing it in such a manner as a man of reasonable and ordinary prudence would not do it." *Sannuti, 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 52916, 2014 WL 1515650, at 2 (quoting Brindley v. Woodland Vill. Rest., Inc., 438 Pa. Super. 385, 652 A.2d 865, 868-70 (Pa. Super. Ct. 1995)).

That is exactly what the Reeses have alleged. They plausibly contend that Caffarella's misfeasance in manipulating the auction lots constituted negligence. I find that the fact that he is alleged to have been a consultant for P&P is irrelevant to whether he owed the Reeses a duty of care not to act improperly.

f. Count X — Breach of Contract

As stated above, neither Lowe nor Caffarella are parties to any contract with the Reeses. They seek to dismiss Count X for that reason. I agree. Neither Defendant is specifically named in Count X, they are not listed as parties to the only contract at issue, and the Reeses do no argue that there is any contract in existence between these Defendants and themselves.

g. Count XI — Unjust Enrichment [57]

The Reeses allege that ". . . Caffarella, and Lowe jointly benefited, and continue to benefit, from exploitation Plaintiffs [sic]. . . . Plaintiffs have conferred upon Defendants economic opportunity and actual economic benefit, in the nature of profits resulting from unlawful auction practices and other conduct described above, to the economic detriment of Plaintiffs." (AC ¶¶ 239-240.) They assert it would be inequitable to permit Defendants to retain that profit, and seek an order of disgorgement. (Id. ¶¶ 241-242.) Lowe and Caffarella argue that the doctrine of unjust enrichment has no application to this dispute because the Reeses did not undertake any act or intentionally confer any benefit upon them. (ECF 27 at 33-34; ECF 30 at unnumbered page 7.) I find that the Reeses have stated a plausible unjust enrichment claim against Lowe and Caffarella.

As Judge O'Neill wrote:

> HN36[] a claim of unjust enrichment must allege the following elements: (1) plaintiff conferred a benefit on the defendant; (2) the defendant appreciated the benefit; and [*301] (3) acceptance and retention by the defendant of the benefits, under the circumstances, would make it inequitable for the defendant to retain the benefit [58] without paying for the value of the benefit. Com. ex. rel. Pappert v. TAP Pharm. Prods., Inc., 885 A.2d 1127, 1137 (Pa. Commw. 2005). See also, Torchia v. Torchia, 346 Pa. Super. 229, 499 A.2d 581, 582 (1985) noting that HN37[] "to sustain a claim of unjust enrichment, a claimant must show that the party against whom recovery is sought either wrongfully secured or passively received a benefit that it would be unconscionable for her to retain." (internal quotation omitted). "The polestar of the unjust enrichment inquiry is whether the defendant has been unjustly enriched; the intent of the parties is irrelevant." Limbach v. City of > Phila., 905 A.2d 567, 577 (Pa. Commw. 2006). "In order to recover, there must be both (1) an enrichment, and (2) an injustice resulting if recovery for the enrichment is denied." Samuels v. Hendricks, 300 Pa. Super. 11, 445 A.2d 1273, 1275 (1982) (emphasis in original), quoting Meehan v. Cheltenham Twp., 410 Pa. 446, 189 A.2d 593, 595 (1963).

Global Ground Support, LLC v. Glazer Enters., Inc., 581 F. Supp. 2d 669, 675-76 (E.D. Pa. 2008). The Reeses have alleged both an enrichment and an injustice. Lowe and Caffarella allegedly enriched themselves — i.e., received a benefit — by manipulating the auction lots to discourage bidding and pay artificially low prices on toys they later resold for a profit. The AC plausibly alleges that they appreciated the benefit and that their retention of the benefit, under the circumstances, would be inequitable. Accordingly, Count XI survives as to Lowe and Caffarella.

VII. CONCLUSION

In conclusion, the claims against P&P and the individual Pook Defendants are subject [59] to dismissal in their entirety. The MAD Defendants' Motion is also granted in its entirety. Lowe's Motion to dismiss is granted as to Counts II (Lanham Act), III (unfair competition), IV (antitrust claims), V (commercial disparagement), VI (false light), VII (injurious falsehood), VIII (breach of fiduciary duty), and X (breach of contract); Caffarella's Motion is granted as to these same counts, save Count VIII's claim of breach of fiduciary duty. Thus, only Lowe and Caffarella remain as defendants. The claims that remain against Lowe are Count I (conspiracy), IX (negligence), and XI (unjust enrichment).[21] The claims that remain [*302] against Caffarella are Count I (conspiracy), VIII (breach of fiduciary duty), IX (negligence), and XI (unjust enrichment).

An appropriate Order follows.

[*none] ORDER

AND NOW, this 27th day of January, 2016, in consideration of the following Motions, all Responses and Replies thereto, it is hereby ORDERED as follows:

[21] Lowe also argues that many provisions of the AC should be struck under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(f) because they constitute immaterial, impertinent and scandalous material. (ECF 27 at 34.) HN38[] Rule 12(f) provides: "[t]he court may strike from a pleading an insufficient defense or any redundant, immaterial, impertinent, or scandalous matter." Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(f). HN39[] "Motions to strike function 'to clean up the pleadings, streamline litigation, and avoid unnecessary forays into immaterial matters.'" Mitchell v. Cmty. Educ. Ctrs., Inc., Civ. A. No. 14-5026, 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 105718, 2015 WL 4770652, at *11 (E.D. Pa. Aug. 11, 2015) (quoting [60] McInerney v. Moyer Lumber & Hardware, Inc., 244 F. Supp. 2d 393, 402 (E.D. Pa. 2002)). HN40[] "'The standard for striking a complaint or a portion of it is strict, and only allegations that are so unrelated to the plaintiffs' claims as to be unworthy of any consideration should be stricken.'" Ford-Greene v. NHS, Inc., 106 F. Supp. 3d 590, 2015 WL 2395409, at *21 (E.D. Pa. 2015) (quoting Steak Umm Co., LLC v. Steak 'Em Up, Inc., Civ. A. No. 09-2857, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 101357, 2009 WL 3540786, at *2 (E.D. Pa. Oct. 29, 2009)). Consequently, "[m]otions to strike are generally disfavored by courts and will be denied unless the allegations 'have no possible relation to the controversy and may cause prejudice to one of the parties, or if the allegations confuse the issues in the case.'" Mitchell, 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 105718, 2015 WL 4770652, at *11 (quoting Natale v. Winthrop Res. Corp., Civ. A. No. 07-4686, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 54358, 2008 WL 2758238, at *14 (E.D. Pa. July 9, 2008)).

Many of the provisions Lowe seeks to strike use bright purple prose to describe the Defendants' actions. Most of it, however, I find is related to the allegations of the claims that I find can survive. However, the Motion is due to be granted as to the following material: (1) Heading "V. Pooling" and ¶¶ 81-82 (describing an alleged 1987 conviction suffered by Ron Pook ; and (2) Heading "VII. The 'Second Rape' of the Reeses." None of this material is related to the surviving claims and may cause prejudice or confusion.

1. The Motion to [61] Dismiss of Defendants Maine Antique Digest, Kate Pennington, S. Clayton Pennington, and Lita Solis-Cohen (Document #25) is GRANTED.

2. The Motion to Dismiss of Defendants Pook & Pook, LLC, Debra Pook, James, Pook, Ron Pook, and Jamie Shearer (Document #26) is GRANTED.

3. The Motion to Dismiss of Defendants Jay Lowe and Connie and Jay Lowe Antiques (Document #27) is GRANTED IN PART AND DENIED IN PART. The Motion is GRANTED as to as to Count II (Lanham Act), Count III (unfair competition), Count IV (antitrust claims), Count V (commercial disparagement), Count VI (false light), Count VII (injurious falsehood), Count VIII (breach of fiduciary duty), and Count X (breach of contract) of Plaintiffs' Amended Complaint. The Motion is DENIED as to Count I (conspiracy), Count IX (negligence), and Count XI (unjust enrichment).

4. The Motion to Dismiss of Defendant Mike Caffarella (Document #30) is GRANTED IN PART AND DENIED IN PART. The Motion is GRANTED as to as to Count II (Lanham Act), Count III (unfair competition), Count IV (antitrust claims), Count V (commercial disparagement), Count VI (false light), Count VII (injurious falsehood), and Count X (breach of contract) of Plaintiffs' Amended Complaint. [62] The Motion is DENIED as to Count I (conspiracy), Count VIII (breach of fiduciary duty), Count IX (negligence), and Count XI (unjust enrichment).
