The USFL was unsuccessful on its remaining claims. The jury found that none of the defendants had violated Section 2 by attempting to monopolize a relevant market (Question No. 7), or by conspiring to monopolize (Question Nos. 12-14). In addition, the jury found that even though "one or more defendants [had] participate[d] in a contract, combination or conspiracy to exclude competition within major league professional football" (Question No. 20), that combination was not an unreasonable restraint of trade in violation of Section 1 (Question No. [43] 21). The fatal blow, however, was the complete rejection of the USFL's television claims. The jury found that the NFL had not willfully acquired or maintained a monopoly in a relevant television submarket (Question No. 4). It further found that the NFL's contracts with all three television networks for the right to broadcast the league's regular season and championship games through the 1986-87 season were not an unreasonable restraint of trade violative of Section 1 (Question No. 24). Finally, the jury rejected the USFL's "essential facilities" claim, specifically finding that "defendants [did not] have the ability to deny actual or potential competitors access to a national broadcast television contract" (Question No. 33), although it also found that such a contract was "essential to the ability of a major league professional football league to compete successfully in the United States" (Question No.

31) and "that potential competitors of the NFL, cannot as a practical matter, duplicate the benefits of a network contract" (Question No. 32). [17]

[44] DISCUSSION

On appeal, the USFL raises a host of claims with respect to the NFL's liability, the district court's evidentiary rulings, damages charge, and denial of injunctive relief.

1. Liability

a. The Sports Broadcasting Act

The USFL contends that the Sports Broadcasting Act of 1961 limits the antitrust exemption for pooled-rights contracts to a single contract with one network. Therefore, it argues, the NFL's multiple contractual arrangements with three networks violates the injunction in United States v. National Football League, 116 F. Supp. 319 (E.D. Pa. 1953), a decision claimed by the USFL collaterally to estop the NFL from denying that its arrangements [*1354] with the networks violate Section 1 of the Sherman Act.

The Sports Broadcasting Act states that:

> HN1[] The antitrust laws . . . shall not apply to all joint agreement by or among persons engaging in or conducting the organized professional team sport[] of football, . . . by which any league of clubs participating in professional football . . . contests sells or otherwise transfers all or any part of the rights of such league's member clubs in the sponsored telecasting [45] of the game[] of football. . . .

15 U.S.C. § 1291 (emphasis added). HN2[] This statutory language thus neither states nor implies that the exemption limits the NFL to a contract with only one network. See, e.g., United States v. James, 478 U.S. 597, 106 S. Ct. 3116, 3121, 92 L. Ed. 2d 483 (1986) (statute foreclosing government "liability of any kind . . . for any damage from or by floods" "outlines immunity in sweeping terms . . . It is difficult to imagine broader language"); United States v. Holroyd, 732 F.2d 1122, 1124, 1128 (2d Cir. 1984) (statute proscribing willful filing with IRS of "any" statement not believed to be accurate "means what it says on its face" and covers all statements to IRS). Moreover, the legislation does contain express limitations on the exemption designed to protect college football from televised competition with the NFL, which suggests by implication that no other limitations exist.

Faced [46] with statutory language unambiguously hostile to its claims, the USFL resorts to alleged ambiguities in the legislative history. Upon examination, however, the legislative history offers no reason to depart from the statutory language. For example, NFL Commissioner Rozelle stated during the congressional hearings on the Act that if all the networks were tied up by the NFL, a competing league "would . . . possibly be at a major disadvantage" and that the bill was designed to allow the NFL to televise on one network. Telecasting of Professional Sports Contests: Hearings on H.R. 8757 Before the Antitrust Subcomm. (Subcomm. No. 5) of the House Comm. on the Judiciary, 87th Cong., 1st Sess. 35 (1961). These remarks were made, however, during a colloquy in which Rozelle twice stated explicitly that the proposed legislation would allow the NFL to utilize all three networks. Moreover, he predicted that, although the NFL had a present intention to use only one network, in twenty years a "single network may no longer be desirable, and it may become much better for the public and the league to use more than one network." Id. Rozelle's testimony thus provides little comfort to the USFL.

---

[17] In ruling that any inconsistency in these verdicts did not require a new trial, a ruling not challenged on appeal, the district court first recognized that inconsistent verdicts in a civil case are fully permissible in this circuit. Opinion No. 16, 644 F. Supp. at 1045 (citing Globus v. Law Research Serv., Inc., 418 F.2d 1276, 1290 n.17 (2d Cir. 1969), cert. denied, 397 U.S. 913, 90 S. Ct. 913, 25 L. Ed. 2d 93 (1970)). The court also plausibly reconciled the actual verdicts in the instant case. Id. at 1046-48.

[47] More tellingly, the USFL also relies upon the following passage in the House Report accompanying the 1961 legislation:

> Some concern has been expressed that the language of this section might be considered to give an absolute exemption from the antitrust laws for any kind of television arrangements entered into by a league, and particularly an arrangement which might involve several networks and might thus exclude a competing league from all television coverage. This is not the intent of H.R. 9096 which is designed to permit the sale of television rights by a league and its member clubs to a single network. The committee does not intend that an exemption from the antitrust laws should be made available to a league or its members where the intent or effect of a joint agreement is to exclude a competing league or its members from the sale of any of their television rights.

H.R. Rep. No. 1178, 87th Cong., 1st Sess. 4 (1961). This language was apparently included at the suggestion of AFL Commissioner Joe Foss, who testified that the proposed legislation should guard against agreements with networks that unreasonably excluded competing leagues. See Opinion No. 2, 634 F. Supp. at 1162. [48]

We believe the USFL exaggerates the import of that statement in the House Report. The report says no more than that multiple pooled-rights agreements may be the subject of a monopolization or unreasonable restraint of trade claim by a competing league. Precisely such claims were submitted to the jury in this case and rejected by it.

[*1355] The Senate Report does not expressly address the issue of multiple network contracts, other than to conclude ambiguously that the public interest would be served "with minimal sacrifice of antitrust principles by exempting joint agreements under which a league sells or transfers pooled television rights of its members to a purchaser." S. Rep. No. 1087, 87th Cong., 1st Sess., reprinted in 1961 U.S. Code Cong. & Admin. News 3042, 3044 (emphasis added).

In any event, the passage of the 1966 NFL-AFL merger statute provides conclusive evidence that Congress did not intend the 1961 Act to prohibit NFL contracts with more than one network. When considering this legislation, Congress was explicitly informed that the merged league would continue to broadcast its games on "at least 2 networks," [18] and no concern whatsoever was expressed [49] in Congress that such conduct was either undesirable or would go beyond the scope of the 1961 Act's exemption. Moreover, while permitting the merger, Congress added a further limitation to the exemption to protect high school games from televised competition with the NFL. The lack of a "one network" limitation in the 1966 merger bill thus dooms the USFL's claims. Accordingly, we hold that the mere existence of the NFL contracts with the three networks does not violate the antitrust laws.

---

[18] During the hearings on the merger bill, Commissioner Rozelle testified "that because of the logistics of handling perhaps 13 or 14 games on a Sunday afternoon, [the NFL] would require at least 2 networks." Professional Football League Merger: Hearings on S. 3817 Before the Antitrust Subcomm. (Subcomm. 5) of the House Comm. on the Judiciary, 89th Cong., 2d Sess. 64 (1966). In response to the question of whether New York City residents would be able to see professional football on television when the other New York club was playing a home game, Rozelle said that the league would try to do so, "which is why I feel we will probably have to go to two networks, to assure that each of the 26 or 28 teams has all of its road games brought back to its home city." Id. at 66. Moreover, the NFL and AFL submitted a memorandum to the subcommittee concerning whether the merger would result in reduced broadcasts of football games:

> Because a single network cannot practicably establish as many as twenty-eight regional networks and because the expanded league desires to maintain its present level of club television income, the plan contemplates the continued use of two networks by the expanded league, e.g., on a conference or other divisional basis. Thus, both during the period prior to the expiration of the existing television contracts and afterwards, it is contemplated that there will be continued home viewer access to duplicate broadcasts, including telecasts of other league games into home cities on days when the home team is playing at home.

Id. at 119 (emphasis added).

Having made this determination, we need not consider whether the decree in United States v. National Football League has any collateral-estoppel effect.

[50] b. The "Dilution Effect"

The USFL does not argue that there was insufficient evidence to support the jury's rejection of its claim that the NFL prevented it from obtaining a network contract. The failure to make this argument is understandable in light of the swift dismissal such a claim would encounter. However, the USFL does the next-best thing by attacking the district court's instructions regarding "intent and effect" and "legitimate business purpose," both discussed immediately infra, on grounds that these instructions led the jury to ignore an "unchallenged showing of anticompetitive effect" and "textbook example of an anticompetitive practice." Moreover, the USFL continues to seek broad injunctive relief concerning the NFL's television contracts on the ground that such relief is necessary to bring competition to the industry. Because these claims are based on the so-called "dilution effect" of the NFL's contracts with the three networks, a separate discussion of the concept of a "dilution effect" and its role in the professional football industry is necessary.

The term "dilution effect" comes from a CBS business study ordered by Neil Pilson, CBS Sports' President, [51] and completed in June 1984. CBS conducted the study because it was apprehensive over ABC's signing a USFL fall contract and desired the leverage a second league would afford it in its negotiations with the NFL. The study estimated the economic impact on CBS of [*1356] the televising of USFL games in the fall under various scenarios. One scenario posited only ABC televising USFL games on Sundays. The scenarios most pertinent to the present discussion posited CBS and either NBC or ABC televising USFL games. Under these scenarios, CBS would televise both USFL and NFL games on Sundays. The final scenario posited USFL games being televised by NBC and ABC on fall Sundays. No study was made of CBS being the only network with a USFL contract because CBS was not interested in such an arrangement. See supra note 11.

As explained by Pilson, the value of a USFL fall contract to CBS was determined (in simplified fashion) as follows. From the estimated gross advertising revenues would be subtracted estimates of: (i) expenses related to production; (ii) losses in revenues that would otherwise have been earned by programs preempted by USFL games, or "preemptive impact"; (iii) decreases [52] in advertising revenues from NFL games resulting from the addition of USFL games, or "dilution effect"; and (iv) rights fees to the USFL. Pilson testified that when these estimates were made in June 1984, the resultant calculation, CBS's profit, was negative. The USFL argues that, but for the "dilution effect" of $ 50 million, the sum would have been sufficiently positive to make a USFL contract attractive. The USFL assumes that the "dilution effect" was experienced equally by all three networks and thus concludes that the effect of NFL's network contracts was to exclude all competition.

The district court instructed the jury to analyze the NFL's television contracts in light of the CBS study. Specifically, the jury was told to consider "the high NFL rights fees charged to the networks, which plaintiffs allege triggered a dilution effect that makes it economically infeasible for any network to offer a satisfactory television contract to any professional football league other than the NFL." The jury rejected the USFL's claims as to the "dilution effect" in finding that the NFL had not monopolized a television submarket, that the NFL television contracts were not an unreasonable [53] restraint, and that the NFL did not have the power to exclude a competing league from obtaining a network contract. There was ample evidence to support these conclusions.

First, the USFL concedes, as it must, that the "dilution effect" is nonexistent when the NFL network contracts expire and negotiations over new contracts are under way. Whatever exclusionary effect exists is only for the term of the three NFL network contracts, and all leagues are free to compete on the basis of the quality of their product upon the expiration of these contracts. The district court's instructions directed the jury to consider the length of these contracts, then five years, in determining whether they were reasonable. Its verdict, therefore, is dispositive because the duration of the contracts was hardly unreasonable as a matter of law.

Second, there was no evidence that the result of the calculations described above would be the same for ABC as for CBS. ABC's contract was largely confined to televising a single NFL game in prime time on a weekday night. Its Sundays were free of football, and it would not encounter the scheduling problems faced by CBS in televising both NFL and USFL games [54] on Sunday afternoons. ABC was thus free to schedule games so as to maximize revenue. Moreover, whatever "dilution effect" ABC's prime-time games might suffer was not necessarily identical to that faced by CBS. The jury might easily conclude, absent evidence to the contrary, that the "dilution effect" on CBS from back-to-back NFL-USFL telecasts on Sunday afternoons would be greater than on ABC, which would not broadcast NFL games on Sunday. And there was no evidence to the contrary. The USFL, which bore the burden of proof on this issue, called two witnesses from ABC in a position to testify about the "dilution effect" on ABC. Neither witness was questioned about the "dilution effect." Both did testify, however, that the USFL's exodus from major television markets and its other difficulties greatly diminished the value of USFL telecasts by 1985 and 1986.

[*1357] Third, the conduct of the NFL and the networks indicates that neither believed their contracts to be exclusionary. Notwithstanding the early opinion of the NFL's Moyer about a network without a contract being an "open invitation to a new league," the NFL's actual conduct displayed no marked desire to lock up all [55] three networks. Prime-time weekday telecasts were offered to NBC and CBS, both of whom already had NFL contracts, before ABC was approached. It was the testimony of both the ABC executives and CBS's Pilson, elicited by counsel for the USFL, that Rozelle routinely used the threat of leaving them without an NFL contract in order to extract from them the largest possible rights fees. If the "dilution effect" theory of exclusion were correct, the NFL could not credibly threaten to leave one network without a contract. If the theory were correct, moreover, the last network to sign with the NFL would have a bargaining advantage because its agreement would be essential to the NFL's monopoly, much as the owner of the last lot in a tract of land needed for a construction project can demand the highest price. In the NFL-network negotiations, the opposite was the case, and the last network to sign was at a bargaining disadvantage. Thus, in 1982, the NFL first signed agreements with ABC and NBC and then approached CBS. According to Pilson, CBS regarded itself as being in a very disadvantageous bargaining position. As a result, CBS paid $ 736 million for the new contract, an increase of [56] more than 100% over its previous contract. On the basis of this evidence, therefore, the jury would have been hard-pressed to conclude that the NFL needed a contract with CBS to freeze out a competing league, a circumstance that would have precluded a credible threat to leave CBS without a contract and the resultant hefty increase in rights fees.

Fourth, even if the "dilution effect" theory were alive and well in 1986, the jury could have found that that "effect" was not a cause of the USFL's failure to get a network contract in that year. The CBS study was made in 1984 and was based on estimates of revenues that were plainly excessive given the circumstances of 1986. Immediately after the study was completed, the Supreme Court decided National Collegiate Athletic Association v. Board of Regents, 468 U.S. 85, 104 S. Ct. 2948, 82 L. Ed. 2d 70 (1984), invalidating the NCAA's exclusive control over the televising of college football games. This decision had the effect of multiplying greatly the number of college games telecast and of reducing advertising revenue generally for football games. An ABC witness also testified there was a proliferation of sporting events [57] on network and cable television after the fall of 1984 that also reduced the advertising fees that could be charged for professional football. In addition, there were the problems of the USFL itself. The league had failed to establish fan loyalty in most places because of repeated franchise moves. Most importantly, the USFL had abandoned most major television markets, thereby rendering telecasts of its games much less valuable than had been estimated by the earlier CBS study. Finally, the disagreements among the USFL owners, the financial condition of some of the franchises, and the "lame-duck" spring season of 1985 further lessened the value of USFL telecasts in 1986. In fact, Pilson himself testified that by 1986 the events described above had rendered the "dilution effect" irrelevant to CBS's decision not to televise the USFL. In light of this evidence, the jury was free to conclude that the revenues to be expected from USFL telecasts were so low that no network would purchase them even if there were no "dilution effect." [19] [19] The USFL's brief offers an extreme version of the "dilution effect," which we quote:

---

> The NFL's television-related conduct constitutes a textbook example of an anticompetitive practice available only to one who dominates the market. In a normal, competitive market, the NFL's extraction of monopoly rents by fixing its rights fees at an artificially high level would prove pro-competitive by attracting new businesses into the market. Cf. Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 583, 106 S. Ct. 1348, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538 (1986). But by tying up the only three television networks capable of providing the revenue to support a competing league, and increasing the actual rights fees charged each of them by 625% in less than ten years (a feat only attainable through the exercise of market power), the

[58] [*1358] c. "Intent and Effect" Charge

We now consider the district court's instruction regarding liability on the USFL's television-related claims. The USFL contends that it should not have been required to show that the intent and effect of the NFL's television contracts with the major networks were exclusionary (rather than simply intent or effect) in order to prove a Section 2 claim. In addition, the USFL contends that the district court erred with respect to the Section 1 television instruction because it applied the intent-and-effect standard to the Rule-of-Reason claims. We reject both contentions.

The district court gave the following charge with respect to the USFL's Section 2 television-related claims: [20]

> A company may not be found to have wilfully acquired or maintained monopoly power if it has acquired that power solely through the exercise of superior foresight and skill or because of natural advantages . . ., or because of economic or technological efficiency; . . . or by laws passed by Congress
>
> . . . .
>
> In this regard, you should be aware that in 1966 Congress passed a law permitting the merger of the two major football leagues then [59] existing. . . .
>
> Accordingly, I instruct you that the 1966 merger of the AFL and the NFL cannot be the basis for inferring that the NFL acquired monopoly power unlawfully.
>
> In addition, in 1961 Congress passed a statute that provides that a contract between a professional sports league and a television network for the sale of pooled telecast rights is not a restraint of trade in violation of the antitrust laws.
>
> Accordingly, I instruct you that the making of these contracts by the NFL with the television networks constitutes the lawful acquisition of power, even if you were to find that these contracts gave the NFL monopoly power, unless you found that the intent and effect of these agreements is to exclude a competing league or its members from selling any of their television rights.

(emphasis added). This instruction was consistent with the Sports Broadcasting Act, discussed infra, as exempting from antitrust scrutiny a league's pooled-rights contracts with networks unless they constitute illegal monopolization or an unreasonable restraint of trade so far as competing leagues are concerned. More importantly, the intent-and-effect charge was consistent with [60] the legal standards for illegal monopolization under Section 2.

The Supreme Court has repeatedly defined HN3[] monopolization as the "willful acquisition or maintenance" of monopoly power. E.g., Aspen Skiing Co. v. Aspen Highlands Skiing Corp., 472 U.S. 585, 596 n.19, [*1359] 105 S. Ct. 2847, 86 L. Ed. 2d 467 (1985); United States v. Grinnell Corp., 384 U.S. 563, 570-71, 86 S. Ct. 1698, 16 L. Ed.

> NFL forces the networks in turn to raise NFL advertising prices above competitive levels. This in turn creates a disincentive to televise a rival, competitively-priced football league in the fall because such a lower-priced league would drive down advertising rates and reduce the NFL viewing audience. This disincentive, termed the "dilution effect" and quantified by CBS at $ 50 million, applies equally to all the networks and prevents them from considering fairly the merits of a new league.

USFL Br. at 39 (footnote and citation to record omitted).

Even putting aside the unproven factual premises -- the existence of monopoly rents, the identical impact of the "dilution effect" upon all networks, the quantification of $ 50 million as realistic for 1986 -- this theory appears to posit a uniquely sadomasochistic economic relationship in which the more the seller charges, the happier the buyer is. Needless to say, the network executives who testified did not describe their negotiations with Rozelle as fitting that model. Nor was there evidence indicating why the networks had to be "forced" by high NFL rights fees to charge advertising prices the market would bear anyway.

[20] The USFL incorrectly claims that the district court's instructions applied a more stringent standard of proof to its television claims than to other claims. In fact, the intent-and-effect charge was given on all the monopolization issues. The USFL also claims it was surprised by the intent-and-effect charge. It was aware before trial, however, that the NFL would seek such a charge. In any event, no claim of harm other than a passing psychic injury to otherwise robust counsel is made.

2d 778 (1966); [61] Berkey Photo, Inc. v. Eastman Kodak Co., 603 F.2d 263, 274 (2d Cir. 1979), cert. denied, 444 U.S. 1093, 100 S. Ct. 1061, 62 L. Ed. 2d 783 (1980). The willfulness element certainly requires proof of intent. See Aspen Skiing, 472 U.S. at 602 n.28 (quoting United States v. Aluminum Co. of Am., 148 F.2d 416, 432 (2d Cir. 1945) ("Alcoa") ("In order to fall within § 2, the monopolist must have . . . the intent to monopolize.")). Proof of effect is required by definition alone to satisfy the "acquisition or maintenance" requirement.

A requirement that both intent and effect be proven is necessary to enable a trier of fact to make the critical distinction between conduct that defeats a competitor because of efficiency and consumer satisfaction, and conduct that "not only (1) tends to impair the opportunities of rivals, but also (2) either does not further competition on the merits or does so in an unnecessarily restrictive way." Aspen Skiing, 472 U.S. at 605 n.32 (quoting 3 P. Areeda & D. Turner, Antitrust Law 78 (1978)). Hopes and dreams alone cannot support a Section 2 claim of monopolization. [62] Berkey Photo, 603 F.2d at 273-75. If they did, the nationwide advertisement "Ford wants to be your car company" would constitute an open-and-shut Section 2 case. Success alone is not enough or the antitrust laws would have their greatest impact on the most efficient entrepeneurs and would injure rather than protect consumers.

Proof of intent and effect is also of evidentiary value. Distinguishing between efficient and predatory conduct is extremely difficult because it is frequently the case that "competitive and exclusionary conduct look alike." Easterbrook, On Identifying Exclusionary Conduct, 61 Notre Dame L. Rev. 972, 972 (1986). Evidence of intent and effect helps the trier of fact to evaluate the actual effect of challenged business practices in light of the intent of those who resort to such practices. [21] As Justice Stevens stated in Aspen Skiing,

> Evidence of intent is merely relevant to the question whether the challenged conduct is fairly characterized as "exclusionary" or "anticompetitive" -- to use the words in the trial court's instructions -- or "predatory," to use a word that scholars seem to favor. Whichever [63] label is used, there is agreement on the proposition that "no monopolist monopolizes unconscious of what he is doing." As Judge Bork stated more recently: "Improper exclusion (exclusion not the result of superior efficiency) is always deliberately intended."

472 U.S. at 602-03 (quoting R. Bork, The Antitrust Paradox 160 (1978)).

[64] The present case is in fact a useful example of the intent-and-effect approach to determining whether certain practices are predatory. As the preceding discussion of the "dilution effect" indicates, the jury's conclusion that the NFL's three network contracts were not exclusionary was supported by evidence that a quality league could either have overcome the "dilution effect" or have acquired a contract when the NFL's contracts expired. The conduct of the NFL itself and the networks showed [*1360] their disbelief in any exclusionary effect by the NFL's threatening to leave a network without NFL games and the networks' taking the threat seriously. The evidence also supported the conclusion that when the NFL locked up the third network, CBS, in the 1982 negotiations, it did so to obtain $ 736 million in rights fees, not to exclude competitors.

Judge Leisure's instructions to the jury with respect to the Section 1 Rule-of-Reason claim stated that intent was not determinative as to whether a practice was an unreasonable restraint of trade:

---

[21] The USFL contends that the district court improperly added a specific intent requirement to Section 2 by instructing the jury that it "should infer no anticompetitive intent from the mere existence of" the NFL's three network contracts. This argument is groundless. The quoted language simply restated the district court's holding in its Opinion No. 2 interpreting the Sports Broadcasting Act of 1961. In any event, the district court instructed the jury that "monopoly power is obtained intentionally and this element is satisfied, if defendants acquired it by means other than superior skill or historical accident" or "by any means of wielding monopoly power to prevent or impede competition." This instruction applied to both the professional football market and television submarket claims and fully complied with Alcoa's requirement of only general intent for a monopolization violation. See 148 F.2d at 432. The usefulness in this area of the distinction between specific and general intent, moreover, may be diminished by Aspen's description of the intent requirement as an evidentiary tool to evaluate business conduct.

Examining the combination's purpose may assist you in determining the effects of the agreement on competition. The mere fact that [65] the defendants had a good motive or sound purpose for entering into an agreement, however, does not in and of itself prevent you from finding that the agreement was an unreasonable restraint of trade.

On the other hand, the mere fact that defendants entered into an agreement with the intent of excluding competition, is not enough to establish a Section [1] violation. Even if you find that defendants' intent was evil or unlawful, you still must find evidence of anticompetitive effect before you can find a particular restraint of trade is unreasonable.

We disagree with the USFL that proof of either anticompetitive intent or effect is sufficient in a Rule-of-Reason case under Section 1. HN4[] Unlike a per se price-fixing case, a Rule-of-Reason case requires the fact finder to balance the procompetitive and anticompetitive effects of any restraint. See e.g., National Soc'y of Professional Eng'rs v. United States, 435 U.S. 679, 691 & n.17, 98 S. Ct. 1355, 55 L. Ed. 2d 637 (1978). Except for Oreck Corp. v. Whirlpool Corp., 579 F.2d 126, 133 [66] (2d Cir.) (in banc), cert. denied, 439 U.S. 946, 99 S. Ct. 340, 58 L. Ed. 2d 338 (1978), the cases cited by the USFL are per se price-fixing cases. We have previously stated, however, that we "doubt" that the purpose-or-effect requirement stated in Oreck "is a disjunctive rule," and that "it is difficult to conceive of a viable private action for damages under section 1 if some unreasonable restraint of trade has not been effected." Borger v. Yamaha Int'l Corp., 625 F.2d 390, 397 & n.4 (2d Cir. 1980). Other courts agree, see, e.g., Cascade Cabinet Co. v. Western Cabinet & Millwork, Inc., 710 F.2d 1366, 1372-73 (9th Cir. 1983); Davis-Watkins Co. v. Service Merchandise, 686 F.2d 1190, 1202-03 (6th Cir. 1982); H & B Equip. Co. v. International Harvester Co., 577 F.2d 239, 246 (5th Cir. 1978), and we now hold, for reasons stated in our discussion of the Section 2 claim, that HN5[] an anticompetitive effect must be shown to make out a Section 1 Rule-of-Reason violation.

d. Legitimate Business Opportunities [67] and Profit-Maximization Charge

The USFL further argues that the district court erroneously charged the jury that the NFL's three network contracts were lawful if motivated by any "legitimate" purpose, including profit maximization. The pertinent charge reads as follows:

Plaintiffs allege that the NFL coerced the networks not to give the plaintiffs a contract. . . . So long as they have a legitimate business purpose in doing so, defendants have no duty to limit themselves in entering into the television contracts so that other football leagues would have an easier time entering the market, or to foresee that other leagues might do so, or for any reasons to decline a profitable business opportunity.

This charge was consistent with settled precedent. HN6[] "[A] firm with lawful monopoly power has no general duty to help its competitors, whether by holding a price umbrella over their heads or by otherwise pulling its competitive punches." Olympia Equip. Leasing Co. v. Western Union Tel. Co., 797 F.2d 370, 375 (7th Cir. 1986), cert. denied, 480 U.S. 934, 107 S. Ct. 1574, 94 L. Ed. 2d 765 (1987); [68] see Ball Memorial Hosp., Inc. v. Mutual Hosp. Ins., Inc., 784 F.2d 1325, 1338 (7th Cir. 1986); Berkey Photo, 603 F.2d at 274, 276, 287. A monopolist may not, of course, use its market power, whether obtained lawfully or not, to prevent or impede competition in the relevant [*1361] market. See Aspen Skiing, 472 U.S. at 605; Berkey Photo, 603 F.2d at 274. The jury was thus properly instructed that:

A monopoly achieved or maintained as a result of . . . legitimate good business practices is not unlawful. A monopolist has the same right to compete as any other company. Under the antitrust laws, a monopolist is encouraged to compete vigorously with its competitors and to remain responsive to the needs and demands of its customers. At the same time, a monopolist cannot use its lawfully acquired power to maintain its monopoly.

In addition, there is nothing in the antitrust laws that requires a monopolist to act against its own self interest so long as the monopolist does not at the same time exercise its power to maintain that power. Thus, a > monopolist is under no duty affirmatively to help or aid its [69] competitors and is free to set as its legitimate goal the maximization of its own profits so long as it does not exercise its power to maintain that power.

The USFL challenges this charge on the ground that setting prices at a profit-maximizing level is an anticompetitive act. We disagree. Prices not based on superior efficiency do not injure competitors, see Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 582-83, 106 S. Ct. 1348, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538 (1986), but rather invite competitive entry. As we stated in Berkey Photo:

> HN7[] Setting a high price may be a use of monopoly power, but it is not in itself anticompetitive. Indeed, although a monopolist may be expected to charge a somewhat higher price than would prevail in a competitive market, there is probably no better way for it to guarantee that its dominance will be challenged than by greedily extracting the highest price it can.

603 F.2d at 294. The USFL responds to this argument by falling back on its claim that professional football is not a typical market [70] because of the "dilution effect," an argument rejected by the jury and discussed supra.

e. Television Submarket Definition

Regarding the relevant television submarket, the district court instructed the jury, first, to determine who were the potential purchasers of television broadcast rights for professional football in the fall. The jury was then, second, to determine from the perspective of those buyers what other products, if any, were reasonably interchangeable with broadcast rights to professional football. The USFL claims in particular that, in instructing the jury to determine who were potential purchasers, the district court erred by stating that:

> If you find that a professional football league would reasonably consider selling its broadcast rights to cable television companies or to individual television stations, then all those buyers must be included in the relevant submarket.

We do not agree with the USFL that this charge was error because it emphasized the view of potential buyers in determining the relevant submarket. See United States v. E.I. du Pont de Nemours & Co., 351 U.S. 377, 404, 76 S. Ct. 994, 100 L. Ed. 1264 (1956); [71] see also United States v. Waste Management, Inc., 743 F.2d 976, 979-80 (2d Cir. 1984) (defining relevant market by first determining potential buyers and then determining what products were reasonably interchangeable from buyers' perspectives); JBL Enters., Inc. v. Jhirmack Enters., Inc., 698 F.2d 1011, 1016-17 (9th Cir.), cert. denied, 464 U.S. 829, 104 S. Ct. 106, 78 L. Ed. 2d 109 (1983). The fact that a cable contract might be less desirable, even much less desirable, to a league than a network contract is not relevant to determining the product submarket.

In any event, the USFL never objected to the relevant submarket instruction, and the objection was thus waived under Fed. R. Civ. P. 51. Contrary to its claim on appeal, the USFL did not "distinctly" object to this instruction, but merely proposed changes in language in the draft charge. These suggestions did not constitute a general objection to the entire charge. Indeed, the [*1362] district judge expressly stated his understanding that the parties had objected only "to the extent [of] proposed changes in the charge" (emphasis added). This was apparently [72] the understanding of the USFL as well because the league raised a "general objection" to the intent-and-effect charge.

f. The Supplemental "Unambiguous Evidence" Charge

The USFL also challenges the supplemental "unambiguous evidence" instruction given by Judge Leisure in response to a note from the jury. The note sought guidance as to what the jury should do if it were to define a television market or submarket broader than the market alleged by the USFL. The supplemental instruction stated in part that:

> If you answer the second part of Question 3 [possession of monopoly power in the relevant submarket] in terms of your own broader definition of a relevant market or submarket, then I must also instruct you that you may only find that the NFL has monopoly power in this broader submarket if plaintiffs have produced > unambiguous evidence that the defendants have the power to control prices or exclude competition in this broader market. Unambiguous evidence is evidence of a kind which is so clear that it supports only one conclusion.

The USFL contends that the instruction concerning a need for unambiguous evidence of the power to control prices or exclude competitors [73] should not have been given.

HN8[] An "unambiguous evidence" instruction regarding the power to control prices or to exclude competition is appropriate where market share data for the relevant market is lacking. See Broadway Delivery Corp. v. United Parcel Serv. of Am., Inc., 651 F.2d 122, 130 (2d Cir.) ("when such a traditional form of proof [as market share data] is lacking, the plaintiff must produce unambiguous evidence that the defendant has the power to control prices or exclude competition"), cert. denied, 454 U.S. 968, 102 S. Ct. 512, 70 L. Ed. 2d 384 (1981). Absent market share data, definite evidence of monopoly power is needed lest profitability alone provide a basis for antitrust liability.

The parties' arguments on this point are based on differing assumptions as to what the jury actually did with regard to the submarket definition. The USFL assumes that the relevant submarket found by the jury was the sale of broadcasting rights for professional football in the fall to the networks, cable and syndicators. Because there was market share data [74] for that submarket -- during 1983-86, for example, $ 1.7685 billion in revenue to the NFL, $ 65.9 million to the USFL -- it understandably concludes that the "unambiguous evidence" supplemental instruction was error. The NFL assumes that the relevant submarket found by the jury was the sale of broadcasting rights for professional football, other sporting events and television programming generally to the networks, cable and syndicators. Because no meaningful market share data was introduced for that much broader submarket, the NFL understandably concludes that the supplemental instruction was eminently correct. These differing assumptions require us to examine certain events at trial in some detail.

The pertinent portion of the submarket instructions reads as follows:

> In this case plaintiffs allege the existence of a relevant submarket in the nationwide market for the sale of network television broadcasting rights for major league professional football games in the fall.
>
> Defendants dispute plaintiffs' definition of the relevant submarket in at least two respects. First, the defendants contend that the buyers of broadcast rights are not limited to television networks. [75] Instead, they say that football leagues and others who sell programs to be televised to the public can and do sell them to other buyers, such as individual television stations, through the process of syndication, and cable television companies, such as ESPN or Turner Broadcasting. If you find that a professional football league would reasonably consider [*1363] selling its broadcast rights to cable television companies or to individual television stations, then all those buyers must be included in the relevant submarket.
>
> Second, the defendants say that the relevant submarket is not limited to the sale of rights to telecast professional football in the fall, but should instead include the sale of broadcast rights for other sports programming, such as college football, and for other general entertainment programming. In order for plaintiffs to prove that their definition of the relevant submarket is correctly limited to the sale of broadcasting rights for professional football in the fall, plaintiffs must show that the purchasers of those rights did not regard other types of programming as reasonably interchangeable substitutes for professional football.
>
> In other words, you [76] have to decide whether, based on all the evidence you have seen and the testimony you have heard, whether broadcasting rights to professional football in the fall compete as a product with broadcasting rights for other sporting events and other television programming. If you find that such competition does exist, then you have necessarily found that the relevant submarket is broader than the plaintiffs have alleged. If, on the other hand, you find that the sale of broadcasting rights for professional football in the fall is a specific universe, and that the buyers of those rights do not have reasonably interchangeable substitutes, then you have necessarily found that plaintiffs are correct in having limited the relevant submarket to the sale of broadcasting rights for professional football in the fall.

The jury was thus asked to undertake the following tasks: (i) determine whether buyers in the submarket include cable and syndicators as well as the networks, and (ii) determine whether those buyers regard the broadcasting rights to professional football in the fall as reasonably interchangeable with broadcasting rights to other sporting events and other programming. However, [77] the interrogatory on the verdict sheet asked only:

> 2. Is there a relevant market or submarket, as alleged by plaintiffs, consisting only of the sale to the networks of television broadcasting rights for major league professional football in the Fall?
>
> YES NO

What appears to have been overlooked by counsel and the district court is that while the answer "YES" would complete the jury's tasks, the answer "NO" might not. A "NO" answer would leave unresolved the question of whether the relevant submarket was the sale of broadcasting rights to football to networks, cable and syndicators, or the sale of broadcasting rights to programming generally to networks, cable and syndicators. After it in fact decided to answer interrogatory 2 "NO," the jury thereupon sent a note asking for guidance as to what it should do next.

A colloquy took place over the proper response to the jury's question. The NFL took the position that a "NO" answer to the interrogatory obviated the need for the jury to answer any further interrogatories concerning monopolization of the television submarket. The USFL argued that the jury must go on to answer the questions concerning [78] monopolization of whatever submarket it did find. Counsel for the USFL thus stated:

> MR. MYERSON: What the jury is saying is that if they find that the submarket is broader than sale by networks of television broadcasting rights for major league professional football, do they necessarily have to answer no to the question of did defendants willfully acquire or obtain monopoly power in either of the relevant market or submarket. And they say, or can we instead use our broader definition of what the relevant submarket is and answer whether or not the defendants have willfully acquired or maintained monopoly power in the relevant submarket.
>
> To follow Mr. Fiske's argument, what Mr. Fiske is asking the court to say is that you automatically must answer no, the defendants did not willfully acquire or maintain monopoly power in the relevant [*1364] submarket merely because they find that the relevant submarket is broader than broadcasting rights for major league professional football. And what we are saying to the court is that, as your Honor has already instructed, the relevant submarket may be broader, and then and obviously then when they define the relevant submarket do [79] they answer the question 4: "Did defendants willfully acquire and maintain monopoly power in the relevant market or submarket?"
>
> And in 5, did the defendants' monopolization of the relevant market cause the injury, and in 6, etc. But to take the position that we lose the opportunity for the jury to say whether or not the defendants monopolized in a submarket merely because they think that the submarket may be broader than we submit, is inconsistent with your Honor's charge to the jury and to the law.
>
> The jury's province under your Honor's instruction is to determine what they think the accurate submarket is and then to answer the question of whether within their definition of what the accurate submarket is, defendants monopolized or attempted to monopolize in the way set forth in the verdict.
>
> * * *
>
> What the jury is asking is, if the submarket is broader in their view than just network, and presumably includes, as your Honor instructed they could find, cable TV or individual television stations as set forth on page 37, the jury is then saying do we necessarily have to answer no to the question of whether they have monopoly power in that submarket, and for them to argue yes, [80] the jury has to say no because they found a broader submarket goes totally inconsistent and it is the antithesis of what your Honor instructed and what they asked your Honor to instruct over my objection.

What was lost in the verbal traffic over whether the jury should continue to answer questions on the verdict sheet was the fact that the jury had to determine not only whether the relevant buyers included cable and syndicators as well as the networks but also whether those buyers, once determined, would consider rights to fall professional football reasonably interchangeable with rights to other programming. This distinction was of little importance at the time of the colloquy because the "unambiguous evidence" instruction apparently was not yet in the picture.

After a break, during which counsel for the NFL submitted handwritten proposed instructions containing, apparently for the first time, the "unambiguous evidence" charge, the court reconvened outside the presence of the jury. The district judge offered the parties a chance for a side-bar discussion that was not accepted, although the challenged instruction was now on the table. He thereupon called in the jurors [81] and told them that they should go on to answer the other questions relating to the television submarket even if they redefined that submarket. He then gave the "unambiguous evidence" instruction. No exception to that charge was taken at that time.

Fifteen minutes later, the jury came in with another question, and at that point the USFL objected to the supplemental instruction with regard to "unambiguous evidence." The district judge expressed mild surprise because he believed the instructions quite favorable to the USFL in allowing the jury to continue to answer questions concerning the submarket. Counsel for the USFL stated:

> MR. MYERSON: The applicable authorities, as plaintiffs have read them, stand for the proposition that the unambiguous evidence instruction is reached only in the absence of market share data, and it is plaintiffs' position, as the court is aware, that there is market share data even on the broader submarket that includes other forms of TV, and including ESPN, cable, etc., and with respect to even a broader submarket, including ESPN, cable, etc., there is market share data in the record showing an NFL share higher than 90 percent, and for that reason [82] we object to the charge given by your Honor.

[*1365] Counsel for the USFL did not bring to the district court's attention the distinction between a submarket consisting of the sale of broadcasting rights to fall professional football to the networks, cable and syndicators, and a submarket consisting of the sale of broadcasting rights to programming generally to the networks, cable and syndicators. This was not an insignificant omission because an objection based on the proffered market share data had no merit whatsoever with regard to the broader market and the various colloquies leading up to the objection had served to blur what had now become a critical distinction.

The USFL was entitled at best to an instruction that monopolization of the narrow submarket could be found after resort to ordinary evidentiary principles. Such an instruction would have to be accompanied, however, by a further statement that monopolization of the broad submarket could be based only on "unambiguous evidence." The broad objection made by the USFL to the supplemental instruction did not, therefore, bring to the attention of the district court a valid claim of error, and a more precise [83] claim cannot be raised on appeal. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 51 (counsel HN9[] must state to district court "distinctly the matter objected to and the grounds of objection").

We also note that it is not at all clear that the jury determined the relevant submarket to be the narrow market for broadcasting rights to fall professional football. After the jury went back to its tasks, it arrived at a verdict that we reproduce in pertinent part.

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF NEW YORK

UNITED STATES FOOTBALL LEAGUE, et al., Plaintiffs against

NATIONAL FOOTBALL LEAGUE, et al., Defendants

JURY VERDICT SHEET & INTERROGATORIES

84 Civ. 7484 (PKL)

We, the jury, unanimously make the following findings and render the following verdicts with respect to each of the claims alleged in this case:

RELEVANT MARKET

1. Is there a relevant market, as alleged by plaintiffs, consisting of major league professional football in the United States?

YES X NO

The burden of proof is on plaintiffs to prove by a preponderance of the evidence that the answer is "yes".

2. Is [84] there a relevant market or submarket, as alleged by plaintiffs, consisting only of the sale to the networks of television broadcasting rights for major league professional football in the Fall?

YES NO X

[*1366] The burden of proof is on plaintiffs to prove by a preponderance of the evidence that the answer is "yes".

2A. WE the Jury have REDEFFIND the Relevant SUBMARKET TO INCLUDE NOT ONLY The SALE TO The NETWORKS OF TV BROADCASTING Rights but ALSO TO INCLUDE CABLE AND SYNDICATION.

SHERMAN ACT SECTION 2

A. Actual Monopolization

Answer Question 3 only if you have answered "yes" to either Questions 1 or Question 2, or both.

3. Does the NFL have monopoly power, that is, the power to control prices or exclude competition in either the relevant market or submarket?

(Check the market or submarket, if any, you have found to exist and then answer this question only as to such market, or submarket, or both):

In a relevant market consisting of major league professional football in the United States?

YES X NO

In a relevant market or submarket consisting only of the sale to the networks of television broadcasting rights for [85] major league professional football in the Fall?

YES NO X

The burden of proof is on plaintiffs to prove by a preponderance of the evidence that the answers are "yes".

No party made an application to clarify the verdict. If the handwritten redefinition of the submarket in "2A" included only the sale of broadcasting rights to major league professional football in the fall, then the "unambiguous evidence" instruction may have misled the jury in answering the second part of question No. 3, even though the printed statement regarding the burden of proof would tend to counteract it. If "2A" included the sale of broadcasting rights to programming generally, then the supplemental instruction was correct.

We believe the redefinition of the submarket stated in "2A" is ambiguous and [*1367] cannot be determined on the present record. If one looks at the handwritten redefinition in isolation, the failure to modify the words "broadcasting rights" would imply the broadest definition, or television programming generally. If one looks at page one of the verdict sheet in isolation, it might appear that the jury omitted solely for the sake of convenience the words from question [86] No. 2 immediately above "for major league professional football in the Fall." However, neither the handwritten redefinition nor the verdict sheet can be viewed in isolation. The jury had a copy of the charge in the jury room and the words "broadcasting rights" were used in that charge to describe each of the relevant submarkets. Indeed, the second paragraph of the portion of the television submarket charge quoted above specifically mentioned sales to cable and syndicators by "others [besides football leagues] who sell programs to be televised." We cannot assume that the jury believed that "broadcasting rights" was a short-hand term for professional football rights only.

We therefore cannot say that the jury's failure to include a modifying phrase providing a full description of the broadcasting rights represented a rejection of the NFL's contentions with regard to the broader submarket of television programming generally. We believe the failure of the USFL to seek clarification of the verdict, in addition to its failure to make a precise objection to the supplemental instruction, precludes it from claiming error now. [22] Courts have held [87] HN10[] that a party's failure to bring alleged inconsistencies in the verdict sheet to the court's attention before the jury has been discharged waives the right to have the alleged inconsistencies remedied by a new trial. See, e.g., Strauss v. Stratojac Corp., 810 F.2d 679, 682-83 (7th Cir. 1987); Diamond Shamrock Corp. v. Zinke & Trumbo, Ltd., 791 F.2d 1416, 1423 (10th Cir.), cert. denied, 479 U.S. 1007, 107 S. Ct. 647, 93 L. Ed. 2d 702 (1986); Fernandez v. Chardon, 681 F.2d 42, 58 (1st Cir. 1982), aff'd, 462 U.S. 650, 103 S. Ct. 2611, 77 L. Ed. 2d 74 (1983); Stancill v. McKenzie Tank Lines, Inc., 497 F.2d 529, 534-35 (5th Cir. 1974). We believe that similar considerations justify application of doctrine of waiver where, as here, the jury returns an ambiguous verdict and counsel fails to seize the opportunity to raise an appropriate objection.

[88] In any event, we believe it highly unlikely that the jury's verdict was affected by the events described above. Neither the USFL's Rule-of-Reason claim nor its essential-facilities claim was affected by the redefined submarket or the "unambiguous evidence" instruction. Nevertheless, the jury rejected the USFL's contentions regarding the NFL's network television contracts in both those claims. Given the common evidentiary basis for all the USFL's television claims described supra, it is most improbable that the " unambiguous evidence" instruction affected the jury's verdict on question No. 3 even if the submarket included only broadcasting rights to football.

g. Consumer-Satisfaction Charge

The district judge also charged that in considering whether the NFL had engaged in anticompetitive conduct, the jury might "consider . . . whether in a freely competitive market there would be any dissatisfaction with the present choices on the part of the buyers" or "whether or not the choices of those who purchased the rights to show or televise football have been restricted." This instruction was correct. [89] HN11[] An inquiry into consumer preference is obviously relevant to a determination of whether a monopolist has engaged in predatory conduct. See Aspen Skiing, 472 U.S. at 605. Given the [*1368] USFL's vigorously pressed claim that the NFL coerced the networks not to televise USFL games, it was entirely proper to allow the jury to consider whether the networks eschewed USFL fall contracts because of NFL coercion or because they were satisfied with the NFL's product.

h. Essential-Facilities Charge

Finally, the USFL contends that it was held to an improperly high standard of proof on its "essential-facilities" claim. We set out the pertinent charge:

> Plaintiffs allege that defendants violated Sections [1] and [2] of the Sherman Act by conspiring to and in fact denying plaintiffs access to a satisfactory national broadcast television contract for future seasons, with any one of the three networks. The legal basis for this particular claim by plaintiffs is that a network contract is an essential facility which the USFL or any other professional football league needs in order to compete in major league professional football.
>
> You should only consider this [90] claim if you have already found, pursuant to my earlier instructions, that defendants possess monopoly power in a relevant market or submarket. If you have not found that defendants possess monopoly power, you must return a verdict in defendants' favor on this claim.
> In order to prove their essential "facilities" claim, plaintiffs must prove all of the following elements by a preponderance of the evidence:
> First: That a national broadcast television contract with at least one of the three networks, CBS, NBC or ABC is essential to the ability of a professional football league to compete successfully in the United States;
> Second[:] that potential competitors of the NFL cannot as a practical matter, duplicate the benefits of a network contract;

[22] We are aware that the NFL described the redefined market as being limited to the sale of broadcasting rights to football in a posttrial memorandum. See Memorandum of Law in Opposition to Plaintiffs' Request for Permanent Injunctive Relief at 33. The point being made, however, was in no way dependent on how the submarket was defined, and we see no reason to bind the NFL to that statement. As stated in the text, someone looking solely at the verdict sheet would reach that conclusion. In any event, the question is whether an adequate exploration of the issue was made before the district judge.

> Third: That the defendants control access to each of the three networks, that is, the defendants themselves have the ability by their actions to deny actual or potential competitors, such as the USFL, access to national broadcast television -- access to a national broadcast television contract;
>
> Fourth: That the defendants through their actions have exercised their ability to deny actual or potential competitors access to a national [91] broadcast television contract by denying the USFL such access;
> Fifth: That a national broadcast television contract between one or more of the networks and a professional football league other than the NFL would not interfere with any of the defendants' lawful dealings with those networks.

The USFL argues first that this charge erred in failing to distinguish between a network television contract in the spring and one in the fall. The charge did, however, address the USFL's denial of "access to a satisfactory national broadcast contract for future seasons" (emphasis added). The jury was well aware of the USFL's claim that a spring contract was unsatisfactory as an "inferior facility" or "minor league." It thus either rejected that characterization of spring football or rejected the USFL's claim that the NFL could deny the USFL access to a network in the fall. The spring-fall issue was thus before the jury.

The USFL next claims that it was error for the district court to require a showing of monopoly power in a relevant submarket or market before considering the essential-facilities claim. We fail to see why the USFL challenges this instruction because the jury [92] did find monopoly power in a relevant market and therefore did consider the essential-facilities claim. Had the challenged instruction been omitted, the verdict would have been exactly the same.

Finally, the USFL claims that the district court erred by instructing the jury that one element of an essential-facilities claim is that an antitrust defendant "control access" to the facility. In the USFL's view, this element requires a showing only of "defendants' contribution to the prevention of plaintiffs' access to the facility." HN12[] The requirement that the defendant control [*1369] access to the facility is established in the caselaw, see, e.g., MCI Communications Corp. v. AT&T Co., 708 F.2d 1081, 1132 (to establish liability under the essential facilities doctrine, plaintiff must prove defendant's "control of the essential facility"), modified on other grounds, 1983-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P65,520 (7th Cir.), cert. denied, 464 U.S. 891, 104 S. Ct. 234, 78 L. Ed. 2d 226 (1983), and is necessary because an essential-facilities claim [93] must be brought against the party that can provide access to the facility.

2. The District Court's Evidentiary Rulings

a. The USFL's Merger Strategy

The USFL vigorously contends that the NFL's introduction of evidence of its merger strategy enabled the NFL to present an impermissible in pari delicto or unclean-hands defense under the guise of damage causation. This claim is frivolous.

It is true that HN13[] a plaintiff's own anticompetitive conduct generally cannot be raised as a defense to liability in an antitrust action. See Perma Life Mufflers, Inc. v. International Parts Corp., 392 U.S. 134, 139, 88 S. Ct. 1981, 20 L. Ed. 2d 982 (1968) (rejecting in pari delicto defense that plaintiff's participation in challenged scheme barred recovery); Kiefer-Stewart Co. v. Joseph E. Seagram & Sons, Inc., 340 U.S. 211, 214, 71 S. Ct. 259, 95 L. Ed. 219 (1951) (rejecting unclean-hands defense based on plaintiff's involvement in unrelated conduct). The defense may be available, however, when the plaintiff was present at the creation and had [94] a complete and continuing involvement in the monopolization scheme. See Perma Life, 392 U.S. at 140; P. Areeda & D. Turner, Antitrust Law para. 348c (1978).

Whatever its force or content, the in pari delicto defense was never interposed by the NFL, and the evidence in question was quite properly admitted as relevant to causation and damages. Stretching dictum in Perma Life 1292*94 beyond recognition, the USFL misreads that decision to proscribe the introduction of evidence that might "prejudice the jury improperly into evaluating 'the relative moral worth of the parties.'" USFL Reply Br. at 14 (quoting Perma Life, 392 U.S. at 139). Neither Perma Life nor Kiefer-Stewart suggests that otherwise readily admissible evidence must be excluded because it might also be relevant to an in pari delicto or unclean-hands defense. In fact, Perma Life explicitly states that such evidence "can of course be taken into consideration in computing damages." 392 U.S. at 140; see also First Beverages, Inc. v. Royal Crown Cola Co., 612 F.2d 1164, 1175 (9th Cir.) (plaintiff's anticompetitive conduct could [95] be introduced "to disprove part or all of the claimed damages"), cert. denied, 447 U.S. 924, 100 S. Ct. 3016, 65 L. Ed. 2d 1116 (1980); Pearl Brewing Co. v. Jos. Schlitz Brewing Co., 415 F. Supp. 1122, 1131 (S.D. Tex. 1976) ("evidence introduced by defendant of such conduct, if any, by a plaintiff which heretofore was labeled as 'in pari delicto' now is appropriate when it provides rebuttal to that plaintiff's allegations of causation of injury by defendant and resulting damages therefrom"). Such evidence also can be used for purposes of impeachment. See Memorex Corp. v. IBM Corp., 555 F.2d 1379, 1384 n.8 (9th Cir. 1977).

As with any evidence, therefore, the district judge had broad discretion to determine whether the probative value of the evidence of a merger strategy was "substantially outweighed by the danger of unfair prejudice, confusion of the issues, or misleading the jury." Fed. R. Evid. 403. His decision that evidence of business decisions made by the USFL pursuant to the merger strategy was highly relevant to the issues of causation and damages and not outweighed by any prejudicial effect was clearly correct. [96] This evidence was highly probative on the central issue of whether the USFL's alleged injury and damages, particularly with regard to its failure to obtain a fall network contract, were caused by the NFL's anticompetitive conduct or by the USFL's own deliberate business judgments. See, e.g., Costner v. Blount Nat'l Bank, 578 F.2d 1192, 1195 (6th Cir. 1978); Heatransfer Corp. v. Volkswagenwerk, [*1370] A.G., 553 F.2d 964, 983 (5th Cir. 1977), cert. denied, 434 U.S. 1087, 98 S. Ct. 1282, 55 L. Ed. 2d 792 (1978); Borger v. Yamaha Int'l Corp., 625 F.2d at 399.

For example, Eddie Einhorn, the USFL owner who was to represent the USFL in negotiations with the networks for a fall contract, warned his fellow owners at a meeting in August 1984:

> We're starting to look for merger cities. Let's be honest about it. We're getting out of certain cities because we don't -- they're getting taken in by the other League, and we're looking for merger cities. We've got to get it on the table tomorrow or this afternoon and start looking at this damn thing. I have the television; I got other problems.
>
> You can't get [97] out of all the cities ahead of time because then you got no TV markets left. It's one of these chicken and egg deals. It's great to get out of them if we're absorbed; but if you're going to exist and need someone else to pay us television money, we can't get out of every city we've got here and just move into cities that aren't in the NFL or we're not going to have any product.

It quite simply defies logic for the USFL to assert on the one hand that it was denied a network contract indispensable to its survival because of the NFL's anticompetitive acts and to argue on the other for exclusion of evidence that the owners of USFL franchises knowingly lessened the value of their product to television. Courts do not exclude evidence of a victim's suicide in a murder trial.

To take another example, USFL Commissioner Usher testified that the USFL suffered a "tumbling" of teams and abandoned its spring season because NFL "pressure" caused ABC to withhold broadcast rights payments and to reject any proposal to televise the USFL. He further stated that the USFL sought competition between, rather than a merger of, the leagues, and that NFL pressure forced the USFL to move its [98] teams from highly-rated television markets into low-rated non-NFL markets. Given that testimony, Judge Leisure would have erred had he not concluded that:

> certain of Usher's answers . . . put in issue the fact of the merger motive . . . thus . . . put[ting] in issue plaintiffs' theory that the cause of the moves to the [non-NFL] cities was NFL conduct. In addition, Usher has put in evidence the state of mind of the USFL owners who, he claims, moved the teams because of NFL competitive pressures.
>
> The proffered trial exhibits . . . suggest that the reason the USFL decided to move those teams was to position the league for a merger. Certainly, if Usher claims that the basis for the USFL owners' decisions for [moving] the teams was by reason of NFL conduct, the NFL should be entitled to show that there is evidence that suggests that the USFL owners had a different motive.

Moreover, it was clearly proper for the NFL to use evidence of this strategy for impeachment purposes. See Memorex, 555 F.2d at 1384 n.8. Although the USFL's desire to exclude this evidence is understandable, its own claims made it inevitable that the merger strategy [99] and its resultant effect on the USFL's value as a television product would become an issue at trial. Indeed, the door was ajar to such evidence as early as the USFL's counsel's opening statement, in which he outlined the USFL's television claims. See United States v. Bari, 750 F.2d 1169, 1180 (2d Cir. 1984) (door may be opened through counsel's opening statement), cert. denied, 472 U.S. 1019, 105 S. Ct. 3482, 87 L. Ed. 2d 617 (1985).

Judge Leisure correctly circumscribed the uses to which the evidence of a merger strategy was put and gave a limiting instruction to the jury four times. In part, that limiting instruction stated that "the nature of plaintiffs' conduct must have no bearing on your evaluation of whether the defendants did anything in violation of the antitrust laws." [23] [100] We have on "numerous [*1371] occasions" found that such "an instruction was sufficient to enable the jury to limit its consideration of the evidence to the purpose for which it was offered." United States v. Siegel, 717 F.2d 9, 18 (2d Cir. 1983). [24]

Finally, we reject the USFL's claim that particular items of evidence of its merger strategy were inadmissible on other grounds. It was hardly an abuse of discretion to admit USFL owner Myles Tannenbaum's view of the three ways to make money in professional football, namely "tickets, television and triple damages," to show that plaintiffs, after failing in the marketplace, sought to compel a merger through the threat of antitrust litigation. See Argus v. Eastman Kodak Co., 801 F.2d 38, 43 (2d Cir. 1986) (relying on evidence that plaintiff had been "searching for the means of entering the antitrust fray"), cert. denied, 479 U.S. 1088, 107 S. Ct. 1295, 94 L. Ed. 2d 151 (1987). With respect [101] to the McKinsey & Company report advising against a shift to fall play, Judge Leisure limited its use to showing that advice paid for by, and given to, the USFL owners was not followed. The report was not admitted for the truth of the statements contained therein. See Siegel, 717 F.2d at 18.

b. Prior NFL Antitrust Judgments

In his Opinion No. 3, Judge Leisure excluded from evidence prior court decisions that found the NFL to have violated Section 1 of the Sherman Act. 634 F. Supp. at 1171-75. The USFL contends on appeal that this ruling was error, and that the NFL used this ruling as a "shield" to present a "good monopolist" defense.

Prior antitrust violations and the history of competition in a market may, in appropriate cases, be admissible to establish market power and intent to monopolize. See, e.g., United States v. Grinnell Corp., 384 U.S. at 576; Lorain Journal Co. v. United States, 342 U.S. 143, 152-53 (1951). Such evidence also may be admissible to establish the intent, motive and method of a conspiracy under Section 1. See Continental Ore Co. v. Union Carbide & Carbon Corp., 370 U.S. 690, 710, 82 S. Ct. 1404, 8 L. Ed. 2d 777 (1962). [102] In order for the NFL's prior antitrust

---

[23] The full limiting instruction was as follows:

You have heard arguments presented by counsel and questions asked of witnesses which have brought to your attention the allegation that in some respects plaintiffs . . . may have had a motive to attempt to force a merger with the NFL in one of several ways. . . . Any arguments that suggest that such conduct is unethical or somehow improper, are themselves inappropriate in this type of case, and in the context of this lawsuit. Whether plaintiffs . . . may have pursued such conduct is irrelevant to the issue of whether the defendants here on trial engaged in any anticompetitive conduct towards the plaintiffs.

Defendants . . . are entitled to show you, however, that certain business decisions may have been the cause of the poor financial health of the USFL. Thus, while plaintiffs contend that they have been injured by defendants' anticompetitive conduct, defendants contend that certain USFL business decisions caused the financial harm to plaintiffs.

But, I must remind you that the nature of plaintiffs' conduct must have no bearing on your evaluation of whether the defendants did anything in violation of the antitrust laws.

[24] The USFL's claim that two jurors were improperly influenced by evidence of the merger strategy despite the district court's limiting instruction must also be rejected. See Fed. R. Evid. 606(b) (HN14[] prohibits use of extrajudicial statements by jurors to impeach verdict).

judgments to be admissible, however, the USFL bore the burden of demonstrating that the conduct underlying those prior judgments had a direct, logical relationship to the conduct at issue in this case. See Buckhead Theatre Co. v. Atlanta Enters., Inc., 327 F.2d 365, 368-69 (5th Cir.) (HN15[] evidence of prior antitrust judgment irrelevant unless plaintiff introduced evidence that practices complained of in prior case "had an injurious effect upon the plaintiff"), cert. denied, 379 U.S. 888, 85 S. Ct. 158, 13 L. Ed. 2d 92 (1964); Bray v. Safeway Stores, Inc., 392 F. Supp. 851, 866 (prior antitrust judgment admitted where underlying conduct was same as that alleged in main case) (citing FTC v. Cement Inst., 333 U.S. 683, 705, 68 S. Ct. 793, 92 L. Ed. 1010 (1948)), vacated per settlement, 403 F. Supp. 412 (N.D. Cal. 1975).

Judge Leisure found that the USFL never made such a showing, and, [*1372] although we do not fully embrace his reasoning, we agree that the prior [103] judgments should not have been admitted as evidence of a longstanding conspiracy somehow casting light on current alleged illegalities. Two of the decisions in question, Smith v. Pro Football, Inc., 593 F.2d 1173 (D.C. Cir. 1978) (invalidating rules for NFL player draft); Mackey v. National Football League, 543 F.2d 606 (8th Cir. 1976) (invalidating "Rozelle Rule" for compensation of free agents), are not consistent with our decision in Wood v. National Basketball Ass'n, 809 F.2d 954 (2d Cir. 1987). The three others, Los Angeles Memorial Coliseum Comm'n v. National Football League, 726 F.2d 1381 (9th Cir.) (invalidating NFL Rule 4.3 limiting franchise relocation), cert. denied, 469 U.S. 990, 105 S. Ct. 397, 83 L. Ed 2d 331 (1984), later opinion, 791 F.2d 1356 (9th Cir. 1986), cert. denied, 484 U.S. 826, 108 S. Ct. 92, 98 L. Ed. 2d 53 (1987); North Am. Soccer League v. National Football League, 670 F.2d 1249 (2d Cir.) (invalidating rule forbidding franchise owners from owning other professional sports teams), cert. denied, 459 U.S. 1074, 103 S. Ct. 499, 74 L. Ed. 2d 639 (1982), [104] and United States v. National Football League, 116 F. Supp. 319 (E.D. Pa. 1953) (invalidating rules limiting broadcast of games into home territories of other teams), involve difficult antitrust questions that were (and, in circuits other than the place of decision, may still be) fair game for litigation. Accordingly, these cases are at best marginally probative of an ongoing intent to exclude competitors.

Judge Leisure excluded the latter three judgments on the ground that they involved intraleague restraints, whereas the instant litigation involves interleague competition. Although we hesitate to adopt a rule that anticompetitive restraints among competitors can never reveal monopolistic intent toward would-be entrants, we do note that sports leagues raise numerous difficult antitrust questions involving horizontal restraints and group boycotts. The very concept of a league involving separate business entities (teams) requires concerted behavior among them and the exclusion of outsiders. Even the drawing up of a schedule requires that horizontal competitors (teams) conform to jointly made decisions and necessarily excludes others. See R. Bork, The Antitrust [105] Paradox 332 (1978). Moreover, the antitrust law governing horizontal arrangements among competitors and group boycotts has been fluid. With regard to arrangements among competitors, compare United States v. Socony-Vacuum Oil Co., 310 U.S. 150, 223, 60 S. Ct. 811, 84 L. Ed. 1129 (1940) ("under the Sherman Act a combination formed for the purpose and with the effect of raising, depressing, fixing, pegging, or stabilizing the price of a commodity in interstate or foreign commerce is illegal per se"), with Broadcast Music, Inc. v. CBS, Inc., 441 U.S. 1, 23, 99 S. Ct. 1551, 60 L. Ed. 2d 1 (1979) ("not all arrangements among actual or potential competitors that have an impact on price are per se violations of the Sherman Act or even unreasonable restraints"). With regard to group boycotts, compare Klor's Inc. v. Broadway-Hale Stores, Inc., 359 U.S. 207, 212, 79 S. Ct. 705, 3 L. Ed. 2d 741 (1959) ("group boycotts, or concerted refusals by traders to deal with other traders, have long been held to be in the forbidden [per se] category"), with Jefferson Parish Hospital District No. 2 v. Hyde, 466 U.S. 2, 30-31, 104 S. Ct. 1551, 80 L. Ed. 2d 2 (1984) [106] (exclusion of physician from hospital staff privileges not violation of antitrust laws "without a showing of actual adverse effect on competition" in product market), and Northwest Wholesale Stationers, Inc. v. Pacific Stationery & Printing Co., 472 U.S. 284, 296, 105 S. Ct. 2613, 86 L. Ed. 2d 202 (1985) (group boycott was not per se illegal absent proof that buying cooperative possessed market power).

Accordingly, we are wary of allowing a trier of fact to draw inferences of intent from the outcome of prior lawsuits in an area so fraught with uncertainty and doubt. Our wariness in this regard is enhanced by the fact that the lawsuits most pertinent to the instant action -- involving claims by another league or a team in another league -- were in fact won by the [*1373] NFL. American Football League v. National Football League, 323 F.2d 124 (4th Cir. 1963); Mid-South Grizzlies v. National Football League, 720 F.2d 772 (3d Cir. 1983). The district court thus acted within its discretion in excluding evidence of prior antitrust judgments against the NFL on the grounds that their prejudicial value outweighed their probative [107] value under Fed. R. Evid. 403. See International Shoe Mach. Corp. v. United Shoe Mach. Corp., 315 F.2d 449, 459 (1st Cir.) ("Whether admitted purely as 'background' evidence or not, evidence of a judicial determination of prior illegal conduct on the part of the defendant cannot help but have a great emotive impact on a jury."), cert. denied, 375 U.S. 820, 84 S. Ct. 56, 11 L. Ed. 2d 54 (1963); see also Bohack Corp. v. Iowa Beef Processors, Inc., 715 F.2d 703, 709 (2d Cir. 1983) (appellate court reluctant to overturn trial court decision under Rule 403 unless arbitrary or irrational).

We next consider several related evidentiary issues. The USFL claims that a statement by Commissioner Rozelle that the NFL was "in bed with" the City of Oakland should have been admitted. This statement, made during testimony before the Senate Judiciary Committee on a bill that would have given the NFL greater control over franchise relocation, indicated that the NFL had cooperated closely with the City of Oakland during the course of litigation seeking to keep the NFL Raiders in that city. The USFL hoped to use this statement to demonstrate the [108] existence of a conspiracy between the NFL and the City of Oakland to destroy the USFL Invaders in order to bring about the return of the Raiders to Oakland. Judge Leisure again acted within his discretion in ruling that Rozelle's statement did not tend to prove such a conspiracy and that the statement's probative value was thus outweighed by its prejudicial effect because of the need for foundation testimony regarding the Raiders' litigation against the NFL. [25]

Judge Leisure was also well within his discretion in excluding Al Davis's testimony about what Davis called the NFL's "habitual disregard" of antitrust advice. This evidence would have put before the jury the precise evidence of prior antitrust judgments previously and correctly deemed inadmissible. Moreover, Judge Leisure correctly found that this testimony was not admissible "habit" evidence [109] HN16[] under Fed. R. Evid. 406, because testimony as to "three or four episodes over a 20-year period" was hardly sufficient to "conclude that a pattern of behavior exists with respect to the conduct at issue here." See G.M. Brod & Co. v. U.S. Home Corp., 759 F.2d 1526, 1533 (11th Cir. 1985) (error to admit collateral evidence of routine practice that falls short of "adequacy of sampling and uniformity of response" required by Rule 406). Finally, Judge Leisure properly prevented the USFL from attempting to impeach Commissioner Rozelle through an affidavit of Lamar Hunt, an NFL owner who also owned a professional soccer team. This testimony was hearsay and, if allowed, would have resulted in a "mini-trial about the NASL case [or] about the position Hunt took in that litigation." See Bari, 750 F.2d at 1178-79 (no HN17[] abuse of discretion in refusing to permit cross-examination of witness that would lead to "mini-trial").

c. Legislative Process Evidence

The USFL claims that the district court erroneously excluded [110] evidence relating to the activities of the NFL in Congress. This evidence included (1) the NFL's lobbying activities in connection with the 1961 Sports Broadcasting Act and the 1966 NFL-AFL merger legislation, (2) Congress's motives in enacting this legislation, and (3) Senator Alphonse D'Amato's knowledge of the NFL's use of "pressure" tactics in its congressional lobbying.

HN18[] Legislative lobbying efforts cannot of course be the basis of antitrust liability. See Eastern R.R. Presidents Conference v. Noerr Motor Freight, Inc., 365 U.S. 127, 135-36, [*1374] 81 S. Ct. 523, 5 L. Ed. 2d 464 (1961); United Mine Workers of Am. v. Pennington, 381 U.S. 657, 669-72, 85 S. Ct. 1585, 14 L. Ed. 2d 626 (1965). Evidence of such lobbying may be admitted, however, "if it tends reasonably to show the purpose and character of the particular transactions under scrutiny," Pennington, 381 U.S. at 670 n.3 (quoting FTC v. Cement Inst., 333 U.S. at 705), and that evidence is more probative than prejudicial. Id.

We address first [111] the exclusion of evidence about the Sports Broadcasting Act and the 1966 merger legislation. The USFL objects to the exclusion of a House Committee Report on the Sports Broadcasting Act, which stated that Congress expected professional sports leagues to institute competitive bidding for their television rights as soon as existing contracts expired. See H.R. Rep. No. 1178, 87th Cong., 1st Sess. (1961). The USFL sought to demonstrate by this report that the NFL had misled Congress by promising to put NFL telecasts (especially of the championship game) up for competitive bidding. Judge Leisure properly ruled that the interpretation of legislative history was not an issue of fact for the jury, see Stissi v. Interstate & Ocean Transp. Co., 765 F.2d 370, 374 (2d Cir. 1985), and that such evidence was otherwise excludable under Fed. R. Evid. 403 as overly prejudicial and confusing.

---

[25] For similar reasons, exclusion of excerpts from minutes of the Oakland-Alameda County Coliseum Board of Directors was proper.

As to the NFL-AFL merger legislation, the USFL sought to introduce evidence that it was approved in part because the NFL had promised two powerful Louisiana lawmakers that a franchise would be awarded to New Orleans. The district court's refusal to admit such evidence was not an abuse [112] of discretion, and we adopt Judge Leisure's reasoning as set forth in the margin. [26] We also reject the USFL claim with regard to the exclusion of allegedly "doctored" minutes of NFL League meetings. In a pre-trial ruling, Judge Leisure correctly found that these minutes, which were submitted to Congress in connection with the merger legislation, had not been doctored, and that plaintiffs' claim was just a "diversionary tactic."

[113] Finally, we address the district court's exclusion of Senator D'Amato's testimony about the NFL's use of "pressure" tactics in Congress. These tactics allegedly included threats to certain members of the House and Senate to remove franchises from their states and promises to others to move franchises to their states. The USFL argued that these lobbying activities fell within the "sham" exception to Noerr-Pennington. We agree, however, with Judge Leisure that HN19[] efforts to persuade government officials simply by appealing to their political interests have Noerr-Pennington protection. See Noerr, 365 U.S. at 142-44; Mid-South Grizzlies, 720 F.2d at 784; BusTop Shelters, Inc. v. Convenience & Safety Corp., 521 F. Supp. 989, 995 (S.D.N.Y. 1981).

Evidence of lobbying may, as we have already stated, nevertheless be admitted as purpose or character evidence. See Pennington, 381 U.S. at 670-71 n.3. Judge Leisure thus allowed Senator D'Amato to testify about the Senator's own experience with the NFL's lobbying after [114] formation of the USFL in 1982, but forbade any reference to prior lawsuits or to particular legislation. Senator D'Amato was also not permitted to testify concerning double-hearsay statements made by NFL officials to other members of Congress. Even if these statements could survive a hearsay objection, however, they were properly excluded on two other grounds. First, the testimonial privilege that members of Congress enjoy under the Speech or Debate Clause of the [*1375] Constitution, art. I, § 6, cannot be waived by another member (in this case, Senator D'Amato). As Judge Leisure stated, the underlying purpose of the Speech or Debate Clause, which is to "protect the integrity of the legislative process by insuring the independence of individual legislators," United States v. Brewster, 408 U.S. 501, 507, 92 S. Ct. 2531, 33 L. Ed. 2d 507 (1972), would be "ill-served" if such waivers were permitted. Second, this testimony was properly excluded under Fed. R. Evid. 403 because of its potentially prejudicial impact on the jury.

Finally, with regard to all of the excluded evidence relating to the legislative process, we tend to share the view of the Third Circuit [115] that, "if these allegations are true, . . . they are, perhaps, instructive on the nature of the federal legislative process. For purposes of [the Sherman Act], however, they are irrelevant." Mid-South Grizzlies, 720 F.2d at 784.

d. Examination of Damages Experts

The USFL further claims that Judge Leisure erred by not permitting the cross-examination of Dr. Bruce Owen, the NFL's damages expert, about testimony he gave in unrelated cases. In the cases in question, Buffalo Broadcasting Co. v. American Society of Composers, Authors & Publishers, 546 F. Supp. 274, 293 n.42 (S.D.N.Y. 1982) (rejecting testimony of defendant's expert Owen, in part because he had testified as government economist that ASCAP was anticompetitive cartel), rev'd, 744 F.2d 917 (2d Cir. 1984), cert. denied, 469 U.S. 1211, 105 S. Ct.

---

[26] The district court found that: (1) "an important aspect of the NFL's purpose in seeking the 1961 exemption was to join the other professional sports organizations in being able to enter into pooled rights television contracts," Opinion No. 3, 634 F. Supp. at 1171; (2) one of the terms of the 1966 merger was an increase in the number of teams; (3) at the NFL's request, the merger legislation did not grant the combined league any greater antitrust immunity than existed before the merger; (4) evidence on state of mind as to lobbying that took place fifteen to twenty years earlier was weak; and (5) the evidence was, in any event, merely cumulative. See generally id.

1181, 84 L. Ed. 2d 329 (1985), and Southern Pacific Communications Co. v. AT&T Co., 556 F. Supp. 825, 913 (D.D.C. 1982) (rejecting testimony of plaintiff's expert Owen, in part because of role as government economist favoring AT&T break-up), aff'd, 740 F.2d 980, 740 F.2d 1011 (D.C. Cir. 1984), [116] cert. denied, 470 U.S. 1005, 105 S. Ct. 1359, 84 L. Ed. 2d 380 (1985), Dr. Owen's testimony was rejected by the district court but vindicated on appeal. See Buffalo Broadcasting, 744 F.2d at 931-33 & n.12; Southern Pacific, 740 F.2d at 1000-02. It was well within Judge Leisure's discretion to avoid a confusing and certainly complex digression into two earlier trials and appeals. See Bari, 750 F.2d at 1178-79. We note that such a digression is not required by Walker v. Firestone Tire & Rubber Co., 412 F.2d 60, 63-64 (2d Cir. 1969), in which the expert in question had given extremely contradictory testimony regarding his qualifications in an earlier unrelated trial. Probing into the qualifications of an expert is a far cry from probing into differing judicial reactions to Owen's prior testimony in totally unrelated cases.

Moreover, the record does not support the USFL claim that the district court allowed the NFL to challenge the USFL's damages case unfairly. Fed. R. Evid. 104(a) permits voir dire of an expert witness, where, as here, an expert's testimony involved two industries, professional [117] football and television, and various complex economic models and assumptions. The district court also properly allowed the NFL to question Dr. Cornell about the effect of injunctive relief on the USFL's damages, namely "what effect, if any, . . . a cessation of illegal conduct by defendants would have on plaintiffs' future." This cross-examination did no more than probe Dr. Cornell's direct testimony that future damages were appropriate because the USFL would suffer damage "as long as the particular behavior complained about . . . continues."

e. Miscellaneous Evidentiary Claims

We briefly address the USFL's remaining evidentiary claims. The record contradicts the USFL's claim that it was not permitted to examine New York Jets' owner Leon Hess about his alleged conflict of interest as an NFL owner and ABC director and about statements made by Senator D'Amato and Vincent Tese. The district court also acted within its discretion when it excluded a letter to Hess from Mayor Edward Koch regarding the return of the Jets to New York City, even though Hess's reply was admitted. The Koch letter was excluded on the grounds that it was both hearsay and unduly prejudicial under Rule 403. [118] HN20[] The doctrine of completeness, Fed. R. Evid. 106, does not compel admission [*1376] of otherwise inadmissible hearsay evidence. See United States v. Terry, 702 F.2d 299, 314 (2d Cir.), cert. denied, 461 U.S. 931, 103 S. Ct. 2095, 77 L. Ed. 2d 304 (1983).

Judge Leisure also properly excluded a 1982 letter from the Senate Judiciary Committee to Roone Arledge of ABC regarding sportscaster Howard Cosell's testimony on legislation concerning sports franchise relocation. The USFL claimed that Arledge, at Rozelle's request, had sought to reschedule Cosell's testimony in order to increase the likelihood that the bill would be voted out of committee before Congress adjourned. However, the USFL failed to establish a sufficient foundation for the admission of this letter under the public record exception of Fed. R. Evid. 803(8).

In addition, the USFL claims that an exchange of letters in 1970 between then ABC President Leonard Goldenstein and the president of an earlier United States Football League, which never fielded any teams, was improperly excluded [119] from evidence. In his reply, Goldenstein had stated that ABC was not interested in televising another league because it had just signed an NFL contract for Monday Night Football. The USFL hoped to show by this evidence that the NFL's television contracts prevented the networks from broadcasting another league. Judge Leisure, however, acted within his discretion in concluding that the NFL would be unduly prejudiced under Fed. R. Evid. 403 by the admission of these letters and that a proper foundation for this hearsay evidence had not been established pursuant to Fed. R. Evid. 803(6). On the other hand, he did admit evidence relating to the WFL's futile attempts to obtain television contracts after Rozelle had testified that he told CBS officials of his "surprise" that Robert Wussler, president of CBS Sports, had attended a meeting with the WFL.

The district court also excluded testimony by Ed Garvey, former head of the NFL Players Association, regarding ABC's unwillingness, without NFL approval, to consider broadcasting touch football games during the halftime of NFL games. Such testimony was clearly irrelevant and misleading with respect to any alleged television conduct by the [120] NFL because it had nothing to do with the USFL or NFL control over the networks. Instead it concerned the production only of NFL games.

Finally, we consider the USFL's attempt to impeach Tex Schramm of the Dallas Cowboys by showing that his testimony that the unionization of the USFL was never discussed at NFL meetings was false. First, no foundation was laid to introduce handwritten notes of an NFL official allegedly reflecting the comments of an NFL players union official at an NFL meeting. Second, these notes were, as Judge Leisure found, being offered for their truth, not simply for the fact that the statements were made, and were properly excluded as multiple hearsay under Fed. R. Evid. 805.

3. The District Court's Damages Instructions

The USFL contends that it received an award of only $ 1.00 because of incorrect jury instructions regarding damages. Again, we disagree. Specifically, the USFL challenges the instructions with respect to an antitrust plaintiff's burden of proving the amount of damages and with respect to nominal damages.

a. The $ 1.00 Award

The jury was given the following nominal damages instruction:

> Just because you have found the fact [121] of some damage resulting from a given unlawful act, that does not mean that you are required to award a dollar amount of damages resulting from that act. You may find, for example, that you are unable to compute the monetary damages resulting from the wrongful act, except by engaging in speculation or guessing, or you find that you cannot separate out the amount of the losses caused by the wrongful act from the amount caused by other factors, including perfectly lawful competitive acts and including business decisions made by the [*1377] plaintiffs or the plaintiffs' own mismanagement. Or you may find that plaintiffs failed to prove an amount of damages.
> You may decline to award damages under such circumstances, or you may award a nominal amount, say $ 1.

The jury's $ 1.00 award was consistent with this instruction. The NFL offered much evidence of self-destructive USFL decisions, and the jury's nominal award suggests that it credited this proof, as it was free to do. Moreover, it is now clear that Dr. Cornell's testimony was based on a number of assumptions entailing legal premises that were incorrect or factual conclusions that were rejected by the jury. In [122] awarding only nominal damages, the jury might reasonably have concluded that the USFL had failed to prove any damages.

b. Nominal Damages in Antitrust Cases

We also reject the USFL's claim that the award of nominal damages in antitrust cases is somehow "suspect." Other courts routinely approve the award of such damages, see, e.g., Rosebrough Monument Co. v. Memorial Park Cemetery Ass'n, 666 F.2d 1130, 1147 (8th Cir. 1981), cert. denied, 457 U.S. 1111, 102 S. Ct. 2915, 73 L. Ed. 2d 1321 (1982), and the USFL cites no authority holding that nominal damages are impermissible in an antitrust case. It is true that we questioned the award of nominal damages in dictum, Herman Schwabe, Inc. v. United Shoe Mach. Corp., 297 F.2d 906, 909 n.4 (2d Cir.) ("possibility of awarding nominal damages under § 4 of the Clayton Act . . . seems dubious in light of the language of the statute and the Supreme Court opinions"), cert. denied, 369 U.S. 865, 82 S. Ct. 1031, 8 L. Ed. 2d 85 (1962). However, our observations were made in the context of a directed verdict based on the plaintiff's failure to prove damages. The USFL's [123] reliance upon Schwabe is, as the district court noted, "remarkably ironic" because the rationale of Schwabe would deny the USFL any damages at all. Opinion No. 16, 644 F. Supp. at 1053.

c. Proof of Antitrust Injury and Damages

We next consider whether the district court properly instructed the jury with respect to an antitrust plaintiff's burden of proving the amount of damages. HN21[] To recover treble damages under Section 4 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 15 (1982), an antitrust plaintiff must prove that its injury was, in fact, caused by the defendant's violation of the antitrust laws. Argus, 801 F.2d at 41; MCI Communications, 708 F.2d at 1161.

Judge Leisure instructed the jury as follows with respect to injury causation:

> Plaintiffs do not have to prove that the unlawful activity that the defendants allegedly engaged in was the sole cause of their injuries. Plaintiffs meet their burden if they show that the defendants' unlawful acts substantially contributed to their injuries, even though [124] other facts may have contributed significantly. An antitrust plaintiff is not required to show that the defendants' acts were a greater cause of the injury than other factors. Plaintiffs need only show that their injury to some degree resulted from defendants' violation.

(emphasis added). The USFL understandably does not challenge this instruction, which was consistent with established precedent. See Zenith Radio Corp. v. Hazeltine Research, Inc., 395 U.S. 100, 114 n.9, 89 S. Ct. 1562, 23 L. Ed. 2d 129 (1969); Litton Sys., Inc. v. AT&T Co., 700 F.2d 785, 823 n.49 (2d Cir. 1983), cert. denied, 464 U.S. 1073, 104 S. Ct. 984, 79 L. Ed. 2d 220 (1984). Rather, the USFL challenges Judge Leisure's instruction that the jury could award no damages or one dollar in damages if they found that they could not "separate out the amount of losses caused by [NFL misconduct] from the amount caused by other factors, including perfectly lawful competitive acts and including business decisions made by the [USFL] or the [USFL's] own mismanagement."

The USFL claims that this instruction was incorrect because the NFL should have [125] borne the burden of separating [*1378] out the amount of USFL losses caused by the NFL's wrongful acts from the amount caused by other factors such as the USFL's unsuccessful merger strategy. It is true that HN22[] once proof of injury causation has been established, courts have allowed antitrust plaintiffs considerable latitude in proving the amount of damages. Proof of amount of damages thus need not conform to a particular theory or model, see Locklin v. Day-Glo Color Corp., 429 F.2d 873, 880 (7th Cir. 1970) (citing Continental Ore Co. v. Union Carbide & Carbon Corp., 370 U.S. 690, 82 S. Ct. 1404, 8 L. Ed. 2d 777 (1962)), cert. denied, 400 U.S. 1020, 91 S. Ct. 582, 27 L. Ed. 2d 632 (1971), and exact proof of the amount of damages is not required. See J. Truett Payne Co. v. Chrysler Motors Corp., 451 U.S. 557, 566, 101 S. Ct. 1923, 68 L. Ed. 2d 442 (1981) (acceptance of "degree of uncertainty" in measure of antitrust damages is necessary because of difficulty of ascertaining "what plaintiff's situation would have [126] been in the absence of the defendant's antitrust violation"). An antitrust plaintiff must thus provide only sufficient evidence to support a "just and reasonable estimate" of damages. Bigelow v. RKO Radio Pictures, Inc., 327 U.S. 251, 264, 66 S. Ct. 574, 90 L. Ed. 652 (1946); see also Story Parchment Co. v. Paterson Parchment Paper Co., 282 U.S. 555, 563, 51 S. Ct. 248, 75 L. Ed. 544 (1931) (proof of antitrust damages sufficient "if the evidence show[s] the extent of the damages as a matter of just and reasonable inference, although the result be only approximate"). [27]

---

[27] Judge Leisure gave an instruction regarding the USFL's lightened burden of proving the amount of damages that was entirely consistent with these rules. Repeating nearly verbatim the instruction set forth in Judge Sand's Modern Federal Jury Instructions para. 79.02, at 79-57 (1986) (Instruction 79-26), Judge Leisure instructed the jury as follows:

> It might be difficult for you to measure the plaintiff[s'] damages in this case. However, the fact that it might be difficult to determine the amount of the plaintiffs' damages should not prevent you from awarding damages to plaintiffs. The law allows a party injured by conduct which violates the Sherman Act to collect damages even if the evidence does not reflect how those damages are to be calculated with mathematical precision.
>
> This does not mean, however, that you may determine the plaintiff[s'] damages on the basis of mere speculation or guesswork. Rather, you must look to the evidence presented to you and make a fair and reasonable estimate of the plaintiff[s'] damages based on the evidence.

Judge Leisure properly instructed the jury as follows on future damages:

> In this case plaintiffs are seeking not only to recover those damages they allege they have already suffered, but also to recover damages they claim they will suffer in the future as a result of the anticompetitive conduct of defendants that has already taken place and which may take place in the future.
>
> With regard to future damages, you are instructed that such damages are not recoverable if you find that the fact of their accrual is speculative or that their amount and nature is unprovable. On the other hand, if you find that you can make a fair and reasonable estimate of plaintiffs' future damages, you may award such damages as you find appropriate, keeping in mind that the damage award need not be calculated with mathematical precision.

[127] Whatever latitude is afforded antitrust plaintiffs as to proof of damages, however, is limited by the requirement that the damages awarded must be traced to some degree to unlawful acts. MCI Communications, 708 F.2d at 1161. [28] That latitude is thus circumscribed by the need for proof of causation. The Supreme Court emphasized this in Bigelow by relaxing the standard for proving amount of damages only after "proof of defendant['s] wrongful acts and their tendency to injure plaintiff['s] business, and from the evidence of the decline in prices, profits and values, not shown to be attributable to other causes." 327 U.S. at 264 (emphasis added).

[128] A plaintiff's proof of amount of damages thus must provide the jury with a reasonable basis upon which to estimate [*1379] the amount of its losses caused by other factors, such as management problems, a general recession or lawful factors. As the Seventh Circuit stated in MCI Communications:

> When a plaintiff improperly attributes all losses to a defendant's illegal acts, despite the presence of significant other factors, the evidence does not permit a jury to make a reasonable and principled estimate of the amount of damage. . . . To allow otherwise would force a defendant to pay treble damages for conduct that was determined to be entirely lawful.

708 F.2d at 1162-63. In MCI Communications, the court overturned a damages award based on a study that did not allow the jury to alter the award to reflect lawful competition from AT&T. Id. at 1163; see Farley Transp. Co. v. Santa Fe Trail Transp. Co., 786 F.2d 1342, 1352 (9th Cir. 1985) (court reversed jury award because of plaintiff's "utter failure to make any segregation between damages attributable to lawful competition and that attributable to [defendant's] [129] unlawful scheme"); Coleman Motor Co. v. Chrysler Corp., 525 F.2d 1338, 1353 (3d Cir. 1975) ("In the absence of any guidance in the record, we cannot permit a jury to speculate concerning the amount of losses resulting from unlawful, as opposed to lawful, competition."); Southern Pac. Communications v. AT&T, 556 F. Supp. at 1090 ("court must have a basis for assuring itself that other causes of plaintiffs' injury have been 'filtered out' of the damage claim").

The Supreme Court's decisions in Bigelow and Story Parchment thus do not shift the burden of proving the cause of damages from the plaintiff to the defendant. They simply restate the established principle that HN23[] where damages have been shown to be attributable to the defendant's wrongful conduct, but are uncertain in amount, the defendant bears the risk of those uncertainties.

4. The District Court's Denial of Injunctive Relief

Finally, the USFL claims that the district court should have granted sweeping injunctive relief under Section 16 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 26 [130] (1982). In particular, the USFL requested membership in the NFL, separation of the NFL into two leagues, each league being limited to one network, or a prohibition on the NFL from broadcasting its games in more than one afternoon time slot on Sunday. Judge Leisure held that the requested relief was unrelated to the monopolization of the market for major-league professional football verdict and not justified by the record as a whole.

The USFL contends that the jury's monopolization verdict compelled the district court to "pry open to competition [the] market that has been closed by defendants' illegal restraints." USFL Br. at 70 (quoting Zenith Radio, 395 U.S. at 133). However, this argument simply glosses over the critical fact that the jury did not find the NFL liable on any of the USFL's television-related claims. With regard to the findings implied by the monopolization verdict that the NFL engaged in predatory conduct through attempts to co-opt USFL owners, creation of a Supplemental Draft, or expansion in roster size, Judge Leisure denied relief on the ground that the USFL provided no evidence that such conduct was likely to continue or recur. The USFL [131] has not asked us to overturn that denial of relief.

---

[28] The USFL attempts to distinguish MCI Communications on the ground that, unlike the instant case, MCI Communications involved partial market foreclosure and thus "special proof problems." Even assuming that the instant case is a total foreclosure case, the Supreme Court stated in Zenith Radio that the same standards of proof apply whether there is "a partial or total exclusion from a market." 395 U.S. at 123.

Instead, the USFL seeks sweeping injunctive relief on the ground that the NFL's single league structure, in conjunction with television contracts with the three networks, creates an impenetrable barrier to entry by a competing league into the market of professional football. No matter what the jury found, however, such relief would not have been appropriate. First, Congress has authorized the NFL's single-league structure and its joint economic operations. Second, at the time the district court denied the relief, the NFL's contracts with the networks had expired. There was thus no "tie-up" of the three networks and no barrier to entry created by the "dilution effect." There was only free competition between the NFL's product and the USFL's product. Of course, the district court also properly rejected this claim in [*1380] view of the jury's outright rejection of all of the USFL's television-related claims.

What the USFL seeks is essentially a judicial restructuring of major-league professional football to allow it to enter. Because of the explicit congressional authorization in 1966 for the NFL-AFL merger and single-league [132] operation, the USFL does not attack the league structure directly. Instead, the USFL asks us to prevent networks from broadcasting, and fans from watching, NFL games in the hope that they will turn to the USFL. Absent a showing of an unlawful barrier to entry, however, new sports leagues must be prepared to make the investment of time, effort and money that develops interest and fan loyalty and results in an attractive product for the media. The jury in the present case obviously found that patient development of a loyal following among fans and an adherence to an original plan that offered long-run gains were lacking in the USFL. Instead, the USFL quickly changed to a strategy of competition with the NFL in the fall, hoping thereby to force a merger of a few USFL teams into the NFL. That led to a movement of USFL teams out of large television markets and a resultant reduction in value of USFL games to television. As USFL owner and negotiator Einhorn predicted, abandoning major television markets precluded the possibility of obtaining a network contract. The USFL hoped, however, that if a merger did not occur, a jury verdict in the instant litigation followed by a decree effectively [133] forcing a network to televise its product would save the day. Instead, the jury found that the failure of the USFL was not the result of the NFL's television contracts but of its own decision to seek entry into the NFL on the cheap.

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, we affirm the jury's verdict and the judgments entered thereon. We thus need not consider the NFL's conditional cross-appeal.

Affirmed.

End of Document

Nurse Midwifery Associates v. Hibbett

United States District Court for the Middle District of Tennessee, Nashville Division

March 14, 1988, Decided ; March 14, 1988, Entered

Docket No. 82-3208

Reporter

689 F. Supp. 799 *; 1988 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 9358 ; 1988-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P67,975

NURSE MIDWIFERY ASSOCIATES, ET AL. v. B.K. HIBBETT, M.D., ET AL.

Core Terms

conspiracy, plaintiffs', medical staff, Recommendation, alleged conspiracy, summary judgment, conspire, personal stake, staff, maternity, antitrust, privileges, agrees, competitors, pendent, ADOPTS, summary judgment motion, anti-competitive, intra-corporate, midwifery, centered, midwives, motive, insurance company, tying arrangement, anti trust law, entity, seller, state claims, conversations

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Workers' Compensation & SSDI > Administrative Proceedings > Fraud

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Genuine Disputes

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Materiality of Facts

HN1[] Workers' Compensation, Fraud

To survive a summary judgment motion in an antitrust case, a plaintiff must establish that there is a genuine issue of material fact as to whether the defendants entered into an illegal conspiracy that caused the plaintiffs to suffer a cognizable injury.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > General Overview

HN2[] Monopolies & Monopolization, Attempts to Monopolize

Section 1 of the Sherman Anti-Trust Act (the Act), 15 U.S.C.S. §§ 1-7, prohibits all contracts, combinations, or conspiracies in restraint of trade. Section 2 of the Act prohibits all combinations or conspiracies to monopolize. Because these activities cannot be performed by a single person acting alone, it is well established that two or more persons are necessary to perform an actionable contract, combination, or conspiracy under the Act. It is also well established that unilateral action, no matter what its motivation, does not violate the Act.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

HN3[] Monopolies & Monopolization, Conspiracy to Monopolize

A corporation cannot combine or conspire with itself, and the acts of a corporation alone, acting through its directors, officers, and employees, generally are not cognizable under the Sherman Anti-Trust Act, 15 U.S.C.S. §§1-7.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > General Overview

HN4[] Monopolies & Monopolization, Conspiracy to Monopolize

The Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit does not intend to recognize the existence of the independent personal stake exception in the Sixth Circuit.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > General Overview

HN5[] Monopolies & Monopolization, Conspiracy to Monopolize

An independent personal stake exists only when an employee of a corporation has an interest in an economic entity that is separate from and unrelated to the corporation by which he is employed, and when that employee stands to benefit from the anti-competitive action taken by the corporate employer. A mere potential or indirect motive would be too speculative a basis from which to infer an independent personal stake. Furthermore, the employee would have to possess the power to institute the anti-competitive policy for his corporation.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > General Overview

HN6[] Monopolies & Monopolization, Conspiracy to Monopolize

The power to institute an anti-competitive policy is a requisite element under the independent personal stake exception where applied.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Contracts Law > Types of Contracts > Joint Contracts

Business & Corporate Law > ... > Management Duties & Liabilities > Rights of Partners > Losses & Profits

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Joint Ventures

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > General Overview

HN7[] Types of Contracts, Joint Contracts

In partnerships or other joint arrangements in which persons who would otherwise be competitors pool their capital and share the risks of loss, the partnership is regarded as a single firm competing with other sellers in the market.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > General Overview

Healthcare Law > Healthcare Litigation > Antitrust Actions > Physicians

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Industry Practices > Federal Regulations > Antitrust Regulations

HN8[] Monopolies & Monopolization, Conspiracy to Monopolize

Physicians' joint arrangements to sell insurance, which is a different product from the medical services offered by physicians in their individual capacity, are single entities for antitrust analysis.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > General Overview

HN9[] Private Actions, Remedies

A private plaintiff may not recover damages simply by proving a violation of the antitrust laws. Rather, the plaintiff must demonstrate a causal connection between the antitrust violation and the damages suffered. The causal link must be proved as a matter of fact and with a fair degree of certainty. To be one of several causes is not enough.

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

Evidence > Types of Evidence > Circumstantial Evidence

International Trade Law > International Commerce & Trade > Exports & Imports > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > General Overview

HN10[] Conspiracy, Elements

Although a plaintiff may not present direct evidence of an alleged conspiracy, business behavior is admissible circumstantial evidence from which the fact finder may infer agreement. Conspiracy can be established by showing business behavior evidencing a unity of purpose or a common design and understanding, or a meeting of minds in an unlawful arrangement.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Energy & Utilities > State Regulation

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > General Overview

Evidence > Inferences & Presumptions > Inferences

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Trials > Judgment as Matter of Law > General Overview

HN11[] Energy & Utilities, State Regulation

On summary judgment, the inferences to be drawn from the underlying facts must be viewed in the light most favorable to the nonmoving party. However, antitrust law limits the range of permissible inferences from ambiguous evidence. Thus, conduct as consistent with permissible competition as with illegal conspiracy does not, standing alone, support an inference of antitrust conspiracy. To survive a motion for summary judgment or for a directed verdict, a plaintiff seeking damages must present evidence that tends to exclude the possibility that the alleged conspirators acted independently. A plaintiff, in other words, must show that the inference of conspiracy is reasonable in light of the competing inferences of independent action or collusive action that could not have harmed plaintiff.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > General Overview

Healthcare Law > Business Administration & Organization > Covenants not to Compete > General Overview

HN12[] Monopolies & Monopolization, Conspiracy to Monopolize

A conspiracy may be found when one party acquiesces in the anti-competitive demand of another, even if the agreement is obtained through coercion.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

HN13[] Summary Judgment, Entitlement as Matter of Law

If the nonmoving party's innocent explanation of the questioned conduct is plausible and more logical than a concerted action theory, summary judgment against the moving party is appropriate.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > General Overview

Healthcare Law > Healthcare Litigation > Antitrust Actions > Facilities

Healthcare Law > Healthcare Litigation > Antitrust Actions > General Overview

Healthcare Law > Business Administration & Organization > Covenants not to Compete > General Overview

HN14[] Monopolies & Monopolization, Conspiracy to Monopolize

The federal courts consistently have recognized that mere contacts and communications, or the mere opportunity to conspire, among antitrust defendants is insufficient evidence from which to infer an anti-competitive conspiracy to deny hospital privileges.

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

Healthcare Law > Healthcare Litigation > Antitrust Actions > Facilities

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > General Overview

Healthcare Law > ... > Actions Against Facilities > Agency Relationships > General Overview

Healthcare Law > ... > Actions Against Facilities > Agency Relationships > Respondeat Superior

HN15[] Conspiracy, Elements

Under the majority rule establishing the requisite elements for proving antitrust conspiracy by circumstantial evidence of parallel business activity, a plaintiff must show that (1) the alleged conspirators' business activities constituted parallel conduct; (2) the alleged conspirators had a motivation to enter into a conspiracy; and (3) the actions taken were contrary to the alleged conspirators' individual economic interests.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

Healthcare Law > Healthcare Litigation > Antitrust Actions > Facilities

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > Per Se Rule

Healthcare Law > Business Administration & Organization > Covenants not to Compete > General Overview

HN16[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

The elements of a per se illegal tying arrangement are: 1) that there are two separate and distinct products; 2) that the seller has sufficient economic power in the tying product market; and 3) that the tying involves a not insubstantial amount of commerce. Moreover, under the "rule of reason" analysis, another element is added -- that the tying arrangement had anti-competitive effects in the marketplace.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

HN17[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Tying Arrangements

Market power may be proven by showing that the firm offers a unique product that competitors are not able to offer. Where market power can be demonstrated by the uniqueness of a particular product, market dominance is not required. For antitrust purposes, the tying product's uniqueness is established by determining whether the seller has the power, within the market for the tying product, to require purchasers to accept burdensome terms that could not be exacted in a completely competitive market. In short, the question is whether the seller has some advantage not shared by his competitors in the market for the tying product.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

HN18[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Tying Arrangements

Uniqueness only can be established by showing either (1) a cost advantage on the part of the seller, or (2) a characteristic of the tying product that significantly differentiates it from that which competitors could offer if they so elected. A special advantage must be shown to establish uniqueness and economic power.

Judges: [1] John T. Nixon, United States District Judge.

Opinion by: NIXON

Opinion

[*802] MEMORANDUM

JOHN T. NIXON, UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE

The Court has received the Report and Recommendation issued by the Magistrate on July 31, 1987, concerning motions for summary judgment filed by each of the defendants in this case. Plaintiffs and certain defendants have filed written objections to the Report and Recommendation. Under Rule 72(b) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, the Court must make a de novo determination of all matters to which the parties object. In its determination, the Court may adopt, modify, or reject any of the Magistrate's proposed findings or recommendations.

This is an antitrust action for injunctive relief and damages based upon sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Anti-Trust Act ("the Act"), 15 U.S.C. §§ 1-7, and pendent state law claims. The plaintiffs are: two nurse midwives, Susan Sizemore and Victoria Henderson; their business partnership, Nurse Midwifery Associates ("NMA"); their physician associate, Dr. Darrell Martin; and several NMA clients. The defendants are: Vanderbilt Hospital ("Vanderbilt"); Hendersonville Community Hospital ("HCH"); Dr. Conrad Shackleford, a member of the pediatric staff at HCH; Southern Hills Hospital [2] ("SHH"); Drs. Stephen Melkin, Harry Baer, and George Andrews, members of the obstetrics staff at SHH; State Volunteer Mutual Insurance Company ("SVMIC"); and Dr. B.K. Hibbett, a member of the obstetrics staff at Baptist Hospital in Nashville, and also a member of the SVMIC board of directors. Broadly stated, plaintiffs claim that the defendant doctors, hospitals, and insurance company engaged in various contracts, combinations and conspiracies that unreasonably restrained trade in violation of section 1 of the Act, and attempted to monopolize trade in violation of section 2 of the Act. Plaintiffs allege that defendants intended to prevent NMA from operating a private practice to provide nurse midwifery services at hospitals in Davidson County and Hendersonville, Tennessee, thus putting NMA out of business.

Having reviewed the record, including the Report and Recommendation, the objections thereto, and the responses to those objections, the Court ADOPTS the Magistrate's extensive findings of fact and incorporates them into this Memorandum.

HN1[] To survive a summary judgment motion in an antitrust case, a plaintiff "must establish that there is a genuine issue of material fact" as to whether [3] the defendants "entered into an illegal conspiracy that caused [the plaintiffs] to suffer a cognizable injury." Matsushita Electric Industrial Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 585-86, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538, 106 S. Ct. 1348 (1986) (citing, inter alia, Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(e)). With this standard in mind, the Court now considers the Magistrate's recommendation as to each allegation and makes a de novo determination of recommendations to which objections have been filed.

1. Conspiracy Among Vanderbilt and Members of its Medical Faculty

Based on the facts set out in the Report and Recommendation, plaintiffs allege that Vanderbilt should be held liable for conspiring with members of its medical faculty to [*803] deny plaintiff nurse midwives medical staff privileges at that hospital. The Magistrate recommended that all allegations of conspiracy among Vanderbilt and any members of its full-time faculty be dismissed. For the reasons stated below, the Court ADOPTS the Magistrate's recommendation and reasoning as to this claim.

HN2[] Section 1 of the Act prohibits all contracts, combinations, or conspiracies in restraint of trade. Section 2 of the Act prohibits all combinations or conspiracies to monopolize. Because these [4] activities cannot be performed by a single person acting alone, it is well established that two or more persons are necessary to perform an actionable contract, combination, or conspiracy under the Act. See, e.g., 2 Kintner, Federal Antitrust Law § 9.7 (1980). It is also well established that unilateral action, no matter what its motivation, does not violate the Act. See Monsanto Co. v. Spray-Rite Service Corp., 465 U.S. 752, 761, 79 L. Ed. 2d 775, 104 S. Ct. 1464 (1984); United States v. Colgate & Co., 250 U.S. 300, 63 L. Ed. 992, 39 S. Ct. 465 (1919).

HN3[] A corporation cannot combine or conspire with itself, and the acts of a corporation alone, acting through its directors, officers, and employees, generally are not cognizable under the Act. See Copperweld Corp. v. Independence Tube Corp., 467 U.S. 752, 769, 81 L. Ed. 2d 628, 104 S. Ct. 2731 (1984). If this were not the rule, every decision of a corporation on pricing, marketing, and customer relations would be the result of a conspiracy actionable under the Act.

In Weiss v. York Hospital, 745 F.2d 786, 816-17 (3d Cir. 1984), cert denied, 470 U.S. 1060, 84 L. Ed. 2d 836, 105 S. Ct. 1777 (1985), the Third Circuit held that a medical staff of a hospital cannot conspire with the hospital. The Court stated:

> Finally, we deal with the plaintiff's [5] assertion that the district court erred in charging the jury that the hospital could not conspire with its medical staff. The district court found that the medical staff was an unincorporated division of the hospital, and as such the court determined that the two could not conspire. Although we do not necessarily agree with the district court's characterization of the medical staff as an unincorporated division of the hospital, we agree with its basic conclusion that, with respect to the issues in this case, the hospital could not, as a matter of law, conspire with the medical staff. The medical staff was empowered to make staff privilege decisions on behalf of the hospital. As such, with regard to these decisions, the medical staff operated as an officer of a corporation would in relation to the corporation. Although the members of the medical staff had independent economic interests in competition with each other, the staff as an entity had no interest in competition with the hospital. Accordingly, we conclude that the district court correctly charged the jury that there could not be a conspiracy between the hospital and the medical staff.

See also McMorris v. Williamsport Hospital, [6] 597 F. Supp. 899, 914 (M.D. Pa. 1984). Likewise, Vanderbilt argues that plaintiffs' claim must fail because they allege only intra-corporate conspiracy.

Plaintiffs argue in response that Weiss states merely that a medical staff cannot conspire with a hospital where the staff has no interest in competition with the hospital. Plaintiffs argue that the individual members of the medical faculty had an "independent personal stake" separate from Vanderbilt's and, thus, could conspire with the hospital. Plaintiffs cite the only known case finding the possibility of an independent personal stake in a hospital privileges case, Robinson v. Magovern, 521 F. Supp. 842 (W.D. Pa. 1981), aff'd, 688 F.2d 824 (3d Cir.), cert. denied, 459 U.S. 971, 74 L. Ed. 2d 283, 103 S. Ct. 302 (1982). There, the court found that a conspiracy between a hospital and the head of its surgery department would be possible where "the officer, agent or employee has an independent, personal stake in achieving the object of the conspiracy." Id. at 907.

The head of the hospital surgery department in Robinson also conducted a private surgical practice, which in that court's view [*804] provided an independent personal stake. Plaintiffs [7] argue that, likewise, Vanderbilt's medical staff maintained private practices in addition to their duties at the hospital.

The independent personal stake exception relied upon by plaintiffs has never been adopted by the Sixth Circuit, which has expressed disfavor with the exception in the only two instances in which it has been argued to that court. In Smith v. Northern Michigan Hospitals, 703 F.2d 942 (6th Cir. 1983), the court found that the individual hospital emergency room staff personnel did not have an independent personal stake separate from the hospital, but that even if they did, "it is doubtful that we would follow the analysis" of the independent personal stake exception. Id. at 951 n.17.

In Potters Medical Center v. City Hospital Association, 800 F.2d 568 (6th Cir. 1986), the court went even further in voicing its reluctance to adopt the exception. In Potters, plaintiffs alleged that the hospital's staff attorney and its internal medicine department chairman had conspired with each other and with the hospital in violation of the Act. The staff attorney also owned an interest in a construction company that did work for the hospital, and the staff physician [8] also received revenue from the hospital's use of EKG equipment that he owned. The plaintiffs in Potters argued that these interests gave these defendants an independent personal stake in harming plaintiffs and in furthering the alleged monopolistic goals of the hospital. The court stated:

> Although several courts have recognized the "independent personal stake" exception to the rule that officers and agents lack capacity to conspire with their corporation, . . . this circuit has never endorsed the exception. In fact, this court has noted the "rather substantial policy reasons for not adopting such an exception."

Id. at 573 (citing Smith, 703 F.2d at 950 n.15); see Note, "Conspiring Entities" Under Section 1 of the Sherman Act, 95 Harv. L. Rev. 661 (1981-82) (discussing policy considerations bearing on the intra-corporate conspiracy doctrine).

Given the clear language in Potters, this Court is constrained to agree with the Magistrate that HN4[] the Sixth Circuit does not intend to recognize the existence of the independent personal stake exception in this circuit. In the absence of that recognition, allegations of intra-corporate conspiracy against Vanderbilt must [9] be dismissed. [1]

The Court further agrees with the Magistrate that even if the Sixth Circuit were to recognize this exception, plaintiffs' argument still would fail. As the exception is applied elsewhere, HN5[] an independent personal stake exists only when an employee of a corporation has an interest in an economic entity that is separate from and unrelated to the corporation by which he is employed, and when that employee stands to benefit from the anti-competitive action taken by the corporate employer. See, e.g., H & B Equipment Co. v. International Harvester Co., 577 F.2d 239, 244 (5th Cir. 1978). A mere potential or indirect motive would be too speculative a basis from which to infer an independent personal stake. Potters, 800 F.2d at 573; Smith, 703 F.2d at 951. Furthermore, the employee would have to possess the power to institute the anti-competitive policy for his corporation. Potters, 800 F.2d at 573; see also Greenville [10] Publishing Co. v. Daily Reflector, Inc., 496 F.2d 391, 399-400 (4th Cir. 1974).

Under the facts as stated in the Report and Recommendation, the success of the corporate entity, Vanderbilt, depends upon the success of the individual doctors, and vice versa. Because the success of the clinic practice of the individuals is so closely tied to that of Vanderbilt itself, the Court agrees with the Magistrate that any other possible motive would be too speculative to form the basis of an independent personal stake, even if that exception were recognized by the Sixth Circuit. In this [*805] regard, the alleged independent personal stake of the physicians at Vanderbilt is similar to those rejected by the courts in H & B Equipment, 577 F.2d at 239, and Wahl v. Rexnord, Inc., 481 F. Supp. 573 (D.N.J. 1979), rev'd on other grounds, 624 F.2d 1169 (3d Cir. 1980) (no conspiracy between corporation and its president, who held a patent licensed by the corporation). In addition, the Court further agrees with the Magistrate that Vanderbilt's medical staff by-laws, which required non-physicians applying for the medical staff to be employees of Vanderbilt with faculty appointments in the School [11] of Medicine, were not the cause in fact of plaintiffs' alleged injuries. In any case, the by-laws were, at most, the product of an intra-corporate conspiracy. Accordingly, the Court ADOPTS the recommendation to enter summary judgment for defendant Vanderbilt on this claim, and hereby DISMISSES plaintiffs' allegation of conspiracy among Vanderbilt and any members of its medical staff.

2. Conspiracy Between HCH and Dr. Shackleford

---

[1] This Court's earlier determination to the contrary in Nurse Midwifery Associates v. B.K. Hibbett, 549 F. Supp. 1185, 1189-90 (M.D. Tenn. 1982), was rendered before the Sixth Circuit's pronouncements in Smith and Potters.

Plaintiffs allege that defendants HCH and Dr. Shackleford should be held liable for conspiring to deny plaintiff midwives privileges at that hospital. The Magistrate recommended that all allegations of conspiracy between HCH and Dr. Shackleford or any other member of HCH's medical staff be dismissed.

The facts presented indicate, at most, an intra-corporate conspiracy between these defendants. As noted above, the unilateral actions of a corporation acting through its employees generally do not constitute a conspiracy under the Act, see Copperweld, 467 U.S. at 752; Weiss, 745 F.2d at 786, and the Sixth Circuit does not recognize the independent personal stake exception to this general rule, see Potters, 800 F.2d at 568. In addition, even if [12] the exception were available, the Court again agrees with the Magistrate that this claim would fail. Although defendant Shackleford's private practice arguably may have given him an independent personal stake in achieving the object of the alleged conspiracy, the facts do not show that he possessed or exercised HN6[] the power to institute an anti-competitive policy for HCH, a requisite element under the exception where applied. See, e.g., Potters, 800 F.2d at 573; Greenville Publishing, 496 F.2d at 391. Therefore, the Court hereby ADOPTS the Magistrate's recommendation to enter summary judgment for defendants HCH and Dr. Shackleford on this allegation, and DISMISSES plaintiffs' claim of conspiracy between HCH and Dr. Shackleford or any other member of HCH's medical staff.

3. Conspiracy Among SHH and Drs. Melkin, Baer, and Andrews

Plaintiffs allege that defendants SHH, Melkin, Baer, and Andrews should be held liable for conspiring to deny plaintiff nurse midwives privileges at that hospital. The Magistrate recommended that all allegations of conspiracy among SHH and its employees, including Melkin, Baer, and Andrews, be dismissed.

Again, the facts indicate, at most, [13] merely an intra-corporate conspiracy, which is not cognizable under the Act in this circuit. See Copperweld, 467 U.S. at 752. Even if the private medical practices of the individual defendant doctors arguably gave them an independent personal stake in the object of the alleged conspiracy, this exception is not available to plaintiffs. Potters, 800 F.2d at 568. In any case, the claim would fail because the individual defendants did not possess the power to effect an anti-competitive policy at SHH. Therefore, the Court ADOPTS the Magistrate's recommendation to enter summary judgment for defendants SHH and Drs. Melkin, Baer, and Andrews on this claim. Accordingly, the Court DISMISSES plaintiffs' allegations of conspiracy among SHH and Drs. Melkin, Baer, and Andrews, or any other member of SHH's medical staff.

4. Conspiracy Between SVMIC and Dr. Hibbett

Plaintiffs further allege an illegal conspiracy among principals at SVMIC, a mutual insurance company, and between SVMIC and Dr. Hibbett, to deny plaintiff Dr. Martin's renewal of his medical malpractice [*806] insurance coverage. The Magistrate recommended that all allegations of conspiracy between SVMIC and Dr. Hibbett, a member [14] of the board of directors of SVMIC, or any other board member, be dismissed, along with all allegations regarding SVMIC's decision not to renew Dr. Martin's insurance in 1980.

The Magistrate reasoned that the acts of SVMIC and Dr. Hibbett were merely intra-corporate, and not the products of concerted action under the Act. Although this Court earlier stated that SVMIC may be capable of concerted action because it is owned and operated exclusively by its physician policyholders, Nurse Midwifery, 549 F. Supp. at 1190, it is compelled to agree with the Magistrate in light of the nearly contemporaneous opinion in Arizona v. Maricopa County Medical Society, 457 U.S. 332, 73 L. Ed. 2d 48, 102 S. Ct. 2466 (1982). Discussing "partnerships or other joint arrangements in which persons who would otherwise be competitors pool their capital and share the risks of loss," the Supreme Court stated that HN7[] "in such joint ventures the partnership is regarded as a single firm competing with other sellers in the market." Id. at 356. The Court concluded that HN8[] physicians' joint arrangements to sell insurance, which is a "different product" from the medical services offered by physicians in their individual capacity, are single [15] entities for antitrust analysis. Id. Thus, in the instant case, SMVIC must be viewed as a single entity. It follows that actions between SMVIC and Dr. Hibbett, its board member and agent, are not cognizable as a conspiracy under the Act. See Copperweld, 467 U.S. at 752. Although this Court earlier ruled that a sufficient basis exists for finding an independent personal stake on the part of Dr. Hibbett in having Dr. Martin's malpractice insurance coverage cancelled, Nurse Midwifery, 549 F. Supp. at 1190, this fact is irrelevant in light of the Sixth Circuit's refusal to recognize that exception. See Potters, 800 F.2d at 568. In addition, the Court agrees with the Magistrate that plaintiffs have failed to show that Dr. Hibbett had the power to institute the decision to cancel the insurance.

The Court further agrees with the Magistrate that even if SVMIC's actions had violated the Act, plaintiffs' claim would fail. HN9[] A private plaintiff may not recover damages simply by proving a violation of the antitrust laws. Shreve Equipment, Inc. v. Clay Equipment Corp., 650 F.2d 101, 105 (6th Cir.), cert. denied, 454 U.S. 897, 70 L. Ed. 2d 213, 102 S. Ct. 397 (1981). Rather, the plaintiff must demonstrate [16] "a causal connection between the antitrust violation and the damages suffered." Id.; see also Englander Motors, Inc. v. Ford Motor Co., 267 F.2d 11, 15 (6th Cir. 1959). As the Sixth Circuit has observed, "the causal link must be proved as a matter of fact and with a fair degree of certainty . . . . To be one of several causes is not enough." Shreve Equipment, 650 F.2d at 105 (citations omitted).

The record establishes that despite the cancellation of malpractice insurance by SVMIC, Dr. Martin could have sought coverage from another carrier. Thus, Dr. Martin's alleged injury was caused by his own failure to seek other coverage, not by the cancellation. See McClure v. Undersea Industries, Inc., 671 F.2d 1287 (11th Cir. 1982), cert. denied, 460 U.S. 1037, 75 L. Ed. 2d 788, 103 S. Ct. 1427 (1983) (plaintiff equipment dealer was not injured by alleged boycott by manufacturer, because dealer was able to purchase equipment at comparable cost from other dealers). In addition, the record further establishes that Dr. Martin had decided to leave Tennessee before he had exhausted his appeal of the cancellation. Because the Court agrees that the alleged actions were unilateral, and in any case did not proximately [17] cause plaintiff's alleged injury, it hereby ADOPTS the Magistrate's recommendation to enter summary judgment for defendants SVMIC and Dr. Hibbett on this claim, and DISMISSES plaintiffs' allegations of conspiracy between SVMIC and Dr. Hibbett, or any other board member of SVMIC.

5. Conspiracy Between Vanderbilt and Dr. Hibbett

Plaintiffs allege that defendant Vanderbilt conspired with defendant Dr. Hibbett [*807] in July 1980 to deny plaintiff nurse midwives allied medical staff privileges at the hospital. The Magistrate recommended that summary judgment be denied on this claim, concluding that sufficient evidence exists to warrant submission of the question of conspiracy to a jury.

HN10[] Although plaintiffs have presented no direct evidence of this alleged conspiracy, "business behavior is admissible circumstantial evidence from which the fact finder may infer agreement." Theatre Enterprises, Inc. v. Paramount Film Distributing Corp., 346 U.S. 537, 540, 98 L. Ed. 273, 74 S. Ct. 257 (1954). Conspiracy can be established by showing business behavior evidencing "a unity of purpose or a common design and understanding, or a meeting of minds in an unlawful arrangement." American Tobacco Co. v. United States, 328 U.S. 781, 810, [18] 90 L. Ed. 1575, 66 S. Ct. 1125 (1946); see also Overseas Motors, Inc. v. Import Motors Ltd., 375 F. Supp. 499, 534-35 (E.D. Mich. 1974), aff'd, 519 F.2d 119 (6th Cir.), cert. denied, 423 U.S. 987, 46 L. Ed. 2d 304, 96 S. Ct. 395 (1975) ("In nearly all cases in which a combination or conspiracy is established through circumstantial evidence, the alleged conspirators have engaged in conduct which is in some sense congruent, compatible, or harmonious.").

HN11[] On summary judgment, the inferences to be drawn from the underlying facts must be viewed in the light most favorable to the nonmoving party. Matsushita Electric Industrial Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 587-88, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538, 106 S. Ct. 1348 (1986); see also Potters, 800 F.2d at 572. However, as the Supreme Court has stated:

> Antitrust law limits the range of permissible inferences from ambiguous evidence. . . . Thus, in Monsanto Co. v. Spray-Rite Service Corp., 465 U.S. 752, 104 S. Ct. 1464, 79 L. Ed. 2d 775 (1984), we held that conduct as consistent with permissible competition as with illegal conspiracy does not, standing alone, support an inference of antitrust conspiracy. Id., at 764, 104 S. Ct., at 1470 . . . . To survive a motion for summary judgment or for a directed [19] verdict, a plaintiff seeking damages . . . must present evidence "that tends to exclude the possibility" that the alleged conspirators acted independently. 465 U.S., at 764, 104 S. Ct., at > 1471. Respondents . . ., in other words, must show that the inference of conspiracy is reasonable in light of the competing inferences of independent action or collusive action that could not have harmed respondents.

Matsushita, 475 U.S. at 588; see also Potters, 800 F.2d at 572.

In the instant case, Vanderbilt may be found liable, under the theory of respondeat superior or vicarious liability, for any alleged violations of the Act attributable to actions of any medical staff member in conspiring with Dr. Hibbett. See American Society of Mechanical Engineers, Inc. v. Hydrolevel Corp., 456 U.S. 556, 565-68, 72 L. Ed. 2d 330, 102 S. Ct. 1935 (1982). HN12[] A conspiracy may be found when one party acquiesces in the anti-competitive demand of another, even if the agreement is obtained through coercion. See e.g. Albrecht v. Herald Co., 390 U.S. 145, 19 L. Ed. 2d 998, 88 S. Ct. 869 (1968). This appears to be the essence of plaintiffs' claim. Turning to the record in this case, the Court notes that plaintiffs rely upon two types of circumstantial evidence: [20] (1) evidence of an opportunity for Vanderbilt and Dr. Hibbett to conspire, and (2) evidence of a motive on Vanderbilt's part, namely to maintain its advantageous relationships with Baptist Hospital, at which Dr. Hibbett, an opponent of nurse midwifery, was an influential staff member, and with the local OB/GYN community generally, as discussed in the Report and Recommendation. Specifically, Dr. Hibbett allegedly had conversations with Vanderbilt staff members in July 1980 at which they may have conspired regarding denial of plaintiffs' privileges at Vanderbilt. Defendants deny ever having had conversations concerning plaintiffs or the subject of midwifery.

Having reviewed the record in light of the standard enunciated in Matsushita, the Court finds that the conduct alleged is as consistent with permissible individual conduct [*808] as with illegal conspiracy. Because the evidence does not tend to exclude the possibility of independent action, the inference of conspiracy between the defendants is not reasonable in light of the competing inferences.

First, Vanderbilt has asserted that plaintiffs' applications were denied for independent business reasons, namely the promotion of Vanderbilt [21] as a tertiary care center and a high quality medical education and residency training institution. Vanderbilt's explanation that nurse midwifery did not fit readily into this program is both plausible and logical. HN13[] If the nonmoving party's innocent explanation of the questioned conduct is plausible and more logical than a concerted action theory, summary judgment against the moving party is appropriate. Kreuzer v. American Academy of Periodontology, 237 U.S. App. D.C. 43, 735 F.2d 1479, 1488 (D.C. Cir. 1984).

Second, HN14[] the federal courts consistently have recognized that "mere contacts and communications, or the mere opportunity to conspire, among antitrust defendants is insufficient evidence from which to infer an anti-competitive conspiracy" to deny hospital privileges. Cooper v. Forsyth County Hospital Authority, Inc., 789 F.2d 278, 281 (4th Cir. 1986), cert. denied, 479 U.S. 972, 107 S. Ct. 474, 93 L. Ed. 2d 418 (1986); see, e.g., Kaczanowski v. Medical Center Hospital of Vermont, 612 F. Supp. 688, 695 (D.C. Vt. 1985). As the court stated in Venzie Corp. v. United States Mineral Products Co., 521 F.2d 1309, 1313 (3d Cir. 1975):

> While the jury was free to disregard the defendants' testimony that no agreement [22] of any kind was formulated during the course of these contacts, mere disbelief could not rise to the level of positive proof of agreement to sustain plaintiffs' burden of proving conspiracy. Furthermore, while proof of contacts between the [defendants] during the crucial summer period may demonstrate the opportunity for formation of a conspiracy, such an opportunity is significant only if other evidence permits an inference that an agreement did in fact exist. Thus, it is necessary to review plaintiffs' other evidence before the importance of the contacts between defendants and the inferences the jury might legitimately draw therefrom may be determined.

Given the independent business motive stated by Vanderbilt, the mere opportunity to conspire during the alleged conversations does not warrant the inference of conspiracy. Moreover, the Court notes that even if the alleged July 1980 conversations between Dr. Hibbett and the Vanderbilt staff members had concerned plaintiffs' applications, the decision to deny the applications, although announced in September 1980, appears to have been made earlier in June 1980, before the alleged conversations would have occurred. See Vanderbilt's [23] Memorandum in Support, at Exhibit 5.

For these reasons, the Court DOES NOT ADOPT the Magistrate's recommendation to deny defendants' motion. Accordingly, the Court ENTERS summary judgment for defendants on this claim, and DISMISSES plaintiffs' allegation of conspiracy between these defendants.

6. Conspiracy between SHH and HCH

Plaintiffs also allege that a conspiracy between SHH and HCH to deny plaintiff nurse midwives privileges at these hospitals can be inferred from their parallel business activity. The Magistrate recommended that these defendants' motion for summary judgment on this claim be denied because a genuine issue of material fact exists regarding the inference of a conspiracy.

The parties have not cited, and the Court has not found, any Sixth Circuit precedent establishing the requisite elements for proving antitrust conspiracy by circumstantial evidence of parallel business activity. However, HN15[] under the majority rule, which the Court adopts, the plaintiffs must show that (1) the alleged conspirators' business activities constituted parallel conduct; (2) the alleged conspirators had a motivation to enter into a conspiracy; and (3) the actions taken were contrary [24] to the alleged conspirators' individual economic interests. See, e.g., Kreuzer v. American Academy of Periodontology, 237 U.S. App. D.C. 43, 735 F.2d 1479, 1488 n.12 [*809] (D.C. Cir. 1984); Venzie Corp. v. United States Mineral Products Co., 521 F.2d 1309, 1314 (3d Cir. 1975); P. Areeda, Antitrust Law para. 1434c2 (1986). As noted earlier, these two hospitals may be found liable, under the theory of respondeat superior or vicarious liability, for any violations of the Act attributable to the actions of any members of their medical staffs. See American Society of Mechanical Engineers, Inc. v. Hydrolevel Corp., 456 U.S. 556, 565-68, 72 L. Ed. 2d 330, 102 S. Ct. 1935 (1982). Turning to the facts as summarized in the Report and Recommendation, the Court agrees with the Magistrate that sufficient genuine issues of material fact are presented to warrant denial of summary judgment. First, the two hospitals' actions were arguably parallel in that the hospitals were in similar situations and took strikingly similar actions within a short time of each other concerning the applications for privileges. Defendants contend that for such parallel behavior to be cognizable, plaintiffs must show "that the defendants were conscious [25] of each other's conduct and that their awareness was an element in their decisional process." Schoenkopf v. Brown & Williamson Tobacco Corp., 637 F.2d 205, 208 (3rd Cir. 1980). The Court concludes that because plaintiffs, in their application to SHH, described the events surrounding their applications at HCH, a sufficient showing has been made as to this element.

Second, plaintiffs have shown motivation to conspire on the part of the hospitals sufficient to survive a summary judgment motion. Plaintiffs' claim is that the hospitals intended to satisfy the objectives of certain members of their respective medical staffs not to allow plaintiffs to compete with local physicians. This contention is supported by evidence, discussed in the Magistrate's Report and Recommendation, of the decisionmaking process at the hospitals in denying the applications, in light of certain doctors' hostility toward midwifery and the hospitals' initial receptiveness to plaintiffs' proposals.

Third, the Court agrees with the Magistrate that the hospitals' actions arguably were against their individual economic interests. As the Magistrate noted, the anticipated yearly number of deliveries attributable to [26] plaintiffs' proposed practice would have increased significantly the hospitals' occupancy rates and, presumably, their revenues. Thus, the Court ADOPTS the Magistrate's recommendation and DENIES summary judgment to defendants SHH and HCH on this claim.

7. Tying by Vanderbilt

Plaintiffs contend that Vanderbilt engaged in a tying arrangement in violation of the Act by requiring its hospital maternity patients to use physician maternity services. According to plaintiffs, the "tying" product is in-hospital maternity services, and the "tied" product is physicians' services. The relevant geographic market alleged by plaintiffs is Davidson County and Hendersonville, Tennessee. The Magistrate recommended that Vanderbilt's motion for summary judgment on this claim be denied.

HN16[] The elements of a per se illegal tying arrangement are: 1) that there are two separate and distinct products; 2) that the seller has sufficient economic power in the tying product market; and 3) that the tying involves a "not insubstantial" amount of commerce. See, e.g., 2 Kintner, Federal Antitrust Law § 10.53. Moreover, under the "rule of reason" analysis, another element is added -- that the tying [27] arrangement had anti-competitive effects in the marketplace. See, e.g., Jefferson Parish Hospital District No. 2 v. Hyde, 466 U.S. 2, 80 L. Ed. 2d 2, 104 S. Ct. 1551 (1984). Thus, in order to establish an illegal tying arrangement under either the per se or the "rule of reason" analysis, plaintiffs first must establish that Vanderbilt had sufficient market power over in-hospital maternity services in Davidson County and Hendersonville to force patients to accept physicians' services. See, e.g., Hyde, 466 U.S. at 13-14.

HN17[] Market power may be proven by showing that the firm offers a unique product that competitors are not able to offer. Where market power can be demonstrated by the uniqueness of a particular product, [*810] market dominance is not required. United States v. Loew's, 371 U.S. 38, 45, 9 L. Ed. 2d 11, 83 S. Ct. 97 (1962).

For antitrust purposes, the tying product's uniqueness is established by determining > whether the seller has the power, within the market for the tying product, . . . to require purchasers to accept burdensome terms that could not be exacted in a completely competitive market. In short, the question is whether the seller has some advantage not shared by his competitors in the market for the tying product.

[28] United States Steel Corp. v. Fortner Enterprises, Inc. (Fortner II), 429 U.S. 610, 620, 51 L. Ed. 2d 80, 97 S. Ct. 861 (1977). The Court continued:

> Uniqueness confers economic power only when other competitors are in some way prevented from offering the distinctive product themselves. Such barriers may be legal, as in the case of patented and copyrighted products, . . . or physical, as when the product is land . . . . It is true that the barriers may also be economic, as when competitors are simply unable to produce the distinctive product profitably, but the uniqueness test in such situations is somewhat confusing since the real source of economic power is not the product itself but rather the seller's cost advantage in producing it.

Id. at 621 (quoting Fortner Enterprises, Inc. v. United States Steel Corp. (Fortner I), 394 U.S. 495, 505 n.2, 22 L. Ed. 2d 495, 89 S. Ct. 1252 (1969) (citations omitted)).

Thus, under Fortner II, HN18[] uniqueness only can be established by showing either "(1) a cost advantage on the part of the seller, or (2) a characteristic of the tying product that significantly differentiates it from that which competitors could offer if they so elected. A special advantage must be shown to establish uniqueness [29] and economic power." 2 Kintner, Federal Antitrust Law § 10.56.

Plaintiffs argue that, as of the date of the nurse midwives' applications, Vanderbilt was one of three hospitals in the relevant area that offered a unique obstetrical service, family centered maternity care. The other two hospitals were defendants HCH and SHH. Family centered maternity care requires a particular combination of facility utilization, obstetrical policies, and personnel. Only Vanderbilt, SHH, and HCH offered this particular combination of facilities, policies, and personnel in 1980 in the relevant geographic area. Thus, plaintiffs base their tying theory on the alleged uniqueness of family centered maternity care in this market.

However, plaintiffs have made no showing that other competitors were in some way prevented from offering family centered maternity care because of legal, physical, or economic barriers. In short, plaintiffs have shown no cost advantage to Vanderbilt or any characteristic of family centered maternity care that significantly differentiates it from that which competitors could offer if they so elected.

The record shows that two other hospitals, SHH and HCH, both provided this "unique" [30] product. While the record further shows that other hospitals with maternity units in the relevant area did not provide all the components that plaintiffs allege are necessary for family centered maternity care, plaintiffs have not offered any evidence as to why these other hospitals did not. Evidence that other hospitals were prevented from offering this product is critical to plaintiffs' claim. In the absence of proof, it cannot be assumed that these hospitals desired to provide the product but for one reason or another were thwarted from doing so. Hospitals make their own decisions concerning room usage, policies, and personnel. No reason has been presented to believe that the other hospitals in the geographic area could not adopt these policies and, thus, also offer family centered maternity care. Absent such proof, uniqueness has not been established. Plaintiffs, therefore, have failed to present facts to show that Vanderbilt possessed sufficient market power, a requisite element under the theory of illegal tying. For this reason, the Court DOES NOT [*811] ADOPT the Magistrate's recommendation to deny defendant Vanderbilt's motion. Accordingly, the Court ENTERS summary judgment for defendant [31] Vanderbilt on this claim, and DISMISSES this claim from this action.

8. Pendent State Claims

Because defendants Melkin, Baer, Andrews, and Shackleford were acting, at all relevant times in this action, in their representative capacities as agents of the medical staffs of their respective hospitals, and are thus incapable as a matter of law of conspiring with those hospitals, the Court hereby DISMISSES these individuals from this action. There have been no allegations that these defendants conspired with anyone outside their respective hospitals. In addition, the Court DISMISSES from this action defendants SVMIC, Dr. Hibbett, and Vanderbilt because all federal claims against them have been decided in their favor.

The Court notes that plaintiffs also have alleged in their complaint various state law tort claims by way of the Court's pendent jurisdiction. Although the merits of these claims have not been argued in the motions for summary judgment or addressed in the Magistrate's Report and Recommendation, to the extent that all federal claims are dismissed as to a defendant this Court declines to exercise jurisdiction to hear any pendent state law claims against that defendant, and [32] hereby DISMISSES such claims without prejudice. United Mine Workers v. Gibbs, 383 U.S. 715, 726, 16 L. Ed. 2d 218, 86 S. Ct. 1130 (1966); Carnegie-Mellon University v. Cohill, 484 U.S. 343, at 350, 108 S. Ct. 614, 98 L. Ed. 2d 720 (1988) ("when the federal-law claims have dropped out of the lawsuit in its early stages and only state-law claims remain, the federal court should decline the exercise of jurisdiction") (citation omitted).

SUMMARY

Plaintiffs, a professional partnership created to provide nurse midwife services, its principals, an associated physician, and certain clients, brought this action against defendant hospitals, physicians, and insurance company, seeking injunctive relief and damages for alleged violations of sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Anti-Trust Act. Plaintiffs generally contend that defendants were involved in conspiracies, combinations, and contracts designed to prevent the operation of a private practice to provide nurse midwifery services at hospitals in Davidson County and Hendersonville, Tennessee.

Having reviewed the file and the written objections of all parties to the Magistrate's Report and Recommendation, the Court hereby makes the following de novo determinations:

[33] (1) The Court ENTERS summary judgment for defendant Vanderbilt Hospital ("Vanderbilt") as to plaintiffs' allegation of conspiracy among Vanderbilt and any members of its medical staff, and DISMISSES this claim from this action;

(2) The Court ENTERS summary judgment for defendants Hendersonville Community Hospital ("HCH") and Dr. Shackleford as to plaintiffs' allegation of conspiracy between them or any other member of HCH's medical staff, and DISMISSES this claim from this action;

(3) The Court ENTERS summary judgment for defendants Southern Hills Hospital ("SHH") and Drs. Melkin, Baer, and Andrews as to plaintiffs' allegation of conspiracy among them or any other members of the SHH medical staff, and DISMISSES this claim from this action;

(4) The Court ENTERS summary judgment for defendants State Volunteer Mutual Insurance Company ("SVMIC") and Dr. Hibbett as to plaintiffs' allegation of conspiracy between them or any other member of the SVMIC board of directors, and DISMISSES this claim from this action;

(5) The Court ENTERS summary judgment for defendants Vanderbilt and Dr. Hibbett as to plaintiffs' allegation of conspiracy between them, and DISMISSES this claim from this case;

[34] (6) The Court DENIES summary judgment for defendants SHH and HCH as to [*812] plaintiffs' allegation of conspiracy between them;

(7) The Court ENTERS summary judgment for defendant Vanderbilt as to plaintiffs' allegation of engaging in a tying arrangement, and DISMISSES this claim from this case;

(8) The Court DISMISSES all pendent state claims against defendants Vanderbilt, SVMIC, and Drs. Shackleford, Melkin, Baer, Andrews, and Hibbett, and hereby DISMISSES these defendants from this action;

(9) This action shall proceed to trial on September 12, 1988, on plaintiffs' claim of conspiracy between SHH and HCH, and any pendent state claims alleged against them.

An Order will be entered simultaneously with this Memorandum.

This the 14th day of March, 1988.

ORDER

In accordance with the Memorandum filed herewith, the Court makes the following determinations:

(1) the Court ENTERS summary judgment for defendant Vanderbilt Hospital ("Vanderbilt") as to plaintiffs' allegation of conspiracy among Vanderbilt and any members of its medical staff, and DISMISSES this claim from this action;

(2) the Court ENTERS summary judgment for defendants Hendersonville Community Hospital ("HCH") and Dr. Shackleford [35] as to plaintiffs' allegation of conspiracy between them or any other member of HCH's medical staff, and DISMISSES this claim from this action;

(3) the Court ENTERS summary judgment for defendants Southern Hills Hospital ("SHH") and Drs. Melkin, Baer, and Andrews as to plaintiffs' allegation of conspiracy among them or any other members of the SHH medical staff, and DISMISSES this claim from this action;

(4) the Court ENTERS summary judgment for defendants State Volunteer Mutual Insurance Company ("SVMIC") and Dr. Hibbett as to plaintiffs' allegation of conspiracy between them or any other member of the SVMIC board of directors, and DISMISSES this claim from this action;

(5) the Court ENTERS summary judgment for defendants Vanderbilt and Dr. Hibbett as to plaintiffs' allegation of conspiracy between them, and DISMISSES this claim from this case;

(6) the Court DENIES summary judgment for defendants SHH and HCH as to plaintiffs' allegation of conspiracy between them;

(7) the Court ENTERS summary judgment for defendant Vanderbilt as to plaintiffs' allegation of engaging in a tying arrangement, and DISMISSES this claim from this case;

(8) the Court DISMISSES all pendent state claims against [36] defendants Vanderbilt, SVMIC, and Drs. Shackleford, Melkin, Baer, Andrews, and Hibbett, and hereby DISMISSES these defendants from this action;

(9) This action shall proceed to trial on September 12, 1988, on plaintiffs' claim of conspiracy between SHH and HCH, and any pendent state claims alleged against them.

Entered this the 14th day of March, 1988.

Bobrowicz v. Chicago

Appellate Court of Illinois, First District, Third Division

March 16, 1988, Filed

No. 86-3163

Reporter

168 Ill. App. 3d 227 *; 522 N.E.2d 663 ; 1988 Ill. App. LEXIS 316 ; 119 Ill. Dec. 1 ****

ALFONS W. BOBROWICZ, Indiv. and on behalf of all residents of unincorporated areas of the Metropolitan Sanitary District of Greater Chicago similarly situated, Plaintiffs-Appellees and Cross-Appellants, v. THE CITY OF CHICAGO, Defendant-Appellant and Cross-Appellee

Prior History: [1] Appeal from the Circuit Court of Cook County; the Hon. Anthony J. Scotillo, Judge, presiding.

Disposition: Order affirmed.

Core Terms

municipality, surcharge, consumers, purchasing, residents, sanitary district, unincorporated area, furnish water, municipal corporation, nonresidents, village, rates, territory, sales, incorporated town, discriminatory, summary judgment, private entity, sell water, contracts, township, common law duty, rate charged, consumption, Antitrust, charges, reasonable rate, trial court, meter rate, indirect

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Governments > Local Governments > Boundaries

Governments > State & Territorial Governments > Property > Water Rights

HN1[] Local Governments, Boundaries

See Ill. Rev. Stat. 1985, ch. 42, par. 348.

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

HN2[] Legislation, Interpretation

There is no rule of construction, which authorizes a court to declare that the legislature did not mean what the plain language of the statute imports.

Energy & Utilities Law > Antitrust Issues > General Overview

Governments > Courts > Common Law

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Energy & Utilities > State Regulation

Energy & Utilities Law > Utility Companies > Rates > General Overview

Governments > Public Improvements > General Overview

HN3[] Energy & Utilities Law, Antitrust Issues

When a municipal corporation owns and operates a water system for the purpose of selling water to consumers, it is acting in a business capacity and is generally to be treated as if it were a private utility company. At common law, such an enterprise, because it had a monopoly on the service provided in the area, was prohibited from charging exorbitant rates and was required to serve all of its consumers without unreasonable discrimination in rates or manner of service. This common law duty still operates to prevent public utilities from acting in an unreasonable or discriminatory manner.

Civil Rights Law > Protection of Rights > Public Versus Private Discrimination

Energy & Utilities Law > Utility Companies > Rates > General Overview

Governments > Local Governments > Ordinances & Regulations

HN4[] Protection of Rights, Public Versus Private Discrimination

The test to determine whether the rates charged by a privately owned municipality are discriminatory is based on a consideration of such factors as differences in the amount of the product used, the time when used, the purpose for which used, or any other relevant factors reflecting a difference in costs. Rates that are reasonably related to differences in the costs of providing service are not unreasonably discriminatory.

Energy & Utilities Law > Utility Companies > Rates > General Overview

Governments > Public Improvements > General Overview

HN5[] Utility Companies, Rates

The court has held that when it comes to the extent of protection under the common law right, consumers of municipally owned utilities are just as completely protected from exorbitant rates and unjust discrimination as the consumers are under the Public Utilities Act, Ill. Rev. Stat. 1985, ch. 111 2/3, par. 1 -- 101 et seq.

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Purchasers > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Purchasers > Indirect Purchasers

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Class Attorneys > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Special Proceedings > Class Actions > Voluntary Dismissals

HN6[] Class Actions, Prerequisites for Class Action

The Illinois Antitrust Act (Act), Ill. Rev. Stat. 1985, ch. 38, par. 60-7 clearly allows an indirect purchaser and others similarly situated the right to damages. The Act states that no person other than the Attorney General of this State shall be authorized to maintain a class action in any court of this State for indirect purchasers asserting claims under this Act.

Counsel: Judson H. Miner, Corporation Counsel, of Chicago (Ruth Moskovitch, Dodge Wells, and Robin Schulberg, Assistant Corporation Counsel, of counsel), for appellant.

Kevin M. Forde, of Chicago, for appellees.

Judges: JUSTICE McNAMARA delivered the opinion of the court. RIZZI and FREEMAN, JJ., concur.

Opinion by: McNAMARA

Opinion

[*229] [664] [*2] Defendant, the City of Chicago, appeals from an order of the trial court granting summary judgment in favor of plaintiff Alfons Bobrowicz and all members of the class represented by plaintiff, in their action challenging the surcharge imposed by defendant on the sale of water to private entities and individuals residing in unincorporated areas of the Metropolitan Sanitary District. In a cross-appeal, plaintiffs appeal from the granting of summary judgment in favor of defendant on an equal protection claim and the dismissal of the last count of their complaint charging that the practices of defendant violate the Illinois Antitrust Act (Ill. Rev. Stat. 1985, ch. 38, par. 60 -- 1 et seq.).

Defendant owns and operates a waterworks system known as the Metropolitan Sanitary [2] District of Greater Chicago (MSD). The MSD was created by the Chicago Sanitary District Act of 1889 (Ill. Rev. Stat. 1889, ch. 42, par. 320 et seq.), and since that time has been the main waterworks system for the greater metropolitan area of Chicago. The MSD procures its supply of water from Lake Michigan and protects the lak from sewage pollution with its sewage facilities. Defendant sells water to approximately 45 suburban municipalities within the MSD. Defendant also sells water to four railroads, a private utility company and approximately 300 private customers. The municipalities which purchase water from defendant supply water to their own residents, and often sell water to other municipalities or individual consumers outside their corporate limits.

Section 26 of the Sanitary District Act imposes a price restriction on sales of water to cities, villages, townships, incorporated towns or other municipal corporations. (Ill. Rev. Stat. 1985, ch. 42, par. 348.) Before defendant will sell water to a municipality, the purchaser is required to sign a water service contract which, until 1985, required the municipality to report the amount of water it delivered to consumers [3] in unincorporated areas and to pay defendant a 50% surcharge above the city meter rate for such water. Defendant also required that the purchasing municipality impose these same conditions on any other municipality to which it sold water. Defendant eliminated the surcharge provision from contracts with municipal customers entered into or renewed after June 1982. Defendant also unilaterally cancelled the [665] [*3] surcharge provision in all existing contracts as of May 1, 1985.

The representative plaintiff resides in an unincorporated area of Worth Township, in Cook County. This property is located within the boundaries of the MSD. Plaintiff purchases water from the City of Palos Heights, which receives its water from Alsip. Alsip purchases its water from defendant. During the period of time relevant to this suit, [*230] plaintiff paid the 50% surcharge to Palos Heights and that surcharge was eventually remitted to defendant.

Plaintiff filed this action in 1984 alleging that defendant's imposition of a 50% surcharge violated section 26 of the Sanitary District Act, and the common law duty of a utility to charge reasonable rates. Count II of the complaint alleged that defendant's 50% [4] surcharge on water furnished for consumption by the plaintiff class violated their constitutional rights to equal protection of the law. Count III alleged that the surcharge constituted illegal monopolization and price discrimination and thus violated the Illinois Antitrust Act. Ill. Rev. Stat. 1985, ch. 38, par. 60 -- 1 et seq.

The trial court certified a plaintiff class consisting of all water consumers located outside Chicago, but within the MSD, who consumed water supplied either directly or indirectly by Chicago for which Chicago was paid a surcharge. As a result of this class definition, those represented include all private entities or individuals who purchase water from defendant, and all individuals who purchase water from a suburban municipality which either purchases from defendant or from another municipality which purchases from defendant, who pay a surcharge.

The trial court granted plaintiffs' motion for summary judgment on count I of their complaint. The court granted summary judgment for defendant on count II and granted defendant's motion to dismiss with prejudice count III. In its holding on count I, the trial court held that section 26 of the Sanitary [5] District Act required defendant to furnish water to consumers within unincorporated areas of the MSD and private entities at a rate no greater than the rate defendant charges its own residents.

Pursuant to Supreme Court Rule 308 (107 Ill. 2d R. 308), the trial court certified two questions for immediate appeal: (1) Does section 26 of the Sanitary District Act, or the common law, prohibit the City of Chicago from imposing a surcharge on water furnished within the MSD to a person or entity which is not a "city, village, township, incorporated town or other municipal corporation?" and (2) Did or does section 26 of the Act, or the common law, prohibit the City of Chicago from imposing a surcharge on water furnished within the MSD to a "city, village, township, incorporated town or other municipal corporation" for consumption by nonresidents of the purchasing entity?

Section 26 in relevant part states:

> "Any city, village or incorporated town located in any such sanitary district which owns a system of waterworks and procures its supply of water from a lake or other source which will [*231] be saved from sewage pollution by the construction of the sewage facilities provided by this [6] Act shall furnish water to any city, village, township, incorporated town or other municipal corporation within [or outside] the boundaries of any such sanitary district in such quantities as may be required to supply consumers within [or outside] said territory at no greater price or charge than said city, village or incorporated town charges and collects of consumers within its limits through meters for like large quantities * * *." (Ill. HN1[] Rev. Stat. 1985, ch. 42, par. 348.)

The two phrases set off by brackets were added by amendment in 1983.

Plaintiffs argue that this language of the statute requires defendant to furnish water at its corporate limits for consumption throughout the MSD and prohibits the surcharge imposed on private entities and residents of unincorporated areas within the MSD. Defendant, however, argues that the language of the statute unambiguously states that the price regulation applies only to the sale of water to public municipalities.

[666] [*4] Plaintiffs agree that the statute as originally enacted regulated the price only on sales to municipal corporations. They argue, however, that when the statute was originally enacted in 1889, the legislature did not anticipate [7] that municipalities within the MSD would extend water service to nonresident consumers or that Chicago would furnish water to private entities or individual consumers. At the time the MSD was created, only municipalities had facilities for water distribution, and many of these municipalities were not yet able to extend water service to all of their residents. Based on these historical facts, plaintiffs argue that even though the legislature had not amended the statute to provide for the sale to residents of unincorporated areas or private entities, it did not intend to preclude such consumers from the section 26 price restriction by the original wording of the statute.

We cannot agree with the arguments posed by plaintiffs regarding the intention of the legislature with regard to this statute. The language of section 26 is unambiguous and clearly states that the water must be furnished to a city, village, township, incorporated town or other municipal corporation to come within the statute. Legislative intent is to be derived primarily from a consideration of the legislative language itself. "'There HN2[] is no rule of construction which authorizes a court to declare that the legislature [8] did not mean what the plain language of the statute imports.'" People ex rel. Scott v. [*232] Schwulst Building Center, Inc. (1982), 89 Ill. 2d 365, 371, 432 N.E.2d 855, quoting Western National Bank v. Village of Kildeer (1960), 19 Ill. 2d 342, 350, 167 N.E.2d 169.

Section 26 has been redrafted several times since the original enactment, yet each draft has limited the scope to sales to municipal corporations, even after private corporations had contracted with defendant for the purchase of water. Evidence shows that defendant began furnishing water to the Chicago Rock Island and Pacific Railroad Company in 1922. The fact that the legislature never extended the wording of the statute to include private entities such as the railway makes it evident that the statute does not protect such entities from the surcharge.

We therefore find that section 26 does not prohibit defendant from imposing a surcharge on water furnished within the MSD to a person or entity which is not a "city, village, township, incorporated town or other municipal corporation."

The next contention between the parties is whether or not the price [9] restriction imposed by section 26 applies when the consumers of the water are nonresidents of the purchasing municipality, such as plaintiff Bobrowicz, who resides in an unincorporated area within the MSD. Both parties focus on the trial court's interpretation of the phrase "within said territory" in section 26. The statute states: "Any city * * * located in any such sanitary district * * * shall furnish water to any city, village, township, incorporated town or other municipal corporation within [or outside] the boundaries of any such sanitary district in such quantities as may be required to supply consumers within [or outside] said territory" at the meter rate. (Emphasis added.) (Ill. Rev. Stat. 1985, ch. 42, par. 348.) The two phrases set off by brackets were added by amendment in 1983. Plaintiffs maintain that the phrase "said territory" underlined in the statute set out above refers to the MSD, and thus plaintiffs, as residents of the MSD, are included in the rate restriction imposed by section 26. Defendant counters that "said territory" refers to the purchasing municipality and thus plaintiffs are not included in the scope of section 26. The trial court held that [10] "said territory" refers to the MSD and thus defendant is required to furnish water to consumers within unincorporated areas of the MSD and private entities at a rate no greater than the rate defendant charges its own residents.

Plaintiffs concede that as originally enacted, use of the word "territory" in the 1889 version of section 26 referred to land which was part of the "purchasing" entity rather than part of the MSD generally. Nothing in the subsequent history of amendments of the statute [*233] convinces us [667] [*5] that the phrase has a changed meaning and now refers to the MSD. Furthermore, an interpretation of "said territory" as referring to the purchasing municipality is consistent with a logical reading of the statute. The purpose of the provision was to authorize, and later require, the sale of water from one municipality to another with the original requirement that both municipalities be within the same sanitary district. It is illogical that the statute would authorize or require one municipality to sell water to another in an amount sufficient to supply consumers within any portion of the sanitary district. This, in our estimation, would be an indirect and misleading [11] attempt to include residents of unincorporated areas of the MSD within the reach of the statute.

In addition, our supreme court has interpreted "within said territory" to mean the purchasing municipality. In Baltis v. Village of Westchester (1954), 3 Ill. 2d 388, 121 N.E.2d 495, the court considered whether Westchester, which received its water from Chicago, was required to furnish water to bordering La Grange Park. We recognize that Baltis presented no issue as to whether that water would be consumed within or outside the boundaries of the municipality. However, the court did have occasion to interpret the relevant portion of section 26. In deciding that Westchester was authorized to sell water to La Grange Park, the court paraphrased section 26: "Under such circumstances, the village of Westchester is authorized by the statute to furnish water to any other municipality within the boundaries of the sanitary district in such quantity as may be required to supply consumers within such other municipality at the rates prescribed by the statute." (3 Ill. 2d at 400.) This passage from the Baltis opinion demonstrates [12] that a logical interpretation of the phrase "within said territory" is as a reference to the purchasing municipality.

Plaintiffs maintain that under defendant's construction of the statute, residents of unincorporated areas would not only have no right to water at the meter rate, but they would have no right to water at any price. We disagree. Section 26 only imposes a price restriction on sales to municipal corporations. Nothing in section 26 prohibits extraterritorial sales either directly by defendant or by an intermediary municipality. That defendant has private contracts with 300 individual consumers, and that plaintiffs who reside in unincorporated areas have water available from neighboring municipalities, demonstrates that water is widely available to plaintiffs.

While section 26 did not govern the rates charged by defendant to plaintiffs herein, we hold that defendant does have a common law duty to charge reasonable rates. HN3[] When a municipal corporation [*234] owns and operates a water system for the purpose of selling water to consumers, it is acting in a business capacity and is generally to be treated as if it were a private utility company. (Austin View Civic Association v. City of Palos Heights (1980), 85 Ill. App. 3d 89, 405 N.E.2d 1256; [13] Baltis v. Village of Westchester (1954), 3 Ill. 2d 388, 121 N.E.2d 495.) At common law, such an enterprise, because it had a monopoly on the service provided in the area, was prohibited from charging exorbitant rates and was required to serve all of its consumers without unreasonable discrimination in rates or manner of service. This common law duty still operates to prevent public utilities from acting in an unreasonable or discriminatory manner. HN4[] Austin View, 85 Ill. App. 3d 89, 405 N.E.2d 1256.

The test to determine whether the rates charged by a privately owned municipality are discriminatory is based on a consideration of such factors as differences in the amount of the product used, the time when used, the purpose for which used, or any other relevant factors reflecting a difference in costs. Rates that are reasonably related to differences in the costs of providing service are not unreasonably discriminatory. Austin View, 85 Ill. App. 3d 89, 405 N.E.2d 1256.

Defendant maintains that it has no common law duty to charge reasonable rates because it has no contractual obligation [14] with plaintiffs. We note that several members of the plaintiff class did have contracts for the purchase of water with defendant, and thus defendant's common [668] [*6] law duty to charge reasonable rates unquestionably applies to those plaintiffs. With regard to the remaining plaintiffs who did not contract directly with defendant for the purchase of water, we believe that a contract was not necessary to bind defendant to charge reasonable rates. Once defendant has undertaken to serve nonresidents of purchasing municipalities, it is bound to charge reasonable, nondiscriminatory rates. Our HN5[] supreme court has held that when it comes to the extent of protection under their common law right, consumers of municipally owned utilities are just as completely protected from exorbitant rates and unjust discrimination as the consumers are under the Public Utilities Act (Ill. Rev. Stat. 1985, ch. 111 2/3, par. 1 -- 101 et seq.). (Austin View, 85 Ill. App. 3d 89, 405 N.E.2d 1256, citing Springfield Gas & Electric Co. v. City of Springfield (1920), 292 Ill. 236, 126 N.E. 739.) We acknowledge that plaintiffs are indirect customers of [15] defendant and purchase their water from municipalities which purchase from defendant or purchase from another municipality which purchases from defendant. Nonetheless, it is significant that defendant referred to plaintiffs residing in unincorporated areas in the contracts between defendant and suburban municipalities, and [*235] more importantly, defendant required the purchasing municipalities to pay a surcharge for all sales to any such plaintiffs.

Defendant maintains that no duty exists with plaintiffs however, because the contracts with purchasing municipalities do not require those municipalities to impose the surcharge on any nonresident consumers to whom they sell water. While the contracts themselves do not impose the surcharge on such sales, defendant requires via its contracts with the purchasing municipalities that they pay defendant a 50% surcharge on any sales to nonresident consumers. The distinction between requiring the purchasing municipalities to impose the surcharge on nonresidents and requiring the municipality to pay defendant a surcharge for such sales is minimal in terms of the discriminatory effect.

The cases cited by defendant, Adkisson v. Ozment (1977), 55 Ill. App. 3d 108, 370 N.E.2d 594, [16] Exchange National Bank v. Behrel (1972), 9 Ill. App. 3d 338, 292 N.E.2d 164, Rehm v. City of Batavia (1955), 5 Ill. App. 2d 442, 125 N.E.2d 831, to argue that it has no duty to plaintiffs do not stand for the proposition that a municipal utility which undertakes to serve a nonresident can charge unreasonable and discriminatory prices. The cases merely state that a municipal utility is under no duty to provide service to nonresidents. As stated above however, once the utility has undertaken to provide water to nonresidents, even indirectly through a contract, the municipal utility is under a duty not to charge discriminatory rates.

Citing Austin View, defendant further argues that the reasonableness of the rates it charges municipalities for water intended for consumption by nonresidents of the municipality is a question of fact that cannot be resolved by summary judgment. Austin View noted that when a privately owned utility company is charged with unreasonable discrimination in rates in violation of the Public Utilities Act, the question of whether the difference in the rates is reasonably related to a difference [17] in costs of providing the service is always one of fact to be based solely on the evidence presented. See Produce Terminal Corp. v. Illinois Commerce Comm'n (1953), 414 Ill. 582, 112 N.E.2d 141; Village of Niles v. City of Chicago (1980), 82 Ill. App. 3d 60, 401 N.E.2d 1235.

Even recognizing this rule, we hold, as a matter of law, that in the present case, there is no disputed issue of fact regarding the cost of the water. It is undisputed that defendant delivers its water for extraterritorial consumption at the city boundaries. Every purchasing municipality must provide for the water to be connected at the city boundary and is responsible for delivery of the water beyond [*236] that point. Defendant does not operate any water distribution facilities outside of its corporate limits. We therefore agree with plaintiffs that it is impossible that defendant could incur greater costs in delivering water at its boundaries for consumption by nonresidents of a municipality as opposed to residents of a municipality.

[669] [*7] Defendant cites Village of Niles in support of its argument that this issue cannot be decided on a motion [18] for summary judgment. Defendant claims that Niles could have been decided on summary judgment if the termination points of Chicago's water mains were the sole determinant of costs. In Village of Niles, 47 suburban municipalities within the MSD alleged that Chicago's metered water rates were unreasonable and discriminatory. This court held that plaintiffs were entitled to an evidentiary hearing for several reasons. The complaint alleged discriminatory practices against the suburbs, including the rates charged for serving the suburbs, and the disparity of services and benefits received for the rates charged. Furthermore, plaintiffs in Niles challenged the reasonableness of the city meter rate which was used as the base for determining the rates charged to suburbs. In contrast, the present case does not challenge the reasonableness of the city meter rate, but only challenges the differential between the rate charged suburban municipalities for sales to their residents and the rate charged if the water is to be consumed outside a municipal corporation.

The result of the surcharge is to impose upon residents of unincorporated areas a 50% higher rate than that charged [19] residents of Chicago, or residents of municipalities to whom Chicago sells water. This, in our estimation, is an arbitrary imposition of a surcharge on the plaintiff class and clearly in violation of defendant's common law duty not to charge unreasonable or discriminatory rates. We therefore affirm the trial court's granting of summary judgment in count I of plaintiffs' complaint.

Because we find that defendant has violated its common law duty to charge reasonable and nondiscriminatory rates, we find that we need not address plaintiff's claim regarding violation of their rights to equal protection.

Count III of plaintiffs' complaint alleged that the surcharge constituted illegal monopolization and price discrimination and thus violated the Illinois Antitrust Act. Ill. Rev. Stat. 1985, ch. 38, par. 60 -- 1 et seq.

HN6[] The Illinois Antitrust Act clearly allows an indirect purchaser such as the representative plaintiff and others similarly situated the right to damages. However, the Act states "that no person other than [*237] the Attorney General of this State shall be authorized to maintain a class action in any court of this State for indirect purchasers asserting claims under [20] this Act." (Ill. Rev. Stat. 1985, ch. 38, par. 60 -- 7.) The present case was filed in the form of a class action suit against defendant. The statute clearly mandates that such an action be brought by the Attorney General, and therefore we affirm the trial court's dismissal of count III.

Because we are dismissing count III of plaintiffs' complaint, we need not reach the question of whether Federal law has preempted the statute allowing indirect purchasers to sue under the antitrust law, or the question of whether the 1986 amendments to the Illinois antitrust statute should be applied retroactively.

For the foregoing reasons, the judgment of the circuit court of Cook County is affirmed in all respects.

Judgment affirmed.

Ford Motor Co. v. Insurance Comm'r of Pennsylvania

United States District Court for the Eastern District of Pennsylvania

March 22, 1988, Decided; March 24, 1988, Filed; Affirmed in part, Reversed in part and Remanded May 5, 1989

Civil Action No. 87-3241

Reporter
1988 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 2489 *

Ford Motor Company, et al v. Insurance Commissioner of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania

Core Terms

intervenors, reenacted, summary judgment, restrictions, pre-empted, banking

Counsel: [*1] Harvey Bartle III Esq., Lawrence A. Serlin Esq., for Plaintiffs.

Maria Parisi Vickers, Esq., for Insurance Commissioner of The Commonwealth of Pennsylvania; William R. Balaban Esq., Governors' Row, Jonathan B. Sallett Esq., for Pennsylvania Association of Independent Insurance Agents, John M. Ulrich, Jr. Professional Insurance Agents Association of Pennsylvania, Maryland and Delaware, Inc., Charles P. Leach, Jr., Pennsylvania Association of Life Underwriters and Harold E. Alexander.

Opinion by: KELLY

Opinion

SUPPLEMENTAL MEMORANDUM

R. F. KELLY, J.

By Memorandum and Order of October 26, 1987, 672 F. Supp. 841, the court granted summary judgment in favor of the plaintiffs. Subsequently, the intervenors have filed two motions: 1) for reconsideration of the decision of October 26; and 2) to amend or make additional findings of fact and to alter judgment. For the following reasons, both of these motions are denied. Defendant Insurance Commissioner has filed papers joining in these motions of the intervenors.

The main argument in support of the motion for reconsideration is that the court wrongly took into consideration legislative history associated with 12 U.S.C. § 1730a(m). The most important part [*2] of the court's memorandum dealing with the legislative history of § 1730a(m) is as follows:

Regarding § 1730a(m) itself, the report [Senate Committee on Banking, Housing and Urban Affairs, S. Rep. No. 536, 97th Cong., 2d Sess. reprinted in 1982 U.S. Code Cong. & Admin. News 3054.] stated:

This section allows the FSLIC, of any other law (except antitrust law) to authorize an insured institution eligible for FSLIC assistance to merge with any other insured institution or an FDIC-insured bank, or to be acquired by any holding company. This would enable the FSLIC to arrange mergers of institutions across State lines notwithstanding interstate branching prohibitions, and to let holding companies acquire institutions other than in their home State and without regard to normal activities restrictions.

Id. at 49, 1982 U.S. Code Cong. & Admin. News at 3103 (emphasis added).

Section 1730a(m) was reenacted in 1987 as part of the Competitive Equality Banking Act of 1987. Section 1730a(m) had lapsed on October 13, 1986 and was reenacted by this Act retroactively on August 10, 1987. The Conference Report on this act states that § 1730a(m)

preempts other provisions of Federal and [*3] State law that would have the effect of preventing a company from acquiring a failing thrift institution. Thus, for example, if a life insurance company invested in or acquired a thrift institution under [§ 1730a(m)], that section would preempt any State law that would prevent the company from continuing to engage in the life insurance business because of that investment or acquisition.

H.R.Rep. No. 261, 100th Cong., 1st Sess., Cong. Rec. H6857, H6895 (daily ed. July 31, 1987). 672 F. Supp. at 848.

Regarding the first quotation above, the intervenors argue that this section "specifies that it is referring to interstate branching prohibitions and 'normal activities restrictions.' Clearly, such activities restrictions refer to those imposed by banking laws." Intervenors' Brief at 9 (emphasis in original). Nothing in the report indicates that the normal activities restrictions" referred to is limited to restrictions imposed by banking laws. The most natural interpretation of this language is that the FSLIC is authorized to arrange mergers without regard for federal laws or state law or any law other than antitrust laws that would prevent them. There seems to be no reason to add "imposed [*4] by banking laws" to the end of this passage.

As to the quotation from the conference report above, intervenors argued that as a statement from a subsequent Congress it is entitled to very little weight in the interpretation of the statute. The intervenors cite a number of cases in support of this proposition. Milwaukee v. Illinois, 451 U.S. 304, 332 n.24 (1981); Consumer Product Safety Commission v. GTE Sylvania, Inc., 447 U.S. 102, 118 n.13 (1980); Cannon v. University of Chicago, 441 U.S. 667, 686-87 n.7 (1979). However, in none of these cases was the Congress reenacting the statute involved.

The plaintiffs cite a number of cases in which courts have relied on statements of Congressional intent found in the legislative history of reenactments of a statute. In United States v. Sheffield Board of Commissioners, 435 U.S. 110, 134 (1978), the Supreme Court stated:

[T]he legislative background of the 1975 reenactment is conclusive of the issue before us. When a Congress that re-enacts a statute voices its approval of an administrative or other interpretation thereof, Congress is treated as having adopted that interpretation and this Court is bound thereby.

In response [*5] to this, the intervenors argue that although the 1987 conference report might be viewed as conclusive for sales of savings and loans that take place after § 1730a(m) was reenacted, § 1730a(m) must be interpreted as not applying to insurance law restrictions before that date. It would be an anomalous and unsatisfactory result to decide that identical statutory language must mean different things depending on when the transaction involved took place. This court is unwilling to conclude that the language of § 1730a(m) meant something different before it was reenacted.

Intervenors' second motion asks the court to amend or make additional findings of fact and to alter judgment.

The facts that must be considered to decide this motion are as follows. In 1985, the Ford Motor Company bought First Nationwide Financial Corporation (FNFC) a California corporation which owned banking operations in California, Florida, Hawaii and New York. In 1986, FNFC acquired two failing Ohio savings and loan associations from the FSLIC under authority of § 1730a(m) and also acquired the right from the FSLIC to open branches in Pennsylvania and Colorado. In 1987, FNFC opened a branch in Pennsylvania and plaintiffs [*6] started this action maintaining that opening a Pennsylvania branch should not force Ford to cease selling insurance in Pennsylvania.

Plaintiffs filed a motion for summary judgment arguing that section 641 of the Pennsylvania Insurance Department Act violated equal protection or was pre-empted by federal banking regulations or by § 1730a(m). The court granted summary judgment finding that Pennsylvania law was pre-empted by § 1730a(m). In opposing the summary judgment, defendant Insurance Commissioner never advanced the argument that Ford violated section 641 in 1985 when it acquired FNFC. On page 3 of their 35 page brief in opposition to the motion for summary judgment, intervenors did assert that Ford violated section 641 when it acquired FNFC, and the court did not deal with this assertion in its Memorandum of October 26, 1987.

The intervenors now argue that, because the court's previous opinion found section 641 preempted by § 1730a(m) and that Ford did not acquire FNFC under authority of § 1730a(m), the court should now find that Ford violated section 641 in 1985 when it acquired FNFC.

This court holds, however, for the reasons cited in the case of U.S.A.A. v. Foster, No. 84-1596 [*7] (M.D. Pa. Dec. 23, 1987) that the enforcement of section 641 on insurance companies that own banking affiliates that do not operate in Pennsylvania is invalid as a violation of the commerce clause of the Constitution.

ORDER

AND NOW, this 22nd day of March, 1988, upon consideration of Intervenors' Motion for Reconsideration and Motion to Amend or Make Additional Findings of Fact and to Alter Judgment and the responses filed thereto, it is hereby ORDERED and DECREED that said Motions are DENIED.

End of Document

Outlet Communications, Inc. v. King World Productions, Inc.

United States District Court for the Middle District of Florida, Orlando Division

March 31, 1988, Filed

Case No. 85-1181-CIV-ORL-18

Reporter

685 F. Supp. 1570 *; 1988 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 4656 ; 1989-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P68,562

Outlet Communications, Inc., Plaintiff, v. King World Productions, Inc., Defendant

Core Terms

pleadings, license, tying arrangement, alleges, tied product, enterprise, buyer, tying product, defense motion, competitor, antitrust, seller, pattern of racketeering activity, television, racketeering activity, license agreement, predicate act, Sherman Act, purchaser, market power, commerce, contends, products, merits, mail, decide a motion, interstate, affiliate, negotiate, audience

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > Pleading & Practice > Pleadings > Answers

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Pretrial Judgments > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Pretrial Judgments > Judgment on Pleadings

HN1[] Pleadings, Answers

The court may consider only the pleadings, that is the complaint and answer, in deciding a Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(c) motion for judgment on the pleadings. The fact allegations of the complaint are to be taken as true, but those of the answer are taken as true only where and to the extent that they have not been denied or do not conflict with those of the complaint. In order to prevail, a motion for judgment on the pleadings "must be based on the undisputed facts appearing in all the pleadings.

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Pretrial Judgments > Judgment on Pleadings

HN2[] Pretrial Judgments, Judgment on Pleadings

The court must examine the pleadings to determine whether any set of facts would permit plaintiff to recover as a matter of law.

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Pretrial Judgments > Judgment on Pleadings

Civil Procedure > Pleading & Practice > Pleadings > Rule Application & Interpretation

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Pretrial Judgments > General Overview

HN3[] Pretrial Judgments, Judgment on Pleadings

In deciding a motion for judgment on the pleadings, the court may consider exhibits to the pleadings as part of the pleadings pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 10(c). The court may not consider, however, matters outside the pleadings in a motion for judgment on the pleadings pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(c).

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > Sherman Act Violations

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN4[] Sherman Act, Scope

Simply marketing two products together in a package is not an unlawful tying arrangement. Tying arrangements are anticompetitive, and thus unlawful under the Sherman Act, when the seller has the ability "to force" buyers to purchase the tied product because of the seller's "control or dominance" over the tying product.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN5[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Tying arrangements, which pose the unacceptable risk of stifling competition, are anticompetitive and illegal per se.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > Per Se Rule

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

HN6[] Tying Arrangements, Per Se Rule

In order to prove that a tying arrangement is illegal per se, a plaintiff must establish four elements: 1) that there are two separate products, a "tying" product and a "tied" product;2) that those products are in fact "tied" together -- that is, the buyer was forced to buy the tied product to get the tying product;3) that the seller possesses sufficient economic power in the tying product market to coerce buyer acceptance of the tied product; and4) involvement of a "not insubstantial" amount of interstate commerce in the market of the tied product.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

HN7[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Tying Arrangements

It is clear that although competitors do not have to show that they themselves were forced or coerced to do anything, they do have to show that the buyer of the tied package was forced or coerced to buy the tied product.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

HN8[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Tying Arrangements

Direct evidence of coercive behavior is not required, rather coercion may be established by showing that the facts and circumstances surrounding the transaction as a practical matter forced the buyer into purchasing the tied product.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

International Trade Law > General Overview

HN9[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Tying Arrangements

The Supreme Court has held that the "controlling consideration" in determining whether the volume of commerce in the tied market is "not insubstantial" is whether a total amount of business, substantial enough in terms of dollar-volume of business so as not to be merely de minimis, is foreclosed to competitors by the tie.

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Heightened Pleading Requirements > Fraud Claims

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Heightened Pleading Requirements > General Overview

HN10[] Heightened Pleading Requirements, Fraud Claims

When racketeering activity includes allegations of fraud, Fed. R. Civ. P. 9(b) requires that the circumstances constituting fraud shall be stated with particularity. Plaintiff may either allege date, time, place, and content of the alleged fraud or it may use alternative means of injecting precision and some measure of substantiation into its allegations of fraud.

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act > General Overview

Securities Law > RICO Actions > General Overview

HN11[] Racketeering, Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act

In order to allege violation of 18 U.S.C. § 1962(a)-(c), a plaintiff must allege a pattern of racketeering activity, defined as at least two acts of racketeering activity within the time period specified by 18 U.S.C. § 1961(5).

Counsel: [1] Norman H. Singer, Esq., Sundlun, Scher & Singer, Washington, District of Columbia, John M. Robertson, Esq., Robertson, Williams, Duane & Lewis, Orlando, Florida, for Plaintiffs.

Brenda D. Harms, Esquire, Lawrence I. Fox, Esquire, Robert A. Weiner, Esq., Berger & Steingut, New York, New York, Davisson F. Dunlap, Esq., Carlton, Fields, Ward, Emmanuel, Smith & Cutler, P.A., Orlando, Florida, for Defendants.

Attorneys for Cox Communications, Inc., Anthony E. DiResta, Esquire, Atlanta, Georgia.

John J. Upchurch, Esquire, Daytona Beach, Florida.

Judges: G. Kendall Sharp, United States District Judge.

Opinion by: SHARP

Opinion

[*1572] ORDER

G. KENDALL SHARP, UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE

This action is before the court upon defendant's motion for judgment on the pleadings (Doc. 11) and defendant's motion for pretrial conference (Doc. 111). Plaintiff has opposed both motions (Docs. 13, 112). Defendant was permitted to file a reply memorandum in support of its motion for judgment on the pleadings (Doc. 18).

Pursuant to Rule 12(c) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, defendant's motion for judgment on the pleadings requests dismissal from plaintiff's complaint of Count I, breach of contract; Count III, antitrust violations; and Count IV, RICO claim. HN1[] The court may consider only the pleadings, that is [2] the complaint and answer, in deciding a Rule 12(c) motion for judgment on the pleadings. Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(c); see Hill v. Linahan, 697 F.2d 1032, 1034 (11th Cir. 1983) (per curiam). "The fact allegations of the complaint are to be taken as true, but those of the answer are taken as true only where and to the extent that they have not been denied or do not conflict with those of the complaint." Stanton v. Larsh, 239 F.2d 104, 106 (5th Cir. 1956); Bass v. Hoagland, 172 F.2d 205, 207 (5th Cir.), cert. denied, 338 U.S. 816, 94 L. Ed. 494, 70 S. Ct. 57 (1949); see Swerdloff v. Miami National Bank, 584 F.2d 54, 57 (5th Cir. 1978); Kohen v. H.S. Crocker Co., 260 F.2d 790, 792 (5th Cir. 1958). In order to prevail, a motion for judgment on the pleadings "must be based on the undisputed facts appearing in all the pleadings." Stanton, 239 F.2d at 106.

Furthermore, the court is obliged to scrutinize the complaint, construed in plaintiff's favor, and to allow it to stand "if plaintiff might recover under any state of facts which could be proved in support of the claim." General Guaranty Insurance Co. v. Parkerson, 369 F.2d 821, 825 (5th Cir. 1966); Swerdloff, 584 F.2d at 60; see Conley v. Gibson, 355 U.S. 41, 48, 2 L. Ed. 2d 80, 78 S. Ct. 99 (1957) [3] ("The purpose of pleading is to facilitate a proper decision on the merits."). In reversing and remanding the district court's granting defendant's motion for judgment on the pleadings, the former Fifth Circuit stated:

> The posture of the case requires us to consider whether plaintiffs could prove any set of facts which would permit recovery . . . . We make no suggestion as to whether such facts can be proven in this case. We merely hold that in our view of the law sufficient facts might possibly be shown under the cause of action here alleged to permit recovery and defendant was not entitled to judgment as a matter of law at the pleading stage of the proceeding.

Swerdloff, 584 F.2d at 60 (emphasis in original). In essence, HN2[] the court must examine the pleadings to determine whether any set of facts would permit plaintiff to recover as a matter of law. See International Union of District 50, United Mine Workers v. Bowman Transportation, Inc., 421 F.2d 934, 935 (5th Cir. 1970) (per curiam); Security Life & Accident Insurance Co. v. United States, 357 F.2d 145, 150 (5th Cir. 1966).

Pursuant to the stringent requirements that govern granting a motion for judgment on the pleadings, [4] the court will analyze the three counts, which defendant seeks to dismiss from plaintiff's complaint. For purposes of deciding the motion for judgment on the pleadings, the court must accept the facts stated in plaintiff's complaint as true. Two license agreements between the parties are attached to plaintiff's complaint; no exhibits are attached to defendant's answer.

The first count in question is Count I, plaintiff's breach of contract claim. This action concerns two consecutive, one-year [*1573] license agreements between plaintiff's Orlando and CBS television affiliate, WCPX, and defendant, a national programming distributor, for the television game show, WHEEL OF FORTUNE. Defendant is the exclusive distributor of WHEEL OF FORTUNE, which it licenses to various network affiliated stations and to independent stations. WHEEL OF FORTUNE premiered in broadcast year 1983-1984, which was its first season of syndication. Since the beginning of 1984, WHEEL OF FORTUNE has had the highest audience rating of any syndicated television show according to audience ratings published by Arbitron and A.C. Nielsen Company.

The court is precluded from addressing the merits of [5] plaintiff's breach of contract count, alleging that it, as initial subscriber to a new first-run program, had an exclusive right to renewals based upon trade usage, because of the described pleading and procedural defect. HN3[] In deciding a motion for judgment on the pleadings, the court may consider exhibits to the pleadings as part of the pleadings. Fed. R. Civ. P. 10(c); see Dyal v. Union Bag-Camp Paper Corp., 263 F.2d 387, 391 (5th Cir. 1959). The court may not consider, however, matters outside the pleadings in a motion for judgment on the pleadings. Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(c); Fidelity & Deposit Co. v. Southern Utilities, Inc., 726 F.2d 692, 693 (11th Cir. 1984); see Galanti v. United States, 709 F.2d 706, 709 n.3 (11th Cir. 1983), cert. denied, 465 U.S. 1024, 79 L. Ed. 2d 683, 104 S. Ct. 1279 (1984); Hill, 697 F.2d at 1034. Since the court has not been provided either license agreement in full with the pleadings, it cannot decide the motion for judgment on the pleadings regarding the breach of contract count. Therefore, defendant's motion for judgment on the pleadings as to Count I, breach of contract, is DENIED.

Count III of plaintiff's complaint contains allegations of antitrust violations, pursuant to section 1 et seq. of [6] the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1 et seq., and section 3 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 14. Plaintiff's opposition to defendant's motion for judgment on the pleadings, however, states that, since its Clayton Act, section 3 claim is "entirely duplicative" of its Sherman Act, section 1 claim, plaintiff "will only press its claim under § 1." (Plaintiff's Opposition to Defendant's Motion for Judgment on the Pleadings, at p. 7, n.6). Therefore, the court will consider that plaintiff has abandoned its antitrust claim, pursuant to section 3 of the Clayton Act, and that the remaining antitrust allegation in plaintiff's complaint regards section 1 of the Sherman Act.

The alleged antitrust violation derives from the purported negotiations for plaintiff's licensing WHEEL OF FORTUNE from defendant for the 1985-1986 broadcast year. Plaintiff alleges that defendant represented that it would negotiate exclusively with plaintiff for renewal of WHEEL OF FORTUNE only if plaintiff would license two additional game shows, JEOPARDY! and HEADLINE CHASERS, from defendant. Plaintiff claims that defendant's stated price for WHEEL OF FORTUNE alone was not economically viable and that the package of the three game shows [7] was its only alternative.

Plaintiff contends that defendant's newly added conditions, regarding licensing WHEEL OF FORTUNE for the 1985-1986 year, constituted negotiation in bad faith with disregard for plaintiff's rights pursuant to the parties' two previous license agreements, their course of dealing, and industry practices. Plaintiff claims that defendant has continued to refuse to negotiate a license agreement with plaintiff for WHEEL OF FORTUNE without the additional conditions. Upon information and belief, plaintiff alleges that defendant negotiated with its Orlando/Daytona Beach television market competitor, SFN Communications of Florida, Inc., licensee of WFTV, the ABC affiliate, for licensing WHEEL OF FORTUNE, JEOPARDY! and HEADLINE CHASERS. Plaintiff further alleges that WFTV and others, whose identities are unknown, in other television markets [*1574] have acquiesced to defendant's tie-in arrangement. Plaintiff contends that WFTV (and others) will be able to capitalize on and to benefit from the good will and audience acceptance of WHEEL OF FORTUNE that it established in the Orlando/Daytona Beach market and, thereby, plaintiff will lose viewers and advertisers.

Plaintiff alleges that defendant [8] has entered into a per se illegal tie-in violation of section 1 of the Sherman Act by licensing WHEEL OF FORTUNE to WFTV and others with the condition that they also license JEOPARDY! and HEADLINE CHASERS from defendant. Such combinations, agreements, and contracts, plaintiff contends, were for the purpose and had the effect of restraining interstate and foreign trade and commerce in the license of first-run television programming to network affiliates and independent stations in the United States. Plaintiff claims that defendant possesses an unfair economic advantage over its competitors in the market because of its position as sole distributor of WHEEL OF FORTUNE and the success of that game show, and that it coerced the tie-in license agreement that resulted in WHEEL OF FORTUNE being obtained by a competitor of its affiliate, or WFTV. As a result of defendant's actions, plaintiff alleges that it will lose audience and advertising revenues in excess of $

1,000,000.00 for commercial time during the telecast of WHEEL OF FORTUNE as well as for prior and subsequent programming. Plaintiff also claims treble damages, interest, attorneys' fees and costs, pursuant to section 4 of the Clayton [9] Act, 15 U.S.C. § 15.

With respect to allegations regarding the parties' two prior license agreements, the court faces the same obstacle that flawed Count I, the omission of all or portions of the 1983-1984 and 1984-1985 license agreements for WHEEL OF FORTUNE between the parties. Based upon the facts alleged in plaintiff's complaint and the legal requirements for a Sherman Act, section 1 tying claim, however, the court can analyze defendant's motion for judgment on the pleadings as to Count III as a matter of law. The court is guided by recent decisions regarding tying arrangements by the Supreme Court and the Eleventh Circuit Court of Appeals. Jefferson Parish Hospital District No. 2 v. Hyde, 466 U.S. 2, 80 L. Ed. 2d 2, 104 S. Ct. 1551 (1984); Tic-X-Press, Inc. v. Omni Promotions Co., 815 F.2d 1407 (11th Cir. 1987).

Plaintiff has alleged a tying arrangement by defendant whereby plaintiff economically could not license WHEEL OF FORTUNE (the tying product) for 1985-1986 without also licensing JEOPARDY! and HEADLINE CHASERS (the tied products) from defendant. "A tying arrangement is 'an agreement by a party to sell one product [the "tying" product] but only on the condition that the buyer also purchases a different [10] (or "tied") product.'" Tic-X-Press, 815 F.2d at 1414 (quoting Northern Pacific Railway Co. v. United States, 356 U.S. 1, 5-6, 2 L. Ed. 2d 545, 78 S. Ct. 514 (1958)); see Amey, Inc. v. Gulf Abstract & Title, Inc., 758 F.2d 1486, 1502 (11th Cir. 1985), cert. denied, 475 U.S. 1107, 89 L. Ed. 2d 912, 106 S. Ct. 1513 (1986); Midwestern Waffles, Inc. v. Waffle House, Inc., 734 F.2d 705, 711 (11th Cir. 1984) (per curiam); Olmstead v. Amoco Oil Co., 725 F.2d 627, 629 (11th Cir. 1984); Kypta v. McDonald's Corp., 671 F.2d 1282, 1284 (11th Cir.), cert. denied, 459 U.S. 857, 74 L. Ed. 2d 109, 103 S. Ct. 127 (1982); Kentucky Fried Chicken Corp. v. Diversified Packaging Corp., 549 F.2d 368, 375 (5th Cir. 1977). Furthermore, a tie is unlawful "only if the seller of the tying product has a financial interest in the source of the tied product." Midwestern Waffles, 734 F.2d at 712; Keener v. Sizzler Family Steak Houses, 597 F.2d 453 (5th Cir. 1979).

Plaintiff's complaint has alleged facts that could meet the definitional requirements of a tying arrangement, the analysis that the court must make in deciding a motion for judgment on the pleadings. Plaintiff has represented that, economically, it could not license WHEEL OF FORTUNE for 1985-1986 without also licensing [*1575] the less desirable game shows, [11] JEOPARDY! and HEADLINE CHASERS. It is apparent that defendant had a financial interest in the tied products, JEOPARDY! and HEADLINE CHASERS, since it also licensed those game shows.

HN4[] Simply marketing two products together in a package is not an unlawful tying arrangement. Tic-X-Press, 815 F.2d at 1414; see Jefferson Parish, 466 U.S. at 11-12; Northern Pacific, 356 U.S. at 7; Amey, 758 F.2d at 1502. Tying arrangements are anticompetitive, and thus unlawful under section 1 of the Sherman Act, when the seller has the ability "to force" buyers to purchase the tied product because of the seller's "control or dominance" over the tying product. Tic-X-Press, 815 F.2d at 1414 (emphasis in original); see Northern Pacific, 356 U.S. at 6; Times-Picayune Publishing Co. v. United States, 345 U.S. 594, 611, 97 L. Ed. 1277, 73 S. Ct. 872 (1953); Midwestern Waffles, 734 F.2d at 711-12; Construction Aggregate Transport, Inc. v. Florida Rock Industries, Inc., 710 F.2d 752, 780-81 (11th Cir. 1983). The Supreme Court clarified the concern regarding seller exploitation of the tying product in a tying arrangement:

> The essential characteristic of an invalid tying arrangement lies in the seller's exploitation of its control over the [12] tying product to force the buyer into the purchase of a tied product that the buyer either did not want at all, or might have preferred to purchase elsewhere on different terms. When such "forcing" is present, competition on the merits in the market for the tied item is restrained and the Sherman Act is violated.

Jefferson Parish, 466 U.S. at 12. Plaintiff asserts that it was interested only in the licensing of WHEEL OF FORTUNE, not in licensing JEOPARDY! or HEADLINE CHASERS, the latter being characterized as "a new, untried and untested program with little appeal to a television station's requirement for programming." (Complaint at para. 25).

The Eleventh Circuit has held "that the principal evil of tie-ins is that they foreclose competition on the merits in the tied market." Tic-X-Press, 815 F.2d at 1417 (emphasis in original); see Kentucky Fried Chicken, 549 F.2d at 375. HN5[] Tying arrangements, which pose the unacceptable risk of stifling competition, are anticompetitive and illegal per se. Jefferson Parish, 466 U.S. at 9-10; Tic-X-Press, 815 F.2d at 1414; see Fortner Enterprises, Inc. v. United States Steel Corp., 394 U.S. 495, 498-99, 22 L. Ed. 2d 495, 89 S. Ct. 1252 (1969); Times-Picayune, 345 U.S. at 608-10; [13] International Salt Co. v. United States, 332 U.S. 392, 396, 92 L. Ed. 20, 68 S. Ct. 12 (1947); Midwestern Waffles, 734 F.2d at 711-12; Construction Aggregate, 710 F.2d at 772, 781; Kentucky Fried Chicken, 549 F.2d at 374. HN6[] In order to prove that a tying arrangement is illegal per se, a plaintiff must establish four elements:

1) that there are two separate products, a "tying" product and a "tied" product;

2) that those products are in fact "tied" together -- that is, the buyer was forced to buy the tied product to get the tying product;

3) that the seller possesses sufficient economic power in the tying product market to coerce buyer acceptance of the tied product; and

4) involvement of a "not insubstantial" amount of interstate commerce in the market of the tied product.

Tic-X-Press, 815 F.2d at 1414; see Amey, 758 F.2d at 1502-03; Midwestern Waffles, 734 F.2d at 711-12; Kentucky Fried Chicken, 549 F.2d at 375.

The court has reservations concerning plaintiff's ability to establish the first element. "Two separate products are tied together if a difference exists in the 'character of the demand for the two items.'" Amey, 758 F.2d at 1503 (emphasis in original) (quoting Jefferson Parish, 466 U.S. at 19). [14] The Supreme Court has explained that "a tying arrangement [*1576] cannot exist unless two separate product markets have been linked." Jefferson Parish, 466 U.S. at 21; see Times-Picayune, 345 U.S. at 614; Tic-X-Press, 815 F.2d at 1415 n.12. Since JEOPARDY! and HEADLINE CHASERS, like WHEEL OF FORTUNE, also are game shows, plaintiff's complaint is unclear as to whether there are two product markets as opposed to two products within the same market. From the facts stated in plaintiff's complaint, it is questionable to the court that there is any market for the tied product HEADLINE CHASERS, and restraint of competition in the tied product market is a crucial component for analysis of a per se illegal tying arrangement. Because plaintiff may be able to prove some set of facts to overcome this potential barrier to its per se illegal tying arrangement claim and because there are possible legal and factual bases for the remaining elements, the court is unwilling to foreclose plaintiff's antitrust allegation on this first element in a motion for judgment on the pleadings.

The second element that a plaintiff must allege is "that the seller forced or coerced the buyer into purchasing the tied product." [15] Tic-X-Press, 815 F.2d at 1415 (emphasis in original); see Jefferson Parish, 466 U.S. at 12-15; Midwestern Waffles, 734 F.2d at 712. The court is cognizant that plaintiff did not purchase or license the alleged tied products for the 1985-1986 broadcast year. As in Jefferson Parish, a lawsuit brought by a competitor rather than a buyer, a competitor affected by an alleged unlawful tying arrangement is entitled to bring suit. See Jefferson Parish, 466 U.S. at 5; Tic-X-Press, 815 F.2d at 1415 n.15; see also Brunswick Corp. v. Pueblo Bowl-O-Mat, Inc., 429 U.S. 477, 50 L. Ed. 2d 701, 97 S. Ct. 690 (1977); Amey, 758 F.2d at 1498-1500; Midwestern Waffles, 734 F.2d at 710-11 (regarding a plaintiff's standing pursuant to 15 U.S.C. § 15 and the target market area, or market endangered by the alleged antitrust violation). "HN7[] It is clear that although competitors do not have to show that they themselves were forced or coerced to do anything, they do have to show that the buyer of the tied package was forced or coerced to buy the tied product." Tic-X-Press, 815 F.2d at 1415 n.15.

HN8[] Direct evidence of coercive behavior is not required, rather "coercion may be established by showing that the facts and circumstances surrounding the transaction [16] as a practical matter forced the buyer into purchasing the tied product." Id. at 1418; Kentucky Fried Chicken, 549 F.2d at 377. Plaintiff must demonstrate that defendant actually exerted its "economic muscle" against the buyer so that the buyer was forced to purchase products in the tied market that it did not want or would have preferred to buy elsewhere on other terms. Tic-X-

Press, 815 F.2d at 1415-16; Jefferson Parish, 466 U.S. at 12. In this action, plaintiff must show that the alleged purchaser/licensee, its competitor in the Orlando/Daytona Beach market, was forced to license tied products in order to license the tying product, WHEEL OF FORTUNE. It readily is apparent that this showing cannot be made without discovery or a trial. Therefore, a finding that the buyer/licensee was forced by defendant into a per se illegal tying arrangement is premature and inappropriate based solely on the pleadings. See Jefferson Parish, 466 U.S. at 5; Tic-X-Press, 815 F.2d at 1411, 1415-19 (Allegations of per se illegal tying arrangements by competitors in the tied market were determined by the court following trial.).

The third element that a plaintiff must plead to prove a per se illegal tying [17] arrangement is that defendant had sufficient "economic or market power" to force the purchaser into a tying arrangement, which the purchaser would not accept in a competitive market. Tic-X-Press, 815 F.2d at 1420; see Jefferson Parish, 466 U.S. at 13-14; Times-Picayune, 345 U.S. at 605. [*1577] The seller does not have to dominate the market or exercise economic power with regard to more than some of the buyers in the market to have sufficient market power. Tic-X-Press, 815 F.2d at 1420; Fortner, 394 U.S. at 503. "Economic power may be inferred from the tying product's desirability to consumers or from uniqueness in its attributes." Tic-X-Press, 815 F.2d at 1420; Jefferson Parish, 466 U.S. at 17; Fortner, 394 U.S. at 505 & n.2; United States v. Loew's, Inc., 371 U.S. 38, 45, 9 L. Ed. 2d 11, 83 S. Ct. 97 (1962). Establishing sufficient market power requires showing that would-be competitors in the tied market cannot offer the tying product on competitive terms because the seller has a cost advantage in producing the tying product or substantial entry barriers into the tying product market exist. Tic-X-Press, 815 F.2d at 1420; see Fortner, 394 U.S. at 505 n.2; Spartan Grain & Mill Co. v. Ayers, 735 F.2d 1284, 1288 (11th [18] Cir. 1984), cert. denied, 469 U.S. 1109, 83 L. Ed. 2d 779, 105 S. Ct. 785 (1985).

When the government has granted the seller a monopoly, such as "a patent or similar monopoly over a product, it is fair to presume that the inability to buy the product elsewhere gives the seller market power." Jefferson Parish, 466 U.S. at 16; Loew's, 371 U.S. at 45-47. Any attempt to enlarge such monopoly market power by conditioning the sale or lease of the monopolized or tying product on the purchase of a separate, tied product undermines competition on the merits in the second market and is unlawful. Jefferson Parish, 466 U.S. at 16; see United States v. Paramount Pictures, Inc., 334 U.S. 131, 156-59, 92 L. Ed. 1260, 68 S. Ct. 915 (1948); International Salt, 332 U.S. at 395-396. Plaintiff has alleged that defendant controls or holds the copyright to WHEEL OF FORTUNE. There is no dispute that defendant has the exclusive right to distribute WHEEL OF FORTUNE, which has the highest audience ratings of any syndicated television show. It appears to the court that plaintiff has demonstrated the uniqueness and desirability of WHEEL OF FORTUNE, the tying product, and that defendant has the requisite or sufficient market power. See Tic-X-Press, 815 F.2d at 1420.

The fourth [19] element that a plaintiff must allege to prove a per se illegal tying arrangement is involvement of a "not insubstantial" amount of interstate commerce in the market of the tied product. Id. at 1414, 1419; see Jefferson Parish, 466 U.S. at 16; Fortner, 394 U.S. at 501-02; Northern Pacific, 356 U.S. at 6-7; Times-Picayune, 345 U.S. at 608-10; International Salt, 332 U.S. at 396; Amey, 758 F.2d at 1503. HN9[] The Supreme Court has held that the "controlling consideration" in determining whether the volume of commerce in the tied market is "not insubstantial" is "whether a total amount of business, substantial enough in terms of dollar-volume of business so as not to be merely de minimis, is foreclosed to competitors by the tie . . . ." Fortner, 394 U.S. at 501; Tic-X-Press, 815 F.2d at 1419. The Eleventh Circuit has explained that "the relevant figure is the total volume of sales tied by the sales policy under challenge, not merely the portion of this total accounted for by the particular plaintiff who brings suit." Tic-X-Press, 815 F.2d at 1419. Furthermore, "if only a single purchaser were 'forced' with respect to the purchase of a tied item, the resultant impact on competition would [20] not be sufficient to warrant the concern of antitrust law." Jefferson Parish, 466 U.S. at 16; Tic-X-Press, 815 F.2d at 1419.

The facts alleged in plaintiff's complaint are deficient for the court's analysis of the fourth element for establishing an unlawful per se tying arrangement. Not only has plaintiff failed to delineate the tied market, but also it has not provided a dollar [*1578] amount with respect to the tied market to enable the court to make the de minimis determination. See Tic-X-Press, 815 F.2d at 1419-20. Although plaintiff has failed to allege adequately two of the four elements of a per se illegal tying arrangement, the court deems it advisable not to preclude plaintiff's antitrust claim on the merits because of pleading deficiencies. Accordingly, defendant's motion for judgment on the pleadings as to Count III, the antitrust claim, is DENIED.

Count IV of plaintiff's complaint contains RICO allegations pursuant the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act, 18 U.S.C. §§ 1961-1968. Plaintiff contends that defendant, a Delaware corporation, is a "person" within the meaning of section 1961(3) [21] and that defendant engaged in section 1961(1) "racketeering activity" by means of mail and wire fraud, pursuant to 18 U.S.C. §§ 1341 and 1343, respectively. Plaintiff specifically refers to defendant's fraud allegations of Count II, wherein plaintiff alleges that defendant falsely represented to plaintiff that the cost for licensing WHEEL OF FORTUNE alone was $ 5,000.00 per telecast so that plaintiff would not pursue the exclusive license for WHEEL OF FORTUNE and defendant could then market the three-program package to a competitor of WCPX. Plaintiff claims the defendant deceitfully informed plaintiff that it would not market WHEEL OF FORTUNE to another television station in the Orlando/Daytona Beach market until plaintiff made a decision regarding licensing the show for 1985-1986. Plaintiff also alleges that the antitrust conduct of Count III and the RICO conduct of Count IV involved mail and telephonic communications.

Furthermore, plaintiff alleges that defendant, associated with Merv Griffin Enterprises, for which plaintiff was exclusive distributor for WHEEL OF FORTUNE, engaged in a "pattern of racketeering activity," as that term is defined in 18 U.S.C. § 1961(5) and that such [22] activity affected interstate commerce. Plaintiff also contends that defendant violated 18 U.S.C. § 1962 by entering into illegal agreements in restraint of interstate commerce and that these racketeering activities caused plaintiff to lose its right to license WHEEL OF FORTUNE and defendant to derive income. Plaintiff alleges that defendant has caused plaintiff injury in the amount of $ 1,000,000.00, which figure should be trebled in accordance with 18 U.S.C. § 1964(c).

A claim of civil RICO pursuant to section 1964(c) necessarily alleges a violation of section 1962. 18 U.S.C. § 1964(c); Sedima, S.P.R.L. v. Imrex Co., 473 U.S. 479, 495, 87 L. Ed. 2d 346, 105 S. Ct. 3275 (1985). Although plaintiff has not designated the subsections of section 1962 which it contends that defendant violated, it appears to the court that plaintiff has alleged violations of subsections (a) through (c), since it has not alleged conspiracy under subsection (d). The Supreme Court has explained the requisite violations of section 1962(a)-(c) which state a claim under section 1964(c):

> Section 1962 . . . makes it unlawful for "any person" -- not just mobsters -- to use money derived from a pattern of racketeering activity [23] to invest in an enterprise, to acquire control of an enterprise through a pattern of racketeering activity, or to conduct an enterprise through a pattern of racketeering activity. §§ 1962(a)-(c). If the defendant engages in a pattern of racketeering activity in a manner forbidden by these provisions, and the racketeering activities injure the plaintiff in his business or property, the plaintiff has a claim under § 1964(c).

Sedima, 473 U.S. at 495.

Section 1961 is the RICO definitional section. 18 U.S.C. § 1961. Plaintiff properly has alleged that defendant is a "person" within the meaning of section 1961(3). An "enterprise," as that term is defined by section 1961(4), however, is not alleged specifically.

The Eleventh Circuit has held in the criminal context that a corporation may be a defendant and enterprise under RICO, [*1579] and this has been recognized in civil RICO cases within the circuit. United States v. Hartley, 678 F.2d 961, 988 (11th Cir. 1982), cert. denied, 459 U.S. 1170, 74 L. Ed. 2d 1014, 103 S. Ct. 815 (1983); Shared Network Technologies, Inc. v. Taylor, 669 F. Supp. 422, 427 (N.D. Ga. 1987); A.L. Williams Corp. v. Faircloth, 652 F. Supp. 51, 55 (N.D. Ga. 1986). Nevertheless, the Supreme Court, in a criminal RICO case, has held that [24] the existence of an enterprise is a separate, RICO element that must be alleged and proved. United States v. Turkette, 452 U.S. 576, 583, 69 L. Ed. 2d 246, 101 S. Ct. 2524 (1981); Mills v. Fitzgerald, 668 F. Supp. 1554, 1558-59 (N.D. Ga. 1987). Using this reasoning, a district court in this circuit has dismissed a civil RICO claim for failure "to allege the existence of an indispensable separate element of a civil RICO liability." Mills, 668 F. Supp. at 1559.

Merv Griffin Enterprises, for whom defendant exclusively distributes WHEEL OF FORTUNE, is mentioned twice in the complaint in a manner that appears to be insufficient to allege an enterprise. (Complaint at paras. 12, 60). Nowhere in plaintiff's complaint does the word "enterprise" occur with relation to section 1961(4). See Mills, 668 F. Supp. at 1559. The court seemingly could grant judgment on the pleadings as to plaintiff's civil RICO count for failure to allege the element of enterprise. Id.

Even if plaintiff could overcome the pleading defect of failure to allege an enterprise, the court will continue its analysis of plaintiff's civil RICO count because there are additional pleading problems. Plaintiff has alleged the requisite predicate acts or "racketeering [25] activity," defined under section 1961(1) as "indictable" under title 18 of the United States Code, to be mail fraud, section 1341, and wire fraud, section 1343. One Florida district court has held that indictable implies probable cause and that probable cause can be determined "only if the factual basis of the predicate acts is set out with specificity." Banco de Desarrollo Agropecuario, S.A. v. Gibbs, 640 F. Supp. 1168, 1175 (S.D. Fla. 1986); see United States v. Cox, 342 F.2d 167, 170 (5th Cir.) (en banc), cert. denied, 381 U.S. 935, 14 L. Ed. 2d 700, 85 S. Ct. 1767 (1965).

Furthermore, HN10[] when the racketeering activity includes allegations of fraud, Rule 9(b) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure requires that "the circumstances constituting fraud . . . shall be stated with particularity." Fed. R. Civ. P. 9(b); Shared Network, 669 F. Supp. at 428; Mills, 668 F. Supp. at 1558; see Haroco, Inc. v. American National Bank & Trust Co., 747 F.2d 384, 405 (7th Cir. 1984), aff'd, 473 U.S. 606, 87 L. Ed. 2d 437, 105 S. Ct. 3291 (1985). Plaintiff may either allege date, time, place, and content of the alleged fraud or it may "use alternative means of injecting precision and some measure of substantiation into . . . [its] allegations of fraud." Seville Industrial [26] Machinery Corp. v. Southmost Machinery Corp., 742 F.2d 786, 791 (3d Cir. 1984), cert. denied, 469 U.S. 1211, 84 L. Ed. 2d 327, 105 S. Ct. 1179 (1985); Shared Network, 669 F. Supp. at 428; Mills, 668 F. Supp. at 1558. While Rule 9(b) must be harmonized with Rule 8(a), "the mere assertion of mail [and wire] fraud in conclusory language is not enough to support a RICO claim" because defendant is not notified of the precise misconduct with which it is charged. Shared Network, 669 F. Supp. at 428; see Fed. R. Civ. P. 8(a); Seville, 742 F.2d at 791; Mills, 668 F. Supp. at 1558. Plaintiff's complaint generally alleges that defendant utilized the mail and wire communications to defraud plaintiff, and it does not supply an alternative means of substantiating the allegations of fraud. Plaintiff's pleading is insufficient to place defendant on notice of the charges of fraud. Cf. Shared Network, 669 F.2d at 428-29 (The court found that plaintiff's complaint plead circumstances of the fraud with sufficient particularity because it stated, among other things, the dates, descriptions and amounts due on each of the invoices; the purchase order reference and date and amount of a check signed by defendant; and the dates of board meetings [27] [*1580] where defendant allegedly fraudulently failed to disclose material information regarding bogus invoices and defendant's alleged authorization of the payment of those invoices.).

HN11[] In order to allege violation of section 1962(a)-(c), a plaintiff also must allege a "pattern of racketeering activity," defined as "at least two acts of racketeering activity" within the time period specified by section 1961(5). 18 U.S.C. §§ 1961(5) & 1962. Expounding upon the two-acts-of-racketeering-activity requirement for a pattern, the Supreme Court has said:

> The implication is that while two acts are necessary, they may not be sufficient. Indeed, in common parlance two of anything do not generally form a "pattern." The legislative history supports the view that two isolated acts of racketeering activity do not constitute a pattern. As the Senate Report explained: "The target of [RICO] is thus not sporadic activity. The infiltration of legitimate business normally requires more than one 'racketeering activity' and the threat of continuing activity to be effective. It is this factor of continuity plus relationship which combines to produce a pattern." S. Rep. No. 91-617, p. 158 (1969) (emphasis added).

[28] Sedima, 473 U.S. at 496 n.14. In addition to the "continuity plus relationship" requirement, approved by the Supreme Court for establishing a pattern of racketeering activity, the Eleventh Circuit expressly has adopted "the threat of continuing activity" for finding a pattern. Sedima, 473 U.S. at 496 n.14; Bank of America National Trust & Savings Association v. Touche Ross & Co., 782 F.2d 966, 971 (11th Cir. 1986); Mills, 668 F. Supp. at 1560; Sheftelman v. Jones, 636 F. Supp. 263, 267 (N.D. Ga. 1986); see United States v. Fernandez, 797 F.2d 943, 951

(11th Cir. 1986), cert. denied, 483 U.S. 1006, 107 S. Ct. 3230, 97 L. Ed. 2d 736 (1987); Shared Network, 669 F. Supp. at 428.

District courts in the Eleventh Circuit have interpreted the continuity standard of Touche Ross to require "'both temporal separation and relatedness.'" Mills, 668 F. Supp. at 1560 (quoting Sheftelman, 636 F. Supp. at 268); see Touche Ross, 782 F.2d at 971; Shared Network, 669 F. Supp. at 428. While Touche Ross found that the predicate acts may occur in the same criminal scheme to satisfy the pattern requirement, it determined the "threat of continuing activity" based on the parties' relationship, the time frame of the predicate acts, and the [29] number of predicate acts. Touche Ross, 782 F.2d at 971; Mills, 668 F. Supp at 1560; Sheftelman, 636 F. Supp. at 268; see Shared Network, 669 F. Supp. at 427-28. In Touche Ross, the complaint satisfied the pattern requirement because it alleged nine separate acts of wire and mail fraud over three years, involving the same parties for the purpose of inducing banks to extend credit to a corporation. Touche Ross, 782 F.2d at 971; see Shared Network, 669 F. Supp. at 427-28.

With the guidance of Sedima and Touche Ross, determination of the pattern requirement remains a decision that must be made in the context of the facts alleged in a given case. See Shared Network, 669 F. Supp. at 428; Ghouth v. Conticommodity Services, Inc., 642 F. Supp. 1325, 1337 (N.D. Ill. 1986). The court finds that plaintiff's civil RICO allegations in Count IV are too indefinite and conclusory to state a RICO claim under section 1962(a)-(c). Even if two predicate acts have been alleged, plaintiff has failed to state a pattern of racketeering activity by demonstrating a threat of continuity. Sheftelman, 636 F. Supp. at 268; see Mills, 668 F. Supp. at 1561.

Sedima states the prerequisites for alleging a civil RICO [30] claim:

> Where the plaintiff alleges each element of the violation, the compensable injury necessarily is the harm caused by predicate acts sufficiently related to constitute a pattern, for the essence of the violation is the commission of those acts in connection with the conduct of an enterprise. . . . Any recoverable damages [*1581] occurring by reason of a violation . . . will flow from the commission of the predicate acts.

Sedima, 473 U.S. at 497; Morast v. Lance, 807 F.2d 926, 932-33 (11th Cir. 1987); Touche Ross, 782 F.2d at 969. Plaintiff has failed to allege definitively an enterprise as well as to state a "threat of continuing activity" necessary to allege a pattern of racketeering activity in the Eleventh Circuit. The court also is mindful that plaintiff has not sought to amend its complaint since filing on November 14, 1985, and conducting over a year of discovery. Therefore, defendant's motion for judgment on the pleadings as to Count IV, the civil RICO allegations, is GRANTED.

Accordingly, defendant's motion for judgment on the pleadings is DENIED IN PART and GRANTED IN PART. Defendant's motion for pretrial conference is DENIED. This case will proceed to trial during [31] the trial term commencing April 4, 1988, but not prior to April 11, 1988.

It is SO ORDERED at Orlando, Florida, this 31 day of March, 1988.

End of Document

Parkway Gallery Furniture, Inc. v. Kittinger/Pennsylvania House Group, Inc.

United States District Court for the Middle District of North Carolina

March 31, 1988, Decided; April 1, 1988, Filed, Entered

C-86-674-D; C-86-675-G

Reporter
1988 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 19634 *

PARKWAY GALLERY FURNITURE, INC., Plaintiff v. KITTINGER/PENNSYLVANIA HOUSE GROUP, INC., d/b/a PENNSYLVANIA HOUSE, Defendant;ROSE FURNITURE COMPANY, Plaintiff v. KITTINGER/PENNSYLVANIA HOUSE GROUP, INC., d/b/a PENNSYLVANIA HOUSE, Defendant

Subsequent History: Motion denied by Parkway Gallery Furniture, Inc. v. Kittinger/Pennsylvania House Group, Inc., 121 F.R.D. 264, 1988 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 16138 (M.D.N.C., Aug. 17, 1988)

Core Terms

dealers, manufacturer, Sherman Act, plaintiffs', claim for relief, complaints, conspiracy, concerted action, restrictions, nonprice, prices, distributors, allegations, furniture, vertical, retailers, retail price, summary judgment, conspired, price-fixing, act independently, discounter, terminate, defense motion, rule of reason, Marketing, antitrust, consumers, Customer, anti trust law

Counsel: [*1] For KITTINGER/PENNSYLVANIA INC. (1:86-cv-00674-HHW-RAE), Defendant: DAVID COVENTRY SMITH, KILPATRICK TOWNSEND & STOCKTON LLP, WINSTON-SALEM, NC.

For KITTINGER/PENNSYLVANIA INC. (2:86-cv-00675-HHW-RAE), Defendant: DAVID COVENTRY SMITH, KILPATRICK TOWNSEND & STOCKTON LLP, WINSTON-SALEM, NC.

Judges: HIRAM H. WARD, Chief United States District Judge.

Opinion by: HIRAM H. WARD

Opinion

MEMORANDUM OPINION AND ORDER

WARD, Chief Judge

This matter comes before the Court on Pennsylvania House's Motion for Partial Summary Judgment (October 29, 1986) pursuant to Rule 56 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. The claims contested by defendant's motion allege that prohibiting the solicitation or selling by mail or telephone order of defendant's furniture outside an individual dealer's area of retail responsibility constitutes an unreasonable restraint on trade in violation of section 1 of the Sherman Act (codified as amended at 15 U.S.C. § 1). Having been fully briefed and argued at a hearing on December 9, 1987, the motion is now ready for ruling.

FACTS

Plaintiffs Parkway Gallery Furniture, Inc. and Rose Furniture Company are retail furniture dealers in North Carolina. Defendant Kittinger/Pennsylvania House Group, Inc. manufactures [*2] furniture known as "American Traditional" and provides plaintiffs with such merchandise for retail sales. Having no company—owned dealers, defendant relies wholly upon the business vitality of its dealers to provide Pennsylvania House furniture to consumers. For this reason, defendant imposes certain restrictions and obligations on its dealers.

Since 1975, defendant has placed two specific duties on its dealers. First, dealers must dedicate floor space to actually display defendant's furniture. In addition, defendant urges dealers to arrange the furniture in a room-like setting in order to establish a Pennsylvania House "gallery." Second, dealers must participate in defendant's promotional programs and invest in local tabloids to advertise Pennsylvania House lines. The parties agree that both Rose and Parkway fully comply with these requirements and are full service Pennsylvania House dealers. Moreover, defendant maintains that, although it provides suggested retail prices, individual dealers are free to set their own prices. (Affidavit of Edwin H. Roberts ¶ 16).

Over the past several years, various dealers around the country have notified defendant of lost sales to dealers such as plaintiffs [*3] who sell at discounts and engage in mail or telephone orders outside their local trading areas. See, e.g., (II Deposition of Edwin H. Roberts at 24-26). Specifically, a marketing survey conducted by defendant indicated that dealers were upset that consumers were using their local stores for shopping, display, and sales assistance prior to ordering furniture from plaintiffs at a discount. (Deposition of John F. Pastrone at 122-23, 154-57). Moreover, an employee of Parkway admitted that, in order to help a caller, "it might be that we would tell them to shop locally, that we didn't know the numbers or we didn't want any confusion in selling them a piece that wouldn't match [previously purchased furniture]." (Deposition of Daniel M. Warren at 372). In addition, plaintiff Rose maintains a toll—free telephone number for customers to use in ordering furniture for shipment outside its local calling area.

Based on these complaints, defendant revised its Retail Marketing Policy [RMP] in order to prohibit dealers from soliciting or selling its furniture by mail or telephone order to consumers residing outside the specific area of retail responsibility. Defendant specifically contends that its [*4] decision to adopt these prohibitions resulted from independent business considerations and was not the product of any agreement with its dealers. See (Affidavit of John F. Pastrone ¶ 11); (E.Roberts Aff. ¶ 15); (Affidavit of Terry J. Martina ¶ 6). Plaintiffs, on the other hand, contend that the RMP resulted from an illegal agreement between defendant and complaining dealers.

On August 11, 1986, plaintiffs filed these actions against defendant in the United States District Court for the Middle District of North Carolina, alleging, inter alia, that the Retail Marketing Policy violated federal antitrust laws. In response to a motion for a preliminary injunction, defendant voluntarily agreed not to enforce the relevant prohibitions as to plaintiffs pending the resolution of the merits of the case. See (Agreed Order [Aug. 16, 1986]). Defendant then filed a motion for summary judgment on plaintiffs' Sherman Act claims on October 28, 1986. After extensive attempts to settle the case failed, defendant implemented the RMP as to all of its dealers except plaintiffs on February 12, 1988.

DISCUSSION

In the time since the filing of defendant's motion, the parties have conducted at least twenty-six [*5] depositions and produced documents exceeding a total of 50,000 pages. The Court must now wade through this material and decide whether plaintiffs have sufficiently supported their allegation that defendant's Retail Marketing Policy is the product of an agreement either to fix or maintain prices or to impose an unreasonable nonprice restraint on trade. Defendant contends that plaintiffs engaged in "free riding" by selling Pennsylvania House furniture to consumers who shop at local dealers and then order by mail or telephone from plaintiffs at a discount. On the other hand, plaintiffs argue that defendant conspired with other dealers to artificially destroy price competition. Additionally, plaintiffs contend that the RMP constitutes an unreasonable nonprice restraint on trade.

The Tenth Circuit has emphasized the importance in antitrust cases of keeping in mind "that the purpose of antitrust laws is the promotion of consumer welfare." Westman Comm'n Co. v. Hobart Int'l, Inc., 796 F.2d 1216, 1220 (10th Cir. 1986)(citing National Collegiate Athletic Ass'n v. Board of Regents, 468 U.S. 85, 107, 104 S. Ct. 2948, 2964, 82 L. Ed. 2d 70 (1984)). On the other hand, "the antitrust laws should not restrict [*6] the autonomy of independent businessmen when their activities have no adverse impact on the price, quality, and quantity of goods and services offered to the consumer." Id. Consequently, "a manufacturer generally should have wide latitude in determining the profile of its distributorships." Id. at 1225. Accordingly, a court should keep both of these considerations in mind in ruling on the legality of a disputed practice.

With these general principles in mind, the Court now turns to the issues raised by defendant's motion. Prior to analyzing plaintiffs' Sherman Act claims, the Court will set out the law involved in this motion. First, the Court will discuss the law governing alleged vertical price-fixing agreements. Second, the Court will discuss the law as to alleged vertical nonprice restraints on trade. Third, the Court will discuss the law governing alleged vertical conspiracies between a manufacturer and an unwilling dealer. Fourth, the Court will discuss the law as to alleged horizontal price-fixing agreements between manufacturers. Following these sections on the law, the Court will analyze each of plaintiff's Sherman Act claims in light of the law as stated and the facts of this [*7] case.

I.

The Supreme Court has long held that concerted action by a manufacturer and its dealers to set or maintain retail prices violates section 1 of the Sherman Act. Dr. Miles Medical Co. v. John D. Park & Sons Co., 220 U.S. 373, 405, 31 S.Ct. 376, 384, 55 L. Ed. 502, 517-18 (1911).[1] Hence, a manufacturer acting independently may announce a price and chose to deal with only those retailers who adhere to it without violating the Sherman Act. United States v. Colgate & Co., 250 U.S. 300, 307, 39 S.Ct. 465, 468, 63 L. Ed. 992, 997, 1919 Dec. Comm'r Pat. 460 (1919)(emphasis added). Moreover, evidence that a manufacturer terminated discounters in response to complaints from other retailers is insufficient by itself to prove an illegal price-fixing conspiracy. Monsanto Co. v. Spray-Rite Serv. Corp., 465 U.S. 752, 760-64, 104 S.Ct. 1464, 1469-71, 79 L.Ed.2d 775, 783-86 (1984).

Writing for a unanimous Court in Monsanto, Justice Powell emphasized the rationale for such a high standard of proof in conspiracy cases. Specifically, he noted, "Permitting an agreement to be inferred merely from the existence of complaints, or even from the fact that termination came about 'in response to' complaints, could deter or penalize perfectly legitimate conduct." Id. at 763, 104 S.Ct. at 1470, 79 L.Ed.2d at 785 (emphasis added). In a later case, Justice Powell added that "mistaken inferences in cases such as this one are especially [*9] costly, because they chill the very conduct the antitrust laws are designed to protect." Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 594, 106 S.Ct. 1348, 1360, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538, 557 (1986)(emphasis added). Hence, "something more than evidence of complaints is needed. There must be evidence that tends to exclude the possibility that the manufacturer and nonterminated distributors were acting independently." Monsanto, 765 U.S. at 764, 104 S.Ct. at 1471, 79 L.Ed.2d at 785.

In construing Monsanto, the Fourth Circuit through Judge Butzner has emphasized the freedom of dealers to set their own retail prices as a fact that mandates the dismissal of conspiracy claims. See Garment Dist., Inc. v. Belk Stores Servs., Inc., 799 F.2d 905, 908 (4th Cir. 1986); National Marine Elec. Dists., Inc. v. Raytheon Co., 778 F.2d 190, 193 (4th Cir. 1985). In Raytheon, the court specifically noted that "in order to conspire to restrain retail price competition there must be some agreement to set, control, fix, maintain, or stabilize prices. Here there was no agreement. Each dealer, including [the plaintiff], set its own prices." Id. (emphasis added). This evidence, Judge Butzner reasoned, "refutes [*10] the charge that [the manufacturer] conspired with one or more dealers to terminate [the plaintiff] for the purpose of restraining price competition." Id. (emphasis added). For this reason, the court affirmed the district court's entry of a directed verdict in favor of the defendant on the plaintiff's conspiracy claims.

[1] The Supreme Court has long recognized that price-fixing agreements are unlawful per se under the Sherman Act. See United States v. Socony-Vacuum Oil Co., 310 U.S. 150, 223, 60 S.Ct. 811, 844, 84 L.Ed. 1129, 1168 (1940). In Continental T.V., Inc. v. GTE Sylvania Inc., 433 U.S. 36, 97 S.Ct. 2549, 53 L.Ed.2d 568 (1977), the Court overruled its recently [*8] adopted rule making vertical market allocations unlawful per se and reinstated a Rule of Reason analysis. Id. One commentator has noted, "Subsequent to Sylvania, several cases and law review articles have attacked or questioned the per se rule as applied to vertical price restraints." II E.Kintner, Federal Antitrust Law § 10.18, at 126 (Supp. 1988)[hereinafter Kintner]. However, finding that plaintiffs in this case have not produced sufficient evidence of a conspiracy either between defendant and other dealers or between defendant and other manufacturers, the Court need not decide whether a per se or Rule of Reason analysis applies to these price claims.

In likewise upholding a directed verdict in favor of the defendant/manufacturer, the Belk court first of all noted that "although [the manufacturer] suggested retail prices, each merchant was free to set its own price." Belk, 799 F.2d at 908 (emphasis added). Moreover, Judge Butzner emphasized, "Although [the manufacturer] responded favorably to Belk's complaints about the [discounter], it did not enter into any agreement with Belk to fix or maintain retail prices. Belk and its neighboring competitor, Ivey's, remained free to set their own prices." Id. at 908-09 (emphasis added). In addition, Judge Butzner noted that "the manufacturer sought to retain many dealers by sacrificing one. It acted without exacting an agreement from the remaining dealers to maintain prices." Id. at 910 (emphasis added).

In applying Raytheon and Belk to the record in these cases, the Court feels [*11] constrained to grant defendant's motion as to plaintiffs' Sherman Act claims. Here, as in Raytheon and Belk, plaintiffs and other dealers set their own retail prices; defendant merely suggested a retail price that dealers could and do freely ignore. Moreover, although defendant responded favorably to dealer complaints about plaintiffs' way of doing business, no evidence exists that it entered into any agreement with those dealers. It merely sought to retain many dealers by sacrificing Rose and Parkway, if necessary, because of noncompliance with the RMP. The RMP operated for the good of all dealers and reflected legitimate business concerns of defendant; the fact that Rose and Parkway were harmed by the policy is immaterial. As stated in Belk, "[a] manufacturer is not prohibited from avoiding the potential loss of many of its dealers because it acted in response to price complaints." Id. at 909 (citing Monsanto, 465 U.S. at 764, 104 S.Ct. at 1471, 79 L.Ed.2d at 785).[2]

II.

In light of the language in Belk, the record in this case appears deficient as to all claims under section 1 of the Sherman Act. The fact that plaintiffs and other dealers remained free to set price independently of defendant precludes a finding of conspiracy. In order to prove a Section 1 violation, a plaintiff must establish each of the following essential elements:

> (1) the activities must be in or affect interstate commerce or foreign commerce; (2) the activities must be performed by two or more persons; (3) the activities must be the result of concerted action; (4) the concerted action must constitute a restraint on trade or commerce; [*13] and (5) the restraint must be unreasonable.

II Kintner § 9.1, at 5 (1980). Hence, a broad reading of Belk stands for the proposition that undisputed evidence of freedom to set price precludes a finding that a manufacturer conspired with other dealers at all, whether with regard to price or nonprice aspects. On the other hand, a narrower reading of Belk and Raytheon would limit their holdings to claims of conspiracy as to price. Thus, nonprice conspiracies would still be judged independently under Monsanto. Believing that a reasonable question exists as to the application of Belk and Raytheon in this case, the Court will analyze plaintiffs' nonprice allegations in light of the Monsanto case.

As a preliminary matter, the Court will note that the Supreme Court expressly overruled its rule making vertical market allocations unlawful per se in Continental T.V., Inc. v. GTE Sylvania Inc., 433 U.S. 36, 97 S.Ct. 2549, 53 L.Ed.2d 568 (1977)(overruling United States v. Arnold, Schwinn & Co., 388 U.S. 365, 87 S.Ct. 1856, 18 L.Ed.2d 1249 (1967)). See also Monsanto, 465 U.S. at 761, 104 S.Ct. at 1469, 79 L.Ed.2d at 784 (noting that "concerted action on nonprice restrictions . . . are judged under [*14] the rule of reason . . . ."). Accordingly, plaintiff's claims that alleged vertical nonprice restraints are per se unlawful must be dismissed. However, although surviving Sylvania, plaintiffs' other nonprice allegations — those advocating a Rule of Reason analysis — must still pass muster under Monsanto as to the existence of concerted action.

[2] The Court would specifically add at this point that plaintiffs' reliance on Fragale & Sons Beverage Co. v. Dill, 760 F.2d 469 (3d Cir. 1985), is misplaced. In Belk, the court expressly distinguished Fragale as there was [*12] no allegation in that case "that competing distributors threatened to stop buying from the defendants if they supplied the new distributor." Belk, 799 F.2d at 910, Hence, the Belk court reasoned on the facts before it that, even if the reason advanced to justify termination of a discounter is pretextual, "[the manufacturer] still had a legitimate, independent reason to terminate their relationship." Id. at 910-11, Similarly, threats by plaintiffs' competing dealers to stop buying from defendant likewise distinguishes the case sub judice from Fragale.

As the Monsanto Court stated, "Section 1 of the Sherman Act requires that there be a 'contract, combination ... or conspiracy' between the manufacturer and other distributors in order to establish a violation." Monsanto, 465 U.S. at 761, 104 S.Ct. at 1469, 79 L.Ed.2d at 783 (citing 15 U.S.C. § 1). In other words, "[i]ndependent action is not proscribed." Id. Thus, a manufacturer "generally has a right to deal, or refuse to deal, with whomever it likes, as long as it does so independently." Id (citing Colgate, 250 U.S. at 307, 39 S.Ct. at 468, 63 L.Ed. at 997).[3]

In analyzing the facts before it, the Monsanto Court emphasized [*15] that "the fact that a manufacturer and its distributors are in constant communication about prices and marketing strategy does not alone show that the distributors are not making independent pricing decisions." Id. at 762, 104 S.Ct. at 1470, 79 L.Ed.2d at 784. Accordingly, the fact that defendant communicated with distributors regarding prices and marketing strategy does not alone show a conspiracy under Section 1. As the Monsanto Court stated, "[a] manufacturer and its distributors have legitimate reasons to exchange information about the prices and the reception of their products in the market." Id. Consequently, "[t]he manufacturer often will want to ensure that its distributors earn sufficient profit to pay for its programs such as hiring and training additional salesmen or demonstrating the technical features of the product, and will want to see that 'free—riders' do not interfere." Id. at 762-63, 104 S.Ct. at 1469-70, 79 L.Ed.2d at 784-85 (citing Sylvania, 433 U.S. at 55, 97 S.Ct. at 2560, 53 L.Ed.2d at 584).

Although Monsanto itself involved allegations of vertical restrictions as to retail price, the Court finds its analysis equally applicable to alleged nonprice restraints. Thus, [*16] "something more than evidence of complaints is needed. There must be evidence that tends to exclude the possibility that the manufacturer and nonterminated distributors were acting independently." Id. at 764, 104 S.Ct. at 1471, 79 L.Ed.2d at 785.

In other words, "the antitrust plaintiff should present direct or circumstantial evidence that reasonably tends to prove that the manufacturer and others 'had a conscious commitment to a common scheme designed to achieve an unlawful objective.'" Id. at 764, 104 S.Ct. at 1471, 79 L.Ed.2d at 785-86.

In this case, the record fails to support plaintiff's allegations as to conspiracy. The evidence before the Court involves the following facts: (a) complaints by dealers that plaintiffs were selling to customers who shopped at other stores; and (b) implementation of the RMP. As discussed infra, plaintiffs have failed to support their contention that defendant and other manufacturers or dealers conspired to impose territorial and customer restrictions. In addition, inferring concerted action merely from complaints and action consistent with those complaints would both encourage speculation and "chill the very conduct the antitrust laws are designed to [*17] protect." Matsushita, 475 U.S. at 594, 106 S.Ct. at 1360, 89 L.Ed.2d at 557. Consequently, the Court will dismiss all of plaintiffs' Sherman Act claims because the record does not support a finding of concerted action.

Regarding vertical nonprice restrictions, the Supreme Court has noted that "new manufacturers entering new markets can use the restrictions in order to induce competent and aggressive retailers to make the kind of investment of capital and labor that is often regarded in the distribution of products unknown to the consumer." Sylvania, 433 U.S. at 55, 97 S.Ct. at 2560, 53 L.Ed.2d at 583. More importantly, the Sylvania Court emphasized, "Established manufacturers can use [vertical restrictions] to induce retailers to engage in promotional activities or to provide service and repair facilities necessary to the efficient marketing of their products." Id. This is justified because "[t]he availability and quality of such services affect a manufacturer's goodwill and the competitiveness of his product." Id.

---

[3] Specifically, the so-called Colgate Doctrine permits a manufacturer to announce its resale price in advance and refuse to deal with those who fail to comply. See Monsanto, 465 U.S. at 761, 104 S.Ct. at 1469, 79 L.Ed.2d at 783-84.

Similarly, defendant in this case implemented the RMP to induce retailers to engage in various promotional activities requiring a substantial investment of advertising and showroom [*18] space. Thus, the restraints imposed upon plaintiffs are justified because "[t]he availability and quality of such services affect a manufacturer's goodwill and the competitiveness of his product." Id. In this case, defendant chose to impose certain restrictions on its dealers to maintain the viability and success of all its distributors. Moreover, the Court notes that plaintiffs have failed to sufficiently support their allegations of conspiracy. Consequently, their Sherman Act claims must all be dismissed.

III.

In their briefs, plaintiffs contend that defendant also violated section 1 by inducing their participation as unwilling coconspirators. Under the Sherman Act, an antitrust plaintiff may establish the essential element of concerted action by evidence of a contract between itself and the defendant. See Perma Life Mufflers v. International Parts Corp., 392 U.S. 134, 142, 88 S.Ct. 1981, 1986, 20 L. Ed. 2d 982, 992 (1968) (following Albrecht v. Herald Co., 390 U.S. 145, 88 S.Ct. 869, 19 L.Ed.2d 998 (1968); Simpson v. Union Oil Co. of Cal., 377 U.S. 13, 84 S.Ct. 1051, 12 L.Ed.2d 98 (1964)).[4] However, the defendant must do more than merely "announce" its policy and refuse to deal [*19] with those not in full compliance therewith; a court must find that the defendant coerced the plaintiff's adherence to the policy by seeking and obtaining assurances of compliance. United States v. Parke, Davis & Co., 362 U.S. 29, 46, 80 S.Ct. 503, 513, 4 L. Ed. 2d 505, 516-17 (1960). See also Isaksen v. Vermont Castings, Inc., 825 F.2d 1158, 1163 (7th Cir. 1987)(noting that "a plaintiff who is an involuntary participant must prove that the defendant induced his participation by conduct that went beyond merely announcing a policy of terminating dealers who sell below suggested retail prices . . . . ").

In the case sub judice, the record does not support an inference that defendant sought and obtained such assurances of compliance from either plaintiffs or other dealers. Certainly defendant consulted with dealers as to the viability of the RMP, and such interaction and consultation has been recognized by the Supreme Court as appropriate. See Monsanto, 465 U.S. at 762, 104 S.Ct. at 1470, 79 L.Ed.2d at 784 (noting that "the fact that a manufacturer and its distributors are in constant communication about prices and marketing strategy does not alone show that the distributors are not making independent pricing decisions."). In response, dealers voluntarily acquiesced in the policy; the record contains no evidence that defendant coerced compliance with the RMP by means prohibited by the Sherman Act.

Plaintiffs have likewise failed to sustain their burden under Rule 56 as to the element that defendant coerced their unwilling participation as coconspirators. The fact that Rose and Parkway faced sanctions and termination for noncompliance does not suffice under Parke, Davis. As the Colgate Court held, "In the absence of any purpose to create or maintain [*21] a monopoly, the [Sherman Act] does not restrict the long-recognized right of trader or manufacturer engaged in an entirely private business, freely to exercise his own independent discretion as to parties with whom he will deal." Colgate, 250 U.S. at 307, 39 S.Ct. at 468, 63 L.Ed. at 997. Consequently, "he may announce in advance the circumstances under which he will refuse to sell." Id. Plaintiffs cannot prove a conspiracy merely by advancing facts upon which a finding of concerted action would be considered mere speculation. Hence, their Sherman Act claims must be dismissed insofar as they allege their participation as unwilling coconspirators.

IV.

In addition to alleging vertical arrangements, plaintiffs have proffered a claim of a horizontal conspiracy between defendant and other manufacturers. The Supreme Court has long recognized that consciously parallel business behavior supports an inference of concerted action when coupled with other circumstantial evidence. See Theatre

---

[4] Each of these cases was limited by the Supreme Court's holding in Copperweld Corp. v. Independence Tube Corp., 467 U.S. 752, 104 S.Ct. 2731, 81 L.Ed.2d 628 (1984). The Copperweld Court specifically rejected the so-called "intra-enterprise doctrine" and held that a parent corporation and its wholly owned subsidiary are not legally capable of conspiring with each other under section 1 of the Sherman Act. Id. at 777, 104 S.Ct. at 2745, 81 L.Ed.2d at 647. However, Copperweld does not alter the cases cited above respecting the proposition that concerted action may be found between a defendant [*20] and an unwilling antitrust plaintiff.

Enters., Inc. v. Paramount Film Dist. Corp., 346 U.S. 537, 540-41, 74 S.Ct. 257, 259, 98 L.Ed. 273, 279 (1954). In order to prove consciously parallel behavior, an antitrust plaintiff must establish "(1) that [*22] the defendants' business behavior was parallel, and (2) that the defendants were conscious of each other's conduct and that their awareness was an element in their decisional process." Schoenkopf v. Williamson Tobacco Corp., 637 F.2d 205, 208 (3d Cir. 1980). Moreover, "a plaintiff must also show (1) that the defendants acted in contradiction of their economic interests, and (2) that the defendants had a motive to enter into an agreement." Id. (citations omitted).[5] Absent such additional evidence, a defendant is entitled to judgment as a matter of law.

In the case sub judice, plaintiffs failed to sufficiently plead a horizontal conspiracy in their respective complaints. Consequently, the Court is inhibited in examining the record for evidence to support their contentions. In their briefs, plaintiffs allege that defendant and other furniture manufacturers have engaged in concerted action in violation of section 1 of the Sherman Act and specifically rely on the case of United States v. Foley, 598 F.2d 1323 (4th Cir. 1979), cert. denied, 444 U.S. 1043, 100 S. Ct. 727, 100 S. Ct. 728, 62 L. Ed. 2d 728 (1980). However, the Foley court found "[a]cceptance by competitors of an invitation to participate in a plan . . . where each competitor knew that cooperation was essential to successful operation of the plan." Id. at 1331 (quoting 3 P.Areeda & D.Turner, Antitrust Law: An Analysis of Antitrust Principles and Their Application ¶ 841a, at 361-62 (1978)).

Unlike the facts of Foley, the case before the Court does not contain evidence of such an "invitation." In Foley, the defendant called a dinner meeting of his competitors at which he announced that his real estate firm was changing its commission rate from six percent to seven percent. Id. at 1332. [*24] Moreover, in the following months, each defendant in fact began to take substantial numbers of seven percent listings. Id. Additionally, evidence was introduced that members of the conspiracy sought to hold their fellows to the "agreement." Id.

Plaintiffs in this case rely on the fact that defendant's RMP and those of other dealers are "remarkably similar in form and timing." (Plaintiffs' Memorandum in Opposition to Defendant's Motion for Partial Summary Judgment at 73 [Aug. 31, 1987])[hereinafter (Plaintiffs' Brief)]. However, section 1 requires more than mere similarity in order to constitute concerted action. In this case, plaintiffs have failed to sufficiently support the contention in their briefs that defendant conspired with other furniture manufacturers. Pennsylvania House may have known of other marketing policies and specifically relied on them in formulating the RMP, but no evidence exists that these similar policies resulted from concerted action. See (II E.Roberts Dep. at 31). Consequently, plaintiffs' allegations of a horizontal conspiracy between defendant and other manufacturers must be dismissed.

V.

With the above legal principles in mind, the Court now turns to plaintiffs' [*25] specific claims challenged by defendant's motion. The first six claims for relief allege various per se violations of Section 1 of the Sherman Act. The eighth claim alleges violations to be judged under a Rule of Reason standard.[6] For the following reasons, the Court will dismiss all of plaintiffs' Sherman Act claims. As discussed supra, plaintiffs' Sherman Act claims must be dismissed insofar as they involve allegations of a vertical conspiracy between defendant and plaintiffs and contentions that defendant conspired with other manufacturers. Moreover, plaintiffs' per se allegations as to a nonprice conspiracy must be dismissed under Sylvania. Accordingly, the discussion below focuses on plaintiffs' Rule of Reason allegations that defendant and other retailers conspired to unreasonably restrain trade.

---

[5] In other words, a factfinder may not transform conscious parallelism into conspiracy absent additional circumstantial evidence. Such facts are commonly referred to as "plus factors" and have been identified as follows: (1) indications of "traditional conspiracy;" (2) motive; (3) actions contrary to economic self-interests; (4) poor economic performance; and (5) actions facilitating oligopolistic collaboration. McElhinney v. Medical Protective Co., 549 F.Supp. 121, 129 (E.D.Ky. 1982) (quoting P.Areeda, Antitrust Analysis ¶ 325, at 371-82 (3d ed. 1981)), remanded for dismissal, 738 F.2d 439, 1984-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) ¶ 66,054 (6th Cir. June 5, 1984) [*23] .

[6] The Court would note that defendant's motion challenges only plaintiffs' Sherman Act claims. The seventh claim alleged Clayton Act violations and therefore is not presently before the Court.

The Supreme Court recently noted that "the plain language of Rule 56(c) mandates the entry of summary judgment . . . against a party who fails to make a showing sufficient to establish the existence [*26] of an element essential to that party's case, and on which that party will bear the burden of proof at trial." Celotex Corp. v. Catrett, 477 U.S. 317, 322, 106 S.Ct. 2548, 2552, 91 L.Ed.2d 265, 273 (1986). In other words, "there is no issue for trial unless there is sufficient evidence favoring the nonmoving party for a jury to return a verdict for that party. If the evidence is merely colorable, or not significantly probative, summary judgment may be granted." Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc., 477 U.S. 242, 250, 106 S. Ct. 2505, 2511, 91 L. Ed. 2d 202, 212 (1986)(emphasis added), quoted in Felty v. Graves-Humphreys Co., 818 F.2d 1126, 1128 (4th Cir. 1987).[7]

On the other hand, "the judge's function is not himself to weigh the evidence and determine the truth of the matter . . . ." Id. at 248, 106 S.Ct. at 2510, 91 L.Ed.2d at 212 (emphasis added). Instead, the court's role is "to determine whether there [*27] is a genuine issue for trial." Id. In this way, "th[e] standard [for granting summary judgment] mirrors the standard for a directed verdict under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 50(a) . . . ." Id. at 249, 106 S.Ct. at 2511, 91 L.Ed.2d at 213. In other words, a court should never dismiss a claim "[i]f reasonable minds could differ as to the import of the evidence . . . ." Id. (citing Wilkerson v. McCarthy, 336 U.S. 53, 61, 69 S.Ct. 413, 417, 93 L. Ed. 497, 505 (1949)). However, the Court finds summary judgment to be appropriate in this case since plaintiffs have failed to sustain their burden.[8]

A. First Claim for Relief — Refusal to Deal

As stated above, a plaintiff claiming a Section 1 violation must establish, inter alia, a "contract, combination ... or conspiracy" between the manufacturer and other distributors. 15 U.S.C. § 1. Thus, "[i]ndependent action is not proscribed." Monsanto, 465 U.S. at 761, 104 S.Ct. at 1469, 79 L.Ed.2d at 783. [*28] In viewing plaintiffs' evidence in this case, the Court finds that the record fails to support their allegations of concerted refusal to deal. As the Monsanto Court noted, "something more than evidence of complaints is needed. There must be evidence that tends to exclude the possibility that the manufacturer and nonterminated distributors were acting independently." Id. at 764, 104 S.Ct. at 1471, 79 L.Ed.2d at 785. In this case, plaintiffs have presented no such evidence. Accordingly, this claim must be dismissed.

B. Second Claim for Relief — Price-Fixing

As stated above, the Fourth Circuit in construing Monsanto specifically noted that "in order to conspire to restrain retail price competition there must be some agreement to set, control, fix, maintain, or stablilize prices." Raytheon, 778 F.2d at 193 (emphasis added). Consequently, the fact that dealers set their own prices "refutes the charge that [the manufacturer] conspired with one or more dealers to terminate [the plaintiff] for the purpose of restraining price competition." Id. (emphasis added). Similarly, the undisputed fact that plaintiffs remain free under the RMP to set their own prices precludes a finding of conspiracy as [*29] a matter of law.

Moreover, the Belk court followed to Raytheon despite two additional facts alleged by the aggrieved discounter. First, the court noted that "although [the manufacturer] suggested retail prices, each merchant was free to set its own price." Belk, 799 F.2d at 908 (emphasis added). Second, the court emphasized, "Although [the manufacturer] responded favorably to Belk's complaints about the [discounter], it did not enter into any agreement with Belk to fix or maintain retail prices. Belk and its neighboring competitor, Ivey's, remained free to set their own prices." Id. at 908-09 (emphasis added).

---

[7] The Anderson Court also emphasized, "The mere existence of a scintilla of evidence in support of the plaintiff's position will be insufficient; there must be evidence on which the jury could reasonably find for the plaintiff." Id. at 252, 106 S.Ct. at 2512, 91 L.Ed.2d at 214 (emphasis added).

[8] The Court would note that the voluminous record in these cases prevented intimate familiarity with the facts underlying plaintiffs' claims. Consequently, the Court relied heavily on the exhaustive briefs filed by counsel to guide its consideration of plaintiffs' evidence.

Belk is controlling in this case for two reasons. First, Pennsylvania House, like the manufacturer in Belk, merely suggests retail price to its dealers; each individual dealer remains free under the RMP to set its own price. See (E.Roberts Aff. ¶ 16).[9] Second, although responding favorably to complaints about discounters, Pennsylvania House, like the manufacturer in Belk, did not enter into any agreement to fix or maintain retail prices. As the Monsanto Court stated, "something more than evidence of complaints is needed. There must be evidence that tends to exclude the possibility [*30] that the information and nonterminated distributors were acting independently." Monsanto, 765 U.S. at 764, 104 S.Ct. at 1471, 79 L.Ed.2d at 785. In other words, "the antitrust plaintiff should present direct or circumstantial evidence that reasonably tends to prove that the manufacturer and others 'had a conscious commitment to a common scheme designed to achieve an unlawful objective.'" Id. at 764, 104 S.Ct. at 1471, 79 L.Ed.2d at 785-86 (quoting Edward J. Sweeney & Sons, Inc. v. Texaco, Inc., 637 F.2d 105, 111 (3d Cir. 1980), cert. denied, 451 U.S. 911, 101 S. Ct. 1981, 68 L. Ed. 2d 300 (1981)).

In [*31] this case, the Court finds that plaintiffs' evidence on the element of conspiracy fails to create a genuine issue of fact under Monsanto, Raytheon, and Belk. Accordingly, the Court will enter judgment as a matter of law in favor of defendant on this claim and dismiss it with prejudice. The Monsanto Court emphasized the importance of distinguishing vertical price-fixing agreements that are per se illegal under the Sherman Act and "[a] independent action by the manufacturer, and [b] concerted action on nonprice restrictions . . . ." Id. at 763, 104 S.Ct. at 1470, 79 L.Ed.2d at 785. In this case, the record indicates that the RMP is not the result of a price-fixing agreement; rather, it results either from defendant's independent action (as alleged by defendant) or from concerted action respecting nonprice restrictions (as alleged by plaintiffs). Moreover, plaintiffs' other allegations as to price-fixing similarly lack evidentiary support in the record. Accordingly, plaintiffs' allegations of a vertical price-fixing agreement must be dismissed.

C. Third Claim for Relief — Customer Restrictions

As noted earlier, "concerted action on nonprice restrictions . . . are judged under the rule of [*32] reason . . . ." Id. at 761, 104 S.Ct. at 1469, 79 L.Ed.2d at 784 (citing Continental T. V. v. GTE Sylvania, 433 U.S. 36, 97 S. Ct. 2549, 53 L. Ed. 2d 568). Consequently, plaintiffs' allegations that defendant has committed per se violations of the Sherman Act by restricting their access to customers must be dismissed as a matter of law.

D. Fourth Claim for Relief — Territorial Restrictions

Similarly, plaintiffs' allegations that the RMP constitutes a per se violation under Section 1 by imposing territorial restrictions on dealers must be dismissed under Sylvania.

E. Fifth Claim for Relief — Resale Price Maintenance

For the reasons stated above, plaintiffs' claims as to a vertical price-fixing agreement between defendant and other dealers must be dismissed under Monsanto, Raytheon, and Belk. In this case, defendant merely suggested retail prices; plaintiffs remained free at all times to set their own retail prices independently of both defendant and other dealers. This evidence, the Raytheon court reasoned, "refutes the charge that [the manufacturer] conspired with one or more dealers to terminate [the plaintiff] for the purpose of restraining price competition." Raytheon, 778 F.2d at 193 (emphasis added).

F. Sixth [*33] Claim for Relief — Customer Allocation and Market Division

These allegations repeat contentions made above. Accordingly, this claim alleging per se violations of the Sherman Act must be dismissed since "concerted action on nonprice restrictions . . . are judged under the rule of reason . . .

---

[9] Plaintiffs attempted to create a genuine issue of fact by producing claims of other dealers that defendant attempted to restrict their freedom to set their own price. See (Plaintiffs' Brief at 55-58). However, the Ninth Circuit rejected similar evidence as irrelevant because "[the plaintiff] cannot claim that the excluded evidence relates to business activity that involved or affected it; rather it relates to other retailers in other parts of the country." Filco v. Amana Refrigeration, Inc., 709 F.2d 1257, 1264 (9th Cir.)(emphasis added), cert. dismissed, 464 U.S. 956, 104 S. Ct. 385, 78 L. Ed. 2d 331 (1983).

." Monsanto, 465 U.S. at 761, 104 S.Ct. at 1469, 79 L.Ed.2d at 784 (citing Sylvania, 433 U.S. 36, 97 S.Ct. 2549, 53 L.Ed.2d 568).

G. Eighth Claim for Relief — Refusal to Deal, Price—Fixing, Customer and Territorial Restrictions, and Resale Price Maintenance

Since concerted action to set prices has been held per se illegal, plaintiffs' final Sherman Act claim involves only those allegations regarding concerted action on nonprice restrictions. As stated in Monsanto, "[t]he latter are judged under the rule of reason, which requires a weighing of the relevant circumstances of a case to decide whether a restrictive practice constitutes an unreasonable restraint on competition." Id. While oftentimes this standard requires a factual determination, the undisputed fact that a manufacturer acted independently is dispositive of the case and mandates judgment in favor of the defendant as a matter of law.

In Monsanto, [*34] a unanimous Supreme Court emphasized through Justice Powell, "Permitting an agreement to be inferred merely from the existence of complaints, or even from the fact that termination came about 'in response to' complaints, could deter or penalize perfectly legitimate conduct." Id. at 763, 104 S.Ct. at 1470, 79 L.Ed.2d at 785. Hence, "something more than evidence of complaints is needed. There must be evidence that tends to exclude the possibility that the manufacturer and nonterminated distributors were acting independently." Id. at 764, 104 S.Ct. at 1471, 79 L.Ed.2d at 785. In other words, "the antitrust plaintiff should present direct or circumstantial evidence that reasonably tends to prove that the manufacturer and others 'had a conscious commitment to a common scheme designed to achieve an unlawful objective.'" Id. at 764, 104 S.Ct. at 1471, 79 L.Ed.2d at 785-86 (quoting Texaco, 637 F.2d at 111).

Applying this standard to the record in this case, the Court finds that plaintiffs have failed to sufficiently support their allegations of unreasonable vertical and horizontal nonprice restraints on trade. The record contains evidence of complaints by other dealers and defendant's response [*35] to those complaints. In addition, plaintiffs have offered evidence that other furniture manufacturers imposed similar nonprice restrictions on dealers. But the Court cannot find "evidence that tends to exclude the possibility that the manufacturer and nonterminated distributors were acting independently." Id. Thus, plaintiffs have failed to "set forth specific facts showing that there is a genuine issue for trial." Fed.R.Civ.P. 56(e). Consequently, Rule 56 mandates that summary judgment be entered against them.

IT IS, THEREFORE, ORDERED that Pennsylvania House's Motion for Partial Summary Judgment be, and the same hereby is, GRANTED, and that plaintiff's First Claim for Relief, Second Claim for Relief, Third Claim for Relief, Fourth Claim for Relief, Fifth Claim for Relief, Sixth Claim for Relief, and Eighth Claim for Relief be, and the same hereby are, DISMISSED.

/s/ Hiram H. Ward

United States District Judge

March 31 , 1988.

JUDGMENT

This matter came before the Court on Pennsylvania House's Motion for Partial Summary Judgment (October 29, 1986) pursuant to Rule 56 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. For the reasons set out in the Memorandum Opinion and Order filed contemporaneously [*36] herewith, the Court granted defendant's motion. Moreover, finding that there is no just reason for delay, the Court will enter a judgment in favor of defendant on plaintiff's Sherman Act claims.

IT IS, THEREFORE, ORDERED AND ADJUDGED that Pennsylvania House's Motion for Partial Summary Judgment be, and the same hereby is, GRANTED, and that plaintiff's First Claim for Relief, Second Claim for Relief, Third Claim for Relief, Fourth Claim for Relief, Fifth Claim for Relief, Sixth Claim for Relief, and Eighth Claim for Relief be, and the same hereby are, DISMISSED.

/s/ Hiram H. Ward

United States District Judge

March 31, 1988.

Stitt Spark Plug Co. v. Champion Spark Plug Co.

United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit

April 1, 1988

No. 87-2656

Reporter

840 F.2d 1253 *; 1988 U.S. App. LEXIS 4064 ; 1988-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P67,946

Stitt Spark Plug Co., Plaintiff-Appellant, v. Champion Spark Plug Co., Defendant-Appellee

Subsequent History: [1] Petition for Rehearing En Banc Denied May 9, 1988.

Prior History: Appeal from the United States District Court for the Southern District of Texas.

Core Terms

pricing, plugs, spark plug, distributors, replacement, predatory, manufacturer, engine, competitor, antitrust, district court, original-equipment, monopoly, directed verdict, anticompetitive, industrial, markets, brand, Clayton Act, purchasers, practices

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Exclusive & Reciprocal Dealing > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Trials > Judgment as Matter of Law > General Overview

HN1[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Exclusive & Reciprocal Dealing

A district court should grant a directed verdict only if reasonable people could not arrive at a verdict against the moving party after considering all the evidence and all reasonable inferences that can be drawn from it in a light most favorable to the nonmoving party's case.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Opposing Materials > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > Implausible Claims

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Genuine Disputes

HN2[] Summary Judgment, Opposing Materials

A plaintiff's burden in opposing a motion for summary judgment in an antitrust case is to come forward with specific facts showing that there is a genuine issue for trial, that is, one that is economically plausible in light of the evidence presented. If the factual context renders the claim implausible, if the claim is one that simply makes no economic sense, a plaintiff must come forward with more persuasive evidence to support its claim than would otherwise be necessary to avoid summary judgment. The economic disincentives to predatory pricing often will justify a presumption that an allegation of such behavior is implausible.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Actual Monopolization > Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices > General Overview

HN3[] Actual Monopolization, Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices

Predatory pricing can be anticompetitive if it contributes to monopoly power; the successful predator eliminates its competitors in order to raise prices above competitive levels at a later time.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Actual Monopolization > Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices > General Overview

HN4[] Actual Monopolization, Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices

Without an economically plausible theory of anticompetitive effect, a plaintiff is not entitled to reach the jury on a predatory-pricing claim.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Discrimination > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Discrimination > Competitive Injuries > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Coverage > General Overview

HN5[] Monopolies & Monopolization, Attempts to Monopolize

The Robinson-Patman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 13(a), prohibits either direct or indirect discrimination in price between different purchasers of commodities of like grade and quality where the effect of such discrimination may be substantially to lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly in any line of commerce.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Discrimination > Competitive Injuries > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Trials > Judgment as Matter of Law > General Overview

Governments > Local Governments > Claims By & Against

HN6[] Price Discrimination, Competitive Injuries

When a company claims that its competitor engaged in price discrimination, a "primary-line" claim, injury to competition is not established by evidence of a mere diversion of business from one competitor to another.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Exclusive & Reciprocal Dealing > General Overview

Business & Corporate Law > Distributorships & Franchises > Causes of Action > Breach of Contract

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Types of Commercial Transactions > Sales of Goods > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

HN7[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Exclusive & Reciprocal Dealing

Section 3 of the Clayton Act makes it unlawful to make a sale or contract for sale of goods on the condition, agreement, or understanding that the purchaser thereof shall not deal in the goods of a competitor of the seller, where the effect of such condition, agreement, or understanding may be to substantially lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly in any line of commerce. 15 U.S.C.S. § 14.

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > Abuse of Discretion

Evidence > Admissibility > Procedural Matters > Rulings on Evidence

HN8[] Standards of Review, Abuse of Discretion

Evidentiary rulings are reviewable for abuse of discretion.

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review

Evidence > Admissibility > Procedural Matters > Rulings on Evidence

HN9[] Appeals, Standards of Review

The court will reverse a judgment for an evidentiary ruling only if it affects the substantial rights of the parties.

Civil Procedure > ... > Preclusion of Judgments > Estoppel > Collateral Estoppel

Civil Procedure > ... > Preclusion of Judgments > Estoppel > General Overview

HN10[] Estoppel, Collateral Estoppel

15 U.S.C.S. § 16(a) provides that a final judgment or decree in an antitrust proceeding brought by the government constitutes prima facie evidence against the defendant in any subsequent proceeding brought by a non-government party as to all matters respecting which said judgment or decree would be an estoppel as between the parties thereto.

Counsel: Wayne H. Paris, Attorney for Appellant.

Donald F. Melhorn, Jr., Rufus W. Oliver and N. K. Alexander, Jr., Attorneys for Appellee.

Judges: Brown, Johnson, and Patrick E. Higginbotham, Circuit Judges.

Opinion by: HIGGINBOTHAM

Opinion

[*1254] PATRICK E. HIGGINBOTHAM, Circuit Judge:

Stitt Spark Plug Company brought this antitrust suit against Champion Spark Plug Company alleging that Champion engaged in anticompetitive practices, including price discrimination, predatory pricing and exclusive dealing, violative of the Sherman and Robinson-Patman Acts. The district court entered a directed verdict for Champion after Stitt presented its evidence to the jury. We find that Stitt's theory of predatory pricing is implausible and that a reasonable jury could not have concluded that any exclusive dealing agreements with dealers denied Stitt access to the market for industrial spark plugs. We affirm.

I

Champion Spark Plug Company is the leading independent manufacturer of spark plugs, and sells at least three hundred different models [2] of plugs, many of which can be used in a variety of different engines. Champion's plugs fall into three broad categories: "industrial" plugs, for use in large, stationary engines; "commercial" plugs, for automotive and smaller engines; and "dual" plugs, which can be used in either industrial or commercial engines. Stitt Spark Plug Company, a smaller manufacturer, makes over two hundred different models, nearly all of which fall into the "industrial" category.

Both companies sell their spark plugs to two distinct kinds of purchasers. One group of buyers consists of companies that manufacture engines in which spark plugs are included as original equipment. The other group consists of warehouse distributors and retail part stores that purchase spark plugs for resale to engine owners as replacement equipment. The two "markets" are related, however, in that engine owners tend to purchase replacement plugs [*1255] of the same brand as the plugs that came with the engine originally. Stitt's witnesses provided at least three explanations for this preference: (1) engine operators have confidence in the original brand of plug because it performed well; (2) operators trust that the engine [3] manufacturer selected the original brand because it was well suited for the engine; and (3) operators fear that use of a different brand will endanger the engine's warranty.

In order to capitalize on this consumer preference, Champion sells spark plugs to original equipment manufacturers at prices well below the price of replacement plugs, even though the products are otherwise identical. Stitt brought this lawsuit alleging that Champion's pricing policy was predatory and in violation of the antitrust laws. The suit also alleged that Champion was guilty of price discrimination and exclusive dealing. After Stitt presented its evidence to a jury, the district court issued a directed verdict for Champion on all counts.

II

Stitt accused Champion of three kinds of anticompetitive conduct: predatory pricing under Sherman Act § 2 and Clayton Act § 2(a); price-discrimination under Clayton Act § 2(a); and exclusive dealing under Sherman Act § 1 and Clayton Act § 3. We deal with each allegation in turn, keeping in mind that HN1[] the district court should have granted a directed verdict only if [4] reasonable people could not arrive at a verdict against Champion after considering all the evidence and all reasonable inferences that can be drawn from it in a light most favorable to Stitt's case. [1]

A

Stitt first argues that Champion sold spark plugs in the original-equipment market at prices below cost in order to eliminate Stitt as a competitor in the replacement market. This conduct, according to Stitt, was an illegal attempt to monopolize within the meaning of Sherman Act § 2 [2] as well as unlawful price discrimination in violation of Clayton Act § 2(a). [3] Because we use a similar standard for judging assertions of predatory pricing under these statutes, [4] we discuss the claims together.

[5] The Supreme Court recently discussed predatory pricing in Matsushita Electric Industrial Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp. [5] [7] Matsushita considered the claim of American television manufacturers that a group of Japanese competitors conspired to lower the price of television sets in order to drive American manufacturers out of business. HN2[] In holding that the district court properly dismissed the case on summary judgment, the Court noted that plaintiff's burden was to "come forward with 'specific facts showing that there is a genuine issue for trial,'" [6] that is, one that is economically plausible in light of the evidence presented. "If the factual context renders respondents' claim implausible--if the claim is one that simply makes no economic sense--respondents must come forward with more persuasive evidence to support their claim than would otherwise be necessary [to avoid summary judgment]." [7] The Court went on to hold that the economic disincentives to predatory pricing often will justify a presumption that an allegation of such behavior is implausible.

> The success of [predatory [6] pricing] schemes is inherently uncertain: the short-run loss is definite, but the long-run [*1256] gain depends on successfully neutralizing the competition. Moreover, it is not enough simply to achieve monopoly power, as monopoly pricing may breed quick entry by new competitors eager to share in the excess profits. The success of any predatory scheme depends on maintaining monopoly power for long enough both to recoup the predator's losses and to harvest some additional gain. Absent some assurance that the hoped-for monopoly will materialize, and that it can be sustained for a significant period of time, "the predator must make a substantial investment with no assurance that it will pay off." Easterbrook, Predatory Strategies and Counterstrategies, 48 U.Chi.L.Rev. 263, 268 (1981). For this reason, there is a consensus among commentators that predatory pricing schemes are rarely tried, and even more rarely successful. [8]

HN3[]

As the Court recognized, predatory pricing can be anticompetitive if it contributes to monopoly power; the successful predator eliminates its competitors in order to raise prices above competitive levels at a later time.

---

[1] See Boeing Co. v. Shipman, 411 F.2d 365, 374 (5th Cir.1969).

[2] 15 U.S.C. § 2.

[3] 15 U.S.C. § 13(a).

[4] See Malcolm v. Marathon Oil Co., 642 F.2d 845, 853 n. 16 (5th Cir.), cert. denied, 454 U.S. 1125, 102 S. Ct. 975, 71 L. Ed. 2d 113 (1981).

[5] 475 U.S. 574, 106 S. Ct. 1348, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538 (1986); see also Cargill, Inc. v. Monfort of Colorado, Inc., 479 U.S. 104, 107 S. Ct. 484, 493-94, 93 L. Ed. 2d 427 (1986) (discussing predatory pricing).

[6] Matsushita, 106 S. Ct. at 1356 (emphasis in opinion) (quoting Fed.R.Civ.P. 56(e)).

[7] Matsushita, 106 S. Ct. at 1356.

[8] Id. at 1357-58.

[9] [8] Stitt's theory here is different: Champion is accused of cutting prices in one market--original equipment--in order to capture concurrent gains in another market--replacement equipment. It is central to Stitt's theory that purchasers of replacement spark plugs prefer the same brand that came with the equipment when new. [10]

Premised on this theory, Stitt's evidence could not support an economically plausible inference that Champion's policy was aimed ultimately at raising prices above competitive levels. Under Stitt's theory that a sale to an original-equipment manufacturer assures sales to the replacement market, an inquiry into competitive effect must look at the original and replacement markets together. When Champion sets the prices for original-equipment plugs, the expected return includes not only the price paid by the original-equipment manufacturer, but also the replacement purchases that probably will follow. Hence, any meaningful comparison of price and cost must encompass Champion's sales to both markets. [11] Stitt's evidence did not demonstrate that Champion's practices were "predatory" across both markets.

[9] Looking at it another way, Stitt never proved that Champion's recoupment of losses on below-cost sales depended upon the absence of Stitt as a competitor. No action of Champion prevented Stitt from also pricing its product to original-equipment manufacturers with an expectation of return from the replacement market. Stitt's own witnesses testified that the consumer preference can be captured by any manufacturer who can place its plugs with engine makers. [12] Hence, any ability Champion may have had to raise prices for replacement plugs was not the result of market power. HN4[🡅] Without an economically plausible theory of anticompetitive effect, Stitt was not entitled to reach the jury on the predatory-pricing claim.

[10] B

Stitt also alleged that Champion engaged in two kinds of illegal price-discrimination: [*1257] Champion charged different prices in the markets for original and replacement equipment, as we discussed, and Champion varied its prices between different warehouse distributors of replacement plugs. Stitt contended that these practices constituted an attempt to monopolize in violation of Sherman Act § 2. Stitt also complained that this discrimination violated HN5[🡅] the Robinson-Patman Act, which prohibits either direct or indirect "discrimination in price between different purchasers of commodities of like grade and quality . . . where the effect of such discrimination may be substantially to lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly in any line of commerce. . . ." [13]

HN6[🡅]

We [11] explained in International Air v. American Excelsior Co., [14] that when a company claims that its competitor engaged in price discrimination--a "primary-line" claim--injury to competition is not established by evidence of "a mere diversion of business from one competitor to another." [15] In International Air, we affirmed entry

---

[9] See Adjusters Replace-A-Car, Inc. v. Agency Rent-A-Car, Inc., 735 F.2d 884, 889 (5th Cir. 1984), cert. denied, 469 U.S. 1160, 105 S. Ct. 910, 83 L. Ed. 2d 924 (1985); International Air Industries, Inc. v. American Excelsior Co., 517 F.2d 714, 723 (5th Cir. 1975), cert. denied, 424 U.S. 943, 96 S. Ct. 1411, 47 L. Ed. 2d 349 (1976).

[10] The phenomenon that consumers prefer the original plug for replacement is not new to antitrust law. See Ford Motor Co. v. United States, 405 U.S. 562, 565, 92 S. Ct. 1142, 1145, 31 L. Ed. 2d 492 (1972) (discussing "OE tie" in automotive spark plugs).

[11] Cf. Bayou Bottling, Inc. v. Dr. Pepper Co., 725 F.2d 300, 305 (5th Cir.) (stating that predatory-pricing analysis must include entire product line), cert. denied, 469 U.S. 833, 105 S. Ct. 123, 83 L. Ed. 2d 65 (1984).

[12] Counsel for Stitt retreated from this admission at oral argument, contending for the first time that consumers tended to use Champion plugs for replacement purposes because Champion's exclusive-dealing practices made other brands unavailable. Such a theory is inconsistent with the essence of the predatory-pricing claim: if Champion so dominated the replacement market, it would not need to sell below cost in the original equipment market.

[13] 15 U.S.C. § 13(a).

[14] 517 F.2d 714 (5th Cir.1975).

of a directed verdict against a manufacturer of cooling pads who sued a competitor alleging that the competitor charged lower prices in some cities than in others. We found the directed verdict appropriate because there was no evidence that the defendant predatorily priced; in charging differential prices the defendant had not "sacrificed present revenues for the purposes of driving [the plaintiff] out of the market." [16] For proof of competitive effect, Stitt rests upon its assertion that the differences in price constitute predatory behavior.

As [12] we have explained, Stitt failed to prove that Champion's pricing of spark plugs in the original and replacement equipment markets was predatory. On this record, then, there was no attempt to monopolize nor proof of "lessened competition" within the meaning of the Robinson-Patman Act.

Champion did not deny that it sold industrial spark plugs to NAPA, a national chain of auto parts stores, at a lower price than it sold to other warehouse distributors and intermediate sellers. However, Stitt never produced evidence that the price difference inhibited competition or even its ability to compete in the replacement plug market; indeed, Stitt's brief on appeal fails to offer any theory as to why this should be so. Because the Robinson-Patman Act only prohibits price-discrimination with the requisite anticompetitive effect, the district court was justified in entering a direct verdict on this issue.

C

Stitt also alleged that Champion violated the Clayton Act in making agreements with distributors to carry Champion plugs exclusively. HN7[] Section 3 of the Act makes it unlawful to > make a sale [13] or contract for sale of goods . . . on the condition, agreement, or understanding that the . . . purchaser thereof shall not . . . deal in the goods . . . of a competitor . . . of the . . . seller, where the effect of . . . such condition, agreement, or understanding may be to substantially lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly in any line of commerce. [17]

The written agreement between Champion and its distributors disclaimed any obligation for the distributor to carry only Champion products. Stitt alleges, however, that Champion secured such agreements under the guise of a promotional program known as "Feature Line Selling." Under the program, Champion analyzed the distributor's rate of inventory turnover to determine which non-Champion brands were worth carrying; the underlying principle was that a distributor could reduce inventory costs by carrying only Champion's full line of plugs. Champion supplemented this persuasion by offering distributors [14] promotional gifts, ranging from jackets [*1258] to refrigerators, if they removed competing spark plugs from their shelves. Several former Champion salespersons and supervisors testified that these incentives persuaded at least three distributors to agree to stop carrying Stitt plugs.

Whether there were exclusive dealing contracts was a jury question, perhaps, but it does not follow that the district court erred in its directed verdict. While Stitt proved that a handful of distributors once removed Stitt plugs from their shelves, Stitt proved no instance in which a distributor honored an exclusive dealing agreement by refusing to purchase Stitt plugs. In addition, there was no testimony that any distributor agreed to refrain from selling competing plugs for any specified period of time. [18] There was no evidence that a distributor who failed to abide by the agreement would be subject to any sanction and hence no reason to believe distributors did not feel free to stock

---

[15] Id. at 721.

[16] Id. at 723.

[17] 15 U.S.C. § 14.

[18] Cf. Denison Mattress Factory v. Spring-Air Co., 308 F.2d 403, 412 (5th Cir.1962) (finding exclusive-dealing contract permissible because it was terminable without cause in six months). The Seventh Circuit also recently has concluded that because they lack any serious anticompetitive effect, "exclusive-dealing contracts terminable in less than a year are presumptively lawful under section 3." Roland Machinery Co. v. Dresser Indus., Inc., 749 F.2d 380, 395 (7th Cir.1984).

competing plugs. More to the point, Stitt did not prove the extent of its foreclosure from the replacement market; Stitt offered no comparison between the number of distribution outlets available and the number [15] of those foreclosed. Without more, no reasonable jury could have concluded that Champion's efforts foreclosed a "substantial share of the relevant market." [19] [16] Finally, Stitt's theory of the original-equipment preference is inconsistent with its claim that Champion denied Stitt access to the replacement market through exclusive-dealing contracts. Stitt would not gain much from access to distributors' shelves if Stitt could not place its plugs in original equipment and capture the consumer preference. Stitt's proof leads to the inescapable conclusion that the main competitive battle in this industry is fought at the front door of the original-equipment manufacturer. The jury was offered no proof that any anticompetitive practice of Champion handicapped Stitt in that fight.

III

Stitt also challenges the judgment on the basis of two evidentiary rulings. One ruling precluded discovery and admission of evidence as to any matter before April 15, 1978, the date of an existing antitrust settlement between Stitt and Champion. The other ruling excluded from evidence a 1953 cease-and-desist order entered against Champion by the Federal Trade Commission. HN8[] Keeping in mind that such evidentiary rulings are reviewable for abuse of discretion, [20] we find neither [17] ruling to be a basis for reversal.

A

The parties entered into a settlement on April 15, 1978, in which Stitt released Champion of any antitrust claims Stitt may have had at that time. The district court refused discovery of any document relating to Champion's activities before the settlement. The court also ordered such evidence excluded at trial.

Stitt argues persuasively that even though it could not sue Champion for conduct before the settlement, such conduct may be relevant to Champion's post-settlement activities and thus discoverable and admissible. [21] The argument is sound, as [*1259] far as it goes. HN9[] However, we will reverse a judgment for an evidentiary ruling such as this only if it affects the "substantial rights of the parties." [22] Stitt has yet to articulate a legitimate theory of antitrust [18] liability or to explain how the limit on discovery caused any prejudice. On these facts we will not speculate that the denial of discovery altered the result in this case.

B

An FTC investigation of Champion begun in the late 1940s resulted in a cease-and-desist order against the company based on violations of the antitrust laws. Although no copy of the 1953 order appears in the record, Stitt urges that it would have tended to prove that Champion engaged in a "common scheme or pattern of conduct" to violate the antitrust laws and should [19] have been admitted. But such an aged order is not probative of [19] See Tampa Electric Co. v. Nashville Coal Co., 365 U.S. 320, 328-29, 81 S. Ct. 623, 628-29, 5 L. Ed. 2d 580 (1961). We assume without deciding that Stitt adequately defined the relevant market. The district court held that Stitt never demonstrated which manufacturers and models of spark plugs should be included in the market for industrial plugs. We need not reach the issue.

---

[20] See Jon-T Chemicals, Inc. v. Freeport Chemical Co., 704 F.2d 1412, 1417 (5th Cir.1983).

[21] Many courts have followed a similar principle in permitting discovery of evidence pertaining to a defendant's conduct occurring before a limitations period has run. See Wright & Miller, Federal Practice & Procedure: Civil § 2009 n. 38 (1970 and Supp. 1987).

[22] See Fed.R.Evid. 103(a); Tugwell v. A.F. Klaveness & Co., 320 F.2d 866, 868 (5th Cir.1963), cert. denied, 376 U.S. 951, 84 S. Ct. 967, 11 L. Ed. 2d 970 (1964).

Champion's present practices. Moreover, because the order pertained only to Champion's conduct in the market for automotive spark plugs, it is of little relevance to Champion's present practices in the industrial-plug market.

Nor did excluding the order contravene HN10[] 15 U.S.C. § 16(a), which provides that "a final judgment or decree" in an antitrust proceeding brought by the government constitutes "prima facie evidence" against the defendant in any subsequent proceeding brought by a non-government party "as to all matters respecting which said judgment or decree would be an estoppel as between the parties thereto." Again, the conduct of which Stitt complains does not extend back three decades; the order would have no collateral estoppel effect if the government brought these claims.

AFFIRMED.

Burchett v. General Tel. Co. of South

United States District Court for the Eastern District of Kentucky

April 5, 1988, Decided ; April 5, 1988, Filed

Civil Action No. 87-33

Reporter

699 F. Supp. 114 *; 1988 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 12340 ; 1989-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P68,568

PAUL BURCHETT, PLAINTIFF, v. GENERAL TELEPHONE COMPANY OF THE SOUTH, DEFENDANT

Core Terms

summary judgment, antitrust, defense motion, termination, outrageous conduct, motive, group boycott, blacklisting, contractor, non-moving, telephone company, employees, reasons, malice

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Appropriateness

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Summary Judgment > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Motions for Summary Judgment > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Genuine Disputes

HN1[] Entitlement as Matter of Law, Appropriateness

Under Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(e), when a motion for summary judgment is made and supported as provided for in the rule, an adverse party may not rest upon the mere allegations or denials of the adverse party's pleading, but the adverse party's response, by affidavits or as otherwise specified in this rule, must set forth specific facts showing that there is a genuine issue for trial. If the adverse party does not so respond, summary judgment, if appropriate, shall be entered against the adverse party.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Genuine Disputes

HN2[] Summary Judgment, Burdens of Proof

In a motion for summary judgment, although the moving party has the burden of showing conclusively that no genuine issue of fact exists and all facts and inferences drawn therefrom must be viewed in a light most favorable to the non-moving party, the factual dispute must be both genuine and material. Further, the facts must be such that if they were proven at trial a reasonable jury could return a verdict for the non-moving party and the non-moving party is required to present some significant probative evidence which makes it necessary to resolve the parties' differing versions of the dispute at trial.

Torts > ... > Contracts > Intentional Interference > Elements

Torts > Business Torts > Commercial Interference > General Overview

Torts > ... > Commercial Interference > Contracts > General Overview

Torts > ... > Commercial Interference > Prospective Advantage > General Overview

Torts > ... > Prospective Advantage > Intentional Interference > Elements

HN3[] Intentional Interference, Elements

An essential element of the tort of intentional interference with a contract is the existence of "improper interference." The improper interference conclusion is reached by an examination of motive, the interest that it is trying to advance or protect, the nature of the conduct, the means used to interfere, and whether or not the interference was based upon malice. Although Kentucky has adopted the formulation of this tort, the state has not rejected the requirement of malice.

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Damages > Punitive Damages

Torts > ... > Types of Damages > Punitive Damages > Aggravating Circumstances

Torts > ... > Pain & Suffering > Emotional Distress > General Overview

Torts > Intentional Torts > Intentional Infliction of Emotional Distress > General Overview

HN4[] Damages, Punitive Damages

In suits alleging severe emotional distress, cases find liability only where the defendant's conduct is extreme and outrageous. It is not been enough that the defendant acted with an intent which is tortious or even criminal, or that he intended to inflict emotional distress, or even that his conduct is characterized by "malice," or a degree of aggravation which would entitle the plaintiff to punitive damages for another tort. Liability is found only where the conduct was so outrageous in character, and so extreme in degree, as to go beyond all possible bounds of decency, and to be regarded as atrocious, and utterly intolerable in a civilized society.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Appropriateness

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Communications > Sherman Act

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

HN5[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Summary judgment is particularly appropriate in antitrust cases because antitrust law limits the range of permissible inferences from ambiguous evidence in a Sherman Act case. When the moving party his carried its burden under Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(c), its opponent must do more than simply show that there is some metaphysical doubt as to the material facts.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > Requirements

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

HN6[] Standing, Requirements

In order to have standing to bring an antitrust claim, a private litigant must pass two tests. First, the plaintiff must allege that the defendant caused him injury in fact. Second, the interest sought to be protected must be arguably within the zone of interests to be protected or regulated by the statute in question. The antitrust laws were enacted to preserve competition and thereby to protect the individual plaintiff and the consuming public from the effects of any combinations or conspiracies in restraint of trade.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Per Se Rule Tests > Manifestly Anticompetitive Effects

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

HN7[] Per Se Rule Tests, Manifestly Anticompetitive Effects

In an antitrust action, after the standing requirements are satisfied, an antitrust violation may be shown by either of "two complementary categories of antitrust analysis." In the first category are agreements whose nature and necessary effect are so plainly anti-competitive that no elaborate study of the industry is needed to establish their illegality -- they are "illegal per se." In the second category are agreements whose competitive effect can only be evaluated by analyzing the facts peculiar to the business, the history of the restraint, and the reasons why it was imposed. In either event, the purpose of the analysis is to form a judgment about the competitive significance of the restraint; it is not to decide whether a policy favoring competition is in the public interest, or in the interest of the members of an industry. The second category applies what is better known as the "rule of reason."

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Practices Governed by Per Se Rule > Boycotts

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Horizontal Refusals to Deal > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Horizontal Refusals to Deal > Boycotts

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

HN8[] Practices Governed by Per Se Rule, Boycotts

Under antitrust law, group boycotts, or concerted refusals by traders to deal with other traders, are in the forbidden category of actions and considered per se antitrust violations.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

HN9[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

In order to support a per se violation under antitrust law, a plaintiff would have to show that the motive behind the concerted action or the direct effect of the action or both is anti-competitive.

Counsel: [1] John Harlan Callis, III, Perry & Preston, Paintsville, Kentucky, for Plaintiff.

Gregory L. Monge, VanAntwerp, Monge, Jones & Edwards, Ashland, Kentucky, for Defendant.

Judges: Henry R. Wilhoit, Jr., United States District Judge.

Opinion by: WILHOIT, JR.

Opinion

[*115] MEMORANDUM OPINION

HENRY R. WILHOIT, JR., UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE.

This matter is before the Court upon defendant's motion for summary judgment. The plaintiff has filed a response and the defendant has filed a reply.

FACTS

Construed in a light most favorable to the plaintiff, the following facts are relevant to the defendant's motion for summary judgment. Late in 1985 the plaintiff was involved in a domestic dispute with his wife. The plaintiff was arrested and indicted for second degree assault and terroristic threatening. Because of the indictment, the plaintiff was terminated from his employment with the defendant, General Telephone Company of the South ("GTE"). The plaintiff had been an employee of the GTE for approximately 19 years. Although the indictment was subsequently dismissed, the plaintiff was not reinstated.

In the present action, the plaintiff does not challenge his termination. Instead, he attacks a long-standing policy that allows GTE to remove any employee of any contractor working [2] for GTE. Each contractor employed by GTE is required to sign a contract containing a provision that allows GTE to implement this policy. Apparently, this policy has been used to prevent any discharged employee of GTE from working on GTE property. GTE alleges that the sole basis for this policy is to prevent a disgruntled former employee from damaging GTE property. However, the plaintiff asserts that this policy amounts to a virtual blacklisting of former GTE employees who may try to seek employment with other telephone service companies who do contract work for GTE. By its contractual agreements with other businesses, the plaintiff alleges that GTE engaged in a group boycott of his services and placed an unfair and unreasonable restraint and burden upon trade and interstate commerce.

After his termination, the plaintiff has attempted to obtain employment in the same industry. A company called SGI refused to employ the plaintiff because of GTE's refusal to allow the plaintiff access to its premises. The plaintiff declined to accept employment at Morehead State University as a telephone repairman because it was only a part-time position at $ 5.00 an hour. Also, the plaintiff declined [3] a job offer by Hinkle and McCoy, a construction company that works in the communications business. Although the plaintiff was unclear as to the reason for his refusal to accept employment with Hinkle [*116] and McCoy, he implied that it was because he would have to work out-of-state.

In addition, the defendant asks the Court to take judicial notice of the fact that GTE is not the only telephone company in Kentucky or in this immediate area. The Court does take judicial notice of the existence of other large telephone companies located in West Virginia and Ohio and of many smaller telephone companies and related service industries in Kentucky. In fact, the defendant has attached four letters written to the plaintiff from companies to which he has applied. Not one of those companies makes any mention of the refusal to hire the plaintiff because of a contract with GTE.

DISCUSSION

As a preliminary matter, the plaintiff asserts that the Court is without power to deal with most of the factual matters in dispute because of the existence of doubt in favor of the plaintiff. However, the non-moving party has a greater burden in challenging factual matters in light of recent case law. While in the [4] past a non-moving party may have been able to defeat a summary judgment motion by showing "the slightest doubt", the current summary judgment standards require the production of more proof. See generally, Smith, Judge Charles E. Clark and the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, 85 Yale L.J. 914, 928-31 (1976). HN1[] Under Rule 56(e)

> when a motion for summary judgment is made and supported as provided for in this rule, an adverse party may not rest upon the mere allegations or denials of the adverse party's pleading, but the adverse party's response, by affidavits or as otherwise specified in this rule, must set forth specific facts showing that there is a genuine issue for trial. If the adverse party does not so respond, summary judgment, if appropriate, shall be entered against the adverse party.

HN2[] Although the moving party has the burden of showing conclusively that no genuine issue of fact exists and all facts and inferences drawn therefrom must be viewed in a light most favorable to the non-moving party, the factual dispute must be both genuine and material. 60 Ivy Street Corporation v. Alexander, 822 F.2d 1432, 1435 (6th Cir. 1987). Further, "the facts must be such [5] that if they were proven at trial a reasonable jury could return a verdict for the non-moving party" and the non-moving party "is required to present some significant probative evidence which makes it necessary to resolve the parties' differing versions of the dispute at trial." Id. (emphasis added). A discussion of three recent Supreme Court decisions reinforces the need for the non-moving party to provide some support for his position. See generally Childress, A New Era For Summary Judgments: Recent Shifts At The Supreme Court, 116 F.R.D. 183 (1987).

The arguments presented in the defendant's motion for summary judgment are whether the plaintiff can maintain his claims under these facts. The plaintiff has attempted to assert three claims: intentional interference with prospective contractual relations, outrageous conduct causing severe emotional distress, and a violation of the Sherman Antitrust Act, 15 U.S.C. Section 1.

INTERFERENCE WITH CONTRACT

The plaintiff alleges that the defendant has violated the tort of intentional interference with prospective contractual relations. HN3[] An essential element of this tort is the existence of "improper interference". Cullen v. South [6] East Coal Company, 685 S.W.2d 187, 189-90 (Ky. App. 1983). The improper interference conclusion is reached by an examination of "motive, the interest that it is trying to advance or protect, the nature of the conduct, the means used to interfere, and whether or not the interference was based upon malice." Id. at 190. Although Kentucky has adopted the formulation of this tort as set forth by the Restatement (Second) of Torts Section 766, Kentucky has not rejected the former requirement of malice. Carmichael-Lynch-Nolan Advertising Agency, Inc. v. Bennett & Associates, Inc., 561 S.W.2d 99, 102 (Ky. App. 1977); *Thermothrift Industries, [117] Inc. v. Mono-Therm Insulation Systems, Inc., 450 F. Supp. 398, 404 (W.D. Ky. 1978).

The Court is unable to find any evidence of malice. The plaintiff has failed to show any evidence that GTE has adopted this policy with malicious intent or without any justification. As early as 1976, GTE has stated this policy in writing and the plaintiff has admitted that he was aware of this policy prior to his termination. At best, the plaintiff has shown that one company, SGI, refused to hire the plaintiff because of GTE's refusal to allow him on its [7] premises. Moreover, GTE's contract with SGI was precipitated by the plaintiff's request that SGI check with GTE. (Plaintiff's Deposition, p. 14).

Further, the contract provision allowing GTE to terminate employees of any contractor was in force at least 10 years prior to the plaintiff's termination and this policy was not adopted with the malicious intent of preventing the plaintiff's future employment. Apparently, the plaintiff is attempting to show that his termination was made with malice and that this improper motive satisfies the "improper interference" element of the intentional interference with a prospective contract. However, the relevant motive in this action is GTE's motive in including this provision in its contracts with other businesses and the policy behind it. The plaintiff has submitted no proof that this policy and the attendant contract provision was adopted with the malicious intent of preventing the plaintiff from seeking other employment. As a result, the plaintiff has failed to meet his burden of producing "some significant probative evidence" to show that this issue is in dispute.

For these reasons, the defendant's motion for summary judgment on the tort of [8] intentional interference with prospective contractual relations is sustained.

OUTRAGEOUS CONDUCT

The plaintiff has also alleged a claim of outrageous conduct causing severe emotional distress. See Craft v. Rice, 671 S.W.2d 247, 251 (Ky. 1984). The defendant states that the plaintiff has utterly failed to produce any evidence that the defendant's conduct was extreme and outrageous. In response, the plaintiff asserts that Craft was a case primarily concerned with the statute of limitations and that the references to outrageous conduct are inapplicable to the case at bar. However, the plaintiff overlooks the definition of extreme and outrageous conduct as recited by Justice Stephenson.

> d. Extreme and outrageous conduct
>
> HN4[] The cases thus far decided have found liability only where the defendant's conduct has been extreme and outrageous. It has not been enough that the defendant acted with an intent which is tortious or even criminal, or that he has intended to inflict emotional distress, or even that his conduct had been characterized by 'malice,' or a degree of aggravation which would entitle the plaintiff to punitive damages for another tort. Liability has been found only where [9] the conduct has been so outrageous in character, and so extreme in degree, as to go beyond all possible bounds of decency, and to be regarded as atrocious, and utterly intolerable in a civilized society.

Id. at 251 (dissent) (citing Comments to Section 46 of the Restatement (Second) of Torts). No evidence or even reasonable inference has been supplied by the plaintiff that would support a claim for outrageous conduct and the defendant's motion for summary judgment is sustained as to the plaintiff's second claim.

ANTITRUST VIOLATION

The plaintiff has, in addition, alleged a violation of the Sherman Antitrust Act, 15 U.S.C. Section 1. Apparently, the plaintiff is alleging that GTE's policy has caused him to be blacklisted with other employers in the same field and that such action has caused him injury. The plaintiff has cited a long litany of cases holding that summary judgment should rarely be applied in antitrust litigation. However, the plaintiff has neglected to cite a recent Supreme Court case which held that HN5[] summary judgment is particularly appropriate in antitrust cases because "antitrust law limits the [*118] range of permissible inferences from ambiguous evidence" in a Sherman [10] Act case. Matsushita Electric Industrial Company v. Zenith Radio Corporation, 475 U.S. 574, 588, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538, 106 S. Ct. 1348 (1986). "When the moving party his carried its burden under Rule 56(c), its opponent must do more than simply show that there is some metaphysical doubt as to the material facts." Id. at 586.

Although the plaintiff's counsel has extensively briefed antitrust law in his pre-trial memorandum and in his response to the motion for summary judgment, no affidavits or exhibits have been attached to his response and only two depositions have been made a part of the record. The discovery deadline expired on January 15, 1988. On this meager record, the Court must determine if the plaintiff has met his burden of showing at least "some significant probative evidence" to sustain an antitrust violation. The Court also notes that since the plaintiff has the burden of proof at trial, it is even more incumbent upon him to supply evidence of such violations. Moreover, if the factual context renders the plaintiff's claim implausible, then the plaintiff "must come forward with more persuasive evidence to support [his] claim than would otherwise be necessary." Id. at 587.

HN6[] In order to have standing to bring [11] an antitrust claim, a private litigant must pass two tests. Malamud v. Sinclair Oil Corporation, 521 F.2d 1142, 1151 (6th Cir. 1975). First, the plaintiff must allege that the defendant caused him injury in fact. Second, the interest sought to be protected must be "arguably within the zone of interests to be protected or regulated by the statute . . . in question." Id. (citing Association of Data Processing Service Organizations, Inc. v. Camp, 397 U.S. 150, 153, 25 L. Ed. 2d 184, 90 S. Ct. 827 (1970). "The antitrust laws were enacted to preserve competition and thereby to protect the individual plaintiff and the consuming public from the effects of any combinations or conspiracies in restraint of trade." Id. 521 F.2d at 1152.

The defendant asserts that the plaintiff has failed to show any injury because of the lack of any evidence that the plaintiff has been deprived of any realistic job opportunities. However, the plaintiff has at least alleged injury because of the refusal of one company, SGI, to employ a person who is not permitted on GTE property. The second requirement for standing is less supportable. If the Court assumes that the plaintiff has been "blacklisted" or is the victim of a "group boycott", then [12] the plaintiff might be within the zone of interests to be protected under the statute. An examination of these matters requires an examination of the merits of the antitrust claim. As a result, the Court will assume that the plaintiff has standing so that the merits of the claim may be examined.

HN7[] After the standing requirements are satisfied, an antitrust violation may be shown by either of "two complementary categories of antitrust analysis" as follows:

> In the first category are agreements whose nature and necessary effect are so plainly anti-competitive that no elaborate study of the industry is needed to establish their illegality -- they are "illegal per se." In the second category are agreements whose competitive effect can only be evaluated by analyzing the facts peculiar to the business, the history of the restraint, and the reasons why it was imposed. In either event, the purpose of the analysis is to form a judgment about the competitive significance of the restraint; it is not to decide whether a policy favoring competition is in the public interest, or in the interest of the members of an industry.

National Society of Professional Engineers v. United States, 435 U.S. 679, 692 [13] 55 L. Ed. 2d 637, 98 S. Ct. 1355 (1978). The second category applies what is better known as the "Rule of Reason". Id. at 687-91.

The plaintiff has attempted to define the contract between GTE and its contractors as a "per se" violation of the Sherman Antitrust Act on the basis of a "group boycott" of the plaintiff or a "blacklisting" of the plaintiff's services. Although both [*119] of these practices have been shown to be per se violations, the facts presented in this action fail to rise to the level of either practice. See Klor's, Inc. v. Broadway-Hale Stores, Inc., 359 U.S. 207, 3 L. Ed. 2d 741, 79 S. Ct. 705 (1959); Quinonez v. National Association of Securities Dealers, Inc., 540 F.2d 824, 828-29 (5th Cir. 1976); Kapp v. National Football League, 390 F. Supp. 73 (N.D. Cal. 1974), aff'd, 586 F.2d 644 (9th Cir. 1978), cert denied, 441 U.S. 907, 60 L. Ed. 2d 375, 99 S. Ct. 1996 (1979). In Quinonez, the plaintiff was unable to obtain employment as a security sales representative because of alleged blacklisting arising out of an express or tacit agreement between national securities firms not to hire anyone who had been fired or dismissed from any firm. Quinonez at 826. However, in the case at bar, the plaintiff has failed to show that GTE's policy prevents [14] his employment with different companies who do not work on GTE property. The Supreme Court found that HN8[] "group boycotts, or concerted refusals by traders to deal with other traders, have long been held to be in the forbidden category." Klor's at 212. A wide combination of traders acting in concert to prevent a single retailer from selling certain household appliances was held to be an illegal group boycott. Id. 359 U.S. at 213-14.

However, in the case at bar, the plaintiff has failed to submit any proof that the agreements between GTE and its contractors were for the purpose of "blacklisting" the plaintiff or organizing a "group boycott" of his services. The plaintiff has not shown how these agreements would affect his employment with a company that did not do contract work for GTE. In fact, the agreements would force the plaintiff to work for competitors of GTE because he would have to be employed by a company that was not permitted on GTE property. HN9[] In order to support a per se violation, the plaintiff would have to show that the "motive behind the concerted action or the direct effect of the action or both is anti-competitive." Cesnik v. Chrysler Corporation, 490 F. Supp. 859, 866 [15] (M.D. Tenn. 1980). Even if the restraint of trade is viewed as the plaintiff's ability to practice the skills of his profession, the plaintiff has not shown that the agreements would prevent his employment with companies who do not work on GTE property. At best, the plaintiff can show that his termination from GTE has made it more difficult for him to obtain employment in this immediate area. However, the cause for this result is the size of GTE and its decision to prevent discharged employees from working on its property and not any anti-competitive motive.

Since the agreements have not been shown to be illegal per se, the plaintiff must show at least "some significant probative evidence" of the violation of the "Rule of Reason". The competitive effect of the agreements must be examined by looking at the history of the restraint and the reasons why it was imposed. National Society, 435 U.S. at 692. The only evidence that the Court can find that relates to the reasons behind the agreements with the contractors is a statement by William Spears, personnel manager for GTE. Mr. Spears stated that the purpose of the contract provision was a "prudent business decision" to prevent harm to the [16] company and its employees. (Spears Deposition, pp. 17-18). Although this statement is self-serving, no evidence has been submitted by the plaintiff that would indicate any other possible motive behind this policy. Clearly, the purpose of the policy is to prevent the possibility of damage to GTE property by disgruntled employees. Assuming that the agreements pose a restraint on competitive conditions, these agreements are a reasonable restraint because of the purpose of preventing destruction of property.

Any other conclusion based upon the factual context that has been presented is implausible and the plaintiff has failed to meet his burden of coming forward with more persuasive evidence than would otherwise be necessary. Matsushita, 475 U.S. at 587. For these reasons, the defendant's motion for summary judgment on the violation of the Sherman Antitrust Act is sustained. This 5 day of April, 1988.

[*120] JUDGMENT - April 5, 1988, Filed

For the reasons stated in a memorandum opinion of even date, the Court sustains the defendant's motion for summary judgment.

Accordingly, having reviewed the entire record and being sufficiently advised,

IT IS THEREFORE ORDERED AND ADJUDGED:

(1) that the defendant's [17] motion for summary judgment is SUSTAINED;

(2) that summary judgment is GRANTED for the defendant, General Telephone Company, on all claims of the plaintiff;

(3) that this is final and appealable order.

This 5 day of April, 1988.

Flip Side Prods. v. Jam Prods.

United States Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit

December 10, 1986, Argued ; April 5, 1988, Decided

Nos. 87-1531, 87-1547, 87-1496

Reporter

843 F.2d 1024 *; 1988 U.S. App. LEXIS 5068 ; 1988-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P67,964; 10 Fed. R. Serv. 3d (Callaghan) 1070

Flip Side Productions, Inc., Plaintiff-Appellant, v. Jam Productions, Ltd., et al., Defendants-Appellees; Flip Side Productions, Inc., Plaintiff-Appellant, v. Tempo, Inc., Defendant-Appellee; Flip Side Productions, Inc., Plaintiff-Appellee, v. Jam Productions, Ltd., Chicago Jam, Inc., Jerry Mickelson, and Arny Granat, Defendants-Appellants

Subsequent History: [1] As Amended April 8, 1988.

Prior History: Appeals from the United States District Court for the Northern District of Illinois, Eastern Division, No. 82 C 3684 -- James B. Moran, Judge.

Core Terms

concerts, district court, promotion, arena-level, Stadium, facilities, sanctions, artists, performers, summary judgment motion, metropolitan area, antitrust, discovery, summary judgment, essential facilities doctrine, imposition of sanctions, market power, competitor, frivolous, staging, genuine issue, material fact, annually, license, exclusive right, anti trust law, circumstances, defendants', bottleneck, consumer

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Supporting Materials > Affidavits

Evidence > Burdens of Proof > Initial Burden of Persuasion

Civil Procedure > ... > Discovery > Methods of Discovery > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > Movant Persuasion & Proof

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Genuine Disputes

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Supporting Materials > General Overview

HN1[] Supporting Materials, Affidavits

Summary judgment is appropriate when there exists no genuine issue as to any material fact and the moving parties are entitled to a judgment as a matter of law pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(c). The moving party bears the initial burden of establishing through affidavits or otherwise, the absence of a genuine issue as to any material fact, but does not necessarily have to put on evidence which negates the opponent's claim. Instead, the moving party may prevail by simply pointing out those portions of the pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories, and admissions on file, together with the affidavits, if any, which it believes demonstrates the absence of a genuine issue of material fact.

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Summary Judgment > Evidentiary Considerations

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > Scintilla Rule

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Opposing Materials > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Appropriateness

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Genuine Disputes

HN2[] Summary Judgment, Evidentiary Considerations

After the party moving for summary judgment has identified portions of the record which demonstrate the absence of a genuine issue of material fact, and the opposing party will have the burden of proof as to that fact at trial, the opposing party has the responsibility of going beyond the pleadings and setting forth specific facts showing that there is a genuine issue for trial. A genuine issue for trial only exists when there is sufficient evidence favoring the nonmovant for a jury to return a verdict for that party. The court will not weigh the evidence, but if the evidence is merely colorable, or is not significantly probative, summary judgment is appropriately granted. If the opposing party fails to establish that the facts are in dispute, the court must enter judgment in favor of the moving party.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Appellate Review > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Appellate Review > Standards of Review

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Genuine Disputes

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Materiality of Facts

HN3[] Summary Judgment, Burdens of Proof

A district court's grant of summary judgment will be affirmed if the reviewing court determines that there is no genuine issue of material fact for trial, which turns on the court's decision that there was insufficient evidence, taking into account the evidentiary standard of proof and drawing all reasonable inferences in the nonmoving party's favor, to allow a rational jury to decide for the nonmoving party.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

HN4[] Monopolies & Monopolization, Actual Monopolization

There are four elements necessary to establish liability under the essential facilities doctrine: (1) control of the essential facility by a monopolist; (2) the competitor's inability practically or reasonably to duplicate the essential facility; (3) denial of the use of the facility to a competitor; and (4) the feasibility of providing the facility.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Cartels & Horizontal Restraints > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

HN5[] Sherman Act, Claims

Before a defendant can sustain antitrust liability, the plaintiff must establish the defendant's market power, i.e., the power to raise prices significantly above the competitive level without losing all of one's business. Market power means the ability to injure consumers by curtailing output and raising price; no possible injury, no market power; no market power, no violation; injury to the consumers is therefore an essential ingredient of liability. The threat to competition and ultimately to the consumer posed by a monopolist who controls and excludes its competitors from an essential facility, sometimes called a bottleneck, is that it can extend monopoly power from one stage of production to another and from one market into another. Under these circumstances, the essential facilities doctrine is used to preserve horizontal competition at a level other than the bottleneck.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Standing > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

HN6[] Private Actions, Standing

In an antitrust action, the plaintiff only has standing if, and can only recover to the extent that, he has been injured in his business or property by the conduct constituting the violation.

Civil Procedure > Attorneys > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Sanctions > Baseless Filings > General Overview

HN7[] Civil Procedure, Attorneys

See Fed. R. Civ. P. 11.

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > Clearly Erroneous Review

Civil Procedure > Sanctions > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Sanctions > Baseless Filings > General Overview

HN8[] Standards of Review, Clearly Erroneous Review

In order to determine whether a district court properly imposed Fed. R. Civ. P. 11 sanctions, a court reviews the district court's findings of fact with respect to the imposition of sanctions under the clearly erroneous standard. Subsequently, the court reviews de novo the district court's legal conclusion that conduct in a particular case constitutes a violation of Fed. R. Civ. P. 11.

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > Abuse of Discretion

Civil Procedure > Sanctions > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Sanctions > Baseless Filings > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > De Novo Review

HN9[] Standards of Review, Abuse of Discretion

The decision whether there has been a violation of Fed. R. Civ. P. 11 is a judgment call. Fed. R. Civ. P. 11 speaks of reasonable pre-filing inquiry, the language of tort law. And although the definition of a frivolous legal position is itself a question of law, there will often be factual questions concerning the actual position the litigant took -- questions on which the court of first instance has the leading role. Thus, although a district court's legal conclusion is subject to de novo review the court applies a deferential standard on review of the question whether the filing of a paper violated Fed. R. Civ. P. 11. Further, if the court holds the sanction was properly imposed, the court again reviews the amount or type of sanction imposed under an abuse of discretion standard.

Civil Procedure > Sanctions > Baseless Filings > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Sanctions > General Overview

HN10[] Sanctions, Baseless Filings

Fed. R.. Civ. P. 11provides two grounds for sanctions: namely, the frivolousness clause and the improper purpose clause. The frivolousness clause requires that the party or the attorney conduct a reasonable inquiry into the facts and the law relevant to the case. The improper purpose clause ensures that a motion, pleading, or other document may not be interposed for purposes of delay, harassment, or increasing the costs of litigation. The standard for imposing sanctions under either prong of Fed. R. Civ. P. 11 is an objective determination of whether the sanctioned party's conduct was reasonable under the circumstances.

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Frivolous Appeals

Governments > Courts > Clerks of Court

Legal Ethics > Professional Conduct > Frivolous Claims & Conduct

HN11[] Appeals, Frivolous Appeals

Fed. R. App. P. 38 authorizes an appellate court to award attorneys' fees and costs if the court holds that an appeal is frivolous. Under Fed. R. App. P. 38 the district court is not empowered to award fees for proceedings before an appellate court; thus, an appellate court must reverse the finding of a district court to the extent it is inconsistent with Fed. R. App. P. 38. However, an appellate court is free to impose sanctions on those who abuse the appellate procedure. Before such sanctions are imposed, in addition to finding an appeal frivolous, an appellate court must also determine whether the case is an appropriate one for the imposition of sanctions.

Counsel: Steven M. Kramer, for Plaintiff.

William D. Heinz, Jenner & Block, Reuben A. Bernick, Rudnick & Wolfe, for Defendants.

Judges: Coffey and Easterbook, Circuit Judges, and Grant, Senior District Judge. *

Opinion by: COFFEY

Opinion

[*1026] COFFEY, Circuit Judge.

Flip Side Productions, Inc. (Flip Side) alleged that the defendants, Jam Productions, Ltd., Chicago Jam, Inc., Jerry Mickelson, Arny Granat (collectively, JAM) and Tempo International, Inc., MFG International, Inc., Ralph Mickelson, Robert Martwick, Norman Finkel, Lee Stern, Al Granat (collectively, Tempo), exclusively controlled the Rosemont Horizon, an "essential facility" for the booking and promotion of pop, rock, and rhythm and blues (R&B) concerts in the Chicago metropolitan area in violation of §§ 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act. 15 U.S.C. §§ 1, 2. Flip Side further contended that the defendants [2] violated the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act (RICO). 18 U.S.C. § 1961 et seq. Flip Side appeals from the order of the district court granting JAM and Tempo's motions for summary judgment and imposing sanctions against Flip Side in favor of Tempo pursuant to Rule 11 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. JAM cross-appeals from the order of the district court denying JAM's petition for attorneys' fees and costs. We affirm in part and reverse in part.

I

Facts

A. Background.

This appeal concerns the booking and promotion of pop, rock, and R&B concerts (collectively, concerts) in the Chicago metropolitan area during the past decade by various promoters and their relationships to the owners or managers of several facilities in which concerts are performed. Promoters contract with performing artists, purchasing their services. In return, the promoter is responsible for advertising the concert, selling tickets, and obtaining a suitable concert hall. Promoters present concerts for Chicago consumers in facilities in three size categories: the arena-level facility, seating 10,000 or more; the middle-level facility seating 3,000-4,500; [3] and the lower-level facility which seats approximately 1,000. At least 35 lower-level facilities and 16 middle-level facilities are located in the Chicago metropolitan area.

Prior to 1980, at least two arena-level facilities competed with each other in the Chicago metropolitan area: the Chicago Stadium which seats approximately 19,000, and the International Amphitheatre, which seats approximately 10,500. The Amphitheatre was constructed during the late 1930s and closed its doors in December of 1982. In its heyday, the Amphitheatre hosted many concerts as well as other events (including the Chicago National Basketball

* The Honorable Robert A. Grant, Senior District Judge for the Northern District of Indiana, is sitting by designation.

Association team "The Chicago Bulls"). The larger, privately owned Chicago Stadium is the current home arena of two Chicago-area professional sports teams: the Chicago Bulls and the Chicago Blackhawks of the National Hockey League. Throughout the year, the Stadium hosts other events, such as boxing, ice shows, circuses, and music concerts. Specifically, during fiscal years August 1, 1979, to July 31, 1983, at least 21 concerts were performed at the Stadium. Attendance at these concerts ranged from approximately 7,500 to 20,000, and only three of these concerts were attended [4] by less than 10,000 persons. Presently, the Chicago Stadium is available for staging concerts subject only to the promoter's ability to provide the owner a satisfactory profit.

Since 1980, at least three additional arena-level facilities have been constructed in the Chicago metropolitan area: namely, the Rosemont Horizon, the Pavilion, and Poplar Creek.

In 1978 the Village of Rosemont, Illinois, decided to construct an 18,000-seat indoor [*1027] arena, the Horizon, which would compete with the International Amphitheatre and the Chicago Stadium. The Horizon was to stage sporting events, circuses, ice shows, and other entertainment events. The Village of Rosemont financed the project, issuing $ 19 million worth of revenue bonds. To ensure the marketability of these bonds, the Village contracted with Araserv, Inc. (a concessionaire), the Ringling Brothers Barnum & Bailey Circus, and MFG International, Inc. (the corporate entity now known as Tempo International, Inc.). Pursuant to these agreements, Araserv, Ringling Brothers, and Tempo received long-term contracts for the exclusive use of the Horizon. For example, Araserv received a ten-year exclusive right to sell beverages, [5] food, programs, etc., at all Horizon events except circuses; Tempo received a ten-year exclusive right to present no less than 50 concerts annually at the Horizon (subsequently the agreement was renegotiated to reduce the number of concerts Tempo must present to 32), and Ringling Brothers acquired exclusive rights to present a yearly circus. In exchange, the Village was guaranteed substantial license fees which were essential to the sale of the revenue bonds. Araserv guaranteed the Village a minimum annual license fee of $ 300,000 and further contracted to install and maintain equipment at the Horizon at a potential cost of $ 365,000. The Ringling Brothers guaranteed the Village 11 1/2 percent of its annual gross receipts or an annual license fee of $ 150,000, whichever was greater. Under its agreements, Tempo was obligated to pay a minimum license fee of $ 6,000 per event or $ 300,000 annually, again, whichever was greater. The exclusive nature of these ten-year contracts protected the guarantors Araserv, Tempo, and Ringling Brothers, allowing them the opportunity to recoup their substantial fee guarantees and expenditures. The Horizon opened its doors in May 1980, and concerts, [6] as well as an assortment of other events, have been staged very successfully.

The Board of Trustees of the University of Illinois embarked on a new enterprise opening the 11,000-seat Pavilion on their Chicago campus in April 1982. During the previous year (1981) the University had inquired of several promoters, including JAM, as to their interest in contracting for the use of the Pavilion for staging concerts. The University eventually entered into an agreement with JAM under which JAM had the exclusive rights to present at least 30 events or commercial performances per year. In exchange, JAM guaranteed the University $ 250,000 per year. Also note that the Pavilion has well in excess of 100 dates available annually for the presentation of concerts or other attractions.

Lastly, the construction of Poplar Creek, an outdoor, arena-level facility, was completed after 1980, and the facility is currently available for the presentation of concerts. The record neither revealed the exact date construction of Poplar Creek was completed nor the date concerts were initially staged.

B. The Litigation.

In June 1982 Flip Side, a corporation engaged in the business of booking and [7] promoting [1] concerts in the Chicago metropolitan market since the mid-1970s, alleged that JAM, its competitor, entered into exclusive leases

---

[1] The parties stipulated to the following definition of "promoter":

> "Promoter is defined as a person who presents live musical entertainment events (hereinafter referred to as concerts). Concerts are performed by artists. In order to promote a concert, a promoter conducts, inter alia, the following activities:

with co-defendants Village of Rosemont and the University of Illinois for the right to promote concerts at two "essential facilities," namely the Rosemont [*1028] Horizon and the Pavilion, owned by the co-defendants, respectively. [2] [9] Flip Side alleged that the conduct of JAM, the Village of Rosemont and the University of Illinois, i.e., entering into exclusive leases for the use of the purported facilities, constituted monopolization of the promotion of concerts in the Chicago metropolitan area, an attempt to monopolize the relevant market, and a conspiracy, combination, and contract to unreasonably restrain trade in violation of §§ 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act. 15 U.S.C. §§ 1, 2. In response and during August 1982, JAM filed a counterclaim, a "mirror image" [3] of Flip Side's complaint, and a third-party complaint contending that Flip Side and its principals, Lawrence and Carl Rosenbaum, also had violated §§ 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act by entering into an exclusive rights agreement to promote concerts at the International [8] Amphitheatre, purported to be an essential facility from mid-1976 to mid-1980 (before the Horizon was constructed).

Subsequently, the University of Illinois filed a motion for summary judgment and on October 29, 1982, Judge Moran granted the University's motion for summary judgment, finding:

> "The Pavilion has well in excess of 100 dates available annually for the presentation of concerts. . . . [Flip Side] has never requested permission to present a concert or even inquired about the Pavilion's availability.
> * * *
>
> Jam and other promoters have access for non-University events, such as rock groups. Any promoter can arrange with [the University of] Illinois for a concert or performance by its artists or performers (who, necessarily, would not be artists or performers of JAM), with a [10] possible consequent dimunition of JAM's obligation to schedule events."

(Emphasis supplied).

In April 1983, Flip Side filed its first amended complaint, joining as defendants Tempo International, Inc., a partnership specifically organized to enter into a licensing agreement with the Village of Rosemont for the presentation of concerts at the Rosemont Horizon, and Tempo International, Inc.'s owners, Ralph R. Mickelson, Alan Granat, [4] Lee B. Stern, Robert F. Martwick, and Norman D. Finkel (collectively, Tempo). Flip Side alleged that

---

> (a) purchases the services of an artist;
>
> (b) contracts with an artist or his agent to obtain that artist's services for a particular location, date and time;
>
> (c) contracts with the owner of a facility in which the concert is to take place;
>
> (d) sells tickets to the public, either directly or through ticket outlets;
>
> (e) advertises the concert;
>
> (f) forms various other activities, all of which are designed to successfully present the entertainment event to the public."

[2] Flip Side further alleged that JAM had an exclusive contract with the Aragon, an "essential" mid-level facility and exclusives with the Riviera and Park West, lower-level "essential" facilities. On April 22, 1986, Judge Moran granted defendants' motion for summary judgment with respect to Flip Side's middle-level and lower-level antitrust claim, finding:

> "This claim borders on the frivolous. Defendants, in an almost humorous fashion, list the facilities in each size category which Flip Side has admitted exist. The list of middle-level facilities extend to 16. The list of lower-level facilities counts 35. No one person or company owns them all, so the issue of monopoly control, which is the key to essential facility doctrine, does not even appear."

Flip Side has not pursued its middle- and lower-level antitrust claim on appeal.

[3] JAM's counterclaim and third-party complaint recounted almost verbatim Flip Side's antitrust allegations and simply substituted itself as plaintiff and Flip Side as defendant. JAM asserted that the International Amphitheatre, rather than the Pavilion and Horizon, was the purported essential facility. Therefore, Judge Moran described JAM's counterclaim as a "mirror image" of Flip Side's complaint.

[4] Ralph Mickelson and Alan Granat are the respective fathers of JAM's two principals, Jerry Mickelson and Arny Granat.

Tempo, which had an exclusive license for the use of the Horizon, had provided JAM an exclusive sublicense of its exclusive contract with the Village for the promotion of concerts at the Horizon, an essential facility in violation of §§ 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act. In its first amended complaint, unlike in its original complaint, Flip Side no longer alleged that the Pavilion was an essential facility for the promotion of concerts.

[11] On May 11, 1984, Flip Side filed its second amended complaint, which now included a RICO claim, and added as defendants: Franklin Fried (sole shareholder of Fried & Assoc., Inc.), Fried & Assoc. (the business entity responsible for managing the Horizon), and Paul Johnson (an employee of Fried & Assoc.). In its RICO count Flip Side alleged that the Village of Rosemont, [*1029] Tempo, Fried & Assoc., Franklin Fried, and Johnson conspired to defraud recording artists performing at the Horizon by deducting phony expenses from the artists' compensation. Flip Side contended that "the JAM defendants and Tempo excluded Flip Side from the Horizon in order to prevent the performers from discovering the fraud by comparing JAM's fees with the assertedly lower fees that Flip Side would hypothetically have charged." Memorandum and Order, April 22, 1986. Flip Side further alleged that as a result of the defendants' conspiracy, it was injured "by being excluded from competition in the market."

Initially JAM moved for summary judgment and on June 12, 1984, Judge Moran denied the motion, without prejudice to its resubmission, noting that for the purposes of the motion JAM had not contested [12] the plaintiff's allegation that the Horizon was an essential facility. In its summary judgment motion, JAM denied any liability, arguing that it had not violated the antitrust laws because it neither controlled nor excluded Flip Side from the Horizon. JAM asserted that Flip Side had access to the Horizon to promote concerts but had not attempted to contract with Tempo or the Village for the Horizon's use. Denying JAM's motion, the district court stated: "the denial is based less on any conviction that there are disputed facts than it is on the belief that the motion is premature," i.e., discovery was still open.

However, JAM was not to be outdone and filed an amended counterclaim and third-party complaint reasserting its antitrust allegations against Flip Side and adding a RICO claim. JAM alleged that in April 1980 the Rosenbaums, Flip Side's owners, along with others, were indicted by a federal grand jury for 12 counts of violations of 18 U.S.C. §§ 1341 and 1343 (mail and wire fraud). The indictment recounted the Rosenbaums' involvement in a scheme to defraud rock performers, the Chicago Park District, and the City of Chicago. According to the indictment, [13] the Rosenbaums falsified ticket and expense information regarding four rock concerts they were promoting at Soldier Field in Chicago. Apparently, the Rosenbaums sold more tickets than they reported to the performers and the City of Chicago and kept the excess as "profit." Eventually, the Rosenbaums pleaded guilty to "knowingly, wilfully and unlawfully causing a wire communication to be transmitted in interstate commerce for the purpose of executing a scheme to defraud in violation of Title 18 [U.S.C. §]1343, as charged in count 10 of the indictment." In its RICO count JAM further alleged that the Rosenbaums used the "profits" derived from this illegal scheme to maintain and further Flip Side's purported unlawful exclusive agreement with the International Amphitheatre in order to obtain and maintain monopoly power in the arena-level market for the promotion of concerts in the Chicago metropolitan area. Based on these allegations, JAM contended that Flip Side violated RICO. 18 U.S.C. § 1961 et seq. [5]

[14] Subsequently, at the close of discovery, JAM and Tempo both submitted motions for summary judgment arguing that the Rosemont Horizon was not an "essential facility" for the promotion of arena-level concerts in the Chicago metropolitan area since other suitable facilities were available for staging concerts: namely, the Pavilion, the Stadium, and Poplar Creek. In his April 22, 1986, Memorandum and Order, Judge Moran granted the defendants' summary judgment motions and observed that Flip Side relied exclusively on the essential facilities doctrine for all its antitrust allegations. Thus, the district court applied the following legal framework taken from our decision in MCI Communications v. American Tel. & Tel. Co., 708 F.2d 1081 (7th Cir.), cert. denied, 464 U.S. 891, 78 L. Ed. 2d 226, 104 S. Ct. 234 (1983):

---

[5] Flip Side later brought a motion for summary judgment on the basis that the statute of limitations had run on the alleged RICO claim. The district court granted the motion concluding that JAM's RICO claim was untimely. Memorandum and Order, April 22, 1986.

> "Because a party which controls a facility -- be it power lines, telephone cables or stadiums -- which gives it a monopoly in one market can easily use this control to [*1030] further a monopoly in another market, courts have interpreted the antitrust laws as imposing an 'obligation [on the monopolist] to make the facility [15] available on non-discriminatory terms.'"

Memorandum and Order at 3. The district court assumed that the relevant market was the promotion of pop, rock, and R&B arena-level concerts in the Chicago metropolitan area and stated that the "competition between Flip Side and JAM over the use of arena-level facilities is the real subject matter of this litigation." Id. at 8.

The district court noted that Flip Side originally relied on a "theory of a conspiracy 'triangle'" involving JAM, the Pavilion and the Horizon. Id. at 9. The court observed that because Flip Side no longer asserted that the Pavilion was an essential facility for the promotion of concerts, its contentions regarding the Horizon were "on very unsure footing" since it now had a "clear alternative to the Horizon, namely, the Pavilion." Id. Nevertheless, the court stated:

> ". . . that the Horizon could be considered an essential facility if due to natural advantage, custom, restrictions of scale, or an industry wide accrediting function those who controlled the Horizon controlled the market in concert promotions in the Chicago area. Given the dynamics of the concert promotion business, the [16] Horizon could be considered an essential facility if most performing artists who could draw an 'arena-level' crowd would perform only at the Horizon."

Id. at 10-11 (emphasis supplied). The court then proceeded to summarize the "only evidence" produced by Flip Side relevant to the question of whether the Horizon "was an essential facility because artists of a certain kind customarily performed there only." Id. at 11. This evidence consisted of depositions taken by Flip Side but never referred to in its memorandum and opposition to Tempo and JAM's motions for summary judgment.

After reviewing these depositions, Judge Moran pointed out that Lawrence Rosenbaum's testimony provided "the kernel for a theory that custom has imbued the Horizon with monopoly drawing power." Id. Rosenbaum testified:

> "A. Also, another difference between the two facilities is the acceptance by the groups and agents of the Horizon and what appears to be developing as a dislike by those same people for the Pavilion.
>
> * * *
>
> Q. On what facts do you base the statement that some concerts -- some artists prefer the Horizon over the Pavilion?
>
> A. Information from agents."

[17] However, relying on the deposition testimony of several promoters, the district court concluded:

> "At the most, this evidence from other promoters suggests that promoters who booked for performers with large draws saw the Horizon as a desirable facility. This evidence is not enough to find that plaintiff has met its burden to establish a genuine issue as to the Horizon's essential status. . . . We find, therefore, that the Horizon is not an essential facility." [6] [19]

---

[6] The district court further found that even if the Horizon was considered an essential facility for the promotion of concerts in the Chicago area, Flip Side failed to prove that it had been excluded from the Horizon. The court observed that Flip Side "while managing to produce documents which stack over two feet high, . . . has not produced a single copy of an alleged 'written' [exclusive] agreement" between Tempo and JAM. Id. at 14. The court pointed out that "the closest Flip Side goes to proving such an exclusive agreement is Zuckerman's [a promoter] testimony that a rumor existed that JAM had an exclusive at the Horizon. This does not satisfy Flip Side's burden of proof to produce evidence that would put its contentions in dispute." Id. at 15. Lastly, the district court found that Flip Side failed to produce any evidence "that the alleged [exclusive] agreement was intended to exclude competitors or that it had such an effect." Id. at 16.

Id. at 13-14. Significantly, Judge Moran concluded that Flip Side failed to produce any evidence that Tempo or JAM's alleged illegal conduct caused Flip Side an "anti-trust injury." Id. at 16. On this basis, the district court granted the defendants' motions [*1031] for summary judgment. On appeal Flip Side asserts that there is an issue of material fact as to whether the Horizon is an essential facility for the promotion of arena-level concerts in the Chicago metropolitan area. Initially, Flip Side argues that its contention that most performing artists who could draw an arena-level crowd prefer to perform at the Horizon if it was available puts at issue whether the Horizon was an essential [18] facility. Secondly, Flip Side asserts that the testimony to the effect that the Pavilion was "not a viable facility for arena-level concerts" because it was approximately half the size of the Horizon and thus was not a practical substitute for the Horizon raises an additional question as to the Horizon's essentiality. Flip Side further contends that the Chicago Stadium was not a viable alternative because it was unavailable as a result of a third party's exclusive agreement for the promotion of concerts at that facility. Lastly, Flip Side asserts that the International Amphitheatre was neither viable nor a practical alternative to the Horizon because it "was considered 'a toilet' by JAM itself." [7] Plaintiff-Appellant's Brief, June 30, 1986.

After the district court granted the defendants' motions for summary judgment, it denied both JAM and Flip Side's petitions for fees. However, the district court granted Tempo's petition for fees "incurred in preparing material after [the time discovery was closed]" against Flip Side at the rates Tempo was actually billed during that period. Flip Side now also appeals from the order of the district court granting Tempo's petition for fees. JAM appeals from the district court's order denying its petition for fees and costs. [8]

[20] II

Summary Judgment Standard

HN1[] Summary judgment is appropriate when there exists "no genuine issue as to any material fact and . . . the moving part[ies are] entitled to a judgment as a matter of law." Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(c). The moving party bears the initial burden of establishing through affidavits or otherwise, the absence of a genuine issue as to any material fact, Adickes v. S. H. Kress & Company, 398 U.S. 144, 157, 90 S. Ct. 1598, 1608, 26 L. Ed. 2d 142 (1970), but does not necessarily have to put on evidence which negates the opponent's claim. Celotex Corp. v. Catrett, 477 U.S. 317, 106 S. Ct. 2548, 2553, 91 L. Ed. 2d 265 (1986). Instead, the moving party may prevail by simply pointing out "those portions of 'the pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories, and admissions on file, together with the affidavits, if any, which it believes demonstrates the absence of a genuine issue of material fact.'" Id.

---

[7] Flip Side apparently referred to the following deposition testimony of Jerry Mickleson, a JAM owner:

> "Q: [Steven Kramer --appellant's counsel] Have you ever stated that you would never do a show at the Amphitheatre?
>
> A: I may have stated that somewhere along the line.
>
> * * *
>
> Q: Okay. Have you ever referred to the Amphitheatre as a toilet?
>
> A: I may have."

[8] Oral argument was initially heard on December 10, 1986, while JAM's counterclaim and third-party complaint were still pending in the district court. Consequently, we dismissed appeal no. 86-1837 for lack of jurisdiction because the April 22, 1986, Memorandum and Order was not a final appealable order. Subsequently, on March 2, 1987, the district court granted Flip Side's motion for summary judgment on the counterclaim, finding that the International Amphitheatre was not an essential facility for the promotion of rock concerts in the Chicago metropolitan area. The court noted ironically that JAM had "jumped its own fence" to argue that the Amphitheatre was an essential facility despite having argued strenuously that the Stadium was and still is available for staging rock and other concerts. JAM has not appealed from the district court's granting of Flip Side's motion for summary judgment but appeals from the court's denial of JAM's petition for fees and costs. Flip Side appeals from the summary judgment order in favor of the defendants and also from the court's imposition of sanctions pursuant to Rule 11 in favor of Tempo. By an order of this court on April 13, 1987, we consolidated these appeals and have decided the merits of the antitrust allegations on the basis of the briefs filed and argument heard in appeal no. 86-1837.

HN2[] After the moving party has identified [21] portions of the record which demonstrate [*1032] the absence of a genuine issue of material fact, and the opposing party will have the burden of proof as to that fact at trial, the opposing party has "the responsibility of going beyond the pleadings and setting forth 'specific facts showing that there [is] a genuine issue for trial.'" Valley Liquors Inc. v. Renfield Importers Ltd., 822 F.2d 656, 659 (7th Cir. 1987); see Celotex Corp. v. Catrett, 106 S. Ct. at 2553. "A genuine issue for trial only exists when there is sufficient evidence favoring the nonmovant for a jury to return a verdict for that party." Id. We will not weigh the evidence, Id., but "if the evidence is merely colorable, or is not significantly probative," summary judgment is appropriately granted. Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, 477 U.S. 242, 106 S. Ct. 2505, 2511, 91 L. Ed. 2d 202 (1986). If the opposing party fails to establish that the facts are in dispute, the court must enter judgment in favor of the moving party. Celotex Corp. v. Catrett, 106 S. Ct. at 2553. In such a situation, there can be "no genuine issue as to any material [22] fact," since a complete failure of proof concerning a necessary element of the non-moving party's case renders all other facts immaterial.

HN3[] Thus, we will affirm the district court's grant of summary judgment in favor of the defendants

> "if we determine that there was no genuine issue of material fact for trial, which turns on our decision that there was insufficient evidence, taking into account the evidentiary standard of proof and drawing all reasonable inferences in [Flip Side's] favor, to allow a rational jury to decide for [Flip Side]."

Valley Liquors Inc. v. Renfield Importers Ltd., 822 F.2d at 659.

III

The Essential Facilities Doctrine

(The Bottleneck Theory)

At the outset, we observe that the essential facilities doctrine "is a relatively recent addition to antitrust jurisprudence." Note, Unclogging the Bottleneck, A New Essential Facilities Doctrine, 83 Colum. L. Rev. 441, 447 (1983). Initially the doctrine was used as a label, rather than as an independent tool of analysis, enabling courts and commentators to classify [23] antitrust cases. Id.; see also P. Areeda & H. Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law, para. 736.1 (Supp. 1986). HN4[] However, in MCI Communications v. American Tel. & Tel. Co., 708 F.2d 1081 (7th Cir.), cert. denied, 464 U.S. 891, 78 L. Ed. 2d 226, 104 S. Ct. 234 (1983), and more recently in Fishman v. Estate of Wirtz, 807 F.2d 520 (7th Cir. 1986), this court adopted a four-element test as an independent method of proving antitrust violations under certain circumstances. In MCI Communications, 708 F.2d at 1133, we stated:

> "The case law sets forth four elements necessary to establish liability under the essential facilities doctrine: (1) control of the essential facility by a monopolist; (2) the competitor's inability practically or reasonably to duplicate the essential facility; (3) denial of the use of the facility to a competitor; and (4) the feasibility of providing the facility."

In this case, Flip Side relies exclusively on the essential facilities doctrine to establish that JAM and Tempo violated §§ 1 and [24] 2 of the Sherman Act. Central to the essential facilities doctrine is the "control of the essential facility by a monopolist." Id. HN5[] By this we mean that before a defendant can sustain antitrust liability, the plaintiff must establish the defendant's market power, i.e., the "'power to raise prices significantly above the competitive level without losing all of one's business.'" Valley Liquors, Inc. v. Renfield Importers, Ltd., 822 F.2d 656, 665 (7th Cir. 1987) (quoting Valley Liquors, Inc. v. Renfield Importers, Ltd., 678 F.2d 742, 745 (7th Cir. 1982)). Or as recently pointed out by a colleague: "Market power means the ability to injure consumers by curtailing output and raising price; no possible injury, no market power; no market power, no violation; injury to the consumers is therefore an essential ingredient of liability." Fishman v. Estate of Wirtz, 807 F.2d at 568 (Easterbrook, J., dissenting in part); see Aspen Skiing Co. v. Aspen Highlands Skiing Corp., 472 U.S. 585, 105 S. Ct. 2847, 2859, 86 L. Ed. 2d 467 [*1033] (1985). [25] The threat to competition and ultimately to the consumer posed by a monopolist who controls and excludes its competitors from an essential facility ("sometimes called a 'bottleneck'") is that it "can extend monopoly power from one stage of production to another and from one market into another." MCI Communications, 708 F.2d at 1132. Under these circumstances, the essential facilities doctrine is used "to preserve horizontal competition at a level other than the bottleneck." Fishman v. Estate of Wirtz, 807 F.2d at 575 (Easterbrook, J., dissenting in part). Needless to say, the threshold inquiry is whether JAM, Flip Side's competitor, has or had market power in the relevant market. [9] In other words, we determine whether the defendants' (JAM and Tempo's) alleged control of the Horizon created a "bottleneck," i.e., is the Horizon an essential facility?

[26] The district court found, and neither appellants nor appellees challenge, that the relevant market in this case was the promotion of arena-level concerts in the Chicago metropolitan area. The district court proceeded to analyze Flip Side's essential facilities claim evaluating its evidence of "the Horizon's monopoly drawing power," i.e., that big-time recording artists performing out of arena-level facilities preferred to perform at the Horizon and not at other arena-level facilities, i.e., the Stadium, the Amphitheatre, and the Pavilion. This evidence consisted of a statement made by Lawrence Rosenbaum [10] and was the principal evidence Flip Side produced to establish that JAM, its direct competitor, exercised significant market power in the relevant market.

[27] Further, Flip Side submitted evidence, attempting to establish that the Pavilion was not a viable facility, i.e., that it did not reasonably duplicate the Horizon. This evidence consisted of the affidavit of Danny Kresky, a concert promoter, in which he stated:

> "It is also my understanding that the . . . Pavilion is approximately nine-thousand in capacity, which in my opinion is not a competitive venue to the Horizon because it is about one-half the size of the Horizon."

This same affidavit included the following statement: "It is my understanding that the Chicago Stadium is not available." Carl Rosenbaum, in his affidavit, also asserted that the Stadium was unavailable, at least in 1976, because the owner of the Stadium, Arthur Wirtz, had provided, pursuant to a contract, another promoter exclusive concert promotion rights at the Stadium. On this basis Flip Side asserted that neither the Pavilion nor the Chicago Stadium could reasonably duplicate the Horizon as a concert facility. Lastly, Flip Side contended that the International Amphitheatre was more expensive and not suited for staging concerts in light of the fact that the "Amphitheatre was considered a 'toilet' [28] by JAM itself." Thus, like the Pavilion and Stadium, the Amphitheatre did not reasonably duplicate the Horizon. In conclusion, Flip Side contended that access to the Horizon (an alleged essential facility) was necessary to promote arena-level concerts in the Chicago metro area. After years of discovery this is the extent of the evidence produced by Flip Side to establish that [*1034] JAM and Tempo violated the antitrust laws.

We affirm Judge Moran's finding that the Horizon was not an essential facility for the promotion of arena-level concerts in the Chicago metro area. From our review of the record, we concur with the trial court's finding that Flip Side failed to produce specific facts establishing that there was a genuine issue for trial. The undisputed facts demonstrate (1) that Flip Side, for a time, promoted concerts at the International Amphitheatre under an exclusive

---

[9] Flip Side alleged that Tempo had an exclusive contract with the Village of Rosemont for the presentation of concerts at the Horizon and further alleged that JAM had an exclusive sublicense for the promotion of concerts at the essential facility. This is a form of vertical organization in that Flip Side and JAM compete for the use of arena-level facilities, i.e., compete with each other for the presentation of concerts to consumers in the Chicago metropolitan market. JAM and Flip Side also compete for different performing artists. On the other hand, Tempo does not compete directly with Flip Side because it neither recruits artists nor actually promotes concerts itself; rather, it sublicenses its exclusive agreement to present concerts at the Horizon to various promoters, including JAM.

[10] Lawrence Rosenbaum testified, inter alia:

> "A. Also, another difference between the two facilities is the acceptance by the groups and agents of the Horizon and what appears to be developing as a dislike by those same people for the Pavilion.
>
> * * *
>
> Q. On what facts do you base the statement that some concerts -- some artists prefer the Horizon over the Pavilion?
>
> A. Information from agents."

agreement to do so, (2) that Flip Side admitted that the Pavilion was an arena-level facility, and further conceded that the Pavilion was available to it for staging concerts (although Flip Side apparently chose not to promote concerts there), (3) that concerts were performed at the Stadium during the relevant [29] time period, (4) that Poplar Creek, too, staged concerts and was available as an arena-level facility, and (5) that although some artists preferred performing at the Rosemont Horizon rather than at the Pavilion, artists performed at other arena-level facilities, including the Pavilion and Stadium. There is no evidence in this record, consisting of hundreds of pages, setting aside Flip Side's accusations, fulminations and speculations, which would demonstrate that Tempo's alleged exclusive agreement with the Village and JAM's alleged exclusive sublicense agreement with Tempo instilled in JAM market power in any market or that the concert-going consumer suffered any detriment. The record contains nothing but Flip Side's speculative accusations regarding the "essential" quality of the Horizon. Drawing all reasonable inferences in Flip Side's favor, at most Flip Side produced merely colorable evidence; thus, we hold that the Horizon was not an essential facility and affirm the grant of summary judgment against Flip Side and in favor of the defendants.

Further, assuming Flip Side's best scenario, the defendants would still be entitled to summary judgment as a matter of law. Flip [30] Side contended (1) that JAM and Tempo had exclusive control of the Horizon for the promotion of concerts, (2) that neither the Pavilion nor the Amphitheatre (while open) reasonably duplicated the Horizon, and (3) that the Stadium was unavailable because another promoter had the exclusive concert promotion rights in that facility. Under these circumstances, absent collusion between JAM, Tempo, and the promoter of concerts at the Stadium, Flip Side failed to demonstrate an antitrust injury since competition for the concert-going consumer remained as the promoters controlling the Horizon and Stadium necessarily vied for the market. In other words, the Horizon was not a bottleneck (i.e., not an essential facility). Flip Side neither provided nor has our research discovered, authority for the proposition that two competitors, each holding exclusive rights to promote a product (here concerts) from competing facilities (here two arena-level facilities) constitutes a violation of the antitrust laws where a third competitor (Flip Side) becomes defunct. The record in this case reveals that Flip Side's business failure was probably the result of its principals' dishonest and criminal activity [31] rather than the defendants' alleged anti-competitive conduct. This was truly an antitrust "non-event." Fishman v. Estate of Wirtz, 807 F.2d at 563 (Easterbrook, J., dissenting).

IV

Flip Side's RICO Claim

Flip Side alleged that the defendants were engaged in a systematic "and widespread deduction of phony, artificial and false expenses from the compensation that would otherwise have been paid to the artists [who performed at the Horizon]." Flip Side contended that "as a result of the scheme, plaintiff was damaged by being excluded from competition in the market." The district court stated: "It is unclear whether Flip Side has standing to sue on a RICO claim" for the alleged scheme, and further noted that "the causal connection between the alleged scheme to defraud artists and plaintiff's harm is a tenuous one: that the JAM defendants and Tempo excluded Flip Side from the Horizon in order to prevent the performers from discovering [*1035] the fraud by comparing JAM's fees with the assertively lower fees that Flip Side would have hypothetically charged." The district court found Flip Side's RICO claim fatally infirm. [11] On appeal, Flip Side asserts, in [32] one sentence, that under the Supreme Court's decision in Sedima, S.P.R.L. v. Imrex Co., Inc., 473 U.S. 479, 105 S. Ct. 3275, 3285-86, 87 L. Ed. 2d 346 (1985), that it has standing to allege the RICO claim.

While observing that such perfunctory treatment does not generally suffice as argument before this court, we reject Flip Side's contention that it had standing to bring the RICO claim. HN6[] In Sedima the Supreme Court stated:

> "The plaintiff only has standing if, and can only recover to the extent that, he has been injured in his business or property by the conduct constituting the violation. As the Seventh Circuit has stated: '[a] defendant who

---

[11] The court further noted that even if Flip Side did have standing, it had failed to produce any evidence of fraud.

violates § 1962 is not liable for trebled damages for everyone he might have injured by other conduct, nor is the defendant [33] liable to those who have been injured.'"

Id. at 3285-86 (quoting Haroco, Inc. v. American National Bank & Trust Company of Chicago, 747 F.2d 384, 398 (7th Cir. 1984), aff'd, 473 U.S. 606, 105 S. Ct. 3291, 87 L. Ed. 2d 437 (1985)). In Haroco we stated that:

"This holding by no means renders superfluous the requirement in § 1964(c) that the plaintiff be injured 'by reason of' a violation of § 1962. As we read this 'by reason of' language, it simply imposes a proximate cause requirement on plaintiffs. The criminal conduct in violation of § 1962 must, directly or indirectly, have injured the plaintiff's business or property.

Flip Side alleges that its business was injured because it was excluded from the Horizon. Flip Side's only possible basis for arguing that it had a right to promote concerts at the Horizon rests on our holding that the Horizon is an essential facility for the promotion of concerts in the Chicago metro area. In light of our contrary holding, Flip Side could not have suffered an injury to its business and thus had no standing to bring the RICO claim.

V

Rule 11

The district court stated: [34] "All this litigation -- better termed 'warfare' -- between the parties has generated its own line of attack: Rule 11 and 28 U.S.C. § 1927." On March 2, 1987, the district court denied JAM and Flip Side's petitions for fees and granted Tempo's petition for fees. [12] Both JAM and Flip Side appeal from the order of the district court.

HN7[] "Rule 11 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure provides that if an attorney [35] files pleadings that are not reasonably based on the law or in fact, or that are meant to harass, then 'the Court upon motion or upon its own initiative, shall impose . . . an appropriate sanction.'" [13]

---

[12] Tempo moved for sanctions under both 28 U.S.C. § 1927 and Rule 11. § 1927 provides only for the imposition of sanctions against counsel while Rule 11 provides for sanctions against both parties and their attorneys. See Ordower v. Feldman, 826 F.2d 1569, 1573 (7th Cir. 1987). The district court assessed fees against Flip Side only; thus, we proceed with our analysis treating the district court's imposition of sanctions under Fed. R. Civ. P. 11.

[13] Rule 11 provides:

"Every pleading, motion, and other paper of a party represented by an attorney shall be signed by at least one attorney of record in his individual name, whose address shall be stated. A party who is not represented by an attorney shall sign his pleading, motion, or other paper and state his address. Except when otherwise specifically provided by rule or statute, pleadings need not be verified or accompanied by affidavit. The rule in equity that the averments of an answer under oath must be overcome by the testimony of two witnesses or of one witness sustained by corroborating circumstances is abolished. The signature of an attorney or party constitutes a certificate by him that he has read the pleading, motion, or other paper; that to the best of his knowledge, information, and belief formed after reasonable inquiry it is well grounded in fact and is warranted by existing law or a good faith argument for the extension, modification, or reversal of existing law, and that it is not interposed for any improper purpose such as to harass or to cause unnecessary delay or needless increase in the cost of litigation. If a pleading, motion, or other paper is not signed, it shall be stricken unless it is signed properly after the omission is called to the attention of the pleader or movant. If a pleading, motion, or other paper is signed in violation of this rule, the Court, upon motion or upon its own initiative, shall impose upon the person who signed it, a represented party, or both, an appropriate sanction, which may include an order to pay to the other party or parties the amount of the reasonable expenses incurred because of the filing of the pleading, motion, or other paper, including a reasonable attorney's fee."

Fed. R. Civ. P. 11 (1986).

Brown v. Federation of State Medical Boards of the United States, 830 F.2d 1429, 1433 [*1036] (7th Cir. 1987). HN8[] In Brown we adopted the following analysis to determine whether a district court properly imposed Rule 11 sanctions. Initially, we review the district court's findings of fact with respect to the imposition of sanctions under the clearly erroneous standard. Id. at 1434. Subsequently, we review de novo the court's "legal conclusion that conduct in a particular case constitute[s] a violation of Rule 11." Id. (emphasis added). HN9[] However, "the decision whether there has been a violation is a judgment call." Matter of Central Ice Cream Co., 836 F.2d 1068, 1072 (7th Cir. 1987) (emphasis added). This significant [36] distinction exists because:

> "The Rule speaks of 'reasonable' pre-filing inquiry, the language of tort law. And although the definition of a frivolous legal position is itself a question of law, there will often be factual questions concerning the actual position the litigant took -- questions on which the court of first instance has the leading role."

Id. Thus, although the district court's "legal conclusion" is subject to de novo review "we apply a deferential standard on review of the question whether the filing of a paper violated Rule 11." Id. Further, if we hold the sanction was properly imposed, we again review the amount or type of sanction imposed under an abuse of discretion standard. Brown, 830 F.2d at 1434.

[37] HN10[]

Rule 11 provides two grounds for sanctions: namely, the "frivolousness clause" and the "improper purpose" clause. Id. at 1435. The frivolousness clause requires that the party or the attorney conduct a reasonable inquiry into the facts and the law relevant to the case. Id. The improper purpose clause ensures "that a motion, pleading, or other document may not be interposed for purposes of delay, harassment, or increasing the costs of litigation." Id. at 1436. The standard for imposing sanctions under either prong of Rule 11 is an "objective determination of whether the sanctioned party's conduct was reasonable under the circumstances." Id. at 1435.

In imposing sanctions against Flip Side in favor of Tempo, the district court stated:

> "Added by amendment to the original complaint, Tempo was accused of having a licensing agreement with the Horizon, but no theory or evidence was ever raised as to how such an agreement was illegal, either per se or as administered by Tempo. In fact, as Tempo states in its fees petition, [38] 'its principal' sin appears to be a 'partial familial relationship with the JAM principals.' . . . We find that Flip Side should have learned that it had no evidence of any antitrust behavior on Tempo's part by the time discovery was closed."

Implicit in the district court's finding is that it imposed sanctions under Rule 11's frivolousness clause because the court concluded that once discovery was closed, Flip Side should have known that the facts and the law then known clearly established that Tempo had not violated either the antitrust laws or RICO. As our earlier analysis of Flip Side's essential facility claims demonstrates, the district court found that at the close of discovery Flip Side had failed to produce any evidence that the alleged Tempo-JAM agreements had given JAM market power in any market. Further, Flip Side admitted that the Pavilion was an arena-level facility to which it had access to promote concerts. As previously noted, these factual findings are not clearly erroneous. At the close of discovery, because Tempo was not implicated in an antitrust or RICO violation, Flip Side was obligated to dismiss Tempo or suffer the consequences. Flip Side apparently [39] chose the latter, and the district court, in its discretion, based upon "the actual position" Flip Side took, imposed sanctions. We hold that under these circumstances the district court properly imposed sanctions pursuant to Rule 11.

[*1037] As we pointed out in Brown, the most important purpose of Rule 11 sanctions is to deter frivolous litigation and the abusive practices of attorneys. 830 F.2d at 1438. We recognized that "to avoid prolonging and complicating . . . Rule 11 satellite litigation" the district court should provide specific findings when awarding substantial compensatory sanctions. Id. at 1440. In this case the district court specifically stated: "We assess those fees incurred in preparing material after that time [the close of discovery] against Flip Side at the rates Tempo was actually billed during that period." We are convinced that these findings and conclusions are sufficiently specific and allow us to "follow the path" taken by the district court. Id. at 1438. Tempo submitted a bill to the district court totaling $ 42,496.25 for fees incurred after the close of discovery. Flip Side asserts that [40] this amount is excessive and unsupported. However, the district court reviewed the record and the fee requests, and we cannot say that the district court abused its discretion in imposing this sanction. It appears that Tempo expended considerable effort preparing and submitting its motion for summary judgment. Thus, we affirm the district court's imposition of fees in favor of Tempo in the amount of $ 42,496.25. [14]

However, the district court additionally imposed a sanction of $ 37,373.75 for Tempo's fees incurred responding to Flip Side's initial appeal (No. 86-1837) to this court from the order of the district court granting summary judgment for the defendants. Flip Side argues that the district court did not have jurisdiction to award fees and costs for proceedings [41] pending in the appellate court. We agree.

HN11[] Rule 38 of the Fed. R. App. P. authorizes this court to award attorneys' fees and costs if we hold that an appeal is frivolous. [15] Under Rule 38 the district court is not empowered to award fees for proceedings before this court; thus, we must reverse the finding of the district court to the extent it is inconsistent with Rule 38. However, this court is free to impose sanctions on those who abuse the appellate procedure. Before we impose sanctions, in addition to finding an appeal frivolous, we must also determine whether the case is an "'appropriate one for the imposition of sanctions.'" Spiegel v. Continental Illinois National Bank, 790 F.2d 638, 650 (7th Cir. 1986) (quoting Indianapolis Colts v. Mayor and City Council of Baltimore, 775 F.2d 177, 184 (7th Cir. 1985)); see also Sparks v. NLRB, 835 F.2d 705, 707 (7th Cir. 1987). Therefore, we order Tempo, if it so chooses, to submit to the clerk of this court within fifteen (15) days a brief limited to ten (10) pages addressing whether either [42] Flip Side's appeal from the order of the district court granting summary judgment for Tempo, or its appeal from the court's order imposing sanctions, or both, are frivolous and whether sanctions would be appropriately awarded. Further, if Tempo seeks Rule 38 sanctions, it should attach to its brief a verified, itemized statement for the time expended briefing and responding to Flip Side's appeal from: (1) the order of the district court granting Tempo's motion for summary judgment, or (2) the order of the district court imposing sanctions, or both. If Tempo seeks Rule 38 sanctions, Flip Side will be allowed five (5) days to submit a responsive brief (limited to ten (10) pages).

Lastly, we summarily reject JAM's appeal from the district court's denial of its petition for attorneys' fees and sanctions pursuant to Rule 11 and 28 U.S.C. § 1927. [43] The district court found, and the record clearly demonstrates, that JAM responded to Flip Side's essential facility and RICO claims, utilizing "mirror" counterclaims and third-party complaints. Judge Moran stated:

> "While we are unwilling to hold that Flip Side's pleadings against JAM groundless [*1038] or to find a lack of competence on the part of Flip Side's attorneys, their behavior comes perilously close to harassment. However, we are reluctant to grant either side fees since, as Flip Side was arduously pursuing its claims, JAM (at least in theory) was likewise pursuing its counterclaims."

Mem. and Order, March 2, 1987. Although we observe that JAM has not appealed from the district court's grant of Flip Side's summary judgment motion on the essential facilities claim, to the extent JAM pursued its bogus claims, its conduct did not differ qualitatively from Flip Side's. As we noted, "the decision whether there has been a [Rule 11] violation is a judgment call," Matter of Central Ice Cream Co., 836 F.2d at 1072 (emphasis added), better left to the discretion of the district court who has a bird's eye view of "the actual positions" [44] taken by the litigants. Id. Under these circumstances, JAM is not entitled to an award of sanctions since we hold that the district court properly exercised its discretion.

For the reasons discussed above, we affirm in part and reverse in part.

---

[14] The district court found that Tempo only requested fees and not costs. Tempo does not challenge the district court's finding; thus, we affirm the award of $ 42,496.25 (rather than the $ 44,253.05 total including costs noted in Tempo's brief).

[15] Rule 38 provides: "If a court of appeals shall determine that an appeal is frivolous, it may award just damages and single or double costs to the appellee."

End of Document

Pope v. Mississippi Real Estate Com.

United States District Court for the Northern District of Mississippi, Eastern Division

April 5, 1988, Decided

Civil Action No. EC 84-265-D-D

Reporter

695 F. Supp. 253 *; 1988 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 9815 ; 1988-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P67,953

JAMES WILLIAM POPE, SR. and MARY ANN POPE, d/b/a CENTURY 21, POPE'S REALTY, Plaintiffs, v. MISSISSIPPI REAL ESTATE COMMISSION, ET AL., Defendants membership, summary judgment, plaintiffs', conspiracy, Realtors, antitrust, genuine issue of material fact, advertising, matter of law, entitled to judgment, sufficient evidence, complaints, interstate commerce, anti trust law, defendants', non-moving, Realty, sub judice, brokers, real estate, violations, plaintiff's claim, price fixing, summary judgment motion, trademark, multiple listing service, antitrust claim, notice, probative evidence, rule of reason

Core Terms

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Opposing Materials > General Overview

HN1[] Summary Judgment, Entitlement as Matter of Law

Fed. R. Civ. P. Rule 56 must be construed with due regard not only for the rights of persons asserting claims and defenses that are adequately based in fact to have those claims and defenses tried to a jury, but also for the rights of persons opposing such claims and defenses to demonstrate in the manner provided by the Rule, prior to trial, that the claims or defenses have no factual basis.

Civil Procedure > ... > Discovery > Methods of Discovery > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Supporting Materials > General Overview

HN2[] Discovery, Methods of Discovery

A party seeking summary judgment always bears the initial responsibility of informing the district court of the basis for its motion, and identifying those portions of the pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories, and admissions on file, together with the affidavits, if any, which it believes demonstrate the absence of a genuine issue of material fact.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Appropriateness

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Motions for Summary Judgment > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Genuine Disputes

HN3[] Entitlement as Matter of Law, Appropriateness

When a motion for summary judgment is made an adverse party may not rest upon the mere allegations or denials of the adverse party's pleading, but the adverse party's response, by affidavits or as otherwise must set forth specific facts showing that there is a genuine issue for trial. If the adverse party does not so respond, summary judgment, if appropriate, shall be entered against the adverse party.

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Summary Judgment > Evidentiary Considerations

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > Movant Persuasion & Proof

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Opposing Materials > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Supporting Materials > General Overview

HN4[] Summary Judgment, Evidentiary Considerations

The party with the burden of proof must respond to motions for summary judgment with sufficient evidence to support its prima facie case. The party opposing a motion supported by affidavits cannot discharge his burden by alleging legal conclusions. There is no sound reason why conclusory allegations should suffice to require a trial when there is no evidence to support them even if the movant lacks contrary evidence.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Opposing Materials > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Genuine Disputes

HN5[] Summary Judgment, Opposing Materials

Evidence in opposition to a summary judgment motion that clearly is without any probative force is insufficient to raise a genuine issue.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Genuine Disputes

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Materiality of Facts

HN6[] Summary Judgment, Burdens of Proof

Denials or allegations by the non-moving party in the form of legal conclusions which are unsupported by specific facts have no probative value and are thus insufficient to create genuine issues of material fact that would preclude summary judgment.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Opposing Materials > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

HN7[] Summary Judgment, Opposing Materials

The non-moving party cannot successfully defeat a summary judgment motion by unsworn statements or the suggestion that proof might be forthcoming at trial.

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Summary Judgment > Evidentiary Considerations

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > Scintilla Rule

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

HN8[] Summary Judgment, Evidentiary Considerations

A court must first examine the evidentiary record to determine if a genuine issue of material fact exists. The inquiry performed is the threshold inquiry of determining whether there is the need for a trial. In other words, whether there are any genuine factual issues that properly can be resolved only by a finder of fact because they may reasonably be resolved in favor of either party. A court is not to weigh the evidence and determine the truth of the matter but to determine whether there is a genuine issue for trial. The United States Supreme Court has repeatedly indicated that there is no issue for trial unless there is sufficient evidence favoring the non-moving party for a jury to return a verdict for that party. Summary judgment should be granted if the evidence is merely colorable or is not significantly probative.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

HN9[] Summary Judgment, Entitlement as Matter of Law

Where the record taken as a whole could not lead a rational trier of fact to find for the non-moving party, there is no genuine issue for trial.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

HN10[] Summary Judgment, Entitlement as Matter of Law

Only disputes over facts that might affect the outcome of the suit under the governing law will properly preclude the entry of summary judgment. Factual disputes that are irrelevant or unnecessary will not be counted.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > Nonmovant Persuasion & Proof

HN11[] Summary Judgment, Entitlement as Matter of Law

The plain language of Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(c) mandates the entry of summary judgment, after adequate time for discovery and upon motion, against a party who fails to make a showing sufficient to establish the existence of the element essential to that party's case, and on which that party will bear the burden of proof at trial. In such a situation, there can be no genuine issue as to any material fact, since a complete failure of proof concerning an essential element of the non-moving party's case necessarily renders all other facts immaterial. The moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law because the non-moving party has failed to make a sufficient showing on an essential element of her case with respect to which she has the burden of proof.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

HN12[] Private Actions, Remedies

A plaintiff seeking damages for antitrust violations must present evidence that tends to exclude the possibility that the alleged conspirators acted independently.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Appropriateness

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

HN13[] Entitlement as Matter of Law, Appropriateness

Although summary judgment procedures should be used sparingly in complex antitrust litigation where motive and intent play leading rolls, summary judgment may be granted where plaintiff can aver no significant probative facts in support of its conclusory allegations of conspiracy against defendants' specific averments to the contrary.

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Summary Judgment > Evidentiary Considerations

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

HN14[] Summary Judgment, Evidentiary Considerations

In an antitrust conspiracy case ambiguous evidence is to be treated skeptically on a motion for summary judgment, since an inference of unlawful conduct which arises only from ambiguous evidence will be of no use to the plaintiff at trial.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

HN15[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

A court should apply the rule of reason in determining whether an antitrust violation occurred. Per se treatment is not proper in such a situation. Price fixing and other antitrust violations are treated as per se illegal, but non-price restrictions are judged under the rule of reason. The rule of reason analysis requires a weighing of the relevant circumstances of a case to decide whether a restrictive practice constitutes an unreasonable restraint on competition.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

HN16[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

A stock purchase requirement and sizeable membership fee are financial barriers that have anti-competitive potential that they should be held unreasonable.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

HN17[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

Membership criteria which are reasonably necessary and narrowly tailored toward a valid interest may be justified in competitive terms and satisfy the rule of reason.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

HN18[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

With regard to the rule of reasoning, the true test of legality is whether the restraint imposed is such as merely regulates and perhaps thereby promotes competition, or whether it is such as may suppress or even destroy competition. To determine that question the court must ordinarily consider the facts peculiar to the business to which the restraint is applied; its conditions before and after the restraint was imposed; the nature of the restraint, and its effect, actual or probable. The history of the restraint, the evil believed to exist, the reason for adopting the particular remedy, the purpose or end sought to be attained, are all relevant facts. This is not because a good intention will save an otherwise objectionable regulation, or the reverse; but because knowledge of intent may help the court to interpret facts and to predict consequences.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

Insurance Law > ... > Insurance Company Operations > Company Representatives > Brokers

Real Property Law > Brokers > Brokerage Agreements

Insurance Law > ... > Insurance Company Operations > Company Representatives > General Overview

HN19[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

Real estate brokers may require some insurance that they will not be endangered legally or ethically by brokers with whom they enter a listing-sharing agreement. Membership criteria reasonably necessary to insure this protection, and narrowly tailored to this end, may thus be justified in competitive terms and able to survive at least facial review.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

HN20[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

A sizeable membership fee which bears no relation to the cost factors outlined above may not only create a significant barrier to new entry into the association, but may create a strong inference that the amount has been set up as a barrier against new applications.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

HN21[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

A private organization may limit its services to its members as long as there is no arbitrary exclusion from membership, even where the services are economically necessary.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

Business & Corporate Law > Unincorporated Associations

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Higher Education & Professional Associations > Professional Associations

HN22[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

Members of a voluntary trade association may properly exclude any non-member from participation in its activities. Such exclusion does not constitute a violation of the antitrust laws.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

HN23[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

In a summary judgment posture, the arbitrary exclusion from membership in an association providing services and facilities essential to effective competition is unlawful, but that an association may lawfully limit its services and facilities to its members where there are no restrictive membership arguments.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

Governments > Courts > Authority to Adjudicate

HN24[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

A court has the power to void any significantly restrictive rule of a combination or trade association with significant market power, which lacks competitive justification or whose reach clearly exceeds the combination's legitimate needs.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > General Overview

HN25[] Regulated Practices, Market Definition

The legality of arguable anti-competitive conduct should be judged primarily by its market impact.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

HN26[] Private Actions, Remedies

Under the rule of reason, a showing of anti-competitive market effect is an essential predicate for antitrust liability.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Jurisdiction

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Transportation Law > Interstate Commerce > State Powers

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN27[] Sherman Act, Jurisdiction

The federal antitrust laws regulate interstate commerce and not local intra-state commerce. Jurisdiction may not be invoked under the Sherman Act unless the relevant aspect of interstate commerce is identified; it is not sufficient to rely on identification of a relevant local activity and to presume an interrelationship with some unspecified aspect of interstate commerce. To establish jurisdiction a plaintiff must allege the critical relationship in the pleadings and if these allegations are controverted must proceed to demonstrate by submission of evidence beyond the pleadings either that the defendants' activity is itself in interstate commerce or, if it is local in nature, that it has an effect on some other appreciable activity demonstrably in interstate commerce.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > General Overview

HN28[] Monopolies & Monopolization, Attempts to Monopolize

The purpose of the Sherman Act is to prohibit monopolies, contracts and combinations which probably would unduly interfere with the free exercise of their rights by those engaged, or who wish to engage, in trade and commerce - in a word to preserve the right of freedom to trade. In the absence of any purpose to create or maintain a monopoly, the act does not restrict the long recognized right of trader or manufacturer engaged in an entirely private business, freely to exercise his own independent discretion as to parties with whom he will deal. And, of course, he may announce in advance the circumstances under which he will refuse to sell.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Horizontal Refusals to Deal > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

HN29[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Horizontal Refusals to Deal

The refusal to deal becomes unlawful only when it produces an unreasonable restraint on trade and there exists an anti-competitive purpose or effect in selecting those with whom one will deal.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > General Overview

HN30[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

A plaintiff must prove five elements to establish liability for a boycott conspiracy under § 1 of the Sherman Act and Section 4 of the Clayton Act. A plaintiff must prove: (1) that a conspiracy to boycott existed; (2) that the defendants participated in a conspiracy; (3) that the conspiracy had a sufficient nexus with interstate commerce; (4) that the conspiracy injured the plaintiff; and (5) the approximate amount of damages.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Remedies > Damages

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > General Overview

Evidence > Inferences & Presumptions > Inferences

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Trials > Judgment as Matter of Law > General Overview

HN31[] Remedies, Damages

Conduct as consistent with permissible competition as with illegal conspiracy does not, standing alone, support an inference of antitrust conspiracy. To survive a motion for summary judgment or for a directed verdict, a plaintiff seeking damages for a violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act must present evidence that tends to exclude the possibility that the alleged conspirators acted independently.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

HN32[] Private Actions, Standing

Injury is the sine qua non for stating a cause of action by a private antitrust plaintiff.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Claims

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Standing > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Remedies > Damages

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > Prioritizing Resources & Organization for Intellectual Property Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > Clayton Act

HN33[] Clayton Act, Claims

A private plaintiff's standing to sue for antitrust damages is governed by § 4 of the Clayton Act, 15 U. S. C. § 15, which confers standing only on those persons who have been injured in their business or property by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > Requirements

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Standing > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

HN34[] Standing, Requirements

The target area test for determining antitrust standing arose as a means of limiting the class of potential treble damage plaintiffs to those persons who could most adequately vindicate the purpose of the antitrust laws. To attain standing a person (whether corporation or individual) must be one against whom the conspiracy is aimed.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > Scope

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > General Overview

HN35[] Exemptions & Immunities, Noerr-Pennington Doctrine

The antitrust laws do not apply to private efforts to petition governmental agencies.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > Exemptions

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > Scope

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Sports > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Higher Education & Professional Associations > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Higher Education & Professional Associations > Colleges & Universities

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN36[] Scope, Exemptions

Neither the Sherman Act nor the Clayton Act was intended to authorize restraint of governmental action.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > General Overview

Trademark Law > ... > Registration Procedures > Federal Registration > Degree of Protection

Trademark Law > Trademark Cancellation & Establishment > Registration Procedures > General Overview

HN37[] Regulated Practices, Trade Practices & Unfair Competition

The acts of registering and enforcing a trademark merely represents fair and aggressive competition which does not constitute a violation of the antitrust laws.

Constitutional Law > ... > Freedom of Speech > Commercial Speech > Advertising

Constitutional Law > ... > Fundamental Freedoms > Freedom of Speech > General Overview

Constitutional Law > ... > Freedom of Speech > Commercial Speech > General Overview

Constitutional Law > ... > Freedom of Speech > Commercial Speech > Misleading Speech

HN38[] Commercial Speech, Advertising

The Supreme Court adopted a four-part test for determining the validity of government restrictions on commercial speech. This test was as follows: (1) the First Amendment protects commercial speech only if that speech concerns lawful activity and is not misleading; (2) a restriction on otherwise protected commercial speech is valid if it seeks to implement a substantial governmental interest, and (3) directly advances that interest, and (4) reaches no further than necessary to accomplish the given objective.

Constitutional Law > Substantive Due Process > Scope

Constitutional Law > ... > Fundamental Rights > Procedural Due Process > Scope of Protection

HN39[] Constitutional Law, Substantive Due Process

Due process is a flexible standard which has been refined for different situations. In some contexts, due process procedural protection requires that the accused receive notice prior to termination of a property right, that written notice of the reasons for the suspension be given, and that an effective opportunity to rebut those reasons be provided. In other contexts, due process protections are satisfied by a post-deprivation hearing which provides an opportunity for the accused to correct any errors in the accusations. In other contexts, due process protections require a full-blown hearing with notice prior to any governmental action.

Administrative Law > ... > Formal Adjudicatory Procedure > Impartial Decisionmaker > Participation in Prosecution

Constitutional Law > ... > Fundamental Rights > Procedural Due Process > Scope of Protection

HN40[] Impartial Decisionmaker, Participation in Prosecution

The combination of investigative and judicial functions within an agency does not in itself violate due process.

Constitutional Law > ... > Fundamental Rights > Procedural Due Process > General Overview

Torts > ... > Defamation > Public Figures > Voluntary Public Figures

Constitutional Law > Equal Protection > Nature & Scope of Protection

Constitutional Law > Qualifications for Federal Office

HN41[] Fundamental Rights, Procedural Due Process

Persons may sometimes possess a liberty interest in their reputation. However, not every act of a public official resulting in defamation creates a deprivation of liberty under the Fourteenth Amendment, U.S. Const. amend. XIV.

Constitutional Law > Equal Protection > Nature & Scope of Protection

HN42[] Equal Protection, Nature & Scope of Protection

The United States Supreme Court has held in an unlawful administration context that a denial of equal protection has not occurred unless there is an element of intentional or purposeful discrimination by government officials.

Civil Procedure > Dismissal > Involuntary Dismissals > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Supplemental Jurisdiction > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Supplemental Jurisdiction > Pendent Claims

HN43[] Dismissal, Involuntary Dismissals

A judge has wide discretion to dismiss a pendent state claim after the dismissal of federal claims. In exercising this discretion, the district court should look to considerations of judicial economy, convenience and fairness to litigants and should avoid needless decisions of state law.

Counsel: [1] Jim Waide, Tupelo, Mississippi, Attorney for Plaintiff.

John W. Crowell, Columbus, Mississippi, Attorney for Defendant Phil Roberts.

Reed Hillen, Tupelo, Mississippi, Attorney for Defendants Monroe County Board of Realtors, Jack Francis and Mary Lib Francis.

John L. Maxey, II, Jackson, Mississippi, Attorney for Mississippi Real Estate Commission.

Elizabeth Ann Odom, Aberdeen, Mississippi, Attorney for Joyce B. Murphy.

Robert D. Butters, Chicago, Illinois, Attorney for National Association of Realtors.

Judges: Glen H. Davidson, United States District Judge.

Opinion by: DAVIDSON

Opinion

[*256] MEMORANDUM OPINION

GLEN H. DAVIDSON, UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE

James William Pope, Sr. and Mary Ann Pope ("Popes", "plaintiffs" or "non-movants") have brought this action against both private and government defendants [1] [*257] claiming violations of both federal and state law. The plaintiffs' claims against the private defendants include federal antitrust violations and the following state law claims: state antitrust violations; interference with economic relations, business relations, and business contacts in violation of state laws; and libel, slander, and defamation. Plaintiffs' [2] claims against the government defendants include federal antitrust claims and violations of the First Amendment, due process clause, and equal protection clause, as well as state law claims which include state antitrust violations; interference with economic relations, business relations, and business contacts violations; libel, slander and defamation; violation of the public record statute; and violation of separation of powers requirement of the Mississippi Constitution. The government and private defendants have separately moved for summary judgment. The government and private defendants have shown the absence of material issues of fact and argue that they are entitled to judgment as a matter of law. The plaintiffs responded by amending their complaint and providing a brief, an affidavit, and several depositions in opposition to both motions for summary judgment.

[3] The court has reviewed the extensive evidentiary record, the plaintiffs' pleadings and brief, the defendants' pleadings and numerous briefs in support of their motions for summary judgment, and has carefully considered the record as a whole. The court has gone to great lengths to consider each claim of the plaintiffs and the evidence presented by the plaintiffs in support of their claims. The court is now convinced that the record in the case sub judice justifies the granting of the motions for summary judgment, even though the court recognizes that a full blown trial will often serve a useful purpose in such a complex action. The plaintiffs fail to set forth sufficient evidence to establish a genuine issue of material fact and the court accordingly finds that the defendants are entitled to judgment as a matter of law.

Factual Background

A. Plaintiffs' Allegations

The Popes are engaged in the real estate business in Amory, Mississippi which is located in Monroe County. The plaintiffs allege that they began work in the real estate business in 1978 after they obtained broker's licenses from the Mississippi Real Estate Commission ("MREC"). The plaintiffs maintain that they [4] have set their own sales commission rates and have refused to abide by price fixing and other anti-competitive practices which have been utilized by the defendants. To be more specific, plaintiffs allege that certain of the local private defendants [2] have denied the plaintiffs access to the multiple listing service which lists property available for sale in Monroe County, Mississippi. Plaintiffs also allege that the other private defendants [3] are jointly liable for these alleged antitrust violations because they encouraged, enticed, and joined in this activity through their constitutions and by-laws.

---

[1] The government defendants include the Mississippi Real Estate Commission and persons acting on behalf of the Mississippi Real Estate Commission. The other government parties include John L. Kennedy, Sharon F. Abide, J. B. McGehee, Daniel L. Bland, and Harry J. Joachim who are all members of the Mississippi Real Estate Commission. These government defendants also include Phillip D. Hardwick, Administrator of the Mississippi Real Estate Commission, and Kenneth Ammons, Chief Investigator of the Mississippi Real Estate Commission. The private defendants include the Monroe County Board of Realtors, Inc., Mississippi Association of Realtors, Inc., and the National Association of Realtors, Inc., and persons associated with these entities. These additional persons include Joyce B. Murphy, Phil Roberts, Jack Francis, and Mary Lib Francis, who are sued both individually and in their capacities as members of the Monroe County Board of Realtors, Inc. One other private defendant is Thad I. Vann, who is sued both individually and in his capacity as a member of the Mississippi Association of Realtors, Inc.

[2] Local private defendants include the Monroe County Board of Realtors, Inc. ("MCBR" or "Board of Realtors"), Joyce B. Murphy, Phil Roberts, Jack Francis, and Mary Lib Francis.

[3] National Association of Realtors ("NAR") and Mississippi Association of Realtors, Inc. ("MAR").

The plaintiffs allege that the local private defendants who are realtors have engaged in a group boycott of the plaintiffs by collectively [5] refusing to permit the plaintiffs to show property listed by the defendants, or by placing unfair restrictions on [*258] such showing. The plaintiffs further allege that this activity impacts interstate commerce and has an anti-competitive effect on the business of buying and selling real estate in Monroe County.

Plaintiffs allege that government and private defendants have utilized the complaint procedures of the MREC to punish the plaintiffs for competitively engaging in the real estate business. The plaintiffs allege that the defendants have unreasonably restrained trade by placing arbitrary limitations on the use of the term "realtor". Plaintiffs allege that unnamed defendants have prohibited plaintiffs from discussing employment of salesmen employed by other agencies and prohibited plaintiffs from bringing real estate courses to the Amory area. Plaintiffs allege that Jack Francis and Phil Roberts have sold insurance and listed property by unlawful "tying arrangements."

In Count II, the plaintiffs allege that the government defendants have violated the plaintiffs' First Amendment rights as follows: the defendants have purported to punish the plaintiffs for engaging in business [6] advertising; the defendants have purported to punish the plaintiffs for advertising real estate schools and encouraging persons to attend; the defendants have punished the plaintiffs for advertising the giving of vacuum cleaners to past customers; the defendants have punished the plaintiffs for giving away tee shirts and the defendants have prohibited the plaintiffs from using the term "realtor".

In Count III, the plaintiffs allege that the government defendants have violated the due process clause as follows: defendants failed to provide plaintiffs with notice of charges and a fair and impartial hearing on charges brought before that governing body; defendant MREC is both prosecutor and judge and had ex parte communications concerning the hearing; defendants have found the plaintiffs guilty of ethical violations without a hearing; and the defendants allegedly communicated the resulting decision to the public in violation of the plaintiffs' "liberty interest".

In Count IV, the plaintiffs allege that the government defendants violated the equal protection clause by arbitrarily enforcing certain ethical regulations.

In Count V, plaintiffs allege that all of the defendants have violated [7] state law by interfering with the plaintiffs' rights to engage in business.

In Count VI, the plaintiffs allege that private defendants Hardwick and Murphy libeled, defamed, and slandered the plaintiffs causing untrue articles to be placed in the Aberdeen Examiner. Similar claims were made against government defendant Vann.

In Count VII, the plaintiffs allege that the government defendants have refused to disclose various information as required by Mississippi law.

In Count VIII, the plaintiffs allege that the government defendants are in violation of the Mississippi Constitution because they combined the functions of judicial, legislative, and executive branches in one entity.

In Count IX, the plaintiffs allege that the government defendants have retaliated against the plaintiffs in violation of the First Amendment because of an earlier antitrust case brought by Century 21.

B. Defendants' Summary Judgment Motions

The private defendants moved for summary judgment on all claims brought against the private defendants. The private defendants supported their motion with a 76 page memorandum brief, a 31 page reply brief, an 11 page supplemental memorandum, attached authorities, [8] exhibits, depositions, and affidavits. These documents attack the plaintiffs' complaint count by count in an attempt to show the court the absence of a genuine issue of material fact that would preclude a grant of summary judgment. At this point, the court will simply outline the points raised by the private defendants.

In response to Count I, the defendants concede that they have denied plaintiffs participation in the multiple listing service [*259] ("MLS") but they state that this is only because the plaintiffs have voluntarily withdrawn from participation in the Monroe County Board of Realtors ("MCBR"). The private defendants maintain that it is appropriate and legal to limit services to members of a private organization as long as there is no arbitrary or discriminatory exclusion from membership in that organization. Defendants further assert that the plaintiffs have no standing to bring this action because they voluntarily withdrew from the board. As to the complaints filed with the MREC and the response of the MREC, the private defendants maintain that the Noerr - Pennington doctrine exempts their activities from the antitrust laws. The private defendants also assert [9] that the plaintiffs have shown no evidence of a conspiracy to boycott the plaintiffs' business.

The private defendants did not challenge the First Amendment, (Count II), due process (Count III), equal protection (Count IV), public record statute (Count VII), separation of powers (Count VIII), or the unlawful retaliation (Count IX) claims. The private defendants did challenge the claims which were directed at them. As to the pendent state claims which relate to the non-government defendants, they have attempted to show that there is no factual basis for Counts V or VI which involve interference with business relations, libel, defamation, and other such claims.

The government defendants have challenged all claims brought against them. The government defendants supported their motion for summary judgment with a 39 page brief, an 11 page reply brief, exhibits, depositions, affidavits, and James Pope's official file, and a transcript of a hearing at issue. The court will outline the points raised by the government defendants.

As to Count I, the government defendants point out that the plaintiffs lack standing for a claim against the MREC because of the state action exemption to the [10] Sherman Act. Government defendants also assert that the plaintiffs have failed to demonstrate that the alleged antitrust activity related to any inter-state commerce. Government defendants claim that the plaintiffs have not shown that the government defendants acted outside their official capacities or acted contrary to their legislatively mandated responsibilities, and that the plaintiffs have not established the existence of any trusts, combinations, contracts, or agreements with other persons in violation of the antitrust laws.

The government defendants claim that the due process, equal protection and First Amendment claims brought against the government defendants, apparently brought pursuant to 42 U. S. C. § 1983, may not be brought against the MREC itself because of Eleventh Amendment immunity and that the other government defendants have qualified immunity or a good faith immunity defense to each of these claims. As to the substance of the due process claim, the government defendants maintain that the official procedures and the procedures actually implemented assured the plaintiffs of their due process rights. As to the substance of the equal [11] protection claims, the government defendants claim that the plaintiffs have not shown arbitrary enforcement of regulations or any intentional or purposeful discrimination in its investigation of complaints. As to the substance of the First Amendment claims, the government defendants maintain that they were preventing misrepresentations in advertising and avoided taking actions that inhibited true freedom of speech. As to the plaintiffs' First Amendment and retaliation claim of Count IX, the government defendants assert that there was no factual showing that there was any connection between the unrelated case and the alleged actions of the MREC.

The government defendants' response to the pendent state law claims is to suggest that the court should simply dismiss these claims from federal court. The government defendants then set out sovereign immunity and public official immunity defenses. As to the libel, slander, and defamation claim, the government defendants point out that privileged communications may not establish the plaintiffs' claims. The government defendants apparently [*260] concede the dual investigative and judicial roles of the commission, but dispute the legal [12] argument that this is a violation of Mississippi's constitutional separate of powers requirement. As to the denial of public access to records claim, the government defendants maintain that these investigative materials were exempt, but that the defendants subsequently turned these records over to the plaintiffs, thereby eliminating this minor claim.

C. Plaintiffs' Argumentative and Evidentiary Responses

The plaintiffs' response to the summary judgment motions was minimal at best. Plaintiffs presented one brief in opposition, along with an affidavit from James Pope and part of the depositions of Kenneth Ammons, Phillip Hardwick, Jack Francis, Mary Lib Francis, Joyce B. Murphy, and Phillip E. Roberts. The 20 page brief submitted by the plaintiffs was very general and failed to address most of the issues raised by the government and private defendants in their motions for summary judgment.

The only antitrust claims adequately addressed by the plaintiffs were the denial of access to the multiple listing service and price fixing by the private defendants. Plaintiffs claim a factual issue exists concerning some aspect of the group boycott claim. Plaintiffs boldly assert that the government [13] defendants are not entitled to summary judgment. Plaintiffs claim that there is a factual issue as to the denial of liberty without due process of law and conclude that the government defendants are not entitled to summary judgment on either the First Amendment or due process issues. Plaintiffs also maintain that there are factual issues concerning the alleged violations of First Amendment rights.

Plaintiffs failed to point out the pertinent parts of exhibits, depositions and affidavits which created these genuine issues of material fact claimed to exist. The court nonetheless closely reviewed the affidavit and depositions relied on by the plaintiffs, as well as the remaining court record.

D. Defendants Reply

The government and private defendants responded to the plaintiffs' brief in a detailed manner. The private defendants claimed that the plaintiffs do not have standing to sue for price fixing and they have not shown sufficient evidence to support this claim. The private defendants also maintain that there are no material factual issues concerning the plaintiffs' non-participation in the MLS. The government defendants assume that the plaintiffs have abandoned the many claims [14] on which they failed to respond. The government defendants responded point by point to the due process, First Amendment, and separation of powers claims asserted by the plaintiffs in their brief. The private defendants presented a supplemental memorandum which again addressed the standing issue and the basis upon which associations may charge membership fees.

E. Uncontested Facts

The parties have set out 47 facts in the pretrial order that were established by the pleadings, stipulations, or admissions. [4] The court will bring attention to the more pertinent facts contained in the pretrial order.

The established facts that affect the antitrust claim include A-R, FF-VV. Particularly important are the following: the MCBR membership requirements (F, GG, II); requirements for MLS participation (D, E, JJ); absence of evidence of price fixing (PP, UU); evidence refuting boycott claim and market [15] effect (L, M, N, O, LL, VV); and the use of term "Realtor" (II, QQ, RR).

The established facts that affect the First Amendment claims include possible retaliation (K, U, X, Y), non-enforcement of the Code of Ethics (EE), and the existence of a federally registered trademark (RR). The established facts that affect the due process claims (P-DD) indicate the following: the MREC acted within the scope of its official duties (P, Q, R); the MREC acted pursuant to complaints (S, Y); the [*261] MREC gave notice (T, X); the MREC held hearings (V, AA, DD); plaintiffs failed to appeal (W, BB); and the MREC did not publish the information which allegedly defamed the plaintiffs (CC).

Conclusions of Law

The plaintiffs have set forth a multitude of issues against both the government and private defendants based upon the factual situation outlined above. Both the government and private defendants have moved for summary judgment in this action. In this opinion, the court will address the standard to be applied to claims presented in a summary judgment posture and then will apply this standard to each of the claims brought against the defendants.

I

---

[4] See pretrial order at 8-12.

Summary Judgment Standard

Summary judgment [16] re-enforces the purpose of the rules to achieve a "just, speedy, and inexpensive determination" of actions. Fed. R. Civ. P. 1. Summary judgment is no longer considered a "'peculiar procedural short cut,' but an integral part of the 'framework' of the Rules, closely related to other provisions which are similarly intended to permit the early elimination of claims and defenses that the proponents cannot support." Fontenot v. Upjohn Co., 780 F.2d 1190, 1197 (5th Cir. 1986). Summary judgment has filled in the gaps left by the abandonment of other procedural devices and is the most efficient means of testing the sufficiency of factual allegations. Fontenot, 780 F.2d at 1196. "The very mission of the summary judgment procedure is to pierce the pleadings and to assess the proof in order to see whether there is a genuine need for trial." Fed. R. Civ. P. 56, advisory committee note on the 1963 amendments to rule 56(e) (quoted in Fontenot, 780 F.2d at 1196).

A trial serves no useful purpose "when everything that can be adduced at trial is before the judge on motion and the parties, while urging conflicting ultimate facts and conclusions, [17] have no evidentiary disputes." The proper use of Rule 56 "affords a merciful end to litigation that would otherwise be lengthy and expensive." Fontenot, 780 F.2d at 1197. However, the court must be cautious and properly balance the need for expediency with the demands of justice. The court will not casually deny a party the protections inherent in a full blown trial.

> HN1[] Rule 56 must be construed with due regard not only for the rights of persons asserting claims and defenses that are adequately based in fact to have those claims and defenses tried to a jury, but also for the rights of persons opposing such claims and defenses to demonstrate in the manner provided by the Rule, prior to trial, that the claims or defenses have no factual basis.

Celotex Corp. v. Catrett, 477 U.S. 317, 327, 91 L. Ed. 2d 265, 276, 106 S. Ct. 2548 (1986).

A. Movant's Initial Responsibility

The moving party must make a minimal showing of an absence of a genuine issue of material fact and that the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law.

> [[18] A] HN2[] party seeking summary judgment always bears the initial responsibility of informing the district court of the basis for its motion, and identifying those portions of "the pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories, and admissions on file, together with the affidavits, if any," which it believes demonstrate the absence of a genuine issue of material fact.

Celotex, 477 U.S. at 323, 91 L. Ed. 2d at 274. In Celotex, the Supreme Court distinguished the earlier decision of Adickes v. S. H. Kress & Co., 398 U.S. 144, 26 L. Ed. 2d 142, 90 S. Ct. 1598 (1970), and held that the moving party had only the burden "to show initially the absence of a genuine issue concerning any material fact." The Supreme Court held that the Adickes language should not be construed to mean that the moving party has the burden to produce evidence that establishes the absence of a genuine issue of material fact. Instead, the Supreme Court held that the "burden on a moving party may be discharged by 'showing' - [*262] that is pointing out to the district court - that there is an absence of evidence [19] to support the non-moving party's case." Celotex, 477 U.S. at 325, 91 L. Ed. 2d at 275. The Supreme Court clearly held in Celotex that even where the movant's showing was meager and failed to fully negate the opponent's claims, summary judgment should still be granted where the evidence produced by the non-movant was insufficient as to a necessary element of the claim on which the non-movant bore the burden of proof.

B. Non-Movant's Evidentiary Burden

Once the moving party has met its initial responsibility, the non-moving party must shoulder a heavy burden in order to survive summary judgment and bring its case to trial. The summary judgment scheme provides for a shifting burden between the movant and non-movant as to the existence of genuine issues of material fact. The movant must initially "show" the absence of material issues of fact and then the non-movant has the burden to "go forward" with sufficient evidence to establish the existence of material issues of fact. Aladdin Oil Co. v. Texaco, Inc., 603 F.2d 1107, 1112 (5th Cir. 1979). Rule 56(e) provides in pertinent part that:

> [20] HN3[] When a motion for summary judgment is made and supported as provided in this rule, an adverse party may not rest upon the mere allegations or denials of the adverse party's pleading, but the adverse party's response, by affidavits or as otherwise provided in this rule, must set forth specific facts showing that there is a genuine issue for trial. If the adverse party does not so respond, summary judgment, if appropriate, shall be entered against the adverse party.

(emphasis added). The Supreme Court has stated that the non-moving party "must do more than simply show that there is some metaphysical doubt as to the material facts." Matsushita Elec. Ind. Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 586, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538, 552, 106 S. Ct. 1348 (1986). The Supreme Court followed this statement with the observation that Rule 56(d) requires "specific facts" from the non-movant and then stated that if the non-movant's claim appeared implausible the non-movant must come forward with even more persuasive evidence to support the claim than would otherwise be necessary. Matsushita, 475 U.S. at 587, 89 L. Ed. at 552. Celotex also held that Rule 56 [21] requires the opposing party to go beyond the pleadings to make a sufficient showing on the essential elements of its case. Celotex, 91 L. Ed. 2d at 273. [5]

HN4[] The party with the burden of proof must respond [22] to motions for summary judgment with sufficient evidence to support its prima facie case. "The party opposing a motion supported by affidavits cannot discharge his burden by alleging legal conclusions. There is no sound reason why conclusory allegations should suffice to require a trial when there is no evidence to support them even if the movant lacks contrary evidence." Fontenot, 780 F.2d at 1195-1196.

Although the court does not assess the probative value of the material presented, HN5[] evidence in opposition to the motion that clearly is without any probative force is insufficient to raise a genuine issue. First National Bank of Arizona v. Cities Service Co., 391 U.S. 253, 290, 20 L. Ed. 2d 569, 593, 88 S. Ct. 1575 (1968). HN6[] Denials or allegations by the non-moving party in the form of legal conclusions which are unsupported by specific facts have no probative value and are thus insufficient to create genuine issues of material fact that would preclude summary judgment. [23] [*263] Broadway v. City of Montgomery, Alabama, 530 F.2d 657, 660 (5th Cir. 1976); see also Benton-Volvo-Metairie, Inc. v. Volvo Southwest, Inc., 479 F.2d 135, 139 (5th Cir. 1973). "Allegations that one 'might could' show certain facts at trial are simply insufficient under Rule 56(e)." Pelotto v. L & N Towing Co., 604 F.2d 396, 403 (5th Cir. 1979). HN7[] The non-moving party cannot successfully defeat a summary judgment motion by unsworn statements or the suggestion that proof might be forthcoming at trial. See Oglesby v. Terminal Transport Co., Inc., 543 F.2d 1111, 1112 (5th Cir. 1976).

C. The Court's Duty and the Summary Judgment Standard

Rule 56 expressly provides that the court should grant summary judgment if (1) there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and (2) the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(c).

HN8[] The court must first examine the evidentiary record to determine if [24] a genuine issue of material fact exists. "The inquiry performed is the threshold inquiry of determining whether there is the need for a trial - whether, in other words, there are any genuine factual issues that properly can be resolved only by a finder of fact because they may reasonably be resolved in favor of either party." Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc., 477 U.S. 242, 91 L. Ed. 2d 202, 213, 106 S. Ct. 2505 (1986). The court is not to "weigh the evidence and determine the truth of the matter

---

[5] The plaintiffs' brief seems to imply that the movant has the burden of establishing the absence of material issues of fact. This is clearly wrong. The movant must "show" the absence of evidence to support the non-movant's case, but it is only the non-movant which must actually come forward with evidence to demonstrate the existence of material issues of fact. If this goes against the "familiar teachings" of United States v. Realty Multi-List, Inc., 629 F.2d 1351, 1360 (5th Cir. 1980), then the court takes comfort in the fact that this view is consistent with more recent Fifth Circuit and Supreme Court decisions. Celotex, 477 U.S. at 325, 91 L. Ed. 2d at 275.

but to determine whether there is a genuine issue for trial." The Supreme Court has repeatedly indicated that "there is no issue for trial unless there is sufficient evidence favoring the non-moving party for a jury to return a verdict for that party." Anderson, 477 U.S. at 249, 91 L. Ed. 2d at 212. Summary judgment should be granted if the evidence is "merely colorable or is not significantly probative." Anderson, 477 U.S. at 249, 91 L. Ed. 2d at 212.

The Supreme Court has repeatedly emphasized that the availability of summary judgment turns in part on whether a proper jury question is presented. The non-moving party need not conclusively [25] establish its factual allegations, but it is required to provide sufficient evidence on the claimed factual dispute to require a jury or judge to resolve the party's differing versions of the truth at trial. Anderson, at 249, 91 L. Ed. 2d at 212. HN9[] "Where the record taken as a whole could not lead a rational trier of fact to find for the non-moving party, there is no 'genuine issue for trial.'" Matsushita, 475 U.S. at 587, 89 L. Ed. 2d at 552.

> If there is 'a complete absence of probative facts' to support a particular inference, or, if 'the facts and inferences point so strongly and overwhelmingly in favor of one party that the Court believes that reasonable men could not arrive at [but one] verdict,' 'the court may bypass the jury.'

Nunez v. Superior Oil Co., 572 F.2d 1119, 1124 (5th Cir. 1978) (citations omitted).

The court must also determine if the factual issues in dispute are material. HN10[] "Only disputes over facts that [26] might affect the outcome of the suit under the governing law will properly preclude the entry of summary judgment. Factual disputes that are irrelevant or unnecessary will not be counted." Anderson, 477 U.S. at 248, 91 L. Ed. 2d at 211; Celotex, 91 L. Ed. 2d at 273.

After determining that there are no genuine issues of material fact, the court must determine whether the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. The standard to be applied in granting summary judgment is the same standard applied in granting directed verdicts under Fed. R. Civ. P. 50(a). The court "must direct a verdict if, under the governing law, there can be but one reasonable conclusion as to the verdict." Anderson, 477 U.S. at 250, 91 L. Ed. 2d at 213.

Summary judgment motions should be granted "so long as whatever is before the district court demonstrates that the standard for the entry of summary judgment, as set forth in Rule 56(c) is satisfied." [*264] Celotex, 477 U.S. at 323, 91 L. Ed. 2d at 274.

> HN11[] The plain language [27] of Rule 56(c) mandates the entry of summary judgment, after adequate time for discovery and upon motion, against a party who fails to make a showing sufficient to establish the existence of the element essential to that party's case, and on which that party will bear the burden of proof at trial. In such a situation, there can be 'no genuine issue as to any material fact,' since a complete failure of proof concerning an essential element of the non-moving party's case necessarily renders all other facts immaterial. The moving party is 'entitled to judgment as a matter of law' because the non-moving party has failed to make a sufficient showing on an essential element of her case with respect to which she has the burden of proof.

Celotex, 477 U.S. at 322-23, 91 L. Ed. 2d at 273. The non-movant is not entitled to a full dress trial notwithstanding the absence of any significant probative evidence tending to support the allegations in their complaint. "To permit the pleadings themselves to carry a case to trial when they rest only on the invention of counsel would permit ultimate circumvention of [the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure]." Fontenot, 780 F.2d at 1196. [28]

D. Summary Judgment Applied to AntiTrust Litigation

The Supreme Court has recently considered the standard which district courts should apply when deciding whether to grant summary judgment in antitrust cases. These decisions have signaled a marked change from the court's prior reluctance to grant summary judgment, as established in Poller v. Columbia Broadcasting System, Inc., 368 U.S. 464, 7 L. Ed. 2d 458, 82 S. Ct. 486 (1962). The Supreme Court has held that the requirements of Rule 56 are not to be read out of antitrust cases and has refused to hold that "anyone who files an antitrust complaint setting forth a valid cause of action [is thereby automatically] entitled to a full-dress trial notwithstanding the absence of any significant probative evidence tending to support the complaint." Cities Services, 391 U.S. at 290, 20 L. Ed. 2d at 593. Subsequent Supreme Court cases, as well as Fifth Circuit decisions, have followed the admonishment of Cities Services and have granted summary judgment motions in cases where the plaintiffs have utterly failed to adduce any evidence of conspiratorial conduct.

The Supreme Court has, in a summary [29] judgment context, addressed the issue of the conspiracy elements in antitrust litigation on two recent occasions. Conduct which is as consistent with permissible competition as with illegal conspiracy does not, standing alone, support an inference of antitrust conspiracy. Monsanto Co. v. Spray-Rite Service Corp., 465 U.S. 752, 764, 79 L. Ed. 2d 775, 785-786, 104 S. Ct. 1464 (1984). The Supreme Court stated that HN12[] a plaintiff seeking damages for antitrust violations must present evidence "that tends to exclude the possibility" that the alleged conspirators acted independently. Monsanto, 465 U.S. at 764, 79 L. Ed. 2d at 785. "Respondents in this case, in other words, must show that the inference of conspiracy is reasonable in light of the competing inferences of independent action or collusive action that could not have harmed respondents." Matsushita, 475 U.S. at 588, 89 L. Ed. 2d at 553.

The Fifth Circuit has clearly held that summary judgment may be appropriate in antitrust cases.

> [30] HN13[] Although summary judgment procedures 'should be used sparingly in complex antitrust litigation where motive and intent play leading rolls,' summary judgment may be granted where plaintiff can aver no significant probative facts in support of its conclusory allegations of conspiracy against defendants' specific averments to the contrary.

Paul Kadair, Inc. v. Sony Corp. of America, 694 F.2d 1017, 1027 (5th Cir. 1983). (citations omitted)

The court is most persuaded by the reasoning of Apex Oil Co. v. DiMauro, 641 F. Supp. 1246, 1986-2 Trade Cases (CCH) P67,225 (S.D.N.Y. 1986). The Apex [*265] court granted summary judgment against the antitrust plaintiff who claimed that he was the victim of a conspiracy among his competitors. The court recognized that Matsushita, Monsanto, and Cities Service made summary judgment available in the context of large complex antitrust conspiracy cases. "In fact, the authorities indicate that the nature of such a case demands that the district court, in considering summary judgment, give searching scrutiny to the inferences available from the [31] typically ambiguous mass of evidence." Apex, at 1255, 1986-2 Trade Cases (CCH) at 61,121. The Apex court reasoned as follows:

> In Matsushita, the Supreme Court made it clear that HN14[] in an antitrust conspiracy case ambiguous evidence is to be treated skeptically on a motion for summary judgment, since an inference of unlawful conduct which arises only from ambiguous evidence will be of no use to the plaintiff at trial. In Monsanto, the court warned that a standard which permitted trial on the basis of such inferences presented a "considerable danger" that pro-competitive conduct would be discouraged.
>
> The test enunciated in Matsushita also dictates that ambiguous evidence, because it is by definition incapable of a dominant inference, will not alone defeat a motion for summary judgment.
>
> In this case, defendant's sworn denials are more than sufficient to shift the burden to plaintiff under Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(e). Thus, to survive defendants' motion for summary judgment, [the plaintiff] must establish that there is a genuine issue of material fact [32] as to whether defendants entered into a conspiracy. To make such a showing, [the plaintiff] must offer significant probative evidence which tends to exclude the possibility that the alleged conspirators acted independently.

Apex, at 1257, 1986-2 Trade Cases (CCH) at 61,123 (citations omitted).

The Apex court recognized that "the sheer volume and desultory organization of the facts presented makes dissection of [the plaintiffs] evidence an unenviable task, but it is an effort mandated by Matsushita."

> It must be remembered throughout this exercise that an assumption of conspiracy is not the starting point after which each event must be explained away by the defendants. Rather, it is [the plaintiffs], now faced with unequivocable sworn denials, that must demonstrate that the evidence, construed in its favor, supplies an > inference of conspiracy that is reasonable in light of any competing inference of independent conduct proffered by the defendants.

Apex, at 1259, 1986-2 Trade Cases (CCH) at 61,124. The record in the case sub judice is also large and difficult, but the court must perform its duty under the [33] applicable law.

II.

Substantive Antitrust Claims Against Defendants [6]

The court will address each of the plaintiffs' claims against the defendants. The court will address these claims in the order that they appear in the plaintiffs' amended complaint. Count I of the plaintiffs' amended complaint alleges antitrust violations against both the government and non-government defendants.

The court will first look at the nature of the legal claim, then detail the defendants' summary judgment challenges to this claim, and then finally analyze the plaintiffs' response of either making a legal argument or establishing specific evidence sufficient to create a genuine issue of material fact. After these steps are complete, the court will determine whether summary judgment is appropriate on that claim for the defendants or whether [34] the plaintiffs have made a sufficient showing to preclude summary judgment.

A. Denial of Access Claim

The first claim under Count I is that [*266] the private defendants [7] have denied the plaintiffs access to the multiple listing service in violation of antitrust laws. The plaintiffs allege that the National Association of Realtors, Inc. ("NAR") and the Mississippi Association of Realtors, Inc. ("MAR") should be held jointly liable for this antitrust violation because they have encouraged and enticed this behavior through their constitutions and by-laws.

1. No Denial of Board Membership

The private defendants responded to this claim by showing the court that the plaintiffs were not denied membership in the Monroe County Board of Realtors ("MCBR" or "Board of Realtors"), that the Popes voluntarily withdrew and are free to rejoin the Board of Realtors, and that membership in the Board [35] of Realtors is non-discriminatory. The private defendants argue that the MCBR may condition participation in the MLS upon membership in the MCBR without violating the federal antitrust laws.

The private defendants assert that the plaintiffs voluntarily withdrew from the Monroe County Board of Realtors and would again qualify for membership if they paid the required membership fees. The private defendants point out that Pope admitted in his deposition that he has no reason to believe that he fails to satisfy membership criteria. [8] The Popes unilaterally decided to leave the Monroe County Board of Realtors in 1981 over a dispute regarding dues assessments and their failure to be appointed to leadership positions within the Board of Realtors. [9] The parties have stipulated that the MCBR policy is that only members of the Monroe County Board of Realtors may participate in the multiple listing service.

The plaintiffs have [36] not created an issue of material fact as to the availability of membership on the Board of Realtors for the Popes. Based upon the record before the court and the complete failure of the plaintiffs to provide sufficient evidence to support their position, the court finds that a genuine issue of material fact is absent concerning the Popes access to the Monroe County Board of Realtors.

---

[6] Plaintiffs allege both federal and state antitrust claims. The court will only consider federal antitrust claims at this juncture. All State claims will be addressed in a subsequent section.

[7] Defendants Monroe County Board of Realtors, Inc., Joyce B. Murphy, Phil Roberts, Jack Francis, and Mary Lib Francis.

[8] See deposition of James Pope at 157.

[9] See deposition of James Pope at 157.

2. Membership Requirements Satisfy Rule of Reason

The Fifth Circuit has held that a concerted denial of access to a multiple listing service, when board members have agreed to pool and share their listings, amounts to a group boycott of the non-member. Realty Multi-List, 629 F.2d at 1361. However, in the case sub judice, the plaintiffs have failed to establish sufficient evidence that they were in fact denied participation in the multiple listing service.

The plaintiffs are not in a good position to argue that the membership requirements of the MCBR are unreasonable or discriminatory. The plaintiffs have failed to establish that they would be excluded from board membership or denied participation in the multiple listing service if they were willing to pay membership dues assessments.

[37] The court's inquiry is whether membership on the Board of Realtors is available to the Popes on a non-discriminatory basis. The defendants argue that the plaintiffs have in essence conceded this issue by voluntarily withdrawing from the board and that the membership criteria are entirely fair and reasonable, including the pro rata dues formula. In response, the plaintiffs claim that they were "forced out" of membership and did not voluntarily withdraw. [10] Pope concluded that the pro-rata membership dues were intended to exclude him from membership and were discriminatory. [11] Conclusory statements, even those in the form of an affidavit, do not satisfy rule 56's requirement of specific facts. The plaintiffs have not shown that they were [*267] "forced out" in a discriminatory manner or that the dues formula is discriminatory.

[38] HN15[] The court should apply the "rule of reason" in determining whether an antitrust violation occurred by virtue of MCBR requirements. "Per se" treatment is not proper in such a situation. See Realty Multi-List, 629 F.2d at 1362. Price fixing and other antitrust violations are treated as per se illegal, but non-price restrictions are judged under the "rule of reason". The "rule of reason" analysis requires a "weighing of the relevant circumstances of a case to decide whether a restrictive practice constitutes an unreasonable restraint on competition." Monsanto, 465 U.S. at 761, 79 L. Ed. 2d at 784.

In Realty Multi-List, the Fifth Circuit found that the challenged membership criteria of a favorable credit report and a favorable business reputation were antitrust violations under the rule of reason. See Realty Multi-List, 629 F.2d at 1376-1381. Realty Multi-List also held that HN16[] a stock purchase requirement and sizeable membership fee were financial barriers that had such anti-competitive potential that they should be held unreasonable. [39] Realty Multi-List, 629 F.2d at 1386. However, HN17[] membership criteria which are reasonably necessary and narrowly tailored toward a valid interest may be justified in competitive terms and satisfy the rule of reason.

"The fact finder weighs all of the circumstances of a case in determining whether a restrictive practice should be prohibited as imposing an unreasonable restraint on competition." Continental T.V., Inc. v. GTE Sylvania, Inc., 433 U.S. 36, 49, 53 L. Ed. 2d 568, 580, 97 S. Ct. 2549 (1977). The Supreme Court noted a popular statement of the rule of reason using the words of Justice Brandeis as follows:

> HN18[] The true test of legality is whether the restraint imposed is such as merely regulates and perhaps thereby promotes competition, or whether it is such as may suppress or even destroy competition. To determine that question the court must ordinarily consider the facts peculiar to the business to which the restraint is applied; its conditions [40] before and after the restraint was imposed; the nature of the restraint, and its effect, actual or probable. The history of the restraint, the evil believed to exist, the reason for adopting the particular remedy, the purpose or end sought to be attained, are all relevant facts. This is not because a good intention will save an otherwise objectionable regulation, or the reverse; but because knowledge of intent may help the court to interpret facts and to predict consequences.

Chicago Bd. of Trade v. United States, 246 U.S. 231, 238, 62 L. Ed. 683, 687, 38 S. Ct. 242 (1918).

---

[10] See affidavit of James Pope at 3-6.

[11] See affidavit of James Pope at 3-5.

Realty Multi-List recognized that HN19[] "brokers may require some insurance that they will not be endangered legally or ethically by brokers with whom they enter a listing-sharing agreement. . . . Membership criteria reasonably necessary to insure this protection, and narrowly tailored to this end, may thus be justified in competitive terms and able to survive at least facial review." Realty Multi-List, 629 F.2d at 1377.

Pope admits that he has no reason to believe that he [41] would be denied membership, [12] thus, any claim of denial on a discriminatory basis is severely diminished. This indicates to the court that the plaintiffs do not have a sufficient evidentiary basis under Rule 56 for their claim of discriminatory exclusion from membership. It is undisputed that the Popes would be allowed board membership and that they meet all membership requirements. [13]

The plaintiffs claim that, even though they could become members of the MCBR, they are still discriminated against because of the dues formula used by the board. The plaintiffs' basic claim is that because of the large size of their realty organization, they bear a heavy burden under the [*268] dues formula. [14] The Board of Realtors decided to charge a certain fee for each realtor member and also for each realtor associate member and sales person instead of charging one set fee for each [42] realty organization. Pope claimed that this was an attempt to discriminate against him and that "the economic burden was being shifted to my shoulders alone" and was being done to exclude him from membership. [15] Pope's conclusory opinion is insufficient to satisfy Rule 56's requirements of specific facts and sufficient evidence.

Realty Multi-List addressed the issue of whether membership fees could be considered a barrier to membership in a private realty organization. [43]

> Noting that RML has established no objective criteria for determining a reasonable purchase price [for the stock required to be a RML member], the Government argues that this rule is invalid on the theory that, in cases such as this one, the unrestricted power to set an entrance fee which is unrelated to either the cost of the service provided or the cost of maintaining the service as a going concern is the power to exclude, and hence to destroy competition. We agree. Doubtlessly, RML must be allowed to establish fee schedules which allow it to recoup its costs of operation and to maintain its viability as a going concern. Among these costs which it must be allowed to recover are the start-up costs involved in serving a new member. In addition, it is reasonable to assess a new member a pro-rata contribution toward the maintenance and the development of RML, including the accumulation of reasonable reserves. To require more than this, however, is to create problems. HN20[] A sizeable membership fee which bears no relation to the cost factors outlined above may not only create a [44] significant barrier to new entry into the association, but may create "a strong inference that the amount has been set up as a barrier against" new applications.

Realty Multi-List, 629 F.2d at 1385-1386.

Private organizations often charge membership fees on a pro-rata basis. This practice distributes the organizations' expenses among all persons who receive either direct or indirect benefits of the organization. Both NAR and MAR assess dues to benefits of the organization. Both NAR and MAR assess dues to member boards of realtors, such as the MCBR, based upon the number of persons who benefit from the national and state associations. Each

---

[12] See deposition of James Pope at 157.

[13] See deposition of James Pope at 157 and affidavit of Joyce Murphy at para. 8.

[14] The plaintiffs have stated that they, or their sales people, will have to pay a total of approximately $ 2,000 in annual membership dues under the MCBR fee schedule and that this amount is approximately 50% of the MCBR dues revenue. When the plaintiffs first joined the MCBR, the membership fee was $ 146 for every Realtor (principle broker) and $ 121 for every member associate and non-member salesperson (all sales persons working for the principle broker's firm). See affidavit of James Pope at 3.

[15] See affidavit of James Pope at 3.

realtor, realtor associate who belongs to the local board, and salesperson licensee affiliated with the realtor's firm, who is not even a member of the board of realtors, increases the liability of the member boards. [16] The dues formula chosen by the local board of realtors is reasonable given their own dues requirements from the state and national organization and the nature of their local expenses. The plaintiffs have failed to produce probative evidence sufficient to establish that the dues formula was unreasonable [45] or discriminatory. The plaintiffs have asserted that the local dues formula did change during this period, but this fails to establish evidence that the dues were unreasonable and it is uncontested that both the NAR and MAR dues formulae were adopted in their current form in 1972. [17]

The MCBR's membership dues formula charged real estate firms an amount based upon their actual size as measured by the [*269] number of realtors and sales people with a realtor's firm. The plaintiffs have not established sufficient evidence to create an issue of fact concerning exclusion from MCBR or the reasonableness of membership fees. The plaintiffs have not shown the court that the membership dues [46] schedule was anti-competitive by being discriminatory or unreasonable. Realty Multi-List expressly allowed for a "pro-rata contribution toward the cost of the maintainence and the development of [the private realty organization], including the accumulation of reasonable reserves." Realty Multi-List, 629 F.2d at 1386. In a similar antitrust case, a court stated that the "plaintiff's claim is thus not that it was excluded from membership in [the private organization] completely, but that it was excluded at anything but the [desired] price." [18] Ralph C. Wilson Indus., Inc. v. American Broadcasting Companies, Inc., 598 F. Supp. 694, 709 (N. D. Cal. 1984); aff'd, 794 F.2d 1359 (1986). The evidentiary record in this case does not establish a conspiracy to exclude the Popes or any discrimination in the membership fee schedule or other requirements for membership of the MCBR. The court finds that the plaintiffs have not produced sufficient evidence to establish a genuine issue of material fact concerning whether they were discriminated against or denied membership in the case sub judice.

[47] 3. MLS is Exclusive Service of MCBR

The court's next inquiry is whether board membership may be required for participation in the MLS under the antitrust laws. There is no material issue of fact on this requirement because the defendants admit that only board members may participate in the multiple listing service. The plaintiffs claim that limiting the service to board members violates the antitrust laws.

A multiple listing service is only a vehicle through which real estate brokers invoke cooperation in the sale of real estate by extending offers of sub-agency to one another.

> More fundamentally, the sharing of listings is the essence of the multiple listing concept. The listing broker retains the primary fiduciary responsibility, with its legal and ethical ramifications, to the property owner. (citations omitted) Without some insurance that the brokers who act as sub-agents to the listing broker through the listing service are responsible and competent, it is possible that neither brokers nor the public will utilize the service, thus forfeiting the benefits it may yield to all.

Realty Multi-List, 629 F.2d at 1369.

The undisputed facts are [48] established. The critical legal question is whether requiring board membership to participate in MLS satisfied the "rule of reason" standard or is a violation of the antitrust laws. May the MCBR

---

[16] See affidavit of Thad Vann, ex. B, By-laws, Art. X, § 1, p. 15 ($ 65 per Realtor and $ 40 per other salesperson licensee); affidavit of William North, ex. A., By-laws, Art. II, § 1 (A), p. 15 ($ 41 per Realtor and licensee).

[17] See supplemental affidavits of William North at para. 24 and Thad Vann at para. 4.

[18] In Wilson, the defendants offered evidence to show the absence of a conspiracy and the court granted summary judgment. The court concluded by stating that "the record shows that plaintiff is unwilling to pay the going market price [for services], and is seeking redress from this grievance by means of an antitrust suit. This is not the purpose of antitrust laws. Antitrust laws were designed to protect free market competition, not the financial success of any particular competitor." 598 F. Supp. at 710. Wilson, provide the MLS as an exclusive service for members and deny MLS participation to non-members? HN21[] A private organization may limit its services to its members as long as there is no arbitrary exclusion from membership, even where the services are economically necessary. Associated Press v. United States, 326 U. S. 1, 21-23, 89 L. Ed. 2013, 2031, 65 S. Ct. 1416 (1944); aff'g, United States v. Associated Press, 52 F. Supp. 362 (S. D. N. Y. 1943).

A number of sister courts have addressed this issue. "The defendant realtors are all HN22[] members of a voluntary trade association and as such may properly exclude any non-member from participation in its activities. Such exclusion does not constitute a violation of the antitrust laws." Martin Trigona v. National Association of Realtors, 1978-1 Trade Cases (CCH) P61,915 (E. D. Ill. 1978). [49] See also Brown v. Indianapolis Board of Realtors, 1977-1 Trade Cases (CCH) P61,435 (S. D. Ind. 1977); [*270] Murphy v. Alpha Realty, Inc., 1978-2 Trade Cases (CCH) P62,388 (N. D. Ill. 1978).

The reasoning of these district court cases is derived in part from Associated Press v. United States, 326 U.S. 1, 89 L. Ed. 2013, 65 S. Ct. 1416. Associated Press concluded, HN23[] in a summary judgment posture, that the arbitrary exclusion from membership in an association providing services and facilities essential to effective competition is unlawful, but that an association may lawfully limit its services and facilities to its members where there are no restrictive membership arguments. Associated Press, 326 U.S. at 8-12, 21-23, 89 L. Ed. at 2023-2026, 2031-2032. Associated Press temporarily enjoined the observance of the agreement restricting services to members until the private organization complied with the court decree requiring non-restrictive membership requirements. Associated Press, 326 U.S. at 22, 89 L. Ed. at 2031. [50]

In the underlying district court decision, Judge Learned Hand reasoned that "taken by themselves, and apart from restrictions upon membership, both agreements [limiting services to members] would be valid; it is essential to the protection of the main purpose that the members who [participate in this service] shall not destroy the value of [the service by making it available to non-members]." Associated Press, 52 F. Supp. at 374. The Supreme Court upheld the district court, indicating that an organization may lawfully limit its services and facilities to its members. Associated Press, 326 U.S. at 21-23, 89 L. Ed. at 2031-2032. The Supreme Court did not allow competing non-members to by-pass membership but required the private organization to open up membership to these non-members.

Many state courts which have addressed this issue have held that a board of realtors may limit participation in its MLS to its members so long as membership on the board is open to all persons licensed as brokers on reasonable and non-discriminatory terms. The court finds one such case very persuasive. State ex rel Miller v. Cedar Rapids Board of Realtors, 300 N.W.2d 127 (Iowa 1981). [51] In the Cedar Rapids case, the state attorney general sued a realtor organization alleging that the board's requirement that MLS participants must be members of the local Board of Realtors violated the state antitrust laws, which were patterned after the federal antitrust laws. The attorney general took the position that the board's membership requirements were illegal, even if board membership was freely available to any real estate broker willing to join the board and pay membership dues. The Iowa Supreme Court applied the "rule of reason" of antitrust case law and held that the realty organization was not required by the antitrust laws to provide services to non-members. The court's reasoning is very persuasive:

> The alleged evil the State identifies is that a few [local] brokers - two were produced at trial - want access to the MLS without the "unnecessary barrier" of Board membership. The remedy sought is removal of "the price of admission to a non-related activity," i.e., Board membership and fees, because one broker testified MLS access is an "economic necessity." . . . The State's proposed solution would give a few competitors a monetary advantage over the MLS [52] brokers whose organizing ability, money, and volunteer time has made the service a viable tool for effective selling. Judge Learned Hand's admonition is relevant: "The successful competitor, having been urged to compete must not be turned upon when he wins." United States v. Aluminum Co. of America, 148 F.2d 416, 430 (2nd Cir. 1945).

> A different case would be presented if brokers were unreasonably denied membership in the board and, consequently, access to the MLS. But here, unlike the government in United States v. Realty Multi-List, Inc., 629 F.2d 1351, 1358 (5th Cir. 1980), the State conceded the membership requirements of the board were reasonable.
>
> . . . .
>
> [*271] So long as board membership is available to all on a non-discriminatory basis as this record indicates, we will not compel this private trade association to share one of its membership benefits with brokers who, for whatever personal or business reasons, declined to join.

Cedar Rapids, 300 N.W.2d at 129-130, 131.

In opposing summary judgment on this issue, the plaintiffs rely heavily on Realty Multi-List. The court finds this case very [53] instructive but cannot agree that it precludes summary judgment in the case sub judice. Realty Multi-List held that "[a] concerted denial of access to RML's listing service, when RML members have agreed to pool and share their listings, amounts to a group boycott of the non-member." Realty Multi-List, 629 F.2d at 1361. However, the real issue presented in the case sub judice is not whether the membership requirements are discriminatory against the Popes or exclude the Popes, but whether simply requiring membership to participate in the MLS violates the "rule of reason." [19]

[54] Realty Multi-List did rely on a Supreme Court decision which allowed non-members to use the facilities of a private organization on just and reasonable terms, but failed to indicate that this separation of membership from services might be required in the context of a multiple listing service. [20] Instead, the Fifth Circuit emphasized that the private organization must permit applicants to become members.

> Moreover, RML must be allowed to recover the actual cost of its continuing services to members, just as it does now. RML's present stock purchase rule, however, is without justification in its competitive needs, and the district court erred in approving it. (emphasis added)

Realty Multi-List, 629 F.2d at 1387. The Court was mandating open membership and requiring that the membership fees not be a barrier to participation in the multiple listing service. Realty Multi-List, 629 F.2d at 1387. The Fifth Circuit has not indicated that the requirement of membership should be thrown out entirely but instead held that membership requirements must be reasonable.

[55] Other courts have applied Realty Multi-List in a limited way or have recognized that Realty Multi-List does not control when the reasonableness of membership criteria is not at issue. Cedar Rapids, 300 N.W.2d at 130; see also Pomanowski v. Monmouth County Board of Realtors, 89 N.J. 306, 446 A.2d 83, 91 (N.J.); cert. denied 459

---

[19] The exclusion of non-members from MLS participation need only satisfy the rule of reason. The requirement of membership to enjoy MLS participation is not a per se antitrust violation.

> A practice is "plainly anticompetitive" and lacking in "any redeeming virtue" under the Sherman Act, therefore, when it can further none of the Act's goals - when it operates to deny to consumers the opportunity to choose among alternative offers without offering the possibility of any joint, efficiency-producing economic activities.

Realty Multi-List, 629 F.2d at 1364 (citing Broadcast Music, Inc. v. Columbia Broadcasting Co., 441 U.S. 1, 60 L. Ed. 2d 1, 99 S. Ct. 1551 (1979)).

[20] The organization in the case mentioned voluntarily provided services to some non-members, but did so in a discriminatory manner. The Supreme Court ordered the reform of organizational rules to allow competitors to use the facilities on equal terms. United States v. St. Louis Terminal Railroad Ass'n, 224 U.S. 383, 56 L. Ed. 810, 32 S. Ct. 507 (1912) (explained in Realty Multi-List, 629 F.2d at 1386).

U.S. 908, 74 L. Ed. 2d 170, 103 S. Ct. 213 (1982); Phil Tolkan Datsun, Inc. v. Greater Milwaukee Datsun Dealers' Advertising Ass'n., Inc., 672 F.2d 1280, 1286-1287 (7th Cir. 1982).

The plaintiffs have attempted to rely upon California state cases which hold that where MLS access has been shown to be a practical economic necessity for survival in a real estate brokerage market, the MLS must automatically be made available without the requirement of board membership. Marin County Board of Realtors v. Palsson, 16 Cal. 3d 920, 549 P.2d 833, 130 Cal. Rptr. 1 (1976). Even if the Fifth Circuit adopted the California reasoning that board membership should not be required where MLS participation is a practical economic necessity, the plaintiffs have failed to show [56] [*272] that participation in the MLS is a practical economic necessity for the survival of their business. In fact, the plaintiffs have failed to produce evidence of any meaningful impact upon their ability to do business in the case sub judice. [21]

Associated Press, Realty Multi-List and other decisions guiding this court do not indicate that MCBR membership and participation in the MLS should be separated from each other. The court recognizes that the MLS is a service provided by MCBR. Considering the entire evidentiary record, the court finds that the plaintiffs have failed to produce sufficient evidence to establish a genuine issue of material fact to preclude summary judgment. The court therefore finds that the requirement of membership to participate in the MLS is not a violation of the antitrust laws in the case sub judice.

4. No Showing of Market Power

Under the rule of reason, the court must not only consider the validity [57] of the competitive justification given for the restraint imposed, but it also must determine the market power of the combination. [22] Therefore, HN24[] the court has the power to void "any significantly restrictive rule of a combination or trade association with significant market power, which lacks competitive justification or whose reach clearly exceeds the combination's legitimate needs." Realty Multi-List, 629 F.2d at 1370 (emphasis supplied). The plaintiffs have not established that the MLS has significant market power in the case sub judice.

The plaintiffs have conceded that they sell 70% to 80% of their own listings "in house" because it is more profitable to sell their own listings. [23] These "in house" sales have no connection to either the MLS or the private defendants. The plaintiffs have also conceded that they [58] have access to the listings of Murphy and Roberts completely apart from any participation in the MLS. [24] The parties have stipulated that Pope's Realty-Century 21 has provided monthly financial information to a regional Century 21 office. Based upon this information, Raymond Micsan, director of the Century 21 regional office, stated that the plaintiffs enjoy a "normal" ratio of "in house" to cooperative sales for similarly situated Century 21 francises, [25] despite their non-participation in the board's MLS.

The plaintiffs have not come forward with specific evidence to demonstrate that their non-participation in the MLS has had any appreciable effect on their ability to engage in cooperative sales or to remain generally competitive in the Monroe County real estate market. The Supreme Court has emphasized that [59] HN25[] the legality of arguable anti-competitive conduct should be judged primarily by its "market impact." Monsanto, 465 U.S. at 762, 79 L. Ed. 2d at 784; see also Realty Multi-List, 629 F.2d at 1370. The plaintiffs have failed to show any market effect from these allegedly anti-competitive restraints. [26] [60] The court also recognizes that participation in the MLS

[21] See discussion of market effect below at II(A)(4).

[22] The market power requirement applies to other antitrust claims as well.

[23] See deposition of James Pope at 174-175.

[24] See deposition of James Pope at 219, 221-222.

[25] See deposition of Raymond Micsan at 22-23.

[26] The plaintiffs have also failed to show an antitrust injury from these allegedly anti-competitive restraints. They have not come forward with specific probative evidence of sales which they have lost and they have not shown any statistical evidence to does not insure cooperation with each participant of the MLS. Even if participation in the MLS was open to the plaintiffs without the standard fee or membership in MCBR, the individual participants could still decline to cooperate with the plaintiffs or to cease their MLS participation altogether. [27] This possibility would clearly have an anti-competitive impact on the real estate market.

[*273] HN26[] Under the rule of reason, a showing of anti-competitive market effect is an essential predicate for antitrust liability. Monsanto, 465 U.S. at 762, 79 L. Ed. 2d at 784; Chicago Board of Trade v. United States, 246 U.S. 231, 238, 62 L. Ed. 683, 687, 38 S. Ct. 242 (1918). The Seventh Circuit has stated the rule as follows:

> It is by now well established that any rule of reason analysis requires a showing of anti-competitive market effect. To hold otherwise would ignore the very purpose of the anti-trust laws which were enacted for the protection of competition, not competitors.

Phil Tolkan Datsun, 672 F.2d at 1287 (quoting Lektro-Vend Corporation v. The Vendo Co., 660 F.2d 255, 268 (7th Cir. 1981), cert. denied, 455 U.S. 921, 71 L. Ed. 2d 461, 102 S. Ct. 1277 (1982)).

The [61] plaintiffs have failed to provide specific evidence to demonstrate an anti-competitive market effect. The plaintiffs have not created an issue of fact regarding this challenge to their claim. The defendants are entitled to summary judgment on the denial of MLS participation claim and all antitrust claims on the ground that the plaintiffs have failed to establish market effect. Celotex, 91 L. Ed. 2d at 273.

5. No Effect on Interstate Commerce

HN27[] The federal antitrust laws regulate interstate commerce and not local intra-state commerce. [28]

> Jurisdiction may not be invoked under [the Sherman Act] unless the relevant aspect of interstate commerce is identified; it is not sufficient to rely on identification of a relevant local activity and to presume an interrelationship with some unspecified aspect of interstate commerce. To establish jurisdiction a plaintiff must allege the critical relationship in the pleadings and if these allegations are controverted must proceed to demonstrate by submission of evidence beyond the pleadings either that the defendants' [62] activity is itself in interstate commerce or, if it is local in nature, that it has an effect on some other appreciable activity demonstrably in interstate commerce. Gulf Oil Corp. v. Copp Paving Co., supra, [419 U.S. 186] at 202, [42 L. Ed. 2d 378, 95 S. Ct. 392].

McLain v. Real Estate Bd. of New Orleans, 444 U.S. 232, 242, 62 L. Ed. 2d 441, 450, 100 S. Ct. 502 (1980) (emphasis supplied). The plaintiffs do not have to show that the alleged activity effected interstate commerce, but they must "demonstrate a substantial effect on interstate commerce generated by [the defendants'] brokerage activity." McLain, 444 U.S. at 242, 62 L. Ed. 2d at 451.

The plaintiffs had the responsibility of coming forward with evidence to demonstrate that the defendants' activity was either in interstate commerce or had a substantial effect on interstate [63] commerce, because the defendants expressly challenged jurisdiction on this basis. The plaintiffs have failed to come forward with any evidence to demonstrate an effect on interstate commerce.

McLain did hold that the broker organization in the case before the court had an effect on interstate commerce through the utilization of out-of-state bank financing and national title insurance. McLain, 44 U.S. at 245, 62 L. Ed. 2d at 452. However, the plaintiffs have not demonstrated that the broker organization in Amory will have the same "substantial effect" on interstate commerce as did the large New Orleans organization in McLain. The plaintiffs have indicate an injury. To the contrary, the evidence tends to show that the plaintiffs' sales ratio has been unaffected. See deposition of Raymond Micsan at 22-23. See also discussion at II.C.2.

---

[27] See affidavit of William North at para. 9; see discussion of Colgate doctrine at II.B. below.

[28] The requirement of a substantial effect on interstate commerce applies to other antitrust claims as well.

not established that out-of-state banks or title insurance companies were used or that this connection to interstate commerce would be sufficient in the case sub judice.

The Fifth Circuit refused to broaden the holding of McLain to presume a substantial effect on interstate commerce by every real estate organization.

> [*274] In the present action, appellants seek to employ McLain as an umbrella underneath which any business having the most tangential relationship with the real estate business [64] would be presumed to have a substantial effect on interstate commerce. McLain does not stand for that proposition, and that is not the law.

Alabama Homeowners, Inc. v. Findahome Corp., 640 F.2d 670, 673 (5th Cir. 1981). The Fifth Circuit recognized that Realty Multi-List presented the issue of whether or not the local multiple listing service had a "sufficient connection to interstate commerce to invoke Sherman Act jurisdiction" but found it unnecessary to decide the issue. Realty Multi-List, 629 F.2d at 1389. These authorities indicate to the court that antitrust plaintiffs continue to have a responsibility to present evidence on this issue and that plaintiffs may not "presume an inter-relationship" with interstate commerce. The plaintiffs have not produced evidence to create a genuine factual dispute on this issue pursuant to Rule 56. The defendants are entitled to judgment as a matter of law on all antitrust claims on the ground that interstate commerce was not involved and therefore the court has no "Sherman Act jurisdiction." Celotex, 91 L. Ed. 2d at 273.

B. Group Boycott Claim

The plaintiffs' second claim [65] of Count I is that the private defendants instituted a group boycott against the plaintiffs by collectively refusing to permit the plaintiffs to show property listed with these private defendants. The defendants challenge this allegation as devoid of evidentiary support and demand that the plaintiff prove that the defendants' alleged refusal to deal with him, or boycott of him, was the result of joint or concerted action undertaken pursuant to a common scheme, understanding, or grievance.

The defendants did allow the plaintiffs to show listed properties during this time period and did cooperate with the plaintiffs, except for Mr. and Mrs. Francis. The plaintiffs' own depositions fail to establish specific facts that the defendants have unilaterally refused to deal with the plaintiffs, much less boycotted the plaintiffs. Even if such activity did exist, the plaintiffs would be required to prove that this activity was the result of a common scheme, understanding, or agreement and not the result of independent action.

Each individual defendant had a "unilateral right" to refuse to deal with the plaintiffs for reasons sufficient to themselves. Aladdin Oil, 603 F.2d at 1113. [66] The Supreme Court has held as follows:

> HN28[] The purpose of the Sherman Act is to prohibit monopolies, contracts and combinations which probably would unduly interfere with the free exercise of their rights by those engaged, or who wish to engage, in trade and commerce - in a word to preserve the right of freedom to trade. In the absence of any purpose to create or maintain a monopoly, the act does not restrict the long recognized right of trader or manufacturer engaged in an entirely private business, freely to exercise his own independent discretion as to parties with whom he will deal. And, of course, he may announce in advance the circumstances under which he will refuse to sell.

United States v. Colgate and Co., 250 U.S. 300, 307, 63 L. Ed. 992, 997, 39 S. Ct. 465 (1919). Although somewhat narrowed through the years, the Colgate doctrine remains viable in antitrust law and still allows "individual sellers to refrain from dealing, even though the condition for dealing would otherwise violate the antitrust laws." Aladdin, 603 F.2d at 1114. [67] HN29[] The refusal to deal becomes unlawful only when it produces an unreasonable restraint on trade and there exists "an anti-competitive purpose or effect in selecting those with whom one will deal." Aladdin, 603 F.2d at 1115. [29]

---

[29] The Fifth Circuit has noted that:

[68] [*275] The Fifth Circuit has clearly held that HN30[] the plaintiff must prove five elements to establish liability for a boycott conspiracy under Section 1 of the Sherman Act and Section 4 of the Clayton Act. Park v. El Paso Bd. of Realtors, 764 F.2d 1053, 1059 (5th Cir. 1985), cert. denied, 474 U.S. 1102, 88 L. Ed. 2d 919, 106 S. Ct. 884 (1986). "[A] plaintiff must prove: (1) that a conspiracy to boycott existed; (2) that the defendants participated in a conspiracy; (3) that the conspiracy had a sufficient nexus with interstate commerce; (4) that the conspiracy injured the plaintiff; and (5) the approximate amount of damages."

The Fifth Circuit upheld a summary judgment in Aviation Spec., Inc. v. United Technologies Corp., 568 F.2d 1186 (5th Cir. 1978) in which the plaintiff failed to show a conspiracy. In that case, the plaintiff stipulated that they had no direct evidence that the refusal to deal was anything more than a unilateral business decision or that there were any agreements beyond typical distributorship agreements. [69] As in the case sub judice, the defendants denied the existence of a conspiracy and thus shifted the burden to the plaintiffs to produce significant probative evidence of a conspiracy and participation by the defendants in the conspiracy. As in the case sub judice, the plaintiffs relied upon circumstantial evidence. See First National Bank v. Cities Service Co., 391 U.S. 253, 291, 20 L. Ed. 2d 569, 593, 88 S. Ct. 1575 (1968); Solomon v. Houston Corrugated Box Co., 526 F.2d 389, 396 (5th Cir. 1976). The Fifth Circuit held that the plaintiffs had to do far more than show parallel business behavior to establish evidence of a violation of the Sherman Act and thereby avoid summary judgment. The court then proceeded to point out that the plaintiffs' assertion rested upon its own "unsupported assessment of the situation, which is insufficient to raise a genuine issue of material fact concerning whether the refusal was premised upon a good faith business judgment." Aviation Specialties, 568 F.2d at 1192.

The plaintiff has the burden of coming forward with specific evidence of a conspiracy in order to survive summary judgment on [70] the boycott claim. Conspiratorial conduct may not be proven by circumstantial evidence unless such circumstantial evidence excludes the possibility of independent action. Monsanto, 465 U.S. at 764, 79 L. Ed. 2d at 785.

The uncontroverted testimony of Raymond G. Micsan, the director of the Century 21 regional office, establishes that Century 21-Popes' Realty engaged in cooperative transactions with other brokers throughout the period at issue in this litigation. [30] The plaintiffs admit that Murphy and Roberts have not boycotted the plaintiffs or refused to deal with the plaintiffs. [31] In addition, the plaintiffs admit that they do not have any direct evidence of any conspiracy or agreement between any two defendants to refuse to do business with Century 21 - Popes' Realty. [32]

The plaintiffs have failed to provide sufficient probative [71] evidence to create a genuine issue of fact on the conspiracy element or the other four elements necessary to the boycott claim. Park, 764 F.2d at 1059. The defendants are entitled to judgment as a matter of law on the boycott claim.

C. Price Fixing Claim

The plaintiffs have claimed that the defendants have conspired to fix prices, i.e., set commission rates, although such a charge is not found in one particular charge of the amended complaint. The defendants challenge this claim

---

> [A] company, acting unilaterally, has the right to select its customers and to refuse to sell its goods to anyone for reasons sufficient to itself. Proof of parallel behavior alone does not establish a prima facie case of a violation of the Sherman Act. In order to avoid a motion for summary judgment, a claimant must come forward with significant probative evidence supporting its theory of conscious parallelism with, as it has been stated, some "plus" factor which tends to indicate that the asserted unilateral behavior was not such in fact, e.g., that the decisions not to deal were contrary to defendants' economic self interest so as to raise an issue of good faith business judgment.

Paul Kadair, 694 F.2d at 1027. (citations omitted)

[30] See deposition of Raymond Micsan at 22-23.

[31] See deposition of James Pope at 219, 221-222.

[32] See deposition of James Pope at 224-225.

of the plaintiffs because they failed to produce any evidence of price fixing and because the [*276] plaintiffs lack standing to sue for price fixing. The plaintiffs have supported their price fixing claim by attempting to show retaliatory conduct, tossing out the Monsanto case, 465 U.S. 752, 79 L. Ed. 2d 775, 104 S. Ct. 1464, and arguing that standing requires nothing more than "injury in fact" in an antitrust situation. [33]

1. No Evidence of Price Fixing [72] Agreement

The starting point for the court is the recognition that the plaintiffs bear the burden of producing probative evidence sufficient to support a finding of an unlawful contract, combination, or conspiracy.

> On a claim of concerted price fixing, the antitrust plaintiff must present evidence sufficient to carry its burden of proving that there was such an agreement. If an inference of such an agreement may be drawn from highly ambiguous evidence, there is a considerable danger that the doctrines enunciated in Sylvania and Colgate will be seriously eroded.
>
> . . .
>
> Thus, something more than evidence of complaints is needed. There must be evidence that tends to exclude the possibility that the [defendant] manufacturer and [defendant] nonterminated distributors were acting independently. As Judge Aldisert has written, the antitrust plaintiff should present direct or circumstantial evidence that reasonably tends to prove that the manufacturer and others "had a conscious commitment to a common scheme designed to achieve an unlawful objective."

Monsanto, 465 U.S. at 763-764, 79 L. Ed. 2d at 785-786.

In Monsanto, the Supreme [73] Court held that the direct and inferential evidence was sufficient to enable the fact-finder to conclude that there was an agreement for conspiracy to maintain prices. However, in the case sub judice plaintiffs have failed to make a sufficient showing of either a conspiracy or the participation of these defendants in such a conspiracy. The plaintiffs themselves have stipulated the following: "Plaintiffs are aware of no written or oral agreement between Roberts, Murphy, and Jack and Mary Lib Francis to charge a uniform rate of six percent for the commissions or to charge a uniform split among participating salesmen" and that the MAR "does not have any written policy that fixes, establishes, or recommends a rate of commission that its members should charge sellers, or that fixes, establishes or recommends a rate of commission split that members should pay to each other or other real estate licensee." [34] The plaintiffs offer no specific facts to demonstrate the existence of a conspiracy or price agreement. Pope's conclusory statement that the defendants' had made "statements" that they would not cooperate with the plaintiff unless the plaintiff stopped advertising their "cut rates" [74] is insufficient to create a genuine issue of material fact. [35]

In contrast, the defendants' affidavits prove that the NAR, MAR, and MCBR strictly forbid price fixing by their members. [36] The plaintiffs have admitted that they do not have any evidence to suggest otherwise. [37] Murphy, Roberts, and Francis state in their affidavits that these defendants have never conspired to fix real estate brokerage commissions. [38] The plaintiffs concede the absence of proof of a conspiracy among the individual defendants. [39]

---

[33] See plaintiffs' brief at 11-12.

[34] See pretrial order at 11-12 (UU, PP).

[35] See affidavit of James Pope at 1, 6-7.

[36] See affidavit of William North at para. 20; Thad Vann at paras. 6, 7, 8, 9; and Joyce Murphy at para. 12.

[37] See deposition of James Pope at 172-174.

[38] See affidavits of Joyce Murphy, para. 19, exs. D-F; Phillip Roberts, paras. 6, 9, exs. A-F; Mary Lib Francis, paras. 7, 9 exs. A-C.

[39] See deposition of James Pope at 171.

[75] The plaintiffs have failed to establish a price fixing conspiracy or price fixing agreements between parties. The circumstantial evidence of parallel behavior does not exclude the possibility of independent action and is not sufficient probative evidence of conspiratorial conduct. Monsanto, 465 U.S. at 768, 79 [*277] L. Ed. 2d at 788. The Supreme Court made itself perfectly clear when it stated that:

> [Monsanto] held that HN31[] conduct as consistent with permissible competition as with illegal conspiracy does not, standing alone, support an inference of antitrust conspiracy (citations omitted). To survive a motion for summary judgment or for a directed verdict, a plaintiff seeking damages for a violation of § 1 must present evidence "that tends to exclude the possibility" that the alleged conspirators acted independently. (citations omitted) Respondents in this case, in other words, must show that the inference of conspiracy is reasonable in light of the competing inference of independent action or collusive action that could not have harmed respondents. [76]

Matsushita, 475 U.S. at 588, 89 L. Ed. 2d at 553. The plaintiffs must also show the defendants individual participation in the conspiratorial conduct. The Fifth Circuit has found the existence of a conspiracy but then found the testimony wholly inadequate to support an inference of conspiracy between the supplier and distributors other than the plaintiff. Joe Regueira, Inc. v. American Distilling Co., 642 F.2d 826, 832 (5th Cir. 1981). The plaintiffs have failed to show either the existence of a conspiracy or participation by any of these defendants in a conspiracy.

The plaintiffs have failed to establish proof of conspiratorial conduct as required by the Sherman Act. Parallel business behavior does not, as a matter of law, prove a conspiracy. Aviation Specialties, 568 F.2d at 1192. The plaintiffs have not proved that individual private defendants have conspired to set uniform commission rates and the circumstantial evidence produced does not "exclude the possibility of independent action." The plaintiffs have also failed to produce any evidence to dispute the express policies of the NAR, MAR, and MCBR which forbid "fixing" [77] commissions or commission splits.

The plaintiffs have not produced sufficient evidence to create a genuine issue of material fact on this claim. The defendants are entitled to judgment as a matter of law on the price-fixing claim.

2. Standing Requires Antitrust Injury [40]

The defendants also challenge the plaintiffs' price-fixing claim on the basis of the plaintiffs' failure to show an antitrust injury and therefore to show the existence of standing. The defendants point out that the plaintiffs could not possibly have been injured by any such conspiracy to raise commission rates. The simple economics of the situation indicate that the plaintiffs are actually benefitted because they are placed in a better competitive position with customers in relation to other brokers.

HN32[] Injury is "the sine qua non for stating a cause of action [78] by a private antitrust plaintiff." Southern Concrete Co. v. U. S. Steel Corp., 535 F.2d 313, 318 (5th Cir. 1976), cert. denied, 429 U.S. 1096, 51 L. Ed. 2d 543, 97 S. Ct. 1113 (1977).

HN33[] A private plaintiff's standing to sue for antitrust damages is governed by Section 4 of the Clayton Act, 15 U. S. C. § 15, which confers standing only on those persons who have been "injured in their business or property by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws . . . ." The Supreme Court has recognized further limitations on private antitrust claims for damages. Hawaii v. Standard Oil Co., 405 U.S. 251, 262, 31 L. Ed. 2d 184, 193 n.14, 92 S. Ct. 885 (1972); Southern Concrete, 535 F.2d at 316.

The Fifth Circuit uses the "target area" test to determine antitrust standing. Standing is different in an antitrust context.

[40] The requirement of antitrust injury applies to other antitrust claims as well.

> HN34[] The "target area" test arose as a means of limiting the class of potential treble [79] damage plaintiffs to those persons who could most adequately vindicate the purpose of the antitrust laws. To attain standing a person (whether corporation or individual) must be one against whom the conspiracy is aimed.

Jeffrey v. Southwestern Bell, 518 F.2d 1129, 1131 (5th Cir. 1975). The Fifth Circuit has applied the test to deny standing to persons who cannot establish that they [*278] paid the allegedly fixed price. Pan-Islamic Trade Corp. v. Exxon Corp., 632 F.2d 539, 547 (5th Cir. 1980), cert. denied, 454 U.S. 927, 70 L. Ed. 2d 236, 102 S. Ct. 427 (1981). The Fifth Circuit has applied the "target area" test in Park v. El Paso Board of Realtors, 764 F.2d 1053 (5th Cir. 1985), cert. denied, 474 U.S. 1102, 88 L. Ed. 2d 919, 106 S. Ct. 884 (1986), to a case involving real estate brokers just as in the case sub judice.

> The plaintiff alleged that the defendant-brokers set an artificially high price for commissions. However, it is difficult to see how this price-fixing, in itself, could have injured the plaintiff. Setting an artificially high price for a product potentially [80] harms consumers; but normally one would not expect it to harm competitors who try to undercut the set price. Quite the reverse: price fixing ordinary helps these competitors by allowing them to capture a larger share of the market than they would if the prevailing price were lower.

Park, 764 F.2d at 1069.

The Supreme Court has used this same reasoning to reinstate summary judgment for defendants.

> Respondents cannot . . . recover damages for any conspiracy by petitioners to charge higher than competitive prices in the American market. Such conduct would indeed violate the Sherman Act . . ., but it could not injure respondents: as petitioners' competitors, respondents stand to gain from any conspiracy to raise the market price . . . . Such restrictions, though harmful to competition, actually benefit competitors by making supracompetitive pricing more attractive. Thus, [these various claims cannot] by themselves give respondents a cognizable claim against petitioners for antitrust damages.

Matsushita, 475 U.S. at 582-583, 89 L. Ed. 2d at 549-550.

The plaintiffs have not produced sufficient evidence to create a genuine [81] issue of fact on the standing challenge. The court finds that the plaintiffs do not have the necessary antitrust standing to bring this claim of an alleged conspiracy to fix real estate brokerage commissions and commission splits.

D. Claims Related to the Private Defendants' Complaints to MREC and the Action taken by the Government Defendants

The plaintiffs' third claim under Count I is that the government defendants conspired with the private defendants to "punish" the plaintiffs for their competitive activities by way of the complaint procedure of the MREC. The plaintiff sets out specific complaints made to the MREC and the subsequent action taken by the MREC. The existence of these administrative complaints and the action taken by the government defendants are not in dispute. The private defendants claim that these complaints were not filed in order to "punish" the plaintiffs and that, even if they were, this action would be immune under the Noerr-Pennington doctrine. The government defendants claim to be immune.

1. Challenge by Private Defendants

Defendants Murphy, Roberts, and the Francises do not dispute that the complaints were filed with the MREC and that the MREC [82] took action based upon these complaints. However, these defendants point out that the record is utterly devoid of any evidence that any defendants improperly utilized the complaint procedures of the MREC to "punish" the plaintiffs for competing in the Monroe County real estate market or for any other reason. The plaintiffs have not set forth sufficient probative evidence to challenge the defendants' claim, but even if the plaintiffs had shown that this action was taken to "punish" the plaintiffs' behavior, or for other anti-competitive reasons, this conduct would still be expressly protected from antitrust attack by the Noerr-Pennington doctrine.

The Supreme Court has long recognized that First Amendment considerations compel the conclusion that antitrust laws do not apply to concerted action for the purpose of petitioning or attempting to influence governmental authorities. *Eastern [279] Railroad Conference v. Noerr Motor Freight, Inc., 365 U.S. 127, 135, 5 L. Ed. 2d 464, 470, 81 S. Ct. 523 (1961), United Mine Workers v. Pennington, 381 U.S. 657, 669-670, 14 L. Ed. 2d 626, 636, 85 S. Ct. 1585 (1965). The reasoning in these cases that [83] concerted actions designed to influence governmental authorities is immune from antitrust challenge has come to be known as the Noerr-Pennington doctrine.

The Fifth Circuit interprets the Noerr-Pennington doctrine to exempt proceedings initiated before governmental agencies from the antitrust laws even if the proceedings are initiated for the express purpose of eliminating competition. Coastal States Marketing, Inc. v. Hunt, 694 F.2d 1358, 1363 (5th Cir. 1983). HN35[] The antitrust laws do not apply to private efforts to petition governmental agencies.

> The Supreme Court established the basic principle of antitrust petitioning immunity, that "joint efforts to influence public officials do not violate the antitrust laws even though intended to eliminate competition. Such conduct is not illegal, either standing alone or as part of a broader scheme itself violative of the Sherman Act."

Coastal States, 694 F.2d at 1363.

The Supreme Court has created an exception to the Noerr-Pennington doctrine, but this so-called "sham" exception [84] is limited in scope. Noerr, 365 U.S. at 144, 5 L. Ed. 2d at 475; California Motor Transport Co. v. Trucking Unlimited, 404 U.S. 508, 30 L. Ed. 2d 642, 646-647, 92 S. Ct. 609 (1972). "While the precise contours of these exceptions are as yet ill-defined, there appears to be agreement that both vexatious litigation and unlawful conspiracies with governmental officials are sham activities." Greenwood Utilities Commission v. Mississippi Power Company, 751 F.2d 1484, 1498 (5th Cir. 1985). The Fifth Circuit declared that "only where evidence shows that the defendant knew or should have known that the action he sought was improper would a court be justified in labeling his petitions a "sham" . . ." Greenwood Utilities, 751 F.2d at 1500.

The plaintiffs have not produced any specific evidence that the "sham" exception should apply to deny Noerr-Pennington immunity to these private defendants. There is no indication in the record that the defendants acted in a vexatious manner or that they conspired with government defendants in any way.

The plaintiffs have not provided evidence to create a genuine issue of material [85] fact concerning the Noerr-Pennington challenge. The private defendants are entitled to judgment as a matter of law on this claim.

2. Challenge by Government Defendants

The MREC investigated the complaints and took disciplinary action against the plaintiffs based upon the private defendant's complaints. [41] The MREC, and the other government defendants who act for the MREC, have a mandate to enforce the standards of conduct that govern all persons licensed by the commission. Miss. Code Ann. § 73-35-21 (1972). The commission is required to follow specific procedures [*280] in enforcing these standards to insure due process protections at the administrative level. Miss. Code Ann. § 73-35-23 (1972). In addition, a licensee disciplined by the commission is afforded a right of appeal to the Mississippi state courts. Miss. Code Ann.

---

[41] The plaintiffs' claims against the MREC, undisputedly a state agency, are barred by Eleventh Amendment immunity. See Edelman v. Jordan, 415 U.S. 651, 662-663, 39 L. Ed. 2d 662, 672, 94 S. Ct. 1347 (1974); Pennhurst State School v. Halderman, 465 U.S. 89, 100, 79 L. Ed. 2d 67, 78, 104 S. Ct. 900 (1984); McDonald v. Board of Mississippi Levee Com'rs., 832 F.2d 901, 906 (5th Cir. 1987). The MREC commissioners are absolutely immune for acts that were quasi-judicial. Part of their functions are analogous to those of judges and prosecutors. Nixon v. Fitzgerald, 457 U.S. 731, 747, 73 L. Ed. 2d 349, 362, 102 S. Ct. 2690 (1982); see also Johnson v. Wells, 566 F.2d 1016, 1018 (5th Cir. 1978) (parole board immunity); United States v. Irving, 684 F.2d 494, 496 (7th Cir. 1982). The MREC commissioners and staff also may utilize the protection of qualified immunity. "Government officials performing discretionary functions generally are shielded from liability for civil damages insofar as their conduct does not violate clearly established statutory or constitutional rights of which a reasonable person would have known." Harlow v. Fitzgerald, 457 U.S. 800, 818, 73 L. Ed. 2d 396, 410, 102 S. Ct. 2727 (1982); Scheuer v. Rhodes, 416 U.S. 232, 247, 40 L. Ed. 2d 90, 103, 94 S. Ct. 1683 (1974); Baddour, Inc. v. United States, 802 F.2d 801, 806-808 (5th Cir. 1986). Immunity defenses apply to the First Amendment, due process, and equal protection claims as well.

§ 73-35-25 (1972). The plaintiffs have failed to produce sufficient evidence that the government defendants conspired with anyone to "punish" the plaintiffs for any reason whatsoever.

[86] The government defendants argue that they are not subject to federal antitrust laws because of state action immunity. The Supreme Court has stated that the Sherman Act does not restrain state action or official action and established the state action exemption to the antitrust laws. Parker v. Brown, 317 U.S. 341, 350-351, 87 L. Ed. 315, 325-326, 63 S. Ct. 307 (1943). The Fifth Circuit has long recognized that "neither HN36[] the Sherman Act nor the Clayton Act was intended to authorize restraint of governmental action." Saenz v. University Interscholastic League, 487 F.2d 1026, 1028 (5th Cir. 1973); Alabama Power Co. v. Alabama Electric Coop., 394 F.2d 672, 675 (5th Cir.), cert. denied, 393 U.S. 1000, 21 L. Ed. 2d 465, 89 S. Ct. 488 (1968). This shield of immunity protects governmental agencies as well as officers and agents of the state who are acting within the scope of their authority. Saenz, 487 F.2d at 1028.

The plaintiffs have failed to provide evidence to create genuine issues of material fact to [87] preclude summary judgment for the government defendants on this critical element. [42] The government defendants are entitled to judgment as a matter of law on all federal antitrust claims.

E. Claim that Private Defendants Prohibited the Use of the Term "Realtor" [43]

[88] The plaintiffs' fourth claim is that certain private defendants [44] have engaged in the unreasonable restraint of trade by placing "arbitrary limitations" upon the use of the term realtor. Plaintiffs claim that they are qualified to use the term realtor and that the defendants' actions preventing such use violated the First Amendment and antitrust laws. The plaintiffs claimed in their brief that realtor is a generic term which is not subject to copyright laws.

The parties have subsequently stipulated that NAR owns the federally registered trademark "realtor" and "realtors" which are proprietary trademarks that refer solely to persons who are members of NAR and who have subscribed to NAR's Code of Ethics. NAR licenses the right to use these terms to its member boards (such as MCBR) who in turn sub-license the right to use these terms to their individual members.

[89] Securing registration of a trademark pursuant to the Lanham Act and endeavoring to police and protect one's rights in that trademark is not a violation of the antitrust laws. Under any possible set of facts, HN37[] "the acts of [defendants] in registering and enforcing the trademark in issue . . . merely represent fair and aggressive competition which does not constitute a violation of the antitrust laws." Car-Freshner Corp. v. Auto Aid Manufacturing Corp., 438 F. Supp. 82, 87 (S. D. N. Y. 1977). The argument that the use and protection of a copyright under the Federal Trademark Statute, 15 U. S. C. §§ 1051-1127, violates the federal antitrust laws is clearly erroneous.

[*281] The Popes have admitted that they were not members of the MCBR and were thus unable to be members of the MAR or NAR. [45] Therefore, the Popes' unauthorized use of the term "realtor" infringes upon NAR's trademark rights and these private defendants may take appropriate steps to enforce their trademark. The plaintiffs have not established a genuine issue of material fact [90] sufficient to preclude summary judgment on this antitrust claim.

---

[42] The court notes that the type of "anti-competitive restraint" challenged must be within the legislative intent. Although this is a factual determination, the plaintiffs have failed to come forward with either specific evidence or arguments to dispute the availability of a state action exemption. Lafayette v. Louisiana Power and Light, 532 F.2d 431, 434 (5th Cir. 1976), aff'd, 435 U.S. 389, 55 L. Ed. 2d 364, 98 S. Ct. 1123 (1978).

[43] The terms "Realtor" and "Realtors" are federally registered trademarks that refer solely to NAR members, according to the parties' stipulations. The court will use these terms with this definition in mind but will not use the registered trademark symbol of a circled R.

[44] These defendants include the Monroe County Board of Realtors, Inc., Mississippi Association of Realtors and the National Association of Realtors.

[45] See deposition of James Pope at 157 and party stipulations.

The defendants are entitled to judgment as a matter of law on the issue of attempting to prevent the plaintiffs from using the protected trademark term "realtor".

The plaintiffs also claim that the enforcement of this trademark by private defendants violates the First Amendment. Private action cannot be the basis for a violation of the right to free speech, only government action. The plaintiffs have not shown that the private defendants' trademark is invalid because it is a generic term, or that, if it were, the result of this trademark's enforcement would be a First Amendment violation. See San Francisco Arts and Athletics v. U.S.O.C., 483 U.S. 522, 97 L. Ed. 2d 427, 107 S. Ct. 2971 (1987). The private defendants are entitled to judgment as a matter of law on the First Amendment claim.

F. Claim that Defendants Prohibited Employment Discussions With Their Sales [91] People

The plaintiffs' fifth claim of Count I is that the defendants have prohibited discussions by the plaintiffs with their sales people and that this violates antitrust laws and the First Amendment. The private defendants have challenged the factual basis of this claim through their affidavits. In response, the plaintiffs have failed to produce sufficient probative evidence to establish these allegations. The plaintiffs have not come forward with any specific facts that establish that any of the plaintiffs' activities concerning employment or employee communication policies are in violation of antitrust laws or the First Amendment. The court does not find it necessary to exhaustively address a claim which has no factual or legal support. The defendants are entitled to judgment as a matter of law.

G. Claim that Defendants Restricted Locations for Real Estate Courses

The plaintiffs' sixth claim of Count I is that the defendants have somehow prevented real estate courses from being taught at convenient locations. Although this allegation was challenged by the defendants through affidavits, the plaintiffs have not come forward with specific facts to support this allegation. The [92] private defendants have asserted that they have no control over licensing requirements, the approval of real estate courses, or the location of these courses. Pursuant to Mississippi Code Annotated § 73-35-7, the courses must be approved by either the Southern Association of Colleges and Schools or the Realtors' Institute of Mississippi. The plaintiffs have not come forward with any specific facts to support this claim and have failed to create a genuine issue of material fact. The plaintiffs have also failed to articulate a colorable First Amendment or antitrust claim. The defendants are entitled to judgment as a matter of law.

H. Claim of Tying Arrangement Between Sales of Insurance and Real Estate

The plaintiffs allege that Francis and Roberts have tied the selling of insurance to the listing of real property in violation of antitrust laws. Both defendants Roberts and Francis have expressly denied this allegation in their sworn affidavits. [46] The plaintiffs have not come forward with sufficient probative evidence to create a genuine issue of material fact on this claim. The court finds that the defendants are entitled to judgment as a matter of law. In a summary judgment posture, [93] the plaintiffs must produce specific evidence to substantiate [*282] their claim in order to continue to trial.

III.

First Amendment Claims Against Government Defendants

The plaintiffs have alleged violations of the First Amendment by the government defendants in Count II. The court will give due consideration to each of these claims in the order in which they are presented.

Not all speech is constitutionally protected by the First Amendment. The Supreme Court has distinguished between commercial price and product advertising and ideological communication and has demanded a greater degree of protection for the latter form of speech. Young v. American Mini Theatres, Inc., 427 U.S. 50, 68, 49 L. Ed. 2d 310, 325, 96 S. Ct. 2440 (1976). In Central Hudson Gas and Electric Corp. v. Public Service Commission, 447 U.S. 557,

---

[46] See affidavits of Roberts at para. 20 and J. Francis at para. 7.

65 L. Ed. 2d 341, 100 S. Ct. 2343 (1980), [94] HN38[] the Supreme Court adopted a four-part test for determining the validity of government restrictions on commercial speech. This test was as follows: (1) the First Amendment protects commercial speech only if that speech concerns lawful activity and is not misleading; (2) a restriction on otherwise protected commercial speech is valid if it seeks to implement a substantial governmental interest, and (3) directly advances that interest, and (4) reaches no further than necessary to accomplish the given objective. Central Hudson, 447 U.S. at 566, 65 L. Ed. 2d at 351. The defendants have made an initial showing that the speech involved was misleading and that the government response was narrowly tailored to prevent such false advertising and was to protect the public. [47]

A. Claim of Punishment for Advertising Services

The plaintiffs claim that the defendants have [95] "punished" them in some way for advertising their business. The government defendants argue that the only action taken against the plaintiffs related to advertising was the investigation of complaints and the enforcement of the law. The government defendants claim that, in each instance in which the plaintiffs were subject to commission investigation and action related to advertising, the misrepresentative nature of the the content of the plaintiffs' advertisement was the focus of attention. The plaintiffs have in essence admitted this as to the brochure used by the plaintiffs. [48] In another advertisement, the plaintiffs compared their services to those of other brokers in Monroe County. A complaint was filed with the MREC, the MREC investigated the matter, and the MREC found that the advertisement did contain false and misleading information. The MREC's actions were directed toward the misrepresentations by a licensed real estate broker and did not improperly infringe the plaintiffs' rights to commercial speech.

[96] The plaintiffs have failed to establish specific probative evidence sufficient to create a genuine issue of material fact on essential elements of this claim. The plaintiffs have not established facts to indicate either retaliation or "punishment" by MREC or that their speech would be protected by the First Amendment as truthful advertising. The defendants are entitled to judgment as a matter of law.

B. Claim Concerning Advertising and Encouraging Attendance at Real Estate Schools

The plaintiffs claim that the MREC has punished the plaintiffs for encouraging persons to attend real estate schools and for advertising the programs at such schools. The plaintiffs admitted in a letter to the defendants that an error was made in the publication at issue. [49] The defendants argue that the letter of reprimand [*283] addressed misrepresentations in the advertisement and did not violate the First Amendment. The plaintiffs have not produced sufficient evidence to create a factual issue and have failed to establish that a First Amendment violation occurred as to the advertisements concerning real estate courses. The defendants are entitled to judgment as a matter of law.

[97] C. Claim Concerning the Use of Gifts in Advertising

The plaintiffs' third and fourth claims of Count II involved the use of vacuum cleaners and tee shirts as part of advertising efforts. The plaintiffs advertised the fact that they gave vacuum cleaners to purchasers of real estate. Apparently, the plaintiffs also gave away "Century 21" tee shirts as a form of advertising. The government defendants argue that the complaint involving the vacuum cleaner did not primarily concern the advertisement of the vacuum cleaner but the fact that the vacuum cleaner given as a reward for the purchase of property did not work. The letter of reprimand also cautioned the plaintiffs about improper gifts and pointed out the pertinent statute, Miss. Code Ann. § 73-35-21(j) (1972). The MREC's investigation and letter of reprimand during the vacuum cleaner incident has not been shown to infringe the plaintiffs' right to free speech. The plaintiffs have not produced specific evidence to establish that the MREC took any action that inhibited truthful advertising. [50] The Popes did not advertise that they gave away faulty vacuum cleaners but they apparently did give a customer a defective vacuum cleaner [98] as an inducement for the sale of real estate.

[47] The government defendants also have immunity defenses. See II.D.2. footnote.

[48] The plaintiffs stated that 95% of the information was true, therefore 5% must have been false. See affidavit of James Pope at 9.

[49] See, Government defendant's exhibit 3, letter from John E. Johnson dated May 15, 1981.

The plaintiffs have not produced sufficient evidence to establish that the MREC has prohibited or discouraged the use of tee shirts in advertising. This claim would raise a legitimate First Amendment issue if the plaintiffs could set forth evidence to substantiate this claim. However, the plaintiffs have failed to meet the summary judgment standard.

The plaintiffs have failed to produce sufficient evidence to create genuine issues of material fact on the use of gifts in advertising claim. The defendants are entitled to judgment as a matter of law.

D. Plaintiffs' Use of the Term "Realtor" as Claim

The plaintiffs claim that the government defendants have prohibited them from using the term "realtor" in violation of the First Amendment. [51] The government defendants claim that they have not taken any [99] action to prohibit or discourage the plaintiffs' use of the term realtor. The plaintiffs have not come forward with any specific evidence showing that the government defendants took steps to prohibit such speech by the plaintiffs in violation of the First Amendment. Even if the MREC had taken such action, the enforcement of trademark rights would not be a violation of the First Amendment. See San Francisco v. U.S.O.C., 483 U.S. at 522, 97 L. Ed. 2d at 427.

The plaintiffs have not produced sufficient evidence to create a genuine issue of material fact in order to preclude summary judgment. The government defendants are entitled to judgment as a matter of law.

IV.

Due Process Claims Against the Government Defendants

Plaintiffs claim that the MREC, Harwick, and government investigators have violated the plaintiffs' due process rights in several respects. [100] [52]

A. Procedural Due Process Claim

Plaintiffs' first claim of Count III is that the government defendants violated [*284] procedural due process by denying plaintiffs the right to a fair and impartial due process hearing. Specifically, they allege that plaintiffs were "found guilty" of charges without notice, that the decision relied in part on the existence of prior complaints, and that the MREC relied upon personal knowledge in reaching its decision. [53]

---

[50] The plaintiffs concede that they have no information of formal action taken by the MREC to enforce ethical guidelines of the NAR. See pretrial order at 8.EE.

[51] Realtor is a federally registered trademark which the private defendants have sought to protect. See discussion above at II.E. generally.

[52] The government defendants have immunity defenses. See II.D.2. footnote.

[53] The plaintiffs also allege that prohibiting plaintiffs from providing "gifts" to customers violated substantive due process. However, the plaintiffs have not presented specific evidence sufficient to establish that the government defendants prohibited such activity by the plaintiffs. The defendants did inform the plaintiffs of the state statutes involved but did not take steps toward enforcement. The court therefore does not need to decide whether or not such a prohibition would violate substantive due process requirements in addition to First Amendment requirements. See discussion at III.C. above. However, the court notes that prohibiting gifts between a merchant and his own customer is different from prohibiting "gifts" from a seller's agent to a purchaser to induce a real estate sale. See Miss. Code Ann. § 73-35-21(j) (1972).

[101] Hearings are not automatically provided in every instance where letters of reprimand or "caution" are issued. [54] [102] The defendants do not dispute the fact that the plaintiffs were not given full due process hearings before private letters of reprimand were sent. The defendants do challenge, however, the plaintiffs' contention that they were not given notice of charges against them. The defendants claim that the plaintiffs received notice of each complaint and an opportunity to respond to the substance of the complaint before any reprimand was ever given and argue that this satisfies due process. The plaintiffs have stated they were not given a hearing or notice of a hearing but they have not created a genuine issue of fact as to whether or not the plaintiffs were given notice and the opportunity to respond to the complaints which led to the letters of reprimand. [55] The defendants concede that a full-blown hearing was not held on these complaints but they claim that the plaintiffs were given notice and the opportunity to respond to the complaints. [56]

The commission has acknowledged that the MREC must afford constitutional protections and show care and concern for the ability of a person to pursue a livelihood before it jeopardizes the license of a real estate broker. In re Ruffalo, 390 U.S. 544, 550, 20 L. Ed. 2d 117, 122, 88 S. Ct. 1222 (1968); Mississippi Real Estate Commission v. Ryan, 248 So. 2d 790, 793 (Miss. 1971).

HN39[] Due process is a flexible standard which has been refined for different situations. Schweiker v. McClure, 456 U.S. 188, 200, 72 L. Ed. 2d 1, 11, 102 S. Ct. 1665 (1982). In some contexts, due process procedural protection requires that the accused receive notice prior to termination of a property right, that written notice of the reasons for the suspension be given, and that an effective opportunity to rebut those reasons be provided. See [103] Ferguson v. Thomas, 430 F.2d 852, 856 (5th Cir. 1970). In other contexts, due process protections are satisfied by a post-deprivation hearing which provides an opportunity for the accused to correct any errors in the accusations. In other contexts, due process protections require a full-blown hearing with notice prior to any governmental action.

The court applies a four-part test to determine whether the government defendants provided adequate due process safeguards in the context of informal letters of reprimand. Mathews v. Eldridge, 424 U.S. 319, 335, 47 L. Ed. 2d 18, 33, 96 S. Ct. 893 (1976). [57] [104] The court holds that due process is satisfied in this context when the accused is given notice, a copy of the complaint, and the opportunity to respond. The plaintiffs have failed to set forth sufficient [*285] evidence to establish that the defendants failed to give notice of the complaint, a copy of the complaint, and a reasonable opportunity to respond. [58]

The plaintiffs have not produced sufficient evidence to establish that the MREC officials relied on personal knowledge or prior complaints in their decision and have not shown the court precisely how such problems would violate due process requirements and how such claims would avoid Eleventh Amendment immunity and qualified immunity for these defendants. The plaintiffs did not use their opportunity to appeal these decisions by the government defendants. The plaintiffs have not met the summary judgment standard, so the court finds for the defendants on this issue as a matter of law.

B. MREC's Dual Role as Prosecutor and Judge as Due Process Claim

---

[54] See depositions of Phillip Hardwick at 20 and Kenneth Ammons at 12-13.

[55] See affidavit of James Pope at 7.

[56] See deposition of Kenneth Ammons at 12-13 and Phillips Hardwick at 20, 24-26.

[57] The court considers the private interest affected by the official action, the risk of erroneous deprivation of such interest by the procedures used, the probable value of additional safeguards, and the government's interest. Matthews, 424 U.S. at 335, 47 L. Ed. 2d at 33.

[58] The plaintiffs had a right to request a hearing and had an opportunity to appeal any adverse decision of the MREC to a circuit court. Miss. Code Ann. § 73-35-25(1) (1972). Even if the notice and opportunity to respond were insufficient and the letter of reprimand could be said to violate due process, the plaintiffs had an adequate post-deprivation opportunity to assert their due process rights.

The plaintiffs' second claim of Count III is that [105] the MREC's role as both prosecutor and judge violates due process because it fails to insure fair and impartial hearings. The plaintiffs also allege that the MREC relied upon information which is not available to the plaintiffs and communicated with its investigative and administrative officers outside the presence of the plaintiffs.

The defendants have not disputed that the MREC has both investigatory and judicial functions and that it acted in both roles toward the plaintiffs. However, HN40[] the combination of investigative and judicial functions within an agency does not in itself violate due process. Gibson v. FTC, 682 F.2d 554, 560 (5th Cir. 1982), cert. denied, 460 U.S. 1068, 75 L. Ed. 2d 945, 103 S. Ct. 1521 (1983). In the case sub judice, the plaintiffs have not made a showing of specific facts to indicate the existence of bias or prejudice from these dual roles. Due process demands impartiality on the part of those who act in a judicial role. However, the decision maker is presumed unbiased unless proven otherwise. Schweiker, 456 U.S. at 195, 72 L. Ed. 2d at 8. [106]

In Withrow v. Larkin, 421 U.S. 35, 58, 43 L. Ed. 2d 712, 730, 95 S. Ct. 1456 (1975), the Supreme Court failed to find a due process violation where a medical examining board served as both the investigative and adjudicative body when it warned and reprimanded a physician, temporarily suspended his license and instituted criminal license revocation proceedings. In the case sub judice, the defendants' undisputed claim is that the investigation is done by the staff, that a commissioner from outside the congressional district of the accused reviews the staff recommendation to determine whether or not the complaint should be carried forward, and that the hearings by the MREC are conducted by members of the commission who did not participate in the investigation.

The plaintiffs have not produced specific evidence to establish the existence of bias or prejudice or the denial of a fair and impartial due process hearing because of the dual functions of the MREC. Likewise, the defendants have failed to set forth specific evidence sufficient to establish that the plaintiffs were denied access to MREC information or that ex parte communications between MREC officials occurred, [107] or shown that this action would have violated the plaintiffs' due process rights by denying a fair and impartial hearing.

The plaintiffs have not produced sufficient evidence to create a genuine issue of material fact. The government defendants are entitled to judgment as a matter of law on this due process claim.

C. Claim of Deprivation of Liberty Without Due Process by the Publication of Information Damaging Plaintiffs' Reputation

The plaintiffs allege that they have been denied liberty without due process [*286] because the statements of the government defendants harmed the plaintiffs' reputation when they were "published" by a local newspaper. [59]

HN41[] Persons may sometimes possess a liberty interest in their reputation. [108] Board of Regents v. Roth, 408 U.S. 564, 573, 33 L. Ed. 2d 548, 558, 92 S. Ct. 2701 (1972). However, not every act of a public official resulting in defamation creates a deprivation of liberty under the Fourteenth Amendment. Paul v. Davis, 424 U.S. 693, 702, 47 L. Ed. 2d 405, 414, 96 S. Ct. 1155 (1976).

The Supreme Court has refused to recognize a liberty interest in one's reputation apart from some more tangible interest and official removal of that interest. Paul v. Davis, 424 U.S. at 701, 711, 47 L. Ed. 2d at 414, 420.

> Rather his interest in reputation is simply one of a number which the State may protect against injury by virtue of its tort law, providing a forum for vindication of those interests by means of damages actions. And any harm or injury to that interest, even where as here inflicted by an officer of the State, does not result in a deprivation of any "liberty" or "property" recognized by a state or federal law, nor has it worked any change of respondent's status as theretofore recognized under the State's laws. For these reasons we hold that the interest in reputation asserted in this case is neither "liberty" [109] nor "property" guaranteed against state deprivation without due process of law.

[59] The statements attributed to Hardwick are privileged if they occurred in a judicial context. See Netterville v. Lear Siegler, Inc., 397 So. 2d 1109, 1113 (Miss. 1981).

Paul v. Davis, 424 U.S. at 712, 47 L. Ed. 2d at 420. The plaintiffs do not have a constitutionally protected liberty interest in their reputation in the case sub judice. [60]

The plaintiffs have failed to produce evidence to create a genuine issue of material fact on this challenge to the due process claim. The defendants are entitled to judgment as a matter of law or the injury to reputation claim.

V.

Claim of Equal Protection Violation From Arbitrary Enforcement

Count IV of [110] the plaintiffs' amended complaint claims that the government defendants have enforced the law in an arbitrary manner. The only incident pointed out by the plaintiffs involves information concerning Joyce Murphy developed before the Board of Realtors. [61] The plaintiffs have produced no evidence to indicate that the commission has failed to act upon complaints actually filed with the MREC. [62]

HN42[] The Supreme Court has held in an unlawful administration context that a denial of equal protection has not occurred unless there is an element of intentional or purposeful discrimination by government officials. Snowden v. Hughes, 321 U.S. 1, 8, 88 L. Ed. 497, 503, 64 S. Ct. 397 (1944). [63]

[111] The plaintiffs have not produced sufficient evidence to establish discrimination in the enforcement of the law by the defendants, either purposeful or otherwise. The plaintiffs were the object of a relatively large number of complaints, but each of these complaints, except one, began with complainants making sworn statements [*287] and filing complaints with the commission. The MREC operates under a statutory mandate to receive and investigate all complaints. Although the plaintiffs claim that there were violations by other licensees, the plaintiffs admitted that they did not file any complaints with the commission regarding such violations. The plaintiffs are now in the awkward position of alleging selective enforcement when they themselves failed to take advantage of the mechanism provided for MREC prosecution of license violations. The court notes that the MREC took enforcement action based upon many of the complaints filed against the plaintiffs. The plaintiffs have not produced sufficient evidence to establish that the defendants were unfairly targeting the plaintiffs for enforcement actions or that the defendants were overlooking violations by other licensees.

The plaintiffs [112] have failed to produce evidence sufficient to create a genuine issue of fact to preclude summary judgment on the equal protection claim. The defendants are entitled to judgment as a matter of law.

VI.

Claim that First Amendment Rights Violated by Retaliation For Prior Litigation

In Count IX, the plaintiffs claim that the government defendants have violated the plaintiffs' first amendment rights by retaliating against them for bringing an earlier antitrust action against the MREC in Hinds County, Mississippi. The defendants argue that the plaintiffs were not part of the prior law suit and had no connection to the law suit other than their general affiliation with Century 21. The prior litigation in Hinds County involved commission

[60] The plaintiffs have also failed to set forth specific evidence to establish that the government's own actions injured the plaintiffs' reputations and have not shown any denial of due process. The government defendants would not have violated any possible liberty interest by holding a public hearing on a complaint. The government defendants apparently did not "publish" the disputed information or initiate its publication.

[61] See deposition of James Pope at 292.

[62] The government defendants also have immunity defenses. See II.D.2. footnote.

[63] The situation in Snowden involved the unlawful administration of a state statute by state officials that resulted in the unequal application of a facially fair statute. Similarly situated persons may be treated differently in the application of the law without violating the equal protection clause.

regulations prescribing the size of lettering on advertising signs. The plaintiffs did not respond to the defendants' challenge to Count IX.

The plaintiffs have not established specific acts of retaliation which might relate in any way to the apparently unconnected law suit. The plaintiffs have not set forth specific evidence sufficient to create a genuine issue of material fact regarding retaliatory conduct and this antitrust claim. The court finds [113] that the defendants are entitled to judgment as a matter of law on Count IX.

VII.

Pendent State Law Claims

The plaintiffs have made numerous pendent state law claims against the various defendants. These include the state antitrust allegations in Count I, interference with economic relations, business relations, and business contracts in Count V, libel, slander, and defamation in Count VI, the violation of the public record statute in Count VII, and the violation of separation of powers in Count VIII. [64] Having dismissed the federal claims, the court finds it appropriate to also dismiss these state law claims so that these pendent claims may be brought in the most appropriate forum.

The courts have long recognized that HN43[] a judge has wide discretion to dismiss a pendent state claim after the dismissal of federal [114] claims. In exercising this discretion, the district court should look to "considerations of judicial economy, convenience and fairness to litigants" and should avoid needless decisions of state law. United Mine Workers v. Gibbs, 383 U.S. 715, 726, 16 L. Ed. 2d 218, 228, 86 S. Ct. 1130 (1966). "It has consistently been recognized that pendent jurisdiction is a doctrine of discretion, not of plaintiff's right." Gibbs, 383 U.S. at 726, 16 L. Ed. 2d at 228. Gibbs has been followed consistently by the Supreme Court. See Carnegie-Mellon Univ. v. Cohill, 484 U.S. 343, 350, 98 L. Ed. 2d 720, 108 S. Ct. 614 (1988). The Gibbs doctrine "is a doctrine of flexibility, designed to allow courts to deal with cases involving pendent claims in the manner that most sensibly accommodates a range of concerns and values." Carnegie-Mellon, 484 U.S. at 350.

[*288] "In the absence of a federal claim, a district court may in its discretion, and generally should, dismiss pendent state law claims." Slaughter v. Allstate, Inc., 803 F.2d 857, 859 (5th Cir. 1986). The court does not find that considerations [115] of judicial economy, convenience, and fairness to the litigants requires the exercise of pendent jurisdiction on these state law claims. Although this action has been pending for quite some time, the heart of the case is the federal antitrust and constitutional claims which are being dismissed. The part remaining would form a practically new case. The plaintiffs' pendent state claims will be dismissed without prejudice. Pharo v. Smith, 621 F.2d 656, 674 (5th Cir. 1980).

VIII. SUMMARY OF LEGAL CONCLUSIONS

The case sub judice presents antitrust, constitutional, and pendent state claims in a summary judgment posture. Once the defendants have properly challenged the plaintiffs' claims, the plaintiffs must produce sufficient evidence to establish a genuine issue of material fact in order to preclude summary judgment. If the plaintiffs have not established an essential element of their claim, or have not adequately defended against the defendants' attacks on their claim, the court should determine that the defendants are entitled to judgment as a matter of law.

The plaintiffs' antitrust claims fail because of the failure to establish an effect on inter-state commerce, [116] the market power of the realty organization, the antitrust injury necessary for standing, or the essential elements of their specific antitrust claims. The plaintiffs failed to establish the essential elements of their First Amendment claims, failed to create genuine issues of material fact, and failed to dispute the defendants' challenges to their claims. The plaintiffs failed to establish sufficient evidence to support and defend their due process claims and equal protection claim, as well. Additionally, the government defendants established immunity defenses. Given the failure to establish their antitrust and constitutional claims, the court will dismiss the pendent state law claims for the sake of comity, judicial economy, and fairness to the litigants.

[64] The court notes that the plaintiffs have produced little evidence to support these challenged claims.

The plaintiffs failed to advance any genuine issue in the case sub judice. Instead, the plaintiffs have used the shotgun approach to litigation and thereafter created a great deal of smoke, but no fire. The court painstakingly examined each claim and found them all wanting. The case should be dismissed at this juncture to avoid the further waste of judicial resources.

An order in accordance with this opinion will this day [117] be issued.

THIS 5th day of April, 1988.

Harkins Amusement Enterprises, Inc. v. General Cinema Corp.

United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit

September 16, 1987, Argued and Submitted ; April 6, 1988, Filed

Nos. 86-2553, 86-15046, 87-1740

Reporter

850 F.2d 477 *; 1988 U.S. App. LEXIS 19363 ; 12 Fed. R. Serv. 3d (Callaghan) 486

Harkins Amusement Enterprises, Inc.; Daniel E. Harkins, individually and dba Tower Plaza Cinema I and II, Plaintiffs/Appellants, v. General Cinema Corporation, Defendant, and The Harry Nace Company; United Artists Theatres, Inc.; American Multi-Cinema, Inc.; Paramount Pictures Corporation; Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation; Universal Film Exchanges, Inc.; Warner Bros. Distributing Corp.; Columbia Pictures Industries, Inc.; Avco Embassy Pictures Corp.; Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, Inc.; United Artists Corporation; Buena Vista Distributing Co., Inc., Defendants/Appellees; Harkins Amusement Enterprises, Inc.; Daniel E. Harkins, individually and dba Tower Plaza Cinema I and II, Plaintiffs/Appellants, v. General Cinema Corporation, Defendant, and The Harry Nace Company; United Artists Theatres, Inc.; American Multi-Cinema, Inc.; United Artists Corporation, Defendants/Appellees; Harkins Amusement Enterprises, Inc.; Daniel E. Harkins, individually and dba Tower Plaza Cinema I and II, Plaintiffs/Appellants, v. General Cinema Corporation, Defendant, and The Harry Nace Company; American Multi-Cinema, Inc.; United Artists Corporation, Defendants/Appellees

Subsequent History: [1] As Amended April 19, 1988; As amended July 19, 1988.

Prior History: Appeal from the United States District Court for the District of Arizona, D.C. Nos. CV-77-736-P-CLH, CV-77-736-CLH.

Disposition: Affirmed in part, reversed in part, and remanded.

Core Terms

distributors, exhibitors, films, split, bid, licensing, theatre, district court, summary judgment, clearances, picture, conspiracy, partial summary judgment, monopoly, blind, circuit-wide, discovery, allegations, antitrust, moveovers, deals, Sherman Act, continuance, deposition, advances, rigging, terms, illusory, monopolization, restraint of trade

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > De Novo Review

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Appellate Review > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Appellate Review > Standards of Review

HN1[] Standards of Review, De Novo Review

A district court's grant of summary judgment is reviewed de novo.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Genuine Disputes

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Legal Entitlement

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Materiality of Facts

HN2[] Entitlement as Matter of Law, Genuine Disputes

Under Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(c), summary judgment is proper if there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. The materiality of a fact is determined by the substantive law governing the claim or defense.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Appellate Review > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Standards of Review > Abuse of Discretion > General Overview

Immigration Law > Admission of Immigrants & Nonimmigrants > Visa Eligibility & Issuance > Visa Application Denials

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Summary Judgment > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Pretrial Matters > Continuances

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > Abuse of Discretion

HN3[] Summary Judgment, Appellate Review

The appellate court reviews a denial of a Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(f) motion for continuance for abuse of discretion. The appellate court cannot simply substitute its judgment for that of the district court to reverse under this standard, but must have a definite and firm conviction that the court below committed a clear error of judgment in the conclusion it reached upon a weighing of the relevant factors.

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > De Novo Review

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Summary Judgment > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Appellate Review > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Appellate Review > Standards of Review

HN4[] Standards of Review, De Novo Review

Although an appellate court reviews a grant of summary judgment de novo, it is limited to consideration of issues of fact presented to the district court.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

HN5[] Summary Judgment, Burdens of Proof

A plaintiff cannot create a "genuine" issue of material fact by merely submitting an affidavit that conflicts with prior sworn statements.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN6[] Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

Section 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, prohibits every contract, combination or conspiracy, in restraint of trade. But the Sherman Act does not restrict the long recognized right of trader or manufacturer engaged in an entirely private business, freely to exercise his own independent discretion as to parties with whom he will deal.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

HN7[] Summary Judgment, Entitlement as Matter of Law

Once the allegations of conspiracy made in the complaint are rebutted by probative evidence supporting an alternative interpretation of a defendant's conduct, if the plaintiff then fails to come forward with specific factual support of its allegations of conspiracy, summary judgment for the defendant becomes proper.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN8[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

The type of specific factual support necessary to support a conspiracy finding under 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 is evidence that tends to exclude the possibility of independent action by the alleged conspirators.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Horizontal Refusals to Deal > General Overview

Business & Corporate Law > Distributorships & Franchises > Causes of Action > Restraints of Trade

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Cartels & Horizontal Restraints > General Overview

HN9[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Horizontal Refusals to Deal

A film exhibitor has a claim when distributors participate in the split and deny the exhibitor access to films. Such an arrangement creates an impermissible horizontal conspiracy among the exhibitors operating the split and a vertical conspiracy between them and the participating distributors. It is a type of group boycott that violates the antitrust laws.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN10[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Explicit agreement is not a necessary part of a conspiracy under the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 et seq. Concerted action may be inferred from circumstantial evidence of the defendant's conduct and course of dealings.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Materiality of Facts

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

HN11[] Entitlement as Matter of Law, Materiality of Facts

In order to withstand summary judgment, an issue of material fact need not be conclusively resolved; rather, all that is required is that sufficient evidence supporting the claimed factual dispute be shown to require a jury or judge to resolve the parties' differing versions of the truth at trial.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Cartels & Horizontal Restraints > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Cartels & Horizontal Restraints > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

HN12[] Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason, Sherman Act

Some courts hold split agreements to be horizontal restraints on competition that are per se illegal under 15 U.S.C.S. § 1. Other courts apply the rule of reason where the economic impact of the challenged practice is not obvious. Per se treatment is appropriate, however, where joint efforts by firms disadvantage competitors by inducing suppliers or customers to deny relationships the competitors need in order to compete.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Summary Judgment > Partial Summary Judgment

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN13[] Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

Film licensing provisions that discriminate against small independent exhibitors in favor of large circuits are included among the restraints of trade condemned by the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 et seq.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > Nonprice Restraints

HN14[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Clearance is a contract term allowing an exhibitor a degree of exclusivity within a particular market. Clearances preclude distributors from licensing other theaters, either specifically named or encompassed in a named geographic area, from showing a movie while it is being exhibited by the theater whose bid is accepted. As vertical non-price restraints, clearances are evaluated under the rule of reason. Clearances that are unduly extended as to area or duration, or granted over theatres not in substantial competition, may be unreasonable under § 1, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN15[] Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

A moveover is the privilege given a licensee to move a picture from one theatre to another as a continuation of the run at the licensee's first theatre. Moveovers also occur when an exhibitor is allowed to shift a picture to a different screen at a multiplex theatre. These allowances are not inherently anticompetitive, but distributor discrimination against small, independent exhibitors in granting moveovers is prohibited by the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 et seq.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

HN16[] Summary Judgment, Burdens of Proof

The nonmoving party may not rely on the mere allegations in the pleadings in order to preclude summary judgment.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN17[] Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

Concerted action to eliminate competitive bidding violates the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 et seq.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

HN18[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

Master agreements or circuit-wide deals are unlawful restraints of trade. They eliminate the possibility of bidding for films theatre by theatre. In that way they eliminate the opportunity for the small competitor to obtain the choice first runs, and put a premium on the size of the circuit. They are, therefore, devices for stifling competition and diverting the cream of the business to the large operators. Distributors who join in such arrangements by exhibitors are active participants in effectuating a restraint of trade. Circuit-wide deals are evaluated under the rule of reason.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

HN19[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

Blind bidding, requiring exhibitors of films to submit bids before viewing films, is not illegal per se.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > Monopolization Offenses

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Monopolies & Monopolization > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > General Overview

HN20[] Scope, Monopolization Offenses

Section 2 of the Sherman Act prohibits monopolization, attempted monopolization, and conspiracy to monopolize. 15 U.S.C. S. § 2.

Civil Procedure > Pretrial Matters > Continuances

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Motions for Summary Judgment > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Summary Judgment > Partial Summary Judgment

HN21[] Pretrial Matters, Continuances

Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(f) provides that a court may order the continuance of a party's summary judgment motion to allow the nonmoving party to obtain affidavits, take depositions, or conduct other discovery.

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Preclusion of Judgments > Law of the Case

HN22[] Preclusion of Judgments, Law of the Case

The law of the case rule ordinarily precludes a court from reexamining an issue previously decided by it or a higher appellate court in the same case.

Counsel: Edwin Tobolowsky, Tobolowsky, Prager & Schlinger, Dallas, Texas; David N. Farren, Shimmel, Hill, Bishop & Gruender, P.C., Phoenix, Arizona, for the Plaintiffs-Appellants.

John P. Frank, Lewis & Roca, Phoenix, Arizona; James L. Seal, Harry B. Swerdlow and Rosenfeld, Meyer & Susman, Beverly Hills, California; Joel Linzner, Khourie & Crew, San Francisco, California; David W. Dow, Mohr, Hackett, Pederson, Blakely, and Randolph, P.C., Phoenix, Arizona, for the Defendants-Appellees.

Judges: William C. Canby, Jr. and Robert Boochever, Circuit Judges, and James M. Ideman, * District Judge.

Opinion by: BOOCHEVER

Opinion

[*480] BOOCHEVER, Circuit Judge:

Harkins Amusement Enterprises, Inc., and Daniel E. Harkins (Harkins) appeal district court judgments in favor of numerous antitrust defendants. This case involves an alleged agreement [2] between certain motion picture exhibitors in the Phoenix, Arizona area regarding film licensing. Seven distributors are accused of cooperating in this conspiracy, resulting in competitive injury to Harkins, an independent exhibitor.

The United States District Court for the District of Arizona denied Harkins' request for a continuance of a partial summary judgment motion filed by the film distributors. The motion was granted on each of Harkins' claims, and a separate judgment was entered for the distributors pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 54(b). The court later entered summary judgment in favor of the exhibitors.

We affirm the district court's grant of partial summary judgment to the film distributors and exhibitors on Harkins' claims of unreasonable clearances, discriminatory moveovers, illusory advances and/or guarantees, blind bidding, and shared monopoly. We reverse and remand for trial, however, Harkins' market splitting, bid rigging, and circuit-wide deals claims. We also hold that the district court did not abuse its discretion by denying Harkins' continuance request.

I. BACKGROUND

Appellant Harkins owned and operated five independent movie theatres in the Phoenix area [3] in the 1970s. In 1977, Harkins sued nine national film distributors and seven regional exhibitors, alleging various theories of conspiracy to restrain trade and monopolization under sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. §§ 1, 2 (1982).

Phoenix and its suburbs, including Chandler, Glendale, Mesa, Paradise Valley, and Tempe constitute the relevant geographic market in this case. The relevant product markets are the distribution and indoor exhibition of high-quality, first-run motion pictures. The damage period is between 1973 and 1977.

The appellees in No. 86-2553 are film distributors Columbia Pictures Industries, De Laurentis Entertainment Group (formerly Avco Embassy), Paramount Pictures Corp., Twentieth Century Fox Film Corp., Universal City Studios, Warner Bros. Distributing Corp. and United Artists Corp. (the distributors). The appellees in Nos. 86-15046 and 87-

* Honorable James M. Ideman, United States District Judge, Central District of California, sitting by designation.

1740 are film exhibitors American Multi-Cinema, Inc., The Harry Nace Co., and United Artists Communications, Inc. (the exhibitors). [1] The appeals were consolidated.

[4] Harkins' suit centers on the alleged anticompetitive effects of a motion picture "split." Splits are exhibitor agreements that divide a normally competitive market by allocating pictures to particular members [*481] and prohibiting bidding for licensing rights to the films assigned. Exhibitors' Serv., Inc. v. American Multi-Cinema, Inc., 788 F.2d 574, 576 (9th Cir. 1986); Dahl, Inc. v. Roy Cooper Co., 448 F.2d 17, 20 (9th Cir. 1971). Phoenix exhibitors met regularly in the mid-1970s and divided rights to films on a picture-by-picture basis. Harkins was not a split member.

The distributors have repeatedly acknowledged the existence of the Phoenix exhibitor split. Harkins' amended complaint alleged that rather than being mere observers, the distributors "agreed to, acquiesced in, aided and abetted the Exhibitor Defendants in implementing and effectuating this 'split' arrangement." The distributors deny any participation, and argue that they -- not an exhibitor such as Harkins -- were victimized by the market division scheme.

Harkins alleges seven types of conspiracies in restraint of trade under section 1 of the Sherman Act. They center [5] on a common premise: that unlawful preferential treatment granted by the distributors prevented Harkins from having a fair opportunity to compete with the split member exhibitors. In addition to an unreasonable restraint on competition resulting from licensing films according to the split, Harkins asserts that these concerted preferences included unreasonable clearances, discriminatory moveovers, bid rigging, circuit-wide deals, illusory advances and/or guarantees, and blind bidding.

This conduct also served as the basis of Harkins' endeavor to extend the monopolization prohibition of section 2 to claims of shared monopoly by the exhibitors and distributors.

In April 1979, this action was transferred by the Judicial Panel on Multidistrict Litigation to the Southern District of Texas as part of a nationwide movie antitrust case. In re Motion Picture Licensing Antitrust Litigation, 468 F. Supp. 837 (J.P.M.L. 1979). Harkins' suit was one of eight consolidated by the Panel.

During the next four years, discovery on issues of a national conspiracy in the motion picture industry was conducted. In July 1983, District Judge John V. Singleton, Jr., on a motion to consolidate [6] the cases for trial, instead remanded them to their original districts.

The clerk's record indicates that this case was not formally remanded to Arizona District Judge Walter E. Craig until late December 1983. Harkins, which admits "the parties had accomplished very little discovery" of a local nature in the eighteen months between the original filing of the suit and the transfer, served document production requests in May 1984. During the next nineteen months, the parties argued by telephone and by mail regarding discovery.

The distributors filed a motion for partial summary judgment on each of Harkins' claims in October 1985. Harkins responded in late November by filing a motion to compel document production. Following a hearing before a magistrate, the parties entered into a discovery stipulation in January 1986. In March 1986, Harkins filed its opposition to the distributors' partial summary judgment motion, consisting largely of discovery from the multi-district litigation proceedings. In the alternative, Harkins sought a continuance of the motion under Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(f) pending completion of additional local discovery.

The motions were argued before Judge Craig on April 4, 1986. Ruling [7] from the bench, he first denied the continuance and then granted partial summary judgment to the distributors on each of Harkins' claims. Judge Craig died in June 1986, without issuing written findings of undisputed fact and conclusions of law. The case was transferred to Judge Charles L. Hardy, who entered a formal judgment pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 54(b) in July based on Judge Craig's oral ruling.

[1] Distributor defendants Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, Inc. and Buena Vista Distributing Co. and exhibitor defendants General Cinema Corp., General Cinema of Arizona, Plitt Inter-Mountain Theaters, Inc., and Mann Theaters Corp. of California are no longer parties.

Exhibitors American Multi-Cinema and United Artists filed motions for summary judgment in June 1986, shortly before the case was transferred to Judge Hardy. The Harry Nace Co. filed a similar motion in August. Judge Hardy granted the exhibitors' motions by minute order in November 1986 and entered a formal judgment in January 1987.

[*482] II. STANDARD OF REVIEW

HN1[] We review a district court's grant of summary judgment de novo. Hernandez v. Johnston, 833 F.2d 1316, 1317 (9th Cir. 1987). "Therefore . . . this court sits in the same position as the district court and applies the same summary judgment test that governs the district court's decision." T.W. Elec. Service, Inc. v. Pacific Elec. Contractors Ass'n, 809 F.2d 626, 630 (9th Cir. 1987). [8]

HN2[] Under Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(c), summary judgment is proper if "there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and . . . the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law." The "materiality" of a fact is determined by the substantive law governing the claim or defense. Hernandez, 833 F.2d at 1317-18.

HN3[] This court reviews a denial of a Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(f) motion for continuance for abuse of discretion. Visa Int'l Serv. Ass'n v. Bankcard Holders of America, Inc., 784 F.2d 1472, 1475 (9th Cir. 1986); see Landmark Dev. Corp. v. Chambers Corp., 752 F.2d 369, 373 (9th Cir. 1985). We cannot simply substitute our judgment for that of the district court to reverse under this standard, Chism v. National Heritage Life Ins. Co., 637 F.2d 1328, 1331 (9th Cir. 1981), but must have a definite and firm conviction that the court below committed a clear error of judgment in the conclusion it reached upon a weighing of the relevant [9] factors. Fjelstad v. American Honda Motor Co., 762 F.2d 1334, 1337 (9th Cir. 1985).

III. DISCUSSION

A. THE RECORD ON APPEAL

HN4[] Although we review a grant of summary judgment de novo, this court is limited to consideration of issues of fact presented to the district court. See Morrison v. Char, 797 F.2d 752, 757 (9th Cir. 1986); 10 C. Wright, A. Miller & M. Kane, Federal Practice and Procedure § 2716, at 650-51 (2d ed. 1983). Because the distributors challenge some of Harkins' proffered evidence and the record is largely the same in both appeals, it is necessary as a threshold matter to determine what papers were presented to Judge Craig.

Harkins' memorandum in response to the distributors'partial summary judgment motion stated that it was supported "by the entire record on file in this action." Harkins therefore contends that every exhibit, document, deposition page, or other piece of discovery in this case -- including twenty-six boxes of papers submitted with its district court memorandum -- was "presented" to Judge Craig, and is subject [10] to de novo review in this case.

The distributors argue that only those items referred to in the parties' partial summary judgment memoranda below may be considered. We agree. In a complex case such as this, the judge was not required to examine thousands of additional pages of record even if they were physically presented to him. For this reason, our analysis is limited to the factual assertions raised in Harkins' district court papers, and additional items cited in its appellate briefs have not been considered.

The distributors request that we go a step further, and disregard affidavits filed by Daniel Harkins and his film buyer, Carl Smiley, on the theory that they contradict prior deposition testimony. In Radobenko v. Automated Equipment Corp., 520 F.2d 540, 544 (9th Cir. 1975), this court held HN5[] that a plaintiff could not create a "genuine" issue of material fact by merely submitting an affidavit that conflicted with prior sworn statements.

We believe the Radobenko rule is inapplicable here. Harkins and Smiley were deposed in 1978, shortly after the suit was filed, [11] and both stated that they were testifying without having reviewed the defendants' documents. With one exception, these alleged contradictions are in fact instances where Harkins and Smiley simply were unable to respond with certainty to specific deposition questions.

Smiley stated in his deposition that the "only clearance problem" he had encountered in Phoenix related to Harkins' Tower Plaza theatre. Yet in his affidavit, Smiley condemned split members' clearance requests [*483] generally as being "totally unwarranted and unreasonable." Because this matter was within his personal knowledge in 1978, Smiley's later statement has been disregarded with respect to clearances over any of Harkins' other theatres.

B. SUMMARY JUDGMENT TO THE DISTRIBUTOR DEFENDANTS

Harkins predictably cites the Supreme Court's decision in Poller v. Columbia Broadcasting System, Inc., 368 U.S. 464, 7 L. Ed. 2d 458, 82 S. Ct. 486 (1962), in support of its appeal:

> We believe that summary procedures should be used sparingly in complex antitrust litigation where motive and intent play leading roles, the proof is largely in the hands of the alleged conspirators, and hostile [12] witnesses thicken the plot. It is only when the witnesses are present and subject to cross-examination that their credibility and the weight to be given their testimony can be appraised.

368 U.S. at 473 (footnote omitted). We have noted, however, that Poller does not preclude summary judgment in the proper antitrust case. "The language merely teaches caution." Barnes v. Arden Mayfair, Inc., 759 F.2d 676, 680 (9th Cir. 1985).

Section 1 of the Sherman Act HN6[] prohibits "every contract, combination . . . or conspiracy, in restraint of trade." 15 U.S.C. § 1 (1982). The Supreme Court made it clear very early that the antitrust laws still recognized the trader's prerogative:

> the act does not restrict the long recognized right of trader or manufacturer engaged in an entirely private business, freely to exercise his own independent discretion as to parties with whom he will deal.

United States v. Colgate & Co., 250 U.S. 300, 307, 63 L. Ed. 992, 39 S. Ct. 465 (1919).

The supplier's right to set [13] terms and choose customers under the Colgate doctrine is considered so important that antitrust plaintiffs are required to do more than merely allege conspiracy and unequal treatment in order to take a case to trial. In the Ninth Circuit:

> HN7[] Once the allegations of conspiracy made in the complaint are rebutted by probative evidence supporting an alternative interpretation of a defendant's conduct, if the plaintiff then fails to come forward with specific factual support of its allegations of conspiracy, summary judgment for the defendant becomes proper.

Barnes, 759 F.2d at 680 (quoting ALW, Inc. v. United Air Lines, Inc., 510 F.2d 52, 55 (9th Cir. 1975)).

The Supreme Court has defined HN8[] the type of specific factual support necessary to support a conspiracy finding under section 1:

> The correct standard is that there must be evidence that tends to exclude the possibility of independent action by the [alleged conspirators]. That is, there [14] must be direct or circumstantial evidence that reasonably tends to prove that the manufacturer and others had a conscious commitment to a common scheme designed to achieve an unlawful objective.

Monsanto v. Spray-Rite Serv. Corp., 465 U.S. 752, 768, 79 L. Ed. 2d 775, 104 S. Ct. 1464 (1984); see Barnes, 759 F.2d at 680. On this summary judgment appeal, applying the Monsanto standard, we must ultimately determine whether Harkins has presented specific factual support "such that a rational or reasonable jury might return a verdict in its favor based on that evidence." T.W. Elec. Serv., 809 F.2d at 631.

1. Active Participation in the Exhibitors' Market Split

Under the Colgate doctrine, the distributors possessed the absolute right to refuse to license films to Harkins as long as their decisions were based on independent business judgment. Wilder Enters., Inc. v. Allied Artists Pictures Corp., 632 F.2d 1135, 1140 (4th Cir. 1980); see Dahl, Inc. v. Roy Cooper Co., 448 F.2d 17, 19 (9th Cir. 1971). [15] HN9[] An exhibitor has a claim, however, > when distributors participate in the split and deny the exhibitor access to films. Such an arrangement creates an [*484] impermissible horizontal conspiracy among the exhibitors operating the split and a vertical conspiracy between them and the participating distributors. It is a type of group boycott that violates the antitrust laws. Klor's v. Broadway-Hale Stores, 359 U.S. 207, 79 S.Ct 705, 3 L. Ed. 2d 741 (1959). See Dahl, Inc. v. Roy Cooper Co., 448 F.2d 17, 19 (9th Cir. 1971).

Wilder, 632 F.2d at 1140 (emphasis added).

Harkins contends that it was excluded from fairly competing for films as a result of active participation by the distributors in the Phoenix split. Of course, if the only function of the split was to eliminate competitive bidding by the split members for the distributors' films, it makes no sense to say that the distributors participated in the split. If the split members, in addition to their agreeing not to bid against each other, also agreed to secure the cooperation of distributors in excluding Harkins from the first-run market, then such [16] a combination would constitute a Sherman Act violation. See United States v. Paramount Pictures, 334 U.S. 131, 155, 92 L. Ed. 1260, 68 S. Ct. 915 (1948); United States v. Crescent Amusement Co., 323 U.S. 173, 183 n.5, 89 L. Ed. 160, 65 S. Ct. 254 (1944).

Although Harkins has not presented direct evidence of a vertical combination between the distributors and exhibitors, "it has long been settled that HN10[] explicit agreement is not a necessary part of a Sherman Act conspiracy . . . ." United States v. General Motors Corp., 384 U.S. 127, 142-43, 16 L. Ed. 2d 415, 86 S. Ct. 1321 (1966). Moreover, "concerted action may be inferred from circumstantial evidence of the defendant's conduct and course of dealings." Dimidowich v. Bell & Howell, 803 F.2d 1473, 1479 (9th Cir. 1986).

Harkins presents four statistics as evidence of active distributor participation:

> 1) films were licensed to the split-designated exhibitor 85% of the time;
>
> 2) Harkins was awarded licenses to only 17 of the 435 film (4%) that were allocated [17] by the split, although it operated 22% of the theatres in the market; [2]
> 3) films were licensed to split members in ninety instances when Harkins had submitted the only written bid;
> 4) on eighty-nine occasions, the split member's winning bid was undated or dated after offers were formally due.

The distributors insist that their conduct was dictated by prudent business judgment. Licensing films according to the split could have been the natural and intended result of the exhibitors' collective refusal to bid against each other. The distributors would have been victimized by the decreased competition if Harkins' bids were so consistently bad as to leave them no rational economic choice other than to accept split members' [18] bids. On the other hand, if Harkins' bids were often lucrative in light of the anticompetitive nature of the Phoenix market, > their rejection by the distributors can be explained only as extraordinary exercises of bad judgment or as accommodation to a request by the [exhibitor] circuits for preferential treatment. Since consistently bad business judgment is not to be expected from able and experienced corporate decisionmakers, only the conspiratorial inference is plausible.

[2] Although Harkins states that it was awarded 3% of the films, the actual allocation was 3.9%. The 22% figure for theatre operations assumes, for summary judgment purposes, that all five of Harkins' theatres were within the relevant market. The distributors dispute this fact.

Southway Theatres, Inc. v. Georgia Theatre Co., 672 F.2d 485, 501 (5th Cir. 1982) (appendix -- district court analysis); see Milgram v. Loew's, Inc., 192 F.2d 579, 583 (3d Cir. 1951), cert. denied, 343 U.S. 929, 96 L. Ed. 1339, 72 S. Ct. 762 (1952).

Harkins attempts to raise a triable issue of fact regarding the quality of its bids by comparing the terms it offered with those of the licensed split member for forty top-grossing films. Written findings were not entered in this case and it is unclear whether the district court found Harkins' bids to be inferior as a matter of law. Our independent review of the data indicates that on a number [19] of occasions, Harkins offered [*485] higher or identical guarantees and/or better terms on weekly percentages, length of engagement, house expense, clearance, theatre seating, and holdover allowance. Split members were also often late in submitting bids.

The distributors defend by pointing to the low guarantees Harkins offered for the sixteen most successful films of 1976 and 1977. While recognizing the importance of this component in the licensing process, we cannot conclude that overall, Harkins' bids were so poor as to fail to raise a triable issue of fact whether the distributors' consistent pattern of awarding films to designated exhibitors in the midst of an admittedly anticompetitive market was justified. [3]

[20] The bid-quality data and overall statistical imbalance constitute only a portion of the "specific factual support" Harkins offers to meet its summary judgment burden under Barnes, 759 F.2d at 680. Other evidence in the record reasonably suggests active distributor participation in the market division scheme. For example, film buyer Pat Notaro, who as "split captain" coordinated the exhibitor meetings, acknowledged in his deposition that there was a "working understanding" that distributors dissatisfied with a particular split designee could seek a collective "course of action" in reallocating a film.

Although he did not allude to a specific agreement, Notaro testified that occasionally, "the distributor would call me and say I am not playing this theater. You are going to have to do something, go back and do something to satisfy me." In such cases, Notaro said "it was incumbent upon members of the split to make sure that that distributor was satisfied with a theater he would be happy to play in." General Cinema's Lawrence Lapidus testified that it was a common practice for distributors to request these "re-splits," although the evidence was in conflict regarding [21] their frequency.

In addition, American Multi-Cinema's Arnold Shartin stated that distributors would "call up and ask [whether] you had the split meeting. . . . If not when are you going to have it, if so where did my picture -- who got my picture." Shartin at one point characterized the distributors as inquiring "where is my picture going to play." Harkins also produced a document from distributor Universal's records stating, "PHOENIX - SPLIT SITUATIONS - WE BELONG TO PACIFIC," theatres operated by exhibitor Nace. Nace's John Lewis testified that Universal never refused to license a film he had picked on the split.

Viewed collectively, this circumstantial evidence "tends to exclude the possibility of independent action" by the distributors. Monsanto v. Spray-Rite, 465 U.S. at 768. Harkins has presented factual support of a conspiracy between exhibitors and individual distributors to split the Phoenix film market and unreasonably restrain competition. HN11[] In order to withstand summary judgment, an issue of material fact need not be conclusively resolved; "rather, all [22] that is required is that sufficient evidence supporting the claimed factual dispute be shown to require a jury or judge to resolve the parties' differing versions of the truth at trial." First Nat'l Bank v. Cities Serv. Co., 391 U.S. 253, 288-89, 20 L. Ed. 2d 569, 88 S. Ct. 1575 (1968); T.W. Elec. Serv., 809 F.2d at 630. Harkins has met its burden on this issue.

[3] In addition to the 85% correlation between split designees and the actual film licensees, Harkins has presented uncontroverted evidence that exhibitors would sometimes "trade" rights to assigned films. The distributors actually licensed films to split members 97% of the time. This figure includes six occasions in which both Harkins and an exhibitor defendant were licensed the same film.

We emphasize that our reversal on this claim is limited to the alleged horizontal combination by the exhibitors and the vertical agreement between split members and individual distributors. No evidence of a conspiracy between any distributors was presented, and Harkins may not pursue this theory on remand.

Harkins argues that this type of market splitting is illegal per se. This court has never ruled on the matter, but in *Exhibitors' [486] Serv., Inc. v. American Multi-Cinema, Inc., 788 F.2d 574, 578 n.5 (9th Cir. 1986), we pointed out that HN12[] "other courts have found similar split agreements to be horizontal restraints on competition that are per se illegal [23] under Section One." See United States v. Capitol Serv., Inc., 756 F.2d 502, 506 (7th Cir.), cert. denied, 474 U.S. 945, 106 S. Ct. 311, 88 L. Ed. 2d 288 (1985); General Cinema Corp. v. Buena Vista Distribution Co., 532 F. Supp. 1244, 1279 (C.D. Cal. 1982). Contra, Greenbrier Cinemas, Inc. v. Attorney General, 511 F. Supp. 1046, 1060 (W.D. Va. 1981). The view of splits as per se violations has usually referred, however, to its effects as a combination of buyers against a seller victim, which is not the situation here.

Courts have not regarded all concerted refusals to deal as illegal per se, but "rather have applied the rule of reason where the economic impact of the challenged practice is not obvious." Dimidowich v. Bell & Howell, 803 F.2d 1473, 1480 (9th Cir. 1986); see Charley's Taxi Radio Dispatch Corp. v. SIDA of Hawaii, Inc., 810 F.2d 869, 877 (9th Cir. 1987). Per se treatment is appropriate, however, "where joint efforts by firms disadvantage competitors by inducing suppliers or customers to deny relationships the competitors need in order to compete." Dimidowich, 803 F.2d at 1480. [24] See Northwest Wholesale Stationers v. Pacific Stationary & Printing Co., 472 U.S. 284, 294, 86 L. Ed. 2d 202, 105 S. Ct. 2613 (1985).

We conclude that the split agreement alleged here falls within the latter category, and if proven, is illegal per se. The district court should instruct the jury accordingly on remand.

2. Unreasonable Clearances

In United States v. Paramount Pictures, Inc., 334 U.S. 131, 159-60, 92 L. Ed. 1260, 68 S. Ct. 915 (1948), the Supreme Court held that HN13[] film licensing provisions that discriminate against small independent exhibitors in favor of large circuits "are included among the restraints of trade which the Sherman Act condemns." Harkins alleges that the distributors and exhibitors combined to stifle its competitive efforts through a system of unreasonable clearances granted in conjunction with the split. This argument lacks support and partial summary judgment was proper.

HN14[] Clearance is a contract term allowing an exhibitor [25] a degree of exclusivity within a particular market. "Clearances preclude distributors from licensing other theaters, either specifically named or encompassed in a named geographic area, from showing a movie while it is being exhibited by the theater whose bid is accepted." Theee Movies of Tarzana v. Pacific Theatres, Inc., 828 F.2d 1395, 1397 (9th Cir. 1987).

As vertical nonprice restraints, clearances are evaluated under the rule of reason. Id. at 1398; see Continental T.V., Inc. v. GTE Sylvania Inc., 433 U.S. 36, 58-59, 53 L. Ed. 2d 568, 97 S. Ct. 2549 (1977). Clearances that are "unduly extended as to area or duration," or granted over theatres "not in substantial competition," may be unreasonable under section 1. Paramount Pictures, 334 U.S. at 145-46; see Theee Movies, 828 F.2d at 1399; Twentieth Century Fox Film Corp. v. Goldwyn, 328 F.2d 190, 201 (9th Cir.), cert. denied, 379 U.S. 880, 13 L. Ed. 2d 87, 85 S. Ct. 143 (1964).

We agree with the distributors that an extended rule of reason analysis is unnecessary on this issue because Harkins has failed [26] to provide any factual predicate for its clearance claim. Most of Harkins' arguments before the district court were general and conclusory. For example, Paramount Pictures was alleged to have discriminated by granting American Multi-Cinema's Town & Country theatre clearance over Harkins' Camelview theatre, which is fifty blocks away, while refusing to clear the UA 6 theatre only thirty-five blocks away. Yet this claim was not substantiated with particular dates or film titles.

In a rare specific example, Harkins argues that it was unreasonable for the UA 5 theatre to have been granted clearance for "The Turning Point" over Harkins' Tower Plaza, while the Town & Country was not [*487] cleared. This would make sense in terms of geography, however, because the Tower Plaza lies closer to the UA 5 than does the Town & Country. Other allegations are simply wrong. Harkins cites Smiley's deposition to support its claim that the Town & Country is closer to Nace's University theatre than is the Tower Plaza, which Nace regularly cleared. Smiley's testimony states, and a Phoenix map confirms, that the Town & Countryin fact is farther away.

3. Discriminatory Moveovers HN15[]

[27] "A moveover is the privilege given a licensee to move a picture from one theatre to another as a continuation of the run at the licensee's first theatre." Paramount Pictures, 334 U.S. at 160 n.13. Moveovers also occur when an exhibitor is allowed to shift a picture to a different screen at a multiplex theatre. These allowances are not inherently anticompetitive, Admiral Theatre Corp. v. Douglas Theatre Co., 585 F.2d 877, 886 n.7 (8th Cir. 1978), but distributor discrimination against small, independent exhibitors in granting moveovers is prohibited by the Sherman Act. Paramount Pictures, 334 U.S. at 160.

Licensing contracts normally specify the theatre or screen where a film may be exhibited and prohibit moveovers without permission. Harkins claims that the distributors prevented it from moving first-run films while expressly granting split members the privilege or allowing them to violate their contracts with impunity. The distributors deny discriminating and downplay the charge, stating that "a shift of film within a structure is hardly big news."

A number of successful [28] films allegedly were moved by split members, including United Artists' "Network" and "Rocky"; Fox's "Silver Streak"; Paramount's "Looking for Mr. Goodbar"; Universal's "Jaws"; and Avco's "The Sailor Who Fell From Grace With the Sea." Yet even if these moveovers benefited the exhibitors, section 1 could not have been violated unless the distributors' permission or acquiescence was part of an agreement to deny Harkins the same privilege.

Harkins has totally failed to support this discrimination claim. Despite maintaining throughout the litigation that it was never allowed to move first-run films, Harkins could not specify a single instance in which the privilege was denied. Because "HN16[] the nonmoving party may not rely on the mere allegations in the pleadings in order to preclude summary judgment," T.W. Elec. Serv., 809 F.2d at 630, we affirm the district court.

4. Bid Rigging

Competitive bidding was normally used to license films in the Phoenix market during the relevant period. Under this process, invitations to bid -- sometimes suggesting acceptable terms -- were [29] issued to various exhibitors. If the licensing offers received were unsatisfactory, distributors "re-bid" the film on a large-scale basis or otherwise negotiated terms with a limited number of exhibitors.

HN17[] Concerted action to eliminate competitive bidding violates the Sherman Act. United States v. Champion Int'l Corp., 557 F.2d 1270, 1272-73 (9th Cir.), cert. denied, 434 U.S. 938, 54 L. Ed. 2d 298 (1977); United States v. Brighton Bldg. & Maintenance Co., 598 F.2d 1101, 1106 (7th Cir.), cert. denied, 444 U.S. 840, 62 L. Ed. 2d 52 (1979). Harkins alleges that the distributors communicated the terms of its bids to split members, enabling those exhibitors to make better offers, submit late bids, or circumvent the entire bidding process. While an individual distributor need not utilize competitive bidding, it may not employ a rigged system as a means of effectuating an agreement to allocate its films only to a concerted group, organized to exclude a competitor.

A large volume of statistical evidence was presented to the [30] district court in support of this bid-rigging claim, much of which we noted in our earlier discussion of the distributors' role in the market split. See supra at 484. This data includes bid comparisons for forty films, a list of [*488] eighty-nine films licensed to exhibitors whose bids were undated or submitted after the due date, and a list of ninety films awarded to split members in which Harkins submitted the only written bid.

Harkins' most dramatically worded allegations -- that split members' nonrefundable guarantees were "transformed" into refundable advances and that distributors "destroyed" favored exhibitors' bids in order to accept newer, better ones -- lack specific support in the record. Particular reference is made, however, to the circumstances surrounding the licensing of "Star Wars" and "Funny Lady."

Plitt Theatres was assigned "Star Wars" at an October 1976 split meeting. Harkins' bid of November 23, 1976, the only one submitted to Twentieth-Century Fox, was rejected on December 2. In a December 7 letter, Fox announced a re-bid, stating, "WE WILL ATTEMPT TO ENTER INTO NEGOTIATIONS WITH THE THEATRE OR THEATRES WE CONSIDER MOST LIKELY TO GIVE US SATISFACTORY [31] TERMS AND MAXIMUM FILM RENTAL." Harkins responded with a second bid on December 27. Unbeknownst to Harkins and contrary to Fox's letter, "Star Wars" had already been licensed to Plitt on December 1, six days before the announced re-bid.

In addition, each of the terms in Harkins' written bid for "Funny Lady," again the only bid submitted, was superior to the contract awarded by Columbia Pictures to split member General Cinema. Moreover, the contract was dated nearly three months after bids on the film were due.

The distributors fail to explain the peculiar sequence of events in these examples. They instead attempt to pass off the bid rigging claim as a "boiler plate" antitrust pleading and contend that the 1978 deposition statements made by Harkins and Smiley before the production of documents preclude a finding of antitrust liability. We disagree. The evidence presented, especially that regarding the "Star Wars" scenario, raises at least a reasonable inference that Harkins was victimized by tainted bidding procedures. The district court's summary judgment grant was therefore improper on this issue.

5. Circuit-Wide Deals

Harkins alleges that the distributors allowed [32] split members to abuse the buying power of their large circuits by licensing theatres nationally rather than on a film-by-film, theatre-by-theatre basis in a geographic market. Harkins also claims that national fee-settlement adjustments were granted. Circuit-wide deals, or "master agreements," were declared anticompetitive by the Court in Paramount Pictures:

> HN18[] Master agreements are unlawful restraints of trade . . . . They eliminate the possibility of bidding for films theatre by theatre. In that way they eliminate the opportunity for the small competitor to obtain the choice first runs, and put a premium on the size of the circuit. They are, therefore, devices for stifling competition and diverting the cream of the business to the large operators. . . . It is hardly necessary to add that distributors who join in such arrangements by exhibitors are active participants in effectuating a restraint of trade . . . .

334 U.S. at 154-55. Circuit-wide deals are evaluated under the rule of reason. See United States v. Griffith, 334 U.S. 100, 108, 92 L. Ed. 1236, 68 S. Ct. 941 (1948). [33]

The distributors' argument that the record does not contain even a scintilla of evidence of circuit-wide deals is mistaken. Harkins has presented abundant factual support of this claim and partial summary judgment was improper. For example, at least four witnesses testified that United Artists was involved in national licensing of the film "A Bridge Too Far." Nace's Lewis stated that this circuit-wide deal, which encompassed the Phoenix market, was "common knowledge" within the industry.

There was also testimony from a variety of witnesses that Columbia Pictures and Avco Embassy entered into a distribution agreement with ITC, an English film producer, whereby General Cinema was granted [*489] nationwide "preemptive rights" to license certain films. These films, cofinanced by General Cinema, included "The Eagle Has Landed," "March or Die," "The Cassandra Crossing," "Capricorn I," "Voyage of the Damned," and "The Domino Principle." Finally, documents were produced indicating that Columbia had granted circuit-wide fee adjustments to General Cinema on "Funny Lady," "Shampoo," and "Tommy."

The distributors also contend that Judge Singleton's remand of the eight consolidated cases [34] in MDL 366 following nationwide discovery proves that Harkins' claim lacks merit. It actually suggests the opposite. Although Judge Singleton refused to consolidate the cases for trial, he recommended that the district courts allow the plaintiffs "to amend their complaints to add an issue of national character."

6. Illusory Advances and/or Guarantees

It is standard practice in the motion picture industry for distributors to require exhibitors to pay an advance or guarantee. Advances are refundable payments applied toward a film's rental fee. Guarantees are nonrefundable minimum payments. Licensing agreements normally require that these payments be made in cash prior to the film's release.

Harkins claims that while the distributors always strictly enforced the advance and guarantee provisions of its licensing contracts, larger exhibitors were unlawfully granted preferential treatment. This alleged discrimination consisted of granting credit allowances in some cases and not requiring the payments be made at all in others. Harkins posits that contracting for a large but illusory guarantee could allow manipulation of the competitive bidding process in light of the importance [35] of this ingredient in a licensing offer.

Two incidents are cited involving distributor Universal City Studios and split member General Cinema, the nation's largest exhibitor. First, Harkins claims that its review of Universal's records show that General Cinema did not pay any part of a $71,500 guarantee required in its licensing agreement for the film "Front Page." Second, an $80,000 guarantee for "Midway" was paid to Universal in installments, the last made seven weeks after the film's release.

The distributors contend that at most, the record suggests only that credit was extended in a few isolated situations to a deserving exhibitor. We agree that this evidence is hardly probative of a scheme to undermine competitive bidding. Even if it were, the district court's partial summary judgment grant still would have been proper, because Harkins has not shown any evidence of discrimination. Although he was always required to pay guarantees in cash prior to a film's engagement and characterized credit allowances as "very . . . abnormal," Daniel Harkins admitted never asking for the privilege.

7. Blind Bidding

Under a blind bidding system, distributors require exhibitors to [36] submit bids for films without first having an opportunity to view them. Harkins contends that this practice -- illegal by statute in many states -- is inherently anticompetitive because it tampers with price structures and unreasonably shifts the risk of loss to exhibitors. Harkins also claims that the distributors granted split members preferential treatment by providing them with advance screenings of films that were later ostensibly blind bid.

The Supreme Court noted in Paramount Pictures that while blind bidding did not restrict competition to the same extent as some practices, it was nevertheless "capable of some abuse." 334 U.S. at 157 n.11. We read this passage to mean that HN19[] blind bidding is not illegal per se. Harkins has not presented any evidence that blind bidding adversely affected competition in the Phoenix market so as to violate the rule of reason.

The distributors concede that discriminating by allowing favored exhibitors to "sneak a peek" while excluding others would be actionable under section 1, but insist that this did not occur. Harkins attempts [37] [*490] to support its allegation with deposition testimony by Daniel Harkins and General Cinema's Barry Reardon regarding what they had been told about the films "Star Wars," "The Exorcist," "The Eagle Has Landed," and "Lucky Lady." Yet these statements constituted "hearsay evidence [which] is inadmissible and may not be considered by this court on review of a summary judgment." Blair Foods, Inc. v. Ranchers Cotton Oil, 610 F.2d 665, 667 (9th Cir. 1980).

Because Harkins otherwise has failed to raise a triable issue regarding blind bidding, the district court's grant of partial summary judgment is affirmed.

8. Shared Monopoly

Section 2 of the Sherman Act HN20[] prohibits monopolization, attempted monopolization, and conspiracy to monopolize. 15 U.S.C. § 2 (1982). In its amended complaint, Harkins alleges that by engaging in bid rigging, circuit-wide deals, illusory advances and/or guarantees, and blind bidding, the distributors "have entered upon a systematic plan to form a shared monopoly, attempt to form a shared monopoly and conspire [38] to form a shared monopoly" in the Phoenix film market.

Section 2 applies to "every person who shall monopolize." Id. Because oligopoly markets -- those with few sellers -- often exhibit the lack of competition, high prices, and low output of monopoly markets, commentators have suggested that section 2 could be invoked to attack a shared monopoly even though no individual firm possessed the power to control prices or exclude competition. See P. Areeda & D. Turner, Antitrust Law paras. 840-845 (1978); L. Sullivan, Handbook of the Law of Antitrust § 124 (1977).

Harkins' theory is a novel one; Professors Areeda and Turner admit that "no case has held the § 2 monopolization provision applicable to shared monopoly." P. Areeda & D. Turner, Antitrust Law, at para. 842. One court directly addressing the issue stated bluntly, "an oligopoly, or a shared monopoly, does not in itself violate § 2 of the Sherman Act." Consolidated Terminal Systems, Inc. v. ITT World Communications, Inc., 535 F. Supp. 225, 228-29 (S.D.N.Y. 1982).

We need not decide whether the shared monopoly theory may be viable under some circumstances. Suffice it to say that in this [39] case, involving a small market with numerous sellers, no claim is stated under section 2. Not only is there no case support for Harkins' position, but the suggestions in the learned treatises do not extend the theory this far. Partial summary judgment on the section 2 claims against the distributors is affirmed.

C. RULE 56(f) MOTION

As an alternative to its opposition to the distributors' partial summary judgment request, Harkins asked Judge Craig to continue the matter. Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(f) HN21[] provides that a court may order the continuance of a party's summary judgment motion to allow the nonmoving party to obtain affidavits, take depositions, or conduct other discovery. Harkins sought to bolster its case by gathering additional documents and deposing the distributors' local representatives.

Because the continuance was framed in the alternative, appeal of its denial is moot as to the three claims we remand for trial. The issue is therefore limited to the propriety of Judge Craig's decision with respect to Harkins' other allegations. Harkins insists that it was an abuse of discretion [40] to deny the motion in light of the complexity of the suit and the distributors' alleged recalcitrance in producing documents. A review of the circumstances surrounding this litigation does not leave us with a definite and firm conviction that the district court committed a clear error of judgment, Fjelstad v. American Honda Motor Co., 762 F.2d 1334, 1337 (9th Cir. 1985), and we affirm.

The district court denied the Rule 56(f) motion because the case was more than eight years old and "fundamentally, counsel on both sides have had plenty of opportunity to complete discovery long before now." Following eighteen months in the Arizona district court and four years in [*491] Texas as part of the multi-district litigation, the case was formally remanded to Judge Craig in December 1983. Although Harkins served document requests four months later, it did not file a motion to compel production until November 1985 -- seven weeks after the distributors moved for partial summary judgment.

Harkins maintains it was merely attempting to comply with a local rule requiring that sincere efforts to agree on discovery be made before seeking a court order. Yet the record discloses [41] an inordinate amount of unproductive correspondence related to discovery during this nineteen-month interim. Harkins' counsel threatened to file a motion to compel as early as February 1985, and the distributors' "final position" regarding certain document requests was outlined in a June 1985 letter. On this record, we cannot hold that the trial court abused its discretion by denying the continuance.

D. SUMMARY JUDGMENT TO THE EXHIBITOR DEFENDANTS

Harkins sued the split member exhibitors under the same theories of conspiracy to restrain trade and shared monopoly as it did the distributors. Following Judge Craig's death, the case was transferred to Judge Hardy, who formally entered judgment in favor of the distributors and considered motions by the exhibitors for summary judgment. Judge Hardy granted the motions in January 1987.

The exhibitors contend that the HN22[] "law of the case" rule required the district court to enter summary judgment for them as well on Harkins' six claims requiring assistance from the distributors: unreasonable clearances, discriminatory moveovers, bid rigging, [42] circuit-wide deals, illusory advances and/or guarantees, and blind bidding. This rule ordinarily precludes a court from reexamining an issue previously decided by it or a higher appellate court in the same case. Moore v. Jas. H. Matthews & Co., 682 F.2d 830, 833 (9th Cir. 1982).

The exhibitors' argument was justified in the district court. The decision regarding the distributors' conduct was appealed, however, and to the extent that we reversed the original judgment the law of the case was altered. Because our earlier review of the record discloses genuine issues of material fact regarding bid rigging and circuit-wide deals, we reverse and remand those claims against the exhibitors for trial.

Triable issues also exist as to distributor participation in the market split. Harkins is therefore a proper party to sue the exhibitors on this claim, and we reverse this portion of the judgment. Cf. Dahl, Inc. v. Roy Cooper Co., 448 F.2d 17, 20 (9th Cir. 1971); Wilder Enters., Inc. v. Allied Artists Pictures Corp., 632 F.2d 1135, 1140 (4th Cir. 1980); see Exhibitors' Serv., Inc. v. American Multi-Cinema, Inc., 788 F.2d 574, 578-79 & n.4 (9th Cir. 1986). [43]

Harkins contends that a stipulation approved by the district court effectively precluded the exhibitors from challenging any of Harkins' allegations. It provided that the sufficiency of Harkins' evidence would "not be made an issue in these summary judgment proceedings (except insofar as may have previously been determined in connection with the Distributor Defendants' summary judgment motions)." That exception applied, and in accordance with our earlier discussion we affirm the grant of summary judgment to the exhibitors on Harkins' claims of unreasonable clearances, discriminatory moveovers, illusory advances and/or guarantees, and blind bidding. Finally, summary judgment for the exhibitors on the shared monopoly claim under section 2 is also affirmed.

IV. CONCLUSION

The record indicates that Harkins has presented specific facts to support its antitrust allegations of market splitting, bid rigging, and circuit-wide deals against the film distributors and exhibitors. We therefore reverse the district court's grant of summary judgment and remand these claims for trial. [4] We affirm the partial [*492] summary judgments on Harkins' claims of unreasonable clearances, discriminatory [44] moveovers, illusory advances and/or guarantees, blind bidding, and shared monopoly, and hold that it was not an abuse of discretion to deny a continuance under Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(f).

AFFIRMED IN PART, REVERSED IN PART, AND REMANDED.

End of Document

[4] The distributors brought their partial summary judgment motion jointly, and have not attempted to argue that some are entitled to judgment on certain claims while others are not. At this stage of the proceeding, therefore, we have not attempted to make such a delineation. Since Harkins has raised a triable issue of a conspiracy among the exhibitors, our decision applies to all of the exhibitors.

Tominaga v. Shepherd

United States District Court for the Central District of California

April 6, 1988, Decided ; April 6, 1988, Filed

No. CV 87-0172-ER

Reporter

682 F. Supp. 1489 *; 1988 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 2905 ; 1988-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P67,985

Milton Tominaga, Plaintiff, v. Vance Shepherd, et al., Defendants

Disposition: [1] GRANTED.

Core Terms

Pizza, franchisees, franchise, market power, distributor, products, summary judgment, crust, tying product, secret, food, competitors, packaging, trademark, supplies, relevant market, motive, plaintiff's claim, tied product, per se rule, ingredients, terminated, marked, recipe, concerted refusal, tying arrangement, service mark, fast food, concert, formula

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > Movant Persuasion & Proof

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > Nonmovant Persuasion & Proof

HN1[] Burdens of Proof, Movant Persuasion & Proof

The moving party is entitled to summary judgment when the non-moving party bears the burden of proof at trial as to an element essential to its case, and the party fails to make a showing sufficient to establish a genuine dispute with respect to the existence of that element. In order to show that there are genuine factual issues that can properly be resolved only by a finder of fact, the non-moving party must show that the disputed facts may reasonably be resolved in favor of either party. If the factual context makes the non-moving party's claim implausible, that party must come forward with more persuasive evidence than would otherwise be necessary to show that there is a genuine issue for trial.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > Per Se Rule

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

HN2[] Tying Arrangements, Per Se Rule

A tying arrangement occurs where a seller refuses to sell one product (the tying product) unless the buyer also purchases another product (the tied product). A tying arrangement is illegal per se where the controlling prerequisites are met. In order to prevail under a per se theory, plaintiff must establish the following three elements; (1) a tie-in between two distinct products or services; (2) sufficient economic power in the tying product market to impose significant restrictions in the tied product market; and (3) an effect on a non-insubstantial volume of commerce in the tied product market.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

HN3[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Tying Arrangements

Tying arrangements receive per se condemnation only when the seller has some special ability--usually called market power--to force a purchaser to do something that he would not do in a competitive market. Since the primary purpose of the rule is to prevent the extension of market power from the tying product to the tied product, market power is deemed an essential element because such an extension of power is impossible unless the seller has substantial market power in the tying product.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Patent Law > Ownership > Federal Government Inventions

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

HN4[] Regulated Practices, Market Definition

Courts have identified three sources of market power: (1) when the government has granted the seller a patent or similar monopoly over a product, (2) when the seller's share of the market is high, and (3) when the seller offers a unique product that competitors are not able to offer.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Trademark Law > Conveyances > Franchises

Business & Corporate Law > Distributorships & Franchises > Trademark Licensing

Trademark Law > ... > Licenses > Licensable Subject Matter > Tying Arrangements

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

HN5[] Conveyances, Franchises

A distinctive trademark is unique in the sense that it constitutes an identifiable property right, but it should not be confused in the franchising context with the existence of market power. A trademark is not itself persuasive evidence of economic power. Market power is not derived from a name or symbol, but from the product itself.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Distributorships & Franchises > Termination > Antitrust Issues

Business & Corporate Law > Distributorships & Franchises > Causes of Action > Restraints of Trade

Trademark Law > ... > Licenses > Licensable Subject Matter > Tying Arrangements

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

Business & Corporate Law > Distributorships & Franchises > General Overview

Business & Corporate Law > Distributorships & Franchises > Termination > General Overview

HN6[] Distributorships & Franchises, Antitrust Issues

Postcontract a franchisor can use the threat of termination to hold up a franchisee that has made a specific investment in the marketing arrangement. However, this potential economic power has nothing to do with market power, ultimate consumers' welfare, or antitrust. The hold up of franchisees is a contract problem, but not an antitrust problem. As the axiom provides, the antitrust laws were designed to protect competition, not competitors; injury to the plaintiff alone (or to the franchisees) is not sufficient to prove injury to competition.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Practices Governed by Per Se Rule > Boycotts

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Horizontal Refusals to Deal > General Overview

HN7[] Practices Governed by Per Se Rule, Boycotts

The Supreme Court applies a per se rule to group boycotts or concerted refusals to deal. The Ninth Circuit limits application of the per se rule against group boycotts or concerted refusals to deal to concerted activity between two or more horizontal competitors. Some horizontal concert of action must be taken against the victims of the restraint in order for the per se rule to apply. The per se rule is never applied automatically when the concerted refusal to deal is vertical, rather than horizontal.

Torts > ... > Concerted Action > Civil Conspiracy > General Overview

HN8[] Concerted Action, Civil Conspiracy

A defendant may rebut an allegation of conspiracy by showing a plausible and justifiable reason for its conduct that is consistent with proper business practice. Once a defendant has met this initial burden, a plaintiff must provide specific factual support for its allegations of conspiracy tending to show that the defendant was not acting independently.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Horizontal Refusals to Deal > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

HN9[] Sherman Act, Claims

An individual refusal to deal is analyzed under the rule of reason. To establish a violation of section one of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, under the rule of reason, plaintiff must show an agreement which is intended to harm or unreasonably restrain competition and actually does so. Plaintiff must show injury to a market or to competition in general, not merely injury to individual competitors.

Torts > Business Torts > Unfair Business Practices > General Overview

Trade Secrets Law > Trade Secret Determination Factors > Competitive Advantage

Trade Secrets Law > Federal Versus State Law > Patent Law

HN10[] Business Torts, Unfair Business Practices

There are some business formulae, compiled information, and devices or processes which, though neither copyrighted nor patented, or not even novel, are kept as trade secrets of the user. Any secret information used in the conduct of the plaintiff's business which is of some competitive advantage to him, and which is not disclosed to the public, might be included. Equity provides a remedy where the information is kept secret and it is improperly obtained by the defendant.

Torts > ... > Prospective Advantage > Intentional Interference > Defenses

Torts > Business Torts > General Overview

Torts > ... > Commercial Interference > Prospective Advantage > General Overview

Torts > ... > Prospective Advantage > Intentional Interference > Elements

HN11[] Intentional Interference, Defenses

The tort of interference with prospective advantage consists of intentional and improper methods of diverting or taking business from another which are not within the privilege of fair competition. Under California law, one competitor is justified in inducing customers of another to do business with him. The competition justification requires that (1) the economic relation concerns a matter involved in the competition between the actor and competitor, (2) that no improper means are employed, (3) no illegal restraint of competition is attempted or intended, and (4) at least in part the purpose is to advance competition with the other party. The cases turn almost entirely upon the defendant's motive or purpose, and the means by which he has sought to accomplish it.

Evidence > Relevance > Preservation of Relevant Evidence > Exclusion & Preservation by Prosecutors

Torts > ... > Commercial Interference > Prospective Advantage > General Overview

Trademark Law > Special Marks > Service Marks > General Overview

HN12[] Preservation of Relevant Evidence, Exclusion & Preservation by Prosecutors

Once defendant produces evidence that its action of diverting or taking business from another was based on a legitimate business motivation, plaintiff must present some evidence tending to exclude the defendant's innocent explanation.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Contracts Law > Types of Contracts > Adhesion Contracts

Governments > Fiduciaries

Business & Corporate Law > Distributorships & Franchises > Causes of Action > General Overview

Business & Corporate Law > Distributorships & Franchises > Franchise Relationships > General Overview

Contracts Law > Contract Interpretation > Fiduciary Responsibilities

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Contracts Law > Types of Contracts > Covenants

Energy & Utilities Law > Oil, Gas & Mineral Interests > Implied Covenants > General Overview

Torts > Business Torts > General Overview

Torts > Business Torts > Bad Faith Breach of Contract > Elements

HN13[] Types of Contracts, Adhesion Contracts

A tort claim for breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing requires proof of a special relationship between the parties, characterized by elements of public interest, adhesion and fiduciary responsibility. Factors which must be present for a special relationship to exist are: (1) the parties are in inherently unequal bargaining positions, (2) the plaintiff's motivation for entering into the contract must be a non-profit motivation (to secure peace of mind, security and future protection), (3) plaintiff is especially vulnerable because of the type of harm it may suffer and of necessity places trust in the defendant to perform, and (4) defendant is aware of plaintiff's vulnerability. The supplier-distributor relationship cannot be described as having a non-profit motive. Similarly, the relationship between a franchisor and a distributor cannot be described as having a non-profit motive.

Counsel: Paul Sigelman, Esq., Beverly Hills, California, Attorney for Plaintiff.

Thomas Nevins, Esq., of Broad, Schulz, Larsen & Weinberg, Los Angeles, California, Attorney for Defendant.

Judges: Edward Rafeedie, United States District Judge.

Opinion by: RAFEEDIE

Opinion

[*1491] ORDER GRANTING IN PART AND DENYING IN PART DEFENDANTS' MOTION FOR SUMMARY JUDGMENT

EDWARD RAFEEDIE, United States District Judge

The captioned case came on for hearing before this Court, the Honorable Edward Rafeedie, United States District Judge, presiding, on March 21, 1988, on the motion of defendants El Centro Foods, Inc. and Vance Shepherd, for summary judgment. Plaintiff Milton Tominaga, doing business as PM Distributors, was represented by Paul Sigelman. Defendants were represented by John E. Rumel of Broad, Schulz, Larson & Wineberg.

The Court, having read and considered the papers in support of and in opposition to the motion, finds that summary judgment is appropriate for all plaintiff's claims except the claim for interference with economic advantage or contractual relations.

Defendants El Centro and Vance Shepherd move this court to grant summary judgment on plaintiff's Complaint. The Complaint alleges violations of section 1 of the Sherman Act, and section 3 of the Clayton Act (tying arrangement, group [2] boycott, refusal to deal), as well as the following state law claims: unfair competition, interference with contract or prospective advantage, and violation of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing.

FACTUAL BACKGROUND

Defendant El Centro is a California corporation and is the franchisor of "Pizza Man--He Delivers" and "Chicken Delight" franchises in Los Angeles and Orange Counties. There are currently forty-five Pizza Man, six combination Pizza Man and Chicken Delight, and one Chicken Delight franchisees in the Southern California area. Defendant Vance Shepherd is the president of El Centro. El Centro has registered its Pizza Man and Chicken Delight service marks with the United States Patent and Trademark office.

Plaintiff Milton Tominaga does business as P. M. Distributors in the Los Angeles area, and is a wholesale distributor of ingredients for prepared foods and restaurant supplies. He is an authorized distributor of food and packaging products to El Centro's franchisees. Tominaga owned a franchised store from 1975 until 1985. From 1982 to the present, he supplied various Pizza Man franchises with ingredients and supplies. In 1985, Tominaga sold his Pizza Man store, [3] according to his affidavit, because defendant Shepherd told him he would become the exclusive distributor for Pizza Man ingredients and supplies.

El Centro franchisees entered into a franchise agreement with El Centro in order to obtain licenses to operate Pizza Man stores (all facts pertaining to Pizza Man should be assumed to apply to Chicken Delight unless otherwise noted) and to utilize the service mark. Under the franchise agreement, a franchisee is not limited to purchasing its food products and supplies from any one distributor:

> a franchisee may purchase any and all authorized food products and packaging from suppliers of his choice, provided that such food and packaging are uniform and high quality and comply with the standards and specifications set forth in the Operations Manual.

Also, under the standard form franchise agreements, each El Centro franchisee is obligated to package all goods sold to the public in approved Pizza Man packaging unless such packaging is unavailable, in which case written permission must be obtained from El Centro. Each franchisee is further required to prepare its menu and use ingredients in accordance with the methods and specifications set [4] forth in the Pizza Man Operations Manual.

Tominaga was an authorized distributor of packaging materials and refrigerated food products, however, Tominaga was never the exclusive Pizza Man distributor (although Tominaga states that he was promised an exclusive dealership). There are substantial factual disputes as to Tominaga's [*1492] performance as a distributor, and the circumstances surrounding El Centro's entry into the market for the distributing packaging products to franchisees.

El Centro claims that Tominaga's conduct as a distributor of poor quality merchandise damaged its goodwill, as embodied in the service marks. Defendants have provided evidence that Tominaga provided substandard food and packaging products which did not meet El Centro's quality standards, and that he overcharged the franchisees. El Centro claims to have provided Tominaga with notice of its dissatisfaction on numerous occasions.

Tominaga disputes El Centro's charges, and claims that Vance Shepherd was angry with Tominaga when Tominaga refused to provide El Centro with a "kick back" from the manufacturers. When Shepherd offered to buy Tominaga out, Tominaga refused, and was allegedly threatened by Shepherd ("I'll [5] break your back").

El Centro, on the other hand, argues that all its actions were based upon a perceived business need to standardize its distribution system and the quality of products delivered to the franchisees. This was the basis for El Centro's decision to enter into the distribution business, and its offer to buy out Tominaga.

In November of 1986, El Centro notified some of Tominaga's suppliers, as well as Tominaga, that El Centro would be the exclusive distributor of non-refrigerated and monogrammed goods bearing its service marks to Pizza Man franchisees. All franchisees were notified of this change, but were also told that Tominaga would continue to serve the franchisees with all refrigerated items and miscellaneous supplies. El Centro claims that the refrigerated items were the most expensive and most profitable items, while Tominaga complains that they are the least profitable items.

In April 1987, El Centro reinstated Tominaga's authorization to distribute goods bearing its service mark to its franchisees and notified the suppliers that Tominaga had been reinstated. Thus, since April, Tominaga and El Centro have competed for the franchisees' business.

DISCUSSION

I. STANDARD [6] FOR SUMMARY JUDGMENT

HN1[] The moving party is entitled to summary judgment when the non-moving party bears the burden of proof at trial as to an element essential to its case, and the party fails to make a showing sufficient to establish a genuine dispute with respect to the existence of that element. Celotex Corp. v. Catrett, 477 U.S. 317, 106 S. Ct. 2548, 2552-53, 91 L. Ed. 2d 265 (1986). In order to show that there are genuine factual issues that can properly be resolved only by a finder of fact, the non-moving party must show that the disputed facts may reasonably be resolved in favor of either party. Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc., 477 U.S. 242, 106 S. Ct. 2505, 2511, 91 L. Ed. 2d 202 (1986). If the factual context makes the non-moving party's claim implausible, that party must come forward with more persuasive evidence than would otherwise be necessary to show that there is a genuine issue for trial. Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 106 S. Ct. 1348, 1356, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538 (1986); California Architectural Bldg. Prod. v. Franciscan Ceramics, Inc., 818 F.2d 1466, 1468 (9th Cir. 1987).

II. Antitrust Claims

A. Illegal Tying Arrangement Claim

HN2[] A "tying arrangement" occurs where a seller refuses to sell one product (the tying product) [7] unless the buyer also purchases another product (the tied product). In Jefferson Parish Hospital District No. 2 v. Hyde, 466 U.S. 2, 104 S. Ct. 1551, 80 L. Ed. 2d 2 (1984), the Court reaffirmed the per se rule against tying. [1] [*1493] Thus, a tying arrangement is illegal per se where the controlling prerequisites are met. Digidyne Corp. v. Data General Corp., 734 F.2d 1336 (9th Cir. 1984), cert denied, 473 U.S. 908, 87 L. Ed. 2d 657, 105 S. Ct. 3534 (1985). In order to prevail under a per se theory, plaintiff must establish the following three elements; "(1) a tie-in between two distinct products or services; (2) sufficient economic power in the tying product market to impose significant restrictions in the tied product market; and (3) an effect on a non-insubstantial volume of commerce in the tied product market." Robert's Waikiki U-Drive, Inc. v. Budget Rent-A-Car Sys., 732 F.2d 1403, 1407 (9th Cir. 1984). Plaintiff has failed to present competent evidence that El Centro had market power in the tying market.

[8] It has been observed that the "per se" rule under which tying arrangements are analyzed is "unusual because of the essential role of economic analysis" in applying the standard. Klein & Saft, The Law and Economics of Franchise Tying Contracts, 28 J. Law & Econ. 345, 345 (1985) (cited with approval in Mozart Co. v. Mercedes-Benz of North America, 833 F.2d 1342, 1346 (9th Cir. 1987)); Hyde, 466 U.S. at 34, 104 S. Ct. at 1570 (O'Conner concurring). [2] As recognized by the court in Mozart, the majority in Hyde, "rather than abandoning the per se rule against tying, chose to limit antitrust liability for tie-ins by insisting on a showing of actual market power in the tying product." Mozart, 833 F.2d at 1345 (emphasis added) (citing, Hyde, 466 U.S. at 13-17, 104 S. Ct. at 1558-1561).

---

[1] The per se rule was affirmed by a bare majority, and in the face of serious criticism by antitrust scholars. R. Bork, The Antitrust Paradox, 372-75 (1978); Hirsh v. Martindale-Hubbell, Inc., 674 F.2d 1343, 1349 n. 19 (9th Cir.), cert. denied, 459 U.S. 973, 74 L. Ed. 2d 285, 103 S. Ct. 305 (1982); Mozart Co. v. Mercedes-Benz of North America, 833 F.2d 1342, 1345 n. 2, n. 3 (9th Cir. 1987).

[2] Although the Court has stated, in dicta, that tying arrangements serve "hardly any purpose beyond the suppression of competition," Standard Oil Co. of California v. United States, 337 U.S. 293, 305-306, 69 S. Ct. 1051, 1058, 93 L. Ed. 1371 (1949), "this declaration was not taken literally even by the cases that purport to rely upon it." Hyde, 466 U.S. at 34, 104 S. Ct. at 1563 (O'Conner concurring). "The Court has never been willing to say of tying arrangements, as it has of price fixing, division of markets, and other arrangements subject to per se analysis, that they are always illegal, without proof of market power or anticompetitive effect." Id.

[9] Tying arrangements, therefore, receive per se condemnation only when "the seller has some special ability-usually called 'market power'--to force a purchaser to do something that he would not do in a competitive market." Hyde, 466 U.S. at 13-14, 104 S. Ct. at 1558-1559. Since the primary purpose of the rule is to prevent the extension of market power from the tying product to the tied product, [3] market power is deemed an essential element because such an "extension of power is impossible unless the seller has substantial market power in the tying product." Mozart, 833 F.2d at 1345.

[10] Courts have identified three sources of market power; (1) when the government has granted the seller "a patent or similar monopoly over a product," (2) when the seller's share of the market is high, and (3) when the seller offers a "unique" product that competitors are not able to offer. Mozart, 833 F.2d at 1345-1346. Prior to Mozart, antitrust plaintiff's would argue that market power could be presumed by virtue of the uniqueness of the trademark.

HN5[] A distinctive trademark is "unique" in the sense that it constitutes an identifiable property right, but it should not be confused in the franchising context with [*1494] the existence of market power. Klien & Saft, supra, at 355. In Mozart, the court held that a trademark is "not itself persuasive evidence of economic power." Mozart, 833 F.2d at 1346. As the court in Mozart recognized, market power is not derived from a name or symbol, but from the product itself. Id. (citing, Klien & Saft, supra, at 356).

In Siegel v. Chicken Delight, 448 F.2d 43 (9th Cir. 1971), cert. denied, 405 U.S. 955, 31 L. Ed. 2d 232, 92 S. Ct. 1172 (1972), the court reasoned that Chicken Delight had sufficient market power because "it can hardly be denied [11] that the Chicken Delight trademark is distinctive; that it possesses goodwill and public acceptance unique to it and not enjoyed by other fast food chains." Id. at 50. This analysis, however, has been subjected to a crippling attack by Klien & Saft;

> It makes no economic sense to attribute significant market power to the Chicken Delight trademark. The important economic distinction that must be made is between pre- and postcontract economic power. Precontract, competition among franchisors (such as McDonald's or Kentucky Fried Chicken) to sign up franchisees prevents Chicken Delight from exercising any economic power in setting contract terms with potential franchisees. Chicken Delight, although it possesses a trademark, does not possess any economic power in the relevant market in which it operates--the fast food franchising (or perhaps, more generally, the franchising) market.

Klien & Saft, supra, at 356; Mozart, 833 F.2d at 1346 ("Market power, if any, is derived from the product, not from the name or symbol as such").

HN3[]

[3] There are three policy rationales for the per se rule against tying arrangements. The "primary purpose" is to prevent an extension of market power to a new product market. The so-called "leverage theory" has been criticized because "modern economic thought seems to indicate that all available monopoly profits could be obtained from the tying product alone without the use of a tie-in." Mozart, 833 F.2d at 1345 n. 3 (citing, Bork, supra, at 373); Hyde, 466 U.S. at 36, 104 S. Ct. at 1570-1571 (O'Conner, concurring). Tying arrangements have also been viewed as a method for facilitating price discrimination. Id. Such price discrimination occurs where the seller "meters" the buyers use of the tying product. Hyde, 466 U.S. at 36 n. 4, 104 S. Ct. at 1571 n. 4 (O'Conner, concurring). In this case plaintiff has made no such allegations. Furthermore, the proper party to bring suit under this theory, would be the franchisees not the distributors. Finally, in a regulated industry, a firm with market power may be unable to extract a supercompetitive profit because it lacks control over the prices it charges for regulated products or services. Tying may be used to extract that profit from the sale of unregulated tied products. Fortner Enterprises, Inc. v. United States Steel Corp., 394 U.S. 495, 513, 89 S. Ct. 1252, 1263-1264, 22 L. Ed. 2d 495 (1969) (White, dissenting).

HN4[]

In this case, plaintiff argues that it need not rely upon a "presumption" of market power, because El Centro's activity is evidence of market power. [12] Nevertheless, the above referenced analysis is useful in determining the merits of plaintiff's argument. Plaintiff charges that (1) El Centro demonstrated its market power by increasing prices of the service marked supplies, and foreclosing plaintiff from distributing such supplies; and (2) by "locking in" franchisees to the tying product by virtue of their investment in the franchise.

Plaintiff's argument, however, fails to define the relevant market. In Mozart, the court emphasized the necessity of defining the relevant market.

> The critical issue is whether MBNE [the Mercedes franchisor] possesses the "market power" to force dealers to purchase the tied product rather than acquire the franchise to sell a different automobile.

Mozart, 833 F.2d at 1346. Thus, as recognized in Mozart, the relevant market would include other franchises for similar products. Possible relevant markets include take out pizza franchises, fast food franchises or restaurant franchises in general. Klien & Saft, supra, at 356 (the relevant market in Chicken Delight was the fast food franchising market, or perhaps more generally, the franchising market).

Plaintiff's implicit argument is [13] that the relevant market is the "Pizza Man franchising" market. This market definition is erroneous as a matter of law. No reasonable argument can be made that Pizza Man possesses the power to coerce potential franchisees to purchase the tied product rather than sell a different brand of fast food (the tying product). The analysis must take place at the "pre-contact" stage. Klien & Saft, supra, at 356. Plaintiff, however, engages in "post-contract" analysis concerning defendant's power over already existing franchisees by virtue of their "sunk costs." This argument was explicitly rejected in Mozart.

> Obviously there are costs in surrendering one franchise and acquiring another, but these costs are unrelated to the "market power" of a unique automobile. These costs will enable the car maker to extract concessions from the dealer, but this power is related to the franchise method of doing business, not to the possible uniqueness of the car.

Mozart, 833 F.2d at 1346-47. The court concluded that the district court's jury instruction was "improperly focused" on the particular franchise [Mercedes dealerships], and failed to recognize that the [*1495] "market" at issue "is the market [14] for dealership franchises." Id. [4]

Therefore, plaintiff's argument that the evidence submitted shows there is a material issue of fact as to defendant's market power is based on an improper market definition. El Centro's ability to "coerce" its franchisees to purchase a product it may not wish to purchase (postcontract), and its claimed ability to raise prices because of the franchisees sunk investment, does not show market power in the fast [15] food franchising market. The "power" exercised is merely the power of a franchisor over its franchisees. Nothing in the record shows that El Centro had the power (precontract) to "force" potential franchisees to purchase the tied goods. Such power could only be exercised by El Centro if the relevant market for the tying product were Pizza Man franchises. No such showing has been made, nor could such a showing be made.

Plaintiff relies upon Digidyne Corp. v. Data General Corp., 734 F.2d 1336, 1341 (9th Cir. 1984), cert. denied, 473 U.S. 908, 87 L. Ed. 2d 657, 105 S. Ct. 3534 (1985). In Digidyne, the court held that market power will be found were defendant is able to "lock in" the tied product when a customer has made a substantial investment in the tying product. The court in Mozart distinguished Digidyne on the grounds that it concerned a unique, copyrighted tying product, whereas Mozart, as our case, concerns a trademark tying product [Mercedes dealerships and Pizza Man stores]. Moreover, the court in Mozart suggested that the Digidyne panel erred in failing to engage in market

---

[4] Klien & Saft come to the same conclusion; "Postcontract HN6[] . . . a franchisor can use the threat of termination to "hold up" a franchisee that has made a specific investment in the marketing arrangement. However, this potential economic power has nothing to do with market power, ultimate consumers' welfare, or antitrust." Klien & Saft, supra, at 356 (emphasis added). The "hold up" of franchisees is a "contract problem," but not an antitrust problem. As the axiom provides, the antitrust laws were designed to protect competition, not competitors; injury to the plaintiff alone (or to the franchisees) is not sufficient to prove injury to competition. Brunswick Corp v. Pueblo Bowl-O-Mat, Inc., 429 U.S. 477, 488, 97 S. Ct. 690, 50 L. Ed. 2d 701 (1977).

analysis. Mozart, 833 F.2d at 1346 n. 4. In any event, the case before this court is on all fours with [16] that before the Mozart panel. [5]

Therefore, plaintiff has failed to produce evidence creating a material issue of fact concerning El Centro's market power in the tying product, and summary judgment is appropriate.

III. Group Boycott or Concerted Refusal to Deal

Per Se Rule for Horizontal Conspiracy

HN7[] The Supreme Court applies a per se rule to group boycotts or concerted refusals to deal. A. H. Cox & Co. v. Star Machinery Co., 653 F.2d 1302, 1305 (9th Cir. 1981). The Ninth Circuit limits application of the per se rule against group boycotts or concerted refusals to deal to "concerted activity between two or more horizontal competitors." Cascade Cabinet Co. v. Western Cabinet & Millwork, 710 F.2d 1366, 1370 (9th Cir. 1983). Some horizontal concert of action [17] must be taken against the victims of the restraint in order for the per se rule to apply. Gough v. Rossmoor Corp., 585 F.2d 381, 387 (9th Cir. 1978), cert. denied, 440 U.S. 936, 59 L. Ed. 2d 494, 99 S. Ct. 1280 (1979). The per se rule is never applied automatically when the concerted refusal to deal is vertical, rather than horizontal. A. H. Cox, 653 F.2d at 1306.

The first question, therefore, is whether the refusal to deal alleged involves concerted action between competitors. Plaintiff argues that El Centro conspired with Dixie Sales to carve plaintiff out from the distribution business. Plaintiff claims that the deal was that El Centro would sell [*1496] the Pizza Man service marked products, and Dixie would cover the remaining products which El Centro could not sell (such as food products). As a result of the concerted action between El Centro and Dixie, El Centro terminated plaintiff's distributorship.

At the time of the alleged agreement between Dixie and defendant, defendant had not entered the distribution market. Moreover, Dixie and defendant are not competitors because Dixie competes in the market for non-service marked goods, and defendant competes in the market for service marked goods. Therefore, [18] there is no possible "horizontal" concert of action. Finally, there is no evidence that defendant and Dixie conspired to preclude plaintiff from the distribution market. There is no evidence that the "deal" alleged by plaintiff is anything more than a hypothesis of plaintiff's attorney. El Centro had the power to preclude its franchisees from dealing with plaintiff independant of any "deal" struck with Dixie. In fact, Dixie had no power to engage in a concerted refusal to deal because, as a distributor, Dixie did not deal with plaintiff. Thus, the real question is whether El Centro violated the antitrust laws with respect to the alleged concerted refusal to deal between El Centro and its franchisees, or whether El Centro's own refusal to deal with plaintiff violated antitrust law.

2. Rule of Reason for Vertical Conspiracy

Plaintiff also alleges a vertical boycott between El Centro and the wholesalers of service marked supplies, and the various franchisees. El Centro sent letters to the wholesalers of approved Pizza Man products directing these companies not to sell to Tominaga. Also, letters were sent to franchisees notifying them that El Centro was the sole approved distributor [19] for Pizza Man products.

HN8[] A defendant may "rebut an allegation of conspiracy by showing a plausible and justifiable reason for its conduct that is consistent with proper business practice." Richards v. Neilsen Freight Lines, 810 F.2d 898, 902 (9th Cir. 1987). "Once a defendant has met this initial burden, a plaintiff must provide specific factual support for its allegations of conspiracy tending to show that the defendant was not acting independently." Id.

---

[5] The Digidyne court's failure to engage in market analysis has been rejected by the commentators and the courts. Mozart, 833 F.2d at 1346 n. 4. (citing cases and articles). The Mozart panel points out that two of the five Justices who favor retention of the per se rule against tying arrangements would have granted cert in Digidyne because of the panel's failure to engage in market analysis. Id.

Defendant has raised the plausible business justification of quality control as a reason for its termination of Tominaga. Mozart, 833 F.2d at 1352 (quality control is a legitimate business justification for conduct alleged in a conspiracy charge). Plaintiff points to no specific evidence tending to establish that El Centro was acting in concert with its franchisees or with the distributors in order to protect any of them from competition. Under these circumstances, summary judgment is appropriate. Richards, 810 F.2d at 903.

IV. Refusal to Deal

HN9[] An individual refusal to deal is analyzed under the rule of reason. Fine v. Barry and Enright Productions, 731 F.2d 1394, 1398-99 (9th Cir.), cert. denied, 469 U.S. 881, [20] 83 L. Ed. 2d 186, 105 S. Ct. 248 (1984). To establish a Section 1 violation under the rule of reason, plaintiff must show an agreement which is intended to harm or unreasonably restrain competition and actually does so. Id. at 1399. Plaintiff must show injury to a market or to competition in general, not merely injury to individual competitors. Id.

Defendant has introduced evidence that its entry into the distribution market had a procompetitive effect, and plaintiff has not made any showing that defendant's entry into the market and exclusion of plaintiff (for a four month period) had an anticompetitive effect. Plaintiff has simply not addressed this issue, and no evidence submitted by plaintiff shows injury to competition, as opposed to injury to a competitor. Therefore, summary judgment is appropriate.

V. Pendent State Law Claims

A. Unfair Competition

Plaintiff claims defendants unfairly competed with defendant by inducing plaintiff to "improve, modify and change" the Pizza Man pizza crust, and then entering plaintiff's market for the sale of Pizza Man pizza crust by selling the "secret formula" [*1497] for the crust as developed by Tominaga.

Plaintiff's complaint alleges that plaintiff developed the present [21] formulation and recipe for the pizza crust and passed the specifications on to El Centro. Plaintiff alleges that the recipe was secret because it could not be independently developed without substantial expense, time and research, and plaintiff was not paid for the new formula. Plaintiff claims he only disclosed the secret recipe (in confidence) for quality approval. In effect, plaintiff alleges that defendants "stole" plaintiff's pizza crust formula, which was revealed to defendants in confidence, and began selling the crust in competition with plaintiff.

The evidence reveals that the crust formula is indeed secret, in fact, it is so secret that plaintiff does not know the recipe! Tominaga Deposition, p. 138. The undisputed facts are as follows:

Pizza Man hired Pillsbury to formulate a new pizza crust. Pillsbury's recipe is a secret formula, and nobody outside that company knows the recipe (neither Tominaga nor Vance Shepherd). Tominaga thought the new crust was better than the old General Mills crust. However, he thought there was room for improvement.

Tominaga went to Jacopo's Pizzeria in West Los Angeles and discovered they used a "high-gluten" flour, and that Jacopo's was a very [22] successful pizzeria. With this information, Tominaga told Shepherd that "we need to try out a high-gluten flour." Plaintiff "believes" Shepherd then talked to the people at Pillsbury to get them to increase the strength of their flour. Tominaga Deposition, p. 137. Tominaga also claims to have told Shepherd to "add oil . . . [and] add yeast." "I told him [Shepherd] that he should work with Pillsbury to--with their chemists. I mean, I'm not a chemist. And they should improve the product in that manner."

The evidence shows that plaintiff did not develop a secret recipe based upon extensive research. Rather, he asked another pizza joint what type of crust they used, and passed this generalized information onto Shepherd, and Pillsbury may have used this in developing their crust.

HN10[] There are some business formulae, compiled information, and devices or processes which, though neither copyrighted nor patented, or not even novel, are kept as "trade secrets" of the user. Any secret information used in the conduct of the plaintiff's business which is of some competitive advantage to him, and which is not disclosed to the public, might be included. Witkin, 7 Summary of California Law, at p. 5305. [23] Equity provides a remedy where the information is kept secret and it is improperly obtained by the defendant. Id. at 5306.

In this case, plaintiff passed on generalized advice concerning the consistency of Jacopo's Pizzeria's pizza crust. This information does not constitute a trade secret. Therefore, summary judgement is appropriate.

B. Interference with Contract and/or Prospective Advantage

Plaintiff claims that defendants interfered with plaintiff's contractual relations with El Centro's franchisees, as well as interfering with plaintiff's prospective business advantage by precluding the franchisees from purchasing service marked goods from plaintiff.

HN11[] The tort of interference with prospective advantage consists of intentional and improper methods of diverting or taking business from another which are not within the privilege of fair competition. Witkin, 4 supra, at p. 2643. Under California law, one competitor is justified in inducing customer's of another to do business with him. The "competition justification" requires that (1) the economic relation concerns a matter involved in the competition between the actor and competitor, (2) that no improper means are employed, [24] (3) no illegal restraint of competition is attempted or intended, and (4) at least in part the purpose is to advance competition with the other party. Charles C. Chapman Building Co. v. California Mart, 2 Cal. App. 3d 846, 855-56, 82 Cal. Rptr. 830 (1969). The cases turn almost entirely upon the defendant's motive or purpose, and the means by which he has sought to accomplish it. Id. Almost any manner of intentional invasion of plaintiff's interest may be sufficient if [*1498] the purpose is not a privileged one. Thus, motive and intent are the crucial issues. Continental Maritime v. Pacific Coast Metal Trades, 817 F.2d 1391, 1395 (9th Cir. 1987).

HN12[] Once defendant produces evidence that its action was based on a legitimate business motivation, plaintiff must present some evidence tending to exclude the defendant's innocent explanation. Continental Maritime, 817 F.2d at 1395. Plaintiff's declaration presents evidence which casts a shadow upon defendant's "innocent explanation" that plaintiff was terminated for reasons of quality control. Plaintiff was only terminated only from the service mark products distribution business, not the non-service mark product market, which includes [25] the food used as ingredients in Pizza Man pizza. Moreover, plaintiff's declaration states that as an individual involved in the business, he knows that it is expensive to store the perishable items used as ingredients. This suggests that defendant terminated plaintiff's business in the service marked goods business in order to gain a competitive advantage, and did not exclude plaintiff from the perishable goods market for Pizza Man ingredients because defendant could not afford to enter that market. Since quality control concerns are at least equally relevant to both markets, the evidence may lead a reasonable jury to infer defendant's actions were motivated by its desire to eliminate a competitor, not to control quality.

Since the legal question centers on defendants' motive, and plaintiff has presented evidence which a reasonable jury may find persuasive, summary judgment on this claim is not appropriate. There is a material issue of fact as to whether defendants' termination of Tominaga was improperly motivated.

C. Duty of Good Faith and Fair Dealing

Plaintiff alleges that he had an agreement with El Centro that he would be El Centro's distributor to its franchisees and that [26] each store was to be free to purchase from distributors of their choice, and that by terminating plaintiff's distributorship they (defendants) have violated the covenant of good faith and fair dealing.

HN13[] A tort claim for breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing requires proof of a special relationship between the parties, characterized by elements of public interest, adhesion and fiduciary responsibility. Seaman's Direct Buying Service, Inc. v. Standard Oil, 36 Cal. 3d 752, 768-69, 206 Cal. Rptr. 354, 686 P.2d 1158 (1984). In Wallis v. Superior Court, 160 Cal. App. 3d 1109, 207 Cal. Rptr. 123 (1984), the court listed a number of factors which must be present for a "special relationship" to exist; (1) the parties are in inherently unequal bargaining positions, (2) the plaintiff's motivation for entering into the contract must be a non-profit motivation (to secure peace of mind, security and future protection), (3) plaintiff is especially vulnerable because of the type of harm it may suffer and of necessity places trust in the defendant to perform, and (4) defendant is aware of plaintiff's vulnerability. Id. at 1118.

As recognized by the court in Premier Wine & Spirits [27] v. E. & J. Gallo Winery, 644 F. Supp. 1431, 1436-37 (E. D. Cal. 1986), the supplier-distributor relationship cannot be described as having a "non-profit" motive. Similarly, the relationship between a franchisor and a distributor can not be described as having a non-profit motive because it is purely a business relationship and plaintiff is in the business to make a profit. Therefore, it seems that plaintiff's claims is outside the scope of the tort. Summary judgment is appropriate.

The Court will retain its pendent jurisdiction over the interference with prospective advantage or contractual relations claim pursuant to United Mine Workers v. Gibbs, 383 U.S. 715, 16 L. Ed. 2d 218, 86 S. Ct. 1130 (1966), because defendants' federal trademark claim is still pending in this Court.

IT IS THEREFORE ORDERED that defendants' motion for Summary Judgment is GRANTED as to all claims except plaintiff's claim for interference with prospective advantage or contractual relations.

The Court further orders the Clerk to serve copies of this Order on all parties by United States mail.

[LexisNexis]

Vannelli v. National Collegiate Athletic Asso.

Court of Appeals of Minnesota

April 8, 1988, Decided ; April 19, 1988, Filed

No. C3-87-2039

Reporter

1988 Minn. App. LEXIS 361 *; 1988 WL 35433

Mark Vannelli, Appellant, v. The National Collegiate Athletic Association, et al., Respondents

Notice: [*1] THIS OPINION WILL BE UNPUBLISHED AND MAY NOT BE CITED EXCEPT AS PROVIDED BY MINNESOTA STATUTES.

Subsequent History: Review denied by Vannelli v. NCAA, 1988 Minn. LEXIS 494 (Minn., June 29, 1988)

Core Terms

Vannelli, athletic, anti trust law, hockey, summary judgment, antitrust, trial court, eligibility, decisions, team

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > ... > Preclusion of Judgments > Estoppel > Collateral Estoppel

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Preclusion of Judgments > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Preclusion of Judgments > Estoppel > General Overview

HN1[] Estoppel, Collateral Estoppel

Under Minnesota law, collateral estoppel applies where (1) the issue sought to be estopped in the second case is identical to the one resolved in the first; (2) there has been a final judgment in the first action; (3) the party sought to be estopped was a party, or was in privity with a party, to the first action; and (4) the party sought to be estopped had a full and fair opportunity to be heard on the issue in a prior case.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN2[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

The Minnesota Antitrust Law, Minn. Stat. § 325D.49, et seq., which parallels the Sherman Act, Minnesota antitrust law is to be construed uniformly with federal court interpretations of the Sherman Act, unless differences in language compels a different result. The Minnesota Antitrust Law is framed along the lines of the federal statute, although it is more diffuse. It may be fairly assumed, however, that the general purpose of all statutes of this kind is the same, and a court may properly look to the decisions made under federal and state statutes of a similar character for the principles by which to construe our own statute. The Minnesota antitrust law is substantially the same as the Sherman Act and therefore should be construed by reference to federal case law.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Supporting Materials > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Materiality of Facts

HN3[] Summary Judgment, Supporting Materials

Summary judgment is appropriate where no material fact issues are presented and the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. Minn. R. Civ. P. 56.03. A party may not rest on his pleadings to create fact issues where the movant has provided affidavits in support of the motion.

Torts > ... > Commercial Interference > Contracts > General Overview

HN4[] Commercial Interference, Contracts

Elements of intentional interference include an alleged wrongdoer's knowledge of the contract and his intentional procurement of its breach.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > State Regulation

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

HN5[] Private Actions, State Regulation

Minn. Stat. § 325D.57 (1986) provides that any person "injured" by a violation of the Minnesota Antitrust Law of 1971 may recover damages.

Counsel: John E. Thomas, St. Paul, MN, for appellant.

John F. Beukema, John D. French, Minneapolis, MN, for respondent.

Judges: Heard, considered and decided by Norton, Presiding Judge, Kalitowski, Judge, and Schultz, Judge.*

Opinion by: NORTON

Opinion

NONPUBLISHED OPINION

NORTON, Judge

* Acting as judge of the Court of Appeals by appointment pursuant to Minn. Const. art. 6, § 2.

FACTS

In early 1980, while appellant Mark Vannelli was still in high school, he was recruited by Northern Michigan University (NMU) for its hockey team, and was offered an athletic scholarship. Appellant alleges that he was offered a scholarship to cover the full costs of a four-year education at NMU. Respondent agrees that if such an offer was made, it was made in violation of National Collegiate Athletic Association (NCAA) rules.

Vannelli and NMU entered into a scholarship agreement of financial assistance on April 15, 1980. It is undisputed that this written tender of financial assistance covered only a single academic year, 1980-1981. It stated that Vannelli would "be eligible for a [*2] renewal" of the scholarship at the end of that term if he was academically eligible for continued athletic competition.

Appellant competed as a member of the NMU hockey team during 1980-1981, his freshman year. His scholarship was renewed under the same terms for the 1981-1982 year, but at the beginning of that hockey season, he failed to make the hockey team. NCAA rules prohibited cancellation of Vannelli's scholarship during its term for failure to make the team, however Vannelli chose to abandon his scholarship and leave NMU at the end of the fall 1981 quarter. He claims that he inquired about enrolling at the University of Minnesota but was told that NCAA rules would prevent his playing hockey for one year and that therefore no scholarship would be offered to him at that time. Respondent contends that if this representation was made, it erroneously stated the NCAA transfer rules then in effect.

Vannelli enrolled at the College of St. Thomas in January 1982. St. Thomas does not grant athletic scholarships. Appellant did not participate in intercollegiate hockey competition until the following school year. Vannelli played hockey for St. Thomas during the 1982-83, 1983-84, and 1984-85 [*3] seasons, thereby completing the four full years of competition allowed by NCAA rules. He graduated from St. Thomas in May 1985.

In support of its motion for summary judgment, the NCAA offered an affidavit of its Assistant Executive Director establishing that the NCAA had no knowledge of or involvement in the circumstances giving rise to Vannelli's suit. Appellant failed to counter these assertions with evidence that anyone acting for the NCAA communicated with him until after he left NMU.

Respondent alleges its sole involvement in the events out of which this action arises is that, before appellant was recruited by or enrolled at an NCAA member institution, its members had enacted various regulations that applied equally to all college athletes.

Respondent NCAA is a voluntary unincorporated association with nearly 1000 members, including four-year colleges and universities. Its purpose is the establishment and enforcement of rules governing intercollegiate athletic competition among its members.

Appellant claims that NCAA rules prevented him from transferring from one NCAA member institution to another and "immediately" participating in intercollegiate hockey at the University [*4] of Minnesota. However, the NCAA's uncontested affidavit shows it has no knowledge of what reason, if any, Vannelli may have been given for Minnesota's claimed disinterest in offering him an athletic scholarship when he proposed to transfer there. Yet, respondent claims, if Vannelli had enrolled at the University in January 1982, his athletic eligibility at that time would have been governed by NCAA Bylaw 5-1-(j)-(7). This "transfer rule," did not affect Vannelli's eligibility to participate in regular season games or his eligibility for an athletic scholarship; it prohibited only his participation in NCAA championships within one year after his transfer.

Appellant claims a second NCAA rule, Article 3, section 4(d) of the NCAA Constitution, had an unfavorable impact on appellant because it prohibits NCAA member institutions from granting athletic scholarships for more than one year at a time. Appellant argues that, but for this rule, he would have been granted a four-year scholarship at NMU and would have continued to receive the scholarship even after he was cut from the NMU hockey team.

This is the second action between these parties. Appellant first brought a class action [*5] against the same parties in the United States District Court for the District of Minnesota in December 1984. In that action, appellant asserted the following claims against the NCAA and NMU: a) fraud, in that appellant claimed to have been promised a four-year scholarship when he was recruited as a student-athlete by NMU; b) breach of contract; c) tortious interference with appellant's "present and/or prospective commercially economically advantageous activity with regard to his services as an athlete . . ."; d) violation of federal and state antitrust laws and e) violation of the 14th Amendment of the United States Constitution.

The federal court dismissed all of appellant's claims. It reached the merits of only the constitutional and federal antitrust claims against the NCAA, holding that the NCAA's actions were not "state action" and therefore were not subject to constitutional challenge, and that appellant lacked standing to assert claims under the federal antitrust laws in that he had not been "injured in his 'business or property'" within the meaning of those laws. The court declined to exercise pendent jurisdiction over appellant's common law and state antitrust claims against [*6] the NCAA and dismissed them without prejudice. vannelli has not appealed that decision.

Appellant then filed the present action in state court, asserting virtually the same claims of fraud, breach of contract, tortious interference, and violation of state antitrust laws as had been dismissed. By a March 3, 1987 order the trial court granted summary judgment in favor of the NCAA on all counts.

As to the fraud claim, the court stated that "the complaint does not contain any particular representations made between Vannelli and the NCAA." Summary judgment for the NCAA was granted on the breach of contract claim because, the court ruled, "the NCAA is not a party to [the] agreements between Vannelli and NMU because it is referenced to in the documents" and "the NCAA was not involved in any of the decisions concerning vannelli." Vannelli's claim for tortious interference was also denied, because he had not shown there was a contract between him and the NCAA, that the NCAA was aware he had a scholarship with NMU, that the NCAA intentionally breached a contract or that the NCAA was aware of future contracts Vannelli hoped to enter into. The court also ruled against Vannelli on the state [*7] antitrust claim, on the basis of collateral estoppel:

HN1[] Under Minnesota law, collateral estoppel applies where (1) the issue sought to be estopped in the second case is identical to the one resolved in the first; (2) there has been a final judgment in the first action; (3) the party sought to be estopped was a party, or was in privity with a party, to the first action; and (4) the party sought to be estopped had a full and fair opportunity to be heard on the issue in a prior case. Willems v. Commissioner of Public Safety, 333 N.W.2d 619, 621 (Minn. 1983).

In Vannelli's case, the last three of these elements have been met. The question then becomes whether the antitrust issue decided by Judge Renner is identical to the antitrust issue raised in this case.

HN2[] The current Minnesota Antitrust Law, Minn. Stat. sec. 325D.49, et seq., which parallels the Sherman Act, was enacted in 1971, replacing an earlier version first enacted in 1891. There are few reported decisions by the Minnesota Supreme Court under either the current statute or its predecessor. The cases that do exist indicate that the Minnesota antitrust law is to be construed uniformly with federal court interpretations of the [*8] Sherman Act, unless differences in language compels a different result. This principle was established under the 1891 statute:

The Minnesota Antitrust Law is framed along the lines of the federal statute, although it is more diffuse. It may be fairly assumed, however, that the general purpose of all statutes of this kind is the same, and we may properly look to the decisions made under federal and state statutes of a similar character for the principles by which to construe our own statute.

State v. Duluth Board of Trade, 107 Minn. 506, 121 N.W. 395, 399 (1907).

The court went even further in Campbell v. Motion Picture Operators Local 21, 151 Minn. 220, 186 N.W. 781 (1922), by following federal cases involving the Sherman Act rather than prior inconsistent Minnesota decisions. Emphasizing the importance of uniformity between state and federal law, the court held that the Minnesota antitrust law was substantially the same as the Sherman Act and therefore should be construed by reference to federal case law.

Since the Minnesota Supreme Court followed federal precedent when construing the 1891 Minnesota antitrust statute, it is logical that it would follow federal precedent [*9] in construing the 1971 law.

DECISION

HN3[] Summary judgment is appropriate where no material fact issues are presented and the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. Minn. R. Civ. P. 56.03. A party may not rest on his pleadings to create fact issues where the movant has provided affidavits in support of the motion. Eakman v. Brutger, 285 N.W.2d 95 (Minn. 1979).

Appellant claims the trial court erred in granting summary judgment on the fraud claim by ruling the NCAA was not involved in any of the decisions or representations concerning Vannelli. But appellant fails to establish either by way of affidavit or other evidence or by argument in his brief, specifically how he claims the NCAA was involved. Instead he makes broad assertions about NCAA activities generally. What appellant requests is for this court to take a leap of logic from the assertion that the NCAA is generally involved with the lives of student-athletes to the assertion that therefore the NCAA engaged in fraud.

Clearly the trial court was correct in its ruling that, without some factual showing, such as an assertion in an affidavit, that the NCAA made a specific representation which was fraudulent, [*10] summary judgment must be granted. See Davis v. Re-Trac Manufacturing Corp., 276 Minn. 116, 117, 149 N.W.2d 37, 38-39 (1967), (Minnesota Supreme Court set out a list of eleven elements of the tort, none of which were even alleged against respondent here).

Appellant alleges the trial court erred by ruling the NCAA was not a party to the documents signed by Vannelli. As with the fraud issue, appellant fails to point to any specific evidence suggesting respondent was a party to these scholarship contracts with Vannelli. Respondent is not listed as a party on the scholarship agreements, and the documents are not signed by an NCAA representative. Appellant suggests that, because the NCAA is referred to in the National Letter of Intent contracts, it is a party to these agreements. However, appellant cites no authority for this argument.

Appellant's claim for tortious interference was also properly foreclosed by summary judgment. He argues that the trial court erred in ruling that the NCAA was uninvolved in Vannelli's contract, yet he fails to point to evidence of specific acts by respondent to support the claim. See e.g., *Boute v. Richard Miller Homes, Inc., 321 N.W.2d 895, [11] 900 (Minn. 1982) HN4[] (elements of intentional interference include alleged wrongdoing's knowledge of the contract and his intentional procurement of its breach). As respondent points out, appellant has not countered the NCAA's affidavit stating it had no knowledge of or involvement in the events leading up to this lawsuit.

Appellant urges reversal of the trial court's ruling that he is collaterally estopped from asserting the state antitrust claims.

Appellant claims that because the phrase "business or property" is missing from HN5[] Minn. Stat. § 325D.57 (1986), the state antitrust law differs from the similar federal antitrust law. The Minnesota statute provides that any person "injured" by a violation of the Minnesota Antitrust Law of 1971 may recover damages. Respondent points out that numerous state and federal court decisions in Minnesota have routinely construed the Minnesota statute to follow the corresponding federal law. Appellant has not provided us with any legislative history showing the judiciary should interpret state law differently from federal law, notwithstanding the minor difference in language. Additionally in this case, it is logical to conclude that if appellant was [*12] not injured in his business or property, he was not injured at all. The premise of this lawsuit is appellant's assertion that he was restricted by NCAA rules from freely selling his amateur athletic services.

Affirmed.

Local 210, Laborers' International Union v. Labor Relations Div. Associated General Contractors, etc.

United States Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit

December 18, 1987, Argued ; April 12, 1988, Decided

No. 87-7702

Reporter

844 F.2d 69 *; 1988 U.S. App. LEXIS 4914 ; 128 L.R.R.M. 2060; 108 Lab. Cas. (CCH) P10,469; 1988-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P67,962

Local 210, Laborers' International Union of North America, Plaintiff-Appellee, v. Labor Relations Division Associated General Contractors of America, N.Y.S. Chapter, Inc., and F.A. Wellington Corp., Defendants-Appellants

Prior History: [1] Appeal from a judgment entered in the United States District Court for the Western District of New York, Elfvin, J., holding that a restrictive subcontracting clause in a collective bargaining agreement was protected by the construction industry proviso to section 8(e) of the National Labor Relations Act, 29 U.S.C. § 158(e), and ordering arbitration Pursuant to the terms of the agreement.

Disposition: Affirmed.

Core Terms

construction industry, subcontracting, proviso, clauses, arbitration, collective bargaining agreement, exemption, antitrust, anti trust law, policies, merits, status quo, illegality, bargaining, subcontractors, nonstatutory, contracting, secondary, signatory, nonunion, contractors, Relations, grievance, terms, collective bargaining, general contractor, district court, Sherman Act, anticompetitive, non-signatories

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Labor & Employment Law > ... > Unfair Labor Practices > Union Violations > Union Refusal to Bargain

Labor & Employment Law > Collective Bargaining & Labor Relations > Unfair Labor Practices > General Overview

HN1[] Union Violations, Union Refusal to Bargain

See 29 U.S.C.S. § 158(e).

Labor & Employment Law > Collective Bargaining & Labor Relations > Strikes & Work Stoppages

Labor & Employment Law > ... > Unfair Labor Practices > Union Violations > Union Refusal to Bargain

HN2[] Collective Bargaining & Labor Relations, Strikes & Work Stoppages

Section 8(e) was designed to outlaw so-called "hot cargo" clauses in collective bargaining agreements, by which unions would secure agreements from employers to boycott the goods or services of other employers that did not comply with union standards or recognize a union. Liability under § 8(e) of the National Labor Relations Act, 29 U.S.C.S. § 158(e), turns in large part on whether an agreement is characterized as "primary" or "secondary" in nature. An agreement has primary objectives, and thus is outside the ban of § 8(e), if it is intended to preserve work traditionally performed by a union for a particular employer. If, on the other hand, an agreement is designed to influence the labor relations policies of third parties by prohibiting dealings with those parties, it then has secondary goals and it is barred by § 8(e).

Labor & Employment Law > ... > Unfair Labor Practices > Union Violations > Union Refusal to Bargain

HN3[] Union Violations, Union Refusal to Bargain

In enacting § 8(e) of the National Labor Relations act, 29 U.S.C.S. § 158(e), Congress has expressly provided that purely secondary activity would be tolerated in certain industries. To that end, Congress has added the garment industry and construction industry provisos to § 8(e).

Labor & Employment Law > ... > Conditions & Terms > Trade Secrets & Unfair Competition > Noncompetition & Nondisclosure Agreements

HN4[] Trade Secrets & Unfair Competition, Noncompetition & Nondisclosure Agreements

See 29 U.S.C. S. § 158(e).

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Practices Governed by Per Se Rule > Boycotts

Labor & Employment Law > ... > Unfair Labor Practices > Union Violations > Union Refusal to Bargain

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Labor > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Horizontal Refusals to Deal > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Horizontal Refusals to Deal > Boycotts

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Horizontal Refusals to Deal > Sherman Act

Labor & Employment Law > Collective Bargaining & Labor Relations > Strikes & Work Stoppages

HN5[] Practices Governed by Per Se Rule, Boycotts

In combination with the other provisions of § 8(e) of the National Labor Relations act, 29 U.S.C.S. § 158(e), the construction industry proviso therefore explicitly sanctions certain "agreements" between unions and employers under which the employers agree to cease or refrain from doing business with any other person. However, such restrictive clauses in collective bargaining agreements, amounting to secondary boycotts, undoubtedly can act as a direct restraint on the business market, having substantial anticompetitive effects, both actual and potential.

Accordingly, clauses in agreements are vulnerable to challenge under federal antitrust law unless they are protected both by the construction industry proviso and by an exemption from antitrust scrutiny.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Procedural Matters > Jurisdiction > Primary Jurisdiction

Contracts Law > Contract Conditions & Provisions > General Overview

Labor & Employment Law > ... > Unfair Labor Practices > Union Violations > Union Refusal to Bargain

HN6[] Jurisdiction, Primary Jurisdiction

Section 8 of the National Labor Relations Act, 29 U.S.C.S. § 158, strongly implies that a court must reach the merits of an illegality defense in order to determine whether the contract clause at issue has any legal effect in the first place. This is particularly true when labor law questions emerge as collateral issues in suits brought under independent federal remedies, including the antitrust laws.

Governments > Legislation > Statutory Remedies & Rights

Labor & Employment Law > Collective Bargaining & Labor Relations > Labor Arbitration > Enforcement

Labor & Employment Law > Collective Bargaining & Labor Relations > Federal Preemption > Primacy of Labor Policy

HN7[] Legislation, Statutory Remedies & Rights

Claims based on federal statutory rights are fully arbitrable and should be decided in such a forum when the parties have so chosen by contract.

International Law > Dispute Resolution > Arbitration & Mediation > General Overview

International Trade Law > Dispute Resolution > International Commercial Arbitration > Arbitration

Labor & Employment Law > ... > Labor Arbitration > Arbitrators > Authority

HN8[] Dispute Resolution, Arbitration & Mediation

Deference to an arbitrator may not be necessary or appropriate when there is a claim that the very contract clause that is the subject of a dispute is itself facially illegal.

Contracts Law > Remedies > Specific Performance

International Trade Law > Dispute Resolution > International Commercial Arbitration > Arbitration

HN9[] Remedies, Specific Performance

Federal courts have a duty to determine whether a contract violates federal law before enforcing it.

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Reviewability of Lower Court Decisions > Preservation for Review

HN10[] Reviewability of Lower Court Decisions, Preservation for Review

The failure to bring a cross-appeal constitutes a waiver of any pre-existing claims.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Pretrial Matters > Alternative Dispute Resolution > Validity of ADR Methods

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Alternative Dispute Resolution > Arbitration > Waiver

HN11[] Alternative Dispute Resolution, Validity of ADR Methods

The litigation of substantial issues going to the merits may constitute a waiver of the right to arbitration.

Labor & Employment Law > ... > Unfair Labor Practices > Union Violations > Union Refusal to Bargain

HN12[] Union Violations, Union Refusal to Bargain

The construction industry proviso in § 8(e) of the National Labor Relations Act, 29 U.S.C.S. § 158, must be interpreted in light of the statutory setting of the Landrum-Griffin Act, Pub. L. No. 86-257, § 704(b), 73 Stat. 519, 543-44 (1959), and the circumstances surrounding its enactment.

Labor & Employment Law > ... > Unfair Labor Practices > Union Violations > Union Refusal to Bargain

HN13[] Union Violations, Union Refusal to Bargain

The test for the permissibility of any particular practice under the construction industry proviso of § 8(e) of the National Labor Relations Act, 29 U.S.C.S. § 158(e), is whether or not the practice is consistent with Congress's perceptions regarding the status quo in the construction industry. The relevant inquiry is not whether Congress correctly perceived the then state of the law, but rather what its perception of the state of the law was.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Labor > Nonstatutory Exemptions

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Labor & Employment Law > Collective Bargaining & Labor Relations > Bargaining Subjects

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Labor > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Labor > Statutory Exemptions

HN14[] Labor, Nonstatutory Exemptions

The statutory antitrust exemptions, which are contained in certain provisions of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 17, 29 U.S.C.S. § 52, and the Norris-LaGuardia Act, 29 U.S.C.S. §§ 104, 105, 113, exempt certain union activities from antitrust scrutiny. They do not, however, reach concerted activity between a union and a nonlabor party, such as an employer. Therefore, if a clause in an agreement is to survive, it must find protection in the nonstatutory exemption, which does permit certain union-employer agreements.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > Exemptions

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Labor & Employment Law > Collective Bargaining & Labor Relations > Bargaining Subjects

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Labor > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Labor > Statutory Exemptions

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN15[] Scope, Exemptions

Agreements between a union and an employer are exempt from antitrust scrutiny if they are so intimately related to wages, hours and working conditions that the union's successful attempt to obtain the provisions through bona fide, arm's length bargaining in pursuit of their own labor union policies, and not at the behest of or in combination with nonlabor groups, falls within the protection of the national labor policy and therefore is exempt from the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 et seq.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > General Overview

Healthcare Law > Business Administration & Organization > Employment Issues > Collective Bargaining & Labor Unions

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Labor & Employment Law > Collective Bargaining & Labor Relations > Bargaining Subjects

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Labor > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Labor > Nonstatutory Exemptions

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Market Definition > Relevant Market > Product Market Definition

HN16[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Exemptions & Immunities

In assessing whether any particular agreement is protected by the nonstatutory antitrust exemption, the crucial determinant is not the form of the agreement but its relative impact on the product market and the interests of union members. In essence, the test is one that balances the conflicting policies embodied in the labor and antitrust laws, with the policies inherent in labor law serving as the first point of reference. First, the agreement at issue must further goals that are protected by national labor law and that are within the scope of traditionally mandatory subjects of collective bargaining. Second, the agreement must not impose a direct restraint on the business market that has substantial anticompetitive effects, both actual and potential, that would not follow naturally from the elimination of competition over wages and working conditions that results from collective bargaining agreements.

Counsel: Brian M. Cole, (Bryant, O'Dell & Basso, of Counsel), for Defendants-Appellants.

Richard Lipsitz, Buffalo, New York (Susan R. Hutchison, Lipsitz, Green, Fahringer, Roll, Schuller & James, of Counsel), for Plaintiff-Appellee.

Judges: Timbers, Meskill and Kearse, Circuit Judges.

Opinion by: MESKILL

Opinion

[*70] MESKILL, Circuit Judge:

The policies inherent in federal labor and antitrust law have long been a source of conflict. Whereas antitrust law seeks to promote open and unfettered competition, labor law encourages collective activity by workers seeking to enhance their power in the marketplace. See Allen Bradley Co. v. Local Union No. 3, Int'l Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, 325 U.S. 797, 806, 89 L. Ed. 1939, 65 S. Ct. 1533 (1945). [2] Indeed, the two areas of law embody "policies that often appear irreconcilable." Hoffman, Labor and Antitrust Policy: Drawing a Line of Demarcation, 50 Brooklyn L. Rev.1, 3 (1983). See also Winter, Collective Bargaining and Competition: [*71] The Application of Antitrust Standards to Union Activities, 73 Yale L.J. 14, 16-17 (1963).

This appeal presents questions that once again bring this conflict into sharp focus. We must decide whether a clause in a collective bargaining agreement that prohibits an employer from subcontracting work either to or from other employers that are not bound by the agreement is an unlawful restraint on trade, in violation of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1, et seq. (1982). As a necessary corollary to this inquiry, we also must decide whether the same clause is protected by the so-called construction industry proviso to section 8(e) of the National Labor Relations Act (NLRA), 29 U.S.C. § 158(e) (1982). Despite the anticompetitive effect that this clause could have on commerce among affected employers, the United States District Court for the Western District of New York, Elfvin, [3] J., held that it was protected by the construction industry proviso and thus exempt from antitrust scrutiny. For the following reasons, we affirm.

BACKGROUND

In 1981, plaintiff-appellee Local 210 of the Laborers' International Union of North America (the union) entered into a collective bargaining agreement with defendant-appellant Associated General Contractors of America, New York State Chapter, Inc. (AGC). AGC is a multiple-employer bargaining agent representing general contractors throughout New York State. Its Labor Relations Division negotiates and executes collective bargaining agreements with unions on behalf of AGC's members. One of AGC's members at the time of the 1981 agreement was defendant-appellant F.A. Wellington Corp. (Wellington).

The collective bargaining agreement provided grievance and arbitration procedures to be followed in the event of "any controversy, dispute or misunderstanding arising as to the meaning, application or observances of any provisions of this Agreement." If a grievance or dispute could not be resolved by on-site job supervisors, it was then to be submitted to a Joint Committee composed of three representatives each from the union and [4] the employers. If that body was unable to resolve the matter, then the agreement provided for arbitration before an impartial arbitrator chosen by the parties.

Section 3 of Article XV of the collective bargaining agreement provided that:

> An employer, who is a party to and/or is bound by the terms of this Agreement, shall not accept a contract from or subcontract work covered by this Agreement to a firm, person or group where such firm, person or group is not a party to or bound by this Agreement when the subcontracted work begins. This provision does not apply to private, commercial, and residential work, and rented equipment.

AGC claims to have objected to this restrictive subcontracting clause at the time the agreement was negotiated, asserting that it represented an unlawful restraint on trade. AGC nonetheless agreed to the inclusion of the clause in the parties' collective bargaining agreement.

In late 1981, Wellington entered into a subcontracting agreement with Bhandari Constructors & Consultants, Inc. (Bhandari). Wellington agreed to act as a subcontractor and to perform certain work for Bhandari, which was acting as the general contractor at a construction [5] project located within the geographical jurisdiction of the union. Bhandari, however, was not a signatory to or bound by the terms of AGC's collective bargaining agreement with the union. The union filed a grievance pursuant to the terms of the agreement, charging that Wellington's subcontract with Bhandari was in violation of section 3 of Article XV. The grievance was referred to the Joint Committee. The employer representatives on the committee refused to participate in the grievance process, however, arguing that the restrictive subcontracting clause was illegal under federal antitrust law and therefore unenforceable. For similar reasons, AGC refused to participate in the selection of an arbitrator when the union insisted that the grievance be submitted [*72] for binding arbitration pursuant to the collective bargaining agreement.

The union subsequently initiated this action in the district court seeking to compel arbitration pursuant to the terms of the agreement. The union relied for jurisdiction upon section 301 of the Labor Management Relations Act (LMRA), 29 U.S.C. § 185 (1982). AGC and Wellington counterclaimed, alleging that the clause at issue [6] was an unlawful restraint on trade, in violation of sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. §§ 1, 2. The union thereafter moved for summary judgment, arguing that the subcontracting clause was expressly protected by the construction industry proviso to section 8(e) of the NLRA and was therefore exempt from antitrust scrutiny. The employers responded that the clause was uniquely and impermissibly broad and fell outside the intended scope of the proviso. They argued that typical restrictive subcontracting clauses in the construction industry only prohibited employers from subcontracting to non-signatories. This clause also prohibited Wellington from accepting subcontracted work from other employers who were not bound by the collective bargaining agreement -- a result that the employers said was never intended by Congress when it enacted section 8(e).

Judge Elfvin granted summary judgment for the union. He first addressed the "threshold issue" of whether or not AGC and Wellington could raise "illegality as a defense" to an action to compel arbitration. Relying on Kaiser Steel Corp. v. Mullins, 455 U.S. 72, 70 L. Ed. 2d 833, 102 S. Ct. 851 (1982), [7] Judge Elfvin concluded that he "must reach the merits of an illegality defense in order to determine whether the contract clause at issue has any legal effect in the first place." See J App. at 11-12. He therefore decided that the issue of the clause's legality was not solely within the jurisdiction of an arbitrator. Next, the district court considered whether the clause was indeed protected by the construction industry proviso. Citing Woelke & Romero Framing, Inc. v. NLRB, 456 U.S. 645, 72 L. Ed. 2d 398, 102 S. Ct. 2071 (1982), Judge Elfvin held that Congress enacted the proviso in 1959 to preserve the status quo regarding collective bargaining practices in the construction industry. He then noted several pieces of evidence indicating that clauses such as the one at issue here -- prohibiting subcontracting both to and from non-signatories-- were used in 1959. He concluded that the clause was protected by the proviso and was therefore exempt from the antitrust laws. Having concluded that the clause was valid and enforceable, Judge Elfvin granted the union's request for arbitration in accordance with the terms of the collective bargaining agreement, ordering AGC [8] and Wellington to participate in that process.

DISCUSSION

Section 8(e) was added to the National Labor Relations Act in 1959 by the Labor-Management Reporting and Disclosure Act, also known as the Landrum-Griffin Act. See Pub. L. No. 86-257, § 704(b), 73 Stat. 519, 543-44 (1959). Section 8(e) provides in part that:

> HN1[] It shall be an unfair labor practice for any labor organization and any employer to enter into any contract or agreement, express or implied, whereby such employer ceases or refrains or agrees to cease or refrain from handling, using, selling, transporting or otherwise dealing in any of the products of any other employer, or to cease doing business with any other person, and any contract or agreement entered into heretofore or hereafter containing such an agreement shall be to such extent unenforcible [sic] and void.

29 U.S.C. § 158(e). HN2[] Section 8(e) was designed to outlaw so-called "hot cargo" clauses in collective bargaining agreements, by which unions would secure agreements from employers to boycott the goods or services of other [9] employers that did not comply with union standards or recognize a union. See National Woodwork Manufacturers Ass'n v. NLRB, 386 U.S. 612, 634-37, 18 L. Ed. 2d 357, 87 S. Ct. 1250 (1967). See also NLRB v.

International Longshoremen's Ass'n, 473 U.S. 61, 74-75, 87 L. Ed. 2d 47, 105 S. Ct. 3045 (1985); Carrier Air Conditioning [*73] Co. v. NLRB, 547 F.2d 1178, 1184-85 (2d Cir. 1976), cert. denied, 431 U.S. 974, 53 L. Ed. 2d 1072, 97 S. Ct. 2940 (1977); Donald Schriver, Inc. v. NLRB, 204 U.S. App. D.C. 4, 635 F.2d 859, 868 (D.C. Cir. 1980), cert. denied, 451 U.S. 976, 68 L. Ed. 2d 357, 101 S. Ct. 2058 (1981). Liability under section 8(e) turns in large part on whether an agreement is characterized as "primary" or "secondary" in nature. See National Woodwork Manufacturers, 386 U.S. at 635-39; Carrier Air Conditioning, 547 F.2d at 1184-85. An agreement has primary objectives, and thus is outside the ban of section 8(e), if it is intended to preserve work traditionally performed by a union for a particular employer. International Longshoremen's Ass'n, 473 U.S. at 75-76; [10] National Woodwork Manufacturers, 386 U.S. at 635-39, 644-45; Carrier Air Conditioning, 547 F.2d at 1184. Cf. Fibreboard Paper Products Corp. v. NLRB, 379 U.S. 203, 209-12, 13 L. Ed. 2d 233, 85 S. Ct. 398 (1964) (holding that the "contracting out" of work traditionally performed by bargaining unit employees is a mandatory subject of bargaining under the NLRA). If, on the other hand, an agreement is designed to "influenc[e] the labor relations policies of [third] parties" by prohibiting dealings with those parties, it then has secondary goals and it is barred by section 8(e). Donald Schriver, 635 F.2d at 868. See also National Woodwork Manufacturers, 386 U.S. at 635-36; Carrier Air Conditioning, 547 F.2d at 1184-85.

HN3[] In enacting section 8(e), however, Congress expressly provided that purely secondary activity would be tolerated in certain industries. See National Woodwork Manufacturers, 386 U.S. at 637-38; Donald Schriver, 635 F.2d at 869. To that end, Congress added the garment industry and construction industry provisos to section 8(e). [11] [1] The construction industry proviso states that

> HN4[] nothing in this subsection shall apply to an agreement between a labor organization and an employer in the construction industry relating to the contracting or subcontracting of work to be done at the site of the construction, alteration, painting, or repair of a building, structure, or other work.

29 U.S.C. § 158(e). HN5[] In combination with the other provisions of section 8(e), the proviso therefore explicitly sanctions certain "agreement[s]" between unions and employers under which the employers agree "to cease or refrain from . . . doing business with any other person." Id. However, such restrictive clauses in collective bargaining agreements, amounting to secondary boycotts, undoubtedly can act as a "direct restraint on the business market[,] ha[ving] substantial anticompetitive effects, both actual and potential." See Connell Construction Co. v. Plumbers & Steamfitters Local Union No. 100, 421 U.S. 616, 625, 44 L. Ed. 2d 418, 95 S. Ct. 1830 (1975). Cf. Northwest Wholesale Stationers, Inc. v. Pacific Stationery & Printing Co., 472 U.S. 284, 290, 86 L. Ed. 2d 202, 105 S. Ct. 2613 (1985) [12] (holding that many concerted refusals to deal, or "group boycotts," are sufficiently anticompetitive to constitute per se violations of section 1 of the Sherman Act). Accordingly, clauses such as the one at issue in the instant case are vulnerable to challenge under federal antitrust law unless they are protected both by the construction industry proviso and by an exemption from antitrust scrutiny. See Sun-Land Nurseries, Inc. v. Southern California District Council of Laborers, 793 F.2d 1110, 1115-16 (9th Cir. 1986) (in banc), cert. denied, 479 U.S. 1090, 107 S. Ct. 1299, 94 L. Ed. 2d 155 (1987). Cf. United Mine Workers of America v. Pennington, 381 U.S. 657, 664-66, 14 L. Ed. 2d 626, 85 S. Ct. 1585 (1965) (agreements resulting from union-employer [*74] bargaining are not automatically exempt from Sherman Act).

[13] In this case, AGC and Wellington argue that the restrictive subcontracting clause enjoys neither the protection of the construction industry proviso nor of an antitrust exemption and that it therefore is facially illegal. Moreover, they pose this "illegality defense" as a bar to compelled arbitration. We therefore must address three questions: (1) whether the district court was correct in reaching the merits of the employers' illegality defense or whether that question should have been within the sole province of an arbitrator; (2) whether the clause at issue is within the intended scope of the construction industry proviso; and (3) whether the clause would therefore enjoy an exemption from the application of federal antitrust laws.

[1] The garment industry proviso creates an even broader exception than the construction industry proviso, allowing unions in the garment industry to use restrictive subcontracting clauses as organizational and economic weapons. See Danielson v. Joint Board of Coat, Suit and Allied Garment Workers' Union, 494 F.2d 1230, 1236 (2d Cir. 1974) (Friendly, J.). See also Connell Construction Co. v. Plumbers & Steamfitters Local Union No. 100, 421 U.S. 616, 633 n.13, 44 L. Ed. 2d 418, 95 S. Ct. 1830 (1975).

A. Arbitrability

In deciding that he must reach the merits of the employers' illegality defense, Judge Elfvin relied on the Supreme Court's decision in Kaiser Steel. In Kaiser Steel, however, the Court addressed a jurisdictional conflict between a federal court and the National Labor Relations Board (NLRB), not one between a federal court and an arbitrator. A mineworkers' union and several coal-producing companies had entered into [14] a collective bargaining agreement that required any employer that purchased coal from nonunion producers to pay penalties into the union's health and retirement funds. See 455 U.S. at 74-76. The trustees of the fund sued Kaiser Steel in a federal district court for failure to make such payments, basing jurisdiction in part on section 301 of the LMRA. Id. at 76. Kaiser defended by claiming that the contract provision violated section 8(e) of the NLRA and sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act. Id.

Both lower courts held that they could not reach the merits of the illegality defense because to do so would interfere with the primary jurisdiction of the NLRB, but the Supreme Court reversed, holding that "federal court[s] ha[ve] a duty to determine whether a contract violates federal law before enforcing it." Id. at 83. Although the Court acknowledged that section 8(e) makes the use of hot cargo clauses an unfair labor practice -- an area typically within the primary jurisdiction of the NLRB -- it noted that the statute also provides that such clauses are "void at their inception and at all times unenforceable by federal courts. [15] " See id. at 84. The court held that this second component of section 8(e) HN6[] "strongly implies that a court must reach the merits of an illegality defense in order to determine whether the contract clause at issue has any legal effect in the first place." See id. See also Anderson, Hot Cargo Enforcement After Kaiser Steel: A New Look at Section 8(e), 1983 Utah L. Rev. 493, 494-97. This is particularly true when "'labor law questions . . . emerge as collateral issues in suits brought under independent federal remedies, including the antitrust laws.'" Kaiser Steel, 455 U.S. at 85 (quoting Connell Construction, 421 U.S. at 626).

Although Kaiser Steel generally supports Judge Elfvin's decision to reach the merits of the illegality defense in this case, there may be different considerations in a case involving a jurisdictional conflict between a federal court and an arbitrator chosen by the parties for the resolution of their disputes. The Supreme Court has consistently [16] held that HN7[] claims based on federal statutory rights are fully arbitrable and should be decided in such a forum when the parties have so chosen by contract. See, e.g., Shearson/American Express, Inc. v. McMahon, 482 U.S. 220, 55 U.S.L.W. 4757, 4759-63, 96 L. Ed. 2d 185, 107 S. Ct. 2332 (1987) (holding that civil RICO claims and claims of securities fraud are arbitrable); Mitsubishi Motors Corp. v. Soler Chrysler-Plymouth, Inc., 473 U.S. 614, 628-29, 87 L. Ed. 2d 444, 105 S. Ct. 3346 (1985) (holding that federal antitrust claims arising in the context of international business transactions are arbitrable). However, we have held, along with others, that HN8[] deference to an arbitrator may not be necessary or appropriate when there is a claim that the very contract clause that is [*75] the subject of a dispute is itself facially illegal. See, e.g., Danielson v. International Organization of Masters, Mates and Pilots, 521 F.2d 747, 754-55 (2d Cir. 1975). See also NLRB v. Local 1131, Int'l Union, United Automobile, Aerospace and Agricultural Implement Workers of America, 777 F.2d 1131, 1140-41 (6th Cir. 1985) [17] (noting NLRB practice of refusing to defer to arbitration when contract clause is claimed to be illegal); International Union of Operating Engineers, Local 701, 216 N.L.R.B. 233, 234 (1975) (same), enf'd, 578 F.2d 841 (9th Cir. 1978). This seems consistent with the Supreme Court's holding in Kaiser Steel that HN9[] "federal court[s] ha[ve] a duty to determine whether a contract violates federal law before enforcing it." 455 U.S. at 83.

In any event, we need not determine whether the employers' illegality defense in this case should have been left to an arbitrator. We are confident that the parties' conduct in this case constituted a waiver of any rights they may have had to put the matter before an arbitrator. Although the union argued before Judge Elfvin that an arbitrator must decide the legality of the clause at issue, the union does not now challenge the district court's action in reaching the merits of the issue. We have held in a similar context that HN10[] the failure to bring such a cross-appeal constitutes a waiver of any pre-existing claims. [18] United Optical Workers Union Local 408 v. Sterling Optical Co., 500 F.2d 220, 224 (2d Cir. 1974). Moreover, HN11[] "'the litigation of substantial issues going to the merits may constitute a waiver of [the right to] arbitration.'" Rush v. Oppenheimer & Co., 779 F.2d 885, 887 (2d Cir. 1985) (quoting Sweater Bee By Banff, Ltd. v. Manhattan Industries, Inc., 754 F.2d 457, 461 (2d Cir.), cert. denied, 474 U.S. 819, 88 L. Ed. 2d 55, 106 S. Ct. 68 (1985)). On appeal, the union has urged us to affirm the district court's ruling in all respects, a request that certainly constitutes "the litigation of substantial issues going to the merits." The employers have similarly argued the merits on appeal, asking this Court to hold that the contract clause at issue is not protected by the construction industry proviso and is therefore illegal. Furthermore, the employers refused at a much earlier juncture to participate in the grievance and arbitration process. In sum, we believe that we are justified under these circumstances in reaching the [19] merits of the employers' illegality defense. We therefore must consider whether the restrictive subcontracting clause at issue violates either section 8(e) of the NLRA or any relevant provisions of the antitrust laws.

B. Section 8(e) of the NLRA: The Construction Industry Proviso

HN12[] The construction industry proviso "'must be interpreted in light of the statutory setting [of the Landrum-Griffin Act] and the circumstances surrounding its enactment.'" Woelke, 456 U.S. at 653 (quoting Connell Construction, 421 U.S. at 628). See also Sun-Land Nurseries, 793 F.2d at 1113; Donald Schriver, 635 F.2d at 871. Congress' primary purpose in enacting the proviso in 1959 was to "'preserve the status quo' regarding agreements between unions and contractors in the construction industry." Woelke, 456 U.S. at 657 (quoting National Woodwork Manufacturers, 386 U.S. at 637). Recognizing certain unique characteristics of collective bargaining in the construction industry, Congress was trying to [20] "'preserve the present state of the law with respect to . . . the validity of agreements relating to the contracting of work to be done at the site of the construction project.'" Woelke, 456 U.S. at 656 (quoting 105 Cong. Rec. 17,900, 72 L. Ed. 2d 398, 102 S. Ct. 2071 (1959) (comments of Sen. Kennedy), reprinted in 2 NLRB, Legislative History of the Labor-Management Reporting and Disclosure Act of 1959, at 1433 (1959) (Leg. Hist.)). See also H.R. Conf. Rep. No. 1147, 86th Cong., 1st Sess. 39 (1959), reprinted in 1 Leg. Hist. at 943. Thus, HN13[] the test for the permissibility of any particular practice under the construction industry proviso is whether or not the practice is consistent with "Congress' perceptions regarding the status quo in the construction industry [in 1959]." Woelke, 456 U.S. at 657. [*76] See also Sun-Land Nurseries, 793 F.2d at 1114. "'The relevant inquiry is not whether Congress correctly perceived the then state of the law, but rather what its perception of the state of the law was.'" Woelke, 456 U.S. at 658 [21] (quoting Brown v. General Services Administration, 425 U.S. 820, 828, 48 L. Ed. 2d 402, 96 S. Ct. 1961 (1976)).

Restrictive subcontracting clauses in collective bargaining agreements that limited the ability of employers to deal with nonunion or non-signatory subcontractors were common in the construction industry at the time of the passage of the Landrum-Griffin Act. See id. at 659 (citing Lunden, Subcontracting Clauses in Major Contracts (Part I), 84 Monthly Lab. Rev. 579 (1961)). The purpose of such clauses was not only to avoid the unique job-site friction that could exist when union and nonunion workers were employed on the same construction site, but also to recognize the "close community of interests" inherent in the construction industry, where the wages and working conditions of one set of employees could often affect those of another. See id. at 661-63; Donald Schriver, 635 F.2d at 880. See also National Woodwork Manufacturers, 386 U.S. at 638-39; Essex County and Vicinity District Council of Carpenters and Millwrights v. NLRB, 332 F.2d 636, 640 (3d Cir. 1964). [22] The construction industry proviso was designed to recognize these realities and to allow certain otherwise prohibited secondary agreements to promote those interests. These secondary agreements might take the form of union-signatory clauses, in which an employer agreed not to subcontract work to any party that was not a signatory to the contract, see, e.g., Woelke, 456 U.S. at 647-48, 659 n.12, or union-standards clauses, in which an employer agreed not to subcontract work to any party unless that party agreed to comply with the terms of the union contract, see id. at 659 n.12; see also Donald Schriver, 635 F.2d at 880. As Senator Kennedy, the chairman of the Senate conferees who produced the final version of Landrum-Griffin in 1959, said:

> Agreements by which a contractor in the construction industry promises not to subcontract work on a construction site to a nonunion contractor appear to be legal today. They will not be unlawful under [the proviso to] section 8(e). The proviso is also applicable to all other agreements involving undertakings not to do work on > a construction project site with other contractors or subcontractors [23] regardless of the precise relation between them.

105 Cong. Rec. at 17,900, reprinted in 2 Leg. Hist. at 1433.

The clause at issue in the instant case therefore clearly is protected by the construction industry proviso insofar as it bars the signatory employers from subcontracting work to other employers that are "not a party to or bound by th[e] Agreement." The more difficult question, however, is whether the clause has a uniquely and impermissibly broad scope by also precluding signatory employers from accepting subcontracting work from other contractors that are not bound by the agreement negotiated by AGC. The employers in the instant case argue that this aspect of the clause is a novel extension of such subcontracting clauses that first appeared in the industry around 1979. If they are correct, of course, then this aspect of the clause would not be protected by the construction industry proviso because it could not have been part of the "status quo in the construction industry [in 1959]." Woelke, 456 U.S. at 657. However, we believe, as did Judge Elfvin, that there is sufficient evidence indicating that practices such as the one at [24] issue here were indeed part of the status quo in the construction industry at the time of the enactment of Landrum-Griffin and that Congress therefore intended to protect such clauses.

First, as we have noted, Senator Kennedy, in commenting on the compromise version of Landrum-Griffin produced by a [*77] conference committee, noted that the proviso would reach "all . . . agreements involving undertakings not to do work on a construction project site with other contractors or subcontractors regardless of the precise relation between them." 105 Cong. Rec. at 17,900, reprinted in 2 Leg. Hist. at 1433 (emphasis added). This seems to indicate that hot cargo provisions would be tolerated in the construction industry whether the signatory employer was subcontracting work to or receiving it from a nonsignatory. Moreover, as the Supreme Court in Woelke noted, the comments of the chairman of the Senate conferees are "entitled to substantial weight." Woelke, 456 U.S. at 656 n.9.

Second, the so-called "Lunden report," a study of pre-Landrum-Griffin subcontracting practices relied upon by the Supreme Court in Woelke, indicates that clauses nearly identical [25] to the one at issue here were indeed part of the status quo in the construction industry in 1959. The Lunden report examined more than 1,687 major collective bargaining agreements, including 155 in the construction industry. See Lunden, Part I, supra, at 579-82. More than fifty of the construction industry contracts studied contained restrictive subcontracting clauses. See Lunden, Subcontracting Clauses in Major Contracts (Part II), 84 Monthly Lab. Rev. 715, 715 (1961). The report quoted from one typical example of such a clause, which provided:

> Any employer or shop signed to this agreement shall not sublet to or from any . . . company . . . unless the work to be performed is performed under the terms of this contract, and the employer whose employees perform such work is either signatory to this contract or has signed a short form contract which requires acceptance of and being bound by all the terms and conditions of this contract.

Id. (emphasis added). Thus, clauses prohibiting subcontracting both to and from non-signatories appear to have existed before the passage of Landrum-Griffin. This conclusion is further borne out by [26] the testimony of Senator Curtis regarding an early Senate version of the Landrum-Griffin legislation. Senator Curtis noted that hot cargo clauses were then used "extensively" by major trade unions and that under such clauses prevalent in the construction industry in Baltimore, "unionized general contractors could not hire nonunion subcontractors, and unionized subcontractors could not work for nonunion general contractors." Labor-Management Reform Legislation: Hearings Before the Subcommittee on Labor, 86th Cong., 1st Sess. 752 (1959). The employers in the instant case argue that Senator Curtis' comments are unpersuasive because he made them in support of more restrictive legislation that ultimately was rejected. The employers, however, misunderstand the import of Senator Curtis' comments. They are persuasive not because of Senator Curtis' role in the passage of Landrum-Griffin, but because they provide one more piece of evidence that subcontracting clauses such as the one at issue here were indeed part of the status quo in the construction industry in 1959.

Finally, as the Supreme Court noted in Woelke, courts and the NLRB had upheld broad subcontracting clauses in construction [27] industry labor contracts in the years prior to 1959. See Woelke, 456 U.S. at 658-59 & n.11

(citing Associated General Contractors of America, Inc. (St. Maurice, Helmkamp & Musser), 119 N.L.R.B. 1026 (1957), enf'd, 44 L.R.R.M. 2078, 266 F.2d 905 (D.C. Cir.), cert. denied, 361 U.S. 834, 80 S. Ct. 86, 4 L. Ed. 2d 76 (1959)). See also id. at 659 n.12 (noting other evidence indicating prevalence of broad subcontracting clauses in pre-1959 construction industry). This evidence and other factors led a unanimous Supreme Court in Woelke to take a permissive stance regarding such clauses, holding that the "construction industry proviso . . . ordinarily shelters union signatory subcontracting clauses that are sought or negotiated in the context of a collective-bargaining relationship, even when not limited in application to particular jobsites at which both union and nonunion workers are employed." Id. at 666. Many of the same factors, as well as the [*78] evidence of pre-1959 labor contracts similar to that at issue here, dictate that we take a similar stance. We believe that the clause at issue in this [28] case falls within the intended scope of the construction industry proviso.

The employers in this case nonetheless argue that this clause is inconsistent with the overall policies underlying the National Labor Relations Act. They argue that the clause must satisfy what amounts to a two-part test: that it be part of the status quo in the construction industry as of 1959 and that it be generally consistent with policies underlying the NLRA. We disagree. If this practice was part of the status quo in the industry in 1959, then Congress in drafting section 8(e) meant to protect the practice and it follows a fortiori that it is consistent with the NLRA amendments contained in Landrum-Griffin. See Sun-Land Nurseries, 793 F.2d at 1114 n.5 (relying on Woelke's test of the status quo in 1959 and rejecting any further inquiry into the "purpose" of a clause).

In a similar vein, the employers argue that the clause at issue here will force contractors in the affected region of New York State to recognize particular unions or particular union standards in order to secure work. That may be so. Nevertheless, we must assume that Congress in 1959 anticipated such consequences [29] and nonetheless decided to enact the construction industry proviso. We should not second-guess the Congress on such policy matters. Secondary subcontracting agreements such as the one at issue here inevitably create a so-called "'top-down' pressure for unionization; they . . . take the representation decision out of the hands of the employees and place it in the hands of the employers." Woelke, 456 U.S. at 662-63. Although Congress sought in 1959 to limit such "top-down" organization with the passage of section 8(e), see id. at 662-64; Connell Construction, 421 U.S. at 632-33, it nonetheless "concluded that the community of interests on the construction jobsite justified the top-down organizational consequences that might attend the [practices authorized by the construction industry proviso]." Woelke, 456 U.S. at 663. See also A.L. Adams Construction Co. v. Georgia Power Co., 733 F.2d 853, 856 (11th Cir. 1984) (holding that pressure on subcontractors to unionize caused by a restrictive subcontracting clause is acceptable if clause is part of a valid collective bargaining agreement), cert. [30] denied, 471 U.S. 1075, 85 L. Ed. 2d 511, 105 S. Ct. 2155 (1985). Congress made a similar concession for the construction industry when it enacted section 8(f) of the NLRA, 29 U.S.C. § 158(f) (1982), allowing so-called prehire agreements, under which employers and unions may enter into collective bargaining agreements in certain circumstances even when the employees in the bargaining unit have not yet designated the union as their representative. See Woelke, 456 U.S. at 663-64.

The employers here argue that this clause creates a unique brand of "bottom-up" pressure, by which they presumably mean that nonunion general contractors such as Bhandari might be forced to recognize a particular union or to comply with certain standards in order to solicit work from unionized subcontractors such as Wellington. The potential antidemocratic effect of such a clause on workers, however, is no different than that created by the more typical clause discussed in Woelke; it still tends to create a pressure that will emanate from management downward within the structure of any given employer. The secondary organizational pressure created [31] by the clause at issue here is not materially different from that created by a clause that restricts only the subcontracting of work to non-signatories. In fact, the Supreme Court in Woelke "recognize[d] that 'the use of union signatory subcontracting clauses [may] give a particular union a monopoly position in a labor market,' yet upheld such clauses nevertheless." Sun-Land Nurseries, 793 F.2d at 1114 (quoting Woelke, 456 U.S. at 663 n.15) (citation omitted).

[*79] C. Antitrust Laws: Exemptions

Although the clause at issue here is protected by the construction industry proviso to section 8(e) of the NLRA, it is not necessarily beyond the reach of the federal antitrust laws. See id. at 1115. See also Pennington, 381 U.S. at 664-66. The practice also must fall within one of two recognized labor law exemptions from antitrust scrutiny -- the statutory and nonstatutory exemptions. See, e.g., Connell Construction, 421 U.S. at 621-22; Sun-Land Nurseries, 793 F.2d at 1115; Home Box Office, Inc. v. Directors Guild of America, Inc., 531 F. Supp. 578, 585 (S.D.N.Y. 1982), [32] aff'd, 708 F.2d 95 (2d Cir. 1983) (per curiam). HN14[] The statutory exemptions, which are contained in certain provisions of the Clayton Act, see 15 U.S.C. § 17 (1982); 29 U.S.C. § 52 (1982), and the Norris-LaGuardia Act, see 29 U.S.C. §§ 104, 105, 113 (1982), exempt certain union activities from antitrust scrutiny. Connell Construction, 421 U.S. at 621-22. They do not, however, reach concerted activity between a union and a nonlabor party, such as an employer. Id.; Sun-Land Nurseries, 793 F.2d at 1115. Therefore, if the clause at issue is to survive, it must find protection in the nonstatutory exemption, which does permit certain union-employer agreements. See Connell Construction, 421 U.S. at 622 (citing Local Union No. 189, Amalgamated Meat Cutters & Butcher Workmen of North America v. Jewel Tea Co., 381 U.S. 676, 14 L. Ed. 2d 640, 85 S. Ct. 1596 (1965)).

The purpose of the nonstatutory exemption is "to reconcile [the] conflicting national policies [inherent in the labor and antitrust laws] -- one protecting business [33] competition, the other encouraging collective bargaining." Home Box Office, 531 F. Supp. at 591. In what we have called the "classic formulation" of the nonstatutory exemption, see Berman Enterprises Inc. v. Local 333, United Marine Division, Int'l Longshoremen's Ass'n, 644 F.2d 930, 935 n.8 (2d Cir.), cert. denied, 454 U.S. 965, 102 S. Ct. 506, 70 L. Ed. 2d 381 (1981), a plurality of the Supreme Court in Jewel Tea held that HN15[] agreements between a union and an employer are exempt from antitrust scrutiny if they are > so intimately related to wages, hours and working conditions that the union['s] successful attempt to obtain th[e] provision[s] through bona fide, arm's length bargaining in pursuit of their own labor union policies, and not at the behest of or in combination with nonlabor groups, falls within the protection of the national labor policy and therefore is exempt from the Sherman Act.

Jewel Tea, 381 U.S. at 689-90. See also [34] Berman Enterprises, 644 F.2d at 935 n.8; Home Box Office, 531 F. Supp. at 590.

HN16[] In assessing whether any particular agreement is protected by the nonstatutory exemption, the "'crucial determinant is not the form of the agreement . . . but its relative impact on the product market and the interests of union members.'" Id. (quoting Jewel Tea, 381 U.S. at 690 n. 5). In essence, the test is one that balances the conflicting policies embodied in the labor and antitrust laws, with the policies inherent in labor law serving as the first point of reference. See Jewel Tea, 381 U.S. at 689-90; Home Box Office, 531 F. Supp. at 591-93. See also 6 Von Kalinowski, Antitrust Law and Trade Regulation, § 48.03 [1], at 48-30 -- 48-32 (1987). First, the agreement at issue must further goals that are protected by national labor law and that are within the scope of traditionally mandatory subjects of collective bargaining. See Jewel Tea, 381 U.S. at 689-90; Sun-Land Nurseries, 793 F.2d at 1115-17; Consolidated Express, Inc. v. New York Shipping Ass'n, Inc., 602 F.2d 494, 517-18 (3d Cir. 1979), [35] vacated and remanded on other grounds, 448 U.S. 902, 100 S. Ct. 3040, 65 L. Ed. 2d 1131 (1980); Mackey v. National Football League, 543 F.2d 606, 614-15 (8th Cir. 1976), cert. dismissed, 434 U.S. 801 (1977); Home Box Office, 531 F. Supp. at 591-93; 6 Von Kalinowski, supra, at 48-32. Second, the agreement must not impose a "direct restraint on the business market [that] has [*80] substantial anticompetitive effects, both actual and potential, that would not follow naturally from the elimination of competition over wages and working conditions [that results from collective bargaining agreements]." Connell Construction, 421 U.S. at 625. See also Mid-America Regional Bargaining Ass'n v. Will County Carpenters District Council, 675 F.2d 881, 892 (7th Cir.), cert. denied, 459

U.S. 860, 103 S. Ct. 132, 74 L. Ed. 2d 114 (1982); Consolidated Express, 602 F.2d at 517; Home Box Office, 531 F. Supp. at 591; 6 Von Kalinowski, supra, at 48-32. [2]

[36] Given these standards, and the background of the construction industry proviso discussed earlier, we agree with the position taken by the Ninth Circuit, sitting in banc, in Sun-Land Nurseries. There, the court rejected an antitrust challenge to a restrictive subcontracting clause, holding that clauses protected by the construction industry proviso "must be given breathing room to operate in their intended fashion without interference from the antitrust laws." Sun-Land Nurseries, 793 F.2d at 1117. Although the court "refuse[d] to rule that such clauses are wholly exempt from scrutiny if they are shown to be instruments of an antitrust conspiracy otherwise existing, [it did] hold that a valid subcontracting clause contained in a collective bargaining agreement cannot serve as the basis of an antitrust claim." Id. (emphasis added). See also Suburban Tile Center, Inc. v. Rockford Building and Construction Trades Council, 354 F.2d 1, 3 (7th Cir. 1965) ("success in securing" restrictive subcontracting clause is not alone enough to constitute an antitrust violation), cert. denied, 384 U.S. 960, 16 L. Ed. 2d 673, 86 S. Ct. 1585 (1966). [37] Cf. A.L. Adams Construction, 733 F.2d at 855-58 & n.5 (holding, without considering nonstatutory antitrust exemption, that a clause in a valid collective bargaining agreement that is permitted by the construction industry proviso is permissible under antitrust law in the absence of any other evidence of an unlawful restraint on trade). This comports with the Supreme Court's suggestion in Jewel Tea that restrictive subcontracting clauses obtained as a result of "bona fide, arm's-length bargaining in pursuit of . . . [legitimate] labor policies" are entitled to the protection of the nonstatutory exemption, whereas agreements secured "at the behest of or in [unlawful] combination with nonlabor groups" are not. See Jewel Tea, 381 U.S. at 689-90. It is also consistent with Connell Construction, which involved a restrictive subcontracting agreement between a union and an employer with whom the union had not engaged in collective bargaining. See 421 U.S. at 619. The Court held the clause illegal, but suggested that such an agreement might have enjoyed an antitrust exemption "if it [had been] included in a lawful collective-bargaining [38] agreement." Id. at 625-26 (citing Pennington, 381 U.S. at 664-65; Jewel Tea, 381 U.S. at 689-90).

The subcontracting clause in the instant case was included in a valid collective bargaining agreement and we have no reason to believe that it was the product of anything other than "bona fide, arm's-length bargaining," Jewel Tea, 381 U.S. at 690. Moreover, in seeking the inclusion of the clause in the agreement, the union was pursuing a legitimate bargaining objective, see Suburban Tile Center, 354 F.2d at 3, and was undoubtedly [*81] seeking to promote the "close community of interest[s]" among construction workers within its jurisdiction. See Woelke, 456 U.S. at 661-63. See also National Woodwork Manufacturers, 386 U.S. at 638-39. Although the agreement will undoubtedly have some anticompetitive impact in the affected area of New York State -- particularly among employers that do not recognize the union or that are not willing to be bound by the terms of the AGC agreement -- we believe that certain anticompetitive pressures, like organizational pressures, [39] are "implicit in the construction industry proviso," Woelke, 456 U.S. at 663; see also Jim McNeff, Inc. v. Todd, 461 U.S. 260, 270 n.9, 75 L. Ed. 2d 830, 103 S. Ct. 1753 (1983). Even a threat that the union involved might achieve monopoly status in the relevant labor market would not, standing alone, necessarily mandate antitrust liability. Cf. Woelke, 456 U.S. at 663 n.15; Sun-Land Nurseries, 793 F.2d at 1114. As long as this clause was embodied in a legitimate collective bargaining agreement, we believe that our primary touchstone in assessing its validity must be the policies embodied in federal labor law. Cf. Home Box Office, 531 F. Supp. at 591-93. Therefore, because we detect no evidence here of "an antitrust conspiracy otherwise existing," see Sun-Land Nurseries, 793 F.2d at 1117, we believe that the protection of the construction industry proviso to section 8(e) of the NLRA precludes any further antitrust scrutiny. The clause at issue is protected by a nonstatutory antitrust exemption.

---

[2] In Mackey, the Eighth Circuit articulated a three-part test to determine whether a particular agreement enjoys the protection of the nonstatutory exemption. First, the restraint on trade must primarily affect only the parties to the agreement. Second, the agreement must concern a mandatory subject of collective bargaining. Third, the agreement must be the product of bona fide, arm's-length bargaining. See Mackey, 543 F.2d at 614. The Ninth Circuit recently employed this three-part analysis. See Continental Maritime of San Francisco, Inc. v. Pacific Coast Metal Trades District Council, 817 F.2d 1391, 1393 (9th Cir. 1987). Although we believe that the agreement in the instant case could satisfy such a test, we need not adopt this particular analysis. Rather, we rely on the discussion of Jewel Tea and Connell Construction by Judge Sofaer in Home Box Office, 531 F. Supp. at 591-93, which we subsequently endorsed. See 708 F.2d at 95.

CONCLUSION

For all of the foregoing reasons, the judgment of the district court [40] is affirmed and the parties are ordered to proceed to arbitration under the terms of the collective bargaining agreement to determine if there has been a violation of the agreement.

Collins v. Associated Pathologists

United States Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit

October 27, 1987, Argued ; April 20, 1988, Decided

No. 87-1399

Reporter

844 F.2d 473 *; 1988 U.S. App. LEXIS 5266 ; 1988-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P67,971

James G. P. Collins, Plaintiff-Appellant, v. Associated Pathologists, Ltd., et al., Defendants-Appellees

Prior History: [1] Appeal from the United States District Court for the Central District of Illinois, Peoria Division, No. 84 C 1332, Michael M. Mihm, Judge.

Core Terms

pathology, pathologists, district court, monopolization, patients, antitrust, staff privileges, summary judgment, Sherman Act, boycott, Electric, compete, relevant market, genuine, summary judgment motion, hospital service, anesthesiologist, conspiracy, practicing, products, cases, grant summary judgment, individual defendant, exclusive contract, provide a service, tying arrangement, coal company, consumers, counts

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Summary Judgment > General Overview

HN1[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

The very nature of antitrust litigation encourages summary disposition of such cases when permissible.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Summary Judgment > General Overview

HN2[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

The use of summary judgment is not only permitted but encouraged in certain circumstances, including antitrust cases.

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > General Overview

Evidence > ... > Illegally Obtained Evidence > Eavesdropping, Interception & Wiretapping > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Actual Monopolization > Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices > General Overview

Evidence > Inferences & Presumptions > Inferences

HN3[] Inchoate Crimes, Conspiracy

Any inference of conspiracy is unreasonable when (1) some portions of the evidence suggest that defendants conspired in ways that did not injure plaintiffs, and (2) the evidence that bore directly on the price-cutting conspiracy did not rebut the more plausible inference that petitioners were cutting prices to compete in the American market, not to monopolize it.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Genuine Disputes

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Materiality of Facts

HN4[] Summary Judgment, Burdens of Proof

Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(e) requires the non-moving party to establish that there is a genuine issue of material fact.

Civil Procedure > Trials > Judgment as Matter of Law > Directed Verdicts

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Motions for Summary Judgment > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Genuine Disputes

Civil Procedure > Trials > Judgment as Matter of Law > General Overview

HN5[] Judgment as Matter of Law, Directed Verdicts

When the moving party has carried its burden under Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(c), its opponent must do more than simply show that there is some metaphysical doubt as to the material facts. This means that where the record taken as a whole could not lead a rational trier of fact to find for the non-moving party, there is no genuine issue for trial. This language indicates that a summary judgment motion is like a trial motion for a directed verdict and that "genuine" allows some quantitative determination of the sufficiency of the evidence.

Civil Procedure > Trials > Judgment as Matter of Law > Directed Verdicts

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Trials > Judgment as Matter of Law > General Overview

HN6[] Judgment as Matter of Law, Directed Verdicts

The test for summary judgment is whether sufficient evidence exists in the pre-trial record to allow the non-moving party to survive a motion for directed verdict.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

HN7[] Monopolies & Monopolization, Conspiracy to Monopolize

If the factual context renders a claim implausible, if the claim is one that simply makes no economic sense, that party must come forward with more persuasive evidence to support its claim than would otherwise be necessary. The absence of any plausible motive to engage in the conduct charged is highly relevant to whether a genuine issue for trial exists. Lack of motive bears on the range of permissible conclusions that might be drawn from ambiguous evidence: if petitioners had no rational economic motive to conspire, and if their conduct is consistent with other, equally plausible explanations, the conduct does not give rise to an inference of conspiracy.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Exclusive & Reciprocal Dealing > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Types of Commercial Transactions > Sales of Goods > Output, Exclusive & Requirements Agreements

HN8[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Exclusive & Reciprocal Dealing

Agreements are not an unreasonable restraint of trade even if they operate as exclusive contracts.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Exclusive & Reciprocal Dealing > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Types of Commercial Transactions > Sales of Goods > Output, Exclusive & Requirements Agreements

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > Relevant Market

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN9[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Exclusive & Reciprocal Dealing

Not all exclusive contracts violate the Sherman Act. Whether a particular contract does so depends on the effect that contract has upon competition in the relevant market place. The controlling factor in this determination is the relevant market area.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Preclusion of Judgments > Full Faith & Credit > General Overview

Commercial Law (UCC) > Sales (Article 2) > Form, Formation & Readjustment > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Horizontal Refusals to Deal > General Overview

HN10[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

In the Seventh Circuit at least boycotts are illegal per se only if used to enforce agreements that are themselves illegal per se, for example price fixing agreements.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Monopolies & Monopolization > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN11[] Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

The language of the Illinois Antitrust Act, Ill. Rev. Stat. ch. 38, § 60-3(2), closely tracks the language of § 1 of the Sherman Act and the language of the Illinois Antitrust Act, Ill. Rev. Stat. ch. 38, § 60-3(3), is very similar to the language of § 2 of the Sherman Act.

Counsel: Peter B. Freeman, Hopkins & Sutter, Chicago, Illinois, for Plaintiff-Appellant.

Susan M. Hickman, Hinshaw, Culbertson, Moelmann, Hoban & Fuller, Springfield, Illinois, Hugh J. Graham, III, Graham & Graham, Springfield, Illinois, for Defendants-Appellees.

Judges: Cummings, Coffey and Easterbrook, Circuit Judges.

Opinion by: CUMMINGS

Opinion

[*474] CUMMINGS, Circuit Judge.

Plaintiff Dr. James G. P. Collins, a pathologist, is currently employed and practicing his specialty in San Leandro, California. Dr. Collins claims that he was forced to accept his current position after antitrust violations deprived him of his former position at St. John's Hospital in Springfield, Illinois. [1] [3] More specifically, in a ten-count amended complaint Dr. Collins alleged that the contractual arrangement between St. [*475] John's and Associated [1] Dr. Collins is not unique in turning to antitrust laws for relief. Yet despite the growing frequency with which doctors file antitrust claims, they have had little success. See Enders, Federal Antitrust Issues Involved in the Denial of Medical Staff Privileges, 17 Loy. U. Chi. L.J. 331 (1986).

Pathologists, Ltd. ("APL"), the group providing pathology services to the hospital, was a combination in restraint of trade, an unlawful boycott, and an unlawful tying agreement. Dr. Collins also accused APL [2] of monopolization, attempted monopolization and conspiracy to monopolize the provision of pathology services. Finally, Dr. Collins' pendent state claims alleged violations of state antitrust law, breach of contract, misrepresentation, wrongful removal or reduction in staff privileges and tortious interference with staff privileges. Defendants St. John's Hospital and APL [2] filed motions for summary judgment. In a thorough opinion, Judge Mihm painstakingly examined the voluminous discovery material filed in this case and concluded that Dr. Collins failed to raise a genuine issue of material fact with regard to any of his claims. 676 F. Supp. 1388, 1411 (C.D. Ill. 1987). Accordingly, the court granted the defendants' motions for summary judgment. We affirm on all counts that are still pressed. [3]

I

From October 1974 through January 31, 1982, when the directors of APL asked for and received Dr. Collins' resignation, Dr. Collins was an employee and, for most of that period, a shareholder of APL. Throughout the period in which he was employed by APL, Dr. Collins worked under contracts between APL and St. [4] John's as a pathologist at St. John's. The contracts between APL and St. John's required APL to provide complete and adequate pathology services to St. John's. APL's contractual obligation to provide pathology services included engaging the staff necessary to provide "full and complete professional service for the department."

Following his forced resignation from APL in January 1982, Dr. Collins sought to continue his employment at St. John's as an independent pathologist, separate from the APL contract. Although St. John's did not remove or reduce Dr. Collins' staff privileges, it refused to employ him as a pathologist. This refusal and the contractual relationships surrounding it provide the bases for Dr. Collins' claims.

II

Dr. Collins begins his argument by challenging the standard for summary judgment employed by the district court. He cites Poller v. Columbia Broadcasting System, Inc., 368 U.S. 464, 473, 7 L. Ed. 2d 458, 82 S. Ct. 486 (1962), for the proposition that courts should hesitate before granting summary judgment in complex antitrust litigation. His argument ignores cases in this Circuit limiting Poller and noting that [5] HN1[] the very nature of antitrust litigation encourages summary disposition of such cases when permissible, see Car Carriers, Inc. v. Ford Motor Co., 745 F.2d 1101, 1106 (7th Cir. 1984), certiorari denied, 470 U.S. 1054, 84 L. Ed. 2d 821, 105 S. Ct. 1758 (1985); Havoco of America, Ltd. v. Shell Oil Co., 626 F.2d 549 (7th Cir. 1980); Lupia v. Stella D'Oro Biscuit Co., Inc., 586 F.2d 1163, 1166 (7th Cir. 1978), certiorari denied, 440 U.S. 982, 60 L. Ed. 2d 242, 99 S. Ct. 1791 (1979), as well as the recent trilogy of cases in which the Supreme Court made clear that, contrary to the emphasis of some prior precedent, HN2[] the use of summary judgment is not only permitted but encouraged in certain circumstances, including antitrust cases, Celotex Corp. v. Catrett, 477 U.S. 317, 91 L. Ed. 2d 265, 106 S. Ct. 2548 (1986); Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc., 477 U.S. 242, 106 S. Ct. 2505, 91 L. Ed. 2d 202 (1986); *Matsushita Electric [476] Industrial Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538, 106 S. Ct. 1348 (1986); [6] see generally Childress, A New Era for Summary Judgments: Recent Shifts at the Supreme Court, 116 F.R.D. 183 (1987).

The first of the trilogy cases, Matsushita, is especially instructive because it involved the grant of a summary judgment motion in complex antitrust litigation. The plaintiffs in that case, Zenith and National Union Electric Corporation, filed suit alleging that 21 corporations, Japanese manufacturers of consumer electronic products and their American subsidiaries that sold the products in this country, had illegally conspired to drive American firms from the market through a concerted predatory pricing scheme. The district court found that HN3[] any inference of conspiracy was unreasonable because (1) some portions of the evidence suggested that defendants conspired in ways that did not injure plaintiffs, and (2) the evidence that bore directly on the price-cutting conspiracy did not rebut the more plausible inference that petitioners were cutting prices to compete in the American market, not to monopolize it. The court then granted summary judgment in favor [7] of all defendants on all counts.

---

[2] Collins filed suit against APL, the corporation, as well as the four pathologists employed by the corporation, each of whom was sued individually. The estate of a fifth individual pathologist was named as a defendant in Collins' second amended complaint. However, as Jessie Fulcher, executrix of the estate of the fifth pathologist, Dr. J. Herschel Fulcher, Jr., is not listed by the plaintiff's or the other defendants' brief as an appellee and has not filed a brief in this Court, the estate appears to have been dropped as a defendant.

[3] Count VII, breach of contract, and Count VIII, misrepresentation, have evidently been abandoned. Plaintiff's briefs and oral argument do not fault the district court's disposition of those counts. See 676 F. Supp. at 1408-1410.

The Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit reversed. It concluded that a reasonable factfinder could find a conspiracy. Commenting on the Third Circuit's opinion, the Supreme Court noted that the circuit court had not considered if it was as plausible to conclude that defendants' price-cutting behavior was independent as it was to conclude that it was conspiratorial. The Supreme Court reversed and remanded, ordering that the summary judgment be reinstated unless the Third Circuit could find some other evidence in the record that excluded the possibility that defendants underpriced plaintiffs to compete for business rather than to implement an economically senseless conspiracy. Id. 475 U.S. at 597-598.

In reversing the circuit court the Supreme Court relied on a seemingly new evidentiary standard for summary judgments. The Court restated the language of Fed. Rule Civ. Proc. 56(e) HN4[] requiring the non-moving party to establish that there is a genuine issue of material fact, but the Court redefined "genuine." Id. at 586-587. [8] It stated: "HN5[] when the moving party has carried its burden under Rule 56(c), its opponent must do more than simply show that there is some metaphysical doubt as to the material facts." Id. This means that "where the record taken as a whole could not lead a rational trier of fact to find for the non-moving party, there is no 'genuine issue for trial.'" Id. This language indicates that a summary judgment motion is like a trial motion for a directed verdict and that "genuine" allows some quantitative determination of the sufficiency of the evidence. The trial court still cannot resolve factual disputes that could go to a jury at trial, but weak factual claims can be weeded out through summary judgment motions. The existence of a triable issue is no longer sufficient to survive a motion for summary judgment. Id. at 587. Instead, the triable issue must be evaluated in its factual context, which suggests that HN6[] the test for summary judgment is whether sufficient evidence exists in the [9] pre-trial record to allow the non-moving party to survive a motion for directed verdict. See Childress, 116 F.R.D. at 186.

Further, the Supreme Court seems to require lower courts to engage in a qualitative review of the claim that goes beyond a minimum quantitative sufficiency of the evidence type of review. "It follows from these settled principles that HN7[] if the factual context renders respondents' claim implausible -- if the claim is one that simply makes no economic sense-respondents must come forward with more persuasive evidence to support their claim than would otherwise be necessary." Matsushita, 475 U.S. at 587. "The absence of any plausible motive to engage in the conduct charged is highly relevant to whether a 'genuine issue for trial' exists. Lack of motive bears on the range of permissible conclusions that might be drawn from ambiguous evidence: if petitioners had no rational economic motive to conspire, and if their conduct is consistent with [*477] other, equally plausible explanations, the conduct does not give rise to an inference of conspiracy. [10] " Id. at 596-597. Matsushita, not Poller, is now the applicable standard and the district court in this case applied it correctly.

III

In Count III of his amended complaint, Dr. Collins asserts that the series of consecutive contracts between APL and St. John's created and maintained an illegal tying arrangement in violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act. Each of the three contracts required APL to provide complete and adequate pathology services to St. John's. St. John's then included the pathology services provided by APL in the package St. John's presented to its patients. This package included the full range of facilities and services necessary for the patients' treatment and maintenance in the hospital. As a result of this arrangement, patients who required pathology services purchased those provided for in the package -- the services of APL.

Dr. Collins contends that this arrangement constitutes illegal tying. However, a tying arrangement demands by definition two separate products -- a tying product and a tied product. In an attempt to satisfy this requisite, Dr. Collins argues that the tied product consists of the hospital facilities and services [11] provided to patients at St. John's and that the tying product consists of the pathology services provided by the individual defendants.

Whether hospital services and pathology services are, as Dr. Collins asserts, two separate products "turns not on the functional relationship between them, but rather on the character of the demand for the two items." Collins, 676 F. Supp. at 1402 (emphasis in original) (quoting Jefferson Parish Hospital Dist. No. 2 v. Hyde, 466 U.S. 2, 19, 80 L. Ed. 2d 2, 104 S. Ct. 1551). Therefore, in this case no tying arrangement can exist unless there is a distinct demand for the purchase of pathological services by hospital patients separate from the demand for the hospital facilities and services provided by St. John's; and further, this demand must be sufficient to identify a distinct product market in which it is efficient to offer pathological services separately from hospital services. See Jefferson Parish, 466 U.S. at 22-23.

An indicator of whether a separate demand exists for a product is whether consumers make specific requests. In Jefferson Parish, the plaintiff anesthesiologist supported [12] his tying claim with "ample and uncontroverted testimony that patients or surgeons often request specific anesthesiologists to come to a hospital to provide anesthesia, and that the choice of an individual anesthesiologist separate from the choice of a hospital is particularly frequent in respondent's specialty, obstetric anesthesiology." Jefferson Parish, 466 U.S. at 22. In contrast, the evidence presented in this case is overwhelming that patients never request and physicians rarely request specific pathologists. The evidence presented here also established that pathology is a laboratory-based specialty, so that the pathologist, unlike the anesthesiologist, has no face-to-face contact with the patient and the treating physician. Clearly, the relationship between hospitals and pathologists differs from that of hospitals and anesthesiologists. See id. at 23 n.36 (specifically recognizing that "anesthesiologists may differ from radiologists, pathologists and other types of hospital-based physicians").

Contrary to the finding of the Supreme Court in Jefferson Parish that "the record amply supports the conclusion that consumers differentiate between [13] anesthesiological services and other hospital services provided by [the defendant hospital]," id. at 23, the district court in Dr. Collins' case found that pathology services are just one of the many services provided by the hospital for its patients. As such, no separate demand exists for pathological services that is sufficient to create a separate market. 676 F. Supp. at 1403; see also, Drs. Steuer and Latham v. National Medical Enterprises, Inc., 672 F. Supp. 1489, 1506-1508 (D. S.C. 1987) (in [*478] which the record contained uncontroverted evidence consistent with and supportive of the reasoning of the district court herein that pathology services are not a product separate from hospital services). Because pathology services are not a separate and distinct product from hospital services, they combine in the form of one product, not two tied products. Without two products, the alleged tying arrangement is impossible.

IV

Dr. Collins also argues that the agreements entered into between St. John's and APL are exclusive contracts that constitute unreasonable restraints of trade in violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act. [14] Whether the agreements were indeed exclusive is a disputed factual issue, but the district court nevertheless granted summary judgment in favor of the defendants because it held that "the HN8[] agreements are not an unreasonable restraint of trade even if they operate as exclusive contracts." Collins, 676 F. Supp. at 1394. We affirm the grant of summary judgment.

HN9[] Not all exclusive contracts violate the Sherman Act. Whether a particular contract does so depends on the effect that contract has upon competition in the relevant market place. Tampa Electric Co. v. Nashville Coal Co., 365 U.S. 320, 327, 5 L. Ed. 2d 580, 81 S. Ct. 623 (1961). [4] The controlling factor in this determination is the relevant market area. Id. at 329. Thus we must determine the relevant market, which in this case first requires clarification of the relevant product.

---

[4] Although Tampa Electric was brought under Section 3 of the Clayton Act, courts routinely rely on its analysis for cases arising under Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act. Since the proscription of Section 3 of the Clayton Act is broader than that of Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act, if a contract does not fall within the relevant market coverage of the Clayton Act it is not forbidden by the Sherman Act. In addition, while Section 3 of the Clayton Act does not apply to services, Chelson v. Oregonian Pub. Co., 715 F.2d 1368, 1372 (9th Cir. 1983), reference is still appropriate for the analogous "relevant market" jurisprudence thereunder.

[15] The relevant product here is pathologists, not pathology services, and the corresponding relevant market is the market in which pathologists compete for jobs, not the market in which hospitals compete in offering pathology services to patients. This conclusion is reached both by application of our earlier holding that no market exists for pathology services separate from hospital services and by an analysis of the exclusive dealing claim under the provisions of Tampa Electric.

First, as we held earlier, from the perspective of consumers of medical services, the patients in St. John's, there is no distinct demand for and thus no market for pathological services. See supra at 477-478. Therefore the contract between St. John's and APL for the provision of pathological services could not have had an impact on patients. The only segment possibly affected by the contract is that of providers of pathological services, namely, hospitals and clinical laboratories. Therefore the exclusive contract affects where pathologists can be employed and the relevant market is the market in which pathologists compete for jobs.

The same conclusion results from an analysis of the exclusive [16] dealing claim alone and begins with Tampa Electric. The exclusive contract at issue there was a protracted requirements contract between a public utility, Tampa Electric Co., and a coal company. In its determination of whether the contract was an unreasonable restraint of trade that foreclosed competition, the Court did not consider any impact the contract might have on the consumers who purchased the resultant electricity. Instead, the Court focused on potential competitors of the party to the contract with Tampa Electric, other coal companies. The Court looked to the other coal companies that could have supplied Tampa Electric and concluded that the relevant market area was the area in which these coal companies competed. Id. at 330-333.

As the district court noted, in the present case, St. John's is in the position of Tampa Electric and APL is in the position of the [*479] supplying coal company. 676 F. Supp. at 1395. In determining whether this exclusive arrangement forecloses competition, the focus is upon competition between pathologists for the right to practice at St. John's. So the contract must be viewed in light of its effect on pathologists [17] competing for work, not from the effect on patients at St. John's whose options are limited.

Thus the market that must be determined is that in which pathologists compete for jobs. This market is not necessarily the same as the market in which hospitals compete in offering the services procured by the contract to patients, see Jefferson Parish, 466 U.S. at 29, and in this case it is not the same. The district court found that Dr. Collins failed to show that the market hospitals look to in hiring pathologists is anything but nationwide. 676 F. Supp. at 1405. The only evidence in the record regarding the scope of the market is that a nationwide market exists for hospitals to hire pathologists. Dr. Collins' own experience demonstrates the coast-to-coast market. He practiced in Brooklyn, New York, before joining APL and practicing at St. John's in Springfield, Illinois. When he left Springfield, he found work in San Leandro, California. Most of the other pathologists employed by APL during the years in question were also from out of state, as are most of the pathologists employed by Dr. Collins' current employer, Humana Hospital. Dr. Collins' deposition [18] testimony also admits the national scope of the market, reflected in the national listings of both pathologists and hospitals in the College of American Pathologists' placement service list and in the advertisements in the New England Journal of Medicine, a national publication.

The district court held that because the market is nationwide, even if the contract between APL and St. John's excluded Dr. Collins from the local Springfield market, a substantial number of other opportunities were available to him (and other pathologists) for practicing pathology and thus no genuine issue of material fact was in dispute regarding the effect of the agreement on competition. We agree.

V

In his memorandum in response to the Defendants' Motions for Summary Judgment, Dr. Collins argued that the exclusive agreement between St. John's and APL constitutes an illegal boycott in violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act. Although an illegal boycott is not specifically alleged in Dr. Collins' amended complaint, the district court found that the broad language of Count I, alleging that the defendants engaged in a combination in restraint of trade, encompassed the idea of an illegal boycott [19] and allowed the theory to be read into the complaint. The court, however, rejected Dr. Collins' assertion of a per se standard and under a rule of reason analysis granted summary judgment in favor of the defendants.

On appeal, Dr. Collins challenges the district court's analysis of several recent decisions by this Court applying the rule of reason in boycott cases. This challenge is meritless. The district court thoroughly and correctly applied the rule of this Circuit to the facts of Dr. Collins' case.

In Marrese v. American Academy of Orthopaedic Surgeons, 726 F.2d 1150, 1155 (7th Cir. 1984) (en banc), reversed on other grounds, 470 U.S. 373, 84 L. Ed. 2d 274, 105 S. Ct. 1327 (1985), we stated, HN10[] "in this circuit at least 'boycotts are illegal per se only if used to enforce agreements that are themselves illegal per se - for example price fixing agreements'" (quoting an earlier panel opinion in that case, 706 F.2d 1488 at 1495 (7th Cir. Ill. 1983)). See also Wilk v. American Medical Ass'n, 719 F.2d 207, 221 (7th Cir. 1983); [20] United States Trotting Ass'n v. Chicago Downs Ass'n, 665 F.2d 781, 787-790 (7th Cir. 1981) (en banc). Thus under the law of this Circuit, even if the individual members of APL combined in a horizontal group boycott to exclude Dr. Collins from practice at St. John's, the boycott would be illegal per se only if the agreement the individual members of APL combined to enforce was itself illegal per se.

[*480] If the individual members of APL did combine to persuade St. John's not to hire Dr. Collins as an independent pathologist, they did so to enforce their contract with St. John's under which it was agreed that APL would provide complete and adequate professional pathology services. This agreement did not violate Section 1 of the Sherman Act. See supra at 479. Because the agreement the alleged boycott was used to enforce was not illegal, much less illegal per se, the district court correctly applied the rule of reason as the applicable standard.

VI

Dr. Collins' final federal antitrust claim is against APL and the individual defendants for attempted monopolization and abuse of monopoly power. In his appellate brief Dr. Collins accuses [21] the district court of ignoring both his evidence and his claim. Neither is true. What the district court did was rely on its earlier tying analysis in a manner that prevented anomalous holdings.

Dr. Collins argued that the relevant geographic market that APL monopolized or attempted to monopolize was the market for pathological services at St. John's hospital. Accepting the relevant market proposed by Dr. Collins, [5] the allegations of monopolization had to fail. In analyzing Dr. Collins' tying argument the court held as a matter of law that there is no distinct product market consisting of providing pathological services to individual patients of St. John's. It is impossible to monopolize a market that does not exist.

[22] The district court also held that Dr. Collins could not state a claim against the APL defendants for monopolization or attempted monopolization of a broader market, the Springfield Metropolitan Statistical Area ("SMSA"), for pathological services without including St. John's hospital as a defendant. The allegations in Dr. Collins' brief before this Court admit as much: "through its exclusive access to the dominant hospital [St. John's] in the SMSA, APL has enjoyed an increasing share of the market for pathology services in the SMSA" (Br. 14). Dr. Collins cannot bring a claim of monopolization or attempted monopolization against the APL defendants without showing some type of effort at illegal monopolization on the part of St. John's hospital as well. Dr. Collins has made no such showing. The district court properly granted the defendants' motions for summary judgment regarding the monopolization claims.

VII

---

[5] The district court noted, and we agree, that Dr. Collins is slicing the geographic market much too thin in limiting the relevant market for pathology services to St. John's hospital. 676 F. Supp. at 1405. As we stated in Dos Santos v. Columbus-Cuneo-Cabrini Medical Center, 684 F.2d 1346, 1353 (7th Cir. 1982), "we have reason to doubt whether the relevant market can be sliced so small as to embrace only a single hospital."

In addition to his federal antitrust claims, Dr. Collins claims violations of three sections of the Illinois Antitrust Act that parallel his Sherman Act counts. Ill. Rev. Stat. ch. 38, §§ 60-3(2), 60-3(3) and 60-3(4). [23] HN11[] The language of Section 60-3(2) closely tracks the language of Section 1 of the Sherman Act and the language of Section 60-3(3) is very similar to the language of Section 2 of the Sherman Act. Based upon these similarities, summary judgment was appropriate as to the counts based on Sections 60-3(2) and 60-3(3) for the reasons stated with respect to the parallel Sherman Act counts.

Although the result under Dr. Collins' third Illinois Antitrust Act claim under Section 60-3(4) is the same, the analysis is somewhat complicated by the holding of an Illinois Supreme Court case that antedates Jefferson Parish, People v. Schwulst Building Center, Inc., 89 Ill. 2d 365, 432 N.E.2d 855, 59 Ill. Dec. 911 (1982). In Schwulst Building the Supreme Court of Illinois recognized that Section 60-3(4) is patterned after Section 3 of the Clayton Act. Id. at 374, 432 N.E.2d at 860. It also noted that under Section 60-11 the Illinois section should be construed consistently with federal law. [*481] Id. [6] Thus the court in Schwulst Building felt bound to follow what it perceived the then existing federal law to be -- the application of a per se test [24] to exclusive dealing and tying arrangements. Id. (citing Standard Oil Co. v. United States, 337 U.S. 293, 304-305, 93 L. Ed. 1371, 69 S. Ct. 1051 ("Standard Stations"); International Salt Co. v. United States, 332 U.S. 392, 396, 92 L. Ed. 20, 68 S. Ct. 12).

Since the decision in Schwulst Building, the federal law that the Illinois courts are bound to follow in applying the Illinois Antitrust Act has changed. Recently we examined Standard Stations, the case on which Schwulst Building relied, and determined that "it now appears most unlikely that such agreements, whether challenged under section 3 of the Clayton Act or section 1 of the Sherman Act, will [25] be judged by the simple and strict test of Standard Stations. They will be judged under the Rule of Reason, and thus condemned only if found to restrain trade unreasonably." Roland Machinery Co. v. Dresser Indus., Inc., 749 F.2d 380, 393 (7th Cir. 1984) (citing Jefferson Parish, 466 U.S. at 45-46 (concurring opinion)).

In light of the recent developments in federal antitrust law, the district court did not believe it was bound to apply the literal holding of Schwulst Building that Section 60-3(4) involves a per se analysis. 676 F. Supp. at 1407. We agree. Therefore, for the reasons stated regarding the parallel federal claim, the district court appropriately granted summary judgment.

VIII

Dr. Collins also asserts that St. John's wrongfully removed or reduced his staff privileges in violation of the by-laws of the hospital. However, the record reflects that St. John's has neither removed nor reduced Dr. Collins' staff privileges. In May 1982, Dr. Collins was, on his own request, placed on leave of absence, but he retains full staff privileges to this day. Staff privileges reflect the hospital's decision that a physician [26] is qualified to practice in the facility, but do not in and of themselves confer employment. Employment as a pathologist at St. John's was determined by the legal contract between St. John's and APL. See supra at 477. Although without concurrent employment by St. John's as a pathologist these staff privileges may be of little or no value to Dr. Collins, the fact remains that the privileges were neither removed nor reduced. We affirm the grant of summary judgment.

IX

Finally, Dr. Collins asserts that APL and the individual defendants tortiously interfered with his relationship with St. John's by inducing St. John's to remove or reduce his staff privileges and to exclude him from practicing at St. John's. As to the staff privileges assertion, we have already held that St. John's did not remove or reduce Dr. Collins' staff privileges. See supra at 481. APL and the individual defendants therefore cannot be liable for inducing a result that never occurred. As to any actions by APL or the individual defendants to exclude Dr. Collins from practicing at St. John's, we have already held that any such action was pursuant to a legal arrangement. See supra at 480. Such legal actions [27] cannot form the basis for a tortious interference claim. Summary judgment was again appropriately granted.

[6] Section 60-11 of the Illinois Antitrust Act requires that "when the wording of this Act is identical or similar to that of a federal antitrust law, the courts of this State shall use the construction of the federal law by the federal courts as a guide in construing this Act." 38 Ill. Rev. Stat. § 60-11.

We affirm the district court's judgment in all respects.

Kelco Disposal, Inc. v. Browning-Ferris Industries of Vermont, Inc.

United States Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit

February 23, 1988, Argued ; April 21, 1988, Decided

Nos. 87-7754, 87-7758

Reporter

845 F.2d 404 *; 1988 U.S. App. LEXIS 5484 ; 1988-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P67,974

Kelco Disposal, Inc. and Joseph Kelley, Plaintiffs-Appellees, Cross-Appellants, v. Browning-Ferris Industries of Vermont, Inc. and Browning-Ferris Industries, Inc., Defendants-Appellants, Cross-Appellees

Prior History: [1] Cross-appeals from a judgment of the District Court for the District of Vermont (Billings, J.) that held defendants liable under the federal antitrust laws and Vermont tort law, and ordered plaintiff to elect between federal and state remedies.

Disposition: Affirmed.

Core Terms

defendants', attorney's fees, variable, costs, pricing, monopolize, punitive damages, roll-off, predatory, award of punitive damages, treble damages, antitrust, waste disposal, depreciation, roughly, haul, compensatory, probability, elect, reasonable anticipation, specific intent, fixed cost, characterization, competitors, damages, annual, forgo

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > Trials > Judgment as Matter of Law > Judgment Notwithstanding Verdict

Civil Procedure > Trials > Judgment as Matter of Law > General Overview

HN1[] Judgment as Matter of Law, Judgment Notwithstanding Verdict

Judgment notwithstanding the verdict is warranted where the verdict is so unsupported by the evidence that it could only have been the result of sheer surmise and conjecture, or where the movant's position is supported by such overwhelming evidence that a reasonable and fair minded person could not have arrived at a verdict against it.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

HN2[] Monopolies & Monopolization, Attempts to Monopolize

A claim of attempt to monopolize has three elements: (1) anticompetitive or exclusionary conduct; (2) specific intent to monopolize; and (3) a dangerous probability that the attempt will succeed.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Actual Monopolization > Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices > General Overview

HN3[] Actual Monopolization, Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices

Prices that are below reasonably anticipated marginal cost and its surrogate reasonably anticipated average variable cost are presumed predatory. By definition variable costs are dependent on the firm's output, while fixed costs are not.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Actual Monopolization > Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Trials > Jury Trials > Province of Court & Jury

Tax Law > ... > Amortization, Depletion & Depreciation > Amortization, Cost Recovery & Depreciation > General Overview

Tax Law > Federal Income Tax Computation > Amortization, Depletion & Depreciation > General Overview

HN4[] Actual Monopolization, Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices

The characterization of legitimately disputed costs is a question of fact for the jury.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

HN5[] Monopolies & Monopolization, Attempts to Monopolize

Numerous market characteristics other than barriers to entry must be considered in determining whether a dangerous probability of monopolization exists.

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Damages > Punitive Damages

Torts > ... > Types of Damages > Punitive Damages > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Damages > General Overview

HN6[] Damages, Punitive Damages

Punitive damages are designed both to punish the wrongdoer and to deter similar conduct. Vermont law invests a jury with enormous discretion to award punitive damages when it decides that a party has acted maliciously. Vermont, like most jurisdictions, views punitive damage awards as incapable of precise determination. Vermont courts have refused to require that there be some kind of mystical ratio between punitive and compensatory damages.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Costs & Attorney Fees > Clayton Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

HN7[] Costs & Attorney Fees, Clayton Act

15 U.S.C.S. § 15 is a statutory exception to the common law rule against awarding attorneys' fees.

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Costs & Attorney Fees > General Overview

HN8[] Remedies, Costs & Attorney Fees

The common law hostility to attorneys' fees rests upon several considerations that include the potential chilling effect that fee shifting would have on indigents with compelling claims, the time, expense, and difficulty or litigating the fee question, and the possibility that the principle of independent advocacy might be threatened by having the earnings of the attorney flow from the pen of the judge before whom he argues.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Damages > General Overview

Commercial Law (UCC) > Sales (Article 2) > Remedies > General Overview

HN9[] Monopolies & Monopolization, Actual Monopolization

In order for a public defender of broad social objectives to recover treble damages and thereby deprive violators of the fruit of their illegality, a plaintiff must prove behavior that injures competition, as distinct from a competitor.

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Costs & Attorney Fees > General Overview

Torts > ... > Types of Damages > Costs & Attorney Fees > General Overview

HN10[] Remedies, Costs & Attorney Fees

A plaintiff that undertakes the role of private attorney general and recovers treble damages, is awarded attorneys' fees for safeguarding paramount and pervasive values that are protected by federal law.

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Damages > Punitive Damages

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Costs & Attorney Fees > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Attorney Fees & Expenses > Basis of Recovery > Statutory Awards

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Damages > General Overview

HN11[] Damages, Punitive Damages

Where the prevailing party elects a remedy provided by state law, and thereby forgoes its treble damage award, it should forgo the entire remedy provided by federal law, including attorneys' fees.

Counsel: Gordon B. Spivak, New York, New York (Thomas D. Brislin, Coudert Brothers, New York, New York, Robert B. Hemley, Norman Williams, Dennis R. Pearson, Gravel & Shea, Burlington, Vermont, of Counsel), for Plaintiffs-Appellees, Cross-Appellants.

J. Paul McGrath, New York, New York (Dewey, Ballantine, Bushby, Palmer & Wood, New York, New York, Donald F. Turner, Washington, District of Columbia, Douglas Richards and Robert Gerety, Plante, Richards, Hanley & Gerety, Springfield, Vermont, of Counsel), for Defendants-Appellants, Cross-Appellees.

Judges: Feinberg, Chief Judge, Pratt, Circuit Judge, and Joseph M. McLaughlin, District Judge for the Eastern District of New York, sitting by designation.

Opinion by: McLAUGHLIN

Opinion

[*405] MCLAUGHLIN, District Judge:

Plaintiff sued under both the federal antitrust laws and Vermont tort law. A jury found against defendants on both counts and imposed $ 6 million in punitive [2] damages on the state claim. The trial court denied defendants' motions for judgment notwithstanding [*406] the verdict or a new trial or remittitur; the court also ordered plaintiff to elect between its antitrust remedy (treble damages, attorneys' fees, and costs) and its state remedy (compensatory and punitive damages). The parties have cross-appealed. For the reasons discussed below, we affirm.

FACTS

This case involves competition in the "roll-off" waste collection business in Burlington, Vermont. Roll-off waste collection is usually performed at large industrial locations and construction sites with the use of a large truck, a compactor, and a container that is much larger than the typical "dumpster."

Browning-Ferris Industries, Inc. ("BFI") and Browning-Ferris Industries of Vermont, Inc. (collectively "defendants") operate a commercial and industrial waste collection business from BFI's headquarters in Houston, Texas. In fiscal year 1986, BFI had revenues in excess of $ 1.3 billion, net income of approximately $ 137 million, and net assets of approximately $ 980 million.

In 1973 defendants made two fateful decisions: they decided to enter the waste disposal business [3] in Burlington and they appointed plaintiff Joseph Kelley to be district manager for the region. In 1976 defendants began to provide roll-off service in Burlington, and by 1980 they controlled 100% of the Burlington roll-off market.

Kelley left defendants in 1980, and formed his own waste disposal company, plaintiff Kelco Disposal, Inc. ("Kelco"). Soon thereafter, Kelco began to compete head-to-head with defendants in the Burlington roll-off market. In one year Kelco captured 37.6% of the market. In 1982 the figure rose to 42.7%. During 1982, defendants' new Burlington manager, Richard Mowbray, received orders from Michael Gustin, his boss in Boston, to "Put [Kelley] out of business. Do whatever it takes. Squish him like a bug." Defendants' Burlington salesman was also ordered to put Kelley out of business and was told that if "it meant give [services] away, give [them] away."

In the fall of 1982, accordingly, defendants cut their roll-off haul prices from $ 117 to $ 65, a reduction of about 40%. This price-cutting policy lasted for approximately six months, although some contracts made during this period extended these low prices into 1984. Defendants' market share, which [4] had declined precipitously from 1980 to 1982, remained relatively stable during the 1982-84 period. Kelco's and defendants' combined revenues from the Burlington market were roughly $ 440,000. By 1985 Kelco had captured almost 56% of the market. In that year defendants left the market, and sold out to a third party. Since then, Kelco and this other company have been the only two competitors in the Burlington roll-off market. From 1981 to 1985, defendants and Kelco were the only competitors in the market.

In 1984, Kelley and Kelco brought this action. The complaint alleged that defendants had attempted to monopolize the Burlington roll-off market, in violation of section 2 of the Sherman Act, as amended, 15 U.S.C. § 2 (1982), and that defendants' conduct constituted intererence with contractual relations under Vermont tort law.

Kelley's claims were severed from Kelco's, and Kelco's antitrust and tort claims were tried to a jury. Kelco's antitrust theory was that defendants had engaged in predatory pricing. At trial, Kelco's expert witness testified that from 1982 to 1984 defendants' average variable cost for roll-off service was roughly $ 104 per haul. The [5] expert included as variable costs disposal fees; drivers' salaries; depreciation of equipment, including trucks, containers, and compactors; selling and administrative costs; and national overhead. In addition, numerous statements by defendants' officials that defendants had intended to put plaintiff out of business were introduced.

After a six-day trial on the liability issue, the jury found against defendants on both counts. A one-day trial on damages followed, and the jury returned a verdict for $ 51,146 on the antitrust claim, and $ 51,146 [*407] in compensatory damages and $ 6 million in punitive damages on the state claim.

Defendants then moved for judgment n.o.v. or, in the alternative, for a new trial or remittitur. By order dated August 11, 1987 the motions were denied. An amended order of judgment dated October 19, 1987 awarded Kelco $ 153,438 in treble damages and $ 212,500 in attorneys' fees and costs on the antitrust claim under section 4 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 15 (1982) or, in the alternative, $ 6,066,082.74 in compensatory and punitive damages on the state claim. Kelco was ordered to elect between the alternative federal and state [6] remedies.

On appeal defendants have mounted a three-pronged attack on the judgment: (1) the jury's liability verdict was not supported by sufficient evidence; (2) the trial court's jury charge was erroneous as a matter of law; and (3) the punitive damages award must be either reversed or remitted.

Kelco's cross-appeal argues that it is entitled under federal law to attorneys' fees and costs, even if it elects state-law compensatory and punitive damages over the more modest federal treble damage award.

DISCUSSION

I. Liability and Punitive Damages

A. Attempted Monopolization

1. Sufficiency of the Evidence

HN1[] Judgment n.o.v. is warranted where the verdict is so unsupported by the evidence that it "could only have been the result of sheer surmise and conjecture," or where the movant's position is supported by such overwhelming evidence that a "reasonable and fair minded [person] could not [have] arrived at a verdict against [it]." Mattivi v. South African Marine Corp., "Huguenot", 618 F.2d 163, 168 (2d Cir. 1980).

[7] HN2[] A claim of attempt to monopolize has three elements: "(1) anticompetitive or exclusionary conduct; (2) specific intent to monopolize; and (3) a 'dangerous probability' that the attempt will succeed." International Distribution Centers, Inc. v. Walsh Trucking Co., 812 F.2d 786, 790 (2d Cir.) ("IDC") (quoting Northeastern Telephone Co. v. AT&T, 651 F.2d 76, 85 (2d Cir. 1981), cert. denied, 455 U.S. 943, 102 S. Ct. 1438, 71 L. Ed. 2d 654 (1982)), cert. denied, 482 U.S. 915, 107 S. Ct. 3188, 96 L. Ed. 2d 676 (1987). Defendants argue that Kelco failed to prove any of these elements at trial.

Kelco claims that defendants' anticompetitive or exclusionary conduct consisted of predatory pricing, and introduced evidence that defendants' price of $ 65 per roll-off haul was below its average variable cost of roughly $ 104 per haul. Defendants argue that Kelco's $ 104 figure was inflated because Kelco's expert witness mistakenly characterized certain fixed costs as variable in making his computations. Asserting that depreciation of equipment, selling and administrative costs, [8] and national overhead should have been considered fixed costs, defendants contend that their true average variable cost was less than $ 50 per haul, well below their $ 65 haul charge.

A firm engaged in predatory pricing bites the bullet and forgoes present revenues to drive a competitor from the market. Its intent, of course, is to recoup lost revenues through higher profits when it succeeds in making the environment less competitive. Northeastern Telephone, 651 F.2d at 86 (quoting 3 P. Areeda & D. Turner, Antitrust Law para. 711b, at 151 (1978)); see Cargill, Inc. v. Monfort of Colorado, Inc., 479 U.S. 104, 107 S. Ct. 484, 493, 93 L. Ed. 2d 427 (1986). HN3[] Prices that are below reasonably anticipated marginal cost, and its surrogate, reasonably anticipated average variable cost, see Northeastern Telephone, 651 F.2d at 88, are presumed predatory. Id. By definition variable costs are dependent on the firm's output, while fixed costs are not. See id. at 86. The characterization of certain costs as either variable or fixed [9] frequently becomes a battleground where the plaintiff proceeds on a predatory pricing theory. The reason is obvious: the higher a party's average variable cost, the more likely it is that the party has priced below that cost.

[*408] Defendants argue that equipment depreciation should have been considered a fixed cost because defendants' accountants have always treated it so. Passing, for the moment, the bootstrap feature of this argument, the general legal rule is that depreciation caused by use is a variable cost, while depreciation through obsolescence is a fixed cost. See id. HN4[] The characterization of legitimately disputed costs is a question of fact for the jury. Adjusters Replace-A-Car, Inc. v. Agency Rent-A-Car, Inc., 735 F.2d 884, 891 n.6 (5th Cir. 1984), cert. denied, 469 U.S. 1160, 83 L. Ed. 2d 924, 105 S. Ct. 910 (1985); see William Inglis & Sons Baking Co. v. ITT Continental Baking Co., 668 F.2d 1014, 1036-38 (9th Cir. 1981), cert. denied, 459 U.S. 825, 74 L. Ed. 2d 61, 103 S. Ct. 57, 103 S. Ct. 58 (1982). [10] The jury may consider, but obviously cannot be bound by, a party's characterization of its own costs.

In this case, we conclude that the jury could have reasonably characterized equipment depreciation as a variable cost. The waste disposal industry makes intensive use of heavy equipment. There was no evidence presented that defendants' trucks, compactors, or containers became obsolete; rather, the picture painted was one of constant wear, tear, and damage due to use.

Defendants do not challenge the characterization of disposal fees and drivers' salaries as variable costs. Adding equipment depreciation costs to these other costs yields an average variable cost of roughly $ 81 per haul, well above defendants' $ 65 fee. Based on these figures alone, we conclude that the jury could have found that defendants engaged in predatory pricing. There is, therefore, no need to address defendants' challenge to the characterization of other costs.

Turning to the second element of an attempted monopolization claim, we reject defendants' attack upon the finding that they had specific intent to monopolize the market. Sufficient evidence of such intent was presented to the jury. Defendants' own [11] officials frequently reaffirmed their goal of driving Kelley and Kelco out of the Burlington market. Defendants argue, as they did to the jury, that these statements merely reflected defendants' desire to remain competitive with Kelco, and cannot support a finding of specific intent to monopolize. The jury, however, also heard evidence that defendants had engaged in predatory pricing, and could have inferred intent from this fact. See Northeastern Telephone, 651 F.2d at 85. The "tough talk" by defendants' employees, coupled with the proof of predatory pricing, more than supports the jury's finding of a specific intent to monopolize.

Defendants' final challenge to the verdict is that, because the so-called "barriers to entry" in the Burlington roll-off business were low, a rational jury could not have concluded that there was a dangerous probability that BFI would monopolize the market. We reject this argument for three reasons.

First, the jury could have found that barriers to entry were, indeed, not at all low. Only two companies entered the relevant market during the eleven-year period from 1976-87. In addition, there was evidence that the cost of entering the [12] market exceeded $ 300,000. Given the size of the market in 1982-84, roughly $ 440,000 in annual revenues, a firm that controlled 50% of the market and had a 10% return on revenue -- which the parties do not dispute is a fair rate of return -- would realize only a $ 22,000 annual profit. Such numbers would make a potential entrant think twice before making a $ 300,000 investment. Compare United States v. Waste Management, Inc., 743 F.2d 976, 983 (2d Cir. 1984) (finding of low entry barriers in large metropolitan waste disposal market with many competitors was not clearly erroneous).

Second, HN5[] numerous market characteristics other than barriers to entry must be considered in determining whether a dangerous probability of monopolization exists. See IDC, 812 F.2d at 792 (some other factors are "the strength of the competition, the probable development of the industry, . . . the nature of [defendants'] anticompetitive conduct and the elasticity of consumer demand"). A survey of these [*409] other characteristics amply supports a finding of dangerous probability [13] in this case. The Burlington waste disposal market was not unduly competitive. It supported only one participant in 1980, and two from 1981 to 1987. Consumer demand was rather inelastic because there were few, if any, alternatives to large-container waste disposal service. On top of this, there was compelling evidence that defendants intended to monopolize the market and were already executing a plan to further this goal.

Third, defendants possessed a significant market share. During the period in which defendants engaged in predatory pricing, their market share was above 55%. As late as 1980, their share had been 100%. Considering defendants' market share along with other market characteristics, the jury could reasonably have concluded that defendants had a dangerous probability of acquiring monopoly power.

In summary, we find that Kelco presented sufficient evidence for the jury to find that defendants attempted to monopolize the Burlington roll-off waste disposal market. Defendants concede that if Kelco prevails on the antitrust claim, then the defendants are also liable on the state tort claim. Accordingly, we conclude that the jury verdict on both claims is supported by sufficient [14] evidence.

2. The Jury Charge

Defendants contend that the trial judge erroneously instructed the jury that Kelco could prove predatory pricing by showing that defendants had priced below their average variable cost; defendants now opt for a stricter standard: their reasonably anticipated average variable cost. Interesting as the distinction is, we need not address this argument because defendants have failed to preserve it for appeal under Fed. R. Civ. P. 51.

Defendants' proposed jury charge did not refer to reasonably anticipated variable costs. Although counsel for defendants did refer to reasonable anticipation at a charging conference, he did so in the context of the specific intent element of attempted monopolization, not the predatory pricing element. We thus conclude that defendants failed to state distinctly their objection to the challenged portion of the judge's charge. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 51. Absent plain error, defendants are precluded from raising the issue on appeal. See Brenner v. World Boxing Council, 675 F.2d 445, 456 (2d Cir.), cert. denied [15] , 459 U.S. 835, 74 L. Ed. 2d 76, 103 S. Ct. 79 (1982); Cohen v. Franchard Corp., 478 F.2d 115, 122-25 (2d Cir.), cert. denied, 414 U.S. 857, 38 L. Ed. 2d 106, 94 S. Ct. 161 (1973).

Assuming arguendo that the charge was incorrect, we do not conclude that the error constituted plain error. Given the complexity of this case and the quantum of evidence supporting Kelco's claim of anticompetitive conduct by defendants, we find that the trial court's error was not sufficiently serious to affect the "'very integrity of the trial.'" Brenner, 675 F.2d at 456 (quoting Modave v. Long Island Jewish Medical Center, 501 F.2d 1065, 1072 (2d Cir. 1974)). Accordingly, we decline to review defendants' assignment of error.

B. Punitive Damages

Defendants' final argument is that the $ 6 million punitive damage award should be reversed or remitted. HN6[] Punitive damages are designed both to punish the wrongdoer and to deter similar conduct. See Aldrich v. Thomson McKinnon Securities, Inc., 756 F.2d 243, 249 (2d Cir. 1985). [16] Vermont law, which applies here, see Whitney v. Citibank, N.A., 782 F.2d 1106, 1118 (2d Cir. 1986), invests a jury with enormous discretion to award punitive damages when it decides that a party has acted maliciously. See Pezzano v. Bonneau, 133 Vt. 88, 90, 329 A.2d 659, 660 (1974). Vermont, like most jurisdictions, views punitive damage awards as "'incapable of precise determination.'" Greenmoss Builders, Inc. v. Dun & Bradstreet, Inc., 143 Vt. 66, 77, 461 A.2d 414, 419 (1983) (quoting Lanfranconi v. Tidewater Oil Co., 376 F.2d 91, 96 (2d Cir.), cert. denied, 389 U.S. 951, 19 L. Ed. 2d 361, 88 S. Ct. 334 (1967)), aff'd on other grounds, 472 U.S. 749, 105 S. Ct. 2939, 86 L. Ed. 2d 593 (1985). Vermont courts have [*410] refused to require that there be some kind of mystical ratio between punitive and compensatory damages. See Pezzano, 133 Vt. at 92, 329 A.2d at 661; see also Aldrich, 756 F.2d at 249 ("punitive damages need bear no exact relationship to compensatory damages"). Finally, Vermont courts will interfere with a punitive damages [17] award only if it is """manifestly and grossly excessive.""" Greenmoss, 143 Vt. at 77, 461 A.2d at 420 (quoting Pezzano, 133 Vt. at 91, 329 A.2d at 661 (quoting Gray v. Janicki, 118 Vt. 49, 52, 99 A.2d 707, 709 (1953))).

Bearing this in mind, we conclude that the punitive damage award in this case should not be disturbed. Faced with evidence that defendants wilfully and deliberately attempted to drive Kelco out of the market, the jury imposed punitive damages amounting to less than.5% of BFI's revenues, approximately.6% of its net worth, and less than 5% of its net income, for fiscal year 1986. This amount is not inconsistent with punitive damages levied in other jurisdictions against large corporations. E.g., T.D.S., Inc. v. Shelby Mutual Insurance Co., 760 F.2d 1520, 1531 & n.10 ($ 2.1 million award was approximately 1% of defendant's assets), modified in part, 769 F.2d 1485 (11th Cir. 1985); Aldrich, 756 F.2d at 249 (remitting award to $ 1.5 million, which was roughly.9% of defendant's net worth); Hawkins v. Allstate Insurance Co., 152 Ariz. 490, 501, 733 P.2d 1073, 1085 [18] ($ 3.5 million award amounted to roughly.25% of defendant's assets and 1% of defendant's annual income), cert. denied, 484 U.S. 874, 108 S. Ct. 212, 98 L. Ed. 2d 177 (1987); Downey Savings and Loan Association v. Ohio Casualty Insurance Co., 189 Cal. App. 3d 1072, 1101, 234 Cal. Rptr. 835, 851 ($ 5 million award exceeded 7% of defendant's annual income, and was 1% of defendant's net worth), review denied, No. S 000553 (Cal. May 27, 1987), cert. denied, 486 U.S. 1036, 108 S. Ct. 2023, 100 L. Ed. 2d 610 (1988); Moore v. American United Life Insurance Co., 150 Cal. App. 3d 610, 641-42, 197 Cal. Rptr. 878, 899 (1984) ($ 2.5 million award exceeded 6% of defendant's annual income).

After reviewing the record, we conclude that the punitive damage award fell within the allowable limits of Vermont law, and was not motivated by unfair prejudice. See Pezzano, 133 Vt. at 91, 329 A.2d at 661. In addition, we reject the defendants' notion that the award violates the eighth amendment's proscription against excessive fines. Even if the eighth amendment does apply to this nominally civil case, see Ingraham v. Wright, 430 U.S. 651, 664-72, 51 L. Ed. 2d 711, 97 S. Ct. 1401 (1977); [19] Zwick v. Freeman, 373 F.2d 110, 119 (2d Cir.), cert. denied, 389 U.S. 835, 19 L. Ed. 2d 96, 88 S. Ct. 43 (1967); see also Bankers Life and Casualty Co. v. Crenshaw, 486 U.S. 71, 108 S. Ct. 1645, 100 L. Ed. 2d 62, 56 U.S.L.W. 3423-24 (1987), we do not think the damages here were so disproportionate as to be cruel, unusual, or constitutionally excessive. Accordingly, we decline to interfere with the punitive damage award.

II. Attorneys' Fees

Kelco's cross-appeal demands attorneys' fees under 15 U.S.C. § 15 when it rejects a modest federal remedy in favor of a generous state law remedy. Kelco maintains that because the fee award is not duplicative or inconsistent with the state remedy, it should not be precluded from receiving federal statutory attorneys' fees in addition to its state tort remedy. Defendants respond that Kelco's state claim provides it with a complete remedy, and that an additional award of attorneys' fees would provide Kelco with a windfall.

Section 15 HN7[] is a statutory exception to the common [20] law rule against awarding attorneys' fees. See Alyeska Pipeline Service Co. v. Wilderness Society, 421 U.S. 240, 260-61, 44 L. Ed. 2d 141, 95 S. Ct. 1612 (1975). As explained in great depth by the Alyeska Pipeline Court, the general rule, more commonly known as the "American Rule," dictates that, absent statutory authority, a prevailing party is not entitled to compensation for its attorneys' fees. See id. at 247-62. This rule has strong roots in American jurisprudence, see Arcambel v. Wiseman, 3 U.S. (3 Dall.) 306, 1 L. Ed. 613 (1796), and rests [*411] upon the common law judgment that "one should not be penalized for merely defending or prosecuting a lawsuit." Fleischmann Distilling Corp. v. Maier Brewing Co., 386 U.S. 714, 718, 18 L. Ed. 2d 475, 87 S. Ct. 1404 (1967).

HN8[] The common law hostility to attorneys' fees rests upon several considerations that include the potential chilling effect that fee shifting would have on indigents with compelling claims, "the time, expense, and difficulty or litigating the fee [21] question, and the possibility that the principle of independent advocacy might be threatened by having 'the earnings of the attorney flow from the pen of the judge before whom he argues.'" Summit Valley Industries, Inc. v. Local 112, United Brotherhood of Carpenters, 456 U.S. 717, 725, 72 L. Ed. 2d 511, 102 S. Ct.

2112 (1982) (quoting F.D. Rich Co. v. United States ex rel. Industrial Lumber Co., 417 U.S. 116, 129, 40 L. Ed. 2d 703, 94 S. Ct. 2157 (1974)).

Kelco wears two hats in this action. It wears one as a private victim seeking personal redress for an egregious infraction of Vermont tort law. It wears the other as a public defender of broad social objectives that casts it in the role of a surrogate enforcer of the federal antitrust laws. See Zenith Radio Corp. v. Hazeltine Research, Inc., 395 U.S. 100, 131, 133, 23 L. Ed. 2d 129, 89 S. Ct. 1562 (1969); Waldron v. Cities Service Co., 361 F.2d 671, 673 (2d Cir. 1966), aff'd, 391 U.S. 253, 20 L. Ed. 2d 569, 88 S. Ct. 1575 (1968). HN9[] In the latter capacity, [22] to recover treble damages and thereby deprive violators of the fruit of their illegality, see Brunswick Corp. v. Pueblo Bowl-O-Mat, Inc., 429 U.S. 477, 485, 50 L. Ed. 2d 701, 97 S. Ct. 690 (1977), a plaintiff must prove behavior that injures competition, as distinct from a competitor. Cargill, 107 S. Ct. at 489; Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, 320, 8 L. Ed. 2d 510, 82 S. Ct. 1502 (1962). HN10[] A plaintiff that undertakes the role of private attorney general and recovers treble damages, is awarded attorneys' fees for safeguarding paramount and pervasive values that are protected by federal law.

The question presented is whether a plaintiff that chooses to forgo treble damages available under § 15 and elects instead a far larger reward under state law may still collect attorneys' fees. Not surprisingly, the sparse language of § 15 and its extensive legislative history fail to address this issue.

We are unwilling to depart from the general rule and "fashion [a] drastic new rule[] with respect to the allowance of attorneys' [23] fees to the prevailing party in federal litigation." Alyeska Pipeline, 421 U.S. at 269. Two reasons buttress this conclusion. First, the policy embodied in § 15 will in no way be hindered by our holding because the sum available in the state remedy package exceeds the sum of treble damages, attorneys' fees, and costs. Second, a plaintiff that chooses not to pursue its federal remedy has stepped outside its role as private attorney general, and thus should not come within the ambit of § 15.

HN11[] Where, as here, the prevailing party elects a remedy provided by state law, and thereby forgoes its treble damage award, it should forgo the entire remedy provided by federal law, including attorneys' fees. Attorneys' fees are an integral member of the federal remedy. This is one of those cases where the tail must go with the hide. Having turned its back on the federal remedy, Kelco must perforce lose the federal reward. In any event, its $ 6 million dollar punitive damage award should provide an adequate fund from which Kelco may pay its attorneys' fee without discomfiture. We therefore [24] conclude that the district court properly ordered Kelco to elect between the alternative remedies.

CONCLUSION

For the forgoing reasons the judgment of the district court is affirmed.

McGlinchy v. Shell Chemical Co.

United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit

December 16, 1987, Argued and Submitted ; April 22, 1988, Filed

No. 86-2619

Reporter

845 F.2d 802 *; 1988 U.S. App. LEXIS 5400 ; 1988-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P67,973; 25 Fed. R. Evid. Serv. (Callaghan) 813

William J. McGlinchy; Dan-De Products Corporation, a California corporation, Plaintiffs-Appellants, v. Shell Chemical Co.; Shell International Chemical Company, Ltd.; Pecten Chemicals, Inc.; Shell Oil Company; Royal Dutch Shell; Shell International Trading Co.; United States Brass Corp.; Qest Plumbing Products; Plastic Pipe Fittings Association, Defendants-Appellees

Subsequent History: [1] Petition for Rehearing and Suggestion for Rehearing En Banc Denied July 11, 1988. As amended July 11, 1988.

Prior History: Appeal from the United States District Court for the Northern District of California, D.C. No. CV-84-474-SC, Samuel Conti, District Judge, Presiding.

Disposition: Affirmed.

Core Terms

district court, appellants', damages, commerce, antitrust claim, pleadings, antitrust, defendants', summary judgment, personal jurisdiction, leave to amend, anticompetitive, allegations, resin, sales, pipe fitting, purposefully, expert witness, domestic, studies, import, first amended complaint, amount of damages, minimum contact, Sherman Act, discovery, promotion, availing, amend, lack of personal jurisdiction

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > Abuse of Discretion

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Standards of Review > Abuse of Discretion > Evidence

HN1[] Standards of Review, Abuse of Discretion

An appellate court reviews a district court's evidentiary decisions for an abuse of discretion.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Supporting Materials > Discovery Materials

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Summary Judgment > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Appellate Review > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Appellate Review > Standards of Review

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Supporting Materials > General Overview

HN2[] Supporting Materials, Discovery Materials

A summary judgment shall be rendered forthwith if the pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories, and admissions on file, together with the affidavits, if any, show that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the moving party is entitled to a judgment as a matter of law. An appellate court reviews a grant of summary judgment de novo, viewing the evidence in a light most favorable to the non-moving party.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

HN3[] Summary Judgment, Entitlement as Matter of Law

The plaintiffs must provide evidence such that the jury is not left to speculation or guesswork in determining the amount of damages to award. Summary judgment is appropriate where appellants have no expert witnesses or designated documents providing competent evidence from which a jury could fairly estimate damages.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Genuine Disputes

HN4[] Summary Judgment, Burdens of Proof

Once a party makes a showing that the evidence raises no genuine issue of material fact, the burden is on the party opposing the motion for summary judgment to come forward with specific facts showing there was a genuine issue for trial.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Pretrial Judgments > Judgment on Pleadings

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Opposing Materials > General Overview

HN5[] Summary Judgment, Entitlement as Matter of Law

Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(e) does not allow a party to oppose summary judgment on the pleadings themselves.

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > Abuse of Discretion

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Standards of Review > Abuse of Discretion > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Amendment of Pleadings > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Amendment of Pleadings > Leave of Court

HN6[] Standards of Review, Abuse of Discretion

Fed. R. Civ. P. 15(a) states that leave to amend shall be freely given when justice so requires. Bearing that standard in mind, an appellate court reviews a district court's denial of a motion for leave to amend for an abuse of discretion.

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Amendment of Pleadings > General Overview

Torts > ... > Commercial Interference > Contracts > General Overview

HN7[] Pleadings, Amendment of Pleadings

Undue delay is one valid reason for a district court to deny a party leave to amend. Prejudice is another valid reason for a district court to deny a party leave to amend. Repeated failure to cure deficiencies by amendments previously allowed is another valid reason for a district court to deny a party leave to amend.

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > De Novo Review

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

Civil Procedure > Dismissal > Involuntary Dismissals > Failure to State Claims

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Pretrial Judgments > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Pretrial Judgments > Judgment on Pleadings

HN8[] Standards of Review, De Novo Review

An appellate court reviews de novo a dismissal by judgment on the pleadings under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(c). All allegations of fact by the party opposing the motion are accepted as true. A dismissal on the pleadings for failure to state a claim is proper only if the movant clearly establishes that no material issue of fact remains to be resolved and that he is entitled to judgment as a matter of law.

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Pretrial Judgments > Judgment on Pleadings

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Pretrial Judgments > General Overview

HN9[] Pretrial Judgments, Judgment on Pleadings

Where Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(c) is used to raise the defense of failure to state a claim, the motion for judgment on the pleadings faces the same test as a motion under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6). The court may affirm the district court's dismissal only if it is clear that no relief could be granted under any set of facts that could be proven consistent with the allegations. Not only must the court accept all material allegations in the complaint as true, but the complaint must be construed, and all doubts resolved, in the light most favorable to the plaintiff. Nonetheless, conclusory allegations without more are insufficient to defeat a motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN10[] Monopolies & Monopolization, Attempts to Monopolize

See the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. §§ 1, 2.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN11[] Sherman Act, Claims

To establish a § 1 violation under the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, a plaintiff must demonstrate three elements: (1) an agreement, conspiracy, or combination among two or more persons or distinct business entities; (2) which is intended to harm or unreasonably restrain competition; and (3) which actually causes injury to competition, beyond the impact on the claimant, within a field of commerce in which the claimant is engaged.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Practices Governed by Per Se Rule > Boycotts

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > Price Fixing

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN12[] Practices Governed by Per Se Rule, Boycotts

The Sherman Act's, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 et seq., prohibition against concerted activity in restraint of trade is analyzed under either the "per se" rule or the "rule of reason." The per se analysis is applied to practices that are presumptively illegal, such as (1) horizontal and vertical price-fixing; (2) horizontal market division; (3) group boycotts and concerted refusals to deal; and (4) tie-in sales. The rule of reason requires the factfinder to decide whether under all the circumstances of the case the restrictive practice imposes an unreasonable restraint on competition.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > Elements

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN13[] Sherman Act, Claims

To establish a Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 2, violation for an attempt to monopolize, a plaintiff must demonstrate four elements: (1) specific intent to control prices or destroy competition; (2) predatory or anti-competitive conduct directed toward accomplishing that purpose; (3) a dangerous probability of success; and (4) causal antitrust injury.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN14[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

An alleged Sherman Act violation, 15 U.S.C.S. §§ 1, 2, must cause injury to competition beyond the impact on the claimant under § 1, and must destroy competition and cause antitrust injury under § 2. To state an antitrust claim, therefore, a party must allege antitrust injury, which is to say injury of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent. The injury should reflect the anticompetitive effect either of the violation or of anticompetitive acts made possible by the violation. The antitrust laws were enacted for the protection of competition, not competitors.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Pretrial Judgments > Judgment on Pleadings

Torts > Business Torts > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Pretrial Judgments > General Overview

HN15[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

Economic injury to a competitor does not equal injury to competition. The elimination of a single competitor, without more, does not prove anticompetitive effect. Proof that the defendant's activities had an impact upon competition in a relevant market is an absolutely essential element of the rule of reason case. It is the impact upon competitive conditions in a definable market which distinguishes the antitrust violation from the ordinary business tort. An appellants' failure to allege injury to competition is a proper ground for dismissal by judgment on the pleadings.

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > De Novo Review

Civil Procedure > ... > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Jurisdiction Over Actions > General Overview

HN16[] Standards of Review, De Novo Review

The existence of subject matter jurisdiction presents a question of law reviewable de novo.

Antitrust & Trade Law > International Aspects > International Application of US Law > General Overview

International Trade Law > General Overview

HN17[] International Aspects, International Application of US Law

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 6a.

Antitrust & Trade Law > International Aspects > International Application of US Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Jurisdiction Over Actions > General Overview

HN18[] International Aspects, International Application of US Law

15 U.S.C.S. § 6a establishes three requirements that an antitrust plaintiff, other than a domestic importer, must prove to establish subject matter jurisdiction: (1) the defendant's conduct must have a direct, substantial, and reasonably foreseeable effect on (2) plaintiff's continuing ability to export (3) from the United States.

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > De Novo Review

Civil Procedure > Dismissal > Involuntary Dismissals > General Overview

HN19[] Standards of Review, De Novo Review

An appellate court reviews the dismissal of a complaint de novo.

Civil Procedure > ... > In Rem & Personal Jurisdiction > In Personam Actions > General Overview

HN20[] In Rem & Personal Jurisdiction, In Personam Actions

The "pervasive activities" test requires an allegation that the nonresident's activities within the forum state are substantial or continuous and systematic.

Admiralty & Maritime Law > Practice & Procedure > Jurisdiction

Civil Procedure > ... > In Rem & Personal Jurisdiction > In Personam Actions > Minimum Contacts

Civil Procedure > ... > Jurisdiction > In Rem & Personal Jurisdiction > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > In Rem & Personal Jurisdiction > In Personam Actions > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > In Rem & Personal Jurisdiction > In Personam Actions > Purposeful Availment

HN21[] Practice & Procedure, Jurisdiction

An appellate court applies three criteria to determine whether sufficient minimum contacts exist to establish personal jurisdiction: (1) the nonresident defendant must perform some act by which he purposefully avails himself of the benefits and protections of the forum's laws; (2) the plaintiff's claim must arise out of or result from the defendant's forum-related activities; and (3) the exercise of jurisdiction must be reasonable.

Civil Procedure > ... > In Rem & Personal Jurisdiction > In Personam Actions > General Overview

HN22[] In Rem & Personal Jurisdiction, In Personam Actions

Unilateral activity of those who claim some relationship with a nonresident defendant cannot satisfy the requirement of contact with the forum state.

Civil Procedure > ... > In Rem & Personal Jurisdiction > In Personam Actions > Minimum Contacts

Civil Procedure > ... > In Rem & Personal Jurisdiction > In Personam Actions > General Overview

HN23[] In Personam Actions, Minimum Contacts

An individual's contract with an out-of-state party alone cannot automatically establish sufficient minimum contacts to support personal jurisdiction.

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > Abuse of Discretion

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Amendment of Pleadings > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Amendment of Pleadings > Leave of Court

HN24[] Standards of Review, Abuse of Discretion

An appellate court reviews the denial of leave to amend a complaint for abuse of discretion.

Counsel: Lawrence L. Curtice, Himelstein, Savinar, Petrocelli and Curtice, Patrick H. Fabian and Richard G. Krenz, Fabian, Graham and Englese, for the Plaintiffs-Appellants.

Raymond V. McCord, Shell Oil Company, James J. Garrett, Richard G. Seeborg, Thomas Reilly, Morrison & Foerster, for Shell Oil Company, Shell Chemical Co. and Pecten Chemicals, Inc.

Jan T. Chilton, Severson, Werson, Berke & Melchior, for United States Brass Corporation.

Max R. Shulman, Robert N. Feltoon, Cravath, Swaine & Moore, David A. Barrett, Duker & Barrett, David M. Heilbron, McCutchen, Doyle, Brown and Enersen, for Shell International Chemical Company Ltd., the Defendants-Appellees.

Judges: Herbert Y. C. Choy, Alfred T. Goodwin and Robert R. Beezer, Circuit Judges.

Opinion by: BEEZER

Opinion

[*804] BEEZER, Circuit Judge:

Appellants William McGlinchy and Dan-de Products Corporation filed claims against various defendants [2] for antitrust violations, breach of contract, and related torts. They appeal from the district [*805] court's (1) grant of summary judgment in favor of certain defendants; (2) denial of appellants' motion to amend their complaint; (3) grant of judgment on the pleadings for failure to state an antitrust claim concerning the polybutylene market; (4) dismissal of the antitrust claims for lack of subject matter jurisdiction; and (5) dismissal of the claims against Shell International Chemical Company for lack of personal jurisdiction. We affirm.

I

In 1977 Shell Chemical Company purchased all the patents, rights, and commercial production facilities for polybutylene (PB) from Whetco Company. PB resin is used to manufacture various products, including piping designed to carry water.

In 1978 William McGlinchy entered into an oral agreement with Shell Chemical to promote the sale of PB pipe grade resin in Southeast Asia. On January 25, 1979, Dan-de Products Corporation, owned and operated by McGlinchy, entered into a written contract with Shell Chemical for the same purpose. The written contract designated Dan-de as Shell Chemical's representative for the promotion and solicitation [3] of orders for PB pipe resin in designated countries throughout Southeast Asia. The contract expressly provided that it would remain in force for one year, ending December 31, 1979, with year-to-year renewal subject to termination at year-end upon 30 days prior notice. The written contract was extended in May 1979 to include Saudi Arabia.

On April 6, 1981 McGlinchy entered into a written contract with Shell Chemical to promote PB resin in South America. In June 1980 Dan-de and Shell International Chemical Company (SICC) entered into a similar written contract covering sale and promotion of PB resin in Africa and the Middle East.

On November 5, 1982 Shell Chemical notified McGlinchy and Dan-de in writing that the contract for promotion and sale of PB resin in Southeast Asia and Saudi Arabia would be terminated. The contract remained in force through December 31, 1982, and Shell Chemical continued to pay Dan-de commissions on actual sales through the end of 1983 as the contract required. The contract between Shell Chemical and McGlinchy covering PB resin sales and promotion in South America and the contract between SICC and Dan-de covering Middle Eastern and African PB resin sales [4] were also terminated in 1982 by Shell Chemical and SICC, respectively, pursuant to the terms of those contracts.

In February 1984 McGlinchy and Dan-de (collectively, appellants) instituted this action against Shell Oil Company, Shell Chemical Co. and Pecten Chemicals, Inc. (collectively, Shell Oil defendants), SICC, and other Shell-related entities. The original complaint alleged federal and state antitrust violations, as well as breach of contract and related torts. Appellants filed a first amended complaint on May 29, 1984.

SICC subsequently moved to dismiss for lack of personal jurisdiction, failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted, and lack of subject matter jurisdiction pursuant to 15 U.S.C. § 6a. Shell Oil defendants joined in the motion to dismiss for lack of subject matter jurisdiction. On November 30, 1984, the district court granted SICC's motion to dismiss for lack of personal jurisdiction and further granted the motion to dismiss joined by Shell Oil defendants for lack of subject matter jurisdiction under section 6a.

Appellants next moved for leave to file a second amended complaint to add several manufacturers of PB pipe fittings [5] as defendants and to add new antitrust claims relating to the promotion and sale of such fittings. On March 1, 1985 the district court denied appellants' motion to file a second amended complaint but allowed them to add four causes of action against newly named PB pipe fitting defendants. Appellants then filed an amended first amended complaint (AFA complaint) against the Shell Oil defendants and the PB pipe fitting defendants. [1]

[*806] Shell Oil defendants moved for judgment on the pleadings with respect to the federal and state antitrust claims relating to PB pipe fittings. The PB pipe fitting defendants joined in the motion, which the district court granted [6] on June 7, 1985.

---

[1] Appellants added Wallace Murray Corp. (along with its divisions U.S. Brass Corp. and Qest Plumbing Products), Vanguard Plastics, Inc. and Wrightway Mfg. Co., which all manufacture, produce, and sell insert fittings used with PB pipe systems. Appellants also added Plastic Pipe Fittings Association, which promotes, markets, and sells plastic pipe.

Subsequently the district court denied motions brought by Shell Oil defendants for summary judgment on appellants' breach of contract claim and for judgment on the pleadings on the remaining claims.

In December 1985 appellants again attempted to amend their complaint to add claims for relief against Shell Oil defendants for fraud and negligent interference with contract. On February 7, 1986 the district court denied the motion and subsequently set the case for trial in May 1986.

After all the parties had taken the depositions of each side's damages experts and discovery had closed, Shell Oil defendants moved the court to exclude the testimony of appellants' damages experts and to enter judgment against appellants for failure to offer a competent theory proving the fact or amount of damages. The district court granted Shell Oil defendants' motion on May 31, 1986, and entered judgment in their favor on June 5, 1986. Appellants' motion for reconsideration was subsequently denied, and appellants timely appealed.

II

The final proceedings in the district court dealt with appellants' only remaining claims: Shell Oil defendants' [Text Deleted by Court Emendation] [7] breaches of contract (including promissory estoppel and quasi-contract) and Shell Oil defendants' "tortious interference" with appellants' contracts and business opportunities. Appellants contend that the district court erred in excluding damages studies prepared by appellants' expert witnesses as well as the future testimony of those expert witnesses. Appellants also contend that the district court erred in granting summary judgment in favor of Shell Oil defendants for appellant's failure to show a genuine issue about damages. We affirm both the exclusion of evidence and the grant of summary judgment.

A

HN1[] We review a district court's evidentiary decisions for an abuse of discretion. Taylor v. Burlington Northern R.R. Co., 787 F.2d 1309, 1315 (9th Cir. 1986); United States v. Solomon, 753 F.2d 1522, 1524 (9th Cir. 1985) (expert witnesses).

The district court did not abuse its discretion in granting the Shell Oil defendants' motion to exclude the experts' damages studies and future testimony. The studies did not meet the standard that, in the context of [8] a motion for summary judgment, an expert must demonstrate his competence or back up his opinion with specific facts. Compare Bulthuis v. Rexall Corp., 789 F.2d 1315, 1318 (9th Cir. 1985) (per curiam) (weighing Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(e) and Fed. R. Evid. 705) with United States v. Various Slot Machines on Guam, 658 F.2d 697, 700 (9th Cir. 1981). Both the studies and testimony were properly excluded because any probative value was "substantially outweighed by the danger of unfair prejudice, confusion of the issues, or misleading the jury." Fed. R. Evid. 403. See Solomon, 753 F.2d at 1525.

Appellants' final list of witnesses designated Stephen Jizmagian as an expert witness on damages. As his deposition shows, appellants asked Jizmagian to forecast future lost profits to the McGlinchy companies after a change in relations between the McGlinchys and Shell. On the one hand, Jizmagian stated that he quantified in dollar terms the effect of the act or acts by Shell Oil Company, and that he attributed all of the future lost profits to acts of Shell Oil Company. On the other hand, Jizmagian acknowledged that he did not relate the loss to specific [9] acts and, indeed, could not recall any specific acts by Shell Oil defendants. He added that the cause of the decline in sales theoretically could have been anything. Given this inconsistency, Jizmagian's report and testimony would pose a great danger of confusing the fact and cause of damages with the amount of damages.

[*807] Even as a "before and after" assessment of appellants' damages from a hypothetical injury, Jizmagian's study was hopelessly flawed. He did not confirm that relevant market conditions were the same before and after the time the injury was alleged to have occurred. See Pacific Coast Agric. Export Ass'n v. Sunkist Growers, Inc., 526 F.2d 1196, 1206-07 (9th Cir. 1975), cert. denied, 425 U.S. 959, 96 S. Ct. 1741, 48 L. Ed. 2d 204 (1976).

Worse, appellants' causes of action specify that Shell Oil defendants [Text Deleted by Court Emendation] breached obligations and tortiously interfered with appellants' contracts and business opportunities involving particular product lines and in particular overseas countries and territories. Jizmagian, however, compiled his report and was prepared to testify on the basis of the appellants' [10] gross sales. He stated that he did not know which of appellants' product lines had declined in sales, or in which geographic areas -- even as between the United States and the rest of the world. Jizmagian's report and testimony would pose a great danger of misleading a jury into believing that appellants' losses associated with a decline in gross sales were the amount of damages to appellants from "lost profits" in particular product lines and territories.

Jizmagian's speculation about the amount of appellants' "lost profits" has no basis in the record. His study rests on unsupported assumptions and ignores distinctions crucial to arriving at a valid conclusion. See Various Slot Machines on Guam, 658 F.2d at 700 (quoting Merit Motors, Inc. v. Chrysler Corp., 187 U.S. App. D.C. 11, 569 F.2d 666, 672-73 (D.C. Cir. 1977)). The district court did not abuse its discretion in excluding Jizmagian's study and future testimony.

Appellants alternately named William McGlinchy as an expert witness and as a witness on damages, but never as an expert witness on damages. The parties, nevertheless, treated William McGlinchy as an expert witness on damages in [11] Southeast Asia. The district court evaluated William McGlinchy as an expert witness on those damages.

In making his study William McGlinchy's method was to forecast polybutylene resin sales, apply a given commission rate, and subtract out expenses to arrive at the net profits appellants would have earned but for the loss of their contract. The study's value depends heavily on the accuracy of the sales forecast. To forecast sales through 1987, William McGlinchy said that he "took the 838,000 pounds for 1982 actual sales and applied the 41 percent [compound annual] growth figure." He asserted that he based the 41 percent growth rate on local economic data, country by country in Southeast Asia, dating from the 1970's.

Yet William McGlinchy later acknowledged that in fact he first divined a total sales figure for 1987, then plugged in a compound growth rate -- 41 percent -- that would work backward to the 1982 actual sales figure. Although the study stated that companies he had been associated with had enjoyed growth rates of 41 percent and 83 percent, the study gave no indication of how he estimated a total sales figure for 1987. Lacking any sound foundation, the study would mislead [12] a jury into believing that damages had grown exponentially over the relevant period.

Other aspects of the study would have the same effect. For instance, the study assumed that expenses would stay at $ 60,000 per year for nine years through 1991. When asked how he had arrived at the $ 60,000 per year figure, William McGlinchy replied, "I believe I arrived at it from experience plus inflation." The flat figure, however, could reflect neither experience nor inflation. William McGlinchy did not otherwise document the figure.

Indeed, he documented little of the basis for his conclusions. His speculation about the amount of appellants' damages has scant basis in the record. His study rests on unsupported assumptions and unsound extrapolation. See Various Slot Machines on Guam, 658 F.2d at 700 (quoting Merit Motors, Inc., 569 F.2d at 672-73). The district court did not abuse its discretion in excluding William McGlinchy's study and future testimony.

[*808] B

After excluding the experts' studies and testimony, the district court granted Shell Oil defendants' motion for summary judgment. [13] HN2[] A summary judgment "shall be rendered forthwith if the pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories, and admissions on file, together with the affidavits, if any, show that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the moving party is entitled to a judgment as a matter of law." Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(c). We review a grant of summary judgment de novo, viewing the evidence in a light most favorable to the non-moving party. Dolphin Tours v. Pacifico Creative Serv., 773 F.2d 1506, 1509 (9th Cir. 1985).

The district court properly granted summary judgment in favor of Shell Oil defendants. In Celotex Corp. v. Catrett, 477 U.S. 317, 106 S. Ct. 2548, 91 L. Ed. 2d 265 (1986), a majority consisting of five justices said, "In our view, the plain language of Rule 56(c) mandates the entry of summary judgment, after adequate time for discovery and upon motion, against a party who fails to make a showing sufficient to establish the existence of an element essential to that party's case, and on which that party will bear the burden of proof at trial." Id. 106 S. Ct. at 2552-53.

Before the district court granted summary judgment, [14] appellants did not make a showing sufficient to establish the amount, causation, or fact of damages. The only evidence about amount of damages consisted in the studies of Jizmagian and William McGlinchy, previously excluded by the district court. The only other mention appellants made of damages was in listing William and Don McGlinchy as lay witnesses who would testify on damages. Appellants made no showing at all about causation or fact of damages.

After the district court granted summary judgment, Jizmagian, William McGlinchy, and Don McGlinchy made declarations about damages in connection with appellants' motion for reconsideration of summary judgment. These declarations added nothing to the pleadings, depositions, and other papers that the appellants already had filed.

Appellants seek comfort from the concurring opinion in Celotex by Justice White, who also joined the majority opinion. They argue that naming a witness to support a claim defeats summary judgment unless the movant somehow shows that the named witness's possible testimony raises no genuine issue of material fact. Cf. id. at 2555-56 (White, J., concurring).

Even under this standard the district court [15] properly granted summary judgment to Shell Oil defendants. The district court had excluded the damages studies by William McGlinchy and Jizmagian. Appellants named William McGlinchy and Don McGlinchy as lay witnesses on damages. In his deposition William McGlinchy, a plaintiff in this case, acknowledged that the damages studies by himself and Jizmagian were the only ones prepared for the lawsuit; William McGlinchy specified that he generated his own study without contribution from Don McGlinchy.

Some sort of study estimating the amount of damages was essential to appellants' case. As this court said in Dolphin Tours, HN3[] the plaintiffs "must provide evidence such that the jury is not left to 'speculation or guesswork' in determining the amount of damages to award." 773 F.2d at 1509-10. Summary judgment is appropriate where appellants have no expert witnesses or designated documents providing competent evidence from which a jury could fairly estimate damages. Rickards v. Canine Eye Registration Found., Inc., 704 F.2d 1449, 1452 (9th Cir.) (antitrust case), [16] cert. denied, 464 U.S. 994, 78 L. Ed. 2d 683, 104 S. Ct. 488 (1983).

In the absence of another study besides those that the district court had properly excluded, or the possibility that Don McGlinchy could rehabilitate William McGlinchy's defective study, appellants could make no showing about the amount of damages. By eliminating these possibilities, Shell Oil defendants made their showing that the named witnesses' possible testimony would raise no genuine issue of material fact about the amount of damages [*809] appellants had sustained. Cf. Celotex 106 S. Ct. at 2555-56 (White, J., concurring).

HN4[] Once Shell Oil defendants made this showing, the burden was on appellants to come forward with specific facts showing there was a genuine issue for trial. Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(e); see Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co. v. Zenith Radio, 475 U.S. 574, 106 S. Ct. 1348, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538 (1986). Appellants did not meet this burden; they produced no evidence at all to contradict Shell Oil defendants' showing, or even to enable contradictory inferences. [17] See British Airways Bd. v. Boeing Co., 585 F.2d 946, 951 (9th Cir. 1978), cert. denied, 440 U.S. 981, 60 L. Ed. 2d 241, 99 S. Ct. 1790 (1979). The declarations appellants submitted when seeking reconsideration of summary judgment merely restated the pleadings; as the Court pointed out in Celotex, 106 S. Ct. at 2554, Federal Rule 56(e) HN5[] does not allow a party to oppose summary judgment on the pleadings themselves.

Unlike in Wool v. Tandem Computers Inc., 818 F.2d 1433, 1438 (9th Cir. 1987), in this case appellants submitted no specific facts on which a finder of fact could reasonably conclude that appellants actually suffered damages, caused by Shell Oil defendants, in any quantifiable amount. The district court properly granted summary judgment in favor of Shell Oil defendants.

III

Appellants contend that the district court erred in denying appellants leave to amend their complaint to add causes of action for fraud and negligent misrepresentation. We affirm the district court's denial of leave to amend.

[18] Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 15(a) HN6[] states that leave to amend "shall be freely given when justice so requires." Bearing that standard in mind, we review a district court's denial of a motion for leave to amend for an abuse of discretion. Unless we have a definite and firm conviction that the district court committed a clear error of judgment, we will not disturb the district court's decision. California Arch. Bldg. Prod. v. Franciscan Ceramics, 818 F.2d 1466, 1472 (9th Cir. 1987), cert. denied, 484 U.S. 1006, 108 S. Ct. 698, 98 L. Ed. 2d 650 (1988).

HN7[] "Undue delay" is one valid reason for a district court to deny a party leave to amend. Id. at 1472 (citing Foman v. Davis, 371 U.S. 178, 182, 9 L. Ed. 2d 222, 83 S. Ct. 227 (1962)). Appellants claim that they only became aware of claims for fraud and negligent interference with contract after engaging in discovery in May 1985. Appellants should have been aware of a claim for negligent interference when they filed their original [19] complaint, which included a claim for tortious interference. In any case, appellants did not give notice of their intention to amend their complaint until the middle of December, at least six months after they had become aware of the new claims. Discovery originally was scheduled to end on November 15, 1985, and a trial date was set for December 2, 1985. Appellants waited until the original trial date had been vacated to attempt to amend their complaint. This delay was undue.

"Prejudice" is another valid reason for a district court to deny a party leave to amend. Id. at 1472 (citing Foman, 371 U.S. at 182). Appellants contend that Shell Oil defendants would have suffered no prejudice because discovery already had covered all the issues presented by the new claims for fraud and negligent interference with contract. As Shell Oil defendants point out, if appellants' contention were true their delay in seeking leave to amend would be even more inexcusable. In fact the new claims, especially fraud, would have required additional discovery on a wide range of new issues; that discovery likely would have included new depositions by Shell Oil defendants' employees. The [20] new claims would have required additional research and rewriting of trial briefs. The resulting delay and expense would have prejudiced Shell Oil defendants, who were entitled to rely on a timely close of discovery and a near-term trial date.

Repeated failure to cure deficiencies by amendments previously allowed is [*810] another valid reason for a district court to deny a party leave to amend. Foman, 371 U.S. at 182. In February 1984 appellants filed their complaint. In May 1984 they filed a first amended complaint. In early 1985 they filed an amended first amended complaint. Appellants had ample opportunity to add new claims to their complaint.

The district court did not abuse its discretion in denying appellants leave to amend their complaint in February 1986; justice did not require otherwise.

IV

With respect to their antitrust claims concerning the PB market, the appellants appeal a judgment on the pleadings in favor of Shell Oil defendants and defendant U.S. Brass Corp., a manufacturer of insert pipe fittings. Because appellants' complaint does not sufficiently state a claim upon which relief can be granted, we affirm the district court's order.

[21] A

HN8[] We review de novo a dismissal by judgment on the pleadings under Rule 12(c). Gearhart v. Thorne, 768 F.2d 1072, 1073 (9th Cir. 1985). All allegations of fact by the party opposing the motion are accepted as true. Doleman v. Meiji Mut. Life Ins. Co., 727 F.2d 1480, 1482 (9th Cir. 1984). A dismissal on the pleadings for failure to state a claim is proper only if "the movant clearly establishes that no material issue of fact remains to be resolved and that he is entitled to judgment as a matter of law." Id. (quoting 5 C. Wright & A. Miller, Federal Practice and Procedure: Civil § 1368, at 690 (1969)); see also General Cinema Corp. v. Buena Vista Distrib., 681 F.2d 594, 597 (9th Cir. 1982).

HN9[] In this case Rule 12(c) was used to raise the defense of failure to state a claim. See Aldabe v. Aldabe, 616 F.2d 1089, 1093 (9th Cir. 1980). As a result, the motion for judgment on the pleadings faces the same test as a motion [22] under Rule 12(b) (6): this court may affirm the district court's dismissal "only if it is clear that no relief could be granted under any set of facts that could be proven consistent with the allegations." Hishon v. King & Spalding, 467 U.S. 69, 73, 81 L. Ed. 2d 59, 104 S. Ct. 2229 (1984); see also Conley v. Gibson, 355 U.S. 41, 45-46, 2 L. Ed. 2d 80, 78 S. Ct. 99 (1957); Newman v. Universal Pictures, 813 F.2d 1519, 1521-22 (9th Cir. 1987). Not only must the court accept all material allegations in the complaint as true, but the complaint must be construed, and all doubts resolved, in the light most favorable to the plaintiff. NL Indus., Inc. v. Kaplan, 792 F.2d 896, 898 (9th Cir. 1986); Ernest W. Hahn, Inc. v. Codding, 615 F.2d 830, 834-45 (9th Cir. 1980). Nonetheless, conclusory allegations without more are insufficient to defeat a motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim. McCarthy v. Mayo, 827 F.2d 1310, 1317 (9th Cir. 1987).

B

In their AFA complaint appellants sued under sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. §§ 1 & 2, [2] as well as [23] under the California Business and Professional Code, §§ 16700-16760 (California Cartwright Act). Because the district court concluded that appellants had inadequately pleaded antitrust injury to maintain a claim under the Sherman and California Cartwright Acts, the district court granted the defendants' motion for judgment on the pleadings for failure to state a claim.

[24] Appellants contend that their complaint stated sufficient facts to preclude judgment on the pleadings on their federal and state antitrust claims relating to the PB pipe fitting market. Shell Oil defendants maintain that appellants have insufficiently [*811] pleaded antitrust standing or antitrust injury. Defendant U.S. Brass Corp. also argues that the district court properly granted judgment on the pleadings because the complaint pleaded no antitrust injury and did not adequately allege the elements of an antitrust claim.

HN11[] To establish a section 1 violation under the Sherman Act, a plaintiff must demonstrate three elements: (1) an agreement, conspiracy, or combination among two or more persons or distinct business entities; (2) which is intended to harm or unreasonably restrain competition; and (3) which actually causes injury to competition, beyond the impact on the claimant, within a field of commerce in which the claimant is engaged (i.e., "antitrust injury"). See Coastal Transfer Co. v. Toyota Motor Sales, U.S.A., 833 F.2d 208, 211 (9th Cir. 1987); Aydin Corp. v. Loral Corp., 718 F.2d 897, 902 (9th Cir. 1983); [25] Rickards v. Canine Eye Registration Found., 783 F.2d 1329, 1332 (9th Cir.), cert. denied, 479 U.S. 851, 107 S. Ct. 180, 93 L. Ed. 2d 115 (1986); Cascade Cabinet Co. v. Western Cabinet & Millwork, 710 F.2d 1366, 1373 (9th Cir. 1983). [3]

[26] HN13[] To establish a section 2 violation for an attempt to monopolize, a plaintiff must demonstrate four elements: (1) specific intent to control prices or destroy competition; (2) predatory or anti-competitive conduct directed toward accomplishing that purpose; (3) a dangerous probability of success; and (4) causal antitrust injury. Supermarket of Homes v. San Fernando Valley Bd., 786 F.2d 1400, 1405 (9th Cir. 1986); Rickards, 783 F.2d at 1335.

---

[2] Section 1 of the Sherman Antitrust Act provides, in pertinent part: HN10[] "Every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, is declared to be illegal." 15 U.S.C. § 1. Section 2 of the Sherman Antitrust Act provides, in pertinent part: "Every person who shall monopolize, or attempt to monopolize, or combine or conspire with any other person or persons, to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, shall be deemed guilty of a felony." 15 U.S.C. § 2.

[3] HN12[] The Sherman Act's prohibition against concerted activity in restraint of trade is analyzed under either the "per se" rule or the "rule of reason." The per se analysis is applied to practices that are presumptively illegal, such as (1) horizontal and vertical price-fixing; (2) horizontal market division; (3) group boycotts and concerted refusals to deal; and (4) tie-in sales. See Cascade Cabinet Co., 710 F.2d at 1370. The rule of reason requires "'the factfinder to decide whether under all the circumstances of the case the restrictive practice imposes an unreasonable restraint on competition.'" Id. (quoting Arizona v. Maricopa County Medical Soc'y, 457 U.S. 332, 343, 73 L. Ed. 2d 48, 102 S. Ct. 2466 (1982)). In this case, no per se antitrust violation is alleged; rule of reason analysis is appropriate.

A fair and liberal construction of the complaint demonstrates that appellants failed to allege the requisite antitrust injury to competition that is required under both sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act. [4] The Sherman Act itself speaks of "restraint[s] of trade or commerce," 15 U.S.C. § 1, and attempted monopolization of "trade or commerce," 15 U.S.C. § 2, not individual competitors in a market. HN14[] The alleged violation must cause injury to competition beyond the impact on [27] the claimant under section 1, and must destroy competition and cause antitrust injury under section 2. To state an antitrust claim, therefore, appellants must allege "antitrust injury, which is to say injury of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent. . . . The injury should reflect the anticompetitive effect either of the violation or of anticompetitive acts made possible by the violation." Brunswick Corp. v. Pueblo Bowl-O-Mat, Inc., 429 U.S. 477, 489, 50 L. Ed. 2d 701, 97 S. Ct. 690 (1977) (emphasis in original). The antitrust laws [*812] were enacted for "the protection of competition, not competitors." Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, 320, 8 L. Ed. 2d 510, 82 S. Ct. 1502 (1962) (emphasis in original).

[28] In their AFA complaint appellants mechanically assert that the alleged violations of the antitrust laws "have had and continue to have a substantial effect on interstate and foreign trade and commerce." Appellants later specifically identify the relevant market by alleging: "For the purposes of the antitrust claims alleged herein, PB is the relevant market for determining the anti-competitive effects of the defendant's actions." Nowhere in their AFA complaint, however, do appellants allege injury to the competitive market for PB. Instead, they allege that the actions between Shell Oil defendants and their overseas affiliates "were taken for the purpose of eliminating McGlinchy and Dan-de as representatives of Shell Chemical and as sellers of PB and PB-related products, and for the financial benefit of defendant Shell Chemical and the parties acting in concert with such defendant." Thus appellants fail to state an antitrust claim based on defendants' conduct with respect to PB and PB-related products. It is injury to the market or to competition in general, not merely injury to individuals or individual firms that is significant. Ralph C. Wilson Indus. v. Chronicle Broadcasting Co., 794 F.2d 1359, 1363 (9th Cir. 1986); [29] Fine v. Barry and Enright Prods., 731 F.2d 1394, 1399 (9th Cir.), cert. denied, 469 U.S. 881, 105 S. Ct. 248, 83 L. Ed. 2d 186 (1984).

Appellants also allege that Shell Oil defendants and other defendant manufacturers of PB insert pipe fittings "engaged in a conspiracy and a systematic pattern and practice to eliminate flare fittings from the marketplace, particularly the flare fittings sold by plaintiffs." [5] Appellants allege that the "co-conspirators and said defendants are in violation of the Sherman Act due to their attempt to monopolize the market for fittings for PB plumbing pipe and by wrongfully attempting to eliminate the flare fittings sold by plaintiffs." Finally, appellants allege that Shell Oil defendants, in concert with defendants who compete with the appellants in the PB fittings market, "have engaged in a conspiracy to eliminate plaintiffs from the domestic fittings market, and also have seriously undermined plaintiffs' position in the foreign market, resulting in an unreasonable restraint of trade."

[30] These allegations focus on defendants' conduct with respect to flare fittings. In their brief appellants argue that they alleged injury in the pipe fittings market, rather than the PB market. As appellants are forced to concede,

---

[4] The district court also dismissed appellants' state law claim under the California Cartwright Act, Cal. Bus. & Prof Code §§ 16700-16760. If a federal claim is dismissed before trial, any pendent state matters usually should be dismissed as well. See United Mine Workers v. Gibbs, 383 U.S. 715, 726, 16 L. Ed. 2d 218, 86 S. Ct. 1130 (1966); Filco v. Amana Refrigeration, Inc., 709 F.2d 1257, 1268 (9th Cir.), cert. dismissed, 464 U.S. 956, 104 S. Ct. 385, 78 L. Ed. 2d 331 (1983). In this case, however, appellants base their state law claim on the same facts on which they base their Sherman Act claims. We have recognized that Cartwright Act claims raise basically the same issues as do Sherman Act claims. Filco, 709 F.2d at 1268 (citing Milton v. Hudson Sales Corp., 152 Cal.App.2d 418, 439-41, 313 P.2d 936, 950 (1957)). California state courts follow federal cases in deciding claims under the Cartwright Act. See Marin County Bd. of Realtors, Inc. v. Palsson, 16 Cal.3d 920, 925, 130 Cal. Rptr. 1, 3, 549 P.2d 833, 835 (1976); Corwin v. Los Angeles Newspaper Serv. Bureau, Inc., 4 Cal.3d 842, 852, 94 Cal. Rptr. 785, 791, 484 P.2d 953, 959 (1971); see also Filco, 709 F.2d at 1268. As a result, our conclusion with regard to the Sherman Act claims applies with equal force to appellants' Cartwright Act claims. Accordingly, we also affirm the district court's grant of judgment on the pleadings on the state antitrust claims.

[5] In the AFA complaint the appellants stated that Dan-de "was and is now engaged in the domestic and overseas business of selling, marketing and promoting polybutylene pipe [and] producing and selling flare-type pipe fittings."

however, the AFA complaint plainly alleges that "PB is the relevant market for determining the anticompetitive effect of defendant's actions." [6]

In addition, appellants' allegations amount to an assertion that appellants' own fittings business has been injured by the defendants' conduct. [31] Even if appellants claim a substantial loss to their flare fitting business within the broader PB market, HN15[] "economic injury to a competitor does not equal injury to competition." Cascade Cabinet Co., 710 F.2d at 1373. The elimination of a single competitor, without more, does not prove anticompetitive effect. Kaplan v. Burroughs Corp., 611 F.2d 286, 291 (9th Cir. 1979), cert. denied, 447 U.S. 924, 65 L. Ed. 2d 1116, 100 S. Ct. 3016 (1980). As we have stated:

> Proof that the defendant's activities had an impact upon competition in a relevant market is an absolutely essential element of the rule of reason case. It is the impact upon competitive conditions in a [*813] definable market which distinguishes the antitrust violation from the ordinary business tort.

Id. Appellants' failure to allege injury to competition is a proper ground for dismissal by judgment on the pleadings. See Seattle Totems Hockey Club v. National Hockey League, 783 F.2d 1347, 1350 (9th Cir.), cert. denied, 479 U.S. 932, 107 S. Ct. 405, 93 L. Ed. 2d 357 (1986).

Because appellants can prove no set [32] of facts consistent with their complaint that would entitle them to relief under the antitrust laws, appellants have not sufficiently stated an antitrust claim relating to the PB market.

V

Appellants appeal the district court's dismissal of their Sherman Act claims -- alleging concerted and unilateral refusal to deal in various foreign markets -- against SICC and the Shell Oil defendants. Because appellants pleaded only injury to customers or potential customers located in Southeast Asia and to plaintiffs themselves, we affirm the district court's holding that 15 U.S.C. § 6a precluded subject matter jurisdiction. [7]

[33] HN16[]

The existence of subject matter jurisdiction presents a question of law reviewable de novo. See Peter Starr Prod. Co. v. Twin Continental Films, Inc., 783 F.2d 1440, 1442 (9th Cir. 1986).

Appellants argue that their antitrust claims do not relate exclusively to foreign commerce and that their allegations meet the requirements of section 6a. Moreover, they contend that their complaint has alleged injury to competition in the United States in the relevant market.

SICC responds that appellants have not met the requirements of subsections 1(A) and 1(B) by showing that any effect on United States commerce was "direct, substantial, and reasonably foreseeable." 15 U.S.C. § 6a. In addition, SICC maintains that appellants have not sufficiently alleged an antitrust violation as required by subsection

---

[6] Appellants acknowledge that they failed to include an allegation that the relevant market was the pipe fittings market. Such an allegation was included in the proposed second amended complaint, which was disallowed by the district court. Because we hold that the district court properly exercised its discretion in not allowing appellants to amend their complaint, we are limited to considering what appears on the AFA complaint in reviewing the judgment on the pleadings for failure to state a claim.

[7] The district court also dismissed appellants' California Cartwright Act claims for failure to state a claim under Rule 12(b)(6). We review such dismissals de novo. Fort Vancouver Plywood Co. v. United States, 747 F.2d 547, 552 (9th Cir. 1984). Appellants have failed to allege conduct that involves intrastate commerce, see, e.g., R.E. Spriggs Co. v. Adolph Coors Co., 37 Cal.App.3d 653, 657, 666, 112 Cal. Rptr. 585, 587, 594 (1974); instead the state antitrust claims relate only to foreign commerce and fail to allege the requisite antitrust injury. We thus affirm the district court's order dismissing the California Cartwright Act claim for failure to state a claim.

2 of section 6(a). Shell Oil defendants argue that because all of the purportedly illegal conduct by defendants lacks the requisite domestic effect, the district court properly dismissed the antitrust claims alleging concerted and unilateral refusal to deal [34] in various foreign markets for lack of subject matter jurisdiction under section 6a.

Section 6a was added by the Foreign Trade Antitrust Improvements Act of 1982, Pub. L. No. 97-290, 96 Stat. 1246. It provides:

> Sections 1 to 7 of this title HN17[] shall not apply to conduct involving trade or commerce (other than import trade or import commerce) with foreign nations unless--
> (1) such conduct has a direct, substantial, and reasonably foreseeable effect --
> (A) on trade or commerce which is not trade or commerce with foreign nations, or on import trade or import commerce with foreign nations; or > (B) on export trade or export commerce with foreign nations, of a person engaged in such trade or commerce in the United States; and
>
> (2) such effect gives rise to a claim under the provisions of sections 1 to 7 of this title, other than this section.
>
> If sections 1 to 7 of this title apply to such conduct only because of the operation of paragraph (1)(B), then sections 1 to 7 of this title shall apply to such conduct only for injury to export business in the United States.

[35] 15 U.S.C. § 6a. [8] There is little case law interpreting this section. In *Eurim-Pharm [814] GmbH v. Pfizer, Inc., 593 F. Supp. 1102 (S.D.N.Y. 1984), the district court granted defendants' motion to dismiss for lack of subject matter jurisdiction because the plaintiff had failed to establish that defendants' alleged conduct resulted in an anticompetitive effect on the United States domestic or import commerce. Id. at 1107. The court reasoned that section 6a "was intended to exempt from United States antitrust law conduct that lacks the requisite domestic effect, even where such conduct originates in the United States or involves American-owned entities operating abroad." Id. at 1106.

---

[8] Prior to enactment of section 6a, the extraterritorial reach of the antitrust laws was governed in this circuit by a tripartite test: (1) the effect or intended effect on the foreign commerce of the United States; (2) the type and magnitude of the alleged illegal behavior; and (3) the appropriateness of exercising extraterritorial jurisdiction in light of considerations of international comity and fairness. Timberlane Lumber Co. v. Bank of America, 549 F.2d 597, 613, 615 (9th Cir. 1976) (Timberlane I). Upon remand of Timberlane I, the district court applied the tripartite test. See Timberlane Lumber Co. v. Bank of America, 574 F. Supp. 1453, 1463-67 (N.D. Cal. 1983), aff'd, 749 F.2d 1378 (9th Cir. 1984), cert. denied, 472 U.S. 1032, 87 L. Ed. 2d 643, 105 S. Ct. 3514 (1985) (Timberlane II). On subsequent appeal, this Court reviewed the district court's analysis under the Timberlane I standard without mentioning section 6a. See Timberlane II, 749 F.2d at 1383-86. Other circuits had expressly rejected the Timberlane I test. See, e.g., National Bank of Canada v. International Card Ass'n, 666 F.2d 6, 8-9 (2d Cir. 1981) (holding that there must be an appreciable anticompetitive effect on this country's commerce of a type sufficient to justify assertion of jurisdiction); see also Liamuiga Tours v. Travel Impressions, Ltd., 617 F. Supp. 920, 923 (E.D.N.Y. 1985).

In an effort to provide a single standard for the issue of extraterritorial application of the Sherman Act, Congress enacted section 6a. See O.N.E. Shipping v. Flota Mercante Grancolombiana, 830 F.2d 449, 451 (2d Cir. 1987), petition for cert. filed, Feb. 8, 1988; The 'In' Porters, S.A. v. Hanes Printables, Inc., 663 F. Supp. 494, 497-98 (M.D.N.C. 1987). Despite the peculiar procedural history of Timberlane -- section 6a was enacted between the remand and subsequent appeal -- we are bound to apply section 6a.

We note that in passing the Foreign Trade Antitrust Improvements Act, Congress did not change the ability of the courts to exercise principles of international comity. See H.R. Rep. 686, 97th Cong., 2d Sess. 13 (1982); see also Laker Airways v. Sabena, Belgian World Airways, 235 U.S. App. D.C. 207, 731 F.2d 909, 946 n.137 (D.C. Cir. 1984); McElderry v. Cathay Pacific Airways, 678 F. Supp. 1071, 1988 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 660, 1988-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P 67,878, at 57,389 (S.D.N.Y. Feb. 3, 1988); O.N.E. Shipping, 830 F.2d at 451-54.

[36] In Liamuiga Tours v. Travel Impressions, Ltd., 617 F. Supp. 920 (E.D.N.Y. 1985), the district court dismissed a plaintiff's antitrust claim under section 6a because there was "no jurisdictional nexus" for the court to decide the claim under the Sherman Act. Id. at 925. The court reasoned that section 6a's legislative history demonstrated that "the effect required for jurisdictional nexus must be an anticompetitive effect in the domestic market." Id. at 924.

In The 'In' Porters, S.A. v. Hanes Printables, Inc., 663 F. Supp. 494 (M.D.N.C. 1987), the district court dismissed an antitrust claim because the foreign company plaintiff failed to meet the jurisdictional requirements of section 6a. Id. at 501. The court reasoned that section 6a HN18[] "establishes three requirements that an antitrust plaintiff, other than a domestic importer, must prove to establish subject matter jurisdiction: (1) the defendant's conduct must have a direct, substantial, and reasonably foreseeable effect on (2) plaintiff's continuing [37] ability to export (3) from the United States." Id. at 500 (emphasis in original; footnote omitted). The court concluded that the foreign company plaintiff failed to establish that it was within the class of injured United States exporters. Id.

In McElderry v. Cathay Pacific Airways, 678 F. Supp. 1071, 1988 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 660, 1988-1 Trade. Cas. (CCH) P. 67,878, at 57,387 (S.D.N.Y. Feb. 3, 1988), the district court dismissed plaintiff's antitrust claims "for failure to meet the requirements of [section 6a]." Id. at 57,388. The court reasoned that under section 6a federal courts do not have jurisdiction under the Sherman Act unless there is a direct, substantial, and reasonably foreseeable anticompetitive effect on United States commerce, regardless of whether there was anticompetitive conduct in the United States. Id. at 57,388-89.

[*815] In their first amended complaint appellants alleged that their agreement with Shell Chemical involved "the promotion and solicitation of orders for PB resin in Hong Kong, India, Indonesia, Malaysia, the Philippines, Singapore, Taiwan, and Thailand," including attempts "to locate, develop [38] and to promote local manufacturers or extruders of PB pipe in South East Asia." Because appellants challenge conduct in their antitrust claim that involves trade or commerce (other than import trade or import commerce) with foreign nations, they must satisfy either subsection (1)(A) or (1)(B), and subsection 2 of section 6a.

Appellants draw our attention to their allegations that "Dan-de was and is now engaged in the domestic and overseas business of selling and promoting pipe," and that the defendants' conspiracy resulted "in the termination of plaintiffs' agreement with Shell Chemical to be its exclusive representative in the sale, promotion, and distribution of PB resin and products in South East Asia and other areas."

As to subsection (1)(A), appellants have failed to allege that the defendants' conduct has a "direct, substantial, and reasonably foreseeable effect" on domestic commerce or import trade. 15 U.S.C. § 6a(1)(A). As to subsection (1)(B), appellants have not sufficiently alleged a direct, substantial, and reasonably foreseeable effect on export trade or commerce. 15 U.S.C. § 6a(1)(B). Indeed, in their first amended complaint [39] appellants never maintained that they were exporters.

Finally, appellants have failed to allege an antitrust claim under subsection 2 of section 6a. Appellants must allege antitrust injury to the market or to competition in general, not merely injury to individuals or individual firms. See Ralph C. Wilson Indus., 794 F.2d at 1363; Fine, 731 F.2d at 1399. Appellants' first amended complaint only alleges injury to themselves, rather than to the relevant market.

After a careful review of the first amended complaint, we conclude that appellants' claims relate only to foreign commerce without the requisite domestic anticompetitive effect. The district court properly dismissed the antitrust claims concerning refusal to deal in foreign trade and commerce on the ground that the court lacked subject matter jurisdiction.

VI

Appellants argue that the district court improperly dismissed contract and tort claims against SICC for lack of personal jurisdiction. The district court found that it did not have personal jurisdiction over SICC, a nonresident, London-based firm, because appellants failed to demonstrate either "pervasive activities" by SICC in [40]

California or "minimum contacts" linking SICC to California. We affirm the district court's dismissal of the AFA complaint against SICC for lack of personal jurisdiction.

Appellants also argue that the district court erred in denying them leave to amend defects in the AFA complaint. The district court found that appellants' proposed Second Amended Complaint failed to cure defects in the AFA complaint. We affirm the district court's denial of leave to amend the AFA by the proposed Second Amended Complaint.

A

HN19[] We review dismissal of the complaint against SICC de novo. Fields v. Sedgwick Associated Risks, Ltd., 796 F.2d 299, 301 (9th Cir. 1986).

Appellants argue that SICC conducted "pervasive activities" in California, thereby subjecting SICC to personal jurisdiction in that state. The district court found that SICC's activities were not sufficiently pervasive to subject it to personal jurisdiction under the HN20[] "pervasive activites" test. As set out in Data Disc, Inc. v. Systems Tech. Assoc., Inc., 557 F.2d 1280, 1287 (9th Cir. 1977), [41] this test requires an allegation that "the nonresident['s] . . . activities within the [forum] state are 'substantial' or 'continuous and systematic.'"

At no point have appellants alleged facts which would support a prima facie case for personal jurisdiction based on "substantial" or "continuous and systematic" activities in [*816] California. SICC has never maintained offices, qualified to do business, or regularly solicited business in California. SICC has never assigned agents or employees to work regularly in California, has never owned, used, or possessed real property in California, and has never contracted to supply goods or services in California.

SICC has never conducted any "substantial" or "continuous and systematic" activities in California. Thus SICC has not conducted "pervasive activities" in California.

Alternatively, appellants argue that they alleged sufficient "minimum contacts" in the AFA complaint to establish personal jurisdiction over SICC. HN21[] We apply three criteria to determine whether sufficient "minimum contacts" exist to establish personal jurisdiction: [42] "(1) the nonresident defendant must perform some act by which he purposefully avails himself of the benefits and protections of the forum's laws; (2) the plaintiff's claim must arise out of or result from the defendant's forum-related activities; and (3) the exercise of jurisdiction must be reasonable." Raffaele v. Compagnie Generale Maritime, 707 F.2d 395, 397 (9th Cir. 1983); see also Data Disc, 557 F.2d at 1287.

Appellants allege that because the contract between SICC and appellants was signed by appellants in California, SICC "purposely availed" itself of the benefits and protections of California laws. The district court considered this allegation insufficient to constitute an SICC "act" of "purposefully availing." We agree.

Four reasons explain why appellants' execution of the contract in California is insufficient to meet the "purposefully availing" part of the "minimum contacts" test.

First, the contract was negotiated in England. Because "the substance of the relationship was formed" in England, the formality of signing the contract in California cannot establish jurisdiction. R. E. Sanders & Co. v. Lincoln-Richardson Enters., Inc., 108 Cal. App. 3d 71, 80, 166 Cal. Rptr. 269, 273-74 (1980) [43] (quoting Lakeside Ridge & Steel Co. v. Mountain State Constr. Co., 597 F.2d 596, 604 (7th Cir. 1979), cert. denied, 445 U.S. 907, 63 L. Ed. 2d 325, 100 S. Ct. 1087 (1980).

Second, the contract makes no reference to California or to the United States, either as appellants' place of residence or as a forum for dispute settlement.

Third, no authorized agents of SICC were alleged to have performed or executed any portion of the contract in California. The parties conducted contract execution and termination by international mail. Such contacts are insufficient to constitute an act purposefully availing SICC of California laws. See Interdyne Co. v. SYS Computer Corp., 31 Cal. App. 3d 508, 107 Cal. Rptr. 499, 501 (1973).

Fourth, even paired with appellants' alleged acts of inviting SICC to use and to observe California facilities and expertise, appellants' allegations fail to state a prima facie case. It is well settled that HN22[] "the unilateral activity of those who claim some relationship with a nonresident defendant cannot satisfy the requirement [44] of contact with the forum State." Hanson v. Denckla, 357 U.S. 235, 253, 2 L. Ed. 2d 1283, 78 S. Ct. 1228 (1958). [9]

Appellants' invitation to SICC to avail itself of appellants' California facilities constitutes unilateral activity. In the absence of contractual obligations by SICC, such as sale of goods or services to California residents or a deliberate presence in California, such activity is insufficient to satisfy part one of the "minimum contacts" test. Similarly, appellants' statement that it "performed 90% of [its] activities in the Bay Area," even [45] if accurate, describes only unilateral activity. Again, such activity fails to create personal jurisdiction over SICC.

Thus appellants' complaint fails to state that SICC "purposefully availed" itself of California's laws. As we stated in Republic Int'l Corp. v. Amco Eng'rs, Inc., 516 F.2d 161 (9th Cir. 1975), "'[a plaintiff's] performance [*817] in California cannot give jurisdiction over . . . [a nonresident defendant]; it is [a defendant's] activity that must provide the basis for jurisdiction.'" Id. at 167 (citation omitted). See also Hanson, 357 U.S. at 253. Here the complete absence of activity by SICC in California bars personal jurisdiction over SICC.

Appellants suggest that a different result is compelled by our recent holding in Haisten v. Grass Valley Medical Reimbursement Fund, Ltd., 784 F.2d 1392 (9th Cir. 1986). In Haisten, we stated:

> Recent Supreme Court cases indicate that modification of our three-prong test is appropriate. In particular, within the rubric of 'purposeful availment' the Court has allowed the exercise of jurisdiction over a defendant whose only 'contact' [46] with the forum state is the 'purposeful direction' of a foreign act having effect in the forum state.

Id. at 1397 (emphasis in original) (quoting Calder v. Jones, 465 U.S. 783, 79 L. Ed. 2d 804, 104 S. Ct. 1482 (1984)).

SICC's contractual obligations were to be carried out expressly in countries other than the United States. The contract makes no reference to California, to appellants' residence in California, or to any reliance on appellants' facilities in California. Appellants nevertheless allege that SICC's contractual obligations constitute a "foreign act purposefully direct[ed]" to have an "effect" in California.

This argument is specious. While the contract was indeed a "foreign act," it was not "purposefully direct[ed]" to have any "effect" in California. In Haisten, the insurance agreement "explicitly concerned the indemnification of California physicians against liability solely under California malpractice law. Thus, the effect in California was not only foreseeable, it was contemplated and bargained for." Id. In Calder, which we cited in Haisten, the Supreme Court considered a libel [47] claim by a plaintiff whom defendant knew to reside in California. The Calder court noted that defendants "knew that the brunt of that injury would be felt by [the plaintiff] in the State in which the National Enquirer [owned by defendant] has its largest circulation." More specifically, the Calder court pointed to the fact that the defendant's "intentional, and allegedly tortious, actions were expressly aimed at California." Calder, 465 U.S. at 789 (emphasis added).

---

[9] More recently, the Supreme Court has held that HN23[] "an individual's contract with an out-of-state party alone [cannot] automatically establish sufficient minimum contacts" to support personal jurisdiction. Burger King Corp. v. Rudzewicz, 471 U.S. 462, 478, 85 L. Ed. 2d 528, 105 S. Ct. 2174 (1985) (emphasis in original).

The facts of this case are significantly different. The relevant contract does not name California, expressly or by implication. The contract does not name the United States. It does name twenty-one other countries. There are no terms in the contract which would indicate that SICC contemplated an effect in California, much less that any such effect should be considered a material term of agreement. The contract was "purposefully directed" at activities in nations other than the United States; appellants concede this when they recite their "willingness and ability" to "travel anywhere, anytime and any place . . . to expand the market for [SICC's product]."

Finally, unlike in Calder [48] or Haisten, in this case personal jurisdiction is sought on a contract claim, not on a tort claim. Appellants have failed to allege sufficient facts, including a tortious act or effect, to establish personal jurisdiction over their tort claims.

Appellants do not allege an "act . . . purposefully availing" SICC of the forum's laws, or a "foreign act . . . purposefully directed . . ." at an "effect" in California; hence appellants fail to satisfy part one of the "minimum contacts" test. Having established that appellants did not allege sufficient facts to support personal jurisdiction under either the "pervasive activities" test or under part one of the "minimum contacts" test, we need not consider whether appellants have satisfied parts two and three of the "minimum contacts" test. [10] [*818] The district court properly dismissed appellants' complaint against SICC for lack of personal jurisdiction.

[49] B

HN24[] We review denial of leave to amend a complaint for abuse of discretion. Halet v. Wend Inv. Co., 672 F.2d 1305, 1310 (9th Cir. 1982). The deficiencies in the AFA complaint are not cured by new facts or allegations presented by appellants in the proposed Second Amended Complaint. Accordingly, the district court did not abuse its discretion in denying leave to amend by means of the Second Amended Complaint. Id.

VII

The district court did not abuse its discretion in excluding the expert witnesses' studies and testimony and properly granted summary judgment in favor of Shell Oil defendants on appellants' contract theory and tortious interference claims. The district court did not abuse its discretion in denying appellants leave to amend their complaint to include claims for fraud and negligent interference with contract.

Because appellants failed to state sufficiently an antitrust claim upon which relief can be granted, the district court properly granted judgment on the pleadings in favor of Shell Oil and PB pipe fitting defendants. The district court also properly [50] dismissed appellants' Sherman Act claims against SICC and Shell Oil defendants relating to various foreign markets. Appellants' complaint does not satisfy the requirements of 15 U.S.C. § 6a, thereby depriving the district court of subject matter jurisdiction.

The district court properly dismissed appellants' AFA complaint against SICC for lack of personal jurisdiction and did not abuse its discretion in denying appellants leave to amend.

AFFIRMED.

End of Document

---

[10] Ordinarily, if part one of the "minimum contacts" test is satisfied, we proceed to part two, which requires that appellants' claim "arise out of or result from the defendant's forum-related activities," Raffaele, 707 F.2d at 397, and part three, which requires that the exercise of jurisdiction be "reasonable." Id.; Data Disc, 557 F.2d at 1287. Personal jurisdiction is established, under the "minimum contacts" test, only if all three parts of this test are satisfied.

Redwood Theatres v. Festival Enters.

Court of Appeal of California, First Appellate District, Division One

April 22, 1988

No. A037916

Reporter

200 Cal. App. 3d 687 *; 248 Cal. Rptr. 189 ; 1988 Cal. App. LEXIS 370 ; 1988-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P68,065

REDWOOD THEATRES, INC., Plaintiff and Appellant, v. FESTIVAL ENTERPRISES, INC., et al., Defendants and Respondents

Subsequent History: [1] A Petition for a Rehearing was Denied May 19, 1988, and the Opinion was Modified to Read as Printed Above. Respondents' Petitions for Review by the Supreme Court were Denied August 11, 1988.

Prior History: Superior Court of the City and County of San Francisco, No. 836273, Lucy Kelly McCabe, Judge.

Disposition: The summary judgment in favor of defendants Festival Enterprises, Inc., Paramount Pictures and Warner Bros. is reversed as to the Cartwright Act cause of action and affirmed as to the fraud cause of action. The summary judgment in favor of defendant Orion is affirmed. Appellant is entitled to costs on appeal.

Core Terms

distributors, films, theatre, exhibitors, Pictures, Sherman Act, boycott, franchising, cases, Enterprises, vertical, bidding, license, competitor, antitrust, monopoly, markets, terms, summary judgment, anti trust law, market power, suppliers, alleged agreement, motion picture, conspiracy, first-run, practices, compete, cards, unreasonable restraint

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

HN1[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Federal cases interpreting the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 et seq., are applicable to problems arising under the Cartwright Act, Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 16720 et seq.

Business & Corporate Law > Distributorships & Franchises > Causes of Action > Restraints of Trade

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Appellate Review > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Trials > Judgment as Matter of Law > General Overview

HN2[] Causes of Action, Restraints of Trade

A conspiracy among distributors and an exhibitor depriving plaintiff of an opportunity to obtain the supply of first-run films needed for effective competition constitutes a violation of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 et seq.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Exclusive & Reciprocal Dealing > General Overview

Securities Law > ... > Self-Regulating Entities > National Securities Exchanges > New York Stock Exchange

Securities Law > ... > Self-Regulating Entities > National Securities Exchanges > General Overview

HN3[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Exclusive & Reciprocal Dealing

Agreements to exclude competitors from valued trade relations are unreasonable restraints of trade.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

HN4[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Vertical Restraints

The rule of reason applies to vertical restraints on territory and customers.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Vertical Acquisitions

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > General Overview

HN5[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Vertical Restraints

The primary vice of a vertical merger or other arrangement tying a customer to a supplier is that, by foreclosing the competitors of either party from a segment of the market otherwise open to them, the arrangement may act as a clog on competition.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > Defenses

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > General Overview

HN6[] Tying Arrangements, Defenses

In the field of vertical restraints, restrictions may be justified under the rule of reason if they are the only practicable means a small company has for breaking into or staying in business.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Appellate Review > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Trials > Jury Trials > Province of Court & Jury

HN7[] Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

Whether a restraint of trade is reasonable is a question of fact to be determined at trial.

Headnotes/Summary

Summary
CALIFORNIA OFFICIAL REPORTS SUMMARY

In a fraud and antitrust action under the Cartwright Act (Bus. & Prof. Code, § 16720 et seq.) by a motion picture exhibitor against a competing exhibitor and major film distributors, the trial court denied plaintiff's motion to compel discovery of certain documentary evidence by which it offered to prove alleged anticompetitive agreements, and thereafter granted summary judgment in favor of defendants. The complaint alleged that the competing exhibitor entered into unwritten agreements with the distributor defendants under which all or substantially all of their first-run motion pictures were licensed to the competitor, and that plaintiff was thereby locked out of the opportunity to compete for first-run pictures. Plaintiff offered to prove the alleged agreement through the history of bidding for films, based on the documentary evidence it sought through discovery. (Superior Court of the City and County of San Francisco, No. 836273, Lucy Kelly McCabe, Judge.)

The Court of Appeal reversed as to the Cartwright Act cause of action against the competing exhibit and two of the film distributors, but affirmed as to the third film distributor and as to the fraud cause of action. It held that the allegations of plaintiff's complaint, if proved, would present a triable issue of an unreasonable restraint of trade under the Cartwright Act as to two distributors. Thus, it held, the trial court erred in holding that plaintiff failed to present a triable issue of fact as to the existence of the agreements while denying plaintiff a promising avenue of proof by denying its motion to compel discovery. However, it held, the third film distributor held too small a market share of the industry to hold it liable for imposing barriers to fair competition. It also held that the trial court properly granted summary judgment as to the fraud cause of action, since the complaint failed to allege the essential elements of the tort. (Opinion by Newsom, J., with Racanelli, P. J., and Holmdahl, J., concurring.)

Headnotes

CA(1)[] (1)

Monopolies and Restraints of Trade § 6—Under Cartwright Act—Interpretation—Reliance on Federal Authority.

--Reliance on federal authority in interpreting the Cartwright Act (Bus. & Prof. Code, § 16720 et seq.) is accepted since it is patterned after the Sherman Act (15 U.S.C. § 1 et seq.), and both statutes have their roots in the common law.

CA(2a)[] (2a) CA(2b)[] (2b)

Amusements and Exhibitions § 2—Motion Picture Production and Distribution Agreements—Agreements Violating Antitrust Laws—Circuit Dealing.

--Circuit dealing in the distribution of motion pictures to theaters, in which the purchasing power of an entire theater circuit is pooled in bidding for films, is a misuse of monopoly power, since it eliminates the possibility of bidding for films theater by theater and in that way eliminates the opportunity for small competitors to obtain choice first runs and puts a premium on the size of the circuit. It stifles competition and diverts the cream of the business to the large operators. Therefore, it is an unreasonable restraint of trade under § 1 of the Sherman Act (15 U.S.C. § 1 et seq.).

CA(3a)[] (3a) CA(3b)[] (3b)

Amusements and Exhibitions § 2—Motion Picture Production and Distribution Agreements—Agreements Violating Antitrust Laws—Franchising Agreements.

--Franchising agreements in the distribution of motion pictures to theaters are not illegal per se under the Sherman Act (15 U.S.C. § 1 et seq.). They are, however, subject to careful antitrust scrutiny.

CA(4)[] (4)

Amusements and Exhibitions § 2—Motion Picture Production and Distribution Agreements—Agreements Violating Antitrust Laws—Group Boycotts.

--Group boycotts among motion picture distributors and exhibitors, depriving other theaters of an opportunity to obtain the supply of first-run films needed for effective competition in the motion picture exhibition industry, constitute per se violations of the Sherman Act (15 U.S.C. § 1 et seq.).

CA(5)[] (5)

Monopolies and Restraints of Trade § 4—Sherman Act—Two-party Boycotts.

--Typically, an alleged two-party boycott, involving a single competing dealer and a single supplier, is likely to be equivalent to an exclusive distributorship, which is a business arrangement not often subject to antitrust challenges. All exclusive distributorship agreements involve an intent to deprive competitors of access to a supplier; such is the essence of the agreement. Nevertheless, although an exclusive dealing agreement will only rarely constitute an illegal boycott, the possibility cannot be excluded a priori. A plan to deprive a competitor of needed trade relations, which satisfies the requirements of a conspiracy, constitutes a boycott even if only a single supplier and a single dealer are involved.

CA(6)[] (6)

Amusements and Exhibitions § 2—Motion Picture Production and Distribution Agreements—Distributor's Freedom of Licensing.

--Film distributors have freedom to choose where their films will play. The distributor has the right to license or refuse to license a film to any exhibitor, pursuant to its own reasoning, so long as it acts independently. A distributor acting independently has no legal duty to offer equally suitable theaters an equal opportunity to negotiate for or obtain films. Nor must it assess bids consistently or in good faith. It may favor a particular exhibitor for any reason or no reason at all.

CA(7)[] (7)

Amusements and Exhibitions § 2—Motion Picture Production and Distribution Agreements—Alleged Boycott Between Single Competing Exhibitor and Individual Distributors—Evidence.

--In an action by a motion picture exhibitor against a competing motion picture exhibitor and major film distributors, alleging antitrust violations under the Cartwright Act (Bus. & Prof. Code, § 16720 et seq.) by virtue of exclusive dealing agreements between the competitor and the major distributors, plaintiff failed to meet the evidentiary threshold required to sustain a boycott theory of per se liability. It produced no evidence of predatory intent, nor did it show that the alleged agreements were dictated by the competing exhibitor, concerned with its own position, rather than granted in the exercise of the distributors' independent discretion.

CA(8)[] (8)

Monopolies and Restraints of Trade § 6—Under Cartwright Act—Judicial Evaluation of Alleged Antitrust Practices—Rule of Reason Standard—Vertical Restraints.

--Vertical restraints are subject to a rule-of-reason analysis, rather than the per se standard, to determine their impact on competition.

CA(9)[] (9)

Monopolies and Restraints of Trade § 4—Sherman Act—Boycotts and Vertical Restraints.

--The terms "boycott" and "vertical restraint" are merely labels that call for different forms of antitrust analysis, one focusing on competitive practices, the other on broader questions of market structure. The two approaches are potentially complementary; an anticompetitive practice may be linked to anticompetitive market conditions. The question whether a specific practice offends the Sherman Act (15 U.S.C. § 1 et seq.) ought not to exclude a broader inquiry into market structure.

CA(10)[] (10)

Monopolies and Restraints of Trade § 5—Actions—Under Sherman Act—Vertical Restraints—Application of Rule of Reason Standard—Tests and Evidence.

--Application of the rule of reason standard to vertical restraints requires balancing of intrabrand and interbrand competitive effects of vertical restrictions. A popular test of illegality is to say that the balance tips in the defendant's favor if the plaintiff fails to show that the defendant has significant market power, which is usually equated with market share and is normally inferred from possession of a substantial percentage of the sales in a market carefully defined in terms of both product and geography. A second relevant factor is product differentiation. The interchangeability of products is usually considered in the definition of markets, and the presence of adequate sources of alternative products is a critical factor in evaluating the competitive effects of vertical restraints.

CA(11a)[] (11a) CA(11b)[] (11b) CA(11c)[] (11c)

Amusements and Exhibitions § 2—Motion Picture Production and Distribution Agreements—Exclusive Dealing Agreements—Antitrust Violations Under Cartwright Act.

--Because of unusual competitive conditions in the film industry, involving a unique product in short supply, a film exhibitor who lacks access to a substantial share of popular first-run films may be placed at a grave competitive disadvantage against a competitor who has locked-in access to such films through exclusive dealing agreements. Such an agreement, if proved, would present a triable issue of an unreasonable restraint of trade under the Cartwright Act (Bus. & Prof. Code, § 16720 et seq.). Therefore, in an action under the Cartwright Act by a film exhibitor against a competing exhibitor and major film distributors, the trial court erred in granting summary judgment for defendants without permitting plaintiff discovery access to certain documents that might prove such an agreement.

CA(12a)[] (12a) CA(12b)[] (12b)

Monopolies and Restraints of Trade § 4—Sherman Act—Policy of Act.

--The policy of assuring free access to markets is central to the legislative purpose of the Sherman Act (15 U.S.C. § 1 et seq.). Both its legislative history and subsequent interpretation reveal that it was intended to prohibit unreasonable restraints on the freedom of entrepreneurs to enter new markets or to expand a small market share. Antitrust laws in general, and the Sherman Act in particular, are the Magna Carta of free enterprise. They are as important to the preservation of economic freedom and our free-enterprise system as the Bill of Rights is to the protection of our fundamental personal freedoms.

CA(13)[] (13)

Monopolies and Restraints of Trade § 3—Sherman Act—Generality and Adaptability.

--As a charter of freedom, the Sherman Act (15 U.S.C. § 1 et seq.) has a generality and adaptability comparable to that found to be desirable in constitutional provisions.

CA(14)[] (14)

Monopolies and Restraints of Trade § 5—Actions—Questions of Law and Fact—Reasonableness of Restraint.

--Whether a restraint of trade is reasonable is a question of fact to be determined at trial.

CA(15)[] (15)

Amusements and Exhibitions § 2—Motion Picture Production and Distribution Agreements—Alleged Antitrust Violation Under Cartwright Act—Distributor With Minimal Market Share.

--In an action by a motion picture exhibitor against a competing exhibitor and major film distributors, alleging antitrust violations under the Cartwright Act by virtue of an alleged agreement between the competing exhibitor and each distributor whereby all or substantially all first-run films were licensed to the competitor while denying access to plaintiff, the trial court properly granted summary judgment in favor of a defendant film distributor who held only a 3 percent market share. The film distributor was itself a new entrant and a relatively marginal participant in the film industry. Thus, it could not be held responsible for imposing barriers to fair competition among exhibitors.

CA(16)[] (16)

Fraud and Deceit § 20—Actions—Elements—Summary Judgment.

--In an action by a motion picture exhibitor against a competing exhibitor and major film distributors, alleging antitrust violations under the Cartwright Act and, alternatively, damages for fraud, based on allegedly anticompetitive exclusive distributorship agreements, the trial court properly granted summary judgment in defendants' favor with respect to the fraud cause of action. The complaint failed to allege the essential elements of the tort, and plaintiff's own affidavits tended to rebut both the existence of misrepresentation and action in reliance on it.

Counsel: Joseph L. Alioto and Lawrence Alioto for Plaintiff and Appellant.

M. Laurence Popofsky, Judith Z. Gold, Jessica S. Pers, Jeffrey A. Leon, Heller, Ehrman, White & McAuliffe Frederick S. Fields, Carlyn Clause and Bronson, Bronson & McKinnon for Defendants and Respondents.

Judges: Opinion by Newsom, J., with Racanelli, P. J., and Holmdahl, J., concurring.

Opinion by: NEWSOM

Opinion

[*692] [190] Redwood Theatres, Inc. (hereafter appellant) filed this action on February 28, 1985, against a competing motion picture exhibitor, Festival Enterprises, and four major [2] film distributors, Paramount Pictures Corporation, Warner Bros. Distributing Corporation, Orion Pictures Corporation, and Twentieth Century Fox Film Corporation (hereafter respondents). The complaint seeks treble damages for antitrust violations under the Cartwright Act and, alternatively, damages for fraud. The action against Twentieth Century Fox Film Corporation was later voluntarily dismissed. Much of the record on appeal consists of extensive arguments on a discovery request: appellant's motion to compel production of the distributor defendants' "cutoff cards" -- records providing a history of film rentals in each market -- for six cities in Northern California where Festival Enterprises does business. After the initial trial date was continued, respondents successfully [191] moved for summary judgment, which was entered on January 15, 1987.

The case presents simple facts and complex questions of law. Appellant operates the Briggsmore Seven Theatre in Modesto, California. In 1981 and 1982, it invested $ 1.7 million for renovation and conversion of the theatre into a seven-screen complex. Two other exhibitors, including the respondent Festival Enterprises, also operate [3] theatres in Modesto. Festival Enterprises operates additional theatres in five other Northern California markets -- Hayward, Stockton, Fresno, Walnut Creek, and Marin County -- and in Alaska and Southern California.

From our perusal of the record, we learn that the major film distributors in the United States release films simultaneously in hundreds of markets under license agreements. Almost all of a film's revenues in a market comes from its "first run"; box office receipts tend to diminish with each week that a picture is played. Distributors will license a first-run film to only one theatre in a medium-sized market such as Modesto. Commonly, the films are licensed by competitive bidding; the distributors send out written bid [*693] invitations and evaluate the bids submitted for each market. In other cases, the distributors may contact competing exhibitors by telephone to negotiate licensing terms.

Appellant's complaint alleges that the distributor defendants "have entered into unwritten agreements with Festival [Enterprises] pursuant to which all or substantially all of the Paramount, Warner Bros. and Orion first run product is licensed to the Festival-owned theatre [4] or theatres in Modesto, Hayward, Stockton, Fresno, and to a lesser extent, Walnut Creek-Pleasant Hill, and in Marin County, . . ." Although the distributors have continued to solicit bids for Modesto showings, appellant alleges that the bids have been a sham; the distributors are committed to Festival Enterprises even before bid invitations go out. As a result, the distributors have repeatedly licensed potentially remunerative films to Festival Enterprises even though appellant has submitted demonstrably superior bids.

The alleged unwritten agreements vary somewhat among the distributor defendants. For example, Warner Bros. is said to have committed only about 80 percent of its films to Festival Enterprises during the period December 1978 to August 1982; thereafter, it licensed films more evenly among Modesto exhibitors but reserved the most financially attractive films for Festival Enterprises. There is no allegation that the distributor defendants conspired among themselves or that they were a party to a plan to drive the appellant out of business. Rather, the agreements are alleged to be part of a business policy in which the distributor defendants dealt preferentially with [5] theatre circuits such as Festival Enterprises.

In affidavits opposing the motion for summary judgment, appellant offers to prove the alleged agreement largely through the history of bidding. Though possessing superior facilities, it has been unable to obtain the desired first-run films even though it has frequently outbid its competitor, Festival Enterprises. Appellant also points to certain admissions of distributor's representatives which tend to some extent to corroborate this circumstantial evidence. But the history of bidding still may reflect only the distributors' disinclination to do business with appellant. To complete its case, appellant needed to show that it did not lose out in the bidding because of some factor peculiar to itself but because the distributors dealt preferentially or exclusively with Festival Enterprises throughout its circuit. This evidence arguably might be provided by the distributor's cut-off cards which list the films licensed to each theatre in each market and record the essential terms of the license agreement, box office receipts, and rental payments. The denial of its discovery motion left it without this critical evidence.

[*694] Although [6] the agreement allegedly deprived it of access to substantially all the defendant distributors' films, appellant bases its claim for damages on bidding for twenty specific films -- eight from Paramount, seven from Warner Bros., and five from Orion. In each case, it offers to [192] prove that it submitted a bid superior to that of Festival but failed to secure the film and was forced to license a less popular motion picture. Festival earned a gross profit on the twenty films of $ 628,157; during the same time period, appellant made a gross profit of only $ 268,269 on less desirable films.

In brief, while the evidence produced in discovery is rather equivocal, appellant maintains that the requested cutoff cards would clearly establish the alleged agreements between Festival Enterprises and the three distributor defendants. The alleged agreements, which are independent of each other and seem lacking in any predatory intent, reflect the distributors' preference for dealing with theatre circuits to the exclusion of independents such as appellant. The question on appeal is whether such exclusive-dealing agreements are violative of the state antitrust laws.

[*7] CA(1)[] (1) Although the complaint states a cause of action under the California Cartwright Act, (Bus. & Prof. Code, § 16720 et seq.) the briefs in this appeal have relied almost exclusively on federal precedents under the Sherman Act (15 U.S.C. § 1). "A long line of California cases has concluded that the Cartwright Act is patterned after the Sherman Act and both statutes have their roots in the common law. Consequently, HN1[] federal cases interpreting the Sherman Act are applicable to problems arising under the Cartwright Act." (Marin County Bd. of Realtors, Inc. v. Palsson (1976) 16 Cal.3d 920, 925 [130 Cal.Rptr. 1, 549 P.2d 833]; G.H.I.I. v. MTS, Inc. (1983) 147 Cal.App.3d 256, 265 [195 Cal.Rptr. 211, 41 A.L.R.4th 653].) Since the relevant case law under the Cartwright Act is comparatively sparse, we will also rely chiefly on federal decisions.

CA(2a)[] (2a) The federal precedent of most immediate relevance to this case, United States v. Paramount Pictures (1948) 334 U.S. 131 [92 L.Ed. 1260, 68 S.Ct. 915], was forged in over a decade of litigation. It has been called [8] "the greatest economic victory ever achieved by the Department of Justice" (Southway Theatres, Inc. v. Georgia Theatre Co. (5th Cir. 1982) 672 F.2d 485, 497) and resulted in a fundamental restructuring of the industry. In a dissenting opinion, Justice Frankfurter observed, "[the] terms of the decree in this litigation amount, in effect, to the formulation of a regime for the future conduct of the movie industry." (Id. 334 U.S. at p. at 179 [92 L.Ed. at p. 1304].)

The Paramount Pictures case reached the Supreme Court with two companion cases which concerned regional chains of motion picture exhibitors [*695] and dealt chiefly with charges of abuse of monopoly power. (United States v. Griffith, (1948) 334 U.S. 100 [92 L.Ed. 1236, 68 S.Ct. 941]; Schine Theatres v. United States (1948) 334 U.S. 110 [92 L.Ed. 1245, 68 S.Ct. 947].) In the most significant of these cases, United States v. Griffith, the Department of Justice brought suit against 4 affiliated motion picture exhibitors which operated a circuit of theatres in 85 towns in the southwestern United States; in 53 of these towns [9] there were no competing theatres. The exhibitors jointly negotiated licensing agreements that "lumped together towns in which the [exhibitors] had no competition and towns in which there were competing theatres." (Id. at pp. 102-103 [92 L.Ed. at p. 1241].) The Supreme Court held that the agreements served to monopolize trade in violation of sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act. (Id. at p. 106 [92 L.Ed. at p. 1243].) The opinion reasoned that an exhibitor with a monopoly of theatres in part of a circuit may not use "that strategic position to acquire exclusive privileges in a city where he has competitors, . . ." (Id. at p. 107 [92 L.Ed. at p. 1243].)

In United States v. Paramount Pictures, supra, 334 U.S. 131, the Department of Justice directed its attack against the major motion picture distributors in the country. The complaint sought to enjoin a long list of anticompetitive practices, each of which was discussed ad seriatim by the Supreme Court and a distinguished three-judge panel in the lower court. We may approach the decision by first discussing its analysis of the two practices involved in this appeal -- circuit dealing and franchising [10] -- and then considering the significance of the decision in light of [193] the subsequent evolution of the antitrust law.

The Department of Justice sought to enjoin two forms of circuit dealing -- formula deals and master agreements. A formula deal was a licensing agreement with a circuit of theatres in which the license fee of a given feature was measured "by a specified percentage of the feature's national gross." A master agreement covered exhibition in several theatres in a particular circuit and allowed "the exhibitor to allocate the film rental paid among the theatres as it sees fit and to exhibit the features upon such playing time as it deems best, . . ." (Id. at pp. 153-154 [92 L.Ed. at pp. 1290-1291].)

Affirming the finding of the district court that formula deals and master agreements unreasonably restrain competition, the Supreme Court noted that under the holdings of United States v. Griffith, supra, 334 U.S. 100 "the pooling of the purchasing power of an entire circuit in bidding for films is a misuse of monopoly power insofar as it combines the theatres in closed towns with competitive situations." (Id. at pp. 154-155 [92 L.Ed. at p. [*696] 1291].) [11] But the court also affirmed the district court finding for a reason distinct from the misuse of monopoly power: the practices deprived other theatre owners of the opportunity to bid for motion pictures in their several areas. (United States v. Paramount Pictures (S.D.N.Y. 1946) 66 F.Supp. 323, 347.) Under this holding, "circuit dealing" violated section 1 of the Sherman Act even where all of the markets within a circuit were competitive. Referring to formula deals and master agreements, the court explained, "they eliminate the possibility of bidding for films theatre by theatre. In that way they eliminate the opportunity for the small competitor to obtain the choice first runs, and put a premium on the size of the circuit. They are, therefore, devices for stifling competition and diverting the cream of the business to the large operators." (United States v. Paramount Pictures, supra, 334 U.S. at p. 154 [92 L.Ed. at p. 1291].)

CA(3a)[] (3a) The court's consideration of franchising agreements required remand of the case to the district court for further findings. As a remedy for noncompetitive practices, the district court had ordered [12] a system of competitive bidding; franchising agreements were obviously incompatible with this scheme and were specifically enjoined. (United States v. Paramount Pictures, supra, 66 F.Supp. 323, 347; United States v. Paramount Pictures (S.D.N.Y. 1946) 70 F.Supp. 53, 63.) After rejecting the remedy of competitive bidding in favor of divestment, the Supreme Court directed the district court to reconsider whether the practice of franchising was in fact an unreasonable restraint of trade. The opinion observed, "[franchise] agreements may have been employed as devices to discriminate against some independents in favor of others . . . . But we cannot say on this record that franchises are illegal per se . . . ." (United States v. Paramount Pictures, supra, 334 U.S. at p. 156 [92 L.Ed. at p. 1292].) On remand, the district court enjoined the defendants from granting franchises to affiliated exhibitors but held that they might give them to independent theatre operators under appropriate circumstances. "We hold . . . that any of the defendants may grant franchises to an independent operator, provided that the result [13] thereof will be to enable such independent to compete effectively with theatres affiliated with a defendant or with theatres in the new theatre circuits to be formed pursuant to our order of divorcement." (United States v. Paramount Pictures (S.D.N.Y. 1949) 85 F.Supp. 881, 897.) The Supreme Court affirmed per curiam. (Loew's, Inc. v. United States (1950) 339 U.S. 974 [94 L.Ed. 1380, 70 S.Ct. 1031]; Twentieth Century Fox Film Corp. v. United States (1950) 339 U.S. 974 [94 L.Ed. 1380, 70 S.Ct. 1032]; Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc. v. United States (1950) 339 U.S. 974 [94 L.Ed. 1380, 70 S.Ct. 1032].)

In the present case, the issue of abuse of monopoly power is no longer raised. While asserting that defendant Festival Enterprises possesses a [*697] monopoly in one of the six areas in Northern California where it does business, the complaint alleges that it used this monopoly position only in bargaining [194] with a dismissed defendant -- Twentieth Century Fox Film Corporation. CA(2b)[] (2b) CA(3b)[] (3b) But the Paramount Pictures decision still prohibits circuit dealing as an unreasonable restraint of trade under section 1 of the Sherman Act and subjects franchises to careful antitrust scrutiny. The text of the opinion, in fact, suggests that circuit dealing is a per se violation of the [14] Sherman Act; it holds categorically that the practice is an unreasonable restraint of trade while making clear that certain other practices are not per se illegal, e.g., clearances and franchises. (United States v. Paramount Pictures, supra, 334 U.S. at pp. 145, 156 [92 L.Ed. at pp. 1286, 1291-1292].) The final decree in the case enjoined the defendants "[from] making or further performing any formula deal or master agreement to which it is a party." (U.S. v. Paramount Pictures, Inc. et al. 1949 Trade Cases para. 62,377; U.S. v. Loew's, Inc., et al. 1951 Trade Cases para. 62,765.)

The Paramount Pictures decision, however, must be understood in light of its peculiar facts and context. Formerly, the distributors controlled circuits of theatres, and commonly attempted to lessen competition at the exhibitor [15] level by using their vertical leverage through such devices as block booking, direct discrimination against independent exhibitors, joint operation of theatres, and conspiracy to fix prices and establish uniform clearances. The charge of circuit dealing was colored by this evidence of conspiracy and vertical leverage; not only were some of the circuits controlled by affiliates, but in many instances there was "cooperation among the major defendants in their respective capacities as distributors and exhibitors." (United States v. Paramount Pictures, supra, 85 F.Supp. 881, 888.) As the district court observed, the holding that circuit dealing was an unreasonable restraint of trade should be considered "in view of the history and relation to the moving picture business of the various parties to this action . . . ." (United States v. Paramount Pictures, supra, 66 F.Supp. 323, 346.) Similarly, franchising had been a device used by the major distributors for domination of the exhibition business. The ultimate decision to prohibit franchises except to independent exhibitors represented an effort to unravel the effects of the distributors' past [16] domination of film exhibition.

The Paramount Pictures decision "radically altered the structure of the industry," by requiring the major distributors to divest themselves of existing theatre circuits and by placing stringent restrictions on future acquisitions. (U.S. v. Paramount Pictures, Inc. (S.D.N.Y. 1980) 1980-2 Trade Cases para. 63,553, p. 76,951.) Today, the issues surrounding circuit dealing have acquired a very different industrial context. As the court commented in Southway Theatres, Inc. v. Georgia Theatre Co., supra, 672 F.2d 485, 498, [*698] "[with] the elimination of a motion picture industry vertically integrated downward to the exhibitor level, the significance of a distributor's refusal to do business with an independent shifts dramatically." Moreover, it now makes no sense to distinguish between circuit dealing and franchising; both are exclusive dealing agreements. Circuit dealing defines the territorial extent of exclusive dealing in terms of a theatre circuit; franchising defines the duration of the agreement in terms of a period of years. In either case, the antitrust issues may be defined in terms [17] of exclusive dealing agreements.

Although it remains the leading decision in the field, Paramount Pictures must be construed in a manner consistent with the subsequent evolution of the antitrust law. In the 30 years of antitrust litigation following the Paramount Pictures decision, independent film exhibitors have frequently challenged theatre chains and major distributors on a variety of grounds. CA(4)[] (4) A line of cases has proceeded on a theory alleging that a competing exhibitor and major film distributors have conspired among themselves "to deprive independent operators of desirable runs or priorities of exhibition of films, . . ." (Loew's, Inc. v. Cinema Amusements (10th Cir. 1954) 210 F.2d 86, 89, cert.den. (1954) 347 U.S. 976.) The theory falls within the conventional definition of a group boycott. The decisions have never questioned [195] that HN2[] a conspiracy among distributors and an exhibitor "depriving plaintiff of an opportunity to obtain the supply of first-run films needed for effective competition . . ." constitutes a violation of the Sherman Act. (Brown v. Western Massachusetts Theatres, Inc. (1st Cir. 1961) 288 F.2d 302, 304.) [18] Rather, the critical issue on appeal has centered on proof of conspiracy by circumstantial evidence. In some cases, a summary judgment or directed verdict has been affirmed. (Universal Amusements Co. v. Gen. Cinema Corp. (S.D.Tex. 1985) 635 F.Supp. 1505; Columbia Pictures Industries, Inc. v. Moyer (D.C.Or. 1981) 1981-1 Trade Cases para. 63,878; Lamb's Patio Theatre v. Universal Film Exchanges (7th Cir. 1978) 582 F.2d 1068 [47 A.L.R.Fed. 200]; Viking Theatre Corp. v. Paramount Film Distributing Corp. (3d Cir. 1963) 320 F.2d 285, affd. (1964) 378 U.S. 123 [12 L.Ed.2d 743, 84 S.Ct. 1657].) But the plaintiffs have won a share of the cases by successfully proving collusion among distributors and competing exhibitors to deprive them of remunerative first-run films. (Beech Cinema v. Twentieth Century Fox Film (2d Cir. 1980) 622 F.2d 1106; Columbia Pictures Corp. v. Charles Rubenstein, Inc. (8th Cir. 1961) 289 F.2d 418; Fox West Coast Theatres Corp. v. Paradise T. Bldg. Corp. (9th Cir. 1958) 264 F.2d 602; Paramount Film Distributing Corp. v. Village Theatre, Inc. 1955 Trade Cases para. 68,239; [19] Bordonaro Bros. Theatres v. Paramount Pictures (2d Cir. 1949) 176 F.2d 594.)

Very few decisions have alluded to the specific practices of circuit dealing and franchising disapproved in Paramount Pictures. (But see *Paramount [699] Film Distributing Corp. v. Applebaum (5th Cir. 1954) 217 F.2d 101, 122, cert. den. (1955) 349 U.S. 961.) In two recent cases, however, the issue of circuit dealing has arisen in connection with alleged conspiracies to cut off the plaintiff from desired first-run films. (Schmidt v. Columbia Pictures Industries Inc. (D.C.Nev. 1982) 1986-2 Trade Cases para. 67, 323; Beech Cinema v. Twentieth Century Fox Film, supra, 622 F.2d 1106.) In this context, circuit dealing may be viewed not as a per se violation of the Sherman Act (as suggested by the language of Paramount Pictures), but as a tactical device that has been used -- and may be used again -- in illegal conspiracies to exclude motion picture exhibitors from trade relations needed to compete. Franchising stands on the same ground. But while the practices may merit scrutiny, the issue of a Sherman [20] Act violation will turn on the general antitrust law concerning boycotts.

In a long line of decisions the Supreme Court has held categorically that HN3[] agreements to exclude competitors from valued trade relations are unreasonable restraints of trade. (Montague & Co. v. Lowry (1904) 193 U.S. 38 [48 L.Ed. 608, 24 S.Ct. 307]; Fashion Guild v. Trade Comm'n. (1941) 312 U.S. 457 [85 L.Ed. 949, 61 S.Ct. 703]; Silver v. New York Stock Exchange (1963) 373 U.S. 341 [10 L.Ed.2d 389, 83 S.Ct. 1246].) Since Northern Pac. R. Co. v. United States (1958) 356 U.S. 1, 5 [2 L.Ed.2d 545, 549-560, 78 S.Ct. 514], the court has identified such group boycotts as per se violations of the Sherman Act. (See also United States v. General Motors (1966) 384 U.S. 127, 145 [16 L.Ed.2d 415, 426, 86 S.Ct. 1321]; Marin County Bd. of Realtors, Inc. v. Palsson, supra, 16 Cal.3d 920, 931-935.) [1] Among these boycott decisions, Klor's v. Broadway-Hale Stores (1959) 359 U.S. 207 [3 L.Ed.2d 741, 79 S.Ct. 705], bears closest resemblance to the present case. [196] [21] The alleged boycott also consisted of agreements between a single competing dealer and its suppliers. The plaintiff, Klor's, operated a retail store specializing in household appliances in San Francisco located next door to a major department store owned by Broadway-Hale Stores. In its complaint, Klor's alleged that Broadway-Hale and 10 suppliers conspired among themselves either not to sell it household appliances or to sell them at commercially unacceptable terms. The district court granted summary judgment for [*700] the defendants on the ground that the alleged conspiracy did not affect market conditions. It relied on affidavits showing that there was an active local market in household appliances, involving hundreds of other retailers who sold many competing brands of appliances. Reversing the judgment, the Supreme Court held that the plaintiff had alleged a group boycott that belonged to the "classes of restraints which from their 'nature or character' were unduly restrictive." (Klor's v. Broadway-Hale Stores, supra,

---

[1] The per se rule, however, has been subject to some semantic confusion. The term "boycott" is sometimes used interchangeably with "concerted refusal to deal," which plainly cannot always be held in violation of the Sherman Act. (Rothery Storage & Van Co. v. Atlas Van Lines, Inc. (D.C.Cir. 1986) 792 F.2d 210, 215 [253 App.D.C. 142], cert. den. (1987) 479 U.S. 1033 [93 L.Ed.2d 834, 107 S.Ct. 880].) In Northwest Stationers v. Pacific Stationery (1985) 472 U.S. 284 [86 L.Ed.2d 202, 105 S.Ct. 2613], the court undertook to clarify the area of per se illegality: "Cases to which this Court has applied the per se approach have generally involved joint efforts by a firm or firms to disadvantage competitors by 'either directly denying or persuading or coercing suppliers or customers to deny relationships the competitors need in the competitive struggle.'" (Id. at p. 294 [86 L.Ed.2d at p. 211].)

359 U.S. at p. 211 [3 L.Ed.2d at p. 744].) The plaintiff therefore did need not to allege market-wide injury to competition.

[*22] CA(5)[] (5) The present case, however, differs from Klor's in a critical respect. There, the complaint alleged a conspiracy among the suppliers of the competing retailer. Here, the complaint contains no allegation of a combination among the distributor defendants; rather it alleges three separate agreements between the competing exhibitor and three major film distributors. If the plaintiff had alleged collusion among the offending film distributors, the case would come within the holding of Klor's. In the absence of this allegation, we must consider whether the three alleged agreements between the competing exhibitor and the distributor defendants may individually constitute a boycott.

In his frequently cited text, Sullivan comments that "the concept of a boycott does not necessarily involve the concert of several traders." If a single firm succeeds in inducing one important supplier to cease dealing with a would-be competitor, the resulting accommodation "would display all the essential elements of a boycott." (Sullivan, The Law of Antitrust (1977) p. 231, fn. 1.) The case law indeed includes a few examples of such a two-party boycott involving a single competing [23] dealer and a single supplier. (See Murphy Tugboat Co. v. Crowley (9th Cir. 1981) 658 F.2d 1256, cert. den. (1982) 455 U.S. 1018 [72 L.Ed.2d 135, 102 S.Ct. 1713].) In Six Twenty-Nine Productions, Inc. v. Rollins Telecasting, Inc. (5th Cir. 1966) 365 F.2d 478, the plaintiff, one of three advertising agencies in Pensacola, Florida, charged that the only television station in the vicinity refused to accept its services because of a conspiracy between the station and a competing advertising agency. Under these facts, the court found a violation of section 1 of the Sherman Act. Again, in Cherokee Laboratories, Inc. v. Rotary Drilling Services, Inc. (5th Cir. 1967) 383 F.2d 97, cert. den. (1968) 390 U.S. 904 [19 L.Ed.2d 870, 88 S.Ct. 816], plaintiff complained of an agreement between Monsanto and a competing dealer. Plaintiff's principal business dealt with a highly specialized commodity in a very limited market -- additives for drilling muds. After selling a specialized additive to plaintiff for many years, Monsanto gave exclusive distributorship rights to a competing dealer who then raised the [24] price to the plaintiff. Stressing the apparent lack of an [*701] available substitute for the additive, the court held that the jury could have found that the exclusive distributorship effectively priced the plaintiff out of the market. "Such conduct would constitute a per se violation of Section 1." (Id. at p. 105.)

But as Cherokee Laboratories suggests, an alleged two-party boycott is likely to be equivalent to an exclusive distributorship -- a business arrangement not often subject to antitrust challenges. (See Kolling v. Dow Jones & Co. (1982) 137 Cal.App.3d 709, 719 [187 Cal.Rptr. 797]; Milton v. Hudson Sales Corp. (1957) 152 Cal.App.2d 418 [313 P.2d 936]; Rolley, Inc. v. Merle Norman Cosmetics (1954) 129 Cal.App.2d 844 [278 P.2d 63].) In Klor's, the court made clear that it did not intend to cast doubt on the legality of such agreements: "This is not a case of a single [197] trader refusing to deal with another, nor even of a manufacturer and a dealer agreeing to an exclusive distributorship. Alleged in this complaint is a wide combination consisting of manufacturers, [25] distributors and a retailer." (Klor's v. Broadway-Hale Stores, supra, 359 U.S. 207, 212-213 [3 L.Ed.2d 741, 745], fn. deleted; quoted in People v. Santa Clara Valley Bowling etc. Assn. (1965) 238 Cal.App.2d 225, 235 [47 Cal.Rptr. 570].) In Continental T. V., Inc. v. GTE Sylvania Inc. (1977) 433 U.S. 36, 55 [53 L.Ed.2d 568, 583, 97 S.Ct. 2549], the court noted that exclusive distributorships may stimulate competition by inducing dealers to accept new products, to invest in service or repair facilities, or to engage in costly promotional activities.

All exclusive distributorship agreements involve an intent to deprive competitors of access to a supplier; this is the raison d'etre of the agreement -- the incentive offered to the dealer to make investment and promotional expenses. Cases such as Six Twenty-Nine Productions and Cherokee Laboratories, in which an exclusive dealing agreement constitutes a boycott, are probably rare and confined to unusual market conditions. Still, the possibility cannot be excluded a priori. Appellant heavily relies on a recent Second Circuit decision that appears to apply [26] such a two-party boycott theory to the motion picture industry.

In Beech Cinema v. Twentieth Century Fox Film, supra, 622 F.2d 1106, four affiliated independent theatre operators brought suit against a single major distributor, Twentieth Century Fox Film Corporation (Fox), and a single competing exhibitor, General Cinema Corporation (General Cinema). Beginning about January 1975, Fox ceased to license films to the plaintiffs but continued actively to deal with General Cinema. Plaintiffs secured a favorable jury verdict on the theory that General Cinema had conspired with Fox "to cut off" their access to Fox films. The court found evidence "that Fox had a history of favoring 'circuits' . . . . [para.] . . . that [*702] Fox attempted to establish such a circuit deal with General Cinema, with the cut-off of plaintiffs being one term of the agreement . . . [and] [para.] . . . that General Cinema 'bought into' a special circuit deal with Fox by special payments made in connection with the licensing of 'Towering Inferno.'" (Id. at p. 1109.) Largely on the strength of this evidence, the court held that there was sufficient evidence [27] "of a conspiracy between General Cinema and Fox to cut off plaintiffs." (Id. at p. 1110.)

The opinion's repeated use of the phrase "to cut off plaintiffs" suggests that Beech Cinema should be accepted for the proposition that a plan to deprive a competitor of needed trade relations, which satisfies the requirements of a conspiracy, constitutes a boycott even if a single exhibitor and a single distributor are involved. (Cf. Southway Theatres, Inc. v. Georgia Theatre Co., supra, 672 F.2d 485, 500.) But the case is difficult to justify on its facts; the court emphasized that the offending agreement was for the mutual economic benefit of the defendants -- a factor that would seem to imply a legitimate business purpose rather than predatory intent. CA(6)[] (6) (See fn. 2.) The decision does not attempt to distinguish the alleged conspiracy from the sort of exclusive dealing agreement sanctioned in Klor's. [2] On somewhat similar facts, Columbia Pictures Industries, Inc. v. Moyer (D.C.Or. 1981) 1981-1 Trade Cases para. 63,878, rejected a boycott theory. [198] (Id. at p. 75,554.) The result, moreover, [28] is difficult to reconcile with a later Second Circuit decision, Oreck Corp. v. Whirlpool Corp. (2d Cir. 1978) 579 F.2d 126, cert. den. (1978) 439 U.S. 946 [58 L.Ed.2d 338, 99 S.Ct. 340], which also involved an alleged conspiracy between a single distributor and a single supplier.

[*29] CA(7)[] (7) In the case at bar, an inference of a boycott is no doubt facilitated by market factors common to the industry -- the unique character of films and the highly consolidated market structure -- and by the existence of more than one alleged exclusive dealing agreement between Festival Enterprises and major distributors. These factors make it easier to infer that an [*703] exclusive dealing agreement serves to drive a competitor out of business. But appellant has produced no evidence of predatory intent. Neither has it shown that the alleged agreements were dictated by the exhibitor, concerned with its own position, rather than granted in the exercise of the distributors' independent discretion. (See United States v. Chicago Tribune-New York News Syn., Inc. (S.D.N.Y. 1970) 309 F.Supp. 1301, 1307; G.H.I.I. v. MTS, Inc., supra, 147 Cal.App.3d 256, 268.) The evidence actually suggests that the alleged agreements reflect the perceived business advantages to the distributors of dealing with large theatre circuits. This showing plainly falls short of the evidentiary threshold required to sustain a boycott theory of per se liability.

[*30] CA(8)[] (8) The facts may be viewed, however, not as a boycott but as a vertical restraint, suggesting a quite different analysis. Respondents have insisted that this is the proper conceptual framework for the case. Under Continental T.V., Inc. v. GTE Sylvania Inc., supra, 433 U.S. 36, such vertical restraints are subject to a rule-of-reason analysis to determine their impact on competition. [3] This approach indeed is most consistent with the

---

[2] The oft-repeated rule that film distributors have freedom to choose where their films will play stands as a formidable obstacle to any attempt to characterize an exclusive dealing agreement as a boycott conspiracy. It has always been the prerogative of a supplier to decide with whom it will deal. (G.H.I.I. v. MTS, Inc. supra, 147 Cal.App.3d 256, 267-268.) Thus, "'[A] distributor has the right to license or refuse to license his film to any exhibitor, pursuant to his own reasoning, so long as he acts independently . . . .'" (Lamb's Patio Theatre v. Universal Film Exchanges, supra, 582 F.2d 1068, 1070; Admiral Theatre Corp. v. Douglas Theatre Co. (8th Cir. 1978) 585 F.2d 877, 888; Paramount Film Distributing Corp. v. Applebaum, supra, 217 F.2d 101, 124.) "A distributor acting independently has no legal duty to offer equally suitable theaters an equal opportunity to negotiate for or obtain films. [Citation.] Nor must it assess bids consistently or in good faith." (Universal Amusements Co. v. Gen. Cinema Corp., supra, 635 F.Supp. 1505, 1514-1515.) It may favor a particular exhibitor "for any reason or no reason at all." (Id. at p. 1515.)

[3] This conceptual issue is mirrored in the majority and dissenting opinions in Oreck Corp. v. Whirlpool Corp., supra, 579 F.2d 126. When Whirlpool Corp. terminated its vacuum cleaner distributorship, Oreck Corp. brought suit alleging that Whirlpool had acted at the behest of another distributor, Sears Roebuck & Co. The dissent insisted that the case should be analyzed as a boycott involving a per se violation of the Sherman Act. (Id. at p. 138.) The majority maintained that "[the] present case,

Supreme Court's analysis in the Paramount Pictures decision. The court there was concerned with a market dominated by a few major distributors. The practices of circuit dealing and franchising were enjoined because of their link with the anticompetitive market structure in the motion picture industry.

[*31] CA(9)[] (9) The terms "boycott" and "vertical restraint" are in fact merely labels that call for different forms of antitrust analysis -- one focusing on competitive practices, the other on broader questions of market structure. We regard the two approaches as being potentially complementary; an anticompetitive practice may be linked to anticompetitive market conditions. The question whether a specific practice offends the Sherman Act ought not to exclude a broader inquiry into market structure.

CA(10)[] (10) While Continental T.V., Inc. v. GTE Sylvania Inc., supra, 433 U.S. 36, held definitively that HN4[] the rule of reason applies to vertical restraints on territory and customers, it did not discuss the application of the rule. A suggestive footnote indicated only that the rule of reason required a "balancing [of] intrabrand and interbrand competitive effects of vertical [*704] restrictions . . . ." (Id. at p. 57, fn. 27 [53 L.Ed.2d at p. 584].) But as observed in Valley Liquors, Inc. v. Renfield Importers, Ltd. (7th Cir. 1982) 678 F.2d 742, 745, "[admittedly], this test of illegality is easier to state than to [32] apply, the effects to be weighed being so difficult to measure or even estimate by the methods of litigation. The courts have therefore looked for shortcuts. A popular one is to say that the balance tips in the defendant's favor if the plaintiff fails to show that the defendant has significant market power (that is, power to raise price significantly above the [199] competitive level without losing all of one's business)."

Since the Sylvania decision, several other federal courts applying the rule of reason to vertical restraints have required this threshold inquiry into the defendant's market power. (E.g., Rothery Storage & Van Co. v. Atlas Van Lines, Inc., supra, 792 F.2d 210; Graphic Products Distributors v. Itek Corp. (11th Cir. 1983) 717 F.2d 1560; Muenster Butane, Inc. v. Stewart Co. (5th Cir. 1981) 651 F.2d 292; Ralph C. Wilson Indus. v. American Broadcasting (N.D.Cal. 1984) 598 F.Supp. 694, affd. (9th Cir. 1986) 794 F.2d 1359.) As a practical matter, market power is usually equated with market share. "Since market power can rarely be measured directly by the methods [33] of litigation, it is normally inferred from possession of a substantial percentage of the sales in a market carefully defined in terms of both product and geography." (Valley Liquors, Inc. v. Renfield Importers, Ltd., supra, 678 F.2d 742, 745; see also Valley Liquors, Inc. v. Renfield Importers, Ltd. (7th Cir. 1987) 822 F.2d 656, 666-667.) A similar preliminary test of market power has emerged in the area of tying arrangements. (Cf. People v. National Association of Realtors (1981) 120 Cal.App.3d 459, 468 [174 Cal.Rptr. 728, 22 A.L.R.4th 79].) In Jefferson Parish Hospital Dist. No. 2 v. Hyde (1984) 466 U.S. 2 [80 L.Ed.2d 2, 104 S.Ct. 1551], the Supreme Court proscribed tying only when market power "is used to impair competition on the merits in another market" so that a potentially inferior product is insulated from competitive pressures. (Id. at p. 14 [80 L.Ed. at p. 14].) The Department of Justice's Vertical Restraints Guidelines, published January 23, 1985, now employ very precise "market structure screen" tests, relying on market shares, to determine whether vertical [34] restraints on territory or customers and tying arrangements should be subject to antitrust scrutiny. (5Trade Reg. Rep. (CCH) para. 50,473.)

Respondent urges us to adopt this approach to the case at bar. If we do so, it will lead directly to affirmance of the summary judgment. Based on ticket sales, the distributor defendants' average market shares for the five-year period at issue were only 16 percent (Warner), 15 percent (Paramount) and 3 percent (Orion). These market shares fail conspicuously to pass the threshold test establishing the defendant's market power. In the absence of [*705] any allegation or evidence of collusion among the distributors, the market shares cannot be aggregated to determine the defendants' collective market power. Therefore, respondents argue, there is no need to enter into any further analysis of the competitive impact of the alleged exclusive dealing agreements.

Appellant offers to prove, however, that profitable operations in the theatre business depend on the limited supply of a unique product -- popular first-run films. According to its expert witness, "[a] good picture will do business in a tent. The bad picture won't do good, won't [35] do business in a top theatre." In a typical Modesto theatre, the record shows, a good film may gross as much as $ 25,000 in its first week; a poor picture as little as $ 1,000.

---

involving as it does an alleged agreement between a single manufacturer and a single dealer, is, in essence, an exclusive distributorship controversy, and the 'group boycott' doctrine, is, therefore, not applicable." (Id. at p. 131)

Hence, if an exhibitor fails to license the rights to show "Raiders of the Lost Ark," it will avail him nothing to negotiate favorable terms for "Amazon Quest" -- a film that has eluded public attention. "Raiders of the Lost Ark" will pack the theatre; "Amazon Quest" will not cover operating expenses. Appellant's film buyer declares, "[the] name of the game in the theatre business is to keep the doors open until one gets a successful picture . . . . To survive, a theatre simply must get the good pictures." [4]

[*36] [200] In antitrust law, the interchangeability of products is usually considered in the definition of markets; the boundary of a relevant market is defined by a significant degree of product differentiation. But there will always be some degree of product differentiation within a market -- and as the motion picture industry demonstrated -- very significant product differentiation can occasionally be found within a well-defined market. In U.S. v. Arnold, Schwinn & Co. (1967) 388 U.S. 365, 381 [18 L.Ed.2d 1249, 1261, 87 S.Ct. 1856], the Supreme Court regarded "the presence of adequate sources of alternative products" as a "critical" factor in evaluating the competitive effects of vertical restraints. Holding that consignment sales subject to territorial resale restrictions were not unreasonable restraint of trade, the court relied on the fact "that other competitive bicycles are available to distributors and retailers in the marketplace, and there is no showing that they are [*706] not in all respects reasonably interchangeable . . . with the Schwinn product . . . ." (Id. at p. 381 [18 L.Ed.2d at p. 1261]; fn. deleted.) [5] Where [37] alternative products are not available, an exclusive franchise agreement may merit antitrust scrutiny. [6] Thus, in United States v. Chicago Tribune-New York News Syn. Inc., supra, 309 F.Supp. 1301, 1307, the government challenged exclusive territorial franchises for newspaper features, such as comics and crossword puzzles. Denying a motion to dismiss, the court explained, "[the] government may be able to show at trial that there are no products available in the market which are 'equivalent' to the features of Tribune." We have earlier mentioned Cherokee Laboratories, Inc. v. Rotary Drilling Services, Inc., supra, 383 F.2d 97, in connection with boycotts. But in ruling that the jury could find an exclusive franchise agreement in violation of the Sherman Act, the court also drew from cases in the field of vertical restraints. In the court's view, the critical consideration was that "it was open to the jury to infer that competitive products were not 'readily available' to others." (Id. at p. 105; see also Southway Theatres, Inc. v. Georgia Theatre Co., supra, 672 F.2d 485, 500, fn. i; Ass'n of Independent T.V. v. College Football Ass'n (W.D.Okla. 1986) 637 F.Supp. 1289, 1299 [38] [note relevance of product differentiation].)

In his concurring [39] opinion in Continental T. V. Inc. v. GTE Sylvania Inc., supra, 433 U.S. 36, 64 [53 L.Ed.2d 568, 589], Justice White observed that economists use the criteria both of market share and product differentiation to measure market power. Product differentiation most commonly leads indirectly to a finding of market power by contracting the size of the relevant market, but it has been taken directly into account in the analysis of vertical restraints (Graphic Products Distributors v. Itek Corp., supra, 717 F.2d 1560, 1570-1571) and tying. (Metrix

[4] In United States v. Columbia Pictures Industries, Inc. (S.D.N.Y. 1980) 507 F.Supp. 412, 431, the court accepted a similar argument with respect to the exhibition of films in the pay television industry: "While it is undoubtedly true, as the defendants argue, that the rare, outstanding film can be shown many times (even after it has appeared on commercial television) and will still draw a substantial market, the evidence is overwhelming that 'golden oldies' are not the essential element of pay television; it is the new, never-before-shown-on-television, motion picture that the subscriber pays his money for. The other new pictures of nondefendant movie producers, which would be available equally to Premiere and the rest of the market, are not sufficient to allow equality among competitors." Since "golden oldies" seldom play in commercial theatres, the importance of popular, first-run films may be greater in the theatre exhibition business.

[5] In evaluating vertical restraints, Schwinn applied the rule of reason only to consignment sales, holding that restraints on territories and customers were illegal per se where title passed to the retailer. The decision was reversed in Continental T.V., Inc. v. GTE Sylvania Inc., supra, 433 U.S. 36 with respect to its rule of per se illegality, but it remains valid authority for application of the rule of reason. The availability of commercially equivalent products continues to be a relevant factor in analyzing vertical restraints in post-Sylvania cases. (See Donald B. Rice Tire v. Michelin Tire Corp. (1980) 483 F.Supp. 750, 760.)

[6] Cf. Lorain Journal v. United States (1951) 342 U.S. 143, 152 [96 L.Ed. 162, 72 S.Ct. 181] (the fact that buyers cannot compete without seller's product regarded as relevant circumstance in finding violation of section 2 of the Sherman Act).

Warehouse, Inc. v. Daimler-Benz Aktiengesellschaft (D.C.Md.) 1982-2 Trade Cases para. 64,861; Colorado Pump & Supply Co. v. Febco, Inc. (10th Cir. 1973) 472 F.2d 637, 640, cert. den. (1973) 411 U.S. 987 [36 L.Ed.2d 965, 93 S.Ct. 2274].) By reducing the substitutability of products, a high level of product differentiation results in relative inelasticity of cross-product demand. This inelasticity creates opportunities for suppliers to manipulate [201] the price and quantity of goods sold [*707] or to entrench their market position [40] by creating barriers to entry in a market. [7]

CA(11a)[] (11a) The unusual competitive conditions of the theatre business, marked by the presence of a unique product in short supply, put an entirely different complexion on the issue of market power. Exclusive dealing agreements involving a dominant firm in an industry have long been subject to antitrust scrutiny. [8] [42] But where competitive survival depends on gaining access to a unique product, these agreements may present serious antitrust questions in any well-consolidated industry even if it is dominated by no single firm. This is the situation of the motion picture industry where six major companies distribute the bulk of the most remunerative [41] first-run films. The antitrust concerns may be illustrated by an analogy to a card game. Playing cards, like popular first-run motion pictures, are not substitutable; a given card and no other will complete a winning sequence. Imagine a series of contract bridge tournaments in which the king of spades and queen of hearts -- one-eighth of the face cards -- are consistently removed from the hand of one player and replaced by a numbered card. Although the player may win some hands, he is sure to place low in the competitive standings, tournament after tournament, no matter how skillfully he plays. [9]

This example suggests that if a motion picture exhibitor lacks access to a substantial share of popular first-run films, he may be placed at a grave competitive disadvantage against a competitor who has locked-in access to these films through exclusive dealing agreements. The alleged agreements with Warner Bros. and Paramount Pictures plainly present this issue. During the 3-year period of 1983 through 1985, Warner Bros. and Paramount Pictures distributed no less than 31 of the 60 pictures placing among the top 20 box office hits in each year. As usual in business, failure may beget [*708] failure. By getting an inferior share of major films, the theatre may experience difficulties in making prompt rental payments, resulting in strained relationships with distributors, or it may secure fewer regular customers so that, when it does show a major film, it attracts smaller crowds than it otherwise would. The record on the appellant's motion for summary judgment, of [43] course, does not allow us to assess these suppositions; they may be accurate or inaccurate. We can only say that the hypothesis is implicit in appellant's offer of proof.

If this hypothesis is correct, the presence of exclusive dealing agreements between theatre circuits and major distributors may entrench the position of established motion picture exhibitors and pose formidable barriers to entrepreneurs seeking to enter (or expand operations) in the theatre business. The new entrant into the business by definition will lack comparable exclusive dealing agreements and will not easily achieve the bargaining power to negotiate them. An entrepreneur, such as appellant, seeking to enlarge a small foothold in the industry will, of course, face the same difficulties. CA(12a)[] (12a) Both the legislative history and subsequent interpretation of

---

[7] See R.C. Dick Geothermal Corp. v. Thermogenics, Inc. (N.D.Cal. 1985) 619 F.Supp. 441, 455, appeal pending, Ninth Circuit. (The court recognized the relevance of product differentiation to ease of entry in a market. By extension, product differentiation may facilitate the creation of barriers to entry.)

[8] See Sullivan, The Law of Antitrust, op. cit. supra, section 149, page 429 [exclusive franchises] and 3 Areeda and Turner, Antitrust Law: An Analysis of Antitrust Principles and their Application (1980), section 732, page 253 [requirements contracts]. Most cases involving such exclusive dealing agreements are decided under the Clayton Act section 3, (Standard Co. v. Magrane-Houston Co. (1921) 258 U.S. 346 [66 L.Ed. 653, 42 S.Ct. 360]; Standard Oil Co. v. United States (1949) 337 U.S. 293 [93 L.Ed. 1371, 69 S.Ct. 1051]; Tampa Electric Co. v. Nashville Coal Co. (1961) 365 U.S. 320 [5 L.Ed.2d 580, 81 S.Ct. 623]) but the Sherman Act contains parallel restrictions. (2 Areeda & Turner, Antitrust Law: An Analysis of Antitrust Principles and their Application, op cit. supra, § 304, p. 6; Interface Group, Inc. v. Mass. Port Authority (1st Cir. 1987) 816 F.2d 9, 11; Graphic Products Distributors v. Itek Corp., supra, 717 F.2d 1560.)

[9] The example is, of course, purely heuristic. We do not mean to suggest that there is any precise mathematical analogy.

the [202] Sherman Act reveal that it was intended to prohibit unreasonable restraints on the freedom of entrepreneurs to enter new markets or to expand a small market share.

CA(13)[] (13) "As a charter of freedom, the [Sherman] Act has a generality and adaptability comparable to that found to be desirable in constitutional provisions." ([44] Appalachian Coals, Inc. v. U.S. (1933) 288 U.S. 344, 359-360 [77 L.Ed. 825, 829, 53 S.Ct. 471]; see also Northern Pac. R. Co. v. United States, supra, 356 U.S. 1, 4 [2 L.Ed.2d 545, 549]; People v. Santa Clara Valley Bowling etc. Assn., supra, 238 Cal.App.2d 225, 233.) Within American political traditions, monopoly has long been perceived as a threat to individual liberties. Jefferson had proposed that a prohibition against monopoly be included in the Bill of Rights. The rapid spread of the trust device in the 1880's merely rekindled old fears of corporate power as a threat to freedoms. (Letwin, Law and Economic Policy in America: the Evolution of the Sherman Antitrust Act (1965) pp. 53-99.) Striking the dominant theme in the congressional debates, Senator Sherman declaimed, "[Then], making this extorted wealth the means of further extortion from their unfortunate victims, the people of the United States, they pursue unmolested, unrestrained by law, their ceaseless round of peculation under the law, till they are fast producing that condition in our people in which the great mass of them are the servitors of those [45] who have this aggregated wealth at their command." (21 Cong. Rec. 2461 (1890); see also pp. 2457, 2469.) [10]

[*46] [*709] CA(12b)[] (12b) The policy of assuring access to markets thus is central to the legislative purpose of the Sherman Act. Professors Blake and Jones write, "[not] only are we interested in material well-being and distrustful of political power, but we also have a strong libertarian streak. In the absence of strong countervailing considerations, we favor freedom of action and the wide range of choice that freedom implies. The competitive system dovetails well with this sentiment . . . in providing maximum freedom of opportunity for consumers and for present and prospective businessmen as well . . . . [The] individual who wants to be an entrepreneur rather than an employee ought not to have his opportunities restricted by unnecessary barriers to entry or by trade practice designed specifically to eliminate him from the field." (Blake & Jones, In Defense of Antitrust (1979) 65 Colum. L.Rev. 377, 383-384.) [11] Indeed, as [203] the Supreme Court noted in United States v. du Pont & Co. (1956) 351 U.S. 377, 390 [100 L.Ed. 1264, 1278, 76 S.Ct. 994], one prominent sponsor of the Act, Senator Hoar, defined monopoly, not in terms of [47] the power to influence the price or quantity of goods sold, but as the power to deny competitors a just and equal opportunity to compete. Monopoly, he asserted, "'involved something like the use of means which made it impossible for other persons to engage in fair competition.'" (Ibid. fn. deleted; 21 Cong. Rec. 3151 (1890).)

---

[10] This central purpose of assuring freedom of opportunity in the face of accumulations of corporate wealth, now obscured by changing social concerns, was readily apparent to contemporaries. In one of the earliest and most authoritative interpretations of the Sherman Act, Standard Oil Co. v. United States (1911) 221 U.S. 1, 50 [55 L.Ed. 619, 641, 31 S.Ct. 502], the Supreme Court explained, "[the] debates . . . conclusively show . . . that the main cause which led to the legislation was the thought that it was required by the economic condition of the times; that is, the vast accumulation of wealth in the hands of corporations and individuals, the enormous development of corporate organization, the facility for combination which such organizations afforded, the fact that the facility was being used, and that combinations known as trusts were being multiplied, and the widespread impression that their power had been and would be exerted to oppress individuals and injure the public generally." Again, in Ramsay Co. v. Bill Posters Assn. (1923) 260 U.S. 501, 512 [67 L.Ed. 368, 370, 43 S.Ct. 167], the court stated that "[the] fundamental purpose of the Sherman Act was to secure equality of opportunity and to protect the public against evils commonly incident to destruction of competition through monopolies and combinations in restraint of trade."

[11] The debate over the purposes of the antitrust laws has generally acknowledged a balance of economic, social, and political goals. Particularly distinguished contributions include: The Goals of Antitrust: A Dialogue on Policy (1965) 65 Colum.L.Rev. 363; Flynn, Antitrust Jurisprudence: A Symposium on the Economic, Political and Social Goals of Antitrust Policy (1977) 125 U.Pa.L.Rev. 1182; Letwin, Congress and the Sherman Antitrust Law: 1887-1890 (1956) 23 U.Chi.L.Rev. 221; Bohling, Franchise Terminations under the Sherman Act: Populism and Relational Power (1975) 53 Tex.L.Rev. 1180, 1189-1193; Fox, The Modernization of Antitrust: a New Equilibrium (1981) 66 Cornell L.Rev. 1140; Lande, Wealth Transfers as the Original and Primary Concern of Antitrust: The Efficiency Interpretation Challenged (1983) 34 Hastings L.J. 65; Rowe, The Decline of Antitrust and the Delusions of Models: the Faustian Pact of Law and Economics (1984) 72 Georgetown L.J. 1511. But in recent decades a distinct school of thought has vigorously espoused economic efficiency as the only goal of antitrust. See Bork, The Antitrust Paradox: a Policy at War With Itself (1975); Posner, Antitrust Law: An Economic Perspective (1976).

[*48] [*710] The protection of the entrepreneur's right to compete is an especially prominent theme in the antitrust law respecting boycotts. (See Paramount Famous Corp. v. U.S. (1930) 282 U.S. 30, 43 [75 L.Ed. 145, 150-151, 51 S.Ct. 42]; Fashion Guild v. Trade Comm'n, supra, 312 U.S. 457, 465 [85 L.Ed. 949, 953]; United States v. General Motors, supra, 384 U.S. 127, 140 [16 L.Ed.2d 415, 423-424].) In Associated Press v. United States (1945) 326 U.S. 1 [89 L.Ed. 2013, 65 S.Ct. 1416], the Supreme Court considered a bylaw of a cooperative news gathering association that prohibited "all AP members from selling news to non-members, and which granted each member powers to block its non-member competitors from membership." (Id. at p. 4 [89 L.Ed. 2013, 2021-2022].) Ruling that the bylaws violated the Sherman Act, it found, "[the] net effect is seriously to limit the opportunity of any new paper to enter these cities. Trade restraints of this character, aimed at the destruction of competition, tend to block the initiative which brings newcomers into a field of business and to [49] frustrate the free enterprise system which it was the purpose of the Sherman Act to protect." (Id. at pp. 13-14, fn. deleted [89 L.Ed. at p. 2027].) Again, in Silver v. New York Stock Exchange, supra, 373 U.S. 341, the court found that a stock exchange procedure that effectively denied the plaintiff an opportunity to enter the securities business constituted a group boycott, falling outside the protection of the Securities Exchange Act (15 U.S.C. § 78 et seq.). Finally, in Klor's v. Broadway-Hale Stores, supra, 359 U.S. 207, as we have seen, the court held that a conspiracy to drive out of business a single small businessman violated the act. "[It] is not to be tolerated merely because the victim is just one merchant whose business is so small that his destruction makes little difference to the economy. Monopoly can as surely thrive by the elimination of such small businessmen, one at a time, as it can by driving them out in large groups." (Id. at p. 213 [3 L.Ed.2d at p. 745], quoted in People v. Santa Clara Valley Bowling etc. Assn., supra, 238 Cal.App.2d 225, 233.) [50]

In terms of economic theory, significant barriers to entry "are the sine qua non of monopoly and oligopoly . . . ." (Scherer, Industrial Market Structure and Economic Performance, (1980) p. 10) These barriers are objectionable on social as well as economic grounds. As explained in Berkey Photo, Inc. v. Eastman Kodak Co. (2d Cir. 1979) 603 F.2d 263, 273 [53 A.L.R.Fed. 768], cert. den. (1980) 444 U.S. 1093 [62 L.Ed.2d 783, 100 S.Ct. 1061], "[considerations] of political and social policy form a major part of our aversion to monopolies, for concentration of power in the hands of a few obstructs opportunities for the rest." In Brown Shoe Co. v. United States (1962) 370 U.S. 294, 316, footnote 28 [8 L.Ed.2d 510, 530-531, 82 S.Ct. 1502], the Supreme Court quoted from the opinion of Justice Learned Hand in United States v. Aluminum Co. of America (2d Cir. 1945) 148 F.2d 416, 429: [*711] "'Throughout the history of these [antitrust] statutes it has been constantly assumed that one of their purposes was to perpetuate and preserve, for its own sake and in spite of possible cost, an [51] organization of industry in small units which can effectively compete with each other.'" (See also id. at pp. 427-428; Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, supra, 370 U.S. at p. 344 [8 L.Ed.2d at p. 547].) Similarly, decisions concerning monopolies based on ownership of essential facilities, such as wholesale produce markets, have condemned policies [204] that restrict the freedom of entrepreneurs to enter or expand their operations in affected markets. (Bale v. Glasgow Tobacco Board of Trade, Incorporated (6th Cir. 1964) 339 F.2d 281, 286-287.) Invalidating a lease restriction in a produce market, one court observed, "[the] [Sherman] Act does not merely guarantee the right to create markets; it also insures the right of entry to old ones." (Gamco, Inc. v. Providence Fruit & Produce Bldg. (1st Cir. 1952) 194 F.2d 484, 487.)

Safeguarding the entrepreneur's freedom to challenge established competitors has been a central concern in the field of vertical mergers. In Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, supra, 370 U.S. 294, 323-324 [8 L.Ed.2d 510, 535], the Supreme Court declared, [52] HN5[↑] "[the] primary vice of a vertical merger or other arrangement tying a customer to a supplier is that, by foreclosing the competitors of either party from a segment of the market otherwise open to them, the arrangement may act as a 'clog on competition,' Standard Oil Co. of California v. United States, 337 U.S. 293, 314 [93 L.Ed. 1371, 1386, 69 S.Ct. 1051], which '[deprivess] . . . rivals of a fair opportunity to compete.'" (Fn. deleted; quoted in Ford Motor Co. v. United States (1972) 405 U.S. 562, 570 [31 L.Ed.2d 492, 500, 92 S.Ct. 1142]; see also FTC v. Procter & Gamble Co. (1967) 386 U.S. 568, 578 [18 L.Ed.2d 303, 310, 87 S.Ct. 1224].) While employing a multifactor analysis, the courts have examined the degree to which vertical acquisitions "may increase barriers to entry into the market or reduce competition by . . . foreclosing competitors of the selling firm . . . from access to the market or a substantial portion of it, . . ." (Fruehauf Corp. v. F. T. C. (2d Cir. 1979) 603

F.2d 345, 352; Mississippi River Corporation v. F. T. C. (8th Cir. 1972) 454 F.2d 1083, 1091; [53] Crouse-Hinds Co. v. Internorth, Inc. (N.D.N.Y. 1980) 518 F.Supp. 416, 430.) [12]

In United States v. Topco Associates (1972) 405 U.S. 596 [31 L.Ed.2d 515, 92 S.Ct. 1126], holding a horizontal system of territorial restraints to be a per se violation of the Sherman Act, the Supreme Court again invoked the [*712] entrepreneur's right to freely compete in new or expanded markets. "Antitrust laws in general, and the Sherman Act in particular, are the Magna Carta of free enterprise. They are as important to the preservation of economic freedom and our free-enterprise system as the Bill of Rights is to the protection [54] of our fundamental personal freedoms. And the freedom guaranteed each and every business, no matter how small, is the freedom to compete -- to assert with vigor, imagination, devotion, and ingenuity whatever economic muscle it can muster. Implicit in such freedom is the notion that it cannot be foreclosed with respect to one sector of the economy . . . ." (Id. at p. 610 [31 L.Ed.2d at p. 527].) In another context, Justice Douglas similarly observed, "[a] nation of clerks is anathema to the American antitrust dream." (United States v. Falstaff Brewing Corp. (1973) 410 U.S. 526, 543 [35 L.Ed.2d 475, 488, 93 S.Ct. 1096], conc. opn.)

HN6[] In the field of vertical restraints, the Supreme Court has said that restrictions may be justified under the rule of reason if they are "the only practicable means a small company has for breaking into or staying in business." (White Motor Co. v. United States (1963) 372 U.S. 253, 263 [9 L.Ed.2d 738, 746, 83 S.Ct. 696].) Similarly, tying arrangements that would otherwise offend antitrust law have been sanctioned as a means of a firm gaining entry into a market: "Thus, unless the tying [55] device is employed by a small company in an attempt to break into a market [citation], the use of a tying device can rarely be harmonized with the strictures of the antitrust laws, . . ." (Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, supra, 370 U.S. 294, 330 [8 L.Ed.2d 510, 538-539]; fn. deleted.) In Standard Oil Co. v. United States, supra, 337 U.S. 293, on facts presenting an analogy to the case at bar, the court held that exclusive supply contracts violated section 3 of the Clayton [205] Act. [13] Although Standard Oil did not itself dominate the retail market, the other major distributors employed similar exclusive dealing agreements. The court observed, "[when] it is remembered that all the other major suppliers have also been using requirements contracts, and when it is noted that the relative share of the business which fell to each has remained about the same during the period of their use, it would not be farfetched to infer that their effect has been to enable the established suppliers individually to maintain their own standing and at the same time collectively, even though not collusively, to prevent a late arrival from wresting [56] away more than an insignificant portion of the market." (Id. at p. 309 [93 L.Ed. at pp. 1383-1384]; fn. deleted.)

[*713] A recent decision of the California Supreme Court interpreting the Cartwright Act draws attention to the antitrust law policy of securing free access to markets. In Marin County Bd. of Realtors, Inc. v. Palsson, supra, 16 Cal.3d 920, the court discussed restrictions imposed by a county board of realtors, "limiting its membership to persons primarily engaged in the real estate business and . . . denying nonmembers access to its multiple listing service." (Id. at p. 924.) [57] The court noted, "[another] beneficiary of the antitrust law is the competitor himself. The preservation of competition, while indirectly aiding society by producing lower prices and higher quality goods and services, directly aids the scrupulous trader by insuring him a fair opportunity to compete on the market." (Id. at p. 935.) Under this standard, it held the restrictions to violate the Cartwright Act: "The problems of a nonmember of the board in competing against this colossus are manifest . . . . [One] does not need an advanced degree in economics to predict whose services a buyer or seller of a home is likely to engage. The access rule, in short, seriously hampers the competitive effectiveness of nonmember licensed brokers and salesmen." (Id. at pp. 935-936; fn. deleted.)

---

[12] Since the 1950 amendments to the Clayton Act, antitrust litigation in this field has generally relied on the relatively expansive provisions of the Clayton Act, section 7, but the same analysis applies to the Sherman Act, section 1. (Intern. Tel. & Tel. Corp. v. General Tel. & Elect. Corp. (D.Haw. 1978) 449 F.Supp. 1158, 1173.)

[13] Although the court did not reach the issue of Sherman Act violation, the decision is relevant to the Cartwright Act. Business and Professions Code section 16727 is patterned after section 3 of the Clayton Act. (Corwin v. Los Angeles Newspaper Service Bureau, Inc. (1971) 4 Cal.3d 842, 853 [94 Cal.Rptr. 785, 484 P.2d 953].)

It will be recalled that the discussion of circuit dealing in United States v. Paramount Pictures, supra, 334 U.S. 131, turned essentially on the question of free access to markets. Referring to the two prevailing forms of circuit dealing, the Supreme Court stated, "they eliminate the opportunity for the small competitor to obtain the choice [58] first runs, and put a premium on the size of the circuit. They are, therefore, devices for stifling competition and diverting the cream of the business to the large operators." (Id. at p. 154 [92 L.Ed. at p. 1291].) Paramount Pictures remains the governing law on the subject, and it is evident that the concern expressed by the court has not subsided.

CA(11b)[] (11b) We conclude that the alleged agreements with Paramount Pictures and Warner Bros., if proved, would present a triable issue of an unreasonable restraint of trade under the Cartwright Act. (Bus. & Prof. Code, § 16720.) CA(14)[] (14) "HN7[] Whether a restraint of trade is reasonable is a question of fact to be determined at trial." (Corwin v. Los Angeles Newspaper Service Bureau, Inc. supra, 4 Cal.3d 842, 855.) CA(11c)[] (11c) The summary judgment is reversed as to these defendants. In this appeal we do not need to consider whether appellant has presented a triable issue as to the existence of the alleged agreements. By denying appellant's motion to compel production of cutoff cards, the trial court has deprived it of potentially probative evidence. [59] It would be unfair to hold that it has failed to present a triable issue of fact as to the existence of the agreements while denying it a promising avenue of proof. On remand, appellant should be allowed to renew its discovery motion, but if the motion fails to yield the probative evidence [*714] appellant predicts, [206] our decision is not intended to preclude respondent from moving again for summary judgment on the ground that there is no triable issue of fact as to the existence of the alleged agreements.

CA(15)[] (15) We find no triable issue, however, as to defendant Orion. The distributor came into corporate existence in 1983 as the successor of a company called Filmways. During the period covered by the complaint, it achieved only a 3 percent market share. Most significant, none of its films were among the big money-makers in this period. [14] As Orion is itself a new entrant and a relatively marginal participant in the industry, it would be anomalous to hold that it was responsible for imposing barriers to fair competition among exhibitors.

[*60] CA(16)[] (16) Lastly, the summary judgment should be affirmed with respect to appellant's fraud cause of action. The complaint fails to allege the essential elements of the tort and appellant's own affidavits tend to rebut both the existence of misrepresentation and action in reliance thereon.

The summary judgment in favor of defendants Festival Enterprises, Inc., Paramount Pictures and Warner Bros. is reversed as to the Cartwright Act cause of action and affirmed as to the fraud cause of action. The summary judgment in favor of defendant Orion is affirmed.

Appellant is entitled to costs on appeal.

End of Document

---

[14] Appellant's claim of damages is based on failure to obtain five films from Orion. Of these, "The Terminator" ranked 25th in rentals in 1984 and "The Woman in Red" and "Breathless" each ranked 35th in rentals in 1984 and 1983 respectively.

GWC Restaurants, Inc. v. Hawaiian Flour Mills, Inc.

United States District Court for the District of Hawaii

April 27, 1988, Decided ; April 27, 1988, Filed

Civ. No. 88-00077 ACK

Reporter
691 F. Supp. 247 *; 1988 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 8880 ; 1988-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P68,391

GWC RESTAURANTS, INC., Plaintiff, v. HAWAIIAN FLOUR MILLS, INC., an Oregon corporation, doing business as "HFM First In Foods," Defendant

Core Terms

alleges, interstate commerce, Robinson-Patman Act, practices, commerce, defense motion, transactions, restaurant, customers, merchant, margin

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

HN1[] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

The legal standard by which to scrutinize a motion to dismiss under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6), is whether plaintiff has stated a claim for relief for which relief can be granted by a federal district court. Dismissal is an extraordinary remedy which is viewed with disfavor in the federal courts. A motion to dismiss should not be granted unless it appears beyond doubt that the plaintiff can prove no set of facts in support of his claim which would entitle him to relief. The allegations of the complaint should be construed most favorably to the pleader when passing on a motion to dismiss.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

HN2[] Public Enforcement, State Civil Actions

Haw. Rev. Stat. § 480-2 while amended to preclude the bringing of unfair and deceptive trade practices by businessmen or merchants between themselves, does not preclude suit for causes of action which arose prior to the effective date of amendment which was effective June 14, 1987.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > General Overview

HN3[] Robinson-Patman Act, Claims

The Robinson-Patman Act is designed to allow for redress for customer injuries where a seller is charged with offering certain favored customers discounts or other price advantages not readily available to competing disfavored customers.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Claims

Civil Procedure > ... > Jurisdiction > Jurisdictional Sources > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Jurisdiction

HN4[] Robinson-Patman Act, Claims

To prove jurisdiction under § 2(a) of the Robinson-Patman Act, a plaintiff must demonstrate: (1) that the defendant is engaged in interstate commerce, (2) that the price discrimination occurred in the course of such commerce, and (3) that either or any of the purchases involved in such discrimination are in commerce. The jurisdictional "in commerce" language in § 2(a) is not as broad as the "affecting commerce" language in the Sherman Antitrust Act. In particular, the "purchases in commerce" requirement limits the application of § 2(a) to cases where at least one of the two transactions which, when compared generate a discrimination crosses a state line.

Contracts Law > Defenses > Usury

HN5[] Defenses, Usury

Haw. Rev. Stat. § 478-6 provides that the maximum permissible interest rate is no more than one percent per month.

Commercial Law (UCC) > ... > Subject Matter > Goods > General Overview

Commercial Law (UCC) > Sales (Article 2) > Subject Matter > General Overview Commercial Law (UCC) > ... > Subject Matter > Definitions > Merchants

HN6[] Subject Matter, Goods

Haw. Rev. Stat. § 490:2-104 provides in part the definition of merchant as a person who deals in goods of the kind or otherwise by his occupation holds himself out as having knowledge or skill peculiar to the practices or goods involved in the transaction.

Torts > Negligence > General Overview

HN7[] Torts, Negligence

Under Hawaii law, a negligence claim is stated by an allegation that the acts or omissions of a party were done negligently.

Counsel: [1] James M. Sattler, Frederick W. Rohlfing, Honolulu, Hawaii, for Plaintiff.

Reinwald O'Connor Marrach & Hoskins, John Hoskins, Patricia Wall, Honolulu, Hawaii, for Defendant.

Judges: Alan C. Kay, United States District Judge.

Opinion by: KAY

Opinion

[*248] ORDER GRANTING IN PART AND DENYING IN PART DEFENDANT'S MOTION TO DISMISS AND LEAVE TO AMEND

ALAN C. KAY, UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE.

Defendant filed a motion with this court to dismiss plaintiff's complaint and for Rule 11 sanctions. HN1[] The legal standard by which to scrutinize a motion to dismiss under Rule 12(b) (6), Fed. R. Civ. P., is whether plaintiff has stated a claim for relief for which relief can be granted by this court. Dismissal is an extraordinary remedy which is viewed with disfavor in the federal courts. De La Cruz v. Tormey, 582 F.2d 45, 48 (9th Cir. 1978); United States v. City of Redwood, 640 F.2d 963, 966 (9th Cir. 1981). The U.S. Supreme Court has stated that a motion to dismiss should not be granted unless "it appears beyond doubt that the plaintiff can prove no set of facts in support of his claim which would entitle him to relief." Conley v. Gibson, 355 U.S. 41, 45-46, 2 L. Ed. 2d 80, 78 S. Ct. 99 [*249] (1957). The allegations of the complaint should be construed most favorably to the pleader when passing on [2] a motion to dismiss. De La Cruz, 582 F.2d at 48.

Plaintiff's complaint contained counts for breach of contract, unfair and deceptive trade practices under Hawaii Rev. Stat. Ch. 480, violation of the Clayton Act (Robinson-Patman Act), usury and negligence.

BACKGROUND

Hawaiian Flour Mills (HFM) is a wholesale supplier of foods and other products to customers in the State of Hawaii. GWC Restaurants (GWC) is a customer of HFM. GWC has a balance due and owing of over $ 85,000.00 to HFM. HFM alleges that this complaint was filed by GWC in an attempt to circumvent paying the past due account.

There exists an "Agreement" which is an unsigned contract prepared by HFM which outlines the terms of business between HFM and GWC. The legal effect of this "Agreement" is partly the basis for this lawsuit.

Count I: Breach of Contract

Defendant alleges that the Statute of Frauds bars plaintiff's breach of contract claim under Hawaii Rev. Stat. § 490:2-201 which requires a signed agreement for a contract to be enforceable for the sale of $ 500 or more worth of goods. Plaintiff alleges that the statute of frauds is not applicable because the goods subject to the breach of contract claim [3] have been bought and payment has already been made. Plaintiff states that it has paid over $ 800,000.00 for goods from HFM between August 1, 1985 through January 31, 1988. Plaintiff therefore asserts that the statute of frauds is made inapplicable through Hawaii Rev. Stat. § 490:2-201(3) which provides that a contract which does not satisfy the statute of frauds but which is otherwise valid is enforceable with respect to goods for which payment has been made and accepted.

GWC alleges that the unsigned agreement relied upon by both parties and formed the basis of a valid contract. In addition, plaintiff alleges that the payment it made for goods is sufficient to make the contract allegedly formed between GWC and HFM enforceable. Because the allegations of the complaint must be taken as true for determining a motion to dismiss, this is sufficient to deny defendant's motion to dismiss as to Count I.

Count II: Unfair and Deceptive Trade Practices

Defendant alleges that plaintiff's claim for unfair and deceptive trade practices must be dismissed. However, this court finds that HN2[] Haw. Rev. Stat. § 480-2 while amended to preclude the bringing of unfair and deceptive trade practices by [4] businessmen or merchants between themselves, does not preclude suit for causes of action which arose prior to the effective date of amendment which was effective June 14, 1987. Therefore, count II is not dismissed.

Count III: Clayton Act (Robinson-Patman Act)

Plaintiff alleges in Count III that defendant has violated 15 U.S.C. Section 13(a), Section 2(a) of the Clayton Act, also known as the Robinson-Patman Act (RPA). HN3[] The Robinson-Patman Act was designed to allow for redress for customer injuries where a seller is charged with offering certain favored customers discounts or other price advantages not readily available to competing disfavored customers. 5 Von Kalinowski, ANTITRUST LAWS AND TRADE REGULATION § 30.01.

In its complaint, plaintiff alleges that HFM is an Oregon corporation which does business in Hawaii with Hawaii restaurant consumers among others. Plaintiff also alleges in paragraph 21.b that HFM made initial representations that its initial margin rate of 13% was customary and reasonable in the Hawaii market for a single restaurant. As defined in the complaint, a margin is the difference between the cost of the product and the selling price. The plaintiff alleges [5] that under the unsigned agreement, which it followed, and the initial representations made by HFM representatives, the margin rate would be 13%. Plaintiff later found that it had been [*250] charged a margin rate of between 18% to 21%. The plaintiff states that it has been subject to misrepresentation regarding the margin rate that it has been charged for its accounts. For the purposes of this motion, the issue on this count is whether the plaintiff has adequately stated a claim under the RPA for price discrimination.

In Zoslaw v. MCA Distributing Co., 693 F.2d 870 (1982), the Ninth Circuit discussed the jurisdictional requirements necessary to maintain a RPA action, > HN4[] To prove jurisdiction under Section 2(a) of the Robinson-Patman Act, a plaintiff must demonstrate: (1) that the defendant is "engaged in interstate commerce," (2) that the price discrimination occurred "in the course of such commerce," and (3) that "either or any of the purchases involved in such discrimination are in commerce." William Inglis & Sons Baking Co. v. ITT Continental Baking Co., 668 F.2d 1014, 1043 (9th Cir. 1981).

>
> In Gulf Oil v. Copp Paving Co., [419 U.S. 186 95 S. Ct. 392, 42 L. Ed. 2d 378 (1974)], the Supreme Court concluded that the jurisdictional "in [6] commerce" language in section 2(a) is not as broad as the "affecting commerce" language in the Sherman Antitrust Act. In particular, the court interpreted the "purchases in commerce" requirement as limiting the section's application to cases "where 'at least one of the two transactions which, when compared generate a discrimination . . . cross[es] a state line.'"

Zoslaw at 877. (citations omitted).

The elements of a RPA claim which must be alleged in this case to maintain jurisdiction of the claim would therefore include that:

1. HFM is engaged in interstate commerce;
2. HFM's price discrimination took place in the course of interstate commerce;
3. one of HFM's discriminatory transactions was "in commerce" which crossed state lines.

Plaintiff has not alleged that HFM has engaged in interstate commerce aside from the fact that it states that HFM is an Oregon corporation. In addition, plaintiff has not alleged that the alleged price discrimination has taken place in interstate commerce. The RPA requires that any discriminatory pricing must take place in interstate commerce, not merely affect interstate commerce. Gulf Oil v. Copp Paving Co., 419 U.S. 186, 42 L. Ed. 2d 378, 95 S. Ct. 392 (1974). In this [7] case, plaintiff merely alleges that HFM has sold goods to Hawaii consumers without alleging that the goods have been sold across state boundaries either to them or to other competing restaurants.

Gulf Oil involved the intrastate sale of liquid asphalt paving material. Even though Gulf Oil engaged in interstate commerce, the subject transactions were purely intrastate in character. The Supreme Court held that at least one of the two transactions (to either the favored or disfavored competitor) must be alleged to have crossed a state boundary. In the instant case, plaintiff has failed to do so in its complaint and the court need not look farther to find that the jurisdictional requirements of the RPA have not been met.

Count III is dismissed with leave to amend. Austin v. House of Vision, Inc., 385 F.2d 171 (7th Cir. 1967).

Count IV: Usury

The usury claim is premised upon HN5[] Hawaii Rev. Stat. § 478-6 which provides that the maximum permissible interest rate is no more than 1% per month. Defendant claims that the usury statutes are not applicable between merchants under § 478-8. The plaintiff asserts that it is not a merchant under HN6[] Hawaii Rev. Stat. § 490:2-104, which provides [8] in pertinent part the definition of merchant, > a person who deals in goods of the kind or otherwise by his occupation holds himself out as having knowledge or skill peculiar to the practices or goods involved in the transaction. . . .

This court finds that plaintiff is a merchant under Haw. Rev. Stat. § 490:2-104 because the transactions took place over a two year period and as a professional restaurant [*251] business, GWC held itself out as having the knowledge or skill peculiar to the practices or goods involved in the transaction. Accordingly, Count IV is dismissed.

Count V: Negligence

The negligence claim arises from plaintiff's assertions that the breach of contractual duties give rise to a negligence cause of action. Plaintiff states that it has alleged duties and obligations by virtue of the contract between the two parties and that Count I, II and III allege that defendant has breached those duties to plaintiff. HN7[] Under Hawaii law, a negligence claim is stated by an allegation that the acts or omissions of a party were done negligently. Taba v. Jardin, 30 Haw. 452 (1928); Ciacci v. Woolley, 33 Haw. 247 (1934); Morgan v. Yamada, 26 Haw. 17 (1921). Under Hawaii [9] law, plaintiff has sufficiently stated a negligence claim. Therefore, Count V is not dismissed.

Defendants motion for Rule 11 sanctions will be denied.

CONCLUSIONS

The court, having reviewed the motions, memoranda in support and in opposition thereto, the file, and having heard oral arguments by counsel, hereby ORDERS that defendant's motion to dismiss is denied as to Counts I, II, and V of plaintiff's complaint. Defendant's motion to dismiss is hereby granted as to Counts III (Robinson-Patman Act) and IV (usury) of plaintiff's complaint. Plaintiff is granted leave to amend its Robinson-Patman Act claim.

DATED: Honolulu, Hawaii, April 27, 1988.

LexisNexis

In re Baker

United States District Court for the District of Colorado

April 27, 1988, Decided ; April 27, 1988, Filed

Civil Action No. 87-C-1611

Reporter

86 B.R. 234 *; 1988 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 3605 **

In re Daniel George BAKER f/d/b/a DBI Enterprises and Lois Lorrine Baker, Debtor. Robert Carl ANTHONY, Plaintiff, v. Daniel George BAKER, individually and as the Deputy Sheriff of the County of El Paso, Colorado, Defendant withdrawal, district court, bankruptcy court, mandatory, malicious, personal injury tort, federal law, indictment, deprive, rights, cases Counsel: [1] Alan J. Harper, Denver, Colorado, for Plaintiff.

Core Terms

Phillip A. Vaglica, Colorado Springs, Colorado, and Frank A. Natchez, Colorado Springs, Colorado, for Defendant.

Judges: Jim R. Carrigan, United States District Court.

Opinion by: CARRIGAN

Opinion

[*235] ORDER

JIM R. CARRIGAN, UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT

This matter is before the court on plaintiff Robert Carl Anthony's motion for withdrawal of reference of an adversary action filed in the United States Bankruptcy Court for the District of Colorado. Jurisdiction is alleged to exist under 28 U.S.C. §§ 157(b)(5), 157(d), and 1334(a).

The facts surrounding this case were stated by the court in Anthony v. Baker, 767 F.2d 657 (10th Cir. 1985): Plaintiff was employed as the general manager of the Springs Motor Inn ("Inn") in Colorado Springs, Colorado, when a serious fire caused substantial damage to the Inn in September 1980. On the morning of the fire, the defendant Dan Baker, a detective in the El Paso County Sheriff's Department, conducted a fire scene investigation. From his investigation he determined that the fire had been set to obtain money through insurance fraud.

On April 2, 1981, Anthony was indicted by an El Paso County Grand Jury for felony theft based on insurance fraud. The indictment was returned after the Grand [2] Jury, during six sessions, heard the testimony of over twenty witnesses, including Anthony and Baker. Although El Paso County District Court Judge David Parrish concluded that the Grand Jury had probable cause to indict Anthony, he nevertheless dismissed the indictment upon determining "'that not all of the nine jurors who had voted for the indictment had been present at all the sessions where the evidence was presented.'" 767 F.2d at 659 (citing App. Rec. Vol. VIII at 14).

Immediately thereafter, the district attorney's office for the Fourth Judicial District of Colorado filed a direct information charging Anthony with felony theft based on insurance fraud. Following a preliminary hearing, Judge Parrish found probable cause and bound Anthony over for trial. After trial to the court, Anthony was found not guilty. At no time did the insurance companies that paid the fire insurance claims for the Inn file formal written complaints for fraud.

Plaintiff Anthony then filed an action under 42 U.S.C. § 1983 against Baker and others for malicious prosecution and deprivation of his constitutional rights. Anthony alleged, among other things, that Baker and Newton conspired to deprive him [3] of his constitutional rights by: (1) making him the target of their investigation; (2) giving false information to the Grand Jury; (3) and covering up exculpatory information.

Prior to trial, Judge John P. Moore, then of this court, denied Baker's and Newton's motion to dismiss, or in the alternative for summary judgment. The court, however, granted their motion for a directed verdict after Baker had presented his case. Among other things, the court concluded that: (1) Baker's conduct was more properly described as negligent, and not malicious; (2) none of the witnesses testified or even suggested that Baker was motivated by malice with the intent to deprive Anthony of a federally guaranteed right; (3) Anthony did not meet his burden of establishing that Baker was motivated by a specific intent to deprive him of a federally guaranteed right to due process; and (4) police officers are immune from liability for conduct performed within the scope of their official duties unless the plaintiff shows that the official knew or should have known that his actions violated of established constitutional or statutory principles. The court also awarded the defendants their attorneys' fees. [1]

[4] [*236] On appeal, the Tenth Circuit Court of Appeals reversed in part and remanded in part. It held that the trial record contained sufficient evidence from which the jury could find that Baker's methods in carrying out his investigation of Anthony constituted egregious conduct so as to deprive him of qualified immunity. The court stated that it did "not agree with the district court's finding that the record does not suggest by hint or indirection that Baker was motivated by malice and that Baker was entitled to immunity . . . ." 767 F.2d at 657. The court of appeals remanded to this court.

Included in the remanded case are the plaintiff's civil rights claims against Baker and Anthony (Civil Action No. 82-C-1025). Those claims currently are pending in this court, and a jury trial has been demanded. However, by order dated July 27, 1987, I enforced indefinitely the automatic stay required by 11 U.S.C. § 362.

On October 23, 1987, the plaintiff filed a complaint for an adversary proceeding in the bankruptcy court to determine the dischargeability of a debt under 11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(6), and § 523(c). Three days later, the plaintiff filed the currently pending motion to withdraw reference.

The [5] Supreme Court, in Northern Pipeline Construction Corp. v. Marathon Pipeline Co., 458 U.S. 50, 102 S. Ct. 2858, 73 L. Ed. 2d 598 (1982), recognized constitutional limits on Congress to assign certain adjudicative authority to non-Article III judges, such as federal bankruptcy judges. That decision held the then existing bankruptcy court powers unconstitutional. Burger King Corp. v. B-K of Kansas, Inc., 64 B.R. 728, 730 (D. Kan. 1986). In 1984 Congress responded to Marathon by granting to federal district courts original jurisdiction over all cases arising under title 11 of the Bankruptcy Code. See 28 U.S.C. § 1334(b). District courts are permitted, however, to refer bankruptcy cases to the bankruptcy court. 28 U.S.C. § 157(a). Upon proper showing, however, that reference either may or must be withdrawn, depending on the circumstances.

---

[1] The district court also determined that under no circumstances could the jury infer from the facts presented any basis that would allow recovery by the plaintiff. Additionally, the court noted that under § 1983 the acts of law enforcement officials leading to prosecution in state court can only be the basis of recovery when it clearly appears that those actions were taken with the intent to deprive the plaintiff of the valid exercise of a constitutional right or a clearly defined right under federal law. It reasoned that it is only when police officers or others with prosecutorial authority act maliciously or recklessly for the purpose of depriving an individual of a federally protected right that those officers or prosecutorial officials are culpable.

Plaintiff contends that withdrawal of reference of the plaintiff's claims against Baker is mandated under both 28 U.S.C. § 157(b)(5), and 28 U.S.C. § 157(d). The parties have briefed the issues and oral argument would not materially assist my decision.

28 U.S.C. § 157(b)(5).

Section 157(b)(5) provides:

> "The district court shall order that personal injury tort and [6] wrongful death claims shall be tried in the district court in which the bankruptcy case is pending, or in the district court in which the claim arose, as determined by the district court in which the bankruptcy case is pending."

See In re UNR Industries, Inc., 45 B.R. 322 (N.D. Ill. 1984) (section 157(b)(5) required that asbestos claims against debtor be tried in district court rather than bankruptcy court).

Plaintiff argues that withdrawal is mandatory under § 157(b)(5) because his complaint filed in Civil Action 82-C-1025 alleges that the debtor/defendant is liable under § 1983 for the personal injury tort of malicious prosecution. Plaintiff obviously has alleged a personal injury tort. Therefore withdrawal appears mandatory under § 157(b)(5).

Notably, however, I am unaware of any case decided under § 157(b)(5) where the personal injury tort was alleged within a § 1983 claim. Yet I need not address the issue of whether § 157(b)(5) applies to personal injury torts pleaded under § 1983 because as discussed below, infra, I conclude that withdrawal of reference to the bankruptcy court is mandatory under § 157(d).

28 U.S.C. § 157(d).

Section 157(d) permits the district court [7] to withdraw its reference of the case if the [*237] matter involves law that should or must be adjudicated by an Article III court. Burger King, at 730. Specifically, § 157(d) states:

> "The district court may withdraw, in whole or in part, any case or proceeding referred under this section, on its own motion or on timely motion of any party, for cause shown. The district court shall, on timely motion of a party, so withdraw a proceeding if the court determines that resolution of the proceeding requires consideration of both title 11 . . . . and other laws of the United States regulating organizations or activities affecting interstate commerce."

Section 157(d) provides for both permissive and mandatory withdrawal. The district court must withdraw a proceeding whose resolution will require considering both Title 11 and other federal law other than the Bankruptcy Code. Burger King, supra, 64 B.R. at 731. [2]

[8] Much dispute has arisen from the interpretation of the § 157(d) mandatory withdrawal clause. As noted by one court:

> "The first area of dispute concerns whether the requirement that the proceeding involve consideration of both title 11 and non-Code federal law should be read literally. One theory suggests that withdrawal is mandatory when resolution of the claims will require substantial and material claims of non-bankruptcy code statutes . . . .

---

[2] The district court may withdraw the entire case from the bankruptcy court for "cause shown." 28 U.S.C. § 157(d). In DeLorean Motor Co. v. Allard, 49 B.R. 900, 912 (Bankr. E.D. Mich. 1985), the court stated that the "cause shown" test "is, to be sure, an amorphous test. It is a chameleon within the legal lexicon whose definition is created by its application." The court further observed that use of the phrase "cause shown" in § 157(d):

> "Creates a presumption that Congress intended to have bankruptcy proceedings adjudicated in the bankruptcy court unless rebutted by a contravening policy. The presumption may be overcome only by an overriding interest based on a finding by the court that the withdrawal of reference is essential to preserve a higher interest than that recognized by Congress and is narrowly tailored to serve that interest." 49 B.R. at 912 (emphasis in original)(citation omitted).

> The second theory holds that the statute should be literally translated, i.e., mandatory withdrawal is required only when resolution of the proceeding requires consideration of both title 11 and non-Code federal law." Burger King, supra, at 731 (emphasis in original; citations omitted).

In In re White Motor Corp., 42 B.R. 693, 705 (N.D. Ohio 1984), the court held that mandatory withdrawal of reference is required "only if the [district court] can make an affirmative determination that resolution of the claims will require substantial and material considerations of those non-Code statutes." (Emphasis added.)

The court in Holland America Insurance Co. v. Succession of Roy, 777 F.2d 992 (5th Cir. 1985), considered [9] the following factors in determining the issue of withdrawal of reference under § 157(d): (1) whether the case only involves state law; (2) judicial economy; (3) uniformity in bankruptcy administration; (4) reduction of forum shopping; (5) economical use of debtor's and creditors' resources; (6) expediting the bankruptcy process; and (7) whether or not a jury trial has been requested.

In Michigan Milk Producers Association v. Hunter, 46 B.R. 214 (N.D. Ohio 1985), the plaintiff filed in bankruptcy court an adversary complaint against the trustee to determine its rights as a secured creditor. The trustee counterclaimed, alleging that an agreement between the plaintiff and the debtor violated the Sherman Anti-Trust Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1. Subsequently, the trustee filed a motion for withdrawal of reference. The district court granted the motion, reasoning that resolution of the proceedings would require substantial and material consideration of federal antitrust law, as well as the plaintiff's rights as a secured creditor, and thus, "resolution of the instant adversary proceeding would require consideration of both Title 11 and non-bankruptcy federal statutes regulating organizations or [10] activities affecting interstate commerce." Id. at 216.

In the present action the plaintiff contends that withdrawal is mandatory under § 157(d) because resolution of his claim against the debtor/defendant will require [*238] substantial and material consideration of: (1) dischargeability issues under title 11; and (2) issues of federal law under 42 U.S.C. § 1983, and the Fourth, Fifth, Sixth, Ninth and Fourteenth Amendments to the United States Constitution. [3]

The complaint in the adversary proceeding filed in bankruptcy court avers that the defendant's debt to the plaintiff is nondischargeable under 11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(6), and § 523(c). Section 523(a)(6) declares that a debtor may not receive a discharge from any debt for willful or malicious injury by the debtor to another entity or to the property of another entity. [4] In order to fall within this exception to discharge, the injury to the entity or the property must have been willful and malicious. [11] "Willful" means "deliberate or intentional." 3 Collier on Bankruptcy § 523.16 (15th ed.); In re Louis, 49 B.R. 135, 137 (Bankr. E.D. Wis. 1985). A showing of willfulness requires more than proof of inadvertence or negligence, and no longer may be satisfied by merely proving "reckless disregard." Id.

By asserting a claim pursuant to 42 U.S.C. § 1983, the plaintiff has alleged a claim that requires consideration of a federal statute other than the Bankruptcy Code. The legislative history behind § 157(d) clearly supports this view. For example, the following colloquy occurred during the House debate on the final version of § 157(d):

> "Mr. KRAMER:
>
> * * * *

---

[3] Plaintiff additionally contends that permissive withdrawal should be allowed under § 157(d). See note 2, supra. I do not address this issue, however, because of my determination that withdrawal of the reference is mandatory.

[4] Section 523(c), 11 U.S.C., states:

> "Except as provided in subsection (a)(3)(B) of this section, the debtor shall be discharged from a debt of a kind specified in paragraph (2), (4) or (6) of subsection (a) of this section, unless, on request of the creditor to whom such debt is owed, and after notice and a hearing, the court determines such debt to be excepted from discharge under paragraph (2), (4) or (6), as the case may be, of subsection (a) of this section."

> My question is this: The language 'activities affecting [12] interstate commerce' is very broad language. What kinds of situations or circumstances does the gentlemen intend to cover here? Or will this language become an escape hatch through which most bankruptcy matters will be removed to a district court?
> Mr. KASTENMEIER:
> I thank the gentleman for his question.
>
> This language is to be construed narrowly. It would, for example, mean related cases which may require consideration of both title 11 issues and other Federal laws including cases involving the National Labor Relations Act, civil rights laws, Securities and Exchange Act of 1934, and similar laws." 130 Cong. Rec. H1849-50 (daily ed. March 21, 1984)(emphasis added).

In sum, the plaintiff asserts that the debtor/defendant maliciously prosecuted him in violation of § 1983, and that the debtor/defendant's liability is not dischargeable in bankruptcy. Clearly, resolution of the plaintiff's claims against Baker will require substantial consideration of both 11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(6) and 42 U.S.C. § 1983. Thus withdrawal of reference is mandatory under 28 U.S.C. § 157(d).

Defendant argues that withdrawal of reference would interfere with the stay ordered in Civil Action No. 82-C-1025. In [13] UNR Industries, supra, 45 B.R. 322, the federal court for the Northern District of Illinois disagreed with the debtor's contention that the § 362 stay was applicable to § 157(b)(5). The court stated:

> "If Congress enacts a statute which, though not referring to the automatic stay section, can only be carried out by lifting that stay then the Court's duty would be to lift the stay and give effect to the statute." Id. at 325.

It further reasoned that adopting the debtor's argument would render § 157(b)(5) superfluous because that section "could not be enforced until bankruptcy proceedings were concluded," and therefore the section "would no longer be necessary since the stay would have ended and the bankruptcy court would no longer have the power to [*239] hold trials relating to the concluded case." Id. at 325-26.

Notably, § 157(d), like § 157(b)(5), does not mention the automatic stay provision of 11 U.S.C. § 362. I conclude that the reasoning of the court in UNR Industries also applies to claims withdrawn pursuant to § 157(d), and is persuasive in this case. Thus the stay imposed in Civil Action No. 82-C-1025 does not prohibit withdrawal of reference of the plaintiff's [14] adversary action. Nor does it prevent the plaintiff from proceeding with his action against the defendant in this court.

Accordingly, IT IS ORDERED that:

> (1) Plaintiff's motion to withdraw reference to the bankruptcy court is granted;
> (2) The reference to the bankruptcy court of the plaintiff's adversary proceeding against the debtor in Bankruptcy Case No. 87 B 08358 is withdrawn;
> (3) The automatic stay of Civil Case No. 82-C-1025 is lifted;
> (4) This action shall be consolidated with Civil Action No. 82-C-1025 for all purposes; and > (5) The consolidated cases shall proceed in this court.

Dated at Denver, Colorado, April 27, 1988.

Gene Cope & Associates, Inc. v. Aura Promotions, Ltd.

United States District Court for the Eastern District of Michigan, Southern Division

April 28, 1988, Decided

Civil Action No. 85-5053

Reporter

692 F. Supp. 724 *; 1988 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 9283 ; 1988-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P68,050

GENE COPE & ASSOCIATES, INC., d/b/a VINTAGE WINE SELECTIONS and DIRECT IMPORTS, LTD., Plaintiff, v. AURA PROMOTIONS, LTD., a Delaware Corporation, as successor in interest to PIEROTH BROTHERS, INC., an Illinois Corporation, Defendant Disposition: [1] DISMISSED.

Core Terms

wine, lawsuit, antitrust, immune, relevant market, monopolization, monopoly power, counter-complaint, promotion, report and recommendation, state court, disparagement, allegations, sham, antitrust violation, injunctions, competitor, practices, cases, antitrust liability, antitrust claim, willfulness

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

HN1[] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

When deciding a motion to dismiss, the material facts pleaded in the complaint must be taken as true. When dismissal for failure to state a claim pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6) is sought, the complaint should not be dismissed unless it appears beyond doubt that the plaintiff can prove no set of facts in support of his claim which would entitle him to relief.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > General Overview

Healthcare Law > Healthcare Litigation > Antitrust Actions > Facilities

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

HN2[] Regulated Practices, Private Actions

Dismissals in antitrust cases should be granted very sparingly prior to full discovery since the proof is largely in the hands of the alleged conspirators. The United States Supreme Court has described the standard for dismissal in antitrust cases as "concededly rigorous."

Antitrust & Trade Law > International Aspects > Commerce With Foreign Nations

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN3[] International Aspects, Commerce With Foreign Nations

Pursuant to § 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 2, monopolization, attempts to monopolize, and combinations or conspiracies to monopolize interstate or foreign trade are condemned. This condemnation of monopolizing clearly extends to actual monopolies, and also is applicable to unilateral acts by a single actor. Monopolies are condemned under § 2 where a business acquires or maintains monopoly power through competitively unreasonable practices. If unreasonable practices are not utilized, the monopoly is not violative of § 2.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

Healthcare Law > Healthcare Litigation > Antitrust Actions > Facilities

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > Relevant Market

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Monopolies & Monopolization > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > Monopoly Power

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN4[] Monopolies & Monopolization, Attempts to Monopolize

The elements of monopolization were clarified in case law. As set forth in case law, the elements of monopolization are: (1) the possession of monopoly power in the relevant market, and (2) the willful acquisition or maintenance of that power as distinguished from growth or development as a consequence of a superior product, business acumen, or historic accident. Thus, there are three items which must be established in a 15 U.S.C.S. § 2 case. First, the relevant market must be defined. Second, consideration must be given to whether the alleged monopolizer has monopoly power. Finally, it must be determined whether monopoly power was willfully acquired or maintained.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > Scope

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > Sham Exception

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Transportation > Railroads

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > Exemptions

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > US Department of Justice Actions > Civil Actions > General Overview

Governments > State & Territorial Governments > Claims By & Against

Torts > Public Entity Liability > Immunities > Judicial Immunity

HN5[] Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

Even where a 15 U.S.C.S. § 2 violation has occurred, a monopolizing company may be immune from antitrust liability. There is a general rule of antitrust immunity for the right to petition government. This rule is known as the Noerr-Pennington doctrine for the two United States Supreme Court cases in which it was developed. These cases established that lobbying and other similar actions by businessmen to obtain legislative or executive action do not violate the antitrust laws, even though those actions are intended to eliminate competition or otherwise restrain trade.In a later case, the Noerr-Pennington doctrine was extended to immunize judicial actions taken by competitors. Hence, a competitor's conduct in instituting a lawsuit against another competitor is immune from antitrust liability unless that conduct is demonstrated to fall within the "sham exception" to the Noerr-Pennington doctrine. Under the "sham exception," judicial actions will not be immune from antitrust liability if taken to harass a competitor or bar the competitor from meaningful access to the government. The "sham exception" has been narrowly construed by courts.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > General Overview

HN6[] Exemptions & Immunities, Noerr-Pennington Doctrine

When a lawsuit raises a legal issue of genuine substance, it raises a rebuttable presumption that it is a serious attempt to obtain a judgment on the merits instead of a mere sham or harassment. Thus, the evidentiary burden is on the antitrust plaintiff to prove that the action of the defendant comes within the sham exception to Noerr-Pennington in this kind of case.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Monopolies & Monopolization > General Overview

HN7[] Regulated Practices, Monopolies & Monopolization

The possession of monopoly power in itself is not illegal.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Monopolies & Monopolization > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Market Definition

HN8[] Regulated Practices, Monopolies & Monopolization

Monopoly power, including that achieved through acquisition, must be consciously acquired.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Monopolies & Monopolization > General Overview

HN9[] Regulated Practices, Monopolies & Monopolization

The "interchangeability in use" with alternative products must be considered when establishing the relevant market, as must the "cross-elasticity of demand."

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Monopolies & Monopolization > General Overview

Healthcare Law > Healthcare Litigation > Antitrust Actions > Facilities

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

HN10[] Regulated Practices, Monopolies & Monopolization

Although the threshold of sufficiency needed to survive motion to dismiss in antitrust action is low, at least direct or inferential allegations in the complaint must cover all the material elements of an antitrust claim.

Civil Procedure > ... > Jurisdiction > Jurisdictional Sources > General Overview

Governments > Courts > Judicial Comity

Civil Procedure > ... > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Supplemental Jurisdiction > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Supplemental Jurisdiction > Pendent Claims

HN11[] Jurisdiction, Jurisdictional Sources

Jurisdiction over state claims would only be vested in the court under the doctrine of pendent jurisdiction. In choosing whether to exercise jurisdiction, a federal court should consider and weigh in each case, and at every stage of the litigation, the values of judicial economy, convenience, fairness, and comity in order to decide whether to exercise jurisdiction over a case brought in that court involving pendent state-law claims. When the balance of these factors indicates that a case properly belongs in state court, as when the federal-law claims have dropped out of the lawsuit in its early stages and only state-law claims remain, the federal court should decline the exercise of jurisdiction by dismissing the case without prejudice.

Counsel: Kurt A. O'Keefe, Esq., Detroit, Michigan, for Plaintiff.

Kenneth M. Zorn, Esq., Detroit, Michigan, for Defendant.

Judges: Richard F. Suhrheinrich, United States District Judge.

Opinion by: SUHRHEINRICH

Opinion

[*725] MEMORANDUM OPINION AND ORDER

RICHARD F. SUHRHEINRICH, UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE.

This matter is before the Court on the objections of plaintiff Gene Cope & Associates, d/b/a Vintage Wine Selections and Direct Imports, Ltd. (Vintage), to Magistrate Virginia M. Morgan's Report and Recommendation of April 27, 1987. [1] In her report, the magistrate recommended that this Court dismiss the plaintiff's lawsuit. Specifically, the magistrate concluded that the Noerr-Pennington doctrine immunized defendant Aura Promotions, Ltd. (Aura) from liability in this antitrust case, thus mandating dismissal of plaintiff's case.

The plaintiff has filed timely objections to the magistrate's report and recommendation. Plaintiff contends that the Noerr-Pennington doctrine [2] was erroneously applied to its lawsuit. The plaintiff further contends that the magistrate erroneously concluded that a stay of this suit pending the outcome of the concurrent Wayne County Circuit Court lawsuit was appropriate. [*726] Finally, plaintiff alleges that dismissal of this lawsuit is improper, given the present posture of the case. As these objections effectively cover all the grounds discussed in the report and recommendation, the Court shall make a de novo determination of all portions of the report and recommendation. See 28 U.S.C. § 636(b)(1). As an aid in making its determination, the Court heard the arguments of counsel on March 22, 1988.

Standards for Dismissal Under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6)

This matter originally came before the magistrate on defendant Aura's motion to dismiss. HN1[] When deciding a motion to dismiss, the material facts pleaded in the complaint must be taken as true. Hospital Bldg. Co. v. Rex Hospital Trustees, 425 U.S. 738, 740, 48 L. Ed. 2d 338, 96 S. Ct. 1848 (1976). When dismissal for failure to state a claim pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6) is sought, the complaint should not be dismissed unless it appears beyond doubt that the plaintiff can prove no set of facts in support [3] of his claim which would entitle him to relief. Id. at 746; Conley v. Gibson, 355 U.S. 41, 2 L. Ed. 2d 80, 78 S. Ct. 99 (1957). Further, HN2[] dismissals in antitrust cases should be granted very sparingly prior to full discovery since "the proof is largely in the hands of the alleged conspirators." Hospital Bldg. Co., supra, quoting Poller v. Columbia Broadcasting, 368 U.S. 464, 473, 7 L. Ed. 2d 458, 82 S. Ct. 486 (1962). The Supreme Court has described the standard for dismissal in antitrust cases as "concededly rigorous." Hospital Bldg. Co., supra 425 U.S. at 746-47. These standards shall be utilized in making this Court's de novo determination of Aura's motion to dismiss.

Background

In this case, violations of the antitrust laws are alleged. Specifically, plaintiffs contend that defendant Aura has violated § 2 of the Sherman Antitrust Act, 15 U.S.C. § 2, by three practices in which Aura has engaged. These practices are: (1) the institution of a Ten Million Dollar lawsuit against plaintiff Vintage in Wayne County Circuit Court; (2) the disparaging of plaintiff's products and services to plaintiff's clients by Aura's agents; and (3) the purchase of Wine Consultants, another wine promoting company.

The events leading up to the institution [4] of the present lawsuit are not disputed. Vintage and Aura are competitors who each provide the service of wine promotion. Both Aura and Vintage are engaged in the promotion and marketing of wine and wine related products through wine samplings. Although it is unclear exactly how Aura and Vintage carry out their business, it appears that they solicit individuals to attend wine samplings at which they promote wine and wine products. The individuals then order any desired wines from wine retailers such as plaintiff Direct Imports. The wine retailers pay commissions on these sales to the involved promotion company.

---

[1] Direct Imports and Vintage Wine Selections are related companies, both being owned by Guido Capaldi. Direct Imports is engaged in the retail sale and distribution of wine and wine related products, while Vintage is engaged in the promotion of wine and wine related products via wine samplings.

The relationship between Aura and Vintage has been less than smooth. On May 23, 1984, Aura filed suit against Vintage in Wayne County Circuit Court. In that case, Civil Action No. 84-415976-CZ assigned to Judge Marvin Stempien, Aura claimed that Vintage and Direct Imports via their owner and employees fraudulently misappropriated trade secrets, converting the secret information to their own use. Specifically, Aura alleged that customer list information was taken by Vintage's owner and employees. These individuals were former Aura employees. Aura amended its state complaint [5] twice, once on October 30, 1984 and also on December 14, 1984.

A temporary restraining order against Vintage and Direct Imports was granted by Judge Richard C. Kaufman on May 23, 1984. A preliminary injunction was issued on September 20, 1984. Two other preliminary instructions were subsequently issued following the two amended complaints, the first on October 31, 1984 and the second on January 2, 1985. Although Vintage and Direct sought dissolution of the preliminary injunctions on January 16, 1985 and January 28, 1985, Judge Stempien did not [*727] dissolve the injunctions. They apparently remained in effect until Judge Stempien rendered his decision in this case on March 3, 1988.

In his opinion, Judge Stempien concluded that Aura Promotions was entitled to summary disposition against defendants Gene Cope & Associates, Vintage Wine Selections, Direct Imports, Ltd., and Guido Capaldi. The defendants companies are the same companies who constitute the plaintiff in the instant case. Judge Stempien also held that Guido Capaldi had engaged in a scheme to defraud by a series of well-planned acts. As concluded by Judge Stempien, the purpose of the scheme was to obtain Aura's customer list.

Vintage [6] filed a counter-complaint in the state court action on November 8, 1984, amending it on May 17, 1985. In the counter-complaint, Vintage and Direct alleged that Aura instituted the state proceeding solely to drive Vintage out of business. It was also alleged that Aura disparaged Vintage's products, and that Aura sought maliciously to destroy Vintage's business. As a comparison of the state counter-complaint with the complaint in the instant action reveals, the two raise the same issues, albeit labeled differently. [2] Notably, Judge Stempien did not rule on the counter-complaint in his March 3 opinion. Rather, as indicated by the parties to this Court at hearing, Judge Stempien reserved his ruling on the counter-complaint.

State Lawsuit and Noerr-Pennington Immunity

Despite the undecided status of the state counter-complaint, the magistrate properly recommended dismissal of Vintage's claim that Aura's state lawsuit against Vintage constituted an antitrust violation under § 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 2. HN3[] Pursuant to § 2 of the Sherman Act, [7] 15 U.S.C. § 2, monopolization, attempts to monopolize, and combinations or conspiracies to monopolize interstate or foreign trade are condemned. This condemnation of monopolizing clearly extends to actual monopolies, and also is applicable to unilateral acts by a single actor. Monopolies are condemned under § 2 where a business acquires or maintains monopoly power through competitively unreasonable practices. If unreasonable practices are not utilized, the monopoly is not violative of § 2.

HN4[] The elements of monopolization were clarified in United States v. Grinnell, 384 U.S. 563, 16 L. Ed. 2d 778, 86 S. Ct. 1698 (1966). As set forth in Grinnell, the elements of monopolization are: (1) the possession of monopoly power in the relevant market, and (2) the willful acquisition or maintenance of that power as distinguished from growth or development as a consequence of a superior product, business acumen, or historic accident. 384 U.S. at 570-71. See also Potters Medical Center v. City Hospital Ass'n, 800 F.2d 568, 574 (6th Cir. 1986). Thus, there are three items which must be established in a § 2 case. First, the relevant market must be defined. Second, consideration must be given to whether the alleged monopolizer [8] has monopoly power. Finally, it must be determined whether monopoly power was willfully acquired or maintained. W. Holmes, Antitrust Law Handbook § 2.03 (1987).

---

[2] Thus, the state counter-complaint alleges unfair business competition, while the federal complaint alleges an antitrust violation.

However, HN5[] even where a § 2 violation has occurred, a monopolizing company may be immune from antitrust liability. There is a general rule of antitrust immunity for the right to petition government. This rule is known as the Noerr-Pennington doctrine for the two Supreme Court cases in which it was developed, Eastern Railroad Presidents Conference v. Noerr Motor Freight, Inc., 365 U.S. 127, 5 L. Ed. 2d 464, 81 S. Ct. 523 (1961) and United Mine Workers v. Pennington, 381 U.S. 657, 14 L. Ed. 2d 626, 85 S. Ct. 1585 (1965). These cases established that lobbying and other similar actions by businessmen to obtain legislative or executive action do not violate the antitrust laws, even though those [*728] actions are intended to eliminate competition or otherwise restrain trade.

In a later case, California Motor Transport Co. v. Trucking Unlimited, 404 U.S. 508, 30 L. Ed. 2d 642, 92 S. Ct. 609 (1972), the Noerr-Pennington doctrine was extended to immunize judicial actions taken by competitors. Hence, a competitor's conduct in instituting a lawsuit against another competitor is immune from antitrust liability unless [9] that conduct is demonstrated to fall within the "sham exception" to the Noerr-Pennington doctrine. Under the "sham exception," judicial actions will not be immune from antitrust liability if taken to harass a competitor or bar the competitor from meaningful access to the government. California Motor Transport, 404 U.S. at 510-11. The "sham exception" has been narrowly construed by courts. See Westmac, Inc. v. Smith, 797 F.2d 313 (6th Cir. 1986); Razorback Ready Mix Concrete Co. v. Weaver, 761 F.2d 484 (8th Cir. 1985).

Of importance to the present case, the Sixth Circuit held in Westmac that HN6[] "when a lawsuit raises a legal issue of genuine substance, it raises a rebuttable presumption that it is a serious attempt to obtain a judgment on the merits instead of a mere sham or harassment. 797 F.2d at 318. Thus, "the evidentiary burden [is] on the antitrust plaintiff to prove that the action of the defendant comes within the sham exception to Noerr-Pennington in this kind of case." Id.

When the Westmac principles are applied to the facts of the instant case, it is clear that Vintage has not overcome the rebuttable presumption that Aura's are genuine judicial [10] activities. Aura has actively pursued its state court lawsuit against Vintage, garnering three preliminary injunctions and a decision on the merits in its favor. Additionally, a review of Judge Stempien's opinion granting summary disposition for Aura demonstrates that Aura's lawsuit raised substantial issues of state law. Vintage has in no way shown that Aura's state suit was a sham. In fact, although Vintage sought on two separate occasions to have the preliminary injunctions lifted, the state court refused to dissolve the injunctions. Thus, the Court finds that Aura's state suit is a genuine judicial activity. Therefore, the Noerr-Pennington doctrine immunizes Aura from antitrust liability as to its state court lawsuit. Under these circumstances, the Court need not address the merits of Vintage's claim that Aura's state lawsuit constituted a § 2 antitrust violation.

Since Noerr-Pennington immunizes Aura from antitrust liability for its state suit, dismissal of that portion of the present suit which alleges the state suit is a sham is appropriate. The magistrate has recommended such dismissal in her report and recommendation, which shall be adopted as to this issue.

Other [11] Alleged Antitrust Violations

The magistrate's report and recommendation fails to address the two other allegedly anticompetitive practices in which Vintage claims Aura engaged. As stated earlier, these practices are: (1) the disparaging of Vintage's products and services; and (2) the purchase of Wine Consultants. However, Vintage's complaint merely sets forth conclusory allegations in support of these claims. These allegations give no indication of who disparaged Vintage or how this was supposedly accomplished. There is also no indication of how Aura's acquisition of Wine Consultants constituted willful acquisition or maintenance of monopoly power. Rather, Vintage assumes that merely showing an increase in Aura's market share in Michigan is sufficient to demonstrate an antitrust violation.

It is well-established that HN7[] the possession of monopoly power in itself is not illegal. United States v. Griffith, 334 U.S. 100, 107 and n. 10, 92 L. Ed. 1236, 68 S. Ct. 941 (1948). Vintage must demonstrate willfulness on Aura's part or its antitrust claims fail. Such willfulness is not demonstrated by the mere allegation that Aura's percentage of a vaguely defined market increased. See Grinnell, supra (HN8[] monopoly power, [12] including that achieved through acquisition, must be consciously acquired). Vintage's argument that Aura [*729] engaged in anticompetitive behavior based on Aura's increase in Michigan market share begs the question in two ways. First, it assumes that the relevant geographic market is Michigan. Second, it assumes that wine promotion services is the relevant product market. These assumptions fail to take into account Supreme Court cases establishing that HN9[] the "interchangeability in use" with alternative products must be considered when establishing the relevant market, as must the "cross-elasticity of demand." United States v. E.I. duPont de Nemours & Co., 351 U.S. 377, 394-95, 100 L. Ed. 1264, 76 S. Ct. 994 (1956); Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, 325, 8 L. Ed. 2d 510, 82 S. Ct. 1502 (1962). That is, the relevant market must take into account whether there are geographic or product substitutes for Michigan wine promotion services. [3] As the complaint does not consider such substitutes, Vintage has not properly defined the relevant market. Notably, at hearing, Vintage admitted that its definition of the relevant market was lacking.

[13] In view of the inadequate relevant market definition contained in Vintage's complaint, the Court finds Vintage's market share analysis faulty. Without an adequate relevant market definition, the share a company has in a market cannot be ascertained. Therefore, the Court cannot determine if Aura had monopoly power in the relevant market.

Since Vintage's amended complaint fails to adequately establish any of the basic elements of a § 2 monopolization claim, the Court finds that dismissal of the complaint as to the disparagement claim and as to the purchase of Wine Consultants is appropriate. Taking the facts plead in the complaint as true, it is apparent that Vintage can prove no set of facts in support of its claim which would entitle it to relief under the federal antitrust laws. Although dismissals of federal antitrust cases are to be granted very sparingly, Hospital Bldg. Co., supra 425 U.S.at 746, the present case is one in which dismissal is appropriate. See Car Carriers, Inc. v. Ford Motor Co., 745 F.2d 1101 (7th Cir. 1984) HN10[] (although threshold of sufficiency needed to survive motion to dismiss in antitrust action is low, at least direct or inferential allegations in the complaint [14] must cover all the material elements of an antitrust claim). Due to Vintage's total failure to establish the elements of its monopolization claim, no federal antitrust claim has been stated. Dismissal of the complaint is, therefore, appropriate. The dismissal shall extend to all federal antitrust issues as to which Aura was not heretofore immunized by the Noerr-Pennington doctrine.

Although the Court is dismissing Vintage's antitrust claims which are based on Aura's alleged disparagement of Vintage and Aura's purchase of Wine Consultants, it shall allow Vintage to file a second amended complaint as to those claims. The Court finds that the interests of justice require it to allow such amendment. In amending its complaint, Vintage is specifically directed to properly establish the relevant market, to provide the Court with a proper indication of whether Aura possesses monopoly power, and to set forth such facts as are necessary to demonstrate willfulness on Aura's part. If on amendment no antitrust claim is stated by Vintage's complaint, the Court shall dismiss that complaint with prejudice.

State Claims

Although Vintage's lawsuit may present state claims, the Court finds it [15] unnecessary to rule on those claims. HN11[] Jurisdiction over the state claims would only be vested in this Court under the doctrine of pendent jurisdiction. In choosing whether to exercise jurisdiction,

> [A] federal court should consider and weigh in each case, and at every stage of the litigation, the values of judicial economy, convenience, fairness, and comity in [*730] order to decide whether to exercise jurisdiction over a case brought in that court involving pendent state-law claims. When the balance of these factors indicates that a case properly belongs in state court, as when the federal-law claims have dropped out of the lawsuit in its early stages and only state-law claims remain, the federal court should decline the exercise of jurisdiction by dismissing the case without prejudice.

Carnegie-Mellon University v. Cohill, 484 U.S 343, 98 L. Ed. 2d 720, 729-30, 108 S. Ct. 614 (1988).

---

[3] As set forth by the Supreme Court in Grinnell, 384 U.S. at 572, "we see no barrier to combining in a single market a number of different products or services where that combination reflects commercial realities."

In the present case, the Court declines jurisdiction over the pendent state claims. These claims, embodied in Vintage's state counter-complaint, are currently pending in state court. Notably, the state counter-complaint was filed before the instant lawsuit was filed. Comity, judicial economy, convenience, and fairness [16] will clearly be best served if this Court declines jurisdiction of any state claims which may be embodied in Vintage's complaint. Therefore, the Court shall dismiss any state law claims which Vintage's amended complaint may present without prejudice so that they may properly be decided by the state court.

For the reasons set forth above,

IT IS HEREBY ORDERED that Magistrate Virginia M. Morgan's Report and Recommendation of April 27, 1987 is ACCEPTED and ADOPTED IN PART as to defendant Aura Promotion's Noerr-Pennington antitrust immunity for its state court lawsuit, and REJECTED IN PART inasmuch as it recommends dismissing the entire complaint filed by plaintiff Gene Cope & Associates, d/b/a Vintage Wine Selections and Direct Imports, on the basis of the Noerr-Pennington doctrine.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that plaintiff's complaint is DISMISSED inasmuch as it alleges that defendant Aura Promotions' state lawsuit constituted a federal antitrust violation.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that defendant Aura Promotions' motion to dismiss is GRANTED.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that plaintiff's complaint is DISMISSED without prejudice for failure to state a claim as to its allegations that disparagement [17] of Vintage by Aura and Aura's purchase of Wine Consultants, Inc. constituted an antitrust violation; however, plaintiff may amend its complaint as to those claims in accordance with the directions contained in the accompanying opinion within 20 days of the date of this order.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that any state law claims which may be embodied in the plaintiff's complaint are DISMISSED without prejudice.

DATED: April 28, 1988

New York v. Cedar Park Concrete Corp.

United States District Court for the Southern District of New York

April 28, 1988, Decided ; April 28, 1988, Filed

Nos. 85 CIV 1887 (LBS), 86 CIV 8128 (LBS)

Reporter

684 F. Supp. 1229 *; 1988 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 3639 ; 1988-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P68,008

State Of New York, Plaintiff, v. Cedar Park Concrete Corp., et al., Defendants. State Of New York, Plaintiff, v. Century-Maxim Construction Corp., et al., Defendants

Core Terms

due diligence, fraudulent concealment, complaints, ignorance, statute of limitations, actual knowledge, cause of action, concealment, damages, laches, motion to dismiss, conspiracy, antitrust, bid

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > ... > Statute of Limitations > Tolling of Statute of Limitations > Fraud

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > Time Limitations

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Statute of Limitations > Tolling of Statute of Limitations > Fraudulent Concealment

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > Tolling

HN1[] Tolling of Statute of Limitations, Fraud

Section 4B of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 15b, provides that any action to enforce any cause of action under the antitrust statutes shall be forever barred unless commenced within four years after the cause of action accrued. Fraudulent concealment of a plaintiff's claims, an equitable doctrine, may be applied to toll the running of the statute of limitations in an antitrust suit if the plaintiff proves: (1) that the defendant concealed from him the existence of his cause of action, (2) that he remained in ignorance of that cause of action until some point within four years of the commencement of his action, and (3) that his continuing ignorance was not attributable to lack of diligence on his part.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Statute of Limitations > Tolling of Statute of Limitations > Fraud

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > Tolling

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > General Overview

HN2[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Clayton Act

A plaintiff may prove the concealment element necessary for tolling the statute of limitations in an antitrust action by showing either that the defendant took affirmative steps to prevent the plaintiff's discovery of his claim or that the wrong itself was of such a nature as to be self-concealing.

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > Time Limitations

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > General Overview

HN3[] Statute of Limitations, Time Limitations

The Second Circuit continues to follow the rule that the statute of limitations does not begin to run until the plaintiff either acquires actual knowledge of the facts that comprise his cause of action or should have acquired such knowledge through the exercise of reasonable diligence after being apprised of sufficient facts to put him on notice.

Civil Procedure > ... > Statute of Limitations > Tolling of Statute of Limitations > Fraudulent Concealment

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Affirmative Defenses > General Overview

HN4[] Tolling of Statute of Limitations, Fraudulent Concealment

A laches defense requires that the defendant show that the plaintiff was guilty of unreasonable delay with resulting prejudice. Although the fraudulent concealment doctrine for statute of limitations analysis requires the pleading of specific elements, there is no similar requirement to counter a laches defense against equitable relief.

Counsel: [1] Robert Abrams, Attorney General of the State of New York Attorney for Plaintiff, Lloyd Constantine, Chief, Antitrust Bureau, Alice McInerney, Assistant Attorney General, Robert L. Hubbard, Assistant Attorney General, Carol Antonacci, Assistant Attorney General of counsel.

Wilentz Goldman & Spitzer Attorneys for Cedar Park Concrete Corp. and Cedar Park Construction Corp.

Christy & Viener

Shea & Gould Attorneys for Century-Maxim Construction Corp.

Sylvor, Schneer, Gold & Morrelli, Attorneys for Nasso-S & A, A Joint Venture, and Julius Nasso Concrete Corp.

Parcher, Arisohn & Hayes Attorneys for North Berry Construction Corp. and Joseph Martinelli.

Edward J. Halloran, Pro Se.

Stillman, Friedman & Shaw, P.C. Attorneys for S & A Concrete Co., Inc., S & A Structures, Inc., A & S Structures, Inc. A & S Concrete Co. and Nicholas Auletta.

Gerald L. Shargel, Esq., Attorney for G & G Concrete Corp.

Meister, Leventhal & Slade (of counsel).

Golenbock & Barell, Attorneys for the DIC Concrete Corp., DIC Industries, Inc., Underhill Construction Corp., Underhill Industries, Inc., the DIC Concrete Corp. and Underhill Construction Corp., a joint venture, and IIJ Enterprises, Inc.

Obermaier, Morvillo & Abramowitz, P.C., [2] Attorneys for Joseph DePaola, Walter Goldstein and Frank Phelan.

Patrick M. Wall, P.C., Attorneys for Alvin O. Chattin.

Judges: Leonard B. Sand, U.S.D.J.

Opinion by: SAND

Opinion

[*1230] HONORABLE LEONARD B. SAND, U.S.D.J.

In the cases before us, the defendants previously moved to dismiss the antitrust claims brought by the State of New York under section 4 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 15, and under sections 340 and 342-b of the New York General Business Law ("Donnelly Act") for alleged participation in a continuing scheme to rig bids and to allocate shares of the market for reinforced-concrete construction work. [1] [3] In our Opinion of June 25, 1987, 665 F. Supp. 238 (S.D.N.Y. 1987), we found, inter alia, that the State of New York, as parens patriae, is a proper party to seek injunctive relief, but that it could not claim treble damages on behalf of unidentified state subdivisions. Id. at 242. We therefore dismissed those federal and state antitrust damages claims that were alleged on behalf of state subdivisions other than the identified Urban Development Corporation, without prejudice to repleading within sixty days. [2] Apart from the issues on which we [*1231] now opine, we denied all other motions by the defendants. [3]

Currently before the Court are three issues on which we reserved decision: whether portions of the complaints are barred by the applicable statutes of limitations; whether this Court has jurisdiction to impose civil penalty claims asserted under the Donnelly Act; and whether the State should be compelled to elect between seeking treble damages or civil penalties.

I. STATUTE [4] OF LIMITATIONS

Section 4B HN1[] of the Clayton Act provides that "any action to enforce any cause of action under [the antitrust statutes] shall be forever barred unless commenced within four years after the cause of action accrued." 15 U.S.C. § 15b. [4] Fraudulent concealment of a plaintiff's claims, an equitable doctrine first described in Bailey v. Glover, 88

---

[1] The amended complaint in State of New York v. Cedar Park, et al., 85 Civ. 1887, and the complaint in State of New York v. Century-Maxim Construction Corp., et al., 86 Civ. 8128, ("the complaints") are identical except for the named defendants and co-conspirators.

[2] The State of New York notified the Court and all parties that it would not assert any additional damage claims. See Letters of September 15 and September 22, 1987 from Alice McInerney, Assistant Attorney General.

[3] The other allegations by the defendants included: a) that the complaints violate Illinois Brick Co. v. Illinois, 431 U.S. 720, 52 L. Ed. 2d 707, 97 S. Ct. 2061 (1977), by failing to allege sufficiently that the State or its subdivisions directly purchased products from the defendants; b) that there had been improper use of grand jury material and unlawful disclosures between individuals in the Attorney General's office; c) and that the complaints were either insufficient or required a more definite statement as to G & G Concrete Corporation and the individual defendants. See generally 665 F. Supp. 238, 242-48.

[4] As we have not yet addressed this Court's jurisdiction to award civil penalties under New York's Donnelly Act, we do not fully discuss the statute of limitations argument under the state antitrust law. We note, however, that N.Y. Gen. Bus. L. § 340(5) has

U.S. (21 Wall.) 342, 22 L. Ed. 636 (1874), may be applied to toll the running of the statute of limitations in an antitrust suit if the plaintiff proves

> (1) that the defendant concealed from him the existence of his cause of action, (2) that he remained in ignorance of that cause of action until some point within four years of the commencement of his action, and (3) that his continuing ignorance was not attributable to lack of diligence on his part.

[5] State of New York v. Hendrickson Brothers, Inc., Amfar Asphalt Corp., et al., 840 F.2d 1065, 1083 (2d Cir. 1988). See also City of Detroit v. Grinnell Corporation, 495 F.2d 448, 461 (2d Cir. 1974) ("Grinnell").

The complaints in the instant actions, 85 Civ. 1887 (Cedar Park) and 86 Civ. 8128 (Century Maxim), were filed on March 20, 1985 [5] and on October 22, 1986 respectively, seeking injunctive relief, damages and penalties for actions occurring from 1978 and continuing through the time of the filing. The defendants assert that portions of the plaintiff's damages and penalties claims are barred by the applicable statutes of limitations since the relevant period described in the complaints exceeds the federal four-year statute and the state three-year limit, and that laches bars the equitable claims. Further, the defendants argue, fraudulent concealment cannot be applied in this situation to toll the statutes because the plaintiff has not sufficiently alleged the doctrine's required three elements.

We reserved [6] decision on this argument because it appeared that the critical legal issues were under consideration by the Second Circuit in the appeal from State of New York v. Amfar Asphalt Corp., 1987-1 Trade Cases (CCH) para. 67,417 (E.D.N.Y. 1986). In State of New York v. Hendrickson Brothers, Inc., Amfar Asphalt Corp., et al. ("Hendrickson"), supra, the Second Circuit was asked to determine, inter alia, whether the defendants were entitled to either a judgment notwithstanding the verdict or to a new trial on the grounds that the State's claims of conspiracy to obtain highway construction contracts and to fix [*1232] prices were barred by the statute of limitations.

The Second Circuit noted that HN2[] "the plaintiff may prove the concealment element by showing either that the defendant took affirmative steps to prevent the plaintiff's discovery of his claim . . . or that the wrong itself was of such a nature as to be self-concealing." Id. at 1083 (emphasis added). In affirming the judgment below, the Second Circuit found that the record adequately established fraudulent concealment because a bid-rigging conspiracy is inherently self-concealing and because there was sufficient evidence of [7] affirmative acts of concealment. See id. at 1083-84.

We note that our determination, unlike that in Hendrickson, is in the context of motions to dismiss so that we look only to the allegations contained within the four corners of the complaint. We find, therefore, that the plaintiff State of New York has sufficiently alleged the first prong of fraudulent concealment by alleging a bid-rigging conspiracy. Under Hendrickson, to meet this first element, there is no need at this point to look additionally for the pleading of affirmative actions taken by the defendant to prevent the plaintiff's discovery of its claim. See id.

The second and third elements of the doctrine relate to whether the plaintiff had sufficient information to commence an action at an earlier point. The defendants claim that the State's assertion of ignorance of the information necessary to bring an action is negated by its formal investigation, commenced in July 1982, and its issuing of subpoenas over four years before bringing suit. Letter of March 17, 1988 from Ronald W. Meister, Esq. at 2 ("Meister Letter"). Therefore, the defendants assert, the four-year statute of limitations bars the federal [8] damages claims against the Century-Maxim defendants, and the three-year statute bars the state law civil penalties claims against all the defendants.

The State cites cases related to this litigation to support its contention that it exercised the requisite due diligence by attempting to investigate the industry's practices, but that its efforts were impeded by actions by these defendants the same four-year statute of limitations as described in 15 U.S.C. § 15(b) and that N.Y. G. Bus. L. § 342-a requires that an "action . . . be brought within three years after the commission of the act upon which it is based."

---

[5] The State of New York filed an amended complaint in Cedar Park on October 22, 1986, the same day it filed the complaint in Century Maxim.

and others. See Memorandum of Law of the State of New York Concerning the Applicability of New York v. Hendrickson Bros. at 7. See, e.g., Big Apple Concrete Corp. v. Abrams, 103 A.D.2d 609, 481 N.Y.S.2d 335 (1st Dept. 1984) (Appellate Division reversed the quashing of subpoenas issued pursuant to antitrust investigation of ready-mix concrete industry).

Although the pleading of a defendant's affirmative acts of concealment are not required under Hendrickson to meet the first prong of the doctrine in a case of an alleged bid-rigging scheme, such pleading may be necessary to sufficiently allege the second and third elements, i.e., plaintiff's ignorance and due diligence. Paragraphs 45-48 of the complaints describe the State's attempts at due diligence and the defendants' alleged affirmative [9] acts to conceal the wrong. The State pleads that it demonstrated due diligence to discover its already-existing claims by commencing an investigation into the industry on July 27, 1982, and to prevent the future occurrence of fraud in contracts for reinforced concrete construction work by using a "sealed bid system, apprising each bidder of its non-collusion policy and requiring an affirmative non-collusion declaration from each bidder." Complaints para. 45. The State alleges further that the defendants violated this system by filing false statements certifying that the bid proposals were determined "without consultation or collusion with any competitor." Complaints para. 47(a).

HN3[] The Second Circuit continues to follow the rule it first adopted in Grinnell, 495 F.2d at 461, that the statute of limitations does not begin to run until "the plaintiff either acquires actual knowledge of the facts that comprise his cause of action or should have acquired such knowledge through the exercise of reasonable diligence after being apprised of sufficient facts to put him on notice." See, e.g., Cerbone v. ILGWU, 768 F.2d 45, 48 (2d Cir. 1985). The defendants urge us to employ the interpretation [10] of some courts, that [*1233] "suspicion is equated with actual knowledge," in determining whether the requisite due diligence has been utilized in such situations. Meister Letter at 2, citing Donahue v. Pendleton Woolen Mills, Inc., 633 F. Supp. 1423, 1443 (S.D.N.Y. 1986). [6]

[11] For the reasons stated below, we find that the State has not adequately pleaded the second and third prongs of the fraudulent concealment doctrine, i.e. plaintiff's ignorance and due diligence. The State has pleaded its ignorance about its claims as follows:

> Despite the exercise of due diligence plaintiff was unaware of, did not discover, and in the exercise of due diligence could not have discovered the facts underlying the claims set forth until well after an investigation into the concrete industry . . . was commenced by the State of New York on July 27, 1982.

Complaints para. 45. The plaintiff has cited its investigation and the measures it adopted to prevent collusive bids to demonstrate its due diligence. Id. Although the prevailing law in this circuit under Grinnell does not define "actual knowledge" to encompass suspicion, we note that the Second Circuit in Hendrickson found no error in the lower court's jury instruction that "the State had not met its burden if it had a suspicion of collusive bidding on a single contract or any other information that should have alerted it to its claim of an overall conspiracy." Hendrickson, 840 F.2d at 1085.

We cannot [12] accept the State's general assertions of its ignorance and due diligence without more specific explanation about its delay in bringing suit. Nowhere in either the Cedar Park amended complaint or in the Century

---

[6] In noting that "facts that should arouse suspicion . . . are equated with actual knowledge of the claim," 633 F. Supp. at 1443, Judge Ward cited Dayco Corp. v. Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co., 523 F.2d 389, 394 (6th Cir. 1975). In Dayco, a case in which a corporation brought an antitrust action against the competitor to which it had sold one of its divisions, the Sixth Circuit affirmed the district court's finding that the plaintiff's assertions of due diligence were insufficient. The Dayco court held that the plaintiff's suspicions should have been aroused by congressional proceedings that had been conducted more than ten years before it brought its suit, "and that its failure to investigate further at that time was not the exercise of due diligence required . . . to employ the fraudulent concealment doctrine . . . ." Dayco, 523 F.2d at 394.

Similarly, in Donahue, where defendant's former employees alleged that the defendant corporation had resumed a resale price maintenance agreement, the court found that the plaintiffs had not adequately alleged fraudulent concealment because "neither the complaint nor the proposed amended complaint contain[ed] specific allegations of acts by defendant to conceal the antitrust violation . . . ." Donahue, 633 F. Supp. at 1443.

Maxim complaint, both filed in October 1986, does the State assert more specifically when it acquired the "actual knowledge" of its causes of action against either the various defendants individually, or even as between the two sets of defendants. Describing the time of "actual knowledge" as being "well after" the commencement of an investigation is too general to meet the requirements of pleading fraudulent concealment. While the alleged affirmative acts of filing false documents may be some indication of the State's ignorance of its causes of action, we find that they alone do not explain the State's delay in initially filing suit almost three years after starting its investigation. More specific information is required as to the difficulties, if any, with the progression of the investigation to more clearly allege the State's due diligence between 1982 and 1985. Plaintiff's brief citation in its Memorandum of Law to the state court litigation history of this case [13] may be more properly set forth in its complaint. Moreover, plaintiff should allege with more specificity when, despite these obstacles, it acquired "actual knowledge."

Accordingly, we grant the defendants' motions to dismiss the portions of the complaints that seek damages and penalties for claims that arose after the applicable statutes of limitation had run, without prejudice to plaintiff's repleading the fraudulent concealment sections within sixty days.

II. LACHES

HN4[] The laches defense requires that the defendant show that the plaintiff was guilty of unreasonable delay with resulting [*1234] prejudice. Gardner v. Panama Railroad, 342 U.S. 29, 31, 96 L. Ed. 31, 72 S. Ct. 12 (1951) (per curiam); Russell v. Todd, 309 U.S. 280, 287, 84 L. Ed. 754, 60 S. Ct. 527 (1940); Larios v. Victory Carriers, Inc., 316 F.2d 63, 66-67 (2d Cir. 1963). Although the fraudulent concealment doctrine requires the pleading of specific elements, there is no similar requirement to counter the laches defense against equitable relief. Therefore, we find that, in the context of a motion to dismiss, the State's delay in bringing these suits was not unreasonable in view of its investigation into the industry and of the allegations that the defendants affirmatively [14] acted to conceal their conspiracy by filing false documents. We hereby deny the defendants' motions to dismiss the equitable claims on the grounds of laches.

III. JURISDICTION UNDER THE DONNELLY ACT AND THE ELECTION BETWEEN REMEDIES

We decline to decide these issues at this point of the litigation in view of our previous finding that the state law claims require no discovery or proceedings which differ from those for the federal claims and in light of our current decision on the statute of limitations issue.

IV. CONCLUSION

We grant the motions to dismiss, without prejudice to repleading the fraudulent concealment sections, within sixty (60) days, as to those portions of the complaint seeking damages and penalties for claims arising after the applicable statutes of limitations had run. We deny the motions to dismiss the claims for injunctive relief on the grounds of laches. We reserve decision on the Donnelly Act and election of remedies issues as indicated.

SO ORDERED.

Dated: April 28, 1988 New York, New York

Business Electronics Corp. v. Sharp Electronics Corp.

Supreme Court of the United States

January 19, 1988, Argued ; May 2, 1988, Decided

No. 85-1910

Reporter

485 U.S. 717 *; 108 S. Ct. 1515 ; 99 L. Ed. 2d 808 ; 1988 U.S. LEXIS 2033 *; 56 U.S.L.W. 4387; 1988-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P67,982

BUSINESS ELECTRONICS CORP. v. SHARP ELECTRONICS CORP.

Prior History: [1] CERTIORARI TO THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE FIFTH CIRCUIT.

Disposition: 780 F.2d 1212, affirmed.

Core Terms

dealer, manufacturer, vertical, terminate, retailers, nonprice, prices, restraint of trade, price cutting, price competition, illegality, Sherman Act, antitrust, horizontal, cases, Electronics, common law, ancillary, naked, cartel, retail price, price level, anticompetitive, per se rule, ultimatum, exclusive territory, resale price, intrabrand, products, franchise agreement

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

International Trade Law > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Higher Education & Professional Associations > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Higher Education & Professional Associations > Colleges & Universities

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

HN1[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Section 1 of the Sherman Act provides that every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, is declared to be illegal . 15 U.S.C.S. § 1.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

HN2[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

Whether particular concerted action violates § 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, is determined through case-by-case application of the so-called rule of reason -- that is, the factfinder weighs all of the circumstances of a case in deciding whether a restrictive practice should be prohibited as imposing an unreasonable restraint on competition.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

HN3[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

Certain categories of agreements have been held to be per se illegal, dispensing with the need for case-by-case evaluation.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

HN4[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

Per se rules are appropriate only for conduct that is manifestly anticompetitive, that is, conduct that would always or almost always tend to restrict competition and decrease output.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

HN5[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

Per se rules are invoked when surrounding circumstances make the likelihood of anticompetitive conduct so great as to render unjustified further examination of the challenged conduct.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

HN6[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

Agreements are per se illegal only if their nature and necessary effect are so plainly anticompetitive that no elaborate study of the industry is needed to establish their illegality.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

HN7[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

The premises of GTE Sylvania and Monsanto are: that there is a presumption in favor of a rule-of-reason standard; that departure from that standard must be justified by demonstrable economic effect, such as the facilitation of cartelizing, rather than formalistic distinctions; that interbrand competition is the primary concern of the antitrust laws; and that rules in this area should be formulated with a view towards protecting the doctrine of GTE Sylvania.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Cartels & Horizontal Restraints > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Cartels & Horizontal Restraints > Price Fixing

HN8[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Vertical Restraints

The notion of equivalence between the scope of horizontal per se illegality and that of vertical per se illegality was explicitly rejected in GTE Sylvania, as it had to be, since a horizontal agreement to divide territories is per se illegal, while GTE Sylvania held that a vertical agreement to do so is not.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > General Overview

HN9[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Vertical Restraints

A vertical restraint is not illegal per se unless it includes some agreement on price or price levels.

Lawyers' Edition Display

Decision

Agreement between manufacturer and dealer to terminate another dealer for price cutting held not per se illegal under 1 of Sherman Act (15 USCS 1) absent agreement on price or price levels.

Summary

A manufacturer of electronic calculators appointed a retailer as its sole dealer in a metropolitan area, but subsequently became dissatisfied with that dealer's performance and appointed a second dealer. Neither dealer was obligated to adhere to the manufacturer's suggested retail price list, but the second dealer usually did so, while the first dealer commonly sold the calculators for below list price. The second dealer, allegedly concerned about the first dealer's "free riding" on the second dealer's investment in product promotion and educational services as well as about the price cutting, demanded that the manufacturer terminate the first dealer and threatened to terminate its own dealership if this were not done. The manufacturer terminated the first dealer, who then brought suit against the manufacturer in the United States District Court for the Southern District of Texas, in which action it was alleged (1) that the manufacturer and the second dealer had conspired to terminate the first dealer, and (2) that such conspiracy was illegal per se under 1 of the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1). The District Court instructed the jury that an agreement to terminate a dealer because of its price cutting unreasonably restrains trade and cannot be justified for any reason, and the jury, having found that there was such an agreement in this case, rendered judgment in favor of the first dealer. In reversing that judgment and remanding the case for further proceedings, the United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit held that the District Court's jury instructions were erroneous, because in order for a vertical agreement between a manufacturer and a dealer terminating another dealer to be illegal per se under

1, the agreeing dealer must expressly or impliedly agree to set its prices at some level, though not a specific one (780 F2d 1212).

On certiorari, the United States Supreme Court affirmed. In an opinion by Scalia, J., joined by Rehnquist, Ch. J., and Brennan, Marshall, Blackmun, and O'Connor, JJ., it was held (1) that a vertical restraint of trade is not illegal per se under 1 unless it includes some agreement on price or price levels, and specifically (2) that an agreement between a manufacturer and one of its dealers to terminate another dealer because of that dealer's price cutting, as in the present case, is not per se illegal unless the first dealer expressly or impliedly agrees to set its prices at some level.

Stevens, J., joined by White, J., dissented, expressing the view that the agreement between the manufacturer and the second dealer was a naked agreement to restrain the trade of a third party, with the goal of eliminating price competition at the dealer level, and as such was illegal per se under 1.

Kennedy, J., did not participate.

Headnotes

PRACTICES §9 > per se rule -- vertical nonprice restraints -- termination of dealership -- > Headnote:
LEdHN[1A][] [1A]LEdHN[1B][] [1B]LEdHN[1C][] [1C]LEdHN[1D][] [1D]LEdHN[1E][] [1E]LEdHN[1F][] [1F]LEdHN[1G][] [1G]

A vertical restraint of trade--that is, a restraint imposed by agreement between firms at different levels of distribution--is not illegal per se under 1 of the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1) unless it includes some agreement on price and price levels; thus, an agreement between a manufacturer and one of its dealers to terminate another dealer because of the latter's price cutting is not per se illegal unless the first dealer expressly or impliedly agrees to set its prices at some level, and a Federal District Court errs in instructing the jury in such a case that such an agreement is necessarily illegal if the manufacturer's purpose is to eliminate the price cutting, where there has been no showing that an agreement between a manufacturer and a dealer to terminate a price cutter, without a further agreement on the price or price levels to be charged by the remaining dealer, almost always tends to restrict competition and reduce output; fear of the remaining dealer's possible assertion of dominant retail power cannot justify adopting a rule of per se illegality, given that such power is rare and was not found to exist in this case; nor can such a rule be justified as a prophylactic measure on the theory that vertical price agreements generally underlie agreements to terminate a price cutter, as this proposition has not been supported in the present case and is incompatible with the recognition, in previous decisions, that manufacturers are often motivated by a desire to have dealers provide services and that price cutting is frequently made possible by "free riding" on the services provided by other dealers. (Stevens and White, JJ., dissented from this holding.)

PRACTICES §16 > rule of reason -- > Headnote:
LEdHN[2A][] [2A]LEdHN[2B][] [2B]

Ordinarily, whether particular concerted action violates 1 of the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1) is determined through case-by-case application of the so-called rule of reason--that is, the factfinder weighs all of the circumstances of a case in deciding whether a restrictive practice should be prohibited as imposing an unreasonable restraint on competition; there is a presumption in favor of this rule-of-reason standard, and any departure from this standard must be justified by demonstrable economic effect, such as the facilitation of cartelizing, rather than by formalistic distinctions.

PRACTICES §36 > vertical price restraints -- > Headnote:
LEdHN[3][] [3]

Vertical agreements on retail prices are illegal per se under 1 of the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1).

PRACTICES §6 > purpose of antitrust laws -- > Headnote:
LEdHN[4][] [4]

Interbrand competition is the primary concern of the antitrust laws.

EVIDENCE §383 > presumption -- retail market power -- > Headnote:
LEdHN[5A][] [5A]LEdHN[5B][] [5B]

For purposes of applying the federal antitrust laws, retail market power should not be assumed but rather must be proved.

PRACTICES §9 > ancillary agreement -- > Headnote:
LEdHN[6A][] [6A]LEdHN[6B][] [6B]

An agreement may be "ancillary," for purposes of determining whether it violates the federal antitrust laws, even though it is not designed to enforce a contractual obligation of one of the parties to the contract.

PRACTICES §9 > horizontal restraints -- > Headnote:
LEdHN[7A][] [7A]LEdHN[7B][] [7B]

For purposes of determining whether a restraint of trade violates the federal antitrust laws, a restraint is horizontal if it is imposed by agreement among competitors; a restraint is horizontal not because it has horizontal effects, but because it is the product of a horizontal agreement.

PRACTICES §4 > statutory phrases -- "restraint of trade" -- relation to common law -- > Headnote:
LEdHN[8][] [8]

The term "restraint of trade" in 1 of the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1), like the term at common law, refers not to a particular list of agreements but to a particular economic consequence, which may be produced by quite different sorts of agreements in varying times and circumstances; thus, common-law precedent as to what constituted "restraint of trade" at the time the Sherman Act was adopted is not dispositive of the present-day application of the Act; however, in determining whether an agreement between a manufacturer and a dealer whereby the former terminates another dealer for price cutting is illegal per se under 1 of the Sherman Act, it is relevant (1) whether the common law of restraint of trade ever prohibited such an agreement as illegal per se and (2) whether the United States Supreme Court's decisions under 1 have ever expressed or necessarily implied such a prohibition, since the common law--both in general and as embodied in the Sherman Act--does not lightly assume that the economic realities underlying earlier decisions have changed or that earlier judicial perceptions of those realities were in error.

PRACTICES §31 > resale price control rule -- application to dealer termination -- > Headnote:
LEdHN[9][] [9]

The rule that a resale price maintenance agreement is per se illegal under 1 of the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1), which is based on the common-law judgment that such a resale restriction is an unlawful restraint on alienation, is not applicable to a case considering whether an agreement between a manufacturer and a dealer whereby the manufacturer terminates another dealer for price cutting is illegal per se under 1 where no agreement on resale price or price level, and hence no restraint on alienation, was found by the jury and the common-law rationale thus does not apply.

PRACTICES §9 > per se rule -- vertical and horizontal restraints -- > Headnote:
LEdHN[10][] [10]

Under 1 of the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1), the scope of per se illegality of horizontal restraints of trade is not equivalent to the scope of per se illegality of vertical restraints of trade.

PRACTICES §53 > agreements not to compete -- market territories -- > Headnote:
LEdHN[11][] [11]

A horizontal agreement to divide territories is per se illegal under 1 of the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1).

Syllabus

Petitioner and another retailer (Hartwell) were authorized by respondent manufacturer to sell its electronic calculators in the Houston area. In response to Hartwell's complaints about petitioner's prices, respondent terminated petitioner's dealership. Petitioner brought suit in Federal District Court, alleging that respondent and Hartwell had conspired to terminate petitioner and that such conspiracy was illegal per se under § 1 of the Sherman Act. The court submitted a liability interrogatory to the jury asking whether there was an agreement or understanding between respondent and Hartwell to terminate petitioner's dealership because of its price cutting, and instructed the jury that the Sherman Act is violated [*2] when a seller enters into such an agreement or understanding with one of its dealers. The jury answered the interrogatory affirmatively, awarding damages, and the court entered judgment for petitioner for treble damages. The Court of Appeals reversed and remanded for a new trial, holding that, to render illegal per se a vertical agreement between a manufacturer and a dealer to terminate a second dealer, the first dealer must expressly or impliedly agree to set its prices at some level.

Held: A vertical restraint of trade is not per se illegal under § 1 of the Sherman Act unless it includes some agreement on price or price levels. Pp. 723-736.

(a) Ordinarily, whether particular concerted action violates § 1 is determined through case-by-case application of the rule of reason. Per se rules are appropriate only for conduct that is manifestly anticompetitive. Although vertical agreements on resale prices are illegal per se, extension of that treatment to other vertical restraints must be based on demonstrable economic effect rather than upon formalistic line drawing. Continental T. V., Inc. v. GTE Sylvania Inc., 433 U.S. 36, which held that [*3] vertical nonprice restraints are not per se illegal, recognized that such restraints have real potential to stimulate interbrand competition; that a rule of per se illegality for such restraints is not needed or effective to protect intrabrand competition; and that such restraints do not significantly facilitate cartelizing. There has been no showing here that different characteristics attend an agreement between a manufacturer and a dealer to terminate a "price cutter," without a further agreement on the price or price levels to be charged by the remaining dealer. A quite plausible purpose of the vertical restriction here was to enable Hartwell to provide better services under its sales franchise agreement with respondent. There is also no merit to petitioner's contention that an agreement on the remaining dealer's price or price levels will so often follow from terminating another dealer because of its price cutting that prophylaxis against resale price maintenance warrants the District Court's per se rule. Pp. 723-731.

(b) The term "restraint of trade" in the Sherman Act, like the term at common law before the statute was adopted, refers not to a particular list [*4] of agreements, but to a particular economic consequence, which may be produced by quite different sorts of agreements in varying times and circumstances. Moreover, this Court's precedents do not indicate that the pre-Sherman Act common law prohibited as illegal per se an agreement of the sort made here. Nor is the District Court's rule of per se illegality compelled by precedents under the Sherman Act holding certain horizontal agreements to constitute price fixing and thus to be per se illegal even though they did not set prices or price levels. The notion of equivalence between the scope of horizontal per se illegality and that of vertical per se illegality was explicitly rejected in GTE Sylvania. Finally, earlier vertical price-fixing cases are consistent with the proposition that vertical per se illegality requires an agreement setting a price or a price level. Pp. 731-735.

Counsel: Gary V. McGowan argued the cause and filed briefs for petitioner.

Harold R. Tyler, Jr. argued the cause for respondent. With him on the brief was Lance Gotthoffer. [*]

---

[*] Briefs of amici curiae urging reversal were filed for Forty-two States by J. Joseph Curran, Jr., Attorney General of Maryland, and Michael F. Brockmeyer and Craig J. Hornig, Assistant Attorneys General, by Anthony J. Celebrezze, Jr., Attorney General of Ohio, and Gregory E. Young and Matthew C. Lawry, Assistant Attorneys General, by Don Siegelman, Attorney General of Alabama, and James Prude, Assistant Attorney General, by Grace Berg Schaible, Attorney General of Alaska, and Richard D. Monkman, Assistant Attorney General, by Robert K. Corbin, Attorney General of Arizona, and Alison B. Swan, Assistant Attorney General, by John Steven Clark, Attorney General of Arkansas, and Jeffrey A. Bell, Deputy Attorney General, by Duane Woodard, Attorney General of Colorado, Thomas P. McMahon, First Assistant Attorney General, and David S. Harmon and James R. Lewis, Assistant Attorneys General, by Joseph Lieberman, Attorney General of Connecticut, and Robert M. Langer, Assistant Attorney General, by Robert A. Butterworth, Attorney General of Florida, by James T. Jones, Attorney General of Idaho, by Neil F. Hartigan, Attorney General of Illinois, and Robert E. Davy, Jr., Assistant Attorney General, by Linley E. Pearson, Attorney General of Indiana, and Frank A. Baldwin, Deputy Attorney General, by Thomas J. Miller, Attorney General of Iowa, and John R. Perkins, Deputy Attorney General, by Robert T. Stephan, Attorney General of Kansas, and Carl M. Anderson, Assistant Attorney General, by DAvid L. Armstrong, Attorney General of Kentucky, by William J. Guste, Jr., Attorney General of Louisiana, by James M. Shannon, Attorney General of Massachusetts, and Barbara Anthony, Assistant Attorney General, by Frank J. Kelley, Attorney General of Michigan, Louis J. Caruso, Solicitor General, and Frederick H. Hoffecker and Robert C. Ward, Assistant Attorneys General, by Hubert H. Humphrey III, Attorney General of Minnesota, by Edwin L. Pittman, Attorney General of Mississippi, and Robert E. Sanders, Special Assistant Attorney General, by William L. Webster, Attorney General of Missouri, by Mike Greely, Attorney General of Montana, and Joe Roberts, Assistant Attorney General, by Robert M. Spire, Attorney General of Nebraska, and Dale A. Comer, Assistant Attorney General, by Brian McKay, Attorney General of Nevada, and P. Gregory Giordano, Deputy Attorney General, by Stephen E. Merrill, Attorney General of New Hampshire, and Amy L. Ignatius, Senior Assistant Attorney General, by W. Cary Edwards, Attorney General of New Jersey, and Laurel A. Price, Deputy Attorney General, by Robert Abrams, Attorney General of New York, O. Peter Sherwood, Solicitor General, and Lloyd E.

[5]

Judges: SCALIA, J., delivered the opinion of the Court, in which REHNQUIST, C. J., and BRENNAN, MARSHALL, BLACKMUN, and O'CONNOR, JJ., joined. STEVENS, J., filed a dissenting opinion, in which WHITE, J., joined, post, p. 736. KENNEDY, J., took no part in the consideration or decision of the case.

Opinion by: SCALIA

Opinion

[*814] [*719] [1517] JUSTICE SCALIA delivered the opinion of the Court.

LEdHN[1A][] [1A]Petitioner Business Electronics Corporation seeks review of a decision of the United States Court of Appeals for the [*720] Fifth Circuit holding that a vertical restraint is per se illegal under § 1 of the Sherman Act, 26 Stat. 209, as amended, 15 U. S. C. § 1, only if there is an express or implied agreement to set resale prices at some level. 780 F.2d 1212, 1215-1218 (1986). We granted certiorari, 482 U.S. 912 (1987), to resolve a conflict in the Courts of Appeals regarding the proper dividing line between the rule that vertical price restraints are illegal per se and the rule that vertical nonprice restraints are to be judged under the [*6] rule of reason. [1]

[*721] I

In 1968, petitioner became the exclusive retailer in the Houston, Texas, area of electronic calculators manufactured by respondent Sharp Electronics Corporation. In 1972, respondent appointed Gilbert Hartwell as a second retailer in the Houston [1518] area. During the relevant period, [*7] electronic calculators were primarily sold to business customers for prices up to $ 1,000. While much of the evidence in this case was conflicting -- in particular, concerning whether petitioner was "free riding" on Hartwell's provision of presale educational and promotional services by providing inadequate services itself -- a few facts are undisputed. Respondent published a list of suggested minimum retail prices, but its written dealership agreements with petitioner and Hartwell did not obligate either to observe them, or to charge any other specific price. Petitioner's [815] retail prices were often below

---

Constantine, Assistant Attorney General, by Leroy S. Zimmerman, Attorney General of Pennsylvania, and Eugene F. Waye, Deputy Attorney General, by James E. O'Neil, Attorney General of Rhode Island, by Roger A. Tellinghuisen, Attorney General of South Dakota, and Jeffrey P. Hallem, Assistant Attorney General, by W. J. Michael Cody, Attorney General of Tennessee, and Perry A. Craft, Deputy Attorney General, by Jim Mattox, Attorney General of Texas, Mary F. Keller, Executive Assistant Attorney General, and J. L. Covington and Allene D. Evans, Assistant Attorneys General, by David L. Wilkinson, Attorney General of Utah, and Rihard M. Hagstrom, Assistant Attorney General, by Jeffrey L. Amestoy, Attorney General of Vermont, and Glenn A. Jarrett, Assistant Attorney General, by Mary Sue Terry, Attorney General of Virginia, and Allen L. Jackson, Assistant Attorney General, by Kenneth O. Eikenberry, Attorney General of Washington, and John R. Ellis, Deputy Attorney General, by Charles G. Brown, Attorney General of West Virginia, C. William Ullrich, First Deputy Attorney General, and Mark D. Kindt, Deputy Attorney General, by Donald J. Hanaway, Attorney General of Wisconsin, and Kevin J. O'Connor, Assistant Attorney General, and by Joseph B. Meyer, Attorney General of Wyoming; for K mart Corporation by Robert W. Steele, Robert E. Hebda, and James C. Tuttle; and for the National Mass Retailing Institute by William D. Coston and Robert J. Verdisco.

Briefs of amici curiae urging affimance were filed for the Consumer Electronics Group of the Electronic Industries Association by Gary J. Shapiro; for the National Association of Manufacturers by Jan S. Amundson, Quentin Riegel, and Donald I. Baker; and for the National Office Machine Dealers Association by Samuel Schoenberg.

[1] The Seventh, Eighth, and Tenth Circuits have agreed with the analysis of the Fifth. See Morrison v. Murray Biscuit Co., 797 F.2d 1430, 1440 (CA7 1986); McCabe's Furniture, Inc. v. La-Z-Boy Chair Co., 798 F.2d 323, 329 (CA8 1986), cert. pending, No. 86-1101; Westman Comm'n Co. v. Hobart Int'l, Inc., 796 F.2d 1216, 1223-1224 (CA10 1986), cert. pending, No. 86-484. Decisions of the Third and Ninth Circuits have disagreed. See Cernuto, Inc. v. United Cabinet Corp., 595 F.2d 164, 168-170 (CA3 1979); Zidell Explorations, Inc. v. Conval Int'l, Ltd., 719 F.2d 1465, 1469-1470 (CA9 1983).

respondent's suggested retail prices and generally below Hartwell's retail prices, even though Hartwell too sometimes priced below respondent's suggested retail prices. Hartwell complained to respondent on a number of occasions about petitioner's prices. In June 1973, Hartwell gave respondent the ultimatum that Hartwell would terminate his dealership unless respondent ended its relationship with petitioner within 30 days. Respondent terminated petitioner's dealership in July 1973.

Petitioner brought suit in the United States District Court for the Southern District [*8] of Texas, alleging that respondent and Hartwell had conspired to terminate petitioner and that such conspiracy was illegal per se under § 1 of the Sherman Act. The case was tried to a jury. The District Court submitted a liability interrogatory to the jury that asked whether "there was an agreement or understanding between Sharp Electronics Corporation and Hartwell to terminate Business Electronics as a Sharp dealer because of Business Electronics' price cutting." Record, Doc. No. 241. The District Court instructed the jury at length about this question:

[*722] "The Sherman Act is violated when a seller enters into an agreement or understanding with one of its dealers to terminate another dealer because of the other dealer's price cutting. Plaintiff contends that Sharp terminated Business Electronics in furtherance of Hartwell's desire to eliminate Business Electronics as a price-cutting rival.

"If you find that there was an agreement between Sharp and Hartwell to terminate Business Electronics because of Business Electronics' price cutting, you should answer yes to Question Number 1.

. . . .

"A combination, agreement or understanding to terminate a dealer because [*9] of his price cutting unreasonably restrains trade and cannot be justified for any reason. Therefore, even though the combination, agreement or understanding may have been formed or engaged in . . . to eliminate any alleged evils of price cutting, it is still unlawful. . . .

"If a dealer demands that a manufacturer terminate a price cutting dealer, and the manufacturer agrees to do so, the agreement is illegal if the manufacturer's purpose is to eliminate the price cutting." App. 18-19.

The jury answered Question 1 affirmatively and awarded $ 600,000 in damages. The District Court rejected respondent's motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict or a new trial, holding that the jury interrogatory and instructions had properly stated the law. It entered judgment for petitioner for treble damages plus attorney's fees.

The Fifth Circuit reversed, holding that the jury interrogatory and instructions were erroneous, and remanded for a new trial. It held that, to render illegal per se a vertical agreement between a manufacturer and a dealer to terminate a second dealer, the first dealer "must expressly or impliedly agree to set its prices at some level, though not a [816] [*10] specific one. [*723] The distributor cannot retain complete freedom to set whatever price it chooses." 780 F.2d, at 1218.

[1519] II

A

LEdHN[2A][] [2A]Section 1 of the Sherman Act HN1[] provides that "every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, is declared to be illegal." 15 U. S. C. § 1. Since the earliest decisions of this Court interpreting this provision, we have recognized that it was intended to prohibit only unreasonable restraints of trade. National Collegiate Athletic Assn. v. Board of Regents of University of Oklahoma, 468 U.S. 85, 98 (1984); see, e. g., Standard Oil Co. v. United States, 221 U.S. 1, 60 (1911). HN2[] Ordinarily, whether particular concerted action violates § 1 of the Sherman Act is determined through case-by-case [*11] application of the so-called rule of reason -- that is, "the factfinder weighs all of the circumstances of a case in deciding whether a restrictive practice should be prohibited as imposing an unreasonable restraint on competition." Continental T. V., Inc. v. GTE Sylvania Inc., 433 U.S. 36, 49 (1977). HN3[] Certain categories of agreements, however, have been held to be per se illegal, dispensing with the need for case-by-case evaluation. We have said HN4[] that per se rules are appropriate only for "conduct that is manifestly anticompetitive," id., at 50, that is, conduct "'that would always or almost always tend to restrict competition and decrease output,'" Northwest Wholesale Stationers, Inc. v. Pacific Stationery & Printing Co., 472 U.S. 284, 289-290 (1985), quoting Broadcast Music, Inc. v. Columbia Broadcasting System, Inc., 441 U.S. 1, 19-20 (1979). See also FTC v. Indiana Federation of Dentists, 476 U.S. 447, 458-459 (1986) [*12] ("We have been slow . . . to extend per se analysis to restraints imposed in the context of business relationships where the economic impact of certain practices is not immediately obvious"); *National Collegiate [724] Athletic Assn. v. Board of Regents of University of Oklahoma, supra, at 103-104 ("HN5[] Per se rules are invoked when surrounding circumstances make the likelihood of anticompetitive conduct so great as to render unjustified further examination of the challenged conduct"); National Society of Professional Engineers v. United States, 435 U.S. 679, 692 (1978) (HN6[] agreements are per se illegal only if their "nature and necessary effect are so plainly anticompetitive that no elaborate study of the industry is needed to establish their illegality").

LEdHN[3][] [3]Although vertical agreements on resale prices have been illegal per se since *Dr. Miles Medical Co [13] . v. John D. Park & Sons Co., 220 U.S. 373 (1911), we have recognized that the scope of per se illegality should be narrow in the context of vertical restraints. In Continental T. V., Inc. v. GTE Sylvania Inc., supra, we refused to extend per se illegality to vertical nonprice restraints, specifically to a manufacturer's termination of one dealer pursuant to an exclusive territory agreement with [817] another. We noted that especially in the vertical restraint context "departure from the rule-of-reason standard must be based on demonstrable economic effect rather than . . . upon formalistic line drawing." Id., at 58-59. We concluded that vertical nonprice restraints had not been shown to have such a "'pernicious effect on competition'" and to be so "'lacking [in] . . . redeeming value'" as to justify per se illegality. Id., at 58, quoting Northern Pacific R. Co. v. United States, 356 U.S. 1, 5 (1958). Rather, we found, they had real potential to stimulate interbrand competition, "the primary concern of antitrust law," 433 U.S., at 52, n. 19:

[1520] [*14] "New manufacturers and manufacturers entering new markets can use the restrictions in order to induce competent and aggressive retailers to make the kind of investment of capital and labor that is often required in the distribution of products unknown to the consumer. Established manufacturers can use them to induce retailers [*725] to engage in promotional activities or to provide service and repair facilities necessary to the efficient marketing of their products. Service and repair are vital for many products. . . . The availability and quality of such services affect a manufacturer's goodwill and the competitiveness of his product. Because of market imperfections such as the so-called 'free-rider' effect, these services might not be provided by retailers in a purely competitive situation, despite the fact that each retailer's benefit would be greater if all provided the services than if none did." Id., at 55.

Moreover, we observed that a rule of per se illegality for vertical nonprice restraints was not needed or effective to protect *intra*brand competition. First, so long as interbrand competition existed, that would provide a "significant check" [*15] on any attempt to exploit intrabrand market power. Id., at 52, n. 19; see also id., at 54. In fact, in order to meet that interbrand competition, a manufacturer's dominant incentive is to lower resale prices. Id., at 56, and n. 24. Second, the per se illegality of vertical restraints would create a perverse incentive for manufacturers to integrate vertically into distribution, an outcome hardly conducive to fostering the creation and maintenance of small businesses. Id., at 57, n. 26.

Finally, our opinion in GTE Sylvania noted a significant distinction between vertical nonprice and vertical price restraints. That is, there was support for the proposition that vertical price restraints reduce *inter*brand price competition because they "'facilitate cartelizing.'" Id., at 51, n. 18, quoting Posner, Antitrust Policy and the Supreme Court: An Analysis of the Restricted Distribution, Horizontal Merger and Potential Competition Decisions, 75 Colum. L. Rev. 282, 294 (1975). The authorities cited by the Court suggested how vertical price agreements might assist horizontal [*16] price fixing at the manufacturer level (by reducing the manufacturer's incentive to cheat on a cartel, since its retailers could not [818] pass on lower prices to consumers) or might be used to [*726] organize cartels at the retailer level. See R. Posner, Antitrust: Cases, Economic Notes and Other Materials 134 (1974); E. Gellhorn, Antitrust Law and Economics 252, 256 (1976); Note, Vertical Territorial and Customer Restrictions in the Franchising Industry, 10 Colum. J. L. & Soc. Prob. 497, 498, n. 12 (1974). Similar support for the cartel-facilitating effect of vertical nonprice restraints was and remains lacking.

We have been solicitous to assure that the market-freeing effect of our decision in GTE Sylvania is not frustrated by related legal rules. In Monsanto Co. v. Spray-Rite Service Corp., 465 U.S. 752, 763 (1984), which addressed the evidentiary showing necessary to establish vertical concerted action, we expressed concern that "if an inference of such an agreement may be drawn from highly ambiguous evidence, there is considerable danger that the doctrine enunciated in Sylvania . . . will be seriously eroded." See also id., at 761, n. 6. [*17] We eschewed adoption of an evidentiary standard that "could deter or penalize perfectly legitimate conduct" or "would create an irrational dislocation in the market" by preventing legitimate communication between a manufacturer and its distributors. Id., at 763, 764.

LEdHN[1B][] [1B] LEdHN[2B][] [2B] LEdHN[4][] [4]Our approach to the question presented in the present case is guided by HN7[] the premises of GTE Sylvania and Monsanto: that there is a presumption in favor of a rule-of-reason standard; that departure [1521] from that standard must be justified by demonstrable economic effect, such as the facilitation of cartelizing, rather than formalistic distinctions; that interbrand competition is the primary concern of the antitrust laws; and that rules in this area should be formulated with a view towards protecting the doctrine of GTE Sylvania. These premises lead us to conclude [*18] that the line drawn by the Fifth Circuit is the most appropriate one.

LEdHN[1C][] [1C] LEdHN[5A][] [5A]There has been no showing here that an agreement between a manufacturer and a dealer to terminate a "price cutter," without a further agreement on the price or price levels to be charged by the remaining dealer, almost always tends [*727] to restrict competition and reduce output. Any assistance to cartelizing that such an agreement might provide cannot be distinguished from the sort of minimal assistance that might be provided by vertical nonprice agreements like the exclusive territory agreement in GTE Sylvania, and is insufficient to justify a per se rule. Cartels are neither easy to form nor easy to maintain. Uncertainty over the terms of the cartel, particularly the prices to be charged in the future, obstructs both formation and adherence by making cheating easier. Cf. Maple Flooring Mfrs. Assn. v. United States, 268 U.S. 563 (1925); Cement Mfrs. Protective Assn. v. United States, 268 U.S. 588 (1925); [*19] see generally Matsushita Electric Industrial Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 590 (1986). Without an agreement with the remaining dealer on price, the manufacturer both retains its incentive to cheat on any manufacturer-level cartel (since lower prices can still be passed on to consumers) [819] and cannot as easily be used to organize and hold together a retailer-level cartel. [2]

[20] The District Court's rule on the scope of per se illegality for vertical restraints would threaten to dismantle the doctrine of GTE Sylvania. Any agreement between a manufacturer and a dealer to terminate another dealer who happens to have charged lower prices can be alleged to have been directed against the terminated dealer's "price cutting." In the vast majority of cases, it will be extremely difficult for the manufacturer to convince a jury that its motivation was to ensure adequate services, since price cutting and [*728] some measure of service cutting usually go hand in hand. Accordingly, a manufacturer that agrees to give one dealer an exclusive territory and terminates another dealer pursuant to that agreement, or even a manufacturer that agrees with one dealer to terminate another for failure to provide contractually obligated services, exposes itself to the highly plausible claim that its real motivation was to terminate a price cutter. Moreover, even vertical restraints that do not result in dealer termination, such as the initial granting of an exclusive territory or the requirement that certain services be provided,

---

[2] LEdHN[1D][] [1D] LEdHN[5B][] [5B]

The dissent's principal fear appears to be not cartelization at either level, but Hartwell's assertion of dominant retail power. This fear does not possibly justify adopting a rule of per se illegality. Retail market power is rare, because of the usual presence of interbrand competition and other dealers, see Continental T. V., Inc. v. GTE Sylvania Inc., 433 U.S. 36, 54 (1977), and it should therefore not be assumed but rather must be proved. Cf. Baxter, The Viability of Vertical Restraints Doctrine, 75 Calif. L. Rev. 933, 948-949 (1987). Of course this case was not prosecuted on the theory, and therefore the jury was not asked to find, that Hartwell possessed such market power.

can be attacked as designed to allow [*21] existing dealers to charge higher prices. Manufacturers would be likely to forgo legitimate and competitively useful conduct rather than risk treble damages and perhaps even criminal penalties.

We cannot avoid this difficulty by invalidating as illegal per se only those agreements imposing vertical restraints that contain the word "price," or that affect the "prices" charged by dealers. Such formalism was explicitly rejected in GTE Sylvania. As the above discussion indicates, all vertical restraints, including the exclusive [1522] territory agreement held not to be per se illegal in GTE Sylvania, have the potential to allow dealers to increase "prices" and can be characterized as intended to achieve just that. In fact, vertical nonprice restraints only accomplish the benefits identified in GTE Sylvania because they reduce intrabrand price competition to the point where the dealer's profit margin permits provision of the desired services. As we described it in Monsanto: "The manufacturer often will want to ensure that its distributors earn sufficient profit to pay for programs such as hiring and training additional salesmen or demonstrating the technical [*22] features of the product, and will want to see that 'free-riders' do not interfere." 465 U.S., at 762-763. See also GTE Sylvania, 433 U.S., at 55.

LEdHN[1E][] [1E] LEdHN[6A][] [6A] LEdHN[7A][] [7A]The dissent erects a much more complex analytic structure, which ultimately rests, however, upon the same discredited [*729] premise that the only function this [820] nonprice vertical restriction can serve is restraint of dealer-level competition. Specifically, the dissent's reasoning hinges upon its perception that the agreement between Sharp and Hartwell was a "naked" restraint -- that is, it was not "ancillary" to any other agreement between Sharp and Hartwell. Post, at 736-742, 744-745. But that is not true, unless one assumes, contrary to GTE Sylvania and Monsanto, and contrary to our earlier discussion, that it is not a quite plausible purpose of the restriction to enable Hartwell to provide better services under the sales franchise agreement. [*23] [3] From its [*730] faulty conclusion that what we have before us is a "naked" restraint, the dissent proceeds, by reasoning we do not entirely follow, to the further conclusion that it is therefore a horizontal rather than a vertical restraint. We pause over this only to note that in addition to producing what we think the wrong result in the present case, it introduces needless confusion into antitrust terminology. Restraints imposed by agreement between [1523] competitors have traditionally been denominated as

[3] LEdHN[6B][] [6B]

The conclusion of "naked" restraint could also be sustained on another assumption, namely, that an agreement is not "ancillary" unless it is designed to enforce a contractual obligation of one of the parties to the contract. The dissent appears to accept this assumption. See post, at 739-741, and n. 3, 744-746. It is plainly wrong. The classic "ancillary" restraint is an agreement by the seller of a business not to compete within the market. See Mitchel v. Reynolds, 1 P. Wms. 181, 24 Eng. Rep. 347 (1711); Restatement (Second) of Contracts § 188(2)(a) (1981). That is not ancillary to any other contractual obligation, but, like the restraint here, merely enhances the value of the contract, or permits the "enjoyment of [its] fruits." United States v. Addyston Pipe & Steel Co., 85 F. 271, 282 (CA6 1898), aff'd, 175 U.S. 211 (1899); cf. Restatement (Second) of Contracts §§ 187, 188 (1981) (restraint may be ancillary to a "transaction or relationship") (emphasis added); R. Bork, The Antitrust Paradox 29 (1978) (hereinafter Bork) (vertical arrangements are ancillary to the "transaction of supplying and purchasing").

More important than the erroneousness of the dissent's common-law analysis of "naked" and "ancillary" restraints are the perverse economic consequences of permitting nonprice vertical restraints to avoid per se invalidity only through attachment to an express contractual obligation. Such an approach is contrary to the express views of the principal scholar on whom the dissent relies. See 7 P. Areeda, Antitrust Law § 1457c, p. 170 (1986) (hereinafter Areeda) (legality of terminating price cutter should not depend upon formal adoption of service obligations that termination is assertedly designed to protect). In the precise case of a vertical agreement to terminate other dealers, for example, there is no conceivable reason why the existence of an exclusivity commitment by the manufacturer to the one remaining dealer would render anticompetitive effects less likely, or the procompetitive effects on services more likely -- so that the dissent's line for per se illegality fails to meet the requirement of Continental T. V., Inc. v. GTE Sylvania Inc., supra, at 59, that it be based on "demonstrable economic effect." If anything, the economic effect of the dissent's approach is perverse, encouraging manufacturers to agree to otherwise inefficient contractual provisions for the sole purpose of attaching to them efficient nonprice vertical restraints which, only by reason of such attachment, can avoid per se invalidity as "naked" restraints. The dissent's approach would therefore create precisely the kind of "irrational dislocation in the market" that legal rules in this area should be designed to avoid. Monsanto Co. v. Spray-Rite Service Corp., 465 U.S. 752, 764 (1984).

horizontal restraints, and those imposed by agreement between firms at different levels of distribution as vertical restraints. [4]

[25] [*731] [821] LEdHN[1F][] [1F]Finally, we do not agree with petitioner's contention that an agreement on the remaining dealer's price or price levels will so often follow from terminating another dealer "because of [its] price cutting" that prophylaxis against resale price maintenance warrants the District Court's per se rule. Petitioner has provided no support for the proposition that vertical price agreements generally underlie agreements to terminate a price cutter. That proposition is simply incompatible with the conclusion of GTE Sylvania and Monsanto that manufacturers are often motivated by a legitimate desire to have dealers provide services, combined with the reality that price cutting is frequently made possible by "free riding" on the services provided by other dealers. The District Court's per se rule would therefore discourage conduct recognized by GTE Sylvania and Monsanto as beneficial to consumers.

B

LEdHN[8][] [8]In resting our decision upon the foregoing economic analysis, we do not ignore common-law [*26] precedent concerning what constituted "restraint of trade" at the time the Sherman Act was adopted. But neither do we give that pre-1890 precedent the dispositive effect some would. The term "restraint of trade" in the statute, like the term at common law, refers not to a particular list of agreements, but to a particular economic consequence, which may be produced by quite different sorts of agreements in varying times and circumstances. The changing content of the term "restraint of trade" was well recognized at the time the Sherman Act was enacted. See Gibbs v. Consolidated Gas Co., 130 U.S. 396, 409 (1889) (noting that English case laying down the common-law rule [*732] that contracts in restraint of trade are invalid "was made under a condition of things, and a state of society, different from those which now prevail, [and therefore] the rule laid down is not regarded as inflexible, and has been considerably modified"); see also Dr. Miles Medical Co. v. John D. Park & Sons Co., 220 U.S., at 406 ("With respect to contracts in restraint of trade, the earlier doctrine of the common law has been substantially modified in adaptation [*27] to modern conditions"); B. Cardozo, The Nature of the Judicial Process 94-96 (1921).

[*822] The Sherman Act adopted the term "restraint of trade" along with its dynamic potential. It invokes the common law itself, and not merely the static content that the common law had assigned to the term in 1890. See GTE Sylvania, 433 U.S., at 53, n. 21; Standard Oil Co. v. United States, 221 U.S., at 51-60; see also McNally v. [1524] United States, 483 U.S. 350, 372-373 (1987) (STEVENS, J., joined by O'CONNOR, J., dissenting); Associated General Contractors of California, Inc. v. Carpenters, 459 U.S. 519, 533, n. 28, 539-540, and n. 43 (1983); Bork 37. If it were otherwise, not only would the line of per se illegality have to be drawn today precisely where it was in 1890, but also case-by-case evaluation of legality (conducted where per se rules do not apply) would have to be governed by 19th-century notions of reasonableness. It would make no sense to create out of the

---

[4] [*24] LEdHN[7B][] [7B]

The dissent apparently believes that whether a restraint is horizontal depends upon whether its anticompetitive effects are horizontal, and not upon whether it is the product of a horizontal agreement. Post, at 745-747, and n. 10. That is of course a conceivable way of talking, but if it were the language of antitrust analysis there would be no such thing as an unlawful vertical restraint, since all anticompetitive effects are by definition horizontal effects. The dissent quotes a statement of Professor Areeda as supposed adoption of its definition of horizontal restraint. Post, at 745-746, n. 10, quoting Areeda § 1457d, p. 174. That statement seems to us to be, to the contrary, Professor Areeda's attempt to explain a peculiar usage of the term "horizontal" in Cernuto, Inc. v. United Cabinet Corp., 595 F.2d 164, 168 (CA3 1979), noting that (even though Cernuto did not involve a horizontal restraint) the use of the term "horizontal" was "appropriate to capture the fact that dealer interests opposed to those of the manufacturer were being served." Areeda § 1457d, p. 174. The dissent also seeks to associate Judge Bork with its terminological confusion. See post, at 746, n. 10, quoting Bork 288. What the quoted passage says, however, is that a facially vertical restraint imposed by a manufacturer only because it has been coerced by a "horizontal cartel" agreement among his distributors is in reality a horizontal restraint. That says precisely what we say: that a restraint is horizontal not because it has horizontal effects, but because it is the product of a horizontal agreement.

single term "restraint of trade" a chronologically schizoid statute, in which a "rule of reason" evolves with new circumstances [*28] and new wisdom, but a line of per se illegality remains forever fixed where it was.

Of course the common law, both in general and as embodied in the Sherman Act, does not lightly assume that the economic realities underlying earlier decisions have changed, or that earlier judicial perceptions of those realities were in error. It is relevant, therefore, whether the common law of [*733] restraint of trade ever prohibited as illegal per se an agreement of the sort made here, and whether our decisions under § 1 of the Sherman Act have ever expressed or necessarily implied such a prohibition.

LEdHN[9][] [9]With respect to this Court's understanding of pre-Sherman Act common law, petitioner refers to our decision in Dr. Miles Medical Co. v. John D. Park & Sons Co., supra. Though that was an early Sherman Act case, its holding that a resale price maintenance agreement was per se illegal was based largely on the perception that such an agreement was categorically impermissible at common law. Id., at 404-408. As the opinion made plain, however, the basis for that common-law [*29] judgment was that the resale restriction was an unlawful restraint on alienation. See ibid. As we explained in Boston Store of Chicago v. American Graphophone Co., 246 U.S. 8, 21-22 (1918), "Dr. Miles . . . decided that under the general law the owner of movables . . . could not sell the movables and lawfully by contract fix a price at which the product should afterwards be sold, because to do so would be at one and the same time to sell and retain, to part with and yet to hold, to project the will of the seller so as to cause it to control the movable parted with when it was not subject to his will because owned by another." In the present case, of course, no agreement on resale price or price level, and hence no restraint on alienation, was found by the jury, so the common-law rationale of Dr. Miles does not apply. Cf. United States v. General Electric Co., 272 U.S. 476, 486-488 (1926) (Dr. Miles does not apply to restrictions on price to be charged by one who is in reality an agent of, not a buyer from, the manufacturer).

[30] LEdHN[10][] [10] LEdHN[11][] [11] Petitioner's principal contention has been that the District [823] Court's rule on per se illegality is compelled not by the old common law, but by our more recent Sherman Act precedents. First, petitioner contends that since certain horizontal agreements have been held to constitute price fixing (and [*734] thus to be per se illegal) though they did not set prices or price levels, see, e. g., Catalano, Inc. v. Target Sales, Inc., 446 U.S. 643, 647-650 (1980) (per curiam), HN8[] it is improper to require that a vertical agreement set prices or price levels before it can suffer the same fate. This notion of equivalence between the scope of horizontal per se illegality and that of vertical per se illegality was explicitly rejected in GTE Sylvania, see 433 U.S., at 57, n. 27 -- as it had to be, since a horizontal agreement to divide territories is per se illegal, see United States v. Topco Associates, Inc., 405 U.S. 596, 608 (1972), while [*31] GTE Sylvania held that a vertical agreement to do so is not. See also United States v. Arnold, Schwinn & Co., 388 U.S. 365, 390-391 (1967) (Stewart, J., joined by Harlan, J., concurring in part and dissenting in part); White Motor Co. v. United States, 372 U.S. 253, 263 (1963).

Second, petitioner contends that per se illegality here follows from our two cases holding per se illegal a group boycott of a dealer because of its price cutting. See United States v. General Motors Corp., 384 U.S. 127 (1966); Klor's, Inc. v. Broadway-Hale Stores, Inc., 359 U.S. 207 (1959). This second contention is merely a restatement of the first, since both cases involved horizontal combinations -- General Motors, supra, at 140, 143-145, at the dealer level, [5] and Klor's, supra, at 213, at the manufacturer and wholesaler levels. Accord, GTE Sylvania, supra, at 58, n. 28, United States v. Arnold, Schwinn & Co., 388 U.S., at 373, 378; id., at 390 (Stewart, J., joined by Harlan, J., concurring in part and dissenting in part); [*32] White Motor Co. v. United States, supra, at 263.

[*735] Third, petitioner contends, relying on Albrecht v. Herald Co., 390 U.S. 145 (1968), and United States v. Parke, Davis & Co., 362 U.S. 29 (1960), that our vertical price-fixing cases have already rejected the proposition that per se illegality requires setting a price or a price level. We disagree. In Albrecht, the maker of the product formed a combination to force a retailer to charge the maker's advertised retail price. See 390 U.S., at 149. This combination had two aspects. Initially, the maker [*33] hired a third party to solicit customers away from the noncomplying retailer. This solicitor "was aware that the aim of the solicitation campaign was to force [the [824] noncomplying retailer] to lower his price" to the suggested retail price. Id., at 150. Next, the maker engaged another retailer who "undertook to deliver [products] at the suggested price" to the noncomplying retailer's customers obtained by the solicitor. Ibid. This combination of maker, solicitor, and new retailer was held to be per se illegal. Id., at 150, 153. It is plain that the combination involved both an explicit agreement on resale price and an agreement to force another to adhere to the specified price.

---

[5] Contrary to the dissent, post, at 742-743, 747, General Motors does not differ from the present case merely in that it involved a three-party rather than a two-party agreement. The agreement was among competitors in General Motors; it was between noncompetitors here. Cf. Bork 330 (defining "boycotts" as "agreements among competitors to refuse to deal").

In Parke, Davis, a manufacturer combined first with wholesalers and then with retailers in order to gain the "retailers' adherence to its suggested minimum retail prices." 362 U.S., at 45-46, and n. 6. The manufacturer also brokered an agreement among its retailers not to advertise prices below its suggested retail prices, which agreement was held to be part of the per se illegal combination. This holding also does not support [*34] a rule that an agreement on price or price level is not required for a vertical restraint to be per se illegal -- first, because the agreement not to advertise prices was part and parcel of the combination that contained the price agreement, id., at 35-36, and second because the agreement among retailers that the manufacturer organized was a horizontal conspiracy among competitors. Id., at 46-47.

LEdHN[1G][] [1G]In sum, economic analysis supports the view, and no precedent opposes it, that HN9[] a vertical restraint is not illegal per se [*736] unless it includes some agreement on price or price levels. Accordingly, the judgment of the Fifth Circuit is Affirmed.

JUSTICE KENNEDY took no part in the consideration or decision of this case.

Dissent by: STEVENS

Dissent

[1526] JUSTICE STEVENS, with whom JUSTICE WHITE joins, dissenting.

In its opinion the majority assumes, without analysis, that the question presented by this case concerns the legality of a "vertical nonprice [*35] restraint." As I shall demonstrate, the restraint that results when one or more dealers threaten to boycott a manufacturer unless it terminates its relationship with a price-cutting retailer is more properly viewed as a "horizontal restraint." Moreover, an agreement to terminate a dealer because of its price cutting is most certainly not a "nonprice restraint." The distinction between "vertical nonprice restraints" and "vertical price restraints," on which the majority focuses its attention, is therefore quite irrelevant to the outcome of this case. Of much greater importance is the distinction between "naked restraints" and "ancillary restraints" that has been a part of our law since the landmark opinion written by Judge (later Chief Justice) Taft in United States v. Addyston Pipe & Steel Co., 85 F. 271 (CA6 1898), aff'd, 175 U.S. 211 (1899).

I

The plain language of § 1 of the [825] Sherman Act prohibits "every" contract that restrains trade. [1] Because such a literal reading of the statute would outlaw the entire body of private contract law, and because Congress

---

[1] Section 1 of the Sherman Act, as set forth in 15 U. S. C. § 1, provides:

"Every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, is declared to be illegal."

plainly intended [*737] the Act to be interpreted in the light of [*36] its common-law background, the Court has long held that certain "ancillary" restraints of trade may be defended as reasonable. As we recently explained without dissent:

"The Rule of Reason suggested by Mitchel v. Reynolds [1 P. Wms. 181, 24 Eng. Rep. 347 (1711)] has been regarded as a standard for testing the enforceability of covenants in restraint of trade which are ancillary to a legitimate transaction, such as an employment contract or the sale of a going business. Judge (later Mr. Chief Justice) Taft so interpreted the Rule in his classic rejection of the argument that competitors may lawfully agree to sell their goods at the same price as long as the agreed-upon price is reasonable. United States v. Addyston Pipe & Steel Co. . . ." National Society of Professional Engineers v. United States, 435 U.S. 679, 689 (1978).

[37] Judge Taft's rejection of an argument that a price-fixing agreement could be defended as reasonable was based on a detailed examination of common-law precedents. He explained that in England there had been two types of objection to voluntary restraints on one's ability to transact business. "One was that by such contracts a man disabled himself from earning a livelihood with the risk of becoming a public charge, and deprived the community of the benefit of his labor. The other was that such restraints tended to give to the covenantee, the beneficiary of such restraints, a monopoly of the trade, from which he had thus excluded one competitor, and by the same means might exclude others." 85 F., at 279. Certain contracts, however, such as covenants not to compete in a particular business, for a certain period of time, within a defined geographical area, had always been considered reasonable when necessary to carry out otherwise procompetitive contracts, such as the sale of a business. Id., at 280-282. The difference between ancillary covenants that [*738] may be justified as reasonable and those that are "void" because there is "nothing to justify [*38] or excuse the restraint," id., at 282-283, was described in the opinion's seminal discussion:

"The contract must be one in which there is a main purpose, to which the [1527] covenant in restraint of trade is merely ancillary. The covenant is inserted only to protect one of the parties from the injury which, in the execution of the contract or enjoyment of its fruits, he may suffer from the unrestrained competition of the other. The main purpose of the contract suggests the measure of protection needed, and furnishes a sufficiently uniform standard by which the validity of such restraints may be judicially determined. In such a case, if the restraint exceeds the [826] necessity presented by the main purpose of the contract, it is void for two reasons: First, because it oppresses the covenantor, without any corresponding benefit to the covenantee; and, second, because it tends to a monopoly. But where the sole object of both parties in making the contract as expressed therein is merely to restrain competition, and enhance or maintain prices, it would seem that there was nothing to justify or excuse the restraint, that it would necessarily have [*39] a tendency to monopoly, and therefore would be void. In such a case there is no measure of what is necessary to the protection of either party, except the vague and varying opinion of judges as to how much, on principles of political economy, men ought to be allowed to restrain competition. There is in such contracts no main lawful purpose, to subserve which partial restraint is permitted, and by which its reasonableness is measured, but the sole object is to restrain trade in order to avoid the competition which it has always been the policy of the common law to foster." Ibid.

Although Judge Taft was writing as a Circuit Judge, his opinion is universally accepted as authoritative. We affirmed [*739] his decision without dissent, we have repeatedly cited it with approval, [2] and it is praised by a respected scholar as "one of the greatest, if not the greatest, antitrust opinions in the history of the law." R. Bork, The Antitrust Paradox 26 (1978). In accordance with the teaching in that opinion, it is therefore appropriate to look more closely at the character of the restraint of trade found by the jury in this case.

[40] II

It may be helpful to begin by explaining why the agreement in this case does not fit into certain categories of agreement that are frequently found in antitrust litigation. First, despite the contrary implications in the majority opinion, this is not a case in which the manufacturer is alleged to have imposed any vertical nonprice restraints on any of its dealers. The term "vertical nonprice restraint," as used in Continental T. V., Inc. v. GTE Sylvania Inc., 433 U.S. 36 (1977), and similar cases, refers to a contractual term that a dealer must accept in order to qualify for a franchise. Typically, the dealer must agree to meet certain standards in its advertising, promotion, product display, and provision of repair and maintenance services in order to protect the goodwill of the manufacturer's product. Sometimes a dealer must agree to sell only to certain classes of customers -- for example, wholesalers generally may only sell to retailers and may be required not to sell directly to consumers. In Sylvania, to take another example, we examined agreements between a manufacturer and its dealers that included "provisions barring the retailers from selling [*41] franchised products from locations other than those specified in agreements." Id., at 37. [827] Restrictions of that kind, which are a part of, or ancillary to, [*740] the basic franchise agreement, are perfectly lawful unless the "rule of reason" is violated. Although vertical nonprice restraints may have some adverse effect on competition, as long as they serve the main purpose of a [1528] procompetitive distribution agreement, the ancillary restraints may be defended under the rule of reason. And, of course, a dealer who violates such a restraint may properly be terminated by the manufacturer. [3]

---

[2] See, e. g., Arizona v. Maricopa County Medical Society, 457 U.S. 332, 350, n. 22 (1982); United States v. Topco Associates, Inc., 405 U.S. 596, 608 (1972); Northern Pacific R. Co. v. United States, 356 U.S. 1, 5 (1958).

[42] In this case, it does not appear that respondent imposed any vertical nonprice restraints upon either petitioner or Hartwell. Specifically, respondent did not enter into any "exclusive" agreement, as did the defendant in Sylvania. It is true that before Hartwell was appointed and after petitioner was terminated, the manufacturer was represented by only one retailer in the Houston market, but there is no evidence that respondent ever made any contractual commitment to give either of them any exclusive rights. This therefore is not a case in which a manufacturer's right to grant exclusive territories, or to change the identity of the dealer in an established exclusive territory, is implicated. The case is one in which one of two competing dealers entered into an agreement with the manufacturer to terminate a particular competitor without making any promise to provide better or more efficient services and without receiving any guarantee of exclusivity in the future. The contractual relationship between respondent and Hartwell was exactly [*741] the same after petitioner's termination as it had been before that termination.

Second, this case does not involve a typical [*43] vertical price restraint. As the Court of Appeals noted, there is some evidence in the record that may support the conclusion that respondent and Hartwell implicitly agreed that Hartwell's prices would be maintained at a level somewhat higher than petitioner had been charging before petitioner was terminated. 780 F.2d 1212, 1219 (CA5 1986). The illegality of the agreement found by the jury does not, however, depend on such evidence. For purposes of analysis, we should assume that no such agreement existed and that respondent was perfectly willing to allow its dealers to set prices at levels that would maximize their profits. That seems to have been the situation during the period when petitioner was the only dealer in Houston. Moreover, after respondent appointed Hartwell as its second dealer, it was Hartwell, rather than respondent, who objected to petitioner's pricing policies.

Third, this is not a case in which the manufacturer acted independently. Indeed, given the jury's verdict, it is not even a case in which the [828] termination can be explained as having been based on the violation of any distribution policy adopted by respondent. The termination [*44] was motivated by the ultimatum that respondent received from Hartwell and that ultimatum, in turn, was the culmination of Hartwell's complaints about

---

[3] Thus, in Morrison v. Murray Biscuit Co., 797 F.2d 1430 (CA7 1986), cited ante, at 720, n. 1, the plaintiff had been terminated because he violated a lawful restriction on the customers to whom he could sell. As the court correctly explained:

"As long as the supplier's motive is not to keep his established dealers' prices up but only to maintain his system of lawful nonprice restrictions, he can terminate noncomplying dealers without fear of antitrust liability even if he learns about the violation from dealers whose principal or perhaps only concern is with protecting their prices." 797 F.2d, at 1440.

There was no such justification for the termination in this case.

petitioner's competitive price cutting. The termination was plainly the product of coercion by the stronger of two dealers rather than an attempt to maintain an orderly and efficient system of distribution. [4] [45] [*742] [1529] In sum, this case does not involve the reasonableness of any vertical restraint imposed on one or more dealers by a manufacturer in its basic franchise agreement. What the jury found was a simple and naked "'agreement between Sharp and Hartwell to terminate Business Electronics because of Business Electronics' price cutting.'" Ante, at 722.

III

Because naked agreements to restrain the trade of third parties are seldom identified with such stark clarity as in this case, there appears to be no exact precedent that determines the outcome here. There are, however, perfectly clear rules that would be decisive if the facts were changed only slightly.

Thus, on the one hand, if it were clear that respondent had acted independently and decided to terminate petitioner because respondent, for reasons of its own, objected to petitioner's pricing policies, the termination would be lawful. See United States v. Parke, Davis & Co., 362 U.S. 29, 43-45 (1960). On the other hand, it is equally clear that if respondent had been represented by three dealers in the Houston market instead of only two, and if two of them had threatened to terminate [*46] their dealerships "unless respondent ended its relationship with petitioner within 30 days," ante, at 721, an agreement to comply with the ultimatum would be an obvious violation of the Sherman Act. See, e. g., United States v. General Motors Corp., 384 U.S. 127 (1966); Klor's, Inc. v. Broadway-Hale Stores, Inc., 359 U.S. 207 (1959). [5] The [*743] question then is whether [829] the two-party agreement involved in this case is more like an illegal three-party agreement or a legal independent decision. For me, the answer is plain.

---

[4] "When a manufacturer acts on its own, in pursuing its own market strategy, it is seeking to compete with other manufacturers by imposing what may be defended as reasonable vertical restraints. This would appear to be the rationale of the GTE Sylvania decision. However, if the action of a manufacturer or other supplier is taken at the direction of its customer, the restraint becomes primarily horizontal in nature in that one customer is seeking to suppress its competition by utilizing the power of a common supplier. Therefore, although the termination in such a situation is, itself, a vertical restraint, the desired impact is horizontal and on the dealer, not the manufacturer, level." Cernuto, Inc. v. United Cabinet Corp., 595 F.2d 164, 168 (CA3 1979).

[5] Thus, a boycott "is not to be tolerated merely because the victim is just one merchant whose business is so small that his destruction makes little difference to the economy. Monopoly can as surely thrive by the elimination of such small businessmen, one at a time, as it can by driving them out in large groups." Klor's, Inc. v. Broadway-Hale Stores, Inc., 359 U.S., at 213, (footnote omitted). Again, Judge Adams' analysis in the Cernuto opinion, n. 4, supra, is relevant:

"The importance of the horizontal nature of this arrangement is illustrated by United States v. General Motors Corp., 384 U.S. 127 . . . (1966). Although General Motors, the manufacturer, was seemingly imposing vertical restraints when it pressured recalcitrant automobile dealers not to deal with discounters, the Supreme Court noted that in fact these restraints were induced by the dealers seeking to choke off aggressive competitors at their level, and found a per se violation, rejecting the suggestion that only unilateral restraints were at issue. So here, if [the manufacturer and the sales representative acted at the nonterminated dealer's] direction, both the purpose and effect of the termination was to eliminate competition at the retail level, and not, as in GTE Sylvania, to promote competition at the manufacturer level. Accordingly, the pro-competitive redeeming virtues so critical in GTE Sylvania may not be present here." 595 F.2d, at 168 (footnote omitted).

As we said in General Motors:

"The protection of price competition from conspiratorial restraint is an object of special solicitude under the antitrust laws. We cannot respect that solicitude by closing our eyes to the effect upon price competition of the removal from the market, by combination or conspiracy, of a class of traders. Nor do we propose to construe the Sherman Act to prohibit conspiracies to fix prices at which competitors may sell, but to allow conspiracies or combinations to put competitors out of business entirely." 384 U.S., at 148.

[47] The distinction between independent action and joint action is fundamental in antitrust jurisprudence. [6] Any attempt [*744] to define [1530] the boundaries of per se illegality by the number of parties to different agreements with the same anticompetitive consequences can only breed uncertainty in the law and confusion for the businessman.

[48] More importantly, if instead of speculating about irrelevant vertical nonprice restraints, we focus on the precise character of the agreement before us, we can readily identify its anticompetitive nature. Before the agreement was made, there was price competition in the Houston retail market for respondent's products. The stronger of the two competitors was unhappy about that competition; it wanted to have the power to set the price level in the market and therefore it "complained to respondent on a number of occasions about petitioner's prices." Ante, at 721. Quite obviously, if petitioner had agreed with either Hartwell or respondent to discontinue its competitive pricing, there would have been no ultimatum from Hartwell and no termination by respondent. It is equally obvious that either of those agreements would have been illegal per se. [7] Moreover, it is also reasonable to [830] assume that if respondent were to replace petitioner with another price-cutting dealer, there would soon be more complaints and another ultimatum from Hartwell. Although respondent has not granted Hartwell an exclusive dealership -- it retains the right to appoint multiple dealers [*49] -- its [*745] agreement has protected Hartwell from price competition. Indeed, given the jury's finding and the evidence in the record, that is the sole function of the agreement found by the jury in this case. It therefore fits squarely within the category of "naked restraints of trade with no purpose except stifling of competition." White Motor Co. v. United States, 372 U.S. 253, 263 (1963).

[50] This is the sort of agreement that scholars readily characterize as "inherently suspect." [8] [*51] When a manufacturer responds to coercion from a dealer, instead of making an independent decision to enforce a predetermined distribution policy, the anticompetitive character of the response is evident. [9] As Professor Areeda has correctly noted, the fact that the agreement is between only one complaining dealer and the manufacturer does not prevent it from imposing a "horizontal" restraint. [10] [*52] If two critical facts are present -- a [*746] naked

---

[6] See United States v. Colgate & Co., 250 U.S. 300, 307-308 (1919). In Monsanto Co. v. Spray-Rite Service Corp., 465 U.S. 752, 761 (1984), we noted that "the basic distinction between concerted and independent action" was "not always clearly drawn by parties and courts." In its opinion today the majority virtually ignores that basic distinction. Thus, ante, at 728, the majority discusses the manufacturer's risks arising out of its agreement "with one dealer to terminate another for failure to provide contractually obligated services." But if such a breach of contract has occurred, the manufacturer should have an independent motivation for acting and need not enter into any agreement with a dealer to do so. As we held in Monsanto, the mere fact that the breach of contract may have been called to the manufacturer's attention by another dealer does not make the manufacturer's independent decision to terminate a price-cutting dealer unlawful.

[7] "We have not wavered in our enforcement of the per se rule against price fixing." Arizona v. Maricopa County Medical Society, 457 U.S. 332, 347 (1982). Thus, in Dr. Miles Medical Co. v. John D. Park & Sons Co., 220 U.S. 373 (1911), the Court determined that vertical price fixing is per se invalid because resale price maintenance plans serve the profit motives of the dealers, not the manufacturers, and are thereby similar to plans pursuant to which the dealers themselves conspire to fix prices. Id., at 407-408. There is no doubt that horizontal intrabrand price fixing is per se illegal, even if the conspirators lack the market power to affect interbrand competition in a manner that would violate the rule of reason.

[8] "Scenarios that involve a firm or firms at one level of activity using vertical restraints deliberately to confer market power on firms at an adjacent level are inherently suspect. To do so is, typically, to inflict self-injury, just as it would be for consumers to confer market power on the retailers from whom they buy." Baxter, The Viability of Vertical Restraints Doctrine, 75 Calif. L. Rev. 933, 938 (1987).

[9] "Termination responses reflecting the manufacturer's own distribution policy differ greatly from those imposed upon him by a complaining dealer. In the latter case, the manufacturer's compliance with the complainer's demand is more likely to be anticompetitive. There is a superficial resemblance to Parke Davis in that three parties are involved, but my earlier analysis suggested that the key to that case was 'complex enforcement,' which is absent where a complaining dealer simply threatens to abandon the manufacturer who continues selling to discounting dealers." 7 P. Areeda, Antitrust Law § 1457, p. 166 (1986).

purpose [1531] to eliminate price competition as such and [831] coercion of the manufacturer [11] [*53] -- the conflict with antitrust policy is manifest. [12]

[54] [*747] Indeed, since the economic consequences of Hartwell's ultimatum to respondent are identical to those that would result from a comparable ultimatum by two of three dealers in a market -- and since a two-party

---

[10] Commenting on Judge Adams' opinion in Cernuto, see nn. 4 and 5, supra, Professor Areeda wrote:

"That the complainer was a single firm did not weaken the 'horizontal' characterization. Because the elimination of price competition was the purpose of the complaint and the termination, the court declared that per se illegality would be appropriate. However, the court made clear that no illegal agreement would be found if United was implementing its own unilaterally chosen distribution policy. Thus, the court's implicit theory was that an agreement arose when the manufacturer bowed to the complainer's will. In that situation, the 'horizontal' characterization is appropriate to capture the fact that dealer interests opposed to those of the manufacturer were being served." Areeda, supra, at 174 (footnotes omitted).

See also R. Bork, The Antitrust Paradox 288 (1978):

"A restraint -- whether on price, territory, or any other term -- is vertical, according to the usage employed here, when a firm operating at one level of an industry places restraints upon rivalry at another level for its own benefit. (This definition excludes restraints, vertical in form only, that are actually imposed by horizontal cartels at any level of the industry, e. g., resale price maintenance that is compelled not by the manufacturer but by the pressure of organized retailers.)"

[11] The two critical facts that had not yet been determined by a jury in the Cernuto case are perfectly plain in this case. As Professor Areeda explained:

"The Cernuto case was decided on summary judgment which accepted the plaintiff's view of the facts. But two facts critical for the court will often be obscure. First, was it the manufacturer's purpose to eliminate price competition as such? Let us assume that termination was not based on such completely independent grounds as non-payment of bills. Even so, the existence of an inevitable price effect does not establish a purpose to control prices in a forbidden way. A purpose to facilitate point-of-sale services or to protect minimum economies of scale could induce a manufacturer to limit intrabrand competition. Notwithstanding price effects, such limitations are lawful when reasonable and not subject to automatic condemnation. Indeed, termination of one dealer in order to grant another exclusive distribution rights in an area is generally lawful. Nevertheless, so long as the manufacturer is not implementing his own interest but that of the complainer, the vice of eliminating 'horizontal' competition with the complainer's rivals seems equally present when the complainer thereby succeeds in eliminating horizontal competition with respect to customers or territories. Second, was the manufacturer coerced or was he indulging his own preferences? As we have seen, this question cannot be answered in the abstract. The court correctly acknowledged that the manufacturer might also be implementing his own unilateral vision of optimal distribution without regard to the complainer's desires and held that no illegal agreement would arise if that were the case." Areeda, supra, at 174-175 (footnotes omitted).

[12] "Let us defer for the moment problems of proof and assume that a manufacturer does not wish to terminate the plaintiff dealer but does so to placate the complaining dealer, who would otherwise cease handling the product. This manufacturer would rather keep both dealers but, when forced to choose between them, concludes that terminating the plaintiff hurts him less (considering sales lost, transaction costs in finding and perhaps training a replacement, and any spillover effects upon his relations with other dealers) than losing the complainer's patronage.

"The present situation is Colgate in reverse. In Colgate, it was the supplier who was controlling the dealer's behavior. Here a dealer is conditioning his patronage in a way that controls the manufacturer's behavior. The agreement concept seems parallel. But the economic effects can be very different. From the policy viewpoint, it can matter greatly whether manufacturer or dealer interests are being served. The former is more likely to seek efficient distribution, which stimulates interbrand competition; the latter is more likely to seek excess profits, which dampen interbrand competition. Accordingly, antitrust policy can be more hospitable toward manufacturer efforts to control dealer prices, customers, or territories than toward the efforts of dealers to control their competitors through the manufacturer.

"Of course, manufacturer and dealer interests are not necessarily antagonistic. Like the manufacturer, dealers might also believe that restricted distribution increases dealer services and sales and thus strengthens interbrand competition. However, this objective seems unlikely when the manufacturer is forced to violate the distribution policy he thinks best. Although he might be mistaken about what his optimal distribution policy ought to be, he should be presumed a better judge of that than coercing dealers who always desire excess profits unnecessary for efficient distribution." Areeda, supra, at 167-168 (footnotes omitted).

price-fixing agreement is just as unlawful as a three-party price-fixing agreement -- [1532] it is appropriate to employ the term "boycott" to characterize this agreement. In my judgment the case is therefore controlled by our decision in United States v. General Motors Corp., 384 U.S. 127 (1966).

The majority disposes quickly of both General Motors and Klor's, Inc. v. Broadway-Hale Stores, Inc., 359 U.S. 207 [832] (1959), by concluding that "both cases involved horizontal combinations." Ante, at 734. But this distinction plainly will [*748] not suffice. In General Motors, a group of Chevrolet dealers conspired with General Motors to eliminate sales from the manufacturer to discounting dealers. We held that "elimination, by joint collaborative action, of discounters from access to the market is a per se violation of the Act," 384 U.S., at 145, and explained that "inherent [*55] in the success of the combination in this case was a substantial restraint upon price competition -- a goal unlawful per se when sought to be effected by combination or conspiracy." Id., at 147. Precisely the same goal was sought and effected in this case -- the elimination of price competition at the dealer level. Moreover, the method of achieving that goal was precisely the same in both cases -- the manufacturer's refusal to sell to discounting dealers. The difference between the two cases is not a difference between horizontal and vertical agreements -- in both cases the critical agreement was between market actors at the retail level on the one hand and the manufacturer level on the other. Rather, the difference is simply a difference in the number of conspirators. Hartwell's coercion of respondent in order to eliminate petitioner because of its same-level price competition is not different in kind from the Chevrolet dealers' coercion of General Motors in order to eliminate other, price-cutting dealers; the only difference between the two cases -- one dealer seeking a naked price-based restraint in today's case, many dealers seeking the same end in [*56] General Motors -- is merely a difference in degree. Both boycotts lack any efficiency justification -- they are simply naked restraints on price competition, rather than integral, or ancillary, parts of the manufacturers' predetermined distribution policies.

IV

What is most troubling about the majority's opinion is its failure to attach any weight to the value of intrabrand competition. In Continental T. V., Inc. v. GTE Sylvania Inc., [*749] 433 U.S. 36 (1977), we correctly held that a demonstrable benefit to interbrand competition will outweigh the harm to intrabrand competition that is caused by the imposition of vertical nonprice restrictions on dealers. But we also expressly reaffirmed earlier cases in which the illegal conspiracy affected only intrabrand competition. [13] Not a word in the Sylvania opinion implied that the elimination of intrabrand competition could be justified as reasonable without any evidence of a purpose to improve interbrand competition.

[57] In the case before us today, the relevant economic market was the sale at retail in the Houston area of calculators manufactured by respondent. [14] There is no dispute [1533] that an [833] agreement [*750] to fix

[13] See 433 U.S., at 58, n. 28 (citing United States v. General Motors Corp., 384 U.S. 127 (1966), and United States v. Topco Associates, Inc., 405 U.S. 596 (1972)).

[14] "It might be helpful to note at this point that although the majority mentions only the reduction of *inter*brand competition as a justification for a per se rule against vertical price restraints, see ante, at 725-726, our opinion in Sylvania was quite different. As we stated then:

"The market impact of vertical restrictions is complex because of their potential for a simultaneous reduction of intrabrand competition and stimulation of interbrand competition. Significantly, the Court in Schwinn did not distinguish among the challenged restrictions on the basis of their individual potential for intrabrand harm or interbrand benefit. Restrictions that completely eliminated intrabrand competition among Schwinn distributors were analyzed no differently from those that merely moderated intrabrand competition among retailers." 433 U.S., at 51-52 (footnotes omitted).

In the following pages, we pointed out that because vertical nonprice restrictions imposed by manufacturers may serve to advance interbrand competition, the restriction on intrabrand competition should be subject only to a rule of reason analysis. Along these same lines, we explained that "economists also have argued that manufacturers have an economic interest in maintaining as much intrabrand competition as is consistent with the efficient distribution of their products." Id., at 56. Thus, although the majority neglects to mention it, fostering intrabrand competition has been recognized as an important goal of prices in that market, either horizontally between petitioner and Hartwell or vertically between respondent and either or both of the two dealers, would violate the Sherman Act. The "quite plausible" assumption, see ante, at 729, that such an agreement might enable the retailers to provide better services to their customers would not have avoided the strict rule against price fixing that this Court has consistently enforced in the past.

[58] [*751] Under petitioner's theory of the case, an agreement between respondent and Hartwell to terminate petitioner because of its price cutting was just as indefensible as any of those price-fixing agreements. At trial the jury found the existence of such an agreement to eliminate petitioner's price competition. Respondent had denied that any agreement [834] had been made and asked the jury to find that it had independently decided to terminate petitioner because of its poor sales performance, [15] but after hearing several days of testimony, the jury concluded that this defense was pretextual.

[59] Neither the Court of Appeals nor the majority questions the accuracy of the jury's resolution of the factual issues in this case. Nevertheless, the rule the majority fashions today is based largely on its concern that in other cases juries will be unable to tell the difference between truthful [1534] and pretextual defenses. Thus, it opines that "even a manufacturer that agrees with one dealer to terminate another for failure to provide contractually obligated services, exposes itself to the highly plausible claim that its real motivation was to terminate a price cutter." Ante, at 728. But such a "plausible" concern in a hypothetical case that is so different from this one should not be given greater weight than facts that can be established by hard evidence. If a dealer has, in fact, failed to provide contractually obligated services, and if the manufacturer has, in fact, terminated the dealer for that reason, both of those objective facts should be provable by admissible [*752] evidence. [16] [*61] Both in its disposition antitrust law, and although a manufacturer's efficiency-enhancing vertical nonprice restraints may subject a reduction of intrabrand competition only to a rule of reason analysis, a similar reduction without the procompetitive "redeeming virtues" of manufacturer-imposed vertical nonprice restraints, id., at 54, causes nothing but economic harm. As one commentator has recently stated:

---

"Intrabrand competition can benefit the consumer, and it is therefore important to insure that a manufacturer's motive for a vertical restriction is not simply to acquiesce in his distributors' desires to limit competition among themselves. The Supreme Court has recognized that restrictions on intrabrand competition can only be tolerated because of the countervailing positive impact on interbrand competition." Piraino, The Case for Presuming the Legality of Quality Motivated Restrictions on Distribution, 63 Notre Dame L. Rev. 1, 17 (1988) (footnotes omitted).

See also H. R. Rep. No. 100-421, pp. 23, 38 (1987) (accompanying bill H. R. 585, the Freedom from Vertical Price Fixing Act of 1987, passed by the House and currently pending before the Senate; criticizing the Fifth Circuit's decision in this case, and restating "plainly and unequivocally that all forms of resale price maintenance are illegal per se under the antitrust laws," including "where a conspiracy exists between a supplier and distributor to terminate or cut off supply to a second distributor because of the second distributor's pricing policies") (emphasis in original); Departments of Commerce, Justice, and State, the Judiciary and Related Agencies Appropriation Act, 1986, Pub. L. 99-180, 99 Stat. 1169-1170 (congressional resolution that Department of Justice Vertical Restraints Guidelines "are inconsistent with established antitrust law, . . . in maintaining that such policy guidelines do not treat vertical price fixing when, in fact, some provisions of such policy guidelines suggest that certain price fixing conspiracies are legal if such conspiracies are 'limited' to restricting intrabrand competition; . . . in stating that vertical restraints that have an impact upon prices are subject to the per se rule of illegality only if there is an 'explicit agreement as to the specific prices'"); Report of Attorney General's National Committee to Study the Antitrust Laws 149-155 (1955) (criticizing laws that permit resale price maintenance as a "throttling of price competition in the process of distribution").

[15] The court instructed the jury:

"Sharp, on the other hand, contends that it terminated Business Electronics unilaterally, not as a result of any agreement or understanding with Hartwell, but because of Business Electronics' sales performance. If you find that Sharp did not terminate Business Electronics pursuant to an agreement or understanding with Hartwell to eliminate price cutting by Business Electronics, then you should answer 'no' to question number 1."

22 Record 1587.

See also nn. 18-19, infra.

of this case and in its attempt to justify a new approach to agreements to eliminate price competition, the majority exhibits little confidence in [*60] the judicial process as a means of ascertaining the truth. [17]

[*753] [835] The majority fails to consider that manufacturers such as respondent will only be held liable in the rare case in which the following can be proved: First, the terminated dealer must overcome the high hurdle of Monsanto Co. v. Spray-Rite Service Corp., 465 U.S. 752 (1984). A terminated dealer [*62] must introduce "evidence that tends to exclude the possibility that the manufacturer and nonterminated distributors were acting independently." Id., at 764. Requiring judges to adhere to the strict test for agreement laid down in Monsanto, in their jury instructions or own findings of fact, goes a long way toward ensuring that many legitimate dealer termination decisions do not succumb improperly to antitrust liability. [18]

[63] [1535] Second, the terminated dealer must prove that the agreement was based on a purpose to terminate it because of its price cutting. Proof of motivation is another commonplace in antitrust litigation of which the majority appears apprehensive, but as we have explained or demonstrated many times, see, e. g., Aspen Skiing Co. v. Aspen Highlands Skiing [*754] Corp., 472 U.S. 585, 610-611 (1985); McLain v. Real Estate Board of New Orleans, Inc., 444 U.S. 232, 243 (1980); United States v. Socony-Vacuum Oil Co., 310 U.S. 150, 224-226, n. 59

---

[16] In Morrison v. Murray Biscuit Co., 797 F.2d 1430 (CA7 1986), cited ante, at 720, n. 1, Morrison, a wholesale distributor, sued Murray Biscuit, a producer of cookies and crackers, charging a conspiracy between Murray Biscuit and Feldman, a food broker, to suppress price competition between Feldman and Morrison. Id., at 1431. But it was quite clear that Murray Biscuit "had assigned particular customers to particular middlemen, whether brokers [like Feldman] or warehouse distributors [like Morrison]." Id., at 1435. Judge Posner's opinion explained:

"Suppose that after Sylvania was decided, a seller that had a price-fixing agreement (illegal per se) with its dealers adopted a lawful customer allocation agreement pursuant to which it terminated a dealer. That dealer could not sue for price fixing, even if the price-fixing agreement had never been rescinded, unless he could show that his breach of the customer allocation agreement was not the real reason for his termination; maybe the agreement was a mask behind which the illegal price fixing continued. The reason for Morrison's termination was that he tried to take away a customer who had been assigned to Feldman; there is no indication that the assignment was a mask for resale price maintenance. Since Feldman had the exclusive right to sell Murray Biscuit's products to the Certified account, Morrison had no business selling to Certified at any price." Id., at 1439 (emphasis added).

Judge Posner thus made it clear that although Morrison had been terminated pursuant to a valid vertical nonprice restraint, a terminated dealer might prevail if it could prove that the nonprice agreement was "a mask behind which the illegal price fixing continued." Ibid.

[17] "When faced with conflicting evidence, the jury must determine whether the nonprice justifications for the termination advanced by the defendant are legitimate, or are mere pretext to disguise a per se illegal agreement with the nonterminated dealer to maintain resale prices. It is the Court's duty under Monsanto to decide whether sufficient evidence was presented for a jury to make that determination." McCabe's Furniture, Inc. v. La-Z-Boy Chair Co., 798 F.2d 323, 329 (CA8 1986), cited ante, at 720, n. 1.

See also L. Sullivan, Law of Antitrust 202 (1977) ("A shorthand method which may help to identify a restraint affecting price as naked is to examine the arguments which are being pressed in justification of the practice").

[18] Although at trial respondent had asked the jury to find that it had acted independently, see n. 15, supra, and accompanying text, respondent has not disputed, either in the Court of Appeals or here, the jury's finding of an agreement. (Respondent has, of course, contended that no agreement was reached requiring some level of resale price maintenance. As I have argued, though, such an agreement is not needed to invoke the per se rule in a case such as this.) Respondent did argue before the District Court for an instruction explaining that "it must be shown that the manufacturer agreed with the complaining dealer to terminate the existing dealer and that, in so agreeing, the manufacturer shared with the complaining dealer the same desire of eliminating price competition for the complaining dealer." 1 Record 151. Respondent later objected to the court's decision not to give this instruction, 1 Record 54, 22 Record 1599, but the court in fact had quite carefully explained to the jury that "what a preponderance . . . of the evidence in the case must show in order to establish the existence of the required combination, agreement, or understanding is that Sharp and Hartwell knowingly came to a common and mutual understanding to accomplish or to attempt to accomplish an unlawful purpose." Id., at 1584-1585.

(1940); Chicago Board of Trade v. United States, 246 U.S. 231, 238 (1918); see also Piraino, The Case for Presuming the Legality of Quality Motivated Restrictions on Distribution, 63 Notre Dame L. Rev. 1, 4, 16-19 (1988), in antitrust, as in many other areas of the law, motivation matters and factfinders are able to distinguish bad from good intent.

Third, the manufacturer may rebut the evidence tending to prove that the sole purpose of the agreement was to eliminate a price cutter by offering evidence that it entered the agreement [*64] for legitimate, nonprice-related reasons.

Although in this case the jury found a naked agreement to terminate a dealer because of its price [836] cutting, ante, at 721-722, the majority boldly characterizes the same agreement as "this nonprice vertical restriction." Ante, at 729. That characterization is surely an oxymoron when applied to the agreement the jury actually found. Nevertheless, the majority proceeds to justify it as "ancillary" to a "quite plausible purpose . . . to enable Hartwell to provide better services under the sales franchise agreement." Ante, at 729. There are two significant reasons why that justification is unacceptable.

First, it is not supported by the jury's verdict. Although it did not do so with precision, the District Court did instruct the jury that in order to hold respondent liable it had to find that the agreement's purpose was to eliminate petitioner because of its price cutting and that no valid vertical nonprice restriction existed to which the motivation to eliminate price competition at the dealership level was merely ancillary. [19]

[65] [*755] [1536] Second, the "quite plausible purpose" the majority hypothesizes as salvation for the otherwise anticompetitive elimination of price competition -- "to enable Hartwell to provide better services under the sales franchise agreement," ante, at 729 -- is simply not the type of concern we sought to protect in Continental T. V., Inc. v. GTE Sylvania Inc., 433 U.S. 36 (1977). I have emphasized in this dissent the difference between restrictions imposed in pursuit of a manufacturer's structuring of its product distribution, and those imposed at the behest of retailers who care less about the general efficiency of a product's promotion than their own profit margins. Sylvania stressed the importance of the former, not the latter; we referred to the use that manufacturers can [*756] make of vertical nonprice restraints, see id., at 54-57, and nowhere did we discuss the benefits of permitting dealers to structure intrabrand competition at the retail level by coercing [837] manufacturers into essentially anticompetitive agreements. Thus, while Hartwell may indeed be able to provide better services under [*66] the sales franchise agreement with petitioner out of the way, one would not have thought, until today, that the mere possibility of such a result -- at the expense of the elimination of price competition and absent the salutary overlay

[19] The Court instructed the jury:

"The Sherman Act is violated when a seller enters into an agreement or understanding with one of its dealers to terminate another dealer because of the other dealer's price cutting. Plaintiff contends that Sharp terminated Business Electronics in furtherance of Hartwell's desire to eliminate Business Electronics as a price-cutting rival.

"If you find that there was an agreement between Sharp and Hartwell to terminate Business Electronics because of Business Electronics' price cutting, you should answer 'yes' to question number 1.

"Sharp, on the other hand, contends that it terminated Business Electronics unilaterally, not as a result of any agreement or understanding with Hartwell, but because of Business Electronics' sales performance. If you find that Sharp did not terminate Business Electronics pursuant to an agreement or understanding with Hartwell to eliminate price cutting by Business Electronics, then you should answer 'no' to question number 1." 22 Record 1587.

Respondent had asked for an instruction requiring the jury to consider circumstantial evidence as proof of a motivation to eliminate price competition only if such evidence could not "equally be interpreted to show that Sharp terminated Business Electronics Corporation for other business reasons and not pursuant to any agreement with Mr. Hartwell to fix resale prices of calculators." 1 Record 148. Respondent objected to the failure to give this instruction, id., at 54, and also objected, more specifically, to the instruction that was given on the ground that "it allows the jury to find against the defendant even if they do not believe that Sharp cared about [Business Electronics'] price cutting or if they believe that Sharp had a dual motive in making the termination." 22 Record 1599. The instruction quoted above, though, makes it highly unlikely that the jury would have found for petitioner although finding respondent's motives to be mixed ones.

of a manufacturer's distribution decision with the entire product line in mind -- would be sufficient to legitimate an otherwise purely anticompetitive restraint. See n. 14, supra. In fact, given the majority's total reliance on "economic analysis," see ante, at 735, it is hard to understand why, if such a purpose were sufficient to avoid the application of a per se rule in this context, the same purpose should not also be sufficient to trump the per se rule in all other price-fixing cases that arguably permit cartel members to "provide better services."

If, however, we continue to accept the premise that competition in the relevant market is worthy of legal protection -- that we should not rely on competitive pressures exerted by sellers in other areas and purveyors of similar but not identical products -- and if we are faithful to the competitive philosophy that has animated our antitrust jurisprudence since Judge Taft's opinion [*67] in Addyston Pipe, we can agree that the elimination of price competition will produce wider gross profit margins for retailers, but we may not assume that the retailer's self interest will result in a better marketplace for consumers.

"The Sherman Act reflects a legislative judgment that ultimately competition will produce not only lower prices, but also better goods and services. 'The heart of our national economic policy long has been faith in the value of competition.' Standard Oil Co. v. FTC, 340 U.S. 231, 248. The assumption that competition is the best [*757] method of allocating resources in a free market recognizes that all elements of a bargain -- quality, service, safety, and durability -- and not just the immediate cost, are favorably affected by the free opportunity to select among alternative offers. Even assuming occasional exceptions to the presumed consequences of competition, the statutory policy precludes inquiry into the question whether competition is good or bad." National Society of Professional Engineers v. United States, 435 U.S., at 695.I

The "plausible purpose" posited by the majority as its sole [*68] justification for this mischaracterized "nonprice vertical restriction" is inconsistent with the legislative judgment that underlies the Sherman Act itself. Under the facts as found by the jury in this case, the agreement before us is one whose "sole object is to restrain trade in order to avoid the competition [1537] which it has always been the policy of the common law to foster." United States v. Addyston Pipe & Steel Co., 85 F., at 283, aff'd, 175 U.S. 211 (1899).

V

In sum, this simply is not a case in which procompetitive vertical nonprice restraints have been imposed; in fact, it is not a case in which any procompetitive agreement [838] is at issue. [20] The sole purpose of the agreement between respondent [*758] and Hartwell was to eliminate price competition at Hartwell's level. As Judge Bork has aptly explained:

"Since the naked boycott is a form of predatory behavior, there is little doubt that it should be a per se violation of the Sherman Act." Bork, The Antitrust Paradox, at 334.

[69] I respectfully dissent.

References

[20] Thus, the Courts of Appeals decisions cited by the majority as supporting its view, see ante, at 720, n. 1, are, in fact, consistent with the rule that a naked intent to eliminate price competition is per se invalid. Each of the opinions contains a discussion that distinguishes between, on the one hand, an agreement between manufacturer and dealer to eliminate a price-cutting competitor based solely on an intent to eliminate price competition, and, on the other hand, an agreement between manufacturer and dealer to eliminate a price-cutting competitor that is grounded not only in an antipathy to price competition, but also in a purpose to implement a procompetitive system of vertical nonprice restraints. See McCabe's Furniture, Inc. v. La-Z-Boy Chair Co., 798 F.2d, at 329-330; Morrison v. Murray Biscuit Co., 797 F.2d, at 1439-1440; Westman Commission Co. v. Hobart Int'l, Inc., 796 F.2d 1216, 1223 (CA10 1986). Moreover, none of these opinions proposes the rule that the majority sanctions today: that an agreement as to some level of resale price maintenance is necessary for invocation of the per se rule in these situations.

54 Am Jur 2d, Monopolies, Restraints of Trade, and Unfair Trade Practices 30-32, 50, 74

12 Federal Procedural Forms, L Ed, Monopolies and Restraints of Trade 48:81, 48:83, 48:101

12 Am Jur Legal Forms 2d, Monopolies, Restraints of Trade, and Unfair Trade Practices 178:64

43 Am Jur Proof of Facts 2d 577, Wrongful Termination of Dealership

24 Am Jur Trials 1, Defending Antitrust Lawsuits

15 USCS 1

US L Ed Digest, Restraints of Trade, Monopolies, and Unfair Trade Practices 9, 31

Index to Annotations, Dealers and Distributors; Price Fixing; Restraints of Trade and Monopolies

[70] Annotation References:

Supreme Court's views as to what constitutes per se illegal "price fixing" under the Sherman Act (15 USCS 1 et seq.). 64 L Ed 2d 997.

Propriety of preliminary injunctive relief in private antitrust actions involving dealership terminations. 79 ALR Fed 44.

Refusals to deal as violations of the federal antitrust laws. 41 ALR Fed 175.

Environmental Tectonics v. W.S. Kirkpatrick, Inc.

United States Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit

November 20, 1987, Argued ; May 2, 1988, Filed

Nos. 87-5328, 87-5546

Reporter

847 F.2d 1052 *; 1988 U.S. App. LEXIS 5865 ; 1988-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P67,994; 25 Fed. R. Evid. Serv. (Callaghan) 1021

Environmental Tectonics v. W.S. Kirkpatrick, Inc., Development International Corporation, DIC (Holding) Inc., IDC International S.A. Luxembourg, Harry G. Carpenter c/o W.S. Kirkpatrick, Inc. and Benson "Tunde" Akindele John M. Krankel, Emro Engineering Co., Inc. Robert W. Ruppert c/o Emro Engineering Co., Inc., Ross E. Saxon c/o Nautilus Environmental Systems, Inc. & R.H. Edwards Environmental Tectonics Corporation International Appellant in 87-5328 W.S. Kirkpatrick & Co., Inc., W.S. Kirkpatrick & Co., International and D.I.C. (Holding) Inc., Appellants in No. 87-5546

Subsequent History: [1] As Amended May 9, 1988.

Prior History: On Appeal from the United States District Court for the District of New Jersey, D.C. Civil Action No. 86-0796.

Core Terms

act of state doctrine, district court, amended complaint, air force, motivation, courts, sovereign, bribery, allegations, antitrust, foreign government, judicial inquiry, bid, embarrassment, decisions, foreign relations, racketeering, violations, illegal payment, foreign policy, state grounds, circumstances, commissions, defendants', deposition, questions, military, charges, cases, pattern of racketeering activity

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Appellate Review > Standards of Review

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Appellate Review > General Overview

HN1[] Appellate Review, Standards of Review

On review of a district court's grant of summary judgment, an appellate court utilizes the same standard that the district court was required to apply.

International Law > Dispute Resolution > Act of State Doctrine

HN2[] Dispute Resolution, Act of State Doctrine

The act of state doctrine is the judiciary's institutional response to the foreign relations tensions that can be generated when a United States court appears to sit in judgment on a foreign state's regulation of its internal affairs. Under the doctrine, the courts of the United States will refrain from judging the validity of a foreign state's governmental acts in regard to matters within that country's borders. The party moving for the doctrine's application has the burden of proving that dismissal is an appropriate response to the circumstances presented in the case.

Civil Procedure > ... > Jurisdiction > Jurisdictional Sources > General Overview

International Law > Dispute Resolution > Act of State Doctrine

International Law > Dispute Resolution > General Overview

HN3[] Jurisdiction, Jurisdictional Sources

Courts are required to decline to exercise jurisdiction over cases that may embarrass or impede the political branches of government in their conduct of foreign affairs.

International Law > Dispute Resolution > Act of State Doctrine

HN4[] Dispute Resolution, Act of State Doctrine

There are no rigid rules to govern the act of state doctrine's application. The lower courts are left to determine whether a conflict between the judicial and political branches exists in a particular case.

Governments > State & Territorial Governments > Claims By & Against

International Law > Dispute Resolution > Act of State Doctrine

Civil Procedure > Preliminary Considerations > Federal & State Interrelationships > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Preliminary Considerations > Federal & State Interrelationships > Abstention

International Law > Foreign & International Immunity > General Overview

HN5[] State & Territorial Governments, Claims By & Against

Under the terms of the commercial exception to the act of state doctrine, a court will not abstain from deciding a case involving the purely commercial act of a sovereign or one of its instrumentalities. To determine whether an act is purely commercial in character, a court looks not to the purpose of the act but to its nature, i.e., whether the activity is of the type that an individual would carry on for profit.

International Law > Dispute Resolution > Act of State Doctrine

HN6[] Dispute Resolution, Act of State Doctrine

While the act of contracting will in many circumstances be properly characterized as commercial conduct, the decision to award a defense contract to one bidder or another is by its very nature governmental.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Industry Practices > Federal Regulations > Antitrust Regulations

International Law > Dispute Resolution > Act of State Doctrine

International Law > Authority to Regulate > Anticompetitive Activities

HN7[] Federal Regulations, Antitrust Regulations

A private litigant is not necessarily immune from antitrust liability simply because the illegal scheme involves some acts by an agent of a foreign government.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Industry Practices > Federal Regulations > Antitrust Regulations

International Law > Dispute Resolution > Act of State Doctrine

HN8[] Federal Regulations, Antitrust Regulations

The act of state doctrine should not be applied to thwart legitimate American regulatory goals in the absence of a showing that adjudication may hinder international relations.

International Law > Dispute Resolution > Act of State Doctrine

HN9[] Dispute Resolution, Act of State Doctrine

The formulation of the act of state doctrine outlined in Mannington Mills and Curtiss-Wright does not allow a court to invoke the doctrine on the basis of mere conjecture about the effect that the disclosure of certain facts might have on the sensibilities of foreign governments. Instead, these cases require that a defendant come forward with proof that adjudication of a plaintiff's claim poses a demonstrable, not a speculative, threat to the conduct of foreign relations by the political branches of the United States government.

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act > General Overview

HN10[] Racketeering, Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act

Allegations of illegal conduct that constitute a single, completed criminal episode are in some circumstances sufficient to describe a pattern of racketeering activity. To determine whether a "pattern" exists, a court should consider a combination of specific factors such as the number of unlawful acts, the length of time over which the acts were committed, the similarity of the acts, the number of victims, the number of perpetrators, and the character of the unlawful activity.

Constitutional Law > ... > Fundamental Rights > Procedural Due Process > Self-Incrimination Privilege

Criminal Law & Procedure > Preliminary Proceedings > Extradition > Evidence

Criminal Law & Procedure > Preliminary Proceedings > Extradition > General Overview

HN11[] Procedural Due Process, Self-Incrimination Privilege

The court in resolving the issue of risk of foreign prosecution under the U.S. Const. amend. V must focus on whether there is an existing or potential prosecution of the witness; what foreign charges could be filed against him; whether prosecution of them would be initiated or furthered by his testimony; whether any such charges would entitle the foreign jurisdiction to have him extradited from the United States; and whether there is a likelihood that his testimony given in the United States would be disclosed to the foreign government.

Constitutional Law > ... > Fundamental Rights > Procedural Due Process > Self-Incrimination Privilege

Evidence > Privileges > Self-Incrimination Privilege > General Overview

HN12[] Procedural Due Process, Self-Incrimination Privilege

To permit assertion of the U.S. Const. amend. V privilege against self-incrimination, the apprehension of the risk of foreign prosecution must be a real and reasonable one, based on objective facts as distinguished from subjective speculation.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Discrimination > Types of Price Discrimination > Brokerage, Commissions & Compensation

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Discrimination > Defenses > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > General Overview

HN13[] Types of Price Discrimination, Brokerage, Commissions & Compensation

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 13(c).

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Bribery > Commercial Bribery > General Overview

HN14[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Robinson-Patman Act

Although as a general matter commercial bribery is actionable under § 2(c) of the Robinson-Patman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 13(c), a plaintiff must show that the illegal payments in question crossed the line from buyer to seller or vice versa.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > Requirements

HN15[] Private Actions, Remedies

Not every plaintiff who alleges an actionable claim under the antitrust laws has standing to bring a private antitrust action. In order to proceed with a claim, a plaintiff must be able to demonstrate that it is within the class of those injured in their business or property who, based on a variety of factors, are best suited to further the purposes of the statute by remedying the violation alleged.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > Robinson-Patman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > General Overview

HN16[] Robinson-Patman Act, Claims

A private plaintiff does not have to prove price discrimination to recover for a violation of § 2(c) of the Robinson-Patman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 13(c), but the plaintiff must still meet the standing requirements to proceed.

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Standing > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Bribery > Commercial Bribery > General Overview

Governments > Local Governments > Claims By & Against

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > Robinson-Patman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Claims

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Crimes Against Persons > Bribery > General Overview

HN17[] Justiciability, Standing

A direct competitor of a company that obtains a contract through commercial bribery has standing to press a claim against the briber under § 2(c) of the Robinson-Patman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 13(c).

Counsel: Thomas H. Sear, Esq. (Argued) Rhonda D. Orin, Esq, Spengler, Carlson, Gubar, Brodsky & Frischling, New York, New York, Attorneys for Appellee-Cross-Appellant, W.S. Kirkpatrick & Co., Inc., et al.

Thomas B. Rutter, Esq. (Argued) Rutter, Turner & Stein, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, Attorney for Appellant-Cross-Appellee, Environmental Tectonics International, Inc.

Theodore V. Wells, Jr., Esq., Robert L. Krakower, Esq. (Argued) Lowenstein, Sandler, Kohl, Fisher & Boylan, Roseland, New Jersey, Attorneys for Appellee-Cross-Appellant, Harry G. Carpenter.

Judges: Greenberg and Scirica, Circuit Judges and Pollak, District Judge. *

---

* Honorable Louis H. Pollak, United States District Judge for the Eastern District of Pennsylvania, sitting by designation.

Opinion by: POLLAK

Opinion

[*1054] OPINION OF THE COURT

POLLAK, District Judge:

Appellant Environmental Tectonics Corporation International ("ETC"), a Pennsylvania corporation, brought this action to recover damages against several defendants for, inter alia, violations [2] of the federal Racketeering Influenced Corrupt Organizations Acts, 18 U.S.C. §§ 1962-1968, the New Jersey Anti-Racketeering Act, 2C N.J.C.S. § 41-1 et seq., and the Robinson-Patman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 13(c). Essentially, ETC claims to have been injured by an apparently successful scheme, allegedly participated in by all of the defendants, to influence the award of a Nigerian defense contract through bribery of Nigerian government officials. The district court concluded that the act of state doctrine barred adjudication of ETC's claims, and dismissed the action in its entirety. In the [*1055] alternative, the court also ruled on other substantive and procedural issues.

I.

This action arose from the award of a contract by the Federal Republic of Nigeria to defendants W. S. Kirkpatrick & Co. ("Kirkpatrick") and W. S. Kirkpatrick & Co. International ("Kirkpatrick International"), both of which are New Jersey corporations. Kirkpatrick is in the business of selling and brokering aircraft equipment, parts and facilities to airlines and foreign air forces. Kirkpatrick International, its wholly-owned subsidiary, was formed to carry out Kirkpatrick's [3] duties under the contract to be awarded by the Nigerian government. Also named as defendants were Kirkpatrick's parent corporations, DIC (Holding) Inc. ("DIC"), a Delaware Corporation, and International Development Corporation, S.A. ("IDC"), a Luxembourg corporation.

In 1980, when the events alleged in the amended complaint [1] began, defendant Harry Carpenter was chairman of Kirkpatrick's board of directors and the company's chief executive officer. In 1980, Carpenter learned that the Nigerian government was interested in purchasing aeromedical equipment, and in constructing and equipping an aeromedical center for the Nigerian Air Force at Kaduna Air Force Base (the "Air Force contract"). Kirkpatrick contracted with defendants Emro Engineering Co., Inc. ("EMRO") and Nautilus Environmedical Systems, Inc. ("Nautilus") to provide engineering, design and related assistance needed to build the proposed facility and to supply the equipment.

[4] Carpenter hired a Nigerian national, defendant Benson ("Tunde") Akindele, to act as Kirkpatrick's local agent in all matters pertaining to the Air Force contract. In or around March of 1981, Carpenter and Nautilus president Ross Saxon [2] met with Akindele to discuss their bid strategy. According to a contemporaneous memorandum written by Carpenter, Akindele told Carpenter and Saxon that to secure the bid Kirkpatrick should be prepared to pay a sales commission totalling twenty percent (20%) of the contract price. Most of this commission was to be paid to Nigerian political and military officials. [3] Akindele explained that Nigerian officials generally expected such payments from contract bidders, and that American companies often lost Nigerian defense contracts to their European competitors because they failed to make such arrangements.

---

[1] The following factual recital is based primarily on the amended complaint.

[2] Saxon and Robert Ruppert, Emro's president, were also named as defendants. Two other Kirkpatrick officers, Robert H. Edwards and John M. Krankel, were named as well.

[3] ETC alleged in its complaint that the 20% commission was to be distributed as follows: 2 1/2% for Akindele, 5% for the Nigerian Air Force, 2 1/2% for the medical group, 5% for a political party, 2 1/2% for the relevant cabinet minister, and 2 1/2% for other key defense personnel.

[5] Through a written agreement with Akindele, Kirkpatrick agreed to pay the commissions to two Panamanian corporations. In May of 1981, these corporations -- which were controlled by Akindele -- were established to receive the commissions and to distribute them to Nigerian officials. On March 19, 1982, the Nigerian Defense Ministry entered into an agreement awarding the Air Force contract to Kirkpatrick International. In September of 1982, the Nigerian government made the first of four contract payments to Kirkpatrick. The remaining payments were made in December of 1982, in February of 1983, and in August of 1983. After each of the four contract payments, the defendants via the United States mails and wire transfers paid a portion of the promised commissions to Akindele's Panamanian corporations, whence the monies were distributed to Nigerian officials. In the end, Kirkpatrick's commission payments to the Panamanian corporations, and thus, to Akindele and various Nigerian officials, totalled over $ 1.7 million.

In the latter half of 1981 and 1982, while Kirkpatrick was implementing the bid strategy described above, ETC, which is also in the business of selling aeromedical [*1056] [6] equipment to foreign governments, was preparing its own bid for the Air Force project. ETC submitted its pricing information to the Nigerian government in February of 1981, and it continued in contact with Nigerian military and diplomatic officials throughout the course of that year. ETC's president met with Nigerian officials in Nigeria, and submitted a formal bid for the Air Force contract in December of 1981. ETC submitted its final formal bid in February of 1982, a month before the Nigerian government awarded the contract to Kirkpatrick.

ETC states that it decided to investigate the Nigerian government's award of the Kaduna contract to Kirkpatrick in April of 1983, after learning that its bid had been far lower than Kirkpatrick's. ETC reported its findings to the Nigerian Air Force [4] and to the United States Embassy in Lagos, Nigeria. After an investigation by the United States Justice Department, Carpenter and Kirkpatrick each were charged with violating the Foreign Corrupt Practices Act, 15 U.S.C. § 78dd-2 (hereinafter "FCPA").

[7] As part of their plea negotiations on the United States charges, Kirkpatrick and Carpenter both agreed to offers of proof which outlined the Air Force contract scheme in its entirety, including Carpenter's hiring of Akindele, and Akindele's control of the Panamanian corporations. Both offers of proof also stated that Akindele and Carpenter agreed that the money paid to the Panamanian corporations as commissions would be distributed to Nigerian political and military officials. Carpenter and Kirkpatrick both pleaded guilty to one FCPA violation, and were eventually sentenced: Carpenter to two hundred hours of community service and a fine of $ 10,000, and Kirkpatrick to a fine of $ 75,000, payable over a five-year period. [5]

---

[4] Both bribery and the acceptance of a bribe by a government official are illegal under Nigerian law. See Decree No. 38 (November 22, 1975) in Federal Republic of Nigeria Official Gazette Extraordinary, No. 59, December 2, 1975.

[5] At Kirkpatrick's sentencing on January 6, 1986, Assistant United States Attorney Steven Levy, who was in charge of Carpenter's and Kirkpatrick's prosecutions, made the following representation to the court:

> Your Honor, I guess I would also like to say that the political impact of this case, of this case cannot be underestimated [sic]. . . . I can say that the government of Nigeria as well as the State Department [of the United States] have shown a vital interest in this case. In fact, the State Department has been very concerned about the possible political impact upon the government of Nigeria if the Grand Jury disclosed certain information about who possibly received the payments which are set forth in the memorandum that Mr. Carpenter wrote to other senior officers of the corporation.
>
> I have as attorney for the Government [of the United States], your Honor, been resisting attempts by the Nigerian government to find out this information because I have not had a disclosure order and the State Department has its concerns about what would happen if the government of Nigeria actually knew who was involved in this scheme to sort of rip off money from this Nigerian contract.
>
> This is not a case where there is not a victim. Shagari, who was the president of Nigeria at the time of this contract[,] is now under house arrest. Some of these other individuals[,] and I can name them if the Court is interested, are very prominent military figures who are still in power in Nigeria. The Nigerian government would certainly like to have their names, ...

Transcript of Sentencing of Kirkpatrick, dated January 6, 1986, p. 9, 1.21 to p. 10, 1. 22.

[8] ETC filed this action shortly after Kirkpatrick's sentencing. Defendants filed a motion to dismiss under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(b)(6), which contended, inter alia, that the plaintiff had failed to allege a "pattern of racketeering activity" as required by the federal and state [Text Deleted by Court Emendation] racketeering statutes. ETC filed an amended complaint that responded to some of the issues raised by the defendants' motion to dismiss, and that added common law counts to ETC's antitrust, RICO, and anti-racketeering counts. ETC also filed an answer to the remainder of the defendants' motion to dismiss.

In their reply to ETC's answer to their motion, defendants moved for dismissal of the action in its entirety on act of state grounds. The district court requested further submissions from the parties in the form of answers to specific questions. The court also requested a Bernstein letter, [*1057] i.e., an opinion from the State Department on whether the act of state doctrine should be applied in the circumstances presented by this case. [6] Legal Adviser Abraham Sofaer responded to the court's request in a letter dated December 10, 1986, which is [9] appended to this opinion. Treating defendants' motion to dismiss as a motion for summary judgment, the district court dismissed the action on act of state grounds. See Environmental Tectonics Corp., International v. W.S. Kirkpatrick & Co., Inc., 659 F. Supp. 1381 (D.N.J. 1987).

[10] Although the dismissal on act of state grounds embraced ETC's entire claim against all the defendants, the district court went on to rule, in the alternative, on other issues: The court rejected defendants' contention that ETC lacked standing to assert antitrust and RICO claims. The court did, however, dismiss the RICO count for failure to allege a pattern of racketeering activity. For the same reason, the court dismissed the New Jersey Anti-Racketeering count. In addition, the court upheld a magistrate's determination that Carpenter was entitled to decline to answer, on Fifth Amendment grounds, certain questions put to him on deposition. Finally, the court held that ETC's amended complaint adequately stated a case for holding IDC and DIC legally responsible for Kirkpatrick's scheme to obtain the Air Force contract.

ETC appeals from the act of state, [Text Deleted by Court Emendation] racketeering, and Fifth Amendment rulings. The defendants, in addition to urging the correctness of these rulings, have cross-appealed from those alternative rulings that were adverse to them. Since the district court's grant of summary judgment on act of state grounds, if affirmed here, would obviate [11] consideration of all other issues, we turn first to the act of state question.

II.

HN1[] On review of a district court's grant of summary judgment, we utilize the same standard that the district court was required to apply. See Tigg Corp. v. Dow Corning Corp., 822 F.2d 358, 361 (3rd Cir. 1987). There is no real disagreement on the facts relevant to the district court's act of state determination. On this appeal, therefore, we are called upon to decide whether the appellees were entitled to judgment as a matter of law. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(c).

---

[6] The term "Bernstein letter" is derived from the Second Circuit's opinion in Bernstein v. N.V. Nederlandsche-Amerikaansche Stoomvaart-Maatschappij, 210 F.2d 375 (2nd Cir. 1954). Plaintiff Bernstein, a German national, owned a corporation that was confiscated by the Nazi government during World War II. The corporation's main asset was a ship; Bernstein was forced to relinquish title to the ship, as well as all other interest in the corporation. The Second Circuit initially dismissed Bernstein's suit against the ship's subsequent owners on act of state grounds. See Bernstein v. Van Heyghen Freres Societe Anonyme, 163 F.2d 246 (2nd Cir. 1947). The court reversed itself after receiving a letter from the State Department's Legal Adviser, which stated that it was United States policy to permit the courts to exercise jurisdiction over claims to recover property expropriated by Nazi officials.

The Supreme Court subsequently determined that, while it was proper for a federal court to consider a Bernstein letter, the Legal Adviser's recommendation in any given case was not to be considered binding on the court. In First National City Bank v. Banco Nacional de Cuba, 406 U.S. 759, 32 L. Ed. 2d 466, 92 S. Ct. 1808 (1972), Justice Rehnquist, announcing the judgment of the court, argued that the federal courts should defer to the view of the State Department; but only two other members of the court, Chief Justice Burger and Justice White, joined in his opinion. Justices Douglas and Powell, each of whom concurred separately, rejected the view that the State Department's view should control. So, too, did Justice Brennan, joined by Justices Stewart, Marshall, and Blackmun in dissent.

ETC's challenge to the district court's grant of summary judgment raises important issues about the proper application of the act of state doctrine. HN2[] The doctrine is the judiciary's institutional response to the foreign relations tensions that can be generated when a United States court appears to sit in judgment on a foreign state's regulation of its internal affairs. Under the doctrine, the courts of this country will refrain from judging [12] the validity of a foreign state's governmental [*1058] acts in regard to matters within that country's borders. See Restatement (Revised) of Foreign Relations Law of the United States § 469[428] (1986). The party moving for the doctrine's application has the burden of proving that dismissal is an appropriate response to the circumstances presented in the case. See Alfred Dunhill of London, Inc. v. Cuba, 425 U.S. 682, 694, 48 L. Ed. 2d 301, 96 S. Ct. 1854 (1976); Williams v. Curtiss-Wright, 694 F.2d 300, 303 n.4 (3rd Cir. 1982).

Although earlier formulations of the doctrine were grounded in notions of comity among sister states, [7] the core concern of modern act of state jurisprudence is preserving the separation of powers between the federal judiciary and the political branches of our government -- especially, the executive branch, where primary responsibility for the conduct of foreign affairs is lodged. As explained by the Supreme Court in Banco Nacional de Cuba v. Sabbatino, 376 U.S. 398, 11 L. Ed. 2d 804, 84 S. Ct. 923 (1964), the doctrine "expresses the strong sense of the Judicial Branch that its engagement in [13] the task of passing on the validity of foreign acts of state may hinder rather than further this country's pursuit of goals both for itself and for the community of nations as a whole in the international sphere." Id. at 423. Thus, HN3[] courts are required to decline to exercise jurisdiction over cases that may embarrass or impede the political branches of government in their conduct of foreign affairs. See First Nat. City Bank v. Banco Nacional de Cuba, 406 U.S. 759, 765-68, 32 L. Ed. 2d 466, 92 S. Ct. 1808 (1972) (hereinafter "Citibank").

Sensitively applied, the doctrine can prevent judicial entanglement in international conflicts that are more appropriately resolved through political channels. [14] Individual litigants and the enforcement of national policies pay a price, however, for this institutional self-discipline -- its application in effect means that "on occasion individual litigants may have to forgo decisions on the merits of their claims because the involvement of the courts in such a decision might frustrate the conduct of the Nation's foreign policy." Citibank, 406 U.S. at 769 (opinion of Rehnquist, J.). For this reason, the Supreme Court has not laid down HN4[] rigid rules to govern the doctrine's application, but leaves it to the lower courts to determine whether a conflict between the judicial and political branches exists in a particular case. See id. at 775-76 (Powell, J. concurring); Mannington Mills v. Congoleum Corp., 595 F.2d 1287, 1293 (3rd Cir. 1979) (courts should analyze the nature of the questioned conduct and the effect upon the parties in addition to appraising the sovereign's role).

The main issue raised by ETC's appeal involves the proper application of the doctrine when a litigant invokes the doctrine as [15] a defense to a suit for damage or injury stemming from a course of events that included some acts by officials of a foreign government. Sabbatino and the Supreme Court's other modern act of state cases have focused on state expropriations of private property, the clearest example of a political act that, to paraphrase Justice Harlan, touches on the nerves of the international community. See Sabbatino, 376 U.S. at 428. This has, however, left a broad range of governmental conduct -- e.g., court decisions; the granting of a license, patent, or some other state monopoly; or, as in this case, the award of a construction or procurement contract -- for lower courts to consider.

The appellant has advanced several objections to the district court's act of state determination. Two of these objections lack merit. First, we agree with the district court's conclusion that the award of a military procurement contract can be, in certain circumstances, a sufficiently formal expression of a government's public interests to trigger application of the doctrine. It is true that certain governmentally authorized acts, such as the award of a patent or the acts of a bankruptcy [16] trustee, are considered so routine as to be not of substantial [*1059] concern to the political branches in their conduct of foreign policy. See Remington Rand Corp. v. Business Systems, Inc., 830 F.2d 1260, 1265 (3rd Cir. 1987); Mannington Mills, 595 F.2d at 1294. But the award of a major defense contract generally does not result from a near-mechanical exercise of narrowly-defined governmental discretion. The award of a military contract, particularly one for a major project, is usually influenced by national security considerations -- considerations that are far from routine.

[7] See Underhill v. Hernandez, 168 U.S. 250, 252, 42 L. Ed. 456, 18 S. Ct. 83 (1898); Restatement (Revised) of U.S. Foreign Relations Law § 469 [428] comment a.

We also agree with the district court that the so-called "commercial" exception to the act of state doctrine -- an exception endorsed by a plurality of the Supreme Court but neither acquiesced in nor rejected by a majority, see Alfred Dunhill of London v. Cuba, 425 U.S. 682, 48 L. Ed. 2d 301, 96 S. Ct. 1854 (1976) -- has no application to this case. [8] HN5[] Under the commercial exception's terms, a court would not abstain from deciding a case involving the purely [17] commercial act of a sovereign or one of its instrumentalities. See Dunhill, 425 U.S. at 695 (plurality opinion of White, J.). To determine whether an act is purely commercial in character, a court looks not to the purpose of the act but to its nature, i.e., whether the activity is of the type that an individual would carry on for profit. Cf. Letelier v. Republic of Chile, 748 F.2d 790, 797 (2nd Cir. 1984) (applying the Foreign Sovereign Immunity Act's definition of "commercial"), cert. denied 471 U.S. 1125, 86 L. Ed. 2d 273, 105 S. Ct. 2656 (1985); Texas Trading v. Federal Republic of Nigeria, 647 F.2d 300, 310 (2nd Cir. 1981) (same), cert. denied 454 U.S. 1148, 71 L. Ed. 2d 301, 102 S. Ct. 1012 (1982). HN6[] While the act of contracting will in many circumstances be properly characterized as commercial conduct, the decision to award a defense contract to one bidder or another is by its very nature governmental. See Curtiss-Wright, 694 F.2d at 302.

[18] We part company with the district court, however, on the remainder of its act of state analysis. The district court employed a formulation of the doctrine that barred the adjudication of ETC's claims "if the inquiry presented for judicial determination includes the motivation of a sovereign act which would result in embarrassment to the sovereign or constitute interference in the conduct of the foreign policy of the United States." ETC, 659 F. Supp. at 1392-93. The court found that adjudication of ETC's claims would lead inevitably to an examination of the Nigerian government's motives in awarding the Nigerian contract to Kirkpatrick. Because the district court was convinced that such a finding would be interpreted as criticism of the Nigerian Government, it concluded that this case presents the type of situation which precludes judicial inquiry. See id. at 1393.

In reaching its conclusion, the district court relied primarily on the interpretation of the act of state doctrine advanced in a Ninth Circuit case, Clayco Petroleum v. Occidental Petroleum, 712 F.2d 404 (9th Cir. 1983), cert. denied 464 U.S. 1040, 79 L. Ed. 2d 168, 104 S. Ct. 703 (1984). [19] In Clayco, the plaintiff and the defendant, Occidental Petroleum, were in competition for an off-shore oil concession offered by Um Al Quywayn. Clayco alleged that it was first offered the concession, but that Um Al Quywayn's oil minister awarded Occidental the contract after Occidental paid the minister and his son over $ 400,000 in bribes. After the media discovered and reported the bribery scheme, the SEC brought an action against Occidental that charged violations of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934, based on the allegedly illegal payments. Occidental agreed to a permanent injunction, and to an internal review of its bidding practices. Clayco brought suit after the report prepared pursuant to that review revealed that illegal payments had in fact been made. See Clayco, 712 F.2d at 405-06. The district court dismissed Clayco's lawsuit on act of state grounds.

[*1060] In a per curiam opinion, the Ninth Circuit affirmed the dismissal, concluding that the act of state doctrine barred adjudication of Clayco's claims. Although calling for a "flexible" approach to the doctrine's application, the court expressed its unwillingness to permit judicial [20] inquiry into the motivation behind Um Al Quywayn's award of the concession. Since a determination that bribery had in fact occurred would "impugn or question the nobility of a foreign nation's motivation," and since "the very existence of plaintiffs' claim depends upon establishing that the motivation for the sovereign act was bribery," the court concluded that the executive's conduct of foreign affairs was sure to be embarrassed by such a proceeding. See Clayco, 712 F.2d at 407.

---

[8] In Curtiss-Wright, 694 F.2d at 302 n.2, this court noted that the commercial exception has not been endorsed by a majority of the Supreme Court. We have no occasion here for going beyond what was said in Curtiss-Wright.

Clayco's expansive application of the act of state doctrine seems at variance with the principle which has guided this court, that the doctrine "is not lightly to be imposed. . . ." [9] Mannington Mills, 595 F.2d at 1293. In Mannington Mills, the plaintiff claimed that defendant Congoleum violated the antitrust laws by using patents it allegedly procured by fraud to restrict the plaintiff's trade abroad. In bringing its suit, plaintiff did not ask the court to declare the foreign patents invalid. Instead, Mannington argued that its action was concerned only with proving Congoleum's violations of United States trade regulations. See Mannington Mills, 595 F.2d at 1290-91. [21]

[22] In Mannington Mills this court held, through Judge Weis, that the act of state doctrine did not bar adjudication of the plaintiff's claims. The court focused on the nature of the questioned conduct -- the grant of a patent, an essentially routine act that raised no serious foreign policy concerns. See id. at 1294. But implicit in the opinion was an unwillingness to allow litigants to shield themselves from the consequences of illegal conduct abroad by invoking the act of state doctrine as a defense in American courts. See id. at 1293.

What was implicit in Mannington Mills became explicit in Williams v. Curtiss-Wright. Plaintiff Williams alleged that defendant Curtiss-Wright monopolized the international market for a certain kind of jet engine, and claimed violations of the federal antitrust laws, as well as injury caused by common-law torts. Curtiss-Wright moved to dismiss Williams' complaint on act of state grounds, arguing that the doctrine precluded the examination of foreign governments' motives in refusing to buy engine parts from the plaintiff. The district court denied Curtiss-Wright's motion. See Curtiss-Wright, 694 F.2d at 301-02. [23]

On appeal, this court, again speaking through Judge Weis, affirmed. This court rejected an approach to the doctrine that would in all circumstances foreclose judicial scrutiny of the motivations behind the military procurement decisions of a foreign government. Judge Weis noted that HN7[] a private litigant is not necessarily immune from antitrust liability simply because the illegal scheme involves some acts by an agent of a foreign government. See id. at 304 (citing Continental Ore v. Union Carbide & Carbon Corp., 370 U.S. 690, 8 L. Ed. 2d 777, 82 S. Ct. 1404 (1962)). The opinion stressed the importance of insuring that the act of state doctrine not interfere with the implementation of the policies served by antitrust and other regulatory statutes. HN8[] "The act of state doctrine should not be applied to thwart legitimate American regulatory goals in the absence of a [*1061] showing that adjudication may hinder international relations. . . ." See id. at 304 (citations [24] omitted). Having found that the record did not show that litigation of Williams' claims would impede the executive's conduct of foreign relations, this court held that application of the doctrine was not called for.

HN9[] The formulation of the act of state doctrine outlined in Mannington Mills and Curtiss-Wright does not allow a court to invoke the doctrine on the basis of mere conjecture about the effect that the disclosure of certain facts might have on the sensibilities of foreign governments. Instead, these cases require that a defendant come forward with proof that adjudication of a plaintiff's claim poses a demonstrable, not a speculative, threat to the conduct of foreign relations by the political branches of the United States government.

In the instant case, the district court's dismissal was based on little more than speculation about the effect that ETC's lawsuit might have on relations between the United States and Nigeria. The traditional justification for involving the doctrine, i.e., avoiding a judicial determination of the legal validity of a state's act within its own [25] borders, is not present in this case. Appellant does not seek to have the Air Force contract invalidated, nor does it

---

[9] One commentator has noted that Clayco has adopted the "strict" view of the act of state doctrine favored by other courts, most notably the Second Circuit in Hunt v. Mobil Oil, 550 F.2d 68 (2nd Cir.), cert. denied 434 U.S. 984, 54 L. Ed. 2d 477, 98 S. Ct. 608 (1977), that precludes examination of a foreign sovereign's motivations. See Bazyler, Abolishing the Act of State Doctrine, 134 U. Pa. L. Rev. 325, 357 n.190 (1986). Courts and commentators alike have criticized this interpretation of the doctrine as discouraging effective enforcement of United States regulatory policies against those who violate the law by engaging in illegal or anticompetitive conduct abroad. See, e.g., Industrial Investment Development Corp. v. Mitsui & Co., Ltd., 594 F.2d 48, 55 (5th Cir. 1979), cert. denied 445 U.S. 903, 100 S. Ct. 1078, 63 L. Ed. 2d 318 (1980); Sage International, Ltd. v. Cadillac Gage Co., 534 F. Supp. 896 (E.D. Mich. 1981); Bazyler, supra, at 347. This court has expressed similar concerns with too sweeping an application of the doctrine. See Curtiss-Wright, 694 F.2d at 304 & n.5.

seek compensation for its alleged losses from the Nigerian government. No Nigerian official is named as a defendant in the complaint.

Thus, to resolve ETC's claims on their merits, the district court would be called on simply to determine as a factual matter whether the appellees' alleged bribery of Nigerian officials motivated the award of the contract. The only information before the court authoritatively measuring the impact such a determination might have on the executive's conduct of foreign policy was the letter from Legal Adviser Sofaer. [10] That official pronouncement of State Department policy, as it relates to this litigation, reads in pertinent part, as follows:

> In recent years, the United States Executive Branch has addressed the question of whether the act of state doctrine requires dismissal of proceedings that may call for judicial inquiry into the motivations (as opposed to the legal validity) of the public acts of foreign states. Specifically, as the United States stated in an amicus curiae brief before the United States Supreme Court: [26]
>
> While judicial examination of purpose may on occasion implicate some of the concerns underlying the act of state doctrine, that doctrine only precludes judicial questioning of the validity or legality of foreign government actions. . . .
>
> None of this Court's decisions suggest that the act of state doctrine precludes all judicial inquiries that may embarrass a foreign state or affect the political branches' conduct of foreign relations. Rather, the act of state doctrine is based on the need to avoid unprincipled decisions resulting from the absence of legal standards, and the unique embarrassment, and the particular interference with the conduct of foreign affairs, that may result from the judicial determination that a foreign sovereign's acts are invalid. Judicial inquiry into the purpose of a foreign sovereign's acts would not require a court to rule on the legality of those acts, and a finding concerning purpose would not entail the particular kind of harm that the act of state doctrine is designed to avoid. Dismissal of a complaint before the development of evidence, merely because adjudication raises the bare possibility of embarrassment, constitutes an unwarranted [27] expansion of the act of state doctrine and is contrary to the flexibility with which that doctrine should be applied.
>
> These statements represent our views. As the Department understands the allegations in the instant suit, the validity of the Nigerian Government's decision to award the contract in question is not in question. If the adjudication of this suit were to involve a judicial inquiry into the [*1062] motivations of the government of Nigeria's decision to award the contract, the Department does not believe the act of state doctrine would bar the court from adjudicating this dispute.

See Letter from Abraham D. Sofaer, Appendix to this Opinion (December 10, 1986) (emphasis in original).

In sum, the State Department is satisfied [28] that the conduct of American foreign policy relative to Nigeria will not be compromised by orderly federal court adjudication of ETC's lawsuit. [11] [29] We appreciate, of course, that

---

[10] Assistant United States Attorney Levy's representations at Kirkpatrick's sentencing, supra note 5, were not made in the course of these proceedings, were not addressed to act of state questions, and antedated the Legal Adviser's letter by nearly a year.

[11] The Legal Adviser's letter does urge the court to exercise "caution and due regard for foreign sensibilities" at each stage of the litigation. In particular, the court is asked "to endeavor to assure that no unnecessary inquiries are made, or allegations tested, during the course of discovery or trial." Interpreting this passage as a failure on the part of the Legal Adviser to "sign off" completely on the act of state question, the district court dismissed the Legal Adviser's caveats with respect to the production of evidence as impractical and unconstitutional. See ETC, 659 F. Supp. at 1398.

The Legal Adviser's expressions of concern about the possible damage to foreign relations that may result from wide-ranging discovery against foreign officials should not have been interpreted as a sign of ambivalence about the act of state question. Rather, the Legal Adviser simply urged the court to exercise appropriate supervision over discovery and other trial preparation to limit damage to foreign sensibilities. This advice is far from impractical. Foreign governments have often expressed their dissatisfaction with the wide discovery authorized under the Federal Rules, finding it intrusive and overbroad when compared to the European version of the fact-finding process. See Comment, Antitrust Suits Involving Foreign Commerce, 135 U. Pa. L. Rev.

the Department's legal conclusions as to the reach of the act of state doctrine are not controlling on the courts. [12] But the Department's factual assessment of whether fulfillment of its responsibilities will be prejudiced by the course of civil litigation is entitled to substantial respect. [13] As against that assessment, defendants have not developed a factual record "showing that adjudication may hinder international relations . . . ." Curtiss-Wright, 694 F.2d at 304.

This litigation falls squarely within the teaching of Curtiss-Wright. In both cases, the plaintiff sought damages from defendants who allegedly used illegal tactics to influence a foreign government's award of a contract. In both cases, adjudicating the claims before the court would have required at most an inquiry only into the motivations behind, rather than the legality of, the foreign government's acts. And, finally, the defendants in each case failed to demonstrate that the litigation process was bound to result in the type of institutional conflict between the political and judicial branches that would justify invoking the doctrine. We therefore will reverse the court's grant of summary judgment, and will remand the case for further proceedings. [14] [30]

III.

Having found that the act of state doctrine is no bar to appellant's claims, we turn to the remaining issues presented. First, ETC argues that the district court erred in dismissing the state and federal racketeering claims. Second, ETC seeks reversal of the district court's order barring the deposition testimony of defendant Carpenter, who asserted his Fifth Amendment [*1063] privilege when examined about Kirkpatrick's Air Force contract bid. Third, all of the defendants challenge the district court's determination that ETC has standing [31] to bring its antitrust and [Text Deleted by Court Emendation] racketeering claims. And, fourth, defendant DIC reiterates its contention that it is insulated from liability for any misdeeds of Kirkpatrick and Carpenter. We address these questions in turn.

A.

The district court dismissed ETC's state and federal [Text Deleted by Court Emendation] racketeering claims because it concluded that the amended complaint failed to allege facts establishing a pattern of racketeering activity. Noting that this court had not formulated a definition of the pattern requirement, the district court adopted a definition of pattern which would have required the appellant to allege facts establishing either (1) more than one criminal scheme undertaken by the defendants, or (2) a single, open-ended scheme. See Environmental Tectonics v. W. S. Kirkpatrick & Co., et al., 659 F. Supp. 1381, 1390 (D.N.J. 1987). The district court found that ETC's amended complaint met neither prong of this test because it alleged a single scheme which was neither "continuous" nor "on-going."

The pattern requirement accepted by the district court has since been rejected by this court. In Barticheck v. Fidelity Union Bank, 832 F.2d 36 (3rd Cir. 1987), [32] this court held that HN10[] allegations of illegal conduct that constitute a single, completed criminal episode are in some circumstances sufficient to describe a pattern of racketeering activity. To determine whether a "pattern" exists, a court should consider a combination of specific

---

1003, 1013-17 (1987). American judicial insensitivity to this foreign reaction has resulted in the enactment of "blocking" laws, i.e. laws that are specifically designed to block the Federal Rules' discovery provisions. See id. at 1016. The State Department's advice on this matter should be read as nothing more than a reminder to the district court of the complaints about American litigation with which the executive has become familiar.

[12] See supra note 6.

[13] That respect is, in our judgment, enhanced when the Legal Adviser is one who, in his former capacity as a federal judge, has addressed act of state problems with marked sensitivity and rigor in a particularly demanding context. See Sharon v. Time, 599 F. Supp. 538 (S.D.N.Y. 1984).

[14] ETC has also argued that Mannington Mills' ten-factor balancing test should not result in a dismissal of the case on the basis of international comity. See Mannington Mills, 595 F.2d at 1297-98. Since the issue apparently was not raised below, and the record is substantially devoid of the sort of information called for by the Mannington Mills test, it would be inappropriate for this issue to be examined for the first time on appeal.

factors such as the number of unlawful acts, the length of time over which the acts were committed, the similarity of the acts, the number of victims, the number of perpetrators, and the character of the unlawful activity. See id. at 38-39; Saporito et al. v. Combustion Engineering, 843 F.2d 666, Slip Op. at 24 (1988).

The factual allegations in ETC's amended complaint satisfy this more flexible interpretation of RICO's pattern requirement. The predicate acts alleged in the amended complaint -- mail and wire fraud, bribery, and violations of the Foreign Corrupt Practices Act -- were all committed in connection with (or, to facilitate) the payments by Kirkpatrick to the Panamanian corporations. One could view these payments as a single illegal payment separated into installments, [33] and thus as a one-time affair, rather than as "criminal activity that, because of its organization, duration, and objectives poses, or during its existence posed, a threat of a series of injuries over a significant period of time." Marshall-Silver Construction Co. v. Mendel, et al., 835 F.2d 63, 66-67 (3rd Cir. 1987). But, to focus only on the series of payments -- i.e., one bribe divided into four parts -- is to ignore the complexity of Kirkpatrick's scheme. If the appellant's allegations are true, a European conglomerate, and two American corporations -- successfully, and over a two-year period -- organized to influence a foreign country's award of a procurement contract by illegal means. To facilitate their scheme, they hired a consultant who had contacts with Nigerian officials who were amenable to such an arrangement. This consultant also developed a sophisticated and outwardly legal front for the payments, thereby increasing the difficulty already inherent in detecting such a scheme. The wire and mail communications used to implement this undertaking account for numerous violations of federal law.

The nature of the acts alleged and the number of victims are [34] also important considerations in this analysis. See Barticheck, 832 F.2d at 39. ETC claims to have suffered direct economic injury from the appellees' scheme. By illegally influencing the decisions of appellees' public officials, however, appellees have also created an even larger class of victims, the citizens of Nigeria. Cf. Town of Kearny v. Hudson Meadows Urban Renewal Corp., 829 F.2d 1263, 1268 (3rd Cir. 1987) (two separate schemes to bribe local government officials made victims of the "taxpayers and residents of the Town of Kearny"). Moreover, [*1064] because bribery of foreign officials by American businessmen diminishes this nation's stature and influence abroad, conduct of the kind here alleged victimizes the citizens of this nation as well.

Our assessment of the amended complaint in light of Barticheck's specific factors persuades us that ETC has alleged a "pattern of racketeering activity" within the meaning of the statute. ETC may proceed on its RICO claim, and -- assuming, as have the district court and the parties, that the pattern requirements for the New Jersey Anti-Racketeering act are substantially similar -- on its [35] state racketeering claims as well.

B.

ETC's final ground of appeal challenges the district court's decision that the Fifth Amendment privilege against self-incrimination shielded Carpenter from responding to deposition questions the answers to which might yield evidence that Carpenter had committed crimes under Nigerian law. ETC argues that the record does not establish any significant likelihood that responding to deposition questions here would expose Carpenter to trial in the courts of Nigeria. ETC also argues that, in any event, the Fifth Amendment is not a shield against foreign prosecution.

As summarized by the court below, the evidence adduced by Carpenter to establish the risk of criminal prosecution in Nigeria was as follows:

> Prior to his deposition, Carpenter submitted an affidavit . . . setting forth his reasons for fearing criminal prosecution in Nigeria and detailing the factual basis of the privilege. As discussed earlier in the opinion, defendants Kirkpatrick and Carpenter both pled guilty to violations of the FCPA in connection with the Nigerian Contract. According to Akindele, Carpenter's plea and sentencing were receiving considerable media attention [36] and were "front page news" in Nigeria. Apparently, local news coverage of Carpenter's plea and sentencing were subsequently reported by Nigerian newspapers. Akindele also told Carpenter of certain Nigerian government officials' desire to prosecute Carpenter in connection with the Nigerian contract. Akindele further warned Carpenter not to travel to Nigeria and to exercise care in travelling in Europe or Africa because there was a risk he would be taken by force to Nigeria. In January, 1986, Carpenter's attorney was informed by > a United States Government official that "the Nigerians wanted to get [Carpenter] to Nigeria." This information, which originally came from Interpol, was relayed to Carpenter. Carpenter has since been again warned not to travel abroad "and that the Nigerian interest in [his] case has not abated."

The magistrate reviewed this evidence in the light of the factors relevant to the risk of foreign prosecution enumerated by the Second Circuit in In re Grand Jury Subpoena of Flanagan, 691 F.2d 116, 121 (2nd Cir. 1982):

> HN11[] The court in [37] resolving the issue [must focus on] whether there is an existing or potential prosecution of [the witness]; what foreign charges could be filed against him; whether prosecution of them would be initiated or furthered by his testimony; whether any such charges would entitle the foreign jurisdiction to have him extradited from the United States; and whether there is a likelihood that his testimony given here would be disclosed to the foreign government.

The magistrate found "that, by defendant Carpenter's affidavit, there is a real fear that he might involuntarily be subject to the criminal jurisdiction of Nigeria." The district court concluded that "the Magistrate's decision has not been shown to be clearly erroneous or contrary to law." ETC, 659 F. Supp. at 1401.

We disagree. We have no doubt that the testimony ETC sought to elicit at deposition might aid in a criminal prosecution of Carpenter by Nigeria, if such a prosecution were undertaken. However, it is not contended that Carpenter, who has already pleaded guilty to the criminal charges brought by the United States, could be extradited to Nigeria for the alleged [*1065] bribes. The entire [38] risk of prosecution in Nigeria rests, therefore, on the possibility that Carpenter would be kidnapped by Nigerian authorities; and we do not think that possibility comes close enough to being a significant likelihood to carry the day. We are prepared to assume that a real fear, substantially grounded in fact, of being kidnapped by the agents of a foreign government with a view to prosecution by that government might well justify a witness' assertion of his or her fifth amendment privilege. But the fact that Carpenter has been admonished to avoid being kidnapped does not, in our judgment, constitute substantial proof that the feared conspiracy is more than gossamer. Nothing in this record supports an inference that kidnapping foreigners not resident in Nigeria in order to bring them to trial in Nigeria is characteristic of Nigerian law enforcement personnel.

That Carpenter is sincere in his apprehension of the risk does not mean that the apprehension justifies his assertion of the privilege. HN12[] "The apprehension," as the court noted in Flanagan, "must be a real and reasonable one, based [39] on objective facts as distinguished from subjective . . . speculation." Flanagan, 691 F.2d at 121. And this is because, as the Supreme Court made plain in Zicarelli v. New Jersey State Commission of Investigation, 406 U.S. 472, 478, 32 L. Ed. 2d 234, 92 S. Ct. 1670 (1972), rejecting the Fifth Amendment claim presented there, "the privilege protects against real dangers, not remote and speculative possibilities." In short, we think the record made by Carpenter does not constitute substantial evidence of "real dangers." [15]

---

[15] Carpenter might have met his burden under this standard if he had been officially warned by the United States Government to forgo travelling abroad in order to avoid capture by Nigerian agents seeking to bring him to Nigeria for trial. Other evidence -- e.g. a pending prosecution or the institution or threatened institution of extradition proceedings -- might also have supported Carpenter's assertion of the privilege.

The justifications that Carpenter advances in this case, however, amount to nothing more than speculation about Nigeria's intentions. First, the warnings by Benson Akindele, who does not appear to be a Nigerian official, do not, standing alone, provide a basis for Carpenter's fear of prosecution. And the somewhat ambiguous representation of Assistant United States Attorney Steven Levy with respect to Nigeria's "vital interest" in the American prosecution of Carpenter, supra note 5, falls short of suggesting that Nigeria was preparing to prosecute Carpenter.

Second, what Carpenter identifies as a warning from the United States is actually something more remote. The record suggests that the Nigerian government, if interested at all in Carpenter, sought only to question him about others rather than prosecute him. Moreover, Carpenter himself was not troubled enough by the warning to stay in the United States: he later travelled to the [40] As noted above, ETC further contends that the Fifth Amendment is only a domestic shield, which guards against self-incrimination in other American courts, whether state or federal, [16] but does not protect one from American court orders which would compel testimony that might threaten incrimination in the courts of a foreign sovereign. That issue, which the Supreme Court found unnecessary to resolve in Zicarelli, supra, has generated a contrariety of views in the lower courts. The Tenth Circuit, In re Parker, 411 F.2d 1067, 1070 (10th Cir. 1969), vacated as moot, 397 U.S. 96, 90 S. Ct. 819, 25 L. Ed. 2d 81 (1970), and the Fourth Circuit, United States v. (Under Seal), 794 F.2d 920 (4th Cir. 1986), have rejected the contention that the Fifth Amendment is extra-territorial in scope. The chief authority in support of an extra-territorial application is Judge Newman's opinion in In re Cardassi, 351 F. Supp. 1080 (D.Conn. 1972). Cardassi has been subscribed to by Judge Hufstedler, concurring in In re Federal Grand Jury Witness, 597 F.2d 1166, 1169 (9th Cir. 1979), and has been [41] followed by two district courts in this circuit. See United States v. Trucis, 89 F.R.D. 671 (E.D.Pa. 1981); United States v. Kowalchuk, No. 77-118 (E.D.Pa. 1978). [17]

[*1066] Because we have determined that the present record does not, in any event, present a substantial risk that Carpenter would be subject to prosecution in the courts of Nigeria, we find it unnecessary to resolve the important constitutional question as to the reach of the Fifth Amendment that would otherwise be presented.

C.

On cross-appeal, defendants raise two objections to rulings by the district court. The first contention, joined [42] in by all of the defendants, is that the district court erred in concluding that ETC had standing to press its antitrust, RICO, and New Jersey Anti-Racketeering Act claims. This argument is premised on what the defendants perceive as factual deficiencies in ETC's amended complaint. In their view, ETC has not pleaded any facts which would establish, if true, that but for the defendants' illegal conduct it would have received the Air Force contract. The defendants also argue that ETC has pleaded no facts that would establish the payment of illegal commissions from the defendants to Nigerian government officials. The district court concluded that the amended complaint's allegations were sufficient to confer standing on ETC, and we agree with that assessment.

As far as ETC's antitrust standing is concerned, the allegations in the amended complaint as a whole make out an actionable violation of section 2(c) of the Robinson-Patman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 13(c). [18] Congress enacted section 2(c), the Act's brokerage provision, primarily to curb one particular abuse by large chain store buyers, namely the use of "dummy" brokerage fees as a means of securing price rebates. [43] See Seaboard Supply Co. v. Congoleum Corp., 770 F.2d 367, 371 (3rd Cir. 1985). The section has also been applied, however, in cases that involve commercial bribery. See id. at 371; see also Rangen, Inc. v. Sterling Nelson & Sons, Inc., 351 F.2d 851 (9th Cir. 1965), cert. denied 383 U.S. 936, 15 L. Ed. 2d 853, 86 S. Ct. 1067 (1966) (company which bribed state purchasing agent liable to competitor for state contract under 2(c)).

Bahamas. To justify his invocation of the privilege, Carpenter would have had to come forward with a good deal more than he presented to the magistrate.

[16] See Murphy v. Waterfront Commission, 378 U.S. 52, 12 L. Ed. 2d 678, 84 S. Ct. 1594 (1964).

[17] The question has been discussed, but not resolved, by the District of Columbia Circuit in In re Sealed Case, 263 U.S. App. D.C. 357, 825 F.2d 494, 497 (D.C.Cir. 1987), and by the Second Circuit in Flanagan, 691 F.2d at 124.

[18] 15 U.S.C. § 13(c) states:

> HN13[] It shall be unlawful for any person engaged in commerce, in the course of such commerce, to pay or grant, or to receive or accept, anything of value as a commission, brokerage, or other compensation, or any allowance or discount in lieu thereof, except for services rendered in connection with the sale or purchase of goods, wares, or merchandise, either to the other party to such transaction or to an agent, representative or intermediary therein where such intermediary is acting in fact for or in behalf, or is subject to the direct or indirect control of any party to such transaction other than the person by whom such compensation is so granted or paid.

[44] Although this court has concluded that HN14[] as a general matter commercial bribery is actionable under 2(c), it has also held that a plaintiff must show that the illegal payments in question crossed the line from buyer to seller or vice versa. See Seaboard Supply, 770 F.2d at 372. The amended complaint alleges that Kirkpatrick paid the illegal commissions to the Akindele-controlled corporations, from which they were distributed to unnamed Nigerian officials. Though the allegation is not a detailed one, it clearly charges that illegal payments were passed from a seller to a buyer -- a violation of 2(c).

HN15[] Not every plaintiff who alleges an actionable claim under the antitrust laws has standing, however, to bring a private antitrust action. In order to proceed with a claim, a plaintiff must be able to demonstrate that it is within the class of those injured in their business or property who, based on a variety of factors, are best suited to further the purposes of the statute by remedying the violation alleged. See Alberta Gas Chemicals, Ltd. v. E.I. Du Pont De Nemours & Co., 826 F.2d 1235, 1240 (3rd Cir. 1987). [45] HN16[] A private plaintiff does not have to prove price discrimination to recover for a violation of 2(c), Seaboard Supply, 770 F.2d at 371 n.3, but the plaintiff must still meet the standing requirements to proceed. See Larry R. George Sales Co. v. Cool Attic Corp., 587 F.2d 266, 270-72 (5th Cir. 1979).

[*1067] Because of the standing doctrine's malleability, it would be difficult to define with precision the contours of the class of potential plaintiffs who have standing to assert 2(c) claims. Indeed, this court's case-by-case approach to the standing requirement argues against such an attempt. See Alberta Gas Chemicals, 826 F.2d at 1239-41. We need not do so in this case, moreover, because it is generally agreed that HN17[] a direct competitor of a company that obtains a contract through commercial bribery has standing to press a 2(c) claim against the briber. See Cool Attic, 587 F.2d at 271-72; Municipality of Anchorage v. Hitachi Cable, 547 F. Supp. 633, 640 (D. Alaska 1982); [46] Computer Statistics v. Blair, 418 F. Supp. 1339, 1348 (S.D. Tex. 1976); III E. Kintner and J. Bauer, Federal Antitrust Law § 26.12, at 529-30 (1982).

We agree with the district court that ETC's amended complaint alleged sufficient facts to establish the kind of injury that would confer standing to bring a claim against the defendants. Plaintiff alleged that it and the defendants are both in the business of supplying aeromedical facilities and equipment to foreign air forces, and that both plaintiff and defendants were in direct competition for the Nigerian Air Force bid. As the district court noted, short of alleging that it was next in line for the Nigerian contract, ETC could not have pleaded a more direct injury from defendants' alleged violation of section 2(c).

The question of ETC's standing to bring its RICO and Anti-Racketeering Act claims is somewhat easier to resolve. To have standing to assert a civil RICO claim, ETC need only allege an injury to its business or property resulting from some or all of the predicate acts that comprise the RICO violation. See Town of Kearny, 829 F.2d at 1268 (quoting Marshall & Ilsley Trust Co. v. Pate, 819 F.2d 806 (7th Cir. 1987)). [47] ETC's allegations in the amended complaint of injury from the bribery scheme -- a scheme that the amended complaint charges with sufficient factual specificity -- meet this standard. We also assume, as did the district court and the parties, that the New Jersey Anti-Racketeering Act's standing requirement is essentially the same as the federal standard.

D.

Finally, defendant DIC, one of Kirkpatrick's corporate parents, contends that it is entirely immune from liability. ETC claims that liability for the alleged wrongful acts of the Kirkpatrick group can be imputed to DIC on either of two theories: by piercing the defendant's corporate veil, Melikian v. Corradetti, 791 F.2d 274 (3rd Cir. 1986), or by finding that Carpenter acted as DIC's agent in carrying out the bribery scheme, Japan Petroleum Co. v. Ashland Oil, 456 F. Supp. 831 (D. Del. 1978). The district court found that the amended complaint minimally alleged "a relationship among [DIC], IDC, Carpenter, and Kirkpatrick sufficient to support the potential imposition of liability upon [DIC] or IDC for wrongful acts committed by Carpenter and/or Kirkpatrick." ETC, 659 F. Supp. at 1388. [48] The court also concluded that ETC and the defendants should have the opportunity to proceed with discovery so that the facts defining the relationship of DIC, IDC, Carpenter and Kirkpatrick may be fully developed. See id. at 1389. We find no reason to question such a course, which should produce a record on the basis of which the question of DIC's liability can be properly determined. See Craig v. Lake Asbestos of Quebec, Ltd., 843 F.2d 145 (3rd Cir. 1988).

Conclusion

We therefore will reverse the district court on its act of state decision, its dismissal of plaintiff's RICO and Anti-Racketeering Act claims, and its affirmance of the magistrate's decision upholding Carpenter's assertion of the Fifth Amendment privilege. As to the other issues, we will affirm the district court. We will remand this case for proceedings consistent with this opinion.

APPENDIX

United States Department of State

The Legal Adviser

[*1068] Washington, D.C. 20520

December 10, 1986

The Honorable

Alfred J. Lechner, Jr.

United States District Court Judge

District of New Jersey

U.S. Post Office and Courthouse

Newark, N.J. 07101

Re: Environmental [49] Tectonics Corporation, International v. W.S. Kirkpatrick & Co. Inc., et al., Civil Action No. 86-796

Dear Judge Lechner:

I am writing on behalf of the Department of State in reply to the Court's invitation to the Department to express its views of the above-referenced civil action in light of defendant's motion to dismiss on the basis of the act of state doctrine. This court has indicated in particular that it might become necessary to examine the motivation of officials of the Republic of Nigeria in taking certain public actions. The Department appreciates the Court's consideration in offering this opportunity for comment.

In recent years, the United States Executive Branch has addressed the question of whether the act of state doctrine requires dismissal of proceedings that may call for judicial inquiry into the motivations (as opposed to the legal validity) of the public acts of foreign states. Specifically, as the United States stated in an amicus curiae brief before the United States Supreme Court:

> While judicial examination of purpose may on occasion implicate some of the concerns underlying the act of state doctrine, that doctrine only precludes judicial-questioning [50] of the validity or legality of foreign government actions. . . .
> None of this Court's decisions suggest that the act of state doctrine precludes all judicial inquiries that may embarrass a foreign state or affect the political branches' conduct of foreign relations. Rather, the act of state doctrine is based on the need to avoid unprincipled decisions resulting from the absence of legal standards, and the unique embarrassment, and the particular interference with the conduct of foreign affairs, that may result from the judicial determination that a foreign sovereign's acts are invalid. Judicial inquiry into the purpose of a foreign sovereign's acts would not require a court to rule on the legality of those acts, and a finding concerning purpose would not entail the particular kind of harm that the act of state doctrine is designed to avoid. Dismissal of a complaint before the development of evidence, merely because adjudication raises the > bare possibility of embarrassment, constitutes an unwarranted expansion of the act of state doctrine and is contrary to the flexibility with which that doctrine should be applied. (Emphasis added).

See United States Government [51] briefs amicus curiae in support of petitions for a writ of certiorari in Industrial Investment Development Corp. v. Mitsui & Co., Ltd., 594 F.2d 48 (5th Cir. 1979), cert. denied, 445 U.S. 903, 100 S. Ct. 1078, 63 L. Ed. 2d 318 (1980); and in Hunt v. Mobil Oil Corp., 550 F.2d 68 (2d Cir. 1977), cert. denied, 434 U.S. 984, 54 L. Ed. 2d 477, 98 S. Ct. 608 (1977), excerpts reprinted in 1979 Digest of U.S. Practice in International Law at 965 and 969, respectively.

These statements represent our views. As the Department understands the allegations in the instant suit, the validity of the Nigerian Government's decision to award the contract in question is not in question. If the adjudication of this suit were to involve a judicial inquiry into the motivations of the Government of Nigeria's decision to award the contract, the Department does not believe the act of state doctrine would bar the Court from adjudicating this dispute.

Moreover, the Department is of the view that the act of state doctrine may not apply to the award of the contract in question, to the extent that such award does not constitute [52] a sufficiently formal expression of Nigeria's public policy or interests. See, e.g., Alfred Dunhill of London, Inc. v. Republic of Cuba, 425 U.S. 682, 695, 48 L. Ed. 2d 301, 96 S. Ct. 1854 (1976); compare Sage Int'l., Ltd. v. Cadillac Gage [*1069] Co., 534 F. Supp. 896, 908 (E.D. Mich. 1981) with General Aircraft Corp. v. Air America, Inc., 482 F. Supp. 3 (D.D.C. 1979).

Apart from the act of state question, however, inquiries into the motivation and validity of foreign states' actions and discovery against foreign government officials may seriously affect United States foreign relations. These concerns, in the context of this litigation, counsel that caution and due regard for foreign sovereign sensibilities be exercised at each relevant stage in the proceedings. Moreover, the court should endeavor to assure that no unnecessary inquiries are made, or allegations tested, during the course of discovery or trial.

I hope this letter will be helpful in your disposition of the above-referenced action.

Sincerely,

Abraham D. Sofaer

cc: Alan A. Turner, Esq.

Thomas H. Sear, Esq.

Lawrence S. Horn, Esq.

Theodore V. Well, [53] Esq.

End of Document

Jeanery, Inc. v. James Jeans, Inc.

United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit

May 5, 1986, Argued and Submitted ; May 2, 1988, Decided

No. 85-3751

Reporter
849 F.2d 1148 *; 1988 U.S. App. LEXIS 7786 ; 1988-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P67,988

The Jeanery, Inc., an Oregon Corporation, and Rock Bottom Jean Co., Inc., an Oregon Corporation, Plaintiffs-Appellants, v. James Jeans, Inc., a Washington Corporation, Defendant-Appellee

Subsequent History: [1] Amended June 2, 1988.

Prior History: Appeal from the United States District Court for the District of Oregon, William M. Dale, Jr., Magistrate, Presiding.

Core Terms

termination, manufacturer, dealer, distributor, resale price, conspiracy, complaints, retailer, antitrust, keystone, Sherman Act, discounting, anti trust law, acquiescence, customer, concerted action, concerted, price-cutting, competitors, circumstantial evidence, sales representative, take care, communicated, price-fixing, price-cutter, adherence, announced, prices, business justification, insufficient evidence

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Reviewability of Lower Court Decisions > Adverse Determinations

Civil Procedure > Trials > Judgment as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Trials > Judgment as Matter of Law > Judgment Notwithstanding Verdict

Civil Procedure > Trials > Jury Trials > Province of Court & Jury

Civil Procedure > ... > Standards of Review > Substantial Evidence > General Overview

HN1[] Reviewability of Lower Court Decisions, Adverse Determinations

The appellate court reviews a district court's grant of judgment notwithstanding the verdict (JNOV) by applying the same standard used by the district court. JNOV is proper if without accounting for the credibility of the witnesses, the court finds that the evidence and its inferences, considered as a whole and viewed in the light most favorable to the nonmoving party, can support only one reasonable conclusion--that the moving party is entitled to judgment notwithstanding the adverse verdict. Neither the trial judge nor the appellate court is permitted to weigh the evidence or substitute its judgment for that of the jury, provided the jury verdict is supported by substantial evidence.

Civil Procedure > Trials > Judgment as Matter of Law > Directed Verdicts

Civil Procedure > Trials > Judgment as Matter of Law > General Overview

HN2[] Judgment as Matter of Law, Directed Verdicts

The decision to grant a directed verdict or a judgment notwithstanding the verdict, requires the trial court to engage in a careful reasoning process. In an antitrust case, if the evidence is entirely circumstantial, the court must decide whether a reasonable jury could reach the suggested conclusion on the basis of the hard evidence without resorting to guesswork or conjecture. At the same time, the trial court must not encroach on the role of the jury in dispute resolution.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Evidence > Inferences & Presumptions > General Overview

HN3[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Antitrust law limits the range of permissible inferences from ambiguous evidence in a 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 case. Consequently, the court must closely scrutinize the evidence in a given case to avoid the danger of improper antitrust condemnations.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

HN4[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Section 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 declares illegal every contract, combination, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States. The phrase "contract, combination, or conspiracy" has been interpreted to require concerted action of more than a single entity.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN5[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Unilateral conduct by a single firm, even if it appears to restrain trade unreasonably, is not unlawful under § 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > Monopolization Offenses

HN6[] Monopolies & Monopolization, Actual Monopolization

Unilateral conduct may be unlawful under § 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 2, if the conduct threatens monopolization.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Monopolies & Monopolization > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > Monopolization Offenses

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

HN7[] Monopolies & Monopolization, Attempts to Monopolize

By making a conspiracy to monopolize unlawful, 15 U.S.C.S. § 2 does reach both concerted and unilateral behavior. But purely unilateral conduct is illegal only under § 2 and not under 15 U.S.C.S. § 1. Monopolization without conspiracy is unlawful under § 2, but restraint of trade without a conspiracy or combination is not unlawful under § 1.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN8[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

A parent corporation and its wholly owned subsidiary are not capable of conspiring with one another in violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > Nonprice Restraints

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > General Overview

HN9[] Vertical Restraints, Nonprice Restraints

A manufacturer is free to announce resale prices and refuse to deal with dealers who sell below the announced price.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > Nonprice Restraints

HN10[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

Concerted vertical price restraints are per se illegal. Concerted vertical non-price restraints are scrutinized for illegality under the antitrust rule of reason.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Horizontal Refusals to Deal > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Distributorships & Franchises > Termination > Antitrust Issues

Contracts Law > Defenses > Ambiguities & Mistakes > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > Nonprice Restraints

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > Price Fixing

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > Resale Price Maintenance

Business & Corporate Law > Distributorships & Franchises > Termination > General Overview

HN11[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Horizontal Refusals to Deal

Because a distributor is free to acquiesce in the manufacturer's demand in order to avoid termination, proof of a vertical price fixing agreement must include more than a showing that the distributor conformed to the suggested price. An agreement to maintain prices may not be inferred from the fact alone that a manufacturer and its distributors are in constant communication about prices and marketing strategy. A jury may not infer a concerted price-fixing agreement from highly ambiguous evidence.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > General Overview

Business & Corporate Law > Distributorships & Franchises > Termination > General Overview

HN12[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Vertical Restraints

A plaintiff does not establish an illegal price-fixing agreement solely by proof of complaints by competitors of the terminated dealer, or that the dealer's termination followed or was in response to these complaints, or that the termination of a price-cutter was pursuant to an agreement with the complaining dealer.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > General Overview

Business & Corporate Law > Distributorships & Franchises > Termination > General Overview

HN13[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Vertical Restraints

To show concerted action to fix prices, a plaintiff must introduce more than evidence of complaints and termination alone. The plaintiff must produce evidence that tends to exclude the possibility that the manufacturer and non-terminated distributors were acting independently. Moreover, more must be shown than simply an agreement between the manufacturer and a complaining distributor to terminate a price-cutter. There must be direct or circumstantial evidence that reasonably tends to prove that the manufacturer and others had a conscious commitment to a common scheme designed to achieve an unlawful objective. The common scheme or meeting of minds, prerequisite to § 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 liability is not shown merely by a distributor's conformity to the suggested resale price. Evidence must be presented both that the distributor communicated its acquiescence or agreement, and that this was sought by the manufacturer and there must be evidence of an agreement on the price or price levels to be charged.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > General Overview

Business & Corporate Law > Distributorships & Franchises > Causes of Action > Restraints of Trade

HN14[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Vertical Restraints

If a manufacturer deliberately withdraws its product from a price-cutting distributor at the request of a competing distributor as part of a conspiracy to protect the requesting distributor from price competition, the manufacturer has committed a per se violation of the antitrust laws.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Distributorships & Franchises > Termination > Antitrust Issues

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > General Overview

Business & Corporate Law > Distributorships & Franchises > Termination > General Overview

HN15[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

When a manufacturer terminates a price-cutter in response to a competing distributor's complaint and with intent to restrain price competition, a § 1 Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 violation is stated.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Distributorships & Franchises > Termination > Antitrust Issues

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

Business & Corporate Law > Distributorships & Franchises > Termination > General Overview

HN16[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Vertical Restraints

A manufacturer does not commit a per se violation of the antitrust laws by entering into an agreement with a requesting distributor to terminate a price-cutter, unless the agreement includes some agreement on price or price levels.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Distributorships & Franchises > Termination > Antitrust Issues

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

Business & Corporate Law > Distributorships & Franchises > Termination > General Overview

HN17[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Vertical Restraints

Complaints by competitors, standing alone, are not sufficient to show a conspiracy. Neither is it probative of a price-fixing conspiracy that a distributor is terminated after, or in response to, the complaints. Furthermore, the volume and frequency of competitor complaints does not affect this analysis; something more still must be shown by the terminated distributor.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Types of Commercial Transactions > Sales of Goods > General Overview

HN18[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Vertical Restraints

The manufacturer has every right to set the price at which it wants its goods resold and to terminate a dealer who undercuts that price. A manufacturer may advise a dealer that its policy is to terminate a dealer who does not sell at keystone, or to favor filling orders placed by complying dealers. This is legitimate pressure to get a dealer to sell at keystone. No inference of antitrust conspiracy can be drawn from such evidence. It is ambiguous at best.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Distributorships & Franchises > Termination > Antitrust Issues

Business & Corporate Law > Distributorships & Franchises > Termination > General Overview

HN19[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Vertical Restraints

A manufacturer may terminate a dealer who violates the manufacturer's retail price policy.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Contract Formation > Acceptance > Meeting of Minds

Contracts Law > Contract Formation > General Overview

HN20[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Vertical Restraints

A plaintiff does not establish concerted action merely by proving that the defendant sought agreement. More is required. The concept of "a meeting of the minds" means as well that evidence must be presented both that the distributor communicated its acquiescence or agreement, and that this was sought by the manufacturer.

Civil Procedure > Trials > Judgment as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Trials > Jury Trials > Province of Court & Jury

HN21[] Trials, Judgment as Matter of Law

Unsupported allegations in an antitrust case should not reach a jury.

Counsel: Justine Fischer, Stoll & Stoll, P.C., Portland, Oregon, for the Plaintiffs-Appellants.

James H. Clarke, Spears, Lubersky, Campbell, Bledsoe, Anderson & Young, Portland, Oregon, for the Defendant-Appellee.

Judges: Arthur L. Alarcon, Stephen Reinhardt and David R. Thompson, Circuit Judges. Reinhardt, Circuit Judge, dissenting.

Opinion by: THOMPSON

Opinion

[*1150] AMENDED OPINION

THOMPSON, Circuit Judge:

The Jeanery, Inc., which is affiliated by common ownership with Rock Bottom Jean Co. (collectively referred to as "The Jeanery"), won a jury verdict in its antitrust suit against James Jeans, Inc., a clothing manufacturer. The Jeanery had alleged, and the jury found, that James Jeans conspired with other of its dealers to fix the resale price for James Jeans' products in violation of section 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1, and that James Jeans terminated The Jeanery as one of its distributors because The Jeanery refused to sell its goods at the desired resale price. The jury awarded The Jeanery [2] damages in the amount of $ 80,556.50, which the magistrate, sitting as a district court judge, see 28 U.S.C. § 636(c) (1), automatically trebled under section 4 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 15.

James Jeans then moved for a judgment notwithstanding the verdict ("JNOV") or in the alternative for a new trial. Upon reflection, the court concluded that there was insufficient evidence of a price-fixing conspiracy to submit to the jury and, accordingly, granted the motion for JNOV. The Jeanery appeals from this judgment, arguing that there was substantial evidence supporting the existence of a conspiracy to set resale prices in violation of the Sherman Act. The Jeanery also contends that it adequately proved it was injured by the alleged conspiracy, that the amount of damages it claimed was properly proven, and that the trial court erred by suggesting a dealer must show it made a firm offer to purchase goods, which the seller refused to accept, in order to establish termination.

We have jurisdiction of this appeal under 28 U.S.C. § 636(c)(3), and we affirm. Because we agree with the trial court's conclusion [3] that there was insufficient evidence of conspiracy to submit the case to the jury, we do not reach The Jeanery's arguments regarding injury and damages. And for purposes of this appeal we accept The Jeanery's contention that James Jeans terminated it as a distributor.

I

FACTS

James Jeans manufactures, markets and distributes jeans and other casual pants under various trade names, including "James Jeans." From 1981 until early 1983, James Jeans' goods were a popular item in the Pacific Northwest, the region in which James Jeans conducted the majority of its business. Through employee sales representatives, James Jeans' merchandise was sold to retail outlets. Retail merchants purchased the goods through sales representatives who periodically visited their stores, or at semiannual trade shows where James Jeans displayed its wares. In the period relevant to this appeal, it was James Jeans' practice, which was consistent with industry practice as a whole, to suggest to retail merchants that the retail price should be an amount twice that paid by the retailer to buy the goods. This suggested resale price was known in the industry as the "keystone" markup. James Jeans made clear to [4] retailers who purchased its goods that it wanted them to charge the full keystone price when the goods were resold to consumers, and that any retailer who sold below the suggested resale price would either be terminated as a distributor of James Jeans, or would not receive as favorable treatment from the manufacturer as would complying retailers. It is undisputed that James Jeans consistently explained this policy to all distributors who purchased its goods.

Tom and Chris Ballantyne own The Jeanery and Rock Bottom Jean Co. In September 1980, The Jeanery opened an account with James Jeans and began purchasing its merchandise. In May 1981, the Ballantynes began buying James Jeans' goods for sale at their Rock Bottom stores, which specialized in off-priced goods and factory seconds. The Ballantynes testified that the James Jeans' line was so popular during the 1981-1983 period that many of The Jeanery's customers would rather go to another store than purchase jeans other than James Jeans. Consequently, it was important to The Jeanery that it receive a [*1151] steady supply of James Jeans' merchandise.

The Ballantynes also testified that it was their practice to sell James Jeans [5] at a price less than keystone markup. The Ballantynes were well aware that James Jeans discouraged distributors from discounting its goods in this manner. Indeed, on several occasions sales representatives of James Jeans either visited The Jeanery outlets or met with the Ballantynes at industry trade shows and told them that James Jeans was aware of The Jeanery's discounting practices and desired The Jeanery to price at keystone. The Jeanery, however, continued to price the goods it bought from James Jeans below the desired retail price.

Not surprisingly, other distributors of James Jeans who complied with the suggested retail price began to complain to James Jeans about The Jeanery's discounting. One of these complaints came from JJ's, one of James Jeans' best customers. Jim Lampus, the owner of JJ's, spoke with Hans Handwerk, a James Jeans representative, in April 1982, and expressed great dissatisfaction with The Jeanery's price cutting. Mr. Lampus threatened not to purchase any more goods from James Jeans unless James Jeans stopped selling to The Jeanery. Handwerk said that he would "take care of things." Several months later, in August 1982, Kris Nordstrom, another James Jeans [6] representative, told the Ballantynes at the Seattle trade show that James Jeans would not accept any more orders from The Jeanery until Tom Ballantyne spoke with Handwerk about The Jeanery's pricing practices.

Rather than contact Handwerk, the Ballantynes contacted their attorney. When The Jeanery did not receive the jeans it had ordered from James Jeans for delivery in August 1982, the Ballantynes filed the present lawsuit against James Jeans alleging an illegal conspiracy among James Jeans and its other distributors to fix resale prices in violation of section 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1. The Jeanery contended that James Jeans terminated it as a distributor because of its failure to adhere to the illegal price-fixing agreement, and that it suffered damages as a result. This appeal followed the trial court's judgment in favor of James Jeans notwithstanding the jury's verdict in favor of The Jeanery.

II

STANDARD OF REVIEW

HN1[] We review a district court's grant of judgment notwithstanding the verdict by applying the same standard used by the district court. [7] Wilcox v. First Interstate Bank, 815 F.2d 522, 524 (9th Cir. 1987). JNOV is proper if "'without accounting for the credibility of the witnesses, we find that the evidence and its inferences, considered as a whole and viewed in the light most favorable to the nonmoving party, can support only one reasonable conclusion--that the moving party is entitled to judgment notwithstanding the adverse verdict.'" Id. at 525 (citation omitted). Neither the trial judge nor this court is permitted to weigh the evidence or substitute its judgment for that of the jury, provided the jury verdict is supported by substantial evidence. Id.

HN2[] The decision to grant a directed verdict or JNOV, for the standard in either context is identical, compare Peterson v. Kennedy, 771 F.2d 1244, 1252 (9th Cir. 1985) (standard of review for JNOV), cert. denied, 475 U.S. 1122, 90 L. Ed. 2d 187, 106 S. Ct. 1642 (1986), with id. at 1256 (standard of review for directed verdict), requires the trial court to engage in a careful reasoning [8] process. In an antitrust case, if the evidence is entirely circumstantial, the court must decide whether a reasonable jury "could reach the suggested conclusion on the basis of the hard evidence without resorting to guesswork or conjecture." Edward J. Sweeney & Sons, Inc. v. Texaco, Inc., 637 F.2d 105, 116 (3d Cir. 1980), cert. denied, 451 U.S. 911, 68 L. Ed. 2d 300, 101 S. Ct. 1981 (1981); cf. Barnes v. Arden Mayfair, Inc., 759 F.2d 676, 681 (9th Cir. 1985) (in antitrust case, when defendant moves for summary judgment, court must evaluate evidence in light most favorable to plaintiff and decide if jury could reach [*1152] guilty verdict without relying on "mere speculation, conjecture, or fantasy"). At the same time, the trial court must not encroach on the role of the jury in dispute resolution. See Filco v. Amana Refrigeration, Inc., 709 F.2d 1257, 1265 (9th Cir.), cert. dismissed, 464 U.S. 956, 104 S. Ct. 385, 78 L. Ed. 2d 331 (1983); Sweeney, 637 F.2d at 115-16.

In the antitrust context, determining what amount of evidence will support a jury verdict and assessing [9] the quality of the evidence from which an inference of illegal action may be drawn takes on a special importance. For a number of HN3[] reasons, "antitrust law limits the range of permissible inferences from ambiguous evidence in a § 1 case." Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 588, 106 S. Ct. 1348, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538 (1986). Consequently, the court must closely scrutinize the evidence in a given case to avoid the danger of improper antitrust condemnations. See, e.g., id. at 594 ("Mistaken inferences in cases such as this one are especially costly, because they chill the very conduct the antitrust laws are designed to protect."); see Monsanto Co. v. Spray-Rite Serv. Corp., 465 U.S. 752, 763, 79 L. Ed. 2d 775, 104 S. Ct. 1464 (1984).

III

ANALYSIS

HN4[] Section 1 of the Sherman Act declares illegal "every contract, combination . . ., or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States." 15 U.S.C. § 1. [10] The phrase "contract, combination, or conspiracy" has been interpreted to require concerted action of more than a single entity. Filco v. Amana Refrigeration, Inc., 709 F.2d 1257, 1261 (9th Cir.) (citing L. Sullivan, Handbook of the Law of Antitrust § 109 (1977)), cert. dismissed, 464 U.S. 956, 104 S. Ct. 385, 78 L. Ed. 2d 331 (1983). HN5[] Unilateral conduct by a single firm, even if it "appears to 'restrain trade' unreasonably," is not unlawful under section 1 of the Sherman Act. Copperweld Corp. v. Independence Tube Corp., 467 U.S. 752, 767, 81 L. Ed. 2d 628, 104 S. Ct. 2731 (1984). [1] The

---

[1] HN6[] Unilateral conduct may be unlawful under section 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 2, if the conduct threatens monopolization. Copperweld, 467 U.S. at 767.

> HN7[] By making a conspiracy to monopolize unlawful, § 2 does reach both concerted and unilateral behavior. The point remains, however, that purely unilateral conduct is illegal only under § 2 and not under § 1. Monopolization without conspiracy is unlawful under § 2, but restraint of trade without a conspiracy or combination is not unlawful under § 1.

Id. at 767 n.13.

reason for distinguishing between concerted and independent action is primarily one of economics. A single, "efficient firm may capture unsatisfied customers from an inefficient rival . . . . This is the rule of the marketplace and is precisely the sort of competition that promotes the consumer interests that the Sherman Act aims to foster." Id. (footnote omitted).

[11] In two recent opinions, the Supreme Court has considered the distinction between concerted and unilateral action. In Copperweld Corp. v. Independence Tube Corp., 467 U.S. 752, 81 L. Ed. 2d 628, 104 S. Ct. 2731 (1984), the Court held that a HN8[] parent corporation and its wholly owned subsidiary are not capable of conspiring with one another in violation of section 1 of the Sherman Act. Id. at 777. In reaching this conclusion, the Court discussed the unilateral behavior and concerted action distinction and observed that the Sherman Act treats concerted action more harshly than unilateral behavior for two reasons. First, "it is sometimes difficult to distinguish robust competition [by a single company] from conduct with long-run anticompetitive effects." Id. at 767-68. Accordingly, a single firm's conduct, absent the danger of monopolization, is not the object of intense antitrust scrutiny because to treat it with such scrutiny would heighten "the risk that the antitrust laws will dampen the competitive zeal of a single aggressive entrepreneur. [12] " Id. at 768.

Second, concerted action poses a substantially greater risk of anticompetitive harm than does independent behavior. See id. at 768-69. [*1153] "[Concerted action] deprives the marketplace of the independent centers of decisionmaking that competition assumes and demands." Id. at 769. Notwithstanding the efficiencies and potential benefits to consumers that may result from joint activities, "their anticompetitive potential is sufficient to warrant scrutiny even in the absence of incipient monopoly." Id. The Court reasoned, however, that a parent and a wholly owned subsidiary cannot conspire together in violation of section 1 because they have "a complete unity of interest." Id. at 771. Coordination of their activities is necessary to efficient competition and promotes consumer welfare. Id. at 772.

In Monsanto Co. v. Spray-Rite Service Corp., 465 U.S. 752, 79 L. Ed. 2d 775, 104 S. Ct. 1464 (1984), the Supreme Court considered the distinction between unilateral and concerted behavior in the context of a dealer termination case. Monsanto, a manufacturer [13] of herbicides, terminated Spray-Rite as one of its dealers. Spray-Rite sued Monsanto alleging that Monsanto conspired with other of its dealers to fix resale prices and terminated Spray-Rite because it sold below the minimum resale price. Id. at 757. A jury found for Spray-Rite and awarded damages of $ 3.5 million, which was trebled to $ 10.5 million. Monsanto appealed, challenging the sufficiency of the evidence to support the verdict. The Seventh Circuit affirmed, holding that proof of termination following or in response to competitor complaints is sufficient to support an inference of concerted action. Spray-Rite Service Corp. v. Monsanto Co., 684 F.2d 1226, 1238-39 (7th Cir. 1982). The Supreme Court rejected the Seventh Circuit's view of the standard of proof, but affirmed the judgment under the Court's test for sufficiency of the evidence. 465 U.S. at 759. The Supreme Court considered what amount of evidence will support a jury finding of a vertical price-fixing conspiracy in violation of section 1 of the Sherman Act. Id. at 755. [2] To answer this question, the court reexamined its earlier decisions involving [14] dealer terminations and vertical price-fixing conspiracies.

Two important distinctions emerge from these earlier cases. The first is that between concerted conduct and independent action, only the former is barred by section 1 of the Sherman Act. Id. at 761. Thus, under the Colgate doctrine, HN9[] a manufacturer is free to announce resale prices and refuse to deal with dealers who sell below the announced [15] price. Id. (discussing United States v. Colgate & Co., 250 U.S. 300, 63 L. Ed. 992, 39 S. Ct. 465 (1919)). The second important distinction is between concerted conduct to set prices and concerted conduct as to nonprice restraints. Id. HN10[] Concerted vertical price restraints have been held per se illegal since the decision in Dr. Miles Medical Co. v. John D. Park & Sons Co., 220 U.S. 373, 55 L. Ed. 502, 31 S. Ct. 376 (1911). [3]

---

[2] By "vertical," we refer to the situation in which a manufacturer imposes conditions on the sale of its goods by dealers or other parties in the distribution chain. See R. Bork, The Antitrust Paradox: A Policy at War with Itself 288 (1978). If a manufacturer also sells its own goods as a retailer, there is a horizontal element to the conduct. In our case, the manufacturer, James Jeans, sells its product solely to independent retailers who in turn resell the goods to the consuming public.

[*1154] In contrast, concerted vertical nonprice restraints are scrutinized for illegality under antitrust's rule of reason. See Monsanto, 465 U.S. at 761 (discussing Continental T. V., Inc. v. GTE Sylvania Inc., 433 U.S. 36, 53 L. Ed. 2d 568, 97 S. Ct. 2549 (1977)).

[16] Monsanto and Copperweld set forth significant antitrust concepts. First, the rule of Colgate that a manufacturer can declare a resale price policy and refuse to deal with pricecutters is firmly entrenched in antitrust jurisprudence. See Monsanto, 465 U.S. at 761, 763. Second, HN11[] because "a distributor is free to acquiesce in the manufacturer's demand in order to avoid termination," id. at 761, proof of an agreement must "include[] more than a showing that the distributor conformed to the suggested price." Id. at 764 n.9. Third, an agreement to maintain prices may not be inferred from the fact alone that "a manufacturer and its distributors are in constant communication about prices and marketing strategy." Id. at 762. Finally, Monsanto cautions against permitting a jury to infer a concerted price-fixing agreement from highly ambiguous evidence. Id. at 763. Inferences drawn from weak evidence pose the danger of eroding the scope of conduct permitted by the Colgate doctrine or with [17] respect to nonprice vertical restraints. Id.; cf. Copperweld, 467 U.S. at 768 (explaining that courts must carefully scrutinize allegations of concerted conduct to ensure that aggressive, procompetitive conduct of a single firm is not curtailed improperly).

HN12[] A plaintiff does not establish an illegal price-fixing agreement solely by proof of complaints by competitors of the terminated dealer, or that the dealer's termination followed or was "in response to" these complaints, Monsanto, 465 U.S. at 763, or that the termination of a price-cutter was pursuant to an agreement with the complaining dealer. Business Elec. Corp. v. Sharp Elec. Corp., 485 U.S. 717, 56 U.S.L.W. 4387, 4389, 108 S. Ct. 1515, 99 L. Ed. 2d 808 (1988). [4] Complaints about discounters "are natural--and from the manufacturer's

---

[3] The per se rule of illegality is applied to those "certain agreements or practices which because of their pernicious effect on competition and lack of any redeeming virtue are conclusively presumed to be unreasonable and therefore illegal without elaborate inquiry as to the precise harm they have caused or the business excuse for their use." Northern Pac. Ry. Co. v. United States, 356 U.S. 1, 5, 2 L. Ed. 2d 545, 78 S. Ct. 514 (1958). Whether vertical price fixing should be per se illegal has been the subject of considerable judicial and scholarly debate. An abbreviated bibliography of this debate includes: Monsanto Co. v. Spray-Rite Serv. Corp., 465 U.S. 752, 761, 79 L. Ed. 2d 775, 104 S. Ct. 1464 n.7 (1984) (collecting sources supporting proposition that "the economic effect of resale price maintenance is little different from agreements on nonprice restrictions"); Continental T. V., Inc. v. GTE Sylvania, Inc., 433 U.S. 36, 69, 53 L. Ed. 2d 568, 97 S. Ct. 2549 & n.10 (1977) (White, J., concurring); Albrecht v. Herald Co., 390 U.S. 145, 151, 19 L. Ed. 2d 998, 88 S. Ct. 869 n.7 (1968); Business Elec. Corp. v. Sharp Elec. Corp., 780 F.2d 1212, 1221-22 (5th Cir. 1986) (Jones, J., concurring), aff'd, 485 U.S. 717, 56 U.S.L.W. 4387, 108 S. Ct. 1515, 99 L. Ed. 2d 808 (1988); R. Bork, supra note 2, at 280-98; Easterbrook, Vertical Arrangements and the Rule of Reason, 53 Antitrust L.J. 135 (1984); Flynn, The "Is" and "Ought" of Vertical Restraints after Monsanto Co. v. Spray-Rite Service Corp., 71 Cornell L. Rev. 1095 (1986); Posner, The Next Step in the Antitrust Treatment of Restricted Distribution: Per Se Legality, 48 U. Chi. L. Rev. 6 (1981); Posner, The Rule of Reason and the Economic Approach: Reflections on the Sylvania Decision, 45 U. Chi. L. Rev. 1 (1977).

[4] Monsanto and Business Electronics call into doubt at least one of our earlier cases. In Filco v. Amana Refrigeration, Inc., 709 F.2d 1257 (9th Cir.), cert. dismissed, 464 U.S. 956, 104 S. Ct. 385, 78 L. Ed. 2d 331 (1983), we considered the quantum of proof necessary to establish an illegal price-fixing conspiracy. Id. at 1261. Although Judge Wallace, who authored the opinion, presciently stated that "something more than complaints and termination must be shown [to prove an illegal conspiracy to set prices]," id. at 1263, we concluded that this "something more" could be supplied by the plaintiff showing "a causal nexus between complaints and termination." Id. (emphasis added). We criticized the Third Circuit for its statement in Edward J. Sweeney & Sons, Inc. v. Texaco, Inc., 637 F.2d 105, 110 (3d Cir. 1980), cert. denied, 451 U.S. 911, 68 L. Ed. 2d 300, 101 S. Ct. 1981 (1981), that a supplier's termination of a discounting retailer in response to complaints by other retailers was insufficient, standing alone, to show concerted action. Filco, 709 F.2d at 1265 n.2. In Monsanto, however, the Supreme Court embraced the analysis in Sweeney. See Monsanto, 465 U.S. at 763-64. In Business Electronics, the Court held that an agreement between a manufacturer and a dealer to terminate another dealer for selling the manufacturer's goods at less than the manufacturer's suggested minimum resale price is not per se illegal without a showing of "a further agreement on the price or price levels to be charged by the remaining dealer." Business Elec., 56 U.S.L.W. at 4389. To the extent that Filco conflicts with Monsanto and Business Electronics, we are bound to follow the decisions of the Supreme Court.

perspective, unavoidable--reactions by distributors to the activities of their rivals." Monsanto, 465 U.S. at 763. Price complaints provide a manufacturer with important information necessary "to assure an efficient distribution [18] [*1155] system." Id. Thus, to prohibit a manufacturer from acting on price complaints "would create an irrational dislocation in the market." Id. at 764. Furthermore, imposing liability on a manufacturer who terminates a price-cutter after receiving price complaints "'would both inhibit management's exercise of its independent business judgment and emasculate the terms of the statute.'" Id. (quoting Edward J. Sweeney & Sons, Inc. v. Texaco, Inc., 637 F.2d 105, 111 n.2 (3d Cir. 1980), cert. denied, 451 U.S. 911, 68 L. Ed. 2d 300, 101 S. Ct. 1981 (1981)).

[19] Complaints by competitors are not entirely without probative value, however, in showing concerted action. Id. at 764 n.8. But HN13[] a plaintiff must introduce "something more" than evidence of complaints and termination alone. Id. at 764 & n.8. The plaintiff must produce "evidence that tends to exclude the possibility that the manufacturer and nonterminated distributors were acting independently." Id. at 764. [5] Moreover, more must be shown than simply an agreement between the manufacturer and a complaining distributor to terminate a price-cutter. See Business Elec., 56 U.S.L.W. at 4389. There must be "direct or circumstantial evidence that reasonably tends to prove that the manufacturer and others 'had a conscious commitment to a common scheme designed to achieve an unlawful objective.'" Monsanto, 465 U.S. at 764 (quoting Sweeney, 637 F.2d at 111). The "common scheme" or "meeting of minds," id. (quoting American Tobacco Co. v. United States, 328 U.S. 781, 810, 90 L. Ed. 1575, 66 S. Ct. 1125 (1946)), prerequisite [20] to section 1 liability is not shown merely by a distributor's conformity to the suggested resale price. Id. at 764 n.9. "It means as well that evidence must be presented both that the distributor communicated its acquiescence or agreement, and that this was sought by the manufacturer." Id. And, as the Supreme Court recently has emphasized, there must be evidence of an "agreement on the price or price levels to be charged . . . ." Business Elec., 56 U.S.L.W. at 4389.

In Monsanto, the Court discussed the direct evidence that established the two elements of (a) a manufacturer seeking a resale price [21] agreement and (b) a dealer communicating its acquiescence to the proposed agreement. The Court observed that after Monsanto terminated Spray-Rite, Monsanto threatened not to supply its new herbicide to price-cutting distributors who did not adhere to the announced resale price. Monsanto, 465 U.S. at 765. When one discounter refused to follow the resale price policy, Monsanto complained to the distributor's parent company. The parent company in turn put pressure on the discounter to comply, and the discounter subsequently informed Monsanto that it would sell Monsanto's goods at the suggested price. Id. Through these events, the Court concluded a jury could find that Monsanto had sought a price-fixing agreement and had received the distributor's communicated acquiescence. See id. The section 1 violation of the Sherman Act was complete. See id. at 764 & n.9.

In the present case, although the plaintiff distributor, The Jeanery, does not explain who joined with James Jeans in the alleged illegal conspiracy, it seems reasonably clear that the claimed conspirators are James Jeans and some of its other distributors. [6] The content of the conspiracy [22] is [*1156] alleged to be one to illegally fix resale

---

Filco also concluded that a conspiracy can be shown by evidence of direct coercion by the manufacturer to ensure adherence to its resale price strategy. 709 F.2d at 1263. Whether this portion of Filco survives Monsanto and Business Electronics is explored infra.

[5] As the Eleventh Circuit has put it, "this evidence need not be such that only an inference of conspiracy may be derived from it. It must, however, go beyond equivocal complaints and tend to exclude the inference of independent action." Helicopter Support Sys., Inc. v. Hughes Helicopter, Inc., 818 F.2d 1530, 1534 n.4 (11th Cir. 1987) (emphasis in original).

[6] There is evidence in the record that on several occasions, an employee of James Jeans met or sought to meet with the owners of The Jeanery to discuss The Jeanery's persistent price cutting. At one of these meetings, Kris Nordstrom, a James Jeans sales representative, offered to provide The Jeanery with off-priced goods and factory seconds for its discount outlets if The Jeanery would agree to sell a new line of James Jeans' goods at the desired retail price. There is evidence that The Jeanery accepted this offer. Although The Jeanery argued at trial that this evidence established an agreement to set prices, and requested a jury instruction to this effect, the requested instruction was refused by the trial court. The Jeanery does not argue on appeal that the trial court erred in refusing to give the requested instruction. Indeed, its position on appeal is one in support of prices. There is evidence that in response to a price complaint by JJ's, one of James Jeans' best customers, James Jeans stopped supplying its product to The Jeanery. We have previously stated "that HN14[] if a manufacturer deliberately withdraws its product from a price-cutting distributor at the request of a competing distributor as part of a conspiracy to protect the requesting distributor from price competition, the manufacturer has committed a per se violation of the antitrust laws." Zidell Explorations, Inc. v. Conval Int'l, Ltd., 719 F.2d 1465, 1469 (9th Cir. 1983) (discussing Cernuto, Inc. v. United Cabinet Corp., 595 F.2d 164 (3d Cir. 1979)); see also O.S.C. Corp. v. Apple Computer, Inc., 792 F.2d 1464, 1467 (9th Cir. 1986) (following Zidell but finding insufficient evidence of conspiracy); JBL Enterprises, Inc. v. Jhirmack Enterprises, Inc., 698 F.2d 1011, 1015 (9th Cir.) (following Cernuto but finding insufficient evidence of conspiracy), cert. [23] denied, 464 U.S. 829, 78 L. Ed. 2d 109, 104 S. Ct. 106 (1983). We have also explained that HN15[] when a manufacturer terminates a price-cutter "in response to a competing distributor's complaint and with intent to restrain price competition," a section 1 Sherman Act violation has been stated. Zidell, 719 F.2d at 1470.

[24] Monsanto and Business Electronics draw into question our decision in Zidell. In Monsanto, the Court clearly stated that dealer complaints and a responsive termination by a manufacturer are not sufficient, standing alone, to raise an inference of conspiracy. Monsanto Co. v. Spray-Rite Service Corp., 465 U.S. 752, 763-64, 79 L. Ed. 2d 775, 104 S. Ct. 1464 (1984). The Third Circuit in Cernuto, which we applied in Zidell, condemned responsive dealer terminations because they reflect a "restraint . . . primarily horizontal in nature in that one customer is seeking to suppress its competition by utilizing the power of a common supplier." Cernuto, 595 F.2d at 168. Although this may be the motive behind the price complaint, Monsanto makes clear that so long as the manufacturer makes an independent business decision to terminate a price cutter, the fact that a complaint preceded or precipitated the termination is of no moment. See Monsanto, 465 U.S. at 763-64. [7] [26] To hold otherwise and impose antitrust [*1157] liability on a manufacturer who acts after a price complaint would create the type of irrational [25] dislocation in the market that Monsanto sought to prevent. See id. at 764. Moreover, the recent Business Electronics decision emphasizes that HN16[] a manufacturer does not commit a per se violation of the antitrust the jury's verdict. The jury returned a general verdict. Because the jury was not instructed that liability might be imposed if it found an agreement between James Jeans and The Jeanery to fix the resale price, we must assume that its general verdict does not include such a finding. Cf. Husky Refining Co. v. Barnes, 119 F.2d 715, 717 (9th Cir. 1941) (explaining that "it is to be assumed in the absence of a showing to the contrary that the direction of the court was followed").

---

The Jeanery did not argue, in opposition to the motion for JNOV, that the jury's verdict could have been based on finding the existence of an agreement between it and James Jeans. Nor does The Jeanery present this argument in any fashion in this appeal. Consequently, it is not necessary to decide whether the plaintiff has proved an Albrecht-type of conspiracy. See Albrecht v. Herald Co., 390 U.S. 145, 150, 19 L. Ed. 2d 998, 88 S. Ct. 869 n.6 (1968) (suggesting that retailer acquiescence in a manufacturer's demand makes it the second party to a conspiracy). Nor is it necessary to decide if this portion of Albrecht survives the teaching of Monsanto that "a distributor is free to acquiesce in the manufacturer's demand in order to avoid termination." Monsanto Co. v. Spray-Rite Serv. Co., 465 U.S. 752, 761, 79 L. Ed. 2d 775, 104 S. Ct. 1464 (1984). Like the Court in Monsanto, "we . . . decline to reach the[se] question[s], and we decide the case in the context in which it was decided below and argued here." Id. at 762 n.7.

[7] We have suggested in other cases that antitrust liability may depend on whether a manufacturer's primary motive in terminating a dealer was anticompetitive. See, e.g., O.S.C. Corp. v. Apple Computer, Inc., 792 F.2d 1464, 1467 (9th Cir. 1986) (citing with approval Zidell Explorations, Inc. v. Conval Int'l, Ltd., 719 F.2d 1465, 1469 (9th Cir. 1983)). The validity of this approach to antitrust liability is placed in doubt by the Supreme Court's Monsanto, Copperweld, Matsushita and Business Electronics decisions. These decisions reflect a more sophisticated use of economic analysis in antitrust cases than has previously been seen. Easterbrook, supra note 3, at 170-71. In line with this economic awareness, a court should be less concerned with subjective notions of motive and more concerned with the economic effect of challenged conduct. Cf. Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 588-95, 106 S. Ct. 1348, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538 (1986) (analyzing the economic arguments against a predatory pricing conspiracy and concluding that "economic realities tend to make predatory pricing conspiracies self deterring"); Monsanto, 465 U.S. at 762 (observing that "the economic effect of . . . unilateral and concerted vertical price setting, agreements on price and nonprice restrictions . . . is in many, but not all, cases similar or identical").

laws by entering into an agreement with a requesting distributor to terminate a price-cutter, "unless [the agreement] includes some agreement on price or price levels." Business Elec., 56 U.S.L.W. at 4392. [8]

In analyzing The Jeanery's evidence, we must be mindful of the Supreme Court's warning that the plaintiff must be given "the full benefit of [its] proof without tightly compartmentalizing the various factual components and wiping the slate clean after scrutiny of each." Continental Ore Co. v. Union Carbide & Carbon Corp., 370 U.S. 690, 699, 8 L. Ed. 2d 777, 82 S. Ct. 1404 (1962), quoted in Wilcox v. First Interstate Bank, 815 F.2d 522, 526 (9th Cir. 1987). But in scrutinizing the evidence, we also must make certain that only reasonable inferences from sufficient evidence are drawn by the factfinder. Although a trial court should proceed cautiously in granting a motion for JNOV, see Peterson v. Kennedy, 771 F.2d 1244, 1252 (9th Cir. 1985), cert. denied, 475 U.S. 1122, 90 L. Ed. 2d 187, 106 S. Ct. 1642 (1986), the [27] court cannot forget that antitrust law places limits on the inferences that may be drawn from circumstantial evidence. Wilcox, 815 F.2d at 525 (citing Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 588, 106 S. Ct. 1348, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538 (1986)).

The Jeanery's evidence consists of (1) competitor complaints about The Jeanery's persistent price cutting; (2) a strongly phrased complaint by JJ's, a major customer of James Jeans, coupled with James Jeans' statement that it would "take care of things"; (3) allegedly coercive tactics used by James Jeans to enforce adherence to its pricing policy; and (4) the alleged absence of a plausible business justification for James Jeans' decision to terminate The Jeanery. Taken as a whole, this evidence is insufficiently probative of a conspiracy to permit the case to go to a jury. [9]

[28]

A. Competitor Complaints

There is evidence in the record that James Jeans received, at most, four complaints about the plaintiff's refusal to retail at "keystone." HN17[] Complaints by competitors, standing alone, are not sufficient to show a conspiracy. Monsanto Co. v. Spray-Rite Serv. Corp., 465 U.S. 752, 763, 79 L. Ed. 2d 775, 104 S. Ct. 1464 (1984). Neither [*1158] is it probative of a price-fixing conspiracy that The Jeanery was terminated after, or in response to, the complaints. Id. Furthermore, the volume and frequency of competitor complaints does not affect this analysis; "something more" still must be shown by the plaintiff. See id. at 764 & n.8.

B. Major Customer's Complaint Coupled with James Jeans' Response

Deposition testimony introduced at the trial reveals the following exchange between Jim Lampus, the owner of JJ's, and the witness, Hans Handwerk, a sales representative employed by James Jeans.

---

[8] In Business Electronics, the Court noted that our decision in Zidell conflicted with the holding of the Fifth Circuit which it affirmed. Business Elec., 56 U.S.L.W. at 4388, n.1.

[9] The dissent argues that this conclusion is at odds with United States v. Parke, Davis & Co., 362 U.S. 29, 4 L. Ed. 2d 505, 80 S. Ct. 503 (1960). We do not agree. As the Court stated in Business Electronics:

> In Parke, Davis, a manufacturer combined first with wholesalers and then with retailers in order to gain "the retailers' adherence to its suggested minimum retail prices." 362 U.S., at 45-46, and n. 6. The manufacturer also brokered an agreement among its retailers not to advertise prices below its suggested retail prices, which agreement was held to be part of the per se illegal combination. This holding also does not support a rule that an agreement on price or price level is not required for a vertical restraint to be per se illegal-first, because the agreement not to advertise prices was part and parcel of the combination that contained the price agreement, id., at 35-36, and second because the agreement among retailers that the manufacturer organized was a horizontal conspiracy among competitors. Id., at 46-47.

Business Elec., 56 U.S.L.W. at 4392 (emphasis in original).

Question to Hans Handwerk, the James Jeans representative: OK, And what did Mr. Lampus [JJ's owner] tell you [29] about the Jeanery?

Answer: "Hans, we've got a guy right across from me that's selling your product for $ 5.00 off all the time."

Question: "Okay, and what was your response to Mr. Lampus?

Answer: "Okay, do I--who is it?"

Question: And what did he say?

Answer: I don't specifically recall saying who it was, I found out who it was at that time but I don't recall specific words that he said.

Question: Okay. Did Mr. Lampus ask you to do something about it?

Answer: Yes.

Question: And what did he ask you to do?

Answer: "Make a decision."

Question: What did you understand that to mean?

Answer: Well he then asked me, he said, "make a decision," and he said, "if you sell him, I'm not going to buy the product."

Question: And what did you tell him?

Answer: I said, "Jim, don't worry about it, I'll take care of things."

Further evidence revealed that Handwerk reported this conversation to Mr. Krause, the owner of James Jeans, who told Handwerk to "take care of it."

Taken in context with the other price complaints, Handwerk's statement to JJ's owner that he would "take care of things" reflects nothing more than an effort by a manufacturer to calm an angry customer. [30] Moreover, the vague statement by Handwerk that he would "take care of things" falls far short of establishing an agreement to fix prices between the manufacturer and the complaining retailer. Neither does it tend to prove an agreement to terminate a retailer who has failed to follow the alleged resale price maintenance scheme. James Jeans' owner's instruction to Handwerk to "take care of" JJ's complaint also does not establish any agreement. James Jeans, in response to the complaint, could have simply terminated The Jeanery as a distributor. Instead, James Jeans tried to "take care of things" by resolving the problem with The Jeanery, and when that failed The Jeanery was terminated, almost five months after JJ's price complaint. Finally, even if this evidence were sufficient to support the finding of an agreement between James Jeans and JJ's to terminate The Jeanery, it is insufficient to establish "some agreement on price or price levels," without which "a vertical restraint is not illegal per se." See Business Elec., 56 U.S.L.W. at 4392.

C. Coercive Tactics to Enforce Price Policy Adherence

The Jeanery argues that it presented evidence of "coercive" conduct [31] by James Jeans. This argument seems to be constructed on the statement in our Filco case that evidence of "overt coercion attempting to ensure compliance through threats or demands" is "something more" than merely complaints and termination and allows an inference of concerted action. Filco v. Amana Refrigeration, Inc., 709 F.2d 1257, 1263 (9th Cir.), cert. dismissed, 464 U.S. 956, 104 S. Ct. 385, 78 L. Ed. 2d 331 (1983). But in Filco, we also explained that demands or threats are to "be distinguished from mere 'exposition, persuasion, argument, or pressure.'" Id. (quoting Yentsch v. Texaco, Inc., 630 F.2d 46, 53 (2d Cir. 1980)). In deciding how to categorize [*1159] statements made by James Jeans, we look to the context in which they were made. Id.

One retailer, Scott Wilson, testified that James Jeans told him that James Jeans would like to have its goods sold at keystone. At trial, Wilson testified:

Question: Was there any indication to you what would happen if you did not keystone?

Answer: They intimated the fact that they would be--we'd have difficulty getting them in the future.

Question: All [32] right. Did you in fact sell at a discount price the James Jeans?

Answer: We have always done that, yes.

. . . .

Question: And did you have any difficulty getting merchandise from James Jeans?

Answer: Extreme.

Given that the HN18[] manufacturer has every right to set the price at which it wants its goods resold and to terminate a dealer who undercuts that price, it is not surprising that a manufacturer would let a dealer know this policy. The greatest "difficulty" a dealer could experience in getting a product would be to suffer a termination. Certainly, then, a manufacturer may advise a dealer that its policy is to terminate a dealer who does not sell at keystone, or to favor filling orders placed by complying dealers. This is legitimate pressure to get a dealer to sell at keystone. No inference of antitrust conspiracy can be drawn from such evidence. It is ambiguous at best. See Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 588, 106 S. Ct. 1348, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538 (1986) ("Antitrust law limits the range of permissible inferences from ambiguous [33] evidence in a § 1 case. Thus, in Monsanto Co. v. Spray-Rite Corp., 465 U.S. 752, 79 L. Ed. 2d 775, 104 S. Ct. 1464 (1984), we held that conduct as consistent with permissible competition as with illegal conspiracy does not, standing alone, support an inference of antitrust conspiracy. Id., at 764.").

Testimony by other retailers of James Jeans is equally equivocal. Judith Grant, the owner of Jeans & Things, testified to the following exchange with Kris Nordstrom, one of James Jeans' sales representatives.

> Question: And could you describe those conversations please?
>
> . . . .
>
> Answer: Well, when I asked them about the other stores in Yakima that did discount, they said that technically they could not refuse to sell to anybody they had already opened an account for. But they could--they did have ways of stopping anybody else from discounting them.
>
> . . . .
>
> Question: Did Mr. Nordstrom ever tell you, describe to you any of the ways that they had to deal with this problem of discounting?
>
> Answer: Well, what was said to me was, "Orders could be lost, could be shipped to the wrong destination, or just never processed."

This again [34] reveals nothing more than James Jeans putting pressure on a retailer to adhere to its resale price policy. It is consistent with the privilege of independent action permitted a manufacturer under Colgate.

D. Plausible Business Justification to Terminate The Jeanery

The Jeanery argues there was no evidence of any business justification for James Jeans to terminate it as one of James Jeans' distributors. The Jeanery contends this lack of business justification, coupled with its termination in response to JJ's complaint, is sufficient circumstantial evidence of a price-fixing conspiracy to permit the case to go to the jury. We disagree. HN19[] A manufacturer may terminate a dealer who violates the manufacturer's retail price policy. If any business justification is needed for such a termination, it is supplied by the manufacturer's business judgment that it is important to its marketing strategy and the maintenance of its dealer network not to have its goods sold at less than the suggested retail price. [*1160] "[A] manufacturer's strongly felt concern about resale prices does [35] not necessarily mean that it has done more than the Colgate doctrine allows." Monsanto, 465 U.S. at 763. Business Electronics teaches that a manufacturer can agree to terminate a price-cutting distributor in response to a complaint from another dealer. It is uncontroverted in the present case that The Jeanery's price-cutting practices created problems between James Jeans and some of its other distributors. One of these distributors was JJ's, one of James Jeans' best customers. Faced with this situation, James Jeans exercised its business judgment and terminated The Jeanery. We see no absence of business justification in this course of action. Indeed, in Business Electronics there also was lacking any evidence of a plausible business justification for the termination, other than the manufacturer's desire to retain the business of an important customer. See Business Elec., 56 U.S.L.W. at 4393 (Stevens, J., dissenting).

IV

LACK OF COMMUNICATED ACQUIESCENCE

If we were to treat James Jeans' statements to its retailers as requests for an agreement to sell at keystone; or if we were to treat as coercive threats its statements to its retailers [36] that James Jeans products could be lost, delayed or mis-shipped if a retailer did not agree to sell at keystone, the record still does not support the finding of any agreement. Regardless of James Jeans' conduct, to establish an agreement it takes two to tango.

In Monsanto, the Court indicated that the threat to cut off supplies was "circumstantial evidence that Monsanto sought agreement from the distributor to conform to the resale price." 465 U.S. at 765 n.10. From this circumstantial evidence of threats, "the jury could have concluded that Monsanto sought this agreement at a time when it was able to use supply as a lever to force compliance." Id. The Court further found an illegal agreement based upon "substantial direct evidence" of Monsanto's unsuccessful efforts to force distributor compliance by threats of short supplies during a peak shipping season followed by Monsanto's appeal to the distributor's parent company, which resulted in the distributor reluctantly "inform[ing] Monsanto that it would charge the suggested price." Monsanto Co. v. Spray-Rite Serv. Co., 465 U.S. 752, 765, 79 L. Ed. 2d 775, 104 S. Ct. 1464 (1984) (emphasis [37] in original).

HN20[] A plaintiff does not establish concerted action, however, merely by proving that the defendant sought agreement. More is required. "The concept of 'a meeting of the minds' . . . means as well that evidence must be presented both that the distributor communicated its acquiescence or agreement, and that this was sought by the manufacturer." Id. at 764 n.9. In Monsanto, there was evidence of communicated acquiescence by the distributor. See id. at 765. Here, there isn't. There is no evidence that the retailers James Jeans requested, or pressured, to sell its product at keystone communicated acquiescence to such an agreement. Some dealers sold at keystone; some did not. The Jeanery did not, and it was terminated as a dealer. This termination was pursuant to James Jeans' announced policy as reiterated in its conversations with its dealers. But there is no evidence that this termination was pursuant to any agreement. [10] It was unilateral, independent action taken by James Jeans to maintain the resale price of its goods. And it did not violate [38] section 1 of the Sherman Act.

V

CONCLUSION

The Supreme Court has cautioned against letting HN21[] unsupported allegations in [*1161] an antitrust case reach a jury. See Matsushita, 475 U.S. at 593; Monsanto, 465 U.S. at 763. The present case rests on circumstantial evidence that does not support a reasonable inference of concerted behavior. Evaluating the evidence in the light most favorable to The Jeanery, we conclude that a jury could find a violation of section 1 of the Sherman Act only by relying on speculation or conjecture. See Barnes v. Arden Mayfair, Inc., 759 F.2d 676, 681 (9th Cir. 1985); [39] Edward J. Sweeney & Sons, Inc. v. Texaco, Inc., 637 F.2d 105, 116 (3d Cir. 1980), cert. denied, 451 U.S. 911, 101 S. Ct. 1981, 68 L. Ed. 2d 300 (1981). Accordingly, we affirm the judgment of the trial court in favor of James Jeans on its motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict.

AFFIRMED.

ORDER

The opinion and dissent filed May 2, 1988 are amended. Both are replaced by the amended opinion and amended dissent filed herewith.

Dissent by: REINHARDT

Dissent

REINHARDT, Circuit Judge, dissenting:

---

[10] Even if the evidence were sufficient to establish an agreement between James Jeans and JJ's to terminate The Jeanery, there is no evidence this alleged agreement included "some agreement on price or prive levels." Business Elec., 56 U.S.L.W. at 4392.

A jury found that James Jeans, Inc., had violated the antitrust laws by unlawfully terminating one of its dealers, The Jeanery, Inc., and awarded damages. The trial court, relying primarily on Monsanto Co. v. Spray-Rite Service Corp., 465 U.S. 752, 79 L. Ed. 2d 775, 104 S. Ct. 1464 (1984), granted a judgment non obstante veredicto in favor of James Jeans. The majority issued an opinion affirming the district court, in which it concluded, on the basis of Monsanto, that The Jeanery did not offer sufficient evidence for a jury to find that an antitrust violation had occurred -- specifically, that there was insufficient evidence [40] of an agreement to terminate its franchise. Because I disagreed with the majority's interpretation and application of Monsanto, and its failure to follow an earlier Supreme Court opinion, United States v. Parke, Davis, I filed a dissent. After the majority and dissenting opinions were issued, the Supreme Court decided Business Electronics Corp. v. Sharp Electronics Corp., 485 U.S. 717, 56 U.S.L.W. 4387, 99 L. Ed. 2d 808, 108 S. Ct. 1515 (1988). The majority then prepared an amended opinion, adding an additional ground for its conclusion -- namely, that there was insufficient evidence of a price-specific agreement. I still dissent, and will discuss the two bases for my disagreement separately.

MONSANTO AND THE AGREEMENT TO TERMINATE

Monsanto reaffirmed and elaborated the holding of United States v. Colgate, 250 U.S. 300, 63 L. Ed. 992, 39 S. Ct. 465 (1919). The point of Colgate was that manufacturers have a qualified privilege to choose the firms with which they will deal. A manufacturer may state in advance that it will not sell to a price-cutting dealer, and then follow through with that resolution. Colgate, 250 U.S. at 307. [41] Monsanto stated that it followed from the holding in Colgate that a manufacturer's termination of a price-cutting firm after complaints from the firm's competitors might still be a legal unilateral action. Monsanto, 465 U.S. at 763-64. As Monsanto stated, the competing firms' complaints might simply have provided the manufacturer with information which formed a basis for its decision to enforce its earlier resolution regarding which firms it would deal with. Monsanto, 465 U.S. at 763-64. Under Monsanto, "something more" is needed beyond evidence of a complaint and a termination to show that the manufacturer's action was illegal (part of a combination) rather than legal (unilateral action). Id. at 764. Monsanto discussed this "something more" as including direct or circumstantial evidence that "tends to exclude the possibility" that the alleged conspirators acted independently, or, put alternatively, that reasonably tends to prove "a conscious commitment to a common scheme designed to achieve an unlawful objective." Monsanto, 465 U.S. at 764. [1] In other words, [*1162] there must [42] be additional evidence that tends either to prove concerted action or to disprove unilateral action.

While Monsanto gave some indication of what this "something more" could be, more guidance on this question can be found in other Supreme Court cases, in particular, from one leading case which the majority, remarkably, does not even mention except in a footnote. In United States v. Parke, Davis & Co., 362 U.S. 29, 43-44, 4 L. Ed. 2d 505, 80 S. Ct. 503 (1960), [43] the manufacturer had an announced policy of ceasing to do business with wholesalers who failed to comply with its specified retail price. [2] The Court, in finding an antitrust violation, explicitly reaffirmed Colgate. Parke, Davis, 362 U.S. at 44. However, the Court stated,

> When the manufacturer's actions . . . go beyond mere announcement of his policy and the simple refusal to deal, and he employs other means which effect adherence to his resale prices, this countervailing consideration [the qualified privilege to choose trading partners, protected by Colgate] is not present and therefore he has put together a combination in violation of the Sherman Act.

---

[1] The Court in Monsanto, after reviewing the additional evidence present in that case, found "something more" and accordingly, affirmed the Court of Appeals, 465 U.S. at 764-768. The key evidence was a statement to Monsanto by a distributor that it would maintain the retail price. There was also a rather ambiguous newsletter from another distributor to his dealer-customers. In Monsanto, the "something more" was in actuality not very much. See Easterbrook, "Vertical Arrangements and the Rule of Reason", 53 Antitrust L.J. 131, 171-72 (1984).

[2] I note that Monsanto does not in any way signal a retreat from Parke, Davis. In fact, in its opinion, the Monsanto court cited Parke, Davis at two separate points. See Monsanto, 465 U.S. at 761, 762.

Id. It is in the majority's refusal to apply Parke, Davis that I most strongly part company with its legal analysis.

[44] The Supreme Court has never given much guidance on how courts determine whether an unlawful combination exists for the purpose of Section 1. Possible theories that have received some support in the case law vary from the weaker requirements of an "implied acceptance theory" or a "coerced compliance theory" to the more rigid requirement of an express agreement. See 7 P. Areeda, Antitrust Law 8-180 (1986). The majority seriously overstates the extent to which the Court's decision in Monsanto has clarified -- or narrowed -- the criteria for determining whether there was an unlawful combination, by suggesting that an express agreement is necessary. [3] I think the more accurate reading of the relevant cases is that offered by Professor Areeda. He reads Monsanto as merely maintaining a distinction between simple and complex refusals to deal. A mere announcement and termination is a legal, unilateral action. However, when firms use individualized negotiations with dealers, meetings, repeated exhortations, and intermediate pressures, such actions indicate illegal, concerted action. [4] 7 P. Areeda, Antitrust Law 82-180 (1986). All of these factors were present in this [45] case. It is important to note also that this case involves not merely a manufacturer's coercion of its dealers to control the dealers' prices. Here, a competing dealer (JJ's) had also threatened the manufacturer, trying (apparently successfully) to force the manufacturer to enforce the resale price levels. As Professor Areeda has argued, as a matter of antitrust policy, courts should be less tolerant of the efforts of dealers to control their competitors through the manufacturer than they are of manufacturer efforts to control dealer prices. 7 P. Areeda, Antitrust Law 175 (1986).

[46] [*1163] Here, as in Monsanto, there was more than merely a customer complaint followed by a dealer termination. The record before us contains more than enough additional evidence for a jury to have concluded that (1) there was an unlawful combination to maintain the resale price of James Jeans' jeans and (2) The Jeanery was terminated as a result. There is ample evidence that in its dealings with retailers in general James Jeans went well beyond announcing a policy of refusing to deal with price-cutting merchants and terminating those who sold at discount. There is also ample evidence that in the particular act of terminating the Jeanery James Jeans did not, as permitted by Monsanto, simply enforce a preexisting policy in response to information it gained through a customer's complaint.

The record before us reveals direct evidence of an agreement in restraint of trade -- an express oral agreement between James Jeans and JJ's, one of its major accounts. According to the testimony of Handwerk, a James Jeans sales representative, the owner of JJ's told Handwerk that he must stop selling to The Jeanery or he would lose JJ's business; Handwerk immediately assured JJ's owner [47] that he would "take care of things"; when Handwerk reported to the president of James Jeans, he was told to do just that; Handwerk filled in another sales representative, Nordstrom. It was Nordstrom who then cut off The Jeanery, as JJ's had demanded. Handwerk's testimony is direct and substantial evidence from which a jury could reasonably conclude that there was an agreement between JJ's and James Jeans to terminate a price-cutting dealer. Certainly a jury could find that

---

[3] One commentator has stated: "Monsanto clearly does not adopt the implied acceptance or the coercion theory of agreement, but it may not entirely reject them either. Taking Colgate as given, the Court did not pursue agreement concepts." 7 P. Areeda, Antitrust Law 83 (1986).

[4] Professor Areeda stated:

> I do not mean to imply that suggestions or persuasion standing alone can be treated as agreements. Rather we are focusing on persuasion and exhortations (etc.) in the context of threatened termination. In this context, I would treat these additional steps as "complex." As Parke Davis pointed out, such a manufacturer is not merely choosing congenial dealers in the sense of those who prefer to comply in order to get the goods -- he is trying to get compliance without bearing the burden of termination. Such steps approach a seeking of dealer assent to a much greater degree than simple announcement of conditions and termination of non-conformists.

7 P. Areeda, Antitrust Law 116-17 (1986).

Handwerk's response constituted an assent, or at least a communicated acquiescence in JJ's demand. [5] See Monsanto, 465 U.S. at 764 n.9.

[48] The majority reads Monsanto and Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co. v. Zenith Radio, 475 U.S. 574, 106 S. Ct. 1348, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538 (1986), in such a way as to create, in effect, a "beyond all reasonable doubt" standard for finding a Section 1 agreement. The majority's argument, reduced to its simplest form, is that there is a plausible reading of the evidence that would be consistent with legal, independent behavior, and therefore plaintiff's case must fail. [6] See maj. slip op. at 6399-6404. I think this approach to evaluating evidence reads the relevant Supreme Court cases far too narrowly. What the Supreme Court stated was that an antitrust plaintiff "must show that the inference of conspiracy is reasonable in light of the competing inferences of independent action or collusive action that could have harmed respondents." Matsushita, 106 S. Ct. at 1357. It is clear that The Jeanery has met this standard. Any stricter reading of the Supreme Court cases interferes with the jury's fact-finding function. That evidence may not entirely preclude an interpretation of independent action does not warrant taking the case from the jury.

[49] The evidence here, unlike the type of evidence that Monsanto said would be insufficient, is direct in character. Handwerk's testimony relates to the agreement itself, not to other facts from which an [*1164] agreement might be inferred. While conceivably one could argue that Handwerk's response meant something different than acquiescence, the meaning of the statement was clearly a matter for the jury to decide. [7] In Monsanto, the plaintiffs sought to have the jury infer an agreement from the circumstantial fact that a dealer was terminated following another dealer's complaint. Here the plaintiff asked only that the jury find that the exchange of statements itself constituted an agreement or, at the least, resulted in a communicated acquiescence. This the majority refuses to permit the jury to do solely because it would read the verbal exchange differently.

[50] Even were only circumstantial evidence involved, the concerns raised in Monsanto, that drawing "an inference . . . from highly ambiguous evidence" will erode the Colgate doctrine and eliminate distributors as an important source of information for manufacturers, Monsanto, 465 U.S. at 763, are not present in this case. The circumstances here do not suggest the likelihood that the manufacturer was simply responding to newly received information by implementing a preexisting policy. First, there was no evidence that James Jeans had a preexisting policy of terminating price-cutting dealers; in fact one of its own sales representatives testified that he believed it was illegal to terminate a price-cutter. There was also evidence that James Jeans normally dealt with price-cutters in other ways. Second, there was considerable evidence that at the time of Handwerk's discussion with JJ's owner James Jeans was already well aware of The Jeanery's price-cutting policies; thus the dealer's complaint was not particularly informative. Third, the message conveyed by the retailer here -- a threat to cease doing business unless a competitor is terminated -- cannot be classified [51] as simply informational in nature. The existence of an agreement between James Jeans and JJ's to terminate The Jeanery is at least compelling circumstantial evidence of the existence of an underlying arrangement to maintain resale prices -- an arrangement of which James Jeans and JJ's were a part.

---

[5] The majority characterizes this same exchange as "reflect[ing] nothing more than an effort by a manufacturer to calm an angry customer." Maj. op. at 1158. Though this may be a plausible interpretation of the exchange, interpreting the exchange as evidence of an agreement seems far more probable. In any event, the majority oversteps its role when it announces that the exchange falls [so] far short of establishing an agreement" that the question should not even go to the jury. Maj. op. at 1158. In effect, the district court, and the majority, simply arrogated unto themselves the fact-finding function of the jury.

[6] The majority's analysis seems to proceed from precisely the opposite premise set forth so persuasively by the Third Circuit when discussing antitrust conspiracies over forty years ago: "The picture of conspiracy as a meeting by twilight of a trio of sinister persons with pointed hats close together belongs to a darker age." William Goldman Theatres v. Loew's, Inc., 150 F.2d 738, 743 n. 15 (3d Cir. 1945). Nowadays, because price-fixing agreements are per se illegal, antitrust conspirators tend to be perceptive enough to avoid express written agreements and to deny the existence of any combination or conspiracy; they also tend to avoid leaving incriminating evidence lying about.

[7] In Monsanto, the Court upheld the jury's finding of a conspiracy based on "direct evidence of agreements to maintain prices," even though that evidence was subject to lawful as well as unlawful interpretations. Monsanto, 465 U.S. at 765.

There was considerable further evidence of the "something more" referred to in Monsanto, or the "other means which effect adherence to [the manufacturer's] resale prices" referred to in Parke, Davis, 362 U.S. at 49. There was, for example, substantial evidence that James Jeans' tactics were far more sophisticated and disruptive than those permitted under Monsanto. James Jeans did not simply terminate dealers upon discovering that they did not sell at keystone. With respect to The Jeanery, James Jeans tried both rewards and punishments. Mr. Ballantyne testified that a James Jeans representative offered to supply The Jeanery with factory seconds and off-price merchandise in return for selling the popular new line of "Streets" jeans at full price. He also testified that the same representative repeatedly tried to "intimidate" him into selling at keystone.

In addition, [52] other retail clothing dealers offered testimony as to the varying tactics that James Jeans used in trying to obtain their adherence to the keystone pricing policy. One dealer testified that he maintained James Jeans' resale prices because Nordstrom told him that his company had "ways of stopping anybody else from discounting," and that "orders could be lost, could be shipped to the wrong destination, or just never processed." [8] Another retailer testified that in "many different conversations" with James Jeans sales representatives, he was told that James Jeans had received complaints from other dealers about his discount prices, that it wanted him to sell at keystone, and that he would have difficulty getting his supplies in the future if he did not comply. When this [*1165] dealer refused to comply, James Jeans "lost" a $ 30,000 order from him.

[53] The majority claims that James Jeans' various coercive tactics are "consistent with the privilege of independent action permitted a manufacturer under Colgate." Maj. op. at 1159. The majority gives no authority -- and certainly none can be found in Colgate or Monsanto -- for the position that a manufacturer may not only unilaterally terminate a dealer, but it may also use a variety of intermediate coercive tactics designed to disrupt the dealer's business operations, without fear of running afoul of the antitrust laws. The majority's view is contrary to the clear holding of Parke, Davis; the majority offers neither case law nor policy arguments for its extraordinary extension of the limited Colgate privilege.

James Jeans' conduct in attempting to conceal the fact that it had cut off future sales to The Jeanery also qualifies as "something more", as does its fabrication of a false reason for its failure to ship an order it had previously accepted. Attempting to conceal the fact of termination and contriving false reasons for not filling an order are probative of guilty knowledge and wrongful conduct. Here, these acts constitute further evidence that the termination [54] of the Jeanery was undertaken as part of an unlawful resale price maintenance plan.

Finally, there was direct evidence of an agreement between James Jeans and The Jeanery to maintain the keystone price on the Street model. Mr. Ballantyne testified that he ultimately acquiesced in Nordstrom's demands regarding that line and advised him he would comply. The existence of this agreement may serve as some evidence of a general pattern of agreements between James Jeans and its dealers.

In sum, the above evidence constitutes substantial direct as well as circumstantial proof that James Jeans was a participant in a combination or conspiracy to maintain the retail price of its merchandise. Cf. Monsanto, 465 U.S. at 765. Thus, there was more than sufficient evidence before the jury to permit it to find a violation of Section One of the Sherman Act. Accordingly, in my opinion, the judgment notwithstanding the verdict cannot stand.

BUSINESS ELECTRONICS AND THE PRICE-RELATED AGREEMENT

As noted at the outset, the original majority opinion relied exclusively on the argument that the Jeanery had not shown sufficient evidence of an agreement between James Jeans and JJ's to [55] terminate The Jeanery's franchise. After the Supreme Court handed down Business Electronics Corp. v. Sharp Electronics Corp., 485 U.S. 717, 56 U.S.L.W. 4387, 99 L. Ed. 2d 808, 108 S. Ct. 1515 (1988), the majority revised its opinion to add a second ground for its conclusion: insufficient evidence of a price-specific agreement between James Jeans and JJ. This second issue is not properly before us: it was not considered by the district court in its JNOV, and it was not raised by either party either before the district court or on appeal. Cf. maj. op. at 1155-56 n.6. Moreover, even if the new ground could be raised for the first time now, on the theory that there has been a change in the law, the majority could not affirm on that basis. Rather, it would be required to remand in order to give the district court the initial opportunity to determine whether The Jeanery's evidence regarding a price-specific agreement was in fact insufficient. If upon remand, the district court were to decide that the evidence adduced at the original trial failed to meet the Business Electronics standard, JNOV would still not be proper; because the change in the law occurred after [56] trial, The Jeanery would be entitled to a new trial at which it could present additional evidence. Thus, I do not believe Business Electronics can serve as a basis for affirming the district court's judgment. In my view, the majority's decision to uphold the JNOV must stand or fall on the basis of its original opinion.

[8] This parallels precisely what happened to The Jeanery: Its last order was not filled allegedly because James Jeans was out of stock or not in production, but The Jeanery offered persuasive evidence that these reasons were fictitious.

I respectfully dissent.

Federal Paper Bd. Co. v. Commissioner

United States Tax Court

May 16, 1988. ; May 16, 1988, Filed

Docket No. 34291-83

Reporter
90 T.C. 1011 *; 1988 U.S. Tax Ct. LEXIS 67 ; 90 T.C. No. 67; 1988-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P68,188

Federal Paper Board Co., Inc., Petitioner v. Commissioner of Internal Revenue, Respondent

Disposition: [1] Decision will be entered under Rule 155.

Core Terms

milk carton, carton, folding, settling, signatories, sharing agreement, settlement, settlement payment, settlement agreement, antitrust, opt-out, class action, allocate, sales, conspiracy, purchases, complaints, Claimant, provisions, aggregate, sever, severally liable, jointly, percent, anti trust law, amount paid, purposes, amounts, conspirators, negotiations

Syllabus

In March 1976, P and other defendants were indicted for Federal antitrust law violations that involved folding cartons and not milk cartons. P pleaded nolo contendere to the charges set forth in the indictment. Subsequently, P paid amounts to settle antitrust litigation brought under sec. 4 of the Clayton Act. P paid a portion of those amounts to plaintiffs to settle a class action. P paid the remainder of those amounts to plaintiffs that chose not to participate in the settlement of the class action (opt-outs) -- the opt-outs chose, instead, to negotiate on their own behalves with P and other defendants in the antitrust litigation. Certain plaintiffs in the antitrust litigation asserted that P and other defendants conspired to affect the prices of both folding cartons (folding carton claims) and milk cartons (milk carton claims). Held: For purposes of amounts paid by P to settle class action, determined that allocation of P's payments between milk carton claims and folding carton claims is based upon aggregate sales of all the settling defendants in the class action to the settling plaintiffs in such action. Sec. 162(g), I.R.C. [2] 1954, applies to amounts allocated to folding carton claims, and disallows deduction for two-thirds of amounts so allocated. Held, further: For purposes of amounts paid by P to settle with opt-outs, determined that allocation of P's payments between milk carton claims and folding carton claims is based on agreements that established the manner in which the liability of the defendants that signed such agreements would be shared among such defendants. Sec. 162(g), I.R.C. 1954, applies to amounts allocated to folding carton claims, and disallows deduction for two-thirds of amounts so allocated.

Counsel: David Sachs, for the petitioner.

William S. Garofalo and Barbara J. Fazekas, for the respondent.

Judges: Wells, Judge.

Opinion by: WELLS

Opinion

[*1012] Respondent determined the following deficiencies in petitioner's Federal income taxes:

TYE --	Deficiency
12/27/75	[1] $ 595,009
12/30/78	595,009

[3] After concessions, the issue for decision is whether section 162(g) [2] disallows a deduction for two-thirds of all amounts paid by petitioner to settle antitrust actions [*1013] brought under section 4 of the Clayton Act. [3]

FINDINGS OF FACT

Some of the facts have been stipulated and are found accordingly. The stipulation of facts and attached exhibits are incorporated herein by this reference.

Petitioner's principal place of business or office was in Montvale, New Jersey, at the time the petition in this case was filed. For all years relevant to this case, petitioner manufactured and sold folding cartons (i.e., bending boxboard containers [4] that are not suitable for liquids), and not milk cartons (i.e., bending boxboard containers that are suitable for liquids). [4]

Criminal Case and Companion Civil Suit

In February 1976, a criminal action was brought by the United States (hereinafter Government) in the U.S. District Court for the Northern District of Illinois against 23 corporations, including petitioner, and 50 individuals. The Government alleged that those defendants had violated Federal antitrust laws by engaging in a conspiracy to fix the prices of folding cartons. The Government did not allege for purposes of that criminal case, however, that [5] the defendants therein conspired to fix the prices of milk cartons. [5]

In February 1976, the Government also filed a civil enforcement action against petitioner and other parties. Similar to its position in the criminal case, the Government alleged in the civil enforcement action that the defendants had engaged in a conspiracy to fix the prices of folding cartons, and did not allege that there had been a conspiracy to fix the prices of milk cartons.

[*1014] In March 1976, petitioner and other defendants in the criminal case were indicted for Federal antitrust law violations that involved folding cartons and not milk cartons. Petitioner pleaded nolo contendere to the charges set forth in the indictment.

---

[1] The deficiency determined for petitioner's taxable year ended Dec. 27, 1975, resulted from a reduction of an investment credit carryback from petitioner's taxable year ended Dec. 30, 1978.

[2] Unless otherwise indicated, all section references are to the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 as amended and in effect during the taxable years in issue. All Rule references are to the Tax Court Rules of Practice and Procedure.

[3] According to respondent, petitioner is one of several taxpayers that have taken conflicting positions with regard to the issue in this case.

[4] For purposes of stipulations, trial, and briefing, the parties stipulated to these definitions of the terms "folding cartons" and "milk cartons," unless it was clear from the context in which the terms appeared that some other definitions should apply. We adopt the same definitions of the terms, unless it is clear from the context in which the terms appear that some other definitions should apply.

[5] Subsequent to the filing of the criminal case, a separate grand jury convened to consider allegations involving milk cartons and did not return any indictments.

In the civil enforcement action, the Government obtained a consent order and injunction against petitioner and other defendants.

Class Action

During [6] 1976, very soon after the indictment was issued in the criminal case, purchasers of milk cartons, folding cartons, or both types of cartons filed antitrust actions under section 4 of the Clayton Act against petitioner and other carton producers. These actions were consolidated in the U.S. District Court for the Northern District of Illinois (hereinafter District Court). The District Court subsequently determined that the civil antitrust litigation satisfied the statutory requirements for a class action, [6] and certified the litigation as such. The District Court defined the class on whose behalf the class action was maintained as "All persons in the United States (excluding Defendants, their subsidiaries, affiliates, or agents), who purchased folding cartons from any of the Defendants in these actions during the period from January 1, 1960 to December 31, 1974." [7]

[7] Complaints that were filed by purchasers of cartons contained allegations that the defendants engaged in a conspiracy to fix, raise, maintain, or stabilize the prices of folding cartons. The complaints were, in essence, based upon the allegations contained in the indictment issued in the criminal case. Nevertheless, some of the complaints specifically mentioned milk cartons -- some of the complaints specifically alleged that the conspiracy included milk cartons, and at least one of the complaints specifically excluded milk cartons. Moreover, plaintiffs that did not specifically allege in their complaints that the conspiracy included milk cartons asserted in the course of the antitrust [*1015] litigation that the term "folding cartons," as used in their complaints, included milk cartons. Thus, the plaintiffs alleged that the defendants engaged in a single conspiracy to fix the prices of both folding cartons (folding carton claims) and milk cartons (milk carton claims). [8]

[8] On June 24, 1977, the District Court denied a motion filed by certain defendants, not including petitioner, to sever milk carton claims. [9] On June 29, 1977, in response to a motion for reconsideration of its ruling denying the motion to sever milk carton claims, the District Court again refused to sever milk carton claims; this motion for reconsideration was filed by the same defendants that filed the motion to sever milk carton claims. The District Court made clear during the pendency of the litigation that, at least for the initial stages of the litigation, (1) the term "folding cartons" included milk cartons, and (2) the court would not consider the milk carton industry a separate industry from the folding carton industry.

[9] The parties to the class action made various attempts to settle the antitrust litigation. In 1977, a group of defendants, which included petitioner, made a settlement proposal to the plaintiffs in the class action. The proposal provided that each defendant would settle the claims of its own plaintiff-customers and make settlement payments to those customers. The proposal also required the plaintiffs to exclude the sales of settling defendants from the plaintiffs' claims against those defendants that refused to settle. The proposal, however, was rejected by the plaintiffs.

---

[6] See Fed. R. Civ. P. 23.

[7] The class initially included indirect purchasers of folding cartons, but was amended on July 15, 1977, to include only direct purchasers of folding cartons. See In Re Folding Carton Antitrust Litigation, 75 F.R.D. 727, 737-738 (N.D. Ill. 1977).

[8] We use the terms "milk carton claims" and "folding carton claims" because the parties to this case and to the antitrust litigation used such terms. By using such terms, however, we are not suggesting that there were allegations of one conspiracy involving only milk cartons, and allegations of a second, separate conspiracy involving only folding cartons.

[9] The defendants filing the motion argued, inter alia, that (1) because the milk carton business was distinct from the folding carton business, the addition of the milk carton claims to the antitrust proceedings was improper; and (2) continued joint litigation of the claims involving folding cartons and the claims involving milk cartons would complicate the antitrust litigation and cause prejudice to those defendants required to defend against both types of claims.

On October 18, 1978, petitioner entered into a settlement agreement with certain plaintiffs (these plaintiffs hereinafter are referred to as settling plaintiffs). [10] The settlement agreement provided for the complete settlement of the [*1016] settling plaintiffs' claims against petitioner "with respect to all purchases of folding cartons including milk cartons." In return, petitioner agreed to deposit cash in the amount of $ 12 million in escrow for the benefit of the settling plaintiffs, and to issue to the settling plaintiffs subordinated promissory notes in the total principal amount of $ 5 million and [10] warrants to purchase 181,818 shares of petitioner's common stock. The total fair market value of the consideration provided by petitioner under the settlement agreement was $ 15,405,487. [11] Of this amount, $ 1,060,000 represented a payment of legal fees. [12]

Other defendants also each entered into a settlement agreement with the settling plaintiffs. [13] Each settlement agreement, including the agreement between petitioner and the settling plaintiffs, specifically provided that the agreement would not be construed to affect in any manner [11] any joint and several liability of the defendants that did not settle the claims against such defendants -- "any putative common law rule or practice, or State or local statute, to the contrary notwithstanding." Amounts paid by other defendants under their respective agreements were deposited in escrow.

Each defendant in the class action individually negotiated with the settling plaintiffs in order to settle the antitrust litigation. Moreover, the defendants did not enter into an agreement between themselves with respect to the manner in which they would share their liability to the settling plaintiffs. [14]

[12] On July 9, 1979, the settling plaintiffs submitted a proposed plan of distribution to the District Court. That plan provided, in essence, that the amounts held in escrow and petitioner's notes and warrants would be distributed to the plaintiffs that filed claim forms. Distributions would be based upon each claimant's purchases of cartons from the [*1017] defendants in relation to all claimants' purchases of cartons from the defendants (these distributions hereinafter are referred to as pro rata distributions); no distinction was made between purchases of folding cartons and purchases of milk cartons for purposes of the distribution formula.

Later in July 1979, the District Court entered a pretrial order approving the form of a Notice of Hearing on Proposed Class Action Settlements and Proposed Plan of Distribution. The notice set forth the class that the District Court previously certified, [15] but specifically stated that "For purposes of these proposed settlements, folding cartons include milk cartons." (Emphasis in original.) The notice also contained a summary of the proposed settlement agreements and the proposed plan of distribution of the settlement fund (hereinafter [13] plan of distribution).

On September 19, 1979, the District Court granted final approval of the settlement agreements entered into by the defendants with the settling plaintiffs, and also granted final approval of the plan of distribution.

Amounts held in escrow were distributed to the settling plaintiffs during the period between 1980 and 1983. In 1980, petitioner's notes and warrants were distributed to the settling plaintiffs pursuant to the plan of distribution; [16]

---

[10] Certain plaintiffs excluded themselves from the certified class at some point in time, and therefore did not participate in this settlement agreement. Separate agreements were negotiated with those plaintiffs, and are discussed infra.

[11] There was no provision in the settlement agreement indicating that petitioner's payment was based upon petitioner's actual sales of folding cartons to its plaintiff-customers.

[12] The parties have stipulated to this allocation.

[13] Certain plaintiffs excluded themselves from the certified class at some point in time, and therefore did not participate in these settlement agreements. Separate agreements were negotiated with those plaintiffs, and are discussed infra.

[14] Defendants did, however, enter into an agreement among themselves with respect to the manner in which they would share their liability for various litigation costs incurred in the class action.

[15] See this opinion, supra, for the defined class in the class action.

[16] Thus, pro rata distributions were made to purchasers of folding cartons, milk cartons, or both types of cartons.

however, settling plaintiffs with claims below a certain dollar amount did not receive notes and warrants because notes and warrants were not issued in fractional amounts.

During the relevant period [14] under the plan of distribution, the aggregate sales of milk cartons by all the settling defendants to the settling plaintiffs constituted 23.6 percent of the aggregate sales of folding and milk cartons by such defendants.

Opt-Out Cases

Approximately 16 plaintiffs chose not to participate in the settlement agreements between the defendants and the settling plaintiffs (these nonparticipating plaintiffs hereinafter are referred to as opt-out plaintiffs). The opt-out [*1018] plaintiffs chose, instead, to negotiate on their own behalves with the defendants.

On May 31, 1979, certain defendants, not including petitioner, renewed their motion to sever milk carton claims. [17] The District Court denied the motion, but made clear that it could "sever out the milk cartons any time in the course of the trial when it appeared * * * that it [was] prejudicial to keep them in." [18]

Prior to settling with [15] the opt-out plaintiffs, most of the defendants signed two agreements that established the manner in which their liability to the opt-out plaintiffs would be allocated among such defendants (this type of agreement hereinafter is referred to as a sharing agreement). Petitioner and other defendants signed a sharing agreement that covered the claims of various opt-out plaintiffs, including the claims of opt-out plaintiff Dean Foods Co. (hereinafter Dean Foods), and signed a separate sharing agreement that covered only the claims of opt-out plaintiff Kraft, Inc. (hereinafter Kraft). (The sharing agreement that covered the claims of various opt-out plaintiffs, including Dean Foods, hereinafter is referred to as the general sharing agreement, and the sharing agreement that covered the claims of Kraft hereinafter is referred to as the Kraft sharing agreement.)

One portion of the general sharing agreement divided liability into two parts for a payment to opt-out plaintiffs pursuant to a settlement agreement that "[encompassed]" folding carton claims. First, general sharing agreement signatories that entered into any such settlement agreement with opt-out plaintiffs would share 95 percent [16] of the payment under such settlement agreement in proportion to each such signatory's sales of folding cartons to the opt-out plaintiffs. Second, 5 percent of the payment would be shared on a per capita basis among sharing agreement signatories that entered into any such settlement agreement with opt-out plaintiffs. [19]

Another part of the general sharing agreement contained provisions that specifically applied to the milk carton claim [*1019] of Dean Foods. [20] One such provision applied to general sharing agreement signatories that had not sold milk cartons to Dean Foods (hereinafter Dean Foods folding carton signatories). Under that provision, Dean Foods folding carton signatories would be required to make a contribution to each general sharing agreement signatory that sold milk cartons to [17] Dean Foods (hereinafter Dean Foods milk carton signatory) if such Dean Foods milk carton signatory (1) settled a milk carton claim against itself, and (2) in connection therewith, caused Dean Foods to agree not to assert that claim against any general sharing agreement signatory. For petitioner, this contribution would be that part of $ 10,000 equal to such settling Dean Foods milk carton signatory's percentage of milk carton sales to Dean Foods. [21] That provision only applied, however, if the Dean Foods folding carton

---

[17] This renewed motion only related to the claims of the opt-out plaintiffs.

[18] See note 9 supra.

[19] Portions of any payment shared on a per capita basis also were subject to certain absolute dollar limitation provisions. Those provisions of the general sharing agreement, however, are not material to our decision.

[20] These provisions of the general sharing agreement referred specifically to the Dean Foods milk carton claim, and did not refer to any other milk carton claims of opt-out plaintiffs.

[21] Such sales percentages were set forth in an exhibit attached to the general sharing agreement. The total of the sales percentages for all Dean Foods milk carton signatories was 100 percent.

signatories had not settled Dean Foods' milk carton claim against them prior to the time the Dean Foods milk carton signatory entered into a settlement agreement meeting the foregoing requirements.

[18] Another provision regarding the milk carton claim of Dean Foods provided, in essence, that if any Dean Foods folding carton signatory (1) entered into a "Settlement" with Dean Foods, and (2) satisfied requirements 2, 3, and 4 of article IV (B) of the general sharing agreement, [22] then that signatory would not be subject to the judgment sharing provisions of the sharing agreement with respect to the milk carton claim of Dean Foods.

Requirements 2, 3, and 4 of article IV (B) of the general sharing agreement were as follows:

ARTICLE IV

SETTLEMENT OF FOLDING CARTON CLAIMS

* * * *

B. * * *

2. The Signatory or group of Signatories entering into an agreement of Settlement with an Opt Out Claimant(s) refrains from requiring such Opt Out Claimant(s) to reduce or refund any Settlement payment by such [*1020] Signatory(ies) in the event such Opt Out Claimant(s) settle(s) with another Signatory on a basis different from the Settlement effected with such Signatory(ies); [19] and

3. The Signatories seek to pursue a joint approach to negotiating settlement of each Opt Out Claim, which may include the selection of persons to negotiate with Opt Out Claimants; provided, however, that a Signatory(ies) need not join in or accept any Settlement or proposed Settlement which is the outcome of such joint approach; and provided that any Signatory may at any time after the commencement of such joint Settlement negotiations cease to participate in such joint Settlement negotiations with respect to an Opt Out Claimant(s), if such Signatory gives notice for such decision to all other Signatories which are then defendants to the Claimant's Claim, which notice must be prior to the commencement of any individual Settlement negotiations by such Signatory with such Opt Out Claimant(s); and

4. Upon reaching a Settlement with an Opt Out Claimant(s), a Signatory give notice of the terms thereof within ten days to all other Signatories which are then defendants to that Claimant's folding carton claim.

The term "Settlement," as used in the foregoing provision and in other parts of the general sharing agreement, was defined by the general sharing agreement as "any disposition of [20] a Claim by agreement with any [opt-out Plaintiff]." The term "Claim," as used in the definition of the term "Settlement" and in other parts of the general sharing agreement, was defined as "any demand in any action listed in Exhibit A hereto, brought by an [opt-out plaintiff] for damages, * * * based upon any alleged violation of the antitrust laws with respect to the purchase or sale at any time of folding cartons and/or milk cartons." [23]

In 1980, Dean Foods accepted $ 500,000 from all the defendants in settlement of its folding carton claim against such defendants and in settlement of its milk carton claim against the defendants that did not sell milk cartons to Dean Foods. Petitioner's share of the Dean Foods settlement payment was determined under the general sharing agreement provisions that governed payments under settlement agreements [21] that encompassed folding carton claims, and such determination took into account the percentage of folding cartons that Dean Foods purchased from petitioner -- Dean Foods purchased 11.85 percent of its folding [*1021] cartons from petitioner

[22] Art. IV governed the settlement of folding carton claims.

[23] Exhibit A to the general sharing agreement listed the various legal actions brought by the opt-out plaintiffs. Included in the list was the action brought by Dean Foods.

during the period in which the alleged antitrust activities occurred. The amount of petitioner's share was $ 57,374, [24] and petitioner paid that amount.

Dean Foods' aggregate purchases of milk cartons from settling defendants amounted to approximately $ 70 million for the relevant period, and its aggregate purchases [22] of folding cartons from settling defendants amounted to approximately $ 7 million for the same period.

For tax purposes, petitioner based its allocation of its share of the settlement payment on the aggregate sales of the group of settling defendants to Dean Foods: petitioner allocated 90.9 percent of its $ 57,374 settlement payment, or $ 52,152.97, to the Dean Foods milk carton claim and the remainder of the settlement payment, or $ 5,221.03, to the Dean Foods folding carton claim.

The Kraft sharing agreement contained provisions similar to the provisions contained in the general sharing agreement. The Kraft sharing agreement provided that sharing agreement signatories that had not sold milk cartons to Kraft (hereinafter Kraft folding carton signatories) would make a contribution to each Kraft sharing agreement signatory that had sold milk cartons to Kraft (hereinafter Kraft milk carton signatory) if the Kraft milk carton signatory (1) settled Kraft's milk carton claim against that Kraft milk carton signatory, and (2) in connection therewith, caused Kraft to agree not to assert a claim against any Kraft sharing agreement signatory based on sales of milk cartons by the settling Kraft [23] milk carton signatory to Kraft. For petitioner, this contribution would be that part of $ 10,000 equal to each such settling Kraft milk carton signatory's percentage of milk carton sales to Kraft. [25]

Several defendants that were Kraft milk carton signatories settled with Kraft. Each such defendant signed a separate settlement agreement that settled the milk carton [*1022] claim against such settling defendant, and in connection with each such agreement, Kraft agreed not to assert a claim against any Kraft sharing agreement signatory based on sales of milk cartons by the settling defendant to Kraft. Pursuant to the foregoing Kraft sharing agreement provision regarding Kraft's milk carton claim, petitioner contributed $ 4,778.90 to amounts paid by the settling Kraft milk carton signatories.

The total value of petitioner's settlement [24] payments with respect to claims by all opt-out plaintiffs, including Dean Foods and Kraft, was $ 178,569.14. Of this amount, $ 17,822 represented a payment of legal fees. [26] Dean Foods and Kraft were the only opt-out plaintiffs that asserted milk carton claims.

OPINION

The issue for decision is whether section 162(g) disallows a deduction for two-thirds of all amounts paid by petitioner [27] to settle antitrust actions brought under section 4 of the Clayton Act. [28]

---

[24] A. Petitioner's share of the settlement payment was calculated as follows pursuant to the general sharing agreement provision that focused on each defendant's actual sales: .1185 X .95 X $ 500,000 = $ 56,287.

B. Petitioner's share of the settlement payment was $ 1,087 under the sharing agreement provision that focused on each defendant's per capita share.C. Petitioner's total share of the settlement payment to Dean Foods therefore was $ 57,374 ($ 56,287 + $ 1,087).

[25] Such sales percentages were set forth in an exhibit attached to the Kraft sharing agreement. The total of the sales percentages for all Kraft milk carton signatories was 100 percent.

[26] The parties have stipulated to this allocation.

[27] As to the amounts paid by petitioner under the settlement agreements discussed herein, the parties to this case agree on the portion of such amounts that are allocable to various legal fees to which sec. 162(g) does not apply. See sec. 1.162-22(a)(2), Income Tax Regs. Thus,

[28] Sec. 4 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. sec. 15 (1976), provides, in pertinent part, that "any person who shall be injured in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws may sue therefor * * * without respect to the amount in

[25] Section 162(a) provides that a deduction shall be allowed for all "ordinary and necessary expenses paid or incurred during the taxable year in carrying on any trade or business." Nevertheless, section 162(g) disallows a deduction under section 162(a) for two-thirds of certain amounts paid with respect to an action brought under section 4 of the Clayton Act. [29] Section 162(g), provides, in pertinent part, as follows:

SEC. 162(g). Treble Damage Payments Under the Antitrust Laws. -- If in a criminal proceeding a taxpayer is convicted of a violation of the antitrust laws, or his plea of guilty or nolo contendere to an indictment or information charging such violation is entered or accepted [*1023] in such a proceeding, no deduction shall be allowed under subsection (a) for two-thirds of any amount paid or incurred --

* * * *

(2) in settlement of any action brought under * * * section 4 [of the Clayton Act] on account of such violation or related violation.

The statutory requirement that the antitrust violation involved in a civil proceeding be the same as, or related to, the violation involved in a criminal proceeding gives effect to the desire of Congress to deny a deduction [26] "only in the case of 'hard-core violations' where intent has been clearly proved in a criminal proceeding." S. Rept. 91-552 (1969), 1969-3 C.B. 423, 597.

In the instant case, petitioner pleaded nolo contendere to charges in an indictment. That indictment charged petitioner and other defendants with a violation of the antitrust laws involving only folding cartons, not milk cartons. In the civil antitrust litigation instituted by purchasers of cartons, [30] however, there were allegations by plaintiffs that the prices of both milk cartons and folding cartons were affected by a single conspiracy, and that such conspiracy violated the antitrust laws. [27] Thus, the violation giving rise to the criminal action is not the same in all material respects as the violation giving rise to the civil antitrust actions. We therefore must allocate settlement payments between the milk carton claims and the folding carton claims. [31]

Payments in settlement [28] of litigation are characterized for tax purposes by reference to the origin and nature of the claim that was the actual basis for settlement (United States v. Gilmore, 372 U.S. 39 (1963); Bent v. Commissioner, 87 T.C. 236, 244 (1986), affd. 835 F.2d 67 (3d Cir. 1987)), and not by reference to the validity of that claim [*1024] (Bent v. Commissioner, supra at 244). [32] [30] A determination as to how to allocate settlement payments is factual (Knuckles v. Commissioner, 349 F.2d 610, 612 (10th Cir. 1965), affg. a Memorandum Opinion of this Court; Seay v. Commissioner, 58 T.C. 32, 37 (1972)), and petitioner bears the burden of proving that respondent's allocation is erroneous (Fisher Cos. v. Commissioner, 84 T.C. 1319, 1339 (1985), affd. without published opinion 806 F.2d 263 (9th Cir. 1986); Bresler v. Commissioner, 65 T.C. 182, 188 (1975); Rule 142(a)). Such determination requires consideration of all the facts, including [29] the issues stated, the defenses controversy, and shall recover threefold the damages by him sustained, and the cost of suit, including a reasonable attorney's fee."

---

[29] For a more extensive discussion of sec. 162(g) and its genesis, see Wilberding, "New Tax Considerations Injected into Antitrust Damage Proceedings," 19 Kan. L. Rev. 441 (1971).

the amounts allocable to legal fees are not in issue, and references in our analysis to petitioner's payments do not include such amounts.

[30] References to any type of civil antitrust litigation hereinafter are to the litigation instituted by purchasers of cartons, and not to the civil enforcement action brought by the Government.

[31] Respondent does not allege that the milk carton claims in the civil litigation are "related" to the violation involved in the criminal case. We therefore do not address that issue. The statutory term "related violation" is defined in sec. 1.162-22(c), Income Tax Regs. See also sec. 1.162-22(f), examples (2) and (3), Income Tax Regs.; Fisher Cos., Inc. v. Commissioner, 84 T.C. 1319, 1338-1343 (1985), affd. without published opinion 806 F.2d 263 (9th Cir. 1986).

[32] For purposes of this test, the "claim" in the instant case is the alleged conspiracy, not the milk carton claims and folding carton claims. See note 8 supra concerning our use of the terms "milk carton claims" and "folding carton claims."

asserted, the background of the litigation, and other facts pertinent to the controversy giving rise to the settlement. See Morgan's Estate v. Commissioner, 332 F.2d 144, 151 (5th Cir. 1964); Rafter v. Commissioner, 60 T.C. 1, 8 (1973), affd. without published opinion 489 F.2d 752 (2d Cir. 1974); Boagni v. Commissioner, 59 T.C. 708, 713 (1973). When an allocation of settlement payments must be made and there is no express allocation contained in a settlement agreement, the most important fact for purposes of making the allocation is "the intent of the payor." [33] Knuckles v. Commissioner, 349 F.2d at 613; see also Bent v. Commissioner, supra at 244, and cases cited therein.

Respondent's principal argument is that all of petitioner's settlement payments are allocable to folding carton claims, and that because the folding carton claims were the subject of a criminal action in which petitioner pleaded nolo contendere, section 162(g) applies to all of petitioner's settlement payments. Respondent bases that argument on the following grounds: (1) Petitioner did not manufacture milk cartons; (2) there has been no showing that petitioner "was in fact jointly and severally liable for" milk carton claims; (3) section 162(g) was intended to apply "in the case of 'hard core' violations where intent has been clearly proved in a criminal proceeding"; and (4) certain defendants signed sharing agreements which, in large part, based each [31] such defendant's liability on the defendant's actual sales. [*1025] Respondent alternatively argues that only a nominal portion of petitioner's settlement payments should be allocated to milk carton claims. Respondent bases his alternative argument on essentially the same grounds relied upon by respondent in support of his principal argument.

Petitioner argues that it is entitled to allocate to the milk carton claims more than a nominal portion of each of its payments that were made in settlement of the civil antitrust actions, and that amounts so allocated are fully deductible. Petitioner further argues that the allocation should be based on the aggregate sales of all settling defendants to the relevant plaintiffs. [34] Petitioner bases his arguments on the attempt by the plaintiffs in the civil antitrust litigation to hold petitioner jointly and severally liable for all damages allegedly caused by the carton manufacturers implicated in that antitrust litigation.

[32] In light of the factual nature of the issue in this case, we separately analyze the various settlement arrangements pursuant to which petitioner made payments.

Settlement of Class Action

It is well established that the principle of joint and several liability applies to antitrust conspirators. MacMillan Bloedel Ltd. v. Flintkote Co., 760 F.2d 580, 584-585 (5th Cir. 1985); City of Atlanta v. Chattanooga Foundry & Pipeworks, 127 F. 23 (6th Cir. 1903), affd. 203 U.S. 390 (1906). Moreover, there is no right to contribution among antitrust conspirators. Texas Industries v. Radcliffe Materials, Inc., 451 U.S. 630 (1981). [35]

[33] Although many complaints were filed by purchasers of folding cartons, milk cartons, or both types of cartons, those complaints alleged that there was only a single antitrust conspiracy, and at least some of the complaints [*1026] alleged that the conspiracy involved both folding cartons and milk cartons. Moreover, Edward Wolfe, the attorney who represented petitioner for purposes of the antitrust litigation, testified that even the plaintiffs

---

[33] It should also be noted, however, that this Court will not give effect to a settlement agreement or similar document written solely to enable a taxpayer to claim a deduction. See Metzger v. Commissioner, 88 T.C. 834, 849-850 (1987); Fisher Cos., Inc. v. Commissioner, supra at 1340.

[34] For instance, since 23.6 percent of the aggregate sales of cartons by all settling defendants to the settling plaintiffs constituted sales of milk cartons, petitioner argues that it should be able to allocate 23.6 percent of its settlement payments to milk carton claims.

[35] Petitioner made payments in settlement of the class action and the opt-out plaintiffs' cases prior to the Supreme Court's decision in Texas Industries v. Radcliffe Materials, Inc., 451 U.S. 630 (1981). Nevertheless, prior to Texas Industries, as well as prior to the time the settlement arrangements discussed herein were entered into by the parties, the legal authority that existed on the issue of contribution among antitrust conspirators indicated that there was no such right. See generally 47 A.L.R. Fed. 712 (1980).

that used only the term "folding cartons" in their complaints "asserted in the course of the proceedings that they were covering milk cartons as well." We found Mr. Wolfe to be a particularly credible witness, and respondent did not offer any evidence that caused us to doubt Mr. Wolfe's testimony.

During the course of the class action, the District Court judge that presided over the civil antitrust litigation certified the class of plaintiffs as "purchasers of folding cartons," but he made clear several times that he considered the term "folding carton" to include milk cartons for purposes of that litigation. The presiding judge made that point clear in response to motions filed by several defendants, not including petitioner, to sever claims [34] involving milk cartons from the litigation. After reviewing the briefs and documents submitted by the parties, the judge stated, "There doesn't appear to be any such significant difference so that the milk carton industry could be called a separate industry from the folding carton industry." Subsequently, in response to a motion to reconsider his earlier denial of such defendants' motion, the judge once again refused to sever milk carton claims from the litigation.

Based upon the foregoing law and evidence, we find that the settling plaintiffs sought to hold petitioner jointly and severally liable for all damages alleged to have flowed from an antitrust conspiracy, regardless whether those damages were related to the conspiracy's alleged effects on prices of folding cartons or milk cartons.

Attempts to sever milk carton claims from the litigation, and thereby possibly defeat the attempt by the plaintiffs to hold all the defendants jointly and severally liable with respect to milk carton claims and folding carton claims, proved unsuccessful. Thus, petitioner was placed in a position where it naturally would be concerned about liability for both milk carton claims and folding carton [35] claims, even though it did not manufacture milk cartons.

The parties to the class action made various attempts to settle such action. In 1977, a group of defendants, including [*1027] petitioner, made a settlement proposal to the plaintiffs in the class action. The proposal provided that each defendant would settle claims made by its own customers, and would make settlement payments to those customers. The proposal also required the plaintiffs to exclude the sales of settling defendants from legal actions maintained against any defendants that refused to settle. Thus, the settlement proposal indicates that the defendants had grouped together in an effort to protect each other from claims that attempted to hold nonsettling defendants jointly and severally liable for the acts of the settling defendants. The plaintiffs ultimately rejected such proposal. Nevertheless, the proposal provides further evidence of the defendants' concern about joint and several liability for both milk carton claims and folding carton claims.

Subsequently, petitioner settled with certain plaintiffs in the class action (i.e., the settling plaintiffs), and the settlement agreement covered both milk carton [36] claims and folding carton claims. The settlement agreement did not contain an explicit allocation of amounts paid under the agreement. Nevertheless, all the evidence in the instant case suggests that petitioner, the payor, intended that its payments under the settlement agreement with the settling plaintiffs would settle both milk carton claims and folding carton claims, and we so find.

As noted, respondent's principal argument in this case is that all of petitioner's settlement payments are allocable to folding carton claims, and respondent's alternative argument is that only a nominal portion of petitioner's settlement payments is allocable to milk carton claims. As bases for both of those arguments, respondent relies upon essentially the same grounds.

Respondent first relies upon the nature of petitioner's business: petitioner did not manufacture or sell milk cartons. According to respondent, since petitioner did not manufacture milk cartons, and the milk carton and folding carton industries are separate, the origin of petitioner's liability was petitioner's antitrust activities with respect to folding cartons, not milk cartons. That argument, however, ignores the claims [37] of the settling plaintiffs -- they attempted to hold petitioner, as well as the other defendants, jointly [*1028] and severally liable for all damages flowing from the alleged conspiracy. Thus, the settling plaintiffs were alleging that any activities in which petitioner engaged that were in violation of the Federal antitrust laws affected the prices of both milk cartons and folding cartons. The nature of petitioner's business therefore is not a valid predicate for respondent's arguments concerning the allocation of petitioner's settlement payments.

Respondent next relies upon petitioner's failure to prove that it "was in fact jointly and severally liable for" milk carton claims. That argument, however, ignores the well settled principle of law that courts must focus on the origin and nature of a claim, and not on the validity of the claim in characterizing the payments for tax purposes. See Bent v. Commissioner, 87 T.C. at 244. We therefore hold that petitioner is not required to prove joint and several liability, in fact, in order to prove that it is entitled to allocate a portion of its settlement payments to milk carton claims.

Respondent [38] next points to the legislative purpose for section 162(g), which, as already noted, was to deny a deduction only "in the case of 'hard core violations' where intent has been clearly proved in a criminal proceeding." S. Rept. 91-552 (1969), 1969-3 C.B. 423, 597. According to respondent, petitioner's proposed allocation method, which focuses on the aggregate sales of all the settling antitrust defendants to the settling plaintiffs, creates the potential for inequities with respect to any defendant in the class action that sold folding cartons and milk cartons, but had milk carton sales in excess of the aggregate milk carton sales of all the antitrust defendants. Respondent's argument, however, ignores the legal principles governing the liability of antitrust conspirators (i.e., those conspirators are jointly and severally liable for all damages, and have no right to contribution). If the District Court did not sever milk carton claims from the class action, and the class action were tried and decided against all defendants, application of those legal principles would not have resulted in a difference between the relative liability of the defendants in the [39] antitrust case based upon whether the defendants [*1029] sold milk cartons or folding cartons. [36]

Last, respondent relies upon the sharing agreements to establish that all parties to the antitrust litigation "gave a low valuation to the risk of joint and several liability." Respondent apparently makes this point in connection with the legal principle that when there is no settlement payment allocation contained in a settlement agreement, the most important factor to be considered is the intent of the payor. See Knuckles v. Commissioner, 349 F.2d at 613; Bent v. Commissioner, 87 T.C. at 244. Nevertheless, the sharing agreements to which respondent refers were not applicable to the settlement agreement between petitioner and the settling plaintiffs. [40] Moreover, the evidence in the instant case indicates that the defendants entered into the sharing agreements subsequent to petitioner's settlement with the settling plaintiffs. We therefore do not find the sharing agreements to be persuasive evidence that petitioner intended an allocation with respect to its settlement agreement with the settling plaintiffs based upon its actual sales to those plaintiffs.

Based upon the foregoing and the record as a whole, we find that it was the intent of petitioner to allocate settlement payments to milk carton claims and folding carton claims based upon the aggregate sales of all settling defendants in the class action to the settling plaintiffs. Moreover, we hold that petitioner's allocation of settlement payments with respect to its settlement agreement with the settling plaintiffs is proper because it reflects our finding with respect to petitioner's intent. Accordingly, section 162(g) does not apply to the portion of petitioner's settlement payments that is allocable to the milk carton claims of the settling plaintiffs (i.e., 23.6 percent of petitioner's payments).

Settlements With Opt-Out Plaintiffs

Thus far, we have determined how [41] payments made by petitioner to settle the class action are to be allocated. Our allocation was based upon the aggregate sales of all settling [*1030] defendants in the class action to the settling plaintiffs. We made such allocation because of various legal principles governing liability in antitrust actions (i.e., defendants in such actions are jointly and severally liable and unable to seek contribution from other defendants or potential defendants) and other facts relating to the antitrust litigation.

The circumstances surrounding settlement payments made by petitioner to settle the claims of opt-out plaintiffs, however, are distinguishable from the circumstances surrounding settlement payments made by petitioner to settle the class action; sharing agreements (i.e., agreements among the defendants as to how they would share liability) were entered into by most of the defendants with respect to the claims of the opt-out plaintiffs, but not with respect to the claims of the settling plaintiffs. Petitioner has provided us with relatively detailed evidence of the circumstances surrounding its share of settlement payments that were made to Dean Foods and Kraft pursuant to sharing [42] agreements. We therefore first analyze petitioner's ability to deduct its share of those payments.

---

[36] Respondent has not brought any evidence to our attention concerning any distinction that would have been made in the class action based upon the actual sales of each of the defendants in that action.

In 1980, Dean Foods accepted $ 500,000 from all the defendants in settlement of its folding carton claim against such defendants and in settlement of its milk carton claim against the defendants that did not sell milk cartons to Dean Foods. Petitioner's share of the Dean Foods settlement payment was $ 57,374, and was determined under the provisions of the general sharing agreement that governed liability for a payment made pursuant to a settlement agreement that encompassed folding carton claims. Under one of those folding carton claim provisions, general sharing agreement signatories that entered into the settlement agreement with Dean Foods shared 95 percent of the payment made pursuant to that settlement agreement in proportion to each such signatory's sales of folding cartons to Dean Foods (this provision hereinafter is referred to as the 95-percent provision). Under another such folding carton claim provision, general agreement signatories that entered into a settlement agreement with Dean Foods also shared on a per capita basis 5 percent of the payment under that settlement [43] agreement, subject to certain limitations (this [*1031] provision hereinafter is referred to as the 5-percent provision).

As we have noted, the principle of joint and several liability applies to antitrust conspirators, and antitrust conspirators cannot seek contribution from their co-conspirators. Nevertheless, the general sharing agreement provided to those defendants that were parties to such agreement protection against the potentially far-reaching effects of the foregoing legal principles; this was done by basing the relative liability of each such defendant primarily on the actual sales of each such defendant. [37] The 95-percent provision is one provision in the general sharing agreement that had such an effect. Due to the effect of the 95-percent provision on petitioner's economic, or nontax, liability for amounts payable under the settlement agreement with Dean Foods, we find that such provision is the best evidence of petitioner's intent with regard to allocations of amounts paid pursuant to that provision. We therefore hold that petitioner must allocate solely to the Dean Foods folding carton claim petitioner's share of the defendants' settlement payment to Dean Foods [44] that was determined under the 95-percent provision (i.e., petitioner's settlement payment that was based upon petitioner's actual sales of folding cartons).

We next address the amount paid by petitioner pursuant to the 5-percent provision of the general sharing agreement. Such amount was based upon petitioner's per capita share of 5 percent of the total amount paid under the settlement with Dean Foods, and not upon petitioner's actual sales to Dean Foods.

The 5-percent provision was one of the provisions of the general sharing agreement that governed liability for [45] a payment made pursuant to a settlement agreement that encompassed folding carton claims. Petitioner has not argued why the 5-percent provision should be interpreted so as to indicate that petitioner intended to allocate to the Dean Foods milk carton claim petitioner's payment pursuant [*1032] to the 5-percent provision. [38] Therefore, bearing in mind petitioner's burden of proof in this case, we find that petitioner intended to allocate such amount to the Dean Foods folding carton claim. See Rule 142(a). We therefore hold that petitioner must allocate solely to the Dean Foods folding carton claim petitioner's share of the defendant's settlement payment to Dean Foods that was determined under the 5-percent provision of the general sharing agreement (i.e., petitioner's payment that was based upon petitioner's per capita share of the defendants' payment).

[46] Based upon the foregoing, all of petitioner's payment with regard to the Dean Foods settlement is allocable to the Dean Foods folding carton claim, and section 162(g) applies to that amount.

---

[37] Petitioner contends that the sharing agreements "could not affect in any way the legal liability of a defendant to the Opt-Out Plaintiffs on the underlying claims." Nevertheless, the sharing agreements did give the defendants the ability to affect the ultimate net liability of each defendant to the opt-out plaintiffs -- the effect of the general sharing agreement was to avoid the noncontribution principles that otherwise apply to antitrust conspirators.

[38] Petitioner did argue, however, that we should not base allocations upon the provisions of the sharing agreements, and we rejected such argument. See note 37 supra.

We next address petitioner's share of settlement payments made to Kraft. Several defendants that were Kraft Milk Carton Signatories settled with Kraft. Each such defendant signed a separate settlement agreement that settled the milk carton claim against such settling defendant, and in connection with each such agreement, Kraft agreed not to assert a claim against any Kraft sharing agreement signatory based on sales of milk cartons by the settling defendant to Kraft.

Pursuant to one of the Kraft sharing agreement provisions governing Kraft's milk carton claims against Kraft milk carton signatories, petitioner paid a total of $ 4,778.90 to the Kraft milk carton signatories. That provision provided that petitioner, as well as other Kraft folding carton signatories, was required to pay amounts to Kraft milk carton signatories that (1) settled the Kraft milk carton claim against such Kraft milk carton signatories, and (2) in connection therewith, caused Kraft to agree not to assert that same claim [47] against any sharing agreement signatory. [39] Since petitioner's payments with respect to the Kraft settlement agreements were made pursuant to the foregoing milk carton claim provision, it is apparent that petitioner intended that such amounts be allocated specifically to the [*1033] Kraft milk carton claim, and we so find. We therefore hold that such amounts are allocable to the Kraft milk carton claim, and that section 162(g) does not apply to those amounts.

Finally, there remains in issue that portion of petitioner's $ 160,747.14 settlement payment with respect to the claims of opt-out plaintiffs other than Dean Foods or Kraft. [40] The terms of the general sharing agreement and the Kraft sharing agreement indicate that the general sharing [48] agreement governed settlement payments made by the defendants to all opt-out plaintiffs other than Kraft. The provisions of the general sharing agreement that governed payments to settle a milk carton claim refer only to the Dean Foods milk carton claim. Therefore, with respect to the legal actions of the remaining opt-out plaintiffs, petitioner has not proved that there are any milk carton claims to which its settlement payment can be allocated. Moreover, even if there were such milk carton claims, there is no evidence in the record that persuades us that it would be proper to treat the payments to those opt-out plaintiffs differently than we treated petitioner's payment with regard to the Dean Foods settlement. Bearing in mind petitioner's burden of proof in this case, we allocate the remaining amount to folding carton claims, and section 162(g) applies to that amount. See Rule 142(a)

[49] To reflect the foregoing,

Decision will be entered under Rule 155.

End of Document

[39] A milk carton claim against any Kraft milk carton signatory could be asserted against any defendant based upon the principle of joint and several liability, absent an agreement precluding Kraft from asserting such claim against other defendants in the antitrust litigation.

[40] The $ 160,747.14 settlement payment represents the total value of petitioner's settlement with the opt-out plaintiffs, which was $ 178,569.14, minus legal fees, which were $ 17,822.

Seven Gables Corp. v. Sterling Recreation Organization Co.

United States District Court for the Western District of Washington

May 16, 1988, Decided

No. C 84-1057R

Reporter

686 F. Supp. 1418 *; 1988 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 4951 ; 1988-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P68,066

Seven Gables Corporation, Plaintiff, v. Sterling Recreation Organization Co., et al., Defendants

Core Terms

costs, settlement, prejudgment interest, attorney's fees, injunction, antitrust, declaration, lodestar, offset, juror, rates, Clayton Act, expenses, multiplier, damages, parties, argues, circumstances, compensated, defendants', prevailing, amounts, awards, award of attorney's fees, anti trust law, proceedings, expended, theater, trebled, film

Counsel: [1] Perkins Coie, Seattle, Washington, William R. Bishin, Seattle, Washington, Attorneys for Plaintiff.

Thomas J. Greenan, James E. Hurt, Ferguson & Burdell, Seattle, Washington, Attorneys for Defendants.

Judges: Samuel Conti, United States District Judge.

Opinion by: CONTI

Opinion

[*1419] ORDER RE MOTIONS FOR: ATTORNEY'S FEES/COSTS/OFFSETS TO JURY AWARD/PREJUDGMENT INTEREST/AND INJUNCTION

SAMUEL CONTI, UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE

On November 3, 1987, after a lengthy trial on the merits, the jury returned a verdict in this matter holding defendants Sterling Recreation Organization Co. ("SRO"), Frederic A. Danz ("Danz") and Robert M. Hazard ("Hazard")(collectively referred to as the "defendants") liable. The jury awarded plaintiff damages on plaintiff's claims under Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act and Section.020 of the Washington Unfair Business Practices-Consumer Protection Act.

The matter is currently before the court on plaintiff's motions for an award of attorneys fees and costs, for an offset to the damages award, for prejudgment interest and for an injunction. On April 18, 1988, the court held a hearing on these motions. Plaintiff was represented by Thomas L. Boeder, Esq. and Richard L. Baum, Esq. of the law firm of Perkins Coie. Defendants were represented by Thomas J. Greenan, [2] Esq. and James E. Hurt, Esq. of the law firm of Ferguson & Burdell. The court has reviewed the evidence submitted by the parties and the authorities cited in the memoranda, and has considered the oral arguments of counsel presented at the hearing. The court now issues its decision on the motions.

I. MOTION FOR AN AWARD OF ATTORNEY'S FEES

Plaintiff moves this court for an award of attorney's fees in this action pursuant to Section 4 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 15(a), and RCW 19.86.090. Plaintiff requests an award of $ 3,180,076.97 as attorney's fees, and also seeks a fee enhancement. Plaintiff argues that the number of hours claimed by its attorneys is reasonable, and that the hourly rates charged by its attorneys are reasonable. Plaintiff also argues that the court should enhance an award of attorney's fees with a multiplier.

[*1420] Defendants oppose plaintiff's motion. Defendants argue that portions of plaintiff's requested fees are not recoverable. Defendants also argue that plaintiff's claimed hours are excessive and the rates are too high.

Section 4 of the Clayton Act provides, in relevant part, that:

> any person who shall be injured in his business or property by reason of anything [3] forbidden in the antitrust laws may sue therefor in any district court of the United States . . . and shall recover threefold the damages by him sustained and the cost of suit, including a reasonable attorney's fee.

15 U.S.C. § 15(a). In order to determine what constitutes a reasonable attorney's fee, the court will engage in a two part inquiry. First, the court will determine the "lodestar" amount, that is, the number of hours reasonably expended on the litigation multiplied by a reasonable hourly rate. Second, the court will determine whether there should be an upward adjustment of the lodestar, known as a "multiplier." See Pennsylvania v. Delaware Valley Citizens' Council, 483 U.S. 711, - , 97 L. Ed. 2d 585, 590-592, 107 S. Ct. 3078 (1987); Lindy Bros. Builders, Inc. v. American Radiator and Standard Sanitary Corp., 540 F.2d 102 (3d Cir. 1976); Lindy Bros. Builders, Inc. v. American Radiator & Standard Sanitary Corp., 487 F.2d 161 (3d Cir. 1973).

The court's inquiry will be guided by the considerations enumerated in the Ninth Circuit's decision in Kerr v. Screen Extras Guild, Inc., 526 F.2d 67 (9th Cir. 1975). In Kerr, the Ninth Circuit held that the following twelve factors should be considered [4] in awarding attorney's fees: (1) the time and labor required, (2) the novelty and difficulty of the questions involved, (3) the skill necessary to perform the legal services properly, (4) the preclusion of other employment by the attorney due to acceptance of the case, (5) the customary fee, (6) whether the fee is fixed or contingent, (7) time limitations imposed by the client or circumstances, (8) the amount involved and the results obtained, (9) the experience, reputation and ability of the attorneys, (10) the "undesirability" of the case, (11) the nature and length of the professional relations with the client, and (12) awards in similar cases. 526 F.2d at 69-70. The court will consider these factors in determining the lodestar and multiplier amounts.

The court first addresses one of defendants' preliminary objections to plaintiff's motion. Defendants argue that before the reasonableness of the plaintiff's fee request can be analyzed, the court should review the contingency fee contract between plaintiff and its attorneys. Defendants maintain this will prevent a windfall to a plaintiff who could keep a large fee award for itself if it is only contractually obligated to pay some [5] lesser amount to its attorneys. Plaintiff has provided a copy of its fee contract for this court. The court has reviewed this contract and finds that there is no danger that plaintiff will receive a windfall in the event of a fee award.

A. The Lodestar

In its fee request, plaintiff seeks reimbursement for out-of-pocket expenses involved in the litigation and fees paid to expert witnesses. Defendants maintain that these requests are inappropriate. The court will first address the issue of whether these expenses and fees may properly be compensable as "attorney's fees." The court discusses plaintiff's request for statutory costs later in this order. At present the court is concerned with the amounts and expenses claimed by plaintiff that should not be covered under a request for statutory costs.

The court is persuaded by the reasoning expressed in Reazin v. Blue Cross & Blue Shield of Kansas, Inc., 663 F. Supp. 1360, 1457 (D. Kan. 1987), that "expenses not normally itemized and billed in addition to the hourly rate should be included in a fee allowance if reasonable in amount." Plaintiff has properly documented its out-of-pocket expenses, and has, at the court's request, [6] separated those expenses it requested in the alternative as statutory costs from those that it seeks as attorney's fees. The court awards plaintiff $ 95,398.74 in out-of-pocket expenses as set forth in Exhibit A to the Declaration of Richard L. [*1421] Baum Re: Seven Gables Attorney Fee Request.

The court, however, does not accept the argument that expert witness fees are compensable as attorney's fees. This issue is controlled by the United States Supreme Court's decision in Crawford Fitting Co. v. J.T. Gibbons, Inc., 482 U.S. 437, 96 L. Ed. 2d 385, 107 S. Ct. 2494 (1987). In Crawford the Supreme Court held that "absent explicit statutory or contractual authorization for the taxation of the expenses of a litigant's witness as costs, federal courts are bound by the limitations set out in 28 U.S.C. § 1821 and § 1920." 96 L.Ed 2d at 393. The court does not interpret the provisions of the Clayton Act providing for recovery of attorney's fees as explicit statutory authorization for compensating plaintiff for fees paid to experts beyond that authorized by the cost statutes. The court therefore denies plaintiff's request for $ 121,024.35 in expert witness fees.

In order to establish the lodestar, the court must determine [7] whether the hours claimed were reasonably expended. Plaintiff has submitted extensive documentation in support of its fee request. Plaintiff has submitted affidavits which establish the number of hours expended by its attorneys in this litigation. Defendants do not attack the veracity of the claimed hours. Rather, defendants argue that the number of attorney's hours expended, as well as the claimed rates, are unreasonable.

Plaintiff seeks compensation for a total of 26,966.68 hours of work performed by attorneys (both partners and associates of Perkins Coie, as well as associated counsel), legal assistants, clerks, computer staff and temporary staff. Plaintiff has provided adequate descriptions of the relevant time entries. The court has no reason to doubt the accuracy of plaintiff's time records. The court also finds these hours properly compensable as attorney's fees.

The court has evaluated the amount of time expended in this case in light of the Kerr factors. This case involved complex antitrust issues and required experienced antitrust counsel to prosecute the claims. For proof, plaintiff had to rely on complex economic analyses and computer generated statistics. Plaintiff [8] had to support its case with the testimony of experts in the movie industry as well as experts in antitrust economics. Plaintiff was opposed by able and experienced antitrust counsel, who vigorously contested every claim at every step of the litigation. In light of all the circumstances in this case, the court finds that plaintiff achieved its primary litigation objectives in a reasonable manner.

Defendants have argued that plaintiff over staffed and over litigated this action. The court shares some of the defendants' concern. The number of attorneys and staff members that plaintiff dedicated to this action (16 attorneys, 6 legal assistants, 7 clerks, 4 computer staff members and various temporary clerks) as well as the number of claimed hours (26,966.68) is staggering. The court is mindful of its task to award fees in such a manner as "to reward the efficient litigator and to withold compensation for excessive, duplicative, and unnecessary hours." Ninth Circuit Committee on Court Awarded Attorney's Fees, Committee Finding No. 10. However, upon review of all of the relevant Kerr factors, and with particular attention to the results obtained, the court is of the opinion that the [9] time and effort spent was reasonable.

Plaintiff's original attorney's fees request contained hourly rates based on the current value of the services. Defendants argue that the current rates represent a significant increase over plaintiff's attorney's historical rates, and are an unreasonable basis for any fee award. Defendants argue that the relevant hourly rates in this matter should be the prevailing rates among Seattle attorneys.

At the April 18, 1988 hearing, the court requested that plaintiff provide a breakdown of the attorney's hours claimed listing both the historical rates and the current rates. Plaintiff has provided this information to the court in exhibits attached to the Declaration of Sabra P. McIntosh Re: Seven Gables' Attorney's Fee Request.

While there is some authority for awarding attorney's fees based on their current value (see Delaware Valley, supra, [*1422] 97 L.Ed 2d at 592), the court finds that the historical rates are the appropriate basis for determining the lodestar amount in the circumstances of this case. The court is not persuaded that the plaintiff should be compensated at the prevailing rates for Seattle attorneys. Nor does the court see, from the meager [10] evidence placed before it, how those rates would differ significantly from those charged by plaintiff's attorneys. The court has reviewed the historical rates charged plaintiff's attorneys and finds they are reasonable in relation to the services performed. The court recognizes that plaintiff should be compensated for the delay in obtaining these fees, and therefore the court grants an award with simple interest.

The following table represents the court's determination of the proper lodestar in this case:

Seven Gables Fees Summary	Name	Total Hours	Historical Value	Historical Value With Simple Interest
Partners	Boeder	3366.70	$ 632,743.60	$ 699,376.40
	Holtan	907.75	166,597.50	187,719.50
	Burman	1811.60	321,543.70	354,087.88
	Reingold	22.25	3,916.00	4,332.23
	Chellis	891.25	104,683.50	127,197.69
Associates	Baum	2952.50	368,489.80	397,126.76
	Barley	1115.30	87,964.40	105,843.88
	Bowers	77.75	6,375.50	6,854.46
	Callahan	86.35	7,685.15	8,027.02
	Freedman	78.00	7,955.00	8,320.44
	Kramer	47.90	3,747.40	3,947.19
	Leiner	265.30	18,571.00	19,077.95
	Mohr	226.65	17,170.70	18,358.90
	Swanson	235.75	17,686.00	22,816.40
	Woodliff	135.80	10,895.35	12,328.63
Summer Clerk	Daspin	73.00	3,431.00	3,841.35
Legal Assistants	McIntosh	4487.53	305,065.52	343,453.67
	Cain	150.25	8,331.75	9,369.52
	Wiley	113.00	5,870.00	6,146.02
	Benson	126.70	5,701.50	6,171.61
	Ledford	308.25	13,071.75	13,914.70
	Tillson	3113.00	58,020.75	63,692.06
Clerks	Teller	2003.75	59,565.75	63,522.20
	Benske	1092.20	29,894.15	35,785.63
	Dickerson	371.25	10,820.25	11,486.95
	Lucey	1495.50	42,055.50	47,890.32
	Savage	182.25	4,920.75	6,202.83
	Phillips	257.85	4,641.30	4,891.65
Computer Staff	Bennett	2.50	212.50	256.65
	King	18.50	962.00	1,055.92
	Owen-Craft	225.75	11,851.50	12,751.35
	Wilson	82.25	4,112.50	4,466.79

Perkins Coie Fees Total		26324.38	2,344,553.07	2,610,314.54
Associated Counsel Fees Total	Bishin	642.30	90,258.50	106,875.94
Temporary Clerks			118,472.16	118,472.16
Other Out-of-Pocket Expenses			95,398.74	95,398.74
Total Hours and Fees:		26966.68	$ 2,648,682.47	$ 2,931,061.38

[11] [*1423] The court therefore determines that the proper lodestar amount in this case is $ 2,931,061.38.

B. Multiplier

Plaintiff has requested that this court increase the fee award by adding a multiplier to the lodestar amount. The Supreme Court has explained, in the context of civil rights litigation, that > where a plaintiff has obtained excellent results, his attorney should recover a fully compensatory fee. Normally this will encompass all hours reasonably expended on the litigation, and indeed in some cases of exceptional success an enhanced award may be justified. In these circumstances the fee award should not be reduced simply because the plaintiff failed to prevail on every contention raised in the lawsuit.

Hensley v. Eckerhart, 461 U.S. 424, 76 L. Ed. 2d 40, 52, 103 S. Ct. 1933 (1983). One often cited purpose for a fee enhancement is the compensation of counsel for the risk of not being paid. See Delaware Valley, supra, 97 L.Ed 2d at 591-600 (1987) [and cases cited therein]. The burden of proving that such an adjustment is necessary to the determination of a reasonable fee is on the fee applicant. Blum v. Stenson, 465 U.S. 886, 79 L. Ed. 2d 891, 901, 104 S. Ct. 1541 (1984).

In the present case the court is not persuaded [12] that a multiplier is necessary to ensure plaintiff an award of reasonable attorney's fees. The court has endeavored to fully compensate plaintiff's attorneys. Plaintiff has been awarded, in the lodestar amount, the full amount of legally recoverable fees. Those fees are enormous, and are greater than the amount of the jury verdict (prior to trebling). The court has further compensated plaintiff for the delay in obtaining those fees. While plaintiff is the prevailing party in this action, it did not succeed to the full extent of its damage claims. The court has not reduced the lodestar because plaintiff was not fully successful. Nor does the court feel the results obtained were sufficiently "excellent" to justify an enhancement of an already enormous award. The court is not persuaded that plaintiff needs to be further compensated for the risks of taking the case, particularly in light of the fact that plaintiff received substantial pre-trial settlements from other defendants. The court finds that the lodestar amount fully compensates plaintiff and therefore denies the request for a multiplier.

In accordance with the foregoing, the court grants plaintiff an award of attorney's fees [13] in the amount of $ 2,931,061.38.

II. MOTION FOR AN AWARD OF COSTS

Plaintiff has moved this court for an award of its costs in bringing this lawsuit, pursuant to Section 4 of the Clayton Act. Defendants oppose plaintiff's motion on two grounds: (1) they argue that plaintiff has waived its right to recover costs because of procedural errors, and (2) they argue some of the costs sought are excessive or otherwise inappropriate.

Section 4 of the Clayton Act provides that a prevailing plaintiff in a private antitrust action shall recover "the cost of suit, including a reasonable attorney's fee." [*1424] 15 U.S.C. § 15(a). Under this section, an award of costs to a successful antitrust plaintiff is mandatory. Alyeska Pipeline Service Co. v. Wilderness Society, 421 U.S. 240, 44 L. Ed. 2d 141, 155, 95 S. Ct. 1612 (1975).

The Ninth Circuit has held that the only costs recoverable by a successful plaintiff in a private antitrust suit are those which are normally allowable under 28 U.S.C. § 1920 and Fed. R. Civ. P. 54(d). Twentieth Century Fox Film Corp. v. Goldwyn, 328 F.2d 190, 224 (9th Cir.), cert. denied, 379 U.S. 880, 13 L. Ed. 2d 87, 85 S. Ct. 143 (1964). The Federal Rules of Civil Procedure provide, in relevant part > (d) Costs. Except when [14] express provision therefor is made either in a statute of the United States or in these rules, costs shall be allowed as of course to the prevailing party unless the court otherwise directs; but costs against the United States, its officers, and agencies shall be imposed only to the extent permitted by law. Costs may be taxed by the clerk on one day's notice. On motion served within 5 days thereafter, the action of the clerk may be reviewed by the court.

Fed. R. Civ. P. 54(d). See also Local Rules for the United States District Court for the Western District of Washington, CR 54.

28 U.S.C. § 1920 provides

> A judge or clerk of any court of the United States may tax as costs the following:
> (1) Fees of the clerk and marshal;
> (2) Fees of the court reporter for all or any part of the stenographic transcript necessarily obtained for use in the case;
> (3) Fees and disbursements for printing and witnesses;
> (4) Fees for exemplification and copies of papers necessarily obtained for use in the case;
> (5) Docket fees under section 1923 of this title;
>
> (6) Compensation of court appointed experts, compensation of interpreters, and salaries, fees, expenses, and costs of special interpretation [15] services under section 1828 of this title.
> A bill of costs shall be filed in the case and, upon allowance, included in the judgment or decree.

The time limits prescribed in Fed. R. Civ. P. 54(d) and the corresponding Local Rule do not govern this action. Rule 54(d) controls only when there is no express statutory provision for costs. In this case Section 4 of the Clayton Act provides the statutory authority for this motion. Furthermore the court itself established that it would determine the amount of costs at a later date, and accepted the parties stipulated briefing schedule. Therefore the court rejects defendants' argument that plaintiff's motion is procedurally improper.

Plaintiff originally presented a summary of costs to the court which included expenses claimed as part of plaintiff's request for attorney's fees. Plaintiff sought an award of these costs in the event the court did not award the costs as part of reasonable attorney's fees. At the court's request, plaintiff has now submitted a summary of costs which omits those fees sought as part of an attorney's fee award.

The court has thoroughly reviewed this new cost summary as well as the supporting documentation. The court [16] finds that plaintiff's request for reporter fees is proper under § 1920(2). The court finds the request for witness fees proper under § 1920(3) and 28 U.S.C. § 1821. The court also finds that the request for exemplification costs, though large, is proper under 28 U.S.C. § 1920(4) and the standards enunciated in In Re Air Crash Disaster, 687 F.2d 626, 631 (2d Cir. 1982).

The court therefore grants plaintiff's motion to the following extent:

Clerk and Marshall Fees	$ 99.00
Court Reporter Fees	$ 45,015.30
Witness Fees	$ 4,924.18
Exemplification Fees	$ 18,476.38

Photocopying Fees	$ 50,453.19
Docket Fees	$ 20.00
TOTAL COSTS	$ 118,988.05

In accordance with the foregoing, the court awards plaintiff a total of $ 118,988.05 in costs.

III. OFFSETS TO JURY AWARD

Prior to the trial in this action, plaintiff received settlement amounts from other defendants [17] in this action. It is undisputed [*1425] that some portion of the settlement amounts should be offset against the treble damages award in this case. Plaintiff argues that because each of the settlements it entered into compromised claims that went beyond the instant action's damage period, not all settlement amounts are proper offsets against the treble damage award. Plaintiff argues that the offset should be determined by applying to each settlement amount a percentage figure that is equivalent to the percentage that the damages period bears to the period of claims compromised by each settlement.

Defendants oppose any apportionment of the offset. Defendants argue that plaintiff's action includes state law claims and plaintiff has failed to comply with a state statute [RCW 4.22.060] designed to control the effect of settlements upon non-settling parties. Defendants argue that it is now impossible for this court to approve plaintiff's plan for apportioning an offset for settlements. Defendants further argue that as to plaintiff's federal claims, the doctrine of res judicata would prohibit plaintiff from engaging in new litigation with any of the defendants for any damage attributable to the [18] period prior to trial. Defendants contend that plaintiff's federal judgment should be reduced by the full amount of the settlements.

Where collective antitrust liability is found, it is proper to deduct the sums plaintiff has received from settling defendants from the trebled damage award. Flintkote Co. v. Lysfjord, 246 F.2d 368, 398 (9th Cir. 1957). In a federal antitrust law action, a defendant, against whom civil damages, costs, and attorney's fees have been assessed, has no right of contribution, under federal statutory or common law, from other participants in the unlawful conspiracy on which recovery was based. Texas Industries v. Radcliff Materials, 451 U.S. 630, 68 L. Ed. 2d 500, 512, 101 S. Ct. 2061 (1981).

The court rejects defendants claim that plaintiff settlements are improper under Washington state law. The court finds that the state statute dealing with settlement inapplicable to the instant case, there being no right of contribution under federal antitrust law.

Plaintiff has not disclosed the settlement agreements to the defendants because they contain confidentiality provisions prohibiting disclosure without agreement of the settling parties. Plaintiff has, however, received approval to state [19] that the entire amount of all settlements obtained in the case is $ 1,435,000.00. Out of this amount plaintiff argues $ 864,564.50 should be offset against the trebled damages amount.

Plaintiff has provided the court with the settlement agreements under seal, and the court has reviewed them in camera. Absent disputed facts, the construction of a contract is a matter of law for the court to decide. Jones Associates v. Eastside Properties, Inc., 41 Wash. App. 462, 704 P.2d 681, 684 (1985). The court rejects plaintiff's argument that the settlement amounts should be apportioned. The agreements reference the compromise of claims asserted in this action; there is no reference to a specified damage period. The court therefore finds that the full amount of all settlements, $ 1,435,000.00, should be offset against the trebled award of $ 6,600,000.00. The court need not address the issue of whether a subsequent action by plaintiff would be barred under the principles of res judicata.

In accordance with the foregoing, the court orders that the court's judgment of November 4, 1987, as amended, be further amended to provide for judgment in favor of plaintiff and against defendants in the amount [20] of $ 5,165,000.00, with interest to run on that amount from November 4, 1987, forward at a rate of 6.90% as provided by 28 U.S.C. § 1961(a).

IV. MOTION FOR AN AWARD OF PREJUDGMENT INTEREST

Plaintiff moves this court for an award of prejudgment interest on the actual damages found by the jury, for the period from August 10, 1984, the date of service of plaintiff's complaint, until November 4, 1987, the date of judgment. Plaintiff argues [*1426] such an award is just in this case because defendants engaged in conduct designed to delay the litigation and increase the cost thereof.

Defendants oppose plaintiff's motion. Defendants argue that plaintiff has not made an adequate showing that defendants' conduct falls within the authorized grounds for such an award. Defendants also argue that there is a presumption that the jury has already awarded prejudgment interest, and that plaintiff has introduced no evidence to rebut this presumption. Defendants also submit the declaration of the forewoman of the jury, wherein she asserts that the jury has already awarded plaintiff prejudgment interest. Plaintiff in turn moves to strike this declaration as inadmissible.

The court first addresses the issue of [21] admissibility of the forewoman's declaration. The Federal Rules of Evidence provide, in relevant part:

> Upon an inquiry into the validity of a verdict or indictment, a juror may not testify as to any matter or statement occurring during the course of the jury's deliberations or to the effect of anything upon that or any other juror's mind or emotions as influencing the juror to assent to or dissent from the verdict or indictment or concerning the juror's mental processes in connection therewith, except that a juror may testify on the question whether extraneous prejudicial information was improperly brought to the jury's attention or whether any outside influence was improperly brought to bear upon any juror. Nor may a juror's affidavit or evidence of any statement by the juror concerning a matter about which the juror be precluded from testifying be received for these purposes.

Fed. R. Evid. 606(b). Defendants have submitted a declaration in this case entitled "Declaration of Nancy Ellen Garlock Re Prejudgment Interest." In this declaration, the forewoman of the jury in this action states that the jury included prejudgment interest in their computation of damages and that "if [22] the court were to award any prejudgment interest separate and apart from the jury verdict, this would be a duplication of amounts already contained with the verdict for prejudgment interest." Declaration of Garlock, p. 2, attached as Exhibit A to SRO Defendant's Memorandum in Opposition to Plaintiff's Motion for Pre-Judgment Interest. This declaration does not concern extraneous prejudicial information or outside influence being brought to bear upon any juror. The declaration is therefore inadmissible under Fed. R. Evid. 606(b), and the court grants plaintiff's motion to strike. See Scogin v. Century Fitness, Inc., 780 F.2d 1316, 1318-1320 (8th Cir. 1985).

Section 4 of the Clayton Act, as amended by the Antitrust Improvements Act of 1980, provides, in relevant part:

> (a) Amount of recovery; prejudgment interest
>
> . . . The court may award under this section, pursuant to a motion by such person promptly made, simple interest on actual damages for the period beginning on the date of service of such person's pleading setting forth a claim under the antitrust laws and ending on the date of judgment, or for any shorter period therein, if the court finds that the award of such interest [23] for such period is just in the circumstances. In determining whether an award of interest under this section for any period is just in the circumstances, the court shall consider only--
>
> (1) whether such person or the opposing party, or either party's representative, made motions or asserted claims or defenses so lacking in merit as to show that such party or representative acted intentionally for delay, or otherwise acted in bad faith;
>
> (2) whether, in the course of the action involved, such person or the opposing party, or either party's representative, violated any applicable rule, statute, or court order providing for sanctions for dilatory behavior or otherwise providing for expeditious proceedings; and
>
> (3) whether such person or the opposing party, or either party's representative, [*1427] engaged in conduct primarily for the purpose of delaying the litigation or increasing the cost thereof.

15 U.S.C. § 15(a). Plaintiff maintains that defendants' refusal to acknowledge, throughout the pre-trial discovery proceedings, that they had special relationships with film distributors, evidences bad faith and an intent to delay the litigation. Plaintiff further argues that defendants' pre-trial [24] conduct violated Fed. R. Civ. P. 11, 36 and 37. Defendants argue that all their responses during discovery were truthful and that they did not engage in dilatory conduct.

The court is not persuaded that defendants' conduct constituted bad faith. Defendants did vigorously defend this action at every step of the proceedings. Defendants were not sanctioned by the court at any time during the proceedings. The fact that the jury ultimately found against defendants does not alone establish that the defense was in bad faith. Nor is the court persuaded that defendants engaged in dilatory conduct. This case went from filing to trial on the merits within approximately 3 years. Given the complexity of this case this time period was reasonable. Both parties adhered to the stipulated discovery schedule and the case was ready for trial without delay. In light of all the circumstances present in this case, the court finds that plaintiff is not entitled to an award of prejudgment interest.

In accordance with the foregoing, the court denies plaintiff's motion for an award of prejudgment interest.

V. MOTION FOR AN INJUNCTION

Plaintiff moves this court for an injunction prohibiting defendants from negotiating [25] for the exhibition of first-run films on other than film-by-film, theater by theater basis. Plaintiff advances three reasons for the injunction: (1) SRO still owns 7 drive-in theaters in Washington; (2) defendants are capable of entering the first-run film exhibition at any time and their refusal to admit past violations makes future violations likely; and (3) defendants would suffer no harm from the injunction and such relief would serve the public interest.

Defendants oppose the motion. Defendants argue that there is no factual foundation for a finding of any continuing antitrust violations. Defendants also argue that the court has already found that negotiation for films on something other than a theater by theater, film by film basis is not a per se antitrust violation, and therefore the court should not enjoin such future acts.

15 U.S.C. § 26 provides, in relevant part:

> Any person, firm, corporation, or association shall be entitled to sue for and have injunctive relief, in any court of the United States having jurisdiction over the parties, against threatened loss or damage by a violation of the antitrust laws, including sections 13, 14, 18, and 19 of this title, when [26] and under the same conditions and principles as injunctive relief against threatened conduct that will cause loss or damage is granted by courts of equity, under the rules governing such proceedings. . . .

The laws of the State of Washington provide for similar relief. RCW § 19.86.020. The relief in an antitrust case must be effective to redress the violations and to restore competition; a district court possesses large discretion to fit the decree to the special needs of the individual case. Ford Motor Co. v. United States, 405 U.S. 562, 31 L. Ed. 2d 492, 501, 92 S. Ct. 1142 (1971). 15 U.S.C. § 26 provides for "traditional principles of equity and authorizes injunctive relief upon the demonstration of 'threatened' injury." Zenith Radio Corp. v. Hazeltine Research, 395 U.S. 100, 23 L. Ed. 2d 129, 152, 89 S. Ct. 1562 (1969).

The court finds that plaintiff has failed to demonstrate the threat of future injury. The evidence demonstrates that defendants are no longer in the theater business that was at issue in this litigation. The court is not persuaded that there is a likelihood that defendants will re-enter the business, at least not a likelihood sufficient [*1428] to justify the exercise of injunctive relief. Nor does the court find that the [27] prior legal proceedings against defendants sufficiently probative of future conduct.

Plaintiff is seeking an injunction that would not have geographical limitations. Such an injunction would be improper, since the jury found only an antitrust violation in the Seattle area. Furthermore, plaintiff prevailed on only part of their claims. It would be improper for the court to enjoin conduct that the jury found did not violate the antitrust laws. In sum, the court finds that plaintiff has failed to demonstrate a sufficient legal and factual basis for an injunction.

In accordance with the foregoing, the court denies plaintiff's motion for an injunction.

VI. FORM OF JUDGMENT

Both plaintiff and defendants disagree over what the proper form of judgment should be in this case. Plaintiff argues there should be two judgments, one indicating the damage award of the jury, and another judgment indicating an award of attorney's fees, costs and prejudgment interest. Defendants argue that one judgment is appropriate.

After reviewing the papers submitted by the parties and considering the oral arguments presented at the hearing, the court finds that the concerns of all the parties can be addressed by [28] the court specifically delineating the effective dates of the awards for the purpose of the calculation of interest. The court will therefore enter one judgment stating the effective dates of any awards.

VII. ORDER

In accordance with the foregoing, the court orders that:

(1) plaintiff is granted attorney's fees, pursuant to Section 4 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 15, in the amount of $ 2,931,061.38, with interest to run on that amount, from the date of the signing of this order, at a rate provided by 28 U.S.C. § 1961;

(2) plaintiff is granted costs, pursuant to Section 4 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 15, in the amount of $ 118,988.05, with interest to run on that amount, from the date of the signing of this order, at a rate provided by 28 U.S.C. § 1961;

(3) the court's judgment of November 4, 1987, as amended, is further amended to provide for judgment in favor of plaintiff and against defendants in the amount of $ 5,165,000.00, with interest to run on that amount from November 4, 1987 forward at 6.90% pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1961(a);

(4) plaintiff's [29] motion for prejudgment interest is denied; and

(5) plaintiff's motion for an injunction is denied.

Dated: May 16, 1988

Volvo North America Corp. v. Men's International Professional Tennis Council

United States District Court for the Southern District of New York

May 18, 1988, Decided

No. 85 Civ. 2959 (KTD)

Reporter

687 F. Supp. 800 *; 1988 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 4863 **

Volvo North America Corporation, International Merchandising Corporation, and Proserv, Inc., Plaintiffs, v. Men's International Professional Tennis Council, M. Marshall Happer III, and Philippe Chatrier, Defendants; Men's International Professional Tennis Council and M. Marshall Happer III, Counterclaimants, v. Volvo North America Corporation, International Merchandising Corporation, and Proserv, Inc., Counterclaim-Defendants, and Donald L. Dell, Raymond S. Benton, Dell, Benton & Falk, Mark H. McCormack, International Merchandising Group, International Management Inc., Transworld International Inc., and A.B. Volvo Additional Counterclaim-Defendants Subsequent History: [1] Vacated In Part, Reversed In Part and Remanded, August 30, 1988.

Core Terms

Counterclaims, alleges, tennis, sponsorship, sponsor, players, cause of action, tournaments, television, combined, conspiracy, breached, markets, unfair competition, defamation, trademark, secondary meaning, anticompetitive, damages, conspired, nowhere, breach of contract, Sherman Act, asserts, false statement, slip opinion, advertising, effects, replead, pages

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > Sherman Act

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Counterclaims > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN1[] Attempts to Monopolize, Sherman Act

Federal antitrust law prohibits contracts, combinations and conspiracies in restraint of interstate trade or commerce as well as attempts, combinations, or conspiracies to monopolize interstate trade or commerce. 15 U.S.C.S. §§ 1, 2 (1982).

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > Clayton Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > Prioritizing Resources & Organization for Intellectual Property Act

HN2[] Standing, Clayton Act

Standing to sue for antitrust violations is conferred upon civil litigants by the Clayton Act. 15 U.S.C.S . §§ 15, 26 (1982). In order to prevail in a private antitrust action, a plaintiff must show that a violation of the antitrust laws occurred, that the plaintiff was damaged as a result, and the amount of damages.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Actual Monopolization > Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN3[] Actual Monopolization, Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 1.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN4[] Monopolies & Monopolization, Actual Monopolization

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 2.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Communications > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Acts & Mental States > Mens Rea > Specific Intent

HN5[] Conspiracy to Monopolize, Sherman Act

A plaintiff must establish three essential elements in order to recover in a civil action under 15 U.S.C.S. § 1. The first element is that the defendant entered into a contract, combination, or conspiracy. The second is that that contract, combination, or conspiracy restrained interstate trade or commerce. 15 U.S.C.S. § 1. These first two elements do not require proof of defendants' specific intent to create a monopoly. Rather, the required showing is that the conspirators had a unity of purpose or a common design and understanding, or a meeting of minds in an unlawful arrangement, and that the anticompetitive effects of the alleged conspiracy outweigh the procompetitive effects. The third element that a plaintiff must establish is that injury to the plaintiff's business or property was proximately caused by the defendant's antitrust violation. 15 U.S.C.S. § 15.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > General Overview

HN6[] Monopolies & Monopolization, Conspiracy to Monopolize

Antitrust conspiracies should not be inferred when such inferences are implausible, because the effect of such practices is often to deter procompetetive conduct.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > Monopolization Offenses

HN7[] Monopolies & Monopolization, Actual Monopolization

The offense of monopolization under the Sherman Act § 2, 15 U.S.C.S. § 2, has two elements: (1) the possession of monopoly power in the relevant market and (2) the willful acquisition or maintenance of that power as distinguished from growth or development as a consequence of a superior product, business acumen, or historic accident.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN8[] Monopolies & Monopolization, Actual Monopolization

The monopoly power required by the first element in the offense of monopolization is the power to control prices or exclude competition. Such "exclusionary" conduct is conduct, other than competition on the merits or restraints reasonably "necessary" to competition on the merits, that reasonably appears capable of making a significant contribution to creating or maintaining monopoly power. The issue is whether the defendant's conduct is reasonable in light of its business needs, or whether it unreasonably excludes competition.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Monopolies & Monopolization > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN9[] Monopolies & Monopolization, Actual Monopolization

The second element in the offense of monopolization requires some showing that the monopoly at issue is an unlawful one; lawful monopolies are not prohibited by 15 U.S.C.S. § 2. The lawful monopolist should be free to compete like everyone else; otherwise the antitrust laws would be holding an umbrella over inefficient competitors. A showing that the defendant intends to harm its competitive rivals is not sufficient to satisfy the second element of 15 U.S.C.S § 2. "Intent to harm" rivals without more offers too vague a standard in a world where executives may think no further than "let's get more business," and long-term effects on consumers depend in large measure on competitors' responses. Neither is intent to do more business, which amounts to the same thing. Vigorous competitors intend to harm rivals, to do all the business if they can. To penalize this intent is to penalize competition.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Federal Unfair Competition Law > False Designation of Origin > Elements of False Designation of Origin

Trademark Law > ... > Federal Unfair Competition Law > Trade Dress Protection > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Consumer Protection > False Advertising > General Overview

Trademark Law > ... > Federal Unfair Competition Law > False Advertising > General Overview

HN10[] False Designation of Origin, Elements of False Designation of Origin

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 1125(a) (1982).

Trademark Law > ... > Registration Procedures > Federal Registration > Degree of Protection

Antitrust & Trade Law > Consumer Protection > Likelihood of Confusion > General Overview

Trademark Law > ... > Federal Unfair Competition Law > False Advertising > General Overview

Trademark Law > ... > Federal Unfair Competition Law > False Designation of Origin > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Federal Unfair Competition Law > False Designation of Origin > Elements of False Designation of Origin

Trademark Law > ... > Federal Unfair Competition Law > Lanham Act > General Overview

Trademark Law > ... > Federal Unfair Competition Law > Trade Dress Protection > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Causes of Action Involving Trademarks > Infringement Actions > Determinations

Trademark Law > ... > Factors for Determining Confusion > Similarity of Marks > General Overview

Trademark Law > Trademark Cancellation & Establishment > Registration Procedures > General Overview

HN11[] Federal Registration, Degree of Protection

15 U.S.C.S. § 1125(a) protects both registered and unregistered trademarks against false designation of origin and false description or representation. Analysis of 15 U.S.C.S. § 1125(a) protection requires two steps: a preliminary determination whether the mark at issue is entitled to protection and, if so, what level of protection; and a determination whether confusion is likely to occur between the marks at issue.

Trademark Law > ... > Eligibility for Trademark Protection > Evidence of Secondary Meaning > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Causes of Action Involving Trademarks > Infringement Actions > Determinations

Trademark Law > ... > Terms Requiring Secondary Meaning > Descriptive & Laudatory Terms > General Overview

Trademark Law > ... > Particular Subject Matter > Names > General Overview

Trademark Law > ... > Names > Generic Names > General Overview

Trademark Law > Subject Matter of Trademarks > Eligibility for Trademark Protection > Strength of Trademark

Trademark Law > Subject Matter of Trademarks > Terms With Inherent Distinctiveness > Suggestive Terms

HN12[] Eligibility for Trademark Protection, Evidence of Secondary Meaning

There are four classes of protected trademarks. Arrayed in an ascending order which roughly reflects their eligibility to trademark status and the degree of protection accorded, these classes are (1) generic, (2) descriptive, (3) suggestive, and (4) arbitrary or fanciful. Generic terms -- the common descriptive name of an article or substance-- are ineligible for any trademark protection. Descriptive marks, those describing the qualities, ingredients, effects or other features of the product or service naturally and in ordinary language are protectible only where secondary meaning can be established. Suggestive terms require imagination, thought and perception to reach a conclusion as to the nature of goods, and are eligible for protection without proof of secondary meaning. Finally, arbitrary or fanciful marks enjoy all the rights accorded to suggestive terms as marks - without the need of debating whether the term is "merely descriptive" and with ease of establishing infringement.

Trademark Law > Likelihood of Confusion > Consumer Confusion > General Overview

HN13[] Likelihood of Confusion, Consumer Confusion

After a mark's eligibility for protection has been determined, a court must address the ultimate inquiry: whether there exists a likelihood that an appreciable number of ordinarily prudent purchasers will be misled, or indeed simply confused, as to the source of the goods or services in question.

Trademark Law > ... > Similarity of Marks > Appearance, Meaning & Sound > General Overview

Trademark Law > Likelihood of Confusion > General Overview

Trademark Law > Likelihood of Confusion > Consumer Confusion > General Overview

HN14[ ] Similarity of Marks, Appearance, Meaning & Sound

A court determines whether a likelihood of confusion exists in trademark cases by evaluating a number of factors: 1) The strength of the mark at issue; 2) The degree of similarity between the marks; 3) The proximity of the products or services at issue; 4) The likelihood that the senior user will bridge the gap; 5) Actual confusion; 6) The junior user's good or bad faith in adopting the mark; 7) The quality of the respective goods or services; 8) The sophistication of the relevant consumers; 9) Balancing the conflicting interests of the parties involved; 10) The nature of the senior user's priority; 11) Any delay by the senior user in asserting its claim; 12) The harm to the junior user compared to the benefit to the senior user that would result from the requested injunction.

Trademark Law > ... > Eligibility for Trademark Protection > Evidence of Secondary Meaning > General Overview

Trademark Law > ... > Terms Requiring Secondary Meaning > Descriptive & Laudatory Terms > General Overview

HN15[ ] Eligibility for Trademark Protection, Evidence of Secondary Meaning

A descriptive mark is entitled to trademark protection only if secondary meaning of the mark can be established.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Causes of Action Involving Trademarks > Infringement Actions > Determinations

Trademark Law > ... > Eligibility for Trademark Protection > Evidence of Secondary Meaning > General Overview

HN16[ ] Infringement Actions, Determinations

A mark acquires secondary meaning when it is shown that the primary significance of the term in the minds of the consuming public is not the product but the producer. Thus, the crux of the doctrine of secondary meaning is that the mark comes to identify not only the goods but the source of those goods, even though the relevant consuming public might not know the name of the producer. Someone seeking to establish secondary meaning must show that the purchasing public associates goods designated by a particular mark with a single source. The focus of secondary meaning therefore is the consuming public. Hence, so must be the inquiry into whether the mark owner has a protectible interest. Although the mark owner strives to create a secondary meaning for its product, it is the consuming public which, in effect, determines whether that effort has succeeded.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Consumer Protection > Likelihood of Confusion > General Overview

Trademark Law > ... > Eligibility for Trademark Protection > Evidence of Secondary Meaning > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Consumer Protection > General Overview

Trademark Law > ... > Unfair Competition > Federal Unfair Competition Law > General Overview

Trademark Law > ... > Federal Unfair Competition Law > False Advertising > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Federal Unfair Competition Law > False Designation of Origin > Elements of False Designation of Origin

Trademark Law > ... > Federal Unfair Competition Law > Trade Dress Protection > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Causes of Action Involving Trademarks > Infringement Actions > Determinations

Trademark Law > Likelihood of Confusion > Consumer Confusion > General Overview

HN17[] Consumer Protection, Likelihood of Confusion

A cause of action for unfair competition under the Lanham Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1125(a), is made out by showing the use of one's trademark by another in a way that is likely to confuse consumers as to the source of the product.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Trademark Cancellation & Establishment > Conveyances > Valid Transfers

Trademark Law > Conveyances > General Overview

Trademark Law > Causes of Action Involving Trademarks > Dilution of Famous Marks > General Overview

Trademark Law > ... > Unfair Competition > Federal Unfair Competition Law > General Overview

Trademark Law > Causes of Action Involving Trademarks > Infringement Actions > General Overview

Trademark Law > Likelihood of Confusion > Confusion Among Noncompeting Products > General Overview

Trademark Law > Special Marks > Trade Names > General Overview

Trademark Law > ... > Particular Subject Matter > Names > General Overview

Trademark Law > ... > Eligibility for Trademark Protection > Evidence of Secondary Meaning > General Overview

HN18[] Conveyances, Valid Transfers

Dilution under the New York state antidilution, N.Y. Gen. Bus. Law § 368-d (McKinney 1984), is characterized as a "whittling down" of the identity or reputation of a tradename or mark. Dilution threatens two separable but related components of advertising value. Junior uses may blur a mark's product identification or they may tarnish the affirmative associations a mark has come to convey. The interest protected by § 368-d is not simply commercial goodwill, but the selling power that a distinctive mark or name with favorable associations has engendered for a product in the mind of the consuming public. In order to state a claim under § 368-d, a plaintiff must first have a trademark or name which is truly of distinctive quality or one which has acquired a secondary meaning in the mind of the public, and must prove a likelihood of dilution.

Trademark Law > ... > Remedies > Equitable Relief > General Overview

Trademark Law > Causes of Action Involving Trademarks > Dilution of Famous Marks > General Overview

Trademark Law > ... > Unfair Competition > Federal Unfair Competition Law > General Overview

Trademark Law > ... > Infringement Actions > Remedies > General Overview

Trademark Law > Likelihood of Confusion > Confusion Among Noncompeting Products > General Overview

Trademark Law > Special Marks > Trade Names > Infringement Actions

HN19[] Remedies, Equitable Relief

See N.Y. Gen. Bus. Law § 368-d (McKinney 1984).

Torts > Business Torts > Unfair Business Practices > Elements

Torts > Business Torts > Bad Faith Breach of Contract > General Overview

Torts > Business Torts > Unfair Business Practices > General Overview

HN20[] Unfair Business Practices, Elements

The tort of unfair competition is generally described as a misappropriation of the skill, expenditures, and labor of another. One cannot sell his product by misappropriating the good will of another through misleading the public into thinking that it is "sponsored" by or derived from something else. An element of bad faith is essential to this tort. In order to make out a cause of action for unfair competition, a complaint must set forth: (1) the acts or omissions by defendants that proximately caused the misappropriation and (2) the property or benefit misappropriated -- mere allegations that plaintiff has been harmed will not suffice.

Torts > Intentional Torts > Defamation > General Overview

HN21[] Intentional Torts, Defamation

In order to state a cause of action for defamation, a plaintiff must plead that defendant (1) negligently or willfully uttered a (2) defamatory statement (3) of or concerning the plaintiff (4) to a third person (5) which resulted in damage to plaintiff's reputation. In defamation actions, the false and defamatory matter should be pleaded in haec verba. Paraphrasing the allegedly defamatory statements would be insufficient to state a cause of action for defamation.

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act > General Overview

HN22[] Racketeering, Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act

See 18 U.S.C.S. 1964(c) (1982).

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act > General Overview

HN23[] Racketeering, Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act

See 18 U.S.C.S. § 1962 (1982).

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act > General Overview

HN24[] Racketeering, Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act

In order to state a cause of action under 18 U.S.C.S. § 1964(c), a plaintiff must allege: (1) conduct (2) of an enterprise (3) through a pattern (4) of racketeering activity. In addition, the plaintiff only has standing if, and can only recover to the extent that, he has been injured in his business or property by the conduct constituting the violation. A pattern of racketeering activity consists of at least two specified criminal acts which have sufficient continuity and relationship to constitute a pattern.

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Heightened Pleading Requirements > Fraud Claims

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Counterclaims > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Heightened Pleading Requirements > General Overview

HN25[] Heightened Pleading Requirements, Fraud Claims

Fed. R. Civ. P. 9(b) requires that in all averments of fraud or mistake, the circumstances constituting fraud or mistake shall be stated with particularity.

Civil Procedure > ... > Diversity Jurisdiction > Amount in Controversy > Challenges

Constitutional Law > The Judiciary > Jurisdiction > Diversity Jurisdiction

Civil Procedure > ... > Diversity Jurisdiction > Amount in Controversy > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Diversity Jurisdiction > Amount in Controversy > Determination

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Counterclaims > General Overview

HN26[] Amount in Controversy, Challenges

A matter in controversy must exceeds the sum or value of $ 10,000 under 28 U.S.C.S. § 1332(a) (1982) for diversity jurisdiction.

Counsel: Rogers & Wells, Attoarneys for Plaintiff/Counterclaim Defendant Volvo North America Corporation and Additional Counterclaim Defendant A.B. Volvo, New York, New York of Counsel: James J. Maloney, Esq., Michael F. Coyne, Esq., Margaret M. Vande Wiele, Esq., Guy C. Quinlan, Esq.

Williams & Connolly, Attorneys for Plaintiff ProServ, Inc. and Additional Counterclaim Defendants Donald L. Dell, Raymond S. Benton, and Dell, Benton & Falk, Washington, District of Columbia, of Counsel: Robert S. Litt, Esq., Jeffery R. Berry, Esq., Mark S. Levinstein, Esq., William R. Murray, Jr., Esq. and Lloyd I. Isler, P.C., Local Counsel for Plaintiff, New York, New York.

Lloyd I. Isler, P.C., Attorney for Additional Counterclaim Defendants International Merchandising Corporation, Mark H. McCormack, International Merchandising Group, International Management Inc. and Transworld International Inc., New York, New York.

Simpson Thacher & Bartlett, Attorneys for Defendants-Counterclaimants Men's International Professional Tennis Council and M. Marshall Happer III, New York, New York, of Counsel: Roy L. Reardon, Esq., Michael J. Chepiga, [2] Esq., Julie R. Fenster, Esq.

Judges: Kevin Thomas Duffy, United States District Judge.

Opinion by: DUFFY

Opinion

[*803] MEMORANDUM & ORDER

KEVIN THOMAS DUFFY, UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE.

Plaintiffs/counterclaim-defendants Volvo North America Corporation, International Merchandising Corporation, and ProServ, Inc. and counterclaim-defendants Donald L. Dell, Raymond S. Benton, Dell, Benton & Falk, Mark H. McCormack, International Merchandising Group, International Management Inc., Transworld International Inc., and A.B. Volvo move, inter alia, to dismiss defendants/counterclaimants Men's International Professional Tennis Council's and M. Marshall Happer III's counterclaims against them. For the reasons that follow, counterclaims 1 through 4, 6, 13, and 14 are dismissed. Counterclaims 5 and 7 through 12 are dismissed with leave to replead granted.

FACTS

The background facts of this case are set forth in detail in my Memorandum and Order of August 10, 1987 in this case 678 F. Supp. 1035 (S.D.N.Y. 1987). For purposes of this Memorandum and Order, I will only mention those facts deemed pertinent to the motions at issue.

The Men's International Professional Tennis [3] Council ("MIPTC") is an unincorporated body that organizes, schedules, and administers the Grand Prix Circuit series of men's professional tennis events ("Grand Prix"). Counterclaims and Answer at para. 6. M. Marshall Happer III ("Happer") is MIPTC's administrator, and has held that position since 1981. Id. at para. 7.

A.B. Volvo is a Swedish corporation primarily engaged in the production of automobiles, trucks, and buses. Volvo North America Corporation is a wholly-owned subsidiary of A.B. Volvo, primarily engaged in the distribution of cars, trucks, and buses in the United States. Both A.B. Volvo and Volvo North America Corporation will be collectively referred to as "Volvo". Volvo has sponsored Grand Prix tennis events since 1972, and was the overall sponsor of the Grand Prix from 1980 through 1984. Id. at para. 8.

ProServ, Inc. ("ProServ") is a Washington, D.C. firm that owns, produces, promotes, and televises men's professional tennis events, represents men's professional tennis players and other athletes, and provides marketing and sponsorship opportunities for companies wishing to sponsor men's professional tennis events. Id. at para. 9. Raymond S. Benton [4] ("Benton") is president of ProServ, and a partner of Dell, Benton & Falk, the law firm that represents ProServ. Id. at paras. 12, 13; Memorandum of Plaintiff/Counterclaim Defendant Volvo North American Corporation in Support of a Motion to Dismiss Defendants' Counterclaims at 3. Donald L. Dell is the majority owner of ProServ, and is also a partner of Dell, Benton & Falk. Id. at paras. 11, 13. Dell and the firm of Dell, Benton & Falk will be collectively referred to [*804] as "Dell." Since 1972, ProServ has acted as Volvo's agent for its marketing endeavors in men's professional tennis. Id. at para. 58.

International Management Group is the corporate parent of the three corporations owned by Mark H. McCormack ("McCormack"): (1) International Merchandising Corporation, a corporation based in Cleveland, Ohio and engaged in essentially the same tennis-related activities as ProServ; (2) International Management Inc.; and (3) Transworld International Inc., a sports marketing and merchandising organization. Id. at para. 14. International Management Group, International Merchandising Corporation, International Management Inc., and Transworld International Inc. will [5] be collectively referred to as "IMG".

MIPTC and Happer assert fourteen counterclaims against Volvo, ProServ, Benton, Dell, McCormack, and IMG:

(1) MIPTC alleges that all counterclaim defendants contracted, combined and conspired to restrain trade, in violation of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1 (1982), in the following markets: (a) the worldwide market for men's professional tennis players' services ("the players market"); (b) the world wide market for producing men's professional tennis events ("the events market"); (c) the worldwide, United States, and local markets for television broadcast rights of men's professional tennis events ("the television market"). [1] Counterclaims and Answer at paras. 118-22.

[6] (2) MIPTC alleges that all counterclaim defendants combined and conspired to monopolize, in violation of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 2 (1982), the players, events, and television markets. Id. at paras. 123-26.

(3) MIPTC alleges that Volvo, ProServ, Dell, and Benton made false and misleading written and broadcast statements regarding Volvo's Grand Prix sponsorship which constitute false descriptions and representations and created a false designation of origin in violation of the Lanham Act. 15 U.S.C. § 1125(a) (1982). Id. at paras. 127-29.

(4) MIPTC alleges that Volvo, ProServ, Dell, and Benton adopted a mark so similar to the Grand Prix mark as to create a likelihood of confusion and dilute the distinctive quality of the Grand Prix mark in violation of the New York state antidilution statute. N.Y. Gen. Bus. Law § 368-d (McKinney 1984). Id. at paras. 130-32.

(5) MIPTC alleges that Volvo, ProServ, Dell, and Benton made false and misleading written and broadcast statements regarding Volvo's Grand Prix sponsorship which create a likelihood of confusion, misappropriate rights belonging to MIPTC, and constitute common law [7] unfair competition. Id. at paras. 133-35.

(6) MIPTC alleges that ProServ, Dell, and Benton participate in the affairs of men's pofessional tennis through a pattern of racketeering activity, in violation of the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act ("RICO"). 18 U.S.C. § 1964(c) (1982). The pattern of racketeering activity alleged includes mail fraud, in violation of 18 U.S.C. § 1341 (1982), and wire and television fraud, in violation of 18 U.S.C. § 1343 (1982). Id. at paras. 136-38.

(7) MIPTC alleges that Volvo has breached the overall sponsorship agreement between them, dated September 25, 1979, by failing to pay amounts owed under that agreement. Id. at paras. 139-41.

---

[1] Counterclaimants allege separate markets for the worldwide services of men's professional tennis players in general, and for the services of top-ranked men's professional tennis players. They likewise allege separate markets for worldwide production of men's professional tennis events in general, and for major men's professional tennis events. Therefore, counterclaimants assert restraint of trade in five, not just three relevant markets. I disagree. While the stakes, volume, and publicity of top-ranked men's professional tennis players' services and production of the major events that they play in might be exponentially larger than those of lesser known players and tennis events, they nevertheless do not constitute separate markets.

(8) MIPTC alleges that Volvo has breached its agreement to be a Grand Prix sanction-holder [2] by failing to abide by the [*805] Grand Prix promotional and sponsorship rules. The promotional breaches alleged include failing to identify Nabisco Brands, Inc. ("Nabisco") prominently, or in some instances at all, as the overall Grand Prix sponsor on all promotional, advertising, and other materials in connection with [8] the event. The sponsorship breach alleged is that Volvo sponsored a "circuit within a circuit" of Grand Prix events. Id. at paras. 142-44.

(9) MIPTC alleges that Volvo has breached its overall Grand Prix sponsorship agreement by failing to abide by the Grand Prix promotional and sponsorship rules, and claims the same breaches as those made out in counterclaim 8. Id. at paras. 145-47.

(10) MIPTC [9] alleges that Volvo, ProServ, Dell, and Benton breached their agreements to provide full financial disclosure concerning the Volvo Masters during those years that Volvo was the overall sponsor of the Grand Prix and of the Masters tournaments. Id. at paras. 148-50.

(11) MIPTC alleges that Volvo and ProServ breached their January 1985 agreement to cooperate with MIPTC's reasonable promotional activities. Id. at paras. 151-53.

(12) MIPTC alleges that ProServ has breached its agreement to be a Grand Prix sanction-holder by failing to abide by Grand Prix promotional and sponsorship rules. The promotional breaches alleged include failing to identify Nabisco prominently, or in some instances at all, as the overall Grand Prix sponsor on all promotional, advertising, and other materials in connection with the event. The sponsorship breach alleged is that Volvo sponsored a "circuit within a circuit" of Grand Prix events. Id. at paras. 154-56.

(13) Happer alleges that Dell, Benton, Volvo, ProServ, and McCormack have defamed him, have disparaged him in his profession, and have exposed him to public ridicule and contempt within the tennis and legal communities. The specific acts [10] allegedly causing such harm include their false statements to the press that Happer dealt with Volvo dishonestly, unfairly, and in bad faith, and that Happer lied, breached confidences, and conducted a fraudulent bidding process for Grand Prix sponsorship rights. Id. at paras. 157-64.

(14) MIPTC alleges that Dell, Benton, Volvo, and ProServ have defamed it. The specific acts alleged include their false statements to the press and others accusing MIPTC of greed, dishonesty, bad faith, and fraud. Id. at paras. 165-74.

MIPTC and Happer essentially maintain that Volvo, ProServ, Dell, Benton, IMG, and McCormack "have achieved and maintain their power in men's professional tennis and have damaged the MIPTC and its constituents by means of numerous improper, illegal and anticompetitive acts and practices. Moreover, Dell, Benton and ProServ continue to run the affairs of men's professional tennis through a pattern of illegal acts and practices." Counterclaims and Answer at para. 116.

Volvo, ProServ, Dell, Benton, IMG, and McCormack each move to dismiss all of the counterclaims against them.

DISCUSSION

For purposes of the following analysis, I assume that MIPTC and Happer [11] properly assert in personam jurisdiction over AB Volvo, the Swedish parent corporation of Volvo North America Corporation. Therefore, the motions of Volvo and AB Volvo will be deemed one motion for purposes of this Memorandum. I also assume the MIPTC has standing to properly assert antitrust claims on behalf of its constituents.

1. Volvo's Motion to Dismiss the Counterclaims

---

[2] Men's professional tennis consists of two types of events: those organized by the MIPTC ("sanctioned events"), and those having no relationship to MIPTC ("special events"). The owner of any sanctioned event, who bears complete financial responsibility for all aspects of the tournament, is actually a licensee who has obtained a sanction from MIPTC. The owner can retain the sanction and, for some consideration, assign all rights and responsibilities for conducting the event to some other person. In such a case, the owner remains the sanction-holder, and the assignee becomes a de facto owner of the event.

Volvo moves, pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6), to dismiss all of the counterclaims alleged by MIPTC and Happer against Volvo for failure to state a claim upon which [*806] relief can be granted; and, pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b) (1), to dismiss the first and second counterclaims for lack of subject matter jurisdiction; and, pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(f), to strike the allegations of fraud included in paragraphs 81 through 83, 86, 88, 89, and 102 from the Counterclaims and Answer as immaterial, impertinent, and scandalous.

This discussion will address the counterclaims in the order that they are alleged against Volvo. Counterclaims 1 and 2 allege that Volvo violated federal antitrust law. Counterclaims and Answer at paras. 118-126. HN1[] [12] Federal antitrust law prohibits contracts, combinations and conspiracies in restraint of interstate trade or commerce as well as attempts, combinations, or conspiracies to monopolize interstate trade or commerce. 15 U.S.C. §§ 1, 2 (1982) (the Sherman Act). [3] [13] HN2[] Standing to sue for antitrust violations is conferred upon civil litigants by the Clayton Act. 15 U.S.C. §§ 15, 26 (1982). [4] "In order to prevail in a private antitrust action, a plaintiff must show that a violation of the antitrust laws occurred, that the plaintiff was damaged as a result, and the amount of damages." Harlem River Consumers Coop., Inc. v. Associated Grocers of Harlem, Inc., 408 F. Supp. 1251, 1268 (S.D.N.Y. 1976).

[14] Counterclaim 1 attempts to establish that Volvo and ProServ combined and conspired to restrain trade in the players, events, and television markets, in violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act. 15 U.S.C. § 1. HN5[] A plaintiff must establish three essential elements in order to recover in a civil action under Section 1. The first element is that the defendant entered into a contract, combination, or conspiracy. The second is that that contract, combination, or conspiracy restrained interstate trade or commerce. 15 U.S.C. § 1; International Distribution

---

[3] Section 1 of the Sherman Act provides in pertinent part that:

> HN3[] every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, is declared to be illegal.

15 U.S.C. § 1 (1982).

Section 2 of the Sherman Act provides in pertinent part that:

> HN4[] every person who shall monopolize, or attempt to monopolize, or combine or conspire with any other person or persons, to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, shall be deemed guilty of a felony.

15 U.S.C. § 2 (1982).

[4] Section 15 of the Clayton Act provides in pertinent part that:

> any person who shall be injured in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws may sue therefor in any district court of the United States in the district in which the defendant resides or is found or has an agent, without respect to the amount in controversy.

15 U.S.C. § 15 (1982).

Section 26 of the Clayton Act provides in pertinent part that:

> any person, firm, corporation, or association shall be entitled to sue for and have injunctive relief, in any court of the United States having jurisdiction over the parties, against threatened loss or damage by a violation of the antitrust laws, . . . when and under the same conditions and principles as injunctive relief against threatened conduct that will cause loss or damage is granted by courts of equity, under the rules governing such proceedings, and upon the execution of proper bond against damages for an injunction improvidently granted and a showing that the danger of irreparable loss or damage is immediate, a preliminary injunction may issue.

15 U.S.C. § 26 (1982).

Centers, Inc. v. Walsh Trucking Co., Inc., 812 F.2d 786, 793 (2d Cir.), cert. denied, 482 U.S. 915, 107 S. Ct. 3188, 96 L. Ed. 2d 676 (1987). These first two elements do not require proof of defendants' specific intent to create a monopoly. Rather, the required showing is that "'the conspirators had a unity of purpose or a common design and understanding, or a meeting of minds in an unlawful arrangement,' and that the anticompetitive effects of the alleged conspiracy [15] outweigh the procompetitive effects." International Distribution, 812 F.2d at 793 (quoting Michelman v. Clark-Schwebel Fiber Glass Corp., 534 F.2d 1036, 1043 (2d Cir. 1976) (quoting American Tobacco Co. v. United States, 328 U.S. 781, 810, 90 L. Ed. 1575, 66 S. Ct. 1125 (1946))). The third element that a plaintiff must establish is that injury to the plaintiff's business or property was proximately caused by the defendant's antitrust violation. *15 U.S.C. [807] § 15; Argus Inc. v. Eastman Kodak Co., 801 F.2d 38, 41 (2d Cir. 1986), cert. denied, 479 U.S. 1088, 107 S. Ct. 1295, 94 L. Ed. 2d 151 (1987).

MIPTC's first basis for its claim that Volvo and ProServ violated Section 1 consists of allegations that, during the period following MIPTC's rejection of Volvo's Grand Prix sponsorship offer, Volvo and ProServ participated in a scheme to dominate and control men's tennis. The scheme alleged consists of issuing false and misleading information to the press and to the Grand Prix tournament organizers in order to maintain control over the Grand Prix sponsorship. Two separate [16] types of misinformation are alleged. The first type is press releases, issued in both the United States and Sweden, which overstated the value of the Volvo sponsorship offer rejected by MIPTC and stated that MIPTC, Happer and Chatrier (MIPTC's chairman) dealt with Volvo in bad faith. The second type is that disseminated to Grand Prix tournament organizers which overstated the value of the Volvo sponsorship offer and indicated that the offer was still outstanding. The alleged purpose for issuing the first type of information was to eliminate potential competitors for Grand Prix sponsorship and to secure Volvo's renewal of that sponsorship. The alleged purpose for issuing the second type of information was to circumvent the MIPTC and collect support for Volvo's sponsorship offer directly from Grand Prix tournament organizers. Counterclaims and Answer at paras. 81-83, 86.

The Supreme Court has stated that HN6[] conspiracies should not be inferred "when such inferences are implausible, because the effect of such practices is often to deter procompetetive conduct." Matsushita Elec. Indus Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 593, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538, 106 S. Ct. 1348 (1986). [17]

Accepting MIPTC's allegations as true, and even assuming that a conspiracy between Volvo and ProServ to disseminate false information may be plausibly inferred from the fact that both of them allegedly did so, MIPTC does not assert sufficient facts to state a Section 1 violation. Volvo and ProServ did not obtain the anticompetitive result allegedly sought; Nabisco, not Volvo, obtained the Grand Prix sponsorship, and MIPTC alleges no anticompetitive effect to the relevant markets inflicted by the allegedly false statements. Nowhere does MIPTC claim that it sustained damages to its business or property as a proximate result of such a conspiracy between Volvo and ProServ.

MIPTC next alleges that Volvo and ProServ violated Section 1 by exploring the possibility of forming a men's professional tennis circuit outside the Grand Prix if Volvo did not obtain a renewed Grand Prix sponsorship. Id. at paras. 81, 87. Were Volvo and ProServ to establish an independent men's professional tennis circuit, it would compete directly with MIPTC and the Grand Prix. Clearly, this allegation is insufficient to state a Section 1 violation.

MIPTC next alleges that Volvo violated Section 1 by conducting [18] a campaign "to discourage all other potential bidders, by means of false and fraudulent misstatements and threats and intimidation, from pursuing their interest in becoming the next sponsor of the Grand Prix." Id. at para. 88. ProServ, on behalf of Volvo, is alleged to have participated in and facilitated Volvo's campaign by (1) falsely suggesting to Seiko and Dentsu that Volvo was still involved in Grand Prix sponsorship; (2) misrepresenting Volvo's renewal bid; and (3) stating that Dentsu, by seeking other potential Grand Prix sponsors, might cause problems between itself and ProServ. MIPTC alleges that the latter statement was sufficient to prevent further action by Dentsu on behalf of Seiko, because ProServ was involved with both Seiko and Dentsu in providing players and endorsements at Seiko's Tokyo Grand Prix event, and with Dentsu at another professional tennis event. Id. at paras. 88-90. MIPTC also alleges that ProServ, in its efforts to discourage Nabisco from seeking the Grand Prix sponsorship and on behalf of Volvo, falsely stated to Nabisco that the cost of acquiring the sponsorship would exceed $ 25 million. Nabisco subsequently informed MIPTC that it was not [19] interested in [*808] the sponsorship at that price. Nonetheless, Nabisco's interest was later revived. Id. at paras. 91-93.

Accepting MIPTC's allegations as true, and assuming that a conspiracy between Volvo and ProServ to disseminate false information to Seiko, Dentsu, and Nabisco may be plausibly inferred from the fact that both of them allegedly did so, MIPTC does not allege sufficient facts to state a Section 1 violation. Once again, Volvo and ProServ did not obtain the anticompetitive result allegedly sought, and MIPTC asserts neither an alternative anticompetitive effect inflicted on the relevant markets by the allegedly false statements, nor its own proximate injury from such a conspiracy.

MIPTC next accuses Volvo and ProServ of violating Section 1 by pressuring and coercing individual MIPTC Council members to support Volvo in its Grand Prix sponsorship bid. Id. at para. 81. MIPTC alleges that Volvo combined with Dell to threaten Happer's job if MIPTC did not accept Volvo's sponsorship offer, thereby intimidating MIPTC into not opposing Volvo's sponsorship plans and projects. Id. at para. 117(20). MIPTC also alleges that Volvo has combined with ProServ, Dell, [20] and Benton to threaten to prohibit MIPTC from conducting the Masters tournament at its established time and place, thereby coercing MIPTC into renewing Volvo's sponsorship bid. Id. at para. 117(21).

Accepting MIPTC's allegations as true, and assuming that a conspiracy between Volvo and ProServ to pressure and coerce individual MIPTC members to support Volvo's sponsorship renewal may plausibly be inferred from the facts pled, MIPTC does not allege sufficient facts to state a Section 1 violation. Again, Volvo and ProServ did not obtain the anticompetitive result allegedly sought, and MIPTC alleges neither an alternative anticompetitive effect inflicted on the relevant markets by the allegedly false statements, nor its own proximate injury from such a conspiracy.

MIPTC next asserts that Volvo and ProServ started an unfounded whispering campaign against MIPTC. Id. at para. 81. Because it is not clear exactly what is meant by this allegation, I can neither determine whether the anticompetitive effects of a "whispering campaign" outweigh its procompetitive effects, nor how MIPTC may have been proximately injured by it, and what, if any, damages MIPTC may have sustained. This allegation [21] is insufficient to state a cause of action under Section 1.

MIPTC next accuses Volvo and ProServ of launching a misleading and deceptive program called "Volvo Tennis" after the Grand Prix sponsorship was awarded to Nabisco. Volvo Tennis was allegedly staffed by the same people and located at the same offices as the "Volvo Grand Prix" program in place when Volvo was the overall Grand Prix sponsor. Id. at para. 104. The alleged purpose of such staffing and location was to undermine Nabisco and unfairly promote the Volvo name. Id. at para. 81. To support this claim, MIPTC points to the "Volvo Tennis" logo which was jointly designed and publicized by Volvo, ProServ, Dell, and Benton. MIPTC claims that this logo is confusingly similar to the "Volvo Grand Prix" logo which Volvo used during its overall Grand Prix sponsorship. Id. at para. 105. MIPTC makes out four allegations in support of the asserted conspiracy to mislead. First, Volvo and ProServ allegedly issued numerous mailings and placed numerous advertisements in national periodicals bearing the "Volvo Tennis" logo in order to defraud MIPTC, the Grand Prix events, and Nabisco, and to mislead and confuse the public. [22] Id. at paras. 107, 117(27). Second, Volvo, with ProServ, Dell, and Benton, allegedly placed prominent and misleading banners and graphic displays at Grand Prix tournaments for exposure during television broadcasts. Id. at para. 117(28). Third, Volvo combined with ProServ, Dell, and Benton to use economic coercion against Grand Prix events to persuade them to change the names of their events to reflect the "Volvo Tennis" name. Id. at para. 117(34). Fourth, Volvo and ProServ allegedly used television broadcasts to further promote the "Volvo Tennis" program and to create the false impression that Volvo was still the overall Grand Prix sponsor. Id. at para. 111.

[*809] Assuming that Volvo and ProServ did combine to create and promote the "Volvo Tennis" program, MIPTC does not describe the anticompetitive effects of the program, does not describe the damage caused to MIPTC by the program, and does not even suggest how its anticompetitive effects might outweigh its procompetitive effects. Surely Volvo was required to change the name of its professional tennis sponsorship program from "Volvo Grand Prix" when it was no longer the overall Grand Prix sponsor, but it was [23] not required to cease all involvement in professional tennis while not involved in the overall Grand Prix sponsorship. MIPTC simply states that Volvo and ProServ have combined to economically coerce Grand Prix events to change the names of their events to reflect the "Volvo Tennis" name, but does not allege that the Grand Prix events referred to actually changed their names to reflect the "Volvo Tennis" name, does not suggest any resultant anticompetitive effect, and does not state how "Volvo Tennis" might have harmed MIPTC. These allegations are not sufficient to make out a Section 1 violation.

Finally, MIPTC asserts that Volvo violated Section 1 by combining with ProServ, Dell, and Benton to coerce MIPTC into giving Volvo a sanction for a Grand Prix event in Chicago by threatening to, and taking steps to, prevent MIPTC from staging the Masters tournament in its established time and place in the years after 1985. Id. at para. 117(32). Accepting MIPTC's allegations as true, and assuming that a conspiracy between Volvo and ProServ to coerce MIPTC into entering a sanctioning agreement with Volvo may plausibly be inferred from the fact that the agreement was made, MIPTC again fails [24] to allege how it may have been harmed or what, if any, damages may have been sustained by it due to the sanctioning agreement. The allegations are not sufficient to state a Section 1 violation.

Counterclaim 2 alleges that Volvo and ProServ combined and conspired to monopolize the players, events, and television markets in violation of Section 2 of the Sherman Act. Counterclaims and Answer at paras. 123-26; 15 U.S.C. § 2.

> HN7[] The offense of monopolization under section 2 of the Sherman Act has two elements: "(1) the possession of monopoly power in the relevant market and (2) the willful acquisition or maintenance of that power as distinguished from growth or development as a consequence of a superior product, business acumen, or historic accident."

Southern Pacific Communications Co. v. American Telephone & Telegraph Co., 238 U.S. App. D.C. 309, 740 F.2d 980, 1000 (D.C. Cir. 1984) (quoting United States v. Grinnell Corp., 384 U.S. 563, 570-71, 16 L. Ed. 2d 778, 86 S. Ct. 1698 (1966)). HN8[] [25] The monopoly power required by the first element is 'the power to control prices or exclude competition.'" Southern Pacific, 740 F.2d at 1000 (quoting United States v. E.I. du Pont de Nemours & Co., 351 U.S. 377, 391, 100 L. Ed. 1264, 76 S. Ct. 994 (1956)). Such > "'exclusionary' conduct is conduct, other than competition on the merits or restraints reasonably 'necessary' to competition on the merits, that reasonably appears capable of making a significant contribution to creating or maintaining monopoly power."

Barry Wright Corp. v. ITT Grinnell Corp., 724 F.2d 227, 230 (1st Cir. 1983) (quoting 3 P. Areeda and D. Turner, Antitrust Law para. 626 at 83 (1978)); Southern Pacific, 740 F.2d at 999 n. 19. "The issue is whether the defendant's conduct is reasonable in light of its business needs, or whether it unreasonably excludes competition." Southern Pacific, 740 F.2d at 999 n. 19. HN9[] The second element requires some showing that the monopoly [26] at issue is an unlawful one; lawful monopolies are not prohibited by Section 2. "The lawful monopolist should be free to compete like everyone else; otherwise the antitrust laws would be holding an umbrella over inefficient competitors." Olympia Equip. Leasing Co. v. Western Union Tel. Co., 797 F.2d 370, 375 (7th Cir. 1986). A showing that the defendant intends to harm its competitive rivals is not sufficient to satisfy the second element of Section 2.

> [*810] "'Intent to harm' [rivals] without more offers too vague a standard in a world where executives may think no further than 'Let's get more business,' and long-term effects on consumers depend in large measure on competitors' responses." Neither is "intent to do more business," which amounts to the same thing, [a useful standard in antitrust]. Vigorous competitors intend to harm rivals, to do all the business if they can. To penalize this intent is to penalize competition."

Ball Memorial Hosp., Inc. v. Mutual Hosp. Ins., Inc., 784 F.2d 1325, 1338-39 (7th Cir. 1986) (quoting Barry Wright, 724 F.2d at 232).

MIPTC alleges that the scheme, discussed [27] above, between Volvo and ProServ to dominate and control men's tennis constitutes a combination and conspiracy to monopolize the players, events, and television markets in violation of Section 2. However, nowhere in the counterclaims does MIPTC allege that Volvo and ProServ possess monopoly power in the players, events, or television markets; neither can that allegation be inferred from the facts alleged in the counterclaims. While the facts alleged in the counterclaims may describe attempts by Volvo and ProServ to exclude competition for the Grand Prix sponsorship, the fact that Volvo did not obtain the Grand Prix sponsorship it sought demonstrates that Volvo and ProServ do not possess that power. It cannot be said that the conduct alleged in the counterclaims "reasonably appear[ed] capable of making a significant contribution to creating or maintaining monopoly power." Barry Wright, 724 F.2d at 230.

Even assuming that Volvo and ProServ possess monopoly power in the relevant markets, MIPTC nowhere distinguishes their acquisition of that power from the historic development of men's professional tennis and the history of Volvo's involvement in it. As alleged in [28] the counterclaims, Volvo and ProServ established their positions in the players, events, and television markets largely as consequences of the recent historical development of the sport of men's professional tennis. As alleged in the counterclaims, the fact that Volvo and ProServ acted with the intent to harm their rivals -- to "bury Nabisco," Counterclaims and Answer at para. 99, and to make the public "think everything in tennis is Volvo," id. at para. 100 -- is not sufficient to make out a claim of an unlawful monopoly. Ball Memorial, 784 F.2d at 1338-39; Barry Wright, 724 F.2d at 232. The allegations in the counterclaims are insufficient to state a Section 2 violation against Volvo.

Counterclaim 3 alleges that Volvo made false and misleading written and broadcast statements which constitute false descriptions and representations and created a false designation of origin in violation of the Lanham Act. Counterclaims and Answer at paras. 127-29; 15 U.S.C. § 1125(a). [5]

[29] Section 1125(a) protects both registered and unregistered trademarks against false designation of origin and false description or representation. Centaur Communications, Ltd. v. A/S/M Communications, Inc., 830 F.2d 1217, 1220 (2d Cir. 1987); Thompson Medical Co. v. Pfizer Inc., 753 F.2d 208, 212 (2d Cir. 1985). Analysis of Section 1125(a) protection requires two steps: a preliminary determination whether the mark at issue is entitled to protection and, if so, what level of protection; and a determination whether confusion is likely to occur between the marks at issue. Centaur, 830 F.2d at 1220; Lois Sportswear, U.S.A., Inc. v. Levi Strauss & Co., 799 F.2d 867, 871 (2d Cir (1986); Thompson, 753 F.2d at 212-13.

HN12[] There are four classes of protected trademarks. "Arrayed in an ascending order which roughly reflects their eligibility to [*811] trademark status and the degree of protection accorded, these classes are (1) generic, (2) descriptive, (3) suggestive, and (4) arbitrary or fanciful." [30] Lois, 799 F.2d at 871 (quoting Abercrombie & Fitch Co. v. Hunting World, Inc., 537 F.2d 4, 9 (2d Cir. 1976)).

> Generic terms -- "the common descriptive name of an article or substance" [or service] -- are ineligible for any trademark protection. Descriptive marks, those "describ[ing] the qualities, ingredients, effects or other features of the product [or service] naturally and in ordinary language" are protectible only where secondary meaning

---

[5] The Lanham Act provides in relevant part that:

> HN10[] any person who shall . . . use in connection with any goods or services, . . . a false designation of origin, or any false description or representation, including words or other symbols tending falsely to describe or represent the same, and shall cause such goods or services to enter into commerce, . . . shall be liable to a civil action by . . . any person who believes that he is or is likely to be damaged by the use of any such false description or representation.

15 U.S.C. § 1125(a) (1982).

HN11[] -

> can be established. Suggestive terms require "imagination, thought and perception to reach a conclusion as to the nature of goods", and are eligible for protection without proof of secondary meaning. Finally, arbitrary or fanciful marks "enjoy all the rights accorded to suggestive terms as marks - without the need of debating whether the term is 'merely descriptive' and with ease of establishing infringement."

Thompson, 753 F.2d at 212-13 (quoting 15 U.S.C. § 1064(c) (1982 & Supp. IV 1986), 3 R. Callmann, The Law of Unfair Competition, Trademarks and Monopolies, § 18.05 at 17 (4th ed. 1983), Stix Products, Inc. v. United Merchants & Manufacturers, Inc., 295 F. Supp. 479, 488 (S.D.N.Y. 1968), [31] Abercrombie, 537 F.2d at 11, respectively) (footnotes and citations omitted).

HN13[] After a mark's eligibility for protection has been determined, a court must address the ultimate inquiry: "whether there exists a 'likelihood that an appreciable number of ordinarily prudent purchasers [will] be misled, or indeed simply confused, as to the source of the goods [or services] in question.'" Thompson, 753 F.2d at 213 (quoting Mushroom Makers, Inc. v. R.G. Barry Corp., 580 F.2d 44, 47 (2d Cir. 1978), cert. denied, 439 U.S. 1116, 59 L. Ed. 2d 75, 99 S. Ct. 1022, 200 U.S.P.Q. (BNA) 832 (1979)). HN14[] A court determines whether a likelihood of confusion exists by evaluating a number of factors:

1. The strength of the mark at issue;
2. The degree of similarity between the marks;
3. The proximity of the products or services at issue;
4. The likelihood that the senior user will bridge the gap;
5. Actual confusion; [32]
6. The junior user's good or bad faith in adopting the mark;
7. The quality of the respective goods or services;
8. The sophistication of the relevant consumers;
9. Balancing the conflicting interests of the parties involved;
10. The nature of the senior user's priority;
11. Any delay by the senior user in asserting its claim;
12. The harm to the junior user compared to the benefit to the senior user that would result from the requested injunction.

Thompson, 753 F.2d at 213-24.

MIPTC alleges that Volvo's use of the phrase "Volvo Tennis," the "Volvo Tennis" logo, the phrase "linking the world's great tennis events through television, and numerous false and misleading written and broadcast statements about the Volvo Tennis program and the Grand Prix constitute violations of the Lanham Act. MIPTC asserts that these statements, because they incorrectly represented that Volvo continued to be the overall Grand Prix sponsor after January 1985, that Volvo sponsored a "circuit within a circuit," and that "Volvo Tennis" was somehow related to the Grand Prix, created a likelihood of consumer confusion. Counterclaims and Answer at [33] para. 128.

MIPTC alleges that the "Volvo Tennis" logo is confusingly similar to the "Volvo Grand Prix" logo used by Volvo while it was the overall Grand Prix sponsor. MIPTC further asserts that Volvo's use of the "Volvo Tennis" logo at a time when Volvo was still the overall Grand Prix sponsor was wrongful, misleading, and intended to create the impression the "Volvo Tennis" was connected with the Grand Prix. [*812] Counterclaims and Answer at para. 105. Examples of the alleged improper use include advertisements in the January 8, 1985 issue of New York Magazine, in the 1985 Masters' Tournament program, id. at paras. 107, 117(26) and in the names of the individual Grand Prix events it sponsored. Id. at para. 110.

MIPTC further alleges that during the television broadcasts of the Memphis finals, a Grand Prix event sponsored by Volvo, promotional announcements stated that the "program [was] made possible by grants from Volvo, sponsors of Volvo Tennis, linking the world's great tennis events through television, ..." Id. at para. 111. MIPTC claims that this phrase was "consciously patterned after the phrase approved by the MIPTC to describe the Grand Prix: [34] 'linking the world's official tennis tournaments,'" id., and that its use intentionally caused confusion regarding whether Volvo was still the overall Grand Prix sponsor and whether Volvo sponsored a "circuit within a circuit." Id. at paras. 111, 117(31). MIPTC cites the following to support its claim that these tactics created confusion:

1. The February 7, 1985 Tennis Week described confusion caused by the use of the "Volvo Tennis" logo used at the beginning of the telecast of a Philadelphia Grand Prix event, and by the fact that Dell was an announcer on the broadcast.

2. Both the April 3, 1985 New York Daily News and The New York Times of April 8, 1985 referred to the "Volvo Grand Prix," approximately three months after Nabisco became the overall Grand Prix sponsor. Id. at para. 112.

Because the "Volvo Tennis" mark involves the corporate name "Volvo," it is clearly not a generic mark. Rather, "Volvo" is arbitrary or fanciful because it is based on an unrelated corporate proper name. "Tennis" is a generic term describing in simple language the product represented by "Volvo Tennis." Therefore, "Volvo Tennis" appears to be a descriptive mark, falling somewhere [35] between the generic and arbitrary ends of the trademark spectrum, and entitled to some middle level of protection. It describes the features of the product it represents in ordinary language: tennis events sponsored by a corporate entity named Volvo. HN15[] The mark is therefore entitled to trademark protection only if secondary meaning of the mark can be established.

> HN16[]
>
> A mark acquires secondary meaning when "it [is] shown that the primary significance of the term in the minds of the consuming public is not the product but the producer." Thus, the crux of the doctrine of secondary meaning "is that the mark comes to identify not only the goods but the source of those goods," even though the relevant consuming public might not know the name of the producer. . . . Someone seeking to establish secondary meaning must show that the purchasing public associates goods designated by a particular mark with but a single . . . source.
>
> secondary meaning must show that the purchasing public associates [36] goods designated by a particular mark with but a single . . . source.
> The focus of secondary meaning therefore is the consuming public. Hence, so must be the inquiry into whether the mark owner has a protectible interest. Although the mark owner strives to create a secondary meaning for its product, it is the consuming public which, in effect, determines whether that effort has succeeded.

Centaur, 830 F.2d at 1221 (quoting 20th Century Wear, Inc. v. Sanmark-Stardust Inc., 815 F.2d 8, 10 (2d Cir. 1987) (quoting Ralston Purina Co. v. Thomas J. Lipton, Inc., 341 F. Supp. 129, 133 (S.D.N.Y. 1972))) (emphasis in original) (citations omitted). MIPTC makes absolutely no allegations concerning whether secondary meaning for the "Volvo Tennis" mark has been established in the mind of the consuming public.

However, assuming that secondary meaning for the "Volvo Tennis" mark has been alleged, HN17[] a cause of action for unfair competition under the Lanham Act "is made out by showing the use of one's trademark by another in a way that is [*813] [37] likely to confuse consumers as to the source of the product." Lois Sportswear, 799 F.2d at 871. The likelihood that an appreciable number of consumers will be confused as to the source of the goods or services at issue is determined by evaluating a number of factors, listed supra at page 811. However, other than conclusory allegations that confusion is likely to occur and three specific occasions of actual confusion, MIPTC makes absolutely no allegations regarding those factors. The examples of confusion alleged are irrelevant because they do not involve consumers of the goods and services at issue, but rather are articles published in a magazine and two newspapers. These allegations are insufficient to make out a claim of unfair competition under the Lanham Act.

The phrases "linking the world's official tennis tournaments" and "linking the world's great tennis events through television" are similar, but nowhere are they alleged to be marks of any specific product or service. The fact that

MIPTC approved the former phrase to introduce television broadcasts of its Grand Prix tennis events does not entitle it to trademark protection. It is not a trademark, and [38] the Lanham Act does not protect it.

Counterclaim 4 alleges that the same facts asserted supra in support of counterclaim 3 state a claim that Volvo created a likelihood of confusion by diluting the distinctive quality of the Grand Prix mark in violation of the New York state antidilution statute. Counterclaims and Answer at paras. 130-32; N.Y. Gen. Bus. Law § 368-d (McKinney 1984). [6]

> HN18[] Dilution is characterized as a "whittling down" of the identity or reputation of a tradename or mark. . . . "Dilution . . . 'threatens two separable but related components of advertising value. Junior uses may blur a mark's product identification or they may tarnish the affirmative associations a mark has come to convey.'"

Sally Gee, Inc. v. Myra Hogan, Inc., 699 F.2d 621, 625 (2d Cir. 1983) (quoting 3A R. Callman, Unfair Competition, Trademarks, and Monopolies § 21.11 (4th ed. 1983) (quoting Note, Dilution: Trademark Infringement or Will-O'-The-Wisp, 77 Harv. L. Rev. 520, 531 (1964))) (citations omitted). "The interest protected by § 368-d is [39] not simply commercial goodwill, but the selling power that a distinctive mark or name with favorable associations has engendered for a product in the mind of the consuming public." Sally Gee, 699 F.2d at 624-25.

In order to state a claim under § 368-d, "a plaintiff must first have a trademark or name which is 'truly of distinctive quality' or one which has 'acquired a secondary meaning in the mind of the public, [40] ' and must prove a likelihood of dilution." Miss Universe, Ind. v. Patricelli, 753 F.2d 235, 238 (2d Cir. 1985) (quoting Allied Maintenance Corp. v. Allied Mechanical Trades, Inc., 42 N.Y.2d 538, 546, 399 N.Y.S.2d 628, 633, 369 N.E.2d 1162, 1166 (1977)) (citation omitted) (emphasis in original).

MIPTC does not state such a claim for any of the marks at issue. The phrase "linking the world's official tennis tournaments," as discussed above, is not a trademark and therefore is not protected. Neither distinctiveness, strength, or secondary meaning for the "Nabisco Grand Prix" mark [7] as opposed to "Volvo Grand Prix" mark, nor dilution, weakening, or tarnishing of the value or quality of that mark have been alleged by MIPTC. Moreover, these allegations cannot be deduced from the facts alleged in the counterclaims. [*814] Therefore, counterclaim 4 fails to state a cause of action under § 368-d.

[41] Counterclaim 5 alleges that the same facts asserted supra in support of counterclaim 3 state a claim that Volvo's false and misleading written and broadcast statements regarding Volvo's Grand Prix sponsorship created a likelihood of confusion and misappropriated rights belonging to MIPTC, and therefore constitute common law unfair competition. Counterclaims and Answer at paras. 133-35.

HN20[] The tort of unfair competition is "generally described as a misappropriation of the skill, expenditures, and labor of another. 'One cannot sell his product by misappropriating the good will of another through misleading the public into thinking that it is "sponsored" by or derived from something else.'" American Footwear Corp. v. Gen. Footwear Co., Ltd., 609 F.2d 655, 662 (2d Cir. 1979), cert. denied, 445 U.S. 951, 63 L. Ed. 2d 787, 100 S. Ct. 1601, 205 U.S.P.Q. (BNA) 680 (1980) (quoting Ideal Toy Corp. v. Kenner Prods. Div. of Gen. Mills Fun Group, Inc., 443 F. Supp. 291, 305 (S.D.N.Y. 1977)) (citations omitted). An element of bad faith is essential [42] to this tort. Saratoga Vichy Spring Co. v. Lehman, 625 F.2d 1037, 1044 (2d Cir 1980). In order to make out a cause of action

---

[6] The New York antidilution statute provides that:

> HN19[] likelihood of injury to business reputation or of dilution of the distinctive quality of a mark or trade name shall be a ground for injunctive relief in cases of infringement of a mark registered or not registered or in cases of unfair competition, notwithstanding the absence of competition between the parties or the absence of confusion as to the source of goods or services.

N.Y. Gen. Bus. Law § 368-d (McKinney 1984).

[7] It would appear that MIPTC is not claiming any rights to the mark "Grand Prix" since clearly that would be unenforceable.

for unfair competition, a complaint must set forth: "(1) the acts or omissions by defendants that proximately caused the misappropriation and (2) the property or benefit misappropriated -- mere allegations that [plaintiff has been harmed] will not suffice." Bunch v. Artec Int'l Corp., 559 F. Supp. 961, 972 (S.D.N.Y. 1983).

The facts alleged supra in support of counterclaim 3 sufficiently set forth the deliberate acts by Volvo that allegedly caused the misappropriation: written and broadcast statements, statements and advertisements in publications, and the naming of Grand Prix events. Those facts also sufficiently set forth the thing allegedly misappropriated, the overall Grand Prix sponsorship, and at least allege that MIPTC has been harmed. Therefore, counterclaim 5 may adequately set forth a cause of action under common law unfair competition. As such, however, it can be sustained in this court, absent pendent jurisdiction, only under diversity jurisdiction.

Counterclaim 7 alleges that Volvo breached its overall [43] sponsorship agreement with MIPTC, dated September 25, 1979, by failing to pay amounts owed under that agreement. Counterclaims and Answer at paras. 139-41. Assuming that such an agreement exists, that it is enforceable, and that Volvo has failed to pay amounts owed under it, counterclaim 7 may sufficiently state a cause of action for breach of contract. Again, however, it can be sustained in this court, absent pendent jurisdiction, only under diversity jurisdiction, Counterclaim 8 alleges that Volvo breached its sanctioning agreement with MIPTC by failing to identify Nabisco prominently, or in some instances at all, as the overall Grand Prix sponsor on promotional and advertising materials connected with a sanctioned event, and by sponsoring a "circuit within a circuit" of Grand Prix events. Counterclaims and Answer at paras. 142-44. Assuming that such an agreement exists, that it is enforceable, that prominent identification of the overall sponsor is required by the agreement, that sponsoring any sort of "circuit within a circuit" is prohibited by the agreement, and that Volvo violated those provisions, counterclaim 8 may sufficiently make out a cause of action for breach of contract.

[44] Counterclaim 9 alleges that the same breaches alleged in counterclaim 8 constitute breach of the overall Grand Prix sponsorship agreement between Volvo and MIPTC. Counterclaims and Answer at paras. 145-47. Making the same assumptions as those required by counterclaim 8, counterclaim 9 may also adequately state a cause of action for breach of contract.

Counterclaim 10 alleges that Volvo breached an agreement with MIPTC that it would provide full financial disclosure concerning the Volvo Masters tournament during those years that Volvo was the overall Grand Prix sponsor and sponsor of the Masters tournaments. Counterclaims and Answer at paras. 148-50. Assuming that such an agreement existed, that it is enforceable, that it required such financial disclosure, [*815] and that Volvo has not provided such disclosure, Counterclaim 10 may make out a cause of action for breach of contract.

Counterclaim 11 alleges that Volvo breached its January 1985 agreement with MIPTC to cooperate with MIPTC's reasonable promotional activities. Counterclaims and Answer at paras. 151-53. Assuming that such an agreement exists, that it is enforceable, that it requires such cooperation, that Volvo [45] has failed to so cooperate, and that MIPTC has been damaged thereby, counterclaim 11 may sufficiently state a cause of action for breach of contract.

MIPTC has not made a showing of diversity to support federal diversity jurisdiction over counterclaim 5, for common law unfair competition, and counterclaims 7 through 11 for breach of contract. Furthermore, MIPTC has neither pled that "the matter in controversy exceeds the sum or value of $ 10,000," as required by 28 U.S.C. § 1332(a) (1982), nor pled any specific amount of damages suffered. Therefore, counterclaims 5 and 7 through 11 are dismissed with leave to replead. While I will permit the parties to replead, I have serious doubts that sufficient damages can be alleged or proven by this collection of counterclaiming defendants. Any damages suffered under most of the counterclaims would have been incurred solely by Nabisco. It appears, however, that counterclaims 7 and 10 for money damages and for an accounting against Volvo, ProServ, Dell, and Benton may include the requisite damage to these counterclaiming defendants. However, I cannot rule on these matters until such time as the counterclaiming defendants [46] have had the opportunity to replead.

Counterclaim 13 alleges that Volvo has made false statements to the press which have defamed Happer, have disparaged him in his profession, and have exposed him to public ridicule and contempt within the tennis and legal communities. Counterclaims and Answer at paras. 157-64.

HN21[] In order to state a cause of action for defamation, a plaintiff must plead that defendant "(1) negligently or wilfully uttered a (2) defamatory statement (3) of or concerning the plaintiff (4) to a third person (5) which resulted in damage to plaintiff's reputation." Carto v. Buckley, 649 F. Supp. 502, 505 n.1 (S.D.N.Y. 1986). In defamation actions, "the false and defamatory matter should be pleaded in haec verba." Foltz v. Moore McCormack Lines, Inc., 189 F.2d 537, 539 (2d Cir.), cert. denied, 342 U.S. 871, 96 L. Ed. 655, 72 S. Ct. 106 (1951); Herbert v. Lando, 603 F. Supp. 983, 990 (S.D.N.Y. 1985), aff'd in relevant part, rev'd in part, 781 F.2d 298 (2d Cir. 1986). The Court in Foltz [47] held that paraphrasing the allegedly defamatory statements would be insufficient to state a cause of action for defamation. Foltz, 189 F.2d at 539.

Nowhere in MIPTC's papers are the allegedly defamatory statements set forth. Like the plaintiff in Foltz, MIPTC paraphrased the allegedly false statements in its pleadings. Counterclaims and Answer at paras. 109, 117(38), 158-61. This counterclaim is insufficient on its face.

Counterclaim 14 alleges that Volvo has defamed MIPTC by making false statements to the press and others accusing it of greed, dishonesty, bad faith, and fraud. Id. at paras. 165-74. Again, the allegedly defamatory statements are not set forth in any of MIPTC's papers. MIPTC paraphrased the allegedly false statements in its pleadings. Id. at paras. 82, 83, 86, 89, 109, 166-71. Again, this counterclaim is insufficient to make out a cause of action for defamation.

Volvo's motion to dismiss the counterclaims against it is granted in part and denied in part. Counterclaims 1 through 4, 13, and 14 against it are dismissed. Counterclaims 5 and 7 through 11 against it are dismissed with leave to replead granted. Because MIPTC nowhere asserts [48] a cause of action for fraud against Volvo, Volvo's motion to strike the references to fraud made in paragraphs 81 through 83, 86, 88, 89, and 102 of the Counterclaims and Answer is hereby granted. Because counterclaims 1 and 2 are dismissed for failure to state a cause of action, Volvo's motion to dismiss counterclaims 1 and 2 for lack of subject matter jurisdiction is denied as moot.

[*816] 2. ProServ, Dell, and Benton's Motion to Dismiss the Counterclaims

ProServ, Dell, and Benton move, pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6), to dismiss all the counterclaims alleged by MIPTC and Happer against them for failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted. ProServ, Dell, and Benton also move, pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. l2(f), to strike the newspaper and magazine quotations recited in paragraph 57 of the Counterclaims and Answer as immaterial, impertinent, scandalous, and impossible to properly respond to.

Counterclaim 1 alleges that ProServ, including Dell and Benton as its agents, combined and conspired with Volvo to dominate and control men's professional tennis in violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act. Counterclaims and Answer at paras. 118-22; 15 U.S.C. § 1. [49] As discussed supra, slip op. at pages 9 through 19, and for the reasons stated there, these allegations are insufficient to state a Section 1 violation.

Counterclaim 1 also accuses ProServ and IMG of unlawfully and improperly using their market power over the world's top-ranked tennis players in order to "dominate, control or exert significant influence over a majority of" all men's professional tennis events worldwide, in violation of Section 1. Counterclaims and Answer at para. 30. In support of this claim, MIPTC alleges that ProServ and IMG perform one or more of the key functions involved in producing a majority of the major Grand Prix events (owner, manager, merchandising agent, sponsorship agent, television agent, player representative) and that by doing so, ProServ and IMG exercise inordinate power over those events. Id. at paras. 31-35. MIPTC also alleges that for the special events which ProServ and IMG own or control outright, they exercise absolute power over the event, including the ability to exclude players whom they do not represent. Id. at para. 36. While MIPTC asserts that ProServ and IMG exercise power over men's tennis events, it nowhere asserts that [50] ProServ and IMG combined or conspired to do so. Similarly, no allegation is made that, or how, this power (assuming it exists as alleged in the counterclaims) unreasonably restrains trade. Finally, MIPTC does not allege how it may have been harmed or what, if any, damages may have been sustained by it due to this power. Because none of the three required elements of a cause of action under Section 1 are alleged, this counterclaim must be dismissed.

MIPTC accuses ProServ and IMG of leveraging their control over players into control over tournaments, and ultimately into restraint of trade in the players, events, and television markets. Id. at paras. 42-43. In support of this claim, MIPTC alleges that "ProServ and IMG exert extensive power over [professional tennis] players from 'the cradle to the grave.'" Id. at para. 44. Specifically, ProServ and IMG (1) offer financial guarantees and wild card spots in order to induce promising young players to sign agency contracts with them, and coerce young players by threatening that they will not get any wild card spots if they do not sign agency contracts with them, id. at paras. 45, 117 (1)-(3); (2) extend loans and financial [51] benefits to tennis coaches to enlist their support in signing young players to agency contracts, without disclosing such arrangements, id. at paras. 45, 117(4); (3) own the only existing circuits of events exclusively for players aged 35 to 45 and over 45 years of age, id. at paras. 47-48, 117(7); (4) pressure and pay under-the-table guarantees to their players to have them participate in tournaments in which ProServ and IMG have a financial interest, id., at paras. 5, 6; (5) coerce tournament organizers to give them a role or a financial interest in tournaments by threatening that without such an agreement, their players will not appear in the tournaments, or by threatening to run a special event at the same time as their tournaments, id. at paras. 50, 117 (8)-(9); (6) combine to recognize and promote each of their spheres of influence by refraining from running events opposite one another and exchanging their players' services for one another's events, id. at paras. 50, 117(11); (7) control the schedules at their events to favor their players, and control the advertising of their events to favor their players, to the detriment of higher-ranked [*817] players [52] whom they do not represent, id. at para. 117 (14)-(15); and (8) have leveraged their control of players into control over the television broadcast rights to a majority of Grand Prix events by threatening tournament owners that their players would not play in a specific tournament unless ProServ or IMG was granted the television broadcast rights to the tournament, id. at para. 54. Although these assertions indicate that ProServ and IMG exercise power over professional men's tennis players, and therefore exert some influence on men's professional tennis events, it is nowhere asserted that ProServ and IMG combined or conspired to do so. The only allegation of combined action between ProServ and IMG is that they cooperate with each other in scheduling certain events and in making some tennis players available to play in the other's events. Even assuming that this assertion sufficiently alleges a combination or conspiracy between ProServ and IMG, no allegation is made that or how this conspiracy unreasonably restrains trade, or how MIPTC may have been harmed and what damages it has sustained because of it. Again, these allegations are insufficient to make out a cause of action [53] under Section 1.

Counterclaim 2 alleges that ProServ, including Dell and Benton as its agents, combined and conspired with Volvo to monopolize the players, events, and television markets in violation of Section 2 of the Sherman Act. Counterclaims and Answer at paras. 123-26; 15 U.S.C. § 2. As discussed supra, slip op. at pages 19 through 22, and for the reasons stated there, these allegations are insufficient to state a Section 2 violation.

Counterclaim 2 also alleges that the same scheme between ProServ and IMG to dominate and control men's tennis discussed above constitutes a combination and conspiracy to monopolize the players, events, and television markets in violation of Section 2. However, nowhere in the counterclaims does MIPTC allege that ProServ and IMG possess monopoly power over the players, events, or television markets; neither can that allegation be inferred from the facts alleged in the counterclaims. While the facts in the counterclaims may allege that ProServ and IMG exert some influence on these markets, they do not possess the power to control prices or exclude competition: a new player representation firm was formed during the period [54] when Volvo and ProServ were actively pursuing renewal of, and MIPTC was soliciting bids for, the overall Grand Prix sponsorship. Counterclaims and Answer at para. 76. Moreover, even assuming that ProServ and IMG possess monopoly power in the relevant markets, MIPTC nowhere distinguishes their acquisition of that power from the fact that, as alleged in the counterclaims, ProServ and IMG established their positions in the players, events, and television markets largely as consequences of the recent historical development of the sport of men's professional tennis. The allegations in the counterclaims are therefore insufficient to state a Section 2 violation.

Counterclaim 3 alleges that the same facts alleged against Volvo also state a cause of action against ProServ, Dell, and Benton under the Lanham Act. Counterclaims and Answer at paras. 127-29; 15 U.S.C. § 1125(a) (1982). For the same reasons as those discussed supra slip op. at pages 22-29, the allegations asserted by MIPTC are insufficient to state a cause of action against ProServ, Dell, and Benton for unfair competition under the Lanham Act.

Counterclaim 4 alleges that the same facts alleged against [55] Volvo also state a cause of action against ProServ, Dell, and Benton under the New York antidilution statute. Counterclaims and Answer at paras. 130-32; N.Y. Gen. Bus. Law § 368-d. For the same reasons as those discussed supra slip op. at pages 29-30, the allegations asserted by MIPTC are insufficient to state a cause of action against ProServ, Dell, and Benton under § 368-d.

Counterclaim 5 alleges that the same facts asserted against Volvo also state a cause of action against ProServ, Dell, and Benton for common law unfair competition. Counterclaims and Answer at paras. 133-35. For the same reasons as those discussed [*818] supra slip op. at pages 31-32, the allegations asserted by MIPTC may adequately set forth a cause of action against ProServ, Dell, and Benton under common law unfair competition. Absent pendent jurisdiction, however, it may be sustained in this court only under diversity jurisdiction.

Counterclaim 6 alleges that ProServ, Dell, and Benton participate in the affairs of men's professional tennis through a pattern of racketeering activity, in violation of 18 U.S.C. § 1964(c) (1982) ("RICO"), [8] including acts of mail fraud, [56] in violation of 18 U.S.C. § 1341 (1982), and wire fraud and television fraud, in violation of 18 U.S.C. § 1343 (1982). Counterclaims and Answer at paras. 136-38.

[57] In order to state a cause of action under Section 1964(c), a plaintiff must allege: "(1) conduct (2) of an enterprise (3) through a pattern (4) of racketeering activity. . . . In addition, the plaintiff only has standing if, and can only recover to the extent that, he has been injured in his business or property by the conduct constituting the

---

8 The civil RICO statute provides, in pertinent part, that:

> HN22[] any person injured in his business or property by reason of a violation of section 1962 of this chapter may sue therefor in any appropriate United States district court and shall recover threefold the damages he sustains and the cost of the suit, including a reasonable attorney's fee.

18 U.S.C. § 1964(c) (1982).

Section 1962 provides as follows:

> HN23[] (a) It shall be unlawful for any person who has received any income derived, directly or indirectly, from a pattern of racketeering activity . . . to use or invest, directly or indirectly, any part of such income, or the proceeds of such income, in acquisition of any interest in, or the establishment or operation of, any enterprise which is engaged in, or the activities of which affect, interstate or foreign commerce.
>
> (b) It shall be unlawful for any person through a pattern of racketeering activity . . . to acquire or maintain, directly or indirectly, any interest in or control of any enterprise which is engaged in, or the activities of which affect, interstate or foreign commerce.
>
> (c) It shall be unlawful for any person employed by or associated with any enterprise engaged in, or the activities of which affect, interstate or foreign commerce, to conduct or participate, directly or indirectly, in the conduct of such enterprises' affairs through a pattern of racketeering activity . . . .
>
> (d) It shall be unlawful for any person to conspire to violate any of the provisions of subsections (a), (b), or (c) of this section.

18 U.S.C. § 1962 (1982).

HN24[] -

violation." Sedima, S.P.R.L. v. Imrex, Co., Inc., 473 U.S. 479, 496, 87 L. Ed. 2d 346, 105 S. Ct. 3275 (1985) (footnote omitted). A pattern of racketeering activity consists of at least two specified criminal acts which have sufficient continuity and relationship to constitute a pattern. See Sedima, 473 U.S. at 496 n. 14; 18 U.S.C. § 1961(1), (5) (1982 & Supp. IV 1986).

In the case at bar, assuming that MIPTC has made out all the requisite elements of a civil RICO cause of action, the predicate racketeering acts alleged consist of "mail fraud (in violation of 18 U.S.C. § 1341) and wire and television fraud (in violation of 18 U.S.C. § 1343), some of which have been described above in paragraphs 1-117." Counterclaims and Answer at [58] para. 137. HN25[] Fed. R. Civ. P. 9(b) requires that "in all averments of fraud or mistake, the circumstances constituting fraud or mistake shall be stated with particularity." Nowhere in the pleadings does MIPTC particularize the averments of fraud against ProServ, Dell, and Benton. Moreover, according to the language of the sixth counterclaim, only some of the averments of fraud have been described in the allegations supporting the counterclaims. This is insufficient to state a civil RICO cause of action.

Counterclaim 10 alleges that ProServ, Dell, and Benton breached an agreement with MIPTC that they would provide full financial disclosure concerning the Volvo Masters tournament during those years that Volvo was the overall Grand Prix sponsor and sponsor of the Masters tournaments. Counterclaims and Answer at paras. 148-50. Assuming that such an agreement existed, that it is enforceable, that it required such financial disclosure, and that ProServ, Dell, and Benton have not provided such disclosure, counterclaim 10 may make out a cause of action for breach of contract. Again, absent pendent [59] jurisdiction, [*819] it may be sustained in this court only under diversity jurisdiction.

Counterclaim 11 alleges that ProServ breached its January 1985 agreement with MIPTC to cooperate with MIPTC's reasonable promotional activities. Counterclaims and Answer at paras. 151-53. Assuming that such an agreement exists, that it is enforceable, that it requires such cooperation, and that ProServ has failed to so cooperate, counterclaim 11 may sufficiently state a cause of action for breach of contract.

Counterclaim 12 alleges that ProServ breached its sanctioning agreement with MIPTC by failing to identify Nabisco prominently, or in some instances at all, as the overall Grand Prix sponsor on promotional and advertising materials connected with the sanctioned event, and by sponsoring a "circuit within a circuit" of Grand Prix events. Counterclaims and Answer at paras. 154-56. Assuming that such an agreement exists, that it is enforceable, that prominent identification of the overall sponsor is required by the agreement, that sponsoring any sort of "circuit within a circuit" is prohibited by the agreement, and that ProServ violated those provisions, counterclaim 12 may sufficiently [60] make out a cause of action for breach of contract.

MIPTC has not made a showing of diversity to support federal diversity jurisdiction over counterclaim 5, for common law unfair competition, and counterclaims 10 through 12 for breach of contract. Furthermore, MIPTC has neither pled that HN26[] "the matter in controversy exceeds the sum or value of $ 10,000," as required by 28 U.S.C. § 1332(a) (1982), nor pled any specific amount of damages suffered. Therefore, counterclaims 5 and 10 through 12 are dismissed with leave to replead. As I stated previously, I will permit the parties to replead despite serious doubts that sufficient damages can be alleged or proven by this collection of counterclaiming defendants against the other parties to this lawsuit.

Counterclaim 13 alleges that the same facts as those alleged against Volvo state a cause of action against ProServ, Dell, and Benton for defamation of Happer. Counterclaims and Answer at paras. 157-64. For the reasons discussed supra slip op. at pages 35-36, those allegations are also insufficient to make out a cause [61] of action for defamation against ProServ, Dell, and Benton.

Counterclaim 14 alleges that the same facts as those alleged against Volvo state a cause of action against ProServ, Dell, and Benton for defamation of MIPTC. Counterclaims and Answer at paras. 165-74. For the reasons discussed supra at page 814, those allegations are also insufficient to make out a case of defamation against ProServ, Dell, and Benton.

ProServ, Dell, and Benton's motion to dismiss the counterclaims against them is granted in part and denied in part. Counterclaims 1 through 4, 6, 13, and 14 against them are dismissed. Counterclaims 5 and 10 through 12 are dismissed with leave to replead granted. The motion, pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(f), to strike all of the press quotations from the Counterclaims and Answer is denied.

3. IMG and McCormack's Motion to Dismiss the Counterclaims

IMG and McCormack move, pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6), to dismiss all of the counterclaims alleged by MIPTC and Happer against them for failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted.

Counterclaim 1 alleges that IMG, including McCormack as its agent, combined and conspired with ProServ to dominate [62] and control men's professional tennis in violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act. Counterclaims and Answer at paras. 118-22; 15 U.S.C. § 1. As discussed supra, slip op. at pages 37-40, and for the reasons stated there, these allegations are insufficient to state a Section 1 violation.

Counterclaim 2 alleges that IMG, including McCormack as its agent, combined and conspired with ProServ to monopolize the players, events, and television markets in violation of Section 2 of the Sherman Act. Counterclaims and Answer at paras. 123-26; 15 U.S.C. § 2. As discussed supra, slip op. at pages 40-41, and for the reasons stated there, [*820] these allegations are insufficient to state a Section 2 violation.

Counterclaim 13 alleges that the same facts as those alleged against Volvo also state a cause of action against McCormack for defamation of Happer. Counterclaims and Answer at paras. 157-64. For the reasons discussed supra slip op. at pages 35-36, these allegations are insufficient to make out a case of defamation against McCormack.

Accordingly, IMG and McCormack's motion to dismiss counterclaims 1, 2, and 13 against them is [63] granted.

CONCLUSION

In sum, counterclaims 1 through 4, 6, 13, and 14 are dismissed. Counterclaims 5 and 7 through 12 are dismissed with leave to replead granted.

SO ORDERED.

Telectronics Proprietary, Ltd. v. Medtronic, Inc.

United States District Court for the Southern District of New York

May 19, 1988, Decided ; May 20, 1988, Filed

No. 83 CIV. 8568 (PKL)

Reporter

687 F. Supp. 832 *; 1988 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 4836 ; 7 U.S.P.Q.2D (BNA) 1777 ; 1988-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P68,082

Telectronics Proprietary, Ltd., Plaintiff, v. Medtronic, Inc., Defendant, v. Telectronics, Inc., Telectronics U.S.A., Inc. and Telectronics Pty. Ltd., Additional Defendants on Counterclaim

Core Terms

patent, counterclaim, affirmative defense, monopolize, summary judgment, antitrust claim, Sherman Act, summary judgment motion, conspiracy, estoppel, license, pleadings, anti trust law, conspired, courts, laches, motion to dismiss, concerted action, district court, monopoly power, unclean hands, res judicata, indispensable, acquisition, allegations, antitrust, sanctions, parties, statute of limitations, restraint of trade

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss

Civil Procedure > Pleading & Practice > Motion Practice > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Pleading & Practice > Motion Practice > Opposing Memoranda

HN1[] Defenses, Demurrers & Objections, Motions to Dismiss

The function of a motion to dismiss under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b) (6) is to test the adequacy of the statement of a claim for relief made in any pleading. In considering a Rule 12(b) (6) motion, the court should confine its inquiry to the pleadings. A claim for relief may not be amended by the briefs in opposition to a motion to dismiss.

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Counterclaims > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss

HN2[] Pleadings, Counterclaims

A Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b) (6) motion is available to any party wishing to challenge the formal sufficiency of a claim whether it is made in a complaint, counterclaim, cross-claim, or third party claim.

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Complaints > Requirements for Complaint

Civil Procedure > Dismissal > Involuntary Dismissals > Failure to State Claims

HN3[] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

Fed. R. Civ. P. 8(a) supplements Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b) (6) by setting forth the requirements of a claim for relief: (1) a brief statement of the basis of the court's jurisdiction; (2) "a short and plain statement of the claim showing that the pleader is entitled to relief;" and (3) a demand for judgment. Under the Federal Rules, a complaint should not be dismissed for failure to state a claim unless it appears beyond doubt that the plaintiff can prove no set of facts in support of his claim which would entitle him to relief. Nonetheless, the pleading must set forth enough information to suggest that relief would be based on some recognized legal theory. The District Court has no obligation to create, unaided by the plaintiff, new legal theories to support a complaint.

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Complaints > General Overview

HN4[] Pleadings, Complaints

In practice a complaint must contain either direct or inferential allegations respecting all the material elements necessary to sustain a recovery under some viable legal theory.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

International Law > Authority to Regulate > Anticompetitive Activities

International Trade Law > Forfeitures & Penalties > General Overview

HN5[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Section 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 (1982), makes every contract or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several states, or with foreign nations illegal. The gravamen of a charge under § 1 is conduct in restraint of trade; no fundamental alteration of market structure is necessary. There are several elements to a section 1 claim. There must be (1) concerted action, (2) by two or more persons, and (3) the concerted action must unreasonably restrain interstate or foreign trade or commerce.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN6[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

To state a claim under the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, a claimant must allege injury to competition in general.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

HN7[] Regulated Practices, Market Definition

The antitrust laws were enacted for the protection of competition, not competitors.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN8[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Section 2 of the Sherman Act is aimed at the acquisition or retention of effective market control. It is designed to prevent a pernicious market structure in which the concentration of power saps the salubrious influence of competition.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > Sherman Act

HN9[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

The essential elements of attempted monopolization under Sherman Act § 2, 15 U.S.C.S. § 2, are (1) a dangerous probability of success in monopolizing a given product market and (2) a specific intent to destroy competition or control prices in the market.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > General Overview

HN10[] Monopolies & Monopolization, Attempts to Monopolize

To state a claim for conspiracy to monopolize, a claimant must allege (1) concerted action; (2) specific intent to achieve the unlawful result of monopoly; and (3) the commission of at least one act in furtherance of the conspiracy. It need not be shown that monopoly power has been attained, nor that if the conspirators continued in their course unmolested they would have attained it, but only that obtaining such power is the purpose which motivates the conspiracy.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

Healthcare Law > Healthcare Litigation > Antitrust Actions > Physicians

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss

HN11[] Monopolies & Monopolization, Conspiracy to Monopolize

Although the Federal Rules permit statement of ultimate facts, a bare bones statement of conspiracy or of injury under the antitrust laws without any supporting facts permits dismissal.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

HN12[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

The joint activities of a parent company and its wholly owned subsidiary cannot constitute a combination or conspiracy in violation of the Sherman Act.

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act > General Overview

HN13[] Racketeering, Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act

See 18 U.S.C.S. § 1964(c).

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations > Claims > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act > General Overview

HN14[] Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations, Claims

Only the directly injured party has standing to sue in a civil RICO case. Concentrating the entire right to recover in the hands of the directly injured party promotes deterrence. RICO was designed to make life hard for repeat violators of the criminal law. Increased deterrence is produced by granting the full recovery to a single person. The person with the best opportunity to uncover a violation is the one directly injured.

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Strike > Immaterial Matters

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Strike > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Strike > Redundant Matters

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Strike > Scandalous Matters

HN15[] Motions to Strike, Immaterial Matters

Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(f) authorizes courts to order stricken from any pleading any insufficient defense or any redundant, immaterial, impertinent, or scandalous matter.

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Strike > Redundant Matters

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Strike > General Overview

HN16[] Motions to Strike, Redundant Matters

In deciding a motion to strike, a court will not consider matters outside the pleadings, and well-pleaded facts will be accepted as true. If the defense appears valid on the basis of the pleading, then the motion will be denied even though some defenses may not be supported by the facts. Generally, redundant, immaterial, impertinent or scandalous pleadings do not prejudice any of the parties. Motions to strike these non-prejudicial pleadings do not serve the interests of judicial efficiency and economy since they only postpone the date of trial on the merits.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Appropriateness

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Genuine Disputes

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Materiality of Facts

HN17[] Entitlement as Matter of Law, Appropriateness

Summary judgment is appropriate when there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. Where the record taken as a whole could not lead a rational trier of fact to find for the nonmoving party, there is no genuine issue for trial. In evaluating a motion for summary judgment, the court's responsibility is not to resolve disputed issues of fact but to assess whether there are any factual issues to be tried, while resolving ambiguities and drawing reasonable inferences against the moving party.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

HN18[] Summary Judgment, Entitlement as Matter of Law

In evaluating a motion for summary judgment, the court's responsibility is not to resolve disputed issues of fact but to assess whether there are any factual issues to be tried, while resolving ambiguities and drawing reasonable inferences against the moving party.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Supporting Materials > Affidavits

Civil Procedure > ... > Discovery > Methods of Discovery > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Supporting Materials > General Overview

HN19[] Supporting Materials, Affidavits

The party seeking summary judgment always bears the initial responsibility of informing the district court of the basis for its motion, and identifying those portions of the pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories, and admissions on file, together with the affidavits, if any, which it believes demonstrate an absence of a genuine issue of material fact.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Genuine Disputes

HN20[] Summary Judgment, Burdens of Proof

Once a motion for summary judgment is properly made, the burden then shifts to the nonmoving party, who must set forth specific facts showing that there is a genuine issue for trial.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Appropriateness

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > Scintilla Rule

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Summary Judgment > Evidentiary Considerations

HN21[] Entitlement as Matter of Law, Appropriateness

Because the District Court must determine whether there is the need for a trial -- whether, in other words, there are any genuine factual issues that properly can be resolved only by a finder of fact because they may reasonably be resolved in favor of either party -- the nonmoving party must produce, at the summary judgment stage, sufficient evidence favoring the nonmoving party for a jury to return a verdict for that party. If the evidence is merely colorable or is not significantly probative summary judgment may be granted.

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Affirmative Defenses > Laches

Copyright Law > ... > Civil Infringement Actions > Defenses > Statute of Limitations

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > General Overview

HN22[] Affirmative Defenses, Laches

Statutes of limitation, like the equitable doctrine of laches, in their conclusive effects are designed to promote justice by preventing surprises through the revival of claims that have been allowed to slumber until evidence has been lost, memories have faded, and witnesses have disappeared. The theory is that even if one has a just claim it is unjust not to put the adversary on notice to defend within the period of limitation and that right to be free of stale claims comes to prevail over the right to prosecute them.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > Time Limitations

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > General Overview

HN23[] Private Actions, Standing

While the statute of limitations for antitrust claims is uniform, the event which gives rise to a claim under those laws is not. Generally, a cause of action accrues and the statute begins to run when a defendant commits an act that injures a plaintiff's business. In the antitrust context, "each time a plaintiff is injured by an act of the defendants a cause of action accrues to him and the statute of limitations runs from the commission of the act. Because antitrust injuries vary, there is no simple rule for determining when an antitrust cause of action arises.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

HN24[] Private Actions, Remedies

In antitrust and treble-damage actions, refusal to award future profits as too speculative is equivalent to holding that no cause of action has yet accrued for any but those damages already suffered. The cause of action for future damages, if they ever occur, will accrue only on the date they are suffered. Otherwise future damages that could not be proved within four years of the conduct from which they flowed would be forever incapable of recovery, contrary to congressional purposes.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Appropriateness

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Genuine Disputes

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Materiality of Facts

HN25[] Entitlement as Matter of Law, Appropriateness

Summary judgment is only appropriate when there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. The accrual date for this cause of action is a factual dispute; thus summary judgment would be inappropriate at this juncture, and this issue is best reserved for resolution at trial.

Civil Procedure > ... > Preclusion of Judgments > Estoppel > Collateral Estoppel

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Preclusion of Judgments > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Preclusion of Judgments > Estoppel > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Preclusion of Judgments > Res Judicata

HN26[] Estoppel, Collateral Estoppel

The doctrines of res judicata (claim preclusion) and collateral estoppel (issue preclusion) relieve parties of the cost and vexation of multiple lawsuits, conserve judicial resources, and, by preventing inconsistent decisions, encourage reliance on adjudication. Generally, claim preclusion prevents the litigation of any ground that could have been advanced in the earlier suit in support of the claim made there. Issue preclusion, however, operates only to preclude relitigation of issues actually litigated in a previous action.

Civil Procedure > ... > Preclusion of Judgments > Estoppel > Collateral Estoppel

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Preclusion of Judgments > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Preclusion of Judgments > Estoppel > General Overview

HN27[] Estoppel, Collateral Estoppel

Collateral estoppel is appropriate only if: (1) the issue is identical to one decided in the first action; (2) the issue was actually litigated in the first action; (3) resolution of the issue was essential to a final judgment in the first action; and (4) plaintiff had a full and fair opportunity to litigate the issue in the first action. Collateral estoppel precludes a party from asserting a claim that the party had previously litigated and lost.

Administrative Law > Agency Adjudication > Decisions > Collateral Estoppel

Patent Law > Preclusion > Collateral Estoppel

Administrative Law > Agency Adjudication > Decisions > Res Judicata

Administrative Law > Agency Adjudication > Review of Initial Decisions

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Preclusion of Judgments > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Preclusion of Judgments > Res Judicata

HN28[] Decisions, Collateral Estoppel

When an administrative agency is acting in a judicial capacity and resolves disputed issues of fact properly before it which the parties have had an adequate opportunity to litigate, the courts have not hesitated to apply res judicata to enforce repose.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Ownership > Conveyances > Licenses

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Opposing Materials > General Overview

Patent Law > ... > Defenses > Inequitable Conduct > General Overview

Administrative Law > Agency Adjudication > Review of Initial Decisions

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Summary Judgment > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Supporting Materials > General Overview

HN29[] Conveyances, Licenses

Summary determination is virtually identical to summary judgment in the federal courts. Any party may move with any necessary supporting affidavits for a summary determination in his favor upon all or any part of the issues to be determined in the investigation. 19 C.F.R. § 210.50(a). When a motion for summary determination is made and supported as provided in this rule, a party opposing the motion may not rest upon mere allegations or denials in his pleading; his response must set forth specific facts showing that there is a genuine issue of fact for hearing. 19 C.F.R. § 210.50(c).

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

HN30[] Summary Judgment, Entitlement as Matter of Law

An order of summary determination constitutes an initial determination of the administrative law judge. 19 C.F.R. § 210.50(f).

Counsel: [1] Gottlieb, Rackman & Reisman, New York, New York, Michael I. Rackman, Esq., Allen I. Rubenstein, Esq., of counsel, Attorneys for Plaintiff and Counterclaim Defendants.

Quirk & Bakalor, P.C., New York, New York, Thomas E. Tookey, Esq., of counsel, Attorneys for Defendant.

Medtronic, Inc., Minneapolis, Minnesota, Grady J. Frenchick, Esq., Marcia Bland Staten, Esq., Robert C. Beck, Esq., of counsel, Attorneys for Defendant.

Judges: Peter K. Leisure, United States District Judge.

Opinion by: LEISURE

Opinion

[*1778] [*835] OPINION AND ORDER

PETER K. LEISURE, UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE.

This case has its origins in a patent-infringement suit brought before the International Trade Commission ("ITC") by Medtronic against Telectronics in July 1983. Telectronics Proprietary Ltd. initiated this [1779] action, seeking declaratory judgment of noninfringement and invalidity, in November 1983. Medtronic responded with its answer and a counterclaim for infringement of four patents; Telectronics replied by asserting the defense of a license.

After discovery in the ITC case, [1] Telectronics amended its complaint in this Court to assert antitrust claims. Medtronic first answered the amended complaint in November 1984, and included in its answer antitrust-based counterclaims. Later, in February 1986, [2] Medtronic filed an amended pleading which included, inter alia, counterclaims based on antitrust law, patent law, and RICO, and affirmative defenses based on fraud, laches, unclean hands, and estoppel.

The following motions are now before this Court:

(1) Telectronics' motion under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b) (6) to dismiss Medtronic's first (Sherman Act §§ 1, 2) and third (RICO) counterclaims;

(2) Telectronics' motion under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(f) to strike Medtronic's ninth (unclean hands), twelfth (laches, fraud, estoppel, and unclean hands), and fourteenth (failure to join an indispensable party) affirmative defenses;
(3) Medtronic's motion for judgment on the pleadings or summary judgment on Telectronics' Clayton Act § 7 claim;

[*836] (4) Telectronics' motion for sanctions pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 11 along with Medtronic's motion for summary judgment on this motion.
(5) Telectronics' motion for partial summary judgment that the defense of a license under the '242 patent is res judicata or issue precluded.

This opinion will address this motions seriatim.

I. THE PARTIES

All of the parties in [3] this action make and sell medical products including cardiac pacemakers.

---

[1] The parties have now conducted extensive discovery in this case as well.

Plaintiff Telectronics Proprietary Ltd., and counterclaim defendant Telectronics, Inc. are subsidiaries of counterclaim defendant Telectronics U.S.A., Inc. (hereinafter collectively "Telectronics"). Telectronics Pty., Ltd., an Australian company currently not a party to this suit, owns a majority interest in Telectronics U.S.A.

Defendant Medtronic owns several patents, four of which are involved in this suit: U.S. Patent Nos. 3,595,242, 3,648,707, 4,059,116, and 4,312,355. All four of these patents involve pacemaker technology; their validity is in dispute.

II. TELECTRONICS' MOTIONS TO DISMISS

HN1[] The function of a motion to dismiss under Rule 12(b) (6) is to test the adequacy of the statement of a claim for relief made in any pleading. In considering a Rule 12(b) (6) motion, the court should confine its inquiry to the pleadings. [2] A claim for relief "may not be amended by the briefs in opposition to a motion to dismiss." Car Carriers, Inc. v. Ford Motor Co., 745 F.2d 1101, 1107 (7th Cir. 1984) (citing Jacobson v. Peat, Marwick, Mitchell & Co., 445 F. Supp. 518, 526 (S.D.N.Y. 1977); see Sansom Comm. [4] v. Lynn, 366 F. Supp. 1271, 1278 (E.D. Pa. 1973); Chambliss v. Coca-Cola Bottling Co., 274 F. Supp. 401, 409 (E.D. Tenn. 1967), aff'd on other grounds, 414 F.2d 256 (6th Cir. 1969), cert. denied, 397 U.S. 916, 25 L. Ed. 2d 97, 90 S. Ct. 921 (1970)), cert. denied, 470 U.S. 1054, 84 L. Ed. 2d 821, 105 S. Ct. 1758 (1985). HN2[] A Rule 12(b) (6) motion is available to any party wishing to challenge the formal sufficiency of a claim whether it is made in a complaint, counterclaim, cross-claim, or third party claim. [3]

HN3[] Rule 8(a) supplements Rule 12(b) (6) by setting forth the requirements of a claim for relief: (1) a brief statement of the basis of the court's jurisdiction; (2) "a short and plain statement of the claim showing that the pleader is entitled to relief;" and (3) a demand for judgment. Under the Federal Rules, "a complaint [5] should not be dismissed for failure to state a claim unless it appears beyond doubt that the plaintiff can prove no set of facts in support of his claim which would entitle him to relief." Conley v. Gibson, 355 U.S. 41, 45-46, 2 L. Ed. 2d 80, 78 S. Ct. 99 (1957). Nonetheless, the pleading must set forth enough information to suggest that relief would be based on some recognized legal theory. "The District Court has no obligation to create, unaided by the plaintiff, new legal theories to support a complaint." District of Columbia [1780] v. Air Florida, Inc., 243 U.S. App. D.C. 1, 750 F.2d 1077, 1081-82 (D.C. Cir. 1984). [4] HN4[] "In practice 'a complaint . . . must contain either direct or inferential allegations respecting all the material elements necessary to sustain a recovery under some viable legal theory.'" Car Carriers, 745 F.2d at 1106 (quoting Sutliff, Inc. v. Donovan Cos., 727 F.2d 648, 654 (7th Cir. 1984) (Posner, J.) (quoting French Quarter Apartments Ltd. v. Georgia-Pacific Corp. (In re Plywood Antitrust Litigation), 655 F.2d 627, 641 (5th Cir. 1981), cert. dismissed, 462 U.S. 1125, 77 L. Ed. 2d 1358, 103 S. Ct. 3100 (1983))).

[*837] Having set forth the standards [6] for evaluating motions under Rule 12(b) (6), the Court now addresses the sufficiency of Medtronic's counterclaims.

A. Medtronic's Antitrust Claim

Medtronic's first counterclaim is based on alleged violations of sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. §§ 1, 2 (1982). Medtronic seems to be alleging that Telectronics engaged in a conspiracy to restrain trade, attempted to monopolize, conspired to monopolize, and did monopolize the market for certain kinds of pacemakers. Defendant's First Amended and Supplemental Answer to Plaintiff's First Amended and Supplemental Complaint paras. 83, 88 (hereinafter "Answer"). Each of these allegations suggests a distinct claim under the Sherman Act.

---

[2] Furthermore, all material facts alleged in a claim for relief are taken as admitted for the purposes of this motion. See George C. Frey Ready-Mixed Concrete, Inc. v. Pine Hill Concrete Mix Corp., 554 F.2d 551, 553 (2d Cir. 1977); Bankers Trust Co. v. Feldesman, 676 F. Supp. 496, 498-99 (S.D.N.Y. 1987).

[3] See 5 C. Wright & A. Miller, Federal Practice and Procedure: Civil § 1356, at 590 (1969).

[4] See Furlong v. Long Island College Hosp., 710 F.2d 922, 927 (2d Cir. 1983).

Section One

Restraint of Trade

HN5[] Section 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1 (1982), makes "every contract . . . or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several states, or with foreign nations, . . . illegal." "The gravamen of a charge under [section 1] is conduct in restraint of trade; no fundamental alteration of market structure is necessary." Berkey Photo, Inc. v. Eastman Kodak Co., 603 F.2d 263, 272 (2d Cir. 1979), cert. denied, 444 U.S. 1093, 62 L. Ed. 2d 783, 100 S. Ct. 1061 (1980). [7] There are several elements to a section 1 claim. There must be (1) concerted action, (2) by two or more persons, and (3) the concerted action must unreasonably restrain interstate or foreign trade or commerce. [5] Although Medtronic has alleged that "Telectronics, Inc. and Telectronics U.S.A., Inc. have conspired and contracted with ELA SA and ELA U.S.A. and Nucleus Ltd., Synthelabo S.A. and Nestle Alimenta and Siemens-Elema, Inc. to restrain trade," Answer para. 83, it has not specified in this counterclaim what concerted actions these parties took to further their goal. [6] "Although the Federal Rules permit statement of ultimate facts, a bare bones statement of conspiracy or of injury under the antitrust laws without any supporting facts permits dismissal." Heart Disease Research Found. v. General Motors Corp., 463 F.2d 98, 100 (2d Cir. 1972). [7] A generous reading of Medtronic's pleading indicates that the "anticompetitive" concerted action Telectronics allegedly engaged in was a conspiracy to violate the Medicare laws. Answer paras. 63, 89. This allegation by itself is insufficient to state a claim under section 1 of the Sherman Act. "The cornerstone of [antitrust] law is competition. [8] Congress'[s] intent in passing the Sherman Act was not to subject all business and commercial torts to the scrutiny of federal [antitrust] law." Falstaff Brewing Co. v. Stroh Brewery Co., 628 F. Supp. 822, 826 (N.D. Cal. 1986). Moreover, Medtronic has failed to plead antitrust injury, another necessary element of an antitrust claim. [8] Thus this claim must be dismissed under Rule 12(b) (6).

Section Two

There are three types of civil actions which may be brought [9] under section 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 2 (1982): (1) monopolization; (2) attempted monopolization; and (3) conspiring to monopolize. Medtronic appears to be trying to assert each of these claims.

Monopolization

To state properly a monopolization claim under section 2, the claimant must allege (1) that defendant has monopoly [*838] power -- the ability to control prices or exclude competition; and (2) that defendant acquired its monopoly power through conduct intended to obtain such power. [9]

---

[5] See Oreck Corp. v. Whirlpool Corp., 639 F.2d 75, 78 (2d Cir. 1980), cert. denied, 454 U.S. 1083, 70 L. Ed. 2d 618, 102 S. Ct. 639 (1981); Frito-Lay, Inc. v. Bachman Co., 659 F. Supp. 1129, 1132 (S.D.N.Y. 1986); 2 E. Kintner, Federal Antitrust Law § 9.1, at 5 (1980); L. Sullivan, Antitrust §§ 108-09, at 311-12 (1977).

[6] This Court also assumes that the last five parties named by Medtronic are not owned by Telectronics.

[7] See Speed Auto Sales, Inc. v. American Motors Corp., 477 F. Supp. 1193, 1196-97 (E.D.N.Y. 1979); Troyer v. Karcagi, 476 F. Supp. 1142, 1153 (S.D.N.Y. 1979).

[8] See infra note 9. See also P. Areeda & H. Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law § 335.1a, at 256-61 (Supp. 1987) (discussing antitrust injury).

[9] See United States v. Grinnell Corp., 384 U.S. 563, 570-71, 16 L. Ed. 2d 778, 86 S. Ct. 1698 (1966); L. Sullivan, supra, § 7, at 29-30.

[*1781] [10] HN8[] Section 2 of the Sherman Act is "aimed . . . at the acquisition or retention of effective market control." United States v. Griffith, 334 U.S. 100, 107, 92 L. Ed. 1236, 68 S. Ct. 941 (1948). It is designed to prevent "a pernicious market structure in which the concentration of power saps the salubrious influence of competition." Berkey Photo, 603 F.2d at 272. Ordinarily, the court may infer the existence of monopoly power from a predominant share of the relevant market. Grinnell, 384 U.S. at 571. Here, although it did offer definitions of the relevant product and geographic markets and submarkets, Medtronic has alleged neither monopoly power, nor even significant market share on Telectronics' part. Instead, it simply avers that: "the Telectronics[] entities have monopolized and continue to monopolize" the relevant markets. Answer para. 88. Such a statement is not a sufficient allegation of monopoly power to withstand a motion to dismiss. "A complaint cannot escape the charge that it is entirely conclusory in nature merely by quoting . . . words from the statutes." Segal v. Gordon, 467 F.2d 602, 608 (2d Cir. 1972).

Attempted Monopolization

HN9[] "The essential elements of attempted monopolization [11] under [section 2] are (1) a dangerous probability of success in monopolizing a given product market and (2) a specific intent to destroy competition or control prices in the market." Levitch v. Columbia Broadcasting Sys., 495 F. Supp. 649, 668 (S.D.N.Y. 1980), aff'd, 697 F.2d 495 (2d Cir. 1983). [10] Medtronic seems to have alleged specific intent when it said: "Telectronics, Inc. and Telectronics U.S.A., Inc. have had, as their sole purpose, the suppression and elimination of competition." Answer para. 86. However, the counterclaim does not contain any allegations of a dangerous probability of success, and thus has failed to state a necessary element of the claim.

Conspiracy to Monopolize

HN10[] To state a claim for conspiracy to monopolize, a claimant must allege (1) concerted action; (2) specific intent to achieve the unlawful result of monopoly; and (3) the commission of at least one act in furtherance of the [12] conspiracy. [11] "It need not be shown that monopoly power has been attained, nor that if the conspirators continued in their course unmolested they would have attained it, but only that obtaining such power is the purpose which motivates the conspiracy." L. Sullivan, supra, § 49, at 132-33. Medtronic's only allegations of concerted action state that Telectronics [*839] "and others have combined and conspired and acted individually to bribe physicians to use Telectronics' products and to exclude competition in the relevant markets and submarkets." Answer paras. 88-89. [12] "Although HN11[] the Federal Rules permit statement of ultimate facts, a bare bones

---

In addition, the claimant must allege antitrust injury -- that is an injury of the type the antitrust laws were designed to protect against -- as part of any claim under the antitrust laws. See Car Carriers, 745 F.2d at 1107; Hunt-Wesson Foods, Inc. v. Ragu Foods, Inc., 627 F.2d 919 (9th Cir. 1980), cert. denied, 450 U.S. 921, 67 L. Ed. 2d 348, 101 S. Ct. 1369 (1981). Medtronic has vaguely stated that it has suffered "loss of profits and business opportunities, the amount of which is not yet ascertained, but which is substantial." Answer para. 92. By making this averment, Medtronic has stated an injury to itself, but not to competition in the relevant market. "Injury to one competitor is not a 'restraint of trade.' HN6[] To state a claim under . . . the Sherman Act, a claimant must allege injury to competition in general." Frito-Lay, 659 F. Supp. at 1133 (citing BusTop Shelters, Inc. v. Convenience & Safety Corp., 521 F. Supp. 989 (S.D.N.Y. 1981)). See also Brunswick Corp. v. Pueblo Bowl-O-Mat, Inc., 429 U.S. 477, 488, 50 L. Ed. 2d 701, 97 S. Ct. 690 (1977) HN7[] ("The antitrust laws . . . were enacted for 'the protection of competition, not competitors.'") (quoting Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, 320, 8 L. Ed. 2d 510, 82 S. Ct. 1502 (1962) (emphasis in original); Kelco Disposal, Inc. v. Browning-Ferris Indus., 845 F.2d 404, slip op. at 1871 (2d Cir. 1988) ("a plaintiff must prove behavior that injures competition, as distinct from a competitor").

[10] See Times-Picayune Publishing Co. v. United States, 345 U.S. 594, 626, 97 L. Ed. 1277, 73 S. Ct. 872 (1953); Nifty Foods Corp. v. Great Atl. & Pac. Tea Co., 614 F.2d 832, 841 (2d Cir. 1980); Frito-Lay, 659 F. Supp. at 1129 (S.D.N.Y. 1986); L. Sullivan, supra, § 50, at 134.

[11] See L. Sullivan, supra, § 49 at 132-33.

statement of conspiracy or of injury under the antitrust laws without any supporting facts permits dismissal." Heart Disease Research, 463 F.2d at 100. Medtronic has not named the "others" who allegedly conspired with Telectronics U.S.A. and Telectronics, Inc. and these two entities cannot conspire with [1782] each other. HN12[] "The joint activities of a parent company and its wholly owned subsidiary cannot constitute a combination or conspiracy in violation of . . . the Sherman Act." Shaw v. Rolex Watch, U.S.A., Inc., 673 F. Supp. 674, 1987-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) [13] P67,787, at 59,238, 59,240 (S.D.N.Y. 1987) (citing Copperweld Corp. v. Independence Tube Corp., 467 U.S. 752, 776, 81 L. Ed. 2d 628, 104 S. Ct. 2731 (1984)).

Because Medtronic has failed to state adequately any claim under sections one and two of the Sherman Act, Telectronics' motion to dismiss defendant's first counterclaim pursuant to Rule 12(b) (6) is granted. Despite the fact that Medtronic was aware of a defect in [14] its pleading, and did nothing to correct it for over one year, defendant may file an amended pleading within 20 days as this Court is disinclined to preclude a party's opportunity to prosecute a potentially legitimate claim merely because of its counsel's neglect or omission. [13]

B. Medtronic's RICO Claim

As its third counterclaim, Medtronic has attempted to state a claim under the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act ("RICO"), Pub. L. No. 91-452, 84 Stat. 941 (codified as amended at 18 U.S.C. §§ 1961-1968 (1982 & Supp. IV 1986)). Medtronic's statement of this claim mainly consists of reiteration of the statute and incorporation by reference of an Information and Prosecutor's Statement prepared by the U.S. Attorney for the District [15] of Colorado concerning Telectronics' violation of the Medicare laws, particularly 42 U.S.C. § 1395nn (1982 & Supp. III 1985). [14] Answer para. 111. Medtronic has made additional allegations in its brief in opposition to the 12(b) (6) motion, "but a party is not entitled to amend [its] pleading through statements in [its] brief." Jacobson, 445 F. Supp. at 526 (citing Chambliss, 274 F. Supp. at 409).

Like the antitrust laws, RICO is enforced through both criminal and civil proceedings; section 1964 contains the provisions creating the civil remedies.

> (c) HN13[] Any person injured in his business or property by reason of a violation of section 1962 of this chapter may sue therefor in any appropriate United States district court and shall recover threefold the damages he sustains and the cost of the suit, including a reasonable attorney's fee.

18 U.S.C. § 1964(c) (emphasis added). To state a civil RICO claim, a claimant must allege both a violation [16] of section 1962 and injury to its business or property within the [*840] meaning of section 1964. [15] The injury requirement of section 1964 is comprised of (1) injury to the plaintiff, (2) causation of that injury, and (3) the conduct

---

[12] Apparently Medtronic may have intended to make allegations of additional conspiratorial or monopolistic conduct, but failed to do so because of a clerical error. Although Medtronic stated that there was an "obvious clerical omission of the specific acts of monopolization in paragraph 88 [and] Medtronic will seek leave . . . to correct its Complaint," Medtronic's Brief in Response and in Opposition to Telectronics' Motion Under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b) (6) and 12(f) to Dismiss Medtronic's First and Third Counterclaims and to Strike Medtronic's Ninth, Twelfth, and Fourteenth Affirmative Defenses (hereinafter "Medtronic's Rule 12 Brief"), it has not taken any action to correct its pleading in the year since it made that statement.

[13] This is particularly so when the plaintiff is acting as a "private attorney general," and enforcing an important public policy as is the case in private antitrust suits. See generally Klingsberg, Balancing the Benefits and Detriments of Private Antitrust Enforcement: Detrebling, Antitrust Injury, Standing, and Other Proposed Solutions, 9 Cardozo L. Rev. 1215, 1220 (1988) (discussing the merits of private antitrust enforcement).

[14] Medtronic also incorporated by reference a Statement by the Defendant in Advance of a Plea of Guilty and a Plea Agreement concerning these charges, but these items do not contain information which would clarify Medtronic's claim.

[15] Because Medtronic has failed to allege an injury, this Court need not reach the issue of whether it has properly pled a violation of § 1962. This does not mean to imply that in its current state the part of Medtronic's pleading that pertains to § 1962 would withstand a motion to dismiss; in fact it seems unlikely that it would.

that caused the injury. The prohibited conduct and the plaintiff's proprietary injury must be causally linked. It is insufficient for a plaintiff to prove only a violation by the defendants and a proprietary injury; a plaintiff must prove that the defendant's violation caused his injury. [16]

[17] Even when Medtronic's claim is examined under the generous standards of Rule 12 and Rule 8, rather than the more stringent requirements of Rule 9(b), [17] [18] it is stated [1783] inadequately. Medtronic has done no more than paraphrase the statute in its pleading; its entire statement of injury is: "Medtronic has been, and continues to be, injured in its business or property by reason of each of the foregoing violations of 18 U.S.C. § 1962 and is entitled to appropriate relief pursuant to 18 U.S.C § 1964." Answer para. 116. Medtronic's prayer for relief, which requests $ 1,000,000 (trebled), attorney's fees, interest and costs, provides no additional clues as to how Medtronic was injured. Even if this Court could divine how Medtronic was injured, the claim would still be inadequate because it fails to address causation. The prohibited conduct must cause the plaintiff's proprietary injury. It is insufficient for a plaintiff to plead simply a violation by the defendants and an injury to its property; it must plead that it was injured by the violation. [18]

Because Medtronic has failed to state adequately a claim under 18 U.S.C. § 1964, Telectronics' motion to dismiss defendant's third counterclaim pursuant to Rule 12(b) (6) is granted. Medtronic may file an amended pleading within 20 days.

III. TELECTRONICS' MOTIONS TO STRIKE

HN15[] Rule 12(f) authorizes courts to "order stricken from any pleading any insufficient defense or any redundant, immaterial, impertinent, or scandalous matter." In the instant case Telectronics has made a motion to strike Medtronic's ninth, twelfth, and fourteenth affirmative defenses. Motions to strike an affirmative defense are not favored, and will not be granted routinely. [19] [19] Rule 12(f) motions will, however, [*841] be granted when warranted. [20] [16] See Moss v. Morgan Stanley, Inc., 719 F.2d 5, 17 (2d Cir. 1983) (to state a civil RICO claim plaintiff must allege violation of substantive RICO, damage, and causation), cert. denied, 465 U.S. 1025, 79 L. Ed. 2d 684, 104 S. Ct. 1280 (1984); Cahill v. Arthur Andersen & Co., 659 F. Supp. 1115, 1124-25 (S.D.N.Y. 1986) (same), aff'd, 822 F.2d 14 (2d Cir. 1987).

---

HN14[] Only the directly injured party has standing to sue in a civil RICO case. Rand v. Anaconda-Ericsson, Inc., 794 F.2d 843, 849 (2d Cir. 1986), cert. denied, 479 U.S. 987, 107 S. Ct. 579, 93 L. Ed. 2d 582 (1986); Carter v. Berger, 777 F.2d 1173, 1174-76 (7th Cir. 1985) (Easterbrook, J.).

> Concentrating the entire right to recover in the hands of the directly injured party promotes deterrence. RICO was designed to make life hard for repeat violators of the criminal law . . . .
>
> Increased deterrence . . . is produced by granting the full recovery to a single person. The person with the best opportunity to uncover a violation is the one directly injured. . . .

Id. at 1176.

[17] Rule 9(b) applies to at least the predicate act elements of a civil RICO claim if they are fraud-based. See Cruse v. Equitable Securities, 678 F. Supp. 1023, 1033 (S.D.N.Y. 1987); Greenfield v. Professional Care, Inc., 677 F. Supp. 110, 115-16 (E.D.N.Y. 1987); Connors v. Lexington Ins. Co., 666 F. Supp. 434, 450 (E.D.N.Y. 1987); Beck v. Manufacturers Hanover Trust Co., 645 F. Supp. 675, 680-82 (S.D.N.Y. 1986), aff'd, 820 F.2d 46 (2d Cir. 1987), cert. denied, 484 U.S. 1005, 108 S. Ct. 698, 98 L. Ed. 2d 650 (1988); Gregoris Motors v. Nissan Motor Corp., 630 F. Supp. 902, 912 (E.D.N.Y. 1986).

[18] See Moss, 719 F.2d at 17.

[19] See Index Fund, Inc. v. Hagopian, 107 F.R.D. 95, 100 (S.D.N.Y. 1985). HN16[] "In deciding a motion to strike, a court will not consider matters outside the pleadings, and well-pleaded facts will be accepted as true. If the defense appears . . . valid on the basis of the pleading, then the motion . . . will be denied even though some defenses . . . may not be supported by the facts." Id. (citations omitted). See also Note, The Motion to Strike An Insufficient Defense -- Rule 12(f) of the Federal Rules of Civil Medtronic's ninth affirmative defense, Answer para. 63, asserts that Telectronics' claims are barred by the unclean hands doctrine. Medtronic has not indicated in this paragraph which of Telectronics' claims it believes are barred by this defense. In its twelfth affirmative defense, however, it repeats its assertion of the unclean hands defense with regard to the antitrust claims in particular. While the unclean hands defense is available in patent cases, [21] [20] it is not applicable in the antitrust context; "a plaintiff's own anticompetitive conduct generally cannot be raised as a defense to liability in an antitrust action." United States Football League v. National Football League, 842 F.2d 1335, slip op. at 6610 (2d Cir. 1988). [22] Hence, to the extent that the unclean hands defense refers to Telectronics' antitrust claims, it must be stricken from the answer. Insofar as the ninth affirmative defense refers to Telectronics' patent claim, it may stand.

The entire text of Medtronic's twelfth affirmative defense is: "Telectronics' antitrust claims are barred by the judicial doctrines of laches, fraud, estoppel, and unclean hands." Answer para. 66. Medtronic has given absolutely no indication as to how these defenses apply to Telectronics' antitrust claims.

The doctrine of laches does not normally apply to antitrust claims, although it can be applied to equitable claims made under section 16 of the Clayton Act. [23] [21] In this case, Telectronics has only requested money damages (which are provided for by statute) as a remedy under the antitrust laws, [24] therefore this Court sees no reason why the doctrine of [1784] laches should apply in this case, and this affirmative defense must be stricken.

Pleading fraud without more as an affirmative defense does not meet the particularity requirements of Rule 9(b). [25] By itself, the word "fraud" provides neither the Court nor the opposing party with sufficient notice of the claim raised by this defense. Likewise, the word "estoppel" without more is not a sufficient statement of a defense. Moreover, even if Medtronic had adequately stated the estoppel defense, "it is highly unlikely that estoppel can be readily allowed to defeat antitrust claims." Bernstein v. Universal Pictures, Inc., 517 F.2d 976, 981 (2d Cir. 1975). Because Medtronic has totally failed to state these defenses in a proper manner, they too should be stricken.

In its fourteenth affirmative defense, Answer paras. 68-80, Medtronic seems to be attempting to make a claim of failure to join an indispensable party. Medtronic's elaboration indicates that, if Telectronics [22] Pty. Ltd. is indispensable to any claim in this action, it is indispensable to Medtronic's counterclaims, not Telectronics' [*842] claims. [26] "The infringement by [Telectronics] and Telectronics Pty. Ltd. of [Medtronic's] patents-in-suit have deprived [Medtronic] of sales of its cardiac pacers, which it would otherwise have made, and have in other respects injured [Medtronic] and will cause [Medtronic] added injury and damage . . . unless [Telectronics] and Telectronics Pty. Ltd. are enjoined from infringing [Medtronic's patents]." Answer para. 76. Rule 8 requires that courts read

---

Procedure, 11 Rut.-Cam. L.J. 441, 441 (1980) ("Generally, . . . redundant, immaterial, impertinent or scandalous pleadings do not prejudice any of the parties. Motions to strike these nonprejudicial pleadings do not serve the interests of judicial efficiency and economy since they only postpone the date of trial on the merits.").

[20] See, e.g., Kaiser Aluminum & Chem. Sales, Inc. v. Avondale Shipyards, Inc., 677 F.2d 1045, 1057 (5th Cir. 1982), cert. denied, 459 U.S. 1105, 74 L. Ed. 2d 953, 103 S. Ct. 729 (1983).

[21] See e.g., Timely Products Corp. v. Arron, 523 F.2d 288, 298 (2d Cir. 1975); A.H. Emery Co. v. Marcan Products Corp., 389 F.2d 11, 17-18 (2d Cir.), cert. denied, 393 U.S. 835, 21 L. Ed. 2d 106, 89 S. Ct. 109, 159 U.S.P.Q. (BNA) 799 (1968).

[22] See also Kiefer-Stewart Co. v. Joseph E. Seagram & Sons, Inc., 340 U.S. 211, 214, 95 L. Ed. 219, 71 S. Ct. 259 (1951) (plaintiff's infractions of the antitrust laws could not legalize defendants' unlawful combination nor immunize them from liability).

[23] See Argus Inc. v. Eastman Kodak Co., 552 F. Supp. 589, 599-600 (S.D.N.Y. 1982); Russell v. Todd, 309 U.S. 280, 289, 84 L. Ed. 754, 60 S. Ct. 527 (1940); cf. Kaiser, 677 F.2d at 1057; C. Hills, Antitrust Advisor § 11.43, at 717-18 (rev. 2d ed. 1985).

[24] Telectronics is, however, seeking equitable relief -- i.e. declaratory judgment of non-infringement -- for its patent claim.

[25] Even if Rule 9(b) did not apply to assertions of fraud, a mere statement that a claim is barred by fraud is not a sufficient statement of an affirmative defense.

[26] Thus its designation as an affirmative defense is erroneous.

pleadings quite generously. Because it is plausible that Medtronic's claim is a compulsory counterclaim [27] and that Telectronics Pty. Ltd. is an indispensable party to that counterclaim, [28] the motion to strike the fourteenth affirmative defense must be denied.

[23] IV. MEDTRONIC'S MOTION FOR SUMMARY JUDGMENT ON TELECTRONICS' CLAYTON ACT § 7 CLAIM

Medtronic has moved for judgment on the pleadings or summary judgment with respect to Telectronics' claim under section 7 of the Clayton Act, ch. 323, § 7, 38 Stat. 731 (1914) (current version at 15 U.S.C. § 18 (1982 & Supp. IV 1986)). Rule 12(c) allows the court to treat a motion for judgment on the pleadings as a motion for summary judgment when it considers materials extrinsic to the pleadings. Because both parties have presented materials outside the pleadings and were on notice, this Court will treat this motion as a motion for summary judgment under Rule 56.

HN17[] Summary judgment is appropriate when "'there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and . . . the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law.'" Celotex Corp. v. Catrett, 477 U.S. 317, 322, 91 L. Ed. 2d 265, 106 S. Ct. 2548 (1986) (quoting Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(c)). [29] "Where the record taken as a whole could not lead a rational trier of fact to find for the nonmoving party, there is no 'genuine issue for trial.'" Matsushita, 475 U.S. at 587 (citing First National Bank of Arizona v. Cities Service Co., 391 U.S. 253, 289, 20 L. Ed. 2d 569, 88 S. Ct. 1575 (1968)). HN18[] In evaluating [24] a motion for summary judgment, "the court's responsibility is not to resolve disputed issues of fact but to assess whether there are any factual issues to be tried, while resolving ambiguities and drawing reasonable inferences against the moving party." Knight v. U.S. Fire Ins. Co., 804 F.2d 9, 11 (2d Cir. 1986) (citing Liberty Lobby, 477 U.S. at 247-49; Eastway Constr. Corp. v. City of New York, 762 F.2d 243, 249 (2d Cir. 1985)), cert. denied, 480 U.S. 932, 107 S. Ct. 1570, 94 L. Ed. 2d 762 (1987). [30]

HN19[] The "party seeking summary judgment always bears the initial responsibility of informing the district court of the basis for its [1785] motion, and identifying those portions of 'the pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories, and admissions on [25] file, together with the affidavits, if any,' which it believes demonstrate an absence of a genuine issue of material fact." *Celotex, 477 [843] U.S. at 323. Rule 56 does not require that the moving party support its motion with affidavits or other similar materials which negate the opponent's claim; rather, it can meet its burden by showing the district court "that there is an absence of evidence to support the nonmoving party's case." Id. at 325.

HN20[] Once a motion for summary judgment is properly made, the burden then shifts to the nonmoving party, who "must set forth specific facts showing that there is a genuine issue for trial." Liberty Lobby, 477 U.S. at 256 (citing Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(e)). HN21[] Because the District Court must determine "whether there is the need for a

[27] Medtronic's counterclaim would only be compulsory under Rule 13(a) if it "require[s] for its adjudication the presence of third parties of whom the court cannot acquire jurisdiction."

[28] Rule 19 only mandates joinder of parties who are "subject to service of process and whose joinder will not deprive the court of jurisdiction over the subject matter of the action." Fed. R. Civ. P. 19(a). Since Telectronics Pty. Ltd. is an Australian corporation, it is quite possible that it falls outside the definition of an indispensable party under Rule 19. (Medtronic has unsuccessfully attempted to serve process on Telectronics Pty. Ltd. Answer para. 69.) For a discussion of the ability of American courts to exercise subject matter jurisdiction in antitrust cases involving foreign parties, see Note, Economic Rationality and the Extraterritorial Application of United States Law in Private Antitrust Litigation, 9 Cardozo L. Rev. 1401, 1404-10 (1988).

[29] See also Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc., 477 U.S. 242, 247, 91 L. Ed. 2d 202, 106 S. Ct. 2505 (1986); Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 585-86, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538, 106 S. Ct. 1348 (1986); Law Firm of Daniel P. Foster, P.C. v. Turner Broadcasting System, 844 F.2d 955, slip op. at 6662-63 (2d Cir. 1988).

[30] See also Heyman v. Commerce & Indus. Ins. Co., 524 F.2d 1317, 1319-20 (2d Cir. 1975); Cali v. Eastern Airlines, Inc., 442 F.2d 65, 71 (2d Cir. 1971).

trial -- whether, in other words, there are any genuine factual issues that properly can be resolved only by a finder of fact because they may reasonably be resolved in favor of either party," Id. at 250, -- the nonmoving party must produce, at the summary judgment stage, "sufficient evidence favoring the nonmoving party for a jury to return a verdict for that party." Id. at 249 "If the evidence is merely colorable . . . [26] or is not significantly probative . . . summary judgment may be granted." Id. at 249-50 (citations omitted).

Medtronic's motion for summary judgment is mainly founded on the claim that Telectronics' Clayton Act section 7 claim is barred by the statute of limitations contained in 15 U.S.C. § 15b. Relying heavily on a case decided in 1969 in the District of Minnesota which held that a private litigant does not have standing to bring an action under section 7 of the Clayton Act, Dairy Foods, Inc. v. Farmers Co-operative Creamery, 298 F. Supp. 774 (D. Minn. 1969), Medtronic argues that Telectronics' cause of action arose at the time the patents in question were acquired. [31] [27] Since the last patent in dispute was acquired on December 27, 1979, and the acquisition was made public on January 7, 1980, Medtronic contends that the limitations period ended on January 7, 1984 at the latest. This Court finds this argument unconvincing. [32]

Statutes of limitation are not designed to trigger a game which, if won by the defendant, allows a party to circumvent the law by arguing that a cause of action arose earlier than it actually did. Rather,

> HN22[] statutes of limitation, like the equitable doctrine of laches, in their conclusive effects are designed to promote justice by preventing surprises through the revival of claims that have been allowed to slumber until evidence has been lost, memories have faded, and witnesses have disappeared. The theory is that even if one has a just claim it is unjust not to put the adversary on notice to defend within the period of limitation and that right to be free of stale claims comes to prevail over the right to prosecute them.

Order of Railroad Telegraphers v. Railway Express Agency, 321 U.S. 342, 348-49, 88 L. Ed. 788, 64 S. Ct. 582 (1944). HN23[] While the statute of limitations for antitrust claims is [28] uniform, the event which gives rise to a claim under those laws is not. "Generally, a cause of action accrues and the statute begins to run when a defendant commits an act that injures a plaintiff's business." Zenith Radio Corp. v. Hazeltine Research, Inc., 401 U.S. 321, 338, 28 L. Ed. 2d 77, 91 S. Ct. 795 (1971). [33] In the antitrust context, "each [*844] time a plaintiff is injured by an act of the defendants a cause of action accrues to him [and] the statute of limitations runs from the commission of the act." Id. "Because antitrust injuries vary, there is no simple rule for determining when an antitrust cause of action arises." C. Hills, supra note 23, § 11.43, at 715.

In this case it is far from clear which act triggered Telectronics' claim under section 7; the acquisition of the disputed patents is but one possibility. It is equally possible that it was not until [29] Medtronic asserted the patents against Telectronics in the ITC case that Telectronics was adversely impacted by Medtronic's conduct. Because Telectronics [1786] would not be affected by Medtronic's acquisition of the patents until Medtronic attempted to assert them against Telectronics, its injury would probably be too speculative to confer standing until that time. [34]

---

[31] Medtronic's reliance is based on dicta in the opinion stating that if the court had reached the opposite conclusion (i.e. that a private action could be brought under § 7), "it would seem that the cause of action would arise at the time of the merger or acquisition." Dairy Foods, 298 F. Supp. at 777. Dairy Foods was not decided on statute of limitations grounds, and even if it had been, the point in time at which a cause of action arises under the antitrust laws varies greatly from case to case.

[32] Similarly, Honorable Kenneth L. Ryskamp, District Judge of the Southern District of Florida, found this argument unconvincing when Medtronic made an almost identical motion in a case quite similar to the one before this Court. Cordis Corp. v. Medtronic, Inc., No. 84-1239-CIV (S.D. Fla. Nov. 20, 1986).

[33] Cf. Twin City Sportservice, Inc. v. Charles O. Finley & Co., 512 F.2d 1264, 1270 (9th Cir. 1975), cert. denied, 459 U.S. 1009, 74 L. Ed. 2d 400, 103 S. Ct. 364 (1982); Akron Presform Mold Co. v. McNeil Corp., 496 F.2d 230, 233 (6th Cir.), cert. denied, 419 U.S. 997, 42 L. Ed. 2d 270, 95 S. Ct. 310 (1974); C. Hills, supra note 23, § 11.43, at 715; L. Sullivan, supra, at 775-76.

[34] The discussion in Zenith lends support to the argument that the cause of action did not arise until commencement of the ITC suit:

[30] HN25[] Summary judgment is only appropriate when "'there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and . . . the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law.'" Celotex, 477 U.S. 317, 106 S. Ct. 2548, 2552, 91 L. Ed. 2d 265 (1986) (quoting Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(c)). The accrual date for this cause of action is a factual dispute; thus summary judgment would be inappropriate at this juncture, and this issue is best reserved for resolution at trial.

Medtronic's second justification for its motion for summary judgment is based on its contention that the Greatbatch ('707), Funke ('355), and Adams ('116) patents were acquired from individual inventors and therefore their acquisition is not subject to section 7. [35] [31] Until its amendment in 1980, section 7 of the Clayton Act did not apply to assets [36] acquired from "individuals, partnerships, unincorporated associations or other unincorporated business entities." H.R. Rep. No. 871, 96th Cong., 2d Sess. 2, reprinted in 1980 U.S. Code Cong. & Admin. News 2732, 2732. Section 7 applies to acquisitions from noncorporate entities (including individuals) made after September 12, 1980. 15 U.S.C. § 18 (1982).

The Greatbatch and Adams patents were both acquired prior to September 12, 1980. While it appears undisputed that the Adams patent was acquired from its individual inventor, there is a dispute as to the prior ownership of the Greatbatch patent. It seems that Greatbatch was employed by Wilson Greatbatch Ltd. at the time of invention, thus the patent may have been owned by the company. The Funke patent may have been partially owned by, and thus acquired from, a corporation -- Biotronik, Inc; furthermore it was acquired after the 1980 amendment became effective. Hence, summary judgment in favor of Medtronic is appropriate in regard to the Adams patent, but inappropriate as to the Greatbatch, Funke, and Berkovits patents.

V. TELECTRONICS' MOTION FOR RULE 11 SANCTIONS

Telectronics has brought a motion for Rule 11 sanctions in response to Medtronic's motion for summary judgment on [*845] the Clayton Act section 7 claim. Shortly before Medtronic filed this motion in this Court, it received an unfavorable decision on a virtually identical motion in the [32] Cordis case in the Southern District of Florida. Medtronic should have brought this decision to the attention of this Court and did not do so. [37] Decisions in the district court in Florida are not controlling in this Court, so Medtronic's behavior was not a violation of the letter of the Code of Professional Responsibility, but it is a clear violation of its spirit. Repetition of such dubious behavior is likely to result in the imposition of sanctions by this Court. Nevertheless, because it is not "'patently clear that

---

> If a plaintiff feels the adverse impact of an antitrust conspiracy on a particular date, a cause of action immediately accrues to him to recover all damages incurred by that date and all provable damages that will flow in the future from the acts of the conspirators on that date. . . . Even if injury and a cause of action have accrued as of a certain date, future damages that might arise from the conduct sued on are unrecoverable if the fact of their accrual is speculative or their amount and nature unprovable.
>
> HN24[] In antitrust and treble-damage actions, refusal to award future profits as too speculative is equivalent to holding that no cause of action has yet accrued for any but those damages already suffered. . . . The cause of action for future damages, if they ever occur, will accrue only on the date they are suffered . . . .
>
> Otherwise future damages that could not be proved within four years of the conduct from which they flowed would be forever incapable of recovery, contrary to . . . congressional purpose[s].

Zenith, 401 U.S. at 339-40 (citations omitted).

[35] There is no doubt that Medtronic acquired the '242 patent from a corporation.

[36] Patent acquisitions are within the scope of the antitrust laws. SCM Corp. v. Xerox Corp., 645 F.2d 1195, 1205 (2d Cir. 1981).

[37] Cf. Model Code of Professional Responsibility DR 7-106(B) (1970) ("In presenting a matter to a tribunal, a lawyer shall disclose: Legal authority in the controlling jurisdiction known to him to be directly adverse to the position of his client . . . ."); Model Code of Professional Responsibility EC-7-23 (1970). See generally, Hochberger, Ethics Opinion Sets Guideline for Disclosing Adverse Rulings, N.Y.L.J., Dec. 18, 1980, at 1, col. 2.

[Medtronic's motion] had absolutely no chance of success,'" Stern v. Leucadia Nat'l Corp., 844 F.2d 997, 1006 (2d Cir. 1988) (quoting Eastway Constr. Corp. v. City of New York, 762 F.2d 243, 254 (2d Cir. 1985)) (emphasis added), this Court will refrain from imposing Rule 11 sanctions at this time. [1787]

[33] VI. TELECTRONICS' MOTION FOR PARTIAL SUMMARY JUDGMENT ON THE '242 LICENSE ISSUE

The final motion before this Court is Telectronics' motion for partial summary judgment that the defense of a license with respect to U.S. Patent No. 3,595,242 (the " '242" patent) is res judicata. The existence of a license was considered and decided by the International Trade Commission in In re Certain Cardiac Pacemakers & Components Thereof, No. 337-TA-162, Order No. 52, (U.S.I.T.C. 1984). The issue currently before the Court is whether that ITC decision should be accorded preclusive effect.

HN26[] "The doctrines of res judicata (claim preclusion) and collateral estoppel (issue preclusion) 'relieve parties of the cost and vexation of multiple lawsuits, conserve judicial resources, and, by preventing inconsistent decisions, encourage reliance on adjudication.'" MGA, Inc. v. General Motors Corp., 827 F.2d 729, 732 (Fed. Cir. 1987) (quoting Allen v. McCurry, 449 U.S. 90, 94, 66 L. Ed. 2d 308, 101 S. Ct. 411 (1980)), cert. denied, 484 U.S. 1009, 108 S. Ct. 705, 98 L. Ed. 2d 656 (1988). Generally, claim preclusion "prevents the litigation of any ground that could have been advanced in the earlier suit in support of the claim . . . made there . . . ." [34] USM Corp. v. SPS Technologies, Inc., 694 F.2d 505, 508 (7th Cir. 1982) (emphasis added), cert. denied, 462 U.S. 1107, 77 L. Ed. 2d 1334, 103 S. Ct. 2455 (1983). Issue preclusion, however, operates only to preclude relitigation of issues actually litigated in a previous action. [38]

> HN27[] Collateral estoppel is appropriate only if: (1) the issue is identical to one decided in the first action; (2) the issue was actually litigated in the first action; (3) resolution of the issue was essential to a final judgment in the first action; and (4) plaintiff had a full and fair opportunity to litigate the issue in the first action.
> Collateral estoppel . . . precludes a [party] 'from asserting a claim that the [party] had previously litigated and lost . . . .'

A.B. Dick Co. v. Burroughs Corp., 713 F.2d 700, 702, 218 U.S.P.Q. (BNA) 965 (Fed. Cir. 1983) (quoting Parklane Hosiery Co. v. Shore, 439 U.S. 322, 329, 58 L. Ed. 2d 552, 99 S. Ct. 645 (1979)) (footnote omitted), cert. denied, 464 U.S. 1042, 79 L. Ed. 2d 171, 104 S. Ct. 707 (1984).

The ITC action was initiated by Medtronic in August 1983. There Medtronic sought relief under section 337 of the Tariff [35] Act of 1930, ch. 497, tit. III, § 337, 46 Stat. 703 (1930) (current version at 19 U.S.C. § 1337 (1982 & Supp. IV 1986)). The ITC, an administrative agency, has jurisdiction to determine whether the defendant in an action before it has engaged in "unfair methods of competition and unfair acts in [*846] the importation of articles into the United States, or in their sale by the owner, importer, consignee, or agent of either, the effect . . . of which is to destroy or substantially injure an industry . . . in the United States." 19 U.S.C. § 1337(a). [39]

Patent infringement and importation of products manufactured by unauthorized use of a patented process or component parts are unfair acts or methods of competition under section 337. Thus defenses to such charges include noninfringement, [40] invalidity, and unenforceability of the patent. [41] Because the federal courts have exclusive jurisdiction over patent claims, 28 U.S.C. § 1338(a) (1982), the ITC may consider [36] issues of patent

---

[38] See generally Young Engineers, Inc. v. USITC, 721 F.2d 1305, 1314-15, 2 Fed. Cir. (T) 9, 219 U.S.P.Q. (BNA) 1142 (Fed. Cir. 1983) (contrasting issue preclusion and claim preclusion).

[39] For further discussion of the ITC's jurisdiction see Kaye, Lupo, & Lipnian, The Jurisdictional Paradigm Between the United States International Trade Commission and the Federal District Courts, 42 J. Pat. Off. Soc'y 118 (1982).

[40] Unlike invalidity and unenforceability, noninfringement is not a defense based on the validity of a patent. Rather, it is a defense based on a contractual right to use the patent, or on defendant's lack of use of the patent.

[41] See Massachusetts Inst. of Technology v. AB Fortia, 774 F.2d 1104, 1108, 227 U.S.P.Q. (BNA) 428 (Fed. Cir. 1985).

validity only insofar as they impact its decision on unfair competition claims. [42] [37] This does not mean, however, that the federal courts have exclusive jurisdiction over all questions which in some way concern a patent. [43] Of concern in this motion is the effect of the ITC's determination as regards [1788] the existence of a license under a patent; this determination was not one of the validity of a patent, but of the existence of a contract. Tribunals other than the federal courts have the authority to decide matters involving contracts relating to patents. [44]

Because the ITC decision was on a matter within its jurisdiction (the existence of a license is a defense to a claim of unfair competition), there is no jurisdiction-based reason why the ITC determination should not be accorded issue-preclusive effect. [45] "The jurisdictional bar to res judicata treatment of ITC patent validity determinations simply does not apply to other decisions by the ITC." Union Mfg., 763 F.2d at 45. Moreover, there is no reason why [*847] the ITC's determination should [38] not be accorded issue-preclusive effect simply because it was made by an administrative agency. HN28[] "When an administrative agency is acting in a judicial capacity and resolves disputed issues of fact properly before it which the parties have had an adequate opportunity to litigate, the courts have not hesitated to apply res judicata to enforce repose." United States v. Utah Constr. & Mining Co., 384 U.S. 394, 422, 16 L. Ed. 2d 642, 86 S. Ct. 1545 (1966).

[39] Medtronic also contends, again without offering any evidence to controvert what seems quite apparent, that there was no final judgment in this matter. The issue of a license under the '242 patent was decided by the ITC on a motion for summary determination. The ITC's adjudicative procedures are set forth in 19 C.F.R. §§ 210.1-210.71 (1987); generally, they bear a striking resemblance to the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. HN29[] Summary determination is virtually identical to summary judgment in the federal courts. "Any party may move with any necessary supporting affidavits for a summary determination in his favor upon all or any part of the issues to be determined in the investigation." 19 C.F.R. § 210.50(a). "When a motion for summary determination is made and

---

[42] See S. Rep. No. 93-1298, reprinted in, 1974 U.S. Code Cong. & Admin. News 7186, 7329. "Patent validity determinations of the ITC are properly not accorded res judicata effect because the ITC has no jurisdiction to determine patent validity except to the limited extent necessary to decide a case otherwise properly before it." Union Mfg. Co. v. Han Baek Trading Co., 763 F.2d 42, 45 (2d Cir. 1985).

"In short, the Congress has created two separate jurisdictions: One with jurisdiction over 'unfair acts' in connection with the importation of articles from abroad (the Commission), and the other with jurisdiction over the validity of domestic patents (the district court)." Ashlow Ltd. v. Morgan Constr. Co., 672 F.2d 371, 375 (4th Cir. 1982).

[43] See New Marshall Engine Co. v. Marshall Engine Co., 223 U.S. 473, 478, 56 L. Ed. 513, 32 S. Ct. 238 (1912).

[44] See New Marshall, 223 U.S. at 478. The heavy reliance Medtronic placed on Tandon Corp. v. USITC, 831 F.2d 1017, 4 U.S.P.Q.2D (BNA) 1283 (Fed. Cir. 1987), to counter this point is misplaced. Tandon dealt with a decision of noninfringement based on technological considerations. Moreover, the Tandon Court noted that "it was the intent of Congress that greater weight and finality be accorded to the Commission's findings as compared with those of a trial court." Id. at 1019. Hence it hardly seems that the Federal Circuit intended to imply that ITC decisions could never be accorded res judicata effect.

[45] Although Medtronic claims that the ITC eventually dismissed the case on jurisdictional grounds, it has presented no evidence to substantiate that claim. As the nonmoving party in this motion, Medtronic must present evidence of this assertion if it is to demonstrate that there is a genuine issue of fact present. Cf. Liberty Lobby, 477 U.S. at 256. In fact, the Federal Circuit, when rendering a decision on appeal of this court's denial of Medtronic's motion to disqualify counsel, recognized the existence of Telectronics' license and in no way indicated that this determination was in doubt in any way. See Telectronics Proprietary, Ltd. v. Medtronic, Inc., 836 F.2d 1332, 1334, 1335, 5 U.S.P.Q.2D (BNA) 1424 (Fed. Cir. 1988) ("Medtronic is the current owner of the '242 patent; Telectronics is a current licensee.").

Medtronic also claims that Telectronics has already lost on a similar contention of res judicata when its motion to disqualify counsel was decided. Medtronic misreads both the statements of this Court and those of the Federal Circuit. This Court did not reach the issue of res judicata in the decision on that motion. See Telectronics Proprietary Ltd. v. Medtronic, Inc., 690 F. Supp. 170 (S.D.N.Y. 1987); Telectronics, 836 F.2d at 1334.

supported as provided in this rule, a party opposing the motion may not rest upon mere allegations or denials in his pleading; his response . . . must set forth specific facts showing that there is a genuine issue of fact for hearing." 19 C.F.R. § 210.50(c). [46] Medtronic had ample opportunity to substantiate its position during this proceeding and did not succeed in doing so. [47] The fact that Medtronic later voluntarily dismissed [40] its other claims in order to bring an appeal which it later aborted, is no reason to consider the ITC's decision anything less than final.

In ITC proceedings, an administrative law judge ("ALJ") makes an initial determination [48] which can, but need not, be reviewed by the full Commission. If the Commission does not order review of the initial determination within thirty days, it becomes the final determination of the Commission. [49] The President then has the opportunity to disapprove the decision for policy reasons. In this case, the Commission denied review of the ALJ's determination, and it became a final determination. [50]

Because Medtronic has failed to demonstrate that there is any genuine [41] issue of [1789] material fact as to the issue-preclusive effect of the ITC's finding of a license under the '242 patent, Medtronic is collaterally estopped from relitigating that issue.

VII. CONCLUSION AND SUMMARY

For the foregoing reasons:

1. Telectronics' motion under Rule 12(b) (6) to dismiss Medtronic's first counterclaim (Sherman Act §§ 1, 2) is granted and Medtronic is granted leave to replead within 20 days;

2. Telectronics' motion under Rule 12(b) (6) to dismiss Medtronic's third counterclaim (RICO) is granted and Medtronic is granted leave to replead within 20 days;

3. Telectronics' motion under Rule 12(f) to strike Medtronic's ninth affirmative defense (unclean hands) is granted insofar as it refers to Telectronics' antitrust claims, and denied insofar as it refers to Telectronic's patent claim;

4. Telectronics' motion under Rule 12(f) to strike Medtronic's twelfth affirmative defense (laches, fraud, estoppel, and unclean hands) is granted;

5. Telectronics' motion under Rule 12(f) to strike Medtronic's fourteenth affirmative [*848] defense (failure to join an indispensable party) is denied;

6. Medtronic's motion for summary judgment on Telectronics' Clayton Act § 7 claim [42] is granted on the matter of the Adams ('116) patent, and denied as to the Greatbatch ('707), Funke ('355), and Berkovits ('242) patents;

7. Telectronics' motion for sanctions pursuant to Rule 11 is denied.

8. Telectronics' motion for partial summary judgment that the defense of a license under the '242 patent is res judicata or issue precluded is granted.

---

[46] Compare Fed. R. Civ. P. 56 (1982).

[47] See In re Certain Cardiac Pacemakers & Components Thereof, No. 337-TA-162, Order No. 52, slip op. at 1-2 (U.S.I.T.C. May 24, 1984).

[48] HN30[] "An order of summary determination [constitutes] an initial determination of the administrative law judge . . . ." 19 C.F.R. § 210.50(f).

[49] See 19 C.F.R. § 210.53(h).

[50] Final determinations by the ITC determination may be appealed to the Federal Circuit under 19 C.F.R. § 210.71.

SO ORDERED.

Byrd v. Salvation Army

United States District Court for the Middle District of Florida, Orlando Division

May 20, 1988; May 20, 1988, Filed

Case No. 87-375-Civ-Orl-19

Reporter

1988 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 5576 *; 1988 WL 63346

Andrew Byrd, Plaintiff, v. The Salvation Army, Major William G. Collins, and Donald L. Powell, Defendants conspiracy, exemption, intracorporate, employees, conspire

Core Terms

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > General Overview

HN1[] Regulated Practices, Private Actions

The Sherman Act does not purport to cover a conspiracy which consists merely in the fact that the officers of the single defendant corporation did their day to day jobs in formulating and carrying out its managerial policy.

Torts > ... > Concerted Action > Civil Conspiracy > General Overview

HN2[] Concerted Action, Civil Conspiracy

A conspiracy claim may be asserted against employees of a corporation when they have a "personal stake" which motivates their actions. This exception has been applied where a plaintiff's fellow employees engaged in continual racial harassment of the plaintiff.

Counsel: [*1] RICK KOLODINSKY, ESQUIRE, New Smyrna Beach, Fl., for plaintiffs

HARRISON C. THOMSPON, JR. ESQUIRE, WILLIAM E. SIZEMORE, ESQUIRE, Thompson, Sizemore & Gonzalez, Tampa, Fl. for defendant

Opinion by: FAWSETT

Opinion

ORDER

PATRICIA C. FAWSETT, UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE

This case is before the Court upon the Motion of Defendants Major William G. Collins and Donald L. Powell for Partial Summary Judgment, filed April 1, 1988 (Doc. No. 16), the supporting Memorandum of Law (Doc. No. 17), the Notice of Filing Depositions (Doc. No. 18), the Depositions of Andrew Byrd (Doc. No. 19), Major William G. Collins (Doc. No. 20), and Donald L. Powell (Doc. No. 21), and the Plaintiff's Opposition, filed April 14, 1988 (Doc. No. 22).

In this Motion, Defendant's Collins and Powell request that the Court grant summary judgment in their favor on Count III of the Complaint, which asserts a cause of action under Title 42, United States Code, Section 1985(3) for conspiracy to deprive the Plaintiff of his civil rights. The primary ground urged in the Motion is that Collins and Powell are both employees and agents of a single corporation, Defendant Salvation Army, and so cannot conspire together. Movants cite the rule that [*2] a corporation cannot conspire with itself.

There is a sharp dispute among the circuits as to whether employees of a single corporation can conspire together to deprive an individual of his civil rights in violation of section 1985(3). The rule that no intracorporate conspiracy is possible proceeds from decisions under the antitrust laws, particularly the ruling of the Fifth Circuit in Nelson Radio & Supply Co. v. Motorola, Inc., 200 F.2d 911 (5th Cir. 1952), cert. denied, 345 U.S. 925 (1953). The Motorola Court held that a corporation's employees and officers cannot conspire together for the purposes of Section 1 of the Sherman Act, which prohibits contracts, combinations and conspiracies in restraint of trade. See also Copperweld Corp. v. Independence Tube Corp., 467 U.S. 752 (1984). The rationale of Motorola is that the acts of the agents of a corporation are acts of the corporation. Accordingly, since a corporation cannot conspire with itself, agents of a corporation cannot be held liable under a conspiracy statute when they act within the scope of their authority. 200 F.2d at 914. The court stated: "HN1[] The [Sherman] Act does not purport to cover a conspiracy [*3] which consists merely in the fact that the officers of the single defendant corporation did their day to day jobs in formulating and carrying out its managerial policy." Id.

This reasoning has been applied to section 1985(3) claims. E.g., Buschi v. Kirven, 775 F.2d 1240, 1251 (4th Cir. 1985); Girard v. 94th Street & Fifth Avenue Corp., 530 F.2d 66, 70-72 (2nd Cir.), cert. denied, 425 U.S. 974 (1976); Dombrowski v. Dowling, 459 F.2d 190, 196 (7th Cir. 1972). Girard is typical of these decisions. In that case, the defendants were a corporation, which owned and managed a cooperative apartment building, and the officers and directors of that corporation. The plaintiff alleged a conspiracy to deprive her of her civil rights in connection with the corporation's refusal to approve the assignment to plaintiff of a lease to an apartment. The plaintiff asserted that the defendants had engaged in a variety of overt acts in support of the conspiracy including malicious harassment. 530 F.2d at 70. However, the court found that the plaintiff did not allege that the individual defendants were acting other than as officers and directors or that they were motivated by any independent [*4] personal stake in achieving the corporation's objective. The court therefore dismissed the conspiracy claim. Id. at 70.

This doctrine has a major exception. Girard itself indicated that HN2[] a conspiracy claim may be asserted against employees of a corporation when they have a "personal stake" which motivates their actions. This exception has been applied where a plaintiff's fellow employees engaged in continual racial harassment of the plaintiff. Coley v. M & M Mars, Inc., 461 F.Supp. 1073, 1076 (M.D.Ga. 1978); Rackin v. University of Pennsylvania, 386 F.Supp. 992 (E.D.Pa. 1974); cf. Dombrowski, 459 F.2d at 196 ("[I]f the challenged conduct is essentially a single act of discrimination by a single business entity, the fact that two or more agents participated in the decision or in the act itself will normally not constitute the conspiracy contemplated by this statute."). The exception was concisely described in Coley as follows:

[A]llegations of continual discriminatory harassment at the hands of individual employees are sufficient to survive dismissal because, in the backdrop of racial discrimination, such allegations express the likelihood that these employees [*5] were motivated by a personal racial bias and were not acting out of concern for the best interests of their employer.

461 F.Supp. at 1076.

Furthermore, some courts have rejected entirely or construed very narrowly the intracorporate conspiracy exemption as applied to section 1985(3). E.g., Stathos v. Bowden, 728 F.2d 15, 20-21 (1st Cir. 1984); cf. Novotny v. Great American Federal Savings & Loan Association, 584 F.2d 1235 (3rd Cir. 1978) (en banc), vacated on other grounds, 442 U.S. 366 (1979). These courts reason that the intracorporate conspiracy exemption exists under antitrust law because section 1 of the Sherman Act is concerned only with the evils that occur when business enterprises join to make a decision. [1] Indeed, the actual joining together of individuals to make and effect decisions is socially useful in that joint effort is often required to accomplish a legitimate business goal. Stathos, 728 F.2d at 21. However, "Where 'equal protection' is at issue, . . . one cannot readily distinguish in terms of harm between the individual conduct of one enterprise and the joint conduct of several." Id. Accordingly, the

[*6] intracorporate exemption, if valid at all, is narrowly construed to apply only to "the ministerial acts of several executives needed to carry out a single discretionary decision."

The Eleventh Circuit has not yet expressed an opinion on the intracorporate conspiracy exemption under section 1985(3). District courts Within this circuit disagree as to the applicability of the exemption. Compare Jacobs v. Board of Regents, 473 F.Supp. 663, 670 (S.D.Fla. 1979) (exemption does not apply to 1985(3)) with Baker v. MacDonald's Corp., 45 FEP Cases 1505, 1510 (S.D.Fla. 1987) (exemption applies). However, in United States v. Hartley, 678 F.2d 961, 970-972 (11th Cir. 1982), cert. denied, 459 U.S. 1170 (1983), the court refused to apply the intracorporate conspiracy exemption to criminal conspiracy charges under 18 U.S.C. section 371. The court noted the peculiar nature of antitrust law and cited with approval the decision of the Third Circuit in Novotny.

Whether or not the Eleventh Circuit Would apply the intracorporate conspiracy exemption to section 1985(3) need not be decided at this time. The policy considerations involved indicate that even if the exemption is to be applied [*7] under section 1985(3), it should be narrowly construed and does not apply to a series of discriminatory actions occurring in the workplace. The Plaintiff in this case has alleged a series of discriminatory actions, taken because of personal bias and not out of concern for the employer, eventually resulting in Plaintiff's termination. The depositions filed in this case indicate that there is sufficient evidentiary support for this allegation to create an issue of material fact.

Collins and Powell also assert that the Plaintiff has not alleged a cognizable right of which he has been deprived by the conspiracy in violation of section 1985(3). See Griffin v. v. Breckinridge, 403 U.S. 88, 102-103 (1971). While Defendants, objections as to the Plaintiff's claim of right under Title VII and the Fourteenth Amendment appear to be well taken, the Court will not reach such ground at this time because the Plaintiff has come forward with sufficient evidence to create an issue of material fact with respect to 42 U.S.C. section 1981. Defendants have not asserted any ground sufficient to grant summary judgment insofar as Plaintiff relies on this statute to support his section 1985(3) claim.

Accordingly, [*8] the Motion for Summary Judgment is DENIED.

DONE AND ORDERED in Chambers at Orlando, Florida, this 20th day of May, 1988.

End of Document

[1] Applying section 1 of the Sherman Act to activities of a single firm would furthermore enable plaintiffs to circumvent the more difficult standards of proof under section 2, which prohibits monopolization. Motorola, 200 F.2d at 914.

Sorisio v. Lenox, Inc.

United States District Court for the District of Connecticut

May 26, 1988, Decided

Civil No. B-84-634(EBB)

Reporter

701 F. Supp. 950 *; 1988 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 13567 ; 1989-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P68,503

ROBERT SORISIO, d/b/a CONNECTICUT HANDBAG AND LUGGAGE COMPANY v. LENOX, INC., Successor to Hartmann Luggage Company

Core Terms

dealer, franchise, termination, Handbag, luggage, complaints, discount, prices, sales representative, manufacturer, unfair, summary judgment, argues, retail, alleges, merchandise, adherence, coercion, authorized dealer, competitors, plaintiff's claim, distributors, conspiracy, prescribed, practices, lines, suggested retail price, marketing plan, franchisee, products

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

HN1[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

See the Sherman Antitrust Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 (1982).

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Horizontal Refusals to Deal > General Overview

Business & Corporate Law > Distributorships & Franchises > Causes of Action > Restraints of Trade

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > Resale Price Maintenance

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Business & Corporate Law > Distributorships & Franchises > Causes of Action > General Overview

HN2[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Horizontal Refusals to Deal

The essence of a claim under the Sherman Antitrust Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, is concerted action. An agreement between a manufacturer and its distributors to control resale prices of the manufacturer's products (vertical resale price maintenance) is per se illegal. By way of contrast, a manufacturer has a right to deal, or refuse to deal, with whomever it likes, as long as it does so independently. The manufacturer can announce its resale prices in advance and refuse to deal with those who fail to comply. An essential element of an antitrust claim, therefore, is evidence of a combination.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

HN3[] Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

The Connecticut Antitrust Act, Conn. Gen. Stat. §§ 35-24 et seq., incorporates, in modified form, the Sherman Antitrust Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 et seq. Although not dispositive, interpretations of the federal act nevertheless are persuasive in construing the state act.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Opposing Materials > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Motions for Summary Judgment > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Genuine Disputes

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Materiality of Facts

HN4[] Summary Judgment, Opposing Materials

Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(c) provides that a court shall grant a motion for summary judgment if it determines that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the moving party is entitled to a judgment as a matter of law. The mere existence of some alleged factual dispute between the parties will not defeat an otherwise properly supported motion for summary judgment. The dispute must involve a material fact, one which affects the outcome of the suit under the governing substantive law. Moreover, the dispute must be genuine, one in which the evidence is such that a reasonable jury could return a verdict for the nonmoving party.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Genuine Disputes

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > Movant Persuasion & Proof

HN5[] Entitlement as Matter of Law, Genuine Disputes

The party seeking summary judgment bears the initial burden of demonstrating an absence of a genuine issue of material fact. This may consist simply of pointing out that the plaintiff has failed to present any evidence to establish a necessary element of the cause of action. It then is incumbent upon the nonmoving party to show more than a metaphysical doubt as to the existence of material facts. In considering the motion, the court's responsibility is not to resolve disputed issues of fact but to assess whether there are any factual issues to be tried, while resolving ambiguities and drawing reasonable inferences against the moving party.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

HN6[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Antitrust law limits the range of permissible inferences from ambiguous evidence in a case under 15 U.S.C.S. § 1. Thus, conduct as consistent with permissible competition as with illegal conspiracy does not, standing alone, support an inference of antitrust conspiracy. To survive a motion for summary judgment a plaintiff seeking damages for a violation of 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 must present evidence that tends to exclude the possibility that the alleged conspirators acted independently.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Pleading & Practice > Pleadings > General Overview

HN7[] Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

Antitrust pleading is governed by the generally liberal philosophy of Fed. R. Civ. P. 8. There are certain acts, such as price fixing that are presumptively deemed to violate the antitrust laws. Where such per se violation is charged, with resultant harm to the plaintiff alleged, the pleading suffices.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

HN8[] Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

An unlawful combination is not just such as arises from a price maintenance agreement, express or implied; such a combination is also organized if the producer secures adherence to his suggested retail prices by means which go beyond his mere declination to sell to a customer who will not observe his announced policy.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

Business & Corporate Law > Distributorships & Franchises > Termination > General Overview

HN9[] Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

A distributor is free to acquiesce in the manufacturer's demand in order to avoid termination.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Opposing Materials > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Genuine Disputes

HN10[] Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

For a plaintiff to avoid summary judgment on a price-fixing claim he must advance sufficient evidence to raise a genuine dispute as to whether defendant engaged in coercive activity to force adherence to its suggested retail price and plaintiff and other retailers actually adhered to that price.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

HN11[] Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

Pricing persuasion, pressure, even argument, is permissible conduct.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

Business & Corporate Law > Distributorships & Franchises > Termination > General Overview

Evidence > Inferences & Presumptions > Inferences

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

HN12[] Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

Plaintiff must offer evidence which tends to exclude the possibility that the manufacturer and the nonterminated distributors were acting independently. Something more than evidence of complaints is needed. A mere showing of close relations or frequent meetings between the alleged conspirators will not sustain a plaintiff's burden absent evidence which would permit the inference that these close ties led to an illegal agreement. Nor does a manufacturer's mere receipt of complaints from its wholesalers or agents who compete with the plaintiff, or its consultation with such other competing wholesalers, standing alone, support a finding of conspiracy with them. Even where a termination follows the receipt of complaints from wholesalers or agents, there is no basis for inferring the existence of concerted action, absent some other evidence of a tacit understanding or agreement with them.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

HN13[] Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

In a case where the alleged price-fixing scheme is short-term and relatively simple in operation, the court must as a practical matter accept that the best proof available most often will only tend to show the existence of an informal, perhaps even tacit, rather than explicit, agreement.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

HN14[] Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

Absent evidence of some price-fixing agreement, actual compliance with suggested retail prices is crucial to an inference of a combination.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

HN15[] Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

The mere fact that a business reason advanced by a defendant for its cut-off of a customer is undermined does not, by itself, justify the inference that the conduct was therefore the result of a conspiracy. Even if a manufacturer or supplier, acting independently, gave a false or inaccurate reason for its action, whether because of a desire to avoid controversy or some other consideration, this would not violate any legal obligation to the customer, absent proof of a conspiracy or breach of contract.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

HN16[] Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

There must be direct or circumstantial evidence that reasonably tends to prove that the manufacturer and others had a conscious commitment to a common scheme designed to achieve an unlawful objective.

Business & Corporate Law > Distributorships & Franchises > Franchise Relationships > Elements

Business & Corporate Law > Distributorships & Franchises > Termination > General Overview

Business & Corporate Law > Distributorships & Franchises > Termination > Good Cause

Business & Corporate Law > Distributorships & Franchises > Termination > Notice Requirements

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Types of Commercial Transactions > Sales of Goods > Termination Notice

Governments > Legislation > Types of Statutes

HN17[] Franchise Relationships, Elements

A franchise relationship, as defined by the Connecticut Franchise Act, Conn. Gen. Stat. 42-133f(a) may not be terminated except upon good cause shown and upon sixty days written notice.

Governments > Legislation > Types of Statutes

HN18[] Legislation, Types of Statutes

See Conn. Gen. Stat. § 42-133e(b).

Business & Corporate Law > Distributorships & Franchises > Franchise Relationships > Elements

Governments > Legislation > Types of Statutes

Business & Corporate Law > Distributorships & Franchises > Franchise Relationships > General Overview

HN19[] Franchise Relationships, Elements

There are several factors that are relevant to the determination that a party operated under a marketing plan or system prescribed in substantial part by another party for purposes of Conn. Gen. Stat. § 42-133e(b). These include control over hours and days of operation, advertising, financial support, auditing of books and inspection of premises, control over lighting, employee uniforms, prices, trading stamps and hiring, sales quotas, and management training. There is no precise formula as to how many of such factors must exist, in the aggregate, before the control exercised by a manufacturer rises to a marketing plan or system prescribed in substantial part by a franchisor.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > State Regulation > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Consumer Protection > General Overview

HN20[] Trade Practices & Unfair Competition, State Regulation

See Conn. Gen. Stat. § 42-110b(a).

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > State Regulation > General Overview

Governments > Courts > Common Law

Antitrust & Trade Law > Consumer Protection > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Consumer Protection > Deceptive & Unfair Trade Practices > State Regulation

HN21[] Trade Practices & Unfair Competition, State Regulation

Under the Connecticut Unfair Trade Practices Act, Conn. Gen. Stat. § 42-110b(a), plaintiff must only allege that defendant's conduct was unfair. Unfairness is defined as: (1) whether the practice, without necessarily having been previously considered unlawful, offends public policy as it has been established by statutes, the common law, or otherwise -- whether, in other words, it is within at least the penumbra of some common law, statutory or other established concept of unfairness; (2) whether it is immoral, unethical, oppressive or unscrupulous; (3) whether it causes substantial injury to consumers, competitors, or other businessmen.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > State Regulation > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > Consumer Protection > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > State Regulation > General Overview

HN22[] State Regulation, Claims

A claim under the Connecticut Unfair Trade Practices Act, Conn. Gen. Stat. § 42-110a et seq., must be pleaded with particularity to allow evaluation of the legal theory upon which the claim lies. A practice may be unfair even if all three criteria for the definition of unfairness are not met.

Counsel: [1] Beverly Stauffer Knapp, L. Douglas Shrader, Zeldes, Needle & Cooper, Bridgeport, Connecticut

William R. Murphy, Sara Church Dinkler, Tyler, Cooper & Alcorn, New Haven, Connecticut

Judges: Ellen Bree Burns, United States District Judge.

Opinion by: BURNS

Opinion

[*952] RULING ON MOTION FOR SUMMARY JUDGMENT

ELLEN BREE BURNS, UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE

The plaintiff, Robert Sorisio, owner and operator of the Connecticut Handbag and Luggage Company ["Connecticut Handbag"], brought this suit against the defendant, Lenox, Inc., seeking injunctive and monetary relief. Sorisio alleges that the defendant engaged in an unlawful price fixing scheme, and that it wrongfully terminated Connecticut Handbag as an authorized dealer for Hartmann Luggage. The plaintiff alleges violations of federal and state antitrust laws, 15 U.S.C. § 1, Conn. Gen. Stat. §§ 35-24 et seq. (Count One), the Connecticut Franchise Act, Conn. Gen. Stat. §§ 42-133e et seq. (Count Two), and the Connecticut Unfair Trade Practices Act, Conn. Gen. Stat. §§ 42-110a et seq. (Count Three). Jurisdiction in this court is under 28 U.S.C. § 1331. The defendant has moved for summary judgment on all three claims. For the following reasons, the defendant's motion is granted.

FACTS

Plaintiff owns and operates two [2] retail stores in Bridgeport and Norwalk, Connecticut ["Connecticut Handbag"], which offer for sale a variety of luggage, business cases, handbags, and accessories. Third Amended Complaint para. 6 ["Complaint"]. These products vary in price and quality from moderately priced brands to the most expensive and prestigious brands in the retail luggage industry. Id. Plaintiff aggressively markets this merchandise, purportedly by offering discounts of between twenty and thirty percent off of the manufacturers' suggested retail prices. Id. para. 7. Defendant, Lenox, Inc., the surviving entity in a merger with Hartmann Luggage Company ["Hartmann Luggage"], manufactures and sells "luggage, business cases, and accessories of the highest grade and quality." Id. para. 8.

Plaintiff sought to become a Hartmann dealer. In response to his inquiry, the defendant conducted an inspection of plaintiff's properties and performed a credit check in April, 1982. Id. para. 13. Plaintiff alleges that he was approved as a dealer, and that he wrote his first order as an authorized Hartmann dealer in February, 1983. Id. para. 14.

Sorisio claims that he enjoyed great success in marketing Hartmann's [3] products, apparently at the expense of competing Hartmann dealers, who allegedly lost business when they refused to meet the prices at Connecticut Handbag. Id. para. 18. Plaintiff alleges that his competitors lodged complaints and demands with Hartmann Luggage seeking price stabilization. Id. para. 19. Plaintiff further alleges that Hartmann Luggage agreed with its retail dealers to fix the retail prices of its products in Connecticut. Id. para. 20. In the complaint, plaintiff claims that Hartmann's response to [*953] these complaints was two-fold. Allegedly, it implemented a discriminatory supply policy by refusing to provide Connecticut Handbag with its new luggage lines, id. paras. 21-23, and it then terminated Sorisio as an authorized dealer, id. paras. 24-25. In his Memorandum in Opposition to Defendant's Motion for Summary Judgment ["Opposition Memorandum"], the plaintiff claims that the defendant instituted several retaliatory measures. Plaintiff alleges that Hartmann Luggage coerced the plaintiff into complying with a price-fixing policy, that it refused to sell its new lines of luggage to the plaintiff, that it denied the plaintiff a sales representative after [4] June, 1983, and that it eventually terminated the plaintiff as an authorized dealer. Id. at 11-15.

DISCUSSION

A. Count One - Federal and State Antitrust Claims

HN1[] Section one of the Sherman Antitrust Act states that "every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, is declared to be illegal. . . ." 15 U.S.C. § 1 (1982). [1] HN2[] The essence of a § 1 claim is concerted action. Schwimmer v. Sony Corp. of America, 677 F.2d 946, 952 (2d Cir.), cert. denied, 459 U.S. 1007, 74 L. Ed. 2d 398, 103 S. Ct. 362 (1982). An agreement between a manufacturer and its distributors to control resale prices of the manufacturer's products (vertical resale price maintenance) is per se illegal under § 1 of the Sherman Act. Monsanto Co. v. Spray-Rite Service Corp., 465 U.S. 752, 761, 79 L. Ed. 2d 775, 104 S. Ct. 1464 (1984); Dr. Miles Medical Co. v. John D. Park & Sons Co., 220 U.S. 373, 404-09, 55 L. Ed. 502, 31 S. Ct. 376 (1911). By way of contrast, "[a] manufacturer . . . has a right to deal, or refuse to deal, with whomever it likes, as long as it does so independently . . . . The manufacturer can announce its resale prices in advance and refuse to deal with [5] those who fail to comply." Monsanto, supra, 465 U.S. at 761, relying on United States v. Colgate & Co., 250 U.S. 300, 307, 63 L. Ed. 992, 39 S. Ct. 465 (1919)). An essential element of an antitrust claim, therefore, is evidence of a combination.

HN4[] Rule 56(c) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure provides that a court shall grant a motion for summary judgment if it determines that "there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the moving party is entitled to a judgment as a matter of law." The mere existence of some alleged factual dispute between the parties will not [6] defeat an otherwise properly supported motion for summary judgment. Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc., 477 U.S. 242, 106 S. Ct. 2505, 2510, 91 L. Ed. 2d 202 (1986). The dispute must involve a material fact, one which affects the outcome of the suit under the governing substantive law. Id. Moreover, the dispute must be genuine, one in which the evidence is such that a reasonable jury could return a verdict for the nonmoving party. Id.

HN5[] The party seeking summary judgment bears the initial burden of demonstrating an absence of a genuine issue of material fact. "This may consist simply of pointing out that the plaintiff has failed to present any evidence to establish a necessary element of the cause of action." Apex Oil Co. v. DiMauro, 822 F.2d 246, 252 (2d Cir.), cert. denied, 484 U.S. 977, 108 S. Ct. 489, 98 L. Ed. 2d 487 (1987). It then is incumbent upon the nonmoving party to show more than a "metaphysical doubt" as to the existence of material facts. *Matsushita Electric Industrial Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 586, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538, 106 S. Ct. 1348 [954] (1986). "In considering the motion, the court's responsibility is not to resolve disputed issues of fact but to assess whether there are any factual issues to be tried, while resolving ambiguities [7] and drawing reasonable inferences against the moving party." W.A. Knight v. U.S. Fire Ins. Co., 804 F.2d 9, 11 (2d Cir. 1986), cert. denied, 480 U.S. 932, 107 S. Ct. 1570, 94 L. Ed. 2d 762 (1987).

> HN6[] But antitrust law limits the range of permissible inferences from ambiguous evidence in a § 1 case. Thus, in Monsanto Co. v. Spray-Rite Corp., 465 U.S. 752, 79 L. Ed. 2d 775, 104 S. Ct. 1464 (1984), we held bat conduct as consistent with permissible competition as with illegal conspiracy does not, standing alone, support an inference of antitrust conspiracy. To survive a motion for summary judgment . . . a plaintiff seeking damages for a violation of § 1 must present evidence "that tends to exclude the possibility" that the alleged conspirators acted independently.

Matsushita, supra, 475 U.S. at 588 (citations omitted).

1. Coercion

As the court understands the plaintiff's argument, he claims that he was coerced by Hartmann Luggage into offering his merchandise at a higher price, within an acceptable range of Hartmann's suggested retail prices. This combination, the plaintiff asserts, violates § 1 of the Sherman Act. The court concurs with the legal theory. See Albrecht v. Herald Co., 390 U.S. 145, 150 n.6, 19 L. Ed. 2d 998, 88 S. Ct. 869 (1968); United [8] States v. Parke,

---

[1] HN3[] The Connecticut Antitrust Act, Conn. Gen. Stat. §§ 35-24 et seq., incorporates, in modified form, the Sherman Antitrust Act. Shea v. First Federal Savings & Loan Ass'n. of New Haven, 184 Conn. 285, 303-04, 439 A.2d 997 (1981). Although not dispositive, interpretations of the federal act nevertheless are persuasive in construing the state act. Elida Inc. v. Harmor Realty Corp., 177 Conn. 218, 226, 413 A.2d 1226 (1979). The parties concur that the plaintiff has no independent antitrust claim by virtue of the state act, as a determination under the federal act will control. Motion for Summary Judgment at 10-11; Opposition Memorandum at 19 n.1.

Davis & Co., 362 U.S. 29, 43, 4 L. Ed. 2d 505, 80 S. Ct. 503 (1960); Yentsch v. Texaco, Inc., 630 F.2d 46, 52-53 (2d Cir. 1980). In the instant action, however, plaintiff's theory lacks factual support. [2]

[9] The thrust of plaintiff's argument is that, based on a threat of termination allegedly implicit in a pricing discussion held with defendant's regional vice president, Sorisio agreed to mark his Hartmann merchandise with a discount of twenty percent or less, rather than his customary thirty percent discount. He nevertheless adhered to the thirty percent discount policy, and he claims that in retaliation Hartmann Luggage refused to sell him its new line of luggage and denied him access to a sales representative.

In United States v. Parke, Davis & Co., 362 U.S. 29, 4 L. Ed. 2d 505, 80 S. Ct. 503 (1960), the Court held that,

> HN8[] an unlawful combination is not just such as arises from a price maintenance agreement, express or implied; such a combination is also organized if the producer secures adherence to his suggested retail prices by means which go beyond his mere declination to sell to a customer who will not observe his announced policy.

Id. at 43. Sorisio claims that such an unlawful combination occurred when he unwillingly complied with Hartmann's suggested prices. See Yentsch, supra, 630 F.2d at 52. Yet, the United States Supreme Court has held that "a HN9[] distributor is free to acquiesce in the [10] manufacturer's demand in order to avoid termination." Monsanto, supra, 465 U.S. at 761. The issue, therefore, is whether the plaintiff can offer evidence that his agreement was coerced. Mere reluctance to adhere to suggested [*955] retail prices, absent coercion, will not suffice.

> While evidence of exposition, persuasion, argument, or pressure alone is insufficient to establish coercion, threats of termination, as long as they secure adherence to the fixed price, have been deemed to trespass beyond the boundaries . . . thereby triggering a finding of illegal combination.

Yentsch, supra, 630 F.2d at 53. See also Bowen v. New York News, Inc., 522 F.2d 1242, 1254 (2d Cir. 1975) (manufacturer's threat of termination for noncompliance with resale prices constitutes active coercion, "whether made in combination with others or alone"), cert. denied, 425 U.S. 936, 48 L. Ed. 2d 177, 96 S. Ct. 1667 (1976). "For [HN10[] Sorisio] to avoid summary judgment on [his] price-fixing claim [he] must advance sufficient evidence to raise a genuine dispute as to whether defendant[] engaged in coercive activity to force adherence to its suggested retail price and plaintiff and other retailers actually adhered to that price. " Reborn [11] Enterprises, Inc. v. Fine Child, Inc., 590 F. Supp. 1423, 1439 (S.D.N.Y. 1984), aff'd, 754 F.2d 1072 (2d Cir. 1985).

As an initial matter, plaintiff offers no evidence, other than his own claim, that the discounting policy at Connecticut Handbag differed markedly from that of other Hartmann retailers. According to plaintiff, his discount rate of thirty percent exceeded the rates of twenty percent or less used by other Hartmann dealers. Opposition Memorandum at 28-29; Sorisio Dep. at 52. Plaintiff presented no permanent records to prove that he charged a thirty percent discounted price. Sorisio Dep. at 58-59. Sorisio claimed knowledge of others' pricing practices through prior work experience, a visit to another. retailers store, reading advertisements, and talks with sales representatives. Id. at 35-39. Plaintiff offers no documentary or testamentary evidence on this issue. Testimony from the defendant suggested that discount practices were not unusual among Hartmann dealers. [3] Sorisio conceded, in response to

---

[2] Defendant argues that plaintiff's theory of unlawful combination between Connecticut Handbag and Hartmann Luggage is inappropriate because it was not pleaded in the complaint. Reply Memorandum at 4. Hartmann seeks to impose a factual pleading requirement that is not mandated by the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. Plaintiff alleges that Hartmann's refusal to deal was a product of "agreement and combination with other Hartmann Luggage dealers in the State of Connecticut." Complaint para. 26. The court construes this allegation to subsume an agreement or combination with Connecticut Handbag. See 2A J. Moore, Moore's Federal Practice para. 8.17[3], at 8-104 (2d ed. 1985) ("the law is now well-settled that HN7[] antitrust pleading is governed by the generally liberal philosophy of Rule 8."); id. at 8-113 ("there are certain acts, such as price fixing . . . that are presumptively deemed to violate the antitrust laws. Where such per se violation is charged, with resultant harm to the plaintiff alleged, the pleading suffices.").

[3] Sorisio concedes that he was informed by Irwin Davidson, a regional vice president for Hartmann Luggage, that "a lot of people discount. It just becomes a matter of degrees." Sorisio Dep. at 35; Opposition Memorandum at 28. Certainly other retailers an inquiry regarding the regular discount practices of other Hartmann dealers in 1983 and 1984, that such dealers discounted "to some degrees when necessary." Id. [12] at 130.

Plaintiff contends that in April, 1983, during a meeting in his Bridgeport store with Bruce Kalish, defendant's regional vice president, and James Imwalle, Sorisio's Hartmann sales representative, Kalish allegedly stated that other distributors were complaining about the prices in plaintiff's Norwalk store, and that the plaintiff's competitors were "living with twenty percent off, that people are happy." Sorisio Dep. at 54-55. When Sorisio offered [13] to change his prices, Kalish allegedly responded, "I could live with it an awful lot better." Id. Imwalle said nothing. Id. at 72. Plaintiff agreed to mark his Hartmann merchandise at twenty percent off. Plaintiff did not elicit any corroborative testimony about this conversation from Mr. Kalish or Imwalle during their depositions. See Kalish Dep. at 13-19; Imwalle Dep. at 14. Neither person denied that the comments were made, because neither was asked about them. [4] Their testimony merely confirmed that the meeting occurred. Kalish acknowledged that dealer complaints were typical, but that he recalled no specific [*956] complaints about Connecticut Handbag. Kalish Dep. at 30, 32.

Sorisio claims [14] that this conversation constituted an implied threat. In his brief, he claims that he complied to ensure approval as a franchisee. Opposition Memorandum at 29-30. In his affidavit, plaintiff claims that he changed the sales tickets to prevent termination of the franchise. Sorisio Affidavit para. 7. The court will assume for purposes of deciding this motion that Kalish made such comments. Sorisio's claim that he felt threatened is undermined by his own deposition testimony. In a response indicating acquiescence, not coercion, Sorisio stated that, "I was essentially doing Mr. Kalish a favor. I was making his life more livable. The spirit of cooperation." Sorisio Dep. at 68. Cf. Monsanto, supra, 465 U.S. at 761 (mere acquiescence is not actionable). Plaintiff claims that he changed his price tags in Norwalk to show a twenty percent discount, but he also claims that he told Kalish, "' We'll leave Bridgeport alone and if you live more comfortably, Bruce, great, I'm still going to effectively sell it at what I want to.'" Id. at 56. Sorisio testified that he interpreted Kalish's concern as one with the marked price, so he showed a twenty percent discount but gave purchasers additional [15] discounts. Id. Sorisio Affidavit para. 7. Plaintiff makes no claim that he ever actually sold his Hartmann merchandise at other than his conventional discount levels.

The court concludes that plaintiff has not created a genuine dispute as to the material facts supporting his coercion claim. There is no showing that plaintiff's discounting policy differed markedly from that of his competitors. Nor has the plaintiff offered any evidence of the defendant's purported threats at the April, 1983, meeting, other than his own recollection. Even if this discussion occurred as recounted by Sorisio, this court holds as a matter of law that such is insufficient to constitute "evidence of threats or other explicitly coercive conduct" required to establish coercion. Belfiore v. New York Times Co., 654 F. Supp. 842, 851 (D. Conn. 1986) (emphasis added), aff'd, 826 F.2d 177 (2d Cir. 1987), cert. denied, 484 U.S. 1067, 108 S. Ct. 1030, 98 L. Ed. 2d 994, 1988 WL 14880 (U.S. Feb. 22, 1988) (No. 87-1118). Plaintiff's own deposition testimony seriously undermines his claim that he perceived Kalish's comments as threatening. HN11[] Pricing persuasion, pressure, even argument, is permissible conduct. See Yentsch, supra, 630 F.2d at 53. [16] Nor has the plaintiff demonstrated that he complied by actually charging higher prices. Such actual adherence is required as a matter of law. See id. at 54-55; Belfiore, supra, 654 F. Supp. at 852; Reborn Enterprises, Inc., supra, 590 F. Supp. at 1439.

Sorisio also argues that Hartmann's selective refusal to deal its new line of luggage, and its denial of a sales representative constitute additional coercion. Opposition Memorandum at 34. Sorisio claims that Imwalle informed discounted. Bruce Kalish, a regional vice president for Hartmann, indicated that "most of the stores we sold discounted. . . . Not everybody kept full suggested retail." Kalish Dep. at 31. Moreover, Jim Imwalle, a Hartmann sales representative for Sorisio, testified in response to an inquiry seeking "knowledge as to how [Sorisio's] retail prices of Hartmann products compared to other accounts of yours in the State of Connecticut", that "They were all similar." Imwalle Dep. at 24.

---

[4] The defendant elicited no testimony on this issue when cross examining these two individuals at their depositions. Both depositions antedate that of the plaintiff. Imwalle Dep. 11/12/85; Kalish Dep. 1/21/86; Sorisio Dep. 7/21/86. The first indication that plaintiff's action would be based, in part, on a theory of combination between defendant and Connecticut Handbag resulting from a coercive threat allegedly made by defendant, was the Opposition Memorandum, filed on December 1, 1987.

him of Hartmann's refusal to deal with Connecticut Handbag on the new Hartmann lines at a June, 1983, meeting. Imwalle purportedly said,

> "I don't know how to tell you this, but there's a hit list out from Hartmann, and," he said, "certain people are on it and I believe you are on it, that you will not be eligible to receive this new merchandise."

Sorisio Dep. at 76-77. Sorisio further claims that Imwalle said that the reason was Sorisio's pricing policies. Id. at 77-78. Imwalle agreed that he informed Sorisio of Hartmann's decision. Imwalle Dep. at 29. His version of the reasoning is different. He remembered discussing it with Kalish, but didn't think that Kalish ever gave him a specific reason. [17] Id. at 30. [5] Imwalle also testified that this was not Kalish's decision to make, but was a 'Headquarters" determination. Id. Plaintiff claims that he eventually telephoned Kalish in August, 1983, to request the new product line. Sorisio Dep. at 84. Kalish purportedly confirmed that Connecticut Handbag would not receive the new line, refused to discuss it, and stated, "Effectively, we're going to be sold out for the year on it. We have [*957] committed." Id. at 85. Sorisio does not allege that price was discussed. He had no further discussions with Hartmann representatives regarding the new line. Id. at 89-91.

The court concludes that plaintiff has not established a factual predicate upon which a jury could conclude that Hartmann's refusal to sell Sorisio its new line of luggage was a price-related attempt to coerce the plaintiff into raising his prices. The plaintiff has failed to establish that any threats, express or implied, antedated or accompanied Hartmann's conduct. Moreover, plaintiff adduced no evidence, other than his own deposition testimony, to suggest that this episode was related [18] to his pricing policies.

Plaintiff's claim of failure to provide a sales representative equally is unavailing. Imwalle left Hartmann's employ in July, 1983. Imwalle Dep. at 31. The plaintiff claims that during his phone call with Kalish in August, 1983, he inquired about a replacement. Sorisio Dep. at 85. Kalish allegedly stated that he would provide a sales representative "possibly in '84," but that Barry Kaspar, Imwalle's replacement, would not be calling at Connecticut Handbag. Kalish does not recall this conversation. Kalish Dep. at 29-30. Barry Kaspar, Imwalle's replacement, testified in his deposition that Kalish instructed him not to call on Connecticut Handbag, and that the reason was image related. Kaspar Dep. at 16. Other than to conclude that the lack of a sales representative was a coercive measure on Hartmann's part, Sorisio does not allege that he had any conversation with anyone that suggested that Hartmann's motivation was price related. The lack of a sales representative did not prevent Sorisio from ordering and obtaining Hartmann's other products. Opposition Memorandum at 16; Kaspar Dep. at 17; Bienstock Dep. at 45. [6] Moreover, Janet Bienstock, the sales representative [19] who replaced Kaspar in February, 1984, testified that she attempted, in early 1984, to "introduce [her]self and offer [her] services as their new sales representative." Bienstock Dep. at 4, 25. She was unable to locate Connecticut Handbag's Brookfield, Connecticut, office location, and she claims that follow-up phone calls to Sorisio were unsuccessful. Id. at 26-27. In deposition testimony, Sorisio referred to Bienstock's call of March 27, 1984, at 2:13 P.M. Sorisio Dep. at 104, 107. This suggests a gap in sales coverage, not a failure to provide a sales representative. Bienstock testified that she did visit Sorisio's retail locations in March or April, 1984, but that this visit was in conjunction with Hartmann's nationwide image review of its retailers. Bienstock Dep. at 27-28. Whether viewed individually, or in conjunction with Kalish's purported price-related threat, Hartmann's failure to provide Sorisio with a sales representative is insufficient to establish coercion.

2. Complaints

The plaintiff's theory is that Hartmann Luggage terminated Sorisio in response [20] to complaints lodged by competitors, thus serving to fix prices at levels higher than those charged by Connecticut Handbag. Opposition Memorandum at 14. Sorisio further claims that Hartmann's image-related reasons for the termination of his dealership were pretextual. Id. at 17. The requisite combination alleged is not between Hartmann and the plaintiff, but between Hartmann and plaintiff's competitors.

---

[5] Kalish does not remember this conversation with Imwalle, Kalish Dep. at 20-21.

[6] The page numbers on the copy of Bienstock's deposition are not clear. The court's citations are approximate.

HN12[] Plaintiff must offer "evidence which tends to exclude the possibility that the manufacturer and the nonterminated distributors were acting independently." Monsanto, supra, 465 U.S. at 764. "Something more than evidence of complaints is needed." Id. The Second Circuit has provided guidelines that indicate what will be considered insufficient as a matter of law to warrant an inference of a conspiracy or combination.

> "[A] mere showing of close relations or frequent meetings between the alleged [*958] conspirators . . . will not sustain a plaintiff's burden absent evidence which would permit the inference that these close ties led to an illegal agreement." Nor does a manufacturer's mere receipt of complaints from its wholesalers or agents who compete with the plaintiff, or its consultation with [21] such other competing wholesalers, standing alone, support a finding of conspiracy with them. Even where a termination follows the receipt of complaints from wholesalers or agents, there is no basis for inferring the existence of concerted action, absent some other evidence of a tacit understanding or agreement with them.

H.L. Moore Drug Exchange v. Eli Lilly & Co., 662 F.2d 935, 941 (2d Cir. 1981) (citations omitted), cert. denied, 459 U.S. 880, 74 L. Ed. 2d 144, 103 S. Ct. 176 (1982).

Plaintiff has established some evidence of complaints. Sorisio's knowledge of these complaints comes from Imwalle's deposition testimony. Sorisio Dep. at 142. Imwalle recounted receiving inquiries from three specific area dealers, Imwalle Dep. at 25-28, two of whose complaints addressed concerns with Connecticut Handbag. Id. at 25. [7] Imwalle claimed that no discussions ensued with either dealer, as he responded to these inquiries with "I am not allowed to discuss the pricing policies of my dealers to you or anybody else." Id. at 26, 27. Kaspar recalled complaints from other dealers but, like Imwalle, he refused to discuss Connecticut Handbag with his accounts. Kaspar Dep. at 24. Bienstock testified that Sorisio's stores [22] were mentioned to her by her other accounts, but that she never discussed Connecticut Handbag with them. Bienstock Dep. at 37. She further stated that none of these accounts threatened to cease carrying Hartmann products if it continued to deal with Sorisio. Id. at 51-52. No evidence suggests that Imwalle, Kaspar, or Bienstock communicated these complaints to Sorisio.

[23] The Second Circuit has noted that "in HN13[] a case where the alleged scheme is short-term and relatively simple in operation, we must as a practical matter accept that the best proof available most often will only tend to show the existence of an informal, perhaps even tacit, rather than explicit, agreement." Apex Oil Co., supra, 822 F.2d at 253. Plaintiff's proof does not rise to an inference of an informal or tacit agreement. Although evidence exists documenting general discussions of Hartmann's marketing policies, no evidence suggests that Sorisio's price cutting served as the basis for competitors' complaints. Indeed, the evidence consistently suggests that defendant's personnel refused to entertain any complaints addressed specifically to Connecticut Handbag. Moreover, the only evidence as to whether Sorisio's competitors threatened to stop buying from Hartmann if it allowed continued discounting at Connecticut Handbag indicates that no such threats were made. Bienstock Dep. at 51-52. Cf. Burlington Coat Factory Warehouse v. Belk Bros. Co., 621 F. Supp. 224, 235 (S.D.N.Y. 1985); Reborn, supra, 590 F. Supp. at 1433.

Sorisio argues that evidence of his own coercion [24] should serve to suggest inferentially that other dealers similarly were coerced. As the court did not find sufficient evidence of plaintiff's coerced compliance with defendant's suggested retail prices, this argument is unavailing. Nor has the plaintiff established any actual adherence to Hartmann's alleged price-fixing policy, either by Connecticut Handbag or its competitors. HN14[]

[7] One of the dealers, Jack Erlich, indicated in deposition testimony that he didn't recall any discussions where he lodged formal complaints with Imwalle. Erlich Dep. at 15. He recalls speaking to a Hartmann salesperson after finding out what type of store Sorisio operated "and to find good merchandise in that type of a store. . . ." Id. at 12. No testimony was elicited suggesting that this dealer complained about prices. Another dealer, Steve Silver, testified that he recalled several discussions with various Hartmann sales representatives, but only one that definitely involved Connecticut Handbag. This was in a December, 1983, discussion with Kaspar, when Kaspar volunteered that Hartmann was selling merchandise to Sorisio but was looking to try to close the account. Silver Dep. at 5-6. Silver disavowed any discussions of Sorisio's discounting policies with Hartmann, id. at 7, or other retailers, id. at 11.

Absent evidence of some agreement, actual compliance is crucial to an inference of a combination. See [*959] Yentsch, supra, 630 F.2d at 54, Belfiore, supra, 654 F. Supp. at 852; Reborn, supra, 590 F. Supp. at 1439.

Plaintiff would have the fact finder infer the existence of a combination by virtue of his attack on the image-related business reasons proffered by Hartmann for its termination of Sorisio. Opposition Memorandum at 17. As a general proposition,

> HN15[] the mere fact that a business reason advanced by a defendant for its cut-off of a customer is undermined does not, by itself, justify the inference that the conduct was therefore the result of a conspiracy. Even if a manufacturer or supplier, acting independently, gave a false or inaccurate reason for its action, whether because of a desire to avoid [25] controversy or some other consideration, this would not violate any legal obligation to the customer, absent proof of a conspiracy or breach of contract.

H.L. Moore Drug Exchange, supra, 662 F.2d at 941. The Second Circuit discussed the relevance of failure to follow internal procedures governing termination in Burlington Coat Factory Warehouse Corp. v. Esprit de Corp., 769 F.2d 919 (2d Cir. 1985). In that case, the court did not allow the defendant's failure to adhere to its internal termination procedures to serve as evidence of concerted action. The court compared Burlington to Monsanto, noting that, in both cases, marketing requirements were not disclosed to a dealer prior to termination but these standards assumed import only after litigation was commenced. 769 F.2d at 924. In Burlington, the record contained uncontroverted evidence that such a policy existed, but the record was devoid of any evidence of complaints by competing dealers. Id. Monsanto, according to the court, did "involve an issue as to the honesty of the claim that the cancellation was based on retail marketing requirements." Id. Moreover, evidence of complaints by competing dealers [26] existed in that case. Id.

Although the instant action appears, at first blush, to fit within the Monsanto mold, a significant issue distinguishes these two cases. In Monsanto, the Court found "substantial direct evidence of agreements to maintain prices" between Monsanto and its distributors. 465 U.S. at 765. Indirect evidence in the form of a newsletter produced by one of the distributors also implied the existence of such an agreement. Id. at 765-66. With this agreement as a backdrop, the Court then determined that a jury issue existed as to whether Spray-Rite's termination was pursuant to the agreement. Id. at 767. The record included testimony that Monsanto representatives informed Spray-Rite of complaints from other distributors. Id. Monsanto expressly requested that Spray-Rite comply with its resale prices, and then explicitly threatened termination if it did not raise its prices. Id. at 767-78.

In the instant action, plaintiff adduced no direct evidence of an agreement between Hartmann and its distributors to maintain prices. The court determined that plaintiff's circumstantial evidence on this same question is insufficient as a matter of law. "There HN16[] must be direct [27] or circumstantial evidence that reasonably tends to prove that the manufacturer and others had a conscious commitment to a common scheme designed to achieve an unlawful objective." Monsanto, supra, 465 U.S. at 768. Absent evidence of any such "conscious commitment" in the instant action, the court will not consider the merits of plaintiff's challenge to the veracity of Hartmann's reasons for terminating the plaintiff's dealership.

Accordingly, the defendant is granted summary judgment on the federal and state antitrust claims.

B. Count Two - Connecticut Franchise Act Claim

In Count Two of his complaint, Sorisio alleges that Hartmann's termination of its relationship with Connecticut Handbag constituted a violation of the Connecticut Franchise Act ["Act"]. Conn. Gen. Stat. §§ 42-133e et seq. HN17[] A franchise relationship, as defined by the Act, may not be terminated except upon good cause shown and upon [*960] sixty days written notice. Conn. Gen. Stat. § 42-133f (a).

> "Franchise" means an oral or written agreement or arrangement in which (1) a franchisee is granted the right to engage in the business of offering, selling or distributing goods or services under a marketing plan [28] or system prescribed in substantial part by a franchisor . . . and (2) the operation of the franchisee's business pursuant to such a plan or system is substantially associated with the franchisor's trademark, service mark, tradename, logotype, advertising or other commercial symbol designating the franchisor or its affiliate. . . .

HN18[] Conn. Gen. Stat. § 42-133e(b) (emphasis added).

Defendant argues that the Act is inapplicable to the instant action because the relationship between Hartmann and Connecticut Handbag was not that of a franchise. Hartmann contends that it did not prescribe, in substantial part, a marketing plan for Sorisio and that plaintiff's business was not substantially associated with its trade name. The court concurs.

Sorisio has failed to establish that he operated under a "marketing plan or system prescribed in substantial part" by Hartmann. In Consumers Petroleum of Connecticut, Inc. v. Duhan, 38 Conn. Supp. 495, 452 A.2d 123 (App. Sess. 1982), the court enumerated HN19[] several factors that are relevant to this determination. These include control over hours and days of operation, advertising, financial support, auditing of books and inspection of premises, control over lighting, [29] employee uniforms, prices, trading stamps and hiring, sales quotas, and management training. Id. at 498-99. There is no precise formula as to how many of such factors must exist, in the aggregate, before the control exercised by a manufacturer rises to a marketing plan or system prescribed in substantial part by a franchisor. Nevertheless, plaintiff has established very few such factors in the instant case.

The record is devoid of evidence that Hartmann prescribed operations, uniforms, hiring or sales quotas, or that it audited books or provided financing. The "image criteria" used by Hartmann to establish standards for its retailers is not a prescription. It is strictly an internal document, unavailable to the retailers, and contains merely general standards, not specific plans or systems. Motion for Summary Judgment at 31; Defendant's Exhibit O (Subject to Protective Order). The evidence of inspections (one when Hartmann first considered Connecticut Handbag in early 1982, and one when it performed a nationwide review in 1984) is de minimis. Instructions on product promotion, display and training, both of which were geared toward intrastore product differentiation, do not constitute [30] indicia of control. Grand Light & Supply Co., Inc. v. Honeywell, Inc., 771 F.2d 672, 677 (2d Cir. 1985); McKeown Distributors, Inc. v. Gyp-Crete Corp., 618 F. Supp. 632, 642 (D. Conn. 1985). No evidence exists that Hartmann prescribed prices. It suggested retail prices, and discounting practices were prevalent. See supra. Plaintiff's argument, therefore, rests squarely on the fact that Sorisio received and executed a "franchise agreement", and that Hartmann required Sorisio to stock its full line of luggage before he could be approved as a dealer. Opposition Memorandum at 43-45.

The court concurs with the plaintiff that the use of the word "franchise" in an agreement between a manufacturer and a dealer may be a probative factor. Id. at 45. Cf. McKeown Distributors, Inc., supra, 618 F. Supp. at 642-43 (absence of the term "franchise" in agreement is relevant to determination of franchise under the Act). Sorisio's initial inquiry to Hartmann was directed at acquiring a franchise, and the response acknowledged plaintiff's "interest in becoming a Hartmann franchised dealer." Plaintiff's Exhibits 2, 5. Plaintiff also relies on Hartmann's "Acknowledgement of Authorized [31] Franchised Dealer Policy" form, which requires that a signatory dealer agree to adhere to Hartmann's policy, as stated in its "Notice to Dealers." Id. Exhibit 9. Sorisio and Imwalle executed [*961] such a form, but it is undated. [8] Hartmann claims that they have no record of receiving this executed form. A dispute exists, therefore, about whether Sorisio was an authorized dealer commencing some time in early 1983. See Imwalle Dep. at 17; Kalish Dep. at 25. Cf. McCornack Dep. at 9-10 (Sorisio was a dealer for close-out merchandise only and the shipment of general goods to Connecticut Handbag was an error).

This status, authorized dealer, is not necessarily synonymous with "franchisee" as that term is used in the Act. The policy that Sorisio agreed to requires that the authorized dealer (1) sell only to retail customers, (2) [32] only in the location initially approved by Hartmann, and (3) obtain permission from Hartmann prior to expanding the franchise to additional locations. Plaintiff's Exhibit 9. In addition, the policy contains a prohibition against [8] Accompanying the form is a hand-written note, which purports to be from Imwalle and that instructs Sorisio to sign the form but not to date it. Imwalle's note is dated 4/23/83, although he could not recall when he signed the document. Imwalle Dep. at 67-68. Sorisio testified that he received Imwalle's dated note with the policy form. Sorisio Dep. at 110.

transshipping. Violation of the policy is grounds for termination as a dealer. The dealer's signature is required as an acknowledgement of this policy. Id. Coupled with the policy is the requirement that a dealer must buy and present all of Hartmann's lines. These are prescriptive measures, but together they do not approach the level of operational control required under the Act. See, e.g., Carlos v. Philips Business Systems, Inc., 556 F. Supp. 769, 776 (E.D.N.Y.) (construing Connecticut Act, evidence of defendant's "overwhelming" control over plaintiff's business established franchise relationship), aff'd, 742 F.2d 1432 (2d Cir. 1983).

Even if a marketing plan was substantially prescribed by Hartmann, the court holds that Sorisio's stores were not "substantially associated with [Hartmann's] trademark . . . [or] trade name. . . ." Conn. Gen. Stat. § 42-133e(b)(2). Plaintiff contends that there is no exclusivity provision in the Act, requiring [33] a franchisee to carry only a franchisor's merchandise. At least two federal district courts noted this also, and held that only the portion of the business operated pursuant to a marketing plan or system needed to be "substantially associated" with the franchisor's trademark. See Hydro Air of Connecticut, Inc. v. Versa Technologies, Inc., 599 F. Supp. 1119, 1125 (D. Conn. 1984); Grand Light & Supply Co., Inc. v. Honeywell, Inc., Civ. No. N78-342 (D. Conn. July 13, 1984), rev'd, 771 F.2d 672 (2d Cir. Conn. 1985).

The Second Circuit explicitly overruled this interpretation in Grand Light, supra. The court interpreted dicta in Muha v. United Oil Co., 180 Conn. 720, 726, 433 A.2d 1009 (1980), the only Connecticut Supreme Court opinion construing the Act, to mean that "the absence of exclusivity in the lessor/lessee relationship would have been significant, even if there had been a trademark." 771 F.2d at 678. In Grand Light, the Second Circuit stated that exclusivity is not required under the Act, but that "more than three percent be involved," which was the amount of Grand Light's business attributable to Honeywell. Id. The policy issue, as defined by the court, required [34] much more.

> Where the franchisee is completely dependent on the public's confidence in the franchised product for most or all his business, abrupt severance of the franchise tie, without good cause and without sufficient notice, could spell ruination. No such dependence existed here.

Id. 771 F.2d at 677 (emphasis added).

Similarly, no such dependence is demonstrated in the instant action. Sorisio concededly carries many lines of luggage, "more than any department store in the State." Sorisio Dep. at 17. Defendant argues, and plaintiff does not contest, that Sorisio's purchases of Hartmann merchandise constituted less than ten percent of his total product purchases in 1982, 1983, and 1984. Motion for Summary Judgment at 36 & n.7. He argues that, had he been able to purchase Hartmann's new lines in 1983 and 1984, a larger percentage of his [*962] business would have been devoted to Hartmann's products. Opposition Memorandum at 46-47. Plaintiff's argument transcends reasonable inference into the clearly speculative. Neither the record nor the plaintiff suggests, nor will the court infer, that Hartmann merchandise would have comprised "most if not all of [Sorisio's] business. "

Absent a marketing [35] plan or system prescribed by defendant and a substantial association with Hartmann's trademark or trade name, the court concludes that the Connecticut Franchise Act is inapplicable to this action. Defendant's motion for summary judgment on Count Two is granted.

C. Count Three - Connecticut Unfair Trade Practices Claim

HN20[] The Connecticut Unfair Trade Practices Act ["CUTPA"] provides that "no person shall engage in unfair methods of competition and unfair or deceptive acts or practices in the conduct of any trade or commerce." Conn. Gen. Stat. § 42-110b(a). Plaintiff's complaint contains three allegations of CUTPA violations. Sorisio claims that the conduct underlying his antitrust claim also violates the CUTPA. Complaint para. 29. [9] In his brief, Sorisio argues that even if summary judgment is granted on the antitrust claims, a jury might find defendant's "refusal to deal" or termination were an unfair practice. Opposition Memorandum at 49-51. Plaintiff argues that Hartmann did much more than merely refuse to deal; it purportedly "refus[ed] to sell plaintiff the new Hartmann luggage lines, den[ied] him the service of a sales representative, and then terminat[ed] plaintiff as a Hartmann [36] franchise dealer in order to reduce or eliminate price competition in Connecticut." Id. at 51.

---

[9] Plaintiff also maintains that his termination as a franchisee without a good cause or written notice violates the CUTPA. The court held that the Connecticut Franchise Act is inapplicable to this action, thus rendering plaintiff's second CUTPA claim moot.

An allegation of conspiracy or combination is not required in order to state a claim under the CUTPA, but evidence establishing a nexus between Hartmann's conduct prior to June 8, 1984, and the public interest is required. Ivey, Barnum & O'Mara v. Indian Harbor Properties, Inc., 190 Conn. 528, 540, 461 A.2d 1369 (1983), as superseded by Public Act 84-468 § 2 (June 8, 1984) ("Proof of public interest shall not be required in any action brought under [CUTPA]."). The amendment has not been given retroactive application. L. Cohen & Co. v. Dun & Bradstreet, Inc., 629 F. Supp. 1425, 1432 (D. Conn. 1986) (and cases cited therein).

Plaintiff alleges and the court discerns no "specific and substantial" public interest inherent in Hartmann's decisions to forego sales of its new lines of luggage to Connecticut Handbag and to allow an eight-month [37] gap in sales representative coverage. Hartmann's decision to terminate Sorisio as a dealer occurred after June 8, 1984 and, need not be cloaked in the mantle of public interest. HN21[] Plaintiff must only allege that this conduct was unfair, as defined by the CUTPA. Connecticut's Supreme Court defines unfairness as > (1) whether the practice, without necessarily having been previously considered unlawful, offends public policy as it has been established by statutes, the common law, or otherwise -- whether, in other words, it is within at least the penumbra of some common law, statutory or other established concept of unfairness; (2) whether it is immoral, unethical, oppressive or unscrupulous; (3) whether it causes substantial injury to consumers (competitors or other businessmen).

Ivey, Barnum & O'Mara, supra, 190 Conn. at 539 n.13, 461 A.2d 1369 (citation omitted).

HN22[] A CUTPA claim must be pleaded with particularity to allow evaluation of the legal theory upon which the claim lies. See Grand Light, supra, Civ. No. N78-342 (D. Conn. April 23, 1987), aff'd, 838 F.2d 1202 (2d Cir. Conn. 1987) (oral opinion per local rule 0.23). A practice may be unfair even if all three criteria are not met. [38] McLaughlin Ford, Inc. v. Ford Motor Co., 192 Conn. 558, 569, 473 A.2d 1185 (1984); Gibbs v. Mase, 11 Conn. App. 289, 296, 526 A.2d 7 [*963] (1987). Plaintiff alleges that the defendant's conduct was "immoral, unethical, oppressive or unscrupulous." This second criterion is " "largely duplicative " of the other two factors. Carpentino v. Transport Ins. Co., 609 F. Supp. 556, 563 (D. Conn. 1985) (citation omitted).

Sorisio argues that, to the extent that defendant's conduct violates antitrust law, it violates public policy, thus serving as grounds for a CUTPA claim. Opposition Memorandum at 49. Because the court determined that no such violation occurred, this argument is unavailing. Plaintiff concedes that a "simple refusal to deal" is within the defendant's rights. Id. at 50-51. He argues, however, that a refusal to deal complicated by additional conduct may offend public policy, specifically as a violation of the Federal Trade Commission Act. Id. at 51. Defendant acknowledges that its conduct may be "actionably 'unfair' under CUTPA even if not actually violative of the antitrust laws. . . ." Motion for Summary Judgment at 40 n.10. Plaintiff's position fails, however, because the additional conduct [39] he relies on was dismissed by the court for occurring prior to June 8, 1984, and for lacking public interest. Plaintiff's remaining claim is that Hartmann "terminat[ed] plaintiff as a Hartmann franchise dealer in order to reduce or eliminate price competition in Connecticut." Opposition Memorandum at 51. Sorisio was not a franchise dealer when he was terminated. He may or may not have been an authorized dealer. Even assuming that he was authorized as a dealer, plaintiff offers no basis to conclude that Sorisio's termination violates the Federal Trade Commission Act or any other statute, common law, or "established concept of fairness. " He does not suggest that Hartmann violated its dealership agreement, or that its conduct constituted unfair competition. Cf. Copy-Data Systems, Inc. v. Toshiba America, Inc., 663 F.2d 405, 411 (2d Cir. 1981), on remand 582 F. Supp. 231 (S.D.N.Y. 1984), rev'd 755 F.2d 293 (2d Cir.), cert. denied, 474 U.S. 825, 88 L. Ed. 2d 66, 106 S. Ct. 80 (1985). He argues instead that Hartmann's stated image-related rationale for the termination was pretextual, and that its true goal was price fixing. As held earlier, evidence of price fixing has not been established in either the plaintiff's [40] complaint or his brief. The court is unwilling to open this inquiry to a jury absent a particularized allegation of how the termination constituted a violation of an established concept of unfairness. [10] Summary Judgment is appropriate.

Sorisio also alleges that, even if the Connecticut Franchise Act does not govern this action, when Hartmann informed him that he was a franchisee it required him to comply with the defendant's "Authorized Dealer Franchise Policy," a deceptive practice that plaintiff claims violated the CUTPA. As stated earlier, the alleged deception and Sorisio's "coerced compliance" with the dealer's policy occurred prior to June 8, 1984. Again, plaintiff alleges no nexus with a "specific and substantial" public interest. Public policy with regard to franchise relationships [41] was codified during this period of time in the Connecticut Franchise Act, which the court held, supra, does not govern the parties' relationship.

In his brief, Sorisio argues that "the implication of such representation was that plaintiff was protected by this state's franchise statute." Opposition Memorandum at 52. He argues that this cause of action arose in July, 1984, when he was terminated by Hartmann. The court disagrees. The defendant's use of the term "franchise" in correspondence and in the " Authorized Dealer Franchise Policy" form became "deceptive" only when the court held the Connecticut Franchise Act inapplicable to the parties' relationship. Plaintiff has no more claim to CUTPA damages on this theory than would Hartmann, should it pursue vexatious litigation damages. [*964] Reasonable arguments existed on the franchise question. The court will not allow plaintiff to bootstrap his way into a claim of deceptive representation based on a judicial determination rendered after three years of active discovery and thorough briefs submitted by both parties. This theory of CUTPA fails, and summary judgment for the defendant is appropriate.

CONCLUSION

Summary Judgment is granted [42] on Counts One, Two and Three of the complaint.

SO ORDERED.

End of Document

---

[10] Plaintiff neither alleges in his complaint nor pleads in his brief that defendant's conduct caused substantial injury to consumers, competitors, or other business people. See Ivey, Barnum & O'Mara, supra, 190 Conn. at 539 n.13, 461 A.2d 1369. See also McLaughlin Ford, supra, 192 Conn. at 569-70, 473 A.2d 1185 (to succeed on this third criterion, plaintiff must satisfy three-pronged "substantial injury test").

Disher v. Information Resources, Inc.

United States District Court for the Northern District of Illinois, Eastern Division

May 27, 1988, Decided ; May 31, 1988, Filed

No. 83 C 6964

Reporter

691 F. Supp. 75 *; 1988 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 5007 ; 1988-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P68,187; Fed. Sec. L. Rep. (CCH) P94,052

David C. Disher, Plaintiff, v. Information Resources, Inc., a Delaware corporation, John L. Malec, Gian M. Fulgoni, both individually and as voting trustee, William C. Walter, both individually and as voting trustee, Defendants stock, antitrust, voting trust, damages, state court, shares, breach of fiduciary duty, state law claim, induced, fiduciary duty, federal claim, alleges, parties, confidentiality agreement, rescind, res judicata, misrepresentations, argues, rescission, customers, breached, securities fraud, merits, void, restrictive covenant, collateral estoppel, fiduciary breach, summary judgment, proceedings, injunction

Core Terms

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Banking Law > Types of Banks & Financial Institutions > National Banks > Affiliates & Subsidiaries

Securities Law > Civil Liability Considerations > Preservation of Remedies & Rights

HN1[] National Banks, Affiliates & Subsidiaries

The general rule is that a securities fraud plaintiff is to be placed in the same position as he would have been had there been no fraud. This includes that such a plaintiff is entitled to profit to the full extent that he would have profited had there been no fraud. The plaintiff is limited to actual damages, except where the defendant's profit from the transaction exceeds the plaintiff's actual damages. The plaintiff is not entitled to the full benefit of his bargain except where necessary to prevent unjust enrichment of the defendant.

Securities Law > Civil Liability Considerations > Preservation of Remedies & Rights

HN2[] Civil Liability Considerations, Preservation of Remedies & Rights

A plaintiff cannot recover for losses and ignore profits where both result from a single wrong. Instead, a plaintiff can only recover for net losses occurring after the fraud was committed.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

HN3[] Clayton Act, Claims

Antitrust plaintiffs must show more than simply an injury causally linked to an antitrust violation; instead plaintiffs must prove antitrust injury, which is to say injury of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent and that flows from that which makes the defendants' acts unlawful. Antitrust injury alone does not satisfy the standing requirement. Even if suffering antitrust injury, the plaintiff must be a proper plaintiff under § 4 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C.S § 15.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

HN4[] Private Actions, Standing

The first inquiry regarding standing in an antitrust action is whether the injury sustained by plaintiff is the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent. The Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 et seq., is intended to assure customers the benefit of price competition and protect the economic freedom of participants in the market.

Civil Procedure > ... > Diversity Jurisdiction > Citizenship > General Overview

HN5[] Diversity Jurisdiction, Citizenship

It is a well-settled rule that diversity of citizenship is determined as of the date the action is commenced.

Civil Procedure > ... > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Jurisdiction Over Actions > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Jurisdiction > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Supplemental Jurisdiction > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Supplemental Jurisdiction > Pendent Claims

HN6[] Subject Matter Jurisdiction, Jurisdiction Over Actions

The ordinary rule for pendent jurisdiction is that all remaining pendent claims are dismissed for lack of subject matter jurisdiction if all the federal claims are dismissed before trial.

Civil Procedure > ... > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Supplemental Jurisdiction > General Overview

HN7[] Subject Matter Jurisdiction, Supplemental Jurisdiction

Judicial economy, the essential policy behind the modern doctrine of pendent jurisdiction which created, supports the retention of pendent jurisdiction in any case where substantial judicial resources have already been committed, so that sending the case to another court will cause a substantial duplication of effort.

Civil Procedure > Preliminary Considerations > Federal & State Interrelationships > Erie Doctrine

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Preclusion of Judgments > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Preclusion of Judgments > Full Faith & Credit > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Preclusion of Judgments > Res Judicata

HN8[] Federal & State Interrelationships, Erie Doctrine

In determining the effect of the state court judgment, the federal court must give that judgment the same preclusive effect it would have in the courts of Illinois. Ordinarily, res judicata bars all issues that were raised or could have been raised. Illinois ordinarily does not permit the splitting of causes of action. However, where the parties agree to dismiss certain claims, parts of claims, or forms of relief without prejudice, res judicata will not bar raising those claims or parts of claims in a subsequent proceeding.

Civil Procedure > ... > Preclusion of Judgments > Estoppel > Collateral Estoppel

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Preclusion of Judgments > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Preclusion of Judgments > Estoppel > General Overview

HN9[] Estoppel, Collateral Estoppel

The elements of collateral estoppel are: (1) the issue sought to be precluded must be the same as that involved in the prior action; (2) the issue must have been actually litigated; (3) the determination of the issue must have been essential to the final judgment; and (4) the party against whom estoppel is invoked must be fully represented in the prior action.

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Damages > Punitive Damages

Torts > ... > Types of Damages > Punitive Damages > General Overview

HN10[] Damages, Punitive Damages

Illinois does not permit a claim for punitive damages where no actual damage is shown.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

HN11[] Summary Judgment, Burdens of Proof

The burden is on movants to show they are entitled to summary judgment.

Estate, Gift & Trust Law > ... > Trustees > Duties & Powers > Claims Against & By

Securities Law > Blue Sky Laws > Exemptions & Exclusions > Exempt Securities

Business & Corporate Law > ... > Shareholders > Meetings & Voting > General Overview

Estate, Gift & Trust Law > ... > Trustees > Duties & Powers > General Overview

Estate, Gift & Trust Law > ... > Trustees > Duties & Powers > Standards of Care

Governments > Fiduciaries

HN12[] Duties & Powers, Claims Against & By

A trustee has a duty to reasonably defend the trust against a suit for rescission. Also, fiduciaries will not ordinarily be held liable for incorrectly speculating as to the results of a lawsuit. But a fiduciary must act reasonably and in good faith.

Contracts Law > Breach > General Overview

Estate, Gift & Trust Law > ... > Private Trusts Characteristics > Trustees > Removal & Resignation

Governments > Fiduciaries

Contracts Law > Contract Interpretation > Fiduciary Responsibilities

Torts > Intentional Torts > Breach of Fiduciary Duty > General Overview

HN13[] Contracts Law, Breach

A claim for breach of fiduciary duty can be maintained even if the agreement creating the fiduciary relationship is subsequently held to be void since, at the time the breach occurs, the fiduciary was bound to perform his or her fiduciary duties.

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Fraud > Wire Fraud > Elements

Governments > Fiduciaries

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Fraud Against the Government > Mail Fraud > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Fraud Against the Government > Mail Fraud > Elements

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Fraud > Wire Fraud > General Overview

HN14[] Wire Fraud, Elements

Not every common law breach of fiduciary duty that involves mailings or use of the telephone constitutes a violation of the mail and wire fraud statutes. The scheme to defraud element of those crimes must still be satisfied. The scheme need not be fraudulent on its face, but must involve some sort of fraudulent misrepresentation or omissions calculated to deceive persons of ordinary prudence and comprehension. Also, the scheme must be one to obtain money or property from the victim.

Judges: [1] William T. Hart, United States District Judge.

Opinion by: HART

Opinion

[*77] MEMORANDUM OPINION AND ORDER

WILLIAM T. HART, UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE.

A. Background

For about five years this case and a parallel case in the state courts of Illinois have been pending. Some of the claims had exclusively federal jurisdiction and were brought only in this court. Other federal claims, although not exclusively federal, were also brought only in this court. A number of state claims were brought in both courts. Through various amendments, plaintiff, usually with the agreement or acquiescence of defendants, has attempted to leave all of his damages claims for this court. Three "trials" have been held before Judge Albert S. Porter of the Circuit Court of Cook County and the Illinois Appellate Court has issued two published opinions. The first "trial" was on plaintiff's motion for preliminary injunction enjoining the enforcement of a confidentiality agreement he had with his employer. The injunction was denied by the Circuit Court, but the Appellate Court remanded the case for further consideration of the preliminary injunction. See Disher v. Fulgoni, 124 Ill. App. 3d 257, 464 N.E.2d 639, 79 Ill. Dec. 735, [2] appeal denied, 101 Ill. 2d 564 (1984). In the meantime discovery was proceeding in this court, but the court ordered the parties not to duplicate discovery that was being taken in the state court proceedings. In December 1984, this court [*78] entered a judgment in favor of plaintiff dismissing defendant Information Resources, Inc.'s ("IRI") counterclaim. This court continued to monitor the status of this case while the state court proceeded to trials on the merits.

The Circuit Court bifurcated the case and conducted two trials. Disher succeeded on some claims and lost on others. Most important for him, he succeeded in having his stockholdings in IRI released from a voting trust. He also obtained a permanent injunction against enforcement of the confidentiality agreement. On appeal, the Circuit Court was affirmed in part and reversed in part, but Disher's success at having the stock released and the confidentiality agreement enjoined remained intact. The case was to be remanded to the Circuit Court for further proceedings and the Illinois Supreme Court only recently denied leave to appeal. See Disher v. Fulgoni, 161 Ill. App. 3d 1, 514 N.E.2d 767, 112 Ill. Dec. 949 (1987) [3] ("Disher II"), appeal denied, 119 Ill. 2d 555, 522 N.E.2d 1243, 119 Ill. Dec. 384 (April 7, 1988).

Following the decision in Disher II, the parties stipulated to the dismissal of Counts VI and VII and defendants have moved for summary judgment on all other Counts. Plaintiff has also conceded that Count V should be dismissed.

Plaintiff David Disher was formerly employed by defendant IRI. The other three defendants are officers or directors of IRI who were also trustees of a voting trust that is central to this litigation. Disher directed IRI's BehaviorScan program which involved market research through the use of consumer panelists, supermarket product scanners, and cable television. Through the scanners, the purchases of the panelists were monitored and through the cable television hookups with the panelists certain advertising could be directed toward different groups of panelists. From the data gathered, various conclusions could be made as to the effect of the advertising. This type of research was only feasible for companies who spent large sums on advertising, estimated to be about 150 companies in the United States. At the time Disher was discharged, [4] A.C. Nielsen Company was considering establishing a competitive system.

When Disher started with IRI in 1981, he took a lower salary than he previously earned because of the opportunity to purchase IRI stock through stock option rights. In 1982, IRI wanted to buy out the shares of one of its founders, Penny Baron, but did not have sufficient capital to do so. Instead, certain employees, including Disher, were given the opportunity to surrender their option rights in return for the ability to purchase twice as many shares of Baron stock. IRI arranged partial financing and paid interest on the loans. The employees were required to place the stock in a voting trust of which defendants were the trustees. Defendant Fulgoni acted as Disher's agent in purchasing the stock for Baron and placing it in the voting trust. The details of this arrangement are described in Disher II, 514

N.E.2d at 769-70. In February 1982, Disher purchased 1,000 shares. In April he was promoted and was able to purchase 500 more shares under the same conditions as the original purchase.

Disher was discharged in April 1983 and sought to obtain release of his stockholdings, but was unable to. IRI [5] offered to seek to get his stock for him if he would sign a noncompetition agreement, but he declined the offer. Disher was offered a position with A.C. Nielsen, but after A.C. Nielsen received correspondence from IRI, the offer was made conditional on rescinding a confidentiality agreement Disher had with IRI. Although Disher ultimately succeeded in having the state court enjoin enforcement of the confidentiality agreement, he never obtained the job with A.C. Nielsen. Without adequate income, Disher eventually had to sell off his property, including his home. Disher eventually succeeded at having the voting trust rescinded and the stock he had purchased for $ 18,000 was sold for over $ 1,000,000. However, Disher had earlier demanded that it be sold at the time individual shares were selling for about $ 6 more. Had he been able to sell at that time, he would have sold the stock for about $ 236,000 more.

[*79] B. Count I - Securities Fraud

Count I alleges a federal claim for securities fraud. Defendants claim this Count should be dismissed because the undisputed facts show Disher suffered no damage. They argue he instead made a profit of more than $ 1,000,000. Disher [6] argues he lost $ 236,000 by not being able to sell his shares when he wanted to and that he also suffered consequential damages of having to sell his home and other property below market value due to his lack of financial resources. For purposes of deciding the present motion, it is assumed that defendants induced plaintiff to trade his stock options for the right to purchase Baron stock by falsely representing that the voting trust would end when the stock began to be publicly traded. There were also other alleged false representations, but they need not be delineated.

Plaintiff does not point to evidence that he was induced to enter into the voting trust separate from the arrangement to purchase the Baron stock. He also points to no evidence that he could have purchased the Baron stock without entering into a voting trust. Therefore it must be assumed, as is alleged in paragraph 18 of plaintiff's amended complaint, that the false representation about voting trusts was for the purpose of inducing plaintiff to enter into the transaction involving Baron stock. If Disher had not entered into the transaction, he would have had only half as much stock under his prior stock option plan. [7] Even if he had sold that amount at the highest price, it would have been worth less than the amount he was able to sell at a lower price in September 1985 since the price of a share had not dropped over 50% from the highest price. Additionally, plaintiff has not shown an amount of consequential damages that exceeds the greater profit he made by being able to purchase twice as many shares.

Plaintiff correctly argues that HN1[] the general rule is that a securities fraud plaintiff is to be placed in the same position as he would have been had there been no fraud. Affiliated Ute Citizens of Utah v. United States, 406 U.S. 128, 155, 31 L. Ed. 2d 741, 92 S. Ct. 1456 (1972). This includes that such a plaintiff is entitled to profit to the full extent that he would have profited had there been no fraud. Levine v. Futransky, 636 F. Supp. 899, 900 (N.D. Ill. 1986). The plaintiff is limited to actual damages, except where the defendant's profit from the transaction exceeds the plaintiff's actual damages. See Affiliated Ute, 406 U.S. at 155; Harris Trust & Savings Bank v. Ellis, 810 F.2d 700, 706-07 (7th Cir. 1987); [8] Torres v. Borzelleca, 641 F. Supp. 542, 544-45 (E.D. Pa. 1986). The plaintiff is not entitled to the full benefit of his bargain, Madigan, Inc. v. Goodman, 498 F.2d 233, 239-40 (7th Cir. 1974), except where necessary to prevent unjust enrichment of the defendant. Hackbart v. Holmes, 675 F.2d 1114, 1122 (10th Cir. 1982).

As discussed above, plaintiff has not suffered any actual loss. Had he not been induced to trade his rights under the stock option plans for his right to purchase Baron stock, his profits would have been less than they actually were. Plaintiff has not shown that he is entitled to the full benefit of his bargain because defendants would otherwise be unjustly enriched. Instead, plaintiff tries to separate out the fraud regarding the voting trust from the fraud inducing the purchase. Such a split, however, is inconsistent with the facts. Also, one of the cases relied on by plaintiff is contrary to plaintiff's argument. Abrahamson v. Fleschner, 568 F.2d 862, 878-79 (2d Cir. 1977), cert. denied, 436

U.S. 905, 913, 56 L. Ed. 2d 403, 98 S. Ct. 2236 (1978), holds that [9] HN2[] a plaintiff cannot recover for losses and ignore profits where both result from a single wrong. Instead, under Abrahamson, a plaintiff can only recover for net losses occurring after the fraud was committed. In this case, plaintiff was purportedly fraudulently induced into purchasing the stock. All profits and losses occurred after the fraud was committed and must be netted against each other. Other cases cited by plaintiff are not to the contrary. Since plaintiff has not suffered any damages, Count I is dismissed. See Etshokin [*80] v. Texasgulf, Inc., 612 F. Supp. 1220 (N.D. Ill. 1985).

C. Count II & VIII - Antitrust Violations

Count II alleges federal antitrust violations and Count VIII alleges violations of Illinois antitrust provisions. The Illinois law tracks federal law. Collins v. Associated Pathologists, Ltd., 844 F.2d 473 (7th Cir. 1988). As did the parties, the court applies the same rules to both Counts. Defendants have presented a number of grounds for dismissing the antitrust Counts. It is only necessary to discuss antitrust injury and standing.

Plaintiff alleges that [10] defendants sought to monopolize the market for the BehaviorScan system. Plaintiff also alleges that one tactic for monopolizing the market was forcing IRI employees to sign overbroad confidentiality agreements. For purposes of deciding the present motion, defendants concede these allegations are true. Plaintiff claims he was injured when defendants informed A.C. Nielsen and other potential employers about the confidentiality agreement. A.C. Nielsen declined to hire plaintiff to avoid litigation over trade secrets.

Plaintiff is alleging an attempt to monopolize the market for IRI's BehaviorScan system. While he refers to "anticompetitive" labor market tactics, he has not alleged in his complaint, or shown by citation to admissible evidence, that IRI also sought control over part or all of the relevant labor market. Radovich v. National Football League, 352 U.S. 445, 1 L. Ed. 2d 456, 77 S. Ct. 390 (1957), even if still good precedent despite more recent cases on the issue of antitrust standing, does not apply to the present case. Instead, plaintiff's standing must be based on the alleged monopolization of the BehaviorScan market. [1] [11] HN3[] Antitrust plaintiffs "must show more than simply an 'injury causally linked' to an antitrust violation; instead 'plaintiffs must prove antitrust injury, which is to say injury of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent and that flows from that which makes the defendants' acts unlawful.'" Southwest Suburban Board of Realtors, Inc. v. Beverly Area Planning Association, 830 F.2d 1374, 1377 (7th Cir. 1987) (quoting Brunswick Corp. v. Pueblo Bowl-O-Mat, Inc., 429 U.S. 477, 489, 50 L. Ed. 2d 701, 97 S. Ct. 690 (1977)). Accord Cargill, Inc. v. Monfort of Colorado, Inc., 479 U.S. 104, 107 S. Ct. 484, 489, 93 L. Ed. 2d 427 (1986). Antitrust injury alone does not satisfy the standing requirement. Even if suffering antitrust injury, the plaintiff must be a proper plaintiff under § 4 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 15. Id.

HN4[] The first inquiry is whether the injury sustained by plaintiff was "the type the antitrust [12] laws were intended to prevent." Beverly, 830 F.2d at 1379 (quoting Brunswick, 429 U.S. at 489). The Sherman Act is intended to assure customers the benefit of price competition and protect the economic freedom of participants in the market. Id. 830 F.2d at 1379 (quoting Associated General Contractors of California, Inc. v. California State Council of Carpenters, 459 U.S. 519, 538, 74 L. Ed. 2d 723, 103 S. Ct. 897 (1983)). The relevant market in the present case involves the provision of BehaviorScan-type services. Disher was not a participant in the market; he neither provides such services nor purchases them. See Beverly, 830 F.2d at 1379. Also, the purported monopolization was directed not at Disher, but at A.C. Nielsen and other competitors. Cf. id. That defendants took direct action against Disher does not change the analysis. Cf. id. (attempt to control brokerage services by boycotting a listing service does not make the listing service's injury an antitrust injury). Plaintiff did not suffer antitrust injury and therefore cannot bring an antitrust action. Even if plaintiff's injuries [13] could be found to be antitrust [*81]

---

[1] One of defendants' other grounds for dismissal is the failure to establish a relevant market. References in this opinion to a BehaviorScan market should not be interpreted as implicitly holding a relevant market has been shown. To the contrary, the court agrees with defendants that plaintiff has not shown a relevant market. That issue, however, need not be fully discussed since it is held plaintiff lacked antitrust injury and standing.

injuries, he would not have standing. IRI's competitors and customers, who suffer a more direct injury than Disher, are far more appropriate parties for bringing the action. It is unnecessary to grant standing to employees such as Disher. See id. at 1379-80. Counts II and VIII are dismissed.

D. Jurisdiction Over State Law Claims

Before turning to the next Count, there must be a brief digression to discuss jurisdiction. Disher originally filed a two-count complaint against all four defendants alleging federal securities fraud and federal antitrust violations. At the time, all parties were citizens of Illinois for purposes of determining diversity jurisdiction. Disher subsequently established Ohio as his new place of residence. He then amended his complaint to add additional federal claims and also state law claims. All the new claims arose out of the same conduct, transactions, or occurrences alleged in the original complaint. The state law claims were then alleged to be before the court on both diversity jurisdiction and pendent jurisdiction.

[14] HN5[] It is a well-settled rule that diversity of citizenship is determined as of the date the action is commenced. Fidelity & Deposit Co. of Maryland v. City of Sheboygan Falls, 713 F.2d 1261, 1266 (7th Cir. 1983); Benskin v. Addison Township, 635 F. Supp. 1014, 1017 (N.D. Ill. 1986); C.A. Wright, A. Miller, & E. Cooper, Federal Practice & Procedure § 3608 (2d ed. 1984). At the time plaintiff commenced this suit, there was no diversity of citizenship between the parties and therefore no basis for diversity jurisdiction. It does not matter that plaintiff amended his complaint after he moved to Ohio. The amendment relates back to the date the lawsuit was commenced. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 15(c). There still was no diversity jurisdiction. Oliney v. Gardner, 771 F.2d 856, 858-59 (5th Cir. 1985); Wright, Miller, & Cooper, § 3608 at 458-59. There is no diversity jurisdiction over Disher's state law claims; there is only pendent jurisdiction over those claims.

HN6[] The ordinary rule for pendent jurisdiction is that all remaining pendent claims [15] are dismissed for lack of subject matter jurisdiction if all the federal claims are dismissed before trial. Moses v. County of Kenosha, 826 F.2d 708, 710 (7th Cir. 1987) (per curiam). Since all of Disher's federal claims are being dismissed, the court ordinarily would not reach the merits of the pendent claims. There are, however, two exceptions that apply to the present case. Since the state antitrust claim is governed by the same rule that requires dismissal of the federal antitrust claim, it is proper to dismiss the state antitrust claim on its merits. Mechmet v. Four Seasons Hotels, Ltd., 825 F.2d 1173, 1178 (7th Cir. 1987). The other applicable exception is judicial economy. HN7[] "Judicial economy, the essential policy behind the modern doctrine of pendent jurisdiction which [United Mine Workers v. Gibbs, 383 U.S. 715, 16 L. Ed. 2d 218, 86 S. Ct. 1130 (1966)] created, supports the retention of pendent jurisdiction in any case where substantial judicial resources have already been committed, so that sending the case to another court [16] will cause a substantial duplication of effort." Graf v. Elgin, Joliet & Eastern Railway Co., 790 F.2d 1341, 1347-48 (7th Cir. 1986). Accord Moses, 826 F.2d at 711.

The present case has been before this court since 1983. At the same time, related state proceedings have been conducted which appear to be reaching a final stage. See Disher II, supra. The state proceedings could not resolve all the disputed claims since one of the claims was an exclusively federal claim. The exclusively federal claim and the other federal claims, however, are now being dismissed from the federal action. Some of the state law claims, though, were also left for resolution in this court. Since (a) this case has been pending in this court for about five years and (b) the remaining state law claim forms the partial basis of the federal racketeering claim and resolution of that state law claim affects the racketeering claim, the court finds this to be an appropriate [*82] case for exercising its discretion to retain jurisdiction over the pendent claims, despite the dismissal of the federal claims, for purposes of resolving the present motion for summary [17] judgment. See Graf, 790 F.2d at 1348.

E. Count IV - Breach of Fiduciary Duty

Count IV alleges a state law claim for breach of fiduciary duties. Defendants Fulgoni and Walter allegedly breached their duties as trustees of the voting trust by (i) inducing plaintiff to deposit the IRI shares into the voting trust through material misrepresentations and omissions; (ii) conditioning the release of plaintiff's stock upon plaintiff executing a covenant not to compete; (iii) refusing to rescind the trust and return plaintiff's stock to him after he made a timely demand under Ill. Rev. Stat. ch. 121 1/2, para. 137.13; and (iv) allowing all holders of voting trust certificates except plaintiff to exchange some of their certificates for stock in early 1984. Count I of Disher's state court complaint alleged (i), Count VIII alleged (iii) as an action for rescission for the violation of Illinois's securities law, and Count IX alleged (iv). [2] The allegation regarding the covenant not to compete may have been part of the allegedly outrageous manner in which plaintiff was terminated which was incorporated into Count VII for wrongful termination of employment. Prior to [18] trial in state court, the parties entered into an agreed order dismissing the damages aspect of Count I without prejudice and dismissing Count VII without prejudice.

After the second trial, the Circuit Court entered a judgment dismissing Counts I and VIII with prejudice. Regarding Count I, the court found no violation of duty by defendants as to the purchase of the stock and the formation of the voting trust. Regarding Count VIII, the court found the securities exempt from registration and therefore rescission could not be obtained based on no registration. The court entered judgment for plaintiff on Count IX, ordering defendants to release all of plaintiff's shares still held in trust. The court found defendants Fulgoni and Walter had breached their fiduciary duty by failing to include plaintiff in the decision to amend the voting trust. Both sides appealed. The Appellate Court affirmed the trial court's [19] judgment for plaintiff on Count IX. Disher II, 514 N.E.2d at 775-76. The question of whether rescission was a proper remedy was held to be moot. Id. at 776-77. Plaintiff had appealed the judgment against him on Count I, but had informed the Appellate Court that reaching that issue was unnecessary if it was otherwise held that the trust should be rescinded. The Appellate Court therefore never considered the issues concerning Count I. As for Count VIII, the securities were held not exempt from registration and para. 137.13 was held to be applicable. The Appellate Court reversed the judgment against plaintiff on Count VIII, remanding it to the Circuit Court to consider appropriate relief. Id. at 773-74.

Defendants argue that any claim as to misrepresentations in the formation of the voting trust is barred by res judicata in that the Circuit Court entered a judgment against plaintiff on Count I of the state complaint and that judgment was not reversed. The parties, however, agreed to dismiss the damages claim of Count I without prejudice. HN8[] In determining the effect [20] of the state court judgment, this court must give that judgment the same preclusive effect it would have in the courts of Illinois. Wozniak v. County of DuPage, 845 F.2d 677 (7th Cir. 1988); Torres v. Rebarchak, 814 F.2d 1219, 1222 (7th Cir. 1987). Ordinarily, res judicata bars all issues that were raised or could have been raised. Wozniak, slip op. at 7; Rebarchak, 814 F.2d at 1222. Illinois ordinarily does not permit the splitting of causes of action. Wozniak, slip op. at 8; Rebarchak, 814 F.2d at 1224. However, where the parties agree to dismiss certain claims, parts of claims, or forms of relief [*83] without prejudice, res judicata will not bar raising those claims or parts of claims in a subsequent proceeding. See id. at 1225-26; Restatement (Second) of Judgments § 26(1)(a) (1982). Plaintiff's claim is not barred by res judicata.

It is still possible, though, that the misrepresentation claim is barred by collateral estoppel. HN9[] The elements of collateral estoppel are: [21]

> 1) the issue sought to be precluded must be the same as that involved in the prior action, 2) the issue must have been actually litigated, 3) the determination of the issue must have been essential to the final judgment, and 4) the party against whom estoppel is invoked must be fully represented in the prior action.

Klingman v. Levinson, 831 F.2d 1292, 1295 (7th Cir. 1987). See also Wozniak, slip op. at 10. Plaintiff argues the third element is not satisfied since it was unnecessary for the Appellate Court to resolve the issues concerning Count I. The court agrees that collateral estoppel does not apply to preclude issues determined by the trial court as to Count I since the Appellate Court found it unnecessary to reach any issues involving Count I. See County of Cook v. Lynch, 648 F. Supp. 738, 740-41 (N.D. Ill. 1986) (quoting Restatement (Second) of Judgments § 27 comment o). [3]

---

[2] The four aspects of Count IV will hereafter be referred to as Counts IV(i), IV(ii), IV(iii) and IV(iv).

[3] If Disher had waived his opportunity to appeal Count I, there very well may have been an estoppel effect. This court, however, does not find Disher waived his appeal of Count I. Disher only made clear to the Appellate Court which appellate issues involved duplicative relief and therefore would not have to be reached if Disher was successful on one of the other issues. See Brief of [22] Plaintiff, on the other hand, argues that the state court judgment is res judicata as to breach of fiduciary duty in that plaintiff was successful on Counts VIII and IX of his state complaint. [4] [23] Plaintiff, however, points to no order or stipulation reserving his damages claims as to Counts VIII and IX for later adjudication. Under the rule against splitting causes of action, his damages claims would be barred by res judicata even though he succeeded on his claims for injunctive relief. See Wozniak, supra; Rebarchak, supra. But perhaps the parties agreed to separate the damages claims related to Counts VIII and IX and leave them for another proceeding. [5] Defendants do not raise res judicata as to the federal claims related to state Counts VIII and IX and therefore it will not be applied in their favor. It is clear, though, that res judicata does not apply in plaintiff's favor.

Plaintiff's discussion of the issue confuses res judicata with collateral estoppel. The court will consider whether collateral estoppel applies to certain issues specifically raised by plaintiff. It is clear that all the elements of collateral estoppel are satisfied as to state Count IX. Therefore, defendants Walter and Fulgoni cannot dispute that they breached their fiduciary duties in allowing other holders of voting trust certificates, but not plaintiff, to exchange [24] some of their certificates for stock in early 1984. As for Count IV(iii), the question is whether the issues are the same. State Count VIII was a claim for rescission under Illinois's securities law and federal Count IV is an alleged breach of fiduciary duty. Defendants Walter and Fulgoni -- who were the only defendants to Count VIII -- are only precluded from contesting [*84] that plaintiff had the right to rescind the voting trust under Illinois law. They can still contest whether their refusal to rescind the trust was a breach of fiduciary duty. In discussing claims concerning whether Disher's confidentiality agreement with IRI was enforceable, the Appellate Court stated that IRI's attempt to merge the confidentiality agreement into a non-competition restrictive covenant "would have rendered Disher substantially unemployable in his chosen profession." Disher II, 514 N.E.2d at 780. The court did not make a finding that the proposed covenant was an attempted extortion. Moreover, the "finding" as to the hypothetical effect of the restrictive covenant was not essential to the court's ruling that the confidentiality agreement -- not the covenant -- was overbroad. [25] Disher can rely on no collateral estoppel effect as to this issue.

The court will consider each aspect of Count IV in turn.

Count IV(i) alleges plaintiff was induced into entering into the voting trust through material misrepresentations. As with the securities fraud claims, defendants argue that plaintiff made a profit and therefore can prove no damages. Plaintiff does not argue that Illinois law as to damages for fiduciary breaches is different from federal securities law as regards compensatory damages in this case. As discussed above, plaintiff cannot show he suffered a loss in being induced into entering into the voting trust. He therefore suffered no compensatory damages. He argues, however, that he is also entitled to punitive damages under Illinois law. But HN10[] Illinois does not permit a claim for punitive damages where no actual damage is shown. McGrew v. Heinold Commodities, Inc., 147 Ill. App. 3d 104, 497 N.E.2d 424, 494, 100 Ill. Dec. 446 (1986); Florsheim v. Travelers Indemnity Co. of Illinois, 75 Ill. App. 3d 298, 393 N.E.2d 1223, 1233, 30 Ill. Dec. 876 (1979). [26] Count IV(i) is dismissed.

Count IV(ii) alleges defendants conditioned the release of plaintiff's stock upon plaintiff executing a restrictive covenant not to compete. Defendants argue, among other things, that the restrictive covenant was never entered into and therefore the proposal caused Disher no injury. Disher does not dispute this. Therefore Count IV(ii) is Plaintiff-Appellant David C. Disher at 3-5, reproduced in Defendant's Supplementary Appendix at 10-12. Disher will not be penalized for aiding the Appellate Court by pointing out the overlap and relationship between issues.

---

[4] Count IX was added in an amendment to conform the pleadings to the judgment. A copy of this amendment was not provided to the court, but presumably Count IX was only a claim for injunctive relief. See Transcript of July 18, 1985 proceedings before Judge Porter at 15, Defendants' Appendix at 201. Count VIII only sought rescission and delivery of the stock certificates as relief.

[5] At a state court hearing on July 18, 1985, defendants' attorney referred to plaintiff amending his complaints to present damages claims in federal court only. Plaintiff's attorney referred to this being done by agreement. Defendants' attorney did not concede the amendments had been done by agreement, but also did not dispute that they had been. Judge Porter stated he would not go on to consider damages if nothing further was to be presented. Id. at 15-16, Defendants' Appendix at 201-02. Under the Restatement, acquiescence as well as agreement can result in the splitting of a cause of action. Id. § 26(1)(a).

dismissed. Disher can obtain no damages as regards the proposed restrictive covenant. The court is not ruling on whether the alleged facts as to the restrictive covenant are otherwise admissible to show motive or intent, or for some other purpose.

Count IV(iii) alleges defendants improperly refused to rescind the trust after Disher made a timely demand for rescission under Illinois law. As discussed above, defendants cannot contest that they should have honored Disher's request. They argue, however, that their refusal to honor the request is not a breach of fiduciary duty. They argue the statutory obligation to rescind in circumstances of the type in this case apply to all sellers and refusal to rescind is a statutory violation, not a fiduciary breach. Defendants cite no cases in support of this view. Plaintiff argues [27] that violation of a statute can also be a breach of fiduciary duty. As an example, he argues that conversion of funds held by a fiduciary, which is also a statutory theft violation, is a breach of fiduciary duty. The only case cited by plaintiff is inapposite and does not even support the example cited by plaintiff.

Paragraph 137.13 provides a civil remedy for sales of securities in violation of Illinois's Securities Act. It provides for rescission, not damages. See Peoria Union Stock Yards Co. Retirement Plan v. Penn Mutual Life Insurance Co., 698 F.2d 320, 324 (7th Cir. 1983); Renovitch v. Stewardship Concepts, Inc., 654 F. Supp. 353, 359 (N.D. Ill. 1987). It further provides that a purchaser seeking rescission can obtain his or her attorney's fees incurred in an action brought pursuant to para. 137.13. Plaintiff, however, is not making a claim under Illinois's securities law. His claim is one for breach of fiduciary duty. It is inapposite for defendants to argue para. 137.13 only provides certain remedies when plaintiff is not seeking remedies under the statute. [*85] Plaintiff, in this claim, is not seeking relief for the securities [28] law violation -- that is the registration problem -- but is seeking relief for a fiduciary not following the procedures required by para. 137.13.

This issue is not adequately briefed by either side, but HN11[] the burden is on movants to show they are entitled to summary judgment. Therefore the court should not dismiss the claim on this argument. In any event, the court believes this aspect of plaintiff's claim should not be dismissed. HN12[] A trustee has a duty to reasonably defend the trust against a suit for rescission. A. W. Scott, Law of Trusts § 178 at 1429 (3d ed. 1967). Also, fiduciaries will not ordinarily be held liable for incorrectly speculating as to the results of a lawsuit. See Scott v. Perona, Perona & Tonozzi, 115 Ill. App. 3d 76, 450 N.E.2d 24, 26, 70 Ill. Dec. 811 (1983). But a fiduciary must act reasonably and in good faith. That the trial court held that the securities were exempt from registration indicates the trustee's position was reasonable. However, Disher [29] claims the trustees acted unreasonably and with disloyalty toward him. Defendants do not argue the uncontested facts are to the contrary. Therefore, it must be assumed that defendants acted unreasonably and with disloyalty.

Defendants also argue that Disher cannot pursue his claim for breach of fiduciary duty because the trust was found to be void ab initio and was rescinded. Illinois law, however, provides that a trustee's duties remain in effect even during a period in which litigation seeks to void or invalidate a trust. Ill. Rev. Stat. ch. 17, para. 1672. The issue raised by defendants here was also raised by the defendants in Scott, a case not cited by the parties but which appears to be the only case considering the issue. The trial court held that a claim for breach of fiduciary duty cannot be maintained where the underlying trust has been determined to be void. The majority on the Appellate Court appears to have believed otherwise, but reaching that issue was not necessary to its decision. See Scott, 450 N.E.2d at 25-26. The dissent, however, found it necessary to reach the issue and held the trial court had been wrong. Id. 450 N.E.2d at 27 [30] (Stouder, P.J., dissenting). This court holds that HN13[] a claim for breach of fiduciary duty can be maintained even if the agreement creating the fiduciary relationship is subsequently held to be void since, at the time the breach occurs, the fiduciary was bound to perform his or her fiduciary duties. Additionally, as plaintiff points out, the Appellate Court in Disher II found both that the trust was void and that fiduciary duties were breached. The issue now raised was not expressly considered by the Appellate Court, but defendants make no argument here that they had no opportunity to make the argument before the Appellate Court. At least as to Count IV(iv), which was also claimed in state court, if not Count IV(iii) as well, defendants are estopped from arguing they could not have breached fiduciary duties because the trust agreement was voided. Count IV(iii) cannot be dismissed on the merits.

Count IV(iv) alleges defendants Fulgoni and Walter breached their fiduciary duties in amending the trust without involving Disher. The state court has already found this to be a breach of fiduciary [31] duty and as a result ordered defendants to release Disher's shares. As already discussed, plaintiff can raise this claim even if the trust agreement was void ab initio. Defendants also argue that plaintiff has not alleged any damages as regards this aspect of the claim. Defendants, however, took action that permitted some beneficiaries of the trust to withdraw shares while not permitting Disher and others to do so. The state court found this to be a breach of the duty of loyalty and impartiality entitling Disher to withdraw all his shares. Had plaintiff been able to withdraw all or part of his shares at the time of the breach, he may have been able to sell at a higher price and might not have been put in the situation where he had to sell off personal assets. Count IV(iv) cannot be dismissed.

F. Count III - RICO

Count III alleges a claim under the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations [*86] Act ("RICO"), 18 U.S.C. § 1961 et seq. The purported predicate acts are securities fraud, wire fraud, and mail fraud. Defendants again argue plaintiff has not shown he was damaged. If the predicate acts are limited to the securities fraud alleged [32] in Count I (which also constitutes mail and wire fraud), then plaintiff has not shown any damages. Plaintiff argues, however, that the breaches of fiduciary duty can also constitute mail and wire fraud. The securities fraud induced plaintiff to enter into the voting trust and, as already discussed, plaintiff did not suffer a loss by entering into that arrangement and therefore incurred no damages. The fiduciary breaches that remain, however, did not cause plaintiff to enter into the trust agreement, but instead prevented him from withdrawing at a time when IRI shares were at a higher value. The fiduciary breaches therefore caused damage. If they can constitute RICO predicate acts, then plaintiff will still have a viable RICO claim if he can overcome defendants' other challenges to the RICO claim.

HN14[] Not every common law breach of fiduciary duty that involves mailings or use of the telephone constitutes a violation of the mail and wire fraud statutes. See United States v. Kwiat, 817 F.2d 440, 444 (7th Cir.), cert. denied, 484 U.S. 924, 108 S. Ct. 284, 98 L. Ed. 2d 245 (1987). [33] The scheme to defraud element of those crimes must still be satisfied. See United States v. Wellman, 830 F.2d 1453, 1461 (7th Cir. 1987). "The scheme need not be fraudulent on its face, but must involve some sort of fraudulent misrepresentation or omissions calculated to deceive persons of ordinary prudence and comprehension." Id. at 1462 (quoting United States v. Pearlstein, 576 F.2d 531, 535 (3d Cir. 1978)). See also United States v. Dial, 757 F.2d 163, 170 (7th Cir.), cert. denied, 474 U.S. 838, 88 L. Ed. 2d 95, 106 S. Ct. 116 (1985) (concealment). Also, in light of the Supreme Court's recent decision in McNally v. United States, 483 U.S. 350, 107 S. Ct. 2875, 97 L. Ed. 2d 292 (1987), the scheme must be one to obtain money or property from the victim. Wellman, 830 F.2d at 1462; United States v. Holzer, 840 F.2d 1343, 1348 (7th Cir. 1988); [6] United States v. Lytle, 677 F. Supp. 1370, 1381-84 (N.D. Ill. 1988).

[34] Plaintiff's reliance on Dial is misplaced. In Dial, the defendant broker breached his fiduciary duty to his customers by trading on his own account ahead of his customers' accounts. The portion of the opinion cited by plaintiff refers to fraud in soliciting customers in that Dial implicitly represented to his customers he would seek the best price for them, a representation contrary to his breach of fiduciary duty. 757 F.2d at 168. To the extent Disher was induced into the trust agreement by misrepresentations as to when he could pull his shares out of the trust, he has suffered no damage since, as already discussed, he did not suffer a loss on the transaction. In Dial, there were also misrepresentations at the time transactions were made on the customers' accounts. These misrepresentations, which were independent of the breaches of fiduciary duty, caused losses for the customers. Id. at 169. Disher can only rely on the fiduciary breaches as being fraud that caused him damage if the breaches themselves were misrepresentations or some other type of fraud. He, however, only argues that the fiduciary breaches were part of a scheme to induce [35] him to enter into the trust agreement. [7] He did not incur any damages as a result of that scheme. [8] [*87] Plaintiff did not suffer any damages as a result of any purported RICO violations and therefore Count III is dismissed. It is unnecessary to consider defendants' other grounds for dismissing this Count.

[6] Plaintiff relies in part on United States v. Runnels, 833 F.2d 1183 (6th Cir. 1987), modified in part, 842 F.2d 909 (6th Cir. 1988), rehearinq qranted & opinion vacated, 1988 U.S. App. LEXIS 8293, No. 86-1923 (6th Cir. May 3, 1988). Runnels is not considered because, after plaintiff filed his brief, the Seventh Circuit rejected the holding in Runnels. See Holzer, 840 F.2d at 1347-48. Also the Sixth Circuit recently granted another rehearing in Runnels.

[36] G. Conclusion

All of plaintiff's claims are dismissed with prejudice except Counts IV(iii) and IV(iv) against Walter and Fulgoni. These are state law claims. It was determined that it was appropriate to consider the merits of the state law claims for purposes of deciding the motion for summary judgment. The court, however, does not believe it is appropriate to retain jurisdiction over Counts IV(iii) and IV(iv) for further proceedings. As already discussed, the ordinary rule is to dismiss pendent state law claims when the federal claims are dismissed before trial. Judicial economy was served by resolving all issues -- federal and state -- in the motion for summary judgment. It will not be further served by retaining jurisdiction over the state law claims. The state court had a trial on the merits of a claim identical to Count IV(iv). The state court was ready and willing to reach the issue of damages, but plaintiff urged that court not to decide damages. On a claim similar to Count IV(iii) the Appellate Court remanded the case for determination of an appropriate remedy. The Illinois Supreme Court very recently denied leave to appeal. The state court, having completed trials [37] of this case on the merits, having also conducted hearings on preliminary injunctions, and now having the case on remand, is more familiar with the facts of the case than this court. Moreover, state law claims are more appropriately resolved in state court. Therefore, Counts IV(iii) and IV(iv) are dismissed without prejudice.

IT IS THEREFORE ORDERED that:

(1) Counts V, VI, and VII of the Amended Complaint are voluntarily dismissed with prejudice.

(2) Defendants' motion for summary judgment is granted in part and denied in part.

(3) Counts I, II, III, IV(i), IV(ii), and VIII of the Amended Complaint are dismissed with prejudice.

(4) Counts IV(iii) and IV(iv) of the Amended Complaint are dismissed without prejudice.

(5) The Clerk of the Court is directed to enter judgment in favor of all defendants and against plaintiff without prejudice as to Counts IV(iii) and IV(iv) and with prejudice as to all other Counts of the Amended Complaint. Plaintiff shall pay costs to defendants Information Resources, Inc. and John Malec. Defendants Gian Fulgoni and William C. Walter shall bear their own costs and plaintiff shall bear all his own costs.

End of Document

---

[7] Recent cases hold that breaches of fiduciary duties do not constitute mail or wire fraud under the theory that the victim is deprived of honest and loyal services. See Holzer, 840 F.2d at 1343; Lytle, 677 F. Supp. at 1381-84. Those cases, however, involve the question of whether there was a scheme to obtain money or property. They do not involve the question of whether the fiduciary breach constitutes fraud.

[8] Without developing any argument and without citing any predicate act other than mail or wire fraud, plaintiff refers to "extortionistic demands." See 18 U.S.C. § 1961(1)(A); 18 U.S.C. § 1961(1)(B) (incorporating 18 U.S.C. § 1951). Since the argument is not developed, the court does not consider whether extortion as a RICO predicate act has been shown. Since the argument is not developed, the court also does not consider whether a "scheme to defraud [defendants'] employees of money they could have earned by selling their services to IRI's competitors by unlawfully restraining the labor market" has been shown and would constitute wire or mail fraud.

United States v. BNS, Inc.

United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit

May 13, 1988, Argued and Submitted ; May 27, 1988, Filed

Nos. 88-5849, 88-5850

Reporter

848 F.2d 945 *; 1988 U.S. App. LEXIS 7233 ; 1988-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P68,038

United States of America, Plaintiff, v. BNS Inc.; Gifford-Hill & Co., Inc., Defendants-Appellants, v. Koppers Company, Inc., Participant-Appellee; United States of America, Plaintiff-Appellant, v. BNS Inc.; Gifford-Hill & Co., Inc., Defendants, v. Koppers Company, Inc., Participant-Appellee

Prior History: [1] On Appeal from the United States District Court for the Central District of California, D.C. Nos. CV 88-1452-R, CV 88-1452-R, Manuel L. Real, District Judge, Presiding.

Core Terms

district court, injunction, aggregate, consent judgment, antitrust, public interest, preliminary injunction, merger, tender offer, acquisition, consent decree, shareholders, antitrust violation, irreparable harm, hardships, target, disapproves, takeover, anticompetitive, hold-separate, proceedings, trusteeship, violations, exceeded, appoint, parties, premium, enjoin, Writs, court's jurisdiction

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Penalties

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Writs > All Writs Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > US Department of Justice Actions > Civil Actions > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Jurisdiction Over Actions > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Injunctions > Preliminary & Temporary Injunctions

HN1[] Clayton Act, Penalties

A district court has the authority under the All Writs Act, 28 U.S.C.S. § 1651, to issue a preliminary injunction to preserve its jurisdiction under the Antitrust Procedures and Penalties Act (APPA), 15 U.S.C.S. § 16(b)-(h).

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Appellate Jurisdiction > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Injunctions > General Overview

HN2[] Appeals, Appellate Jurisdiction

An appellate court may modify an injunction entered by a trial court.

Counsel: Robert B. Nicholson, Esq., John P. Fonte, Esq., Department of Justice, Washington, District of Columbia, for Appellant U.S.A.

Mark Leddy, Esq., Cleary, Gottlieb, Steen & Hamilton, Washington, District of Columbia, Gregory P. Stone, Esq., Munger, Tolles, & Olson, Los Angeles, California, for Appellants BNS Inc. and Gifford-Hill & Co.

John Bodner, Jr., Esq., Howrey & Simon, Washington, District of Columbia, William C. Conkle, Esq., Conkle & Olesten, Los Angeles, California, for Appellee Koppers.

Judges: Pregerson, Boochever, and Beezer, Circuit Judges. Beezer, Circuit Judge, dissenting.

Opinion

[*946] ORDER

On April 5, 1988, the United States District Court [2] for the Central District of California entered a preliminary injunction prohibiting BNS Inc. from attempting to acquire a controlling interest in Koppers Co. through a cash tender offer. The order was issued to maintain the status quo while the court considered a proposed consent decree pursuant to the Antitrust Procedures and Penalties Act (APPA), 15 U.S.C. § 16(b)-(h) (1982).

The United States, BNS, and Gifford-Hill & Co., an affiliated firm, stipulated to the proposed decree to remedy anticompetitive effects the government alleged would result in the Los Angeles and Orange County aggregate market from the acquisition of Koppers. Aggregate is rock, sand, and gravel suitable for mixing in concrete, asphalt, and other road or construction materials. Both BNS, through Gifford-Hill, and Koppers, through its wholly-owned subsidiary Sully-Miller Contracting Co., manufacture and distribute road and construction materials in Southern California. The consent decree, if approved by the district court, would require BNS to maintain Koppers' aggregate facility in Irwindale, California [3] separately and to divest it by January 1, 1989.

[*947] Koppers, which was granted leave to "participate" in the APPA proceedings under 15 U.S.C. § 16 (f), requested the injunction. The court found that its jurisdiction under the APPA would be hindered and irreparable harm to competition in the aggregate market threatened if the transaction was completed before it reviewed the consent decree. The government, BNS, and Gifford-Hill opposed the injunction, and sought interlocutory review under 28 U.S.C. § 1292(a)(1) (1982).

We conclude that HN1[] the district court had authority to issue a preliminary injunction to preserve its APPA jurisdiction under the All Writs Act, 28 U.S.C. § 1651 (1982). Control by BNS of Koppers' aggregate operation and related facilities in Irwindale during the pendency of the court's proceedings could conceivably result in irreparable anticompetitive harm. We believe that if BNS is sufficiently divorced from control of that operation and related facilities, which currently are managed by Sully-Miller, [4] the district court's concerns will be adequately addressed.

HN2[] An appellate court may modify an injunction. State of Washington v. Central Contractors Ass'n, 453 F.2d 383, 384 (9th Cir. 1971); see Bresgal v. Brock, 843 F.2d 1163, slip op. at 3844-47 (9th Cir. 1987) (amended opinion). Upon consideration of possible harm to competition in the aggregate market and the relative hardships to the parties in this case, we have concluded that appointment of an independent trustee to assume control of Sully-Miller will preserve the district court's jurisdiction. We therefore order that the injunction be modified as follows:

(1) The preliminary injunction shall remain in force until a trustee is appointed by the district court to assume control of Sully-Miller. At such time as BNS may acquire a controlling interest in Koppers, the trustee shall:

(a) manage the Irwindale aggregate operation and related facilities separately and independently from the other assets owned by Koppers, BNS, and Gifford-Hill;

(b) maintain the confidentiality of all records and plans [5] pertaining to the aggregate operation and related facilities; and

(c) remain in control of Sully-Miller until the court enters its order approving or disapproving the consent decree under the APPA.

(2) In the event the court disapproves the proposed decree, the trustee shall remain in control of Sully-Miller for an additional fourteen-day period to permit the parties to take such action, if any, that they deem appropriate.

(3) The trustee shall not assume control of Sully-Miller until the United States District Court for the Western District of Pennsylvania has lifted the injunction on the proposed acquisition ordered in Koppers Co. v. American Express Co., Civ. No. 88-557 (W.D. Pa. April 15, 1988).

(4) Reasonable costs of such trusteeship shall be paid by BNS. In the event that BNS does not agree to this provision, the preliminary injunction previously entered by the district court shall remain in effect without modification until such time as the court approves or disapproves the proposed consent decree.

Because this matter has been expedited, we have not set forth our reasons in detail. An opinion will follow.

The district court's order is MODIFIED and the [6] case REMANDED for the immediate appointment of a trustee in accordance with this order.

Dissent by: BEEZER

Dissent

BEEZER, Circuit Judge, dissenting:

BNS Inc. and Gifford-Hill & Co., Inc. (BNS) have announced an offer to purchase the common stock of Koppers and Company, Inc. (Koppers). In a filing under the Hart-Scott-Rodino Act, 15 U.S.C. § 18a, BNS volunteered that overlap of aggregate production by BNS and Koppers in Irwindale, California might raise an antitrust question. After an investigation, the Justice Department concluded that a takeover would be anticompetitive only in the aggregate market in Irwindale. The United States filed a civil antitrust action against [*948] BNS to remedy this discrete problem. The United States and BNS stipulated to entry of a proposed final judgment (the "consent judgment") according to which BNS would divest itself of Koppers' aggregate facility in Irwindale. The United States and BNS submitted to a proceeding under the Antitrust Procedures and Penalties Act, 15 U.S.C. § 16 ("APPA" or the "Tunney Act"), to review the proposed antitrust consent judgment. Koppers, the target of the tender offer, having [7] obtained the status of "participant" in this proceeding, petitioned for and received a preliminary injunction prohibiting BNS from consummating the purchase of Koppers' shares. The United States and BNS appeal. I would dissolve the injunction.

This case presents the question whether a district court may enjoin a tender offer under the Antitrust Procedures and Penalties Act, at the request of a target company that is but a "participant" in the proceeding, and over the objection of the United States. The district court lacked authority to grant the injunction. Even if the district court had authority, the district court improperly granted an injunction in this case. The order we issue today does not correct the district court's mistakes.

I

The district court did not have authority to issue a preliminary injunction under the All Writs Act, 28 U.S.C. § 1651. That Act merely states that courts "may issue all writs necessary or appropriate in aid of their respective jurisdictions." A writ in aid of jurisdiction presupposes jurisdiction. In this case, the district court's jurisdiction is itself in question. Our task is to decide whether the APPA establishes [8] jurisdiction allowing for an injunction under the circumstances of this case. In my view, the district court's injunction entails three jurisdictional problems.

A

To begin with, the district court based its injunction on matters beyond the subject matter of the APPA. The APPA authorizes a district court to review the proposed consent judgment between the government and a defendant. A 60-day notice and comment period culminates in the district court's statement on whether it is in the public interest for the government to resolve its complaint by means of the proposed consent judgment.

As this framework suggests, the APPA confines a district court to scrutiny of violations the government has alleged. At its core the APPA states:

> Before entering any consent judgment proposed by the United States under this section, the court shall determine that the entry of such judgment is in the public interest.

15 U.S.C. § 16(e) (emphasis added). The APPA goes on to say that for the purpose of making a public interest determination, the district court may consider "(1) the competitive impact of such judgment, including termination of alleged violations. [9] . . ." Id. In addition, the district court may consider "(2) the impact of entry of such judgment upon the public generally and individuals alleging specific injury from the violations set forth in the complaint. . . ." Id.

From the very language of the statute, Congressional intent is unmistakable: the district court has jurisdiction only over violations alleged in the complaint. [1] As we indicated in an earlier APPA case, United States v. Bechtel Corp., 648 F.2d 660, 666 (9th Cir. 1981), this court does not accept that a district court may, or should, "look beyond the strict relationship between complaint [*949] and remedy in evaluating the public interest." The reason is plain: courts must respect prosecutorial discretion inherent in the executive branch. As we said in Bechtel, "balancing of competing social and political interests affected by a proposed antitrust consent decree must be left, in the first instance, to the discretion of the Attorney General." Id.

[10] In this case the government alleged only a violation in the aggregate market in Irwindale. The government's complaint is crystal-clear:

> a. actual and potential competition between Gifford-Hill and Koppers in the extraction, processing and sale of aggregate in the Irwindale Aggregate District will be eliminated; and
>
> b. competition generally in the extraction, processing and sale of aggregate in the Irwindale Aggregate District may be substantially lessened.

At the instigation of Koppers, the district court based its injunction on entirely different concerns -- concerns about an anticompetitive merger in general, and about an anticompetitive ready-mix market in particular.

Most narrowly, the district court wanted to make sure that if it became convinced that violations existed in the ready-mix market, as well as in the aggregate market, the court could "make them go away." In its findings of fact the district court noted that California had reached a settlement with BNS that "raises questions regarding the efficacy of the proposed consent judgment." California's settlement with BNS dealt chiefly with the ready-mix market, not the aggregate market. The United [11] States's complaint alleged an antitrust violation only in the aggregate market. By referring to California's settlement with BNS, the district court made clear it was acting on a concern about the ready-mix market, a matter not raised in the government's complaint.

---

[1] Legislative history is in accord. The Senate Report on the proposed bill observed that the court is "to make a judgment as to whether or not the proposed relief is sufficient with respect to the conduct alleged in the complaint." S. Rep. No. 298, 93rd Cong., 1st Sess. 3 (1973). In debate in the House of Representatives, Rep. Barbara Jordan explained that "the judge cannot compel the parties to write a different consent decree. He cannot compel the parties to go to trial. But what the judge can do is make a judgment as to whether the proposed solution to the alleged violations are [sic] in the public interest. And this is all the bill requires of the judge." 120 Cong. Rec. 36,344 (November 19, 1974).

Most broadly, the district court granted the preliminary injunction to preserve the court's asserted jurisdiction over "the matter of this merger." The district court wanted to establish "whether or not this merger . . . was one that affected competition adversely."

As these statements suggest, the district court assumed a wide-ranging power to supervise antitrust enforcement. The matter of the government's complaint was simply an antitrust violation in the aggregate market in Irwindale, California. The district court exceeded its jurisdiction by basing the injunction on matters beyond the sole violation alleged by the government.

B

In defining a court's jurisdiction, Congress may limit available remedies. See 26 U.S.C. § 7421(a) (Anti-Injunction Act). See also Religious Technology Center v. Wollersheim, 796 F.2d 1076, 1084 (9th Cir.) (civil RICO statute does not authorize [12] grant of injunctive relief to private plaintiff), cert. denied, 479 U.S. 1103, 107 S. Ct. 1336, 94 L. Ed. 2d 187 (1986). The All Writs Act does not override a statutory withholding of remedies: if a statute providing jurisdiction forbids injunctions, a court may not issue injunctions "in aid" of its jurisdiction under that statute. The statute in this case, the APPA, only doubtfully allows for injunctions the government does not request, and certainly does not allow for injunctions over the government's objection. The solution the district court adopted -- an injunction against the merger, over the government's objection -- exceeded the court's jurisdiction.

Besides enabling the district court to enter a consent judgment, the APPA affords a district court authority to "determine that the entry of such judgment is in the public interest." 15 U.S.C. § 16(e). The APPA gives the district court a well-tailored, limited set of remedies. By withholding approval of the consent judgment, the district court may deprive the government of the court's contempt powers for use in enforcing the judgment. By declaring that the proposed settlement is not in [13] the public interest, the district court may pressure the government to reconsider its approach to resolving the antitrust violation at issue.

[*950] The APPA does not give the district court authority to grant relief that the government not only did not seek in its complaint but objects to in the APPA proceeding. In this case, the district court's rogue injunction has the effect of converting the government's complaint into an attack on the merger itself, rather than on one small part of the merger. As indicated above, this result is at odds with the notion of prosecutorial discretion. As we said in United States v. Edmonson, 792 F.2d 1492, 1497 (9th Cir.), cert. denied, 479 U.S. 1037, 107 S. Ct. 892, 93 L. Ed. 2d 844 (1986), "The decision whether to prosecute, and the decision as to the charge to be filed, rests in the discretion of the Attorney General."

An example shows the fallacy of district court authority to enjoin. Suppose in this case the government decides that a derailed merger is worse for the economy than minor anticompetitive effects in Irwindale. Then the government could dismiss this action, and the district court would [14] have no recourse. Under the APPA -- under the Constitution -- the court could not compel the Justice Department to perpetuate an action it has decided to abandon. As the Court said in Heckler v. Chaney, 470 U.S. 821, 831-32, 84 L. Ed. 2d 714, 105 S. Ct. 1649 (1985), the "decision not to prosecute or enforce, whether through civil or criminal process, is a decision generally committed to an agency's absolute discretion."

The district court selected a remedy not authorized by the APPA. Again, the court assumed broad powers over antitrust enforcement. Just as the district court would have no authority to keep the action alive, the court had no authority to convert the action into something other than what the government chose to bring. In particular, the court did not have jurisdiction to grant an injunction over the government's objection.

C

Furthermore, the district court did not have jurisdiction over Koppers' request in the first place. The APPA allows a district court to authorize "participation in proceedings before the court by interested persons or agencies, including . . . intervention as a party pursuant to the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure." 15 U.S.C. § 16 [15] (f)(3). Koppers sought leave from the district court "to participate" in the APPA proceeding. Koppers did not seek to intervene under the Federal Rules -- did not apply for intervention under Rule 24, did not serve a motion announcing intervention under Rule 5.

In short, Koppers was not, and is not, a party to the action. In United States v. Stroh Co., 1982-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P. 64,804 (D.D.C. June 4, 1982), a district court was faced with a competitor of the defendant that attempted to intervene and request a preliminary injunction in an APPA proceeding. The court denied intervention. Because the outsider lacked party status, "it has no standing to pursue such relief." Id. at 71,959 n.2. Similarly, because Koppers is not a party, it has no standing to pursue a preliminary injunction. By treating Koppers as if it were a party, then allowing Koppers to move for an injunction, the district court exceeded its jurisdiction under the APPA. [2]

[16] Stroh should be a model for this case in all respects. Another outsider in Stroh attempted to intervene so as to interject issues "unrelated to the central issue in this case." United States v. The Stroh Brewery Co., 1982-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P. 64,782 at 71,829 n.3 (D.D.C. June 8, 1982). One of the unrelated issues, as in our case, was the "conjectured failure of the plant divestiture provision." Id. at 71,829 n.2. [*951] In rejecting this attempt to intervene, the court observed:

> This attempt seeks to shift this Court's attention from the concerns of the Tunney Act -- where the focus is on whether approval of the proposed settlement is in the public interest -- to the earlier decision of the original parties [the government and the defendant] to forego further litigation and settle this case.

Id. at 71,829 n.3.

In our case, unfortunately, the district court went along with Koppers' attempt to shift the court's attention. By considering matters outside the complaint, by issuing an injunction over the government's objection, and by granting a request for an injunction from a non-party, the district court exceeded its jurisdiction [17] under the APPA. Because the district court exceeded its jurisdiction, the district court could not invoke the All Writs Act "in aid" of its jurisdiction.

II

Even if the district court had authority to issue an injunction, the district court abused its discretion in holding that this case meets the standard for a preliminary injunction. In addition, the district court misunderstood the law with respect to important issues in litigation. See Wilson v. Watt, 703 F.2d 395, 398 (9th Cir. 1983).

A

Considered as the moving "party," Koppers had the burden of demonstrating "probable success on the merits and the possibility of irreparable injury" or "that serious questions are raised and the balance of hardships tips sharply in its favor," or some combination of likely success and probable harm on the continuum between these extremes. Id. at 399. The district court abused its discretion by concluding that Koppers had met its burden. Not only is it impossible for Koppers to prevail on the merits, but Koppers does not even raise serious questions about the need for an injunction. Furthermore, the balance of hardships tips sharply in Koppers' disfavor.

[18] Koppers will gain nothing on the merits: no permanent injunction can result from the APPA proceeding. At the end of the 60-day review, the most the district court can do is disapprove the consent judgment. At that point the district court's APPA jurisdiction would expire. The government would then have to decide what to do. The government might dismiss the complaint, might go to trial on the present complaint, might even amend the complaint to seek an injunction against the merger. Even if the government chose to take further action, the government would do so in a later proceeding. Koppers would no longer be a "participant" and so could not shape the contents of the ultimate judgment.

[2] Even if Koppers had sought to intervene, Koppers would not have qualified for party status. In Stroh the judge rejected as "plainly incorrect" the competitor's argument that the APPA confers a conditional right to intervene, and the judge denied intervention on any ground. 1982-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P. 64,804 at 71,959 n.1. The judge properly considered that the competitor "is motivated by its own private interest." Id. at 71,961. Here Koppers plainly is motivated by its own private interest and so would not qualify for party status.

Koppers does not even raise serious questions about the need for an injunction. As indicated above, if the district court disapproved the consent judgment the government would have to decide what to do. The government has not indicated it would seek to enjoin the merger. Instead, the government has indicated it would, at most, sue for the same relief as is provided by the consent judgment -- divestiture of the Irwindale aggregate plant. As the government's Competitive Impact Statement notes, "the [19] government is satisfied that the proposed Final Judgment provides substantially all the relief it could expect to obtain if it were to litigate the case to a full trial on the merits."

In any event, the balance of hardships tips sharply against Koppers. Koppers' particular concerns suggest that the absence of an injunction during the 60 days of the APPA proceeding scarcely would impose a hardship on the public. Koppers maintained, and the district court found, that an acquisition pending the district court's determination of public interest would create unreasonable risks in several areas: Gifford-Hill might obtain confidential information about Koppers' aggregate operations; Koppers might have to sacrifice new pro-competitive ventures and opportunities; Koppers' ability to contract might suffer; and employee recruitment and morale in Irwindale might deteriorate.

[*952] These concerns do not impose a real hardship on the public; they pose at most a small, speculative threat to competition. Koppers is reduced to harping on these minor concerns because the consent judgment disarms any real threat to competition. The United States and BNS have stipulated that they will abide [20] by the proposed consent judgment even before it is approved. The proposed consent judgment includes a "hold-separate" provision. This provision will maintain Koppers' Irwindale aggregate business as an active going concern until BNS divests itself of the business. [3] The hold-separate provision precludes any real harm to competition during the 60 days of APPA review. [4]

[21] The hold-separate provision is a typical feature of cases like this one. As the D.C. Circuit explained in F.T.C. v. Exxon Corp., 205 U.S. App. D.C. 208, 636 F.2d 1336, 1343-44 (D.C. Cir. 1980) (citing cases):

> As a result of the short life-span of most tender offers, the issuance of a preliminary injunction blocking an acquisition or merger may prevent the transaction from ever being consummated. . . . Courts have often denied requests for a preliminary injunction if some less extreme means exist to safeguard the public interest. Perhaps the most common of such means is an order that permits the transaction to go forward, but requires the acquiring company to hold the acquired company as a separate entity during the course of subsequent antitrust litigation.

In this case a court did not even have to impose a hold-separate requirement. The parties voluntarily included such a requirement in their proposed consent judgment. Pursuant to the parties' stipulation, the government has the leverage to force BNS to heed the hold-separate provision of the proposed judgment. But even if BNS flouted that provision, the harm would not be irreparable: the United [22] States could then sue for a judgment that would repair the competitive balance in Irwindale, such as by requiring BNS to sell off all its facilities there.

---

[3] The hold-separate provision requires BNS and Gifford-Hill (i) to hold the business, including its assets, management, and operations, separate and apart from those of defendants; (ii) to provide and maintain sufficient working capital and lines of credit to maintain a viable, ongoing business; (iii) to use "all reasonable efforts" to keep the business "a viable and active competitor"; to preserve all plant and equipment, maintain all rights and permits, and conduct all necessary repairs; and (iv) to maintain separate financial books and records.

[4] If the consent judgment were approved, the hold-separate provision would continue in effect until BNS had divested itself of the Irwindale facility (pursuant to the decree's divestiture provision). The divestiture provision states that if BNS does not sell the Irwindale business by the end of the year, a trustee will be appointed to sell the facility at the best price attainable. The district court's proper role in the APPA proceeding is to consider whether the divestiture proposal, on these terms, is in the public interest.

By contrast, the injunction poses a grave threat of irreparable harm to BNS, to Koppers' shareholders, and to the public interest in efficient transfers of corporate control in the marketplace. The injunction causes delay in consummating the tender offer. Delay affords Koppers' management the opportunity to entrench itself or to negotiate a sale with another bidder more sympathetic to the personal stake of Koppers' management. As Judge Friendly recognized in overturning a preliminary injunction entered by a district court, "the grant of a temporary injunction on antitrust grounds at the behest of a target company spells the almost certain doom of a tender offer." Missouri Portland Cement Co. v. Cargill, Inc., 498 F.2d 851, 870 (2d Cir.), cert. denied, 419 U.S. 883, 42 L. Ed. 2d 123, 95 S. Ct. 150 (1974).

The injunction casts a pall over the takeover. Yet Koppers is unlikely to be able to arrange a more profitable offer for its shareholders. BNS's cash tender offer is $ 60 per share, a price [23] greater than the highest price at which a share of Koppers' common stock has ever been traded on the exchange. The offer is $ 15 higher than the highest price a share of Koppers' stock reached during 1988 prior to the offer. Multiplied by the 28 million shares outstanding, the offer would result in a premium [*953] of $ 420,000,000 for Koppers' shareholders.

If the injunction thwarts the takeover, the injunction will deprive BNS of ownership and control of a company that BNS has calculated to be worth at least $ 420,000,000 more than the preexisting market value. This is irreparable harm. [5] The injunction will deprive Koppers' shareholders of a premium in the same amount. This is irreparable harm. The district court, in deciding on the injunction, gave short shrift to these serious consequences. As a result, the district court badly miscalculated the balance of harms.

[24] Worst of all, the injunction will prevent an efficient change of corporate control. BNS is willing to pay a $ 420,000,000 premium for Koppers. The reason is that BNS is confident it can make Koppers more productive, and hence more profitable, than Koppers is on its own. To make the premium pay off, BNS will have to deploy Koppers' assets so much more productively that the present value of increased future profits from Koppers' assets will exceed $ 420,000,000. A court has no reason to doubt that BNS can make the premium pay off. Assuming BNS is successful, the takeover is efficient in that it transfers assets to new owners who can deploy them more productively -- to the extent that the nation's economic welfare will increase by upwards of $ 420,000,000.

The injunction imperils the takeover and so threatens to choke off this large increase in economic welfare. In addition, the injunction will set a precedent that may discourage efficient transfers of control in the future.

The injunction wreaks economic havoc way out of proportion to any threat to competition. The public interest in preventing antitrust violations (an interest already safeguarded by the hold-separate provision) [25] relates to a single facility in Irwindale, California responsible for one percent of Koppers' total sales. The public interest in efficient transfers relates to a possible deadweight loss in the economy of $ 420,000,000. The balance of hardships weighs heavily against Koppers -- against the injunction. The district court abused its discretion by granting the injunction.

B

Even if the district court had not abused its discretion in applying the standard for a preliminary injunction, the injunction still could not pass muster. The district court misunderstood the APPA with respect to important issues in litigation. These issues include the impact of the acquisition on Koppers and the culpability of BNS for the antitrust violation. The district court's misunderstanding of these issues hopelessly taints the court's decision to grant the preliminary injunction.

---

[5] As if this were not enough, BNS also faces the loss of sunk costs in the form of loan commitment fees and other expenses, such as attorneys' fees. These costs amount to $ 13,000,000. They would be wasted if delay from the injunction sabotaged the takeover. Not only did the district court fail to weigh this loss into the balance of hardships, the district court denied BNS's request for a substantial bond to protect BNS against the irretrievable loss of its sunk costs. This decision alone was abuse of discretion calling for us to dissolve the injunction.

(1) As is apparent from its findings, the district court, in deciding to grant the injunction, added "serious irreparable harm to . . . the business to be acquired" into the balance of hardships. The APPA does not justify a district court in considering harm to the target of a tender offer. The APPA requires a district court [26] to focus narrowly on whether a consent judgment is in the public interest. The public has no interest in whether a particular company is harmed, only in whether competition is harmed.

Accordingly, courts previously have not allowed a private party to use the APPA procedures to enjoin a tender offer. In cases when consent judgments have been entered in similar circumstances, tender offers have been completed within -- and without regard to -- the statutory sixty-day comment period under the APPA. See, e.g., United States v. Stroh Brewery, 47 Fed. Reg. 18,445 (April 29, 1982); United States v. Heileman, 47 Fed. Reg. 56,064 (December 14, 1982). The district court's decision [*954] to consider and act upon Koppers' complaints is unprecedented.

By considering the impact of the acquisition on a company as such, the district court misapprehended the APPA. What is worse, by considering the impact on a target company, the district court perverted the APPA into an anti-takeover statute. Ignoring the statute's public interest orientation, the district court allowed Koppers to block a tender offer under the APPA, even though Koppers would be [27] unable to do so otherwise. A target of a tender offer does not suffer the "antitrust injury" required for standing to bring an action claiming that the proposed acquisition violates the antitrust laws. See Cargill, Inc. v. Monfort of Colorado, 479 U.S. 104, 107 S. Ct. 484, 93 L. Ed. 2d 427 (1986); Central Nat. Bank v. Rainbolt, 720 F.2d 1183 (10th Cir. 1983). The district court's willingness to entertain Koppers' complaints in an APPA proceeding clashes with settled antitrust law. All in all, the district court's misunderstanding of what harm is relevant demands that this court quash the injunction.

Ironically, the district court's assessment of harm is erroneous. Considering Koppers as the sum of its shareholders, the acquisition does not threaten irreparable harm. As mentioned before, the acquisition promises an enormous premium to shareholders. Accordingly, Koppers' shareholders have tendered seventy-five percent of the company's shares. Wall Street Journal, May 23, 1988, p. 26, col. 4. It is the injunction that threatens irreparable harm to Koppers' shareholders, not the acquisition.

The district court's assessment of harm makes sense only [28] in relation to Koppers' management. The interest of Koppers' management, however, is the most narrow, self-serving of all. Koppers' management seeks to stall the tender offer and deprive Koppers' shareholders of the ability to choose to tender their stock to BNS. Koppers' management seeks to entrench itself in derogation of the rights of its shareholders. [6] Considering that the thrust of the APPA is to safeguard the public interest, the parochial motive of Koppers' management was another reason to prevent Koppers from taking a prominent role in the APPA proceeding.

(2) The district court found that "BNS will not suffer irreparable harm . . . since, among other reasons, [29] BNS knew at the time it made its tender offer and selected the April 7 expiration date that the proposed transaction presented serious questions of antitrust illegality and that it had no right to consummate the acquisition until the issue of antitrust illegality was completely resolved." This finding again betrays the district court's misunderstanding of the APPA. The district court's logic would require that the court enjoin the merger in each and every APPA case. After all, a party is subject to APPA proceedings precisely because that party has acknowledged it has antitrust problems (and has settled them with the government).

An automatic injunction is not the intent of the APPA. The APPA is neutral towards an acquiring company; that company is not somehow in flagrante delicto just because the acquisition poses antitrust problems. Treating BNS as culpable is particularly outlandish considering that the antitrust concern is a minor part of the merger and that BNS voluntarily disclosed the problem. The district court's misunderstanding of the APPA as making the acquirer culpable obviously invalidates the district court's decision to grant an injunction.

III

---

[6] In the APPA proceeding Koppers couched its objections in terms of harm to competition as against the public interest. None of Koppers' customers or competitors, however, felt the need to object to the merger as harmful to competition. The special interest of Koppers' management explains why only Koppers sought a preliminary injunction.

The district court [30] exceeded its jurisdiction, abused its discretion, and seriously misunderstood the APPA. The order we issue today does not correct the district court's mistakes. In some ways the order aggravates those mistakes.

[*955] A

Finding authority for the injunction in the All Writs Act, our order allows the district court to exceed its jurisdiction under the APPA. Indeed, our order finds a new way for the district court to exceed jurisdiction under the APPA. The APPA does not authorize a district court to appoint a trustee to take control of and manage part of the target company. Already the district court has usurped the prosecutor's function in antitrust enforcement. Now this court authorizes the district court to manage an aggregate business through a court-appointed trustee.

Although the idea of appointing a trustee sounds like a compromise, it is no such thing. A judge on this panel raised the idea sua sponte at oral argument. The parties have not stipulated that they seek or even are willing to accept this solution. At oral argument, BNS merely allowed that the trusteeship idea sounded better than the status quo. Koppers expressed no interest whatsoever in the idea. Logically, [31] Koppers would not be amenable to a trusteeship: Koppers' management is not interested in a reasonable solution to the antitrust impasse in Irwindale. Koppers' management is interested in one thing only -- delaying the $ 1.69 billion takeover as a whole.

The idea of proceedings to appoint a trustee, as opposed to the trusteeship itself, might appeal to Koppers' management. The proceedings would give management still another avenue for delay. The district court would have to select a trustee and work out details of the trusteeship. Koppers would have the opportunity to drag its feet each step of the way.

The most remarkable aspect of the trusteeship idea is that if the district court disapproves the consent decree, the trustee shall remain in control "for an additional fourteen-day period to permit the parties to take such action, if any, that they deem appropriate." Again, the notion that Koppers would take any action to advance the acquisition is unrealistic: Koppers' management seeks only to delay. But a more important problem concerns jurisdiction. The district court's jurisdiction under the APPA expires when the court disapproves the consent decree. If the district court is [32] to supervise the trustee during the succeeding two weeks, the court yet again will have to exceed its jurisdiction.

B

The good intention of our order is to support effective enforcement of the antitrust laws. The likely effect of our order, however, will be to impair effective enforcement. As we said in Bechtel, the court's role under the APPA is merely to determine whether a consent judgment "is 'within the reaches of the public interest.' More elaborate requirements might undermine the effectiveness of antitrust enforcement by consent decree." 648 F.2d at 666 (internal sources omitted).

In accordance with the law this court creates today, every takeover target will seek an injunction under the APPA. District courts, with the authority to grant injunctions in hand, will find themselves enmeshed in the determination of whether a pending merger should be subjected to judicial strangulation.

Meanwhile the government, facing the possibility of injunctions, will begin to exercise its prosecutorial discretion more deliberately. The government will begin to weigh the tradeoff between the benefit and cost of seeking consent judgments under the APPA. The benefit would [33] be the possibility of settling a minor antitrust violation expediently. The cost would be the possibility that a district court may issue an injunction that has the effect of preventing an efficient transfer of corporate control.

In light of this cost -- which did not exist before today's order -- the government will exercise its discretion by prosecuting the antitrust laws less vigorously. In particular, the government often will choose not to seek a consent decree. The government will prefer to forego the small benefit of settling a minor antitrust violation rather than risk a district court's terminating a major, value-increasing merger. Because the government must initiate a consent judgment before a district court may review it, the district court will not be able to pick up the slack. Antitrust enforcement will suffer.

[*956] In this case, the better solution would be to dissolve the injunction. That precedent would relieve the government of the fear that settling an antitrust violation will risk defeat of a valuable merger. The government would be free to prosecute the antitrust laws vigorously, to seek consent judgments without regard to whether a district court might [34] enjoin a fruitful transaction.

IV

The district court lacked authority to grant the injunction. Even if the district court had authority, the district court improperly granted an injunction in this case. The order we issue today perpetuates the district court's mistakes. I would dissolve the injunction.

[Consolidated Metal Products, Inc. v. American Petroleum Institute]

United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit

June 6, 1988

No. 87-1200

Reporter

846 F.2d 284 *; 1988 U.S. App. LEXIS 7746 ; 1988-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P68,051

Consolidated Metal Products, Inc., Plaintiff-Appellant, v. American Petroleum Institute, Defendant-Appellee

Prior History: [1] Appeal from the United States District Court for the Northern District of Texas.

Disposition: Affirmed.

Core Terms

monogram, user, conspiracy, products, manufacturers, subcommittee, sucker, antitrust, summary judgment, rule of reason, sucker rod, threaded, cases, anticompetitive, three-piece, consumers, trade association, heads, specifications, contends, genuine, steel, oil, unreasonable restraint, coupler, buyers, no evidence, per se rule, certification, competitors

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > ... > Discovery > Methods of Discovery > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Legal Entitlement

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Supporting Materials > General Overview

HN1[] Discovery, Methods of Discovery

Fed R. Civ. P. 56(c) permits summary judgment if the pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories, and admissions on file, together with the affidavits, if any, show that the moving party is entitled to a judgment as a matter of law.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

HN2[] Summary Judgment, Entitlement as Matter of Law

When a motion for summary judgment is made and supported as provided in Fed R. Civ. P. 56(e), an adverse party may not rest upon the mere allegations or denials of the adverse party's pleading, but must set forth specific facts showing that there is a genuine issue for trial.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

HN3[] Summary Judgment, Entitlement as Matter of Law

Only disputes over material facts, facts that might affect the outcome of the lawsuit under the governing substantive law, will preclude summary judgment.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

HN4[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Summary procedures should be used sparingly in complex antitrust litigation where motive and intent play leading roles, the proof is largely in the hands of the alleged conspirators, and hostile witnesses thicken the plot. It is only when the witnesses are present and subject to cross-examination that their credibility and the weight to be given their testimony can be appraised. Trial by affidavit is no substitute for trial by jury.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

HN5[] Summary Judgment, Entitlement as Matter of Law

Summary judgment should be used cautiously when resolution of the dispositive issue requires a determination of state of mind.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

HN6[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

While the court recognizes the importance of preserving litigants' rights to a trial on their claims, the court is not prepared to extend those rights to the point of requiring everyone who files an antitrust complaint setting forth a valid cause of action be entitled to a full-dress trial notwithstanding the absence of any significant probative evidence tending to support the complaint.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Opposing Materials > General Overview

HN7[] Summary Judgment, Entitlement as Matter of Law

As required when reviewing a grant of summary judgment, the court views the written record in the light most favorable to the party opposing the motion, when deciding if a genuine issue of material fact exists.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

International Trade Law > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

HN8[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

The Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 states that every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several states, or with foreign nations, is declared to be illegal.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

HN9[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Every commercial agreement restrains trade. Whether this action violates the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 depends on whether it is adjudged an unreasonable restraint.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

HN10[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Claims under the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 should be subject to rule of reason analysis unless the challenged action falls into the category of agreements or practices which because of their pernicious effect on competition and lack of any redeeming virtue are conclusively presumed to be unreasonable and therefore illegal without elaborate inquiry as to the precise harm they have caused or the business excuse for their use.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

HN11[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

The decision to apply the per se rule turns on whether the practice facially appears to be one that would always or almost always tend to restrict competition and decrease output or instead one designed to increase economic efficiency and render markets more, rather than less, competitive.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Practices Governed by Per Se Rule > Boycotts

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN12[] Practices Governed by Per Se Rule, Boycotts

Concerted refusals to deal or group boycotts should be condemned as per se violations.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN13[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

The term "group boycott" is in reality a very broad label for divergent types of concerted activity. To outlaw certain types of business conduct merely by attaching the "group boycott" and "per se" labels obviously invites the chance that certain types of reasonable concerted activity will be proscribed.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

HN14[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Per se treatment is justified only where the purpose and effect of the challenged practice are to threaten the proper operation of our predominantly free market economy, or where the practice facially appears to be one that would always or almost always tend to restrict competition and decrease output. Per se rules of illegality are appropriate only when they relate to conduct that is manifestly anticompetitive.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Horizontal Refusals to Deal > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN15[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Horizontal Refusals to Deal

To state a per se violation, the mere allegation of a concerted refusal to deal does not suffice because not all concerted refusals to deal are predominantly anticompetitive. The court emphasizes that the denial of necessary business relations is crucial to per se illegality.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

HN16[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

The per se rule applies only where exclusionary or coercive conduct has been present.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Business & Corporate Law > Joint Ventures > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Joint Ventures

HN17[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

The absence of procedural safeguards can in no sense determine the antitrust analysis. The antitrust laws do not themselves impose on joint ventures a requirement of due process.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Per Se Violations

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Higher Education & Professional Associations > Professional Associations

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN18[] Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason, Per Se Violations

The court holds that a trade association that evaluates products and issues opinions, without constraining others to follow its recommendations, does not per se violate the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 when, for whatever reason, it fails to evaluate a product favorably to the manufacturer.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

HN19[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

To prove an antitrust violation under the rule of reason a plaintiff must show the defendant's conduct adversely affected competition. That is, the rule of reason requires plaintiffs to show that the defendants' actions amounted to a conspiracy against the market -- a concerted attempt to reduce output and drive up prices or otherwise reduce consumer welfare. Under the rule of reason, the antitrust laws protect competition, not particular competitors. In addition, the absence of procedural safeguards in the process of making business decisions can in no sense determine the antitrust analysis.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN20[] Sherman Act, Claims

A showing that the defendants harmed the plaintiffs is not enough to prove a violation of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, under the rule of reason. It is a natural part of a competitive market that products, firms, and -- sometimes -- entire sectors of the economy fail. A plaintiff does not have a claim under the rule of reason simply because others refuse to promote, approve, or buy its products.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

HN21[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Under the rule of reason, the plaintiff must establish two elements basic to an anticompetitive conspiracy: (1) that the defendant engaged in some form of joint action and (2) that this joint action amounted to an unreasonable restraint of trade.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

HN22[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

To survive summary judgment on the issue of antitrust conspiracy, the plaintiff must present evidence that tends to exclude both the possibility of conduct consistent with permissible competition and the possibility that the alleged conspirators acted independently.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN23[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

It is axiomatic that trade standards must exclude some things as substandard and it is unsurprising that standard-setting bodies sometimes err. A single such error does not amount to a conspiracy.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN24[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Under the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, an unreasonable restraint of trade may be established by proof of either an unlawful purpose or an anticompetitive effect.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Higher Education & Professional Associations > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Higher Education & Professional Associations > Professional Associations

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN25[] Sherman Act, Claims

It is not enough to meet the plaintiff's burden under the rule of reason that the plaintiff was harmed because the defendant refused without justification to promote, approve, or buy the plaintiff's product. Neither anticompetitive animus nor the other elements of a claim under the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, can be inferred solely from the incorrectness of a single business decision by a standard-setting trade association. The "reasonableness" of a restraint is judged by its general effect on the market, not by the circumstances of a particular application. An individual business decision that is negligent or based on insufficient facts or illogical conclusions is not a sound basis for antitrust liability.

Counsel: Philip J. Hirschkop, Alexandria, Virginia, Jonathan R. Mook, Attorneys, for Appellant.

James J. Bierbower, Washington, District of Columbia, Roy D. Snyder, Jr., Attorneys, for Appellee American.

Arnold S. Block, Washington, District of Columbia, Attorney, for Dover Corp.

Judges: Wisdom, Garwood, and Jones, Circuit Judges.

Opinion by: WISDOM

Opinion

[*286] WISDOM, Circuit Judge:

In this suit, Consolidated Metal Products, Inc., a manufacturer of oil well equipment, contends that the American Petroleum Institute ("API"), a trade association representing all sectors of the domestic petroleum industry, delayed trade standard certification to certain equipment manufactured by Consolidated and thereby excluded it from the market in violation of section 1 of the Sherman Act. 15 U.S.C. § 1. After a thorough review of the evidence, the district court granted summary judgment for API. Although Consolidated offered evidence that API had no basis to conclude that its equipment would not perform up to trade standards, the district court found this insufficient [2] to raise a genuine issue of fact material to whether the delay was a conspiracy in restraint of trade. Consolidated appeals.

The principal question in this case is whether unjustified denial of a valuable product certification by a standard-setting body, without more, violates section 1 of the Sherman Act. We hold that it does not and affirm the judgment of the district court.

I.

Sucker rods are part of the equipment used to pump oil from wells having low natural pressure. A pump jack at the surface imparts an up-and-down motion to a sucker rod string that extends through the tubing of the well to a pump submerged in the fluid of the well. Each sucker rod is 25 to 30 feet long, 1/2 to 1 1/8 inches in diameter, and has coupler heads on each end. The heads allow the rods to be strung together inside the tubing until they reach the submerged pump.

Conventional sucker rods are manufactured of a single piece of steel. First, steel is forged into a shaft. Then, the ends of the shaft are hot-forged into coupler heads, making a one-piece sucker rod.

In 1980, when domestic oil production and the demand for sucker rods were at record levels, Consolidated developed an innovative method [3] for manufacturing the rods. Using its patented high-strength steel, Consolidated manufactured the rods in three individual pieces: the steel shaft and two threaded coupler heads. Consolidated then roll-threaded the coupler heads onto the steel shaft. Because this process eliminated the costly hot-forging required by the conventional design, Consolidated's rods were cheaper to produce than conventional rods. Consolidated began marketing its rods in 1981, and that year sold nearly 12 million feet of them -- a substantial amount.

In addition to its various other activities, API is the only domestic body that sets standards for oil field equipment. Equipment manufacturers may apply to API for approval of their products and, if API finds that the equipment meets its standards, it will (for an annual fee) grant a license to display the API monogram is a registered trademark of API. By using it, the licensee warrants to purchasers that the monogrammed product complies with API specifications. The API monogram has commercial value in that its use enhances product sales.

API has been setting standards for, and approving, sucker rods since at least 1927. API approval of products is not, [4] however, required by any law and oil field equipment, including sucker rods, is sold without it.

Consolidated had been selling sucker rods without the API monogram for some time when, after several initial inquiries, it formally applied to API for approval of its innovative rod design on June 1, 1981. Around the same time, other manufacturers who had been marketing unconventional sucker rods also applied for API approval. These other new rods included a three-piece [*287] design in which the coupler heads were welded, rather than roll-threaded, onto the steel shaft.

J.M. Spanhel of the API production department staff was authorized to grant or deny sucker rod manufacturers the license to use the API monogram. [1] [5] Spanhel was familiar with the three-piece threaded design from Consolidated's earlier inquiries with API. He told Consolidated that he thought its design was not contemplated by API's sucker rod specification, contained in API Spec. 11B, [2] but nonetheless arranged for Consolidated to make presentations to API's sucker rod standards committee.

The sucker rod standards committee referred the applications of Consolidated and the other three-piece rod manufacturers to the manufacturer subcommittee. After hearing presentations by the applicants, the manufacturer subcommittee deferred all action to the user subcommittee. The user subcommittee met on June 24, 1981 to consider the various applications and heard presentations by several sucker rod manufacturers, including Consolidated. Spanhel asked the user subcommittee to determine how the requirements of Spec. 11B should be applied to Consolidated's rod. The minutes of that meeting state:

> The User Subcommittee unanimously agreed that there is no current justification for the appointment of a task group to investigate the writing of specifications for sucker rods which do not meet the current [Spec.] 11B specifications. This Subcommittee encourages all potential manufacturers to continue to develop new products.

---

[1] The API production department is headed by a general committee that oversees standardization committees charged with formulating standards on categories of equipment. The sucker rod standardization committee was composed of manufacturer and user subcommittees. Although these committees participate in the development and revision of API specifications, the final authority for the administration of API's product approval program is vested in the director of the production department who, for this matter, had delegated his authority to Spanhel.

[2] At the time Consolidated and the other innovators applied for the API monogram, Spec. 11B had not been changed substantially since 1927.

> This Subcommittee has concurred [6] that sucker rods can be welded in a manner that meets the current [Spec.] 11B specifications. This Subcommittee believes that Consolidated Metal's sucker rods do not meet 11B specifications because of tensile strength characteristics.

At this point API and Consolidated began their long and heated dispute over whether Spec. 11B did or did not "cover" Consolidated's three-piece threaded design and whether the user subcommittee made any determination on the matter. API contends that the user subcommittee's interest in tensile strength in part reflects a concern with the strength of the threaded joint between the shaft and heads in Consolidated's design, a concern Spanhel also held. In any event, API contends, Spanhel understood the user subcommittee's ruling, reasonably, as either rejecting or tabling Consolidated's application for product approval. Accordingly, API contends, Spanhel's own judgment in the matter was confirmed and he justifiably refused to grant Consolidated's application for the monogram.

Consolidated, on the other hand, contends that Spec. 11B "covered" its design because it did not specifically exclude threaded-on coupler heads. Consolidated also insists [7] that the user subcommittee's concern with tensile strength could be addressed merely by changing the type of steel in the rod and had nothing to do with the threaded joints. Spanhel, Consolidated contends, should have known this and could not reasonably have understood the user committee's statements as accepting any delay in API approval of Consolidated's rod.

On several occasions during the three months after the June 1981 standards meeting, Consolidated and API discussed the possible approval of Consolidated's rods. Consolidated continued to press for approval, insisting that Spec. 11B "did not exclude" its design, and Spanhel, for API, continued to insist upon more time to study the performance of the three-piece threaded [*288] rod. In September 1981, after Consolidated threatened to sue, API set up a standards subcommittee to consider revising Spec. 11B to incorporate the three-piece threaded design. The discussions between Consolidated continued unchanged in both acrimony and substance. API completed and approved specifications for three-piece threaded rods on January 14, 1983 and formally licensed use of its monogram on Consolidated's rod on April 15, 1983.

Seven days [8] later, on April 22, 1983, Consolidated filed the complaint in this case, alleging a conspiracy between Continental Emsco, Inc., Dover Corporation (both established manufacturers of conventional sucker rods), API, and several unnamed co-conspirators. All were listed as defendants' responses, and two years of discovery have focussed on whether it was "reasonable" for API to delay Consolidated a monogram license from June 1981 to April 1983. The district court granted summary judgment in favor of all the defendants. Consolidated appeals only the judgment for API.

II.

Rule 56(c) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure HN1[] permits summary judgment "if the pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories, and admissions on file, together with the affidavits, if any, show that the moving party is entitled to a judgment as a matter of law". Rule 56(e) provides:

> HN2[] When a motion for summary judgment is made and supported as provided in this rule, an adverse party may not rest upon the mere allegations [9] or denials of the adverse party's pleading, but . . . must set forth specific facts showing that there is a genuine issue for trial.

HN3[] Only disputes over material facts, facts that might affect the outcome of the lawsuit under the governing substantive law, will preclude summary judgment. [3]

---

[3] Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc., 477 U.S. 242, 247-48, 106 S. Ct. 2505, 2509-10, 91 L. Ed. 2d 202 (1986). See also Phillips Oil Co. v. OKC Corp., 812 F.2d 265, 272 (5th Cir.), cert. denied, 484 U.S. 851, 108 S. Ct. 152, 98 L. Ed. 2d 107 (1987), and the cases cited there.

It is true that summary judgment is less common in antitrust cases than in other cases, but this is not because different rules apply to those cases. [4] Rather, it is because the relevant factual disputes in antitrust cases are typically more complicated that those in other cases. [5] [11] Accordingly, [10] it is typically more difficult for the trial court to resolve all doubt about the merits of an antitrust claim on the basis of the written, pre-trial record alone. [6] But this is certainly not always so.

In Matsushita Electric Industrial Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., the Supreme Court upheld a summary judgment against the [*289] plaintiffs on their claim under section 1 of the Sherman Act, stating:

> To survive [the defendants'] motion for summary judgment, [the plaintiffs] must establish that there is a genuine issue of material fact as to whether [the defendants] entered into an illegal conspiracy that caused [the plaintiffs] to suffer a cognizable injury. . . . This showing has two components. First, [the plaintiffs] must show more than a conspiracy in violation of the antitrust laws; they must show an injury to them resulting from illegal conduct.
>
> . . .
>
> Second, the issue of fact must be "genuine." Fed.R.Civ.Pro. 56(c), (e). . . . When the moving party has carried its burden under Rule 56(c), its opponent must do more than simply show that there is some metaphysical doubt as to the material facts. [7] [13]

---

[4] See, e.g., Walker v. U-Haul Co. of Mississippi, 734 F.2d 1068, 1070-71 (5th Cir.1984); Bayou Bottling, Inc. v. Dr. Pepper Co., 725 F.2d 300, 303 (5th Cir.), cert. denied, 469 U.S. 833, 105 S. Ct. 123, 83 L. Ed. 2d 65 (1984); Parsons v. Ford Motor Co., 669 F.2d 308, 313 (5th Cir.), cert. denied, 459 U.S. 832, 103 S. Ct. 73, 74 L. Ed. 2d 72 (1982); General Chemicals v. Exxon Chemical Co., USA, 625 F.2d 1231, 1233 (5th Cir.1980). See also Aladdin Oil Co. v. Texaco, Inc., 603 F.2d 1107, 1110 (5th Cir.1979).

[5] In Poller v. Columbia Broadcasting System, Inc., the Supreme Court stated:

> HN4[] Summary procedures should be used sparingly in complex antitrust litigation where motive and intent play leading roles, the proof is largely in the hands of the alleged conspirators, and hostile witnesses thicken the plot. It is only when the witnesses are present and subject to cross-examination that their credibility and the weight to be given their testimony can be appraised. Trial by affidavit is no substitute for trial by jury. . . .

368 U.S. 464, 473, 82 S. Ct. 486, 491, 7 L. Ed. 2d 458 (1962). See also Industrial Investment Development Corp. v. Mitsui & Co., 671 F.2d 876, 884 (5th Cir.1982), vacated on other grounds, 460 U.S. 1007, 103 S. Ct. 1244, 75 L. Ed. 2d 475 (1983), concluding that summary judgment is inappropriate against antitrust plaintiffs "where there is ample evidence of a conspiracy" and when "plaintiffs have not had an opportunity to depose one of the conspirators on the effect and intent of their efforts". Cf. Croley v. Matson Navigation Co., 434 F.2d 73, 77 (5th Cir.1970), stating that HN5[] summary judgment should be used cautiously "when resolution of the dispositive issue requires a determination of state of mind".

[6] See 10A C.A. Wright, A. Miller, and M. Kane, Federal Practice and Procedure § 2732.1 at 319 (2d ed. 1983).

[7] 475 U.S. 574, 585-86, 106 S. Ct. 1348, 1355-56, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538 (1986) (footnotes and citations omitted). In this passage, the Court cites a passage in First National Bank of Arizona v. Cities Service Co., which states:

> HN6[] While we recognize the importance of preserving litigants' rights to a trial on their claims, we are not prepared to extend those rights to the point of requiring everyone who files an antitrust complaint setting forth a valid cause of action be entitled to a full-dress trial notwithstanding the absence of any significant probative evidence tending to support the complaint.

391 U.S. 253, 290, 88 S. Ct. 1575, 1593, 20 L. Ed. 2d 569 (1968), cited in Matsushita, 475 U.S. at 586, 106 S. Ct. at 1355-56, 106 S. Ct. at 2509-10.

Thus, when defending its antitrust claim [12] against summary judgment, Consolidated faces the same hurdle as the plaintiff in any other cause of action: it "must come forward with 'specific facts showing that there is a genuine issue for trial'". [8]

HN7[] As required when reviewing a grant of summary judgment, we view the written record in the light most favorable [14] to Consolidated, the party opposing the motion, when deciding if a genuine issue of material fact exists. [9] We conclude that, viewed in any light, the record in this antitrust case presents no basis for a trial.

III.

Section 1 of the Sherman Act HN8[] states: "Every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several states, or with foreign nations, is declared to be illegal". But as the Supreme Court observed in Northwest Wholesale Stationers, Inc. v. Pacific Stationary and Printing Co.,

> HN9[] Every commercial agreement restrains trade. Whether this action violates § 1 of the Sherman Act depends on whether it is adjudged an unreasonable [15] restraint. [10]

To prove an "unreasonable" restraint, Consolidated may proceed along two avenues of proof. "The rule of reason" requires Consolidated to show that API's product approval program is a conspiracy to produce an anticompetitive effect on the relevant market. "The per se rule" requires Consolidated to show that API's product approval program is conduct presumed to have such an anticompetitive effect.

A.

We address first the per se rule and its scope. In Northwest Wholesale Stationers, the Supreme Court stated that section [*290] 1 HN10[] claims should be subject to rule of reason analysis > unless the challenged action falls [16] into the category of "agreements or practices which because of their pernicious effect on competition and lack of any redeeming virtue are conclusively presumed to be unreasonable and therefore illegal without elaborate inquiry as to the precise harm they have caused or the business excuse for their use." Northern Pacific R. Co. v. United States, 356 U.S. 1, 5, 78 S. Ct. 514, 518, 2 L. Ed. 2d 545 (1958).

>
> . . . HN11[] The decision to apply the per se rule turns on "whether the practice facially appears to be one that would always or almost always tend to restrict competition and decrease output . . . or instead one designed to 'increase economic efficiency and render markets more, rather than less, competitive.'" Broadcast Music, Inc. v. Columbia Broadcasting System, Inc., 441 U.S. 1, 19-20, 99 S. Ct. 1551, 1562, 60 L. Ed. 2d 1 (1979). [11] [17]

---

[8] Matsushita, 475 U.S. at 587, 106 S. Ct. at 1356 (original emphasis), quoting Fed.R.Civ.P. 56(e). See Celotex Corp. v. Catrett, 477 U.S. 317, 322-23, 106 S. Ct. 2548, 2552-53, 91 L. Ed. 2d 265 (1986); Liberty Lobby, 477 U.S. at 247-48, 106 S. Ct. at 2509-10. See also Union City Barge Line, Inc. v. Union Carbide Corp., 823 F.2d 129, 137-38 (5th Cir.1987), applying Celotex and upholding summary judgment against antitrust plaintiff. See generally Comment, Summary Judgment: The Majority View Undergoes a Complete Reversal in the 1986 S. Ct. 37 Emory L.J. 171, 191-215 (1988), and Turner, The Durability, Relevance, and Future of American Antitrust Policy, 75 Calif.L.Rev. 797, 814-15 (1987), both concluding that Matsushita, Liberty Lobby, and Celotex signal a retreat from Poller.

[9] See, e.g., Phillips Oil Co. v. OKC Corp., 812 F.2d at 272, and the cases cited there.

[10] 472 U.S. 284, 289, 105 S. Ct. 2613, 2616-17, 86 L. Ed. 2d 202 (1985) (original emphasis; citation to Chicago Board of Trade v. United States, 246 U.S. 231, 238, 38 S. Ct. 242, 243-44, 62 L. Ed. 683 (1918), omitted).

[11] Id. 472 U.S. at 289-90, 105 S. Ct. at 2617.

The Court termed this, mildly, "an area of antitrust law that has not been free of confusion". [12]

There must be principled limits on the per se rule. The Supreme Court has long recognized that HN12[] "concerted refusals to deal or group boycotts" should be condemned as per se violations. [13] Nonetheless, because a per se ruling declares illegal an entire class of business practices on the basis of only attenuated inquiry into the economic consequences, the Court has also long cautioned against its overzealous use. [14] [19] As the Eighth Circuit observed,

> HN13[] The term "group boycott" . . . is in reality a very broad label [18] for divergent types of concerted activity. To outlaw certain types of business conduct merely by attaching the "group boycott" and "per se" labels obviously invites the chance that certain types of reasonable concerted activity will be proscribed. [15]

Recently, in FTC v. Indiana Federation of Dentists, the Court again cautioned against resolving section 1 cases "by forcing the [defendant's] policy into the 'boycott' pigeonhole", especially when it would "extend per se analysis to restraints imposed in the context of business relationships where the economic impact . . . is not immediately obvious". [16]

[20] [*291] As Northwest Wholesale Stationers explained, HN15[] to state a per se violation, "the mere allegation of a concerted refusal to deal does not suffice because not all concerted refusals to deal are predominantly anticompetitive". [17] [22] The Court emphasized that the denial of necessary business relations is crucial to per se illegality:

---

[12] Id. at 289 & n. 3, 105 S. Ct. at 2616 n. 3. See 7 P. Areeda, Antitrust Law paras. 1508-1511 (1986 & Supp. 1987); L. Sullivan, Law of Antitrust 229-30 (1977). See also Turner, 75 Calif.L.Rev. at 799-800; Bauer, Per Se Illegality of Concerted Refusals to Deal: A Rule Ripe for Reexamination, 79 Colum.L.Rev. 685, 692-94 (1979).

[13] Northwest Wholesale Stationers, 472 U.S. at 289, 105 S. Ct. at 2616-17.

[14] See, e.g., Broadcast Music, Inc. v. Columbia Broadcasting System, Inc. ["BMI"], 441 U.S. 1, 19-20, 99 S. Ct. 1551, 1562-63, 60 L. Ed. 2d 1 (1979), stating that HN14[] per se treatment is justified only where the purpose and effect of the challenged practice "are to threaten the proper operation of our predominantly free market economy", or where the "practice facially appears to be one that would always or almost always tend to restrict competition and decrease output"; Continental T.V., Inc. v. GTE Sylvania, Inc. ["GTE Sylvania"], 433 U.S. 36, 49-50, 97 S. Ct. 2549, 2557, 53 L. Ed. 2d 568 (1977), stating that "per se rules of illegality are appropriate only when they relate to conduct that is manifestly anticompetitive"; United States v. Topco Associates, Inc., 405 U.S. 596, 607-08, 92 S. Ct. 1126, 1133, 31 L. Ed. 2d 515 (1972), stating that "it is only after considerable experience with certain business relationships that courts classify them as per se violations of the Sherman Act.".

[15] Mackey v. National Football League, 543 F.2d 606, 619 (8th Cir.1976), cert. dismissed, 434 U.S. 801, 98 S. Ct. 28, 54 L. Ed. 2d 59 (1977), quoting Worthen Bank & Trust Co. v. National BankAmericard, Inc., 485 F.2d 119, 125 (8th Cir.1973), cert. denied, 415 U.S. 918, 94 S. Ct. 1417, 39 L. Ed. 2d 473 (1974). Accord United States v. Realty Multi-List, Inc., 629 F.2d 1351, 1365-69 (5th Cir.1980); E.A. McQuade Tours, Inc. v. Consolidated Air Manual Committee, 467 F.2d 178, 186-87 (5th Cir.1972), cert. denied, 409 U.S. 1109, 93 S. Ct. 912, 34 L. Ed. 2d 690 (1973). See also Phil Tolkan Datsun, Inc. v. Greater Milwaukee Datsun Dealers' Advertising Ass'n, 672 F.2d 1280, 1284-85 (7th Cir.1982); United States Trotting Ass'n, Inc. v. Chicago Downs Ass'n, Inc., 665 F.2d 781, 788 (7th Cir.1981) (en banc).

[16] 476 U.S. 447, 458-59, 106 S. Ct. 2009, 2017-18, 90 L. Ed. 2d 445 (1986). Moreover, in the course of deciding whether a business practice challenged under Section 1 fits within the "boycott pigeonhole", many courts find themselves in a detailed inquiry into the economic effects of the practice -- precisely the sort of "rule of reason" analysis the per se approach is supposed to eliminate for "obviously" anticompetitive practices. See Sullivan, Antitrust Law at 239, 241-45; Bauer, 79 Colum.L.Rev. at 694-95, 703-04 & n. 82.

[17] 472 U.S. at 298, 105 S. Ct. at 2017-18. As one commentator notes, however, it is often difficult to determine what will suffice:

> While the per se illegality rule seems appropriate for naked horizontal boycotts such as those involved in Klor's, Inc. v. Broadway-Hale Stores, [359 U.S. 207, 79 S. Ct. 705, 3 L. Ed. 2d 741 (1959),] there are often problems in determining > Cases to which this Court has applied the per se approach have generally involved joint efforts by a firm or firms to disadvantage competitors by "either directly denying or persuading or coercing suppliers or customers to deny relationships the competitors need in the competitive struggle." Sullivan, [Law of Antitrust] at 261-62. See, e.g. Silver [v. New York Stock Exchange, 373 U.S. 341, 83 S. Ct. 1246, 10 L. Ed. 2d 389 (1963)] (denial of necessary access to exchange members); Radiant Burners Inc. v. Peoples Gas Light & Coke Co., 364 U.S. 656 [81 S. Ct. 365, 5 L. Ed. 2d 358] (1961) (denial of necessary certification of product); Associated Press v. United States, 326 U.S. 1 [65 S. Ct. 1416, 89 L. Ed. 2013] [21] (1945) (denial of important sources of news); Klor's Inc. [v. Broadway-Hale Stores, Inc., 359 U.S. 207, 79 S. Ct. 705, 3 L. Ed. 2d 741 (1959)] (denial of wholesale supplies). In these cases, the boycott often cut off access to a supply, facility, or market necessary to enable the boycotted firm to compete, Silver, supra; Radiant Burners, Inc., supra, and frequently the boycotting firms possessed a dominant position in the relevant market. E.g., Silver, supra; Associated Press, supra; Fashion Originators' Guild of America, Inc. v. FTC, 312 U.S. 457 [61 S. Ct. 703, 85 L. Ed. 949] (1941). See generally Brodley, Joint Ventures and Antitrust Policy, 95 Harv.L.Rev. 1523, 1533, 1563-65 (1977). [18]

Similarly, in E.A. McQuade Tours, Inc. v. Consolidated Air Tour Manual Committee, this court engaged in a lengthy analysis of the same cases and concluded that HN16[] the per se rule applied only "where exclusionary or coercive conduct has been present." [19]

Consolidated offers no evidence, when viewed in the light of these cases, that merits treating API's product approval program as a "group boycott", per se illegal under section 1. [20] [23] In the various cases discussed in Northwest Wholesale Stationers and E.A. McQuade Tours, the touchstone of per se illegality is that the customers or suppliers of the plaintiff had, as a group, agreed or been forced to cease doing business with the plaintiff. [21] In > whether a collective refusal to deal is "naked." The status of refusals to deal associated with lawful joint ventures or similar cooperative enterprises will also need further clarification.

---

Turner, 75 Calif.L.Rev. at 802.

[18] Northwest Wholesale Stationers, 472 U.S. at 294, 105 S. Ct. at 2619.

[19] 467 F.2d at 187. See also Realty Multi-List, 629 F.2d at 1366-67.

[20] We note that Northwest Wholesale Stationers specifically forecloses the use Consolidated wishes to make of Silver, 373 U.S. 341, 83 S. Ct. 1246, 10 L. Ed. 2d 389. Unlike the New York Stock Exchange, API is not a self-regulating monopoly sanctioned by Congress. Thus, Consolidated's litany of alleged deficiencies in API's monogram licensing process -- including, for example, the lack of any avenue of appeal from the decisions of API's Standards Committee and API's monogram licensing staff -- is irrelevant. "The HN17[] absence of procedural safeguards can in no sense determine the antitrust analysis. . . . The antitrust laws do no themselves impose on joint ventures a requirement of due process." Northwest Wholesale Stationers, 472 U.S. at 293, 105 S. Ct. at 2619. Cf. Realty Multi-List, Inc., 629 F.2d at 1367 n. 30, and Hatley v. American Quarter Horse Ass'n, 552 F.2d 646, 652 (5th Cir.1977), both construing Silver as outside the per se principle.

[21] In Fashion Originators' Guild, 312 U.S. at 461, 61 S. Ct. at 705, the defendants "admit that to destroy . . . competition [by other manufacturers] . . . they have in combination purposely boycotted and declined to sell their products to retailers". In Eastern States Retail Lumber Dealers Assoc. v. United States, 234 U.S. 600, 608-09, 612, 34 S. Ct. 951, 952-53, 954, 58 L. Ed. 1490 (1914), the evidence suggested that a combination of retail lumber dealers had agreed not to do business with wholesalers who sold directly to the retailers' customers. In Klor's, 359 U.S. at 213, 79 S. Ct. at 710, the plaintiff was an appliance retailer whose principal competitor had secured the agreement of the plaintiff's suppliers not to sell appliances to the plaintiff (or to charge exhorbitant prices). The plaintiff, without alternative sources of supply, was forced from the business. In Radiant Burners, 364 U.S. at 658, 81 S. Ct. at 366-67, the only supplier of natural gas in Chicago agreed with an association of gas appliance manufacturers to supply gas only to homes using appliances approved by the association. The effect was that consumers could not use products unless approved by the association: there could be no demand for a competing manufacturer's gas appliances unless the association approved.

this [*292] case, Consolidated complains of lost sales but fails to allege that sucker rod users are in some way constrained from buying its products. Indeed, Consolidated admits that, before the demand for domestically-produced oil fell, it was able to sell a substantial amount of its rods.

[24] HN18[] We hold that a trade association that evaluates products and issues opinions, without constraining others to follow its recommendations, does not per se violate section 1 when, for whatever reason, it fails to evaluate a product favorably to the manufacturer. [22] [25] Here, denial of API certification in no real sense "excludes" Consolidated from the market: without certification, Consolidated admits that it is still free to sell its products and consumers are free to buy them. [23] In no real sense is the monogram "necessary" to the sale of sucker rods: Consolidated does not allege that consumers are somehow unable to use its rods as they would API-monogrammed rods. [24] Thus, Consolidated offers no evidence of a per se violation of section 1.

B.

Neither does Consolidated present a factual dispute material to proving a section 1 violation under the rule of reason. As this court said in Northwest Power Products v. Omark Industries, HN19[] "to prove an antitrust violation under the rule of reason . . . [a plaintiff] must show the defendant's conduct adversely affected competition". [25] That is, the rule of reason [*293] requires plaintiffs to show that the defendants' actions amounted to a conspiracy against the market -- a concerted attempt to reduce output [26] and drive up prices or otherwise reduce consumer welfare. [26] [27] Under the rule of reason, the antitrust laws protect competition, not particular

---

In Associated Press, 362 U.S. at 4, 65 S. Ct. at 1417, AP's bylaws forbade member news associations from doing business with non-members: an explicit boycott. Also, the per se holding in Associated Press may be based more on the territorial division imposed by AP than by any boycott. Id. at 24-25, 65 S. Ct. at 1426-27 (Douglas, J., concurring). See also Realty Multi-List, 629 F.2d at 1366-67 n. 30, arguing that Associated Press is not a "boycott" case.

In American Society of Mechanical Engineers, Inc. v. Hydrolevel Corp. ["ASME"], 456 U.S. 556, 570-71, 102 S. Ct. 1935, 1944-45, 72 L. Ed. 2d 330 (1982), a case Consolidated contends is dispositive of this one, the Court discusses discriminatory application of trade standards in conjunction with cases of per se violations. Although this suggests that the challenged practice in ASME could have been per se illegal, we note that the later case of Northwest Wholesale Stationers does not include ASME in its extensive discussion of cases of per se violations. See 472 U.S. at 293-94, 105 S. Ct. at 2619. In any event, ASME involved both regulations that have the force of law and a direct conspiracy between the ASME staff and the plaintiff's competitors. 456 U.S. at 559, 561-62, 102 S. Ct. at 1939-41. These factors are absent here.

[22] See Eliason Corp. v. National Sanitation Foundation, 614 F.2d 126, 129 (6th Cir.), cert. denied, 449 U.S. 826, 101 S. Ct. 89, 66 L. Ed. 2d 29 (1980). But see Sullivan, Antitrust Law at 249, arguing that it follows from Radiant Burners that purely advisory trade standards are a per se violation of Section 1 if shown to be "unreasonable": "any other course would create too great a risk of competitive injury". As we discuss below, although purely advisory trade standards may violate Section 1 under the "rule of reason", the antitrust laws do not give every producer denied certification a right to review in the federal courts.

[23] Unlike the defendants in Fashion Originators' Guild, Eastern States, Associated Press, and Klor's, API has secured no agreement by suppliers or customers not to deal with Consolidated. See note 21.

[24] Unlike the trade standards challenged in ASME, API specifications do not have the force of law and, unlike the defendants in Radiant Burners, API does not deny buyers of uncertified rods access to other goods necessary to use them. See note 21.

[25] 576 F.2d 83, 90 (5th Cir.1978), cert. denied, 439 U.S. 1116, 99 S. Ct. 1021, 59 L. Ed. 2d 75 (1979). See also North Mississippi Communications, Inc. v. Jones, 792 F.2d 1330, 1334 (5th Cir.1986); Industrial Investment Development Corp., 671 F.2d at 889-90 n. 16; Associated Radio Service Co. v. Page Airways, Inc., 624 F.2d 1342, 1350-51 (5th Cir.1980), cert. denied, 450 U.S. 1030, 101 S. Ct. 1740, 68 L. Ed. 2d 226 (1980); Muenster Butane, Inc. v. Stewart Co., 651 F.2d 292, 296 (5th Cir.1981).

[26] National Collegiate Athletic Ass'n v. Bd. of Regents of the Univ. of Oklahoma ["NCAA"], 468 U.S. 85, 99-100, 104 S. Ct. 2948, 2959-60, 82 L. Ed. 2d 70 (1984); BMI, 441 U.S. at 19-20; United States v. United States Gypsum Co., 438 U.S. 422, 441 n. 16, 98 S. Ct. 2864, 2875 n. 16, 57 L. Ed. 2d 854 (1978). See Sullivan, The Viability of the Current Law on Horizontal Restraints, 75

competitors. [27] In addition, the absence of procedural safeguards in the process of making business decisions "can in no sense determine the antitrust analysis". [28]

Accordingly, HN20[] a showing that the defendants harmed the plaintiffs is not enough to prove a violation of section 1 under the rule of reason. It is a natural part of a competitive market that products, firms, and -- sometimes [28] -- entire sectors of the economy fail. A plaintiff does not have a claim under the rule of reason simply because others refuse to promote, approve, or buy its products.

The plaintiff's contentions in this case, however, amount to little more than this. It is undisputed that API approval has commercial value and that API took two years to approve Consolidated's product. What is more important in this case is what Consolidated fails to assert. It does not allege that API somehow coerces users to buy only monogrammed rods, it provides little concrete information about "the sucker rod market", and it no longer contends that there was an anticompetitive conspiracy between its competitors and API. Consolidated asserts only that because API is a trade association, it is a "walking conspiracy" and then contends, at bottom, that because the monogram has great value, Consolidated is entitled to a trial on the question whether API was justified in taking two years to approve its product.

We disagree. HN21[] Under the rule of reason, the plaintiff must establish two elements basic to an anticompetitive [29] conspiracy: (1) that the defendant engaged in some form of joint action and (2) that this joint action amounted to an unreasonable restraint of trade. [29] Although Consolidated may be able to show that the delay in API approval of its product was unjustified, this does not, by itself, present a genuine dispute over either of these elements necessary to its section 1 claim.

1. Proof of a conspiracy. Consolidated offers no evidence tending to show a conspiracy. API, the sole defendant on appeal, [30] concedes that it is a trade association and is the only domestic standard-setting body for oil well equipment. A trade association by its nature involves collective action by competitors. Nonetheless, a trade association is not by its nature a [*294] "walking conspiracy", its every denial of some benefit amounting to an unreasonable restraint of trade. [30] [31] In particular, it has long been recognized that the establishment and monitoring of trade standards is a legitimate and beneficial function of trade associations. [31]

Calif.L.Rev. 835, 840-51 (1987), arguing that antitrust injury includes more than just the deadweight loss from reduced output and increased price. See also Kaplow, The Accuracy of Traditional Market Power Analysis and a Direct Adjustment Alternative, 95 Harv.L.Rev. 1817 (1982), discussing the broader social costs of market power; Lande, Wealth Transfers as the Original and Primary Concern of Antitrust: The Efficiency Interpretation Challenged, 34 Hastings L.J. 67 (1982), discussing distributive concerns and antitrust law.

[27] See Brunswick Corp. v. Pueblo Bowl-O-Mat, Inc., 429 U.S. 477, 489, 97 S. Ct. 690, 697-98, 50 L. Ed. 2d 701 (1977); Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, 344, 82 S. Ct. 1502, 1534, 8 L. Ed. 2d 510 (1962). See also Costello Publishing Co. v. Rotelle, 216 U.S. App. D.C. 216, 670 F.2d 1035, 1042 n. 7 (D.C.Cir.1981); Travelers Ins. Co. v. Blue Cross of Western Pennsylvania, 481 F.2d 80, 84 (3d Cir.), cert. denied, 414 U.S. 1093, 94 S. Ct. 724, 38 L. Ed. 2d 550 (1973); Breyer, Antitrust, Deregulation, and the Newly-Liberated Marketplace, 75 Calif.L.Rev. 1005, 1018 (1987).

[28] Northwest Wholesale Stationers, 472 U.S. at 293, 105 S. Ct. at 2619.

[29] Kreuzer v. American Academy of Periodontology, 237 U.S. App. D.C. 43, 735 F.2d 1479, 1485 (D.C.Cir.1984). There are other elements to a section 1 claim, such as damages, but we need not address them here. See generally Park v. El Paso Bd. of Realtors, 764 F.2d 1053, 1059 (5th Cir.1985), cert. denied, 474 U.S. 1102, 106 S. Ct. 884, 88 L. Ed. 2d 919 (1986); Solomon v. Houston Corrugated Box Co., Inc., 526 F.2d 389, 395-96 (5th Cir.1976).

[30] See Maple Flooring Manufacturers Ass'n v. United States, 268 U.S. 563, 582-87, 45 S. Ct. 578, 584-86, 69 L. Ed. 1093 (1925). The mere exchange of information, or even consciously parallel action, is insufficient to establish a conspiracy under section 1. Id. at 583-85, 45 S. Ct. at 585-86; Park, 764 F.2d at 1060; Kreuzer, 735 F.2d at 1187. Moreover, the mere showing of relationships between alleged conspirators is insufficient to imply a conspiracy; section 1 requires an actual agreement, explicit or implicit. Kreuzer, 735 F.2d at 1488. Although the agreement need not be proved directly, the plaintiff must show that there

HN22[] To survive summary judgment on the issue of conspiracy, the plaintiff must present evidence that tends to exclude both the possibility of conduct consistent with permissible competition and the possibility that the alleged conspirators acted independently. [32] API's delay in licensing its monogram to Consolidated, even if hindsight shows it to be unjustified, is not enough in itself to fall within the forbidden category. HN23[] It is axiomatic that trade standards must exclude some things as substandard [33] and it is unsurprising that standard-setting bodies sometimes err. A single such error does not amount to a conspiracy.

[32] Consolidated offers no evidence that API's product approval program is merely a ploy to obscure a conspiracy against competing producers. On its face, Spec. 11B is, in the language of Radiant Burners, both "reasonable" and "objective". [34] It contains requirements for the strength and durability of the steel used and requirements for standard dimensions and threads on the coupler heads. These requirements reflect a sensible concern for the users of the equipment. Further, Spec. 11B explains these requirements with diagrams and engineering specifications that are neither vague, judgmental, nor imprecise. In short, nothing about Spec. 11B suggests that it is a sham.

2. Unlawful purpose as proof of unreasonable restraint. Even if Consolidated could show a conspiracy, it fails to offer any evidence of an unreasonable restraint of trade. [33] HN24[] Under section 1, an unreasonable restraint of trade "may be established by proof of either an unlawful purpose or an anticompetitive effect". [35]

Other than the possible lack of justification for the delay, Consolidated offers scant evidence suggesting an unlawful purpose behind API actions. The evidence suggests that in processing Consolidated's application for the monogram, API followed its normal procedure for analysis of a new product. Although the user subcommittee's initial verdict on Consolidated's application does not make clear how the three-piece threaded rod could be made to comply with API standards, it did not foreclose the possibility. [36] There are no indications [*295] that approval was delayed in bad faith. [37] Indeed, that API certified the three-piece welded rod design at [34] the same time it was a single plan, the essential nature and general scope of which was known to those responsible for its implementation. H & B Equipment Co., Inc. v. International Harvester Co., 577 F.2d 239, 245 (5th Cir.1978).

---

[31] Maple Flooring, 268 U.S. at 586-87, 45 S. Ct. at 592-93.

[32] Matsushita, 475 U.S. at 588, 106 S. Ct. at 1357.

[33] Structural Laminates, Inc. v. Douglas Fir Plywood Ass'n, 261 F. Supp. 154, 159 (D.Ore. 1966), aff'd 399 F.2d 155 (9th Cir.1968), cert. denied, 393 U.S. 1024, 89 S. Ct. 636, 21 L. Ed. 2d 569 (1969). See also Eliason Corp., 614 F.2d at 129-30; Hatley, 552 F.2d at 652-53; Roofire Alarm Co. v. Royal Indemnity Co., 202 F. Supp. 166, 169 (E.D.Tenn.1962), aff'd, 313 F.2d 635 (6th Cir.), cert. denied, 373 U.S. 949, 83 S. Ct. 1678, 10 L. Ed. 2d 704 (1963). Moreover, a conspiracy cannot be inferred from a single instance of denied certification. H & B Equipment, 577 F.2d at 245.

[34] 364 U.S. at 658, 81 S. Ct. at 366-67. See generally Sullivan, Law of Antitrust at 248-49, discussing "sham" standards programs.

[35] McLain v. Real Estate Bd. of New Orleans, Inc., 444 U.S. 232, 243, 100 S. Ct. 502, 509-10, 62 L. Ed. 2d 441 (1980) (original emphasis).

[36] The record suggests that the user subcommittee neither approved nor disapproved Consolidated's sucker rod design. The minutes of the subcommittee meeting simply state a concern about the tensile strength characteristics of the rod Consolidated presented for approval and indicate that the subcommittee put on hold the broader matter of the three-piece threaded design. The depositions of the subcommittee members manifest uncertainty about what course the users thought best to take: some seem concerned about the new design's durability, others, not; none recall any consensus on the matter.

[37] After the user subcommittee decision, Spanhel, the API official in charge of processing monogram licenses, denied Consolidated's application. We see no merit in Consolidated's argument that Spanhel misconstrued the user subcommittee's decision. The user subcommittee's concerns and indecision about Consolidated's product certainly did not constitute a recommendation that Consolidated be granted the API monogram immediately.

passed over Consolidated's three-piece threaded design suggests the absence of any desire to suppress innovative products.

[35] Moreover, API's user committee, which found that Consolidated's rod design did not meet Spec. 11B, is composed not of Consolidated's competitors but of buyers of sucker rods -- businesses who could have no motive for driving Consolidated from the market. [38] [36] Although it is at least conceivable that the API staff in charge of licensing the monogram might have been influenced by competing manufacturers to drive Consolidated from the market, [39] Consolidated presents no evidence suggesting this possibility. The evidence in the written record suggests nothing more than a technical debate among engineers. [40]

3. Anticompetitive effect as proof of unreasonable restraint. Neither does Consolidated offer evidence that could show that API's actions had an anticompetitive effect. There is no dispute that the API monogram is very important to buyer [37] acceptance of sucker rods. [41] But this alone is not enough to prove that denial of API certification amounts to a restraint of trade barred by section 1. [42]

[38] [*296] As we have said, Consolidated offers no evidence that its customers were coerced by API or otherwise constrained to buy only monogrammed products. [43] [39] Absent evidence of coercion, there is no

---

[38] See Moore v. Boating Industry Ass'n, 819 F.2d 693, 703 (7th Cir.1986), cert. denied, 484 U.S. 854, 56 U.S.L.W. 3246, 108 S. Ct. 160, 98 L. Ed. 2d 115 (1987). See also Matsushita, 475 U.S. at 593-94, 106 S. Ct. at 1359-60, and Monsanto Co. v. Spray-Rite Service Corp., 465 U.S. 752, 762-64, 104 S. Ct. 1464, 1470-71, 79 L. Ed. 2d 775 (1984), both concluding that courts should not permit factfinders to infer implausible conspiracies.

[39] In ASME, for example, direct collusion between trade association staff and the plaintiff's competitors led to the association's denial of product certification. 456 U.S. at 561-63, 102 S. Ct. at 1939-41.

[40] It is significant that API did ultimately revise Spec. 11B to incorporate the three-piece threaded design and certified Consolidated's rod. API's decision to establish a subcommittee to study the three-piece, threaded design was consistent with earlier concerns about how the design performed in the field. Consolidated's contention that this process was excessively slow is unsupported by any evidence of how expeditiously API usually acts on such applications. Nor does Consolidated show clandestine meetings, bribes, or other evidence that the user subcommittee or Spanhel were unduly influenced by Consolidated's competitors.

[41] Consolidated's original complaint alleges that:

> because of widespread acceptance of and reliance on the API standards as a measure of quality and fitness for use, certification by the API through the licensing of its monogram is essential for manufacturers of sucker rods and related equipment to compete effectively in the marketplace.

In its response, API denies this "to the extent that during the 1980-82 . . . shortage of production equipment including sucker rods, due to the explosive growth in domestic petroleum exploration, . . . plaintiff and other producers . . . sold large quantities of rods which did not bear the API monogram".

[42] Whatever API's admission, reproduced in note 41, is taken to mean, Consolidated must present more concrete information on "the sucker rod market" to show the market effects of API's product approval program required by the rule of reason. See Monsanto, 465 U.S. at 762, 104 S. Ct. at 1470; GTE Sylvania, 433 U.S. at 51, 97 S. Ct. at 2558; Northwest Power Products, 576 F.2d at 90-91. Neither party offers this court much useful information about "the sucker rod market". For example, we do not know how many of the rods are sold each year, how many of these bear the API monogram, whether there are substitutes for sucker rods, or how concentrated the market is on the supply or demand side. See generally Landes and Posner, Market Power in Antitrust Cases, 94 Harv.L.Rev. 937 (1981), discussing considerations relevant to market power. See also Stigler, A Theory of Oligopoly, 72 J. Pol. Econ. 44 (1964), reprinted in Stigler, The Organization of Industry 39 (1968), discussing market factors necessary to successful anticompetitive collusion. But see Rowe, Market as Mirage, 75 Calif.L.Rev. 991 (1987), discussing the subjectivity inherent in determining the relevant market.

[43] We note again that in this respect, this case differs significantly from ASME, where the Court found that reason to assume that buyers do not rely voluntarily on the API monogram. Product information is crucial to a competitive market. [44] Consumers seek it out, for example, by reading Consumer Reports, or relying upon the Good Housekeeping and Underwriters Laboratories seals of approval. This information saves buyers the trouble of investigating products themselves and the risk of trying untested products. API product approval may be important to user acceptance of new sucker rods just as a favorable review in Consumer Reports magazine, the "Good Housekeeping Seal of Approval", and the seal of the Underwriters Laboratories are important to buyer acceptance of new consumer goods. [45] Even if user reliance gives API significant influence over the market, that influence may enhance, not reduce, competition and consumer welfare. [46]

[40] Although there is some danger that API could use its influence to reduce competition, this danger is small so long as users rely voluntarily upon the API monogram. [47] [41] If users choose freely to rely on API approval, API has influence principally because it has done a good job evaluating products. If API fails to evaluate products accurately, consumers free to sample non-monogrammed goods will gradually discover the monogram's diminished usefulness and cease relying upon it. Thus, the greatest threat to competition is in the short run, before a significant number of buyers shop around. Even this threat is mitigated to the extent that producers of unmonogrammed equipment have alternative means of reassuring consumers of the quality of their products. They may, for example, offer warranties, commission product tests by someone other than API, provide free (or low-cost) samples of their product, and advertise. [48]

Here, however, Consolidated had no trouble gaining acceptance of its product even in the short run; it was able to sell substantial amounts of its rods as soon as [*297] production began. Consolidated's problem is better characterized as difficulty retaining its business when overall demand for rods slackened. We do not know if Consolidated lost a greater proportion of its sales during the decline of domestic oil production than other sucker

---

> [ASME's] codes, while only advisory, have a powerful influence: federal regulations have incorporated many of them by reference, as have the laws of most States, the ordinances of major cities, and the laws of all the Provinces of Canada. . . . Obviously, if a manufacturer's product cannot satisfy the applicable AMSE code, it is at a great disadvantage in the marketplace.

456 U.S. at 559, 102 S. Ct. at 1938-39. Similarly, the violation in Silver, 373 U.S. 341, 83 S. Ct. 1246, 10 L. Ed. 2d 389, was based upon the power granted by law to the New York Stock Exchange to act as a gatekeeper for the financial markets. See Northwest Wholesale Stationers, 472 U.S. at 293, 105 S. Ct. at 2619. Here, API's codes have no such legal force.

[44] See Stigler, The Economics of Information, 69 J. Pol. Econ. 213 (1961); Akerlof, The Market for "Lemons": Quality Uncertainty and the Market Mechanism, 84 Q.J. Econ. 488 (1970).

[45] See Barzel, Measurement Cost and the Organization of Markets, 25 J.L. & Econ. 27, 27 (1982).

[46] Because product information reduces uncertainty, it both increases consumer demand for the product and encourages producers to improve their products. See id. at 29-31, explaining how competition can force sellers to provide accurate quality information to consumers. These are benefits that the antitrust laws should not discourage. See Eliason, 614 F.2d at 129-30; Hatley, 552 F.2d at 653-54; Structural Laminates, 261 F. Supp. at 159; Roofire Alarm, 202 F. Supp. at 169. Cf. BMI, 441 U.S. at 18-23, 99 S. Ct. at 1561-64, and NCAA, 468 U.S. at 103, 104 S. Ct. at 2961, both discussing "output enhancement" as an indicator of the usefulness of a challenged practice.

[47] Economists also acknowledge that the problem is different when quality standards have the force of law. See, e.g., Leland, Quacks, Lemons, and Licensing: A theory of Minimum Quality Standards, 87 J. Pol. Econ. 1328 (1979), arguing that if minimum quality standards can be enforced effectively, they will be too high if set by the industry itself.

[48] See Akerlof, 84 Q.J.Econ. at 499-500, discussing various means of assuring consumers of product quality; Barzel, 25 J.L. & Econ. at 32-42, doing the same. See also Grossman, The Informational Role of Warranties and Private Disclosure about Product Quality, 24 J.L. & Econ. 461 (1981), arguing that consumer expectations force makers of new products to provide reliable information about product quality.

rod producers. But even if it did, absent evidence of anticompetitive animus or buyer coercion by API, there is no reason to believe that it was due to anything other than customer dissatisfaction. [49]

[42] C.

In sum, HN25[] it is not enough to meet the plaintiff's burden under the rule of reason that the plaintiff was harmed because the defendant refused without justification to promote, approve, or buy the plaintiff's product. Neither anticompetitive animus nor the other elements of a section 1 claim can be inferred solely from the incorrectness of a single business decision by a standard-setting trade association. The "reasonableness" of a restraint is judged by its general effect on the market, not by the circumstances of a particular application. An individual business decision that is negligent or based on insufficient facts or illogical conclusions is not a sound basis for antitrust liability. [50]

Were this not so, the [43] federal courts would become boards of automatic review for trade association standards committees, product testing services, and countless other business transactions. Not only would this tax the abilities of the federal courts, but fear of treble damages and judicial second-guessing would discourage the establishment of useful industry standards. [51] Under such a regime, the antitrust laws would stifle, not protect, the competitive market.

IV.

Because Consolidated presents no genuine dispute of facts material to its section 1 claim under either the rule of reason or the per se rule, the judgment of the district court is AFFIRMED.

End of Document

---

[49] We note that the closing sentences of Consolidated's own statement of the facts on appeal state:

> During the two year period that Consolidated waited to obtain a monogram from API, the oil boom collapsed and the market for sucker rods dried up. Unable to sell even monogrammed sucker rods, Consolidated went into receivership.

Appellant's Brief at 12 (emphasis added). This plainly suggests that the lack of the API monogram was far from the principal source of Consolidated's business problems.

[50] See United States Gypsum, 438 U.S. at 441-42, 98 S. Ct. at 2875-76. See also 2 P. Areeda & D. Turner, Antitrust Law 29 (1978); R. Bork, The Antitrust Paradox 78 (1978).

[51] See Indian Head, Inc. v. Allied Tube & Conduit Corp., 817 F.2d 938, 946-47 (2d Cir.), cert. granted, 484 U.S. 814, 108 S. Ct. 65, 98 L. Ed. 2d 29 (1987).

Ferguson v. Greater Pocatello Chamber of Commerce, Inc.

United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit

March 3, 1987, Argued and Submitted ; June 6, 1988, Filed

No. 86-3722

Reporter

848 F.2d 976 *; 1988 U.S. App. LEXIS 7554 ; 1988-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P68,070

Gerald R. & Helen Ferguson, Husband and Wife, both individually and d/b/a; Roveck Productions, Plaintiffs-Appellants, v. Greater Pocatello Chamber of Commerce, Inc.; The Idaho State Journal, Inc.; The Idaho State University, Defendants-Appellees

Prior History: [1] Appeal from the United States District Court for the District of Idaho, D.C. No. CV-84-4112-MJC, Marion J. Callister, Chief District Judge, Presiding.

Core Terms

trade show, spring, lease, bid, district court, summary judgment, Sherman Act, interstate commerce, competitors, subject matter jurisdiction, court of appeals, trial court, conspiracy, commerce, parties, merits, monopolist, nexus, courts, majority opinion, lower court, antitrust, six-year, genuine, cases

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Appropriateness

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Appellate Review > Standards of Review

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > Movant Persuasion & Proof

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Summary Judgment > Evidentiary Considerations

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Genuine Disputes

HN1[] Entitlement as Matter of Law, Appropriateness

Summary judgment is appropriate if the moving party presents evidence that shows that no genuine issue of material fact exists and that it is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. Once the moving party has met this initial burden, the nonmoving party has the subsequent burden of presenting significant probative evidence tending to support its claim that material, triable issues of fact remain.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > General Overview

HN2[] Sherman Act, Claims

The Sherman Act prohibits only restraints or monopolization of trade or commerce among the several States. The Sherman Act interstate commerce requirement is both a substantive element of a statutory violation and a prerequisite for federal court jurisdiction.

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss

HN3[] Defenses, Demurrers & Objections, Motions to Dismiss

The United States Supreme Court has created a three-tier approach for assessing motions to dismiss asserting that defects in the substantive allegations of a complaint have jurisdictional consequences. Under this approach, a court may find the claims raised in the complaint (1) "immaterial" or "wholly insubstantial," (2) "not immaterial," or (3) substantial. Dismissal for lack of jurisdiction is proper only if the claim falls into the first category.

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Reviewability of Lower Court Decisions > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Jurisdiction Over Actions > General Overview

HN4[] Appeals, Reviewability of Lower Court Decisions

The appellate court sometimes requires a trial in the face of uncertain subject matter jurisdiction. And where appropriate, the appellate court disposes of substantive issues on appeal in the absence of an unequivocal determination that lower court jurisdiction exists.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN5[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

It is relatively common for courts to render decisions on the merits in antitrust cases notwithstanding uncertain jurisdiction.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN6[] Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

In addition to the commerce element, plaintiffs must establish the following in order to prevail on their § 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, claims : (1) a contract, combination, or conspiracy (2) between two or more separate persons or entities (3) which has an unreasonable restraint on trade activities.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN7[] Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

The United States Supreme Court has held that in order to establish a claim of a conspiracy in restraint of trade, a plaintiff must provide evidence that tends to exclude the possibility that the defendants were acting independently. The antitrust plaintiff should present direct or circumstantial evidence that reasonably tends to prove that the defendants had a conscious commitment to a common scheme designed to achieve an unlawful objective.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Contracts Law > Types of Contracts > Lease Agreements > General Overview

HN8[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Injury to the antitrust plaintiff alone is not sufficient to prove injury to competition. In the absence of evidence of injury to competition, the plaintiff's claim would not survive a motion for summary judgment.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > General Overview

HN9[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

The "essential facilities" doctrine imposes on the owner of a facility that cannot reasonably be duplicated and which is essential to competition in a given market a duty to make that facility available to its competitors on a nondiscriminatory basis. In order to prevail on such a claim, the plaintiff must establish (1) that the defendant is a monopolist in control of the essential facility, (2) that competitors of the monopolist are unable to duplicate the facility, (3) that the monopolist has refused to provide the competitors access to the facility, and (4) that it is feasible for the monopolist to do so.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

Contracts Law > Types of Contracts > Lease Agreements > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN10[] Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

The grant of an exclusive lease to one lessee does not constitute an illegal contract in restraint of trade merely because it excludes other lessees from the facility. The plaintiffs must additionally establish a conspiracy to restrain competition between the defendants.

Counsel: Jeffrey E. Rolig, Hepworth, Nungester & Felton, Twin Falls, Idaho, for the Plaintiffs-Appellants.

Robert L. Berlin, Eberle, Berlin, Kading, Turnbow & Gillespie, Boise, Idaho, for the Defendants-Appellees Chamber and Journal.

J. Kelley Wiltbank, Idaho State University, Pocatello, Idaho, for the Defendant-Appellee ISU.

Judges: Joseph T. Sneed and Cynthia Holcomb Hall, Circuit Judges, and Albert Lee Stephens, Jr., * District Court Judge. Stephens, District Judge, dissenting.

Opinion by: HALL

Opinion

[*978] HALL, Circuit Judge:

Gerald and Helen Ferguson timely appeal from the district court's grant of summary judgment disposing of their claims against The Greater Pocatello Chamber of Commerce, Inc. (Chamber), The Idaho State Journal, Inc. (Journal), and The Idaho State University (ISU) for treble damages and injunctive relief under sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act. 15 U.S.C. §§ 1 [2] & 2 (1982), 647 F. Supp. 190 (1985). We affirm.

I.

ISU owns and operates the Minidome, a large, covered, multipurpose stadium located on the ISU campus. For over a decade, ISU has leased the Minidome to businesses that wished to hold general interest consumer trade shows during the spring of each year. In 1979, the Fergusons purchased Roveck Productions and produced their first trade show in the Minidome. The Fergusons also produced trade shows during the first week of April for the years 1980 through 1982. In those same years, Chamber and Journal jointly produced a similar trade show in the Minidome, approximately one month after the Fergusons' show.

In 1980, Chamber and Journal determined that the Fergusons' trade show was significantly more profitable than theirs because it was the first trade show of the season. They therefore asked ISU to grant them the first time slot in 1981. ISU refused, stating that the Fergusons already had a lease for that time slot. In 1981, Chamber and Journal requested the first trade show slot for 1982. They also asked ISU if they could alternate on a yearly basis with the Fergusons for the first trade show each spring. Again, ISU [3] refused.

In 1982, ISU asked Chamber and Journal if they intended to produce a trade show in 1983. Chamber and Journal apparently did not inform ISU of their decision in a timely manner. ISU therefore gave the Fergusons the sole contract for the 1983 spring trade show season. However, in September of 1982, ISU met with Chamber and Journal to discuss ISU's policies regarding the spring trade shows. Chamber and Journal apparently expressed continued interest in producing a springtime trade show, provided they could at least alternate [*979] with the Fergusons for the first trade show time slot each spring. Sometime after this meeting, ISU changed its policy regarding the spring trade shows. ISU decided that it would lease the Minidome for only one trade show during the spring of the years 1984 through 1989. ISU further decided to allow all interested parties to bid for the exclusive right to produce the 1984-89 spring trade shows.

---

* Honorable Albert Lee Stephens, Jr., Senior United States District Judge for the Central District of California, sitting by designation.

In 1983, ISU prepared identical "bid packets" for the 1984 spring show. ISU sent these packets to the Fergusons, Chamber and Journal, and another interested promoter, Craig Ellis. The bid packet contained the following terms and conditions: (1) [4] the minimum acceptable bid for each year was $ 6,000, (2) ISU would also consider the bidder's projected revenue share for the Minidome and its demonstrated ability to produce a trade show as well as its experience, management, and financial solvency, (3) the successful bidder would have the exclusive right to produce the springtime trade show for 1984, and (4) the lease would be renewable upon mutual consent for five additional one-year terms.

The Fergusons bid the minimum amount: $ 6,000. Craig Ellis bid $ 12,000. Chamber and Journal bid $ 20,101 and received the exclusive right to produce the 1984 spring trade show. When awarding the contract, ISU stated that it gave the contract to Chamber and Journal because they had demonstrated the ability to produce profitable trade shows in the past and because their bid was substantially higher than the two other bids. Chamber and Journal have produced the subsequent trade shows and have paid ISU the contract price of $ 20,101 each year.

The Fergusons have not attempted to conduct their trade show elsewhere during the spring of those years, nor have they asked ISU for a contract to produce a trade show at any other time of the year. The [5] Fergusons maintain that the Minidome is the only suitable location for a trade show in the area. The Fergusons therefore contend that the defendants' conduct and the six-year lease agreement between ISU and Chamber and Journal violates sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act.

II.

We review de novo a grant of summary judgment. Richards v. Neilsen Freight Lines, 810 F.2d 898, 902 (9th Cir. 1987). HN1[] Summary judgment is appropriate if the moving party presents evidence that shows that no genuine issue of material fact exists and that it is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. Id. Once the moving party has met this initial burden, the nonmoving party has the subsequent burden of presenting significant probative evidence tending to support its claim that material, triable issues of fact remain. Id.

> In the context of the case before us, the substantive law is the law of antitrust, and if the claim makes no economic sense, a speculative inference from the jury will not help it. In such an instance, the record on summary judgment must contain further persuasive evidence if it is to support the claim. Matsushita Electric Industrial Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 106 S. Ct. 1348, 1356-57, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538 (1986). [6]

Richards, 810 F.2d at 902.

III.

HN2[] The Sherman Act prohibits only restraints or monopolization of "trade or commerce among the several States." The Sherman Act interstate commerce requirement is both a substantive element of a statutory violation and a prerequisite for federal court jurisdiction. The somewhat conclusory allegations of the Fergusons' complaint might not satisfy the commerce requirement, and in its present condition the record fails to indicate whether additional proceedings will reveal that jurisdiction is proper. [1] Here, we address our authority [*980] to pass on the merits of the complaint despite the potential jurisdictional defect.

[1] Assuming that the Fergusons' complaint improperly alleged interstate commerce, we should not dismiss this case "for lack of jurisdiction without giving the plaintiff an opportunity to be heard unless it is clear the deficiency cannot be overcome by amendment." May Dept. Store v. Graphic Process Co., 637 F.2d 1211, 1216 (9th Cir. 1980) (citation omitted); see Timberlane Lumber Co. v. Bank of America Nat'l Trust & Sav. Ass'n, 549 F.2d 597, 602 (9th Cir. 1977). The record shows that the Fergusons welcomed exhibitors and products from out of state, which were discouraged by Chamber. Although sparse, these indications of interstate commerce are not so deficient and clearly incurable as to warrant sua sponte dismissal for lack of subject matter jurisdiction at this stage of the proceedings. We reach this conclusion in the context of the minimal showing

[7] HN3[] The Supreme Court in Bell v. Hood, 327 U.S. 678, 90 L. Ed. 939, 66 S. Ct. 773 (1946), created a three-tier approach for assessing motions to dismiss asserting that defects in the substantive allegations of a complaint have jurisdictional consequences. See Yazoo County Indus. Dev. Corp. v. Suthoff, 454 U.S. 1157, 1160, 71 L. Ed. 2d 316, 102 S. Ct. 1032 (1982) (Rehnquist, J., dissenting from denial of cert.). Under this approach, a court may find the claims raised in the complaint (1) "immaterial" or "wholly insubstantial," (2) "not immaterial," or (3) substantial. See Bell, 327 U.S. at 681-83. Dismissal for lack of jurisdiction is proper only if the claim falls into the first category. Id. The second (and perhaps even the third) tier of Bell contemplates judicial proceedings on the merits under circumstances in which the existence of federal subject matter jurisdiction is open to question. See id.; Yazoo County, 454 U.S. at 1160 (Rehnquist, J., dissenting from denial of cert.).

The commerce element of the Fergusons' complaint exemplifies the type of allegation courts should address through the three-tier [8] structure of Bell. "The interstate commerce requirement is tied to the merits as well as to the jurisdictional aspects of an antitrust case. . . ." Thornhill Publishing Co. v. General Tel. & Elec. Corp., 594 F.2d 730, 735 (9th Cir. 1979); accord Timberlane Lumber Co. v. Bank of America Nat'l Trust & Sav. Ass'n, 549 F.2d 597, 602 (9th Cir. 1977). As such, it is distinguishable from "lack of diversity or amount in controversy, or other more traditional jurisdictional defects," with respect to which the Bell approach might speak with less force. See Yazoo County, 454 U.S. at 1161 n.* (Rehnquist, J., dissenting from denial of cert.).

We hold that the commerce allegations in the Fergusons' complaint are neither "immaterial" nor "wholly insubstantial" within the meaning of Bell. Accordingly, Bell authorizes us to conduct further proceedings and, if warranted, to dismiss for failure to state a claim even though we are unable at this point to determine conclusively that subject matter jurisdiction exists.

In following this procedure we act in conformity with our longstanding practice. HN4[] We sometimes require a trial [9] in the face of uncertain subject matter jurisdiction. See, e.g., Rosales v. United States, 824 F.2d 799, 803 (9th Cir. 1987). And where appropriate, we dispose of substantive issues on appeal in the absence of an unequivocal determination that lower court jurisdiction exists. Our recent opinion in Kerr Center Parents Ass'n v. Charles, 842 F.2d 1052 (9th Cir. 1988), is an example of such a case.

Among the district court's rulings in Kerr Center was a decision that the eleventh amendment did not bar the plaintiffs' claims. See id., slip op. at 2988. After the district court entered judgment, however, we handed down an opinion in a different case contrary to the district court's eleventh amendment ruling. See id., slip op. at 2990. Consequently, in Kerr Center we stated that the district court's eleventh amendment determination (a jurisdictional question) "may be open for consideration," and remanded to the district court for a ruling on that issue. See id. Nevertheless, observing that they had "been fully briefed to us and considered by the district court," id. at [*981] 1059, we decided additional, nonjurisdictional [10] matters in Kerr Center, including the substantive merits of the claims and the relief ordered. See id., slip op. at 2993-98.

To similar effect is Kern Oil & Ref. Co. v. Tenneco Oil Co., 840 F.2d 730 (9th Cir. 1988). In Kern Oil the district court entered its findings of fact and conclusions of law several days after the entry of judgment and after the appellant had filed its notice of appeal. Appellant argued that the district court lacked jurisdiction to enter its findings of fact and conclusions of law because "filing a notice of appeal usually divests the district court of jurisdiction over the matters appealed." Id. at 734. Nevertheless, we refused to apply this judge-made doctrine because deciding that the district court lacked jurisdiction "would 'induce needless paper shuffling.'" Id. As in Kern Oil, a remand of the demanded of the Fergusons. The scope of the Sherman Act is coextensive with the breadth of Congress' power to legislate; the Fergusons meet their burden if they can satisfy the very generous "affecting interstate commerce" standard.

---

We also decline to remand to the district court for further proceedings on jurisdiction. Such a remand would be an exercise in futility because we hold that the Fergusons' complaint should be dismissed for failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted. See Kern Oil & Ref. Co. v. Tenneco Oil Co., 840 F.2d 730, 734 (9th Cir. 1988).

Fergusons' appeal to the district court would result in "needless paper shuffling"; we refuse to indulge in such a pointless exercise. [2]

[11] IV.

HN6[] In addition to the commerce element, the Fergusons must establish the following in order to prevail on their section 1 claims: (1) a contract, combination, or conspiracy (2) between two or more separate persons or entities (3) which has an unreasonable restraint on trade activities. See T. W. Electrical Service, Inc. v. Pacific Electrical Contractors Assoc., 809 F.2d 626, 632-33 (9th Cir. 1987).

A.

In Monsanto Co. v. Spray-Rite Serv. Corp., 465 U.S. 752, 764, 79 L. Ed. 2d 775, 104 S. Ct. 1464 (1984), HN7[] the Supreme Court held that in order to establish a claim of a conspiracy in restraint of trade a plaintiff must provide "evidence that tends to exclude the possibility" that the defendants "were acting independently." According to Monsanto, "the antitrust plaintiff should present direct or circumstantial evidence that reasonably tends to prove that the [defendants] 'had a conscious commitment to a common scheme designed to achieve an unlawful objective.'" Id. (citation omitted); cf. Richards, 810 F.2d at 902.

In support of their motion for summary judgment, the defendants "offered understandable and legitimate [12] business reasons for their conduct." Souza v. Estate of Bishop, 821 F.2d 1332, 1335 (9th Cir. 1987). ISU presented evidence of facially valid institutional and business reasons for its decision to limit the spring trade shows to one per year. ISU apparently determined that it was preferable to limit the trade shows to one each spring both from a revenue generating standpoint and in the interest of maintaining a more diversified program at the Minidome. Chamber and Journal presented evidence that they took no part in ISU's decision-making process and that they were willing to accept a contract that merely ensured that they would have the first trade show every other year. The defendants therefore met their "burden by proffering a 'plausible and justifiable' alternative interpretation of [their] conduct that rebuts the plaintiff[s'] allegation of conspiracy." T. W. Electrical Service, 809 F.2d at 632 (citations omitted); see also Souza, 821 F.2d at 1335; Richards, 810 F.2d at 902.

The Fergusons therefore were required to provide evidence of "specific facts" that undercut the defendants' responses. T. W. Electrical Service, 809 F.2d at 631, 632. [13] This they failed to do: They have presented no probative evidence of any illegal concerted activity. In particular, the Fergusons did not offer any evidence that rebuts the defendants' evidence (1) that ISU unilaterally [*982] made a legitimate business decision to hold one spring trade show in the Minidome and to put out bids for the right to produce that show; (2) that ISU drafted bid specifications without input from any outside parties; (3) that the bidding procedures were fair and entirely anonymous; (4) that the renewable term of the lease was a standard clause in ISU contracts of this type, and (5) that there was no prior agreement to reject the Fergusons' bid.

Applying the rule of Monsanto, we therefore hold that, based on the record before the district court, the defendants' actions were completely independent and cannot amount to a conspiracy in restraint of trade.

B.

Recognizing the lack of sufficient probative evidence of a conspiracy between the defendants, the Fergusons contend that the lease between ISU and Chamber and Journal is itself a "contract" which violates section 1 even if there was no "conspiracy" to eliminate competition. The district court [14] did not specifically rule on this issue; however, it did hold that the Fergusons failed to establish a genuine question of material fact on whether the six-year exclusive lease between ISU and Chamber and Journal constituted an unreasonable restraint of trade. In order to survive a summary judgment motion on their "contract" claim, the Fergusons had to establish genuine questions of material fact on whether the lease between ISU and Chamber and Journal (1) constituted an unreasonable restraint of trade, and (2) caused injury to competition in the relevant market. See, e.g., Reid Bros. Logging Co. v. Ketchikan Pulp Co., 699 F.2d 1292, 1296 (9th Cir.), cert. denied, 464 U.S. 916, 78 L. Ed. 2d 259, 104 S. Ct. 279, 104 S. Ct. 280 (1983). [3] We hold that they have failed to establish the presence of either question.

---

[2] HN5[] It is relatively common for courts to render decisions on the merits in antitrust cases notwithstanding uncertain jurisdiction. See generally, e.g., McLain v. Real Estate Bd. of New Orleans, Inc., 444 U.S. 232, 245-47, 62 L. Ed. 2d 441, 100 S. Ct. 502 (1980); Ronwin v. State Bar, 686 F.2d 692, 698-99 (9th Cir. 1981) (explicitly stating that the plaintiff had failed to establish jurisdiction but addressing other grounds), rev'd, 466 U.S. 558, 104 S. Ct. 1989, 80 L. Ed. 2d 590 (decision on merits); Timberlane, 549 F.2d at 602-03 (defense attacking commerce allegations is not jurisdictional, but on merits).

[15] The Fergusons -- and all other interested producers of spring trade shows in the area -- had an equal opportunity to bid on the lease for the 1984-1989 spring trade shows. Such an opportunity for free competition shall presumably arise again at the end of the six-year lease. ISU's decision to limit the spring season to one show therefore did not foreclose competition in the market in which the Fergusons compete. The Fergusons have presented no evidence that ISU would not have given the lease to them -- or any other qualified competitor of Chamber and Journal -- if they had been the highest bidder. As it turned out, the Fergusons' bid was only half as large as that of the second highest bidder, Craig Ellis, and less than one-third of the prevailing bid of Chamber and Journal. The Fergusons therefore provided insufficient evidence of the lease's unreasonableness.

Secondly, while the exclusive nature of the lease does preclude the Fergusons from producing a spring trade show in the Minidome, HN8[] "'injury to the antitrust plaintiff alone is not sufficient to prove injury to competition.' In the absence of evidence of injury to competition, [the Fergusons'] claim . . . would not survive [16] a motion for summary judgment." T. W. Electrical Service, 809 F.2d at 635 (citations omitted). The Fergusons have failed to present such evidence. Nor have they presented any evidence that ISU's lease harms consumers of the trade shows. See 1 P. Areeda & D. Turner, Antitrust Law paras. 103-13 (1980).

ISU presented evidence that it did not destroy competition for the spring trade show; it merely forced the competitors to bid against one another for the one show ISU was willing to house. Such competition, we presume, will take place at six-year intervals. We find nothing inherently unreasonable about such a restraint on the competition for the spring trade shows.

V.

The Fergusons primary contention on appeal is that ISU could not limit [*983] use of its "essential facility" (the Minidome) to one springtime show per year without running afoul of the Sherman Act. HN9[] The "essential facilities" doctrine imposes on the owner of a facility that cannot reasonably be duplicated and which is essential to competition in a given market a duty to make that facility available to its competitors on a nondiscriminatory basis. Fishman v. Estate of Wirtz, 807 F.2d 520, 539-41 (7th Cir. 1986); [17] see Interface Group, Inc. v. Massachusetts Port Authority, 816 F.2d 9, 12 (1st Cir. 1987). In order to prevail on such a claim, the plaintiffs must establish (1) that the defendant is a monopolist in control of the essential facility, (2) that competitors of the monopolist are unable to duplicate the facility, (3) that the monopolist has refused to provide the competitors access to the facility, and (4) that it is feasible for the monopolist to do so. MCI Communications v. AT&T, 708 F.2d 1081, 1132-33 (7th Cir.), cert. denied, 464 U.S. 891, 104 S. Ct. 234, 78 L. Ed. 2d 226 (1983). See generally Hecht v. Pro-Football, Inc., 187 U.S. App. D.C. 73, 570 F.2d 982, 992-93 (D.C. Cir. 1977), cert. denied, 436 U.S. 956, 57 L. Ed. 2d 1121, 98 S. Ct. 3069 (1978); Aspen Highlands Skiing Corp. v. Aspen Skiing Co., 738 F.2d 1509, 1519-21 (10th Cir. 1984), aff'd on other grounds, 472 U.S. 585, 600-02 & n.27, 86 L. Ed. 2d 467, 105 S. Ct. 2847 (1985).

As applied to the facts of this case, the Fergusons claim is without merit. First, the Fergusons appear to be arguing that, [18] in leasing the Minidome to Chamber and Journal for an exclusive six-year term, ISU has refused to deal with them. But even assuming that ISU is a monopolist and that its Minidome is an essential facility, the Fergusons are not in competition with ISU. Thus, ISU has not refused to deal with a competitor.

---

[3] We agree with the Fergusons that the "rule of reason" analysis applies to the facts of this case and that they need not show specific intent under section 1. See Cascade Cabinet Co. v. Western Cabinet & Millwork Inc., 710 F.2d 1366, 1370-73 (9th Cir. 1983); United States v. Champion Internat'l Corp., 557 F.2d 1270, 1274 (9th Cir. 1977), cert. denied, 434 U.S. 938, 98 S. Ct. 428, 54 L. Ed. 2d 298 (1977).

> [The Fergusons'] view of the essential facilities doctrine . . . considerably overstates its scope. The doctrine aims to prevent a firm with monopoly power from extending that market power. . . It is difficult to see how denying a facility to one who, like [the Fergusons], is not an actual or potential competitor [of ISU] could enhance or reinforce [ISU's] power. See P. Areeda & H. Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law paras. 736.2d, 736.2e (Supp. 1986). If this is so in the case of a private monopolist, it is still more certain when the monopolist is a public agency [like ISU], for the agency has neither the motive nor the need to solidify its monopoly position.

Interface Group, 816 F.2d at 12; cf. Turf Paradise, Inc. v. Arizona Downs, 670 F.2d 813, 822 (9th Cir.), cert. denied, 456 U.S. 1011, 102 S. Ct. 2308, 73 L. Ed. 2d 1308 (1982) [19] ("the sharing of an essential facility by two or more competitors accompanied by the exclusion of all other competitors may amount to a violation of the Sherman Act" (emphasis added)). Moreover, ISU has not refused to deal with anyone. It has merely refused to house more than one trade show per spring, and it has decided that that show will be given to the producer who makes the best bid. The Fergusons simply failed to outbid their competitors.

Second, the Fergusons presented insufficient evidence that (1) the Minidome, which is a state-owned facility, is the type of "essential facility" protected by the Sherman Act, (2) that the Fergusons were not able to produce reasonably comparable trade shows in the Minidome at another time of the year, and (3) that a competitor of ISU could not construct another, equally adequate, facility in the area. Cf. Fishman, 807 F.2d at 539-41; id. at 563-75 (Easterbrook, J., dissenting in part); Olympia Equip. Leasing Co. v. Western Union Telegraph Co., 797 F.2d 370, 376-80 (7th Cir. 1986), cert. denied, 480 U.S. 934, 107 S. Ct. 1574, 94 L. Ed. 2d 765 (1987). See [20] generally Otter Tail Power Co. v. United States, 410 U.S. 366, 35 L. Ed. 2d 359, 93 S. Ct. 1022 (1973); United States v. Terminal R.R. Assoc., 224 U.S. 383, 56 L. Ed. 810, 32 S. Ct. 507 (1912).

Third, HN10[] the grant of an exclusive lease to one lessee does not constitute a illegal contract in restraint of trade merely because it excludes other lessees from the facility. The plaintiffs must additionally establish a conspiracy to restrain competition between the defendants. See United States v. Yellow Cab Co., 332 U.S. 218, 229, [*984] 91 L. Ed. 2010, 67 S. Ct. 1560 (1947) (exclusive lease contracts do not violate Sherman Act unless a conspiracy to obtain them is shown) (citing Donovan v. Pennsylvania Co., 199 U.S. 279, 50 L. Ed. 192, 26 S. Ct. 91 (1905)); Export Liquor Sales, Inc. v. Ammex Warehouse Co., 426 F.2d 251, 252-53 (6th Cir. 1970) (same) (citing cases), cert. denied, 400 U.S. 1000, 27 L. Ed. 2d 451, 91 S. Ct. 460 (1971); Parmelee Transp. Co. v. Keeshin, 292 F.2d 794, 803-04 (7th Cir.) (exclusive contract does not violate Sherman Act if it is obtained [21] by competitive bids), cert. denied, 368 U.S. 944, 7 L. Ed. 2d 340, 82 S. Ct. 376 (1961). As detailed above, see Part III. B., the Fergusons failed to establish a genuine question of fact regarding any conspiracy between the defendants.

Finally, even if the Fergusons could establish that they could not conduct their trade show in any facility other than ISU's Minidome, ISU was free to lease a portion of that location's available time to one entity and exclude others without violating the Sherman Act. Export Liquor, 426 F.2d at 252 (lessor who had control over a unique location essential to the conduct of a certain kind of business could nevertheless lease part of facility to single lessee); see Interface Group, 816 F.2d at 11-12; cf. Sakamoto v. Duty Free Shoppers, 613 F. Supp. 381, 388-91 (D. Guam 1983) (exclusive concession, open and fair bidding, reasonable as a matter of law), aff'd on other grounds, 764 F.2d 1285 (9th Cir. 1985), cert. denied, 475 U.S. 1081, 89 L. Ed. 2d 715, 106 S. Ct. 1457 (1986). [4] [4] See also BusTop Shelters, Inc. v. Convenience & Safety Corp., 521 F. Supp. 989, 997 (S.D.N.Y. 1981) ("Ironically, one of the principal acts [the plaintiff] complains of was the opening of the bidding on the franchise and the receipt of competing bids. It is hard to see how that conduct can be called anticompetitive."); Murdock v. City of Jacksonville, Florida, 361 F. Supp. 1083, 1088-89 (M.D. Fla. 1973) (exclusive lease, open bidding, no Sherman Act violation).

---

[22] VI.

The Fergusons also failed to establish a cause of action under section 2 of the Sherman Act. The district court applied the appropriate tests for the Fergusons' monopolization and attempt to monopolize claims. See Drinkwine v. Federated Publications, Inc., 780 F.2d 735, 738-41 (9th Cir. 1985), cert. denied, 475 U.S. 1087, 89 L. Ed. 2d 727, 106 S. Ct. 1471 (1986). The Fergusons do not seriously question the district court's holdings on appeal. We therefore affirm the district court's grant of summary judgment on the Fergusons' section 2 claims.

VII.

All of the issues involved were properly "taken from the jury" because "the evidence is such that without weighing the credibility of the witnesses there can be but one reasonable conclusion as to the verdict." California Steel and Tube v. Kaiser Steel Corp., 650 F.2d 1001, 1004 (9th Cir. 1981) (citation omitted). On the record before the district court, none of the defendants could be held to have violated either section 1 or section 2 of the Sherman Act. The Fergusons' claims make no economic sense, and speculative inferences from the jury can not help them. "In such an [23] instance, the record on summary judgment must contain further persuasive evidence if it is to support the[ir] claim[s]." Richards, 810 F.2d at 902 (citing Matsushita Electric, 106 S. Ct. at 1356-57). Since the record does not contain such evidence, summary judgment was appropriate. [5] The [*985] district court's grant of summary judgment therefore is AFFIRMED.

[24]

Dissent by: STEPHENS

Dissent

STEPHENS, District Judge, dissenting:

I dissent from the majority opinion on two grounds: because neither the district court nor the Court of Appeals have subject matter jurisdiction in this case. And, second, because the district court improvidently granted summary judgment despite an unresolved material issue of fact as to whether a nexus with interstate commerce existed.

These reasons are the result of the lack of any consideration by the district court of the need for a nexus with interstate commerce as the foundation for jurisdiction and as an element of the claim itself.

This means that the commerce element of a Sherman Act claim as identified in the first paragraph of part III of the majority opinion is lacking. It is similarly dispositive of the issue of subject matter jurisdiction which briefly stated requires that the dispute be in or affect interstate commerce since the right of Congress to legislate in this field depends upon the commerce clause of the Constitution. This case came from the district court in the form of a summary judgment. The facts were presented to the trial court by affidavit. On this record which is before us, there

---

[5] Because we hold that plaintiffs have failed to present any material issue of fact on the merits of their antitrust claims against all defendants, we do not address whether any of the defendants were entitled to summary judgment under the eleventh amendment to the United States Constitution, the Noerr-Pennington doctrine, or Parker "state action" immunity. See Edelman v. Jordan, 415 U.S. 651, 39 L. Ed. 2d 662, 94 S. Ct. 1347 (1974) (in private suits against state or its agencies, eleventh amendment bars recovery from state treasury); Eastern R.R. Presidents' Conference v. Noerr Motor Freight, Inc., 365 U.S. 127, 5 L. Ed. 2d 464, 81 S. Ct. 523 (1961) (concerted efforts to influence government do not violate antitrust laws); United Mine Workers of Am. v. Pennington, 381 U.S. 657, 14 L. Ed. 2d 626, 85 S. Ct. 1585 (1965) (same); Parker v. Brown, 317 U.S. 341, 87 L. Ed. 315, 63 S. Ct. 307 (1943) (anticompetitive actions taken pursuant to program administered in detail by state are immune from antitrust laws).

is no [25] indication that the alleged violations of the Sherman Act by the defendants were in or had any affect on interstate commerce.

The district judge issued a Memorandum Decision which pointed out that the suit was for damages and injunctive relief under sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act. It contained a statement of undisputed facts in substantial detail and recognized that summary judgment may be granted only where the movant is entitled to judgment as a matter of law and where there is no genuine dispute as to any material fact. The decision acknowledges that summary judgment must be used sparingly in antitrust cases where motive and interest play a key role, citing Barnes v. Arden Mayfair, Inc., 759 F.2d 676, 680 (9th Cir. 1985). Without one word concerning the need for a showing of a nexus with interstate commerce, summary judgment issued.

Every court of limited jurisdiction has one first and inescapable duty. This duty is without exception. The court must satisfy itself that it has jurisdiction over the cause before it. The court can not escape this duty on the grounds that the parties did not raise the issue, that the parties stipulated that the court has jurisdiction, [26] or that the defendant failed to deny the plaintiff's averments that the court has jurisdiction. The jurisdictional issue must be adjudicated. At this point in the judicial process we have little concern about the averments of the complaint. The averments of the complaint are of no assistance in a summary judgment proceeding which requires affidavits of witnesses, affidavits which are only available to the court of appeals if they are in the record on appeal.

The Supreme Court recently addressed this subject in Bender v. Williamsport School Dist., 475 U.S. 534, 89 L. Ed. 2d 501, 106 S. Ct. 1326 (1986) as follows:

> Federal courts are not courts of general jurisdiction; they have only the power that is authorized by Article III of the Constitution and the statutes enacted by Congress pursuant thereto. See, e.g., Marbury v. Madison, 5 U.S. 137, 1 Cranch 137, 173-180, 2 L. Ed. 60 (1803). For that reason, every federal appellate court has a special obligation to "satisfy itself not only of its own jurisdiction, but also that of the lower courts in a cause under review," even though the parties are prepared to concede it. Mitchell v. Maurer, 293 U.S. 237, 244, 79 L. Ed. 338, 55 S. Ct. 162 (1934). [27] See Juidice v. Vail, 430 U.S. 327, 331-332, 51 L. Ed. 2d 376, 97 S. Ct. 1211 (1977) (standing). "And if the record discloses that the lower court was without jurisdiction this court will notice the defect, although the parties make no contention concerning it. [When the lower federal court] lack[s] jurisdiction, we have jurisdiction on appeal, not of the merits but merely for the purpose of correcting the error of the lower court in entertaining the suit." *United States v. Corrick, 298 U.S. 435, 440, [986] 80 L. Ed. 1263, 56 S. Ct. 829 (1936) (footnotes omitted).

Id. at 541 (footnote omitted).

Although the focus in Bender is on standing, the basic issue is jurisdiction. The Court continues:

> Mr. Youngman's status as an aggrieved parent, however, like any other kindred fact showing the existence of a justiciable "case" or "controversy" under Article III, must affirmatively appear in the record. As the first Justice Harlan observed, "the presumption . . . is that the court below was without jurisdiction" unless "the contrary appears affirmatively from the record." King Bridge Co. v. Otoe County, 120 U.S. 225, 226, 30 L. Ed. 623, 7 S. Ct. 552 (1887). [28] Accord, Thomas v. Board of Trustees, 195 U.S. 207, 210, 49 L. Ed. 160, 25 S. Ct. 24 (1904); Minnesota v. Northern Securities Co., 194 U.S. 48, 62-63, 48 L. Ed. 870, 24 S. Ct. 598 (1904). That lack of standing was not noticed by either party matters not, for as we said in Mansfield C. & L.M. R. Co. v. Swan, 111 U.S. 379, 382, 28 L. Ed. 462, 4 S. Ct. 510 (1884):
>
>> "The rule, springing from the nature and limits of the judicial power of the United States, is inflexible and without exception, which requires this court, of its own motion, to deny its own jurisdiction, and, in the exercise of its appellate power, that of all other courts of the United States, in all cases where such jurisdiction does not affirmatively appear in the record on which, in the exercise of that power, it is called to act. On every writ of error or appeal, the first and fundamental question is that of jurisdiction, first, of this court, and then of the court from which the record comes. This question the court is bound to ask and answer for itself, even when not otherwise suggested, and without respect to the relation of the parties to it."

Accord, [29] Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Willard, 220 U.S. 413, 419, 55 L. Ed. 521, 31 S. Ct. 460 (1911); Kentucky v. Powers, 201 U.S. 1, 35-36, 50 L. Ed. 633, 26 S. Ct. 387 (1906); Great Southern Fire Proof Hotel Co. v. Jones, 177 U.S. 449, 453, 44 L. Ed. 842, 20 S. Ct. 690 (1900). See Thomson v. Gaskill, 315 U.S. 442, 446, 86 L. Ed. 951, 62 S. Ct. 673 (1942). Moreover, because it is not "sufficient that jurisdiction may be inferred argumentatively from averments in the pleadings," Grace v. American Central Ins. Co., 109 U.S. 278, 284, 3 S. Ct. 207, 27 L. Ed. 932 (1883); Thomas v. Board of Trustees, 195 U.S., at 210, it follows that the necessary factual predicate may not be gleaned from the briefs and arguments themselves. This "first principle of federal jurisdiction" applies "whether the case is at the trial stage or the appellate stage." P. Bator, P. Mishkin, D. Shapiro, & H Wechsler, Hart and Wechsler's The Federal Courts and the Federal System 835-836 (2d ed. 1973).

Id. at 546-47 (footnote omitted).

The Bender opinion concludes on page 549:

> We therefore hold [30] that because the Court of Appeals was without jurisdiction to hear the appeal, it was without authority to decide the merits. Accordingly, the judgment of the Court of Appeals is vacated, and the case is remanded with instructions to dismiss the appeal for want of jurisdiction.

The Ninth Circuit is up to date as of March 22, 1988 when it decided Latch v. United States, 842 F.2d 1031 (9th Cir. 1988), holding:

> The issue of subject matter jurisdiction presents a legal question, which we review de novo. Peter Starr Production Co. v. Twin Continental Films, Inc., 783 F.2d 1440, 1442 (9th Cir. 1986). Furthermore, "every federal appellate court has a special obligation to 'satisfy itself not only of its own jurisdiction, but also of that of the lower courts in a cause under review,' even though the parties are prepared to concede it." Bender v. Williamsport Area School District, 475 U.S. 534, 541, 89 L. Ed. 2d 501, 106 S. Ct. 1326 [*987] (1986) (quoting Mitchell v. Maurer, 293 U.S. 237, 244, 79 L. Ed. 338, 55 S. Ct. 162 (1934)).
>
> As a general rule, if a district court has wrongfully exercised subject [31] matter jurisdiction over a dispute, the appellate court must vacate the district court's decision, including any award of attorney's fees.

Latch v. United States, at 1032-33.

In some cases where the issue of jurisdiction is in doubt, the facts needed to establish subject matter jurisdiction are intertwined with the substantive facts in such a way that the most direct and economical way to proceed may be to proceed with trial until the jurisdictional facts can be sorted out. In doing so, the trial court is viewing the issue prospectively, looking forward as the facts unfold, not knowing the answer to the jurisdictional issue until the facts accumulate in the record. Even in the process of considering summary judgment, the trial court has the power to call for affidavits germane to jurisdiction. On the other hand, the court of appeals has an entirely different role. The record on appeal is presented for review of what has already transpired. It is complete as filed. The court of appeals has no means to add testimony by affidavit or otherwise. If it appears from this record that the trial court did not have subject matter jurisdiction, the court of appeals must correct [32] the trial court's error of proceeding to judgment.

The court of appeals has no reason whatsoever for deferring this jurisdictional issue and no way to escape deciding it. No case cited by the majority as precedent holds to the contrary. [1] The trial court has options, but the court of appeals has none save to vacate the trial court decision and return the case to the trial court. In this case the trial court did not consider the relationship between the plaintiff's claims and interstate commerce, but granted summary [*988] judgment, disposing of the case by noting an absence of substantive merit. The majority on the appellate court follows the same course, bypassing the question of jurisdiction and the commerce element of the claim to examine the "conspiracy and contract claims." In the majority opinion, the relationship between the plaintiff's claim and interstate commerce is never resolved.

[33] I oppose this decision because it is against the law as articulated in 1986 by the Supreme Court in Bender and by the Ninth Circuit in Latch in March of this year. As a Ninth Circuit precedent it will invite argument that Sherman Act civil cases do not require proof of a nexus with interstate commerce. We have in the majority opinion a ruling which ignores the need to establish a nexus between the claimed wrong and interstate commerce in a Sherman Act case both as an element of the claimed wrong and as a key to establishing or rejecting subject matter jurisdiction.

The facts necessary to establish jurisdiction and the commerce element necessary to state a claim under the Sherman Act for monetary damages or for injunctive relief are the same. From the point of view of stating and proving a claim, the commerce element is on the same level as any other element of a claim. Failure to establish a nexus with interstate commerce is sufficient to defeat the claim. On the otherhand, from the point of view of jurisdiction of Sherman Act claims, when the facts presented in the trial court do not establish a nexus with

---

[1] None of the cases that the majority opinion cites decided that a panel of the court of appeals may proceed to a decision on the merits after noting lack of subject matter jurisdiction. Bender has overruled all previously decided cases to the extent of any conflict existed, and all subsequently decided court of appeals cases in conflict with Bender are against the law as articulated by the Supreme Court and are not valid precedents. Cases containing appellate observations as to what are proper district court procedures to resolve jurisdictional problems in complicated cases do not constitute precedent as to what is appropriate procedure in the court of appeals.

Two Ninth Circuit cases that the majority cites, Kern Oil & Ref. Co. v. Tenneco Oil Co., 840 F.2d 730, 734 (9th Cir. 1988), and Kerr Center Parents Ass'n v. Charles, 842 F.2d 1052 (9th Cir. 1988), have been decided since Bender. To the extent they are viewed as applicable to this situation, they can not undercut the authoritative value of Bender. This has been recognized within the Ninth Circuit since both cases were decided before this circuit decided Latch. Moreover, neither Kerr Center nor Kern Oil involved the issue of subject matter jurisdiction. Kerr Center involved state immunity under the eleventh amendment, a defense which is not a jurisdictional bar. Kern Oil involved the district court's loss of jurisdiction upon the filing of the notice of appeal. The court noted that the doctrine was a judicial creation. 840 F.2d at 734. As I have heretofore noted, the need to establish a nexus with interstate commerce is a constitutional necessity.

It is also important to note that the majority's reliance on McLain v. Real Estate Bd. of New Orleans, 444 U.S. 232, 62 L. Ed. 2d 441, 100 S. Ct. 502 (1980), is misplaced. In McLain the Court articulated a very specific standard for determining the sufficiency of the nexus to interstate commerce in Sherman Act cases at different stages of the proceedings:

> Jurisdiction may not be invoked under [the Sherman Act] unless the relevant aspect of interstate commerce is identified; it is not sufficient merely to rely on identification of a relevant local activity and to presume an interrelationship with some unspecified aspect of interstate commerce. To establish jurisdiction a plaintiff must allege the critical relationship in the pleadings and if these allegations are controverted must proceed to demonstrate by submission of evidence beyond the pleadings either that the defendants' activity is itself in interstate commerce or, if it is local in nature, that it has an effect on some other appreciable activity demonstrably in interstate commerce.

444 U.S. at 242.

Moreover, under McLain, the Fergusons had the burden of "demonstrat[ing] a substantial effect on interstate commerce." Id. See also Turf Paradise Inc. v. Arizona Downs, 670 F.2d 813, 818-19 (9th Cir. 1982). In McLain the Court allowed the plaintiffs-petitioners to proceed to trial only because they had met the strict requirements of the McLain test.

interstate commerce, the federal courts are without authority to [34] decide the merits, and the Court of Appeals has jurisdiction on appeal, not on the merits but merely for the purposes of correcting the error of the trial court in entertaining the suit.

In this case the trial court failed its special obligation to satisfy itself of its own jurisdiction and the same may be said of the Court of Appeals. In my opinion the district court produced a void judgment which is approved by the majority opinion. [2] The appeal should be dismissed for want of jurisdiction and the district court judgment should be vacated.

[35]

End of Document

[2] Dismissing the appeal for lack of subject matter jurisdiction would not be "an exercise in futility." The Fergusons would then lose only the right to rely on the Sherman Act. The Idaho courts remain open to them to pursue their claims under the anti-trust statutes of Idaho. For this reason the majority decision on the substantive issues is highly prejudicial to the Fergusons who might present a very different case in the state courts if allowed to proceed to trial.

C & W Constr. Co. v. Brotherhood of Carpenters & Joiners, Local 745

United States District Court for the District of Hawaii

June 7, 1988, Decided ; June 7, 1988, Filed

Civil No. 83-0710

Reporter

687 F. Supp. 1453 *; 1988 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 5400 ; 128 L.R.R.M. 2677; 113 Lab. Cas. (CCH) P11,763; 1988-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P68,172

C & W Construction Company, a sole proprietorship, Cher Mungovan, and Walter Mungovan, Plaintiffs, v. Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners of America, Local 745, AFL-CIO; Walter H. Kupau; William O. Nishibayashi; Ralph Torres; and Steven Suyat, Defendants plaintiffs', suppliers, perjury, defendants', antitrust, exemption, enterprise, predicate act, allegations, picketing, preempted, conspiracy, induced, statute of limitations, federal labor, employees, violence, coerced, restraint of trade, Hobbs Act, antitrust claim, anti trust law, extortion, parties, mail, tortious interference, motion to dismiss, summary judgment motion, individual defendant, reasonable inference

Core Terms

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

HN1[] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

Under the standards for a motion under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6), the trial court presumes all factual allegations of the nonmoving party to be true, and it draws all reasonable inferences from them in his favor.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Scope

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > Time Limitations

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations > Statute of Limitations

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > General Overview

HN2[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Clayton Act

The four year statute of limitations applicable to Clayton Act civil enforcement actions, 15 U.S.C.S. § 15(b), applies to RICO civil enforcement actions.

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > General Overview

Labor & Employment Law > Collective Bargaining & Labor Relations > Labor Arbitration > Arbitration Coverage Limits

HN3[] Legislation, Statute of Limitations

The Labor Management Relations Act does not provide a limitations period.

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > Time Limitations

Labor & Employment Law > Collective Bargaining & Labor Relations > Labor Arbitration > Arbitration Coverage Limits

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > General Overview

HN4[] Statute of Limitations, Time Limitations

Haw. Rev. Stat. § 657-11 is the most closely analogous Hawaii statute of limitations for a Labor Management Relations Act claim, which consists of an earlier one-year period or its amended two-year period.

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > Time Limitations

Labor & Employment Law > Collective Bargaining & Labor Relations > Labor Arbitration > Arbitration Coverage Limits

HN5[] Statute of Limitations, Time Limitations

See Haw. Rev. Stat. § 657-7.

Civil Procedure > ... > Affirmative Defenses > Statute of Limitations > Statutory Construction

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > General Overview

Labor & Employment Law > ... > Civil Actions > Time Limitations > General Overview

HN6[] Statute of Limitations, Statutory Construction

Hawaii has not recognized the equitable tolling doctrine, but it has construed statutes of limitations very strictly.

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > Tolling

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > General Overview

HN7[] Statute of Limitations, Tolling

Mere commencement of an action in one state or federal jurisdiction generally does not toll the statute of limitations against an action for the same cause and between the same parties in another state or federal jurisdiction.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Labor > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

HN8[] Exemptions & Immunities, Labor

Before the court considers a defendants' labor exemption arguments, i.e., which would make them immune from antitrust attack, it must determine if the plaintiffs have pled a viable federal antitrust violation.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN9[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 1.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

HN10[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

To bring the unreasonable restraint of trade within 15 U.S.C.S. § 1; i.e., the trial court must determine if the misconduct was, in fact, conspiratorial, and not unilateral by a union.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN11[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

To plead a viable violation of 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, the plaintiff must allege two factors: (1) plurality of actors and (2) concerted action.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

HN12[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

To establish concerted action, a plaintiff must plead facts (and, of course, subsequently prove facts) that would allow the reasonable inference that plaintiff's suppliers had a conscious commitment to a common scheme to effect an unreasonable restraint of trade, as willing or unwilling participants.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN13[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Acquiescence by an unwilling party does not prevent it from being a co-conspirator for purposes of 15 U.S.C.S. § 1.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN14[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Even if an inference of coercion was reasonable, this alone would not support a finding of conspiracy. The plaintiff also would have to allege facts allowing a jury to infer reasonably that the coerced and complying party who refused to deal knew that the purpose of the coercion was to pursue an end that violated antitrust laws.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Labor > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Labor > Statutory Exemptions

HN15[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Clayton Act

The Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 17, 29 U.S.C.S. § 52, and the Norris LaGuardia Act, 29 U.S.C.S. §§ 104, 105, 113, declare that labor unions are not in themselves combinations or conspiracies in trade, and exempt many of their activities from the operation of antitrust laws.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Labor > General Overview

HN16[] Exemptions & Immunities, Labor

Unilateral union activity having a labor objective is exempt so long as a union acts in its own self-interest and does not combine with non-labor groups. That is, the union activities must be unilateral, not conspiratorial.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Labor > General Overview

HN17[] Exemptions & Immunities, Labor

The exemption statutes are inapplicable to concerted action or agreements between unions and non-labor parties affecting matters outside of the parties collective bargaining relationship.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

HN18[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Clayton Act

Section 6 of the Clayton Act merely states that the labor organizations may lawfully carry out their legitimate objectives.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

HN19[ ] Antitrust & Trade Law, Clayton Act

Section 20 of the Clayton Act exempts peaceful labor activity including communications aimed at persuading individuals to cease working for or patronizing particular employers.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Labor > Nonstatutory Exemptions

Contracts Law > Contract Conditions & Provisions > General Overview

Labor & Employment Law > Collective Bargaining & Labor Relations > Enforcement of Bargaining Agreements

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Labor > General Overview

HN20[ ] Labor, Nonstatutory Exemptions

The nonstatutory exemption may be invoked in cases involving valid collective bargaining agreements between unions and employers on wages or working conditions.

Admiralty & Maritime Law > Maritime Personal Injuries > General Overview

Business & Corporate Law > ... > Establishment > Elements > Application of Agency Law Principles

Business & Corporate Law > ... > Duties & Liabilities > Negligent Acts of Agents > Liability of Agents

Torts > Vicarious Liability > Agency Relationships > General Overview

HN21[ ] Admiralty & Maritime Law, Maritime Personal Injuries

An agent is individually liable for torts committed by him pursuant to his agency. An antitrust action is, or is in the nature of, a tort action. This agency principle applies in the antitrust context.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act > General Overview

HN22[ ] Private Actions, Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations

A violation of 18 U.S.C.S. § 1962(c) requires (1) conduct (2) of an enterprise (3) through a pattern (4) of racketeering activity.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act > General Overview

HN23[] Private Actions, Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations

18 U.S.C.S. § 1961(3) defines a "person" as any individual or entity capable of holding a legal or beneficial interest in property.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > Criminal Offenses > Obstruction of Administration of Justice > General Overview

HN24[] Private Actions, Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations

The more reasoned rule would allow perjury to be a predicate act under 18 U.S.C.S. § 1961(1), through 18 U.S.C.S. § 1503, where a plaintiffs alleges that the perjury was part of the pattern of a racketeering activity.

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Fraud > Wire Fraud > Elements

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Fraud Against the Government > Mail Fraud > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Fraud > Wire Fraud > General Overview

HN25[] Wire Fraud, Elements

Mail and wire fraud are the two predicate acts most frequently used to establish "racketeering activity" under RICO. The statutes proscribe use of mails, 18 U.S.C.S. § 1341, and use of interstate electronic media, 18 U.S.C.S. § 1343, to further schemes to defraud. Both statutes are broad and simple, requiring three elements: (1) devising a scheme to defraud, (2) using the mails or wires to further the fraud, (3) with the specific intent to deceive or defraud.

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Heightened Pleading Requirements > Fraud Claims

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Heightened Pleading Requirements > General Overview

HN26[] Heightened Pleading Requirements, Fraud Claims

Fed. R. Civ. P. 9(b) requires that in all averments of fraud, the circumstances constituting fraud shall be stated with particularity.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Heightened Pleading Requirements > Fraud Claims

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act > Elements

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Heightened Pleading Requirements > General Overview

HN27[] Private Actions, Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations

A RICO suit alleging fraud as a pattern of racketeering activity must therefore comply with Fed. R. Civ. P. 9(b).

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Extortion > Hobbs Act > Elements

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Extortion > Hobbs Act > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act > Elements

HN28[] Hobbs Act, Elements

The Hobbs Act prohibits interference with commerce by extortion, defined as the obtaining the property of another, with his consent, induced by wrongful use of actual or threatened force, violence or fear. 18 U.S.C.S. § 1951(b)(2).

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act > Elements

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act > General Overview

HN29[] Private Actions, Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations

The pattern of racketeering activity requires at least two acts of racketeering activity. 18 U.S.C.S. § 1961(5).

Labor & Employment Law > Collective Bargaining & Labor Relations > Federal Preemption

HN30[] Collective Bargaining & Labor Relations, Federal Preemption

Federal law pre-empts state remedies that interfere with federal labor policy or with specific provisions of the National Labor Relations Act.

Labor & Employment Law > Collective Bargaining & Labor Relations > Federal Preemption

HN31[] Collective Bargaining & Labor Relations, Federal Preemption

See Haw. Rev. Stat. § 480-10.

Labor & Employment Law > Collective Bargaining & Labor Relations > Federal Preemption

HN32[] Collective Bargaining & Labor Relations, Federal Preemption

When conduct at issue is arguably prohibited or protected by the National Labor Relations Act, otherwise applicable state law is generally preempted. The United States Supreme Court has recognized exemptions to this rule, identifying specifically the exception to preemption for violence.

Torts > Procedural Matters > Preemption > General Overview

Torts > ... > Commercial Interference > Contracts > General Overview

HN33[] Procedural Matters, Preemption

The state law claims for intentional interference with contractual relations are not preempted.

Contracts Law > Breach > General Overview

Torts > ... > Contracts > Intentional Interference > Elements

Contracts Law > Third Parties > General Overview

Torts > ... > Commercial Interference > Contracts > General Overview

HN34[] Contracts Law, Breach

The essential elements of a tortious interference with contract claim under Hawaii law are: (1) contract between the plaintiff and a third party, (2) the defendant's knowledge of the contract, (3) the defendant's intentional inducement of the third party to breach the contract, (4) absence of justification on the defendant's part, (5) the subsequent breach of the contract by the third party, and (6) damages to the plaintiff.

Counsel: [1] Charles Hurd, Honolulu, Hawaii, for Plaintiff.

Attorneys for Defendants: Pyun, Okimoto & Thomason, Matthew Pyun, Jr., Honolulu, Hawaii, Attorney for Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners of America, Local 745, AFL-CIO, and Walter H. Kupau.

Winston Mirikitani, Honolulu, Hawaii, Attorney for Defendants Ralph Torres & Steven Suyat.

Samuel King, Jr., Adrienne King, Honolulu, Hawaii, Attorney for Defendant Steven Suyat.

Renee Yuen - Co-Counsel, Richard Perkins, Honolulu, Hawaii, Attorney for Defendant William Nishibayashi.

Judges: Martin Pence, Senior United States District Judge.

Opinion by: PENCE

Opinion

[*1456] ORDER CONCERNING PARTIES' DISPOSITIVE MOTIONS

MARTIN PENCE, SENIOR UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE.

On May 16, 1988, the court heard the defendants' motion to dismiss and the plaintiffs' motion for summary judgment. Matt Pyun appeared for the defendants, and Charles Hurd appeared for the plaintiffs. The court has considered the materials on file and arguments of counsel. For reasons discussed below, the court dismisses all of the plaintiffs' claims except the federal antitrust and the state interference with economic advantage/inducement to breach contract claims; it dismisses the plaintiffs' civil RICO claim with leave to amend the complaint; [2] and it denies the plaintiffs' motion for summary judgment.

I. BACKGROUND.

This suit involves the defendant union's alleged attempt to force the plaintiff construction company to recognize or bargain with the defendant union as the representative of the plaintiff's employees.

A. Parties.

Plaintiff C & W Construction Co. ("C & W") was a sole proprietorship of Walter Mungovan with its principal place of business located at Kihei, Maui. C & W was a [*1457] general contractor in the residential building and construction industry. Mungovan's wife, Cher, was an employee of C & W.

Defendant Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners of America, Local 745 AFL-CIO ("union") is an unincorporated association and labor organization within the meaning of the National Labor Relations Act (NLRA), 29 U.S.C. § 152(5). It has its principal office in Honolulu. It represents employees in an industry affecting commerce within the meaning of section 303 of the Labor Management Relations Act (LMRA), 29 U.S.C. § 187.

Defendants Walter Kupau, William Nishibayashi, Ralph Torres, and Steven Suyat are agents of the union.

B. Facts.

The following "facts" represent only the plaintiffs' allegations. The court [3] will examine the defendants' motion to dismiss first. HN1[] Under the standards for a motion under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6), the court presumes all factual allegations of the nonmoving party to be true, and it draws all reasonable inferences from them in his favor. Moreover, the court has, by Order of December 5, 1985, ruled that the defendants cannot submit evidence on many or most of the issues implicated in their motion, as discussed below. 108 F.R.D. 389.

1. Plaintiffs' Allegations.

In 1979, Cher and Walter Mungovan founded C & W. C & W specialized in building custom homes on Maui. Before the defendants began their alleged misconduct in 1980, C & W had a gross income exceeding $ 500,000.

In December 1980, defendant Nishibayashi informed Walter Mungovan that the union would target C & W for an organizational campaign to obtain a union contract. Nishibayashi threatened Mungovan with violence if C & W did not sign a union contract. He also threatened to picket C & W job sites if it did not sign the contract. Defendant Torres and other union agents made other and similar demands to C & W for the union contract. Mungovan refused, stating C & W was already paying union scale wages. He explained he [4] would negotiate a union contract when C & W had developed to a larger scale.

On January 6, 1981, at the direction of union president Kupau, Nishibayashi, Suyat, Torres, and other union agents, union members began picketing three C & W job sites. C & W requested that for the first week of picketing its employees not work. C & W then asked its employees if they wanted to work. The employees agreed to work and crossed the picket lines.

On February 9, 1981, the National Labor Relations Board ("NLRB") held a representation election at C & W's request. C & W's employees voted unanimously to reject the union as their representative. The NLRB regional director issued complaints alleging that the union's pickets at C & W's job sites were illegal. The NLRB brought suit in this court to enjoin the pickets.

On February 27, 1981, Kupau told Mungovan that a contract must be executed to end the picketing at C & W's job sites. Mungovan refused. The union continued to picket C & W's job sites. Altogether the union picketed C & W job sites for more than three months. The picketing ended April 16, 1981.

C & W had entered into contracts with various materials suppliers; e.g., concrete block, cement, crushed [5] rock, glass, and lumber. Union agents wrongfully influenced these suppliers not to deliver materials to C & W's job sites. Union agents also influenced, contacted, or coerced others obligated to perform contractual services for C & W not to cross the union's picket line. Those parties then failed to deliver materials or otherwise do business with C & W.

In the NLRB proceedings, Nishibayashi and Torres lied in affidavits submitted to this court. They were later convicted of perjury for such statements.

The union's misconduct caused C & W to suffer injuries including: delay in completing jobs, higher costs, termination of a job in progress, lost opportunities for other jobs, damage to business reputation, loss of employees, higher interest rates on financing, and lost profits. Both Cher and Walter [*1458] Mungovan suffered emotional distress and damage to their reputations.

On July 15, 1983, the plaintiffs filed suit against the defendants. The complaint was amended on September 1, 1988. The complaint contained eleven claims for relief:

(1) Federal antitrust (15 U.S.C. § 1)

(2) Unfair labor practice (29 U.S.C. § 187(b))

(3) Civil RICO (18 U.S.C. § 1964)

(4) State antitrust: conspiracy [6] in restraint of trade (Haw. Rev. Stat. § 480-4)

(5) State antitrust: unfair trade practice (Haw. Rev. Stat. § 480-2)

(6) State antitrust: refusal to deal (Haw. Rev. Stat. § 480-6)
(7) Interference with Economic Advantage and/or Inducement to Breach of Contract
(8) Negligent Infliction of Emotional Distress (Cher Mungovan)
(9) Negligent Infliction of Emotional Distress (Walter Mungovan)
(10) Intentional Infliction of Emotional Distress (Cher Mungovan)
(11) Intentional Infliction of Emotional Distress (Walter Mungovan)

II. DISCUSSION.

The court will first examine the defendants' motion to dismiss all eleven of the plaintiffs' claims and begins with the defendants' statute of limitations arguments. It will then proceed to the defendants' arguments against the plaintiffs' remaining claims. Thereafter, it will address the plaintiffs' motion for partial summary judgment on four of its claims.

A. Defendants' Motion to Dismiss.

1. Defendants' Motion in a Nutshell.

The defendants move the court to dismiss the plaintiffs' complaint as follows: First, the antitrust claim is barred by the statutory or nonstatutory labor exemption to the Sherman Act § 1. Second, the [7] state antitrust claims (based on Haw. Rev. Stat. chapter 480) are preempted by federal labor law. Third, the RICO claim is barred either by the statute of limitations, preempted by federal labor law, or void for failure to establish a violation of the RICO Act. Fourth, the state tort claims are barred by the statute of limitations or preempted by federal labor law. Fifth, that leaves only the plaintiffs' claim under the LMRA, 29 U.S.C. section 187(b), for a violation of 29 U.S.C. 158(b)(4), which defendants argue is barred by the statute of limitations.

2. Standards for Motion to Dismiss.

While the defendants have brought their motion under both Fed. Rule 12(b)(6) and 56, the standards for Rule 12(b)(6) apply. By Pretrial Order No. 4, January 27, 1988, this court ordered the parties to file "dispositive motions not requiring further discovery and supporting pleadings." By its order of December 5, 1985, this court sanctioned the defendants for stonewalling during discovery. The Order affects all or most of the factual issues implicated in their motion to dismiss. In essence (but without limitation), the union is precluded from offering any evidence, direct or inferential, regarding [8] plaintiffs' allegations of secondary boycott; conspiracy to restrain trade; unfair trade practice and refusal to deal; scheme to defraud or extort; inducement to breach of contract and interference with prospective economic advantage; and infliction of emotional distress. Also, the defendants Nishibayashi, Torres, and Suyat will not be permitted to testify except as to matters outside those included in the Order.

At this time, the court is not considering matters external to the pleading, and will consider the motions under Rule 12(b)(6).

This court is familiar with the standards for a motion to dismiss under that Rule. [1]

[*1459] 3. Defendants' Statute of Limitations Arguments.

a. Plaintiffs' RICO Action.

The plaintiffs' third claim for relief is brought under 18 U.S.C. § 1964 for violations of 18 U.S.C. [9] § 1962 (c), (d) (i.e., RICO). The plaintiffs base the predicate acts of 18 U.S.C. § 1962, i.e., certain racketeering activities in violations of 18 U.S.C. §§ 1341, 1342 and 18 U.S.C. § 1503, on alleged events that occurred more than two years before they filed suit in this court. Picketing by Local 745 ended on April 16, 1981; this suit was filed on July 15, 1983.

The Supreme Court has held that HN2[] the four year statute of limitations applicable to Clayton Act civil enforcement actions, 15 U.S.C. § 15(b), applies to RICO civil enforcement actions. Agency Holding Corp. v. Malley-Duff & Assoc., Inc., 483 U.S. 143, 107 S. Ct. 2759, 2767, 97 L. Ed. 2d 121 (1987). The plaintiffs brought their RICO claim within four years of the defendants' last alleged predicate act. Under Agency Holding, their claim was timely brought. Accordingly, the court disregards the defendants' statute of limitations argument on the plaintiffs' RICO claim.

The court will consider the remaining issues of the defendants' motion to dismiss the RICO claim after it addresses the defendants' statute of limitations arguments concerning other claims.

b. Plaintiffs' LMRA Claim.

Plaintiffs' second claim for relief is brought under 29 U.S.C. § [10] 187(b), for the defendants' alleged "unfair labor practices" as specified in 29 U.S.C. § 158(b)(4). Again, the alleged activities supporting this claim occurred more than two years before the plaintiffs filed suit in this court.

HN3[] The Labor Management Relations Act (LMRA) does not provide a limitations period. The court must therefore look to Hawaii law for the most analogous state statute. Agency Holding, 107 S. Ct. at 2762 (citations omitted). The defendants argue the most analogous state statute is Hawaii Rev. Stat. § 657-11, citing Int'l Ass'n of Machinists v. Aloha Airlines, 790 F.2d 727 (9th Cir. 1986), cert. denied, 479 U.S. 931, 107 S. Ct. 400, 93 L. Ed. 2d 354 (1986). In Aloha, the Ninth Circuit ruled that for actions filed after Aloha (February 6, 1986), the Ninth Circuit would apply the rule of DelCostello v. Int'l Bhd. of Teamsters, 462 U.S. 151, 76 L. Ed. 2d 476, 103 S. Ct. 2281

---

[1] See Roberts v. Corrothers, 812 F.2d 1173, 1177 (9th Cir. 1987) (quoting Conley v. Gibson, 355 U.S. 41, 45-46, 2 L. Ed. 2d 80, 78 S. Ct. 99 (1957)); Gillespie v. Civiletti, 629 F.2d 637 (9th Cir. 1980); California ex rel. Younger v. Mead, 618 F.2d 618, 620 (9th Cir. 1980); Usher v. City of Los Angeles, 828 F.2d 556, 561 (9th Cir. 1987), and Scheuer v. Rhodes, 416 U.S. 232, 236, 40 L. Ed. 2d 90, 94 S. Ct. 1683 (1974).

(1983), to Railway Labor Act (RLA) actions. In DelCostello, the Supreme Court applied the six month limitations rule of NLRA § 10(b), 29 U.S.C. § 160(b), to fill a statute of limitations "gap" in the LMRA.

The Aloha panel declined to apply the DelCostello holding retroactively. It determined that for actions filed before Aloha, [11] the most closely analogous state statute covering the RLA would apply. For Hawaii, the most closely analogous statute was § 657-11, which at that time "established a one year limitation period for a 'liability . . . impose(d)' by federal statute." Duncan v. Southwest Airlines, 838 F.2d 1504, 1508 (9th Cir. 1987).

The plaintiffs argue that Aloha is distinguishable from this action because it involved the RLA and not the LMRA. The plaintiffs argue that the RLA action in Aloha was more akin to an action under the NLRA for breach of contract, 29 U.S.C. § 185. This argument fails. Section 657-11 by its terms covers "liability. . . impose[d]" by federal statute, which would apply equally to an RLA action or an LMRA action. See also Duncan, 838 F.2d at 1507 (dicta).

Moreover, in DelCostello, the Supreme Court intended the six month limitation period of NLRA § 10(b), 29 U.S.C. § 160(b), to apply to unfair labor practices. 462 U.S. at 170. The Supreme Court cited specifically LMRA § 8(b)(1) and (2), which is 29 U.S.C. § 158(b)(1) & (2). This case involves unfair labor practices claim brought under LMRA § 8(b)(4), which is 29 U.S.C. § 158(b)(4). The DelCostello holding [12] would apply equally to LMRA § 8(b)(4) as to § 8(b)(1) & (2), both in terms of its six month rule and the reasoning behind the rule.

[*1460] HN4[] Section 657-11 is the most closely analogous Hawaii statute of limitations for the LMRA claim, which, under its earlier one-year period or its amended two-year period, bars this claim. This conclusion comports with the procedure outlined in Agency Holding, and the Aloha's ruling regarding the retroactive application of DelCostello. The LMRA claim is DISMISSED as time barred under § 657-11.

c. Plaintiffs' State Tort Claims.

HN5[] Haw. Rev. Stat. § 657-7 provides in pertinent part: "Actions for the recovery of compensation for damage or injury to persons or property shall be instituted within two years after the cause of action occurred, and not after . . . ." The emotional distress claims fall within the coverage of this statute. The plaintiffs filed their complaint more than two years after the final alleged tortious acts of the defendants. These claims are DISMISSED as time barred under Haw. Rev. Stat. § 657-7.

d. The Plaintiffs' Equitable Tolling Defense.

The plaintiffs argue the court should apply the doctrine of equitable tolling to [13] the statutes of limitations. To understand their argument requires some additional facts. The alleged misconduct ended April 16, 1981. Kupau and Torres filed a state suit against Walter Mungovan on May 6, 1981, to which Mungovan filed a counterclaim. That court granted Mungovan's motion for summary judgment on Kupau's and Torres' complaint. On January 6, 1983, the Mungovans filed a separate state court action against the union, Torres, and Nishibayashi. This action was later consolidated with the earlier action originated by Kupau and Torres.

The plaintiffs move the court to have their federal action relate back to the filing of Kupau's and Torres' original complaint of May, 1981, based on the doctrine of equitable tolling.

Hawaii has never adopted the doctrine of equitable tolling. Contrary to plaintiffs' argument, this court never adopted the equitable tolling doctrine in Charley's Tour & Transp., Inc. v. InterIsland Resorts, Ltd. 618 F. Supp. 84 (D. Haw. 1985) (King, J.).

The plaintiffs also cite Oahu Gas Service, Inc. v. Pacific Resources, 473 F. Supp. 1296 (D. Haw. 1979) (King, J.). Oahu Gas is likewise unpersuasive. In Oahu Gas, the complaint and counterclaims [14] were both filed in this (federal) court. In the instant case, the defendants Kupau and Torres first filed in state court, where the plaintiffs counterclaimed and then filed a separate state action. Only after these state actions had begun and after the limitations period had run on their unfair labor practices claim and pendent emotional distress claims did the plaintiffs file suit in federal court.

The plaintiffs, nevertheless, argue that their federal action relates back not just to their filing of the state complaint in January 1983, but to May 1981 when Kupau and Torres filed their original action against Walter Mungovan (dba C & W). HN6[] Hawaii has not recognized the equitable tolling doctrine, but it also has construed statutes of limitations very strictly. See Yoshizaki v. Hilo Hosp., 50 Haw. 150, 154, 433 P.2d 220 (1967) ("The basic policy underlying statutes of limitation is to require prompt assertion of claims."). The Hawaii Supreme Court has characterized statutes of limitations as inflexible. See Adair v. Hustace, 64 Haw. 314, 321, 640 P.2d 294 (1982).

Addison v. California, 21 Cal. 3d 313, 146 Cal. Rptr. 224, 578 P.2d 941 (1978), is inapposite. The Addison court stated that the purpose [15] of the doctrine was "to soften the harsh impact of technical rules which might otherwise prevent a good faith litigant from having a day in court." 578 P.2d at 942. Addison outlined the very specific steps a plaintiff had to take under the California Tort Claims Act. Id. This matter, conversely, does not involve any technical rules or detailed regulatory scheme. (Stallcop v. Kaiser Foundation Hospitals, 820 F.2d 1044, 1050 (9th Cir. 1987), cert. denied, 484 U.S. 986, 108 S. Ct. 504, 98 L. Ed. 2d 502 (1987), Naton v. Bank of California, 649 F.2d 691, 696 (9th Cir. 1981)).

[*1461] HN7[] Mere commencement of an action in one state or federal jurisdiction generally does not toll the statute of limitations against an action for the same cause and between the same parties in another state or federal jurisdiction. Pace Indus., Inc. v. Three Phoenix Co., 813 F.2d 234, 240 (9th Cir. 1987) ("Prior judicial actions, however, 'do not toll the statute of limitations, no matter how close their relationship to the one at bar.'") (quoting Ramirez de Arellano v. Alvarez de Choudens, 575 F.2d 315, 319 (1st Cir. 1978)) (citing UAW v. Hoosier Cardinal Corp., 383 U.S. 696, 16 L. Ed. 2d 192, 86 S. Ct. 1107 (1965)), cited with approval in, Mir [16] v. Little Company of Mary Hosp., 844 F.2d 646 (9th Cir. 1988); see generally 54 C.J.S. Limitations of Actions § 129, at 172 (1987).

Accordingly, the applicable statutes of limitations BAR the plaintiffs' labor claim and pendent state emotional distress claims.

This leaves the following claims:

(1) Federal antitrust (15 U.S.C. section 1)

(2) Civil RICO (18 U.S.C. section 1964)

(3) State antitrust: conspiracy in restraint of trade (Haw. Rev. Stat. § 480-4)

(4) State antitrust: unfair trade practice (Haw. Rev. Stat. § 480-2)

(5) State antitrust: refusal to deal (Haw. Rev. Stat. § 480-6)

(6) Interference with Economic Advantage and/or Inducement to Breach of Contract

The defendants' arguments to dismiss these remaining six claims are discussed in the order set out directly above.

4. Plaintiffs' Antitrust Claim (Sherman § 1).

The plaintiffs allege that the union through its agents made C & W the object of a secondary boycott. A secondary boycott is a combination with the purpose and effect to coerce customers, patrons, or suppliers, through fear of loss or bodily harm, to withhold or withdraw their business relations from an [17] employer who is under attack. Altemose Constr. Co. v. Atlantic, Cape May, Etc., 493 F. Supp. 1181, 1187 n.6 (D.N.J. 1980) (citing Black's Law Dictionary 1212 (5th ed. 1979)). Specifically, the plaintiffs allege the union induced C & W's materials suppliers and others, obligated under contract to C & W to perform services, not to deal with C & W (henceforth collectively as "suppliers"). They allege this concerted refusal to do business with C & W violated § 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1. See First Amended Complaint paras. 32, 33 (set out below).

The defendants counter that the plaintiffs cannot recover under Sherman § 1, because of the statutory and nonstatutory labor exemptions to antitrust law.

a. Have plaintiffs pled a viable antitrust violation?

HN8[] Before the court considers the defendants' labor exemption arguments, i.e., which would make them immune from antitrust attack, it must determine if the plaintiffs have pled a viable federal antitrust violation. HN9[] Section 1 of the Sherman Act provides in pertinent part: "Every contract, combination, in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States . . . is declared [18] illegal." 15 U.S.C. § 1.

The plaintiffs allege in their complaint:

> The defendants in this action together with others, have entered into an anti-competitive scheme, combination, conspiracy and contract in restraint of trade to prevent C & W from competing in the construction industry and to restrain competition in the construction industry in Maui, Hawaii, and to induce suppliers of goods to C & W and others not to deal with C & W such as to constitute a concerted refusal to do business with C & W in violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act (15 U.S.C. § 1).

First Amended Complaint, at 13 (emphasis added).

More specifically, the plaintiffs allege agents of the union "wrongfully influenced the materials suppliers for C & W to not deliver various supplies to C & W's jobsites [sic]." Id. at 10, para. 23. The suppliers then [*1462] allegedly failed or refused to deliver the various materials, including concrete, crushed rock, lumber, and glass, or otherwise to deal with C & W. Id. para. 24. The union also allegedly influenced, contacted, or coerced others who were obligated to perform contractual services for C & W not to cross the union's picket lines against C & W. Id. para. 25.

[19] The case of Altemose Constr. Co. v. Atlantic, Cape May, Etc., 493 F. Supp. 1181 (D. N.J. 1980) is on point. In Altemose, that court dismissed the defendants unions' motion to dismiss a complaint that alleged the defendants had threatened or coerced certain suppliers of the plaintiff (a nonunion general contractor who was attempting to build a raquetball club) to cease doing business with the plaintiff and entered into a similar agreement with other suppliers. The court held that these allegations sufficed to overcome the assertion that the defendants unions' activities were within the labor exemptions to the antitrust laws.

The Altemose court stated specifically regarding the alleged unlawful combination and conspiracy between the unions and the plaintiff's supplier:

> The allegations in the complaint reveal that Altemose's construction work has been impeded by activities engaged in on behalf of the union defendants. Significant impediments include vandalism at the job site in question, violence and threats of violence directed to Altemose employees and those who would provide services to Altemose, and threats to suppliers of Altemose if the suppliers dealt with the plaintiff [20] [Altemose]. In consequence of the alleged unlawful acts, the plaintiff has sustained substantial difficulty and additional costs in obtaining concrete required to complete the raquetball club as well as other damages already discussed. These allegations facially disclose an unreasonable restraint of trade under Section 1 of the Sherman Act.

493 F. Supp. at 1190.

Before the court follows Altemose and conclude the plaintiffs have pled a viable antitrust violation by the union under Sherman § 1, however, it must determine whether the allegations support the required concerted action between the union and C & W's suppliers HN10[] to bring the unreasonable restraint of trade within Sherman § 1; i.e., that the misconduct was, in fact, conspiratorial, and not unilateral by the union. [2]

HN11[] To plead a viable violation of Sherman § 1, the plaintiff must allege two factors: (1) plurality of actors and (2) concerted action. See 2 Von Kalinowski, Antitrust Law and Trade Regulation § 6.01[1] (1981). Here, C & W has alleged a plurality of actors: the union and its agents on the one hand, and C & W's suppliers on the other, and has met [21] the plurality of actors requirement. As to the concerted action requirement, HN12[] to establish concerted action C & W must plead facts (and, of course, subsequently prove facts) that would allow the reasonable inference that C & W's suppliers had a conscious commitment to a common scheme to effect an unreasonable restraint of trade, as willing or unwilling participants.

---

[2] The Altemose court did not address this issue.

The plaintiffs allege that the union contacted, influenced, or coerced the C & W suppliers to refuse to deal with C & W; they also allege the suppliers thereafter refused to deal with C & W.

It is no excuse that the suppliers were threatened and thus were apparently unwilling participants. In a different type of Sherman § 1 case, the Ninth Circuit held that HN13[] acquiescence by an unwilling party does not prevent it from being a co-conspirator for purposes of Sherman § 1. See Filco v. Amana Refrigeration, Inc., 709 F.2d 1257, 1266 (9th Cir.), cert. dismissed, 464 U.S. 956, 78 L. Ed. 2d 331, 104 S. Ct. 385 (1983). See also Albrecht v. Herald Co., 390 U.S. 145, 19 L. Ed. 2d 998, 88 S. Ct. 869 (1968): "acquiescence by a retailer makes it the second party to the conspiracy." 709 F.2d at 1266 (other citations omitted), and also United States v. Parke Davis & Co., [*1463] 362 U.S. 29, [22] 46-47, 4 L. Ed. 2d 505, 80 S. Ct. 503 (1960).

While Filco, Albrecht, and Parke Davis are obviously factually distinct from the instant case, they nonetheless hold that acquiescence by a party to restrain trade may make it privy to a combination or conspiracy in violation of the Sherman Act.

Here, the plaintiffs have alleged facts from which a trier of fact could reasonably infer that the union contacted, influenced, or coerced C & W's suppliers to refuse to deal with C & W, and that the suppliers then did refuse to deal with C & W. The plaintiffs allege they were injured by this refusal to deal, which supports the reasonable inference of an unreasonable restraint on trade.

The analysis, however, requires one additional step. In Harlem River Constr. Co-op v. Associated Grocers of Harlem, Inc., 408 F. Supp. 1251 (S.D.N.Y. 1976), a cooperative grocery store sued various suppliers and a food store association, among others. One of the claims was that the defendant food store association had coerced suppliers not to deal with the plaintiff to force it to accept a contract from the defendant association. One of the salient issues was whether the plaintiff had alleged facts to permit a jury to find that [23] suppliers were involved in conspiracy to violate antitrust laws. The court stated that HN14[] even if an inference of coercion was reasonable, this alone would not support a finding of conspiracy. The plaintiff also would have to allege facts allowing a jury to infer reasonably that the coerced and complying party who refused to deal knew that the purpose of the coercion was to pursue an end that violated antitrust laws. 408 F. Supp. at 1280.

In this case, then, the court must also determine whether the plaintiffs' allegations support the reasonable inference that the C & W suppliers knew the purpose of the union's coercion was to restrain trade unreasonably, i.e., to "bust" C & W. The plaintiffs allege that the union threatened the C & W suppliers. While they present no direct evidence that the allegedly coerced suppliers knew the purpose of the union's threats was to break C & W, circumstantial evidence supports the reasonable inference that the suppliers must have known that if C & W could not get supplies and necessary services, it would be forced out of business or to capitulate to the union's demands.

This conclusion is consistent with the Ninth Circuit's approach for alleging a conspiracy [24] in antitrust cases. See Zoslaw v, MCA Distributing Corp., 693 F.2d 870 at 889 (9th Cir. 1982) (determination of conspiracy in Sherman § 1 claim is inappropriate for summary judgment where there is a material issue of fact regarding the unlawful intent or anticompetitive effect based on a refusal to deal) (citations omitted). See also Richards v. Nielsen Freight Lines, 810 F.2d 898 at 902 (9th Cir. 1987).

The court disregards the defendants' attempt to show it had a plausible and justifiable reason for its conduct consistent with proper business practice. Such evidence falls within the preclusive ambit of the court's December 5, 1985 Order on discovery sanctions.

The plaintiffs have alleged a viable violation of Sherman § 1. The court now addresses the defendants' labor exemption arguments.

b. The Labor Exemptions.

Organized labor enjoys two types of exemptions from federal antitrust laws: statutory and nonstatutory. Granddad Bread, Inc. v. Continental Baking Co., 612 F.2d 1105, 1109 (9th Cir. 1979), cert. denied, 449 U.S. 1076, 66 L. Ed. 2d 798, 101 S. Ct. 854 (1981).

i. The Statutory Exemption.

The sources of the statutory exemption include HN15[] the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 17 (1982), 29 U.S.C. § 52, and the Norris LaGuardia Act, 29 U.S.C. §§ 104, 105, 113. These statutes declare that [25] labor unions are not in themselves combinations or conspiracies in trade, and exempt many of their activities from the operation of antitrust laws.

Interpreting these interrelated statutes, The Court has concluded that HN16[] unilateral union activity having a labor objective is [*1464] exempt "so long as a union acts in its own self-interest and does not combine with non-labor groups." United States v. Hutcheson, 312 U.S. 219, 232, 85 L. Ed. 788, 61 S. Ct. 463 (1941). That is, the union activities must be unilateral, not conspiratorial.

The Court has interpreted HN17[] the exemption statutes as inapplicable to concerted action or agreements between unions and non-labor parties affecting matters outside of the parties collective bargaining relationship. United Mine Workers v. Pennington, 381 U.S. 657, 14 L. Ed. 2d 626 85 S. Ct. 1585 (1965). The Court, in Connell Constr. Co. v. Plumbers & Steamfitters Local 100, 421 U.S. 616 at 621-22, 85 S. Ct. 1830, 44 L. Ed. 2d 418 (1975) held, "[The statutes] do not exempt concerted action or agreements between unions and nonlabor parties." Id. at 622.

The statutory exemption, then, does not apply here. At least for purposes of determining this motion, it inferentially appears that there was a "concerted action or agreement" between the union and [26] nonlabor parties, i.e., C & W's suppliers.

Moreover, HN18[] section 6 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 17, merely states that the labor organizations may lawfully carry out their legitimate objectives. Altemose, 493 F. Supp. at 1191. HN19[] Section 20 of the Clayton Act, 29 U.S.C. § 52, exempts peaceful labor activity including communications aimed at persuading individuals to cease working for or patronizing particular employers. Altemose, 493 F. Supp. at 1191. In this case, the plaintiffs allege threats of violence made to prevent C & W from obtaining necessary building materials or services. Although it may have been in the defendants' interest to ensure that the terms under which its employees worked met area standards for its workers, this union did not pursue this objective via peaceful authorized methods. The plaintiffs also allege facts supporting the reasonable inference that the union's primary purpose in picketing C & W was to coerce the execution of a collective bargaining agreement, not to protest substandard wages. Cf. Altemose, 493 F. Supp. at 1191 (applying these statutes on very similar facts, held that there was no exemption given the union defendants' violent [27] tactics). Accordingly, the statutory labor exemption does not apply.

ii. Nonstatutory Exemption.

The Ninth Circuit has recently described the scope of the nonstatutory exemption:

> The Supreme Court has recognized a limited nonstatutory exemption which "has its source in the strong labor policy favoring the association of employees to eliminate competition over wages and working conditions." [Connell, 421 U.S. at 621-22] Thus some union-employer agreements are exempt from antitrust sanctions as part of the "proper accommodation between the congressional policy favoring free competition in business markets." Id. HN20[] The nonstatutory exemption, then, may be invoked in cases involving valid collective bargaining agreements between unions and employers on wages or working conditions.

Sun-Land Nurseries, Inc. v. Southern California Dist. Council of Laborers, Etc., 793 F.2d 1110, 1115 (9th Cir. 1986) (en banc), cert. denied, 479 U.S. 1090, 107 S. Ct. 1299, 94 L. Ed. 2d 155 (1987).

The plaintiffs allege the union coerced or influenced the suppliers to refuse to deal with C & W, which action was outside any collective bargaining agreement. Cf. Altemose, 493 F. Supp. at 1191. (There was no valid collective [28] bargaining agreement; C & W's employees rejected representation by the union unanimously in an NLRB authorized election.)

The plaintiffs have alleged facts sufficient to overcome the defendants' assertions that they are immune from antitrust liability under the nonstatutory exemption.

c. Liability of the individual defendants as the union's Agents.

The individual defendants Kupau, Nishibayashi, Torres, and Suyat claim that they cannot be held liable under the antitrust laws because they were acting entirely [*1465] within the scope of their authority as agents. This argument ignores basic precepts of agency law.

The defendants rely principally on the case of Pink Supply Corp. v. Hiebert, Inc., 788 F.2d 1313 (9th Cir. 1986). In Pink Supply, that panel stated that Sherman § 1 prohibits only restraints of trade effected by contract, combination, or conspiracy between separate entities. Id. at 1315-16 (quoting Fisher v. City of Berkeley, [475 U.S. 260,] 106 S. Ct. 1045, 1049, 89 L. Ed. 2d 206 (1986); Copperweld Corp. v. Independence Tube Corp., 467 U.S. 752, 81 L. Ed. 2d 628, 104 S. Ct. 2731 (1984)). Defendants argue they are not separate entities, because of their agency status with the union.

The defendants cite no authority [29] to support their theory that agency status insulates them from antitrust liability. This would contravene well established law that HN21[] an agent is individually liable for torts committed by him pursuant to his agency. Cf. Restatement (Second) of Agency § 343 (1957). An antitrust action is, or is in the nature of, a tort action. This agency principle applies in the antitrust context. E.g., Murphy Tugboat Co. v. Shipowners & Merchants Tugboat Co., Ltd., 467 F. Supp. 841, 851-52 (N.D. Cal. 1979), affirmed, 658 F.2d 1256 (9th Cir.), cert. denied, 455 U.S. 1018, 72 L. Ed. 2d 135, 102 S. Ct. 1713 (1982); Deaktor v. Fox Grocery Co., 332 F. Supp. 536, 542 (W.D. Pa. 1971), affirmed, 475 F.2d 1112 (3rd Cir.), cert. denied, 414 U.S. 867, 38 L. Ed. 2d 86, 94 S. Ct. 65 (1973).

In Murphy Tugboat, that court stated that an individual through whom a corporation acts and who shapes corporate intentions can be held liable for antitrust violations. 467 F. Supp. at 852. The corporate executive must participate in the tort, and his personal liability would be limited to participation in inherently wrongful conduct. Id. at 852-53.

This case is analogous to Murphy Tugboat. In this case, the plaintiffs allege the union acted through [30] the individual defendants, who participated in the alleged restraint of trade by coercing suppliers not to deal with C & W. The individual defendants would be jointly and severally liable with the union for any antitrust liability C & W proves.

d. Conclusion.

The plaintiffs have alleged a viable antitrust claim. The defendants are not immune from the plaintiffs' federal antitrust claim under the labor exemptions. The individual defendants may be liable with the union for antitrust liability.

5. Plaintiffs' RICO Claim.

This court has heretofore ruled that the plaintiffs' civil RICO claim was not barred by the applicable statute of limitations. The defendants present other arguments why the court should dismiss the plaintiffs' RICO claim.

a. Defendants' argument that RICO claims fail to state a claim upon which relief can be granted.

Plaintiffs allege that conduct of the defendants violated 18 U.S.C. §§ 1962(c) and (d) of RICO. They seek treble damages under HN22[] 18 U.S.C. § 1964(c). A violation of § 1962(c) requires (1) conduct (2) of an enterprise (3) through a pattern (4) of racketeering activity. The plaintiffs must allege these elements to state a claim. Sedima, S.P.R.L. v. Imrex Co., 473 [31] U.S. 479 at 496, 105 S. Ct. 3275, 87 L. Ed. 2d 346 (1985); United Energy Owners v. United Energy Mgmt., 837 F.2d 356, 362 (1988). More specifically, a plaintiff suing under civil RICO must allege:

1. The defendant ("person" in terms of RICO)
2. through the commission of two or more timely acts (i.e., within 10 years)
3. constituting a "pattern"
4. of "racketeering activity"
5. directly or indirectly invests in, maintains and interest in, or participates in
6. an "enterprise"
7. the activities of which affect interstate (or foreign) commerce,
8. "by reason of" which the plaintiff was injured in his business or property.

[*1466] Cf. Moss v. Morgan Stanley, Inc., 719 F.2d 5, 17, 20-23 (2d Cir. 1983), cert. denied, 465 U.S. 1025, 79 L. Ed. 2d 684, 104 S. Ct. 1280 (1984).

For discussion, these eight elements are here organized as: (i) persons liable, (ii) predicate acts, (iii) pattern of racketeering activity, (iv) affected enterprise, (v) prohibited activities, (vi) resultant injury.

(i) Persons liable.

HN23[] Section 1961(3) defines a "person" as "any individual or entity capable of holding a legal or beneficial interest in property." There is no problem with the person requirement. There would be a problem if the plaintiffs name the union as both "person," i.e. [32] defendant, and "enterprise" in a RICO § 1962(c) claim. United Energy Owners, 837 F.2d at 364. The plaintiffs indicated at the hearing, however, that the intended affected "enterprise" is C & W and its material suppliers, not the union. This issue discussed in the affected "enterprise" section below.

(ii) Predicate acts ("racketeering activity").

The defendants argue the plaintiffs have not alleged sufficient predicate acts to support their RICO claim. The plaintiffs base their predicate acts on alleged violations of the following federal statutes:

(a) obstruction of justice, 18 U.S.C. § 1503.

(b) mail and wire fraud, 18 U.S.C. §§ 1341, 1343.

(c) Hobbs Act (interference with commerce by threats or violence, 18 U.S.C. § 1951).

The court must determine whether these predicate acts as pled support the RICO claim.

(ii)(a) Obstruction of justice, 18 U.S.C. § 1503.

The plaintiffs allege that certain individual defendants lied in affidavits submitted to the district court in an NLRB lawsuit or elsewhere and were thereafter convicted for perjury. First Amended Complaint paras. 46, 47. The defendants argue that perjury alone does not violate 18 U.S.C. § 1503, citing United [33] States v. Essex, 407 F.2d 214, 218 (6th Cir. 1969) (one must allege that defendant has impeded the court in the conduct of its business or an attempt to do so beyond the mere rendering of false testimony).

In Essex, however, the court stated that the defendant was charged with perjury and nothing more; although the defendant may have perjured herself, she did not try to interfere with the officers, jurors, or witnesses within the meaning of 18 U.S.C. § 1503. Id. at 218. Essex is not on all fours with this case. Here, the plaintiffs have alleged more than perjury to support their RICO claim. They argue that the perjury was part of a pattern of racketeering, which also included extortion and wire and mail fraud. See Amended Complaint, at 18 para. 49 (set out below).

Perjury, per se, has been held bysome courts not to be a RICO predicate act. See Rand v. Anaconda-Ericsson, Inc., 623 F. Supp. 176, 182 (E.D.N.Y. 1985), affirmed, 794 F.2d 843, 849 (2d Cir. 1986), cert. denied, 479 U.S. 987, 107 S. Ct. 579, 93 L. Ed. 2d 582 (1986); Sellers v. General Motors Corp., 590 F. Supp. 502, 507 (E.D. Pa. 1984).

Other authority indicates the exception to this rule. von Bulow by Auersperg v. von [34] Bulow, 657 F. Supp. 1134, 1145 (S.D.N.Y. 1987) (While the court in Sellers v. General Motors, cited directly above, dismissed a RICO claim where perjury alone was alleged as a predicate act, the court stated, in dicta, that the result might have been different had the perjury been the element of a larger conspiracy to defraud.); accord Town of Kearny v. Hudson Meadows Urban Renewal Corp., 829 F.2d 1263, 1269 (3rd Cir. 1987) (suggests in dicta that perjury could be found to establish continued existence of a RICO enterprise and to be part of the pattern of racketeering activity).

The Court has stated that "RICO is to be read broadly." Sun Savings & Loan Ass'n v. Dierdorff, 825 F.2d 187, 191 (9th Cir. 1987) (quoting Sedima, 473 U.S. 479, 87 L. Ed. 2d 346, 105 S. Ct. 3275 (1985)). It has also cautioned against a narrow interpretation of predicate acts defined in 18 U.S.C. § 1961(1), which includes 18 U.S.C. [*1467] § 1503 (obstruction of justice). Cf. United States v. Turkette, 452 U.S. 576, 586-87, 69 L. Ed. 2d 246, 101 S. Ct. 2524 (1981).

The court will not conclude absolutely that perjury can never be a predicate act for RICO purposes. HN24[] The more reasoned rule would allow perjury to be a predicate act under 18 U.S.C. § 1961(1), through 18 [35] U.S.C. § 1503, where the plaintiffs allege that the perjury was part of the pattern of a racketeering activity.

The plaintiffs allege specifically:

> 26. In the NLRB proceedings, Nishibayashi and Torres and others lied on affidavits submitted to the United States Court for the District of Hawaii, in order to further their illegal and wrongful purposes and to the damage of C & W.
>
> 27. Subsequent to the NLRB proceeding alleged above, Nishibayashi and Torres were each indicted and convicted of four counts of perjury and false statement [sic] in the United States District Court of the State of Hawaii. Kupau and Suyat were indicted on seven counts of perjury relating to sworn statements on testimony in four different proceedings.
>
> . . . .
>
> 46. By the acts alleged in paragraphs 26 and 27 hereinabove, Defendants have corruptly and/or by threats or force endeavored to influence, obstruct and/or impede the due administration of justice, in violation of 18 U.S.C. § 1503.
>
> . . . .
>
> 49. By engaging in the acts alleged hereinabove, Defendants, and each of them, established a pattern of racketeering activity, as defined by 18 U.S.C. 1961(1)(B), consisting of violations of 18 U.S.C. §§ 1341, 1343, [36] 1503, and 1951(b)(2).

First Amended Complaint, at 11, 17, 18.

These allegations suffice to overcome the defendants' arguments that perjury cannot be a predicate act supporting the plaintiffs' RICO claim. The plaintiffs allege the perjury was part of a pattern of racketeering. [3]

(ii)(b) Mail and wire fraud, 18 U.S.C. §§ 1341, 1343.

HN25[] Mail and wire fraud are the two predicate acts most frequently used to establish "racketeering activity" under RICO. Agency Holding, 107 S. Ct. at 2763. The statutes proscribe use of mails, § 1341, and use of interstate

[3] The court has ordered dispositive motions, realizing that discovery is not complete. At a later stage of the proceedings, the court may disregard the perjury as predicate acts if the plaintiffs do not show that the perjury was part of the pattern of racketeering. Moreover, if the plaintiffs fail in their proof at trial, the court can direct a verdict before submitting the case to the jury.

electronic media, § 1343, to further schemes to defraud. Both statutes are broad and simple, requiring three elements: (1) devising a scheme to defraud, (2) using the mails or wires to further the fraud, (3) with the specific intent to [37] deceive or defraud. Sun Savings, 825 F.2d at 195; accord White v. Beer, 679 F. Supp. 207, 211 (E.D.N.Y. 1988) (citations omitted).

The plaintiffs allege:

> 45. In furtherance of Defendants' scheme to defraud Plaintiffs, Defendants have used the United States mail and have placed interstate telephone calls in violation of 18 U.S.C. §§ 1341 and 1343, as follows:
> (a) The illegal picketing and other acts were conducted by members and Business Agents of the island of Maui, pursuant to instructions and/or with concurrence by leaders of the Hawaii carpenters union located in Honolulu;
> (b) Honolulu-based leaders of the Hawaii carpenters Union used interstate telephones to attempt to negotiate with Walter Mungovan to end their illegal campaign, in exchange for C & W signing upon a union contract;
> (c) Leaders of the Hawaii Carpenters Union used the U.S. mails to send letters requesting pay records for C & W employees and threatening to picket C & W unless Plaintiffs prove that they were paying prevailing wages and that working conditions were good.

First Amended Complaint, at 16-17.

These allegations do not satisfy the Sun Savings requirement (3), "specific intent to [*1468] defraud." [38] There is no direct or indirect reference to a misrepresentation. The allegations essentially state that the defendants used the mails and telephone wires to threaten C & W to force it to sign a contract with the union. While courts have read these statutes broadly, allowing such threats to form the basis of a scheme to defraud would give the statute too broad a reading. If anything, the defendants apparently were candid about their concerns and demands in threatening C & W.

HN26[] Fed. R. Civ. P. 9(b) requires that "in all averments of fraud . . ., the circumstances constituting fraud . . . shall be stated with particularity." HN27[] A RICO suit alleging fraud as a pattern of racketeering activity must therefore comply with Rule 9(b). Failure to do so may result in dismissal. A number of courts have so held. E.g., White v. Beer, 679 F. Supp. at 211-12 (citations omitted); Caliber Partners Ltd. v. Affeld, 583 F. Supp. 1308, 1313 (N.D. Ill. 1984).

The plaintiffs have not alleged facts supporting violations of 18 U.S.C. §§ 1341, 1343. They have not alleged the specific intent to defraud inherent in the mail and wire fraud statutes. Sun Savings. They have not pled fraud properly under [39] Fed. R. Civ. P. 9(b). The alleged violations of these statutes as pled do not constitute predicate acts that support the plaintiffs' RICO claim.

(ii)(c) Hobbs Act.

The defendants argue that the Hobbs Act cannot form the basis of a RICO count against the defendants in the context of a collective bargaining dispute, citing United States v. Enmons, 410 U.S. 396, 35 L. Ed. 2d 379, 93 S. Ct. 1007 (1973). In Enmons, the defendants were striking union members charged with using violence to secure a new collective bargaining agreement with the Gulf States Utilities Company ("company") in violation of the Hobbs Act, 18 U.S.C. § 1951. The acts included firing high-powered rifles at the company's transformers, blowing up a transformer substation, and draining oil from a company transformer. Id. at 398. The issue was whether acts of violence committed during a lawful strike for the purpose of inducing an employer's agreement to legitimate collective bargaining demands constiuted extortion, which the Hobbs Act defines as "the obtaining of property of another, with his consent, induced by wrongful use of actual or threatened force, violence, or fear." 18 U.S.C. § 1951(b)(2).

In interpreting the Hobbs Act, the Court [40] focused on the word "wrongful," and reasoned that because it would be redundant to speak of "wrongful violence" or "wrongful force," Congress must have intended "wrongful" to limit the Act's coverage to "those instances where the obtaining of the property would itself be 'wrongful' because the extortionist has no lawful claim to the property." 410 U.S. at 400. The Court therefore held that violence to achieve legitimate union objectives was not within the Hobbs Act's prohibition because there is no "wrongful" taking of the employer's property when union members receive wages and benefits in exchange for genuine services bargained for by the employer. United States v. Thordarson, 646 F.2d 1323, 1326 (9th Cir. 1981), cert. denied, 454 U.S. 1055, 70 L. Ed. 2d 591, 102 S. Ct. 601 (1981).

The Enmons Court was concerned that if the Hobbs Act could support a RICO suit, it would "put the Federal Government in the business of policing the orderly conduct of strikes." 410 U.S. at 411. The Ninth Circuit has explained: "In Enmons, the Court focused on the special characteristics of the crime of extortion which embraces any act or threat of violence, however, [sic] minor, used to obtain the property of [41] another. The underlying concern was that to apply a federal extortion statute in the context of the collective bargaining process would change minor acts of labor violence punishable by state law into felonies, thus placing the federal government in the business of policing the routine conduct of strike activity." Thordarson, 646 F.2d at 1329. The Ninth Circuit has read Enmons as holding only that the use of violence to secure legitimate collective bargaining objectives is beyond [*1469] the reach of the Hobbs Acts. Thordarson, 646 F.2d at 1327.

Here, assuming the plaintiffs' allegations to be true, for this motion, the union's threatened violence against C & W and its employees was not to secure legitimate collective bargaining objectives. Unlike the union in Enmons, the union in this case did not have a contract with C & W. Moreover, the union here was not on strike against C & W. The boycott was secondary, not primary. Thus, under Rule 12(b)(6) standards, the union's activities did not entail "legitimate collective bargaining objectives." Plaintiffs' allegations support the reasonable inference that the defendants engaged in an illegal secondary boycott, 29 U.S.C. §§ 158(b)(4), [42] 187(b). Enmons is clearly distinguishable from the case at bar. Plaintiffs' alleged violations of the Hobbs Act constitute predicate acts supporting the plaintiffs' RICO claim.

Thordarson supports this conclusion. In Thordarson, employees of a moving and storage company elected Teamster Local 186 as their bargaining agent. The company refused to recognize Local 186. Local 186 and another Teamsters union, Local 389, then called a violent strike against the company. During the strike, union members destroyed the company's trucks.

A ten count indictment, including RICO counts, was filed in district court against certain officers or employees of Locals 186 and 389. The indictment charged that the defendants had conspired to destroy the company's trucks to coerce the company to recognize Local 186. Id. at 1325. The district court dismissed all ten counts of the indictment. The RICO counts were dismissed on authority of Emmons, which the district court read as precluding federal prosecution for violent activity that occurs during a legitimate labor dispute absent specific authorization from Congress. Id. at 1326 (citing United States v. Thordarson, 487 F. Supp. 991, 995 [43] (C.D. Cal. 1980)).

The Ninth Circuit reversed the district court on its broad reading of Enmons. The Ninth Circuit held that it read Enmons as holding only that the use of violence to secure legitimate collective bargaining objectives is beyond the reach of the Hobbs Act, 18 U.S.C. § 1951. As stated above, HN28[] the Hobbs Act prohibits interference with commerce by extortion, defined as "the obtaining the property of another, with his consent, induced by wrongful use of actual or threatened force, violence or fear." 18 U.S.C. § 1951(b)(2). The Ninth Circuit held that Enmons did not apply in this case, because RICO explicitly prohibits arson. Id. at 1329; see 18 U.S.C. § 1961(1).

Even if the Hobbs Act did not support the plaintiffs' RICO claim, the court could, upon proper application after hearing, allow the plaintiffs to amend their complaint under Fed. R. Civ. P. 15(a) to plead violations of state extortion law. The plaintiffs could plead violations of Haw. Rev. Stat. § 707-764 (1985) as a predicate act under 18 U.S.C. § 1961(1), which explicitly includes "extortion . . . chargeable under State law." Haw. Rev. Stat. § 707-764 is broad enough to include the plaintiffs' [44] allegations. Cf. Yellow Bus Lines v. Drivers, Chauffeurs & Helpers Local Union 639, 268 U.S. App. D.C. 103, 839 F.2d 782, 789 (D.C. Cir. 1988) (Plaintiff employer sued union under RICO for damages suffered during a recognition strike; plaintiff did not base predicate acts of extortion on the Hobbs Act, but D.C. and Maryland statutes).

(iii) Pattern of racketeering activity.

HN29[] The pattern of racketeering activity requires at least two acts of racketeering activity, 18 U.S.C. § 1961(5). As The Court said in Sedima, 473 U.S. at 496 n.14, "'Criminal conduct forms a pattern if it embraces criminal acts that have the same or similar purposes, results, participants, victims, or methods of commission, or otherwise are interrelated by distinguishing characteristics and are not isolated events.'" (quoting 18 U.S.C. § 3575(e), a later provision of the RICO bill that the Court said "may be useful in interpreting other sections of the [RICO] Act."). See also I United Energy Owners, 837 F.2d at 362 (describing requirements for a pattern of racketeering, citing United States v. Turkette, 452 U.S. 576, 69 L. Ed. 2d 246, 101 S. Ct. 2524 (1981)).

[*1470] The above discussion of predicate acts indicates that the plaintiffs may not rely on the alleged [45] violation of 18 U.S.C. §§ 1341, 1343 to support their RICO claim, and that the perjury may be a predicate act only if it is part of a larger pattern of racketeering activity. Thus, everything really hinges on whether the defendants may proceed on their extortion claims. The Hobbs Act supports their RICO claim. For this motion, the alleged acts of extortion and the perjury support the pattern of racketeering requirement. The pattern of racketeering requirement therefore is met.

(iv) Affected "enterprise."

The defendants argue the plaintiffs have not satisfied the "enterprise" requirement because they do not identify the affected "enterprise." They argue this omission defeats the plaintiffs' RICO claim. Rae v. Union Bank, 725 F.2d 478, 481 (9th Cir. 1984); White v. Beer, 679 F. Supp. at 210-11 (RICO count deficient because plaintiff did not plead adequately the existence of an enterprise; to survive Rule 12(b)(6) or 56 motion, plaintiff must allege that the "enterprise" is a continuing operation and that the acts are related to a common purpose; plaintiff did not describe the structure of the enterprise, its purpose, or that it had no obvious terminating goal or date) (citing [46] United States v. Ianniello, 483 U.S. 1006, 107 S. Ct. 3230, 97 L. Ed. 2d 736 (1987)).

The plaintiffs do not identify the "enterprise." At the hearing, the plaintiffs stated the affected "enterprise" was C & W and its materials suppliers. They conceded that they did not properly plead the "enterprise" requirement in their complaint. The court will determine the sufficiency of plaintiffs' characterization of C & W and its suppliers as the affected "enterprise" if and after the plaintiffs have filed a motion for leave to amend.

(v). Prohibited activities

The plaintiffs allege that the activities affect interstate commerce. This satisfies the prohibited activities requirement.

(vi.) Resultant injury

The plaintiffs allege resultant injury. This satisfies the resultant injury requirement.

b. Conclusion.

The plaintiffs have not yet alleged a viable RICO claim. The alleged violations of the wire and mail fraud statutes as plead cannot support the RICO claim. Their allegations of an affected "enterprise" are deficient. The court dismisses the RICO claim with leave to file a motion to amend. Rule 15(a); Foman v. Davis, 371 U.S. 178, 182, 9 L. Ed. 2d 222, 83 S. Ct. 227 (1962).

c. Defendants' claim that plaintiffs' RICO claims are [47] preempted by federal labor law.

The defendants argue that the plaintiffs' RICO claims are preempted by federal labor law. They cite no case authority for this proposition. The court disregards it. See Thordarson, 646 F.2d at 1330-31; cf. MHC Inc. v. Mine Workers, UMW, 685 F. Supp. 1370 (E.D. Ky. 1988), Civil RICO Report No. 45, at 1-3.

d. Defendants' claim that the plaintiffs have not satisfied the conspiracy requirement of 18 U.S.C. § 1962(d).

While the plaintiffs may have more artfully pled their RICO claim, the court must assume the veracity of plaintiffs' allegations that the defendants conspired to commit the above described predicate acts. It may reasonably infer from such allegations that the defendants also conspired to conduct the affairs of an enterprise through such acts.

6. Plaintiffs' State Antitrust Claims.

The plaintiffs bring three claims under Hawaii's antitrust laws: Haw. Rev. Stat. § 480-4 (conspiracy in restraint of trade), Haw. Rev. Stat. § 480-2 (unfair trade practice), and Haw. Rev. Stat. § 480-6 (refusal to deal). The defendants argue the state antitrust claims are preempted by federal labor law and by the specific exclusion of Haw. Rev. [48] Stat. § 480-10. The defendants rely principally on Connell Constr. Co. v. Plumbers & Steamfitters Local Union 100, 421 U.S. 616, 44 L. Ed. 2d 418, 95 S. Ct. 1830 (1974) to support their federal preemption argument.

[*1471] The Supreme Court stated regarding the preemption of state antitrust claims:

> Although we hold that the union's agreement with Connell is subject to the federal antitrust laws, it does not follow that state antitrust law may apply as well. The Court has held repeatedly that HN30[] federal law pre-empts state remedies that interfere with federal labor policy or with specific provisions of the NLRA. [citations omitted] The use of state antitrust law to regulate union activities in aid of organization must be preempted because it creates a substantial risk of conflict with the policies central to federal labor law.
>
> . . . .
>
> Because employee organization is central to federal labor policy and regulation of organization procedures is comprehensive, federal law does not admit the use of state antitrust law to regulate union activity that is closely related to organizational goals. Of course, other agreements between unions and nonlabor parties may be subject to state antitrust laws. See Teamsters v. Oliver, [49] [358 U.S. 283] supra, at 295-97 [3 L. Ed. 2d 312, 79 S. Ct. 297] [(1959)]. The governing factor is the risk of conflict with the NLRA or with federal labor policy.

Connell, 421 U.S. at 635-37.

This suit implicates federal labor regulation. Plaintiffs' second claim is for the defendants' alleged secondary boycott of C & W in violation of 29 U.S.C. § 187(b), and § 158(b)(4).

Indeed, the case is a classic secondary boycott case, whereby the union allegedly attempted to force C & W to sign a contract with it. This characterization of the case, then, brings its state antitrust claims within the preemptive ambit of Connell.

The Ninth Circuit, in California State Council of Carpenters v. Associated General Contractors of California, Inc., 404 F. Supp. 1067 (N.D. Cal.) (Peckam, J.), rev'd on other grounds, 648 F.2d 527, 540 (9th Cir. 1980), reversed, 459 U.S. 519, 74 L. Ed. 2d 723, 103 S. Ct. 897 (1982), has followed Connell. Judge Peckam stated:

> While the Supreme Court in Connell, supra, was bitterly split, 5-4, over whether the plaintiffs there could state a cause of action against the union under the federal antitrust laws, 421 U.S. at 636, . . ., the dissenters explicitly noted their agreement with the conclusion [50] of the majority that the application of the state antitrust laws was pre-empted by federal labor and antitrust policies. See Connell, supra, 421 U.S. at 654 . . . n.13.

404 F. Supp. at 1072.

Moreover, HN31[] Haw. Rev. Stat. § 480-10 provides:

> This chapter [480] shall not apply to the conduct or activities of labor organizations or their members which conduct or activities are regulated by federal or state legislation . . . .

The alleged misconduct of the union and its members is regulated by federal labor law specifically in 29 U.S.C. § 187 and 158, as discussed above. The plaintiffs claims have sued under Haw. Rev. Stat. chapter 480, which is entitled "Monopolies; Restraint of Trade." Part I of Chapter 480 contains the antitrust provisions, which includes the statutes under which the plaintiffs sue, §§ 480-2, 480-4, 480-6. See 9 Haw. Rev. Stat., at 24-25 (table of contents).

This brings the plaintiffs' Chapter 480 claims within the preclusive ambit of Connell and § 480-10. Plaintiffs' state antitrust claims are DISMISSED.

7. Plaintiffs' Interference with Economic Advantage and/or Inducement to Breach of Contract.

The plaintiffs allege the defendants interfered with [51] the prospective economic advantage of C & W and/or induced others to breach their contract(s) with C & W. The defendants argue this claim is preempted by federal law, citing principally, San Diego Building Trades Counsel v. Garmon, 359 U.S. 236, 3 L. Ed. 2d 775, 79 S. Ct. 773 (1959); Local 926, Int'l Union of Operating Engineers v. Jones, 460 U.S. 669, 75 L. Ed. 2d 368, 103 S. Ct. 1453 (1983); Local 20, Teamsters Union v. Morton, 377 U.S. 252, 12 L. Ed. 2d 280, 84 S. Ct. 1253 [*1472] (1964); and Sears, Roebuck & Co. v. San Diego County Dist. Council of Carpenters, 436 U.S. 180, 56 L. Ed. 2d 209, 98 S. Ct. 1745 (1978).

Judge Pfaelzer, in Adolph Coors Co. v. Sickler, 608 F. Supp. 1417 (C.D. Cal. 1985), has most lucidly analyzed the problem. In Adolph Coors, the plaintiff beer company entered into a contract with a public television station regarding the station's annual auction. The beer company would provide financial support and manpower, and the station would promote its auction as "Coors Day." An agent of the local AFL-CIO -- which had organized a boycott of the beer company -- allegedly threatened the station's president and employees with violence concerning the station's "Coor's Day" arrangement with the beer company. The agent also threatened mass picketing of the auction and jamming of its phone [52] lines during the auction. The plaintiff beer company claimed these alleged threats induced the television to breach its contract with the beer company. The plaintiff sued the defendant for intentional interference with contractual relations. It also sued the defendant for secondary boycott under 29 U.S.C. § 187(b). The defendant moved to dismiss, arguing that the state claim claim was preempted by federal labor law. Id. at 1419-21.

Judge Pfaelzer examined the preemption argument in light of relevant Supreme Court authority, and concluded that HN32[] when conduct at issue is arguably prohibited or protected by the NLRA, otherwise applicable state law is generally preempted. Id. at 1422 (citing Farmer v. United Bhd. of Carpenters & Joiners, 430 U.S. 290, 296, 51 L. Ed. 2d 338, 97 S. Ct. 1056 (1977)). She noted that the Supreme Court has recognized exemptions to this rule, identifying specifically the exception to preemption for violence. Id. at 1422 (citing UAW v. Russell, 356 U.S. 634, 2 L. Ed. 2d 1030, 78 S. Ct. 932 (1958)); United Constr. Workers v. Laburnum Constr. Corp., 347 U.S. 656, 98 L. Ed. 1025, 74 S. Ct. 833 (1954). Accord Sears, Roebuck, 436 U.S. at 204 & n.25 ("This Court has held that state jurisdiction to enforce its laws prohibiting violence . . . [53] is not pre-empted by the NLRA.") (citing Youngdahl v. Rainfair, Inc., 355 U.S. 131, 2 L. Ed. 2d 151, 78 S. Ct. 206 (1957); Laburnum)).

Judge Pfaelzer then decided that HN33[] the state law claims for intentional interference with contractual relations were not preempted. She applied the Farmer three part preemption test, paying special attention to the salient factor that a state law claim is not preempted if it is either unrelated to the federal claim or a function of the particularly abusive manner in which the federally prohibited conduct is accomplished. Id. at 1424. She determined that the Farmer test was satisfied as to this factor, and overall, because of the manner in which the tort was perpetrated, i.e., through threats of violence. Id. Her analysis is convincing, as is the rest of her analysis supporting her conclusion that the state claim at issue in that case was not displaced by federal labor law; e.g., analysis and application of Local 926, Int'l Union of Operating Engineers v. Jones, 460 U.S. 669, 75 L. Ed. 2d 368, 103 S. Ct. 1453 (1983) ("same in fundamental respect" standard for preemption).

Adolph Coors is on all fours with this case. Both cases involved allegations of threatened violence by [54] defendants that induced a secondary party to breach its contract with the plaintiffs. Both involved companion claims of secondary boycott brought under 29 U.S.C. § 187(b), and defendants' preemption arguments against the state tortious interference with contract claim. The reasoning of Adolph Coors is compelling; this court follows it. Cf. Rainbow Tours, Inc. v. Hawaii Joint Council of Teamsters, 704 F.2d 1443, 1447 (9th Cir. 1983) (state tort for interference with contractual relations based on unlawful mass picketing not preempted by 29 U.S.C. § 187) (citing Russell; Laburnum).

The plaintiffs' interference with economic advantage and/or inducement to breach contract claim is not preempted by federal labor law.

B. Plaintiffs' Motion for Summary Judgment on Four Claims.

1. Plaintiffs' Remaining Claims.

The plaintiffs move for summary judgment on four of their claims based on [*1473] the doctrine of offensive collateral estoppel. Parklane Hosiery Co. v. Shore, 439 U.S. 322, 58 L. Ed. 2d 552, 99 S. Ct. 645 (1978); Blonder-Tongue Laboratories, Inc. v. University of Illinois Foundation, 402 U.S. 313, 91 S. Ct. 1434, 28 L. Ed. 2d 788 (1971). They argue the perjury convictions of certain individual defendants collaterally estop [55] the defendants regarding liability on these claims. The claims are: (1) federal antitrust, 15 U.S.C. § 1, (2) state antitrust, Haw. Rev. Stat. § 480-4, (3) federal labor law, 29 U.S.C. § 187(b), and (4) tortious interference with contractual relations.

As discussed above, the unfair labor practices claim is barred by the statute of limitations.

As discussed above, genuine issues of material fact remain regarding whether the suppliers had the requisite conspiratorial intent to restrain trade. The perjury testimony cannot establish the conspiratorial intent of the suppliers.

As discussed, the state antitrust claims brought under Haw. Rev. Stat. § 480 are preempted by federal labor law under the authority of Connell.

The court does not address the application of offensive collateral estoppel to those claims.

As discussed above, the tortious interference with contractual relations is a viable claim. The court examines the plaintiffs' collateral estoppel argument concerning this claim.

While the court considered the defendants' motion under Rule 12(b)(6) standards, the court considers the plaintiffs' motion under Rule 56 standards. This court must consider materials external to the [56] pleadings to resolve this issue, which is appropriate only for motion brought under Rule 56, not Rule 12. Rosales v. United States, 824 F.2d 799 at 802 (9th Cir. 1987).

This court is familiar with the standards for summary judgment.

This court is aware of the standards for collateral estoppel. Davis & Cox v. Summa Corp., 751 F.2d 1507, 1518 (9th Cir. 1985) (citing Montana v. United States, 440 U.S. 147, 153, 59 L. Ed. 2d 210, 99 S. Ct. 970 (1979); United States v. Geophysical Corp., 732 F.2d 693, 697 (9th Cir. 1984); In re Gottheiner, 703 F.2d 1136, 1139 (9th Cir. 1983)); Hernandez v. City of Los Angeles, 624 F.2d 935, 937 (9th Cir. 1980)).

2. Elements of the Alleged Tort.

HN34[] The essential elements of a tortious interference with contract claim under Hawaii law are: (1) contract between the plaintiff and a third party, (2) the defendant's knowledge of the contract, (3) the defendant's intentional inducement of the third party to breach the contract, (4) absence of justification on the defendant's part, (5) the subsequent breach of the contract by the third party, and (6) damages to the plaintiff. Burgess v. Arita, 5 Haw. App. 581, 594, 704 P.2d 930 (1984) (citing 3 J. Dooley, Modern Tort Law-Liability & Litigation § 44.02 (B. Lindahl [57] rev. 1984); Bendix Corp. v. Adams, 610 P.2d 24 (Alaska 1980)). See also Restatement (Second) of Torts § 766, at 7 (1977) (intentional interference with the performance of contract by third person); see generally W. Keeton, Prosser and Keeton on Torts § 129 (5th ed. 1984) (interference with contractual relations); id. § 130 (interference with prospective advantage).

The plaintiffs submit the perjury indictments and convictions of the individual defendants and an employee of one of C & W's materials suppliers. The latter perjury conviction is irrelevant to the instant motion; that employee is not a party to this action.

The perjured statements of Nishibayashi do not relate to C & W's suppliers or others under contract with C & W. United States v. Torres and Nishibayashi, Cr. No. 82-01795, Superseding Indictment, at 1-4 (D. Haw. Feb. 4, 1983) (perjury counts one through four of Nishibayashi). Likewise, the perjured statements of Kupau do not relate to C & W's suppliers or others under contract with C & W. United States v. Kupau, Indictment, at 1-10, Cr. No. 83-01721 (D. Haw. Aug. 18, 1983).

[*1474] The only relevant perjured testimony the plaintiffs submit is that [58] of Torres. The jury determined that Torres perjured himself when he swore in an affidavit:

> To the best of my knowledge, I am not aware of any person related to Local 745 that has forced or asked any individual or employer to refuse to work for C & W construction.
>
> I expressly deny that I have at any time contacted any employee or employer to force or encourage an employee or employer to refuse to perform any work relating to C & W Construction.

United States v. Torres and Nishibayashi, Cr. No. 82-01795, Superseding Indictment, at 6-7 (D. Haw. Feb. 4, 1983).

The converse of these statements can be paraphrased:

> I know some person(s) related to Local 745 who has/have forced or asked some individual(s) or employer(s) to refuse to work for C & W construction.
>
> I admit that I contacted some employee(s) or employer(s) to force or encourage him/them to refuse to perform work relating to C & W Construction.

Torres is collaterally estopped concerning the issues implicated in those statements. The issues were actually litigated and necessarily determined by a court. Davis & Cox. The plaintiffs have borne their burden of pleading and proving what issues were decided in their favor in the [59] previous action, i.e., that Torres lied concerning coercion of parties under contract with C & W. Davis & Cox; Hernandez.

The court made specific findings concerning Torres's perjury counts; the plaintiffs need not provide a record sufficient to reveal the controlling facts and identify the exact issues litigated in the prior action. Davis & Cox. The court will give necessary inferences from the judgment preclusive effect. Id. Thus, there is no doubt concerning the import of Torres's perjury conviction as it relates to coercing some third parties not to deal with C & W. Id.; Harris v. Jacobs.

Application of offensive collateral estoppel is proper. There was a "full and fair" opportunity in the perjury trial for Torres to litigate the issue for which collateral estoppel is sought, Parklane Hosiery, 439 U.S. at 326-33; Blonder-Tongue, 402 U.S. at 332-33. The plaintiff could not have joined in the earlier action, as it was a criminal case; such application would not be unfair to defendant Torres. He had a full and fair opportunity to litigate this issue. Parklane Hosiery, 439 U.S. at 331.

This leaves two questions. First, is the testimony sufficient [60] to meet the plaintiffs' burden of showing an absence of material fact concerning the tortious interference claims? Second, can the perjury of Torres also estop the union and other individual defendants on the tortious interference claim? The court will not address the second question, as the first question is dispositive of the overall issue of whether to grant the plaintiffs' motion for summary judgment.

Torres' perjured statements in themselves cannot substantiate the plaintiffs' motion for summary judgment. His statements do not identify any particular third party or parties with whom C & W had contracts. C & W apparently had contracts with numerous materials suppliers (e.g., glass, concrete block, cement, crushed rock, and lumber) and others providing services for C & W. Torres' statements do not establish a nexus between the misconduct inferable from the perjury and any particular supplier or other person under contract with C & W. While the statements represent cogent evidence supporting the plaintiffs' tortious interference with contract claim, they are not sufficient in themselves to substantiate the plaintiffs' summary judgment motion. T.W. Elec. Serv. v. Pacific Elec. Contrs. Assn., 809 F.2d 626 at 630 (9th Cir. 1987). [61] Specifically, Torres's statements do not meet the plaintiffs' initial burden of showing an absence of material fact concerning the plaintiffs' tortious interference with contract claim, which necessarily relates to specific entities concerning specific contracts.

If the statements did permit the plaintiffs to meet their initial burden, the plaintiffs [*1475] would be entitled to summary judgment, because the defendants would be precluded from meeting their counterburden by the Court's December 5, 1985 Order. The Order explicitly bars the defendants from submitting evidence on the plaintiffs' "inducement to breach of contract and interference with prospective economic advantage " claim. Order, at 11.

The court applies the doctrine of offensive collateral estoppel to Torres' statements. Nevertheless, the statements do not satisfy the plaintiffs' initial burden for a summary judgment motion under the T.W. Elec. standard. The plaintiffs' motion for summary judgment on the state tortious interference claims is DENIED.

III. CONCLUSION.

The following claims are dismissed:

1. Second Claim, 29 U.S.C. § 187(b): statute of limitations.

2. Fourth, Fifth, and Sixth Claims, Haw. Rev. Stat. §§ 480-4, [62] 480-2, 480-6: preemption by federal labor law under Connell.

3. Eighth, Ninth, Tenth, and Eleventh Claims, negligent and intentional infliction of emotional distress: statute of limitations under Haw. Rev. Stat. § 657-7.

The court also dismisses the plaintiffs' civil RICO claim, with leave to file a motion to amend their complaint to plead the "enterprise" requirement. The court does not dismiss the plaintiffs' federal antitrust and state interference with economic advantage/inducement to breach contract claims.

The court denies the plaintiffs summary judgment on all four of its claims.

After today, two claims remain before the court: federal antitrust and state tortious interference with contract. The civil RICO claim may yet be viable, if the plaintiffs amend their complaint to plead properly the "enterprise" requirement.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

Fischer v. NWA, Inc.

United States District Court for the District of Minnesota, Third Division

June 9, 1988, Decided and Filed

No. 3-87 CIV 106

Reporter

1988 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 12590 *

WILLIAM R. FISCHER, The Estate of BETTY L. FISCHER, MONTFORD R. FISCHER and BONITA G. FISCHER, Plaintiffs, v. NWA, INC.; NORTHWEST AIRLINES, INC; and SIMMONS AIRLINES, INC., Defendants arbitration, plaintiffs', airline, terminate, acquisition, routes, regional, conspiracy, arbitration clause, antitrust, summary judgment, carriers, mutually, item of evidence, amicably, concerted activity, obligations, unilateral, conspired, asserts, numbers, exclusivity provision, independent action, restraint of trade, termination notice, veto power, transportation, manufacturer, inducement, monopolize

Core Terms

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > Trials > Judgment as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Genuine Disputes

HN1[] Trials, Judgment as Matter of Law

A genuine issue of material fact does not exist if it would be unreasonable for a jury, construing the evidence in a light most favorable to the non-moving party, to find for the non-moving party on the disputed factual issue.

Civil Procedure > ... > Discovery > Methods of Discovery > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Genuine Disputes

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Legal Entitlement

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Materiality of Facts

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Supporting Materials > General Overview

HN2[] Discovery, Methods of Discovery

Under Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(c), the district court should grant summary judgment only if the pleadings, depositions and answers to interrogatories, and admissions on file, together with the affidavits, if any, show that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > Movant Persuasion & Proof

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > Nonmovant Persuasion & Proof

HN3[] Summary Judgment, Entitlement as Matter of Law

A non-moving party in a summary judgment motion has an affirmative obligation to make a showing sufficient to establish the existence of each essential element to that party's case on which that party will bear the burden of proof at trial, if the existence of that element is brought into issue by the moving party. The district court is required to give the non-moving party the benefit of all reasonable inferences that can be drawn from the underlying facts.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Transportation Law > Air & Space Transportation > Antitrust

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

HN4[] Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

